and cherish his Wife as the Lord the Church, Eph. 5. 29. and 'tis the Wives duty to go to and rely on his faithfulness for it: So 'tis with the Soul that hath espoused Christ; it is to live on Christ for all it needs: they that take Christ aright, take him for their All, not for better or worse for richer or poorer, as Women take their earthly Husbands, (for Christ is always best of all, always exceeding rich, and full of unsearchable treasures,) but to take him for their only and sufficient portion at all times, and in all estates. Lam. 3. 24. The Lord is my portion, saith my Soul, therefore will I trust in him. Lord, (said Paulinus, when his City, Gold and Silver was taken away) let not the loss of these things trouble me; for thou art all, and more than all these to me; [Shaw's Tombstone, p. 33.] Christ is the Believer's All in the way, and God his All in All at the end. It hath pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell, and under him all things should be put, 2 Col. 1. 19. Heb. 2. 8. And this is for the supply, comfort and blessedness of those that are his. Eph. 1. 23. Which is the body, the fullness of him who filleth all in all. Whatever Christ hath (as Mediator) is the Churches for her use and profit: If men have plenty of liquors, they fill their vessels with them; if they have much riches, they place them in their treasury, so doth Christ dispose of his fullness for his Churches good; hence 'tis the Spouse of Christ comes leaning on her Beloved from the Wilderness, Cant. 8. 5. and dares adventure her All on the love and sufficiency of her loving and lovely Lord; she is full of failings, but she lives on him for righteousness; many are her weaknesses, but she goes to Christ for strength. Isa. 45. 24. Surely shall one say, in the Lord have I righteousness and strength: She is sensible of many wants, but casts herself on the promise; My God shall supply all your wants, Phil. 4. 19. Her backslidings, temptations, dangers, troubles and fears are many, but she stays on the Lord Jesus, whom she hath chosen for her only friend in Heaven and Earth, and there she lays herself down in his bosom, when wearied with difficulties and doubts, and embarks herself in his faithfulness for all she stands in need of, for life and godliness, for grace and glory.

Answ. 5. Fifthly, Fruitfulness to Christ proves Marriage to Christ: Hence the Spouse is set forth by metaphors that express fruitfulness; a Garden, not a wilderness; a well watered Garden, which is usually most fruitful, where the Spices flow out, where the Graces of the Spirit are more operative and abundant, and Souls become more fruitful in manifested holiness; An Orchard planted with choice and pleasant fruits, Camphire, Spikenard, Saffron, Calamus, Cinamon, with all trees of Frankincense, Myrh and Aloes, with all the chiefest Spices, which signify the preciousness, variety and abundance of grace and holiness in those who are savingly united to the Lord Jesus: A flock of Sheep, whereof everyone beareth twins, and not one is barren, Cant. 4. 12, 13, 14, 16. Ch. 4. 2. 'Tis compared to the Palm-tree, the Cedar, the Vine, the Fig-tree, a green Olive, plants famous for flourishing, growth, clusters of fruit, constant fruitfulness; 'tis said of the Fig-tree, it bears fruit all the year long, and in many places they shall always find green figs on it: Such is the Spouse of Christ, compared with the world and hypocrites fruitful and flourishing: A good tree bringeth forth good fruit, Mat. 7. 17. The root of the righteous yieldeth fruit, Prov. 12. 12. Wherever the grace of God is received in truth, there it brings forth fruit, Col. 1. 6. As sin brings forth fruit unto death, so doth grace unto life, Rom. 6. 22. No sooner doth the Lord Jesus espouse a Soul, but he heals it of its barrenness: He maketh the barren Woman to keep house, Psal. 113. 9. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away, Joh. 15. 2. A barren Christian is a monster in Religion, no living member of Christ's body; indeed there are Winterseasons when fruit may not appear, but even then 'tis in the seed and sap; and there is a preparative for fruit, which appears in the season, but to be always without the fruits of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, Gal. 5. 22, 23. is a sign of one that never had marriage-union, and intimate communion with Jesus Christ, but is the certain mark of a fruitless Fig-tree, in danger of cutting down, and the character of that ground which is cursed, and nigh to burning, Luke 13. 7. 9. Heb. 6. 8. Souls, try your state, 'tis for your lives, your All depends upon your marriage-union with Christ: Had you never any special acquaintance with Christ? Have you no conjugal love to Christ? Cannot you consent to leave all for Christ? Do you usually live and stay on other things for life and salvation, and not on Christ? Have you been ever barren souls, that never brought forth the fruits of the Spirit unto God? then were you never married to Christ, nor have any true title to heavenly treasures.

Mark 2. Secondly, your interest in heavenly things is known by the naturalness and supremacy of your love to them; Where the treasure is, there will the heart be, Mat. 6. 21. If heavenly things be yours, your heart is there; worldly men have the World set in their hearts, Eccl. 3. 11. Their heart is but the World copied out: so heavenly souls have Heaven set in their hearts, which are but the counterpane of Heaven; everything hath a natural love to his own, the World will love his own. Joh. 15. 19. No man ever hated his own flesh: Eph. 5. 29. What affections have brute beasts for their young, and will venture their lives to defend and maintain them. 'Tis storied of the Storks, when the Town of Delph in the low Countries was on fire, and the Storks perceived the fire to come near their nests, they endeavored to carry away their young, but when they could not remove them, they flutter'd over them with their wings, covering them from the flames till they all perished together, [Belg. Com. wealth.] So strong is natural affection to its interest, and the natural issues of itself; much stronger should gracious affections be to their interests: O how I love thy Law! (saith David) 'tis my meditation all the day long, Psal. 119. 97. Whence came this affection? it was from his interest in those great and lovely truths. Psal. 119. 111. Thy testimonies have I chosen as an heritage forever, for they are the rejoicing of my heart. Souls risen with Christ, and born to the inheritance above, will set their affections on things above, Col. 3. 1, 2. Where is thy heart, Christian, in Heaven or Earth? what things are dearest to thee, and sweetest to thy taste? canst thou prize the light of God's countenance better than life? hadst thou rather be a door-keeper in God's House than dwell in the Pavilions of this World? Is a little of Heaven better than a great deal of Earth? and can thy heart consent to be at any loss in the World to enjoy God in his Ordinances, and to be enriched with spiritual blessings in heavenly places? Then heavenly things are thine.

Mark 3. Thirdly, if heavenly things be yours, it will appear by your heart-cares for them, and vigorous pursuits of them; how careful are men of their interests, to secure and enlarge them? Phil. 2. 21. All men seek their own: If the things of Heaven be yours, your greatest care will be to get and keep them; when Kish thought his Son Saul was lost, he left caring for the Asses, sorrowing for him, saying, What shall I do for my Son, 1 Sam. 10. 2? Christians, if heavenly things be yours, they will lie nearer your hearts than all the World besides; the sense or fear of losing them will more trouble you than all losses besides; the world, relations, creature-comforts will be forgotten; when you apprehend a death on your heavenly interests, you will do more, and part with more to get Heaven, than the World and dearest comforts of it. Many will pretend desires for Heaven, as the young man in the Gospel; but Christ will say to them as to his Hearers, Mat. 5. 47. What do you more than others? Souls, you would have Christ here, and Heaven hereafter; but what do you for it? what do you more than hypocrites and common professors, whose portion is in this life? can you leave the world for God? can you deny yourself for the pleasing of Christ? and part with your right eye, and right hand; throw away your Idols of gold and silver, the world, and fleshly lusts, and honor God with your time, strength and substance? Can you let your Plough stand still to follow God's; and stick at no pains and hardships to enjoy the least spiritual good? Then are heavenly things yours.

Mark 4. Fourthly, Then are you interested in Heavenly Treasures, when your hearts and spirits are suited to them; when the Lord hath let in a heavenly tincture on your hearts; and inlaid your spirits with heavenliness, and a mind that answers to heavenly things, as face answers face in the water: When God intends men for Heaven, he doth in time fit them for it; and where he gives a title to mercy, he gives a capacity also; where he makes over the riches of glory; he makes that soul a vessel fit for glory. Men do not purchase Pearls for Swine, and build Schools for brute beasts. God did not make the Heavens for fishes, and the Sea for beasts, but suited every creature to its element: They that are his Adoption, are his new Creation also, Ephes. 2. 10. and when they are designed to a blessed end, they are principled for it, and have a disposition put into them to move towards it: They that are set apart for Heaven hereafter, do bear the image of their heavenly Father here, 1 Cor. 15. 49. There is a stamp of glory upon the Heirs of glory, though it may be so covered with dirt, and worn out with the rust of corruption, as not to be easily seen at all times. Whose is this image and superscription? Matt. 22. 20. Caesar's coin hath Caesar's stamp; and the Children of Heaven have their Father's mark upon their foreheads, Rev. 14. 1. If Christ's Treasures be yours, you are his Treasury; though earthen vessels, yet treasures, vessels and bags that wax not old. Do you hope for spiritual blessings? what manner of spirits are you of? Do you savor heavenly things? What things do best suit and please your spirits, the things of Heaven, or the things of the world; grace, or goods; righteousness, or riches; spiritual things, or carnal? What goes down easiest, or when down, sits easiest on your stomachs? The Heirs of Heaven are Non-conformists to this world, but transformed into the Spirit of Heaven, and the renewing of their minds to their new estate, blessedness and glory, Rom. 12. 1. That's a second thing wherein this Heavenly Trade lies, in securing and clearing up your interest in heavenly things.

Thirdly, Another thing wherein this Heavenly Trade lies is this; in getting in of heavenly goods: This is a great part of Traders business, to be furnishing themselves with wares fit for their employment and advantage; the Artificer in making; the Merchant in buying in goods that are vendible and will turn to profit. So must Wisdom's Merchants get themselves stored with Wisdom's wares, that they may be able to drive on her Trade: Only in this lies the difference; earthly goods are either the products of men's labors, and effects of their industry; or else the purchase of their money and treasures: But heavenly goods come not in this way, as the proportionable reward of their labors, or return of their money: Indeed heavenly bread must be labored for; but when all is done, the Son of man gives it to them, Joh. 6. 27. Salvation must be wrought out, as if it lay at their fingers end; and yet this very will and power to work wrought in them. Phil. 2. 12, 13. Work out your salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure. No sufficiency is found in the creature, before saving grace helps, to embrace its overtures, no more than a dead body to receive life. Ephes. 2. 1. You have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that you should go and bring forth fruit, Joh. 15. 16. The soul's choice of Christ is the effect of Christ's first choosing him; and its love to God the product of God's first loving him, 1 Jo. 4. 19. and the soul's fruitfulness is the effect of Christ's purposing and appointing it thereunto. No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him, Joh. 6. 44. Not only morally by persuading the will with potent arguments; but physically, by working to will, by a powerful inclining and disposing the will to come to, and choose Christ, through the irresistible operation of the Spirit: So then, 'tis not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy, Rom. 9. 16. Salvation-grace both of righteousness and holiness, is freely given to the thirsty soul through and with Christ, Rev. 20. 6. and the inclination and power to receive as freely bestowed also. Phil. 1. 29. To you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake. Faith itself is the gift of God, both the power and will to believe, not given to every man alike: For all men have not faith, 2 Thes. 3. 2. because the Father was not pleased effectually to bestow it. Deut. 29. 4. The Lord hath not given you a heart to perceive, and eyes to see, and ears to hear to this day: Who hath made thee to differ? or what hast thou which thou didst not receive? 1 Cor. 3. 7. If the differencing of one man from another, as to his improvement of grace, lay in his own inclinations and natural freedom of his own will, then there was something in the creature that made this difference, contrary to this Scripture; and a foundation laid in a man to glory, which wholly overthrows the design of Redemption-grace, which is to take off all boasting, 1 Cor. 1. 29. Rom. 3. 27. and to lay all the praise and glory of man's salvation on special grace, Eph. 1. 5, 6. neither is the first grace only freely given; but more grace also, all sufficiency after (conferred for every good word and work; yea, for every thought that is good) comes from the same grace that first called you, which must also perfect every good work to the day of Salvation, 2 Cor. 3. 5. our sufficiency (who have grace) to think or do the least spiritual good, is derived from the same fountain-fullness that is in Christ, Jam. 1. 16. Eternal life, with whatever leads thereto, is the gift of God, Rom. 6. v. 23. As Christ, so all things with him are freely given, Rom. 8. 32. not only the seed of grace, but the growth of grace; not only the habit, but the act of grace; all comes from Christ in the way of Redemption-grace. Get your hearts well established with this grace, that nothing in you, or done by you, can merit or procure anything of the Father, but upon the account of Christ, and his grace, and promise in him to all that by the Son do come unto him. Goods you need for a daily Trade, but no money and price will pass for them, Isa. 55. 1. they are freely given, and yet you may boldly come for them: Go you must with empty sacks, your friend in Heaven will fill them, and return your money in your sacks mouth. Christians, a considerable part of your work (and that which lays the foundation to all your Trade) lies in getting your souls furnished with heavenly wares: You will drive but a poor

Trade for Heaven, if you do not often receive goods from Heaven. Alas! what can you do in Christianity without continual supplies from Christ? Laodicea could not do any good in Religion, for want of goods from Christ: She had none of his tried gold, and therefore grew soon poor and miserable: If goods fail, trade falls, and livelihood with it: What advantages doth the Tradesman miss, and what losses doth he sustain, by wanting goods to furnish his Customers? So do Christians when they want grace to serve their occasions, necessities, temptations and duties; what advantage might souls get, had they but grace, when they come under Ordinances and Duties? and what losses do they meet with for want of grace, under afflictions, trials and employments? how pitifully do they carry it under troubles, and providential exercises, and are oftentimes sadly foiled for want of grace and wisdom to manage such trials? You have daily need of more grace, as you have of bread for your bodies: Your occasions, temptations and work are spending, and without fresh supplies from the Treasury, you will soon be empty and impoverished: Neglect but your spiritual recruits one day, and you will feel it: 'Tis your interest, if you are Traders, to keep your shops full, and to be often sending for more goods: Grace will never lie long on your hands; other goods may: You will have still occasions to exercise grace in your dealings with God and men; you can never be over-stored with Wisdom's wares.

'Tis your duty also to make use of Christ continually: In everything to make known your requests to him: To draw waters out of this Well of Salvation every day: He is a Fountain sealed for your use; he is made of God to be wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption too; for this end, that they might live upon him to these ends: This is to live by the Faith of the Son of God, which is the Christians daily duty: He complains as being injured when his people will not come unto him that they might have life, Joh. 5. 40. He is troubled when his Children will not make use of him: Hitherto you have asked nothing: Ask and you shall receive that your joy may be full, Joh. 16. 24. Never was a full breast more pain'd for want of drawing, than the Lord Jesus is, when his people receive not from him that fullness that is laid up in him for their use.

'Tis your advantage also to be often at Christ's door, and to be continually fetching in supplies for your souls: This is the way to grow rich apace; to get in more and more of the unsearchable riches of Christ, Rev. 3. 18. This is the way to be filled with the fruits of righteousness, to be more thoroughly furnished unto all good works, to the glory and praise of God, 2 Tim. 3. 17. Phil. 1. 12. This is the way to do everything better, and to abound in the work of the Lord, and to be more complete in all the will of God, 1 Cor. 15. 58. Col. 4. 12. By this means you will become more serviceable unto others, and useful in the place where you live, and in the Societies where God hath placed you; the more full of grace, the more able to profit others. Rom. 15. 14. That ye always are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another. 2 Cor. 1. 4. That we may be able to comfort them with the same comforts wherewith we are comforted of God. They that freely receive, will be able freely to give; and that's a blessed thing, Acts 20. 35. And till you receive you cannot give. Christians, get in more grace every day for your own use, for the glory of God, and the good of others: Labor to be furnished with every grace, especially those graces which the Lord hath more use of, and the time, condition and place you are in, do more especially call for, Heb. 12. 28. 2 Pet. 1. 5.

Be sure to be well furnished with Faith; that's an useful grace at all times (for we live by Faith, Heb. 10. 38.) but especially in evil times, in times of temptation and affliction. Faith is an eye, a hand, a foot at all times; 'tis a grace always useful at every turn; you cannot be without it and be well; 'tis a working grace, and that's good for Traders; you cannot work without it, 2 Thes. 1. 4. A building grace, Jude, v. 3. 20. A nourishing grace, 1 Tim. 4. 6. A soul-enriching grace, Rom. 4. 12. A soulstrengthening grace, Ephes. 3. 16, 17. But 'tis especially needful in evil times, it being a cheering grace, Rom. 15. 13. 'Tis a soul-keeping grace, and that's good in dangerous times, 1 Pet. 1. 5. 'Tis a soul-saving grace, that saves in troubles, and out of troubles, Psal. 27. 5. Jam. 5. 15. 'Tis a heart-establishing grace, 2 Chron. 20. 20. A world-contemning grace, Heb. 11. 26. A world-conquering grace, 1 Joh. 5. 4. A soulsecuring grace, Heb. 11. 23. By faith Moses was hid three months. It secures a person in troubles: 'tis a breast-plate to preserve the heart, 1 Thes. 5. 8. And a shield to cover the head, Ephes. 6. 16. It leads a person through trouble, Heb. 11. 29. By Faith they passed through the Red. Sea, as by dry Land, which the Egyptians assaying to do, were drowned. O get in plenty of this precious unfeigned Faith, for that's the great trading-grace of a Christian; for it gets in, and lays out every grace. Faith is the receiving grace; it receives in Christ, Eph. 3. 17. and it receives from Christ, John 1. 16. Faith is the key that opens Christ's Treasures; the hand that takes out his tried gold: Faith is the carrying, and recarrying grace: Faith comes up to the market-price, and never breaks with God on terms, but subscribes to all the demands of Christ, and so never returns empty. Christians, you will never want goods for your Heavenly Trade, if you can but keep Faith in exercise; your shops will never be empty, as long as Faith can stir up and down, and keep up its Journeys to Heaven: If there be any goods in the promises, any wares in Heaven, Faith will have them down, as long as the soul needs them, and it be for God's interest to part with them: O then get faith! Alas, what pitiful Trade do some drive for want of Faith! Choice goods will not off; precious promises, pertinent instructions, persuasions and encouragements lie on Christ's hands for want of faith in them that hear.

Christians, you will make nothing of Religion without Faith, in the days we live in; you will soon shut up shop, decay and break when troubles come to purpose, without store of Faith. Faith will fill your store-houses, do your work, put off your goods, get in your rights, pay your debts, and maintain you richly on the incomes of your Trade.

Patience is another grace that will much serve you in your Spiritual Trade; you have need of Patience to do the will of God; no working without Patience. 2 Cor. 12. 12. Truly the signs of an Apostle were wrought among you in all Patience. Rom. 5. 4. Patience worketh experience. Souls are apt to be weary of well doing without Patience, and to tire in running, without this long-breathed grace of Patience. Heb. 12. 1. Let us run with Patience the race that is set before us. No receiving the fruit of Ordinances and Duties without Patience. Luke 8. 15. They on the good ground are they which in an honest and good heart, having heard the Word, keep it; and bring forth fruit with Patience. The Lord usually tries his people's Patience before they come to the fruit of Promises, and bring forth the obedience of Precepts; there's a winter between seed-time and harvest; many wet, weeping days between sowing and reaping, ut enim segetem in agro pluvias, nives, glacies, pruinas, grandines, & tempestates ferre necessarium est antequam maturescat, & fructum ferat, ita hominem fidelem intus & extrinsecus multa pati mala oportet. Stell. The seed must lie long, it may may be, under ground, and when 'tis come up, be nipt up with frosts, and covered with snow and hail, and bear many a storm before it ripens, and brings forth fruit, and this calls for Patience; yea many times longsuffering. The husbandman waiteth for the precious fruits of the earth, and hath long Patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain, James 5. 7. Patience is needful to suffer, as well as do the Will of God. Rev. 13. 10. Here is the Patience and Faith of the Saints: To endure captivity and cruel Death for the sake of Christ, Patience to wait for the promise, Rom. 8. 25. and Patience to receive it. Heb. 10. 36. Patience (saith Seneca) is a salve for every sore, that only which alleviates our burdens; without it we cannot be men or Christians: (saith another) 'tis the grace that makes a complete and well accomplished Christian, Manton. James 1. 4. When reason is at a stand, and hope almost at an end, and all refuge fails; Patience steps in, bears the burden, and calms the soul.

Hope is a necessary grace to this great undertaking, reckoned among the three Cardinal virtues that wonderfully adorn a Christian's spirit and conversation. 1 Cor. 13. 13. Now abideth Faith, and Hope, and Charity: Hope is the offspring and refreshment of Faith; 'tis begotten by Faith, and (says one) As a good child relieves its father Faith in time of need. Hope is an expectation, Faith a persuasion. Faith eyes the promise, hope the thing promised, as sure though future, which comforts the soul under the present want of desired mercy; and this is needful to cheer the soul under its exigencies and disappointments in the way of its Christian conversation. Hope keeps in the fire, and keeps up the house. Heb. 3. 6. Whose house are we if we hold fast the confidence and rejoicing of our hope firm to the end. Were it not for Hope the house would fall asunder; Hope keeps it together, till the Lord new build it in Heaven: Hope anchors the soul in a storm, and makes it steady under shaking tempests, Heb. 6. 19. Hope maintains a Christian in a hard winter, while the seed is under clods, and till the corn come to the barn. 1 Cor. 9. 10. He that ploweth, ploweth in Hope (that is of a good harvest) that will compensate all his labors. Hope secures the soul from shame and disappointment under temporary forbearance, Psal. 34. 22. It helps it to rejoice in tribulation, Rom. 5. 2. and compasseth him about with mercy, Psal. 32. 10.

Humility, Self-denial, Goodness, Temperance, Gentleness, Love, Zeal, Holy Fear, are all good goods that will off well, and turn to the Trader's profit, if well improved: Get your souls well stored with these graces of the Spirit, also if you ever think to drive a good Trade of godliness,

Get your minds filled with knowledge, as well as your hearts with grace; that's part of the Christian's Treasure. 2 Cor. 4. 6. We have this Treasure (that is of the knowledge of God in the face of Christ) in earthen vessels: In whom are hid all the Treasures of Wisdom, Col. 2. 3. Saving knowledge is a Treasure laid up in Christ for Believers, and to be fetched out for their use and comfort. The riches of the full assurance of understanding, and acknowledgement of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ, Col. 2. 2. The Gospel is a mystery, a secret, hid from the natural eye, and cannot be known but by the revelation of the Spirit. To have an inward, clear, sensible, experimental and certain apprehension of the glorious truths of the Gospel, opened and confirmed to the eye of Faith, is a high attainment beyond what any reach to, but those that have the annointings of the Spirit, and to whom 'tis given by the Spirit as the fruit of prayer, and faithful attendance on his teachings in the Gospel and Ordinances of Christ: This is called a rooting and establishment in the Faith, Col. 2. 7. and growing in knowledge, 2 Pet. 3. 18. alluding to trees that being well planted do take deeper root in the earth, and in time come to greater settlement and strength against shakings: And as children that gradually grow and increase to higher statures; so this spiritual knowledge is gradually increased; 'tis not the privilege of new-born babes, of persons at their first conversion, to have this deep fathoming of Gospel-mysteries: But of stronger Christians, who by constant attendances on the Means of Grace, and in progress of time, by Faith, Humility, Prayer and Attention to the Spirit, do at length come to higher measures of this illumination, and full assurance of truth. As Gerson reports of a godly man he knew, who at first was exercised with many doubts and fears, and shakings of Faith; but at last through humiliation of soul, and a captivating of his understanding to Divine Truth, together with the illumination of the Spirit, came to a wonderful clearness in the matters of Faith, and of his soul-estate, with such a settlement of spirit, and certainty about his salvation, as to have no more doubts remaining in him. Christians, content not yourselves with some notions of truth, and shallow cold apprehensions of the great mysteries of salvation; but labor to get in greater measures of spiritual understanding, both objective, as to the Truths to be known; and subjective, as to the discerning of them: Alas, we know as yet nothing as we ought; there are deeps in the knowledge of Christ for Elephants, as well as shallows for Lambs; and there are greater beamings on the souls eye to be obtained, and more certain understanding, and familiar acquaintance to be had with the same Truths we know. Your business, Christians, in the Heavenly Trade is to get more Divine Wisdom, to be led farther into all Truth, and to enter into the Mysteries of the Gospel; wading farther and farther into Sanctuary-deeps; to know more of God, of the way to him, and the things freely given of him, and to know better what you know: Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them to babes. There's a secret in Gospel-truths which the wisest men in the world can never by their greatest Wisdom come to see, without the special revelation of the Spirit: As none can come to see the spirits, salts, and occult virtues, in herbs and minerals, till by Chymistry they are extracted: Others may discern and receive the things themselves in the gross and bulk of them, and yet never see or taste those choice spirits hid in them: So 'tis with such as are strangers to a spiritual knowledge, they apprehend Truths in the bulk and letter of them. A carnal man (saith Hooker) may hear the sound of the Word, understand the signification; his judgment may see the evidence of the argument, and force of reason in them; and yet thereality and spiritualness of that Divine good never apprehended. The world by wisdom knew not God, 1 Cor. 1. 21. There's no proportion between a spiritual object and a carnal eye: The carnal mind cannot discern the things of the Spirit of God, neither can they know them, for they are spiritually discerned, 1 Cor. 2. 14. Labor to see the beauty and amiableness of Truth; to see your propriety in Truth, to taste an inward sweetness, and ravishing pleasure in Truth, to feel the sense of special love to your souls in discovery of light, and to find a mightiness going out in every Truth on your souls, changing you into the very Spirit and Image of Truth: To grow in knowledge extensively, into all Truth; and intensively, in deeper and more sensible, spiritual, powerful apprehensions of truth; the want of which right knowledge makes so many cold, dead hypocrites, and barren professors in this day of light and parts.

Get also your Consciences stored with the Peace of God, which passeth understanding. This is the salt that seasons everything, condition and duty, Mark 9. 50. This will shoe your feet to travel through the rough and tiresome ways of affliction, temptation and persecution you must meet with in the pursuit of your Heavenly Trade, Ephes. 6. 15. This will calm your hearts in storms, and maintain a Summer within, when 'tis Winter without, and nothing but tempests and troubles in the world, John 16. 33. This will preserve you when all is going, and keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus, Phil. 4. 7. This will guard your hearts from those slavish fears, darksome doubts, and dreadful troubles that many are filled with this day, and make you triumph over sin, trample upon the world, and smile in the midst of all the frowns of men and Devils. O get and keep this rare Jewel of inward Peace, which will help you to draw near to God with boldness, and cheerful serenity in every duty, Heb. 10. 22. Get your consciences bath'd in the blood of Christ, and the evidences of your sincerity cleared up every day; this will help to maintain a feast of inward peace under the temptations of Satan, and the view of your daily failings and stumblings.

Get your hearts warmed, and affections quickened with the sense of divine love to your Souls: this is a choice part of heavenly treasures, and will abundantly conduce to the lively carrying on of this divine Trade; affections raised by the application of redemption-grace, will be to your Souls as spread sails to the Ship, to carry you strongly along against wind and storm, and fill you with pleasant gales within, and give you a speedy and comfortable passage through the waves of this World, 2 Cor. 5. 12. 'Tis the Soul's wing that mounts it up towards God, and carries it aloft above the entanglements of sin, the world, and flesh, in the warm pursuit of God's commandments, 2 Cor. 5. 14. His commands will not be thought grievous, or his yoke heavy, where this love of God hath left a savor on the heart, Psal. 119. 32. Rom. 13. 10. It will exceedingly sweeten the bitter waters of Marah to you, and make the paths of God's Providences, as well as his Precepts, pleasantness and peace.

Take in also the consolations of the Spirit, and the joys of the Holy Ghost, these will be useful to cheer your hearts under tribulation, and strengthen and cordial you under heartfaintings and qualms you may meet with from those ill vapors of this lower World, and want of creature-comforts, 2 Cor. 7. 4. Rom. 15. 4. This spirituall comfort will also help to drown your carnal joys, and to prevent a surfeit with the pleasures of this World, (another danger that Wisdom's Merchants are sometimes liable to.) Acts 2. 28. Make me full of joy with the light of thy countenance. Spiritual joy, where it is, fills the heart, and leaves no room for carnal delights; as the heat of the Sun puts out the fire, so will spiritual consolation extinguish carnal joy: 'Twas the comfort which Moses, by Faith, fetched in from the views of an invisible God, that made him choose reproaches with the people of God, before the pleasures of sin that were but for a season, Heb. 11. 21. 25. This spiritual comfort is a notable way to stability in every good work, 2 Thes. 2. 16, 17. to help on your Souls edification and growth in grace and holiness, Acts 9. 31.

O! what work have Christians to do, besides the World, and minding their own things? were Religion followed to the purpose, persons would have no leisure for sin and vanity: O! what need have gracious Souls of a diligent hand to make them rich, and to be taking in spiritual goods every day.

Quest. But how should I do to get my Soul furnished with these heavenly goods? If my heart deceive me not, I would fain be enriched with every grace, capacity and accomplishment, for the discharge of my duty, the pleasing, honoring, and enjoying of God, and for the welfare of my immortal Soul: But how to attain this longed for mercy, I know not.

Sol. 1. If you would be enriched with heavenly treasures, and get in those goods; Then,

1. First, maintain a constant sense of your own wants and emptiness: That which is wanting cannot be numbered, Eccles. 1. 15. Look over your souls every day, and see your poverty; look into your understandings, and see how little light is there; into your minds, and consider how little spirituality lies there; how little warmth and heavenly heat in your affections; little truth and sincerity in your spirits; little tenderness in your consciences; little flexibleness in your wills to divine things: little faith, love, humility, meekness, fear, zeal, life, strength, faithfulness, stedfastness in your souls: were this really seen, and felt, and the excellency of these spiritual perfections discerned, and the soul's great concern and interest that lies wrapped up in them, with the absolute necessity of having every grace, in order to duty, peace, comfort, prosperity and salvation; persons that had any life at all, could not lie still, or be content, till utmost means were used to obtain supplies: 'twas a false conceit of a self-fullness that kept back Laodicea from seeking after Christ's treasures, Rev. 3. 17, 18. And that blind opinion the Pharisees had of their good estate that so prejudic'd them against the convictions and counsels of Christ towards their cure, Joh. 8. 33. 39. 41. 48. Had not the Corinthian Saints been so full and rich in their apprehensions, they would not have had such sleighty thoughts of instituted means towards their Souls good. 1 Cor. 1. 12. And have been contentious with one another, when they should have been contending for higher measures of grace and godliness, verse. 11. 'Tis the poor are the laborers in God's Vineyard, Zech. 11. 11. And they that feel their daily need of soul-relief, that will be at any pains to enjoy it, Isa. 41. 17.

Secondly, Get a believing sight of Christ's grace and fullness, that he is able to enrich you, and willing to help you. Heb. 11. 6. This brought Naaman to the Prophet Elisha for cure of his leprosy; he believed his servants report, that he was able, and cherished hopes that he was willing to heal him. 2 Kin. 5. 3. And she said to her Mistress, would God my Master were with the Prophet that is in Samaria, for he would recover him of his leprosy: One told this to her Lord, and hereupon he goes and adventures: ver. 5. And he departed. A persuasion of Christ's ability, brought the Leper to him for cleansing. Mat. 8. 2. Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean: He was persuaded that Christ was able, and had hopes that he was willing, or would never have come to him. A thorough belief of Christ's ability to help, will make a soul to cherish hopes of his willingness also. So the blind men, Mat. 9. they believed Christ's ability to help them; ver. 28. And they had hopes of his mercy too, that he would do it: ver. 27. Thou Son of David have mercy upon us: and this hope made them not only to come to Christ, but to follow after him: whatever persons pretend to a believing in Christ's ability to save and sanctify them, they have not this faith, who question his willingness to satisfy the longing soul, and save all that come to God by him: you confess he is able to furnish you with all you can want or desire; believe his willingness also to supply all your wants, who sincerely wait upon him.

Quest. But how may I know that Christ will furnish me if I come for these heavenly treasures? there are many come, and go without their errand: Some ask, and have not, Jam. 4. 3. run, and receive not; strive to enter in, and are not able, 1 Cor. 9. 24. Luke 13. 24. There are some the Lord threatens he will not hear, Prov. 1. 28. Isa. 1. 15. Zech. 7. 13. And I have sought these spiritual blessings many a time, and God hath not answered: How may I be sure Christ is willing to give these treasures unto me?

Sol. The Lord Jesus hath made an offer of grace to all sensible Sinners, who feel their need, and thirst for supply, Isa. 55. 1. Joh. 7. 37. and called upon them to come and receive it without exception, Matth. 11. 28. Now it cannot stand with his divine goodness and truth to offer mercy, and not intend to give it; he cannot deceive, or be deceived, who is the faithful one; nor invite his creatures to an expectation, and then fail them. Now he hath called all to come, and required no other condition but their coming, and receiving him and the things he hath offered. He hath also promised, as well as offered, to give to him that thirsteth. Rev. 20. 6. I will give to him that is a-thirst of the fountain of the water of life freely. I will give, (not sell) or let out on any terms of self-worthiness; for if there be anything to make the creature worthy, 'tis not a gift, but debt, Rom. 4. 4. [To him that is a-thirst,] nothing else is required but a pinching sense of souls need, and an unsatisfied desire of supply. [I will give freely,] out of no respect to anything in the creature, but his necessity and misery; the moving cause is his own grace and free mercy to Sinners, as Sinners. [I will give liberally too;] let him drink freely, take as much as he needs, or is capable to receive. [I will give suitably,] such things as you desire and need, and such things as are capable of satisfying you, (of the fountain of the waters of life.) Matth. 7. 7. Psal. 36. 7, 8. Joh. 6. 37. Isa. 41. 17. You will find nothing in these Scriptures required in the person, but sense of his need, seeking satisfaction, coming, believing, and a real subjection to all God's terms, and a pure designing of his ends. I disclaim all; the Port I would be in at, is redemption and forgiveness through his blood; Ruth. Now, if he hath promised to give to them that seek, he must be willing to give; For the holy one of Israel cannot lie, Numb. 23. 19. He hath received all his Mediatory fullness of purpose for the giving out to those that come unto him. Joh. 1. 12. Psal. 68. 18. Thou hast received gifts for men, yea for the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell amongst them: He is the Angel, Messenger and Mediator of the new Covenant, the Trustee and Feoffee entrusted with that great estate for the use of his people that need it, and come unto him for it, Mal. 3. 1. Heb. 9. 15. And therefore is said to appear in Heaven in the presence of God for them, as an Advocate to follow their cause. The Lord Jesus is wonderfully pleased too, in giving to his needy seeking ones. Mic. 7. 18. He delighteth in mercy. Psal. 35. 27. He hath pleasure in the prosperity of his servants: the more he gives, the more he sees of the travel of his soul, and is satisfied. Isa. 53. 11. The more he gives, the more he receives: The gifts and graces of God are as the rivers that flow from the Sea, and return to the Sea again. 1 Chron. 29. 14. Of thine own have we given thee: The more Christ gives to his people, the more he receives; his talents come in again with improvements, Mat. 25. 27. The more he gives, the more he is glorified, Joh. 14. 13. Answer these questions before you doubt Christ's willingness to part with spiritual goods freely to all that truly seek them. Do you think really that Christ can dissemble, offer mercy, and have no mind to give it? Do you think that the Lord Jesus can break his word, or become false to his promise? Can you imagine he will be unfaithful to his trust? Can he delight in giving, and yet not willing? Doth he gain by giving, and yet not willing to give? Is he glorified by giving, and yet be loath to give? then would he not care for his own name. Suspect your willingness to receive, not Christ's to give you all that grace you need and seek of him.

Fourthly, Another thing wherein this heavenly Trade lies, is, to carry on heavenly work, and to be daily driving on the great business of godliness. Religion hath its work as well as the world; every Trade hath its employment, and so has godliness. Christianity is not a notion or opinion, a name to live, and no more: 'Tis a miserable vanity and cheat for a person to think a bare Lamp will light him to Heaven, and a few lazy wishes bring him to glory, though he travel not the way to it. Alas, to espouse the principles of Piety, without the practice of it, to get over to privileges, and be strangers to Purity, to profess Faith without works, and love without labors, will signify nothing towards salvation. Will Opinion make a man an Artist, or imagination enrich him, or hunger fill him, or reading the way to a place bring him thither? No more will affection, knowledge and profession help men to Heaven, unless they work out their salvation, and carry on the duties of Religion that lead to it, Phil. 2. 12.

First, Consider, a Christian hath much work, and a little time; great work, and small strength; necessary work, and many diversions; excellent work, none like it: persons that set about salvation in earnest, will find much to do; and the farther they go in Religion, the more busy their employment will be: every day brings its work with it; new instructions, new mercies, new afflictions and temptations every day, which calls for much exercised grace and duty. A child of God hath no time for idleness, or impertinent business. O the many things that must be dispatched within the compass of this little inch of time for eternity! Soul, if thou diest, and thy work undone when thou diest, thy soul's undone; there's no rising from thy grave to do neglected work; or dispensation at the Bar of God for the omission of Salvation-duties.

This work is necessary also as well as great; some duties are necessary to secure thy salvation; all duties are necessary to maintain thy comforts, and greaten thy glory. Men plead necessity for this and th' other thing, to do this work, and take that journey; to omit this duty, and absent from such a privilege; but who is sensible of the necessity of working the work of God, and attending soul-concerns? It may not be necessary you should have peace, credit, plenty, riches, comforts; that you should have so much estate, preferment and contentment in the world; but 'tis absolutely necessary thy soul should be saved, and that God should be obeyed; that spiritual concerns should be attended, (whatever is neglected) that thy debts should be paid, thy peace with God obtained, thy hungry soul be fed and refreshed, thy title to Heaven cleared, the presence of God enjoyed, and thy seed-time for glory improved.

'Tis promised-work too, and that makes it necessary; you have engaged to be the Lord's if you are Christians; and have given up yourselves to be his, and not your own; your time is his, your capacities his, 1 Cor. 6. 19, 20. what you are and have, is from him and for him; this you have devoted to the use and service of God when you took him to be your God, 2 Cor. 8. 5. and many a time since you have engaged to obedience of his commands: There are sick-bedvows, affliction-promises, engagements under conscience-troubles; yea every day, and in every duty, you tell God you will mend your ways, redeem your time, do him more and better work; and how can you stand before him with such flattery and dissimulation, and under the guilt of so much falsehood and treachery, while your work lies still undone?

Yea your work Christians is excellent work also, above all the employments of the world; 'tis supernatural work, yea Angelical work, yea such work as Angels cannot do, to believe in, love, converse with, and obey Christ, as your Redeemer and Savior, Phil. 3. 10. 1 Pet. 1. 7, 8, 9, 12. to suffer for Christ, and be baptized into a conformity with his death and resurrection.

'Tis suitable work also you are called to in this Heavenly Trade, work suited to your natures: If you are Saints, you have received a heavenly spirit, and are partakers of the Divine Nature, 2 Pet. 1. 4. 'Tis as natural for you to do heavenly work, if you are Christians, as for the world to do earthly work, there being a disposition and propensity put into your renewed natures to new and heavenly work, as there is a disposition in the seed to its proper fruit, 1 Joh. 3. 9. For his seed remaineth in him: 'Tis work suited to your hopes which are laid up in Heaven, Col. 1. 5. For the hope which is laid up for you in Heaven, whereof you have heard before in the word of Truth. That is the blessedness, those great and glorious things you hope for, which are laid up for you in Heaven, as a Treasure safely kept for you: Called hope by an Antonomasia (saith Davenant) This reward is not said to be only offered and proposed to us; for that would weaken our hope, if the certainty of those things hoped for did depend on us, and our disposition; so that it should be given or denied us according to the worth of our works, graces and duties; but 'tis said to be laid aside for us, as that which is deposited, and safely laid up in God our Father for us. A Christian's choicest Treasures lie in hope, not in hand; beyond their present view and enjoyment, and yet secured to their use and propriety, 1 Pet. 1. 4. Reserved in Heaven for you: (〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉) kept as it were in custody, and with watch and ward for you sure and certain, on which the hopes of Believers are firmly laid, and to which their present work is suited: heavenly work bears a proportion and agreement in its nature (though not in worth) to heavenly and eternal things; 'tis work suited to your inheritance and wages in its kind, though not in degree: and that's excellent work which is of the same nature with your eternal blessedness.

Suited also to your present privileges, who sit in heavenly places in Christ Jesus Eph. 2. 6. Gracious souls, though in habitation they are on the Earth, yet in point of privilege they sit in Heaven: Through their union with Christ they may be said (saith Zanchi) to sit where he sits, as a husband or Brother absent from his Wife, and Brethren doth possess a Kingdom for them; they, though absent, may be truly said relatively to possess it in him as members in the head, they sit in Heaven in the person of Christ; and as the lump is sanctified in the first fruits: Neither do they sit only relatively through their union with Christ; but spiritually, through their communion with him. In that sense (saith Bucer) as the Apostle speaks, Phil. 3. 20. They have their conversation in Heaven. This is a glorious privilege the Saints only enjoy; in this life to converse in Heaven, and to have their life above, above the world, and things below, and such should their work be also: How pleasant should heavenly work be to heavenly souls! which Believers are and should be.

Secondly, Christians set upon heavenly work; for as is your work, so will your maintenance be: They who do that work which the world cannot, have that meat and drink which the world knoweth not, Joh. 4. 32, 34. The Lord hath dainties, and peculiar refreshments for those who are single and faithful in his work, they have joys which strangers intermeddle not with, Prov. 14. 10. Whoever go without, his laborers shall not lack: He keeps a good table for his work-men: In keeping of his Commands there's great reward, Psal. 19. 11. They eat the fat, and drink the sweet, Neh. 8. 10. The marrow, the spiced wine, the hidden Manna is their meat and drink (so far as they have need of it) O the sweet bits, and pleasant sips they miss of, who are idle in God's Vineyard! They that will not work, shall not eat, 2 Thes. 3. 10. Would you live high in your spiritual comforts, then work hard in your spiritual work.

Thirdly, As is your work, so will your company be: They that do earthly work, have earthly companions to labor with them: As is men's Trade, such is their company. The children of the night have their fellowship with unfruitful works of darkness, Ephes. 5. 11. and gracious souls are companions with them that fear God, Psal. 119. 63. Wicked workers have wicked men and devils casting in their lot with them, Prov. 1. 14. And so have heavenly Traders heavenly company; they have the presence of God with them, 2 Chron. 15. 2. The Lord is with you while you are with him: They have the Comforter with them, Joh. 14. 16. He shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever: Rom. 8. 11. By his Spirit that dwelleth in you. No company like the Comforter; friends may leave you, but if you keep with God, and do his will, the Spirit of God will abide with you forever; though he may not always be seen of you, yet he will always reside with you: At the best, friends can but stay with you, but the Spirit of Christ will dwell in you, and give you the nearest and most intimate acquaintance with himself, (if you obey his voice, and follow him) God's laborers have the company of Angels also: they are ministering spirits to the heirs of salvation, Heb. 1. 14. They pitch their tents about them that fear God, Psal. 34. 7. and have it given in charge to take care of the Children of God, and to carry them in their arms, that they dash not their feet against a stone, Psal. 91. 11. Those are lovely company indeed, such as will never hurt you, but do you good; you shall be the better for them, Prov. 13. 20.

Fourthly, As is your work, so will your wages be to all eternity: though not for your work, yet according to it, Rom. 2. 6. Who shall render to every man according to his deeds: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , not 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , according to, not for their works: The Preposition 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , noting here (saith Pareus) not the merit, but the measure, analogy or rule, by which undeserved rewards shall be distributed, and just punishments shall be inflicted, as the word is used, Mat. 9. 29. ch. 23. 3. And so as it refers to glory (saith he) it rather describes the person to whom this glory shall be given, then shows the cause why it is given, as Mat. 25. 34, 35. Also the word rendered (〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉) is used for a free reward that hath no respect to desert, Mat. 20. 8. The same reward being given to him that wrought one hour, as to those that bore the heat and burden of the day: So that the word (according) notes the kind of work, not the cause of reward, reward as it refers to salvation: Suitable to that of Christ, Rev. 22. 12. Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . Indeed evil works have their causality, and desert of punishment, but not good works of reward: Gryner gives three reasons of the difference: First, Because good works proceed from God, and are the fruits of his Spirit in us; but evil works proceed from man, and are the effects of his own spirit and will. Secondly, good works are imperfectly good as to degrees, and therefore cannot merit; but evil works are perfectly evil, and therefore deserve death. Thirdly, Good works are commanded, and so are but our duty, and cannot merit, (payment of debts are not purchase) but sins are forbidden, and so are a breach of the Law of God, and deserve death. Luke 17. 10. The gift of God is eternal life, but the wages of sin is death, Rom. 6. 23. Death is wages due, but life is a gift altogether free. By grace ye are saved, Ephes. 2. 5. There can be no desert of glory in the most spiritual duties of man: Because

First, They are not man's work, but God's in him, John 15. 5. Without me ye can do nothing, Gal. 2. 20. I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. Holiness is called the fruit of the Spirit, Ephes. 5. 9. Now the reward is due by way of debt to him that worketh; but to him that worketh not, 'tis of grace, Rom. 4. 4, 5. and therefore reward is not due to Saints who work not, but by strict way of justice rather to the Spirit that worketh in them.

Secondly, They are no way proportionable to the reward, and so not meritorious: Their work is imperfect, they know but in part, and do but in part, 1 Cor. 3. 9. Phil. 3. 12. The best duties as they come from the Saints here, are spotty, and as sweet waters that come from an evil vessel, they savor of the cask through which they come; but glory is perfect, omnibus modis, and hath no defect in it; Our works also are finite, being created, and creature-actions; but the reward is infinite, the love and glory of an infinite God.

Thirdly, Though our Holiness were perfect, yet it could not merit; because it is due to God from that relation we bear to him as his creatures, and redeemed ones, and from our promise and covenant with him to love, obey and serve him, Ephes. 2. 10. 2 Cor. 8. 5. Duties are but debts, not acts of favor to God: We owe God ourselves, and our all, and are indebted to Christ for his Redemption-grace, more than we can ever pay; we cannot (though we do all we possible can) requite the blood of Christ, and love of Christ; and till we are out of debt we cannot merit.

Fourthly, We have nothing to merit withal, for we are not our own, 1 Cor. 6. 19. Man hath nothing to give to God, who is not his own, but God's (as all redeemed ones especially are) Believers are his servants: Rom. 14. 4. Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? And a servant is not his own; his time, strength, capacity, work, are his Masters; so are the Saints duties the Lord's, not by way of legal compact, and requital of wages, but by way of redemption, right and purchase, being bought out of the service of sin and Satan to his own use; and the service of such is a due already upon a former score; a debt of thankfulness, and cannot merit a reward: Beside, what can they give to God, who have nothing but what they receive from God? 1 Cor. 4. 7. Who hath first given to him? and it shall be recompensed to him again: for of him, and through him, and to him are all things, to whom be glory forever.

Fifthly, Were rewards due to any upon the account of his work, then man had something to glory of in himself, and might say of Heaven as Nebuchadnezzar did of Babylon, Dan. 4. 30. Is not this great Babylon which I have built for the house of the Kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honor of my Majesty? So might such say when they come to Heaven; Is not this the mansion I prepared and deserved by my duties and graces, for my glory and blessedness? For self-justiciaries, though they are forced to say that their grace is given of God; yet they boast of the improvements of this grace as theirs, and glory is due to the improvement of grace (they say) and not to the bare grace or talent; and though they are driven to confess Christ's merit, yet they shuffle and say, Christ merited for them, that they might merit: But that is contrary to the Gospel, which tells us, That 'tis not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy, Rom. 9. v. 16. And 'tis God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure, Phil. 2. 13. And that no flesh should glory in his presence, 1 Cor. 1. 29. And therefore God hath chosen the foolish, weak; and base things of this world, and things that are not, of purpose to prevent this self-glorying before him, verse 17, 18. And the Apostle makes this reason why Abraham was not justified by Works, but by Faith, cause then he would have something to glory in; but this could not be. Rom. 4. 2. If Abraham were justified by works, he had something to glory in, but not before God. So that the Saints, though they have a reward of their work, yet it is not for their work; 'tis a reward, not of debt, but of grace; yea of glorious grace, according to your work. (Christians) God will not give you a jot less than the utmost of what your love and faithfulness comes to; Your labor shall not be in vain in the Lord, 1 Cor. 15. 58. He will not fail of any of his Promises, or disappoint you of your expected end, but will be better than your hopes: You will say in that day of compensation, Who hath begotten me all these? Isa. 49. 21. Whence is this to me? Luk. 1. v. 43. When saw we thee an hungered? Mat. 26. v. 37. Glory is a mighty thing, infinitely above all your labors: Christians, Heaven will make amends for all your duties and losses, and abundantly compensate, and exceed all your expenses for God in the world: And have: you not reason to set about the work of grace, and drive on the employments of this Heavenly Trade?

Quest. But what is this heavenly work which Wisdom's Merchants must be driving on every day?

Sol. I answer; First, in the general; Heavenly work is that work which hath a heavenly Author and Principle; a heavenly rule, and a heavenly end: work wrought of God by his Spirit, Joh. 3. 21. Work done according to the will of God, and by Scripture-rule, Col. 4. 12. Work wrought for God, and designed purely and ultimately to his glory, 1 Cor. 10. 31.

But more particularly, heavenly works may be considered under these two heads.

First, Such as are heavenly in the matter of them, as well as manner and end.

Secondly, Such works, as though earthly in the matter of them, yet are done in a heavenly manner, and to an heavenly end.

First, That's heavenly work which is of a heavenly nature, matter, and manner, and end; as all those religious duties are which respect God, ourselves, and others.

First, Drive on that work every day which hath God himself for its first and more immediate object, as all acts of religious worship, both natural and instituted, moral and positive. Mat. 4. 10. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve: This is due to God from all his rational and intelligent creatures, both Men and Angels to worship him only, with that reverential fear, faith, love, hope and delight which is due to him, as the Supreme Majesty of Heaven and Earth, the great Creator and Conservator of all his creatures; and to serve him with that subjection and obedience as their relation to God their Sovereign calls for. This is the duty of all persons, especially those that profess their owning of God, and choice of him to be their God in Christ, and peculiar treasure. Deut. 13. 6. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, and serve him, and swear by his name. Christians, to let out your hearts upon the world, relations, self, and creatures, is to rob God of his service, and to commit Idolatry with the creature. Think this, when my heart runs out to things below God, and my affections, hope, trust and delight get over their banks, and break their due bounds, and subordinacy to God: when I fondly dote upon, and take pleasure (abstractively from God) in any creatures, then do I deal treacherously with my God, I rob him, and give his glory to another, Isa. 48. 11. O set habitually your hearts on God, and let out your faith, love, hope, fear, desires, and delighting pleasures on God every day, yea all the day long, as your chiefest good, supreme Sovereign, and last end. Prov. 27. 17. Be thou in the fear of the Lord all the day long.

Again, external acts of divine worship are part of thy every days work, which thou owest to God, and to be duly and daily performed to him, as to pray, hear, and read his sacred word: These are that honor, homage and service that is due to God every day, especially morning and evening; Prov. 8. 34. Deut. 6. 7. Exod. 30. 7. 1 Chron. 23. 30. Ezek. 46. 13, 14, 15. Amos 4. 4. 1 Chron. 16. 40. Psal. 55. 17. This is the daily burnt-offering to be prepared for the Lord; Exod. 29. 38, 39. Morning and evening; the vows that are to be daily performed. Psal. 61. 8. God's mercies are new every morning, and so must your praises be also. Lam. 3. 23. He keeps you day and night. Isa. 27. 3. And 'tis but reasonable you should give him his morning and evening sacrifice: you depend upon him for the mercies of every day, and he expects from you the duties of every day, which is reasonable service. Rom. 12. 1. You have daily necessities, difficulties, trials, dangers and duties, in which you need his help; and is it not your concern to be daily at his feet, and seeking his favor, counsel, strength and blessing?

Herein lies your professed subjection to God also; slight religious duties, and you reject God from being your God: This very reason doth Moses give why Israel should serve the Lord, and cleave to him, and swear by his name, and give him all religious worship, Deut. 19. 20, 21. He is thy praise, and he is thy God, who hath done for thee these great and terrible things which thine eyes have seen. Dan. 6. 16. Thy God whom thou servest continually, he will deliver thee: 'Tis a contradiction to say that God is your God, and yet withhold his service from him: As soon as ever God had a people in the World, he had service from them. Gen. 4. 26. Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord: No sooner had Seth (who was the other seed which the Lord appropriated to himself in the room of Abel) a Son and Family, but they had peculiar worship for God, and were distinguished from the Family of Cain by this, that they did serve God: This is the work of God, that every Soul is bound to dispatch every day, in Closet and Family, in Spirit and Truth, with a pure heart fervently.

This also is the best part of your work in the world, to attend on God; all other service is but drudgery, compared with your serving God, and transacting the great matters of your Souls, and your everlasting concern. This is your interest also, to maintain nearness to God, who is the life of your souls, the length of your days, and fountain of all your supplies; there's no such pleasure as in the ways of God, nor profit as in keeping his commands. O the blessedness of converse with God, and maintaining a daily intercourse with the Father of Spirits! 'tis the privilege of Angels, and of glorified Saints, to be always beholding his face, 1 Thes. 4. 17. Mat. 18. 10. And the peculiar honor of the upright to dwell in his presence, Psal. 140. 12.

There is no such advantage also as to be much with God every day. Psal. 73. 28. 'Tis good for me to draw near to God: Often journeys to Heaven bring in much profit; 'twas this way David did thrive so much in wisdom, grace and experience, out-shining all the men of that age, and serving his generation by the will of God; his being much with God. Psal. 139. 18. When I awake I am still with thee: By this nearness to the Son of righteousness did Enoch so soon ripen for Heaven; and by his constant walks with God, did he so timely get to his journeys end. Of all that generation, we find none so soon sent for home, and translated to his rest, as holy Enoch; for whereas the rest lived nine hundred, eight hundred, seven hundred years; only he lived three hundred sixty and five years, and that which so quickened his fitness for rest, was his activity in heavenly work: Enoch walked with God, and was not, for God took him, Gen. 5. 23. He kept his constant turns with God in his Garden and Gallerywalks, and then went in with him into his Presence-Chamber, there to sit down with him forever.

This also will make you thrive in your own work, if you are faithful and diligent in God's work; mind his concerns, and he will care for yours, Deut. 30. 9. Obey the voice of the Lord, and do all his commandments, and the Lord thy God will make thee plenteous in every good work of thy hand; He shall make thee to abound in the work of thy hand; (as 'tis in the Hebrew) to have more than enough, (as Montanus renders it,) He will bless thee in every work of thine hand, (according to the Septuagint,) other Copies have it; He will have a great deal of care of thee, &c. He will make thee excellent with good things, (saith Junius;) He will make thee to enjoy good in every work of, &c. (saith Symmachus;) He shall prosper the work of thy hand; It shall go well with such. Deut. 4. 40. Thou shalt keep therefore his statutes and his commandments which I command thee this day, that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, Gen. 42. 18. 'Twas piety made Joseph so prosperous in all he did, he feared God. Do this, and live; for I fear God: and God was with him, and made all he did to prosper in his hand, Gen. 39. 3. Whatsoever he doth shall prosper, Psal. 1. 3. The blessing of the Lord shall be on the head and hands of such; let their condition be what it will in the world, yet it shall be well with such as fear the Lord; if he be afflicted, yet his afflictions shall turn to his good, and be part of his prosperity. 2 Chron. 31. 21. And in every work he began in the service of the House of God, and in the Law, and in the Commandment, to seek his God; he did it with all his heart, and prospered. The way to true prosperity leads by Heaven-gates. Christians, if ever you will thrive in your own work, be sure to carry on God's work: begin with God every day, the first fruits are his. Dispatch religious worship in your Closets and Families before you enter on your earthly business: Close up every day with him, he is the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and end, and must have the issue as well as entrances of every day. The morning and evening sacrifice are his, 1 Chron. 16. 40. 2 Chron. 13. 11. Psal. 55. 17. Give God his due, before you render to Nature its dues. Psal. 61. 8. Pay your vows to God every evening, before you run on score for new mercies: See all things secured in everlasting Arms before you lie down to rest; put thy Soul and thy All into the hands of Christ by solemn devotion and resignation every night; get the watch set, and all things safe, before thou exposest thyself to the hazards of the night, and enterest upon an incapacity to secure thyself from the least danger. O precious souls! lie not down as dogs and swine, who, when they have filled their bellies, get to their styes and kennels.

Secondly, carry on all that work daily which hath a more special respect to your own selves, and leads to the sanctifying, comforting, strengthening, edifying, saving of your precious souls. Next to the glory of God, yea in pursuance of it, thy own Salvation is thy chief concern; What will it profit a man to gain the whole World, and to lose his own Soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his Soul? What is left, if the Soul be lost? and what is done, if, after all, the Soul be undone? To look after others Souls, and neglect thy own; and to secure all things else, and leave destruction on thyself, is folly like to hers that saved her goods from the fire, but left her child to perish in the flames. Salvation is your chiefest work, committed to your care, and to be accounted for in the day of Christ. Phil. 2. 12. Work out your own Salvation with fear and trembling. And 'tis great work also, many things must be attended too, and several things dispatched, if ever Souls be saved.

First; You must carry on heart-work every day, and that's great work: they that are acquainted with their own hearts, know there is much to do in and about them: There is nothing more out of order than man's heart, and nothing in man of greater concernment than the heart: Hence 'tis the strict charge the Lord gives his people to keep their hearts, Prov. 4. v. 23. Above all keeping (as 'tis in the Hebrew) keep thy heart, Proz. 23. 2. Ephes. 3. 17. Prov. 4. v. 4. The heart is the one thing Christ looks for; the chief room he dwells in; his warehouse, where he lays up his goods; his workhouse, where he cuts out, and prepares his work, Prov. 16. 1. A great part of salvationwork is done in the secret chambers of the heart: The heart is the root and spring in man whence all acceptable duties flow, Ephes. 6. 6. doing the will of God from the heart; and to be especially looked after. A Christian finds a great deal of work to do about his heart every day: There is

Heart-searching work, Psal. 64. 6. The heart of man is deep, and not easily fathom'd; 'tis a long journey to the farthest end of the heart, which no man ever yet reached in this life: The Sea is deep, and yet it hath a bottom: The World is large, and yet it hath been compassed; but who hath ever travelled through his own heart, to set up his non ultra, and say, Hitherto its wickedness goes, and no farther. 'Tis deceitful also above all things, and desperately wicked, who can know it? Jer. 17. 9. A man hath no such cheater to deal with as his own heart; it hath such Cameleon colors, Maeander windings; such labyrinth turnings, subtle shifts, false pretences, close designs, fair promises, smooth excuses, rhetorical pleas, seeming integrity, deep-rooted hypocrisy, that a man cannot tell what to make of his heart, or how to find it out; and this calls for constant searchings and observings of the heart: Besides, the Lord gives his people the balance of the Sanctuary on purpose to weigh it in, and casts out a line of providence every day to try it by. Men meet with occasional providences, temptations, employments, companies, changes, mercies, afflictions; all which help to discover the heart; the issue of which is to be observed in order to the finding out of thy heart.

