[Use 2] Secondly, we learn from hence, That as God is near to all those that fear him, not only in respect of the presence of the place, but is with them by the presence of his favor, granting their prayers, and succouring them in their adversities; so he is far from all the wicked and ungodly, not in place, but in help. He will not grant their requests, he will not be their shield and buckler; he will not know them in their miseries. He is indeed near to all that call upon him, even to all that call upon him in truth, but he stoppeth his ears against the prayers of the ungodly, which are abomination unto him, Psal. 145, 18. This is it which Solomon teacheth, Prov. 15, 29. The Lord is far off from the wicked, but he heareth the prayers of the righteous. Great is the justice of God upon the wicked: and great is his favor towards the godly. True it is, in respect of place God filleth heaven and earth, He is not far distant frō us, forasmuch as in him we live, and move, and have our being, Acts 17, 27, 28. but touching his grace he is far from the dwellings of the unrighteous, he is far from hearing their voice, and regarding their necessities: he leaveth them to themselves, and withdraweth his holy Spirit from them. So then, albeit God be in every place, and nigh to all things, yet God will not hear them, no more then men hear such as are very far off when they call and cry out unto them. This is it which the Prophet David setteth down, Psal. 119, 155. Salvation is far from the wicked, because they seek not thy statutes. And the Prophet Isaiah accordeth here unto, Chapt. 59, 1, 2. The Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save: neither is his ear heavy that it cannot hear. But your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear. They regard not his word therefore he giveth not them his help. They will not hear him when he calleth by his word, therefore he will not hear when they call unto him by their prayers. He is far from them, because they run far from him, and will not know his ways, nor regard his truth that he offereth unto them. Wherefore, great is the misery and destruction of the wicked y^t shall come upon them: they shall call, but the Lord will not hear: they shall cry, but he will not answer. The righteous in this world, do seem to be cursed and forsaken of God, but they are blessed and happy: and this is not the last part of their blessedness and happiness, that he heareth their prayers. On the contrary side, the ungodly seem to themselves & to others to be the only happy men in the world; but they are wretched and miserable: and through their malice, blindness, and obstinacy, this is not the last part and portion of their misery, that they have no agreement with God, he heareth not their prayers, but abhorreth thē, their thoughts, and all their works. When we are in affliction, the chiefest comfort and stay to rest upon is, that God is near us, and ready to help us. The wicked want this staff to lean upon, God professeth himself their enemy, he refuseth their prayers, he forsaketh and casteth them away out of his presence. They can have no peace of conscience, nor comfort in trouble: they shall howl in their miseries, and not be heard, Zac. 7, 13. This shall especially appear at the last day, when the heaven shall not receive them, the Lord shall not know them, no creature shall comfort them, no mercy shall be shown unto them; thē they shall weep and wail without redemption, and without release.

Thirdly, it is our duty to behave our selves [Use 3] in all our actions and dealings, as in his presence. It behooveth us to set him always before us, and to know he continually walketh among us. It is remembered of Enoch, that he walked continually before God, Genes 5, 22. that is, all his life time he considered that the eye of God was ever upon him, knowing that all things are naked and manifest before him, Heb. 4, 13. Thus the Apostle chargeth Timothy, in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Jesus Christ, which under Pon·ius Pilate witnessed a good confession, to keep the commandments which he gave unto him, without spot and unblameable. If the child were always in sight of his parents, the servant of his master, the soldier of his Captain, the subject of his Prince, they would not have an unseemly gesture, a disordred action; how much more doth it stand us upon, to behave our selves honestly, and in order, and to look to all our ways, that we offend not before the majesty of God, in whose presence we stand? When the Minister prayeth and preacheth, when the people attend and hearken, we must know that God looketh upon us. If anything be done unreverantly and wickedly, he seeth it, and beholdeth it when it is committed. We cannot hide it from his sight, and therefore we should do nothing that may grieve him. This is that use which Moses setteth down in giving directions to the people when they went to war, Deut. 23, 12, 14, That they should have a place without the host, whither they should resort for the necessity of nature, and cover their excrements; for the Lord thy God (saith he) walketh in the midst of thy campe to deliver thee, and to give thee thine enemies before thee: therefore thine host shall be holy, that he see no filthy thing in thee, and turn away from thee. The truth of this Ceremony leadeth us (as it did them) to a farther matter. Let us let the figure pass, & come to the substance, which teacheth, that we must be an holy people to God in soul and body, and take heed of stayning and defiling our selves. And what is it that doth defile us? It is not that which entereth into man, but that w^c cometh out of a man, as our Savior speaketh of the meats we eat, Matth. 15, 18. All the evil affections that we have within us, are so many stainings of us before God. Evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witnesses, slanders, are so many infections, and as filthy dirt and dung in his sight. We must all of us learn to purge our selves from such foul and filthy corruptions, if we will have God to rule and be resident amongst us. If a man be to receive any honorable guests or strangers into his house, he will have it swept and kept clean, that he offend not those that he would entertain. It is a great honor unto us, that God will dwell with us, and rest among us, and vouchsafe so to abase himself as to walk among us; ought not we then to be careful how we walk before him, and to be wary everyone of us lest we should displease him? Ought we not to behave our selves with all fear and reverence, seeing he beholdeth us and eyeth whatsoever we do throughout our whole life? For as he is come nearer unto us: James 4, 8: so unless we draw nere unto him, cleansing our hands, and purging our hearts, he will withdraw himself from us, if we make not our souls and bodies pure Temples for him to lodge and abide in. He will dwell with us upon no other condition: if we do not mark and observe this, we make our souls guilty of driving GOD away, that he should no longer remain among us to bless us.

Lastly, we are put in mind by his presence [Use 4] to wait and stay our selves upon his providence, in all things depending upon his protection and deliverance. Stephen a faithful witness of the truth, being persuaded of the presence of Christ, stood out to death, and boldly maintained the cause of God against all his adversaries, Acts 7, 56. We are always in such sort under his protection, that we shall not need to fear that his power will fail to maintain and preserve us. When the Lord Jesus said unto his Disciples, Matth. 28, 20. Go into all Nations, preach unto them, and baptize them, he addeth, Loe I am with you unto the end of the world. Whereby, he meant to confirm and strengthen them in all the combats they were to suffer, and conflicts which they were to endure in the preaching of the Gospel. So Christ appearing unto Paul, and promising his presence to be with him, gave him boldness to undergo great dangers, and not to account his own life precious and deer unto him, so long as he might do service unto God: he said unto him, Acts 18, 9.10, Fear not, but speak, and hold not thy peace, for I am with thee, and no man shall lay hands on thee to hurt thee, for I have much people in this City. Thus the Lord speaketh to the Prophet Jeremiah, Bee not afraid of their faces, for I am with thee to deliver thee. Here we see the presence of God is made as a reason to strengthen him in the duties of his calling. We meet with many dangers and incombrances that assault us and set upon us in the running of our race, and find many enemies that seek to stop our course: & such is our weakness, that we shall never be able to ouermastet them, and to go lustily forward in a resolute and constant course, unless we set before our eyes this doctrine that Balaam published as a privilege belonging unto the Church, that God is with us, and will never forsake us. Let us therefore consider, If he be with us, we shall not need to fear who be against us. He will smite our enemies upon the cheek bone, & break the teeth of the wicked. He will scatter their counsels and devices, and cast down whatsoever riseth up against our peace.

[And the joyful shout of a King is among thē.] This is the third prerogative granted to the Church, which God as king of the Church, granteth unto it, being as it were y^e Scepter of his kingdom, & the laws by which it is governed. For as no kingdom can stand without statutes, nor the subjects be governd without laws, so it is in God's kingdom. He is y^e King, the church is the kingdom, the word is the statute law, the devil & all his Instruments are Traitors to this kingdom: the faithful and elect are the natural subjects which willingly yield obedience to the word. This word being the arm of God, and the kingdom, must be preached, to draw the elect into his kingdom. This Balaam calleth a joyful shout, and the Prophet is commanded of God, Isaiah 58, 1, to cry allowed and not spare, to lift up his voice like a Trumpet, showing to the people their sins, and the house of Jacob their transgressions. This teacheth us, that it is a great honor and privilege of the Church, to have the joyful shout of the word to sound among them. The Scripture or word of God is a privilege belonging properly to the Church & the use thereof. When God gave his Law in Sinai, it was given only to Israel, as appeareth Deut. 4, 1. Exod. 20, 11, 2. where Moses stirreth up Israel to hearken to the statutes & ordinances that should be delivered unto thē. So the Prophet speaketh, Psal. 147, 19, 20. He showeth his word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel; he hath not dealt so wi h every Nation, neither have they known his judgments. Hereunto cometh the exhortation of Moses, Deut. 4, 6, 7. Keep his laws and do them, for that is your wisdom and understanding in the sight of the people, which shall hear all these ordinances, and shall say, Only this people is wise and of understanding, and a great Nation. Thus the Apostle Paul showeth the difference and preeminence of the Jews, being at that time the Church of God above the Gentiles, that it was herein most excellent and glorious, because unto them, yea only unto them were committed the oracles of God, even committed unto them of trust: to them pertained the glory, the covenant, the law, the service of God, & the promises. Likewise, when John the Apostle was commanded to write in a book y^e things which he had seen revealed unto him, he was charged withal, when once they were written, To send them to the seven Churches that are in Asia, Reu. 1, 11. All which places plainly prove, that it is one of the greatest gifts, blessings, and honors, that God bestoweth upon his people, the giving unto them his word and ordinances.

The reasons are many in number and weighty [Reason 1] in force. For first, hereby we and our children are entered into a solemn covenant with God to be his, and he to be ours forever. A wonderful mercy of God, that a sort of poor sinful men should be admitted and received into a covenant with the eternal God. This Couenan• is a mutual promise & agreement between God and men: whereby on the one side God giveth men assurance that he will be gracious and favorable unto them, forgive their sins, and give them new righteousness & eternal life for his Sons sake: and on the other side, men bind themselves to accept of this mercy with all thanksgiving, receiving this so great a benefit with a true Faith, and promising to yield true obedience to God. The entrance into this Covenant, is as it were the day of our marriage, being more nearly coupled to God, then the wife is joined unto the husband. This is it which Moses is bold to put the people in mind of, exhorting them to keep the words of this Covenant, Deut. chap. 29. verses 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15.

[Reason 2] Secondly, the Church alone is honored of God, to be the keeper and preserver, the holder forth and publisher of his word, and therefore none have to do with it but the Church. Hence it is, that it is called by the Apostle, the pillar and ground of truth, 1 Tim. 3, 15. It is the preserver of it, not the mother of it: the keeper of it, not the author: it is a crier to publish, not a judge to decide and determine: it is as the candlestick to hold the light, not the candle it self to give light. For this cause the vision offered to John of the seven golden Candlesticks, Revel 1, 12, 20, is expressly and directly expounded to signify the seven Churches. This then is an honor peculiar to the church, to be the brazen pillar of truth, and the golden Candlestick to hold the light or candle of the word of God unto the people, that they may see how to walk in y^e ways of godliness.

Thirdly, the word is the testament of God. [Reason 3] Now none hath to do with the Testament or Will of any, but they that have Legacies bequeathed unto them by it, as children & they that are of the household and kindred of God; not Strangers, Aliens, and Forreyners, they have nothing to do in it, they are not to meddle with it. Thus the Apostle teacheth, Heb. chap. 9. verse 15, That the Testament belongeth to them that are to receive the promises of the eternal inheritance.

The Uses are now to be considered. First, [Use 1] we learn from hence for our instruction, to account the Ministry of the word, the treasure of the Church. Among all the blessings bestowed upon the sons of men in this life, the gift and blessing of the word is eminent. It is an incomparable blessing far above all earthly things, y^e earthly men make their solicity. The Prophet Ezek. 6 10, 11 compareth all other blessings that God gave his people, to the ornaments of the body, as to bracelets, habiliments, rings, fine linen, chains, silk, & such like; but the giving of his word and statutes unto them, to his marriage with thē. And when God was to deliver his laws and ordinances unto Israel, Moses took them by the hand, and led them forth to meet God, who in the company of the Angels accepted them for his chief treasure & inheritance above all other nations under heaven: so that in the finishing of this match & marriage with his people, Moses was as the Father, the Angels, the Bridemen, God the husband, unto whom Israel was affianced & coupled in marriage. So then the happiest tidings and greatest dignity that can ever come to any people or several congregation, is the glad tidings of y^e gospel, & the free passage of the word to be brought among thē. The more any are blessed this way the more honorable & glorious they are with God and his Saints, they are thereby made his sons & daughters, yea kings and priests unto him, & they which once were far off, are made near unto him by the preaching of y^e Gospel, whereby he dwelleth among them, and setteth up his throne in their hearts. Capernaum is said hereby to be lifted up unto heaven, Luke 10, 15. Jerusalem where the word and service of God was set forth, is called the holy City, and the joy of the whole earth, & the resting place of God, Psal. 132, 13, 14. From hence all such are reprov'd, as have not the sight and feeling of this mercy of God in their hearts, to raise them up to rejoicing & thankfulness. And herein (my brethren) we are to call our selves to remembrance, & think what our condition is. We are indeed a noble kingdom, adorned with many outward privileges and blessings, increased in multitudes, and furnished with sundry commodities; but, if we be compared with the great, large, and wealthy dominions in other parts of y^e world, only a poor corner of rhe earth. But herein we pass them all, as honored above them & preferred before them, that we have the inestimable treasure of the word which they do want, instead of those mines of silver & gold, wherewith they abound. This is our privilege, our glory, our advantage, wherein God hath blessed us above Italy, Spain, and many rich Countries in Asia and Africa, under the Turk and other blind and barbarous Princes, detayned in the kingdom of darkness, and of the devil; we have the truth of God amongst us, the treasure of all treasures, the value whereof is far above all precious stones. The want of this blessing maketh all other blessings to be curses, and judgments unto them that are destitute hereof, & therefore we must all call our selves to an account, what account we make of it. We should make it our meat and drink, a treasure for the obtaining whereof rather than want it, we would sell all that we have: but (alas) what thankfulness hath it wrought in us? We are like unto the Jews; they had this glorious light brought among them, but they loved darkness more then light, because their works were evil. If we be weary of this heavenly Manna, let us take heed lest the Lord grow weary of us: if we cast away his word, he will cast away us, and forsake us forever. The Lord biddeth us take heed to the sound of the Trumpet, Ier. 6, 17: let us not answer presumptuously we will not take heed; let us beware of security, & remember from whence we are fallen, And let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth the Lord and his word, to his salvation, Ier. 9, 24.

[Use 2] Secondly, it followeth, that wheresoever God hath established this his ordinance, there certainly he hath a Church and chosen people, and some that belong to eternal life, for whose sake it is sent among them. For as the Spirit of God is the soul of the church, quickening it, and giving it life: so the word is this souls instrument, or the seed whereby it worketh, and the only essential mark thereof; so that where it is sincerely taught, and constantly professed, there certainly is a Church. Where it is not, there is no true Church (albeit it have never so goodly and glistering a show) but a very carrion & carkas of a church without the life of the Spirit: but as an house without light, as the world without the Sun, as a kingdom without the Law. The Prophet Isaiah calleth it the standard of God, saying, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people, & they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders, Isaiah 49. verse 22 Where the Lord Jesus is compared to a King and Captain, and therefore all that will have comfort that they are members of the church, must range themselves under it as soldiers under the banner of their Chieftaine; otherwise they remain as men In darkness, & in the shadow of death, as straggling and runagate soldiers out of the campe, and as dissolute men under no law to govern them. For they are the vilest and basest that live without it, very dogs and swine. They of the Church are God's chidren, and the word is the Children's food belonging to them only. When the Canaanitish woman would have been partaker of Christ's Ministry, Mat. 15, 26. he answered, It is not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it unto whelps. But other are as unclean and filthy beasts: This which now hath been spoken, serveth to overthrow two sorts of people: first, those of the Church of Rome, which make other marks and notes of the Church; as antiquity, unity, universality, succession, subjection to the Pope, and such like counterfeit marks of their counterfeit church, and leave this which is the most certain and inseparable note. This proveth unto us plainly, that these which most of all boast of the name of the Church, are indeed neither the Catholic Church, nor any sound part thereof, because they want the immortal seed to beget them, the milk and meat of the word to feed and norish them, yea it is accounted an high point of heresy to have read y^e Scriptures, and none is permitted to look into them without a license, so heinous a sin it is to have the word. Secondly, it censureth & condemneth the Donatists, Anabaptists, Brownists, and those of the separation, which condemn our Churches to be no Churches; our Sacraments to be no Sacraments; our Ministers to be no Ministers; and in effect our religion to be no religiō, because we do not with them in matters accidental fully agree, albeit we do consent in matters fundamental: we lay Christ alone for the foundation, on which we build our salvation: we lay hold upon him by faith only: we preach Christ crucified truly, & by their own confession, powerfully. They hold themselves to have received faith among us by our Ministry, before they made this rent and breach in the Church, and that the end of such faith (if they had died in it) had been the salvation of their souls. Let them therefore return, and cause others to return & join with us in hearing the word preached, seeing where it is rightly established, there must of necessity be a true Church. And albeit some of them have written, many of thē have spoken against our Church, yet let them follow the example of that son, who answered his father stubbornly, that he would not work in his vineyard, but afterward repented earnestly, and went his ways.

[Use 3] Thirdly, all such as are this way honored and blessed, must be careful to use the word as an honor and a blessing, by embracing it, by entertaining it, by magnifying this blessing of God, in truth, and not in opinion; in heart, and not in face; in works, and not in words; that we may walk worthy the Gospel, and of the Lord that hath called us, and show our selves careful to bring forth the fruits thereof; saying with the Apostle, Rom. 10, 10. How beautiful are the feet of them that bring glad tidings of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! Hitherto rendeth the exhortation of the Apostle, 1. to the Thessalonians, ch. 2, 11, 12. Let us be careful to keep this treasure among us, lest the kingdom of God be taken from us. Otherwise instead of being the water of life to save us, it will be a sea to drown us: instead of being the savor of life to life, it will turn to be the savor of death to death: instead of being meat to feed us, it will be our bane to destroy us: instead of good tidings to refresh & comfort us, it will prove the saddest and heaviest news that ever came to our ears, and that day the blackest day that ever came over our heads. Thus our Savior threatened Capernaum, which he had honored with his presence, blessed with his preaching, advanced by his dwelling in it, and lifted up with his miracles, Mat. 11, 26. Thou Capernaum which art lifted up unto heaven, shalt be thrown down to hell, &c. Look upon the seven Churches of Asia, we see what is become of them. Behold what y^e contempt of the Gospel hath brought upon the Jews, the like hath not fallen upon any people, since the beginning; what mischief & misery did not fall upon them? It cannot be denied but God hath blessed us as much as ever he lifted up the head of Capernaum, and hath magnified his mercies and love unto us above other nations. The more he hath honored and exalted us above others, the more vile and odious we shall become; he will pour shame & contempt upon us, he will make us a mirror and example of his judgments to others, unless we bring forth fruits answerable to so great goodness. Who so is wise-hearted, let him consider these things.

[Verses 22, 23, 24. God brought them out of Egypt, their strength is as an Unicorn: for there is no sorcery against Jacob.] Hitherto we have spoken of the spiritual blessings bestowed upon the Church, to wit, the forgiveness of their sins, the presence of the Spirit, and the use of the word. Now followeth another privilege, being an effect of the former, that nothing shall hurt them; they may fall into many afflictions, but none shall be able to destroy them. He alludeth in this place to the practice of the Unicorn, purging and cleansing the water with his horn against the poison of venomous beasts. From hence we learn, that no means and attempts shall hurt or overthrow the Church. Whatsoever the enemies of God and his people imagine, what counsel soever they take, what mischiefs they devise, God will make them frustrate and of none effect. This truth appeareth by sundry examples in y^e word of God. When the Church of God was in Egypt, the Egyptians said, Let us work wisely with them lest they multiply; they vexed them with bondage, they destroyed their children, they oppressed them with burdens, they plagued them with taskmasters, and every way they increased their miseries: Ex. 1 & 2, & 3. yet after all these devilish practices they prevailed nothing against them. This appeareth likewise in the ambition and pride of Haman, Ester 3. and 7, and 9. He thirsted after blood, but the plot he had contrived was disappointed, and he fell into the pit which he had digged for another, the snare was broken and the Church was delivered. Infinite are the examples that might be produced to this purpose, of the Churches dangers and deliverances. The Prophet David handleth this argument at large in sundry Psalms. In the 91. Psalm, verses 3, 4, 5, &c. he assureth those that trust in God, that into whatsoever dangers they fall, they shall never miscarry, nor be dismayed in their afflictions. Where the Prophet meaneth, that howsoever these afflictions may come to the godly, yet they shall not be able to hurt or hinder their eternal peace with God, but he will make them and all things besides to further their salvation. This is it which the Apostle teacheth at large, Rom. 8, 35, 37. Thus we see that no attempts can hurt the Church, inasmuch as God taketh the wise in their craftiness, and scattereth the devices of the wicked, as he turned the wisdom of Ahithophel into foolishness.

The Reasons of this Doctrine serving for confirmation of us, are direct & evident. For [Reason] first, it is God that watcheth over his to deliver and to preserve them from all the dangers that go over their heads. We shall not need to fear having so good a keeper, & being assured of right good keeping. He will always protect us by his great power and infinite goodness. This the Prophet handleth at large, Psal. 121, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. So Moses declaring the cause that Balaam's curses & coniurations did not prevail, but were turned into a blessing, saith, It was because the Lord loved his people, Deut. 23, 5. No policies can prevail where there is such a keeper, who being on our side, what skilleth it who be set against us?

[Reason 2] Secondly, he hath appointed the Angels also to guard and defend them, to pitch their Tents round about them, to be ministering spirits sent out for their good, which always behold the face of their Father which is in heaven. God is the chief watchman whom nothing can escape; the Angels are second watchmen under God, whom God hath deputed to that office to serve the necessities of the Church. This the Prophet David y^t sweet singer of Israel setteth down, Psal. 91, 10, 11, 12. Where the prophet proveth, that no cross or calamity shall come near them or their dwellings to hurt them, because not only God himself will care for their defense, but appoint the holy Angels as his heavenly messengers to preserve them. Not that the help of God is not sufficient, or that we should put our trust in their help, but to teach us for our comfort, that we have God and all the host of heaven, as an army ready mustered & marshalled to succor and sustain us in all our dangers.

Now it remaineth to consider what Uses [Use 1] may be made of this Doctrine. First, we must confess to our singular comfort, that great is the power and goodness of God, which can never fail or forsake those that are his. No counsel, or wisdom, or policy, can escape his knowledge, or encounter with his power: we see this notably in this example before our eyes. This false Prophet Balaam was an enemy of God and of his people, he had set both his heart to covet, and his tongue to say; all his purpose was to curse the people, he leaveth nothing vnattempted to compass and contrive his enterprize, yet we see all is vanity and cometh in the end to nothing. Great therefore is the power and might of God. We heard in verse 19. that he was constrained to say, That God is not like to mortal men, & therefore we ought to be ashamed to call the truth or power of God into question, wherein there is neither want nor weakness. All the power that is in men and Angels, is nothing to the infinite power of God. Let us therefore acknowledge and confess this might and majesty of God: let us in all our dangers and calamities reverence it, and rest in it. Let us not measure it by ordinary means, but know that he is able to work as well without means, and against means as by means. The faith of Abraham is commended by the Apostle, Ro. 4, 18. Heb. 11, That above hope he believed under hope, and that God was able of the ashes of Isaac offered up in sacrifice, to raise him again to life.

Secondly, we may in assurance of his favor conclude the blessedness of the people of God, and their happy estate and condition: yea, we may truly say with the Psalmist, Psal. 144, 15. Blessed are the people that are so, yea blessed are the people whose God is the Lord. None are harder assaulted, none are better protected. Their confusion is sought, but they stand in y^e strength of God. This is a great blessing, to be shaken, and yet to abide firm in storms and tempests. Happy are they that have so vigilant a watchman as the Lord is. That City is safe, that kingdom is sure, that house is quyeted, that soul is secured, that hath such a keeper. What City upon the earth (saving the City of our God) hath such a watchman as neither slumbereth nor sleepeth? But the Church w^c is God's commonwealth, hath a governor and guardian, which is all an eye to see their dangers, all an ear to hear the counsels, & all an heart to understand the devices of their enemies, and all an hand and strong arm to scatter them, and to defeat them. This happiness we heard before, verse 10, how Balaam praised and desired. He confesseth allowed that the death of the Jews was more to be desired thē the life of all other men, because GOD held them for his people. Though he were a wretched idolater, and sought to turn the truth of God into falsehood, yet standing as it were upon the rack, he was enforced to utter this speech, as if he had said, Who is it that can do anything against Israel, seeing they remain in the favor of their God? Let us learn to magnify the Lord for his mercy, and walk worthy of this our happiness, which the men of this world do want. They have no protection from God, but lie open and naked unto dangers of soul and body, and have to defend them, not so much as a poor fig leaf.

Thirdly, let us seek to be at peace with God, and labor to be reconciled unto him. If God be against us, what creature dare stand up for us to help and comfort us; nay what creature shall not fight against us to destroy and confound us? For the subject (though never so noble & honorable) that hath the King against him, shall find few others to succor him, or show him any countenance, as we see in the book of Ester; so soon as the wrath of the King began to be kindled against Haman, by and by they covered his face, and helped forward his execution. So if we sin against God the King of Kings, and provoke him to wrath, who shall dare to plead for us? On the other side, if God be on our side, who shall be against us, or what creature shall hinder our peace? This the Prophet Hosea declareth, as a benefit belonging to the Church, Hos. 2, 18. In which words the Lord promiseth that he will so watch over his Church by his providence, that they shall have rest and security from all dangers of enemies, and be delivered from the rage of beasts, and the violence of men. But how (will some say) can this be? [Objection.] Seeing the ungodly that have God their enemy, yet have the world and the men of y^e world smile & laugh upon them, and the godly who have God their friend, yet have the world for their enemy? I answer, [Answ.] This seemeth to be so to those that judge of things after the flesh & according to the outward appearing; but if we will judge righteous judgment, and behold them with the eye of Faith, we shall find it to be otherwise; whether we respect the end, or the inward feeling of the soul and Conscience. Touching the end and issue of things, if we wait with patience but a while, and look with a single heart upon the event, we shall see that the ungodly (who have God set against them) have all things to work their destruction, and to further their condemnation; not only their troubles, but even the most holy ordinances of God, the exercise of prayer, the hearing of the word, the partaking of the Sacraments. The things are in themselves, and their own nature the savor of life to life, 2 Cor. 2, 16: but to them they become the savor of death to death. Contrarywise, the godly who have God reconciled to them in Jesus Christ, have all things to further & to finish the salvation of their souls, and to seal up their eternal peace, Rom. 8, 28: inasmuch as all accidents that befall them, tend to bring them to glory and immortality, and work for the best unto them that love God, even unto them that are called of his purpose: not only prayers and praises, not only the Word and Sacraments, which are as the life of their souls and the breath of their nostrils, but all crosses, calamities, and afflictions, are sanctified for their good and happiness. Secondly, in respect of the inward feeling of the soul and conscience. For the ungodly, who feel the wrath of God for their sins, as it were the flashings of hell fire, do find rest and refuge in nothing, but account all the creatures for their enemies, and always stand in fear of them as of God's host and army, set in battle array against them, and as of his instruments to bring them to destruction. The heavens are prepared at the commandment of God to be as brass, as in the days of famine, to punish them, 1 Kings 17, 1. the clouds to pour down showers of rain upon them, as upon the old world, Gen. 7, 11: the waters ready to drown them, as the host of Sisera, Judge. 5, 12: the fire to consume them, as it did Sodom and the other Cities of the plain, Gen. 19, 24: the air to poison and infect them, as in the time of pestilence, Ezek. 5, 12: the earth open to swallow them, as it did Dathan and his followers, Numb. 16, 32, the Bears to devour them, as they did the two and forty ungracious children that mocked the Prophet, 2 King. 2, 42: the Lions to destroy them, as they did the Idolatrous Samaritans, 2 King. 17, 25: Fiery serpents to sting them, as they did the murmuring Israelites in the wilderness, Num. 21.6: the basest and meanest creatures are armed with power and will to bid battle against them; Flies and Frogs to annoy them. as they did the Egyptians, Exod. 8, 6.24: & Lice to eat them, as they did Herod a bloody persecutor of the Church, Acts 12, 23. Thus do the ungodly fear all the creatures of God, & cannot be secured from any one of them. An example whereof we have in Cain, who wandered up and down in the earth, and feared that every creature that found him would kill him, Gen. 4, 14. And no marvel, for the wicked flieth when no man pursueth him, Prov. 28, 1. But the godly, who feel God's favor and mercy toward them, and have him for their friend, do find by blessed experience all God's creatures, as it were his soldiers, to stand for them, and therefore do not stand in fear of them, but can say with a feeling faith, Rom 8, 38. I am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things to come, nor heighth, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. For when the ways of a man please God, he will make even their enemies at peace with them, Prov. 16, 7. All this appeareth in the example of Adam, as in a glass: before he fell into sin, Gen. 3, 8. he walked in the garden without fear, he talked and communed with God without fear; all things were subject to him that was subject unto God. But when he had nearkened to the old serpent, and disobeyed the commandment of God, the whole course of Nature was turned, he hid himself from the presence of God, and feared the creatures which before he ruled. To conclude therefore, seeing it is God who is the cause of our peace, let us rest upon his providence and protection, and seek earnestly reconciliation with God, that we may have the inward peace of a good conscience, which howsoever the world may strive to disturb and hinder, yet cannot take away from us: as our Savior Christ promiseth, John 16. verse 33, In me ye shall have peace, in the world ye shall have affliction. And again, John 14, 27. Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth give I unto you. So that in regard of this spiritual peace of the faithful, cōsisting partly in our peace with God, which is the Fountain, and partly in our peace of conscience, which is the fruit, our souls are assured to dwell at ease; in the midst of all troubles we shall be comforted, and by his providence and protection be secured, howsoever our bodies be tossed and turmoiled. For this spiritual peace not only may stand, but is evermore joined with crosses and persecutions.

[Verse 24. Behold, the people shall rise up as a Lyon, and lift up himself as a young Lyon: he shall not lie down till he eat of the prey, &c.] In these words, the estate of the Church is described after sundry conflictes in this life. It hath many enemies that for a time rise up against it, but in the end the Church shall rouse up it self and arise as a Lyon, who will not couch till he have taken and eaten his prey. This shall be the strength of the people of God in subduing and overcoming all their enemies. This was begun by Moses, prosecuted by Joshua, continued by David, and fulfilled by Christ, Who ruleth in the midst of his enemies, and shall bring all things in subjection under his feet. Psal. 110, 1, 2. From hence we learn, That the Church in the end shall have victory over all enemies that set themselves against it. They dash themselves against the Rock that shall break them in pieces: for howsoever they oppose themselves against the good estate thereof, they do but kick against the goad, as stiff-necked & hard-hearted beasts, that have not learned to bear the yoke of God, nor to acquaint themselves with the ways of godliness. God will show himself most powerful in overthrowing and discomfiting the enemies of the Church. This evidently appeareth by the history of the Church in Egypt, in Babylon, as also in the books of Exodus and Ester. The Prophet David declareth, that notwithstanding the rage of God's and his enemies, He that dwelleth in the heavens shall laugh, the Lord shall have them in derision, yea he shall crush them with a scepter of Iron, and break them in pieces like a Potters vessel, Psal. 2, 4, 9. This Christ our Savior teacheth his Disciples, when he sent them forth to work miracles, and to preach the Gospel of the kingdom to be at hand; he prepareth them for the Cross, he foretelleth them what they should look for, I send you as sheep in the midst of wolves: but beware of men, for they will deliver you up to the Councils, they will scourge you in their Synagogues, they will bring you before Rulers, they will betray you to your enemies, and ye shall be hated of all men for my sake; but he that endureth to the ende, shall be saved. Matth. 10, 16, 17, 22.

[Reason 1] The Reasons are evident. For first, the Lord Jesus is the King of his Church, he hath the keys of hell and death, He openeth and no man shutteth he shutteth and no man openeth, Revel. 1, 18. John 10, 28. He is the Shepherd of his sheep; his sheep hear his voice, he knoweth them, they follow him, he giveth unto thē eternal life, so that they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of his hand. He is the head of the Church, and quickeneth all the members of his body, by whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of our sins, Col. 1, 18. Seeing therefore Christ Jesus is the King of his Church, the Shepherd of his sheep, the Head of his body, we cannot doubt but he will defend his Church, save his sheep, & keep safe and sound the members of his body, that none shall be able to destroy them, or to take them out of his hand.

[Reason 2] Secondly, our weakness is not hidden from the Lord, he knoweth whereof we are made, he remembereth that we are but dust; yea a wind that passeth and cometh not again Therefore the Apostle saith, that God is faithful, which will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able, but will even give the issue with the temptation, that we may be made able to bear it, 1 Cor. 10, 13. So the Prophet teacheth, that the rod of the wicked shall not always rest upon the lot of the righteous, lest the righteous put forth their hand unto wickedness, Psal. 125, 3• declaring that the Lord appoints his for a time to be afflicted, yet in the end they shall be delivered, and the wicked shall not be suffered in their oppressions.

The uses are now to be handled. First, [Use 1] this teacheth for our instruction, that the Church hath always enemies in this world, against which it must continually strive and fight. There is no victory before the battle, there is no conquest before the fight. We are all soldiers and warriors in this life, to fight the battles of God, we must not dream of living ever in rest and pleasure. Humility and misery must go before honor and glory: the cross cometh before the crown; we must wrestle before we can have the garland; we must run before we can obtain the goal; we must strive before we can have the mastery; we must labor before we can receive the fruits; we must fight before we can win the victory. This is it which the Apostle showeth unto us, 2 Tim. 2, 5, 6, 11, 12. Thus it was with Christ, first he suffered adversity, and then he entered into glory: first he endured the Cross, and despised the shame, and then he was set at the right hand of the Throne of God. Luke 24, 26. Hebr. 12, 2. This is the way, let us walk in it. He is a foolish husbandman that will look to reap before he have sowed. The Disciple must not look to be above his Master, nor the servant above his Lord. We must through manifold tribulations enter into the kingdom of heaven: and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecutions. This is our lot & portion, this is the cup which is prepared for us to drink of: we must prepare strength and courage, we must get us faith and patience, that we may be able to hold out unto the end.

Secondly, this is a singular comfort to all [Use 2] the children of God, and able to season and sweeten the bitterness of the Cross, & make us to undergo it with joy and gladness. Whēsoever therefore we shall be hated for y^e Gospels sake, and suffer persecution at the hands of our enemies, let us comfort our selves with these meditations. First, afflictions shall not separate us from God, howsoever for the present they seem not joyous but grievous, yet afterward they bring the quiet fruit of righteousness unto them which are thereby exercised, Heb. 12, 11. This the Apostle teacheth That neither tribulation, nor anguish, neither persecution, nor famine, neither peril nor sword, shall separate us from the love of Christ, Rom. 8, 35. Secondly, the afflictions of this present time are not worthy of the glory which shall be revealed unto us, Rom. 8, 1^o: which neither the eye hath seen, nor the ear heard nor the heart of man conceived. True it is, our afflictions are oftentimes great, but the reward is greater: our troubles are of great continuance, & of long durance, but the glory to come is without end, when we shall be crowned and clothed with immortality, 2 Cor. 4, 17, 18. Our persecutions are many, but the joys laid up for the faithful are infinite, & not to be numbered.

Thirdly, all our crosses which we bear and sustain, shall have an happy event, and a glorious end, for such as hold out to the ende shall be saved, Mat. 10, 22, 32, 39. Whosoever shall confess Christ before men, him he will acknowledge before his Father which is in heaven; and whosoever shall lose his life for his sake and the Gospels, shall be sure to find it, inasmuch as he hath committed it to a faith full keeper, who is able to keep that which he hath committed unto him against that day.

Fourthly, we must consider, that the same calamities, nay far greater, have happened to Christ himself and his Apostles; to the Prophets and holy men of God, remembered unto us in the Scriptures. Now the servant must not look for a better condition then the Master, Mat. 10, 24, 25, nor the disciple then his Lord; nor the household, then the Housholder: nay, we must nor dream of a better estate thē our fellow-servants have had before us.

Fifthly, the enemies in their greatest rage, snarling like Dogs, hurting like Serpents, biting like Cockatrices, devouring like Lions, bloody like Wolves, subtle as Foxes, raging as wild Boars, as unreasonable as Beasts; yet can proceed no farther then to kill the body, they cannot destroy the soul; nay, they can exercise no power over the body, except it be given them from above, seeing the providence of God so ouerswayeth all things, that not an hair falleth from our head, nor a sparrow to the ground, without the will of our heavenly Father.

These are great comforts that arise unto us in our troubles, wherewith we should be wholly possessed, that we murmur not against God. On the other side this doctrine serveth to set down the woeful condition of the persecutors and enemies of the Church; they may prosper and prevail for a time, but in the end they shall not escape; for the church and the members of the Church must have the upper hand, when all their adversaries shall be shamefully confounded. This we see notably set before us in the book of Daniel; he had many and mighty adversaries that plotted his death, and sought his ruin, incensed the King against him, and caused him to be cast into the Lions den. But what was the issue of these things? Surely he was delivered & they were destroyed: For by the commandment of the King these men which had accused Daniel, were brought and cast to the Lions, they, their children, & their wives; and the Lions had the mastery of them, and brake all their bones a peeces, or ever they came at the ground of the den, Dan. 6, 24. This is it which Solomon teacheth, Prov. 11, 5, 8. Look upon the examples of Pharaoh, of Sancherib, of Haman, of Herod, and sundry others; in all which we see, that the wicked shall be a ransom for the just, and the transgressor for the righteous, Prov. 21, 18. This serveth to terrify all ungodly mē, & to teach them not to set themselves against the godly, that are more righteous then themselves.

Thirdly, here is matter given unto us of [Use 3] praise and glory to be given unto God, for the safety and deliverance of his people. It is the work of his right hand, and therefore the glory also must be his. Our help cannot come by our own strength, nor we overcome by our own policy; when we have searched and examined all that is in us, we shall find it to come short of working our deliverance. It is God only that hath done it, and therefore we must yield him the honor of all the victories that he giveth us against our enemies. When a man hath done us any wrong, or put us to some trouble, and we be delivered from it; we must assure our selves, that it is God that hath given us y^e upper hand, to the end our mouths should always be opened to give him thanks and we by our whole life should acknowledge how much we are bound and indebted unto him. This is it which Moses pointeth us unto, •eut. 32, 43, when he willeth the Jews and Genetiles to praise God's Name, For he will avenge the blood of his servants, and yield vengeance to his adversaries, but he will be favorable to his Land, and be merciful unto his own people.

Lastly, as Balaam here declareth that the [Use 4] Church hath sure and certain hope of victory, and shall rise up as a Lyon in defiance of all their enemies; so th s shall especially appear in respect of spiritual enemies, which fight against our souls. This victory shall be finished and fully accomplished in Christ, who as the victorious Lyon of the Tribe of Judah, with his foot of brass shall stamp down, and trample under his feet by little and little the enemies of our peace and salvation. This is it which the Apostle assureth the Saints of God, Rom. chap. 16, verse 20. The God of peace shall tread Satan under your feet shortly. This is a sweet and singular promise, which should be as the Anchor of our souls both sure & steadfast whe•ein it is impossible that God should lie; that we might have strong consolation, which have our refuge to lay hold upon that hope that is here set before our eyes. True it is, the devil doth always renew the battle against the servants of God, he doth sift and winnow them as Wheat, and as it were bruise their heel; but his head is broken. Gen. chap. 3 verse. 15, he hath received his deadly wound, and he shall not prevail over them: for there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus. Indeed God is able to foil him and destroy him at once, and to give us a full and final conquest over all the powers of darkness in a moment, if it pleased him: but lest we should be puffed up in pride, and forget our selves, lest we should leave calling upon the Name of almighty GOD, and the sorrowing and sighing for our own weakness; lest we should be besotted with self-love, & fall asleep in security, the Lord will work by little and little, he will proceed as it were by li•• and level, he will root out our spiritual enemies by degrees. Let us not therefore look to be freed wholly from temptations, but know, that it is profitable for us to be exercised under them: And let us be sober and watch, seeing our adversary the devil, as a roaring Lyon walketh about, seeking whom he may devour, whō if we resist steadfast in the faith, he will fly from us, 1 Pet. 5, 8, 9. I am. 4, 7. Let us put on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against all the assaults of the devil. And let us remember, that he is resisted and driven away, not by any superstitious crossing of our selves (which is no armor of proof) but by faith, & by prayer proceeding from faith, which are of great force and effect.

25 Then Balak said unto Balaam, Neither curse nor bless them at all.

26 But Balaam answered, and said unto Balak; Told I not thee, saying; All that the Lord speaketh, that must I do?

27 Again, Balak said unto Balaam, Come I pray thee, I will bring thee unto another place, if so be it will please that God, that thou mayest thence curse them for my sake.

28 So Balak brought Balaam unto the top of Peor, that looketh toward the wilderness.

29 Then Balaam said unto Balak, Make me here seven Altars, and prepare me here seven Bullocks, and seven Rammes.

30 And Balak did as Balaam had said, and offered a Bullock and a Ram on every Altar.

Thus much touching the Prophecy it self: now followeth the last part; to wit, the issue and effect thereof, both in Balak and in Balaam. For here we see the King chafing, the Sorcerer excusing; he commanding, and the King obeying. First of all, when Balak perceived that he was deceived of his hope and expectation, his wrath is kindled, and he chargeth the hyreling, that if he will not curse the people as he appointed, yet he should not bless them as he had enterprised. For the wicked had rather have the truth of God smothered & buried in silence, then themselves offended and disappointed. The mercenary Prophet excuseth himself that he was unjustly accused, having foreshowed, that it was not at his choice to hold his peace, or to speak what he would, but was constrained by a superior power to open his mouth, and to utter that which was delivered unto him. After this answer, the king taketh him up into another place (to Peor,) in which Mountain their Idol had a Temple, hoping that at the last, y^e God of Israel would change his mind, and grant his request. Behold the perverseness of unbelievers, who albeit they be crossed in their evil intentions & inventions, yet they proceed in their purposes, and between void hope, and vain fear, hold on their courses in the blindness of their hearts. Therefore Balaam seeking to keep his credit, and entertaining the King in an expectation of better success to come, reneweth his former practice, commanding seven Altars to be built, and seven Bullocks and Rams to be prepared; to whom the credulous King obeyeth, and suffereth himself to be deluded, by the devilish sorceries and idolatrous sacrifices of that false Prophet.

These particular points have been before considered, and the principal Doctrines arising from hence likewise opened. For hereby we see the rage and fury of the enemies to be insatiable, and vnappaseable, albeit their might be not answerable to their malice, nor their power so great, as their desire to hurt; they are like the sea that never resteth, but casteth up mire and gravel. No malice or cruelty can be comparable to the malice and cruelty of a natural man, undertaken for religion, or rather against religion and the truth of God. The father in this case hath not spared the son, y^e brother hath betrayed the brother to death, a man's enemies have been they of his own house, and they have been as wolves one to another.

Again, we see how evil men, albeit they be crossed in their attempts, yet will not give over, but return to their former sins, As the dog to his own vomit. So deceitful a bait is sin, ensnaring the conscience, that hardly they return that are holden in the chains thereof, having Satan at their elbow to tempt them, and their own corruptions within thē to help them forward. Notwithstanding, it shall not be amiss for us to observe the points laid before our eyes; one in the person of Balaam, the other in respect of Balak, the third in respect of them both.

[Verse 26. Balaam answered and said unto Balak. Told I not thee, saying; All that the Lord speaketh, that must I do?] We have oftentimes noted before, that the words which Balaam delivered, he spake, as moved and inspired by y^e Spirit of God; his prophesies are not mingled with his own dreams and devices, as dross with pure gold, as chaff with clean wheat, or as saw-dust with wholesome meat: these came not from the will of man, nor proceeded from any private motion and interpretation: he was guided and directed by the holy Ghost, and therefore he saith in this place; All that the Lord speaketh, that must I do: and in the chapter following, If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot pass the commandment of the Lord, to do either good or bad of mine own mind: what the Lord shall command, that same will I speak, Numb. 24, 13. So then he declareth, that in uttering & pronouncing these prophesies, he was limited and restrained, & his tongue tied up to that which God should put in his mouth. He was not left at liberty to speak at randon what he would, he must speak only that which the LORD would have him.

From hence we learn, that it is a duty belonging to all the Ministers whom God hath separated and called to that Office, to deliver the will of God fully & perfectly as they have received it of God, without adding to it, or detracting from it. True it is, the Ministers of the Gospel have now no extraordinary revelations or immediate inspirations, God doth not appear or reveal his word unto them, either by dreams in the night, or by visions in the day, neither do they hear his voice frō heaven: but they have the will of God revealed, and the Lord speaking unto them in his word. This word they must teach, & nothing but this word, and all that is revealed for our salvation in this word. A witness that is brought in to give evidence between man and man, in any hard matter that riseth in judgment between blood and blood, between Plea & Plea, is sworn to speak the truth, and all the truth, and nothing but the truth. So should it be with all Pastors and Teachers, which are as the Lord's witnesses, they must deal fully and faithfully, they must boldly speak that which God in his word hath revealed, & publish unto his people all that which he hath delivered unto them. This is it which the Lord spake to Jeremiah, hanging back when God called him, excusing whē God separated him, refusing when God had chosen him; Say not, I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee, shalt thou speak, Ier. 1, 7. 1 Kings 22, 14. Likewise when our Savior sent out his Apostles into the world, he charged them with this as a part of their commission; Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, Math. 28, 20. And the Apostle speaking of the Supper of the Lord, saith: I received of the Lord that which I also have delivered unto you, 1 Cor. 11, 23. And afterward confirming the faith in the Corinthians, in the article of the resurrection, he saith; First of all I delivered unto you that which I received, how that Christ died for our sins, and rose again according to the Scriptures. 1 Cor. 15, 3. Thus doth the Apostle clear himself, being falsely charged by the Jews; I obtained help of God, and continue unto this day, witnessing unto small and great, saying none other things then those which the Prophets and Moses did say should come, Acts 26, 22. Yea, this was the usual manner of all the Prophets preaching unto the people, to come unto them in the Name of God: Hear ye the word of the Lord, Thus saith the Lord.

[Reason 1] The Reasons for confirmation hereof, follow to be marked of us. First, this appeareth from the sundry titles as names of their Office that are givē unto them in the Scriptures, to put them in mind of the duties of their callings. They are called Workemen, because they should do the Lord's business, and finish the work whereunto he hath called and ordained them. They are called Builders, because they should build upon the foundation. The foundation is precious, even Jesus Christ, who is pure and perfect gold; and they must build upon it, gold, silver, and precious stones; not hay, not stubble, not timber, lest they suffer loss when the fiery trial shall come. Thus the Apostle speaketh, 1 Cor. 3, 12. According to the grace of God given to me, as a skillful Master-builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon: but let everyone take heed how he buildeth upon it. Sometimes they are called Pastors & Shepherds, because they should make the Sheep of Christ to rest in green pasture, and lead them by the still waters. Sometimes they are called Messengers, because they are, or should be God's mouth and messengers unto the people, and instead of God himself to them. Should not the Ambassador deliver the message, and all the message of his Lord and Master? Dare he chop and change, dare he add or alter, dare he invent & devise anything of his own? No, he will not depart or decline from his commission, but faithfully dischargeth the trust reposed in him. The Ministers are the messengers of God, and Ambassadors of Christ, and therefore it is required of them, that they be found faithful in the execution of their office. Hence it is, that the Prophet saith; The Priests lips should preserve knowledge, and they should seek the Law at his mouth: for he is the Messenger of the Lord of Hosts. So the Apostle speaketh; Now then we are Ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you through us, we pray you in Christ's stead that ye be reconciled to God. All which Titles, do tie up the Minister of God to deliver only the message of God, and do not leave him at liberty to teach what he list.

Secondly, to the end the faith of the hearers [Reason 2] may be certain, stayed upon the power of God, not upon the wisdom of men, which is but a broken Reede, a weak Pillar, and a rotten foundation to bear them up. This is the reason that the Apostle Paul useth, 1 Cor. 2, after he had shown, that he spake unto thē the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hid wisdom which God had determined before the world unto our glory, he giveth this reason; That your faith should not be in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God, 1 Cor. 2, 5, 7. God would not have his people left in uncertainties, nor fed with chaff, nor carried about with every wind and weather of doctrine, but built upon a sure Rock, & stand upon a certain foundation. But there is no sound feeding for the soul, but by the word, which is the power of God to salvation; all other food is as dust and drauery. All the fine devices of the wit, delivered in the perswasible words of man's wisdom, that tickle the outward ears, and delight carnal men, sauring wholly of the flesh, and not of the Spirit, are no better then husks, fitter to feed swine, then to nourish the sons and daughters of God •o eternal life. The word of God is a sharp two edged sword: the word of man is as a leaden knife, or a wooden dagger, which may: well threaten, but cannot strike, or if it strike, it cannot enter. The word of God is a consuming fire, Ier. 5, 14, and 23, 29, like to God the author of it, able to enflame men's hearts with a love of God when it is believed: the word of mā is as a painted fire, which carrieth a show, but hath no substance or strength, either to waste the stubble, or to refine and purify silver or gold. The word of God is the Lord's Fan to winnow the people, Math. 3, 12, separating the bastardy brood of Abraham from the true sons, venting the hypocrites from the believers, and scattering with the powerful blast thereof, the reprobates from the elect: all other ways & means that are used, are too weak & feeble to work this separation of the chaff from the wheat. And therefore all such as are the Lord's Fanners, that would publish their doctrine, not to please the ear, but to open the door of the conscience, must use no other instrument then this word of God which hath this force and effect.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, God will destroy those that do not deal faithfully with his people. Such as either hide the truth, or withhold it in unrighteousness, such as conceal or corrupt the word to please mē, undergo the curse of God, and bring upon themselves the heavy wrath of God. This appeareth in that charge which the Lord gave to the Prophet Jeremiah, chap. 1, 17. Thus the Lord dealeth also with the Prophet Ezekiel, chap. 3.18, and 33, 6. So the Apostle saith, A necessity is laid upon me, and woe unto me, if I preach not the Gospel, 1 Cor. 9, 16.

[Use 1] The uses of this doctrine are now to be handled. First of all, it followeth that they must know the Scriptures, they must not be young Plants, Idol Shepherds, blind guides, dumb dogs, sleepy watchmen, unsavory salt, which is good for nothing but for the dunghill, if for the dunghill, Luk. 14, 35. Mat. 5, 13. It is a shame for a guide not to know the way for a Seer to be blind, for a Messenger to be dumb. So then, all Teachers should make conscience to furnish themselves as wise Scribes and good Stewards, with profitable & competent knowledge, spending their days in getting the understanding of the Scriptures that they may minister a word in due season, and be able to feed their fellow-servants with wholesome food, leading them to the fountains of life. So then the knowledge of the word of God, and the gift of interpretation cannot be separated from the function & calling of the Minister, and God doth disclaim and disauow such as are without knowledge, that they shall be none of his Pastors & Teachers. Thus he speaketh by the Prophet Hosea, chap. 4, 6. Because thou hast refused knowledge, I will also refuse thee, that thou shalt be no Priest to me. Who would not marvel, if a Prince should appoint a Messenger or Ambassador to go to a people, which had no legs to go, no tongue to speak, no language or reason to deliver his message? Who then can be so absurd, as to think that the wise God, the Lord of Lord's, and King of Kings, would appoint any to be as his mouth, and the Messenger of his will, which cannot teach and deliver his will? Who is it that hath an house to build, that will choose such Carpenters and Masons as have no skill to lay a stone, or to hew their timber, or to handle their Tooles? Who will retain or entertain a Shepherd to keep his sheep, an husbandman to till his ground, a Captain to lead his army, a Steward to provide for his family, a laborer to do his work, that is altogether ignorant, and hath no knowledge to do these things? Now God is more prudent and provident then mortal man, and therefore he will reject and refuse all such as are not able to discharge the Office committed unto them through ignorance. God requireth knowledge in all the people, much more in such as take upon them to be the Teachers of the people, which should not only have knowledge themselves, but teach knowledge to others, that they do not perish for want of knowledge. The Spirit of God mentioneth this to be one of the chiefest causes that religion perished among the ten Tribes, and that Idolatry was erected and continued among them, even until they were carried away to perpetual captivity, in that Jeroboam made of the lowest and rudest of the people, Priests of the high places; who would, might consecrate himself to that calling. The condition of the Jews was never more dangerous and desperate, and nearer to destruction and desolation, then when they had blind watchmen, and such Priests set over them as had no knowledge; which made the Prophet Isaiah call for all the beasts of the field to devour them, and all the beasts of the Forest to eat them up, giving this as the reason, For their watchmen are all blind, and have no knowledge, Isaiah 56, 9, 10. Hence it is, that the Prophet Malachi teacheth, That the Priests lips should preserve knowledge, & the people seek the Law at their mouth, for they are the Messengers of the Lord of hosts, Mal. 2, 7. This therefore showeth and condemneth the gross and grievous sin of many amongst us, that occupy the places of Pastors, and cannot feed; that run before they were sent, take upon thē to be lights, and yet are darkness. These can have no comfort in their calling, because they were never designed or called of God to this place: For whomsoever he calleth to any function, he enableth in some measure to discharge the duty which he hath required of them. They endanger their own souls, & the souls of many other, for when the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch, and one saith truly, that we murder the souls of such as we see run the way of destruction, when we are careless and hold our peace.

[Use 2] Secondly, it behooveth all the Ministers of the word of God, to make conscience to deliver the truth, and all the truth unto the people, howsoever it be taken, according to the example of the Apostles: Peter and John answered unto them, and said; Whether it be right in the sight of God, to obey you rather than God, judge ye: for we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard, Acts 4, 19, 20. And Paul exhorting the Elders and Overseers of the Church of Ephesus, setteth before their eyes his own practice, that he had kept back nothing that was profitable, but had shown them all things necessary to salvation: I take you to record this day, that I am pure frō the blood of all men, for I have concealed nothing, but have revealed unto you all the counsel of God, Acts 20, 20, 26, 27. If we be careful and conscionable in doing this duty faithfully to God and his people, we shall reap and receive more sound comfort thereby, then by the powerful effect of our Ministry. True it is, all painful Teachers esteem nothing more, nor so much, as of the people whom they have gained to God and godliness, accounting them their joy, & their crown, and their glory; and yet we may reap more true comfort and consolation by discharging our duties carefully, then by saving souls, and by turning many to righteousness, if we could win whole kingdoms to God. For we may save others from death, and convert a sinner from going astray out of his way, and yet after this, our selves become reprobates; we may be the sweet savor of life to life to others, and not our selves to God. Thus was it with many Priests of loose & licentious life under the Law. Thus it was with Judas, who wrought miracles, preached the Gospel, and converted souls as well as the rest of the Apostles, yet was the son of perdition. And thus no doubt it was with the Scribes and Pharisees that sate in Moses chair, and taught the people what they should observe and do; like unto those workmen that built the Ark for others, but were drowned themselves. Let us then labor after the especial comfort, consisting in the delivery of the whole will of God, that though our hearers perish, and go unto destruction, yet we may find peace and comfort to our own harts. This was it which the Apostle rested in; he preached Christ, not only as a Savior to thē that believe, but as a Judge of them that contemn him: he saith; We are unto God the sweet savor of Christ in them that are saved & in them which perish: to the one we are the savor of death unto death; and to the other, the savor of life unto life: for we are not as many, which make merchandize of the word of God, but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God, speak we in Christ, 2 Cor. 2, 15, 16, 17. Thus doth the Prophet Isaiah prophesy concerning Christ, bringing him in, on the one side complaining of the contempt of his preaching, and on the other side comforting himself, that his work was approved of God: I have labored in vain, I have spent my strength in vain, and for nothing, but my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God, Isaiah 49, 4. If we be found faithful, we shall be partakers of this comfort; blessed shall that servant be, whom his master when he cometh, shall find so doing. So then, this duty serveth to comfort such as have taught the word of God, not only truly, but wholly and only, so that they are able to appeal to the consciences of their hearers, to witness with their sincerity. Thus did the Apostle Paul in many places. In the 20. chap. of the Acts, verse. 18, 26, he saith, Ye know from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you; wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. Where he maketh them witnesses of his diligence in preaching, and of the discharge of his duty in his calling, and therefore they could not deny it. Thus he speaketh in his second Epistle to the Corinthians, chap. 3, v. 1, 2 The like manner of speaking & dealing hath been used by the Prophets and Apostles, as appeareth in sundry places; yea, by Christ Jesus himself. Samuel cleareth himself before the people, Behold, here I am: bear record of me before the Lord, and before his Anointed, 1.

Sam. 12, 3. So Christ speaketh, Which of you can accuse me, and rebuke me of sin? John 8, 46. This is a great and singular comfort to all the Ministers, that in truth shall be able to avouch to their people this their diligence & uprightness, and to say in the face of the Congregation, Ye know that I have done my duty, I take you to record, that I have admonished you, I have blown the Trumpet, and taught you the way of salvation. This is expedient and necessary for the Minister to utter of himself, both in respect of the godly and ungodly: of the godly, that their souls gained to the faith might clear him, and God have the glory. Of the wicked his adversaries, that they might be left without excuse, that their mouths might be stopped, & they have nothing justly to lay against him. But contrariwise, when the people have been ignorant, and without instruction thorough the want of performance of this duty, this should be as great a grief and anguish of spirit, and bring as great trouble of conscience to consider his negligence and want of love to their souls that were redeemed by the precious blood of Christ,

Thirdly, this serveth to confute and convince [Use] sundry errors, and to correct sundry evil practices and corrupt abuses. First, it meeteth with many errors and heresies of the church of Rome, which maintaineth y^e sour leaven of false doctrine, and poisons the truth of God with their own inventions. And seeing the Minister is to set down but the truth of God, we must learn to detest apocryphall additions, and their human traditions, both which are a derogation to the sufficiency and perfection of the Scriptures. For touching the Apocryphal Books, which they have lifted up into the chair of estate, and given them equal power and preeminence with the Canonical Scriptures, they are but base & counterfeit coin and no part of the Churches treasure; they have dross mingled with them, & are not pure and perfect metal. They were not endited by the Spirit of God, nor penned by the Prophets, the Lord's Secretaries, as the Scriptures were, which have God for their author, and the holy Prophets for their Penmen. Again, they were never committed of trust to the Jews, nor received of them into the Ark, as not only the fathers, but the adversaries themselves confess and acknowledge: but the ancient Church of the Jews received and approved all the Canonical Book, Rom. 3, 2. God did commend them to their care & committed them to their custody; for this was one chief privilege of the Jews, that they were credited with the Oracles of God. And howsoever they shown their ignorance in false interpretations, yet they discovered no unfaithfulness in willful corruptions, additions, alterations, or manglings of any Books; for then they should have been charged with this, as well as with the other. Lastly, they contain sundry things that disagree from the true Scriptures of God, & likewise from themselves, as might be declared and demonstrated by many particulars. Seeing therefore these books called Apocrypha, were neither penned by the Prophets, nor delivered to y^e church of the Israelites, neither are free from diverse contradictions; we conclude, that the Church of Rome hath no warrant to equal them with the holy Scriptures, & make them of like credit and authority with the Scriptures. Again, they offend in teaching human traditions, in making a word unwritten, equal with the word written, and holding the Scriptures to be imperfect, maimed, lame, not containing all things necessary to faith and salvation, not fully enabling the Minister to discharge his Calling. But the holy Scriptures are perfect, absolute, and all-sufficient to teach the truth, to convince errors, to correct vices, and to instruct in righteousness; yea, to make the man of God perfect, and thoroughly instructed in every good work, and are of strength, ability, and sufficiency, to make him wise to salvation. Lastly, they are accursed that add anything, that take away anything frō that which is written, Deut. 4, 2. Prov. 30, 6. Revel. 22, 18. and therefore no such unwritten verities are to be taught or preached to the people, as the matter of our Sermons or the instrument of our faith, or the means of our salvation. Moreover it serveth to redress and amend sundry corrupt practices too common and familiar among the Ministers of the Gospel: Some instead of building upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles (Christ Jesus being the chief Corner-stone) do feed men with fancies & fond devices, without godly edifying, and teach their own dreams and fables. Let the Prophet that hath a dream, tell a dream, and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully: what is the chaff to the wheat, saith the Lord? Ier. 23, 28. And the Apostle chargeth Timothy to stay profane and vain babblings, for they shall increase unto more ungodliness, 2. Tim. 2, 16. Many there are that corrupt the word to please men, and to establish their own errors. We cannot content our selves with the ancient faith, but loathe the heavenly Manna, and wax wanton against Christ. He is not esteemed that preacheth the plain truth plainly in the evidence of the Spirit. He is most magnified and made of, that can bring in some strange matter against the common received faith, and we live in this respect in most dangerous times and perilous seasons, as ever were heretofore. Others shut up their mouths and either through fear dare not, or through flattery and filthy lucre, will not reprove sin. These are men-pleasers, and time-seruers, not remembering what the Apostle saith, Galat. 1, 10. Preach I man's doctrine, or God's? Or go I about to please men? For if I should yet please men, I were not the servant of Christ. The Ministers of the Gospel must not sow cushions under men's elbows, nor prophesy to the people of wine and strong drink, they must not apply or fashion their doctrine to the humors and affections of men, as if the word were a crooked line, or a leaden rule, or a shipmans hose; but keep a good conscience. Hence it is, that the Lord chargeth Jeremiah to take away the precious from the vile, and to do according to his word; Let them return unto thee, but return not thou unto them. A father will not always feed the fancy, nor follow the disposition of his son that is sick; but will sometimes cross his mind, and restrain his desire, Ier. 15, 19, and 6, 14. So must the Ministers of God, which are the fathers of our souls deal with such as are sick of sin, not soothe them up with sweet words, nor dawb with untempered Morter, but give thē that precious balm that shall not break their head, Psal. 141, 5. Thus dealt Elijah with Ahab, Amos with Amaziah, John the Baptist with Herod, though it cost him his head. And thus should all the true Ministers of God do, without pride or ambition, without fear or flattery seek the glory of God, not the praise of men: and howsoever the people hate him that rebuketh in the gate, Amos, chap. 5, verse 10, and abhor him that speaketh uprightly, yet they should set God before their eyes, and consider they have to deal with him. Lastly, they must not preach part of the word only, and leave another part untaught, but lay before them the whole will of God. Some preach nothing but the law: some teach nothing but the Gospel, & both sorts are greatly deceived, if they look for any great increase by their labors. The Law must prepare and make the way, the Gospel must follow after. The Law casteth down, the Gospel comforteth and raiseth up. The Law revealeth the knowledge of sin, the Gospel revealeth the remission of sin. Both these means are to be set on work, and applied wisely and discreetly to our hearers. Such as are secure and cold in the profession of the Gospel, such as thorough presumption or ignorance see not their own sins, give them the Law, and apply unto them the threatenings of the same. Such as see and feel their sins, and are cast down by a deep apprehension of God's heavy judgments, minister unto them a plaster of the Gospel made of the precious blood of Christ, that looking upon him as it were upon the brazen Serpent, they may presently be cured and recovered of the sting of sin, and the wound of conscience. Both these are two necessary means that God hath left, the one without the other, hurteth more then healeth. The Law without the Gospel driveth the poor distressed soul upon the rock of desperation: the Gospel without the Law, puffeth up and advanceth proud flesh unto presumption; and therefore the spiritual Physicians and Surgeons are so to temper them, as that the Church may have the profitable and necessary help of both.

[Use 4] Lastly, it serveth to direct the hearers in the right art of hearing: they must submit them selves to God's ordinance, and be ready to know and hear all the will of God. We must not have itching ears, which are not able to suffer wholesome doctrine, some as the Athenians delighting in new things, and in hearing fables; others not abiding to be reprov'd. Therefore the Prophet Micah saith, Are not my words good to him that walketh uprightly? Mich. 2, 7. The cause why the word to many men is unpleasant and unsavory, is because they delight in evil, and desire to continue in sin, growing to so gross a contempt, as to command the Prophets not to Prophecy; or to prescribe unto them, what they shall Prophecy, or would limit them to their own liking, to serve their own affections and filthy lusts. Many would follow John the Baptist, til he required repentance. They would hear Christ, until he spake of taking up the cross. Herod heard John willingly, and practiced many things but when once he came nearer to him, & taught that it was not lawful to keep his brothers wife, he enjoined him silence, and clapped him up in prison. The Jews seemed for a time attentively to hear the defense of Paul; but when he touched his Apostleship to the Gentiles which they crossed & ganesayed, Luke testifies, they heard him unto this word, but then they lift up their voices and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth, for it is not meet that he should live. Thus it fareth with many hearers in our days. The drunkard delighteth to hear y^e Minister preach against oppression and covetousness: this pleaseth his humor, this his stomach brooketh well enough. These men hear the word by parts & parcels, they give care till their secret sores be reprov'd, and sit quietly till their sores be rubbed; and when once they are touched, they begin to kick & spurn with their heels against the word, and the Ministers of it. But we must hear all that is taught us, and not certain clauses or cantiles only, we must hear constantly, continually, and universally, as well the things that mislike us, and go against us, as those things that please and content us: as well the judgments of God thundered out against us in the Law, as the sweet promises pronounced and offered in the Gospel: as well the laying open of our own sins, as the publishing of the sins of other men. This kind of hearing the Lord commendeth in his people, after the delivery of the Law, Deut. chapter 5, verses 28.29. They have well said, all that they have spoken; they were ready to hear all, and do all that Moses should speak unto them. But if we fall to stint the Spirit, and teach the Lord to speak, prescribing the Minister what he shall say, and restraining our hearing what we will hear, we shall never hear fruitfully, we shall never practice conscionably what we have heard. Thus much concerning the protestation of Balaam.

Verse 27. Balak said unto Balaam, Come I pray thee, I will bring thee unto another place, if so be it will please that God &c.] Here is offered to our considerations, the profession of Balaam. He pretendeth Religion, and the help of God, and professeth to do all things in the Name of the true God, & yet was void of all Religion and sincere dealing, and doth all things by the working of the devil, abusing the glorious and fearful Name of God, to malicious & mischievous purposes. Hereby we learn, that many in the world profess piety and godliness in the tongue, that have none in the heart. They profess GOD outwardly, but serve the devil inwardly. This appeareth in the Jews, who albeit they would not hear the preaching of the Prophets, rebuking them in the Name of the Lord, yet had oftentimes in their mouths, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, this is the Temple of the Lord, Ier. 7, 4. Thus the Prophet Isaiah reproveth them in his time, This people come near unto me with their mouth, and honor me with their lips, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me was taught by the precept of men, Isaiah, chap. 29, 13. So, many that were professors and teachers of the truth, (as Christ testifieth) yea, workers of miracles, and crying unto him, Lord, Lord, yet shall not be acknowledged of him as belonging to him. The Samaritans called and accounted themselves the true worshippers, and pretended the tradition of their fathers, and hated the Jews as false worshippers, yet themselves worshipped they knew not what. All heretics will boast, they teach God's truth; all hypocrites will say, they embrace the faith: all carnal and loose professors will challenge sincerity: all Papists will cry out, they are the Church, the successors of the Apostles, and the true Catholics, yet are no true Church but in show; no true Catholics but in name; no true successors of the Apostles, but in place. In the days of Christ the Jews gloried that they were the seed of Abraham, John 8, 44, the sons of the Covenant, the heirs of promise: they pleaded they were the first borne of God, yet he proveth to their faces, that they were the very limbs of the devil. And the Church of Smyrna had such among thē as vaunted they were Jews, Revel. 2, 9. that is, the people of GOD, but were in truth the Synagogue of Satan. All which examples, conclude the certainty of the former doctrine, and verify the saying of Solomon, Prov. 30. There is a generation that are pure in their own eyes, and yet are not washed from their filthiness.

The truth hereof will farther and more [Reason 1] fully appear unto us, if we enter into the consideration of the causes and reasons of it. The first is pride & self-love, which so overcome their hearts, and blind their eyes, that they cannot see their own wickedness and wretchedness, which are so hud-winked with palpable ignorance of God, as that they cannot judge of themselves and their own misery, as they should. We see the conjunction of these in the King of Moab and his Chaplain the false Prophet, that albeit they pretend the holy Name of God, yet through love of themselves on the one side, and ignorance of God on the other, they cannot see that their whole proceeding, is an utter renouncing of God. This reason the Prophet David pointeth unto, when he saith; The wicked hath made boast of his own hearts desire, and the covetous blesseth himself though he contemneth the Lord: for the wicked is so proud, that he seeketh not for God; he is in prosperity, God spareth him in mercy, and he imagineth presently that he is just and holy, pleasing God, Psal. 10, 3, 4.

[Reason 2] Secondly, the heart of man is many times deceitful. He can speak with his tongue that which he meaneth not in his heart, nor hath any sense or feeling of in his own soul, but beguileth with lying lips and a double toong. Many are under their profession hypocrites, and have hypocritical & hollow hearts, speaking that which they did not mind. For the nature of an hypocrite is to appear outwardly like a painted Toombe, as if there were nothing in him but singleness and simplicity of heart, and until his corruption break out as filthy matter out of a sore (which assuredly it will do at some time or other, seeing there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, Luke 12, 2.) there is none more conformable then he, in the outward exercises of y^e Word, Prayer, and the Sacraments. They draw near with their lips, they listen with their ears, they stretch forth their hands: thus they prepare and make ready their mouths to pray, their ears to hear, their hands to receive. This appeareth in the proud Pharisee, Luke, chapter 18 verses 11, 12. He came into the Temple to pray, he thanked God for his blessings, he fasted twice in the week, he gave tythe of all that he possessed: yet he worshipped God in vain, and departed to his house without profit or comfort.

Now let us handle the uses of this doctrine. [Use 1] First, we learn hereby for our instruction, that outward profession is not enough to assure us of our salvation, or to fit us to God's kingdom: for the devil might go as far as the best of those that rest in the show of godliness, who can turn and transform himself into an Angel of light, 2 Corinth. 11, verse 14. A wolf may put on a sheep's skin; yea, the Parrot and Ape can imitate: and therefore trust not to thy fair shows and external appearance, if thou proceed no further. It is not sufficient for thee to be baptized, to be made partaker of the word of God, of the Table of the Lord, and such privileges of the Church; this is to trust in lying words that shall not profit, Ier. chap. 7, verse 4. The case and condition of many professors, is no better then of the heathen Infidels, as of the Turks and Sarazins, I mean of such as content themselves with the bare name or profession of Christianity, and therein satisfy themselves; nay, it is a great deal worse, as our Savior teacheth, Math. chapter 11, verses 21, 22 23. that Corazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum shall be punished more severely then Tyre and Sidon, then Sodom and Gomorrhah. What comfort in the things of this life can any man take to bear the name of land, and another to have the state; to have the title, and another the interest: to have the empty shadow, and another the propriety and possession? Who would content himself with a bare show of riches, of honors, of health, of profit, and to want the things themselves? We see how all men hate couzeners and deceitful persons that seek to deceive and beguile their brethren: but much more odious and abhominable is it, to go about to delude the LORD, and to make show of loving him, when indeed we hate him. Saul pretended great zeal & forwardness in fulfilling the Commandment of the LORD, 1 Samuel, chapter 15, verse 13. but the kingdom was rent from him for his hypocrisy. For there can be no greater dishonor done to God, then to seek to please him with painted worship, as if he were a child that is delighted with Babies or Rattles, or would be pleased with toys and trifles; which is blasphemy once to think of the eternal Majesty, who beholdeth the secrets of the heart.

Secondly, seeing in outward behavior many [Use 2] set goodly colors upon their actions, and pretend great sincerity when the heart is empty, it is very behooveful for us to know them by their fruits, and to observe the notes and marks of hypocrisy, whereby in the closest and cunningest carriage, it is bewrayed & disclosed. True it is, some by continual practice are grown to hide the holownes of their harts so deep, that it is hardly discovered: yet such is the judgment of God against them, that he layeth them open one way or other, at one time or other, in one place or other, in one company or other, upon one occasion or other, and so pulleth off the vizard of hypocrisie from their faces; and in the mean season leaveth us diverse marks to discern them, and to trace them out as by certain footsteps: first of all, their cheefest care is to seek the pomp and glory of the world, to be highly esteemed of others, and never regard the glory of God, or what he esteem of them. This appeareth in Saul, who being reprov'd of Samuel for his sin, 1 Sam. 15, 30, thought more of upholding his own estate, then of turning to God by true repentance, and therefore saith unto him, Honor me I pray thee, before the Elders of my people, and before Israel, and turn again with me. This also appeareth in the Pharisees, who could not believe because they received honor one of another, and sought not the honor of God alone. Secondly, hypocrites are sharp-sighted, and have Eagles eyes to observe the behavior and look into the lives of other men, but are blind in regarding, and backward in reforming their own, as we see in the Pharisee, Luk. 18.11. He thanked God that he was just and holy, not as the Publican. Hereunto cometh the reproof of Christ, Mat. 7, 3, 4, 5. Why seest thou the mote that is in thy brothers eye, and perceivest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how sayest thou to thy brother, Suffer me to cast out the mote out of thine eye, and behold a beam is in thine own eye; Hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye, &c. Let us learn to begin with our selves, and to end with others: first, to look to our own ways, and when we feel how hard it is to subdue the strength of sin in our selves, and to over-master our own corruptions, we shall be more charitable, and less severe to others. Thirdly, they are more curious in the observation of the ancient traditions of men, of customs of forefathers, and of devices of their own, then of the holy Statutes and Commandments of almighty God. Behold the practice of the Pharisees in this point, as they are painted out unto us in the Gospel, as the Evangelist showeth, Mat. 15, where the Pharisees are said to come unto Christ, and to demand of him, why his Disciples transgressed the tradition of the Elders, and to complain against them, when they saw them eat meat with unwashen hands: for the Pharisees and all the Jews, except they wash their hands oft, eat not, holding the tradition of the Elders: and when they come from the market, except they wash, they eat not; and many other things there be, which they have taken upon them to observe, as the washing of cups and pots, and of brazen vessels, and of beds. They do not charge the Disciples with breaking the laws of God, (which might be justly returned upon themselves) but with transgressing the ordinances of men, and making them necessary to the worship of God, and therefore are taxed as hypocrites. Let us take heed we do not please our selves in vain superstition or worship of God, fondly devised by our selves, and in blind zeal, which is not according to knowledge. Fourthly, they are precise in trifles, and loose in weighty affairs, they stumble at a straw, and leap over a block, they strain out a gnat, and swallow a camell, they bind heavy burdens, and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders, but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers. This is the cause that Christ denounceth such woes against the Pharisees, Math. 23, 23, because they did tythe the Mint, Annis, and Cumin, and leave the weightier matters of the Law; as Judgment, Mercy, & Fidelity: these ought ye to have done, & not to have left the other undone. Thus they snared men's consciences, and entangled their own about small things, and slender trifles, but neglected the greatest things, and loosed the raynes in things that were simply evil, & provoked the wrath of God. They thought it a great sin to heal the sick on the Sabbath day, to pull and rub ears of Corn on that day to drive away hunger, to converse with Publicans and sinners. They made great scruple of conscience, to put the silver pieces into the treasury, which Judas brought back, and cast down at their feet, because it was the price of blood, Mat. 27, 6: but their hearts never smote them, neither counted they it unlawful to hire a traitor to betray his Master, and to shed innocent blood. So at the time of the passion of Christ, their tender consciences suffered them not to enter into the common Hall, lest they should be defiled, but that they might eat the Passover: but they were not afraid to oppress the Son of God with slanders, lies, and false witnesses, and to crucify the Lord of glory. Such is the holiness and religion of the Church of Rome standing in outward observations, Touch not, taste not, eat not, which are after the doctrines and commandments of men, which have indeed a show of holiness, but are things of no value. Let us not cleave to such vanities, nor advance our own inventions, but make the Law of God a light to our feet, and a lantern unto our steps. Lastly, they do all things to be seen of men, seeking the praise and applause of the world, and hunting after vain-glory; which have received all their reward, they can look for no other at the hands of almighty God. This property Christ observeth to be in hypocrites, Math. chap. 6, verses 2, 5, 16, and 23, 3. They blow a Trumpet before their alms, they stand and pray in the open streets, they disfigure their faces when they fast, and all these ceremonies and circumstances are used, that they may be seen and praised of men. But we must in all our works look unto God, and know that his eye is upon us, who seeth us in all places, and will reward us openly. To conclude, we are all to take knowledge of these fruits and effects of hypocrisy, that we be not overtaken with it: and on the other side, let us first seek the glory of God, reform our own ways, prefer the statutes of God, observe the weighty things of the Law, and content our selves to be seen of God, that so we may have praise not of men, but of God.

Thirdly, it teacheth us what to think of [Use 3] coniuring, sorcery, & enchantment. Sorcerers and Witches will seem to do all things in the name of God, they use many good words, they have the Name of God, and of Jesus Christ, continually in their mouths, & would be thought to work wholly by the divine power of almighty God, whereby they shamefully take his Name in vain, and notoriously deceive such as resort and repair unto them: and therefore we see how God maintained his own glory, and revenged the abuse done unto his holy Name in the Acts, chap. 19, 13, 16. by the example of those which took upon them to conjure and cast out devils in y^e Name of God, and to name over them which had evil spirits, the Name of the Lord Jesus, saying, We adjure you by Jesus, whom Paul precheth; for the man in whom the evil spirit was, ran upon them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded. Neither let any object and say, there is no sin in seeking to them, seeing they use good words, whereof followeth a good effect, to wit, recovery of health, and restoring of the sick. For herein lieth the deep subtlety of Satan, undermining craftily to hide his purpose. He knoweth that if he were known, and his hand seen in it, all men would abhor and abjure him. Therefore he useth to assail men disguised, & changeth himself into an Angel of light, that we may be the sooner deceived, and he the better received. Now he can find no fitter color thē to make show of the Name of God, which is horribly abused and profaned, even by such as are accounted cunning men, and cunning women. These, the more they use the Name of God, the more wicked they are: and therefore albeit they speak of God, and Christ his Son, & teach such as come unto them, to use good words, to wear some part of John's Gospel, & to do all in the Name of Christ, yet they are the instruments of the devil, profaners of the Scriptures, abusers of holy things, and takers of the Name of God in vain, whom God will never hold guiltless, Exod. 20, 7. The devils are not driven out with good words he is with stood with the shield of faith, Eph. 6.16, where the Scriptures are not hanged about the neck, but written in the heart by the Spirit of God, and the soul thoroughly armed with the power of them, as with a spiritual sword that is able to wound the enemy.

Lastly, we learn from hence to join to [Use 4] our outward profession, true sanctification, & inward holiness of conversation. True profession bringeth with it true godliness. For all such as have this honor given unto them to be the people of God, and his precious inheritance, must be an holy people to God, as Moses teacheth: Thou hast set up the Lord this day to be thy God, and the Lord hath set thee up this day to be a precious people unto him, that thou shouldst keep all his Commandments, & to make thee high above all Nations, in praise, in name, & in glory, &c. Deut. 26, 17, 18, 18, 19. Let us not content our selves to have GOD in our mouths, but labor to be sincere, and first of all begin to look to our hearts. He that looketh to have good fruit of his Trees, looketh to the roots. He that would have clear waters in the channels, looketh to the Fountaines. So if we would cleanse our ways in God's sight, this is the right order to be observed, to begin first to cleanse the heart. This Christ teacheth y^e Pharisees, being proud hypocrites, Ye make clean the utter side of the Cup, and of the Platter, but within they are full of bribery and excess: thou blind Pharisee, cleanse first the inside of the Cup and Platter, that the outside of thē may be clean also, Math. 23, 25, 26. This duty must of everyone of us be practiced: First, give unto God the heart, that made it, & be careful to begin the work of repentance there, & take heed of all hypocrisy, which may deceive others, and will deceive our selves, but cannot deceive God. Counterfet holiness is double ungodliness, both because it is ungodliness, and also a counterfetting which God abhorreth. Oh hypocrite (saith one) if it be a good thing to be good indeed, what reason hast thou to appear to be that which thou wilt not be? And if it be an evil thing to be evil indeed, why wilt thou be that which thou wouldst not seem to be? If it be a good thing to appear good, it is better to be so indeed: and if it be evil to appear to be evil, it is worse to be evil indeed. Wherefore, either appear as thou art, in truth, or be in truth as thou appearest. For what shall it profit thee to seem to all others a very Saint, and to be to thyself, nay, to thy God, a devil? It is much more to thy profit and comfort to be that indeed to thyself, which thou wouldst seem to be to others. A wicked man counterfetting godliness, is most ungodly: the deeper his hypocrisy is, the greater is his iniquity and impiety.

[Verse 28. So Balak brought Balaam unto the top of Peor, that looketh toward the Wilderness: Then Balaam said, &c.] Hitherto of two Doctrines, arising partly from the person of Balaam, and partly from the person of Balak. One more remaineth to be considered in the shutting up of this Chapter, from the practice of them both. In all this business we have seen more their policy, then their power: and how they have behaved themselves cunningly and craftily to bring their purpose to pass. Hitherto cometh Balaks sending from far, and hyring of a sorcerer to curse y^e people. Hitherto cometh Balaam's consenting and coming for lucre, and love of money: & the sacrifices that both of thē did offer. Hereby we learn, That the children of this world are wise in their generation, omitting no manner of means to bring their purposes to pass. We may observe by continual experience, the nature of ungodly men; they are subtle and cunning in their kind, they watch their ways and times to fit them, to work out their wicked devices and inventions. Balak knew well enough he was not able to meet the Israelites in the open field, and to put his cause to the trial of a battle, and therefore dealeth otherwise. This is it which Stephen in his Apology noteth, Acts 7, 19. There arose another King which knew not Joseph; the same dealt subtly with our kindred, and evilly entreated our fathers, and made them to cast out their young children that they should not remain alive. Thus did Laban deal toward Jacob, Gen. 31, 1, 2, 41, changing his mind, revoking his bargains, altering his wages, murmuring at his prosperity, and changing his countenance toward him. This is noted also in the Parable recorded, Luk. 16, 8, where it is said, that the Master praised and commended his unjust Steward, because he had done wisely, For the children of this world are in their generation wiser thē the children of light. This we see by many examples. Ahithophels counsel was esteemed like as one had asked counsel at the Oracle of God, so were all his counsels both with David and with Absalom. The like we see in Herod, when he heard of the birth of Christ, as of a new borne King, by the wise men; he pretendeth piety, but useth policy to destroy the Babe our Savior, he calleth the wisemen secretly and privily, he willeth them to return what success they had, and pretended a good end that he might worship him, whereas his meaning was to kill him. The same we might observe in the Scribes and Pharisees after the ascension of Christ, they spared no means to hinder the course of the Gospel, Acts 3, and 4, and 5, but used sometimes fair means, sometimes threatenings, sometimes commandments to stop the mouths of the Apostles. All which Testimonies teach us that which the Prophet Jeremiah saith, ch. 4.22. of the people in his time agreeable to the truth of this doctrine, They are wise to do evil, but to do well they have no knowledge.

[Reason 1] The Reasons follow. First, they serve a cunning master, the author of all confusion, the contriuer of all mischief, the worker of all wickedness, that old subtle serpent, who worketh in all the children of disobedience. Eph. 2, 2. They serve him as their master, they obey him as their father, they follow him as their captain, they honor him as their lord, they worship him as their god. For do ye not know, (saith the Apostle Paul) that to whomsoever ye give yourselves as servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether it be of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness? Rom. 6, 16. And as Peter testifieth, They promise unto others liberty, and are themselves the servants of corruption: for of whomsoever a man is overcome, even unto the same he is in bondage, 2 Pet. 2, 19.

Secondly, God giveth even to wicked men [Reason 2] wisdom and understanding, to magnify his mercy, who is good to all, and to aggravate their sin, who are made thereby without excuse. Rom. 1, 20, 21. For he maketh his Sun to shine upon the evil and the good, he sendeth rain on the just and unjust. Now the greater his goodness is toward them, the heavier shall his judgment and their punishment be. To whom much is committed, of him much shall be required, and to whomsoever men do give much, the more of him will they ask, Luke 12, 48. What is it that thou hast not received? And if thou hast received it, why dost thou not glorify him of whom thou hast received it? Thus we see, God giveth wisdom and sundry other gifts to the ungodly, both to show himself to be in his mercies unspeakable, and to leave them in their sins inexcusable.

Thirdly, the enemies of God have knowledge, [Reason 3] understanding, experience, foresight, & forecast; they are as wise as Serpents, as subtle as Foxes, as crafty as Crocodiles, to the ende God may use them as his rods in correcting his Church, and in trying the faith of his people. So he proved the patience of the Israelites by Pharaoh & the Egyptians, and by the cunning and crafty fetches, which they practiced for their overthrow and destruction. So he tried David by wise Achitophel, through whose subtlety & suggestion, David was driven out of Jerusalem, and to shift from place to place for the safeguard of life. So he tried Joseph and Mary, by the dissimulation of Herod, by whō they were constrained to depart out of Judea, and to fly into the Land of Egypt.

The uses to be made of this Doctrine are [Use 1] many. First, this should on the other side, teach us to deal wisely and warily with them, lest we be snared and circumvented by them. We are set as upon an hill, we are placed as upon a stage; if we profess Christ Jesus, a small spot will be seen in our garment. It behooveth us therefore, to be wise as Serpents, and innocent as Doves, according to the counsel of our Savior, to the end we may stop the mouths of gainsayers, and cut off occasions from them that seek occasions, that when they speak evil of us as of evil doers, they may be ashamed which slander our good conversation. It behooveth us therefore having to do with such adversaries as are their craftsmasters in their occupation, and have learned cunning in their profession, to deal not only lawfully, but wisely. Their wisdom is joined with wickedness, our wisdom must be seasoned and tempered with godliness. Their policy is iniquity, with us policy and innocence must accompany together, and kiss one another. Their wisdom is a circumventing by laying of snares; our wisdom must be to be circumspect in avoiding of snares. If we have this wariness mingled with true sincerity, having our spirits without guile, and all our actions without dissimulation, it is both lawful and expedient to set wisdom against wisdom, and policy against policy, and care against care, and understanding against understanding, that so through their subtlety, and our simplicity, we be not taken in their traps which they have laid for us. The men are mischievous, the times are dangerous, the snares and slights are pernicious: if we should not deal wisely and warily, we should lie open as a prey to the enemies, and should notwithstanding imminent harms and hurts ready to fall upon us. Thus the servants of God have borne themselves in a lawful course with a wise hand. Rebecca understanding the hatred, and hearing of y^e purpose of Esau, Genes. 27, 41, 46, that when the days of mourning for his father should come, he would slay his brother, being desirous to preserve them both, but especially Jacob, conveyeth him out of the danger; she goeth and alledgeth that the daughters of Heth were a grief of mind, and a weariness of life unto her, and so sendeth him away from his fathers house for a season. She pretendeth the cause to be, to take a wise at Padan Aram, but concealeth her principal purpose from her Husband, and dealeth not only lawfully, but wisely and politically. The like we see in Paul, perceyuing a dissention in the assembly, and a division in judgment amongst his accusers, consisting of two parts; one of the Pharisees that held the immortality of the soul, and the resurrection of the body; the other of the Sadducees, which denied the one and the other: he took the occasion and opportunity by his calling, and cried out in the Council, Men and Brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee, I am accused of the hope and resurrection of the dead; whereby he set a rent among them, and by that means the knot was broken, and so their malice was abated. A lawful cause, and a wise course, bring a blessing with them upon those that delight to follow them. A good cause, well and wisely handled, shall find a comfortable issue in the end. This we shall attain unto, if we make the word of God our Counsellors, Ps. 119, 24, 98, 99, 100. The Prophet found by experience, that by his commandments he was made more wise thē his enemies, more learned then his teachers, more skillful then the ancient. For whosoever doth submit himself to God's word, shall not only be safe against the practices of his enemies, but also learn him more wisdom then the masters and professors of it.

Secondly, it is our duty to pray unto God [Use 2] to be delivered from them, and trust in him for his help. For unless our help be in the name of the Lord, which hath made heaven and earth, they will go beyond us and ouerreach us. They deal warily and circumspectly, they work by all means lawful and unlawful, just and unjust: let it be our wisdom therefore to trust in the wise God, and to beg this grace at his hands, as the Apostle James teacheth, chap. 1, 5, We must never look to live in peace, or that the world should be reconciled unto us: never marvel as if some strange thing did befall us, when the enemies set their wits on work to devise some mischief: our refuge must be in God in the time of trouble. It is our help to crave this help. This was the hope of David whē mighty bulls closed him, and the roaring Lions gaped upon him, he desired God not to be far from him, because trouble was near, for there was none to help him, Be not far off, O Lord, my strength, hasten to help me: deliver my soul from the sword, my desolate soul from the power of the Dog, Psal. 22, 11, 12. So the Apostle craveth the prayers of the Church, 2 Thes. 3, 1, 2. So long as we make God our trust and refuge in our affliction, be our enemies never so cunning and wise, we shall not fall down under the burden, but stand upright thorough the power and wisdom of God, who shall catch the crafty in their own craft, destroy y^e wisdom of the wise, and cast away the understanding of the prudent, Job 5, 12. Isaiah 29, 14 1 Cor. 1, 19. Thus David prayeth to the Lord 2 Sam. 15, 31. O Lord I pray thee, turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness. This the Lord heard, and brought his heavy judgment upon his counsel and person, for his counsel was crossed by another, he himself was hanged by his own hand. The like we see in Herod, in whom we may behold exceeding craftiness, joined with extreme sottishnes, and his fury overcome by excessive foolishness. How easy a remedy had he at hand, either to have gone himself, seeing he supposed it to concern his crown and kingdom, or to have sent some of his Courtiers, under color of accompanying the wise men, and so he could not have doubted to catch him in his claws. But the wise men go alone, Matth. 2, 8, 9. he neither detayneth them with him, nor sendeth any with them.

Thus the Lord from time to time delivereth his Church from the paw of the Lyon, from the tuske of the Bore, & from the horn of the Unicorn: and striketh all their enemies with the spirit of giddines and astonishment, that they become foolish, and cannot see the way before them. He scattereth the devices of the crafty, so that their hands cannot accomplish that which their harts have enterprized. An excellent and sweet comfort to all the servants of God, not to fear the high reaches & deep devices of their enemies, seeing they serve that wise God which taketh the wise in their craftiness, and maketh the counsel of the wicked foolish.

[Use 3] Lastly, this serveth to reprove two sorts of men, that esteem not aright of this worldly wisdom of wicked men. For some are offended at their wisdom, because it is so great: others rest contented in it, because it is so excellent. This is the weakness and infirmity of the children of God, when they see the glory, prosperity, and wisdom of worldly men, that they are able to reach so far, and over-reach by their policies many others, they are ready to account them the happiest men, to join with them, and to say, Certainly we have cleansed our hearts in vain, and washed our hands in innocence, Psal. 73, 13. For though they talk presumptuously, & set their mouth against heaven, yea and their tongue walketh through the earth; yet God hath set them in slippery places, and casteth them down into desolation. Look upon the wicked lives and wretched deaths of the great wise men of the world, that were deep wise men in their own eyes, and in the eyes of the world, but not in God, nor with the godly; and we shall see they have been suddenly destroyed, and horribly consumed. Look upon the example of Pharaoh, Saul, Ahithophel, Herod, Haman, & such like; and tell me whether thou wouldest have their fearful ends, for all their natural gifts, and exchange the wisdom of the Spirit for all their worldly wisdom. The true wisdom which is from above, is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without judging, and without hypocrisy. Who then is a wise man indeed, and endued with knowledge? even such an one as showeth by good conversation his works in meekness of wisdom. As for the cunning heads of the world, and such as have nothing in them but human and profane wisdom, they may for a time have the applause and praise of men, but they and their policies shall come in the end to nothing. This wisdom descendeth not from above, James 3, 15, but is earthly, sensual, and devilish. Hereupon the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 1, 20. Where is the wise? Where is the Scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made the wisdom of this world foolishness? If then God hath made it foolishness, let us not account it our happiness, nor those happy men that have nothing to commend them to God and men but that. If God will destroy it let not us think it can save those y^t trust in it.

Secondly, we should not content our selves to be worldly wise. This the Gentiles sought after and obtained. Let not us care so much for this learning, as to be heavenly wise, & to know Christ that we may have him living & dwelling in us. This the Apostle teacheth, Ro. 16, 19. where he saith, Your obedience is come abroad among all, I am glad therefore of you: but yet I would have you wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil. Here he requireth wisdom, but simple; & simplicity, but wisdom. Then he showeth wherein these must appear, and how we must be both the one and the other. We must not be wise to do evil, nor simple unto that which is good. But our wisdom must consist in following that which is good: our simplicity in eschewing evil. There is a wisdom of God, there is a wisdom of men, there is a wisdom of the devil. The first is heavenly, the second human, the third devilish. The end of the first is the salvation of the godly, the end of the second is the commendation of the world, the end of the third is the condemnation of hell. The first, is a spiritual gift of God, the second a natural gift of man, the third a wretched work of the devil. The heavenly wisdom which is from above, is holy: the devilish wisdom which is from hell below, is unholy: the human wisdom which is from the earth, is in it self, and of it self, indifferent, and partaketh of a mean nature neither holy nor unholy. The heavenly wisdom teacheth to know God, and is the beginning of godliness; the earthly wisdom standeth in human knowledge of natural things, and in understanding the things of this life; the devilish wisdom consisteth in Machaulian policies, and in desperate devices, to accomplish by right or wrong, by force or flattery, by life or death that which the corrupt heart intendeth, and hath contryued. This last kind we must always avoid, which was first taught by the devil, and practiced by his disciples. The first day we begin to practice it, we begin to be the devils scholars. The further we go forward in it, the more we profit in the devils school. This was the profound wisdom of Ahab and Jezebel, 1 Kings 12: when as they plotted to get the possession of Naboth's vineyard. This is to be found in many fine wits in the world, that set thē a work on wickedness, and abuse it, to the dishonor of God, to the hurt of their brethren, and to the destruction of their own souls. The human wisdom standeth in human things, in ordering matters belonging to the Commonwealth, and private families: whereunto belongeth the knowledge of Arts and Sciences. This differeth much from the former: that being always unlawful, the end being to accomplish some mischief by fraud and deceit, where the end of this is to delight & to profit. And yet this wisdom cannot be acceptable to God, 1 Cor. 3, 19, but is foolishness with him, unless it be seasoned and sanctified with the heavenly wisdom which is joined with the fear of God. The heavenly wisdom may stand with the earthly, and the earthly of it self may be joined with that which is devilish. But when the Spirit of God cometh, & putteth true heavenly wisdom into the heart, it rectifieth the human wisdom, and giveth it a pleasant taste that pleaseth God; it separateth and abolisheth all devilish wisdom, and suffereth it not to lurk and lodge with in us any longer. Let us all therefore seek to be wise in God, in his word, and in godliness: and then the natural gifts that God hath given us, shall be sanctified unto us.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 When Balaam saw that it pleased the Lord to bless Israel, then he went not as at certain times before to fetch Diuinations, but set his face toward the wilderness.

2 And Balaam lift up his eyes, and looked upon Israel, which dwelt according to their Tribes, and the Spirit of God came upon him.

3 And he uttered his Parable, and said; Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eyes were opened, hath said.

4 He hath said which heard the words of GOD, and saw the vision of the Almighty, falling in a trance, and having his eyes uncovered.

5 How goodly are thy Tents, O Jacob! and thy Tabernacle, O Israel!

6 As the valleys are they stretched forth, as Gardens by the river side, as the Aloe trees which the Lord hath planted, as the Cedars beside the waters.

7 The water droppeth out of the Bucket, and his seed shall be in many waters, and his King shall be higher then Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted.

8 God brought him out of Egypt, his strength shall be as an Unicorne: he shall eat the nations his enemies, and bruise their bones, and shoot them through with his arrows.

9 He coucheth and lieth down as a young Lyon, and as Lyon: Who shall stir him up? Blessed is he that blesseth thee: and cursed is he that curseth thee.

IN the former Chapter we have heard and handled the two first prophesies of Balaam, wherein we see, how he hath blessed and not cursed the people of God. Here Moses proceedeth to finish the rest of the history, wherein we are to consider two things: First, the residue of his prophesies remaining: secondly, the event of thē all. The prophesies are of two sorts; first, special prophesies, concerning special and several people, to the 23. verse; Namely, the Israelites, the Moabites, and Edomites, the Amalekites and the Kenites: secondly, general prophesies belonging to all the nations bordering together, and inhabiting Assyria, Judea, Palestine, and all Syria, which shall taste of the same misery of war, and be consumed with the violence of the same fire. The first point is touching the Israelites, in which prophetical history, we must consider (as we did before) three things: first, the preparation that is made unto it: secondly, the prophesy it self: thirdly, the effects and consequences thereof ensuing.

Touching the preface and preparation unto the prophesy it self, it serveth to confirm the authority and truth of this prophesy. For albeit it were delivered by the mouth of a wicked man, who was convinced by y^e light of his own conscience, and by the testimony of God's Spirit, that he should not curse his people, yet he worketh and wrestleth against the will of God, as if he could cozen & deceive the most Highest. Therefore, he did not seek a solitary place (as he was wont) to work his witchcrafts, at which time he saw God met and prevented him; but turneth his countenance at a sudden, toward the desert of Jordan, where the Israelites sojourned and pitched their Tents, purposing presently to break out into a cursing of them, before the God of the Israelites should be aware of it, & supposing he would have put no prophesy in his mouth before he should go to fet his wicked and wanted diuinations. Thus he determined with himself to utter the wicked imaginations of his own heart, before God should work any impression in his mind, or reveal his counsel unto him. But God which catcheth the wise in their own craftiness, 1 Cor. 3, 19, 20, and knoweth that the thoughts of the most wily are vain, represseth his devilish purpose, and doeth not only bridle his tongue, but inspireth him with his Spirit (being as it were changed into another man) that he should speak not his own devices, but the words of God. So then, God casting as it wer his hand upon him, taketh hold on him, staying his intent, and stopping his course two ways: the one outward, the other inward. The outward means used of God to hinder him, was the beholding of the dwellings and lodgings of the Israelites, distinguished according to their Tribes. For when he saw with his eyes their goodly and comely order, whereby the presence of God amongst them was clarily manifested, and their faith in him was testified; every man encamping by his standard, and under the Ensign of his fathers house, Numb. 2, 2. he was upon that sight and situation of them, withholden from proceeding in his curses and execrations. The inward means was yet more forcible to stop the stream of the waters ready to overflow y^e people of God: for the Spirit of God came suddenly upon him, that whereas he determined to serve the devil and damned spirits, he is constrained against his will to serve y^e purpose and providence of God, & to speak what God would, not what himself wished & desired: Thus we see, that neither Satan nor his instruments can work any hurt to the salvation of the people of God, but both they and all their endeavours come to nothing.

Hitherto of the preparation: now we come to the prophesy which he uttereth by the Spirit of God. In this we are to consider, first the entrance into it, then the prophesy it self. In the entrance or beginning, to procure attention, and purchase credit to his words, he setteth down three things: first, the inscription and title of the prophesy, wherein is a description of himself by his name, and the name of his father. For albeit Balaam's name be of no such weight and moment with us, y^t we should for the persons sake give credit to the prophesy, or respect more who speaketh, then what is spoken: yet this simple & plain dealing, professing his own name, and confessing himself the unworthy instrument of God, serveth to add some authority to the speech that followeth. Secondly, he styleth himself to be the man whose eyes were opened, whereby he teacheth that he would publish nothing of his own invention, but that only which he had received by divine inspiration. As if he should say, Though Balaam be by nature as blind as a beetle in the matters of God, and understand nothing of heavenly things, yet he hath received a spiritual and heavenly revelation of the Spirit from above, that of a blind man whose eyes through covetousness of money, and ignorance of God were closed up, he is become a seer to see for others, not for himself, nor his own salvation. Some read the sentence thus, that his eyes were shut up: but the other reading agreeth better to y^e circumstances of the text and the words following, as even Lyra himself confesseth, that he was enlightened of God to see with the eyes of his mind more clearly then he could do with his bodily eyes, inasmuch as the light of the mind is more plain and perspicuous then the light of the body. Thirdly, he confesseth he had heard the words of God. Thus he speaketh after the manner of the true Prophets, who were wont to begin their prophesies with prefixing y^e name of God, Thus saith the Lord, Hear ye the word of the Lord, to show, y^t they uttered not their own inventions, but the Oracles of God. Now, as Balaam's sight (which is the sharpest & quickest sense) saw nothing before God opened his eyes, so he declareth he was dull and deaf of hearing, before God had opened his ears to hear, and delivered his word unto him. Lastly, he saith he had seen the vision of the Almighty, ravished in mind, but having his eyes uncovered: whereby he meaneth, that being as it were in an ecstasy, he was carried •u• of himself. The like is noted touching Saul, • Sam. •9. he went to Naioth in Ramah, and the Spirit of God came upon him also, and he went prophesying until he came thither. Hereby Balaam showeth two things; first, the author of the prophesy, to wit, the Almighty, ascribing all to God, challenging nothing to himself: secondly, the manner of his prophesy, which was in a vision. Ezek. 3, 14: Dan. 8, 27. and 10, 8, which far surpasseth y^e communication of God's will by dream, albeit God be the author of both. Thus hath God oftentimes made himself known among the Infidels, both by visions and by dreams, as to Abimelech, Pharaoh Nebuchadnezzar, and others, who may be said to have the holy spirit, but had not the spirit of holiness: for wheresoever he worketh he is holy; but he doth not always work holiness and sanctification which evermore accompany salvation. Now because it is said he fell into a trance, it shall not be amiss to show what a trance is, what are the parts and ends of it, being away and means w^c God hath used to reveal his will unto men. A trance is an extraordinary work of the Spirit of God upon the whole man, casting the body and senses into a deep sleep, & withdrawing the soul from the fellowship of the body to a fellowship with God, for the better enlightening thereof. It is I say an extraordinary work of the Spirit above the work of nature or constitution of the body, or strength of the imagination, whereby the whole man is for a time changed in body and mind; the body & the senses thereof both outward and inward, cast into a deep or dead sleep, & made senseless: the soul withdrawn or separated from the communion and fellowship of the body, to the fellowship of God, for the better enlightening thereof to understand the secrets & counsels of God. This is a trance, or to be ravished in the Spirit, which God used often to his Prophets. It standeth in two parts or actions: First, on the body which is cast into a deep sleep, when the senses are for the time bereaved of the present use of thē. Secondly, on the mind: the which that it might be brought nearer to God, is withdrawn from all dealing and fellowship with the body, and enlightened to understand divine things, as Acts 10. Peter s•w y^e heaven opened, a vessel coming down, and a voice came unto him. The causes why it pleased GOD to reveal his will after this manner, are; First, that they should take nothing to themselves, but account all received from GOD. Secondly, that their bodies and souls being separate frō all other dealings, might have a deeper impression of the things revealed, and thereby understand them, and keep them the better. Thus much touching the trance of Balaam, & the beginning of the prophesy.

Now we come to the substance of the prophesy it self, the sum whereof is first propounded, then amplified, and lastly concluded. The proposition which is proved is described by a question, and by way of admiration, expressing the happiness of the Church: How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob! and thy Tabernacles, O Israel! As if he should say: O how blessed and happy a people art thou, which now livest under these Tents, and dwellest in these habitations! And note here, that he doth not give a touch to their happiness, and then pass away suddenly from it: but he doubleth, and repeateth it, as if he meant to dwell long upon it. There is no part or parcel of God's word in vain. If we see not the use of some things, it is our weakness, & we must confess it not condemn the Scriptures. The Spirit of God forbiddeth vain babbling, Mat. 6, 7: and reproveth idle repetitions, and therefore never useth the same himself.

The Reasons and occasions of repetitions are these three; First, for greater assurance, for God speaking twice doth as it were produce a double witness, and signifieth that it did not slip from him unawares, but is that which he meaneth to stand unto, and to ratify; so that albeit heaven and earth pass away, yet one jot or tittle of his word shall not pass away. Secondly, to testify the speedy accomplishment of that which he hath spoken, y^t it shall not be prolonged and delayed, but be swiftly performed, & shortly be executed. And these two causes are both touched by Joseph in expounding the two dreams of Pharaoh, when he saith, The dream was doubled unto Pharaoh the second time, because the thing is established by God, and God hasteth to perform it, Genes. 41, 32.

The third reason of using repetitions, is, to quicken those that are dull, and stir up those y^t are heavy hearted, that they should shake off all deadness & drowsiness of spirit. Once speaking passeth suddenly away, we cannot hear it: or if we hear it, we cannot remember it; or if we remember it, we are backward in practicing of it. We have need to be often put in mind of the same thing, and for us it is a safe thing. This is the cause that the Prophets of God so often use repetitions. So did Balaam before in the former Chapter, Numb. 23, 21. God seeth no iniquity in Jacob, he seeth no transgression in Israel. These three causes have place in this repetition used in this place. For their happiness is certainly confirmed, speedily to be accomplished, and the enemies of the people of God are roused up diligently to consider thereof, and think with themselves, surely this is of great importance, seeing God offers it unto me again and again.

This blessed estate and condition of the Church is set down, first comparatively, then simply, whereby the former similitudes are expounded and interpreted. The metaphors and similitudes are many in number, but tending to one and the same purpose: under the borrowed speeches of the tents of the shepherds, of stretching out of the valleys, watering of the gardens, planting of the Cedars, he understandeth the safety, largeness, increase, pleasantness, multitude, and strength of the Church, that shall surmount the glory of the Gentiles, and tread down the kingdom of Agag, that is, of the Amalekites, which at that time flourished in the world, and promised unto it self a perpetuity upon the earth; which prophesy was performed in the days of Saul and Samuel, of David & Solomon. This appeareth plainly in the second branch, where the comparisons are explained, in which he showeth the author of their happiness to be God the giver of every good giving, and of every perfect gift; who, albeit they were a small people, and greatly oppressed, yet he brought them myraculously, out of the Land of Egypt, he shall be their protection & defense against their enemies, giving them the strength of the Unicorn, assisting them in all their dangers, and subduing all their adversaries under them.

This is the substance of the prophesy, the conclusion remaineth, consisting of two parts or members: the first, respecting the Israelites, the second respecting others, but uttered for the Israelites sake. Touching the Israelites he inferreth upon the premisses, their peace, safety, and security, tranquility, and quiet, dwelling without fear, expressed by comparison of a Lyon, who eateth his prey without fearfulness of the passengers: so the Jews overcoming all their enemies, shall have rest, & govern their Church and Common-wealth in peace, which came to pass so long as they did cleave to God with full purpose of heart, and worship him according to the precise rule of his word; for then no enemies (albeit never so many or so mighty) were able to prevail against them. Thus did the Patriarch Jacob express the preeminence of Judah, Gen. 49, 9. As a Lions whelp shalt thou come up from the spoil my son: he shall lie down and couch as a Lyon, and as a Lyonnesse, who shall stir him up? The second member belonging unto others is this, that they which blest thee shall be blessed, and such as curse thee shall be cursed. A notable commendation of the Church, & encouragement to persuade others to be of the church. As if he should say, So many as shall join themselves of other people to thee, and embrace the same holy Religion with thee (for it shall in the fullness of time come to pass, that God shall allure Japheth to dwell in the tents of Shem. Gen. 9, 27) shall be partakers of the same blessings with thee which GOD shall pour out upon thee; but all such as separate themselves from thee, and show themselves not brethren, but strangers; not friends, but enemies; not neighbors, but aliens from thee, shall lie under the fearful curse and revenge of God. This is it which the Lord pronounced and promised long before to Abraham, Gen. 12, 2, 3. This power did Balak before falsely ascribe to Balaam.

This is the drift of this division, and the order that the Spirit of God observeth therein. Touching the instructions that arise from hence, we have considered diverse things before. We see how Balak and Balaam proceed in their devilish purposes, if God had suffeted them, and not crossed them. He revealed his will to Balaam, who spake, moved by God's Spirit, and thereby declareth, that he speaketh not only to his own children, but sometimes teacheth wicked men to make them without excuse; and therefore he will not leave his own people destitute of instruction, that desire to fear his name. But of this we have spoken before, chap. 22, 9.

[Verse 2. Balaam lift up his eyes, & looked upon Israel, and the spirit of God came upon him.] Moses showing the prophesy that Balaam uttered, describeth it by the author thereof, the Spirit of God came upon him. In this part of the title he saith, That the things delivered in this prophesy (which were uttered for the Churches sake) were hid & kept secret before they were revealed and manifested by God. This prophesy containeth not a doctrine that is common or communicated by the light of nature to men, but a declaration of such secrets as God reserveth hid to himself in his own counsel, which no living creature could know otherwise, then as it pleaseth God to disclose it by a gracious participation of it. This teacheth us this truth, That the things of God can no man know, but by the Spirit of God. The mysteries of salvation, and doctrine of godliness are secret and unknown of men and Angels, before they be of God revealed. This our Savior teacheth Peter, having made a confession of Christ, Blessed art thou Simon, the son of Jonah, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven, Matth. 16, 17. And expounding the parable of the Sower to his disciples, he saith, To you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God, but unto them that are without, all things are done in Parables, Mark 4, 11. The Apostle teacheth, that the natural man perceiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. And the same Apostle speaking of the gospel, Rom. 16, 25. Eph, 3, 9. calleth it, A mystery revealed, which was kept secret from the beginning of the world. So the Apostle John handling hidden visions, and teaching the Church y^e things that must come to pass hereafter, called that Book The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, Revel. 1, 1.

The truth of this appeareth, because they [Reason 1] were hid in the treasury of God's wisdom, which is unsearchable, and not to be sounded by any creature, and therefore the Apostle calleth them, A secret hid in God, Ephe. 3, 9: so that the Apostles and holy Prophets of God, could deliver nothing of his counsel, before he had revealed it to them. So the Lord speaketh, Numb. 12, 6. Hear now my words, If there be a Prophet of the Lord among you, I will be known unto him by a vision, and will speak unto him by dream. The calling of the Gentiles seemed strange to the very Apostles, before it was revealed to Peter. Who would ever have imagined that God would have redeemed man by such a wonderful means (the greatest wonder that ever came into the world) by giving his Son, and that unto the death, to ransom and redeem a church by his own blood? Acts 20. This no creature in heaven or earth, would ever have thought upon, if God had not revealed it by his word, and assured it by his Spirit.

Secondly, this receiveth further strength [Reason 2] for the confirmation of it, because the wisest and subtlest that were in the world, were herein overtaken and proved fools; for by all their wisdom (though never so great) they were not able to reach unto it, nor to look into any the least part of it. The Apostle speaking of the mystery of the Gospel revealed by his ministry, alledgeth the prophesy of Isaiah, where the Lord threateneth to destroy the wisdom of the wise, and to cast away the understanding of the prudent: and after he saith, Where is the wise? hath not God made the wisdom of the world foolishness? 1 Cor, 1, 18, 19.

The Uses remain to be learned of us. First, [Use 1] for knowledge we see, that the mystery of godliness revealed to the world by God in the Gospel, is a most worthy & glorious mystery, greatly to be admired and revered: unto us that are called it is the wisdom of God, and the power of God. So the Apostle saith, Great is the mystery of godliness, which is, God manifested in the flesh, 1 Tim. 3, 16. It seemeth far otherwise to the foolish world, it appeareth to thē a base and vile thing, as Paul complaineth in his time, We preach the Gospel, even Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling block, & unto the Grecians foolishness, 1 Cor. 1, 23. A stumbling block to the Jews, because they dreaming of an earthly king of this world, to free them from the bondage of the Romans, and thinking they should be Lord's of the earth, were offended at the low estate of Christ, coming in the shape of a servant: foolishness to the Grecians, because it seemed foolishness to the wise Philosophers among the heathē, to look for life from death, to believe in him that rose from the dead, and that such as are dead shall rise again. How many are there amongst our selves, that are offended at the simplicity of the Gospel, that it is not accompanied with miracles, & that it is brought unto us in earthen vessels? These are they that esteem the Manna as light meat, and therefore loathe it. But let them alone to loathe this Manna, that loathe faith, Christ, and heaven it self; yea, their own salvation.

Secondly, for obedience, we must observe [Use 2] that when these secret things be revealed unto us of God, we ought to endeavor to learn them, to understand them, to publish them & speak of them to others. Whensoever God hath a mouth to speak, we must have an ear to hear. Therefore Moses saith, Deut. 29, 29. Secret things belong unto the Lord, but the things revealed belong to us and our children to do them. So the Apostle Paul, when God had revealed Christ unto him, and ordained him a teacher unto the Gentiles, saith, I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision, but shown to Jews and Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works worthy amendment of life, Acts 26, 19, 20. This serveth to reprove all such as refuse to look into these revealed things of God, but dwell in blindness and ignorance. Of this sort are the greatest number in our assemblies. They are wise enough to look into their own profit, but they care not for the wisdom that is of God. They are brought up in the church, but know not the Doctrine of the Church. They are always learning, but never come to the knowledge of the truth. He that setteth his son to school, will look he should learn somewhat, and not ever stand at one stay. We are trained up in the bosom of the Church, which is the School-house of Christ, we must therefore every day be profiting and going forward. God accepteth not of those that look backward, or stand at a stay; he will know them that seek more and more to know him.

Thirdly, it is our duty to beg and crave at [Use 3] God's hands, the knowledge of his will, who openeth the eyes of the blind, and giveth understanding to those that seek it. We have a gracious promise to be heard, Mat. 7, 7. in the prayers and petitions that we make unto him. Hence it is, that the Prophet David, a man after God's own heart, and endued with a singular portion of God's Spirit, craveth the enlightening of God's Spirit, and desireth still to be taught of him, Psal. 119, verses 18, 27, 31, 73.

Thus doth the Apostle pray for the Ephesians, chapter 1, verses 17, 18, that God would give them the spirit of wisdom, and enlighten their minds to know what the hope is of his calling, and what the riches are of his glorious inheritance in the Saints. A notable direction for all of us, how to behave our selves when we come into the house of God, and tread in his Courts; namely, not to rest upon our natural gifts, nor to trust in our mother-wits, which are too short and shallow to reach up to the height, and to sound the depth of the mysteries of God.

How many are there in the world, of an high reach and of a deep conceit in the matters of the world, that attain to no measure of knowledge in the matters of God? Talke with them of the things of this life, they are able to discourse with great insight; many of God's children inferior to them, few equal with them, none can go beyond them. They can contrive and dispatch business of the world with great facility: you cannot speak to them of anything of this nature, but by and by they apprehend it and conceive it. But enter communication with them of heavenly things, of the knowledge of God, of faith in Christ, of the salvation of their souls, they can conceive nothing, they are as blind as Beetles, they are simple and ignorant as little children, that know not the right hand from the left.

This should offer to our wise & careful cōsiderations, a double meditatiō. First, it serves to humble those y^t have these gifts of nature, and are wise in their own conceit, and to make them equal with those of the lower sort: seeing all their gifts which Nature hath adorned them withal, are not able to set them one foot forward toward the kingdom of heaven; nay being unsanctified, they are further off from salvation, then others of smaller gifts. This made the Apostle say, Let no man deceive himself: if any man among you seem to be wise in this world, let him be a fool, that he may be wise: for the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God, and the Lord knoweth that the thoughts of the wise be vain, 1. Cor. 3, 18. Where he teacheth everyone to be ready to deny himself, and his carnal wisdom, whose beginning is from the flesh, and whose end is death; to the end we may be truly wise in heavenly things pertaining unto everlasting life.

Secondly, this serveth to comfort the children of God, that want the worldly wit of natural men, and are not able to dive so deep into earthly things as they: though they be simple in matters of this world, yet if GOD have given them a taste of the glory of the world to come, let them rest in spiritual knowledge, and give God the praise, that hath opened the eyes of their minds, and enlightened their hearts to have a feeling of it. This our Savior taketh occasion to practice, and to offer praise and honor to God in a sweet remembrance of this dealing of God; I give thee thanks, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise, and men of understanding, and hast opened them unto babes: it is so, O Father, because thy good pleasure was such, Math. 11, 25, 26. Though we be simple in the world, yet if we be wise in GOD: though weak in the world, yet if we be strong in GOD: though we be accounted as fools and silly ones, of the sharp wits of the world, yet if we have learned Christ Jesus, & know the exceeding measure of his love toward us, let this be our comfort and consolation, that God hath abundantly recompensed the want of those outward things, by giving unto us an happy and holy advantage in heavenly things. And indeed all those are learned, that are taught of God; and they unlearned that are not taught of him, although otherwise they abound in other knowledge. Such as have learned Christ Jesus, and him crucified, and so are become new creatures in him, they are learned, though they know never a letter in the book; For in him are hid all the treasures of wisdom & knowledge, Col. 2, 3. He that hath not learned Christ, is unlearned, Although otherwise he be never so learned: for if he be not regenerate and borne anew, but committeth sin with greediness, he hath not seen him, neither hath known him. 1. John. 3, 6. Wherefore, let us all learn from hence, to depend upon God for his blessings upon us, especially when we enter the Lord's courts, and come to hear his word, let us confess that we are not able of our selves to understand his will; and desire him to open our hearts, as he did the heart of Lydia, Act. 16, 14. for otherwise we shall depart away as ignorant and blind as we came, we shall never soundly rest in the truth that is delivered, but always be ready to carpe and cavil at it, to wrangle and reason against it, saying; How can these things be? And then it may be said unto them as Christ speaketh to the proud Pharisees, who gloried in their own insight, & thought all men blind beside themselves, If ye were blind, ye should not have sin: but now ye say, we see: therefore your sin remaineth, John 9, 40, 41. Let us then be ready to renounce our worldly wisdom, and to deny our selves, and beg the assistance of God's Spirit to be our inward teacher and instructor, that so we may hear with profit and comfort.

[Use 4] Lastly, learn to be thankful to God, foreshewing this grace and mercy to us his unworthy servants, when he revealeth and maketh known unto us the hid things of God touching our salvation: without which we have lived in darkness, in the shadow of death, and in the estate of damnation. He hath not vouchsafed this mercy upon all, but hath passed over many thousands in the world, which know not truth from error, nor light from darkness; he might have passed over us, as he hath done them. For are we more excellent or better by nature or desert then they? No, by no means: we are borne dead in sins, & the heirs of wrath as well as others. This made the Apostle, having made mention of the mercies of God shown unto him that had been a blasphemer, a persecutor, and an oppressor, to render thanks unto GOD, and to give him the praise and glory. Thou hast herein greater cause to bless and praise the Name of GOD, then for thy creation, which only gave thee a being upon the earth; whereas this doth join thee to GOD, and entitle thee to the kingdom of heaven.

Verse 4. [He hath said, which heard the words of God, and saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance.] We heard before, how Balaam was inspired of God to deliver unto the Moabites, Midianites, and Ammonites, the will of God: Now, here is offered to our considerations, the means and manner that God used in giving unto him his divine inspiration, and that is by a vision, or trance. We heard before what a trance is, (to wit;) an extraordinary work of the spirit upon the whole man, casting the body as it were in a deep sleep, & making the mind fit to receive the things which are revealed of the Lord. Thus it pleased the Lord to deal with Balaam at this present, that his words might be known to be divine, not human. From hence we learn, that God in former times hath revealed diverse things unto men by visions, by dreams, and other ways, as seemed good to his heavenly wisdom. God hath not used one means alone, but diverse to speak to the world, either by Angels, or by the cloud, or between the Cherubims, or by Vrim, or by dreams, or by visions. To this purpose there is a rule set down, Numb. 12, 6. If there be a Prophet of the Lord among you, I will be known to him by a vision, and will speak unto him by dream. This is further taught in the book of Job by the words of Elihu, instructing Job in y^e manner of God's dealing with sinners, & showing how God admonisheth them in dreams and visions: God speaketh once or twice, and one seeth it not: in dreams and visions of the night, when sleep falleth upon men, and men sleep upon their beds, Job. 33, 14, 15. So when Paul was converted by the voice of Christ, the Lord spake to Ananias in a vision to go unto him: and Paul likewise in a vision saw him coming in unto him, and putting his hands on him that he might receive his sight, Acts 9, 10 12. When Peter lodging with one Simon a Tanner, waxed hungry, and would have eaten, he fell into a trance, he saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel came down unto him, as it had been a great sheet, knit at the four corners, and was let down to the earth, &c. Acts 10, 10, 11. So the Apostle being compelled by the false Apostles to glory of himself, maketh a rehearsal of the visions, and revelations of the Lord that were offered unto him, 2. Cor. 12, 1. Unto these examples we might add sundry others out of the Scriptures, as of Jacob, of Samuel, of Ezekiel, of Daniel, of John, all declaring that GOD used to reveal many things by visions to his servants the Prophets, and to others when it pleased him.

The reasons are; First, to discover and [Reason] manifest his will unto them, sometimes to admonish them, sometimes to teach them, sometimes to terrify them, and always to declare and reveal his heavenly pleasure unto them, as we heard before out of the book of Ib, Job 33, 15, 16. For it hath been the ordinary manner of God, even from the beginning to warn, comfort, and declare what he would have done, or forbid what he would not have done, both in the day time, and in the night season; partly by visions to such as were waking, partly by dreams, to such as were asleep.

[Reason 2] Secondly, God would have the revelation of his will appear to be only his, and not of themselves. For howsoever it pleased the Lord to deal with his servants, and what way soever he used to signify his good pleasure, in all these cases he imprinted in the minds and hearts of them to whom he shown himself certain notes and evident tokens, whereby they might expressly and manifestly know that it was his doing. This we noted before to be one of the causes, why it pleased the Lord to deal by visions, that we should challenge nothing to our own selves, but ascribe all unto him.

[Use 1] Now, let us come to the uses. First, consider from hence the greatness and excellency of God's hand, who hath diverse ways to reveal his will, and to teach his people, to call them and gather them unto himself. Some means he hath to preserve a sinner from falling, and some to restore him being fallen. He is the head Physician of the world, he ministereth the best Physic, and of most sure and certain working. He never faileth in his cures, both because he knoweth the nature of the disease, and the working of the ingredient. The woman in the Gospel diseased with an issue of blood twelve years, suffered many things of many Physicians, and spent all that she had, yet it availed her nothing, but she became much worse, Mark 5, 26. But such as seek to God to heal the diseases of their souls, and submit themselves to be his patients; do always receive from him health, and depart from him better then they came. He useth partly preservatives, and partly restoratives. He speaketh by admonitions in dreams and visions. And these being ceased, he speaketh by chasticements and corrections, he preacheth unto us by the Ministers of his word, and by all means desireth to do us good. True it is, the devil hath his visions, being as it were the ape of God, which are so many delusions of men, as when he maketh men believe they see that which they see not, or persuadeth men strange things of themselves, that they are that which indeed they are not, 1. Sam 28.14. His drift and purpose in both is, to deceive and seduce. But God useth sundry means to draw us to himself, to draw us out of our selves, to draw us to his kingdom. He is not as a poor practitioner that hath but one plaster for every sore, or one medicine for every disease: he hath variety of means, & store of provision for all maladies; which serveth to commend unto us the goodness, mercy, greatness, power, and wisdom of God to be acknowledged and confessed of everyone of us.

Secondly, we learn that God never leaveth [Use 2] them destitute of a teacher, that in a reverent fear of his Name seek unto him and call upon him. We see he oftentimes admonisheth and informeth of his will, such as are out of the Church, and know him not: much more will he teach them his ways that fear him, & reveal his secrets to the humble-minded. Psal. 25, 9, 12.14. Let us exercise our selves in the diligent reading, hearing, and conferring of his word; let us earnestly desire to profit and grow forward in the knowledge and understanding of the truth from time to time according to the means afforded unto us. We live in the clear light of the Gospel, and in the golden days of God's grace, times that our forefathers never saw: let us not therefore shut our eyes against the truth that shineth in our hearts, or at the least not stop our ears against the sound of the word that pierceth our ears. We have a gracious promise made unto us, that God will give a blessing unto such as seek him: he will be known of those that seek to know him: he will open to those that knock for him. This is the main cause of all ignorance, that we desire not knowledge. It is a grievous sin to be destitute of knowledge, but it is more fearful to have no desire of knowledge. Ignorance is the root of all impiety, of infidelity, of idolatry, of superstition, of presumption, of disobedience, of contempt of the word, and worship of God: as the Apostle rehearsing the corrupt fruits of darkness; the throat an open sepulcher; the mouth full of cursing: the feet swift to shed blood; destruction and calamity in their ways; maketh this the cause of all, The way of peace they have not known, Rom, 3.17. So the Lord Psal. 95, 10, doth render this as the reason why his people erred, because they had not known his ways. This caused the Jews to crucify the Lord of life, and to deliver him into the hands of sinners; For if they had known the wisdom of God they would not have crucified the Lord of glory, 1. Cor. 2, 8, according to the words of Peter preaching repentance unto them; Now brethren I know, that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your governors, Act. 3.17. And as it is the root of all impiety against God, and unrighteousness of men, so it is the cause of all judgments and punishments. The Prophet Hosea threatening God's plagues in a fearful hand to fall upon the people, maketh this one cause, There was no knowledge of God in the land, Hos. 4, 1, 2. So at the last day, when the Lord Jesus shall come to judge the quick and the dead, He will come in flaming fire to render vengeance to those that do not know him, 1. Thes. 1, 8. These things being rightly and wisely considered, should teach all of us to seek after knowledge, as for silver, and search for understanding as for precious stones, assuring our selves that God will never be wanting to help such as hunger and thirst after righteousness, who is near to all those that call upon him, even to all that call upon him in truth.

[Use 3] Lastly, we see his mercy is greater unto us then to the fathers before. The Lord Jesus hath brought the doctrine of the Gospel from the bosom of his Father. Acknowledge then with thankfulness the preferment of these latter times, and let us not seek after dreams and visions which are abolished, but having the sure word of the Prophets and Apostles, rest in the revealed will of God. Moses had a preeminence above the Prophets, to whom God spake not by dreams or visions, but face to face, as is declared, Numb. 12, 6, 7, 8. I will be known to the Prophets by vision & by dream: my servant Moses is not so, who is faithful in all mine house, unto him will I speak mouth to mouth, and not in dark words. As Moses was preferred before the other Prophets, so have we a singular privilege above the Patriarchs & Prophets that have gone before us, who wanted the light that we enjoy, as the Writer of the Hebrews doth testify, declaring that the glory of our time is greater, in which GOD hath vouchsafed to speak unto us by his own son, At sundry times, and in diverse manners God spake in old time to our fathers by the Prophets: in these last days he hath spoken unto us by his Son, Heb. 1, 1, 2. So then, the condition of Christians under the Gospel, is better then of the Israelites under the Law, in respect of the manifestation and revelation of God's truth. The Israelites had God revealed by the Prophets, but we have him taught by the Son himself, who is counted worthy of more glory then Moses, Heb. 3, 3.4, inasmuch as he which hath built the house, hath more honor then the house, and he that is Lord over it, hath more honor then he that is a servant in it. Hereupon Christ calleth and accounteth the Disciples blessed, Because they saw with their eyes, and heard with their ears, those things which many Prophets and righteous men desired to see and hear, and yet could not, Mat. 13, 17. Let us therefore walk worthy of this great grace and mercy: let us embrace and profess the doctrine of Christ with all zeal: and as we have received greater favor, let us bring forth greater obedience. Let us magnify the preaching of the Gospel, whereby Christ Jesus is described in our sight, & as it were crucified among us, which he hath made the strength of his arm, and his great power to save those that do believe, to which he hath given such effectual grace, that it worketh more mightily then all miracles, and pierceth deeper into the heart of man, then all visions and revelations: yea, Though one should arise from the dead to speak unto us, Luk. 16, 31. Let us now look for no miracles, nor depend upon strange wonders; the doctrine of Christ is sufficiently strengthened & confirmed, so that no doubt of any part thereof, is to close up our own eyes, that the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, which is the Image of GOD, should not shine upon us. If the Gospel be yet hid, it is hid to thē that are lost. To conclude, let us all know, that God having brought us into these last times, requireth of us greater knowledge, faith, zeal, obedience, and greater fruits of repentance. For if the word spoken by Angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great saluatiō, which at the first began to be preached by the Lord, and afterward was confirmed unto us by them that heard him? Wherefore we ought diligently to give heed unto the things which we have heard, lest at any time we run out.

[Verse 5. How goodly are thy Tents, O Jacob! and thy Tabernacles, O Israel, as the valleys that are stretched out, &c.] Hitherto we have spoken of the preparation and entrance into this third Prophecy: Now we come to the sum and substance of it, uttered by way of an admiration, or exclamation; the diligent consideration of the flourishing estate of the church, ravishing as it were all his senses, and so astonishing him, that he is not able to find words sufficient to express the glory thereof. For here we see he compareth the happiness and blessedness of the Church, to the Valleys, Gardens, Cedars, and such like; all to this end to shadow out unto us the value and worth of it, that it far surmounteth all other societies, and is most precious & dear in the sight of God.

Heereby then we learn, what is the [Doctrine] true Church: it exceedeth all other societies of men, and is most precious and dear unto God, and unto Christ. We see then how from hence we learn, that above all other companies and fellowships in the world, the Church is most excellent and beautiful, and of GOD most respected. This hath plentiful testimony of other Scriptures. The Prophet saith, The Kings daughter is glorious within, her clothing is of broidered gold, Psal. 45, 13. Hereunto come the titles and commendations given unto the Church, in sundry places dispersed in y^e book of Canticles, chap. 2, 2. and 4, 13. and 5, 9. She is the Rose of the field, the Lily of the valley, the fairest among women, an Orchard of Pomgranats, a Fountain of Gardens, a Well of springing waters, the Spouse and Sister of Christ, the beauty of the earth, the glory of the world, and being compared with other societies, as a Lily among Thorns, & like the Apple among the Trees of the Forest. It is a Citty, whose walls and gates are of precious stones, and the streets thereof of gold, Revel. 21, 2, 19. It is compared to a woman clothed with the Sun, and had the Moon; that is, all corruptible things which are unstable and uncertain under her feet.

As the Doctrine by these evidences is [Reason 1] made clear, so by the Reasons whereby it is proved, it may be yet made much clearer. For first, it is more excellent then all other societies, as gold above all other metals, because in it alone salvation is to be found, and nowhere else. When the universal flood came, and covered the face of the whole earth, what place wouldest thou prefer before the ark, in which Noah and his family were saved, and out of the which all the world beside was drowned? So salvation is taught and received in the Church, damnation is to be found and felt out of the Church. Can there be a greater privilege had, then to have our souls saved? or a greater loss, then the loss of our souls? We read in the Scriptures of many great and exceeding grievous losses. Job lost all his camels and his asses, his oxen and his sheep, his servants and his sons, all his goods and riches. Saul lost his kingdom and his life. But all these are petty losses and damages in comparison of the incomparable and inestimable loss of the soul, which is a perpetual separation from the glorious and comfortable presence of God, according to the saying of our Savior, Math. 25, 16. What shall it profit a man if he win the whole world, and then lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give for the recompense of his soul? The truth of this reason the Lord himself expresseth in the Prophet, saying, I will give salvation in Zion, and my glory unto Israel, Isaiah 46, 13. The wealthiest country under heaven hath not this treasure; the greatest Monarke in the world hath none of this merchandice; the richest merchant that compasseth sea and land, and trauaileth into the furthest part of the earth, cannot bring home with him this pearl of invaluable price; it is only to be found in the city of God, which is his Church, for in mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance.

[Reason 2] Secondly, all other sorts and societies of men are appointed and ordained of God to serve and preserve this. This is it which the Prophet Isaiah saith, Isaiah 45, 14. It shall be the honor of Kings and Princes to do service to the Church, and to promote the good of it. It is the end for which God hath lifted up the heads of rulers and governors above their brethren, to promote the good of the Church, and to advance the glory of God. This the Prophet speaketh of in the Psalm, Psal. 78, 71. that God chose David his servant, took him from the sheepefold, and preferred him before his brethren, even took him, and from behind the ewes with young brought he him, to feed his people in Jacob, and his inheritance in Israel: so he fed them according to the simplicity of his heart, and guided them by the discretion of his hands. The like we see in the book of Ester, when the destruction of the Church was determined and contrived, Mordecai said to Ester, Ester 4.14. If thou holdest thy peace at this time, comfort and deliverance shall appear to the Jews out of another place, but thou and thy fathers house shall perish: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time? So what power, strength, ability, or means soever God hath given, he looketh for this duty and thankfulness at our hands, to seek the safety of Zion, & to advance the glory of Jerusalem, and to know that hereunto we are called.

Thirdly, the beauty of all other cities and [Reason 3] societies standeth in this, that they are parts and members of the Church. This is the glory of kingdoms and countries whereby they are beautified, in that they belong to the true Church: for otherwise all places are as cages of unclean birds, nay, as lodges of unclean spirits, and all persons are as dogs & swine, as Tigers and unclean beasts. Hence it is, that the Apostle describing what we are by nature, saith, Eph. 2, 12. Ye were at that time without Christ, aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, strangers from the covenants of promise, and had no hope, and were without GOD in the world. If then it beautify other places and persons, it must needs be beautiful it self. If it give grace and glory to others that join themselves to it, it must needs be both gracious and glorious it self. For whatsoever causeth a thing to be so, must needs be so it self much more.

The uses of this doctrine are excellent, as [Use 1] the nature of the Church is. For first, we conclude, that they must needs be most happy & blessed of God that are members of y^e Church. For howsoever the world account them miserable, grinning at them with their teeth, nodding at them with their heads, gaping at them with their mouths, hissing at them with their tongues, and every way contumeliously reproaching them with their words, yet they are dear and precious in the account of God, and in the reputation of Christ Jesus, who bought them at a great price, and redeemed them with the ransom of his own blood. 1. Pet. 1, 18, 19. Behold, what love the Father hath given to us; that we should be called the sons of God: for this cause the world knoweth you not, because it knoweth not him. God is become our Father, the Son is our Redeemer, the Holy-ghost is become our sanctifier, the Angels are become our attendants, the Scriptures are become our evidences, the Sacraments are our seals, the creatures are become our servants, our afflictions are our instructions. This the Apostle teacheth the Church, 1. Cor. 3, 21, 22, 23. They are blessed that have their sins pardoned, and not imputed unto them, as the Prophet teacheth; but God saith to every believer, Thy sins are forgiven thee. They are blessed that hear his word and keep it: but the sheep of Christ hear his voice, and follow him. They are blessed that delight in the Law of the Lord, and in his Law meditate day and night: but the godly make it their counselor to be advised by it. This use that now we stand upon, is directly urged by the Prophet, Psal. 84. where having made his complaint, that he could not have access to the Church of God, to make profession of his faith, and to profit in Religion, he breaketh out into this passionate exclamation, being touched with an inward feeling of the want of those holy assemblies, Psal. 84, 4, 5. O Lord of hosts, how amiable are thy tabernacles! & thereupon concludeth the point which we have stood upon, Blessed are they that dwell in thine house: they will ever praise thee; blessed is the man whose strength is in thee, and in whose heart are thy ways. Howsoever the ungodly that savor nothing but of the earth, want spiritual eyes to behold the beauty of the Church, and account it no part of their happiness to live within the compass and bosom of it; yet the children of God have taken nothing so near to heart, as when they have been driven from the place of his worship. The Prophet is grieved, that the sparrows and swallows had better access and freer recourse to the houses of men to build their nests, to lay their young, and to rest and repose themselves, then he had to the Lord's Tabernacle, and therefore preferreth their condition before his own. We see how the Jews wept, and pitifully lamented by the rivers of Babylon, and hung up their instruments on the willows, saying, Psal. 137, 1, 2, 3, How shall we sing the song of the Lord in a strange land? If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget to play. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; yea, if I prefer not Jerusalem to my chief joy. No doubt they might have prayed to the Lord in Babylon, and in banishment, as well as in Judea and at Jerusalem, the Lord heareth in all places, and willeth that men pray everywhere lifting up pure hands without wrath or doubting, 1. Tim. 2.8. but they mourned because they could not visit the Temple of God in Jerusalem, there to make public confession of their sins, and of their faith toward God. They therefore plainly testify that they have no feeling either of the weakness of their faith, or of the greatness of their offenses, that glory in their own shame, and say they bear as good a soul to God, as they which resort so often to the Church, and delight to hear the preaching of the word, and that they can serve God as well at home as in the Church. These are led by another spirit then David was, who if he were a man after God's own heart: Psal. 42, 1, 2, 3. having such an earnest desire after the service and worship of God, and saying, As the Hart brayeth for the rivers of water, so panteth my soul after thee, O God: my soul thirsteth for God, even for the living God: when shall I come and appear before the presence of God? surely these must needs be guided by the spirit of the devil, who so openly scorn all Religion, and are at defiance with God, robbing God of his honor, committing sacrilege in keeping their tongues from the public praises of God, entering themselves off from the mystical body of Christ, condemning and contemning the congregation of the faithful, giving offense to others by evil example, and despi•ng the ordinance of God, who hath appointed & commanded the assembly of his people to meet together to acknowledge their sins, to confess their faith, to pray for things necessary, to praise him for his blessings received, to hear the word expounded, and to receive the Sacraments delivered; so that such as fly from these, do fly from God himself, they fly from their own salvation, they seek a worship by themselves, and they imagine an heaven by themselves. But let them take heed their worship prove not a false worship, and their heaven a false heaven, and a true hell.

Secondly, we must all labor to be members [Use 2] of the Church, rather than of any other place in the world. We see how careful men are, not only to be in great societies & towns, but to be of them, to have the freedom of privileged places and incorporations, Act. 22, 28. Yea, to obtain it & purchase it with a great sum of money, because it bringeth worldly commodity. How much more should we endeavor to be members of the Church, whereby we are made free men, and have interest in the blessings of God; yea, we become free denizens of the Kingdom of heaven. How do men esteem their freedom, to be of earthly cities? If we be part of the Church, we have access to the truth: Now, if we shall know the truth, the truth shall make us free, John 8, 32, 36. If we be belonging to the Church, we have our interest in Christ: now, if that Son shall make us free, then we shall be free indeed. This made the Apostle say, Phil. 3, 20. Our conversation is in heaven, from whence we look for a Savior. If we become limbs of the Church of God, we have the spirit that bears witness to our spirit, that we are the sons of God: now, the Lord giveth his Spirit: 2. Cor. 3, 17, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. Such as are free of cities and incorporations, have diverse privileges that others want, obtain many benefits that others want, obtain many dignities that others desire, and have their names enrolled among the free-men: but how much greater is the preeminence of all those that are brought into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, being made parts of the Church, which is the freest city under the heavens? This city of our God hath the privileges of the communion of Saints, of the forgiveness of sins, of the resurrection of the body to eternal life, and all such as belong unto it, have their names registered and enrolled in the book of life. What shall it profit thee to obtain an earthly freedom in earthly cities, and to be the servant of sin, the bonds slave of the devil, and to want the freedom of the sons and daughters of almighty GOD. The greatest freedom of the chiefest cities, is but slavery & bondage in comparison of the heavenly perogatives that properly belong unto the Church of God

The consideration hereof hath been strong and powerful in all those that are servants in this house, which are the Lord's freemen. This made the Prophet David to testify his holy affections in sundry Psalms, Psal. 26, 8, and 17, 4, and 36, 8, 9. and 84, 2, 10. Where he showeth that the spending of one only day in the place of the public meetings and assemblies of the godly, was more sweet, comfortable, and profitable to him, then a thousand days elsewhere; yea, though the place in it self were never so pleasant and delightful: so that he preferreth the basest office and meanest calling in the Church, to keep the door, to sweep the house, to cut wood, or draw water for the service and sacrifice of God, then to dwell in the [Use 3] most gorgeous and glorious palaces, wherein the works of wickedness are practiced & professed. If the same mind be in us that was in this Prophet, let it be our desire, rather to be of the meanest account and lowest reckoning in the Church, and among the lowest Saints of God, then to be in the chiefest room, & in the highest place of honor out of the Church, where nothing reigneth but profaneness, and nothing is of price or regarded, but wickedness. This will be a witness to our own hearts, that we are truly religious, and are possessed with a love of godliness, when we prefer the love of God's house before all earthly things, and are careful to come to the exercises therein.

Lastly, it belongeth to everyone to promote and procure the good thereof. If it be the principal society, it must be principally cared for. It standeth all persons upon, Princes, Pastors, Parents, Magistrates, whatsoever in their several places, to seek the peace and preservation of this society, and to further the good of God's Church. We see this in the Prophet, Psal. 122, 6, after he had commended the comely order & spiritual beauty of Jerusalem the true Church, he saith, Pray for the peace of Jerusalem, let them prosper that love thee: peace be within thy walls, & prosperity within thy palaces: for my brethren and neighbors sake, I will wish thee now prosperity, because of the house of the Lord our God, I will procure thy wealth. No estate of man so high to exempt himself, no calling so low, to disable himself from seeking the good of his Church. The greater our place is, the more doth God require at our hands, he hath committed the more to our trust, and therefore will take the straighter account of us. It is the end of their honor and advancement, not to lift up their hearts above their brethren, because God hath lifted up their heads, not to seek their own profits and commodities only, but to advance the honor of that God that hath advanced them, remembering that they are the ministers of God for the wealth and welfare of their people, and assuring themselves that God will honor them that honor him, but such as despise him, shall be despised, 1. Sam. 2.36. Moreover, it is our duty to labor within the compass of our calling, to bring other societies to this; the Prince his common-wealth: the Magistrate his incorporation; the Minister his people; the Captain his army; y^e householder his family; by striving to make them Christian commonwealthes, Christian incorporations, Christian parishes, Christian armies, Christian families. This was the care of all good and godly Princes, David, Hezekiah, Jehoshaphat, Josiah, who made a covenant to seek the Lord GOD of their fathers with all their heart, and with all their soul. This was the care of devout captains that feared God, as appeareth by the Centurion and Cornelius. This was the care of all religious fathers and masters, as we see in Abraham, Job, Jacob, and sundry others, whose praise is in the book of God. And unless this diligence be used, and duty performed to those that are set under us by the ordinance of God, what comfort can we find in them, nay, what good can we look for at their hands? It is the knowledge of God, and the power of godliness planted in the heart, that maketh the subject obedient, the servant trusty, the child dutiful, and every degree faithful in his place and calling. But where the fear of God doth not rule, there subjects obey not for conscience sake; there servants are deceitful, & serve with eyeservice as men pleasers; there children are ungracious and unruly, not obeying their parents in the Lord. So then, it standeth us upon to set forward the good of the Church with all our power, and then to bring such as belong unto us into the bosom of the Church, that there they may have fellowship with God, and one with another.

Verse 8. [God brought them out of Egypt, their strength is as an Unicorn, he shall eat the nations his enemies, &c.] In the words before, Balaam enlarged by sundry sweet similitudes, the excellent condition of the Church, showing, that the place of it was to be chosen above all other places, and the people belonging unto it to be joined withal above other people of the world: Now, in these words he expressed their happiness and blessedness in plain terms and direct words, declaring, that albeit they were a weak people in the land of Egypt, oppressed with burdens, hurried with labors, ouermastred with taskmasters, vnexercised in fears of war, •andering up and down in the wilderness, separated from other nations; on the other side their enemies wer many in number, mighty in strength, rich in furniture, yet GOD brought his people with a strong hand out of Egypt from all their enemies, and sent his Angel before them to lead them in the wilderness, so that no city or nation could prevail against them. Hereby we learn that the enemies of the Church, albeit great, mighty, and high minded, yet are oftentimes brought under, and trodden on by the Church, weaker then they. Howsoever the Church be weak, and want outward power, yet it hath victory over the oppressors of it. This we see plainly strengthened unto us in the book of Judges, where we see that the Midianites, and the rest of the league with them lay in the valley like grasshoppers in multitude, and their camels as the sand which is by the seashore, yet Gideon and his host being as it were an handful, overthrew them by blowing their trumpets, by breaking their pitchers, and by holding their lamps in their hands. This appeareth in the history of Shamgar, who slew 600. men of the Philistines with an Ox goad: and in the history of Sampson, being enclosed by his enemies, who caught up a Iawbone, and said, With the Iaw of an asse are heaps upon heaps, with the Iaw of an asse have I slain a thousand men, Judge. 15, 15, 16. Thus the weak are made strong, and the strong weak. Likewise, in the days of Saul, the Israelites were all naked and unarmed men, and were not suffered to have either swords or spears, (except Saul and Jonathan) yet their enemies were discomfited and smitten down before them.

[Reason 1] The reasons are many that may be alleged. First, God is with his people, and if he be with them, strength, power, courage, and victory must be with them also, so that they cannot fall, unless God fall with them, which is impossible. As then the cause is the Lord's, and the people the Lord's, and the battle the Lord's, so he can arm creatures of no account even contemptible people to scourge great & mighty nations, Exod. 8, 6, 16. His soldiers in Egypt were caterpillars and flies: his armies against the Philistines were mice. God is infinite in power to do as he will, and what he will, and when he will, and against whom he will, in comparison of whom all flesh is frail and feeble. And as he is great in might, so he is present in help, and gaineth honor, not by the bow, nor spear, nor legs of man, but he fighteth for those that be his. Thus doth Moses encourage the Israelites, being pursued by the Egyptians, Exod. 14, 14. The Lord shall fight for you, therefore hold you your peace.

[Reason 2] Secondly, to gain glory to his great Name, seeing his power is seen in our weakness. When our strength is smallest, then is the glory of God greatest. This made the Lord say unto Gideon, Judge. 7, 2. The people that are with thee are too many for me to give the Midianites into their hands, lest Israel make their vaunt against me, and say, Mine hand hath saved me. Thus David assured both of the truth of his calling, and the goodness of his cause, encountereth with Goliath, and showeth that all the people should know, that the Lord saveth not with sword, nor with spear: for the battle is the Lord's, 1. Sam. 17, 47. So the Apostle teacheth that God useth few, weak, and simple instruments, to confound such as are greater in strength, moe in number, wiser in knowledge, higher in estimation, mightier in power, stouter in courage, That no flesh shall rejoice in his presence, but he that rejoiceth, should rejoice in the Lord, 1. Cor. 1, 19, 31, [Use 1] Now, let us handle the uses of this doctrine. First, we conclude, y^t the safety of the Church is only of God, and not of themselves: so that flesh and blood is not to be rested and relied upon, how great soever the means be: and therefore the Prophet teacheth, that the hills of the robbers cannot help, so that we must rely on God's help, and cease from the man whose breath is in his Nostrils, Isaiah 2, 22. He that lifteth up himself, his mind is not upright, but the just shall live by his faith. So than let us cast away our vain confidence in man, whose life is so frail, that if his breath be stopped but a little, he is dead, and cannot help himself or others. God therefore must have the praise and preferment above all creatures, and be magnified above all the works of his hands.

Secondly, this is a notable comfort and encouragement, [Use 2] to do constantly and cheerfully the duties of our calling, notwithstanding the crosses and hindrances to the contrary. For seeing it pleaseth GOD to put strength many times into those that are his, & to deliver his Church by weak means, against strong men, let us proceed with boldness in the works of our profession, and deal with a good conscience, assuring our selves that God is not far from us. Whensoever we hear of the wicked combining themselves, & conspiring together against the Church, taking crafty counsel among themselves, our hearts quake and tremble, and we are brought oftentimes to our wits end, we are greatly perplexed and disquieted, as the trees of the forest are moved by the wind, Isaiah 7, 2: but we must consider, that the victory is of GOD, which casteth down the mighty from their seat, and exalteth them of low degree. Thus doth Moses comfort Israel terrified and dismayed by the evil report the spies had brought up upon the land, Numb. 14, 8, 9. If the Lord love us, he will bring us into this land, and give it us, which is a land flowing with milk and honey; but rebel not ye against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the land, for they are but bread for us: their shield is departed from them, but the Lord is with us: fear them not. A notable staff to stay them up, both in respect of the presence of God with them, and of his departure from their enemies. And that which was a stay to them, must serve also to comfort and refresh us in all discouragements, to consider that we have a sure buckler with us, but the shield is departed from our enemies. They lie open to the stroke of God's hand, he will draw out his glittering sword against them, & they shall find no shield to award the blow. They are in a woeful case, that having the Lord to be their enemy, and no armor of defense upon them to help themselves. Wherefore, whensoever we see these enemies of God and his people multiply and increase, so that they seem as a violent stream ready to beat down all things before them, let not this disturb or disquiet us, but learn to wait upon God, who will show himself a present help, and our GOD in the time of need.

This temptation, that the enemies are many, and that few stand for us, few have courage for God's truth, few show themselves in good causes, doeth greatly weaken our hearts, and maketh them melt away as water; we straight way conclude, that the enemies must needs prevail, for we are weak and few. But know this, O ye of little faith, and of so great fear, that a good cause shall never fail, albeit there be but few, and those feeble to maintain it. Jonathan relying on God, after his calling, and a manifest sign to confirm him, goeth on with a noble courage and resolution, saying; It is not hard to the Lord, to save with many or with few. The work of God was never set forward by the greatest number; nay, the profession of God always had the fewest in number, yet no enemy was able to stand against them. The Apostles of Christ were few in number, and the weapons of their warfare were not carnal: yet were they mighty, casting down the imaginations, and every high thing that is exalted against the knowledge of GOD, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ. Paul having appealed unto Caesar, and being brought to the defense of his cause, saith; At my first answering no man assisted me, but all forsook me: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge: Notwithstanding the Lord assisted me, & strengthened me, that by me the preaching might be fully believed, 2 Tim. 4, 16, 17.

This appeareth in that worthy prays of Asa, which he made going to battle against his enemies, 2. Chron, 14, 11. Lord it is nothing with thee to help with many, or with no power: help us O Lord our God, for we rest on thee, and in thy name are we come against this multitude: O Lord, thou art our God, let not man prevail against thee. Let us not therefore be discouraged and discomfited, when we see many against us, and few to stand for the cause of God; but consider, that he whose cause it is, is able to defend it, whose power and glory is most of all seen in the weakness of those that are stirred up to maintain it.

[Use 3] Lastly, it is our duty not to fret at evil men, when they are exalted and lifted up on high, but consider the end that the Lord will make, Nah, 1, 2. Who will take vengeance on his adversaries, and reserveth wrath for his enemies. Though they practice against the just, and gnash their teeth against him, though they watch the righteous, and seek to slay him, though they abound and prosper, and set their mouth against heaven, yet this is a comfort to the godly, Psal. 37, 7, 8, 9, 10. That yet a little while, and the wicked shall not appear, thou shalt look after his place, & he shall not be found. Waite patiently upon the Lord, and hope in him, fret not thyself for him which prospereth in his way, nor for the man that bringeth his enterprises to pass; for evil doers shall be cut off, & they that wait upon the Lord, shall inherit the land. The destruction which God hath concluded against them is sure, he wants no means to overturn them, he can make things that are not, of greater power then they that are. There is no safety to the enemies of God and his truth, there is no way for them to escape, for the Lord is the God of vengeance. This the Prophet Isaiah declareth at large, chap. 30. 14.10, showing that their destruction should be both certain and sudden. This is that which the Prophet assureth Hezekiah of, that God would put his hook in his nostrils, and his bridle in the lips of Rabshakeh, that railed upon the holy one of Israel, 2 King. 16, 6, 7. Be not afraid of the words which thou hast heard; I will send a blast upon him he shall hear a noise, and return to his own hand, and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land. Let us therefore remember always the exhortation of the Prophet, Psal. 37, 1, 2. Fret not thyself because of the wicked men, neither be envious for the evil doer; for they shall soon be cut down like grass, and shall wither as the green herbs: trust thou in the Lord and do good, dwell in the Lord, and thou shalt be fed assuredly.

Verse 9. [Blessed is he that blesseth thee, & cursed is he that curseth thee. This is the conclusion of this prophecy, wherein is shown that God will pour out his blessings upon his people in such a gracious manner and measure, that it shall run over, and fall upon those that are the friends and favorers of the Church; on the contrary side, such as hurt or persecute them, shall undergo the heavy curse of God, as God long before shown unto Abraham. From hence ariseth this doctrine, that God will be merciful to all those that show mercy to his Church: and such as are without pity and compassion, shall find judgment without mercy at the hands of God. God will bless those that do good to his people, they shall not lose their labor that favor the Church; but such as are enemies unto them, shall find God an enemy unto them. We see how God blessed the house of Laban for Jacob's sake: so doth Laban confess, Gen. 30.27. I have perceived that the Lord hath blessed me for thy sake. Thus God blessed the house of Potiphar for Joseph's sake that was sold unto him: for God was with him, and his master saw that the Lord made all that he had to prosper in his hand. Gen. 39, 3, Thus have worldly men been blessed for the godly's sake. This is it which Isaac uttered in blessing his son, Gen. 27.29. Cursed be he that curseth thee, and blessed be he that blesseth thee, Hereunto cometh a worthy example recorded by the Prophet Jeremiah, chap. 38, 9. & chap. 39.16, 17. when Jeremiah was cast into the dungeon, where he stakke fast in the mire, through the false suggestion of his enemies, Ebed-Melech the black Moore spake to the King for him, drew him out with cords, and took him out of the dungeon: and therefore the Prophet is sent unto him with message,

Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will bring my words upon this city for evil, and not for good, & they shall be accomplished in that day before thee: but I will deliver thee in that day, saith the Lord, and thou shalt not be given into the hand of the men whom thou fearest: for I will surely deliver thee, & thou shalt not fall by the sword, but thy life shall be for a prey unto thee, because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the Lord. Thus did God recompense his zeal, and reward his favor which he shown to the Prophet in the miseries and troubles which he sustained. Rahab the harlot receiving the spies, sending them out another way, and preferring their life before her own life, was her self saved from the common destruction, and had her fathers household, and all that she had given her as a prey, because she had hid the messengers which Joshua sent to spy out Jericho, Josh. 6, 25. I am. 2, 25. Heb. 11, 31. The widow of Sarepta giving hospitality to Elijah, and offering him part of that poor pittance which was left her and her son in those days of dearth and drought, was with all her family miraculously sustained in the famine, continuing three years and six months, 1. King. 17, 10. The Shunamite receiving the Prophet Elisha, making him a chamber, providing all necessaries for him, setting him there a table, a stool, and a candle-stick, that he might turn in thither to lodge, when he travailed that way, and eat bread at her house, received both the blessing of a son (her husband being old,) and the raising of him from death to life, to her great comfort. She shown some mercy, but received more mercy; she ministered comfort to the Prophet, but herself received more comfort. This also our Savior testifieth, showing that we shall lose nothing that we bestow on any of the faithful, we serve a bountiful Lord, and a liberal pay-master, Math. 10, 41, 42. He that receiveth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, shall receive a Prophets reward, [Reason 1] &c.

The reasons hereof follow to be considered. First, God will honor all those that honor him, he will despise all those that despise him. This is the gracious promise that is gone out of his own mouth, which he cannot but verify and perform: for he is not as man that he should lie, he is not as the son of man that he should deceive. This is it which the Lord spake by the mouth and ministry of Samuel, concerning Eli and his house, Them that honor me, I will honor: and them that despise me, shall be despised, 1. Sam. 2.30. And therefore [Reason 2] they shall prosper that love the Church, Psal. 122.

Secondly, God hath appointed it to be the end of our obedience; our mercy to others, shall procure mercy upon our selves. This the Apostle setteth down, Rom. 2, 10. To everyone that doth good, shall be honor, and glory, and peace, Rom. 2, 10. We saw this before in the history of Rahab, who through faith received the spies: she, her family and kindred were were preserved & married into the family of Judah, of whom Christ came according to y^e flesh. [Reason 3]

Thirdly, mercy, a notable fruit of love received, kindleth the hearts, and enflameth the affections of God's people, both to praise God for them, & to pray unto God for them that have been helpful and serviceable to the Church. It is recorded to perpetual remembrance touching Jehoiada, that he was buried among the Kings, and greatly honored both alive and dead, because he had done good in Israel toward God and his house, 2. Chron. 24, 15, 16. So when Paul remembereth the kindness of Onesiphorus, who sought him out, refreshed him, & was not ashamed of his chain, he desireth the Lord to grant unto him, that he may find mercy with the Lord at that day, 2. Tim. 1, 16, 18. Nay, he prayeth not only for Onesiphorus self (although he only had helped him) but for his whole house & family: whereby is set down a most notable means and motive to stir us up to do good, and to distribute to all the members of Jesus Christ, inasmuch as God showeth that he will have mercy, and take pity, not only of us, but upon our households, and all those that are near about us. [Use 1]

The uses follow. First, from hence we have the strengthening and confirmation of another holy truth in our Christian Religion, (to wit;) that merciful, liberal, and kind men, shall be surely blessed. No merciful man shall lose his labor, but in the end he shall have his recompense and reward. Our Savior Christ saith, Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy. The Prophet teacheth, that a good man is merciful and lendeth, and will measure his affairs by judgment: he hath distributed and given to the poor, his righteousness remaineth forever, his horn shall be exalted with glory. So the Wise man speaketh in many Parables, Prov. 11, 25. and 28.27, and 19.17. The liberal man shall have plenty, and he that watereth shall also have rain; he that giveth unto the poor shall not lack, but he that hideth his eyes shall have many curses: he that hath mercy on the poor, lendeth unto the Lord, and the Lord will recompense him that which he hath given. Cast thy bread upon the waters, for after many days thou shalt find it; give a portion to seven, and also to eight, for thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth, Eccl. 11, 1, 2. On the other side, miserableness and unreasonable handfastnesse are the causes of the ruin of many men, and their houses, and bring curses upon body, goods, soul, children, family, and all things that belong unto them. So it was in churlish and cruel Nabal. So shall there be judgment merciless, to him that showeth no mercy. And he that gathereth goods by unlawful means, shall leave them to such as will pity the poor. Thus we see, God requireth mercy of us, to be like him.

[Use 2] Secondly, it is our duty to love God's people, seeing such as favor them, do fare the better for them. Such as are friends to them, shall have God to be their friend, who promiseth to bless such as bless them. What greater blessing can there be, then to have God to be our friend? What greater curse and misery, then to have him our enemy? The ungodly have received temporal blessings, for showing kindness to the faithful: the Lord hath sent none of them empty away, that ever did good to his people, as we heard in Laban, Potiphar, and others. This serveth to reprove all such as hate and revile them, that curse and detest them, that reproach them, and speak all manner of evil against them. And here let us weigh and consider into what evil times we are fallen, times filled and defiled with all iniquity, 2, Tim. 3, 1. 2. Pet. 3, 3. In former ages the very infidels and unbelievers, confessed that they were blessed for the godly's sake: they were so far from branding and upbraiding them with odious taunts forged in hell, & hammered with the tongues of evil men, that their mouths have acknowledged how GOD hath prospered them for their sakes. This last age is as a common sink, wherein all the wicked inventions and devilish practices do meet, and are gathered together: and therefore, it bringeth forth masters of mischief, and expert practitioners in sin, who are furnished with their own inventions, former examples, and tried experiments of all times, places, and persons. Maruaile not therefore, if the children of God be now scorned, when godliness it self is made a common by-word? In former ages, when as the Prophets and righteous men were persecuted, and their lives sought after, everyone was ready to help and to hide them. So did Jonathan detect the hatred, and reveal the fury of his father against David, with the hazard of his own life, 1. Sam. 20, 42. So did Obadiah in the court of Ahab hide an hundred Prophets in caves from the cruelty of Jezebel, & sustained them in the time of the famine, of the which we shall speak more afterward. Thus did the disciples let down Paul in a basket, when his life was sought for by the bloody Inquisition, Acts 9, 21. Woe unto them therefore, rhat betray them into the hands of their enemies, as the Ziphims did David, 1, Sam. 23.20. as Iruah did Jeremiah, Ier. 39.13. as Judas did Christ, Math. 26, 48. Woe be unto them that falsely accuse them, and any way add affliction to their affliction, whereas they should countenance and defend them to their power, as Jonathan did David, as Ebed-melech did Jeremiah: and woe unto them that hurt the godly, for GOD threateneth to curse such as curse them, so that we should fear any way to do them wrong.

[Use 3] Thirdly, hereby we are warned to exhort one another to this duty, and by all means to provoke one another to mercy, in regard of of the great recompense of reward that is laid up for merciful men. The example of the Sunnamite before remembered, is a notable & worthy example to teach us this use, and to enforce this duty upon us. She stirred up her husband to good things, and made him that was willing, more willing; him that was forward, more forward; showing her self mindful of the end of her creation, which was to be an helper unto him, especially, in the best things, Gen. 2, 18. She said, Behold, I know that this is an holy man of God, that passeth by us continually, let us make him a chamber that he may turn in thither when he cometh to us. 2. Kings 4, 9. It is not enough for us to be ready and resolute to do good to those that are of the household of faith, and thereby to testify our faith in Christ, but God requireth of us to consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works, not forsaking the fellowship that we have among our selves, as the manner of some is, but let us exhort one another; and that so much the more, because ye see that the day draweth near, Heb. 10, 24, 25 This serveth to reprove such as are backward in doing good, and cause others to be backward: such as are not content themselves to do nothing, but are ready to dissuade and discourage others from works of mercy: as we see the Apostle John reproveth Diotrephes, who was so far from receiving the brethren, that he forbad them that would, and thrust them out of the Church, John 3.9, 10. He was backward himself, and made others backward, his malice did not only keep him from doing good to the Saints, but provoked him to hinder and restrain others. These are like the Scribes and Pharisees, which did shut up the kingdom of heaven against men, neither entering themselves into it, nor suffering those that would enter, Math. 23.13. These are like unto the envious Jews, who grew to that desperate madness against the Lord Jesus, that they would neither receive the Gospel themselves, nor suffer it to be preached to others, but forbad the Apostles to preach unto the Gentiles, that they might be saved, to fulfill their sins always, 1. Thes. 2.16. They are like to Elimas the sorcerer, who was so far from beleuing the doctrine of y^e Apostles, Act. 13, 8 that he openly withstood them, and maliciously sought to turn away the Deputy from the faith. And all these may fitly be compared to the dog lying in the manger, which will neither eat the hay himself, nor suffer the Ox or Cattel that would, to eat of it. These shall have the more fearful condemnation, answering to God both for not doing good, and for hindering such as would do good. These both shut up their hands and hearts frō all duties of love, and tie up the hands of others, so that a double woe hangeth over their heads, which without repentance will fall upon them.

Lastly, this Doctrine is both an encouragement [Use 4] unto us in well doing, and a great comfort in all adversities. It is an encouragement, to consider, that what love and service soever we do show to the Saints, it is put upon the Lord's accounts, and is kept in his remembrance, and shall not be blotted out forever. This is the tenor of the covenant which he hath made with us, to have the same friends and enemies with us. Such as are our friends to do us good, he will account as his friends to do them good; such as are his enemies to hurt us, he will proceed against them, as with his utter enemies to root them out, and to destroy them. This is a great honor and dignity of the faithful. It argued a very near league of amity that Jehoshaphat made with the King of Israel, when he joined with him, saying, I am as thou art, my people as thy people, & my horses as thy horses, we will join with thee in the war, all mine is at thy commandment, 1. King. 22.4. 2 Chron. 18.3. This is the society and fellowship that God hath with his people; our friends, shall be his friends; our enemies, shall be his enemies; our troubles, shall be his troubles; our wrongs, shall be his wrongs; our persecutions, shall be his pe•secutions. This is it which the Prophet declareth touching the Lord: He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye, Zach. 2, 8. So precious and dear are they to him, and so tender is his love toward them, that when the enemies rise up against them to hurt them, it goeth as near to the Lord, as anything can do. We know how tender the eye of a man is, it worketh more grief, then to receive a wound in any other part, to have the apple of the eye stricken: but the Church is so dear to God, that he can no more suffer the enemies to hurt it, then a man can abide to be thrust or pierced in the eye. How could the Lord express how earnestly and ardently he loveth us, and how careful he is for our safety, better then under this comparison? and therefore the Prophet entreateth the Lord to keep him as the apple of his eye. & to hide him under the shadow of his wings, This is it which our Savior signifieth in the description of the last judgment; that when one of the least of Christ's brethren have been hungered, and we have fed them; have been thirsty, and we have refreshed them; have been strangers, and we have lodged them; have been naked, and we have clothed them; have been prisoners, and we relieved them: Christ Jesus himself is refreshed, and relieved, visited, and harboured in his members, Math. 25, 40 If the Lord Jesus lived now upon the face of the earth, in poverty & great want, if he wanted meat to eat, or clothes to put on, ought we not to relieve him? nay, who is it but would say he is ready to do it? But every faithful man is unto us as Christ himself: whatsoever is done to him, is done to Christ himself, and Christ Jesus, though heir of all, & Lord of the world, doth esteem & account it as done unto himself. On the other side, when the poor members of Christ are in want, & not relieved, are sick and not visited, are hungry, and yet not sustained; Christ himself is vnvisited, & unregarded. A man would be ashamed to do thus to Christ in person, but inasmuch as we do it to the persons of our brethren and his members, he counteth it as done to himself, as he speaketh in the Gospel, Verily, I say unto you, inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me. This likewise is that which Christ spake to Paul from heaven at his conversion. When he breathed out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, and had obtained letters to bring them bound to Jerusalem that professed Christ; he heard his voice, saying to him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? His persecution was directly against the Saints, but we hear how the Lord accounteth that persecution to be against himself. This is a singular encouragement to everyone of us, to love the servants of God from our hearts, and to serve their necessities, considering that it is as it were put upon the Lord's accounts, and he will recompense it unto our bosoms. It is a great terror to all merciless & malicious men, for whatsoever mischief they work against the godly, it is done against Christ, and they shall be arraigned as guilty of oppression and persecution against Christ.

Again, as this is an encouragement in well doing, so it is a great comfort unto us in these fruits and works of mercy, that God will remember them, & be mindful of them, and for them will assuredly help us when we are in distress. This the Prophet saith, Blessed is he that judgeth wisely of the poor, the Lord will deliver him in the time of trouble, Psal. 41, 1, 2. So then, when we have been serviceable & comfortable unto others, especially to the servants of God, there ariseth from hence a great comfort to our consciences, & an assurance of our eternal peace & acception with God, so that we may with boldness come to the throne of his grace, & pray unto him for y^e graces of his Spirit. Obadiah proveth y^t he seared the Lord in y^e truth of his spirit, & assureth his conscience thereof, because he had hid the Prophets of God in the persecution raised against them by Jezebel, 1. King. 18, 12, 13. Therefore, when he feared that Elijah would procure unto him the displeasure of Ahab, and so bring upon him a cruel death, he found comfort in the former fruits of mercy, and said to the Prophet Was it not told my Lord what I did when Jezebel slew the Prophets of the Lord, how I hid an hundred men of the Lord's Prophets by fifties in a cave, and fed them with bread and water? And now thou sayest, go tell thy Lord, Behold, Elijah is here, that he may slay me. The like we see in Nehemiah, when he had relieved the oppressed people, and every way sought rather the welfare of the Church, then his own commodity, he turneth himself to God, and saith, Neh. 5, 19, & 13, 14, 22, 31. Remember me, O my God, in goodness, according to all that I have done for this people. Neh. 5, 19. And chap. 13, 14, 22, 31. Remember me, (O my God) herein, and wipe not out my kindness that I have shown on the house of my God, and the offices thereof. He doth not here glory in his own merits, nor putteth his trust in his good works (for before he pleadeth mercy, & craveth pardon) but desireth that God in goodness would graciously reward the works which he had done with a good conscience, and is bold to put him in mind of his promise, who hath promised to repay whatsoever is done for the benefit and behoove of his Saints. A great comfort it is to be able in the simplicity of our hearts, to speak thus. How many are able in our days to say with Nehemiah, Lord, remember me according to all that I have done for thy people? For their own conscience would by and by accuse them, and cry out of the wrongs and injuries they have done unto them, how they have hated them in their hearts, smitten them with their hands, wounded them with their tongues, trampled upon them with their feet, and sold themselves to work mischief against them. If they will not remember the servants of God in kindness, let them know God will remember their unkindness; and the children of God may pray unto him, not for desire of revenge, but for the advancement of his glory, to reward them according to their deserts, as we see in Nehemiah, Remember them (O my God) that defile the Priesthood, Neh. 13, 29. This must of necessity galle a man's conscience, whē the terrors thereof shall accuse him for want of doing good service to the Church of God; yea, for doing great wrongs, and offering many indignities against the Church.

10 Then Balak was very angry with Balaam, and smote his hands together: so Balak said unto Balaam, I sent for thee to curse mine enemies, and behold thou hast blessed them incessantly, now three times.

11 Therefore, now flee unto thy place: I thought surely, I will promote thee unto honor, but loe, the Lord hath kept thee back from honor.

12 Then Balaam answered Balak. Told I not also thy Messengers which thou sentest unto me, saying;

13 If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold I cannot pass the commandment of the Lord, to do either good or bad of mine own mind? What the Lord shall command, the same I shall speak.

14 And now behold, I go unto my people: Come I will counsel thee such things as this people shall do to thy people in the latter days.

Hitherto we have spoken of the preparation into the Prophecy, and likewise of the Prophecy it self: Now followeth the effect and event thereof, expressed partly in Balak the King, and partly in Balaam the false Prophet.

Touching Balak, Moses declareth, that when he saw himself again disappointed of his hope and expectation, he bursteth for anger, and smiteth his hands together, in token of the inward indignation of his heart. For as the patient abiding of the righteous shall be gladness, Prov. 10, 28, so the hope of the wicked shall perish. He is content to hearken unto the Sorcerer, so long as he hopeth to hear pleasant and pleasing things of him, but when he is deceived, he rayleth and rageth without measure. His indignation conceived against him appeareth; first, by comparing his own purpose with Balaam's practice, when he saith; I sent for thee to curse mine enemies, and behold, thou hast not ceased to bless them now three times. It is no less absurd and injurious in thee to bless mine enemies, thē if thou shouldest curse my friends: for in that thou blessest them, it is all one, as if thou cursedst me. If thou standest with them, thou standest against me, both of us cannot stand together; If they continue, I fall.

Secondly, he doth cashire him and cast him out of his favor, he withdraweth the present prepared for him, and denieth him the wages and stipend promised unto him: I said, Surely I will advance thee to honor, but the Lord hath kept thee back from honor: as if he should say, Depart from me, thou unhappy Prophet, unhappy in thy Prophecy, unhappy in thy preferment, unhappy to me, unhappy to thyself: I called thee not to bless this people, but to curse them. I have honored thee among my Princes, and would moreover (if that had been too little) have done unto thee and for thee greater things then these. But seeing thou settest so light by my gifts, go thy ways, thy presence is a burden unto me; ask thy reward and wages of thy work, of that God whom thou hast obeyed, or of that people whom thou hast blessed, to whom thou seemest rather beholden, then unto me, and who I am sure are more indebted to thee for thy pains, then I am. This is a most shameful blasphemy of a wretched man whose breath is in his nostrils, against the eternal God that made heaven and earth, who suffereth with patience the vessels of wrath prepared to destruction.

The answer of Balaam followeth to be considered, who is brought in by Moses excusing himself, and giving wicked counsel to Balak, to bring the people of God to ruin and destruction. The Apology and defense that he maketh for himself, is this, that he certified the messengers sent unto him, and declared to Balak himself, that he was not at his own choice and liberty to speak what the King wished, and what himself desired, but was as it were chained and restrained by the mighty hand of God, that he could utter nothing, but what he inspired.