Heart-judging work: When Christians have found out the evil of their hearts, their pride, hypocrisy, &c. seen the proof and evidence clear, and how contrary to Law and Gospel, to Equity and Mercy, to Light, Experience, Warnings, Patience, Profession and Promises, they are then to charge these things upon the heart, to set home the evil with all the aggravations of it, from its nature and effects, from the quality of the person, the time, place, continuance in it, attempts and means of cure, compared with others beneath them for light, profession, means and mercies; and having by these arguments convinced the heart of its exceeding evil, then to pass sentence against, and condemn it as unworthy of any mercy, and deserving of all the threatenings in the Word against it, until the heart come to bear its iniquity, and feel its exceeding sinfulness, and cry out with the Apostle, O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? Rom. 7. 24. This would be of wonderful use to clear up your sincerity, to preserve the tenderness of your spirits, to cut off all excuses, false hopes, and security in sin, and make it more abominable when it appears with its most taking allurements, 2 Cor. 7. 11. 1 Cor. 11. 31. and this would evidence your interest in pardon, and freedom from Divine condemnation.

Heart-humbling work. O the pride that lodges, yea lives in, and incorporates with this little piece the heart of man! how unsearchable is it, and past finding out! like leaven in the lump, and poison in the cup, which cannot be separated by a human hand; as rottenness in the bones, that cannot be fetched out. Pride is as that lofty mountain before Zerubbabel, which must become a plain, Zach. 4. 7. as deeply rooted trees, whose Mores are not easily plucked up. One compares spiritual pride, to the shirt, or inmost garment, which the Saints last of all put off; and which like the Ivy, will not be plucked out, till the wall in which it is comes down also. O the tuggings a child of God hath with his proud heart, to get and keep it low! As the Spider, whatever it feeds on it turns to poison: So is it with the proud heart of man; it turns all it does, hath, meets with, and sees to the nourishment of pride; proud of its sins; proud of his graces; proud under afflictions, and proud of mercies; proud of honor, and proud of humility; proud of God's favor, and proud under his frowns. O what a strange disease is pride, that feeds upon the means which the Lord gives to cure it, and gets strength from the remedy to nourish the disease! like Ephraim's wound; when God would have healed one, another appeared: And this helps to make a Christian's work great work indeed, which is never done till his day be done, and his Tabernacle pulled down.

Heart-purging work: The heart of man naturally is a very sink and kennel of uncleanness; a fountain of pollution; a running Issue full of filthiness of flesh and spirit, Mat. 18. 19. Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies; these are the things that defile the man. 'Tis not accidental and adventitious filthiness, for that may more easily be washed away, Jer. 6. 7. but 'tis innate and connatural, and never ceases bubbling forth, till the fountain be cleansed, and the root be changed. Sin in the heart is the root and spring of all the wickedness that defiles the thoughts, words and actions. Christians complain of their thoughts; they are pestered with vain, unclean, distracting thoughts in duty, and out of duty; whereas the distemper lies in the heart: Thoughts are but the ebullitions and swarmings of the heart: He that will cure his thoughts, must first cleanse his heart, Jer. 4. 14. The heart is the nest where these Wasps fly out and trouble the soul; the root that feeds these luxuriant branches, briars and thorns that wound the conscience; and the strong fort of Zion, where these Jebusites hide themselves, and issue out to prey upon the gracious soul: Till these nests be spoiled, the Ax laid to the root of the tree, and this strong Tower attach'd, and these blind and lame removed, souls will never be freed from irruptions of sin in their thoughts and conversations: This (Christian) is busy and hard work, and part of thy daily employment in this Heavenly Trade; to sweep, wash, drain and cleanse thy filthy heart, by sound repentance and faith in the promises, death and blood of Christ.

Heart-quickenning work. The heart is the primum mobile, the great wheel in the watch that sets all a going; if that stop, all faculties are still: A lively heart makes a diligent hand to rid away soul-work, and a nimble foot to run in the ways of God's commands; when the heart is quickened, then every duty, inward, outward, public, private goes on; such a soul needs no spur to quicken it, nor pulley to draw it to its duties. O what a burden are some to their Christian friends, to keep them up, and draw them on in the way of God, and all because their hearts are dead, and that liveliness which once seemed to be in them is departed! The spring that at first made them so active, is weakened or broken; the waters that set their Mills a going fail, and that temporary love, and common grace, like standing pools having no fountain to maintain them, are dried up by consuming lusts, and scorching temptations; so that now they wither in all their branches, and become weak, cold, and indisposed to every work of God and their souls. Some of these dangerous symptoms of decayed grace, are found also in sincere souls, for not looking after their hearts betimes, and keeping them close to a quickening Jesus, by a lively faith in the promises. Christian, mind this also every day, to maintain thy spiritual life, by fresh quickenings, and reviving influences, from the fountain of life, on thy weak and dying heart, making use of all instituted helps for soul-strengthening; as hearing, reading, meditation, holy conference, and the like.

Heart-teaching and enlightening work. A light head, and a dark heart may dwell together; and it seems to be the condition of too many under the Gospel this day. A spiritual eye to look into the mystery of truth, and believing affectionate discerning of excellent things, is not easily found; even while Christ is read, a veil is on men's minds, and their foolish heart is darkened: And this is one reason souls walk not as children of light; 'tis because they are not light in the Lord, Psal. 40. 8. The Law of God is not within their hearts; they have no inclination or power upon their hearts to do the will of God they know, for want of this heart-knowledge: Be earnest with God to beam over your hearts, to make that the Hemisphere where the Sun of Righteousness may daily arise with healing in his wings: Cry with David, Psal. 119. 36. Incline my heart to thy Law: Let my heart lean and stay upon thy Law, as a man doth upon a staff to bear him up: Get a greater nearness in your hearts to truth, that the Word may be wrought in, and incorporated into your hearts; that it may be a Goshen, a Land of Vision, and full of the understanding of the Lord.

Heart-keeping and Heart-watching work. The heart is bent to backsliding, if it be not kept and held fast to the Lord and his ways; 'tis still turning aside, and winding off from its proper duty. The Lord complains of Israel, Psal. 78. 8. They did not set their heart aright, and their spirit was not steadfast with God: They did not prepare, adapt, dispose their heart to God; neither was it constant and steadfast with him, but on every occasion did start aside: So false a thing is man's heart, if not under a watchful eye, and strong hand, holding it fast to God. Prov. 4. 23. Keep thy heart with all diligence: Keep it as under lock and key, bolted against sin, and bound by cords of love to every duty: And what a hard province is this! O the work that a child of God hath to keep his heart in order one moment; to keep down sin; to keep it from the power of corruption, and prevalency of temptation; to keep up grace in the heart; to maintain its desires after God, and things that are excellent; to preserve its affections to things above; to hold the thoughts on God, and things eternal, that they start not away; to continue its integrity; to perform its purposes; to secure its frames, experiences and enjoyments! And he that will thus keep his heart, must watch it constantly, never have his eye off from it, or suffer his jealousy concerning it to cease: He must be always making it over to the Lord Jesus for security, and be still imploring help from Heaven, faithfully following all the instructions he gives towards its securing: This is heart-work, and the first part of this heavenly work that concerns yourselves.

Secondly, You must carry on mortificationwork every day. Col. 3. 5. Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness which is Idolatry. The Apostle having assured the believing Colossians of their future happiness, doth thence infer their duty and necessity to press after utmost holiness here, as the way to this blessedness: The first part of which holiness lies in this great work of mortification: there is no greater motive for Believers putting off sin, than wellgrounded hopes of interest in Christ and glory: if Heaven be yours hereafter, holiness must be yours now: There is no place for sin in Heaven, nor unclean thing can enter there. Then hasten away sin now; that's his Argument: [Mortify your members;] Get yourselves rid of sin; put to death, weaken and destroy the whole body of sin, with all the parts and issues of it; the head and ruling power of sin had its mortal wound before: verse. 3. Ye are dead; habitually dead to sin, the world, and self; they have got their deaths-wound, the stab is at the heart, and can never be healed more: but they are not actually dead, more blood must run, and spirits be spent, and this monster be weakened every day: Practical mortification is wanting, and must be promoted daily. This spiritual death to sin (saith Davenant) is not as the natural death; for that's a pure privation, and admits of nothing in the subject that's contrary to it: But spiritual mortification is not purely privative, but while we live there's something left that is of a contrary nature to holiness, which must be daily opposed and destroyed. Sin in Believers is driven from the royal fort of the heart upon Christ's entrance into it, but possesses the suburbs and out-works of the soul, from whence it must be gradually expel'd also by the mortifying influence of the spirit; like the Canaanites which were removed from the Mountains, but could not be wholly driven out of the Valleys, that Israel might by them be proved, and taught to war, Judge. 1. 19. ch. 3. 1, 2. So the Lord Jesus Christ doth not presently destroy corruptions from the people, that by them their sincerity may be proved, their graces exercised, and the mighty power of his spirit manifested: This makes a Christian's work busy, and constant, having to do with potent enemies within and without, Eph. 6. 4. which must be fought every day, and a continual war maintained with them during life: without fighting, no conquering; without striving, no crowning, 2 Tim. 2. 5. 'Tis with a child of God, as with Israel when fighting with Amalek, if the hands of Faith and Prayer be not held up, no conquest; when these are down, spiritual Amalek prevails. O the losses that Christians sustain for want of mortification, by reason of which their foiled corruptions rally up, and take their graces captive! Let men neglect the constant practice of mortification, (saith Davenant) and their vices that were trod down and subdued, will soon resume their strength; their corruption that was lopt off will bud out again, and the graces of the Spirit in them being almost strangled, man returns to his former temper. Hence come those dreadful fears of good souls, that the grace of God was never in truth in them, but that they are still in a carnal state, and shall perish at last, and all this for want of carrying on the work of mortification in them: As a lively Faith overcomes sin, so prevailing lust weakens Faith, 1 Joh. 5. 4. Eph. 4. 2. 30. withstands the sealing-work of the Spirit, and overthrows the work of the Soul's hopes, filling it with fears about the unsoundness of his estate, and the miserable issue of all his profession, experience and labor. By this ladder of unmortified sin, the Devil scales the royal fort of Faith, throws down its Towers, and man's it against the Soul's peace, comfort and holiness. O the mischief that Christians do to themselves by indulging sin, and for want of a vigorous pursuit of this great duty of mortification! which makes them like to Israel, who being once upon the borders of Canaan, were by their unbelief, and unsubdued lusts, brought back near the confines of Egypt again, and after a wearying inconstant life, were consumed in the wilderness at last. So 'tis with gracious Souls, by their unmortified lusts, after some accesses to grace, tastes of divine love, hopes of glory, and fairness for Heaven, they are brought back to the borders of Hell again, and made to spend their life in an uncomfortable and souldistressing wilderness. Christians, 'tis not security enough for your peace and spiritual welfare, that sin hath lost its dominion, unless its strength and life be impaired also: dethroned sin may bid you many a battle, and give you sore foils, and though it may not recover the Scepter, yet it may keep the Sword; and when it cannot mount the Throne, may get into some strong hold, and put the soul to much trouble e're it be beaten out again. Neither is it safe to acquiesce in some temporary truce with thy corruptions; bloody overthrows have been oftentimes the events of a cessation of war for a season: Joab blew the Trumpet, and all the people stood still, and pursued after Israel no more, neither fought they anymore, (i. e. for that time.) 2 Sam. 2. 28. And yet 'tis said, ch. 3. 1. Now there was long war between the house of Saul and the house of David; but the house of David waxed stronger and stronger, and the house of Saul waxed weaker and weaker: Sin may seem to yield, and trouble thy soul no more for a time, but carry it quietly with thee, as Joab did to Abner, and on a sudden smite thee to the ground, though not to death, 2 Sam. 3. 27. Nor is it enough that sin be in chains, and under restraint through the present strength of overcoming grace, unless it be hanged up in chains as a dead malefactor. Secured lust may break prison, and escape from under thy hand (as Benhadab did from Ahab) to thy greater hurt, 1 King. 20. 42. What mischief have chained Bears and Lions done when broken loose? Believer, thy condition is not safe till thy sin be dead: what Saul said to Jonathan, 1 Sam. 20. 31. may be applied to thy case; As long as the Son of Jesse liveth upon the ground thou shalt not be established, nor thy Kingdom; wherefore now send and fetch him to me, for he shall surely die: So can thy Soul obtain no stability in grace, but be always full of ups and downs, and have wars and changes against thee till thy corruptions be subdued.

Quest. But how shall I do to get sin mortified? I am convinced 'tis my duty, but find it not my capacity: After all my strivings, prayers and hopes, I am still foiled, and fear I shall one day perish by the hand of these Saul's. O when shall the Kingdom be restored to Israel? When shall the deliverer come to my soul? What shall I do to get these mountains a plain before Zerubbabel? and these Thieves crucified with my Lord Christ?

Sol. If ever thou meanest to get the death of thy sins, take these directions.

Direct. 1. First, Do nothing that might tend to strengthen sin. Rom. 13. 14. Make 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , no provision for the flesh, to fulfil the 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . lusts thereof: the word signifies a provident care of the flesh, as men do to maintain themselves and families: Don't take up your thoughts about it, how to feed and please your lusts: Never think to kill your corruptions while you secretly feed and maintain them: Many complain of their corruptions, and yet all the while feed and strengthen them. There are several things that do contribute maintenance to men's lusts.

First, Delightful Remembrance of former sins, do wonderfully please a carnal heart, and stir up desires to future sins: As the remembrance of former mercies is food to present faith. Psal. 74. 14. Thou brakest the head of the Leviathan in pieces, and gavest him to be meat to the people inhabiting the wilderness. Israel's deliverance out of Egypt, and the breaking of Pharaoh's power, seriously thought on, was food to Israel's faith in the wilderness: And such are delightful remembrances of former sins: When a person takes pleasure to think and talk of his former evils; this doth feed present desires and hopes of sin. When Paul would help on the Romans freedom from the service of sin, he labors to get their present thoughts of former sins embitter'd. Rom. 6. 21. What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of these things is death.

Secondly, Pleasing Imaginations, and fancying of present or future sins, do wonderfully strengthen the habit of sin. The Lord charges Israel's sinful actions, as the product of their wicked thoughts. Isa. 65. 2. Which walketh in a way that was not good, after their own thoughts. Sin first begins in the head, and ends in the feet; first working thoughts of sin, and then actual works of sin: The Devil doth usually strike the first fire on the tinder of men's thoughts, which afterwards burns in their hearts and lives. Jam. 1. 15. When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin, and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death. They that would avoid the birth of sin in their lives must take heed of the conception of sin in their pleasing thoughts. They that would help on Babylon's ruin, must prevent its propagation, and put a timely check to their growth; dashing their little ones against the stone, Psal. 137. 9. Leave not anything that belongs to Babylon in thy soul, saith Hugo.

Thirdly, Unbelief strengthens lust. Jer. 2. 25. But thou saidst there is no hope; no, for I have loved strangers, and after them I will go, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . Desperatum est (scil.) cor. My heart despairs of help; I fear it will never be better, therefore I will go on in my way. Unbelief strengthens lust, and makes the soul a prey to it. 'Twas by unbelief Israel fell in the wilderness, both into sin and ruin. And the Apostle cautions Christians that they fall not by the same example of unbelief, Heb. 4. 11. 'Twas unbelieving desponding fears had almost turned up David's heels, had not grace succoured him by the Word, Psal. 73. 2. But as for me, my feet were almost gone, my steps had well-nigh slipped. And whence came this weakness of grace, and strength of corruption? why it was from the apprehended prosperity of sin and sinners; and the succesless issues of his profession and obedience: Verse 15. Verily I have cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocence: If this be the fruit of my holiness, then all my labor is in vain; 'tis to no purpose I have followed God all this while, if wickedness shall carry it at last. O take heed of unbelief if ever you would get down your lusts.

Fourthly, Presumption secretly conveys in relief to sin, and succors it against all the sieges of Word and Spirit. 2 Pet. 2. 10. Presumptuous are they, self-willed. A presumptuous soul is a self-pleasing soul, one that pertinaciously and willfully seeks his own carnal contentments, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, (as the word imports) he will boldly adventure on the most dangerous issues of sin, so he may but gratify his lusts, and obtain his sinful desires; he fears no dangers, sticks at no hardships, though God and his Word be against him; it makes the sinner go against all warnings, threatenings, counsels, with hopes of success. Numb. 14. 44. But they presumed to go up to the hill top, verse 42. The Lord forbid them to go, threatening his remove from them, and their ruin, if they durst go up against his will. Nay, it was said, The Ark of the Covenant of the Lord; and Moses went not out of the Camp; would not stir one foot with them in that wicked enterprize, yet they would go. O take heed of Presumption, that does exceedingly keep up sin, and pull down the sinner.

Fifthly, Carnal security is a great friend to sin, and contributes much to its advantage, when Christians let down their watch, and lie down to slumber, then corruptions rise up and prevails over them. When the Amalekites were spread abroad upon all the Earth, eating, and drinking, and dancing, because of all the great spoil that they had taken out of the Land of the Philistines, 1 Sam. 30. 16, 17. David fell upon them, and smote them from the twilight, even to the evening of the next day, and there escaped not a man of them save four hundred young men which rode upon Camels and fled. So 'tis with gracious souls after some great mercy, either some special privilege enjoyed, some spoils upon their lusts obtained, or token of God's favor received, they become secure, proud and careless, letting down their watch, exposing themselves to temptations, and soon become a prey to sin and Satan. Jer. 48, 11. Moab hath been at ease from his youth, and he hath settled on his lees, and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he gone into Captivity, therefore his taste remaineth in him, and his scent is not changed. If you would have a change on your carnal hearts, take heed of carnal security in your hearts.

Sixthly, Self-indulgence helps to nourish sin, when persons are lovers of their own selves; seek to please, indulge and gratify the desires of carnal natural-self; then lusts thrive in that soul. He that feasts his body (saith Ephrem Syrus) and starves his soul, is like him that feasts his slave, and starves his wife. 2 Tim. 3. 2. Self-love leads the Van to all the iniquities and hypocrisies of the last times. O the troops of sin that march under the banner of self-love, and are secured by its conduct; hence self-denial is the first step to Christianity, Mat. 16. 24. You can never prosper in your salvation-attempts, or decay in your soul-ruining lusts, till you learn to deny yourselves in every part of it. Take heed of a selfish spirit, if you would be sincere souls, and see the death of your lusts.

Seventhly, Opportunity favors sin exceedingly, and helps to keep its hopes alive, and gives it occasion for its enlargement. Opportunity is the Midwife of lust, and helps to deliver it of its inward conceptions and pregnant desires: 'Twas opportunity that blew the coal of David's lust into a flame, 2 Sam. 11. 2. and midwiv'd out Hezekiah's pride, Isa. 39. 2. Had it not been for opportunity, Lot might have escaped the sin of incest, as well as the sufferings of Sodom, Gen. 19. 30 to 37. and Judah's uncleanness with his Daughter-in-law Tamar: 'Twas opportunity that exposed Dinah to a rape, and Peter to the temptation of denying his Lord and Master. Take heed of adventuring into the way of temptation, and going to the borders of soul-danger; shun the occasions of evil; turn aside out of the way of snares, Prov. 1. 15. chap. 4. 14, 15. Temptation feeds corruption, ensnares and entangles the feet, and (as fuel) keeps in the fire of lust. You may as safely suffer the sparks to come near to gun-powder, as opportunity to corruption.

Eighthly, Impenitency in sin strengthens the habit of sin. Jer. 8. 6. No man repented him of his wickedness, saying, what have I done? everyone turned to his course, as the horse rusheth into the battle. They run on furiously in sin, as the horse doth into the battle, who runs till he sweats (saith Theodoret.) So they have no end or satiety of sin; and this impenitency in sin was the cause of all their pertinency in sin. Impenitency hardens the heart, and heaps up sin on sin unto the day of wrath, Rom. 2. 5. Take heed then of all those things that may in the least maintain and keep up sin in your souls, as ever you think to bring it down: That's the first Advice.

Direct. 2. Secondly, Not only shun whatever might strengthen sin, but take heed you go not out in your own strength against sin, if ever you think to mortify it: He that would mortify sin, must be able to master Devils, Ephes. 6. v. 12. But human strength is no match for Devils: If man in his pure estate were too weak for such an adversary, then much more impotent is impure and imperfect man: 'Tis not the woman, but the woman's seed must bruise the Serpents head, Gen. 3. 15. The Saints victory is through him that hath loved them, and given himself a sacrifice to God for them, Rom. 16. 20. Rom. 8. 37. Ephes. 5. 2. It must be his armor and arm too must bring salvation from spiritual enemies: Without me you can do nothing, John 15. 5. 'Tis this makes souls to fail in their attempts against sin, that they set about it in a strength inferior to sin. When Augustine after all his strivings, vows and duties to bring down his corruptions, found them still too hard for him? he heard a voice saying to him, Thou standest in thyself, and therefore thou dost not stand: Whereupon he betook himself to prayer, and faith in the blood of Christ, and so got some victory over them. When the Exorcists, Act. 19. v. 15, 16. went to cast out Devils by the bare Name of Christ without the Power of Christ; both they and their attempts soon miscarried: Jesus I know, and Paul I know, but who are ye? and the man in whom the evil spirit was, leapt on them, and overcame them, and prevailed over them, so that they fled out of the house naked and wounded. Creature-strength is too weak to master that enemy which hath the power of Hell to guard it. O go not out against sin

In the strength of your purposes and promises! Peter to his own cost, found that too weak to secure him in an hour of temptation.

Go not out in the strength of your frames and affections: How easily can Satan beat the Saints from these posts, and cast in a flood to drown their warmest affections! The Galatians that were high in frames and affections, and could talk of a blessedness, while spiritual, soon felt an alteration when they became carnal, Gal. 4. 15. chap. 3. 3.

Go not out in the strength of your duties and performances; these are too weak without faith and the arm of Christ to charm these Serpents, and disarm spiritual adversaries.

Go not out in the strength of your graces; these are not Christ, nor have an Almightyness in them to bring down sin and Satan: 'Tis not grace in Believers, but grace in Christ, that is sufficient to guard the soul from Satan's buffetings, and to rescue it from his temptations, 2 Cor. 12. 9.

Direct. 3. Thirdly, Get the union between thy heart and sin broken: The life of sin lies in that union it hath with the heart; if that be broken, sin dies; as a man then ceaseth to live, when the union between the soul and body is dissolved: Sin hath too great a part even in a Believer's heart, which moves for some respect and indulgence towards it: When the enlightened mind says, Crucify it, the carnal affections cry, Spare it, is it not a little one? And the heart (like the City of Iconium about Paul and Barnabas) is divided. Act. 14. 4. And the multitude of the City was divided, and part held with the Jews, and part with the Apostles. So 'tis with the gracious soul; sin hath too great a potency in the carnal mind, which must be broken, or sin will never die: Get the Spirit's interest in thy heart strengthened, and sins party weakened every day.

There are seven things that have a great tendency to weaken the heart's union with sin, and withdraw its affections from it.

First, An abiding sense of the great Love of Christ towards it; that he should pity him, when pitied of none, left of all; love him, when wallowing in his blood, and altogether unlovely in himself; love him, while an enemy to God, yea to his own soul; love him so as to give himself for him; to leave his Father's glory, and take up shame, yea taste of death for him, love him, and pass by others; call him, and leave others: the serious consideration of this hath a great constraint on the gracious heart to hate sin, which Christ so hates, and in love to the soul came to destroy.

Secondly; A due apprehension of the unconceivable sufferings of the Lord Jesus, and all procured by sin: He was despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; he bore our griefs, and carried our sorrows: he was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities; he was oppressed and afflicted, and (that which gave an extremity to all these sorrows) it pleased the Lord to bruise him, to put him to grief, and to make his soul an offering for sin: This made the blows the heavier, that they came from a Father's hand: Had an enemy done it, it might have been easier born, (though his torments were unimaginable) but mine equal, mine acquaintance, my familiar friend, Psal. 55. 12, 13. My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me, Matt. 27. 46? and all this the fruit of sin: This makes a gracious soul to hate sin, that hath been so cruel to his best and only friend.

Thirdly; A believing sight of the excellency and holiness of Christ, hath a mighty power to draw off the heart from sin: when the Prophet had got a view of the Lord in his holiness, he hath presently unlovely and troublesome thoughts of sin. Isa. 6. ver. 1. to 7. Woe is me, for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King the Lord of Hosts: A sight of Christ's holiness will make sin seem exceeding vile and loathsome, and the soul restless till delivered from it: 'Tis unacquaintedness with the holiness and beautiful perfections of Christ, that makes men fall in love with that deformed monster, sin: the transcendent glory of Christ is his grace; and the glory of the Saints is to be like him, Joh. 1. 14. which is obtained through the immediate views of him. 1 Joh. 3. 2. When he appears, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is: The hope of which sight, and glory, is soul-purifying now: ver. 3. And every man that hath this hope, purifieth himself, as he is pure: No sooner had the Apostles a sight of Christ's glorious grace, but the next thing was a receiving from his fullness grace for grace, Joh. 1. 14. 16.

Fourthly; A sensible sight of the exceeding sinfulness and evil of sin will help to loosen this conjunction between the heart and sin: when once Paul came to see the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and felt the killing fruits of it in his soul, his heart presently came to be loosened from the ruling power of it. Rom. 7. 11. 13. That which I do, I allow not; what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. The sense of the shameful fruits of sin was influential on the believing Romans towards their freedom from sin, Rom. 6. 21. 22. Christians, get your eye more intently fixed on the cursed nature of sin; how contrary to God; how like to Devils; how filthy loathsome and abominable: look upon the certain dreadful effects of sin here, and to all eternity, if not removed; it hath brought death on the Son of God, and destruction on the Sons of Men, bondage on the creatures, a curse on everything men do and enjoy; enmity against God, alienation from God, robbing him of his glory, crossing his will, spoiling his works, grieving his spirit, hindering the soul in duty, depriving it of mercy, exposing it to judgment, necessitating it to evil, weakening his hopes, breaking his peace, opposing his grace, and endangering either the loss, or lessening of his glory; with other innumerable mischiefs, injuries, cruelty and miseries that follow the heels of it; with the great difficulty in its removal. I say; be more in the heart-affecting consideration of these things, and you cannot choose, but with Paul, be weary of sin, loath it, and long for a separation from it, Rom. 7. 24. How can ye love that knife that hath stabbed your dearest Friend, Father, Husband; yea, your own soul? How can you like that cloud and veil which stands between you and the Son of righteousness, and keeps these quickening warming beams from you, which would have cleared and strengthened your heart? How can you hug the fetters, kiss the walls and doors that imprison your souls in bondage, and keep you from your beloved, and from the glorious liberty of the Sons of God? what pleasure can you take in that Thief which stole your richest Jewels, and hath brought you to a morsel of bread?

5ly, Apprehension of that high dignity and honorable state to which grace hath advanced you, & those peculiar glorious privileges which you are now invested with, hath a mighty influence on a gracious heart towards the abhorring of sin, 1 Joh. 3. 1, 2, 3. Oh how unsuitable are works of darkness to the children of light! how unbecoming is vile raiment to them that dwell in Kings Houses: A Swine's snout to a Saint's eye; thick clay, and defiling dirt on the hands, face, and heart of the heirs of glory, and children of the Kingdom: what an unlovely sight is it to see Kings wallow in the mire as Swine; and such who enjoy the privileges of Angels, to do the work of Devils? Remember that thou art Son to a King, said one to Antigonus, and that will keep thee from base courses. O Christians! work in these thoughts upon the heart, and see whether there can be any room left for the works of the flesh, or affections thereof.

Sixthly; Expectations of future glory will help you to despise that abominable thing, sin: Can you rationally look for a Throne with your Beloved hereafter, and lodge in the bosom of your Idols and adulterous Lovers now? How can you think that head shall wear a Crown of glory with Christ, who is always plotting to put Crowns of Thorns on Christ's head now? To reap life everlasting then, who sow to the flesh now? Do you hope for that time when you shall be uncloth'd of sin? and can you make it your present work to put on sin, hold fast sin? how inconsistent are desires of sin, with hopes of freedom? Christians, do not deceive your souls, you cannot have sure grounds of fellowship with God hereafter, and allow the least communion between your hearts and sin now.

Seventhly, Maintained union and communion with Christ will break heart-union and fellowship with sin: As heart-union with sin will not admit of union and communion with God. Hos. 4. 17. Ephraim is joined to Idols, let him alone: I will have no more to do with him; I will leave, and remove from him: So union and communion with God in Christ, will not bear union with sin. Hos. 2. 2. The Lord would not say Israel was his Wife, until her Whoredoms were put out of her sight, and her Adulteries from between her breasts: and no sooner did she return to a believing sight of, and affectionate union with him, but she presently cries out, What have I to do with Idols anymore, Hos. 14. 8? Contraries oppose and weaken each other. Psal. 97. 10. Ye that love the Lord, hate evil. Matth. 6. 24. No man can serve two Masters, either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other: ye cannot serve God and Mammon. Union with God is of an incorporating nature. 1 Cor. 6. 17. He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit, and cannot subsist without heart-separation from sin. 2 Cor. 6. 16, 17. I will dwell in them, and walk in them;—wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord. Cleaving to Christ by Faith is the best way to the relinquishment of sin. The soul that hath constant fellowship with Christ, will not care for other Lovers, Phil. 3. 8. That's the third Direction: Get the union between thy heart and sin broken.

Direct. 4. Fourthly, If you would mortify sin, strike at the root of it, and get the body of this death destroyed, The life of the tree lies in the root; lop off all the branches, yet if the root be sound, the tree lives, and the branches will sprout out again, Job 14. 7, 8, 9. But if once the root be cut off, the whole tree dies and ceases from bringing forth fruit. So 'tis with sin, if you set against this or that particular corruption, and let the body of death alone, not using means to weaken that, you will make but little of all your endeavors; when you have quieted one lust, another rises: 'Tis but to little purpose to lade away waters out of a ship, unless you stop the leak that feeds them; while there is water in the Sea, it will be still running in. They that will cure a disease, must get the cause removed: Original sin is the source and fountain of all actual sins; as that is weakened, so will the irruption of actual sins be abated: The way to prevent the inroads and stranglings of a garrison, is to begirt the Fort, and not only keep them in, but scale and attach the strong hold that secures them. This is the wisdom of a Christian (saith Mr. Burroughs) that when he comes to labor against any corruption, he doth not spend his time so much against this or that particular corruption, but strike at the body of corruption:—And hence is the reason that Christians in a little time grow so much, and get so much power against their corruptions, whereas others are a long time before they get any power at all. 'Tis with a Believers heart, as with a garden overgrown with weeds; though the tops be often plucked off, while the mores and strings abide under-ground, all they do to cleanse it is labor in vain, they still spring up afresh: So is it with men's corruptions, till the root be more withered and weakened. Now to further this work:

First, Be deeply sensible of your sinful natures, as well as sinful actions: This the faithful complain mostly of, even their sinful natures. Isa. 64. 6. We are all as an unclean thing, and our righteousnesses as filthy rags. Psal. 51. 5. Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my Mother conceive me. Rom. 7. 24. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death!

Secondly, Apply the Death of Christ by faith to the whole body of sin in you. Faith fetches virtue from a crucified Christ to dry up the bloody issue of sin, Luke 8. 44. chap. 6. 19. This being the appointed way of God to bring down sin. The foundation of a soul's redemption from sin is laid in the Death of Christ. 1 Pet. 2. 24. Who bare our sins for us in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to sin, might live to righteousness. This death to sin is the effect of Christ's dying for sin; this being the end of his Death, to redeem his people from all iniquity, Titus 2. v. 14. Christ's Death for sin was not only a pattern to Believers, but a medicine and appointed means to destroy their sin. Rom. 6. 6. Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him; that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. 'Twas by the Cross of Christ that Paul was crucified to the world, and the world to him, Gal. 6. 14. Carry over thy old man to the Cross of Christ, and bury thy strong lusts by faith in the grave of Christ, deriving virtue thence to kill thy sin. Faith brings the soul into a fellowship with the Death of Christ, to receive the benefits and energy thereof; one of which benefits is a killing power on sin.

Thirdly, Improve Faith in the Promises. The death of sin in Believers, is part of the New Covenant, and as sure as pardon. Micah 7. 19. He will turn again, he will have compassion, he will subdue our iniquities, and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depth of the Sea, Mat. 1. 21. He shall save his people from their sins, Rom. 6. v. 14. Deut. 30. 6. which promises are sure to all the seed: The Lord Jesus came on purpose to perform the promises to, and in his people. Rom. 15. 8. To redeem them from all iniquity, Titus 2. 14. And to destroy the works of the Devil, 1 Joh. 3. 8. And saith in these Promises is soul-cleansing, and sin-subduing: Carry over thy unruly corruptions to Christ in the Promises, and sue for justice upon them.

Fourthly, Implore the constant help of the Spirit of Grace, both to discover, oppose and destroy thy corruptions: This work is too hard for flesh and blood; nothing short of the Eternal Spirit can get a full conquest over sin, and the power and wiles of Satan in thy soul: 'Tis through the Spirit Believers come to mortify the deeds of the body, Rom. 8. 13. And by the spirit of judgment and burning, the Lord purges away the blood of Jerusalem, Isa. 4. 4. And by the Law of the Spirit of Life, we are made free from the Law of sin and death, Rom. 8. 2. Take heed of grieving and impeding the Spirit of Holiness, by which his gracious, sanctifying influences are suspended, and thou be left to the weaknesses of thy own spirit. Be much in prayer and fervent cries for the Spirit's daily assistance in this great work.

Fifthly, Give no place to the least motions of sin, but maintain a constant war against the whole powers and body of sin: The want of preventing care, timely opposition, and constant warfare against all the corruptions of flesh and spirit, is one thing that lays gracious souls under the entanglements and prevalency of their lusts, James. 4. 17. 1 Thes. 5. 2. Rom. 12. 9. We embrace (saith one) the desires of our temptations upon implicit faith, not examining and withstanding the first entrance of temptation, nor crushing the first motions of sin. 'Tis easy to crush the Serpent's Egg, but dangerous conflicting with it when it becomes a Cockatrice. A rebellion may be with less strength dissipated at its first appearance, than suppressed when it hath gathered head, Isa. 14. 29. The Devil's first assault (saith Chrysostom) is violent; resist that, and his second will be weaker, and that being resisted also, he proves a coward. A Christian's wisdom and interest lies much in these two things:

First, To take the start of sin, to strike the first blow, to be in the field before it; yea to baracado up its way, and to fall in upon its quarters; to lay in provision against its very rising; to fortify the heart against the least consent to sin, by applying threatenings and promises betimes, and furnishing the heart with sovereign and scriptural antidotes against it: The neglect of this preventing care, deprives the soul of needful helps against its surprisal, and so renders it weak against its first assaults. Arius at first (saith Jerome) was but a spark, but being not suppressed betimes, he proved the incendiary of the whole Church.

Secondly, To prosecute the soul's victory over sin: Sometimes the Lord gives his people power over a lust, by a sanctified affliction, or blessed ordinance, which victory, if pursued, might tend to the total subduing of it; but usually we grow secure after such successes, and do not follow the victory, but give over too soon, as Joash in his-smiting on the ground, 2 Kings 13. 18, 19. The Prophet bid him shoot the arrows of the Lord's deliverance, and smite upon the ground; and 'tis said, He smote thrice, and stayed; and the man of God was wroth with him; and said, Thou shouldest have smitten five or six times, then hadst thou smitten Syria till thou hadst consumed it. O what advantage might a Christian get if he did but follow his victory over his corruptions, and not suffer them to recruit and gather strength again! Give no rest to thy lusts, nor space for reviving; no not for a moment, but keep up thy warfare every day.

Sixthly, If you would further the death of sin, keep up the life of grace: As the life of sin weakens grace; so the life of grace keeps down and weakens sin. Gal. 5. 16. Walk in the Spirit, and you shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh. Keep up grace, and sin will down. As when the house of David waxed stronger, the house of Saul waxed weaker, 2 Sam. 3. 1. 'Tis written of Ephrem Syrus, that though he was a man much given to passion in his youth; yet after he entered into a strict course of life, he was never seen to be angry with any man. As you cannot get power over sin, but by the Spirit of Grace; so you cannot keep the head over sin, but by the Life of Grace: Get your graces strengthened, and you will find your corruptions weakened.

Thirdly, You must carry on Renovation in grace, and the inward work of Sanctification every day. Ephes. 3. 23, 24. And be renewed in the spirit of your minds: And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness After the work of Mortification, the Apostle presses Christians to this work of Renovation, or Internal Holiness; be renewed in the spirit of your minds (i. e.) in your minds by the Holy Spirit; the mind being put for the whole man, and internal faculties of the soul; both understanding, will, affections and conscience; all must be renewed by the Spirit, called the New Creature, 2 Cor. 5. 17. or Workmanship of Christ transformed after his own Image in righteousness and true holiness; and renewed in knowledge, Eph. 4. 24. Col. 3. 10. When the soul is truly regenerated, there is the stamp or exemplar of Christ's holiness, placed in the whole soul in truth; but in weak measures at first, which must be renewed or enlarged in the soul, till it comes to the fullness of the measure of the stature of Christ. Christians at the first change, are compared to new born babes, 2 Pet. 2. 2. weak in grace, but under a natural disposition and obligations to growth and increases in this grace of God, both intensively and extensively: This is a Christian's duty by divine command, and comports with the appointment of God in order to it, 2 Pet. 3. v. 18. 1 Pet. 2. 2. Ephes. 4. 11, 12, 13. 'Tis the way by which grace becomes glory, and is greatly necessary to perfect a soul's holiness; that so he might come to his full stature and conformity to Christ, Ephes. 4. 16. Rom. 8. 29. And by the increases of grace may be enabled to dispatch all his duties, bear his burdens, and bear up under his temptations, that he might be capable to enjoy all his mercies, to glorify the God of grace, and to be made meet for the enjoyment of God in glory: On all which accounts it becomes the Christian's great concern to press after larger measures of grace every day; to grow up into him in faith and love, who is the head in all things, Ephes. 4. 15. To grow downward in humility and self-denial; to grow extensively in every part of holiness, and greater enlargements in every grace; to wax stronger and stronger in the grace that is in Christ Jesus: Perfecting holiness in the sight of God; and pressing more and more after the price of the High Calling of God in Christ Jesus: The want of which increases of the Spirit, doth much obscure the glory of Christ in Believers, cloud their evidences, and render them too weak for their corruptions, their growing trials and duties. Christians, content not yourselves with the truth of grace, without daily growth in grace. Improve your interest in the Resurrection of Christ, by believing for the dailing quickening of your hearts, and raising of your affections to things above, and attracting your desires and whole souls after God, grace and glory. Be much in internal soul-work, of heart searching, soul watching, divine contemplation, secret ejaculations, and soul breathings after God, and higher manifestations of his light, life and love.

Be constant in every appointment of God, public and private; of prayer, reading, hearing, holy conference, that you may get nourishment thereby administered to your souls: Get under all the dews and showers of grace for your fruitfulness.

Be spiritual as well as frequent in exercising grace under the means of Grace; without this you cannot serve God acceptably, Heb. 12. 28. or receive from him who is the head nourishment to your souls, but by these bands and joints of faith and love, Col. 2. 19. Formality eats out that sap which should make you green and flourishing: A dead, cold heart under the Word, can no more digest it to nutriment, than a dead body can concoct natural food.

Maintain hungering desires after the word of grace, and appointed means to your spiritual growth, 1 Pet. 2. 3. Hungering after food argues a good digestion, and a sound concoction furthers nourishment: Keep up warm affection to every way of God, living on Christ for all the good and blessing of them. Psal. 84. 5. Blessed is the man whose strength is in thee, in whose heart are the ways of them; who passing through the Valley of Baca, make it a Well; the rain also filleth the Pools; they go from strength to strength, everyone in Zion appearing before God. When Jehoshaphat's heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord, 'tis said he waxed great exceedingly, 2 Chron. 17. 6. 12. Heart-enlargement in the ways of God is a notable help to soul-thrivings: Take this one thing more; be poor in spirit, if you would be rich in grace: Such are under the promise of being satisfied, of being guided in judgment, of increasing their joy; to such he will give grace, and revivings. Humble souls (saith one) are empty vessels, which God will fill; are low plants, which God will make to grow: To be nothing in our own eyes, is the way to receive all good things, even grace in abundance from God; Psal. 22. 26. and 25. 9. Isa. 29. 19. Prov. 3. 34. Isa. 57. 15.

Fourthly; To keep your evidences for Heaven fair and legible, is another part of your Salvation-work: this will abundantly comfort you under all your tribulations, quicken you to a lively dispatch of your duties, give you a humble boldness in your approaches to God; arm you against the fears of death, and administer to you an abundant entrance into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Beware of quenching and grieving the Spirit of grace, by which its sealing-work is hindered: Take heed of laying blots upon your evidences, by any allowed iniquity in your hearts, or unpurged defilement in your hands, which will weaken your confidence in the Lord, fill you with dejection and despondency of spirit, and give your spiritual adversary great advantage over your souls, 2 Pet. 1. 10. 1 Joh. 5. 13. 2 Cor. 1. 12. 1 Cor. 15. 58. Heb. 10. 22. Job 19. 25, 26, 27. 2 Pet. 1. 11.

Keep up your sincerity and truth in the innerman, be often looking to the principle of your actions, that it be gracious; and to your ends in everything you do, that they be pure, singly, and ultimately aiming at God, his will and glory in every duty, action and undertaking.

If you would evidence the truth of grace, you must be every day in the exercise of grace, and conscionable endeavors to live up to known duties, exercising a conscience void of offense towards God and man, not resting in any measures of grace, but going on towards perfection, and aiming at greater enlargements in your souls and graces continually.

Thirdly; Carry on all these natural, moral, and religious duties that concern others. This is the will of God, and part of your sanctification. Matth. 5. 16. Let your light shine before men, and by your good works glorify your Father which is in Heaven. 1 Cor. 10. 32. Walk unblamable towards all men, giving no offense to any, lest the Gospel be blamed. Phil. 1. 10. That you may be sincere, and without offense to the day of Christ. 1 Pet. 2. 12. Having your conversation honest among those you have to do with; dealing justly with all men, rendering to every man his due; doing good to all, as opportunity serveth, Gal. 6. 10. Psal. 35. 13. and be kind to the just and unjust, seeking the salvation of sinners, mourning over them, praying for them, instructing of them; seeking by a humble, holy, and affectionate carriage to win them over to the Lord Jesus, who are not won by the word, Luke 19. 41. Psal. 51. 13. 2 Pet. 3. 1. Loving, praying for, doing good unto your greatest enemies. Virtues separated (saith Chrysostom) are annihilated; equity without goodness, is severity; and justice without piety, cruelty: 'Tis better to do good than to receive good. 'Twas said of Mr. Hooker, That he was born for the good of many, but few born for the good of him: That you love, delight in, and do good to all Saints, as Saints, that carry the image of God on them. That you make conscience of your relative duties both in your own houses, and in the house of God. Psal. 101. 2. Walking within your own houses with a perfect heart; to be Christians at home as well as abroad; showing the same spirit, zeal and affection to your Families as to others; doing your utmost to keep up the service of God in your houses, both together and asunder, morning and evening in prayer, and reading the word of God, Acts 10. 2. 9. Josh. 24. 18. Psal. 25. 10. Matth. 6. 6. That you faithfully discharge those mutual duties you owe to each other, as Husband, Wife, Parents, Children, Masters, Servants, Eph. 5. 22. to the end of chap. 6. To be meek, loving, peaceable in your words and carriages towards one another, giving that due respect as the place and relation calls for from each other: To be holy and profitable in your discourses, seeking the spiritual welfare, edification and salvation of each others souls, as of your own, Deut. 11. 19. Prov. 22. 6. ch. 23. 13. Col. 3. 12, to 16. Heb. 12. 14. Gen. 18, 19. The want of which due and Christian carriages in your houses brings up an evil report on the ways of God, rendereth the truth of your grace questionable, hinders the gracious presence of God with you, and removes his blessing from you, Eph. 4. 29. Rom. 11. 14. You whom grace hath privileged with a place and name within the walls of God's house, do stand obliged to fellowship-duties of love, care and faithfulness to each other; considering one another to provoke to love and good works, Joh. 15. 12. Heb. 10. 24. and esteem each other better than yourselves: To seek one another's good as your own, serving each other in love, Phil. 2. 3. 1 Cor. 10. 24. 33. Gal. 5. 13. To sympathize with each other in affliction, Col. 3. 12. and to be helpful to them in bearing their burdens, supplying their wants, comforting, counseling, and supporting them in all their tribulations, Heb. 13. 3. visiting the sick and imprisoned, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, warning the unruly, admonishing the offenders, bearing one another's infirmities, covering their weaknesses, avoiding whatever might offend and injure each others souls, or lessen their affections, or break the unity of spirit and bond of peace between them; but by a sweet, humble-self denying, and faithful carriage, to engage the heart to each other, praying for the whole body, and every member: To be gracious and spiritual in all your communion and converses, seeking the prosperity of Zion, rejoicing in each others graces and good, as in your own; doing all you may towards their comfort and salvation, Mat. 25. 42. Acts 20. 35. 1 Joh. 3. 17. Rom. 15. 1. and 16. 17. Lev. 19. 10. 2 Cor. 12. 20. Col. 4. 6. Phil. 2. 17, 18. Tit. 2. 12. 2 Cor. 13. 7. Psal. 15. 2. Col. 3. 9.

In your Callings, commerce and dealings with men, to be just, honest, and faithful, doing as you would be done unto, not defrauding one another, but speaking the truth in all your bargainings, and performing your promises, though to your hurt. This is a considerable part of your heavenly Trade, and that wherein the credit of Religion doth eminently lie; the pleasing and glorifying of God, the good of others, the propagation of the Gospel, the peace and salvation of your own souls, even in the faithful discharge of these natural, moral, and religious duties you owe unto others.

This is the first part of heavenly work; work of a heavenly nature as well as manner, both with respect to God, our own souls, and others.

Secondly, Another part of heavenly work is to do earthly things in an heavenly manner: Though the things of the World are of a different nature from things above, yet when rightly managed, they are subservient to them, and come within the compass of this Heavenly Trade: To which three things are needful.

- 1 To do earthly things by heavenly rules.
- 2 With heavenly hearts.
- 3 To heavenly ends.

First, Then is earthly work part of your Heavenly Trade, when you transact it by heavenly rules; every Science hath its Maxims; distinct Governments have their distinct Laws: So hath every Trade its rules, principles and instructions by which it is carried on. Earthly Traders have their rules and methods by which they manage their businesses, as may most comport with the end they propose, and the advance of their own earthly interests; and so 'tis with heavenly Traders, though they have to do with earthly things, yet they must act about them by heavenly rules.

Now there are ten rules which heavenly Merchants must observe in the management of their earthly affairs.

Rule 1. First, Be sure the matter of your employments be good, that your Callings be lawful, and the things you do be just and honest in the sight of God: Evil things can never be well done: meddle not with prohibited goods; do nothing that either in its nature, use, or by divine Law becomes evil, 2 Cor. 13. 7. Phil. 4. 8. Eph. 4. 28. Let your Callings be lawful, of good report, and useful in your generation, not only for your own interest and advantage, but for the service and good of others: For no man liveth to himself, Rom. 14. 7. Such a calling as hath God for its Author being according to Scripture; and hath God for its Teacher (saith Fenner) Isa. 28. 26. And as a man can manage with peace of conscience, and be assured his work doth please God, and he can pray for a blessing upon it; which they cannot do who set on employments that tend to nourish vice and wickedness, Rom. 13. 14.

That your Recreations also be lawful; such as are free from scandal and temptation, used by, and with persons fearing God, and such as have a tendency to refresh the mind and body, the better disposing it to its necessary duties, being sparingly and wisely used, so as to be no occasion of evil to others, and religiously entered on by seeking to God for a right management of it, and blessing on it. Such actions as come not under these characters, are not becoming Christians, who must give an account to God for every vain word, much more for idle actions, Mat. 12. 36. 'Tis part of that which will trouble souls when their sins are bearing on them; that they have inherited lies, vanities, and things wherein is no profit, Jer. 16. 19. Saints should be working nothing but what hath a good in it: Working with his hands the things that are good, Ephes. 4. 28. and which can bring some glory to God: Whatsoever you do (of which Recreations is a part) do all to the glory of God, 1 Cor. 10, 31. But what good to the body, foul or estate; what glory to God; what peace to conscience in the day of Christ, can be found in carnal sports, scandalous plays, cards, dice, lascivious dancings, and the like? which are the offspring of chambering and wantonness, things wherein is little praise, virtue, or good report; but rather the spots of Christianity, and bane of piety, which tend to debauch the affections, to deaden the conscience, to nourish wantonness, and seed a fleshly carnal mind, the end of which is death, Rom. 13. 13. Phil. 4. 8. Jude v. 12. 2 Pet. 2. 18. Rom. 8. 6. For to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. It is a double content to a generous and well disposed nature, when he doth good for his pleasure. Games of hazard (saith a worthy Divine) do very much discompose the mind; they also provoke passion, and cause much disturbance in the soul for things of nothing. Games that consist in dexterity of body or mind, are much to be preferred before these: Chess will sharpen the wit, but busy it over much, and toil the spirits, instead of recreating them, which is the proper use of play: Of all gaming, the less the better; and when it disorders the passions, the least is too much. He that ventures much money at play, ventures with it not only the tranquility of his mind; but makes a certain loss of it whatever becomes of the money—Squandring away of money in play, is not the way to make friends of that unrighteous Mammon, that receive a man into everlasting habitations, but an enemy rather that will turn him out of his temporal habitation; it is the way to lose both Earth and Heaven: So then, whether we win or lose, we commit robbery; for if we rob not our adversaries, we rob ourselves, our families, and God: We may add this also; such unprofitable Recreations devour that precious treasure of irrecoverable, invaluable, yea salvation-time; and useth those hours in posting to Hell, which are too much neglected for hastening to Heaven. O how careful then should souls that profess heavenly hopes be of their earthly work, that it be such as may conduce to their accomplishment of them!

Rule 2. Secondly, Set upon earthly things in their proper place and order: Seek first the Kingdom of God, and the righteousness thereof, and all these things shall be added to you, Mat. 6. 33. Let God have the uppermost Throne in your hearts, the fore-foot in your walk, the first stroke in your work; give heavenly things the precedency, both in estimation, affection and time, as things of greatest worth, and to which you are chiefly obliged: That's the due order and method of heavenly Traders, to begin every day and work with God; serve God first, and then yourselves: Set apart some time for religious duties, before you set upon earthly employments. Men will not go abroad into unwholsom air fasting: The things of this world have a contagious breath in them: Break your fast with God every morning, before you adventure on heart-ensnaring businesses: Labor with God first for his presence with you, his wisdom to direct you, his grace and strength to help, secure and bless you in your earthly labors. Antidote your hearts with divine cordials every morning, before you get into the Pest-house of this world, and let something of Scripture lie nearest thy soul for counsel, comfort, quickening every day: He (saith Augustine) that hath tasted the sweetness of Divine love, will not care for temporal sweetness. Meddle not with the thorns of this world, till you have fenced your hearts and hands by prayer, and the sword of the Spirit: 'Tis more haste than good speed to run into the world before you have spoken with God: The lawful way to earthly employments lies by Heavens gates. Christians, God will sue you for trespasses if you take any other way to your trades and employments in the world, than his prescribed way of religious duties. Besides, you have need of God's eye and hand in everything you do: You know not the snares and deaths that lie in your employments, and the dangers you are subject to in every step you go, and in everything you do: You may go forth in the morning, and never return more; some have died as Israel did, with meat in their mouths; others have fallen down dead in their work, broke their necks in a journey, been found dead in the way: O set on earthly work in God's way; go not about the world till you have been with God, and secured your All in his hands.

Rule 3. Thirdly, Keep your earthly business within the bounds of due time. He that hath allotted you your work, hath allotted you your time for it: it consists not with man's state, relation and interest, to be arbitrary in anything, but to walk by rule. There is a time for everything under the Sun, Eccles. 3. 1. A time for every purpose, and for every work, verse 17. Job 7. 1. As there is an appointed time to man on earth; so there is an appointed time to man for earthly things: He that hath set bounds to the world, hath not left worldly employments without bounds, but hath fixed men's earthly affairs within their proper season. Psal. 104. 23. Man goeth forth to his work and to his labor until the evening. The Psalmist acknowledges here the power and providence of God in setting bounds to his creatures; bounds to the Sun and Moon. Verse 19. He appointed the Moon for seasons, and the Sun knoweth his going down: Bounds to the day and night. Verse 20. Thou makest darkness, and it is night: he limits the labors of wild beasts and men; the beasts have their preyingtime confined to the night. Verse 20. 22. And it is night wherein all the beasts of the forest do creep forth; the Sun riseth, they gather themselves together, and lay them down in their dens. Men have their working-time allotted in the day: Man goeth forth to his work and labor until the evening; that is, to the end of their working-day, which consisted among the Jews of twelve hours. John 11. 9. Are there not twelve hours in the day? the usual time for men to dispatch their earthly work in. The Lord would not (saith Musculus) have men's labors drawn out so far as to wear out their strength, but hath set bounds to it. As the Lord would not have the world to take up men's hearts; so he would not have it to eat out their time, or encroach on these seasons that are due to greater concerns. God, Nature, Grace, thy own soul, and the spiritual good of others, have their claims, as well as thy earthly calings, to this little inch of this time. O consume not thy precious day on things that are temporal, and neglect thy opportunities for things eternal: do not enslave thy body beyond thy beasts, which have their times of rest; nor exhaust that strength which better things call for, upon an empty perishing world. Excessive labors beyond their due time, do argue either too much desire of these things, or too little faith in God, and are reprov'd by the Lord as the vanity and practice of them, who are not his beloved ones, Psal. 127. 2. 'Tis lamentable to see such as would be thought the heirs of Heaven, so excessively taken up in enlarging their possessions on earth; engrossing all their time early and late, about their earthly affairs, leaving nothing but a few unserviceable minutes for God and their souls. O Christians! Keep the stream of your earthly affections and labors within the banks of allowed time; rob not God of his time of special service; nor nature of her time of needful rest and refreshment: nor thy own or others souls of time for their spiritual concerns, for such poor perishing things: Shew charity to thy redeemed body; make it not a drudge to thy earthly lusts: Man is too noble a creature to be a vassal to this world: 'Tis a sad spectacle to see the Nazarites of Heaven, like Sampson, with their heads shaven, and their eyes plucked out to grind in the world's mill, till they pluck down the house about their ears, Judge. 16. 21. How do men macerate their bodies, and starve their souls, only to help them with supplies in their passage to the grave, and all the while neglect the work of God, and their souls, leaving the relics of their wasted strength, and the world's refuse, for the service of an immortal God. This is not to follow earthly things by heavenly Rule.

Rule 4. Fourthly, Be diligent in the use of your working time: take heed you waste it not upon impertinencies, or by needless diversions, or by idleness, and unfaithfulness in your work: this is a sin against both Law and Gospel, which requires diligence and faithfulness in men's earthly callings: Labor and calling-work was man's duty before his fall. Gen. 2. 15, The Lord God took the man, and put him into the Garden of Eden, to dress it, and to keep it: And after the fall, painful labor was enjoin'd and inflicted as a punishment of his sin. Gen. 3. 19, In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, until thou return to the ground. This duty of bodily labor in men's Callings, is of equal sanction and regard with the duties of God's Worship, being inserted in a positive Law, and as that which is necessary to the sanctifying of God in Sabbaths. Exod. 29. 9, 10, Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work, but on the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, in it thou shalt not do any work: The injunction of working in six days (saith Mayer) is given in the same commanding terms in the Original, that the injunction of not working in the seventh is: and the same reason is given for both: the one is taken from God's resting on the seventh day: and the other from his working the six days: So that not to labor faithfully in thy Calling the six days, is a breach of the fourth command, as well as the working on the Sabbath-day: Not as if the six days labor were to exclude all religious Worship of God on either of these days when the Lord calls to it by extraordinary Providences, as to mourning or rejoicing, or by ordinary tenders of Gospel-mercy, in Week-day Lectures, or the like; for this would cross his other commands, Preaching in season and out of season, and laboring for the bread that endures to eternal life: This diligent labor doth not exclude private worship every day, and public worship on week-days; so far as it consists with faithfulness in men's Callings, for which time must be redeemed, Eph. 5. 16. but it requires diligent attendance on men's Callings, on the week-days (as opposed to sloth and sinful waste of time) without which God is not duly served on the Sabbath: This diligence in men's Callings is also required in the Gospel, 1 Thess. 3. 10. Idleness is a Gospel-scandal, and renders Christians worthy to be abstained from, as not obeying the Word of God; and such must not eat, 1 Thess. 4. 11. such are unprofitable servants, who improve not their talents for God, and the good of others, Matth. 25. 30. and are worse than Infidels, who do not by diligence in their Calling provide for their own, 1 Tim. 5. 8.

Rule 5. Fifthly, while your hands are about the world, set a guard about your hearts: The Believers heart is Christ's royal Fort, secure that, and all is safe: If riches increase, set not your hearts upon them, Psal. 62. 10. 'tis the Nature of earthly things, like a Malignant Disease, to get to the heart, O how hard is it to meddle with these, and the heart not become earthy too! when a gracious Soul hath been with God, and got his heart warmed, quickened, and drawn out to things above; no sooner doth he return to the world, but all is gone again: such dangerous damps doth this earth send unto heavenly hearts: secure thy heart with God every day, make a new surrender of it to him, before thou get into the snares of thy earthly business: Set a vigilant watch upon thy heart every moment, lest the things of the world steal in and take it captive.

Rule 6. Sixthly, Attend your earthly affairs with a calm and quiet spirit, whatever occurrence you meet with in the world; let your spirits be composed and fixed on God: wonder not at changes in an unsteddy world, which is only constant in inconstancy. Here have we no continuing City, Heb. 13. 14. All things here are moving, ascending or descending: Things below are compared to the Moon, Rev. 12. 1. which is never at a stay, but hath its constant changes; and like the Sea that ebbs and flows every day; and as the fountain of the Sun, which Pliny writes of, that the waters are extreme cold and sweet at noon, but boiling hot and bitter at midnight: So mutable are the comforts of this world, then going when they seem most likely to stay. Man's condition in this world at the best, is like the mountain Potosi, over which there always hangs a cloud even in the clearest day. And as 'tis written of a Meer or Salt Marsh in Scotland, called Pochlowland, where there are tempestuous waves raging without wind, yea in the greatest calm. Christians, be not troubled at the tides you see in these waters of Marah. Riches make themselves wings and fly away, Prov. 23. 5. Let none of these lower things trouble you when gone, which cannot content you when present: but one moment of time can make them cease to be yours. There is but one days difference (saith Seneca, upon the burning of a City) between a great City, and no City: So there may be but one day, nay but one hour, between a Father, and no Father; a Husband, and no Husband; a man of pleasure, and a man of sorrows; a rich man, and a poor man. Set not that at your hearts which should be at your heels: Men do not use to sigh, look pale, and cry, when servants leave them: Earthly things are no more; they are given you as handmaids to wait on you, not as a Spouse to lie in your bosoms; as servants that come and go, not as children that abide in the house forever. When thou hast lost an earthly comfort, say, A servant is gone from me today. Keep up a contentation of mind with the portion God gives you here. Heb. 13. 5. Let your conversation be without covetousness, and be content with those things that you have: Let them suffice you, as 'tis in the Greek; count them enough. If an Esau can be satisfied with his crumbs, how much more should a Jacob with the children's bread What this and Heaven too! (saith one.) A little of the world, and much of Heaven, will well agree. I have enough, and enough, and enough, said precious Mr. Ball, who yet was very low in the world. When the Earl of Leicester offered Mr. Cartwright the Provostship of Eaton College, saying, 'twas an hundred pound more than enough, he answered, the hundred pound more than enough was enough for him. Psal. 37. 16.

A little that the righteous hath, is better than the revenues of the wicked. There are two diminutives in the Original (a little little of the righteous man's) let it be never so 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 little, with righteousness, it weight down all the abundance of the worldly man's interest; be it more or less, it is enough. O thrice fools are we, like new born Princes weeping in the cradle, knowing not that there is a Kingdom before them, Rutherford. I have often thought on that providence concerning Israel in the wilderness. Exod. 16. 8. He that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little, had no lack. Christian, why so troubled about thy proportion of these things of the footstool? as if your Father knew not what you wanted, or cared not for you, or could not maintain you: You shall have enough to carry you to your graves, and you can absolutely need no more. And seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not, for behold I will bring evil upon all flesh, but thy life will I give thee as a prey in all places whither thou goest, Jer. 45. 4, 5. You know not what God is doing in the world: Have you but little now? you may shortly have less: Be content with what you have: A little in Bethel, if it be but a pillow of stones, with bread and water, is better than the rich Plains of Sodom: A piece of blest bread in Immanuel's Land, is sweeter, and will go farther than all the Garlic and Flesh-pots of Egypt. than a great deal of unsanctified comforts: A small portion of the world, with soul-advantage, is better than a great estate with spiritual losses and temptations. God can multiply a few loaves; make the barrel of meal, and cruse of oil, to hold out, and your clothes not to wax old, rather than you shall want enough to carry you through your wilderness, if you will be believing and obedient. Be contented with the talent God gives you to trade upon: Have others more than you? envy them not; they have the more to reckon for; and it may be they need more, or they can bear more than you. That (saith one) would sink a small vessel which is but an ordinary burden to a great ship. Some can better manage a large estate with less trouble and temptation than others: Possibly that would puff up thy heart with pride, and catch thy feet in snares that never stirs another's affections, to whom God hath given a braver spirit, or greater mortifiedness to this world. Subscribe to God's wisdom and pleasure, believe his promises, wonder at his mercy, be thankful for what you have above many; see your All in God, and hope to be shortly with him; and you cannot but be content with your allowance in the world.

Rule 7. Seventhly, Follow your duty, but cast your care on God, abide in your callings, but live above them. 1 Pet. 5. 17. Casting all your care on God, for he careth for you. Depend not on your wisdom, labor or success in your employments, but upon the promise, love and care of God for you: If the Lord blesseth your substance, do not you bless yourselves in it: See an emptiness in all your abundance, and shortness in these to answer your many wants. God can soon make a hole in your money-bags, blow on your increase, turn your prosperity into contempt, and make your expected comforts as the dream of a night vision. Live not on large barns, but on the full breasts of promises, for the good of what you do enjoy, or for the supply of what you want. The poor Christian hath the keeping of his purse in his Father's hand, the rich in his own hand. If sight fail, live by faith: Faith assures you of the good issue of all difficulties in your way, and gets advantage from the worst condition, and sweetness to mingle with every bitter providence you meet with. It may be thou hast a great family, and little to live on; liest in debt, and hast nothing to pay it; hadst a little the other day, but the Caterpillar and the Cankerworm hath devoured it; this loss, and the other stroke hath wasted it. In this case thy duty is to live on God by faith, for a sanctified fruit of his hand upon thee, and for making up this lack by his abundance: When thou canst see no way out of thy perplexing trouble, let thine eye be unto God for help, 2 Chron. 20. 12. 2 Chron. 25. 8. Go not out of God's way for relief: He that wounds must heal; he only that casteth down can raise up, Deut. 32. 30. Neither faint thou in the day of adversity, or way of thy duty, Prov. 24. 10. Prov. 16. 3. but commit thy way to the Lord, and he will bring it to pass, Psal. 37. 5. Mat. 6. v. 25. 1 Cor. 7. 32. Phil. 4. 6. Take heed of carking cares, and fretful vexings; these cannot lessen thy trouble, but will greaten thy sins; a provident care is thy duty, but a distrustful vexing care, both thy sin and affliction.

Rule 8. Eighthly, In all your labors pray for a blessing: If you would live well, you must beg as well as work; add duty to thy diligence, prayer to thy provident care, calling on God, to thy calling in the world: As every creature, so every condition and work is sanctified by the word and prayer, 1 Tim. 4. 15. In every undertaking seek to God for counsel. Prov. 3. 6. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths. Christians should not set upon the smallest matters without enquiring the will of God; not to go to this or that place, to buy or sell to do this or that work without seeking to God for direction, Jam. 4. 13, 14, 15. Our journeys (saith one) must not be undertaken without asking God's leave, Dr. Mant. on Jam. This would evidence a life of dependence on God, and bring all thy affairs under divine care and blessing; Abraham's servant begins his journey with prayer, Gen. 24. 12. 27. and concluded it with praise, Gen. 28. 20. And so Jacob; Israel's folly in concluding with the Gibeonites contrary to the command of God, was laid on their not asking counsel of God. Josh. 9. 14. The men took of their victuals, and asked not counsel at the mouth of the Lord. O the snares and disadvantages men are exposed to in their earthly concerns, for not taking counsel from God, and engaging his hand and blessing with them: Prayer will further your work, sweeten your pains and difficulties in it, and secure the comfort and good of it: When you want mercy, seek God for it; when you receive mercy, see God in it, and return praise to God for it.

Rule 9. Ninthly, Though you live in the World, yet be dead to the World: Heavenborn souls, though in the World, yet are not of the World, but chosen out of it, Joh. 15. 19. and crucified to it. Gal. 6. 14. God forbid that I should glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the World is crucified to me, and I unto the World. This crucifiedness to the World (saith Pareus) signifies the contempt and despising of this World; he intimates hereby, that the World with all its scorn, pride, pomp and glory are despised by him, as a nothing, empty, dead thing. A soul crucified to the World sees nothing lovely and desirable in this World but God, his Word and Works: there's nothing in earthly things that can be taking with spiritual hearts, if God be not enjoyed in them: all the glory of the World is no more to them than a dead carcass, if the love of God breath not through it on their hearts; nay the very Garden of the Lord is a Wilderness to them, if the Rose of Sharon be not in it. A mortified Saint wonders that a rational immortal Soul can see such worth in riches, pleasures, honors, and poor perishing things of this life, which to him are nothing; he can easily part with all at the Lord's bidding. And he feels no such evil neither in the bad things of this World, as to make men startle at them; wants, losses, reproaches, torments for Christ, lose their frightfulness to them whose hearts love to the Lord Jesus hath reconciled unto the bitterest affliction that can befall them for his sake. If Christ stand, and do not perish, (saith Luther) what matter is it if Wife and Children perish? If liberty, estate, life and all go, so he stay: Such should thy heart be in pursuit of these things, as one that is dead to the World, and sits loose from all its glory, and above all its threatenings; content to have, or not to have; to use, or want; to enjoy, or be denied, or deprived of it, as God pleaseth.

Rule 10. Lastly, Do all your work within the view of death, judgment, and eternity: transact the employments of every day, as dying persons, who are leaving this World, and liable to a remove every moment: How would frequent and serious thoughts of a near approaching end wonderfully check men's greedy pursuits of this World, and help to keep their actions in a consistency with their accounts. King Philip would have it proclaim'd before him every morning, Remember that thou art mortal: And when falling upon the Sand he afterward saw the print of his body, said, O how little a parcel of earth will hold us when we are dead, who ambitiously seek after the World while we are living. When Severus was old, he called for an Urn or Pitcher in which the ashes of a dead person were put, and looking a while on it, said, Wilt thou contain that man whom the whole World cannot contain? Alas, what will the whole World be to thee when thou comest to die? let it seem no more to thee now, who art dying every day: do everything as strangers and pilgrims here, Heb. 11. 9. 13. and as if you heard a voice every day saying, Awake, and come to judgment: Jerome thought whatever he did, he still heard that voice; Surgite mortui, & venite ad judicium; Arise ye dead, and come to judgment. When you are travelling to this Market, and the other Fair; think, Sure I am journeying to the grave, and I know not what dust I shall shortly be shovell'd into: when you are about your work, think, I am hastening to eternity, and shortly these hands must rot in the grave: When you promise yourselves great things, as the fruit of your labors, and hope for this gain and the other comfort, say, Death may come between me and my enjoyments, and crop off the hopes of all my labors. What can be great to him that accounts the World nothing? or long to him that counts his life but a span? Mr. Dod, When thou findest thy heart running out too greedily after this World, ready to lie, cheat, oppress, undermine others to greaten thy interest: think on this; For all these things God will bring thee to judgment, and render to thee according to all thy works.

Secondly, Then do you your earthly work in an heavenly manner, when you do it with an heavenly heart: As is the heart, so is the action in God's account: the Lord was much pleased that it was in David's heart to build him an House, though he never did it, 1 Kin. 8. 18. and displeased with all that Israel did in his service, because their heart was not right with him, Psal. 78. 37. Israel did many good works, they sought him, they returned and inquired early after God, they remembered that God was their Rock, and the high God their Redeemer, ver. 34, 35. but all this was nothing in God's esteem, because their heart was not upright in it; they had an earthly, carnal, selfish, backsliding heart in all they did. If thy heart be heavenly, though thy work be earthly, yet it puts an excellency on it; but if thy work be heavenly, and thy heart earthly, God doth reject and despise it: the heart is the root of every action, and if the root be good, the fruit will be good also, Mat. 12. 33. Rom. 11. 16. If the fountain be sweet, the streams will be sweet also; and if thy heart be heavenly, thy work is heavenly: A heavenly heart, like the Bee, turns all it doth to heavenly uses: when the Lord Jesus had put his hand upon the Spouses heart, and left some myrrh upon her bowels, presently her hands dropped myrrh, and her fingers sweet smelling myrrh, Cant. 5. 4, 5. A heavenly heart perfumes thy earthly work, and makes it wonderfully taking with the heart of Christ.

Quest. How might I know when my heart is heavenly in my earthly work?

Sol. First, A heavenly heart is a heart enlightened to see heavenly things; a heart beam'd over with heavenly light, to discern things invisible: An earthly heart is a dark heart, it sees nothing in God, his Word and Works, so as to draw up his heart to Heaven: an earthly heart sees nothing but earth in heavenly things; and an heavenly heart sees Heaven in earthly things. The Patriarchs saw the heavenly City in their earthly Country, Heb. 11. 13, 14, 16. They saw the promises (that is, the things promised) afar off, and confessed that they were strangers on earth, they sought a Country, desired a better Country, that is an heavenly; and all that as the product of their heavenly sight, they saw heavenly things in earthly: Abraham had an heavenly eye to see Christ's day, Joh. 8. 5, 6. and Moses a heavenly eye to see him who is invisible, Heb. 11. 27. A heavenly heart doth not only see heavenly things, but sees an infinite worth and excellency in them: it sees them to be the best things; it sees a greater glory and desirableness in things above, in one glance of his eye, in one day within his Courts, in one hours communion with him, than in all the World besides: Mary saw more advantage in sitting at Christ's feet, than in the many things Martha's heart was taken up about, Luke 10. 41, 42. Cursed be that man (saith the noble Marquess Galeacius) that accounts not one hours communion with Christ above all the World.

Secondly, A heavenly heart is a heart that savors heavenly things, Rom. 8. 5. Nothing goes down so sweet with a heavenly heart as heavenly things, everything rejoices in its like: An earthly heart delights in earthly things; the Merchant in his Trade, the Husbandman in his Field, Houses, Husbandry, and fruits of the earth; the voluptuous man in his pleasures; as he that sold his City for a draught of water; crying out when he had done, O that for so short a pleasure, of a King I should be made a Slave! The proud man in his greatness, Is not this great Babylon that I have built, for the house of the Kingdom? Dan. 4. 30. So doth the heavenly heart relish greatest sweetness in heavenly things: How sweet are thy words to my taste? yea sweeter than honey to my mouth, Psal. 119. 103. His fruit was sweet to my taste; his mouth is most sweet, Cant. 2. 3. and 5. 16. My meditation of him shall be sweet, Psal. 104. 34. We took sweet counsel together, Psal. 55. 14. We talked of the mysteries of godliness (saith Ainsworth) of the exercises of Religion; (saith another) which I suppose the Prophet meaneth by going into the House of God, as companions consulting (as it were) how they might prepare themselves to his service.

Thirdly, A heavenly heart is a heart that longs and desires after heavenly things: Whom have I in Heaven but thee? and there is none that I can desire on Earth in comparison of thee, Psal. 73. 25. When shall I come and appear before God? My soul thirsteth for thee; my flesh longeth for thee, in a dry and thirsty land where no water is, to see thy power and glory, as I have seen thee in the Sanctuary, Psal. 43. 2. Psal. 63. 1, 2. My soul longeth, yea even fainteth for the Courts of the Lord; my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God, Psal. 84. 2. Desires are the natural motions of the heart, and the best character, and truest lineaments (saith one (y))that can be drawn of the minds of men. Practices may be overrul'd by ends; but desires are always genuine and natural: Hence good men have had most confidence in approving themselves to God, by their affections, and the inward longings of their souls after him, as being the purest and most unfeigned issues of love, and such as have least proximity and danger from foreign and secular ends. It is an unquestionable evidence of souls risen with Christ, and receiving the stamp of Heaven on the heart, to set their affections on things above: Heavenly desires are the natural breathings of a gracious heart, which can as well live without them, as a man without breathing; a cessation of spiritual desires, argues soul-swooning, or spiritual death.

Fourthly, A heavenly heart is known by its heavenly thoughts; it will be much thinking of heavenly things: As is the heart, so are the thoughts usually. For as he thinketh, so is he, Prov. 23. 7. The thoughts are the first-born of the heart, and strength of the soul, and as natural issues of the mind, as beams are of the Sun; if the heart be evil, the thoughts will be evil; if the heart be good, the thoughts will ordinarily be good, Matth. 15. 19. further than corruptions or temptations hinder, Jer. 4. v. 14. If your hearts be heavenly, so will your designed, habitual and well-pleasing thoughts be. They that are spiritual, will mind the things of the Spirit, Rom. 8. 5. Try your hearts by your ordinary, quiet and delightful thoughts: Are vain, earthly thoughts your trouble, and holy thoughts your delight?

Fifthly, A heavenly heart will be full of heavenly projects; such a heart will be driving designs for Heaven; his consultations, enquiries and studies, will be how to carry on and promote heavenly interests. Titus 3. 8. This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , cum ration & concilio exerceri; the word is, might study, devise, and beat their brains how they might do good: That's the temper of earthly hearts also; they will be plotting and contriving ways and means how to advance earthly interests. Phil. 3. 19. Who mind earthly things, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , Zanchi, whose thoughts are in the earth (as the Syriac renders it,) that is, they are wholly taken up about earthly things: So 'tis with a heavenly heart, it is taken up about the things of Heaven; it lays holy plots, how to keep down the world and corruption in the soul, and how to make the most of all it hath and doth for Heaven, to secure his interest, and enlarge his possession above: So far as the heart is heavenly, so far is it designing for Heaven.

Sixthly, A heavenly heart is acted and influenced by heavenly motives and arguments; there is nothing sways more with a heavenly spirit than reasons drawn from heavenly things, heavenly pleasures, heavenly honors, heavenly treasures will do more with a heavenly heart than any arguments drawn from things of this life. The nature of the heart is much known by the motives that are most potent with it: A carnal heart is biased by carnal things: Who will show us any good? Psal. 4. 6. But a spiritual heart with spiritual things: Lord lift up thou the light of thy countenance upon us: Lot will choose the plains of Sodom; but Abraham will prefer walks with God, though in a Wilderness. David values his lot, by what it hath of God in it, and counts that most pleasant and rich which helps him to most of God, Psal. 16. 5, 6. Tell an heavenly heart how he may be rich, great and comfortable in the World, and it signifies nothing: but tell him how he may pitch his Tent nearest to the Ark and enjoy most of God, how he may keep peace and holiness within, and order his conversation aright to please God, and you will sooner win such a heart, than by all the choicest proposals of this life. Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? Psal. 119. 9. Who shall abide in thy tabernacle? Psal. 15. 1. Who will rise up for me against evil doers? Psal. 94. 16. How might I do to get a better heart? to be more rich towards God? Oh that one would give me drink of the waters of the Well of Bethlehem! 2 Sam. 23. 15. How might I do for some fore-tastes of the rivers of pleasure at the right-hand of God? and to eat of the tree of life in the midst of the Paradise of God, Rev. 2. 7. These are the most taking things with an heavenly soul; his choice, his delights and transcendent interests lie on the other side of this World, even within the borders of Immanuel's Land.

Seventhly, A heavenly heart is a heart that lives upon heavenly things, and is maintained by provisions fetched from Heaven, nourished up in the words of Faith, 1 Tim. 4. 6. desire the sincere milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby, 1 Pet. 2. 3. My meat and drink is to do the will of him that sent me, Joh. 4. 34. Earthly hearts are maintained by earthly comforts; like the Crows, they live on carrion; but heavenly hearts live upon heavenly things, they feed on the finest Wheat; and, like the Indian Bird, Ule malim, that lives upon the dew, and of the juice of Flowers and Roses; heavenly souls prosper best on heavenly pulse and water: Give me understanding and I shall live, Psal. 119. 144.

Eighthly, A heavenly heart walks by heavenly Rules; 'tis led by the Spirit of God, Rom. 8. 14. All the threatenings of men cannot upon choice bow him from his path-way of duty, Dan. 6. 10. nor the reason or allurements of men draw him with full consent into the way of sin, ch. 3. 18. Whatever comes of it he is at a point to keep the commands of God, Psal. 119. 106. It chooses to be governed by heavenly Laws. And we will walk in his paths, Isa. 2. 3. As for me and my house we will serve the Lrrd, Josh. 24. 15. Such a soul is easily persuaded by the evidence of truth; and will hear what the Spirit says: A little child shall lead him, Isa. 61. 6.

Thirdly, Then are earthly things done in an heavenly manner, when done to heavenly ends and purposes; to obey, please and honor God; when a person can approve his heart to an allseeing eye, that the great and chief end for which he takes up this or that calling, sets on any employment, is in subordinacy to these great ends, not to please men, to gratify his own lusts, to grow great in the world, to enjoy pleasure, ease, reputation, and interest here, but out of obedience to the Maker, Redeemer and Governor of this world, that God in all things might have his will and glory, 1 Pet. 4. 11. This is the ultimate end of all God's works, and should be of man's also. All employments run out of their proper channel, if they tend not to this Ocean of divine glory: As God is the Alpha, so he must be the Omega of every action; the first cause must be the last end. God hath made all things for himself, Prov. 16. 4. To him belongs the issues(as from death, so) of life, Psal. 68. 20. Nothing is further good, than it answers God's end; earthly ends spoil heavenly work, and heavenly ends puts an excellency on earthly work. Christians, be careful of your ends in all you do: 'Tis not enough to do things that are right, if you are not upright in them: That's unsanctified work which hath not holy aims, and God for its last end. To follow your callings, that you might live honestly in the sight of men; that you might provide for your own, and have a competency in the world to carry you comfortably through it, is lawful, as subordinate secondary ends, but not as your chief and last end, to which all your actions must be directed; that must be singly and supremely the pleasing and honoring of God as your highest end.

Fifthly, Another part of this Heavenly Trade is driven on & maintained in heavenly thoughts: Thoughts are the embryo and conception of actions, which also come under the cognizance and government of Religion. 'Tis a common, but carnal principle, and false assertion, that thoughts are free: They are free indeed from the inspection of men, but not from the eye and judgment of God, who searcheth the hearts, and weigheth the spirits, Jer. 17. 10. and will bring every secret thing into judgment, Eccles. 12. 14. Solomon tells us, The thoughts of foolishness is sin, Prov. 16. 2. Prov. 24. 9. And Peter tells us, that the thoughts of the heart need forgiveness, Acts 8. 22. not only sinful actions, but sinful thoughts are forbidden, Deut. 15. 9. and the very thoughts as well as words and lives of Christians, are to be brought under the obedience of Christ, 2 Cor. 10. 5. The Idea and platform of every considerate action, is first drawn in the mind and inward thoughts: No work is rightly done that wants praevious thoughts and consideration. Prov. 16. 9. A man's heart deviseth his way; he weighs, considers and deliberates about the way he is to go in, and the course of life he is to drive; he counts the time, cost, and everything that must go to his work. Prov. 31. 16. She considereth a field and buyeth it. So 'tis in this Heavenly Trade; there must be devising of the way, serious thoughts and considerations, how to manage it to best advantage; how to get in, and put off wisdom's goods; how to strengthen grace, to dispatch duty, to obtain the favor of God, and dwell in his presence; how to improve mercy, and how to ensure glory. The Heavenly Trade can never be carried on without heavenly thoughts. Inward working thoughts about God and godliness, are of wonderful use to further a holy life: They warm and cheer the heart under troubles, Psal. 94. 19. engage and fix it on God, and render his presence desirable: Heavenly thoughts fire the heart, and inflame it to holy actions, Psal. 139. 17. Psal. 39. 3. and are a choice preservative against sin, Psal. 4. 4. 'Tis greatly useful to increase knowledge, and attain to deep wisdom and understanding. Dan. 14. 4. Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall increase: That is, their thoughts shall be working on truth, busily employed to find out the meaning of the word, looking on one side, and on the other side (saith Mr. Fenner) and by this means shall come to a great thriving in knowledge. Men will never be religious to purpose, or be their crafts-masters in this Heavenly Trade, till they be more spiritual and heavenly in their thoughts. Christians, make conscience of your thoughts; they must come to judgment; wash your hearts from whence they come, Jer. 4. 14. and watch your thoughts whither they go; check your thoughts when they begin to wander; quicken your thoughts when flat; fix your thoughts when floating; spiritualize them when carnal; exercise them when slothful; set them on their proper and profitable objects, and hold them to their work in divine and heavenly meditation every day, which is part of your Heavenly Trade, and hath a mighty tendency to soul-enriching, Psal. 4. 4. Psal. 63. 4. Psal. 104. 34. Gen. 24. 63. Psal. 1. 2. Psal. 77. 12. Psal. 139. 8.

Meditation is a calling in the thoughts from its stragglings and undue employments, fixing them on, and holding them to their peculiar work: 'Tis the travel of the mind in the search of some spiritual good, from such things as duty and providence lay before it; it weighs things and actions in the balance of truth; it turns things up-side down, and looks on both sides, and through them, that it may take a right estimate of them: 'Tis the running to and fro of the cogitations to increase knowledge, Dan. 12. 4. Meditation sifts things and truths, to divide the flower from the bran, and truth from errors; it helps to a clearer and more sensible view of truth and excellency; with the Chymist, it extracts the spirits and quintessence of things; it warms the heart, and fires the affections, raises desires, engages the will, enlightens and enlivens the conscience, and helps to feed the soul on divine truths, to feast it with divine love; it draws nourishment from ordinances, sweetness from promises, instructions from the creature, and good from providences. Without Meditation a person cannot receive the good that's offered to him, or do the good that is required of him. The Word preached doth not profit hearers, for want of Meditation to digest it; threatenings, promises, counsels, encouragements, do not affect the soul, or effect their errand and message, for want of a serious and settled consideration of them. O what profit might Christians get to their souls, were more time spent every day in right Meditation! Believer, charge thy heart with this duty of daily Meditation, which is as needful as Prayer, Reading, and any acts of holiness, and allow some time constantly each day for this holy exercise of thy serious thoughts and contemplations. To meditate on God, his Word and Works; on the Soul, its being, immortality, duties, evils, and interests; on the the World, its vanity and emptiness; on Sin, its nature and issues; on Holiness, its excellency and blessed advantages; on Death, Judgment and Eternity, with whatever might yield instruction and profit: Urge thy conscience with the command of God, the practice of the Saints, the great necessity, and many advantages of this duty; consider the great and usual averseness of thy heart to it, which doth manifestly bespeak its spirituality and excellency; for the more nature is indisposed to a duty, the more of God is usually in such a duty: think also of thy manifold losses and disadvantages thou hast sustained by thy neglect of it, and pray hard for the spirit to help thy soul in the due performance of it; which hints I can only leave with thee without further enlargement, lest it should swell this Volume beyond its designed bounds.

Sixthly, If you would drive on this heavenly Trade, you must be keeping up heavenly converses every day, and upon every occasion: much of earthly Trades is carried on by earthly discourses, this way they drive bargains, and barter away goods: a great many words oftentimes go to chaffering, buying and selling: and so is it in this heavenly Trade; Religion is much advanced by a spiritual improvement of men's talk and converses; this way did the searers of God keep alive Religion in evil times, when other helps were wanting, Mal. 3. 16. Prov. 10. 21. By this souls come to be fed and nourished in their holy Faith, 1 Tim. 4. 6. A great deal of good or hurt comes by men's discourses. O the mischief Christians do to each other by their vain, carnal and earthly communications when they come together! Evil communications corrupt good manners, 1 Cor. 15. 33. Whose word doth eat as doth a canker, 2 Tim. 2. 17. This way does Satan put off much of his wares, even by Wisdom's Merchants, making them to weaken, cool, deaden, and corrupt one another's spirits, stir up, feed and strengthen each others corruptions, become temptations and provocations to one another to sin, by their sinful corruptions: 'Tis sad to think how the work of God ceases, and the work of Satan prospers this way: Persons come warm sometimes from a Sermon, and are soon cool'd by impertinent and vain discourses; come from secret duty, when their hearts are quickened, and raised, and presently deadened again by spirit-quenching discourses. O how many labors of the Saints and Servants of Christ, and how many strivings of the Spirit are overturned, and come to nothing by vain and rotten discourses! no wonder the Apostle tells us, The tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature, and is set on fire of hell, Jam. 3. 6. Through the organ of an unsanctified tongue doth Satan shoot his fire-balls of temptation into the hearts of hearers: are you afraid of that fire which burns down your houses? beware of that fire that burns down souls to hell. 'Tis no small part of a Christian's wisdom to speak a word in season, and to order (as his conversation so) his converses to edification: When the Apostle presses the Ephesians to wisdom, Eph. 5. 17. the next thing he advises to is holy conference, ver. 19. by men's language are they known of what Country they are; so are persons discovered, whether Citizens of Heaven, or the World, by their ordinary and desired language. 'Tis said of Augustine, he went not so willingly to a feast, as to a conference to reduce any that erred. He that is of the Earth, is earthly, and speaketh of the earth; he that cometh from Heaven is above all; and what he hath seen and heard, that he testifieth, Joh. 3. 31. He will be speaking of heavenly things, which he learnt of God: A good man out of the abundance of his heart bringeth out good things; for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh: The tongue is but the index and bucket of the heart, that tells men what things are within, and draws out of those deeps to others; men use to find out what metals are hid in the earth by the color of the sand which the waters wash away from the mountains: if the streams be low, the spring is weak; an empty heart yields empty discourses; By your words you shall be justified, or condemned: The tongue of the just is as choice silver, Prov. 10. 20. in that it is enriching to those that are near it. The tongue of the wise is health, Prov. 12. 18. It sendeth out sound and wholesome words to the strengthening of hearers: 'tis said of the Spouse, that her lips did drop as the honey-comb, honey and milk are under her tongue, Cant. 4. 11. And the roof of her mouth like the best Wine that goeth down sweetly, causing the lips of those that are asleep to speak, Cant. 7. 9. This doubtless is one reason of the little thrivings of Christians in communion this day, 'tis from their barren and carnal communications; this starves Religion both in thy own soul, and in those thou conversest with; 'tis not maintained by gracious converses, and soul-edifying discourses. Christians, lay this to heart; how can you bear the charge of all that decay in godliness this day upon your non-improvement of this part of your heavenly Trade?

Lastly, Then do you carry on the heavenly Trade, when you improve everything to heavenly advantages, getting good from everything you meet with, do, or enjoy. 'Tis so in earthly Trades, all men seek their gain from their quarters, Isa. 56. 11. endeavor to turn everything to some profit: And so should heavenly Traders be getting some spiritual good from everything that comes under their hand, and in their way, if ever they intend to thrive: this comports with the great design of God in all his administrations to his people, which is to do them good. Who fed thee in the Wilderness with Manna, which thy Fathers knew not, that he might humble thee, and that he might prove thee, to do thee good at the latter end, Deut. 8. 16. To this end are his providences directed: The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him, Ezra 8. 22. And this leads to the accomplishment of the promises towards Believers: I will set mine eyes upon them for good, Jer. 24. 6. I will not turn away from them to do them good, Jer. 32. 40.

All their occurrences are brought under a promise of working for good. All things, the best and worst things of providence, shall work for good to them that love God, Rom. 8. 28. And why is this? but that gracious souls should be expecting good from everything, every affliction, as well as mercy, that doth befall them; and be comporting in all their capacities with this design of God, by an improvement of all, to this great end of souladvantage: What more good, O Lord? was the usual saying of a godly man, when the Lord brought any new affliction upon him, with which he was much exercised, and from which he ever got some spiritual advantage.

For this end are gracious souls made capable to use their mercies, to bear and improve their afflictions to some spiritual good; they have a principle of grace planted in their hearts, and of divine light into their minds; and have received rules and instructions of purpose, that they might be able to reach this end: They are made men of wisdom for this end, that they might hear God in affliction, Mic. 6. 9. and see God in mercies; and are skilled in divine Chymistry, that they might extract the spirit of providences, and good of every condition, duty and mercy. 'Twas said of pious Mr. Dod, that he used to turn Earth into Heaven by a wise and spiritual improvement of all earthly affairs. A blessed metamorphosis! and an argument of excellent skill and high attainment in this heavenly Trade, to turn Copper and Brass into Gold, and to convert everything, the worst things to some good. This (Christians) is your privilege, duty and interest, so to manage every affair, condition, occurrence and experience, as to help on your soul-enrichings.

There are nine things especially which Christians should be careful to manage to some soul-advantage, to be getting good from them, to the furtherance of their instruction, meditation, mortification to sin, the world, and self; to the strengthening of their graces, raising their affections, quickening to duty, preparation for death, and every trial in the way to it; and for furthering their meetness for glory.

First, Privileges are one thing which Believers should be getting good from, to these great and noble ends of spiritual good. Every heavenly Trader hath some privileges which may afford soul-profit.

- There are Natural Privileges.
- There are Providential Privileges.
- There are Spiritual Privileges.

All which may contribute some profit to the improvers of them; Parts, Youth, Health, Strength, are part of Nature's treasure, and to be husbanded to the use and service of the soul: These are some of those talents the great Housholder gives to his Family, (though in different measures) for improvement, and singular mercies they are, if well used to the Donor's ends and directions. A humble use of Parts to the good of others, and setting of wit, memory, reason, with the choicest intellectuals, and richest endowments of the rational mind, on the service of the soul, 3 Epist. Joh. 2. making them hewers of wood, and drawers of water for the sanctuary of the Lord: A shaving and paring off of the excrements and froth of wit, that they may become Israelites, and devoted to the God of Israel, and spiritual uses, Deut. 21. 12. keeping them under the government of the spirit, is a good improvement of them in this heavenly Trade.

You that have Parts and habilliments of Mind, do not prostitute them to the pleasure of the flesh, and the service of sin, but resign them to the use of the spirit; towards your enrichings with true wisdom, and increases in the knowledge of God, which brings salvation. When sprightly Parts and sparkling Wit are inlaid with grace, then are they as Apples of Gold in pictures of Silver, Prov. 25. 11. O how amiable are these endowments of nature, when seasoned with grade, when perfum'd with Myrrh and Frankincense, and besprinkled with the Powders of the Merchant, Cant. 3. 6.

Youthful time is another privilege for souladvantage; 'tis the morning of the soul's day, the best and most useful part of time, when appropriated to God and divine uses: what advantage have such for warmth of affection, and dispatches of duty? whereas decrepit age, like an emerited Soldier, hath worn out its serviceable capacities; and as the setting-Sun, is attended with evening cold, and shadows, and the close of working useful time. O how unserviceable is old age for transacting the work of the new-birth, when Conscience is sunk down into the deeps of guilt! when the affections are clogged with the dirty things of this world, and preengaged to other Lovers; and when the marrow of natures strength has been eaten out by the wasting service of sin. So great and amazing a work is the salvation of a sinner, that it deserves a subject of the choicest capacities to be completed in, and transacted by: And then is youth profitably spent, when devoted to God, and taken up in the great matters of salvation. You that are yet in your youth and morning-time, let God have the spring of your time, the first-born of your strength, and first ripe fruits of your capacities; let not youthful pleasures have the flower of your time and abilities, leaving the bran for God and your souls.

You that have strength of body, and a healthful temper, put it to the best use for your heavenly interest. Are you strong to labor? work out your salvation; labor for the bread that endureth; you that have legs, use them while you have them, to carry you up and down after God. If you must eat bread in the sweat of your brows, let it be the bread of your Father's house. If you must rise up early, sit up late, break your rest, exhaust your strength, let it not be all for the world, let Christ have some of your strength, before all be gone; yea, if you have any, let Christ have all.

As there are natural privileges, so are there providential privileges also, which are the capacities that providence dispenseth to some, of doing and receiving good beyond others, as liberty, peace, plenty, with other outward mercies, all which are to be husbanded to the best advantage of your souls.

Have you Peace with men? improve it towards the obtaining and securing your Peace with God: Your firmest leagues with men will hold but a little while, if your covenant with God be broken; what can favor with men profit you, if you have frowns from God? If men sheath up their swords, and God's be drawn, thy case is dangerous, and full of trouble. Make this use also of thy present Peace, to prepare for future trouble, and to be the better armed when trials come; spend not all thy store upon thy present Peace and Comfort, but save some fragments for times of need. God gives thee a breathing-time, that thou mayest hold out the better in thy race; and spares thee a little rest, that thou mayest be the fitter for approaching trouble.

Have you Liberty? take heed of yokes of bondage, Gal. 5. 1. and soul-straitnings. If God set you at large, do not imprison yourselves to the world and carnal lusts: Is thy body out of prison? labor to get out thy soul also, Psal. 142. 7. Are thy feet enlarged? get thy heart enlarged also, and run the ways of his commandments, Psal. 119. 132. Make the most of your Liberty in doing service to God, in attending on his appointments, and in taking all opportunities of doing salvation-work, and enjoying salvation-helps: Be like your Lord, going up and down doing good, while you have opportunity, Joh. 12. v. 35. If you have spare time, or can redeem it by double diligence from your earthly business, lay it out for God and his people in religious duties, Christian visits, holy conferences: The time may come you may wish for such a privilege, and long to see one of these days of the Son of man.

Have you yet a liberal portion of the good things of this life? is your garner full, your table spread, your cup overflowing? lay in the sense of these mercies now, as winter-provision to warm your hearts then, when you may not have them to warm and refresh your bodies, and lay them out to refresh those that want them, that they may bless God for you, glorify God in you, and procure mercy for you in the day of need: Make not thyself a slave to thy abundance, but make thy plenteous comforts serviceable unto thee.

There are Spiritual Privileges too, the lot of some, and calls for great improvements. There are Personal Privileges, the State and Spirit of Adoption, justification of persons, purchased right to pardon and peace with God, freedom from condemnation, assurance of preservation in grace unto glory, with many gifts of grace and spiritual favors which thousands enjoy not. And there are Public Privileges of access to God, communion of Saints, a place within the walls of God's House, with variety of soul-provisions, an interest in the promises of God, the prayers and graces of his people, things of infinite worth, and purchased at no lower rate than the blood of Christ: You that are interested in those, come under great obligations to behold them with wonder, to hold them with trembling, and to use them with diligence and faithfulness. You that are planted in the Courts of the Lord, Psal. 92. 13, 14. be fat and flourishing; content not yourselves with bare privileges, with dogs to feed on dry bones, but get the marrow, juice, and fattening virtue of all your advantages. Do not with Lazarus, lie at the door of your rich Lord, the Dogs licking your sores, when you may go in and be healed.

Secondly, Ordinances are another thing which Believers should be getting spiritual good from: These are the golden pipes through which the Lord pours in the Oil of grace into his golden Candlesticks, and Gospel-Churches, Zach. 4. 12. Showres of Manna to feed his people in the wilderness, and on this side their own Country, Deut. 8. 16. These are the Churches breasts to fill and nourish her children unto life eternal, Isa. 66. 11. Gen. 2. 6. 10. Ordinances are the Mist, the River of Eden, by which God waters his Garden; Scriptures are the Mines, Ordinances are the opening of them, to such as dig for Wisdom. A considerable part of this Heavenly Trade is driven about these commodities; ply them well, that you may get large incomes of spiritual blessings through them: Take heed of sleeping at these breasts, or playing with them, lest the Lord put them up, or put you off; lie at the pool side, wait at the wells of salvation, and not only come, but draw out waters of life thence for your needy souls: For which four things are needful.

- Preparation.
- Obedience.

First, Prepare before you hear, get the room emptied, swept and garnished: For those provisions of Christ you are called to, bring your pitchers empty and clean, that God may fill them: Come not to clean food with a soul stomach, but get your hearts purged by sound repentance, and washed from an evil conscience, and renewed by the Spirit; for the new wine of the Gospel, 1 Pet. 2. 1, 2, 3. They must be new born babes, that receive the sincere milk of the Word, so as to grow thereby, Mat. 9. 17. If a dead Christ must be laid in a new tomb; Mat. 27. 60. surely a living Jesus will not come into an old heart, and rotten sepulcher. Spend some time before you go to hear, in searching your hearts, and reviewing your ways, in getting a deep sense of their vileness, and the exceeding sinfulness of your sins, that the fallow field of your hearts may be plowed up, and you sow not among thorns: Take heed you bring not a hard heart to hearing. When Thrasamund the Arian read Fulgentius's defense of the truth, he praised his wisdom, wondered at his eloquence, commended his humility; yet had his heart so hardened, that he could not submit to the truth. To help you herein, set prayer on work to beg down the Spirit's of assistance; bring your hearts to Christ by prayer, that he would make them clean: If he say, I will, be thou clean, thy Leprosy shall be cleansed. Prayer also helps you to suitable provision, and a blessing on it: Hearers prayers help Ministers to preach, and themselves to hear, 2 Thes. 3. 1. Souls never thrive better than when Ministers and Hearers be much in prayer for the Word of the Spirit, and Spirit with the Word. To pray well, is to study well Prayer (says one) is a messenger to fetch that holy seed out of the garner above: Prayer is the former and latter rain to make it grow beneath; pray continually if thou wouldst grow continually. After Christ had fed the multitude, he went up into a Mountain apart to pray. Matth. 14. v. 23. Secret prayer (saith Mr. Trap) fats the soul, as secret morsels feed the body; therefore it is said to be the banquet of grace, where the soul may solace herself with God, as Esther did with Ahasuerus at the banquet of wine, and have whatsoever heart can wish, or need require.

Secondly, Take heed how you hear, hear as for your lives, with holy attention, with fear and trembling. Ministers (saith Mr. Latimer) should preach as if Hell were at their backs, and hearers should hear as if life or death were in every word. Hear with holy affection; many were given up to believe a lie, because they loved not the truth, nor received the word in the love thereof, 2 Thes. 2. 10. Hear believingly; the Word preached did not profit, being not mixed with faith in them that heard it, Heb. 4. 2. 'Tis by faith the Gospel becomes the power of God to salvation, Rom. 1. 17. The Arm of God was not revealed on Israel, because his report was not believed by them, Isa. 53. 1. The Spirit is given out through the hearing of faith: Never expect to profit by hearing, till you join faith with hearing.

Thirdly, Keep the Word you do hear; take heed of letting slip the things you have received, Heb. 2. 1. Hold fast the truth that no man take your Crown, Rev. 3. 11. Be not forgetful hearers, but doers of the Word, Jam. 1. 25. Forgetful hearers will never be doers: Israel's disobedience was the fruit of their forgetfulness, Psal. 78. 10, 11. The reason of the Disciples trouble at the sepulcher of Christ, was said to be their forgetfulness; they had forgotten what he had said to them when he was in Galilee, Luke 24. 6. Bad memories have many times barren lives: Be much in after-prayer for the Comforter's help to keep the Word for you, and bring it to your remembrance: Prayer opens the heart to take in the Word; and prayer shuts the heart to keep in the Word: keep up meditation of the Word, Psal. 111. 91. This chews the cud, and gets out the sweetness and nutritive virtue of it unto the heart and life: This way the godly come to be as trees planted by the waters side, that bring forth much fruit in their season, Psal. 1. 3.

Fourthly, Obedience of the Word helps to profiting. The worth of Divine Truths is never fully known until they are lived upon; nor its virtue felt till we cleave to it in our conversation. Prov. 4. 6. Forsake her not, and she shall preserve (problem) love her, and she shall keep thee. Vers. 12. When thou goest, thy steps shall not be straitened, and when thou runnest thou shalt not stumble. O the sweetness, the pleasure, the strength, the blessedness that they lose who only look on truth, but do not live it! Strangers to a holy life meddle not with the joy that is wrapped up in the Word and Waies of God, Prov. 3. 17. Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. The Word of God yields out but half its sweetness, until it becomes the way and walks of men, Psal. 10. 11. In keeping them there is great reward. My witness is in Heaven, saith Mr. William Cooper, upon his death-bed, That the love of Jesus, and his people's souls, made preaching my pleasure; and I had no such joy as in doing God's work. They are blessed that do his Commandment; not only in that they have right to the tree of life, but in that they eat the pleasant fruits of it, and feed upon that hidden Manna unto which bare hearers are strangers.

Thirdly, Get all the good you can from Providences; from favorable Providences, and from frowning Providences: These are the North and the South winds, which the Beloved causes to blow upon his garden, Cant. 4. 16. that the spices might flow forth. Providences, whether prosperous or afflictive, are to saved souls but the fulfilling of Divine Purposes, and the accomplishment of precious promise, which are designed for the good of Believers. Observe the Providences of God if you would get good from thence. Observable things (saith worthy Mr. Blair) do follow them that are given to observation. Doth God bring thee under smiling Providences? get some good from them: In these the Lord writes legible characters of his Covenant-love to his people. O read the tenderness, love, bounty and faithfulness of God in them, and be affected! Get thy heart to write back letters of love and thankfulness to God again; entertain giving Providences with thanksgiving hearts, and the sacrifice of praise, 2

Chron. 29. 31. Let the Lord communicate with you concerning receiving as well as giving, Phil. 4. 15. If left-hand mercies flow in upon you, take heed lest those floods break their bounds, and carry away the banks of your affections and circumspection. Christians, 'tis a safe rule to fear your mercies as well as afflictions: There is usually less fear, and therefore more danger of professing friends, than professed enemies. 'Twas the prayer of Queen Elizabeth, To be delivered from her friends, as for her enemies she would take care of them. Further, if you have now a spring-tide of outward mercies, prepare for low-waters: The comforts of this world are not standing pools, but running streams, and rolling Seas, that ebb and flow; expect not too much from them; entertain your coming mercies as strangers, who have their time to go as well as come: The Lord gives, and the Lord takes, Job 1. 21.

Get good also from taking as well as giving Providences; be blessing God for them: There is more self-denial and pure love to God expressed in such acknowledgments, than in praises for bestowing mercy, Job 1. 2. Besides, divine grace runs as well through the empty channels, as broad streams of outward comforts: 'Tis the same hand of the Father that uncloaths, which dresses his children; the Fork as well as the Rake belongs to the Covenant of Grace and Peace; neither is love or hatred known by these things, Eccles. 9. 1. Some have never found more than when they have lost all: The Lord oftentimes makes men's losses their gains, and their gain of earthly things their losses: Saul lost his Asses, and found a Kingdom: Shimei found his servants, and lost his life: Place not then your happiness, no nor your comforts in these things: How many prick their fingers to get a few fading Roses, which as soon wither as they are plucked: Think well of God under scattering Providences, and believe he loves you as much when he removes your mercies, as when he gives them: Look to God in Providences; see whence those winds come that blow down your houses, and scatter your comforts; enquire wherefore God contends with you, Job 10. 2. Doth not that worm which devours your gourd, breed in your security, pride, unthankfulness, and abuse of them, while you had them? search out the cause of God's displeasure; justify God in it, and bear his indignation humbly; come down at his feet, kiss his rod, and hear the voice of it: This is to get good from the worst of Providences.

Fourthly, Get good from the world, and things thereof; by seeing its wiles and deceitfulness, its vanity and emptiness, Mark 4. 19. The world is a fading thing, the fashion of it passeth away and it is gone. Trades-men care not for over-much of those goods that are soon out of fashion, Eccles. 1. 2. O care not for the world, the fashion whereof soon passeth away! 1 Cor. 7. 31. The world is a dirty thing, 'tis hard to touch it, and not be defiled. Christians, be not like Swine, who love to run into the dirt; and if you would keep yourselves unspotted, take heed of the world. The world is a heavy ponderous thing; by faith make it portable, and more easy to be born, 2 Cor. 4. 17. that it may not clog your feet, and stop your race towards glory: Faith will soon lessen your burden, and mend your pace; it will turn brass, yea clay into gold, and make it light in carriage. The world is a strange Country to the Citizens of Heaven, get good from it, by living as strangers in the world, by making you long the more for your own home, by converting it to the service of your souls, and interest in glory. The Scorpions in Caria, when they sting, kill home-bred people, not strangers. Apollon. Be a stranger to the world, and it will not hurt thee. The world is a subtle Strumpet, shun her embraces, lie not in her bosom, stop your ears against her charms, and shut your eyes from her allurements. The world is an enemy, beware of it; when it promises, believe it not; when it kisses you, take heed of the sword in its hand, 2 Sam. 20. 9, 10. when it cries peace, peace, then fear swift destruction; set thy feet on its fair neck to keep it down; get it nailed to the Cross of Christ, and pierced to death with the sword and spear of the Spirit. Get good from every state and condition God puts you into, whether high or low, rich or poor: If you are above others in place, be above them in grace; if you enjoy more than others, labor to do more than others, Matth. 5. 47. The higher you are in the world, be so much the lower in your own eyes: The tallest Cedars bow most: Ships of the greatest burden draw most water, and go deepest: Exalted Angels rejoice to be ministering spirits: Yea the Son of God delighted in being the servant of men: Israel was a Prince, and prevailed with God, and yet counted himself beneath the least of all God's mercies, Gen. 32. 10. By how much the greater I am (saith Maximinus) so much the more I labor; and the more I labor, the greater I am. Paul the chiefest Apostle, and yet in his own eyes less than the least of all Saints, Ephes. 3. 8. Humble yourselves when God exalts you; and when you humble yourselves, God will exalt you.

Have you much of the world? take heed of puffings up; the more you have, the more you owe; the more you have of Earth, the less you may have of Heaven: The poor in the world may be rich in faith; and the rich in the world may be oftentimes poor in faith: If God give you much here, be fearful lest he give you your All here. When one offered Luther much gold, he protested God should not put him off with these things. 'Tis said of Gregory the Great, he could never read these words, Son, remember thou in thy life time receivedst thy good things, without horror and astonishment, lest having such dignities he should be excluded his portion in Heaven. Have you little in the world? you have the less to reckon for; you have the lesser temptations, the fewer briars and thorns to go through. Are you mean in reputation? you are so much the safer, and the more beneath envy. 'Tis more to you (said Mr. Rutherford to the Lord-Keeper) to win Heaven, being ships of great burden, and in the main Sea, than for little vessels that are not so much in the mercy and reverence of the storm. Are you low in the world? the more reason you have to lie low in your own spirits; a Prince's heart, and a beggar's purse do not well agree. Are you in want? make more use of Christ's fullness: 'Tis blessed misery that brings souls to Christ for mercy: Had it not been for affliction, Christ would have had but little company whiles in the world: The whole need not the Physician; the sick, the blind, the deaf, dumb, and possessed of Devils might bless God for their maladies, which were the occasions of bringing them to the Physician of their souls as well as bodies: 'Twas well for the poor Canaanite that her daughter was ill, for by that means she was put upon seeking crumbs, and while she asked for them, got the children's bread to boot, Matth. 15. 27, 28.

Fifthly, Get good from your Callings and Employments in the world, by preserving a sense of the snares and dangers that lie in the management of them. If men would take a strict survey of their Calling-carriages, and be true to their observations, they must needs confess there are many evils they are guilty of in the management of them every day; either idleness, or excess of labors, deceitfulness, earthliness, lying, cheating, selfishness, covetousness, carnal-mindedness, vain discourses, multitude of words, murmuring, unthankfulness, with many other sins of omission and commission, which they are exposed to in the pursuit of their Employments: Now when the experience and sense of this do keep them more humble and watchful against the occasions and appearances of such evils; when this helps to break and melt the heart before the Lord in prayer, fly to Christ in the sense of their weaknesses and inability to hold up under their temptations for all their help and grace to stand, Ephes. 5. 15, 16. And when they labor to keep a tender spirit in all their dealings, and a holy jealousy of their hearts in everything they do; exercising self-denial, and mortifiedness to the world, and things below, then they get profit from their Callings, Prov. 41. 3. Psal. 141. 3.

When they make their particular Callings to comport with, and subserve their general; when men's businesses in the world do not unfit them for, but are helpful in their religious duties, to keep their hearts in a meetness for spiritual service, even while they are in their earthly Employments, maintaining a walk with God in them, then they get good from their earthly Callings, Ephes. 6. 18. Titus 3. 1. Sometimes God blesseth your Callings, and makes your basket and store to increase; then to be enlarged in thankfulness, and preserve the memory of God's goodness, is not only your duty, but will sweeten the enjoyment of your mercies: With my staff I passed over this Jordan, and now I am become two bands, Gen. 32. 10. To love him more, and serve him better, with more cheerfulness and gladness of heart; this is profiting by your Callings.

Sometimes God blasts your labors, and crosseth your hopes, makes a breach upon your Trade, follows you with losses one after another: In this case to look to the hand of God, to search out God's end in all, to get good by it, to be the more weaned from the world, and to cease from earthly stays, is a profitable use of your Callings.

Sixthly, Be getting some good from your company you reside amongst, meet or converse with: The Lord offers, and souls may get much good this way: O the mercies that God deals out through men's company! 'Twas well for Rahab that ever the spies came to her house, for by that means she obtained the salvation of herself and family. What a mercy 'twas to the woman of Samaria, when she came to the Well, that she found Christ there, who instead of filing her pitcher with perishing water, by this means got her heart filled with the waters of life, John 4. 15? What good did the Disciples get by company in the way to Emmaus, who by that means had their cold hearts warmed, their weak faith strengthened, Luke 25. 15. to the 32. Others have had company fatal to them: Had it not been for Potiphar's house Joseph might have escaped temptation to uncleanness, Gen. 39. 7. And had it not been for Pharaoh's house, he had not learned to swear by the life of Pharaoh, Gen. 42. 15. As long as Peter kept with the Disciples, he was faithful and courageous; but when once he fell into evil company, and got into the High Priest's Hall, he presently fell into that fearful sin of denying his Lord and Master, Luke 22. 55. When they sate down together, Peter sate down amongst them. Christians, beware what company you come into, for the peace and welfare (if not the life) of your souls, is much concerned in it: Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, Ephes. 5. 11. Prov. 1. 15. chap. 4. 14, 15. Choose not wicked company for advantage sake, as Lot did with the loss of his goods, and hazard of his life, and a dreadful fall to boot, Gen. 19. 15. 36. Advantage was his end why he chose the Plains of Sodom, but loss was the issue of his choice: So Balaam for Balacks goods, run himself into those temptations that cost him his life, Gen. 31. 8. Go not into wicked company except duty call you; if you have God's warrant, you have his protection; and if by providence, or in the way of obedience, you meet with evil men, be good with them; [The Sun (saith Diogenes) visits kennels, and is not defiled.] either by taking an occasion to do them good, as the Israelitish Maid did to her Master Naaman, directing him to the Prophet Elisha for cure, 2 King. 5. 2, 3. Or by putting a stop to their sin, as David did. Psal. 75. 4, 5. I said unto the fools, deal not foolishly, and to the wicked, lift not up your horn. And as Judah sought to divert his Brethren from their wicked enterprise against Joseph, Gen. 37. 26, 27. Or by reproving their sin, as Nehemiah did the sin of the Nobles, Neh. 5. 7. Or by instructing them if ignorant, as Paul did the Athenians, Acts 17. 22, 23. But if they be such like Sons of Belial, that the thorns cannot be taken by hand, let them be thrust away, and get yourselves fenced that they hurt you not: Take heed of the least compliance with them in their sin. 1 Tim. 5. 22. Be not partakers of other men's sins; your own are heavy enough; silence in not reproving, with any signs of approving others sins, make them your own.

If you enjoy good company, take heed you miss not of good, or meet with evil from them: good men have their evils; great men are not always wise, Job. 32. 9. And 'tis easier to follow them down, than up the hill, and to imitate their vices, than their virtues; diseases are more communicable than health; men may impart their sickness, but cannot their soundness. O what advantage hath sin for its propagation, when it falls from the hands of men reputed gracious! The errors of good men are not only examples, but arguments unto others to sin also: If Peter play the hypocrite, other Jews dissemble likewise with him, Gal. 2. 13. and no less a man than Barnabas is carried away with their dissimulation. If they that are strong do but eat in the Idols Temple, the weak will eat the things offered to Idols, 2 Cor. 8. 10. O take care of the evils of good men, which like books published cum privilegio, vend the more. An Esau's garment will make a Jacob's voice to pass; and where good in any man is admired, evil is there seldom feared: take heed you follow no man further than he follows Christ, 1 Cor. 11. 11. Implicit imitation is as dangerous in practice, as implicit faith is in judgment: weigh their actions you intend to walk after; let no man's reputation be your warrant for imitation: Eminent persons are File-leaders, which way they turn, the File turns with them: The leaders of my people cause them to err, Isa. 9. 16. Men usually follow those they commend, and how much the greater they are with whom we converse, (saith Seneca) the more is the danger. Get good from good men, else their goodness is nothing to you: what truth you hear from them, receive; and as Mary did the Angel's words, so do you ponder their gracious sayings in your hearts, Luke 2. 19.

When you are in the company of those that are above you in wisdom and grace, be more swift to hear than to speak: The emptiest vessels make the greatest sound; and I have often observed in company, such as have most need to hear and learn, being self-conceitedly wise, will take up most of the discourse; and instead of drawing waters from deeper wells to fill their empty vessels, they will be pumping out that little they have: This surely doth not bespeak the modesty of such, and less becomes their profit. Origen, when a child, used to question with his Father about the sense of the Scriptures, and afterwards became a great Scholar. 'Tis the observing attentive Christian is usually the most knowing, thriving

Christian; who, with the Bee, gathers in the Summer, and gets honey from every flower it meets with; and in the Winter spends it. When you meet with empty vessels, 'tis your charity to be putting in, but when you come to deep wells, 'tis your duty and interest to be drawing out, by asking questions, and proposing doubts, as the young man in the Gospel did, Mat. 19. 16. and Nicodemus and the woman of Samaria, Joh. 3. 2. 4. ch. 4. 11, 15, 20. to Jesus Christ. The enquiring soul, if it be done in truth, and followed with obedience, will be the most flourishing soul.