Thus the false Prophet seeketh to pacify and appease the angry mind of the King, and the hyreling laboreth to recover his wages that was denied him: as if he should say, Lay the fault where it is, and not where it is not: I have striuen what I can, to do that which thou requirest, but the God of the Hebrews hath hindered thy request, and my desire.

Secondly, he promiseth that being now discharged, and ready to return home, he would give such counsel, which should work out the final confusion of this people, if it were wisely and warily followed. For when he seeth he cannot curse them, he giveth counsel how to hurt them, as if he should have said to Balak, I see to my grief, & thou perceiuest to thy cost, that sorcery will not prevail and serve the turn, yet do not despair, but hold on thy purpose, & try a new conclusion another way. I have another plot in mine head, follow my direction, and doubt not but thou shalt bring thy matters to a good pass, and destroy that people, as they hereafter shall destroy thy people. But what this counsel was, is concealed and not expressed in this place, which was not such as the Prophets of God advised and persuaded to the people of God, but devilish counsel, proceeding from that spirit by which he was guided, to open a gap to bring upon them all mischief and misery, and to pull down the wall of God's protection, whereby they were fenced and defended, and to let in their enemies upon thē, God being become an utter enemy unto them. For by the success and event in the chapter following, it appeareth, what this crafty counsel was, by the people's falling in fancy and fellowship with the Moabitish women, whereby they were drawn into spiritual and bodily fornication. And afterward in the one & thirtieth chapter of this book, verse 16, Moses speaking of the Midianitish women, saith; These caused the children of Israel through the counsel of Balaam, to commit a trespass against the Lord, as concerning Peor, and there came a plague upon the Congregation of the Lord. So the Apostle John speaketh, writing to the Church at Pergamos, I have a few things against thee, because there thou hast them that maintain the doctrine of Balaam, &c. Reu. 2, 14. Hereby then we see y^t when Balaam had sundry ways assayed and attempted to curse the people of Is^{ra}el, and yet his purpose failed him, because God crossed his devices: he told Balak that the last refuge and only way to prevail against them, was to draw them to sin against their God, and so to make a breach between him and his people. Now according as he counseled him, and gave him instructions, so Balak confederate with the Midianites, sent forth the most beautiful women in their kingdoms into the Campe of Israel, to entice them to the worship of their Idols, & to banquet with them at their Idol-feasts, whereby they drew them to Idolatry and fornication, sinning against God, and kindling his wrath against them. But of this we shall speak further in the chapter following.

[Verse 10. Then Balak was very angry with Balaam, and smote his hands together, and said; I sent for thee to curse mine enemies &c.] See here the event of all the conspiracy against the Israelites, they had conceived mischief, & bring forth a lie. They that travail with wickedness, travail with the wind, and the end is not answerable to the beginning. They vanish away in their own imagination, whilst Israel standeth as a defended City.

From hence we learn, that things practiced inconsiderately, not with good advice, and attempted unlawfully with a wicked purpose, have other events then men think of. Whatsoever we go about with a wicked mind, hath an evil end in the just judgment of God. We cannot expect that any evil action should have a good end. Indeed God doth many times suffer evil men, & causeth them to multiply, because our sins deserve so many chastisements and scourges, as there are wicked men in the world. Again, it is requisite that we should all our life long be kept in a continual exercise of faith, prayer, patience, and repentance, and that they might be as pricks and thorns in our sides. Lastly the Lord by suffering the wicked to prosper and proceed, doth greatly advance his own glory, whiles he reigneth in the midst of his enemies, Exod. 9, 15, 16, and preserveth his Church in despite of Satan and his wicked members, which daily seek the overthrow thereof.

Is it not strange, that an hundred Sheep should live among a thousand wolves, & not be devoured? It is no less wonderful and to be maruelled at, that any of God's people should live upon the face of the earth, being compassed about with an army of wicked men, the very limbs of the devil, that open their mouths to swallow them up, and hate them with an unfeigned hatred unto the death. Notwithstanding, the Lord thus beareth and forbearth, yet in the end he will cut off the wicked, and all evil shall have an evil end. We see this in Pharaoh calling for his Sorcerers, they withstood Moses, and resisted the truth; they turned water into blood, and rods into Serpents: yet in the end all their cunning was stained, and they confessed it was the Finger of God, Exod. 7, 11. & 8, 19. Consider the example of those that would build them a Citty and a Tower, to get them a name, lest they should be scattered upon the whole earth, Genesis ch. 11. verse 4: the Lord came down to see the Citty which the sons of men built, and there confounded their Language, that everyone perceived not another's speech. The Apostle Peter maketh a long rehearsal in his second Epistle, chapt. 2. verse 4, of the sins of the Angels, of the old world, of the Sodomites: and setteth down the wages thereof what it was; the Angels were cast down, the old world was drowned, the Cities of Sodom and Gomorrhah were burned. See the miserable ends of Pharaoh, of Ahithophel, of Saul, of Judas, of Herod, and such others; all the which are written for our instruction, to teach us that all evil works shall have an end answerable to their evil.

The Reasons are plain to assure the truth [Reason 1] hereof. For first, it standeth with God's justice to recompense evil with evil. True it is, he is able by his infinite power to bring good out of evil, and to turn the evil actions of men to serve his own glory, & to further the good of his children; as we see in the history of Joseph, who by the false treachery of his brethren, was sold into Egypt, to whom he said, When ye thought evil against me, God disposed it to good, that he might bring to pass, as it is this day, and save much people alive, Gen. 50, 20. So Job being bereaved of his children, and robbed of his Cattle, confesseth, that the Lord had given, & the Lord had taken away. Likewise the Apostles speaking of the crucifying of Christ, the Lord of glory, declare that Herod and Pontius Pilate with the Gentiles and people of Israel, had done no more then the counsel of God had determined before to be done. Nevertheless it standeth with the rule of his justice, to cross the attempts and endeavours of evil men, and to set himself against them that set themselves against him. So long therefore as God is so just, the ungodly must not look for any good success of evil enterprises. His blessing is upon the lawful labors of his children, because he is merciful: his curse waiteth upon the unlawful works of his enemies, because he is just. It is his nature to be just, he cannot deny himself.

[Reason 2] Secondly, the Lord will make their wickedness known, and pluck off the vizard from their faces, howsoever they think to proceed, and promise to themselves an happy end. This the Apostle teacheth, 2 Tim. 3, 8, 9, where he showeth, that as Iannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith, but they shall prevail no longer, for their madness shall be evident to all men, as theirs also was. Seeing therefore God is a just God, and will uncase the hypocrisy of evil men, we are right well assured, that evil inventions shall come to naught, and have God to cross them.

[Use 1] The uses remain. First, we see from hence, that sin endeth not as it beginneth. Evil men are sure to be destroyed, and that God will call them to an account for those things which they have done, if not in this life, yet assuredly in the life to come. They dream of God, sitting idle in heaven, and seeing all things, and regarding nothing; but in the end they shall know that which now they will not know, and feel that whereof now they have no feeling, And see here how Satan bewitcheth the minds of these men, and blindeth their eyes, that they cannot see sin to be sin, nor cast their eyes to behold the wages of sin reserved for the committers of it. Let all wicked men therefore look for the heavy curse of God. They bless themselves, but the curse of God is upon them, Deut. 32, 41, and ready to overtake them. Woe therefore shall be unto them, though all the world should bless them. They can have no assurance of any good success, nor look for any blessing upon the works of their hands.

Secondly, be not offended when wicked [Use 2] men flourish and prosper, but consider their end and what the end of their hope is, and we shall not be deceived with their outward glory, and present pomp of the world wherein they live. It is a great temptation to the faithful, to behold the prosperity of the wicked. The Prophet David declareth how his faith had long wrestled and struggled with this assault, insomuch that his foot had well nigh slipped, Ps. 73, 2. and his steps were almost gone when he saw how the ungodly flourished; and on the other side, that he was daily punished, and chastened every morning. This was it that troubled Job, Wherefore do the wicked live and wax old, and grow in wealth? Job 21.7. So the Prophet Jeremiah maruaileth at the prosperity of the wicked, O Lord if I dispute with thee, thou art righteous, yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments: Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? Why are all they in wealth that rebelliously transgress? Ier. 12, 1. So the Prophet Habbakkuk complaineth unto God, considering the great felicity of the wicked, and the miserable oppression of the godly, which oftentimes endure all kind of cruelty and affliction, and can see no end thereof. But we must enter into the Sanctuary of God, then we shall see the end which God in his just judgment hath appointed to wicked men: when we thought he had no care of their doings, and that they were in the greatest safety and security, we shall see he is holy in all his ways, & true in all his words. This is a great terror unto wicked men, to know that he will lay upon them a fearful end; and on the other side, it is a great comfort unto the godly, to consider, that howsoever God bear a long time, yet in the end his hand shall take hold on judgment, then he shall execute vengeance on his enemies, and reward them that hate him.

Lastly, seeing all evil shall have an evil [Use 3] end, let us have no fellowship with evil men, or evil actions, unless we will partake with them in the punishment. It is our duty to forsake their company, and to leave our league with them, lest we be taken in the net, and be snared in their ways. This is the exhortation given to us from heaven, Come out of her my people, that ye be not partaker of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. Many have sustained much danger, & endured much affliction by accompanying and conversing with evil men. Lot was never more grieved, nor less secured, then when he was even in the very midst of Sodom. He made choice to dwell there, thereby to enrich himself, but he quickly repented him of his choice, Gen. 14, 12. He was taken prisoner by foreign enemies, and was in greatest danger by violence at his own home. Yea so long as he lived in that place, he seemed to live in a little hell, as the Apostle testifieth, 2 Pet, 2, 7, 8, that God delivered just Lot, being vexed with the uncleanly conversation of the wicked, for he being righteous, and dwelling amongst them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day today with their unlawful deeds. Let us delight in the sweet society of God's children, & take pleasure to be in the presence of them that fear God. As for the ungodly, let us desire their places rather than their persons, & their room rather than their company. Hence it is, that Solomon teacheth us not to enter into the way of the wicked, nor to walk in the way of evil men, Prov. 4, ver. 14, 15, 16, to avoid it, and not to go by it, to turn from it, and to pass by: for they cannot sleep except they have done evil, and their sleep departeth, except they cause some to fall. What an heap of words doth Solomon use? and to what ende serve these so many repetitions, but to show y^e exceeding danger of communicating with the wicked, and how hardly we are drawn to leave thē. It is all one, as if a man would throw himself willingly and willfully into the hands of thieves. We would be ready to call and account him a stark fool, without any sign or show of wisdom, that would run into the company of thieves and robbers, especially having any charge of money or money-worth about him. The servants of God that are endued with heavenly gifts, and have the graces of God's Spirit given unto them (which are the chiefest treasure) have a great charge about them, it standeth them therefore upon, to take heed that by evil company they be not robbed and deprived of them. The holy Ghost dealeth with us, as a Merchant doth with his Factor or servant, whom he sendeth forth furnished with store of money to buy and sell withal; and fearing lest he should be robbed and spoiled, warneth him to avoid suspicious places and passages, and to turn aside out of the path, till he be past the danger. So should we beware of the company & conditions of the wicked, if we count our selves happy to be in league with them, we are utterly lost, and are walking in the path-way that leadeth to death.

[Verse 13. If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot pass the commandment of the Lord, to do either good or bad of mine own mind.] This wicked man, and covetous Prophet, though he neither feared God, nor loved the way of righteousness, yet teacheth what should be in all the servants of God, that they should not for filthy lucre and covetousness, which is the root of all evil, transgress the commandment, or break out beyond their calling.

This teacheth us this truth, That worldly [Doctrine] business should not draw us from Christian duties. Matters of profit and commodity must not carry us beyond our calling, we must not pursue them, and follow after them, when we have no warrant to desire them, albeit there be profit in them. A notable example hereof we have in Gideon, he had a kingdom offered unto him; for the men of Israel said unto him: Reign thou over us, both thou and thy son, and thy sons son: he thought not government in it self unlawful, or unlawful for them to have a Governor; but he saw no calling from God, and therefore refused it, and betook himself to a private life, saying; I will not reign over you, neither shall my child reign over you, but the Lord shall reign over you, Judge. 8, 22, 23 We see that David had his enemy put into his hand, Abishai besought David that he might smite him once with a spear to the earth, and his servants used importunity unto him, as if God had offered him to be slain, saying; See, the day is come, whereof the Lord said unto thee, Behold, I will deliver thine enemy into thine hand, and thou shalt do unto him as it shall seem good to thee, 1 Sam. 24, & 26. But he would not hearken unto them, he would wait the time which God had appointed, saying; Either the Lord shall smite him, or his day shall come to die, or he shall descend into battle and perish. The like we see in our Savior Christ, he refused to be made a temporal and earthly King, John. 6, 15, for when he perceived that the multitude would come and take him to make him a King, he departed again into a Mountain himself alone. We see the Disciples of Christ left all, & neglected the service of themselves, and the seeking of their own benefit for the service of God. Math. 19, 27. So the faithful Christians sold their possessions, being warranted unto it by a special calling, and guided by the work of the Spirit. Acts 4, 39. Moses might have enjoyed the treasures of Egypt, and the dignity of a kingdom, yet chose rather to suffer adversity with y^e people of God, and to follow the calling whereunto he was called, Heb. 11, 24, 25. Whereby we see, that albeit profits be in time and place to be looked after, yet we must all look to have our warrant in seeking for them.

The reasons remain to be considered, to [Reason] enforce this truth, and to gain our affections to the embracing of it. For first, by too much following the profits of this life, we may lose a greater profit: if we should win the world, and lose our souls: if we should catch the riches of this life, and crack the peace of a good conscience, it would prove in the end a small gain unto us, but rather the greatest loss. The soul is a precious jewel, and therefore the loss of it is an incomparable loss. This is it which our Savior saith in the Gospel, What shall it profit a man to win the whole world, and to lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give for the recompense of his soul? Mat. 16, 26. Seeing then by seeking the things of this life, we may lose the things of the life to come it followeth, from the danger of eager pursuing after them, that no worldly business should choke us and hinder us from better things required of us.

[Reason 2] Secondly, the things of this life serve only for a season: we our selves are here Pilgrims and strangers, we have no continuing City. The hope that we have is this, we look for a kingdom. We cannot have an heaven in this life, and another in the life to come. The greatest glory that ever was vpon the earth, is gone in a few ages. Therefore the Apostle teacheth, That the fashion of this world goeth away: This world passeth away, and the lusts thereof, but he that fulfilleth the will of God, abideth ever. 1 Cor. 7, 31, 1 John 2, 27. So that we must know it is required of us, that we prefer not this world before the world to come, nor be led away from the duties of our calling, by the love of the profits thereof.

[Use 1] The uses come now to be stood upon. First, we see it is a dangerous bait to be in love with the world. How many are there that evē make it their god, and do chiefly mind earthly things? Our Savior in the Parable of the Sower that went forth to sow, declareth that the seed that fell among thorns, signifieth those hearers, in whose hearts the cares of this life, the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things do choke the word, & make it unfruitful? Math. 13, 22. What was it that moved Judas to betray his Master, but for love of money? for he said unto the High-Priests, What will you give me, and I will betray him unto you? Math. 26, 15. Whereby Satan entered into him, & possessed his heart, so that it wrought his destruction in soul and body. What caused Demas a professor of the faith to forsake Paul, and deny the faith? surely he embraced this present world in greater love then he did the truth that endureth forever, and caught after the shadow instead of the body. Our hearts are as a ground that is rich and rank, and bringeth forth store of these weeds that choke the growing of the word of God: we would fain come to God, yet are so glued to the world, that it drowneth all desire of the world to come. We offer one hand to Christ, and the other to the devil, but he will have both of them, or none at all. If we give the Lord one part of our heart, and lodge covetousness in the other, we drive the Lord from us, and cause him to depart. No man can serve two Masters: for either he shall hate the one, and love the other, or else he shall lean to the one and despise the other: ye cannot serve God and riches. Math. 6, 24. This made our Savior say, How hardly shall a rich man enter into the kingdom of heaven: it is easier for a Camel to go through the eye of a Needle, then for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God, Math. 19, 3: making it as it were a rare & extraordinary work to bring them to salvation. We must use this world as though we used it not: and they that buy, as though they possessed not; knowing that godliness is the greatest gain, if a man be content with that he hath: for we brought nothing into the world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out; therefore when we have food and raiment, let us be content, for they which will be rich, fall into temptations and snares, & into many foolish and noisome lusts, which drown men in perdition and destruction.

What stirred up Ahab and Jezebel to work out the death of Naboth and his children, that the one of them was sick with sorrow, the other caused them to be stoned, but the desire of his vineyard that was a sore in his eye, and lay so fitly for him? And yet when we have done, when we have embraced our dwellings, and encroched on the bounds and borders of others, when we have joined house to house, and land to land, our neighbors hedge must be next unto us, and hold us hard, that we can pass no further.

Secondly, we see that our own private respects [Use 2] are not the chief things that we must respect, but seek a sanctified use of the blessings of this life, and a warrant to our consciences for the right using of them. These blessings of God become curses unto us, unless we use them lawfully. But if we set up our rest upon them, and seek our happiness in them, we prize them at a high rate, and commit the foulest and filthiest Idolatry that can be. For the preferring of private profit before heavenly duties causeth a man to be an Idolater: First, because he preferreth his riches before God or godliness in his affections, depending upon them as upon God, and making them the stay of his life. Again, he accounteth his life to rest upon his wealth, rather than upon the providence of God: as his riches increase, so his hope increaseth, so his comfort increaseth: when his wealth sayleth, all his hope & comfort faileth. Therefore the Apostle chargeth us to mortify our members which are on the earth, the inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness which is Idolatry: for the which things sake, the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience. So then, the things of this life, and the things of the life to come being propounded and set before us, we are to choose the better of them. This our Savior taught Martha, Luk. 10, 41, 42. that she disquieted and encumbered her self about many things, but one thing is needful, Mary hath chosen the better part, which shall not be taken from her. So likewise our Savior chargeth us, not to lay up treasure for our selves upon the earth, Where the Moth and Canker corrupt, and where thieves dignity thorough and steal; but to lay up for our selves treasure in heaven, where neither the Moth nor Canker corrupteth, and where thieves cannot dig through and steal, Mat. 6, 19, 20, 33. Let us first of all seek the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these earthly things shall be ministered unto us. Let our study and meditation be on heavenly things, whereunto we are called. Let us take heed we lose not greater blessings by affecting the less. Let us remember Lots wife, a fearful mirror and monument of careful thoughts, who got and gained nothing by all her cares. Let us wait upon God, and look up unto him, Who openeth his hand, and filleth all things with his goodness, Ps. 104, 28. Let us obey the voice of the Lord our God, and then all his blessings shall come upon us, and overtake us.

[Use 3] Lastly, this doctrine serveth to reprove those that esteem earthly things above heavenly, & mind their profits more then their salvation. These invert the course of nature, and turn all things upside down, they set the earth above the heavens, and thrust down the heavens beneath the earth. This is like that confusion and disorder which the wise man speaketh of, Eccl. 10, 6, 7. Folly is set in great excellency, and the rich set in low place: I have seen servants on horses, and Princes walking as servants on the ground. These are like to the Gadarenes that desired their swine more then Christ, and had rather lose Christ, and have him depart out of their coasts, then lose their swine, Math. 8, 34. These are of the brood and offspring of profane Esau, who for one mess of meat sold his birthright, Heb. 12, 16, But we have not so learned Christ; we must look up to the eternal inheritance reserved for us: we must not make our riches to be our heaven, our belly to be our god, our shame to be our glory, and our own profit to be our happiness. We must account one spark of grace, and the least taste of the kingdom of heaven, and of the joys of the life to come to be better worth, and to bring with it more sound joy of heart, then all these transitory things, and therefore to be esteemed above all the glory, riches, pleasures, and profits of this world. This made the Prophet David say, Many say, Lord, who will show us any good? But Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us: thou hast given me more joy of heart, then they have had, when their wheat and their wine did abound, Psal. 4, 6, 7. Hereunto accordeth the Apostle, Phil. 3, 20. So then they are convinced & condemned to be profane beasts, possessed with the evil spirit of Esau, that will not keep the Lord's Sabbaths, nor attend upon his worship, but make that day a time of toil and travail about their worldly business, and a day to be spent in dancing and dallying, in surfeiting and drunkenness, in gaming & ydlenes; thereby making that which is the Lord's day by his institution, to be to thē the devils day by their profanation. The Gospel, and all things of a better life, are lightly regarded of all such as are givē to their profits, and pleasures, and delight to pamper up the flesh.

No Religion could enter into the rich glutton that was clad in purple, and fared deliciously every day, Luk. 16, 19. The rich man whose ground brought forth fruits plenteously, whose tongue promised to him perpetuity, and whose heart bred in him security, never thought what should become of his soul, never dreamed of sudden death, never minded his own salvation; and therefore God said unto him, O fool, this night will they fetch away thy soul from thee, then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided? Luk, 12, 16. The Apostle Peter maketh it a special mark of the profane beasts in that time, that they accounted it their chief pleasure to live deliciously for a season. And the Apostle Jude speaking of the like livers, saith, they were feast-hunters, filling & pampering themselves. Of this sort are all drunkards, gluttons, epicures, and belly-gods: speak unto them to embrace the truth, to mind heavenly things, to consider wherefore they were created, and to remember the shortness of their life; they cannot hear, the belly hath no ears. They are ready to answer with carnal minded men, what will the Gospel advantage me? Why should I be a professor, and become a by word of the world? What good cometh to a man by hearing the word, by reading the Scriptures, or by being the child of God? It can get me neither many in my purse, nor clothes to my back, nor food to my belly, nor any other pleasure to my heart; I had rather have the company of good fellows, and a draught of wine or strong drink, then to hear the best Sermon that can be preached. And here consider with me profane Esau once again. When Jacob demanded of him the sale of his birth-right, he said, Loe, I am almost dead, what is then this birthright to me? Gen. 25, 31. Thus the Atheists speak in the book of Job, chap. 21, 15. Who is the Almighty, that we should serve him, and what profit should we have if we should pray unto him? Such profane *Esau*s there be many in the world, monsters among the sons of men, proud gyants, that are at opē defiance with God, that regard the cup and kan, the pot and good fellowship, before heaven and heavenly things; that prize the most precious pearls of God most basely, like Judas the son of perdition, that valued Christ at thirty pence: so these sell everlasting life, and give heaven, & depart frō salvation; some for their whore, some for their drink, some for their money, and other for other base and beastly pleasures: all these shall one day know the price of their folly, and confess with their own mouths, that they were worse then fools and mad mē, that everyone is ready to point at with the finger.

Everyone is ready to sit in judgment upon Esau, & to condemn y^e profaneness of his heart, because he regarded more the satisfying of his present lust and moment any pleasure, then to be the successor of his father in the Church of God: yet of this number there be infinite thousands in the world, that prize the precious treasure of God's heavenly graces, the use of the Sacraments, the frame of Christian Religion, the glorious ministry of the Word, the hope of a better life, and the endless joy of God's kingdom (things more of value then the whole world beside) as brutishly & basely, as ever Esau did his birthright, & are ready to sell them for every filthy gain & drudgery pleasure. They think of no other life then this present, and know no other God but Mammon; and therefore howsoever they have oftentimes the praise of the world, and the commendation to be civil & honest men, they are not only enemies unto their souls, but to the cross of Christ, and are in the fearful estate of condemnation.

[Verse 14. Come, I will counsel thee such things as this people shall do to thy people in the latter days.] Here we have set down unto us the chief occasion of that great judgment which fell upon the people; wherein four & twenty thousand perished, as appeareth in the chapt. following, namely, the devilish counsel of Balaam which he gave unto Balak, to draw the people into fornication. But it may seem at the first sight, that Balaam speaketh very improperly. For whereas he saith, I will counsel thee such things as this people shall do to thy people, some may suppose he should rather have said, I will counsel thee such things as thou and thy people shall do to the people of Israel. Notwithstanding, if we consider the words aright, we shall see his meaning to be so in effect. So then, if we mark what y^e people of God should do to them, we shall find what they shall do to the people of God. The Israelites, as we see in the seenteenth Verse, Shall smite the coasts of Moab, and destroy them, subdue them, and bring them under; so was the drift of his counsel, to lay a plot, and prepare a snare whereby the Israelites should be weakened, and many thousands of them destroyed by the hand of God. As if he should say: I know this people whom thou hatest, shall waste and weaken thy posterity in time to come; but hearken unto me, and obey my counsel, I will show thee how thou shalt ruin them, and compass their destruction, and so do unto them that which they shall do unto thy people. Thus we see the wickedness of Balaam's heart to be exceeding great, who when he was restrained from cursing, opened his mouth to wicked counsel, & thereby the children of Israel fell into horrible sins, and drew upon themselves heavy punishments. Hereby we learn, That to give evil counsel is a grievous sin. It is not enough for us to abstain from doing evil, but we must beware of this great sin, that we do not counsel any to commit evil. This the Scripture setteth before, us in the sin of Jezebel, who was a furtherer of Ahab's wickedness, when his covetous eye lusted after Naboth's Vineyard, she said unto him, Doest thou sway the Scepter, rule the kingdom, and manage the State? Arise and eat bread, I will give thee the Vineyard: and afterward she moved him to go and take possession. This is likewise set down in Prover. 1, 11. where he expresseth the sin of seducers. This also appeareth further in Joseph's brethren, plotting his overthrow: Come, let us slay him, and cast him into some pit, and we will say, a wicked beast hath devoured him, &c. Gen. 37, 20. So did Pharaoh counsel and encourage the Egyptians, to deal wisely with the Israelites, lest they multiply, and it come to pass that if there be war they should join themselves with their enemies, and get them out of the Land, Exod. 1, 10. This we see also in Ahithophel, who rebelled with Absalom against David, and fearing the reconcilment of the son to the father, and thereby his own just confusion for his unjust rebellion, he gave such counsel as if it had been Oracle, thereby to take away all hope of agreement & atonement between them: Go in to thy fathers Concubines which he hath left to keep the house, and when all Israel shall hear thou art abhorred of thy father, the hands of all that are with thee shall be strong, 2 Sam. 16, 21. So the high Priests moved the people to desire that Barabbas might be delivered rather than Christ, Mark 15, 11: persuaded Judas for a sum of money to betray him, gathered themselves in a council to put him to death, and enticed the soldiours with large rewards to noise it abroad, that his disciples came by night and stole him away, while they slept, Mat. 28, 12.

The Reasons follow. And first of all it is to [Reason 1] be considered, that it is one of the titles of the devil to be a tempter. It is one of his names to note unto us his nature: for he is called the Tempter, because his continual study & desire hath been, is, and will be, by all the means he can, to tempt all men; he omitteth no times, he spareth no pains, he leaveth no means vnassayed to draw men from God, & to bring them to destruction. This the Apostle teacheth, 1 Thes. 3, 5. I sent to know of your faith, lest the Tempter had tempted you in any sort. So he tempted Eve in the beginning through his subtlety to eat of the forbidden fruit, and beguiled her through hypocrisy, 2 Cor. 11, 3. So he tempted Christ to draw him into infidelity, to distrust, and to presumption, and the Evangelist saith, The Tempter came unto him, Matth. 4, 3. Wherefore this being a note and property of the devil, such as craftily seduce others unto wickedness, or hold them back from godliness, such as keep men from the love or practice of Religion, and hinder the means whereby it is fostered and furthered in them, are become tempters and the very children of the devil. The qualities of the devil are found in them, they bear his mark, they <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> are stamped with his image, and they do notoriously resemble their father, so that we may say truly of such, and to such, as Christ speaketh to the Jews, John 8, 44. Ye are of your father the devil. Thus when Elimas sought to turn away the Deputy from the faith, Paul calleth him, an enemy to all righteousness, full of all subtlety, and child of the devil, Acts 13, 10. It must needs be a great sin that maketh the devils kinsmen; yea, devils incarnate.

[Reason 2] Secondly, from evil counsels follow most dangerous effects, as filthy puddles from an unclean fountain. From hence many times proceed idolatry, adultery, rebellion, murder, robbery, false testimonies, and all manner of evil works. This might be amplified by sundry examples. The daughters of Lot, lately delivered as a small remnant out of the destruction of Sodom, (the fire whereof was yet scarcely quenched (said one to another, Come, we will make our father drink wine, and lie with him, that we may preserve seed of our father: for our father is old, and there is not a man's in the earth to come in unto us after the manner of all the earth, Gen. 19, 32: and from this wicked counsel of the daughter, followed horrible incest of the father. The like we see in Jonadab, a subtle companion, who beholding Amnon the Kings son become so lean, and perceiving he fell in love, or rather in lust with his sister Tamar, said unto him, Lie down on thy bed, and make thyself sick: and when thy father shall come to thee, say unto him, I pray thee let my sister Tamar come and give me meat, and let her dress meat in my sight, &c. and from this devilish counsel, followed also detestable incest.

[Use 1,] The uses follow. First, we may gather from hence another truth to be diligently marked; namely, that mischievous counsel shall fall out to the greatest mischief of the first contriuer and deuiser of it. It is as a stone that shall roll upon him that first moved & stirred it. It is as a sword, which with the rebounding of the stroke, shall return with great violence, to wound him that first did draw it. This we see in the history of malicious Haman, who thought to have glutted himself, & satisfied his long thirst with the blood of the Jews, he took counsel with his wife and all his friends, and they persuaded him to make a tree of fifty cubits high, and to speak unto the King that Mordecai might be hanged thereon, Ester 5, 14. This was the counsel, but it became a snare to entrap the counselor. He made a pit, and digged it, and is fallen into the pit which he made, Psal. 7, 15. Daniel, by the subtle suggestion of the Rulers of the kingdom, and counsellors of the King, was cast into the den of Lions, because he was found too faithful to God; but Daniel was delivered, the mouths of the Lions were stopped, and his accusers by the just judgment of God, & commandment of the King, were devoured by those Lions, Dan. 6, 24. This should serve to give wisdom and warning to all men, and to terrify them from plotting evil devises, & from persuading unto wickedness. God will find them out in their own ways, and pay them the wages of their own works. Thus will the Lord be known by executing judgment upon these tempters and enticers to ungodliness, so that the wicked is snared in the work of his own hands, and his foot is taken in the same net which he hid for another. It is impossible (as we see in continual experience) that such masters of mischief should escape unpunished.

Secondly, we see they are greatly deceived, [Use 2] and wander wide out of the way, that think themselves excused and exempted from sin, if they do not execute it in the work, & practice it with the hand. For if the head devise it, if the heart allow it, if the tongue deliver it, if the foot follow after it, sin is conceived, & we are made culpable in the sight of God. So then we must all know, that we may many ways be made partakers of other men's sins, though we be not actual doers in them: God will find us guilty, and convince us to our faces, that we have our part in it, as David said to the woman that sought to reconcile Absalom to his father, who did it by the counsel of Joab, Is not the hand of Joab with thee in all this? 2 Sam. 14, 19. This the Apostle teacheth Timothy, 1 Tim. 5, 22. Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins: keep thyself pure. And the Apostle John saith, If any man come unto you, and bring you false doctrine, receive him not to house, neither bid him, God speed for he that biddeth him, God speed, is partaker of his evil deeds. Now we may be culpable of the sins of others; First, by commanding by our authority; that which is evil, and by moving those that are under us to go about it. Thus David is charged to have slain Uriah by the sword of the Ammonites, 2 Sam. 12, 9. For he that willeth and commandeth evil, is as deeply charged with it, as he that committeth it. Secondly, by winking at evil, when we see it, yet make our selves blind, & will not see it, although it lie in our power to repress it, and redress it. This indulgence and lenity, (when offenders are suffered to run on in their sin) maketh them to grow obstinate in sin, and irrecoverable out of their sin. This we see in the example of Eli toward his own sons, his foolish pity made him guilty of their impiety, and brought the judgment of God, not only upon them, but upon himself. Thus many Masters, Magistrates, Ministers, and household-governors, are inwrapped in the blasphemies, perjuries, whoredoms, drunkenness, profaneness, and other sins, that reign amongst those of their families and iurisdictions, and shall be accountable for them, by reason of their cockering and connivance. For by this means, though we do not openly commit them, we secretly consent unto them, & approve of them. This the Apostle reproveth in those, who though they knew the Law of God, how that they which commit such things, are worthy of death, yet not only do the same, but also sooth them that do them. Thirdly, they are also partakers of the sins of others, that join in familiarity with the wicked, for by their fellowship with them, they add courage & comfort to them, they harden them in their evil courses, and give great suspicion to the world, that they are like them in affection, with whō they join in conversation. Fourthly, when men are silent, and say nothing at open impieties & blasphemies. If God be dishonored, and we hold our peace, as if it concerned us not, neither seeking to reclaim, nor to correct them, we make their offenses to be our own. The sin of Hophni & Phinehas destroyed the family and posterity of their father. Achan committed sacrilege, the whole host partaked of it, and was punished for it. So then, it standeth us upon, to beware of consenting to sin, and of counseling others to commit sin. If we any way give our assent and consent, if we defend or delight in y^e sins which we hear or see, we are companions with them of their filthiness, and partakers with them in their wickedness.

Thirdly, it teacheth us that we ought not [Use 3] to consent to sinners, nor to follow evil counsel when it is given and suggested unto us. It is not enough for us to make our defense to say, Alas, I devised it not, I was not the contriuer and inuenter of it: if it had not been devised, it should not have been practiced. For as the aduiser shall not herein be justified, because he put it not in execution: so he that is advised shall not be cleared and discharged, because he was not the author of the invention. If it be a grievous sin to seduce, it is a grievous sin to be seduced. God will arraign them as guilty of the same sin, & bind them in one bundle together. Therefore the wiseman saith, Prov. 1, 10, 15. My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not: walk not in the way with them, but refrain thy foot from their path. Our nature is easily drawn to incline unto evil, and standeth in a slippery place ready to fall; but when we have counsellors & abettors to allure us, and to provoke us, we had need of a great measure of grace to hold us upright and to keep our feet from falling. We shall have many sweet songs sung unto us, and the pleasures of sin laid before us, but we must stop our ears against such enticements, and not hearken to the enchantments of such seducers. This we shall the better observe and perform, if we look to the practice of these two points: First, if we be careful to avoid evil company, and to fly from them. If a man were to pass through an horrible wilderness, where he were sure to meet with Lions, Dragons, Wolves, Tigers, Bears, & other wild beasts, he would be sure to go armed and well appointed. While we live in this world, we wander in such a wilderness, and albeit we be not in bodily danger of such creatures, yet we are in continual peril to be assaulted by more dangerous and deadly enemies, the devil and his Angels: all the wicked are their host and instruments, we shall be tempted by the enemies of God, by drunkards, and other profane persons to sin, which are as so many cruel and savage beasts wholly bent to our destruction, so that we must both avoid their company, & put on the whole Armor of God, Eph. 6, 11: that we may stand fast and quit our selves like men in the time of trial.

Secondly, it is not enough for us to fly the company of the wicked and ungodly, but we must also seek for the society of the godly, that all our delight may be in them: For the way of the righteous shineth as the light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day, Prov. 4, 18. We must make much of the assemblies of the godly, and join one selves in friendship with them, that with the godly we may learn godliness, and with the upright we may learn uprightness. This Solomon teacheth, Pro. 13, 20 He that walketh with the wise shall be wiser. This is a notable help against our manifold infirmities, and a strengthening of us against all temptations. As Iron sharpeneth Iron, so doeth man sharpen the face of his friend, Prov. 27, 17.

Lastly, it is our duty to follow the good [Use 4] counsel and persuasion of the godly. Good counsel is as the dropping of the honey comb, bringing sweetness to the soul, and health to the body; yea, as Ointment and perfume rejoice the heart, so doth the sweetness of man's friend by hearty counsel, Prov. 27, 9. When our brethren teach, admonish, counsel, persuade, or rebuke us, we must not stomach and despise them, but be guided and directed by them, as David was by Nathan, and as Peter was by the Apostle Paul. This is set down in the 141. Psalm, Let the righteous smite me, for that is a benefit: let him reprove me, and it shall be a precious Oil that shall not break my head. It is a rare thing to find a man that will counsel to follow godliness. Reverence him as a counselor, love him as a friend, obey him as a father, that will direct thee in the ways of salvation, & bring thee back again when thou wanderest out of the right path that leadeth to life. Thou shalt find many more evil counsellors then good. If one will admonish and persuade thee to godliness, thou shalt meet with one score that will allure thee to wickedness. But we must not follow a multitude to do evil, lest we be punished with the multitude. It must be our wisdom to learn instruction at the mouth of others. The heathen, which had no better star to guide them then the light and law of nature, knew y^t there were two things did greatly adorn a man, and make him renowned for wisdom; one, to be able to give good counsel to himself and others; the other to be willing to hearken to good counsel when it is offered. If we cannot attain and reach unto the former point, w^c is an excellent grace of God's Spirit, to instruct and teach others wisdom; yet let us follow the latter, and give ear to the advice of others when it is given unto us. For whosoever is contented to stoop down to learn wisdom, is always to be reputed a wise man. But he that cannot give, and yet will not take counsel when it is given; he that neither can teach, nor will learn wisdom, may worthily be esteemed and branded by all men, with the name of a fool. If either we can go before others to show them the way, or follow them that lead us the way, we shall not lose the reputation of wisdom. Hence it is, that Solomon declaring precepts of true wisdom, saith, Prov. 12, 15. The way of a fool is right in his own eyes, but he that heareth counsel is wise. Not only he is wise that giveth counsel, but he that heareth it. The wiseman speaketh not in these words of the outward hearing of the ear, but of the inward hearing of the heart. For many have the bodily hearing, that want the spiritual. The external use of the sense cannot be available to make us wise; so that we must hear with an earnest affection of the mind, & give all diligence to follow the counsel that is given us in the name of God. To this purpose he speakeſt in another place, Pro. 15, 22. Without counſel thoughts come to naught; but in the multitude of counſellors there is ſteadfaſtneſs. When Herod had offered to give to the daughter of Herodias (becauſe in her dancing & dalliance ſhe pleaſed him) whatſoever ſhe ſhould aſk, even to the half of his kingdom, ſhe being before instructed by her mother, aſked the head of John Baptist in a platter: and from the devilish counſel followed abhominable murder, Mat. 14, 8, When Rehoboam followed the raſh counſel of his young counſellors that had been brought up with him, who perſuaded him to make the grievous yoke of his father more grievous: this turned to the ruin and renting away of the greater part of his kingdom.

So then, let us not be aſhamed to follow the counſel of ſuch as are diſcreet and godly. Neither is it greatly material who they be that give us good counſel, whether our ſuperiors, our equals, or our inferiors. For we muſt not weigh ſo much who is the counſelor, as what is the counſel: nor who is the adiviser, as what is the advice. If it be good and godly, think thou that the holy Ghost ſpeakeſt, and receive it as proceeding from the Comforter. If it be evil, reject it, as coming from the Tempter. Moses was a wiſe Governor of the people, and a worthy Prophet of God, like unto whom aroſe not a Prophet in Israel, whom the Lord knew face to face; yet he thought it no ſhame or reproach unto him to be directed and advised by Jethro his father in law (a man far inferior unto him in honor and eſtimation) in hearing the cauſes and controverſies that aroſe amongſt the people: who ſaid, Here now my voice, I will give thee counſel, and God ſhall be with thee, Exod. 18, 19. When Naaman the Syrian came into the lād of Israel to be cured of his leproſy, and the Prophet bad him, Go waſh himſelf ſeven times in Jordan, he turned away in diſdain and diſpleaſure; and if he had not hearkened to the advice of his own ſervants who modestly ſaid unto him, Father, if the Prophet had commanded thee a great thing, wouldeſt thou not have done it? How much rather then when he ſaith to thee, Waſh and be clean? he had departed a leaper as he came, 2 Kings 5, 13. The like we ſee in David, who receiving reprochful words for the good deeds that he performed, and a churlish answer for the kindneſs which he expected, was fully in his fully bent and determined to have been revenged on Nabal & his whole houſe for that injury; but by the advice and counſel of wiſe Abigail, inferior to him in regard of his ſex and condition, he was ſtayed from that enterprize, ſo that he ſaid, Bleſſed be the Lord GOD of Israel who ſent thee this day: bleſſed be thy counſel, & bleſſed be thou which haſt kept me this day from coming to ſhed blood, 1 Sam. 25, 33. So then, we are not to deſpiſe the counſel of thoſe that are put in ſubjection under our feet. The child is ſometimes m•de able to adviſe his father; the ſeruāt may ſometimes ſee more then his maſter; the wiſe may ſometimes give good counſel to her huſband: and it is no diſpraiſe or diſparagement for thē to hearken to their inferiors, but they ought to receive it as a meſſage brought unto them from God: yea, if an enemy ſhould perſuade us to that which is good, we ought to make this benefit and advantage of him, as to hearken to our own profit. This ſerveth to reprove all thoſe that being lifted up in a proud conceit of their own wiſdom; againſt whom the Prophet Iſaiah denounceth an heavy woe, ſaying, Woe unto them that are wiſe in their own eyes, and prudent in their own ſight, do ſcorn and contemn that either themſelves or any oath• ſhould learn anything of their inferiors. We ſee this, and hear it by lamentable experience in many men of a proud and profane ſpirit in our days. For when the wife, who ought to be an helper unto her huſband, ſhall with modeſty and meekneſs of spirit it admonish him for the bettering of his estate, for the benefit of his wealth, for the comfort of his family, and for the profit of his own soul, to forsake his evil company, to renounce his drunkenness, or other wickedness wherein he delighteth; what is more common then for his companions to say unto him, Wilt thou be ruled and governed by her? Wilt thou endure her to be thy master? Wilt thou suffer her to crow and to carpe over thee? And thus while they think to become wise men, they show themselves fools. For, are we wiser then our father Abraham, who accounted it no reproof or reproach unto him to obey the counsel of his wife, when she persuaded him to cast out the bondwoman and her son out of his house? No woman in Scripture more renowned and commended for subjection and submission to her husband, yet she gave him good counsel to her great praise; and Abraham is commanded to listen unto it; for God said unto him, In all that Sara shall say unto thee, hear hir voice, Gen. 21, 12. Away then with the pride & peeuishnesse of all those that take it as a discredit unto themselves to be put in mind of their duty by others, and refuse all counsel, whereof themselves are not the authors. Let us put on the spirit of humility, and decke our selves inwardly with lowlynesse of mind, to hearken to everyone that can direct us in y^e which is good. On the other side, it behooveth us to beware of evil counsel, and of evil counsellors, for they are as the instruments of the devil, and lie in wait to entrap us. It is impossible to be free from these sons of Belial, we shall be assaulted by them, and therefore thou must be so thoroughly prepared against them, that if thy father that begat thee, or thy mother that bare thee, or thy wife that lieth in thy bosom, or thy friend that is as thy own soul, shall entice thee secretly or openly, to any impiety against thy holy faith or obedience, remember from what better root it proceedeth, and say unto him as Christ did unto Peter; Come behind me Satan. For when Peter began to dissuade him from that great work unto which the Father had sanctified him, and sent him into the world, he said unto him, Get thee behind me Satan: thou art an offense unto me, because thou sauourest not the things that are of God, but the things that are of men. A notable example for us all to follow when we are moved any way to dishonor our God, and to wound our own conscience by committing of sin.

15 And he uttered his Parable, and said, Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eyes were opened hath seen.

16 He hath said that heard the word of God, & hath the knowledge of the most High, and saw the vision of the Almighty, and being in a trance had his eyes uncovered.

17 I see that, but not now; I behold it, but not near: there shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Scepter shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the coasts of Moab, and shall destroy all them that are behind me.

18 And Edom shall be possessed, and Seir shall be a possession to their enemies: for Israel shall do valiantly.

19 He also that shall have Dominion, shall be of Jacob, and shall destroy the remnant of the City.

20 And when he looked on Amalek he uttered his Parable, and said, Amalek was the first of Nations, but his latter end shall come to destruction.

22 Nevertheless the Kenite shall be spoiled, so long as Ashur shall hold them captiue.

We have shown already that the propheties of Balaam do concern either Israel, or such as were strangers from the Commonwealth of Israel. The prophesy belonging to the Israelites hath been already handled. Now Moses proceedeth to set down other special propheties which Balaam uttered concerning other particular Nations. For it pleased God to use the means and ministry of this wicked man, to foretell the troubles and destruction that should come upon them. The first of all those propheties is against the Moabites and Edomites: the second against the Amalekites, the third against the Kenites. Against all these he prophesieth and foresheweth the ruins of their several States and Dominions.

Now because all these were great & weighty matters, belonging to the subversion, not of private persons or families, but of whole Countries and kingdoms, he useth that preface and introduction which he did before, to procure credit and authority to his prophesy, declaring that he was inspired by the Almighty to speak, of which we have spoken already in the beginning of this chapter. Touching the prophesy against the Moabites and Edomites, which is the fourth in number, and the first of those that concern other nations that were strangers from Israel, he showeth that the glory of the Israelites shall be so great, their dominion so large, their kingdom so mighty and magnificent, that it shall shake the Moabites, Ammonites, and Midianites, and men of the East in pieces, yea shall subdue Edom, and enter into their Cities and country, as their own possession. This shall be the victorious conquest of the Israelites, whose glory is expressed by the name of a Star, and whose kingdom is understood by the name of the Scepter, which is amplified in the beginning of the words, and proved in the end of them. It is amplified by the preventing of an objection, which is *•••*ting, and may be thus supplied; When shall this be? [Object.] Or is the time thereof near; that it should be by and by looked for? The answer [Answer.] followeth: I see and plainly perceive the certain and undoubted truth thereof, howbeit the season is not yet at hand: thou (O King) hast no cause to fear it, for it is not reserved for thy days, b•t must be fulfilled after many generations. For David lived four hundred years after the uttering and deli•ering of t•is prophesy, in whom it was accomplished. Thus he comforteth the King, and declineth envy against himself. He proveth and confirmeth his prophesy by the courage and valor of the Israelites, for they shall do valiantly, and destroy the enemies that remain.

Now, in this prophesy thus propounded we are to observe two things: First, the interpretation of some things mentioned herein, and then consider when it had his accomplishment and fulfilling, which is the soundest way to understand a prophesy. The words that require interpretation, are in the end of the 17. verse, It shall destroy all them that are behind me. Some read them thus, Shall destroy all the sons of Sheth, which they understand, that Christ shall convert all Nations and all mankind to y^e Catholic faith (for Sheth was the son of Adam, out of whose loins y^e whole world sprang) which is a wrested and far-fet interpretation. Others pass by it, as if they saw it not, or as if it were a stranger to them, and they to it, and therefore will claim no acquaintance of it: wherein we may better praise their wisdom than their knowledge, as those which had rather not shoot their arrow than miss the mark, and stand still rather than go out of the way. Others make these words all one with the former, & understand them of the subversion of the Princes of Moab, which is without all sap or sense; and besides they should set that down obscurely & darkly, which before had been expressed evidently and plainly. Or suppose that some Princes among them might be called by this name; which is, to wander without a guide, to sail without a compass, and to conjecture without ground or warrant. Others (among which some of the Jews also are) take it to be some town of the Moabites, which is here specially threatened. These interpretations (to which we might join sundry others) being mere imaginations without reason, or fond collections without truth, or new conceits without credit, are not to be received of us, or approved by us. So then, all things being duly considered, we are rather to follow them that understand the words appellatiuely than properly, both because such as take them properly, run into an improper and impertinent interpretation, and also because the word is so taken in other places of holy Scripture, as Isaiah 24, 4. 2 Sam. 10, 4: in which places, the word [Sheth] both without any affix, & with his affix joined to it, signifieth the hinder parts, which the Physicians by an honest and clean term, do call the fundament and that place which we sit upon. Wherefore, by this borrowed and improper speech, we may gather (not improperly) that Balaam understood those people that were behind him, or situate at his hinder parts, having relation to the situation of his body, as then it was placed. For when he uttered this prophesy, he looked toward the West, where he beheld the Israelites pitching their tents beside Jordan and Jericho, as we saw before, Num. 22, 1: so that turning his face towards the Israelites, the people of the East must of necessity be behind him, the East and West being two contrary positions of the heavens, so that he w^c turneth to the one turneth from the other; and if the one be before him, the other must needs be behind him. So then, as he stood at that time, he might have called the Israelites the children of his face or fore-parts, being then before him as he stood; as he doth the Ammonites, Midianites, and other Easterlings, the sons of his back-parts, being then situate behind him, whom afterwards the Israelites subdued. Thus much touching the meaning of this hard place in this prophesy: touching the accomplishment of this prophesy, it was fulfilled doubly; first temporally, then spiritually; first properly, then typically. Temporally it was begun in David, who overcame the Moabites, and put them to tribute; and figuratively finished in Christ, who is the true day-star arising in our hearts, and the King of Kings, whose Scepter is a Scepter of righteousness, of whose kingdom shall be none end, whose dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the River unto the end of the Land. Psal, 72, 8. & 60, 10. Hitherto of the fourth prophesy.

The next prophesy following is against the Amalekites, which is the fifth in number: but the second that concerneth the Gentiles. For his eyes being cast towards them and their country, he pronounceth two things of thē; the one past, and the other to come, and yet one the fore-runner and procurer of y^e oath. They began to fall already by the sword of the Israelites, as Moses hath declared. Exod. 17, 19. This word here uttered shall pursue them, and persecute them unto the death, until they be utterly consumed. God hath determined by an unchangeable decree to have war with Amalek forever, and utterly to put out his remembrance from under heaven. The Amalekites descended of the race of Amalek the Nephew of Esau, as it is testified in Gen. 36, 12. They were the beginning of the nations that first vexed and assaulted the people of God after they were brought out of the Land of Egypt, they were the first enemies y^t came out against them to stop their way and passage toward the land of Canaan, & therefore they are commanded to have war with them, and to destroy them with the edge of the sword, according to the word of y^e Lord, Deut. 25, 17, 18, 19. The Amalekites at this time thought nothing less then of their destruction to come: yet the sentence of death is pronounced against them four hundred year before, and they cannot escape the danger thereof. This was accomplished partly in Saul, 1 Sam. 15, 7, who put many of them to the mercy of the sword; partly and especially in Christ, wh^ose glorious kingdom is the utter overthrow and ruin of all the Reprobate. Thus much of the fifth prophesy against the Amalekites, whose Kingdom then flourished.

The sixth prophesy of Balaam is against the Kenites their next neighbors, bordering upon the Amalekites, of whom Jethro the father in law of Moses came, as appeareth in Judge. 1, 16. 1 Sam. 15, 16: which were part of the Midianites, by whom we may understand the Midianites themselves, one member being put for the whole, one principal family being taken for y^e whole nation. These are here described, not only by their present estate, but also by their future condition. Their present state was peaceable and prosperous, and seemed to promise a continuance of their glory, and is therefore compared to a sure nest built in a strong rock, as in a place of safety & defense. Touching their future condition, he showeth, that notwithstanding their secure dwelling & quiet habitation, and that they were without fear of danger to be hurt of the people of God, who never disturbed their peace, nor offered them wrong; yet in process of time, destruction likewise should come upon them, when once the fire of war should be kindled, and break in amongst them, to wit, in part, when Gideon with three hundred men put to flight a great host of them, but most especially when the Assyrians and Babylonians carried them captive out of their own country. For when the Assyrians came up with an army to waste Judea, and to carry away the Israelites, ranging over the land, raging with fire and sword, and wasting the neighbor-Nations, they spoiled the Kenites bordering upon the Jews; which doth verify the common Proverb, It is some evil to be near unto evil. And again, when thy Neighbors house is on fire, it is high time to look unto thine own: and teacheth us to esteem as our own, the damage of our neighbor, and to fear lest in the ruins of others, our destruction be conspired. This calamity and captivity was brought upon them by Saneherib, who coming to spoil Israel, spoiled them: and as they were carried away out of their own country together, so they returned back again into their Country together, as we read in the holy history of the 1. Chronicles, chap. 2, 53. And thus as they tasted of the same misery, so God made them partakers of the same mercy; as they were afflicted together, so also they were comforted together. Thus much of the method and meaning of these prophesies. The doctrines arising from hence are to be considered according to the several prophesies: and first touching the first, against the Moabites.

[Verse 17. I see that, but not now; I behold it, but not near: there shall come a Star out of Jacob, &c.] In this prophesy Balaam foretelleth the future condition of the Moabites, declaring both that they shall be destroyed, and by whom. For God will raise out of the contemptible stock of Jacob, a bright Star, that shall refresh the Church with his sweet influence, and give them comfort against their enemies: This we shown to be performed in the days of David afterward, therefore he saith: I see it, but not now; nor near at hand. This teacheth us, That sometimes God maketh the Church to flourish in this life. Howsoever God oftentimes bring trouble upon his Church, and affliction upon his people, yet at other times he giveth rest and peace, and continueth their prosperity a long time. This truth receiveth plentiful confirmation out of the book of Judges, chap. 3.11, 30. & 5, 31. & 8, 28: it is y^e main drift and scope of it, to show how God in the miseries thereof provideth a remedy, and giveth rest round about from all their enemies. God sometimes giveth them a time of breathing, and recovering their strength, and will not suffer the rod of the wicked always to rest on the lot of the righteous, Psalm 125, 3. We have examples of this in the reign of Solomon, Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, Josiah, and other godly Kings, which were as strong props and pillars in God's house, & a sure stay to the servants of God in well doing: he gave them an outward estate that flourished both in wealth and peace. This appeareth evidently in the book of Ester, after he had delivered them from the mouth of the Lyon that gaped as it were after his prey to devour them, the Church prospered, the head of Mordecai was exalted, comfortable letters were published and sent abroad for their safety, and unto the Jews came light, and joy, gladness, & honor. So the prophet Zechariah prophesying of their return from captivity, saith; That the streets of the City shall be full of boys & girles playing in the streets thereof, Zac. 8, 5. The book of Joshua is a notable storehouse of God's mercy unto his church, giving them rest from their enemies, as he had promised them, so that none were able to stand before them, Josh. 22, 4. And as he dealeth with his Church in general, so he doth with his servants in particular, as we see in Joseph, Moses, David, and diverse other, turning their mourning into joy, loosing their sack, and griding them with gladness.

The Reasons of this dealing of the Lord are many and most evident. First, his ears are [Reason 1] open to hear the cries of his children, he seeeth their miseries, add putteth all their tears in his bottle of remembrance. This is it which the Lord declared unto Moses when he called him to deliver his people out of the thralldom and bondage of Egypt, Exod. 2, 7. I have surely seen the trouble of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry, because of their Taske-masters: for I know their sorowes. GOD hath made a covenant of peace with his people, & hath a compassionate sense of their miseries, and a feeling of their afflictions. There is a notable agreement and union between God and his Children. They in their crosses and calamities cannot but sigh and mourn: and they cannot so soon utter a groan, but by by and by the Lord is touched with compassion. This is evidently recorded in the book of Exodus 2, 23, where it is said, The childrē of Israel sighed for the bondage, and cried: and their cry for the bondage came up to God. The prayers of the faithful prevail much with God, if they be fervent. He understandeth the words of their mouth, and the groans of the heart, and in his good time will hear them graciously.

[Reason 2] Secondly, he giveth unto his Church oftentimes a sweet taste of earthly blessings, to the end his people might have all occasions and opportunities to serve him. If they should always bear the yoke upon their necks, and have the heavy burden of affliction lying on their backs, though they were strong in faith, and had their hope fixed in GOD, yet they would be soon dismayed and discouraged, and join with the wicked, falling into the impieties of their persecutors. But God is the sun and the shield of his Church, he will give grace and glory unto it, and withhold nothing that is good from them that walk uprightly, Psal. 84, 11. He will comfort and defend them in their danger, he will exalt them to dignity after their distresses, lest they should be too much daunted and discomfited. This is the reason used by the Prophet, The rod of the wicked shall not always rest on the lot of the righteous, lest the righteous put forth their hand unto wickedness, Psal. 125, 3.

[Use 1] The uses now are to be marked and observed of us. First, acknowledge from hence with a sweet feeling, the infinite love & compassion of God toward his people: he delighteth not to be always chiding, and his anger endureth not forever. He will not have his Church to be always under the cross, but sendeth it some release: For he endureth but a while in his anger, but in his favor is life, &c. Psal. 30, 5, 6. Thus doth the Lord give encouragements and comforts unto those that faithfully serve and rightly worship him, whereby he not only testifieth his own love toward them, but allureth others by their example to trust in him, and daunteth all their enemies that hoped to have seen their destruction. Such therefore, as are not moved to confess the love of God unto his servants, and see not his kindness toward them, have frozen hearts; and show themselves unworthy of so great mercy.

[Use 2] Secondly, it showeth us that it is impossible for all the tyrants and enemies under heaven to prolong the time for the further vexation of God's people, when God hath determined the release, and appointed the end of their troubles. All the creatures of God shall help them, and work for them; yea, hasten the purpose and counsel of God. This appeared very notably in the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt. When the time of four hundred years (which God had appointed) were expired, albeit the King and his people had concluded to detain them in bondage, they were by the over-ruling hand of God moved to thrust them out of the land, yea, even to hire them at a great price to depart, giving them jewels of silver and gold, and casting upon them the most precious things that were in their possession: Pharaoh and his people forced them out of the land in hast, and whē they were hardened to follow after them, & to bring them back again, the wind wrought for them, the sea gave them passage, and GOD that ruleth both wind and sea drowned their enemies. The time of deliverance was come, and who could hinder or defer it? The like we see in the bringing of this people out of captivity and bondage in Babylon, nothing seemed more unlikely or impossible unto the Saints themselves; for when the proclamation for the return of the people was published, Psal. 126, 1, 2. the wonderfulness of the deliverance seemed so great and incomprehensible, that they could hardly persuade themselves of the truth thereof, until they saw the Gentiles speak of it, and help them forward with aid toward their country.

This serveth greatly to comfort and cheare up the hearts of the faithful, that seeing God will give rest unto his beloved people, vain are the practices of the enemies, although they band themselves together, as Herod, Pontius Pilate, and the high Priests did in the days of Christ, yet we have assurance of deliverance, they shall not always prevail, the people of God shall be preserved, and all shall work for the best for their own safety.

Thirdly, this must teach us in the time of [Use 3] our distresses, while we lie under the Cross to rely upon God, whatsoever troubles and temptations arise, although we should come to the gates of the grave, and pass by the door of death, we must lift up our heads, knowing that our deliverance draweth nere. This then serveth to work patience in the servants of God, and to teach us to wait upon him, until the time of rest and refreshing come from the presence of God, for surely it will come, as the Prophet Habbakkuk teacheth, chapt. 2. verse 3. The vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the last it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait; for it shall surely come, and shall not stay. So, when the Angel had limited the time of the desolation of the holy people, and of the deliverance of the Church, he pronounceth him blessed, that waiteth until that time, Dan. chap. 12. verses 11, 12. And when the souls of them that were killed for the Word, and the Testimony which they had maintained, cried out with a loud voice from underneath the Altar; How long, Lord, which art holy and true! Dooest not thou judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? An answer was given unto them, That they should rest for a little season, until the number of their Brethren were fulfilled, Revel. chap. 6. verse 10.

This the Prophet David showeth to have been his practice, earnestly waiting upon the Lord for help and deliverance out of all his troubles and dangers, as Psalm 123, verses 1, & 2. I lift up mine eyes unto thee, which dwellest in the heavens: Behold, even as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maid unto the hand of her mistris, so our eyes wait upon the Lord our God, until he have mercy upon us. Great are our fears and troubles, and many be our infirmities, it behooveth us greatly therefore, to cleave unto the living God without separation, and evermore continue our trust in him, and to pour out our meditations and prayers before him, until such time as he graciously look upon us, and grant our petitions; yea, it is our duty whensoever we perceive the time of our deliverance to approach, or to be expired, or any signs and tokens thereof, as the sprouting of the Fig-tree, to appear and to be offered unto us from GOD: it is our duty (I say) to raise up our faith, and to entreat God to bring his purpose to pass, and to make good the words of his own mouth. When Daniel by reading the Prophets of God, knew that the number of years appointed for the desolation of Jerusalem was expired, he turned his face to the Lord with prayer, in fasting, in weeping, in sackcloth and ashes.

[Use 4] Lastly, it is the duty of all such as lie not under the cross, to commend the common cause of their brethren to God. Hath God given us rest on every side? Do we live in ease, sitting under our Vines and Fig-trees, enjoying peace and liberty under a gracious Prince? Do we enjoy health and wealth, and taste not of the bitter cup of affliction that others drink of? It is required of us not to forget the affliction of Joseph, but to be mindful of the miseries of other parts of the Church, and to have a fellow-feeling of their sorrows, as that we be thereby provoked to call upon God for them. This the Apostle urgeth the Church of the Corinthians to think upon, 2 Corinthians, chap. 1. verse 7: that they being partakers of the suffering of the Saints, may also be partakers of the consolation. This is a duty needful to be learned and considered. We know not what troubles may fall upon our selves. There is nothing that happeneth unto any of our brethren, but it may fall upon our own heads.

Let us therefore call upon God for others, and remember them that are in trouble, as if we were troubled with them, that so we may have the benefit of other men's prayers, & be delivered when we fall into troubles. It is therefore a duty that we owe to God and our brethren, being touched with a respect of his commandment, & of their misery. His commandment should compel us, their misery should move us not to be forgetful of their condition. And from hence we should have a double meditation. First, it is our parts to praise the name of the Lord, when he giveth to our brethren, or to us, any share of this outward prosperity, and manifesteth his love unto us, by delivering our souls from death, our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling, Psalm 116, 8.14. When he causeth our houses to be inhabited, our streets to be replenished, our Cities to be stored, and great concourse of people to be assembled: it should move us to render thanks to God, to pay our vows in the presence of all his people, and to crave the continuance of his goodness upon us. This is it which the Prophet acknowledgeth, Psal. 116, 12, 13, saying; What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits towards me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord, So the Prophet setting down the behavior of the people, what it shall be, being delivered from captivity, showeth, that they shall say in that day, O Lord, I will praise thee, though thou wast angry with me, thy wrath is turned away, and thou comfortest me. Behold, God is my strength, and song: he also is become my salvation, Isaiah 12, 1, 2. Let this be our practice when we have tasted of his mercy, and have received any deliverance from him, out of our afflictions.

Secondly, we ought from hence to consider the peace and rest that God hath reserved for us in the life to come. For, they are but a shadow of that comfort which we shall feel in the kingdom of heaven, This is that which the Apostle concludeth from the rest in the land of Canaan, that there remaineth a rest for the people of God, to wit, in the kingdom of heaven, Heb. 4, 9. For, even as the punishments and plagues that befall the ungodly, w^c the Lord raineth down upon their heads, are as the messengers of death, and the fore-runners of destruction, and give unto them a taste of the pains and torments of hell: so the blessings bestowed upon the godly, are as the first fruits of all their comfort. The first fruits which the Israelites under the law offered to God, gave hope and assurance unto them, to enjoy the rest of the increase: so the faithful, having a feeling of the gifts given unto them, and receiving them as assured pledges and tokens of the favor and love of God towards them in this life, do gather hope to have the heavenly inheritance in time to come. For, if God be so gracious and merciful unto us in these days of our pilgrimage, doubtless he reserveth greater mercies for us in the life to come, when we shall possess everlasting joys which no man shall take from us, which neither the eye hath seen, nor the ear hath heard, nor the heart can conceive, when we shall really inherit that, which now by hope we wait for with much patience, 1. Cor. 2, 9.

[V. 18. A Star shall come out of Jacob, & a Scepter shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the coasts of Moab, and shall destroy all them that are behind: And Edom shall be possessed, & Seir shall be a possessiō to their enemies: for Israel shall do valiantly.] We have heard before, that the purpose of Balak and Balaam was only to curse the people of God. Here we may see upon whom the curse lighteth and falleth. Wherein see how differing the ways and thoughts of God are, from the purposes and pretences of men. The King of Moab intended a curse against Israel, and a blessing upon himself: in both which he is disappointed. For as Balaam before pronounced a blessing upon Israel, so in this place he denounceth a curse to come upon Moab. When the King perceived the continuance of Balaam's blessings to follow Israel, he bad him in choller and indignation, neither bless nor curse; he would have taken it for a blessing, if Balaam would have held his peace & said nothing. But he cannot find this nothing at his hands: for he proceedeth now to deliver sundry curses against the Moabites, as before he had delivered sundry blessings to come upon the Israelites. And hereby is notably verified the saying of the Prophet, Psal. 109, 17, 18. As he loved cursing, so shall it come to him: and as he loved not blessing, so shall it be far from him: as he clothed himself with cursing like a raiment, so shall it come into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones.

We have heard already how these things were performed, when God raised up David out of the loins of Jacob, who smote the Tabernacles of Moab, and made the Curtaines of Edom to tremble. But these things, howsoever temporally fulfilled in David and Solomon, have spiritually and forever their accomplishment and consummation in Christ Jesus, he is a King forever, and hath an euerlastaing kingdom, albeit not of this world. Therefore the Apostle saith, This man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sin, sitteth forever at the right hand of God, and from henceforth tarrieth till his enemies be made his footstool, Hebr. 10, 22, 23. He is the true star that shineth to everlasting life here spoken of, and the Scepter of his kingdom is a Scepter of righteousness, He shall be Ruler in the midst of his enemies. Psalm. 110, 2, and 45, 6. Hence it is that the Prophet Malichi calleth him the Sun of righteousness, the brightest of all the stars that shine in the Firmament, and from which all the rest borrow and receive their light, when he saith, Unto you that fear my Name, shall the Sun of righteousness arise, and health shall be under his wings, &c. Mal. 4, 2. Thus Christ speaketh of himself in many places, John 8, 12. I am the light of the world, he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but have that light of life. Thus John witnesseth, chap. 1, 5, 9. This was that true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. So Zacharias calleth him, The Day-spring from on high that hath visited us, Luke 1, 78. And the Apostle Peter, The Day-star that ariseth in our hearts, 2 Pet. 1, 19. Likewise in the last chapter of the Revelation, verse 16. he saith; I am the root and generation of David, and the bright morning Star. Now as he is the Star of Jacob to give them light, so he is the King of Jacob to rule them, through whom they shall do valiantly, and be enabled to overcome their enemies. Heereby we learn, that the Church through Christ, hath victory over spiritual enemies. The elect in Christ, shall subdue and triumph over all the enemies of their peace and salvation, both wicked mē and reprobate angels; yea, shall in Christ have power over all the world.

This promise was made from the beginning unto mankind, and uttered by the mouth of God, Gen. 3, 15. That the seed of the woman should break the serpents head; which belongeth both to Christ and unto his members. For the souereigne power of Christ is not given to the creature, but the ftuite and benefit thereof is given to the elect, and that two ways: first, he maketh all his members partakers of part of his glory in heaven, whereas the whole world besides lying in wickedness, is condemned in hell; and therefore the Apostle saith, Eph. 2, 6, We are raised up together, and made to sit together in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus. And again, The Saints shall judge the world: not giving sentence against the reprobate, but approving the sentence of Christ. For as at the day of Assi•es, the Judges being set to pronounce sentence of condemnation against malefactors, he is accompanied by the bench of Justices, as by an honorable Senate of grave Counsellors, who not only hear the giving of sentence, but are witnesses & approve•s of it; so when Christ shall come as the Judge of quick and dead, accompanied with thousands of his Angels in power and great glory, the elect set at his right hand shall first receive the sentence of absolution & then being taken up into the Clouds, shall sit upon the Throne with Christ, and there approve & allow of the just condemnation of all the wicked. 1 Cor. 6, 2. This is one great fruit & benefit of the power of Christ. Secondly, by this his power he enableth his servants to overcome in their own persons, the lusts of the world, the strength of sin, the power of the devil, the gates of hell, and all the enemies of their salvation. This the Apostle toucheth, Rom. 16, 20, saying; The God of peace shall tread Satan under your feet shortly. So the Apostle John noteth this prerogative of the faithful, 1 John 2, 14. And in another place, All that is borne of God, overcometh this world. Likewise in the Epistle written to the Church at •hyatira, Christ promiseth to them that overcome and keep his words to the end, That he will give them power over Nations, so that they shall rule them with a rod of iron &c. Revel. 2, 36.

The Reasons that may be rendered, will yet farther open unto us this point, and serve to [Reason 1] gain our affections to the embracing of it. For first, they do it by a lively faith in Christ's Name. The Apostle teacheth, that this is the victory that overcometh the world, evē our faith: Who is he that overcometh the world but he which believeth that Jesus Christ is the Son God? 1 John, chapter 5, verses 4, 5. Great is the excellency and force of faith, which leaneth and stayeth upon him that is able to do all things. All things are possible to him that believeth, saith Christ, Mar. 11, 23. Through him that strengtheneth me I am able to do all things saith the Apostle, Philip. 4, 13. In all trials and tribulations a sound faith will minister unto us comfort and consolation, and give strength to stand, an issue to escape, nay victory to overcome. Do we lose temporal and transitory things? it saith, Thou hast treasure laid up in heaven, Mat. 19, 21. Do we bear the burden of poverty? it teacheth that our Father which is in heaven knoweth whereof we have need, and what we want. Do we suffer persecution? and are we reviled for righteousness sake? it telleth us, that ours is the kingdom of heaven, and great our reward shall be in the highest place, Mat. 5, 10. Are we at the point of death, and ready to go the way of all flesh? it calleth to our remembrance, that whether we live, we live unto the Lord: or whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live or die, we are the Lord's, Ro. 14, 8 Thus by faith we overcome all things, Yea, we resist the devil being steadfast in faith, and beat back his temptations, 1 Pet. 5, 9.

[Reason 2] Secondly, we shall not doubt of the victory, or fear to be overcome, seeing that howsoever he be strong that ruleth in the world, yet he is stronger that ruleth in us. True it is, the devil goeth about like a roaring Lyon, seeking whō he may devour, and walketh in the earth too & fro to take his prey; yet the Lyon of y^e Tribe of Judah, that victorious Lion, hath broken his kingdom, hath gloriously triumphed over him, and gotten the victory. This is that reason which the Apostle expresseth, 1 John. 4, 4, declaring that he is in us by whom we overcome; Little children, ye are of God, and have overcome them: for greater is he that is in you thē he that is in this world. Here we see he comforteth the elect with a sure hope of victory, not thorough our own power, but thorough the power of God who is greater then all. It was a great comfort to Elishaes servant, 2 Kin. 6, 3, 16, to hear that they that were with them, were moe in number then they that were against them: but this giveth greater assurance, that he that ruleth in us is greater then he that ruleth in the children of disobedience, of whō Christ saith, My Father which gave them me, is greater then all, and none is able to take them out of my fathers hand, John 10, 29.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, we are partakers of his anointing, he is our head, and we his members: he is the root, and we are the branches: so that every believer may truly say, I am Christ's, & Christ is mine: even as the Spouse speaketh in Solomon's song, cha. 6, 2. I am my welbeloueds, & my well-beloved is mine, who feedeth among the Lilies. It is a near conjunction, nay, the nearest conjunction that is, between Christ & his church. The society of parents and children is great, of masters and servants, as part of one household; likewise the society of brethren, sisters, and kindred. The union and fellowship between man and wife is greater then these: yet the conjunction between Christ & his church exceedeth all other, and is preferred above all other societies, whereby we are made not only the friends and brethren of Christ, but we are made one with him, and he with us, we are become members of his body, and made flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bones. An heavenly, an holy, a comfortable, and most sweet fellowship: Hence it is that the Apostle saith, We have an ointment from that Holy one, and know all things necessary to eternal life, 1 John. 2, 20. As he is the King and Priest of his Church, so he maketh us spiritual Kings and Priests to God his Father: so that his victory and power (as we noted before) is communicated unto us, & being engrafted into him, is made ours.

The Uses are now to be handled as conclusions [Use 1] drawn out of this doctrine. First, this layeth before our eyes, or rather before our hearts, the great dignity of all true Christians, they are victorious conquerors in Christ, and all the wicked are indeed, and shall be manifested at the last day to be their base vassalles and contemptible slaves; yea so is Satan, hell, and death, all which shall be trodden under foot, as dung and dirt in the streets. The godly, that have Christ both dwelling and reigning in them, are with Abraham the true heirs of the world, and shall with Christ their Captain break the wicked into sheards like a potters vessel, Psal, 2, 9. We see how men admire the proud and haughty of the world, and esteem the ungodly as the great Magnificoes, that may not be contemned or controlled: the poorest and meanest Saint of God, shall in time to come be their Judge, & sit with Christ upon the bench in glory, when they shall stand as their vassals at the bar, and be judged as most wretched caitiffes and malefactors, and receive their wages according to their works. Then they shall say with horror of conscience, We fools thought their life madness, & their end without honor, but now they are counted among the children of God, and have their portion among his Saints. Hence it is, that the Apostle reproveth the Corinthians that abased and abused their dignity, that did bring their causes to be tried and judged before the wicked, Do ye not know that the Saints shall judge the world? If then the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters, &c? 1 Cor. 6. verses 2, 3. This is a great honor vouchsafed to the faithful: no earthly honor can be compared unto it, all temporal glory hath not so much as a show or shadow of it. On the other side, great shall be the dishonor and disgrace, the shame and contempt y^t shall be poured out upon the ungodly, Dan. 12, 2. They have here the riches of the world, the pleasures of this life, the praise of men; they are feared of some, and flattered of others: but when this glory shall pass away as the wind, and fly as an arrow that is shot at a mark, then they shall be arraigned as evil doers, and every servant of God shall tread them under their feet. Then they shall be separated from the presence of God. Then they shall see all the godly whom they have scorned and derided, received into the kingdom of heaven, and themselves shut out of the doors. Then they shall have the continual fellowship of the devil and of his angels in hell fire, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

[Use 2] Secondly, we must all be careful to walk worthy of so great a calling. We must be as spiritual Kings, to rule and bear sway over our thoughts, wills, and affections, ouermastering them as much as may be, proclaiming continual war against our corrupt natures, against the devil, and against the world. And verily, he that can bear rule over his own heart, is a true king indeed, and shall surely reign for evermore with Christ in the life to come. He that hath beaten down the kingdom of sin and Satan, and received some measure of grace to reign over himself, hath performed a greater and more glorious work then he that hath subdued a kingdom. For all these enemies of our salvation, be horrible & hideous monsters, and fearful Serpents. Their sting is deadly, their poison is mortal. It is an hard labor to pull out their sting, and take away their poison from them. But they which are carried away with the swinge of their corruptions, as with a violent stream, having blindness & ignorance to reign in their minds, rebellion in their wills, and looseness in their whole life, are not spiritual kings, but base slaves and bondmen. The strong man Satan keepeth the hold of their hearts, and as Lord and King setteth up his scepter there. Wherefore (my brethren) in respect of this our high calling, we must make conscience of every sin. We heard before that we are made the judges of the world. It is a shame for a Judge to be a Thief, that sitteth in judgment to condemn a thief: so is it a shame for us to be given to wickedness, that must judge the wicked world when the just shall appear. A Judge must take heed of those sins in himself, which he must condemn in others, lest it be said unto him, Thou which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? Rom. 2, 21, 22. This is that use which the Apostle maketh to the Thessalonians, chap. 1, 10, 11, after he had shown that at the coming of the Lord Jesus in might and majesty, he would be glorious in his Saints, & made marvelous in them that believe, he entreateth that God would make them to walk worthy of their calling. And surely, if we have any the least spark of grace, or any feeling of our natural condition when we were the children of wrath and the fire-brands of hell, it could not but work in us a marvelous love unto God, a desire to please him, and a delight to bring forth the fruits of righteousness.

Thirdly, our victory in Christ offereth comfort [Use 3] unto us in all troubles, temptations, poverty, and in death it self. We are to arm our selves with this power of Christ against all terrors and fears that seek to dismay us. We are in Christ appointed Kings and Judges over those that trouble us, conquerors over Satan and death. Our fear then is already past, let us lift up our heads, and be of good comfort. This is that which the Apostle is bold to put us in mind of, 1 Cor. 15, 56, 57. O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory! Now thanks be unto God, who hath given us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. We shall not need to fear the day of judgment, for then our redemption draweth nere. We shall not need to be afraid of the coming of the Judge, for he shall be our Savior. Howsoever therefore we seem base unto the world, and of vile account in the eyes of carnal men, whose portion is in this life, yet we are indeed advanced into the highest honor about him, receiving by our communion and fellowship with him, a communication of his kingly power and glory, to subdue under us the devil and his angels. For, if we fight with him, and under his banner, we cannot lose the field, but shall be assured to reign with him. They then are deceived that think them the scum and off-scouring of the world. This should also persuade all careless and backward persons to embrace true Religion, and give it the chief seat in their hearts, forasmuch as it maketh them of the vesselles of wrath, and vassals of Satan, glorious Kings, and triumphant Conquerors over the powers of darkness. Furthermore, it should encourage the Ministers of the Gospel, and make them glad to labor in preaching the Word, and in winning souls unto God, being set apart by God's mercies, to consecrate men Kings and Priests unto him, which is a great privilege. For they have mighty weapons given them by their captain Christ, to wit, the power of his Spirit, and the vigor of his mighty word, which causeth them to prevail. Therefore, the Lord saith by his Prophet Hosea, chap. 6, 5. I have cut down this people by the Prophets, & slain them by the words of my mouth. And the Apostle teacheth, 2 Cor. 10, 5, 6, That the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to cast down holds. To conclude this use, seeing God hath thus advanced us, let not us disgrace our selves, but maintain our dignity, and adorn our profession, that we may find comfort by it in our chastisements and afflictions.

[A Star shall come out of Jacob.] We have seen in the former Doctrine the glory of the Church, that the people of God are set apart by Christ, to be spiritual Kings unto GOD the Father: a dignity given to them by him. Now, before we pass from this place, let us consider of the title that is given unto Christ, where we see he is compared to a Star, and called a Star that shall come out of Jacob. This Star we have shown typically to signify Christ, who is called the Light of the world, the Sun of righteousness, the morning star, the day-spring from on high. He is called by this name, and described by this title, First, because he is the fountain of all salvation and comfort. Secondly, to teach that all men by nature walk in darkness, and in the shadow of death. Thirdly, because he will give those that are his, y^e light of knowledge in this life, and the light of perfect glory in the life to come, by which they shall be as stars of heaven, and shine in the firmament afterward.

Heereby we learn, that Christ Jesus is as the morning star unto us, bestowing upon his people two excellent privileges & blessings; First, he riseth up as a bright star in our hearts, casting from the the thick clouds of blindness, and taking away the dark mists of ignorance, enlightening them with the true saving knowledge of God, sufficient for salvation, begun here in this life, but shall be perfected in the life to come. Secondly, he will bestow upon us the light of perfect glory in the kingdom of his Father, by y^e which we shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars forever & ever. These are two unspeakable mercies, vnprizable, unmatchable, to be delivered out of the kingdom of ignorance, and to be brought into the kingdom of light; to be glorified in heaven, and to be made partakers of eternal life. So then, we see by this comparison, that by Christ we have the light of understanding, & shall have the glory of immortality to know God even as we are known. Touching the first clause, that he will manifest all the mysteries of God unto his Church, the Prophet Joel foretellet, chap. 2, 28, That he will pour out of his Spirit upon all flesh, their sons & daughters shall prophesy, their old men shall dream dreams, and their young men shall see visions, they shall be all taught of God, and they shall know him from the least to the greatest. So our Savior saith to his Disciples, Math. 13, 12. To you it is given to know the secrets of the kingdom of heaven. Now (saith the Apostle) we see as in a glass darkly, but then we shall see face to face: now I know in part, but then shall I know as I am known. 1 Cor. 13, 12. Touching the second clause, that the faithful shall receive the light of perfect glory after this life, the Prophet Daniel witnesseth, That they which be wise, shall shine as the brightness of the Firmament, and they that turn many unto righteousness, shall shine as the stars forever and ever.•an. 12, 3. The performance hereof is remembered, where thousand thousands out of every nation, kindred, and tongue, praise the Lamb, for that he hath made them. Kings and Priests to reign over the earth.

[Reason 1] The truth of all this will yet better appear unto us, if we mark the Reasons. First, Christ hath received a fullness of the Spirit and graces without measure, that they might flow unto all his members, who receive from him grace for grace, sufficient for their places in the Church here, and for their salvation afterward. For in him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, as a Fountain that is without bottom, which can never be drawn dry. Col. 2, 3. Therefore the Evangelist saith, That of his fullness we all receive, and grace for grace. John 1, 16. So then Christ is full of heavenly graces, and spiritual gifts, that we might be anointed by him, and receive our portion frō him. For he obtained them, not to keep them to himself, or to cover them under a bushel, but to bestow them upon his Church So long as he is full, we need not fear to be empty, so long as he is stored, we cannot be destitute. If once we depart from him, it is in vain to look for one drop elsewhere.

Secondly, he hath obtained by prayer of [Reason 2] his Father (who can deny him nothing) that from him we should receive the light of glory, because as he is joined to the Father, and one with him so we shall be joined to him & receive of his glory. Here we know in part, and prophesy in part, and all good things are imperfect: but when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part and imperfect shall be done away, 1 Cor. 13, 10: for as he being Mediator between God and man hath received of the Father, so shall we receive of the Father being in him. This he speaketh to his Father, John. 17.22, 23. The glory which thou gavest me, I have given thē, that they may be one as we are one I in them, and thou in me; that they may be made perfect in one, and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me. Christ is the band or knot of the union between God and us: for in him the Mediator, heaven and earth is as it were joined together; which otherwise could not be, So then, when he shall appear, we shall appear with him, clothed with righteousness, and clothed with his glory, which he also received to make us partakers of.

Thirdly, such as keep his words, they love [Reason 3] Christ; and they that love Christ, are beloved of him and of his Father, so that he will show himself unto them, and withhold no good thing from them. This Christ our Savior setteth down, John 14, 21.

The uses of this title given to Christ, being [Use 1] called the star of Jacob, are diverse. First, this teacheth us that they have no property nor interest in this Star, either touching the light of saving knowledge, or the brightness of heavenly glory, that live in blindness and ignorance, that follow the works of darkness, delight in sinful pleasures, and lead a loose and lewd life. If we have no light of Christ shining in our hearts, & scattering the blackness of darkness from our souls, and yet look to receive any comfort or refreshing from him, when this Sun of righteousness shall appear in glory, we are utterly deceived, and shall be disappointed of our hope. Let us not look for any consolation from him, but woe and confusion of faces. This our Savior teacheth in the Gospel, John 3, 19. This is the condemnation, that light came into the world and men loved darkness rather than that light, because their deeds were evil. It must needs be a strange darkness that cannot be driven away by the beams of this bright shining. It must be a very gross and willful blindness, where the continual light of the Gospel proceeding from the loving face of Christ the Sun of righteousness, hath wrought no knowledge nor profit in the ways of godliness. The Apostle in this respect, saith, If our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost, in whom the god of this world hath blinded the mind, that is, of the Infidels, that the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, which is the Image of God, should not shine unto them. Christ the Sun of righteousness hath appeared, and shined gloriously in this part of the earth; and yet (alas) how many are there stark blind, and willingly blind, even under the ministry of the most painful servants of God, that labor in the Lord's vineyard, and spend their strength to give light to others? If a man hearing the voice of a trumpet, yet will stop his ears, or having the light of the day, yet will shut fast his eyes, this is a willful ignorance, and a presumptuous sin that shall increase their judgment and condemnation. This doth our Savior teach, John 15, 12. If I had not come and spoken unto them, they should not have had sin: but now have they no cloak for their sin. The Prophets prophesying of the times of the Gospel, and of the people that should believe in Christ, declare (as we noted before) that God would pour out his Spirit upon all flesh, that all should be taught of God, that the earth should be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters do cover the sea. What shall we say of these things? The palpable ignorance and horrible blindness which is seen in the world, showeth plainly, that we are not that people. The Prophet telleth us what readiness and forwardness should be in men to come into God's house for increase of knowledge, to be instructed in his will, and to walk in his ways, that they should say one to another, Up, let us go and pray before the Lord, let us seek the Lord of Hosts, and I will go also. Zach. 8, 21. We are far from this zeal, and from encouraging one another in good things, and therefore the blessings of God do stand far from us also. So then, we see such as live in ignorance and sin, are darkness, and have no communion with Christ; for what fellowship can there be between light and darkness?

[Use 2] Secondly, we must all have a special care that this Star may rise in our hearts, & that the Sun of righteousness may rejoice and refresh us. Now the right way to have him with a gracious aspect to shine upon us, is for us to regard and give heed to the lesser lights, the candle-lights, or star-lights, which are fore-runners of this star, to wit, the light of the Prophets, of the Apostles, and other servants of God, which are appointed to direct us in the course of our life, and to point out unto us this light. So the Apostle saith, Ye have a sure word of the Prophets, unto which ye shall do well to give heed as unto a light that shineth in dark places, until the day dawn, and the Day-star arise in your hearts, 2 Pet. 1, 19. And our Savior calleth his Disciples the light of the world, and a City set upon an hill. John the Baptist was a burning and a shining Candle, John 5, 35. They that will not follow these lights, nor seek to be guided by these stars, shall never feel the comfort of this Star of Jacob. So thē, these places of the world, where those lesser lights have no entertainment, or where by the malice of the people they are removed, or their lights put out, are most wretched and miserable. The people are said in the Prophet to have walked in darkness, Isaiah 9, 2. Math. 4, 13. and to have dwelled in the land of the shadow of death, before these lights shined on them. So long as Israel was without a preaching Priesthood to deliver unto them the Law of God, so long they were without God and his word, 2 Chron. 15, 3. So long as they wanted these Stewards of the Lord's house, to give them their portion of meat in due season, they endured a grievous famine of the soul, and perished for want of food. It standeth us therefore upon, to rejoice in these lights, and to be glad when these stars begin to shine among us, they are the joy and solace of the earth, howsoever they be basely esteemed off in the world, and reproached by them that love darkness more then light, because their ways are evil, John 3, 20, 21: for every man that evil doth, hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reprov'd; but he that doth truth, cometh to the light, that his deeds might be made manifest, that they are wrought according to God. The Galatians did so affect Paul, that they would have pulled out both their lights (to wit) their eyes to do him good, Gal. 4, 15. But the practice of our times, and the lamentable experience of our days, showeth the contrary; men seek by all ways and devices they can, to dim and darken these lights, by greeuing and vexing them, by disgracing and slandering them, by molesting and troubling of them, by discouraging and discountenancing of them, that so they might hinder the building of the Lord's house. If these men were asked the question, whether they would have Christ shine in their hearts, and arise as a bright star, to scatter the cloudy mists of their unbelieving minds, no doubt they would answer, it is their desire, and that they find more use of the light of Christ in their souls, then of the shining of the Sun in the Firmament; and yet so long as they do not use those means whereby the beams of this Star of Jacob may shine upon them, they make it manifest, they regard not the Star it self. And therefore let no man flatter himself, that he regardeth the Gospel, or Christ the bringer of the glad tidings of salvation, when they will not open their ears to the Gospel preached, by such as Christ hath appointed over us.

[Use 3] Lastly, we must take heed we be not deceived in judging of this light. For many imagine they have the light of this Sun of righteousness, and of this star of Jacob, whē they have but a false light. True it is, Christ is in himself, & of himself always a light, howsoever he be received: albeit men shut their eyes, and will not see his brightness, yet remaineth he the light of the world. For the Sun shineth in the firmament, howsoever some are blind, and cannot see, and others might see, yet make themselves blind. Therefore the Prophet I say saith, chap. 60.1, 2, 19. Arise, O Jerusalem; be bright, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee: thou shalt have no more Sun to shine by day, neither shall the brightness of the Moon shine unto thee: for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy sorrow shall be ended. When the Sun which is called the eye of the world, and is the light of the day, riseth upon us, and cometh toward us, it doth quicken and rejoice us, it causeth life & fruit to appear in those creatures which seemed to be dead & dry before: so if this Day-star do truly rise up in our hearts, it will not only enlighten our understanding, but so heat our frozen and dead hearts, as that it will put the life of righteousness into us, and make us walk as children of light, that need not be ashamed who mark their steps and behold their ways. Therefore the Apostle speaketh to everyone of us, that considering the season, it is now time that we should arise from sleep, for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed it: the night is past, & the day is at hand, let us therefore cast away the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light, walking honestly as in the day, not in gluttony and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying, Rom. 13, 11, 12. We have here a notable direction how to know whether this star be risen upon us or not. If he have wrought these effects & fruits in us, if by the bright beams of his Spirit, & sweet influence of his grace, he hath cast out of our minds the dark clouds of ignorance and blindness, and caused us to see what the acceptable will of God is, if he have sanctified us by the holy Ghost, whereby the kingdom of sin is every day more and more suppressed, and we reformed according to the Image of God, to serve him in holiness & true righteousness; if these things be in some measure in us, we may be well assured, that this star of Jacob hath shined upon us. But if these things be not wrought and effected in us, but that we remain still in our sins and ignorances, we have no part in Christ, we have no portion in this Sun of righteousness. He hath never entered into our hearts, his beams of grace and mercy have never shined upon us, we are still holden under the dominion of darkness, and in the condemnation of him who is the Prince of darkness, to wit, the devil. Therefore the Apostle exhorteth all of us, Awake thou that sleepest, and stand up from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light: walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, because the days are evil. Ephes chapt. 5, verse 14. And the same Apostle in another place saith, If any man be in Christ he is a new creature, 2 Cor. 5, 17. If ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, cast off the old man which is corrupt, and put on the new man which after God is created unto righteousness and true holiness. Eph 4, 21, 22. Let us all remember this truth, and no more deceive our own souls in persuading our selves to be in Christ, when as yet we never tasted of his Spirit, nor were made partakers of his heavenly graces.

[Verse 20. And when he looked on Amalek, he uttered his Parable, and said, Amalek was the first of the Nations, &c.] Hitherto we have spoken of the Prophecy of Balaam against the Moabites:

now followeth his prophesy against the Amalekites in these words, which is the fifth in number, and the second among them that concern the heathen that were not of Israel; wherein we have already seen in what sense the Amalekites are called the first of the Nations, not that simply they were first of all people, for they came of Esau, as Moses witnesseth, Gen. 36, 16: but because they were the first that fought against Israel, after they were come out of the Land of Egypt, & therefore should be themselves destroyed. In setting down this practice of y^e Amalekites, we find it warranted, that wars in the world have been ancient among men. To gather armies, and to muster men to battle, is no new device, but an old and ancient practice among the sons of men. In the tenth chapter of the book of Genesis, verse 9, Nimrod began to be mighty upon the earth, and is said to be a mighty hunter before the Lord the beginning of his kingdom was Babel. And in the 14, chap. we have mention of two armies, one raised by Chedor-laomer and his confederates the other by the Kings of Sodom and Gomorrhah; these rebelling, the other punishing their rebellion, between whom was a cruel battle fought. This we see in the sons of Jacob, raising a force against the Sheehemites, under the conduct of Simeon & Levi, who were the firebrands of war, and the trumpets of sedition; they came upon them on a sudden, and slew all the maies among them, and after this violence offered unto their persons, they spoiled the City. We shall not need to stand further upon this point, the books of Joshua & of Judges, the books of the Kings and of the Chronicles, together with lamentable experience of all ages and times, confirm this to have been a common practice among men of old, to raise war one against another, and to try their causes and quarrels by the dint of the sword.

The Reasons hereof are not hard to find. [Reason 1] For first, howsoever men are carried headlong with rage and revenge one against another, yet the devil is the bellows to kindle the coals, who was a murderer and a man-slayer from the beginning, as our Savior speaketh unto the Jews, John 8, 44. Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do; he hath been a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. This he declareth to the Church of the Smyrnians, That it should come to pass, that the devil shall cast some of them into prison, Reu. 2, 10: and afterward, chap. 12, 17, it is said, The dragon was wrath with the woman, & went and made war with the remnant of her seed which keep the Commandments of God. This is it that Michaiah spake to Ahab, Who shall entice Ahab that he may go and fall at Ramoth Gilead? Then there came forth a spirit, and stood before the Lord, and said, I will entice him, 1 Kings 22, 20. Seeing then the devil is the stirrer of division, and the kindler of contention between man and man, and between kingdom and kingdom, no marvel if waging of war, & effusion of blood be derived from him, as frō the principal and chief cause.

Secondly, sin is so ugly a monster, that it [Reason 2] hath separated us from God, and disordered all the affections of men, and made them envious, cruel, bloody, covetous, ambitious, and treacherous one against another: as great love as among Wolves, as great mercy as among Lions. This the Apostle setteth down, Titus 3, 3. And to the very self same purpose the Apostle James speaketh in the fourth chapter, verse 1. From whence are wars and contentions among you? Are they not hence, even of your pleasures that fight in your members? By the law of creation we were created to abide in a fellowship with God, and in an union one with another. But when sin brake in, we fell from God, and one from another, into all misery.

Thirdly, the wise God disposeth all things [Reason 3] by his providence, and turneth the actions of men to set forth his glory, the glory of his mercy in preserving of the good, and the glory of his justice in overthrowing of the ungodly. True it is, among all the works of men, nothing seemeth so vnbrideled and unlimited as war: yet it is ordered and determined of God, so that not a Sparrow falleth unto the ground without the will of our heavenly Father. This is noted in the holy history touching the rough answer of Rehoboam, whereby the ten Tribes revolted from the house of David, and bloody wars continued between them: where it is said, It was the ordinance of God, that the Lord might perform his saying which he had spoken by the Prophets, 2 Chron. 10, 15. and 11, 1. So the people are provoked both to praise the Lord for the avenging of the cause of his servants, by destroying their enemies, and preserving them alive, Judge. 5, 2, 21. and to acknowledge his justice in overthrowing and consuming all their adversaries, Josh. 1, 5. Numb. 31, 1, 2. insomuch that there was no man able to withstand them.

The uses are now to be made of this Doctrine. [Use 1] First, seeing wars carry an ancient stamp upon them, that in all times man hath risen against man, nation against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and as mighty hunters, have chased and pursued one another to death: let us not marvel when we hear of wars, and of rumors of wars, nor be dismayed when we perceive people in fury carried like wild beasts one against another; these things should not seem strange unto us, neither need we to admire them as y^e wonders of the world. Rather it behooveth us to enter into this meditation, to consider that iniquity doth abound, & that the charity of many waxeth cold. For the more these stirs, tumults, and insurrections do increase & gather strength, the more doth charity decay, & the fruits of love languish and pine away among us, and the more ought we to be prepared for the approaching of the second coming of Christ to judgment. Then will he make an end of all division and contention that are now sorife and common in the world.

Secondly, seeing the mischief of war hath [Use 2] been from old, not lately bred as a new birth, but the child of former times, say not the old times are better then these, grow not wanton & weary of things present, to loathe the blessings we do enjoy, as the manner of many men is. We complain that we are fallen into evil times, we praise the days that are past, & consider not we murmur against God, who hath made all things good, & governeth all things well. Such is the impatiency of men at the feeling of present calamities, that they are ready to break out into a mutiny and murmuring against him, upon whom they lay the cause of heavy and hard times. The present state of things is grievous, because present troubles are nearly felt, and former discommodities are forgotten long ago. This we see notably expressed unto us in the example of the Israelites, whose present condition was loathed, and that past was desired: they cried out, the former times are better, would God we were again in the Land of Egypt, where we sate by the flesh-pots, whē we eat bread our bellies full, Exod. 16; 3. Numb. 26, 3, and 11, 5, & 21, 5: we remember the fish that we did eat for naught, the Cucumbers, the Pepons, the Leekes, the Onyons, and the Garlike. But they had forgotten the fiery furnace, and making of Brick, they had forgotten the drowning of their Infants, and the hard task-masters that were set over thē, they remembered not their service & sore labor with all manner of burdens, and bondage, and cruelty, insomuch that they uttered many sighs and groans, & grew weary of their lives. And thus it is with many of us, though former times were more lamentable, yet the present are more loathed. How many are there that commend the days already past, and magnify the times of the forefathers? then all things were cheap, then all things were plentiful, now all these are dear and hard to come by. These are like those Idolaters that Jeremiah complaineth of in his prophesy, that said, We will burn Incense to the host of heaven, as we have done, we and our fathers, for then had we plenty of victuals, & were well, & felt none evil: but since we left off to burn Incense to the heavenly bodies, and to pour out drink-offerings unto them, we have had scarcenes of all things, and have been consumed by the sword, and by the famine Jeremiah 44, verse. 17, 18. Thus do many of the men of our times; they esteem religion by the back and belly, and measure the truth of GOD by the line of their own making, to wit, by feeding and filling of the body, But we must consider, that plenty and dearth, war and peace, sickness and health, are sent of God, and acknowledge them to be his works, who is constrained for the abuse of his blessings, and the contempt of his word to take them from us, and to scourge us with his rods to bring us to repentance. This is that use which Solomon teacheth in his Ecclesiastes, chapter 7, 11, 12. Be not thou of an hasty spirit, to be angry, for anger resteth in the bosom of fools: Say not thou, why is it that the former days were better then these? For thou shouldst not enquire wisely of this thing. What sins break out in these last days, that were not in the former? Were not hatred, malice, envy, murder, debate, whoredom, adultery, idolatry, sedition, covetousness, pride, treason, and such devilish practices and inventions in all ages from the beginning? When Adam had but two sons borne unto him, was not one of them a murderer? Did not Cain hate his brother and slay him? And did not his posterity fill up the measure of their sins, and make the earth to stink with their unsavory works of darkness in the nostrils of God, that he was constrained to wash them away with an universal flood? We must therefore search into the true causes of evils, and not falsely accuse the times, but lay the fault upon them that live in the times. If we would grow better, the times also would become much better. But so long as men's manners are deformed, the times cannot be reformed and amended. Thus then we see, that the confusion of war hath been of old, and therefore they no better; so that it behooveth us to be contented with those things which presently we enjoy, and not to break out blasphemously against God, and ignorantly against the times.

[Use 3] Lastly, seeing the rage of men to join in battle, & meet in hostile manner in the field hath been of great antiquity, let us all consider, that as wars have been of old, so they may come again we know not how soon. Though we seem now to live secure without danger of enemies, or fear of war, yet the miseries of a cruel war, and the looseness of a secure peace, may suddenly meet together. It standeth us in hand to give GOD the praise, that hath sent us peace, and made us to dwell in safety. How many of our brethren do see, and have seen many pitiful spectacles, & felt many woeful mischiefs this way? The butchering of men, the ryoting with women, the ruining of families and noble houses, & the utter sacking of Cities and Kingdoms? Let not us promise to our selves any security, let us not dream of perpetual peace & tranquility, and so lull our selves asleep with deceitful hope. There is nothing that hath been, that may not be again. There is a time to love, and a time to hate: a time of war, and a time of peace. If God send this scourge among us, the Cities full of people are made solitary, being quickly wasted and made desolate. Let us be thankful to God for the days of our peace, and pray to him to give us grace to use our peace aright, lest he draw the glittering sword vpō us. For if he bring the sword upon a Land, and say, Sword, go through the Land, and destroy both man and beast out of it, Ezek. 14, 17. (as we, our fathers, and our posterity, are at his commandment) it is nothing for him to make havoc among us, and to work out a plentiful desolation.

[Amalek was the first of the Nations, but his latter end shall come to destruction.] We have spoken already of the former part of these words touching the Amalekites invading of Israel, and making war against them, the history whereof we read in the book of Exodus, chap. 17, verse 16. Now we are to consider the latter part, wherein we may behold the recompense of their work, and how God retailleth the invasion of his people. They sought to destroy Israel, themselves shall be brought to destruction. They drew the sword, themselves are threatened to perish with the sword. That which themselves work, they are constrained to suffer at the hands of other: so that with the same that they do offend, they are punished.

From hence we learn, that God oftentimes plagueth men in those things and by those things wherein they have sinned and offended. God avengeth and punisheth in the same kind and measure as men provoke him. We have a notable example hereof in Adoni-bezek, Judge. 1, 6, a proud, insolent, and bloody minded man, he is served as he served others, he had the thumbs of his hands, and of his feet cut off, as he had served the seventy kings which he took in battle. This it is which Samuel said to Agag one of the Kings of these Amalekites that now we speak of 1 Sam. 15, 33. As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among other women, and so he hewed him in pieces before the Lord. David defiled his neighbors wife, the hand of God did so follow him, that his own wives were defiled by his own son in the sight of all Israel, 2 Sam. 12, 11. We read how Ahab shed Naboth's blood to obtain his vineyard, which he refused to sel unto him: but the Prophet was sent unto him with an heavy message, saying; Thus saith the Lord, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth, shall dogs lick even thy blood also, 1 Kings 21, 19, 23. and also of Jezebel the worker of all this mischief, spake the Lord, saying; The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the wall of Izreel. He slew Naboth's children, & his own sons were slain. He took possession of the vineyard, but he lost his own kingdom. The wicked man (saith David in the Psalms) hath made a pit, and digged it for his brother, and is fallen into it himself, he prepared a sword to kill his neighbor, and it entered into his own heart, Psal. 7, 13, 15. So the Prophet speaking of Babel, the ancient enemy of the Church, denounceth this just retribution of God, Woe to thee that spoilest, and wast not spoiled: and dost wickedly, and they did not wickedly against thee: when thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled, when thou shalt make an end of doing wickedly, they shall do wickedly against thee, Isaiah 33, 1. And this truth is verified, not only by these examples, but by continual experience. The extortioner and cruel dealing man is oftentimes in his posterity eaten out & consumed by the extortioner. Psal. 109, 13. The Gamester making game his delight, and his pleasure his God, is snared in his own ways, so that gaming is his ruin. The drunkard many times perisheth in his drunkenness, and is brought to an untimely death, sometimes by the immediate hand of God, sometimes by dropsies and other diseases. The unjust and wrongful dealer hath that which he devoured, drawn out of his bowels, and is made by the hand of God to vomit it up again The covetous man that joineth house to house, & land to land, that heapeth up living and riches by fraud and oppression to his destruction, is made as a sponge, which when it is full, and hath soaked up what it can, is crushed and wrung out to nothing. The unclean liver, and filthy fornicator, hath his strength consumed, his substance wasted, his flesh eaten, and the marks of his beastly uncleanness set upon him by the revenging hand of God, to his perpetual shame, infamy, reproach, and confusion. The like we might say in all other sins, God doth most commonly make every man's sin his bane, his poison, his fall, his woe, his destruction and utter ruin, verifying that which Solomon speaketh, Prov. 1, 31, and 26, 27. They shall eat the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices: he that digs a pit shall fall therein, and he that rolleth a stone, it returns upon him.

The Reasons follow. First, God is a just [Reason 1] God, he is the common Judge, even the Judge of all the world, who hath said, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, and therefore his justice doth effect it, and bring it to pass. This the Apostle declareth, It is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you, 2. Thess. 1, 6. So the Prophet teacheth, Hab. 1, 13. That he is of pure eyes, and cannot see evil, nor behold wickedness to allow or approve it.

Secondly, it is most agreeable to the precise [Reason 2] rule of equity, that there should be a proportion between the sin and the punishment, that everyone should receive like for like, and drink such as he hath brewed. God commandeth it to the Magistrate, as a law in his proceedings, that there should be an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, hand should go for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe, and life for life. If God impose this upon Magistrates, much more will he himself do it. He that requireth equity in Judges and Magistrates, will much more show himself just and equal. This is it which the Lord enjoineth touching spiritual Babylon, Revel. 18, 6, and 16, 5, 6, and 13, 10. Reward her as she rewardeth you, and give her double according to her works: and in the cup that she hath filled to you, fill her double. &c. So then, whether we consider the justice of God, or the rule of equity, we see that God punisheth as man sinneth, he rewardeth according to the manner and measure of his offense.

The uses follow to be considered. Will [Use 1] God thus repay and retaile? Then let everyone look to have his sin brought upon his own head, and to be rewarded fully, according to his own works. The equity of this is acknowledged of Job, chap. 31, 9, 10. If my heart have been deceived by a woman, or if I had laid wait at the door of my neighbor, let my wife grind to another, and let other men bow down upon her. The like we may say of all other sins; look not to escape the hand of God, but fear to commit sin being thus punished. Hast thou been a bloody beast? look for blood again. Hast thou been cruel? Cruelty & extortion shall both wring and waste thee. He that smiteth with the sword, shall perish with the sword: there shall be judgment merciless, to them that are without mercy. On the other side, in doing good, and exercising love to others, look for love and good from God and man. This made Nehemiah pray to God to remember him in kindness, according to all that he had done to his people. Neh. 5, 19. This made the Apostle crave mercy at y^e hands of the merciful God for Onesiphorus, because he shown mercy unto him, and refreshed him in his necessity, 2 Tim. chap. 1, verse 16. The widow of Sarepta, sustaining the Prophet, & relieving him with part of that poor pittance that was left her, received an ample recompense, during the time of the famine to her and her son, being miraculously sustained, 1. Kings 17, 14. Obadiah fed an hundred Prophets of the Lord, and hid them in caves from the wrath of Jezebel, the Lord shown mercy unto him again, so that he was the first that had the Prophet directed unto him to reveal the removing of the present judgment from the land. So then the consideration of this dealing of God against sinners, is a terror to the ungodly, teaching us to avoid sin, and the dangerous society of sinful men, lest partaking of their sins, we partake also with them in the punishment, Ierem. 51, 6. And likewise serveth as a great comfort to the godly, assuring them to find the fruit of their love, and to receive mercy at his hands, who leaveth not a morsel of bread, and a cup of cold water, given in faith out of an heart unfeigned, unrewarded.

Secondly, it justifieth GOD in his actions, [Use 2] and proveth that there is no iniquity with our God. This doth Elihu set down upon this consideration, He will render unto man according to his work, and cause everyone to find according to his way. And certainly, God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty pervert judgment, Job 34, 11, 12. So then, the Lord bringeth his judgments in this manner to pass, that the mouth of the wicked should be compelled to justify God, and to condemn himself, when he receiveth measure for measure, as he hath done. When Judah had overcome Adonibezek, and had cut off the thumbs of his hands and feet, he did acknowledge it to be just, and that the hand of God had found him out, and repaid him according to his deserts; for (saith he) Seventy Kings having the thumbs of their hands and feet cut off, gathered bread under my table: as I have done, so GOD hath rewarded me: so they brought him to Jerusalem, and there he died, Judge. 1, 7. GOD suffereth them long to escape, and to run on in their evil actions, but in the end he repayeth them; and rather in their own kind, then in another, that it might appear to be his handy work, and not a matter that fell out by chance or casualty upon them, So doth the Church rejoice, that the Lord had done unto them as they thought and intended to do unto the Church.

[Use 3] Thirdly, we are in this respect and consideration, to wait for the performance of this promise, and to look with faith and patience for the justice of GOD in recompensing and rewarding the wicked, with the like to fall upon themselves wherewith they have plagued his people. We see this duty performed by the servants of GOD in the Prophet Isaiah before remembered: for having declared that the spoyler shall be spoiled, and the destroyer shall be destroyed, they say, O Lord have mercy upon us, we have waited for thee: be thou, which wast their arm in the morning, our help also in time of trouble, Isaiah 33, 2. To the same purpose speaketh the Church in the Psalm, O daughter of Babel, worthy to be destroyed, blessed shall he be that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us: blessed shall he be that taketh and dasheth thy children against the stones, Psal. 137, 8, 9. Let this duty be practiced and performed of everyone of us: although we see the wicked proceed and go forward in his wickedness, as if he had made a league with death, and a covenant with hell, yet it behooveth us to possess our souls with patience: and albeit he spread himself like a green Bay tree, yet in the end his leaves shall wither, his branches shall be cut down, and his root shall rot; GOD will draw him forth in his good time unto judgment, and proportion his plagues and punishment according to his sins.

Lastly, this doctrine ought to warn us to [Use 4] take heed that we abuse not any of God's blessings, or any of his creatures to any sin or excess, seeing GOD hath threatened to turn them to our curse and confusion; so that wherein soever hath been our wickedness, therein also shall be our woe: our malice shall turn to our own mischief, our uncleanness shall fall out to be our own undoing. This the wiseman teacheth, that because of the whoorish woman, a man is brought to a morsel of bread, and such an one will hunt for the precious life of a man, Pro. 6, 26. So such as delight to follow drunkenness, it turneth to their destructiō, (for y^e very creatures groan & travel as it were in pain to be delivered from this bondage of corruption, in which they are after a sort holden for a time, and do cry out unto God for vengeance against them,) according to y^e saying of Solomon, Prov. 23, 29, 30. To whom is woe? to whom is sorrow? to whom is strife? to whō is murmuring? to whom are wounds without cause? and to whom is the redness of the eyes? Even to them that tarry long at the wine, to them that go and seek mixed wine. Wherefore let us use the creatures of God aright, that they may be serviceable and comfortable unto us, and that they may help to further and increase our blessedness, which they will do if they be well used. This our Savior teacheth his Disciples, Math. chap. 13, 16. Blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear. Every gift and creature of God that thou abusest, shall further thy condemnation, and bring upon thy head his just judgment. Every instrument of thy body, and power of thy soul that thou hast abused to sin, shall increase thy woe and torment, as appeareth in the example of the rich man.

[Verse 22. And he looked on the Kenites, and said, Strong is thy dwelling place, and put thy nest in the rock: nevertheless, the Kenite shall be spoiled, &c.] In these words going before, we heard of Balaam's prophesy against the Amalekites. Here Moses setteth down his prophesy against the Kenites; which is the sixth in number, and the third among those that are denounced against the unbelievers and idolatrous nations. Concerning the Kenites, we have spoken sufficiently before, which were the posterity of Jethro, the father in law of Moses, and these dwelled among the Amalekites, before they departed from them, as appeareth, 1. Sam. 15, 16, so that they obtained mercy, and were not destroyed, because they shown mercy unto the children of Israel, when they came up from Egypt. The scope of this prophesy is to declare, that howsoever these Kenites thought they dwelled safely, and had their seat as it were a nest made in a strong rock, that might be assaulted, but not subdued; besieged, but not overcome; yet, when they promised to themselves the surest peace, and greatest security, destruction should come suddenly like a whirlwind, and carry them away. From hence we learn, that the judgments of GOD upon secure and sinful persons, do many times come suddenly. Howsoever the Lord be a God of patience, and beareth with the vessels of wrath, appointed to destruction, yet when men think themselves free and far from all danger, judgment lighteth on them, increased by the speediness of the execution. This we see in sundry examples of God's proceedings against the ungodly. The Egyptians that pursued after the Israelites to the midst of the sea, were suddenly drowned, the waters covered them, their chariots failed them, the Lord fought against them, Exod. 14, 26. Whiles Balteshazzar made his feasts, drank wine in all excess, and praised his gods of gold and silver, at the same hour appeared fingers of a man's hand, writing on the plaster of the wall, foretelling his final confusion, which immediately after followed, Dan. 5, 5, 30. When Pharaoh refused to let the people go, as God commanded and Moses required of him, & had been scourged by many plagues, he, his Princes, his people, and whole land; yet they hardened their hearts, and walked stubbornly against him: suddenly at midnight the Lord smote all the first borne in the land of Egypt, from the first borne of Pharaoh that sate on his throne, unto the first borne of the captive that was in prison, & all the first borne of beasts, Exod. 12, 29. Thus Christ describeth his second coming, that it shall be sudden, speedy, and at unawares, Math. 24, 37. So in Lots time, They were given to lust of the flesh, to pride of life, to fullness of bread, to abundance of idleness to contempt of the poor; Ezek. 16, 49: these were the chief and capital sins of the Sodomites, others followed and accompanied them, and behold suddenly, the Lord rained down fire and brimstone from heaven, which was their portion, and consumed them, Gen. 19, 24. Such shall the coming of Christ to judgment be, when men say, peace, peace; safety, safety, and think not of any danger, sudden destruction shall come upon them as a thief in the night, &c. 1. Thess. 5, 2, 3.

[Reason 1] The reasons for further confirmation of this truth do follow. For first, God is the mighty Jehovah, that knoweth all the ways and works of his enemies, which labor in the fire, and conspire in vain against God & his people. Howsoever the ungodly think him to be weak and to want strength, or to be far from them, & not to see their dealings, yet by woeful experience they shall find the power of his hand. This is the reason urged by Moses in his song, declaring that they sanke as a stone, and were consumed as stubble; he giveth this reason, The Lord is a man of war, his Name is Jehovah, Exod. 15, 3. The world hath had many worthies & men of war excelling in might, & glorious in victories; but the Lord passeth them all, whose Name is eternal, and almighty, able to execute all his judgments at his own pleasure. His power is not limited & stinted: there is no power on earth, but that which is received of him, who bringeth all his purposes to pass, and his counsels take effect.

Secondly, the ungodly are of a dead heart, [Reason 2] and despise the warning given unto them of God: they have no desire or affection to anything but the pleasures and profits of this life. This is the reason, why the flood was brought upon the old world, and wherefore destruction shall come upon this old world at the coming of Christ, because albeit they were warned by the preaching of Noah, yet they were drowned in the delights of the flesh, and never turned to the Lord till the flood came, Mat. 24. Deadnesse of heart, & contempt of the word are fearful sins in the former age, & in these times wherein we live. Such men make but a mock in their hearts of all that God promiseth or threateneth, saying to themselves, where is the promise of his coming? 2, Pet. 3: and thereupon oppress their brethren, & rage against God and his people, use outrageous & lewd dealings, follow every motion of sin, & break out into all enormities.

Thes uses are in the next place to be handled. [Use 1] First, we may truly conclude, that they are blessed that think of the day of their reckoning, and of the time of the account that they must give of their stewardship, and so prepare their garments, that they be not found naked. We see how men in danger, as in a fire coming in the silence of the night, are glad to catch anything to cover and hide themselves: so must we be clothed with Christ, and put on his righteousness. There fore our Savior Christ saith, Who is a faithful steward and wise, whom the master shall make ruler over his household? Math. 24, 44, 46. And to the same purpose he speaketh in the Revelation of John, Revel. 16, 15. There is no way for the ungodly to escape. When a thief, having a purpose to do a mischief, cometh upon an house in the night when all be asleep, and so taketh them unprepared and unprofitable, being in bed and destitute of all help, they cannot escape or shift themselves out of the way. There can be no preventing of this fearful and sudden destruction, by foreseeing the appointed time, and by determining of the season beforehand, so as we may live as we list until that time: For as the lightning cometh out of the East, and is seen into the West, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be, Math. 24, 27. So then, we may see the blessed estate and condition of all such as wisely consider the sudden coming of God's judgments, and the falling of men into them as a bird into a snare, being thereby made circumspect and wise, to prevent a mischief before they fall into it. On the other side, we may conclude, the cursed and wretched estate of all ungodly and wicked men, they are suddenly taken as in a net, and horribly consumed. They fall into the pit, before they dreamed of any danger. They feel their own misery to be without redemption, before they would see it to prevent it. Happy are they that see the plague coming, and do avoid it.

[Use 2] Secondly, it is our duty to awake out of sin, & to be watchful over our own souls; we must not sleep in sin, nor give our selves to security, but be careful and circumspect that we be not suddenly overtaken. We ought always to be occupied in the works of godliness, and in the duties of our calling, to perform them as in the sight of God; to the end, that being always ready, we should not fear his coming. This is the charge that Christ giveth us, to be always ready, Math. 24, 44. Luke 12, 35. To this purpose doth he give this exhortation, that seeing we know not when the Son of man will come, whether at even or midnight, at the cock crowing, or in the dawning, we should carefully watch, & pray continually; Mar. 13, 35, 36, 37. Luke 21, 36. And y^e which Christ speaketh of the end of the world, must be considered of us touching the end of our own days, and must teach us so to number up our times, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom, that we should have our loins girt, and as it were our staves in our hands, that every hour we may look for our Lord's coming. The Lord would have us know his first coming, because the knowledge thereof was profitable and necessary, and therefore he reproveth the Jews, that they knew not the time of their visitation, Luke 19, 45. But his second coming he hath hid from us, as unnecessary and unprofitable; nay, as dangerous and hurtful unto us, lest we should say with the evil servant: My master doth defer his coming, and thereupon begin to smite our fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken: whereas the Master of that servant will come in a day when he thinketh not, and at an hour when he is not ware of, and will cut him off, and give him a portion with the unbelievers, The servant that knoweth his Masters will, and prepareth not himself, neither doth according to his will, [Use 3] shall be beaten with many stripes.

Lastly, albeit he be patient, let us not put off from day today the time of our repentance. It is the exhortation of Christ to the Church at Sardis, Remember how thou hast received and heard, hold fast, & repent, & Reu. 3, 3. The Prophet denounceth a grievous woe to all them that put away the evil day, that continue still in their wickedness, and think that God's plagues are not at hand. This is the mother of many evils, when a man never considereth of the day of his death and dissolution, and that the day of his appearing is near, and the time of his answering at hand; he regardeth not what injuries he offereth, he committeth many grievous sins. So then, the consideration of the suddainnesse of God's judgments affordeth a notable use against the drowzie security and profaneness of those that mock and dally with repentance, as if it might be obtained at their own pleasure. These men think it a vain thing to trouble themselves that way, until they be ready to die, and do lie at the very last gasp. These men regard not how they live, so they may have time to call for pardon, and to cry, Lord have mercy upon me. But understand (O ye foolish men,) that not every one that saith, Lord, Lord shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doth the will of our Father which is in heaven, Math. 7, 21.

The judgments of GOD are threatened to come upon thee as a thief, and to sweep thee away suddenly, thou knowest not whether thou shalt have an hour or moment given thee to repent. Thou mayest be smitten with sudden death. When thou risest out of thy bed, thou knowest not whether thou shalt lie down again. When thou liest down in thy bed, thou knowest not what may happen unto thee before it be day. Let God be in our first thoughts in the morning; let him be in our last thoughts in the evening. Let us remember him rising and lying down. Let us call our selves to an account of our doings every day, what evil we have done, what good we have left undone. Let us continually commend our selves, our souls, our bodies, our goods, our brethren into God's hands (as a most faithful keeper) by earnest and faithful prayer; and not go into our beds, as the dog into his kennel, or the swine into his stye, or the Ox unto his stall. Boast not of tomorrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth, Pro. 27, 1. Thy self may be dead, thy house fired, thy goods spoiled, thy Children destroyed, and a thousand miseries be multiplied upon thee. And if thy days be prolonged, the longer thou continuest in sin, the harder thou shalt find it to repent. Thy heart is more hardened by custom & continuance. An old ruinous house, the longer it is let run, the more labor, time, and charges it will require in reedifying and repairing. An old disease is more hardly cured. The deeper a nail is driven with the hammer, & the more blows are given it, the harder it is to pluck out again. He that will not be fit today, shall find himself less fit tomorrow, & his heart every day less inclined then other to turn to God, and more and more hardened. Wherefore let us while it is called today, repent and be reconciled to God, that when his judgments come suddenly, y^e destroyer may pass over us, and we remain safe under the shadow of the Almighty.

23 Again, he uttered his Parable, and said; Alas, who shall live when God doth this?

24 The Ships also shall come from the Coasts of Chittim, and subdue Ashur, and shall subdue Eber, and he also shall come to destruction.

25 Then Balaam rose up, and went, and returned to his place: and Balak also went his way.

Hitherto of the special Prophecies belonging to several people, both to the believing Jews, and unbelieving Gentiles: for he hath spoken of the Israelites, Moabites, Edomites, Amalekites, and Kenites. Now we come to the last of his Prophecies, appertaining jointly and generally to many people: wherein we must consider three things; First, the entrance into it: Secondly, the Prophecy it self: Thirdly, the conclusion of the history. The entrance into it, is not set down simply and nakedly, but is garnished with an effectual and rhetorical exclamation, as it were with an earnest admiration of the greatness and horror thereof, Alas! who shall live when God doth this? As if he should say, O how great and grievous shall those calamities be? The which, albeit none of us that are now alive, shall live to see or feel, yet they shall most certainly come to pass, and woe unto them upon whom they shall fall. The Prophecy it self followeth, setting down exceeding judgments of God against great kingdoms and Monarchies of the Assyrians and Grecians. The former judgments were against particular Nations: these are against whole Empyres. And first of all, whereas the Chaldeans under Nimrod, and the Assyrians under Ninus, usurped dominion over whole Countries & Kingdoms: he showeth, that in process of time, ships should come from the shore of Chittim, that is, the Navy of the Grecians, and the army of the Seleucians, which should subdue both the Hebrews and the Assyrians. By Chittim, in this place, he meaneth Silicia, which descended of Kittim, one of the posterity of Iauan, of whom we read in the book of Genesis, chap. 10, verse 4. For Alexander the Great, setting out a fleet rigged and furnished, especially by them of Cyprus, (which is now severed from the continent of Silicia) and after him the posterity of Seleucus Nicanor, wasted Assyria, Judea, Palestine, and all Syria, with perpetual inroads and incursions which they made into them, and in the ende subjected them all to themselves.

True it is, Alexander did rather prosecute his wars by Land service, then by Sea: yet whē the Ambassadors of Tyre, Eze. 28, 2, (an Island situate in the sea) had given him a mock trusting in the fortification of the place, despising his land power, refusing to suffer him to enter into their City, and esteeming themselves worthy rather to join with him as friends and confederates, then to become h's subjects and vastalles; he was constrained before he could do anything against them, to send for his ships from Cyprus, whereby he prevailed more against the Tyrians, then by the Peres and Moles that he built, as Qintus Curtius at large relateth in the fourth book of the noble acts of Alexander. This is it which Balaam spake of in this place. The Assyrians were vanquished by Alexander, the Hebrews which came of Eber were oppressed and vexed by the posterity of Seleucus descending from Alexander, Gen. 10, 21. & 11, 15. & 14, 13.

Likewise when the Grecians had ruled their time, and had proudly borne themselves as conquerors of the world, arising of small beginnings, they also perished after a little time, as Balaam here pronounced long before the event thereof came, and as Daniel afterwards prophesied immediately before the accomplishment thereof, which was effected and brought to pass by the power and puissance of the Romans, which served them as they before had served others, and took the Empire and Monarchy from them as they had taken it from others. Thus we see how all earthly things, even the mightiest Estates, & greatest Dominions of largest circuit, are subject to their times and seasons of reuolution; so that in mortal felicities, there can be no assurance nor perpetuity. For as it is an infallible property belonging to all human things, changing with that swift and violent return whereby they did rise to their exaltation and fullness: so these great Princes & Potentates, these Kingdoms and Empires rising with their felicity into humors of pride and security, and forgetting in their greatness the great God of heaven and earth that did set them up and shown that he was able to throw them down (as appeareth most evidently in Alexander, who would be called the son of Jupiter, and was content to suffer them to fall down flat upon the ground & worship him:) these I say, saw the declination of their prosperity and great triumphs, thereby showing themselves more happy to get glory, then able to keep it. We see therefore in these examples, that all Monarchies have their periods and points of continuance, as it were the center to which they tend, and in which after sundry mutations and alterations they fully are accomplished.

Thus much of the Prophecies both special and general: Now, in the last Verse, Moses hand••th the event both of these Prophecies, and generally of the whole History; Balaam, rose up, departed and returned, that is; he went his way with a purpose and intent to return unto the place from whence he came, but he stayed among the Midianites, either to expect the issue and fruit of his counsel (among whom also he was slain, as appeareth after in this book) or being hired of them to do some other exploite.

Thus Balaam the sorcerer is defeated, the superstitious King is disappointed, the people of GOD are eased of a deadly enemy; and lastly, the exceeding mercy of GOD is commended to the Church, ouerturning the practices of them, making good the words of his own mouth, and causing the inventions of his enemies to vanish into smoke, according to the saying of Moses, Deuter. 23, 5. They hired Balaam to curse thee, nevertheless the Lord thy God would not hearken unto him, but turned the curse to a blessing unto thee, because the Lord thy God loved thee. And the Prophet Micaiah calleth upon the people, to consider this kindness of GOD toward them, chap. 6, verse 5: O my people, remember what Balak King of Moab had devised, and what Balaam the son of Beor answered him, that ye may know the righteousness of the Lord. We have heard what great preparations were made, what charges the King defrayed to bring his purpose to pass, and yet prevaieth nothing against the Israelites; his only refuge was patience, a cold comfort to rest in: his only revenge was complaint, a weak weapon to fight withal. We have heard of Balaam's coming to curse the people, of his diuinations, sacrifices and prophecies: his chiefest wages was the Kings wrath, a cold contentment; his highest honor whereto he was advanced, was to take his heels and be gone, a poor preferment. Thus much of the order observed in these words.

Touching the doctrines that arise from this division, we have already handled at large such as are here offered to our considerations. When Balaam speaking of great afflictions that shall fall upon sundry places and people, saith, That GOD shall do this: chapter 21, verse 6. he teacheth that GOD is author of all chastenings and punishments, there is no evil in the city which he hath not done. Besides, he declareth that GOD raiseth up one evil man to scourge another, chapter 21, verse 25. Lastly, he setteth down the manner of God's punishments to be proportionable and answerable to the offenses and dealing of men, chapter 24, verse 20. GOD punisheth in the same kind as man sinneth. They that took away the Empire from others, have the Empire taken from themselves. GOD dealt with them as they had dealt with others, and caused them to perish with the sword, that drew the sword upon others. Now, let us proceed to the handling of other doctrines, which may be gathered from hence.

Verse 14. [The ships also shall come from the coastes of Chittim and subdue Ashur, and shall subdue Eber, and he also shall come to destruction.] In these words, as we have declared in setting down the method and meaning of them, Balaam prophesieth of the rising and falling of great Princes and Empires. They had their heads lifted upon high, and were advanced unto the greatest honor, but suddenly they came tumbling down, and all their glory lay in the dust, From hence we learn, that great men, & mighty Princes sometimes in greatest honor, suddenly decay & come to nothing, they are in a moment cast down, and left destitute when they little think of it, and come to great extremity. This we see verified often in fighting great battles, such as not long afore were in great pomp, in the midst of soldiers, men of might and great command, having strong armies, and many chariots, are suddenly brought low into great misery, fly for their lives, and are glad of a poor harbor to save their lives, as we see in Sisera, in Saneherib, and sundry others, Judge. 4, 16. Behold this in proud Haman, he gloried in his favor with the people, in his greatness with the King, in his grace with the Queen, who had none to the feast but the King and him: he repined, and was even consumed with envy, to see one look upon him, and not do reverence unto him: but on the sudden, he lost both honor and life, and was hanged himself on the gibbet which he had set up for Mordecai, that spake good for the King, Ester 7, 10. This we see in Agag king of the Amalekites, he flourished in his kingdom, and his people lived securely in their cities, but Saul came suddenly upon them, slew the people, and took the King alive. And when he thought the danger gone, he said merrily and pleasantly, Truly the bitterness of death is passed; then did Samuel hew him in pieces before the Lord in Gilgal, 1. Sam. 15, 32. This likewise appeareth in Nebuchadnezzar, whom Daniel compareth unto a great and strong tree, the height thereof reached up unto heaven, the sight thereof to the ends of the earth; the boughs thereof were fair, and the fruit thereof much, it made a shadow under it for the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the heaven dwelt in the boughs thereof and all flesh fed of it, Dan. 4, 18.19, who as he walked in the royal palace of Babel, and gloried in the work of his own hand, saying; Is not this great Babel that I have built? &c. while the word was in the kings mouth, this voice came down from heaven, Thy kingdom is departed from thee: So they drove him from men, they turned him out of his kingom, they made him eat grass as oxen, & his body was wet with the dew of heaven. This sudden alteration in a moment sometimes befalleth the faithful servants of God. David was made a great man in Israel, beloved of the Princes, honored of the King, advanced to be his son in law, of whom they sang by course in their play, and said, Saul hath slain his thousand, and David his ten thousand, 1. Sam. 18, 7. but on a sudden he was in exile among the wild goats, and constrained to put his life in hazard in a strange country. So Job was one of the greatest and richest men in all the East, who in the turning of an hand became one of the lowest and poorest; so that they mocked and derided him, whose fathers he refused to set with the dogs of his flocks; that is, with the meanest of his house.

[Reason 1] Neither can we much marvel at this change of the place and estates of the sons of men, confirmed unto us by all experience in the examples of Pharaoh, Achitophel, Saul, Sifera, Saneherib, Herod, and of infinite others in the acts and monuments of the Church; seeing this falleth not out by chance or fortune, but it is the Lord's doing, and the work of his right hand. This is the reason that Job expresseth, Now I am their song, I am their common talk, they abhor me, and fly far from me, and spare not to spit in my face, because that GOD hath loosed my cord, and humbled me, Job 30, 9, 10. This Hannah in her song toucheth, 1. Sam. 2, 7.8. Where we see the Lord lifteth up, he pulleth and putteth down according to his own will and pleasure, who maketh the highest tide to have the lowest ebb.

[Reason 2] Secondly, as he worketh his own will, so he will humble and abase the sons of men to make them know themselves. We think our selves great men, we will ascend above the height of the clouds, and exalt our selves above the stars, we lift up our hearts above our brethren, and will be like the most High: so that God is constrained to bring us down to the grave, & lay our honor in the dust, y^t we may know we are but men, whose life is but vanity & vexation of spirit. We should never be humble and lowly in our own eyes, unless we saw how God casteth down the mighty from their seats, scattereth the proud in the imagination of their hearts, and sendeth the rich away empty, Luke 1, 52, 53.

[Use 1] The uses follow to be observed. First, from hence consider and confess the difference between earthly and heavenly honor, between the honor of men, and that which is of God. Earthly honor when it is at the highest can give no assurance of continuance, nor minister peace of conscience, nor satisfy with the benefit of contentment, because it endureth but for a season; but the honor which we shall enjoy after this life with God, is like himself. He is unchangeable and without shadow of turning, he is constant and ever like himself: so is the honor and glory which he hath reserved for us, It is laid up as a treasure in heaven, where neither the moth nor canker corrupteth, and where thieves neither dig through nor steal, Math. 6, 20. We see what the favor and friendship of men is, we see what the highest preferment is that men can attain unto: both they and their advancement fall as the Summer fruit, and their place knoweth them no more. But the honor which we shall find in heaven, and enjoy with the glorious Saints of God in the heavenly habitations, lasteth forever, and there shall be no end thereof. What foolishmen are we therefore, and more then foolish, that so much admire the vain glory of the earth, and have our eyes dazzled with the deceitful beauty of the dignities of this world, and do not consider the stableness of that glory reserved for us, which time shall not consume, nor the enemy abolish? Hence it is that the Apostle John saith, Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world: if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him: and the world passeth away with the lust thereof: but he that fulfilleth the will of God abideth ever, 1. John 2, 15, 17. All earthly things last and endure but for a season, men are mortal, riches are uncertain, favor is vanity, honor is changeable, treasures are transitory, pleasures are mutable, profits are corruptible, friends are fading, and oftentimes turn to be enemies: only, the treasures of heaven, the favor of God, the pleasures of eternal glory, the riches of the world to come are immortal, and never decay. For all flesh is as grass, & all the glory of man as the flower of the field the grass withereth, & the flower fadeth, but the word of the Lord endureth forever, 1. Pet. 1, 24 Thus we see, that there is as great difference between earthly and heavenly honor, as is between heaven and earth.

Secondly, we must learn to use this world [Use 2] as though we used it not, and make it as the hand to help us, and further us toward the kingdom of heaven. The hand is made to serve us, and not we to serve it. We must learn to place the world under us, not above us: we must make it servant to us, not Lord over us; we must teach it to obey, not suffer it to rule over us; as the Church is described to be clothed with the Sun, but having the Moon under her feet, Revel. 12. For, seeing human things are transitory, mutable, and changeable, it standeth us upon to have our conversation in the heavens, and to cast the eyes of our minds toward the estate of glory, and the eternal happiness prepared for us. A pilgrim in a strange land, hath always his eyes toward his journeys end, & is greatly grieved when he wandereth out of his way. We are pilgrims in this world, and are far from home, so that our hearts should be fully and wholly set on everlasting life, and be grieved when we are hindered from the straight way.

This is the exhortation of the Apostle to the Corinthians, 1. Cor. 7, 29. Many follow it with all greediness, albeit it be full of vanity. But if we esteem of heaven, or regard the salvation of our souls, we ought to be little affected to the things of this life, never setting our hearts upon them, but desiring to dwell in that house where we shall abide forever. Many there are that live long in this life, and have been many days upon the face of the earth, who never think of the kingdom of heaven, nor dream of another world, nor meditate of the life to come, until they lie at the last gasp, and are going the way of all flesh: which is a most woeful and miserable thing to consider. Let us not suffer Satan thus to circumvent us, and this present world to abuse and bewitch us: the devil is a deceiver, the world is but a shadow, and hath no true and enduring substance in it. Abraham the father of the faithful, is commended by the Spirit of God, who being called of God, willingly obeyed to go into the place which afterward he should receive for an inheritance, so that he departed from his kindred & fathers house, not knowing whither he went; and by faith he abode in the land of Canaan, as in a strange country, and as one that dwelt in tents. A natural man would think he had made a simple change, and be ready to condemn him for a fool; but the Scripture giveth this reason, as the cause that moved him, (to wit,) everlasting life; for he looked for a city, having a foundation, whose builder and maker is God. In comparison hereof, let us make little account of this transitory life, or of any the vain profits, pleasures, or honors, that may be found in it.

Lastly, let it not grieve us to see evil men [Use 3] exalted and set aloft: they hold their possessions and honor with the greatest uncertainty that can be in their life time, and when they are taken from hence, they can carry nothing with them of all that they possess. They are oftentimes deprived suddenly of all things they desire and do most of all delight in. Sometimes they are taken away from their goods; sometimes their goods are taken away from them: and sometimes, albeit neither they be taken from their goods, nor their goods taken from them, yet God in his justice depriveth them of the comfortable use of them, while they do enjoy the possession of them. This is the use that the Prophet David toucheth, Psalm 49, 5.16, declaring the vanity and uncertainty of mortal things, and the sudden fall of all flesh, he addeth: Wherefore should I fear in the evil days, when iniquity shall compass me about as at mine heels? Be not thou afraid when one is made rich, and when the glory of his house is increased; for he shall take nothing away when he dieth, neither shall his pomp descend after him. We have known many by our own observation gone on a sudden, that looked not for any change. We have seen them set on high, and suddenly they have come to nothing. Who is ignorant that great trees grow til they be great, and then be plucked up from the root in a moment? It is a foolish thing for a man to climb aloft, and not consider that the higher he climbeth, the greater is his fall: to covet the fruit, & not consider the height of the tree whereon it groweth: we must take heed, least while we labor to attain unto the top, we fall down with the boughs that we do embrace. All things are here turned and tossed with uncertainties, and nothing continueth in one stay or state. There is nothing so sure that is not in danger of his inferior. The Lyon hath been sometimes the food of small beasts: and the rust doth consume the iron. Let us therefore like and look after better things that do continue: earthly things, although we have them in greatest abundance, cannot save us in the day of danger: let us not trust in them whose help is in vain.

[Verse 25. Then Balaam rose up, and went, and returned to his place.] Here is briefly the conclusion set down, as the event and issue of all the devices and purposes of Balak and Balaam; they rose up and went their way, without doing anything that they intended. And first touching Balaam, we have often noted, that the mark which he aimed at, was his wages: yet see here, how coveting an evil covetousness, and thirsting after money, which he made his god, he is deceived, & loseth his wages; yea, and his life too at length, as appeareth afterward in this Book.

Heereby we learn for our instruction, that they which gape after unlawful gain, and the deceitful wages of wickedness, are oftentimes deceived of that which they look for, and find (contrary to their expectation) loss instead of gain, and hindrance instead of advantage. This is confirmed unto us by sundry examples in the word of God. Look upon the example of Achan, recorded in the book of Joshua he thought to enrich himself by the wedge of gold, and the Babylonish garment which he had purloyned, contrary to the commandment of God, who would have all those destroyed, not converted to the private profit of any; but it fell out to his own destruction and the destruction of those that belonged unto him, Josh, 7, 25, The like judgment came upon Gehazi, he turned after Naaman, and took of him a bribe to enrich himself; but the leprosy of Naaman did cleave unto him, so that his loss was greater then his gains, 2. King. 5.27, Ahab rose up and took possession of Naboth's vineyard, which lay commodiously for him; but withal he purchased the wrath of God, the destruction of his person, the ruin of his house, the loss of his kingdom, the vndoing of all his posterity, 1. King. 21, 16. Judas betrayed his Master, and sold him for thirty pence, he was carried after his covetousness, and shed innocent blood, even the blood of the immaculate Lamb of GOD; but how he was enriched hereby, the Evangelist declareth; when he saw that Christ was condemned, he repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the high-Priests and Elders, saying, I have sinned, betraying the innocent blood. Hereunto accordeth Solomon in his Proverbs, who saith; He that is greedy of gain, troubleth his own house, but he that hateth gifts, shall live, Prov. 15, 16. Where he teacheth, that such as increase their riches by hook and by crook, they care not how, or gain by wrongful means, are the causes and occasions of many evils in their estate and family. This appeareth also by that which was spoken to the rich man in the Gospel, Luke 12.20. Thou fool, this night shall they take away thy soul from thee, and then whose shall all these be that thou hast gathered together? All which places of Scripture serve directly to prove, that such as are given to unlawful gain, and get the goods of this life wrongfully, are oftentimes deceived of their hope and expectation: which made the Apostle Jude, speaking of the matter that now we have in hand, to call the hire that Balaam sought after, The deceitful wages of Balaam, Jude 11.

[Reason 1] The reasons may easily be discerned of us, if we consider that GOD would have his wisdom and justice to appear in crossing their carking and caring for these transitory things. This we see in all the examples before alleged, of Achan, Judas, of Gehazi, Ahab, and of the rich man. For God knoweth to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment under punishment, 2. Pet. 2.9. How can it be therefore, that such as fill their houses with the riches of iniquity, and with the spoils of the righteous should prosper, and bring a blessing with them, when as God (which is the God of all righteousness and truth) shall set himself against them, & root out the things which they have wrongfully gotten?

[Reason 2] Secondly, every sin is deceitful, and profiteth nothing, whatsoever show of profit and commodity it make. This is set forth unto us in the book of Job, I have seen the foolish well rooted, and suddenly I cursed his habitation: his children shall be far from salvation, and they shall be destroyed in the gate, and none shall deliver them, Job 5, 3, 4. All sin to the natural man is sweet and pleasant, he findeth it sweet to his taste; but it is as sweet meat that hath poison mingled and tempered with it, Job 20, 12, 13. And as poison, though it be sweet in the mouth, bringeth death and destruction with it when it entereth into the body: so it is with sin; it delighteth in the committing, but it biteth at the latter ending: for God turneth it to destruction. Therefore the Apostle saith, we should take heed we be not seduced and deceived through the deceitfulness of sin.

[Use 1] The uses are to be thought upon, that we may apply the doctrine to our selves. First, we see here the common Proverb truly verified, that covetousness bringeth nothing home. So may it be said of all other sins, of profaneness, of contempt of the word, of abusing the Name of God and his Sabbaths, of uncleanness, of whoredom, of drunkenness, and of all sinful pleasures whatsoever, which natural men make their happiness and felicity; they may delight for a time, and please the carnal desires of natural men, but they bring an heavy account and reckoning in the end. So then, we may say to all the men of this world, whose portion is in this life, as Abner said in one case, Knowest thou not that it will be bitterness in the latter end? 2. Sam. 2, 26. We heard how Naboth's vineyard was an eyesore to Ahab, and made him enter into ungodly courses and bloody practices, he destroyed Naboth and his children, he seemed to have made his title strong, & secured his estate: but what brought it in the end? the utter ruin of his whole house. Every man can say readily, when a man groweth prodigal and spendeth excessively, and holdeth a right course, and taketh the ready way to bring all to naught, and fall into decay; He is at the door to be blown out. But if he be straight and hold fast, if he get carefully, and labor by all means by right or wrong, to increase in wealth; he taketh this to be the pathway to thriftiness, and the next course to grow in riches;

& carnal men, (that see nothing but with fleshly eyes) are of the same judgment. This is the common opinion, but it is false and wrongful. For all such as give themselves to fraud and oppression, that care not how they store their houses with abundance, and thereby think that neither they nor their posterities shall want, do exceedingly deceive themselves, and offer the greatest wrong to their children that can be. Such (as we heard out of Solomon) trouble their own houses, and are the greatest enemies to those they with the greatest good unto. To this purpose he speaketh in another place, The treasures of wickedness profit nothing, but righteousness delivereth from death, Prov. 10.2. This the Prophet setteth down, Their houses with their lands and wives shall be turned unto strangers, for I will stretch out mine hand upon the inhabitants of the land, saith the Lord: for from the least of them, even unto the greatest of them, everyone is given unto covetousness, and from the Prophet even unto the Priest they all deal falsely, Jer. 6, 11, 12, 13. And in another place, Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers without equity, &c. Jer. 22, 13. Jehoiakim is threatened, because his eyes and his heart were only upon covetousness, to be cast out without lamentation, and to be buried as an ass is buried, even to be drawn without the gates of Jerusalem. To this purpose cometh the sentence of Solomon, recorded in the three and twenty chapter of the Proverbs, verses 4, & 5, Trauaile not too much to be rich, but cease from thy wisdom: wilt thou cast thine eyes upon it which is nothing? for riches taketh her to her wings, and flieth into the heaven. Thus he showeth the vanity & unprofitableness of riches, & that we should not travel to hoard up heaps thereof to our own confusion, as many worldly minded men do,

[Use 2] Secondly, it is our duty to walk plainly and sincerely, to be true Israelites indeed, in whom is no guile: so we have hope of sound comfort in the works of our hands that we shall take upon us, whatsoever the success be. This is it which Solomon teacheth, Prov. 10, 9. He that walketh uprightly, walketh boldly. but he that perverteth his ways shall be known. It is a gracious thing for a man always to have a good cause, and a good conscience. Such a one feareth none evil, but assureth himself of the protection of the Lord. But such as commit wickedness without care or conscience shall be troubled with inward fears, and chastened with outward punishments. All men desire to avoid perils and dangers, to live safely, and without fear of evil; but all men do not take the right course, nor use the right means to attain their end. None think themselves in greater safety, then such as give themselves to craft and deceitful dealing, to filthiness and uncleanness, to hypocrisy and dissimulation, and to all excess of wickedness. But these men wander wide out of the way, and know not the place where safety dwelleth. For none are further from safety and security then these are who when they shall say, Peace and safety, then shall come upon them sudden destruction. Look upon the examples of the old world drowned with the flood, of Sodom consumed with fire, of Dathan and Abiram covered and swallowed with the earth, of Herod smitten of the Angel, and sundry other wicked persons, who have felt the truth of this; whose steppes if we follow, we must look to their ends. It is he that feareth God, and walketh uprightly, that is bold as a Lyon, and goeth safely in his ways: he hath this comfort, which the other want, that God will keep and defend him, that he will be his protector and deliverer: and therefore in all assurance is able to say, Though I should walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear none evil, Psal. 23, 4, & 27, 1, & 50, 15. Again, the Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid? for they know the infallible promise, Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee. This serveth to reprove all such, as give or receive deceitful wages, with a supposed assurance of good success, when that which they go about, is against GOD and the rule of righteousness. Thus the high-Priests dealt with Judas, they gave, and he took money, to betray into the hands of sinners the Lord of life: but the curse of God fell upon the one and the others. So the Elders took counsel, and offered large money to the soldiers to say, that the disciples came by night and stole away the body of Jesus, Math. 28.12, 13. But if we depend upon God for his blessing, and would have him to prosper us in our enterprises, we must not turn into these by-paths, but keep the straight way that leadeth to life, which howsoever fewest enter into it, shall bring us to eternal life.

Lastly, let us learn to avoid covetousness, [Use 3] and be content with such things as God giveth and knoweth to be necessary and sufficient for us, This is it which the Apostle teacheth, Godliness is great gain, if a man be content with that he hath, for we brought nothing into the world, and it is certain, we can carry nothing out: therefore when we have food and raiment, let us therewith be content, 1. Tim. 6, 6, 8. This is the touchstone to try our hearts whether we be covetous or not. Who is it, if he be demanded, nay convinced to his face, will confess he is covetous? although he circumvent his brother, and defraud him in buying and bargaining, though he long and lust after his neighbors goods, though he live by miserable fraud and oppression, though he grind the faces of the poor, and care not how or which way he get, yet who is it, but will stiffly and stontly deny that he is covetous? Seeing then everyone is accounted covetous, and no man will father that which he doth beget & bring forth, nor confess that which all the world seeth he doth notoriously practice, let us come to the rule, how we may try him. The workman hath his rule and square to try his work. God hath left us the level of the law, & hath set down marks to examine and prove every man's work. The rule to try our affection is, our contentedness with our estate, and a quiet resting in that portion which GOD hath allotted unto us, Phil. 4, 11. Thou sayest, thou art not covetous, and thinkest thyself extremely wronged, to be charged with so foul a crime: but art thou contented with those things which thou hast? Doest thou believe the division of God's gifts befallen to thee to be the best measure, and most profitable for thee; yea, all-sufficient unto thee? Then thou art void of covetousness: but if thou do not think thine own portion sufficient, it is certain thou wilt be craving and coveting after another man's. [Answer.] But (will some say) I am a poor man, I have small means to live, and many children to provide for; how can I be content, or how can I think that I have sufficient? I answer, if thou fear God; [Objection.] and have godliness in thine heart, thou hast enough, thou canst not want that which is sufficient. Thou hast the promise of God, that he will not leave thee, nor forsake thee, His word is a sufficient assurance for all things needful. Godliness is profitable unto all things, which hath the promise of the life present, and of that which is to come, GOD commandeth that our conversation should be without covetousnesse, The rule to try our practice and obedience is, to be contented with our own estate. The way and means to work in us contentedness, is godliness: for it maketh a man contented with that he hath. So far as a man is godly, so far he is content with his outward condition. Let us therefore labour to plant godliness in our hearts, and to store them with the true fear of God, which will bring with it contentedness, and sufficiency in every estate.

[And Balak also went his way.] Balak and Balaam laid a plot to curse the people of God, but are disappointed, and part company one from another. Balaam returned to his people, that is, he purposed to return, with a full intent to go home; but he was stayed by the way, where he perished among the Midianites. Balaks hope failing him, he goeth his way, and nothing is done of the one to the other. This event between them teacheth, that the devices of evil men come to nothing. God disappointeth the policies and purposes of the ungodly intended against the Church: so that how cunningly soever they are contrived, he bloweth them away as dust with the wind, and he melteth them as wax with the fire. Many rest in vain hope, and put confidence in deceitful things. Esau promised unto himself a time of his fathers death, & of weeping for him, and then he would be avenged for the birthright, and blessing of his brother; but his expectation was made frustrate, and the blessing took place, Gen. 27, 41. The Egyptians had a purpose to kill all the males of the Israelites, that all hope of issue from them might decay; but see how wide they shot, and how far they missed, Exod. 1, 12, God increased them exceedingly, and they were constrained to drive them out enriched with the spoils of Egypt. The enemies of Christ say in the pride of their hearts, Let us break their bands, and cast their cords from us; yet he that sitteth in the heaven, laugheth them to scorn, and giveth to his Son the heathen for a possession, Psal. 2, 3.

Hereunto cometh the saying of the Prophet, Psal. 7, 14. When Christ had preached the Gospel at Nazareth, they were filled with such wrath against him, that they rose up, and thrust him out of the city, and led him even unto the top of the hill, whereon their city was built, that they might cast him down headlong; but he passed through the midst of them, and went his way, Luke 4, 30. The like example we find, John 7, 53, the Scribes and Pharisees being gathered together in a council, where the death of Christ was practiced, God raised up one to speak in his cause, one of their own bench, that sate in the council & consistory with them, so that they brake up in a rage without doing anything. Great matters wer purposed, but nothing determined: mightymen and rulers were assembled, but nothing could be concluded. So we read in the Acts of the Apostles, that certain Jews made an assembly, and bound themselves with a curse, saying, That they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul, Acts 23, 22: but they were disappointed, and their purpose (though closely contrived) was utterly disannulled.

[Reason 1] The Reasons will make this truth more apparent. First, if we consider this essential property of God, that he is full of justice, he will reward and recompense as our works are. If we rest in vain and wicked practices, he will not wink at them or hold his peace, but throw down that which we build up, and he will disappoint that which we hope for. This the Prophet David handleth at large, Psal. 62, 3, 11, 12. where he reproveth his adversaries for devising and practicing of evil against him, and showeth that all their devices shall profit them nothing, but be the means to bring them suddenly and speedily to destruction; The children of men are vanity, the chief men are liars, to lay thē upon a balance, they are altogether lighter then vanity. Trust not in oppression, nor in robbery, be not vain, if riches increase, set not your hearts upon them; for thou rewardest everyone according to his work. If their expectation were always satisfied and desires accomplished, God's Justice should be impayed and called into question; so that the crossing of their hopes, discovereth and revealeth him to be a just and righteous God.

Secondly, the expectation of the wicked is [Reason 2] vanity, because they can give no comfort or assurance. No man is able to assure himself of life, or of anything else: for what man can redeem the life of his brother, to keep it from the grave? If then we cannot secure life, either to our selves, or to our brethren: much less can we other things, So the Prophet reasoneth, They trust in their goods, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches: yet a man can by no means redeem his brother, he cannot give his ransom to God, Psal. 49, 6, 7.

The uses are next to be considered, as they [Use 1] arise from this doctrine. And first we may conclude from hence the unhappy and wretched estate of them that have only eyes of flesh, to rest on things which they see with their foolish and fleshly eyes. If we regard and receive only present blessings, they are of little account, and of small moment. If then we wait on lying vanities, & forsake God our strength and our salvation, we are unhappy and most miserable. This doth the Prophet preach unto us, Thus saith the Lord cursed is the man that trusteth in men, and maketh flesh his arm, and withdraweth his heart from the Lord, Ier 17, 5, 6, 7. And the Prophet rendereth the reason hereof in the words following, He shall be like the heath in the wilderness, and shall not see when any good thing cometh, but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land, & not inhabited: whereby the Prophet meaneth, that such are like the unfruitful trees, or the parched & barren wilderness; their hope that rely upon men, is frustrate, GOD himself will fight against them, so that they shall never have good success. As the heat of the Sun consumeth and dryeth up the moisture of the trees, and the grass of the field, so that albeit they have roots & leaves, yet are without fruit; so doth God disappoint the ungodly, & maketh all his hope wither away, like the corn which being green in the blade, is blasted in the ear, or as the grass on the house tops, which perisheth before it be ripe, and ready to be cut down, whereof the mower filleth not his hand, neither the gleaner his lap. Psal. 129, 6, 7, 8. Wherein the Prophet compareth the wicked to hay or grass, meaning that they shall be of no long continuance, but presently come to destruction, though they be lifted up for a time very high; as the grass that groweth on houses, incontinently withereth, because it wanteth strength of root, and depth of earth to give moisture, and supply nourishment unto it; yea, the Prophet goeth further, to note out the wretchedness of their estate, because such have not the benefit of the Churches prayers, when he saith; neither they which go by say, the blessing of the Lord be with you; noting hereby that it is a great curse & judgment of God upon us, to want the good wishes or godly prayers of the Church. On the other side we may see the happy and blessed condition of the godly, that make God their Lord, that make him their strength and their salvation, that trust in him for their defense. This the Prophet toucheth in the place before recited, Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is, Ier. 17, 7, 8. He is a tower that can never be scaled; a city that can never be conquered; a buckler that can never be broken; a shield that can never be cracked; a rock that shall never be entered; a fortress and hold that shall never be surprised; so that he which trusteth in him shall be as a tree that is planted by the water, which spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not feel when the heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green, and shall not care for the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit. Such as have their hope in God, shall never be deceived or disappointed, they may feel the heat of trouble and persecutition, but they shall not be scorched and consumed with it. They are so seasoned and moistned with his grace, that they shall want no good thing, and whatsoever he shall do, shall prosper, Psal. 1, 3.

[Use 2] Secondly, we learn, that no wisdom, be it never so deep, no understanding, be it never so politick, no counsel be it never so prudent, no subtlety be it never so hidden, shall overthrow the purpose of God, or prevail against his truth, or hinder the execution of his will. For his infinite wisdom is able to ouerreach and over-match all the wisdom that is in the creatures, and to prevent whatsoever devices they have set abroad. This is it which Solomon teacheth, Many devices are in a man's heart, but the counsel of the Lord shall stand, Pro. 19, 21. So saith the Prophet, The Lord breaketh the counsel of the heathen, &c. Psal. 33, 10. Man doth purpose, but God doth dispose. Many heap up riches, but GGD bringeth them to poverty: they hope to enjoy their treasures many years, but their days are broken off in the midst of their course. Some seek to hinder the course of the Gospel, and utterly to root out the truth, but they are deceived of their expectation, and themselves are pulled up by the root. Others seek to prevail, but are overcome. Howsoever the wisemen of this world study to resist the will of God, yet it must be accomplished. Therefore Solomon saith, There is neither wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel against the Lord: his counsel shall remain forever, and the thoughts of his heart throughout all ages. There is no wit or wisdom of man can take place against him. True it is, men are grown crafty and cunning, they can dive deep to hide their counsels, and cover two faces under one hood, yet all things are naked & open before him, with whom we have to do, he will defeat their purposes, and they shall know they oppose themselves against him, & fight against heaven.

Thirdly, let us not rely on vain things, [Use 3] for then all our expectation shall be in vain. Who is so simple, that to stay him up from danger, would rest on the web of a spider, or the staff of a reed, or the strength of a rush? All the devices of men, the power of Princes, the courage of horses, the help of creatures, are as a broken weapon, or a rotten pillar unprofitable to defend us, and unserviceable to deliver us. This the Prophet teacheth us, Psal. 146, 3, 4, 5. We are prone by nature to put our trust in creatures, rather than in God the Creator: he forbiddeth all vain confidence in them, that God may have the sole and whole praise. Where we see the Prophet yieldeth sundry sound and substantial reasons not to have any affiance in men, how great soever their places, and how high soever their authority be: for they are not able of themselves to help themselves, or others that are in distress. Besides, the shortness and uncertainty of their life is such, that suddenly death cometh, and the breath departeth, and so the hope which men repose in them perisheth. This is the brevity and vanity of man's life, that all which he thought upon, and devised in his imaginations, come to nothing. Hence it is, that the Prophet David exhorteth, not to trust in oppression, nor in goods gotten by unlawful means, Psal. 62, 10. If riches increase, we must not delight in them, lest our hearts be stolen away from the hope of better things, or be puffed up in pride above measure, against our brethren, through the abundance of outward blessings. Some trust in chariots, and some in horses, but we remember the Name of the Lord our God: they are brought down and fallen, but we are risen and stand upright, Psalm 20, verses 7, 8.

Fourthly, when we see the enemies conspire [Use 4] against the Church, let us from this consideration of the vain hope and confidence of y^e wicked, take occasion to comfort our selves, and to cheare up our hearts: their hope hangeth on the spiders web, and all their expectation shall turn into smoke. Let them gather themselves together on heaps, and take crafty counsel one with another, he that ruleth in heaven shall scorn at their inventions, and frustrate them of their hope and mischievous purposes. This is the assured comfort that the Prophet giveth in this respect, Be not thou afraid when one is made rich, and when the glory of his house is increased; for he shall take nothing away when he dieth, neither shall his pomp descend after him: Psal. 49, 16: & though he should come to the age of his fathers, and live as long as the most aged, yet this life must have an end. Thus doth our Savior set forth the vain confidence of the rich man, flattrng his own soul, glorying in his goods, living in all delight, taking his pastime, and promising to himself a long life, O fool, this night will they fetch away thy soul from thee, Luke 12, 20. But he that resteth upon God, is sure to build upon a sure rock, that in all storms and tempests shall stand unmovable. This meditation will stay our faith, and comfort our hope, when we see the great plottings, and wonderful confidence of wicked men. For why should we fear such enemies? or be dismayed either in regard of our distressed & weak estate, or in respect of that flourishing estate of others, as though we were in danger to be overcome? They rest on lying vanities, and therefore woe unto them. This serveth to terrify them, to consider the slippery ground whereon they stand, and the deceitful foundation whereon they build: for whilst they determine to conspire against other, they confound themselves, whilst they compass to destroy the Church, they deceive themselves; whilst they promise to themselves to work out great matters, they are utterly disappointed of their purposes, and whilst they show themselves to be enemies to God's people, God manifesteth himself to be an enemy unto thē.

[Use 5] Lastly, seeing all evil inventions and devices of the devil are disappointed, let us not stand in fear of any attempts made against us by his imps & instruments. The enemies of the Church had hired a sorcerer and coniurer to waste and weaken them, yet we see his enchantments and diuinations are defeated, and come to nothing. Heereby we learn what to think of witchcraft and sorcery, and of sorcerers and witches, of whom worldly and carnal men, void of true godliness, & the true fear of God's Name, do stand so much in fear of. Thus it appeareth to be a simple distinction of the more simple people, making some to be good witches, and some to be evil witches; not only because all witchcraft is wicked & the invention of the devil, but because such as they account the best are bad; yea, the worst of all, drawing the people from God, & causing them to run a whoring after the devil. For, as well they may make some good devils, and some evil devils (as some prattle of white devils, and black devils) as make some witches good, & others evil: whereas all sorcery (under what color & pretence soever it be used) is abhominable in the sight of God; and all sorcerers (howsoever they be esteemed of in the world) are hated and abhorred of him.

True it is, the common sort of carnal men, and of the ignorant multitude imagine them to be the very plagues of the earth, that they destroy men's goods, torment their bodies, take away their lives, lame their cattle, bring all calamity upon them, & that none can be in safety so long as they remain. Hence it is, that men stand in fear of them, & are afraid to displease thē, they dare not deny them anything; they are as careful to please them, as to please their parents. And yet if we aright consider of the matter, we shall find y^t they are more afraid of them, then hurt by them. The holy Scripture hath delivered full and perfect doctrine, what to hold concerning witches. It teacheth that there are witches, and that they should not be suffered to live, but be put to death, Deut. 18, 10, 11. But we must observe & mark for what causes & crimes they are to be taken away frō the earth: not because they raise tempests in the air, or hurt corn on the ground, & fruit on the trees; not because they send their spirits to make men lame, to kill their children, to destroy their cattle: they are never charged with those things, and among all those that have been plagued and tormented by evil spirits, the Holy Ghost never layeth it upon witches. The reasons why they should be put to death, are, because they have a league and familiarity with devils, which are the enemies of God, and because they seduce the people, and draw them into error, to run after devils, and devilish practices. We must know that all affliction laid upon our bodies, our goods & children, is of God, Amos 3, 6. His providence ruleth all, so that not a sparrow falleth to the ground, without the will of our heavenly Father. Our sins provoke him to chastise & afflict us. God giveth the devil leave to correct and scourge us for our sins. When he hath obtained leave of GOD, he coveteth to do it in such sort as may further his kingdom, and draw the world into error. When he hath received power to afflict men and beasts with bodily harms, he will do it by and by, but he is cunning and crafty, he will do it to his most gain and advantage. He could do it, and would do it without witches and sorcerers, yet he useth them to set a color and a cover upon his matters. For using them as his instruments, he bringeth them to believe that they do many harms sent by him, and they confess so much sometimes, whereas indeed they are deceived themselves, and do deceive others. And from hence proceed and issue sundry abominations. The people are set on work how to devise to be safe against the witch: then there is running to wizards, to learn to withstand his fury, to expel his spirit, to outwitch and overcome her familiar: he procureth many to use wicked & blasphemous charms, to abuse the blessed name of God, and to profane and pollute his most sacred word: hereby the innocent are oftentimes accused, and innocent blood is shed, which procureth the wrath of God against the Land. Al these mischiefs that are wrought, are set abroach by such as are called cunning men and cunning women: they are thought to do much good, and to help many people, but of all other they do greatest harm in seducing the people, & ought to die the death. Such witches as have familiar spirits are thought to do harm to mankind, and to beasts, and do not, because the devil at the appointment of God executeth it, and he beareth many in hand that he doth it at the request and instigation of the witch; but these, which seem in outward appearance to do good, do harm indeed, leading men into the depth of sin, and drowning men deeper in condemnation. But we must learn and allow these principles, setting down the vanity of this Science. First, there is no more hurt done, nor no less hurt done then would be if there were no witches Secondly, the devil cannot kill man or beast at his pleasure, to gratify a witch. Thirdly, the sending of the devil by a witch cannot give him any power and commission to do anything. Fourthly, he is more forward and ready to do evil, then the witch can be, and therefore it were peevish and preposterous to imagine that the less forward unto wickedness should set on him, and procure him to evil, that is more forward: so that the witch doth not provoke forward the devil, but the devil bearing sway in her heart, setteth her on. Fifthly, the devil is the commander, the witch is but his servant: he ruleth with power in the children of disobedience, and is the god of the world: she by the righteous judgment of God is servant and subject unto him. Can any then be so silly and simple to believe that the less can give power unto the greater, the weaker to the stronger? Lastly, as the devil cannot hurt a poor Fly, before he have power granted unto him by a greater power then his own, so when he hath liberty, is he so sottish that he will not execute his power, unless some witch or sorcerer send him? So then we conclude that witches, sorcerers, & enchanters are the bond-slaves of Satan, and have themselves no power to do, or to authorize him to do anything. But whensoever God giveth him power to afflict, as the executioner of his vengeance, he useth them as his instruments, not to receive help by them, but only for a color, that he may draw multitudes into sin, and carry them he along into condemnation. Let us not therefore stand in fear of any sorcerers, but of God, from whom all chastisements come, whether such as he inflicteth with his own hand, or such as he giveth the devil power to lay upon men, as we see in the history of Job, chap. 1, and 2. and therefore they should humble us and bring us unto repentance. The ungodly look no further then to the witch, they fret against her, they never look up to God, nor consider the cause why the devil hath power over them, they seek not to appease God's wrath. But the godly seek to take away the cause, that they may remove the effects. If our sins have provoked God, and the enemy touch our bodies or goods, we must fall down before his Throne, humble our selves in prayer, entreat the Lord to turn away his displeasure, stand fast in faith and patience, and wait upon God for our deliverance. If we endure temptation, we are blessed, and shall be crowned with the crown of life, I am. 1, 12. And thus much touching the vain attempt of Balaam's sorcery.

CHAP. XXV.

1 NOW whilst Israel abode in Shittim, the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab.

2 Which called the people unto the sacrifice of their gods, and the people eat, and bowed down, &c.

3 And Israel coupled himself unto Baal-Peor: wherefore the wrath of the Lord was kindled, &c.

4 And the Lord said unto Moses, Take all the heads of this people, and hang up to the Lord before this Sun, that the indignation of the Lord's wrath may be turned from Israel.

5 Then Moses said to the Judges of Israel, Everyone slay his men that were joined to Baal-Peor.

6 And behold, one of the children of Israel came, and brought unto his brethren a Midianitish woman in the sight of Moses, and in the sight of all the Congregation of the children of Israel, who wept before the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

WEe heard in the last verse of the former chapter, how Balaam arose and went his way from Balak the King of Moab. A man would now in reason suppose, that the danger were past, and the storm clean ouerblowne after his departure, and the Israelites wholly set at liberty. But even as a piece of Ordinance being discharged, it is too late and in vain to wish it may not hurt where it lighteth: so Balaam had put that in the head of Balak, before he departed and took his farewell, which was a snare unto the people of God, whereby it came to pass, that he hurt more being absent, then he could hurt present, and wounded them being further off, whom he could not strike near at hand. For he annoyed thē with this counsel, that could not touch them with his coniuring, & sowed that seed whereof sprung up so plentiful an harvest, that albeit he were gone, yet his advice remained, and cast forth such a stinking breath and filthy savor, as smelled rankly in the nostrhils of God, and infected greatly the people against whom it was plotted and contrived.

Now we have noted before, chap. 24, 14. that this was the crafty and devilish device of this sorcerer, when he saw he could not curse and bewitch them, to entice them to whoredom, to eat of things sacrificed to Idols, reproved by the Apostle, 1 Corinth. 10, 14. and after to worship their false gods, and the Idols of their own invention. Balaam knew that God's favor was a sure defense against all invasion of enemies: he knew that sin leaveth us naked of God's protection, & bringeth in the floods of his vengeance upon us.

This wicked wretch knew that they could not be plagued and brought under, unless their God were offended with them, whose favor and friendship is a wall of brass, and as armor of proof, that no weapon can pierce it, no engine can batter it, no force can make a breach to enter upon it. But when we sin against him, we are stripped of our armor, and are left open to all violence, Exod. 32, 25. This is such a principle as was not unknown to the unbelievers, Judith 5, 20, 21. And thus did Balaam teach Balak to lay a stumbling block before Israel, to provoke and entice them to sin against God, by setting before them the beautiful women, which might allure them to fornication, and draw them to Idolatry, by inviting them to their Idol-feasts, and bringing them into their Idol-temples, which thing we see here to come to pass. For the childrē of Israel did commit fornication with the daughters of Moab, they went to their sacrifices, worshipped Baal-Peor, Psal. 106, 28, 29. did eat the sacrifices of the dead, and provoked God with their own inventions, as t e Psalmist teacheth.

In the former part of this book, we have seen how through famine and weariness, and want of waters, they fell to murmuring impatiently and unthankfully against God: Now having passed over all these disadvantages & discommodities, and being entered into part of the Country, where some of the Tribes had •heyr habitation, Possessing Cities that they built not, Fields that they sowed not, Vineyards that they planted not, & houses that they filled not, they fall from God through lusts and pleasures, committing bodily and spiritual fornication with the daughters of Moab. Deut. 6, 10, 11. Thus they are overcome by allurements and enticements of voluptuousness and sensuality, which could not be subdued by war or witchcraft, according to the received opinion, It is harder to overcome prosperity, then adversity; and pleasure then sorrow. Indeed we are compassed about with many temptations, and the subtle serpent layeth baits before us of all sorts; some on the right hand, and other on the left hand: yet none are more dangerous or deceitful, then such as come masking under the vizard of honor, pleasure, profit, and preferment, as we see in David, in Sampson, in Solomon, in Lot, in Noah, and in the Israelites in this place, all which were caught with these hooks. Wherefore Moses having already set down what outward dangers they had ouerpassed, threatening their ruin, and working together to stop their passage into the Land of Canaan: now he declareth an inward danger greater then the former, arising from themselves, and settled in their own bowels, even their own sins against the first & second Table, which had consumed them in the Wilderness, unless God in mercy had been appeased toward them at the intercession of Moses, and the execution of Phinehas.

Such is our weakness in all our ways, and thus we halt in our obedience: so that our strength is to confess our own frailty, and a step toward perfection, is to acknowledge our own imperfection.

Having therefore in the chapters going before, considered the entrance into this history, as also the history it self of Balak and Balaam: let us now hear the end and conclusion of all in this chapter, wherein we are to consider three things. First, the sin of the Israelites committed against God. Secondly, the reconciliation and atonement whereby his wrath is pacified. Thirdly, the commandment and decree of God against the Midianites, through whom the scandal and offense came. Touching y^e first point delivered in this division, which is, the sin of the people; the Spirit of God setteth down both the circumstances and substance thereof. For first, it is described by the time when it was committed, by the place where it was committed, and by the means or manner how it was committed.

The time and place were, while the Israelites rested and remained in the plain of Moab•t Shittim, which is the two and forty mansion, and the last place where they pitched their tents in the wilderness, as appeareth in y^e three and thirty chapter of this book of Numbers, ver. 50: which serveth to increase the greatness of their sin, in that being now brought by the providence and mighty hand of GOD to the frontiers and confines of the land of promise, they do shamefully and shamelessly fall from him. The manner and occasion of their sin was, in that the Moabites and Midianite, (brethren in evil) combined together both to one purpose, by Balaam's counsel made their daughters common, to entice and allure the Israelites, being no doubt adorned with whorish attire, & decked in all wanton and lascivious manner, fit to bring them to their lure and love, or rather lust, and so to work their overthrow: as we see Solomon describing the harlot, painteth her out in her colors and cunning, that she maybe well known, & better detested, Prov. 3, 4. and 6, 24, 25. and 7, 10, 11. and 9, 13, 14.15. Thus much of the circumstances of their sin.

Touching the substance of their sins, we are to observe both their wicked facts, and their obstinate contumacy, and settled continuance in their sin. Their facts or actions are noted to be these three. First, bodily fornication and uncleanness, condemned in the seventh Commandment, defiling the host, hindering true sanctification, and estranging them from God, who is a God of purity and holiness, and who commanded them to be holy. Secondly, Idolatry which is spiritual fornication, forbidden in the first Commandment, which prohibiteth us to have, to acknowledge, and worship strange gods. This is utterly to renounce our faith to God the Husband of his Church, to defile the marriage covenant, Hosea 2, 19. and to deny that true Religion into which we are entered. Thirdly, they coupled themselves to Baal-Peor, that is, to the Image of Baal, which was adored and worshipped in Mount-Peor, Numb. 23, 32. where no doubt the Idol had some Shrine or Chapel erected for his service, in like manner as the Papists do call her the Lady of Lauretto, which is worshipped in that place. With this filthy and detestable Idol they joined themselves, and worshipped it with divine worship, and consequently renounced the worship of God, being made one body with the Idolaters. For when once his worship is mingled and corrupted, the true God is turned into an Idol, such worship is Idolatry and abomination in his sight: for (as the Prophet saith) If God be God, follow him: if Baal be God, follow him, 1 Kings 18, 21. Now in setting down these sins, mark how the Israelites fell into them by steps and degrees. If the Moabitish women had at the first tempted them to worship Baal, and had said unto thē, Come let us go serve strange gods, no doubt they would have detested and abhorred so great wickedness. But Satan is a more expert and cunning workman, and his instruments are more subtle and wise in their generation. Therefore, first they call them to their feasts and banquets, to eat of the meats and delicacies that they had prepared, and afterward they draw them to Idolatry, which for the most part hath fornication a companion with it, as we shall see hereafter further opened unto us.

The next point is their obstinacy and continuance in the dregs of their sins, joined with shamelesse and hardness of heart. But because all stubbornness and contumacy presupposeth of necessity, both reproof and chastisement. Moses setteth down the observation of this course and order. For first, the chief heads of that people which fell to commit Idolatry and fornication, were apprehended and executed before the going down of the Sun, to pacify the wrath of the Lord, lest if that wickedness had remained unpunished, the whole body of the people should be defiled. Thus God declareth, Acts 10, 34, 35. That with him is no respect of persons, but as he that doth righteously is accepted of him, so he that provoketh him, sinneth against his own soul. The higher the place of men is, the greater is their sin, who hurt more by their example, then by their offense. Thus the chief in the offense, are also the chief in the punishment. After this hanging up of the heads of this rebellion, he chargeth the Judges and Officers of the people, that had kept themselves pure and undefiled, to kill all those with the sword that had sinned against the Lord, which belonged to their charge and jurisdiction, according to the ordinance of God and order that he had established, Exod. 18, 25, appointing them to be Rulers over hundreds, Rulers over fifties, & Rulers over tens. Thus the wrath of God was appeased, the rest of the multitude were spared, and the plague ceased, which was begun in the host, as appeareth in the words following.

Now albeit these were most lively arguments of the wrath and indignation of God, yet y^e Israelites continued with an high hand, and a proud heart to provoke the most High to his face, so that one not of the least & lowest, but of the principal and chiefest among them, brought an whorish woman into the host to despise God, his people, and religion. This man thought it not sufficient to go out of his Tent to those strange women, but brought one of thē openly without shame into the Campe, before his brethren, before Moses and the other Magistrates; yea, to fill up the measure of his abominations, to the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, thereby blaspheming God, reproaching his Religion, enticing his brethren, insulting over Moses and the whole assembly, that cried unto God for mercy to stay his judgment, and to spare his people. Loe, such was the impudency of this Zimri, that notwithstanding the tumults and hurly-burlyes in the host, yet he is not moved to repentance, either with the punishment inflicted upon the malefactors, or by the plague of God raging among his brethren, or by the tears and supplications of the godly, entreating for pardon, & lying prostrate at the door of the Tabernacle: but in the midst of all these judgments, neither fearing GOD, nor reuerencing man, he seeketh to satisfy his filthy lust in the sight of the Sun, and in the open view of all his brethren, even of the whole host.

Verse 1. Now whilst Israel abode in Sittim.] Before we come to speak of the sin of the people, it shall not be amiss to consider the occasion whereby they fell into sin. We have heard how Balaam being hired to curse Israel, could not: for God stayed and restrained him, who was greedy of the wages of iniquity. Wherefore he counseled Balak to bring the people to destruction, by procuring them to fall into some sin. Thus he laid a stumbling block before the children of Israel, and thereby did draw them to spiritual and carnal fornication. For whatsoever the Israelites here committed, they did through the counsel and procurement of Balaam.

From hence we learn, that it is a particular note of false Teachers, and false doctrines, to set stumbling blocks before men, to draw them to uncleanness and wickedness, either against the first or second Table, or both. I say, false Teachers, which are the instruments of Satan (who he hath thrust into the church) have this special care to bring the servants of God into wickedness, to draw them to idolatry, and to destroy their faith. To this purpose Moses teacheth, Deut. 13, 1. that false Prophets shall set before them this end, to entice the children of God to serve false gods, but true Idols. This the Prophet Ezekiel noteth, chapter 13.19, that they made God's word to serve their bellies, and taught carnal liberty, sowing pillows under every arm hole, polluting the Name of God, for an handful of Barley, and for a piece of bread, slaying the souls of them that should not die, giving life to the souls that should not live, crying peace, where God proclaimeth open war, & lying to the people that hear their lies. The Scribes and Pharisees corrupted the law by false interpretations and expositions, as appeareth in the Doctrine of Christ, reducing the Law to the true meaning of the Law-giver. So the Apostle declareth, that those ravening wolves which should creep into the Church of God, purpose to make havoc of the people of God: I know this, that after my departing, shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock, Acts 20, 29. The Apostle Paul prophesying of the coming of Antichrist, calleth the doctrine of Antichrist, The mystery of Iniquity, 2 Thess. 2, 7. It is the common practice of the Jesuits and Seminary Priests, scattered here and there in the Land, to bring the people to Idolatry.

The Reasons of this truth are manifest [Reason 1] First, from the counsel of God: for albeit no wickedness be in the most High, yet it is his wisdom and power to draw good out of evil as he did light out of darkness; that so they which are his, may be tried, that their faith may be proved, their love to God and the truth manifested, and his children always exercised, that they may be made the more careful and watchful, and so find by experience, how they can stand out unto the end of their days in all holy obedience. This reason is laid open in the thirteenth chapter of Deuteronomy, verse 3. where the doctrine hath his confirmation: If there arise among you a Prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and give thee a sign or wonder, thou shalt not hearken to the words of the Prophet, for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul. And the Apostle teaching that God hath appointed that heresies shall be in the Church, annexeth this reason, that the faith of God's children, seated in the heart, may be made manifest; There must be even heresies among you, that they which are approved among you, might be known, 1 Cor. chap. 11.

Another Reason, is in the malice of those [Reason 2] wicked men themselves. For this is the nature of the devil, and the property of devilish men, and the cruelty of them both; they carry a continual hatred to the truth and the professors of it, they seek to make a spiritual slaughter and havoc of the flock of Christ. Therefore the Apostle exhorting the Elders of Ephesus, prophesieth, y^t grievous wolves should rage against the sheep of Christ, yea, of their own selves should men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw disciples after them, Act. 20, 30. All wolves do account and find by experience, the blood of Lambes to be sweeter thē the blood of all other beasts, and therefore they are sheep-byters, rather than hog-byters, or dog-byters. The profane and heathen are in the power and possession of Satan already, he hath made sure of them: his chiefest labor and endeavor is, to circumvent and subvert the servants of God. So his instruments do hate the faithful (as the wolf doth the sheep:) the lambes are mild, peaceable, and simple: the wolf, bloody, beastly, and cruel; & therefore no marvel if they seek to suppress the truth, and to overthrow the servants of God, which are the professors and maintainers of the truth 2 Tim. 3, 8.

Now let us apply this doctrine to our several [Use 1] uses. First, we may assure our own harts of this, that so long as this world continueth, the Church shall never be without unclean beasts to assault it; either heretics, or false seducers, or hyrelings, that regard the fleece more than the sheep, the dignity more than the duty, the profit more than the labor. Some are cruel and savage wolves, not sparing to devour the flock by open violence. Some are cunning and crafty Foxes, undermining the faith of the faithful. Many unstable people, that are ever learning, and never attaining to the knowledge of the truth, are greatly offended because of the vanity and variety that is in men's opinions; and hereupon they cry out, they know not what way to take, they know not what doctrine to receive, they do not know in such diversities, what to believe. This scandal is hereby removed, and this objection answered. For seeing we learn that the end of wolves and seducers is to be occupied about God's people to ruin them, it followeth that the Church of Christ upon earth, shall always have some of these wolves and false Teachers, carrying a show of lawful Pastors, but indeed are ravening wolves. Wolves shall always be in the Church, of one sort or other, such as teach false doctrine, or persecute God's servants, or loving the hire more then the sweat or heat of the day, and the wages better then the work, and the gains rather then the pains and labor. Christ our Savior, whē the Pharisees had spoken against him, John 7, 47. and 8, 13. and 9, 16, 24, and sought both by persuasion and excommunication to lead away the people; to make the faithful wise against their practices, declareth his office and person in a Parable, John 10, 14, 30. wherein he compareth God's chosen, to sheep, and himself to a Shepherd: by this occasion he advertiseth them of three sorts of Teachers, which meddle with the flock of God; the first is a Shepherd; the second an hyreling; the third a thief and a robber. Christ also testifieth, that there shall be false Christ's, and false Prophets in the Church, that shall deceive if it were possible, the elect of God, Math. 24, 24.

So then, we are not to wonder at it, as at a strange thing, when we see diversity of judgments, and contrariety of opinions, nor by & by to say, Alas! what shall we do that are simple? There are great Doctors of one side, and as great Doctors of the other side: I will never be settled in religion, till all be agreed. This is a notable illusion of the devil, and a subtle delusion, whereby under a great show of wisdom, he draweth many to destruction. For these men think they speak discreetly and wisely, and yet they speak most ignorantly and foolishly. For wilt thou not resolve of thy religion, until there be a general agreement and a full accord of all parts? Then thou wilt never be settled nor resolved, thou wilt never be of any religion, inasmuch as thou shalt never see that perfect concord which thou supposest & surmisest. Where the good husbandmā soweth his good seed, the envious will sow his darnel, Math. 13, 25. Hence it cometh to pass, that in the Church there have always been Teachers against Teachers, Prophets against Prophets, Apostles against Apostles, Preachers against Preachers. For as God raised up his Prophets, so hath the devil his false Prophets; as Christ chose his Apostles, so the devil called his false Apostles; as God hath his Church, so the devil hath his chapel; and as God hath two or three gathered together in his Name, the devil will have twenty gathered together in his name. When God sent Moses and Aaron to work miracles in the sight of Pharaoh, to warrant his calling, and to bring his people out of the Land of Egypt, the devil had his two ministers, Iannes and Jambres that withstood Moses and Aaron, deluding the Egyptians, and hardening Pharaoh in his evil. When Jeremiah had in the Name of God denounced captivity to be brought upon the people, and determined y^e time to be seventy years, the devil provoked Hananiah a false Prophet, to speak in the presence of all the people, that within two years, the vessels of the Lord's house shall be restored, the yoke of Nebucadnezzar broken, & such as were carried away, be delivered out of captivity, Ierem. 28, 3, 11. When Micaiah prophesied the overthrow of Ahab, and the scattering of Israel upon the Mountains, as sheep that had no Shepherd, 2 Kings 22, 17, 22, the devil bestirred himself, & went out as a false spirit in the mouth of all his Prophets. Here we see Prophets teaching against Prophets, and the servants of God set against the servants of the devil. This is it which the Apostle Peter witnesseth, 2. Pet. 2, 1, 2. There were false Prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false Teachers among you; which privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that hath bought them, &c.

True it is, it is a great temptation when we behold such difference and opposition. Moses and Aaron saw the enchanters counterfeit the signs and miracles which they wrought by the finger of God, yet did they not distrust their calling, nor cry out against God. A man would think Moses and the Magicians to be of equal power and authority, and one to be esteemed as much as the other. Thus the ungodly shall always find something to delude them, and to hold them in blindness. Such as will not believe the truth, shall be fed with dreams, and be deceived with lies, 2 Thes. 2, 10. Notwithstanding, as the rod of Moses devoured the charmers rod, so the truth shall overcome errors, and the light of the Sun shall abolish the darkness of the night. This the Apostle Paul alledgeth to comfort Timothy, and in his person encourageth all the servants of GOD, and Ministers of his word, showing, That he will provide that his truth shall not always be oppressed, though it be suppressed for a season, yet in the end it shall prevail, 2 Tim. 3, 3, 8. God will make it to be received and entertained, when Satan and his instruments shall be confounded. Albeit Iannes and Jambres withstood Moses, and resisted the truth, yet their madness was made manifest to all. Thus then we have two manner of comforts, when we see the truth not received, but resisted; not believed, but contradicted; First, because the Lord useth us no otherwise then he hath used his Church at all times, and in all ages. Moses and the Prophets had continual war made against them: CHRIST and his Apostles were gain-said and withstood: therefore let us take it patiently at this day, if we suffer and sustain the like measure at the hands of wicked and ungodly men. For we must not look that our condition should be better then of Moses and the Prophets: or what reason have we to expect a privilege or prerogative above them? Secondly, the end shall always be good, & the issue blessed, though it grieve us to fight, and the truth sometimes seem to be in danger, yea, to be utterly abolished; let us wait God's leisure, and consider, that howsoever it may be smothered with the cloudy mystes and darkness of the night, yet it shall prevail and break forth as the light, in the open sight of all men that have spiritual eyes to look upon it.

Seeing therefore the truth of God shining brightly, hath always been resisted, and that the true Prophets of God have been withstood, so as they could never serve God quietly, through the malice of Satan, who continually goeth about to stop the course of sound doctrine; let us not be offended with false opinions; it hath been so from the beginning, and will continue so unto the ending of the world: but rather labor to have our hearts established in the truth, that we be not carried about with every blast, as the waves of the sea; and try all things, holding fast that which is good. 1 Thess. 5, 21. We must not refuse and reject the truth of God, because the father of lies seeketh to hinder the free passage of it, by broaching lies among the people. It is an evident sign that the truth is among us, because Satan sweateth so much against it, and laboreth to poison it with his own inventions.

[Use 2] Secondly, seeing false Teachers are thrust upon the Church, to draw it into error and falsehoods, this showeth the great necessity of the Ministry of the word, not only to ingender true knowledge of repentance and obedience to God, but also to continue men in the faith, and to prepare them against heresies and false opinions. And surely the mercy of God herein is great unto us, in commanding the sanctification of the Sabbath (a duty so much neglected of master and servant) whereby we are charged to rest from our labors, to assemble together in one place, and to attend upon the Ministry of the word. For how many among our selves, and elsewhere, do never so much as think of God, or of religion; do never hear of the danger of sin, of the necessity of grace, of the reformation of their life, but on the Lord's day? If there were not a set day appointed for these purposes, and a solemn time of assembling our selves determined: the greatest sort would become as rude and unreformed as the Barbarians, or the wild Irish. If then we would be directed in the truth, and supported from falling into error, we must submit our selves unto the Ministry of the word, Mal. chap. 2, verse 7. and be content to be guided by the ordinance of God.

This is it which our Savior speaketh, reproving the Sadducees, who denied the resurrection, Are ye not therefore deceived, because ye know not the Scripture, nor the power of God? Mark, chapter 12, verse 24. It is dangerous to rest where there is no bread to sustain the body, and to preserve life. It is dangerous to dwell in a City assaulted by enemies, having no watchman to give warning of their approaching. It is dangerous to have a flock of sheep compassed about with wolves, having no Shepherd to attend upon them, and to look unto them. But of all dangers it is the greatest, to live where the bread of God's word is not broken, where the sound of God's silver Trumpet is not heard, and where God's flock is not led in green pastures. The word is a Pearl of all Pearls, which a wise Merchant would purchase at a great price, rather than live without it. Where the preaching of the word ceaseth, the people perish, Prov. chapter 29, verse 18. Where the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch, Matthew, chap. 15, verse 14. Where the watchman bloweth not the Trumpet, and the people is not warned, Ezek. chap. 33, verse 6, both the Watchman and the people are taken away in their sins. Where the Salt of God's word doth not season the people with holy and wholesome doctrine, Math. chapter 5, verse 13, they rot and putrefy in their corruptions.

As then we would be free from error, and not be carried away with false doctrine: so it is required of us to be careful in using the means that may bring us to the truth, and keep us from the paths of falsehood. And it shall be a vain thing for any man to imagine himself to be able or likely to keep himself pure and undefiled from error and heresy, so long as we despise the ordinary way that is allotted and appointed to preserve us, from falling into false opinions.

Thirdly, seeing it is a note of a false teacher, [Use 3] to lay stumbling blocks before men, and to draw them to evil, and entice them to wickedness: by this rule it will evidently appear that Popish Religion is a most wicked Religion, and the Teachers thereof, false Prophets. The Religion maintained in the church of Rome, established in the Trent-council, & defended by the sworn vassals of the Pope, hath cancelled and disannulled the whole Law of God, it hath abrogated and repealed either directly or indirectly, either expressly, or by consequent, either plainly, or in effect, all the commandments of the Moral Law, which God hath left to be a rule of righteousness, to remain in full strength, power, and virtue forever.

This will easily appear unto us, if we enter into the particular consideration of both the Tables.

The first Commandment chargeth us to have and to hold the true God only for our God, and to cleave unto him with full purpose of heart. But the Church of Rome resteth not in this one GOD; they teach us to make and acknowledge more God's. They make the Pope to be God, which title both in plain words is ascribed, and in power attributed unto him. For touching the name where by he is named, the Canonists call him, Our Lord God the Pope. Others call him, The supreme God on earth, a visible God, the spouse of the Church, the corner-stone of the Church, the head of the Church, the Lyon of the Tribe of Judah, the light of the world, the King of Kings, & the prince of the Church. Again, they advance y^e Saints departed into the honor of gods, praying unto them, and making them to hear our prayers, to know our hearts, to understand our thoughts, and to merit for us at the hands of God, which none can do but the Son of God. They do notoriously make the blessed Virgin the mother of Christ, to be as a god, & in express words call her a goddess; yea, they do in effect equal her with Christ, and ascribe as much to her, as unto him. As Christ is called our Lord, so they call her our Lady; he our King, she our Queen; he our Mediator, she our mediatrix; he like us in all things, sin only excepted; so she devoid of sin: he the only means whereby we must be saved, she our life, our joy, our hope, our help, our comfort, our stay in troubles. Lastly, to fill up the measure of their sin, they make the wooden cross as a god, they call it the ground of our salvation, and salute it by the name of their only hope.

2 The second commandment requireth, that we worship the true God purely, according to his most holy word, and forbiddeth all false and forged worship of the true Jehovah. The Church of Rome directly overturneth the intent and end of this Law by their imagery, they teach it to be lawful to make images of the true God, and to worship them with religious worship.

3 The third Commandment prescribeth unto us to give all honor and glory unto God that is due to his great name. The Church of Rome teach men to give this glory to some things else; they hold that the people are to be barred from the free use of the Scripture, & allow to swear by Saints, Angels, Cross, Rood, and such like.

4 The fourth Commandment appointeth the sanctification of the Sabbath. The church of Rome keep the days of Saints more duly and strictly, more solemnly and precisely then the Lord's day, and abrogate the liberty of the six days.

5 The fifth Commandment establisheth the several degrees amongst men. The church of Rome challenge an immunity for their clergy, and a freedom from answering before the secular power: they deny that their holy father oweth subjection to Princes or Emperors: They teach, he hath power to depose Princes, and to discharge their subjects from their allegiance, and may dispose of all kingdoms at his pleasure, Lastly, they free Children from the obedience of their parents, and allow them to enter into Cloisters and Monasteries, without their counsel and consent.

6 The sixth Commandment bindeth up our hearts and hands from all cruelty, & willeth us to preserve life, and show forth the fruits of mercy. The Church of Rome open wide gappes for the free committing of murder, and shedding of blood. They give Pardons, nay promises of heaven to destroy and poison Princes: they appoint sanctuaries and privileged places for willful murderers, contrary to the law of God, who would have such pulled from his Altar, and no religious place to give them succor or protection, Exod. 21, 11. 1 Kin. 2, 31. And concerning the murthing of souls, a great part of their Doctrine leadeth the highway to it, and giveth them a deadly wound.

7 The seventh Commandment condemneth all impurity and uncleanness of soul & body, and commandeth us to possess our vessels in holiness and honor. The Church of Rome shaketh the foundation of this Commandment, and crosseth the purpose of God therein, by forbidding marriage, by accounting it an unclean life, by establishing vows of single life, by tolerating and defending the stews, by giving liberty for Incest, by allowing the brother to marry his brothers Wife, the uncle to marry his neece; and lastly, by forbidding such degrees as God hath not restrained, to open a way for the Popes dispensations.

8 The eight Commandment chargeth us with the goods of our neighbor. The church of Rome teach it to be lawful to make sale of men's souls out of Purgatory, & as cunning, nay cozening Merchants, they set all things at offer and proffer: they sell Crosses, Images, & Prayers: they sell the remission of sins, and the kingdom of heaven for money, yea, they rob men of their inheritance, defeating & defrauding their posterity, to maintain their idle bellies.

9 The ninth Commandment forbiddeth all false witness bearing. The Church of Rome do bear false witness against God, falsifying the Canon of the Scriptures, and make God speak that which he hath not spoken. They teach, that neither faith, nor promise, nor oath must be kept with Heretics; they maintain and practice the Doctrine of Equiuocation, of mental evasion, and secret reservation unto themselves of an hidden sense, contrary to the common understanding of the same words, thereby overthrowing all equity, & the course of justice among men.

The tenth Commandment restraineth the motions of the mind, and commandeth a pure heart toward our neighbor. The Church of Rome teacheth, that the motions without consent, are no sins at all; so that they expressly repeal this Commandment, and evidently declare, they never understood the meaning of it. Notwithstanding, these are those Teachers that boast themselves to be the successors of the Apostles, and to have the only right calling, yet we see how corrupt they are in doctrine, glorying in the naked name of the Church, and over-turning the foundation whereon it is built.

[Use 4] Lastly, this teacheth sundry duties both to the Pastors and people committed unto their charge. First of all, it putteth the Ministers in mind to look to their flocks, & to take heed to them that they be not seduced. We are all of us naturally inclined to falsehood and error, and love darkness better than light, that so we may walk at liberty, and not be controlled. But our danger is greater by reason of false seducers which are deceitful workmen, and the instruments of the subtle Serpent, by whom they are inspired. This duty being so necessary in regard of the common danger of the Church, is diverse times urged by Christ and his Apostles. Christ warneth his Disciples to be watchful, because of false teachers that should arise in the last days, Matth. 24, 24. The Apostle Jude testifieth, chap. 3, verse 4. that he gave diligent heed to write unto them of the common faith, which was once given unto the Saints; because there were certain ungodly men crept in, which turned the grace of God into wantonness, and denied GOD the only Lord, and our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Apostle Paul exhorting the elders of Ephesus, propounding unto them his own example, & foretelling the danger that hung over their heads, to wit, that their faith should be assaulted, and their zeal tried by false teachers springing up from themselves, saith: Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the Flock, whereof the holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the Church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood: Watch therefore, & remember, that by the space of three years, I ceased not to warn everyone night and day with tears, Acts 20, 28, 29. So the same Apostle chargeth Timothy before God, and before the Lord Jesus Christ, Which shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing, and in his kingdom, to preach the Word in season, and out of season; because the time will come when they will not suffer wholesome Doctrine, but having their ears itching, shall after their own lusts get them an heap of Teachers, turning from the truth, and giving heed to fables. Secondly, this serveth to instruct the people of God to be thoroughly furnished and well prepared against such seducers, that they may be able to stand our against them, and to resist them steadfastly in the faith. We shall be fitted to bear out this trial, if we be careful to understand the acceptable will of God; and if we be able to wield the sword of the Spirit, w^c is the word of God. Our Savior teacheth his Disciples to beware of false Teachers, which come in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravening Wolves, Mat. 7, 15. This is the use which the Apostle Jude maketh, chap. 4: where making mention that seducers were entered secretly and subtly among them, he moved them to strive and contend for the common faith taught by his ministry. If we would know how this should be, let us have our faith stablished in the grace of God, and our hearts settled in the truth. Faith is a precious Jewel, the Jewel of Jewels: it must then be kept well and warily. If a man have a pearl of great price committed unto him, he will not let it lie about commonly and carelessly for everyone to pilfer & purloine, but keep it under lock & key, that it may be preserved safe and sure. True Religion built upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, is such a Pearl, it must be kept with watch and ward, or else it will be stolen and taken from us. It is such a Jewel, as when a man hath found it, he will sell all that he hath to keep and retain it.

[The people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab.] We have heard before the author of that stumbling-block, which was laid before the feet of the people of God, to cause them to fall, to wit, Balaam; from him the counsel came, by him the net was made, and by Balak it was spread to intrap them. Now we see what they committed, & wherein they offended. So soon as the plot is devised, and the counsel followed, by and by the Israelites are taken in the snare. They banquet with the Moabites in the idol feasts, & so fall into fornication. These are temptations on the right hand, delights to the flesh, and enticements to pleasures. The Doctrine arising from hence is this, That temptations from pleasures & delights, are of all other most dangerous, & more effectual to prevail over us then such temptations as stand on the left hand, to wit, crosses & adversities. Indeed we are assailed on every side; on the left hand by poverty, shame, contempt, persecutions, and such like, w^c cause many to hang down their heads, to cast away their confidence, to renounce their faith, & to depart out of y^e field without striking a stroke: but such as present themselves at our right hand, as riches, power, honor, glory, preferment profit, pleasure, which dazzle the eyes, and entangle the heart with the delights thereof, these are most cunning Engines and instruments, used or rather abused by Satan to our destruction. This was the last temptation, as most available in it self, that the devil used against our Savior Christ, Mat. 4, 8. showing and offering unto him the kingdoms of the world, & the glory thereof. Faire promises of high preferment prevailed with Eve to eat of the forbidden fruit. He gave David the foil by uncleanness, and Noah by drunkenness; Solomon by idolatry, and Hezekiah by prosperity, when he could not shake them by crosses and persecutions. Gold and silver have opened the gates of the Citty, when the force of the Cannon shot could not. This is that which the Prophet David meaneth, when he saith, I said in my prosperity, I shall not be removed, Psal. 30, 6. The Church of God was never so overtaken with adversity, as with abundance and prosperity: & more are brought to condemnation by riches, pleasures, and worldly lusts, then by poverty and persecution.

[Reason 1] The Reasons to enforce this doctrine, are diverse. First, prosperity puffeth up not only the wicked, but also the godly, and stealeth away the heart of man before he feel the danger, and can think upon that which will follow. Pleasures make us forget God and our selves; both seducing worldlings, and such as remember not God all their life long, and ouertaking the faithful (which have walked in the fear of God) when they have all things at will, so as they have not known themselves anymore. When Solomon was old, his wives by flattery turned away his heart. 1 Kings 11, 4. So did Delilah the heart of Sampson, judge. 14. & 15, who was made so weak & impotent by the look of a woman, that he yielded himself to her lure or lust most reproachfully, & brought himself into extreme bondage and slavery through her enticements.

[Reason 2] Secondly, carnal pleasures and riches are deceitful, they appear otherwise then they are. They are like to a bait that covereth a deadly hook, they are like the green grass, in which lurketh and lieth a Serpent ready to sting us unto death: they are like some cunning Couering that hideth a deep pit prepared to swallow us. This is the reason used by the Apostle, showing, That they which will be rich, fall into temptations and snares, and into foolish and noisome lusts, 1 Tim. 6, 9, 1. Solomon speaking of falling into whoredom, saith, Prov. 7, 21. & 5, 2. The lips of a strange Woman drop as an honey comb, and her mouth is softer then Oil; when as her end is as bitter as wormwood, & as sharp as a two-edged sword: her paths lead to the grave, and her ways tend to hell by this means she catcheth fools, and bringeth them to the stocks as an Ox to the slaughter.

[Use 1] The uses follow to be considered of us. First, let us learn from hence to confess, that prosperity is a slippery estate, and howsoever it be much desired and admired, yet it is full of great dangers, and hedged in with diverse difficulties. This is not known nor understood of the men of this world. True it is, whē God sendeth famine, or war, or pestilence, and infectious diseases, all men can say, Alas, these are hard and heavy times, terrible, and troublesome seasons, we are always in danger of death. But we must remember, that when we live at ease, and all of us be at peace, when God delivereth us from diseases, we must not be secure and fall asleep in such prosperity, but consider that we are set in slippery places. This the Apostle Paul teacheth, 2 Tim. 3, 1, where he saith, In the l•st days shall come perilous times: for men shall be lovers of themselves, proud, covetous, boasters, lovers of pleasures more then lovers of God, having a show of godliness, but denying the power thereof. He speaketh of rough and grievous times, yet he neither nameth nor meaneth plague, pestilence, famine, sword, or such like calamities: but he telleth of things more dangerous, although we take our selves to be free and far from all danger. We account no times tedious and troublesome, but when we live in fear of death, or feel our bellies pinched, or else are crossed in the things of this life. Alas, saith one, how hard are these times? we suffer poverty, penury, and great misery! O woeful and wretched times, saith another; the plague is in such a place, it is come near our dwellings, we may look for it every day to sweep us away; how shall we do in these extremities? or whither shall we turn our heads from these troubles? Nevertheless, we must know, that a man may be free from all these distresses, & yet live in the greatest dangers. We may have peace and plenty, we may enjoy health and liberty, we may abound in riches & prosperity, & yet be possessed and compassed about with a thousand plagues more fearful, more deadly, and more dangerous then the pestilence, sword, and famine, which trouble us so much and bring us to our wits end. Let us take heed of our corrupt judgment of the times, and learn more to fear men that live in prosperity then such as sink down into adversity, inasmuch as their temptations are more strong & effectual. Prosperity, ease, peace, and riches, have turned through our corruption, to be the pests and poison of the Church. This the wise man teacheth, Prov. 1, 32. Ease slayeth thee foolish, and the prosperity of fools destroyeth them. It is therefore a great mercy of God, when he teacheth his children to stand upright in this slippery way, and that they make them not their bane, which are given them as a blessing. He setteth before their eyes the daily changes of all things under the Sun, and assureth them that nothing continueth in one estate: he frameth them to the contempt of the world, and setteth their hearts to desire no more then their most wise and provident Father thinketh meet for them. He teacheth them that the most beautiful flowers do fade and lose the glory which for a time they had. They see riches to be uncertain and decei•full, heal•h to be changeable, our friends and acquaintance subject to death, and all human things to be transitory, vain, and soon flitting away. By all these meditations it pleaseth God to stay up his people, that they fall not from him in their prosperity.

Secondly, it should teach us to use patience [Use 2] under the cross, and wisely to bear all the afflictions that God seeth good to lay upon us. We see by experience, that peace and plenty have done the Church more harm then wars and bloody persecutions: not that God's blessings are hurtful and pernicious of themselves, but by reason of our corrupt nature, which is ready to turn his blessings into curses, and his great mercies into so many plagues. This we see in the example of the Sodomites, they dwelled in a fruitful soil, like the garden of Eden, (which God planted, and therein placed our first parents;) but they became exceeding sinners, and abused the blessings of God to their own confusion, Gen. 13, 10. How far prosperity & abundance make us to forget God, consider in the examples of Nebuchadnezzar, Herod, Haman, and sundry others. Job feared that his sons in their feasting and banqueting, had blasphemed God, Job 1, 5. It appeareth in the parable of the rich man, that made a feast, & sent out his messengers to invite his guests, that they refused to come, and pretended sundry excuses, one had hired a farm, another had bought five yoke of oxen, another had married a wife, he could not come: whereby our Savior showeth, what causes commonly they are that withdraw and withhold men's minds from obeying God's word, & embracing the Gospel, to wit, the cares of the world, the commodities of this life, the deceitfulness of riches, the pleasures of the flesh, & the study of earthly things: these were such rank thorns, that they choked all heavenly meditations, & hindered the growth of spiritual graces: these brought a fogginess upon the soul, and wrought in them a forgetfulness of God. Wherefore, let us not murmur and repine under the cross, but stoop down under his mighty hand, who sendeth his correction for our good, that we should not perish, and be condemned with the world, Heb. 12, 7. Psal. 119, 71. 1 Cor. 11, 31. He doth not take pleasure and pastime in punishing of us, but as a loving father he respecteth only our benefit. He hath many ways to deliver us, & promiseth that our afflictions shall not be above our strength, but have a good end, and an happy issue. We must be content with the Lord's doings, and know that he will sanctify the afflictions of our bodies, to the comfort of our souls, whilst those that flow in earthly blessings, and abound in outward prosperity, do forget God that made them, and run on in the pride of their hearts to unthankfulness against God.

[Use 3] Thirdly, let us not be deceived with sinful pleasures, when the bait is offered, and the net pitched before us, to take us with the hook, and to catch us in the snare; but be careful to reject and refuse whatsoever tempteth us unto evil. Pleasures are of two sorts: some are simply unlawful, and not to be used at all, being directly contrary to the word of God. Such are the pleasures that carnal men take in eating till they surfeit, and in drinking till they are drunken: such are the pleasures that whoremongers take in adultery, fornication, and uncleanness. Others are of themselves indifferent, and in their own Nature neither good nor evil, but according as they are used, as hunting, hawking, and other lawful recreations; and even these, when they take up all our thoughts, and thrust out better things out of the doors, are called thorns in the parable of the Sower, as well as unlawful pleasures, Luk. 8, 14. There is nothing doeth so much choke the word of God, as the pleasures of the flesh; nothing causeth us so soon to forget it; nothing maketh us so soon weary, and loath to hear it, as the desire to follow and pursue after our delights; so that it standeth us upon to cut them up, and to pull them out of the ground of our hearts. We see men will not suffer briars and bushes to spring up where their corn should grow, much more it is required of us to rid our hearts of all occasions and allurements unto sin. The Faith of Moses is commended, that he refused to be called the son of Pharaohs daughter, and chose rather to suffer adversity with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, esteeming the rebuke of Christ greater riches then the treasures of Egypt, for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward. Let us therefore shake off all pleasures of sin, not only such as are in themselves ungodly and unlawful, but all other whatsoever, when they become clogs and incumberances unto us, and hinder us in the duties of our callings. Many indeed are drawn and driven from the word by trouble and persecution: but many moe fall away by peace & prosperity, by riches, wealth, & pleasures, which (when men are delighted and drunken with them) are more dangerous enemies then affliction and adversity. We see many by experience, who in the days of tribulation have not given over their hold, but endured slanders, revilings, imprisonment, hunger, and thirst in a necessitous estate; yet have been overcome with peace, drowned with sensuality, and lulled asleep in carnal security. Even as a company of Mariners, so long as they are in danger of drowning, through violence of winds, and rage of the Tempest, and working of the sea, do watch and look about them, follow their calling, and keep the ship from sinking; but when all is safe and quiet, do fall out among themselves, or delight in quaffing, and care not which end go forward; so is it with us that live in these days of peace and quietnesse, we remember not what God hath done for us, neither are led by his mercies unto obedience. We cannot deny but that our blessings have been many and great, but as Moses complaineth, Deut, 32, 15. He that should have been upright when he waxed fat, spurned with his heels. For it may be truly said of us which is spoken against Israel; we are fat, we are gross, we are laden with fatness, and therefore have we forsaken the Lord, & have not regarded the strong God of our salvation: thus like foolish people and unwise have we rewarded the Lord for his goodness, and recompensed the kindness that we have received at his hands.

[Use 4] Lastly, it is our duty to pray continually to God, that we be not overtaken with them. We live in the days of peace, we dwell quietly in our houses, we taste not the bitterness of affliction, as our neighbors have done round about us; let us take heed we fall not into pride and presumption, and so by the just judgment of God for our unthankfulness, be delivered over as bondslaves unto the devil. This is it which is offered to our considerations in the sixth and last petition of the Lord's prayer, where we pray not to be led into temptation, but to be delivered from evil, Mat. 6, 13. It is not the meaning of Christ in these words, that we should desire of God to be wholly freed from temptations, but we crave his grace, and the power of his Spirit, to sustain & uphold us that we be not overcome, & yield unto them; that we may stand steadfast in our obedience, that we may not be puffed up with prosperity, nor dejected or cast down with adversity. This made the wiseman say to God in his meditations, Give me not riches, but feed me with convenient food for me, lest being full, I lie, and say, Who is the Lord? He prayeth in that place, not only against inconvenient want, and hurtful poverty, but against inconvenient wealth, hurtful store, and overflowing and superfluous abundance, lest his heart should be lifted up, and so he turn from the Commandments of God. So then, when we live under plentifulnesse of outward blessings, when we enjoy health, wealth, peace, and sufficiency of all things for this present life, are we free from dangers? have we no need to watch? or may we be secure? Surely, if we will judge aright, and measure our cases, either by the right line of God's holy law, or by our own Christian experience, we shall find our peril to be the greater, when we have such strong allurements and deceivable provocations, to set our delight upon this world, then when we are holden under afflictions. For then Satan as a subtle enemy, craftily windeth in with us, and worketh upon our hearts by occasion of these blessings of God bestowed upon us. For as the parching heat of the Sun will sooner make a man cast away his cloak than the boisterous and blustering winds: so the gracious days of peace shining upon us, will sooner cause us to cast off our confidence than the storms and tempests that beat upon us. Moses charged the people of Israel when they were brought into the land of Promise, flowing with milk and honey, to beware lest they forgot the Lord which brought them out of the land of Egypt, Deut. 6, 12. Whilst David wandered in the wilderness, was hunted out of holes by Saul, into which he was glad to creep to hide himself, and was trained up in the school of afflictions, he comforted himself in the Lord his God, he made him his rock and refuge, he asked counsel of him, & followed his direction: but when he had rest from enemies, safety from dangers, deliverance from troubles, comfort from sorrows, and freedom from afflictions, he fell into horrible sins, both in the matter of Uriah, & in numbering of the people. When Hezekiah fell sick, and received a message that the sickness was in it self unto death, Isaiah 38, 2. he turned his face to the wall, he prayed to the Lord, and besought the Lord to remember how he had walked before him in the truth, & with a perfect heart: but after that God had remembered him according to his prayer, he forgot the Lord incontinently: so soon as he was released and restored, he was puffed up with ambition and vainglory, when he shown to the messenger of the king of Babel, the riches of his kingdom, the house of his Armor, the greatness of his Treasure, and the abundāce of his Spices and precious Oyntments. When the rich man in the Gospel was willed to sel all that he had, and give it to the poor, & thereby tried whether he loved the Lord, better then riches, he went away heavy and sorrowful: whereupon our Savior delivereth this warning to teach us wisdom, Matth. 19, 23. Verily I say unto you, that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. He doth not deny the rich man entrance, or shut the door against him; but he layeth before him his danger, and telleth us how hardly he shall enter. He never said in the Gospel, how hardly shall the poor man enter into the kingdom of heaven? He never said, how hardly shall he that is persecuted, imprisoned, reviled, afflicted, and tormented, enter into the kingdom of heaven? But he warneth him that liveth in abundance, to look to his footing that he do not slide, and to take heed to his heart, that it be not lifted up. So then, to conclude, when the light of God's countenance doeth shine in our dwellings; when he filleth our houses with store, giveth us an ample portion of wealth & possessions: when he furnisheth our table, and maketh our cup to run over; let us bless the name of the Lord for our plenty which he hath given us: let not us be high minded, and trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God which giveth us abundantly all things to enjoy, which heart can wish or tongue can crave, or hand can receive.

[Verse 2. Which called the people unto the sacrifice of their gods.] The purpose of the Moabites and Midianites was to draw the people into sin, and by sin to bring upon them the judgments of almighty God. No doubt they had heard how God had wasted and destroyed them in the Wilderness, as we read in Numb. chap. 14. verse 29, and their carcasses were consumed by diverse and sundry plagues that did break in upon them by the violence of fire, by the edge of the 〈2 pages missing〉 bountiful, yea prodigal, even to waste their wealth, and to consume their substance, rather than be disappointed of their enterprize. Therefore it standeth us upon, to look warily to our selves, and to have an eye unto them, that they do not suddenly surprise us, & work our confusion. This is the use which Christ teacheth us. Mat. 10, 16. I send you as Sheep in the midst of Wolves: be ye therefore wise as Serpents, and innocent as Doves. This is to be marked of us, and to be practiced by us. Our enemies are not simple and sottish, that they should be contemned, but deep in counsel, prudent in enterprising, wary in proceeding, political in preventing, and sudden in executing what they have devised. They are for the most part wiser in their generations, then the children of light. We are light of credit, ready to believe new reconciled friends, forward to trust fair promises, & apt to rest on shows and pretences of a good meaning. This hath bred greater mischief to the Church then open violence. Their subtlety hath cut deeper, and prevailed further then the sword. If we then shall be found sleeping, when they are watchful, or careless when they are prepared, or naked when they are armed, or secure when they are busily employed; we must look for no pity at their hands where we find no piety, but consider that the mercies of the wicked are tokens of their cruelty, and their bowels of compassion, are the ways of destruction. Prouerb. 12, 10.

[Use 3] Lastly, it is our duty to pray unto God to be delivered from such ungodly and unreasonable men. If once we fall into their snares, we must never look to escape. We must watch and pray that we fall not into the trappes and trains which they make daily to surprise us. Hence it is that the Apostle saith, 2 Thess. 3, 2. Pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have a free passage, and that we may be delivered from unreasonable & evil men, for all men have not faith. We are not able to free and deliver our selves nor match our adversaries in deep devices, who make conscience of nothing. Al our hope and trust must be in God, who will catch the wise in their own craft, and confound them in their own devices. He will turn them into the pit which they have digged, and take thē in the snares which they have prepared for others. As they regard not to fill up the measure of their iniquity, and add sin unto sin; so God will bring their works to light, & fill the cup of vengeance unto them to drink. Let us therefore abstain from their ways, & not give liberty unto our selves to follow them in evil, no not a little: but call upon God in the days of our trouble, who will deliver us out of our distress, Ps. 50, 15. This we see practiced by the Israelites, when they were vexed & sore tormented by the Ammonites, they cried unto the Lord, saying, We have sinned against thee, even because we have forsaken our own God, and have served Baalim: do thou unto us whatsoever pleaseth thee, only we pray thee deliver us this day, Judges 10, 10, 15. When David after his numbering of the people, had the choice given unto him of three judgments, whether he would have brought upon him the want of bread, or the sword of the enemy, or y^e plague of pestilence: he said, I am in a wonderful straight: let us fall now into the hand of the Lord, for his mercies are great, and let me not fall into the hand of man, as 2 Sam, 24. verse 14. When one told Jehoshaphat, that a great multitude came against him out of Aram, he set himself to seek the Lord, he asked counsel of him, he proclaimed a fast, he acknowledgeth his own weakness, he dependeth upon God's power, & prayeth to be deliuerd from them that sought his destruction, 2 Chr. 20, 6. When Hezekiah saw the enemy come to besiege Jerusalem, and perceived his purpose to fight against it, he put on sackcloth, and came into the house of the Lord God, he received the blasphemous Letters of the King of Ashur, reviling the Lord, defying his people, and disgracing them both: he spread them before the Lord, and prayed earnestly unto him to save them out of the hands of their enemies, tht all the kingdoms of the earth might know, that the Lord is only God. So it standeth us upon, to fly unto God, & to call upon him to preserve us from our enemies; and then it shall come to pass, that he which was an arm of defense unto them, will be our helper in due time, even in affliction, who never faileth those that put their trust in him.

[The people ate, and bowed down to their gods.] Here we see another sin of the Israelites laid before us; they fall from one evil into another, from the breach of the first Table, into the breach of the second. Such as made no conscience to eat meat in the Idols Temple, and to bow down to strange gods, no marvel if they followed strange flesh, and fell into the sin of fornication.

From hence ariseth this truth, That all such as are impure and corrupt in the worship of God, are commonly lewd in their outward dealing, and loose in their behavior toward men. Spiritual and bodily fornication, do usually go together; Idolatry and Adultery do ordinarily follow one another; as in this place, we see the people sacrificed unto their gods, and committed whoredom. This the Prophet Hosea expresseth at large, chap. 4, 1, 2: There is no knowledge of God in the land. And what followeth hereof? By swearing & lying, and by killing and stealing, & whoring they break out, and blood toucheth blood. Thus the Prophet, or rather the Lord by the Prophet, upbraideth the people, Jeremiah 5, 7 & 7, 9, 10. How should I spare thee for this? Thy children have forsaken me, and sworn by them that are no gods: though I fed them to the full, yet they committed adultery, and assembled themselves by companies in the harlots houses. The Apostle Paul declareth, that the Heathen which knew not God, were full of all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness, envy, murder, debate, deceit: they were slanderers of men, haters of God, doers of wrong, inuenters of evil things, disobeyers of parents, breakers of Couenants, destitute of natural affections, and void of all mercy, Rom. 1, 29: And the same Apostle writing to the Ephesians, chap. 4, 18. This the Apostle John noteth in the Nicolaitanes, Revel. 2, 14, 20: who maintained the doctrine of Balaam, counseling Balak to lay a stumbling block before the children of Israel, persuading to eat of the things sacrificed to Idols, and alluring unto fornication. This he reproveth in the false Prophetess (whom for her lewd qualities he calleth Jezebel) who deceived the servants of God, to make them commit fornication, and to eat meats that were sacrificed unto idols. Thus it fareth with the Nations that know not God, they are ignorant of the duties which are due unto men.

The Turks that have seated their Empire in the East, and made a mixture of all Religions, to the end they might draw some of all sorts unto themselves, do profess and practice most abominable vices, even by the doctrine of their Alcoran, where that false Prophet Mahomet alloweth a man to have four wives, and to keep fifteen Concubines: he forbiddeth any to be accused of adultery, under four witnesses, and accounteth those most holy men, which accōpany with beasts. The Church of Rome defiling the worship of God by detestable idolatry, as gross as the Heathen committed, and in some part exceeding all the idolatry of the Heathen, in that they worship a breaden god: maintain filthiness and uncleanness sundry ways: First, in the toleration of the Stews, flat against the Commandment of God, Deut. 23, 17. There shall be no whore of the daughters of Israel, neither shall there be an whorekeeper among the sons of Israel. This toleration is a flat occasion to many young men and women that otherwise might abstain from this kind of wickedness. And what monstrous impiety is this, when father and son, Brother and Brother, Uncle and Nephew, shall come to one and the same harlot, one before or after the other? Secondly, they deny marriage as an unholy thing to their holy Clergy, and thereby open a gappe to all kind of pollutions, contrary to the express word of God, that a Bishop should be the husband of one wife, and that marriage is left free, and accounted honorable in all, and the bed undefiled, 1 Tim. 3, 2. & Heb. 13, 4. Thirdly, not to stand further in ripping up these enormities in this place, their Law alloweth the marriage of any persons beyond the fourth degree, whereby in some cases followeth incest. Al these testimonies and examples being thus laid together, do teach us, that corruption of manners, and lewdness of life, do always accompany defects and defilings in the true Religion.

Let us come to consider the causes, to make it more plain and evident unto us. First, such [Reason 1] is the judgment and justice of God, punishing one sin with another, giving over such as make no conscience to know or acknowledge God, into a reprobate sense, and appointing them to be vessels of shame and dishonor. This is the reason which the Apostle directly handleth, Rom. 1, 25, 26. They turned the truth of God into a lie, serving the creature, and forsaking the Creator, which is blessed forever, Amen: for this cause God gave them up unto vile affections, for even their women did change the natural use, into that which is against nature, and likewise also the men left the natural use of the woman, & burned in their lust one toward another, and man with man wrought filthiness, and received in themselves such recompense of their error, as was meet. Where we see, the Apostle charging the Gentiles with turning the glory of the incorruptible God to the similitude of the image of a corruptible man, and so regarded not to serve him, declareth, that God gave thē up to their hearts lusts, and delivered them up into a reprobate mind, so that they committed uncleanness, they defiled their own bodies between themselves, & did those things which are not convenient. So the same Apostle in another place teacheth, That God shall send them strong delusions, that they should believe lies, that all they might be damned which believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness, 2 Th. 2, 11, 12. This dealing is righteous in God, being a punishment for sin, howsoever it be wicked in the committers.

Secondly, the first Table containeth the great and chief Commandments, and the second is like unto it, Math. 22, 38. So then all profaneness is as a bitter and poisoned root, infecting far and near: and as a Tree that ouersadoweth all good herbs, that they cannot grow up or prosper. Our Savior Christ making the sum of the first Table to consist in loving God with all our heart, with all our soul, and with all our mind, calleth this the first and the great Commandment, as the fountain and foundation of the other. So the Apostle John, making the love to God and to men, necessarily to concur and accompany one another, saith; If any man say, I love God, and yet hate his brother, he is a liar: for how can he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, love God whom he hath not seen? 1 John, chapter 4, verse 20. And hence it cometh to pass, that where men have not the fear of God, and the knowledge of his Name, they become abhominable in all their doings.

Thirdly, the devil ruleth & worketh in such as make no care to know God, but walk according to y^e course of this world, in superstition, & in idolatry. The Apostle showeth this to be the cause why they had their conversation in times past, in the lusts of the flesh, & in the fulfilling of the will of the flesh, and of the mind, and were by nature the Children of wrath as well as others, Because they were ruled by the Prince that ruleth in the air, the spirit that worketh in all the children of disobedience, Ephes. 2, 2, 3.

Let us now proceed to the Uses. First, we [Use 1] learn from hence, that we may justly fear all injurious, unjust, and unclean dealing, and look for fraud and oppression where there is no true Religion established and professed. When Abraham went down into Egypt with his wife, and afterward sojourned in the land of Gerar among the Philistines, where was no true knowledge of the true God, he thought thus with himself: Surely the fear of God is not in this place, & they will slay me for my wives sake; and thereby was moved to deny the protection of his wife, and to say she was his Sister, Gen. 12, 12. & 20, 11. This is to be expected & looked for from all such places and persons, that have in them no religion of Christ, no godliness of life, no fear of God; we must prepare our selves to endure all hard & wrongful dealing at their hands. We see this in the example of the Sodomites toward Lot, Gen. 19, 9. & in the inhabitants of Gibeah toward the Levite and his wife, Judge. 1•, 22. For where the fear of God ruleth not, there is no virtue, no truth, no mercy, no honesty, no sobriety, no conscience. They refrain not violence, but run into all wickedness. We see then what holdeth out, and letteth in the flood of ungodly-lines into a place, be it kingdom, city, house, family, or particular person: if the fear of God be there, the wall is strong, the bank is sure, the waves of an evil life cannot overflow: if it be not there, nothing is so horrible and unnatural, but it will enter, and it shall easily be entertained. Happy is that place, and blessed y^t person wherein this fear is, and cursed where this wanteth. For as the bank doth keep the water from overflowing, so doth the fear of God in man or woman hold out the floods & inundations of sin, that it ouerspreadeth not, as otherwise it would. A notable proof of this appeareth in the midwives mentioned in Exodus, ch. 1, 17: when Pharaoh commanded them to kill every male child that was born of the Israelitish women, what was it that kept out this most cruel murder from heart and hand, but this reverent fear of God more then of man, and of his commandment more then of the decree of the King? for so saith the Scripture, The midwives feared God, and therefore did not as the king had charged thē. This fear made Joseph that he durst not sin against his master when he was tempted, nor against his brethren by whom he had been injured, Gen. 39, 9. and 50, 19. This fear is the beginning of wisdom, and a good understanding have all they that do thereafter, the praise of it endureth forever, Psal. 111.10.

[Use 2] Secondly, we see that they which make no conscience to serve God, and to perform the parts of his worship in the exercises of religion, can perform aright no duties to men in any sincerity or simplicity. Such as have no religion in them, are given over to all licentiousness, they are always justly to be doubted, worthily to be suspected, and hardly to be trusted: we are not to look for good dealing to come from them for conscience sake, more then by constraint or necessity, or for y^e praise or applause of the world. For how can any man suppose that that son will be dutiful to a stranger, that is rebellious and disobedient to his natural father? Or that the servant will be true and trusty to another, who hath plaid the thief and false varlet to his own master? God is our Father, the Lord is our master: if any man have no care to serve him, to obey him, to fear him; how can it be expected that he should deal uprightly with men, & discharge a good conscience toward them? There are no duties of the second table accepted, where obedience to the first table is not performed. So then, no trust is to be given, no truth to be looked for of such as are idolaters, and have no religion at all in them. The Prophet Micah complaining of the profaneness of the Jews, that the good were perished out of the land, and the righteous from among men, saith: The best of them is a abriar, and the most righteous of them is a thorny hedge. Trust ye not a friend, neither put ye confidence in a counselor, keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom: for the son reuileth the father, the daughter riseth up against her mother: the daughter in law against her Mother in law, and a man's enemies are the men of his own house, Mic. 7, 5. This place is applied by our Savior Christ against such as shall hate the Gospel; to trust such too far, though never so near us in the flesh, will bring repentance when it is too late.

Lastly, we learn, that the best way to bring a people to be obedient and well ordered for their outward carriage, is to work in them y^e knowledge of religion. If we would have children in their places to be dutiful, servants to be trusty, and both of them to be subject to such as are set over them, behold here the ready way, and the right course that is to be taken with them, we must plant in them the fear of the Lord. It is a common complaint to cry out of the iniquities of times, & to inveigh against the stubbornness of children & unfaithfulness of servants: but in the mean season we consider not where the cause lieth, & how it is to be amended and redressed. The chief and principal occasion of all household disorder, is the want of Christian instruction. Youth are like to the potters clay, fit to be framed into any fashion: or like the soft wax that is ready to receive any impression. If they be suffered to run on without godly education, & to wax ripe in sin as they grow strong in age, they will sooner break like the old tree, then bend like a tender twigge. Abraham is commended by the mouth of GOD for this care; Gen. 18, 19: he had an excellent family, a blessed Isaac, an obedient wife, and trusty servants; everyone knew his duty, everyone was found faithful in his calling. How dutiful Isaac was, appeareth in the preparation y^t Abraham made to offer him up as a burnt Offering to God, according to the commandment of God, Gen. 22, 9: which was a great trial of a great faith, by a great work: he did not rebel and resist his father, but suffered himself willingly to be bound, quietly to be laid upon the Altar, and patiently made himself ready to endure the stroke of the knife. How obedient Sara was, is notably shown herein, in that Abraham having received an express commandment to go out of his country, from his kindred, and from his fathers house, unto a land which God would show him: she waited not for a special calling to warrant her, nor asked counsel of her corrupt affections, but followed him whither soever he went, and was a comfortable companion with him in all his afflictions. Hence it is that the Apostle Peter setteth her forth as a worthy pattern for all women to look upon, 1 Pet. 3, 6. After this manner in times past, did the holy women (which trusted in God) attire themselves, and were subject to their husbands: as Sarah obeyed Abraham, and called him Sir, whose daughters ye are whiles ye do well, not being afraid of any terror. And touching the trustines of his servants, we may see it by their readiness to arm themselves, and hazard their lives to recover Lot that was taken prisoner, and by the employment of y^e Steward of his house to fetch a wife for his son Isaac, whose devotion towards God, whose love towards his master, whose faithfulness towards Isaac, whose conscience in his place, is plainly revealed in the word of God, Gen. 14, 14. & 24, 2. The like we might profitably observe in Cornelius, Act 10, 7, he feared God with all his household, & therefore when he was willed by the Angel to send for Peter, whereby he might be further instructed with his family, he had a faithful soldier whom he employed in this weighty and necessary business. This was the care of the good and godly kings of Judah, David, Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, Josiah, and some others: the first thing which they observed, was the reformation of religion, the establishment of God's worship, and the sending forth of the Levites to teach the people. If these means of instructions were used in Ireland, Wales, & other places throughout the land (for there is want hereof everywhere) if this way were taken in private families by the governors thereof, the people would not be so tumultuous, seditious, and rebellious, and servants would not so break out into swearing, lying, stealing, stubbornness, & all unfaithfulness. We should not have our Magistrates so continually troubled, nor our prisons so much filled, nor executiō so often done upon malefactors. For if we did provide to have them taught the fear of God, we should find them more dutiful & serviceable in their callings. But how can we look that they should be faithful to us when they are unfaithful to God? Or how should they fear us, when they are ignorant of the fear of the Lord? or how should they be obedient to us for conscience sake, when they make no conscience of disobedience to God? This serveth to reprove all those y^t punish severely the transgressions of the second Table, and the trespasses done to themselves, but are loose and negligent in punishing the breaches of the first Table. These men begin at the wrong end. A Physician that would cure a disease, must first take away the cause. He that would dry up any stream or running water, must stop the head & fountain. So the only remedy and right order to purge the commonwealth & family of treasons, murders thefts, and such like enormities, is to be sharp and severe against idolatry, blasphemies, contempt of true religion, and of the service of God. So then, let us in our places endeavor that they which are committed unto us, may know the acceptable will of God, and have it taught among them: this will do them in soul & body the greatest good: this will make them most painful & profitable to themselves, leaving a blessing behind it. For as they grow in godliness, so they will increase in faithfulness.

[Verse 3. And Israel coupled himself to Baal-Peor.] We have already seen the sins into which the Israelites did fall: now let us consider the occasion here offered unto us, whereby they were drawn into this spiritual and bodily fornication, They coupled themselves to Baal-peor, they frequented the company of the Midianitish women, and used the familiarity of evil persons, & so were brought not only to allow of their sins, but to fall into sin themselves. This teacheth us this truth, that it is dangerous to the Church to have fellowship with the wicked. We are always in danger of falling into evil, the devil is ever at hand ready to tempt, the world to allure, the flesh to entice: but our estate is more dangerous, when we join with wicked men, & grow in a league with them. This apeareth in the people of Israel who dwelt among y^e Canaanites, Judges 3, 5, 6. They took their daughters to be their wives, and gave their daughters to their sons, and served their gods. This is it which is remembered in Psalm 106, 35. They destroyed not the people as the Lord had commanded them, but were mingled amongst the Heathen, and learned their works, and served their Idols, which were their ruin. Hereunto cometh the exhortation of the Apostle, Ephes. 5, 7, 11. Bee not companions with them. And the Apostle John setteth down, 2 John. 10, 11. If there come any unto you & bring not this doctrine, receive him not to house, nor bid him, God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed, is partaker of his evil deeds.

This will yet better appear, if we mark the Reasons whereby it is confirmed. First, the godly and ungodly differ as things most opposite, as fire and water, as heaven and hell. It is impossible to make an agreement between things that are so flatly contrary one to the other. It is a vain thing to attempt a reconciliation between extremities. This reason the Apostle urgeth, 2 Cor. 6, 14. Be not unequally yoked with the Infidels: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? Or what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? Or what part hath the believer with the Infidel? And what agreement hath the Temple of God with Idols? This opposition being so great, should be effectual to draw us to shake off wholly, and reject utterly, the company and society of the ungodly.

Secondly, the godly are sooner corrupted, [Reason 2] then the ungodly are gained. Nay, one wicked man will sooner seduce an hundred, in regard of the proneness of our nature to wickedness, and our untowardness to the fruits of godliness, then an hundred good men shall win one wicked man from his wicked ways. We see this in Solomon; was not he excellent in wisdom, Neh. 13.16, beloved of his God, and renowned above the Kings of Israel? He thought to have converted his wives, but his wives perverted him, and turned his heart after their gods, 1 Kings 11, 2. This we see in Nehemiah, who reproving the Israelites after their return from captivity for joining with the Idolaters, presseth unto them the example of Solomon: Did not Solomon the King of Israel sin by these things? yet among many Nations there was no King like him: for he was beloved of his God, and God made him King over Israel, yet strange women caused him to sin. To this purpose the Apostle compareth sin to a leaven, 1 Cor. 5, 6, whose nature is, in short time to leaven the whole lump. Evil men can teach us no good, but much hurt cometh to us by their infection. Whiles the Israelites lived in Egypt, they learned many Egyptian tricks, and practiced their fashions in worshipping the Calf. And common experience showeth, that they draw vanity and corruption unto themselves that use the company of vain and corrupt men, according to the saying of the Apostle, Bee not deceived, evil words corrupt good manners, 1. Cor. 15, 33.

It remaineth to handle the uses of this Doctrine. [Use 1] First, if wicked company be dangerous, much more is wickedness it self dangerous. For wherefore are we to avoid them, but for their wickedness sake? We must not hate their persons, but abhor their impieties. When the Apostle Paul had exhorted the Ephesians to be no companions with carnal men, he addeth; Have no fellowship with the unfruitfull works of darkness, but even reprove them rather. If then such societies are to be forsaken, much more the works of darkness whereby we are corrupted. For as we are greatly to affect, & earnestly to desire the sweet fellowship of the godly, for their godliness and goodness sake, that we may learn to follow them: so on the other side, we are to shun the evil company of evil men, lest we learn their ways. True it is, if we would abstain altogether from the acquaintance and familiarity of fornicators, Idolaters, extortioners, railers, drunkards, and such like, We must go out of the world, 1 Cor. 6, 10. But albeit we cannot wholly avoid them, yet we must not thrust our selves into them, nor delight in them, but be grieved at them, & so soon as we can, wind our selves out of thē. We shall learn no good by their society. Therefore Solomon saith, He that walketh with the wise, shall be the wiser: but a companion of fools shall learn foolishness, Prov. 13.20. Now albeit we cannot at all times forsake the familiarity of the unfaithful, yet we must ever abandon and abjure their unfaithfulness and ungodliness: we cannot ever refuse their company, but we must evermore renounce their impiety. Let us take heed we embrace none of their sins. He that standeth farthest from a raging flame, is frees• and farthest off from burning; he that walketh a great distance from the bank of the River, is safest from drowning. He that cometh not near places of infection, is surest to escape the danger. And as we are to beware of all their sins, so especially it behooveth us to be suspicious and fearful of those sins, unto which we know our selves most prone & inclined. For they do most of all delight us, and those are they which will soonest overturn us, and bring upon us destruction of soul and body.

Secondly, it serveth to reprove & condemn [Use 2] all such as are companions with profane men. The shrowding of our selves into such company, argueth a conformity in affections, howsoever we would have it thought to be otherwise. We see in the course of nature, that like will to like, and birds of a feather will fly and flock together. And if they be not yet made like unto them, and corrupted by them, it is greatly to be feared, they will be allured and enticed. Jehoshaphat was reproved for his friendship and aliance with Ahab, and in the end it was the ruin of his own house. The Prophet came unto him, and said, Wouldst thou help the wicked, & love them that hate the Lord? Therefore for this thing the wrath of the Lord is upon thee, 2 Chron. 19, 2. Happy is their estate, whose abode is continually amongst God's people, as the Prophet saith, Psal. 65, 3. Blessed is he whom thou chooseth, and causest to come to thee: he shall dwell in thy Courts, and he shall be satisfied with the pleasures of thine house, even of thine holy Temple. On the other side, we must confess it to be a woeful and heavy condition, to endure the company of the wicked. It is a part of our grief and sorrow, to be in their society, being always joined with sin and to the dishonor of God. This made the Prophet cry out with great perplexity, while he lived amongst the ungodly, and to acknowledge his case to be pitiful and miserable, Woe is me, that I remain in Mesech, and dwell in the Tents of Kedar, Psal. 120, 5. There is nothing that more discovereth what lieth in the heart, then the company with whom we ordinarily resort, and the places to which we commonly resort. The heart of man is deceitful, and the secret corners of it are past finding out: but the company which we use, shall try what is in it. If the heart be set upon goodness, we will not delight in those that are inclined to leudnesse. The Prophet David testifieth hereby the uprightness of his heart, that all his delight was in the Saints, Psal. 16, 3 And Psalm. 119, 63. I am a companion of all them that fear thee, and keep thy precepts. And Psal. 26. I have not haunted with vain persons, neither kept company with the dissemblers: I have hated the assembly of the evil, and have not accompanied with the wicked. Such therefore as make themselves merry with lewd company, and can laugh most heartily at their sins, declare that they have corrupt and sinful hearts, and have not yet given them unto God.

Thirdly, we must learn in regard of the [Use 3] danger of evil company, to cast out every foul spirit out of our societies. We have heard much of some places that have been haunted with evil spirits: and indeed it is most true: for there are few places or Parishes that are not frequented and pestered with many evil spirits. There is no house or family almost to be found, that doth not hold & boulstersome evil spirit. In the family of Adam, was Cain: in the family of Noah, was Ham: in the family of Abraham, was Ishmael: in the family of Isaac, was Esau: in the family of David, was Absalom: and these were foul spirits. The children of God that labor to direct their ways aright, and to have their families purged from gross corruptions, (as Jacob cleansed his house from Idolatry) cannot so sanctify and reform them, but some unclean spirit or other will wind in himself, infecting & infesting the family with his presence, and corrupting the rest by his example, and poisoning them by his evil suggestions. Achan must be found out, unless we would have the whole host of God to be discomfited, Josh. 7, 11. Jonah must be cast out into the sea, unless we would have the Ship drowned, Ion. 1, 12. It was an express commandment of God given unto Abraham, Gen. 21, 10. To cast out the bondwoman & her son because he should not be heir of the inheritance with Isaac. It was an express charge given to the Church by the Apostle, 1 Cor. 5, 13. To purge away from among themselves that wicked man, and to deliver him unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. To these commandments and precepts join y^e practice of the Prophet David, where he promiseth to God how he will order his family; I will do wisely in the perfect way till thou comest to me: I will walk in the uprightness of my heart, in the midst of mine house: there shall no deceitful person dwell within mine house: he that telleth lies shall not remain in my sight: betimes will I destroy all the wicked of the land, that I may cut off all the workers of iniquity from the City of the Lord, Psal. 101, 2, 7. We see hereby, whom we should entertain in our houses, and suffer to dwell under our roof, to wit, the godly: for he saith, Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the Land, that they may dwell with me: he that walketh in a perfect way, he shall serve me: and therefore we must keep none such as are sturdy and stubborn, that are incorrigible, and scorn to serve the Lord. Many there are that make a mock of all religion, and despise all means that can be taken for amendment; these are a burden to the family, and must be cast out. We see in the body, when Nature hath any evil and unprofitable humors that oppress the stomach, it is forced to cast them out, for the preservation of the health of other parts: so should it be with us, when we perceive the family greatly endangered by obstinate and obdurate persons, it should vomit them out as raw and undigested humors, by timely ejection, left the whole head wax heavy, and the whole body sickly, and so the vital parts languish.

Lastly, seeing it is dangerous for us to have [Use 4] fellowship with the wicked, let us avoid their company, and fly their society, as from an infectious and contagious disease. This is that use which the Scripture maketh in sundry places. The Prophet Jeremiah teacheth this, ch. 51 9. We would have cured Babel, but she could not be healed: forsake her, and let us go everyone into his Country, for her judgment is come up unto heaven, and is lifted up to the Clouds. Hereunto accordeth the exhortation of the Apostle, when he had shown that there is no concord and agreement between Christ and Belial, he addeth; Wherefore, come out from among them, and separate yourselves, saith the Lord, and touch none unclean thing, and I will receive you: and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my soⁿes and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. 2 Cor. 6, 17. We must all know that sin is of an infectious nature, no disease so infectious, no sickness so dangerous. In the time of plague and pestilence, the Physicians give these rules and receipts, as directions to be followed of such as would be free from danger: First, that men fly with all speed; secondly, that they fly far enough; lastly, that they return slowly. When the air is once infected dangerously, no remedy can be devised to secure us.

These rules are to be applied of us as carefully in regard of the welfare of the soul, as we are willing to practice them in regard of the health of the body. The plague that breaketh out into a sore, and runneth full of corruption, is no more contagious and venomous then the wicked are: neither doth it more annoy the air then the wicked infect those places wherein they are, and those persons with whom they live. This the Prophet David did see and confess, which caused him at sundry times to complain, Away from me ye wicked, for I will keep the Commandments of my God, Psal. 119, 115. For we must consider how hard it is to avoid sin when occasion is at hand, and opportunity tempteth to sin. It is easier for the bird to pass by the net, then to break the net: so it is easier for a man to avoid temptations, then to overcome temptations. It is a great deal easier to avoid their company, then to stand upright in their company. Peter thought himself a strong man, and avouched with great boldness, that he would rather die, then deny his Master, Mat. 26, 35: but yet warming himself at Caiaphas fire, and thrusting himself into evil company, was overcome by a silly damsel, to do that which he never thought, even to renounce and forswear his Lord and Master. He had made a notable confession of his faith, he had acknowledged Christ to be the Son of the living God, Mat. 16, 16, and that he had the words of eternal life, John 6, 68: yet the company of evil persons foiled him. Are we better then he? or are we stronger then he? or have we a greater privilege from falling then he? This serveth to check the folly and rashness of those that haunt wicked company, and drunken ale-houses, and yet say, we are in no danger, we will look to our ways that we offend not, we can leave such places whē we list. This is to check the word, & to give God's Spirit the lie, who in every place warneth us of our weakness. This presumption is the certain fore-runner of a fall. The first step that bringeth us down, is to be puffed up in the opinion of our own strength, as Solomon saith, Prov. 16, 18. Pride goeth before destruction, and an high mind before the fall. Likewise the Apostle putteth us in remembrance hereof, where remembering the manifold downefals of the people of Israel, consumed by the pestilence, stung by the serpents, and destroyed by the Angel, he maketh this use, Wherefore, let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall, 1 Cor. 10, 12. It is a part of the armor wherewith the servants of God are armed, & made able to stand in time of temptation, to fear themselves, and to acknowledge their own weakness: for thereby they are made more wary and circumspect to look to their ways, that they offend not. So it is the beginning of our ruin, & the first degree by which we fall, to thrust our selves into places of danger, and yet think we have a sure footing. For what calling have we to go into such places? Or what warrant can we have to be protected of God, while we wander out of our calling? So long as we walk in the ways that God hath set us in, we have a promise of his protection, and we have comfort in the doing of our duties: but when we pass the bounds and limits of our particular vocations, we have God no longer to be our defender, but we lie open as a prey to the enemy, to wound us to death, and to work our confusion.

[Wherefore the wrath of the Lord was kindled against Israel] We have seen before the sin of the people: now let us hear also the punishment. Their sin was pleasant in the beginning, but it was bitter in the ending, verifying the saying of the wise man, Prov. 16, 25. There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the yssues thereof are the ways of death. Hence it is, that Moses showeth in this place, how the wrath of the Lord was kindled against Israel, so soon as they fell into fornication. So then, furnicators and adulterers are here remembered to be great sinners, and very hurtful and noisome unto the people of God.

From hence we learn, that adulterers and unclean persons, draw upon themselves and others, fearful judgments of God. (I say) no sin is more strong and auayleable to call down the plagues and punishments of almighty God, upon a people and company, or upon particular persons, then fornication and uncleanness. This was the chief sin among others, that brought the flood upon the whole earth, and destroyed all mankind, Gen. 6, 1. What was it that caused the Lord to rain down fire and brimstone upon Sodom and Gomorrh, Gen. 19, 25. and to overthrow the Cities of the Plain, and the inhabitants thereof, and all that grew upon the earth, but their filthy and unnatural lust, which was grown so outrageous, that the savor thereof ascended up to heaven, and the cry of their sins pierced the ears of God? When Abimelech did in ignorance only, purpose and intend the committing of it, a plague came upon him & all his kingdom, Gen. 20, 3, 17. This uncleanness (as appeareth in the book of Judges, chap. 18, and 19) had almost consumed the whole Tribe of Benjamin, a few of them only reserved. We see this in the sons of Eli, as in a glass, they were wicked men, & knew not the Lord, they caused the people to abhor the offering of the Lord, and lay with the women that assembled at the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, 1 Sam. 2, 22. therefore God at the length found them out in their sins, when they descended into the battle and perished. Look upon the example of David, and behold what a fire it kindled in his house, it brought upon his head through the just judgment of God (who punisheth sin with sin) the sword of the enemy, the ravishing of his wives, the deflouring of his daughter, the death of his child, the murder of Ammon, the treason of Absalom, the revolting of his Counsellors and Captains, & sundry other conspiracies, insurrections, and calamities that fell upon him. This is that which the Prophet Nathan told him from the mouth of the Lord: Because thou hast despised me, and taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife, behold, I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house, & will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy neighbor, and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this Sun; for thou diddest it secretly, but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the Sun. 1 Sam. chap. 12, verse 11.

[Reason 1] The Reasons are now a little to be stood upon, to make the Doctrine sink deeper into our hearts and to gain our affections to subscribe unto it. First, all uncleanness bringeth with it a certain curse, wheresoever it goeth, and by whomsoever it be committed. This is it which Job affirmeth, chap. 31. verse 12. It is a wickedness and iniquity to be condemned; yea, this is a fire that shall devour to destruction, and which shall rooe out all mine increase: what portion should I have of God from above, and what inheritance of the Almighty, if I should suffer my eyes to wander after strange women?

Secondly, it is greater then other sins of [Reason 2] the second Table, that are sharply and severely punished. The wise man teacheth, that it is a more grievous sin then theft. It is a perverting of all right, and an ouerturning of all equity among men. If a man rob another of his goods, he shall be punished. A thief shall be rebuked at every man's hand, he shall be exclaimed upon, and men will spit in his face; and yet adultery is more then a simple robbery for thereby other men are robbed, not of their goods and substance, but of their honor and honesty; yea, they rob not only those that are borne, but those also, that yet are vnfashioned in their mothers womb. Men do not despise (saith Solomon) a thief when he stealeth to satisfy his soul, because he is hungry: but if he be found, he shall restore seven fold, or he shall give all the substance of his house: but he that committeth adultery with a woman, he is destitute of understanding, he that doth it, destroyeth his own soul, Prov. 6, 30.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, this sin never goeth alone, but is accompanied with a train of many other sins: as ydlennesse, drunkenness, profaneness of heart and sencelesnesse of spirit. This the Prophet Hosea expresseth, chapter 4, verse 11. Whoredom and wine and new wine, take away their heart: whereby he meaneth, that the unlawful pleasures, blind the understanding, draw away the will from all goodness, and make the affections so brutish, that they mind nothing, and delight in nothing but in beastly sensuality. This the Prophet Ezekiel declareth, touching the uncleanness of the Sodomites: Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fullness of bread, and abundance of ydlennesse was $\langle \diamond \rangle$ her, and in her daughters: neither did she strengthen the hands of the poor and needy. Ezek. 16, 49.

The uses of this Doctrine are to be considered. [Use 1] First, we learn that God will never suffer this sin to lie hid, though it be committed never so closely and secretly. We see it evidently in the sin of David, he was in time found out, and the hand of God arrested him. They are greatly deceived, that think to hide this sin, and go away in the dark, and not be espied. For howsoever men either do not at all punish this sin, or punish it slightly, as if they did not see it, or not regard it; yet God will be a swift Judge against whoremongers and adulterers. This was notably set forth by the ceremony of the bitter waters. Numb. 5, 12. discovering the guilty wife, which no man on earth was able to accuse. True it is, this ceremony is ended, and these shadows of the law are ceased, yet the eye of the Lord is as quick, and his sight as sharp as ever it was: he taketh upon him the knowing, disclosing, and punishing of this sin. It is impossible to hide it from him, who will reveal the things that are hidden in darkness. Nothing more provoketh to sin, then hope of impurity, and the opinion of secrecy, and carrying the matter away closely. If a man were persuaded that the sins which he committeth, should be engraven in his forehead, or written in great Letters, that he which runneth might read them: it would be a means to make him abstain (if not for conscience, yet at least for shame of the world) from the doing of them. But we are assured by the word of the eternal God, that our secret sins are open and manifest to him with whom we have to do, and he will bring them to the light, what fig-leaves soever we patch together, to cover them from his knowledge. This should move us to beware of committing secret sins, seeing he understandeth all things: He made the eye, and shall he not see? He made the heart, & shall not he find out the iniquities of our hearts? Psal. 94, 9. Take we heed therefore of whoredom, and of all uncleanness, and learn to possess our vessels in holiness and honor, not in the lust of concupiscence, as the Gentiles did that know not God.

Secondly, this doctrine reproveth the light [Use 2] account and estimation of this sin. For if it procure and cause great judgments, and destroyeth a man's soul, they are deceived that make whoredom a trick of youth, a venial offense a natural sin, a matter of small importance, and a sport to laugh at. We see in this chapter, that there fell in one day four and twenty thousand for their fornication committed with the Midianites, 1 Cor. 10, 8: he destroyed so many of his own people in one day, and made them examples to us, upon whom the ends of the world are now come, and yet shall we make it a trick of youth? Shall we make a mock of it, and a may-game at it? These profane beasts have filled up the measure of their sin, and are set down in the seat of the scorers. God alloweth no more liberty in sinning to youth, then he doth to age. The wise man willeth such, to remember their Creator in the days of their youth, Eccl. 12, 1. & 11. and telleth them that for all the lusts of their eyes, the vanity of their minds, the swinge of their pleasures, and the lewdness of their harts, God will bring them to judgment. The Apostle teacheth, That whoremongers and adulterers shall not inherit the kingdom of God, 1 Corinth. chapter 6, verse 9. The wise Solomon saith, He that committeth adultery with a woman, destroyeth his own soul, Prov. 6, verses 22, 33. and so is accessory to his own death. And in another place he saith, He shall find a wound and dishonor, and his reproach shall never be put away: and shall we make a sport of it, to delight our selves in it? We are admonished by the Apostle Paul, that our bodies are the Temples of the holy Ghost, 1 Corinth. 6, 19. so that seeing God vouchsafeth us this honor, to choose our vile bodies, which are dust and ashes, earth and rottenness, to make them Temples and Tabernacles for his holy Spirit to dwell in, let us not turn them into filthy stables, and unclean styes, and so drive him from us, who would possess us as his mansion and dwelling place.

Heereby then we understand, that we are not to judge of whoredom after the common opinion of men, which make but a sport and pastime of it, as we see how scoffers jest at it, and despisers of God make a game of it. Such mockers were risen up long ago in the days of the Apostle, of whom he exhorteth us to beware. For having said, that no whoremonger, neither unclean person hath any inheritance in the kingdom of God, he addeth in the next place, Let no man deceive you with vain words: for, for such things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience, Eph. 5.5, 6. And this example of the people of Israel, which now we have in hand in this Chapter, is able to strike a terror and fear into our hearts, forever breaking out into this iniquity. The life of man is precious and dear unto God, we are creatures created according to his image, he taketh no pleasure in our destruction. Now in that he destroyed such a number of his own Images and Creatures for this sin, must not this sin of fornication be great & grievous, which kindleth such a fire of his vengeance and indignation, that flamed out so far, and could not be quenched, but with the slaughter of so many thousands?

Thirdly, it behooveth everyone, according [Use 3] to his place and calling, to punish this sin severely that so evil may be taken out of Israel. But such as have a light estimation of this sin (which is the cause of the increase of it) do object the example of Christ, who having a woman brought before him, [Object.] that was sound committing adultery in the very act, would not condemn her nor pronounce sentence of death upon her, but said unto her, Go, and sin no more, John 8, 11. Here our Savior seemeth to free her from the law of Moses, Levite. 20, 10.

I answer, this is Popish Divinity, [Answer.] taught in the days of darkness, which cannot bear the trial of the light. For this is to make it not only a venial sin, but no sin at all. Christ forgave her freely, and denounced no punishment at all against her, neither of limb, nor life, nor chastisement, nor other mulct be inflicted upon her: so that if it do not prove that the Magistrates should not punish whoredom sharply, it proveth as well that he ought not to punish it at all: & if it ought to receive no correction, we cannot acknowledge it for any transgression. Furthermore, the Jews being in subjection unto the Romans, and constrained to bear the yoke of foreign government, had the civil punishments of death, either wholly taken from them, or at least suspended upon the will and pleasure of their officers, which were sildome upright, often corrupted. This is it which the Pharisees confess in the Gospel. For when Pilate willed them to take Christ, & to judge him after their own Law, although the malice of their hearts, and the cruelty of their hands were against him, yet they said unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death, John 18, 31. Lastly, the office of Christ was not to be an earthly Judge to give sentence of death, but to be a Savior to call sinners to repentance. Hence it was, that he refused a temporal kingdom when it was offered unto him, and denied to divide the inheritance, when he was requested, as wholly impertinent unto his calling; and therefore he said, Man, who made me a Judge, or a divider over you? Luke 12, 14. So then, this Objection being removed, it belongs to all Magistrates to be zealous in punishing this sin, and to sharpen the law against this & other sins, that bud up and grow apace among us, lest they overthrow good Corn. Yea, it appertaineth not only to Magistrates, but generally to all men, to bring such offenders to open shame, that so they may come to amendment of life. The Apostle speaking of unclean livers, saith: If any that is called a brother, be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with such an one eat not, 1 Cor. 5, 11: and speaking of an incestuous person, he chargeth the Corinthians to put him from among them, and to deliver him to Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

Such unclean livers should be swept out of the Church of God, and have the sword of excommunication drawn out against them, that so they might learn not to transgress. But so long as we bear with such persons, and foster them in the bosom of the Church (as the practice is too common) neither are we their friends, neither are we the friends of the Church, neither indeed are we the friends of almighty God.

For if we were their friends, and loved them aright, we would seek their conversion and repentance; we would use the means to bring them to a shame of their offenses, to a sight of their sins, and unto a confession of their iniquities. And if we were the friends of the Church, we would labor to separate the unclean from the clean, and the infected from the sound, knowing that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. And if we were the friends of God, we would be zealous of his glory, and not suffer his Name to be profaned through the lewd and wicked life of such rotten members. For so long as such are harboured in the Church, which is the body of Christ, the reproach redounds in part to the head.

Fourthly, it behooveth us from hence to [Use 4] learn to avoid all allurements and enticements that may draw us into this sin. For to avoid sin, is to avoid the occasions of sin. Whosoever doth nourish the occasions, cannot be long free from sin. And whosoever maketh no conscience to follow the provocations of lust, and the means that may bring it upon us, will shortly make no conscience of whoredom it self. Therefore our Savior correcting the false glozes of the Scribes and Pharisees, and expounding the true meaning of the seventh Commandment, saith, If thy right eye cause thee to offend, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: for better it is for thee, that one of thy members perish, then that thy whole body should be cast into hell, Math. chap. 5, 29. Whereby our Savior meaneth, that the Law of God not only forbiddeth the sin expressed, but restraineth all occasions and allurements, though they were as dear unto us as our right eye, or as necessary unto us as our hand.

A notable example hereof we have in Joseph, when he was tempted by his wanton mistress to commit folly, he was so far from consenting to adultery, that he absented him self from her company, Gen. 39, 10. Many are the allurements that lead the way unto this sin, wanton apparel, filthy communication, unclean songs, wanton looks, beastly drunkenness, unlawful embracings, excessive diet, hurtful idleness, and too familiar company with those that may entice us, and tempt us to lust. The following after these, & the delighting in them, is the path that guideth us to the practice of all uncleanness: and therefore we must abhor them if we would hate whoredom it self. Such then as say they cannot abide whoredom, and they do detest it from their harts, and yet do not shun these allurements, do not consider their own weakness, but offer themselves, & lead themselves into temptation; yea, as much as in them lieth, they make God a liar, and there is no truth in them.

Lastly, let us according to our duty, with [Use 5] all speed forsake this filthy kind of life, and renounce our former uncleanness, so y^e hearty repentance may follow after, where this sin hath been committed before. For there remains mercy to such, if they repent, and turn with all their hearts, and with all their souls. The Lord is full of compassion and mercy slow to anger, and of great kindness. If the wicked man forsake his ways, and the unrighteous his own imaginations, if he return unto the Lord, and crave mercy at his hands, he will not always chide, neither keep his anger forever, Isaiah 55, 7. He will not deal with us after our sins, neither reward us according to our iniquities, Psal. 103, 10. David through the lust of his eye fell into this sin, and committed folly in Israel: but when he confessed his fault, and forsook his sin, he was received to mercy. For when David said unto Nathan, I have sinned against the Lord: Nathan said unto David; The Lord also hath put away thy sin, thou shalt not die, 2. Sam. 12, verse 13. The Lord seeketh no more, but that the sinner turn unto him. When once we are reconciled unto him, he hath no more controversy against us. This we see in Rahab the harlot, she led a filthy and unclean life among her people: but when she heard of the great works that the Lord had done for the children of Israel, in delivering them out of Egypt, in drying up the red sea, in feeding thē from heaven, and in preserving them from all their enemies; she joined in heart with the Church, forsook her evil life, and in token of her true repentance, she received the messengers sent unto her with the danger of her life, and sent them out another way. This the Apostle speaketh of the Saints at Corinth; for having denounced a fearful judgment against fornicators, adulterers, & wanton persons, y^t they shall not inherit the kingdom of God, he addeth, 1 Cor. 6, 11. Such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. Seeing therefore God is ready to forgive our sins, why should not we be ready to forsake our sins? This uncleanness maketh us guilty of temporal and eternal punishments, yet God offereth to discharge us of both, and to receive us unto his favor, if we will turn from our sins to him, & bring forth fruit worthy amendment of life. Let us therefore confess with David that we have sinned: let us call for mercy at the hands of God, saying, Have mercy upon me, O Lord, according to thy loving kindness, according to the multitude of thy compassions put away mine iniquities: wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin, Psalm 51, the first & second verses.

Verse 4. And the Lord said unto Moses, Take all the heads of this people, and hang them up to the Lord before this Sun.] In the words before, the punishment that fell upon the people of Israel, was set down in general: now he setteth down upon whom it fell in particular, to wit, both Princes & people; for the wrath of God was so kindled against them, that they were cut off as rotten members, & all through the counsel of Balaam. For when he saw that God opened not his mouth to curse the Israelites, but rather when he was resolved to utter curses, he was enforced to pronounce blessings: he gave devilish counsel as his last shift to the Moabites, that their beautiful women should allure the Jews into their company, and by their company unto adultery, & by adultery, unto idolatry, whereby they should provoke God's indignation, and so bring upon themselves utter confusion. Now we must observe in this place, that God in punishing these sins, beginneth first with the heads of the people.

From hence we learn, that Superiors, and men of high places, lie open to grievous judgments, as well as others. All sorts of men, high and low, rich and poor, noble and vnnoble, shall taste of the punishments of God for sin. This the Prophet pointeth unto, when he saith, God poureth contempt upon Princes, and causeth them to err in desert places out of the way, Psal. 107, 40. In the first chapter of Isaiah, verses 10, 23, 24, this truth receiveth plentiful confirmation, Hear the word of God (O Princes of Sodom) hearken unto the Law of our God (O people of Gomorrhah:) thy Princes are rebellious, and companions of thieves, everyone loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards, they judge not the fatherless, neither doth the widows cause come before them: therefore saith the Lord God of hosts, the mighty one of Israel: Ah I will ease me of mine adversaries, & avenge me of mine enemies. And in the Chapter following, the same Prophet saith, The high looks of man shall be humbled, and the loftiness of men shall be abased, and the Lord only shall be exalted in that day, Isaiah 2, 11. And if we would enter into the consideration of examples, we have plentiful testimonies in the word of God; of Abimelech, the King of Gerar; Pharaoh, the King of Egypt; Sancherib, the King of Ashur; Herod, King of Judea, and sundry Princes and Nobles, who have tasted of the judgments of God, punishing them for their sins, and rewarding them according to their iniquities.

[Reason 1] Neither can we marvel at this dealing of GOD, finding out even superiors in their sins, if we consider that he is no acceptor of any man's person, he is sufficient and able to make all men stoop under his hand. For howsoever many of high place, blinded with the glory of the world, puffed up with the vanity of earthly things, stored with abundance of riches, and magnified with the applause of the world, think themselves privileged and exempted from the order and rank of all other men: yet their places cannot deliver their persons from punishments, when they provoke the Lord to wrath against them. What privilege to sin, hath the Prince more then the subject? or the rich more then the poor? or what promise hath one more then another, to be freed from the judgments of God when he hath sinned, seeing destruction is threatened alike to come upon thigh and low? So then, howsoever respecting of men for their places and callings, for their riches and friends, and such like outward dignities, be common among men, yet there is no such acceptance in the Almighty. Hence it is that Job saith, With him is strength and wisdom, he that is deceived, and that deceiveth, are his: he causeth the Counsellors to go as spoiled, & maketh the Judges fools: he looseth the collar of Kings, and girdeth their lomes with a girdle: he leadeth away the Princes as a prey, and overthroweth the mighty, Job 12, 17. To this purpose doth Samuel exhort the Israelites, Fear you the Lord, and serve him in the truth, with all your hearts, and consider how great things he hath done for you: but if ye do wickedly, ye shall perish, both ye and your King.

Secondly, even Princes are by nature but [Reason 2] men. We allow them the chiefest place among men, and honor them as the Lieutenants of God, yet they are not to be exempted from the number of men, and the creatures of God, but are subject to him and his judgments, as well as the rest of the sons of men. This is it which the Lord speaketh unto them, I have said ye are gods, and ye are all children of the most High; but ye shall die as a man, and ye Princes shall fall like others, Psal. 82, 6, 7. John. 10, 34, 35. The Prophet Isaiah speaketh in like manner, Isaiah 31, 3. To like purpose speaketh another Prophet against the King of Tyrus, who had his heart exalted, and thought himself equal with God, Ezek. 28, 9. Wilt thou say before him that slayeth thee, I am God? But thou shalt be a man, and no God in the hands of him that slayeth thee.

We are now come to make use and application [Use 1] of this doctrine. First, it condemneth such as flatter Princes in their sins, and persuade them that they are exempted and freed from the common condition of men, that they may do what they list, and are not to be reproved of any. And indeed it is true, that Princes have, and ought to have a royal prerogative, howbeit, no prerogative to sin, and if they can claim no prerogative to sin, they can challenge no privilege from the punishment of God. Therefore this kind of people setting up to Princes a freedom to offend against God, and giving them immunity and impunity from the judgment seat of God, are indeed the greatest & most dangerous enemies to Princes and great men. It is well said of one, that it were better to light among carrion Crowes, then among flatterers, because they can spoil the body alone, but these corrupt the mind, foster the sins of those whom they do flatter, color them with the names of virtue, & consequently harden the hearts of such as hearken unto them. There are few men of note and account in the world, but are tried and troubled with these enchanters that bewitch them with their sweet words, and will speak anything for their advantage. When the foolish people heard the eloquent oration of Herod, and saw his pomp and glory, they gave him this applause; The voice of God, and not of man, Acts 12, 22, 23: but immediately the Angel of the Lord smote him, because he was delighted with these Sycophants, and returned not the glory unto God. So then, it standeth all great men in hand to banish such dissembling clawbackes from them, to stop their ears against their base and abject flatteries and fooleries, and to suffer themselves to be admonished of their duties, reprov'd for their sins, taught by the word, and informed in the ways of godliness.

[Use 2] Secondly, it serveth to instruct Princes to be subject to GOD, and to obey him in all things, seeing GOD will require the breach of his Law at their hands. All superiors and governors over others, must look for God's wrath to fall upon them, and his punishments to overtake them, whensoever they walk in evil ways, and transgress against God's commandments. For as Princes punish such as transgress their statutes; so will God execute vengeance against those that break his Laws. Princes have rule over their subjects, but God ruleth over Princes themselves, and maketh them liable to his judgments. David was a man after God's heart, yet the Lord brought many corrections and chasticements upon him, to hold him in obedience. It belongeth therefore as a special duty to men of high place and dignity to turn to the Lord, lest they provoke him to wrath, and so they perish, according as the Psalmist spaeketh; Bee wise now therefore ye Kings, be learned ye Judges of the earth, serve the Lord in fear, and rejoyce with trembling; Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish in the way; when his wrath shall suddenly burn, blessed are all that trust in him, Psal. 2, 10, 11, So the Lord having threatened in the Prophet Zephaniah, to visit the Princes and the Kings children, he exhorteth all to repentance, before the decree come forth, and they be as chaff that passeth away in a day, and before the fierce wrath of the Lord come upon them, Zeph. 1, 8, and 2, 2. Likewise the Prophet Jeremiah declaring that the Lord would pour out the viole of his vengeance upon the inhabitants of the land, even the Kings y^t sit upon the throne of David, the Priests and the Prophets: he cometh to urge this use unto them, Say unto the King and the Queen, Humble yourselves, sit down, for the crown of your glory shall come down from your heads, Ier, 13, 13, 18. There is no way to turn away his wrath from them and their kingdoms, but by turning unto God, and by entreating him to spare them, As their places are great, so their sins are great, and many times draw many to follow after them. If they would blot out their offenses against GOD, and call in his judgments gone out against them, they must show their subjection to him, and give him the reverence that is due to his holy Name.

Lastly, our trust must not be in man, our [Use 3] confidence must not be in Princes, who cannot deliver their own souls from the sentence of death, nor discharge themselves of the punishment which they have deserved, much less can they give safety and assurance unto others. This is that duty which the Prophet Isaiah concludeth in the second and third chapters of his Prophecy, where threatening that God will take away from Jerusalem; and from Judah, the st^y and the strength, the strong man and the man of war, the Judge, and the Prophet, the prudent and the aged, the captain of fifty, and the honorable, and the counselor, and the eloquent man; he saith, Cease from the man whose breath is in his nostrils: for wherein is he to be esteemed Isaiah 2.21, & 3, 1, 2, 3. Whereby we see, that we must not put our trust in weak man, nor ralye upon him to be our defense, but put our whole trust in God alone. He that putteth confidence in him, shall be blessed, and be like the tree planted by the rivers side, Ier. 17, 7: whatsoever changes and alterations others do find in the world, he shall continue in a fruitful and flourishing condition. The staying of our selves on man's power, ariseth from the forgetfulness of our duty toward GOD, who hath commanded us to trust in him with all our heart, Prov. 3, 5: and hath promised that If we stay upon him, he will give us our hearts desire, Psal. 37, 4. This trust we shall attain unto, if we use these means; the meditation of man's weakness that cannot help us, the consideration of God's power that is able to strengthen us, and the experience of his mercy that hath delivered other of his children from great afflictions. If these things (as helps to our faith) be laid up in our hearts, we shall be assured to build upon a good and certain foundation, that shall never be removed.

Verse 5, [Then Moses said to the Judges of Israel, Everyone slay his men that were joined unto Baal-peor.] The wrath of God was so fierce against those that sinned, that he commanded them to be destroyed. To this end, we see Moses as the chief Magistrate taketh order, that the guilty should not be suffered to live, but suffer punishment according to their offenses. From hence ariseth this doctrine, that Magistrates are appointed of God to govern mankind in the civil affairs of this life, to be the hand of GOD for punishing and cutting off the wicked, and for the supporting and maintayning of the godly. It is the duty of Magistrates to do Justice upon evil doers, and to give comfort and countenance to the faithful. This is it which David promised unto God, when he should bring him unto the kingdom, and set him upon the throne, I will sing mercy and judgment, unto thee (O Lord) will I sing, Psal. 101, 1. This is the charge that he giveth to Solomon his son, concerning diverse men, as appeareth, 1. Kings, 6: for he telleth him he should remember the blood of battle that Joab shed in peace, and therefore not suffer his hoare head to go down to the grave in peace. The like direction he giveth him, to show kindness unto the sons of Barzillai the Gileadite, and to let him be amongst them that eat at his table, because they came unto him when he fled from Absalom. This direction did Solomon precisely follow, he slew Joab, Shimei, and Adoniah, and set up godly men in the places of such as were removed from their offices, being more able then his father was. All the precepts that are given unto them to execute justice, tend directly to this point, whosoever sheddeth man's blood, must not be spared, but have his blood shed by the Magistrate, Gen. 9.6. If a man (saith Moses) cause any blemish in his neighbor, as he hath done, so shall it be done to him, breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth; such a blemish as he hath made in any, such shall be repaid to him, Levite. 24, 19. These examples and precepts serve to teach us this truth, that the end of Magistrates appointed of God over his people, is not to rule as they list, not to be idle and do nothing, not to tyrannize or to be highly accounted of, not to lift up their hearts, or to please themselves in the titles of honor given unto them, but to do good in helping the good, and punishing the evil.

[Reason 1] The reasons to enforce this doctrine, are to be weighed & considered. First, they have to these ends and purposes, the sword of Justice committed unto them, not to let it rust in the scabbard, but to remove all such, as the land for their outrageousnesse is not able to bear. For when they grow obstinate in their sins, enemies to God, plagues to the godly, burdens to the earth, and an infection to all with whom they live, they must be cut off as rotten members, swept away as filthy dung, and purged as evil humors out of the body.

This is it which the Apostle teacheth in his Epistle to the Romans, There is no power but of God, and the powers that be, are ordained of God: he is the Minister of God for thy wealth, & beareth not the sword for naught, for he is the Minister of God to take vengeance on him that doth evil, Rom. 13, 4. So then, they are God's Lieutenants in his stead; the judgment is God's, and not man's, For there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, neither respect of persons, nor receiving of reward, 2. Chro. 19, 7. Deut. 1.16, 17: so that it is required of them to hear the controversies that come before them indifferently, to judge righteously, to heat the small as well as the great, and not to stand in fear of the faces of men.

[Reason 3] Secondly, they are as bulwarks of brass, as walls of defense, & as maintayners of peace among men. For albeit men be of one self same nature, yet they cannot abide one another, unless they be held in, as with a bit and bridle. Wolves know one another in the woods, the Lions know one another in the forests, so do other wild and savage beasts in the fields: but men have such a corrupt and savage nature, that hardly they can love another, or suffer the company one of another, unless they had rulers & Magistrates set over them. This the Apostle teacheth, He is the Minister of God for thy wealth, Rom. 13, 4. And the Apostle Peter, He is sent for the punishment of evil doers, &c, 1, Pet. 2, 14.

Now, let us come to the uses which naturally [Use 1] arise from hence, First we must acknowledge that Magistracy is a notable blessing, and by acknowledging of it, learn to be thankful for it. If there were no Magistrate or law, everyone would live as he list, and would be ready to cut another's throat, so that better were a tyranny, then an anarchy. This is sundry times repeated in y^e book of Judges, In those days there was no Knig in Israel, but every man did that which was good in his own eyes, Judge. 17, 6, and 18, 1, and 19, 1, & 21, 25. Then was idolatry common among them without any punishment: then they gave themselves to whoredom and uncleanness without controllement: then murder and drawing the sword one against another was practiced, & blood touched blood. This confusion and lamentable disorder and want of lawful Magistracy and government, should teach us to esteem highly of this order and ordinance of God, according to the blessings which we receive by the same. We obtain great quietness by our rulers, and many worthy things are wrought through their prudence and providence. They are the instruments of our peace, the breath of our nostrils, and the means of our preservation. By them we enjoy (under God) all the benefits which we have, our liberty, our lands, our lives, our wives, our children, our possessions, our safety, our houses and habitations, and above all the rest, the comfortable use of the Gospel with freedom of conscience, which is as marrow unto our bones, and as the very life of our lives. How oft had we been overcome and ouerrunne by foreign enemies, how oft had we been surprised by inward rebels, if this ordinance of God had not overshadowed us, and ouerreached them? This meditation must draw out of us all thankfulness to God, and confession of his loving kindness toward us: the practice whereof we have in Ezra, chap. 7, 26, 27: when he beheld the forwardness of the King to promote the worship of God, & to publish a decree, that whosoever would not perform the Law of God, & of the King, should have the sentence of God pronounced against him, without delay, whether it wereto y^e taking away of his life, or banishment of his Country, or to confiscation of his goods, or to imprisonment of his body: he gave glory and praise to God, saying; Blessed be the Lord God of our fathers, which so hath put in the Kings heart, to beautify the house of the Lord that is in Jerusalem.

This practice of this worthy man must be an instruction unto us to teach us to acknowledge the necessity of this blessing, as great as of the Sun in the firmament, whereby all living creatures are comforted and refreshed, and must cause everyone to return the praise of this mercy to him that is the giver of this, and of every good giving. No people under the heavens have better experience of it, nor are more bound to walk worthy of this then we.

[Use 2] Secondly, it is their duty to hate y^t which is evil with an unfeigned hatred, and to love that which is good, with a special love and liking of it. For, if he be evil, how shall he advance and countenance the godly, or how shall he chastise and punish the ungodly? Can he have or hold the reputation of a good Physician, that taking upon him the curing of other men's diseases, is not able or willing to cure himself? or will not everyone upbraid such with the common Proverb, Physician, heal thyself? Luke 4, 23. How then can he with courage and comfort take upon him to correct evil doers, that is himself wholly given to all sorts and kinds of evil? Can a father for conscience sake rebuke his son for sin, as for swearing, lying, drunkenness, and such like disorders, when himself maketh no conscience to be a swearer and blasphemmer, a drunkard and unclean liver? Or can a Master chasten his servants for their rioting, revelling, lewdness, wantonness, and misdemeanors, when the guiltiness of his own heart crieth against him, and condemneth him as guilty of the same crimes? He that teacheth another, should first of all teach himself: and he that reproveth another, should first of all check and controlle himself: otherwise it shall be said unto us, as the Apostle speaketh: Therefore, thou art inexcusable (O man) whosoever thou art that condemnest: for in that thou condemnest another, thou condemnest thyself: for thou that condemnest, doest the same things: but we know that the judgment of God is according to truth, against them which commit such things: & thinkest thou this (O thou man) that condemnest them which do such things, and doest the same, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God? Rom. 2, 1, 2, 3. Let all those whose office is to reform evil, learn to remove it, both head and tail, both root and branch out of themselves: let them pull the beam out of their own eyes, that they may cast out the more in their brothers eye. It is a great blot and blemish in a governor, that should punish wickedness in others, to nourish it in his own heart. Hence it is, that Solomon saith, Woe to thee, O land, when thy King is a child, & thy Princes eat in the morning, Eccl. 10, 16. Prov. 31, 4. Where the Wiseman teacheth what danger it is to the commonwealth, when the rulers are given wholly to their lusts and pleasures, to surfeiting and drunkenness. If the governor that sitteth at the stern of the ship, or the coachman that driveth the coach be drunken and disordered, who seeth not that shipwreck is to be feared, and the coach ready to be overturned? This is to be considered and regarded of all that have any authority over others, to be careful to order and rule themselves by the word of God. If we have families to govern, we should go in and out before them in all wisdom, and be examples unto them in our lives & conversations. If we see that those that be in places of superiority & jurisdiction negligent herein, & not so circumspect over their ways, as they ought to be, it is our duty to help them by our prayers, and to call upon God to assist them with his grace. The burden is great that lieth upon their shoulders, they many times watch while we sleep, and are much troubled while we are at ease; we must therefore daily call upon God for them, to be with them in their government, to indue them with the spirit of wisdom and counsel, and to inspire them continually with all holy motions needful for their callings, that their thrones may be established with justice.

This is it which the Apostle urgeth, I exhort that first of all supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made for all men; for Kings, and for all that are in authority, that we may live a quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty, 1. Tim 2, 1, 2. Let us pray heartily for their preservation, life, health, wealth, prosperity, and increase of all honor, considering that the prayer of a faithful man availeth much, if it be fervent. [Use 3]

Lastly, we learn here, to fear them only for evil doing. So long as we do well, it skilleth not who stand by us, and see us, though the eyes of all men be upon us. The duty of the Magistrate, is to allow & approve it, to commend and reward it. This is it which the Apostle teacheth, Magistrates are not to be feared for good works, but for evil: wilt thou then be without fear of the power? Do well, so shalt thou have praise of the same: but if thou do evil, fear: for he beareth not the sword for naught, Rom. 13, 3. Where we see, they are in regard of their high place, a terror to men but it must be to the wicked; to the godly they should not bring any terror. This should comfort & encourage all the faithful in well doing; the Magistrate is to them as a sanctuary and city of refuge, they should repair and resort unto them in time of trouble, they are as a buckler to defend them, and as an haven to harbor them from the storms and tempests that beat upon them. This is practiced by the Shunamite, who departed out of the land of Israel. and sojourned in a strange land during the famine; when she returned back, she called upon the King for her house, and for her land; So the King appointed her an Eunuch; saying, Restore thou all that is hers, and all the fruits of her lands, since the day she left the land, until this time, 2. Kings 8, 3, 6. She used the ordinance of God as he had commanded, and God gave a blessing unto his own ordinance.

Again, this serveth to terrify ungodly men; let them be restrained from committing evil, if not for conscience, yet for fear: if not for love of godliness, yet for the certainty of punishment that shall fall upon them. Although for a time they may escape, yet in the end they shall be met withal. Moreover, it must put all Magistrates and superiors in mind, to order the ends of their calling aright. True it is, there are two sinnewes of a commonwealth, which knit the parts together, to wit; punishment, and reward. But it is not enough for them to show mercy and judgment, but they must show mercy to whom mercy belongeth; and judgment, to whom judgment appertaineth. It is the office of the Minister to teach, and to reprove; to comfort, & to threaten; to raise up, and to cast down; to root up, and to plant; but if he comfort the wicked, and harden them in their sins, & speak peace, to whom the Lord hath not spoken peace: and again if he threaten judgment, cast down the heavy hearted, and seek to quench the smoking flax, and to break the bruised reed, he is not that wise Scribe, which must give to everyone in the family his portion in due season, nor that workman which needeth not to be ashamed, dividing the word of truth aright. So likewise, it is the office of all Magistrates, to punish and to reward, to correct and to comfort; without these no kingdom can flourish, no city can stand, no house can continue. But it behooveth them to consider, who ought to be the object and subject as well of the one, as of the other. They must not discountenance the godly, and embolden the wicked: they must not spare the guilty, and oppress the innocent. Their Laws must not be as the spiders web, to catch the fly, and to hold the gnat, but let go greater things, and suffer them to escape & to break away from them. They must make a difference between the clean and unclean, between the holy and profane. He is a bad gardiner, that plucketh up his best plants and choicest herbs of greatest price, and suffereth the thorns & thistles to take root and prosper, which should be cut down, and cast into the fire, Math. 3, 10. He is a bad husbandman, that plucketh up the wheat and good corn out of his field, which was to be gathered into the barn, when the time of harvest came; and suffereth tares and darnel to grow, which were fitter to be bound in sheaves and burned, Math. 13, 29. It is no mercy to spare the life of the wolf, and to shed the blood of the Lamb. Hereupon it is, that Solomon saith, Prov 17, 15. He that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the just, even they both are abomination to the Lord. This appeareth in Ahab, who sold himself to work wickedness in the sight of God, and brought destruction upon his own head, as well by slaying the innocent y^t should have been defended, as by sparing the wicked that should have been destroyed. For when the blood of Naboth was spilled as water upon the earth that cannot be gathered, it cried to heaven for vengeance, And the Lord paid him home to the full in his own person, and in his posterity, 1 Kings 21, 19, and 22, 38. And when he spared Benhadad whom he ought not to have spared, the Lord said unto him, Because thou hast let go out of thine hands a man whom I appointed to die, thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people, 1 Kings 20, 42. To this purpose we read in another place of Proverbs, chap. chap. 24, 24. He that saith unto the wicked, Thou art righteous, him shall the people curse, and the multitude abhor him. Let us all lay this to our hearts. If we have any in our several governments, that are godly & fear the Name of God, let such be made much of, let them find our help and favor, let them be comforted and encouraged in well doing. But on the other side, we are not to wink at the wicked, but labor to find them out, and to draw them out of their dens where they lurk, watching their seasons to pester & poison others: remembering always the ends for which God hath lifted up the heads of all Governors above their brethren, to wit, that evil doers should be punished, and that such as do well should be commended: considering duly & diligently, that the time will come, when they must give an account to God of the Stewardship committed unto them.

[Verse 6. And behold, one of the children of Israel came and brought unto his brethren a Midianitish woman, in the sight of Moses, &c.] In these words is offered unto us an example, expressing the nature of sin, where once it is entertained. For behold here, how they grow in sin, and proceed from evil to worse, from a great sin to a greater. At the first, they departed out of the host of Israel, and went to the people of Moab and Midian, with whom they coupled themselves: so that albeit they sinned, yet they had some shame of sin, and made some conscience of committing it openly amongst their brethren. But they proceed by little and little, from step to step, and from one degree to another, till they fear nothing, and are ashamed of nothing. Therefore in the example of one man here set before our eyes, Moses declares to what impudency & shamelesnesse they were come, that they brought their harlots into the host to despise God, to anger Moses, to corrupt the people, & to pollute the worship y^t was set up by the commandment of the Lord. For this man (who is afterward named) as if he had been absolute in power, as he was indeed resolute in will, & dissolute in his whole life, brought his whorish woman in the sight of God, in the sight of Moses, in the sight of the congregation, and in the sight of the Tabernacle, to show that he had filled up the measure of his sin. The doctrine arising from hence is this, that evil men do not usually make any stay in evil, but proceed from degree to degree, to worse & worse. The nature of sin is, to draw all such as delight in it and follow after it, from one evil to another, until in the end, they become most corrupt and abominable. This is it which the Prophet Jeremiah noteth in the people of his time, when he saith, Were they ashamed when they committed abomination? Nay, they were not ashamed, no neither could they have any shame: therefore, they shall fall among the slain: when I shall visit them, they shall be cast down, saith the Lord, Ier. 6, 15.

The like we see in the 18. chap. following, ver. 11, 12. Speak to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I prepare a plague for you, and purpose a thing against you: return you therefore everyone from his evil way, and make your ways & your works good: But they said desperately, Surely we will walk after our own imaginations, & do every man after the stubbornness of his wicked heart. The truth of this hath been evident in all ages of the Church. When the Lord was determined to bring an universal flood upon the face of the earth, for the sins of man, and had given them a time of repentance, while his patience endured, Gen. 6.12. They ceased not from sin, neither repented of their wickedness, saying, what have I done? Math. 24, 38. But everyone turned to their race, as the horse rusheth into the battle. For in the time that was limited thē, their sin increased, our Savior showing how they were given over unto all looseness, until the flood came, and swept them all away. This the Prophet David noteth (if he were the penner of that Psalm) where he observeth the degrees and stairs by which men ascend to the height and top of sin: first, they begin to walk in the counsel of the wicked, then they proceed to stand in the way of sinners; lastly, they come to sit down in the seat of the scornful, Psal. 1.1. And this we may further observe in the failings of the faithful, and in their fallings into sin. No man becometh extremely evil at a sudden, nor desperately settled, and obstinately resolved to continue in sin in a moment: but as he that will climb up to the top of an high tower, doth ascend step by step, and by little & little; so he that maketh no conscience of any sin, but walketh in all profaneness with greediness, cometh to that height by degrees, one sin drawing on another, the lesser making way for the greater, and the greater obtaining passage for the greatest of all. We see it in Eve, when she fell from God, first, she listened unto Satan; secondly, she made a light resistance to his temptation; thirdly, she began to doubt waueringly of that which God had delivered absolutely; fourthly, she grew in concupiscence, the eye liking, the heart lusting, and both of them desiring the forbidden fruit; lastly, she fell to flat apostasy, infidelity, and rebellion. This likewise is set before us in the example of Peter, who getting into the high-Priests hall, and thrusting himself into evil company, hath left us a strong proof of his own weakness, and of his declining from evil to worse. First, he answereth faintly and fearfully, that he knew not the man, Math. 26, 70. A dangerous beginning. When he was further urged and pressed to answer, and that he saw his bare and cold denial would not be accepted, he thought to go one step farther, he denied with an oath, that he never knew him. Yea, when they were importunate upon him, and would not suffer him to be in rest, he began to curse himself, and thereby to cast himself into the depth of sin, into the gates of hell, and into the hands of Satan.

The Reasons follow. First, sin groweth [Reason 1] in the heart, as the child doth in the womb. For as the infant hath his increasings and augmentations from a small beginning, until he come to the birth, proceeding from one degree and age unto another, as Job setteth forth our first creation, Thou hast poured me out as milk, and turned me into cruds like cheese: thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and joined me with bones and sinnewes, Job 10, 10, 11: so is it with a sinner; his beginnings are small, but the further he runneth, the longer he continueth, and the deeper he plungeth himself in sin, the more corrupt and abhominable he becometh. As a spring that ariseth out of the earth is first little and shallow, but the further it groweth, the more ground it floweth, and the more streams come into it, the greater the river is: or as a fire, which at the first is a little spark, being nourished, becometh in short time a great flame: so is it with sin, it is little in growth, weak in strength, slender in appearance at the beginning; but being cherrished and fostered in the soul of the sinner, it multiplieth exceedingly, and bringeth forth many children of the same nature, whereof we may truly say; Like mother, like daughter. This is that comparison, which the Apostle James useth, to express the fruitful nature of all the unfruitful works of darkness, Every man is tempted, when he is drawn away by his own concupiscence, and is enticed: then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin, and when sin is finished, it bringeth forth death, I am. 1, 15. Where the Apostle showeth, that first a man is tempted to evil, then concupiscence conveyeth it, after it is in travail and bringeth forth; and lastly, it doth finish it as a perfect birth. This comparison is also used by the Prophet David, Behold, he shall travail with wickedness, for he hath conceived mischief, but he shall bring forth a lie. Psal. 7, 14.

[Reason 2] Secondly, the wrath of God falleth upon such as make no conscience to fall into lesser sins, he giveth them over to a reprobate sense, to a slumbring spirit, and to hardness of heart, that they fall to be past feeling, and cannot repent. The Apostle declareth in the Epistle to the Romans, That such as regarded not to know God, he gave them up to their hearts lust, unto all uncleanness, and punished one sin with another, Rom, 1.28. For the sin that followeth is a punishment which went before. God forsaketh them with his grace, that forsake him by their sins: and when once God leaveth them, the devil findeth them. Whensoever God departeth out of any person, the unclean spirit taketh possession, for the house is empty, swept, and garnished, and made ready to entertain him, Math. 12, 44. This is it which the Prophet declareth concerning the secret judgment of God upon sinners, that make shipwreck of faith and of a good conscience; My people would not hear my voice, and Israel would none of me: so I gave them up unto the hardness of their heart, and they have walked in their own counsels, Psal. 81, 11, 12. Where he showeth, that seeing they would not be reclaimed and reformed, he laid the bridle in their own necks, and suffered them to run their full swinge into all wickedness. In like manner the Apostle describing the sins of the Jews that hated the Gospel, stoned the Prophets, persecuted the Saints, and crucified the Lord of life, showeth that they had filled up the measure of their sins, and that the wrath of God was come on them to the uttermost, 1. Thess. 2, 19.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, sin is fitly resembled to the fretting of a canker, and to the uncleanness of a leprosy, both which go forward, and make no stay, until the whole body be infected and every member endangered. This is the similitude which the Apostle useth; Their word shall fret as a canker, of which sort is Hymenaeus and Philetus. For as one serpent engendreth another, so doth one sin conceive and bring forth another. It is like unto the beast, that is said to grow so long as it liveth. So then lay these things together, both that God forsaketh such as make no conscience of sin, and that sin is likened to the conceiving of the womb, to the eating of a canker, and to the filthiness of a leprosy, we may conclude, that sin being entertained, knoweth not stay, but rolleth as a stone, until it come to the [Use 1] bottom.

Now, let us handle the uses. First, consider from hence, how dangerous it is to give entertainment unto sin at the beginning, which groweth to more perfection every day, we cannot stop this stream when we will: it goeth beyond the strength of our nature. God leaveth us further to our selves, when we begin to leave his ways. We see this in the example of Cain, he was reprov'd of God, checked for his hatred against his brother, & admonish'd to repent; but he harkened not to the voice of the Lord, but hardened his heart, and shed innocent blood, even the blood of his brother, Gen. 4, 8. This appeareth in Judas, he entertained covetousness in his heart, from covetousness he fell to plot with the Pharisees, from plotting he proceeded to practicing, and in the end he brake out into treason against his Lord and Master, and ceased not till he brake his own neck, Math. 26, 15. The like we may say of Saul, and trace out his falling from God, step by step; and the more he continued, the more did the Spirit of GOD forsake him; so that his hidden corruption brake out into open rebellion against God, open persecution against David, and open desperation against himself and his own soul. Thus it falleth out with such as sin against their conscience. Some grow to be very devils incarnate, that do every day give strength unto their corruption, and add drunkenness unto thirst, who being past feeling, give themselves to wantonness, to work all uncleanness with greediness. Some are like brute beasts, that are led only by sensuality, carnal and natural men, which have nothing in them of the Spirit of God, Jude 10. Continuance in sin bringeth hardness of heart. Such are in greatest danger, and see it not; they are in the midst of the fire, and feel it not; they taste deeply of the judgment of God, and regard it not. Lay before them the grievousness of sin, beseech them with bitter tears, exhort them by the tender mercies of God, denounce all the plagues, punishments, and judgments of hell, offer unto them the sweet promises of the Gospel, entreat them by the death of Christ, and the dearest blood that he shed for them: all these they tread under their feet, and neglect them as things of no price; sin hath bewitched their hearts, Satan hath blinded their eyes, and God hath given them up into a reprobate sense. For as among all the blessings that God bestoweth upon the sons of men in this world, a soft and tender heart is one of the greatest, which is soon checked & controuled, soon made to bleed, and raised to repentance and amendment of life, Ezek. 11, 19: so there can be no greater curse and malediction laid upon any man, then to have a stony and stiff-necked, a rebellious and iron heart, which heapeth and hoardeth up every day vengeance against it self. What an heavy punishment was this upon Pharaoh, when his heart was hardened? Moses and Aaron came unto him, they laid before him the word of God, they wrought miracles in the land of Egypt, they called upon him to let the people go:

he was visited with lice, he was feared with thunders, he was plagued with frogs, he was tried with darkness, he was punished with the death of the first borne; yet could not all these enter into his heart, nor pierce his conscience that was seared with an hot iron, so that he proceeded in evil, until he and his whole host were drowned in the red sea. Hereunto accordeth that which the Prophet Jeremiah saith, Can the black Moore change his skin? or the leopard his spots? Then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil, Ier. 13, 23.

Seeing therefore such as begin to sin, can have do stay of themselves, we must needs confess it to be very dangerous and hurtful to our souls. For all such as break out into this sin, are like to those that run down a steep hill, that when they are going, have no power to make any stay or stop, until they come unto the lower end. Thus it is with those that have given the onset upon sin, they do as it wer, open y^e flood gates of impiety, which are not again easily shut up, but the violence of the stream beareth all things before it. For howsoever sin at the first be entertained of men with some dislike, and not without some struggling and striving against it; yet in process of time, and by continuance in sin, they grow shameless, even to have an whores forehead, that they cannot, nor will not be ashamed: though the Sun, the heaven, the earth, and men bear witness against them, they regard neither God nor men, neither heaven, nor hell, neither salvation nor damnation. This is indeed a dangerous estate, and a fearful condition.

[Use 2] Secondly, seeing evil men wax worse & worse, we may conclude, that their judgment sleepeth not, but is increased as their sin increaseth; yea, it is not far off, but lieth at the doors. Every sin is in it own nature a sin to death, and a removing from God, the wages of it is death, and provoketh to an utter consumption of us, Rom. 6, 23: how then can we answer so many thousands, if one be so grievous? For if the Lord mark what is done amiss, who shall be able to stand? Thus the Apostle setteth down their condition, that were settled in wickedness, That their condemnation long since resteth not, & their destruction stūbreth not, 2. Pet. 2, 3. So then, we may assure our selves that the judgments of God follow at their heels, when men are come to the top and height of their sins. Thus it was with the old world, when their ways were wholly corrupted, then was the earth universally drowned. When the Sodomites became exceeding sinners against the Lord, and their sins cried to heaven, the Lord rained down fire & brimstone upon them. When Israel abounded in all sin, that there was no truth nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land, but that by swearing and lying, by killing and stealing they brake out, and blood touched blood; the Lord denounceth by his Prophet, That the land shall mourn, and everyone that dwelleth therein, shall he cut-off, Hos. 4, 1, 2. When the Amorites had filled up the measure of their sins, Gen. 15, 14. they should be rooted out of the Land, and the people of God come in their stead. Where the Lord declareth, that howsoever this people were exceeding sinners in the days of Abraham, and deserved to be rooted out at the very first, yet did he withhold his hand, and waited for their repentance a long time, until they were past recovery. Do we then see any wax worse and worse, and increase in sin, as they grow in age? We may conclude, that so soon as they are become ripe, nay, rotten in their sins, the appointed time of God draweth on to destroy them. For even as men when their Corn is waxen ripe, and the fields are white unto the harvest, do thrust in their sickles, and cut it down, so will the Lord deal with all the ungodly; for when their sins are at the highest, then his judgments are at the nearest, according as the Apostle John showeth, that an Angel came out of the Temple, crying with a loud voice unto him that sate on the Cloud, Thrust in thy sickle and reap: for the time is come to reap, for the harvest of the earth is ripe, Revel. 14, 15. This is it which was declared in a vision unto Amos, where the Lord shown unto him a Basket of Summer fruit, and said, Amos, what seest thou? who answered, A Basket of Summer fruit. Then the Lord said unto him, The ende is come upon my people of Israel, I will pass by them no more, Amos 8, 1, 2. Declaring thereby, the ripeness of their sins, and the readiness of God's judgments to give them their reward. Wherefore, whatsoever sins ungodly men commit, the old are not forgotten, and only the new remembered; but all both old and new, do come together, & add unto the heap, that the measure being full, pressed down, shaken together, and running over, certain destruction may fall upon them. Let us not make a mock of sin, or think that God hath forgotten it, when we have forgotten it. The iniquities that men commit one day are forgotten with them the next, and such as are practiced in their youth, are past their knowledge before they come to age: but we cannot hide them from the Almighty, Who writeth bitter things against us, and maketh us to possess the iniquities of our youth, Job 14, 26. Psal. 25.7. Every sin shall help somewhat to increase the weight, and make our account the greater in the day of account: for as every Corn of wheat helpeth to fill up the bushel, and to enlarge the heap: so doth every sin that we commit, help to bring our wickedness to the full. And as men keep their books of reckonings and accounts, which they will bring forth when they are to reckon: so the Lord (to the end we may know that he seeth and remembereth our offenses) is said after the manner of men, to keep a Register of the deeds of men, and to write them up in the same, and every sin serveth to fill up the accounts, Revel. 20, 12. He noteth so many oaths as every day come from our unclean mouths; our drunkenness at this time, and that place, and in that company; our whoredoms, uncleanness and wantonness; our contempt of his word; our neglect of this sermon, and that sermon, on this Sabbath, and on such a Sabbath: so that we shall find when the day of reckoning cometh sins upon sins, and heaps upon heaps, until the measure runneth over; and when we must go the way of all flesh, they will stand before us as an huge Sea (whereof we can sound no bottom) to swallow us up. For if we must give an account for every idle word at the day of judgment, Mat. 12, 36: how much more for our blasphemies, and unclean deeds, which are without number? Which should make us cry out with the Prophet, O Lord I know that the way of man is not in himself, neither is it in man to walk & to direct his steppes: Lord, correct me, but with judgment; not in thine anger, lest thou bring me to nothing, Ier. 10, 23, 24. To conclude, howsoever God spare long because he is patient, yet if we grow worse and worse, and abuse his patience, and run into all riot and excess of sin, he will fill up the vial of his judgment, and pour out his wrath upon us to the utmost. This serveth to answer the curiosity, and to stop the mouths of many men, who seeing wicked men proceed in sin, and prosper in their ways, are offended, and are ready to say, Doeth not the Lord see this? Or is there no righteousness in the Almighty? Why doth the way of the wicked prosper, and why are they in wealth, that rebelliously transgress? Ier. 12, 1. God suffereth wicked men a long time, because their sins are not yet full, the measure is not filled up: but wait a while, and they shall not go unpunished.

[Use 3] Lastly, seeing men giving themselves over to sin, come at the last to be frozen in the dregs of it; it is our duty to resist the beginnings, to prevent the breach, and to stop the first course of it. It is as a serpent that must be trod on in the egg; it is as a birth that would be smothered in the conception. Let us take heed that sin grow not into a custom, and get an habit. This is it which Solomon pointeth out, speaking against hatred & revenge, The beginning of strife is as one that openeth the waters: therefore ere the contention be meddled with, leave off, Prov. 17, 14, Where he teacheth, that as it is dangerous to break a bank or wall which holdeth in the water in his course, lest it overflow the fields and meadows; so if there be a little breach begun in the conscience by sin, the floods thereof will so grow and swell, that the violence and rage of the stream will quickly and easily enlarge the breach, and bring body and soul to sudden destruction. Seeing therefore there is such an inundation and flood of sin, when once it getteth vent, it behooveth us to stay the beginnings of sin, when as first it beginneth to sprout out, and to spring up: now, these weeds will be more easily pulled up, then when they have taken deeper root, Heb. 12, 13. The diseases of the body being taken at the first, when they begin to breed, and only a spice of them is marked, are easily cured and healed; whereas the old festered sore is incurable and without remedy. Even so is it in the diseases of the soul, if we nippe them in the head betimes, they are with more ease and less difficulty suppressed: whereas, if we let them have their full swinge, they are hardly bridled and subdued. This we see in the example of Lot, when he was fallen into drunkenness, there was an easy and quick passage to fall into incest. When David had committed adultery with the wife, he had but a step to run into murder to kill the husband. The devil that old serpent, if he can thrust in his head, will easily wind in the whole body: the way is to quell him quickly, and then shall we be sure to be conquerors, He seeketh to prevail over us by degrees. If the devil had moved Peter at the first to curse himself to the pit of hell if ever he knew Christ, no doubt he would have loathed the temptation, and not have hearkened to his suggestion. But he dealt more subtly, and prepared him unto it by certain steppes, whereby he brought him at the last to yield unto that which at the first he detested. When he goeth about to allure a man unto the beastly and more then beastly sin of drunkenness, he will not by and by say to him, Drink till thou be drunken, and transform thyself into a beast, but will make him to delight in evil company, to leave the works of his calling, and to haunt infamous houses, the nurceries of drunkenness. When he would entice a man unto whoredom and adultery, he will not at the first step throw him into the harlots bed, but bring him to look upon her, to like her, to lust after her, to have familiarity with her; and lastly, to commit the sin itself, 2. Sam. 11, 2: which being first in the devils intention, is the last in the sinners execution. When he went about to bring Cain to murder his brother, he did not at the first say unto him, Kill him, and make him away; but sowed discord and hatred in his heart, Gen. 4, 5: and this murder of the heart, engendered the murder of the hand, 1. John. 3, 15. If then we would avoid the actual sin, we must endeavor to cut and pare away all occasions, and not give the enemy room, no not a little. But men in these days make a sport and jest of sin, not knowing that they play with a serpent, nor considering that they dally with a cockatrice. They are like to Solomon's sluggard, described in the Proverbs, Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep, Prov. 6, 10, and 24, 33. So the adulterer saith; a little more uncleanness; the drunkard must have a little more drinking; the covetous person must have a little more of the world; and everyone must wallow as the swine, a little longer in his wickedness, the time is not yet come to forsake his wicked ways: the blasphemer, that feareth not an oath, must continue yet a little longer in his swearing. These men (like the sluggard) must sleep yet a little while in their sins, and lie a little thought longer in their lusts; but give the devil a little hold, and he will not in haste let go; grant him an inch, and he will take an ell: and so long as thou doest not wholly renounce thy sin, but wilt take a little pleasure at it, and spend a little more time in it, thou art in danger of destruction, as Solomon telleth the sluggard.

7 And when Phinehas the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the Priest, saw it, he rose up from the mids of the congregation, and took a spear in his hand:

8 And followed the man of Israel into his stews, and thrust them both through, the man of Israel, & the woman in her womb; ethen the plague ceased from the children of Israel.

9 And there died in that plague four and twenty thousand.

10 Then the Lord spake unto Moses, saying:

11 Phinehas the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the Priest, hath turned mine anger away from the children of Israel; while he was zealous for my sake among them; therefore I have not consumed the children of Israel in my jealousy.

12 Wherefore say to him; Behold, I give unto him my covenant of peace.

13 And he shall have it, & his seed after him, even the covenant of the Priests office forever, because he was zealous for his God, and hath made an atonement for the children of Israel.

14 And the name of the Israelite thus slain, which was killed with the Midianitish woman, was Zimri, the son of Salu, Prince of the family of the Simeonites.

15 And the name of the Midianitish woman that was slain was Cosby, the daughter of Zur, who was head over the people of his fathers house in Midian.

Hitherto Moses hath handled the sins of the people, bringing down heavy judgments upon the heads of the principal authors and committers of them. Now, he setteth down the second point, which is, the reconciliation of God toward his people, Who will not keep his anger forever, Psal. 103, 9: Wherein we are to observe two things; the execution of Justice, and the approbation thereof by God. The execution here recorded against the evil doers is double; the one, extraordinary; the other, ordinary. The extraordinary was by the spear of Phinehas, whereby God's wrath was turned away: the ordinary, was by sentence of the magistrates that were found free from falling into these offenses; such as were guilty, being hanged up by the express commandment of God. Touching the first, it is noted, that Phinehas one of the tribe of Levi, and posterity of Aaron, arose out of the congregation that wept before the Lord, being stirred up extraordinarily of God, he took a spear in his hand, kindled with a zeal arising from a chaste and pure mind, abhorring all uncleanness and filthiness, and pursued them into their filthy stews and brothel-houses, where he thrust them both thorough, revenging the dishonor done to God, & the scandal laid upon his people. A worthy example for all Magistrates to follow, to be sharp & severe in punishing sin, and taking away evil out of the city of God. Thus the plague was stayed, and the anger of God turned away, after that justice was executed, and so many thousands at one time, and for one sin swept away.

But here two questions arise, which are to be discussed, before we proceed any further: the first touching the fact of Phinehas: the second, touching the number of y^e dead here remembered. Touching the fact of Phinehas, [Objection.] it may be thus objected: How can it be lawful in him, (being a private person) to exceed the bounds and lists of his calling? He was of the tribe of Levi, and of the family of the Priests, to whom it belonged not to draw the sword. For as the other tribes were not appointed to the service of the Altar; so the tribe of Levi was not called to the execution of justice. Besides, there are general rules directing all private men, and general Laws restraining them from shedding of blood; as he that sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: he that smiteth with the sword, shall be smitten with the sword: love your enemies, and do good to them that hate you. The servant of God must not strive, but must be gentle toward all men, suffering the evil, and instructing them with meekness that be contrary mind, 2. Tim. 2, 25. How then can we justify this act of Phinehas, departing from these holy rules of God's Religion? I answer, [Answer.] there is a double kind of calling; an ordinary calling, and an extraordinary calling; the one necessarily distinguished from the other. For God doth oftentimes give unto his servants a new and special vocation, and addeth it unto their former function. Hence it is also, that some works are ordinary, and some are extraordinary. Ordinary works must be guided and directed by ordinary rules, such as those are which we have set down before. Extraordinary works proceed from a special motion of God's Spirit warranting them, and making them (albeit going against the common rules) lawful, cōmendable, and necessary. Such was the fact of Moses, smiting the Egyptian, Exod. 2, 12: the fact of Samuel, hewing Agag in pieces, 1. Sam. 15, 35: the fact of Elijah, slaying the Priests of Baal, 1. King. 18, 4: the fact of the Israelites, spoiling the Egyptians, and such like, Exod. 12, 35, who had an inward motion, like to the commandment given to Abraham to kill his son. These actions, albeit warranted to the doers, are not to be drawn into example and imitation, unless we have the inspiration of the same Spirit; and therefore Christ our Savior answereth his Disciples, that would have called fire from heaven to consume the Samaritans, Ye know not of what spirit ye are, for the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them, Luk. 9, 55. Now that this fact of Phinehas is of the same nature, it appeareth, both because the plague ceased by it, and God's wrath kindled against his people, was appeased; so that the action is both commended & rewarded. This the Spirit of God teacheth in the Psalm, Phinehas stood up and executed judgment, and the plague was stayed: and it was imputed unto him for righteousness, from generation to generation forever, Psalm. 106, 30: which is not so to be understood, as if he were justified before God, by this one act, because whosoever will be just by the Law, is bound to keep the whole law, according to the tenor of the law, Do this & thou shalt live, Gal. 4, 12, 20. One good work doth not serve or suffice to make a man perfectly just and righteous in the sight of God, seeing he that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law, is accursed. So then, we must know that the Psalmist meaneth, that this fact was lawful, and allowed. For having set down the vengeance that Phinehas took upon this adulterer, and the adulteress: he preventeth the Objection which might be made: Was not this horrible and damnable murder in him, who being a private man, had not the sword of justice committed unto him? and being one of the Priests of the Lord, was to meddle only in matters belonging unto God, and not in civil things; who was to draw out the censures of y^e church not a material sword to strike offenders? No (saith the Prophet) it was not murder, it was a righteous and commendable act, he being stirred up by God's Spirit, inasmuch as it proceeded from faith, and aimed at the glory of the great Name of God. Wherefore this place is falsely alleged, and perversely wrested by the Church of Rome, to overthrow justification by faith alone, and to establish justification by good works. For there is a double justification, one of the work, the other of the person. The Prophet speaketh in that place of the justification of the work, which albeit in the sight of men it might seem savage & inhumane, yet God did accept of it, & account it as a good and just work, which pleased him being done in faith, which purifieth the heart, Acts 15, 9. He speaketh not of the justification of his person, which was by apprehending the mercy of God in Christ, by believing, not by doing. Thus the Apostle in the fourth chapter to the Romans, verses 4, 5. maketh a double kind of imputation, saying: To him that worketh, the wages is not counted by favor, but by debt: but to him that worketh not, but believeth in him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is accounted for righteousness. Thus much of the first question touching the act of Phinehas, whether it were lawful or unlawful, whether it were private revenge, or public justice.

The second Question is touching the number that died in this plague: [Object.] wherein appeareth some difference and disagreement in outward show, between the Old Testament, and the new. For Moses in this place, verse 9, saith, There died four and twenty thousand. But the Apostle Paul alleging this judgment of God, mentioneth only Three and twenty thousand, 1 Cor. 10, 8, subtracting one thousand from the former number which Moses added. I answer, some reconcile these places thus: that the Scribes or Penmen failed in copying out the books of Paul's Epistles, which should have written four & twenty thousand, where they wrote three & twenty thousand. But this is shifting rather than reconciling; & cutting the knot with a sword, rather than loosing it asunder with the hand, inasmuch as all the copies generally with full consent, as it were with one voice agree in the former reading. Others suppose and surmise that it might be a slip of memory in the Apostle, according to human infirmity. But this answer is worse then the former, and these are unskillful Surgeons, that make a deep wound instead of applying a plaster, and therefore kill where they should cure.

For we cannot admit any faults in memory in the blessed Apostle, who wrote by the direction of the Spirit of God, as also the whole Scripture was inspired by him: and we cannot give any reason to warrant, why it should rather be a slip of memory in Paul than in Moses, both of them being guided by the same Spirit.

Again, others say, that Paul is not contrary to Moses, forasmuch as if there were four and twenty thousand, as Moses teacheth, there must of necessity be three and twenty thousand, as the Apostle gathereth, seeing the greater number includeth the lesser; and seeing he doth not say expressly there were just so many, neither more nor less. True it is, to make up around sum, & a full number, the Scripture useth sometimes to add, and sometimes to detract; but in this place there is no reason, why the Apostle should use the less number rather than the greater, considering y^e greater number is here as full and perfect a number as the lesser; and therefore no just cause to change & alter anything. Besides, the Apostle maketh the number as directly to be 23000, as Moses maketh it to be 24000. Wherefore, to let pass these gesses & conjectures, the best and truest answer is, that Moses distinguisheth the history into two parts. First, touching the heads of the people that were hanged up: Secondly, touching the people that were slain with the sword. If we join both these together, as Moses doth in this place, it is truly said, There died four and twenty thousand. For he speaketh first of the chief Captains and Ring-leaders to this rebellion against God, then of the rest of the people that walked in their ways, and followed their example: afterward he casteth up his accounts, & setteth down the total sum as it did accrue out of them both. But if we speak of the principal malefactors by themselves, and of the rest of the people by themselves, a thousand of the principal were hanged or crucified; and among the people were slain three and twenty thousand, of which latter, Paul only speaketh, omitting the thousand Princes: to show, how fond and frivolous their excuse is, who defend their offenses by the example, or authority, or counsel, or commandment of their superiors: seeing the people in this place following the foot-steps of their Magistrates, were no less punished than the Magistrates themselves. So then, these are most true, both that which Moses saith, to wit, that four and twenty thousand perished, joining both Princes and people together; and that also which Paul affirmeth, mentioning three and twenty thousand only, omitting the Princes, and reckoning the people: and hence it is, that the sum in Moses, amounteth to a thousand more, in Paul to a thousand less.

Hitherto of the execution of justice by Phinehas, upon two audacious and open offenders, and of discussing the questions that arise thereupon: now followeth the approbation of God, in whose nostrils it smelled as a sweet savor. This fact is commended, his zeal is praised, his person is blessed, and rewarded. For albeit good works wrought in faith, and died with the blood of Christ, do not merit eternal life, which is the free gift of God, Roman. 6, 23, yet they are rewarded of mercy in this life, and in the life to come. The blessing of God to rest upon him and his posterity, is set down in two respects: First, generally, I will make my covenant of peace with him, so that he shall have me a merciful God: Secondly, particularly; where the manner is set down, that the Priesthood should remain to him and to his posterity forever, so that both his seed should flourish so long as the Jewish Church should continue, and the honor of the high Priesthood should abide among his posterity, Until the high Priest of our profession (Jesus Christ) should come to make an end of all Ceremonies, Hebr. 3, 1. The accomplishment whereof is not hard to show in the holy Scriptures, and in other approved Histories. For the lineal succession of the Priesthood from him to the carrying away into captivity to Babylon, is expressed in y^e books of the Chronicles, 1 Chron. 6, 4, 15, from the father to the son, and from one generation to another. From the captivity, until the time of Alexander the Great, (to whom the Persian Monarchy befell, and whom Iadduah the high Priest met in his Priestly robes coming to conquer Jerusalem) the genealogy is remembered in the book of Nehemiah, chapter 12, 10, 22. Neither may it seem strange unto us, that Nehemiah should set down the succession so far, seeing from the reign of Artaxerxes whom he served (being in chief place about him) to the Monarchy of Alexander the Great, (who overcame Darius) were not above sixty years, as the Chronology & Computation of the reign of the Persian Kings declareth. And from the times of Alexander the Great, to Aristobulus and his son (who was the last) whom Herod treacherously and cruelly caused to be drowned; the pedigree is to be seen in Josephus and others. Afterward the Priesthood was set to sale, and those promoted, that made their own way by sums of money, or by favor of friends, or both together.

After this promise made to Phinehas, Moses annexeth a description of the whoremaster and the whore, that provoked God's wrath, and troubled Israel: who are set forth by their names, by their family, by their condition and degree. The name of the man was Zimri, his family was the tribe of Simeon: touching his estate, he was one of the Princes of his tribe, by whom no doubt (being a man of sort and quality) he was accompanied and countenanced; yea, it should appear he was a mover and persuader of others to commit the like wickedness, whereby it came to pass y^t the greatest number of this tribe perished with him, as may be gathered by the new survey and numbering of the tribes which is taken in the Chapter following, Numb, 26, 14, and 1, 23. For they which in the former mustering and numbering, amounted unto the number of nine and fifty thousand and three hundred, were now diminished and abated to two & twenty thousand, and two hundred, for their idolatry and fornication: so that with this Zimri, the greater number of this tribe perished,

They did partake with him in the sin of whoredom, and therefore they communicated with him in the plague and punishment of it. Hence it came to pass, that whereas all the other tribes in a manner amounted to more then forty thousand: this tribe attained only unto the number of two and twenty thousand, and two hundred. The name of the harlot was Cosbi; her stock and kindred was of the Midianites: in respect of her place, she was the daughter of one of the chief Princes of that people, who afterward was reckoned amongst the sons of Midian, that were slain by Moses, Numbers 31, 8. These names of the two persons are singled out amongst the rest, unto their perpetual infamy and reproach, For as the names of the righteous are registered and remembered, to their everlasting praise: so the name of the ungodly shall rot, Prov. 10, ver. 7. Their families are singled out, that part of the disgrace and dishonor should blemish them, to humble them, and to instruct them to nourish sin in none of their kindred. Their high place is singled out, to teach that GOD the Judge of all the world, judgeth without respect of persons, and that all men, of what credit and countenance soever, should fear before him.

Verse 7. And when Phinehas the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the Priest saw it, he rose up, &c.] This holy man of God slew the adulterer and the adulteress with a spear. If he had been a mere private man, this shedding of blood had been unlawful in him, howsoever they deserved it. But the Spirit of God was his direction, and he had a secret calling, to be to him as a sure & safe warrant. So then, albeit private persons may put no mā to death, as appeareth in the Commandment, Exod. 20, 13, yet such as are warranted from God, are his Officers and Magistrates.

We learn from hence, that actions which of themselves and in their own nature are unlawful, unseemly, and against humanity, by a calling from God, become lawful, warrantable, and necessary. This special calling given unto special men, is sometimes outward, and sometimes inward. The inward calling is, when God by the motion of his Spirit, moveth the heart to do some special work against the ordinary rules that he left to the rest of the sons of men. Heereof we have plentiful examples in the book of Judges, in those whom God extraordinarily raised up to save his people, and to destroy their enemies. Whē Eglon King of Moab oppressed Israel, & kept them in great slavery and subjection, as a tyrant and usurper, the Lord stirred up Ehud, Judge. 3, 15, 16. who made him a Dagger with two edges, conveyed it closely under his garment, and when opportunity served, he thrust it into his belly, and flew him. This action had been sinful without this calling; for though Eglon were an oppressor, yet the killing of him had not been warrantable. The like we see afterward in the same book set before us in the example of Sampson; for there we see, he took to wife an uncircumcised Philistin, Judge. 14, and 15, and 16, he tied firebrands to the Foxes tayles, to burn their Corn, he carried away the gates of Azzah, he slew many with the iaw-bone of an Ass, & pulled down the house of Dagon, whereby he killed the Princes, people, and himself. He was inwardly called and commanded to do these works of God. For when he spake to his father to give him one of the daughters of the Philistines to wife that pleased him well, his father and his mother faide unto him; Is there never a wife among the daughters of thy brethren, and among all thy people, that thou must go take a wife of the uncircumcised Philistines? For they knew not that it came of the Lord, that he should seek an occasion against the Philistines, Judge. chapter 14, verse 4. The same we noted before in Moses slaying the Egyptian, which fact, howsoever some condemn as unlawful, both because he was not appointed a Judge over that people, but was a private man, and because he seemed to pass the bounds of justice (supposing he were a Magistrate) punishing the smiting of a blow, (Exod. 2, 12,) with the taking away of life, seeing God commanded a tooth for a tooth, Exod. 21, 24, wound for wound, and blow for blow: yet it appeareth by the words of Stephen, that GOD had given him commission, and endued him with authority, to deliver the Israelites, and to avenge their injuries, when he saith, He supposed his brethren would have understood that God by his hand should give them deliverance, but they understood it not, Acts, chap. 7, 25. Again, when Moses had received the Law in the Mount, written with the finger of God, and being come down had seen the molten Calf, He took the two Tables, and cast them out of his two hands, and brake them before their eyes, Deut. chap. 9, verse 17. He did not this through any unadvised zeal, or hastiness, or fleshly affection, but God governed him by his holy Spirit, & stirred him up by this extraordinary means, to declare to the people, that his Covenant was broken and disannulled that was made between them.

Likewise, some have had an outward calling, commanding and warranting the doing of extraordinary things. So Abraham was commanded by lively voice to take his son, his only son, him whom he loved, even Isaac, the son of promise, and to offer him up for a burnt offering, upon one of the mountaynes which God would show him, Gen. 22, 2. This also appeareth in one of the children of the Prophets, who willed his neighbor to smite him by the commandment of the Lord, and in smiting, to wound him, that he might disguise himself when he spake unto the King, 1. Kings 20, 35.

The reasons making these extraordinary [Reason 1] works lawful, are apparent. First, true obedience standeth not in man's will, but in the commandment of GOD. Whatsoever he commandeth, howsoever our carnal reason judgeth of it, and whatsoever iniquity it may seem unto us to contain or prescribe, we must account it lawful. That which he forbiddeth, what show soever it carrieth of piety and holiness, is unlawful. This appeareth in the answer of Christ unto John the Baptist, putting him back, and refusing to baptize him: Let be now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness, Math. 3, 15. And to this purpose the Prophet, speaking of this act of Phinehas here remembered, saith, It was imputed unto him for righteousness, Psal. 106, 31. If then in those actions the children of God obeyed him, and followed not their own corrupt wills, they must needs be held and pronounced to be lawful.

[Reason 2] Secondly, none can withstand his commandments. That is righteous which he accounteth righteous. And if he will have it done, who shall contradict it? Who is so strong, as to resist his will? This doth the Apostle Peter declare, when he had been with Cornelius, he maketh this defense for himself, Forasmuch as God gave them a like gift, as he did unto us, when we believed in the Lord Jesus Christ, who was I, that I could let God? Acts 11, 7.

Thus we see the Doctrine confirmed: now [Use 1] let us see likewise how it may be applied. First, mark here the difference between God and our selves. His word is our light and direction. We have no other way or warrant to approve our actions but from God and his word; but he is not tied to any guide or Governor. We are put in mind hereof by Moses, Deut. 29, 29. The secret things belong to the Lord our God, but the things revealed belong unto us, and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of the law. God is not tied to his revealed will, the Law-giver is above his law. For the law must be understood with this restraint and limitation, except God command the contrary, who is free, and not bound to ordinary rules. He commanded Moses in the building of the Tabernacle, to make the Cherubims, and other similitudes; as also afterward, when the people were stung with fiery serpents, to set up a brazen serpent, which without his commandment had been a breach of the second Commandment, Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven Image, nor the similitude of anything in the heaven above, or in earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth, Exod. 20, 4. He commanded Joshua to compass the City of Jericho, seven days with the men of war, and the Ark of God, seven days together, and therefore also on the Sabbath day, Josh. 6, 15: which without the Commandment of God, had been a breach of the fourth Commandment, Remember thou keep holy the Sabbath day. So God proved Abraham, and charged him to offer his son, which he could not have done without horrible murder, except God had commanded it, being a breach of the sixth Commandment, Thou shalt not kill. In like manner God willed his people to ask jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, of their neighbors the Egyptians, Exod. 12, 35, whereby they spoiled them, but never made restitution unto them; which without a peculiar direction from God, had not stood with the eyght Commandment, Thou shalt not steal. Thus thē we see for the increase of our knowledge, how the Law of God is to be understood, to wit, with this caveat and prouiso, Unless it please God to command the contrary, who always worketh according to his own will. For as such as have to do in the Statutes of earthly Princes, do teach to restrain them, and understand them thus, saving the Kings prerogative: so are we to do in the interpretation of the law of God, always to use this exception of God's prerogative. For if Princes claim a prerogative above their laws, much more are we to give unto the eternal God, a prerogative and privilege above the laws given to the sons of men.

Secondly, we learn from hence, that all examples [Use 2] set down in Scripture, are not set down for our imitation, albeit revealed for our instruction. Our Savior in the Gospel reproveth his Disciples, who would have called down fire from heaven upon the Samaritans to consume them, pretending to follow the example of Elias, saying unto them, Ye know not of what spirit ye are, Lu. 9, 59. The examples of the godly set down in Scripture are of four sorts. The first, general and common, standing in the law of nature, taught in the ten Commandments, commanding us to worship God, to honor our parents, to do wrong to no man. Hence it is, that we are commanded to follow the faith of Abraham, the chastity of Joseph, the zeal of David, the patience of Job, the repentance of Peter, the attention of Lydia, the restitution of Zacchaeus, and such like: these are set before us, both for our instruction, and for our imitation.

Secondly, the godly have many infirmities and imperfections, whereby it cometh to pass, that some of their actions are sinful and ungodly, which are set down for us, not to follow, but to avoid. Such are the incredulity of Moses, the adultery of David, the idolatry of Solomon, the drunkenness of Noah, the incest of Lot, the ambition of the Apostles. These are not written, that we should allege the falls of the Saints, to warrant and justify our sins, but to teach us, that no mā is free from sin in this life, seeing the elect and regenerate do offend; that we should not, being suddenly overtaken with sin, despair of God's mercy: & that we should be watchful, and look to our footing, seeing these men sinned, being adorned with such great gifts, so highly in God's favor, that shined as Stars in the Firmament, and were eminent above other men, as the Cedars above other Trees.

Thirdly, some things were well done of the Fathers, that cannot be followed of us without offense to God, as those that were ceremonial, and endured only until the coming of Christ, and the restoring of all things by him: as the cutting of the foreskinne, the offering of sacrifices, the killing of the Passover, which cannot be brought into use and practice again, Acts chap. 15, ver. 1, 5, without injury to Christ, and the abolishing of his death.

Lastly, some examples were singular and proper unto those to whom they were given; so as neither others in those days, nor we in our times, may any way follow them, without the same inspiration of the Spirit: and of this number is the zeal of Phinehas, mentioned in this place, and such extraordinary examples as we named before. Thus we see, both that all examples of the faithful are not to be practiced, and likewise what are to be followed, and what are not to be followed. Heereby we learn to meet with all profane men, who resolve to continue in their sins, & defend themselves with the slips and failings of the faithful. These men sin with the godly, but they repent not with them: they fall asleep with them, but they arise not with them out of sleep. Heereby also the Church of Rome is convinced, who allege the making of the Cherubims, of the brazen serpent, and such like; to justify their imagery and idolatry by the example of Moses, which we have shown to be special, not general, commanded to him, not warranted to all. Lastly, hereby they are condemned, that would bring in any of the ceremonies of the law, which are long since buried, together with the Synagogue, & cannot stand with the simplicity of the Gospel, and with the sufficiency of the death of Christ.

Lastly, as no man must be rash in pretending extraordinary callings, so we must take heed we be not rash in censuring the doings of other men. Do we know, or can we understand the motions and inspirations of other men? What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of a man which is in him? 1 Cor. 2, 11. We may not therefore examine their callings by our own, nor measure extraordinary actions, by ordinary rules; especially in the times of the decay of religion, of the ruins of the Church, of the planting of the Gospel, when God doth many times give some of his people special motions, & guide them with an extraordinary direction of his Spirit; but every man must look to the warrant of his own work. No man must presume above his calling, but every man must be wise according to sobriety, and consider what gift he hath received, Rom. 12, 3. Peter when he saw the high Priests servants to lay hands on Christ, drew the sword, and cut off the ear of one of the messengers: but he is reprov'd by his Master, and commanded to put up y^e sword again into his place, Because all (being private persons without a calling) that take the sword, shall perish with the sword. Whosoever hath received a special calling, God giveth an assurance of it to his own heart, and leaveth no scruple or doubt in him of his calling: so that to ask the question of others, whether a man may have such a calling or not, is an evident argument that he hath not received any such calling. For albeit we cannot judge of the callings of others, yet may we of our own, & know that which no man knoweth beside our selves. The Disciples thought amiss of Peter the Apostle for going to Cornelius. For when he was come up to Jerusalem, they of the circumcision contended against him, because he went in to men uncircumcised, and had eaten with them, (Acts 11, 2.) until they had heard him give a reason of his doing, & make an apology for himself: then they held their peace, and glorified God. And so is it with those that sit in judgment of other men's callings, & condemn those things whereof they are ignorant.

[Verse 8. He thrust them both through then the plague ceased frō the children of Israel.] The sins of this people into which they fell, were very grievous: and the judgments of God that fell upon them, were heavy and answerable to their sins. Some of them to fill up the measure of their iniquities to the full, brought their harlots into the host of GOD, even among them that the Lord their GOD had chosen to be an holy Nation, Deut. 14, 2, and a precious people unto himself, above all the people that are upon the earth. When these were punished, and the public scandal taken away, God is pacified, the plague is removed, & the people are delivered. From hence this Doctrine is offered to our considerations, that when sin is punished, God is appeased. So soon as evil is taken away, the judgments of GOD are called in. When the old world was destroyed by the flood of waters which God sent upon the earth, and all flesh perished in whose nostrils the spirit of life did breathe; then GOD entered into a new covenant with the remnant that was left; and Noah offering a sacrifice, the Lord smelled a savor of rest, and said in his heart, I will henceforth curse the ground no more for man's cause, neither will I smite anymore all things living as I have done, Gen. 8, 21, 22. So long as Achan was unpunished, the host of Israel could not prosper, but turned their backs before their enemies; but when he was found out, and stoned to death with stones, and burned with fire, the Lord turned from his fierce wrath, & gave unto his people the victory, Josh. 7, 26. When he had plagued the people that caused Aaron to make the calf that he made, whereby they committed foul and gross idolatry, and turned God into the similitude of a bullock that eateth grass, he was reconciled vn- them, and well pleased with them, Psal. 106, 19, 20. So when Corah, Dathan and Abiram were destroyed, and God visited their rebellion with a strange visitation, his anger continued no longer against them. When Miriam had been shut out of y^e host 7. days, & punished with leprosy, the wrath of God was appeased, & she restored to the host again, Nu. 12, 15. We know how the wrath of God was kindled against Israel, & against David for numbering the people, so that he sent a pestilence among them from the morning, even to the time appointed, whereof there died 70000. men: then the Lord repented of the evil, and said to the Angel y^t destroyed the people, It is sufficient, hold now thine hand, 2 Sam. 24, 16. All these places of Scripture are evident proofs of this Doctrine, that so soon as execution is done upon malefactors, the sword of God's justice is put up, and his wrath ceaseth.

[Reason 1] And the Reasons hereof are plain. For first, what is it that separateth between God and his people, and causeth a divorce and division between him & them? Is it anything else then sin? When sin therefore or the sinner are taken away, he hath no more controversy against them. This is it which the Prophet Isaiah testifieth, cha. 59, 2. Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear; for your hands are defiled with blood, and your fingers with iniquity. And in the fourth chapter of the Prophet Hosea, ver. 1, 2, convincing them of swearing and lying, of killing and stealing, and whoring, he declareth, That the Lord had a controversy with the Inhabitants of the Land, and would cut off everyone that dwelleth therein. If then it be sin that causeth judgment, and sharpeneth the point of the Lord's sword against the world, against a kingdom, against a city, against a family, against every particular person; when the cause is removed, the effect shall be restrained, and whē the sinner is reformed, the wrath of God will be appeased: for so soon as we turn unto him, his indignation shall be turned away from us.

Secondly, when sin is punished, it bringeth [Reason 2] down a blessing with it. For so long as ungodly men lie in their sins without punishment, and run on in their wickedness, to the dishonor of God, to the reproach of his Name, to the offense and infection of others, and to the confusion of their own faces; so long the wrath of God is kindled, & his hand is stretched out still. But when they are either plagued of God, or punished of men, he blesseth the places which before he scourged, & rewardeth the persons by whom justice hath been administered. We have a notable example hereof, in the punishing of the Idolatry of the Israelites, for worshipping the molten Calf: he willed the Levites to consecrate their hands that day, Exod. 32, 29, even every man upon his son, and upon his brother, that there might be given them a blessing. The Lord had laid this as a punishment upon Levi and his posterity, To divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel, Gen. 49, 7: but he turned this curse into a blessing, when the Priesthood was translated to this Tribe, to teach Jacob his judgments, and Israel his law, that no corner of the Land should be without instruction. So in this place, when Phinehas rose up, & executed judgment upon the adulterer and the adulteress, the Priesthood was confirmed unto him and his posterity, verse 12, 13. If then the execution of justice bring a blessing from God, who is so delighted with it that he will never leave it unrewarded, it must needs testify his reconciliation and atonement. For so long as we live in sin, we lie under the curse and wrath of God, no grace can shine upon us, no mercy can overtake us, no blessing can fall upon us. But when sin is punished, the curse is removed, and the favor of God doth compass us about, as with a shield.

Now let us come to the Uses, that we may [Use 1] have the profit and comfort of this Doctrine. First, we learn, that such as continue in any known sin unrepented of, cannot look for peace from God. So long as sin reigneth in any place, the wrath of God hangeth over it, and will undoubtedly fall upon it. There is no peace, (saith the Lord) unto the wicked, Isaiah 48, 22. God doth come into the field, as an open enemy to wage war, and enter into a combat against all impenitent sinners. This the Prophet speaketh, Psal. 7, 11, 12. God judgeth the righteous, and him that contemneth God every day; except he turn, he hath whet his sword, he hath bent his bow, and made it ready. He abhorreth all the ungodly, and therefore he will fight against thē as a man of war, he will rain down snares, fire and brimstone, and stormy tempests upon them, he will destroy them in his wrath and fierce displeasure. It is a fearful thing to be a rebel and traitor against a Prince, and to stand out in arms against his Sovereign in the field with weapons; it is high treason, the loss of life, the forfeiture of lands and goods, the staining of our blood, the undoing of our posterity. So to stand out in any sin, is high treason and rebellion against the most High. The continuance in any sin, is rebellion, and they that are the committers of it are rebels against God. This made the Prophet to say, Destroy them O God, let them fall from their counsels, cast them out for the multitude of their iniquities, because they have rebelled against thee, Ps. 5, 10. To this purpose Samuel calleth the disobedience of Saul, rebellion, 1 Sam. 15, 23. Every man knoweth the danger of rebellion against the Prince, it is more against God. When we hear of foreign wars, we fear and tremble, we are much moved and perplexed: and shall we not much more be afraid, when the Lord, the King of Kings wargeth battle against us? Whē God by the Ministry of his word doth reprove sin among us, our ignorance, our loosenes & lewdness, our negligence & security; he doth stand out against us as with his sword ready drawn in his hand, to reclaim us, or to destroy us. We were better to have the whole world set against us, then God to be our enemy. What a monstrous madness is it for a mortal man to stand at defiance with him who is the Lord of hosts? Do we (faith the Apostle) provoke the Lord to anger? Are we stronger then he? 1 Corinth. chap. 10, verse 22. How many are there, which are so witless and bewitched, that they think themselves strong enough to encounter with God, like the Giants that would pluck God out of heaven? But let them take heed, lest setting themselves against him, they thrust themselves down into hell, to their eternal confusion.

Secondly, it teacheth a notable and necessary [Use 2] duty to all Magistrates, to be zealous for the Lord's cause, to root out evil doers, to maintain the glory of God, and to show themselves enemies unto all iniquity. Do they desire to have their people live in peace & tranquility, and to bring a blessing to those that live under their government? Do they desire to have the curse of God removed far from them? The only way is for them to punish sin, whereby they bring quietness and safety, and move the Lord to dwell among them with the graces of his Spirit. The Lord threatened Ahab, because he had let go out of his hands a man whom he had appointed to die, his life should go for his life, and his people for his people, 1 Kings, chapter 20, verse 42. When Saul had spared Agag, contrary to the express commandment of God, who charged him to smite Amalek, and to destroy all that appertained unto them, & have no compassion on them, but to slay both man and woman, both infant and suckling, both Ox and Sheep, both Camel and Ass: the Kingdom was rent from him, & was given to his neighbor, that was better then he, 1 Sam. chapter 15, verse 26. When the Levite had his wife abused unto death, and villainously defiled at Gibeah which is in Benjamin, because those wicked men were not put to death that evil might be put away from Israel, it turned almost unto the utter destruction of that Tribe, Judge. chapter 20, verses 13, 35, and there fell of them in one day five and twenty thousand & an hundred men, all they that could handle the sword. So the Magistrates must regard to punish sin, if they regard the honor of God, the profit of their people, or the good of themselves. We see what an head sin groweth unto and gathereth strength in all places. It beareth the chiefest sway & preeminence everywhere. He that checketh and controlleth it, laboreth in vain, and maketh himself a prey.

True it is, the Ministers of God's word have the sword of the Spirit put into their hands, to cut in sunder the cords of sin. It is a fire that burneth and consumeth the straw and stubble before it. It is an hammer that breaketh in pieces the hard stones, Ier. 23, 29. and it hath the power of God adjoined with it. Notwithstanding, unless the Ministry of the word be assisted and strengthened by the force of the Magistrate, it is little regarded & esteemed of the greatest number. It is good indeed to have some instruction, but it availeth little without correction. If a master should cry never so often unto his scholar, learn, learn, and dissuade him from his idleness and lewdness never so earnestly, yet if he know his master hath no authority or power to correct and chasten him, he will smally respect the vehemency of his words, but esteem them as a blast of wind, that passeth away. So is it with the people, when the Magistrate and Minister go not together, when the word and the sword do not accompany one another. For these two being the high & holy ordinances of God, do give strength & assistance one to another. The Magistrate would be much more troubled, if the word which is lively & mighty in operation, were not taught to keep men in obedience, and they might sit (as it is said of Moses, Exod. 18, 14,) to hear causes from morning to evening, and weary themselves with the toil and trouble of their Office, without comfort to themselves, or profit to others. And on the other side, the Ministers might lift up their voice as a Trumpet, and cry aloud until they be hoarse, unless they be backed and encouraged by the godly Magistracy. So long as Moses and Aaron (as two brethren) walk amongst the people of God, (I mean the Magistrate to rule and correct, the Minister to teach and reprove) sin will be suppressed, and godliness will in some measure be promoted and advanced. Here then is a notable direction for all Magistrates, fathers, masters, householders, and governors whatsoever, to set themselves against evil doers, seeing thereby they shall find the Lord favorable unto them. Among all encouragements which Rulers (who are as the gods of the earth) have given unto them to bear the burden of the work and the heat of the day, none is more comfortable then this, that by rooting out of the wicked, and punishing the ungodly according to their ungodliness, they bring a blessing upon their own heads, a blessing upon the places where they dwell, and a blessing to their families in which they live, as we see in Phinehas in this place: of whom the Lord saith, While he was zealous for my sake among them, he turned away mine anger, therefore I have not consumed the children of Israel in my jealousy, and I will give unto him my covenant of peace, and he shall have it, and his seed after him. Who is it that doth not desire to find the favor of God in this life, & to leave a blessing behind him? But if God have made us Magistrates in the Common-wealth, or Governors in the private family, we cannot look for any blessing at his hands, to follow us, and overtake us, so long as sin is unpunished, and the sinner is not recompensed in the earth. It is not enough for us to be godly men, except we labor also to be godly Magistrates. We heard before, that the boast of God could not prosper and prevail, so long as Achan was not found out: but when he was stoned, the blessing of God came upon thē. The Mariners in the ship could not be safe, so long as Jonah was in it; but so soon as he was cast into the sea, the sea ceased frō his raging. Mark this (ye Rulers of the earth) and learn from hence ye Governors of ho-ses, a profitable lesson: so long as ye are zealous for the advancement of God's glory, and for the rooting out of iniquity, ye shall be blessed in your persons, blessed in your children, blessed in your families, and blessed in your places and habitations. Set yourselves therefore with courage against sin, and God shall be with you. He will prosper the works of your hands, & nothing shall be able to prevail against you; as the Prophet faith, 2 Chron. 15, 2. The Lord is with you, while ye be with him: and if ye seek him, he will be found of you: but if ye forsake him, he will forsake you. Let everyone so far as his calling stretcheth, deal faithfully with God, and show their zeal in resisting sin, as it is sin, in whomsoever they find it, without respect of persons: not fostering it in some, because they are their friends; nor winking at it in others, because they are their children, their servants, their kindred or acquaintance; nor hating it in a third sort, because they are their enemies: but punishing it, and striking at the root of it without difference and partiality. For many are enemies to some sins, because they are enemies to the sinner: and so hate the evil for no other cause, but because they cannot abide the person. But we should in punishing sin, aim at the good, and at the reformation of those that commit it, we should love the person, and abhor the evil; like the Physician, that liketh his patient, but hateth the disease. But to examine our selves a little: How far are we in these days, from the sound practice of this point? Have we a true zeal to punish offenders? or are we careful to find them out, that evil may be taken away from us? Alas, who seeth not plainly (except such as are willfully blind) how cold and careless we are in setting our selves against sin, and opposing our selves against evil doers? Do not wicked men in all places lift up their crests on high, and walk with outstretched necks without controllement, that no man dare say unto them, Why do ye thus? Nay, are we not come to this pass, that if one in a Parish settle himself to do good, and offer to put too his helping hand, to weed out malefactors, will not twenty step forth to speak for them, & to cross such as shall go about to punish thē? If any good cause be to be promoted, how backward are we to further it? How nice, how squemish are we, and pinch courtesy, who shall go before, as if we were ashamed of it? But if whoremongers, drunkards, harlots, that are as the off-scouring of the world, and the scum of the earth, be brought before Magistrates, to be rewarded according to their deservings, they cannot want many of their neighbors to countenance them, to go with them, and to speak for them. What persons ever were there so lewd and licentious, that have not found diverse to entreat in their favor? Yea, so desperate are our times & seasons grown, that if the devil himself were incarnate, and dwelled visibly among us, it seemeth likely, that he should find some friends, some spokesmen, and mediators for him. But know this for a surety, and carry it home with you unto your houses, and think of it upon your beds, that so long as you thus back and uphold bad fellows, loose in life, lewd in example, you shall never want store of them. We must not think ever to break the heart of sin, except we join hand in hand one with another, and all draw one way to suppress it. If a thief were to be carried to prison, and one drew him one way, another hailed him another way he were never like to have fetters cast upon him. In like manner so long as we are sundered and divided one from another, sin increaseth and getteth an head. And we cannot assure our selves to obtain any blessing of God, so long as we nourish such serpents in our bosoms, and do not pull out the stings of them.

And as this ought to be a great encouragement to all in authority over others, to consider the blessings of GOD that they bring to themselves, and to their several iurisdictions, by breaking the neck of ungodliness: so on the other side, it ought to terrify all negligent and careless Governors that are not ready & resolute betimes to destroy all the wicked of the Land, Psalm. 101, 8, and to cut off all the workers of iniquity frō the City of the Lord. Such bring a curse upon themselves, a curse upon their substance, a curse upon their children, a curse upon their servants, a curse upon their families, a curse upon their houses and habitations. This should work a fear in their hearts, and bring terror and astonishment upon their consciences, seeing God will take away the sinner in his wrath, but will require the sin at the hands of all those that have suffered and fostered it in others, by their negligence in governing, and remissness in punishing.

We heard this before in Ahab, 1 Kings, chapter 20. verse 42, who letting Benhadad go free, life must go for life, he should answer for the other. We see this evidently in the example of old Eli, who, not controlling and correcting his children when they sinned grievously against the Lord, is himself directly charged to have committed those sins, 1, Samuel, chapter 2, verse. 29, to honor his children above the Lord to make himself far of the first of all the Offerings, and is punished with sudden death, by breaking of his neck. So likewise shall the sins of sinful men, that live under our roof, and shroud themselves under our protectiō, be required at our hands, if we uphold them in their evil, or do not punish them for their evil, according unto the means that God hath given us.

Lastly, seeing God is well pleased & appeased, when sin is taken away as the cause of [Use 3] his displeasure, let us not carry til y^e Magistrate draw the sword out of his sheathe, but everyone turn unto God, and enter into judgment with our selves, that the Lord may not enter into judgment with us. We must be careful to gain and get God to be our friend. The way is to forsake our sin, and to walk with God, as being ever in his presence. Can two walk together except they be agreed? Let us then reconcile ourselves to God, and he will be reconciled unto us: Let us draw near unto him, and he will draw near unto us, I am. 4, 8. This must be done of us by cleansing our hands, and by purging of our hearts. Abraham, the father of the faithful being righteous by faith, is called The friend of God, I am. 2, *3. This is it which our Savior teacheth, Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you, Job. 13, 14. If then we would be at peace with God, and desire the friendship of the most High: if we would have him turn away his wrath and heavy displeasure from us, we must be careful to avoid sin, seeing it bringeth the judgments of God, and putteth a sword into his hand to destroy us. From hence, as from the principal cause, come all manner of punishments, that God inflicteth; war, death, famine, the plague & pestilence, our sins are the fountains of them all. Therefore the Apostle in this respect willeth us to try and examine our selves, that we may find out the true cause of our troubles, when he saith, For this cause many are weak, and sick among you, and many sleep: for if we would judge our selves, we should not be judged, 1 Cor. 11, 31.

So then, the best course to prevent judgments, or to remove them which are already brought upon us, is by repentance. The Lord hath many ways visited us for our sins; sometimes by the raging of the pestilence, sometimes by inundations & ouerflowings of waters, sometimes by dearth & famine of bread, all which are as sharp arrows which he taketh out of his Quiuer, and shooteth thē out of his Bow, and we are not able to stand before them: for who is able to stand before his fierce wrath? Or who can abide the greatness of his power? Nahum. 1, 6. The only way left unto us to take, is to seek reconciliation with God, and to turn unto him by unfeigned repentance. We must make conscience of all sin. For so long as we flatter our selves in any one known sin, the wrath of God will never be appeased, but he hath still some controversy against us. We must not therefore leave one sin unrepented of. When Moses was to lead the people as a flock of sheep out of the Land of Egypt, and Pharaoh permitted the fathers and the children to go & serve the Lord in the wilderness, only their sheep and cattle should abide: Moses answered, Our Cattle also shall go with us, there shall not an hoof be left behind, Exod. 10, 26. So must our obedience be unto God, it must be perfect and entire, we must not repent to halves, we must not leave one sin behind, but search the secret corners of our deceitful hearts. For when God shall search with lights to find out our hidden sins, he will visit the men that are frozen in their dregs, and say in their hearts, the Lord will neither do good nor evil. These never mourn for their sins, and therefore God will make them mourn lying under his wrath. If they will have no feeling of their sin, they shall have a feeling of his punishments, and of the burden of his judgments.

[Verse 9. And there died in that plague, four and twenty thousand.] In these words Moses setteth down the number of all those that perished as well of the Princes, as of the people. How this agreeth with the Apostle, that nameth only three and twenty thousand, we have already declared in the exposition of the words, and answering of the Questions that arise out of the words. We have heard before, that albeit Balak & Balaam intended by their sorceries to curse the people of God, yet they could by no means do them hurt, they were guarded by the protection of God, as with a sure watch. For God is the watchman of Israel, that neither slumbereth nor sleepeth, Psal. 121, 4. But so soon as they forsook the living God, and fell a whoring with the daughters of Moab and Midian, by and by God departeth from them, and his heavy judgments break in upon them. The force of sorcery could not hurt them, but the strength of sin doth weaken them, and greatly diminisheth the number of them. Heereby we learn, that sin depriveth us of God's protection, and layeth us naked and open to the fierceness of his wrath, and to the fury of our enemies. The sins wherewith the Church in general, or any member in particular do provoke GOD, bring down judgments of all sorts, cause his wrath to be kindled, and give strength to the enemy to prevail against us. When the people of God had committed Idolatry, & made them gods to go before them, it is said by Moses, that the people were naked, for Aaron had made them naked unto their shame among their enemies, Exod. 32, 25. This appeareth also in the book of Joshua, when Achan had sinned and stolen the babylonish garment, the shekels of silver, and the wedge of gold, they could not stand before their enemies, Josh. 7, 4. but fell before them as naked men, being utterly destitute of God's defense, by reason of the offense committed among them. We see this oftentimes in the Books of the Judges, of the Kings, and Chronicles, when they rebelled against God, and provoked him to anger, presently he sold them into the hands of their enemies, they became subject to sundry calamities, they fell into all kind of miseries that were laid upon them. When they began to do wickedly in the sight of the Lord, they were made slaves and captives, sometimes to one enemy, and sometimes to another, Judge. chap. 4, ver. 1, 2. When the Israelites began to loathe the offerings of God, the Lord threatened a grievous judgment to come upon them, and executed it accordingly: for the Philistines fought against them, and Israel was smitten down, every man fled into his tent, and there was an exceeding great slaughter, for there fell of Israel thirty thousand footmen. Thus through sin reigning among them the enemies of God are armed, the people of GOD are destroyed, the Ark of God is taken, and the priests of God are smitten with y^e sword. It was the sin of Eli and his house especially that drew the judgment of God on the whole Nation. We see this in the example of Solomon, when his heart was turned away from the true God, and his hands were holden up to strange gods, the Lord was angry with him, because he had given him a charge concerning this thing that he should not follow other gods: Then the Lord stirred up one adversary unto Solomon, and afterward another adversary, which did much mischief and evil against Israel, 1 Kings 11, 14, 23. This appeareth in Rehoboam the son of Solomon, when once he forsook the Lord and all Israel with him, the Prophet is sent to say unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Ye have forsaken me, therefore have I left you in the hands of Shishak, 2 Chron. chap. 12, verse 5.

[Reason 1] The Reasons being considered, will make the doctrine more evident; First, sin maketh us execrable to the Lord, and abominable in his sight. Nothing doth more deforme us and make us cursed and detested in the sight of God. If then sin make us to be had in execration, it is no marvel if we be left destitute of God's protection. This is the reason which the Lord useth why Israel fell before their enemies, and he went not forth with their armies when they fell before the men of Ai, Therefore the children of Israel cannot stand before their enemies, but have turned their backs before their enemies, because they be execrable, Josh. 7, 12, 13. We see then the nature of sin; it maketh men abominable and detestable in the sight of God.

[Reason 2] Secondly, God leaveth and departeth from them that fall from him: they forsake him, & therefore he forsaketh them. For so long as we walk in the ways of godliness, and please God in all things according to his will, God is among us, He dwelleth with us, he will never depart from us, he walketh in the midst of our habitations, 2 Cor. 6, 16. But when we commit wickedness in his sight, and follow the abominations of our own hearts, he is gone, he will take up his seat no more among us, he will not come nere our dwelling places. This is the reason which the Lord urgeth to Joshua in the place before named, saying, There is an execrable thing among you, O Israel, neither will I be with you anymore, except ye destroy the excommunicate from among you, Ios, 7, 12; 13. So then our lying in sin doth drive the Lord from us that he will have no more fellowship with us to do us any good.

[Use 1] We are now to set down the uses of this Doctrine. First, this teacheth us to acknowledge that all judgments which seize and fall upon us are just & righteous. God chastiseth us often, but always justly, never unjustly. True it is, the particular cause is not always discerned of us why he chastiseth, and sin is not always the chief and principal cause, as appeareth in the example of the blind man, of whom Christ saith, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents, but that the works of God should be shown upon him, John 9, 3: yet his punishments are always deserved, and never inflicted when he is not moved, who rowzeth up himself as a Lyon out of his den (as the Prophet speaketh) to execute righteous judgments. We see in the book of Nehemiah, how the Levites lay open the sins of the whole land, confessing God's kindness unto them, and their unkindness to the Lord, and justifying his name, Nehem. 9, 33, 34, Surely thou art just in all that is come upon us, for thou hast dealt truly, but we have done wickedly: And our Kings, and our Princes, our Priests, & our fathers have not done thy Law, nor regarded thy commandments, nor thy protestations wherewith thou hast protested among them. So when there is any imminent danger of judgment, as of the plague, of sickness, of famine, of war, or such like; this must teach us, y^t then especially we should take heed that we lay not our selves naked unto them by rebelling against God. I mean not this of any bodily nakedness appearing to the eye of man, but of spiritual nakedness in the sight of God, whereby man in his sight appeareth a deformed sinner. This is a fearful condition: this is the foulest nakedness that can be. A man or woman by y^e light of nature would be ashamed to be seen naked, which teacheth us to cover the body: but much more should we take heed that we appear not naked to God, and see the filthiness of our hearts. Let us crave the righteousness of Christ to be a covering to clothe our souls, For they are blessed whose sins are covered, Psal. 31, 1. When GOD threateneth to bring any plague or judgment upon us, let us not wound our own souls, or lay them open to y^e wrath of God, but rather humble our selves before him, that he may call back the punishments that are gone out against us This is it which Moses teacheth, Deut. 23, 9: When thou goest out with thine host against thine enemies, keep thee from all wickedness.