Seventhly, Get good from your retirements as well as company; be never less alone, than when alone: Sometimes in pursuance of duty you must be alone; when thou prayest enter into thy Closet, Mat. 6. 6. Retire we must sometimes (saith Mr. Trap,) and into fit place to meet with God; solacing, and entertaining Soliloquies with him, as Isaac did in the field, Jacob upon the way, Ezekiel by the river Ulai, Peter upon the leads, Christ upon the mountains, Abraham in the grove in Beersheba, Gen. 21. 33. 'Tis no matter (saith the same Author) how mean the place be, so it be secret: where there is a Jeremy, a Daniel, a Jonah; a Dungeon, a Lions-Den, a Whale's-belly, are goodly Oratories. If you will not hear me, (saith Peter Moice) send me to my prison again among my toads and frogs, which wilt not interrupt me while I talk with my Lord God; Acts & Mon. 122. O how desirable is retirement with God to a soul that hath acquaintance with him! Antisthenes being asked what good he had got by Philosophy? answered, that I can converse with myself; much more is it thy interest to converse with God. 'Tis said of that pious man Mr. William Sedgwick, that when he was young, while the rest of the Family were at their Games and Dancings, he would be in a corner mourning. Mr. Greenham, when at any time he was sick, would suffer nobody to sit up with him, that so he might more freely converse with God. Psal. 119. 62. David would rise at midnight to enjoy communion with God. O the blessed seasons that gracious souls have had with Christ in their corners! how sweet have their stolen waters of life, and bread eaten in secret, been to their hungry souls! Prov. 9. 17. If the walls of this house could speak (said Mr. Hew Kennedy) they could tell how many sweet days I have had in secret fellowship with God, and how familiar he hath been with my soul; The fulfilling of Script. p. 442. The Lord doth usually unbosom himself most to his friends when he hath them alone. Hos. 2. 14. I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably to her, or speak to her heart, (as 'tis in the Hebrew:) Upon which words Stella hath this note, God needs no witnesses that he might speak to our souls; when God finds our heart alone, he presently comes in, and sups with it; and when he observes our soul withdrawn from the cares and carking thoughts of this World, then is his time to open his great wonders and secrets to it. Jacob was never more prevailing with God than when alone; then was the time he got the blessing, Gen. 32. 24, 29. Peter was alone in prayer with God when he fell into a trance, Acts 10. 10. His soul was as it were removed from the body for a time, (saith Beza) that he might converse with God. Elijah was alone in secret prayer, when the Angel brought him that refreshing feast, in the strength of which he travel'd in the wilderness forty days, 1 King. 19. 4. to v. 9. O what am I, (said Mr. Patrick Simpson, after he had been many hours in his Garden alone, wrestling with God for his deserted Wife) being dust and ashes, that the holy ministering Spirits should be sent by the Lord to deliver a message to me! telling one that overheard him, that he had had a vision of Angels, who did with audible voice give him an answer from the Lord of his Wive's condition; this Woman also to whom, upon importunity, he delivered these words, as she was approaching to the place where he lay on the ground, heard an affrighting noise of a great rushing of multitudes together, and with it a melodious sound: Such a welcome doth the Lord Jesus give his children sometimes, when he gets them alone into his Chambers and Wine-cellar. O the sweetness persons may find in their solitudes with Christ! Sampson turned aside when he saw a swarm of Bees and Honey in the carcass of the Lion, Judge. 14. 8. 'Tis said of Jerome, that living in the wilderness, he seemed to converse with Angels. Contemplation (saith Gregory) is the clearest day of internal light; then are their discoveries most, when in a holy silence with God alone: Retirement (Christian) is an opportunity put into thy hand of in-door work; 'tis God's call into the Mount: Exod. 34. 2, 3. Be ready in the morning, and come up in the morning unto Mount Sinai, and present thyself there to me in the top of the Mount, and no man shall come up with thee. 'Tis his command to a holy silence and cessation from other work, that thou mayest attend the most secret concerns of thy soul: Improve this time wholly in converse with God and attending the affairs of thy soul: This is a season to take an estimate of thy soul-state, to try the grounds of thy hope for eternity, to be searching into the secrets of thy heart, and taking a full review of thy past life, and former carriages, Psal. 4. 4. Then is the time to weigh thy mercies and duties, to call to mind God's dealings with thee, and thy carriages towards him; to be studying the wiles of Satan, and the ways of thy duty; the worth of godliness, the danger of miscarrying, and the blessedness of overcoming, and such like meditations. When you are riding, or walking, or sitting alone, invite the Lord Jesus to keep you company, to walk and converse with you; fill up your vacant hours with secret prayer and meditation; take heed of being at leisure from duty-employment, either in your general or particular Calling, or lawful Employments, lest being too much alone, the Devil strike in for company; no greater temptation can Satan find, than times of solitude not improved.

Eighthly, Get good from occasional objects and occurrences, which are not chance and fortune, as the blind world calls it; but the products of divine wisdom and pleasure towards Believers for their good. Albane receiving a persecuted Christian into his house, and seeing his holy devotion, and sweet carriage; he was so much affected with his good example, that he became both a Professor and Martyr; Bede. It was not by accident, but divine intention, that Melchizedek should meet Abraham to bless him, and Shimei meet David to curse him; that Moses should meet Jethro's Daughter at the well in Midian, and that David should meet the Egyptian in pursuing the Amalekites: It was God put it into the thoughts of Saul's servant to advise his Master to speak with the Prophet, by which means he obtained a Kingdom: 'Twas by divine disposal, that when Joseph was cast into the pit, the Midianites should pass by, and lift him up, and sell him to the Ishmaelites, and they to Potiphar. The Lord is carrying on some part of his work, some piece of mercy or justice, comfort or affliction by all these occurrences, in which his people should be coworkers with him, and be learning something from every passage of providence they meet with, and object they occasionally behold in their journeyings and pursuits of their occasions in the World: What fruitful meditations had Sampson from beholding the carcass of the Lion, and swarm of Bees in it in his journey to Timnah? Judge. 14. 8. 14. And our Savior from seeing the wither'd Fig-tree in his passage from Bethany to Jerusalem? Mat. 21. 19, to 23. What a lecture did Christ read to his Disciples upon viewing the goodly Buildings of the Temple? Luke 21. 5, to the end: He beheld the City, and wept over it, and improved it to some instruction to his Disciples, Luke 19. 41. He beheld people casting in gifts into the treasury, and makes improvement of it, Mark 12. 4. Some told him of the blood of the Galileans which Pilate had mingled with their sacrifice, and he makes a profitable use of it for his Disciples instruction, Luke 13. 1, 2. What Sermons hath Christ preached, when he took his Text from the waters of Samaria? Joh. 4. 9, 10. from the Manna given to Israel in the wilderness? Joh. 6. 26, 27, 31, 32. from the multitudes flocking after him for loaves? Christians, if you would grow rich in Spirituall, make some spiritual improvement of all you see, hear, meet with in your journeys, dealings, converses in the World: Thou walkest into thy Garden, get some instruction from the objects that thou castest thy eyes upon: Every herb in thy Garden preaches God to thee : Thou walkest into the Field, go with Isaac's heart, to meditate upon the creatures and providences of God thou beholdest there: Thou lookest to the Heavens, let it not be only as the Pharisees, to discern the face of the Sky, Matth. 16. 3. but to see the glory of God, and his handy-work, Psal. 19. 1. with the Chymist, extract some good from everything thou meetest with. 'Twas said of Jerome, he knew how to gather gold out of the dunghill, and honey out of weeds, leaving the poison for spiders. How will men dig into the bowels of the earth, rack the creatures, spend themselves to get a few shadows, and all the while do nothing to get the substance that endures! and this doubtless is one reason of soul-poverty this day; we trade not with creatures and occurrences that fall in our way to spiritual advantages: Beg spiritual skill and faithfulness to be improving all you see, hear, do or enjoy to soul-profit.

Ninthly, Get good from your falls and miscarriages: Physicians do sometimes make poisons medicinal, and so doth the Physician of of value make the diseases of his people turn to their health. Sin is the greatest evil, and yet redemption-grace works good out of it. David got good by his fall, it made him the more humble and broken in heart; drew out his heart in stronger cries after grace; made him more watchful for the future against the occasions of sin, Psal. 51. 7, 8. to the 12. Psal. 39. 1. Psal. 141. 3. Peter got good from his fall, by keeping an after-sense of the evil of it on his heart. Israel by their departure from God came to loath themselves the more in their own eyes, Ezek. 36. 31. And Ephesus, by a sense of their evil got this advantage, they could not bear evils in others, Rev. 2. 2. As sin abounds, so grace abounds much more, Rom. 5. 20.

Object. If souls may get good from sin, and where sin abounds, grace abounds much more: Then why should we be troubled for sin, and watching against it? Why may we not rather sin, that grace may abound, and do evil that good may come thereof?

Sol. The Apostle answers this objection, Rom. 6. What shall we say then, shall we continue in sin that grace may abound? God forbid; and proves by several Arguments.

First, That it cannot be that souls interested in Christ can live or allow themselves in sin; Because

First, They are dead to sin, and therefore cannot live any longer in sin, v. 2. dead men while so cannot live, but Believers are dead to sin no longer to live therein, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet › , amplius, never more to live in it; they may fall into it, be overcome by it; but to allow it, to design it, to make provision for it, and to take up encouragements upon choice in judgment, to continue in it; this cannot consist with men dead to sin, as all souls in Christ are; for they are baptized into the likeness of Christ's death, yea into his death, v. 3. That as Christ died for sin once to die no more, but was raised by the glory of the Father, v. 4. so they being really dead with Christ, should live no more in sin, but be perpetually dead to it; for this is the very end of Christ's death, to destroy the old man, the body of sin, the whole power and Being of sin in Believers, to be accomplished in its time and ways, v. 6. And Christ died in vain, and hath lost the great end of his death, if they that are in him can live any longer in sin; for he that is dead is freed from sin. 7. ‹ in non-Latin alphabet › , being put for ‹ in non-Latin alphabet › , by a Synecdoche, Piscat. that is, absolved from the obligation, servitude, dominion and guilt of sin; as an Apprentice is by Law declared free, or set free from his Master's rule and power.

Secondly, They that are in Christ are not only partakers of his death, and therein brought into a state of death to sin; but they are partakers of his resurrection, and by it instated in a life of holiness, v. 4, 5. that now they should live to God, which cannot consist with a life of sin, v. 11, 12.

Thirdly, They that are Christ's are brought under grace, under a Covenant of Grace, opposed to the Law as a Covenant of Works, and therefore cannot be any longer under the dominion and service of sin, v. 14. These two Covenants being in that respect contrary, they that are under the Law as a Covenant of Works, are in the flesh, and bring forth fruit unto death, Rom. 7. 5. and for that end are Believers set free from the Law, and brought under Grace, that they might serve God in newness of spirit, v. 6. and no longer serve sin.

Fourthly, They are become the servants of righteousness, set free from the service of sin, Rom. 6. 18. Your time under sin is out, and you have now no more to do with sin; you are another's servant, and therefore cannot return to the service of sin anymore; for you are now servants to God, not for a time, but forever; you have delivered over yourselves, sworn over yourselves to be the servants of God forever, and therefore cannot now serve sin: That's his first answer: You cannot, if in Christ, serve sin any longer, nor continue in sin that grace may abound: for if you can consent to live in sin, you are not under grace.

Secondly, You ought not to do it, if you are rational; 'tis not your concernment to sin, because sin is an evil thing.

First, Sin is the greatest slavery in the world, v. 16. You are servants to sin, and to Devils; sins are the works of the Devil, 1 John 3. 8. which Christ came to destroy; sin is evil in its state; 'tis drudgery, and in its nature 'tis filthy, abominable and shameful.

Secondly, It is attended with sad issues here; it brings forth bitter fruit, v. 21. It makes the soul ashamed when awakened, to see what he hath done, and it fills the soul with grief, horror and torment; it breaks your loins, makes you go halting to your grave; it makes you weary of your life, and fearful to die; it sets your teeth on edge, and fills your bowels with wormwood and gravel. O the dreadful effects of sin here! which makes it no way a souls interest to sin, 2 Cor. 7. 11. Psal. 51. 8. Psal. 38. 4. Psal. 119. 120. Psal. 55. 4. Lam. 3. 19.

Thirdly, As the work is bad, and fruits are evil here, so the wages of sin is death, v. 23. As soon as the work is done, they shall have their wages, which is always paying, and never paid; they shall be always dying, and never dead; whose worm never dieth, and whose fire is never quenched, Mark 9. 44. This will be the certain end of them that can choose sin, and live in sin, if God be holy, and his Word true. And can you then continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid.

O Christians! get good from your sins; to be ashamed of them, to grieve and mourn over them, to hate and loathe them, to pray and cry against them, to watch and strive against them, to fly to Christ for pardon over them, and freedom from them, to shun and avoid the occasions of them, to have no more to do with them, to seek and further the death and total ruin of them, to prize graces, and love Christ the more, to be more attentive to his instructions, and obedient to his commands, to bless God, and rejoice in Christ; when God doth in any measure keep you, or set you free from sin, to long for Heaven and Glory, that you may never sin more, to keep close to Christ, and abide in his ways, that you might be the more secured from sin, and fitted for glory, Ezra 9. 6. Zach. 12. 10. Ezek. 36. 31. Rom. 7. 24. Prov. 4. 14, 15. 1 Thes. 5. 22. Ephes. 5. 11. Ephes. 2. 5. 1 Pet. 2. 7. 2 Cor. 5. 8. Acts 11. 23. This is to get good from sin, and to drive on the Heavenly Trade: That's the second branch of Exhortation to Professors.

3. Counsel to Earthly Traders.

The third branch of Exhortation is to Earthly Traders, who meet with breaches and discouragements in the pursuits of their Earthly Trades. This is manifestly the case of England this day: The Lord blows on men's interests, makes breaches on their Trades, sends in wants as an armed man; Trade fails, a blast is on men's labors, and the Nation becomes poorer every day: This should be for a lamentation, but few lay it to heart; men murmur and complain; some are dejected and sink in their spirits, others seeing God plucking their Idols away, hold them the faster, become more close and covetous; others sink the deeper into the world, turn more earthly and excessive in their carkings and labors; others more griping and oppressive; but few in appearance look to God, and make a right use of this sore stroke. Now towards a better improvement of this providence, give me leave to propose to all such these few Counsels.

Counsel 1.

First, By your disappointments and losses in your Earthly Employments, be convinced of the transcendent excellency of this Heavenly Trade (which you have, it may be, in pursuit of those too much slighted:) There are no such issues of Wisdom's Merchandise, if duly followed: Religion breeds no such worms to devour its treasures; Riches and honor are with me, yea durable Riches and Righteousness: My fruit is better than gold, yea than fine gold, Prov. 8. 18, 19. There are no such hazards in the ways of God, as here in my earthly business I am exposed to: I labor hard, and can hardly live out; I sow much, and bring in little; I eat, but have not enough; and drink, but am not filled; I clothe me, but am not warmed; I earn wages, but put it into a bag with holes; I look for much, and it comes to little, and when I have brought it home, the Lord blows upon it, Hag. 1. 6, 9. But 'tis not so in that Heavenly Trade I have neglected; there are no such disappointments; they that sow to the Spirit, in due time do surely reap; they that labor for that bread, shall have it given to them. O how do Wisdom's Merchants prosper when I decay! their faces shine, their basket is blest; whatever they have in the world, 'tis enough for them; they eat their bread with gladness, and singleness of heart, and are freed from those anxious cares and fears I am almost consumed with: That's the best Trade, I now see it; when all fails, that holds; when others famish, that feeds; when others undo men, that enriches them: O blessed Calling! thou excellest them all. This is one good use of your earthly wastes, to see the excellency of Heavenly Treasures.

Counsel 2.

Secondly, See God in these afflictions that lie upon your Earthly Trades and Interests: Affliction cometh not forth of the dust, Job 5. 6. nor promotion from the East, or from the West, but God is the Judge, he putteth down one, and setteth up another, Psal. 75. 6, 7, 'Twas not the wind, the fire, the Chaldeans, or Sabaeans that undid Job, but it was God that took away, it was by his permission all those losses came, Job 1. 21. This helped Job to a due deportment under his troubles, that he saw God in it: He doth not fall out with man, or complain of the Devil; he is not angry with chance or fortune, with stars or constellations, but looks to God in all. Is there any evil in the City, and the Lord hath not done it? Amos 3. 6. I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil, Isa. 41. 7. Israel decayed in their estates, and God says, 'twas he that blowed upon them: Men usually lay it on the times; cry out of one, and other, but few look to God, and that's one reason men make no better use of this Rod, because they do not see it in the hand of a holy God: You will never lay your hand on your mouths, till you cast your eyes on God in these troubles, nor take a right way for cure before you see the hand that smites you, Psal. 39. 9.

Counsel 3.

Thirdly, Search out the cause of them: You will not find the remedy, till you see the reason. Shew me wherefore thou contendest with me, Job 10. 2. Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sin? let us search and try our ways, and turn again unto the Lord, Lam. 3. 39, 40. The Lord may well say to the Complainer, Friend, I do thee no wrong, Mat. 20. 13. And as David did to Eliab, What have I now done? is there not cause? 1 Sam. 17. 29. Hath God consumed your estate, broken your Trade, brought you to a morsel of bread? and is there not cause? There are several sins which do usually prove wasting to men's earthly interests.

First, A letting down of Religion, and decaying in this heavenly Trade, is usually followed with wastes on men's outward comforts and interests, as hath been already shewn: Godliness hath the promise of the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come, 1 Tim. 4. 8. When that flourisheth, all things go well: when Religion goes down, nothing prospers. 2 Chron. 24. 20. Why transgress ye the Commandments of the Lord, that ye cannot prosper? because ye have forsaken the Lord, he hath also forsaken you. For this letting down of Obedience did God threaten to make Israel waste, and a reproach; to send evil arrows of Famine, and to break the staff of Bread. Ezek. 5. 14, 16, 17. Because ye multiplied more than the Nations round about you, and have not walked in my statutes, neither have kept my judgments, neither have done according to the judgments of the Nations round about you; you have increased in abomination more than the Heathens and Nations round about you, and have not kept those Laws, and done that Righteousness which they have done: [Greenhill,] Therefore behold I, even I, am against thee:—Moreover, I will make thee waste, &c. Falling back in holiness will make men fall back in the world too, bring a curse on their abundance. Now this decay of Religion is the sin of this day, as hath been fully demonstrated.

Secondly, Declension in the worship of God hath been followed with declensions in men's interests: Mal. 1. 9. Israel brought to God a corrupt thing, the blind, and lame, and sick, the worst of the flock, and departed from God's Ordinances, and the Lord brought on them a curse; I will even send a curse upon your blessings, yea I have curs'd them already, because ye do not lay it to heart. To give glory to God, (saith Cocceius that honor and worship that is due to him: They had corrupted God's worship, and God corrupted their seed, Mal. 2. 3. I will destroy your fruits before they are ripe; which Cocceius thinks was fulfilled in that great famine in Claudius his days mentioned Acts 11. 28. They had made the service of God contemptible, Mal. 1. 7, and God made them contemptible: Chap. 2. 9. Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, 〈in non-Latin alphabet〉 according as you have not kept my ways, but have been partial in my law: you have cast dung on my Ordinances, (for such are corruptions, 〈in non-Latin alphabet〉 in God's worship;) and I will spread dung on your faces; Mal. 2. 2. Even the dung of your solemn Feasts, excrements. I will instead of seed throw so much dung upon you, even the excrements of your corrupt service; as the defilement thereof shall even overcome and ruin you: For these corruptions in the worship of God, did God stretch out his hand over Israel, and diminish their ordinary food, delivering them to the will of them that hated them: Ezek. 16. 26, 27. I have cut thee short of thy allowance, I have diminish'd thy portion, [Greenhill] thy lawful things, Sept. God's worship is his name, by which he is known and distinguished from all Idols, Exod. 20. 4. his glory, Rom. 1. 23. To corrupt his worship, is to defile the place of his Throne, Ezek. 43. 7. and to defalcate, and cut off his tribute and revenues from the earth: And no wonder if God blast their Trade, who adulterate his Treasure.

Thirdly, A covetous with-holding from God turns away the blessing of God on men's labors, and tends to poverty. Prov. 11. 24. There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that with-holdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. Many think that lost which is laid out for God, and be-think nothing but what goes to pious uses. O how sparingly do most sow, as if they thought their seed cast away! and thence 'tis they reap so sparingly, 2 Cor. 9. 6. Men's former charity, rather like showers than streams, are dried up; and therefore are God's showers withheld also: expenses for God having been many, seems now burdensome, through men's self-love and unbelief. While Alexander had hope for more, he never wanted a heart or hand to part with the Frankincense and Gold he had: certainly men's Faith fails when their Charity fades: Few in their scarcity dare, with the Widow of Zarephthah, give the first cake to the use and service of God, 1 King. 17. 13, 14. No wonder the barrel of Meal and cruise of Oil fails; 'tis Christians weariness in well-doing, and defectiveness in scattering for God, hinders their reaping and gathering, Gal. 6. 9. This was one of those sins that brought a curse and devourer on Israel's increase, Mal. 3. 9, 10, 11. and is still as pregnant of blastings and mildews as ever it was.

Fourthly, Greedy desires after the World are oftentimes followed with disappointments: Ye looked for much, Hag. 1. 9. and it came to little, (in non-Latin alphabet) . Sept. To look with desire and affection. 'Tis mercy in God, when men's hearts run too fast after the World, to lay some blocks in their way, to hedge it up with thorns, that they might not overtake their Lovers . Hos. 2. 6. Thorns in men's way is safer than spears in their bowels, and that would have been the issue of such Lovers when they meet. Covetousness is the Hydropick distemper of old aged profession: to cure which, the great Physician hath providentially prescribed abstinence, and in his holy jealousy hath made men to read their sin in their punishment. The Lord sees it dangerous for his people to have much of this World, because it becomes a snare to their souls; They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, 1 Tim. 6. 9. Earthly things are the very bane of Religion, they entangle men's feet, and keep them from attendance on God in his appointments. The invited guests had no leisure to enjoy refreshments for their souls, because of their interrupting interests of this World, Matth. 22. 5. The things of Heaven seem light to such, compared with their other things: They made light of Christ's invitation, and put men on pleading excuses for neglect of God, and on justifying their omissions of holy duties: They began with one consent to make excuse: Christ and his people would have more of men's company, if the World had less of their hearts.

These earthly things do not only hinder men's duties, but their thrivings also under privileges: 'Tis the cares of this World, and deceitfulness of Riches, that choke the Word, and make men unfruitful, Matth. 13. 22. They make careless, sleighty, forgetful hearers; they hinder convictions, quench the motions of the spirit, take away the tastes of divine sweetness, and make all the attempts of Grace fruitless: They take away the heart from God and spiritual things, and so nourish formality and hypocrisy in profession and duties, causing men to draw near with their mouths to God, when their hearts are far from him, Ezek. 33. 31. Isa. 29. 13. This made Judas, Ananias, Demas, Simon Magus such hypocrites in Religion, because they loved this present World, 2 Tim. 3. 2, 5. 2 Tim. 4. 10.

This weakens faith, blinds the mind, starves the affections, rules the will, and so man's all the royal forts of the soul against Christ; by which the salvation of that soul becomes exceeding difficult.

And they make provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof, feeding the carnal mind, and yielding such nourishment to sin, as that it always resists the Holy Ghost, wins the day, renders damnation sure to all that are not by a mighty hand redeemed from these spiritual enemies; so that it becomes in such a case needful to starve earthly desires, by a remove of those things that feed and maintain them; and men may look upon those afflictive providences on their interests, as the procurements of their earthly affections: Hastening to be rich, hath poverty at the heels, Prov. 28. 22.

Fifthly, Unfaithfulness in men's Callings puts them out of the way of blessing, and ushers in wastes on their interests, Mic. 6. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. The Lord had a controversy with his people, v. 2. and till this was taken up, all their religious services were to no purpose; sacrifices and duties could not prevail, or stop his displeasure, till their sins were removed, v. 6, 7. 'Twas not to wait on God in public duties was all that he called for, but to do justice, show mercy, and to walk humbly with him, wherein they had been defective; and therefore had he brought a rod upon them, v. 9. he had made them sick in smiting them, and would make them desolate, v. 13. They should eat, but not be satisfied; and there should be a casting down in the midst of them; they should be blasted in their labors and interests; they should sow, but not reap; tread the Olive, but not anoint themselves with it; have sweet Wine, but not drink it; and then comes to reckon with them, wherefore this was brought upon them; ver. 10, 11, 12. Are there yet the treasures of wickedness in the house of the wicked? and the scant measures that is abominable? Should I count them pure with the wicked balance? and with the bags of deceitful weights? for the rich men thereof are full of violence, and the Inhabitants thereof have spoken lies, and their tongue is deceitful in their mouths. They were full of wickedness, and among the rest, were false and deceitful; they did not walk humbly with God, nor justly with men, but were deceitful in their Callings, had false weights, scant measures, were injurious to others, and not just and faithful in their dealings; some oppressed, others defrauded; such as were over others were cruel task-masters, exacting their labors, Isa. 5. 8. 3. grinding the faces of the poor, eating them up as bread, Psal. 14. 4. by defrauding them of their due, keeping back the hire of the Laborers by fraud and injustice, Jam. 5. 4. which they do (saith one) who give them not a proportionable hire, working upon their necessities, sucking out the strength and sweetness of the Laborers, Dr. Manton. A sin that cries in the ears of the Lord of Sabbaths, cries out aloud, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, and their groans are entered into his ears, as a God of vengeance to requite it, and to give his poor a Sabbath, and rest from their oppressions: A sin that God will surely and severely punish; He will be a swift witness against them that oppress the Hireling in his wages, and turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of Hosts, Mal. 3. 5. Sins join'd with Adultery, Sorcery, and Swearing; provocations in God's ears, and actions that plainly show no true fear of God in such persons that dare oppress their poor Laborers, changing their wages as Laban did Jacob's, Gen. 31. 41. These God will surely take in hand; he will be both Judge and Witness against them; he will not delay neither, but proceed speedily to sentence and execution against such as oppress their poor laborers: Of all oppression, the oppression of the poor is greatest, and carries most cruelty in it, to tread on them that are down already, and abuse them that have no helper; to take the bread out of their mouths which are ready to starve, and to defraud them of their wages, which is their life, and God calls it down-right robbery, Levite. 19. 13. To build up their houses, and raise up estates upon the ruins of the poor laborers, is to lay the foundation in blood, and hath a woe pronounced against it from the Lord of Hosts, Hab. 2. 9, 10, 11, 12. This is one of those sins which bring a people down to the ground, and make them desolate: Ye have eaten up the Vineyard, the spoil of the poor is in your houses; what mean ye that ye beat my people to pieces, and grind the faces of the poor? saith the Lord of Hosts. Her gates shall lament & mourn, and she being desolate, shall sit upon the ground, Isa. 3. 14, 15, 26. This is a God-provoking, and an estate-wasting sin, and one of the great, visible, crying sins of this day.

Sixthly, Another reason why God consumes the interests of men, and makes a breach on their Trade, seems to be this; That by this means he might bring them down to his foot, and bring them back to himself: Prosperity in men's interests feeds their pride, and makes them too high for God's use and pleasure; riches do puff men up: Thine heart is lifted up <...> ; thy riches, behold therefore I will bring <...> upon thee, the terrible of the Nations, and <◇> shall draw their sword against the beauty of <◇> wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness; th•shall bring thee down to the pit, they shall destroy thy riches wherein thou gloriest, and countest thy beauty, Ezek. 28. 5, 7, 8. Men are apt to glory in their riches, and to give that respect to them which is due to God, and this he will not bear, but comes out in indignation against men's Idols, Jer. 9. 23. Abundance of earthly interests doth also unfit men for God's use and delight, rich in goods, and poor in grace; prosperity in the world cools men's hearts towards God, and lames their feet in his way: 'Tis the poor of the flock that waits on God, Zech. 11. 11. that press his Vineyard, and bear the heat and burden of the day, Jer. 52. 15. When men grow full, they are lazy; & when great, they become fearful to adventure for God: Give me thy shield (said Epaminondas to his servant, when he had got a great sum of money) for now thou art grown rich, I am sure thou wilt not adventure thyself into dangers. Smyrna was the poorest of the seven Churches in Asia, but yet was richest in grace and serviceableness for God. I know thy poverty, but thou art rich, Rev. 2. 9. This may be one reason why the Lord makes this Nation poor, that he might by this make them pure, he melts away our dross, that we may be the more refined, and takes away our Lovers, that he might come in the room of them: I will hedge up thy way with thorns; she shall follow after her Lovers, <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <...> not overtake them; and she shall seek <...> shall not find them; then shall she say, <...> go and return to my first husband, for then it <...> better with me than now, Hos. 2. 6, 7. Men •om return to God fully, till stripped of other •mforts; nor see God to be best, till their con•ion in the world be bad; and therefore doth God remove these mountains of earthly interests, that his people may the better see and go after himself.

Counsel 4.

Fourthly, If God hath made breaches on your Trade, get the breach between God and your souls composed: Hos. 4. 1, 2. Hear the Word of the Lord ye children of Israel, for the Lord hath a controversy with the inhabitants of the Land, because there is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the Land; by swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing, and committing Adultery; they break out, and blood toucheth blood: There's a controversy between God and a sinning people (and such are we:) Sinners contend with God, & God by afflictions contends with them, and till this controversy be taken up, there's no peace. And if ye will not for all this be reformed by me, by these things, but will walk contrary to me, then will I also walk contrary to you, and will punish you yet seven times for your sins, Levite. 26. 23, 24. Hear the Word of the Lord: Lay this to heart, they that strive with him shall perish; there is no contending with God; bow we must, or break, return, or be ruined: Wash ye, make ye clean, put away the evil of your doings, Isa. 1. 16. Get washed away your blood by sound Repentance; get into Christ's blood by saving Faith; set upon a thorough reformation, personal, family, public, each one in his place, help to carry out the uncleanness of thy heart, hand, house and land to the Brook Kidron, 2 Chron. 29. 16. Get tradingsins removed, if you would have trading mercies enjoyed: Take every man his Censer, and stand in the gap; pour out strong cries for returning-mercy, that the Lord would cease from his fierce wrath, and turn again, and heal our Land, and bless our substance, accept the work of our hand, and dwell in our Land.

Counsel 5.

Fifthly, Get advantage from decays in your Earthly Trade, to further your Heavenly Trade; gather materials from your earthly ruins, for your heavenly building. Christians, there's a great deal of good you may get from these evil things in the world, to quicken your pursuit after the things of Heaven.

First, By your earthly losses you may be convinced of the vanity and uncertainty of all things below God: Men are apt to take up too much pleasure in their booths, till God sends a devouring worm and consumes them; and to sit down under their shadows with great delight; and therefore doth God make them like shadows to fly away; what expectations do men raise from their swelling-comforts, thinking their mountains are made so strong, they shall not be moved, till the Lord by some levelling providence soon corrects their fond opinion! and what dependencies do we usually take up on those uncertainties, leaning so hard on our reeds, till they break under us, and send splinters into the arm which stays upon them? O the contentment, pleasure, profit, men fancy to be in creatures, friends, relations, honors, estates, before by some killing stroke they see themselves to be deceived! What mercy is it then to meet with disappointments in these groundless hopes, that we may come to see before it be too late, what poor, empty, perishing things all the wares of this lower world are! This way David came to have his error seasonably corrected. And Solomon, by a serious review of past enjoyments, comes to see that all was vanity and vexation of spirit, Eccles. 2. 1. Surely every man walketh in a vain show; they are disquieted in vain; he heapeth up riches, and knoweth not who shall gather them, Psal. 39. 6.

Secondly, Divine rebukes on men's earthly interests, help them to a discovery of those sins that procure them, Deut. 31. 17. Afflictions are Christ's clay and spittle to open his people's eyes, and to bring them to see those evils that have brought those deaths upon their comforts, and breed those worms that have destroyed their substance. Times of correction, are times of instruction, Job 36. 8, 9. When Jacob's Sons were cut short of their provisions, reduced to great distress, and plunged in sore dangers, then they thought upon their sin, and wrong done to their brother Joseph, Gen. 42. 21. Then they said one to another, verily we are guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us, and would not hear, therefore is this distress come upon us: Whence one hath this note, Affliction is a dark condition, yet it brings much light into the soul. Men come to read their miscarriages best by the fire-light of affliction; then Manasseh knew that the Lord was God, 2 Chron. 33. 13. Now the soul comes to see his abuse of these mercies he hath lost, his inordinate love to them, and wanderings from God, and this helps to after-wisdom, and greater freedom from these entanglements for the time to come, which is no small advantage to future godliness.

Thirdly, By this loss of earthly things, the soul comes to see a necessity of looking after, and ensuring better treasures: Heb. 13. 14. Here have we no continuing City, but we seek one that is to come. Uncertainties on Earth should put souls the more to look after Heaven. The Prodigal never thought of returning till all was gone, Luke 15. 14. to verse 18. The Steward never considered how to secure his future state, till goods were wasted, and Stewardship in danger of removal, Luke 16. 1, 2, 3, 4. Think of swimming ashore (said Mr. Rutherford) after a shipwreck. 'Tis a mercy in this stormy Sea to get a second wind, for none of the Saints get a first. This is advantage indeed, when having nothing, you seek to enjoy all things; and when the world flies from you, to pursue Heaven the faster. Could a Heathen say, I never gained more than when I lost all; because his shipwreck became the occasion of obtaining knowledge; and will not you Christians by your earthly losses be provoked to make after heavenly interests?

Fourthly, Losses in the world have an advantage through grace to loosen the heart from the world. Afflictions on men's estates are like wormwood on the breast, that tends to wean the hearts of God's children from them: Love of the world hath been the sin of this Age; and the shipwreck of worldly things is the likeliest way to cure it; this disease is best conquered by fasting. Absence of Lovers is sometimes the way to starve affections; and poverty with distress is God's usual method to chastise men's wanton affections to this world. Afflictions when sanctified, are Sanctuary-fire to purge away the dross of our affections, Mal. 3. 3.

5ly. Soul-enlargement is another fruit of sanctified straits, and so a help to the heavenly trade. Christians are never fit to make any speed in the way to Heaven, until their hearts be enlarged, Psal. 119. 32. Enlargements in the world are oftentimes bonds to the soul: He that hath most of the Earth, hath usually least liberty for Heaven. When the Lord cuts short the interest of his people, he doth but knock off golden fetters from their feet, that he may bring their soul out of prison. Afflicting Providences are God's dieting his racers, that they may be more longbreath'd, and swift in their run towards glory. O how imprisoned are redeemed souls in the many things of this world! they cannot have time to pray, read, hear, confer for the entangling-affairs of this life, till God by some deaths upon their employments sets them at liberty. Removes of worldly treasures are but the taking off of a heavy cloak-bag from the shoulders of Zion's Travelers, that they may the more comfortably travel to their journeys end. Good souls, whiles crowded with earthly businesses, are like persons in the midst of a thicket, and thorny grove, when they would be going forward, one briar hangs in their skirts, and another thorn stops their way; so that when God takes off their interests, he doth but cut out a way for his children to pass the more comfortably and swiftly through the brakes of this world, and lighten the vessel that it might sail faster and safer to its designed port; and is not this advantage?

Sixthly, Sweeter relishes of heavenly things are to Believers the blessed issues of the world's bitterness: Harsh Providences on earthly comforts make heavenly things the more pleasant. Men sometimes engraff sweet fruit on crab-treestocks, and God gives honey to his children at the top of the rod, Psal. 94. 19. [The thorn is one of the most cursed, and angry, and crabbed weeds, and yet out of it springs the Rose, Rutherford.] The sweet-meats of this world do too often put Christians pallats out of taste; to cure which, doth the Lord dish out his daintiest meat with sour sauce: Heavenly things never relish better, than when there is less sweetness in the creature. What a value did David put upon spiritual things when stripped of all! Psal. 63. 1. Gospel-comforts will not down with such as are choke'd with the world's delicacies; but when once the Saints are emptied of the world by cross providences, then is Christ precious: & is not this a help to Heavenly Traders? O then! the more crosses you meet with in the world, the more haste do you make to your Crown. Doth the world fly from you? pursue Heaven the faster. Doth gain fall? then advance godliness: And if your gettings from Earth be small, let your layings out for Heaven be great. And thus much for the third Branch of Exhortation.

4th. Advice to such as are fallen back in Religion.

Fourthly, A word to such as have begun this Heavenly Trade, and are fallen back: This is the case of some, and may be of more in this hour of Temptation and Apostasy: There are some have begun in the Spirit, and are now ending in the flesh; who have made a fair show, seemed to be somewhat, and like blazing comets, drew the eyes of admirers on them for a time, and then fell down to the Earth. Some that have left the very form; others that have lost the power and life of godliness: Many have laid down their Lamp; but more have spent their Oil, and are almost come to a snuff: Some have shut up shop, are quite gone, and have taken their leave of Religion, resolving to return no more, unless safety, credit and interest return with them: Others yet stay, keep open shop, but have little goods; decay daily, and are upon the breaking hand; a waste is on their interests, they have lost their first love, decay'd in spirituals; faith, hope, love, zeal, delight in God, and liveliness for him are quite lost; as hath been demonstrated in the use of Lamentation. The design of this head is only to offer some advice towards the recovery of decayed broken Traders: In which, as hitherto, for better illustration I shall keep to the metaphor in the Text.

Advice 1.

My first Advice to such in order to their recovery, is to be deeply affected with their evil case.

First, Consider, 'tis no small change for a person that hath lived well, been in reputation with God and men, fared deliciously, been used to the dainties of God's house, and delicacies of his love; have tasted the heavenly gift, and the powers of the world to come; now to be brought to penury, and scarce meet with a sweet morsel from day today; to be put off with husks and dry bones, and the crumbs that fall from their Lord's Table; to stand at his door, or to wait without for some scraps, when the friends of Christ, and Wisdom's thriving Merchants, have their marrow and fat things; this is a great change.

For such as were wont to have a place amongst them that stand by, to converse with the Father of Spirits, to be let into the Presence chamber, and have the visits of the Comforter, and spiritual fellowship of Saints: Now to be laid aside, and scarcely looked upon with a divine glance from day today, no intercourse with God, or fellowship with the Spirit, from one Lord's day to another, but to be only company for formalists and hypocrites, and such as are without; this is a great change. O get thy heart deeply affected with it!

Secondly, Think also how unlovely, offensive and displeasing an object in the eyes of God, a withered, decayed Professor is; his soul takes no pleasure in him, Heb. 10. 38. He doth not care for the company of such, they are a burden to him, he loves no more to see them, than men do dead corps in their houses, and rotten trees in their garden; he bethinks the place they stand in as cumbring the ground, Luke 13. 7. he counts them unworthy of the Kingdom of God, having put their hand to the Plough, and then look back, Luke 6. 62. Nothing more troubles his soul, than a lukewarm temper, that was once burning in love, but now is neither hot nor cold; such ride on the stomach of Christ, and make him down-right sick, till he hath vomited them out into the dunghill from whence they came; and is not this matter of trouble to a sensible heart? Rev. 3. 16.

Thirdly, Such have little desirableness in the eyes of men also. Who cares to deal with broken Merchants; or keep company with spendthrifts, that have wasted their estates, and are come to nothing? no more do gracious souls care for converse with backsliders. Decayed Professors are like broken vessels in whom there is no pleasure; and as a withered hand, or broken bone in the body, which hath lost both its usefulness and beauty. A broken Trader in Religion is valued by none; the men of the world cannot endure him, because he hath been seemingly godly; and Saints cannot love him, because he is not really gracious: Such, like Absalom(when hung by the hair) lie between Heaven and Earth, as unworthy of either; and as a person held in a strait passage, cannot go forward nor backward; he cannot go far enough to keep pace with the profane, nor go back to fill up his place with the pious; the Saints reject him, the wicked will not receive him: In such a pitiful case is a withered decayed soul, he hath no comeliness in him for which he should be desired.

Fourthly, They are the greatest losers of any who break in Religion; for they not only lose their own goods, but others also; their talents; graces, privileges and experiences, are their Lord's goods, which they have wasted in riotous living; they lose what they once had, what they seemed to have, or were fair for; and they lose what they hope to have, Luke 16. 1. Mat. 25. 29. 2 Epist. Joh. v. 8. Gal. 3. 4. All their enjoyments, tastes, comforts, frames, experiences, are lost: All their profession, faith, love, conscience, are shipwrecked: All their duties, labors, sufferings, come to nothing, if they are not recovered again to repentance. Here men estimate their losses to be great, from the quality, variety or abundance of the things they lose; all which are yet but temporal; but the Treasures that Professors are in chase of, and which they shall surely have, if they be sincere and faithful to the death, are eternal; of all which, by their backslidings (if uncur'd) they are deprived: O who can count the sum, and value the worth of those glorious things they fall short of, who fall back, and go down in Christianity, till they come to nothing!

Fifthly, Their case is dangerous also, and their wound hardly healed; not one of many that fall back in Religion, if they go far, recover again. Joh. 6. 66. From that time many of his Disciples went back, and walked no more with him. When Judas, Simon Magus, Hymenaeus, Alexander, Demas, went off from Christ, they returned no more: John tells us of some that went out from them, and thereby declared that they were not of them. 1 Joh. 2. 19. They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us. The Apostle speaks not of such as fall out of infirmity, falling in the way, which gracious souls may do, both falling into some sin for a time, as Peter, and fall back by some abatements of grace, as the Church of Ephesus, yet be recovered; such he intends not here; but those that fall out of the way, both totally and finally, these recover no more.

Quest. If persons that fall back in Religion after a high profession, may never be recovered again; how may one know if he find decays, and falling back in Religion, whether he be one of those that shall never be healed or recovered more? This is my case, I find great declensions in my soul and conversation, and I fear I shall never be restored, but wax worse and worse, and perish at last.

Sol. 1. First, Are not thy declensions thy choice, upon judgment and consent, but against the standing bent of thy heart? the renewed purposes of thy soul through Christ: Thy error is not thy aim, thou dost not deliberately contrive thy departure from God, but hast a secret would-not against every backsliding; then thy backslidings shall be healed again, Psal. 119. v. 10. Rom. 7. 19, 25.

Secondly, Are thy backslidings and spiritual decays thy soul-trouble, and restless burden, because of thy distance from God as the God of grace, and Father of thy mercies; and because of the injury thereby done to thy graces and inner man, and from an enmity in thy nature against sin? Then there is hope in Israel concerning this, that thy backslidings shall be healed, Rom. 7. 24. Psal. 5. 1, 7. Luke 15. 21. Gal. 5. 17.

Thirdly, Are thy backslidings after thy Effectual Calling, and thy sincere choice of God to be thy peculiar and alone portion? Thou canst appeal to the searcher of hearts, that thou hast taken the Lord to be thy God and only Treasure here, and to all eternity to be thy last end and chiefest good; and hast taken Christ to be the only way, truth and life, thy Lord and righteousness; and hast made a full and actual surrender of thyself and thy All to God in exchange, to be presently, unreservedly, and eternally his, and not thy own, to be led and governed by him only: If so, thy after-errors cannot make void this Covenant, but are under a promise of healing; such cannot sin unto death, because the seed of God remaineth in them, 1 Joh. 3. 9. They are undertaken to be kept, that they should not totally and finally depart from him, Jer. 31. 18. Isa. 57. 18. Jer. 3. 14, 22. Hos. 14. 4. Jer. 32. 40.

Fourthly, Art thou restless in thy backslidings, until the Lord doth heal thee? thou canst give him no rest till he establish thy soul, and be as the dew to thy dry and barren heart: When God sets a soul a crying, it's a sign he will hear: Jer. 30. 15, 17. Isa. 19. 22. A man (saith Mr. Dod) can never be in a bad condition, except he hath a hard heart, and cannot pray? Will he delight himself in the Almighty? Will he always call upon God? Job 27. 10. Backsliders in heart are heartless in prayer; as they decay, so do they restrain prayer, Job 15. 4. Ye have said, it is in vain to serve God, Mal. 3. 14. As sin becomes more delightful, so duty becomes more burdensome, cold and formal; but a gracious soul that shall be healed is importunate with God, and will not let him alone, Exod. 32. 10, 11. or let him go until he bless him, Gen. 32. 6. The worse his condition is, the more fervent his cries are; the more his piety goes down, the more his prayers go up, Psal. 6. 2. Such a soul shall be healed, who would be healed; where he works to will, he will work to do.

Fifthly, Are thy vitals sound under all thy decays? then thy consumption is not mortal: Is thy heart sincere? thou canst not hide or reserve iniquity, but walkest before God in truth; thy desires after grace are not feigned, Psal. 17. v. 1. Thy love to God is not pretended, liplove, but real; thy faith and love are not wholly gone, but maintained in the truth thereof, though abated; thou canst not let God go, but hast a secret rest on him, and resolved recumbence on his grace and faithfulness. There is hope of that tree, though it seems to be cut down, that it will sprout again, and the tender branches thereof will not cease, Job 14. 7.

Sixthly, If under all thy decays thou findest a humble heart and contrite spirit; thy backslidings make thee lie low before God, and to become more vile in thy own eyes every day; thy soul-poverty makes thee poor in spirit also, rating thyself beneath the least mercy, and judging thyself unworthy of all that patience, privilege and mercy shewn to thee; thou dost not fret at afflicting providences, nor charge God foolishly, but bearest his indignation, justifiest his displeasure, and wonderest at his forbearance; then will revivings come again, and recovery after thy falling back, Dan. 9. 7, 23, 25. Mat. 5. 3. Isa. 57. 15.

But on the other side, There are five dangerous symptoms of falling back that shall hardly be restored.

First, If thy falling back be before thy falling in with Christ in truth; thy decays before thy quickenings, then 'tis dangerous: If thy building were on the sand, and the towering heights of thy frames and profession from which thou art fallen, were only structures of thy own raising, in which the Sanctifying Spirit had no hand, then thy decays are not likely to be repaired. Art thou a stranger to the new birth, and to any inward change upon thy soul? the principle of thy new profession and actions is still an old heart: Thou never didst take the Lord for thy God and only Treasure, nor hadst to this day any heart-union with the Lord Jesus; then thy fall is dangerous, Mat. 7. 26, 27. 1 John 5. 14. 2 Tim. 3. 5.

Secondly, A falling off from the foundation is dangerous: When men depart from the Faith, turn to another Gospel, and deny the Lord that bought them, fall from the Doctrine of Grace after enlightenings, to a Covenant of Works, laying the foundation of Salvation-hopes upon creature-performances and improvements, when they go from the Rule of Faith and Word of Truth, to natural light, and seducing spirits, which have not their evidence and approbation from the Scriptures. When persons at once disclaim dependency on the true foundation and disposal by the Rule of Righteousness 'tis much to be feared whether such shall be restored, Gal. 1. 6. ch. 5. 4. Heb. 10. 26, 39. 2 Pet. 2. 15. Heb. 6. 4. 6.

Thirdly, When men make Merchandise of the Truth, and sell their profession for worldly interest, having loved the reward of iniquity, and made a swap of their Religion for advantagesake: This is a mighty provocation to the Spirit, when men can sell themselves to work wickedness, and value the great things of God's Law, of his Truth and Salvation at so low a rate; to part with them for a mess of pottage, and the dirty Cabals of this world: 'Tis seldom that such find repentance, though they seek it with tears: See Judas, Simon Magus, Balaam, Demas, Spira: What remarks of furious indignation God makes such Apostates to be, who can part with their Religion for worldly interests! 2 Tim. 4. 10. 1 King. 21. 20. 2 Pet. 2. 3, 15. Acts 1. 18.

Fourthly, Backsliders in heart shall surely perish, and be filled with their own ways, Prov. 14. 14. when falling back is upon choice, and with delight, like a deceitful Bow that is then at rest when its string is broken, Psal. 78. 57. When a man casts off Religion as one doth his burden, and a beast his yoke, Jer. 5. 5. and is glad he is rid of his troublesome work, as one that is got out of prison, Rom. 1. 32. This argues a spirit of Belial, and a dangerous state: Many have taken up a Lamp upon constraint, for fashion, or interest, or for companies-sake, as the foolish Virgins did, Prov. 14. 14. Psal. 78. 57. Jer. 5. 5. Mat. 25. 1. But when opportunity hath offered itself for a fair riddance, they have soon appeared what they were by their cheerful returns to Egypt, and the broad way of error and looseness, falling in with other interests, and finding pleasure in it: Now the world, reputation and pleasure take away the heart, and they are well-pleased with other Lovers: this is a bad sign of a desperate state, of marish-ground that shall never be healed, Ezek. 47. 11.

Lastly, When persons are prejudic'd against the means of recovery, hate them that rebuke them in the gate, Amos 5. 10. shun the light, and cannot endure those that would reclaim them from the error of their way, Joh. 3. 19. their hearts rise against any attempts to reduce them, Amos 7. 10. cannot bear them that are good, slight and hate the people of God they formerly loved, avoiding their company; jeer and reproach those Ministers, people and ways they once took pleasure in: this shows a dangerous state, such a persons condition seems desperate, and not far from the Chambers of death. O you that are fallen back in Religion! get your hearts affected with it: do you begin to decay? you know not where it will end: are you gone back? 'tis questionable whether ever you may return, and then what will your latter end be? your last state will be worse than your first; and if twice dead, you will be plucked up by the roots; if after showers and dressings you decay, your end will be to be burned.

Advice 2.

Secondly, If you would recover out of your wasting decays in this heavenly Trade, search out the causes, and get them removed. There must needs be something more than ordinary, when men who have a good Trade, which may be driven in the worst of times, and will ensure advantage, if followed, do notwithstanding fall back and decay: Such is Religion, it will maintain and enrich its followers, if they be not wanting to themselves; there must needs be some great causes and miscarriages then that doth cast back the professors of Christianity, and bring a consumption on their soul-prosperity: some of which may be these:

First, When they enter upon this heavenly Trade, and have not a stock to set it up: Religion is a great thing, and cannot be carried on without a stock of saving-grace to maintain it: Common grace is not a suitable stock for this spiritual Trade; it may help men to transact the external part, and common works of Religion; but cannot do the inward, secret, and choicest services of godliness: A stranger intermeddles not with its joy, Prov. 14. 10. no, nor its work; They that are in the flesh cannot please God, Rom. 8. 8. The Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, Rom. 14. 17. it lies not in outward duties, but righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost; which no hypocrite can reach to. This spoils many, they take up a form of godliness without the power of it; and being strangers to the work within, they cannot carry on the works of grace without, which this state calls for; and so fall back, and come to nothing. When persons get some knowledge, parts, frames, and temporary graces; they presently take up a Lamp of profession, and get into the company of the wise, climb up to the enjoyment of privileges, and then sit down contented, and fall asleep; and when they come to temptations, and spiritual duties, to the work of faith, love, patience, self-denial, mortification, and the like; having not grace to support them, and a principle that suits such work, they fall short of duty, and into sin, and so Trade, and fall away: Common grace is as a standing-pool, which having not a spring to feed it, dries up when supplies cease, and scorplings come; whereas true grace is as a well of water, that springs up to life eternal.

Secondly, Another thing that casts back Traders, is this; when they set upon an employment, and have not skill to manage it: Every Art hath its principles, rules and mysteries by which it is carried on: to deviate from these, is to mar the excellency, and miss the advantage of it: Irregular actions seldom thrive; so 'tis with the heavenly Trade, when persons set upon it, and have not skill to order it to best advantage, no wonder if they prosper not, but fall back in godliness. Solomon directing to this heavenly Trade, advises to get wisdom as the principal thing in order to it, Prov. 4. 7. And when the Apostle would further the Saints in holy walking, as the necessary way to it, he begs wisdom for them, Col. 1. 9, 10. That ye may be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding: that ye may walk worthy of the Lord to all, well-pleasing, being fruitful in every good work. Two things made David thrive so much in his proper public work; Integrity of heart, and Understanding, Psal. 78. 72. He fed them according to the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands: Some books read it in the plural number in the Greek; In skilfulnesses, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , noting the great measure of wisdom which men need who would prosper in their proper work, and order their administrations prudently, as might most further their spiritual welfare: The want of which wisdom and prudence in Christians to order everything they do in their general and particular Callings, converses, conditions and occurrences in the World to the best advantage of their souls, is one reason they thrive so little in their heavenly Trade: Wisdom would teach men to prevent many snares and occasions of evil, and instruct them how to get good from everything they do, which would much advance their soul-profiting, for want of which they go back in spirituals, and decay apace.

Thirdly, This also casts back Traders; when they are not diligent in the management of their Trade: A slothful soul suffers hunger, Prov. 19. 15. and by much sloth the building decays; and through idleness of hand the house droppeth thorough, Eccles. 8. 10. They that will thrive in the World must be diligent, take all opportunities to carry on their work: The diligent hand maketh rich, but by slothfulness men are brought to a morsel of bread. So 'tis in Religion, when men let down their work, and do not follow it to purpose, they soon decay, and become spiritually poor; this is the bane of many this day: Religion is not their business; men do but little on the Lord's day, and scarce a stroke of work is done all the week after; hear they will, and when that is done, their work is done too: never think of what they hear, or put it to practice from one Lord's day to another: All the week their heads, hearts, hands, feet, time, strength, discourses, contrivances are wholly taken up about the World; and how can they choose but go down the hill, and waste away in their soul-interests?

Religion is one continued work, which allows of no intermission, but hath its work every day, and in everything; break but one link of this golden chain of godliness, and it weakens the whole. O the slothfulness of Christians at this day in their soul-businesses! every day is filled up with neglects; neglect of prayer, neglect of reading, meditation, conference, heartwatching, grace-cherishing-work, forget this duty; pass by another, cold, sleighty, formal in all; this spoils the prosperity of souls. The Galatians began well, but did not hold out, they were soon weary, Gal. 5. 7. Most men's journey to Heaven is full of stops, and that which makes it most miserable, their lets are of themselves: Who hath hindered you? Men's stays are within in their own hearts, they have no heart to do good, Hos. 7. 11. Love to Religion is almost gone, and this makes men weary in these pleasant ways: while affections hold, souls are never weary; but when the heart is gone, then everything is a burden; such will do no more than needs they must to quiet conscience, and preserve peace and credit; and this starves godliness.

Fourthly, Great and frequent losses in men's Trades tend to breaking; and so it is in Religion: Christians through their sloth, formality and unwatchfulness sustain many and great losses of spiritual mercies, and this brings them low. A Christian the other day, it may be, had his graces flourishing, his heart warm, his affections quick and lively, his conscience pure and tender, his will flexible, and fixed on God and things spiritual, 2 Ep. Joh. 8. and a good frame throughout his whole soul: but now through his carelessness all is lost again, Gal. 3. 4. One time he loses the favor and comfortable presence of God, Psal. 51. 12. another time he loses a sweet serenity of spirit, and peace with God; then light and convictions are gone; another time enjoyments and experiences are gone; now his desires after God are lost, then his strength is devoured; now temptations prey upon the soul, and then corruptions make a waste upon it: come to Ordinances, Sermons, Sacraments, and after a great deal of prayer, care, and striving, a little grace and comfort is obtained; but through want of watchfulness all lost again: it may be before it stirs out of the place, or recovers home to his habitation; the next company, discourse, occasion, takes away all.

Another time God brings the soul into the fire of some great affliction, sickness, suffering, losses; and there melts it into some holy frames, humility, faith, love, obedience takes off some dross, puts on some beauty, imparts some souladvantage; but immediately upon a change of the person's condition, when new mercy, health and comfort returns, all the good is lost again. Now through these many and great losses in spirituals, which gracious souls sustain, they are brought very low, and come to be soon poor and beggarly.

Fifthly, Great wastes, and large expenses, help to make Traders poor apace; when they turn spendthrifts, and prodigals, living above their estates; when their layings out are more than their comings in, this must needs bring them low: It undid the Steward; He wasted his Masters goods, Luke 16. 1. So 'tis with Wisdom's Merchants also, when they turn prodigals of their graces, mercies, parts, strength, time, and other goods committed to them, spending them on their lusts and carnal contentments, then they soon find an alteration.

O, at what a rate do men live in point of time! and at what vast expenses of their short day upon things of no value, talking, eating, drinking, sleeping, trifling, sinning away their precious time, as if they had no employment for it, or no better work to do: Little do souls think what a small pittance of day-light they have allowed for their vast concerns, and multitude of great employments; and what madness 'tis to be so prodigal of this little inch of precious time. O the hours, and days, and years that professing Christians spend to no purpose! in vain thoughts, foolish talking, impertinent converses, unprofitable duties and labors, which when they shall be all reckoned up by the great Creditor, and a bill of wastes put into the hands of conscience, and the total sum of these expenses read; what amazing sense! what dreadful impress! and fretful sting will this beget when persons come to die! As the Queen said, If her heart were ripped open, Cales would be found written in it: So if their hearts could then be as legible as their expressions, men might read this there in black, and capital letters, Lost time, Lost time.

How great also are men's wastes of graces and peace, wisdom and capacities, and all for the obtaining of some poor, empty, insignificant comforts, which perish with the using: There are no locusts (Christians) like your cursed lusts, which have devoured your precious things; your affections, time, strength and graces; what convictions, resolutions, hopeful frames, conscience-tenderness, talents, capacities, privileges, ordinances, providences, have the service of thy base lusts, and contentment of thy carnal mind consumed! and this hath brought thy soul to such straits and distressing exigencies.

When souls live above their capacities and proportion; that's casting back, when persons have little, and yet live high; have but a little light, and yet spend that too in works of darkness; have but a short day, and yet so many hours of that one day consumed in vanity; this is to live above thy estate, and will be soon impoverishing: When men have but a little grace and strength, and yet adventure upon great temptations, and run into soul-ruining dangers, rush into vain company, set upon entangling affairs, and take much business on their hands, and yet have but a little portion of Wisdom and Grace to manage them; this is to live above thy estate in Christianity. To be low of stature, and yet high in conceit, of little spiritual worth, and yet think highly, and speak highly of thyself, and to expect estimation from others also, is to live above thy estate.

To have nothing to maintain thee but what comes in by thy soul labors; no longer work, no longer eat; thy daily bread depends upon thy daily work; so poor, and yet in this condition to expect an easy life, to lie down to slumber, to dwell carelessly, and set thy hand but by fits and starts to thy work: This is to live above thy spiritual estate, and will soon bring thee to breaking in this Heavenly Trade.

Sixthly, Great debts are breaking, and will cast men back in Wisdom's Merchandise; when men owe more than they are worth, and know not how to pay it; run further on book every day, till their credit will pass no longer; they have often promised payment, but still failed, and now their word will not pass, they can get no more goods, Creditours will not trust them, but begin to suspect them, and threaten to take them up, then men shut up shop and break: This also is pernicious to Heavenly Traders, when they become unfaithful to God and men, run on score for mercy, but never pay or render to God again; are deep in debt to God for divine goodness; receive one mercy after another, one talent after another, and make no returns of any; God sees not principal or interest, but they remain fruitless and unthankful under all; make promises of better improvements, but still break them: Come to Sacraments, and renew their Covenant with God, and go away and break it again; make promises to God under affliction, that if he will deliver them this once, they will never grieve and provoke him more as they have done; make large engagements, if God will hear this prayer, and give that mercy; but when their turn is served, forget God, and break all their vows again; be ready to pass their word on every occasion, and then look after it no more; this begets a jealousy in the Lord of Hosts, that he will trust them no more, Deut. 32. 21. but hold his hand. and part with no more goods, but threatens to take them up, and to cast their souls into prison; begins to sue them in the Court of Conscience, and to out-law them at the bar of Justice, to seize on what they have; then away goes peace, joy, hope, and then comes breaking. These are some of those reasons why Christians go back in Religion, and decay in their Heavenly Trade. O Christians! bring the plummet to the line, and thy heart and life to the balance, and try from which of these comes thy soul-decays, and then get it to bear upon thy heart, till thou art fully convinced of thy evil, and willing on any terms to obtain remedy.

Advice 3.