Secondly, seeing sin layeth us open to reproaches [Use 2] of enemies, and to the judgments of God, as appeareth in this great plague upon the people: this showeth that whensoever we have laid our selves thus naked by falling into sins, we must not go about to hide and to cover them from God through hypocrisy. For all things are naked and open to his eyes with whom we have to do: so that we must learn to acknowledge them, and confess them before his presence. We see how ready men are to hide their sins with Adam from the sight of God; but the more we seek to conceal them, the more we reveal them, & the more ugly we appear before him. What folly or madness is it that is practiced in the world to hide our sins from men, and never regard how bare and naked they be in the presence of the all-seeing God? If a man committing sin, were sure to keep it secret from the sight and knowledge of all others, that none could accuse him or detect him of it: what should this avail him seeing it is open to the eyes of God, and appeareth as plainly as we behold the sores of poor Cripples, that uncover them to the sight, to move pity in the seer? Seeing therefore judgments be the wages of sin, make us fall before the enemy, and bring upon us many calamities, let all such as lie under any chastisement, always search over their ways, and descend into their own consciences, to see how they have moved him to wrath, and provoked him to be their enemy. This we see in the example of Joshua, whē he saw the men of Ai prevail over them, and the people of God to turn their backs: when he saw they were destitute of God's defense, who would no longer go out with their Armies, he sought to find out the true cause, he humbled himself before God, and never ceased until the sinner were apprehended, examined, condemned, and executed, Joshua 7, 7. The like practice doth the Prophet prescribe, Lam. 3, 39. Wherefore is the living man sorrowful? Man suffereth for his sin: Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord: let us lift up our hearts with our hands unto God in the heavens, saying; We have sinned and rebelled, therefore thou hast not spared. This is the right way to stop the breach of God's wrath, and to call in his judgments. Manie have fought out other ways to weaken the force of the enemy, and to prevent the judgments of God: as in time of war by arming themselves, by hiring of soldiers, by drawing confederates: in time of dearth, by robbing, stealing, lying, defrauding, shifting, & such like: in time of pestilence, by seeking to Witches and Wizards, by taking themselves to flight, and such other ways. But the Prophets and holy servants of God in such times when we lie open to wrath, have called us to Repentance, stirred us up to prayer, moved us to humiliation and acknowledgement of our sins, which have deserved such chastisements. Let us all practice this counsel, and wisely consider with our selves what the lord hath against us, and wherefore he is angry with us, that so we may be reconciled unto him, and brought into his gracious favor again.

[Use 3] Lastly, this serveth as a notable aduātage for the servants of God, when they have any dealings against wicked men: we have comfort and encouragement from hence, that we shall assuredly prevail against them, because we have to do with weak and naked men that are out of God's protection. If two go into the field to fight, and one of them be unarmed and have no weapon to defend himself, he lieth open to the lust of his enemy to be wōded and spoiled of his life, who taketh comfort to see his adversary come out against him without his armor. So is it a blessed and comfortable thing to the children of God, when they are constrained to meddle with evil men which are the enemies of God and of his truth, they have comfort in God, both in that themselves are under the couerture of his Armor and protection, and in that their enemies are naked men, and lie open unto every judgment. This is it which is afterward remembered unto us in this book, where Joshua and Caleb comforted the people against the Canaanites, saying, If the Lord love us, he will bring us into this land, and give it us, which is a land flowing with milk and honey: but rebel not ye against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the Land, for they are but bread for us: their shield is departed from them, and the Lord is with us, fear them not, Numb. 14, 9. Abijha the king of Judah, made this his great comfort going against a mighty army, and spake to this effect unto their enemies, 2 Chro. 13, 10, 12. Where we see, that such as turn unto God with all their hearts, and worship him aright, have God their Captain and Protector, he is their buckler and defense: but such as are enemies to God and his people, are those that receive many blows, and take many knocks on their heads, and yet want a shield to safeguard themselves, but lie open to every danger, and cannot look for victory, they have no armor of proof to defend themselves. This is a woeful and wretched condition; yet so is it with all the ungodly, who have banished the Lord far from them. For as he is far from them in the practice of their life, so he will not be near them in the time of their distress. Let us then make much of this comfort, and lay it as precious balm unto our hearts, let us be assured when we have to deal with the world, or to wrestle with God's judgments, if we have the testimony of a good conscience that God is our defense and deliverance, we shall not need to be dismayed, nor fear what man can do unto us. For there cannot be a more notable encouragement in danger, or in death, thē to have assurance of the providence and protection of God. The Prophet David greatly comforted himself in the sweet meditation of this presence of his hand, Psal. 23, 1, 4. and 27, 5. & 31, 20. Let us therefore be bold, and of good courage in the causes of the Lord, for where he is, there is safety from danger, peace from distress, and assurance never to be overcome.

[There died four and twenty thousand.] The falling into idolatry and whoredom brought a great plague upon the people, not only to the destruction of many of the Princes among them, but to the ruin of many thousands of the people. See here the greatness of y^e plague, and what hauock was made when wrath was kindled. God did not spare them, but executed his fierce indignation upon them. How great a judgment was this? and how were they weakened by it? Hereby we learn, That the wrath of God against sinners is unspeakable, grievous, and terrible. His wrath being moved is full of rage, and worketh great desolations and destructions in the world. This is it which Moses setteth down in his song, Deut. 32, 22. Fire is kindled in my wrath, & shall burn unto the bottom of hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains, &c. This hath y^e Lord ever shown in the examples of his justice, When the old world multiplied their sins, and abused the patience of God that abode in the days of Noah, his wrath consumed men, women, children, beasts, fowls, creeping things, and all that had the breath of life upon the face of the earth, Gen. 7, 21. So when the •odomites exceeded in lust of the flesh, in pride of life, and in security of heart, The Lord rained upon them Brimstone and fire out of heauē, and overthrew the Cities of the plain, and all the inhabitants of the Cities, and that which grew upon the earth, Gen. 19, 24. The history of the manifold murmurings and rebellions of the people of Israel in the wilderness, is a plentiful witness of this truth. When they lusted for flesh, and loathed Manna as a light meat, he smote them with an exceeding great plague, he slew the strongest of them, and smote down the chosen men of Israel, so that the name of the place was called, The graves of lust, because there they buried the people that fell a lusting, Numb. 11.33. When Korah, Dathan, & Abiram rose up against Moses, backed with certain Captains famous in the congregation, and men of renown, they were swallowed up of the earth, and consumed with fire: and on the morrow when the multitude murmured against Moses and Aaron, saying, Ye have killed the people of the Lord, he sent a plague amongst them, that quickly wasted & consumed fourteen thousand and seven hundredth, besides them that died in the conspiracy of Korah. When David had sinned in numbering of the people, and in glorying in his own strength, 2 Sam. 24, 15: the Lord sent a pestilence in Israel, and there died of the people from Dan to Beersheba seventy thousand men. The Apostle Jude produceth sundry examples to this purpose, of the Angels that are reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day: of the Israelites, who albeit they were delivered out of Egypt, yet were afterward destroyed, because they believed not: of those ungodly mē that turned the grace of God into wantonness, and are ordained to condemnation. The truth here of shall more fully and wonderfully appear in the day of judgment, when justice only shall be executed, and the Lord show himself to the wicked only as a terrible Judge. He shall come from heaven with all his mighty Angels, with a great shout, and with the Trumpet of God, To render vengeance unto them which know not God, and which obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, which shall be punished with everlasting perdition from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, 2 Thess. 1, 9. Then they shall say unto the mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the presence of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come, and who can stand? Revel. 6, 16.

And to the end no doubt hereof should remain [Reason 1] in us, let us consider the reasons. The anger of God is as himself is, infinite and without end, so that nothing is able to stand before him. This is it which the Prophet David teacheth, Psal. 90, 11. Who knoweth the power of thy wrath, or of thine anger, according to thy fear? As if he should say, when thine hand is any way heavy upon us, no man standeth in awe of thine indignation and fearful displeasure so much, as thou and thine anger ought to be feared of us. Hereunto accordeth the saying of the Prophet, Nah. 1, 5, 6: The mountains tremble for him, and the hills melt, and the earth is burnt at his sight, yea the world and all that dwell therein: who can stand before his wrath? or who can abide in the fierceness of his wrath? his wrath is poured out like fire, and the rocks are broken by him. If then his wrath be infinite, without limitation of time, without circumscription of place, and without respect of person, so that the heavens melt, the mountains are dissolved, and the foundations of the earth are discovered, it must needs be that when he is mooved, his wrath is very full of rage and revenge.

Secondly, we must needs hold, that plenty [Reason 2] of desolation is made in the earth in the wrath of God, if we consider the comparisons whereby it is expressed. It is compared sometime to the roaring of a Lion, which maketh all the beasts of the forest to tremble. It is a fearful voice, it maketh man and beast to stand in fear. This the Prophet Amos expresseth, The Lyon hath roared, who will not be afraid? the Lord GOD hath spoken, who can but prophesy? Amos 3.4, 8. Sometimes; it is compared to a violent fire, that spreadeth it self far and near.

This Moses did teach the people, when he willed them to take heed to themselves, lest they forga•e the Covenant of the Lord their God, and make to themselves any graven image, saying, The Lord thy God is a consuming fire, and a jealous God, Deut. 4, 24. & 9, 3. fire we know is fierce and fearful, wasting and devouring all things before it, so that nothing is able to resist the strength and force thereof. We say in a common Proverb, that fire and water are without mercy. They are of an untamed nature: even so is the displeasure of almighty God being provoked by sin, intolerable, unspeakable, unsearchable, without limitation of time, of quantity, or quality; and therefore he must needs be armed with great wrath kindled against the ungodly.

[Use 1] The uses of this doctrine are very many, but we will stand only upon the principal. First, we may conclude that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of so mighty a God. It is extreme madness for any man to set himself against such a God. Who is able to prevail that hath him his enemy? Take heed therefore, God will not be mocked. Are we stronger then he, that we should fight against him? This is the use which the Apostle maketh in the Epistle to the Hebrews, We know him that hath said, Vengeance is mine, I will recompense. Hebr. 10, 30, 31: and again; The Lord shall judge his people; It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living GOD. There is no jesting nor dallying with so fearful and dreadful a Majesty, who is so great in power, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, terrible in his anger, and just in all his doings. Exod, 15, 11. The heavens, and the heavens of heavens, together with the earth and all the compass of the world, are not able to bear y^e least spark of his displeasure when it is kindled, the flame whereof shall burn up the wicked; and shall we play with him in his anger as with a little child? Alas then, what shall become of the wretched souls of wicked and damnable men, when his wrath shall smoke against them, and the whole viole of his fury shall be poured down upon them! O how miserable shall their anguish and tribulation be, and how infinite and immeasurable their torment, which shall be thus plagued, condemned, and cursed of the Lord! what shall become of swearers, drunkards, whoremongers, and such like, in the day of the Lord's wrath? They shall wish that they had never been borne, Mat. 26, 24: they shall think it a benefit if they had been borne toads. And if they could behold at the least in these their days, but a shadow of the misery that remaineth for them, and of the pit of destruction that gapeth for them, it were sufficient to swallow them up in heaviness, and make them even dissolve themselves into tears and torments, as passing all that can be spoken or thought thereof: but now these things are hidden from their eyes, and cannot enter into their hearts, yet this shall be the end of all those that work iniquity. God will rain down upon the wicked, snares, fire & brimstone, & stormy tempest: this is the portion of their cup: for the righteous Lord loveth righteousness, his countenance doth behold the just, Psal. 11, 6, 7. On the other side, we must needs acknowledge and confess, that it is a blessed thing to be at peace with God. It is a great blessing to live at peace in the world, and to be in unity with men, among whom we live; but much more sweet and comfortable is it to be at one with the eternal God, so as he have no controversy against us. This is it which the Prophet concludeth, Kiss the son lest he be angry, & so ye perish in the way; when his wrath shall suddenly burn, blessed are all they that trust in him, Psal, 2, 12. So then, as the estate of all the ungodly that are under the wrath of God is most miserable, so the condition of the godly (how soever accounted of by the unfaithful of the world) is happy and blessed, who are safe under the wings of God, and shall be delivered in the day of judgment.

Secondly, we must be wise and circumspect [Use 2] to take heed that we do not kindle it to our own confusion. This is the exhortation of Moses to the people: Take heed that there be not among you, man, nor family, nor tribe, which should turn their heart away from the living God; that there should not be among you any root that bringeth forth gall and wormwood: for the wrath of the Lord, and his jealousy shall smoke against that man, & every curse that is written in this book shall light upon him, and the Lord shall put out his name from under heaven, Deut. 29, 8. This serveth to reprove such as are in this point like the horse and mule, that are without knowledge, and have no understanding. They never regard the judgments of God present, they never seek to prevent them being to come. This is it which our Savior toucheth in the Jews, when he came near the city, he wept for it, and said; If thou haddest even known at the least in this thy day those things which belong unto thy peace, but now are they hid from thine eyes, Luke 19, 42. It is therefore our duty, to labor to know the times of his judgments. It is impossible to avoid the wrath of God, unless we have a care to know it. The wrath of GOD to come upon the sons of men, is foreknowne three ways: First, by the oracles of the Prophets, and by reasons drawn out of the Word of God: Secondly, by signs and wonders, which God showeth in heaven, or in earth, or in the sea: Thirdly, by plagues and punishments that he sendeth, the which as they are the beginning of his anger present, so they are testimonies and tokens of greater judgments to come. And as we have shown before, that the wrath of God is resembled oftentimes to a consuming fire: so we understand, that a fire is already kindled, & will grow greater by these three means before expressed, (to wit,) either by the report of credible witnesses, or by beholding of the smoke ascending, or by sensible perceiving of the flame breaking out, which is a fearful sign of a farther fire, and a greater burning, except it be speedily quenched and prevented. First, the wrath of God is foreshowed unto us by the words of the Prophets and Apostles which were inspired by the Spirit of God, and foretell the wrath of God to come upon us for our sins. And as the Law of God setteth down sundry threatenings and curses, so the Ministers of God out of the same do denounce the judgments of God, & gather, that the wrath of God hangeth over a kingdom or City, by an infallible conclusion, without repentance. For where sin reigneth there the wrath of God cometh: but in this Nation, or City, or Family, sin reigneth: wherefor the wrath of God hangeth over such a Nation, City, or house. Such threatenings denounced by the servants of God, collected by certain reasons out of the Scripture, are not to be despised, but feared; not to be passed over, but to be prevented; not to be derided, but to be applied to our consciences, that if we find those sins in us, we may labor earnestly to repent of them. For albeit the Ministers of God do not speak by special inspiration and revelation of the Spirit, as the Prophets; yet their threatenings are not void and vain, but are grounded upon effectual reasons of the word, and the beholding of present wickedness that aboundeth everywhere. We must not therefore account them as scar-Crowes which cannot hurt, for God will make them powerful in the mouths of his servants, so that they which will not be persuaded to fear them, shall be constrained certainly to feel them whether they will or not. Another means to give us understanding of God's wrath before it falleth, is by the undoubted signs and tokens, which are as the messengers of God, and the fore-runners of wrath, which we see in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters. For whensoever God is determined in his heavy, but yet just judgment, to bring any plague upon the world, and to make manifest his fierce indignation, he useth to send certain tokens of his anger, to testify that it is not far off, which are as the sproutings of the fig-tree, signifying that summer is near. Thus, doth Christ foretell the destruction of Jerusalem, and the end of the world, by the signs which shall go before them, saying, Learn the parable of the Fig-tree: when her bough is yet tender, & it putteth forth leaves, ye know that the Summer is nere: so likewise ye when ye see all these things, know that the kingdom of God is near, even at the doors. These appear in the Sun, in the Moon, in the Stars, in the Elements, and in the creatures, when the course of nature is altered & changed, the very insensible and unreasonable things do preach repentance unto us, and therefore are to be marked and not despised. Lastly, the former punishment is a fore-runner of a further judgment; the smaller, of a greater; and the first of a second. God brought sundry plagues upon Pharaoh king of Egypt, but such as came after, pressed and punished him more then such as went before. When Christ had foretold many euilles that should come upon Jerusalem for their contempt of the Gospel, and their refusing of all grace offered unto them, he addeth, Mat. 24, 6, 8. The end is not yet: all these are but the beginning of sorrows: as if he should say, there shall moe in number, and greater in weight follow after these. When God sendeth the barrenness of ground, the blasting of corn, the unseasonableness of weather, the overflowing of water, the infection of sickness, & such like scourges of his hand, they are evident marks of his wrath, and the very prints of his footsteppes, whereby we may trace him out, coming against us to destroy us. They are the messengers of God to cite and summon us to answer before him for our contempt of his word, and of his former threatenings. When he taketh away faithful men that fear his name & especially good Princes and godly rulers, it is an assured token that his wrath beginneth to be kindled, and will overtake the remnant of the people. When the head is smitten it cannot be but the rest of the body must immediately after smart for it. Thus God threateneth in the Prophet, Isaiah 3, 2. & 57, 1. That he will take away the strong man, and the man of war, the Judge and the Prophet, the prudent and the aged, the captain of fifty, and the honorable, and the counselor. And in another place, The righteous perisheth, and no man considereth it in heart: and merciful men are taken away, and no man understandeth that the righteous are taken away from the evil to come. A notable example hereof we have in Noah and his family; so soon as they were entered into the Ark, and the door of it shut up, immediately the rain fell, the flood came, the fountains of the deep were broken up, the windows of heaven were opened, & the inhabitants of the earth were drowned, Gen. 7, 16. & 19, 16. When Lot and his family were brought out of Sodom, and set without the City, the Lord being merciful to them, The Lord rained fire and brimstone from heaven, upon the people of Sodom and Gomorrah. When the godly King Josiah was taken away, y^t his eyes should not see all the evil which the Lord would bring upon the land, the wrath of the Lord arose against them, they mocked the messengers of God, despised his words, and misused his Prophets; and he brought upon them the king of the Chaldeans, who slew their young men with the sword, and spared neither young man, nor virgin, ancient nor aged, God gave all into his hand, 2 Kin. 22, 20 2 Chron. 36, 16. Moreover the Lord hath other scourges which belong to the soul; as when he taketh away godly Ministers, & with them his holy word. So he threateneth by the Prophet Amos, to send a Famine of his word, chap. 8, 11. This is a token that God will forsake that people, and condemn them to death when he taketh from them the means and maintenance of their life. These are the beginnings of greater judgments, and by them we may judge the wrath of God to be at hand, which are as a warning piece unto that volly of the Lord's Ordinance, which our great sins have caused him to mount up against us, and he threateneth to discharge upon us. So then, it behooveth us not to be dull and drowzie in marking the judgments of God, & the signs of his wrath, to the end we may be prepared to prevent them, and to meet the Lord by unfeigned repentance, before they fall upon us.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it is our duty to pray unto him, and to entreat him that albeit we continually provoke him by our sins, yet that he would not fall upon us in his wrath, nor punish us in his sore displeasure, but deal with us as a father with his children. This is it which the Prophet craveth at the hands of God, Psal. 6, 1. & 38, 1, 2. To this purpose Jeremiah speaking of the captivity at hand, prayeth thus, Ier. 10, 24 25. O Lord correct me, but with judgment: not in thine anger lest thou bring me to nothing: pour out thy wrath upon the Heathen that know thee not, &c. If the Lord should deal with us according to our sins, and recompense us according to our deservings, we were not able to stand in his sight. If he should enter into judgment with us, no flesh should be righteous before him. We must therefore desire him to chastise us as a father, not as a Judge; to amend us, not to destroy us, as the Prophet speaketh of his own experience, Psal. 118, 18. The Lord hath chastened me sore, but he hath not delivered me to death.

[Use 4] Lastly, we must be provoked, upon the consideration of the wrath of God, full of rage & jealousy, moved with our sins, to seek to please him, to forsake our iniquities, and to be reconciled unto God This is the use which the Apostle maketh, Heb. 12, 28, 29. Seeing we receive a kingdom which cannot be shaken, let us have grace whereby we may so serve God that we may please him with reverence & fear, &c. So we are charged to mortify our members which are on earth, as fornication, uncleanness, and such like, because for such things the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience, Col. 3, 5, 6. So then, the consideration of the fierceness of God's wrath, must bring us nearer unto him, and make us obedient to his will. Let us walk in all his commandments, and make conscience of all our ways. Let us study to please God in all things, and to be fruitful in good works. Let us live soberly, righteously, and godly in this life, and show forth the lively fruits of him that hath called us out of darkness into this marvelous light, that so his wrath do not overtake us, nor his judgments find us unprepared. We should always live, as if we should die presently, or the day of judgment come immediately. For what shall it profit us to live in all pleasures and carnal delights for a few years, and then to suffer eternal torments? What shall it avail us to win the world, & then to lose our own souls? Matth. 16, 26. Are not they more then mad men, that will hazard their souls, & procure the heavy wrath of God for a little profit and a short pleasure? Let such as will not be drawn from their sweet sins, assure themselves they shall one day pay dearly for it, and taste the most bitter woes that can be conceived when they shall be separated frō God, shut out of his favor, and be barred out of his kingdom. Oh! that there were in us wise hearts to consider these things betimes, and to prevent all the judgments of God that hang over our heads. Let us prepare our selves against the hour of death, then which nothing is more terrible: against the day of judgment, then which nothing is more horrible: and against the danger of hell fire, then which nothing is more intolerable, the pains & pangs whereof, are without end, without ease, without remedy.

[Verses 10, 11, 12, 13. Then the Lord spake unto Moses, saying: Phinehas the son of Eleazar, hath turned mine anger away from the children of Israel, &c.] We have seen the zeal of Phinehas in executing judgment upon the offenders and evil doers, which brought a grievous plague upon the people. His spirit was stirred within him, being first stirred by the Spirit of God, which moved him to take a spear, and to thrust thorough the adulterer and adulteress. Now we shall see the recompense of reward that was given unto him for that work which was acceptable unto God, and profitable unto his people. He hath a covenant of peace made with him, & the Priesthood confirmed unto him and his posterity. He only had appeased the wrath of God, & made up the breach between God and his people, but the blessing is conveyed even to his posterity. He destroyeth two malefactors whereby he bringeth a blessing unto his children. Hereby we learn, That when the ways of a man please God, he will be gracious to his house & posterity. God is so pleased with the obedience of his people, that he will show mercy to such as belong to them. This is plentifully proved unto us in the word of GOD. When God saw Noah righteous before him in that corrupt age and generation, he made all that belonged unto him partakers of a great deliverance, saying unto him, Enter thou & all thine house into the Ark: for thee have I seen righteous before me in this age, Gen. 7, 1. This appeareth in the person of Abraham, when God had called him out of his Country, and from his kindred, and made a Covenant with him to bless him, Gen. 12, 2, 3. The Prophet Jeremiah teacheth this in the example of the Rechabites, Thus saith the Lord of hosts the God of Israel, Because ye have obeyed the Commandment of Jonadab your Father, and kept all his precepts, and done according unto all that he hath commanded you, Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before me forever, Ier. 35 18. To this purpose speaketh the Prophet David, Psal. 37.21. A good man is merciful and lendeth, and his seed enjoyeth the blessing. If we come to the New Testament, we have many testimonies leading us unto y^e consideration of this truth. When Zacchaeus believed in Christ for his salvation, and testified his repentance by his restitution, Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come into this house, forasmuch as he is become the son of Abraham, Luke 19, 9. When the ruler, whose son was sick at Capernaum, saw the great power of Christ in restoring him to health again, He believed and all his household, John 4, 13. This is oftentimes remembered unto us in the Acts of the Apostles. When God had opened the heart of Lydia that she attended unto the things which Paul delivered, She was baptized and all her household, Acts 16, 15.33. When the Jailor believed in the Lord Jesus for his salvation, and shown his unfeigned conversion by the fruits of his love to the Apostles, he was baptized with all y^t belonged unto him straightway, and rejoiced that he with all his household believed in God.

[Reason 1] The reasons to enforce this doctrine are evident, if we consider either the person of God, or the condition of the faithful. For first, God hath in great mercy and goodness promised to show grace and favor not only to the faithful themselves, but to the seed of the faithful that fear him. It is the nature of God to be merciful and gracious, to be slow to anger, and abundant in goodness, showing mercy unto thousands to them that love him and keep his commandments, Exod. 20, 6, and 34, 6, 7. We see this in the history of the destruction of Sodom, the Lord did not only in great mercy and compassion save Lot himself, but said unto him, Whom hast thou yet here? either son in law, or thy sons, or thy daughters, or whatsoever thou hast in the city bring it out of this place, Gen. 19, 12. He was ready, not to save him alone, but as an overplus to deliver all that belonged unto him. We see the mercy of God to others for his children's sake, he thinketh it not enough to be good to them, but extendeth his mercies to those that any way concern them.

[Reason 2] Secondly, as the mercy of God is great, so the faith of the godly is effectual for themselves and their children. This is the tenor of the covenant that God hath made with all the faithful, their faith is available both for themselves, and for others. God will be our God, and the God of our seed after us, Gen. 17, 7. And this is the privilege & prerogative that the faithful have, they believe this merciful promise of God themselves, and thereby entitle their children unto it. For as a father that purchaseth house or land, giveth thereby an interest unto his son therein; so he that layeth hold on the promise which God hath made to all godly parents, doth convey it unto his children: so that albeit they want faith by reason of their years, yet they are made partakers of Christ, and engrafted into his body. So then we may collect and gather this truth, that the love of God to the faithful shall so abound, that it shall come to their posterity, like the precious ointment poured on the head of Aaron, that ran down upon his beard, and flowed to the border of his garments, or as the dew on Hermon and Zion, which watered the valleys that were beneath, upon which it descended, Psal. 133, 2, 3.

The uses remain to be handled. First, we [Use 1] learn, that the children of faithful parents have right and interest to Baptism, and are to receive the seal of the covenant. This the Apostle teacheth, 1, Cor. 7, 14: when he saith, The unbelieving husband is sanctified to the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified to the husband, elsewhere your children unclean: but now they are holy. Seeing then, that faithful parents entitle their children to the blessings which they receive; we see that there ought to be a difference between them and the children of Turks and Infidels. All the offspring of Abraham was accounted holy in the time of the Old Testament, because God made with him the covenant of life, and the Apostle reasoneth; that if the root be holy, the branches also are holy, Rom. 11.16. Hence it is, that he calleth them all his children who are borne of Israel. But since the partition wall is pulled down, the grace of God is not obscured, and less assured unto us then it was before unto the Jews. Infants and children do no less belong to the covenant and Church of God then others do that are of years of discretion, as it is plain by the promise made to Abraham, I will set my covenant between me and thee, and between thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, that I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed after thee, Genes. 17, 7. Where God doth promise, not only to be his God, but also to be the God of his seed. This promise doth Peter rehearse to the believing Jews, To you is the promise made and to your children, and to all that are a far off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call, Acts 2, 39. Baptism in the New Testament, succeedeth circumcision, used in the Old Testament. They have both one and the same promise, the same signification, the same foundation, the same ends. But the infants of the Jews were commanded to be circumcised, and therefore infants ought to be baptized.

Hereupon the Apostle saith to the Colossians, Ye are circumcised in Christ with circumcision made without hands, by putting off the sinful body of the flesh through the circumcision of Christ, &c. Col, 2, 11. Lastly, unto infants belongeth the promise of grace, the forgiveness of sins, the regeneration of the spirit, the imputation of Christ's righteousness, the Kingdom of Heaven: and therefore they ought by no means to be denied the outward sign and ceremony, which is the least part of the Sacrament. If the Holy Ghost cleanse them, shall the Minister deny to wash them with water? If the things signified do belong unto them, who shall dare to debar them of the outward sign? Hence it is, that our Savior commandeth infants to be brought unto him, reproveth the disciples that forbad it, embraceth them in his arms, commendeth them to his Father, and declareth that to such belongeth the Kingdom of Heaven, Math, 19, [Object.] 14. And if any ask the question, what profit can possibly come by Baptism to a child and suckling that is without knowledge and understanding: [Answer.] I answer, that the profit is not small, but the benefit great, if we consider either the glory of God, or the comfort of the parents, or the edification and salvation of the child. For hereby God is greatly honored, the parent himself is wonderfully comforted, and the child is exceedingly confirmed and encouraged. God is glorified in this, that he showeth himself true in his promises, who hath assured the faithful that he will show mercy unto them to a thousand generations. He is not as man that he should lie, neither as the son of man that he should deceive, he is found faithful in all the words that are gone out of his mouth, Numb. 23, 19. Again, the parents are comforted and greatly assured of the love of God toward themselves, that he will never leave them, nor forsake them, but that his gifts & graces toward thē, shall be without repentance, Rom. 11, 29. For they see not only that they are beloved of God, but also that the love and grace of God is derived and conveyed unto their children; wherein they are strengthened by that visible sign used in the Sacrament. Lastly, concerning children, they have a double benefit bestowed upon them, being confirmed in the love of God, and encouraged in the duties of godliness. For, when they call to mind, that they so soon obtain the communion of Christ, the partaking of his benefits, and the inheritance of e•ernall life, they are grounded and established in the love of Christ, and assured that he will continue to love them unto the end, that began to show his love unto them, so soon when they were ignorant of him, & were not able to enquire after him, John 13, 1 And when they remember that God so much regarded them, and esteemed of them, even from their first coming into the world, and while they hanged on their mothers breasts, that presently they obtained fellowship in his covenant, they are emboldened in all well doing, and provoked to walk in the fear of his Name. And seeing he took them for his children, when th• through want of knowledge and tenderness of age, were not able to call him father, let them remember their Creator and Redeemer in the days of their youth, and pass the time of their dwelling here in fear, knowing that they were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from their vain conversation received by the traditiō of the fathers, but with the precious blood of Christ, &c. 1. Pet. 1.17, 18. Let us also learn from hence to detest the error of the Anabaptists, that deny Baptism unto infants, thereby diminishing the glory of God, weakening the comfort of godly parents, and abolishing the assurance of children, that they ought to have touching the free love of God toward them.

Secondly, we are taught on the other side, [Use 2] that evil parents bring the curse of God into their houses, and upon their posterity. We see this in Cain, when he gave himself to murder and impiety, he brought the judgment of God upon his whole race, that were razed out of the earth. Mark the posterity of Ishmael, who mocking Isaac, and raising persecution against him, was cast out of the house of Abraham, out of the Church of God, and his issue were aliens from the faith, and strangers from the promises of salvation. The like we see, and might say of Esau, that profane person, who for a mess of pottage sold his birth-right, and hated his brother; his posterity were the greatest enemies to the true Israelites, and were a cursed generation, Heb. 12, 16. Consider with me y^e fearful example of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, that made Israel to sin, and provoked the God of Israel to wrath, 2. King. 15, 30. This seducer wrought wickedness, and established idolatry, and thereby thought to establish the kingdom to himself, and to settle it in his posterity, that it should never be removed from his offspring, but follow from father to son in a continued succession. Notwithstanding, this fell out not only to his own confusion, but to the overthrow of his stock and lineage. The judgment of God did not rest in his person, but pursued him in his progeny and posterity. This is it which the Lord denounced by the Prophet; Behold, I will bring evil upon the house of Jeroboam, and will cut off from Jeroboam, him that pisseth against the wall; as well him that is shut up, as him that is left in Israel, and will sweep away the remnant of the house of Jeroboam, as a man sweepeth away dung until it be all gone, 1. King. 14, 10. Where the Prophet showeth and declareth, that God respecteth evil men as filthy beasts, and those that come of them as dung and excrements, which defile the places where they abide, and therefore with the besom of his vengeance he will sweep them away, that they shall no longer offend the nostrils of GOD and his people. Thus it was with Ahab, that shed innocent blood, and took possession of the vineyard of Naboth, he did the greatest injury and wrong to his posterity, that could be offered: the kingdom was taken from his house, and his children were slain with the sword, according to the saying of Elijah, I will bring evil upon thee, and will take away thy posterity: I will make thy house like the house of Jeroboam, &c: and also of Jezebel spake the Lord, saying; The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the walls of Izreel. Who are then the greatest enemies to their children, but ungodly parents? And who bring upon them a greater woe and ruin, then they that should build them up, and leave a blessing behind thē? When Moses describeth y^e nature of God, that he is abundant in mercy toward the righteous, he addeth, Holding not the wicked innocent, but visiting the sins of the fathers on the children to the third and fourth generation, Exod. 34, 8. This must move parents and governors, to make conscience of their carriage and conversation, and to bewail their sins, that have endangered their offspring. For God may, and doth in Justice visit with sundry and diverse judgments, those families and societies, where wicked Parents, and profane governors are. All they be cruel & tyger-like parents, y^t be ungodly parents: for they are the murderers and butchers of their children, & overthrow of their posterity in time, howsoever they be spared for a season. What unmerciful & unnatural parents were Cain, Cham, Canaan, Jeroboam, Jezebel, Ahab, & such like, y^t caused everyone of their house, that could water a wall to be destroyed, and utterly to have their race and remembrance rooted out? It is therefore a devilish and wicked Proverb, [Happy are those children, whose father goeth to the devil.] Nay, rather cursed are those children, whose fathers fall into hell: for there is a great presumption that they will follow them without the great mercy and special grace of God: yea, it is a blessed thing, to spring from a godly stock, & to rise from faithful parents. For often did the Lord spare Israel for Abraham's, Isaac's, and Jacob's sake. When the posterity of David became wicked, he continued them in their kingdom, delivered them from their enemies, & did not destroy them for David's sake.

When the Lord was angry with Solomon, because he had turned his heart from the Lord God of Israel, which had appeared unto him twice, and charged him not to follow strange gods, he threatened to rent the kingdom from him, & to give it to his servant; Notwithstanding in thy days I will not do it (saith the Lord) because of David thy father, 1. King. 11, 12. This appeareth more plainly afterward in Abiham the son of Rehoboam, who walked in all the sins of his father which he had done before him: yet for David's sake did the Lord his God give him a light in Jerusalem, and set up his son after him, and established Jerusalem, because David did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and turned from nothing that he commanded him all the days of his life, save only in the matters of Uriah the Hittite, 1. King. 15.4, 5. 2. Chron. 21, 7.

This is it which the Lord promiseth in the second commandment of the Law, That he will show mercy to thousands of them that love him, and keep his commandments, Exod. 20.6. Seeing then, wicked and wretched parents are most deadly enemies unto their children, who bear the curses of God upon them for many generations, for the impiety of their fathers; this serveth as a great terror to those parents that go about by fraud and oppression, by wrongful and injurious dealing to enrich themselves, to set up their names, and make their posterity to be great upon the earth after them. For this is the ready way to bring the curse of God upon them, and to pull down their houses. Where the curse of God entereth, it maketh havoc, and wasteth all before it. God is an avenger of all such things, 1. The. 4, 6. Surely, if men were not altogether faithless, but had faith to believe the word of God, that all wicked courses, and vile practices, would overthrow their houses, and not build them up: that they could not fill them with evil things, but they will pul down the plagues of God upon them, and all theirs: it would make them fear to offend by fraud and unjust dealing, which crieth for vengeance unto heaven, and the cry thereof entereth into the ears of the Lord of hosts, James 5, 4, All men by nature have a love unto their children, and a desire to leave them great men in the world; but many are greatly deceived in the means, and wander far and wide out of the way. For if we would leave them a sure inheritance, and settle them in an estate to continue, we must take heed that we do not enrich our selves with the spoils of others, nor fill our houses with the riches of iniquity, lest we fill them also with the vengeance of God which is the reward of iniquity. Let us eat our own bread which we have gotten by lawful means. There is more comfort in a little truly gotten, then in great riches and revenues, that carry with them God's marks and curses, being wrongfully obtained, and unjustly retained.

Lastly, it is required of us to repent & believe [Use 3] the Gospel, that so we may procure a blessing upon our selves, and our children. This duty the Apostle Peter preacheth unto the Jews that were pricked in their hearts, Amend your lives, & be baptized everyone of you for the remission of sins, for the promise is made unto you, and to your children, &c. Acts 2, 38, 39. When God promised to Abraham to make a covenant with him, and to multiply his seed exceedingly, he requireth this condition at his hands, Walk before me, and be thou upright, Gen. 17, 1. We must walk in the midst of our houses with pure and perfect heart, and guide them with a watchful eye, we must look to their ways, and to our government, This would be a great help to the Ministry, and a singular furtherance to his labors. The neglect of this care, bringeth utter ruin to father and child. This appeareth in the example of Eli, who through his indulgence and negligence, overthrew himself and his posterity. This is the cause of so many cursed youths, so many riotous men & women which procure the ruins of so many excellent houses; their tender age was not sanctified, neither they seasoned by their parents with the fear of God. So then, godly parents must have a care to bring up their children & families in godliness & righteousness. It may be a means by the blessing of God to save thy son from death, and to deliver his soul from destruction, The Lord himself speaketh of Abraham, That he knew him, that he would teach his sons and his household after him, that they keep the way of the Lord, to do righteousness and judgment, Gen. 18, 19. The Apostle chargeth parents to bring up their children in the nurture and information of the Lord, Eph. 6, 4. No parents must presume, that because they have obtained to be faithful, therefore their children must of necessity be so also. Faith is the gift of GOD, and not of Nature: It is not common to all, but peculiar to some: It cometh not by inheritance, but by grace. Parents may leave unto their children their houses, their lands, their substance: they may convey unto them their inheritance, but they cannot convey unto them the gifts that accompany salvation. Wherefore all parents that are faithful, are to entreat and crave of God the continuance of his covenant toward their children, and to beg from his hands an holy and sanctified seed to his glory, and their comfort.

Verse 14, 15. [The name of the Israelite thus slain was Zimri the son of Salu: and the name of the Midianitish woman that was slain, was Cosbi, &c.] We heard before in the fixed verse, how Moses hath laid open the shameless and impudent behavior of this beastly adulterer, who shamed not to bring the Midianitish harlot into the host, and in the sight of all the congregation of the children of Israel, which were grieved to behold such horrible villainy; nevertheless, we see in this place, that Moses is not content in a general manner to describe his wickedness, but singleth him out particularly by his name, by his father by his tribe. Neither doth he content himself to set down the Midianitish woman by her nation, but calleth her by her name, and further openeth the name of her father, and her fathers house. So then, Moses having shown who they were that brought the plague of God upon the people: he now descendeth to mark them out by their proper names, and of what calling and profession they were.

From hence we learn, that it is sometime lawful and convenient to reprove by name, special people and particular men that offend in the Church, and to record them in writing. A particular reproof of particular offenders, sometimes standeth with the word of GOD. So did Elijah deal with Ahab and Jezebel, he told him that it was he and his fathers house that troubled Israel.

This we see practiced by the Prophet Isaiah against Shebna, who being a notable fauourer of evil men, and a great hinderer of good things, is by name threatened to be carried away with a great captivity, Isaiah 22, 17. Thus doth Jeremiah deal with the false Prophets, and other obstinate enemies, Ier. 28, 12. Likewise, our Savior Christ denounceth many fearful woes against the Scribes and Pharisees hypocrites, which shut up the kingdom of heaven before men, devoured widows houses under a color of long prayer, compassed sea and land to make one of their profession, tythed mint and annise, and left the weightier matters of the Law; as judgment, mercy, and fidelity. So did Paul withstand Peter to his face, because he was to be condemned, Gal. 2, 11. And when he saw in the Church such as & put away faith and a good conscience, and made shipwreck of the doctrine of Christ, he giveth the Church notice and warning of them, saying; Of whom is Hymenaeus and Alexander, whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they might learn not to blaspheme, 1. Tim. 1, 20. And in another place, having to do with such as cast off the doctrine of godliness, he noteth the ring-leaders, and principal authors: Of this sort is Hymenaeus and Philetus, which as concerning the truth, have erred from the mark, saying; that the resurrection is past already, and do destroy the faith of certain, 2, Tim. 1, 17. In like manner he specifieth Alexander the copper-smith, which had done him much harm, 2, Tim. 4, 14. So the Apostle John warneth the Church of Diotrephes, who loved to have preeminence among them. Al which examples of the Prophets, of the Apostles, & of Christ himself do teach, y^t it will not always be sufficient to reprove the errors and heresies of obstinate sinners; but sometimes it is expedient to lay them open by their names, and to signify them to the Church, by a particular discovering of them.

The Reasons of this practice are to be considered. [Reason 1] First, because the Church should have warning of thē, that others might shun them, and avoid their company. So the Apostle nameth Alexander to prepare Timothy not to trust him. It is good to know false brethren, lest they spying our liberty, take the greater advantage against us. Hence it is that Paul chargeth Timothy to beware of Alexander, who had withstood his preaching sore, 2 Tim. 4, 15. While we are familiarly conversant with the wicked, it will be hard for us not to be entangled in their sins. For how can a man walk among thorns, & not prick himself? or how can a man touch pitch, and not be defiled? We must fly from such as from a deadly plague. We must separate our selves from them, lest the like vengeance fall upon us also.

Secondly, they must by a special note be made known to the Church, that they may [Reason 2] be degraded and brought to reproach. The Apostle used this remedy, thereby to shut their mouths, and to stop them from speaking evil of almighty GOD and his truth, w^c ought to be precious to us. This naming of them, is to set a mark of infamy upon thē; as if a man were bored in the ear, or burned in the hand for a malefactor. God will have them and their wickedness registered to their perpetual shame in the Church forever, that they should not be of anymore credit to infect the good, and to draw the weak unto destruction. The unnatural & savage dealing of the Amalekites, toward their brethren the Israelites, is by God expressly commanded to be recorded in a book, to their infamy and confusion, The Lord said unto Moses, Write this for a remembrance in the book, and rehearse it to Joshua, for I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven? Exod. 17, 14. So we have in the Scriptures set forth the uncleanness of Sodom, the hard-heartednesse of Pharaoh, the conspiracy of Corah, the covetousness of Ahab, the cruelty of Jezebel, the disobedience of Saul, the treason of Absalom, the treachery of Judas, and other infamous beasts, the record of their shame is in perpetual memory, and stinketh unto this day. The like we might say of all bloody persecutors in all ages since Christ's time, they have their names and facts remembered in the Acts and Monuments of the Church.

Seeing therefore obstinate enemies must be both shunned & shamed; in both respects we learn, that it is lawful for the Ministers of God to point out some by name, that they may be known, otherwise the Apostles of Christ would never have done it, the Prophets would never have practiced it, Christ himself would never have allowed it.

Let us apply this to our selves. First, it serveth as a bridle to restrain evil men, especially all such as bring a public detriment and hurt to the Church, and are the cause of common [Use 1] mischiefs: they shall to the shame of their persons, to the reproach of their names, to the infamy of their posterities, be registered up in the Monuments of the Church forever, as they that carry a mark of their judgment to the tribunal seat of God aforehand. If the love of goodness, if the wrath of God, if the fear of damnation will not bridle them (as Atheists respect none of these, neither desiring godliness, nor believing heaven, nor fearing hell) yet the perpetual shame wherewith they and their posterities shall be branded, should move them. Albeit sinful wretches be highly magnified in the world, yet all their honor and reputation shall be turned into a blot. It was of late years accounted a great dignity to be a Wolfie, or a Gardener, or a Bonner, but now their names are odious for pride and cruelty, and they no better then wolves, invading and wasting the poor flock of Christ. This the wise man speaketh, Prov. chapt. 10, verse 7. The memorial of the just shall be blessed: but the name of the wicked shall rotte. This doth God set forth by his Prophet, Isaiah, chapter 6•, verse 15. Ye shall cry for sorrow of heart and shall howl for vexation of mind, and ye shall leave your name as a curse unto my chosen; for the Lord God shall slay you, and call his servants by another name.

We see then that they are greatly deceived, that hope to be famous and to leave a great name behind them, by getting riches, and raising up their houses, as the Psalmist speaketh; They think their houses and habitations shall continue from generation to generation, and call their Lands by their names: yet they shall not continue in honor, but perish like the brute beast, and be no more had in remembrance, but to their dishonor, Psalm 49, verses 11, 12. This is it which David saith in the ninth Psalm, verse 5. Thou hast destroyed the wicked, thou hast put out their name forever and ever.

A great name among the sons of men is not always a good name: and a great name gotten by evil means and open wickedness, is a great punishment, it is a tokē of the wrath of God, upon those that are well spokē of for ungodly deeds. This hardeneth thē in their sins & holdeth then frō true repentance. But whosoever are given up to hardness of heart, & hindered from bringing forth the fruits of repentance, have 2. heavy judgments lying sore upon thē, however they be as blind men & cannot see thē. It is our duty to pray against such a name unto God, & not to desire it to our destruction. Let us fear such a name as may make us reprochful to GOD and to all good men.

Secondly, seeing we must take heed, that howsoever the practice be in it self lawful, to lay out wicked men in their colors, yet we must not single out men commonly, and ordinarily, being oftentimes offensive; sometimes causeless, and always dangerous. When the Apostle reproached such false teachers among the Corinthians as denied the resurrection, and consequently raised the foundation of Religion (for if there be no resurrection, then is Christ not risen; and if Christ be not risen, then is the preaching of the Minister, and the faith of the people vain:) yet he doth not express the names of these seducers, but saith, If it be preached that Christ is risen from the dead, how say some among you, that there is no resurrection of the dead? 1. Corinth. 15, 12. And in another place, when he saw his person contemned as base, and his Ministry rejected as fruitless, he answereth the slander, but spareth y^e slanderer; This I say, that I may not seem as it were to fear you with letters: for the letters, saith he, are sore and strong, but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech is of no value, Let such one think this, that such as we are in word by letters when we are absent, such will we be also indeed, when we are present. Thus do other the Apostles. Howsoever therefore the practice being wisely and discreetly used, have warrant from the servants of God, yet we are in doing of it to observe these rules following.

First, we must consider our places and callings, we have not the same liberty granted unto us that the Prophets and Apostles had, who received special revelation from God against many of those which they uncased & laid open to the Church, and therefore pray to God to confound them, & to reward them according to their works. We must not therefore make a general rule of it, but remember what Christ said to his disciples, Luke 9, 15. Ye know not of what spirit ye are. They pretended the example of Elias, but they wanted the spirit of Elias. Secondly, we must take heed that we mingle not our own passions with it, for then straight way we pass the bounds of measure and moderation. It is not enough that our zeal be good, but it must be seasoned with such wisdom that the Spirit of God rule over all. We must not be moved with choler and rage, with fury and indignation, but keep under all our affections, that they break not into unlawful courses. Thirdly, we must show pity and compassion of those that sin of weakness and infirmity: we must pray to God for them, that he would pour out his mercy upon them, and to give them repentance to acknowledge the truth, and to come to amendment out of the snare of the devil. We must always hope well of such as fall of frailty, until God show that he hath cut them off. Fourthly, it is lawful to reprove by name, when the necessity of the Church urgeth it, and challengeth it at our hands. So that it is in great danger utterly to be corrupted and overthrown, unless false Teachers and seducers be bewrayed and manifestly discovered, that all men may know them and take heed of them. The safety of the Church is especially to be respected of us, and the truth of God must be most dear unto us. Lastly, there is a warrant to single out such men, when there is no more hope of their conversion, and when they are once grown to open blasphemy, to speak evil of, and to slander the doctrine that is according to godliness upon hatred thereof and pretended malice, there is no more place for patience, we are no longer to deal with the spirit of meekness. When a man is so far fallen from all Religion to speak evil of the way of godliness, and to despite the grace of God, malice hath blinded him, the devil hath possessed him, & condemnation waiteth for him. He beareth evident marks of Reprobation, & God showeth that there is no hope of salvation in him. He giveth knowledge to the Church at sometimes of some particular persons that are castawayes, and have the gate of salvation shut up against them. For otherwise to what purpose is the great and unpardonable sin against the holy Ghost described in the word, unless the sin might be known, and the men also known that do commit it? And to what end doth the Apostle John tell us, 1 John 5, ver. 16. There is a sin to death? and of seeing our brother sin unto death? If then it may be seen it may be known. And hence it is, that when the Church saw Julian the Apostate, who had been enlightened with the truth, and been zealous in the profession of it, to despite God openly, to lift up himself against his word, and to make a mock of all religion, they would have no more to do with him, they accounted him as a devil, and they prayed with one consent against him, that God would confound and destroy him. They did not pray unto God for his conversion, and to give him a new heart, but because he could not repent being past amendment, they called upon God to hasten his condemnation, that he might show thereby what account he maketh of his most holy truth.

Last of all, we ought to have a care to be [Use 3] helpful and profitable to the Church, and to be zealous in the service of God, that thereby to the comfort of our selves and our posterity we may carry a sweet remembrance & a blessed report in the Church forever. The love of Mary in anointing Christ with the precious oil which she poured on his head, is promised by Christ to be remembered forever, in what place of the world soever the Gospel should be published: Verily I say unto you, wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached throughout all the world, there shall also this that she hath done be spoken of for a memorial of her, Matth. 26, 13. The praise of Jehoiada is recorded in Scripture he died an old man, and full of days, & they buried him in the City of David with y^e Kings, because he had done good in Israel, and toward God & his house, 2 Chr. 14, 16. This serveth to reprove such as care not at all what men think or speak of them, and regard not what name they have, good or bad; what report is given of them, honorable or dishonorable, sweet or rotten, so they may prevail in their purposes, and bring to effect their devilish devices. An heathen man could say, It is the part of a reckless and dissolute man, to neglect what a man saith of him. Solomon teacheth us, that a good name is more to be desired then great riches, and a loving favor more then silver and gold, Pro. 22, 1 Eccles 7, 3, This is not attained by flattery or falsehood, but by godliness and righteousness, by humility and an upright conscience. Riches are frail and transitory, subject to vanity and corruption, but a good name and loving favor remain forever. So the Prophet describing the blessedness of the man that feareth the Lord, and delighteth in his commandments, saith, that he shall never be moved: but the righteous shall be had in perpetual remembrance, Ps. 112.6. A good name is better then a great name. And albeit the godly be despised in the world, yet God will advance their estimation, & give thē a sweet savor among all good men. True it is, sinful men are magnified of sinners (for even the sinners love those that love them, to receive the like of them again) yet they shall be made abominable unto the Saints, and their name shall be cursed, and as much loathed as the filthy favor of his carcass that lieth rotting in the grave. So then, seeing shame shall be as an inseperable companion of wickedness, and no man can separate those things which God hath joined together; on the other side here is comfort to the godly, that GOD will undertake the protection of their names, so that no creature shall be able to rob them of it: but as he preserveth them to salvation, so he will maintain their credit and estimation. We see this in many the dear servants of God, who albeit they have had their names for a time diminished & impayred, yet they have been restored and recovered. The name of Naboth was greatly blemished with the slanderous imputation of treason and blasphemy, but that momentary shame is swallowed up, and recompensed with everlasting honor, throughout all generations, 1, King. 21.10. The like we might say of Cranmer, Ridley, Latimer, Hooper, Bradford, Philpot, and many other the dear servants of God, that gave their lives for the truth, howsoever they were condemned for heretics, yet they are renowned for Saints, and shall be so acknowledged to the end of the world,

16 Again the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

17 Vexe the Midianites, and smite them.

18 For they trouble you with their wiles, wherewith they have beguiled you, as concerning Peor, and as concerning their sister Cosbi the daughter of a Prince of Midian, which was slain in the day of the plague, because of Peor.

We have hitherto in this chapter handled the transgression of the Israelites, and the reconciliation of God. Now remaineth the decree and determination of God against the Midianites. For after that God had chastened his own people, and judgment hath begun to break out against the house of God, he riseth up in wrath and indignation as a just Judge against his enemies. Herein we are to mark two things: First, the commandment: Secondly, the reasons or causes of the commandment. The commandment and charge directed unto Moses in this, Smite and slay the Midianites. Thus doth wickedness return upon the heads of the authors thereof. These enemies being drawn into the league to take part with the Moabites, had conspired against Israel, sought to subdue them, not by strength, but by sensuality; nor by force of war, but by lasciuiousnesse and wantonness of women. Now the wheel is turned upon themselves, the stone is rolled upon them that first stirred it, and mischief falleth upon the first contriuers.

[Object.] But here out of this commandment arise two questions fit to be moved, and worthy to be discussed. First, inasmuch as God everywhere forbiddeth revenging of our own causes and quarrels, why doth he now permit and provoke the people of Israel thereunto, as if they were not by nature prone enough to vengeance? I answer, [Answ.] there is a double kind of revenge, one private, the other public. Private revenge is that which proceedeth from the private motion of our corrupt nature, seeking to satisfy our own malice with the hurt of others. This is forbidden by our Savior Christ, Matthew 5, 44: commanding us to love our enemies, and to overcome evil with good. Public revenge is that which is commanded and warranted by God, being imposed upon us, either mediately by authority of the Magistrate, or immediately by the secret instinct of the Spirit. This is allowed and lawful, as we saw before in Phinehas and others, inasmuch as it proceedeth not from the corruption of nature, but from the inspiration of God. For God the just revenger of all wickedness may use the ministry of men and Angels to execute his purposes so often as it pleaseth him.

Another question arising out of this Commandment, [Objection.] is touching the persons against whom it is directed, as the first was, touching the persons to whom it was directed. For why should the Midianites be named only, seeing the Moabites also were the professed enemies of the Israelites, seeking their ruin, and hyring Balaam to curse them? I answer, [Answer.] the Moabites did not escape, but were also punished, as appeareth evidently, Deut. 23, 6. But the Midianites are first in the punishment because albeit they were farther off, yet they had the chiefest hand, and carried the greatest stroke in this wickedness, who made their daughters common; yea even the chiefest among them, by the counsel of Balaam, as we saw by one example in this Chapter, the like whereof we do not read to have been in the Moabites. Besides, after that Balaam was departed, we read not that the Moabites attempted anything against Israel, but the Midianites gave the Sorcerer farther entertainment, and ceased not (as may be presumed & presupposed) to plot and contrive their destruction.

Hitherto of the commandment, the first part of this division: the reasons enforcing the commandment follow to be considered, which are two in number: First, because they cunningly gulled, and craftily circumvented the people of God. Secondly, because they allured them both to idolatry and to fornication. For this is the meaning of the words, when Moses saith, They have beguiled you as concerning Peor, and as concerning their sister Cozbi: And hereunto John pointeth in the Revelation, saying; Balaam taught Balak to put a stumbling block before the children of Israel, that they should eat of things sacrificed to Idols, and commit fornication, Reue. 2, 14. Both these reasons may be gathered into one, and thus concluded.

If the Midianites drew you into sin, and 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 brought upon you the plague of God, then spare not to smite them:

But the Midianites drew you into sin, and brought upon you the plague of God:

Therefore spare not you to smite them.

This is the force and strength of the reason, to move the Israelites to make themselves strong, and to be of good courage, assuring themselves that God will give them victory, & enable them to destroy them that did compass their destruction.

Thus we have seen the interpretation of the text, and the order of the words. This is the natural meaning intended by the Spirit of God. But before we pass any further, it shall not be amiss a little to consider the notable abuse of this place, and of other Scriptures, avouched by some of the Church of Rome. For one of late, not only a common professor of our Religion, but a public Preacher of the same in our Church, hath revolted from us through some worldly temptations, run into our enemies campe, lifted up his heel against us, and in bitter and biting manner railed at us. This man wanting no good will to write against us, and yet finding no strength in himself to deal against us out of evident and plain Scripture, hath turned all into allegories, and out of his inward and hidden senses, wresteth and wringeth all things against the Protestants. As for example, when the Lord in this place is said to have spoken to Moses in this manner; Vexe the Midianites, and smite them, because they troubled you with their wiles, and beguiled you as concerning Peor; the meaning according to his interpretation, is this; Christ said to the Vicar of Christ, Suppress the writings of heretics and confute them, because they trouble you with their guiles, and make their false doctrines appear beautiful to the show and outward appearance, the heretics receiving a counterfeit word, (instead of the true Scripture) which is condemned in the day of the Popes censure. Behold here, the heavy judgment of God upon this man, since his apostasy and revolting from the true Church, to the Synagogue of Antichrist. Are not here strange proofs, and far set interpretations, to prove the Pope to be the Vicar of Christ, that the writings of heretics are to be suppressed, and that the heretics themselves do deceive and delude the world under a color of the word of God, & a pretence of the bare literal meaning? And yet this is the profound, inward, mystical, and right Scripture that he so often boasteth of. But let the indifferent reader judge, whether this manner of interpretation be not the highway to set up all Atheism, to overthrow the authority and certainty of the Scripture, to shake the foundation of true religion, & to leave no grounds for Christians to stand upon. And this hath been the ancient practice of such disciples as have learned such divinity in the schools of Antichrist. It is well known that Pighius compared the Scriptures to a nose of wax, and to a rule of Lead. The censure of Colen affirmeth the like in the same words. And to the same purpose Cardinal Cusane teacheth, that the Scriptures must be expounded diversely, and framed to the time & practice of the Church, so that at one time they are to be understood and interpreted one way, and at another time another way. These are some of those bold blasphemies, which many of the Popes Minions have uttered to the world. Now, such as apply the Scriptures to their own fancies, & turn them into allegories, do not come far behind the former. If we suffer the Scriptures of God to be thus wrested and corrupted, the Religion of Christ cannot long continue. If a man pull down the foundation of an house whereon it standeth, or shake the main pillars whereon it leaneth, the house it self cannot long hold out, but must fall down. The Church of God is built upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, so long as the doctrine contained in them is maintained and kept pure and undefiled, the Church shall stand upright, and remain without danger of being shaken in pieces. But when once it beginneth to be mingled with the chaff of man's invention, or infected with the poison of the devils device, by and by it tottereth & decayeth, until in the end (no remedy being provided) it languish and die.

Now to apply this to our present purpose: howsoever some glory of the hidden senses of Scripture which they have found out, and please themselves in their foolish conceits, it is no better then to make merchandice of the word, and to turn the truth of God into a lie, 2. Cor. 2, 17. For whereas out of this commandment of God, charging Moses to slay the Midianites that troubled Israel with their guiles, and drew them to fornication, this construction is gathered, that Moses is the Vicar of Christ, that the Midianites signify the writings of heretics, with such like trash, the only naming thereof is sufficient to show the vanity of it. This I confess may not unfitly be called another Scripture then yet hath been known, howbeit not the Lord's, but his own. And if this new and admirable way to a new found land were granted unto him, what would it make more against us then against himself, and generally against the whole Church of Rome? This shall plainly appear unto us in three respects. For first of all, admit once of these fond guesses and glosses upon the Scripture, and depart from the simplicity of the same, there is a gappe opened wide, to intrude a thousand diverse, nay contrary interpretations, according to the diverse or contrary disposition of the interpreter. As for example, out of this present place, mentioning the commandment of God to Moses, the guiles of the Midianites, and their drawing Israel to fornication, by means of Cozbi, a Princes daughter among them; a man might with greater probability gather, and agreeing better with the proportion of faith in other Scriptures, an encouragement to all Christian Princes to pull down the purple whore that sitteth in spiritual Babylon, to reward her as she hath rewarded us, Revel. 18, 6, and to give her double according to her works, and in the cup that she hath filled to us, to fill her the double. For in the former words Moses shall signify the Christian Magistrate; the Midianites, the enemies of Christ, the greatest whereof are Antichrist, and his adherents: the enticing of the Israelites to fornication, the committing of idolatry, and running a whoring after Idols; the slaying of Cozbi in the day of the plague, the downfall and ruin of their idolatrous worship, which we see God hath miraculously brought to pass. Thus we see, how these words may more fitly and fully be applied against the church of Rome, then against true Catholics, whom he calleth heretics. Secondly, if this be the marrow and pith of the Scriptures, to hide such mystical meanings and secret senses under the outward bark, what hindereth us, but that we may raise as good doctrine out of Homers Iliads, and Odysses, out of Ouids Metamorphosis, or out of Virgil's Aeneads, as out of the writings of Moses and the Prophets; which were horrible blasphemy once to conceive or imagine? For if a man, by Vlysses or by Aeneas, should understand Christ; by their companions, his Disciples; by their wanderings, his sufferings; by their going down to hell, his overcoming of the devil, and triumphing over the kingdom of darkness; by their safe arriving in an haven of rest after all their labors, his resurrection from the dead, and taking possession of the kingdom of heaven: he hath as fair a warrant for these conjectures, as this trifler hath for his fooleries: to understand by Moses, the Pope; by the Midianites, the writings of heretics; by Cozbi, such doctrine as pretendeth the Name of God; and by vexing the Midianites, the stopping of the course of their heretical writings. Lastly, this inward supposed Scripture that this dreamer hath conceited, burieth the true word of God, and setteth up a forged and counterfeit Scripture. For it turneth all things into Allegories, and disanulleth the rules of interpretation. The Allegories that we find not in Scripture, we are at liberty to refuse. He that hath set bounds and banks to the sea, that it should pass no further, hath restrained us how far we shall go. We must not turn either to the right hand, or to the left, Deut. 4, 2. We must walk the kings high way, we must not add or diminish, we must not change or alter anything of Christ's testament. Origen the Prince and Patron of Allegories, hath been taxed and condemned of all men, for corrupting and perverting the Scripture this way: but now Origen is justified by this new found interpretation, which is no better then a languishing about trifles, 1 Tim. 6, 4, a dotting about questions and strife of words, and a casting of clouds and smoke upon the Sun beams. And howsoever the schoolmen have ouerflowed the banks in the ranknesse and superfluity of their wit, and thereby defaced and depraved the precious word of God purer then the gold of Ophir; yet Thomas, one of the Princes and gods among them teacheth, that the literal sense of the Scripture is that which the Author intendeth, and the Author of holy Scripture is God. Now if that be the true meaning of the Scripture which the holy Ghost intendeth, I would gladly know, whether the pretended mystical interpretation of this place, building up the primacy of Peter, and supremacy of the Pope, and pulling down the heretics, were intended by the Commandment of God unto Moses? Let him tell me whether the words be in the nature of a Prophecy, or of an History? belonging to the present times, or to the times to come? Let him show, whether Moses ever understood the commandment of the Lord, as this popish Proctor, (or rather prater) pretendeth? And whether the interpretation now set afoot, were true in the days of Moses, or not? Lastly, let him declare, whether Moses and the Israelites did ever obey this commandment or not? But if the meaning be, that God spake not to Moses, but to the Vicar of Christ, nor gave them charge concerning the Midianites, but the writings of heretics; nor spake touching Cozbi, but those that counterfeted the word of GOD: he did delude Moses with a vain shadow of words, pretending one thing, and intending another, in outward show giving him authority, but in an inward meaning establishing the Popes superiority, which was not hatched nor heard of in sundry ages afterward. And hereupon it is, that all the sounder Divines of ancient times, and the sounder schoolmen of latter times have rejected this mystical divinity, as unavailable and insufficient, to prove any point of Christian Religion. Thus then we see that the word of God is not to be turned into an allegory, taking away the truth of the history, and the doctrine of faith. In this manner of reasoning notwithstanding, the chiefest keys of Popish Religion are hammered, & so most absurd and impertinent allegories are established. God made two great lights, a greater to rule the day, and a lesser to rule the night; therefore there are two great powers set in the world, the Pope and the Emperor, and the authority of the Pope is so much greater then the authority of the Emperor, as the Sun is then the Moon. God said, In thy light, we shall see light: therefore, there must be candles in the Church burning at noon day. The words of the Prophet, Thou hast put all things under his feet, Psal. 8, 6, 7: they allegorize thus for the supreme jurisdiction of the man of sin; all sheep and oxen, that is, all men: Foules, that is Angels and devils: Fish in the sea, that is, all souls in Purgatory.

Moreover, as this course of interpretation turneth the Scripture into Allegories, so it overturneth the rules of Interpretation. Saint Augustine in his famous books of Christian Doctrine, handleth at large the manner how to expound the Scripture, and what ways are to be taken to find out the true meaning thereof. Where he teacheth, that seeing the love of God and of our neighbor is the end of the whole Scripture, that must be a false interpretation, which doth not build up in this love: that we must expound the dark places by the plain, the fewer by the greater number: that the study of arts & knowledge of the toongs is necessary: that we must expound Scripture by Scripture: that we must distinguish between precepts & precepts, between those that are given to all, and those that were particularly directed to certain persons: that we must diligently mark all circumstances, what goeth before, and what followeth after: that we must pray unto him that is the Author of the Scriptures, who only is able to reveal the meaning of his own word. These rules are diligently to be considered of all those that come to expound the Scriptures. As for hidden and secret senses, we know them not, we acknowledge them not, we believe them not, but leave them to those that seek an hidden divinity, and a secret religion devised in their own brains, which will not abide the trial of the light. And thus much touching the true understanding of this division, and of overthrowing the false interpretation thereof; now let us come to the Doctrines that arise out of the same.

[Verse 16. Again, the Lord spake unto Moses, saying; &c.] We heard before the heavy wrath of God that fell upon the Israelites, the heads of thē were hanged, the rest of the people were plagued with a sore plague, there died in one day, four and twenty thousand. But did the Midianites escape the hand of God, that were the enticers of them, who offered their daughters that they should commit fornication with them? No, they did not escape, God giveth Moses charge to draw the sword against them, and to destroy them. Here then we are to observe the order which God observeth in punishing. The Midianites sinned first, but the Israelites are first punished. The Israelites sinned after the Midianites, but the Midianites are punished after them. From this course of God's judgments, we learn this Doctrine, that God first chasteneth his own people. Howsoever he will not suffer the ungodly to escape, nor to go away without punishment, but executeth his just judgments against them: yet he will begin with his own Church, & lay the rod upon them in the first place.

He could if it had pleased him have punished these Midianites first, as the principal authors of all this mischief; but he beginneth in justice with his Church, which were drawn to idolatry and adultery by them. Thus the Lord dealt with Moses and Aaron, when the people murmured through want of water, repented of their going out of Egypt, and rebelling against God, assembling themselves in tumultuous manner against the servants of GOD that had led them in the wilderness, and carried them in safety, as upon Eagles wings. These were the first and chief in the offense, yet because Moses and Aaron believed not the Lord, to sanctify him in the presence of the children of Israel, they were first punished, and not suffered to bring the congregation into the land which he had given them, Num. 20, 12. This we see further confirmed unto us in the latter end of the book of Job: he had indeed offended God, and spoken unadvisedly with his lips, but his three friends had offended much more grossly than he: for the wrath of God was kindled against them, because they had not spoken of him the thing that is right like his servant Job, Job 42, 7. Nevertheless, Job is rebuked first, albeit he were the party that had less offended. First, God findeth fault with Job; and secondly, he findeth fault with his companions. The holy history teacheth us, that Jehoshaphat joined in affinity with Ahab, and went into the battle with him. True it is, he sinned grievously in helping the wicked, and loving them that hated the Lord, for the which he is reprov'd of the Prophet; yet many good things were found in him, and he was righteous in respect of Ahab, 2. Chron. 19, 1: notwithstanding, the wrath of the Lord began first to fall upon him, and he had perished in the fight, being compassed by his enemies, unless he had cried unto the Lord to help him, who moved them to depart from him, 2 Chron. 18.31. This is it which the Prophet Jeremiah declareth at large, showing the order of the Lord's proceeding in punishing such as sin against him; first, he will raise up the Chaldeans to chastise his Church, and then the Chaldeans themselves shall not escape: I will send and take to me all the families of the North, and I will bring them against this Land, & against the inhabitants thereof, and this whole land shall be desolate, and an astonishment, and these nations shall serve the King of Babel seventy years: & when the seventy years are accomplished, &c. Ier. 25, 9, 11, 12. This is it which the Prophet complaineth of in the Psalm, These are the wicked, yet prosper they always, and increase in riches: Certainly I have cleansed my heart in vain, & washed mine hands in innocence, &c. Psal, 73, 12, 13. And if we consider either the state of the Church generally, or the condition of the members of y^e Church particularly, we may in all times and ages see the truth of this doctrine, and conclude with the Apostle Peter, The time is come that judgment must begin with the house of God, 1. Pet. 4, 17.

[Reason 1] The reasons will further open unto us the certainty of this truth, and serve to clear the justice of God in observing this order. For first, as he that honoreth the Lord shall be honored, so they that despise the Lord, shall be despised, 2. Sam. 2, 30. But none more dishonor GOD then his servants offending against him, whose sins press him down as the sheaves do a cart. They open the mouths of the ungodly, to speak evil of God, and his truth. If then God's own people, the lot of his inheritance do despise him, and cause his Name to be blasphemed, if they neglect his honor, and turn his mercies unto security, and his grace into wantonness, and so with a proud heart, and an high hand set themselves against it, can he bear it? and will he not be revenged on such a nation as this? 1. Sam. 12.14. Rom. 2, 24. There can be no greater despite done unto a man, then when his own children rise against him, and offer all villainy unto him. So there can be no greater dishonor offered unto the most High God, then when the sons of his own house, the servants of his own family, and the flock of his own pasture, rebel and resist against him. The sin of the Jews is greater then of the Gentiles, which sinned of knowledge, and not of ignorance, and therefore should receive the greater punishment, and be beaten with moe stripes, as our Savior teacheth, Luke 12, 47. We are not therefore to marvel, if they come into judgment that they may be despised, as they have despised him. For seeing no sins are greater then the sins of his own chosen, they must first taste the scourge of his hand, as they have contemned him and his glory.

[Reason 2] Secondly, his own people have the first and greatest experience of his mercies. They have the chiefest and choicest privileges and perogatives of his graces above all the wicked. True it is, all mankind tasteth abundantly of God's liberal and bountiful hand, to make them without excuse: but to the sons and daughters of the Almighty, All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth: the secrets of the Lord are revealed to them that fear him, and his covenant to give them understanding, Psal, 25, 10, 14. He calleth not them his servants, For the servant knoweth not what his master doth: but he calleth them his friends, for all things which he hath heard of his Father hath he made known to them, John 15, 15. This is that reason which the Prophet pointeth unto, when he saith; Loe, I begin to plague the city where my Name is called upon, Ier. 25, 29: As if he should say, I have set my Name there, I have given them my word, I have fed them as from mine own table, therefore they shall not escape. This is it which the Apostle meaneth, when he saith, I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, &c. Rom. 1, 16. Whereby he declareth, that God keepeth this order, to offer grace first unto his own people.

When Christ sent out his disciples, he commanded them not to go into the way of the Gentiles, neither to enter into the cities of the Samaritans, But to go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, Math. 10.6. And when the Apostle saw the Jews full of envy, and speak against those things which were preached unto them, he said; behold, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken unto you, but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life; loe, we turn to the Gentiles, Acts 13, 46.

Seeing then, that this is the constant order that God observeth, to bestow his blessings first upon his servants; it followeth, that for the abuse of them they must first feel his punishments. The greater love they have abused, the greater punishment shall be inflicted upon them. This is it which the Apostle remembereth, Tribulation and anguish shall be upon the soul of everyone that doth evil, Rom. 2.9.

Let us now make use of this doctrine which [Use 1] hath been made plain to our consciences. First, this serveth to overthrow the Church of Rome, who dream of a Church set in outward pomp and glory, and make it a note of the Church to have temporal felicity, to have earthly triumphs, to have victories, and good success in war against their enemies; as also the unhappy end of the enemies of y^e Church. For our doctrine teacheth us, that the Church is oftener without this flourishing estate in outward happiness than it doth enjoy it. The Kingdom of Christ is not of this world. The Lord declareth to Abraham, that for a surety his seed should be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, four hundred years, and shall serve them, and they shall entreat them evil, Gen. 15.13. So he threatened by his Prophet Jeremiah, and performed it, that they were carried into captivity seventy years, verifying that which is spoken, I have forsaken mine house, I have left mine heritage: I have given the dearly beloved of my soul into the hands of her enemies, Ierem. 12, 7.

Hence it is, that Christ saith oftentimes, In the world ye shall have trouble: ye shall weep & lament, and the world shall rejoyce, John. 16, 7.33, The Apostle teacheth, That all which will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution, 2. Tim. 3.12. It is a worthy sentence recorded by the Prophet, Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints, howsoever the world do account of them, Psal. 116, 15. It is made a note of the Turkish Religion, to have external felicity, & to abound in earthly prosperity. It is the heavenly felicity and everlasting happiness which belongeth to the true Church, and is proper to it. Therefore one of their own writers though not so absurd in opinion and corrupt in judgment, as most of that side, faith, The cross is a note of the Church: Christ foretold us of troubles, but false Christ's of peace and prosperity.

So then, by the confession of this man they must be accounted false Prophets, that make outward glory and renown to be the true marks of the true Church. And if we should necessarily urge this as any privilege of the Church, we should long ago have condemned the Prophets, the Apostles, the Patriarchs, Martyrs, yea the son of God himself Christ Jesus, who wanted the favor of the world, suffered the reproach of the cross, and gave up their lives unto the death, that they might receive a better resurrection. If the Church of Rome condemn these, we are content they should condemn us: if they justify them, they must condemn themselves, and renounce this outward felicity as a false note of the Church.

[Use 2] Secondly, we may from this usual order of God's punishments conclude, that the ungodly shall never escape, albeit for a time they be free. GOD hath most assuredly determined to inflict great and grievous punishments upon the wicked and ungodly that are his enemies, howsoever he bear for a season with the vessels of wrath. This the Prophet is sent to tell the King of Babel and that nation, and sundry other people, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, ye shall certainly drink; for loe I begin to plague the city where my Name is called upon, and should you go free? ye shall not go quit, for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, Jer. 25, 29. This we see likewise in the Prophet Habakuk; first the Lord raised up the Chaldeans, a bitter and furious nation, whose horses were swifter then the Leopards, and fiercer then the wolves, to chastise his own people: and afterward the Chaldeans themselves shall be spoiled, Chapter 2.

This serveth as a terror to all ungodly men, to consider, that howsoever GOD beginneth to chastise those of his own household, when he doth purpose to bring a plague upon a land, and beginneth not at the unbelievers, but letteth them alone, and spareth them as though he had forgotten their works, or had not seen their sinful ways: yet they must know, that their transgressions are recorded in the book of God, and shall come to account. For he suffereth those whom he loveth not, to wax ripe, yea to rot away in their sins, and in the mean season he chastiseth those whom he hath adopted to be his children. Gen. 15.

The state of the faithful is in the fight of man, and in the judgment of the world more miserable then the state of the despisers of God, which rest at ease, and welter in all pleasures. They seem to be forgotten of God and utterly forsaken of help, so that they pine away with sorrow of heart: whereas the wicked lift up their heads and set their horns on high, they are merry and make a mock of sin in the despite of God, and in scorn of all godliness. Alas, how would this trouble and torment us, and bring us to our wits ends, if we had not this doctrine, that judgment entereth first into the house of God, and that when God shall have finished all his work upon mount Zion, then will he not spare the wicked? Isaiah 10, 12. God will indeed keep corrections first in his own house, seeing he loveth them most, and seeketh to cleanse them from their sins, he will visit them in the first place, lest they should be condemned with the world; and then a most horrible vengeance is prepared, and a stormy tempest is made ready for those that have long abused his patience and hardened their hearts, not knowing that his long sufferance ought to have led them to repentance, 1. Cor, 11, 32. This serveth as a notable comfort on the one side to all the godly that are tried by afflictions of long continuance. We must consider, that the more the Lord loveth us, the more forward he is in visiting of us: and when he seeth we have stepped awry and are gone out of the right way of salvation, he watcheth over us, to bring us home again to him with speed.

This is that which the Apostle teacheth the Church of Corinth; For this cause many are weak and sick among you, and many sleep: for if we would judge our selves, we should not be judged: but when we are judged we are chastened of the Lord, because we should not be condemned with the world. Let us not therefore despise the chastening of the Lord, neither faint when we are rebuked of him: for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and he scourgeth every son whom he receiveth: if therefore we be without correction, &c. Heb. 12, 5.6. Even as when a man beholding two children committing evil, correcteth one of them, and letteth the other go free: the standers by will say, surely that was his son which he did smite and chasten, but the other was not. Besides, we are assured that the wicked shall perish, and that the ungodly shall be punished. Secondly, this serveth to set forth the woeful condition of all the reprobate: for when they see how GOD dealeth with his own dear children, chastening them for their sins, and sending them great afflictions, as appeareth in David, that the sword departed not from his house, & that God did visit him with sundry other judgments in his children all the days of his life; it ought to be a fearful threatening to the wicked, to make them afraid of the reward which is laid up in store for them in the life to come. This is that which Solomon calleth to their remembrance Behold the righteous shall be recompensed, &c. Prov. 11, 31. And to the same purpose speaketh the Apostle Peter, The time is come that judgment must begin at the house of GOD, 1. Peter 4, 17. If it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them which obey not the Gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? Woe therefore to all wicked men; how wretched shall their end be? how horrible shall their destruction be, when God cometh to give them the hire and wages of their work? Let them therefore repent of their evil ways, and call upon God betimes before the evil days approach, and before judgment do come upon them.

[Use 3] Lastly, from hence arise sundry duties to be practiced, as well of the children of God y^t lie under chastisement, as of others that are beholders of it. First, seeing God will begin his chastisements upon his own children, it teacheth them when they are punished, to consider and search out the true cause thereof, and to call upon him to pardon their sins. True it is, he is able to preserve them in the time of trouble, & he is ready to regard their prayers; but their sins are loathsome to him, and do turn away his loving countenance from them, according unto the saying of the Prophet, Isaiah 59, 1, 2. Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, neither is his ear heavy that it cannot hear, but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, & your sins have hid away his face from you, that he will not hear. When our sins are heartily confessed, they shall be freely pardoned: and when they are pardoned, God is reconciled unto us: and when he is reconciled, his judgments shall be removed. Secondly, let us begin a new life, & walk in the ways of righteousness: for as Solomon teacheth, Righteousness delivereth from death, Prov. 10, 2. We must turn from our wickedness, and then God will turn from his judgments. We are ready to cry out in the time of our affliction, but we are not so ready to practice true religion. If we would call in God's judgment, we must turn to him by amendment of life. Lastly, when we see y^e Lord strike his own children, we must behold it with an eye of compassion. So soon as we see their miseries and calamities that lie heavy upon them, we must show our selves to have a feeling of their afflictions, we must express our pity, we must manifest our kindness, and we must declare the bowels of our love toward them. This is it which Job requireth at the hands of his friends in the days of his sorrow, The wicked have despised me, & when I rose they spake against me: all my secret friends abhorred me, and they whom I loved are turned against me, &c. Where we see he showeth, y^t God had chastened him, that his brethren stood far from him, that his acquaintance were strangers unto him, that his neighbors had forsaken him, that his familiars had forgotten him, that his servants disdained him, that his wife loathed him, that the wicked despised him, that his secret friends abhorred him, & thereupon he crieth out for some to pity him in his misery, and to comfort him in his extremity. This duty should be performed by us, to testify our love unto the servants of God: and so much the rather, because it is so generally neglected. Nay, it is not only shamefully omitted, but the contrary is commonly practiced. For, how many are there that make a mock at the miseries of the Church, as Shimei did at the troubles of David, who cursed him when he should have comforted him? 2. Sam. 16, 7. Thus are the dear Saints of God dealt withal, thus they are reviled and railed upon with horrible taunts, thus they are slandered and reproached with bitter imputations, such as the devil deuiseth, and malice setteth abroad. The bowels of their pity, are breathings out of cruelty. Their showing of compassion, is the adding to their affliction. Their visiting of them in their adversity, is a casting upon them of the greatest misery. These are the days of the patience of the Saints, which are filled with reproaches, and give their cheeks to him that smiteth them, Lam. 3, 30. Let them commit their causes to God, who in his good time will look upon them for good, and reward their enemies according to their works.

[Verse 17. Vexe the Midianites and smite them.] Here is the commandment given by God to Moses, and by Moses to the Israelites to execute vengeance upon the Midianites, because they drew the people of God into sin allured them to whoredom, enticed them to idolatry, and brought upon them a most fearful judgment, that entered in among them, & destroyed many thousands of them. This commandment given in this place, is afterwards renewed and executed according to the direction given unto them. For inasmuch as they troubled Israel, the Lord troubled them to be put to the sword, so that their cities were burned, their goods were spoiled, their Women captived, their Kings destroyed, and all their males massacred. This is set down more at large in Numb. 31, 1, 2. where the Lord spake unto Moses, saying; Reuenge the children of Israel of the Midianites, and afterwards shalt thou be gathered unto thy people. And Moses spake to the people, saying; Harnesse some of you unto war, and let them go against Midian, to execute the vengeance of the Lord against Midian. Seeing then that they have such a charge & commission from God to destroy them, we learn from hence, That war is lawful. The people of God may lawfully make wars both offensive and defensive against their enemies. The truth hereof appeareth in many places of the word of God. This is charged upon the people of God, Deu. 7, 2. & 20, 10, 11, 12, 13. Whē the Lord thy God shall bring thee into the Land whither thou goest to possess it, and shall root out many nations before thee, then thou shalt smite thē thou shalt utterly destroy them, thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor have compassion on them. And afterward in the same book, when thou comest near unto a city to fight against it, thou shalt offer it peace: but if it will make no peace with thee, but make war against thee, then thou shalt besiege it, and the Lord thy God shall deliver it into thine hands, and thou shalt smite all the males thereof with y^e edge of the sword. So when Amalek fought with Israel in Rephidim, which was the first of the nations that encountered with thē after they came out of the land of Egypt, Moses said to Joshua, Choose us out men, & go fight with Amalek, so he discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword, Exod. 17, 9. The like we see in Joshua the General of the Lord's host, at the taking and winning of Joshua, so soon as the wall fell down at the sounding of the Trumpets, and the shouting of the people, they took the City, and utterly destroyed all that was in the City, both mā and woman, young and old, with the edge of the sword, Josh. 6, 21. & 10, 13. This the Prophet teacheth, when he praised the Lord for delivering him from the hand of all his enemies, Psal. 18, 34, 37, 38. He teacheth my hands to fight, so that a bow of brass is broken with mine arms: I have pursued mine enemies and taken them, and have not turned again till I had consumed them, &c.

[Reason 1] And howsoever these testimonies may seem sufficient to persuade this truth, yet we shall be better confirmed therein, if we consider the strength of reason to enforce the former truth. First, it is a title proper to God, to be called the Lord of hosts, and all wars lawfully undertaken, are called the battles of the Lord; so that as God is served in the day of battle, so he is the Captain and Leader of the Army. Hence it is that Moses saith, The Lord is a man of war, his name is Jehovah, Exod. 15, 3. This is it which Saul said to David when he promised to give him his eldest daughter to wife, Only be a valiant son unto me, & fight the Lord's battles, 1 Sam. 18, 17. And it is said, that many of the enemies of God's people fell down wounded, because the war was of God, 1 Chron. 5, 32. Seeing then, God is the Lord of hosts, a man of war, the Captain of the army, the only author and sole giver of victory, we must needs hold that wars are lawful, and may be lawfully used and taken in hand.

[Reason 2] Secondly, as we are taught the lawfulness of war by the titles of God, so we are farther assured of it by the special commandments w^c God giveth for the carrying of arms against common enemies, as also by his gracious and merciful promises made unto his people, for good success and prosperous proceeding in their just cause & honest quarrel. To this purpose tended the law of God, charging Saul to smite Amalek, and to destroy all that pertained to him, and to have no compassion upon them but to destroy them all. Likewise, the Lord charged Joshua to take all the men of war with him, and to lie in wait on the backside of Ai to take it, and to slay the inhabitants thereof with the sword. Neither had the people of God only the charge of a commādement, but the comfort of a promise: the commandment to warrant them, the promise to strengthen and encourage them. When Joshua was to go against Jericho (w^c was shut up & closed because of the children of Israel) the Lord said unto him, Behold I have given into thy hand Jericho and the king thereof, and the strong men of war. Josh. 6, 2, 3. And afterward, when sundry kings gathered themselves together against the Gibeonites that had subjected themselves to the Israelites, the Lord said unto Joshua, Fear them not, for I have given them into thine hand, none of them shall stand against thee, Josh. 10, 8.

Thirdly, as the children of God have prayed [Reason 3] for the help of God in the success of their business, and in the works of their hands that they have attempted, and have been heard: so when they have gone into war to fight with their enemies, they have called upon his name, and received great comfort. This we see evidently in the practice of Joshua, who prayed unto him in the day when he gave the Amorites before the children of Israel, Joshua chap. 10. verses 12, 14. Sun, stay thou in Gibeon, and thou Moon in the valley of Aialon: and there was no day like that day before it nor after it, that the Lord heard the voice of a man, for the Lord fought for Israel. When the Philistines were assembled against Israel, the children of Israel said to Samuel, Cease not to cry unto the Lord our God for us; that he may save us out of the hand of the Philistines, 1 Samuel chapt. 7. verses 8, 9, 10. Samuel cried unto the Lord, who heard him, and thundered with a great thunder that day upon the Philistines, and scattered them, so they were slain before Israel. And there is a notable example hereof recorded in the first of the Chronicles, the fifth chapter and the 20. verse, touching the sons of Reuben, of Gad, and of half the Tribe of Manasseh: They were holpen against the Hagarims who were delivered into their hand, and all that were with them, for they cried to God in the battle, and he heard him because they trusted in him. If then God do in mercy hear the prayers of those that call upon his most holy name going unto the war, and preparing themselves unto the battle, we cannot doubt of the lawfulness of the work it self, seeing almighty God useth not to hear those that go about evil, but sendeth his curse upon them.

Fourthly, the word of God setteth down [Reason 4] the duties of those that manage the matters of the field, as of the King, of the Captain, & of the common soldier, which it would never do, if the callings were unlawful. For as we conclude marriage to be lawful, and an honorable ordinance of God, because y^e Scripture setteth forth the duties of married persons as well of the husband toward the wife, as the wife toward her husband: so, in as much as we find the duties of such as go to war, as well of those that are commanders, as of those that are under commandment, described plentifully and fully in the book of God, we cannot call the lawfulness of their office in question. Hence it is, that the Lord teacheth Joshua the duties of his calling, Josh. 1, 6: y^t he should be strong and of a good corage, that he should meditate in the book of the Law, and assure himself that he would be with him, and not leave him nor forsake him, so that there should not a man be able to withstand him all y^e days of his life. So when the soldiers came to John the Baptist to be instructed how to lead their lives, and to be directed how to escape the wrath of God to come, he said unto them, Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely, and be content with your wages. The particular handling and setting down of these duties, enforceth the acknowledgement of the lawfulness of the calling.

[Reason 5] Lastly, we shall see the lawfulness of wars, if we consider the lawful causes of a lawful war. The first is the defense of true religion against the oppugners thereof, as appeareth by the words of Ahijah to Jeroboam, and all Israel, 2 Chron. 13, 6. The second is, that such as are oppressed for religion, may be freed and delivered, as we see in the histories of the Judges, who raised wars to deliver the oppressed and distressed people out of the bloody hands of the cruel oppressors. The third is for the necessary defense of the Commonwealth, by repulsing injuries offered, by revenging indignities and assaults, and by recovering things lost: as their wives, their sons, their daughters, their goods, their possessions, their cities, their substance & dominions. The overthrow of the Commonwealth, bringeth the ruin of the Churches peace. For as the flourishing estate of the Commonwealth maintaineth and furthereth the Churches peace; so when the Common-wealth is spoiled, the liberty and freedom of the Church is diminished, as appeareth in sundry places of the Lamentations.

[Use 1] Let us now make use of this doctrine, and apply it to our instruction. First it is required of everyone to have courage. We must not grow feeble and faint-hearted, we should not fear nor be discouraged, but be bold as in the work of the Lord, assuring our selves, that the Lord is our strength, who teacheth our hands to fight, and our fingers to battle, Psalm 144, 1.

When Hezekiah saw that Zaneherib was come and that his purpose was to fight against Jerusalem, he said to his Captains & soldiers, Be strong and courageous: fear not, neither be afraid for the king of Ashur, neither for all the multitude that is with him: for there is more with us than is with him; with him is an arm of flesh, but with us is the Lord our God for to help us, and to fight our battles, 2 Chron. 32, 7. This appeareth in the exhortation of Nehemiah, when Sanballat and Tobiah conspired to come to fight against Jerusalem, & to hinder the building of the wall, he said: Be not afraid of them remember the great Lord and fearful, and fight for your brethren, your sons, and your daughters, your wives, and your houses, Neh. 4.14. The heathen Captains that carried their men to battle, were always wont (as we see in profane histories) to put courage into them, not to fear to look the enemy in the face; but their only or chiefest reason to move them was earthly glory, that either they should live in wealth, or die with honor. It is not so with the people of God, they have greater Reasons to work in them the gift of valor, and hope of victory. True religion therefore doth not weaken the hearts of men, and make them Cowards. It is no enemy to true fortitude and manhood. For first it teacheth and informeth the conscience, that the cause and quarrel in which the warrior fighteth, is good, just, and warrantable by the word of GOD, which maketh him stand upon a sure ground: without which knowledge in the heart, how ugly, how foul, how savage, how cruel a thing is the effusion and shedding of blood? What an horrible and grisly a spectacle is it, to see Villages and Towns burned, Cities and Castles ruined, Churches and religious places overturned, bodies dismembered with Ordnance, the air infected with stench, the ground embrued with blood, the country wasted, grass and corn trodden down and spoiled, and all places with fear and terror filled? Is it not to be esteemed rather a practice of all inhumanity than an exercise of manhood? Secondly, as true religion establisheth the conscience touching the lawfulness of war, so it teacheth them to commit themselves and their lives into the hands of God as unto a faithful keeper, to consider that an hair cannot fall from our heads without his providence, Matth. 10, 30. and to be persuaded that if they stand & conquer, they conquer to the Lord; if they be wounded and fall, they fall and die to the Lord.

Lastly, the word of God teacheth, that the battle is the Lord's, and the victory is also the Lord's, that the honor and glory thereof may be returned unto the Lord. He giveth and taketh away: he saveth with many, or with few: to teach us to depend upon the mouth of the Lord, to be guided by his wisdom, to follow his counsel and direction in all our affairs, that so our battles may be the battles of the Lord. To this purpose did Joab speak to his brother going to fight with their enemies, when he saw the front of the battle was against him, before and behind: If the Aramites be stronger than I, thou shalt help me, and if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, I will come and succor thee: be strong, and let us be valiant for our people, & for the Cities of our God, & let the Lord do that which is good in his eyes. Thus did David comfort himself, when he was driven out of Jerusalem through y^e treason of Absalom saying to Zadoc the priest, Cary the Ark of God again into the City: if I shall find favor in the eyes of the Lord, he will bring me again, and show me both it, and the Tabernacle thereof: but if he thus say, I have no delight in thee, behold here am I, let him do to me as seemeth good in his eyes. Thus then we see, that all the Lord's soldiers y^t fight his battles, and inroll their names in his muster book, must be men of stout courage, and valiant men at arms, as they that go about a good work:

he receiveth none into his camp that are faint-hearted and white-liuered soldiers which are not able to incorage themselves but are able to discourage others. Hence it is, that the Lord charged the officers or Heralds a• arms, to make proclamation in the audience of the people, Whosoever is afraid & faint-hearted, let him go and return to his house, lest his brethren's heart faint like his heart, Deut, 20, 8. God would have wars made in his name, and therefore he would have soldiers go to them without fear. If a man be afraid, it is a token he hath no trust in God, for he hath power to overcome fearfulness. This serveth to reprove all those which wanting the virtue of valor, and this gift of magnanimity, do betray themselves, and yield unto most unequal conditions, and make an agreement with dishonorable terms. When Benhadad the king of Aram laid siede to Samaria, and sent unto Ahab, saying; Thy silver and thy gold is mine, also thy women & thy fair children are mine, Ahab stooped and submitted himself unto him, he did not make resistance with courage, but yielded unto him like a coward, saying, My Lord king according to thy saying, I am thine, and all that I have. Our trust & confidence must be in God, and then we shall not fear what man can do unto us.

[Use 2] Secondly, seeing wars are lawful, being undertaken upon just causes, we must depend upon God for good success. We must not trust in spear or shield, in horse or man, but arm our selves with the shield of faith, & put upon us the helmet of salvation: we must put on patience, and humble our selves in prayer unto God, when we go into the field, and are to buckle with our enemies. For how should the Lord help us, when we do him not the honor to call on him in the day of trouble? We must look up unto him from whence our help cometh, that he may cover our heads in the day of battle. This we see practiced in Jehoshaphat, when he went into battle against enemies strong in fortifications, valiant in corage, and infinite in multitude, both by word and deed he confirmed the hearts of the people, 2 Chron. 20, 20. Hear ye me, O Judah, & ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, put your trust in the lord your God, and ye shall be assured: believe his Prophets and ye shall prosper: and he appointed singers. and them that should praise the Lord in going forth before the men of arms, and saying, Praise ye the Lord, for his mercy lasteth forever. We are commanded to sanctify all our works by prayer, we have promise of no blessing from God, otherwise then as we ask it from him. The food of our bodies; the affairs of our life, the works of our hands, the success of our journeys, our sleeping & waking, our health and wealth, are sanctified by prayer, and are not sanctified without prayer. For except the Lord build the house, and watch the city, the work of the builder and the labor of the watchman is in vain. If then in the days of peace where the danger is not so present nor so certain, we are charged to commend our selves, our souls and bodies unto God; and all things that any way concern us and belong unto us: much more ought we so to do, when we go into the battle, where the sword devoureth one as well as another, and taketh away life without difference. This use condemneth two sorts of men, which run into two extremities, and forsake this mean propounded here unto us; and required of us. First, such as presume upon their own strength, & do not make God their strength. For as in peace and plenty men trust in their own store and abundance which they have prepared, albeit no man's life standeth in his riches: so in time of war, if once forces be levied, munition provided, and all things prepared to take the field, men grow secure, and think themselves to want nothing. But no man's life consisteth in his armor, no man's defense standeth in his weapon. It behooveth the Lord's soldiers before ever they put on armor, to reconcile themselves unto God, and to make even reckoning with him, that he may turn his wrath upon their enemies, knowing that he which putteth on his armor, cannot boast as he that putteth it off. And as many sin against God by presumption, so do others by despair: their hearts and hopes are gone, they cannot lift up their eyes with affiance unto the heavens; then which there cannot be a greater dishonor done to the Lord. So then our surest and safest way is to rely upon God for our deliverance, and to entreat his protection, to be a buckler round about us, before us & behind us, on the right hand and on the left. Let prayer be esteemed our best armor and defense. When Joshua fought with the Amalekites that fought to keep Israel from the land of Promise, Moses continued in fervent prayer, Exo. 17, 13: when he held up his hands Israel prevailed, when he let his hands fall down, the Amalekites prevailed. Thus were the Amalekites discomfited more by the prayer of Moses than by the sword of Joshua. If this exercise were carefully used and taken up, our wars would prosper better than commonly they do, and many mischeefs that we fall into would be prevented. If we did duly consider the calamities and uncertain end of war, we would be more careful to crave assistance of God to be with us when we go to war. Many of our poor brethren have seen with their eyes the burning of their villages, the beating down of their holds, the battering of their Castles, the sacking of their Cities, the besieging of their towns, the desolation of their houses & Temples. They have heard over all their country and coasts, the sorrowful sighs and sobs of such as lamented, the pitiful howling and shrieking of unhappy mothers bewailing their children, the doleful complaint of the heavy wives mourning for their husbands, and the grievous cries of all men on all sides. If this miserable face of all confusion (that war bringeth with it) were set before our eyes, it would make us cast down our selves under the most mighty hand of God, and call upon his name to be with us when we go out to battle.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it followeth, that the stratagems of war are not unlawful. It is lawful to use subtlety and policy, to lay snares and baits to entrap and circumvent the enemy. In all actions of war, or of peace, we must deal wisely and warily. When we live in peace & quietness it is required of us to walk, not only in a lawful but in a wise course: but much more in war, where the enemy is watchful, the snares are subtle, and the danger is great. This appeareth evidently, both because God commandeth it, and the godly practice it. When God sent Joshua to destroy Ai, and to take the spoil thereof for a prey, he willed him to lie in wait against the City on y^e backside thereof, Josh. 8, 2. Abraham intending to recover Lot out of the hands of those that had taken him captive, did not fight with them in a pitched field, and display his banners in the open day, but divided his company, & smote them by night, Genes. 14, 15. When the Israelites went out against the children of Benjamin, they set men to lie in wait round about Gibeah, which drew them from the City, & destroyed them by this policy, Judge. 20, ver. 29. When David asked counsel of the Lord whether he should go against the Philistines, he answered, Thou shalt not go up, but turn about behind them, and come upon them over the Mulberry trees: and when thou hearest the noise of one going in the tops of the mulberry trees, then remove, for then shall the Lord go out before thee, to smite the host of the Philistines. We may therefore hide our purposes from our enemies, we may assault them at unawares, we may bring them to be careless, and make show of one thing, but do another. True it is, we are to keep promises to all, even to our enemies; we must not lie unto them, but keep the covenants and conditions which we have made with them. We must not promise to save thē and then destroy them; we must not agree to receive them into protection, and afterwards work their confusion. Notwithstanding, we are not bound to make known to them whatsoever we speak or do, but are to conceal our intents, to the end the victory may be obtained:

Christ himself doeth hide many things from the ungodly, which he revealeth to his children, Math. 13, 11. Thus he teacheth, Mat. 7, 6. That holy things are not to be given to dogs, nor pearls to be cast unto Swine. In like manner it is not unlawful for us to hide our meanings from our adversaries. All things are not to be made known to all men. The Captain doth not by and by acquaint his soldiers whom he leadeth into the field with all his purposer, much less should he open his drifts and devices to his enemies.

Fourthly, seeing war is a lawful ordinance [Use 4] of God, it teacheth us to use it lawfully, & to behave our selves purely when we go unto it. So soon as war is proclaimed, and the Trumpet sounded, all Laws for the most part keep silence, and equity is buried; there is no mean or measure observed, every man thinketh he may do what he list. Hence it is that the Lord giveth these precepts to his people, Deut 23, 9, 10, 11. When thou goest out with an host against thine enemies, then keep thyself from every wicked thing. If any among you be unclean by that which cometh unto him by night, he shall go out of the host, and not come into the host again: but at evening he shall wash himself with water, and when the Sun is gone down he shall come into the host again, &c. The Lord thy God walketh in the midst of the Campe to deliver thee, and to give thee thine enemies before thee; therefore let thine host be holy, that he see no filthy thing in thee, and turn away from thee. Where Moses teacheth, that we must not bear our selves in war, as if all things were lawful: nor give our selves a lawless liberty to be carried head-long into all wickedness. When we are come into the field, and there stand against the enemy, we must not think we have a pardon purchased to fall into all outrage and villainy. For whose are the battles that we fight? Who is it that goeth in and out with our armies? who is it that giveth the victory? If we look for any blessing from God, we must have y^e more care to serve him faithfully, and to depend upon him religiously. We must fight under his banner, we must take him for our Captain. If he be the Leader and Commander to rule the whole host, he will not have lewd ruffians and dissolute persons to be of his band. Profane and ungodly men shall not be ranged in his Army. The Lord will be the greatest enemy unto such: and they have far more cause to stand in fear of him, then of all their enemies besides. So long as there was one wicked wretch in the host of Israel unreformed and unpunished, they could not obtain any victory, but were vanquished by the enemy, Josh. chapt. 7. verse 11: how much less hope have we to prevail, when as the whole Campe shall be nothing else but a band of rebelles, and an host of Conspirators against God, and all godliness? When Joshua and the people of Israel should pass over Jordan into the land of Promise, and were to fight with the inhabitants thereof, Josh. 3, 5. they are commanded to sanctify themselves, for tomorrow the Lord would do wonders among them. Thus doth Samuel exhort the house of Israel, to put away their strange gods, and to direct their hearts unto the Lord, & to serve him only, that so he might deliver them out of the hands of the Philistines, 1 Sam. 7, 3. And to speak the truth, if we did aright consider the matter, we ought to walk in greater fear and carefulness in the time of war, then in the days of peace. For when there is but a step between death and us, when the drum foundeth, when the Cannon roareth, when y^e sword devoureth, when danger compasseth us about on all sides, when no man can promise safety to himself, ought we not to lift up our eyes and our hearts so much the more unto God? Seeing therefore we are then in the greatest, most manifest, and imminent peril of our lives, the loss whereof sin will hasten upon us, we ought to remain under the obedience of God, and reconcile our selves unto him before wars be enterprized. This is it which the Lord teacheth by Moses, Levite. 26, 14, 17. If ye will not obey me, nor do all these commandments, I will set my face against you, and ye shall fall before your enemies, and they that hate you shall reign over you, and ye shall flee when none pursueth you. This reproveth such as give themselves the greatest liberty to sin, to use such violence & oppression, when they should live in the best order, and the greatest obedience. Cornelius the Captain is commended for his religion, Acts 10, 1, 2. So is the Centurion renowned for his faith, Mat. 8, 10. They that are Captains and soldiers must not give themselves to all riot, as if they had a law to commit sin, and to break all laws of God and man without controlment. Secondly, it reproveth such as make choice of the most loose and ungodly, to fight the Lord's battles, and think Atheists, swearers, blasphemers, murderers, whoremongers, thieves, drunkards, to be fit soldiers to go against God's enemies. These are fitter instruments to fight the devils battles, for he is the Captain and Commander over this cursed crew. They are all the devils band, and of y^e forlorn hope. They are fitter to be mustered and gathered together to fight for some usurper, thē for a lawful Prince that may make his choice, and call whom he will to fight his battles. These may be used in necessity and extremity, rather then where there is store and plenty of many others. It is noted touching Abimelech, that when he had slain his brethren with the sword, and usurped the dominion, he hired vain and light fellows (which followed him) to make himself strong, and to settle self in the kingdom, Judge. 9.4. Thus did Jeroboam establish his seat and throne, when he rebelled against his Lord, he gathered to him •aine men and wicked, and by them he fortified himself against Rehoboam the son of Solomon, 2 Chron. 13.7. No trust & confidence can be reposed in such, who being unfaithful to god, can give no comfort or assurance, they will deal otherwise towards men, whereby cometh great loss to the Prince, and great hurt to the Commonwealth.

Lastly, it serveth to overthrow three sorts [Use 5] of men that yield not to the truth of this Doctrine. First, such as murmur and grudge at the hearing of wars, complaining of the expenses and charges that are necessary for the maintenance of them; whilst others lie in the fields, and adventure their lives, they sleep soundly and lie quietly in their beds, and yet repine & disdain to contribute anything in so necessary & just a cause, and are many times great hinderers and pull-backs unto others, that would show themselves forward in the Princes service. It were fit that such as are thus backward to serve with their purse, should be constrained to be forward to serve in their person. Unto these we may join such as cry out, that it was never well since war was used, and do prefer an unjust peace, before a just war. Secondly, this condemneth such as are careless for their own defense & safety, but suffer the enemies to come upon them, and make no provision or preparation against them. This is noted to have been the behavior of the men of Laish, and the cause of their destruction, that they lived carelessly one with another, and made no fortifications against their enemies, Judge. 18, 7, 10. For the children of Dan came unto them, being a quiet people and without mistrust; and smote them with the edge of the sword, and burnt the city with fire. Thus it is with all that live securely, & do not stand upon their own guard. Thus it is with such as never provide against the enemies, they are soon surprised by them. Lastly, it condemneth the Manichees, the Marcionites, the Anabaptists, the Family of love, and such as call themselves spiritual men, w^c deny the lawfulness of battle, the use of war, the wearing of weapon, the putting on of armor, and the handling of the sword. But do these allege nothing for themselves? Have they no show of reason or color of argument to uphold their opinion? It is a desperate cause that admitteth no defense? It is a foul fall y^t cannot be covered with no fig leaves. Let us see what their objections are, & how we may stop their mouths by answering of them. And as all heretics pretend Scripture, imitating their first father the devil, Mat. 4, 6: who tempting Christ in the wilderness, alledgeth what is written: so have these men sundry goodly glozes, garnished with the name & authority of the word of God. They allege that Christ commandeth, Mat. 5, 39. & 26, 52. & 13, 29: If one give us a blow on the right cheek, we should turn to him the left: if any would sue us at the Law to take away our coat, we should give him our cloak also: If he compel us to go with him a Mile, we should go with him twain: and thereupon concludeth, That we should not resist evil. He saith unto Peter, He that striketh with the sword, shall also perish with the sword; and thereupon willeth him to put up his sword: he will not have the tares to be pulled up, but be let alone, and suffered to grow until the harvest. So the Apostle teacheth, Roman. 12, 17, 18, 19. That vengeance belongeth to the Lord, who will repay: that we must recompense to no man evil for evil: that if it be possible, as much as in us lieth, we should have peace with all men: he asketh, why we do not rather suffer wrong? why we do not rather sustain harm, then one brother draw another before the judgment seats of Infidels? If then it be not lawful to follow suites, it is less lawful to draw swords. He showeth, that our weapons are not carnal, but our warfare spiritual: that we wrestle not against flesh & blood, but against principalities, against powers, against spiritual wickednesses that are in the high places. Add unto these testimonies of the New Testament, the ancient Prophecies of the Prophets, which do foretell, that in the time of the Gospel they shall break their Swords into Mattocks, and their Speares into Sythes, Isaiah 2, 4. Micah 4, 3. Nation shall not lift up a sword against Nation, neither shall they learn to fight anymore. These are the chiefest and choicest arguments drawn out of the New Testament, and produced out of the old; partly from the instructions of Christ, partly from the precepts of the Apostle, and partly from the Prophecies of the Prophets.

Touching the objections alleged out of the words of Christ, when he willeth us to turn the left cheek, being smitten on y^e right, it is a figurative speech, as Augustine observeth: for literally it was not observed by Jesus Christ, nor by the Apostles, nor by the Prophets, whē they were stricken on the ear. For what if one smite us on the left cheek, we have now no other left to turn unto him? or shall we restrain his words only to the cheek? His purpose is to forbid private revenge, to recompense injury with injury, and to teach us rather to prepare our selves to endure another wrong, then to give like for like: but he doth not disannul the office and calling of the Magistrate, nor take away public revenge by him: Peter was Christ's Disciple, not a public Magistrate. Touching suffering the tares to grow, he teacheth us the perpetual state of the Church, what it shall be. He speaketh not of the office of the Minister or Magistrate, but of the future condition of the Church, that it shall never be perfect in this life, but we shall have tares with the wheat, bad fish with the good, foolish virgins with the wise, and hypocrites with true believers: & therefore he comforteth the godly against the troubles which they sustain by conversing with them. Hereunto also refer the precepts of the Apostle Paul. The Propheties of y^e Prophets touching the turning of the weapons of war into instruments of peace and tools of husbandry, are objected against us also by the Jews that deny the coming of the true Messiah. The Prophets hereby commend the Doctrine of Christ. If we were all such as Christ chargeth us to be, there should be no need of the sword. Such as are true Christians, do live soberly, righteously, and godly, for conscience sake to the commandment of Christ. At the coming of Christ in glory, we shall see the full accomplishment thereof to our endless comfort. In the mean season, such as truly believe in Christ, do so walk, as that no wars are raised through their default. True it is our weapons are spiritual, but we must understand this as we are Christians. But we are not only Christian men, but also men: not only spirit, but also flesh: and therefore as we are men, and clothed with flesh, neither the Apostle, nor Christ that called the Apostles, do take away weapons from the Magistrate, Rom. 13, 4, but put a sword into his hand to take vengeance on him that doth evil. And when the Apostle saith, (Ephes. chap. 6, verse 12,) We wrestle not with flesh and blood; he speaketh not simply, but comparatively, as when he saith Christ sent him not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel, that is, chiefly and especially to publish the glad tidings of salvation, 1. Cor. 1, 17: so in this place he meaneth, that our greatest and mightiest enemies are invisible: we must not think that our chiefest conflict is with men which are frail and feeble. This fight is nothing at all if it be compared with the other which is spiritual. Thus we see the objections of the Anabaptists answered, and their doubts dissolved, who would banish away all lawful use of sword and weapon, contrary to infinite evidences that may be brought to justify the lawfulness of war. God hath made many laws touching the undertaking, beginning, and waging of wars, but such things as are evil are wholly to be condemned, not to be ordered by Law. The Lord swore, that the Israelites should have war with Amalek forever. Solomon prayeth unto God, when his people shall go out to battle against their enemies, to hear them and their prayer and supplication, and to judge their cause, 2. Chron. 6, 34. When any city shall fall into idolatry, & draw away the inhabitants thereof to serve strange gods, he commandeth that they should be slain with the edge of the sword, & all that is within it be destroyed, Deut 13, 15. When the Israelites asked counsel of GOD after the death of Joshua, who should go up against the Canaanites, to fight first against them, the Lord said, Judah shall go up, because I have given the Land into his hand, Judge. 1, 1, 2. It is God that teacheth our fingers to fight, and our hands to battle, Psal. 144, 1: but God is no Lord of misrule, he teacheth nothing that is evil. They are the words of David, a man after God's own heart, yet he saith, God had taught his hands, his fingers. Besides they are called the wars and battles of the Lord: so David is oftentimes said to have fought the battles of the Lord, 1 Samuel 17, 18, and 25, verse 28.

When many enemies armed themselves against Jehoshaphat, Iahaziel inspired by the Spirit of God, said, Thus saith the Lord unto you, Fear you not, neither be afraid for this great multitude, for the battle is not yours, but the Lord's, 2 Chron. 20, 15. When the soldiers that were converted to the faith, and repented of their offenses, inquired of John what they should do, he did not bid them to lay away their weapons, or throw away their swords, or renounce their oaths, or forsake their Captains, or give over their places & callings of life wherein they abode, but charged them to do violence to no man, Luke 3, 14, to accuse no man falsely, & to be content with their wages. So the Evangelist commendeth the faithful Centurion, and Cornelius to be a devout man, fearing God with all his household. Paul used the help of a band of men, to be rescued out of the hands of the Jews, and to be brought safe unto the Governor. For the Captain out of the Garrison gathered a selected company of two hundred soldiers, and delivered him from them that lay in wait to kill him, Acts 23, 27. The Apostle noteth in the Epistle to the Hebrews, ch. 11, 33. that the godly through faith subdued kingdoms, so that war may be an exercise of faith.

And lest any should apply this to fighting against spiritual enemies, he addeth immediately after; They waxed valiant in battle, and turned to flight the Armies of the aliens. By all these testimonies we are taught to receive this truth, that the making of war is necessary, and to maintain it against all the adversaries that seek to oppugn and contradict the same.

[Verse 18. For they trouble you with their wiles wherewith they have beguiled you as concerning Peor.] In these words the reason is rendered, for what cause the Midianities were to be destroyed, to wit, because they had a chief hand, and were principal doers in the seducing of the people of God, and drawing them into sin. The Moabites and Ammonites were actors in this tragedy: but the chief part was assigned to the Midianites. The Moabites and Ammonites came of Lot, by committing incest with his daughters, Gen. 19, 37, 38. The Midianites came of Midian, the fourth son of Keturah, which she bare to Abraham, Gen. 25, 2. They ought being so nearly joined to the people of God, to have performed all duties of humanity and kindness unto them: whereas they sought their overthrow, and wrought their destruction.

We heard before how the people of God were beguiled and punished: here we may behold those threatened and afterward destroyed, that did trouble them with their wyles, as concerning Peor. Before we saw the chastisement of them that were seduced and led into sin, now they are threatened that were seducers. Before we saw the judgment that fell upon them that followed, now we may see the judgments that ouertooke the Captains and Ringleaders.

From hence we learn, that the seducer and the seduced, the Ringleader, and they that are misled, the deceyuer and the deceived, shall perish and be punished together. The Lord will punish not only false Teachers, and such as lead the way unto wickedness, but their scholars and disciples, & such as are brought to lewdness and evil by them. This Moses declareth very evidently, Deut. 13, 15. If a false Prophet arise, and draw an whole City to Idolatry, God's judgments shall be not only against that false Prophet, but against the City, so that not an Ox or a Sheep should be spared, they should, perish and be destroyed together. When Gamaliel gave counsel to take heed to themselves what they intended to do touching the Apostles, he bringeth in the examples of Theudas and Judas, Acts 5, 36, 37, which drew away much people after them, but they perished, & all that obeyed them. The Prophet Ezekiel denounceth, That if the watchman seeing the sword coming, did not give the people warning, nor admonish them of their wicked ways, the wicked should die in their sins, but their blood should be required at the watchman's hands. We see this confirmed unto us, even from the beginning, when the devil abusing the tongue and body of the serpent, had drawn our first parents into sin, the devil was the principal author of this apostasy and falling from God; the serpent was the instrument: the woman did hearken to the devil, and was before her husband in the transgression, Adam followed the counsel of his wife, and yielded to sin against God, through her persuasion. The devil was a seducer, Adam was seduced, Enah was both a seducer, and seduced; Gen. 3, 1, 2, 3, for she was seduced by the devil, and a seducer of her husband, deceiving, and being deceived: so that when God called them to an account, and brought them before the bar of his judgment seat, he punished not only the devil & the serpent, that were the authors, but also Adam and his wife that were the followers. Hereunto cometh the saying of our Savior, Mat. 15, 14. Let them alone, they be the blind leaders of the blind: and if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch: not only the leader, but he likewise that is blindly led. The Lord Jesus reproveth the Church of Thyatira, that they suffered a wretched woman which called her self a Prophetess, and threateneth to punish not only her, Revel. 2, 12, but those y^t were her disciples, with great afflictions. And afterward in the same book, they that received the mark of the beast, are put out of the book of life, as well as the beast.

This truth will be more manifest unto us, if [Reason 1] we mark the reasons. •or first, such as are misled and moved to heresy and wickedness in life • doctrine, in faith or manners, in opinion or practice, are culpable of the same sins and abominations, and therefore right•ously to be pu•ished and condemned with such as are the leaders and perswaders unto the same. The Lord himself rendereth the reason why those that were seduced, should be destroyed, because they had forsaken his ways and commandments, Deut. 1, ••, They then that are seduced, that are t••ed from the Lord, that are thrust out of the right way wherein they should walk, and commit abominations against him, as well as the seducers, are culpable of the same sins together, and therefore shall partake of the same punishment.

[Reason 2] Secondly, what is the reason that men are seduced? Is it not their own sin and ignorance? They are willfully blind, they are not careful to learn and stand in the truth as they ought. The Prophet Hosea speaking of false Prophets, and of the people misled by them, saith; That they shall all fall, the people by day, & the Prophet by night with them, Hosea 4.5. This is it which the Apostle urgeth, 2 Thess. 2 10, 11. Because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved, therefore God shall send them strong delusions, that they should believe lies, that all they might be damned which believed not the truth but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

[Use 1] Now let us come to the uses of this Doctrine. First, from hence we are to conclude, that pretences or excuses shall not bear out the followers and fellows of wicked seducers and lewd leaders from God & his truth, but they shall bear their sins and punishments themselves. We see how ready many are to answer for themselves. A lasse! we are poor simple men, we have no learning, we know not the letters: we are not able to try whether the Doctrine be good or bad, true or false, right or wrong: we hope God will hold us excused, and not lay it to our charge. These coverings to hide our shame, as so many fig-leaves, shall be pulled from us, and fall to the earth, as weak and unable to uphold themselves. What did the vain coloured shows avail Adam and Eve, feeding themselves with vain hopes, Gen. 3, 12, 13, and excusing themselves with fair pretences? Adam said, The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, deceived me, and I did ea•e. The woman said, The Serpent beguiled me, and I did eat. The Serpent might have said, the devil entered into me, prevailed over me, and abused me to be his instrument. Here are many delays and devices, the man excuseth himself by the woman, the woman by the serpent, the serpent by the devil: but God cannot be mocked, he will not be deluded, and therefore none of them escaped, all of them •re punished, as they were willingly and wittingly deceived. For the devil had his judgment, the serpent had his judgment, the man and the woman had also their judgment. Let this be assured to the consciences or all of us, that seeing God hath created us, and given us our being to serve him, albeit we be redu•ed by others, it shall not profit us, o• deliver v• from judgment. Ignorance shall excuse no man, it is the fountain of all sin, it is the cause of all punishments, Hos. 4, 1. Mar. 12, 24. it is not enough for us to say, we are no seducers and deceivers of others: because if we be seduced and deceived by others, we are partakers of their sin, and shall bea•e our just condemnation.

Secondly, seeing the poor seduced people [Use 2] shall not escape, no more the the chief Ringleaders and heads of the conspiracy against God, it is our duty to search narrowly and view diligently that which is brought and taught unto us: we must beware of seducers and Captains that lead to lewdness of life, or corruption of doctrine. It behooveth us to show such love to God and his truth, as to withstand such as go about to infect us, to shame them, to bewray them, to reprove them, to convince them, and to take heed that we be not drawn away with them, either by their flattery, or by their authority. Hence cometh the exhortation of Christ; Beware of false Prophets which come to you in Sheepes clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves: ye shall know them by their fruits, Math. chap. 7. verse 15. By these the LORD our GOD trieth us, whether we love him with all our harts & with all our souls. He chargeth his people to seek carefully, to search earnestly, and to enquire diligently if there be any such wickedness. There is no love to God, where his truth is not professed, followed, and maintained. The Apostle John chargeth those to whom he wrote, Not to believe every spirit, but to try the spirits whether they be of God or not; for many false Prophets are gone into the world, 1, John 4, 1. But where is this ability to be found? And where shall we meet with those that are able to discern of spirits? Look upon the greatest part of our congregations, and behold they are not able to make any trial of truth from error. They are fit to entertain any doctrine: They know no difference between the mists of Popery, and the light of the Gospel: They embrace this Religion, because it is established by authority, defended by the Law, professed by the Prince, countenanced by the Magistrate, embraced by the multitude, freed from trouble, & controlled by none. But ask them a reason of the hope that is in them, and call them to an account, of the faith which they hold? Ask them what they believe, and how they think to be saved, they are taken speechless and not able to give any reasonable answer. And how can it be otherwise in many places, where such as should be eyes to others, are blind themselves? a naked ministry hath made a naked people: an ignorant ministry hath made an ignorant people; a simple Teacher hath made a sottish hearer. For as Moses saw that the people were naked, Because Aaron had made them naked, unto their shame among their enemies: so we see the people without knowledge and understanding, because the Watchmen are blind, the Ambassadors are dumb, the Shepherds are simple, the Teachers are not able to instruct themselves. The means to bring us to this spiritual judgment to try the spirits, are to observe these few rules and directions following. First, we must have the word of God to dwell plentifully in us, we must read and search the Scriptures, as Christ commanded, John 5, 39 and the men of Berea practiced, Acts 17. They examined the Doctrine of the Apostles by the touchstone of the Prophets, and are commended for it by the Spirit of God. We must not take everything that is delivered, but search and try the things that are delivered.

Secondly, we must continue constant in the things which we have learned thence. Thus the Apostle exhorteth Timothy, who had been brought up in the Scriptures of a child. To persevere in the things which he had learned and was persuaded of, knowing of whom he had learned them, 2 Tim. 3, 14.

Thirdly, we are to avoid those places and persons where abominations are set up and maintained, lest joining and partaking with them in their sins, we be also companions with them in punishments. Thus doth the Apostle teach us to give a farewell to those places, I heard a voice from heaven say, Go out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues, Revel. 18, verse 4.

Fourthly, we are to magnify the Ministry of the word, where it is planted and established, we are diligently to attend unto it, and to hear it with all patience and reverence, to increase in us both knowledge and obedience, to work in us faith & a sound belief, to bring us to a true sight of our sins, and to an unfeigned repentance from dead works. If these rules be carefully and wisely observed, we shall be made able to try all things that we hear; to refuse the evil, and to hold fast that which is good.

Lastly, we may from hence conclude the [Use 3] woeful condition of all seducers, that seduce and deceive the simple people, they are sure to perish and to be destroyed. It is a grievous sin not to embrace the truth of God, but to err from the ways of salvation; but it is more grievous to draw away others, and to plunge them into the pit of destruction. They are accursed in the law, which make the blind to go out of the way, and all the people were to say, Amen. Deut. 27, 18. If we see a poor blind man wandering hither and thither for want of a guide, and groping to find his way, if we lay stones or stumbling blocks before his feet to supplant him, and cause him to fall down, all men are ready to condemn it of rigor and cruelty. The very heathen, which neither know the Law; nor understand the Gospel, could say, that whosoever showeth not the way to a traveler and wayfaring man, when he seeth him out of the right way, is without all pity and compassion; as if one should refuse to suffer his neighbor to light his Candle (that is gone out) at his Candle that burneth. But if a man should lead his brother being in a strange and unknown Country quite and clean out of the way, & direct him of purpose into places of danger, and thereby as it were blow out his Candle that burneth bright, all men would have accounted him a monster, and unworthy to live upon the earth. If our brother want our help or counsel, we are bound to do all good unto him; and it is a note of cruelty, to shut our mouths or hands when they should be opened; as we see in the examples of the Priest and Levite, Luk. 10, 31, 32, that saw a certain man robbed of his money, spoiled of his raiment, and wounded of his body, yet departed from him, and passed by on the other side, leaving him half dead. But when we are so far from relieving them in their wants, and comforting them in their distresses, and helping them with our counsel, that we seduce them our selves, or bolster them up in their sins, or draw them into wickedness; we shall draw upon our selves the heavy judgments of God, in the day of his visitation. For if they shall not escape that are led out of the way, and follow the direction of false and lying seducers; of greater judgment and sorer punishment shall they be worthy, that lay snares to catch others, and draw them unto destruction. In the Prophetes of Jeremiah, we see Pashur the son of Immer the Priest threatened, Ier. 20, 6. that because he had preached lies, he and all that belonged unto him should die in captivity. And in another place the Lord denounceth his judgments to come upon the Prophetes which have sweet toongs, seducing the people with pleasing lies. Herevnto we may refer all ignorant Ministers, which are utterly disabled for y^e performance of their duty in teaching the people; they have the place, but want the gifts, 1 Tim. 3, 2, they have the calling, but want the ability: they fill up the rooms of workmen, but are not able to do the work. These commit an heinous sin, not only destroying their own fowls, but bringing the people to destruction. For through their ignorance and insufficiency, they cast away their own souls, & the souls of other men. The wise man teacheth, Prov. 29, 18, that where there is no vision, there the people decay. Wherefore to conclude, let all faithful Ministers of God, with care & conscience, be stirred up to deliver that Embassage, which they have received from God, not as men pleasers, but as the servants of Christ. And let all the people know, that it becometh them, with all patience and reverence to receive the word of exhortation, which God hath sanctified as the means to work in thē, faith and obedience. It shall excuse no man in the day of the Lord, to say, I would have hearkened to the truth, but I was deceived: I would have walked in the right way, but alas! I was seduced. These are old Adams fig-leaves which will not serve to cover our shame, and to hide our nakedness; we must seek after the truth, and learn to discern of it from error. If we be content to live in ignorance, and voluntarily submit our selves to be led, or rather misled, by blind guides, that can neither inform themselves nor us in the ways of the Lord: if we willfully shut our eyes because we will not see; our ignorance is without excuse, and for want of knowledge we shall certainly be destroyed.

Let us all walk in the right way, and make straight steps unto our feet, Heb. 12, 13, that God may be glorified, our souls saved, & we entirely preserved in the truth, through Jesus Christ: to whom be praise and glory in the Church forever, Amen.

1 AND it came to pass after the plague, that the Lord spake unto Moses, and unto Eleazar the son of Aaron the Priest, saying,

2 Take the sum of the Congregation of the Children of Israel, from twenty years old and upward, throughout their fathers house, all that are able to go to war in Israel.

3 And Moses and Eleazar the Priest spake unto them, &c.

5 Reuben the eldest son of Israel, &c.

9 This is that Dathan and Abiram, which were famous in the Congregation, &c.

10 And the earth opened her mouth, &c.

HAuing sufficiently seen the weak estate and condition of this people, who (as much as lay in them) rushed forward to their own destruction, and were unworthy of the mercy of God, that they might learn in the matter of their salvation to ascribe all to God, Deut. 8, 17. Let us consider the power of his grace, seen and made perfect in their weakness, to the end of this book: wherein we are to mark a description, partly of the holy and Ecclesiastical Laws given, to the 31. chapt. and partly sundry Civil and political Laws, belonging to their inheritance in the Land of promise. Before both these, we have in this and the chapter following, a new numbering of the people by the commandment of God, wherein we must mark two things; one touching the numbering of them, the other touching the order to be devised in the dividing of the inheritance. Touching the numbering of the people, we must remember that this is now the third numbering, since the Israelites by the mighty hand of God, departed out of Egypt. The first was the same year they were brought forth, when the sum was taken of them, and a general payment exacted of rich and poor, for the provision and preparation of holy things requisite for the Tabernacle, Exod. 30, 14, 15, 16. The second was in the beginning of the second year, when the holy things were made, and an order set down among the people in their journeys, Numb. 1, and 2. The third is that which is in this place. And notwithstanding the two former, this was not without special causes: for there had been a great change and alteration among the people since the second nūbring of them, which was 38. years before, they that were then numbered being dead in the plagues and punishments that fell upon them. Again, the division of the Land, could not but by these breaches among them be very unjust and unequal, unless this sum had been taken, whereas the Land ought to be indifferently divided and parted, to ende all controversies, to cut off all occasions of envy and emulation, and to preserve love and unity among brethren. Thirdly, in regard of military discipline, that they might march in good array, and keep order the better among them: for they were now in a manner come to hand blows with their enemies, and were ready to encounter with them. Fourthly, that the hand of God toward this people might be better seen and known, to wit, both his power and goodness, in that though many thousands of them were wasted & consumed in the Wilderness, yet the number of them was not diminished, but rather increased: & likewise his justice and truth, in that though he chastened the rebellious and refractory against him, yet he kept the promise he had made to their fathers touching the multiplying of their seed as the stars of heaven, forasmuch as he is able of stones to raise up children unto Abraham, Mat. 3, 9. And to call those things that are not, as though they were, Rom. 4, 17, 18. Lastly, to show, that as he knoweth perfectly and exactly the number of all that entered into the earthly Canaan, so he knoweth the number of all the faithful that shall possess the inheritance of the kingdom of heaven, prepared for them before the beginning of the world. He knoweth who are his, 2 Tim. 2, 19, because all their names are written in heaven, Lu. 10, 20.

In this Chapter observe three things. First, the numbering of the Israelites which were fit for war. Secondly, the commandment of God touching the dividing of the Land of Canaan among them. Thirdly, the numbering of the Levites who were appointed for the sacred warfare, that is, to serve the Lord in the Tabernacle. In the numbering of the people fit to bear arms, we may see the commandment of God, and the execution of the commandment. The commandment is amplified by the time, by the persons that were to number them, and by the persons that were to be numbered, and that by their age and ability to go to war. The time of this numbering is said to be after the plague, which the learned Junius understandeth of the plagues mentioned in the 14. chap. whereby God threatened to consume all of them in the Wilderness by little and little, now some, and then others, according to their manifold deservings & provocations. But this exposition seemeth to me both to be forced and far fet, and from the purpose. First, because the Article here prefixed, hath relation rather to one certain judgment of God brought upon them at one certain time, whereas that threatening was executed at diverse and sundry times, by the space almost of forty years. Secondly, by the name of plague, a violent death sent frō God is betokened, as for example, when a man dieth suddenly being smitten by some Angel: but the former commination doth not specify any one judgment of that sort, but without any limitation doth generally denounce a consuming of them, which might be done by natural death. Lastly, they to whom that threatening is directed, perished not with one plague, nor after one manner, nor at one time, but with diverse judgments, in diverse manners, and at diverse times. Wherefore we must rather understand in this place, that plague which is mentioned in the former chapter, where four and twenty thousand died for their idolatry and whoredom with the daughters of Moab, 1 Cor. 10.

The execution of the commandment consisteth of three points, being amplified by a declaration of the place where this numbering was made, by a comparison of the like example, verse 4: and lastly, by a particular description of every Tribe numbered, and their families, the Tribe of Levi excepted. Where observe, that in this rehearsal and enumeration of every Tribe, there is great difference from the former numbering when they came out of Egypt, which will appear by these particular comparisons set before us.

 - now, 45400.

Here is the same order observed, which we saw before observed, in all which we are to mark, that many do now exceed the former account, arising to many more in this latter computation than in the former, notwithstanding the many thousands that were weeded out of the host of GOD, as noisome plants cut up and cast into the fire, and none of the Tribes continued in one stay; to teach us to make our chiefest reckoning of that place where shall be no change anymore, but we shall be like to the Angels that are in heaven.

[Verse 7, 9. These are the families of the Reubenites, &c. This is that Dathan and Abiram, &c. who strove against Moses.] The history of these seditious persons, infecting many others with the leaven of their pride and ambition, and carrying them into the pit of destruction with themselves, is particularly remembered before, chapter 16. They were indeed famous, in regard of their places and persons, but they become infamous and ignominious by their sin and punishment. Observe from hence, That irreligion, profaneness and impiety, make men to be reprochful. Of what account and estimation soever they are, be they never so rich, high, noble, & renowned in the world how famous and excellent soever Countries and Cities be, yet this is certain, that sin maketh all places and persons infamous and dishonorable, and justly and worthily poureth disgrace and contempt upon them, as it appeareth afterward in this chap. verse 61, and elsewhere, Deut. chapter 29, verses 23, 24, 25. 1 Kings, chapter 9, verses 8, 9. Ier. chapter 22, verses 8, 9. We see this farther in many examples. Cain is noted and marked of God for his execrable parricide unto all posterity, Gen. 4, 15. The like we might say of Ahaz, of whom mention is made to his shame and dishonor, that all the glory of his throne, & the title of a king, and the honor of Majesty, is not able to hide and cover the blot and stayne of his offenses, and therefore the Scripture saith of him, This is Ahaz, 2 Chron. 28, 22. Jeroboam is often said to have made Israel to sin, 1 Kings 15, 30. Judas that betrayed his Master, is called, The child of perdition, John. 17 and is as it were burnt in the shoulder with the letter R, and marked out for a reprobate, and left upon record to be a devil, John 6, 70. that all which hear of it might fear, & learn to hate his sins. So doth the Apostle set down the names of sundry others, that made shipwreck of faith and of a good conscience, 1. Tim. 1, 15. and 2 Tim. 2, 17. 2 Thess 3, 14. & Heb. 12, 16. the profaneness also of Esau is remembered.

The reasons follow. First, because piety and [Reason 1] religion is the honor & glory of a kingdom or Commonwealth. The dignity of any place is the holiness of the people that are in it, Mat. 2.6, compared with Mic. 5, 2. So Moses telleth Israel, that if they keep the statutes of God, and do them, this should be their wisdom and understanding in the sight of the Nations which should hear these statutes and say, Surely this great Nation is a wise and understanding people, Deut. 4, 6. So then all honor and glory standeth in yielding obedience to Go•.

Secondly, sin is a most foul and filthy thing in the sight of God, Reuelat. 3, 18, and 16, 15. Lam. 1, 9. and therefore it is compared to an unclean cloth spotted with the flesh, Isaiah, ch. 64, verse 6. Jude, verse 23. and to the blood of pollution, Ezek. chap. 16, 6, 9, 22, and to a dead carrion in a Toombe, Math. 23, 27, 28.

Thirdly, sin bringeth us out of love with God, and consequently bringeth the hatred of God upon the people and places where ungodly sinners dwell, and causeth him to turn away his face and favor from them, Deuter. 23, 9, 14. Hos. 2, ver. 5, 9, 10. We read in the Prophecies of Daniel, chap. 3, 29, that the king made a Decree, that every people, nation, and language which blasphemed God, should be cut in pieces, and their houses made a dunghill: in the same manner it is with God, he bringeth reproach and maketh infamous, not only the persons that provoke him by their sins, but also the places and habitations where they dwell. He could have destroyed the men of Sodom & Gomorrhah, and yet have spared their Cities, and houses, and substance; but he destroyed these also, to make them more ignominious to all posterity, Jude, verse 7.

This teacheth us how just it is with God, [Use 1] and how warrantable it is for us to disgrace, and discredit, and discountenance the City and Church of Rome, that they might be odious in the eyes, and stink in the nostrils of all good men, as a dead carcass without life and breath. For although their faith was once famous through the whole world, Rom. 1, 8, yet inasmuch as they are fallen from that faith to heresy, and from sincerity to hypocrisy, we have just cause to hate the same & to disgrace it what we can. It is just with GOD that it should be so, and lawful for us to do so, Reu. 18, 2. But to clear themselves of apostasy from the faith, [Object.] they will tell us that we cannot tell them from whence their supposed heresies should first proceed, who was the author of them, and the scatterer of them abroad, as we see in Campians sophistical and verbal challenge: he demandeth at what time, under what Bishop, by what steps and proceedings a new religion was spread over the church of Rome and the whole world? I answer, [Answ.] it is not necessary to set down the minutes and moments of time, inasmuch as some alterations are insensible. Many errors creep on secretly, and as it were in the dark. The evil and envious man in the Gospel, sowed tares among the wheat in the night when no man could see, Mat. 13.25. The hayres of our head are not all white at a sudden, and old age doth not creep upon us in a day. Take the oldest man that liveth upon the earth, who can tell when he began to be old? We know by sundry infallible tokens that he is an old man, but what day, or week, or month, or year, when he began to be so, who can assign or determine? This is manifest in all things that arise of small beginnings, and grow by little and little to a greater quantity, until they come to perfection. If we see a man sick of the pestilence, or a City corrupt in manners with riotousnesse and wickedness, or an house ruinous and ready to fall, or a ship in the midst of the sea ready to sink, shall we deny all, these to be, because we know not when they first began to be? when that man began to be infected, or the City to be corrupted, or in what year the house began to be ruinous, or in what day the ship began to leak? We know not how and when weeds, and thorns, and thistles first took root under the ground, but whē once they are sprung up and grown aloft, we see them, we discern them, we feel them, we pluck thē up. So the alterations of the church of Rome are as a mystery, The mystery of iniquity, 2 Thess. 2, ver. 7, and albeit we could not show the beginning of them, yet that such desolations and ruins of the ancient building are among them, that they utterly lay waste the foundatiō, we prove by the word of God in the old and New Testament. This is the trial of all errors and heresies. And because the doctrines that they embrace, and the religion that they profess are not agreeable to these ancient monuments and records, which are as the Meteyard or the Standard to try all measures; we therefore say and conclude, they are errors, and we wrong them not at all, though we be not able to produce the first broachers and beginners of them all.

This is enough for us, we find by the word of God that they are heresies, and therefore justly challenge them, and complain that Bethel is become Beth-auen, and the Church of God become the Synagogue of Satan, Hos. 4, verse 15.

How many heresies have sprung up in the Church, like darnel in the field among the Corn, noted by Epiphanius, Augustine, and others of the learned and ancient, of whom neither we nor they know the first authors? The Scribes and Pharisees taught many things against the Law, or else Christ would not have reprov'd their false glosses, Math. 5, neither willed his Disciples to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees, Mat. 16, 6, that is, of the doctrine of the Parisies and of the Sadducees, verse 12: yet the circumstance of time when these corruptions crept in, and the persons that devised them are altogether unknown, and who is able to tell us? In the primitive Church there were a kind of heretics, called Acephali, because no man was found to be their head and master. The like we might say of many other heresies, of which if any should ask (as Campian doth) In what age, under what Pope, upon what occasion, by whose compulsiō, by whose power it came to pass, I doubt the best answer would be silence. Wherefore it is not necessary to produce the precise time and tokens of every change, because the alteration was not made at an instant, or all at once as when a land is invaded by a foreign enemy that turneth all things upside down; but it entered sliely and slowly into the Church, as a worm that gnaweth the root of the tree by little and little: to omit that we in these last days want the histories and records of many things done before us, and the Roman tyranny hath suppressed or corrupted a part of them that are left us. The Problem is not unknown, which the Greeks so curiously debated, touching the Argos wherein Iason sailed for the golden fleece, which at his return and coming home was laid up and reserved in the Road for a great and worthy monument. This ship decaying by little and little (for what is it that time doth not consume as a moth, and eat as a canker?) they always peeced and repaired where it began to wear away, till in the ende the whole substance of the old vessel or bottom wherein Iason sailed and made his voyage and adventure, was utterly wasted, and nothing remaining of it but only the later reparations successively made in the room of the other. Now the question was, whether this were the ship wherein Iason sailed, or not? or another diverse from it? or whether any wise Athenian could precisely tell, when and by what workman, every piece and parcel was patched and supplied, until the old was wholly gone? or when and at what time it ceased to be that ship, and became a new ship? The Roman Religion is almost become like this ship, it hath been patched and peeced at several times by cunning workmen, & there is little or nothing remaining of the old ship wherein Peter fished, I mean of that Church wherein (they say) Peter sate as Bishop; one error succeeding another, and one heresy making way for another, until little faith & truth is found among them. Notwithstanding all the secret conveyances made in that Church, it is not hard in very many particular points, to show the beginning, proceeding, and establishing of the same, touching pardons and indulgences, touching the Popes supremacy usurped, the Images of the Trinity, and the beginning of Idol worship, touching the merit of works, & forbidding of marriage. The Mass (one of the greatest Idols) began not all at once, but came to this height by degrees. It were endless to name all that might be alleged, and to show how and by whom these points were resisted, and the truth evermore defended.

Secondly, this serveth to condemn the [Use 2] foolish practice of popish pilgrims, who undertake long and laborious journeys to Jerusalem and the land of Judea, or to this & that Idol, and make it a meritorious work to visit either the Sepulcher of our Lord, or the Image of our Lady. For albeit this Land have been heretofore famous, because the Law came from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, E•y 2, 3, and because Christ himself lived, and preached, and wrought many miracles there, and it be oftentimes called, The holy Land; yet the presence of Christ infused no holiness into it, more then into any other place And all the Papists in the world shall never be able to prove, that it is more meritorious to go to Jerusalem in a pilgrims weed, then to go to Antioch, or Ephesus, or Constantinople, or any other City in the East or West: or that it is more acceptable to God, or available to the soul to travail thither, then for the English to go to London, or the French to Paris. The house where the King resideth, all y^e while he is there is an honorable house, and there the Court lieth: but when the king is once removed out of the house, it is afterward never a whit the more honorable for the kings being there before: so is it in this case, albeit Christ in his life time and the days of his flesh, did many great works and wonders in it, yet being ascended, and the Christian religion also removed, there remaineth no more holiness in that place, then in any other, and therefore it is great vanity and idolatry for any people to practice such impiety. These are like to the Pilgrims among the Turks & Sarazens, that go yearly with great show of devotion to Meccha to visit the Sepulcher of Mahomet, and account it a work very meritorious.

The Cities Gilgal and Beth-el were sometimes famous and renowned Cities, yet true religiō being once removed, the Prophet chargeth the people not to come at them, and to have nothing to do with them. Hos. 4, 15. Hence it is, that Christ saith, John 4, 23. The true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and truth. If then we may worship God with great benefit to our selves, and as great glory to him in our own Country, I see no cause why we should resort to Jerusalem, or go on pilgrimage to Rome or any other place, forasmuch as we may lift up pure hands everywhere and be heard, 1 Tim. 2, 8. But thus these crafty workmen keep the people's heads busy with outward devotions and shows of holiness, that they may not espy their fraud and deceit in greater matters.

Lastly, this teacheth all men how they may [Use 3] make themselves to be of good name, and their houses and habitations truly famous, to wit, by holiness and true religion, by faith & repentance, which are the ornaments of all Christians. Thus shall the noble man make himself and his house truly noble. If they worship God aright, they shall have true worship with God and man: for he will honor them that honor him, 1 Sam. chap. 2, verse 30, and without true religion, the most noble blood is stained and tainted, and never restored since the treason and rebellion of Adam against God. For that which maketh a man reproachful, or any place reproachful, is sin and wickedness, which make our names rotte, Prov, 10, 7. See then the difference between the judgment of God and man. Men do commonly magnify Cities by the stately buildings & goodly Monuments that are found in them, but this is no true or well grounded fame: the true praise and commendation of any City is the piety of the Citizens. A well ordered Town or City embracing zealously true religion, and maintaining the worship of God in integrity, drawing out the sword of justice against vice, and countenancing the faithful in their godly courses, is indeed a right famous and flourishing City. Jerusalem the City of God, and the praise of the world, (Psal. 122, 3, 4, 5. and 87, 3, and 48, 11, 12, 13,) was never so famous for her buildings and stately Towers, and outward magnificence, as it was for the word and worship of God. We see then hereby, who they are that are the honor and ornament of Cities, of Towns, and of houses, to wit, such as honor God, and are truly zealous and religious: and likewise who are the shame and reproach, the blot and blemish, the dishonor and disgrace of them, to wit, such as are wicked and profane. Do we see a City, or Town, or private house full of drunkards, of blasphemers, of light and lascivious persons? these are they that pour contempt upon them, and bring shame & infamy unto them. Everyone therefore should be careful to look to their charges committed unto them: the Magistrate to govern the people, the Minister to look to the flock, Ouer which the holy Ghost hath made him Ouerseer; every father and mother to have an eye to their children, and every master and governor to look to their servants as their several charges, that their houses may not be houses of wickedness, of riotousnes, of deceit, of cursing and evil speaking, but rather the houses of God. All men are ready to condemn the Ministers that are absent from their flocks, and to call for residency at their hands: but let these look also upon themselves, and consider the duties of their own callings. Doubtless all Governors have a certain kind of residency required at their hands, and their presence is meet to be among them to oversee their manners, to redress their disorders, and to teach and instruct them in the ways of godliness. To these Solomon speaketh, Pro. 27, 23, 24. Bee diligent to know the state of thy flocks, and look well to thy herds: For riches are not forever, and doth the Crown endure to every generation? When the Sheepheard is gone frō the Lambes, the wolf watcheth to take his prey. The husbandman sowed good seed in his field, but while he slept, his enemy came, and sowed tares among the wheat. Mat. 13, 25. The devil watcheth all occasions, and maketh his use of all advantages to deceive and seduce, and therefore we must take heed we give him no occasions. Moses was absent from the people but forty days, and what a change found he among them at his return? how deeply had they plunged themselves into idolatry? and how had they corrupted the worship of God, and were departed from him? Such is the corruption of nature, and profaneness of the heart to evil continually, Gen. 6, 5, that they which are under us are ready to fall into evil, even while we are with them and have them in a manner before our eyes, much more when we are absent from them, as Moses speaketh of the people; Behold, while I am yet alive with you this day, ye have been rebellious against the Lord, and how much more after my death? Deuteronomy, chapter thirty one, verse 27 Let us take heed of long and unnecessary absence from our private charges, as well as they ought that have public charges, lest while by our absence we provide for their bodies, we do not destroy their souls for want of our presence. I will conclude this point with the words of Solomon, Prov. 27, 8. As a bird that wandreth from her nest, so is a man that wandreth from his place.

Verse 10. And the earth opened her mouth and swallowed them up together with Korah when that company died, what time the fire devoured, &c, In the description of the Tribe of Reuben he fingleth out Dathan and Abiram, as archconspirators against Moses, the lawful Magistrate set over the people, they opposed themselves against authority, and therefore perish. As they withstood Aaron, we have spoken before, Numb. chapter sixteen: now consider their facte as they rebelliously strove against Moses,, and in him against the Lord.

We learn hereby, that it is a fearful and grievous sin to set our selves against lawful government and authority which God hath set over us. This is a most wicked and ungodly work, and the Scripture condemneth it in every place, Hos. 8, 3, 4. Roman. 13, 1, 2. Pet. 2, 10. Jude, verse 8. The continual practice of all the godly throughout the old and New Testament tend to the contrary, to commend to us obedience for conscience sake, and to reprove and condemn all resistance & opposition, as a work of the flesh; for they evermore submitted themselves to those that were Magistrates. Christ Jesus the Lord of all was not bound to Caesar in any sort, whether we consider him as God or as man. Not as he was God, Caesar was subject unto him, and owed to him homage and obedience: for as David in spirit called him Lord, Mat. 22, 43, so might Caesar also, and all Princes and Potentates in the world. Not as he was man, because he was of the blood royal, of the seed of David, and the right heir to the kingdom; whereas Caesar had no other right but what he got by the sword, and therefore he ought to have received, not to have paid tribute; yet because he would give good example to others, not offense to any, Math. 17, 27, he gave to the receyuers for himself and for Peter a Stater, which is thought to amount to half an ounce of silver, in value two shillings six pence, after five shillings the ounce. And as he taught them by his practice, so likewise he did by words, to give unto Caesar the things which are Caesars. Mat. 22, 21. So did Paul for the trial of the truth, and the justice of his cause appeal unto Caesar from the high Priests, who were carried with rage and envy against him, Acts 25, 11. Psalm. 18, 43, 44.

[Reason 1] The grounds hereof are evident. First, because public authority is God's ordinance, & every soul ought to be subject unto it, because it is of God, Rom. 13, 1, 2. and whosoever resisteth it, resisteth God himself. The people of Israel were rejected of God for resisting the manner of government that God had appointed, when he set Judges over them, and they would needs have a king to judge them like all the Nations, 1 Sam. 8, 5, much more then shall they be rejected of God, that resist government it self, and be accounted foul & fearful sinners before him.

[Reason 2] Secondly, because the opposition against government and the denying and withstanding of it must needs bring all confusion that may be, so that nothing can be in peace and quietness. It is said, and often repeated in the book of Judges, that every man did what he list, because they had no government, Judge. 18, 1, and 17, 6, and 21, 25. God is the God of order, not of confusion, and therefore he alloweth of Magistrates, because he would have order among men. Take away a General out of the field, and expose the whole army to rout, what followeth but the destruction and carnage of the whole host? Take away the Pilot out of the Ship, it is the ready way to perish the Ship: so if you take away the Magistrate (which is as the Chieftaine of the army, and as the Master of the Ship) we shall live a life more savage and unreasonable then the unreasonable beasts lead, the great ones would devour the less; the rich, the poor; the strong ones, them that are weak: nothing would appear but a miserable face of havoc and confusion.

Before we proceed to the uses, [Object.] it is necessary to remove an objection. For to resist government may not be so fearful a sin, forasmuch as sometimes it is said to be of God, as the Scripture speaking of the apostasy of the ten Tribes from the house of David, saith, that the Lord would give them to Jeroboam, and rent the kingdom from the house of David, 1 Ki. 13, 31: and chap. 12, 15, this was done from the Lord: and verse 24, the other Tribes are commanded not to go up to fight against Jeroboam and his followers, for this (saith the Lord) is from me. How then can the rebellion of the ten Tribes be a fearful sin, seeing it was from the Lord. Answer. [Answer.] To clear this point, we must understand, that God's appointment of Jeroboam to be King, and the renting off the house of Solomon, doth not justify the act of this people that it was not sin in them; for this came to pass by the decree of God, yet the people are not justified in giving him the kingdom, nor he in accepting of it, inasmuch as they did it not out of any obedience to the will of God, but they did it to ease themselves from the cruelty and tyranny that Rehoboam was likely to use toward them, and therefore they sinned because they had no commandment from God.

Let us come to the uses. First, this confuteth [Use 1] the doctrine of the Anabaptists or Libertines that deny all authority, as not fitting for Christians to bear. They teach their own dreams, that neither Christians should be Magistrates, nor yet subject to Magistrates: an horrible impiety in them, and it would not be worth the time to show how they wrest the Scripture to defend their own error, which otherwise they nothing regard.

Secondly, it serveth to tax Popery, and [Use 2] that out of their own grounds: for the Rhemists have a rule upon Jude, verse 6, that they are heretics that deny authority, and they would father it and fasten it upon us, because we deny subjection to the Pope. But we retort it upon themselves. For never was there any that did cast off the yoke of authority so much as they have done. They have put down the mighty from their seats, and trod upon the necks of Princes: they have dethroned Kings, and armed the son against the father. Under a color of the holy war they have sent them abroad, and betrayed them into the hands of the Sarazens, and in their absence seized upon their Dominions. There was never heretic did so shrink up the sinews, and shake off the yoke of authority as they have done. It is a rule that they have, that Ecclesiastical men ought to be free from all civil authority whatsoever, and that Clergy men must be exempted from subjection to the secular powers; so that they, not we, are the heretics that despise authority. As for the Bishop of Rome, we owe him no service, neither may he claim jurisdiction over the universal Church, either by Scriptures, Fathers, Councils, or imperial Constitutions for many ages.

[Use 3] Lastly, this serveth as an information to us, that we avoid all such proud and peevish conceits as these, to imagine there should be no authority: and be provoked to be thankful unto almighty GOD, that we do enjoy authority, seeing by it we are freed from confusion and desolation, from much mutiny and misery that otherwise would befall us. For notwithstanding by the great goodness of God we have authority, such is the fury and fierceness of wicked men, that they break out into strange enormities, and commit many fearful things by poysonings, by stabbings, by cousenages, by oppressions, by forgery, and falsehood, and such like mischeeuous and monstrous practices: what then would they presume to do, if there were no authority to bring them and their doings into question, and to call them to an account for their audacious courses? A man should always have his life in his hand, there could be no peace or safety in our houses and habitations, if there were no authority, to rule, to controlle, to terrify, to punish: and therefore how thankful ought we to be to almighty God for that authority which he hath set over us, and for the peaceable government we enjoy under our gracious Sovereign? Now this must withal be acknowledged of us, that no man can be truly thankful for authority, that is not willingly and cheerfully subject to authority. It is a frivolous and vain thing to pretend thankfulness, and yet not undergo the yoke of obedience with cheerfulness.

[Verse 11. Notwithstanding the Children of Korah died not.

What became of Korah himself, we have seen before. His name was famous in the Congregation, but he became infamous through his rebellion, and it is called the gainesaying of Korah to this day, Jude, verse 11. Notwithstanding mark here, that the sons of Korah perished not when their father perished and was punished, who spake evil of them that were in authorty: for it appeareth that they were preserved alive, and became afterward famous in the Church of God, and honorable mention is made of them in the book of Psalms and of the Chronicles, 1. Chronicles, chapter 6, verse 22. Psalm. 42, and Psalm 44, and Psalm 45, and sundry others afterward, as 2 Chronicles, chapter 20, verse 19.

From hence ariseth this Doctrine, that it is no disgrace for godly children to descend and come of ungodly parents. Howsoever sin be a reproach to the parents themselves, yet it taketh not hold of their issue, except they walk in those sins. Ezek. 18, 14. If he beget a son that seeth all his fathers sins which he hath done, and considereth & doth not the like, &c. he shall surely live. Iephthe is commended for a faithful man, that fought the battles of the Lord, & subdued the enemies of his people, yet he was the son of an harlot, Judge. 11, 1. Heb. chap. 11, verse 32. This farther appeareth in Saul and Jonathan, the one of them the greatest enemy, the other the greatest friend of David: the one sware his death, the other his life; the father to kill him, the son to save him, and therefore it was no dishonor to him to have such a father. The like we might say of Ahaz, a most wicked man, and Hezekiah a most godly King, one of the best sons of one of the worst fathers: yet who accounteth the worse of good Hezekiah, because he had wicked Ahaz to his father? Jeroboam king of Israel set up idolatry, and caused Israel to sin, and therefore the Lord threateneth to bring evil upon his house, that the dogs should eat him that died in the City, and the fowls of the air, him that died in the field, 1 Kings, chapter 14, verse 10: so that they should all be swept away, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone: yet God gave him one good son, whom in mercy he took to himself, and saved as a brand out of the fire, or as a Sheeheard taketh out of the mouth of the Lyon two legs or a piece of an ear, Amos, chapter 3, verse 12: and therefore it is said, All Israel shall mourn for him, for he only of Jeroboam shall come to the grave, because in him there is found some good thing toward the Lord God of Israel.

The grounds of this truth follow. First, [Reason 1] that election might stand wholly by grace, forasmuch as almighty God showeth mercy, where and to whom he will. If religion should descend from father to son in a common and ordinary course of generation or propagation without any interruption, it might be thought to be a work of nature, not of grace, and to proceed from parents, not from almighty GOD. Therefore be often breaketh off that course, so that wicked parents have sometimes good and godly children; and contrariwise godly parents have wicked and vile children, that the purpose of GOD according to election, might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth, Rom. chap. 9, verse 11.

Secondly, it is sin only that bringeth shame and reproach, as we shown and proved in the first Doctrine upon this chapter: and therefore such as come of wicked persons and parents, if they forsake the sins wherein their ancestors and forefathers have walked and wallowed as swine in the mire, can receive no touch of disgrace, or blemish of honor, or stayne of name at all.

Thirdly, it is no credit or grace, for evil and corrupt children, to descend of godly parents; as we see in the children of Josiah, he reformed religion betimes, and consecrated his young years, as it were his first fruits unto God: howbeit his children walked not in the ways of their father, but did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, 2 Chron. 36, 5, 12: the righteousness of their father could do them no good, but the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon himself, Ezek. chapter 18, verse 20.

[Use 1] We learn from hence, that such as have had evil parents, must acknowledge God's great mercy toward them, and never forget what he hath done for them. He might justly leave us in the wicked ways of our forefathers, and give us over to follow their steps. And as one serpent engendreth another, so naturally doth one wicked man bring forth another: and without a special grace preventing, like father, like son: an evil root, an evil tree: an evil fountain, an evil stream. None ought therefore to justify the works of their progenitors, & think it enough if they follow them, but must consider whether they followed the right way, Psalm. 78, 8: rather they must say in humility, We acknowledge, O Lord, our wickedness, and the iniquity of our fathers, for we have sinned against thee, Ier. 14, 20. Dan. 9, 8. Psal. 106, 6. Isaiah 65, 7. How many do we see run on in evil with their evil fathers? When Jeroboam had set up two Calves, the one at Dan, the other at Beth-el, the rest that succeeded him in his seat, followed him in his sin one after another, (like those that run down a steep hill, never stay till they come to the bottom) until a worse arose, I mean Ahab, who sold himself to work wickedness, and changed the idolatry of Jeroboam into a worse, bringing in the worship of Baal a strange god, whereas before they worshipped the true God, albeit in a false manner. Wherefore when God restraineth the childrē from those wicked ways, and openeth their eyes to see the evil of their parents, how can it but be acknowledged and confessed to be his good hand? and how should we not say, that the ways of God are equal? Ezek. 18. Nothing is more natural and ordinary, then of evil parents to have brought forth into the world evil children, Job 14, 4. John. 3, 6. Psal. 51, 5. Every thing fructifieth according to his kind; of briars, what can come but briars? Of thorns, what can we look for but thorns? Every seed hath his proper body, 1. Corinth. chap. 15, verse 38. Do men gather Grapes of thorns, or Figs of thistles? saith Christ, Math. 7, 16, yet behold how God, his mercy as it were prevailing and getting the upper hand over his justice, and his power altering our corrupt nature, behold I say, how God by his marvelous and strange work, at which we may all wonder, maketh Grapes to grow of thorns, and Figs to spring out of thistles; He maketh the barren woman to bear and to be a joyful mother of children, Psalm. 113, 9. Gal. 4, verse 27: and them that were cut out of the Olive tree, which was wild by nature, to be grafted contrary to nature into a good Olive tree, Rom. chap. 11, verse 24. Whence did Abraham himself spring, but of an idolatrous stock? for his fathers worshipped strange gods on the other side of the flood, Josh. chapter 24, 2, so that God shown mercy to him, and called him from his Country and kindred, and from his fathers house, Gen. chapter 12, verse 1.

Secondly, we are from hence admonished [Use 2] and provoked to repent and turn unto God. Nothing can blot out the remembrance of the oppression, cruelty, wickedness, and profaneness of ungodly parents, but the repentance of their children, Ezek. chapter 18, ver. 30, 31. A wicked life led by wicked parents, is as the skin of the black-moore, or as the spots of a Leopard: it is written or graven with the Pen of a Diamond, all the water in the sea cannot wash it away, nor all the nytre & sope in the world cannot purge it, but it cleaveth to the children, and to the children's children, as a leprosy: only true repentance is able quite to blot it out. This is as the Fullers earth, that can scour out all the staynes and blots of parents, that they shall not cleave to the children, and therefore the Prophet calleth to them to repent and turn themselves from all their transgressions, that iniquity be not their ruin, Ezek. 18, 30, 31, they must make them new hearts and new spirits. And until the child have learned this, to blot out his fathers sins by repentance, the reproach of them cleaveth fast unto him: but when once he hateth and forsaketh them, they are none of his, they died in the bed, and are buried in the grave of his father, never to arise nor to be charged upon him or his name. For as repentance blotteth out the remembrance of sin before God, as if it had never been, so ought it much more before men, whose praise is to be like their heavenly Father.

Thirdly, no man ought to object the sins [Use 3] of parents (whether dead or alive) or the punishment befallen unto them, though they have lived an ungracious life, or died an ignominious death, to their children that do not approve of their ways, neither follow them in wickedness. It was no disgrace or reproach to these sons of Korah, to have a traitor and rebel to their father, that made insurrection against the lawful Magistrate, and was consumed with fire from heaven, & therefore there is as honorable mention made of them in holy Scripture, as there is dishonorable of their father. It was no discredit for Ruth or Rahab to come, the one from the Moabites, who were branded with infamy from their first conception, Gen. 19, 37. the other from the Canaanites who were cursed in their first father, Gen. 9, 25. and all of them vowed to destruction, Gen. 15, 16, 18, 19, &c. If the father be an Ammorite, and the mother an Hittite, yet if the child be a true Israelite, in whom is no guile, as it is said of Nathaniel, it shall be his greater praise and glory, rather than any shame and ignominy unto him; as it was more admired that any good should come out of Nazareth, then out of Jerusalem. If a man have an adulterer, or drunkard, or murderer, or profane person unto his father, or have had such forefathers for many generations, yet shall their sins die with their persons, and be remembered no more, whensoever the son forsaketh those their wicked ways. No man therefore must cast them in the teeth, or upbraid any believer with the sins of his unbelieving parents. If a man come of Turkish or Heathenish parents, that never believed in Christ, nor acknowledged the true God, yet God will accept of those y^t forsake this infidelity and impiety: who therefore are we that we should upbraid them with the blots and infirmities of their fathers? For, as the godliness of the father shall nothing help the ungodly child, but the soul that sinneth shall die the death: Ezek 18, 20: so the ungodliness of the father shall nothing hurt the godly, because he renounceth it and hateth it as an enemy. The practice therefore of those is evil, that lade and burden with cart-loads of reproaches, those that are not to be touched in their own persons, because of the vices and sins of their parents.

[Use 4] Lastly, we must learn, that it shall on the other side be no honor, credit, comfort, or commendation, to descend from godly and worthy Ancestors, if we degenerate from thē as a base and bastard brood, Ezek. 18, 10, 13. It is the manner of many to stand much upon their pedigree, which the very heathen derided as great vanity, and accounted nothing indeed their own which themselves had not done: for what hath a coward to do, to glory in the valor of his Fathers? And they made choice rather to descend of vnnoble Parents, so themselves were noble and renowned thorough virtue, then to come of worthy Progenitors, and themselves to grow base & degenerate out of kind. This did the Prophet tell Jehoiachim, Ier. 22, 15, 16. Did not thy father eat and drink, and do justice & judgment, and then it was well with him? he judged the cause of the poor, &c: but thine eyes and thy heart are not but for thy covetousness, and to shed innocent blood, and for oppression and violence to do it. Hence it is, that John the Baptist telleth the Jews, that they should not boast of their progenitors, to say, They had Abraham to their Father, Mat. 3, 8, 9. They gloried much in this carnal privilege, and thought the whole seed of Abraham by generation of the flesh to be within the covenant of grace, and should be partakers of salvation; and in a proud conceit of this external glory, grew to contemn the Gentiles as a people forsaken of God. But there is an Israelite in the covenant, and an Israelite out of the covenant, as there is a Jew that is outward, and a Jew that is inward, Rom. 2, 29. & 4, 16: as there is an election that is general, and an election more special taken out of that general. There are sons of Abraham according to the flesh, and there are heirs of the faith of Abraham: as the Lord himself saith, Mal. 1, 2. Is not Esau Jacob's broth••? Yet I have hated Esau, and loved Jacob. Wherefore, when the Pharisees said, We have Abraham to our father: Christ answered, If ye were the children of Abraham, ye would do the works of Abraham: but now ye are of your father the devil, John 8, 39, 44. Let no man therefore rejoice in the flesh, neither stand upon the gifts given unto others, as it were to decke himself with the feathers of other birds. Paul the Apostle of the Gentiles showeth, that he might have confidence in the flesh, and if any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, he had cause much more: he was circumcised the eighth day, he was of the stock of Israel, and of the Tribe of Benjamin, he was an Hebrew of the Hebrews, and as touching the law a Pharisee, Yet what things soever might be gain unto him, the same he counted loss for Christ's sake, yea as dung that he might win him, Phil. 3, 7, 8. Let everyone therefore labor to have grace in his own heart, knowing, That the just shall live by his own faith, Hab. 2, 4. forasmuch as the faith of the father cannot profit the child that is without faith.

13 Of Zerah the family of the Zarhites, &c.

14 These are the families of the Simeonites, twenty and two thousand, and two hundred.

In the description of this Tribe, we are to consider the small number and little company in comparison of the other Tribes, and of themselves also, compared with the former sum. For whereas before they were 59300 they are now only as we see 22200. If any ask what may be the cause of this great abatement, [Objection] that there were so many before, & now fallen to be so few? [Answ.] The reason is to be taken out of the last history remembered in the former chapter, to wit, that one of the Princes of the Tribe of Simeon, being accompanied with many others of that Tribe, and backed and countenanced with them, committed a most shameful and shameless act before his brethren, and brought a Midianitish harlot into the host in the sight of Moses; yea, he was no doubt a mover and persuader of others to commit the like wickedness, whereby it came to pass, that the greatest number of this Tribe perished with him in that grievous plague. For it was reason that as they did partake with him in the Whoredom, so they should communicate together in the punishment. Hereupon it fell out, that whereas all the other Tribes in a manner surmounted the former account, or at least equalled the same, this failed much of the former sum. This is to be noted of us in this place, serving as a good commentary and exposition of the words of Moses, Deut. 32, 6. where Simeon is wholly left out. This teacheth us, that it is a very hard thing, to avoid, shun, and break off our society with wicked men, when once we are entered into it, but we follow and pursue it with greediness till we be punished together with them. It is hard to be kept from contracting friendship and fellowship with them: they are cunning to insinuate themselves; and if they be not called to us, they will call themselves; and if they be not bidden, they are as shameless guess, they will invite them selves. If at any time they be thrust out of our company, they will seek to enter again: and if the door be barred against them, they will wind in themselves (like the Thief) at the window, rather than they will stand without, that is, they will take all occasions to force themselves upon us. And if we find it hard not to contract it, we shall find it much harder to break it off, being once contracted: & doubtless never harder than in these days of sin, wherein iniquity hath gotten the upper hand, Exod. 33, 32, 33. Deut. 7, 2, 3, 4. 2 King. 8, 18.

[Reason 1] The grounds are, because sin is a cunning Orator, able to move much: so is every sinner, though otherwise never so simple, a cunning Rhetoritian, speaking in the enticing words of man's wisdom, or rather of the devils eloquence: and therefore they seldom plead, but they persuade: they sildom come, but they overcome. They compass sea and land, they spare no time, or place, or means, to win whomsoever they can to themselves, Prov. 7, 21. Secondly, our nature is prone to decline unto evil: for, as sin is strong twisted as a cartrope to draw others, so we are of our selves weak and feeble, ready to yield and to give over upon every occasion, even of our selves through our inbred corruption, though none do entice or entrap us; much more then when we are proved and provoked. We see it by the Israelites that suffered the Heathen to live among them, they soon learned their ways and served their idols, which were a snare to them, Psal. 106, 35, 36.

[Use 1] This reproveth all such as enter into league with such persons, they even offer their hands and feet to be bound as it were in chains, and they become afterward as prisoners and vassals to them. The chains of sin are small and subtle in the beginning, they are not easy to be espied while they are more easy to be passed over, or to be broken: and so much less easy they are to be discerned, because they promise pleasure or profit, liberty or life; howbeit afterward having taken hold, they do so claspe and inclose the poor prisoner, that he can hardly free himself. This is the ruin and downfall of many. If we make much of the sinner, we cannot long hate the sin: and therefore the Apostle joineth them both together, and chargeth us to avoid both the one & the other, Eph. 5, 7, 11. Be ye not partakers with thē: and afterward he addeth, Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. If then we be continually in company with evil doers, the continual custom of seeing and hearing evil, dimmeth our fight, and stoppeth our ears, and hardeneth our hearts, and taketh away out feeling, that we can neither see the vglines of sin, nor hear the cry of it, nor feel the foulnes of it, yea it stoppeth our mouths that we cannot, nor dare not for fear of offense reprove any of their evil ways, but first we wink at them, and afterward we join with them.

Secondly, we see hereby the error & vain [Use 2] persuasion of many men, that for pleasure or profit, or such like carnal respects yoke themselves with profane persons, who glory and boast that they can easily and quickly break off society with them whensoever they list, & leave their company at their own pleasure or leisure. But these men are much deceived, & know neither the deceitfulness of sin, nor cunning of a sinner, nor the judgment of God. For mark when we list, we shall find by experience few examples of such as have returned from carnal and corrupt company. And hereby it appeareth to be true, because when as such as delighted to stand in the way of sinners, once went seriously about it, to shake off their fellows, and to leave their folly, they have been discouraged with the difficulty of the work, and found it as hard as for a prisoner to shake off his fetters that are made fast about him. When Peter lay in prison, he could not with all his might free himself from his irons, it was the hand of the Angel that delivered him from those chains, Acts 12, 7: so all the power and strength that we have is not great enough to set us at liberty from the snares of sin, it must be a superior and supernatural work, that we may confess and say, This is the finger of God. The strong man keepeth us under lock and key, Till a stronger then he cometh, and taketh from him all his Armor, wherein he trusted, and diuideth the spoils, Luk. chapter 11, verse 22. Nay, the more strength a man thinketh he hath to withstand any sin, or to resist the sinner, the sooner he is overtaken with the one & the other. For this persuasion ariseth from presumption in himself of his own gifts, and this breedeth in him security, and so in the end thorough a proud opinion he hath of his great strength, he groweth so reckless and careless, that he feareth not to commit any sin whatsoever. This we might express and enlarge by the example of Peter, Math. 26. The Scripture setteth him down as a glass before us, that so often as we look upon him we should take notice of our own frailty and weakness. And doubtless this is the cause why God oftentimes in his just judgment forsaketh men, and leaveth them unto themselves, because they make flesh their arm, and presume upon their own strength. Hence it is that they are oft•n overtaken with those sins, which otherwise, if they had feared with a godly jealousy their own hearts, he would have kept them from the pit of them. So then it is a vain thing for men to use the company of those that are profane and wicked, under an evil-grounded conceit and foolish imagination of their own ability to stand fast, seeing it is so hard a thing to forsake and shake off their society.

[Use 3] Lastly, it admonisheth everyone, that there is required great wariness and watchfulness of him, to forsake the company, and abandon the society of those that are wicked men. For the hardness of this duty should stir us up to be so much more careful and fearful of our selves. Therefore we ought to labor after a sound faith, that we may believe this to be true: for this is the foundation of the whole building. Faith is that which will beget fear, and fear will beget diligence and circumspection to avoid that which is evil. Thus it was with Noah, he did believe that GOD would destroy the world, or else he had himself been destroyed with the unbelieving world: therefore also he feared, knowing that he who had threatened would perform. And what did this fear work in him? was it idle? No, it caused him To prepare the Ark to save himself, and to enter into it, going from the rest of the world, and separating himself and his family from them, Heb. 11, 7. So then these three go together, faith, fear, and diligence. Faith breedeth fear, and fear bringeth carefulness. If we have faith to believe the danger of evil company, and how hard it is to separate from them, and to touch nothing of theirs, as we heard chap. 16, 26: where Moses saith, Depart, I pray you, from the Tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, lest ye be consumed in all their sins: this will make us begin to be fearful, to fear our own estate, lest we be suddenly surprised and supplanted, and then it will make us careful and watchful over our own harts. But where there is want of this faith, there men are rash and fool-hardy, and fear nothing at all, and so like blind men they fall into the pit, & cause others to fall. This is the cause that Satan in the beginning labored to batter this fortress, and to undermine the faith of our first parents, that they should not believe y^e word of God, and so entertain communication with him, Genes. 3. So he sought to shake the faith of Christ in the first place; but the Prince of this world found nothing in him. Let us therefore take to us the shielde of Faith, wherewith we shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked, Ephes. 6, 16. And albeit we cannot but live in the world with wicked mē as the Apostle teacheth, 1 Cor. chap. 5. verse 10: yet must we beware we do not eat with them, verse 11. that is, converse with them, and join in league with them, lest if we run with them into evil, it turn to their and our destruction. To conclude therefore, let us remember that if we be partakers with them in their sins, we shall also be partakers in their punishment; and learn to be faithful, fearful, and careful.

52 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying:

53 Unto these the Land shall be divided for an inheritance.

54 To a few thou shalt give the less inheritance: to everyone shall his inheritance be given, according unto those that were numbered of him.

55 Nevertheless, the Land shall be divided, &c.

56 According to the lot shall the possession thereof be, &c.

In these words, we have the second part of the Chapter, containing the commandment of God, touching the dividing of the Land, amplified by the form or manner of the doing of it: first, by an Arithmetical proportion according to the number of names, having regard to the multitude or fewness of them, they that were more in number were to have the greater inheritance, and they that were fewer, a lesser. And this was one end of this new numbering taken of the people in this place, whereas they had been numbered before. Secondly, to avoid partiality and contention, it must be done by Lot, that they might rest in that division no less then if it had been done by the immediate voice of God from heaven. So then, as all the Tribes had not an equal number of persons, so they were not to receive an equal measure of inheritance: and as they differed in multitude, so they were to differ in their portion and partition of the Land. If they had received all an equality, some should have been burdened with superfluity, and others straightened through penury.

The Doctrine arising from hence is this: That God provideth sufficiently for all his people. Every man hath his portion assigned him of God upon the earth. It is his will and pleasure that all should have their measure of earthly things, not some to have all, and some nothing at all, but all to have some part, Deu. 15, 7, 8, 10. God would have no beggar in Israel. When the Lord sent down Manna, and fed his people with Angels food, all the host from the highest to the lowest had enough; He that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little, had no lack, Exod. 16, 18. 2 Cor. 8, 15. To this end he instituted deacons in the Church, merciful men to look to the poor, that none should be neglected in the daily ministrations, Acts 6, 1, 3. & 4, 34: there was none in the Church of Christ that lacked, forasmuch as distribution was made to everyone according as he needed. This was no Anabaptistical communion, but a Christian communication of outward and earthly things, as every man had need. And here we have not a disanulling of propriety, but an establishing of charity. The Evangelist Luke describing the state of the church after Christ's ascension, saith, that the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul, neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own, but they had all things common, Act 4, 32. Rom. 12, 13, 2 Cor. 9, 9.

[Reason 1] The reasons are manifest. For he provided for man in the beginning before he had any being or beginning, as he prepareth milk in the mothers breast before the infant be brought forth into the world. He made all things necessary for man, before he made man himself, Gen. 1. & 2. much more will he provide for us after we have life and bodies given unto us.

Secondly, who gave unto us life? & whence have we received our bodies? Is it not from God? is not he our Maker? and are not we y^e work of his hands? Our Savior teacheth us, That the life is more then meat, and the body thē raiment, Matth. chap. 6, 25. If then we have received life from him, we shall also receive meat to sustain life: and if he have given us our bodies, he will give us garments to cloth our bodies, and to cover our nakedness.