Thirdly, Compound with your Creditor; get your peace made with God through Christ; make haste to prevent a seizure on your person and goods by a timely composition. Agree with your adversary while you are in the way with him, lest at any time he deliver thee to the Judge, and the Judge deliver thee to the Officer, and thou be cast into prison, Mat. 5. 25. 'Tis a fearful thing to fall into the hands of an ever-living God, who is a consuming fire, Heb. 10. 31. ch. 12. 29. O tremble in the sense of his righteous Judgment, and force not the Lord by thy delays to commence a suit against thee, and to make an entry upon all that thou hast; but go humble thyself, and make sure thy friend, Prov. 6. 3. Fall down before thy Creditor, and sue for terms of reconciliation; cast thyself at the feet of mercy, confessing thy sin: Pay the debt thou canst not; go beg remission, and offer a Surety to discharge the score, even such a one as the Father himself is well pleased with: Thy Creditor must be satisfied or thou art undone; but this you can never do: Away to a Mediator to obtain terms, and to procure your peace; make Christ your friend, who is able to satisfy all the Father's demand, to cross the book and send your discharge by the Spirit of Grace, who can witness the pardon of all your sins to your consciences: Come to him in the sense of your folly, bearing your shame. Forsake your wasting ways, and with the prodigal return from your harlots to your Father's house, rating yourselves beneath the least of his mercies, and consenting to the meanest condition, so he would but take you in again, Luke 15. 17, 18, 20, 21. Subscribe all his terms, and make a new surrender of yourself and your All to Christ, to be no more your own, but more entirely his than ever, Jer. 50. 5. Enter into a new Covenant with God in Christ, taking him for your Surety, and fetching all your abilities to fulfil it from him, and get thy soul more firmly bound to the Lord in it by the bond of the Spirit.

Advice 4.

Fourthly, Set up no more for yourselves, but enter yourselves Factors for Christ. It may be you traded formerly for yourselves, and that broke you; if you would prevent that danger for the future, you must be no more for yourselves, but for him; trading as his Factours, not your own.

Now three things are required in a Factor, which must be observed also by wisdom's Merchants, if ever they will drive a thriving Trade in Godliness.

- 1. To trade upon another's Stock.
- 2. To be regulated by another's Advice.
- 3. To drive on another's Interest.

First, If you will be Christ's Factours, you must trade upon his stock; you must not only take all your goods from him, but as his; not only fetch in your graces, abilities, skill, success from him, but use and improve them as his, not as your own. Joh. 1. 16. Of his fullness have all we received grace for grace. 'Twas not only part of his fullness before it was received, but 'tis his grace after reception. Col. 1. 19. It pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell: not only the fullness of the Divine Nature, but the fullness of habitual grace, both which are in Christ; the latter is chiefly intended here, which dwells in Christ as in a head, not for himself only, but for his body, as beams in the Sun, and water in the Fountain for the use of man. The Father hath laid up all that grace that Believers need here and forever in the Lord Jesus, as in a Treasury, or Trustee's hand, for their use; or made it over to him not only as a deed of gift, but as a purchase which he hath bought by his blood for the good and use of his children: 'Tis his fullness, right and interest, but for their use and advantage, but so as the property and disposal be still his. Fal'n man hath forever forfeited his credit with God since his first defection, to become anymore the disposer of his interests and inheritance, or be entrusted again with his own portion. God deals with saved souls as parents do with prodigal children, secures their estates in the hand of a Feoffee. Believers Treasures are laid up in Christ, that so grace as well as glory, sanctification and salvation may be sure to them, and not liable to forfeiture or loss; to be disposed of, and parted with by them as they please, but be certainly and eternally theirs, that so they may come to Christ for all they need, as heirs under age, who have no more in hand than what they want, but must come to their Overseers for all they have use of; and not only as such, but as Stewards also that must be accountable for what they have, and how they bestow it.

Poor decay'd souls, Would you recover your losses, and renew your Trade? then you must come to Christ's fullness, and be beholding to his free grace for all you need. Do you want grace for your duties, places, trials, sufferings? come to Christ's fullness for your supplies; send to him by the hand of prayer an intimation of all your wants: Make known your requests to him. Phil. 4. 6. Be careful for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known to God. Cease not from following God in the Name of Christ with requests, till the Spirit meet you with returns. The Lord Jesus hath ordained his people to receive their supplies, salaries, and stipends from Heaven in the Court of Requests. Matth. 7. 7. Ask, and you shall receive. All things whatever you shall ask in prayer believing you shall receive, Matt. 21. 22. Seek it by prayer, receive it by faith: Go to Christ in the promises for all you want, judging him faithful who hath promised, Heb. 11. 11. God's Word is as good as present pay, and shall be fulfilled by him (who cannot lie) to all that by faith receive it, and wait for its performance. All his promises are in Christ Yea and Amen, 2 Cor. 1. 20. Who came down from Heaven to confirm them with his blood, and is returned to Heaven to fulfil them by his intercession, Heb. 7. 25. You may boldly adventure on divine assurance, and shall not be ashamed, if you sincerely roll on Christ in his Word. Be well acquainted with the promises, clear up your interest in them by believing, and expect their fulfilling through Christ. It may be thy graces are low, thy corruptions high, guilt heavy, fears many, refuge fails, thy prayers not answered, no good news from Heaven or Earth; thou prayest, hopest, waitest, but no answer; in this case nothing but firm reliance on divine faithfulness, can keep thy head above water.

Are you in wants? go to that promise, My God shall supply all your wants, Phil. 4. 19. God will give grace and glory, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly, Psal. 84. v. 11. Do you find changes in your spirits, and frames, and condition? See that word, Believe in the Lord your God, and you shall be established; believe his Prophets, and you shall prosper, 2 Chron. 20. 20. Are corruptions high? apply that word, He will turn again, he will have compassion upon us, he will subdue our iniquities, Mic. 7. 19. Sin shall have no dominion over you; for you are not under the Law, but under grace, Rom. 6. 14. Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, Titus 2. 14. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Devil, Joh. 3. 8. I will save her that halteth, Zeph. 3. 19. When thou seest nothing but witherings and dyings in thy soul, apply these promises; So wilt thou recover me, and make me to live, Isa. 38. 16. The righteous shall flourish like the Palm-tree, he shall grow like the Cedars of Lebanon: Those that be planted in the house of the Lord, shall flourish in the Courts of our God, thy shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing, Psal. 92. 11, 12, 13, 14. I will be as the dew to Israel, he shall grow as the Lily, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon: they that dwell under his shadow shall return, and shall revive as the corn, Hos. 14. 5, 6, 7. They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength, Isa. 40. 31. In these and such like promises, as in wagons sent of purpose to fetch you, go over to your Joseph, and get them laden with the riches of his Kingdom, that you may be relieved and carried on in your Trading for Heaven, improving these not as yours, but as your Lord's goods: That's the first, Trade upon Christ's Stock.

Secondly, Follow his instructions, be guided by his order in the management of your Heavenly Trade: Take Letters of Advice from your Creditor, how to lay out his moneys, and how to dispose of his goods. Prov. 3. 5. Lean not to your own understanding, which is the most close and subtle kind of Idolatry (saith Cartwright) Seek not after your own heart, and your own eyes, after which ye use to go a whoring, Numb. 15. 39. Man is mightily propense since his first defection from God, to take the Scepter into his own hand, and to become the governor of his own ways: But this God cannot bear, as being inconsistent with his Supremacy, and that State also into which man is by grace redeemed; which is an absolute devotedness unto God, 2 Cor. 8. 5. Ye have likewise chosen the Lord to be your Law-giver and King, if you are his, and are now upon your own consent determinable by his pleasure in everything you do: The rectitude of every action lies in a conformity to his will, who is your Lord and Sovereign. And as the eyes of a Handmaid wait on her Mistress; so should Believers on Christ for direction in all they do, Psal. 122. 3. Christians, your former irregularities in the prosecution of your Heavenly Trade, have almost lost you, and cast you back: O be more observant of Divine Instructions for the future! follow your advice, walk by Rule: As you have received how you ought to walk, and to please God; so abound more and more, 1 Thes. 4. 1. Beg Wisdom of God to know his Will in everything, to do that which is well-pleasing in his sight, having a warrant for every action you perform both civil and religious; this will be your comfort now, and your peace in the day of your accounts.

Thirdly, Drive on his interest, not your own. Rom. 14. 7. For none of us liveth to himself. God can more justly say what Laban did to Jacob concerning his children and goods; These daughters are my daughters, and these children are my children, and these cattle are my cattle; and all that thou seest is mine, Gen. 31. 43. The cattle on a thousand hills are his, Psal. 50. 10. with the corn, wine, wool and flax, Hos. 2. 9. Both the improvement as well as principal are his, Mat. 25. 27. He hath right to the exercise and fruit of your graces and duties, with all that you enjoy and do: Put Christ's mark on all your goods; whatever you gain by his talents, put on his account, and let your disbursements be expended to his use. Seek not your own things, your credit, peace, comfort, interest, but in subordination to him: If the Lord by his Word calls for any of your enjoyments, you must let them go: If by his Providence he takes off any comfort, murmur not, say, 'tis the Lord, Let him do what he will with his own, Mat. 20. verse 15.

Advice 5.

Fifthly, Follow your Trade better than you have done; remember how former carelessness, formality, sloth, hypocrisy, have undone you, and amend. The slothful soul is as the door on his hinges, Prov. 26. 14. that never makes any progress in Religion, or comes to any excellency in grace. No Christian (saith Mr. Sedgwick) is so able in the habits of grace, as he who is conscientiously frequent in the practice or exercise of grace. [Christ's Counsel to his languishing Church] Would you recover your state, and come to any eminency in godliness, then make Religion your business: That sleightiness of spirit in the way of God, which lost you at first, will never restore you. The recovery of a faint soul (saith the same Author) will never be effected by faint workings: You did fall into your decayed state by remissive actings, and think you, that which was not able to keep up your graces from sinking, can now quicken and raise them being sunk. [Christ's Counsel to his languishing Church, p. 148.] If negligence did cast you back, diligence must help to recover you: Take more pains with your hearts; follow your work of godliness every day, and in every place; Be early and late in your shops of duty, and in the warehouse of your hearts: Beware of spiritual sloth, and soul-losses; take heed of unfaithfulness with God, conscience, or others; keep touch with your Creditor; be tender of your vows to God and men; keep from prodigality; live not above your condition; waste not precious time, parts and grace in vain; walk strictly in the whole course of your life, keeping yourselves from iniquity, and in the Love of God. Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ, Jude v. 21. Tit. 2. 13.

5th. Branch of Exhortation to good Traders in Religion.

Lastly, You, whoever you are that drive on this Heavenly Merchandise, and have any good Trading in Religion, be you exhorted

Advice 1.

First, To bless God for good trading: Is it well with your souls? Doth the South-wind blow upon your Garden, and the Spices flow out? Cant. 4. 16. Doth the Fig-tree put forth her green Figs? and the Vine, with the tender Grape, give a good smell? Cant. 2. 13. What reason have you then to be always giving thanks? you whose trading turns to any spiritual advantage: thou canst say, 'Tis good to draw nigh to God; in keeping his commands is great reward: The Lord is not a barren wilderness to thy soul; but peace is within thy Walls, and prosperity within thy Palaces, Psal. 122. 7. Thy glory is fresh in thee, and thy bow renewed in thy hand: thy root spreadeth out by the waters, and the dew lying all night between thy branches, Job 29. 19, His ways are pleasantness, and his steps drop fatness to thy soul; and he commands his blessing upon thee; and thy faith and love do grow. Is it thus in any measure with thee? O then bless the Lord with thy soul; let all that is within thee bless his holy Name. Make the Lord thy glory, and triumphing praise: Thou hast abundant reason to be admiring grace, and exalting divine glory. Because,

First, Soul-thriving is a great mercy at all times; a little spiritual goods is beyond all the World's treasure; one piece of Christ's tried Gold weighs down all the Pearls and Diamonds on earth; and whatever can be found below grace, cannot be compared with it, Job. 28. 11, 12, 16. or named the same day with it: The light of God's countenance, pardon of sin, participation of the spirit, fulfilling of Promises, fellowship with the Father, Son, and Spirit; heartbreathings after, love to, and delight in God, are things of inestimable worth; if you weigh them in themselves, or with other things; or if you consider the grace from whence they come, or price which they cost: Spiritual thrivings are an evidence of sincere love to God. Judge. 5. 31. Let them that love thy Name be as the Sun that goeth forth in his might, and of special love in God to that soul, Tit. 3. 4, 6. Eph. 1. 3, 5, 7. God may prosper in the World those he hates; Esau had his fat things here, but grace and peace are new-covenant-blessings, which spring from eternal love in the heart of God to that soul, Heb. 8. 10. Zech. 8. 11, 12, 15.

Secondly, 'Tis a singular mercy at this time, a mercy that few enjoy in the day we live in: What a rare thing is it, in this long winter, to see a green Olive, a tender Grape appear, or Pomgranate bud? Cant. 7. 6. or one Berry in the uppermost branch, Isa. 24. 13. It was a peculiar glory put upon the head of Thyatira, that she was thriving when other Churches were decaying: She had works, and works, and the last were more than the first, Rev. 2. 19. Ephesus had lost her first love; Sardis had decayed and wasted her first strength, and was ready to die: Laodicea was luke-warm, ready to be spewed out by the Lord Jesus, Rev. 3. 1, 8, 16. only Thyatira flourished exceedingly, and grew in the winter; and this honor she had, to have it recorded by the Spirit for a monument in after-ages. 'Tis not the lot of everyone to thrive in evil times; few Thessalonians whose faith and love did grow, 2 Thes. 1. 3. A single Timothy, who had flourishing affections to the things of Christ; I have no man like minded, Phil. 2. 20. One Gaius, whose soul out-prospered his body, 3 Ep. Joh. v. 2. A flourishing Christian this day is like a flower in winter, an Apple-tree amongst the trees of the wood: Surely, if there be a Soul who this day flourishes to any height of Christianity, who lives in intimacy with God, fares deliciously in his soul, feeding on marrow, and hidden manna; that he or she is greatly beloved of God. Thy lot, O soul, is fallen in a peculiar plot of mercies ground; and should not the Lord Jesus be admired of such a one, seeing he is come to him in the fullness of the blessing of the Gospel? O bless God for this unspeakable gift!

Thirdly, 'Tis an earnest of eternal mercy: They that sow to the spirit shall reap life everlasting, Gal. 6. 8. And such as abound in holiness, shall have an abundant entrance administered to them into the Kingdom of our Lord and Savior, 2 Tet. 1. 11. God will never throw away savoury salt to the dunghill, nor burn up fruitful branches: Trees full of sap are the Lord's trees, which he will transplant into his Paradise above, Psal. 104. 16. The Lord's ripe fruit shall be gathered, not shaken on the ground; and safely housed in Heaven. Grace is too precious seed to be lost; Such as sow it now, though in tears, shall surely come again, and bring their sheaves with them, Psal. 126. 5.

Poor troubled Soul, God will not despise the day of thy small things, much less thy soul-enlargements after him; he will be tender of thy smallest blossoms, and secure them into fruit; much more shall thy increases arrive to the fullness of the measure of the stature of Christ, Eph. 4. 15. God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love, which you have shewn towards his name, Heb. 6. 10. It may be thou hast forgotten many a duty and hearty testimony of thy love to Christ, his name, people and ways; and canst see nothing in all thou hast done, but art ready to say on every turn; When saw I thee an hunger'd, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? when saw I thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? or sick, and in prison, and came to thee? Matth. 25. 35. But God cannot be so unrighteous to forget it, or let it pass so; but keeps a record of all thy meanest duties, and will make the most of them in the day of righteous judgment. I know thy works, and thy labors, and thy patience, &c. Rev. 2. 2. When thou wast under the Fig-tree I saw thee, Joh. 1. 48. He takes notice of a Daniel by the river Hiddekel; of a Peter on the house-top; of Elijah under the Juniper-tree, 1 King. 19. 4, 5. yea, of what was but in David's heart to do, and requites it, 8 King. 8. 18. Will not an Ahasuerus let the good deeds of Mordecai go unrewarded? and shall not the Judge of all the Earth do right, and crown the works of his own hands? Your labors shall not be in vain in the Lord, 1 Cor. 15. 58. O then be blessing God for the least good he hath wrought in you, and for you, for any prosperity in your souls. There are no offerings come up with that acceptance on God's Altar, as thanksgiving-offerings, Psal. 69. 30, 31. What a delightful remark did the Lord Jesus put upon the Lepers return to praise him for cleansing, Luke, 17. 18. the more spiritual, the more rejoicing, Isa. 52. 8. No such thriving souls, as God-praising souls: Jer. 31. 12. Therefore they shall come, and sing in the height of Zion; and shall flow together to the goodness of the Lord for Wheat, and for Wine, and for Oil; and their soul shall be as a watered Garden, and they shall not sorrow anymore at all.

Quest. How might I know whether I have good trading in Spirituals or no, that I might have ground for rejoicing in God? Could I find this soul-welfare you speak of, I should bless God with my whole soul; but I fear 'tis otherwise; that I am one of those who fall back, and decay in my heavenly Trade.

Sol. There are seven signs of good Trading, especially in evil times; which men usually reckon to be discoveries of a thriving Trade.

First, When men go not back in the World, but hold their own, they lose nothing: 'Tis much in bad times to keep ones ground; to be savers in such a season is a piece of gain: Try in this how 'tis with you; do not you go back in your spiritual estate? is it not worse with you than heretofore? Is not your faith, love, humility, patience less than heretofore? If you go not back in grace, you go forward; there's no standing at a stay in Religion, men go forward or backward in the way of Virtue; they that do not decay, do thrive in Spirituals: Job proves his good estate by his standing fast in shaking times: Neither have I gone back from the commandment of his lip; I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food: My foot hath held his steps; his way have I kept, and not declined, Job 23. 10, 11, 12. and thence concludes a gainful issue: When he hath tried me, I shall come forth as Gold. And the Apostle reckons it good profit, in soul-conflicts, to stand ones ground; if he cannot gain, yet not to lose: But having done all, to stand, is victory, Eph. 6. 13. Christians have their winterseasons, when growing is not visible; then to keep alive, is commendable. Do you hold fast your integrity? and keep your garments on? Do you preserve your conscience pure from the defilements and temptations of the day and place you live in? and your hearts unspotted from the World? your desires as warm, your purposes of cleaving to God as firm, and your feet as quick to run the way of God's commandments as heretofore? then have you good trading, considering the times you live in, which is an hour of temptation, and an evening of darkness.

Secondly, If wares go off well, 'tis good trading; when goods vend at a good rate, men count it thriving. Is it so with your souls? do your prayers come up to God with acceptance? do duties turn to any profit to you? what returns have you of your religious services? do hearing, prayer, conference, bring you any soul-advantage? do not goods lie by you undisposed of? but your graces are exercised, your talents, gifts, opportunities, improved; then 'tis good Trading. If the Lord give you light, you lay it out for the good of others; if he restore to you the joy of his salvation, and uphold you with his free Spirit, you teach transgressors his ways, and endeavor to convert sinners to him, Psal. 51. 12, 13. When God drops in comfort to you, you pour it forth to others, that they may be comforted also with the same comforts wherewith you are comforted of God, 2 Cor. 1. 4. When you are come to duties public or private, do graces go out in them? you show parts it may be, but do you lay out grace as well as gifts, spiritual as well as natural affections? Do you pray with the Spirit, and hear with Faith? do hope, fear, humility, holy fervency, heavenly breathings, sincerity, go off in your religious duties? when you meet with company, what goods do you put off to them? Do you labor in every society to vend something of heavenly wares, to put off some holy counsel and instruction, some gracious experience and observation, to leave something behind you in every place and company you come, that may fasten a savor of God on them? then is it good Trading, and you are in a soul-thriving way.

Thirdly, Men count it good Trading, when they are richer in stock, when they have more goods, more variety, greater quantity of wares, than first they had, and that clear too, and paid for; their shops and warehouses are fuller than they were, and the goods their own also; this men reckon good Trading: And can you say 'tis thus with your souls also? Are you increased with spiritual goods? your graces are more as well as gifts, your faith, love, hope, fear, are more grown, and stronger than they were, 2 Thes. 1. 3. Can you trust God more than you could, and hang upon a naked promise more strongly than you could, when sight fails? 2 Cor. 5. 7. Can you think well of God when he frowns upon you? Can you love him when he corrects you? Isa. 39. 8, Can you stay on him when he strips you of your visible comforts, and cleave to him when he seems to reject you? Job 13. v. 15. Then are you richer in stock.

Is your Faith more cleansing and quickening, your Love more warming, your Zeal more fervent, your Hope more adventurous, your Patience more bearing, your Joy more delighting, your Humility more self-abasing? then are you increased with goods. Have you more of every grace; it may be at first you had much affection, but little sincerity; great desires, but little faith; much comfort, but little patience and self-denial; you could pray, talk, rejoice, do some duties, but could not bear trials, want comforts, live by faith when sight failed; you were much it may be in some duties, but negligent in others; but now you have more variety of graces, enlargement in duties, and more universal respect to all God's commands, Psal. 119. 6. And if you are less in the bulk of duty, you are more in the spirit of it; when 'tis thus, there's a thriving Trade in Christianity.

Fourthly, Are you less in debt than you were? that's another sign of good Trading: Do you make conscience of rendering to God again for all his benefits? Psal. 116. 12, 13. Is it your trouble when you are behind-hand with grace, and fall in arreer to the mercy of God by your unthankfulness? Dan. 9. 10. Indeed, in compensation of the grace of God you are defective; to make requitals of mercies you cannot; you see possibly an infinite shortness in your performances of the meanest favor that the Lord bestows upon you; but such as you have, you give to the Lord; you render all possible praises, though not all praises due, Exod. 15. 2. This you are careful of, and charge upon your hearts every day, to walk as becometh the grace that brings salvation, and the mercies bestowed on you: 'tis the desire of your heart and labor, to walk worthy of God to all well pleasing, and to answer the end of mercy in which you are willing beyond your ability, and grieve at your falling short herein: Now this doth the Lord count for the deed, and accept at his people's hands, as full pay, through the satisfaction of Jesus Christ, 2 Cor. 8. 12. And where 'tis thus that persons live in the daily sense of Divine Grace, and grateful acknowledgment of every mercy, there is a thriving Trade in spirituals.

Fifthly, Have you much owed you, and is it secure? This also bespeaks a thriving Trade: Men count sure debts as good as ready money; though they have little in bags, yet if they have the more in book, and good debt too, they rate themselves accordingly, and reckon themselves worth so much as is due, as well as to what is in hand: And is it so with you Christians? are you rich in promises? is much coming to you upon a new-covenant score? It may be you have little in hand, little comfort, peace and sweetness you meet with from day today: You sow much, but reap little; you ask, but have not, and yet seek with your whole heart: Goods are received, but no money returned; if so, you have good grounds of hope for a plentiful harvest, because you sow store of good seed; are much in holy duties, and sincere in them; many a prayer upon the file, many a tear droped into God's bottle, much grace laid out in duty, and time spent in it, a daily care to please God, and upon Scripture grounds can lay claim to many a promise on the account of Christ: What you sow, you shall reap, Gal. 6. 8. Your labor shall not be in vain in the Lord, 2 Cor. 15. v. 58. Say unto the righteous, it shall be well with them, for they shall eat the fruit of their doings, Isa. 3. 10. And the less is received, the more is behind. Improvements of grace do book down many a mercy for Believers, which possibly they may not receive all their life, and yet be sure, and turns to account in the Inheritance prepared for them; and this is good Trading which brings in bonds and bills that are sure, and shall be paid to Heavenly Traders in their own Country.

Sixthly, That's good Trading where the present incomes maintain the Trader, and so much is got by it as they may live by; when a person can live comfortably upon his gettings, without impairing the stock: If it be so with the Believer in thy Heavenly Trade, then hast thou good Trading. Try Christians, your thriving by your livelihood! can you live comfortably upon the fruits of Religion, Cant. 2. 3. Isa. 40. 31. doth your Religion maintain your Souls and Graces well? Joh. 4. 30. at what rate do you live? Men that thrive in the world usually live well, have good fare, and good clothing: Diet, Apparel, Expences, do soon show men's gettings; Indeed Prodigals may spend high, live well for a time, but then they cannot hold it; they soon break, but when men can bear liberal expenses, and their Estates not impaired, it argues such do thrive apace, and get well in their Trades; so 'tis with thriving Christians, they ordinarily live at a higher rate of peace and comfort than others, Ps. 119. 165. Ps. 80. 19. their fare is better, unless the health of their Souls do sometimes call to fasting and affliction; strong Christians, overcoming Souls, have better Provisions promise'd them than others: such feed on hidden Manna, Rev. 2. 17. and marrowy bits; milk is for babes, but strong meat for strong men, Prov. 21. 15. 'Tis joy to the just to do judgment: Joy and Pleasure (saith Mercer) is the fruit of well-doing to such: Such can expend more than others, who have larger proportion of Blessings on their Souls. A person may be truly gracious, and yet live uncomfortably in his Soul, and in the ways of God; but he that thrives in Godliness, hath larger incomes of sweetness and peace, and makes many a merry meal on the review of his integrity, and the grace of God in and towards him, Psal. 112. 2.

Seventhly, Layings up, as well as layings out bespeaks good Trading, when men fill their bags and enlarge their possessions, turn Purchasers, and begin to join house to house, and field to field, then they manifestly show their thrivings: So when Souls thrive in their Heavenly Trade, they begin to lay up for Heaven, and to be preparing for another world; they lay up Treasure in Heaven, Mat. 6. 21. get bags that wax not old: weak Christians are all for their comforts here, how they may maintain their peace and pleasure in the way; but strong Christians, thriving Souls, they have their thoughts upon their journeys end, and to make provisions for their future state: Bread and Water contents them here, Gen. 28. 20. a little spending Money in the way to help them home is all they indent for: But their chiefest care is to lay up for Heaven; When shall I provide for mine own house, saith Jacob, Gen. 30. 30? So the thriving Christian is thoughtful about his house in Heaven, to make all the provisions he can for that; he will lay up in store a good foundation to lay hold on eternal life, 1 Tim. 6. 19. he is for securing all he can for Heaven, and for such works as will follow him; he will turn all he may into moveables, that he may transmit them into his Country. The interests of this world are stak'd down to the earth, and cannot be removed; but thriving Christians are for such goods as they can knock up, and carry with them to their own home: They strive to pray, hear, think, speak, do, suffer, and all for eternity: their affections are gone before to Heaven, while their bodies are imprisoned in the World. As 'tis said of the Athenians, when besieged by Sylla, their hearts were with him without the walls, while their bodies were forced to serve within. So 'tis with enriched Christians; the World is a Prison to them, a strange Country where they have been sent to trade; and when they have filled their sacks, and got all they can, they long to depart into their own Country. By these things (Christians) may you know what kind of Trade you drive for Heaven; and what share you have in this great engagement to thanksgiving.

Object. All this makes against me, and confirms my just fears that I am a stranger to spiritual thrivings; I now see 'tis a pitiful Trade I drive in godliness: I profess, hear, pray, perform duties, enjoy privileges, but am never the better. O how may I write lost labor on all my performances! I need no greater proof than these evidences; nor other judge than my own conscience, to convince my languishing soul of daily wastes and poverty in my heavenly Trade: What shall I do to get my case mended, and once attain to true thrivings in this holy Calling.

Sol. There are four things which usually make men thriving in their earthly Trades; which do also contribute to prosperity in this heavenly Merchandise.

- 1 A provident care.
- 2 A diligent hand.
- 3 A secret trade.
- 4 A divine blessing.

First, Men that are thriving in the World are provident and careful to prevent their dangers, to secure their interests, and proportion means to their advantage. And so must Christians that think ever to flourish in godliness: what losses and miscarriages in Religion might a provident care prevent? were temptations way-laid, and corruptions timely guarded against, souls might escape many surprisals of sin, and abatements in grace: Never think to prosper in holiness, till you are provident to prevent its weaknings, and contribute all you may towards its strength and enlargement. One enjoys a good frame of soul, much peace and joy in believing; and for want of watchfulness loseth all again. Another hath got a little power over his corruptions for a time, and for want of a provident care to avoid ensnaring occasions, is overcome again. Another hath a choice advantage put into his hand for spiritual good, but not exercising a timely care and preparation to improve it, miscarries in all his hopes and labors; and by these changes and interruptions their spiritual welfare is impeded: Go learn of the Ant, she provideth her meat in Summer, Prov. 6. 6, 8. Be wise as Serpents, they decline danger as soon as seen, and guard their noblest part, though with the hazard of their All, Matth. 19. 16. Walk circumspectly as wise, Eph. 5. 15. O how happy might Christians be, were they as provident for their souls as they are for their bodies! and did exercise their reason, care and fore-sight to further their spiritual interests; and without this provident care, never think to prosper in this heavenly Merchandise. Take heed of grace-wasting sins, of any secret lust allowed, or sweet morsel rolled under your tongue, that will prove a moth in your spiritual estate, and keep you low in your heavenly interests. Souls under some perplexing lust, are like Israel under the prevailing hand of Midian against them, Judge. 6. 3, 4, 6. When Israel had sown, the Midianites came up, and the Amalekites, and the children of the East, and they encamped against them, and destroyed the increase of the earth, and left no sustenance for Israel, neither Sheep, nor Ox, nor Ass;—and Israel was greatly impoverished: So 'tis with such; no sooner have they got any mercy, frame, experience, hope, or soul-advantage, but presently a prevailing lust riseth up, and destroys all: Cry unto the Lord as Israel did, until he deliver you from every iniquity: make no peace with any corruption, never let it rest till wholly destroyed if you think to prosper in your souls and conversations. Be provident also to take all advantages for godliness, watching your opportunities for every duty, keeping every soul-market and fair, and taking the best season to lay out grace, and get in profit, Prov. 8. 34. Be careful to get some good from everything, and to keep and save what you have; and this will tend to soul-thriving, Acts 2. 46.

Secondly, A diligent hand tends to thriving; men that prosper in the World take pains, and follow their employments; rising early, sitting up late, neglecting no business that may help on to profiting. So must you that intend to thrive in Religion; you must make it your business, you must be laborers in God's Vineyard, Joh. 6. 27. and workmen indeed that need not be ashamed, 2 Tim. 2. 15. Christians for the most part are too slothful in their spiritual business, to have their profiting appear: it will cost you more striving to enter into the strait-gate, and get ground in the narrow way that leads to life; more blows must pass before your enemies will down, and more strokes at your work before your interests will come in: Running, striving, wrestling; in labors more abundant, in weariness, and painfulness, in watchings: What pains will men take for the World? She riseth also while it is night,—Her candle goeth not out by night: That neither day nor night seeth sleep with his eyes. Ye compass Sea and Land; and should they not much more for Heaven? The most diligent soul is the most thriving soul; Always abounding in the work of the Lord; instant in season, and out of season; taking every opportunity for Heaven: And what their hand finds to do, to do it with all their might; this is the way to soul-thriving, 1 Cor. 9. 24, 25. Heb. 12. 4. Eph. 6. 12. 1 Cor. 11. 23, 27. Prov. 31. 15, 18. Eccles. 8. 16. Matth. 23. 15. Eccles. 9. 10.

Thirdly, Driving a secret Trade of holiness, is soul-thriving: Men that have some peculiar art, and unknown mystery in their Trade which is not ordinary and common, usually get greatest custom and advantage: So is it in this heavenly Trade; the more men are taken up in the mysteries of Godliness, 1 Tim. 3. 16. the more they thrive in Religion. There's a secret in holiness, which no stranger intermeddles with, Prov. 14. 10. There's a way within the veil; the hidden part in which souls are made to know wisdom; Psal. 51. 6. Hidden riches of secret places, which thriving Christians meet with, Isa. 45. 3. If you would prosper in Godliness, be sure to maintain the secret duties of piety: The religion of most men lies in the Market place, and in the view of others; their hearts, their closets are not privy to any secret transactions between God and their souls; and in the praise of men they have their reward: but the thriving trade of Christianity, is the secret trade. Christians be most in those duties which men least observe, and chiefly excellent in the invisible part of your visible work: Public duties are most honorable, but secret duties the most gainful. Matth. 6. 4. And thy Father which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly.

Fourthly, The blessing of God maketh rich: Prov. 10. 22. Promotion cometh not from the East, nor from the West; nor prosperity from men's fingers ends, but from God's hand. Deut. 28. 8, 10, 11, 12. The Lord shall command his blessing upon thee; in thy store-houses, and in all which thou settest thy hand unto:—The Lord shall make thee plenteous in goods:—The Lord shall open to thee his good treasures; the Heavens to give thee rain to thy Land in his season, and to bless all the work of thy hand: (and then comes riches) And thou shalt lend unto many Nations, and thou shalt not borrow: Prosperity, both spiritual and temporal, comes at God's sending: Psal. 118. 25. O Lord, I beseech thee, send now prosperity: Psal. 18. 32, 33. He restoreth my Soul, he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness: Psal. 23. 3, 5. Thou anointest my head with Oil: Thou blessest the springing thereof; thy paths drop fatness: Psal. 65. 10, 11. The Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones; and thou shalt be like a watered Garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not, Isa, 58. 11. I will be as the dew to Israel, he shall grow as the Lily, and cast forth his root as Lebanon, Hos. 14. 5. Secure an interest in the promises, and get your souls brought under the showers of blessing, if ever you think to thrive in godliness. Improve thriving graces, and take prosperous courses; these are under a promise of blessing: though every grace and duty do in their measure help on soulprosperity, yet there are some graces and duties have a more special influence on spiritual thrivings.

First, Faith is a soul-prospering grace: 2 Chr. 20. 20. Believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established: believe his Prophets, so shall ye prosper. Eph. 6. 16. Above all take the shield of Faith, wherewith ye shall quench all the fiery darts of Satan, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, insuper, Bez. Every grace is useful in the spiritual warfare, but Faith especially: other graces may (with Saul) slay their thousands; but Faith (with David) slays its ten thousands: Some darts may be quenched by other graces, but Faith quenches fiery darts, yea all the fiery darts of Satan, which does wonderfully further thriving: The just shall live by Faith, Heb. 10. 38. Faith will maintain the soul's life in the greatest straits and exigencies: Faith is a receiving grace, it takes in whatever is laid up in the promise; and that's thriving. Gal. 3. 22. That the promise by Faith might be given to them that believe. A soul-enriching grace, rich in Faith, Jam. 2. 5. A working grace, And the work of Faith with power, 2 Thes. 2. 4. A powerful grace; it gives the soul experience of the mighty power of God. Eph. 1. 19. 20. What is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, 1 Thes. 2. 13. 'Tis a strengthening grace: Out of weakness were made strong, Heb. 11. 34. through it doth the Lord let out his abundant grace: And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith and love, which is in Christ Jesus, 1 Tim. 1. 14. It doth exceedingly nourish the soul in grace, and edify it to salvation: 1 Tim. 4. 6. Nourished up in the words of Faith, 1. Tim. 1, 4. Which minister questions rather than edifying which is in Faith: One reason why souls prosper no more in piety is their unbelief; they are full of doubtings, fears, and questionings upon every turn, still wavering as a wave of the Sea; such cannot receive much at the hand of God, but are still weak, and going back in Religion. Be much in believing the promises against hope, and above fears, if ever you think to prosper in Religion.

Secondly, Love to God, his Name, ways and interest is a Soul-prospering Grace. Let them that love him, be as the Sun that goeth forth in his might: Judge. 5. 31. They shall prosper that love thee, Psal. 122. 6. Let them also that love thy name be joyful in thee, for thou Lord wilt bless the righteous, with favor wilt thou compass him as with a Shield, Psal. 5. 11, 12. Love to God must needs be a prospering Grace, because it brings the Soul under the blessing of God, and within the compass of his securing Shield, Love is a Soul-strengthening and establishing Grace. Eph. 3. 17, Being rooted and grounded in Love, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, set in a firm ground, not easily shaken from God or their integrity. Love makes a growing Soul. Eph. 4. 15, Speaking the truth in love may grow up in him, who is the head in all things. It helps on edification in Grace, ver. 16. maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love: Love constrains the Soul after God, makes his commands pleasant, and quickens the heart to make hast in the way to Glory; the more you love God, the more will you prosper in Godliness.

Thirdly, Humility is a Soul-prospering Grace, and under a promised Blessing. Prov. 29. 23, Honor shall uphold the humble in spirit; shall bear him up from falling, and bring him unto honor (saith Montanus) Prov. 15. 33, By humility are riches and honor: The humble Soul must needs be a thriving Soul, for God giveth Grace to it, Jam. 4. 6. yea, dwelleth with the humble to revive the Spirit of the humble, Isa. 57. 15. There's a great deal of Pride in most Christians, and that hinders Soul-thriving, proud of Parts and Grace, proud under seeming humility, proud of humility; Low Valleys are fruitful, when lofty Mountains are barren: The rich sit in a low place: Eccl. 10. 6, Such as are rich in wisdom (saith Mercer) they sit in a low place; they come down, and lie low in themselves, folly is set in great dignity: Poor, foolish, empty Creatures, they are high in conceit as well as place, many times; but the most rich and thriving Souls, these are poorest in Spirit, and lowest in their own eyes; the richer the Metal, the heavier; Gold weighs down Silver and Tin; the fuller of fruits branches are, the more they bow: He sendeth the springs into the valleys, Psal. 104. 10. Psal. 65. 13. They are covered over with Corn: Vineyards thrive best in low places: One branch of Grapes from the Valley of Eshcol, was said to be a burden for two men, Numb. 13. 23. would you flourish in Grace? take heed of Pride: Pride in the Soul, (saith one) is like the spleen in the body, when that swelleth, all the other parts languish: 'tis poison at the root of the tree, which corrupts the sap—'Tis so dangerous a poison, that of another poison there was confected a counterpoison to preserve Paul from it: would you prosper in Godliness? be persons of low, humble spirits, (Mr. Adams on 2 Pet.) 2 Cor. 12. 7. Exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high, Ezek. 21. 26.

Fourthly, Another choice fruit of the Spirit which will further Soul-thriving, is sincerity: Prov. 14. 11, The tabernacle of the upright shall flourish: They shall have good things in possession, Prov. 28. 10. they shall not only be preserved from evil, and escape the pit into which the wicked fall; but shall be sure to meet with good; Blessings, good things shall be given to them as their inheritance, as Aquila and Theodosius interpret it, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Thou showest mercy to thy Servants, that walk before thee with all their heart, 2 Chron. 6. 14. He that hath clean hands and a pure heart, who hath not lift up his Soul to vanity, nor sworn deceitfully, he shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his Salvation, Psal. 24. 4, 5. Upright Souls must needs prosper, they dwell in the presence of God, Psal. 140. 13. He will withhold no good thing from them, Psal. 84. 11. His countenance beholds them, Psal. 11. 7. God engages his all sufficiency for their good, Gen. 17. 1. They shall hold on their way, and wax stronger and stronger, Job 17. 9. and shall surely prosper. 2 Chron. 31. 21, In every work that he began in the service of the house of God, and in the Law, and in the Commandments, to seek his God, he did it with all his heart, and prospered: 'tis not thy many Duties before God, but the Oneness of thy heart with God: nor the bulk of thy Services, but the sincerity of thy Soul, which will make thee prosperous in thy heavenly interests.

Again, Take thriving courses, prosperous ways, as well as prospering Graces, these are under a promised Blessing also. Not to multiply particulars: There are four thriving ways in which Christians may attain to a prosperous Trade in Christianity.

The way of

- 1. Self-Examination.
- 2. Prayer.
- 3. Enjoyment of God.
- 4. Obedience.

First, Be often examining; and calling yourselves to an account how matters stand with your Souls: Traders that would be thriving will be often viewing their Books, and trying their Accompts, and have some set days, when they survey their Goods, cast up their Books, and try whether they gain, or lose; and so must Christians that would profit in Religion, they must be often judging themselves, that they be not judged, 1 Cor. 11. 31. they must cast up their accounts, and try their state whether they go forward or backward: Hag. 1. 5. Consider your ways: try how the case stands with you, whether you get or lose, and what's the cause of all those blastings that are upon you, Psal. 4. 4, Commune with your hearts upon your beds, and be still: 2 Cor. 13. 5, Examine yourselves whether you be in the faith, prove your own selves; know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you except you be reprobates. The neglect of this examination is one cause of that great mistake of persons about their Soul-state, some thinking themselves better, Rev. 3. 17. others judging themselves worse than they are: which begets security in some, discouragement in others, error and floth in all. A right estimate of thy spiritual capacity, either poverty or riches, gain or loss is absolutely needful to regulate thy duty unto a right affecting of thy heart, and advance of thy spiritual interests: Look over the Day-book of thy heart and life every night, posting all thy accounts on the large book of thy Conscience, and take some special time for a more full survey of thy Soul and state for Eternity; this will be of good use to further Soul-thriving.

Secondly, If you would prosper in your Souls, be much and mighty with God in Prayer: 'Tis said of Uzziah, that he sought God in the days of Zechariah, who had understanding in the visions of God, and as long as he sought the Lord, God made him to prosper, 2 Chron. 26. 5. Right Prayer is a wonderful way to Soulenrichings: He (saith one) can never be poor that can pray well: One reason why this King prospered as long as he sought the Lord, was, by this means he came to the visions of God, and that helped him to take a right way to prosper. By Prayer you advise with God, what course to take towards mercy: 'tis your Ephod by which you ask counsel of God where to go to shun danger, and what to do to carry on Duty, and obtain Mercy, 2 Sam. 23. 6. 9. Chap. 30. 7. and by Prayer you procure and get out the Graces and Supplies you need, 1 Chron, 4. 10, And Jabesh called on the God of Israel, saying, O that thou wouldst bless me indeed, and enlarge my coasts, and that thine hand might be with me, and that thou wouldst keep me from evil, that it may not grieve me: and God granted him that he requested. Prayer brings down the Spirit sometimes insensible and almost intolerable measures thereof. When that precious Servant of the Lord Mr. Bruce in Scotland (of whom King James said he was worthy of the half of his Kingdom) had sadly represented the Churches case, then under eminent danger, there was such a sensible down-pouring of the Spirit, that they could hardly contain themselves; yea, an unusual motion on those who were in other parts of the house, not knowing the cause of it at that time. O what great things did Abraham, Jacob, Moses, Jehoshaphat, Samuel, Elijah, and other Servants of God, get out of the hand of God! Luther was a mighty man in Prayer, 'tis said of him, he could get of God what he would, nothing is too hard for Faith and Prayer, because it seeks nothing but what God is willing to spare, and hath promised to give: Labor to get a mighty Spirit of Prayer; the gift of Prayer will not do, it must be the Spirit of Prayer, which is a pure, and heartcleansing Spirit, and cannot dwell with the least regarded Sin: Gifts of Prayer with natural affections may be mighty on the Spirits of men, but are no way prevailing with God for the Blessing: 'Tis said of Naaman, He was a mighty man in valor, but he was a leper, 2 Kings 5. 1. So there are some that seem mighty men in Prayer, and can wonderfully raise the affections of others; pray like Angels, but all the while are Lepers, under the ruling power of some secret lust; pride, passion, covetousness, uncleanness, and the like, which they hide under their tongue; but such are far from this mighty power of prayer, which brings down the Spirit on their own hearts or others. Ah Christians! if you would prosper in grace, get and improve the Spirit of Grace and Supplication.

Thirdly, Another thriving way is to engage God with you in all your undertakings. 'Twas this made Joseph so prosperous in all he did; God was with him. Gen. 39. 23. Because the Lord was with him; and that which he did, he made it to prosper: 2 Sam. 5. 10. And David went on, and grew great, and the Lord God of Hosts was with him: 'Twas not his wisdom, valor, nor any means he used, but the gracious presence of God with him that made him to grow so great: This made Solomon to prosper; 2 Chron. 22. 11. Now my Son, the Lord be with thee, and prosper thee. When persons lose the gracious presence of God, they soon find an alteration, and begin to wither and decay in their soul-comforts and prosperity: Thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled, Psal. 30. 6. Troubled like a withered flower, that loseth sap and vigor, [Mr. Leigh.] Jonah soon found a change in his soul; it ceased to be with him as before, when once he fled from the presence of God: He never had a good day after he lost the presence of God, but storms, tempests, shipwreck of peace, safety and prosperity, and a casting into the deeps of distress, and ruining dangers, Jonah. 1. 3, 10. Ah Christians! as you love your souls, and your spiritual welfare, take heed of losing God's gracious presence; whose company soever you lose, keep the Lord's presence with you; abide with him, and he will abide with you: 2 Chron. 15. 2. The Lord is with you while you be with him; and if you seek him, he will be found of you: Put away the unclean thing, and he will dwell in you, and walk in you, 2 Cor. 6. 16. Love him, and keep his commandments, and he will take up his abode with you, Joh. 14. 23. Content not yourselves with any privilege except you have God with you: If thy presence go not with us, carry us not up hence, Exod. 33. 15. I protest (saith Mr. Bruce, when wrestling for the presence of God with him in his going to preach) I will not go except thou go with me.

Fourthly, Follow the counsel of God, if you would thrive in the work and way of God: Josh. 1. 8. This Book of the Law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success: Jer. 38. 20. Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the Lord which I speak unto thee; so it shall be well unto thee, and thy soul shall live. One cause why men prosper no more in Religion, is, that little conscience they make of doing the will of God: men hear, but forget the word; others know their Lord's will, but prepare not themselves to do it. We live in an age of notions, not of motion after God; like men that see Countries in a Map, but care not to travel into them; bare knowledge pleaseth most: Men's zeal after truth, is like Absalom's love to his Father David, only to see him, not to serve him: 2 Sam. 14. 32. Let me see the King's face; which he no sooner did, but conspired against him: So most care for no more than to behold truth, not to dwell with it; and hence 'tis that prosperity is such a stranger to them: 'Twas not directions could heal Naaman of his leprosy, but obedience; he was never the better till he followed the Prophet's counsel, and washed in Jordan: that which made the ground rain'd upon, to be nigh to cursing, was not bringing forth fruit meet for them, by whom 'twas dressed, Heb. 6. 8. Do not only seek after, but walk after the truth, if you think to prosper in Religion, Jam. 1. 25. The doers of the word shall be blessed in their deed.

Object. 'Tis the desire of my soul to live in the exercise of every grace, and discharge of every duty; and some weak endeavors I have had, though too too short; with many cries for this soul-prosperity, but cannot yet attain unto it: Methinks I am like a wither'd arm, a dry tree, and barren womb, nothing doth me good; no food, seed or showers make me thriving and fruitful: I fear I shall be at last cut down, and bundled for the fire.

Sol. First, Thou mayest thrive in Religion, and not know it for a season; thy profiting may be, though not appear: The Tradesman may bring home gain in his purse, though untold: men know not their gettings till they cast up their accounts: thy prosperity may be as a casked Jewel, and friend under disguise. If you would estimate your advantage, survey yourselves, compare your present with your former state; what were you? what are you? speak out soul: was there not a time when thou wert blind, thou couldst see no evil in sin, nor excellency in grace? but now thy eye is opened, and things appear otherwise to thy soul than they did: Now there is nothing so vile as thy wicked heart, and ways; and nothing so desirable as Christ and holiness.

Thou wert once dead in sin, thou didst not feel or fear any hurt in it, or danger by it; but now 'tis otherwise: thou canst not sin, but thy conscience smites thee: nor God threaten, but it affrights thee: thy quick-ey'd conscience soon espies the least failing in thy duty, falseness in thy heart, or error in thy life; and, as a Serjeant, arrests thee, and hales thee to the Judge. Thou couldst formerly live without God, and be as still as the dead body in the grave, and the burning brand in the fire: but now as a bone out of joint, thou art restless till in communion with him: I remembered God, and was troubled, Psal. 77. 3.

Thou wert gone out of the way; yea an enemy to the way of life, turned aside to the flock of his companions, and didst turn again, and rend those that were of them. But now thou art folded with the flocks of Christ, and feedest besides the Shepherds Tents, Cant. 1. 8. Thy foot hath held his steps, and thou esteemest the word of his mouth more than thy necessary food, Job 23. 11, 12.

Object. But may not an hypocrite go so far, and all this be no more than a change from darkness to conscience-light, and from sin to common grace.

Sol. Common light cannot see a desirableness in Christ for himself, nor bring the soul to count all things dross and dung to win him, and obtain the excellency of the knowledge of Christ as thy Lord; but saving light sees one Christ worth ten thousand Worlds, and quits all to take him. Phil. 3. 8.

Common light sees no evil in sin; but guilt, and torment, loss of comfort, and sense of punishment, Gen. 4. 13. but true grace, when in exercise, loathes sin when it pretends love; and flies from sin when it makes largest proffers; and fears sin when it sees no danger, when there is no breach on present comfort feeled, or danger of future misery feared, Tit. 2. 11, 12. The gracious soul, like Joseph, when tempted with flattery, secured with secrecy, pursued with restless importunity to wickedness, yet cannot close with it, and sin against God, Gen. 39. 9.

Common light can dwell with works of darkness, and consist with an unsanctified heart and life, 2 Pet. 2. 1, 2. Common light and lust never fall out but when it awakens conscience, or weakens interests: but saving grace cannot bear that which is evil, Rev. 2. 2. or ever be brought to a treaty with sin, in order to an agreement, Gal. 5. 17. but, with Sarah, can never be at rest till the bondwoman and her son be turned out of door, Gen. 21. 10. Common grace may be offended at sin, but never hates sin; there is no contrariety founded in their nature or difference, but what may upon terms be made up, Luke 23. 12. And if it seems to have an indignation against sin, yet 'tis not against every sin, and at all times, nor irreconcilable at any time: but saving grace hates the very being of sin, 2 Cor. 7. 11. And as the Tiger flies at the very picture of a man, so doth Grace abhor the appearance of evil: 'Tis universal against the whole species, and every kind of sin; an enmity founded in the nature of grace, and therefore irreconcilable, Psal. 139. 22. and derived from the riches of grace, Ps. 97. 10. and greatness of redemption-love: It cannot be reconciled to sin, because sin cannot be reconciled to grace, or admit of any love to, or enjoyment of God; but still interrupts the soul's tranquility, holiness and pleasure in God, his chiefest and only good.

Again, Common light can live without special acquaintance with God, Eph. 2. 13. [afar of,] if it can have peace, because its Country is nourished by the King's Country, Act. 12. 20. and its welfare depends upon divine pleasure, 'tis all it looks for: but saving grace gets within the veil, Heb. 6. 19. approaches the mercyseat, where it converses with God. To be called by his name will not content grace; no, nor to eat his bread, and wear his raiment, except it enjoys his bed also: it longs for intimate communion with God, Psal. 101. 2. O, when wilt thou come unto me? It loves the Bridechamber, closet, and secret corners with him; never thinking itself near enough to, or long enough with him.

Obj. But change from nature to grace, is not growth in grace: though I may have received the former rain, and reaped the first fruits of the Spirit; yet I fear I have not the latter rain, and after-fruits of grace: waterings and dressings do not make me fruitful, or feedings make me grow: and that's the case you insist on.

Sol. 1. There may be fruit, though not appearing; and growth, though unseen: Christ hath under-ground-fruit, which may not spring up to thy own view, or others, Ps. 88. 5. [Free among the dead,] as berries hid among the leaves, which cannot be seen till winter-storms or shaking times come: thou mayest thrive more inwardly than outwardly, and be like the windows of the Temple, wide within, and narrow without; you may grow more in the truth and parts of grace, though less in the fruits of grace for a season; thy sincerity may be more, though thy shows be less; you may grow more downward in humility, self-abasement, sorrow for sin, though not upward in joys and blossoms of comfort; thou mayest grow more out of thyself, and into Christ, as the root of all thy grace, and foundation of thy foul-rest, though not into sensible frames and workings of grace. Art thou more sensible of thy own nothingness? thy heart-deceitfulness? self-insufficiency? inward disorders? soul-wants? sinfulness? hypocrisy? barrenness? then thou profitest, Rom. 7. 18. Art thou more jealous of thy heart every day, 2 Cor. 9. 27? more weary of thyself? and longing after Christ? having a higher valuation of his excellency, and greater breathings after his quickening spirit, and delighting presence, Phil. 3. 8? this is profiting.

Secondly, It may be thy conclusion springs from thy impatency; thou mayest be for hasty fruit, not allowing time for its growth and maturity. The Husbandman waits for the precious fruits of the earth, Jam. 5. 7. before he can enjoy them, or estimate their worth: Thy hopes, labors and profit may be buried under the clods for a while: We cannot sow and reap (saith one) in a day: The more excellent and durable the fruit is, the longer is it before it comes to maturity: rare ripe fruits are soon rotten: hypocrites blossom apace, and cast their leaves as fast, Mat. 13. 21. Though 'tis matter of shame, that those trees which have less earth, and least nourishment, should grow fastest; yet the reason is, they take up no time in getting root, and growing downward; and hence all their growth is outward. Thirdly, It may be 'tis a winter-time with thy soul; the Sun of Righteousness is withdrawn from thee, and thy lightsom days are gone, Cant. 2. 11, 12. The Comforter that should have relieved thy soul, is far from thee, Lam. 1. 16. It may be thou hast sin'd away his warming presence, and lost thy first spring; hence 'tis the flowers do not appear: Yet here's thy comfort, though thy winter be not a time of fruit, yet God will make it to thee a time toward fruitfulness.

Advice 2.

2. You that have any good Trading for Heaven, be exhorted to enlarge your Trade; drive a greater Trade of godliness every day, as men that prosper in the world do; they build larger barns, fairer houses, greater shops, get more goods, buy more land, and widen the bounds of their interests: So should you Christians, if God bless your heavenly substance, and prosper your souls; if the gain of godliness come in, lay it out to greaten godliness, as biting Usurers do, take use upon use; convert your gettings into your Trade; put your incomes into bank, and your blessings into stock, trading on them. Think

First, On the smallness of thy first stock, and thy low estate at thy setting up, A Syrian ready to perish, Deut. 26. 5. thy grace was small, a grain of mustard seed, Mat. 13. 31. thy capacity is weak, a new-born babe, 1 Pet. 2. 3. You began with one talent, and have you not reason to improve it? you were the fewest of all people, Deut. 7. 7. I taught Ephraim also to go, taking him by the arm, Hos. 11. 3. as a little weak child; a dry tree, Psal. 56. 3. a tender plant, Isa. 53. 2. which need addition.

Secondly, Consider what a poor Trade most men drive for Heaven this day; few that seek the things that are Christ's, and make Religion their business. All men seek their own things; the multitude of Professors, as well as others, wonder after this beast the world: We may say of Religion, as the Prophet did of Zion: This is godliness which no man seeketh after, Jer. 30. 17. Few Israelites, in whom there is no guile; few Noah's, perfect in their generation, walking with God; few Calebs, who fulfill after God. Most men's Religion lies in notion, profession, talkings, frames, privileges, going to Meetings, getting into Churches; but few make conscience of their words and ways, their promises and duties; few second-table men and women, that cause their light to shine before men; and as Zacharias and Elizabeth, walking in all the commands and ordinances of God blameless, Luke 1. 6. doing justly, showing mercy, and walking humbly with their God, Mich. 6. 8. visiting the fatherless and widow in their affliction, and keeping themselves unspotted from the world, Jam. 1. 27. And should not this provoke thy zeal for the Lord of Hosts, to see the Altars of Religion down, and so few friends of godliness left, and stir up thy holy ambition to excel and do more for God than others? It would argue a brave spirit, and be a worthy attempt to offer a lift at fallen godliness, with thy life as well as lip, and by the raised splendor of thy holy conversation, as a City on a hill, to provoke others to an imitation, saying, Come up hither.

Think also what an excellent Trade the Saints and Angels in Heaven drive, who have their portion in hand, and dwell in the City of the great King, who are always receiving and rendering, driving a whole Trade for God, above all hazards and interruptions: They always behold their Father's face, and serve him day and night in his Temple, with palms in their hands, with songs in their mouths, and their Crowns at his feet, and how far you are beneath these glorious Merchants. Think what a breadth you have yet to fill up in godliness, and what advances you must make in holiness, before you can get up to their pitch, and have a place amongst them that stand by, Zach. 3. 7. and is it not time yet to build the house of God? Hag. 1. 2. and that you hasten to your work, and raise higher stories for God every day, pressing after greater measures of grace, till you come to the fullness of the stature of Christ, and those perfections of glorified Saints and Angels?

Fourthly, When will you be fit for a return into your own Country, and a comfortable account of your Stewardship, if you be so slothful and contracted in your Heavenly Trade? When will your ships be loaden, and your sacks full for a departure hence, if you trade at such a rare, and attend your soul-thrivings no better? your Treasure is deep, and calls for more digging; your Crown is afar off, and requires faster running; your Reward is large, greater enlargements of labors are needful to meeten you for it. O think how far glory is above all your proportions of grace and duty; and what need you have to press after more enlargedness in your souls, and suitableness for your estate above.

Fifthly, The greater Trade you drive for Heaven, the less trouble; 'tis not so in earthly Trades; there the more work, the more weariness; but Religion carries refreshment in its work. John 4. 34. My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work. Prov. 3. 17. Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. O the sweetness and delicate pleasure which vigorous pursuits of holiness afford! Cant. 2. 3. I sate under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste. If persons intermeddle not with the joy of godliness, 'tis because they neglect the work of it; they eat not the kernel, because they break not the shell; Christ's myrrh is to be gathered, and his honey eaten with the honey-comb, which must be squeezed out ere eaten, Cant. 5. 1. Rabbi Solomon takes the comb 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , for a Cane, out of which the honey is sucked, or the sugar boiled out. They that will eat Christ's pleasant bread, must work hard for it; his idlers have none of his dainties; the greater the labor, the sweeter is the rest. The Lord's way is not tiresom, unless to flesh and blood: the more you run in it, the less weary. Isa. 40. 31. They shall run, but not be weary, walk, but not faint: And though they should be weary in well doing, through their carnal sloth, yet they are not weary of it.

Sixthly, The greater Trade, the richer; 'tis not always so in worldly employments; men may labor in vain, and sit down in sorrow, but godliness is profitable for all things, Isa. 55. 2. 1 Tim. 4. 8. And the Heavenly Trade brings in the true Treasure, as I have already shewn; and the more employment, the more profit.