Thirdly, he feedeth all his creatures that he made, He causeth grass to grow for the Cattle, & herb for the service of man, that he may bring forth food out of the earth, Psal, 104, 14. Yea, the young Lions roar after their prey, and seek their meat from God, verse 21. He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young Ravens that cry, Psal. 147, 9. The Lord is good unto all, and his tender mercies are over all his works, Psal. 145, 9. So the eyes of all wait upon him, and he giveth them their meat in due season, he openeth his hand, and satisfieth the desire of every living thing, verse 15, 16: much more then will he provide for man whom he made after his own image, and set him to rule over y^e beasts of the field, and the fowls of heaven.

Fourthly, every man by the instinct of nature, and the light of grace provideth for his own children, and supplieth all their wants, and every Governor ministereth food and necessary things for his family, Prouerb. 31, 15. and he that doth not this, Hath denied the faith and is worse then an Infidel, 1 Tim. 5, 8. We are God's own people, we belong to his household and family: he is the Creator, and we his creatures: he is our father, and we his children: he is our master, and we his servants: he is our shepherd, and we his sheep. If then he should not feed us and provide for us, he should deny himself, and falsify the word that is gone out of his own mouth, which is impossible. This reason is urged by our Savior Christ, Matth. 7, 9, 10. Luke 11, 11, 12, 13.

This reproveth those that never think they [Use 1] hau^e enough, neither will know what is sufficient, no not when God hath given them great plenty and abundance. They that have much are yet desirous of more, and they that are full think themselves empty. Hence it is, that though they have much laid up in store for many years, Luke 12. yet they have no use at all of it, no benefit by it, no comfort in it. As it is a great blessing of God to give riches, and an heart to use them, nay it is a twofold blessing: so on the other side, it is a great judgment to have this worlds good, and to be a slave unto it, to serve it as his master, and to worship it as his god. For first of all these men do wonderfully fret and fume, vex & torment themselves, especially when anything crosseth their desire (and the least occasion will do it) the want of contentation setteth the mind upon the Racke, that they have less peace of heart and comfort of their life then the poor man. For when his labor is done (which thorough custom and continuance is made light and easy) his sleep is sweet, and his rest is pleasant: whereas the other disorder, disquiet and distemper themselves in heaping up riches, and cannot tell who shall enjoy them, or whether their heir will prove a wise man or a fool, Eccles. 2, 19. 1 Tim. 6, 9, 10. Secondly, they bewray much impiety and infidelity, that their hearts are destitute of true godliness, whatsoever show they make to the contrary, 1 Tim. 6, 6. Psal. 119, 36. James 1, 27: for the immoderate desire of riches overturneth the order and course of nature, and maketh the soul which is heavenly to be altogether earthly. Thirdly there is no sin which a covetous man will not commit for his gain, and therefore the Apostle calleth it the root of all evil, 1 Tim, 6, 10. It is in effect the breach of the whole law. It setteth up a strange or false god in the heart, and therefore is called, The worshipping of Images, Col. 3, 5. and the covetous person an Idolater, Ephes. 5.5. He will swear and stare, he will curse and blaspheme to get an halfepeny, Prouerb. 30, 9: he regardeth the Sabbath no more then his old shoes, & will damn his own soul to fill his purse, and to feed his belly, Amos 8, 5. It is therefore a mother sin, and a capital evil. It was the cause of lying in Gehazi, 2 Kings 5, 25. of murder in Ahab, 1 Kings 21, 19: of treachery in Judas, Matth. 26, 15. of theft in Achan, Josh. 7, 21. of Apostasy in Demas, 2 Tim. 4, 10. Lastly, it worketh a distrust for the things of this life in the goodness and providence of God, that they dare not trust him for their daily bread, who notwithstanding provideth for all his creatures, that they might have what to suffice them, and learn to depend upon him.

[Use 2] Secondly, it is the office of God to provide for all living things that have life and breath in them, he hath enough to sustain them all, but we are more worth then thousands & ten thousands of them; and he maketh them to feed us, as he commanded the ravens to feed Elijah, who brought him bread and flesh in the morning and in the evening, 1 Kings 17, 4, 6. Do we then at any time want provision, so that we know not what to do, or where to become, or which way to turn our selves? It is as much as if God told us, it is his charge to give us whatsoever is meet and sufficient for us, as a faithful Steward that provideth for all his family, be it never so great. And seeing he feedeth the wild beasts which howl and bray, without knowing that there is a maker which should nourish them: how then ought we to depend upon him, who are sure that he hath set us in the world, to maintain us as his creatures, and to feed us as his children in it? This is after a sort natures prayer, to make suite to God for succor and sustenance, as Job 38, 41. He provided for the Raven his food, when his young ones cry unto God. Their crying is as it were a confession of their need, which cannot be supplied and relieved but by God only; and therefore he will not leave us destitute, Math. 6.26. But some may say, how doth the crying of the Ravens, [Object.] and the roaring of the Lions tend to God? or how do they ask their food of him? Alas, they know nothing concerning God: the swine that grunteth under the tree, never lifteth up his eyes so much as to the tree from whence the Mast falleth. How thē should they seek their meat at the hands of God? Or how should they understand the things of God, who understand not the things of men, but as unreasonable creatures are led only by sense and appetite? [Answ.] I answer, there is no more ascribed to the Ravens and Lions, then is to be understood of all other creatures. But it importeth these two things: first, that it is God who through his providence provideth, and through his goodness giveth meat unto the Lions and all other creatures. It is he that upholdeth all the works of his hands that none perisheth that was formed in the beginning, Psal. 111, 4. Secondly, the crying and yelling of brute beasts, wrung from them by the force of famine and hunger, is instead of a calling on him, and hath after a sort the nature of a prayer for meat & maintenance. As if one should say, that the young child, the infant and suckling that hangeth at the mothers breasts, when it crieth, seeketh to the mother for food and sustenance, albeit it have no knowledge of the mother, neither of the mothers duty or tender care over it: but because the necessity of the child doth properly belong unto the care of the mother. Now then to apply these things, if the cry of the unreasonable creatures have the force and power of a calling upon him, how much more are we to believe, that the prayers and groans of the faithful, have indeed the force of a fervent and earnest prayer, yea albeit sometimes they speak nothing distinctly and directly unto him?

Thirdly, it is our duty to praise the name [Use 3] of God, and to give thanks to him humbly and heartily, when he hath fed us with his blessings every day, Psal. 104, 1. & 103, 1.5. where he provoketh his soul to offer up this sacrifice, and all that is within him to bless his name, who redeemed his life from destruction, and satisfieth his mouth with good things. Let us not therefore be unthankful for his mercies, nor forget any of his benefits. The natural man taketh his daily bread as a fruit of his own labor, not as the gift of God, & therefore no marvel if he do ascribe the praise and glory to himself. But if we consider aright that it is God who feedeth us, and that we have not so much as a bit of bread, or a drop of water to do us good, but we must ask it & receive it at his hands, it will teach us to give the glory to his name, and to lift up our hearts in thanksgiving to him.

Lastly, it becometh us to ascend as it were [Use 4] by stepes to an higher comparison, from the body to the soul, and from the meat that perisheth to that which endureth to everlasting life. For seeing we understand that GOD is thus careful to feed our bodies, it is much more reason that we should seek at his hands the nourishment of our souls. If we have not this skill and consideration in us, the Fowls of the air, and the beasts of the field will be witnesses against us to condemn us. This is the voice of faith, the other the voice of Nature. Nature is wise enough to tell us when we want provision for the body, but it must be the office of faith to tell us when we want food for the soul. We are ready to cry out oftentimes, What shall we eat? or what shall we drink? or wherewith shall we be clothed? Mat. 6. but few feel the wants of their souls though they be like to perish and pine away; wherefore our Savior teacheth us, Matth. chapter 6. verse 33. First of all to seek the Kingdom of God, and then all other things shall be ministered unto us.

57 And these are they that were numbered of the Levites, after their families, of Gershon, &c.

58 These are the families of the Levites, the family of the Libnites, and the family of the Hebronites, &c.

59 And the name of Amrams wife, &c.

60 And unto Aaron was borne Nadab & Abihu, Eleazar and Ishamar.

61 And Nadab and Abihu died when they offered strange fire before the Lord.

We have here the third and last part of the chapter, touching the numbering of the Levites apart by themselves, branched out into three principal families, but specially Aaron is insisted upon, to whom the Priesthood was given, who is described both by his parents and by his posterity, and among his posterity Moses again singleth out the fact of Nadab & Abihu, who died when they offered strange fire before the Lord. And albeit we have spoken of this before, chap. 3, 4. yet being offered again let us consider better of it. For whereas God commanded fire to be duly and diligently kept always burning upon the Altar, wherewith the sacrifices were to be consumed, and must never be suffered to go out, Levite. 6, 9, 12, 13. they presumed to offer sacrifice with strange fire, and therefore died before their father; for as well they might have taken a strange beast, as a strange fire, the one being no less forbidden thē the other. Whereby we see, y^e evil persons are cut off betimes, 1 Chro. 24.1, 2: and are not suffered to live out half their days. This heavenly fire which GOD sent to consume his sacrifices was brought into the Temple built by Solomon, and there it continued from one generation to another until the destruction of the Temple and the City. True it is, the author of the second book of Maccabees telleth us a tale, that when Nehemiah's had built the Temple and the Altar, he offered sacrifice with this fire: for when tht Fathers were led into Persia, the Priests that were devout took the fire of the Altar privily, and hid it in an hollow place of a pit without water, where they kept it sure, so that the place was unknown to all men: wherefore he sent for the posterity of those Priests that had hid it, howbeit they could find no fire, but thick water, which being sprinkled upon the wood and sacrifice, there arose a great fire, so that every man that saw it maruelled, 2 Maccha. 1, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. Wher we see, two things are coupled together, the building of y^e Temple and Altar by Nehemiah, and the sending of fire from heaven by God; these may well be joined, the one being as true as the other. But it is plain by the whole Scripture, that Nehemiah built not the Temple, if we shall consider the circumstances either of the persons, or of the time, or of the place. For the Altar was built by Zerubbabel and Joshua in the reign of Cyrus, so soon as by his proclamation they returned from the captivity of Babylon, to wit, the seventh month after, Ezra 3. And touching the Temple, though the foundation began to be laid while Cyrus himself yet lived: yet it was not ended & finished before the sixth year of the reign of Darius Nothus, Ezra 6, which was many years after, John 2, 20. But Nehemiah was then in Babylon, and not yet come to Jerusalem, forasmuch as he obtained leave of the king of Persia to go thither, in the 20. year of Artaxerxes Mnemon the successor of this Darius, Ezr. 4. & 7. Neh. 1, & 2: by which computation of time it will appear, that the Altar was built an hundred years and more, and the Temple finished at the least 30. years before the coming of Nehemiah: so that the author of this second book of Maccabees is not a little deceived in his Chronology, and discovereth that he wrote by a mere human spirit, according to his own confession in the shutting up of the book, wherein he craveth pardon for his slips and ouersights, & we see there was great need he should do so. Now from the former premisses I reason thus:

This fire discovered to Nehemiah, was kindled of God when he had built the Temple and the Altar.

But he never built the Temple and the Altar:

Therefore this fire was never kindled of God.

Again, the author of that book testifieth, that after Nehemiah had received this fire from God, the king of Persia built a Temple unto it: but we may truly affirm he never built any such Temple, forasmuch as y^e Jews neither had, neither indeed might have, any other Temple then one, and that at Jerusalem, before the coming of the Messiah, which the Lord had chosen to put his name there. It might be that the kings of Persia & that king in particular might build a Temple to fire, w^c they worshipped as God, howbeit this is spoken by way of supposition, and hath no relation to the fire here spoken off. Neither can this be understood of the Tēple at Jerusalem, but must be referred to some other built elsewhere if haply any were built at all. For it is said that after the Temple and Altar were built, and Nehemiah had offered sacrifice, this came to the ears of the king of Persia, and then he commanded this supposed Temple to be erected. Again, Nehemiah expressing his journey up to Jerusalem, and coming to the sepulchers of his fathers, maketh no mention of the finding of any such fire, which no doubt he would have done, if any such had been offered unto them. For he reporteth many & sundry things done by him in that book, he mentioneth their offering of sacrifices with great joy and gladness, chap. 12. how is it then that he omitteth this miracle? Doubtless if he had received so great & miraculous a benefit, he would not have forgotten it, neither indeed could without note of unthankfulness, which was far from that devout and religious man. Furthermore, the setting up of this miracle of the new-found fire hid in the pit, and after discovered by the Priests, and kindled by the Lord, is the weakening and shaking of a great mystery and foundation of the Christian religion. For it is written, that the Jews were stirred up by the Prophets to proceed cheerfully in building of the Temple, because the glory of that latter house should be greater then of the former, Hag. 2, 9, which prophecy is agreed upon to be fulfilled, in that Christ was borne while the second house stood, w^c he made famous and renowned by his presence, by his doctrine, & by his miracles, Luke 2, 46, & 7, 8. There also did the Apostles begin the preaching of the Gospel, which taking his beginning from Zion and Jerusalem, was spread abroad from thence into all the earth. Many were the privileges and perogatives of the Tabernacle framed by Moses, and of the first house built by Solomon; they had the fire from heaven, the Ark of the Covenant, the pillar of the cloud, the Vrim and Thummim, and the succession of the Prophets: but the second house built after their return from captivity wanted all these; therefore while it stood, the Messiah must come (being greater then all these) that through his presence, who was to be the ruler in Israel, Mic. 5, 2, the glory of the latter house might be greater then the former, and so the prophecy should be fulfilled. But if this story were true, which is broached by the writer of that book, the latter Temple should be more glorious and famous through this miraculous fire then the former, For in the former, the sacrifices were only consumed with fire, & that fire was sent from God, and nourished by the continual ministry and attendance of the Priests: but in the latter temple, they should have had not only the same fire with the other, but the fire preserved by a wonderful miracle, & that in a contrary element: yea, here are many miracles heaped together: for as that fire was preserved in water, so of y^t thick water (into which it was changed) was the fire kindled again, 2 Macab. 1, 22: and that which is more, when the sacrifice was consumed, Nehemiah is said to have commanded the water that was left to be poured on the great stones; whereby was kindled a flame which was consumed by the light that shined from the altar, verse 31, 32. And this is so apparent that the Jewish Rabbin's that have the veil before their eyes, or rather before their hearts, have acknowledged the truth hereof, that the 2 house had not that fire which the former had, contrary to the opinion of that writer. And yet notwithstanding the evidence of the former reasons and the confession of the Jews themselves, he sticketh not in the next chapter, to allege the Prophet Jeremiah, as if he had commanded them that were carried away to take with them the Tabernacle, the Ark and the fire, as hath been signified, 2 Maccab. 2, 1. But to leave all these assertions delivered with warrant, let us come to the doctrine offered to our considerations in the destruction of the 2. sons of Aaron, because they offered strange fire, to wit, that it is a sin & impiety, which the Lord leaveth not unpunished for any man in y^e outward worship of God, to decline from the Law of God. He appointed to burn every sacrifice with fire taken from the Altar, which was continually kept and nourished for that purpose. They altered God's ordinance, and are therefore stricken suddenly from heaven: so that it is a great sin for any Church or particular person to swerve from the Law of God in the worship of God, as appeareth by many examples & testimonies of holy Scripture, 1 Sam. 13, 12, 13, 14. 2 Chro. 26, 16, 17, 18. Math. 15, 9. Col. 2.20,21, 22.

The grounds are plain: first because the [Reason 1] word of God is the rule of all things that we are warranted to do, and more generally it is the rule of God's worship, so that to decline from this rule to the right hand or to the left, must needs be a great sin which GOD abhorreth, Deut. 12, 8, 13, 32. In an art to vary from the rules of the art is a great error; thr carpenter and mason are guided by their line and level; the Law of GOD is the square and rule of his worship: the more closely we keep our selves to this rule, the more warrantable are our works: if we decline and depart from it, we wander in error, and the farther we go from it, the more we are out of the way. Secondly, that starting and swaruing from the Law, reproveth and checketh the wisdom of God, who is Wisdom it self, Pro. 9, 1: as if we were able to direct him, and knew what belongeth to his worship better then himself. An artificer in his work cannot abide to be checked and controlled by those that know not so well what belongeth unto it as he doth: so the wise GOD, the supreme Lawgiuer cannot endure that men should decline from the order which he hath settled and established in his worship, and prescribed unto them in his Word, and therefore he accounteth it a great sin and impiety in any that attempt the same.

This reproveth the Church of Rome [Use 1] which is as a body infected with many diseases, and running sores. For their whole worship in a manner is an apostasy from God, full of dangerous wounds that cannot be cured, as we may see by their worshipping of images, prayer in a strange tongue, communion under one kind, and an hundred such like horrible corruptions, which are so many profanations of the worship of God. These men set the Law of God at naught, and think themselves wiser then he, and prefer their own traditions before his commandments, and so worship him by the precepts of men, Math. 15.6, which is a vain worship, and maketh his Law of none effect.

Secondly, it serveth as a direction to the [Use 2] Church what they receive, & to godly Magistrates what they establish by their authority, that in the worship of God they always set y^e law of God before their eyes, & allow nothing but that w^c is grounded vpō the rules of y^e same, y^t they add nothing to it, & take nothing frō it. For this cause the King must write him a copy of the Law in a book that it may be ever with him, that he may read in it all the days of his life, and learn to fear the Lord his God, Deu. 17, 18, 19. This was taught to Joshua, chap, 1, 8: and practiced by Josiah, 2 Chron. 34, 16. If they cleave to this rule, they must continue: if they have declined, they must return & cause others to return, and reform what hath been amiss. This the Pharisees acknowledged, when they said to Christ, By what authority dost thou these things, &c. Mar. 11, 28: and John. 1, 19, they said to him, Who art thou? what sayst thou for thyself? If it be in the Gospel of Christ, or in the books of the Prophets and Apostles, we must willingly receive it, and be guided by it: if not, we must refuse it, otherwise we bring upon our selves manifest destruction.

[Use 3] Lastly, it behooveth all private persons that live in a Church, wherein true Religion and the pure worship of GOD is established, to submit themselves to those things that are agreeable to the word, howsoever they be not agreeable to their affections. For as we must give obedience to the Scriptures, whether they speak as we would have them, or whether they speak not as we would have them: so in a reformed Church where a private man doth dwell, if anything be commanded by authority, either agreeing or not agreeing to our affections, yet if the same be agreeable to the Word of God, we must yield obedience unto it. If the Church command anything declining from the Law of God, he must be peaceable in refusing, and patient in suffering, remembering that the only weapons of a Christian are supplication to God and to man. Besides we must know thus much, that whosoever refuseth to obey that which hath been vniformely established and advisedly and moderately concluded by the whole, what private persons soever refuse to obey, had need to do it upon a sure ground, that the same which they refuse, is against the Law of God, lest it fall out with them as with those y^t Augustine speaketh off, who gloried that they suffered persecution, but it was for their faults, not for their virtues; so they that withdraw obedience, ought to do it with a good conscience and upon a sure ground, otherwise they can have no comfort in suffering, nor look for reward after suffering. There have always been some things amiss in the Church; and no Church is, or ever was so perfect, but somewhat may be found in it worthy reformation, so that Christ may say to it, as he did to the Churches of Asia, Habeo aduersus te pauca, I have somewhat against thee. The best Churches will quickly decline, as we see it fell out to those which were founded by the happy hands of the Apostles themselves that were the chief workmen & master-builders.

63 These are they that were numbered by Moses and Eleazar the Priest, &c.

64 But among these there was not a man of them whom Moses and Aaron the Priest first numbered, &c.

65 For the Lord had said of them, &c.

The conclusion of the whole chap. followeth in these words, wherein the former numbering is illustrated by place where it was, & by the persons y^t did number, & were numbered: all amplified by the contrary, that among all these there was not so much as any one man left alive, that came in the former account, but they were all of them dead & perished in the wilderness, except Caleb & Joshua. Here is a great blessing set down, & likewise a great judgment: a blessing in multiplying of them, a judgment in chastifying of them; thereby to teach us that God is faithful and true both in his promises and also in his threatenings. For he had promised to Abraham, that he would multiply his seed exceedingly as the stars of heaven: & he made this hauock of them, & brought this desolation upon them for their often murmurings & mutinies; wherefore by his promises let us be stirred up to faith & obedience, & by his threatenings be feared & terrified from sin. Moreover mark from this fearful example of a general disobedience or rather conspiracy against God, that it is not a whole multitude that can shelter themselves from God's judgments when they come upon them, though they be never so many or mighty. Though thousands, & thousand thousands muster together & join hand in hand, yet they are not able to deliver themselves. The reasons follow.

The Lord is just in all his ways, even in the works of his judgments. Now justice giveth [Reason 1] equal to them that are equal. If then all have sinned, as he is just in punishing one, so he will be just in punishing all. This we see in his casting down all the angels from y^e heavens that sinned, in drowning the whole world, in destroying Sodom & Gomorrhah, & infinite such like examples. Secondly, as he is just & righteous, so he is strong & powerful. Many men do well deserve to be called just, yet oftentimes they want power, as we see in Daniel toward Joab when he committed murder, complaining of himself that he was weak, & the sons of Zeruah (being martial men) were too hard for him. It is not so with God, he is as powerful as he is just, & therefore he will certainly proceed against whole multitudes, be they never so many or powerful, so that none shall be able to escape unpunished. Thirdly, the moe they are that offend, the greater is the offense, and the greater the dishonor done to God; no marvail therefore if he spare not to overthrow great companies in his wrath and sore displeasure. For as in a civil state, the greater the number of rebels is, the greater is the offense against y^e Prince: so it is in this case, the greater multitude of offenders, the greater the offence against God's, and consequently the greater judgment will fall upon them.

[Use 1] This serveth to reprove those that walk on boldly in their sins, & lift up their heads without fear, because they are many in number, & great in power, & thereupon think they shall be excused because they are not singular, & sin not alone. Alas, this will prove a slender comfort, when God shall come to take an account of us: certainly no more then this, that as we sinned not alone, so we shall not be punished alone. What benefit hath the thief that is going to the place of execution, to see a train of many others bear him company? Is his judgment any whit the less? or is his comfort any whit the more? So when the Lord shall come against those that have broken the covenant with him, & made a league with hell & death, what shall it help them, or ease them to go to hell with company, whereas the yelling and crying of one, shall rather add to the torment & misery of another? If you think God will the sooner respect us because we are many, we deny his justice, and deceive our selves. True it is, he is mindful of a few y^t serve him, and ready to show mercy to one of a City, and two of a Tribe that fear his Name. Though they be contemned & derided of the unthankful world, yet they are dear to him, and they come up in remembrance before him. When all flesh had corrupted their ways, he remembered Noah and his family, & saved eight persons, when he destroyed all the rest, Gen. 7, 1. So he delivered righteous Lot, when he overthrew the cities of the plain, and would have spared Sodom, if ten righteous persons had been found in it, Ge. 18, 32. On the other side, if multitudes trespass against him, and rush on in evil as the horse into the battle, he will not spare them for their multitude sake. It is a great encouragement unto many to walk in the broad way, because many there are that go in thereat: & they are much discouraged and terrified from entering into the strait gate & narrow way, because there be few that find it, & they shall have little company to go with them: but if we would consider the end both of the one & of the other, it were sufficient to make us wise unto salvation. It is a very notable & remarkable judgment that is remembered unto us, that fell vpō this multitude; & the exceeding goodness & kindness of the Lord only toward two persons of those six hundred thousand that were brought out of the land of Egypt; forasmuch as albeit he saved them from the hands of Pharaoh, yet afterward he destroyed them that believed not, Jude 5. Who doth not desire rather like Caleb & Joshua, to be had in everlasting remembrance, Psa. 112, 6, & to have our names written in the book of life, then to perish with the multitude, and to be cast into destruction?

[Use 2] Secondly, it warneth and warranteth the Ministers of God to be bold to reprove sin in all, though they be never so great and gracious in the world, though they be many, yea a whole multitude, yet if they be a sinful company, they have a commandment and commission given unto them to reprove them, without respect of persons, without care of the multitude, and without fear of their faces. This is a certain rule, a multitude may not stop our mouths from reprovng sin, and it serveth as a shield and sure defense for the Ministers against those that upbraid them for their faithfulness in their callings, asking them what they need to trouble themselves and the people by reprovng these and these things, do you not see that all men practice them? It is no matter who or what they are that offend, whether they be many or few, all or some; he is not to be silent because of the multitude, but is rather to open his mouth the wider, and to lift up his voice the louder. For if God's hand will not be stayed when great cities are sinful, & when the whole world corrupted their ways, but his judgments will certainly come according to our sins, the Minister ought not to be dumb and tonguetied, though a whole land be corrupt and sinful.

In the days of Noah all flesh became obstinate and disobedient, stiff-necked and abominable, yet he is made a Preacher of righteousness to reprove the world of sin, 1 Pet. 3, 20. If a Prince send forth his Herald to proclaim war against a company of rebels, shall the Herald, because he findeth them to be a great multitude, return back, and not pronounce the sentence, and yet think himself discharged? No certainly, he may not do so, but rather he should do it the more speedily and earnestly and boldly because they are a multitude: how then should the Minister hold his peace, and have his mouth stopped, because generally the times are corrupt, and the days are evil? whereas he should consider, that the more do sin, the more God is offended, dishonored, and provoked.

In the time of a general plague or infectious sickness, will any, well in his wits, or in his right mind, say to the Physician, Take no care to cure or recover any, it is a vain labor to go about it, for the plague is general. Is it not rather the honor of a Physician, that will still stay and do his endeavor, even then when the disease is dispersed and scattered far and near?

And shall it be thought the dishonor of the Minister of God, when the plague of sin is spread as a leprosy over all, that from the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness, but wounds and bruises, & putrifying sores, if he shall then lift up his voice as a Trumpet, and reprove sin with zeal and boldness? No doubtless, he ought to do it, & if he be faithful and painful in his place, he will do it, yea though he see little hope, when the evil is grown common and hath prevailed, & the hearts of the multitude through custom are hardened. For if the blood of one soul that perisheth, be a burden too heavy to be borne, how then shall he be able to bear the weight and the cry of the blood of many souls? If the blood of Abel, which was but the blood of the body, and that but of one only, did notwithstanding cry for vengeance against him that shed it: doubtless the blood of the soul, much more of many souls, redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, shall cry unto God, and bring wrath upon their heads that shed it, as water upon the earth. Forasmuch as they must answer for them if they perish through their negligence and ydleness. What though no repentance or reformation follow our reproofs, yet we must not give over, but continue constant in our calling, knowing that our labor shall not be in vain in the Lord, but our reward is laid up with God in the life to come to remain forever.

[Use 3] Lastly, it must teach and admonish us to take heed that we do not follow a multitude to do evil, nor be carried with the time as with a stream to commit wickedness; as if we must needs be safe and out of gun-shot, because we follow the multitude, and do as the most do. For it is never a whit the less sin, neither are less judgments to be looked for. In the government of a private family, if all the servants and children should conspire together against the governor of the household, shall their multitude joining in one, ever a whit excuse or lessen their conspiracy? No certainly, rather it will make the master of the family to be far more angry and displeased with them: so is it in this point; though they be many that rebel & rise up against God, yet they shall thereby nothing at all protect themselves from his wrath and displeasure. There are many thousands in hell, ordained of old to this condemnation, yet none of them hath the less torment, or the more ease, but rather the less ease & the more torment, because of the multitudes and thousands of them: so on the earth there are many desperate sinners, yet when once judgment cometh, they cannot by any means ease one another, who shall not be able to help themselves, and therefore it is one of the vainest things in the world for any man to deceive himself by following the corruption of the times, and by doing as the greatest part of people do. Be it that no extraordinary judgment come upon us generally or particularly, yet when we must die the common death of all men, and be visited after the common visitation of all flesh, & Satan shall come & charge us for our sins, what comfort can this minister unto us at y^t hour, to allege for our selves, that we have done as the multitude did, & have walked with them in the way that leadeth to destruction? And be it further granted, that we feel no check of conscience, or temptation of Satan, but end our days in peace, as one that quietly falleth asleep; yet when we come to stand before the seat of God, where every man shall bear his own burden, and receive according to his own works, Rom. 2, 6. 2. Cor. 5, 10: what comfort or confidence can this give us to plead for our selves, and say, O we have followed the multitude? Let no man therefore dally with himself, & so delude his own soul; for this must come to pass, we must all dy, and appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every man may receive the things done in his body, when the heavens shall pass away as a scroule, and the elements melt with heat. Be it some general plague donot come before in this life, or some particular judgment do not seize upon us, yet in the end we cannot escape, when everyone must answer for himself in his own person.

CHAP. XXVII.

1. THEN came the daughters of Zelophehad, the son of Hopher, the son of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, of the families of Manasseh, the son of Joseph, & these are names of his daughters, Mahlah, Noah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Tirzah.

2 And they stood before Moses, and before Eleazar the Priest, &c,

THE former Chapter hath opened unto us the order to be observed in the division of the land, that the greater tribe should have the greater share and portion in the land, & the lesser a lesser portion, thereby to give contentment & satisfaction to everyone: & this was to be done by lot to take away contention, which often ariseth in like cases & upon like occasions; as we see when some commons or wasteground cometh to be enclosed, one thinketh his fellow hath too much, & another thinketh himself hath too little; one will have his part lie in such a place; another thinketh that parcel the fittest morsel for himself. In this chapter observe two things; first touching the persons that should enjoy the inheritance, and of the right of succession: secondly, touching the designing and deputing of Joshua the servant of Moses, to be his successor, & to be set over the people, to conduct them unto the land, to fight the battles of the Lord, and to give to every tribe his proper inheritance. Concerning the first point, to wit, what persons should have inheritance, consider two things, the occasion of a question and controversy here arising, and the deciding and determining hereof, without any farther doubt or contradiction by the sentence of God himself. The occasion fell out in this manner. When the families of y^e tribe of Manasseh came among the other tribes to be numbered, five sisters, all the daughters of Zelophehad came likewise in their order, hoping to receive as the rest did, and thinking themselves as capable as any: but because their father was already dead, and left no heirs males behind him, some of their Tribe would have put them by their inheritance, that themselves might obtain y^e more, not regarding what they gained by the loss of others. A common evil of the world, a common practice of worldly men. These women being left fatherless, comfortless, and friendless, exposed therefore to injuries, and like to be ouerborne, finding few or none to stand for them and to take their part, complained to Moses, and to the rest of the Princes & heads of the people, which is the lawful remedy left unto us in all wrongs whatsoever. They do plainly declare the truth of their cause, & the equity of their request, that they were Israelites, of the seed of Abraham, of the Tribe of Manasseh, whose father died in the wilderness, not in the rebellion and conspiracy of Korah, Numb. 16, whose companies were worthily destroyed and disinherited; neither yet perished he in any murmuring of the people, neither for any public and notorious offense committed against God, but died a natural death when his time was come, as all men must die, inasmuch as all have sinned, Rom. 5, and therefore they show, that their kindred, their flesh and their bones, had no just cause to exclude thē from such inheritance as their father should have had if he had been alive. But of this, more afterward, both of the issue of their request, & the deciding of this question.

[The daughters of Zelophehad stood before Moses and Eleazar, and before the Princes, &c.] These women after the decease of their father were left as we say, to the wide world, and were like to sustain great wrong, to the prejudice both of their father, and of themselves and their posterity, and of the whole Tribe, when one family was like to perish in Israel. Here we see, that above all other, such as are left destitute of protection, as the fatherless, the widow, the stranger, the poor, and such like, lie open to receive wrongs and injuries. Such whose forlorn & distressed estate ought to move special pity and commiseration, even they are least regarded and relieved, Zac. 7, 10. Job 31, 21. Hence it is, that God promiseth to take care of them, and to protect thē, and to punish their oppressors, Exod. 22, 22, 23, 24. A great comfort to all that are in distress, to consider that God is on their side, he will be a father to the fatherless, and an husband to the widow. These daughters of Zelophehad appeal to the Magistrate: they do not side themselves with others to make a commotion, as turbulent spirits use to do, but they go to Moses as supreme, and to the Princes under him. Whereby we learn, that in all wrongs and injuries we must go to the Magistrate, and seek help of him, we must make our causes known to him, and seek remedy and redress at his hands. This hath been the practice of God's servants from time to time. Hereunto cometh the Parable of the wise woman of Tekoah, when she pretendeth that one of her sons being slain by the other, the whole family rose up against her to deliver her son that was left her, that they might kill him for the life of his brother: she appealed to the king to be delivered from the avenger of blood, 2 Sam. 14, 11. So 2 Kin. 6, 28, & 8, 3. The Shunamite having left her house and country thorough famine, and in her absence some encrochers seizing upon her land, at her return, to whom goeth she, but to the King to have the same restored? and he sent an Officer, as it were the high Sheriff to put her in possession again, and took order that they should make restitution unto her, both of her house and land, & all the fruits and revenues thereof, since the day she left the Country. See more, Ester 7, 3. Ier. 38, 8, 9. Act. 23, 20, 21.

The Reasons. First, because God hath instituted [Reason 1] & appointed Magistrates to this purpose. It is properly the office of God to be the revenger of wrongs, and to do justice to all, but he hath left Kings and Princes to be his Lieutenants, and set them to supply his place, not to enrich themselves, but for the good of the people, as Rom. 13.4. He is the Minister of God for thy wealth, & not for his own. Secondly, men are oftentimes constrained, especially the faithful, to receive many great wrongs & injuries, from them whose might is as great as their malice. If then Princes were not to be nursing fathers and nursing mothers to y^e church, they must many ways undergo much danger and displeasure, much hurt and oppression: & thus doth Ester reason, ch. 7, 3, making petition for her people, and her own life, For we are sold, I and my people to be destroyed, to be slain, and to perish.

This reproveth all private men, that forsaking [Use 1] the means that God hath left, will be Magistrates to themselves, like Peter, who when his Master was wronged, drew the sword and smote off the high Priests servants ear, howbeit he is reprov'd of Christ, Mat. 26, 51. This is the disorder that Solomon complaineth of, Eccl. 10, 7. What then, will some say, [Object.] shall we suffer our selves willingly and willfully to be trodden under foot as blocks, and be exposed as spectacles and gazing stocks for everyone to insult over us? I answer, No: [Answer.] God hath not left us merely in the hands of evil men, but hath appointed us to resort to the Magistrate. But some will say, [Object.] we have complained to them oftentimes, and we find no remedy; they are deaf and will not hear; they are partial, and will not understand; they are careless, & will not help. Answ. [Answ.] Be it so: yet we must not be as malecontents to right our own cause, but rather continue from time to time to solicit the Magistrate, albeit he will not do it at the first, yet he may repent and do it at the last. We see this in the poor distressed widow mentioned in the Gospel, remember her example, Luke 18, 3, 4, 5: she came to an unjust Judge, and said, Avenge me of mine adversary; and he would not for a while, but afterward he said, Though I fear not God, nor regard not man, yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming and importunity she weary me. Thus it ought likewise to be with us. [Object.] But it will be said, They are oftentimes wickedmen, they look for bribes, and therefore we have little hope to have help for them. So was the judge to whom the poor widow complained. [Answ.] So was Ahasuerus wicked, or else he would never have sealed and set forth so bloody and barbarous a decree for the utter subversion of the Jews; and besides he was an idolater and an infidel; yet Esther petitioned unto him, and obtained a gracious answer: and they found a great calm after a great flaw of wind and weather that threatened shipwreck. So had Pharaoh hardened his heart against GOD and his people, and was no better then the former, yet would not Moses and Aaron give him over. So was Caesar a profane Prince, yet Paul appealed unto him from his own countrey men the Jews, Acts 25, 10. If any say, [Object.] we have waited long, and yet can find no redress; but matters rather grow worse and worse, and we are every day farther from succor then before. I answer, [Answer.] then we must know thus much; that God calleth us to suffer, thereby to try our patience and obedience; as we see in the example of the Israelites, oppressed by the hard dealing of the task-masters, when they find no release or redress, they sigh to God and groan in spirit, and waire his leisure. In this case it is our duty to submit our selves to his heavenly pleasure, remembering what the holy and constant martyrs suffered, and what the Apostle saith, Phil. 1.29. Unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe in him, but also to suffer for his sake, and 1. Pet. 2.19. And if supplication to men will not serve our turn, let us turn our selves to God, and make our supplication to him. And as Paul appealed from the Jews to Caesar, so let us appeal to an higher Court, from Caesar to God.

[Use 2] Secondly, it is the duty of all Magistrates to deal justly and truly, knowing that they carry the Name of God, so that their place is the place of God, and their judgment is the judgment of God. They must be so far from doing wrong, & taking away the goods of other men, as Ahab did the vineyard of Naboth, 1, King. 21, 16, that they ought to restore to everyone his right, as Jehoram did to the Shunamite, 2, King. 8, 6: and Nehemiah to the people, chap. 5, 11, 12. Job was a man endued with great power and authority, Job 29, 7, 8: as well as with much wealth and substance, chapt. 1, 1, 2: and yet he telleth us, chap. 31: that he never withheld the poor from their desire, neither caused the eyes of the widow to fail, verse 16: he never saw any perish for lack of clothing, or any poor without covering, verse 19: he never lifted up his hand against the fatherless, when he saw he might help him in the gate, verse 21: and before, chap. 29: he testifieth that he delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless and him that had none to help him, verse 12: he became eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame; a father to the poor, and the cause which he knew not he searched out, verse 15, 16: he brake the jaws of the wicked and plucked the spoil out of his teeth, verse 17. Here is a looking-glass for all magistrates to behold, and a picture to look upon, and a watchword to admonish them what to do; the oppressed should be relieved, and the oppressors should be restrained and bridled. Happy are such magistrates, that thus regard the people; and happy are the people that have such magistrates. The blessing of such as are ready to perish shall come upon the heads of such magistrates, and the loins of the distressed shall call for and bring down mercy upon them & theirs that thus do show mercy. Let all that have the calling of Job, and sit in the gate and in the place of justice and judgment, be like unto him; and let them not fear the faces of men, but be bold in the cause of the poor, or rather in the cause of God. And let me say to them, as God doth to Joshua; Be strong and of a good courage, be not afraid neither be dismayed, for the Lord your God is with you, whithersoever you go, Josh. 1, 9. Hence it is that the Scripture teacheth, how such as are set over y^e people should be qualified, and with what virtues they ought to be adorned, Exod. 18, 21: first, they must be such as fear God; this is the beginning and fountain of all other graces; where this is once rooted and grounded in the heart, it is as a bank that keepeth out all evil, and maketh them not to fear the faces of men: wheresoever and in whomsoever it is not yet planted, there is room for a legion of all impieties to enter, as Abraham showeth, Gen. 20, 11: The fear of God is not in this place, and they will slay me for my wives sake. Secondly, they must be men of truth, wherein they resemble the God of truth: the contrary will transform them into the image of Satan, who was a liar from the beginning, and the father thereof, John. 8.44. This should be the end of all their hearing and determining; this is the mark they ought to shoot at, that truth may be brought to light, which is sought to be covered and smothered in darkness. Every false sentence in judgment is an open and public lie, and turneth the seat of justice into a sink of iniquity, and overturneth the ordinance of God. Thirdly, they must be men hating covetousness: for the desire of money is the root of all evil, and a bribe blindeth the eyes of the wise, and casteth dust or rather dung in their faces, that they cannot judge righteously between a man and his brother, nor pronounce sentence without partiality. But they ought to have clean hands and a pure heart, that they may do no unrighteousness in judgment, forasmuch as they must not respect the person of the poor, nor honor the person of the mighty, Levite. 19, 15. Psal. 82, 3, 4. 2 Chron, 19, 6.7. These things must be learned and practiced of them.

Thirdly, from this ground we may be assured, [Use 3] that it is not in it self unlawful to go to Law, and to sue even a brother if just cause require; if he may be accounted a brother that giveth just cause of prosecuting the Law against him. I say it is in it self lawful, because the best things may be abused and corrupted; and lawful things may be perverted, if they be used unlawfully. To try our right is a right thing; and to use the Law is nothing else but to appeal to the magistrate; and to appeal to the magistrate is to seek help of God. [Object.] It will be objected, that Paul reproveth the Corinthians, in that a brother goeth to Law with a brother, 1 Cor. 6, 6: and again, I speak it to your shame, is it so, that there is not a wise man among you, no not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren? [Answ.] verse 5. I answer, he reproveth not the thing it self, but the corrupt affection and practice of those that used or rather abused the Laws, whose sin was hereby also aggravated, that they did it before the infidels, who thereby took occasion to mock at Christ, and to contemn the Christian Religion, to see the professors thereof to be given so eagerly to prosecute their profits, that for every toy and trifle, yea for the wagging of a straw would trouble the courts and seats of judgment. This doth discover a contentious spirit, and a mind altogether given to cavil and contend, a custom too common in many, howbeit nothing beseeming the Christian Faith and holy Religion which they seem to embrace. Again, it argueth an heart set upon revenge, which ought to be far from all the faithful, who ought rather to be ready to forgive, as they have received forgiveness. [Objection] Secondly, it may be objected, that Christ saith, Math. 5, 40. If any man will sue thee at the Law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. [Answ.] I answer as before, he only condemneth the usual dealing of men, where they go to Law and sue one another in spleen and desire of revenge for trifles and things of no value; and besides he speaketh comparatively, rather then we should seek a private revenge, we should be ready to suffer a new wrong, and be furnished with patience as with armor of proof, not only to be stripped of one garment, but to endure the loss of other temporal goods. To conclude therefore, we must be assured, that as it is lawful to seek help of the magistrate, so it is lawful to seek the benefit of the Law, provided that we use it lawfully. To this end we must know how the Law may be used lawfully. First, we must not use it of pleasure or wantonness, or of custom, as the manner of many is, who are never well but when they are in Law; but we must use it sparingly, as we use Physic, not as meat and drink.

No man will use Physic every day, but he keepeth a better diet. It is meat and drink to some to go to Law, and they are never quiet till they have quenched their thirst by undoing others and themselves. Secondly, it must be used upon necessity, when the case cannot otherwise be decided. They say commonly, a bad end is better then the Law. If then we may end our controversies without troubling the magistrate, we ought not to refuse that means. Thirdly, we must not propound to our selves as the end of our suites, to be revenged of our neighbor: for then we shall never carry upright hearts in that which we do. Fourthly, we must not go to Law for trifles, the matters must be of moment and importance, for which we contend. Fifthly, our end must not be to undo one another, but to obtain our own right. Lastly, we must not be given to strife and contention, and in an humor seek occasions to begin and breed quarrels, 1 Cor. 3, 3. Phil. 2.2. It must be our wisdom to cut off occasions from them that seek after them, and to stope the flood-gates where the waters seek their passage. For when contention is once raised, it is not easily stopped, and therefore ere it be begun, let us prevent it.

Lastly, from hence all persons have direction [Use 4] what to do, that live under the government of others, even in private houses and families. The Law of God and man allow not, nay they condemn the common practice of brawling, fighting, quarrelling, or challenging one of another into the field for private and personal wrongs, whereby the seeds of murder and shedding of blood are sown, which soon grow up to ripeness and perfection, and yield a doleful harvest of sorrow and repentance when it is too late, if they be not weeded out of the heart betimes. Whosoever shall think it a disgrace to refuse such challenges, let them also think it a disgrace to walk in the ways of God, and to obey the good Edicts of Princes, and the wholesome laws of the Commonwealth. It is the greatest grace that can be, to yield obedience to God; and contrariwise, it is no credit to sin against him, to save and salve up a supposed honor and reputation among men. It is the duty therefore of all that live in private societies, when they have hard or wrong measure offered unto them, to go to their fathers or masters; for they are Magistrates in the house, and are within their own doors as Kings to rule, and Officers to govern, and no man ought to revenge his own cause and quarrel: he is as a Marshal to right every man's cause that is under his roof, and to maintain their credit and reputation. The causes of these duels are evil, sometimes pride & vain-glory, sometimes covetousness and greediness of gain, and the cause of all these causes, the devil himself, who was a murderer from the beginning. The effects thereof are no better, for they cause deadly feudes, breed hatred never to be appeased, nourish contention and confusion, hinder prayer and holy exercises of Religion, shed man's blood made in the Image of God, and bring down the vengeance of God upon our own heads. For how often do such quarrels begin with brawling, and end in blood; which once being spilled, cannot be gathered up? Let all such therefore as either challenge, or accept of challenges consider this point, that he which killeth, maketh himself guilty of execrable murder before God, and the blood so shed crieth as it were with a loud voice against him to heaven, and never ceaseth till it hath called down vengeance: and touching him that is killed, let him know, that he is no better then one of the martyrs of the devil. For as God hath his Martyrs that die in his cause, so the devil also hath his martyrs that die in his cause: and such as shed their blood are the devils executioners, and no better. We can hold no other opinion either of the one or of the other, neither of him that killeth, nor of him that is killed, whatsoever they think of themselves, and therefore let them look to it, that are so prodigal of their lives, or of the lives of others.

3 Our father died in the wilderness, and he was not in the company of them that gathered themselves together against the Lord in the company of Korah: but died in his own sin, and had no sons.

4 Why should the name of our father be done away from among his family, because he hath, &c.

5 And Moses brought their cause before the Lord.

In these words the daughters of Zelophehad plead their own cause to have their part in the division of the land, & not to be shut out from their inheritance. The plea is good and well grounded; and they use sundry reasons of no small importance. First, because their father died in the wilderness in his journey toward the land of Canaan, and therefore the same inheritance that was due unto him being alive should not be denied to his issue, being dead. For seeing he died in the way before any of the Israelites could take possession of the land of promise, he could leave to his daughters nothing but the promise of GOD and a lively faith apprehending the same, which no doubt was truly grafted in them, or else they would never have been so earnest in this matter, but have let it alone till the conquest of the land, and the displanting of the Canaanites. They plead that he was not partaker with Korah in his conspiracy, but died in his own sin, that is, as all other men do, and must do that are sinners, forasmuch as the wages of sin is death, Rom. 6, 27. Now under this conspiracy of Korah here expressed, we must understand all other mutinies of the same nature, that he joined not with any in their rebellions, neither was partaker with any seditious persons whereby he should deserve to be excluded from his possession of the land. If any ask, [Object.] why this conspiracy of Korah is named and singled out above any of the rest of the murmurings which were many, and of many: I answer, first because this was late and yet fresh in remembrance. Secondly, [Answer.] it was more eminent then any of the rest, and as it were swallowed up the memory of all the former. Thirdly, because it seemeth he died at the same time that Korahs treachery brake out, and therefore he might more easily be thought to be destroyed with them. But though he died at the same time, yet he died not of the same crime, as likewise it fell out that Methushelah died immediately before the flood, it might be after it began to rain upon the face of the earth, but was not swept away with the flood. And here it is not to be forgotten, that some of the Hebrews (as also we noted before, chap. 15, 21) are of opinion, that this Zelophehad was the man that gathered sticks upon the Sabbath day: others think, that he was one of them that died by the biting & stinging of the fiery serpents, chap. 21, 6. But the purpose of his daughters was to bring to their remembrance, that their father had committed no act, whereby his issue should be denied or debarred of their inheritance, because he died a natural death, and went the way of all flesh, and when he had served his time was gathered to his fathers. An other reason is, because he left behind him no sons or heirs males of his body lawfully begotten, whereby it might and would come to pass that the name of a family in Israel should perish, if no portion of the inheritance were assigned to his daughters. In all this plea we may perceive in them a notable example of honoring parents, in that they are careful that the Name of their father should not be buried in perpetual forgetfulness, but be honourably remembered & preserved, which all ought to follow. Likewise an example of faith believing the promise of God: for except they had assured their hearts, that God would perform his promise, and make good the words of his own mouth spoken to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, they would never have made such earnest suite, that they might be heirs also of that land by right of succession, in which as yet they had not the breadth of a foot; and therefore the Apostle teacheth, that faith is the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen, Heb. 11.1. Thirdly, we see that we may be made partakers of other men's sins, and therefore we heard before, that the people were commanded to depart from the tents of Korah and his partisans, lest they should be defiled by the evils of those evil men, Tit. 3, 10, 11, 2 Cor. 6, 7. 1 Tim. 5.22. This may be done many ways: sometimes by counsel and persuasion; and thus was Achitophel guilty of the rebellion of Absalom against his father, 2. Sam. 16: and Balaam of the whoredom of the Israelites, because they committed fornication with the daughters of Moab by his counsel, Numb. 31: sometimes by commandment, as Herod the great sent forth and slew all the male children that were in Bethlehem, Math. 2, 16: and so did Herod Antipas behead John the Baptist in prison, Math. 14, 22: thus was David guilty of the death of Uriah his faithful servant, and is therefore himself charged to have killed him with the sword of the Ammonites, 2. Sam. 12: sometimes by consent, and so was Saul guilty of y^e martyr Stephens death, because he consented to his death, Act. 9, 1: and they that sate in judgment to condemn Christ, to whō Joseph of Arimathea would not consent; and therefore cleared himself from his blood, which otherwise he could not have done, Luke 23.51: sometimes by flattery, as those that call evil good, and good, evil, Isaiah 5: such are the ministers that sow soft cushens under every elbow, Ezek. 13: and such people as would have the Prophets to prophesy flattering words unto them, Isaiah 30: sometimes by receiving, as they that take and lay up stolen goods, or buy them of those that have stolen them, these are as bad, if not worse then the thieves themselves, and to be punished as they are; likewise they that receive false tales to the hurt of their brethren, though they do not first devise them, Levite. 19, 16: sometimes by partaking with thieves, and sharing with them, as Prov. 1, they took part of that which was stolen: sometimes by defending those that have done evil, and justifying them in their ungodliness, Rom. 1: sometimes it may be done by holding our peace, and saying nothing at all, when we may speak and clear a matter; so is he a false witness that will not speak in the cause of the dumb, as well as he that uttereth an untruth: thus also is the watchman guilty that should give warning and blow the trumpet, but becometh as the dumb dog that cannot bark, Isaiah 56, 10. Lastly, by not resisting or withstanding, when we are able, Psal. 82, 4. If God give us power, & we make our selves weak, the evil that we suffer shall be required of us. Likewise in the example of Moses, we learn to have recourse to GOD in all matters of doubt; we must not run on upon an head, but go into the Sanctuary, and ask counsel of the Lord. Lastly, observe, that sin is the true cause of death mortality, corruption, and all the misery that hath taken hold of all mankind; when sin entered, then entered all plagues and judgments in this life, and after this life, Gen. 2, 17, & 3.19. 1. Cor. 15, 21, & 11, 30: Rom. 5, 12, 21. James 1, 16. Hebrews 9, 27, 28.

[Reason 1] For sin is the sting of death, that is, the power and strength, and the very armor of death, it is as a sword which he holdeth in his hand to wound us withal. It is as a stinging serpent, 1. Cor. 15: and if remedy be not sought against the biting of it, it woundeth soul and body to death. Secondly, it standeth with the justice and righteousness of God, which will not otherwise be satisfied. We see how Magistrates, whose breath is in their nostrils, do punish malefactors and offenders with bodily death, their eye doth not spare them: no marvel then if the Lord (who is a consuming fire, Heb. 12.) whose person is of infinite Majesty, take hold of soul and body, and punish them both spiritually and eternally; and therefore the Apostle justly calleth death the wages of sin, Rom. 6.23. Thirdly, sin hath pestered and poisoned our nature, corrupting all the powers and parts in us, our mind, our will, our memory, our affections, our conscience, Eph. 4, 17, 18.19. Rom. 6, 12, 13. It is as a worm that is always gnawing at the root of life, until tree and all fall down. Lastly, sin giveth strength to Satan the prince of darkness, without which he could not hurt us, it is he that hath power over death, Heb. 2, 14. 1. Cor. 15, 56: and therefore was the Son of man manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil, 1. John. 3, 8. But it may be objected, if sin be the cause of death, [Objection] how cometh it to pass that Christ died, who knew no sin, in whose mouth was no guile found? [Answ.] Answ. Though Christ were without sin in himself, yet he that knew no sin, was made sin for us, &c. he took upon him the sins of all y^e faithful, as a surety taketh upon him the debt of another. And albeit he were not a sinner by transgression, yet he may be said to be a sinner by imputation, and therefore he must die, yet so, that dying (having no cause of death in himself) he might destroy death, and him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, Heb. 2, 14, Hos. 13, 14. Again, [Object] if death be a fruit & effect of sin, how cometh it to pass that the faithful, which have in Christ remission of sins, do notwithstanding dy? [Answ.] Answ. Albeit they have forgiveness of sins, yet they have in them always the relics of sin through the corruption of nature, though it be not imputed unto them through the mercy of God. The guilt of Adams sin followeth us, as the shadow doth the body, it cannot in this life be wholly purged; it shall be at the last clean put off by death. It is necessary therefore that we should die or be changed at the last day, that sin may be utterly extinguished, & that we may by death as by a door enter into everlasting glory. Sin is every day lessened and consumed in the faithful, howbeit still we bear about us the body of death, Psal. 51, 5, 2 Cor. 12, 7, Eph. 2, 3.

We learn from hence what a horrible and hideous thing sin is, that bringeth with it such bitter fruit; for sin & death are coupled together, Rom. 8, 2. Sin came not in by creation, Eccl. 7, 31, but by transgression; for from the beginning it was not so. Sin hath wrought this confusion, even the first sin of Adam, which also is our sin. Now there are four things that do continually and distinctly cleave to sin, the fault, the guilt, the blot, and the punishment. The fault is the offense committed against God in the action, which is the root of all the rest. The guilt is an obligation to punishment for the fault and offense which we have committed. The blot or spot thereof is as it were a mark or print set and branded in the soul of him that sinned, when he groweth to an hight in wickedness, like the mark that was set upon Cain when he had killed his brother. For the multiplying of offensive actions is the continual increase of the blot or blemish of the soul, til in the end the light of nature be utterly extinguished, and men come to a reprobate sense, and grow to be past feeling, through the blindness of their minds, and the hardness of their hearts. Even as the dropsy man, the more he drinketh, the more he dryeth; so the more a man sinneth, the more he is given to sin. As the covetous person always desireth to get more, so the sinner always desireth to sin more, and to work all uncleanness with greediness. The punishment it self is the wages and just recompense of all the former, which is the first & second death. The first death is a separation of the soul and body: the second, a separation of the whole man from God: for as the soul is the life of the body, so is God the life of the soul. Know therefore and acknowledge from hence, that it is an irksome and bitter thing to provoke him by our sin, which driveth away his comfortable presence from us.

[Use 2] Secondly, this teacheth that none can escape death, by strength, or policy, by friends or fraud, or by any occasion, in as much as all are sinners, even from their mothers womb unto the day of their death, Psal. 58, 3. & 51, 5. Gen. 8, 21. Job 4, 17. & 15, 14. & 25, 4. It is a fearful and cruel tyrant, an outrageous and wasting enemy that maketh spoil and havoc wheresoever he cometh, sparing neither young nor old, rich nor poor, Prince nor people, good nor bad, Psal. 89, 48. It standeth us therefore in hand, to account of every day as our last day, and to know that every moment may cut off the thread of our life, so that we are suddenly gone, & are no more: & we must prepare for it continually, our whole life should be a meditation of it. Again, we must pull out of our hearts this false conceit and imagination, whereby every man naturally blesseth, and notably deceiveth himself, and thinketh, though he have one foot in a manner in the grave, yet he shall not die this year, but he may live one year longer, as the rich man was in a pleasant dream, & did forecast for many years, Luke 12, 19. And yet alas we know not what shall be tomorrow, I am. 4, 14, no nor what one day may bring forth, Pr. 27, 1

[Use 3] Lastly, let everyone labor to take away the power and strength of his own death. And to this end we must deal with it, as the Philistines dealt with Sampson, they never gave over till they had learned where his strength lay, Judge. 16, 5, 6, and then they quickly weakened him, and prevailed over him, who before had prevailed over them. So ought we to do, we must know wherein the strength of death consisteth, & that is in sin only. Take this away by repentance from dead works & faith in Christ, and you shaue off the seven locks of it, that is, you shall weaken it, that it shall never be able to hurt you. So many sins as live and reign in us, so many stings hath death, which serve to wound our souls to eternal death. If then we would die the death of the righteous, let us endeavor to the utmost of our strength to live the life of the righteous. Then we shall lay a good foundation that shall never be shaken, and build our house upon the rock; we shall begin our eternal life in this mortal life, and have our conversation in heaven while we walk upon the earth, Phil. 3, 20. Let us beware of putting off the time from day today, & whatsoever we would do at the last gasp & groan when we are dying, let us do the same every day while we are living. The most wicked when he seeth he is presently to leave y^e world, will seem desirous to pray, though he never prayed in his health, and to require others to pray for him, and haply those whom before he contemned and derided, & their prayers also; then likewise he will promise and protest amendment of life, & make solemn vows & covenants with God. Let us therefore do this daily, which these men do at their last day, that when death cometh, we may be found ready and prepared with oil in our lamps, like the wise virgins, Math. 25. To conclude, he that would live when he is dead, must die when he is alive, and there is no way for us to come to life, but first to enter by the gate of death.

6 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

7 The daughters of Zelophehad speak right: thou shalt surely give them a possession of an inheritance among their fathers brethren, &c.

8 And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a man die and have no son, &c.

9 And if he have no daughter, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his brethren.

The deciding of the former question, being referred by Moses unto GOD, followeth in these words, wherein he returneth his answer consisting of two parts, the one special, the oath general: the one respecting the time present, the other the time to come. The special belongeth to the cause of these five sisters. God approveth their suite, & requireth that an inheritance should be given to them all, so much as their father should have inherited, if he had lived longer. The accomplishment of this designment is afterward related, Josh. 17, 3, 4, &c. where he performeth this Commandment of the Lord. The general ariseth upon the former particular case, and this belongeth to all the children of Israel, wherein God determineth in what order they shall inherit. Now these are the degrees. First, the nearest heirs are the heirs males, a man's own sons. Secondly, if he have no heirs males, his daughters shall be his heirs. Thirdly, for default of such issue, the inheritance shall go to his own brethren; for after his children, his brother is next in nature and blood unto him, therefore if his own children fail, his brother must be his heir. Fourthly, if he have no brother, then his fathers brethren, his vnkles. Lastly, if his father have no brethren, the inheritance must descend to the next kinsman whatsoever he be of his tribe and family. Here a question may be asked, whether this law bind in conscience all Nations and persons forever? And many things may be said of it and for it, as most equal and the voice of nature it self. Nevertheless all things considered, [Answ.] I rather take this law to be among the Iudicials that do not necessarily tie all places & persons to the performance of them. Hence it is, that it is said afterward, verse 11, that it is a statute of judgment: and to whom? not to all Nations, but to the children of Israel: so that though some of their judicial and political laws do bind, yet all do not, as we see in Exodus, where they are handled in the 21, 22, & 23, chapters. Secondly, this law appointeth that the inheritance must of necessity pass from one to another, from the father unto the child, &c. without any interruption: if then this order must hold as a perpetual ordinance forever, it should be utterly unlawful to sell a man's inheritance for any cause, or upon any occasion, or to buy a man's inheritance, because the Jews were as well tied to that; and if they did, it must return to the owner again at the year of Jubilee, as we read in many places of the Law of Moses, Levite. 25, 23, 24, & Numb. 36, 8: and it appeareth farther in the practice of Naboth, 1 Kings 21, 3, when Ahab required of him his Vineyard, either by way of sale or exchange, he answered, The Lord forbid it me, that I should give the inheritance of my fathers to thee. Thus doth God ordain, that every man's Land should keep and continue within his own tribe, and not pass from tribe to tribe, which would bring much confusion, and an intermingling of one tribe with another; all which were peculiar to this people. Thirdly, God ordained it as a statute also in Israel, that the eldest should have a double portion of all that a man hath, because he is the beginning of his strength, therefore the right of the first borne is his: this is grounded upon the same reasons that this is, & yet who accounteth this precisely imposed upon all as a moral ordinance? Nay, some of good note and name in the Church, are of opinion, that they should receive the best portion that are best, and inherit most, that have most grace in their hearts; and therefore they take not this precept to be as a president to bind all posterity. And if this do not necessarily bind, why should the former? Fourthly, the words of the law in this place do not seem to me as a law of annexing the inheritance to these, that it should not be lawful to alter this course. It is said, if a man die and have no son, or if he die and have no daughter, then shall the inheritance descend thus and thus: but this hindereth not, but a man while he liveth, may by will or otherwise make conveyance of his estate, and this law is nothing against such conveyance. Lastly, we find that the Israelites themselves did sometimes give inheritance to their daughters, even while they had heirs males, as appeareth in Caleb, Judge. 1, 15. 1. Chron. 2, 18. Solomon was not the eldest son of David, yet he succeeded his father in his kingdom, and had more then all the rest. To conclude, if grace must have the first place, & virtue must make the heir, then nature must give place to grace. But to leave this doubt, let us come to the Doctrine, for hereby we learn, that the propriety of goods is the ordinance and blessing of God; he hath appointed that men should have their possessions peculiar to themselves in this life. So did Abraham buy a possession for burial, and paid for it currant money among Merchants, Gen. 23, 16: he laid no claim to it before he had purchased it, as if it had been no less his thē any other. The Patriarchs challenged as proper to themselves the Welles which by their own labor and industry they had digged, and complained of wrong and violence when they were taken from them, Gen. 26. To this end did God appoint, that every Tribe should have inheritance given them by lot. Hence it is also that we read that the faithful have had possessions, and retained their possessions, and are said many of them to be exceeding rich, to have possession of flocks, possession of herds, and great store of servants: and others are said to become great, to have silver, and gold, and jewels, Gen. 26, & 24; as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Obadiah, and infinite others. In the New Testament we read of John the Evangelist, of Joseph of Arimathea, a Disciple of Christ, who honored the burial of his Master; of Lazarus raised up by Christ, & his two sisters; of Simon the leaper, of Ioanna, of Susanna, and these lived in the days of Christ, and had possessions. After his ascension, many believers sold their possessions, Tabitha was full of good works, Cornelius the Captain gave much alms to all the people, Philemon and Philip, and sundry others; all which professing and some of them preaching the Gospel, are nowhere commanded to abjure their possessions, and to renounce their houses and lands, neither did they betake themselves to a supposed community, knowing that private possession and Christian profession stand together, and do not one overthrow the other, as hath been plentifully declared elsewhere.

[Reason 1] The grounds of this doctrine are very apparent. First, God approveth of buying and selling, or else the first Christians might not have sold their possessions, and taken money for them; and they did alienate them from them, not because they could not lawfully be possessed, but because the poor should be relieved, Act. 4, 34. The Lord likewise giveth rules in the Law for the right ordering thereof, Levite. 25, 15. Secondly, God commandeth almesgiuing to the people as an holy and Christian duty, which he also promiseth to reward to a cup of cold water, Matth, 10. and everywhere he commendeth the relieving of the wants and necessities of their poor brethren, & threateneth the contrary, Deut. 15, 11. Thirdly, he forbiddeth stealing and wronging one of another in temporal things, and hurting one another in their goods, Exod. 20, 15. As also the defrauding one of another, Mark 10, 19. Lastly, every man hath his children proper to himself, every man knoweth his own children, and can say, These are mine, these are not mine. Now children are part of their fathers goods, as appeareth Job 1: As then they are proper unto every man, so also ought other goods, that every man may know his own.

[Use 1] This reproveth the Anabaptists, y^t would bring in a communion, or rather a confusion of all things, who while they go about to make all one, they set all out of order; & while they think to establish perfect charity, they bring in a perfect Anarchy. These sectaries are the disciples of Plato, not of Christ, whose opinion was rejected by the Philosophers themselves, and convinced by natural reason. This doctrine serveth to no other end, but to burden one, to ease another: and to set some at work to maintain others in idleness. The grounds whereupon these stand, I have propounded and answered in other places. As for the practice of the godly in the Apostles time (which is pretended to maintain this heresy) it cannot serve their purpose, forasmuch as this community was merely voluntary, imposed upon none but such as imposed it upon themselves, Acts 5, 4: and so far as the necessity of the poor Saints required it, which caused them to stretch themselves beyond their ability, least the poor being tempted with the extremity of poverty, should slide back from the Christian verity (which they had embraced) to the Jewish Ceremonies. This y^e church never practiced but in extreme necessity, and therefore they never took it up before, neither do we read that they continued it afterward.

[Use 2] Secondly, albeit God hath given unto everyone a propriety of possession, yet we must take heed that we do not make the things of this life more proper and private then he hath allowed. Many while they shun one rock, make shipwreck at another, and while they would avoid the Anabaptistical fancy, they have quite forgotten and buried all Christian charity. For as they will not renounce a right in all things they possess, so they will give nothing of their own: and because they cannot abide to hear to have all things common, they will be sure to retain all as proper to themselves. These can abide well enough, nay they are much delighted to hear the Anabaptists confuted, while themselves wander as wide out of the way on the other hand. But we must know that God hath set up one to help another, and given to one, to give to another, Mar. 14.7: Ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good, but me ye have not always. To this end we are to consider, both who ought to give, and to whom we ought to give. Touching the first, who ought to give, it is much mistaken by many men: for we think for the most part, that they only are bound to give, that have some superfluity, which they know not otherwise what to do withal, except they should cast it away upon the poor; or at least such as are landed men, or well monied, or rich farmers, that have much to spare. Howbeit I must give you to understand, that this duty stretcheth farther then to such persons as are before described: and therefore we must know that liberality should extend even to the day laborer, yea to those that sometimes may be in want themselves, yet sometimes & in some cases they ought not to be handfast, but ready to communicate and to distribute, albeit not when themselves do want. Likewise the servant that taketh wages, and hath but little, should not be behind hand to give of that little. Christ our Savior lived of such relief as the faithful gave unto him, and received maintenance from those whom he instructed, Luke 8, 3: yet that which he received, he received first for himself and his disciples, and then for others also; and therefore of that allowance he gave allowance to those that were in great need, John. 13, 29. The poor widow in the Gospel is commended, who of her penury shown charity, and cast into the Lord's treasury for the Lord's sake two mites, Luke 21, 4. It was in it self a small thing, the seventh part of one piece of their brazen money (for then they used much brass money, Math. 10, 9) howbeit to her it was a great matter; yet she being poor gave to the poor, nay being very poor she gave thē that were very poor. Other rich men gave of their superfluity, but she of her penury: they of their abundance, but she cast in all the living that she had. The widow of Sarepta in the time of a great famine throughout the land, when the heaven was shut for three years and six months, Luk. 4, 25; having nothing left but an handful of meal in a barrel, & a little oil in a Cruise for her and her son, yet was ready to part from part of that little part and portion to the Prophet, 1 King. 17, 12. The Apostle doth direct such as labor for their living to be painful in their places, not only that they may maintain themselves, and not be burdensome to others, but that they may have to give to them that needeth, Eph. 4, 28. The church of the Macedonians (as it is evident by the Scriptures) was a poor Church, and in necessity themselves, yet they do not make themselves poorer, as the manner of many is, that they may cunningly get relief from others, but they send relief to other churches, and prayed with entreaty that their gift might be received, 2 Cor. 8, 4. & yet the Apostle speaketh not only of their poverty, but of their deep poverty, ver. 2. Al which examples are laid before us to teach, that everyone, even of mean ability, not only those y^t are rich, but others likewise, should show compassion, & be ready to distribute. And as we have seen who ought to give, so let us see to whom we should give, that our alms may be accepted and rewarded of our father which is in heaven. Some will not give anything at all: some give not where they should, and others bestow where they should not; they are liberal where they may be sparing, and are sparing where they should be liberal. If then any ask to whom we ought to give? I answer briefly, to the poor and such as stand in need, whom God hath made as it wer his collectors and receivers: and thus we must understand y^e words of Christ, Luk. 6, 30. Give to every man that asketh of thee. We must not give alms to the rich, and to them that may give unto us again, for that is no charity: we must not give to our friends and kinsfolkes only, but even to our enemies, Ro. 12, 29. If thine enemy hunger, give him meat: and if he thirst give him drink. Not to the idle that will not labor, nor yet to maintain any in idleness, nor to those that live only by the sweat of other men's brows, 2 Thes. 3.10, 12: not to stout & sturdy beggars, that as rogues go vagrant up and down the country, such as are members of no society: such as have their limbs and strength to labor: these are indeed no better then thieves and robbers: and as they that give to the former sort maintain them in idleness; so they that give to these maintain them both in idleness & wickedness. As then we see unto whō we ought not to give, so we must know to whom we ought to give. These are poor widows and fatherless children, 1 Tim. 5, 16: such as are poor strangers; such day laborers as work hard for their living all y^e week, and yet cannot either thorough weakness of their body, or greatness of their charge, get things necessary and sufficient for them; and of these we shall always have with us to the end of the world. Mat. 62, 11, Such also as are fallen into decay by inevitable losses, Leu. 23, 35. Lastly, such as are weak and impotent, whether through age or other blemish, whether in their feet, or in their hands, or other parts, that thereby though they be willing, yet they are not able to take pains for their living, Acts 3.2, 6. but amongst all these, they are especially to be respected, that are of the household of faith, Gal. 6, 10. If we be careful and mindful of these, God will recompense us again, and pay us home seuenfolde into our bosoms whatsoever we have given, both in temporal, spiritual, and eternal blessings.

Lastly, it is our duty to acknowledge God's [Use 3] great mercy toward us in the blessings of this life, that he hath given to us that which he hath denied to many others: and when he giveth unto us a comfortable use of these blessings, we must confess we have them not by our own labor and industry, but by his special goodness towards us, Psal. 127, 1, 3. and therefore we ought to sanctify our daily pains with daily prayer, and begin and end our labors with remembering him that remembereth us, and so praise his goodness that enableth us to get goods: and this shall make our labor sweet and pleasant, and the yoke that lieth in our necks to be light and easy. Again, as God giveth them, so he giveth a blessing with them, a blessing with a blessing, that is, bread and the nourishment of bread, For a man liveth not by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, Deut. 8. Moreover as he giveth outward blessings, so he can take them away when it pleaseth him, even in a moment, Job 1, Luk, 12.

22 And the Lord said unto Moses, Get thee up into this mount Abarim, and see the land which I have given unto the children of Israel.

13 And when thou hast seen it, thou shalt be gathered unto thy people, &c.

14 For ye rebelled against my commandment, &c.

Here followeth the second part of the chapt. touching the successor of Moses in the government of this great people: wherein observe the occasion & the calling of Joshua. The occasion is double, the death of Moses at hand, & his request to God to appoint a man to be set in his place. Touching his death, he is willed to go up to mount Abarim, and to behold the land that God had given to the Israelites: for God had foreshowed that he should see y^e land with his eyes, though he did not tread on it with his feet: & when he had seen the land, he should dy as Aaron his brother before him chap. 20, 24, amplified by the cause, they had not sanctified the name of the Lord at the Waters of Meribah, of which we have spoken before.

Touching the prayer and request of Moses, he desireth of the Lord y^t he would appoint a fit Ruler over his people to succeed him in this government, that might be able to bear this great burden. For hearing the vnchāgeable determination of God, & humbling himself under his correcting hand chastising his transgression, he is not afraid of the sentence of death being at hand, and seeing it before him, neither doth he crave to have the stroke thereof prolonged and delayed, neither is he troubled with excessive cares for himself and his children and posterity, as the manner is of worldly minded men, that mind nothing but the earth and earthly things when they must go out of the world, & shall have their mouth full thereof: but all his care was for the future benefit of the people to leave them in good estate after his departure. This should teach us after his example to be ready to leave the world whensoever God calleth us, not to stand in fear of death, but to be willing to go to God, knowing y^e we shall go to an inheritance immortal, that fadeth not, 1 Pet. 1. and we must all likewise be careful to leave our houses & places in good state when we are gone, of w^c we have spoken before, chap. 20. Moses was the deer servant of God, yet sinning he is punished. The Lord himself received his soul, and buried his body, Deut, 34, 6, 13. He was in high favor with God living and dying, an excellent Prophet to whom God spake face to face, yet he was not suffered to enter into the land of Promise. Whereby we see that many want the Sacraments, that are partakers of the truth and substance of the Sacraments. He entered into the heavenly Canaan that was not permitted to enter into the earthly. Some are admitted unto the outward sign, that never receive the thing signified, so was Judas to the Passover, as well as Peter and the rest of the Apostles, yet he was never partaker of the Lamb that taketh away the sins of the world, John 1, 29. On the other side, some take not the outward sign, that neuerhesse partake the inward grace.

The uses hereof are to teach us, that y^e outward [Use 1] and inward parts of the Sacraments, are not necessarily joined together, so that he which partaketh the one should also partake the other, and therefore the outward sign doth not simply confer grace.

Secondly, it condemneth the Church of Rome, that holdeth that children dying without baptism are not saved, whereas salvation is not always annexed to the sign: so that though infants want the outward washing, yet to them may belong the kingdom of heaven, Mark 10, 14.

Lastly, it serveth as a great comfort to such as desire to come to the Sacraments, & yet are hindered, sometimes by sickness, and sometimes by other inevitable occasions that procure their absence; forasmuch as we see in this example of Moses, that we may be partakers of the truth of the signs, and yet be barred or banished from the signs themselves. In such cases as these, God accepteth the will for the deed, 2 Cor. 8, 12.

Again, we learn by the examples of Moses and Aaron, that were not suffered to enter into Canaan, a figure of the heavenly Canaan, this truth, That many are temporally punished which are not eternally condemned. Many are chastised in this life, not only with diseases and sicknesses, but with death itself, who notwithstanding are saved in the day of the Lord. This appeareth in Lots wife, Gen. 19: she looked back contrary to the commandment of the Angel, and was turned into a pillar of salt. Her offense might seem little at the first, and the punishment to be ouergreat: howbeit we must not measure sin by the outward act, but by the commandment and will of God, which is the only rule of righteousness. This her disobedience seemeth to proceed from infidelity, unthankfulness, curiosity, and the immoderate love of the world, & of the substance which they had left behind; and therefore she is punished and made as a mirror and monument of God's justice, which Josephus testifieth to continue to his time: yet we doubt not but her soul was saved, and she received to mercy. The like we might say of Job's childred, they were all suddenly slain by the fall of the house wherein they were assembled, yet they gave good testimony of their godliness in their life; for as no evil is recorded of them in the Scripture, so it appeareth they were well taught and trained up in the fear of God by their careful father even in the days of their youth; God heard their father when he prayed for them, when he sent for them, they came dutifully and obediently unto him; & if they had despised that God whom their father worshipped, he would not have said, It may be my sons have blasphemed God, and it had been a vain thing for him to speak to them of sanctification. Moreover, if their banquettings & feastings had been like our Wakes and revels, which they commonly call Yeauals, or drunken feasts of such as call themselves good fellows, he ought to have forbidden their meetings, and not to have prayed to God to pardon their sins w^c they might commit in their meetings, and thereby suffer them to live in the continual practice of sin, forasmuch as that were to mock and dally with God, not desiring pardon for sin past, but to crave free liberty to sin for the time to come. And if the father had doubted of their saluatiō, no doubt he would have bewailed their destruction. Lastly, it is to be noted that they feasted in their own houses; they did not run to Ordinaries, or haunt Ale-houses, or frequent Taverns, neither did they feast every day like the rich glutton, whose daily dinners were daily feasts, for he did nothing else but feast every day; neither did they keep company with ruffians, swearers, drunkards, swaggerers and such like, but they invited one another to witness their good will, and to continue mutual love among themselves. The like we might say of Uzzah that stayed up the Ark, and was stricken with sudden death, because he laid his hand upon the Ark, 2 Sam. 6, 7. So was it with Uriah the faithful servant of David, yet he was slain by the sword of the Ammonites; 2 Sam. 11, 17. Josiah that good king served the Lord from his youth, yet died he a violent death, and was slain by Pharaoh Nechoh at Megiddo, and all the people of the land mourned for him, 2 Kings 23, 29.

[Reason 1] Thus doth God deal with his own children oftentimes: they are chastised in this world, lest they should be condemned with the wicked in the world to come, 1 Cor. 11, 32. Secondly, those whom God loveth, he loveth unto the end, John. 13: inasmuch as all his gifts are without repentance, Rom. 11. & therefore temporal chastisements cannot alter his love, or make frustrate the gifts that once he hath bestowed upon his children. Thirdly, even his own people sin against him, for in many things we sin all, James 3, ver. 1. and therefore when they sin against him he chastiseth thē with death as with a rod, howbeit his mercy he never taketh from them. Thus did Josiah offend, he would not hear the word of the Lord which was brought unto him, & therefore he was smitten by the hand of God.

[Use 1] This teacheth, that it is a false rule and a deceitful measure, to judge of the salvation of men by temporal things, whereas commonly all things fall out alike to the godly & ungodly, Eccl. 9, 12. Many there are that will take upon them to judge and censure: men to be out of the favor of God, because sometimes they die suddenly, and sometimes strangely: and contrariwise if they die in their beddes quietly and calmely, they conclude that they must necessarily be the children of God, for that cause only. But if we have no better testimony to discern a child of God then this note, we may soon be deceived: for this may often happen more by the nature of the disease, then through any grace in the soul of the diseased. The constant course of a man's life, is the best witness what is in man. A man may die raving, and haply blaspheming, and yet be the servant of God, by the violence and rage of some sickness disturbing the head and the brain. For as Paul saith, It was not he, but sin that dwelled in him, Rom. 7, 15: so I may say, it is not they that rave and blaspheme, it is the force of their sickness, to which they do not consent: and again, a man may go away like a Lamb, and yet die out of God's favor, and go to hell, as Job chap. 21. verses 13, 14.

[Use 2] Secondly, this reproveth the Popish sort, that commonly condemn Zwingli a sound defender of the true and Apostolic faith, because he died in the field, as a good Patriot against the enemies of his country. He did no more then every true Minister and faithful man ought to be ready to do. He was slain with the sword of wickedmen, but that death was an honorable death: He exhorted the people to constancy in the faith, as the Priest is commanded in the Law to do, Deut. 20, 23 It is no reproach to die in a good cause, and a just quarrel. If he had died as Sanders an arch enemy to the Queen and State, died in Ireland in the rebellion which himself had procured, who died distracted and in a frenzy, to behold the hand of God gone out against him and all his plots and projects crossed, O what outcries would these men then have made! he died as a Traitor against his lawful Prince in the Popes quarrel, and was in the field against his own Sovereign; whereas Zwingli died with his own Cittizens in a good cause, and was lamented of all good men.

Lastly, we must take heed we do not judge [Use 3] rashly and rigorously of the Churches sorrows and afflictions, albeit they seem oftentimes both strong and strange, when God feedeth them with the bread of tears, & giveth them tears to drink in great measure, Psal. 80, 5. The dead bodies of his servants have the enemies given to be meat to the fowls of the heaven, and the flesh of his Saints to the beasts of the earth, their blood have they shed like water, and there was none to bury them, Psal, 79, 2, 3, 4, 5. Nevertheless, they shall not be able to separate them from God,

Rom. 8, 35. If we be the children of God, nothing shall be able to hurt us: though death come upon us suddenly, as it hath done upon many, it shall bring us to God, not divide us from his presence. We do for the most part take upon us through a general corruption to judge those the most grievous sinners that suffer the greatest sorrows, as it appeareth by Job's friends, and Christ's followers, Luke 13. howbeit this is an opinion that must be rejected, as full of error, and empty of charity.

15 And Moses spake unto the Lord, saying:

16 Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set a man over the congregation:

17 Which may go out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out, and which may bring them in, that the Congregation of the Lord be not as sheep which have no shepherd.

18 And the Lord said to Joshua, &c.

19 And set him before Eleazar, &c.

Here is offered unto us, the second occasion of the election and inauguration of Joshua, to wit, the prayer of Moses. We must not think that he used no more words then here are expressed: for this is only the substance and chief effect of his prayer. In it we are to note: first the preface or entrance into the same: for, no man ought rashly to enter upon this holy work, but well advised and thoroughly prepared. Secondly, the prayer it self.

The Preface containeth a description of God by his titles and effect, giving life and breath to all creatures, for thorough him we live and move, and have our being, Act 17.28. The prayer it self is, that he would appoint a mā over the congregation to succeed him in the administration and government of the Commonwealth, considered farther by the ends, y^t being endued with the Spirit of God, he may be able to perform the duties of his calling, and go before them by his example, expressed by going in and out before them, and by leading thē out, and bringing them in, as Solomon prayeth for wisdom and understanding for the same purpose, 2 Chron. 1, 10. & 1 Chro. 27, 1. Secondly, that the people may not be as sheep without a shepherd, scattered upon the mountains but may keep together, live in order and society one with another, to perform such mutual duties as are required for this life, & the life to come.

Thus much of the occasions: now we come to the calling of Joshua, and separating him to bear office among the people, wherein we must observe the commandment of God, & the obedience of Moses. The commādements of God are many, Take him, &c: lay thine hands upon him, set him before Eleazar the Priest, &c. give him charge, &c. and Eleazar must ask counsel of the Lord for him after the judgment of Vrim and Thummim, Exod. 28, 30, What this Vrim and Thummim were, is diversely understood: it were endless and fruitless to rehearse the several opinions of all, neither is it easy to determine. Some of the Hebrew Doctors think they were not the work of any Artificer, but that they were a mystery delivered to Moses from the mouth of God, or they were the work of God himself, as the two Tables of the Law were, and that when the Priest asked counsel of God by Vrim, he made answer by lively voice, 1 Sam. 30, 8. The words are both plural, and the Septuagint do translate them, The manifestation and the truth, but properly they signify the lights and the perfections: and both of them were a figure of Christ, who communicateth unto us from his father the true light and perfection, being made our wisdom and righteousness, 1 Cor. 1.30: for in the heart of him being our great high Priest, the true Aaron, were the gifts of the holy Ghost without measure. John 3, 34. Col. 2.3. Again others think, that as those words, holiness to the Lord, were graven on a plate, and put on Aaron's forehead, so these words, Vrim and Thummim were likewise graven on a golden plate, and put in the breast lap which was double, for something to be put therein. Lastly, others think they were no other then the precious stones spoken of Exod. 28: and that they put the Priest in mind of his office, that he must instruct the people both by the light of his doctrine, and by the integrity of his life. But whatsoever they were, it is most certain, that the use of them was to enquire of GOD, and likewise to receive an answer of his will, as appeareth in this place and in sundry others, Judge. 1, 1, & 20, 18, 28. 1 Sam. 23, 9. & 10, 11, 12. These were lost at the captivity of Babylon, and wanted at the people's return, Ezr. 2, 63. Neh. 6, 65: neither do we read that ever God gave answer by them anymore: thus much of these. The obedience of Moses is set down generally & particularly, he did as the Lord commanded, he took Joshua and set him before Eleazar, and put his hands upon him, & gave him a straight charge to execute his office faithfully in the government of all the people committed unto him.

[Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh] This is the preface or preparative to the prayer. The faithful were always wont to make some entrance or introduction into this holy exercise, as it appeareth in the form of prayer left to the church by Christ our Savior. In these words Moses acknowledgeth the Lord to be the God of the spirits of all flesh, as before chap. 16, 22: whereby he meaneth, that he is the Creator of our souls, and hath given them unto us. The doctrine; God is the Creator and maker of the souls of men, and hath given unto them not only their bodies, but also their souls, Gen. 2, 7. Job 27, 3. Eccl. 12, 7, &c. And how can it be otherwise?

For first, he it is that hath formed all things, [Reason 1] he is the creator of things visible and invisible, Col. 1, 16, that are in heaven or in earth, and without him was nothing made that was made, John 1, 3. Secondly, he is the father of our spirits, so called of the Apostle, Heb, 12, 9: if then he be the Father of them, doubtless he is the former of them. It is confessed that God is the Creator of the soul, nevertheless it will not follow from hence necessarily, that it is created immediately, or given immediately by him, as it is certain it was at the first creation. And albeit many places be produced to prove an immediate creation, yet the opinion is rather weakened by those testimonies, from whence it is thought to be established, as for example, Eccl. 12, 7: The soul returneth to God that gave it. For the question still remaineth vndecided, whether God give it immediately or not: that God gave it (which is all y^e wise man saith:) every wisemā acknowledgeth: but how and in what manner, by means or without means, remaineth yet in doubt as before. The opposition made in that place between the soul and the body, rather proveth the contrary: for as the body was of the dust, so is the soul of God & his gift. But how is the body of the dust? not immediately, but of the Parents: so that it is apparent that Solomon hath relation to the first creation of Adam, of whō it is true, that God formed man of the dust, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul, Gen. chap. 2, verse 7. I purpose not to enter into this controversy, much less take upon me to define, whether the soul come by traduction or by infusion, whether from the parents or from GOD, a question much debated both among ancient and moderne writers; wishing rather all men to be wise with sobriety, & to content themselves to know, that it is given of God, and to be his Title, to be the God of the spirits of all flesh, and to consider what uses we may make of it.

First, this serveth to overthrow diverse errors [Use 1] and heresies touching the soul, raised up in former times to trouble the Church, & to destroy the faith. Such were the Sadducees, who held that spirits were only certain qualities or accidents, but no substances at all, nor having any subsistence of themselves, Acts 23 8. We learn on the contrary side, to acknowledge that the soul is a creature of God, as the body is, and a thing essential (as also the heavenly Angels are) and liveth when the body dieth, as may be easily proved by infinite testimonies of holy Scriptures: for this is the more noble part of man, created, but yet immortal; invisible, but yet subsisting. Solomon saith, It returneth to God that gave it: Christ our Savior commendeth his spirit into his Fathers hands, Luke 23, 46. So Stephen prayeth, Lord Jesus receive my spirit, Acts 7, 59. Thus do they make GOD the keeper and preserver of the soul, when once it is delivered out of the prison of the body. They then that make the soul nothing but a blast or breath, or a certain power infused into men's bodies but such as hath no essence or substance, are grossly deceived and mistaken exceedingly.

[Use 2] Secondly, it is our duty to yield obedience to God both in body and soul, and to submit our selves to him in all things, especially under the Cross, even when the flesh is most prone to murmur and rebel, Hebr. 12, 9. If we must yield reverence to our fathers, of whom we have received our bodies, then should we be subject to God, of whom we have received our souls. The Apostle chargeth us to glorify God in our body and in our spirit, which are God's, 1 Cor. 6, 20. they are both his, and therefore both are to be given to him agine.

[Use 3] Thirdly, the soul being from God, it cometh nearest to his essence, whereby we bear his Image, and resemble him in knowledge & wisdom, and therefore it is a most precious substance, more worth thē all the bodily creatures of the world; for when the body returneth to the dust, the soul goeth to God that gave it. The Prophet saith, Psal. 49, 7, that no man can redeem his brothers soul, or pay a sufficient ransom to God for him, it goeth beyond his power and ability. All the gold & treasure in the world cannot equal one soul in value. The murdering of the soul is the highest and most horrible murder that can be, and it is the greatest sin to destroy a man's soul, Math. chapter 16, verse 26: on the other side, to save a soul, is one of the best works, and that which shall receive the best reward, Dan. 12, 3.

Lastly it belongeth to us to have the greatest [Use 4] care of the soul: for as it excelleth the body, so the care of it should exceed and surmount the care of the body. The Scripture oftentimes calleth men from the excessive and immoderate care of the body, to which we are too much inclined, Math. 6, 25. 1 Cor. 7, 32. Rom. 13, 14, that we may have care of the soul, and set our affections upon heavenly things. [Object.] But are we to cast off all care of the body, and to mind nothing but heaven & the provision for the soul? Nay, not so: [Answer.] GOD hath made the body as well as the soul, therefore the body is to be regarded as well as the soul. I say as well, though not as much. As then Christ saith, This must be done, but the other must not be left undone, Matth. 23, so the soul is especially to be regarded, but the body is not to be neglected. Besides, the body is as the Tabernacle and instrument of the soul: the tabernacle of it, to dwell in it: and the instrument of it, to work by it, and therefore the soul cannot do the duties proper unto it, except the body prosper and be provided for. Howbeit our chiefest care ought to be for the soul, that it may live to God in this life, and live with God in the life to come. If our greatest care be to adorn and decke the body, it is most certain we are careless of the soul.

[Verses 17, 18, 20. Which may go in and out before them, &c.] In these words we have the sum and substance of the prayer of Moses, and of the commandment of God unto him touching Joshua, which I will join together, that we may end this Chapter; for of laying on of hands, mentioned verse 18, and 23, and of asking counsel of God, we have spoken oftentimes before. Moreover, we have here many particular points offered unto us touching Magistrates and Subjects: as that God appointeth none to serve in any calling, but he furnisheth him with sufficient gifts for that calling; as it is said, Joshua is a man in whom is the Spirit, that is, the gifts of the Spirit fit for government. As when Saul was appointed & anointed to be king of Israel, he was after a sort changed into another man: and Moses is here willed to put some of his honor upon Joshua, verse 20. When it is said, he should go in and out before the people, we learn, that Magistrates and men that be in authority ought to be examples in all good things to their people, & not give themselves liberty to do what they list, verse 17. And when the reason is rendered, lest the people should be as sheep without a Sheepheard, we learn, that that people is in a most wretched estate, where they have no Magistrates to go in and out before thē, Judge. 17, like a flock of sheep without a Shepherd. By this similitude also our Savior expresseth in what fearful condition the people are that have no Ministers or teachers to instruct them, Matth. 9, 36: for as the one sort are in danger of the destruction of the body, so are the other of the loss of the soul: whereby subjects should learn to be obedient to their Magistrates, & to be thankful to God where he hath set them, and under them to profit in the ways of godliness, lest for our unthankfulness and other sins they be taken away from us. But the point which is chiefly here intended, is this, That Magistrates have their calling, and hold their places immediately from God for the good of the people, 2 Chro. 9, 8. Solomon was set in his throne by God himself, not by the high Priest or the people, Dan. 2, 21, 37. It is said of David, that God chose him to be King, he delighted in him to make him King, 1 Chron. 28, 4. He chose him from the sheepfold to feed his people Jacob, and Israel his inheritance, Psal. 78, 71. It is said of Saul, The Lord hath anointed thee to be Governor of his inheritance, 1 Sam. 10, 1. God said to the Prophet touching Hazael & Jehu, Annoint Hazael king of Syria, and Jehu shalt thou anoint king of Israel, 1 Kings 19, 15. So then, they hold of God in chief, and not of men.

[Reason 1] The grounds hereof follow. First of all, the Scriptures call kings the Lieutenants and ministers of God, Rom. 13, 4. There is no power but of God, the powers that be, are ordained of God, &c. For he is the minister of God to thee for good; and not only so, but they are called gods on earth, Psa. 82, 6. Exod. 22, 28, because they sit in his place, and are to execute his judgments.

[Reason 2] Secondly, they are bound to give an account only to God, and not to man: for as they are next and immediate to God, and inferior to none but to him, so for all their actions they shall reckon with him. The officers sent out by him, the Judges that execute justice, the Ministers and all that preach the Gospel, and all that rule in the Church, in Commonwealth or in the house, must give an account to him, but he to none, saving to him that hath called him. Tertullian saith well, He maketh him Emperor, who made him a man before he was Emperor: from him he holdeth his Scepter, of whom he hath his soul. [Object.] But it may be objected, that Peter calleth it an ordinance of man, 1 Pet. 2, 13: Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake. If then it be an human ordinance, how may it be divine? I answer, [Answer.] the magistrate is so called, not because men are the authors of it, or may dissolve it: but first, because men do execute it, not God or the Angels. Secondly, because it is ordained for the use, benefit, and profit of men, it is ordained for men, as Heb. 5, 1. So we may say of the King, he is taken from among men, and he is ordained for men.

[Use 1] This reproveth the Church of Rome, together with the great bishop, & mighty advancers of that See, that give temporal power to the Pope, and make him the soueraign Monarch of the earth, as if all the world were one body, and he the soul that quickeneth, moveth, nourisheth, and upholdeth that body; or as if Kings and Princes held their temporal possessions, dominions, and iurisdctions of him, as it were their land in Capite: and as if that proud bishop had power to cite these as his subjects or vassals, judicially to appear before his Consistory. Howbeit y^e Pope himself hath no more then he can claim from Peter (if so much:) neither can Peter have anymore then he can derive from Christ. But Christ himself while he lived upon the earth took upon him no temporal jurisdiction, he refused to be made a king, John 6: he refused to be a Judge in civil causes, and in dividing inheritances, Luke 12, 13. He paid pol-money as others did, Matth. 17: he submitted himself to the judgment of Pilate, and commanded all to give unto Caesar the things that are Caesars; Mat. 22. This was the doctrine of Peter, & his example also. What then? shall the servant be above his master? or will he that calleth himself the servant of servants usurp that which neither Peter the supposed founder of that supremacy, nor yet Christ himself ever challenged or usurped? The answer of Bellarmino to this is to be marked, which is as the egg, whereof the treasons and rebellions were hatched that have abounded in these last days. For he and his fellows sound out the trumpet of sedition, and secretly instill damnable poison into the hearts and ears of their hearers and readers, that Christ refused to divide the inheritance, lest the office of the Prelacy should be stained with such base and abject Offices: and that Peter submitted himself to Caesar, because then he was weak and not able to recover his right: but if he had been strong enough he would never have yielded to him. I answer first, it is no base calling to be a judge of inheritances, it is an honorable place to sit in the courts of justice, and in the seat of judgment. Again, as Christ refused to be a Judge, so he refused to be a king also; & taught them that his kingdom is not of this world. Is it a base office to be a king? or dishonorable to rule a kingdom? Besides, as he refused civil honor, so he performed civil subjection, and thereby acknowledged his obedience and homage unto Caesar by his doctrine & practice. Wherefore, it is certain he refused to deal in these causes, because they were not befitting his calling, who came to preach, not to rule: to divide the word aright, not the wealth of the world. Secondly, where they teach y^t Peter putteth the church in mind of obedience, because it was not then able to resist, this is to despise government, to arm the subject against y^e prince & to make way for treasons & insurrections; and is contrary to the doctrine of the Scriptures, and the practice of former times, as we have shown at large elsewhere.

Secondly, it reproveth such as teach, y^t Princes [Use 2] excommunicate by the Popes sentence, are not to be obeyed, and that their subjects are discharged of their oath of allegiance toward them so long as they lie under that censure. But the Apostle willeth that obedience should be yielded even to wicked and idolatrous Princes, such as are enemies to the Gospel of Christ, and that for conscience sake, Rom. 13, 5. The Christians in the primitive Church wanted not number nor strength to have resisted and deposed Pagan Emperors, as Tertullian teacheth; for they had filled every town and city, every campe and corner, yet they never stirred or offered to make insurrection, but offered themselves to be killed: for Princes hold their Crowns and Scepters by the gift of God, and therefore none but he that gave them can take them away from them. They were accountable to him, but to no mortal man whatsoever: and therefore David said, To thee only I have sinned, Psal, 51, 4. And this teacheth them a good lesson, to remember that they must one day appear before the judgment seat of God, and plead before his bar guilty or not guilty, as now their subjects do before them. This then is the Regal tenor to hold immediately from God, to whom they must do homage and fealty for their Crowns and Kingdoms. It is not unknown what exorbitant courses the Bishop of Rome hath taken, exalting himself from a Christian Pastor to be an Antichristian Pope, and from a Pope to a temporal Prince, and from a temporal Prince to be a supreme Monarch over all, and to have omnipotent power as a vice-god on earth. Such Almain-leapes in good time (there is good hope) will break his back, nay his neck: and free the Christian world from his yoke and bondage, worse a thousand times then the slavery of the Israelites in Egypt, when God shall open the eyes of all Christian Princes to see his usurped ambition & dominion; which God grant for the glory of his Name, and the salvation of the poor people that are held in more thē Turkish captivity.

Lastly, we must acknowledge, that Magistrates [Use 3] are of great necessity, forasmuch as the end of their Office, is the good and benefit of the people, over whom they are placed, Lam. 4, 20. They serve as a comfortable shadow, to preserve us from the scorching fires of raging persecutors, like the gourd of Jonah, which came over his head, to deliver him from the heat of the Sun, Jonah 4, 6, 8: which serveth to condemn the Anabaptists, which cannot abide any government or governors; whereas we must learn to pray for them, and to be subject unto them, which are the Lord's Shepherds over his flock, without whom nothing is to be seen but miserable disorder & confusion of all things, Judge. 18. For a Commonwealth without a Governor, is as a body without an head, as a ship without a Pilot, as an army without a Leader, or as an house without a Ruler. The loss of a good and godly Prince, is a great loss, and greatly to be lamented, 2 Chron. 35, verse 24. Zach. 12, verse 11.

CHAP. XXVIII.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2. Command the Children of Israel, and say unto them, My offering and my bread for my sacrifices, &c.

3. And thou shalt say unto them, This is the offering made by fire, which ye shall offer unto the Lord: Two Lambes of the first year without spot, day by day for a continual burnt offering.

4. The one Lamb shalt thou offer in the morning, and the other Lamb shalt thou offer at even.

5. And a tenth part of an Ephah, &c.
6. It is a continual burnt offering, &c.
7. And the drink roffering, &c.
8. And the &c.

MOSES having set down the numbering of the people, proceedeth to handle the laws under which they ought to be, whereof some belong to Church-matters, and some to the Commonwealth, some sacred and some civil. Such as are holy have the first place, and that worthily, which order showeth, that the Commonwealth can never be well established, until the Church be rightly ordered. The first and chief care is to be had of the Church, and afterward of the civil state & Commonwealth. They begin at a wrong ende that begin with matters of policy, as if a man should be very careful to look to the body, but be careless of looking to the soul, or should have regard to the foot, and utterly neglect the head. It was evermore the manner of the godly & religious Kings of Judah, to begin first with Church-matters, and looking to religion, and ordering the preaching of the Word and administration of the Sacraments, as we see in David, Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, and Josiah. So did Zerubbabel immediately after their return from captivity, as we see in the book of Ezra.

[Reason 1] And no marvel, for true religion is the soul and life of the Commonwealth, without this it cannot prosper and flourish, but is as a dead carcass without life, it may carry a goodly show, and seem to promise peace & perpetuity, but it is not well grounded, and will deceive in the end; witness the Monarchies of the world, which all received their decaying and declining in their times & seasons, of which before, chap. 3.

Secondly, true religion is that only which instructeth all sorts in true obedience, & teacheth them to perform their duties, which is the means to establish a Commonwealth, & to order it aright, when everyone knoweth his standing, and no man encroacheth upon the calling of another, and the contrary bringeth confusion.

Thirdly, everyone is charged to seek the glory of God above his own good, and to set up him before our selves. For as he will not give his glory to any other, so we ought to take heed we do not rob him of it. But when we have the first care to establish matters of religion, then we show that we are zealous of his glory.

First then they are deceived, that think it [Use 1] enough to make laws for preservation of public peace and tranquility, that every man may keep and enjoy his own, & that wrongs and injuries may be suppressed and banished. The chiefest care ought to be of God's service and worship, otherwise our Commonwealths shall differ little or nothing from the states and governments of the heathen. Here then is a lesson for all Law-givers, if they desire to have Christian Commonwealths, to begin with Christian religion, and look to the Church, and there lay a good foundation. He that would build an house to stand against storms and tempests that will beat against it and seek to bear it down, will be sure to begin with the foundation, & make sure work there: so such as desire to have a flourishing Commonwealth, and all estates as a goodly building to grow up and prosper in it, must make religion the foundation, and then it shall be sure to stand, because that is as a rock that shall never fail nor fall.

[Use 2] Secondly, hereby also we may try our selves whether we belong to God or not; if in the first place we regard duties of piety and godliness, and be more careful to fear God thē to fear man, then we are truly religious, and may assure our selves we are true members of the church. We must make him our fear, who is able to cast body and soul into hell, Matth, 10, rather than man, who can but kill the body, if kill the body, John 19. Let everyone of us therefore be more careful to settle our consciences in the true fear of his Name, then to settle our estates in earthly and transitory things, remembering that godliness is profitable to all things, and hath the promises of this life, and of the life to come, 1 Tim. 4, 8, and that if first of all we seek the kingdom of God, all other things shall be ministered unto us, Matth. 6, verse 33.

Lastly, it serveth to reprove mere civil [Use 3] men, that regard nothing but to live civilly among men, but never regard to know God, & to glorify his Name. So far do the Turks & Infidels go; but except our righteousness exceed theirs, we cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Our first and chiefest care ought to be of Religion, but these have no care of it at all. They regard the praise of men more then the praise of God.

[Ye shall offer unto the Lord two Lambs of a year old, one in the morning & the other at even.]
Touching the Laws of an holy nature, some were appointed as necessary for them to observe, and some voluntary. Touching the necessary Laws, they are of four sorts, some were daily, some weekly, some monthly, & some yearly: or rather to speak more properly, Moses speaketh here of four sorts of oblations or sacrifices: First, of such as were offered every day. Secondly, of such as were offered every week. Thirdly, of such as were offered every month. Lastly, of such as were offered every year. Touching the voluntary, we shall speak afterward, chap. 30. The holy time that concerneth every day, is the morning and evening sacrifice offered daily: the weekly holy time is touching the Sabbath: the monthly is touching the Calends or first day of every month: the yearly is touching the feasts of the Passover, of Pentecost, of Trumpets, of Humiliation, and of the Tabernacles. All these laws were in a manner before handled, while y^e people abode at Mount Sinai. If any ask the Question, why then they are again here repeated? I answer, first, [Answer.] because they were now come to enter into the Land, being in a manner upon the borders thereof, chap. 27, 12. God would therefore put them in mind of this, that when they should possess the Land, they must be mindful of his worship and their own duty. Secondly, because few at this time remained alive, which had heard, or if they had heard, could remember these laws that then were published & propounded, all being now dead (except Caleb and Joshua) which were numbered before, as we saw in the end of the 26, chapter. Thirdly, the ceremonial worship had been intermitted in the wilderness for many years, as circumcision, Josh. 5, and many other like ordinances by reason of their continual journeys, or at least continual expectation of them. Lastly, God doth hereby comfort and confirm his people after their manifold provocations and murmurings, testifying thereby that as a merciful Father, he is reconciled unto them, & the remembrance of their sins buried, and that he hath determined to do them good all the days of their life. Now the first thing to be considered, is the daily sacrifice, in which was to be offered morning and evening, a Lamb, fine Flower, Wine, & Oil: these were to be offered continually as a burnt offering upon the Altar, which law was not to take place until they came into the Land, as we heard before in the like case, chap. 15, 2. because in the Desert they wanted many things necessary, Deut. 12, 8, which was a sufficient dispensation for the omitting of them: for when God doth require anything, he giveth means to perform it; and did never impute it as a sin unto them, when an inevitable necessity did hinder them, and the desire to obey is no less accepted then obedience it self. Of this daily sacrifice with the rites thereof to be performed every morning and evening, we read at large, Exod. 29, 38. they must do it day by day continually So 1 Kings 18, when Elijah convinced Baals Priests, there is mention made of their choosing, dressing, and offering a Bullock in the morning, verse 26, and of his doing the like at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, verse 36. Likewise Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour, Acts 3, 1: this was the time, being three of the clock in the afternoon, when the evening sacrifice was wont to be offered, unto which, prayer also was wont to be joined: we see their practice what it was daily; now let us come to the uses toward our selves.

First, see from hence by consideration of [Use 1] this daily offering, a Lamb every morning and a Lamb every evening, a great difference between the Old and New Testament. For this law (as also the rest) is not observed nor is to be observed of the people of God in the days of the Gospel, since the coming of Christ, which was observed and ought to be observed before Christ came in the flesh, by the people of the Jews: but instead of these oblations and sacrifices we have the Supper of the Lord. They were laden & burdened with sundry ceremonies, and had an heavy yoke put upon their necks, Acts 15, 10. which neither they nor their fathers were able to bear, as Peter testifieth; and such as were joined with much cost and no less labor and trouble, every foot they were constrained to be unclean, and put from the Congregation, and with many sacrifices and solemnities were purified again. We have a few ceremonies (if we may call them ceremonies) only two, to wit, baptism, once only to be received, which came in place of circumcision & their often purifications, and the Supper of the Lord, which came in place of the Passover and the other Sacrifices, their meat-offerings and their drink-offerings. [Object.] If any ask, why God changed this form of his worship, or why he abrogated those sacrifices and the whole Levitical service. I answer, [Answ.] because they were instituted to be figures of Christ, and to shadow out his sacrifice, Heb. 10, 1, 2, &c. for the sacrifices were so many testimonies given of God, that Christ Jesus should come into the world, and offer up himself a sacrifice without spot or blemish, to cleanse the sins of the people, and to make satisfaction for them unto God. Wherefore he being come and his sacrifice being offered, those other sacrifices ought to cease, and if now they should continue, they should be no better then lying signs and false witnesses, and testify an untruth, to wit, that Christ should come hereafter and die for us, who is already come and hath died for us once and can die no more, Rom. 6, 9, and hath fulfilled all that was written of him. If any do ask farther, [Object] why God would over-lade the faithful in the Old Testament, with so many troublesome and combersome ceremonies, and not us in the time of the new. I answer, [Answ.] the Church was then as a child in his nonage, or as a servant in bondage: whereas the Church of Christ is as a man grown up and set free, Galat. 3, 24, and 4, 1, 2, &c. and needeth not any tutors or guardians.

Secondly, we must understand from hence, [Use 2] that as all sacrifices under the law, did as it were lead us by the hand to Christ, & point him out with the finger, who is the end of the law for righteousness to everyone that believeth, Rom. 10, 4; so did this daily sacrifice of the two Lambes offered morning and evening, most plainly. He is both the Altar and the Sacrifice, Heb. 13, 10. He is the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world, John 1, 29. He is our food, our meat and drink to be received by faith, represented by the bread and wine that was offered, for his flesh is meat indeed, and his blood is drink indeed, John. 6, 55. We are hungry and thirsty, and want nourishment to refresh and sustain us to eternal life, if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever, verse 51. As then these Lambes were offered in the morning and at the evening, so was Christ from the beginning of the world unto the end thereof, the Savior of all them that believe and trust in him; he is the Lamb slain from the beginning of the world, Revel. 13, ver. 8. And as this daily offering was twice performed, so we have daily need of reconciliation, that his blood should continually be applied unto us by faith; and as we daily sin against him, so we must daily have recourse unto him for remission of sins. Now albeit there were two Lambes offered, we must not dream of two Christ's: as there were sundry Altars, all figuring one Christ, so there were two Lambes, howbeit they were but a repetition of one and the same thing, & represented one and the same Christ. And that this continual sacrifice was a figure of Christ, it is evident, because it is prophesied to cease at the coming of the Messiah, Dan. 9, 27, that then the shadow should give place to the body. So then the Levitical sacrifices were commanded only for a season, as Justin Martyr proveth out of this place, and Cyril, lib, 10. in Levite. For if God would have had them continue longer, and the Priesthood to abide forever, they could never have been abolished and destroyed; for no time, no violence, no enemy can take away that which God hath decreed to endure forever. Wherefore we must know, that the virtue and efficacy of the death of Christ extendeth it self from the very first fall of man, to the last fall of the world, that is, from the beginning of the world to the utter dissolution of the same. And withal this daily sacrifice signified the continual sanctification of the Church, through Christ the true Lamb of God, by whose mediation we and our actions are accepted of God, Acts 26 6, 7. Rom. 12, 3. 1 Pet. 1, 2, 19, 22. and 2, 5.

[Use 3] Thirdly, the Synagogue of Antichrist is here reprov'd, that would bear us in hand, that this daily sacrifice doth shadow out the daily sacrifice of the Mass, and they are not afraid or ashamed to build and set up that abominable Idol upon this foundation. But how can that be shadowed out in holy Scripture, whereof God is not the author, the instituter, or approver, and whereof no print or footsteps are to be found? True it is, the institution of the last Supper is of Christ, but this Supper is one thing, and the Mass is another: for the Mass hath quite abrogated and disannul'd the Supper, and is celebrated to another end, to wit, to merit remission of sins, and consequently salvation and eternal life. But the Supper was never instituted to be a propitiatory sacrifice to reconcile man unto God, but to be a Sacrament, whereby God as by a most certain seal doth strengthen our faith and assure us of eternal life, purchased by the only Sacrifice and Oblation of Christ once offered upon the Cross. Besides, if this daily sacrifice did point out the continual sacrifice of the Mass, then it will follow that it hath an end, and ought to be no longer in use in the Church, forasmuch as this and all other legal sacrifices had their consummation and consumption, when Christ was exhibited, as we shown before out of the prophesy of Daniel: weeks. Wherefore if they love the Mass, that loveth them so well and maintaineth them so wealthily, and be enamored of this creature, let them not build it any longer upon this groundwork, which is now out of date, lest they break the neck of it forever. But Bellarmino (who must help at a dead lift) hath labored much to put life into this dead Idol, and to raise again this carcass out of the dust, alledgeth two other places out of the same Prophet, (Dan. 12, 11. and 11, 31, and 8, 11,) to prove that they are Antichrists which take away their daily sacrifice of the Mass, for which they fight, as for the life of their religion. But these propheticall predictions of the abolishing of the daily sacrifice, which he applieth to the heretics (forsooth) of this time, and maketh them forerunners of Antichrist, because they desire nothing more then the overthrow of this sacrifice of the Mass: I say these propheticall predictions are best expounded by the event of them, which were truly fulfilled in Antiochus Epiphanes, by whom the Temple was horribly profaned, the Sanctuary wretchedly defiled, & the daily sacrifice abolished, so that he set up the abomination of desolation upon the Altar, as is evidently declared in 1. Mach. 1, 12, 30 So then, by the daily worship or sacrifice here oftentimes mentioned, we are to understand, not any sacrifice of the Christians to be taken away by the fury of Antichrist, but the daily sacrifice of the Jews which was interrupted and taken away by this Antiochus. Again, if the doctrine of the Romish Church be true, then Antichrist shall reign but three years and six months; howbeit the Prophet speaketh of six years and three months wherein the daily sacrifice shall be trodden under foot, Dan. 8, 13, 14. Thus to establish one untruth, they bring in another. Lastly, if their Mass were to be abolished by Antichrist, wherein they teach the eternity of Christ's Priesthood consisteth, then should Christ's Priesthood also be at end, whereas of it shall be no end, & therefore the ceasing of this daily sacrifice is interpreted by Chrysostom, Josephus, and the author of the Maccabees, to be the Jewish Sacrifice, so that we may bid the popish daily sacrifice farewell, and send it packing unto Rome, the mother of whoredoms and abominations.

Lastly, this daily sacrifice importeth the daily sacrifice of prayer which we ought to offer [Use 4] to God, as our daily service due unto him, 1. Kings 18, 36. And thus do the Hebrew Doctors speak, The continual sacrifice of the morning made atonement for the iniquities that were done in the night: and the evening sacrifice made atonement for the iniquities that were by day. It is therefore required of us to pray unto God, not once in a month, or once a week, nor only upon the Sabbath day, or publicly in the assemblies of the faithful, but we must remember him daily that remembereth us every hour. The time of prayer is every day, and that in respect of our daily sins, our daily wants, dangers, temptations, and decays, so that we must observe the rule of the Apostle, Pray continually, 1 Thess. 5, 16. These are five strong motives to stir us up daily to perform this duty, so that we may say with the Prophet, I wait for the Lord, my soul doth wait: even in his word do I hope; my soul waiteth for the Lord, more then they that watch for the morning, &c. Psal. 130, 5, 6.

First, (to speak of them in order) we have daily sins. We provoke God every day, and therefore are taught daily to pray for forgiveness, & to say, If thou (Lord) should mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? Ps. 130, 3. For as he lades us daily with his benefits, so we lade him daily with our sins, so that they are a burden unto him, he is weary to bear them; & therefore we should make even reckoning with the Lord every day, and renew our repentance evermore.

Secondly, we have daily wants, and who feeleth them not? and therefore it is our duty daily to bewail them, and daily to crave the supply of them. If there be any feeling of grace or spark of God's Spirit in us, we cannot be ignorant that we want both temporal & spiritual blessings, for body and soul. A blind man may see them, they are so great and so many.

Thirdly, we have daily dangers; every creature, if God give us over, is able to work our destruction. We go not from home, but our return is uncertain, no man can assure himself of safety. If we get up on horseback, in the slipping of one foot, we slip into danger, & sometimes into death. If we be in the house the misstepping of one foot bringeth trouble. If a man enclose himself in his garden, a serpent may bite him. If he walk in the streets, a tyle from an house may strike him down, nay dead. Where can a man secure himself, or how long, or from whom? When we have escaped one danger, may we afterward promise unto our selves safety? nay we are presently in danger of another danger; as we see in the Syrians, who, when they had escaped the sword of the Israelites, fled to Aphek into the Citty for refuge, But there a wall fell upon twenty and seven thousand of them that were left, and slew them, 1 Kings 20, 30, so that it is with us as the Prophet Amos speaketh, as if a man did fly from a Lyon, and a Bear met him; or went into the house, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a serpent bit him, Amos 5, 19. Therefore our only safety standeth in prayer, and in sanctifying the Name of God, and begging his assistance.

Fourthly, we have daily temptations bodily and ghostly, arising from the flesh, the world, and from the devil. Our adversary the devil never resteth, but walketh up and down like a roaring Lyon, seeking whom he may devour, Job 1, 7. 1 Pet. 5, 8. He is never idle nor weary, he is an importunate suter, he will never give over, nor take any denial, and therefore Christ saith, Math. 26, 41. Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak: and he instructeth his Disciples, Luke 32, 21, that Satan desired to have them, that he might sift them as wheat; howbeit he telleth Peter, he prayed for him, that his faith should not fail. Among all these temptations, pleasure and prosperity are none of the least, when we enjoy health & wealth, peace and liberty, ease and abundance. If ever we forget God, it is most commonly when we are full, Psalm. 30, 6. Deuter. 6, 6, 7.8, &c. Luke 21, 34, 35.

Lastly, we have daily decays in good things. It is with us in the matters of the soul, as it is in the state of our bodies. Our natural heat and moisture (wherein the life consisteth) is daily impayred and would quickly consume, were not nature daily supplied by meat and drink, whereby the decays of these, as it were the breaches made in nature, are made up: so would faith and repentance, and other graces of God be weakened and diminished daily in us, if they were not increased by the continual use of the Word, of the Sacraments, and of Prayer: and therefore we must not cease to stir up these gifts in us, lest they be as a spark of fire in green wood, which will soon go out if it be not kindled. So then this morning & evening sacrifice, should direct us how and when to worship God; we must remember him in the morning & in the evening, he must be in our thoughts first and last, we must begin the day and ende the day with him. Let him be in our first meditations, when we awake out of sleep. If the heart and thoughts be well settled in the morning, they are like to be better ordered and disposed all the day after. This made the Prophet say, Psalm. 5, 3. My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord, in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up; and Psalm. 22, 2, and 53, 17, and 119, 55, 62, 164. Dan. 6, 10 Then are the faculties of the soul most fresh and cheerful, then are the senses comforted and refreshed, because of the nights rest, and therefore best able to perform any duty to God or man. Again, the morning is a time wherein the world and the business of this life, have not yet forestalled and possessed our hearts and affections, and therefore we are then y^e most fit to perform any special or spiritual duty required of us. Lastly, it is y^e first part of the day, and therefore the most worthy to be consecrated to God, after we have newly tasted his great mercy in the night past, which he might have made everlasting darkness unto us, & never raised us up again. Moreover, as the greatest part neglect this time, so do they also at evening; they forget what blessings they have received, what dangers they have escaped, what temptations they have resisted, what wants they have obtained, what decays they have supplied and repaired, for which they should give him thanks; and lastly, what sins they have committed in the day, for which God might justly destroy thē. They remember not to cast themselves upon his protection: they consider not, that he may make their bed their grave, and never bring them to see the light and the Sun again. They never yet truly learned, that in him we live, and move, and have our being, Acts 17, 28. Howbeit we that should continually remember the kindness of the Lord, and pray to him, and praise him at all times, do for the most part forget him from morning to evening, & from evening to morning, and one day, and week, and month after another; and therefore it often falleth out, that God giveth us little rest and quiet, Deut. 28, 67. But in the morning thou shalt say, would God it were even! and at even thou shalt say, would God it were morning! for the fear of thine heart wherewith thou shalt fear, and for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see.

9 And on the Sabbath day, two Lambs of the first year, without spot, and two tenth deals of flower for a meat offering mingled with oil, and the drink offering thereof.

10 This is the burnt offering of every Sabbath, beside the continual burnt offering and his drink offering.

Here is the law set down touching the solemnity of the Sabbath: before we had the daily burnt offering, in these words we have the weekly offering, wherein all things are doubled. Every day we should set aside a part of it to God, and cut off somewhat from our own business to lift up our hearts to him: but the seventh day should wholly be spent to his glory. Before they offered one Lamb, now two Lambes: before one tenth deal of flower, now two tenth deals, &c. So then, we are to speak of the Jewish Sabbath, and the uses thereof to our selves. This was first prescribed and appointed to Adam in the time of his innocence, Gen. 2, 2; this was the seventh day from creation. It is repeated in sundry other places of the word of God, Exod. 16, 26, they might not gather Manna upon this day, Exod. 35, 2, 3. and 34.21. and 31, 13.

[Reason 1] Many reasons are rendered, Exod. 31, why they must observe this Sabbath; First, it is a sign between God and them, that it is he that doth sanctify them. Secondly, it is ordained for their benefit and commodity, and therefore should be holy to them, as Christ farther teacheth, Mark. 2, 27. The Sabbath was made for man, & not man for the Sabbath. Thirdly, the necessity of keeping it appeareth, because they that did not keep it, should surely die. Fourthly, it is consecrated to God, it is a Sabbath of rest unto him, verse 15. Fifthly, the Lord propounded his own example, for he created the world in six days, & then rested the seventh. See more to this purpose in the uses afterward.

First, this rest prescribed in the law, that [Use 1] they must do no manner of work, was mystical, pointing out our spiritual and internal rest and cessation from the works of sin, Isaiah 58, 14, and 66, 27. We must not do our own ways, nor seek our own will: we must cease from our own works to follow after the works of God. Thus we begin a spiritual Sabbath in this life, or else we shall never enjoy the eternal Sabbath in heaven. We must begin our Sabbath here, we shall finish it hereafter. Therefore the Apostle saith, Hebr. 4, 10, 11. He that entered into his rest, he hath also ceased from his own works, as God did from his: let us labor therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief. All sins are truly and properly our own works, because we naturally do them, and can do nothing else, and we are Satan's house wherein he inhabiteth, Math. 12, 44, we cannot please God, but bring upon our selves by them all miseries and calamities, yea death it self. So then we keep a true Sabbath, when we abstain from our evil ways, when we mortify the deeds of the flesh, when we are quickened by the Spirit to lead a new life, & when we do those things that are well-pleasing in his sight. For what shall it avail or advantage a man to abstain from the works of his hands, and the labor of his calling, and in the mean season to nourish sin and all evil in his heart? What comfort on the Sabbath can the day-laborer find in resting from his worldly labors, if he labor nothing at all to deny ungodliness and all worldly and sinful lusts? What fruit shall the tradesman find to cease from the works of his calling, when he maketh a trade and occupation of sin upon that day? to cease from making garments for others, and not himself to learn to put on Christ? What benefit hath the Physician to cease his prescriptions, and to abstain from giving his receipts for bodily health, if himself seek not after the health of his own soul? may it not be truly said to him, Physician heal thyself? Luke 4, 23. What shall it avail the traueiler to cease his travel, and yet never require & seek after the kingdom of Heaven? What good shall the Inn-keeper or Tauerner receive by ceasing from their ordinary victualling, if they provide not for themselves the meat that never perisheth, and the bread that came down from heaven, but famish and pine away their own souls? Or what profit shall arise to such as will neither buy nor sell upon the Sabbath day, when in the mean season they never go about to buy the truth of God's word? Pro. 23, 23: not to sell away of their own corruptions that hinder them from the best things? To what end and purpose do we abstain from mustering & training of soldiers, if we do not learn on y^e lords day to fight the lords battles against y^e world, y^e flesh, and the devil? which are the most capital and deadly enemies that we have, not to our bodies only, but to our souls. And why do we cease to put on our bodily armor, our shield, our head-piece, our sword: if we do not put on the whole armor of Go, the helmet of salvation, the shield of faith, the breastplate of righteousness, and the sword of the spirit; that we may stand fast in the day of trial? Eph. 6, 16, 17. Thus then we see who they be that keep a good Sabbath, even they that learn to rest from sin, and cease from all their evil ways.

Secondly, the Sabbath also is Symbolical, [Use 2] in that it is a pledge unto us of our everlasting rest in the kingdom of almighty God, as the Apostle showeth in the Epistle to the Colossians, chapter 2, verse 17. The Sabbath days are a shadow of things to come; and Heb. chap. 4, verse 9. There remaineth a rest for the people of God: and farther he proveth it out of the Prophet, in Psalm 95, where God promiseth not an outward, such as was the ceremonial rest of the Sabbath and of the Land of Canaan, but the eternal rest with Jesus Christ in heaven. This do none attain but only the faithful, and now we are in the way that leadeth unto it, we are not yet in possession of that rest, 2 Corinth. chapter 5. verse 7. As then the passenger doth not sit still, but always is going forward and further, until he come to his journeys end: so ought we to make continual steppes in the faith, until we come to receive the ende of our faith, which is the salvation of our souls, 1 Pet. chapter 1, verse 9.

Now we must understand that eternal life is called a rest for two causes; First, because thē and there we shall rest from all our works, that is, from our sins: for then we shall sin no more, but shall know God even as we are known; no evil shall dwell there. When the Angels had sinned, they were immediately cast out, and are reserved in chains to everlasting perdition, Jude, verse 6. Secondly, we shall rest from all troubles and miseries of this life, Reuelat. chapter 14, verse 13: and hence it is, that this place of rest is called by the name of Abraham's bosom, Luke 16, 22, 23, because Abraham and all believers that are the sons of God, do there quietly rest and repose themselves, as the child in the bosom of his mother.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it teacheth us to avoid all profaneness upon this day of the Lord; the works of our callings, and the pleasures of our own hearts are mere profanations of this holy day. Everyone will be ready to confess that it is a great sin either for the husbandman to go to plough, or for the tradesman to follow his business, or for the day-laborer to work, or for the handy-craftsman to apply his vocation: howbeit for a man to give himself to his sports, pleasures, and delights, they think there is some greater liberty. Howbeit it seemeth a most ridiculous thing to me, that God forbiddeth to the poor man his labor, and alloweth to the rich man his pleasure: to permit that which is less necessary, and to restrain that which is more necessary. But let us see what we are to hold, as well of the one as of the other out of the Law of God.

First, Adam himself was commanded to sanctify this day which God had blessed, Genesis, chap. 2, 2; and the people in the wilderness are forbidden to gather Manna, Exod. chap. 16, verse 6. For this day is a market day for the soul, and a time to provide spiritual food far more excellent and precious than Manna, John, chap. 6, verse 58. 1 Pet. chapter 2, verse 3.

Secondly, our ordinary buying and selling, keeping of fairs or markets on this day, to whom we may join those that bring their wares and commodities into Church-yards, that after morning prayer they may vent them among the people. This is another abuse among us, which toucheth the buyers as well as the sellers. And if such commodities be brought unto us, we ought not to buy them, Nehem. 13, 15. For what maketh sellers among us, but because they easily find those that will take their commodities at their hands? It is certain, if there were no buyers, there would be no sellers,

Thirdly, there ought to be no carrying & carting upon this day, lest God lay some heavy burden upon us, too heavy for us to bear, Ierem. 17, 21, 22. Many carriers offend this way, and as they break the Sabbath themselves, so they are the cause of the breach of it to many others, Fourthly, we must not follow our labors, no not in harvest time, when we might claim the greatest privilege, and the season seemeth to offer unto us liberty, and to give us a dispensation, yet even then we must rest; provided that our corn and provision for the year be not in danger to be lost, for then God will have mercy and not sacrifice, Math. 12, 7. If we may save the goods of others, much more our own: And if save the life of our beast, much more our corn whereby our lives are preserved.

Fifthly, they are reprov'd, that wander from their places, that run about after every pleasure, or profit, or feast; a common abuse & profanation of the day, almost in all places, Exod. 16, 29: these are like profane Esau, who sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, Hebr.

chapter 12, verse 16, so do they sell the word and sacraments for small trifles. These are lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof, 2 Tim. chapter 3, verses 4, 5. and many of them make their belly their god, Philippians, chapter 3, ver. 19. And touching their profits, they take great gain to be godliness, not godliness, to be great gain; the first Epistle to Timothy, chapter 6, verses 5, 6.

Sixthly, the Jews were forbidden to build the Tabernacle upon this day, which was a place consecrated to God for his service and worship, Exodus, chapter 31. verse. 15. It is not therefore lawful to build God's house with material stones upon that day, but we must labor to be living stones, built up a spiritual house, and an holy Priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifice, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ; the first Epistle of Peter, chapter the second, verse 5.

Seventhly, they are reprov'd that keep a carnal Sabbath unto the devil, not an holy Sabbath to God, who spend the time in carding, dicing, drinking, surfeiting, revelling, and such like. This is the devils Sabbath, and no better then to serve him. They are evil upon any day, but worse upon this day. Saul was offended when he saw David's place empty at his Table: but how often may our places be seen empty at the Lord's Table, and in his house? Lastly, not to regard the hearing of the word, whereby we may increase in good things, and learn our duties to God & man. The neglect of these duties bringeth many judgments and curses of God upon our heads, Amos 8, 4. Nehem. 13, 17, 18. Ier. 17. verse 27.

[Use 4] Thirdly, we must labor to perform obedience to God upon this day without weariness or distraction, both publicly and privately. It is our duty to hear the word preached in it, 2 Kings 4, 23. Luke 4, 16, Acts 13, 14, 15, & 15, 22. We must exercise our selves in the Word and Sacraments, pray with the Congregation, lay up in our hearts what we have heard, meditate upon it, confer about it, and seek to increase in knowledge, faith, and obedience: otherwise the Sabbath shall pass from us without profit. We must try our hearts and lives whether we go forward or backward, or stand at a stay. If we do these things, then shall we be wise observers of this day, and have the blessings of GOD come down upon us, Exod. 31, 13, 17. Ezek. 20, 12, 20. Isaiah 56, 2, 3, 4, &c. and 58, 13, 14. Ier. 17, 24, 25, 26.

[Use 5] Lastly, it is the duty of all Governors to look to their families, and therefore GOD beginneth with them, and directeth the commandment unto them, and that for these causes. First, because they must give an account of their government to God, of whō they have received it, who is the high Commander and general Master in Heaven and Earth, and of all their souls that are under their charge: forasmuch as he will search and enquire not only how civil and just among men, and toward men our government hath been, but how godly and religious.

Secondly, GOD setteth them in the first place, to teach them that God requireth at their hands to teach their families, to command their sons and households to fear God, & to bring them up in his faith & fear, and in true religion, Eph. 6, 4. Gen. 18, 19.

Thirdly, because they must go before them by good example and practice of all holy duties, as Paul would have Timothy to do, 1 Tim. 4, 12; as we look for any comfort at the Lord's hand in that great day of his dreadful judgment, when he will bring every work to light, with every secret thing, whether good or evil, Eccl. 12, 12. If we have been examples in good things, we shall receive everlasting life: if examples in evil, everlasting death.

Fourthly, the Lord singleth out the father and master in the first place, because if they go before and lead the way, the rest of the house will quickly follow after, John, chap. 4, verse 53. Acts, chapter sixteen, verse 32: contrariwise if they yield not obedience for conscience sake to the duties of the Sabbath, they may by the abuse of their authority hinder & frustrate the holy endeavors of his children & servants. Hence it is, that many fathers urge their children, many masters command their servants to go about their own business, and send them from place to place at that time when they should attend to the holy commandment of the Lord, whereas both of thē might well and lawfully reply to their fathers and masters, and say with Christ our Savior, Luke 2, 49, Wist ye not that I must be about my fathers business? Lastly, the Lord layeth this weighty charge upon them, that such as are under their government, may yield willingly and cheerfully to God's will, considering how straight a charge God hath given to all governors. If they should do it of their own head, or lay an heavy burden upon thē, which themselves would not touch with their little finger, the charge could carry no authority. It is not therefore their fathers or masters that restrain them of their liberty, & tie up their wicked and wandering affections, but GOD himself, to whom all obedience is due. The father doth show love to his children whē he restrayneth them from wickedness, the master doth no wrong to his servants that brideleth them from following their own willes and pleasures. So then the point to be learned and practiced, is, that we must first keep the Sabbath in our own persons, and begin reformation within the doors or closets of our own hearts, or else we will be very remiss & negligent in reforming of others; or if we be forward we shall be charged and challenged to be hypocrites, while we teach others, but do not teach our selves, Rom. 2, 21. Secondly, we must cast our eyes upon others, and look to them that belong unto us, that they may sanctify the Sabbath as well as our selves. It is not enough for us to come to the house of of God alone, but we must come with the trayne of our families, as a Captain with his army, Psal. 110, 3, and 42.4. The father oftentimes is praying in the Church, when his children are playing in the streets. The master many times sitteth in the house of God, when his servant lieth at the alehouse. The wife sometimes goeth with her husband to the sermon, when the daughters and maid-servants either are sent or suffered to run to lascivious dancing and wanton company, whereby their minds and oftentimes their bodies also are defiled, as it fell out to Dinah, Gen. chapter 34, verses 1, 2; and so the saying of Solomon is verified, Proverbs, chap. 29, verse 15. A child left to himself, bringeth his mother to shame.

But haply some Masters will allege for themselves that their servants are unruly, [Object] as the untamed heyffer, and will not be ordered by them, that they are much grieved they can prevail no more with them, and that they break out and will not be holden in by them. I answer, [Answer.] this is not a good plea, but a vain excuse, and no better. For if thy authority serve to bridle them and keep them under in the six days, how cometh it to pass that thou wantest power to prevail over them on the seventh day? Can we rule them in our own cause, and can we not rule them in the cause of God? Have we means to enforce them to look to our business, and want we means to compel them to do God's business? It seemeth therefore to me, to be rather want of will in us, [Object.] then of power. If we pretend farther, that they be incorrigible, and will have their own swinge, and be at their own liberty that day; [Answ.] we have no warrant to burden our houses with such persons, that will neither serve the Lord nor obey us, but rather infect others that live with them. The Prophet David professeth, that they should not serve him that were ungodly, his eyes should be upon the faithful to dwell with him, but the wicked should not tarry in his house, Psal. 101, 6, 7. Why then should we keep them in our house, that love not the house of God? We will quickly discharge that servant which hath no care of our business, why then will we trouble our selves & our house with him that is unfaithful toward God? Thus then we see the care that all ought to have of the Sabbath, both master and servant, father and son, husband and wife. But (alas) the profaneness of our times is so great, that the Sabbath is in a manner utterly contemned, & we give him least service on that day wherein we are bound to give him most duty. For we see here under the Law, how the Lord commandeth that the daily sacrifice which every morning and evening was offered, should be doubled upon the Sabbath. But our people for the most part perform single service, and double impiety upon that day. The greatest service is done to our selves, or that which is worse, to the devil. But of the Sabbath we have spoken before, chap. 15.

11 And in the beginnings of your months ye shall offer a burnt offering unto the Lord, two young Bullocks, and a Ram, and seven Lambes of a year old without spot.

12 And three tenth deals of flower for a meat offering, &c.

13 And a several tenth deal of fine flower mingled with oil for a meat offering, &c.

14 And their drink offerings shall be half an Hin of wine unto a Bullock, and the third part of an Hin unto a Ram, and the fourth part of an Hin unto a Lamb, &c.

15 And one Kid of the Goats for a sin offering unto the Lord shall be prepared, besides the continual burnt offering, and his drink offering.

In these words we have the monthly solemnity commanded to the Jews, to wit, the Calends of the months, called the New Moons, or beginning of every month. The worship performed therein; was two young Bullocks, one Ram, seven Lambs of the first year, three tenth deals of flower for every Bullock, and two tenth deals of flower for every Ram for a meat offering, &c. it must also have a drink offering containing half an Hin of wine, &c. Here we have mention made (as also before) of the Hin and of the Epha. Touching the Epha & Omer, we have spoken already, chap. 5, 15, 16. Now we must speak somewhat of the Hin. Some are of opinion, that it cannot be certainly known, how much the Hebrew measures contained, as appeareth in Lyra and Cajetan, and so they leave it uncertain to determine. Others to enwrap the Hin in greater obscurity, make two kinds of measures of this one kind, the greater and the lesser: but this is a bare conjecture without warrant. Mention is made hereof before, chap. 15, 4, 5, 7, 9. This we are to hold for a certain truth, that the Hin is of liquid things, and it is commonly accounted to contain six pintes, which we receive as most probable & least suspected, because it agreeth with the computation of the Hebrews, who generally hold, that it holdeth twelve of the measures called Log, and the Log contained six eggs, and there goeth to a pinte of our english measure as much as 14 eggshells contain. But of this see before, chap. 15.

Now to return to the matter which is here handled, we see that the Calends or beginnings of the months were consecrated & hallowed unto God, as before, chap. 10, 10, and in many other places, 1 Sam. chap. 20, 5. 1 Chron. chapter 25, verse 31. 2 Chron. chap. 8, verse 13, and chapter 31, verse 5. Nehem. chapt. 10, verse 33. Ezer. chap. 3, verse 5. Ezek. chapter 45, verse 17, and 46, verse 1. Amos, 8, verse 5.

This was the solemn feast of the Jews: [Use 1] let us see what it belongeth unto us. First, see hereby that God did set apart diverse times besides the Sabbath, to his people that serve him, to hear his word, and to resort to the Prophets to be taught and instructed in the ways of godliness, 2 Kings 4, 25. Ezek. 36, 1; at such times the people went to the Prophets, when the Priests were oftentimes negligent in their places. Christ our Savior complaineth in the Gospel, that they were as sheep without a Sheeheard, Math. 9, verse 36, when there were store of Priests and Levites in the Land, howbeit they were dumb dogs, and opened not their mouths to interpret the Law.

The Sabbath day is the chief time to seek after knowledge, and ever was from the beginning: nevertheless, God appointed other times also to his people. There are not many places in the land where the word is preached on other days thē the Sabbath, I would there were more of them; it is a good help to many other places where they want teaching, & if the people resort to them as they were wont to the Prophets, they are to be commended & encouraged. If there were a dearth of Corn among us, how far would we go to fetch Corn, rather then we would starve? I believe as far as the sons of Jacob, who went out of the Land of Canaan into Egypt: so ought it to be with us in regard of the soul, we should be ready to go from place to place yea from Land to Land, rather thē pine away and perish for want of instruction, Amos 8, 12. But if many that live among us had lived in those days, that cannot abide that preaching should be upon any other day, they would have enueyed against this as a great disorder, and upbraided the people that they gad after Sermons, and leave their business, and beggar themselves. In the days of Christ the people followed him out of their houses and Cities, and sought him out to be taught of him; yet he never reprov'd them or forbad them, but fed them both in soul and body. Doth the Lord command us so often to delight in the Law of the Lord, to meditate therein day and night, to seek first of all the kingdom of God, and ought a few miles to stop us or hinder us? How far will men ride, and run, and sail for a little earthly substance? It is accounted by worldly minded men that savor nothing but of the earth, no disorder at all, to run on heaps from town to town to drunken feasts, may games, dancings, plays, bear-baitings, and other like fooleries and vanities; they allow this running from place to place; but if any go half so far to seek after the word, and to edify themselves in their most holy faith, they cry out against it with open mouths, and think them worthy to be punished. Thus they would also have done to God's own people the Jews, if they had seen them run & resort to the Prophets, in the ruinous times of the Church with so great zeal and forwardness as they did.

Secondly, we learn that all months and [Use 2] times are consecrated to us through Christ, so that worshipping God truly, they shall turn to our good and benefit, according to the saying of the Apostle, Whether life, or death or things present, or things to come, all are ours, 1 Cor. 3, 22, 23. The heathen and they that are heathenishly minded, are afraid of the influence of the stars, and of the constellation of the heavens, yea the Star-gazers would bear us in hand, that sometimes are dismal and fatal to some purposes. The Gentiles made it unlucky to enterprize some business in some of the months. Hence it is that the Poet saith,

Hac quo{que} de causa, fite Prouerbia tangunt,

Mense malum Maio nubere, vulgus ait.

That is,

The Proverbs teach, and common people say,

Its ill to marry in the month of May.

In like manner he teacheth before, that sometimes are unfit for the marriage of widows or of maids, forasmuch as such as marry in them are not long lived, but have died quickly,

Nec viduis tedis eadem, nec virginis opta

Tempora: quae nupsit, non diuturna fuit.

And one of the wisest Philosophers among the heathen, enquiring into the causes, why the Romans would not marry in the month of May, alledged this as one, because they offered oblations to the dead in this month, and therefore was holden to be ominous. And in another place he showeth, that they held the morrows after the Calends, Nones, and Ides, dismal and disastrous days, either to set forward upon any journey and voyage, or to march with an army into the field. It is not worth the labor to spend time to rehearse the folly of our sottish Prognosticators, that in every month tell us which are good days and which are evil days, and set down particular predictions what shall befall us, and how we shall prosper or not prosper: and yet themselves cannot tell what shall happen to themselves. I remember a pleasant story, reported by Erasmus in the reign of Henry the seventh, a wise and judicious Prince, of a certain wizard, who would needs be accounted as a Prophet, and able to foretell things to come; he prophesied at a time of the Kings death, that he should die that year. The king hearing of his Prophecy, & withal laughing at his folly, sent for him, as if he meant to take notice of his deep and profound skill, and to reward him highly; and when he was come into his presence, he asked him whether he had any knowledge of things to come, and could tell what should come to pass hereafter? he answered, he had great skill that way. The king demanded of him, whether he knew where he should be those holy days that were at hand, (for this fell out not long before the feast of the Nativity) he answered, No: Why then (quoth the king) I perceive thou hast no skill at all, and knowest not so much as I do, for I know where thou shalt be, & how long, and withal willed his servants to carry him presently to the Tower, and after a while having made himself merry and derided the folly of y^t wise fool, he dismissed him, which was more favor then he deserved. This practice of propheticall diuinations and predictions is mere Gentilism, and great pity it is once suffered among us Christians, to make some days lucky and some unlucky, some fortunate and some vnfortunate; whereof we see the practice in the book of Ester, chapter the third, verse seventh: They cast Pur, that is, the lot before Haman, from day today, & from Moneth to month, to the twelfth Moneth. Howbeit we see how he was deceived, and the enchanter upon whom he built, and in whō he trusted, like to the Papists, who long looked for the year 88, of which they had many Astrological predictions, and trusted in it no less then in the Oracle of Apollo, howbeit they were maruailously & in a manner miraculously defeated and disappointed, and therefore one saith well,

Clade papistarum, faustus vbi{que} pijs.

But if we be the true servants of God, our ways shall prosper, Psal. 1, 3, and it shall go well with us, if we make the word our study and meditation, Josh. 1, 8; if not, let the times be what they will, and prognosticate what luck (as they call it) soever they can, yet nothing shall prosper or do us good, whatsoever we imagine to the contrary.

Thirdly, the consideration of the feast of [Use 3] the New Moons did put them and doth put us in mind, that we should be new creatures, and walk in newness of life by the holy Ghost regenerating us, as the Apostle saith, 2. Cor. 5, 17. If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are past away, behold, all things are made new. Hence it is, that we are so oftentimes warned in the Scripture, that we must be renewed in the spirit of our minds, Rom. 12, 2. Eph. 4, 23. that we must put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness, Eph. 4, 24, and must put off concerning the former conversation, the old man which is corrupt according to the deceiveable lusts, verse 22.

As then the Moon (which ruleth the month) changeth and reneweth y^e light, so should we be changed, not in substance of the body, but in quality, and that in every part, even in the whole man, forasmuch as we are altogether corrupt. Now this that must be changed, is called the old man; first, because it is in time before regeneration, first, we are carnal, then spiritual; first, the first Adam, then the second Adam hath place in us: first we are borne, then we are borne again, John 3. Secondly, because as age maketh loathsome and deformed, so this maketh us full of spots and wrinkles, before such time as we taste of the renewing power of God. Thirdly, because it draweth near to death, for as old age bringeth down to the grave, so doth the old man draw us to destruction of soul and body, which is the second death. This old man therefore must be clean cast off, or else it shall not profit us: for we must deny our selves, and crucify our sinful lusts, we must kill and mortify our vain desires, as Abraham would have killed his son; but we must go farther, for we must after a sort kill our selves, & cast off the things that are most dear unto us, though they should be as our right hand, or as our right eye, Math. 5. And we must so cast off the old man, that no remnant of him cleave or stick unto us, & we should put it off, not as if we were loath or unwilling to leave it, but cast it away with a purpose never to take it up, or to put it on again; no nor once touch the same, but to account it as a menstruous cloth, lest we be like to the dog that returneth to his vomit, or to the sow that was washed and by and by walloweth in the mire, or to the Crocodile that layeth aside her poison but taketh it up again. On the other side, we must put on the new man, called new, because nothing availeth without this, Gal. 5, 6. Again, it is wrought in us in the second place, for we are first old before we are new, for this is the latter birth. Lastly, because it is strong to do the will of GOD, as young men are lusty and able to do the business of this life with great alacrity and activity.

Lastly, we must remember that it is not enough [Use 4] to serve God outwardly, and to keep the bare ceremony, except we join thereunto the service of the heart. And if the Jews had resorted diligently every first day of the month to the service of God in the Tabernacle or the Temple, yet what could it avail them, if their hearts were unclean, & their hands stained with cruelty? Therefore the Prophet saith, The new Moons and Sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with, it is iniquity: your new Moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth, they are a trouble unto me, I am weary to bear them, Isaiah 1, 13, 14. The Jews regarded no more then to keep the days, they thought it enough to leave the works of their calling, though they did never forsake the works of the flesh, and therefore he chargeth them that their hands were full of blood, verse 15. So is it with us, we rest for the most part in the outward ceremony, in honoring God with our lips and bodily presence in his house, we bring no more but our outward ears to hear, and neglect the preparation of the heart, and yet flatter our selves as if we had done all that he requireth. Howbeit God rejecteth and refuseth such duty at our hands, he cannot abide the service and sacrifice that is offered in this manner. Hence it is that he saith, I hate, I despise your feast days, and I will not smell in your solemn assemblies: though ye offer me burnt offerings, and your meat offerings, I will not accept them, neither will I regard the peace offerings of your fat beasts, Amos, chapter the fifth. the 21, and 22, verses. Not that almighty GOD hated or abhorred the things themselves; he did not reject their works, but the evil of their works, Isaiah, chapter 1, verse 16: so he cannot abide that we come before him in that corrupt manner; but we assemble for the worse, and not for the better, and by our corruption turn his saving ordinances into sin.

16 And in the fourteenth day of the first month is the Passover of the Lord.

17 And in the fifteenth day of this month is the feast, seven days shall unleavened bread be eaten.

18 In the first day shall be an holy convocation, &c.

19 But ye shall offer a sacrifice made by sire for a burnt offering unto the Lord, two young Bullocks, one Ram, and seven Lambes of a year old, &c.

20 And their meat offering shall be of, &c.

21 A several tenth deal, &c.

22 And one Goat for a sin offering, &c.

23 Ye shall offer these beside the burnt offering in the morning, &c.

After this manner, &c.

25 An on, &c.

We come now to the yearly feasts and sacrifices, whereof the Passover hath the first place, wherein beside the daily sacrifice, they were to offer two young Bullocks, and one Ram, and seven Lambes of the first year without blemish, for a burnt offering, and their meat offering must be of flower mingled with oil; and they must eat unleavened bread seven days, the first day & the seventh must be an holy convocation, wherein they must do no servile work. Of this feast we read at large, Exod. 12, 18. Levite. 23, 5, 7. Deut. 16, 1. Of this feast we have also spoken before at large, chap. 9, 2, 3. And it was of great importance, even the foundation of all the benefits which the Jews received at God's hands, without which they had been no people separated and dedicated unto almighty God,

This Paschal Lamb was not a bare ceremony [Use 1] without doctrine and instruction. The Jews departed in great haste out of Egypt. And how? not armed or with bannners displayed, as if their enemies had stood in fear of them, but they went out like a company of poor fugitiues or banished persons. The women carried their children upon their shoulders, the men took up their stuff upon their necks, and fled out of the Land, as Lot did out of Sodom, for their lives. They were a people that had no skill to handle the sword, or weapon of war defensive or offensive, they had been used like Oxen for labor, and like Asses for burden. And when they must depart, it was said, Get you hence, Exod. 12, 29, they must truss up the Corn they had ground, and bake cakes by the way to eat. This solemnity they observed yearly, wherein they did eat cakes without leaven, which served to put them in mind, that when their fathers departed out of Egypt, they were a poor distressed people, and ran away like silly Lambes pursued by devouring wolves. This should teach all of us, that God would have us remember such deliverances out of danger, as he hath sent us. We are apt to forget what he hath done for us, as the Jews were, and therefore we must consider to what end God commanded his people to celebrate this feast every year, & that not for one day, but for seven days together, and doth so often urge it upon them, as we see in the Scriptures. And albeit this feast have no place in the New Testament, but is justly abrogated & abolished, because y^e shadow must give place to the body, and the ceremony to the truth: yet we must not think the commending of it everywhere to the Church to be in vain. For it serves to put us in mind both of God's mercy and goodness unto his Church, who though he bring them into sundry perils that are ready to oppress them, yet he is ready to deliver them out of all, yea when things seem to be most desperate: and also of our duty toward him to give him thanks for our deliverances, and to praise his Name.

Secondly, from hence it followeth, that it [Use 2] was a vain and frivolous controversy which troubled sundry Churches, and rent in sunder one of them from another touching the keeping of the Passover. Some would have it kept on the 14. day of the month, after the manner of the Jews, and others on the Lord's day after, lest the Church should follow the Synagogue. Victor Bishop of Rome did threaten all the East Churches with the censure of excommunication, because they celebrated the Passover another day then on the Lord's day. But Irenaeus and other holy Bishops reprov'd him of obstinacy, of pride and arrogancy, & wrote unto him that he did not well in that he cut from the unity of the body of the Church so many and so great Churches of Christ, which observed the order delivered unto them from ancient times, as appeareth in Eusebius For the Churches of the East pretended that they followed John and Philip; and the Churches of the West alleged the examples of Paul and Peter for their warrant and one claim was fully as good and haply as true as the other. This strife doth the Bishop of Rome at this day nourish and renew again, that had been long buried in the grave and covered with ashes, by his new Calendar, and thrusteth upon the Church his own ordinance concerning the obseruatiō of Easter as a divine precept, and consequently necessary to be kept and observed of the Church, usurping jurisdiction and authority over all Churches to rule over them and their faith at his pleasure. Cardinal Bellarmine going about to establish traditions against the all-sufficient doctrine of the Scriptures, avoucheth that we must necessarily believe that the Passover is to be kept in the New Testament on the Lord's day only, because they have been accounted heretics, who kept it otherwise; and yet this cannot be proved by the Scripture.

I answer, the former controversy was at the last thus defined and determined by Polycarp and Victor, that everyone should follow their own custom and judgment, and that it is a very foolish and absurd thing for such rites to separate one from another as enemies. Euethes ethôn heneken allêlôn charizesthai, Sozom histor. lib. 7. cap. 19. Now that which is left free & at liberty for either side to follow, cannot be holden necessary: but to keep the Passover on this day or that day is left free and at liberty for either side, therefore it is not necessary unto salvation. So then, nothing is more uncertain then Tradition: for both parts pretended the Apostles and Apostolic Traditions, but both of them could not be true: nay Socrates taxeth them both of errors, affirming that this sprang not of Tradition, but of Custom. And if either the one opinion or the other had any good foundation from the Apostles, it might be that in the beginning and first planting of the Gospel (to bear with the infirmity of others) they observed certain days and times, which afterward was observed and urged as a precept, liberty being abolished, and that which was retained of charity, was turned into a law of necessity. Again there is no cause or reason at all, why any churches or persons should contend to have the Passover received, much less so bitingly & bitterly. For Socrates speaketh well and truly, that the Apostles ordained nothing of holy or festival days, and showeth at large the vanity of those that strive to no purpose about it: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , Socrat. lib. 5. cap. 22. Forasmuch as the Passover was a type and ceremony, but types and ceremonies were abolished. So then it was superstitiously done of such as bear the names of Christian Churches, to bring in a feast of Passover, under pretence that the Jews had the same; for that were to compel the Gentiles to live as do the Jews, which Paul reproveth in Peter, Gal. 2, 14, But these Traditions got authority in the church by little and little. I have spoken this, not that it is unlawful to have one day in the year, wherein to celebrate the remembrance of the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, for that were to run into extremities: whereas our infirmity is allowed to have some helps to quicken our faith, that we might the better bethink us all our life what benefit the resurrection of our Lord hath brought unto us: nevertheless this is established only for order sake. But to urge this strictly of necessity, or to make a service of God thereof, or to think that we ought to fashion our selves after the example of the Jews, to wit, that as they had their Passover, so ought we to have ours in these days, were to turn all things upside down, and to put a veil before the face of Christ, that we might not see the light of the Gospel shining upon us.

[Use 3] Lastly, this Passover was celebrated with many circumstances, whereof some were observed only at the first Passover while they were in Egypt, as the preparing of the paschal Lamb, and keeping it apart from the rest of the flock, from the 10 day to y^e 14. the sprinkling of the blood upon the door posts, the eating of it in haste, and the killing of it within their own houses: but afterwards it was done in the public place of God's worship, Deut. 16, 5, 6, 7: for which purpose Jerusalem was afterward chosen, where it was killed by the Priests, and flayed in the Court of the Temple, and the blood sprinkled on the Altar, 2 Chron. 35, 1, 2, 6, 10, 11: then the owner of the Lamb took it at the Priests hands, & brought it to his own house, and roasted it. All these things aimed at the shedding of Christ's blood, and the sprinkling, that is, the applying of it to the hearts of all true believers, Ezek. 45, 19. 1 Pet. 1.2. Heb. 9, 13, 14. As when the Law was commanded to be written upon their door posts, it pointed out the writing of it into their hearts, as it is expounded by the Prophet, Ier. 31, 31. Hebr. 8, 10. And whereas they were to sprinkle the upper door posts, not the threshold or the floor under their feet, it did put them and us in mind what recourent account and estimation we ought to have of the blood of Christ, that we should not tread under our feet the Son of God, neither account the blood of the covenant wherewith we have been sanctified, as an unholy thing, Heb, 10, 29. Some points were to be observed at all times, whensoever and wheresoever they killed and kept the Passover, and consumed it with fire: they must eat it with unleavened cakes, for all leaven must be cast out of their houses; & to this they joined bitter herbs. The roasting of it with fire was a figure both of God's Spirit, Math. 3, 11. Through which Christ offered himself to God, Heb. 9, 14: & also of God's fiery wrath which he was to suffer, whilst he was made a curse for us by his death upon the cross, Gal. 3, 15, Ier. 4, 4. The unleavened loaves signify that none can be partakers of any benefit by Christ, but such as cast out the leaven of maliciousness and wickedness out of their hearts, 1 Cor. 5, 8. This belongeth to everyone to eat the unleavened cakes or loaves of sincerity & truth: of which before chap. 9. The sour or bitter herbs, w^c are thought by the Hebrew Rabbin's to be wild Lettuce, Cichory, Hore-hound, and such like, and were eaten with the Lamb, brought to their remembrance the affliction in Egypt, where their lives had been bitter, Exod. 1, 14: yea, more bitter then gall or wormwood, where the Egyptians made their lives bitter with hard bondage in mortar and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field; and hereunto the Church seemeth to allude, Lament. 3, 15: and all these were as types of the bitter sorrows of Christ, to whom they offered gall to drink: as also of our mortification and afflictions with him, For we must be made like unto him, 1 Cor. 5, 7. & 11.26. Phil. 3, 10.

Also in the day of the first fruits, when ye bring a new meat offering unto the Lord, after your weeks be out, ye shall have an holy convocation, ye shall do no servile work.

27 But ye shall offer the burnt offering for a sweet savor, &c.

28 And their meat Offering of fine Flower, &c.

29 A several tenth deal unto one Lamb, &c.

30 And one Kid, &c.

31 Ye shall offer them besides the continual burnt Offering, &c.

Here is handled the feast of Pentecost, or of Weekes, which was kept yearly amongst the Jews, to give God thanks after the gathering of their harvest. This was a mean to put them in mind to honor God for sending his benefits to the sustenance of man, Leu. 23, 17. Deut. 16, 9, 10. It is called the feast of harvest, Exo. 23, 16. & 22, 29. Their fruits when they were full ripe, and gathered, were brought & offered to God. The Hebrew Canons teach, y^t they were to bring first fruits of seven things only, of Wheat, of Barly, of Grapes, of Figs, of Pomegranates, of Olives, and of Dates; and that if a man brought any other besides these seven kinds, they were not sanctified. Moreover, that they bring no first fruits of liquors, save of oliues and of Grapes, and if they bring other, they are not received. There is no measure of first fruits set, in what measure or quāntity they ought to bring them, nevertheless they teach, that the least quantity which men might bring was one of sixty, as the greatest was the fortith part, so that they might bring what they would between forty and sixty for their first fruits. This feast is also called Pentecost, that is, fifty days, because there were seven weeks between Easter and this: so as there were 49. days between these two feasts, whereunto one being added for the festival day it self, it made fifty. This ceremony is now no longer in use, but instruction from it and by it remaineth. The Jews were as young children, and God ruled them according to their infirmities, Gal. 4, 1. Now let us see the Uses.

[Use 1] First, it teacheth us, not only that GOD hath set us in this world, but fostereth & feedeth us in it, he maketh the earth to yield fruit, so that we live by his bounty and liberality. Therefore the will of God was, that the Jews should keep a yearly feast to him to give him thanks, that thereby they might be provoked to acknowledge all the year after, that they were sustained by his hand, and that they were as it were God's tenants in the land, Deut. 26, 9, 10, Levite. 25, 23. So then, they were to think thus with themselves, we have offered sacrifice to God after harvest: whereby we are put in mind that it is he that hath sent us our sustenance by giving us the early and the latter rain; sending us fruitful, seasons, and filling our hearts with joy and gladness. So then this yearly solemnity of one day, was not as a passport or discharge of farther duty, as if they might forget God all the rest of the year, but rather to be a means to school them all the year after, y^t if we have anything wherewith to succor our selves and sustain our lives, it is God's blessing, who hath pity and compassion upon us. By this we are taught to the worlds end, and are put in mind not to swallow God's benefits as swine without thinking upon him, but rather so often as we eat or drink, we should be ready to give him thanks: and as he openeth our mouths to receive his creatures, so should we open our mouths to pour out his praises. It is he that heareth the heavens, that the heavens may hear the earth, and the earth the corn, and the corn his people, Hos. 2.

Secondly, the first fruits figured out God's [Use 2] Church, which is a people separated and sanctified unto him from the rest of the world. This is a true description of the true Church, and by this we must try whether we be parts and members thereof, or not. It is not enough for us to be in the Church, to make us to be of the Church, For many be among us, that are not of us, saith the Apostle John in his first Epistle, and the second chapter. If we be of y^e Church, we must be a company called and culled out of the world, John 15, 19: for these two are opposed the one to the other, the world and the Church: The whole world lieth in wickedness, but we know that we are of God, 1 John 5, 19. The Apostle John speaking of them both, & comparing one with another saith, Ye are of God, little children; they are of the world, 1 John 4, 4, 5. As then the first fruits were separated from the rest of the heap, and sanctified unto God, so is the estate of the true Church, and of all the members of it, Ier. 2, 3. James 1, 18. Revel. 14, 1: they are sanctified to GOD and to his service, in whom he greatly delighteth. This is the privilege of the regenerate above the unregenerate, that they are created a new in Christ Jesus. They are his spouse, Hos. 2, 19, 23. Eph. 5, 25, his children, John. 1, 12, his servants, Rom. 6, 16, trees of righteousness planted by his right hand, Psal. 1, 3. Isaiah 61, 3, an holy Temple, Eph. 2, 20, 21, an holy Priesthood, and a royal generation, 1 Pet. 2, 5, 9, Revel. 1, 6, and 5, 9. It behooveth us therefore to walk worthy of our calling, Eph. 4, 1, toward God and men: toward God, giving him all glory, Revel. 1, 6: and doing whatsoever he commandeth, John. 15, 14, toward men, having our conversation honest, 1, Pet. 2, 12, and nothing at all regarding the hatred of the world, John 15, 18, 19, &c. Of this see more afterward.

Thirdly, hereby the Lord taught the Jews to deal liberally toward other their brethren, as he had dealt liberally toward them, according as he had blessed them. Where he bestoweth much, there he requires the more: and whatsoever they did, they must do it willingly and cheerfully, Deu. 16, 10, 11. A man may give all his goods, and yet do to God no good service, yea and give his body to be burned, 1 Cor. 13, 3. True it is, he did after a sort lay the bridle in their own necks, and left it to their own choice to offer what they thought best in their own eyes, yet he adds, as the Lord thy God hath blessed thee, Deut. 16: & therefore they must come to an account for it. When he had given them a good and plentiful harvest, that the cart was pressed with the sheaves, & their cup did overflow, from whence came it? or to whom were they beholding for it? Was it not to him? to him only? It is he that openeth his hand wide unto us also, y^t our hearts should be opened in like manner toward him. God dealeth not alike toward all, and he requireth not alike of all. As every man hath received abundantly at his hands, so ought he to impart unto his brother; for that is the end that God aimeth at, and the service that he looketh for. They that devour God's blessings without pity, are no better thē thieves and as caterpillars that eat up the fruits of the earth, Heb, 13, 16, Hos. 6, 7. Our goods can no way profit him, Job 35, 6. True it is, he requireth sacrifices & oblations, howbeit such as think to discharge themselves by coming to the church & by offering their gifts there, do beguile themselves, but cannot beguile the Lord that seeth the heart, forasmuch as all their doings are no better then hypocrisy, if they be not merciful to their brethren that stand in need. There is none of us but would be glad of relief if we were in misery & necessity, and therefore we should show pity toward others. When the Lord would move the Israelites to compassion, he putteth them in mind that they had been strangers & bond slaves in the land of Egypt. Such as have felt the want of worldly things, would be glad that everyone should be willing to stretch out his hand to help them, and therefore we should do the like. Yea, though we never felt any want, let us remember that want may befall us hereafter. For what are we but frail creatures? and what are earthly things but mutable & flitting? No man may exempt him self from the stroke of God, we may fall from plenty to poverty, yea from superfluity to necessity, and be driven to beg our bread, as infinite examples testify. Let us therefore consider that we are mortal men, and that nothing hath befallen to others that may not happen to our selves, that thereby we may be moved not to turn away our eyes from our own flesh, Isaiah 58, 7.

[Use 4] Lastly, we must observe another point in this feast, that it was instituted in the remembrance of the deliverance of the Law, which was given at the same time. For it is said, that the people came to Sinai the third month after their departure out of Egypt, the same day that they departed from Rephidim, Exod. 19, 1, 2: now that was the first day of the month, and the fourteenth day was the day of the Passover. And as the months were then observed which went by the course of the Moon, there was one whole month added; so that in effect there were fifty days from the Passover to God's setting forth of his Law upon Mount Sinai: so as the feast of Pentecost or Whitsontide was referred to that time. Of this we find mention in the New Testament, Acts 2, 1. & 20.16: at this time the holy Ghost came down in cloven tongues, and sate upon the disciples, Acts 2, 3. We know the law of it self could do men no good through their infirmity. It is a dead letter and killeth, 2 Cor. 3, 6, 7. It is a glass to show that we are all sinners & transgressors of it, Rom. 7, 10: and therefore serveth to condemn & accurse us, Gal. 3, 13. Rom. 8, 15. Howbeit at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ and after his ascension, God brought in another manner of Whitsontide then had been observed in time of the shadows and ceremonies, when he vouchsafed to pour down as a shower of rain, the plentiful graces of his Spirit upon his Church: so that the things that were figured under the Law, were fulfilled in Christ our Savior. Wherefore, besides the admonition that the Jews had, to wit, to do homage to God for their harvest, and to fill their mouths with his praise for the fruits of the earth and the bodily sustenance which they received; likewise to impart of part of these blessings to their poor brethren, that there might be a common rejoicing and gladness among them, & so God be glorified with one accord: they had also a resemblance of the things that were fulfilled at the coming of Christ. And albeit it be not evil or unlawful to have one certain day wherein the history of the coming down of the holy Ghost should be declared and published, yet the figure is ceased and accomplished. We must not run trotting or traveling to Jerusalem to worship there, but lift up pure hands everywhere unto him that hath poured out the infinite riches of his holy Spirit, and sent us the living waters, Ezek. 47, 9: that we should have joy and gladness therein, Rom. 14. Let us therefore rejoice, seeing God hath shown himself so bountiful to us, to rejoice even according to the joy in harvest. Isaiah 9, 3. For as the Jews rejoiced in the harvest of corruptible fruits that nourished the body: so we having received the incorruptible graces of the holy Ghost shed abroad in our hearts, should be joyful and glad, by withdrawing our selves from the vanities of this world, and by holding our selves contented with the favor of God, Phil. 4, 7: and when this gladness is wrought in us, we must labor to make others partakers of the same. For, if the Jews were commanded to call the poor, the Widdowes, and the fatherless, to make merry with thē in the use of those outward blessings that God had given them: much more ought we to labor to make others partakers of the spiritual graces which we have received, that belong to the building of y^e church, Rom. chap. 12, 6. 1 Cor. chapt. 12, verse 7. Eph. 2, 14. Zach. 2, 4: as the woman of Samaria being taught by Christ, called out the rest of the City to hear the gracious words that came out of his mouth which she had heard, John 4: so that we ought to say with the Leapers, We do not well: this is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace: and as they said, Come, that we may go and tell the Kings household, 2 Kin. 7, 9: so should we say, Come, let us go and tell our brethren what God hath done for our souls.

CHAP. XXIX.

1 AND in the seventh month, on the first day of the month, ye shall have an holy convocation, ye shall do no servile work: it is a day of blowing the Trumpets unto you.

2 And ye shall offer a burnt offering for a sweet savor unto the Lord, one young Bullock, and one Ram, &c.

3 And their meat Offering shall be of flower mingled with oil, three tenth deals for a bullock, &c.

4 And one tenth deal for one Lamb throughout the seven Lambes.

5 And one kid of the goats for a sin offering, &c.

6 Besides the burnt offering of the month, and his meat Offering, and the daily burnt offering, and his meat offering, and their drink offerings according unto their manner, for a sweet savor, &c.

BEfore we saw how Moses began to handle the daily sacrifice, and the monthly and yearly feasts and solemnities of the Jews: this Chapter is of like argument with the former, describing three other solemn feasts, or rather three yearly sacrifices, one to be offered at the feast of Trumpets, another at the feast of humiliation, the third at the feast of Tabernacles: all these fell out in one and the same month, called of the Hebrews Thisri, which answereth in part to our September. Touching the first, it was to be celebrated on the first day of that month, which was holden sacred in two respects, both in regard of the feast of the New Moon, and then for the feast of Trumpets, so that three ordinary sacrifices were to be offered in it, the daily sacrifice, the monthly, & then that which is proper to this feast, to wit, a young Bullock, a Ram, and seven Lambes of the first year for a burnt offering, &c,

Let us first speak of this feast of Trumpets. Some of the Rabbin's fantastically suppose, that it was instituted in remembrance of the offering up of Isaac, or of deliverance from being offered, which conceit is idle and nothing at all to the purpose. Others imagine, that it was appointed upon occasion of the wars that the Israelites had with the Amalekites and other Nations under the conduct of God, to put them in remembrance that the whole life of man is nothing else but a continual warfare, Job 7, 1. 2 Timoth. 2, 1. Of this feast we read, Levite. 23, 24. This was accounted as a Sabbath, an holy convocation, wherein they must do no servile work. Therein the trumpets or cornets sounded allowed, and the sound thereof was heard far and near. Of this also in part we have spoken before, chap. 10.1.

Let us come to the Uses hereof in regard [Use 1] of our selves, which served of purpose to stir up the people to return unto God praise and thanksgiving with joyfulness of heart for all his benefits, according to that in the Psalms, Make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob, take a Psalm, and bring hither the Timbrel the pleasant Harp with the Psaltery; blow up the Trumpet in the new Moon, in the time appointed on our solemn feast day, Psal. 81, 1, 2, 3. So David having experience of God's good hand toward him in many preservations, composed the 18 Psalm, as a testimony of his thankfulness for his deliverance from the hands of all his enemies & from the hand of Saul. So I should think that the cause of this feast was to be a feast of remembrance for his manifold mercies received in the wilderness, that thereby they might stir up themselves to be united in God. And the cause of the institution of this feast seemeth to be contrary to that which followeth, w^c is the feast of fasting. For as the Jews had a day to humble themselves by fasting, so they were also to have a day of rejoicing, y^t when they heard of those Trumpets, they should stir up themselves to return to GOD with joy of heart. And albeit we neither hear nor have these Trumpets sounding in our ears to call us to the Temple and place of his worship, yet ought we to praise his name cheerfully and readily, with spiritual joy and gladness continually, Isaiah 35, 2, 3, 10. with singing & thanksgiving, Isaiah 49, 20, 21: for it is certain the faithful only have true cause to rejoice, Psal. 32, 11. & 33, 1: the ungodly have no cause at all, Isaiah 48, 20, 21, 22: but rather to weep and lament, Luke 6, 25.

Secondly, it reproveth the Popish sort, who [Use 2] endeavor to follow this commandment, as if it belonged to Christians as a precept in our days, and therefore have a resemblance of it once a year by ringing of bells; yea at every solemn feast they think God is well paid & pleased, when they have rung their bells loud and lustily, and thereby wakened the ghostes of such of their friends as are dead. Such practice is no better then sorcery and witchcraft, which is retained among them. And hence it is, that they ascribe more force to their hallowed and consecrated bells, then ever GOD gave to the sound of these Trumpets. For they ascribe unto them (being once hallowed) a spiritual power against thunder, lightning, and evil spirits: & for that cause they are not ashamed to baptize them, and to exact great sums of money of the people for that purpose, which was one of the grieuances whereof the Princes of Germany complained in the assembly at Noremberg. But this feast served only for the people of old time, and therefore they mingle the Law & the Gospel together, and bring in a Linsy-wolsy religion contrary to the will and commandment of God.

[Use 3] Thirdly, this warneth us of the preaching of the Gospel, concerning Christ the Savior of the world, the conqueror of all our enemies and of them that hate us, Isaiah 58, 1, Zach. 9. For this was a warlike instrument, Num. 6.31 Josh. 6. God hath caused the doctrine of salvation to be sounded out in the world, so that all have heard the sound of it, Psal. 19, 4. Rom. 10, 18, Such a Trumpet was John the Baptist, the forerunner of Christ, who was sent to prepare the way of the Lord, Mark 1, 1, 2: & to call upon them to repent, because the kingdom of God was at hand. And this commendeth to the Ministers in the execution of their office, diligence, carefulness, continuance, cheerfulness, and zeal, 1 Cor. 9, 17. 1 Pet. 5, 2.

[Use 4] Lastly, as the Ministers must be the Lord's Trumpets, so indeed ought every faithful soul to be a Trumpet. For when this feast was yearly observed, such as heard the trumpets were warned by it all the year after to stir up and awaken themselves, remembering that God doth call them as with a loud voice daily, that they should yield up themselves souls and bodies unto him to worship and serve him as he requireth. When this feast was celebrated & solemnized, all the males were not commanded to repair to Jerusalem, as they were at the three more solemn feasts, Exod 23, 17: to wit, if they were free-men and in health, able to go to the place of his worship Deut. 12, 6: & 16, 2. And hence it is, that the Jewish Doctors out of that Law, of all males appearing before rhe Lord three times in the year, do exempt and discharge eleven sorts; and therefore they say that women & servants are not bound, but all men are bound, except the deaf and the dumb, and the fool, & the little child, and the blind, and the lame, and the uncircumcised, and the old man, and the sick, and the tender or weak which are not able to go and travel upon their feet: nevertheless, though the people were far from Jerusalem when this feast was holden, and that they could not resort thither daily to do sacrifice in the Temple, yet they were to consider in their absence, that sacrifices were offered there even in their behalf, and God was worshipped there in the behalf and name of all the Tribes. True it is, this figure is passed away, and utterly abolished by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, howbeit this remaineth that we our selves should serve for trumpets.

For as the Temple being destroyed, we must be spiritual Temples unto God: so y^e Trumpets being taken away, everyone of us must be spiritual Trumpets, that is, we should rouse up our selves, because we are naturally so besotted and wedded to the world, and unto the vanities here below, that it seldom cometh into our minds to think of God, of the Gospel, of the kingdom of heaven. Our ears are so possessed with the sound of earthly things, and our eyes so dazzled with the pleasures of the flesh, that we are as deaf and blind men, that can neither hear nor see what God saith unto us. He calleth unto us daily, and maketh the Gospel sound aloud in the midst of us, that we might have the inward remorse of a good conscience, to repent us of all our evil ways, yet we notwithstanding this summoning of us do remain dull and deaf, & dumb and blind. Wherefore we must not look till there be a solemn holyday to call us unto the Church, there to keep a feast of Trumpets, but it must serve us all the days of our life as a spur to cause us to return to God.

7 And ye shall have on the tenth day of this seventh month, an holy convocation, and ye shall afflict your souls, ye shall not do any work therein.

8 But ye shall offer a burnt offering unto the Lord for a sweet savor, one young bullock, &c.

9 And their meat offering shall be, &c.

10 A several tenth deal for one Lamb, &c.

11 One kid of the Goats for a sin-offering, &c.

The next feast is the feast of affliction or humiliation, otherwise called the feast of fasting. The Jews themselves were so superstitious in the observation of this feast, that (as Munster testifieth) they thought it not lawful for them to read anything that might make themselves merry, or rejoice their hearts; as the departure of the children of Israel out of Egypt, their entrance into the land of Canaan, or their deliverance from the tyranny of Haman, and such like: but only mournful things, that may serve to make them heavy and sorrowful: as the threatenings of the Prophets, the Lamentations of Jeremiah, the destruction of Jerusalem, and other Scriptures of like argument. This feast was not ordained without cause. Many surmise that it had his original for the Lord's forgiving the Israelites their sin of idolatry, committed in making and worshipping the golden Calf, Exod. 32, Of this we read more at large, Levite. 23, 26, 27, 28. It was solemnized on the tenth day of the seventh month, to be a day of atonement, an holy convocation to afflict their souls, and to offer an holy offering by fire to the Lord, and whatsoever soul shall not be afflicted in that same day, he shall be cut off from among his people. This yearly feast of expiation is also described. Levite, 16, 29: and it is made an everlasting statute to make an atonement for the children of Israel for all their sins once a year. This was not ordained without cause, forasmuch as we see how men do naturally cover their faults as much as they can. So the Prophet Zacharias testifieth, that while the people were in captivity and banishment in Babylon, all that whole time they had kept their extraordinary fasts very strictly, chap, 7, 5.