Seventhly, The larger Trade you drive for Heaven, the more you have of that honor that comes down from Heaven, Rom. 2. 10. Glory, and honor, and peace to everyone that worketh good. The greater Trade, the greater riches, and the greater riches, the greater reputation: The rich hath many friends, Prov. 14. 20. The greater Trade you drive for Heaven, the greater regard you have from God; the more of his presence is with you, his delight in you, and blessing upon you; the Spouses growth and fruitfulness, was much taking upon the heart of Christ. How fair and how pleasant art thou O Love for delights! Cant. 7. 6, 7. This thy stature is like to a Palm-tree, and thy breasts to clusters of grapes. The Palm-tree is an emblem of growth and fruitfulness; the more it is oppressed, the more it grows, and no tree more fruitful; 'tis called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , always having leaves: Naturalists say, 'tis never without leaves and fruit; when some fruit is ripe (as Pliny tells us) other fruit is growing It hath leaves in the highest branches, wherever the sweet sap comes (saith Alsted) 'Tis a tree that's exceeding profitable; some reckon three hundred and sixty advantages that this Palm-tree yields, and hence the Egyptians make it a symbol of the solar year, which consists of three hundred sixty five days: and its fruit is wonderfully restorative and nourishing, repairing the decayed strength, and radical moisture of man's body, Alsted. Theol. Nat. and therefore a fit metaphor to express the Church's fruitfulness, in which the Lord Jesus takes such great delight; he gets up early to the Vineyard, to see if the Vine flourish, whether the tender grape appear, and the Pomegranate bud forth, Cant. 7. 12. So delightful is the view of a flourishing people unto Christ: The more you thrive in grace, the more will you have of Christ's company; and that's honorable.

Eighthly, The greater Trade you drive for Heaven, the more useful you are while on Earth; the larger capacities you have to do good to others, and to serve your generation, which is a blessed thing. 'Tis more blessed to give than to receive, Acts 20. 35. 1 Tim. 6. 17, 18. Charge them that are rich in this world, that they do good, that they be rich in good works, that they be ready to distribute, willing to communicate. The richer you are in grace, the more able you are to do good, and not only able, but the more willing also. The reason Christians have no more heart to do good, and to communicate, is their soulpoverty; they are not rich in grace, they have but little spiritual Treasure, little grace to communicate; their hands are shut, because their hearts are empty; but the more divine treasure you have, the more ready will you be to do good, and to lay out both your outward and inward riches. O how useful may rich men be in the places where they live, if God give them hearts to do it! and how helpful may such be in this day of soul-wants, who are increased with spiritual goods? there are many impoverished souls this day who are ready to perish for want of light, peace and comfort; perplexed with doubts, darkness, and distressing fears, and have none to help them. O how refreshing, in such a day of soul-exigencies, would it be to have some rich neighbors among them, some prosperous Jobs! Who with-hold not the poor from their desire, nor cause the eyes of the Widow to fail, Job 31. 16, 17, 19. Who would draw forth their soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul, Isa. 58. 10. Who could not eat their morsel alone, or see the poor to perish for want of clothing: To be eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame, Job 29. 15. To speak a word in season to him that is weary, and to comfort others with the same comforts they have received of God. Christians, make haste to be rich in grace, that ye may be rich in good works; that ye may cast in much into the Lord's treasury, Mark 12. 41. and out of your abundance cast into the offerings of God, Luke 21. 4. Then should the blessing of the poor, that was ready to perish, come upon you, Job. 29. 13. and the fruit of well-doing be your savoury meat, on which the Lord would daily feed you.

Ninthly, The greater Trade you drive for Heaven now, the greater will your estate in Heaven be hereafter: 2 Tim. 4. 8. Henceforth is laid up for me a Crown of righteousness; which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me at that day; and not to me only, but to all that love his appearing. To me, who have run my race, finished my course, and kept the faith: To me, who have wrought hard in the Vineyard, and traded diligently for Heaven in the World: For me, yea for all such as enlarge their heavenly Trade, is laid up, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , (as Parents do Portions for their children, saith Zanchi) a Crown of righteousness: glory suitable to their improvements of grace; called a Crown, to note its excellency; and of righteousness, to note its equity: It shall bear a proportion to all that grace, labors and faithfulness that is in Saints; and infinitely beyond it. A far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, 2 Cor. 4. 17. God will not leave out the least item of the Saints right in the great day of righteousness; A cup of cold water; a little meal to the Prophet Elisha; a mite in the treasury; a desire to build God's house: all shall be remembered in that day: Mercy gives the Crown, but Justice fits it for the overcomer's head. God crowns (saith Beda) his own gifts, not thy merits: He first gives grace in the time of mercy, and then crowns it in the day of Judgment: And is not this argument enough? yea constraint on an ingenious heart, to labor after the greatest latitude of holiness? Is not Heaven enough to requite all thy duties and hardships on earth? What's enough, (saith one) if Rome be counted little? So what can be counted great, if Heaven be small, and not price enough for all thy holy strivings, and utmost progress in the way of life?

O attend your proficiency in this heavenly Trade! your hearts and hands can never be too deep in the concerns of this upper World; in this you can never be too covetous: 1 Cor. 12. 31. Covet earnestly the best gifts, Take heed of putting stands and limits to your holiness; (the course of all unsanctified souls:) In this only is it lawful to remove the ancient bounds, and enlarge your spiritual inheritance, as far as possible; Reaching forth to the things that are before, and pressing forward to the mark for the price of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, Phil. 3. 13, 14. Nothing undoes Professors like to stinting their measures of holiness, and contenting themselves with present attainments; if they can get to such a pitch of light, grace, and comfort, as will secure their salvation and present welfare, they sit down, and go no further: this makes formalists and starvelings in Religion. Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward, Exod. 14. 15. is God's charge on his people in their passage to the heavenly Canaan: Be adding to your faith virtue, &c, 1 Pet. 1. 5. The greatest skill in this holy Arithmetic lies in Addition and Multiplication. Be still enlarging your store, get in more choice of heavenly wares, greater quantities, and more costly goods; and be putting off more and more goods, as you have opportunity; seeing great is not only your present advantage, but your reward in Heaven also, Mat. 5. 12.

Advice 3.

Thirdly, You that have good times for trading now, make provision for bad times; Lay in for changes: be not like the Grasshopper, that spends her All in Summer; and when the Winter comes, starves. Every Summer hath its Winter; North-winds have their season to blow on Christ's Garden, as well as the South, Cant. 4. 16. Good and evil have their turns with Christians in this life; 'Tis only the Diveses that have their good things in this life; here have the Saints no continuing City, Heb. 13. 4. Created comforts, whether spiritual or carnal, have their shakings and removes: Heb. 12. 27. And this word yet once more signifies the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made; that those things which cannot be shaken, may remain. The life of Believers is made up of vicissitudes; with Naomi, now full, then empty, Ruth 1. 21. like Ships in their passage to their Port; now they have calms, then storms; none but wicked, and they not always neither are exempted from their changes in this life, Psal.

55. 19. 'Twas an error in David's apprehensions, which he soon saw to his cost, that his mountain was made so strong, it should not be moved. Psal. 30. 6. I said, in my prosperity, I shall never be moved: Lord, by thy favor, thou hast made my mountain to stand strong; thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled. Prosperity and affliction have their different says and thoughts: think of thy most promising state here; though this be a beautiful structure, yet 'tis but a tabernacle: Sin puts wheels on every condition below, and makes them moveable: What that Ambassador said to the Romans, who boasted of the height and strength of their Walls; they were not so high, but sin could bring them down, may be said of the most flourishing condition of Saints in this World: Is thy store full now? a spending time may come: Dionysius the second had four hundred Ships, an Army of one hundred thousand foot, nine thousand horse, and the richest Magazine of any Prince, and yet lived to lose all. Christians have their spending as well as getting times, and should lay in for times of need.

There are four special seasons when gracious souls will have need of all their store to relieve them.

- Times of Temptation.
- Times of Desertion.
- Times of Affliction.
- And The time of Death.

First, Times of Temptation are spending times, and call for great succors to be laid in against such seasons. First, Because such times are certain to Believers, they will come. Psal. 11. 5. The Lord trieth the righteous: There's never a gracious soul, but some time or other the Lord trieth it, either immediately by his Spirit, or mediately by afflictions or temptations from men or devils. The Apostle tells us, every man is tempted. James 1. 14. But every man is tempted when he is drawn aside of his own lust and enticed. The best of men (saith one) are tempted, and that when they are at the best. [Capell of Temptation.] Adam in Paradise, Gen. 3. 6. Solomon after God had twice appeared to him, 1 King. 11. 9. Job after the evidences of his uprightness before God, and religious duties, Job 1. 1, 5. Peter after he had made a confession of Christ, and entered into covenant never to be offended at him, Mat. 26. 33. Yea Christ himself after his Baptism, and the Spirit's resting on him as a Dove, and the Father's owning of him by an audible voice from Heaven, Matth. 3. 17. chap. 4. 1. He (saith the former Author) that thinks he is so good that he ought not to be tempted, and so strong, that he need not fear to be tempted, hath need of a temptation, that by experience in himself, he might prove what he ought to have found in the Word; that of ourselves we have no strength. Capell.

Four things make temptations unavoidable to gracious souls:

- 1 God's good Pleasure.
- 2 Satan's Rage.
- 3 The Saints Corruptions.

- 4 And their Profit.

First, 'Tis God's good Pleasure to have them tried: The fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is, 1 Cor. 3. 13. whether it will bear the fire or no; hereby the excellency of his work, the greatness of his power appears, in the enduring graces of the Saints, and their standing after all. By this the Lord will confute the slanders of men and devils, who are still charging his people with hypocrisy, and falling away when trial comes; Doth Job fear God for naught? Job 1. 9. Put forth thine hand now, and touch his bone and flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face, Job 2. 5. This is the usual calumny of the Saints enemies; to confute which, and prove them liars, doth the Lord suffer his people to be tempted. 'Tis his will and purpose that all his people should be tried; and therefore 'tis unavoidable.

Secondly, Such is Satan's Rage, he cannot always keep his fingers from them; if he lets them alone, 'tis but for a season. Luke 4. 13. When the Devil had ended all the temptations, he departed from him for a season. Is Satan busy? then his work is not done; hast thou any rest? 'tis because his tempting-time is not come; he is a roaring Lion, and cannot rest from seeking to devour, though he forbears attempting to devour for a season, when it makes to his greater advantage: Never expect freedom from temptation, till Satan's chain be shortened, or thy remove without his reach obtained, Rev. 20. 2, 3.

Thirdly, The Saints corruptions expose them to temptations; Where the carcass is, there the Eagles resort, Mat. 24. 28. While the Saints have galled backs they can expect no freedom from flies. If Sampson be bound, the Philistines will be upon him. The cause of those sins is in us whereof the occasion is from Satan, Capell. Till the fire of Hell be out in the Saints, the Devil will not lay down his bellows; where there is no sin, there is no matter for temptation to work on; as where there is no morbid matter, there contagion cannot so easily fasten, corruption keeps open the door for Satan; never look for silence from Satan, till you find cessation from sin.

Fourthly, The profit and good of gracious souls do necessitate it: By this means they come to see their own vileness; were it not for temptation, they could not see the greatness of their corruption: David, Solomon, Hezekiah, Peter, did not think their hearts were so abominable, till left to temptation, which stirs the mud, and brings up the bottom to the top; and this helps to abase them, and make them more vile in their own eyes. By this also they see their own weakness, and their need of Christ; and are more effectually brought out of themselves to the Lord Jesus for succor and victory. And by temptations from Satan they come to be acquainted with his devices, 2 Cor. 2. 11. and more skilled in his wiles and stratagems (no small advantage to one that is in a state of warfare with him.) This way also doth the Lord winnow his Saints, and by these high winds fan and cleanse them. Luke 22. 31. Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat; and brings them to more conformity to their head, and to greater establishment in grace, which are glorious advantages to Believers, promised in the New Covenant, and this way accomplished, which makes temptations necessary to Wisdom's Merchants, and renders it their great concern to lay in provision against them.

Secondly, As temptations are certain, and will come; so they are shaking when they come; they are part of that rain, flood and wind which did beat vehemently on the sandy building, that it fell, Mat. 7. 27. Luke 6. 49. Temptations are part of the Devil's Artillery, his fiery darts and cruel buffetings which none can bear without the whole Armor of God upon him, and then too; all they can do is but to stand, Ephes. 6. v. 13, 16. They are so potent and prevailing, as that none but such as are in Christ can stand their ground under them. And in time of temptation fall away, Luke 8. 13. Receive the Word with joy, seem to love God, and delight in his ways for a season, till temptations come to the purpose, and then fall away. There are some temptations are more easy to be born, but when Satan sets on a soul with all his might, there's no standing without divine succor, and the Lord's opening a way to escape. Temptation is reckoned amongst the sorest afflictions that the Saints do undergo, 1 Cor. 10. 13. Heb. 2. 18. Heb, 11. 37. They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, they were tempted, they were slain with the sword. No suffering like temptations, for they draw the soul to sin, which is more cruel than death to a soul that loves Christ. O Christians, what need have you then to be laying in for an hour of temptation, seeing it will surely come, and seeing it will be so terrible when it comes!

Get yourselves well furnished with wisdom, that you may know Satan's devices, that you may be able to distinguish between temptation and corruption, and able to answer the Objections, and subtle reasonings of Satan; you must have experience also to encourage your hope, and strengthen your patience, that instances of former relief in the like cases may lift up your head, and strengthen your expectations in new Trials also. You must lay in store of faith to guard your hearts, and shield your heads from the fiery darts of Satan; you must get your integrity cleared, and the uprightness of your heart and way evidenced; that's of great use also to bear up your Spirit under all his charges against you. Make much of every breathing of his Spirit in you, and take care you quench not any of his motions: God (saith one) doth often leave us to own Satan's suggestions for our own, because we do not own God in his holy motions and breathings. And have good evidences of your interest in Christ, and assurance of his love to you, and assured help in the time of need; taking special care to have corruptions weakened, and a growing mortification in your souls; that so when Satan comes he may find nothing in you to fasten his temptations on: This calls for your provident care, to store your souls against times of Trial.

Secondly, Times of desertion are spendingtimes, which will need a full stock, when the Lord doth hide his face, and withdraw the sense of his love, and influence of his quickening presence: This the Lord may do, and hath done; he hath left the dearly beloved of his soul; gone from his habitation; compass himself about with a cloud; left his children in darkness as those that have been long dead. 'Tis just with God (saith Mr. Cooper) to deny us the comfort of our graces, when we deny him the glory of them. Isa. 45. 15. Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself, O God of Israel the Savior. Job 23. 8, 9. Behold I go forward, but he is not there, and backward, but cannot perceive him, on the left hand where he doth work, but I cannot behold him; he hideth himself on the right hand that I cannot see him. Isa. 49. 14. But Zion said, The Lord hath forsaken me, my God hath forgotten me. This was one of the greatest sufferings on Christ, his apprehensions of his Father's forsaking him. O God my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Mat. 27. 46. Here was a total and final desertion that our Lord Jesus came under as to his sense, and the effects of it; he saw nothing of the comforts of the Divine presence, to the last breath of life, but died in this darkness. Verse 50. Jesus when he had cried again with a loud voice (that is, as he had done, verse 46.) he gave up the Ghost; and had no comfort to the last minute of life: And if God hath done so to the green tree, how much more may he to the dry? if he forsake his natural and only beloved Son, he may surely hide himself from his Adopted Sons, even to their dying hour: And this is a condition full of consternation and terror: The poena damni, the loss of God, and all good, is thought to be a far greater punishment to the damned, than all the punishment of sense and torment. O the dreadful apprehensions that good souls have had about God's forsaking them! 'Tis a Hell on Earth, and the beginning of the second death, to be under a real sense of God's removal from the soul. O the amazing dread, and consuming error, that Job, Asaph, Heman, and others were filled with, by such apprehensions of God's withdrawment from them, and his wrath lying hard upon them! Soul, though now it be a time of light with thee, the Candle of the Lord shines upon thee; thou walkest in the light of his countenance, liest in his bosom, and art dandled on his knee; yet may the days of darkness be many, and thy soul lie in the shadow of death, and under real apprehensions of the Lord's departure from thee, and displeasure against thee, and then thou wilt find need of all the cordials, light and hope imaginable. O lay in sure and unquestionable satisfaction about this great case; that God is really and inseparably yours; and under all your clouds, fears and guilt, think well of God. 'Tis hard (saith one) to think ill of ourselves, and well of God at the same time. Store yourselves with promises and experiences, with faith, hope, patience, and every grace that may bear you up in such a Trial, and cordial your fainting heart under such dangerous deliquiums. If God should damn me (saith one) I have two arms, the one of faith, and the other of love, with which I would embrace him, and carry him with me, and his presence would make Hell itself a Heaven to me.

Thirdly, Times of sore affliction, and distressing calamities, are spending-times, and will try your store of grace, and strength to bear it, and to get through it; and such you may live to see: The Cross is the usual way to the Crown, and affliction the lot of them that will live godly in Christ Jesus. And we must through much tribulation enter into the Kingdom of God, Act. 14. 22. The fining-pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold, Prov. 17. 3. And the fan for the wheat; the condition of Believers in this world cannot long bear prosperity without loss to their spiritual part. Christians under settled comforts in this world, are like standing pools, which soon gather mud; and as 'tis said of Moab, so 'tis with the people of God. Jer. 48. 11. Moab hath been at ease from his youth, and he hath settled on his lees, and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he gone into captivity, therefore his taste remained in him, and his scent is not changed. The sweetest nights that ever Jacob spent were in the field; so with Peter in prison; and David had those large affections to rise at midnight, and God's Word was sweet to him when his trouble was bitter, saith Dr. Harris. But by afflictions the Lord refines his people from their dross. Though the wisdom of the world (saith Mr. Bradford) think of the cross according to sense, and therefore flieth from it as from a most great ignominy and shame; yet God's scholars have learned to think otherwise of the Cross, as the framehouse wherein God frameth his children, like to his Son Christ: the furnace that fineth God's gold, the high way to Heaven, the suit and livery of God's servants, the earnest and beginning of all consolation and glory. Acts & Mon. 3. Vol. page 322. If you will be Christ's Disciple, you must expect tribulation; If need be you are in heaviness for a season. God's fire is in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem: Prepare for afflictions, by which God prepares his people for himself. He is not fit for the reward in glory (saith Bernard) who is not ready to ascend the Gibbet as the way to it. We are fallen on the last times, which are times of abounding iniquity, Mat. 24. 12. sinning, and therefore like to be suffering-times, called perilous times; cruel times, 2 Tim. 3. 1. Beza renders it, troublesome times; Tremellius, hard times, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, it comes from 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, to bring damage, or to overturn; they will be overturning times; times of desolation, as Christ prophesies of them, Mat. 24. 15. days of vengeance. Luke 21. 22. These be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled: Great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no nor ever shall be, Mat. 24. 21. called the great and terrible day of the Lord, when the Sun shall be turned into darkness, and the Moon into blood. Joel 2. 31. The Sun shall be turned into darkness, and the Moon into blood before the great and terrible day of the Lord come. Cocceius thinks this time to fall under the sixth seal, Rev. 6. 12. under which 'tis said, These are they which come out of great tribulation. I rather think that the sixth seal reckons with the enemies of God's people, and brings redemption to the Saints under great tribulation. That which we may clearly gather hence is, that those last times will be times of sore calamities, both personal and public, to Nations, and to the Church of God; and what a portion of those amazing troubles may fall upon the people of this age, we know not: this is certain, God seems to give his call from Heaven, as well as out of his Sanctuary, to prepare to meet with him, Amos 4. 12. to gird up the loins of our mind, Rev. 16. 15. to keep our garments on; to watch, lest he come as a thief, Luke 12. 35, 36. to have our vessels stored with Oil, and our lamps burning; and to reckon on midnight sitting up, and be as men that look for the coming of their Lord: Matth. 25. 6. To watch and pray always, that we may be counted worthy to escape the things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man, Luke 21. 36.

Fourthly, The time of Death is a spending time, and calls for great provisions for that long journey; and great change the Soul is then passing into. Death is the King of Terrors: O how amazing is the sight of it to a natural eye, and an awakened conscience! the work that death comes to do is frightful work to flesh and blood; to pluck a soul out of its ancient dwellings, to take it from all its acquaintance, friends, relations, and earthly All, from the comforts of the whole World, never to see or enjoy them more, as they have done; nay, to pull down this earthly tabernacle, not to leave a stone upon a stone, but quite to demolish it to the ground, is a great change: to lay a writ on the soul's back, and in a moment to bring it to judgment, from all its acquaintance, friends, and dearest relations, to the vision of an infinite holy God, there to receive its eternal doom, and to enter into a new estate, out of which he shall never depart, either of blessedness or misery. To take the soul off from all the means of salvation, and possibility of change out of that estate into which, by death he enters; that if the soul should die in his sins, there's no future repentance, or anything can be done to mend his ill condition: this will be terrible to a guilty conscience, sensible of many sins unrepented of, many duties neglected, much time lost, great hypocrisies uncur'd, many fears unremoved, and doubts unanswered. Now for such a soul, in a moment, to come to judgment, and to have no time allowed him to set things in order for so great a compearance, and to state his account for that final Audit, is an amazing providence. The time of death is also a time of the greatest light, when the soul's eye shall be opened to see things as they are, no more in a glass, but face to face; then the soul that hath been dark all its days, shall see clearly things it never knew. As 'tis said of the Mole, that it is blind all its time, till it comes to die, and then it sees: So they that would not see, shall then see, and be ashamed; then shall souls see things as they are, and find that to be evil which they thought good, and that to be good which they thought to be evil. Death is the greatest informer, and makes the largest discovery of things that ever was; it brings to light the hidden things of darkness, sins the world never knew, and sins it may be the soul itself never saw, or thought itself guilty of: then will the least flaw, error, unsoundness, neglect, failing, be fully seen; then the things that now seem to be small, will then appear to be great; and those things that were taken for mountains, will be less than one single grain of dust.

Death is a time also when conscience hath its quickest senses, and liveliest acts, when it sees, hears, feels, fears, all things as they are, and without any other witness, becomes both Accuser and Judge: then Judas needed no Accuser to charge him, or Judge to condemn him, but his own conscience; nor Executioner to dispatch him, but his own hand. What's the matter, man, (said Mr. Perkins to a Malefactor, going up the ladder, and his countenance showing the inward terrors of his soul,) art thou afraid to die? O, no Sir, said he, but of a worse matter. So another upon her death-bed, and under a terrible sight of her wicked life, when one that was by offered something to comfort her against the fear of death, replied, Were it but to die, it were nothing: A world (said another, upon the border of eternity, and under conscienceaffrightings) for one inch of time! O give me one inch of time! Luther speaks of an Eremite who, a little before his death, stood very sad, never stirring out of his place for three days, having his eyes fixed towards Heaven; and being asked the reason of this posture, answered, he was afraid to die: His Scholars began to comfort him, telling him he need not to fear death, who had been so holy in his life; but he replies, 'tis true, I have lived well, and been obedient, but God's judgments are otherwise than Man's judgment, Tom. 4. fol. 50.

The time of death is a time of great temptation also; then Satan usually brings forth his chiefest strength to weaken the soul's faith; 'tis his last onset, and that is the hottest; as men that storm a Garrison, in their last assault they usually put forth their utmost strength: Then he opposeth us with most armed force. In this last assault, (saith Luther) 'tis not as in other temptations, where faith and hope doth fight; for here he sets upon the very resistance, and the strife is about striving, and the war is maintained by another war: Here the fight is, that it may be lawful to fight, and to resist him whose greatest policy is then to dissuade from resisting; laughing at our hope, as if it were already vanquished, and it were to no purpose to resist. This is a critical time, and hard to stand; the last enemy is death; when the soul must have the whole armor of God, and be found not in his own righteousness, but take sanctuary in the grace of God, the righteousness and faithfulness of Christ. Death is somewhat driery, (saith Mr. Cooper) and the streams of that Jordan between us and our Canaan run furiously; but they stand still when the Ark comes: let your anchor be cast within the veil, and fastened on the rock Jesus; let the end of the threefold cord be buckled to the heart; so shall ye go through. When thou art tempted, (saith Luther) and seest no way to escape; shut thine eye, answer nothing, and commit the cause to God: This (saith he) is the chiefest wisdom we should attend to in the hour of death. This was Bernard's course and comfort, when on the point of death; I have lived wickedly, (saith he) but thou, Lord Jesus Christ, enjoyest Heaven by a double right; first, because thou art the Son of God; then, because by thy death and passion thou hast obtained it: thou keepest the first thyself by thy birthright; the last thou bestowest on me, not for my works but of thy grace. Christians, you had need be well furnished for the hour of death, (your greatest and most difficult hour) laying in all the provisions you can for a sure and comfortable passage to glory. Thus you see Wisdom's Merchants have more to do than keep up present life and comfort, they must lay in for times to come; for times of temptation, desertion, affliction, and the hour of death.

Advice 4.

Fourthly, If you have good trading with God, then lay out for God. This is reasonable work, pleasing work, honorable work, profitable work.

First, 'Tis reasonable work to lay out for God; he deserves it, 'tis his due; all your mercies are his interest; I will return and take away my corn in the time thereof, and my wine in the season thereof; I will recover my wool and my flax given to cover her nakedness, Hos. 2. 9. Though God gives his people the use of mercy, yet he keeps the propriety in his own hand: God is the Alpha, and should be the Omega, the Author, and 'tis reasonable he should be the end of all our mercies. James 1. 17. Every good and perfect gift cometh down from the Father of lights: And (as beams from the Sun) is derived from his bounty, as his peculiar offspring. My goods are thy gifts (saith Augustine) All our good is either himself, or what comes from him: Both trading and thriving are from him, and should also be for him, both principle and interest are God's own, Mat. 25. 27. If you lay not out your mercies for God, you rob him of his due. Your mercies are the Lord's, not only by that interest he reserves in them, but by your resignation of them unto him. Christians, when you gave up yourselves to the Lord, you gave up all your interests and capacities also, 2 Cor. 5. 8. To keep back any part of your All from God, is to lie to the Holy Ghost. Acts 5. 3. Why hath Satan filled thy heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the Land: No lower terms will pass in reconcillation with God, than what Ahab yielded to Benhadad, 1 Kings 20. 4. My Lord O King according to thy saying I am thine, and all that I have. If you are not your own, much less anything you have, is absolutely yours. God gives his people But a conditional interest in all things beneath himself, so far as it suits his pleasure, use and glory. To keep back any part of your capacities and interests from God, when by his Word and Providence he calls for it, for his service, name and people is hypocrisy, lying, fraud and rebellion, and contrary to the Lord's undoubted interest, both by creation, redemption, and your own grant, Hos. 2. 8. 2 Cor. 7. 20.

Besides, you receive not your mercies as Owners, but as Stewards, to keep and use them for him, and according to his instruction, 1 Pet. 4. 10. As everyone hath received the gift (whether of grace, or gifts of grace, inward or outward gifts, spiritual or temporal, 'tis all one if he have received it) so let him administer the same, as good Stewards of the manifold grace of life. Your interests are God's gifts; your abundance, his Bounty and trust to be bestowed to his use and pleasure, for which you must give an account.

Secondly, 'Tis pleasing work to lay out for God: Paul counted not his life dear to lay out for Christ, Acts 20. 24. Peter and John rejoiced that they were counted worthy to part with their name, and to undergo reproach for Christ, Acts. 5. 41. Nazianzen was glad that he had something of value, to wit, his Athenian learning to part with for Christ. The Mother of William Hunter the Martyr rejoiced, that ever she was so happy as to bear such a child as could find in his heart to lose his life for Christ's Name sake, Acts and Mon. p. 13. 96. Nothing seems burdensome to do or part with for Christ, to a soul that loves him: How willingly did Jonathan strip himself of the Robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garments even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle, because he loved him; much more pleasing will it be to a soul loving Christ, to part with his All for Christ, 1 Sam. 18. 4.

Thirdly, 'Tis honorable work also to lay out for God; He that gives to the poor lendeth to the Lord, Prov. 19. 17. And is not this honorable to make God a debtor, and to get him who is over all blessed forever, to become bound to his creature: O what honor is this, that the Giver of All should seem to be beholding to his creatures, who have their All from him! Have you anything you can part with for Christ? think what honor 'tis that God entrusts you with the bestowing of such gifts for him; the Lord might have made you beggars, not givers; who hath made you to differ? why is grace, gifts, strength, estate, time, put into thy hand, and not into others? it shows a good opinion God hath of thy faithfulness, and so bespeaks honor: O let not God have cause to revoke this estimation!

Fourthly, 'Tis profitable work: The more you lay out for God, the more you get for yourselves; there's no such way to gather, as to scatter for God; your improvements of mercy to God's end, are but as sowing of seed, which will come in again with greater increase, 2 Cor. 9. 6. He that soweth sparingly, shall reap sparingly, and he that soweth bountifully, shall reap bountifully. Laying out for God is Trading secured, not liable to hazards, as earthly undertakings are, but under a promise of sure and great returns, as hath been proved, and that is profit. Laying out for God, is lending to God upon interest, Mat. 19. 29. where both principal and interest are sure. Prov. 19. 17. He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth to the Lord, and that which he hath given, will he pay him again. The Lord takes it as done to himself, and will repay with large use; he lends to the Lord upon bond for use, as the Hebrew imports, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, and he will surely repay it. God is bound for it, and therefore the debt is sure. 'Tis a great mistake in men, and that which starves their expensiveness for God, to think the more they give, the less they have; whereas laying out for God brings in principal and use; it sanctifies what is left, and brings it under a promise of increase. As the pouring out of the Widows Oil filled her vessels; the more she poured out, the more she had, 2 Kings 4. 5, 6. And as the Widow of Zarephath, by giving first to the Prophet, secured her own provision in a time of famine. 1 Kings 17. 13, 14. For thus saith the Lord God of Israel, the barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of Oil fail, until the day that the Lord sendeth rain upon the earth. Mal. 3. 10. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of Heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it. 'Tis men's niggardliness to God, and close-handedness to the poor, and pious uses, is one reason doubtless of the wastes and blastings on their outward interests this day. Prov. 11. 28. The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth shall be watered also himself. Cartwright and Baine think this is meant of spiritual gifts, as the former verse is of external good things. But as Mercer well observes, the sentence is general, and takes in any supplies that are given to such as are needy Such shall be made fat; he shall be so far from being impoverished thereby, as it shall increase his substance; He shall be watered as with showers in Autumn: The latter rain, which is fruitfulizing: The streams of charity are not like running water that passeth away, but as fruitful showers that come again with increase. Prov. 3. 9, 10. Honor the Lord with thy substance, so shall thy barns be filled with plenty. Multitude of promises might be heaped up, which give in a joint-testimony to this truth; as Mat. 25. 29. Eccles. 11. 1. Prov. 28. 27. Prov. 22. 9. Isa. 58. 7, 8, 10, 11. with many others, and are abundant security for the blessing to such as lay out for God.

Besides, this is a proof of your love to God, 2 Cor. 8. 24. Wherefore show ye to them, and before the Churches the proof of your love, 1 Joh. 3. v. 17. Whoso hath this worlds goods, and seeth his Brother hath need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? 1 John 4. 20. For he that loveth not his Brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? By true charity to your poor Brethren you evidence your love to God; that secures all your true and needed mercies.

Fifthly, This also is pleasing to God, Phil. 4. v. 18. Having received of Epaphroditus the things which were sent from you, an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God, Heb. 13. 16. Isa. 56. 4. and that is surely prosperous.

Then Christians, if God hath first given unto you; if you love him; if you would please him; if you would prosper in soul, body and estate, lay out for God: If you have freely received, freely give; whatever God hath entrusted you with, expend it for him.

First, Lay out your time for God: Among the many wastes of mercies souls are guilty of, this is not the least; waste of precious time: Though there is no creature-blessing of greater worth than time, in which a foundation is laid, of all those mercies that are eternal. Time is a talent, a treasure; not only a mercy, but that without which there can be no mercy: Consider for your improvement of Time,

First, Your Time is not yours, but God's, made by him, and for him. Psal. 76. 17. The day is thin, and the night is thine; thou hast prepared the Light and the Sun. Time is that space between two Eternities, limited by divine pleasure, to divine use. Job 14. 5. Seeing his days are determined, the number of his months are with thee; thou hast appointed his bounds that he cannot pass. And if Time be the Lord's, then 'tis fit it should be used for God. Give unto God the things that are God's. When thou sinnest or trifiest away this Time, think on this; now I rob God, and spend another's goods. You that hate robbery of men, be not thieves to God and your own souls: Time is God's, not thine own.

Secondly, Think how much you have lost of past Time, and this should make you choice of present Time. Psal. 90. 9. We spend our years as a tale that is told; which vanisheth into the Air and is soon gone. Much of our time (saith one) is plucked away from us, more is stolen away, but most of all doth slide away. O how little a piece of life is that we live! How much of thy time hath been consumed in the grave? How much in the market-place? much slept away in the Vineyard: When nature, self, the world and sin have had their shares of every day, how little a portion hath been left for God? Hence 'tis the Apostle advises Saints to redeem their Time; to get Time for God and their souls, though with some loss to other interests, because it hath been taken captive by self, sin and the world, and held prisoner so long. This waste of former Time makes it absolutely needful for them that will reach their journey's end before their day be gone, to redeem Time from their callings, recreations, refreshments, idleness and rest, for the recovery of neglected work, or they will find it wanting when they come to die. Give me my time again, said a woman on her deathbed, being under fears about her eternal state; nothing could relieve her troubled soul, who had lost salvation-time.

Thirdly, Consider how short and uncertain your remaining Time is, or may be: The whole Time of thy life is but a span, a hand-breadth, a post, a weaver's shuttle, a vapor, a tale that is told, as a flower of the field, things of no duration, Job 9. 21. Psal. 39. 5. James 4. 14. Time (saith one) is a short parenthesis in a long period; so short, that before we can name it, our present Time is become past Time. Our whole life (saith another) consists but of two days, the day of our birth, and the day of our death; for no sooner born, but we begin to die. Time is on the wing, hastening to Eternity every moment: Time travels when you sleep, and runs when you creep: Time goes on when you stop; and gets ground when you go back: As the stream hastens to the Ocean day and night; so doth Time to Eternity: O use your Time for God while you have it! it will shortly be none of yours; if you do not use it, you will lose it; you were as good let God have your Time, as to let it run away to no purpose; if duty do not improve it, rust will consume it; the Devil, World and Flesh will engross it; and 'tis better give it to God, than let the Moth and Caterpillar devour it. Besides,

Fourthly, Can you put it to better profit than to lay it out for God? he is the best chapman for your Time; nothing will give you so much interest for Time as God will; put all the gain of other Time into the scale, with the incomes of God's Time, and you will soon see the difference. Time laid out for God will be the best security for your own Time: Give God his Time, and he will give you your Time; all that Time that is needful for a blessed Eternity; There's no such way to enjoy Time, as to use it for God. Prov. 3. 16. Length of days is in her right hand. Time expended for God will not only secure, but sanctify your Time also, as the first-fruits did the lump, Rom. 11. 16. Besides, Time devoted to God brings in eternal interest; Though Time be but a thing temporal, yet improved, it will bring to things eternal, 2 Cor. 4. 18. nay it will bring you mercy in the time of need: Give God your working-time, and he will feed you when in your unserviceable time. When I was a young man (said Mr. Bruce) I was diligent, and lived by faith in the Son of God, but now I am old, and am not able to do so much, yet he condescends to feed me with lumps of sense. [Fulfill. of Scripture.]

Fifthly, you must give an account for your time to God; he takes notice of men's time, how 'tis spent; and accordingly will judge them: Luke 13. 7. These three years I come seeking fruit on this Fig tree, and can find none; cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground? Psal. 95. 10. Forty years long was I grieved with this people. Luke 19. 44. Because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation. God looks for fruit from his people, according to their months, Ezek. 47. 12. O how much is it your concernment to order your disbursements of time to a consistency with your comfortable account in the day of Christ! then you will wish God had more of your time, when you come to reckoning for it: what a blank will there be in our account of time, if it be not better bestowed than hitherto? That time will yield you most comfort when you come to eternity, which was spent for God here.

Sixthly, How can you bethink a little time for God, who hath not thought an eternity of mercy too much for you? Christians, 'tis salvavation, with eternal glory, he hath prepared for you, 2 Tim. 2. 10. A Crown incorruptible, an Inheritance that fadeth not away, a Kingdom that cannot be shaken: Upon this very argument the Apostle presses the Saints to unweariedness in present work, Gal. 6. 8. Think how disingenuous 'tis thus to requite the Lord that hath dealt so bountifully with you; to with-hold your time from him, who first gave it to you, and hath denied it to others; and will shortly close up your troublous time with eternal rest, in blessed mansions of purest pleasures with himself: Let this love of Christ shame you for misimproved time, and constrain you, for the future, to lay out all possible time for God.

Secondly, Lay out your strength for God; he is the God of your strength, he hath right to it, and use for it, Psal. 43. 2. He hath work for you which calls for all your strength: His works are great, greatly to be sought out of all that have pleasure therein, Psal. 111. 2. His mercies are great, and greatly to be praised: Psal. 86. 13. His anger is great, and greatly to be feared: 2 King. 23. 26. His trials and rebukes on his own children are many times great, which need great faith and patience to bear up under them, and the strength of grace to make a right use of them: Psal. 71. 10. Which hath shewn me great and sore troubles: You do not know what need you may have of all the strength your hearts and graces are capable to receive, to carry you through your remaining trials and troubles: you have not yet resisted unto blood, or been brought to fiery trials, nor seen such days as never yet were or shall be And therefore you had need be girded with strength, and to be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus; and one way to it, is to use what you have for God, Heb. 5. 14. God's service also calls for expended strength: Luke 10. 27. Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy strength, 1 Chron. 26. 8. The strength of thy heart laid out, inward strength for God in his service, the strength of your whole souls; and outward strength, the strength of your bodies also in the work of God. So did our Lord Jesus, he wasted his strength in the service of his Father, that at thirty four years old, he was taken to be near fifty: he was weary in his work. And Paul did spend, and was spent for Christ, 2 Cor. 12. 15. And David cried out, My knees are weak through fasting, Psal. 119. 24. Glorify God in your bodies, and in your spirits, which are the Lord's: 1 Cor. 6. 20. In labors more abundant: 2 Cor. 11. 23. Striving for the faith of the Gospel. Religion is no easy work; Ministers (saith Mr. Burroughs) must venture their strength for Christ, and so must all that are Christ's: 2. Cor. 11. 27. In weariness, in painfulness, in watchings. Religion is worth all your labors and exhausted strength; men tire themselves for the world; how much more should they for God and Glory?

Thirdly, Lay out your gifts and graces for God, and the good of souls: 1 Cor. 12. 7. The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal: that's God's end why he gives gifts to any, that everyone who hath them should improve them to his glory, and the good of others. A capacity of serving God, and furthering his Kingdom in the World, is such a privilege as the Saints in Heaven enjoy not: and the Angels, when employed in any subserviency towards it, readily and cheerfully prosecute it. Angels are vigilant creatures, and wait for opportunities; and when they come, will not lose them, [Greenh.] Yea, 'tis such a prize, as being once lost, can never be enjoyed again; nor gracious souls ever more return to their stewardship, when once 'tis given up; and therefore should be heedfully regarded, and faithfully used while continued. God gives not talents to be napkin'd up, nor lights to be hid under a bushel: none of us liveth to himself, Rom. 14. 7. All the characters of Saints, and those relations they stand in, engage to usefulness: They are the lights of the world set in a candlestick, that they may cause their light to shine forth before men, Mat. 5. 14, 15. They are the salt of the earth, of purpose to savor others. Mat: 5. 13. If salt hath lost its savor, 'tis good for nothing but the dunghill. They are stars in God's firmament, to communicate their light and influence unto others, 1 Cor. 15. 41. Vessels in God's house to be meet for use, 2 Tim. 2. 20, 21. Stones in his building, which have a mutual usefulness to bear up each other, and toward preserving the whole, Eph. 2. 2. Branches in the Vine, that yield their fruit for the cheering the hearts of men, Judge. 9. 13. Trees in God's garden full of sap, Psal. 104. 16. Members in the body, to impart their nourishment to each other, Eph. 4. 16. and discharge their respective duties, of sympathy, care, and helpfulness to their fellow members: 1 Thes. 5. 14. We exhort you, brethren, to warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble minded, support the weak, be patient towards all men: Use all your capacities for God while you have them, lest he take them from you, or opportunity to improve them.

Fourthly, Lay out your earthly interests for God, Prov. 3. 19. Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of thy increase: Give God his due in maintaining his Messengers, and keeping up his worship; alluding to those first fruits of Israel's increase, which were the Lord's by special appropriation to his service, Exod. 22. 29. and supply of his ministry among them, Lev. 23. 20. the equity of which obliges in Gospel-times, though their ceremonial and judicial respect cease: and this duty is reinforc'd under the Gospel by more ample arguments taken from the light of Nature, the law of Moses, and will of Christ, 1 Cor. 9. from ver. 9. to 15. To this head is refer'd that command; Gal. 6. 6. Let him that is taught in the word communicate to him that teacheth in all good things; for God will not be mocked: (as they do who pretend Religion, and yet are defective in this manifest duty,) pressing them to unweariedness in this expensiveness for God, whatever discouragements they meet with upon the assurance of the blessed fruit of obedience to the will of Christ herein, ver. 7, 8, 9. 'Tis not the maintaining or welfare of a few men in the World, that is the design of this great command of Christ; but the tendency this hath to the promulgation of the Gospel, and keeping up the instituted worship of God, the conversion of Sinners, and edification of Saints successively in every generation, to which these supplies are necessary, that the servants of Christ might attend on their ministrations without distraction; and whoever (a subject of Christ, and sharer of this privilege) draws back from this duty, he is chargeable not only for violating the royal righteous law of Christ, but for being guilty of subverting his Government, Crown and Dignity; and endeavoring in his measure, the ruining his interest, of hindering the conversion and edification of souls; and whatever damage hereby comes to the spiritual or eternal welfare of souls; it will be laid on their heads in the day of the righteous judgment of Christ.

Another greatly concerning duty contained in this Scripture, is charitable communications, feed the poor, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, relieve the oppressed. [Bede Alapid.] This is to honor God with your substance; not to spend it on your lusts, to live high, to fare deliciously, to build your nests on high; but to make your abundance a supply for the good of those that are in wants, 2 Cor. 8. 14. Isa. 58. 7. 10. Mat. 5. 42. Jam. 1. 27. Heb. 13. 16. Luke 14. 12, 13. Otherwise,

First, All your Religion is in vain, James 1. v. 26, 27. Your knowledge, desires, affections, frames, tastes, enjoyments, marks, experiences, seeming graces, duties, are all nothing, and can never prove the truth of your grace, the safety of your estates, and goodness of your religion, if you are found defective in this great duty of Charity. Psal. 112. 4, 5. Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness; he is gracious, and full of compassion, and righteous. A good man showeth favor, and lendeth. Let men say what they will, if they be covetous, hard-hearted, have no compassion to them that are in wants, have no heart to give or lend to needy ones; they have no true grace in them. Verse 9. He hath dispersed, he hath given to the poor, his righteousness endureth forever. Men may talk, and pray, and seem to be eminent Christians; profess love to God and their neighbors, and yet all the while be deceived, and have not a jot of grace in them, while their hearts are cruel, their hands shut to their poor Brethren. Remember the young man in the Gospel, and fear thine own estate if thy heart be glued to thy possessions:—How dwelleth the Love of God in him! 1 Joh. 3. 17. He loves not God, and God loves not him; that shuts up the bowels of his compassion from his poor and afflicted Brother. That's pure Religion, and undefiled before God to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world, Jam. 1. 27. Shew me thy faith by thy works. Jam. 2. 18. Religion (saith one) is not only contemplative, but the greatest part of it like the Mathematick's 〈2 pages missing〉 bargains, how will they stand for a penny! in chacharity, how cold are they! how hard is it to screw an alms out of their hands! if this be Religion, the Lord keep me from such Religion. This begets an odium in the men of the world against Religion, and the ways of God: But woe to that man by whom offenses come; it had been better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the midst of the Sea, Mat. 18. 6, 7.

Fourthly, Acts of Charity purely done will evidence your right to glory. Mat. 25. 34, 35, 36. Come ye blessed of my Father inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundations of the world; for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came to me. The enquiry in that great day will not be after men's profession, light, frames and duties of Worship, but after the fruits of their faith and love as evidential, not causal, of their right to glory, Here is held out (saith one) not the cause of their salvation, but the sign and testimony of them that believe, &c. The Kingdom is obtained by way of Inheritance: (Come inherit the Kingdom:) and prepared for them, as a portion for children, not purchased by them as the procurements of their works: The reward is freely bestowed on all interested in Adoption-grace, of which title the bearing proof in that day will be the fruits of love to those that are Christ's; words will not be sufficient to demonstrate this love then; it will not serve men's turn to say they loved Saints, except it were extended to all, yea the least of Saints, and proved by acts of love, and communications to all their necessities; and that not some small pittance of their abundance, which they valued not, but it must be such portions and kinds of relief, which their necessities call for; in visiting, feeding, clothing, owning, comforting, receiving into their houses, and whatever help they were capable to express, and this as readily and heartily expended to them as they would lay them out to themselves and theirs, that being the rule of Charity: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, Matt. 22. 39. The want of this evidence, whatever else may be pretended, will finally and eternally cast souls in that last and terrible day, Mat. 25. 41. to the end. Do not deceive thy soul with false hopes of glory; not one mark will pass for Heaven, where there is a hard heart, and close hands towards poor and distressed Saints: For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shown no mercy, Jam. 2. 13. There is no room for you in Divine bowels, if you shut up your own bowels against them that are in misery. See in that Parable, Mat. 18. 33, 34, 35. the dreadful end of those who are any way cruel to their fellowservants, having themselves tasted the mercy of their Lord. The liberal distributions of your estates to the poor, is the only way to make them truly serviceable to your souls, whiles this becomes the occasion of your reception into everlasting habitations. Luke 16. 9. Make to yourselves friends of the Mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations The mammon or riches of this world, is called the riches of unrighteousness, because they are unrighteously gotten, or unrighteously kept, to the detriment of those that need them; or unrighteously spent to the hurt of those that have them; but the way to change their nature, and to make them profitable, is to lay them out to the poor, who will receive you, or witness for you in that day, to prove the truth of your love, by which you shall be received into glory.

Fifthly, They are the sure way to blessing here. Luke 6. 38. Give, and it shall be given to you, good measure pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom; for with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again: Intimating, that giving to the poor, is but lending to the Lord, as hath been shown, and it shall be surely repaid in this life, either in kind, or in value, in such things as they need; yea oftentimes in the same coin, and that to sufficient requital, good measure amplified by three metaphors, pressed down, shaken together, and running over; that is (saith Scultetus) God will so bless them, that they shall be sensible they are sufficiently repaid, 2 Cor. 9. 6. Deut. 15. 10, 11. Mat. 10. 41, 42. Psal. 41. 12. Prov. 11. 24. Job was a man of great Charity, Job 29. 12, 13. a man of great prosperity in the world, v. 6, 7. and though for the trial of his faith he was stripped of all for a season, yet did the Lord after all turn his water into wine, chap. 42. 10. Rahab entertained the spies, and saved herself and family from ruin by it: The Shunamite, the Widow of Zarephath got by laying out acts of Charity to the Prophet. Tiberius the second was a person of great liberality to the poor; 'tis said of him, that whatever Justinus his predecessor had contracted by covetousness, Tiberius freely distributed to the poor: And when Sophia, Justine's Widow, reproved him for his excess of Charity, he replies, I trust in the Lord that our Exchequer shall never want money, while the poor are maintained out of it. Neither did his expectations fail; for as the same Author reports, he found a vast treasure in his Palace, hidden under the pavement, which could scarce be emptied for divers days: Thus God blessed his bountiful hand. Mr. Gouge, in his Surest and Safest Way of Thriving (a book worth your getting, and to which I refer you) gives many modern instances of this great truth; I shall for their sakes who have not the Book mention this one, concerning the pious and imitable resolution of Mr. John Walter, Citizen of London, who having a sufficient estate to maintain his Charge, resolved what further estate God should entrust him with, to bestow the same on charitable uses; after which vow he found his estate wonderfully increasing: A worthy president to such as have enough to live comfortably upon, to put bounds to their further purchases, and entitle their surplusage to the service of Christ, and refreshments of his Saints; a course men will one day find more gainful, than to join house to house, and field to field. 'Tis the best way (saith Chrysologus) for a rich man to make the bellies of the poor his barn, to succor the fatherless and needy, and thereby to lay up treasures in Heaven. Gregory the Great was so devoted to Charity, that all what he had seemed to be the common granary of the Church. 'Tis said of Cyprian, he was the blind man's eyes, the lame man's legs, the naked man's garment; he was a man of so great Charity. Mr. Fox, the Author of the Acts and Monuments, never denied to give to any that asked for Jesus sake. Augustine sold the Ornaments of the Church to relieve the poor. And Basil in a time of great famine sold his Land, and other goods to maintain the poor. A Duke being asked by some Ambassadors whether he could show them some hunting-dogs, gathered a great many poor people together, and showing them to the Ambassador, said, These be the Dogs I daily keep, and with which I use to hunt after Heaven. O that Christians would have other games in chase, than that which perishes in the using, and lay out their estates to better advantage than what appropriating them to self-interest can afford! Feed the hungry, clothe the naked, give to him that lacketh, seeing such blessed encouragements do attend this Christian duty.

Fifthly, If you have good trading in grace, then lay up for glory: If you are Wisdom's Merchants, Heaven is your Country and home, the place of your rest and eternal residence: The world is a strange Country to you, a spot of ground where you are set for a while to trade in to get commodities for your Country; and sent into it as Jacob was to Syria, to provide for his own house, and then to return into his Country; Gen. 30. 30. This is not your rest, Mich. 2. 10. Christians, you are not sent hither to take root in the Earth, or with the Raven, let out of the Ark to build your nests in the world; or with the fool in the Gospel, to take your rest in your full barns, and increased goods; but as Joseph was sent before into Egypt to make provision for his own Country; and as Solomon's ships were sent to Tarshish to transport what materials were useful for the House of God, and his own house. All that you are allowed here, is but as factorage for present maintenance: Some viands and refreshments in the way, but your great business is to get such goods as will vend in your own Country. Remember, you are all this while left here, to fill your sacks for your own home, where your kindred and habitation lies: Your Father's house, and your own mansions, your treasures, pleasures, crowns, thrones, and all that you are like to have forever, lies in your City above, whose maker and builder is God. We know but little of Christ's love (saith Mr. Cooper) till all be perfected and spread before us in Heaven. O lay up for Heaven! treasure up all you can for the other world whither you are going: Especially lay up these four things for Heaven:

- 1 Hopes for Glory,
- 2 Desires for Glory,
- 3 Treasures for Glory,
- 4 Preparations for Glory,

First, Lay up sound Hopes for Heaven. 1 Pet. 1. 13. Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind; be sober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Sure hopes of Heaven are of wonderful use to quicken a soul's dispatches for Heaven. Acts 26. 7. Unto which promise our twelve Tribes instantly serving God day and night hopeto come. 'Twas their hopes to enjoy those great and glorious things in the promise, that did put them on such diligence in those ways that lead to it; to strive in every duty that seemed to have an eye to this glory, they did stretch out their hand to take hold of eternal life, as one that was near the prize. Hope puts strength and activity into the soul in its motion after God, and makes it restless and unwearied till it enjoy him. This argument the Apostle useth to provoke the Hebrews in their race towards glory: Heb. 12. 1. Seeing then we are compassed about with so great a cloud of winesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us; and let us run with patience the race that is set before us. The weight of the argument lies in the sure and blessed issue of well-grounded hope attested by so many witnesses in the former Chap. who ran so great adventures, sustained so great losses, underwent such cruel deaths in chase of this eternal Crown; and not one of them miscarried, all got safe to glory, through their many fears and deaths. And seeing all that had this true hope hither to have sped well, and the same promise is made to us; Chap. 11. 40. having provided some better thing for us, (better privileges, better promises,) Let's pluck up our spirits, and at it again; and if no visible comfort or evidence meet us in our way, yet let us hold on with patience till we come to the end of our race.

Hopes of glory do also guard the soul against discouragements and difficulties. 1 Thes. 5. 8. Putting on the breast-plate of Faith; and for an helmet, the hope of Salvation. Hope arms head and heart, and keeps off the venom'd darts of Satan from ruining the soul; while wellgrounded hope of a blessed end is kept up, Israel prevails, and the Believer is kept from being overcome: 1 Joh. 5. 4. This is the victory that overcometh the World, even our Faith.

Hope of glory maintains a patient expectation and quiet waiting for the fruition of it. Rom. 8. 25. If we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it; and this is no small mercy: Impatience hath a dangerous influence on a Christian's heart, discouraging it, and exposing to temptation of giving over; saying, Wherefore should I wait any longer? 2 King. 6. 33. which danger Hope secures from.

Hope settles, and stays the heart; stilling its fears, scattering its doubts, and strengthening its confident expectation of glory, turning persuasions into the highest certainty, even a kind of knowledge. 1 Joh. 3. 2. But we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. Well-grounded and improved hope in a Christian's life, doth usually end in a triumphing confidence at his death: I shall shine (said a precious servant of God on his deathbed,) *I shall see him as he is, and all the fair company with him, and shall have my large share: it is no easy thing to be a Christian; but as for me, I have got the victory, and Christ is holding forth his arms to embrace me; I have had my fears and faintings as another sinful man, to be carried through creditably, but as sure as ever he spake to me in his word; his spirit witnessed to my heart, saying, fear not; he had accepted my sufferings, and the out-gate should not be matter of prayer, but of praise; [Mr. Rutherford's last words.] And a little before his death, after some fainting, he said, Now I feel, I believe, I enjoy, I rejoyce, I feed on Manna, I have Angels food; my eyes shall see my Redeemer. O what rich cheer will hope of glory find on a death-bed! What brightness is that I see? (said Mr. John Holland the day before his death,) have you light up a candle? a stander by answered, no, 'tis the Sun shines: Sun shine, (saith he) nay, it is my Savior shines; now farewell World, welcome Heaven; the day-star from on high hath visited my heart. O speak it when I am gone, and preach it at my Funeral; God dealeth familiarly with men; I feel his Mercy, I see his Majesty; I see things that are unutterable: Hopes of glory will make the World seem a very poor thing in a Believer's eye; he that by faith can stand on Mount Nebo, and get one glance on the promised Land, as his, feeds on the first ripe Grapes of his own Country; in comparison of which, all the World's dainties are bitter things. Hopes of glory cheers the heart in the way to glory. Rom. 5. 3. And rejoice in hope of the glory of God. Rom. 12. 12. Rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation: It makes the soul go merrily on, like a Ship under sail, that hath both wind and tide; whereas the doubting Saint drives heavily on, when winds and waves beat against him, being unwheel'd of Faith and Hope: Sure hope of Heaven gets honey out of the rock, and meat out of the eater, which makes his rough ways plain, and his passage to Heaven pleasant: 'Tis Christians losing their hopes of Heaven, makes them so uncomfortable in their passage through the World.*

Lastly, Well-grounded hopes of Heaven have a great influence towards preparation for it, while it hath an advantage to further his holiness. 1 Joh. 3. 3. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself as he is pure. When the Apostle speaks of the faith of God's elect, which is after godliness, Tit. 1. 1. as a furtherance of this holiness, lays this hope upon eternal life; In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the World began: Expectations of Heaven well laid, cannot but constrain a soul to utmost measures of holiness. 2 Pet. 3. 14. Seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that you may be found of him in peace without spot, and blameless. Heaven is a place of perfect holiness, no unclean thing can enter there; which the eye of faith seeing, and the soul's right to it, puts a person upon perfecting his holiness, that he may be ready to enter in. O then lay up hopes of glory, which have such precious fruits hanging on them.

Quest. But what are those sure hopes of glory, which will never fail of glory; and from which we may expect such excellent fruit?

Sol. First, Sure hopes of glory, which will never fail of glory, are issued out of a saving union with the Lord Jesus, the Lord of glory. Col. 1. 27. To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you the hope of glory. Christ united to you, and dwelling in you by his spirit, is this glorious treasure spoken of in the former part of the verse. Here are two arguments to endear the Lord Jesus to Believers.

First, That in their union with him they are invested with great and unsearchable treasures; he himself being that glorious and hidden riches opened in the Gospel, and made over to them in their reception of him into their hearts by faith; part of which treasure they have in hand in their present union and communion with him, and the blessed fruits and consequents of it here.

Secondly, Another thing that renders Christ precious to Believers, is, that in their union with him is laid the foundation of their right to, and evidence of their hope of glory; [Quatenus est in illis eatenus habent spem gloriae. Dav.] and assurance of their future and eternal enjoyment of himself, and all his treasure laid up in glory: There's no other way to have a right to glory, but by union with Christ, who hath purchased glory only for those that are his, and have this spiritual union with him. Hence 'tis that the Lord Jesus Christ is called a better hope, John 17. 21, to 27. Heb. 7. 19. For the Law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did, by which we draw near to God: That is the Lord Jesus in his Priestly Office, of which the Ceremonial Law was a forerunner, did bring in a ground of better hope in opening the way to God in grace and glory: All right to glory is through him who is the Lord of glory, 1 Cor. 2. 8. and hath the disposal of it to whom he pleases, John 17. 2. even to all the Father hath given him to be his; and to these he gives eternal life, John 10. 28. They that have union with Christ cannot perish, being members of his body, flesh and bones; should a soul that hath received Christ here, miss of glory hereafter, then would a member of Christ perish, and his body in Heaven be maimed and imperfect, which cannot be, his Church being the fullness of him who filleth all in all, Eph. 1. v. 21. And Christ hath past his word for it they shall not perish, John 10. 28. Not one of them is lost who are truly in Christ, John 17. 10. They are his servants, and shall be where he is, John 12. 26. His Spouse, which shall be ever with him. Try then your union with Christ; Have you received him into your hearts by faith? Are you one Spirit with him, having the same mind in you that was in Christ Jesus? you would be holy as he is holy; nothing short of complete oneness with Christ can content you: Indeed, you have carnal desires within the borders of your souls, that crave for satisfaction, and sometimes will have it whether you will or no; but there is another Law in your mind warring against this Law in your members, that cannot rest till you arrive more to his likeness, who is your life, righteousness and glory. Are you implanted into Christ's death and resurrection, brought into some conformity to him? And do you live upon him as the branch upon the root for all your grace and supply, and stay upon him as the stone upon the foundation, for your support in grace unto glory, as your only Lord and Righteousness? Then are your hopes for glory sure speeding hopes.