[Use 1] But let us proceed to the Uses. Heereby the Jews and all men to the end of the world are put in mind; that we must seriously bethink us of our sins, both of the greatness and number of them which we commit, and humble our selves for them. It was the will of God to establish amongst his own people a year-mind of them, by teaching them to humble themselves by fasting, and acknowledging their sins, and making a solemn confession of them, and craving pardon and forgiveness of them. We cannot think of our sins aright without grief of heart, neither ought we to be grieved for this grief, 2. Cor. 7, 8. This sorrow is of God, and for our good, and therefore called godly sorrow, and is not to be shunned or shaken off by us. It pleaseth God greatly, and maketh glad the Angels in heaven, Luke 15, verse 17: and bringeth us unto infinite joy and peace of conscience in the latter end. Such then as can be glad and rejoice at it exceedingly when they have offended God, and wounded their own souls, their sin is deep, their heart is hard, and their condemnation shall be double in hell, of whom Christ saith, Luke 6, 25. Woee be to you that laugh, for ye shall weep and wail. So then, their public and solemn fasting was a protesting of themselves to be guilty in God's fight of horrible offenses, and they were put in mind when they were come home to their houses, to consider that it is not enough for them to hang down their heads like a bullrush for a day, and to crave forgiveness: for we provoke God every day, and as it were, enter into a new band with death. True it is we are washed, but we defile our selves again: God hath pardoned us, yet we return to our sin as to our vomit again, and we make no end of sinning. So long as we live in this world, we have some corruptions lurking in us, and it is impossible for us altogether to abstain from evil. Thus were the Jews taught to look upon themselves, and into themselves, and upon their sins by this feast, which haply otherwise they would never have thought upon: and thus it serveth for our instruction also.

Secondly, we see hereby what superstition [Use 2] remaynerh amongst the Romanists, who have turned this feast of Affliction and humiliation, into their Lenton-fast: then they hang down their heads, and acknowledge their sins, and punish themselves with fasting, & pretend for it the example of the Jews, and the practice of Christ. Thus they make us no better for the coming of our Lord Jesus in the flesh, Galath. chap. 5, verse 4. and 4, verse 2, who hath shown himself unto the world. They pretend themselves to be Christians, but make themselves Jews. Neither is it any whit better to maintain their Fast of forty days, by an apish imitation of Christ Jesus. For if they will be like unto him, let them abstain from all manner of meat and drink, let them during those days eat nothing at all, and then let them boast that they have fasted and fashioned themselves like unto him. But their manner is to feed themselves unto the full at dinner, that they are like to surfeit, and they cramme their bellies that they leave no room for anymore.

Again, the Fast of Christ was not an abstinence from flesh only, and a taking liberty to eat fish, to drink wine, and to feed upon all kind of the most delicate dishes, which is the Romish Fast; he did eat nothing at all in those days. Moreover, he did this but once in all his life, and that to show his divine power, and to magnify the majesty of the Gospel; whereas these scorners will seem to go beyond him by many degrees, and not to resemble him. And wherefore do they take up the fashion of the Jews to afflict themselves, but to have freer scope to despise & despise God himself all the year after? They make sour faces, and disfigure themselves, & play the notable hypocrites when Passion-sunday cometh, I think to mock at the passion of Christ. Lastly, they make their Fasting to be meritorious, and to deserve remission and forgiveness at the hands of God, and so prefer their own traditions before the precepts and commandments of God.

Lastly, we must learn the true use and end of fasting, and the nature of it. To this [Use 3] purpose we must know what kinds there are of it, what it is, what are the parts of it, and the sundry corruptions wherewith it hath been stained.

First, there are diverse sorts of fasts: there is a fast prescribed by the learned Physician, to preserve or restore health, when the body is troubled with repletion.

Secondly, the fast of sobriety and temperance, Romans 13, 13, 1 Corinthians 9, 25. 1 Thessalonians 5.6. 1 Peter 5, 7. Of this Bernard speaking saith, Let the eyes, ears, tongue, hand, and soul it self fast: let the eyes fast from curious sights and all wantonness: let the ears fast from fables and evil reports: let the tongue fast from slander, and murmuring, and railing speeches: let the hands fast from evil works, and the soul from sin and doing our own will, Luke 21, 34. Ezekiel 16.49.

Thirdly, there is a forced and constrained fast, as in time of famine, when we can get nothing to feed upon: to this we may add the poor man's fast, who often fasteth because he hath nothing to put in his belly.

Fourthly, there is the miraculous fast, which cannot be brought into imitation; such was the fast of Moses, of Elias, and of Christ himself, Exodus 34, 28, 1 Kings 19, 8. Matthew 4, 2. But of these we have nothing to say at this present. There is another fast that is pointed out in this place, which is the religious fast.

The Lord commanded by Moses, that every soul once in the year should humble it self in fasting before the Lord in one of the great assemblies of his people, Levite. 16, 29, 30, 31, and 23, 27, 28, &c. And albeit the ceremony of the day be taken away, Galatians 4, by the coming of Christ, yet the thing it self remaineth and continueth in force, as well as a day of rest for God's service, albeit the Jewish Sabbath be abolished. The circumstances of moral duties may be changed, but the substance may not be abrogated.

For where the same causes continue, there the thing it self abideth. We have as great cause of humiliation as ever the Jews had, of making our prayers fervent, being as much subject to coldness as they were; and as great cause to be careful, that the wrath of God do not break out upon us, or being broken out to desire to have it returned back, and the sword of God put up again into his sheath.

And therefore this holy exercise is of as great and necessary use as ever it was, and it remaineth in as full force and strength as ever it did, Joel 2, 12. Luke 5, 33. 1 Cor. 7, 5. Acts 13, 2, 3.

Let us therefore in the next place see what it is. Fasting is an abstinence for one day, commanded of the Lord, from all meats & drinks and delights of this life, thereby to make solemn profession of our humiliation. It is an abstinence from all meats and drinks: All the people came to cause David to eat meat while it was yet day, but David sware, saying, So do God to me and more also, if I taste bread, or ought else till the Sun be down, 2 Sam. chapter 3, 35. Ion. chapter 3, verse 7. They were commanded to put away their best raiment: Exod. chapter 33, verses 5, 6. The Lord said unto Moses, say unto the children of Israel, Ye are a stiffnecked people, I will come suddenly upon thee, and consume thee: therefore now put thy costly raiment from thee, that I may know what to do unto thee. So the childrē of Israel laid their goodly raiment from them, &c. To abstain from mirth & music, from pleasures and all recreations, Joel 2, verse 16. 1 Chron. 7, verse 5. Dan. chapter 6, 18: and instead of these, to give themselves to weeping, mourning, and lamentation, Nehem. chapter 1, verse 4. For this cause they had their sackcloth and ashes, to signify that they were not worthy of any attire, and that they were no better then dust and ashes. This was to continue one whole day, 2 Sam. 3, 35. Judge. chapter 20, verse 26. 1 Sam. chapter 14, verse 24. 2 Sam. chapter 1, verse 12: and at even when they came to eat, they did not seek delicate meat, or fill themselves with wine or strong drink, or fare daintily to pamper the flesh, but were content with such as came to hand, and used that sparingly also: they fed upon the bread of tears, Psal. 80, 3: and mingled their drink with weeping, Psal. 102. Sometimes indeed they continued their fast longer, as occasion served, and upon extraordinary causes, Ester 4, 16, Acts 9, 9. Neh. 1, 1, 2. 2 Sam. 12. Dan. 10.1, 2.

Furthermore I add, it was commanded of God both in the Law, as we shown before, and in the Gospel, Luke 5, 33, 35. The end of this ordinance is for our further and better humiliation, Leviticus 23, 27, 16, 29, Psal. 35, 13. Deuteron. 10, 12, 1 Kings 21, 27, 28, 29, 2 Chron. 12, 6, 7. Ezra 8, 21.

Of this there are two sorts: for the religious fast is either private performed by one or moe in a family, that our prayers may be more effectual, Nehem. 1, 4. 2 Sam. 12, 16. Psal. 35.13. 2 Sam. 3.35. Psal. 69, 10. Dan. 9. and 10. Acts 10.2.30. Luke 2.36. Ester 4.16: or else public, performed by the whole congregation, Joel 2.12, Jonah 3, 7: It ought not to be used of a few; and therefore all sorts of people should come to the same as on the Sabbath day, and none absent themselves from the assemblies.

Now of both these fasts we must consider the parts, that some are outward, and some inward.

The outward parts pertain to the body, and are called a bodily exercise, 1, Timothy 4.8: as to abstain from meat and drink, watching in prayer, abridging of our sleep & such like commodities, delights and pleasures of this life, thereby to make us fitter for the inward grace of the mind; that the body being thereby humbled and the flesh pulled down, the soul may also be humbled before the Lord.

[Objection] But it will be objected, that God being a Spirit regardeth not these outward things, forasmuch as he will be served in spirit and truth, John. 4, 24. Rom. 14.17. 1 Cor. 8.8. Mat. 15, 11.

[Answ.] I answer, we must consider that fasting is the Lord's ordinance, and he commandeth this abstinence, and therefore it ought not to be left undone, because we are bound to all that which he commandeth.

And as GOD requireth it, so he will accept of it, and give a blessing unto it, and to all those that with care and conscience shall use it. Albeit it be of small value in it self, yet GOD hath ordained it to an excellent end, even to humble the soul; and it shall be available to that purpose, which is no small benefit.

As water in Baptism, and the bread and wine in the Supper of the Lord are little or nothing worth considered in themselves; and as the rest appointed on the Sabbath, can little further us, if we go no further: howbeit they bring a great blessing to such as use them with reverence, faith, and repentance. Nevertheless, we are not to trust in these outward things, but these outward ceremonies must lead us by the hand to higher matters, lest God send us away empty as we came, Ezra 6, 21; or else the fast of the beasts in Nineveh shall be as good as our fast, Jonah 3, 7: for they were covered with sackcloth, and did neither feed, nor drink water.

These virtues are the acknowledging of our own unworthiness: also watchfulness, humility, zeal, & hope of mercy at the hands of God, and assurance to obtain that which we ask of him in prayer. These are no small graces and benefits. For the servants of GOD by their abstinence from meat and drink confessed themselves unworthy so much as of a crumb of bread, or of a drop of water: by putting on sackcloth, unworthy of the worst rag to cover their shame and nakedness. They deprived themselves of the benefit of sleep, and cut themselves shorter of it then at other times, to stir up themselves to perseverance and watchfulness in prayer and other holy duties. They put dust and ashes upon their heads, to testify what they had deserved, even to be as far under the earth as they were above it, yea to be deprived of life, and to be stricken with death for their sins, and to be worthy of eternal condemnation.

And for the practice of all these, they quickened their prayers, and as it were added wings unto them, that they might more easily pierce the heavens, and present themselves in the presence of God, and therefore prayer and fasting were joined together, Ezra 9, 5. Nehem. 1, 4. Dan. 9, 3. Judge. 20, 26, Luke 2, 37, and 5, 33. 1 Cor. 7.7. True it is, prayer is available without fasting; but fasting is never available without prayer. For fasting is not the worship of God, but only an help to it.

But here observe, that notwithstanding this exercise of our faith be so often commanded, so often commended, so often practiced, so often blessed, yet Satan hath not ceased from time to time to mingle darnel, yea poison with it; so though it remain, yet it remaineth without profit. As he hath corrupted prayer it self, so he hath blended and infected the exercise of holy fasting. If he should have gone about utterly to take them away, his craft would soon have been espied, therefore he goeth about another way. And let us a little see what the Popish fasting is, according as it is delivered and practiced by themselves. For contraries set together do serve to illustrate one another. Their fasting is defined to be a subtraction or diminishing of our meat or diet, according to the institution or doctrine of the Church, at times appointed, under pain of mortal sin, to make satisfaction for sins, and to merit the grace of God and life everlasting.

Thus by appointing fasts, they overturn the right ends of fasting: and by their intention of satisfaction for sin, and procuring of eternal life, and such like horrible, detestable, and intolerable blasphemies, they destroy the only sufficient satisfaction of Christ.

The Church of Rome charge us to be enemies to fasting, and that our doctrine is a doctrine of liberty: but we are enemies only to their abuses and corruptions, not to fasting it self, neither do we allow the breach of fasting days: We hold that it is a Christian exercise needful to be used for the humbling of our souls, and the enabling of our selves to the duties of prayer and repentance, as often as the time shall require: besides, our Church hath public fasts in the time of any general infection or affliction, and our people are instructed and called upon to fast privately also, when the cause is more private.

The difference between them and us is this; We reject their set days, and their name of fast upon those days by distinction of meats for conscience sake, wherein they place the worship of God, and in the ends which they propound to themselves, to wit, merit and satisfaction.

And as they bring in these inventions, so they neglect such exercises of Religion as of right ought to be joined with the outward abstinence.

Their fasting is only a forbearing of flesh and things that come of flesh on certain and set days, allowing to themselves instead thereof, not only fish which is as good and nourishable as flesh, but that which is daintier, as wines, march-panes, conserves, and such like sweet meats, in as great measure as can be; so that they eat as often and as good as we do (even when they profess to fast) if not better.

12 And on the fifteenth day of the seventh month, ye shall have an holy convocation, ye shall do no servile work, and ye shall keep a feast to the Lord seven days.

13. 14. 15. 16. And ye shall offer a burnt offering, a sacrifice made by fire of a sweet savor unto the Lord, thirteen young bulloakes, two rams, and fourteen lambes of the first year: they shall be without blemish. And their meat offering, &c.

17, 18, 19. And on the second day ye shall offer twelve young bullocks, two rams, fourteen lambes, of the first year without spot. And their meat offering, &c.

20, 21, 22. And on the third day, eleven bullocks, two rams, fourteen lambes of the first year without blemish. And their meat offering, &c.

23, 24, 25. And on the fourth day, ten bullocks, two rams, and fourteen Lambes, &c. Their meat offering, &c.

26, 27, 28, And on the fifth day, nine bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambes, &c. And their meat offering, &c.

29, 30, 31. And on the sixth day, &c. 35, 36, On the eighth day, &c.

The last feast mentioned in this chapter is the feast of Tabernacles, and of ingathering of the fruits of the land in the end of the year, when they had gathered in their labors out of the field, Exod. 23, 16, and 34, 22. This also was kept in the seventh month for the space of eight days, and therefore how they should come before the Lord, and what they should offer every day, is particularly remembered to the end of the Chapter. And lest they should bring little unto GOD, and think to please him with a small pittance (as many hold it well saved which can be saved from the worship of God) he stinteth them what they shall bring, and setteth down the number of bullocks, rams, and lambes which they should offer every day. This feast began upon the fifteenth day. The Jews have mingled this day with many superstitions. The Lord set down particularly unto them what they should do, and left nothing to their own choice; howbeit they have found out many inventions and traditions, & would not content themselves with the simplicity of the Scripture. But the right use thereof is expressed in sundry places of the Law, Levite. 23, 34. Deut. 16, 13. It is called the feast of Tabernacles, because during the days of this feast they were to live in tents or Tabernacles, it being a memorial of God's preserving of them in the wilderness where was no house for them in which to rest and inhabit. This was a most holy feast to remember them when they had no dwellings, and therefore Moses doth so largely dwell upon the solemnities of it: then they were especially enjoined to read the Lew, at this feast, when all Israel was to appear before the Lord, Deut. 31, 10, 2. Chron. 8, 13, Ezz. 3, 4. Nehem. 8, 14, 15, John. 7, 2.

This feast is now abrogated, and belonged not to the Gentiles that were converted to the faith, after the passion and ascension of Christ, Coloss. 2, 17. Acts 15, 10. Heb. 10.1. Notwithstanding we must consider the inward signification of this ceremony, and see what uses remain thereof to our selves. And therefore the Prophet Zacharias, chapter 12, 16, describing the calling of the Gentiles to the true God, and their gathering into the true Church, setteth it forth according to the manner of God's service used in the Law, that they should go up from year to year to worship the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of Tabernacles: alluding to the ceremony of the Law, as our Savior doth, Matth. 5, 23, 24, meaning that they should worship GOD according to his commandments, and not after their own fancies.

First, we learn hereby, that it is a duty [Use 1] belonging to all to remember the days of their troubles and afflictions, from which GOD in great mercy hath delivered us.

Hence it is, that GOD doth put his people in remembrance so oftentimes of their deliverance out of Egypt, yea even when they were settled in safety, and planted in the land of Canaan:

they must call to mind, that they were sometimes strangers in the land of Egypt, Deuteron. 4, 20, and 6, 12, 20, 21, 22, and 10, 19: and therefore GOD wrote this with his own finger in the Law, Exod. 20, 2, that they should always have before them the iron furnace, how he brought them forth to be unto him a people of inheritance. We are ready to forget our former condition, when GOD hath given us rest: and as the wise virgins themselves slumbered Math. 25, 5: so we are very prove to security when once he hath removed our sorrows and sufferings from us. So then, the Lord GOD would have his own people year by year to depart out of their houses, and dwell in tents, that is, under the open firmament in arbors made of boughs and branches.

I will not stand to recount the foolish and apish toys, which the Jews at this day take upon them to observe; as that their Cabines be not too close, but made full of holes: they are careful & diligent to provide y^t the boughs be not too thickly plotted together: they must have loop-holes to see the stars, whereas in the mean season they little consider whereunto God meant to direct them, & what lesson he meant to teach them: so that we might say unto them, as Paul sometimes did to the men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious, Acts 17, 22. Thus doth the Evangelist tax them for the holiness that they put in their often washings, Mar. 7, 3, 4. The Pharisees and the Jews except they wash their hands oft, eat not, holding the tradition of the Elders; and when they come from the market, except they wash they eat not: and many other things there be, which they have taken upon them to observe, as the washing of cups, and pots, and brazen vessels, and of tables. In all which it may be truly said of them, that they lay the commandment of God apart, and observe the traditions of men.

But in this feast, the purpose of God was, that they should call to mind, both where they were, and where they had been; that albeit they were at rest and ease in the land of Canaan, yet they had not always been so, for GOD had carried them as it were upon Eagles wings and led them in a strange and miraculous manner in the wilderness for forty years.

Thus ought we to consider what we have been in times past, as well as what we are at the present, and thereby be provoked to serve and glorify him in time to come. Thus doth the Lord deal with Saul, 1 Sam. 15, 17, When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast not thou made Head of the tribes of Israel? &c. Thus he dealeth with David, 2. Sam. 12, 7, 8. Thus he sendeth his Prophet to tell Jeroboam what he was, and to call him back to the consideration of his first beginning, 1 Kings 14, 7, I exalted thee from among the people, and made thee Prince of my people Israel, and rent the kingdom away from the house of David, and gave it thee; and thou hast not been as my servant David, which kept my commandment, and followed me with all his heart, and did only that which was right in mine eyes; but hast done evil above all that were before thee: (for thou hast gone and made thee other gods, and molten images, to provoke me, and hast cast me behind thy back) &c. We ought also to consider what we have been in regard of temporal deliverances, and in regard of spiritual deliverances from the bondage of sin, Ephes. 2.1, 2, 3, 4, 11, 12, 13: for their deliverance from the slavery of Egypt did figure out our deliverance by Christ from the bondage of sin, Satan, and hell it self.

[Use 2] Secondly, observe from this feast that GOD evermore preserveth his Church, even when it is oppressed with greatest dangers and troubles, nay then his power and mercy is made most manifest: his power shineth brightest in our weakness, and his mercy appeareth most of all in our misery. The people of Israel had notable experience hereof in the wilderness, when they removed from place to place, and had no leisure to build, neither had they stuff wherewith to build. They were a wonderful multitude of people, by reason whereof it may seem incredible, that God should preserve them and their children in Boothes and Tents, without houses to cover and keep them. We know that houses serve to defend from cold and heat, from wind and weather, and many other discommodities: yet did GOD nourish and maintain them without any houses, and therefore his goodness was to be acknowledged in that behalf. It had been no better then a plain mockery or may-game to have come to Jerusalem, and there to punish themselves and dwell a while in Cabines and to shift places, except it had been to some ende, and they had been taught to magnify the Name of God, and to put their trust in him. For all ceremonies did aim at some instruction, that the faithful might thereby be edified, and learn to live in the fear of God: otherwise they are not only unprofitable, but also abominable in the sight of God. So then, we must acknowledge where and whence we have our deliverances, and learn to give God praise, as also for the fruits of the earth that we have received.

Thirdly, though the feast of Tabernacles [Use 3] be not any longer in use, that we should be bound to the keeping of it, yet the doctrine arising from it concerneth us as much as ever it did the Jews. Our keeping of this feast must not be for a week or twain, but all our life, so long as we live upon the earth. We must acknowledge that we are Pilgrims in this world, Hebrews, chapter 11, verse 16, & if we be not strangers in this present world, we have no part in the kingdom of heaven. If then we will have God to accept and avouch us for his children, we must assure our selves, that this life is nothing to us but a way or rather indeed a race toward our heavenly Country. It is not enough for us to go fair and softly (as the most do) but we must always run apace, pressing forward with all our strength and force, holding on our way, and straining our selves to attain to the ende of our course. For this is certain, except we use might and force, we shall never get one step forward, but we shall retire four back for it. We are of slow pace, and creep as it were upon all four, and Satan useth many means to hinder us, and therefore we must fight as good soldiers of Jesus Christ against all such impediments.

Albeit therefore God do house us and harbor us in this world, yet it is as he did to his people in the wilderness: so that he would not have us to nestle here, nor to be entangled in the snares of it, neither to make it our everlasting resting place; but to be ready to fly upward: not to be as swine looking down to the ground, but rather as Larkes, mounting upward from the earth. Some have here no resting place at all, but are tossed and turmoiled up and down as waves of the sea, and so Paul speaketh of himself, 2, Cor, 7, 5: others never remove out of the place where they are borne, but live peaceably among their own people, and continue at home in their own house without any trouble to themselves or others: yet must all account their chief resting place to be in heaven, out of which we shall never be removed, and when once we are clothed with it as with a garment, we shall never be vnclodeth or dismantled to be found naked, 2 Cor. 5, 6. Heb. 11, 13. Thus it was with all the Patriarchs and holy fathers from the beginning of the world, and so it ought to be with us.

[Use 4] Lastly, we are hereby put in mind of the shortness of this life, we are here for a season, and by and by near gone. And albeit we make our houses never so strong, and build them up with brick and stone to continue, yet our bodies are all as Tabernacles always decaying. For what is our life but a vapor? and what are our bodies but dust and ashes? We may well frame our houses of square stone, and make us palaces of marble; but our bodies cease not to be of this clay; and what is all flesh but grass, and what is all the glory of man but as the flower of the field, which flourisheth today, and tomorrow withereth away? The rich men of this world build them towers and castles that top the skye, and lay their lands about them, and call them oftentimes by their name, as Absalom did his pillar: their building is sound and substantial, and able to endure many years, and standeth out against all weather for many generations, and at the end of them is as firm and fast as at the first day. But in the mean season what are the Tabernacles of their and our bodies, but a simple cottage or cabbine, ever defaying and declining; having his foundation in the dust? A man may easily erect such building as shall remain: but can we build our bodies, so as they may be of any long continuance? and make our houses of clay to be as pillars of marble? what shall it profit us to build fair houses and pleasant gardens, & fruitful fields, and to forget the frailty of our bodies which must shortly fall into the dust, and be consumed to ashes? Let us therefore learn the doctrine of the Apostle, 2 Cor. 5, 1. If our outward man decay, we have a building prepared for us in heaven. And we must say with Peter, I must shortly put off this my Tabernacle; as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shown me, 2 Pet. 1, 14, when this lodging of ours shall decay, we shall dwell in an house incorruptible. Our bodies are but as arbours made of green leaves, which are of no continuance, one blast of wind is strong enough to blow them away, Isaiah 40, 6. Every man hath some disease or other about him, that will not suffer him to endure long: our humors are not so equally tempered, where the best constitution is, but one of them threateneth destruction to the other, and strive which of them shall prevail and overcome, howbeit all is one to man; for whether of them soever do gain, man receiveth the loss, even the loss of his life. And if he had no disease or distemper, yet wait but a while, and age it self will be a disease, and as the messenger of death unto him, that even without sickness he slideth away, as the fruit of a tree, when it is ripe, falleth down of it self, though there be no hand to pluck it, or wind to shake it, or thief to steal it, or tempest to drive it. When we diligently consider this, then we have indeed learned to keep this feast of the Tabernacles spiritually. To conclude therefore, let every man beware that he seek not his own ease overmuch.

This is one rule, that we do not pamper or cocker our own flesh in the lusts thereof, Rom, 13, 14. If we should give the bridle to our flesh, it is as a bottomless pit that will never be filled. Secondly, such as are planted commodiously in this world, must beware that they do not forget the world to come: and they that enjoy the earth at will, must remember the kingdom of heaven, wherein they must only place the top of their happiness. If we seek heaven upon earth, we shall never find it in the next life. Thirdly, let us use this world, as though we used it not; rejoice as though we rejoice not, and weep as though we weped not, considering that the fashion of this world vanisheth away, 1 Cor. 7, 30, 31.

Here can be no certainty, nor assurance of anything, but in health we have one foot in sickness, and in life we be at the brink of death. In joy and gladness we are near to the house of sorrow and affliction, Lastly we must account of every day as our last day; what is present we see before our eyes, but what is to come we see not, we know not. The rich man built, and planted, and plotted for many years, and promised to himself a long life upon the earth, but it was said unto him, This night shall they take away thy soul from thee, &c. Luke 12.

CHAP. XXX.

1 AND Moses shake unto the heads of the Tribes, concerning the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded;

2 If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond; he shall not break his word, he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.

NOW Moses cometh to speeke of such Laws as are voluntary, that is, of vows, whereof he setteth down two sorts; one concerning men, the other concerning women, and showeth in what persons they are ratified, and in what persons they are frustrated. Touching the man which is the head of the woman, he is charged not to falsify his word or his oath, lest he profane the Name of GOD which he hath taken in his mouth, but to perform his promise that he hath made, as Psal. 15, 4, he shall dwell in the holy hill of GOD, that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. Touching the woman, she is ordinarily and by the Law of nature under the power and authority of another. Wherefore touching their vows we must give judgment according to the place which they hold, and the calling into which they are entered. For the woman that taketh an oth, or maketh a vow, either is in the power of her father, or in the power of her husband, or in her own power, or else in the power of one when she vowed, and in the power of another when she is to perform it. A woman in her fathers power is bound to perform that which she hath sworn or vowed, but conditionally, if the father allow of it, either by his word or by his silence; so that the vow standeth, if he approve of it either by speaking or by holding his peace. For here the common proverb is verified, He that wittingly & willingly holdeth his peace, doth closely & secretly give his consent. But on the other side if the father dislike and disallow the vow, she is freed because she is not free. And if the woman be married, and at the disposition of her husband, it followeth by proportion of the former Law, that if her husband approve her vow, either openly or secretly, directly or indirectly, by speaking or holding his peace so soon as he heareth it or heareth of it, she is bound to keep it: but if he consent not, but disallow and disavow it, her vow is void, and she is to ask pardon of her rashness. If she be a widow and set free, being at her own liberty, and not under the jurisdiction of father that bestowed her, or of the husband to whom she was bestowed in marriage, she is bound to perform her vow. The Apostle teacheth, that the woman which hath an husband is bound by the Law to her husband so long as he liveth, but if he be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband, Rom. 7, 2. As she is free to vow, so he is bound to pay that which he hath vowed, because the promise was voluntary and free, and there is none can make it void. Lastly, the widow must not think her self discharged by her new or second marriage, but the time of making her vow, to wit, in her widowhood, must be considered and remembered. But such as are cut of the fathers power, or by death of the husband set free, must pay their vows to the most High, without denying, or delaying, or diminishing, what they have solemnly and advisedly vowed,

From hence we may learn how to answer sundry particular questions touching the vowing of men and women. [Object.] And first the question may be asked, what if it be the vow of a son or of a daughter under their father, or one any way under the power of another, as of a servant under his Master, shall that vow be good, or such person be bound to perform it? I answer, [Answ.] a vow must be of things in our own power: but he that is in the power of his father and of his master, is not at his own hand, his will dependeth upon the will & pleasure of another; and therefore Jonathan telleth his father, that David had asked leave of him to go to Bethlehem, 1 Sam. 20, 28, for their family had a sacrifice to offer in that city. If then, being the servant of Saul, he would not presume to go before he had obtained leave of the Kings son, doubtless such vows are to be held unlawful, unless his governor confirm it, or he that hath vowed ratify it when he cometh to be at his own hand. Again, it may be demanded, whether such do not sin, as vow being in the power of others, in not performing their vow? True it is, they ought not to have vowed, but having made the vow, do they not sin except they perform it? [Answer.] I answer, they sin in vowing, but they do not sin in their not performing of it; wherefore Moses saith afterward, The Lord shall forgive her: he meaneth not her forbearing to perform y^e vow, forasmuch as if she should perform it, she should set at naught her fathers power & authority, which God by no means will suffer; and consequently add sin unto sin: but God will pardon her rash and unadvised vow which she had uttered. The doctrine from the first words is this, that vows made to God lawfully, are to be performed, Deut. 23.21, Psal. 76, 11, and 66.13, and 50, 14, Deu. 12, 17. This is further confirmed unto us by sundry examples of the faithful, as Jacob, Gen. 28, 20, 21, and 31, 13. Hannah the mother of Samuel, 1 Sam. 1, 11, David, Psal. 22, 25, & 61, 8, & 116, 14, and diverse others.

This truth is plain, because it is better [Reason 1] never to vow, (understand this of lawful vows) then to fail in not performing the vow. For this is to offer the sacrifice of fools, and it may be said to them, as Peter spake to Ananias. Acts 5, 4, Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God. If we have a promise made unto us by men, who had not rather never to have had such a promise, then to be deceived? Eccl. 5, 3, 4. Secondly, such do take the Name of God in vain, which is a grievous sin, and he will never hold them guiltless that take his Name in vain, Exod. 20. Thirdly, salvation is of no other then of God; and therefore to him we should return the praise of our deliverance, Jonah 2, 10. Lastly, the Gentiles by the light of nature have used to vow, Jonah 1.16.

This reproveth all unlawful vows, & first [Use 1] of such as are touched in this place expressly, when they take upon them to vow, being under the subjection of others. And here is fitly taxed the doctrine of the Church of Rome, which teach that parents, have no authority to hinder their children from following rash & unadvised vows, and that children are not bound to have their parents consent to enter into cloysters, into which indeed they ought not to enter, no not with their consent. Hence it is, that they maintain and defend, that children may steal away lawfully from their parents, and became Monks and Nuns, not only without their consent, but against it; who indeed ought not to enter into those styes and stables with their consent, neither have parents any warrant or authority to give their consent. And how much do they better many times, then if they should thrust them into the stews to learn honesty? Secondly, such may not lawfully vow as are children in age, though they have no parents living to controlle them, and those that are children in knowledge, who know not what a vow is, or how it bindeth, for how should these bind themselves? Thirdly, such as are foolish or furious; forasmuch as albeit they may be out of the power of others, yet they are not in their own power: and albeit that no man may command them, yet they have not the command over themselves: and therefore may justly be accounted as children. Fourthly such as are rash and unadvised in their vows: such was the vow of Saul, 1 Sam. 14, 24: the vow of the Benjamites, Judge. 21, 1: and the vow of Iephte, Judge. 11, 30, 31. A vow and an oath are of the same nature, and both of them unadvisedly undertaken, do dishonor God. Fifthly, such as are wicked & ungodly vows, and these are of two sorts, either de malo, aut de bono male, that is, made for doing of some evil, or doing some good but not well: as for example, If one vow to kill a man, as they did that bound themselves by a vow, neither to eat nor drink, till they had killed Paul, Acts 23, 12. These bound themselves to do that which is simply in it self an evil thing. Such was Herod's vow or oath, Math. 14. And thus two evils meet together, the one whereof is to vow, the other to perform such a vow; and therefore such vows are not to be kept. This serveth to set before the eyes of many their folly, who never consider what the vow is which they have taken upon them to observe, but if they can say, I have a vow to do this or that, they grow obstinate and settled in evil, and will by no means be removed, yea and think they are bound by virtue of their vow to do it, and are discharged of all fault and offense when they have done it: whereas that which is evil to vow, is much worse to perform; and therefore they must repent of their rash vow, and not proceed to the accomplishment of it, for that were to add one transgression to another, as it were drunkenness unto thirst, and to plunge themselves into endless destruction both of soul & body. This is the case of many young men and women who have entangled themselves in such vows, by promising marriage either to other without the consent of parents; they often pretend great scruple of conscience, which cannot be tied by such evil vows, the vow was evil, and therefore the way is not to go forward, but to crave pardon of GOD for that evil, as here it is prescribed in this Chapter. They also are to be accounted evil vows which are made for the doing of some good, if they be not well and rightly made, and consequently they are not to be broken, as if a man in fasting or any other work should purpose to do that which is above his strength and ability. Sixthly, such are forbidden as are constrained vows and involuntary, when they are undertakē against a man's will, whereas they ought to be free as well as made by them that are free. There must be a willing mind before there can be a lawful vow. Seventhly, they must be of good importance, not of any idle or trifling toys, or of vain and foolish matters, in which the name of God is not to be used. Eighthly, superstitious vows, as to vow abstinence from this or that kind of meat for religion sake; such also as bind themselves to go on pilgrimage, and to offer to this or that holy Saint, or rather image or idol; these and such like observed in the Church of Rome, are reprov'd in the Sermons de Tempore, ascribed to Agustine: One voweth a cloak, another Oil, a third a wax candle, God careth not for these vows: but offer unto God that which at this day he hath redeemed, to wit, thy soul. The vows of obedience and repentance are the true and the best vows, the offering up of our bodies & souls a living sacrifice is most acceptable to God, and most profitable to our selves. Lastly, such vows as are impossible & above the strength of the vndertakers, are also forbidden as unlawful, among which we may range the vow of single life, and abjuring of marriage, which is honorable in all, and the bed undefiled, Hebr. 13, 4: so that they sin not against GOD which do contrary to such vows. For continency or single life is not necessarily annexed to the Ministry, neither hath God laid such a yoke upon their necks that enter into that calling. God hath left marriage free unto all, and it is the doctrine of devils to forbid marriage, as the Bishop of Rome doth, who speakech lies through hypocrisy, 1 Tim. 4, 1, 2. For he will have none admitted into the holy Ministry, but such as are vnmarried, or being married promise to live from their wives: as also he excludeth such as have been twice married, and such as have married a widow. But the Apostle telleth the Corinthians, that he had power to lead about a wife being a sister, as well as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas, 1 Cor. 9 5. And he speaketh generally, To avoid fornication let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband, 1 Cor. 7, 2. Again, declaring and prescribing what persons should be chosen to that office, he saith, A Bishop must be the husband of one wife, 1 Tim. 3, 2, 4. Titus 1, 6; one that can rule his own house, having children under obedience with all honesty. Thomas Aquinas confesseth (Secunda Secundae quaest. 88. artic. 11.) that it is not essentially annexed to holy Orders, that men should contain & live a single life that enter into the Ministry, but by the Decree of the Church only. With him agreeth Cardinal Bellarmine, (Bel. de cleri. lib. 1. cap. 8.) who showeth that there is no prohibition of almighty God found either in the old or New Testament; he might have said infinite examples are found to the contrary, Adam was married in the time of his innocence, and lived in the Garden a married man. Noah a Preacher of righteousness was married: the Patriarchs were married: the Priests & the high Priest himself was married: the Prophets and the sons of the Prophets were married: and many Deacons, Ministers, and Bishops after Christ's time lived married. It were easy to produce infinite examples, but I will content myself with one very renowned & remarkable, touching Synesius, who when they of Ptolemais would needs have him to be their Bishop, which he little desired, he acquainted them with his present condition, and his future resolution, saying, God, the Law, and the sacred hand of Theophilus hath given unto me a wife; I therefore tell all men afore hand and testify unto all, that I will not suffer myself to be altogether estranged from her, neither will I live with her secretly as an adulterer; for the one is no way godly, and the other no way lawful: but I will pray unto God that many good and happy children may be borne unto me. Neither will I have him that is to be chief in ordaining me, to be ignorant hereof. Nay, it may be truly avouched and auerred, that generally there never prevailed any restraint of all Clergy men in all places from marrying and accompanying with their wives which they married while they were lay-men, and the greatest part of the Christian world hath ever from the beginning to this day enjoyed that liberty. Howbeit almost 400, years after Christ, Syricius Bishop of Rome sought to impeach it, and commanded that no such thing should be permitted. Innocentius the first insisted in the steps of his Predecessour, so that in some places, the lawful society and accompanying of Cleargymen with their wives began to be restrained. Afterward whē Hildebrand climed up into the papal chair, he published a Decree to forbid them to marry, whereupon great confusions, tumults, and hurlyburlyes followed in the Church; for they were so enraged against him, that they cried out, he was an heretic, and a man damnable, erring in his judgment, who forgot the speech of our Lord, All men receive not this saying, save they to whom it is given: & again, Let him that can receive it, receive it, Matth. 19, 11, 12. Likewise the Apostle, Let him that cannot contain, marry, for it is better to marry then to burn, 1 Cor. 7, 9. and thereupon they openly protested against him, that if he proceeded to urge against them the execution of his Decree, they were resolved rather to forsake the Ministry, then their marriage. But to leave this, let us speak of such as have vowed single life, and see what hath been the judgment of the Church touching such vows. I propound this as a ruled case, & set it down as a certain truth, that the marriages even of such as have vowed the contrary are not void and of none effect, as the Jesuits teach. To this purpose Cyprian saith well, (lib. 1. epist. 11.) Si perseuerare nolunt aut non possunt, melius est nubant, quàm in ignem delictis suis cadant, that is, If they will not or cannot persevere, it is better that they should marry, then by their sins they should fall into the fire. Neither can this be understood of virgins that are yet to resolve and are free, as Bellarmino would decline the force of the testimony: (De Monach. lib. 2. cap. 34.) for Cyprian speaketh of such as have already dedicated themselves to God, & telleth them that they were better to marry then to burn. To him accordeth Augustine in his Epistle to Bonifacius who had vowed a monasticall and single life, and yet afterward did marry: for he telleth him, that being thus hindered and entangled, he could not freely exhort him to that former kind of retired life which he had vowed, because of his wife. His words are these, Thy wife hindereth me that I cannot exhort thee to this kind of life, without whose consent it is not lawful for thee to contain: & therefore he thought not his marriage to be void, or no marriage at all, or that he might lawfully forsake his wife, much less that he ought. The like we might easily show out of Jerome, and out of Epiphanius, haeres. 61: who maketh it 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, i. an evil thing, and such as God will judge and punish, not to perform the vow once made to God: but not 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, that is, a thing which casteth men into condemnation of hell fire, and plungeth them into everlasting destruction, & therefore he defendeth that it is better to descend to that state of life which is lawful and honorable with one fault of breaking a vow passed to the contrary, and with tears of repentance to wash away that one fault of inconstancy, and so to be saved, rather than to live in sin continually, and so to perish everlastingly. And not only these fathers, but the schoolmen generally resolve, Aquinas excepted, that the Pope may dispense with a Presbyter, Deacon, or Subdeacon to marry, though he have solemnly vowed the contrary, by entering into holy orders, because the duty and bond of containing is not essentially annexed unto orders; and that it is only a canon and constitution of the Church. And the general opinion of them is, that though single life cannot be separated from the profession of a Monk, yet he that is a Monk may be freed from that profession the which he hath made, and so cease to be a Monk. Neither is this the opinion of the schools only, but the practice of the Popes hath concurred with the same, who have oftentimes dispensed with such vows, and given them free liberty to marry, and to forsake their couents and cloysters, where they had been mued up, as were easy to be shown by diverse examples.

Secondly, from hence everyone should learn to know how to behave themselves in [Use 2] vowing, that they may use this doctrine lawfully. To this purpose we must be instructed in these particulars; what a vow is: what are the conditions of it: what is the right manner of vowing: and what should be the ends of our vowing. Touching the first, a vow is a solemn promise made to GOD, binding our selves to the doing or leaving undone of some special thing that is acceptable unto GOD. Vowes thus taken are not merely ceremonial or pertaining to the times of the Law, but are a constant and perpetual ordinance of God to be observed and practiced under the Gospel. Howbeit seeing the Jews were tied to sundry legal observations, whereby upon occasion they testified their thankfulness, we may not unfitly hold that vows were partly ceremonial, and partly moral; partly they were abrogated, and partly they continue and remain in full force to the end of the world, because the spiritual duties shadowed thereby bind all persons. Such vows I call a solemn promise made to God, as appeareth by the vow of Jacob, Gen. 28, 30, going from his fathers house to avoid the fury of his brother Esau: and of the Israelites, who having received an overthrow at the hands of their enemies, vowed to God that if he would deliver them, and overthrow those that stood against them, they would utterly destroy their cities, and reserve the spoil to be consecrated to him, Numb. 21, 2, of the which we have spoken before. Hannah, upon condition of having a son granted unto her, vowed him a perpetual Nazarite unto the Lord, 1 Sam. 1, 11. Psal. 66, 12. 2 Sam. 13, 8. From hence we gather two things: first, that in the breach of an holy and religious vow there is a double trespass, because to the observation of the vow a man is tied by a double band, both absolutely by duty, and respectively by covenant and promise, and thereby violateth his duty and fidelity unto GOD. When David saith to GOD, Psal. 119, I have sworn, and will perform it: who seeth not, y^t he tieth himself to the observation of the Law by a special band, besides the general that tieth all others? Hence it is, that God doth so oftentimes charge and challenge his people in special manner to have dealt unfaithfully & treacherously with him, as false and lying children in whom is no faith, upon promise made to keep his Laws, Deut. 5, 27, & 32, 20. Psal. 78, 8. Isaiah 30, 9, and 57, 4. Secondly, it reproveth the superstitious vows of the Romanists, who vow not to God only, but to the Saints, of which sort was no practice among the Jews, Psal. 76, 11, Isaiah 19, 21, no not when vows stood in greatest force, and were in largest sxtent. They teach that vows are a substantial part of the worship of God; and therefore by their own confession they commit manifest and abominable idolatry, because they communicate this honor to the Saints, and thereby make them to be gods, making vows to them of fastings, prayers, pilgrimages, Churches, Colleges, altars, tapers, and such like. Hence it is, that Bellarmino is content to say, that when the holy Scriptures were written, the custom of vowing to saints was not yet begun. To God we owe all that is in us, who is the searcher of the hearts, and hath power to punish the willful breach of a lawful vow; and therefore to him only we are to make our vows, He will not give his glory to any other. Again, in the description of a vow, we bind our selves to the doing or leaving undone some special thing that is acceptable to God, because he alloweth not of our will-worship, Col. 2, 23, Math. 15: wherefore we are not left free to vow what we list, for then we can have no assurance that God will accept them: but it will be said to us, Who required these things at your hands? Isaiah 1, 12: and again, In vain they worship me, teaching the precepts of men, Math. 15, 9. The Church of Rome offendeth herein many ways, and is almost endless in their errors touching this part or point of vows. I will briefly touch them & run them over. First, they maintain that young men and women, to wit, such as are come to the years of discretion, may vow single life, and that because they must suffer little children to come to Christ, Mat. 19, 14. As if none could come to Christ, [Answer.] but such as can look through a Monks coule, or as if the kingdom of heaven belonged to none but to professed Monks and Friars, who haply have themselves the least part therein. Besides, the Text speaketh of little children, which can have no trial or experience of themselves, whereas the Apostle appointing widows to attend upon the sick and poor Saints, admitteth none under the age of threescore years, 1 Tim. 5, 9, & exhorteth the younger women to marry, to bear children, to guide the house, and to give none occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully, verse 14. Secondly, they permit children to enter into religious, or rather their irreligious houses, without consent of their parents and governors, and that parents have not any authority to take away their sons or daughters out of those dens & Cloisters. As this doctrine is most strange so their reasons are most weak. They pretend that Abraham was commanded of God to go out of his Country, [Object] & from his fathers house, Gen. 12, 1. and that Christ saith, Whosoever loveth father or mother more then me, is not worthy of me, [Answ.] Math. 10, 37. I answer, the commandment of God to Abraham was special, and a special trial of his faith and obedience: let these show the like particular commandment to them, and then let them follow that example. As for the words of Christ our Savior, they are understood of the times of persecution, when we must prefer the love of Christ before the love of our best and nearest friends: to omit, that a man may leave his parents and kinsfolkes in his affection that is set upon heavenly things, even while he dwelleth with them in the same house. But of this more afterward. Thirdly, they permit the husband and wife to separate themselves by mutual consent, to depart one from another and to vow continency so long as both of them shall live. For this they produce and urge the example of Joseph and Mary, who lived continently all their days. [Answ.] But it is plain, that Joseph purposed and intended that they should come together, Math. 1, 18. Again, he is expressly admonished by the Angel to take Mary his wife: neither is it necessary to believe it as an article of faith, that Mary the mother of Christ lived always a Virgin. Again, the Apostle wisheth that all men were even as he himself, 1 Cor. 7, 7, but he addeth in the next words, Every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that. Besides, in those words he speaketh directly to the widows, and them that are unmarried, verse 8: and he hath an express commandment, verse 10, I command, not I, but the Lord, let not the wife depart from her husband. And everyone must abide in the calling, to which he hath been called, verse 24. To this purpose he saith, verse 27. Art thou bound to a wife? seek not to be loosed. And in the words going before, he exhorteth all married persons not to defraud one another except it be with consent, so that with consent he alloweth a separation: howbeit he addeth immediately, for a time, and after he willeth them to come together again, lest Satan tempt you through your inconstancy, verse 5. Moreover Christ himself teacheth, Math. 19, 6, What God hath coupled together, let no man put asunder: but married persons God hath coupled together; therefore they may not be separated, nay they may not separate themselves, neither can they without breaking the ordinance of God and the institution of marriage. Hence it is, that it is called The Covenant of God, Prov. 2, 17: not only a covenant between themselves, but such as God is therein interested, and therefore it lieth not in their power to dissolve that covenant. Lastly, they maintain that if the marriage be only contracted, and not consummated or finished, one may lawfully leave another, without consent one of another, to vow single life: to color this, they pretend that it is lawful to pass from a state of life less perfect, to that which is more perfect: and so they define a vow to be a promise to God of some better good. But this is a false surmise. [Answ.] For how doth he vow a better good, who in the vow of continency burneth with carnal and fleshly lusts, and is scorched in the flames of his own concupiscence? as the Apostle teacheth directly, It is better to marry than to burn, 1 Cor. 7, 9. In the time of the Law, the vow oftentimes was sacrifice, & the common duty belonging to all believers was showing of mercy: how then was the special vow better then the common duty, forasmuch as God saith, I will have mercy and not sacrifice? Hos. 6, 6. And how can they be said to vow a better good, that vow voluntary poverty and beggary, when Christ himself saith, It is a more blessed thing to give, then to receive? Act. 20, 35. Or how can the blind vow of the Jesuits touching obedience to their superior, be a tying of themselves to a greater or better good, seeing the Scripture saith, Bee ye not made the servants of men? 1 Cor. 7, 23: forasmuch as they make themselves slaves to the rules and precepts of an Order altogether devised by mē. So then we must know that single life is not always, nor in all, a perfecter state of life then marriage: and it is to be presumed that such as are contracted to others have not that gift, for otherwise what needed such contracting?

The next point in a lawful vow, is to consider what are the conditions of it, which may better appear by the contrary prohibitions; wherein consider both how to make them, and how to pay them. First it must be made by him that is free, & in his or her own power, and not under the jurisdiction of another: so that the vow of the wife that is under her husband, of the son and daughter under their parents, of the servant under his Master, cannot be allowable, but is void and frustrate. [Object.] If any ask, Is it not lawful for the wife, or the son, or the daughter, or the servant to vow to serve the Lord, except the husband, the father, the mother, the master give their consent? Is the power of these greater then the power of God? or is the worship of God subordinate to the will and pleasure of superiors? or may they hinder their inferiors from serving the Lord? I answer, [Answ.] the worship of God is not bound and tied to vows: and inferiors may serve the Lord fully and faithfully, and walk before him in faith, obedience, prayer, and love without the band of vows. The obedience and subjection which he hath laid as a duty upon inferiors is more acceptable to him, then any vow whatsoever. Secondly, vows must be made only to God not to other creatures, as we shown before, and therefore they offend that vow to Saints departed, for they cannot make such to be vows to God. Thirdly, they must be of things possible, for it is foolish, if not impious to vow that which we are not able to perform. Fourthly, they must be godly and religious vows, not of such things as are forbidden of God. Fifthly, they must come from a free heart, performed willingly and cheerfully to GOD. Sixthly, we must place no opinion of merit therein, as the Romanists do; but tender our duty and thankfulness to God. Lastly, they must be advised and of great importance. These considerations we must set before us in making a vow: in paying and performing thereof we must consider, first, it must be performed fully & wholly, not maimed or to halves. Therefore Moses in this place saith, He shall do all that is gone out of his mouth, verse 2. It is not enough for us to do a part, and to leave a part undone, but we must do it perfectly. These are like to Ananias and Sapphira, who vowed unto God the whole price of their possession, but when they came to perform their vow, they kept back apart, & thought to please GOD with another part, Acts 5, 3. The manner of many is to be large in promising, but to be sparing in performing. This is a token of lightness and inconstancy, and more displeases God then if they paid nothing at all, because it is joined with hypocrisy. Secondly, we must pay our vows without delay, we must not put off the time, Genesis 33, 1, Eccles. 5, 3, Deuteron, 23, 21. Delay in all duties is dangerous, and bewrayeth an unthankful heart. For as he that giveth quickly, giveth twice; so he that giveth leysurely, it is all one as if he gave not at all. Thirdly, we must perform our vows from our heart, willingly & cheerfully, not grudgingly or mutteringly, like the bad debtor, that payeth indeed the money he borroweth at the appointed day, but not with a willing mind, and therefore he had rather he were not bound to pay it, and knew how to avoid it. God requireth a cheerful giver, & therefore such payment of vows as otherwise, is is not allowed and approved of God, Thirdly, we must learn what is the right manner of vowing, wherein also observe, how it was wont to be made, and then how performed. The making thereof was wont always to be joined with prayer, to note that y^e faithful always lifted up their hearts to GOD, craving his blessing, Psalm. 61, 5. Gen. 28, 20. Judge. 11, ver. 30, 31, so that such as were fit to vow, must be faithful & justified before God, and reconciled unto him, otherwise they can never call upon him aright. And as they must be made with prayer, so they must be performed with thanksgiving, Psal. 61, 5: otherwise it were better never to have vowed and promised unto God that cannot be deceived.

Fourthly, it behooveth us to know the right ends of vows, which are these; First, concerning God's glory and the advancement of his worship. Secondly, to testify our special thankfulness to God for blessings which we have received at his hands. Thirdly, to chastise our selves, that thereby we may prevent y^e wrath of God; for by judging of our selves, we escape his judgment, 1 Cor. 11, Fourthly, to make our selves more circumspect and watchful over our own ways; for when we have fallen into some sin, we do hereby make ourselves more wary and heedful for the time to come. Fifthly, to bind our selves more strongly, as by a twofold cord which is not easily broken, to yield obedience to God. Lastly, to strengthen the weakness of our faith, hope, and other spiritual graces, and to give us greater assurance of the mercy of GOD, which we shall receive at his hands.

Lastly, it is a duty belonging to everyone, [Use 3] to consider diligently what vows they have vowed to God. We are ready and not sparing to vow in times of our afflictions & troubles, O that we were as careful to perform them, Psal. 66. But if we have not vowed this way, there is a common vow which we have all undertaken, the vow of our baptism, that we will believe in

God and serve him, that we will forsake the devil and all his works; and this is the answer of a good conscience toward God, 1 Pet. 3, 21. The master of the Sentences calleth baptism, The common vow, because therein men protest, promise, and profess to consecrate themselves, their souls & bodies unto God, both which are his, by right of creation and redemption. Jerome maketh holiness in body and spirit, the matter of a Christian vow, In Isaiah, lib. 7. cap. 19. And S. Augustine to this purpose in many places teacheth, that to believe in God, to hope for eternal life, and to live according to his commandments, are the things, which we are to vow to God. And in another place, What do we vow to God, but to be the Temple of God? These Christian duties contain the truth of y^e Jewish vows. They vowed external sacrifices and oblations, & bound themselves to the outward service, in the exercise whereof it pleased GOD for a time to train that people: howbeit in all these he called them to the true practice of piety, & to the inward affections of praise & thanksgiving. Psal. 4, 5, & 50.14, 23, & 51, 17, & 107, 22, & 115, 17. Jonah 2, 9. Hos. 14, 13. Neither is the holy Scripture silent what their ceremonial vows imported to them and to us. The vow of humbling and afflicting themselves by fasting did teach them, to forbear their own desires, to renounce their own wills, to subdue their own corruptions, and to abstain from cruelty & oppression, Isaiah 58, 6. Mic. 6, as appeareth by the reproof of the Prophet, when he chargeth them that in the day of their fast, they sought their own wills, verse 3. This we see notably in the vow of the Nazarites, a principal one among the rest, of which we have spoken before, whereby they were separated to the Lord, Numb. 6, 2. And this was the chief intendment of that ceremony to signify the common condition of all that people, that the Lord their God had separated them from all other people, and therefore they must be holy unto him, because the Lord himself is holy; and hath separated them from other people, that they should be his, Levite. 20, 24, 26. And this is that which Balaam uttered concerning Israel, Numb, 23, 9, Loe the people shall dwell alone, & shall not be reckoned among the nations. This then was a special vow of ceremonial observations, wherein by abstaining from many outward things, as separating themselves from wine & strong drink, & suffering no rafor to come on their head, and other outward things expressed in that place, they were divided from the common and profane conversation both of themselves and others among that people; howbeit a special & spiritual respect was had of preserving inward piety & holiness toward him, so that such divided persons were so many spectacles and examples of the condition of all the faithful, of whom Christ our Savior hath told us, and taught us, that they are not of this world, but he hath chosen thē out of the world, John 15, 19, they must fly the corruption that is in the world, 2 Pet. 1, 4: and they must hear the voice of God calling and crying unto them, Come out from among them, & separate yourselves from them, and touch no unclean thing, and then he will receive them, 2 Cor. 6, 17. In all which he alludeth to the vow of the Nazarites, who were a separated and selected people, retiring themselves from others, of which see more before, chapter 6. So then the vows that temaine in the Gospel, and belong unto us, are the vows of prayer, of praise & thanksgiving, of obedience to God, of denying our selves, of subduing our sins, of mortifying the corruptions of the old man, of mercy and compassion toward our brethren, and briefly of keeping our selves holy unto God and unspotted of the world, Psal. 27, 8, & 58, 12. & 79, 13. & 80, 17. & 86, 11.119, 34, 35.106, Mat. 16, 24. Col. 3, 5. Rom. 6, 13, & 12, 1. 2 Cor. 6, 20. These are the holy and solemn vows that we promised to God in our Baptism, wherein we were dedicated, and consecrated unto God, and these we do continually renew, when we come to the Table of the Lord. Let us diligently think of these vows, and be careful to practice and perform them, that God may be duly glorified in us.

3 If a woman also vow a vow unto the Lord, and bind her self by a bond, being in her fathers house in her youth,

4 And her father hear her vow & her bond wherewith she hath bound her soul, and her father shall hold his peace at her, then all her vows shall stand, and every bond, &c.

5 But if her father disallow her in the day that he heareth, not any of her vows &c. shall stand, and the Lord shall forgive her, because her father disallowed her.

6 And if she had at all an husband when she vowed, or uttered ought out of her lips, wherewith she bound her soul,

7 And her husband heard it, and held his peace in the day when he heard it, then her vows shall stand, &c.

Now Moses entreateth of such vows as were made by those that are under the authority of others, as children under their parents: concerning which the father hath authority to disannul them. Hereby the power of all parents is so magnified and advanced, that a vow made immediately to God is frustrate, & there is a mere nullity of it, except they confirm it. They have power to make it good, and they have power to make it void. Heereby we learn, that great is the authority and jurisdiction of parents over their children by the Law of God and Nature. The very heathen have this truth shining in their hearts, that parents are to be honored, and that their authority should be inviolable, Exod. 20, 12. Eph. 6, 1, 2. Ierem. 35, 6, 7, 8, &c. Gen. 27, 8, 43. and 28. 2. When the father saith, Go, the child goeth: when he saith, Arise, he ariseth: when he saith, Come, he cometh. Christ our Savior giveth testimony of his perfect obedience, whom all both men and Angels stand bound to worship, and to whom every knee must bow of things in heaven, of things in earth, and of things under the earth, Philip. 2: yet he was subject to his parents and went with them, Luke 2.51. 1. King. 2.19. The reasons are evident.

[Reason 1] First, the precept of honoring parents hath the first place in the second Table, and is set before all other, so that next unto GOD we are bound to reverence them to whom we are most bound: and it is the foundation and band of obedience to all the rest of the commandments that follow. For if men do not stand in awe of the Magistrate the father of the Common-wealth, and the Captain of the people, all the other would soon be violated, 2 Kings 20, 5.

Again, the Apostle teacheth, that this is the first Commandment with promise, Eph. 6, 2: it hath a special promised annexed of long life. Thirdly, children receive great and manifold blessings from the hands of their parents and governors, and likewise are freed from many evils and dangers, that otherwise they might fall into. Fourthly, patents give life, and breath, and being after a sort unto them; for children receive all these from thē. Fifthly, parents are honored by sundry titles and names, the which are given to God himself, Matth. 23.9: One is your father which is in heaven, therefore call no man your father upon earth.

[Object. 1] Touching this impregnable and invincible truth, sundry questions may be asked, and diverse doubts to be removed. As first, seeing their authority is so great, why doeth our Savior speak of hating father and mother, as Luke 14, 26, If any man come to me, and do not hate his father and mother, he cannot be my disciple. [Answ.] I answer, Christ speaketh in that place comparatively, that is, we must not regard them in respect of himself whom we ought to love above all, and so it is expounded, Matthew 10, 37: He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me. To love our parents next after GOD is piety, but to love them more than God is impiety. We hate them therefore when we love them less than God, in comparison of whom we should hate our lives.

[Object. 2] Secondly, Christ forbiddeth us to call any man father, as we have heard before, Matth. 23. [Answ.] I answer, Christ condemneth not the name or appellation given to men simply, for then he should be contrary to himself, where he alloweth the title to earthly fathers, Math. 7, 9. Mark 7, 11: and the Apostle should be contrary to his master, 1 Cor. 4, 15. Therefore he meaneth, that no man is or can be our Father as God is, to wit, that we should trust in them, and make them the authors of our life, and the givers of all good things that come unto us.

[Object. 3] Thirdly, what if our parents be evil persons and ungodly, ought we then to obey them & yield unto their authority, who are by their wickedness unworthy thereof? [Answ.] I answer, It skilleth not whether they be good or evil touching our obedience. For evil parents are our parents, and evil Magistrates are Magistrates, and evil Ministers are Ministers. Servants are commanded to be subject to their masters, not only unto them that are good and gentle, but to them y^t are froward, 1 Peter 2, 18: so ought children to yield obedience unto their fathers, though they be evil. Hence it is that God saith generally in the Law, Honor thy father and mother, not honor them when they are good only.

But it will be farther objected, What if they [Object. 4] be excommunicate persons, may they then be obeyed, or should children then do any duty to their parents? and is not that to set light by that censure? I answer, [Answer.] Excommunication rightly used, is indeed the most grievous judgment that can be inflicted in this life both in respect of the soul and of the body, and is as it were the messenger of death. It is a great punishment to be banished from a well ordered City: much more to be thrust out of the Church, which is the Common-wealth of God, and of his Son Christ. David did greatly lament his estate and condition, when he wanted the holy assemblies of the faithful among the Infidels, and could not come into the presence of God with his people, and did think himself driven away from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord, 1 Sam. 26, 19. Who would not tremble and be afraid to be delivered up unto Satan, 1 Cor. 5, 6. the enemy of God? The children of Israel were delivered over to Nebucadnezzar and other wicked tyrants to be afflicted, and they bewailed exceedingly such bodily captivity, Psalm 137, 1, 2 how much more fearful then ought the excommunicate person to esteem it to be delivered up, not to wicked and ungodly men, but to Satan himself, The prince that ruleth in the heart of the children of disobedience? Notwithstanding all fellowship and familiarity with them is not denied to us. It is lawful for the family to converse with the governors of the family, though they be excommunicate persons. The wife may not deny due benevolence, nor the child dutiful obedience: if he bid them go, they must go; or to come, they must come: neither are they by such behavior culpable, or guilty of their sin: of which we see more before, chap. 5.

Fourthly, if the son be a Magistrate, & [Object. 5] the father a private man, it may be demanded, whether he be to yield obedience to his father? I answer, [Answ.] though the father must obey the son as he is a Magistrate, yet in another respect the son must obey the father, as he is the father: so that neytner is the son to be deprived of the honor and dignity due unto his place, neither is the father to be denied that duty and respect which is due unto his person. The son may be honored as he is a Magistrate, and the father is likewise also to be obeyed as he is a father. And this the Heathen in former times have both known and practiced. For when Q. Fabius Maximus, in Livy Decad. 3. lib. 4. was on a time sent Ambassador unto his son then being Consull, he went out to meet his father who was coming to him on horseback: and albeit the Sergeants reuerencing the majesty of the father (who before had been Dictator, the highest office in the City) suffered him to pass, yet the son commanded him to alight from his horse if he meant to speak to him. And the old man was so far from being offended with his son, or from thinking it any disgrace to himself, that he leaped from his horse immediately, commending his son, and telling him he meant to try whether he knew himself to be Consull or not. I allege this out of the Roman history, to show that the Heathen themselves knew how to make this difference. Solomon is a notable example of this point, for he knew himself to be a son, yet he forgot not that he was also king of Israel; and therefore when Bathsheba came unto him, albeit he rose up to meet her, and bowed himself unto her as she was his mother, yet he sat down in his throne again as he was king, and she his subject, 1 [Objection 5] Kings 2, 19: yea he denied her request also.

It may be demanded farther, what if God command one thing, and the parents another, what are the children to do in this repugnancie, whether of them should they obey? I answer, [Answ.] we are charged to love and obey God before and above all things: and therefore to prefer the precept or pleasure of man before the will of God, is no better then to make an idol of our parents, and to honor them as God. True it is, we are bound to obey evil parents, but we are not bound to obey them in evil. If they command and compel in evil, they are rather tyrants then parents, and we must answer with the Apostles, We ought to obey God rather then men, Acts 5, 29. So then we see how far children are bound to obey their parents, to wit, while they keep themselves within their bounds, though they be froward and wayward, peevish and perverse, though they be not endued with virtue, or wisdom, or any other good qualities, yet they must be revered, honored, and relieved as parents and the instruments of our life and being: but if they forget their places and command against God, it is better to cleave unto GOD our heavenly father.

[Objection 6] Again, if the Magistrate command one thing, and the father another, here both are men, whether of these two are to be obeyed by the son? Nay in this case, not only both are men, but both of them are fathers, one the father of the country, [Answ.] the other of the family. I answer, if obedience to both cannot stand together, we must obey the Magistrate, because God hath given him a larger commission and greater authority then to the fathers of our bodies, so that he hath power and authority to command the fathers & their children. Again, the Magistrate commandeth for the good of the Commonwealth, the father for the private good of the private house. True it is, we may love our parents better then the Magistrate, howbeit we must obey the Magistrate before our parents. As we may love a good man which is but poor and needy before or better then an evil or wicked man which is in great power and authority; howbeit in respect of his authority, when he commandeth, we must obey him before the other.

Furthermore, suppose a man be a servant [Objection 7] or an apprentice, his master commandeth him one thing, & his father the contrary, whether of them shall he obey, in this repugnancie of commanders and commandments? which of them shall he please, and to which of them shall he cleave? I answer, [Answ.] he must obey his master. For to speak properly, the father hath no power nor authority in such a case: for it may be said, Who art thou that commandest another man's servant? he standeth or falleth to his own master, as Paul speaketh in another case. The father having bound his son an apprentice, and put him into the service of another, hath withal by that act put away his authority, and as it were resigned up his own right to his master. And such a son may wish the good of his father before the good of his master, and the life of his father before the life of his master, howbeit he must obey his master before his father, and endeavor by his diligence, labor, service, and faithfulness the profit of his master before the profit of his father, and not seek the hindrance or loss of his master in one penny to procure advantage to his father in twenty pound, farther then he hath the consent of his master.

Lastly, the question may be asked touching [Objection 8] the daughter of a man given in marriage, the husband commandeth one thing, and the father another, whether of these is to be obeyed, the husband, or the father? I answer, [Answer.] the husband. For, as she must obey her husband before the father, so she is to love the husband better also, and God commandeth the man to leave father and mother, and to cleave to his wife, which is also a commandment unto the woman to leave parents, and to cleave to her husband, for they twain shall be one flesh, Matth. 19, verse 5. Ephes. 5. verse 31. 1 Cor. 6. verse 16: therefore in this case the will of the husband is to be preferred before the will of the father. For as it is in the two great lights which God hath set in the firmament, the lesser evermore giveth place to the greater, and when the Sun shineth, the light of the Moon fadeth and vanisheth away: so when the greater authority of the husband cometh in place, the lesser power and authority of the father ceaseth. Besides, his giving of her in marriage to the husband is a giving away of his own right over her, as well as over that portion of goods which he bestoweth with her: so that now his authority is abridged, nay clean abolished. Lastly, it appeareth in this chapter, that if a married woman had vowed a vow to God, her husband only had power to abrogate and disannul her vow, but not her father. That which she doth unto her parents, and for her parents, must be by the consent and allowance of her Husband. Whatsoever is hurtful or any way prejudicial to him, she ought not to do, though it were with a purpose to profit her parents.

[Use 1] Now we come to the Uses. This reproveth diverse and sundry sorts that fight directly against this ordinance of God. In the first place whereof I range the Church of Rome. For, as it abridgeth the authority of Magistrates, so it crosseth the authority of parents over their children. It is notoriously known to the whole world, how the Roman Antichrist that proud beast that sitteth upon the seven hills, hath stirred up the children against their parents, and provoked them partly by promises, and partly by threatenings, to deprive them of their dominions and lives by force of arms; by which means, bloody wars have been raised and waged between the father and the son. Thus they put asunder those whom God and nature hath joined together. In like manner, under the vizard & pretence of Religion, they not only allow, but exhort and entice, and receive into their Monkish Orders, young men at fourteen years, and young women at twelve, without consent of their parents. But in this place, God putteth: power and authority into the parents hands, to disannul the vow which the daughter maketh being in her fathers house; which ordinance is grounded upon the moral Law, which commandeth children to honor and obey their parents: and the Apostle Paul referreth the whole matter of keeping y^e daughter a virgin, or the bestowing of her in marriage, to the will and determination of the father, 1 Cor. 7, 36, 37.

Moreover, hath not the father as great power over his son, as the master hath over his servant? But it is not lawful for the servant to take upon him the profession of Monkery without the consent of his master, and therefore the child may not do the same. The answer of Bellarmino is nothing to the purpose, that children are not in like subjection to their parents, as servants are to their masters, but have more power over themselves then servants have: because howsoever Children are not in such servile condition as servants (which is not the question, it being out of question) yet parents have as great power over the persons of their children, being within age, as over servants: and the law of nature which bindeth sons, is stronger then y^e law of men, which maketh servants and parents have greater power over their own flesh then over strangers.

[Use 2] Secondly, this teacheth, that it belongeth as a special duty to children by all means, to honor their parents, to which they are bound with the strongest bands: and this yielding of honor unto them consisteth in many particulars. For we must be subject unto them, and give them reverence, obedience, and maintenance. First, we ought all the days of our lives to esteem reverently of them, as also of their wise devices, of their holy counsels, of their careful instructions. And this we ought to express in gesture, in speech, and in outward carriage: not so much for fear of correction, or looking for benefit from them, but for conscience sake, lest by the contrary we draw the curse of God upon us Prov. 30, 17. Woe therefore unto those ungodly and ungracious children, that do not esteem their parents according to the high place wherein God hath seated them over them, that do despise them because of some infirmities of age, of nature, or otherwise, and therefore mock and scoff at them, Prov. 30, 11. Gen. 9, 22. The second duty is obedience to their lawful commandments in performing of their will, howsoever sometimes they may seem unpleasant and displeasing unto them, Mat. 21. Col. 3, 20. Jer. 35, Deuter. 21, 18, 19. Thus doth Jacob rest in the counsel of Rebecca his mother, and yieldeth to her wholesome admonition, Genes. 27, 14. And this is one of the chief virtues that can be found among them, and therefore Paul expoundeth Honor by Obedience, Colos. 3, 20. Eph. 6, 1. Thus they ought to submit and subject themselves to their godly government & religious discipline. And as this ought to be yielded to them in all things, so it should be observed in choosing their trade and order of life, and taking upon them a special calling, to be ready to be directed by them, what by their grave censure, wisdom, judgment, & foresight they think fittest for them, Prover. 29, 15: & 15, 5: especially in the greatest matter of all that doth most nearly concern them, I mean their marriage, when they shall begin to think of seeking a companion to live with them in that estate. Thus all faithful children were content to submit themselves to their parents, and to be ordered by them, and never attempt to bestow themselves in marriage without their parents knowledge, Genes. 24, 3. So did Jacob at the commandment of his father, and the advice of his mother, and by consent of them both, Genes, 27, 46. and 28, 1. This was observed of those that otherwise led no sanctified life, Genesis 21, 21 yea of the very heathen themselves. I will produce one testimony among many others, and that is of king Cyrus after he had conquered Babylon, and come home in triumph, his vnckle Cyaraxis offered him his daughter unto wife: he thanked his vnckle, and praised the maid, and liked the dowry, but for giving consent to marriage, he made him this answer, which I would it were observed and followed of all Christians, O Cyaraxe, to te genos Epainô, kai ten paida, kai dôra; boulomai de, ephê sun tê tou patros gnômê, kai tes metros tanta sunainesai, which is englished in this manner: Uncle Cyaraxis, I commend the stock, & the maid, and the portion; howbeit (saith he) by the counsel of my father and mother I will assent unto you: as if he had said, without their advice I can do nothing. All histories, Philosophers, and Poets in a manner, are full of the practice of this duty. And no marvel, for this is agreeable to the common principle in nature, Whatsoever ye would that other men should do unto you, do ye even so to them, Math. 7, 12. Sampson saw a maid in Timnah that liked him well, notwithstanding he spake not one word to her, but came back to his parents, & desired them to make the marriage for him. They were the first whom he acquainted with his purpose: not as in our days, wherein commonly the parents are the last. Judges 14, 2. Get her to me, for she pleaseth me well. For seeing parents have taken great pains, and bestowed great cost in bringing up their children, it is reason they should reap some fruits of their labor and travail in the bestowing of them in marriage, and thereby be acknowledged more wise and better able to provide and foresee for them, then themselves. This justly reproveth many children in our days, that never regard this duty, and condemneth the common practice of our corrupt age so much degenerated and grown out of course, that they never require nor regard the consent of their parents in their matches and marriages; but make their choice after the lust of their eyes, and the delight of their hearts, in despite of Father, Mother, Governor, Kinsfolkes, Friends, yea God himself, and all good order. These oftentimes run on in haste, and on an head, and learn to repent at leisure. For we live not longer after the holy examples of the Patriarchs in former time, then we come far behind them and live different from their manners and godly discipline. The next duty is thankfulness, requiring all the kindness that we have received from them, & recompensing their goodness toward us to the uttermost of our power, whensoever and wherein soever they shall at any time stand in need of our help and relief, Genes. 45, 11. and 47, 12. Joseph was nourished a child of his father seenteene years, and he again nourished his aged father 17. years in Egypt, Gen, 47, 9, 28. This precept the Apostle setteth down, 1 Tim. 5, 4, Children and Nephews must recompense the kindness of their parents. The practice of this we see in Ruth the Moabitesse, she being young, took pains and traveled and labored for her mother in Law Naomi when she was old, Ruth. 2, 18, and did bring home to her what she had gleaned, and she gave to her that which she had reserved after she was sufficed. This we see also in the example of Christ our Savior, John 19: ver. 27: which condemneth all neglect of aiding them in time of need, and all fraudulent and injurious dealing in keeping back any part of maintenance due unto them, Rom. 1, 30. 2 Tim. 3, 2. Such likewise as run upon their own heads, and will not be advised either in the course of their life, or in the choice of their companion to live withal in married estate, like Esau, that profane Esau, who against the liking and good will of his parents, took Canaanitish women to be his wives, Genes. 26, 35: to the great grief of the hearts of his godly parents.

Lastly, it belongeth to all parents to perform [Use 3] their duties to their children the fruit of their bodies, forasmuch as God hath hedged in their authority with banks and bounds that may not be transgressed or removed. These duties do belong partly to the fowls of their children, & partly to their bodies: partly they concern their salvation, and partly their preservation: some belong to the life to come and some to this present life. Touching the former sort, they must go before them by a good example of life, and walk in their houses in the uprightness of their hearts, that they may see no evil examples to infect and corrupt them, Psal. 101. Our duty is to bring them to the house of God, and to the place of God's worship, and unto the exercises of Religion, where the word is preached, the Sacraments are administered, and where prayers and praises are offered up to God. And doubtless our labor shall not be in vain in the Lord. Remember the example of Joseph and Marie the parents of Christ, when they went to Jerusalem to worship God, they led their son with them to train him up in godliness and true Religion, Luke 2. They do not send him thither while themselves abide at home, but they accompany him, nay they go before him and teach him what he should do; contrary to the practice of many that draw them from God, from his word, from godliness, and make thē twofold more the children of hell then themselves. From them and their mouths they do learn to swear and blaspheme, to speak reproachfully of God, of his Word, of his Ministers, and of his children, 2 Kings 2, 23. A second duty is to instruct them in the ways of God, and to pour into their hearts the Doctrine of Christ from the childhood, 2 Tim. 3, 15. Deut. 6, 6, 20: & 7, 3. Prover. 22, 6. Psalm 78, 3, 5, 6, Job 1, 5. Thirdly, they ought to admonish, reprove, and correct them, and that betimes while there is hope, and when there is just cause, Prouerb. 13, verse 24: and 19, 18: and 23, 13. They must do it in love & compassion, not in fury, or with cruelty, or in choler and malice, Col. 3, 21. It is noted of Eli, that because he failed in this one duty, he brought ruin and destruction upon his whole house; he brake his neck from his chair, and his sons were slain in battle, 1 Sam. 2, 24: & 4, 18.

Fourthly, it belongeth to them to provide for those whom they have brought into the world things fit and necessary for this present life. They are flesh indeed of our flesh and bone of our bone, and no man hateth his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it all that he can. As then we provide for our selves, so ought we for them, and not only for the present, but for the time to come, thereby to defend them from dangers & troubles that may befall them. So the parents of Christ when they had gone a days journey, and perceived that the child was not in the company, returned back and sought him with heavy hearts, and never gave over till they had found him three days after, Luke 2, 45, 46. Woe then to all careless parents, that wast all their substance, and swallow it down their throat in all riot and excess, & never provide for their children, but suffer them in a manner to go naked without clothing, hungry without meat, thirsty without drink, harbourlesse without lodging, and destitute without comfort, 2 Cor. 12, 14, 1 Tim. 5, 8. Gen. 42, 2. Jacob sent his sons into Egypt to buy Corn, when they wanted food to nourish their families. Fifthly, all parents are bound, especially they of the poorer sort, to bring up their children to labor and taking of pains, and never suffer them to be idle. Howbeit commonly who more idly and lazily brought up then poor men's children, yea then theirs that are poorest of all? Hence it is that they are clothed in rags, because they lead their lives in idleness. No man should live by the sweat of other men's brows, but should labor the thing that is good, Mark 6, 3. Gen 4, 2. and 46, 33, 34. Idleness is the root of all evil, and the companion of beggary. Lastly, if children have not the gift of continency, they ought to dispose of them in marriage both seasonably and fitly: seasonably, lest by delaying y^e time ouerlong, they lay their children open unto danger, either of entangling themselves with other against their wills, or of defiling themselves with filthy uncleanness: fitly, that the sons and daughters of God may match together, not the sons of God with the daughters of men, or the sons of men with the daughters of men, or the sons of men with the daughters of God, Gen. 6, 1. and 24, 3. and 28, 2, 3, Ezra 9, 2. & 10, 10: an abuse that continueth in the world unto this day.

8 But if her Husband disallow her on the day that he heard it, then he shall make her vow which she vowed, and that which she uttered with hir lips wherewith she bound her soul, of none effect, & the Lord shall forgive her.

9 But every vow of a Widow and of her that is divorced, wherewith they have bound their souls, shall stand against her.

10 And if she vowed in her husbands house, &c.

11 And her husband heard it and held his peace, &c: then all her vows shall stand, &c.

12 But if her husband have utterly made them void, &c.

13 Every vow and every binding made to humble the soul, her husband may establish, or her husband may make void.

14 But if her husband altogether hold his peace, &c: then he establisheth her vows, &c.

15 But if he shall any way make them void. &c.

16 These are the statutes which the Lord commanded Moses, between a man and his wife, and between the father and his daughter, being young in her fathers house.

In these words Moses proceedeth in the matter of Vowes even to the end of the chapter, concerning the married woman, and concerning the widow. The married woman is bound by the Law so long as her husband liveth, and cannot vow: and if she vow, it is merely void, and such vowing is pronounced unlawful, she hath sinned against God & her husband; howbeit God is merciful, and he will forgive her. From whence we may learn, That the Lord is ready to forgive those that offend. But the Widow that is free and loosed from the law of her husband, is at liberty to vow. This teacheth, that the power and authority of the husband over the wife is very great; for albeit she be at liberty to vow in the Lord when her husband is dead, yet while he liveth he hath power to disannul all her vows, Rom. 7, 2. 1 Cor. 7, 36. The wife is tied by a strong band and obligation unto her husband, 1 Cor. 14, 34. Ester 1, 22. This is not (I confess) the proper place to handle these duties, and therefore I will briefly touch the reasons and the uses.

The husband is the head of the wife, 1 Cor. 11, [Reason 1] 3. Ephes. 5, 23: as Christ is the head of the church to rule it, to defend it, to provide for it: therefore, as the Church is in subjection to Christ, so ought the wife to be to her husband, Again, mark the order and manner of the Creation, how it was at the beginning, Adam was first formed, and then Eve: and he was not deceived, but the woman being deceived, was in the transgression, and therefore she ought not to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence and subjection, 1 Tim. 2, 12, 13, 14.

Thirdly, in the Law of creation we must observe the preeminence of man, which will evidently appear if we mark the end of it: for man was made to rule, the woman to be ruled: for as the man was not of the woman: but the woman of the man; so the man was not created for the womā, but the woman for the man, 1 Corinth, chap. 11, verses 8, 9.

Lastly, man is the image & glory of God, whereas the woman is the glory of the man, 1 Cor. 11, 7. But was not the woman also made in y^e image of God? [Object] and hath not God set the print of his glory upon her face also? I answer, [Answer.] the Woman was made in the image of God, as well as the man, Genesis 1, verse 27. But man was made to this end and purpose, y^e God's glory should appear in his rule and authority: on the other side the woman was made, that by profession of her obedience she might the more honor her husband.

[Use 1] This serveth first for reproof both of the husband and the wife, when they know not their places of commanding or obeying: the husband losing his honor, and the wife usurping above her calling. As God in the creation, of one made two; so in the first institution of marriage he united those two again into one, that the woman joined in marriage with her husband, might not only reverence him as the rock from whence she was taken, but might honor him as her head under whom she liveth. This order is broken, when she will by no means be in subjection, but seeketh to shake off the yoke which God and her calling hath laid upon her. This subjection is made heavier by transgression, then it was by the law of creation. For that which God made very good, Satan quickly turned into evil, so that the woman instead of an helper became a tempter of the man to sin; and the man instead of a defender became an accuser of the woman to God for sin. Thus Satan labored to divide the house, that it might not stand. But Christ Jesus our Lord came into y^e world to destroy and dissolve the works of the devil, and hath reconciled man and woman with God, that now they should live together as heirs of the grace of life, 1 Pet. 3; 7. Therefore all women should be content with their places, whereof notwithstanding they oftentimes come short, and take upon them to control their husbands, to speak and do what they list. This we see in Vashti mentioned in the book of Ester, when she was commanded by the king to come unto the feast, she disdained and refused to obey, and would not come into his presence, Ester 1, 22: and lest other women should be emboldened by her perverse example, they passed a decree, and gave it the force of a law and a statute, and published the same in all the kings Provinces, y^t Every man should bear rule in his own house, to wit, under the same penalty inflicted on the Queen, which was, to be divorced from their husbands. Again, it reproveth all husbands that in simplicity are as willing to resign up their places, as their wives in impudency are bold, to usurp them, which is as great a shame and reproach to the husband to lose, as it is for the woman to challenge it. This argueth want of wisdom, courage, and discretion in the husband, and on the other side bewrayeth pride, self-love, contempt, and disdain in the wife; as also forgetfulness of her first creation, at what time she was made of a bone taken out of his side, Gen. 2, 21. I say out of his side to be his companion, and therefore as he is not to make her his footstool to tread upon her, so she should not make her self his head to ouertop him, and so tread upon him.

[Use 2] Secondly, it is the duty of all wives to acknowledge their duty, and to yield without striving the superior place to their husbands, and to be subject unto them without resisting in word and deed. This is commended unto them in the example of Sarah, who is set as a glass before all women's faces to look upon, 1 Pet, 3, 5, 6: to the end, that if any obey not the word, they may without the word be won by the conversation of their wives. Again, the Apostle Paul teacheth the wife to fear her husband, Ephes. 5, 33: and Peter teacheth the same, She must have her conversation with fear, 1 Pet. 3, 2. This duty is seated in the heart, and helpeth to set in order all other duties. This will show it self in meekness of Spirit, which is in the fight of God of great price, and in obedience in all lawful things, & that not by constraint, but willingly and readily, as serving Christ without murmuring or gainsaying. If they perform these things, they shall be Christian wives, and the daughters of Abraham and Sarah, to their great comfort. Such will do their husbands good, and not evil all the days of their lives, Prov. 31, 12.

Hence it is that Solomon saith, A virtuous woman is a crown unto her husband, Prov. 12, 4: but she that is stubborn and disobedient maketh him ashamed, and is as rottenness in his bones. A good wife is not only an honor, but an ornament unto her husband, and therefore is compared unto a crown of gold. If she had been compared unto the ring upon his finger, it had been a great Ornament: if to a Chaine of Gold about his neck, it had been a far greater: but behold while she keepeth her self in her place, and dischargeth her duty with love and subjection, she is said to be a crown unto him, then which what greater honor and glory can there be? And therefore in another place he saith, Houses and riches are the inheritance of fathers, but a provident wife is from the LORD, Prov. 19, 14. On the other side he showeth, that it is better to dwell in a corner of the house top, thē with a brawling woman in a wide house, Prov. 21, 9. And again, A continual dropping in a very rainy day, and a contentious woman are alike, Prov. 27, 15, and 19, 13.

Lastly, it is the duty of husbands seeing [Use 3] authority is committed unto them over their wives, and as it were the brydle put into their hands, to love them tenderly, to defend them from evils, and to cherish them as their own flesh, as Christ Jesus doth the Church, Eph. 5. The heathen king could tell Sarah, that her husband was as a covering of the eyes, Gen. 20, 16. It is his duty therefore to dwell with his wife according to knowledge, giving honor to the wife as unto the weaker vessel, 1 Pet. 3, 7, as being heirs together of the grace of life, that their prayers be not interrupted. And why are they commanded to dwell together, but y^t the husband should yield to her these 4. things? first good example: secondly, instruction: thirdly, maintenance: & lastly employment in her calling for his good, and the good of his family.

CHAP. XXXI.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,
2. Auenge the children of Israel on the Midianites; afterward thou shalt be gathered unto thy people.
3. And Moses spake to the people, saying; Arm some of yourselves unto the war, and let them go against the Midianites, and avenge the Lord on Midian.
4. Of every Tribe a thousand throughout all the Tribes of Israel, shall ye send to the war.

5. So there were delivered out of the thousands of Israel, a thousand of every Tribe, twelve thousand armed for war.

6. And Moses sent them to the war, a thousand of every Tribe, them and Phinchas the son of Eleazar the Priest, to the war with the holy Instruments, and the Trumpets to blow in his hand.

MOSES having taken order for the Church, now cometh to the civil plantation, and to the inheritance of the Land. This had been promised to their fathers, Gen. 15: now they begin to prevail, and to receive as it were the first fruits of it, to assure them of the full and final conquest of the rest. Observe in this Chapter the history of the battle fought against the Midianites, who combining themselves with the Moabites, as we see saw, chap. 25, drew the Israelites to whoredom by the counsel of Balaam, when they despayred to prevail against them by the sword. By this means they defiled themselves with Idolatry also, and provoked the wrath of God to the destruction of many thousands among them. The parts of this Chapter are three, First, of the procuring causes of this war. Secondly, the manner how it was followed & fought. Thirdly, the event and issue of the whole. The first part is in these words, wherein we see the Commandment of God, and the preparation used to accomplish this commandment. For Moses sendeth them forth, and with them Phinehas the Priest, & appointeth soldiers to execute that which GOD commandeth, out of every Tribe.

[Object.] From this arise diverse doubts that are to be discussed. First, why doth God command vengeance in this place, that forbiddeth it else where, Rom. chapter 12, verse 19. Deut. chap. 32, verse 35?

[Answer.] I answer, this may not seem strange unto us, neither should we think there is any change in GOD; but we must know the difference and distinction between the revenge of God and of private men. True it is, God will have his children bear injuries patiently; and to give place to wrath, and to overcome evil with good, Rom. 13, 4: yet he retayneth power to himself to execute vengeance against his enemies, and never disclaymeth that office, nay he challengeth it as proper to himself. For he will execute justice and judgment by himself and his ministers so often as it pleaseth him, Numb. 25, 16. So then albeit the faithful must bridle the desire of revenge, and not retaile like for like; yet when God calleth and appointeth them to be executioners of his will and wrath, he putteth a sword into their hand, and when the cause is just, their calling is lawful. Thus we see, how soldiers are warranted to shed blood, for they are called to be magistrates: only it is required of such, that they be carried & kindled with an holy zeal of God's glory, not with private hatred, grudge and revenge, which make a thing lawful, to them unlawful.

Secondly, [Object.] the question may be asked what is meant hereby, that Moses shall be gathered to his people. I answer, that he should die, [Answ.] the body returning to the earth, the spirit to God that gave it, Eccl. 12, 7: for with him are the spirits of just men made perfect, Heb. 12, 23. So it is said of Abraham, Gen. 25, 8, he gave up the ghost, and died an old man full of days, and was gathered to his people, that is, to his fathers, Gen. 15, 15. So then hereby we must learn the immortality of the soul, for Abraham's body was gathered to the body of Sarah only, for he was buried in the sepulcher with her. So it is said of Isaac, Gen. 35, 29, he was gathered to his godly forefathers; and of Moses himself afterward, Deut. 30, 50, as also of Aaron before, chap. 20, 24. But it will be said, that it is said of Ishmael that was cast out of the house of Abraham, and was the son of the bond woman, that he also gave up the ghost, and died, and was gathered to his people, as well as of Abraham, of Isaac, of Aaron, of Moses, and of many others, 2 Kings 22, 20. Judge. 2, 10. Acts 13, 36. I answer, this phrase may employ with good probability the repentance of Ishmael, that he died in the faith of Abraham, and was carried into his bosom. For he joined with his brother in the burying of his father, and the Scripture taketh special notice of his whole age, and setteth down how long he lived, but no reprobate hath the age of his whole life recorded. And thus the prayer of Abraham may seem to be heard, Gen. 17, 18. O that Ishmael might live before thee! But if he lived and died a wicked man, then by his fathers to whom he was gathered, we must understand the souls of wicked men that lived before him, as Cain and his posterity that were carried away with the flood, which now are spirits in prison, 1 Pet, 3, 19. But howsoever it be, this necessarily must be concluded, that the souls of all men live when the body is turned into earth, and hath his subsisting afterward, Math. 22, 23. Hebr. 12, 21.

[Object.] It will be objected that the wise man saith, the condition of men & of beasts is all alike, Eccl. 3, 19. As the one dieth, so dieth the other, so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast. This is not spoken simply, but in respect. They are both alike and equal in the necessity of dying imposed upon both, and man hath no advantage to glory over the beast; which serveth to humble him and to proclaim his vanity. Again, Solomon speaketh according to the opinion of profane Atheists, such as the Sadducees afterward were; for they say, Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beasts that goeth downward to the earth? These are they that also say, Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we shall die, 1 Corinth. 15, 32. But when he speaketh according to truth, he telleth us afterward, that the spirit returneth to God that gave it, chap. 12. Again, they produce sundry testimonies, that the dead cannot praise him, it must be the living, the living that must do it, Psal. 6.5, In death there is no remembrance of thee: so 30, 10, and 88, 11. Isaiah 38, 18. I answer, death and the grave have two significations according to the different manner or estate of those that are dead. [Answ.] For some are dead spiritually that are rejected of God, and in torments with the damned; these cannot praise God at all, neither doth God accept praise at their hands. Others are dead only corporally, not spiritually: these cannot praise GOD in the Church visible together with the faithful, yet in their souls they never cease to acknowledge and praise God together with innumerable company of Angels and Saints departed, yea it is their whole practice, delight and exercise, they do nothing else.

Lastly, the Apostle seemeth to make it peculiar to God, to have immortality, 1 Tim. 6, 16, he only hath immortality. I answer, God hath this of himself: the Angels & the souls of men by grace and communication, they receive this from him, whereas whatsoever God is, he is it of himself.

[Object.] Furthermore, another question may be moved, wherefore in mustering this army, and sending them to fight, Phinehas the Priest was to be among them? for what had he to do with this manner of warfare, who was to serve in the Tabernacle, and was not numbered among the other tribes that were to go out to war? I answer, [Answer.] Moses sendeth him, because he had given a notable proof of his zeal in slaying the Israelite and the Midianitish woman with his iavelin: & he is sent not to draw his sword, or to be captain of the host, but to exhort the people, to teach and keep them in the fear of God, and to put them in hope of victory. This was commanded of God, when they went to battle against their enemies, the Priest was to stir them up to courage, that they should not faint nor fear, but be assured that the Lord would go out with them and fight for them to save them, Deut. 20, 2, 3, 4: so the Priests were ready to go with David, when he fled out of Jerusalem, 2 Sam. 15, 24. And when it is said, Phinehas went with the holy instruments, some understand the Ark, others the Vrim and Thummim to ask of God touching the success of the battle. Howbeit, it is not likely that he doubted of y^e end that had his warrant from God to begin it. And if Moses had meant this of the Ark, no doubt he would have expressed it by his name, as he doth oftē before: besides, if he had pointed to this, he would rather have used the singular number, thē the plural: & have said y^e holy instrument, not instruments. It is rather to be thought y^t he meaneth the two Trumpets, of which see before, chap. 10, and these he addeth in the next words by way of exposition or interpretation, as if he had said, the holy instruments, that is, the Trumpets, as Judge. 8, 27.

Heereby then we see the absurd collection of Bellarmino, who making the unhappy ende of the enemies of the Church a note thereof, alledgeth the death of Zwingli who was slain in battle. But why might not Zwingli go with his people into the battle, as well as the Priests that were commanded to do it? He was as a good Shepherd that gave his life for his flock, and would not leave nor forsake them fighting for the defense of the Gospel. Neither may we account it a plague or punishment to die in battle, or a token of one forsaken of God, as we see in good Josiah and many others: and the experience of all times teacheth us the truth of that which David saith, The sword devoureth one as well as another, 2 Sam. 11, 25. Thus much of the questions.

[Auenge the children of Israel, &c: and Moses said, Arm yourselves, &c.] By Moses speaking of wars, we may see they have been ancient in the world; and being commanded of God in this place, we see also that they are lawful; of which see before, chap. 1, and 24, and 25. But here diverse other points directing wars and warriors are to be observed. First, observe that an army is here spoken off, as mustered and gathered together for the battle.

The Doctrine is this; Before men go to battle, an host of men must be appointed & gathered together, and sufficient forces must be levied, Exod. 17, 9. Josh. 8, 3. 2 Chron. 13, 3, and 32, 6. 1 Sam. 15, 4. Judge. 20, 17.

[Reason 1] The causes are evident: First, that a number may be sorted out sufficient in show, that thereby hope & assurance may arise to counteruayle the contrary part, Eccl. 4, 9, 10, 11, 12. Luke 14, 31. Judge. 20, 17. and 7, 2, 7, 2. Chron. 14, 8, 9, 10, 11. Secondly, for order, that by warlike policy every man may be fitted to stand in his place, 2 Sam. 10.9, 10, 11. and 18, 1, 2,

3. 1 Kings 22, 14, 15, in regard whereof it is fit & requisite that men be trained at home before they go to fight abroad, 1 Sam. 17, 33. 2 Sam. 10, 9. 2 Chron. 14, 10, that military discipline be not broken to the destruction of the whole army, 1 Sam. 11, 11, and 30, 16, 17: one such soldier is worth an hundred others that are untaught and vntrayned.

This serveth to reprove sundry abuses, [Use 1] First, of such as send not out a just host or sufficient forces, but sparingly, now some and then others, whereby the people are smitten down with the sword, and made a prey to the enemies, 2 Sam. 11, 15, 17. Secondly, against either raw or desperate soldiers, that couetously, or proudly and presumptuously go to battle against the enemy in a tumultuous and confused manner, as if they went rather to the spoil & victory, then to the battle. This is a willful tempting of God, and a making of themselves guilty of their own death and of many others. Thirdly, this reproveth the carelessness and negligence of such as are Governors in gathering & mustering men, and in providing armor and furniture, when the cause is instant and requireth haste, 2 Sam. 20, 4, 5. If in any other earthly thing, the Proverb taketh place in this, that delay is dangerous. Fourthly, it meeteth most justly with the murmuring of reckless people at the labors and charges of often mustering, and are unwilling to bestow one penny for the safety of the state, of the kingdom, of the Church, of our Cities and Towns, nay of their wives and children, and their own goods, Judge. 5, 16, 17. and 21, 9, 10. 1 Sam. 13, 8, and 11, 7. Lastly, this serveth for comfort unto us, when these means are used and afforded, when we see them taken in hand carefully and religiously, 2 Chron. 14, 8. Whē all things are ordered aright, and sufficient forces levied, who should not be ready and willing to go forth? For as the want of men and munition, and all kind of provision taketh away the heart and slaketh the courage of such as are to fight and adventure their lives: so on the other side, the having of all things fit and necessary giveth comfort, 2. Chron. 14, 8. Nevertheless, we must take heed that we do not rely upon them and put our trust in them: for no man is saved by the multitude of an host, how great and strong soever it be, 2 Chron. 13, 8, 13. Isaiah 2, 22, and 3, 1, 2, 3, and an horse, though prepared for the battle, is a vain thing to save a man: forasmuch as an army are men, and not God, and their horses are flesh, not spirit, Isaiah, chapter 31, verse 3.

Again, the army here spoken of, is not only gathered together, but it is sent out; First, it is furnished and prepared, and then employed. The Doctrine: An army assembled must go forth in a seasonable time, if the cause remain and continue for which it was gathered, Josh. 11, 7. 1 Sam. 18, 5, 27.

The Reasons; First, because it is not the [Reason 1] sight, but the use: not the having, but the employing of men of war that hurteth the enemy, 2 Kings 19, 32. It is not the having of a sword that sufficeth, but the drawing of it out against the enemy that profiteth. Secondly, otherwise it argueth want of wisdom, or courage, or constancy, or all these upon the distrust of the cause or force, Judge. 9, 36, 37, 38 Thirdly, it giveth edge to the enemy to provide means of preventing by a more speedy resolution, if they go not forth being prepared, 2 Sam. 20, 6. whereas it is the part of a wise and politic Captain, to take heed he do nothing to hearten the enemy, or discourage his soldiers.

This serveth to reprove those that in a brauado [Use 1] make much preparation, but are nothing at all for execution: such are they that go not out at all, or go out too late, having too credulous hearts to believe that the enemy will not come, or not come as yet, 2 Sam, 20, 6. Secondly, it reproveth such as refuse to go or to be sent out. Some had rather be hanged before their doors, then be employed in the Princes service. Others hide themselves, or hire others, or make friends, or excuses of insufficiency, because they would not perform this business, and would slip their heads out of the collar, Numb. 16, 12, 13, 14. Lastly, it serveth to warn such as are mustered and have given their names, to prepare themselves, and to think seriously of the matter, that they are to be employed in a weighty business, that so they may be ready to fight the Lord's battles, 2 Chron, 20, ver. 15. for their Prince, Country, wife and children, Neh. 4, 14.

In the next place mark, that Moses spake unto some of the people, Arm yourselves unto the war. At the commandment of Moses the people must arm: but before he command, they may not put on armor.

The Doctrine: A lawful army must be gathered and sent out by public authority, 2. Chron. 14, 9.

The grounds hereof: for first, public enemies must be resisted by authority & power of the public Magistrate, 1 Sam. 11, 7. Secondly, [Reason 1] the Magistrate beareth not the sword in vain. 1 Sam. 8, 20. Thirdly, they intrude into the seat of Justice, that take this upon them without authority, nay they sit down in the place of God, Numb. 16, 11. But it may be objected, [Object.] that the examples of Abraham, who armed 318, men and pursued the Kings, and of Sampson prove the contrary, for what warrant had they? I answer, they had both sufficient warrant and authority. [Answ.] Sampson was one of the Judges, chosen of God to save his people, and he was stirred up and guided by an extraordinary spirit to smite them hip and thigh with a great slaughter, Judge. 14, ver. 19. And touching Abraham, he was no private man, nor subject to any other Potentate, but a free Prince and at his own command. Again, he did no more then as if a man should defend him and his against a thief, and resist violence with violence by the sword. The uses remain.

[Use 1] It is the duty of the Magistrate, when intelligence is given of enemies, and of their approach or preparation, not to be secure or to suffer them to take the start, but he must take order against them, 2 Chron. 20, 1, 2, 3, that he suffer not the Lord's enemies to prevail, or to escape, 1 Sam. 15, 3, 9, 35. It is a great advantage that an enemy hath, to suffer him to be first in y^e field, or to come to our doors: whereas it is the wisest and safest way to take the field before, and rather assault then defend.

Secondly, no man should seek to shift himself from the Magistrate, but know that his authority is a sufficient warrant when the war is just. Against the Anabaptists that resist public authority.

Lastly, this condemneth the life of Pirates, and Rouers, and robbers, that live by spoiling, and killing, and stealing from all, without any respect of person, all is fish that cometh to their net, Isaiah 33, 1. These prevail for a time, but in the ende, they that spoil shall be spoiled, and they that deal treacherously, shall have others to deal treacherously with them.

Furthermore, against whom are the Israelites sent out to war? against the Midianites their open and professed enemies. The Doctrine. He against whom we wage war, must be known to be an enemy, Deuter. 21, verse 1.

The Reasons: If it be otherwise, that we respect not against whom we fight, or whose [Reason 1] blood we shed, we are fighters against God, and he will fight against us, yea destroy us, 2. Chron. 13, 12, 16. Secondly, friends and brethren must not fight and strive one against another, but dwell together in love, peace, and unity, Gen. 13, 8. Thirdly, it addeth courage in that we do know we shall hurt and wound our enemies, 1 Sam. 4, 9, and 17, 48, 36. The name of a brother slaketh courage, and abateth the care to provide any furniture; so on the other side the name of an enemy kindleth the desire of fighting, and maketh more diligent to arm accordingly. The uses follow.

This reproveth those that make war secretly [Use 1] or openly with their good friends, 1. Chron. 35, 20, 21. therefore we should make difference between a brother and an enemy, and examine the true causes of breaking, before we make war with any, Judge. 11, 12, to 28. Secondly, against such as nourish civil mutinies, as Manasseh against Ephraim, and Ephraim against Manasseh. 2 Sam. 15, so did Absalom, and 20, 1. Sheba. Thirdly, against those that fly from their Countrymen to the enemy, 2 Sam. 15, 31. Many have been faulty this way, and guilty of treachery and rebellion: to these we may join such as treacherously intend to fight against their own Nation, when it is gathered together against the enemy, contrary to that which the Philistines conceived of David, though he were among them, 1 Sam. 29, 4, Let not him go down with us to battle, lest in the battle he be an adversary to us: for wherewith should he reconcile himself unto his master? should it not be with the heads of these men? But some that were among us have been guilty of that crime, which the Egyptians falsely surmised & suspected concerning the Israelites, Exo. 1, 10. Let us deal wisely with them, lest it come to pass, that when there falleth out any war, they join unto our enemies and fight against us. Lastly, it reproveth those that judge every man and every estate, every nation & people to be fit to be fought withal: likewise such as murmur against the going out of men out of their Country, though it be against enemies, Numb. 13, 31.

Besides, consider that the Priest is willed to go with them, verse 6, and afterward they that fought this battle, must abide out of the Campe seven days, and purify themselves & all their raiment, verse 19, 20. Whereby they are warned to take heed of all sin in going to war, and in the execution of it. The Doctrine. All that are employed in war must be careful to avoid all sin, Deut. 23, 9, 10. We ought to beware of sin at all times, but thē especially when we go into battle, and are to stand in the face of the enemy.

The Reasons; First, the consideration of [Reason 1] the state wherein we do stand: we are in jeopardy every hour, & are in the greatest, most manifest, and eminent danger, we may fall forever in a moment, & never rise again; which also our sin will hasten and bring suddenly upon us, Levite. 26, 14, 17. Secondly, God forsaketh them in battle, that by sin forsake him before they come to the battle, Judge. 10, 13, 14. Thirdly, it is most probable & much to be feared, when many are gathered together out of diverse places, educations, and natures, that one will infect another, if they take not heed, Isaiah 2, 6. Fourthly, the prosperity & flourishing of the Church of one side, or the overthrow & desolation of it on y^e other side, & consequently the gayning of glory to God, or the hindrance thereof doth much depend upon that action, Exod. 14, 13, 14.

[Use 1] The uses. It standeth us upon to reconcile our selves to God before wars be enterprized, Judge. 20, 26. Then we may go to the battle with peace & comfort, then we may fight with boldness and courage. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints: they shall rest from their labors, and their works shall follow them.

Secondly, it reproveth such as then give themselves greatest liberty to sin, to steal, to lie, to swear, to whore, to kill: hence it is, that they say, to have a die in one hand and an whore in another, is soldier-like, as if the soldier and Captain had a dispensation to commit sin and to break all laws divine & human without restraint or controlement, 1 Sam. 30, 16. Iud. 5, 30. contrary to the examples of sundry good & godly Captains, mentioned in the Scriptures, who believed God, were devout and religious, taught their houses the fear of God, and prayed him continually, Mat. 8, 5, to 14. Acts 10, 1, 2, 7. 2 Sam. 20, 10. 1 Sam. 25, 15, 16. These are examples for men of that profession to follow.

Thirdly, it serveth directly against those that think thieves, drunkards, swearers, whore masters, Atheists, and Libertines to be the fittest soldiers to fight the Lord's battles, who indeed are fitter to fight for a tyrant or an usurper, Judge. 9, 4. 2 Chron. 13, 7, and to be used in extremity and necessity, rather then where there are plenty of others, 1 Sam. 22, 2. 2 Chron. 14, 8.

[Object.] But it will be said, They are a burden to the Land, thus the Country shall be well rid of them. I answer, that through them we rather are like to be rid of many good and profitable members that shall go with them and among them. [Answ.] Again, it is good indeed to be freed from them, but we must be rid of them by good means, Rom. 3, 8, howbeit we may not do evil, that good may come thereof. Thirdly, there is no confidence to be reposed in such, who being unfaithful to God, it may be presumed they will be unfaithful also to their Prince, whereby great hurt, loss, and damage may by them redound to the commonwealth in such sending of them. The way to be rid of them, is to execute judgment against them, and to cut them off by the sword of the Magistrate for their evil deeds.

Lastly, from hence we should learn much more to be watchful in the spiritual warfare, Eph. 6, 10. 2 Tim. 2, 4. We are all soldiers, and we are to fight against principalities and powers, and spiritual wickedness in high places, and therefore it behooveth us to put on the whole armor of God, and to be strong in the Lord, knowing that we shall stand in his might, and be able to put to flight these enemies.

7 And they warred against the Midianites, as the Lord commanded Moses, and they slew all the males.

8 And they slew the kings of Midian, besides the rest of them that were slain: namely, Eui, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba, five kings of Midian: Balaam also the son of Beor they slew with the sword.

9 And the children of Israel took all the women of Midian captives, and their little ones, and took the spoil of all their cattle, and all their flocks, and all their goods.

10 And they burnt all their Cities wherein they dwelt, &c.

11 And they took all the spoil, &c.

This is the second part of the Chapter, wherein we see the manner observed in managing this war, and in performing obedience to the Commandment of God and his servant Moses. Wherein we may see the slaughter that they made, first set down generally, They slew all the males: then particularly, Five of their Kings, and also Balaam. Secondly, the captives that they took, to wit, all the women and their little ones. Thirdly, their booty, they took the spoil of their cattle, flocks, and goods. Lastly, they set their Cities on fire, and consumed their goodly Castles to nothing. Here a question may be demanded concerning Balaam, [Object.] how he came to be among these Midianites, forasmuch as we read before, that he went his way? Numb. 24, 25. I answer, [Answer.] some understand the words, of his purpose & resolution to return home, but that he stayed in the way among the Midianites, through whose Country he must necessarily go, and so was slain among them. And indeed it is certain he was present in the battle, but it is more likely and credible that he went home, and afterward hearing of the destruction of so many thousands of the Israelites, procured through his devilish counsel, that he returned unto Madian, hoping to receive the wages which had been promised unto him, seeing the matter succeeded according to his & their desire: and thus indeed he received a just reward and recompense as the wages due unto him, for he was slain by the sword. And hence also it may not unfitly be concluded, that he was no true Prophet of God, (but a Prophet of Satan) for then doubtless the Israelites would never have put him unto the sword. Some there are that too highly magnify him and esteem better of him than is cause, and think that he was the same, who in the book of Job is called Elihu, howbeit this is a blind conceit. Some of the Hebrew Doctors observe that he could be no Prophet because it is said, God opened his eyes, and he saw the Angel of the Lord standing in the way, &c. because this is noted of others, as of the servant of Elisha, 2 Kings 6, 17, and of the Syrians, verse 20, as also of Hagar, Gen. chapter 21, verse 19, but it is never spoken in the same manner of any of the Prophets. Other of them say, he was damned with Doeg, Gehazi, and Achitophel: but the things that are secret belong not unto us: the truth he knoweth, that knoweth all things; it is not for us to judge before the time.

But to leave this and to come to the doctrines: We saw before the sin of the Midianites, chap. 25, and how God threatened them; hitherto they escaped well enough, and might say as Agag did that had been spared with the fatter Oxen, and the better sheep, 1 Sam. 15, 32. Surely the bitterness of death is past: notwithstanding we see God maketh good his word and suffereth no part of it to fall to the ground.

We learn hereby, that wicked men, howsoever they may be suffered long in their sins, and God prosper them in their ways, and bring no temporal judgment upon them, yet at last he meeteth with them, and bringeth his plagues and punishments upon them, Psalm. 73, verses 12, 17, 18, and 37, 35, 36. Job 21, 17, 18. Ierem. 12, 1, 2, 3. Hab. 2, 3, 5. Psal. 50, 21. The Scripture is full of these examples.

[Reason 1] And it must needs be thus, because God is a jealous God, visiting iniquities and transgressions, Exod. 34. he is angry with the wicked & hateth them, his soul abhorreth and detesteth them, and therefore must needs bring judgment upon them, Rom. 1, verse 18, and 2, 5, 8. Deut. 9, 8, 20. Mal. 1, 2, 3. Not that GOD hath any passion of anger, but because he is said to do that which men do when they are angry, that is, he will take vengeance and punish them for their sins and offenses.

Secondly, because the Lord hath set a stint to the wicked, he seemeth for a while to put the bridle in their necks, and to let them run at liberty, but they have their appointed time which they cannot pass; he hath set down how far they shall go, and how long they shall live, and the measure of their sin to what height they shall grow, so that though they desire to proceed never so much, they shall not be able, they cannot go any farther; he waiteth till they have filled up the measure of their sins, Gen. 15, verse 16. Math. 23, ver. 32, and then he will not spare to bring his judgments upon them.

[Use 1] The uses. First, this teacheth us to acknowledge the justice of God. He oftentimes holdeth his peace, and men think him to be like unto themselves, howbeit he will manifest to all the world, that he is a just and righteous God, and holy in all his ways. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, He will reward everyone according to his works, Rom. 2, 6. Psalm. 62, 12. For as God never forgetteth to be merciful, neither shutteth up his kindness in displeasure, Psalm. 77, 9, so he cannot forget his justice, except he should forget himself. No man forgetteth his own name. Justice is God's essential attribute, This is his Name forever, and this is his memorial to all generations. True it is, the faithful themselves do many times conceive amiss both of the mercy and of the justice of God; but they confess, that this is their infirmity, Psal. 77, 10. For when they are themselves in trouble and their soul refuseth to be comforted, they begin to reason and dispute with themselves, and say, Will the Lord cast off forever? Will he be favorable no more? Is his mercy clean gone forever? and doth his promise fail for evermore? Psalm. 77, 7, 8, 9. On the other side, when they see the ungodly prosper, that they are not in trouble as other men, neither plagued like other men, they are ready to think of themselves, that they have cleansed their hearts in vain, and washed their hands in innocence, Psal. 73, verses 3, 5, 13. Nevertheless, whatsoever we are sometimes ready to judge in the time of trouble & temptation, we must upon better advice say with the Apostle, Let God be true, and every man a liar, as it is written, That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged, Rom. 3, verse 4. Albeit therefore GOD do not by and by strike with his hand and draw his sword, yet he is not unjust, neither is he slack concerning his promise, but he is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance, 2 Pet. 3, 9.

Secondly, this serveth to teach us that we [Use 2] should not envy at the wickedness of men, albeit for a season they prosper in their sins: the measure is not yet heaped up, but when once they are grown to the height, the judgments of God will overtake them, and they shall pass away as the grass of the field. A good man will never envy at their evil, Psal. 37, 1, 2, because he knoweth well that they stand in a slippery place, and what is reserved for them, if they go on in their sins.

Thirdly, this serveth to instruct & inform [Use 3] every man that he should not grow obstinate and obdurate in his sins, because of God's patience and longsuffering toward him; because as he hath his time, so also God hath his. If we fill up the measure to the full of our transgression, he will also pour down the vialle of his indignation. Such as run on in sin, grow thereby stark blind that they cannot see, and stark deaf that they cannot hear, until their eyes and ears be opened by affliction, and his judgments take hold upon them. Let us lay before us the examples of others, and consider how it hath gone with them, that we may learn wisdom by their folly, and take warning by their misery. We know how it went with the old world after the days of God's patience were expired, only eight souls were saved, all the rest were destroyed, Gen. 7. 1 Pet. 3, verse 20. It is better for us to be admonished by the fall and ruin of others, and to take heed of abusing the patience of God, then that we should be taken in our sins, and be made examples unto others to our utter confusion and destruction forever.

And they slew the Kings of Midian, besides the rest of them that were slain, namely Eui, &c. five Kings of Midian, &c. Moses doth not content himself to tell the Church of God in general, that the multitude of the people of Midian were destroyed, but singleth out the number and the names of their Kings that were slain. Whereby we may gather that high and low, Prince and people lie open to judgment: God spareth none, but striketh & punisheth all that sin against him. We see this in those Kings that took away Abraham's wife, the Lord plagued them and their houses with great plagues, Gen. 12, 17, and 20, 3, 17: to verify that which the Prophet saith, He suffered no man to do them wrong, but reproveth Kings for their sakes, saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my Prophets no harm, Psal. 105, 14, 15. We saw this in the sixteenth chapter of this Book concerning Korah and his complotters, they were famous and great men in the Congregation, yet the earth was not able to bear them, his judgments were so heavy upon them. This doth the Lord tell such as are mighty upon earth, that band themselves together, and take counsel against the Lord and against his anointed, He will break them with a rod of Iron, and dash them in pieces like a Potters vessel, Psal, 2, 2, 9. And Psalm. 82, 6, 7. I have said, ye are God's, and all of you are children of the most High: but ye shall idie like men, and fall like one of the Princes. The examples of this are infinite; when God sent out Saul to take vengeance upon the Amalekites, the sword fell upon Agag the King that sate upon the Throne, as well as the common sort that sate in the dust, 1 Sam. 15. Herod the king, although he were clad in royal apparel, could not keep his body from the worms, by the which he was eaten up alive, Acts 12. And it must be thus.

[Reason 2] Secondly, with God is no respect of persons at all, though they be supreme and souereigne, though they be wealthy and honorable, learned and mighty in the world, yet they shall escape never a whit the more for these privileges: as Job 34, 19, He accepteth not the persons of Princes, nor regardeth the rich more then the poor, they being all the work of his hands.

This serveth justly to reprove those that [Use 1] make their places a privilege and as it were a Sanctuary to hold and harbor them from God's judgments. These do much deceive themselves, to bear themselves so bold, and to build upon so weak a foundation. It is as possible for a City to hold out against the enemy, that hath no wall but of Reedes, w^c are easily either pierced or fired, as it is for a man to stand against gods judgments by his noble birth, or his high place, or his great riches, or his deep learning, or his golden crown. And yet we see how common it is for such to exempt themselves from the common sort, as if they had more liberty to sin then others. Indeed here is for a time some difference between them and others, but when we must lay down this earthly tabernacle, little or no difference will appear. The condition of all men is alike in death, and Solomon saith, Eccl. chap. 9, verse 4. A living dog is better then a dead Lyon. We must therefore know that whatsoever we are, we are no better then dust: whether we consider the original cause or the final: we are of the dust, and we must return again to the dust, and can carry away nothing with us.

Secondly, this should instruct men of high [Use 2] places to turn unto God, to serve him with fear, and to rejoyce before him with trembling: yea to kiss the son lest he be angry, and they perish in the way, for when his wrath is kindled but a little, blessed are all they that put their trust in him. For when all must appear before the judgment seat of God, no ensign of honor will do us any good.

Let not the rich man glory in his riches, or the strong man in his strength, nor the noble man in his honor; but he that glorieth, let him glory in this, That he understandeth and knoweth God, that he is the Lord which exerciseth kindness, judgment, and righteousness in the earth, for in these he delighteth, Ierem. chap. 9, verse 14.

When a man cometh before an earthly Judge, he respecteth not the person of the poor, nor honoreth the person of the mighty, for that were to do unrighteousness in judgment; but he judgeth his neighbor rightly, Levite. 19, 15. How much more then must we assure our selves, that the Judge of all the world will do right?

The Prophet David chosen of God to be the Governor of his people, professeth that he will sing mercy and judgment, Psalm. 101, verse 1. Thus shall it be with God, here the ungodly often escape, because no man dare attack them or meddle with them, but in the end they shall not escape. Every man shall appear without his vizard; here some poor are respected for their rags, the rich for their bags, the noble for their Escutchions, the Captains for their arms, the mighty for their friends, the clyents for their bribes: thus are the eyes of men dazzled and blinded that they cannot consider every man's cause, but too much respect the person. It is not so with God. All the glory of man is no better then vanity, like the flower of the field that fadeth away. God looketh upon the heart, if we come before him with a soul washed in the blood of Christ, this will keep us from the wrath of God.

[Use 3] Lastly, from hence ariseth comfort to the oppressed and them of low degree that are in misery, to know that God will plead their cause, and enter into judgment with the mighty ones of the earth. He is higher then the highest, and stronger then the strongest. Here men stand in fear of them that do not stand in fear of God, but God feareth not their faces. He heareth the cry of the poor, and will deliver them. Mark the end that God will make, who is the King of Kings, and the Lord of Lord's: he will call those to judgment that here escape the hands of men, When they shall receive for the wrong which they have done, because with him is no respect of persons, Col. 3, 25.

12 And they brought the captives & the prey, and the spoil unto Moses & Eleazar the Priest, and unto the Congregation of the Children of Israel, unto the Campes at the plain of Moab, which are by Jordan near Jericho.

13 And Moses and Eleazar the Priest, and all the Congregation went forth to meet them without the Campe.

14 And Moses was wroth with the Officers of the host, with the Captains over thousands, and Captains over hundreds, which came from the battle:

15 And Moses said unto them, Have ye saved all the women alive?

16 Behold, these caused the children of Israel through the counsel of Balaam to commit a trespass against the Lord, as concerning Peor, and there came a plague among the Congregation of the Lord.

17 Now therefore kill every male among the children, and kill every woman that hath known man, &c.

18 But all the women children that have not known a man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves.

19 And do ye abide without the Campe seven days, all that have killed any person, and all that have touched any dead, and purify both yourselves and your prisoners the third day and the seventh,

20 And ye shall purify every garment, and all that is made of skins, and all work of Goats hair, and all things made of wood.

21 And Eleazar the Priest said unto the men of war which went to the battle, This is the ordinance of the Law which the Lord commanded Moses.

23 Every thing that may abide the fire, ye shall make it go through the fire, and it shall be clean: yet it shall be purified with the water of purification: and all that suffereth not the fire, ye shall cause to pass by the water.

In the words before we heard the marvelous and memorable judgment of GOD against the Midianites, who were enemies to the Church of God, among whom also Balaam perished. He wished to die the death of the righteous, chap. 23, 10, but he lost his life among the unrighteous. Thus they that dignity a pit, oftentimes fall into it themselves, Psalm. 7. Now in these words we have the third and last part of the Chapter, touching the issue of things after the battle, when the Captains & Soldiers returned from the battle. These are of two sorts; First, the things that happened before they came into the Campe, to the 25, verse; and then what fell out when they were admitted into the Campe. Touching the things that befell the men of war before they were admitted into the host, they are these four. First, Moses chideth and checketh them because they had done the Commandment of God to halves, they had executed a part, and left another part undone, like Saul that spared the fatter Sheep and Oxen for sacrifice, 1. Sam. 15. verse 21. They had saved all the women under a pretence of foolish pity, accounting it no honor or valor to consist in killing them: but they ought to have been destroyed, because they caused the children of Israel to commit a trespass against the Lord, and a great plague fell upon the congregatiō of the Lord, chapter 25, 1. Secondly, Moses commandeth that such should all be destroyed, their eye must spare none of them; but the women children that had not known man by carnal copulation, should be reserved alive for their uses. Thirdly, he commandeth the men of war to purify themselves before they came into the host. Lastly, we see the commandment of Eleazar the Priest to purify the silver and gold, and garments that they had gotten; that such metals as would abide the fire and not be consumed, should pass through it: the rest was to be washed with water, that so they might be consecrated to God, and be applied to an holy use. The profane Midianites had polluted and defiled them with Idolatry, which God hateth, of which see more afterward, chap. 33, 52.

14 Moses was wroth with the Officers of the host, with the Captains over thousands, and Captains over hundreds: and he said unto them, Have ye saved all the women alive? &c. The Lord told Moses immediately before, verse 2, so soon as this business was ended, he should be gathered to his fathers, yet see how he hasteth forward the matter that it might be ended, that he also might come to the ende of his days. God had sworn that he should not enter into the Land, for he was displeased with him, and spared him not, because of the people, as he showeth, Deut. 1, verse 37, The Lord was angry with me for your sakes, saying, Thou shalt not go in thither: where he goeth not about to excuse himself, and to wash his hands, as if he had not done amiss, but his meaning is that he fell not into evil of his own accord, forasmuch as the mischief sprang from the people. Thus did Moses smart for the rashness and retchlesnesse of the people, as oftentimes Kings and Princes do. The old saying was wont to be, that is,

Delirant reges, plectuntur Achiui:

The Princes err and reason lack,

But the poor Commons go to wrack.

Howbeit we may invert the rule, and turn it otherwise,

Delirat populus, rex plectitur ipse.

The people swerve and cannot be kept within any bounds, whē oftentimes Princes bear the punishment of their folly, as it fell out with Moses. But to come to the matter, mark how he reproveth the Captains and martial men for sparing the whorish women that had brought a great plague upon them. We learn from hence, that sins of omission and neglect of duties which men are bound to perform, are sins displeasing to God, as sins of commission are. It is a sin against God to omit a good duty, as well as to commit an evil, or else Moses would not have been wroth with this people: this is proved, Math. 25, 3, 41, 42. Hos. 4. ver. 1, 2. Deut. 27, ver. 26. Ierem. 10, verse 25. They called not upon God. Not to do good, is to do evil. The grounds are evident.

For first, this is a kind of contempt against [Reason 1] God; for not to obey, is to disobey & to contemn. The servant which will not do what his master commandeth, what doth he but show a contempt against him? If then this argue and convince of open contempt, no marvel if God be displeased with it. True it is, and it cannot be denied, that men often do not that which God requireth, out of frailty, ignorance, and infirmity; but a continual neglect and omission cannot but proclaim our contempt, and therefore it is a fearful and heinous sin.

[Reason 2] Secondly, the law of God is not only negative, but also affirmative: it commandeth good as well as forbiddeth evil. For albeit all the ten Commandments, the fourth and fifth only excepted, do run negatively, yet the negative carrieth with it the affirmative, according to the exposition of Christ himself, Math. 5, verses 25, 33, 37. The Commandment which saith expressly, Thou shalt not kill, saith also inclusively, Thou shalt preserve life.

Thirdly, it is against the rule of love and [Reason 3] charity. For where there is less love then ought to be, there is sin. Now where there is an omission of those things whereby God may be glorified and our brethren profited, there can be no true charity. [Object.] But against this Doctrine it will be said, that sins of omission cannot retain the nature of sin, because sin is an act. I answer, [Answer.] it is true of sins committed, they are acts: but of duties omitted, it will not hold: as for example, a man refuseth to hear the word, he will not come to the house of God; here is a sin, because he that is of God, heareth God's word, saith our Savior, John 8, 47. yet it is no act at all, but the omitting of an act; so if a man hear the word carelessly this is a sin, Luke 8. yet it is not any act: so that sins of omission are sins before God as well as other of commission. The uses follow.

First, it appeareth hereby, that many men [Use 1] in the world, if they would examine themselves and cast up their accounts and reckonings with God, as debtors ought to do, they should find themselves to stand endighted and convicted of a multitude of sins that haply they never once dreamed of. The greatest sort take notice of this, and take themselves bound to avoid evil, but they never charge themselves with doing that which is good. Every man confesseth it a sin to serve other gods, to worship false gods, and yet never consider that it is a sin, not to serve and worship the true God. Moses was shut out of the Land of promise, not because he did openly dishonor God before the Congregation, but because he did not honor and glorify his Name, Numb. 20. And wherefore was the rich man cast into the torments of hell? was it because he had taken anything from poor Lazarus, or pulled the meat from his mouth? No, it was because he did not put bread into his mouth, He fared deliciously every day himself, Luke 16, but he suffered him to starve for want. Now we must set down this as a certain rule, that they never had their hearts truly reformed from doing of evil, that have not also been careful to do that which is good. We have therefore a farther reckoning to make with God then we imagine, and stand deeper indebted to him then we believe. For if we do not make our accounts to account with him for duties let slip and omitted, we can never be saved.

Secondly, this Doctrine serveth as a good direction to help us to try our selves whether [Use 2] we be rightly reformed in our hearts or not. If we have learned to account duties omitted to be no better then sins against almighty GOD, and for which he will one day take vengeance, we have made a good step in our holy faith: and that if we have not learned to make conscience of sins of omission, we will never truly make conscience of sins of commission. A man may make some scruple of conscience of swearing and taking the Name of God in vain, and yet never use it with fear and reverence. This man is as guilty that hath left the good undone, as the other. Many men will refrayne from going to work on the Sabbath day, and from open profaning of it, but in the mean season they come not to hear the word, neither make any profit unto their souls by it. These men doubtless do it but for outward respects, and not for any care they have to keep it holy. For how shall it be known that they do it for conscience sake, except they make conscience of the holy exercises of the Sabbath? So then every man ought to examine himself, and see whether he be not guilty of some evil, even while he abstayneth from evil: and hereby we may find out the truth. If we make conscience of the contrary good commanded and required, then our hearts are right:

For this is a certain rule that never faileth, and we shall always find it true, that he never had any true fear of sin or of displeasing God, that had not withal a care to please God.

Thirdly, this Doctrine convinceth us as [Use 3] guilty of sin even from our mothers womb, we have all gone astray and are culpable in the sight of God. For all that men can boast off is nothing but the abstaining from evil, they can say nothing touching any good that they have done. They can allege for themselves, they have not been corrupt Idolaters, scoffing Ishmaelites, or profane *Esau*s; they cannot challenge unto themselves that they have been zealous worshippers, or faithful and careful professors of the truth. But what shall it profit us not to be profane as Esau, except we have labored to be like David, a man after God's own heart? What shall it profit us not to be scoffing Ishmaelites, except also we labor to preserve the good name of our brethren? Or what shall it avail us not to be oppressors and such as are full of cruelty, except we be also lovers of mercy and full of good works? Certainly except this be in us, we cannot free our selves from the just imputation of sin and wickedness. Would any man account that a good hand, which is not able to do any good to the body? and to be able only to say, it did never cut out the tongue out of the mouth, or pull the eyes out of the head, or draw the heart out of the body? The like we might say of other members. For would any praise and commend the mouth to be fit and profitable to the body, that could only say thus much for it self, that it did never tear the flesh from the body, or swallow poison to the end to destroy the body? If then it be evil, that the members should not do those good duties and functions about the body that is required of them; we may reason after the same manner for our purpose, why should not a man be justly condemned that can only boast that he hath not done evil, when in the mean season he cannot show any good that he hath done? doubtless such a one is no true member of Jesus Christ. For we make God our adversary when he findeth us a barren field without good Corn, as well as when we bring forth nothing but thorns and thistles: and our house is fit to lodge and entertayne Satan and other unclean spirits, Math. 12, verse 44, when they find it swept and empty of God's graces.

If we had never actually committed any sin, yet because we omit such duties as almighty God looketh for at our hands, it is sufficient to work our condemnation and destruction.

Wherefore is Meroz cursed in the song of Deborah? Is it because they fought against God's people, and joined with the enemy? No, it is because they did not assist them and help them against the mighty, Judge. 5, verse 23. And the unprofitable and unfaithful servant was cast into utter darkness not for misspending his masters talent, or for wasting it on harlots or riotous living, but because he did not use it well, nor employ it to his masters advantage, Math. 25, verses 27, 33. And wherefore shall many reprobates be condemned at the day of judgment? shall it be for taking food from the hungry, or drink from the thirsty, or garments from the needy, or lodging from the stranger, or comfort from the sick, or relief from the prisoner? No; because they did not feed them, nor clothe them, nor visit them, nor harbor them. He that is a true and loyal subject, it is not enough for him, not to serve his Princes enemies, but he must serve his Prince also: so if we will be the Lord's servants and subjects, we must not think it sufficient to live ydley and to serve nobody, but we must do faithful service to him that hath created, redeemed, called, justified, and sanctified us; otherwise there will always be sufficient matter for our endightment and just condemnation, when we shall appear before the Throne of God. For every Tree that bringeth not forth good fruit shall be hewn down and cast into the fire, Math. 3, verse 10. Will a man accept of such a servant, that contenteth himself to do him no hurt or no evil, when in the mean season he doth him no good? Shall the bryer or thistle only be cut down in the Wilderness? No, the fruitless Tree also shall go with it though it grow in the midst of Paradise. To conclude, the word of exhortation arising from hence, is thus much for everyone of us, that we should labor to join these two together, knowing that the one cannot be profitable without the other, and therefore we must labor to perform the good required, as well as to abstain from the evil forbidden; so shall we find almighty God to be gracious unto us, and we shall please him in our obedience.

[Verses 15, 16. And Moses said unto them, Have ye saved all the women alive? now therefore kill every male and every woman, &c.] A man would think at the first, that this sex should move commiseration and pity in the hearts of men, and stay the hand from execution.

The wrath of Moses may seem to be too severe, [Object.] and to savor of barbarousnes, in that he willeth the men of war to commit such carnage, not only upon the women, but upon the little ones that could not be guilty of the sin of their parents, neither were able to discern between good and evil, neither knew the right hand from the left. The women perished justly, who had laid a stumbling block before Israel, but the poor infants and sucklings, what had they done?

[Answ.] I answer, they were by nature sinners, and as a brood of serpents. And albeit the son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, Ezek. 18, yet who can accuse God of injustice, seeing all are guilty of original sin, which deserveth death? but of this we have spoken before. Now to apply this, the women that had known man, are commanded to be destroyed, because they had worthily brought that general judgment by their horrible sin. They transgressed against GOD, and GOD brought this judgment upon them.

This teacheth, that the cause of a man's ruin, the procurer of his plagues and of destruction is none other but himself, let us never seek the cause out of our selves, but within us. The cause of the destruction of these Midianitish women, was not in the decree of God to have them destroyed, but because they had committed this evil, therefore came all this upon them. If we consider man before his fall, he was the most glorious creature under heaven: but after his fall which was his own act, he became the most cursed creature, even worse then the brute beasts. See farther for this point, Hos. 13, 9. O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself: and Isaiah 3, ver. 9. They have rewarded evil to themselves. And Ezek. 18. The wickedness of the wicked shall be upon himself.

The grounds of this are evident. First, because [Reason 1] it is not from God, but from our selves, I am. 1, 14, and therefore when any man is plagued for sin, the cause must be searched and shall be found in our selves, not in the Lord. True it is, we are punished of God, and yet indeed we punish our selves, it is we that draw out the sword against our selves; and the reason is, because we give the cause why God doth punish us: for howsoever it be God that doth it, yet it is man that giveth the cause.

[Reason 2] Secondly, because as God evermore saveth in mercy, so he doth also destroy in justice. He never punisheth or taketh away any, but it is in his justice. For these two can never accord or stand together, to wit, his justice in punishing, and no merit in man to deserve it. If God punisheth, man deserveth it, these go hand in hand together, so that man must be the cause of his own destruction.

The uses follow. First, this teacheth us to [Use 1] accuse our selves whensoever we suffer anything. We are ready naturally to justify our selves and to accuse others, like Adam, like Saul, and sundry others: howbeit we learn from the Prophet, Lam. 3, verse 39, to search and try our ways, and to turn unto the Lord, confessing that we have transgressed, and have rebelled, and therefore suffer for our sins. So did the penitent thief upon the Cross, say, We suffer the due reward for our deeds. This should evermore humble us under the hand of God, and make us patient in suffering, forasmuch as the cause of all is in our selves. Let us therefore submit our selves unto him, and never murmur under the cross, seeing we cannot accuse God of wrong or injustice, that he layeth more upon us then we deserve, for we have the cause of all in our own bosoms.

Secondly, we may hereby judge who [Use 2] are the greatest enemies that a man hath. Men commonly think & are persuaded that they have many enemies, and often complain how they plot their destruction. They cry out sometimes of the world, sometimes of the devil, and sometimes against almighty God himself, as Job affirmeth, That he had set him as a But for his enemies to shoot at. Be it that a man hath many enemies that hate him and rise up against him; but wherefore hath he all these come upon him as an armed man? The reason is, because first he was his own enemy and thereupon they also do all become his enemies. For tell me, why is God angry, and hath set himself against thee, but because thou didst first of all set thyself against him by thy sins? And why hath the devil, the world, or thy other enemies any power against thee, but because thou hast weakened thyself by thy sins? otherwise none of all these could touch thee or torment thee. True it is, they might hate thee, but they should never be able to hurt thee.

When a malefactor cometh unto the place of execution, against whom will he complain, or whom will he accuse? Not the Judge, not the Iewry, not the Witnesses, but himself only, that hath brought punishment upon himself. For he suffereth death, not because the Witnesses accused him, not because the Iewry found him guilty, nor because the Judge pronounced the sentence of punishment against him, but because he deserved it. So if a man perish, against whom should he open his mouth, or upon whom should he exclaim? Against GOD he cannot. What then, may he against the instruments of GOD? neither are they the cause, it is in himself, it is nowhere else, he is the cause of all, and upon him it must rest.

[Use 3] Lastly, this serveth to reprove those that cast all upon God's decree. These make quick dispatch of the matter, and would lay all the blame upon the purpose of God, and so case their own shoulders.

[Object.] Hence it is, that they object, O the Preachers teach me that God hath foreappointed and foreordayned all things; he foreseeth all things that shall come to pass; they often tell of God's decree, it is the will of God, I cannot resist it, and therefore I must perish. Thus do many blaspheme, [Answ.] and add impiety to impiety. First I ask with the Apostle, Rom. 11, 34. Who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his Counselor? What hast thou to do therefore with the decree of GOD? Didst thou know the decree of God before? or tell me, whosoever thou art that thus blasphemest and blamest God, did the decree of God put any evil into thee, or move, or persuade thee to offend? No certainly, that is against his nature and against his law: it cometh from the corrupt heart of man himself, and therefore let them complain against themselves, and be consumed in the fire which they have made; they have kindled hell for themselves, or else it were not possible that they should perish, according to the saying of the Prophet, Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compass about yourselves with sparks: walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks that ye have kindled, Isaiah 50, 11.

To conclude, would any man escape this destruction? he can never escape but by God: for we must know that as none perisheth without himself, so he saveth no man without himself. Without thee God will never save thee, with thee he will save thee. Now the first step to this salvation, is to labor for grace; and the second, to bring forth the fruits of grace. Let us delight in the word of God, and in the works of holiness and righteousness, so shall we be kept safe, that the judgments of God and his fearful hand shall not overtake us. Let us take away the cause of them by the speediness of our repentance, and then God will keep the waves of his wrath and indignation far enough from us. This is the only way to deliver our souls this is the only way to escape his heavy hand, and thus shall we receive comfort in this life, and eternal happiness and blessedness in the life to come.

[Kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him: but the women children that have not known a man by lying with him, keep alive, &c.] God would have all the males without exception destroyed, that the name of that unclean Nation should utterly be rooted out, and no remnant thereof be suffered to continue. The maids were spared, as it is thought, not for their virginity, but that they might serve the people of GOD to increase their own number, and to multiply unto many generations. But observe farther, that Moses speaking of the manner of the generation of man, useth a term and phrase of speaking, which is cleanly and comely, & no way foul or offensive to the ears of any. The Doctrine from hence, is, that things in themselves unseemly to be uttered, are to be delivered in such words as are honest and modest, and may no way offend, Genesis, chapter 4, verses 1, 2, 25. 2 Samuel, chapter 12, verse 21. Judge. chapter 3, verse 24. Psalm. 51, in the title. Isaiah, chapter 7, verse 30, 1 Cor. chap. 7, verse 3. Gen. chapter 19, verse 5. and chapter 16, verse 4. Judges, chapter 2, verse 24. 1. Sam. 24, 4. Rom. 1, verses 26, 27, 28. So then it is the part of God's children to carry chastity and modesty in all parts of shamefastnes, not to be seers, hearers, or acquainters of our selves with anything uncomely. There are many things evil in themselves, which are spoken of without any evil or offense, as to steal, to kill, which are wicked to be practiced, not wicked to be uttered. On the other side there are some things lawful to be done, but dishonest and unlawful to be spoken of. A modest heart ought to show it self in word and in deed, and in all the parts of the body, Gen. 9, 21, 23. It is remembered of Noah, that he planted a vineyard, and became drunk, and in his drunkenness disclosed himself in his Tent, his shame was discovered; Cham scoffed at it, but Shem and Japheth are exceedingly commended in his Prophecy, They went backward and saw not the nakedness of their father. The Apostle showeth, that we have many parts dishonorable in themselves, and unseemly through our sin, herein the wisdom of a man showeth it self, that he putteth more honor upon them, 1 Cor. 12, verse 23. The hands, the head we show to all, other parts we cover, as nature it self teacheth, Hab. chapter 2, verse 15. The reasons are evident.

First, we should be silent and secret in matters [Reason 1] that are unclean, and express the same with reverent, choice, and modest words, because it is not seemly for those that profess holiness, to show themselves light in any condition. Now whatsoever is seemly, it is our parts to think upon, Ephes. chapter 5, verse 3. Fornication and all uncleanness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh Saints. Such broad or rather beastly speaking therefore is no way sightly or seemly for the people of God. Secondly, God would walk in the midst of us, and be evermore among us, so that it is not fit or seemly that we should be seen in any unseemly manner, Deuter. chapter 23, verse 14. Thirdly, evil words corrupt good manners, 1 Corinthians, chapter 15, verse 33. We are soon corrupted through our inbred corruption, but much more when we hear unchaste words & see unchaste works. Fourthly, there should be no filthy speech in our mouths, but that which is good to the use of edifying, That it may minister grace to the hearers, Ephes. 4, 29: otherwise we shall grieve the Spirit of God, and cause him, touching his comfortable and defensive presence, to depart from us, Eph. 4, 30. Deut. 23, 14.

[Reason 1] The Uses follow. This reproveth such as with delight please themselves in spewing out filthy speech out of their mouth; let such also take heed lest the most pure and holy God do spew them out of his mouth, Reu. 3, 16. How many are therein our days in all places, that do make it their sport and pastime to talk of unclean things, and that in a filthy and beastly manner? which no doubt proceedeth from the filthiness of the heart, Isaiah 3. verse 9. Matth. 12, 34. Isaiah 32, 6. Corrupt and rotten speech. is a token of a corrupt and rotten heart, for from the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.

Secondly, it reproveth those that do take pleasure and delight to look on filthy things. For, if to speak filthily, and give our tongues to filthiness be wicked, how much more to delight to behold filthiness? Cham and Canaan beholding their fathers nakedness, are reprov'd, nay accursed, Gen. 9, 22. And if David pray unto God, to turn away his eyes from beholding vanity, Psa. 119, 37: what cause have we to desire him to keep us from beholding impurity?

Thirdly, it meeteth manifestly and justly with those which are not ashamed to commit that openly in the sight and light of the sun, which a true Christian heart blusheth once to speak of. These are not only not ashamed to commit evil secretly, of which the Apostle saith, It is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret, Eph. 5, 12. 1 Cor 5, 1. but make show of them publicly, and glory in their own shame and confusion, 2. Sam. 16, ver. 22. whereas modesty should be maintained, touching the eyes, the ears, the tongue, the gesture, and the whole body.

Fourthly, it condemneth all love-songs, light interludes, amorous books, lascivious representations of love-matters in plays and Comedies, indecent and unseemly pictures, lascivious dancing of men and women together, 1 Thess. 5, 22. Mark 6, 22. All these favor of wantonness and filthiness, which are not comely or convenient.

Lastly, acknowledge from hence, that it is grievous to God's children to have their abiding among a wanton, scurrilous, & prophan people, which in all speeches are lewd, broad, open, and offensive: I say to have our habitation among such is irksome to an honest and godly heart. It is noted of Lot, That he grieved his righteous soul from day today even for the things which he saw and heard amongst the Sodomites, 2 Peter 2, 8. As it was with him, so it is unto all the faithful a great torment and vexation of spirit, to be tied unto, and to be tired with the company of such as use ribaldry, and delight in filthy speeches, and unclean deeds.

25 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying;

26 Take the sum of the prey that was taken both of the man, and of the beast, thou and Eleazar the Priest, and the chief fathers of the Congregation:

27 And divide the prey into two parts, between them that took the War upon them, who went out unto battle, and between all the Congregation.

28 And leuy a Tribute unto the Lord, &c.

29 Take it of their half, &c.

30 And of the children of Israel's half, &c.

Here Moses beginneth to handle what was done after the men that went out to the battle came to the host, wherein we must consider two things: first, the distribution of the prey, and then the oblation of the Captains. The dividing of the prey taken in the war, reacheth to the 31. verse, and containeth the commandment of God in these verses, and the execution of it in those that follow. In the commandment it may seem very strange, [Objection.] why God would have the prey and booty divided between the soldiers that had taken it, and the rest of the Israelites that went not out to battle. For what reason is it (may some say) that such as sate still in their tents, should have as much as they that aduētured their lives? or should they that did nothing, be made equal unto them which have borne the burden and heat of the battle? I answer, [Answer.] such as went not forth did not hang back of purpose, or slip their neck out of the coller thorough fear or faintness, but because they were not appointed to the work. And no doubt while their brethren were fighting, Moses and Eleazar, and the rest of the people were earnest with God in prayer; as we see upon like occasion, Exod. 17. For God will have equity and justice observed among his people. Again, a reason is rendered of this, 1 Sam. 30, 24: where the prey taken from the Amalekites is divided by David between those that went down to the battle, and others that abode by the stuff: and he teacheth it to be a part of common charity & equity, to reward such as stayed by the stuff, who do no less intend the common good, then others that fought the battle. Now here we may consider the greatness of the battle and victory, by y^e rich booty which they obtained with no loss at all, as appeareth verse 49. God therefore for the sin of these Midianites dealt most severely with them, wherein they lost their goods and themselves. This teacheth us, That the Lord as he will destroy the wicked that provoke him, so when he doth it, he will do it fearfully and severely, Psalm 50, 22. To this purpose he oftentimes useth two merciless elements and enemies (which he armeth to execute his will) the fire and water, which are without pity and compassion, they spare neither young nor old; as he destroyed the old world with water, Gen. 7, Jude 4: so he destroyed Sodom by fire, and will destroy the world again by fire, 2 Pet. 3: thereby making it manifest that he can destroy sharply and fiercely, Psal. 21, 9. & 97, 3. And no marvel, if we consider the grounds thereof.

[Reason 1] For first, the Lord layeth even upon his own children very strange and fearful judgments, as we see how he visited his seruāt David, Psal. 32, 4: yea sometimes he bringeth such heavy things upon them, that y^e ungodly take occasion to triumph over them. If then he do it to his own, what will he do to the wicked and the reprobate? Proverbs 11, 31. Luke 23, 31. 1 Pet, 4, 17. A servant may well gather, that if the master of the family be so rough and rigorous to the children, then he will be more sharp and severe towards him.

[Reason 2] Secondly, the wicked grow obstinate & desperate, they harden their hearts, and deprive themselves of all means that might do them good. They leave the Lord, and therefore he leaveth them: is it then any marvel if GOD deal sharply with them? Christ our Savior putteth forth a Parable unto the Scribes and Pharisees, Mat. 21, 35: that the owner of a vineyard sent forth his servants to his tenants, that they might receive the fruit of it; but they abused and killed them, and his son also: and then demandeth of them what will the Lord do unto those servants? They answer, that it is just that he should cruelly destroy them. Thus they give sentence against themselves & show, that such as grow obstinate against the Lord and his people, abusing his Ministers, contemning his word, and resisting his ordinances, can expect nothing at his hands but this, that he should destroy them in his wrath, and sweep them away in his fury.

Thirdly, this is the nature of God, he is as [Reason 3] a mighty and consuming fire, Heb. 12, verse 29. Deut. 4, 29. Now we know that fire hath two qualities; to purge, and to consume. He is as a consuming fire to the good and bad, to the godly and ungodly. He is a fire unto the good, but a purging or purifying fire to consume their dross, as gold is purified in the fire, 1 Pet, 1. But when he cometh to deal with the wicked, he setteth aside his mercy, and always giveth them judgment without mercy: when he cometh to his own, he cometh with judgment and mercy. So then the point is very manifest, that when God entereth into judgment with the ungodly, he will destroy them utterly, fearfully, finally, and fully.

[Use 1] This reproveth those that walk on boldly and presumptuously in their sins, and yet never fear his judgments, but dream of a God altogether framed of mercy, and thereby flatter themselves in their sins, and then run on in evil till judgment take hold of them. And therefore Moses exhorting the people to obedience by the remembrance of the works which they had seen, showeth, that such as do bless themselves in their heart, saying, I shall have peace though I walk in the imagination of mine heart, &c. The Lord will not spare him, but his anger and jealousy shall smoke against that man, &c. Deut. 29, 19. It behooveth us therefore to beware of abusing God's mercies, lest the curses written in the book of God fall upon us, and he blot out our name from under heaven. And let us take heed of impenitency & hardening our selves in our sins, because thereby we dishonor God, we deface his image, we make our selves like to Satan, whom by sin and disobedience we resemble. Our sins are as a thick cloud that separate between y^e Lord's mercy and us, and hide the comfortable light of his countenance: they provoke the anger of God against us, 1 Cor. 10, 22: they bring distrust of God's providence and fatherly protection, and weaken our faith in all his promises. They bring temporal scourges in our bodies, in our goods, in our name, in our labors, and grieve God's Spirit to cause him to depart: they bring a wounded conscience, and weaken our assurance of his favor, and therefore let us not be encouraged to proceed in evil, because God is merciful.

Secondly, let no man fret at the prosperity of the wicked and obstinate sinners: for albeit [Use 2] God do long bear them with patience, yet a fearful destruction shall be their end and reward. If they were to be destroyed after an easy and gentle manner, as the grass that fadeth away, yet even then there were no cause to envy at them, Ps. 37, 1: much less therefore those that shall cruelly & fearfully be destroyed. If a man should have sentence to die the most honorable death that a State can afford, as to have his head stricken off, yet for this no man is so foolish as to envy him, though he be not burned or hanged by the neck, yet none (I say) would repine at such a man: so what ground hath any man to fret, or fume, or envy at the flourishing estate of any wicked man? especially when it is known that GOD hath decreed that he shall perish, and that not by an honorable death, but perish like Haman shamefully in his own house, and after that shall have all shame and contempt poured upon him, and go to the place of the damned, there to suffer torments with the devil & his angels, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Lastly, this being well learned, will serve [Use 3] as an admonition for everyone to take heed of every evil way, & that he be not obstinate in sin. It is one thing to sin, and another to be obstinate in sin, to withstand y^e word and rod of God, and to abuse his patience. It is incident to all to sin, but obstinacy in sinning, hardness of heart, and casting off Repentance, are the forerunners of destruction. Let us think thus with our selves, what can a short or fading pleasure profit us, when God shall come with his fearful destruction? Nay, what can all the pleasures or profits in the world recompense for the loss of that comfort and peace that otherwise we may enjoy? What did Esau's red pottage so pleasing unto his eye profit him in the end, when he lost thereby not only his fathers blessing, but also the blessed life to come? What good got Achan by his wedge of Gold, when it proved to be the wrack and ruin both of himself & of his family? And therefore doth Christ our Savior teach us, Mat. 16, 26. What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, & then lose his own soul?

Again, this fearfulness of judgment, should make a man think of the difficulty of repentance, and what fearful things he shall suffer if he practice it not. If it be a hard thing to break off sin, we shall find it much harder to be broken with the judgments of God and the fierceness of his wrath. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of an earthly Prince, Prov. 19, 10: but more fearful to fall into the hands of the living God, especially when he is enraged and incensed by the sins of men; and therefore we ought to meet him with repentance, lest we feel his vengeance to our condemnation. And let us labor to set the hardness of bearing the judgments of God against the breaking off of sin, & the one will easily countervail and overcome the other. If we find it an hard and harsh saying, to repent and break off our sins, we shall find it more hard when it shall be said, Go ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his Angels, Mat. 25. Let a man seriously and thoroughly consider what an hard and impossible thing it will be to undergo the wrath of God, which maketh the devils and damned spirits to tremble, James 2, 19: & he will think it an easy and light thing to forsake sin, although it were more deer then all things in the world whatsoever. What if it were as hard a thing to renounce thy sin, and to take up the practice of true repentance, as to pluck out a man's eye, or to cut off his arm? yet it must be done, he hath pronounced it with his own mouth that must be thy Judge: that is, if there be any one sin as deer unto thee as thy right eye, thou must pull it out, or else thou shalt never come to the kingdom of heaven: or if there be any sin as deer unto thee as thy right arm by which thou gettest thy living, if thou canst not be content to cut it off, and dost not constantly and confidently resolve to cast it from thee, thou canst have no entrance given thee into God's kingdom. We see by common experience daily, that men will endure very hard and bitter things from y^e hand of the Physician, that they may recover health and escape death: and yet it is not to put away death utterly, it is only to prolong life for a time; for they may defer death, they are not able to take it away. If then such sharp and bitter things seem easy to avoid a temporal death, then what ought a man to do and to suffer, to avoid the bitterness and sharpness of eternal destruction, and the fierce wrath of God? which indeed is nothing but this, To forsake sin, and to take up repentance, and the performance of religious and holy duties. But alas, alas, how many are there every wherein the world, that have been content to lose many ounces of blood out of the veins for the good of the body, that have never shed a few drops of tears out of their eyes for the recovery of their souls? To take bitter pilles and potions to purge the gross humors that distemper us, that have never purged or cleansed themselves from the filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of GOD? 2 Cor. chap. 7, verse 1. Nay we see men are willing to be seared, that cannot abide to have the wounds of their soul searched by God's holy Word: yea, to have one member cut off to save the whole body, who notwithstanding will not leave one pleasure of sin for a season, to save both body and soul. This is no better then folly and madness. Here is wisdom therefore to think of this betimes.

31 And Moses and Eleazar the Priest, did as the Lord commanded Moses.

32 And the booty being the rest of the prey, which the men of war had caught, was six hundred thousand, and seventy thousand and five thousand sheep.

33 And threescore, &c.

34 And threescore and one thousand Asses, &c

35 And thirty and two thousand persons in all of women that had not known man by lying with him, &c.

37 And the Lord's tribute of the Sheep was six hundred and threescore & fifteen, &c.

41 And Moses gave the tribute which was the Lord's heave-offering unto Eleazar the priest, &c.

47 Even of the children of Israel's half, &c.

We have heard before the commandment of God touching the dividing of the prey: Now followeth the execution of it by Moses and Eleazar. It is worth the observation to consider, that as before the death of Aaron, Moses and Aaron are always joined together, so after his death Moses and Eleazar, the Magistrate and the Minister, as the hand and the eye are in the body. Then doth the church and the commonwealth flourish when these two go together; and on the other side, they go to wrack when they are separated & draw several ways. The greatness of the victory and conquest that God gave to his people, appeareth further in these words by the distribution of the people, and by the reservation of the women y^t had not known man. which escaped the edge of the sword. Here then we may behold the misery that befell these Midianites for seducing God's people, and drawing them to whore dome and idolatry. Learn hereby, that the iniquity of a people, or a country and nation, maketh the Lord to destroy them, and to lay them waste, sometime by the sword of the enemy (as in this place) & sometimes by other judgments, as Deut. 7, 1. where the Lord telleth the people of Israel that they should cast out and destroy many Nations: and afterward, chap. 9, 4: he willeth them not to say, that it was for their own righteousness that the Lord had brought them to possess that land, but it was for the wickedness of those Nations, that he did drive them out before them. Again, in the eight chap. and the twentieth verse, he saith, If thou forsake the Lord, and walk after other gods, and serve them, then I testify to thee this day that thou shalt surely perish, because ye would not be obedient to the voice of the Lord your God. So 1 Sam. 12, 25: If ye shall still do wickedly, ye shall perish both you and your king, Mat. 23, 37, 38.

[Reason 1] The Reasons follow. First, they dishonor God in their lives, and therefore it is just that he should deprive them of those blessings that they enjoy, and make others to enjoy the labors of their hands, and instead of them lay judgments and plagues upon them. A son that dishonoreth his father, is unworthy to receive any duty from a servant. So certainly it is just with God, that such as dishonor him, should be deprived of his protection, & be left naked unto all judgments.

[Reason 2] Secondly, God's justice doth so require, that where there is a general corruption and depravation, there should be a general desolation; and where the corruption is particular, the judgment should also be answerable. When God told Abraham that he would destroy Sodom and Gomorrhah, he reasoneth in this manner, Wilt thou destroy the righteous with the wicked? No (saith God:) but if thou canst find ten righteous persons, I will spare the Cities for tens sake: Gen. 18, verse 32. But he could find none but Lot, they had generally corrupted their ways. It is not enough though some repent and turn unto God, those few may defer a judgment, but they cannot keep away judgment forever, so long as the general state is corrupted. If one man or a few forsake their sins, it is enough that they escape the eternal punishment, though they do fall into the temporal, and do not save & deliver the whole: I say, they have enough if they save themselves, and have ample fruit of their conversion, though they save none of all the rest.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, this will make manifest the power of God. Exemplary justice may be shown on a few, but power is shown when there are many offenders. For, as it is in his power to save with few as well as with many, 1 Sam. 14, 6: so in this case, it is the power of his justice to destroy many. A small power of a Prince will serve to destroy and subdue a small company of rebels: but then is the power of a Prince manifested and openly shown, when Rebels are grown to an head, and have gotten unto themselves some strong hold: so it is with God, the more opposition is made against him, the more is the glory of his power set forth, when he draweth out the sword of justice against them.

The Uses remain. First of all, God's providence [Use 1] is hereby notably established, that his eyes are upon all men, and upon all their ways, because he destroyeth multitudes as well as particular persons. His judgments are evermore just, and that could not be, except that there were cause why to destroy. There must be a cause, and also a known cause: forasmuch, as though men were wicked, if God's all-seeing eye were not upon them, or if he knew no cause, he should be unjust if he should destroy. Nadab and Abihu that durst presume to rush into the presence of GOD with their strange Fire, Levite. chapt. 2. verses 1, 2. even in the very act of their sin, the special providence of God came upon them, so that before they had finished their sin, the plague began. So it was with Ananias and Sapphira, they were smitten down with sodain death, the lie was no sooner out of their mouth, but the judgment of God did lay hold on them, For they fell down and gave up the ghost, Acts 5, 5, 10. Thus God's almighty power over-reacheth the sin of man with punishment, before ever it be quite committed, of which we saw a notable and fearful example before in the Israelites, the 11. chapter, and the 33. ver. recorded also in the 78. Psalm, verses 29, 30. They did eat and were well filled, for he did give them their own desire: but while their meat was yet in their mouths, the wrath of God came upon them, and slew and smote down the chosen men of Israel. Herod the King likewise, while he was in his pomp and pride, was smitten of God in the very act of his sin, while he took to himself the glory due to God, Acts 12. These & such like punishments do plainly argue the providence of God to be over the ways of men, and over all their actions, & doth continually wait upon them.

Secondly, it reproveth those that magnify [Use 2] themselves, & gather themselves together against God, thinking to prevail & escape for their multitude sake. This is no plea to protect our selves, neither giveth any hope of deliverance from judgment, but rather provoketh God the more against us. God bringeth in the people of Israel vinting thus, Son of man, they y^e inhabit those wastes of the land of Israel, speak, saying, Abraham was one, & he inhabited the Land: but we are many, the land is given us for an inheritance, Ezek. 33, 24. The Jews that remained after the destruction of the City had their eyes blinded with carnal security, and persuaded themselves, that albeit they hardened their hearts against the chastisements of God, and repented not at the preaching of the prophets yet they should possess the land and dwell in it, whatsoever Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and other Prophets pratled to the contrary. And thus they reasoned: If Abraham that was but one, had the land promised unto him, then much more shall we have it that are many. Howbeit the Lord reproveth them for this presumption, & telleth them that their multitude shall nothing help them, because they are not the sons and heirs of Abraham, forasmuch as they did not the works of Abraham, but did willfully transgress the law of God. Multitude therefore is not a note of the true Church, neither can they deliver or excuse offenders from the wrath of God: because when main sin, many also shall be punished. Let us not therefore look how many we be in number, but how our right our works be. For when God will punish, no multitude can privilege: and therefore the Wiseman saith: Though hand go in hand they shall not be unpunished, Prouerb. 16, verse 5: so that all the loftiness and haughtiness of men, how soever they think themselves backed, and shall be borne out by friends and mighty men of the world, shall be brought down and made low, Isaiah 2, 11, 12, &c.

[Use 3] Lastly, this admonisheth every Country, City, Nation, Language and People, if they would enjoy their lands and goods in peace, they must seek to be at peace with God; and if they would not have destruction come upon them from him, let them not draw it as it were with Cart-ropes upon themselves by their sins and casting from them the laws of God. For the providence of God is over all the ways of men, and therefore he will bring destruction upon them. This is the dignity and honor of a City, except the inhabitants of it do betray it, it cannot be betrayed. Many think, the only strength and safety of a City to consist in the iron gates, strong bars, high walls, deep ditches, great pieces of Ordnance, and much munition: and the honor and ornament thereof to stand only in goodly houses, stately towers, brave castles, and curious workmanship of cunning Artificers: nevertheless, such as put their confidence in these are greatly deceived, they make flesh their arm, & know nothing how to make Towns and Cities fortified. It is true piety and godliness that is the defense and glory of a City: and no man can destroy a City, except those that are the inhabitants do destroy it themselves. This is it that the Prophet telleth Nineveh that great and bloody City, Genesis 10, 12. Nahum 3, 1, Art thou better then populous No, that was situate among the rivers, that had the waters round about it, whose rampart was the sea, and her wall was from the sea? &c. Yet was she carried away she went into captivity, &c. Nothing can deliver where sin reigneth. Defences •re no defences, all means are vain and unable to save. It is not the woe and misery of a City, or Nation, or Town, or House, that they have lost a number of able men by the sword, or that many are smitten down with the plague and pestilence: but this is the wretchedness of a place, that it is full of drunkards, unclean persons, swearers, Atheists, and such like horrible impieties. These are the procurers of woe, these are the causes of destruction. And howsoever some may repent and save themselves & their own souls, yet it shall not long keep us from general judgments, so long as these things are found among us. It cannot be that the Lord should long forbear us, we have hardened our hearts through his patience. We have filled up the measure of our sins, and they are grown to so great an height, that every man nowadays maketh a scorn and scoff of the word of God, and there are among us not only committers of evil, but scorers of good things, these are perilous & dangerous times. What then can we expect but that God should come against us, and set all our sins in order before us nay before himself? Let us therefore repent and turn from our sins, and return to the Lord our God: and then though we should taste of a general desolation, yet when it cometh it shall go well us, and we shall have our reward in the life to come.

48 And the Officers which were over thousands of the host, the Captains of thousands, and the Captains of hundreds, came near unto Moses.

49 And they said unto Moses, Thy servants have taken the sum of the men of war, which are under our charge, and there lacketh not one man of us.

50 We have therefore brought an Oblation for the Lord, what every man hath gotten, of Jewels of Gold, Chaines and Bracelets, rings, earrings and tablets, to make an atonement for our souls before the Lord.

51 And Moses and Eleazar the Priest took the Golde of them, and all the wrought Jewels, &c.

52 And all the gold of the offering that they offered up to the Lord, &c.

53 For the men of war had taken spoil, every man for himself.

54 And Moses and Eleazar the Priest took the gold of the Captains, &c.

The offering of the Captains followeth in these words. That which they brought was matter of great price, thereby giving to God thanks for covering their heads in the day of battle, and desiring to make an atonement between the Lord and their own souls. This offering was accepted, and laid up in the Tabernacle for a memorial for the Children of Israel. Observe here sundry points of instruction. First from the persons that offer to God, and acknowledge God's mercy, to wit, the Captains themselves that were the chief in this business, that howsoever God be to be served of all without exception, and all must show themselves ready to do it, yet above all, the chiefest and the heads over others ought to be leaders to the rest. So was it when the Israelites were brought over the red sea, and delivered from all their enemies, Moses and Aaron provoked them by their example to give praise and glory unto God, and encouraged them in that duty, Exod. chapt. 15. Judges 5. verse 15. How zealous was Nehemiah, that he even consumed himself with desire to do the Church good? So was it with Zerubbabel, and many others. But of this we have spoken before, chapt. 7: in the offering of the Princes. And whereas they offer to God, Jewels of Gold, Chaines, Bracelets, Rings, Eare-rings and Tablets, we learn to serve God with the best things we have, and to think nothing good enough for him. This also is handle before, chap. 7. Again, from these men we must acknowledge that it is our duty to return praise and thanks unto God for his benefits and blessings that we have received, Psalm 50, 15. Ephes. 5, 20. Philip. 4, 6. Psal. 116.

The grounds are plain. First, because praise and thanksgiving are due to God, as to the author and fountain from whence all mercies come, and therefore to whom should we give praise and glory but unto him? Psal. 65, 6.7. Secondly, it is a blessed thing to bless the Lord: and if we ascribe not glory to him, we take it to our selves, and are no better then thieves that steal away their neighbors goods, nay we are worse. We ought as well to return thanks unto him when we have received blessings, as to pray for them when we want them, and would have them, Psalm 50.

Thirdly, it is an high and honorable duty to glorify and praise God: it is the duty which all the Saints and Angels perform, and ever shall perform in heaven, to honor God. A good subject would be very willing to do that which should honor his Prince: this duty is that which delighteth God, and honoreth him, and therefore all of us should practice it.

Fourthly, as it is honorable, so likewise it is most profitable to our selves, both to make us keep the blessings which we have, and to obtain such as we have not. If we be faithful in little, he will trust us with much: if we be faithful over a few things, he will made us ruler over many things, Luke chap. 19, 17. Matth. chap. 25, 23. But if we be unthankful for mercies received, he will take from us even those which we have.

This should teach us to stir up our selves [Use 1] more and more to thankfulness by keeping in mind, and laying up in our hearts the special blessings and mercies of God. This we cannot do, except we take notice of them, and daily mark and observe what God doth for us. For a benefit not remembered, is all one as if it were never received. Let us not therefore suffer his mercies to pass away. If the least cross lie upon us, we are sure to be sensible enough of it. If the head ache we can by and by feel it, and complain of it. How then is it, that we receive grace after grace, and mercy upon mercy heaped up plentifully upon us, and yet we remain as senseless and blockish, as if we had received nothing at all? Let us take heed of this unthankfulness.

Secondly, it reproveth many amongst us, [Use 2] that have tongues to ask, and mouths to speak when we are in need, but know not how to return thanks to God when we have received. Have we been in trouble and affliction? and hath God been merciful unto us to restore us again? If we be not thankful unto him for this, it had been better for us that we had been afflicted still, yea that we had perished in our affliction, then not to return to him the praise, & to lift up our hearts to the heavens.

Lastly, would we know whether we be [Use 3] thankful indeed, or not, then let us examine our selves how it goeth with us, after God hath delivered us from any dangers. Are we more zealous in good things, and more careful to perform good duties unto GOD then before? Then surely we may comfort our selves, and assure our own hearts, that we have been thankful in some measure. Thus doth Christ speak of the sinful woman, Luke chap. 7. verse 47: her sins which are many are forgiven her, for she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little. This is thankfulness, for love received to love again: and for much love, to return much love again.

True thanksgiving is of a working Nature, it will quickly show it self toward him of whom we have received mercy. If the love of God be shed in our hearts, we will love him again, because he loved us first. On the other side, if a man do not perform this duty, to wit, to be more zealous of God's glory, and more obedient unto his word and will, he shall be found unfaithful whatsoever he persuadeth himself of himself. So fell it out with Hezekiah, as we may see in the second book of the Chronicles, the 32. chapter, and the 25. verse, Who rendered not again, according to the benefit done unto him. His heart was lifted up, and wrath came upon him, and upon Judah and Jerusalem. If then God spared not him, let us take heed he do not spare us, and be evermore careful to praise him here as we ought and then we shall be sure to praise him ever hereafter in the life to come.

We have therefore brought an oblation, &c. In the oblation of this people, we are to consider the circumstance of time, which serveth further to commend them; they were no sooner returned, and found the mercy of GOD toward them, but by and by they give him thanks.

This teacheth that as all men must return thanks unto God, so they must return it speedily and presently, while they have opportunity and ability to do it, Exodus 15.20. Judges 5, 1, Luke 17, 15, 16. The grounds follow.

[Reason 1] First, it is the will of God our Father, when he would have thankfulness performed, he would have it done speedily and cheerfully, it is the willingness of the mind that he respecteth and accepteth. For if he require of us in the matter of liberality, that we say not to our neighbor, Go and come again, and tomorrow I will give, if we have it by us: then certainly, it is his pleasure that we do not delay or defer to perform the duty of praise to him tomorrow, when we should do it today. Secondly, the performance of thanksgiving presently, maketh it the more accepted of God, whereas the putting of it off from time to time causeth it to be rejected. Thirdly, while the blessings of God are fresh in our remembrance, the mind feedeth the affection with much more plentiful matter, and it is stirred up the more fervently and effectually to perform that duty; whereas the opportunity in due season being neglected, maketh the blessings of God grow stale, and to be quite forgotten, and that quickly.

[Use 1] This teacheth that many men may hereby see their sins in this matter and manner of thanksgiving, because they are so slack and slow, drowsy and forgetful, and use such delays in their returning of praise to God. By delay a man is made more unfit and unable to perform this duty. True it is, if a man repent of his dalying with God, and delaying to do his duty to him, he will forgive his evil: howbeit he that putteth off his thankfulness, it is not so acceptable to God, because he doth it not speedily, albeit he perform it in the end.

[Use 2] Secondly, this must teach every man to learn when he returneth thanks to God for any blessing, that he should labor to do it presently and speedily, seeing this is that which is so much accepted with him. And if any man have been faulty in this, let him labor to make amends with double diligence, and to be more mindful of this duty of thankfulness, that so the Lord be not enforced to put him in mind of his sin by taking away his blessings from him. It were far better for us to learn otherwise, then by taking forth this hard lesson, to wit, by our harm.

Thirdly, this serveth to put us in mind to [Use 3] stretch this manner of speedy thanksgiving to God, to all other duties of Religion and Christianity. The Apostle exhorteth all persons to do good while they have time, or opportunity to do good to all men, Gal. 6, 10: for we know not what one day may bring forth, Prov. 27, 1. Many delay their doing of good till the hour of death, these are like swine which are never good till they come to the shambles. Especially in the case of repentance and turning to God, we must not put off the matter from day today. The lepers that were cleansed, delayed this duty all of them, on only excepted, and in the end utterly did forget it. When we delay a duty, thinking to do it better afterward, it groweth quite out of mind. The Prophet saith, To day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, Psal. 95, 7, 8. Heb. 3, 13, Isaiah 55, 6. If we put off our repentance a while, who is sure to have the means offered him again, whereby God ordinarily worketh repentance? Who can tell whether he shall heart the word of God preached to him anymore?

The word is translated from place to place, & we are translated from life to death, frō our house to the grave, and we know not whether we shall carry our selves when we are gone from the Church, or be carried by others to the Church again. Besides, the longer we delay our repentance, the more hard and difficult it will be, because a thick skin will grow over the heart, that it will be past feeling, and sin will take deeper root through custom and continuance: and therefore we must set upon it betimes.

There lacketh not a man of us, therefore we have brought an oblation. This was an extraordinary mercy received. It is a great blessing of God, to overcome the enemy and to obtain the victory: but thus to overcome and to have such a victory, required an extraordinary thanksgiving.

We learn from hence, that as men ought to return thanks to God for all his blessings, so they ought for extraordinary blessings to return extraordinary thanks and praises. As in times of distress it is our duty to humble our selves and in extraordinary visitations to use extraordinary humiliation: so when God showeth any mercy, especially extraordinary, the Church hath great cause to be thankful accordingly, and upon that occasion to be stirred up to set forth his noble praise, Exodus 15.1, 2, &c. Isaiah 38, 9. Hezekiah returneth great thanks for his great deliverance, Luke 1, 46. Psalm 145, 7. The grounds follow.

[Reason 1] First, all acknowledge that they are tied to some duties for blessings received. Now this is the only recompense that we can make; we cannot requite him to come before him with burnt offerings, with calves of a year old: he will not be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil, Mic. 6, 6, 7: he hath shown us what is good, and what he requireth of us; the only accepted sacrifice and service is an humble, contrite, and thankful heart, Psal. 116, 13, 14: this is more acceptable to him, then all sacrifices that have horns and hoofs; all the fowls of the mountains are his, the wild beasts of the field, and the cattle upon the hills: and therefore he willeth us to offer unto him thanksgiving, and to pay our vows to the most High, and to glorify him for our deliverances. Secondly, the least mercies of God, such as are most ordinary & continual, deserve thanks, yea the greatest thanks that we can possibly give, that the tongue and heart should join together in that action; for the least drop of his mercy is greater then our deserts: then how much more do his greatest mercies and blessings deserve the greatst thanks and praise at his hand, to perform the same with all our soul, with all our mind, and with all our strength? Hence it is, that the servants of God, as we see in David, Hezekiah, and others, after wonderful and great and mighty deliverances did use to pen their songs, and often to repeat them to quicken the memorial of God's blessings and his kindness that they had received; and thereby to stir up their own hearts and the hearts of others, that they might be more closely knit and linked unto God. The like we see in Jonah, when he was delivered from the Whale that had swallowed him up, where the waters compassed him even about to the soul, the depth closed him round about, and the weeds were wrapped about his head, Jonah 2, 5, 9, that his deliverance might seem after a sort a resurrection from the dead, as indeed his lying in the belly of the fish three days and three nights, (Jonah 1, 17) did figure out the resurrection of Christ to be so long in the heart of the earth, Math. 12, 40. I say when he had received such a deliverance, what could he do but sacrifice unto God with the voice of thanksgiving, and pay that which he had vowed, considering that salvation is of the Lord? Thirdly, Nature it self doth teach that the greatest blessings should have the greatest thankfulness, inasmuch as great blessings fill the heart more full of joy: now where the heart of a man is extraordinarily joyful, there the mouth of a man also ought to be extraordinarily thankful. Fourthly, it standeth with equity, that in all things that we do toward God, we should do them in proportion, and in this matter of thankfulness, we ought to make out thanks to be in some sort and in some weak measure proportionable to his blessings. The uses remain.

First, how glorious ought God's Name to be in all places, who doth daily lode us with [Use 1] his benefits! He dealeth not sparingly with us, but liberally thereby to magnify his great Name, that all the world might acknowledge his greatness, and sing to his praise, saying, O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy Name in all the earth, who hast set thy glory above the heavens, Psal. 8, 1, 2, 3, &c.

Secondly, this reproveth many of unthankfulness, [Use 2] howsoever they seem to themselves to be very thankful, yet they are not proportionably thankful, and therefore they may be said not to be thankful at all, because they give not according to his works, and therefore he requireth of us that we should praise him according to his blessings. But alas, which of us do not for the most part receive much of him, and return little or nothing unto him again? It is not enough for us to say, God be thanked, and then think we have performed all that can be required of us; but as we receive double mercy, so should we yield double obedience. Lastly, this teacheth [Use 3] every man that he should consider God's dealing toward him, and what blessings he hath received from him, y^t so he may see how much thankfulness he oweth unto him. For where the gifts of God are increased upon a man, there he hath much cause of thankfulness. If others that have received less blessings from God have been more thankful unto him for them: how shall we escape that have greater blessings, if we show our selves less thankful: Let everyone enter into the meditation of these things. We have received blessings of all sorts, general and particular: what Nation hath been honored and advanced like unto ours? what people have received such deliverances as we have received? from foreign enemies, and domestical? And what blessings we have all received in particular, what tongue can express, what heart can comprehend? Doth not GOD on the other side require much at our hands? O let us beware and take heed lest these blessings be turned into curses, and his mercies into judgments.

CHAP. XXXII.

1 NOW the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad had a very great multitude of cattle, and when they saw the land of Iaazer, and the land of Gilead, that behold the place was a place for cattle,

2 The children of Gad and the children of Reuben came and spake unto Moses and to Eleazar the Priest, and unto the Princes of the congregation, saying,

3 At aroth, and Dibon, &c.

4 Even the country which the Lord smote before the congregation of Israel, is a land for cattle, & thy servants have cattle.

5 Wherefore, said they, if we have found grace in thy sight, let this land be given unto thy servants for a possession, and bring us not over Jordan.