Secondly, Truth of grace secures your hopes of glory, it being the earnest, seal, and first fruits of glory. 2 Cor. 1. 22. Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts. Grace is God's seal for glory, and what greater security can there be? 'Tis his earnestpenny, which is never taken away, as a pledge may be, but secures the whole sum; yea 'tis part of pay: Grace is that seed of God which remaineth in him, 1 John 3. 9. and secures the soul's state against final Apostasy, through its union with the Spirit dwelling in him, Rom. 8. 11. Prove your truth of grace (though never so weak) and you will prove your title to glory: Doth your grace owe its being to the fullness of Christ, John 1 16. owning its derivation thence; and dependence there? Doth your grace spread itself into every part and faculty of your soul, wholly sanctified throughout? 1 Thes. 5. 23. Cannot your grace mingle with sin, or own the least appearance of evil, Rev. 2. 2. but hath according to its measure an irreconcilable enmity against every known sin? Gal. 5. 17. Cannot your grace rest in any measures short of perfection, but hath desires and endeavors after more and more grace? 1 Pet. 2. 3. Hath your grace pure and ultimate designs for Divine Glory, aiming in everything, Phil. 1. 20, 21. that Christ may be magnified, John 3. 30. and self annihilated? then is your grace true grace, and will in time turn to glory.

Thirdly, Your mortifiedness to the world will be a good proof of your title to Heaven. The heirs of Glory are chosen out of the world; are not of the world, John 15. 19. Redeemed from the earth, Rev. 14. 3. They have not received the spirit of this world, but the Spirit that is of God, 1 Cor. 2. 12. and are crucified to it, Gal. 6. 14. dead to the desires, pleasures and interests of this world, Col. 3. 1, 2. Dead men have no favor or delight in things; no more have they who are dead to this world, any acquiescing pleasure in earthly things, which can no more satisfy a heavenly soul, than dung can feed a living man. Christians, try how your hearts stand affected to earthly things; are these great in your eye, amiable to your affections, attractive on your desires, prevalent on your wills, beyond the things of Heaven? then are your hopes of Heaven unwarrantable by any Divine evidence, and will at last leave your names written on the earth.

Fourthly, Your hopes for Heaven, if right, will be active lively hopes. 1 Pet. 1. 3. Who hath begotten us again to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Christ from the dead. Hopes that put life in your affections and spirits, and makes you vigorous after holiness, and the way to glory, Ephes. 2. 10. Right hopes for Heaven will make you run in the way to Heaven, and put you on all manner of holy conversation. Paul's hopes for Heaven put him on labors and strivings after perfect holiness, 2 Cor. 5. 8, 9. Phil. 3. 12, 13, 14. Try your hopes; do they quicken you to duty, or leave you dead? You have no heart to the ways of God, or delight in approaching to him; his commands are grievous to you; this bespeaks unsound and frail hopes for Heaven, which will at last deceive you: But sure hopes for Heaven are backed with suitable labors for Heaven.

Fifthly, If your hopes be right for Heaven, then will your conversation be in Heaven. Phil. 3. 20. But our conversation is in Heaven, whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile bodies, that it may be fashioned like to his glorious body. You will be taken up about heavenly things, and driving on heavenly concerns: You will be maintaining intercourse in Heaven, and keeping up your converses with God; you will be often taking journeys to Heaven in your contemplations and desires; your business will be much in Heaven, and your occasions thither frequent; though you live on Earth, yet you will converse in Heaven. As Dr. Preston said when he was near death, I shall but change my place, not my company. O try your hopes for Heaven by your conversation, if that be engaged about the things of Heaven now; if your work be in Heaven, your rest shall be in Heaven also.

Sixthly, If your hopes for Heaven be right, you will willingly undergo whatsoever sufferings and dangers lie in your way to Heaven. He that is sure of reaching home at last, will venture through any dangers in his way. O what hazards will men run through to get an earthly Crown! no difficulties will discourage them; how much more will hopes for Heaven carry souls through the Red Sea of afflictions and bloody sufferings they may meet with before they come to it! Acts 20. 24. chap. 21. 13. He that cannot consent to drink of the cup Christ drinks of, and which the Father shall give him to drink, and to submit to the cruellest death, losses, shame, trials and torments, which his faithfulness to God may bring him to, must reckon again, and take up other conclusions about his future state; easier terms cannot be granted: Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple. Luke 14. 33. He that will come after me, must deny himself, take up his Cross, and follow me. Matth. 16. 24. We must through much tribulation enter into the Kingdom of God. Acts 14. 22. If we suffer with him, we shall reign with him, 2 Tim. 2. 12.

Secondly, Lay up desires for glory, not only some desires of glory, but such desires as nothing else can satisfy but glory; which nothing short of a whole God can content. Most souls in this life limit their desires, and take up their wishes too short of true blessedness: My soul thirsteth for God (saith God) but it was only for some sights of his power and glory, as he had seen him in his Sanctuary, Psal. 63. 1, 3. Some looks through the lattice; some embraces of Christ in the arms of faith, pleased the Spouse, and doth satisfy most souls here: Alas, how few are the desires of gracious souls, which a little of God will not content! One desires grace, another peace; some are for quickenings and comforts; others for enlightenings, for higher measures of knowledge, for some sights of God through a glass; but how few breathings are there, to see as we are seen, to know as we are known? 1 Cor. 13. 12. And indeed 'tis strange that Heaven-born souls, that heirs of glory, and fellow-citizens of Heaven, should have no more longings after their own home, and not only for some first-fruits, but the full ripe fruits of their own Country. David had sometimes workings after this, not only for God to come to him, but for himself to go to God; when his heart takes a leap from the path of life, into the presence of God, where is fullness of joy, and pleasures for evermore. Psal. 16. 11. Thou wilt show me the path of life: in thy presence is fullness of joy, at thy right hand are pleasures for evermore. From the beholding of his face in righteousness here, he longs for the satisfying visions of God in glory. Psal. 17. 15. As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness. Paul also under the highest enjoyments of God here, had his unsatisfied longings to be with him as best of all, Phil. 1. 23. and in respect of which he counts his greatest intimacy with Christ in the body, to be a kind of absence. 2 Cor. 5. 6. Knowing that whiles we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord. Do not terminate your desires upon anything that can satisfy you on this side glory: Get such desires raised, which cannot be answered till you come to Heaven, with such kind of breathings as these: O when shall I come to that blessed state, to know as I am known; to have every corner of my heart filled with the immediate emanations of his glorious fullness! O when will that time, or rather eternity come, when I shall be satisfied with looking on that blessed face which is every day the Angels wonder, and the Saints joy. Here alas! I lie among the pots, all sooty and defiled, whiles the vessels of my Father's house, and the bowls before the Altar, out of which my Lord always drinketh, are bright and glorious. Now I have my habitation where Dragons lie, while a glorious Pavilion stands empty for me: Here I feed on my own dung, and oftentimes eat the excrements of Devils, and all the while there's bread enough in my Father's house, and my Brethren fare deliciously at the King's Table. O when shall my work be done, that I may be gone! When shall the things for cleansing be given me, and the days of my purification be accomplished, that my turn may come to go in to the Lord my King! When shall the Nuptial garments, the Bridal ornaments, the Robe, the Ring, the Royal Vestments bespangled with costly Jewels, be given me, with this most welcome message, Arise my Love, my Dove, my Fair One, and come away! Lay up such kind of breathings after the Mountains of Spices, the Everlasting Hills, the Rivers of Pleasures, the Bride-chamber of Glory, where you shall be ever with the Lord. This will hasten your pace to Heaven, and mount you on the wings of a Dove: This will help you to pass by the world's glory with a holy scorn, and to bear its cruelty with incredible patience.

Thirdly, Lay up all the Treasures you can to greaten glory: Though the lest portion of glory is satisfying, yet the highest measures of glory are desirable, because in it there is the greatest conformity to God, 1 John 3. 2. Luke 10. 17, 19, 20. Dan. 12. 3. and the fullest enjoyment of God. The Lord Jesus doth propose degrees of glory for the encouragement of his people to greater improvements of grace; and therefore the highest degrees of glory are desirable: O get as much as you can here to greaten your felicity in Heaven. Do all you may to make your Crown more massy, and your mansion more fair, and your pleasures more full to all Eternity.

Several things have a tendency to greaten your glory. The more grace you improve now, the greater will be your glory; he that gained ten pounds, had ten Cities: Grace is seed sown, according to its measure will be the harvest: What a man sows, that shall he reap, Gal. 6. 7. The less seed is sown, the less crop will there be; and the more seed, the larger increase, 1 Cor. 3. 9. Glory is a Crown of Righteousness proportioned to the utmost improvements of Grace. The more work you do for God, the greater will be your wages of grace in glory, 1 Pet. 5. 2, 4. 2 Cor. 5. 10. That everyone should receive according to what is done in the body.

The more you lay out for God, the more shall you receive from him, 2 Cor. 9. 6. who will certainly repay it.

The greater your sufferings are for God, the greater will your rejoicings be with him: They that sow in tears shall reap in joy, Ps. 126. 5. Look what disproportion there is between the Seed-time and Harvest, far greater is there between the Saints sufferings, sorrows, and triumphing joy: Their sorrow lies within the compass of a short night, their joy begins with that morning which hath no evening to follow it, Psal. 30. 5. Their tears will scarcely fill a bottel, but their pleasures are so vast an Ocean, as that they cannot be received, but must be entered into, Mat. 25. 21. Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, 2 Cor. 4. 17. Yea the present consolations of the Saints oftentimes abound in their sufferings; The ringing of my chains hath been sweet music in my ears, (said Guy de Bres;) all my former discourses were but as a blind man's of colors, in respect of my present feeling: O what a precious comforter is a good conscience! How unspeakable then are those rejoicings, when all tears shall be wiped off, when sorrow and mourning shall fly away, Mat. 5. 10, 11, 12.

The more your losses are for Christ on earth, the greater will be your gain in Heaven. Heb. 10. 34. And took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that you have in Heaven a better and an enduring substance. Men can never bring their goods to a better Market, than to have them spoiled for the sake of Christ: your goods you lose for Christ are capable of being spoiled; your goods you shall receive in Heaven are above all injury; the very bags wax not old, much less the treasure: time will mar your best interests here. Alas, what is a little old goods, moth-eaten garments, rusty silver subject to change; compared with that substance, whose duration is as long as eternity, and whose extension is as large as immensity? and such is God in Christ, the Saints eternal treasure: Mat. 19. 29. And in the World to come life eternal. Carnal reason judges them the greatest fools that dare to be undone for their profession; whereas divine truth reckons such the mad men, who to escape them that can but kill the body, durst encounter him who can damn both soul and body in Hell, Mat. 10. 28. And to lay a foundation of a few days safety upon the ruins of themselves and others. How dangerous (said Mr. Cooper) is their estate, who cannot rise but with the fall of many? Et quantum sit illud propter quod nos reliquisti? How poor are those things (saith he) for which you have left us? whereas the Saints losses for Christ are their greatest gain, while the things they part with are but temporal; but those they gain are eternal, 2 Cor. 4. 18.

Lastly, The more souls you help to Heaven, the more treasure you prepare for Heaven: Dan. 12. 3. They that be wise (the margin hath it, they that be teachers) shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever. As nothing doth sink a person deeper into Hell, than to have the blood of souls upon its head, and to become the occasion of others perishing, Jer. 2. 34. So it wonderfully greatens a persons own blessedness in Heaven, to be the means of getting others to be blessed also: 1 Thes. 2. 19. For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? are not even you in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? for ye are our glory and joy.

Lastly, Lay up preparations for glory: Glory is a great thing: O what a change doth Heaven make upon a Believer's state! We shall all be changed, 1 Cor. 15. 51. from corruption to incorruption; from sin to spotless purity; from imperfection to perfection; from darkness to knowledge; from faith to fight; from espousals to a marriage-day: and what preparations do such a change call for? What if death should surprise you, and take you in your old clothes? 'tis not your daily garments, no not your best rayments are good enough for your marrieday: your attire must be all new when you solemnize your eternal nuptials to the King of Glory. O what manner of persons should you be who look for new Heavens, and a new Earth! If a Paul be not sufficient to carry a love-token to Christ's Spouse here on earth, 2 Cor. 2. 16. Who is sufficient for these things? Who then are fit to lie in the Bridegroom's arms to all eternity? Few think what a change must be before the Saints can get to Heaven: 1 Cor. 15. 50. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of Heaven; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. If so much preparation-work must be dispatched before an Esther could be fit for the embraces of an earthly King, Esth. 2. 12. six months for purifying with oil of Myrrh, and six months with sweet Odors, and with other things? How much sanctification-work is needful to meeten a soul for the immediate enjoyment of God in glory? and how unready are the most of souls for such a change? O Believers! hasten about your preparations for Heaven, seeing you have no fixation on earth, and know not what hour your Lord will come. In order to which, take these six directions.

First, Get your hearts more loose from this present world; men that change places, knock up, and take abroad things they must carry with them: Your hearts (Christians) are the principal things you must take with you to Heaven; it may be you have gone to God in duties many a time, and left your hearts behind you; but you cannot go to God in glory, except your hearts be with you. And O what a difficult work is it to go the heart (upon choice) loose from everything below God! and till this be done, there's no getting to Heaven: Things fastened to the free-hold (they say) cannot be removed; how then can that heart get to glory, that is nailed down to the world, and things below. Be daily loosening your hearts from the world, estates, houses, lands, trades, friends, relations, and everything below; for you may not have time to get them off without loss, when death comes: you must leave them all shortly, and you know not how soon, to go to better friends and interests: these have been snares and spears to your souls, and have given you many a wound, and still hinder your speeding to glory; and why should you be loath to part with them? O Christians! if you are willing to be with Christ, you will give your hearts warning to be gone from these tabernacles, and to take their leave of this world daily.

Secondly, Press after more maturity in your graces; the more ripe, the more fit for gathering, Joel. 3. 13. Tamar must tarry a Widow till Selah be grown, Gen. 38. 11. and your marrieday must be delayed till you come to a full age: The Saints must be as a shock of corn that cometh in in its season, Job 5. 25. Ripen a pace in your graces, if you would get to glory: Get your faith, hope, patience, and every grace increased daily; especially your love to God; that's the grace shall abide in glory, 1 Cor. 13. 8. Faith and Hope are the soul's helps, and companions in the way; but Love will be an eternal inhabitant with you. Get purer, deeper rooted, stronger, more enlarged love to Jesus Christ every day, till you be downright sick for him; this will make your life a death without his presence here, and your death to be life in being with him forever. 'Twas love to Christ made Ignatius so dead to all things below, and so longing to be with Christ: 'Tis storied of him, that when he was dead, and his heart taken out, they saw the name of Jesus written in it in letters of Gold: The more love to God, the more fit for God; for God is love,.

Thirdly, Get and keep the testimony of a good conscience, that may witness for you in the day of Christ: when you die, you are to have a trial for your life, your inheritance, your All; and you had need have your witness firm, and ready: Now there are two great witnesses you will need in that day to clear your title; the witness of Conscience, and the Spirit: have the one on your side, and you will not want the other. Get your consciences sprinkled with the blood of Christ, and purged from dead works by the Spirit of Christ, that it may be able to appear for you in that day. The blood of Christ will put words into the mouth of conscience for you, to plead the general issue, and the benefit of pardoning grace, wherein you have been transgressors; enlightened conscience will accuse you that you have sinned; and besprinkled conscience will plead for you that you are pardoned; and purged conscience will testify for you that you are changed, and that you hate the evil you have done, and love the holiness you have neglected. O of what wonderful use will the testimony of a good conscience be when you stand at the Bar of God! Get it true to you now, and sure for you then.

Fourthly, Maintain more constant walks with God daily; this will fit you for your eternal fellowship with him. Converse with God is begun acquaintance here; and in Heaven is perfect friendship, and perpetual fellowship. It will much fit you for Heaven hereafter, to begin the work of Heaven here, which lies in maintained intercourse with him. Through these gallery-walks with God, do the Saints pass into the Presence-Chamber, and sit down with him forever: Communion with God now, is Heaven begun; such are fittest for his presence in glory, who are train'd up in his company here.

Fifthly, If you would prepare for Heaven, dispatch your work on Earth: Heaven is a state of rest, and rest follows the finishing of labor, Heb. 4. 9. Rev. 4. 13. Paul must end his fight, finish his course, and keep the faith, before he can reach the Crown: 2 Tim. 4. 7, 8. In the grave there's no wisdom, device, or work; this is your only time for labor while you are in the Vineyard. O how much work is behind with most! which will make a departure terrible to an awakened conscience. Haste about your neglected work; you have (it may be) much work to do with others, in your families, with your relations; possibly there are some souls in their graves, and you have not done what you might to bring them forth; dead Husband, Wife, Children, Servants, for whom you must do more, or cannot comfortably appear before God. O hasten about this work, that you may give up your account with joy! There's soulwork to be done, to get corruptions subdued, graces strengthened, your accounts stated, evidences cleared, and lamps trimmed, which must be attended with utmost vigor. If you would get home, finish your work.

Lastly, Be always ready, waiting for the coming of the Lord: Luke 12. 35, 36. Let your loins be girt about, and your lights burning, and ye yourselves like unto men, that wait for their Lord when he will return from the Wedding; that when he cometh, and knocketh, they may open to him immediately: 2 Pet. 3. 12. Looking for, and hastening to the coming of the day of God: Not only be waiting for your change, but longing after it, as persons that are ready for a desired journey think the time long ere they go. Why are the wheels of his Chariot so long a coming? Judge. 5. 28. The Spirit and the Bride say come, Rev. 22. 17. With the Virgins go out to meet him, Mat. 25. 1. If you knew the welcome that abideth for you when you come home, ye would hasten your pace; Rutherford. The more ready you are for the coming of Christ, the more will you long for his appearance; and the more grateful will his approach be. The uncertainty of that time when the Lord Jesus shall appear, and the unseasonableness of that surprisal for preparationwork, should put Christians on continual readiness, lest coming in an hour they know not of, they be found unfit to enter in, and the door be shut, Mat. 25. 10.

O how dreadful will a miscarriage be at last! All the hopes, labors and comfort of your life depend upon your final safety, and happy conclusion of your day: 'Tis a great thing to live a sanctified, and die a saved soul. O how few imagine the difficulty of being a Christian indeed, and the infinite concern of securing an immortal soul, and a sure title to the unsearchable riches of the other world! O the folly and madness of rational creatures, to make everything sure but salvation, and to spend their time and strength about the many things of a perishing life, and lose the better part! Whoever thou art that castest thine eye upon this discourse, thou wilt one day find Religion to be thy chiefest interest; when thou comest to take thy farewell of a vain deceitful world, and seest all thy Lovers, for whom thou hast slighted thy precious soul, thy Soverign Lord, and dying Redeemer, to prove miserable comforters, not able to afford one drop of balm, to heal, or cordial to cheer thy fainting heart, and affrighted conscience: When thou seest pale death deliver thee a summons to appear before the holy God, and to give an account of thy Stewardship, when thou seest the Books opened, and such a fearful charge against thy guilty conscience, which thou canst not deny or answer; then wilt thou find godliness in the power of it, to be the greatest gain; and wouldest give ten thousand worlds for such an evidence as Hezekiah and Paul had, when within view of death and eternity. And is not Religion as much thy concern, and should be as grateful now, and all those great and important duties of piety which this Book lays before thee; thought to be as advisable now, when time and capacity may render them feasible, as in a dying hour, when desires and purposes may be too late? O do not content thy treacherous heart, to cast a transient glance upon these lines, to approve or commend them, and after all to shake hands with these vast and concerning Truths in them, and live and die a stranger to this great and heavenly work; but resolve to set about it presently, to pursue it thoroughly, that when your Trading-day is done, your enriching Eternity may begin, and you receive that vast Inheritance that fadeth not away, eternal in the Heavens.

- 2 Goodness 25
- 3 Ability ibid.
- 4 Faithfulness 24
- Reas. 3. The terms on which this Trade is driven, proves it the best Trade
- 1 Goods to trade upon shall be freely given 28
- 2 Wisdom to manage them, shall be freely imparted 30
- 3 A blessing on the improvement of them shall be insured ibid.
- 4 The glory of all shall be returned to God 31
- Reas. 4. 'Tis the most profitable Trade, cause it brings
- 1 Great returns: Three things prove it.
- 1 Religion has excellent fruit
- 2 Abundant fruit 33
- 3 Durable fruit
- 2 Sure returns; four things prove it 35

- 1 The Justice of God insures it. 2 The Blood of Christ engages for it. 3 These returns are the work of his own Spirit. 4 The Lord Jesus is an Adventurer with Believers in this Heavenly Trade 36, 37
- 3 Quick returns 38
- Ob. Why then do the people of God complain of his delays to hear and help them? 39
- Answ. 1. God will answer and help in due time
- 2 If he stay long, he will pay well for it ibid.
- 3 The Saints themselves are oftentimes the cause of their not receiving quicker returns 40
- Use 1. Of information, if the Heavenly Trade be the best Trade, 'tis strange that so few do set upon this Trade, the evil of which is aggravated ibid.
- Use 2. Of lamentation over the great decays of this Heavenly Trade; where are
- 1 Six Symptoms of this decay
- 2 Abatement of price, when heavenly goods are not valued 45
- 2 Fewness of Buyers 47
- 3 Little employment and slothfulness of spirit in heavenly things 49
- 4 The poverty of heavenly traders, largely opened and proved 50
- 5 Small adventures for God, proves bad trading in Religion 56
- 6 Breaking shows bad trading 57
- 2 Sad effects and dangerous issues of decays in this heavenly trade
- 1 It begets a growing strangeness between God and that soul 59
- 2 Soul poverty and wastings in men's spiritual interests 61
- 3 It brings a blast on men's earthly trades and interests 63
- 4 'Tis a ready way to ruin 65
- 5 It renders the Traders account heavy 67
- Use 3. Of reprehension of men's too inordinate pursuit of their earthly trades and interests 69
- Quest. How may we know when persons do inordinately pursue their earthly trades and interests?

- 2 Their fall is great 88
- Use 4. Of Exhortation.
- 1 To such as are strangers to this heavenly trade, where are four Arguments to persuade them to this blessed Calling.
- 1 Their wants and necessities while without this trade 95
- 2 The danger that attends their present state 101
- 3 Their duty to set upon this trade, and the obligations upon them to do it 102
- 4 The advantage that comes by it in five things 104
- 1 Religion will maintain you in the hardest time ibid.
- 2 Godliness will secure you in the most dangerous times and places 106
- 3 Holiness will enrich you in impoverishing times ibid.
- 4 Piety will cheer you under greatest disconsolations 107
- 5 Wisdoms trade will make you truly honorable ibid.
- Seven Directions how to get this trade
- 1 Get a capacity and heavenly nature for this heavenly trade 109
- 2 Cease from your own works 111
- 3 Make over yourselves to the Lord in an everlasting Covenant 113

- 4 Come over into the Family of Christ 115
- 5 Be mortified to this present world 119
- 6 Submit to all the instructions the Lord gives you, in order to it 121
- 7 What you do, do quickly; make hast about it 124
- 2 Bran. of Exhort. To such as profess this Calling, exhorting them to follow it 126
- Quer. Wherein lies this heavenly trade, and what is it you would have us follow:
- Answ. There are seven things in which this heavenly trade lies 127
- 1 To have and keep up a heavenly spirit 128
- 2 Properties of a heavenly spirit
- 1 It sees heavenly things 130
- 2 It savors heavenly things 133
- Directions to keep up a heavenly spirit.
- 1 Beware of those things that weaken it 134
- 3 Things do greatly weaken a heavenly spirit, and what they are ibid. to 140
- 2 Dir. Get all the nourishment you can to strengthen it
- 3 Be much in communion with the Father of Spirits 141
- 4 Cherish heavenly motions in your heart 143
- 5 Dwell much in the meditation of heaven 144
- Be much exercised in heavenly graces 146
- 2 Another part of this heavenly trade is, to secure your interest in heavenly treasures 147
- Quest. How may I know that heavenly treasures are mine?
- Answ. 1. By your communion with the heir of heaven, are you married to Christ or no? 151
- Que. What are those Evidences that will assure this Conjugal Union with Christ?
- Answ. Five things prove Marriage to the Lord Jesus.
- 1 Peculiar acquaintance with Christ, such as no stranger hath, they know his secrets, and have intimate converse with him 156
- 2 Conjugal love to Christ 158

- 3 A soul espoused to Christ, will leave all for Christ ibid.
- 4 A soul married to Christ, stays and lives on Christ 164
- 5 Fruitfulness to Christ, proves Marriage to him 166
- 2 Your interest in heavenly treasures is known by the naturalness and supremacy of your love to them 167
- 3 By your care for, and pursuit of them 169
- 4 If heavenly treasures be yours, you will find your spirits suited to them 170
- 3 Another thing wherein this heavenly trade lies, is, in getting in of heavenly goods, and what they are, and how to be obtained 171
- Que. How may I do to get my soul furnished with heavenly goods?
- Answ. 1. Maintain a sense of your own wants 187
- 2 Get a believing sight of Christ's fullness 188
- Que. What ground may I have for hope that Christ will supply me?
- Answ. This is fully spoken to pag. 190, 191.
- Another part of this heavenly trade, is to carry on heavenly work ibid.
- Four Motives persuading to it, and what they are 192 to 203
- Que. What is this heavenly work that Christians must do in this trade of godliness?
- Answ. 1. All that work which is of a heavenly nature, matter, manner and end 203
- 1 All that work which has God for its Author, as acts of Religious Worship ibid.
- 2 All that work which hath more especial respect to yourselves, as 209
- 1 Heart-work ibid. to 216
- 2 Mortification work 217
- Que. How shall I do to get sin mortified; I am convinced 'tis my duty, but find it not my capacity?
- Dir. 1. Do nothing that may strengthen it 221
- Eight things help to strengthen sin 222 to 227
- Dir. 2. Go not out in your own strength against sin ibid.

- Not in the strength of your purposes, nor of your frames, nor in the strength of your duties, nor in the strength of your graces 228
- Dir. 3. Get the Union between your heart and sin broken 229
- There are seven things that help to break the hearts union with sin ibid.
- Dir. 4. Strike at the root of sin 234
- Four helps towards it 236
- Dir. 5. Give no place to the least motions of sin 238
- 2 Helps towards it ibid.
- Dir. 6. Keep up the life of grace 239
- 3 Carry on Renovation work; some helps towards it 240
- 4 Keep your Evidences for heaven fair 243
- 3 Carry on all those natural, moral, and religious duties that concern others; in your house, in the house of God, in your callings and dealings with men 244
- 2 Another part of your heavenly work, is to do earthly things in an heavenly manner 247
- This lies in three things.
- 1 To do earthly things by heavenly rule
- 2 With heavenly hearts 248
- 3 To heavenly ends
- Ten Rules about doing of earthly things.
- Rule 1. Be sure the matter of your employment be good, that your callings and recreations be according to the Will of God 249
- Rule 2. Set on earthly things in their proper place and order 251
- Rule 3. Keep your earthly business within the bounds of due time 252
- Rule 4. Be diligent in the use of your working time 255
- Rule 5. While your hands are about the world, set a guard about your hearts 257
- Rule 6. Attend your earthly affairs with a calm and quiet spirit ibid.
- Rule 7. Follow your duty, but cast your care on God 261

- Rule 8. In all your labors pray for a blessing 262
- Rule 9. Though you live in the world, yet be dead to the world. 10. Do all your work in the view of Death, Judgment, and Eternity, 263, 264
- 2 Then do you earthly work in a heavenly manner, when you do it with a heavenly heart 266
- Que. How may I know when my heart is heavenly in my earthly work?
- Answ. 1. A heavenly heart is enlightened to see heavenly things 267
- 2 A heavenly heart savors heavenly things 268
- 3 A heavenly heart desires and longs after heavenly things 269
- 4 A heavenly heart has heavenly thoughts 270
- 5 A heavenly heart will be full of heavenly projects ibid.
- 6 A heavenly heart is acted and influenced by heavenly motives 271
- 7 A heavenly heart lives upon heavenly things 272
- 5 Another part of this heavenly trade lies in keeping up heavenly thoughts 274
- 6 If you would drive on the heavenly trade, keep up heavenly converses 278
- 7 Then do you carry on this heavenly trade, when you improve everything to heavenly advantages
- There are nine things especially that Christians should improve to heavenly advantage
- 1 Privileges: 2 Ordinances. 3 Providence. 4 The World, and things thereof. 5 Your Callings. 6 Your Company. 7 Your Retirements. 8 Occasional Objects. 9 Your falls and miscarriages.
- 1 Get good from your privileges.
- 1 Natural Privileges 283
- 2 Providential 285
- 3 Spiritual 287
- 2 Get good from Ordinances, 4 helps towards it 288
- 1 Preparation before you come to them 489
- 2 Attention 290
- 3 Retention 291

- 4 Obedience ibid.
- 3 Get all the good you can from Providences, from smiling Providences, and from frowning, from giving and taking Providences 292, 293
- 4 Get good from the World, and the things thereof 294
- 5 Get good from your Callings and Employments 297
- 6 Get good from your Company 299
- 7 Get good from your Retirements 303
- 8 Get good from occasional objects and occurrences of Providence 307
- 9 Get good from your falls and miscarriages 309
- Ob. If souls may get good from their sins, then why should persons be troubled for sin, or watch against it?
- Answ. In two particulars: 1 They that are dead to sin cannot live any longer therein; proved by four Reasons 310
- 3 They ought not to commit sin. 1 'Tis slavish work. 2 It has bitter fruit. 3 It has doleful wages 312
- 3 Branch of Exhort. To earthly traders who meet with breaches and discouragements in their earthly trades, counseling them
- Coun. 1. To be hereby convinced of the excellency of the heavenly trade, which is not liable to such disappointments 313, 314
- Coun. 2. See God in your afflictions 311
- Coun. 3. Search out the cause of them 316
- Probable Reasons of breaches on men's earthly trades and interests.
- 1 Letting down of Religion, and decay in the heavenly trade 317
- 2 Declensions in the Worship of God ibid.
- 4 Withholding their interests from God 319
- 5 Greedy desires after the world 320
- 6 God doth it to bring men down to his feet, and to bring them back to himself 324
- Coun. 4. Get the breach between God and your souls composed 326
- Coun. 5. Get advantage from earthly decays, to further your heavenly trade

- Four advantages hence to your heavenly trade
- 1 It helps to convince you of the vanity and uncertainty of all things below God 327
- 2 It helps to discover those sins that procure these wastes 328
- 3 By this you come to see a necessity of pursuing and securing better treasure 329
- 4 It helps, through grace, to loosen the heart from things below 330
- 5 It tends to the furtherance of Soul-enlargements ibid.
- 6 It makes heavenly things relish the sweeter 331
- 4 Branch of Exhort. To such as have begun this heavenly trade, but are fallen back, this advises them
- Advice 1. To be deeply affected with their evil case 333
- Considerations to further it.
- 1 Think on the change thy decays have brought upon thee 333
- 2 What an unlovely and displeasing object thou art hereby become in the eyes of God 334
- 3 It makes thee little desirable in the eyes of men ib.
- 4 Thou art the greatest loser of any: thy case is dangerous, and thy recovery difficult, such are hardly recovered 335, 336
- Que. I fear this is my cause, I am fallen back in grace, and fear I shall never recover; How may I know whether my backslidings shall be healed?
- Answ. There are six signs of backslidings that shall be healed.
- 1 When thy back slidings are not upon choice, but against thy judgment and consent 336
- 2 When they become thy Soul-trouble, and hearts burden 337
- 3 When they are after thy effectual calling, and sincere choice of God 337
- 4 When thou art restless, until the Lord doth heal thee 338
- 5 When thy vitals are still sound ibid.
- 6 When under all thy backslidings thou findest a humble and contrite heart 339

Luke 17. 3.

Take heed to yourselves: if thy Brother trespass against thee, rebuke him: and if he repent, forgive him.

Printed at London by William Iaggard. 1612.

TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPfull Sir THOMAS PELHAM, Baronet, increase of GRACE in this life, and eternal GLORIE in the life to come.

AGesilus King of Lacedemon, when one praised a certain Orator that he could stretch out small matters at large and length; and amplify them with many words, both fitly and fully answered him, But I cannotthinke him a good Shoo-maker, that would put a great and wide Shoo upon a slender foot. There be many I fear, who considering the shortness of this present Epistle; and comparing it with the largeness of my Exposition, will be ready to suppose and surmise, through the fore-stalling of their prejudicate Opinion, that to a little City I have set up wide Gates; and to a slender body, have fashioned a wide Garment; both which, are faulty and unfit. But, if these partial Judges would weigh the cause aright, in just and equal Ballances, without the corrupt affections of Malice, or Envy, I doubt not, but they will rather think, that to a great Foot I have fitted and applied a little Shoo.

For this Epistle Written to Philemon, though it be short in words, and comprehended in a little compass; yet, if we regard and respect (as we ought to do) either the pithy and profound substance of the matter, or the cunning, or rather curious Art of Paul the writer, or the great and glorious Majesty of God the Endighter, which shineth and showeth it self even in the least things; we shall be constrained to confess, that this is a right great Epistle, and as one saith in another case, Verborum parua, sed rerum foecunda, and the Interpretation of it very brief, both in regard of the Worthinesse of the Argument, and the Wisdom of the Spirit that appeareth therein. A Diamond may be little, yet it is of great price. The eye is small, yet it seeth far. The heart is little, yet is it the life of the body. It pleaseth God to show forth the greatness of his power in the least works of his hands. And as Merchants that cast Accounts, comprize greater sums in shorter room; so doth the Apostle handle most weighty Matters & Mysteries within the slender compass of a few Verses, that we should rather weigh the work, then number the words. He seemeth nowhere to reason more exquisitely, and to deal more pregnantly then in this place. Every word almost hath the force of a Motiue; and seasoning his cause with Wisdom, and his doings with Art, he so creepeth into Philemons bosom, and closeth with him at a sudden, that by no means he can start from him. Sometimes, by loving Titles; Sometimes by Artificial insinuations; Sometimes, by favorable preventing of Objections; Sometimes, by Rhetorical persuasions; Sometimes, by earnest Preparations; Sometimes, by Charitable Mittigations; Sometimes, by strong Obligations;

Sometimes, by deep Protestations; Sometimes, by fit Reuocations; and sometimes by forcible Arguments, as it were by so many courteous Congees, and vehement Adiurations, he dealeth and prevaileth in such sort with him: as Popilius the Romaine Ambassador, against Antiochus King of Syria, who having delivered his message from the Senate, made a circle about him with his rod, and charged him to put off all delays, and give him present answer before he departed out of it. Thus doth the Apostle lay his Net, and cast his Chaine about Philemon, that he hampereth him fast, and holdeth him close, before he is aware of any such matter.

This Philemon (to whom the Epistle is directed) was a Wealthy man, a Cittizen of Colossae, the Host of the Church, who had a Servant, named Onesimus; he, having pilfered and purloyned some of his Masters goods, fled away from him and the Church that was in his house. For, whatsoever the care and diligence of the Governors be, lewd persons do oftentimes shroud themselves under their Roofe. But coming to Rome, no better then a fugitive, he heard Paul preach the Word, which is as an Hammer to break in pieces the stony hearts of unregenerate men, and the power of God to salvation, to all that believe; so that he acknowledged the falt he had committed, and desired to be reconciled to his Master, whom he had offended. He being thus gained to the Faith, and kindly and courteously entreated by Paul (Who becometh all things to all men, that by all means he might save some) is by him sent back with these Letters of Commendation, and intercession for him, pleading his cause, as it were at the bar, effectually, craving pardon for him earnestly: and teaching thereby, that no man (albeit of the lowest sort and condition) truly repenting, ought to be despised and contemned. He went away Vnprofitable, he returned Profitable; he went away Peruerted, he returned Conuerted; he went away a Servant, he returned a Brother. Before he heard Paul preach, he was a Thief; but when he had heard him, he became as his Natural Son, as he is not ashamed to call him, and account him in this Epistle.

Upon this occasion of this Servants flying away, and be-taking himself to his heels, a question may be demanded, which also of some is handled, whether it be lawful for bond-slaves that are bought with money (such as the state of Servants in those days for the most part was) to run away from their Masters, forasmuch as the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 7, 21. If thou mayest be free, use it rather. Where he willeth them to prefer freedom before bondage, and to be their own men rather then another's; and to be at liberty, rather then to be Servants to the Honor and Humour of other men. I answer, such practice is not to be any ways allowed, unless they be oppressed with beastly and intolerable Tyranny, and be denied meat and maintenance, whereby life is to be sustained. For then their Masters that have paid a price for them should be defrauded, the Covenant or promise (that themselves have passed) should be disannulled, and themselves being taken, should thorough their own misdemeanor, be more cruelly handled, and kept in harder & straighter durance. We see when Joseph was sold by the Treachery of his envious Brethren, and thereupon carried far from his Fathers house, he behaved himself with all Modesty and Meekness, he endured the cross with all patience, being laid in fetters where the Iron entered into his soul; he never attempted to make a willful escape, or to break open prison (albeit it had been no hard matter to do it) least while he thought to avoid the smoke, he should fall into the fire: like unto Espops Fish, who being in the pan, leaped upon the coals. The Israelites when they were holden in Egypt in bondage and great slavery, never offered to make resistance, but waited with all long suffering, until God sent Moses and Aaron to work their deliverance. The Doctrine of the Popish School-men alloweth in their deciding of cases of conscience, such as are unjustly and wrongfully imprisoned, to escape for their lives if they can: and according to this determination, is the practice of the Papists. But this is no better then to resist the Magistrate, which is the Ordinance of GOD, Rom. 13. The Apostles being clapt up in prison, never sought occasion and opportunity to deliver themselves, until God and Man delivered them, and brought them forth: and sometimes the Lord sent his Angel from Heaven, to open the prison doors, and to smite off their chains, and to free them from the rage of their enemies. The Apostle Peter warneth Servants to be subject to their Masters with all fear; not only to the good and courteous, but also to such as are froward: and he giveth this Reason, For this is thank-worthy, if a man for Conscience toward God, endure grief, suffering wrongfully. We must commit our selves and our causes to God, and take heed we use not unlawful means to set our selves at liberty.

Now, concerning the counsel and direction of the Apostle, he persuadeth no liberty but such as is lawful, even to free themselves from thralldom by all good and honest means, only that God shall put into their heads and hands. For, when Servants were bought and sold as Villaines, nay as brute Beasts in the Market, and while their Master had power over them of life and death, he would have all such as are under the yoke, Count their Masters worthy of all Honor, that the name of God and his Doctrine be not evil spoken of. When Paul and Silas were committed to close prison, as they sung Psalms to God, suddenly there was a great Earth-quake, and the Foundation of the Prison was shaken, by and by all the doors opened, and every Mans bands were loosed, so that they might without knowledge or disturbance of any, have escaped and gone their ways; but being committed by authority, they remained as lawful prisoners without evasion.

These things here briefly touched, are largely entreated of in this Commentary; touching the penning whereof, to leave mine own Labors to the Judgment of the indifferent Reader, I cannot deny (but do ingenuously confess) that I have benefited myself, and do desire to benefit others, by other Authors, both Olde and New, whom I have searched and perused, through whose travails I have been guided and directed in the way, and by whose eyes I have seen into many particulars here discussed. Concerning the ancient Writers, that have the grayest hairs, I cannot pass over Chrysostom and Theophylact, both Greek Writers: Concerning the Moderne and later, Calvin, Beza, Illyricus, Rolloc, Piscator, Hunnius, which (for Honors sake) I name & remember. Among whom, some have written shorter Annotations, others have written fuller expositions, and all of them have yielded some matter and stuff toward the erecting of this building. Neither is this any shame or reproach to acknowledge, but rather a fruit of Justice and Equity, to give to everyone his own. Let no man therefore object, that I have thrust my Sickle into another man's Corn, or put mine hand into another man's Coffe, or ploughed my ground with another man's Heifer, or set to sale other men's goods, as mine own; much less upbraid with contumely and contempt, the saying of the Poet:

Si forte suas repetitum venerit olim,

Grege animum plumas, moueat cornicula risum,

Furtiuus nudata coloribus.

that is;

If every Fowl shall fetch her plumes again,

The Naked Crow, shall stripped of all remain.

The Wiseman teacheth, There is no new thing under the Sun, is there anything whereof one may say: Behold this, it is new? It hath been already in the old time that was before us. The Heathē man saw this, & could say:

Nihil est iam dictum quod non sit dictum prius:

that is;

There nothing is, or said, or seen;

Before our times, that hath not been.

The Apostle writing to the Corinthians, saith, All things are yours, whether it be Paul's, or Apollos, or Cephas, &c. all are helps allowed and appointed unto us to bring us unto Christ. It is no small comfort to Travelers to tread and trace the footsteps of such as have walked the right way before them. In like manner, it is no small profit and pleasure to me, grounded upon the evidence of the truth, to have followed the examples of learned and approved Authors, that have labored faithfully in the Vineyard of the Lord, and lighted a Candle unto others.

This Exposition (such as it is) I presume to offer unto your Worship, not fearing your Judgment in the allowance, nor doubting of your favor in the acceptance thereof, and therefore grounding myself upon it, I regard not the censure of Carpers and Cauillers, who have nothing to grace themselves, but by seeking the disgrace of others; nor yet anything to raise themselves a great name, but by taking away others good name: so that as one saith well, Ex alieni nominis ruina gradum sibi faciunt ad gloriam suam. They will dislike either the person, or the matter, or the style, or the allegations, or they know not what, and care not what, so it be somewhat. The proofs used are too many, the Reasons too large, the Uses too vehement; yea, nothing can please them, that please them-selves in their own conceits. If I should crave pardon for my slips in this Exposition, or for my boldness in this Dedication, I should therein also open the mouths of many, to tax me of vanity, and reprove me of folly. For, when Albinus, who wrote an History of the Roman Offices in the Greek tongue, requested the Readers in the Praeface, to bear with him if they found any imperfections and wants in his work, M. Cato the Censor answered when he read it, Doubtless he had deserved pardon indeed, if he had been forced to write his Story: but he is a Trifler that had rather ask pardon for his fault, then to be without fault. For men are wont to desire forgiveness either when they err at unawares, or when they commit a fault by constraint & compulsion from such as have authority over them, whom they cannot or dare not deny. Such severe and sharp Judges I am like to light upon, who will demand the question of me, what I mean to plead for pardon?

For, who compelled me to make the fault for which I crave favor? And why I did not rather keep myself from offending, then desire the forgiveness of the offense?

Wherefore, leaving these rash and rigorous Censors of other men's doings, I come to declare the causes that have induced me to offer the exposition of this Epistle unto you, and to pass it under your Worships name. For to whom doth a Treatise of Godliness more fitly agree, then to him that professeth Godliness, and hath the power of it dwelling in his heart? Or to whom should I commend the Patronage of the truth, better then to him that is a fauorer and lover of the truth, and of such as favor and love the truth? Besides, as I have heretofore tasted of your kindness and bountifulness toward me, which I ever esteemed as a debt lying upon me, so I have been desirous to leave a perpetual Testimony to others, of a thankful heart. I am not able to recompense like for like, but may rather say with the Apostle, Silver and Gold have I none, but such as I have I give unto you: and so much the more I will always be ready to follow the example of Paul, who when he had received mercy at the hands of Onesiphorus, he prayed unto God to render back into his bosom the fruits of his love bestowed upon him, The Lord show mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus, for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain: but when he was at Rome, he sought me out very diligently, & found me. The Lord grant unto him, that he may find mercy with the Lord at that day, &c. So my earnest prayer to God, even the Father of all mercy, and God of all consolation, is, & ever shall be, to show mercy for your mercy, & love for your love, & to preserve you unto his heavenly kingdom. And I beseech you oftentimes to Meditate upon the 71. Psalm, which as it was composed by the Prophet in his latter time, so he oftentimes craveth of God to be with him, & to keep him safe, now that his head was hoare, and his hairs gray, Thou art my hope, O Lord God, even my trust from my youth: cast me not off in the time of age, forsake me not whē my strength faileth. And afterward, O God, thou hast taught me from my youth, even until now, therefore will I tell of thy wondrous works, yea even unto mine old age and gray head, O God, forsake me not, until I have declared thine arm unto this generation, and thy power to all them that shall come. For, a man may fall away from God, as well through the doting of age, as through the lusts of youth. Be faithful unto the death, & you shall receive the crown of life: continue unto the end, so shall you be safe. The Wiseman teacheth, that the days will come, when we shall say, we have no pleasure in them, when the keepers of the house shall tremble, that is; the hands which safeguard the body from injuries, shall shake as in a palsy: The strong men shall bow themselves, that is, the legs, which are as a strong Staff, or as a firm Pillar, to sustain and bear up the weight of the body, shall begin to fail and wax feeble: The Grinders shall cease; that is, the teeth appointed to chew the meat, either wax loose, or else are lost: They wax dark that look out of the windows; that is, the eyes of the body (which are as the Windowes of the house to give light) shall decay and grow weaker and weaker, that they cannot behold the brightness of the Sun: The doors shall be shut without by the base sound of the Grinders; that is, the Lips which are as two Doors or Gates, shall scarce be able to open themselves, being become stiff: He shall rise up at the voice of the Bird, that is, the least noise shall be able to awake him, he that while he was young slept soundly, so that the sound of a Trumpet could hardly move him, is now by the crowing of the Cock, or the chirping of a Bird, raised and disquieted: All the daughters of singing shall be abased; that is, the ears and other Instruments of Music shall be so weakened and dulled, that they shall take no pleasure nor delight therein, as Barzillai confesseth unto David: also They shall be afraid of the high thing, that is; when once they grow crooked with age, every plain way will seem rough; and every stone, a Mountain unto them. And the Almond tree shall flourish: that is, their head shall be renowned with the comely ornament of white hairs, as the beautiful Blossomes of an Almond Tree, &c. Thus doth the Wiseman describe the discommodities and difficulties of old age, which approacheth unto us all, and will in the end overtake us, to the end we should learn to remember our Creator in the days of our youth. The Lord God Almighty, who is the ancient of days, deliver you from every evil work, and bless you and yours more and more with all spiritual blessings in heavenly things, that as you bear the Image of his Eternity, so you may be partaker of eternal Glory, Amen.

To the Reader.

IT was well said, that the first duty of a Writer is, that he read over his own Title, and cast back his eyes to consider what he began to write: who, if he dwell upon the matter, is not to be accounted long: but if he wander and straggle from it, every sentence is too too long and tedious. The Epistle with which I deal, I confess, is short: the Commentary which I have written upon it, long: howbeit, I have been careful to remember the former rule, and to keep me close to the present subject, and therefore hope to obtain pardon with patience. One of the Ancients said of Carthage, that contended so much and so long with Rome, in emulation for greatness and Empire; It is better to say nothing, then to speak a little. Much more may this be said of this Noble and Divine Epistle, wherein the Apostle doth so discover his affections, and stir up the affections of others, that too much cannot be spoken of it.

Touching the Epistles of Paul, some were written unto whole Churches; as that to the Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, &c. Other were written to particular persons; as two unto Timothy; one to Titus; and this to Philemon. Notwithstanding, we must understand, that howsoever they were privately directed to certain men, yet they were inspired of God, and penned by the Apostle, for the benefit of the whole Church. For if respect had only been had to those, unto whom they were purposely and principally intended, many things might have been spared, which are everywhere dispersed and handled in them. This appeareth expressly in the Epistle to Titus; the which, albeit it carry his Name alone, whom Paul left in Candy To redress the things that remain: yet the scope of Paul was, to profit the whole Church, as we see in the finishing of the matter, when he shutteth up the whole in this manner; Grace be with you all. The Inscription is to one, but the conclusion is made to many, even all the elect. So ought we to apply unto our selves, such heavenly instructions as are handled in this Epistle, no less, then if it were particularly sent unto everyone of us from God.

The Books of the New-Testament, may be ranged and ordered into three sorts; whereof part are Historical, part Doctrinal, and part Prophetical, to omit the distributions of others. The Hystorical are so called, because they describe the History of Christ our Savior, as the four Evangelists; or of the Apostles and the Church gathered by them; as the Acts of the Apostles.

The Dogmatical are such, as are called the Epistles of the Apostles, not that such as comprehend the History of Christ, do not also contain the Doctrine of Christ, and of salvation by Christ, but because these do most especially handle the same. True it is, the Apostles labored in preaching the Gospel, and publishing it by lively voice, in what places, and to what persons, and at what times soever they could; but because they could not always dwell among the Churches, and guide them with their presence which once they had planted, neither yet were able to see them all in the face and to speak unto them mouth to mouth: it pleased God to move them, and direct them to set down in writing (compiled in form of Epistles) the sum of Christian Doctrine touching piety toward God, Faith in Christ, and love toward men: but most especially concerning the miserable estate of man through his fall, and of the remedies of this misery: concerning the Person and Offices of Christ the mediator; concerning the benefit of free Justification by Christ and of the lively fruits thereof, which ought to shine forth in all them that are Justified. The Prophetical Book, is only the Revelation of John, which under certain Types, foretelleth the state of the Church to come, both the combats which it shall endure, and the victory which it shall receive.

The Heretics that lived in former times, raised up from the pit of hell, by Satan himself to disturb and destroy the faith of many, have called sundry of these Canonically Books of Holy Scripture into Question, and rejected them altogether, as Bastards or counterfeits. Faustus the Maniche (as S. Augustine witnesseth) was not ashamed to open his blasphemous mouth, and affirm, that many things in the New Testament were false. The Ebionites would receive only the Gospel according to Matthew, the other three they despised and refused. The Marcionites, another detestable and damned sect, used only Luke's Gospel, and that also they miserably mangled according to their own devilish fancy. The Acts of the Apostles, and Paul's Epistles, were set at naught, and flatly refused by the Tatians, and other Heretics called Seueriani, as Eusebius maketh mention in his History. Both the Epistles written unto Timothy, that to Titus, and the Hebrews, were cast away by Marcian and Basilides: for whatsoever they saw to cross and contradict their Heresies, they rased out of the Canon, and would not receive it as authentical. Among all which, this is to be observed, that such as did admit (as Divine) any of the Epistles, did never deny the authority of this Epistle to Philemon. Some indeed have renounced the Epistle to the Hebrews: some, the latter Epistle of Peter: some, the Epistle of James: some, the Epistles to Timothy and Titus; and other, the two latter familiar Epistles of John: but no Heretic was so forsaken of God, or ever grew to be so desperate, to contemn and set light by this Epistle, if ever he admitted and accepted the credit of any. Which plainly declareth the Majesty that shineth in this little and short Letter, wherein Paul by his Divine eloquence and pithinesse of argument, doeth even ravish and astonish all the Readers thereof.

To the end this may the better appear, let us as in a Table set before our eyes the chief heads and contents of this Epistle, and view with how cunning a pen or Pensill, the principal parts thereof are drawn, together with the profit arising from thence; following the example of them, which when they bid any guess to Dinner or Supper, are wont first to declare what shall be their cheare, & how many Dishes they shall have, praying them to take it in good worth, and to look for neither better nor worse, then hath been mentioned. In like manner, being determined to make a feast, and having provided a Banquet, which I have set forth, and invited the courteous & Christian Reader, that will come and taste of it: I dare be bold to promise, that the Meat is good and wholesome. What food soever is found that cannot please the taste of a well-affected stomach, I confess the fault is in the Cook that hath prepared and dressed it. I would therefore entreat thee to accept of these three Dishes, and to consider, the person that was the writer; the person to whom he writeth; and the person for whom he writeth. The person that penned it, was Paul the Apostle: the person to whom it was written, was Philemon the Master: the person for whom he wrote, was Onesimus the Servant. Upon these three, as on certain pillars, stand the main drift and purpose of this whole Epistle here expounded.

Touching the first, which is Paul the Writer, he doth not style himself in this place, as commonly he useth; An Apostle of Jesus Christ, but The Prisoner of Christ, and declareth that he begat Onesimus to the Faith, in Prison. It is honorable to the Saints to suffer for the truths sake. The Apostles rejoiced that they were Counted worthy to endure afflictions and troubles in a good cause. They endured imprisonment as Martyrs, not as Malefactors; as Preachers of the Gospel, not As Busie-bodies in other men's matters; as doers of good, not as evil doers; never ceasing to further the salvation of others, even when their bodies were restrained of liberty: and yet in this want of enlargement, they were mighty in deed and word, to work the conversion of such as resorted unto them, verifying the saying of the Apostle. 2. Tim. 2. 9. I suffer trouble unto bonds, but the word of God is not bound. Whiles he pleaded his cause in Chaines, he had Almost caught Agrippa in the Chaine of the Gospel, and won him to the Faith. When he was come to Rome, he would not be idle, but called the chief of the Jews together, and then expounded unto them the way of Salvation, testifying the Kingdom of God, and persuading them those things that concern Jesus, both out of the Law of Moses, and out of the Prophets, from morning to night. Thus doth one say most truly of him; When he was bound, he was stronger then they that bound him: when he was a Captive, he was freer then they that kept him: and when his Judges examined him, he examined them, and set them at liberty that were under the thralldom of sin and Satan. It is truly said of the Wiseman; He that winneth Souls is wise, and shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and such as turn many to righteousness, shall shine as the Stars forever and ever. This wisdom is nowhere to be found, nowhere to be sought, nowhere to be learned, but in the Word of GOD, which is the wisdom of God, and the power of God. So then we see, it is not the punishment that maketh a Martyr, but the cause. Some are punished as Malefactors: some die as Martyrs. Joseph was cast into the same Prison, with the Butler and Baker of King Pharaoh: They suffered imprisonment in the same place, but the cause was not one for which they suffered. Joseph's Master took him and put him in Prison, in the place where the kings Prisoners lay bound; and there he was in Prison; but because it was in a good cause, and for a good conscience, the Lord was with him, and shown him mercy, and got him favor in the sight of the Master of the Prison. The like we might say of Paul and Silas, who were not only beaten with Rods, but clapped up in close Prison with Malefactors; but they were not without comfort in their sufferings, For At midnight they prayed and sung Psalms unto God, so that the rest of the Prisoners heard them. They suffered As evil doers, but not for evil doing. And albeit they were Prisoners, yet they were Christian Prisoners: and when the body was ready to be offered, and the time of their departure drew near, forgot not their Apostolical care of the Churches, and watchfulness over the Lord's Flock; yea, we see Paul in this place, forgetteth not a base Servant, as shall be shown afterward.

Touching the second point, we are to consider the person to whom Paul writeth; which is, to Philemon, craving at his hands the fruit of Christian Equity and Moderation, to forgive him that had offended him, according to the doctrine of the common Master of them both, Jesus Christ. Luke 17. Take heed to yourselves, if thy Brother trespass against thee, rebuke him: and if he repent, forgive him: and though he sin against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying; It repenteth me, Thou shalt forgive him. It is a great virtue in thee, if thou wrong not him, of whom thou art wronged: It is great Fortitude, if when thou art wronged, thou remit it: It is great Glory, if thou be willing to spare him, whom thou hadst power and ability to hurt. As Christ taught forgiveness to others, so he practiced his own Doctrine, and prayed for those that were his persecutors. Philemon had been greatly wronged by his false and thievish servant, yet Paul craveth pardon for him upon his repentance toward God, and his submission toward his Master. It is the Doctrine of the Nouatian Heretics, to deny hope of favor and forgiveness to such as are fallen; against whom Cyprian hath written a learned Epistle; whereby they go about to kill, whereas they should cure them that are wounded, and to swallow up them in despair, whom they ought to raise up with comfort. For they allege, that Christ threateneth, Whosoever shall deny him before men, them will he deny before his Father which is in heaven. But he understandeth such as persevere in it without repentance, denying him unto the end, and forsaking him unto the death, such indeed he will disclaim and deny in the kingdom of his Father; which plainly appeareth by the contrary, in the opposite Member going before, where he promiseth, that Whosoever shall confess him before men, them will he also confess before his Father which is in Heaven; whereby he meaneth such as continue in that confession, and are faithful without starting backward.

Peter being in the High-priests house, did deny his Master that chose him, not only to be an Apostle, but to be an elect vessel, to preach the Gospel both to Jews and Gentiles; he denied him that bought him, and redeemed him; in word, with an Oath, with Cursing and Execration; yet he returned and repented: he went out from that wicked Company, and wept for his grievous fall most bitterly. Many good Soldiers are sometimes daunted at the sight of their Enemies, and run out of the Field like Cowards, not without some reproach and impeachment of their Man-hoode, who afterward gather strength, and are ashamed of their own folly, both resisting those that fight against them most courageously, and pleasing the Captain that hath made choice of them.

Hence it is, that the Lord proclaimeth Mercy, and reneweth his Covenant of forgiveness to such as turn unto him. The Prophet Joel saith, Chapter 2. Turn you unto me with all your heart, with fasting, weeping, and mourning; Rent your hearts, and not your Garments, and turn unto the Lord your God, for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, & of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil. Here is mercy offered, and a general pardon published, which God will perform to all penitent persons. Likewise, the Lord for better assurance, if we doubt of his word once uttered, saith by his Prophet Ezekiel, Chap. 33. O thou son of man, speak unto the house of Israel, Thus ye speak and say; If our transgressions and our sins be upon us, and we are consumed because of them, How should we then live? Thus do wicked persons, when they hear of God's Judgments, cast off all confidence in his mercies, and murmur at his threatenings. But what followeth? Say unto them, as I live saith the Lord, I desire not the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way, and live: Turn you, turn you from your evil ways, for why will ye die, O ye house of Israel? When the sinful woman came to Christ in the house of Simon the Pharisee, humbly confessing her sins, & shedding abundance of tears for them, and by them both, testifying her love to Christ, he turned unto her, and said, Thy sins are forgiven thee. On her part, we see repentance, weeping, and Prayer; On Christ's part, we see Forgiveness offered, and pardon bestowed. It is well said of Cyprian, Legimus & adoramus nec praetermittimus coelestem domini sententiam, qua ait negaturum se negantem; nunquid & poenitentem? that is, we read, and reverence, and do not go about to reverse the heavenly sentence of the Lord, when he saith; I will deny him that denieth me: But doth he anywhere, or at any time say, he will deny him that repenteth of his sins from the bottom of his heart? Or doth he allow any to judge another man's servant, which standeth or falleth to his own Master? This is it which maketh the Church Triumph in the experience and feeling of God's Favor and Mercy, Micah. 7, 8, 9. Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy, though I fall, I shall arise. When I shall sit in darkness, the Lord will be a light unto me. For as the righteousness of the righteous man, shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression, so the wickedness of the wicked man shall not hurt him, whensoever he turneth from his iniquity. Such is the care of God over the sheep of his pasture, & his love toward them, that he denounceth a fearful war against the shepherds of Israel, that feed themselves, & not the flock: he chargeth them that they did eat the fat, and clothed themselves with the wool, but the weak they have not strengthened, the sick they have not healed, neither have they bound up the broken, nor brought again that which was driven away, neither have they sought that which was lost, but with rigor and cruelty have they ruled them. Ezek. 34. To conclude this point, our Savior showeth, that when a man, having an hundred Sheep, hath lost one of them, he leaveth ninety and nine in the Wilderness, and goeth after that which is gone astray, until he find it, and then He layeth it on his shoulders with joy, and carrieth it home to the sheepfold, I say unto you, that joy shall be in heaven, even in the presence of the Angels of God, for one sinner that converteth. Seeing then, the Lord Jesus (who is the LORD of life) teacheth in the Gospel, that there is so great joy in Heaven for a penitent sinner, how great joy ought there to be on earth, when we see the kingdom of God enlarged, and a fellow member pulled out of the jaws of Satan, whom he had holden captive, and taken as a prey to devour and destroy forever? It is the end of Christ's coming, To seek and to save that which was lost, Luke 19, 10. And seeing our gracious God is so ready to remit offenses done against him; who are we, and of what matter or metal are we made, that are so hard-hearted, and stiff-necked, and implacable against our Brethren? We are taught to ask forgiveness, as we Forgive: and in the Parable of the miserable and merciless servant propounded, Math. 18. Who being forgiven ten thousand Talents, refused to forgive his fellow an hundred pence, was delivered to the Tormentors, till he should pay all that was due to his Lord: We are taught, that in like manner shall our heavenly Father do unto us, except we forgive from our hearts each one to his Brother, their Trespases.