Concerning the great victory given over the enemies of Israel we have already spoken: now we come to the dividing of the inheritance among the Conquerors, according to their estate and condition: wherein consider three things. First the occasion of distributing the land of the Midianites, the victory being obtained. Secondly, the conditions of this distribution. Thirdly, the agreement and sending of them into the possession. The occasion is in these verses; the two tribes, and the half had many cattle, upon which occasion they come to Moses, and request this land which they had lately seized into their hands, the chief towns whereof are reckoned up, that they might sit down there, & not be compelled to pass over

Jordan, they thought they might speed themselves nearer home, and never trouble themselves to go so far. The sons of Reuben are in the first verse set before the sons of Gad, because Reuben was the eldest and first borne: and yet oftentimes in this Chapter the sons of Gad are set before them the cause whereof seemeth to be this, because they were the authors of this counsel to shift and provide for themselves, and to ask of Moses the land of the Midianites. From hence sundry doctrines may be pointed out. Doubtless every tribe had store of cattle, for Gen. 46, 32, they are said to be shepherds & men of cattle; and Exod. 12, 38: there went up with them out of Egypt flocks and heardes, even very much cattle: yet the tribes here mentioned did especially and above the rest abound with cattle. We learn hereby that God doth distribute his blessings differently, he giveth things temporal to one more, and to another less, as in his own wisdom he seeth to be expedient and profitable for them. He would have us stand in need one of another, one nation of another, one land of another, one person of another, that we might hold a communion among our selves, & all depend upon him as upon our sovereign Lord. It is therefore the duty of one member to help another, and to do good one to another, even as it is in the members of the body, all have not one office, but everyone his special function, but for the good & comfort of the whole. And as it is in temporal blessings, so also it is in spiritual, God giveth & disperseth them variably. These tribes do come to Moses to obtain their suit. They attempt not by force or by fraud to get it; they use lawful means, they have recourse to the Magistrate. It is our duty therefore to go to the Magistrate to obtain our right, & to make petition of lawful things to him. Again, albeit the children of Israel smote this land of the Midianites, yet it is said the Lord smote it; because the labors & endeavors of men come to naught, & of every good action, God is the principal agent, & the creature only y^e instrument & is supported by his power. From hence this ariseth, that all good actions of the second cause are to be ascribed to y^e first cause as the chief worker thereof. See also the manner of their speech, if we have found grace in thy sight, thus they speak to the Magistrate; which teacheth y^t we ought to use & show all reverence & humility both in word & gesture to Magistrates and to our superiors. Al these things are good, & serve for imitation: but there is one thing more, & also must serve for our instruction, though it be evil. These tribes do seek their own profit, & altogether forget their brethren; their mind was more vpō their own cattle, then the procuring of the good estate of the rest. We learn hereby, that the immoderate love of this world is dangerous, drawing to sin against God and to break the bonds of nature. Where y^e love of the world & of our selves is thoroughly settled it worketh a careless neglect of all others. Abraham & Lot loved as natural brethren, nothing could separate them, they went out of their country, and from their kindred together, Gen. 11, 31, what severed these but matters of the world? when Lot looked on Sodom, & saw it fruitful as Eden, he left Abraham and dwelled there, which brought great trouble upon himself, Gen. 13. And afterward what caused Lots wife to look backward, &c. was it not the love of the things w^c he had left behind? Gen. 19. Luke 17. Saul looked upon the fattest of the sheep, & fell into disobedience, & lost his kingdom. Achan looked vpō the wedge of gold & the Babylonish garment, & set his heart upon thē, & provoked God against himself & the host of Israel, Ios. 7 The like we might manifest by sūdry other examples, of y^e young man y^t came to Christ, Ma. 19 of Judas that betrayed his Master, Math, 26: & of Demas that forsook Paul, and embraced this present world, 2. Tim. 4.

[Reason 1] And no marvel. For the love of God & the love of the world are contrary the one to the other, there is no affinity between them, they are enemies, and one cannot abide the other. These can never look each other in the face, but by and by they turn their backs, 1. John 2, 15, If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. These two are as two contrary Masters, no man therefore can serve them both, for both require the whole service of a man, & both command contrary things, Mat. 6, 24. Secondly, the desire of these worldly things is a rank thorn, Luke 8, and is the root of all evil, 1. Tim. 6. The hearts of men are hardened by it, when once they are ensnared and taken in love with it. The world is a very harlot, it speaketh fair, & promiseth much good; it hath a painted face, but within it is nothing but filthiness, like sepulchers that appear beautiful without, but are nothing within, but full of rottenness and dead men's bones.

[Use 1,] This teacheth us that worldly things profit not: we think, when once we have gotten them, that we are happy men, when we are by them never the nearer to God, never the more beloved of God, never the nearer to his kingdom. Why then should we be slaves and servants to them, or suffer our selves to be carried by them from duties belonging to God & men? Hence it is that Solomon showeth, that riches are reserved to the hurt of the owners thereof, Eccl. 4, and 5. And many while they seek wholly after these things, they do lose peace with God, and heap up wrath against themselves, I am. 5.

[Use 2] Secondly, we see hereby how hardly they enter into the kingdom of Heaven that have them, Math. 19. Christ teacheth this out of the example of the rich man that went away sorrowful, when he heard mention of forsaking his riches. His riches was his joy and chief treasure, he had set his heart upon them, and therefore to leave them was as irksome to him as to leave his life. This man's case is not singular, neither may other men think themselves by nature to be better. The same corruption hath taken hold upon all: whosoever have the worlds good, have need of a special grace of GOD to assist them, that they be not blinded and hardened by the love of them.

[Use 3] Thirdly, let us not be immoderately careful for them, and let us have our conversation without covetousness. We brought nothing with us into the world, and we shall carry as little with us, 1. Tim. 6. Heb. 13. It is no profit to win the whole world and to lose our own souls, Math. 16.26: and therefore let us be contented with our estates wherein GOD hath set us. It is our duty to labor against this immoderate love of the world; not that the things in the world are of themselves evil, but because we are ready to abuse them. Now if any desire to have some helps to keep him from the excessive love of the world, and from putting his trusts in his riches, let him meditate upon these things. First, such is the wickedness of a man's heart, and the corruption of his nature, that he maketh his outward estate, if he have riches and a plentiful and prosperous condition, to be his glory, and the thing wherein he rejoiceth and triumpheth, Psal. 62, 10. Ier, 9, 23. Dan. 4, 27. Luke 12, 19. Psal. 36, 6, 7, Isaiah 39, 6. Psal. 49, 16, For how do men judge of themselves? They imagine that others will prize them, as they have learned to value themselves, and that they shall be honored and esteemed for these things: they think that all men will admire them for their wealth, and that men will account them so much more excellent then others, as they are more rich and wealthy. And such is the misery of our times, that for the most part it is so indeed, they hold an opinion of every man, not according to his properties, but according to his possessions; not according to his virtues, but according to his goods. Howbeit in this, both sorts are deceived. For by this means it cometh to pass, that it is not the man that is honored, but his riches; for if they were gone, the honor would fall away also. We see by experience, that where there is much riches, there is much pride; nothing is more common then to have the heart lifted up in prosperity. They think riches are given unto them, because they deserve them better then others. It is hard to keep pride out of the heart, when God sendeth wealth into the house.

Secondly, the desire of riches is like the grave that is not satisfied. It is like the sea that receiveth all waters, and yet it is not full. So long as the rich man seeth another before him or beyond him, he cannot be quiet. If he have attained to be equal with one, he will strive to be like another, and so proceedeth till he come to the highest degree & measure of all. The more a man drinketh of the water of the sea, the more he thirsteth and desireth; so it is with riches, such as have tasted the sweetness of them, & delight greatly in y^e taste, they greatly provoke the appetite to long after more, and therefore no marvel if they use all means lawful and unlawful to come unto them. Thirdly, abundance of riches are hardly gotten without sin; for whether we obtain them by excessive gaining, or by excessive sparing, neither are done without sin. And how many are there in the world among those that are grown great & wealthy in the world, who, so often as they behold their riches, may justly challenge themselves, & say, These sins have I committed in the getting of my goods, and these duties have I omitted in the keeping of them? How then should we dote upon these things, which are unto us the badges and signs of our sins? and which are as witnesses ready to open their mouths against us, when no other either can or dare accuse us? Fourthly, riches are common blessings, to be found as well among the ungodly, as among the godly: yea oftentimes the ungodly have the greatest portion of thē. They have their heaven in this life, and they want nothing. So then if it were possible for a man to have the treasures of a kingdom, yet he must know that he hath gotten no more then a most wicked man may have, and is by them no nearer to the kingdom of Heaven then a reprobate may be. Fifthly, riches are ordinarily, without God's especial restraining and reforming hand, the occasions of much evil and wickedness, of oppression, of fraud, of cruelty and profaneness. Riches can never make a man good, but oftentimes make those naught that otherwise might be good; why then should we rejoyce in them, and be possessed with the love of them? If we respect the virtue that is in riches, or the power that is in man, it is not possible for a man to be rich and good together: nevertheless, to him, to whom all things are possible, it is possible to make a man good in the middes of his riches, without whose grace it cannot be. Sixthly, the vanity of the world appeareth in the uncertainty and mutability of riches; should we set our hearts upon that which taketh her wings and flieth up to Heaven? They arise in a moment, and suddenly they are gone, and never appear again. They are gotten with much care, they are kept with much fear, they are lost with much grief. Therefore it is the precept of the Apostle, Trust not in uncertain riches, 1. Tim. 6: we are not soon possessed of them, but we may soon be deprived of them. Lastly, we must give an account to God how we have used them as well as how we have gotten them. Many in the world might be accounted happy men, if there were no day of reckoning. But we must depart from hence, and leave them, and they us, our pomp will not follow us, Psal. 49, 17. Let us therefore labor against the immoderate love of the things of this life, neither suffer any such corruption to be nourished in us.

[Use 4] Lastly, we must learn to prefer the best things, such as the Apostle speaketh of, when he showeth what danger hangeth over their heads that love nothing else but the goods of this world, he breaketh out into this exhortation, 1. Tim. 6.11. Thou, O man of God, fly these things, and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, and meekness. And that we may see the excellency of heavenly & spiritual graces above earthly things, let us in the properties of them compare the one with the other, that so the love of the world to come may swallow up all love of this present world. All the kingdoms of this world, and the glory of them are vanity, Eccl. 2, 11: but Solomon opposeth to this the fear of God and his commandments. The riches of this life are oftentimes gotten with doing wrong and with oppression, Ier. 5, 27. Luke 16, 9, 11: it is not so with piety and godliness which is the true riches and gain, 1. Tim. 4. Riches are kept with grief and anguish, he cannot rest & sleep that is vowed with them as with a frenzy, Eccl. 5, 12: but godliness is the mother of all peace and comfort, and maketh the sleep to be sweet, and bringeth no fear, or grief, or care with it, Prov. 3, 24. Riches are corruptible, the moth may corrupt them, and the thief may steal them, Math. 5, 19. I am. 5, 2, 3: but heavenly graces can never fade, they shall endure forever, they shall follow us after we are gone, they can never be lost when once they are gotten. Earthly riches make the owners as slaves, they nail the mind of man to the earth, that he cannot lift up his eyes to Heaven, Math. 6, 21: but piety beareth us up as it were with Eagles wings, that we learn by little and little to mount up to Heaven, and to have our conversation there, even while we sojourne upon the earth. Riches can deliver no soul from eternal death, nay sometimes they are means to thrust the same into hell, Prov. 10, 2, and 11, 4: but godliness freeth a man from everlasting death, and setteth him in the path that leadeth to life. We are forbidden to heap up transitory riches, Math. 6, 19. and 10.9, 10. Ptou. 23.4: and if we have them, it is only in this life, they serve no further, and afterward there is no need or use of them, 1. Tim. 6, 7. Job 1, 21. Psal. 49.11: but godliness serveth for the next life, and we are commanded to treasure it up, and the more we labor to increase it, the happier we are. Riches are often taken from the right owners, and come into the hands of our enemies, not only after we are departed this life, but even whiles we live, as we see by many examples of sundry cities and provinces, 1. King. 14, 25, 26 and 2. King. 24, 15. Ezek. 29, 19. 2. Kings 23, 35. Heb. 10, 34: but piety shall never be taken away, nor be bestowed upon our enemies, but layeth up for us an enduring substance in heaven, and it maketh the greatest enemies to be the greatest friends; it maketh the wolf & the lamb dwell together, and the leopard to dwell with the kid, and the sucking child to play upon the hole of the asp, Isaiah 11, 6.7, 8. Many of the godly have been without the earthly riches, Christ our Lord did not desire them, 2 Cor. 8, 9. Math. 8.20: nor his servants covet after them, Heb. 11, 26, 37, 2 Cor. 6, 4. Act. 3. But none of the godly have been without the heavenly riches, all have desired them, all have obtained them, some in one measure and some in another: and herein they have accounted their happiness and blessedness to consist,

6 And Moses said unto the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here?

7 And wherefore discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel from going over into the land, which the Lord hath given them?

8 Thus did your fathers when I sent them from Kadesh-Barnea to see the land.

9 For when they went up unto the valley of Eshcol and saw the land, they discouraged the heart of the children of Israel, that they should not go into the land which the the Lord had given them.

10 And the Lord's anger was kindled, &c.

11 Surely none of the men that came out of Egypt from twenty year old and upward shall see the land, &c.

14 Behold ye are risen up in your fathers stead an increase of sinful men, &c.

15 But if ye turn away, &c.

Here beginneth the second part of the Chapter, to wit, the conditions of agreement, how the matter was decided & ended: wherein observe the debating and pleading of the matter, then the determining of the controversy. Touching the demure or debating; first Moses sharply reproveth and rejecteth the request of these tribes, and showeth the unfitness and unlawfulness thereof, which he proveth both by the dangerous effect that would follow, the discouragement of the rest of the people, and by example of the like practice of the false-hearted spies, who, after they returned from searching of the land, spread abroad false news, whereby the hearts of the Israelites were weakened, & God was so greatly provoked, that he pronounced the sentence of death against all above twenty years old, Caleb and Joshua excepted; This history we saw before Chapter 13, 24. This doth Moses press and urge to the full, and showeth what heavy judgment came upon the host for discouraging of the people, whereby we see, that nothing is more forcible to repress and hold from sin, then urging the examples of God fearful judgments in former times against those that have committed the like sins, 1. Cor. 10.7, and Jude verse 6, 7. 2. Pet. 2.4, 5, 6. Nehem. 13.17, 18. Josh. 22, 17: for examples are oftentimes more powerful and piercing then precepts or threatenings are, and therefore Moses is so earnest in this kind. Again, whatsoever was written afore time was written for our instruction. This reproveth those that will take no warning by any examples, but are secure till the judgment begin to take hold upon them: like to those careless people, that when a city is on fire never look to their own house, till it take hold upon it, and be ready to burn it down to the ground. Everyone would condemn such reckless persons; but such are all those that see the judgments of GOD break out upon others, and yet will not look to themselves. Furthermore, we must all take notice of such examples, & no man ought to be ignorant of them, 1. Cor. 10, 1, neither suffer them to pass away from them without observation. But to omit this, we see in the behavior of Moses what ought to be the practice of the Ministers of God. He was a great Prophet of God, and he reproveth the people (to prevent further evil) very sharply. Hence we see, that the Ministers of God, that have the office of teaching committed unto them, must not reprove faintly, coldly and carelessly; but sharply, earnestly, zealously, fervently, and powerfully, Isaiah 40, 3: they must be as the voice of a crier, not of a whisperer, Hos. 4, 1, 2. Thus did all the Prophets teach, and so did the Apostles, Ier. 2, 2. John. 7, 20, 37.

The grounds of this are very apparent. [Reason 1] First, because we often deal with those that are dull of hearing; men commonly are deaf, and so unfit to hear those things that belong to their peace, therefore doth the Lord require of his Ministers that they cry aloud, and lift up their voice like a trumpet, Isaiah 42, 18: & Christ our Savior, when he was preaching, oftentimes crieth out, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. Secondly, many are fast asleep, & had need to be awaked. He that will speak to a man that is fallen asleep, had need to cry aloud, as Elijah telleth the Priests of Baal, 1, Kings 18, 27. So the Ministers must deal with such as sleep in sin and security, nay, they are cast into a dead sleep, that they can never be raised but by the powerful voice of God speaking in his word, Ephes. 5, 14. John. 5, 25. Thirdly, the hearts of men are forestalled and possessed with the pleasures and delights of the world, and so they speak to men occupied about other matters, and such as have no leisure to attend to the word, nor anything but the world. If a man have a quick ear, and be broad awake, yet if he be talking or not attentive, or muse upon other matters, he cannot hear, he must be called and cried unto, and all little enough to stir him up. Such as were busy about the world, when they were called, set light by the word, Math. 22, 5: they regarded not the messengers sent unto them. Fourthly, the Minister is God's mouth and Messenger, as the Magistrate is God's hand: the mouth denounceth his anger, the hand executeth his judgment and vengeance. The Minister is his mouth to accuse, convince and threaten: the Magistrate is his hand to punish, for which end he hath committed a sword unto him, 2. Cor. 10.4.5.6. 1 Cor. 4.20.21. Fifthly, such as are in danger of their lives, or see other in danger, do not speak coldly, but earnestly call for help, with all the strength they have. So dealt the Angel with Lot, when he lingered in Sodom, Gen. 19, 15.16, he had a commandment given unto him to arise and to take his wife and his daughters, and a threatening annexed, lest thou be consumed in the iniquity of the city; and then he caught hold upon him, and took him and his wife & his daughters by their hands, and brought them forth, and set them out of the city. Now the people of God are in like danger through sin, how then should the Minister deliver his own soul, or save the people, if he perform his message coldly and not earnestly as if he would pull them out of the fire lest they be burned? Jude verse 22, 23: or out of the waters lest they be drowned.

[Use 1] We learn from hence, the great backwardness and untowardness of men to every good work. For what need this sharp reproof & zeal in the Minister, if they were ready to hear, and pliable to be taught? But we are so dull and deaf of hearing, so fast asleep in sin, and so forestalled with the world, that we hear no more then dead men. A man would think, that when we are called to life and salvation, nay before we are called, we should run of our own accord; so soon as it is said to us, Arise, the Master calleth, who should sit still? ought not everyone to cast away all impediments, and to make haste unto him? and yet we see how backward the most part are in the best things. The things that we affect and desire and delight in, half a word will serve to persuade; whereas on the contrary, there must be no small ado to make us apprehend heavenly things, we are so dull and dead to conceive them. One observeth well, that most men are like unto hounds w^c have long ears, that hinder them from looking upward, and yet they are sharp sented for the earth: so is it with earthly-minded men, they are sharp sented touching earthly things, but they are slow to hear and understand heavenly things, Deuter. 29, 2. Moses complaineth of the Israelites, that albeit they had heard and seen, yet they knew and discerned nothing. This people (though dead long ago) seem to be revived and risen again: for this is true of this age, (if ever of any) that when we should be awakened by the preaching of the Gospel, we are made the more obstinate and have our ears stopped either with the pleasures or the profits of the world, that we cannot hear the voice of the charmer charm he never so wisely. These are spiritually possessed by Satan's policy, like him in the Gospel that was made both deaf and dumb, Mat 9. Man is said to stop his ears, so is Satan, and so is God also; all work and concur in this. Man stoppeth his ears first through his own corruption: the devil stoppeth man's ears by his allurements and temptations; God stoppeth them by his just judgment. Man stoppeth them as a sinner: the devil as a tempter: and God as a Judge. Whosoever would not have God give him over either to his own corruptions or to Satan's temptations, must take especial heed of the stopping of his own ears. For the true cause why the devil stoppeth, and the cause why God stoppeth, is nothing else but a man's own stopping of his ears which goeth before. Let every man therefore take notice of his own natural deadness, and seek to him unfeignedly that only can open the ear, who openeth & no man shutteth, who shutteth and no man openeth. Let us labor to hear God speaking unto us in his word, and so shall God hear us when we cry unto him, and we shall receive every good thing needful for us, and have them sanctified unto us for our benefit in this life, and for our comfort and salvation in the life to come.

Secondly, this teacheth the Ministers (for [Use 2] I must come to them, lest I may seem to pull on eyes when I go abroad, and to be blind at home) to put on zeal and fervency in delivering the word of God to the people, as the Prophets were commanded. There are many that regard not how it be delivered, so it be delivered; they care not how the hour be spent, so it be spent, and respect not what they say, so they have said somewhat: which is as fond a thing, as if he that buildeth an house should never regard with what stuff he buildeth, or he that soweth, whether he sow in the highway, among the rocks and thorns, or in his field. Many there are that go up into the pulpit that never spend themselves, nor waste their spirits, nor decay their strength, they are rather like those that are half asleep, or stand up to tell a tale, or to utter a dream. Whosoever is ignorant of the state of his people, that never considereth he speaketh to a deaf people that cannot hear, but is careless in his place, endangereth his own soul and the soul of the people committed to his charge. He then that would teach aright, must put on zeal and be earnest in the Lord's cause, that so he may work upon their hearts, and leave stings in their consciences, as Acts 2.37, while Peter preached, they were pricked in their hearts, and said, Men and brethren, what shall we do? We say commonly, that cold coals heat nobody. It must therefore first come from his own heart, there must be heat there, or else there shall never come any heat to others. We see by experience, that cold iron and hot can never be mixed together: but before they can be tempered, they must both of them be well heated in the fire; so except the heart of the Minister and of the people be heated, he shall never fasten anything upon them, or work any good in them. It is true, it is the work of the Lord to heat the soul, as it is he that warmeth the body: this he doth by instruments the fire and the Sun, so he doth the soul and conscience by his Ministers and by his word. All parents are charged to whet the Law upon their children, Deut, 6, 7: if parents must do this to their children, then much more ought the Ministers of God to be earnest in this duty. If any ask wherein this earnestness and fervency consisteth, I answer, not barely in crying out with a loud voice, as many suppose. For many men have no voice to speak loud, and there are many that speak loud, who have little heat or zeal in them. Some will be as earnest in alleging a bare testimony of Scripture, as others can be in making application. These do it more out of use or custom, then from any feeling or touch of conscience in themselves. Seeing then the earnestness that we require may be without the loudness of voice, and the loudness of the voice may be without earnestness, we must find it elsewhere, to wit, in the power of the Spirit that speaketh in him. It is not the earnestness of the voice that is so much required, albeit it falleth out many times where the heart is truly affected, that there the voice will be extended to the uttermost: and yet even in a weak voice proceeding from a weak body, a Minister may truly show the zeal of his heart, as well, as if the word were delivered with a loud and powerful voice; and God requireth no more then a man hath, 2 Cor. 8, 12. The Apostle saith, that his bodily presence was weak among the Corinthians, and his speech held as contemptible, 2 Cor. 10, 10: whereby it seemeth he was not one of the sons of thunder that had a great voice; nevertheless we find that the power and efficacy of the Spirit did both appear and abound in him. So then the Ministers of God must be zealous and fervent in their places, that so they may the better discharge their consciences, and also bring the more profit to those that are committed unto them.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it condemneth those that censure the Ministers of God for their earnestness and zeal in delivering the word of God. Such persons as are ready to commend a servant that is earnest in doing his Masters will with a good affection, will condemn the Minister of God when he delivereth the word with such earnestness. These spare not to say to him as Paul did to Festus, Act. 26, 24, that they preach as if they were mad or beside themselves. But if the answer of Paul will not serve and suffice these men, who replied to that accusation, I am not mad most noble Festus, but speak forth the words of truth and soberness, Acts 26, 24.25: let them take the words of the Prophet Hoseah, chap. 9, 7: the spiritual man is mad for the multitude of thine iniquity. The abundance of iniquity, and the obstinacy of wicked men running on in their sin (as a violent flood that runneth over the banks) were able to make the Minister mad with crying to them to leave their sins, and to forsake their evil ways, when they are so set upon them, that say the Minister what he can, and let him cry out as loud as he list, they will not abate one hair or a pin of their pride, or remit one hour of their profaning the Sabbath, or drink one draught, nay not one drop the less, or the covetous person give one penny or half penny the more to relieve the needy members of Christ, I say the consideration of this were able to make the Minister even mad in delivering of his message which God hath put into his mouth. If a father should be beside himself for the wickedness of his graceless children; would not every man pity the father, and spit in the faces of those children, and hold them worthy of all punishment? but what would they say to such children, as should go up and down, and boast themselves that they were the causes of their fathers madness? Are there not some graceles hearers (O that there were not too many) that when they have made their Minister as it were mad with reproving them, that will insult over them, and glory among their companions, that they have made their Minister preach as if he were mad: howbeit, if it be for the glory of God, and the benefit of his people, they need not care, nor esteem to be judged of men, or account it any disgrace from the mouths of graceless people to be accounted mad; we must walk through good report and evil report, it skilleth not therefore though we be reputed mad, so it be for a good cause, for the beating down of profaning the Sabbath, of contempt of the word, of oppression, pride, covetousness, and such like enormities. There was not a man more meek upon the earth then Moses; yet when he came from the mount, and saw that the people had sinned, he presently grew so angry, that having the two Tables of the Law in his hand written by the finger of God, he threw them down to the ground and brake them in pieces. The people of this generation account their Ministers for a lesser matter then this to be mad and out of their wits: but while they cry out aloud that their contempt of God & his holy word is damnable, that the open profanation of the Lord's day is damnable, that the horrible pride whereof our whole nation is sick, is damnable, that drunkenness that aboundeth & over-spreadeth everywhere is damnable; if this be madness, we confess we are mad, and God make us yet more and more mad to lay open these abominations. But indeed and in truth (if we will judge aright) it is quite contrary, for they are the maddemen, and the Minister is sober. Paul was charged to be mad; but who was mad, Paul or Festus? The mad man laugheth, and the Physician bewaileth him; even so it is between the Minister and the people, they scoff at him, while he mourneth for them & for the hardness of their harts, knowing them to be beside themselves, forasmuch as they will not refrain from those things which they reprove. Alas, what do these men herein, but like foolish patients, who pull off the plasters which the Surgeon hath laid upon their wounds, and in the mean time lie rotting and festering in their corruptions? If these men continue thus resolute & obstinate in their evil ways, the time shall one day come, (O that it be not at hand, O that it be not too late) when they shall confess that the Ministers of the Lord were sober, and that themselves were the mad men, when they shall feel themselves for their iniquities thrust down to the place of the damned, and see the Ministers that reprov'd them among y^e Saints of God in great glory.

[Use 4] Lastly, learn from hence the great desire that God hath of the good and salvation of his people, who thus carefully sendeth his Ministers to call so earnestly and effectually for the conversion and repentance of sinners. The Lord doth not appoint them for a form and fashion, but to deal with power & zeal, if by all means they may save some, 1, Cor. 9. Isaiah 55, 1: would the Lord make so much ado, if he were not desirous that the sinner should repent him of his evil ways, that so he might blot all his wickedness out of his remembrance? Ezek. 18. A man would be accounted very desirous to sell his wares and utter his commodities, who not only hath a broker to vent them for him, but maketh open proclamation at the cross or in the market place, that he hath such and such wares to be bought: and yet all this while he respecteth his own private good and gain only. But when a man will proclaim and say, Ho, come and buy without money or without money worth, doubtless this argueth a man's great love and desire of the good of his brother. The Ministers, they stand upon their watch-tower, and cry from the house tops, Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money: come ye, buy and eat, ye come buy wine and milk without money, and without price, Isaiah 55, 1. He requireth no more but this, to lay down their vices, and to take up his graces. The Physician sometimes giveth strong purgations, but the end of them is the curing of the disease, and the recovering of the diseased. So is it with God, when he armeth his Ministers with the two edged sword of his word, & giveth them courage and boldness to open their mouths against all iniquity. It is therefore a token of a desperate heart, and a sign of one cast into a reprobate sense, when the threatenings of God's judgments drive not to repentance. Such as hate to be reformed, there is more hope of a fool then of them.

Wherefore discourage ye the hearts of the childron of Israel from going over into the land which the Lord hath given them? This is one reason of the reproof, and why he dealeth so sharply with them; they did weaken the hands, yea the hearts of their brethren, whom they ought to have strengthened and encouraged. This teacheth us, that it is a grievous sin to give offense to others, or to do anything whereby our brethren may be discouraged from walking in God's ways, or encouraged to y^e breach of any of his Commandments. Hereunto come sundry examples set down in the Scriptures. While the Israelites wandered in the wilderness, and were going toward the land of Canaan, they had many means offered to pull them back, as we have seen before, some of them would have made them an Electo or Captain, and so return back again into Egypt, Chapt. 14, 4: the spies that were sent to search the land discouraged the hearts of their brethren, saying, The people is greater and taller then we, the cities are great, and walled up to heaven, and moreover we have seen the sons of the Anakims there, Deuter. 1, 28. Numb. 13, 28. Thus it was with the people of GOD when they were returned from captivity, and began to build the altar and the Temple to the Lord God of Israel: for the adversaries of Judah and Biniamin sought to weaken their hands, and to trouble them in building, Ezra 4, 4. Neither was it any better afterward, when Nehemiah came up to build the walls of Jerusalem, and to revive the stones out of the heaps of rubbish: for Sanballat, Tobiah, and the rest of that rank scoff at them, and say, Even that which they build, if a fox come up, he shall even break down their stone wall, Nehem. 4, 3. The Lord likewise chargeth his people, that if there did arise among them a Prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, that should go about to seduce them and draw them away to serve other gods, they should not believe the signs, nor hearken to the words of that Prophet, but cleave fast unto God, obeying his voice, and keeping his Commandments, Deuter. 13, 1.3.4. The grounds hereof.

First, such as offend by giving offense to [Reason 1] others, and withdraw them from their holy obedience to God, are guilty of a grievous sin, yea are partakers of their sins whom they have terrified and discouraged from obeying the Lord. For whomsoever we have hindered from good things, we are guilty of their sins, and their blood shall be required at our hands. The sin of the Israelites committing fornication with the daughters of Moab, was the sin of Balaam also, because through his counsel they committed that trespass against the Lord, Num 25, 1, and 31, 16, Secondly, such are the seed of that wicked one, the children of the devil; they are his instruments, and set on work by him that was a murderer from the beginning, John. 8, 44. He tempted our first parents in the garden, & discouraged them from hearkening to the voice of GOD; so are all those tempters that any way hinder y^e course of their brethren walking in the ways of God, and are stamped in the image of the first tempter, and are made like unto him. And therefore when Peter dissuaded Christ from the work of man's redemption; (for when Christ began to show to his disciples, that he must go to Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the Elders and chief Priests and Scribes, & be killed and be raised again the third day; he took him aside, and began to rebuke him, saying, Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall not be unto thee;) the Lord Jesus turned about and said unto him, Get thee behind me, Satan, thou art an offense unto me; for thou sauest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men, Mat. 16, 23: where by we are taught, that such as are an offense to others, are no better then the instruments of Satan, & therefore justly bear his name.

[Use 1] The uses follow. First, this setteth down the unlawful condition of such as hinder others in the profession, and labor to make them fall from God. Thus did the devils as we heard before, they threw down our first parents from the height of their happiness, & therefore are reserved in chains unto judgment, 2 Pet. 2, 4. In the Law he is accursed that layeth a stumbling block before the blind to cause him to wander out of the way, and all the people shall say, Amen, Deut. 27, 18: he therefore that seeketh to subvert and supplant the faith of men, and to destroy the soul, must needs be under a far greater curse of God and man. The souls of such as perish through their procuring shall cry out against them, and bring down an heavy judgment upon them. Hence it is that Christ our Savior saith, Who so shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea; woe unto the world because of offenses, it must needs be that offenses come, but woe to that man by whom offenses come, Math. 18 6, 7: we see therefore the wretched estate and condition of all those that give offense to others. They are guilty of horrible sins against God and against their brethren; O that they had eyes to see them, and hearts to bewail them. Every man is prone through the corruption of his nature to fall from God, but much more when occasions are laid before them for two are stronger then one: and if we have always one foot ready to slip, we are in more danger of falling when we are pushed forward. Let all such consider as have caused others to fall, that the time will come when it will be required at their hands. These do hunt for the precious life of a man, they are soul-hunters and soul-killers and destroyers, and murder those for whom Christ died. These are the chief causes of the coldness and backwardness of Religion, and that so few profess it in sincerity. Our Savior pronounceth an heavy woe against them that neither entered into the kingdom themselves, neither suffered others to enter, but hindered them, Luke 11, 52. This woe lieth upon the shoulders of all those that stop the way of others, that they cannot enter into it.

[Use 2] Secondly, think it not strange when we have this measure offered unto us, and when men whisper us in the ear to take heed we be not too forward or precise, and that thereby we shall lay our selves open to the reproaches of the world; if sinners thus entice us, hearken not unto them. It hath been an old practice to discourage and discountenance others from obeying God. It is bitter to hear and bear the railings and revilings of carnal men, and many start aside from the truth by such taunts. And if these reproaches proceeded only from open enemies, they might be borne more easily: but it pleaseth God many times to try the faith and to prove the patience of his faithful servants farther, and they receive much discouragemēt from their acquaintance, & from their friends, with whom they took sweet counsel together, and walked with them into the house of God. Job received much disgrace by his own wife that lay in his bosom, as also by his three friends that were as his own soul, and came to visit and to comfort him; but miserable comforters were they all, as himself complaineth chapt. 16, 2, and chapt. 19, 2, 3, How long will ye vex my soul, and break me in pieces with words? these ten times have ye reproached me, &c. Was not this, think you, a great temptation and assault to the faith of this righteous man to be thus taunted and tormented by his dear friends, and by his dearest wife? was he not flesh and blood as well as others, to have an inward feeling of these sorrows, & to drink up the very lees of this bitter cup? was he as brass and iron, or had he a body of steel that these afflictions could not pierce him or enter into him? No doubtless, for then his patience could not be commended unto us, and set before us for an example, I am. 5, 11. If then it go so with us, we have the Prophets and holy men of God for an example of suffering affliction that have gone before us. The Church complaineth in Solomon's Song, that the watchmen, that went about the city, found her, they smote her, the keepers of the walls took away her veil from her, Cant. 5.7. They that should be her guard, turned to be her grief: and they that watched for her, wounded her.

The people that profess the truth in sincerity look to have all encouragement from their Ministers in well-doing: yet oftentimes it falleth out (as with the Church before) that such work them all the disgrace they can, and seek to put them to shame that should be their glory, Phil. 4, 1, and vex them with the cross that ought o the their crown, and discomfort them that indeed might be their joy and their comfort. Paul complaineth oftentimes of the Jews and of false brethren, by whom he received greater hurt, then ever he did at the hands of the Gentiles, Tit. 1, 10, 11. 2 Cor. 11, 26. Sometimes children have hard measure offered unto them by their fathers and mothers, whose rejoicing it should be to see their children prosper in good things, yet oftentimes it falleth out, they are scoffed at by them: and this falleth out not only in the bloody days of persecution when parents have betrayed their own children the fruit of their bodies into the hands of cruel persecutors, but likewise in the times of peace and prosperity and the general and public profession of the Gospel, when we seem all to embrace one faith and one Religion; yet if their sons and daughters be zealous in the truth, they mock & taunt them for their precisenes, and grieve the bowels of those that are and should be their own bowels, not only by nature, but in love and affection. And therefore Christ teacheth such children, Math. 10, 34, 35, 36. I came not to send peace upon earth, but a sword, and to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter. &c. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household: he that loveth father or mother more then me, is not worthy of me, and he that loveth son or daughter more thē me, is not worthy of me. If then it fall out with us at any time as it hath come to pass to the Saints of God before us, that we are sought to be drawn from our faith and obedience by friend or enemy, by wife or children, by father or mother; we must not think the trial strange, but rather rejoyce and be glad that we are made like unto the Prophets and holy men of God, nay like to our head JESUS CHRIST.

[Use 3] Thirdly, this should teach us to be bold to reprove such as stand in the way, and suffer not the people of God to go forward in good things. Every man will cry out against those varlets that stand with long Poles on their necks, or long Blades by their sides, and hinder passengers in their journey, and rob them of their money and treasure that they have about them. But these men y^t lie in wait to hinder the passage of God's people in their pilgrimage toward the holy Land, I mean the heavenly Canaan, are worse then the former, for they seek to take from them the treasure which they have laid up in heaven. When the Disciples of Christ saw those that brought young children •o him that he might touch them, they reprov'd and rebuked those that brought them; But when Jesus saw it, he was much displeas'd and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God, Mar. 10, 13, 14. The Disciples reprov'd the people, but he reprov'd the reprov'ers: he would not wink at them that discourag'd those that performed a good duty toward their childrē, but encourag'd the people in their well-doing. When the multitude rebuked the two blind men sitting by the high way and crying unto Jesus to have their sight restored, because they should hold their peace, they cried out the more earnestly, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou son of David, Math. 20, 31. The like we see in Paul, when the Disciples besought him not to go up to Jerusalem, he answer'd, What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the Name of the Lord Jesus, Act. 21, 13. Whensoever therefore we meet with such impediments & hindrances that would stay us from glorifying the Name of God, and performing good duties to him, let us labor to remove them, let us leap over these stumbling blocks, and break through these hedges though they be fenced with thorns. S. Jerome hath an excellent saying to this purpose, he counseld Heliodorus to go on in the course of piety, & follow after Christ, whatso-soever discouragements he found, & frō whomsoever, though his father stood weeping before him, and his mother hanging on his neck behind him, and all his brethren, sisters, children and kinsfolkes howling on every side to retain him in a sinful trade of life with them, and to keep him from the kingdom of God; he should tread them under his feet, that he might run to Christ when he calleth him. His words are these, Licet paruulus ex collo pendeat nepos, licet sparso crine, &c. that is, Though thy Nephew hang about thy neck, though thy mother with her hair hanging down and her garments rent, show thee her breasts that gave thee suck, and though thy father should cast himself down upon the threshold to stop thy passage, yet go thou forward, trample upon thy father, and with dry eyes follow after Christ. This is the only kind of piety to be cruel in this matter. Christ Jesus in this case willeth us to hate father and mother, brethren and sisters; so that we should fling them to the ground, and run over them also, rather then they should hinder us from being the Disciples of Christ and from following him.

Fourthly, it is the duty of all men to take [Use 4] heed we walk without offense our selves, & then we shall be sure to give no offense to others. The Apostle chargeth us to walk wisely toward them that are without, Col. 4, 5. For if they should see daily offenses before them, it would be a means to keep them to be without still, that are without. 1 Thess. 4, 12, he moveth the Thessalonians to behave themselves honestly toward thē that are without. And to the Corinthians he saith, Give none offense, neither to the Jews, nor to the Grecians, nor to the Church of God, 1 Cor. 10, 32. So then we ought to be so far from discouraging any, that we should encourage everyone to the faith, gain those that are without, strengthen those that are within, comfort thē that are feeble minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men, and labor to turn many unto righteousness. The Apostle saith, Rom. 14, 1. Him that is weak in the faith receive you, but not to doubtful disputations; and verse 13. Let no man judge one another anymore: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block, or an occasion to fall in his brothers way. Let us all that call upon the Name of Christ, and are called by his Name, walk circumspectly, and give no just occasion of sinning to any either word or deed, either to drive them by our evil example from God wholly, or to cause them to go on less cheerfully. Jeroboam is often described by this note, He made Israel to sin; and God hath set this mark upon him to know him wheresoever we find him, as he set a mark upon Cain. The Apostle speaking of such as become stumbling blocks to thē that are weak, saith, that they sin against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, and sin against Christ, 1 Cor. 8, 12. Such as break one of these least commandments and teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven, Mat. 5, 19. This is the means to edify men in iniquity, & to open a gap to all licentiousness.

[Use 5] Lastly, to remove these discouragements & hindrances that we be not entrapped by thē, we must all labor after spiritual courage, & to tread upon all injuries and reproaches y^t sinners cast out against us. Let us, when we hear their railings, stop our ears, & gather our spirits about us, & take courage to our selves. He that hath attained to a Christian resolution to go forward in y^e duties of godliness hath gottē the victory. The difficulty of this lieth more in our faintnes & fearefulnes, then in the thing it self. Our own slothfulness & negligence make all things hard, that otherwise are easy; we must go to God, and pray to him to increase our faith, Luke 17: This is our victory which overcometh the world, even our faith, 1 John. 5, 4. This overcometh all temptations, and all offenses whatsoever in the world, & without it, it is not possible to be kept & preserved in the way of truth. What held Nicodemus among the Pharisees, but only the fear of men? he could not resolve to follow Christ, John. 3, 1: & 12, 42, 43 And the reproaches of the Pharisees cast out against him, whē he defended y^e cause of Christ, put him to silence, & made him give over, until at length he shake off all impediments, and betake himself to follow him. A good example for us to follow: If we faint for reproaches, our strength is little, our faith is weak. The words of enemies cannot hurt us, except we through weakness and faintness hurt our selves. For if we neglect and reject them, they return upon him that cast them.

Behold ye are risen up in your fathers stead, an increase of sinful men, &c. Moses putteth these two tribes & the half in mind of the former provocations of their fathers, which had caused many judgments to break in upon them, & these were risen up in their stead, walking in their steps, so y^t it fell out according to the Proverb: like father, like sons. We learn hereby, by this sharp charge, that it is an usual thing with God to punish the sins of the parents with y^e sins of their children. The parents sin, & the children are oftentimes given over to follow them & to commit the same sins, or such like notorious sins, whereby he taketh vengeance of their sins, Gen. 21, 9, 10, & 9, 24 27, 1 King. 11, 11, Hos. 4, 13. This is evident in the Kings of Israel; of whom we may truly say, that y^e fathers sinned, & the children rose up, an increase of sinful men, they were a wicked seed, and augmented the fierce anger of the Lord, until he removed Israel utterly out of his sight. So he threateneth oftentimes to visit the sins of the fathers upon the children to the third & 4. generatiō of them y^t hate him, Ex. 20

[Reason 1] And God doth deal thus for sundry causes. First, God respecteth the good of such parents as belong unto him; for he doth it to humble them, & to bring them upon their knees to repent for their sins w^c happily they had forgotten long ago. It is a far greater grief to Christian parents to see them lie under this spiritual judgment, then afflictiō whatsoever. Secondly, such parents as are wicked & belōg not unto him, are hereby hardened, & grieved and vexed. He doth it in part to pardon them, because when evil parents see their children commit any sins against the 1 table, w^c are committed immediately against God. as to delight in swearing and blaspheming, in contempt of the word, neglect of his worship, and in profaning of the Sabbath; they are not touched or troubled at it, because they think it no judgment, & their sons to have committed no sins at all, & so it cometh to pass y^t they are the more hardened: again, if they see their children commit any sin against the second Table, as murder, theft, or the like, whereby they undergo the punishment of the Magistrate, they are grieved and vexed for it, not because they have sinned against God, & provoked him to anger, but because their childrē & posterity are brought to shame and reproach before the world.

This serveth first of all to teach us that the [Use 1] ways of God are just & equal, against those that are ready to accuse him of injustice. God is a most just and righteous God, he dealeth with everyone according to his deserts. And he oftentimes punisheth sin with sin. For he doth not only punish sin with the sword of the enemy, with sicknesses & diseases, with famine and mortality, and such like which all do acknowledge and confess to be punishments, but he punisheth former sins with later sins. Thus he punished the Idolatrous Gentiles, when they knew God, and glorified him not as God, but worshipped & served y^e creature instead of the Creator, by giving them up to their own vile affections and to a reprobate sense, to work uncleanness even with greediness, Rom. 1. And in these last times of the world, because men will not love and embrace the truth, He sendeth among them strong delusions that they should believe lies, 2 Thess. 2, [Object.] 12. But how doth God punish sin with sin, may some say? Doth he tempt unto evil? or doth he infuse any evil into them? Doth he allure and provoke men to sin? I answer [Answer.] with the Apostle, God tempteth no man to sin, I am. 1, 13: but he punisheth this way secretly, by withdrawing his grace, and giving them over to be entangled in their own corruptions. Thus God punished Pharaoh by hardness of heart, not by making that to be hard which was soft and pliable before, but by denying the oil of his grace whereby it should have been mollified. Thus also he tempted David to number the people, because his wrath was kindled against Israel for their sins. This is the most grievous punishment that can be inflicted in this life, howsoever many men never regard it: for other punishments through y^e blessing of God, and a sanctified use of them, are usual means to bring us to true repentance: but when we are smitten with this adding of sin to sin, and are stricken with this plague sore we do more and more fly from him. Other punishments are as sharp eye-salves to make us see our own misery, that we may be moved to sue and seek for his mercy: but this judgment doth us no good at all, nay it blindeth our minds, it hardeneth our hearts, it scareth our consciences, it increaseth our sins, and doubleth our condemnation. Thus doth God show himself a just Judge.

[Use 2] Secondly, it directeth parents what they ought to do in the sins of their Children; w^c may be reduced to these four heads. First, they must search to find out the cause of it: secondly, they must be humbled and sorrow for it: thirdly, they must labor to reclaim them: and lastly, they must abstain from sinning themselves, lest by their example they corrupt and infect them. Touching the first, it belongeth unto all parents in the sins of their children which they commit, to search & enquire diligently, whether this punishment fallen upon their children be not the punishment of some particular sin of their own formerly committed? and doubtless in searching, they shall not lose their labor, but oftentimes find that some fearful sin of theirs before committed, is the cause of those notorious sins that they see and behold in their children. For example: we see some Ministers and men of other callings, have their children fall to idolatry and superstition, and are gone after Antichrist, and fled into Babylon, the mother of whoredoms; this is no other then a just recompense of their fathers contempt, y^t were neuters and lukewarm professors, neither hot nor cold, that never had the power of religion & godliness planted in them, no more then for the time to serve their turns, or to perform their places for fashion sake to which they were called. Many men's children are given to extreme riot, wasting their own substance that they have, and afterward their fathers living also that they have given them, & that oftentimes justly, to let their parents see, how God bloweth upon goods gotten by unlawful courses, so that being wickedly gathered, they are wastfully consumed. Again many children are exceeding obstinate and stubborn against their parents, neither will they be ruled and ordered by any doctrine or discipline: & this is oftentimes a due recompense of their parents cockering & indulgence, whē they let them have the rains cast in their own neck: when it had not been amiss to have given them the rod 7. years after. So it was with Eli, 1 Sa. 2. so it was David: they did not keep their children in awe, and therefore it came to pass that they knew neither God nor their parents, nor themselves. Many men's sons and daughters make many unlawful vows and sinful promises of marriage against their Parents consent: this is often a just recompense of those parents that had no care to provide for their children, nor to restrain them, but gave them liberty to walk & talk with others at their own pleasures, and that at unseasonable times; and so entangle themselves in such manner. Many men's children are given over to drunkenness, to excess & riot, loving the cups and the wine bottles: a just recompense upon their parents that delighted in the same sin before them, and therefore God even in their own sight & before their eyes, taketh vengeance of their former sin, by suffering their children after them to fall into the same sin. Many men have not that respect & honor given to them of their childrē that they ought to have; a just recompense unto them for dishonoring and disobeying their, own parents. Manie children do not so tender & regard the good name and credit of their parents as they ought when they hear them evil spoken of, nay they have been heard and known to curse their own parents, even to their death: a just recompense upon such parents that have heard the name of God rent & torn by horrible oaths, yea, by their own families, & yet would never reprove them, nor labor to reclaim them from it. So then, this is the first duty that is required of all parents, that they make speedy enquiry and search, whether God hath not justly taken vengeance of their former sins by this kind of punishment, that so they may be brought to repentance for them. The second duty required of parents, when they see the sins of their children in the vengeance of God against their own former sins, is to show their sorrow for their sins, and to be humbled for them, not so much because they are the sins of their children (and yet it becometh every father to mourn and lament for the sins of his children) but much more because they are their own, when they shall apprehend that God doth thereby take hold of some special sin of their own before committed. All parents are apt enough by nature to grieve and mourn for the temporal plagues that God layeth upon their children, and indeed if they should not do so we would account them unnatural parents, & very monsters: and yet how many of them do incur the everlasting displeasure of God, in that they cannot bewail the spiritual plagues of sin that are in their children, especially when they know them to be the just vengeance of God's judgments upon their own sins formerly committed? Let every man labor for this measure of humiliation, otherwise it is a certain sign that we did never truly mourn for our own sins. The third duty required of parents, is, that when they have made enquiry, & found that God punisheth their sins with the sins of their children in the first place, & when they have truly sorrowed and lamented for it in the second place, then in the third place, they must seek to recall and reclaim their children from such sins as God hath given them over to commit, as a just vengeance for their own proper sins formerly committed. If any parents should apprehend that any bodily sickness were on their children by their means, or through any occasion given by them, they would labor to remove it from them, & to have them cured of it, otherwise we would hold them to be unnatural parents. How much more then, when themselves have so far provoked God by their former iniquities that he hath therefore forsaken their children, and given them over to commit the same sins after them, ought they to labor by all means to remove that spiritual judgment that lieth upon them? & if they do not, may we not truly pronounce y^t these are cruel and bloody parents, nay indeed not parents at all, but rather spiritual murderers of their children? It is no small offense to be guilty of blood, especially of the blood of the soul, which cost the precious blood of Christ to redeem. Lastly, it belongeth to parents to be watchful & careful for the time to come. For, seeing the danger is so great to give themselves to wickedness, it is their duty to labor & strive against sin hereafter, and to give all diligence to work righteousness, and that not only in respect of themselves, but of their children & posterity. If then they love themselves or their posterity, and would not have y^e Lord to punish their sins with the sins of their children, let them take heed they do not provoke the Lord by their sins, and he in his just judgment make the children rise up in the fathers stead an increase of sinful men: for if they be sinful & wicked, we cannot but expect from God that he should punish their sins with the sins of their children to destruction, both of the one & of the other. We see how parents that put out their children to nurse, have a special care what manner person the nurse be, and prescribe that she neither eat nor drink those things that may hurt

the child, forasmuch as the effects thereof are likely to appear in time to come in the body of the child. All parents are very careful to look to the diet of their children, let them be careful to look to the diet of their own lives: for doubtless as the course of their lives hath been, so it will afterward appear in their children. O you parents, whom God hath blessed and stored with Children, if there be any true love in your hearts towards yourselves and your children, look unto this duty: sin not in your own sins against y^e fruit of your own bodies, but turn ro God betimes, that he may turn unto you. He is faithful in his word. Whatsoever he hath threatened it is surer then the heavens, it must certainly come to pass. If you provoke him by your sins, he will provoke you to your faces with his judgments, unto the utter confusion of yourselves, & of your posterity after you forever.

[Use 3] Lastly, this doctrine also belongeth to children, & putteth them in mind of sundry duties to be performed by them, which may be reduced to these branches. First, they must not imitate their fathers sins: secondly, they must pray to God not to remember their fathers iniquities: thirdly, they must be careful to look to their children, & that they lead an holy & sanctified life, that so they may call in God's judgments which otherwise he might justly bring on them. Touching the first, they must not follow their fathers in that which is evil. All inferiors are ready to walk in the steps of their superiors, and for the most part think themselves discharged from all crime or punishment if they be like to them, & no other then they have been before them. The prophet requireth this duty of the people, Psal. 78, 8. The Apostle willeth the church to follow him so far as he followed Christ, 1 Cor. 11, 1. So is it required of children to follow their fathers, but no farther then they follow the truth. This many among the Turks and Infidels may plead for themselves, and allege that they worship God as their forefathers did for many generations, & yet this shall not serve their turns. The 2. duty is, to pray to God not to remember the iniquities of their forefathers, as justly he might do to the confusion of their posterity. For why doth he not leave them to walk in their ways, but that he is merciful? Hence it is that the Lord saith, Isaiah 65, 6, 7. Behold it is written before me, I will recompense, even recompense into their bosom, your iniquities, & the iniquities of your fathers together, &c. God punisheth the sins of the fathers in their posterity, and therefore do punishments fall upon the posterity by reason of the sins of the ancestors. This doth Daniel in his prayer acknowledge, Let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy City Jerusalem, thy holy mountain: because for our sins and for the iniquities of our fathers, &c. chap. 9, 16: and therefore in the confession of sins that he made before, verse 8. he saith, O Lord to us belongeth confusion of face, to our Kings, to our Princes, and to our Princes, and to our Fathers, because we have sinned against thee. So Ezra 9, 7. Neh. 9, 34. Ier. 32, 18. Lam. 5, 7. Exod. 20, 5. When diverse generations continue in one sin successively, the Lord useth ordinarily to punish the latter more severely then the former, that thereby the sons might be provoked to fear to do the like when they see the sins of their fathers, Ezek. 18, 14: and the longer his patience is abused, the greater sin is committed, & the greater vengeance is deserved. Thirdly, all children must be careful of their posterity, and lead an unblameable & sanctified life, that so God may give them the grace of his Spirit, & not leave them to themselves to walk in the evil ways of their fathers that have gone before them.

16 And they came near unto him, and said, We will build sheepfolds here for our Cattle, & Cities for our little ones.

17 But we our selves will go ready armed before the children of Israel, &c.

18 We will not return unto our houses, &c.

19 For we will not inherit with them on yonder side Jordan, or forward, because our inheritance is fallen to us on this side, &c.

The Tribes being reprov'd, do answer for themselves, expounding their meaning, or at least propounding equal conditions, that they will go up armed before their brethren, and that they will not return till all their brethren were possessed of their inheritance, & that they would claim no inheritance beyond Jordan, but rest in that already purchased. The Israelites would have been much weakened, if these had staid behind. Therefore they do here promise that they will go foremost of all. We saw before that it is God only that giveth the victory, yet we see the means are not neglected. Howsoever therefore we ought not to put our trust & confidence in the means, yet we must carefully use the same, that so we may be able to perform those things which the law of God and our calling require of us. Again, in their disclaiming inheritance beyond Jordan, we learn that everyone should be contented with that estate that God hath allotted unto him, whatsoever it be. Moreover, we see how these two Tribes offer themselves to be companions with their brethren, in passing over Jordan, and in conquering the land, & in taking such part as they did. This teacheth, That it is the duty of all God's Children, to have a fellow-feeling and compassion of the miseries & afflictions of their brethren, 2 Sam. 11, 11. Heb. 13, 3. 1 Cor. 12, 26. Rom. 12.15. When Abraham heard that Lot was taken prisoner, he armed his servants, & sought to recover him out of the hands of the enemies, Gen. 14, 14. Moses also chose to suffer adversity with the people of God, & to leave all his preferment in Pharaohs Court, Heb. 11: he would not enjoy the pleasures of sin, when the church endured the misery of adversity.

[Reason 1] The grounds follow. First, we ought to have brotherly love in us, not only love, but brotherly love: this will work in us a pitiful heart toward those that are afflicted. The Apostle John professeth himself a companion with the Church in tribulation, in the kingdom and patience of Christ: he was grieved for their grief, & the bowels of compassion were moved in him for their afflictions, Re. 1, 9. And the writer to the Hebrews saith, Let brotherly love continue, Heb. 13, 1. Secondly, this duty performed leaveth a blessing behind it, God hath rewarded it, for thereby some have entertained Angels unawares, Heb. 13, 2: and he will reward it always. Thirdly, Christ accounteth this as done to himself: when his children are refreshed, he is refreshed: when they are clothed, or fed, or visited, or comforted, he is clothed, & fed, and visited, & comforted, Math. 25, 35. Fourthly, we are members one of another, as we are joined unto Christ, as members to the head, & are mystically made one with him; so all the faithful are fellow-members of the same body. In the members of the body, if a thorn run into the foot, the head stoopeth to it, the eyes look upon it, the fingers pull it out, the ear will hear what is good for it, the hand will apply salve to it, the tongue will ask counsel for it. So it should be with the members of Christ, if they be not dead or rotten. Lastly, we ought to show our selves to be careful one for another, and desirous to do good one to another, as 1 Cor. 12, 25. There should be no schism in the body, but the members should have the same care one for another.

This teacheth, that there is a communion among [Use 1] the Saints, consisting not only in rejoicing & in the use of gifts & blessings, but also in compassion and mourning one for the hurt of another; and therefore Peter exhorteth, Be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another: love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous. The heart of one must be the heart of all, & whosoever shunneth the communion of Saints in time of misery, shall never have their communion in the kingdom of glory. Everyone is ready to profess this communiō in prosperity, but are ready to deny it in adversity. But as they that will reign with Christ must first suffer with him, so they that will reign with his members in heaven, must first suffer with them also on the earth. This is an excellent privilege, to have our communion with the Saints. We are as freemen of God's City which is above, we must therefore enjoy the privileges thereof in common. And hereby we may assure our selves to belong to God, if we be alike affectioned one to another. Do we at any time hear of the tribulations of the Church? and do we inwardly lamēt for it? Let us comfort our selves in this, it is a notable sign y^t we are members of the church. Do we hear that our neighbor churches are troubled with dissensions & divisions, that heresies are broached among them that heretics and pestilent seedmen are entertained among them, that the ancient doctrine preached & professed, is repealed, and that the parts of that body are ready to be miserably torn in pieces? & doth the meditation of this affect us, that we can secretly mourn for it, and say with the Apostle, I would they were even cut off which trouble you? this showeth indeed that we are of the communion of Saints. Are any of our brethren in particular in heaviness? have they sorrow? and can we grieve for them as if the affliction were our own? then we may persuade our selves that we have a communion not only with our brethren, but with our head Christ Jesus himself, which is the foundation of all true comfort and consolation.

Secondly, we may conclude, that dead-heartedness, [Use 2] and the want of Christian compassion in the distress of the Saints, proveth us to be no true members at all of the body of Christ. If we have means put into our hands, and do not help them and relieve them; or if we want ability, if there be not a passion and commiseration in our hearts, how doth the love of God dwell in us? Nay, this is a fearful token and manifest sign of little or no grace as yet bestowed upon us. Here is no mutual affection, to rejoice together, and to mourn together. There is a generation that repine and grudge at the good and happy estate of their brethren, and have evil eyes toward them, because God hath been gracious unto them: this was in Cain towards Abel, in Saul toward David, in the Scribes and Pharisees toward Christ, in Abimelech toward Isaac, in Laban toward Jacob. There is a generation that feast and fill themselves, that laugh and rejoice, that are merry & sport themselves when the poor Saints groan and are grieved; whereas we should be ready to communicate with them, & somewhat to assuage their grief and comfort their hearts in their affliction, we should help them to bear their burden in a common affection. The holy man Job protesteth that he never rejoiced at the destruction of him that hated him, neither lift up himself when evil found him, chap. 31, 29. The Prophet Obadiah telleth the proud & insolent Edomites that shame should cover them, & they should be cut off forever, because they rejoiced over the children of Judah in the day of their destruction, and spake scornfully and despitefully in their distress, Rase it, rase it even to the foundation thereof, Psal. 137, 7. Thus doeth the Prophet Amos reprove the wantonness of Israel, chap. 6, 1, 4. Woe to them that are at ease in Zion, that put away far from them the evil day that lie upon beds of Ivory, and stretch themselves upon their couches, that eat y^e Lambes out of the flock, and the Calves out of the midst of the stall, that drink wine in bolles, and anoint themselves with the chief ointment, but no man is grieved for the affliction of Joseph. There is a generation that can mourn and rejoice in temporal things, when they see their brethren in affliction they are grieved, and when they behold them prosper they are glad, when both these may be mere natural affections, and may also proceed from natural men. But we must extend this fellow-feeling (if we will be assured, that it is right) more to spiritual than to temporal cases. For let us mourn never so much for their losses in temporal things, yet except we can more earnestly lament their spiritual decays thē their worldly distresses, and rejoice more heartily for the access of heavenly graces, than the increase of transitory riches, this our affection is no better than a corruption, it can minister no comfort unto us at all, Luk 1, 58. Phil. [Use 3] 1, 3. 2 John 1, 2. Thirdly, we ought to be so careful of the good one of another, that we should enquire of the state of the church & of God's people in other places, how they fare, what they want, in what condition they stand. Many think themselves excused from helping those that are in need, if they can say, I knew not how it went with them, I was ignorant of their condition: but they are ignorant, because they will be ignorant; they know it not because they will not learn. This is a willing, nay a willful ignorance. It is noted of Nehemiah that he asked his brethren concerning the Jews that were delivered, which were of the residue of the captivity, &c. Neh. 1, 2, So did David enquire after he was put in peaceable possession of the kingdom, who was left of the house of Saul, that he might show him kindness for Jonathan's sake, 2 Sam. 9, 1. So did Paul & Barnabas return back to the places where they had preached the Gospel, confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, Acts 14, 21, 22. & 15, 36. And Paul often inquired of the brethren that came unto him, whether they stood firm and fast in the faith, and resisted the false Apostles that sought to corrupt the sincerity of the Gospel. We should make diligent search of the temporal estate of our brethren, but much more how they stand toward God, how they do increase in the best things, that we may rejoice in their standing, and mourn in their decaying, and thereby be provoked either to give God praise & glory for their continuance and perseverance; or to pray to him to open their eyes to see their weakness, their standing still, or going back, or leaving their first love, that so they may repent and do their first works.

Lastly, it is our duty even to adventure our [Use 4] persons and estate for our brethren, if by any means we may relieve the distressed. This we see in Abraham toward Lot, Gen. 14: Moses refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, but visited his brethren, and when he saw an Egyptian offer one of them wrong, He defended him, and avenged him that was oppressed, Acts 7, 24. So it was with Obadiah that lived in Ahab's Court, when Jezebel raised hot persecution against the prophets of God, he took them, and hid them, and fed them in a Cave, not fearing the fierceness of their enemies, 1 Kin. 18. The like we see in Ester, a notable nursing mother of the Church, she went boldly to the King with this resolution, If I perish, I perish, Ester 4. verse 16: to have the lives of her people given at her request, chapt. 7. verse 3. Many in our days think they have gone far in Christianity, and take themselves to be notable and zealous Christians, if they wish well unto the state of the Church, or be not open enemies unto it. But it is not enough to wish the good of it, except by all means we labor to procure it, and learn to cast down all that we have, and be content to lick the dust of the Churches feet. Many will needs be accounted to be the friends of the Church, who will hazard neither goods, nor friends, nor honor, neither the favor of great men, nor the credit of the world, much less either limb or life: whereas the Apostle teacheth, y^t this is true love, To give our lives for the brethren, 1 John chapt. 3. verse 16.

20 And Moses said unto them, If ye will do this thing, if ye will go armed before the Lord to war:

21 And will go all of you armed, &c. until he have driven out his enemies, &c.

22 And the land be subdued, &c.

23 But if ye will not do so, behold, ye have sinned against the Lord, and be sure your sin will find you out.

24 Build you Cities, &c.

25 And the children of Gad, &c.

26 Our little ones, our wives, &c.

27 But thy servants, &c.

Here we have the conclusion of the whole controversy between these tribes and Moses, and under what conditions he assenteth unto them, that there might be no mistaking one of another. The sum whereof is this: If they would go up armed before their brethren, and go forward with them until their enemies were cast out, then they should return back again, and be guiltless before the Lord, and this land should be their lawful possession: if not, they should be guilty of sin before the Lord, and should not be able to escape the vengeance of God. These conditions propounded by Moses, are approved by the Tribes, who promise that they will leave their wives, and children, and families behind thē, and pass over armed for war before the Lord to battle. From hence I might handle sundry instructions that arise: in Moses we see his patience in hearing and determining, and therefore it is the duty of Magistrates willingly & patiently to hear the people. Again, these two Tribes and half might not be discharged, till they had finished the Lord's work, and therefore in all good duties perseverance is necessary, and we must continue to the end, as we have shown, chapt. 7. Lastly, Moses threateneth, that if they sinned against the Lord, they might be well assured their sin would find them out, that is, the punishment of sin shall certainly fall upon you, therefore sin and the punishment of sin are inseperable companions, as we see in Kingdoms, Cities, Families, and particular persons that have offended against him. And hereby we may observe that the only cause of judgment and punishment is sin. God is never displeased with any people or person but for their sins, Isaiah 43, 24. & 63, 10. Hos. 4, 1, 2. This is farther confirmed in the examples of his judgments, that fell upon men and Angels, kingdoms and States, houses and persons, they have been destroyed & subverted for sin, 1 Cor. 10.8, 9, 10.

[Reason 1] The grounds hereof follow. First, sin is the transgression of the law, so defined by the Apostle, he gave a law to all, which he would have to be kept: now then when this is broken and transgressed, it cannot be but he should be offended, and execute punishment against those that break it. Secondly, God is holy, yea most holy, and therefore cannot but punish sin w^c is directly opposite to the holiness of his nature. The more just and righteous a Judge is, the more he is grieved at the enormities of malefactors that he hath to deal withal: so in this case, God being most holy and righteous, nothing can be so offensive and displeasing unto him as the sins of men which are committed against him. Thirdly, sin is the destruction and condemnation of the creature, and bringeth the ruin of soul and body. The Apostle teacheth, that the wages of sin is death, Rom. 6, 23: it is the cause of natural death, of spiritual death, of eternal death.

If God do thus hate sin, that it draweth [Use 1] from him all plagues upon us, then it giveth wicked men to understand what they are in y^e sight of God; nothing but such as displease, grieve, and provoke him by their sins, and therefore he hateth them as his enemies, and setteth his face against them, as the Judge setteth himself against evil doers, and a Prince setteth himself against rebels that do resist against him. There cannot be a greater misery then for a man to commit sin, because it is that which is so highly displeasing to God, & the procurer of his displeasure and indignation against the committers of it, and therefore this pointeth and painteth out the most fearful estate of all wicked sinners that live & yet are dead in their sins, seeing God is such an enemy unto them, and they unto him. Some think the only miserable condition to be, to live in poverty and need and want of all things, in reproach and contempt, in famine & dearth of all things, in hunger and nakedness, in sickness and diseases: howbeit these are greatly deceived, who are themselves so much the more miserable that they know not what misery is, neither wherein it consisteth. Our sins are the true sores and sicknesses. To follow them with greediness, & desire them as the hungry man doth after meat, or he that is a thirst after drink, is the true misery. Such as live in sin are the only dead men. Luke 9, 60. 1 Tim. 5, 6.

Secondly, it instructeth everyone of us how [Use 2] we ought to walk before God, namely, to be grieved for our greewing of God with our sins, & to be offended wit•our selves for offēding of him. A father will be very angry with those persons w^c draw on their children to destruction: it is not therefore much to be maruelled at, y^t sin is so hateful to God, seeing it is that which is the ruin & downfall of his chieftest creatures. And as sin is in the account of God, so it ought to be esteemed of us: he hateth and detesteth nothing more, nothing so much: if then we will approve our selves to be his children, we must abhor it as God's sworn enemy and ours. Nothing can provoke him against us but our transgressions. He will never hate us for our poverty, or penury, or necessity, or infirmity; it is only impiety that can make a separation between God and us, and therefore we must take heed we do not provoke him to anger by them, and let us rather be grieved for our sins, then grieve the Lord with them. If a son see his father grieved with him for his wicked ways, he will be grieved with himself for it. So ought it to be with us if we be the children of God, and belong unto him; we must labor to be out of love with our selves for our sins, and to hate them all whatsoever they be, least the Lord should be compelled to hate us, and make us grieve and weep for them when it shall be too late, and when our shedding of tears shall be joined with gnashing of teeth, and neither of them prove to be acceptable unto him, or profitable to our selves.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it leadeth and preacheth unto us repentance of our former sins, and never to return unto them again, because they are so displeasing unto God, and so effectual, to bring down all his judgments and punishments upon us. If God were indifferent when we have sinned, and neither pleased nor displeased with us, then the matter were not great, we also might be indifferent, & not regard whether we repent, or do not repent; but seeing sin bringeth all judgment, it is time for us to judge our selves, that so we may prevent his judgments. For seeing it is that which is so odious and loathsome unto him, we ought to avoid it, and to take heed of delighting in it. They that love, fear to offend him whom they love: that we may therefore show our selves to be the lovers of God, let us labor to the uttermost of our power, to take heed of greewing and offending him by our sins. But when a man committeth sin against God, doth he think God will punish him, or not? If he think he will, then what great folly is it for him to run on still in his sins, for which he must be punished? If he think he will not, then what wickedness & unthankfulness is it for him to offend so loving a God, that is not offended with him for all his sinning against him? All these things do serve as so many motives to stir us up to the practice of repentance, that so God may repent of his plagues toward us.

[Use 4] Lastly, this serveth for matter of imitation. For if God be thus displeased with sin, which never leaveth or ceaseth to hunt after the sinner till it find him out, then everyone of us that would show our selves to have any part in God, or to bear his image, must labor to be of the same mind, and to have the same affection against sin that God hath, to hate it as he hateth it, and so to be displeased as well at our own sins, as at the sins of others. For he can never be truly displeased with his own sins, that is not also grieved with the sins and offenses of others. As then we are touched and troubled for our own sins, so should we be for the sins of our friends, of our families, and of those that we have any way to deal withal, forasmuch as it is that which doth so much grieve the Spirit of God.

28 So concerning them, Moses commanded Eleazar the Priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the chief fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel.

29 And Moses said unto them, If the children of Gad, and the children, &c: will pass with you over Jordan, &c: then ye shall give them the land of Gilead for a possession.

30 But if they will not pass, &c.

31 And the children of Gad, &c: answered, saying, As the Lord, &c.

32 We will pass over armed before the Lord into the land of Canaan, that the possession of our inheritance on this side Jordan, may be ours.

The third part of the chapter followeth, handling the full agreement of y^e whole matter, and the execution following after the agreement, whereby these tribes are put in possession. Moses committeth the matter to Eleazar the Priest, and to Joshua the son of Nun, & gave charge to them to see it performed. For inasmuch as he was not himself to enter into the land, he taketh order, that if the former conditions were observed by the Reubenites and Gadites, they should have the land of Gilead for a possession: if not, they should be compelled to have possession among the rest in the land of Canaan; teaching thereby, that it is our duty to further & promote the good of the Church and Commonwealth not only while we live, but also after our departure out of this world. And in the tribes we see that all lawful promises, even such as are made to our hindrance, are faithfully to be performed. But in the example of these tribes mark a further point, how willing they are to join together to procure the common safety, and set the rest of their brethren out of danger, w^c was like to be great & long: they would not forsake them til their enemies were subdued. This teacheth y^t it is the duty of God's children to put forth themselves in the common cause, to help the church, and to free it from danger. This point hath warrant both by precept & practice. It is the counsel of Solomon's mother, Prov. 31, 9. Open thy mouth in the cause of the dumb, &c: and to show the great importance of this precept, he repeateth it again, Open thy mouth, judge righteously, and plead the cause of the poor and needy, verse 10. The Apostle chargeth the Hebrews to remember those that are in bonds, and in affliction, as if themselves were afflicted, Heb. 13.3. And they are remembered not so much when they are thought upon, or are in our minds, as when they are relieved and helped out of their misery. For as we remember God when we serve him, so we remember the needy when we succor them. It is noted of Saul and all Israel, that they went to relieve Iabesh Gilead when it was beleaguered by Nahash the Ammonite, who would make a covenant with them upon no other condition, but that he might thrust out all their right eyes, and lay it for a reproach upon all Israel, 1 Sam. 11, 1, 2. So did David and his men go to relieve Keilah, spoiled and oppressed by the Philistines, chap. 23, 5. The book of the Judges is full of this argument, they thought it their duty to relieve the enthralled estate & poor condition of the Church, lying under the hard yoke and heavy servitude of the Moabites, the Canaanites, the Midianites, the Ammonites, the Philistines, and sundry others. So that all God's servants, although themselves were free from trouble, yet must they put too their hands, and set too their shoulders, and employ all their strength, as far as God enableth them, to deliver the Church from trouble, and to procure the present benefit and good estate thereof. We shown before in this chapter, that we must have some compassion and a fellow-feeling of the miseries and afflictions of God's people: this doctrine goeth farther and pierceth deeper, and teacheth that we must put forth our selves to maintain the public cause of the afflicted church, and procure the peace thereof.

[Reason 1] And so much the rather we ought to do this, because of the wicked minds and wretched ends that the ungodly set before their eyes. For what is it, I pray you, that the enemy, the common adversary and oppressor of the Church looketh after and layeth before him? Is it the persons of them that they seek to spoil? or is it to take away their goods and substance from them? or any other thing that might be dear unto them in earthly things? All these indeed are sought after, but are these the chief mark and scope that they aim after? or would these (taken away) content them? No, no, they shoot at a farther thing, to deface the service and worship of God, and to blaspheme his glorious Name, being themselves the children of darkness and not able to bear the light of the truth, they oppose themselves against the same. The Cities and Altars of our GOD ought to be of greatest account and in highest price, more dear to us then thousands of gold and silver, for w^c we must be content to leave father and mother, wife and children, that we may with freedom of conscience enjoy & profess the truth. This meditation was it that moved Joab, when he went out with a strong hand & saw the enemies gathered together to root out the Church out of the Land, and the truth out of the Church, to fight against them, 2. Sam. 10, 12. Be of good courage, and let us play the men for our people, and for the Cities of our God, and the Lord do that which seemeth him good: whe^e he showeth, that the chief motive to wax strong and valiant in battle, was to maintain the Cities and service of God.

Seco^oy, this hath promise of a great blessing [Reason 2] and a good issue; it is no vain or fruitless thing whereunto we are moved. Many men are discomfited and quite out of heart, because they see no blessing annexed. But howsoever the persecutor and oppressor for a time preuayleth and entereth into the houses and habitations of God, yet their destruction sleepeth not: God hath reserved them as the chaff before the wind, and as the stubble before the fire. Resting therefore on the gracious promises of God, and knowing that Heaven and earth shall perish, but no one jot shall pass or fail from his word, being assured that the covenant that he hath made, is surer then the covenant of the day and the night, of the Sun and of the Moon; we must arm our selves with this assured persuasion, that the destruction of the enemy is determined: as Isaiah 16, 3, 4. speaking to Moab, he saith, Take counsel, execute judgment, &c: then he addeth the reason, for the extortioner is at an ende, the spoiler ceaseth, the oppressors are consumed out of the Land, Isaiah 16, 3, 4. Wherefore, albeit the enemies of God and his people seem long to flourish, to glory in their wickedness, and to insult over the godly that are under the cross, yet they shall not escape the wrath and vengeance of God: so that none should be ashamed to thrust themselves into danger to maintain the common cause of the Church.

The uses follow. First, this putteth us in [Use 1] mind of the estate of the faithful, which oftentimes endure more trouble in this world both inwardly & outwardly, then any other; as were easy to be shown and proved by the examples of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Job, Jeremiah, David, and Christ himself the perfect pattern of suffering affliction. It was no otherwise with his Apostles also, and experience teacheth us, that the church in this world fareth no better, as it complaineth, Lamen. 1, 12. Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Behold and see, if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me, in the day of his anger. Thus it pleaseth the Lord to wean them from the love of the world, because he loveth them, & would have them long after heaven and heavenly things. We are oftentimes so perverse and untoward, that we must be put into the fire that we may be refined and reformed, and must endure many grievous corrections that we may be framed to delight in spiritual things. Besides, Satan and his instruments do hate us and labor continually to seek our destruction; and therefore let us never promise to our selves worldly peace and prosperity, neither be offended at the great afflictions which we hear to come upon the godly, but rather prepare our selves to look for one trouble to come upon the neck of another, whiles we live upon the earth.

[Use 2] Secondly, conclude from hence the fearful, woeful, & miserable estate of the church, when all the friends and comforters of it are gone, when they that should be the shield and shelter of it do fly back and dare not show their faces, as often it falleth out, then only faith for the present, and hope for the time to come, must hold up our heads that we sink not into the bottom of despair. This is it which the Prophet saith, I looked, and there was none to help, and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore mine own arm brought salvation to me, &c. And I will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunk in my fury, &c. Isaiah 63, 5, 6. When Haman the adversary of the Jews, whose malice was hereditary unto him and derived from his fathers, had plotted the ruin of the Church, in what weak and desolate estate had it been, if Mordecai and Ester had not procured the safety of it? Was it not taken out of the jaws of the Lyon, and pulled out of the pit of death? In such times, we must cast anker in heaven, and make the Lord of hosts our only confidence.

[Use 3] Thirdly, conclude from hence, that it is a fearful thing when men become oppressors of the Church. For if everyone from the highest to the lowest should be a succourer & defender thereof, then none brought up in the bosom of the Church should be an oppressor of it. But how many have there been who have lifted up themselves against it, not only open enemies, but close vnderminers, who kindle the coals of their own confusion, and have been consumed in the flame that they have raised? The Prophet Obadiah concludeth this point, ver, 10: For thy violence against thy brother Jacob, shame shall cover thee, and thou shalt be cut off forever, &c. as thou hast done, it shall be done to thee, thy reward shall return upon thine own head, Obad. verse 10, 15. And touching the persecuting Babylonians that carried the people away captives, and scoffed at them in the day of their calamity, the Prophet foretelleth their final overthrow, Psalm. 137, 8, 9. O daughter of Babylon, who art to be destroyed: happy shall he be that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us: happy shall he be that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the stones. Woe therefore to all the enemies of the Church in general, or to any particular soul that serveth the Lord; they are also enemies to God himself.

[Use 4] Lastly, none living in the Church must be ignorant of the state of the Church; everyone must take notice how things go in it, whether it go forward or backward, increase or decrease, grow better or worse. We are come for the most part to this, to content our selves with looking to our private wealth & particular estate, as if we had nothing else to think upon, but to follow our profits and delights. So it was with the people after their return from captivity, they built their own houses, but they let the house of God alone: they were very busy in seeking their own commodities, but they were wholly unmindful of the service of God, and therefore they said, The time is not come, y^e time y^t the Lord's house should be built: whom the Prophet reproveth, saying, Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your sieled houses, & this housely waste, Hag. 1, 2, 3. Others there are that shrink back for fear, and dare not adventure, and being moved, they plead ignorance, they pretend they know nothing. But the Prophet denounceth a woe against them that are at ease in Zion, Amos 6, 1. If everyone ought to be helpful to the Church, and to put on the bowels of pity and compassion, how shall we excuse our selves & say, we knew not what was wanting, or what was amiss or out of course? For everyone at his own peril, must know the perils of the Church, and be touched with a feeling of thē, and ignorance shall excuse no man. It is an excellent saying of Solomon, Prov. 24, 11, 12, 13. If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small: if thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn forth to death, and those that are ready to be slain; If thou sayest, Behold, we knew not of it, doth not he that pondereth the heart, consider it? and he that keepeth thy soul, doth not he know it? and shall not he render to every man according to his works? The Lord suffereth his people to fall into sundry temptations and into great dangers, not only to try their faith, and to prove their constancy, but likewise to manifest their love & affection that seem to be out of gunshot, as Ester 4, 14. 2 Tim. 1, 16, 17, 18. Ier. 39, 16, 17, 18.

33 And Moses gave unto them, even to the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, & unto half the Tribe of Manasseh the son of Joseph, the kingdom of Sihon King of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og King of Bashan, &c.

37, 38, 39. And the children of Reuben, &c. 40. And Moses gave Gilead, &c.

The inheritance that was given unto these Tribes is here particularly described, to wit, what Cities befell unto them, which they diligently fortified, and courageously expelled the enemies that dwelt in them. Out of these words some questions are briefly to be decided. And first touching the changing of the names of the Cities which befell to the children of Reuben, verse 38, the question may be asked, Wherefore their names were changed? The answer is, that without question y^e cause of this change was, that the former names given of ancient time were merely Idolatrous, for both of them had their names of the Idols, which ought not to be had in remembrance, neither to be heard out of their mouths, Exod. 23, 13. [Objection.] Psal. 16, 4. Secondly, from hence a doubt ariseth, how Moses can be said to give Gilead to Machir the son of Manasseh, and how he dwelt therein? for may we think that Machir was then alive? I answer, [Answ.] It is not likely that he lived unto this time; rather we must understand the sons and posterity that came of him. So the children of Israel are called Israel, and the sons of Edom by the name of Edom. He that knoweth not this, knoweth nothing. Thus it is said that Judah spake unto Simeon his brother, Judge. 1, 3, yet neither of them was alive in many ages before, & therefore it must be understood of their posterity. The like we see, Gen. 48, 22. I give unto thee one portion above thy brethren, which I have taken out of the hand of the Amorite with my sword and with my bow. Where Jacob bequeatheth unto Joseph by his last will and testament a double portion of the Land, 1 Chron. 5, 2. By Joseph we must understand his posterity, for in his own person he inherited nothing, but died long before: and by the sword and bow of Jacob, we must understand the Ephraimites which helped to conquer the Land, and were a mighty people in Joshua's time, Josh. 17, 14, 18. [Object.] But it is an harder question to determine how Iaer is said to be the son of Manasseh who doubtless did belong to another Tribe? For in the Genealogies mentioned in the book of Chronicles, it is evident that he was the son of Segub, the son of Hetzron of the Tribe of Judah, 1 Chron. 2, 22. I answer, [Answ.] he is reckoned of the Tribe of Manasseh by the mothers side, not by the fathers. For it is plain in the Chapter before named, that Hetzron the son of Judah married the daughter of Machir the son of Manasseh, 1 Chro. 7, 13. And Drusius observeth, that many such examples are found in the Priests which married wives of other Tribes. Now the cause that he had possession in another Tribe is, because his inheritance fell in the Land of the Amorites on this side of Jordan, not in the Land of Canaan on the other side. Out of this division, we might observe, in that the children of Gad build Cities, that the building of fortifications and strong holds is not unlawful, provided that we put not our trust & confidence in them, Obad. verse 3, 4. And that the children of Machir took the Cities of the enemies, we learn that the people of God are oftentimes victorious in battle. But to pass over these, observe a notable point of their sincerity in cleaving to God, and abolishing the monuments of Idolatry, that they would not retain y^e former Idolatrous names of the two Cities, Nebo, and Baalmeon, but changed them, that they might no more be had in remembrance, nor the people whom God had chosen to be holy unto himself, be acquainted with them. This teacheth that God will have the remnants and monuments of Idolatry to be utterly abolished, and all occasions that might draw unto it to be taken away: not only Idolatry it self to be destroyed, but the memorial of it, and the means that may bring it among his people again. Hence it is, that the Apostle John chargeth the Church, not only to beware of Idolatry, but of the Idols themselves, 1 John 5, 21, for he shutteth up the Epistle with this, Little children, keep yourselves from Idols. If we suffer Idols to have entrance into the Church, we shall not long be free from Idolatry it self. Therefore the Prophet declareth his hatred as well of the one as of the other, when he saith, I will not make mention of their names with my lips, Psalm. 1, 4. Zach. 13, 2. When God promiseth the overthrowing of Idolatry, he promiseth withal the utter destroying of the Idols themselves, and that the remembrance of them shall be cut off and perish out of the minds and mouths of men, Isaiah 1, 18, and 30, 22. Hos. 2, 17.

The reasons are plain; First, because God [Reason 1] would not have his people snared by such occasions: for they are as stumbling blocks laid before his people to cause them to fall, and therefore the Lord saith, Deut. 7, 25. The graven Images of their gods shall ye burn with fire, thou shalt not desire the silver or gold that is on them, nor take it unto thee, lest thou be snared therein.

Secondly, it is said to be an abomination [Reason 2] to the Lord, Deut. 7, 25: for whatsoever is impure is abominable unto him, and our nature is prone to this false worship, & is hardly kept from a corrupted religion.

This teacheth us first of all what to think [Use 1] of the religion of the Church of Rome; for as it is a false Church, so it is upholden by a false religion, wherein not only some relics and remnants of Idolatry are to be found, but most gross, open, and palpable Idolatry is maintained, like to that, practiced by the Gentiles themselves. To manifest this to be true in sundry particulars, first observe that they teach men to worship things that are without sense, images of silver and gold, of wood and stone, and yet they are uncertain what worship to give them. Aquinas, one of the chief schoolmen, and a principal pillar of the Roman faith, hath delivered, that the Image of Christ is to be worshipped with the same worship that is due to Christ himself, & that Christ himself remaineth in the Image. Bellarmino denieth this, and teacheth that they may not teach so: nevertheless he holdeth a middle course, that the image may be worshipped, so far as it doth represent Christ.

Again, they teach that we are to worship the Saints: and yet it is certain that some of them are false and feyned Saints, such as are so far from being holy men, that they were neither holy, nor men: as I have shown at large elsewhere, because they never had life nor being. Some they worship for Saints that are now by all probability in hell, and of whom themselves make question whether they were saved, or not. Moreover, they say we are to pray to the Saints, & that the Saints hear our prayers, and by that means they pray to the Image of the Saint: but whether they hear us by the swiftness of their hearing, or by the revelation of some Angel that standeth by us and reporteth it to the Saint, we shall know of them when they know themselves, but I believe they will take time and leisure to resolve us. The like we might say of their breaden god, whom they worship also, and look for help from it: and yet they are altogether uncertain, whether it be the body of Christ or not, because their consecration dependeth upon the Priests intention: so that we may truly say unto them as Christ did to the woman of Samaria, Ye worship ye know not what: we know what we worship, John 4, 22.

[Use 2] Secondly, this teacheth us to abhor and abandon all false worship whatsoever, as that which can never minister any peace or comfort of conscience; and labor to lay a good foundation that so we may be established in the present truth. For doubtless this is the cause why many fall away and embrace superstitiō, because they were never well grounded, neither tasted the sincere milk of the word of God that they might grow thereby, 1 Peter, 2, ver. 2, 3.

And howsoever the Gospel have been purely preached, and professed in this Land, yet the greatest sort remain as neuters, or as indifferent men, neither hot nor cold, and consequently fit to be made a prey unto the wolves, I mean to the Priests and Jesuits that lie watching in corners for such proselytes, and when they have gained them, they make them sometimes twofold more the children of hell then themselves. We must therefore be careful to have the principles of true religion planted in us, that there is but one God, and one Mediator between God and man, the man Jesus Christ; and that there is but one means to attain to salvation. But the greatest part of our people know nothing at all as they ought to know. And let the Minister in conscience of his duty to GOD and the Church, preach in season and out of season, 2 Tim. 4, 2, yet scarce one among ten is able to give an account of their faith. They are content to live in their ignorance, and despise knowledge, & are blindly led by blind guides that cannot inform them in the ways of the Lord, and so both of them fall into the ditch. Many shut their eyes because they will not see, and refuse to hear the word, which is a precious pearl of such price, that rather then they would want it, they should sell all that they have to purchase it. The Prophet teacheth, that the people are destroyed for want of knowledge, Hos. 4, 6, & thereby deprive themselves of the means of salvation.

[Use 3] Lastly, we should learn to eschew & avoid Idolatry in the very beginning, before by custom and continuance it be increased. If we once entertain it with the least liking and approbation, we shall never or hardly reclaim our selves, till we fill up the measure of it. The Apostle exhorteth us to abstain from all appearance of evil, 1 Thess. 5, 22. And Jude admonisheth us to hate the garment spotted with the flesh, verse 23. We must hate therefore as well the occasions and appurtenances of Idolatry, as Idolatry it self; as those things which bring much dishonor to God, and much hurt unto our own souls. [Objection.] But some peradventure will say, What need all these things? or what cause is there of so many words touching Idolatry & the remnants thereof? all this might well enough be spared and passed over, forasmuch as here are none of us that are Idolaters; and if any have been so, that is forgotten and forgiven long ago. I answer, [Answ.] it is not to be denied, but confessed, that we live in a reformed Church, wherein Idolatry is swept away; and yet many do in this point much deceive themselves, and are like the Pharisees that justified themselves. For if we would examine our selves by the strict rule of the word of God, what Idolatry is, and what it is not, then certainly it will manifestly appear, that in the Church of England there are Idolaters, yea notable Idolaters to be found. The Law is plain, and do we not read what God saith, Exodus 20, verse 4, Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven Image, neither the similitude of anything: thou shalt not bow down to thē, nor serve them? If these were asked of this Commandment, they would be ready to answer with the young man in the Gospel, All these things have I kept from my youth, Matth. 19, 20. For we think commonly, that unless we be popish Idolaters, to fall down before an Idol & worship it, we be no Idolaters at all. But hereby we show that we do not understand the Law of God, neither the rules of interpretation. For as murder consisteth not only in taking away life, but in hatred also and revenge, as the Apostle John testifieth, Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer, and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him, 1 John, chapter 3, verse 15. Matth. chapter 5, verse 22: and as adultery consisteth not only in the outward act, but also in the inward and secret lusts of the heart: so may there be Idolaters, that do not fall down and worship an Idol, and there is an Idolatry in the heart, as well as in the practice.

The Apostle Paul in the second Epistle to the Corinthians, chapter 4, verse 4, calleth the devil, The god of this world; and yet there are none in the Church that worship the devil in any outward or visible shape, but they hate the thought of it no less then the deed. How then is it that many or that any make him their god, but that they believe in him, obey him, and trust more in him then they do in almighty God? Whereupon he concludeth that they are no better then worshippers of the devil, howsoever not in outward fashion, yet in the inward affection. So if we would examine our own hearts and spirits by this law which is spiritual, we shall find our selves to be gross Idolaters many ways. Many worship their wealth, and make their riches their god, and set it up as an Idol in their hearts, and this is one relique of Idolatry. These are they that think gain to be godliness, and are gross Idolaters in their hearts, howsoever they never worshipped any visible Image. Again, there are some that worship GOD with their bellies, Phil. 3, 19, such are the drunkards & gluttonous persons, howsoever otherwise they hate an Image, yet are they notable Idolaters in their hearts. There are also Idolaters of other sorts, and other relics of Idolatry, some have made their pleasure their god, this is the common sin of great men; and these worship and serve their own delights and pastimes, & love them more then the Lord. Now whatsoever a man loveth better then GOD, that same he maketh to be his God. Many such there are among us, who albeit they abhor the open worshipping of Images, yet in their hearts they retain the dregs of Idolatry and are indeed notable Idolaters. And if we would make diligent trial of our selves, and search into the secret corners of our harts by the clear light of the word as with a candle, we should find our places, persons, and times to be full of Idolatry; forasmuch as the most part have preferred their pride, their covetousness, their lusts, before God himself, and therefore these are Idolaters, & have joined themselves to Idols. And concerning those that have lived heretofore in Idolatry, and think that now they have forsaken it, & therefore shall do well enough: let them take heed they do not deceive themselves. For a man may leave sin, and yet not repent for it. A man may cease from the practice of it, and yet not hate it, neither turn unto God. And doubtless, if these men can yet laugh heartily at their former practices, and make a jest and sport in telling what they have done before an abominable Idol, they may justly suspect that they remain filthy Idolaters still, and if occasion were presented unto them again, they would fall afresh to their former Idolatry, as the dog to his vomit. I say therefore unto such, that without vnfeyned repentance there is no salvation, but as they lived in Idolatry, so they shall die Idolaters, and be condemned with Idolaters eternally, Revel. 21. verse 8.

CHAP. XXXIII.

1 These are the journeys of the Children of Israel which went forth out of the Land of Egypt, with their armies, under the hand of Moses and Aaron.

2 And Moses wrote their goings out according to their journeys, by the commandment of the Lord: and these are their journeys according to their goings out.

3 And they departed from Rameses in the first Moneth, on the 15 day of the first Moneth: on the morrow after the Passover, the Children of Israel went out with an high hand in the sight of all the Egyptians.

4 For the Egyptians buried all their first borne which the Lord had smitten among them: upon their gods also the Lord executed judgments.

5 And the children of Israel removed from Rameses, and pitched in Succoth.

6 And from Succoth, &c.

AFTER the inheritance was given to the two Tribes & the half on this side Jordan, Moses describeth by the commandment of the Lord the places of their abode in the Wilderness, their several mansions where they pitched, & their Tents until they entered into the Land of promise. In this Chapter consider two points. First, the several mansions and stations where the Israelites rested and stayed. Secondly, a law and commandment how they should behave themselves toward the Canaanites, and how their land should be divided among thē. Touching the first, that is, their journeys in the Wilderness, it is set down generally, v. 1, and 2. and then particularly how God led them from place to place; first he noteth the place from whence they went till they came to the red sea; & afterward, notwithstanding their often infirmities and fallings from God, he brought them in despite of their enemies and all opposition of flesh and blood to the borders of the Land, which many of the faithful before them desired to see, but did not see it, only they believed the promise in their heart. The people of God had long been detained in slavery and bondage, now GOD brought them forth with a mighty hand and an out-stretched arm, killing all the first born of Egypt, and destroying their Idols in which they trusted; whereupon the Egyptians were stricken with such a sudden astonishment and amazement, that they were not able to resist and withstand the Israelites, but were compelled to open them a free passage to depart. Thus thē they went out early in the morning, having eaten the Paschal Lamb the evening before: they had lived many years in great heaviness, and endured many temptations in the Land of Egypt, but they go out thence with their young and with their old, with their sons and with their daughters, with their flocks and with their herds in great joy & much comfort of heart: so that they might say with the Prophet, Psal. 126, 1, 2. When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream: then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing, then said they among the heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them: the Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad. Thus doth the Lord turn the joy of the wicked into heaviness, and contrariwise the heaviness of his children into joyfulness. This teacheth us, that God preserveth his Church in the midst of dangers, when it wanteth human defense and protection, and delivereth it out of bondage and slavery wherein it is holden, Exod. 12, 22. Ezek. 9, 6. True it is, God doth many times give over his people to serve hard masters, and to suffer many calamities for a time, yet in the end he delivereth them when they call upon him, Ier. 25, 11, 12. Mic. 2, 10. This truth standeth upon good grounds.

[Reason 1] For first, when he delivereth them into the enemies hands, he doth it to correct them, and not to corrupt them; to bring them the nearer unto him, not to cast them farther off from him; whereby it appeareth that he hath a purpose and meaning to redeem them, and to bring them out of their hands. Secondly, God will never cast off his people, he loveth them with an unchangeable love, and therefore will accept them and receive them upon their repentance and humiliation. He hath a special feeling of their miseries, and therefore he will give them deliverance. Thirdly, God will magnify his own mercy and power toward his people, by giving them deliverance. It would have been a great dishonor to the great Name of God, if he had suffered the Egyptians to hold their rod evermore over the Israelites, and the loins of his people to be clasped and compassed therewith; therefore to show his mercy and power toward them, & to magnify his own honor, he sent them deliverance and brought them out of that horrible servitude and captivity.

[Use 1] This gracious dealing of God admonisheth the enemies of God, into whose hands he hath for a time delivered his people to be Lord's over them, not too much to tyrannize and triumph over them: because howsoever God suffer them to be under their power for a while, that they lift up their hands against them, and trample them under their feet, yet the Lord will not forget either to be just or merciful, he will take them out of the snare of the hunter: and the more they have insulted over them in the pride of their hearts, the greater shall be their deliverance: yea their deliverance shall be the cause of the destruction of these enemies. Thus did Moses speak to the Israelites, These Egyptians which ye have seen, ye shall never see them again anymore forever. Exod. 14, 13. So then we may conclude the woeful and wretched condition of all the Churches enemies, because albeit they seem for a time to be as it were Lord's of the earth, and to have power in themselves to do what pleaseth them, yet their turn shall be the next, and their destruction sleepeth not. For when the Israelites were delivered out of the hands of the Egyptians that were cruel masters over them, it was not only the cause of their shame, but of their destruction also, as appeareth in the death of all the first borne, and in that he drowned Pharaoh and his host in the red sea: so that these things being duly considered, the wicked have no cause at all to triumph and insult over the children of GOD when they have gotten them in subjection under them.

Secondly, this teacheth every soul that [Use 2] belongeth to God, if he fall into this captivity and estate to be ruled by cruel Lord's, that they should suffer it with all patience: this is but for a while, Heaviness may abide at evening, but joy cometh in the morning, Psal. 30, for God will surely deliver them. What though the bondage be sharp and bitter? yet this must be their comfort, they shall have deliverance out of all, and ought to nourish such hope in them, that although they see no means of deliverance, yet they must look up to God, and wait his leisure, and in the ende they are sure of an happy issue, Exod. 3, 9. God never afflicteth us without just cause, and therefore we should look upon our selves, and search our own hearts: and labor to bear patiently our afflictions, whatsoever they be, whether they come before or after repentance. For doubtless whosoever shall search his own ways, shall not only find that God hath been just in punishing his sins, but that he hath also been merciful in not laying greater judgments upon him, as justly he might have done; and therefore he ought not to murmur against him, but patiently to bear his hand, knowing that the greatest punishments that almighty God inflicteth upon us are nothing so great as those which we have deserved at his hands.

Thirdly, we ought all to labor to be members [Use 3] of the true Church, that so these privileges may belong unto us. It is a very great honor to live under God's protection, and to abide under the shadow of the Almighty. If we be delivered at any time from dangers, acknowledge that it is God's preservation, and be thankful for it.

This should put us in mind of two things: first, that if we happen to live under such a judgment, we must stoop down our necks under this yoke, and humble our selves under the most mighty hand of God, that hath brought so fearful a judgment upon us. For if we think it to be a judgment, when the earth bringeth not forth her fruit unto us; then much more may we think it to be a judgment, when the earth is not able to bear a man, but casteth and vomiteth him out into captivity, as the stomach doth gross and evil humors out of the body. For this cause doeth the Lord charge the Israelites to keep his statutes and his judgments, That the Land do not spew them out also when they defile it, as it spewed out the Nations that were before them, Levite. chapter 18. verse 25, 28. & 20. verse 22. And afterward he showeth, that if they did not walk obediently before him, the land whither he bringeth them to dwell therein, should spew them out; as Reu. 3, 16. Of all judgments to be carried into captivity, is one of the greatest. The very mercies of the wicked are cruelty. David made choice to be under the plague and pestilence, rather then to fly before the enemy, because he is unmerciful.

We sit under our own Vines and Fig-trees, we have seen no invasion, nor heard any complainings in our streets: we know not what bondage meaneth, or to be carried captives into a strange Land: howbeit it is apparent that we have been very near unto it, as near to the pit as could be, and yet not fallen into the same. For, if the Gunne-powder Treason had taken place, which was very near unto the time appointed for the execution of it, we had long ere this been in slavery and bondage again unto the bloody Papists, who have long lain in wait for such a day: and albeit that be defeated, and all their imaginations be scattered as chaff before the wind; yet who knoweth how near we may be to as great captivity? We are secure, and put away the evil day far from us, but the greater our security is, the nearer our captivity may be. We have close and secret enemies amongst us, never more lusty, and never more courageous then they are at this day, which are left to remain amongst us to be pricks in our eyes, and Thorns in our sides, and to vex us in the Land wherein we dwell, verse 55.

These never leave plotting and conspiring our overthrow and destruction. We hear of rumors of War abroad, and spreadings of errors and heresies, which threaten ruin both to Church and Common-wealth; these are but the beginnings of sorrow. Again, if we look unto our selves, our sins are very great, and call continually for vengeance unto heaven at God's hands, and no doubt he is coming down to see whether we have done altogether according to the cry which is come unto him. All these laid together and weighed as it were in a balance, what can we in reason and justice expect, but that GOD deliver us into the enemies hands, and suffer them to carry us captive, and so make slaves and bondmen of us?

Secondly, if any desire to enjoy the land wherein he dwelleth in peace and safety, let him labor not to pollute and defile it by his sins.

The Jews had a promise of God to be his people, yet because of their sins, he suffered them to be carried into captivity, where they remained long in a strange land. Have we any greater privilege then they? or may we expect to escape? No, if we follow them in contempt of the word and other open sins, we shall be sure to follow them also in the punishment which will be answerable to our iniquities.

Lastly, this assureth us that as GOD delivereth his people from temporal danger and bondage, so he will deliver them much more from spiritual bondage. For if he will deliver our bodies, he will much more deliver our souls; that being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, we might serve him without fear in holiness and righteousness before him all the days of our life, Luke 1, 74, 75.

Wherefore we ought patiently to wait his leisure, knowing that if he have such a special care of our bodies that must lie in the dust, to set them free from temporal bondage, he will much rather deliver our souls from spiritual bondage, wherein Satan holdeth us. When Christ our Savior would show that he came to redeem the souls of men, he taught them by delivering their bodies from diseases.

For when he restored sight to the blind by opening their eyes, what did it signify but that he came to scatter the darkness of the mind, and to make them see that before saw not the light of the truth? as Math. 4, 16, The people that sate in darkness saw great light: and to them that sate in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up.

The Prophets in the time of the Law smote the people with blindness, that they knew not what they did, neither whither they went, 2 Kings 6, 18: as the Angels did the Sodomites, so that they wearied themselves to find the door, Gen. 19, 11.

But Christ, to show that he came to seek and to save that which is lost, restored sight to the blind, and opened the eyes of their understandings: when he healed the bodies of such as were lame and halted, what was it but a teaching of them that he came to heal the broken-hearted? to preach deliverance to the captives? and to set at liberty them that were bruised?

When he raised some to life from the dead, what did it teach and show, but that he is able to raise out of the grave of sin and to give the life of the spirit? When he cleansed the lepers, what was it but a making known to the world, that he will cleanse from the foul and filthy leprosy of sin? And when he did cast out devils that possessed the bodies of men, what was it but to show that he casteth the devils out of the hearts and consciences, where they desire to dwell as in an house? If then it be no small comfort unto us to know that the Lord will deliver his people from an earthly bondage: certainly it cannot but minister much more comfort unto us to consider that the Lord is more careful of our souls; and if he be mindful of us for things of this life, he cannot be forgetful of us for the life to come, seeing he hath sent his only begotten Son, to the end, that all which believe in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

7 And they removed from Etham, and turned again to Pihahiroth, &c.

8 And they departed from before Pihahiroth, and passed through the midst of the sea, &c.

9 And they removed from Marah, and came unto Elim, &c.

36 And they removed from Ezion-gaber, and pitched in the wilderness of Zin, which is Kadesh.

38 And Aaron the Priest went up into mount Hor, at the commandment of the Lord, and died there, &c.

40 And King Arad the Canaanite, &c.

Here we have a short abridgement of the forty two mansions and journeys of Israel during their abode in the wilderness, until they passed over Jordan, and entered into the land promised to their fathers. The twelve former journeys they dispatched the two first years: for they abode at Sinai where the Law was given, an whole year and more. From Sinai to Kadesh which is in the wilderness of Zin, they finished 31 mansions, in thirty and seven years with the beginning of the 38, year. And in the fortieth year which was the last of their wandering in the wilderness, they dispatched and finished the other nine mansions.

These journeys of the Israelites Moses setteth down in diverse places, as Exodus 13, 17: when Pharaoh had let the people go, God led them not through the way of the land of the Philistines, although that was near: for God said, Lest peradventure the people repent when they see war, and they return to Egypt: but God led the people about through the way of the wilderness of the red sea. This is further declared, Exod. 14, and 15: and in other Chapters following. Of these journeys also we have seen in part before in this book. And Moses in the book of Deuteronomy, chapt. 1, 31, putteth the people in remembrance, that they had seen in the wilderness, how the Lord their God bare them (as a man doth bear his son) all the way: that they went. And in the Chapter following he telleth them how they took their journey in that great and terrible wilderness, by the way of the red sea, and compassed mount Seir many days. In these several mansions and stations, many memorable accidents fell out, which Moses by naming the places would have them to consider, that none of all the works and miracles of God might be forgotten, neither their own stubbornness and rebellion, nor the greatness of the mercies of God toward them, as Psalm 102, 19. This shall be written for the generation to come, and the people which shall be created shall praise the Lord: and Psalm 78, 6, That the generation to come might know them, and the children which should be borne, who should arise, and declare them to their children.

The land of Canaan promised to the fathers was fair and fruitful, flowing with milk & honey; but the way unto it was rough and ragged, like the way of Jonathan to the Philistines, 1, Sam. 14, 13: which was sharp and steepy, to which he and his armor-bearer crept with hand and foot. Hence it came to pass, that the people of God, being delivered out of the land of Egypt by a mighty hand and out-stretched arm, did enter into a sea of troubles, not only at the red sea, but while they trotted and traveled up & down the wilderness, sometimes they went forward, and sometimes they went backward, Numb. 14, 25: sometimes they marched, and sometimes they retired, and never stood at one certain and settled stay. Besides, they met with many enemies, open and secret, which they were to encounter withal, all which in the end they saw destroyed: albeit not all at one time, but by little and little, & at last after many dangers escaped, and infinite troubles over-passed, under the happy conduct of Joshua, they found rest and peace in the promised land.

Now let us come to the uses of all these [Use 1] things toward our selves: forasmuch as if we consider them aright, they were as figures to them, & as glasses to us, to behold in them spiritual things. And first we see hereby what the life of a true Christian is. The charges of a Christian building is great. If we will be the disciples of Christ, we must not imagine that we shall lead a soft, easy, and pleasant life, in hight of honor, in abundance of riches, in pride of life, in rivers of pleasure, as if we were in another Paradise: or to be clad in purple, and to fare deliciously and sweetly every day, Luke 16: but we must know the gate is straight, and the way is narrow that leadeth to life, Math. 7: we must sit down and cast our accounts what our profession will cost us, and resolve to forsake all that we have for the Name of Christ, and account nothing so precious or dear which we cannot or will not forgo. Such was the whole life of the Patriarchs and Prophets, such was the life of Christ and his Apostles, and such is the life of all the faithful servants of God. They endured afflictions, they suffered reproaches, they resisted unto blood. They had fears without, and terrors within. They had experience of many miseries, they felt sharp storms, and mighty tempests that went over their heads. This Christ our Savior showeth, If ye were of the world, the world would love his own, but because I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you, John. 15, 19. And in another place, Whosoever will be my disciple, must take up his cross and follow me, Math. 16, 24. And hereunto the Apostle accordeth, teaching that through manifold afflictions we must enter into the kingdom of God, Acts 14, 22. Christ and the cross go always hand in hand, and accompany each other. If we will live with Christ, we must first die with him: if we will reign with Christ, we must suffer with him, 2 Tim. 2, 11, 12. So then they are greatly and grossly deceived, that suppose all such to be highly in God's favor that flourish and prosper in the world, and such to be the worst sort of people, whom God doth most commonly strike and correct with his hand: having forgotten that he doth not here keep an ordinary rate below, to punish everyone as he is worst; and to favor or cocker him as he is best: But he singleth out such as pleaseth him, and maketh them examples to others to serve for their instruction, and in them willeth and warneth us to look upon our selves.

[Use 2] Secondly, as the children of Israel traveled up and down in the wilderness, and went from place to place, from one station to another, whereas Moses reckoneth up 42 in this Chapter: so it is with all the faithful here upon the earth, they must testify and profess themselves to be pilgrims and strangers in the world, because we abide not in our own country.

This David confessed unto God, Psalm 39 12, that he was a stranger and a foreigner as all his fathers were. This also the Apostle witnesseth of the fathers, Heb. 11, 13, They died in faith, and received not the promises, but saw them afar off, and believed them, and received them thankfully, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. Strangers be not inhabitants, and traualiers be not liegers and continuers in one place. This should teach us to use this world as though we used it not: to buy as though we possessed not: considering that the fashion of this world goeth away, and the glory of man fadeth as the flower.

We must cast off all lettes that may stay and hinder us in our journey, like unto travelers, who will carry nothing with them in the way, but that which may help and further them to their journeys end. If they find by experience anything to clog them, they will cast it from them, as the blind man cast away his cloke, Mark 10, 50, that he might run with speed to him that called him; and rather lose their present profit, then lack the place of blessedness to which we are going. For our light affliction which is but for a moment, causeth unto us a far more excellent, and an eternal weight of glory, while we look not on the things which are seen, but on the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal. Let us therefore learn contentation of heart in every estate of life which GOD will bring upon us.

Let us, while we converse upon the earth, have our conversation in Heaven, and live as citizens of that kingdom, accounting our selves here to be from home, esteeming this life a place of banishment, and sighing to be delivered from the bondage of corruption, and restored to the glorious liberty of the sons of God. We all desire to inherit God's kingdom, as Balaam desired to die the death of the righteous, but we would not willingly be sojourners here. Sojourning importeth a temporary abode, not a settled life, but a passing forward in hope of translatiō to a better estate: we must all embrace and receive this as a ruled case, that every citizen of Heaven is a pilgrim on earth, Genes. 47, 9. 1 Chronic. 29, 15. 1 Peter 1, 17, and 2, 11, 12.

If then we desire to be citizens of God's kingdom, we must behave our selves as pilgrims on the earth. We are as it were exiles and banished men in a foreign land, ought we not then to desire earnestly and heartily to come into our own country, and among our own people? Whosoever hath a rich patrimony in his own country, great wealth, much honor, noble friends, and is forced for a season to sojourne in a strange land, among strangers, nay enemies, where he is evilly entreated, reproached, reviled, disturbed, and persecuted on every side; certainly he will set his heart and affections upon nothing there, but all his mInde is set upon his country, desiring above all things to return and come again thither.

Thus it ought to be with us: our country is in heaven, where we have an everlasting inheritance, and an incorruptible treasure, and are pilgrims upon the earth, where we are hated and assaulted by Satan, the world, and the flesh; and are daily subject to sundry troubles and infirmities. What folly therefore is it, to place our happiness and felicity upon the earth, and to set our hearts upon earthly things?

[Use 3] Thirdly, the people of God during their abode in the wilderness, (after they were called out of the bondage of Egypt) did not go forward toward the land of Canaan with a constant and a settled course, but made many stays and delays: sometimes they marched forward with a courageous resolution under the banner of God and his servant Moses; and sometimes they retired backward by the way of the red sea toward Egypt, and often wished themselves again in Egypt, When they remembered the fish which they did eat in Egypt freely, the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leekes, the onions, and the garlic, Numb. 14, 25, and 11, 5. These do the Jews delight in to this day, which maketh them loathsome and unsavory, which diet their fathers learned in Egypt. So it is with us, being called with an holy calling to the knowledge of the Gospel.

True it is, we do here run for a prize, this life is the race, the runner in it is every true Christian, the Angels are the beholders, eternal life is the Crown for which we strive, the high Judge of all is God, the enemies that seek to subvert and supplant us are Satan, the world, and our corruptions, against which we are to wrestle with might and main as for life and death: yet we begin slowly, and set forward faintly, and being entered into the way, we make many starting-holes that stay us in our course, that we do not proceed with such a good courage and settled resolution as becometh us.

The truth hereof we may behold in all the faithful throughout all ages of the Church, who have found hard beginnings in their first calling, an unwillingness to yield, a difficulty to resolve, an untowardness to enter, a backwardness to proceed, and a dullness to persevere. The Lord appeared unto Moses in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush, and called him to speak to Pharaoh, and to bring his people the children of Israel out of Egypt, Exodus 3, 2, and 4, 1: but he maketh many exceptions and replies to the call of God. And to the end to pull his neck out of the yoke, sometimes he alleged theit infidelity, that they will not believe that GOD appeared unto him: sometimes he objecteth his own infirmity, that he was not eloquent, but slow of speech, & slow of tongue: and sometimes he breaketh out into open obstinacy, denying to yield unto the voice of God, saying, Send by the hand of him whom thou shouldest send. So Jeremiah had many excuses and exceptions, when the word of the Lord came unto him, that he had sanctified and ordained him to be a Prophet unto the Nations; for he replied by and by, O Lord God, behold I cannot speak, for I am a child, Ier, 1, 3,

The like we see in Jonah, who fled from the presence of God, because of the charge enjoined to him to go to Nineue, Jonah 1, 3. Lot, albeit a righteous man, whose heart was grieved for the unclean conversation of the Sodomites, yet being called to depart out of Sodom, did linger and loiter behind in his departure, his pleasures whispered him in one ear, and his profits rounded him in the other, so that he prolonged the time, and the Angels caught him, his wife, and two daughters by the hand (the Lord being merciful unto him) they brought him forth, and set him without the city, Gen. 19, 16.

The disciples that were called of Christ, made sundry delays, one would first go and bury his father, and afterward he would return and attend upon Christ, Luke 9, 39: another would first go bid his friends farewell which were at his house, and when he had more leisure Christ should be served. So it fared with them that were bidden to the marriage-feast, who all with one consent began to make excuses; the first said, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it; another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: and another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come, Luke, 14, 18, 19, 20, Math, 22, 5.

Thus we see our nature is slow and untoward to follow the Lord, we shift off and shrink back as long as we can, and many goodly excuses our corrupt flesh findeth to linger and put from us all true obedience to Christ Jesus. Faine we would seem desirous to follow God to come unto Heaven, but we are loath to soil and defile our feet, Cant. 5, 3: so that we must be violently thrust forward, before we will yield, so sturdy and stubborn our necks are, John. 6, 44. We see y^e truth of this in Nicodemus, he bare a love to Christ, and a liking to his doctrine; but first he came to him by night for fear of the Jews, John. 3, 2: afterward he waxed more bold in the cause of Christ before the face of the Pharisees, and that in the open day (though he received a check) John. 7, 50: and lastly, he shown himself more constant and zealous in professing himself to be one of his disciples in the burial of Christ.

The like we see in Joseph of Arimathea, who at the first was a disciple of Jesus secretly, John. 19 38: but after declared himself manifestly in the costly and honorable burial of his Master.

Thus it appeareth that the Kingdom of Heaven is like a grain of mustard seed, which is one of the least of all seeds, Matthew 13, 31: and that the Elect themselves are brought on by small degrees; their hands hang down, their knees are weak, they go halting and limping, and quickly turn out of the right way: they hang off and on a great while, they meet with many lettes and incombrances, both at home in themselves, and abroad in others.

And albeit for further proof and certainty of this point it were sufficient to send every man (that knoweth what true vocation and conversion mean) home to his own doors, to examine his own heart; yet consider, I pray you, briefly the heavenly calling of Saint Augustine, as it is testified by himself in his books of confession. For when God began to speak to his conscience, he felt a world of temptations, he was tossed and troubled with infinite combats and conflicts between the flesh and the spirit, between God drawing on the one side, and the flesh, the world, and the devil holding back on the other part. His pleasures past presented themselves before his eyes, and he thought he might prolong the time, at length he began to break through this army of enemies, and to speak unto God after this manner, O Lord, how long wilt thou suffer me thus? how long, how long shall I say, tomorrow, and tomorrow? why should I not do it now? why should there not be an end of my filthy life, even at this hour? Then he was bidden to take up and read in the Scripture, after which followed his wonderful and final conversion, joined with much weeping and lamentation. This difficulty the Apostle found in his practice, that when he would do good, he was so yoked, that evil was present with him: he did delight in the Law of God concerning the inner man, yet he saw another law in his members, rebelling against the law of his mind, and leading him captive unto the law of sin, so that he did not those things which he would, but the euils which he would not he did, Rom. 7.21, 22, 23, 29. This should teach us to call upon God by earnest prayer that we may receive of him the presence of his grace, & the assistance of his Spirit, that we may override all doubts and difficulties that would stay us, and so entangle us in the snares of sin. Let us use all holy and lawful means to strengthen our faith, that we may proceed from faith to faith, and grow in the graces of God, until we come to be perfect men in Jesus Christ. And let us not doubt of our calling, when we see, to y^e grief of our hearts, and the discomfort of our souls, such wants and weaknesses in us; it is not otherwise with us then with all the faithful: but let us strive and fight against these lettes which would withdraw our minds from God, and take heed we quench not the Spirit, nor grieve him by whom we are sealed unto the day of redemption, 1 Thessalon. 5, 19. Ephes. 1, 30.

And although Satan and the world make never so much suit unto us, to entertayne the pleasures of sin, which are but for a season, and sing never such sweet songs to enchant us and lull us asleep in carnal security, let us stop our ears, and strengthen our hearts against such lusts as fight against the soul. We see sundry persons after their calling by the preaching of the word, and after a long profession of the faith, to turn back again as the dog to his vomit, 2 Peter 2, 22, Prouerb. 26, 11. 2 Timoth. 4, 4: some to their vain company, others after the love of the world, the lusts of the flesh the cares of this life, and grow to be more filthy and profane then they were before. Let us take heed of such dangerous examples, their doings are evil, their fall is fearful, & their end will be more fearful without repentance and practicing of their first works.

Fourthly, we see the people of God, before [Use 4] they could enter into the land of Canaan, were constrained to buckle and encounter with sundry enemies, the Amalekites, the Canaanites, the Amorites, the Bashanites, the Midianites, and sundry others, Exodus 17, 8. Numbers 21, 1, and 31, 1, 2, &c. all which in the end they subdued, so that not one of them was able to look them in the face. Thus it fareth with all the faithful in this life. As soon as we enter into the race of Christianity, by and by we must expect many and sundry enemies, y^t cross us in the way, some secret y^t seek to undermine us, some open, that with all violence fly upon us, and drive against us, & both seek to overthrow us: yea, such as before our calling seemed our friends and familiars, now begin to reject and renounce us, now fall to nod the head at us, and to set themselves against us, because it seemeth strange to them that we run not with them into the same excess of riot, and therefore they speak evil of us; which shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and dead, 1 Peter 4, 5.

It is noted concerning Christ by the Evangelist, that before he entered upon the work of his high calling, to preach the Gospel, and shown himself a Redeemer to Israel, he increased in wisdom and stature, and grew in favor with God and man, Luke 2, 52: but when once he left his private life in the private house of Joseph where he was brought up, and set upon the office whereunto he was appointed, albeit he continued in the favor of God, as his only begotten Son in whom he is well pleased, Matthew 3, 17: yet he grew out of favor with men who were not contented with him.

Paul, before his conversion, was in great estimation with the Pharisees, and obtained letters of them, to put in prison all them that called upon the Name of Christ: but when he began to preach faith in Christ which before he persecuted and sought to destroy, he lost their favor and friendship, as appeareth in that they plotted his death, and sought his life to take it away, more vehemently and violently then he had practiced against the disciples.

Let us not therefore think it strange that we meet with many enemies, cunning, subtle, cruel, and malicious; but seek to be at peace with God, and reconciled unto him, and then if God be with us, who shall be against us? Rom. 8, 31.

[Use 5] Fifthly, the enemies of Israel, albeit they were overthrown and defeated, yet were not all discomfited and consumed at once, but by little and little, sometimes one, and then afterward another, as they did not arise and appear all together: so it is evermore with his Church to the end of the world. We shall never be without some enemies. God will ever try the faith and patience of his children. When David sate at home, and went not to war against his enemies, he was surprised by a subtle enemy whom he never suspected, and fell into two grievous sins, adultery and murder, 2 Sam. 11, 1, 4, 1 Chron. 20, 1. The water by standing still, gathereth filth, mud, and corruption. The iron by lying still, gathereth rust. The Church free from enemies oftentimes groweth secure: and the godly are ready to say in their prosperity, they shall never be removed, Psal. 30, 6. Let all the wicked therefore know, that their peace and prosperity cannot give them assurance (though they endure long) of the favor and love of God, but he will bring down his judgments upon them, when they have filled up the measure of their sins. And albeit for a time they escape, yet they are appointed to wrath and destruction, forasmuch as the Lord is jealous, and the Lord avengeth, he will take vengeance on his adversaries, and he reserveth wrath for his enemies, Nah. 1, 2. Yea, thus it shall be with the spiritual enemies of our souls and of our salvation, albeit they have received their death's wound, and are crushed in the head, that they can never fully recover their strength, but shall finally be subdued; yet they are always hissing and stinging, they are trying & tempting the members of Christ. So long as we are Christ's, we must look for the devil and his Angels to set themselves against us. They will take no denial or repulse, but being beaten and vanquished, will gather their forces, and unite their power together, to build up the kingdom of darkness. When he tempted Christ in the wilderness, and received a notable foil and glorious overthrow in all those several combats, and had ended his temptations that he had prepared, he departed from him but a little season, Luke 4, 13. As he dealt with the head in the wilderness, so he dealeth with the members in this world, we must never look to be wholly rid of this importunate enemy. Whensoever he leaveth us, it is not as a confession that he is utterly convicted and confounded; for it fareth with him as with one that wrestled, who, how soever he spedde, would always persuade the standers by, that he gave him the fall and foil that buckled and clasped with him: and so it is when we wrestle with these principalities and powers, and spiritual wickednesses in high places, they will never yield the victory, but rather gather their broken and disbanded companies, leuy new forces, provide and procure stronger weapons, and make better provision and preparation against us. If then he depart from us, and break up his siege, it is not to free us from danger, and to take a truce with us, but to muster a fresh army, and to take us at an advantage, if he see us to grow secure: and therefore let us never promise rest unto our selves from his assaults, so long as we continue here, and carry about us this earthly Tabernacle; but always stand upon our gard and in our watch-tower, to be ready for his coming and returning, that so resisting him, (being strong in faith) he may fly from us, I am. 4, 7. 1 Pet. 5, 8, 9. Yea, let this serve as a great comfort and consolation to those that have experience of his manifold assaults and inuasions, that they never distrust or despair, though their troubles be many, though their temptations be great & continual, seeing this was the lot and portion of Jesus Christ the Son of GOD, Who shall tread down Satan under their feet shortly, Rom. 16, 20.

Lastly, the people of Israel, after the enduring [Use 6] of all their troubles and afflictions, after the experience of many sorrows and miseries that came upon them, had rest given unto them, and victory over all their enemies round about them, so that they were safely brought into the land of promise, where they inherited and possessed cities that they built not, houses full of all manner goods which they filled not, welles which they digged not, vineyards, and oliues which they planted not, and saw all the good things performed which the Lord had promised unto them. This serveth to comfort the children of God, though for a time they sustain many injuries, bear many disgraces, receive many losses, feel many pinches & instraightments, yea many fierce and fiery trials, it is but while they wander in the wilderness, they are not yet come into Canaan the place of rest; howbeit the blessedness of the issue and end of all, will fully recompense the hardness of the way, and make amends and satisfaction for all their sorrows, being fully assured that the afflictions of this present world are not worthy of the glory which shall be shown unto us hereafter, for then God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes, Rom. 8, 19. Revel. 7, 16, 17. Thus God giveth comfort to his servants, after they have been humbled in this vale of misery. They shall hunger no more, they shall thirst no more, they shall want no more. Then this corruptible shall put on incorruption, this mortal shall put on immortality, and death shall be swallowed up in victory, 1 Cor. 15, 53 54. This made the Apostle say, Blessed are they that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them, Revel. 14, 13. This must make us to make light & ittle account of this transitory life, and of the vain profits, pleasures, honors, and friendship thereof, all which are as dung in comparison of the profit, pleasure, and honor that shall be enjoyed in the next life. Let us lay a good foundation in this life, and begin our heaven while we are here upon the earth. Let us make the first entrance into it in this mortal body which we carry about us, that so this work may be finished and fully accomplished in the life to come.

50 And the Lord spake unto Moses in the plains of Moab by Jordan near Jericho, saying, 51 Speak unto the thildren of Israel, and say unto them, When ye are passed over Jordan into the land of Canaan.

52 Then shall ye drive out all the inhabitants of the land from before you, and destroy all their pictures, and destroy all their molten images, and quite pluck down all their high places.

54 And ye shall divide the land by lot, &c.

55 But if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land from before you, then it shall come to pass, that these which ye let remain of them, shall be pricks in your eyes, and thorns in your sides, and shall vex you in the land wherein ye dwell.

56 Moreover it shall come to pass, that I shall do unto you, as I thought to do unto them.

The second part of the Chapter followeth in these words, which is the Commandment of GOD touching the Israelites when they should come into the Land. The Law hath two parts, the charge to cast out the Canaanites, and to destroy Idolatry. To their obedience he promiseth possession and dwelling in the Land; but if they suffer any to remain, they should be dangerous, troublesome, and hurtful unto them, and God will punish them for their coldness and carelessness in the execution of his will. In this place we see, that God is very patient and of much long-sufferance, he had suffered the Canaanites four hundred years, but when in the mean season they repented not, they are appointed to destruction. We see also the horrible judgment of God against the sin of Idolatry, for which kingdoms and cities are destroyed. [Object.] The question may be asked, whether Idolaters be now to be killed, and Idols to be pulled down and destroyed, as God in this place commandeth the Israelites? I answer, [Answer.] this commandment is not general, neither belongeth to all without limitation and exception: nay, as it was given to the Israelites, it did strictly pertain only to the Canaanites, whose land was given them to possess. And now it belongeth to Christian Magistrates to pull down all idols, and to abolish superstition, and the occasions of both, and to purge their dominions from all such abominations, 2 Kings 18, 4: and to cause the word of God to be truly preached to root the same out of their hearts, and to offer means of conference to turn the seduced from their blind devotion. As for private men, they have no warrant to pull down images, which is the next way to move sedition and rebellion: it is sufficient for them to withhold worship from them, and they must tolerate those things which are not in their power to reform.

Again, it may be demanded, [Object.] whether all pictures are to be defaced and destroyed, and all molten images to be quite pulled down. I answer, pictures and images are not all of one sort, neither are set up for one end. [Answ.] Some have a civil use, and some a religious. Such as are for civil use only, may be retained: but such as are set up for Religions sake, are to be defaced, and this is the meaning of the commandment, Thou shalt not make to thee any graven image. Now in that the Lord forbiddeth his people to spare the idolatrous Canaanites, and commandeth them to root them out utterly, we learn, that no familiarity is to be used with Idolaters, but we are carefully to avoid their company, Hos. 4, 15. Deuteron, 7, 5. Psalm 16.4. and 106, 35.36. Judges 2, 2, 1 Corinth. 8, 9, and 10, 21, 2 Cor. 6, 17, Isaiah 52, 11.

The grounds follow. First, because whosoever [Reason 1] will avoid any sin, must also avoid the means whereby they may be induced and ensnared to fall into it. Now among all inducements to draw us to a communion of wickedness, the society and familiarity with wicked men is one of the greatest & most dangerous. This David acknowledgeth, and therefore being resolved to yield obedience to God, first he banisheth ungodly persons from his company, and then goeth cheerfully forward in his course, Psal. 119, 115, Depart from me ye wicked doers, for I will keep the Commandments of my God. Secondly, our nature is prone and inclinable to idolatry, and therefore by their company, by their example, by their practice, by their persuasions, and by their doctrine we may easily be corrupted, as the Lord himself threateneth, that their gods should be a snare unto them, Judge. 2, 3. Hence it is that the Prophet persuadeth the people of Judah not to go to Gilgal and Beth-auen, lest joining with the superstitious Israelites, they should be infected with their idolatry, Hosea 4, 15.

This serveth to reprove such as delight in the company of idolatrous Papists to be their [Use 1] inward and nearest friends, which are guilty of most palpable idolatry, no less then the Jews that set up the golden calf and danced before it, Exod. 32. Secondly, such as travel for pleasure and delight into popish and idolatrous places, where they expose themselves oftentimes to inevitable dangers by cōsorting and conversing with such as are ready to allure them to commit idolatry, to go into their idolatrous temples to see and hear, and afterward to fall down before their images. These are led by curiosity or by commodity to do that which is not convenient. Thirdly, this meeteth with their corruption, who for wealth, or friends, or other worldly, I may say wicked respects, link themselves in the nearest society of marriage with Popish idolaters, taking and nourishing in their bosoms a serpent, which is ever at hand day and night to tempt and entice them to forsake their covenant with God, to renounce his pure worship, and to embrace idolatry and superstition, 2 Cor. 6, 14. This was the sin of the sons of God before the flood, when they saw the daughters of men, and joined themselves with them, Genes. 6, 1, 2: this matching with them brought a flood of wickedness, and the flood of wickedness brought upon the whole world a flood of waters, wherein all flesh perished. This was Solomon's sin, notwithstanding all his wisdom, whereby he was drawn into idolatry, 1 Kings 11, 4. Nehem. 13, 26: There was no king like him over all Israel, nevertheless, even him did out-landish women cause to sin. This was the cause of the great wickedness of Ahab (who sold himself to work evil in the sight of God) because he took Jezebel to wife, 1, Kings 16, 31. And wherefore did Jehoram forsake the steppes of his godly father, and commit gross idolatry, but because he linked himself in an idolatrous stock, and married the daughter of Ahab? 2 Kings 8, 18. Mal. 2, 11. Ezra 10, 1, 2, 3. Lastly, they are to be reprov'd, who are present with their bodies before the abominable idol of the Mass, whether it be of a fancy, or for fashion, whether of curiosity, or for fear of punishment; and to bow down to an image, thinking to be excused if they reserve their hearts to God, whereby they rob God of his glory, they give scandal and offense to the weak brethren, they spoil the Lord of his right, they cast themselves willfully into desperate danger, they deprive themselves of a good testimony of their own salvation; and lastly, they deny the Lord JESUS and his truth before men, and therefore must take heed that he deny not them before his Father in Heaven, Math. 10, 33. [Object.] Neither let them think this any defense or comfort unto them, that they reserve their hearts to God, [Answ.] and for his pure worship: For if this were true, then were the holy Martyrs of God simple fools, that were content to endure all torments, yea to lay down their lives for a testimony to the truth, rather then give the least outward approbation to idolatry. Then were those three servants of God greatly deceived, who chose rather to be cast into the fiery furnace, then bow down to the idol that was set up, Dan. 3, 18: we are bought with a great price, and therefore we must glorify God in our body and in our spirit, for they are God's, 1 Cor. 6, 20. Rom. 12, 1. Mat. 4, 9, Exod. 20, 4. 1 John. 5, 21. What husband would endure, that his wife should prostitute her body to commit whoredom, albeit she should pretend and protest, that she reserved her heart chaste and pure for him only? Then how much less will the Lord admit such a bad and blind excuse, when they that profess themselves to be his spouse shall commit spiritual whoredom with idols in their bodies?

Secondly, we must learn from hence that [Use 2] it is impiety to worship images with any kind of worship whatsoever. For if we be commanded to abstain from familiarity with them that be idolaters, much more are we charged to abstain from idols, and from all worship of the idols. It is a grievous sin to give the honor of God (whereof he is jealous) to any but only to himself. To rob God, and thereby to enrich another, must needs be acknowledged to be a sinful and wicked practice: much more then is it a sin to give the same to such base stuff as stocks & blocks, and stones, and images. Not to honor the king is wickedness. To give the honor due to the King to his Peers and Nobles, must needs be a greater sin and offense: but to give it to a base and contemptible person, must needs be greater wrong and wickedness then any of the rest. So is it in this case, for men not to honor God is evil: to give his honor to any mortal man is more sinful: but for a man made after the image of God to give it to base and senseless idols, is most wicked of all, which are the works of men's hands. The basest image-maker that liveth, is far better then the image that liveth not: as the workman is better then the work. And what a gross and senseless thing is it, that the living image of the living should perform worship or service to the dead image of a dead Saint? It were much better therefore and less absurd, to worship him that made y^e image, who is the creature of God, then the image it self which is the creature of man. So then we oght carefully to take heed to our selves, that we worship not any image or idol with any worship whatsoever. It is not lawful for a subject to worship his Prince, or for a son to worship his father with any religious worship; much less lawful is it then for a man to worship such things as these, that have eyes and see not, ears and hear not, feet and walk not, neither doth any sound pass from them. A man would be much ashamed to be found or seen worshipping a tree that groweth, a bird or beast that liveth: much more then ought we to be ashamed of this gross kind of worship, that we should bow down to such things as are beholding to us for their form and fashion: so that there is far more reason, that the image should worship his maker, then the maker worship the image that he made. Let us learn to fear GOD, and reverence his worship, and fly all kind of worshipping of images whatsoever, & to abhor the same as the imiattion of the Gentiles, and the very excrements of Antichrist himself. Whosoever they be that practice such impiety in these days of grace, are fallen from grace. It may be that in time of danger and persecution, a man may be forced to do that which goeth against his conscience to save life; but for a man to stand out in these times, and to approve such manner of worship, he is certainly fallen from Christ, and deserveth just condemnation and destruction; and therefore let no color, or pretence, or persuasion whatsoever draw us away to the committing of this sin, but let us labor to keep our selves pure, by cleaving to the worship and service of God, and by giving honor and glory unto him. [Object.] But they tell us, that they worship not the image of any false God. The Scripture indeed crieth out against the images of false gods, and such as are no true Saints, but we for our parts worship nothing, but the Images of the true God, and of true Saints. I answer, [Answer.] there is a great difference between the Images of true Saints and of false Saints: but there is no difference at all in the action itself: forasmuch as it is idolatry to worship the Image of the true God as well as of the false. And the reason is, because it is to give worship to that which by nature is no God at all. Paul and Barnabas were true Saints, yet if the men of Lystra had worshipped them, they had sinned against GOD as much as when they worshipped Jupiter and Mercurius, which were no other then feigned gods, Acts 14, 12. Therefore that distinction falleth to y^e ground Deut. 4, 15. [Object.] Isaiah 40, 18. Rom. 1.23, 1, Cor. 10, 20. Deut. 27, 15. Psal. 97, 7. But some of the Papists tell us, that images are Lay men's books to look upon. I answer, [Answ.] the Lord hath given them other books to read, when he saith, Search the Scriptures, John. 5, 39: hereby they shall be led into all truth, and be sure to be preserved from error and evil. But as cunning and crafty thieves, when they meet with a poor simple fool or a little child, do take their treasure or money from them, and give them babies and pictures to play withal, to keep them quiet from crying or complaining: so do the Popish sort deal with God's people, they take from them the rich treasure of the holy Scriptures, whereby all their juggling and deceit would be discerned, and give them puppets and images to be their play-fellows, which are the doctrine of vanity, Ierem. 10, 15. Zechariah 10, 2: and they are teachers of lies, Habakkuk 2, 18. Neither let them reply, that the Prophets condemn the images of false gods, and that they make the images of the true God. For we shown before that this cannot serve their turn, forasmuch as the commandment forbiddeth the images of the true GOD, Deuteron. 4, 12.15, Acts 17, 29.

Again, they object, [Object.] that they do not worship the images themselves, but so far as they have relation to the Saints whereof they are images.

I answer, [Answer.] the Israelites, so often reprov'd for worshipping of images, did withal profess that they worshipp'd not the idols themselves of wood or stone, but God in them, as in making the golden calf they had a respect to GOD who brought them out of Egypt, Exodus 32, 3, 4. And the mother of Micah witnesseth that she had dedicated the silver unto the Lord, to make a graven and molten image, Judges 17, 3. So Jeroboam having made the golden calves, saith, Behold, O Israel, thy gods which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, 1 Kings 12, 28: for he meaneth the image and similitude which representeth the true God, Hos. 2, 26. And not only the Israelites, who could not be so sottish as to believe that the calves which themselves had made, (and had lately made) had freed their forefathers out of captivity, but the Gentiles themselves excused their idolatry in this manner, as Augustine witnesseth, I do not serve and adore that stone which I see, but I serve him whom I do not see. And who is that? a certain divine power which is invisible, which hath the charge over that image, August. in Psalm. 9, 6. As for other objections drawn from the Cherubims, and the brazen serpent, we have spoken of them sufficiently before, chapt. 21.

Lastly, we have from hence occasion offer'd [Use 3] unto, us to laud and magnify the Name of God that hath freed us from the darkness of idolatry and the danger of Idolaters, except we will run into the same again. He hath placed us where we have the Gospel, like the Israelites in Goshen, and hath opened our eyes to see those follies. Let us not with unthankful hearts desire to return again into this servitude.

The Lord hath chosen to dwell among us, and hath planted his Church in our kingdom: let us labor to approve our obedience in his sight, lest he take the light of the truth from us, and bestow it upon a people that will bring forth the fruits thereof. So long as the true worship of God continueth among us, our country shall be famous and renowned. On the other side, all places lose their honor and dignity, when once they are defiled with sin, and consecrated to idolatry. Gilgal was famous many ways for many memorable things that happened there, yet through idolatry there practiced, it became so infamous, that the people of Judah are forbidden to resort thither.

The like might be said of Beth-el, which in former times was the house of God, but was afterward for the same cause turned into Beth-auen, an house of vanity, Hos. 4. Ierem. 7, 12. Psalm 78, 60. What shall we then say of the Popish pilgrimages to Rome, or to the holy land, but tax them of ignorance and superstition?

For, be it that these places retained their ancient dignity, and maintained the Religion of God in his purity; yet should there be no reason to go thither to worship, forasmuch as all difference of places is taken away, John. 4, 23. Jerome traueled himself to the holy land, and lived there; and yet he saith, It is no commendation to have seen Jerusalem; but to have lived well at Jerusalem, this is praise worthy. And Bernard after him, We must not seek after the earthly, but the heavenly Jerusalem, not by pilgrimage on foot, but by bettering our affections, Epist. 319. ad Leibert. Abbot.

And if God require not of us to resort to such places, though they ente•ayned the truth, then doubtless much less to travail so far unto them being now degenerate & wholly dedicated and devoted to Antichristianity and idolatry, in which respect they are now become reproachful, hateful, and infamous to God & all goodmen. For we are not to esteem them as they were, but we must take them as they are, that is, full of superstition, and consequently dangerous to come at them.

But if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land from before you, it shall come to pass, &c: shall be pricks in your eyes, &c. In these words, we see the threatening which God denounceth against the carelessness and negligence of this people in the execution of y^t commandment of God: The Lord will do unto them, as he had thought to do unto their enemies. From hence we learn, that coldness and carelesse in the service of God, is a great and grievous sin. Want of zeal in the cause of God, to be neuters or indifferent men, not caring or regarding which end go forward is a foul and fearful sin before him, Judges 1, 21, 27, 29, 31, 33, & 2, 2, 3. 1 Kings 18, 21, and 2 Kings 17, 33. Gal. 3, 1. Revel. 2, 4, & 3, 15, 16. Gal. 5, 7,

Such are the greatest number of our professors: Some would reconcile the Papists and us, that is, light and darkness, Christ and Belial, the Temple of God and idols. Some serve their turns by their profession, so long as they may gain and grow in credit under it. Some profess religion as they profess the Laws of the kingdom, to wit, as a civil thing, and matter of good policy to keep the people in subjection and obedience, being ready to change as the time and state changeth.

Some hate them that are faithful and forward so much, that they can abide no zeal in religion nor in obedience; that term them mad fools and giddy headed spirits which desire to fear God, and to walk according to his word.

O miserable persons! that which GOD hateth is commended, and that which he commandeth is reviled and evil spoken of.

The grounds. It is as natural to a man [Reason 1] to sin, as it is to draw the air, as experience teacheth in all subject to human infirmity; no marvel therefore if men decline, it is a part of the old leaven, for what man is it that sinneth not? 1 Kings 8, 46. The power of sin even in the regenerate, is as a Law; and therefore we do as we would not, Romans 7: yet not I, but that sin which dwelleth in me

Secondly, they lie under an heavy and fearful curse that do the work of the Lord negligently, which he will have executed diligently, carefully, cheerfully, and zealously: Ierem. 48, 10, Cursed be he that doth the work of the Lord deceitfully: but all such as are lukewarm in the Lord's business are deceitful workmen, they are loiterers rather than laborers, and therefore they may not look to have the wages of laborers.

Thirdly, such are vexed with a spiritual consumption, losing the heat of the Spirit, and the life of grace, and fall to decay by little and little, as Revel. 2, 5, thou hast lost thy first love. For as they that have a consumption of the body, the natural heat decayeth and threateneth death: so such as have a consumption in the soul, the spiritual heat diminisheth and threateneth destruction. For such churches and persons become in time barren in good thing, but plentiful in evil things, Isaiah 5, 3, 4. The uses follow.

First, this reproveth the miserable times [Use 1] wherein we live, wherein men seem to be cast into a dead sleep. There is a general lethargy hath possessed us, that nothing can awake us. We have had not only the trumpet of God's word sounding in our ears; but many other judgments: but who stirreth or starteth up at the noise thereof? Who repenteth him of his wickedness, saying, What have I done? everyone turneth to his course, as the horse rusheth into the battle, Ierem. 8, 6: if we tarry till the last trumpet come, woe unto us, for that shall awaken us, and sweep away all the impenitent into hell, and none shall be able to escape.

Our Savior teacheth, that from the days of John the Baptist until now, the kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force, Math. 11, 12, where he showeth that after the Gospel began to be published by the ministry of John, (who was sent to prepare the hearts of the people) they were very greedy and as it were covetous of the truth, and courageously brake into it with all their strength and force that they could make. Thus it was in the days of the Apostles. For as at the preaching of John, the soldiers, the Publican's, and people came unto him, saying, Master, what shall we do? so when they preached repentance in the Name of Jesus, they that heard them were pricked in their hearts, and said unto Peter, and to the rest of the Apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Acts 2, 37.

But is it so in our days? alas we may say, the kingdom of darkness suffereth violence, the kingdom of this world is wholly sought after, and every man presseth into it, Luke 16, 16: but as for the kingdom of God, we are content to let it alone. Some are open enemies to the Gospel and the preaching of it, & serve Satan with all their power. Some are secure, and care for nothing, they let all alone, and sit still, like those that sate idle in the market place, and labored not in the vineyard. Some stop their ears, and harden their hearts, and when the Ministers of God will not apply themselves to their humors, they go back. Some desire to hear sweet and pleasant things, to be flattered in their sins, and to have cushions sowed under their elbows. If a son should no otherwise honor his father then we honor God, doubtless he would disinherite him and cast him off forever. Or if a servant should in such sort serve his Master, would he not put him out of his service, and turn him out of his doors? The devil hath a part of our service, & the world another, and shall we think that God will accept a third? This were to serve him to halves, or not so much. But half a man is no man, and half a Christian is no Christian. Every natural thing groweth till it be perfect, herbs, plants, trees.

Every tradesman and artificer seeketh to increase; only the Christian sitteth still, and doth nothing. God the Father left not off the work of creation, till the whole host of the creatures was ended, Genes. 2, 1. Christ Jesus ceased not the work of redemption, till it was finished, John. 17.4. A builder leaveth not off, when he hath almost built. Paul said, I have finished my course, 2 Tim. 4, 7: not almost finished; there is no comfort in this, no more then to be almost saved, which is not to be saved at all. If we be cold in God's service, we are almost his servants, that is, not at all.

Secondly, God will not be dailed withal in the matter of Religions: either we must serve him wholly, and acknowledge him thoroughly as we should, or not at all. If Baal be God, let us go after him without wavering. So long as we are neither hot nor cold, we worship him in vain, and may be assured that he will spew us out of his mouth.

This is no better then to serve him with the halt, or blind, or lean, or lame, which he abhorreth. The Lord saith by the Prophet, Cursed be the deceiver which hath in his flock a male, and voweth and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing: for I am a great King, saith the Lord of hosts, and my Name is dreadful among the Gentiles, Mal. 1, 14. This is no better then to serve God with the off all of our affections, and to turn unto him half our face, and the other half to our own lusts and pleasures.

This is such an indignity and indecency, that a man of any place or reckoning will not take it at our hands; Offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and sick, is it not evil? offer it now unto thy governor, will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person, saith the Lord of hosts? Malachi 1, 8. Take heed therefore we do not play with God. He that playeth with fire, may be scorched and consumed with the flames of it; but our God is even a consuming fire, Deuteronom. 4, 24, and 9, 3. Hebrews 12, 29. No man dare dally with a Prince, or with his Laws, whose wrath is as the roaring of a Lyon: but there is one Law-giver who is able to save and to destroy, James 4, 12. No man will be bold to jest with edge-tools, we say commonly that it is dangerous; but the Lord is a shield, and the sword of excellency, Deuter. 33, 29: and if his word be compared to a two edged sword going out of his mouth, Revel. 1, 16, nay if it be said to be quick and powerful, and sharper then any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart: much more must we acknowledge the author and giver thereof to be the searcher of the heart, so that there is not any creature that is not manifest in his sight, but all things are naked and open unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do, Hebrews 4, 12, 13. Will any that is brought before a Judge, and standeth in his presence, begin to mock and jest as with a child? But the Lord is the Judge of the whole world, and he will reward every man according to his works, Genes. 18, 25, and 21, 49. Deuteronom. 10, 17, Acts 17, 31. Romans 2, 5, 6, and 3, 6. So then, they are desperately evil, that dally with their own salvation, halting on both sides, swimming between two streams, and losing their first love whereby they glorified God, and adorned the profession of the Gospel.

Lastly, it is required of every good and [Use 3] faithful servant of God to be zealous and amend. This serveth to give a watch word and warning to the greatest number of our professors among us, such as are accounted the most peaceable of the kingdom, honest men, just dealers, and civil livers, who can say with the Pharisee in the Gospel, they are no thieves nor adulterers, nor drunkards, nor extortioners; they hurt no man, they wrong no man, they mean well to all; they follow their business quietly, they live among their neighbors peaceably, they are no medlers nor busy-bodies in other men's matters; these think themselves therefore to be in good case, to be assured of God's love and favor, to need no particular repentance: yet in the mean season they have no zeal nor care of religion in them.

But some will say, Are not the former points that you have named, good things? Do you <2 pages missing> shalt pass, but no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed, Job 38, 11.

[Use 1] This serveth to reprove the cursed sect of the Anabaptists, who bring in a confusion of all things, that set the heavens out of their course, and remove the earth out of his place, and break up the bars of the sea, and turn the order that God hath settled, upside down. For they can abide no private man's possessions, but would have all things common. Thus they think to make themselves like to the Apostles, but indeed they thereby resemble rather some of the Philosophers. If we should see a man come into his neighbors ground, & pull up the hedges, tear up the enclosures, rend up the fences; fill up the ditches, take away the pales, through down the walls, and remove the bounds, we would hold him an enemy to human society, and to the express ordinance of God. For wherefore hath God severed and divided people from people, with bro•d seas, deep rivers, and high mountains, but that they should not pass those bounds, nor invade the possessions of others? And this was the cause why in this place he bounded so exactly the Land of promise, and teacheth thē where it should begin, and where it should end, on the East-side, and on the West, on the North-side, and on the South. And in the book of Joshua, the several bounds & limits of every Tribe is severally and largely expressed and described. Hence it is, that Solomon saith, Prov. 22, 28. Remove not the ancient landmarke which thy fathers have set. This is the law of God and man, a law under the Law and the Gospel, to continue forever. True it is, the Romanists would conclude from hence, [Object.] that their errors, which have gotten foot for a few hundred years, & climbed up into the chair of Moses, ought to prevail and take place. But this is no better then to draw the words frō the literal meaning to an allegory, [Answer.] which by the doctrine of their own schools cannot be sound. Again, howsoever in worldly possessions, prescription of time may carry some credit, and be of some force, Judge. 11, 26, yet in the matters of God, no time (though the hayres be never so gray) can prescribe against the ancient of days. For if it be a prerogative royal in a temporal kingdom, as the lawyers teach, that nullum tempus occurrit regi, that is, no time shall bar the king, nor prejudice him of his right: then much more must we hold, that no time shall bar the King of Kings and the Lord of Lord's of his right, but his law must take place forever against all other laws, customs, immunities, privileges, and prescriptions whatsoever. Lastly, the doctrine of y^e Gospel which we profess, is more ancient then all the devices and inventions of men, which hath been received and believed from the infancy of the Church, and from the beginning of the world, and therefore the late and new start up religion of popery must rise up before the hoary head thereof, as the young man is commanded to honor the face of the old man.

Moreover, [Object.] whereas they allege this and urge it to procure credit and authority unto the works and writings of men, as if the sayings of the Fathers were to stand for a law; it is of no greater weight then the former. And albeit it were sufficient to say, Let God be true, and every man a liar, Rom. 3, 4, yet we answer [Answer.] farther, that the Fathers are for the most part against them, and refuse to be witnesses for them, as might easily appear in the main controversies between them and us. Again, as they dissent from them, so sometimes they dissent from themselves. Lastly, all the Prophets & Apostles as a cloud of witnesses stand on our side, and we teach nothing but what we have received of them, and they are our warrant.

To return then unto the former point, we see the Anabaptists are justly reprov'd, who cannot abide any bounds, or buttelles, or land-marks, neither that any should be master of his own possessions, but would have all go to spoil and havoc. And as God would have just weights and measures observed between man and man, that they might buy & sell one with another: so he would have bounds and marks also unchanged, that equity and uprightness in all our dealings might take place. For this cause Moses saith, Cursed is he that remoueth his neighbors landmarke; and all the people shall say, Amen. Deut, 27, 17, and 19, 14. The very heathen by the light of nature saw that such marks ought to be inviolable which of old time had been set in inheritances: and they all thought that God himself was wronged and injured in such false dealings. And because it should be accounted an holy matter, they made a god of it (according to their common manner) which they called Terminus, and dedicated a feast to him which they called Terminalia. True it is, this was a devilish invention to set up an Idol for the maintenance of equity: yet nature taught & engraued this principle in the heart of man, that if marks and bounds were not kept and maintained, an horrible confusion and disorder of all things would follow in human society, and no man could know what was his own, neither possess that which he hath in peace.

Secondly, this condemneth all encroching [Use 2] & usurpation one upon another, in kingdoms and Lordships, as well as in private possessions, when men cannot be content with their own, but would stretch the wings of their power and jurisdiction farther. Moses saith notably in his song, Deut. 32, verse 8, that the most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. Howbeit the ambition and insatiable greediness of great men hath put all out of order, and nothing is so holy which can stay them creeping and encroching upon the bounds and borders of their neighbors. Thus they break the law of God and nature in seeking to enlarge and increase their own dominions. These justly incur the curse of the Prophet, Woe unto them that join house to house, and lay field to field, till there be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth, Isaiah 5, 8. Hab. 2, 9, 12. Ier. 22.13. Mich. 2, 2. For wherefore hath God separated nation from nation, and one kingdom from another people, but that all should live quietly, & communicate one with another, & that there might be no confusion or division? and therefore ought all to be contented with their own bounds. God hath made them great, but they always seek to make themselves greater: he hath set them bounds, but they will know no bounds. So then from hence we may gather that the wars which are taken in hand upon ambition and the enlarging of the bounds of their Empire only, are a despighting of God, a shedding of innocent blood, and a perverting of the order which he hath set in nature and nations. Every man therefore ought to abide in his own possession and inheritance, & not to trouble or molest one another. The ambition of Nimrod first began with setting up the kingdom of Babylon, and afterward many following his example, became desirous to win one from another. So it was with Chedarlaomor, who spread out his arms, and subdued the kings of Sodom & Gomorrhah, Gen. 14, 4. Thus men perverted the order that God had set in the world, like insatiable gulfs, and mighty hunters before the Lord, that hunted for the precious lives of men. And the cause of all is pride and ambition. We all know how in the beginning the earth was covered with water, and naturally the sea would stand above the mountains, so that all would be overflown: It is the special goodness of God, and a testimony of his almighty power, that the dry Land appeareth whereon we set footing, and build, and plant, and dwell, & commerce one with another. Seeing then, we live here, and that the earth doth succor and sustain us, let us assure our selves that GOD showeth his pity toward us, let us serve him with a perfect heart, and with a willing mind, and let all men content themselves with that which they have, without intermeddling within the bounds of other men: and as he hath restrained us by sundry closures, & as it were locked us up with bars not to be broken, so let us not seek to break them and so encroach upon that which he hath not given unto us.

[Use 3] Thirdly, this reproveth the greedy and covetous affections of private men, that covet to be rich, they care not by what means. But as soon as the desire of getting gain is settled in them, they are enflamed to rake to themselves by hook or by crook. All men do shun and abhor the names of thieves and robbers, they cannot abide them, they are ready to sue them that brand them with such odious titles; but if we detest them indeed, we must lay aside covetousness also. Hence it is, that Solomon saith, Prov. 15, 27. He that is greedy of gain, troubleth his own house, but he that hateth gifts shall live. Covetousness is a corrupt affection of the mind, greedily desiring and too much gaping after the riches of this life. They dream of long life, forgetting that no man's life consisteth in the abundance of his riches, Luke 12, 15. They think they shall exceedingly profit them, but by the just judgment of GOD they turn to their hurt. They think they will be as a shield or buckler to defend them from the injuries of this life, but they are turned into swords whereby they are wounded and destroyed. They have conceived a strong opinion that they will be as a wall on every side to vnderprop the house, but they prove as a double cannon to cast it down to the ground. As then he that eateth moderately, is nourished by the meat, and it abideth in the stomach, but when it is taken immoderately, the stomach is choked, and it is vomited up again: so he that greedily heapeth up riches, shall be constrained to vomit them up again, Job 20, 15. Covetousness therefore is a sin, when a man is discontented with the estate wherein God hath set him, and with those things that God hath given for the sustenance of this present life; when he murmureth against God, & the more he hath, the more he desireth; when he heapeth them up, and keepeth them, and bringeth them not forth to any godly or necessary uses; but he distrusteth the providence of God, and putteth his trust and confidence in his riches, as if he could not live without abundance of them, neither be sustained by the hand of God. The Scripture offereth sundry good meditations to move us to avoid covetousness. First, because it is forbidden of God, Matth. 6, 19. Luke 19, 13. Hebr. 13, 5. His word alone ought to be of great force to persuade us, if we had no farther reason. Secondly, because it is no less sin then a secret kind of idolatry, Col. 3, 5, as the covetous person is an Idolater, because he trusteth in his riches, not in the living God, Eph. 5, 5. Mark 10, 24. Thirdly, it cannot agree with the worship of God, but one of them expelleth another; as it is with contraries, with cold and heat, with light and darkness, Psal. 119, 36. Matth. 6, 24. Luke 16, 13. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon. Fourthly, it is said to be the root of all evil, and that because it driveth and enforceth to many sins, to apostasy, to iniquity, to lying, to treachery, 1 Tim. 6, 10. 2 Kings 5, 22. Mat. 28, 13, 14, 15. Fifthly, no man's life consisteth in the multitude of his possessions, Lu.

12, 15. Sixthly, we are called to a better life, and we have a kingdom promised unto us that cannot be shaken, reserved for us in heaven, and therefore we should set our affections above where Christ sitteth at the right hand of his Father, Col. 3, 1, 2. Luke 12, 32. Seventhly, it is an insatiable evil, as a gulf that swalloweth whatsoever is cast into it, and as the poor, ill-favored, and lean fleshed kine that Pharaoh saw in his dream, which did eat up seven well-favored and fat kine, And when they had eaten them up, it could not be known that they had eaten them, but they were still ill-favored as at the beginning, Gen. 41, 21. Hence it is, that Solomon saith, He that loveth money shall not be satisfied with it, Eccl. 5, ver. 10. Eighthly, it maketh such as are infected with it, companions with Achan, with Gehazi, with Judas Iscariot: nay the most covetous persons are worse then that traitor, and farther from the kingdom of heaven, because he was touched with some remorse, & restored the thirty pieces of silver, whereas they keep by them that which they have wrongfully taken from others, and yet have no sense or feeling either of the sin present or the punishment to come; whereas without restitution & confession they cannot be saved.

[Use 4] Lastly, from hence we ought all to learn contentation with our several estates, wherein God hath set us, which should be as bounds to hedge us in, as if it were said unto us, Behold, God will have us to rest and stay upon that which he hath given us, and to content our selves therewith; otherwise we trouble the whole order of the world, and defy the Lord himself to his face, as if we meant to proclaim open war against him. This obedience S. Paul had learned, when he profeseth that he knew to be rich and to be poor, to be hungry and thirsty, and likewise to have abundance, Phil. 4, 12. He had learned to be patient in poverty, and to be content with his estate. Both these are two notable virtues, and special graces of God's Spirit. This is it, to learn to be rich and to abound, when we do not desire to gather yet more and more, neither are proud to trust in our riches, neither take occasion by them to oppress the weaker sort that have no friends in the world to maintain and defend them, and finally, when we so use the world as if we used it not, & be ready to become poor for Christ's sake, and to leave all whensoever it shall please God to lay that cross upon us. This is a great blessing, when such as are rich in wealth, can be poor in heart, and indeed greater then the former, and more needful to be urged then the former. Many will be ready to laugh at this speech, to know how to be rich. But if we consider how insatiable for the most part such are, and how their ears and harts also are stopped with earth and clay, we shall find that it is not without great reason that Christ our Savior telleth us, that It is an hard thing for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven, Mat. 19. For they are for the most part more discontented then poor men, and so far in love with their own shadow, (for what is riches but a shadow?) that they cannot be satisfied. And if they had the whole earth in possession, they would think that too little, and begin to dream of two earths. Wherefore let us labor after the grace of Contentation, which is a virtue whereby we are content with our present estate, and such blessings as we have lawfully gotten, and rest in them with a quiet heart, and be ready to bear the burden of poverty patiently.

The holy Scripture setteth before us as in a glass, sundry motives to move us to seek after, and to practice this gift. First, because it is commanded of God to everyone, to be content with his estate, Heb. 13, 5. Secondly, such as are endued with it, need not fear want or poverty, or to be forsaken in their poverty, for God hath promised to be their deliverer, and hath said, He will never forsake them, Heb. 13, 5. Thirdly, such as are endued with it, shall not be destitute of godliness, which is great gain, to supply all things, 1 Tim. 6, 6. Fourthly, it is a testimony of true faith resting in the will and pleasure of God, Matth. 19, 21: for it witnesseth for them that they have their treasure in heaven. Fifthly, it maketh this life sweet and comfortable, Prov. 13, 15. and without it there is nothing but trouble and vexation of spirit. Lastly, a little with the fear of God, is better then great heaps of riches & treasures, Prov. 15, 16, 17. & 16, 8.

13 And Moses commanded the children of Israel, saying, This is the Land which ye shall inherit by lot, which the Lord commanded to give unto the nine Tribes, and to the half Tribe.

14 For the Tribe of the children of Reuben, according to the house of their fathers, and the Tribe of the children of Gad according unto the house of their fathers, have received inheritance, and half the Tribe of Manasseh have received their inheritance.

15 The two Tribes and the half Tribe have received their inheritance on this side Jordan nere Jericho, Eastward, toward the Sun rising.

In the former words we heard the Commandment of God to Moses, touching the bounds and division of the Land: here we see the execution of it, commending his obedience, wherein he encourageth the Israelites to prepare themselves to enter into the Land. We have all need to be comforted and encouraged to good duties, in regard of our present dullness.

Again, we see that the consideration of the nearness of God's mercies, should embolden and encourage everyone to be constant and courageous, that we faint not in the last act. This made Moses say, This is the Land which ye shall inherit: he doth as it were point it out with the finger, and biddeth them lift up their eyes, and behold the goodness which God had promised to their fathers. For as the consideration of judgment at hand & lying at the doors ought to move terror and astonishment, so when we behold the mercies of God before our eyes, which are not prolonged for many years, it ought to enflame us with an holy zeal and desire to see the accomplishment of the same: as Christ teacheth his Disciples touching the last day & the coming of the Son of man, Luke 21, 28; When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, & lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh. But to pass these over, let us stay our selves a while in the consideratiō of the estate of the Church of Israel as now it stood. Some were at rest, other were to pass farther. Some had their inheritance, and some had none. Some had Towns and Cities to dwell in, and some were yet left to the wide world, and were to wander farther. Some had much, and others little or nothing at all. Some wanted, and some wanted nothing. This teacheth us what is the estate of the people of GOD, some among God's own servants do always want and stand in need, Deut. 15, 7, 11. Matth. 26, 11. and 11, 5. Acts 2, 45. and 4, 34. and 6, 1. 1 Cor. 4, 11. 2 Cor. 8, 1. and 9, 1, 2. and 11, 27. Acts 3, 6.

[Reason 1] The grounds are apparent, that they should learn always to depend upon GOD and to call upon him, and not to put confidence in the flesh. This the Apostle expresseth touching his troubles and the rest of the Apostles, 2. Cor. 1, 8, 9. We were pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that we despayred even of life, yea we had the sentence of death in our selves, That we should not trust in our selves, but in God which raiseth the dead. If the faithful did never stand in need of God's help, they would forget God, and themselves, and the next life. If the child did never want anything, he would not know his father from another, but would quickly forget him: and so likewise it would be with us toward almighty God.

[Reason 2] Secondly, God will never have those that have plenty & abundance to be without objects upon whom to show mercy, that his gifts may be tried which he hath given them. For why doth God suffer the poor to be in the Church, but only to offer occasion to us to do good? as Mark 14, 7. Ye have the poor always with you, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good, but me ye have not always. We never want persons, upon whom to exercise our pity and compassion whensoever we will. Therefore when we see one man poor, and another rich, let us not ascribe this to fortune, but consider the providence of God therein, which disposeth all things in that manner. God maketh trial what is in us, and would have the poor to be his collectors or receyuers, to take away all excuse from us, that we should not say, We knew not to whom to do good; and therefore the Lord saith, The poor shall never cease out of the Land, Deuteronomy 15, verse 11.

Thirdly, as he will have the gifts of such [Reason 3] as have received what to give, to be tried, so he will have their patience proved that be in need; which could not be, if they did not suffer. For where there is no pain, there can be no patience, and therefore the Apostle teacheth, that Tribulation bringeth forth patience, Romans 5, verse 3. And this serveth much for the glory of God, and the good of them that are in necessity.

Fourthly, that we should not settle and [Reason 4] nestle our selves here, nor make the earth to be our heaven, nor our treasure to be our god; but that we should seek for another life, where shall be no want, no misery, no necessity, but God shall be all in all.

This meeteth fitly and fully with the church [Use 1] of Rome, that make temporal felicity a note of the Church, to live in pomp and glory of the world. This we see handled at large by Cardinal Bellarmino among the notes of the church; but it is so far from being a note of the Church, that it is rather a note of the Church of Antichrist. And the Spirit of God foretelleth in the book of the Revelation, that this should be the voice of spiritual Babylon, chap. 18, 7, 8. She saith in her heart, I sit a Queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Loe how we are warned before hand, in what sort the Roman Church shall advance it self in regard of temporal happiness and of good success. But when that shall come to pass which the Scripture prophesieth in the same place, that how much she hath glorified her self, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow she shall suffer, so that her plagues shall come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and when the kings of the earth (who have lived deliciously with her) shall hate and detest the whore, and make her desolate, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire: and when the people of God (that are called to come out of her) shall reward her even as she rewarded them, and double unto her double according to her works, and in the cup which she hath filled, shall fill to her double: what shall become of this temporal felicity, whereof they glory so much? & where shall this note be found among them, which now they cry out to be wanting among us? Doubtless then, they will tell us of new notes, and disclaim the old which they now maintain at this present for their own advantage. For what hath the state of the Church been upon the earth from the beginning? The posterity of Cain lived in greatest felicity, Gen. 6, 1, increasing in strength, in glory, in might, and in multitudes, while Abel was killed by his brother, and Adam lived childless. And after the flood, God suffered his people, the posterity of Abraham to sojourn as strangers in a strange Land, and to be evilly entreated four hundred years, Gen. chap. 15, ver. 13, while the Canaanites lived in peace and pomp: and yet the Church was among that poor distressed company, and not among the Canaanites. Therefore the Lord saith by his Prophet, I have forsaken mine house, I have left mine heritage: I have given the dearly beloved of my soul into the hand of her enemies, Ier. 12, 7. The kingdom of Christ is not of this world, neither doth he promise to the children of the kingdom the pleasures & delights of this world. The Saints of God find not the best entertainment upon the earth, and therefore Christ saith, John 16, 20. Verily I say unto you, that ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice: and ye shall be sorrowful; but your sorrow shall be turned into joy. And afterward, verse 33. In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world. All the felicity and happiness of God's servants, is a promised and a reserved happiness, we hear of nothing here but crosses & afflictions. Hence it is, that Espenceus one of the popish Writers affirmeth, that Crux est ecclesiae nota, that is, The Cross (and therefore not temporal felicity) is a note of the Church. And again he telleth us, that Christ foretold of labor and sorrow (as he said to his Disciples, They shall scourge you in their Synagogues;) but the false christs prophesied of prosperity. If such be false christs, then by the verdict and sentence of this man, Bellarmino must needs be a false prophet, for he dreameth of nothing but of felicity & prosperity. True it is, the Church sometimes hath rest from enemies, and enjoyeth external peace, but besides, that this lasteth not long, they that are out of the Church have for the most part a greater portion of this blessing. And all these outward things, riches & poverty, peace and trouble, prosperity and adversity, fall out alike to the godly and the ungodly, and therefore Augustine saith well, in Epist. 120. that Almighty God of his bountiful providence hath granted earthly felicity even to the wicked, that good men should not so greatly desire after it.

[Use 2] Secondly, this reproveth the foolish and superfluous pomp used in Popery and blind times of superstition, as if God took pleasure in paintings, in Images, in Candles, and cost bestowed upon their own traditions: when in the mean season the poor are for the most part neglected and forgotten. True it is, the Lord could have made all rich, if it had pleased him, but he sendeth the poor to us, to give us occasion to exercise charity on them, who are made after his own Image. The popish sort account no worship like to this, to adorn and beautify the Church walls, to gild and garnish Images, senseless things, and dead stones, and pass by the living stones of the Temple, that are polished by the hammer of God's word. Neither doth this establish the art of begging, because we teach, that there shall always be poor among the people of God: For poverty is one thing, and beggary is another: all poor are not beggars, and all beggars are not always poor. It is a great shame and reproach for a people that profess piety and Christianity, to suffer any beggars to swarm among them, which is the overthrow of order and honesty. For first, this argueth great want of charity, and much hardness of heart, that the rich devour all alone, and have no regard of succouring such as be in need and necessity, and are sore pinched with poverty and penury.

Secondly, when the bridle is once let loose in this kind, it groweth to be a common occupation: and when such go up and down from place to place, and from house to house, it cannot be rightly discerned who are poor indeed, neither can we say, who have need, & who have not need, neither discern the idle from the impotent; wherein they most commonly speed best, not who have most need, but such as are most impudent, clamorous, & importunate.

Thirdly, the rewarding of such as go about begging from door to door, and walk or rather wander from country to country, is no better then a maintaining of idle persons contrary to the law of God and man, and a filling of the Land full of ydlenesse: now such as are nuzled in roguing, in the end grow to be cunning in robbing: for from a rogue to turn to a thief is an easy passage.

Fourthly, such as are inured to this practice and find sweetness in it, and themselves encouraged by ease, can never inure themselves to endure hard labor or to take pains in any calling afterward, but live by the sweat of other men's brows all their days.

Lastly, such persons are dangerous to a state, no better then vermin or caterpillars that devour the fruits of the earh, & rob from thē that are poor indeed; such as live as no parts of anybody, no members of the Church, or of the commonwealth, or of any private family, but are as members cut off from the body. So then there ought to be no beggars in Israel, which bring nothing but confusion, & are the nursery of all evil, and overthrow the law of God and man, of nature and charity. Howbeit these locusts live so well with the scrip, y^t they would be loath to exchange their trade for a yearly rent, or a daily pension, provided that withal they should be compelled to labor with their hands. This also serveth to meet with y^e begging Friars, & such as vow voluntary poverty as cousingermans to rogues & beggars that wander up and dow• under color of relief, and yet boast of this occupation, as of a state of perfection. But of these vows, we have spoken sufficiently before.

Lastly, this teacheth those that have the [Use 3] goods of this world, to show pity and compassion on them that stand in need. The two Tribes and the half are commanded to go up armed before their brethren, and never to forsake them and give them over, until they had seen their hearts desire upon their enemies, and placed their brethren in saftety, and had given to them a peaceable possession of their portion of that promised land. And albeit we should give at all times, yet then especially ought our compassion to be exercised and extended, when the poor stand most in need of our help, as in time of dearth and famine. Then the common cause and cry of the poor should cause us to cut our morsels thinner, & the shorter, and to abridge our selves of all superfluity and excess, rather then to see them to miscarry, and to perish for hunger. And if over we mind to serve God, and to do him homage with our goods, we should be forward and faithful to do it at such times. The first Christians carried such zeal toward God, and love toward the poor Saints, that They sold their possessions and goods, and laid down the money at the Apostles feet, that it might be distributed as every man had need. And as the poor must especially be provided for in times of want, so among the poor, y^e poor Saints ought chiefly to be regarded, as the Apostle showeth, Let us do good unto all men, especially to them who are of the household of faith, Gal. 6, 10. Thus ought we in doing good to respect the times & persons, & in both whatsoever we do, it must proceed from a willing mind and a cheerful heart, 2 Cor. 9, verse 7. otherwise it is a sacrifice not pleasing in the sight of God.

Now the Scripture affordeth unto us sundry motives, as so many encouragements unto liberality. First, because it is a service and sacrifice commanded of God, that while we have opportunity, we should do good to all, Gal. 6, 10. 1 Thess. 5, 15. Secondly, it is a grace of God bestowed upon the Churches. 2 Cor. 8, 1. Thirdly, it is fruitful and bringeth forth much increase. Gal. 6, 7, 8. 2 Cor. 8, verse 12: yea though it be cast upon the waters, Eccle. 11, 1. Fourthly, it is a certain argument of sincere love, 2 Cor. 8, 8, 24: as for that bounty and liberality which standeth in words only, it showeth the heart of that man to be destitute both of faith and love. Fifthly, the Spirit of God taketh notice of all charitable works, & commendeth rhem in the godly, whose example we ought to follow, as in the Macedonians, 2 Cor. 8. Sixthly, whatsoever is bestowed in the name of God, is lent to him, and he will repay us: Nay, the Lord Jesus accepteth it, and accounteth it as done unto himself, as we shown at large before in this book.

16 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying:

17 These are the names of the men which shall divide the land unto you: Eleazar the Priest, and Joshua the son of Nun.

18 And ye shall take one prince of every tribe, to divide the land by inheritance.

19 And the names of the men are these: Of the Tribe of Judah, Caleb the son of Iephunneh.

21 Of Benjamin, Elidad, &c.

22 Of Dan, Bukki, &c.

23 For the tribe of Manasseh, Hananiel, &c.

24 Of Ephraim, Kemuel, &c.

25 Of Zebulun, Elizaphan, &c.

26 Of Issachar, Paltiel, &c.

27 Of Ashur, Ahihud, &c.

28 Of Naphtali, Pedahel, &c.

29 These are they whom the Lord commanded to divide the inheritance unto the children of Israel in the land of Canaan.

This is the second part of the chapt. where the persons are appointed and named which ought to divide the land: these are of 2. sorts, the chief and principal were the priest of the Church, and the Captain of the host; the rest were ten Princes chosen out of the ten tribes, so that two tribes are left out, to wit, Reuben and Gad, because they had their inheritance befallen them already, at their own request, on this side Jordan. All these Princes are particularly expressed by their names, and by the names of their fathers, and all are joined in equal commission together, y^t nothing should be done with partiality, to whose arbitrement and determination all were bound to stand. From hence three questions may be raised. First, [Objection.] what need there was of any Princes to divide the land, and give the Tribes their possessions, seeing this was to be done by lot? I answer, [Answ.] the one of these doth not take away the other, there was use of them both. For, seeing the lot could not be used, except the land were divided into ten parts or Provinces, therefore it pleased God to use the help and ministry of men, to divide it into ten parts; after which division made, the lots wer cast, by judgment whereof every Tribe had his portion of the land. Thus we see, how both of them were very necessary, and that the one did not overthrow or disannul the other. Again, [Object.] why doth God join ten other Princes to Eleazar the Priest, and to Joshua the son of Nun, were not these two sufficient? [Answer.] I answer that which belongeth to all, ought to be done of all; and thereby God taketh away that envy which might he cast upon them, when the matter was indifferently decided by a several Prince, selected out of every several Tribe. Thus the mouths of all were stopped, and everyone persuaded to rest without complaint or contradiction, in the deciding which they should make.

Thirdly, the question may be asked, [Object.] Why the Priest was employed in this division? For, some haply will marvel, that matter of temporal inheritance (in which himself and the rest of that tribe had no other portion but the Lord) should be committed to him that had the charge of the Tabernacle, and this may seem altogether impertinent to his function. I answer, [Answ.] this was done for sundry weighty considerations. For this was not without a mystery. And as every ceremony had his signification, so herein the Priest was a figure of Christ, to whom the spiritual inheritance belongeth, who is ascended to prepare a place for those y^t are his in heaven. Secondly, this was done in regard of the Priests & Levites, for albeit they had no inheritance in the land, yet some part and parcel fell unto their share out of every Tribe, as we shall see in the following chapter. Thirdly, if any controversy should arise in this great and weighty business of making a stable and unchangeable division that might remain among their posterity forever, they might have the Priest at hand for direction, and to ask counsel for them at the mouth of God. Lastly, that this whole action might be sanctified to them & their children, it was to be begun with prayer, and to be finished with thanksgiving (for which the Priest was the fittest) according to the saying of the Apostle, Coloss. 3. verse 17. Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him.

This division offereth diverse instructions. In that Eleazar & Joshua the chief of the rest, appointed to set out the land are named before other, it teacheth, that superiors (whose head God hath lifted up above their brethren) ought to give good example to others. Again, we see that God maketh choice of men to be his instruments, so that not only those things are to be holden divine, and of divine authority, which are done immediately by God himself, but such also as are done by men, assigned to their office by him. Thus God hath called men, and not Angels, to preach the Gospel, whereby he regenerateth us, and maketh us heirs of his kingdom, if we receive the same by faith. We are therefore to submit our selves unto it, and to be content to be informed and reformed by it no otherwise, then if an Angel from heaven, nay no less then if God himself should speak unto us, Luke 10, 16. 1 Thess. 2, 13. Acts 10, 33. This is the way to hear aright. Furthermore, observe the faith of this people. They were not yet come into the land, they had not passed over Jordan, nor obtained one foot there; the Canaanites yet dwelled in their Cities, and armed themselves to resist them, they had strong Cities walled up to heaven, and mighty men of strength and stature to oppose against them, they had a generation of Giants & mighty men, that were as so many Goliath's to bid defiance to Israel: yet we see they are occupied in dividing the land, and have Princes appointed to determine the same, and all of them are no less busy in the work, then if the land were already conquered & subdued unto them: which showeth to us the nature of faith, according to the description of the Apostle, Heb. 11.1. Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen: for by it the elders obtained a good report. This we saw before in the daughters of Zelophehad, how zealous they were in the cause of their father, to have a part of the inheritance particularly to themselves. True it is, this is touching a temporal promise, or a promise of a temporal blessing, howbeit it had reference typically to the eternal inheritance in the heavenly Canaan. So then this teacheth us, that true faith apprehendeth, appropriateth, and applieth God's promises as if they were present. True faith is of an applying nature. It doth not only assent unto the promises of God, but maketh application of them to our selves, and both are necessary to salvation, Ier. 31, 33 Isaiah 25, 9. Cant. 2, 16, and 6, 3. John 1, 12. and 6, 51, 35, and 3, 14, 15. None had comfort by the brazen serpent that was lift up on the pole, but such as were able in particular to look upon it, and assented and believed the promise that they should be cured and restored by it. Christ calleth himself, The living bread, of which we must eat: but what is eating save an application? because whatsoever a man eateth or drinketh that he applieth unto himself, and receiveth it to be his: so touching faith, whatsoever a man doth believe, the same he doth apply unto himself, or else it can be no truth faith, but a counterfeit faith.

Mark the grounds of this point. First, true [Reason 1] Faith standeth of two parts, whereof one is an act of the understanding, the other is an act of the will, according to the saying of the Apostle, Roman. chap. 10. verse 10, With the heart man believeth unto righteousness. The mind informeth us to see and know God and his son Christ, and the promises made in him: the heart seeketh, desireth, and loveth that which it knoweth, which cannot be without a particular application.

Secondly, every man is commanded to believe, Mark chap. 1. verse 15. 1 John chap 5. verse 15. Now it is not enough that we believe, except we also make application, or else we believe no otherwise then the devils believe, for even they believe God & Christ, James chap. 2, verse 19. But to make particular application of Christ, as to say, Christ is mine, and I am his, and have remission of sins by his death, is more then any or all the devils in hell can do.

The Angel that was sent to be the first preacher of the Gospel, said to the shepherds, Luke 2. Behold, I bring you tidings of great joy which shall be to all people, for unto you is born this day a Savior: that is, to you that believe, for except they had believed it, and applied it to themselves, they could never have conceived any joy at all, nor received any benefit at all by it.

Thirdly, the promises of GOD, howsoever they are delivered in general terms, yet they are particular also, and everyone is bound to gather a patticular to himself out of the general. As in a Proclamation, albeit it be conceived and published in general words, yet the matter is that which belongeth to everyone in particular, and must be so applied, as if his own name were set down in it. The Gospel is as a Princes proclamation, offering pardon and forgiveness: and though the promises of God be general, yet they do contain a particular, because that which is spoken to all believers, is spoken unto everyone that is a believer, and that which is spoken to all penitent persons, must be applied to every several penitent soul.

Fourthly, God hath ordained the Sacraments in the Church to be the seals of the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4, 11: and y^t they should be delivered particularly to every man, thereby to assure him of grace and mercy in particular. When men once come to know, that Christ offereth remission of sins by his death, by the receiving of the Sacraments particularly we come to apply Christ and his merits to our selves: so that the delivering of them unto us is thus much in effect, Thou believest these general things, then draw near and take this unto thy farther comfort, that thou mayest be assured, that the promises of righteousness do belong unto thee, as if indeed thy name were particularly specified therein. All these things being considered, it followeth necessarily, that the general knowledge is not sufficient, but a particular application is necessary to salvation.

[Use 1] This serveth for confutation of an error of the church of Rome, denying that a man may particularly believe, that God is his God, or that Christ is his Savior, or that remission of sins belongeth unto him: and why so? Forsooth, because in the Gospel all runneth in general, and it is not there written, that such and such are God's, and shall have benefit by Christ. But where there is a general, as for example, Whosoever believeth and repenteth shall be saved, there is the particular also, If thou believe thou shalt be saved: and the faithful by virtue of this do believe, and are saved by this their application. The Apostles said to the Gaoler, Acts 16, 31: Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, & thou shalt be saved, and thy house: If the Keeper of the prison had replied, Sirs, how do you know that I shall be saved by Christ? Is my name written in the book of God, that I may be assured it is written in the book of life? Would not they have told him, that his particular name was included in the general, albeit it were not expressed? The Papists do presume to give absolution upon confession, and yet they do not find any man in the Gospel particularly named. When Christ our Savior saith, Whose sins soever ye remit, they are remitted, John 20, 23: they are not afraid upon this general to give absolution to particular persons, and to tell them that their sins are forgiven. And will not these men be so favorable to us, as to suffer us from a general to infer and gather a particular, as well as themselves? to wit, that when Christ saith, Whosoever believeth in me shall not perish, but have everlasting life: the Minister may speak to the conscience of this or that man particularly, Believe thou in the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt have eternal life?

But Bellarmino goeth farther, and objecteth, [Objection.] That this is not a simple promise, but conditional, if they repent and believe, then they may indeed apply these things to themselves and be assured of them: but a man cannot have any certainty of these things, that they do believe and repent, and therefore they cannot in particular apply them to themselves. [Answ.] I answer, this is to build one error upon another, and to daub them both with untempered mortar. For wherefore doth the Apostle command every man to try and examine him self whether he be in the faith, and have Christ Jesus dwelling in him, 2. Cor: 13: if after this proof he cannot know what his estate and condition is? This is a certain rule, whosoever truly believeth, knoweth that he believeth, though no man knoweth it but himself. He that is the Lord's, hath a new name written, which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it. But he which hath received it, knoweth it as well as he knoweth he liveth. For no man doth know the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him: even so the things of God knoweth no man save the Spirit of God, 1 Cor. 2, 11. So then every man both may and ought to have assurance of his own salvation; and therefore this we believe, let them teach and write what they will. For, what if a frantic man should run up and down, & boast that all the wares which come to such a Port or haven are his, shall the Merchant be discouraged to think they are none of his? Or, if a false fellow come forth and lay claim to our inheritance, will that bar the true owner of his right? or make him to let go his hold? What if a mad man out of his wits should say, that the Crown and Kingdom is his, would we therefore think it is so indeed? Or if some should show false and counterfeit pearls, will the Goldsmith be discouraged, and think that his also are naught, and of the same stamp? In like sort we may reason, What though some do not believe, or will not apply Christ unto themselves? What if Satan have deluded them with the spirit of error, and blinded them with the mists of ignorance, shall we therefore suffer our selves to be beguiled, and to be brought to think that we have no true knowledge or faith? or that we ought not to apply Christ Jesus in particular to our selves? To conclude, we may be bold to avouch, that the devils have as much faith as the papists teach and believe. For the devil can say, and that truly, I do believe: I believe that remission of sins is sealed up by Christ for salvation: so that he may believe as much as any Papist in the world, holding the principles of their own doctrine, forasmuch as the Romish faith is no other then historical, to believe y^e Scriptures and all things written in them to be true, but they never come to the principal & main matter, wherein the comfort of a Christian lieth, to make particular application of anything to themselves.

[Use 2] Secondly, it admonisheth every man to examine himself, and to try whether his faith be true, or not: this is the counsel and commandment of the Apostle, 2 Cor. 13, 5. as we heard before: and how shall we better do it, thē by making particular application of those things which ought to be believed? to believe that God is our God, that the Lord Jesus is our Savior, that we are righteous by his obedience, that we have the pardon of our sins, that we have received the grace of sanctification, and that we shall be partakers of eternal life. For as faith is the life of the soul, so this application is the life of faith. If we find this in us, then certainly we have a true, a lively, a justifying faith; otherwise we deceive our selves with a shadow and opinion of faith, when in truth we are utterly destitute of it. And if men were brought to their trial herein, it is greatly to be suspected and feared, that not only they in the Church of Rome, but many that live in the Church of God it self, will be found to want the true faith, and to please themselves with a naked show of it. For some have not a general knowledge, and therefore cannot have so much as a general faith. Many, albeit they have a general knowledge, yet they will not, nay they cannot in special apply Christ and his benefits unto themselves, because such is their simplicity or sottishness, that they condemn this doctrine of applying Christ to themselves, & say it is to some a doctrine of presumption, & to others the pathway leading to desperation. These are afraid to go so far, and dare not meddle with it. They will hope well, as the Papists do, and think well, but they cannot abide to hear of any particular application. These are as men that are afraid of their good friends, whose case must needs be lamentable, and they stand in a dangerous, nay I may say in a damnable condition: because without this application there can be no true faith, and without true faith no salvation. We have experience of some in our days, who out of a melancholy humor, persuade themselves that they may not eat, because they are unworthy to touch their meat, and by this means are the cause of their own death: and yet they think they may see it, and talk of it, but by no means may touch it. This is the faith of many Christians among us, they think they may hear of the things that belong to salvation, and reason of them, but by no means they may apply them; these men's case is very dangerous, for they must needs perish eternally. For as life is maintained, not by looking upon our meat, or by speaking of it, or by hearing of it, but by taking and applying of it: so the soul is sustained and life preserved in it, not by hearing of the promises of the Gospel, nor by assenting unto them, but by applying of them unto our selves. When the Israelites were stung in the wilderness with the fiery serpents and scorpions, Deut. 8, 15, insomuch that many died, if any should have said, I am not worthy to look up to the brazen serpent, and to fasten mine eyes upon it I know indeed that God hath appointed it as the only means and remedy to recover them that are stung, but I dare not presume to behold it, because of mine unworthiness: would we not think that it were just that this man should perish? So is it in this case, many men know that God hath sent his Son into the world, and that he died for the sins of the world, yet many are so desperate, that they talk and dispute of nothing but of their own unworthiness, and say they would apply Christ, but they dare not, they are such grievous sinners. Howbeit he that was worthy to take the book out of the right hand of the Father, and to open it, Revel. 5, 2, 5, 11, 12, hath also made his children partakers of his worthiness, Revel. 3, 4. They shall walk with me in white, for they are worthy. His merits are become our merits, and his righteousness is made ours, 2 Cor. 5, 21. Wherefore, whosoever they are, that either through the corruption of their own hearts, or through the temptation of Satan do not truly apply Christ unto themselves, and his death to their salvation, but make it a matter of presumption, their condition is miserable, and they are yet in the way to destruction, and may justly fear that the wrath and judgments of God will overtake them.

Lastly, this point is very sweet and comfortable [Use 3] to everyone that is able (though with much weakness and many infirmities) in particular to apply the general promises of God and the Gospel to himself because such shall be sure to find God gracious unto them; and if they be stung by the old serpent, they shall be healed, because they can look up to to y^e 2. ferpent that God hath set up, and appointed to be the healer and helper of them. If they be hungry, they shall be sure to be satisfied, Christ is the true bread that came down from Heaven, John 6, they eat him by faith, and so apply in particular the general promises to themselves. This is it indeed that ought to encourage every man to labor for this particular application, & not like hypocrites to content themselves with general things, as if they were afraid that Christ should come within their doors. They are in effect like the Gadarenes, that bid him depart out of their quarters. The particular faith is the only comfortable faith, and by this the just man liveth. The Ciuilians have a rule, that mine is better then ours, and in temporal things all men like of it. So we may say in the matters of faith, touching particular application, it is better for a man to say, Christ is mine, then Christ is ours. Nevertheless, we must understand and observe thus much, that men must not be discouraged to think they do not believe, when indeed they do believe. For the best of God's children do believe with much weakness, and encounter with many oppositions, with which they wrestle and buckle hand to hand. Sometimes the effects of God's grace are not so lively in them as formerly they have been: sometimes the heart of man being full of corruption will cast many doubts concerning his faith, which is as much as if it should cast mire and dirt in the face of it. The life of a Christian is like y^e days of the year, sometimes the days are very fair, sometimes again they are cloudy and full of showers: so a man that doeth believe shall find much peace, and have a long time of rest and refreshing together: sometimes again he shall be full of many doubts, and of much staggering, as when the Sun withdraweth it self within the clouds. Every true faithful soul knoweth this by continual experience. And he that findeth these things, let him not be discouraged, but rather be assured that these are signs of true faith, & that God dealeth thus with his own for these ends, to make them more certain of their faith, to teach thē to lay better hold of the promises of God, and to have more joy in them; and howsoever they may lose the sight of these things for a time, yet their faith in the end shall have victory, and they shall be able to pierce and pass through these clouds, and have a certain application, by which they shall be sure to want no good thing.

CHAP. XXXV.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, in the plains of Moab by Jordan, near Jericho, saying:

2 Command the children of Israel, that they give unto the Levites of the inheritance of their possession, Cities to dwell in: and ye shall give also unto the Levites suburbs for the, &c.

3 And the Cities shall they have to dwell in, and the suburbes of them shall be for their Cattle, and for their goods, &c.

4 And the suburbes of the Cities which ye shall give unto the Levites, shall reach from the wall of the City and outward, a thousand cubits round about.

5 And ye shall measure from without the City on the East side, two thousand cubits, and on the Southside two thousand, &c.

6 And among the Cities which ye shall give unto the Levites, there shall be six Cities for refuge which ye shall give to the manslayer, &c.

7 So all the Cities which ye shall give to the Levites shall be 48. Cities.

8 And the Cities which ye shall, &c.

IN the former chapter we spake of the inheritance in general. Now we come to the particular, and first touching the Priest, which is an exception from the former. Of this chapter there are two principal parts: first, a commandment to assign certain Cities for the use and dwelling of the Priests and Levites, who otherwise had no portion allotted, chap. 29. Secondly, Laws prescribed touching manslaughter. Touching the first, we see that albeit in the former distribution of the inheritance there be no mention made of the Priests and Levites, yet God will not forget them himself, neither have them forgotten by others, but provideth for them places of habitation, and assigneth to them 48. Cities, with their suburbs, wherein they are appointed to dwell. Touching their food and sustenance, they had the first fruits and the tithes of the fruit of their land, and of the increase of their Cattle. And because he would have them want nothing that was needful for them (although men's devotion and charity is such, that they could be content to see them want all things) he taketh order in this place for their houses and dwellings, and that in a plentiful and bountiful manner, considering the compass of the land, as we described it in the former chapter. For besides the many Cities appointed, they had suburbes, with a thousand Cubites in compass about those cities for barns, outhouses, and stalls for cattle; besides fields, stures, and meadows, containing two thousand cubits more for feeding and breeding of their cattle. These were not assigned unto them out of one or two tribes, but selected out of them all, yet in such sort, that the tribes which had the larger inheritance must set apart the more, and they that had less were to give the fewer: and thus was a just and equal proportion observed, that one should not be eased, and another overburdened. Thus were the Levites dispersed in Jacob, and scattered in Israel, that so God might be served and his worship preserved throughout the land. Thus God would have all his people in all corners and quarters to be taught and instructed, the small as well as the great, plain villages as well as famous and populous Cities, as we have shown before, chap. 3. Thus was the punishment laid upon Leut, Gen. 49, 7: turned into a blessings, and their reproach changed into matter of honor and dignity. These were commonly called the Cities of the Levites, not that they only dwelt in them, but because they among others dwelled in them, the youth were instructed in the liberal sciences, the law of God was expounded in the Synagogues, there also public schools and colleges were built to be as holy Seminaries and Nurseries of piety and religion, as we do read in many places of the books of Samuel and the kings.

Moreover observe, that out of these Cities of the Levites God maketh choice of six Cities of refuge, whereof three are in the land of Canaan, and the other on this side Jordan: and these were not chosen to be together, but they were so fitted, that every part of y^e Land had one of them at hand, least such as were without fault and innocent should be pursued and slain by the avenger of blood before he could recover any of them. Now these Cities are assigned out of the Cities of the Levites, rather than out of any othet, y^t the places might be more respected, and be more inviolably observed: and it is presumed that the Priests would not protect willful & wretched offenders, and so defile the places which were granted only to be Sanctuaries for the innocent. Thus did God allow Sanctuaries & privileged places among his people, and many other nations in all times, and of ancient times have followed this example. But whether it be expedient in the days of the Gospel to entertain and give way unto them, may be a great question.

Peter Martyr disputing this point, whether they are to be retained or abolished, delivereth his opinion, that because the law of God allowed them, the customs of nations approved them, and for that there may be at sometimes just cause of them, therefore they may have place among Christians, so that certain conditions be observed. First, that neither public nor private wealth be any way hurt or damnified. Secondly, that vices be not nourished and fostered by hope of pardon, or escaping without punishment. Lastly, provision must be made, that they should not stand open to all sorts of offenders, but only be granted to certain persons: as when a man at unawares hath killed another and feareth the avenger, or is oppressed and over-burdened with debt without his own fault & feareth the creditor. Nevertheless, it seemeth to me, that these reasons carry more show then substance, and persuade rather by the number, then by their weight. For to allow such Sanctuaries, and yet to limit them with these cautions; seemeth to me all one, as if one should deliver a knife into the hands of a child, and then appoint three or four keepers and overseers to attend upon him, to take care that he do no hurt to himself or to others; whereas the knife might more safely be taken away, and the labor of the men better employed. And as for the two particular instances that this learned man giveth, in case of man-slaughter and debt, there are Courts of justice and conscience to try every man's cause, and to mitigate the rigor of such as are merciless: and therefore howsoever we have had Sanctuaries and other privileged places among us, as appeareth in our Chronicles, in the late reign of Edward the fourth, & Edward the fifth, the memory whereof yet remaineth (which peradventure may yet be in force) yet through disuse and discontinuance of them it may appear that the evil was judged to be greater then the good that came by them. And if some inconvenience in someone case might fall out through want of them, it were better to bear that inconvenience by missing of them, then to admit a mischief or rather an heap of mischief, by retaining of them. But howsoever it may be judged in some certain cases a matter of charity to allow to some persons the Sanctuary, to save themselves from such cormorants as would never be satisfied but by the body and blood of the poor debtor; yet because under color and pretence of this protection, infinite enormities would arise unto the detriment of the Commonwealth, and that the former supposed causes may be better remedied by other means no way hurtful or prejudicial at all to any, it were much better quite to dissolve them, then to retain them. For grant once this privilege and immunity to such as are grown to decay by inevitable losses, you shall have others in time claim that benefit (yea, and perhaps sooner receive it) that are gone to decay by their own negligence and unthriftiness. And if it were needful or expedient in case of debt to allow the Sanctuary, no doubt the Lord himself setting up these Sanctuaries, would have extended the liberty to such persons to fly unto them: whereas among the people of God none were allowed to have refuge unto them, but such as were pursued by the avenger of blood. And if there were no other reason to abolish them, it were sufficient to see the horrible abuses of them in the Papacy, where murderers, and traitors, and varlets, and a rabble of all sorts of cut-throats (as we shall see afterward) are protected, and allowed to be protected, contrary to the express commandment of God, Exodus 21, 14. If a man come presumptuously upon his neighbor, and slay him with guile, the thou shalt take him from the Altar, that he may dy. And we see the practice of it in Solomon, 1 Kings 2, 31: for when Joab a willful murderer, that slew two men more righteous and better then him self, and shed innocent blood in the time of peace, fled into the Tabernacle of the Lord, and caught hold upon the Altar, he commanded him to be slain in that place. But to return to the former point, whether this be inconvenient or not, this is most certain, that no states do so much offend by denying of them, as the Romanists do by admitting of them, whereby it cometh to pass, that Churches and Monasteries are turned into dens of thieves. It is noted, that Innocentius the third wrote to the king of Scottes that then was, That no man should be taken by violence out of the church albeit he had committed very heinous offenses. Howbeit lest they should seem to let open a window, and to set loose the reins unto all sorts of wickedness, they have excepted some certain cases. First, they will not defend common thieves and robbers which do stand by the high-way side to set upon such as pass by, whether it be by day or night: neither yet those that offend grievously in the Church or Churchyard, in hope there to be privileged, because such ought not to be protected by the Church which sin heinously against the Church. As for other wickedness and most lewd and loose villainies, as the murdering of men, the ravishing of Virgins, adulteries, and such like practices, they defend them, as appeareth in the Decrees. And they offer this immunity and impunity not only to Christians, but to the Jews and heathen people, yea to excommunicate persons, and to heretics, provided, that the heretics come into danger for other crimes; whereas if it be for heresy, they are denied the benefit of the Sanctuary. Neither is this liberty granted to the Church only, but to the Bishops palace, albeit it be not joined unto the Church. As great a privilege likewise they grant to their breaden-god (and great reason, why?) so often as it is carried about in pomp and procession, or unto the sick; for if in such case any man join himself to the Priest, he hath a safeguard and Sanctuary. Many such like enormities are committed, and pass as currant among them, and so much wickedness goeth unpunished, whereby God is offended, the Church is polluted, and the Land it self is utterly defiled; and yet such places of special privilege and protection, are retained and defended.

[Command unto the children of Israel, that they give unto the Levites, &c.] Here we see, what great allowance God gave to those that ministered at the Altar, and did the service of the Tabernacle. And albeit the Levitical Priesthood and all that ministration be now abolished, yet because God to the end of the world gathereth unto himself a Church by the Ministry of the most holy Word and Sacraments, he will have his Ministers also under the Gospel sufficiently provided not only of sustenance and maintenance, but also of houses and habitations fit for them, that they might wait upon their office without disturbance or distraction.

This teacheth us, that the Ministers of the church must be provided of food & raiment, of houses and dwellings, and of all things necessary for thē. This is proved at large in this place; here it is commanded, & in the book of Joshua it is performed and executed, as we may read in Chap. 2.1, 2, 3, 4, &c. where we see particularly what Cities every tribe gave as the Lord commanded by the hand of Moses. The like we see in the prophesies of Ezekiel, Chapter 45. verses 1, 2, 3, 4, &c. that when the Messiah is exhibited, and the Gospel preached throughout the world, the Land shall be otherwise divided, so that part of it shall be assigned to the house of the Lord, part shall belong unto the Priests and to the Levites, verse 4, and 5. showing thereby, that the Ministers of the Gospel must be maintained. By the law of nature, every man was bound to give something for the furtherance of God's service, of such temporal goods as GOD had given him, Gen. 14. verse 18. and 28. verses 20, 22. Levite. 27. verse 30, Numb, 18. ver. 28, Deut. 14. verses 28, 29. 2 Chron, 31. verses 4, 5. It is noted touching the zeal of good king Hezekiah, when he had appointed the courses of the Priests and Levites, every man according to his service, he commanded the people to give the portion to the Priests and Levites, and by and by they brought in abundance the first fruits of Corn, and Wine, and oil, and Honey, and of all the increase of the field, and the Tythe of all things brought they in abundantly.

Neither doth this belong only unto the [Reason 1] times of the Law, but likewise of the Gospel. For, the ministry of the Gospel is much more glorious then of the Law, and the calling of the Ministers of Jesus Christ, is greater then of those that served at the Altar: for, as John was far greater then any of the Prophets that went before him, so he that is least in the kingdom of heaven, is greater then he, as Matth. chap. 11. verse 11. If then, the Levites were so bountifully and liberally dealt withal, whose service was to take end at the exhibiting of the Messiah, then much more ought they whose ministry and service must stand and continue for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the Ministry, and for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ, Eph. 4, 12, 13. Secondly, that they may attend to the holy things of God, & be no way disturbed. For seeing the Apostle giveth it in charge that they must give attendāce to reading, to exhortation, & to doctrine, 1. Tim. 4, 13. how can they watch over the flock, and give themselves to these duties, except they have provision made for them accordingly? or how can they prepare a Table well furnished for the people in the church, when they have nothing to set on their tables in their own houses? Or deal bread unto the hungry, when they are hungry themselves? or how can they fil the people with the food of the soul, when the people suffer them to be empty, and to want the food of the body?

Lastly, it is required of the Ministers, that they should be given to hospitality, as well as to teach, 1 Tim. 3, 2. the Apostle joineth both these together. But how shall they show work of charity, when they have not to supply their own necessity? Or how shall they entertain strangers, when they are not able to maintain their own families? Or how should they do this good unto the Church, when they themselves want it in their own private houses?

[Use 1] The Uses remain. First this reproveth the corrupt dealing of wretched and miserable people, who detain from the Ministers their liuelyhood, whereby they should help themselves, and relieve others. The Popish sort think nothing too good for their priests and shauelings, but we have those that think everything too good for God's faithful Ministers; their maintenance is too stately, their diet too dainty, their apparel too costly, their houses too lofty: they could be content they were put to earn their living with the spade and shouell. They will not willingly afford them anything, and they think it well saved which is purloyned from them. They are accounted the best husbands that can most cunningly and craftily go beyond them: and such as can thrust a new custom (though it were never heard of before) upon them, to defeat and defraud them of that which is due unto them, doth account himself to leave his land in the best state, & to provide exceeding well for his posterity, and to rid his demeanes of a very great bondage. In former times, tithes were counted as a debt to the Minister, now it is held a bondage or slavery to pay them. And yet these are they that cry out with open mouth against the cruelty and covetousness of the Clergy, like Judah that exclaimed against the incontincy of Tamar, when himself was guilty of no less crime, Gen. 38. Secondly, it reproveth such Patrons as enrich themselves with the livings of the Church: who present other to the place, but retain to themselves a share out of the same. These do bestow the benefice, but they keep the benefit, never considering that it is a snare to the man who devoureth that which is holy, and after vows to enquire, Prov. 20, 25. Now that is to be accounted holy w^c is dedicated to holy uses, whether it be to the worship of God, to the maintenance of the Ministers, to the furtherance of schools and good learning, or to the relief of the poor, and therefore the abolishing or diminishing of these, is condemned as sacrilege against God, Deut. 23, 23. Their forefathers were liberal in furthering the worship of Images, nay of the devil himself, imagining it to be the service of the true God: they spared not to enrich those that were seducers and ringleaders to eternal damnation, though they were also unlearned and ungodly, & unfit for that calling, yet somewhat they gave them out of baptizings, and the other counterfeit sacraments, out of burials, trentals, masses, months minds, everything yielded some see and stipend, whereby they grew rich in the world: whereas the children of these grudge to give anything to their learned and godly pastors which God hath in mercy bestowed as a special gift upon the Church, but give thē cause to complain of their wants of mere things necessary. The Prophet Malachi is not afraid to pronounce that such unconscionable dealing is not so much an injury to mā, as to God himself, Mal. 3, 8, 9. Ye have robbed me in tithes and offerings, saith the Lord. And in the Law it is expressed, that the tribe of Levi had no inheritance, nor any part among their brethren, But the Lord was their part and their inheritance, because that which fell unto them was dedicated to God; and lest the people should think that the Ministers were beholding unto them for it, therefore God claimed the tyths to be his, Leu. 27, 30: & by his gift assigned them over to the Levites. No man can touch the Lord's right to take it away, and be guiltless; for it is as a snare wherewith the hook is covered, and the fish or fowl deceived and entrapped. The profit that cometh by seizing upon holy things, promiseth much gain and advantage, yet let it seem never so sweet and pleasant to the taste, it shall be as gravel, nay as poison in the stomach, & in the end shall sting thē more dangerously that swallow it, then if they were bitten with scorpions & venomous serpents.

Secondly, it is the duty of the people to [Use 2] have a care of their Ministers. For seeing God hath appointed them to serve him, & to teach his people, that his way may be known upon earth, & his saving health among all nations, it is great reason they should be maintaind for that purpose. The Levites were descended of the lineage of Abraham no less then any of the other tribes, & therefore a part of the inheritance belonged to them: nevertheless God put them from it, because they should not be trobled with tilling the ground & such like business, but give themselves wholly to the fulfilling of their office. And as the Ministers are often exhorted to do their duty, so must the people know, that God requireth a duty at their hands, y^t they provide for them, as Deut. 12, 19. And doubtless in that special charge given to the people, God more respected the benefit of the people themselves, thē the profit of such as were to be maintained. The Ministers are to be maintained in a temporal estate, but the people in the unity of faith, and in obedience toward God, that so the true religion might be preserved in purity.

Lastly, this serveth to put the Ministers in [Use 3] mind of their duty. For wherefore hath God all this care over them, but that they should care for the people? And wherefore are the people to provide for their bodies, but that they should watch for their souls? This serveth to drive from the Altar such as are ignorant Ministers, that are not able to teach the people. Ignorance is a grievous sin in all, but especially in the Minister, who must not only have light in himself, but give light to others; and must not only know the way to God's kingdom, but show the way unto others. For God never meant that idol shepherds should have the places and provision ordained for such as will take pains. These thrust themselves into this great work and high calling of the Ministry, and yet are unfurnished of those gifts which should fit them for this function, 1 Tim. 3, 2. and 2 Tim. 2.2. They should be Lights of the world, and yet sit in darkness themselves: they are called to be Salt, but they are unsavory. The Minister in the Church is as the eye in the body or as the candle in the Lantern. If then the watchmen be blind and have no knowledge, The blind must needs lead the blind, and then both fall into the ditch, Matth. 15, 14. The Ministers should be the mouth and Messengers of God unto the people; but if they be dumb and cannot speak, they are not able to deliver their Ambassage. They should be Nurses of God's children to feed them with the sincere milk of the word, that they may grow thereby, 1 Peter 2, 2: but these have dry breasts and starve God's people, and are guilty of murder in his fight. They take upon them to be Stewards of God's family, to give them their portion in due season, Luke 12, 41: but they have no skill to break the bread of Life, neither to divide the spiritual food of the word aright. And whereas the Shepherds should feed the flock, they feed only themselves with the milk of the flock, and clothe themselves with the wool. They do think themselves to be Captains and overseers of the Lord's host, to go before the people, but they are not able to handle the sword of the Spirit, nor to prepare the people for this spiritual warfare. These sin grievously by invading the Lord's inheritance, and presumptuously taking upon them this great office unto which they were never called of God. For this is a certain truth, whomsoever the Lord sendeth, him he furnisheth and enableth in some measure to discharge the duty which he requireth of him. His calling is not an idle, but an effectual calling, and is able to demonstrate it self so soon as it is given. When God had called Aholiab and Bezaliel to build his material Tabernacle, by and by they were filled with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, in understanding, and in knowledge, Exod. chap. 31. ver. 2. and chap. 35, verse 31. Will he then make choice of any to build the spiritual Tabernacle (which is his Church) in whom is no grace of the Spirit of God, no wisdom, no understanding, no knowledge at all? Solomon saith in the Proverbs, He that sendeth a Message by the hand of a fool, cutteth off the feet, and drinketh damage, chap. 26, 6. No man that is wise will send such a Messenger that hath any care or desire to have his message delivered: and therefore we may not think that the wise God will use such in his service. On the other side, as the cold of snow in the time of harvest (where the heat aboundeth) is most welcome so is a faithful messenger to them that send him, for he refresheth the soul of his masters, Prov. 25, 1. These are they that destroy not only their own souls, but bring destruction to the people that depend upon them, Prov. 29, 16. And as God provided not maintenance so carefully for the ignorant Minister, so we may see the same of the careless and idle Ministers, who having learning & knowledge do want conscience of their duty. For their knowledge must show it self in practice, Mal. 2, 7, and they must have not only the head, but the tongue of the learned to minister a word in time to him that is weary, Isaiah 50, 4. They must not only have the talent, as the unprofitable servant had; but they must use their talent, as the good and faithful servants did: and as they ought to have store of provision, so they must distribute it to the relieving of God's people: or else being able to teach and yet will not, they are worse then they that would and cannot. A rich man that hath his barns and granaries full of Corn, & yet suffereth the poor to famish for want of food, deserveth justly the curse of God and man, Prov. 11, 26. Whereas blessing shall be upon the head of him that selleth it. In like manner, the Ministers that are rich in grace, and well stored with knowledge, who seek nothing but to engross more into their hands, but will part from nothing at all, have cause to fear to be accursed of God & man; whereas they shall be blessed & praised in the gate, that make others partakers of their store. Wherefore let all such consider the commandment of God to preach the word, oftentimes repeated and urged to the Prophets, Es. 58, 1. and to the Apostles and other Ministers of the word, Math. 28, 19. If then we regard what the Lord saith unto us, we must hearken to his voice. Secondly, hereby we testify our love to Christ, who hath dearly loved us, John 21, 15. God hath so loved us, that he spared not his only begotten Son but gave him to the death for us, and therefore we are most unthankful wretches, if we do not love him again; but we cannot testify our love to him more, then by feeding his Sheep and his Lambes. Thirdly, we have committed to our charge the price of the blood of Christ, the souls of mē, which he bought at a dear rate, Acts 20, 28. Fourthly, the Ministry of the word is the ordinary means ordained for the building & planting, the enlarging & strengthening, the upholding and continuing of the Church of God, 1 Pet. 1, ver. 23, 25. Fifthly, there is a gracious promise of a very great reward made unto those men that are faithful and gain souls to their master, for they shall shine as the Stars forever and ever, Dan. chap. 12. verse 3: and when the great shepherd of the sheep appeareth, they shall appear with him in glory, 1 Peter, chap. 5. verse 4. and be made heirs of all their masters riches, Mat. chap. 24, verses 45, 46, 1 Tim. 4, 16. 2 Tim. 4, 7, 8.

Sixthly, all such as are negligent watchmen have a fearful woe denounced against them, because while they feed themselves unto the full, they suffer the flock to starve. Ezek. 34, 2. 1 Cor. 9.16.

Seventhly, such as have gifts and do not use them, have them (in God's just judgment) taken from them, Matth. 25, 28, Zach. 11, 17. For as such as use and employ the talent that God hath given them, have his gifts increased in a plentiful measure: so they that bury their knowledge and zeal, and never bring them forth, they are so weakened and wasted in them, that in the end they vanish away as smoke, and come to nothing, as is too too evident in many of our times.

Lastly, they bring destruction and damnation upon themselves and the people, Ezech. 34, 8, 10. Matth. 25, 10.

9 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying:

10 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, when ye be come over Jordan into the land of Canaan:

11 Then ye shall appoint you Cities to be Cities of refuge for you, that the Man-slayer may flee thither, which killeth any person at unawares.

12 And they shall be unto you Cities for refuge from the avenger, that the man-slayer die not, &c.

13 And of these, &c.

15 These six Cities shall be for refuge.

The commandment of God touching the setting apart of Cities for the Levites hath before been considered in general: now he speaketh in particular of the Cities of refuge taken out of the former Cities, wherein we see the number of them, the end wherefore they were appointed, and the places where they are to be taken. Of murder voluntarily and willfully committed, Moses speaketh in the words following, such persons must be pulled from the Altar, Deut. 19; and put to death: but when blood is shed at unawares, there is liberty to fly to one of these Cities of refuge. Whereby we see, that there is difference between sin and sin, between such as are committed ignorantly, and those that are done voluntarily. And therefore we may conclude from hence, that all sins are not equal. Touching the avenger of blood, we shall speak more afterward; howbeit here we see that he which had killed another at unawares was in danger to be pursued, over-taken, and slain by the next of kin, as well as he that had shed man's blood willfully. True it is, God alloweth not that the kinsman of him that is slain, should take away the life of him that was guilty, but such was the malice and corruption of men, that they would be ready to add murder to murder, that blood should touch blood, unless some place of safety had been provided.

This teacheth us, That howsoever God hath made us keepers of the lives one of another, yet by nature we thirst after revenge, and are never quiet until it be satisfied. Hereunto come the many precepts which God giveth to forbid revenge, which he would never so often repeat, were it not that he knoweth the inclination of our hearts, Deutero. chap. 32, 35. Rom. 12, 17, 19, and 1, 29, 31. 1 Thes. 2, 15, 16. Prou 12, 10. Such an one was Cain, Judas, Saul, Herod, Pharaoh, yea, such are all persecutors, and all heretics. And not only men unregenerate are of an hateful and malicious disposition, but such as otherwise have received the spirit of adoption, and the grace of sanctification, do yet carry about them the body of sin, and the corruptions of the old Adam, as we see in the brethren of Joseph, who for envy sold him into Egypt, Gen. 37, 28. Acts 7, ver. 9. And in David, otherwise a man after God's heart, for when he had received evil words for his good deeds, at the hands of Nabal, 1 Sam. 25, 22. he sware, God do so & more also to the enemies of David, If I leave any alive of all that pertain to him by the morning light, and so he prepared himself & his men for present and speedy revenge.

And no marvel, seeing the nature of man [Reason 1] is prone to all evil, and all the imaginations of his heart are only evil continually, Gen. 6, verse 5. and 8. verse 21. For malice above other things is a natural fruit of the flesh, delighting and pleasing our corruption, Galat. 5, 21. James 4, 5. Hence it is, that we are said to serve our lusts and diverse pleasures, living in maliciousness and envy, hateful, & hating one another, Tit. 3, 3.

Secondly, by nature Satan getteth the possession of us, who hath been a fierce dragon, a merciless Lyon, a cruel murderer from the beginning, John 8, 44. Our Savior remembereth unto the Jews why they were a murderous generation, and telleth them, They were of their father the devil. And it is said of Kaine when he slew his brother, that he was of that evil one, 1 John 3, 12.

This serveth for reproof both of errors in [Use 1] doctrine, and of corruptions in life: and first, it convinceth the Popish Doctrine, which giveth way to man's corrupt nature more than the word will bear, For in the point of loving our enemies they come near unto the interpretation of the Pharisees, because they teach, that howsoever a man is always bound not to hate his enemy, yet to love him he is not always bound. No marvel if these men do hold it lawful to break promise with an heretic, such as they account us to be, but falsely. This is an easy kind of Religion, and well pleasing to flesh and blood: and it may not seem strange, though multitudes be joined unto their Church: for what carnal man is there almost that would not be a Papist, when he may be held to be religious, & yet be avenged upon his enemy also? Indeed they set down two cases (least they should be thought to be too profane, and their Religion a merciless Religion) wherein a man is bound to love his enemy: First, in extreme necessity, when he is in present danger of his life, then he is to be helped and relieved, as it was with him that fell among thieves, and lay wounded and half dead, as Luke 10. verse 30. Secondly, in case of scandal, when by not helping or succouring we shall give offense unto others. Out of these two cases they conclude, that it is a counsel and degree of perfection to love our enemies, Matth. 5. ver. 44. which some particular persons, as Monks & Friars, and such cloyster men take upon them to observe, who have (forsooth) obtained an extraordinary gift to deny themselves. But if this be a counsel, then the rest of Christ's sayings in that chapter, I say unto you, Whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause, shall be in danger of the Judgment, Verse 22. And whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery, as we may read In verse 28. and so likewise of the rest, in verses 32.34, 37, should be counsels also. Howbeit the saying of our Savior Jesus Christ is a commanding, Genesis chapt. 1. verse 3. also Psalm 33. verse 9. Wherefore the Popish devotion, is a Religion wherein a man may go to hell with ease, maintaining a most devilish and damnable Doctrine, clean contrary to the direction of our Savior Christ; limiting and restraining that which Christ hath extended generally unto us in the Gospel, I say unto you, Love your enemies: and if ye love them only that love you, what singular thing do you?

Again, this reproveth such as think it to be a note of an high and generous Nature, and of a noble and notable spirit, to put up no wrong, and to seek revenge even for every trifle and small matter: to do as little wrong as they can, but to resolve to put up none. These account it a great honor and glory for a man to pursue his enemy with hatred. Wicked Lamech, descending from y^e cursed race of Cain, thought it an argument of virtue and valor, and a point of much credit and reputation unto him, to be able to take revenge, yea, even seventy times seven times of any that should offend and provoke him any way: whereas Christ telleth Peter a contrary Lesson, that is, that it should be a greater honor and dignity before God and all good men, to forgive till seventy times seven times, and that in one day, Luke 17, 4. Matth. 18, 22. It becometh all Christians therefore, rather to follow the precept of Christ, then the practice of Lamech, and to learn of Solomon: Prov. 19, 11, that the discretion of a man deferreth his anger, and it is his glory to pass over a transgression: and chapter 14, 29, and 16, 32, He that is slow to anger is better then the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit, then he that taketh a city. If then we desire true honor, and to be accounted men in the world, let us imitate our heavenly Father, who is so far from being greedy of revenge and hasty to anger and to take punishment, that he maketh the Sun to shine, and the rain to fall upon good and bad, being slow to anger, and of great kindness. The more noble sort of creatures are not desirous of revenge, but only the basest and vilest, noisome flees, wasps, hornets, bees, and such like. Among men, none more testy and subject to anger, then sick persons, in their greatest fits, who break out into sundry passions, by reason of their weakness, which they would never do in their health when they have the use of reason. Let us account it to be a shame and reproach to be like the weakest things, and rather imitate the nobler creatures, which are slow to anger, and moderate their passions with discretion. Joseph in the court of Pharaoh (no doubt) was an honorable man, he was next in the state to the king, he had what he would at his commandment, and at his word were all the people ruled, Gen. 42, 40: yet consider that he placed not any part of his honor in taking revenge of his brethren that had sold him as a slave to an idolatrous nation, and sought after his life, but in forgiving of them, and rewarding them good for evil, Genesis 50. For when they saw that their father was dead, knowing what they had deserved, and fearing the face of Joseph, they said, Joseph will peradventure hate us, and will certainly quite us all the evil which we did unto him, Gen. 50, 15, 17: and they desired him to forgive the trespass done against him, verse 17. Joseph wept when they spake unto him, and said, Fear not, for am I in place of God? but as for you, ye thought evil against me, but God meant it unto good, &c: now therefore fear not, I will nourish you and your little ones, and he comforted them, and spake kindly unto them. David was an honorable man, yet we know how he dealt with Shimei; though he were king, and wanted not others to kindle the coals of wrath and revenge against him: yea though the wretch had cast stones at him, and cursed him with an horrible curse, yet afterward he pardoned and forgave him, and sealed his pardon with an oath, 2 Samuel, chapt. 19, verse 23.

The like example we may see in Mephibosheth the son of Jonathan, that did eat bread at DAVIDS own table, (showing him favor for his fathers sake) although he were maliciously & mischeeuously slandered by Ziba his servant, and that of no less crime then high treason against the king, as if he looked that the house of Israel should restore him to the kingdom of his father, 2 Sam. 16, 3. yet he never sought any revenge of him, but was content to part from his own right for joy that the king was returned in peace to his own house, 2 Sam. 19, 30. Solomon was not ignorant, but knew well enough what was true honor; yet he giveth this counsel, not to seek any honor by revenge, Prov. 24, 29. Say not, I will do unto him as he hath done to me: I will render to the man according unto his work. It is the common sickness and disease of the world, to requite like for like, taunt for taunt, and rebuke for rebuke; and they think they may do it lawfully, and measure to others that measure which they have measured unto them, whether it be in word or deed, stripe for stripe, blow for blow, wound for wound. But this is a part of our natural corruption, which did appear in the auengers of blood mentioned in this place.

[Use 2] Secondly, as it reproveth errors in opinion, so it doth likewise errors in conversation, & in the practice of life, which meeteth with many abuses. First, here is reproveth the common practice of fighting and quarrelling, w^c always beginneth with hatred, & oftentimes endeth with blood. These are they that make no conscience of doing hurt and injury unto others, 1 Thess. 4, 6. 1 Cor. 6, 7, 8. Many do hold it unlawful to strike the first stroke, and to offer the first blow, and minister occasion of strife; but if another strike them and begin the fray, they think they may lawfully strike again, and return as good as is brought, and that with an over-plus and advantage. This is to make Magistrates stand for ciphers, and Laws to be of none effect, or to wax rusty in books, as a sword in the scabbard. Christ reproveth this retayling of like for like, both by word, and by example. By word, Matth. 5, 39, 40, 41. Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: but I say unto you, resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also, &c. By example, for when he was smitten before the high Priest, he smote not again, John 18, 22, 23, but defended his own innocence. So did Micaiah the Prophet, 1 Kings 22, 24, 25: and Paul the Apostle, Acts 23, 3: they defended their cause by word, but smote not with the fist. These examples of the best we ought to have before us, to be guided by them, who were led by the good spirit of God. But in our days, when men are charged with contempt of Laws and Magistrates, & of God himself, in pursuing their private grudgings and quarrels, if they can say, Why did he give the occasion? Why did he begin with me? Why did he strike the first stroke? They think they have spoken wisely, and answered the matter very sufficiently. But thus might the Prophets and Apostles as well have pleaded for themselves, and given as good a reason of their dealing if they had stricken again; & yet they stayed their hands, and would not give blow for blow, and they are commended in the word of God. The Apostle would never have set forth the patience of Christ for our imitation, who when he was reviled, reviled not again, and when he suffered he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously, 1 Pet. 2. verse. 13: if he might have done wrong for wrong: but he showeth that Christ suffered for us, leaving us an example that we should tread in his steps.

Secondly, this condemneth the practice of many masters, who do after a sort nourish quarrels and contentions (as much as in them lieth) within their own doors. For if they have a servant, who being provoked & stricken by his fellow-servant, will not by and by fly in his face and strike again, or being challenged the field, will not take up the bucklers and answer the challenge, they account it the trick of a coward, and esteem such as unfit servants to dwell with them. For if having a defiance given him, he take not up the gantlet, they thus reason and conclude with themselves, If he will not draw his weapon in his own cause, he will never draw it in mine: & if he will not strike for himself being provoked, he will never strike stroke for his master if he be assaulted. This may be a rule from human policy, but it is no rule in Christian piety, neither is it after the doctrine which is according to godliness. It is the duty of servants being stricken to complain unto their masters, and it is no disgrace or reproach to do so, except it be a shame and dishonor to submit themselves to God's word. Every master is a Magistrate within the walls of his own house, to order his servants & family aright. He must give no approbation to private revenge, but make peace among them, & teach them to suffer wrong rather than to offer, and prepare to bear a new injury rather than seek to revenge an old, as we heard before by the express commandment of Christ. Not that we should understand his words literally, to turn the other cheek to him that hath stricken one, or to give away our cloak unto him that hath taken away our coat, for Christ him self being smitten did not so: but he speaketh comparatively, do so, rather than revenge thine own cause. But as challenges into the field are unlawful, so none is bound in honor to answer such challenges. Neither let any man think it is a disgrace and discredit to refuse a challenge. For besides that true grace and glory standeth in obedience unto God, wherefore I pray you, serveth the master in the house, and the Magistrate in the commonwealth, but to take up quarrels that arise, the one among his servants, the other among his subjects? It is a principal part of their office, to decide and determine the differences between servant and servant, between subject and subject. And remember this rule, that there can be no credit gotten by sinning against God.

[Use 3] Lastly, we must take notice of this corruption, and show the duties of love one to another, even toward our enemies, Luke 6, 33. Isaiah 11, 6, 7, 9. Matth. 5, 44. 1 Pet. 2, 21, 23. Now the holy Scripture layeth before us sundry motives to move us to lay aside all maliciousness and desire of revenge, and to show our selves courteous and gentle, kind, and tender-hearted one toward another. First, except we forgive, we can have no hope or assurance to be forgiven, but judgment shall be merciless to them that show no mercy, Matth. 6, 14, 15. I am. 2, 13. Matth. 18, 35. We shall find such measure at the hands of God, as we our selves measure unto others. And Christ enforceth the truth of this, by doubling of the sentence both for greater certainty of the matter, and for deeper impression in the conscience.

Secondly, God hath forgiven all his children for Christ's sake. He might have many just quarrels and controversies against us for our trespasses and sins against him, but he pardoneth all and putteth them up, to give us an example, that we should forgive and forbear one another, and if any have a quarrel against another, even as Christ forgiveth so must we do, Eph. 4, 32. Col. 3, 13. 2 Cor. 2, 10.

Thirdly, vengeance belongeth unto God and to his assigns, not to private men. It is the proper office of God, forasmuch as hereby he showeth himself to be God, Psal. 94, 1, 2. He is the Judge of the whole earth, he leaveth it not to everyone to be his own judge, Rom. 12, 19. If we should see a man set himself in the Princes chair of estate, or to place himself in his throne, and begin to usurp his office and execute judgment upon any offender, all men could condemn the fact as usurpation, and the person as guilty of high treason. Or if any of the fellow servants should take his Masters place, and offer to punish such as have offended him, and that in his Masters presence, who would not censure the sawcinesse of such a proud companion? Howbeit, it is greater pride and presumption for him to draw the sword that hath not the sword put into his hands, insomuch that thereby he deserveth to be smitten with the sword himself, Math. 26, 52.

Fourthly, God rejecteth all sacrifices & oblations offered without mercy, when they are accompanied with desire of revenge, Matth. 5, 23.24. The Prophet teacheth, that God required not at their hands to tread in his courts, and to bring oblations, and offer up prayers, so long as their hands are full of blood, Isaiah 1, 15. Though we come never so much, and so often before him, yet our greatest devotion is an abomination unto him, so long as we are not reconciled unto our brethren.

Fifthly, without this, no man shall see God to his comfort. At his right hand are pleasures for evermore, but they shall never taste of thē and be partakers of them that live without love, and do not live without revenge. The Apostle saith, Heb. 12, 14. Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord.

Lastly, if we can be content to be forgiven, then we must also be ready to forgive. It is a general rule, Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the Prophets, Matth. 7, 12. This also holdeth proportion between God and us, for as we would have him to extend mercy to us, so ought we to be merciful toward others. If we would have God at peace with us, we must be reconciled to our brethren: and if we would have him to love us, we ought to love one another; or how shall we be assured that we love God whom we do not see, when we love not our brethren whom we see daily?

16 And if he smite him with an instrument of Iron (so that he die) he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

17 And if he smite him with throwing a stone, (wherewith he may die) and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

18 Or if he smite him with an hand weapon of wood, &c.

19 The avenger of blood himself shall slay the murderer, when he meeteth him, he shall slay him.

20 And if he thrust him of hatred, or hurle at him, by laying in wait that he die, 21 Or in enmity smite him with his hand, that he die: he that smote him shall surely be put to death, for he is a murderer: the revenger of blood shall slay the murderer, &c.

Hitherto of the first part of the chapter, the second part followeth, which is concerning laws belonging to murder and shedding of blood: and this consisteth of three several points. First, touching willful murder. Secondly, touching murder at unawares, commonly called manslaughter, or chance medly, which is not done of malice prepensed. Thirdly, of the office of the Judges touching shedders of blood. The first point is of willful murder, which is declared by the instrumental causes whereby it is done, whether a man smite his neighbor with instrument of iron, or throwing of a stone, or with an hand weapon of wood, to wit, voluntarily, willingly, willfully, and of set purpose, all cometh to one ende, for such a one must die the death. This exposition is plain and evident, as appeareth by the 11. verse going before, where Moses mentioneth the killing of a man by error or at unawares. Now in this case, if a man hate his brother, and hurle at him by laying of wait that he die, or an enemy smite him with his hand, the avenger of blood shall slay the murderer whensoever or wheresoever he meeteth him.

From hence we learn, that murder and shedding of blood is an heinous and horrible sin in the sight of God. Howsoever many that are fleshed and hardened in it, make no reckoning of it, yet it hath a bloody face before the high God: to do anything maliciously and unjustly against the life of a man is a sin much displeasing unto God, and that which provoketh his judgments, Gen. 9, 6. Hos. 4, 2. Matth. 26, 52. Reuelat. 13, 10. Exod. 21, 12. Levite. 24, 17.

[Reason 1] The reasons are plain. First, we are all made in the Image of God, Gen. 1, 27, and 9, 6. What treason thē is it to deface this Image? for as it is treason to deface maliciously the image of a Prince, so is it no less then high treason against God, to deface the Image and similitude of God. Nay, to speak the truth, he is a double traitor, and committeth a double treason, both in regard of him whom he hath murdered, and then in regard of himself, in that he is the cause of his own destruction, & guilty of his own blood, forasmuch as he that killeth must be killed; and he that sheddeth man's blood, his blood likewise must be shed. Nay, there is no man that murdereth another, but he murdereth himself more; he taketh away the life of another, but he destroyeth his own soul, yea and causeth God to bring some judgment upon him that he liveth not out half his days. Hereunto (no doubt) Rebecca hath relation, hearing of the wicked and cruel purpose of Esau toward his brother, that when the days of mourning for his father should come, he would kill his brother Iacoh; for she said to him, Behold, thy brother Esau doth comfort himself, purposing to kill thee; now therefore my son, obey my voice, & fly to Laban my brother; for why should I be deprived also of you both in one day? Gen. 27, 42, 45

Secondly, all such as are willful murderers are accursed of God, Gen. 4, 11. Thou art cursed from the earth: and also of men, Deut. 27, 24. Cursed is he that smiteth his neighbor secretly: and all the people shall say, Amen. Hence it is, that God never suffereth such to escape, but meeteth with them one way or other, either he striketh them with his own hand that did lift up their hands to strike others, or he delivereth them over to the Magistrate. Some times he maketh them to be witnesses against themselves, sometimes to discover themselves in their dreams, sometimes to feel the torments of hell in their own consciences, and sometimes the birds of the air to reveal them. We see this in Cain, that slew his brother, for God set a mark upon him, and branded him for his wretched parricide, Genesis 4, verse 15.

This the very heathen themselves knew by the light of nature, that howsoever the murderer may escape out of some danger, yet vengeance will pursue and overtake him, Acts 28, 4. This we see in Herod that killed James with the sword, and put Peter in prison, intending also the like against him, he escaped not the hand of God long, but his deep vengeance did so dog him at the heels, that he was smitten shortly after by the greater stroke of an Angel from heaven, and was eaten up of worms, Acts 12, 2.23. Thus did Samuel speak to king Agag, 1 Sam. 15, 33. As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women, and he hewed him in pieces before the Lord. The like we see in Joab who was smitten with the sword, as he had killed others, 1 Kings 2, 31, 32. And it is to be observed what David saith of him concerning y^e blood of Abner that he had spilled, 2 Sa. 3, 29. Let it rest on the head of Joab, and on all his fathers house, and let there not fail from the house of Joab one that hath an issue, or that is a leper, or that leaneth on a staff, or that falleth on the sword or that lacketh bread.

Thirdly, God doth so detest murder, that if a beast kill a man it must be stoned to death, and his flesh not eaten, Exod. 21, 28. What? is God offended with the brute beasts? or do they sin against him, and break his Commandment? No: but thereby GOD would show how much he abhorreth the shedding of man's blood, and that man should lay it to his heart.

Fourthly, it is an offense against a man's own flesh, Eph. 5, 29: No man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it; now every man is as our own flesh, Isaiah 58, 7. We see Bears, and Lions, and Tigres, and wild beasts do play together, because they are of one kind: mankind is of one kind; if we do not agree together, but prey one upon another, we are more fierce then Bears, more cruel then Lions, more merciless then Tygres, and more savage then wild beasts.

Fifthly, such as slew another violently, were taken out of the Cities of refuge by violence, God would give no protection to such beasts, neither City, nor Altar, nor Tabernacle, nor anything could yield them any safeguard, Deu. 19, 11, 12, 13. 1 Kings 2, 31, 32.

Sixthly, it is a crying sin: blood hath a very loud voice, and never ceaseth crying, until judgment fall upon the head of the murderer, Gen. 4, 10. Behold the blood of thy brother crieth from the earth. Abel was now dead, his mouth was stopped, and he could not speak; but his blood could speak, the which called and cried in the ears of the Lord GOD of hoastes from the earth for vengeance, Hebre. 11, 4.

Seventhly, no pardon was to be given to such, as appeareth in this chapter, and verse 32. Ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of him that is a murderer, which is guilty of death, but he shall surely be put to death.

Lastly, the Land is defiled by it, ver. 33, 34. Blood defileth the Land, and the Land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it: Defile not therefore the Land which ye shall inherit, wherein I dwell, for I the Lord dwell among the children of Israel.

Now let us come to the uses. First, we have just cause to fear the wrath of God; and if he come to make inquisition of blood, he shall find much blood spilled upon the earth like water that cannot be gathered up again throughout the whole Land. What abundance of injustice and cruelty is there to be found in every place, and thought to be just and upright dealing? How many are there to be found, that having once conceived anger and malice in their hearts, will remain whole days, and months, and years, before they will be reconciled, nay speak one to another? thereby depriving themselves of the mutual comfort they might reap and receive, and by suffering the Sun to go down upon their wrath, do give place to Satan to enter into them & to possess them, Eph. 4, 26, 27. And what color soever men set upon their cruelty, it is but a false painting of a foul face, as Adams fig-leaves, that covered his shame, but could not hide his sin. If it be done under pretence of law, it is a most fearful sin; the pretence it self maketh it more fearful, because feigned justice is a double injustice. When the Law is so wrested, that it is made the occasion of murder, it must needs be offensive & displeasing unto God. And albeit this sin be committed by the Magistrate, in letting malefactors go unpunished, yet it must needs be offensive unto GOD, because it is that which bringeth the guilt of blood upon the Land, & nothing can cleanse the Land from blood, but the blood of him that shed blood. This made the Prophet say to Ahab, Because thou hast let go out of thy hand, a man whom I appointed unto destruction, therefore thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people, 1 Kings 20, 42. Whē there was a famine in the Land in the days of David, three years, year after year and he inquired of the Lord the cause of that sore judgment; the Lord answered, It is for Saul and for his bloody house, because he slew the Gibeonites, 2 Sam. 21, 1: and the atonement could not be made, until seven men of his sons were delivered into their hands, and they were hanged up unto the Lord that his inheritance might be blessed. The sins of the sons of Eli became to be the sins of their father, not because he was their father, neither yet because he was the committer of them, but because he being a Magistrate did not punish & correct them: so likewise when judgment is not executed upon men for their sins, the blood of those which are slain must needs remain in the Land. If this be committed by way of revenge, it is also an heinous sin against almighty God, because he that doth it, preventeth God's work, and so provoketh God's wrath: for he taketh God's office out of his hand, and taketh up his place, who hath said, Uengeance is mine, Rom. 12. And if we ascend to the higher degree of men, shall we not find among them little conscience made of shedding blood? Do not our Gentry for the most part think it their glory to have their hands embrewed in the blood of innocents? What conscience is made of fighting & quarrelling for point of pretended honor, but in truth for assured dishonor and disgrace unto them, to their names, and to their posterity? for let thē set what varnish soever they please upon their combats, they shall carry y^e mark of an horrible sin to their grave, God grant it be not to hell and the place of perpetual torment; and if ever GOD open their eyes, they will weep day and night for it, and be humbled for it all the days of their lives.

Secondly, [Use 2] it is the duty of Magistrates especially, and of all men generally in their places, to make diligent search & enquiry when blood is shed, by whom the blood hath been shed: and if the murderer be not found, they should crave pardon at the hands of God. And touching the Magistrates and others, I would commend to them the consideration of two things; first, that they be careful that no man die innocently, that they put no man to death without cause, Jer. 25, 14. of which we shall speak afterward in the end of this chapter.

Secondly, when murder is committed, all men must do their endeavor, to the utmost of their power and means, to detect the authors of that bloody act.

Hence it is, that God requireth, that when a body is found slain upon the ground in the Land which he had given the Israelites to possess, and it is not known who killed him, then the Elders and Judges shall come forth to the dead body and wash their hands over a Bullock whose head was stricken off, and protest and say, Our hands have not shed this blood, neither have our eyes seen it: O Lord, be merciful to thy people Israel, whom thou hast purchased, and lay not the guiltless blood upon them; and the man-slaughter shall be forgiven them, Deut. 21, 7, 8, 9. Where we see that the killing of one man is a defiling of the whole country, and what care the Lord hath of the life of every man. For murder is so hated of God, that albeit the doer thereof be unknown, yet he would have a solemn cleansing and clearing thereof to be made. And see what God requireth at the hands of the Magistrates and ministers of justice. It is not enough for them to protest that they have not committed, or supported, or favored any evil when causes and complaints have been brought before them, but they must search carefully, and enquire diligently of disorders; albeit no man solicit or seek unto them, yet themselves must be watchful in their places. Howbeit, this duty is oftentimes ill observed, and slenderly practiced. For how many are there that think themselves fully discharged, and flatter themselves with a fond imagination that they are greatly to be commended, when they patiently give men the hearing, and make countenance to help them. But God is not contented with this, he will take an account of them of a farther duty, and will not take it for a sufficient discharge to be able to say, though it be truly, There was no information given, no man made any complaint. If then Magistrates that have the sword of justice put into their hands to cut off evil doers from the City of God, shall suffer any wickedness to lurk in any City or corner, they themselves are guilty thereof, and it is as much in God's sight, as if they had given their consent to the practicing of it. These are they that must after a sort answer for the whole body of the people, if evil doers be suffered to nuzzle under them through their negligence.

[Use 3] Lastly, it is the duty of everyone to beware of all occasions and allurements that may draw us to this bloody sin. For as there is a murder of the hand, so there is a murder of the tongue, which is therefore in holy Scripture resembled unto a Razor, to a sword, to coals, to arrows, to poison, to fire: all which kill and are the instruments of death: and likewise there is a murder of the heart, of which the Apostle John saith, Whosoever hateth his brother, is a murderer, and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.

So then, we are guilty of this sin, even by anger and malice in the heart only, and shall have our portion in the Lake that burneth with fire and brimstone. If any man have not a feeling of this in his heart, he is more then dead: and if he labor not to repent of it, it argueth him to be past all grace, and so out of the number of those which shall see God to their comfort. For albeit such have the shape and form of men, yet they have the hearts of the very beasts. If they had the right use of reason in them, and the government of their corrupt appetites and affections, it could not be but that they would have a care of the life of their brethren, and which is more, of their own lives also.

So then, every man should examine himself and try his own heart, how far he hath been guilty of this sin of murder in every kind and branch thereof, that so we may humble our selves. Albeit it be but the anger of the heart, yet it is murder in the sight of God, & is therefore as well to be repented of, as the outward act of murder it self. To this we may join the sin of envy, when men so repine at the good of others, that they cannot be quiet or contented, because they want y^t which others have, and have not so great a portion as they; for this also we should humble our selves, and labor continually against it.

To conclude, we see also what cruelty and hard-dealing is oftentimes used against poor laboring men, that get their living by the sweat of their brows, and yet many think they may use them as they list, either with turning of them off with an half-penny, for a penny, or else in exchanging other things for their work, which haply are not worth half the money, or in keeping back their wages for weeks, months, or years, which Saint James speaketh of, Chapter 5, verse 4. Behold the hire of the Laborers crieth, and the cries of them are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabbath.

Let us labor by all means to keep our selves free from blood, and not only from the outward act it self, but from the inward thoughts of the heart, as envy, hatred, and malice; as also from the slaughter of y^e tongue by cruel and cursed speeches. Such a murderer was Shimei when he railed upon David; True it is, he charged him to be a murderer, but the murder might justly and fully be discharged upon himself, for he was the man of blood, and a son of Belial, 2 Sam. 16, 7, 8. Indeed if a man have an injury done unto him, it is lawful for him to seek revenge, but he must not do it with his own hands, but as the poor widow that came to the Judge, saying, Auenge me of mine adversary; so he must complain to the Magistrate, and so seek for remedy by just and lawful means. And that we may be free from the fact it self, and not fall into it; let us look well to the fountain and beginning of all our actions, and first labor to purge our hearts, because out of the heart proceedeth all kind of wickedness. Now if that be cleansed of evil thoughts, we shall thereby stop and hinder evil works that they break not out.

22 But if he thrust him suddenly without enmity, and have cast upon him anything without laying of wait:

23 Or with any stone wherewith a man dy, seeing him not, and cast it upon him that he die, and was not his enemy, neither did seek him any harm:

24 Then the Congregation shall judge between the slayer and the avenger of blood, according to these judgments.

25 And the Congregation shall deliver the slayer out of the hand of the revenger of blood, and the Congregation shall restore him unto the City of his refuge, whither he was fled: and he shall abide in it unto the death of the high Priest, &c.

26 But if the slayer shall at any time come without the border of the City of his refuge, whither he was fled:

27 And the revenger of blood find him without the borders of the City of his refuge, and the revenger of blood kill the manslayer, he shall not be guilty of blood.

28 Because he should have remained in the City of his refuge, till the death of the high priest: but after the death of the high priest, the slaier shall return into the land of his possession.

29 So these things shall be for a Statute of judgment unto you throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

The Law touching killing at unawares, is delivered in these words; the substance whereof is this, That if a man take away life from any suddenly without any enmity, or do cast a stone at adventure without laying of wait, or cast anything upon him and see him not, the Congregation shall deliver him out of y^e hand of the avenger of blood, because though he did kill him, yet he was not his enemy, neither sought his hurt, or plotted his death. So the Lord in his law propoundeth sundry like cases, Exod. 21, 13, 14. and Deut. 19, 4, 5. Whosoever killeth his neighbor ignorantly, whom he hated not in times past, as when a man goeth into the wood with his neighbor to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the head slippeth from the hell•e, and lighteth upon his neighbor that he die, he shall flee into one of those Cities and live, &c: and he must abide therein unto the death of the high Priest which was anointed with the holy oil. But if such slayer shall go out of the border of the City of his refuge whither he was fled, and the avenger find him and slay him, he shall not be guilty of blood, because he had a place of safety and refuge given unto him, and he ought to have remained therein according unto the law.

Out of this division some questions will be moved, [Object.] which are needful to be handled & considered: as first of all, whether the Auenger of blood, while his heart is hot, might lawfully pursue him that killed another of ignorance, and when he found him out of his City and Sanctuary might slay him? [Answ.] I answer, God doth not approve or allow such dealing simply, but doth indeed utterly condemn it. For the judicial and political laws do not always serve to bring men to perfection, and to establish perfect holiness and righteousness amongst us, but in some sort to remedy the vices whereunto we are inclined: so that the Lord hath an eye to the inconveniences that might ensue: whereas if we will speak what the eternal law of right & wrong, which is the law of righteousness, alloweth, & what every man's duty is towards men made after the image of God; then doubtless, when a man hath given a blow with his hand unwittingly, so as it do sufficiently and evidently appear to be so, the next friend or kinsman ought not to step up to seek revenge, because in so doing he offendeth God, both in setting upon the party that hath done him no wrong by his will, Rom. 12, 29. Matth. 5, 44. and in fathering that thing upon a mortal mā, which God had ordained in his secret providence, Exod. 21, 13. God hath delivered him into his hand. This is the perpetual law of equity and honesty, and therefore that which is delivered in this place is only a posit^{•••} Law established no[•] to instruct, but to restrain thē, and to remedy a greater mischief in case they had been altogether bridled and wholly $\langle \diamond \rangle$ reaved of all power.

This teacheth us a plain truth, which I only point a[•] with the finger, that God tolerateth many things among his people, which he never liketh and alloweth, as appeareth in the cause of divorce, De[•]. 24, 1, they were permitted upon dislike to put away their w^{•••}, provided that they delivered unto her a bill of diuorcement, to be a witness of her honesty, that through the willfulness and waywardness of her husband, she should not be defamed. Nevertheless, God never liked this simply no more then their marrying of many wives, because she was given to him to be the companion of his life, and the delight of his eyes, and the comfort of his heart all his days, and was as it were one part of his own person, and therefore to cast her off was after a sort a cutting off of himself in the middes, whereupon Christ saith, Math. 19, 8, 9, that the Lord did it for the hardness of their hearts. So in the case of usury, he permitteth them to take usury of the stranger, that they might not practice it toward their brother: and sundry such like, lest they should do worse.

Secondly, the question may be asked, [Object.] whether this killing at unawares or against ones will, whom God is said to have delivered into his hands, be a sin or not? This is so much the more necessary to be thought upon, because the Lord showeth, Deut. 19, 6, thar such a man is guiltless of the other man's death, forasmuch as he did not hate him before, neither did presumptuously rise up against him, to slay him with guile. Howbeit in this place such a person is commanded to remain as a banished man out of his own place & house, and from his own kindred, and is confined to the city of refuge until the death of the high Priest, which no doubt had relation to Christ. I answer, [Answ.] there is no repugnancy in all these things. For this fact must be considered two ways, judicially, or morally. If we do respect what such an one deserveth in the Court of man's judgment, it is true he is not guilty he deserveth not to dy, or to recompense life for life. But if we speak simply, what is sin by the law of God which is spiritual, who keepeth a court of conscience, an higher court and seat of Justice then all mortal men do or can do, we cannot pronounce such a one innocent or guiltles before the bench of this Lord chief Justice. Or to speak more plainly, there is a twofold Judgment, the one of God, and the other of man. In the judgment of mā he may be taken to be innocent, because Deu. 19. his blood is called innocent, to wit, in respect of man's judgment whom he hath not offended: howbeit in the judgment of God, which goeth further, and pierceth deeper, it is otherwise. The Papists because they would have some proof and testimony, or at least some show and appearance that all sin is voluntary, do allege the examples of such as have killed at unawares or against their will, and make this to be no sin, and that by the authority of their vulgar Interpreter, who saith, Numb. 35.25. Liberabitur innocens, that is, The innocent shall be delivered out of the hand of the avenger. But almighty God (who keepeth from all evil) keep us & all other good Christians from such kind of innocence. Besides, in the Hebrew Text, the word is Harotzaach, that is, The killer shall be delivered, and not the innocent person. Touching the point in general, whether all sin be a voluntary action, we have spoken before, and proved sufficiently the contrary. And albeit S. Augustine be often alleged by our adversaries, affirming that sin is an evil so voluntary, that it can by no means be sin except it be voluntary: yet in his Retractations, he maketh his opinion plain, and restrayneth that particularly, which in other places he seemed to propound and leave at large; for he saith, Sine voluntate nullum est peccatum, sieve in opere, sieve in origin: that is, There is no sin without the will, either in the work, or in the original, or the beginning.

Whereby it plainly appeareth that in the special work there are sins even in his judgment which are not voluntary, as those that come of ignorance, or of compulsion, or as concupiscence and original infection: yet all these may truly be called voluntary, in regard of the first man's first offense, in whom was the freedom of will, all which are no other but fruits and effects of his sin. So then, he teacheth that the sin which is a punishment of sin is not always voluntary, but the sin, which hath no other consideration but of sin, is voluntary. The sins which we commit, are both sins and the punishments of sin: but Adams sin, in whom we all sinned being in his loins, which was only a sin and not the punishment of any sin going before, is voluntary. And in this respect the slaughter committed at unawares, may well be said to be voluntary, because it is a fruit of the first man's disobedience, so that we may truly say, From the beginning it was not so. For if Adam had never sinned, there should never any such manslaughter have been committed.

But now to return unto the particular point in question, that the Jesuits would prove all sin voluntary, because manslaughter done without consent of will is no sin: we hold all such shedding of blood done of ignorance to be a sin of ignorance: & that no man so killing and taking away life, can wash his hands in innocence. For such a one by the law must fly to the City of refuge, and be imprisoned there, until the death of the high Priest; which argueth that there was something in the facte, or in the error by which the fact was committed, that hath need of forgiveness by Christ, the true high Priest of our profession, of whom the high Priest in the law was a figure. And hence it is, that the punishment laid upon the man-slayer was so straight, that if he were taken out of the City of refuge before the death of the high Priest, he might be slain, verse 32, forasmuch as such a one seemed to make no account of the death of Christ, nor to seek deliverance from blood by his blood.

But some man may say, [Objection.] that the City of refuge was appointed only for the trial of the slaughter, whether it were committed willingly or unwillingly, of malice or of ignorance, and not for any regard of punishment at all.

This indeed is objected, [Answer.] but it is as easily answered. For if the City had been assigned only for examination and trial of the facte, then immediately after the knowledge of the manner of doing, and the party brought to his purgation, he should forthwith be discharged and delivered. But this was not so, he must remain and continue there peradventure all the days of his life, at least all y^e days of the high Priests life. Besides, the high Priest might have died the next day after the man-slayers flying thither before his cause came to be handled and tried, yet even then he was to be set at liberty. Therefore it appeareth, that this was also a kind of punishment, and was inflicted for farther detestation of manslaughter, so that if the slayer were found out of his City before the death of the high Priest, the avenger of blood might kill him, and yet not be charged with his blood. So then, as the death of the high Priest did free the manslayer, so such persons were taught to fly to the death of the Messiah that must be slain, in whom was all their hope of deliverance, and comfort that this their sin should be done away. Ambrose is clear in this point, that the high Priest signifieth Christ Jesus. So is Cyril, Maximus, and others, who by the death of the high Priest in this place, do gather deliverance by the death of Christ. S. Jerome is plain in that whole case touching sins of ignorance, and that he which is fled to the City of refuge, must tarry until the high Priests death, that is, until he be redeemed by the precious blood of our Lord and Savior. Theodoret is more plain then all these; for he asketh this question, Why until the death of the high Priest doth he prescribe return unto him, which hath slain a man unwillingly? and he answereth, Because the death of the high Priest which is after the order of Melchizedek, was the loosing of the sin of man: whereby he declareth two things; both the mystery of the high Priests death, signifying the death of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, whose blood cleanseth the shedding of blood, and washeth away the guilt of all sin, voluntary or involuntary, and withal he showeth that such unwilling man-slaughter is a sin. Yea, this is so clear a point, that Cardinal Allen forgetting the doctrine of his fellows; and the foundation whereupon they build, in his book of popish pardons, chapt. 5, telleth us out of the Council of Ancyre, holden well near 1300. years since, in the purest time of Christian religion, when our adversaries dare not say that the faith was corrupted, that the Apostles and Bishops have ever beside the preaching of the Gospel, exercised the power of the keys committed to the Church, and inflicted due punishment for every deadly sin, justly respecting the greuousnesse thereof: and among the rest he noteth, that for murderers if it were not voluntary, were appointed seven years penance; but if it were willful, till the ende of their life. Now would this Council so ancient and so pure, as the Jesuit pretendeth, have enjoined so long penance and punishment for innocent persons, and such as had committed no sin at all? So then to ende this matter, albeit the Lord acquit the party after a sort that hath slain a man unwittingly, so that there shall no judgment of death pass upon him, yet he was constrained to forsake his own house and inheritance, and to dwell in a strange place, and to suffer many inconveniences, to his decay and impouerishing, and peradventure his utter undoing, his wives and children. Wherefore God would have the party that offendeth unwittingly, nevertheless to abide some punishment, to the intent he may humble himself. And I suppose there is no good man, if such a thing should befall him, but would be humbled and grieved for it all the days of his life, and crave of God forgiveness of what is past, albeit there were no evil meant on his part; and likewise pray unto him earnestly for the time to come, that he would rule his hands and his feet better, & so order all his steppes that he never swerve frō his holy commandments.

Now to come to the ground of the Doctrine, three sorts are here directed touching blood; the people, the avenger, and the Judge. The people is restrained, the avenger is permitted, the Judge warranted and allowed. The people is restrained, not permitted: the avenger is permitted, not restrained: the Judge is permitted and allowed, nay commanded to draw the sword. The people sin if they shed blood; the Judge if he do not.

This teacheth, that it is a sin for men to do that which GOD hath appointed to be done, when they have no particular calling or commandment for them to do it. This is manifested unto us in the facte of Zipporah, the wife of Moses, taking a knife, and circumcising her son. Circumcision was one of the sacraments that God had ordained, that every male of eight days should be circumcised, and have the foreskinne of his flesh cut off, Exo. 4, 25. howbeit she sinned grievously, because she would do it without a calling, which was for man, not for the woman to do: and therefore it appeareth she had no moe children, as we observed elsewhere, chap. 12, and beside she wanted the presence and company of her husband a long time after, and when she returned unto him, she was vexed and afflicte^d by the emulation of Miriam a••Aaron. So Saul sinned in offering up sacrifice, who ought to have stayed for the coming of Samuel: sacrifices were commanded of God, but he did it without a calling, & therefore Samuel telleth him he had done foolishly, 1. Sam. 13, 14. The like we might say of Uzziah, 2 Chron. 26, 16, otherwise a good king; he went into the Temple of the Lord, and presumed to offer incense, which was peculiar to the Priests: and therefore having no direction from God, though he did a good thing, yet he was presently smitten with leprosy, 2 Chr. 26, 14, 20. This we saw before in Korah and his company, chap. 16. Amnon abusing his sister Tamar by filthy incest, ought by the law of God to suffer death, Absalom killeth him with the sword, he did that which God commanded, Levite. 18, 9, 29, and David had to answer for it, because he put him not to death; nevertheless Absalom sinned grievously in the doing of it, because he was no Magistrate. So then the point is plain, that a man may sin, and that grievously, in doing the things that God commandeth, when he hath no warrant to do them.

The grounds are these. First, he doth it [Reason 1] without any commandment from GOD. Whensoever a commandment is limited to persons and places, to them it is a commandment, and to no others. The commandments and orders that are directed to such as are free of a city, or of a company, or incorporation, are no commandments to those thar are forrainers: so in this case, a commandment to some maketh it a sin to them, if they leave it undone: whereas on the other side, the not commanding maketh it a sin to others that do it, because it is the commandment that maketh things either lawful or unlawful. Where there is no sight, there can be no blindness, but it is blindness when it is found in y^e subject where sight ought to be. We cannot say there is blindness in a stone, because it is not capable of sight. Therefore we say, that in indifferent things there can be no sin, either to do, or not to do, & the ground is, because there is no commandment. Secondly, it is a rule, that all good being out of his proper subject is evil. Consider this in the natural body. Is it not evil in nature, for the eye to be in place of the hand, y^t should be in the head? Or for the finger to grow in the fore-head, that should be in the hand? this maketh a monster in the body, when a member is out of his proper subject. So we may say for moral good, whē it is out of his proper place, it is no more good, but is turned into evil.

If any ask, what is y^e proper subject of good? I answer, the proper subject of good is he to whom it is commanded; and the improper subject is, where there is no such commandment, [Use 1] By this a man may look into himself, and see as it were in a glass the defects and deformities of his soul, and namely, that he doth many things good for the matter and substance, and good in those that have a calling and commandment for it; yet evil in him, because he wanteth a commandment, and consequently hath no warrant for the doing thereof. All such have cause to humble themselves for the evil which they have brought upon themselves, by doing good things without any good calling. To preach the word, to administer the Sacraments, to make public prayer, are necessary parts of the holy worship of God that must be performed, they are the only instruments to save the precious souls of men; and yet these, even these are grievous sins to men to meddle with them that have no power or precept given unto them to perform them. There is nothing so much commanded of GOD as to do these things, yet nothing more sinful then these, when they are done without a commandment and a commission. If a man of a private trade and occupation shall presume to preach the word of God, having no calling thereunto, it is most ungodly, let his gifts be what they may be, let him be able to speak with the tongue of men and Angels, and let him divide the word of truth rightly, and interpret the same soundly, yet it is Anabaptistical, and a great sin and impiety. So likewise we may say for private Baptism to be performed by a woman under a pretence of necessity; as if there were any necessity in sinning, or to make the people of God go out of their calling: and yet so wretched and wicked is our age, that this sin is not only committed, but also defended.

One well observeth that it cannot be lawful for women to baptize, and he confirmeth it by this, because it was not given to the mother of Christ that she (who was blessed above all other women) should do it. If then it were lawful for any, then certainly much more for her to touch these holy things: what wicked women then, what bloody Zipporahs are those of our time that dare undertake this holy thing without any calling? It is evil in those midwives that usurp this office, but worse in those that commend and defend this sin.

Let all therefore both men and women examine themselves in those things; if they have broken the banks that God hath set them, & have yet carried it away, and no plague from God hath overtaken them that have undertaken such works impertinent unto them, then let them know that they are to acknowledge the great mercy of GOD toward them, that he did not strike thē dead in the very act, as he did Uzzah that touched the Ark, (otherwise a good man) because he did a good act without any calling thereunto. Neither let any dream that God doth approve of them, because he doth not presently punish them, Eccles. 8: but consider they have to do with a God of patience; and albeit they go away, & prosper for a time, yet in the end he will find them out and punish them. Likewise in this kind they offend, who take upon them to reprove, whom, and where, and when they please, without due observation of fit circumstances. It is indeed a duty commanded that some should reprove, and some be reprov'd for sin, Levite. 19, 14. Prov. 9, 8: yet every man is not to reprove all, at all times and in all places, only it lieth upon them that have a calling to reprove, and therefore it is a sin in others. So when private men take upon them to reform public abuses, as to pull down images, and to abolish the monuments of Idolatry, they sin in this case against God and the Magistrate: against the Magistrate, in taking his calling out of his hand that belongeth to him: & against God, in that they do it without his direction. True it is, the word teacheth that their altars should be destroyed, their images must be broken down, their idols burned; but it is a word to the Magistrate: he sinneth if he do it not, because he performeth not God's commandment: y^e private person sinneth if he do it, because he doth it without any commandment, nay against the commandment. The brazen serpent must be stamped in pieces, if once the people offer incense unto it, and commit idolatry with it, howbeit it must be done by Hezekiah; 2 Kings 18, 4. If a private man buy an house, & find therein sundry images & many monuments of idolatry, he may abolish thē; & if any of his family have gotten such, he may take them away and deface them, as Jacob did cleanse his house, Gen. 35, 2: because he is a Master & Magistrate in his own family: but to do it in public, where he is no Magistrate, he may not without sin, as the Magistrate himself may not omit it without sin.

Secondly, everyone ought to labor to [Use 2] know his own calling, and to be assured how far it stretcheth, and will bear him out. This should persuade everyone of us, that in every good thing which we do, we should be sure that sin cleave not unto us, and that we attempt nothing, before we have our commission sealed and sent unto us. When we go about anything, it is not enough to weigh how good it is, but to look what warrant we have to do it. It is not the goodness of the thing that will free us from sin, but the warrant that we have to do it. We must have a general warrant that the work is good, and a particular also, that it is good for us, and in us.

But some will say, how shall a man know, [Object.]that he hath a commandment in particular to do this or that? [Answer.] I answer, if any man be such a one as he to whom the commandment is given: or if the commandment be given to him in general, then he may gather that the commandment doth belong unto him in particular, so that in doing the same, he shall not only do a good work, but the work shall be good in him. So then, every man must reason thus with himself, God hath commanded me to do it, and therefore out of conscience to his commandment I will do it, forasmuch as to obey is better then sacrifice, and to hearken then the fat of rams, 1 Sam. 15, 22. And if Saul himself had obeyed, it had been better for him then to have offered up his sacrifice, though it had been of the chiefest of y^e things, which should have been destroyed. It is a policy of Satan, and it were good that none were ignorant of it, and that all would take notice of it, that if he cannot make men abide and abound in evil, but that they will needs be doing of good, then he will labor to make them do good unlawfully and unseasonably, by bringing them to do some good, whereunto they have no calling. Thus he maketh again to himself, even by the works themselves of godliness: and therefore it should be the care and wisdom of every man to look to God's word, and to his own warrant in doing of anything, and not suffer our selves to be deluded by him. If the disciples of Christ had duly observed this, they would never have desired to bring fire from heaven & consume the Samaritans that would not receive him, as Elias had done to destroy the captains that scoffed at him, 2 Kings 1, 10. Luke 9, 54, but they would have considered, that they were not endued with the same spirit, neither fitted with that calling, nor armed with that power. Peter would not have drawn the sword to strike the the high Priests servant, if he had called to mind that the sword was not put into his hands, Math. 26, 51. Let every man labor to see what God hath called him unto, and look to the things commanded unto him: private men may not take upon them to reform everything that is amiss, having no authority thereunto: and if they should come to suffer for such things, they shall find but little comfort in their sufferings, because this is to suffer as evil doers, albeit not for doing of evil.

[Use 3] Lastly, if it be unlawful to do good sometimes, when it is done unlawfully, then how much more is it unlawful to do that which in it self and in it own nature is unlawful? And if God reject the actions of men when they are done in an evil manner, how much more doth he abhor the works of carnal men when they are wicked & ungodly in the very substance? And if he accept not those actions w^c might be don well, if they were done by another, how much less those y^t can be well done by none? Of which we may say with Solomon, Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, how much more the wicked and the sinner? Prov. 11, 31. If the faithful offend in doing lawful things, much more do the ungodly, that never regard to do any good. And if they sin against God that hear his word amiss, how much more sinful are they that will not hear it at all? And if they provoke the wrath of God that do good in an evil manner, much more do they that sin in an evil matter, and most of all when the heart is evil also, as Prov. 21, 27, The sacrifice of the wicked is abomination, how much more when he bringeth it with a wicked mind? The faithful have many times a good intent, when they think to do God good service, and yet are not accepted, because they fail in the manner: woe then to those whose very hearts are set upon evil, and have no delight in that which is good at any time.

30 Whoso killeth any person, the murderer shall be put to death, by the mouth of witnesses: but one witness shall not testify against any person, to cause him to die.

31 Moreover ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is guilty of death, but he shall be surely put to death.

33 And ye shall take no satisfaction for him that is fled to the city of his refuge, that he should come again to dwell in the land, until the death of the Priest,

33 So ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are: for blood, it defileth the land, and the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it.

34 Defile not therefore the land which ye shall inhabit, wherein I dwell: for I the Lord dwell among the children of Israel.

The third and last part remaineth, laying forth the office of the Judges touching slaughter: wherein observe two things; first, the Law of putting the murderer to death, which must pass by the verdict of two or three witnesses, verse 30. Secondly, the Judges are forbidden to take any satisfaction for the life of a murderer, because innocent blood shed defileth the Land, yea in such an horrible manner and measure, that all the water in the sea cannot wash it away, for the Land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed, but by the blood of him that shed it. And no marvel, seeing they might take no satisfaction for him y^t bad killed a man at unawares, to deliver him from the city of his refuge before the death of the high Priest. From these words we learn, how heinous a sin murder is. Again, that willful murderers are not to be spared, the eye of the Magistrate must not pity thē, if they be desirous to revenge the dishonor done unto God, or to cleanse their own Land, or to save their own lives. But mark farther how GOD will have such proceeded against; they shall not die by the mouth of one witness: he requireth in judicial courts, that every matter should be tried by two or three witnesses, that the guilty should not be acquitted, and that the innocent might not be condemned. So then the point from hence is this, that God will have no innocent person put to death, but that everyone should receive according to his own works. Deut. 13, 14, and 17, 4, Thou shalt enquire, and make search, and ask diligently, whether it be a truth, and the thing certain: he will have no man condemned upon accusations, suspicions, and presumptions, Isaiah 5, 13, Psal. 37, 6, Pro. 24, 23. This was the sin of Saul, who commanded to kill the Priests of the Lord, 1, Sam. 22, 16, as if they had conspired against him, Job 29, 16.

[Reason 1] The grounds are these; first from the nature of God, he is a just and righteous God, the Judge of all the earth, and he respecteth no man's person; therefore they that sit in his place and execute his judgment, and have his Name communicated unto them, ought to deal uprightly, Deuter. 1, 16, 17. Secondly, wrong judgment is abominable in the sight of God, Pro. 17, 15, whether it be to justify the wicked, or to condemn the innocent. Thirdly, it kindleth the Lord's wrath against the land, when innocent blood is shed, Ier. 26, 14, 15, As for me, behold I am in your hand, do with me as seemeth good and meet unto you; but know ye for certain, that if ye put me to death, ye shall surely bring innocent blood upon yourselves, and upon this city, and upon the inhabitants thereof, as 1 Kings 21, 19.

[Use 1] The uses follow. First, this serveth for instruction to all that are in authority, to take heed to themselves, that they walk with a right foot, and turn neither to the right hand nor to the left, according as God requireth Levite. 19, 15, Thou shalt do no unrighteousness in judgment; thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honor the person of the mighty, but in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbor. Against this they offend many ways: when they give false judgment, and cause the same to be executed: when they defer judgment, & put it off, as Felix did from day today, Acts 24, 25: for while judgment hangeth thus in suspense, the just is often taken for the unjust, and contrariwise the unjust fought the just: lastly, when the sentence rightly pronounced is delayed, and sometimes not at all executed. The Scripture expresseth the fault and the punishment by one and the same word, to teach that they should be joined together, and not severed, and that he should be holden for innocent and unblameable that hath no punishment inflicted, Exod. 20, 7: and therefore the error of the Romanists is blasphemous, who lay this injustice upon God, that he forgiveth the faithful their offenses, but retaineth the punishment. All men do very willingly confess, that it is a very heinous crime to condemn the just man; but they do not in like manner, and with like zeal abhor from justifying the ungodly: but the Spirit of God testifieth, that they are both abominable in his sight, he abhorreth the one no less then the other: and so it ought to be with those that sit in place of judgment, otherwise they transgress the Law of God, which commandeth, that his blood should be upon his own head. Again, such persons are for the most part made worse and worse, and are never brought to repentance, as experience commonly teacheth. Besides, by this sparing and winking at evil, the godly are often grieved, and sometimes are emboldened to evil. Lastly, other wicked men by their example are encouraged, and their hearts are hardened. Hence it is that Solomon saith, Prov. 24, 24, He that saith unto the wicked, Thou art righteous, him shall the people curse, nations shall abhor him. This equity doth Moses also propound in the Law, If there be a controversy between men, and they come unto judgment that the Judges may judge them, then they shall justify the righteous, and condemn the wicked, Deut. 25, 2.

But it will be said, [Object.] that the Scripture teacheth, that God justifieth the ungodly, Rom. 4, 5: and therefore he that executeth judgment may do the like also. I answer; first, [Answ.] that is lawful for God to do, which is not lawful for man.

Again, God in justifying the ungodly, of unrighteous maketh him righteous, and by paying a dear price for him, cleanseth and washeth away his impiety, and giveth unto him another mind then he had before, which no mortal man is able to do; and therefore it is unreasonable to pretend the example of God, or to allege it to justify themselves when they justify the ungodly. This corruption must needs be evil, because it proceedeth from evil fountains; for judgment is stayed, or perverted, either through fear, or covetousness, or hope, or hatred, or favor, or malice, or letters, or such like affections which blind the eyes, and stop the ears, and pervert the wise, 2 Chron. 19, 6, 7. But in the mean season they displease the Lord, and by winking at the wicked they make themselves abominable to the chief Judge of heaven and earth, before whom they must come to be judged: and in sparing of grievous transgressors (which ought to be punished) they make themselves accessories to their transgressiōs, & many times like Saul & Ahab, & Pilate, they bear a part of the punishment.

Secondly, this admonisheth all Iurers, that [Use 2] they take great heed whom they acquit, and whom they condemn. If they condemn the innocent, their blood will be required at their hands. And if they justify any that are guilty of blood (which is a crying sin) or other heinous enormities, & labor the rest of their fellows & companions to join with them, they are brethren in evil, and stayne the judgment seat with unrighteous proceeding, which is worse then if they should cast dust and dounge in the Judges face. These do often forget that they are sworn men, and give their verdict upon their oth: for if they did, they would not so lightly set their souls to sale. These for the most part think themselves excused by the Judge, and hang more upon his mouth, then hold themselves to the matter. Such persons ought not to be simple men, but such as should be able to judge, and to discern between right and wrong.

[Use 3] Lastly, let us come to witnesses, which are other parties in the matter of judgment, and are especially aimed at in this place; it directeth and informeth them to know what they do, and where they stand. Let them take heed what they depose, lest by forswearing themselves, they renounce the living God, and bring damnation upon their souls. A man would think that an oth were such a weight and burden upon the conscience, that no man would dare to step forth, and lay his hand upon the book, and afterward sell himself to the devil. There is nothing so vile & wretched, but some will be found as vile to set it on foot. If Ahab be sick for Naboth's vineyard, Jezebel can quickly by her letters procure two false varlets and vnthrifths in Samaria to bear false witness against him, 1 Kings 21, 10. So when the malice and envy of the Pharisees grew to be extreme against Christ, and that they feared the fall of their kingdom, though he were innocence it self, yet there were found false witnesses to condemn the innocent, Math. 26, 60, 61. Hence it is, that the Ecclesiastical Laws have not hand over head admitted all without difference and discretion to be brought and allowed as witnesses, but have set down seven just considerations of exceptions against witnesses, in this manner, Aetas, conditio, sexus, discretio, fama,

Fortuna, & fides.

The first point to be respected in witnesses is, that they be of age: for such as are infants, children, or yonglings know not the depth of the cause, nor the validity of an oth, nor the distinction of matters whereupon they are to be produced, and therefore they may stand by while the jury is impanelled. And to these we may join the old dotting age which decayeth in understanding, no less then it doth in strength of body. Secondly, the condition of the persons, whether they be bond or free. The tenant for his land-lord, the servant for his Master, the father and son one for another are worthily esteemed to be partial witnesses. Thirdly, the sex whether it be man or woman: for a woman's testimony wanteth much of the weight of the other, because many of them are partial and passionate, & light creatures, if it be opposed against the testimony of a wise and considerate man. They are soon led aside by affection, by pity or favor, and therefore never any of them were admitted to sit in place of judgment, where the Judge should know neither father nor mother. Fourthly, discretion; for idiots and lunatike persons, or mad men, would prove but mad witnesses to be admitted in trials of truth, who cannot discern aright of themselves and of their own estate. For how should they be able to dive into the causes of other men, that have not the use of reason or understanding? Fifthly, fame is not to be contemned in this case: for they should be men of good report and credit in the places of their abode: not common swearers, not liars, not drunkards, and ruffians: for such as swear commonly, make no more conscience of an oth taken before a Judge, then of an oth sitting upon their ale-bench: and such as are tainted and stained with the reproach of many evils, will easily be drawn to add one sin of perjury more to the heaps of their other wickedness. Sixthly their estate or ability, what their lands or livings be, what goods and substance they have, where their dwelling and abode is, whether they have anything to lose; and be able to make satisfaction, if happily they be found tainted. For beggars and bankrout, strangers and straglers, unknown and untried, may soon be brought to lift at an oth for a little money and for hope of gain: and the party grieved and abused by their falsehood and forgery, shall purchase their ears (when they are in the pillery) at a dear rate if he list to sue at the Law for them. Lastly, their faith or religion is of special consideration, because that is the bond of all good order. If they fear God and regard their conscience, there is no fear of them, we need make no scruple of conscience to allow of them. For infidels, Turks, heretics, or unbelievers make little account to renounce & sell Christ and the Christian faith (which they do not believe) fought a small gain and advantage. Nevertheless, the Gentiles themselves did put such religion in oaths, if they had sworn solemnly by their false gods, that they feared vengeance to fall upon them, if they did break them. Thus we have seen what witnesses ought to be: now let us see how they offend when they are such as they ought not to be. For no man must think it a small offense to wrest judgment, and to be a false witness: inasmuch as they offend against God, against the truth, against the Judge, against the person accused, against the commonwealth, and against themselves.

First of all, they sin against GOD himself, who is the Author of truth and the President of judgment seats; for they fear not to lie shamelessly to his face, and to pollute and defile his Tribunal, they despise and contemn his Law, and call upon him to be a witness of falsehood. Secondly, they do offend against the truth, which is that only light wherein the knowledge of things consisteth: this they go about to darken with their lies, and to hide it from the sight of men, as they that cover a candle under a bushel, or like to thieves that cannot abide the light, but put it out, that neither they nor their doings may be espied. Thirdly, they transgress against the Judge, who pronounceth sentence according to the words of the witnesses, and maketh their depositions as a rule to guide and direct him. It is a common thing for the Judge to err and to go astray, being seduced and deceived by their falsehood, pronouncing with his mouth, sealing with his hand, and striking with his sword, otherwise then it ought to be: who ought to be the instrument, the oracle, and the interpreter of God. Fourthly, against such as are accused and brought to judgment whether they be guilty, or not guilty. If they be guilty, and be acquitted and discharged by them, they free them from punishment, which might be a good means to do them good, when they should receive according to their deserts: and besides, they encourage them in evil, because to escape without punishment, inflameth them with a desire to continue in evil. If they be not guilty, they are wronged and oppressed by their false testimony, either in their life, or in their goods, or in their name, or in such like earthly blessings. For whatsoever is taken from the condemned person by sentence of the Judge, is all done by the fault of the false witness. If life be taken from him, he is the murderer: if he lose any of his goods, he is the thief: if his good name be impaired, he is the slanderer. Fifthly, against the commonwealth, because the end of judgments and of the courts of justice is not attained, to wit, the peace and tranquility of the people. For wherefore serve so many places and seats of judgment, but that we should lead a peaceable and a quiet life? The end of war is said to be peace, so the end of suites is, that we should not sue. Now this great and precious jewel of peace is wronged and wrested, when the Judge, following the rule of the witnesses, and judging according to things alleged and proved, doth condemn the innocent, and absolve the guilty person. For as he is injurious against my body y^t cutteth off a sound arm or leg; so is he against y^e city, which casteth way a good and profitable citizen. Again, as he is hurtful to my body, that doth not cut off a rotten member, or persuade the Surgeon to cut it or to burn it, when need requireth, because the sound members that remain are endangered thereby: so likewise he that moveth or persuadeth the Judge to acquit a guilty person, who is no better to the commonwealth, then a rotten member is to the body, is an enemy to the state, and injurious to the body political. Lastly, against himself, because he depriveth himself of all blessings belonging to soul and body. The Lord professeth himself to be a sharp and speedy Judge against those that swear falsely, Zach. 5, 4. Mal. 3.5. Hence it is, that Solomon saith, A false witness shall not be unpunished, and he that speaketh lies shall not escape, Prov. 19, 5.9, and chapt.

25, 18, A man that beareth false witness against his neighbor is a maule, and a sword, and a sharp arrow, to wit, not only toward his brother, but striking, piercing, wounding, and hurting himself. It is the part of an envious person to pull out both his own eyes to put out one of his neighbors: but such are all false witnesses, they annoy themselves in soul and body, that they may hurt the body only of their brother.

So then, a false witness doth hurt himself more then he doth another, or can do. He may by his false testimony take away his goods or his life, or his name, and this is all: when in the mean season he destroyeth and damneth his own soul, and casteth it into hell fire, there to be tormented with the devil and his angels.

CHAP. XXXVI.

1 AND the chief fathers of the families of the children of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, of the families of the sons of Joseph, came near and spake before Moses, and before the Princes the chief fathers of the children of Israel.

2 And they said, The Lord commanded my Lord to give the land for an inheritance by lot to the children of Israel: and my Lord was commanded by the Lord, to give the inheritance of Zelophehad our brother, unto his daughters.

3 And if they be married to any of the sons of the other tribes of the children of Israel, then shall their inheritance be taken from the inheritance of our fathers, and shall be put to the inheritance of the tribe, whereunto they are received: so shall it be taken from the lot of our inheritance.

4 And when the Jubilee of the children of Israel shall be, then shall their inheritance be put unto the inheritance of the Tribe, whereunto they are received: so shall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of the tribes of our fathers.

WHereas Moses had spoken before of the dividing of the inheritance in general among the tribes: in this place a certain special case is propounded by the Manassites touching the right of inheritance before assigned to the daughters of Zelophehad, to wit, how provision might be made y^t the same portion might remain in that tribe, and not be conveyed or translated to some of the other tribes. For they propound these 2 as repugnant one to y^e other, the right of succession which these women had obtained, and the privilege of the year of Jubilee, which they thought was weakened by this means, if happily these maids should marry to any other husbands then men of their own tribe; neither did they know how to clear this doubt. But Moses, instructed of God, setteth down a Law, that inheritance should not pass from tribe to tribe, and that such as were inheritrixes might not marry any of other tribes, but among their own only, which was carefully observed by these women. This is the sum of this chapter, wherewith the whole book is concluded. In this observe three points; first, the question of the Manassites; secondly, the resolution of Moses; thirdly, the marriage of the daughters of Zelophehad. Touching the first, it is handled in these four verses. The question was moved by the chief heads of the tribe of Manasseh, how the inheritance might rest: without a manifest detriment to their tribe? For if they should marry in another tribe, it was as much as to cut off an arm from the body. And by this means it might come to pass in process of time, that the chief portion assigned to one tribe might be possessed by men of other tribes, which would breed great confusion and disorder. This practice and proceeding of theirs teacheth, first, that the Magistrate is and ought to be the supreme Judge in causes of inheritance. Secondly, no man ought to be Judge in his own cause. Thirdly, we see how they come to Moses, not in contempt or with a commotion, as if they meant to gain that by force which they could not obtain by favor, but they bear themselves lowly and dutifully as became them to the Magistrate, when they say, The Lord commanded my Lord: and again, My Lord was commanded, &c. From hence we learn, that it is the duty of all inferiors to reverence the superiors in gesture, in word, & in deed. We might also show that Magistrates must acknowledge themselves to rule under God, and to be Lord's under that highest Lord. But we will only handle this point, that inferiors must use speeches of reverence, such as betoken subjection; this we saw before, chapt. 11, 28, and 32, 5, 25, 31. 2 Kings 5 13, 1 Peter 3, 6. Nehem. 2, 5. Esther 7, 3. 2 Sam. 24, 3. 1 Kings 1, 23, 24, 31. 2 Kings 2, 12, and 13, 14. Mal. 1, 6. 1 Sam. 25, 24, 25, 26 27, 28. Gen. 16, 9.

The grounds first, because superiors bear [Reason 1] the image of God, and are to their inferiors in God's place, as Moses was to Aaron, when the Lord saith, Exod. 4, 16. Thou shalt be unto him instead of God.

Secondly, it is the express law of God, To honor father and mother, that is, all superiors, Exod. 20, 12. Psal. 82, 6. 1 Tim. 5, 3. They are set over inferiors for their good, not for their own, 1 Tim. 2, •. where the Apostle teacheth, that Princes are appointed unto eminent place, not to lift up their hearts against their brethren, and to maintain themselves in all riot and excess, but that the people may lead a quiet & peaceable life under them. Fourthly such do adorn the Gospel.

This serveth to reprove such as are so far [Use 1] from giving of good words, and using soft & gentle speech savoring of Christian modesty and subjection, that they revile them, rail at them, and speak all manner of evil against them; which they ought not to do unto any, much less to their fathers, or masters, or Magistrates, to whom they are bound in a nearer band, and tied to a farther duty. Hence it is, that Moses saith, Exod. 22, 28. Thou shalt not revile the gods, nor curse the ruler of thy people. It is delivered as a general precept, binding all that will be the children of God, Bless them that persecute you; bless I say, & curse not, Rom. 12, 14. I am. 3, 9, 10. It is a thing acceptable to God, to speak evil of no man, Titus 3, 2. It is therefore a thing detestable, to speak evil of our superiors, unto whom all dutiful language is due that savoreth of peace and love, nay of submission and subjection. The Apostle exhorteth servants to be obedient unto their own masters, and to please them in all things, not answering again with stout and unseemly words. Such then must learn by the fear of God to bridle their tongues, that they offend not that way, I am. 3, 4.

Many there are, who in their service are reasonable, but they have no rule over their tongue: they will not only mutter and murmur, but give cursed and cutted answers. It is the fruit of an evil servant to be evil tongued, and to take liberty to taunt in unseemly manner against those that are set over them. This was the sin of Agar, that despised her mistress, not only in her heart, but likewise in speech, Ge. 16, 4. Let such consider y^e words of Solomon, Prov. 15, 1. A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger, James chap. 1.20. Judge. 8. verses 1, 2, 3. 1 Sam. 25, 32.

Secondly, we see the place of subjection is [Use 2] not an unlawful calling, neither must we think that Christianity hath abolished Magistracy and civil authority, but rather ratifyeth and establisheth it, Titus 3, 1. 1 Tim, 6, 1. And it is lawful for good men, and especially for Magistrates & Ministers to have servants, as Abraham had many, Elijah one & likewise Elisha. Joseph had a Steward of his house, Jacob had men-servants and maid-servants, Gen. 14, 14, and 15, 2, and 44, 1, and 32, 16. Mephibosheth had a servant, and that servant had twenty servants, 2 Sam. 9, 10. This overthroweth the damnable sect of the Anabaptists and Libertines, who teach that Christians may not be subject unto any. [Objection.] They object, that they are the Lord's free-men. I answer, [Answer.] it is true, but this freedom is inward and spiritual, from sin and Satan, and condemnation.

[Object.] Again, they allege, that we are forbidden to be the servants of men, [Answ.] 1 Cor. 7. I answer, the meaning is, we are not to be addicted unto them servilely, in things unlawful and dishonest, or in obeying their traditions as God's Commandments. [Objection.] But Christ saith, Call no man master upon earth, Math. 23, 10, because one is our Master, [Answ.] even Christ. I answer, this must be understood as the former, when Christ forbiddeth to call any father, to wit, to hold him in chief, and not subordinate to Christ and for Christ.

[Objection.] Again, it is objected that sin brought in servitude and slavish subjection of man to man. For albeit in the innocent estate, there should have been teacher and scholar (though not by office and calling, to preach the word, or to teach schools) and governors, and the governed, [Answer.] yet not master and servant. I answer, sin was the occasion of sundry things in their nature good, or at least through God's mercy and blessing bringing good out of evil. For it brought into the world upon man a necessity to marry, for the avoiding of fornication: yea sin may be said to have caused a necessity of Christ's coming, as also to cause a necessity of preaching, and of laboring in the sweat of our brows, and a necessity likewise in relieving the poor. Besides, every kind of subjection is not against the law of pure Nature, as might be shown by the subjection of the wife to the husband, and of the children to their parents. So then, servitude is no new invention of cruel men in these latter days, neither is a faithful servant to be accounted a perpetual asse, crouching under his burden. No man must be ashamed of that calling, neither reprove it as evil and unlawful, but rather labor to adorn the Gospel in it, by serving, not with eye-service, but dealing faithfully as the servants of Christ.

[Use 3] Lastly, all superiors must so carry themselves, as that they may deserve reverence, and draw not contempt upon themselves, 1 Tim. 4, 12, Prov. 16, 31, and 21, 30. Leuitic. 19, 32. 1 Tim. 5, 1, 2. And those duties are of diverse sorts which are to be performed by them, whereof they are put in mind by the names whereby they are called.

The first degree of this superiority concerneth parents, to whom it belongeth to teach, to correct, to defend, and to provide for their children, as we have shown already, chap. 30. This reproveth such as are careless what become of them, such as pamper them to much, and suffer them to do what they list, till they shame their fathers & mothers, their friends, and the Church of God, and grow obstinate and incorrigible. Touching masters, it lieth upon them to order their servants and families aright, they must require of their servants no more then is just and equal, Col. 4, 1, remembering that they have a Master in Heaven, who requireth only things just and equal at their hands: they are to provide for them food and raiment, and such like necessaries, or else they are worse then infidels, and have denied the faith, Prov. 31, 21. 1 Tim. 5, 8. Likewise it behooveth them to teach and instruct them, as faithful and believing Masters have done, and found a great blessing upon their labors, Acts 10, 7. Gen. 24, 12.

And if Masters desire to have their houses dutiful & subject unto them, they must choose such as are religious, or be careful to make them religious, that so they may obey for conscience sake. If at any time they shall make conscience to serve the Lord, they will not be slothful to serve their Masters. But there are many Masters, that are always threatening their servants, Ephes. 6, 9, and never speak kindly unto them, to encourage them in well-doing; there proceedeth nothing but fire out of their mouth, and smoke goeth out of their nostrils. And not so only, but they command hard and cruel service at their hands, and after a sort suck out their heart blood, by over-burdening and over-bearing them beyond their strength, like the cruel task-masters of the Egyptians, who gave the Israelites no straw to make them up the tale of their bricks, but made them gather it themselves, and yet would diminish nothing of the work, Exodus 5, 7, 8.

Thus were the people scattered abroad throughout all the land of Egypt, to gather stubble instead of straw. And Sampson being a servant, or rather slave to the Philistines, was not only made a laughing-stock, but compelled to grind in the prison-house, Judge. 16, 21. Such masters are they also that are immoderate and excessive in correction, & know no measure, as if their servants were beasts, and not their brethren. Nay Balaam the false prophet is reprov'd of the Angel for his cruelty toward his asse, but these respect men no better then if they were asses or horses; for the whip is never from their backs, or the bridle from their mouths, or the fist from their ears, or the staff from their sides. Thus also did the task-masters beat the officers of the children of Israel without any cause or desert. Now touching Magistrates, they are the fathers of the country and common-wealth, they must be careful to plant sound religion among the people, and be careful that God be served in the first place, because they must rule for GOD and not for themselves. And thus did the godly Kings of Judah. They must establish peace and tranquility, that men may sit under their vines and fig trees, that there be no invasion nor going out, nor crying and complaining in the streets. And they must publish and prescribe such wholesome Laws, as may serve to keep men in obedience; and when they are once enacted and established, they must not suffer them to rust for want of execution, but remember they are the Ministers of God to take vengeance on him that doth evil, Rom. 13, 4. If then they suffer men to do what they list, as if there were no king in Israel, if they be careless of God's service, if they do not defend the innocent like Ahab; nor punish the transgressors, or command unjust and unlawful things, or spare offenders that ought to dy, like Saul; they provoke the wrath of God against themselves, as we have shown already in the former chapter.

5 And Moses commanded the children of Israel, according to the word of the Lord, saying, The tribe of the sons of Joseph hath said well.

6 This is the thing which the Lord doth command concerning the daughters of Zelophehad, saying, Let them marry to whom they think best, only to the family of the tribes of their father shall they marry.

7 So shall not the inheritance of the children of Israel remove from tribe to tribe, for everyone of the children of Israel shall keep himself to the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers.

8 And every daughter that possesseth an inheritance in any tribe of the children of Israel, shall be wife unto one of the family of the tribe of her father, that the children of Israel may enjoy every man the inheritance of his fathers.

9 Neither shall the inheritance remove from one tribe to another tribe, but everyone of the children of Israel shall enjoy every man the inheritance of his fathers.

The second part of the Chapter followeth, which is the answer of Moses to the former question, where he commendeth those that made this demand, and then he setteth down first a particular Law touching the daughters of Zelophehad, that they should marry to whom they thought best, howbeit within their own tribe; and secondly a general Law binding perpetually all daughters among them that possessed any inheritance in any tribe of the children of Israel, that they shall be wives to one of the same tribe; thus everyone should quietly enjoy his own, and the inheritance should not remove from one tribe to another. Out of this division we might observe sundry instructions. First Moses commendeth that which these chief fathers had well spoken and well done, teaching that we ought not only not to dispraise that in which others have well deserved, but we should praise and commend it.

Thus he did to these daughters before, Chapter 27, 7, when they sued for an inheritance. Secondly, in that they are directed to marry to whom they think best, we see that none are to be denied marriage which is the ordinance of God. It entered into none of their hearts, to remedy the alienation of inheritance by restraining any from marriage when daughters fell to be inheritrixes, but it was left free to them, according to the precept of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 7, 2. Again, it teacheth that marriage is not to be enforced upon any, either by the Magistrate, or by the parents, or by any governors, Gen. 24, 57. 1 Corinth. 7, 39. For this were to exercise tyranny over our children.

For as children ought to have the consent of their careful parents, and not to dare to bestow themselves without their advice, which practice we see in the very Gentiles, as appeareth in Euripides, where Hermione answereth Orestes, desiring of her a promise of marriage, habebit, non est meum statuere hoc;

Sponsaliorum meorum pater meus curam

That is,

It lieth not in my hand at all myself for to contract:

Unto my fathers care and power,

I must refer that act:

So likewise parents ought to have the consent of their children, & not bestow them upon others against their wills; for that were to lay an evil foundation, and to fill the house with jars and dissensions. Thirdly, observe that Moses saith, Every daughter shall be a wife unto one of the family; teaching us, that howsoever the marrying of many wives was practiced among the Patriarchs and people of God, yet this is the Law of Nature, that one man should have one wife, & not wives, Gen. 2, 24. Mat. 19, 5. But to come to the main point, we learn that the inheritance of the children of Israel must remain and continue in one and the same tribe, and never pass from tribe to tribe.

The reasons of this Law given unto them are, that the Israelites might enjoy, every man the inheritance of his fathers, verse 8: and for this cause are the borders of every tribe so carefully assigned afterward.

Secondly, that it might certainly be known that the Messiah came of no other tribe then of the tribe of Judah, according to the promise and prophecy of Jacob, Genes. 49, 10. The tribe shall not depart from Judah, till Shiloh come. Thirdly, that peace might be preserved, and confusion avoided among them, whereas if the inheretrix had not been restrained by this Law, but left at liberty, the bounds of every tribe in process of time would have been abolished. These Laws did only bind the Jews touching inheritances, & not impose a necessity upon others, as we have shown before, chapt. 27: as likewise that the eldest must have his double portion, and that no man might lawfully sell the fee simple of his inheritance; which precepts, with sundry others, if they should be brought into all Christian commonwealthes, would turn upside down the very foundation of them, and alter all Laws and customs general and particular, and bring in an horrible confusion. For other nations do hold their lands by see simple, but God holdeth the Israelites as his farmers, Levite. 25, 23, The land shall not be sold forever, for the land is mine, for ye were strangers and sojourners with me: he would not have them as owners, neither to be as purchasers of that land. Now let us come to the uses.

[Use 1] First, it is the ordinance of God that every man keep his proper inheritance, to have and to hold the same as his own. Distinction of inheritance is agreeable to his word, whatsoever the mad spirits of the Anabaptists do teach. [Object.] It will be said, that this is a fruit of man's first sin and disobedience, and that if he had stood in his innocence, there should have been a community of all things. But man's transgression brought in this private possession. [Answ.] I answer, we will not reason what should have been, forasmuch as we see what man hath done, and how he is fallen. It is in vain for a man to think how rich he should have been, if his house had not been burned, when he seeth it is consumed stick and stake to the ground, and he become a poor beggar. So likewise, it is needless to debate and dispute what should have been if Adam had stood, seeing God made man good, but he sought out many inventions, Eccles. 7, 29. For inasmuch as man is wholly corrupted by sin, that communion (if any should be) cannot in this estate take place, but every man must know what is his own, and what is not his own.

[Use 2] Secondly, this should teach parents to provide for their daughters as well as for their sons, and not to leave them to the wide world, especially in these our days, wherein more enquiry is made what they have, then what they are: and what goods are without them, then good things are within them. But God showeth by this Law, that he hath no less care of them then of sons. Men are to consider that their daughters are their children, as well as their sons, and therefore even they must be provided for also. The Apostle teacheth, that parents should lay up for their children, 2 Cor. 12, 14, not for one child only, or for his sons only. Nature teacheth, that if any member be weak, it is chiefly to be strengthened. The woman is the weaker vessel, and needeth to be supported: and it encourageth them in obedience when they see themselves respected. And what a shame is it to parents to bring them into the world, and then to leave them as it were destitute to the wide world?

Thirdly, there are some that extend this [Use 3] Law to all the Jews in general, as if they were all forbidden to take a wife anywhere save in their own tribe. But if we mark the words of the Law, we shall find that they are not to be understood of men, but only of women; and not of all women neither, but of such as are heirs, and receive a possession for want of issue male. These might not marry out of their tribe; but others which had none inheritance, were left free to marry where they pleased, whether in their tribe or out of their tribe: because this is rendered as a reason of the Law, that the inheritance might not remove from one tribe to another, verse 9. It was lawful for them to take a wife of the nations round about them, that was not of the seed of Abraham, when there was no danger by a contrary religion, as appeareth by many examples, Matthew 1, 3, 5: so was it permitted to them to make choice of a wife out of another tribe, that was not to inherit her fathers possession.

And this was neither forbidden in the Law, nor yet observed by the Jews. The Law did not restrain their marriage, because it meddleth only with those that were heirs, and forbiddeth the possessions of the tribes to be confounded and mingled together. If then the Law did not abridge them, we may well suppose and presume that they did not observe it. For, not to speak of former examples, Moses married not a wife of his own tribe, neither of any tribe, but a Cushite, that is, one of the Midianites, which inhabited Arabia, of which see before, chapt. 12. Aaron also his brother married Elisabet; she was the daughter of Aminadab, and the sister of Naasson, which was of the tribe of Judah, Numb. 1, 7, and 7, 12- Ruth 4, 20.

So Iosabeah the daughter of the king Jehoram of the tribe of Judah was married to Jehoiada the high Priest, 2 Chron 22, 11. Elizabeth the wife of Zachariah the Priest, the father of John the Baptist, was of the daughters of Aaron, Luke 1.5, and was the cousin of Mary, Luke 1, 36: but it is certain and without all controversy, that Mary was of the tribe of Judah, Luke 5.

But it will be objected, [Objection.] that the Levites being dispersed among the other Tribes had a dispensation from the former Law, and therefore they might marry wives of diverse tribes from themselves, but it was otherwise with the rest.

[Answ.] I answer, first it is vain to distinguish against the Law, where the law doth not distinguish: if then they had any privilege, let them bring forth the charter, and show their evidence, or else we cannot believe them.

Again, albeit the Levites were scattered here and there, yet many of them dwelt together, and there were whole Cities in a manner of the Priests, 1 Sam. 22, 19. and therefore if they had pleased, or had thought themselves charged in this case, they might have had choice of wives of their own tribe. Lastly, this was no better observed by other Tribes, then by the Levites. For David of the tribe of Judah married Michal the daughter of Saul, who was of the tribe of Benjamin, 1 Sam. 18, 20, 27. & 9, 1. Likewise the eleven tribes having in a manner destroyed the Benjamites in a battle, profess among themselves that they might not give them of their daughters, because they had sworn, Cursed be he that giveth a wife to Benjamin, Judges 21, 18. declaring thereby, that they were not restrained by any law, but by their oath: and to what end did they make such an oath, if they had been before forbidden by the law of God without their oath? Many such like examples might be brought forth, to show that this Law did not simply restrain the marrying in other Tribes.

[Use 4] Fourthly, from hence we may conclude an argument against the vulgar edition of the Scripture, which in this place doth manifestly corrupt the text, and bringeth into manifest error; for it readeth the text thus, All men shall marry wives of their own tribe and kindred, & all women shall take them husbands of the same tribe: both the which being generally taken, may well be taken for untruths. Whereas the original never speaketh of men marrying out of their tribes, neither of all men generally, but of those only that are their fathers heirs. Bellarmino that must help at a dead lift, answereth, That these two are all one, and do not differ; which argueth an hard forehead rather then a sound answer: for he blusheth not to affirm anything when he is put to his shifts. We cannot therefore receive that interpretation for authentic and canonical, which is directly repugnant unto the doctrine of the Scripture, and the continual practice of the Jews. And as for those that would have the Hebrew text amended by the Latin translation, it is no better then to go about to be mad with reason. For where the truth is, there can be no error; and where no error is, what need any correction? To conclude this point, I will oppose the testimony and judgment of Paul de Sancta Maria, a great bishop and sometimes Chancellor unto the King of Castile, directly against Bellarmino, one Papist against another, whose words are these: In this precept our translation swarueth very much from the Hebrew verity, &c: and the reason of the Law beareth witness to the truth of the Hebrew, for this was the end thereof, that the division of inheritances that was to be made might remain perpetually amongst the Tribes, so that nothing of the land which fell to be in the lot of the Tribe of Judah, might return at any time to the lot of Benjamin, and so of the rest. Therefore the Law was given of those only (which did succeed in their fathers inheritance) that the Tribes should not be shuffled or mingled together, because thereby the inheritance would pass from one tribe to another, which was against the ordinance of God: but other women which had brethren, and consequently did not succeed in the inheritance of their father, were not forbidden by this Law, but that they might marry with whom they would of any other tribe, because it appeareth evidently, that from hence would not follow the confusion of the lots. Neither do we read of any dispensation that the Tribes of Levi and Judah had to join in marriage one with another: for there needed no dispensation, where was no prohibition, &c. This testimony is cited by Drusius.

Lastly, observe touching the Jewish inheritances, [Use 5] that at the year of Jubilee, the inheritance sold or morgaged, returned again to the owner, as we may read Levite. chapter 25, verses 8.9. This fell out every fiftieth year: then the Trumpet of Jubilee sounded, & they proclaimed liberty and freedom throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof: then servants were set free, then debts were forgiven, then every man returned unto his own possession and family, Verse 10.

This solemn and sacred time was instituted for these causes: First, to moderate and bridle the covetousness of such as hoped and gaped after other men's possessions, and to teach every man to be content with his own estate, and not enter upon the possessions of others, as Ahab did upon the vineyard of Naboth.

Secondly, to keep a true Chronology, & a certain computation of time, which is very necessary and profitable in the reading of histories, to know where and at what time everything was done.

Thirdly, to maintain a distinction of the Tribes, until the exhibiting of the Messiah, according to the prophecy of Jacob, Gen. 49, 9, The Tribe shall not depart from Judah, till Shiloh come. For howsoever many do understand the word (Shebet) in this place of the Scepter, yet I do not remember in all the books of Moses, wherein it is often used, that once it is used in that sense, albeit it be in other books afterward. Lastly, to figure out the redemption of Christ, who indeed brought a true Jubilee and freedom when the fullness of time came. He proclaimed liberty with his own voice from the tyranny of sin, of Satan, and of hell, Isaiah 61, 1, 2, 3, c. Luke 4, 18. He purchased a full discharge from all our spiritual debts, trespasses, and transgressions, John. 8, 34, 36, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever (1 page duplicate) (1 page duplicate) committeth sin, is the servant of sin: but if the Son shall make you free, then are you free indeed. Through him it is come to pass, that Satan hath no power to exact any debt at our hands, Christ hath cancelled the bill and hand-writing that stood in force against us, 1 Cor. 6, 20 Gal. 4.5, 1 Pet. 1, 18, 19. Col. 1, 13, 14. Rom. 8, 2. This Law pertaining to the ceremonies of Moses, the Papists have taken up, and horribly abused, and brought into use in the times of the Gospel, and under color thereof sell their pardons and indulgences, and abuse the people, and make sale of their souls. For as God had his Jubilee, so the Pope hath his; howbeit, it is in an apish kind of imitation, and can neither be accounted this Levitical Jubilee, neither yet received for Christian. It cannot be the Levitical, because in it no servants are freed, no debts are remitted, no possessions of land are restored, as it was in the Jubilee of the Jews. And if the Pope himself would allow this, why doth not he begin and give good example to others, & restore Rome to it self, and others lands of the Church to the Emperor, he being the right and lawful owner, and that proud Bishop only an usurper? Again, in the year of Jubilee the Jews did neither sow nor reap: but at Rome it is nothing so, for then the Popes are most busy & the best husbands, then they sow their indulgences thick & threefold, & reap a plentiful harvest by such merchandise. Hence it is, that whereas at the first this solemn feast, (which now keepeth the Popes kitchen hot for many years after) was rare, now it is grown more common, that it might be more gainful. The invention of it was altogether unknown for more then twelve hundred years after Christ, and never heard of in the purer times of the Church. The first father of it was Boniface the eighth, who promised full remission of sins to all those that would repair to Rome, and pay soundly for a pardon, and this was to be done every hundred years. This time was thought too long, & was afterward abridged by Clement the sixth (who got the papacy in the year 1342.) to 50 years, after the manner of the Jew. After him came Sixtus the fourth, in the year of our Lord, 1473, who thinking the times to come to slowly about, and finding the sweetness of the former device, cut it off again in the middes, appointed every 25 year for a Jubilee, and promised like pardons to all comers and goers: whereas before him Urban the sixth, had brought it to 33, years: and lastly, it is come to ten years, because they would be sure to lose no profit. See what the desire of money worketh in these holy fathers, who oftentimes sell pardons so fast to others, that it is to be feared they never obtain pardon themselves. Neither can this Jubilee be holden for Christian, in that poor pilgrims resort to Rome, and visit the Churches of Peter and Paul, but rather superstitious & blasphemous. For this is to tie grace to a certain time and place, w^c is not tied, Isaiah 2, 5. John. 4, 23. Math. 28, 19. Secondly, this is to worship God with our own works which he hath not commanded nor required, Isaiah 1, 12, Math. 15, 9, and to make sinful men to merit the grace and favor of God, whereas all such kind of service is abominable in his sight. Lastly, they make sale of the grace of God, w^c is much more precious then gold and silver, & take money for remission of sins, which that proud Prelat is not able to give. Thus are men pitifully deceived, and God is horribly dishonored. And howsoever the good of the people is pretended, yet this Jubilee is nothing else but the Popes market and harvest: his market day to sel his wares and commodities, and his harvest to gather in his pardon-money, whereby he emptieth the purses of others, but filleth his own coffers. True it is, he claymeth a power to dispense the treasure of the Church, that is, the merits of the Saints, and the ouermeasure of their works and obedience, he hath in store for all such as lack; but this is most injurious and derogatory to Christ. It is proper to him to redeem others, and to satisfy for them, who is made of the Father to be our redemption, 1 Cor. 1, 30. Again, the Scripture expressly excludeth the sufferings of the Saints from the work of redemption and remission of sins, 1 Cor. 1, 13. Acts 4, 12. 2 Cor. 5, 21, Acts 10, 43. Thirdly, if the satisfactions of the Saints were of so great worth & value, that they can take away and blot out the sins of others, then they might be truly called the Mediators of the New Testament; howbeit this is proper to Christ, Heb. 9.13, 14 15. Lastly, the Saints themselves are not able to pay their own debt, much less the debt of others, and they that want the mercy and mediation of another, cannot be mediators for another. But the best Saints that ever were, or shall be, do say, Forgive us our debts, & therefore they are not able to pay them. How then can they have any works of supererogation, or the measure of their works running over, that have not enough for themselves?

10 Even as the Lord commanded Moses, so did the daughters of Zelophehad.

11 For Mahlah, Tirzah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Noah the daughters of Zelophehad were married unto their fathers brothers sons.

12 And they were married into the families of the sons of Manasseh, the son of Joseph, and their inheritance remained in the tribe of the family of their father.

13 These are the commandments and judgments which the Lord commanded by the hand of Moses, unto the children of Israel in the plains of Moab, by Jordan, near Jericho.

The third part of the chapter remaineth, to wit, the marriage of these five daughters: what God had appointed, and Moses had published, they approve and allow. For Moses setteth down, both where they married, and to whom. They matched in their own Tribe, to wit, into the families of the sons of Manasseh, and particularly it is said, They were married to their fathers brothers sons, that is, to their cozen germans. From hence we learn, that the marriage of cozen germans, that is, the children of brothers and sisters is lawful. In the proof of this point, no man must look for any express law or commandment to marry in this manner, because no man was ever commanded to do so: it is enough to show that it is left free and not prohibited; & that will appear by sundry examples of all sorts. The marriage of Esau the son of Isaac, is recorded to have been with Mahalath the daughter of Ishmael, Isaac's brother, Gen. 28, 9, so that he married his fathers brothers daughter. And albeit he were a wicked man and profane, yet he is not reprov'd for marrying so near of kin. And Jacob himself is charged by his parents to take a wife no farther off, and therefore he being the son of Rebecca matched himself with Rahel the daughter of Laban Rebecca's brother; thus he married his mothers brothers daughter, as Esau before him had married his fathers brothers daughter. In like manner we see the same in a sort between Isaac Abraham's son, the son of promise, and Rebecca the daughter of Bethael, son to Nahor, Abraham's brother, Gen. 24, 15, whereof the one is cozen german, the other is cozen german but once removed.

To these examples it will be objected, that they were all before the law, and therefore they might be lawful: but the matter stood otherwise after the law. Let us see therefore how the case stood after the law. And first, observe the example of these daughters of Zelophehad mentioned in this place, of whom it is said, that they married their fathers brothers sons, verse 11. But it will be said, that by brethren we must understand, nor natural brethren, but others farther off. But if it were so, then it had been sufficient to have called them their fathers brethren without any addition of sons, or their own brethren, and then indeed the marriage had been left doubtful and uncertain: but the addition of sons to brethren doth rightly and readily distinguish the cozen germans from all the rest of their kindred. And to make the matter more clear and apparent, it is evident that Zelophad had brethren of his parents that had store of sons; for what man of any understanding will exclude those that most properly may be meant, and run to others that may improperly be termed his brothers sons? Now that Zelophehad had brethren, and they also sons, is no way doubtful, because out of the loins of his brother Hepher came a great family, called in respect of the multitude of them, The family of the Hopherites, Numb. 26, 32. as of Gilead, the Gileadites. Furthermore, we read in Joshua, of the marriage of Othniel the son of Kenaz, with Achsah the daughter of Caleb, Kenaz brother, so that they were brothers children, Josh. 15, verses 16, 17.

If any here also dally with the ambiguity of the word Brother, as suspecting and surmising that it is there taken for some kinsman farther off, and not properly for a brother of the same immediate parents: this may easily be disproved by the term after given to Kenaz, of younger brother to Caleb, Judge. 1, verse 13, which plainly noteth the age and order of brethren in one family and from one parent, and not any order of kindred among those that are of diverse families and parents, according as the eldest son noteth the order of children in one family, as may appear in the order of Genealogies, 1 Chron. chap. 2, verse 13, where the sons of Jesse are so distinguished and known by the eldest, the second, and so forward of the rest. And there also it appeareth, that Caleb had other brethren, as Ierameel in the ninth verse, and the two and fortith verse, yea even that Caleb which had Achsah to his daughter, as we may read verse 49: and therefore in respect of those elder, Kenaz might well be so called, his younger brother: nay having elder, we cannot without great confusion of speech, and very much uncertainty of meaning, refer the younger unto any other of his kindred whatsoever.

Thus we have seen diverse and sundry examples of the marriage of cousin germans recorded faithfully in the Scriptures, both of the godly and the ungodly, both before the Law and since the Law, and we never find that any of them were reprov'd or gain-said; which may induce us to hold them lawful, and not against the Law of GOD and godliness.

Let us pass from the Jews to the ancient Romans, and other Nations, and from the Romans to our selves. The Apostle Paul teacheth us in the second chapter of the Romans and the fourteenth verse, that the Gentiles which have not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the Law: and it were not hard to show out of diverse and sundry profane writers, such as were Liuy, Plutarke, Cicero, Tacitus, Historiographers, Philosophers, and Poets, an infinite number of examples of such matches frequented among them: whereupon Calvin a most judicious Divine, and one of the foundest interpreters of these latter times saith plainly, Tam Lege Mosis, quam gentium iure id semper licuit, that is to say, As well by the Law of Moses, as by the common law of Nations, the marriage of cousin Germans, was always lawful.

True it is, sometimes for fear and sometimes for flattery; they have been induced to consent to incestuous marriages. Claudius Caesar the Emperor had concluded a marriage between himself and Agrippina his brothers daughter, yet they durst not celebrate the solemnities of their unlawful love openly, (for it was incest) neither was it practiced before, that the brothers daughter should be brought into the vnckles house as wife: whereupon he commanded the Senate to pass a decree, by virtue whereof, marriage between the Vnckles and Nieces, daughters to their brothers, should from thence-forward be accounted just and lawful. This they did readily & willingly to gratify his desire, and yet for all that there was one only Gentleman of Rome that followed that president, who also was thought to do it to win the favor of Agrippina. So likewise when Cambyses fell in fancy with his own sister, and was desirous to marry her, which was never used amongst the Persians before, He called together his Judges, and asked of them, whether there were any law to permit a man to contract matrimony with his own sister: They knowing the kings disease as well as if they had felt his pulse, made answer, That they could find no such law that suffered the brother to marry the sister: yet they had met with another law, that the Persian King might do whatsoever he pleased. Thus partly for fear & partly for flattery they resolved, respecting more their own security then they did the Kings honor and honesty. Plutarch in his Roman questions showeth, that a statute was enacted among them, by virtue whereof it was made lawful for all men from that time forward to marry as far as to their cozen Germans, (including them also) but in any higher or nearer degree of consanguinity they were utterly forbidden. This statute was no other but the very law of God and nature, which restrayneth and forbiddeth to marry nearer, but other degrees it leaveth free. Nevertheless I confess, that he saith, It was long before this statute was enacted, & that one was endighted and like to be condemned for marrying with his cozen German, if he had not been in special favor with the people, whereby it came to pass, that the bill of enditement was suppressed. But who this was, or when it was, he concealeth, and I must needs say, I much suspect the truth thereof: because the forbidding of this degree could not be ancient. For many brethren desired to match their children this way, & thought they could not be better bestowed. Ligustinus, as Liuy reporteth (Decad. 5. lib. 2.) showeth that his father gave him to wife the daughter of his uncle. Tully reporteth that Cluentia was married to M. Aurius her cozen German. (Cicer. orat. pro Cluent.) And before Rome was built, at the coming of Aeneas into Italy, a marriage was entreated off between Turnus and Lavinia, who were borne of two sisters. This confirmeth that which S. Augustine writeth, (De ciuit. dei. lib. 15. cap. 16.) that before his time such marriages were lawful among them.

But to leave these foreign examples, let us come home to our selves. In the 32. year of the reign of Henry the eight, chap. 38, all persons are adjudged lawful to marry, that are not prohibited by God's law: which statute being afterward repealed and made void by Q. Mary, was in the first year of the late Queens happy reign restored to his former strength and virtue: and hereupon by the ecclesiastical authority in the Land, a Table was made and put in print; containing all the degrees unlawful in marriage by the law of God, and so holden unlawful in our Land; among which, cozen germans are not mentioned, and therefore are holden by the judgment of our Church to be lawful.

Thus we have the continual practice of the [Reason 1] marriage of cozen germans in all ages, among the Jews and Gentiles, and our selves, which showeth the lawful and laudable use thereof: let us now see a few reasons farther to manifest this point. And first, this is a sure foundation laid by the Apostle, Rom. 4, 15. Where no law is, there is no transgression. But there is no law that forbiddeth these to marry, either expressly, or by implication. For albeit we find in the book of Leviticus a perfect direction touching marriage, & all other titles of kindred noted by the persons to whom they appertain, to wit, father and mother, son and daughter, brother and sister, grandfather and grandmother, and the grand-children, uncle and aunt, nephew and neece; yet not any cozen in any degree, third, second, or first degree: and therefore these are to be excluded from the former, and no way to be sorted and ranged among the unlawful marriages. Secondly, sundry of these degrees forbidden, are not only once expressed, but again reiterated in the very letter of the law, and that in a diverse manner to note out the greater efficacy: as for example, the fathers wife, first in the 7. ver. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father: and again in the 8. verse, Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy fathers wife. Likewise her sister, in the 9. verse. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy sister, the daughter of thy father: which is repeated again, verse 11. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy fathers wives daughter, begotten of thy father, for she is thy sister. Lastly, thy aunt, noted in the 12. verse. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy fathers sister: then he addeth in the next verse, nor of thy mothers sister, and again in the 14. verse, nor of thy fathers brothers wife; touching all which three (being everyone thy aunt) the prohibition of any one had debarred the rest.

The law then being so copious and plentiful to repeat much forbidden before, it is certain it would never have omitted the mention of one whole degree, and the same also the greatest of all the rest, to wit, cousin germans, if the matching of them together had been utterly unlawful, as all the rest are which are mentioned in the Law. This is the prerogative of the word, that it is a perfect word: & as the Law is in no point superfluous, so it is in no case defective.

Thirdly, among all the titles of kindred mentioned in Leviticus, there is not any whereunto cousin germans may in any sort be referred: and therefore as they are not expressed, so they are not included under any degree prohibited.

For if they might be comprised under any of those heads, it should be under the title of brethren and sisters, which indeed in a general sense do often in Scripture contain not only cousens in the first degree, but in the second, third, fourth, and farther also. But by this extent of the words, we should bring under the prohibition of marriage, as well the one as the other, which I suppose few will admit.

Wherefore the Lord to prevent this generality of brotherhood, and mistaking of the Law contrary to the true meaning thereof, the sister is limited by determinate notes of difference from the cousins, that she is termed the daughter of thy father or mother, Levite 18, 9, and begotten of thy father, verse 11: and therefore the titles of brother and sister, cannot be extended so far as to cousin germanes, and if not they, much less any other.

Fourthly, the bringing of cousin germans within the compass of the degrees prohibited is to leave the matter at uncertainty, and the Law of God to determine nothing. For how far shall we have such cousins restrained? once only removed, or twice, or how many degrees? And if any answer, only the first degree: I would know why the first more then the second; or the second more then the third? seeing that the one is no more to be proved out of the Law of God then the other.

As for those that allege the words of the Law, Levite. 18, 6, None of you shall approach to any that is near to him, to uncover their nakedness: if they be rightly weighed, they give no color to such interpretation, nor liberty of such extension, but rather serve as a bar to seclude them out of the prohibition. For if any other degrees then are after expressed should be meant, then all cousin•n any degree, though never so far off, even an hundred times removed, should be included within the former prohibition, which no wise man will affirm.

Neither may we imagine, that the Lord would give such a Law, not to come near any of the kin, and never express what kin he meaneth, but leave us at randon, every man to conjecture, and every man to hold what he pleaseth.

So then it is evident, that the words are not to be stretched so largely, but are to be gathered into a more narrow compass, and to a more strict senfe, such as may be inclusiue to all the degrees afterward in particular rehearsed and recited, and exclusiue to all others.

Fifthly, the Law of God setteth down sundry threatenings of most horrible judgments upon the heads of such as break the bounds of Nature, and are pursued with the censure of abomination, of wickedness, of villainy, of filthiness, committed, and with the sentence of blood, of death, of cutting off, of fire, and of barrenness, not only upon the one party, but upon the other, neither only upon the man, but upon the beast: nevertheless, among all these, the cousin germans are no more touched in the punishment, then they were before in the prohibition.

Lastly, as the threatening is noted, so also is the execution of the threatening, remembered. For there is no incest committed against the holy Law of God mentioned in the Scripture, but it always carrieth a note of reproof, and a brand of God's judgment with it: but in the examples of the marriages of cousin germans (which are many in Scripture) not the least touch of any reprehension or correction. Reuben went up to his fathers bed and defiled his concubine, Gen. 35, 22, & 49.4, 1 Chron. 5, 1, and he is punished with the loss of his birth-right.

Abshalon went in unto his fathers concubines which he had left to keep the house, 2 Sam. 16, 21, and he is punished not long after with a violent death, and lived not out half his days, 2 Sam. 18, 14. The incestuous Corinthian committed fornication with his fathers wife, and he is censured by the Apostle with excommunication, and delivering him ovr to Satan, 1 Cor. 5, 1. Lot in his drunkenness committed incest with his own daughters, and is plagued with the birth of obstinate enemies of God's Church, the first fathers of the Moabites & Ammonites, Gen. 19, 33. Judah defiled his daughter in law Tamar, indeed in ignorance, yet duly reprov'd by himself, & effectually repented, so that he never lay with her Gen. 38, 16. Amnon fell in love with his sister Tamar, and lay with her, and immediately after his lust he is punished with lothsomnes in himself, & hatefulness in Absalom toward him, & plagued with a sudden and violent death in the end, 2 Sam. 13, 14, 15. & 28, 29. Lastly, Herod took his brothers wife, and he is reprov'd for it by John the Baptist, Mat. 14.4, 10. & John the Baptist is taken away from him and the unthankful world, who was as a shining candle in y^e darkness of the world, which was no small plague. And if we may give any credit unto ecclesiastical histories, touching this Herod who was called Antipas, he that defiled his body with most filthy Incest, and embred his hands with h^rmelesse and innocent blood, and abused his tongue to mock Christ our Savior with his cursed Courtiers, felt not long after the vengeance of God: For as he gaped after honor and sought ambitiously to be entituled with the name of a king, he and his proud minion with him were in the second year of the Emperor Caligula condemned to perpetual banishment, and at Lions in France they ended their days in shame, contempt, reproach, and misery. A fit death for such a life, Joseph. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 9. Euseb. lib. 2. cap. 4. In all these examples we see that although the Magistrate leave these sins of incest unpunished, yet good men do not pass by them without reproof even in the greatest personages; and God doth not let thē alone without a judgment, and the Scripture doth not record them without a due note and censure of the abomination. And may we then in reason think, that God, and good mē, and the Scripture it self would be silent, and have let pass so many marriages of Cousen-germans without any one check or chastisement, if they had been against the law of God & godliness? Nay rather we may well think, that seeing they go away so clearly without any the least note of reproof, yea and some of them with no small approbation and commendation at the hands of GOD and good men, they are not at all incestuous & impious, but most lawful and allowable.

[Use 1] Now let us come to the uses. First, this serves to reprove the Church of Rome, w^c as it is corrupt in the chiefest parts of Christian religion, so is it in none more corrupt thē in the matter of marriage, because they restrain that which God hath left free, and they leave that free which God hath restrained: an evident proof among other things, that the Roman Church is an Antichristian Church. And first it is plain, that they maintain the lawfulness of marriages within the degrees expressly forbidden. For whereas by the law of God, Levite. 18, touching consanguinity, they which are placed in the transverse unequal line, cannot marry at all, because they are to be holden as parents and children: yet if they be distinct four degrees from the common stock, they may lawfully marry by the Popes laws and canons; which is filthy, incestuous, and abominable. And as they are loose when they should be strict, so they are strict when they should be loose: For whereas cozen germans are left free by the law of God (as we have already shown & proved) they do condemn the same for no other cause, but to make way for popish dispensations. Again, they teach that the Pope hath power to dispense with the degrees directly and expressly prohibited in Leviticus, and that many of them are only judicial & positive constitutions, not grounded upon the law of nature, but serving peculiarly for that commonwealth of the Jews. Hence it is, that that Antichrist of Rome did dispense with King Henry the eight to marry Katherine his late brothers wife. So Philip the second, Duke of Burgundy, had a dispensation to marry his vncles wife, as Ferdinand King of Naples had the like to marry his own aunt.

Thus he that hath brought Kings and Princes under his feet, challengeth authority above the Scriptures, and taketh upon him to dispense with the word of God, and thereby usurpeth power above GOD and his word. For this is one of their own rules, In praecepto superioris non debet dispensare inferior, that is, The inferior may not dispense with the commandment of the superior (Anton. part. 3. tit. 22. cap. 6.)

If then the Pope dispense with the laws of God, doth he not make himself above God? and is not this the Antichrist? or shall we foolishly look for any other? Can anything be more filthy and vile then incest? and yet he hath not spared for filthy lucre to tolerate and allow that in the Church, which the Philosopher Plato an heathen man was ashamed off in his commonwealth, lib. 8. de leg. For he dispensed with Philip the second, late king of Spain, to marry his own Neece. Pope Martin the fifth dispensed with a certain brother that married his own sister. Nay Clement the seventh for a great sum of money licensed Peter Aluaradus a spaniard to marry two sisters at once. Thus also he dispensed with Immanuel king of Portugal against the law of God, to marry two sisters, as Osorius testifieth, (Dereb. gest: Immanuel. lib. 2.) thereby verifying the saying of the Apostle, 2 Thess. 2, 4, that the man of sin shall oppose and exalt himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he as God sitteth in the Temple of God, showing himself that he is God. These marriages did GOD hate and punish in the Gentiles, and for the foulness and filthiness of them did God spew out the Canaanites, Deut. 18, 24.

Thus John the Baptist telleth Herod, that it was not lawful for him to have his brothers wife, Math. 14, 4: so that the former laws were in force in the time of Christ as well as in the days of Moses,

Again, the Apostle reproveth the incestuous person among the Corinthians that had taken his fathers wife, 1 Cor. 5, 1. & therefore the former laws remained firm under the Gospel, as well as under the law: and he showeth that such fornication is not so much as named, much less practiced among the Gentiles, and therefore he willeth him to be excommunicated from the Church: & where was this forbidden, but in the Law of Moses?

But to leave this point at the present, as impertinent, let us consider the degree we have in hand, how the Popish Canons and constitutions do restrain it. True it is, sundry Councils in former times, debarred the first degree of cousins, to the intent the divine prohibition might be kept with the more regard and reverence, and others afterward added thereunto cousens in the second degree. But when the Roman Antichrist sate in the Temple of God, and had brought both Kings and Councils under his check & commandment, then he began to domineer, and all cousens to the seventh degree were forbidden. But because this was thought too hard, and to savor of covetousness and cruelty joined with pride and presumption, it was brought at length in the time of Innocentius the third, to the fourth degree, and sod take it the matter standeth unto this day, that the Canons forbid four degrees from coufen germans as unlawful. But the reason which they use is no less sophistical, then the law it self tyrannical, drawn (forsooth) from the proportion of the four physical humors in man's body. But what have we to do with the Canons of this ambitious man, sitting in men's consciences and ruling over their faith, who have turned out that beast to grass long ago? Or why should we make any reckoning or account of his supereminent and omnipotent power which he claymeth in his dispensations, allowing that which God disalloweth, and disallowing that which he alloweth? Thus he playeth fast and loose with the law of God, as luglers do to deceive. For if the laws of God cannot bind him, why should his papal laws bind us and our consciences? The Collegiats of Doway in their heretical Annotations upon Leviticus, set forth in their late translation of the Old Testament, are not ashamed to maintain this assertion, that all marriages in the right line, and in collateral the first degree, as between the brother and sister, are only forbidden by the law of nature, and that all other degrees depend upon positive laws, which have been and may be altered: which opinion, how gross & vile it is, we have before declared. So then I will conclude with the saying of Beza in his 8. Sermon upon the Cant. Touching the observation of holy marriage, I will not stay any longer in this horrible filthy stench, which neither the Sun can abide to see; nor the darkness of the night can cover, nor the earth bear and endure. Alas, O Lord, how long!

Secondly, this reproveth all such as not only [Use 2] discourage from this marriage, but dare condemn it, both as impious and incestuous. Others that dare not go so far, yet seem to dislike thereof as comprised in those degrees mentioned in Leviticus by an analogy or proportion: howbeit they hold also that such marriages are not to be dissolved, and that the issue of such marriages are not to be accounted illegitimate. And they make a comparison between these, and the marriage of those that neglect the consent of their parents, who may continue together, if they confess their error, & do not justify their fact: so such as are married in this degree of consanguinity either ignorantly or doubtfully, may upon repentance of their error find comfort. But from hence it will follow, y^t such as do not acknowledge any error, or go about to defend such marriages as being persuaded they are consonant to the word of God, cannot find comfort nor assure themselves they may lawfully have the company one of another, but stand endighted by y^e law, if not of incest, yet of a great sin against God. Again, I would gladly understand what breach can be committed within the degrees forbidden, w^c may not justly be accounted incest? Lastly, whereas it is objected, that the vnkles wife which is expressly forbidden, seemeth to be as near as the vnkles son, the one being of affinity, the other of consanguinity; it will follow from hence, that all the repentance in the world cannot help nor serve to give comfort to the marriage of cozen germans. For let a man live in incest, and marry any of the degrees expressed in the law, we must know that to live in the sin, and to repent of the sin are contrary one to the other.

As for example, if I marry my vnkles wife, and afterward understand I have done against the Law, though I seem to repent and keep her still, Poenitentia non agitur, sed fingitur, as Augustine speaketh in another case, the Repentance is not true but counterfeit: and it may still be said unto me, as John in like case did to Herod, It is not lawful for thee to have thy vnckles wife, Mark 6, 18.

But it will be said, [Objection.] Suppose this marriage be lawful, yet it being in the first degree that is made so, it is good not to come near it, that we may not fall into any that were forbidden; as if we see a dangerous pit, it were no wisdom to play near it, but rather to keep our selves aloof, that so the danger may be the farther from us: as when God had set bounds for the people at the giving of the Law, the people fled even from them, that they might be assured not to transgress them.

But this similitude carrieth more color to move, then force to persuade. [Answer.] For this reason is only an allusion; and if we mark it well, we shall see it is a very unfit and unlike comparison. If Moses had of his own head set any other bounds in the Mountain, then those which the Lord himself had appointed to debar the people from nearer access, it might have been some ground to lead us to the like; as by prohibiting the degrees farther off, to debar from the degrees prohibited by the Lord. But Moses did not so, albeit being supreme Magistrate he had the same power, and being wise he could have seen the same reason so to do as well as we. Now in that the people departed from the bounds which were set them, they did it not to yield obedience unto God, or because they would not transgress, God's Commandment, neither did they it by any direction from Moses, neither is it recorded unto any commendation of them, but it is imputed to the confused multitude of the people; and to the fear that enforced them, not only to shun the bounds of the Mount, but to run back to their own Tents: whereas doubtless they might with more praise & less reproof have holden the bounds prefixed by the Lord, then to have fled from them afar off, Exod. 20, ver. 18.

Let not us therefore seek to be wiser then God, or go about to set other bounds then he hath done. For this is a sure rule, the which we may approve without fear of danger, that the Lord's bounds are sufficient for us, to keep us in every good way. This we see constantly practiced by the Priests and people of Israel: for the high Priest did keep y^e bounds of the holiest place appointed unto him: the ordinary Priests the Tabernacle of the Congregation: the people, the Courts of y^e Lord's house, none of them for a supposed modesty restraining himself from the uttermost of the liberty given unto him. For the people do not shun the door of the Tabernacle with their sacrifices, nor the Priests the veyle of the inner Tabernacle with their daily service, nor the high Priest the presence of the Mercyseat, albeit they were all once driven out of the Tabernacle and Temple also with fear of the glorious Majesty of God which there appeared, Exod. 20, 34. Numb. 16, 42. 1 Kings 9, 11. as the people of Israel were from the Mountain. And if the similitude pretended have any force, we may argue from it with better consequence after this manner; whereas the Israelites are commanded not to approach to the bounds of the Lord's Mountain to touch it under pain of death, and therefore they for fear did fly farther off, lest they should touch the Mountain, and die: even so whereas the people of God are by the Levitical law commanded not to approach to any of the kindred of their flesh therein specified to uncover their nakedness, (Levite. 18, 6,) under the pain & penalty of most grievous punishments; it shall be well and wisely done of us, so far to fly from them, that we do not so much as approach unto them in any inordinate lust of mind, but fly all occasions that may draw us thereunto: which course, if Amnon had holden toward his sister Tamar, he had not perished for presuming so far within the bounds of the Levitical law. For the approaching near to her, in beholding her beauty, and in desiring and enjoying her company in place too private and inconvenient, did draw him on to fulfill his loathsome lust; whereof I see not how there could have been laid by the device of man any stronger bar, thē the express limits of the Lord's commandment, which might have sufficed unto him, & may likewise to us, if any fear of God or of his judgments be before our eyes: & if these cannot prevail with us, what may be hoped or surmised by any new prohibitions devised by men in the degrees otherwise lawful?

[Object.] Again, it will be objected, that such marriages prove vnfortunate, and never succeed well, but either parents, or children, or both repent of it when it is too late.

I answer, this is a very weak reason, [Answer.] to argue from the success and the event to prove the lawfulness or unlawfulness of any matter, of which the very heathen saw the incongruity. Thus do some profane persons argue also against the marriage of the Ministers of the word, because many of their children are loose and disobedient; whereas though some prove otherwise then they should, and their parents would, yet do many thousands of their children and children's children live in obedience to God and man. And by this reason might the marriage of any several estate and degree of men be taxed as unlawful. So if we cast our eyes upon the marriages of many cozen germans, we shall see thē live in great unity and amity, in great love and contentment between themselves, and bring forth a plentiful increase of an hopeful and godly issue.

As for those that do ascribe the ill success in families to such matches, it is a plain parologisme à non causa ad causam, to note that to be the cause of ill event, which is no cause at all. And in some particulars, where some of their children have not proved in body or mind, or in both as was expected, as we see the like also in others, so I could allege other causes more to the purpose, if I list to enter so far, or to handle this at large. Thus do some make a man's profession of true religion and a good conscience to walk humbly before God, the cause of his poverty, and decay in his temporal estate: the preaching of the Gospel to be the cause of dearth and famine: never observing how many persons have prospered by serving the Lord; and how great peace, and how long plenty, and what store of blessings the Land hath enjoyed for the plentiful and powerful preaching of y^e truth among us.

Lastly, it is objected, that such marriages are many ways offensive: and that we are commanded to give no offense to Jew, or Gentile, or to the Church of God, 1 Cor. 10, 32, neither to them that are within, nor to them that are without, But by such marriages, the papists are offended, the ignorant people that know not the law are offended, the weaker sort (that ought to be respected) are offended, and many of the godly brethren are offended, and generally not some few, but the whole multitude.

I answer, [Answer.] here is much a do about offense, and this is in effect as much as to say, that all men take offense at it: howbeit this conceyte is over lavish. I confess, if this were true in every part, there were just and necessary cause to forbear our Christian liberty for a time, rather then to give an universal offense. But I neither see nor hear of any such scandals or exceptions taken by the multitude (which also are the ignorant sort) against such matches, which are daily in use and practice before their eyes; neither is there any reason or likelihood that they should take such offense because they were the parties to the law-making in the high Court and Council of Parliament for the lawful liberty of such matches, and they have the tables of degrees in many places hanging openly in their Churches to be seen and read of all, and carry often about them, or at least have in their houses the English Bibles expressing the same in commō use. Touching the offense of the particular weaklings, such as it may be are, or at least may be in any estate, when any such appear and are known, they are much to be respected, and a long time to be borne withal, but yet not always; for there is a time of ignorance to be allowed to such, or rather a time wherein they are to learn and to be instructed, til the Christian liberty be sufficiently made known unto them. This hath been already thoroughly performed, to any that have minds to learn, or hearts to enquire, or ears to hear; and therefore there is no reason that their willful ignorance and causeless offense, should still hold our Christian liberty in perpetual slavery and servitude. This therefore only remaineth further to be performd in regard of their offense, to proffer the means of satisfaction and resolution, by opening to them the truth: wherein, if they will still persist obstinate and stiff-necked against the clear shining thereof in their faces, as the Sun at noon day, then I may well say, the offense is taken by themselves, and willfully holden, rather then given by others: and then they have more need to learn a rule of charity of the Apostles mouth then to teach us one, which is, not to judge their brother, nor to condemn another man's servant, but themselves, seeing he doth stand or fall to his own master, Rom. 14, 4, 10: and every man at the last day shall give accounts for himself to God that judgeth the quick and dead, before whose judgment seat all must stand. And therefore they are not to judge their brother in that which he doth to the Lord with thankfulness, as did those that did eat to the Lord with thankfulness, verse 6. and were not to be judged by their brethren therein: where (if I do not mistake) I take the offense to be the more forcible, then in this of the marriage of cozen germans, because that offense was grounded upon the ceremonial Law of God then buried and abolished, whereas this offense in the marriage of cozen germanes is grounded either upon the rotten post of our own fancy, or upon the ragged pieces of the Popes Canons. Besides, the favoring of the weak brethren in those ceremonies of Moses Law, was only in y^e time of the infancy of the Gospel, but when once in farther growth and deeper root taken of the Gospel, they were vanished by the clear manifestation of the truth, then they were mightily oppugned by the Apostles, and the offense little favored. In this case do we stand at this day in this matter of marriage between cousin germans, after so long abolishing of those popish Constitutions to the contrary, and sufficient manifestation of the law of God against them, so that the offense of the Papists is little to be regarded, especially seeing it tendeth to the bringing of us back again to their Canonical servitude, that is, the Antichristian yoke, which God forbid. For seeing we are escaped from them, why should we suffer our selves to be entangled therewith again? and why do we not rather stand for the Christian liberty, whereunto the Lord hath called us? And if we will soberly and seriously consider of this matter, we shall find that offense is rather given to a Papist by refraining that Christian liberty of God's Law, then by professing & using of it in such marriages as are against their Canon. And by making scruple of such marriages as are prohibited by the Popes Canon do we not confirm the Papists in the idol subjection to the Popish Canon, and make them still to judge amiss of the Christian liberty given unto us by God's Law, and professed also by our own Laws? To conclude, a Papist (no doubt) would be more offended in his conceyte to see any refuse their Canonical obedience by approouing or making such matches prohibited by them; whereas by refrayning or not approouing such marriages, great occasion is given to make the Papists think well of their Canon, and of him that made it.

Lastly, from hence ariseth comfort to those [Use 3] that are already entered into such marriage as now we justify to be lawful. Howbeit, as they that dissuade marriage in this kind, do notwithstanding profess ingenuously, that they seek not to entangle any man's Conscience that hath so matched: so in like manner, I write not to persuade or encorage any that are free to match this way, neither do I see why any should be discouraged from it, or left comfortless that are already entered into it. Again, albeit I teach the lawfulness of this marriage, yet I would have no man presume to enter and adventure upon the same, with doubt of mind, and perplexity of conscience, because then it becometh sin to him, forasmuch as he doeth it not in faith. Lastly, where the civil Magistrate doth restrain and prohibit this degree, it is meet & reason that the people should forbear the same, as in all other civil ordinances, which are not repugnant to the moral law of God.

True it is, in Geneva and other free Cities there is some restraint of this degree, as appeareth by the Confession of axony, sect. 18. touching marriage; nevertheless, touching the lawfulness of the marriage of cousin germans, Beza is plain in his observations upon that Confession, when he saith, We admonish the people diligently, that they do not think that this degree is forbidden in it self, that is, by the Law of God, either expressed or understood, which is the Law of Nature. And we are to approve the political laws of Princes touching these things, provided that the conscience be not snared and entangled.

Hereupon Peter Martyr adviseth Magistrates, that they should take heed that they burden not the people too much, and without weighty cause: & Beza to the same purpose wisheth, that all Christian Magistrates would decree this matter for the lawfulness of such matches as the first Council of Paris did, rather then supra Deum ipsum & veteres Leges ciuiles sapere videri, that is, Then to seem to be wiser then God himself and the ancient civil laws, in prohibiting these matches, which are not prohibited either in the law of God, or in the law of the Romans. So then, where there is a law of the Magistrate in force that forbiddeth them, the precept of the Apostle even in all indifferent things must take place, Let every soul be subject to the higher power, Rom. 13, 1. howbeit Christians must be subject thereunto as to a political constitution, not to a divine institution. But with us there is no such positive Law, but the matter is established according to the pure and simple word of God; neither is there any offense taken in our land against such matches, which is the only reason why in many places they are forbidden. As then we have shown before, that this degree hath ground and foundation in y^e word of God: so let us see what is the judgment and opinion of the learned, that if by the mouth of two or three witnesses every truth should stand, then by a clowde of witnesses, speaking as it were with one voice, we may be moved to give our consent. And albeit no man is to build his faith upon men, which were to set our house upon the sand; yet after the resting and reposing of our selves upon the doctrine of the Law and the Prophets, it cannot but minister some comfort to see the general consent in a manner and approbation of such as have been great lights of the world, worthy instruments of God, excellent Preachers of the Gospel, firm pillars of the church and constant defenders of the faith. [Object.] But it will be objected, That many learned men do condemn this marriage, and that there is great variety, dissention, and division among them, whereupon ensueth much doubtfulness and distraction among the simple people that are not able to judge and discern between the one and the other.

[Answ.] I answer, first touching doubtfulness, there are not many (if there be any) that enter into marriage of this kind, but they ask the judgment of others, and have the opinion of moe besides themselves: and then touching the learned, there are not many that I know of, which simply condemn the same: & among these, some allege Ambrose an ancient Writer, and some produce Tremellius among the later. Touching Ambrose, it cannot be denied, but he holdeth this kind to be prohibited in the Law. For, having in hand to persuade Paternus not to marry his son to his daughters daughter, that is, the Vnckle to the Neece, he bringeth this as a reason, that because cousin germans, which are a degree farther off then Vnckle and Neece, are forbidden, therefore that of Vnckle & Neece must be holden as prohibited. But herein he committeth a double error: one, in that he taketh the one match to be prohibited, which indeed is not; the other, in that he conceiveth not that degree to be expressly prohibited, which indeed is prohibited. It were easy to trace out farther ignorance in this Father, otherwise of great desert: but to omit that, I will oppose against him the authority of Saint Augustine, no way inferior unto him, in well deserving of the Church of GOD, and withstanding Heresies and Heretics that pestered and poisoned with their leaven the purity of the Gospel. Both these were very great Doctors of the Latin Church, and both living at the self same time, about four hundred years after Christ. For he calleth this kind of marriage (Aug. de Ciuit. Dei lib. 15. Cap. 16.) factum licitum, A lawful act; and saith, Quod fieri per Leges licebat, quia id nec diuina prohibuit, & nondum prohibuerat lex humana, that is, Which was lawful to be done by the Laws, because the law of God had not prohibited it, neither as yet had the law of man.

And whereas it was one cause of the prohibition of this kind, for the multiplying of affinities, Augustine observeth, that the nephewes of the first men in the world might marry their cousin germanes, and that they had a religious care that the nearness of their kindred (being pulled asunder by the degrees of propagation) should not go out too far; & therefore by the band of marriage (among cousin germans) they endeavored to bind it up again.

But touching Tremellius the case is not so clear, neither so certain what his opinion is, because he giveth no note, but setteth down certain figures, whereby some gather that he maketh cousin germans a degree as far off as the vnckles wife, and therefore therein by Analogy prohibited. Howbeit there is great cause to doubt, whether his judgment swayed that way, forasmuch as we find the father and the son also noted with a like figure, as likewise the brother and sister, as if they were all in one degree, and that in the second degree, which I think no man will affirm. For it is plain and certain, that the son from the father is in the first degree in the line direct, and the brother and sister in the same degree, in the line collateral: and therefore it is very doubtful what his meaning is, having left no full explication thereof.

Again, it is as clear to me as the Sun, and I dare boldly avouch, that the vncles wife and the cousin german are not both in one degree howsoever any man do cypher them with the same figure, or another discypher thereupon: because then the mother and hir son should be holden to be in one degree: for the cousin german may be the Aunts son, which Aunt as from her parent is the first degree, and her son being the cousin german the second: so that the Nephew marrying the Aunt, doeth marry her that is in the first degree, which is prohibited: but marrying her daughter who is his cousin german, he marrieth in the second degree, which is not prohibited expressly, and not be holden to be prohibited by analogy to the Aunt, seeing there is no like reason of proportion between the first & the second, or any diverse degrees in the collateral lines, but always between the same degrees. So then, I hold it for an ungrounded and an untrue assertion, that any degrees are forbidden farther off then cousin germans. But suppose these two were plain and direct against the same, as indeed one of them is, what are these to the stream and current of the learned writers which this age hath brought forth? who, as it were with one mouth (their pens and tongues not divided) do hold and maintain confidently and constantly the lawfulness of this marriage. And first I produce among this cloud of witnesses, John Calvin, whom we named before, who in the interpretation of the precept not to come near any of the kindred of our flesh, hath these words, Non omnes consanguineas hoc nomen complectitur, &c: That is, These words do not comprize all kinsfolks, because it is permitted to the cousin germans either of the fathers, or of the mothers side, to marry his cousin german either of the fathers or mothers side. This matter he maketh so clear, that in the 385. Epistle he saith of it thus, Quod lege dei mandatum est, &c. that is, It is not lawful to call in question that which is commanded in the Law of God (as he taketh the freedom of cousin germans to be: for seeing it is not forbidden, we are commanded and enjoined to account the same to be left free for all men) and thereupon he giveth this resolution, that in this matter our consciences remain free before God: so that in his harmony upon the books of Moses, he termeth it diabolica Papae superbia qui nouos excogitando propinquitatis gradus, supra deum sapere voluit, A devilish pride of the Pope, who devising new degrees of kindred, would make himself wiser then God himself.

Now that which he speaketh farther tending to any restraint of this match of cousin germanes is in respect of the positive Law of the Magistrate, which is the law of man not of God, and of the long use of the contrary: in both which respects offense is taken at the practice of it, and therefore with them to be forborne. Howbeit these things do no way touch us, neither can challenge any place in our kingdom, where we have no law of man to forbid us, no disuse or long discontinuance of it to discourage us, neither any offense of learned or unlearned to dissuade us: & therefore we are no way bound in conscience, equity, or charity, to renounces that kind of marriage. For, the question is not with us, what is at all times, and in all places, and toward all persons convenient, but simply of the lawfulness of it. The judgment of Beza accordeth with the former testimony, and serveth as amply and fully to depose and witness this truth, of which we have spoken before.

Peter Martyr shall be the next, professor of divinity among us in the late days of K. Edward; for howsoever some deliver out that he is a man indifferent, or doubtful and uncertain in his opinion; it is certain & a matter out of doubt, that these men never read him with judgment, but with partiality. For being themselves enemies in this case, and having taught the unlawfulness thereof, they would draw all other also, either to be enemies thereunto, or have them to sit still as silent, and to stand by as neuters. But the truth is, he is as resolute as the former for the lawfulness of such marriages by the law of God: as appeareth by a large discourse in the first of the Judges, out of the law of God & the Romans, and showeth the same not to be unlawful, but to be exempted out of the prohibition. For speaking of the marriage of Achsah with Othniel (of which we have spoken before) he showeth, that if these two were brothers children, their marriage was lawful, Non enim diuinis legibus coniugium inter •stos vsquam fuit prohibitum, that is, By God's law marriage between such was never forbidden. And afterward, reproving the opinion of Ambrose who disliked the same, thee faith, Quod vero Ambrosius, &c. And whereas Ambrose affirmeth, that such marriage is prohibited by the law of God no man can allow thereof, that advisedly considereth either the law of God, or the deeds of the Fathers. Can anything be plainer then this? or can any man deliver his mind more expressly? So then to pass from him, I come to Louis Lauater of Tigurine, a judicious and painful man; he expounding the 15 of Joshua, saith, Si Othniel Achsa consobrinus fuit, &c. If Othniel were Achsaes cozen german, he might marry her to wife, but if he were her uncle, he could not by the law. Thus doth he also speak of the same man and the same marriage in his Commentaries upon the Judges, where he saith. It appeareth by other places, that they were cozen germans, and therefore marriage might be consummated between them by the Law. To him I will add Zepperus Minister of the Church at Herborne, he affirmeth, that the Law of God is so far from forbidding the marriage of cousin germans, that it propoundeth sundry examples thereof; and after he had produced the practice of it in those we named before, to wit, Jacob and Othniel, Gen. 29, 12, 13, 19. Joshua 15, 17. Judge. 1, 12. he alledgeth other also, that Rehoboom took to wife Mahalath the daughter of Ierimoth the son of David, and likewise Abigail y^e daughter of Eliab the son of Jesse, who was the father of David, 2 Chron. 11, ver. 18. So in the New Testament, Joseph and Mary the blessed virgin were cousin germans, Matth. 1. ver. 15. Luke 3, 23, 24: and so doth Eusebius testify the same in his ecclesiastical history, out of a certain Epistle of Africanus to Aristides. For Matthan begat two sons Jacob and Heli, as appeareth in the places before named out of the Evangelists, Jacob begat Joseph, and Heli•ega•Mary. And thus both Matthew and Luke are fully and fi•lie reconciled: for whereas o•e saith, Joseph was the son of Jacob, & the other saith he was the son of Heli, it is certain he could not be both, in one and the some respect, and therefore it must be taken in a diverse consideration; and that is in this manner, he was the natural son of Jacob, but legal son of Heli; he was the son of Jacob by consanguinity, but the son of Heli by light of affinity; that is, his son in Law, beca•se he married his daughter Mary: as also Naomi calleth her daughters in law her own daughters, and David calleth Saul his father, 1 Sam. 24, 11: and Saul him his son, ver. 16 Neither doth the ancient civil law condemn these marriages.

The Law of Justinian is extant touching marriages, which is this, The children of two brethren, or two sisters, or of the brother and sister may lawfully be joined together in marriage. The same Law was established by Arcadius and Honorius the Emperors, that the marriage of cousin Germans shall be allowed, and the children borne of them shall be holden legitimate, and succeed their fathers in their inheritance. And hereunto do the ancient Councils also accord, Epann. Council. about the year of Christ, four hundred ninety seven, & Council. Turon. 2. in the year five hundred and sixty.

Now the first that did forbid the marriage of cousin Germans was Theodosius the Elder, as many testify, and that by the counsel and advice of Ambrose, Lib. 8. Epist. 66. which he calleth the Theodosian Law, and in his time Augustine testifieth it was in force. This is wholly, or at least for the most part taken out of Zepperus.

The next witness to be produced, is, Amand. Polanus, professor in the university of Basil, in Syntag. Theol, lib. 10. cap. 53. who teacheth, that the sons and daughters of brethren and sisters may lawfully marry by the law of God, whatsoever the Popes canon law say to the contrary, as Jacob married Rahel his cousin German. Of the same judgment also is Chemnitz in his Examin. For he showeth that the prohibition of this degree is merely human, established for no other cause, but that the prohibitions of God might be kept with greater reverence; and where such prohibitions are, they ought to be observed; which is not denied of us; howbeit that is not our case, where no such prohibitions are. I will annex to these one foreign testimony more, & that is of Zanchius, a man of eminent note, who proving that the incestuous marriages between the brother and sister, whether they be borne of the same father and mother, or of one of them only, are utterly unlawful: as also between the Nephew and the Aunt, and the Niece and her uncle, he hath these words: The marriage between the sons and daughters of natural brethren is lawful, as all the learned and godly agree without any controversy, for as much as we never read the same forbidden in holy Scripture in any place, but rather allowed by many examples which were never condemned by any man. And albeit he wish that in all such places as is a restraint hereof, men should be subject to the Magistrate according to the Doctrine of Christ, yet he spareth not farther to deliver his opinion in this manner: For my part I could wish for many causes, and those of no small moment and importance, that marriages might simply be made by warrant of the word of God, that whatsoever God himself hath left free and made lawful, the same might also be left unto men as lawful. I speak freely that which I conceive of this matter. These are the foreign testimonies which I thought good to allege at this present, to w^c it were not hard to add infinite others, who because they speak the same things, and run the same course that the former do, I will not trouble the reader and myself any farther in rehearsing of them. I will conclude the whole with one more, & that is our own country-man M. Perkins, a very judicious & godly learned Divine as any that this age hath brought forth, who in a Treatise, proving that a reprobate may in truth be made partaker of all that is contained in the Religion of the Church of Rome, and that a right papist by his Religion cannot go beyond a reprobate, saith thus: To go further, by God's word they which are distant 4. degrees in the transuers equal line, are not forbidden to marry together, as cousin Germans: thus the daughters of Zelophehad were married to their fathers brothers sons: This example as I take it, may be a warrant of the lawfulness of this Marriage, howsoever the church of Rome do ouerthwart the Lord in it. Let me add one thing more, and then I will end. Whereas we are advised by many in this question, to have due consideration of offenses that may arise in making such matches, I would wish also, and desire all those that are contrary minded, to have good consideration of such offenses as may be given by two earnest disprouing the unfitnes and inconueniency of such matches, and especially by leaving in doubt and suspense the lawfulness of them, forasmuch as between parties of very good account both in calling and Religion, there have been and are many matches in this Land, of that kind: & that between high and low, rich & poor, noble and vnnoble, which have been undertaken and finished by the judgment of the godly and learned, so that it were not hard to produce sundry examples of Emperors, Kings Princes, Dukes, Earls, Barons, Knights, Gentlemen, & other of all sorts: which now to bring in question for the offensive conceits of some, were more offensive to the truth, to the Church, to the learned, and to men of all conditions, yea, more dangerous to the state of those parties, and prejudicial to their issue, then any man of judgment or godliness would approve. Thus much of this point, of this chapter, and of this whole book.

The Lord almighty, the author of all number, of whose understanding there is no number, Psal. 147, 5: who hath ordered all things in measure, number, & weight; with whom our days are determined, and the number of our months are set, Job 14, 5: by whose only mercy we have received strength to finish this book of NVMBERS, containing the journeys of the Israelites through the desert, from Mount Sinai unto the plains of Moab by Jordan near Jericho; and admonishing us of the state of the Church in this life lying under the cross, and at length receiving deliverance from the Ancient of days: grant unto us, that being numbered among the children of GOD, we may have our lot among the Saints, and be in the number of them that are sealed out of all the Tribes of the children of Israel, Revel. 7, 4. and so rest forever in the heavenly Canaan among the souls of just men perfected, and the innumerable company of angels, Heb. 12, 22. Unto him be praise and glory in the Church, Amen.