This Doctrine doth the Apostle publish at large in this Epistle, craving pardon at the hands of Philemon, for his penitent and prostrate servant, not doubting but as God had forgiven him, and given him repentance, so he also for his part would remit the trespass and injury done unto himself. Thus we see what to judge of these Nouatians, who are indeed the true Puritans, and contrary to the whole course of the Scriptures, deny repentance and reconciliation, to such men as after baptism (through infirmity, and force of persecution, and fear of danger) do yield so far, as to deny the faith. We have a noble example of God's notable compassion toward such as offend of frailty and weakness in Peter, who was received to mercy: and Christ would never have said, Whatsoever ye loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven, if such persons as repent were altogether to be barred out of the bosom of the Church. Can these proud spirits then be the Disciples of Christ, that are harder and straiter laced then their master? Thus they frustrate true repentance, & take away all admonitions both public & private, which are of great force to reclaim and recover a sinner.

The third and last point remaineth. For, as we have considered the person that writeth this Epistle, and the person to whom it is written, so we are to mark the person for whom it is written, to wit; for Onesimus a servant, a fugitive servant, a false servant, a fraudulent servant. A base and mean subject for the Apostle to handle, howbeit penned in so high and heavenly a manner, and contrived with such exquisite Art, and excellent Judgment, that it over-reacheth the meanness of the matter, and leaveth no excuse that Philemon could allege to wind himself from him, and manifesteth the special care that Paul had, of this poor penitent person. It is recorded of M. Fox of blessed Memory, when one told him that a certain man (of none of the greatest or highest callings) who had received much comfort from him in the days of his trouble, was desirous to acknowledge his thankfulness toward him, and asked him whether he remembered such a one? He answered; I remember him well: I tell you, I forget Lord's and Ladies to remember such.

Many there are, that are ashamed of such as are of low degree, whom notwithstanding God loveth, for whom the Savior of the world died, and to whom the word of salvation is preached. When the Church was in Abraham's house, it consisted not only of such as were borne in his house, but of such also as were bought with his money, of any stranger that was not of his seed: and when the Lord gave unto him the seal of his Covenant, he commanded him to circumcise not only himself and his son; his Steward, and the chiefest partes of his family, but every male, even the least and lowest that lodged under his roof. As then the Wiseman saith in the Proverbs, He that mocketh the poor, reproacheth him that made him; so he that despiseth a servant, because he is a servant, dishonoreth God that made him a servant. Hence it is, that the Apostle chargeth such to be subject to their Masters, and please them in all things, not answering again: neither pickers, but that they show all faithfulness, that they may adorn the Doctrine of God our Savior in all things. They are therefore, through pride and disdain not a little deceived, but wander wide out of the way, that think religion cometh not down so low as unto servants, that God's providence vouchsafeth not to respect them, & that it booteth not to give them any instruction. True it is, God hath established by his own ordinance, a difference between the Mayster and the Servant, as our Savior showeth, Luke 17. Who is it also of you, that having a servant ploughing or feeding Cattle, would say unto him by and by when he were come from the field, Go, and sit down at table? And would not rather say unto him, Dresse wherewith I may sup, and gird thyself and serve me, til I have eaten and drunken, and afterward eat thou, & drink thou? &c. The Gospel doth not abolish the distinction between man and man; between high and low; between Master and Servant; yea, when they are all believers, as is plentifully handled in this Commentary: howbeit the writ of partition is not so great, nor the wall of separation so far distant between them, we should think the Lord careth for the one, and contemneth the other, who made them both, preserveth them both, redeemed them both, sanctifieth them both, and will glorify them both. This did Job wisely consider, Chap. 31. If I did contemn the judgment of my servant, & of my Maid, when he did contend with me, what then shall I do when God standeth up? And when he shall visit me, what shall I answer? He that hath made me in the womb, hath he not made him? Hath not he alone fashioned us in the womb?

The Heathen, that saw nothing but by looking through the windows of nature (themselves being merely natural men) took upon them their just and lawful defense, and pleaded for them at the bar of reason (when they were used oftentimes no otherwise then the Beasts and Cattle) that Master and servant had one & the same beginning, were norished with the same Elements, did draw in the same air, did tread upon the same ground, and returned in the end into the same earth. Yea, their plea for them went a great deal farther, Though they are bondmen, yet they are men: & albeit they are servants, yet they are our fellow-servants. He is indeed become a servant, but it is through necessity; A Servant in body, but a Free-man in mind. And peradventuee the Master himself that ruleth over him, may be more slavish then he. He that is a Drudge or servant to his own lusts, to Wrath, to Envy, to Covetousness, to Ambition, is a right servant, obeying most foul and filthy Masters, and none a baser Bondman then such a one. He is a true Master, and a right Free-man, that hath learned to rule over his own affections, such a man is stronger then he that ruleth a Citty. The other are servants against their willes, but these serve and obey as most vile vassals, willingly; neither do they desire freedom.

We are not to esteem of men by their estate, or (as we say commonly) by their fortunes, but by their manners. We may alter our manners, our condition we cannot always. He is no great wise man, that purposing to buy an horse, looketh not upon him, but contenteth himself to view only the Bridle and Saddle: so is he as simple and shallow, which judgeth of a man by putting on a gay coat, or by the wearing of a precious garment, or by the condition of his outward person, and not by the inward Guiftes and Ornaments of the mind. Abigail is renowned for a Woman of singular wisdom, and that worthily, yet she disdained not the counsel of her servants. Naaman was Captain of the King of Aram, yet he refused not the advise of his attendants, that waited upon him. These persons judged it to be no disgrace or disparagement to their high calling, nor any sawcinesse in their servants, to presume to teach them, and tell them their duty; nay, without guiding themselves by them, and following their direction, the one had been exposed to miserable slaughter, the other had returned in the uncleanness of his leprosy; whereas by this means the one was preserved, the other was cleansed. It is therefore an untrue and unsavory Proverb, that A man keepeth in his house so many enemies, as servants: for we have them not enemies, but we make them so, when we behave our selves toward them tyrannously, cruelly, contumeliously, spitefully, & outrageously, doing against them so much as we dare do, not so much only as we ought to do: not considering how lawful it is, but how powerful we are, & how weak they are. All the profane Histories, are full of worthy examples of many Servants, who are commended for their trust and faithfulness; Wittnesse, and Courage; Might and Magnanimity to all posterity, and have not doubted to give their lives to death, in their Masters quarrel. It is not therefore much to be maruelled at, that the Apostle, perceiving how Mighty the word had been in Operation upon Philemons Servant, doth account him as his Son, and seeketh to reconcile him to his Master; in which respect, he was willing and desirous to have kept him with him, to Minister unto him. He claimeth some authority over him, being his spiritual Father: howbeit, because he was not only his Son, but also another man's Servant, he would not retain him without his Masters knowledge. Let them not therefore for their low degree be contemned, nor have the means of instruction denied unto them.

Thus I have set down to thy view (Christian Reader) the scope of this Epistle: wherein the Apostle (in a narrow compass) doth couch together many Mysteries of our Religion, which I have labored to lay open in this Commentary. And howsoever the work is grown in bigness, & extended in length under mine hands more then at the first I purposed and intended, yet I hope the manner of handling herein observed, shall easily recompense thy labor bestowed in reading. I cannot in few words comprehend the matters that are here and there dispersed throughout the Book. Among many other, these points are principally handled. Touching affliction for the truth, and persecution for righteousness sake. Touching Christian Equity and Moderation: Touching God's free grace, & forgiving offenses: Touching household Government and Private possessions: Touching the conversion of Sinners, and the Communion of Saints: Touching Faith, and Good Works: Touching Friendship and Suretyship: Touching Prayer and Hospitality: Touching the Gospel and Alms-deeds: Touching God's providence, and of the force & fruit of the Ministry: as is more at large to be seen in the Table of the doctrines. Accept (I pray thee) the pains I have taken in the discussing of these points, pardon the escapes (if any be) into which I have fallen, as in traveling so long a journey, it is easy to fall into a slumber: and wheresoever thou vnderstandest the hand of God to have been with me in publishing the truth, give him the glory, & ascribe the praise unto his great name, to whose grace & goodness, I commend thee.

Thine in our common Savior, William Attersoll.

An Exposition of the Epistle, of the Apostle Paul to Philemon.

THIS Epistle is short in Words, low in Argument, and private, in regard of the Matter: yet the manner of handling is high and heavenly, and the Doctrine general and common to the whole Church. It was written (as appeareth) to Philemon, at what time the Apostle was grown old in years, was drawing near his end, and was clapt up and kept in Prison at Rome; from whence also he directed sundry Epistles to diverse Churches and particular persons. From thence he wrote to the Galatians, to the Ephesians, to the Philippians, to the Colossians; and the latter Epistle to Timothy, which was penned not long before his death and dissolution. For albeit, he were held in durance and restrained of his liberty, that he could not visit the Churches where the Gospel was planted, nor lay a new Foundation where as yet it had not been preached: yet he was not idle or unfruitful, but labored to do good to the Church by writing, when he could not come to bestow some spiritual Graces among them by teaching. We see here, that Paul writeth out of Prison, and slacketh not to instruct, both general Churches, and particular persons. From hence we learn, that the course of the Gospel cannot be stopped, but keepeth on his way and passage in the World. The truth of the Gospel will have his free liberty, it can be hindered by no Chaines, it can be restrained by no Bandes and Boults, it can be shut up by no bars of Iron, and Gates of Brasse, but breaketh forth as the light of the Sun out of a dark Cloud. We see this evidently in the example of Paul, albeit he were in bonds and Chaines, yet he pleadeth his cause, with such gravity of speech, with such power of the Spirit, with such piercing of the matter, with such efficacy of words, and with such respect of the persons before whom we spake, that he had almost gained & persuaded Agrippa to Christianity. The like we see in another place, when he was brought Prisoner to Jerusalem, confined to an House, and delivered to a Soldier to be kept, he received all that came unto him; Preaching the Kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all boldness of speech, without let. This appeareth more evidently in none, then in Christ himself, who as at all times he sought all occasions and opportunity to do good to the souls and bodies of men, so when he was upon the Cross, he converted the Thief, and was ready to seek and to save him that was lost. These consents of Scripture, come directly to the former point; and serve to teach us, that whatsoever the purposes and pretences of men be, yet they shall never be able to stop the stream of the word of God, which floweth plentifully to the comforting and refreshing of the dry and barren hearts of sinful men.

Let us briefly consider the Reasons. First, the doctrine delivered is of God, not of Men; from Heaven, not from the Earth. If man were the Author of it, it might easily be resisted by the power of man; nay, it would in time fall down of it self. But seeing the whose Scripture is inspired of God, and the doctrine thereof hath him for the Author, the light of it cannot be quenched. Thus doth Gamaliell reason in the Council, If this be of God ye cannot destroy it, least ye be found even fighters against God. Who can prosper, that provoketh God? Or who can look for good success, that fighteth against God, and against his ordinances?

Again, God will bring their devises to naught, and confound all their endeavours that go about to hinder the course of his word. Although they band themselves together, and assemble against the Lord and against his anointed; yet he that dwelleth in the Heavens shall laugh, and have them in derision, he will break their bands and crush them in pieces like a Potters Vessel. This the Prophet teacheth. Psal. 33. The Lord breaketh the Counsel of the Heathen, and bringeth to naught the devises of the people: The Counsel of the Lord shall stand forever, and the thoughts of his heart throughout all Ages. Seeing therefore, that the Doctrine of the Gospel is of God, and that he will dash them in pieces with a Scepter of Iron that stop the course of it, we may truly conclude, that the course thereof cannot be hindered.

The Uses of this point are many, which I purpose briefly to point out, that we may proceed. First, weigh with me from hence the excellency of the word of God. Who is ignorant what opposition hath been and is made against it? What resisting and contradiction? Yet it keeps on his course, and hath his passage in the world, and runneth through the whole Earth. The Apostle declareth, That the things which came unto him, turned rather to the furthering, then to the hindering of the Gospel, so that his bands in Christ were famous throughout all the Judgment Hall, and in all other places. So he saith afterward in this Epistle which we have in hand; I beseech thee for my Son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds. Was it not enough for the Apostle to labor when he was free, and his Feet at liberty, but he must also spread the Net to catch men in Prison? The light of God's truth can never be put out, the heat of it cannot be smothered, the power of it cannot be broken. Though the Teachers and Preachers of the word, may be stocked and stoned, hewn asunder, burned with the Fire, slain with the Sword, clapt up in Prison, and fettered in chains; yet the word it self is lively and mighty in operation, it entereth deeply, it discerneth sharply, the thoughts and intentes of the heart. True it is therefore, the Ministers of the Gospel may be bound, but the Gospel it self cannot be bound. Their hands are bound, and their feet are chained, when the tongue is at liberty to utter the gracious and glorious promises of the Gospel. Nothing can bind the tongue, but fear and infidelity. If a man bind an Husbandman, he hinders his sowing, for he soweth with his hands: but the teachers being bound, the word is not bound, for they sow with the tongue. Let vt therefore acknowledge, that the preaching of the Gospel hath in it a Divine power, nothing can be matched with it, nothing can be compared unto it. The Devil is called in the Scriptures by sundry Names, to declare his power: the God of the World, the Prince of the Air, the strong man that ruleth the House: and he cannot be displaced and dispossessed but by a stronger. But the Gospel is stronger then all the power of Satan, and is able to throw him out, for it gathereth a Church where he hath his Throne, and ruleth in the hearts of the Children of disobedience; it delivereth men from the power of the Devil, and bringeth them into the glorious liberty of the Sons of God. If a man were in the shadow of death, and had one foot in Hell, the word of God is able to bring him back again, This is it which our Savior said to the seventy Disciples when they returned from preaching the Gospel, and confirming it by Miracles that followed it; I saw Satan like Lightning fall down from Heaven. Where he teacheth, that albeit Satan be strong, yet the Gospel is stronger, so that he cannot stand before it. He hath his overthrow by it, and falleth down before it, as Dagon did before the Ark. So the Apostle showeth, that he was called and sent to Open the eyes of the blind, that they might be turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. We see it also in the example of Christ himself upon the Cross, who converted the Thief, gave him faith and repentance, and assured him of eternal blessedness in the heavens. The Apostles were forbidden to preach the Gospel: through the malice and madness of the High-priests, they were apprehended and imprisoned, they were scourged and evilly entreated, yet they regarded not the words, they despised the threatenings of all their enemies, and continued to sound out the Gospel in all places. Paul and Silas prayed and sung Psalms unto God in prison, and I gained the Jailor to the Faith, verifying that which the Apostle speaks in another place; I suffer trouble as an evil doer, even unto bonds, but the word of God is not bound. Indeed sometimes it falleth out, that the holy Servants of God have their hands tied, their feet fettered, their bodies imprisoned, & their tongues cut out that they cannot speak to the people; but even then the word is not bound, for then their constant suffering and patient bearing of the cross, doth as by a lively voice, publish and proclaim the truth of the Gospel for which they suffer, and serveth to win many to the Faith of Christ, So then, the patient suffering of the faithful (though they speak not with their tongues) is as a solemn preaching, and hath the nature of an effectual Sermon, to gain many to the Faith.

Secondly, we see it is in vain to set our selves against the Gospel of Christ, and the Ministers of God that bring it unto us. True it is, the World endeuoreth nothing more then to hinder the truth, and to drown all memory of the glad tidings of salvation; but all their labor is lost, and all their purposes shall be frustrate. The Tyrants of the Earth may bind the professors of the Gospel, but the Gospel it self they cannot bind, and the course of it they cannot withstand, Paul was cast into prison, yet he freely preached the Gospel of the Kingdom to all that came unto him. Let all those that say it is in vain to serve God and to pray unto him, know for a surety, that it is in vain for them to resist God, and the power of his might. Let them refrain from iniuring his Servants, and from going about to stop their mouths: let them remember what Gamaliell said; Now I say unto you, refrain yourselves from these Men, and let them alone, for if this counsel, or this work, be of men, it will come to naught. A notable lesson to be learned of all malicious men, and bloody persecutors of the Gospel, that would if it lay in them, bury all remembrance of Christ and his Gospel, they shall find and feel the strength of him against whom they wrestle, they shall see the folly of their own ways, and the madness of their own works, and they shall in the end, perceive it to be as impossible, and themselves as unable to hinder the free passage of the Gospel, as to bind the wind in their Fistes, or to stop the Rain of Heaven from watering the earth. Hence it is, that the Prophet speaketh to like purpose to the Enemies of the Church; Gather together on heaps ô ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces, and hearken all ye of far Countries, gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces: gird yourselves and ye shall shall be broken in pieces: Take counsel together, yet it shall be brought to naught, pronounce a decree, yet it shall not stand, for God is with us.

Thirdly, seeing the Gospel cannot be stopped, it it is the duty of all of us, to pray for the free passage of it. We have a promise, that God will spread abroad his saving health, and magnify his great Name over all the Earth; now it belongeth as a special duty to us, to pray unto him, to glorify himself, and to make his Name known among the Sons of Men. This charge doth the Apostle give unto the Thessalonians; Furthermore Brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free passage and be glorified, even as it is with you, and that we may be delivered from unreasonable and evil Men, for all men have not Faith. It is the duty of all the godly, to pray for the enlarging of the Gospel, whereby the Kingdom of God is also enlarged. Let us be mindful daily of this duty, desiring of the Lord this grace, that the Gospel may be freely preached, and cheerfully received, that he would send forth laborers into his Vineyard, and maintain them against ravening Wolves that seek to devour them, that he would bless their labors, and remove all stumbling blocks out of their way, that he would give them courage and constancy in discharging their duty, & utterly remove all hirelings and false teachers out of his Vineyard. It is God that must thrust forth Laborers into his Harvest. It is he that fitteth them to the work: It is he that blesseth them in the work. Let us not therefore be wanting to our selves, but pray to the Lord of the Harvest to send out able work-men to gather the Corn into his Garner. The cause why we are not furnished with such Teachers, and if we be furnished, yet the work doth not prosper under their hands, is, because we do not ask for a blessing from God, from whom every good gift proceedeth.

Lastly, this serveth as a great comfort, both to the Pastors and people. For seeing the Gospel shall have his course, let the Ministers boldly go forward in the discharge of their duty, and teach the people committed to their charge. Let us not fear the faces of Men. The word which we preach, is the word of God, who is able to maintain it, and make it mighty in our mouths, to cast down hills and holds that lift up themselves against it. He is able to danut and dash in pieces all those that set themselves against it. The work is the Lord's, the Workmen are the Lord's, the blessing and success is the Lord's, and they that strive against it, fight against the Lord. Let us comfort our selves in these things against all the disgraces and reproaches of the World. And concerning the Professors of this Gospel, let this Minister comfort also unto them, that they build not upon the Sand, or upon a weak Foundation, but their building standeth upon a Rock which shall never be removed. The Apostles comfort themselves, and encourage one another in the work of the Ministry, because they were assured that the word which they delivered, was no vain word, nor deceiveable Fable, but the Gospel of Christ who chose them to the calling, and sent them to the work, and strengthened them to stand, and gave them wisdom to convince and confound all their Adversaries. Likewise Paul teacheth; That many of the Brethren in the Lord were boldned through his bands, to confess and profess the truth of God. We cannot fall except the word fall with us; nay, except God fall with us, so long as we stand fast in the Faith. Wherefore howsoever others shrink back, and make ship-wrack of a good conscience, let us hold out unto the end, and then we shall be sure of eternal happiness in the Heavens.

Hitherto we have handled the time when this Epistle was written, and the place from whence it was written; to wit, when he was in prison. Now let us consider the Argument thereof, and the occasion whereof it was written. The occasion of penning and writing this Epistle was double: First, general for the instruction and direction of the whole Church in some necessary points of faith and obedience, entreating most waightily and wisely of Justice, mercy, mildness, meekness, moderation, reconciliation, & Christian equity, insomuch that he seems rather to respect the edification of the whole Church, then to have in hand the business of one poor and private man. The special occasion was to entreat at Philemons hands, to pardon his servant that had offended him, and to accept his subjection and submission unto him. This Phile. (as it seemeth) was a cittizen of Colossae, a city scituate in Phrygia, not far frō Laodicea, whose servant Onesimus committing either Theft in purloining away his Masters goods, or some other great and grievous crime (as the manner of lewd and evil Servants is) ran away from his M. as far as Rome, being many hundred miles distant from Colossae, where he supposed he should hear no more of him; or if he did, would not follow and pursue after him so far. This Fugitiue and Runnagate Servant, false fingered, and false hearted, coming to Rome, was by the gracious providence of God, brought where Paul the Apostle lay bound in prison, and hearing him (among others) preaching the Gospel of Christ to Remission of sins, to all that repent, had his heart opened, and was by God's blessing converted to the Faith, became a sound and sincere Christian, and performed sundry duties of love to Paul, ministering continually unto him in the time of his Captivity, as a dutiful Son to his spiritual Father. But after the Apostle understood that he was another Mans Seruaunt, and belonged unto him, as it were a part of his possession, though he found him in his distressed and afflicted estate, very profitable, comfortable, and necessary unto him, yet he would not detain him from his Mayster, to whom, by the Word of God, by the light of Nature, and by the Law of all Nations he appertained. Hence it is, that he sent him back again to his Master, with this Epistle; in which the Apostle doth by force of reasons and vehemency of words, urge Philemon to entertain, and retain with him his fugitive and offensive Servant, but now greatly altered, and thoroughly changed by the power of God's word: Which converteth the Soul, and giveth wisdom unto the simple: as the Prophet teacheth us.

Thus we see how Paul entreateth and obtaineth pardon for Onesimus, a Servant, that was converted by the preaching of the Apostle: which offereth unto us diverse good and profitable uses.

First, we see that Christ Jesus rejecteth none that come unto him, how base and simple soever they be. All such as repent and believe the Gospel, whether Masters, or Servants, high or low, rich or poor, are accepted of him who is Lord of all, and with whom is no respect of persons. A notable comfort to all of low place and mean condition, to consider with themselves, that howsoever the men of this World have many times no respect unto them, yet they are dear to God, and regarded of him, who openeth to them the door of salvation, and reserveth for them a Crown of righteousness. He appointeth his Word and Sacraments for them, as well as for others, and hence it is, that for the most part the poor receive the Gospel. There is neither Jew nor Graecian: there is neither bond nor free: there is neither Male nor Female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.

Secondly, this instructeth us, not to contemn or despise any, how vile soever they may seem in our eyes, but to be careful for their good, and to further their conversion, according to the counsel of Christ our Savior. Math. 18. See that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in Heaven their Angels always behold the Face of my Father which is in Heaven: For the Son of Man is come to save that which was lost. Many are basely and badly thought off in this World, who are in great price and estimation with GOD. Many are wronged and oppressed of Men, of whom the high God of Heaven taketh care and charge. We are ready to respect the outward face and person of Men, but he regardeth the heart. God the Father loveth them, woe therefore to them that hate them. Christ Jesus came to save and redeem them; woe therefore to all them that seek to hurt and destroy them. It pleaseth God oftentimes to call the Servant, and to let the Master alone, suffering him to perish in his sins. This is the cause that the blessed Virgin magnifieth the Lord, and that her Spirit rejoiceth in God her Savior, Because he looked on the poor degree of his Seruaunt, and had done great things for her: He pulleth down the mighty from their Seats, and exalteth them of low degree; He filleth the hungry with good things, and sendeth away the Rich empty.

Thirdly, we learn, that no man ought under any color of Religion and pretence of godliness, to keep away other men's Servants from their own Masters. Paul found the Servant of Onesimus faithful to help him, and forward to Minister unto him; yea, he might be bold with Philemon his Mayster; yet he would not detain him with him, without his allowance and approbation. The Gospel then doth not destroy and disannul the diverse degrees and orders established in the World, but rather confirmeth and strengtheneth them. It alloweth not the Servant to resist and rise up against the Master, although he should be a believer, and his Master an unbeliever; or he be a believer as well as his Master, and in knowledge of godliness be equal unto him: but teacheth him to obey for conscience sake, and to Count his Master worthy of all honor, that the Name of God and his Doctrine be not evil spoken of: And they which have believing Masters, let them not despise them, because they are Brethren, but rather do service, because they are faithful, and beloved, and partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort.

Fourthly, we are to mark, that the Lord requireth of us, to be ready to forgive and forget the wrongs and injuries that are done unto us. Let us put from us all rancor and malice, and not suffer the Sun to go down upon our wrath. O how great is the mercy of God toward us? How great is our debt toward him? Let us put on the bowels of pity and compassion, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another; If any Man have a quarrel unto another, even as Christ forgave, even so do ye. If we come to any of the exercises of our Religion; to hear the Word, to receive the Sacraments, or to call upon the Name of God, if the Leaven of maliciousness have infected our hearts, the word of life, is made the savor of death; the Sacraments, are made Instruments of Wrath; and our Prayers are turned into Sin. We are taught in our Prayers, to ask forgiveness at the hands of God, as we our selves perform this duty toward our Brethren. The promise of forgiveness, is made to them that do forgive, When ye shall stand and pray, forgive, if ye have anything against any man, that your Father also which is in Heaven, may forgive you your trespasses: For if ye will not forgive, your Father which is in Heaven will not pardon you your trespasses. This accordeth with the precept of Christ. Math. 5. If thou bring thy gift to the Altar, and there rememberest that thy Brother hath ought against thee, Leave there thine offering before the Altar and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy Brother, and then come and offer thy gift. If we desire As new borne Babes the sincere Milk of the word, that we may grow thereby; We must lay aside all maliciousness, and all guile, and dissimulation, and envy, and all evil speaking. If we would be doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving our own souls, we must Lay apart all filthiness, and superfluity of maliciousness, and receive with meekness the word that is grafted in us, which is able to save our Souls. Now we have in this Epistle, a most worthy example of receiving them that are fallen, of forgiving the penitent, of the pardoning of injuries, of joy for the conversion of a Sinner. Yea, we learn not only to be lovers of peace, but to be makers of peace; as Paul doth between the Master and the Servant. Our Savior pronounceth them blessed That are Peace-makers, for they shall be called the Children of God. We are charged, not only to seek peace our selves, but to make peace with others, whereby we bear the lively Image of God, who is called the God of peace: we are made like unto Christ, who is our peace, and hath reconciled us unto his Father.

Fifthly, we are taught to take heed we do not rashly sit in judgment upon any. This evil Servant had picked and purloyned from his Master, and when he had done ran his ways, yet GOD found him out and gave him repentance, when he sought not after God. It is a common Prouerb; He runneth far that never returneth. Christ Jesus calleth some at the leaveth hour, as he did the Thief that hung with him upon the Cross. The Apostle chargeth, that We judge nothing before the time until the Lord come, who will lighten things that are hidden in darkness, and make the counsels of the heart manifest, and then shall every man have praise of God. And in another place, Who art thou that condemnest another man's servant? He standeth or falleth to his own Master. All men are in the hand of God, and all times and seasons are disposed by him. The Husbandman Tilleth the ground, and soweth his Corn, but it doth not by and by grow up. The Disciples of Christ heard many things of his mouth, which seemed buried and forgotten, but the precious fruit thereof, appeared plentifully afterward. Let us not limit unto God his times and seasons, nor go about to teach him knowledge. Paul was a Persecuter of the truth, a Blasphemer of God, an oppressor of the Church, yet in the end he was called by the voice of Christ. Let us therefore condemn no man, nor judge any rashly, least we be judged.

Lastly, we see evidently (as in a Glass) in this Epistle, that all that are elected of God to eternal life, shall in God's good time be called effectually to the knowledge of the truth. God hath made all things in number, weight, and measure. As no more shall be saved then he hath appointed, so not one of them shall be lost that he hath prepared to be heirs of glory. God hath many ways to pull them out of the fire whom he will have saved. So many as belong to him, he will at one time or other, send them and offer them the means of their salvation: yea, when we least of all seek our own good, and intend our own conversion, it pleaseth God to call us, and to gather us into the bosom of the Church. The Parable of the Housholder hiring laborers into his Vineyard; teacheth, that he calleth at all times and hours of the day. We see it in the example of Paul, when Christ Jesus called unto him from the Heavens, he thought nothing of his own conversion, but of the Churches subversion. We see it in the Penitent Thief, in Manasseh, in Mary Magdalene, and many others. We see it in Onesimus in this place: Who would have imagined, that this man playing the vile Runna-gate, and the false Thief, and departing out of the religious House of godly Philemon, which is honored with the Name of a Church, would ever have turned a new leaf, and come to the acknowledgement of the truth? who would have thought that the prodigal Son, going from his Father, forsaking his Brother, wasting his patrimony, and spending his strength and wealth upon Harlots, would ever have seen his own folly, and that it should be said of him;

My Son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, but he is found? This is that which is set down in the Acts of the Apostles; When the Gentiles heard it they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord, and as many as were ordained to eternal life, believed. God is able to make a way for the execution of his purposes, and knoweth how to accomplish his decrees. Thus much of the circumstances of time and place, as also of the Argument of this Epistle: Now let us come to the words.

1Paul, a Prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Brother Timothy unto Philemon, our dear friend and fellow helper:

2And to our beloved Apphia, and to Archippus our Fellow-Soldier, and to the Church that is in thine House.

In this Epistle we are to consider two things: First, the Praeface, in the three first verses. Secondly, the substance and matter of the Epistle, in the rest. The Praeface or entrance, containeth the inscription or Title, in these two verses, & sundry prayers in the four verses following. The inscription, remembereth both the parties writing; to wit, Paul and Timothy: and likewise, the persons to whom the Epistle is written; Philemon, Apphia, Archippus, and the Church that was in Philemons house. These persons, as well writing, as written unto, are not barely and nakedly set down, but are described by their several notes and titles given unto them, wherein are contained several Arguments of persuasion, to move Philemon to that whereunto he exhorteth and entreateth him. And first for himself, a Captive and Prisoner, he moveth him to respect his suit, in regard it was the suit of one under persecution, bound in chains, and kept in thralldom, whom he ought to pity, especially seeing he was a Prisoner of Jesus Christ; that is, not for any bad cause, but for the professing and Preaching of the glorious Gospel of Christ. Secondly, he joineth in this suit with him, Timothy a Brother, nay more then a Brother, a famous Evangelist, whose commendation was throughout all the Churches, who with him entreated for his Servant. Moreover, concerning those to whom this Epistle is written; first Philemon himself is mentioned, with whom he presumeth to prevail, both because there is mutual love between them, loving one another in the truth and Christian Faith, and because he is a fellow-helper, seeking to promote and further, by all good means, the course of the Gospel, in both which respects, there should be a near familiarity and special interest one with another.

Secondly, to him he joineth Apphia, which seemeth to be his Wife, both because she hath the second place after Philemon, and because she is set before Archippus, who was the Pastor and Minister of that Church, as we shall see afterward. He calleth her a beloved Sister, most dear unto him for the common faith, moving her also to plead this cause, and to further this request with her husband, whom he would not nor could not deny, in so reasonable a suit.

Thirdly, he nameth Archippus, and calleth him a Fellow-Soldier, because they of the Ministry (if they be faithful) are in continual warfare, not only against the continual engines and assaults of Satan, who withstandeth their Ministry, but against false teachers, and against many unreasonable men, as also against the sins and corruptions that reign or arise in their several charges. We see how men destitute of faith, make continual war against them, one way or other.

This man thus described by his Office, was Pastor and Preacher of the word in the Church of Colossae, as appeareth by the words of the Apostle, writing to the Colossians. Chap. 4. Say to Archippus, take heed to the ministry that thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfill it. He nameth him with the rest, because the Pastors and Ministers of the Church, ought to prevail much with all the professors and people that are under their charge, being to them in place of Fathers, that may or should command in the Lord.

Lastly, he remembereth the Family of Philemon, which he doth entitle with an honorable Name, calling it a Church: which serveth to the singular commendation of this Servant of God, as one that did so guide, instruct, and govern his private Houshold (as all faithful Governors of Families ought to do) as that it might truly be reputed a company and Congregation of Men, Women, and Children, that are dedicated unto God, to his worship and obedience, according to the saying of Christ; Where two or three be gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them. Every Christian Family, is a particular and little Church, where God is sincerely honored and worshipped, which is another special reason to win Philemon to his purpose, thinking so reverently and religiously of him and his private charge.

It remaineth after the order and interpretation of the words, to see what Observations arise out of the same. If we should stand upon every particular point that might be raised out of the Text, it would be both endless and fruitless. Again, the Scripture is as a lively Fountain, that can never be dried up: it is as a rich Treasury, that never can be emptied. Wherefore, before that we come to handle the principal and especial Doctrines, it shall not be amiss to point out diverse instructions that the Apostle intimateth.

And first, mark, that among all that are here named, none is mentioned without his Title of honor, to teach, that everyone ought to have some-what to commend him, and whosoever lead an upright and holy life, their name ought to be renowned and honored in the Church of Christ, which should also cause them to be well reported of unto posterity.

Secondly, observe that Paul joineth with him Timothy: he excelled him in the greatness of gifts, and in the function of Apostle-ship, yet he calleth him his Brother, thereby giving us an example of Christian modesty, whereby it cometh to pass, that the godly, as they are placed in an higher degree, do behave themselves so much more lowly. So the Apostle willeth us, Not to be high minded, but to make our selves equal to them of the lower sort, and to think better of others then of our selves.

Thirdly, albeit he were the principal that wrote, and Philemon the chief to whom this Epistle is written, yet to himself he joineth Timothy, and to Philemon he annexeth as Helpers in his suit, Apphia his Wife, Archippus the Minister, and the rest of the Church in his house, all which he mustereth together as mean, to make an atonement with his Master, which example teacheth all Christians, especially the Ministers of the word to seek peace, and labor to make peace among Brethren, that one may be reconciled unto another, and all men live in charity and unity together. Hereunto cometh the counsel and commandment of Christ our Savior; Blessed are the Peace-makers, for they shall be called the Children of God. Hereby we shall give comfort to men's consciences, and remove the stumbling blocks and offenses that daily arise among Neighbors. On the other side, we may truly say; Cursed are all debate makers, for they shall be called the Children of the Devil. For such as make debate and raise contention, and kindle strife between Brother and Brother is as it were casting Oil into the fire, are not of God, who is the Author of love, but are guided by the spirit of the Devil, whose works they follow and practice.

Fourthly, in joining all these as Mediators for Onesimus, we see the singular wisdom of the Apostle, he leaveth nothing vnattempted to effect his purpose. He doth not deal slightly and rawly, but useth convenient means and fit persons to work this reconcilment. For he employeth and joineth the help of Apphia and Archippus to appease the Master, and to draw him to receive his Servant into his former favor. This is the dealing that Christ prescribeth; That we should take with us two or three, that by their authority, reconciliation may be effected, and every word may be confirmed.

Lastly, observe, that notwithstanding the difference in gifts and sex between the persons here named and expressed, they have all some mark of love set upon them, they are Brethren and Sisters, they are friends and fellow-helpers, and all dear one to another: to teach us that there ought to be a near conjunction, not to be dissolved; and a fast not of love, not to be loosed between all those that are true members of the Church, and professors of the faith.

Paul a Brother of Jesus Christ, and Brother, &c.]

Here are many persons heaped together. In all this, we see the Apostle is exceeding earnest, using all the reasons and most effectual persuasions that he can, to obtain this his purpose, whereunto he moveth Philemon. He marcheth together in battle array, as it were an army of Arguments, to contstrain him to yield: yea, every sentence, or rather word of the sentence, seemeth to be as a Furnace to dissolve the heart, and to melt the affections of Philemon into love and compassion toward his Servant that had so deceived and abused him: the Lord also, herein showing what care he hath, and what care all other Christians should have for the comforting, relieving, and curteously entertaining of the simplest and basest servants of God. From this practice of the Apostle, we learn that good things must be carefully and earnestly followed; yea, by all the means we can be pursued after. It is not enough to do good things, but we must do them in a right manner, we must be forward and fervent in the doing of them. So doth Paul in this place set upon Philemon, and omitteth nothing that may serve his present purpose. Great was the zeal of Moses for God's glory against the Idolatry of the people, and afterward for their pardon and forgiveness. The first Table requireth our love to God, Withall our heart, with all our soul, with all our strength: and the second Table requireth us, To love our Neighbor as our self: so that whether wye perform the duties of the first or of the second Table, we must perform them heartily, sincerely, and earnestly. The Prophet David had a zeal as hot as fire; So that the zeal of God's house did eat him up. When we call upon the Name of God; We are commanded to be fervent in Prayer. In the high work of the Ministry, we are charged to Preach the word in season, and out of season, to improve, rebuke, and exhort, with all long suffering and doctrine. In hearing the word, we are willed to be swift to hear. In all the works of Sanctification, we are warned while we have time, to do good to all men, and to redeem the time, because the days are evil. The Apostle noteth of himself touching his own practice; That to the Jew he became as a Jew, that he might win the Jews: To the Gentiles he became as a Gentile, that he might win the Gentiles: to the weak he became as weak, that he might win the weak: and he became all things to all men, that by all means he might save some. All which testimonies and consents, prove directly, that we must follow after good things diligently.

The Reason remain to be considered. First, God is delighted with diligence and earnestness in our callings, and is wont to yield a blessing unto it. He promiseth, that such As cry after knowledge, and search for wisdom as for Silver, and desire it as a Treasure, shall understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God. Earnest Prayer always prevaieth and availeth much with God. Luke 18, 2. I am. 5, 16. Feruent zeal addeth wings, and maketh it mount up on high, and pierce the Heavens, where Lip-labor is lost labor, and bringeth nothing, but returneth empty to him that made it, like the Dew, that being raised up in the day by the beams of the Sun, falleth down again in the evening.

Secondly, earnestness and zeal are of great weight and force to provoke others to imitation. We must be examples to them, and seek to draw them to follow us. This should comfort and encourage us unto well doing, insomuch as we shall stir up other to be like us, and to walk in our steppes. This is the reason which the Apostle teacheth, writing to the Corinthians: I know your readiness of mind, whereof I boast myself of you unto them of Macedonia, and say, that Achaia was prepared a year ago, and your zeal hath provoked many.

Thirdly, men's hearts are hardened, and their affections frozen, they shut their eyes, they stop their ears, and they turn away their hearts from the truth; and therefore in regard of this Iron or Brazen age into which we are fallen, all means that can be taken, and all occasions that can be used, are too little, (though most earnest) to work upon such tough and rough Mettall. This doth the Apostle prophesy of long age, when persuading Timothy to wait with all diligence upon his office, he addeth this as a reason; For the time will come, when they will not suffer wholesome Doctrine, but having their ears itching, shall after their own lusts get them an heap of Teachers, and shall turn their ears from the truth, and shall be given unto fables. Seeing therefore the earnest doing of good things bringeth down a blessing from God, provoketh men to an imitation, and seeing many are hard-hearted, that they will not easily bend and yield; it followeth, that we are bound to do all good duties that belong unto us diligently, not carelessly: forwardly, not faintly: fervently, not coldly.

Let us now see what good Uses may necessarily be concluded from hence. First, we learn, that zeal and forwardness is a grace and gift of the Spirit to be commended, honored, and magnified in the Servants of God. The Lord himself commended and blessed the zeal of Phinehas. The Apostle saith; It is a good thing to love earnestly always in a good thing. This reproveth those that reproach it, and cannot abide it in others. They scorn and scoff at the Servants of God for doing their duty, and so make themselves culpable of an horrible sin. But let not us be ashamed of the taunts and reproaches of them that hate us and deride us, because we desire to serve the Lord in the uprightness of our hearts. The time will come, when we shall receive the joy, and they the shame.

We have a notable example hereof in Michall, Saul's Daughter, and David's Wife. When she not able to comprehend the inward motions of David's joyful heart, leaping and dancing before the Lord, bringing home the Ark with shouting of voice, with sound of Trumpet, and with gladness of heart, despised him in her heart, and came out to meet him, and said; O how glorious was the King of Israel this day, &c. Then David said unto Michall: It was before the Lord, which chose me rather than thy Father and all his House: and I will be yet more vile than thus, and will be low in mine own sight. Where we see, it is, and ever hath been, the lot of God's Servants, to be branded and upbraided for their zeal, it was never liked of cold and careless men, that are never earnest in anything but in wickedness, nor forward, but in following the profaneness of their own hearts. While they delight themselves in the pleasures of sin, and walk in their own corrupt desires, they are earnest enough: but when they should practice the duties of godliness, and show by their godly conversation whose Servants they are, there appeareth no life of God's spirit in them, they remain as dead and senseless men.

Secondly, negligence and coldness in Religion, and in performing the duties of Christianity, are great sins which wound the Soul, and procure the wrath of God. The Prophet pronounceth those accursed, that do the work of the Lord negligently. The Church of the Laodicea is severely threatened, to be Spewed out of the mouth of Christ, because it was neither hot nor cold, but luke warm. The Idolaters, both among counterfeit Christians, and ignorant Gentiles, exceed oftentimes the true professors in fervency and zeal, they spare not their substance and possessions. The Pharisees compass Sea and Land to win one Proselite. It is a shame and reproach for us, to come behind them that are so blindly led. God will not be dallied withal in the matter of Religion, either we must serve and acknowledge him as we should, or not at all. The Prophet cried out to the Israelites; Why halt ye between two opinions? If God be God, follow him; but if Baal be God, follow him. It is a vain worship to serve the Lord with the Blind, Leane, and Lame, as it were with the offall of our affections, or with the Dregs of our works, and to turn unto him half our face, and the other half to the Devil, or to our own lusts. Is not this an igdinity which a man of any place and reckoning will not take at our hands? It were better for us never to know or acknowledge true Religion, then to know and acknowledge it negligentlie, without profit, without conscience, without zeal, without yielding unfeigned obedience unto it, having it only swimming in our Brains, and resting in our Lips, but never entering into our hearts.

Lastly, seeing we must be fervent in good things, it serveth to season our zeal, and to temper it with knowledge that it be not blind. If our zeal be blind and ignorant, the more earnest and forward, the worse it is: the faster we run, the further we hasten out of the way. True zeal, is a fervency of the Spirit, arising of a mixture of love and anger, compelling men earnestly to maintain the glory of God, and drawing from them sorrow and grief of heart, when he is any way dishonored. This is grounded upon the word, and is caused by beholding a breach of God's Commandments. This appeared in Lot, when he beheld the unclean conversation of the beastly Sodomites. Blind zeal, is, when we are hot and hasty, beside the warrant of the word of God. The Apostle Paul witnesseth, touching the Israelites; That they had the zeal of God, but not according to knowledge: yea, he testifieth of himself before his conversion; That he profited in the Jewish Religion above many of his Companions, and was much more zealous of the Traditions of his Fathers. So Christ foretelleth, That the time should come, that whosoever killed them, should think that he did God service. Let us therefore take heed, that we give not liberty to our best affections to run out, but rule them as they ought, and order them within the compass of the word. All things are not to be done of all men. Every Man must consider what belongeth unto him in his place and calling. We must weigh our gifts, and how we are fitted to every work, so shall we have praise of God, and comfort in our work. And thus much touching the general Doctrine, arising from the earnest manner of the Apostles writing, using all means to persuade Philemon to receive his Servant. Now let us come to the words particularly, and in order.

Paul a Prisoner, &c.]

In other Epistles, he calleth himself an Apostle of Christ, and a Servant of God: but here he calleth himself a Prisoner, which is as glorious a Name, and as honorable a Title, as the other, among all the faithful, and he doth more glory in this, then in the other. He was a chief Apostle, & pillar of the Church of God, the Teacher of the Gentiles; yet we see he is imprisoned, and is not ashamed to mention it, but remembereth his imprisonment and suffering, as an advantage to gain credit with Philemon in his suit. We learn from hence, that it is no indignity or dishonor to the true Servants of God, to be clapt in the Stockes, to be cast into Prison, or to be put to death for the Gospels sake. I say, imprisonment, afflictions, and troubles, fall upon the best Servants of God, without any reproach or shame unto them. We see this in Joseph, who through the false suggestion of his Mistress, and rash credulity of his Master, was committed to prison. When Michaiah had delivered the truth of God, and resisted the false Prophets that deceived the King; He commanded him to be put in Prison, and to be fed with Bread of Affliction, and with Water of Affliction, until he returned in peace. Jeremiah is put in prison because he prophesied, That the Citty should be taken, and the people delivered into the hands of the King of Babylon. John, by the commandment of Christ, writing to the Church of the Smyrnians, telleth them; That it shall come to pass, that the Devil shall cast some of them into Prison, and bring them unto tribulation, but willeth them to fear none of those things which they should suffer. So the Apostle Paul, is not ashamed of his afflictions, but rejoiceth in them, and after a sort boasteth of them, enduring the bitterness of the Cross, the hardness of imprisonment, the danger of death, the bearing with Roddes, the perrill of Shipwracke, the stoning with stones, the buffeting of Satan, the blueness of the wounds that were given unto him. Paul and Silas were cast into prison, And had their Feet made fast in the Stockes, but they prayed and sung Psalms unto God, so that the Prisoners heard them. All these consents of Scripture serve to teach us, that it is no disgrace or reproach unto the Children of God, to suffer in a good cause at the hands of evil men.

Let us weigh the reasons which help to wipe away the shame of the Cross. First of all, God in the sufferings of his Servants, aimeth at their good and benefit, he would have their Faith purified, their patience tried, and their obedience manifested. The Gold is cast into the Furnace, not to consume it, but to refine it: not to wast it, but to purge it. Thus doth Peter the Apostle teach in his first Epistle; That the trial of your Faith being much more precious then Golde that perisheth (though it be tried with fire) might be found unto your praise and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ. So John teacheth the Church, that the Instruments of the Devil, which are the cruel persecutors, should cast some of them into prison that they might be tried. He might have said, that they might be destroyed, that they might murmur against God, and despair of his mercy, for this was the purpose of the Devil: but he pointeth us unto the purpose of God, and the end that he respecteth in all our sufferings; which is, to prove his own gifts, and to make manifest the secrets of our hearts.

Secondly, if we respect the good and profit that redowneth to others by our sufferings, we should not be ashamed of the Cross, no, nor to lay down our lives for the Brethren. For they serve for the confirmation of the Faith of others, that they seeing their patience and constancy may be strengthened in the truth, and emboldened to make confession thereof with cheerfulness. Thus doth God deal contrary to the purpose of the Devil, and all devilish men; who labor by all means to weaken the faith of the Church, by raising persecutions against the particular members thereof, which God altereth and turneth to another end. The Apostle speaking of his own afflictions, saith; I would ye understood Brethren, that the things which have come unto me, are turned rather to the furthering of the Gospel, so that my bands in Christ are famous throughout all the Judgment Hall, and in all other places, insomuch, that many of the Brethren in the Lord are boldned through my bands, and dare more franckely speak the word. Shall we be ashamed of those things which God hath sanctified, to be means of strengthening our Brethren? True it is, if we should measure things by the corrupt judgment of a natural man, it seemeth unlikely and impossible that the sufferings of the godly, should turn to the gain and furtherance of the Gospel: but God often worketh out his own glory contrary to all human wisdom. Who would imagine, that out of death should spring life, or that the blood of the Martyr... should be the seed of the Church? But thus it pleaseth him to manifest his own honor, and to show that he is infinite in wisdom.

Thirdly, if we respect the persecutors of the faithful, they must be discerned thereby, to be wicked men and deadly enemies, working out their own destruction, and sealing up their own reprobation. For as the cause of the godly is made more famous, and spread abroad far and near for which they suffer: so such as persecute them shall come to confusion, and do bring upon themselves swift damnation. The Apostle speaking of the unbelieving Jews, saith; They killed the Lord and their own Prophets, they persecuted the Apostles, and forbad them to Preach unto the Gentiles, to fufill their sins always, for the wrath of God is come on them to the utmost. Seeing therefore God will have the faith of such as suffer tried, the godly that believe confirmed, and the persecutors discerned to be most wicked men, no man should be ashamed of the crosses and troubles that befall unto him.

Now let us see the Uses. First, this serveth to condemn sundry sorts of men, that esteem not aright of the sufferings of the faithful, nor judge of them with righteous judgment. It reproveth such as wonder at them lying in affliction, as at an Owl in the desert, or a Pellicane in the Wilderness, so that they are as a Sparrow upon the house top sitting alone. It reproveth such as think them the greatest Sinners, and measure the condition by the chastisement that they suffer, like the friends of Job, who judged him to be a deep dissembler, and an hollow hearted Hypocrite, because he suffered such things. How many are there that insult over the godly, when they are humbled under the cross, and feel the hand of God upon them? How many are there that esteem of them when they are in peace and prosperity, but leave them in time of trouble, and forsake them in the day of their calamity, as the Apostle 2 Tim. 4. complaineth of many men?

Lastly, it reproveth such as are discomfited in their profession, and offended at the calamities that befall others for the faiths sake, and faint for the Servants of God. On the other side, let us learn better things, and not judge rash judgment against the righteous. Let us not think it strange, to see the best men troubled and evilly dealt withal, by evil and carnal Wretches of this World. It was the lot of Christ our Savior; He was despised and rejected of Men, he was a man full of sorrows, and not esteemed. It was the lot of all the Prophets and Apostles, and is the portion of all the Servants of God in these days, and shall be to the end of the World. It is in vain for us to think, to be exempted out of the common condition of these men. Let us not be offended at their sufferings, not shrink back for the troubles that do befall them. Let us not think them the greatest Sinners for their greatest sufferings, nor reproach them as wicked men, for sustaining the reproaches of wicked men. All they that judge thus, are deceived in their judgment. When the Disciples shown Christ of the Galileans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices, he answered & said unto them; Suppose ye that these Galileans were greater sinners then all the other Galileans, because they have suffered such things? I tell you nay: but except ye amend your lives, ye shall all likewise perish. Or think you that those eighteen upon whom the Tower in Siloam fell and slew them, were sinners above all men that dwell in Jerusalem, I tell you nay: but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish. Lastly, let us be so far from triumphing over them, and trampling upon them that endure affliction, that rather in their sufferings we should suffer with them; in their weeping, we should weep with them; in their mournings, we should mourn with them; in their miseries, we should pray for them; that so we may show our selves members of one and the same body with them, according to the precept of the Apostle; Be of like affection one toward another, rejoyce with them that rejoyce, and weep with them that weep: remember them that are in bonds, as though ye were bound with them, and them that are in affliction, as if ye were also afflicted with them. And this is a notable Argument and testimony to our own hearts, that we are lively members of the body of Christ, and serveth as a sweet comfort unto us, that we are of the fellowship and Communion of Saints.

Secondly, seeing the afflictions of the faithful are not shameful and ignominious unto them, we may conclude from hence, that they are blessed that suffer adversity for the Gospels sake. For seeing Paul glorieth in this place of his persecutions, & accounteth it a praise to him to be a prisoner of Christ, we must needs hold them happy and blessed that are in affliction for righteousness sake, whereby we are joined to the faithful, we are made like them, and one with them; nay, we are joined with Christ, and made one with him, so that the deeper we sink down under the cross, the more we are likened to the son of God. This is it which he teacheth his Disciples, Blessed are they which suffer persecution for righteousness sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven: blessed shall ye be when men revile you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you for my sake falsely. See here a difference between the spirit of God & all carnal men. All men indeed desire to be happy and blessed in this life, & in the life to come, and they are much deceived in their judgment and estimation of true happiness. How many are there that account happiness to consist in honors, pleasures, preferments, riches, friends, peace, prosperity, plenty, abundance, and worldly dignities? and esteem of troubles, afflictions, crosses, shame, persecutions, losses, as the greatest miseries that can befall the Sons of men? But God accounteth otherwise of them, and would have his Saints that suffer for a good conscience, to account otherwise of them then the world accounteth, seeing the fruits of men's wickedness are turned to be the means of our blessedness. The Apostle Peter teacheth the Church this Lesson, Who is it that will harm you, if ye follow that which is good? Notwithstanding, blessed are ye if ye suffer for righteousness sake: yea, fear not their fear, neither be troubled. Christ our Savior teacheth, that to such belongeth the kingdom of heaven, though they be accounted unworthy of the company of men, yet they shall enjoy the blessed society of Christ and his holy Angels: though they be driven out of house & home, yet they shall have their habitation in the Heavens: though they be taunted and termed by the most odious names among men, yet they shall have praise and honor of God, and their names are written in the Book of life.

Lastly, we are put in mind by this doctrine of a necessary duty, that we faint not under the cross, but go boldly, forward with our profession unto the end, and rejoice in our afflictions. If we did suffer as evil doers, as murderers and malefactors, we could have no comfort in our sufferings. Hence it is, that the Apostle chargeth, That none of us suffer as a Murderer, or as a Thief, or an evil Doer, or as a Busie-body in other Men's matters: But if a Man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed, but let him glorify GOD in this behalf. Many men suffer shame and reproach, but it is for their offenses: in such sufferings, we want peace of conscience, and comfort under the cross. If we suffer as drunkards, as robbers, as riotous persons, we suffer for our merits and deserts, we cannot rejoice and be glad when we suffer in this manner. But it is better (if the will of God be so) that we suffer for well doing, then for evil doing, for Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God. Wherefore, if God at any time call us out for the Gospels sake to suffer adversity, let us herein rejoice with an exceeding great joy, and never be ashamed of the Gospel, which is the power of God to salvation unto all that believe. Manythere are that glory in their own shame, but some are ashamed of their glory. We see how many make a mock of sin, and foam out the froth and scum of their own shame; they strive who shall exceed and excel one another in drinking, in revelling, in whoring, in all vanity, and are not ashamed; nay, they are past all shame. It were as great a shame for us to be ashamed of our glory, as it is for these to glory in their own confusion and shame.

Now, to endure affliction for the Faiths sake, is our glory and honor, and therefore let no man be ashamed of it. As for those that are ashamed of the Cross, let them also be ashamed of the Gospel; yea of Christ, which is the subject and substance of the Gospel. Our Savior, declaring that this must be the condition of all the Servants of God, to be reviled and persecuted, saith: Rejoice and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven, for so persecuted they the Prophets which were before you. And the Apostle Peter, willeth the Jews to rejoice, inasmuch as they are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall appear, they may be glad and rejoice. For if it be no shame or infamy to be persecuted and imprisoned for the truth of Religion and the testimony of a good conscience, what greater matter of rejoicing can there be offered unto us, in the midst of our sufferings? What greater occasion of gladness and cheerfulness of heart can we have, seeing the goodness of the cause swalloweth up the disgrace of the cross, and the glory of the Gospel, over-shaddoweth all the shame of persecution. This made the Apostles depart from the council of the Pharisees, Reioycing that they were counted worthy to suffer for the Name of Christ, and the preaching of the truth. So the Hebrews are commended, Who being made a gazing-stock by reproaches and afflictions, and becoming Companions of them which were so tossed too and fro, did suffer with joy the spoiling of their goods, knowing that they had in Heaven a better and an enduring substance.

[Of Jesus Christ, &c.]

Before we heard that Paul entitled himself a Prisoner: Now let us see whose Prisoner he was. He was imprisoned by the authority of Caesar, and the malice of the Jews, yet for the cause of Christ, & the preaching of the Gospel to the Gentiles. The cause of his bands and imprisonment, was not the committing of any heinous crime, but the publishing of the glad tidings of salvation to the world. In this sense, that Paul is a prisoner for Christ, that is, for the confessing and preaching of Christ, he calls himself oftentimes by this title, as Eph. 3, 1. For this cause I Paul am the Prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles. These words are taken in this place passively, not actively: passively, in that he suffered imprisonment for Christ's cause, and was cast into prison for the maintaining of the glory of Christ: not actively, as if Christ had put him in prison; for in this sense, he might be called the Prisoner of Caesar, to whom he had appealed, that the envy of the Pharisees, and malice of the Jews might be repealed and defeated. The doctrine from hence is this, that faithful $\langle \diamond \rangle$ afflicted for the truth, may account their tribulations & afflictions, to be the tribulations and persecutions of Jesus Christ. The persecutions of all true Christians which are imprisoned for Christ's sake, are the persecutions, and must be esteemed as the persecutions of Christ himself. This Apostle writing to the Philippians, and mentioning his Chaines, calleth them his Bands in Christ. And in the Epistle to the Colossians, he saith; Now rejoice I in my sufferings for you, and fulfill the rest of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh, for his bodies sake, which is the Church. Here he calleth the afflictions which he in his body suffered, the afflictions of Christ. So he exhorteth Timothy, not to be ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of him being his Prisoner, but to be partaker of the afflictions of the Gospel, according to the power of God. All these testimonies do teach us, that all such afflictions as are occasioned through the Gospel, and brought upon the godly for righteousness sake, are not only to be called their afflictions, but the afflictions of Christ Jesus, for whose cause they come upon them.

The reasons hereof are plain and evident. For first they are sustained for his names sake, and therefore may fitly be called his. If then we endure them for his cause, and for the witness of the Gospel, whereof he is the matter and Author, he is the occasion of their trouble, and therefore they are to be accounted his. He must needs be a party with us, for whose cause and occasion we are troubled. A man of any humanity and natural affection, will make himself a Companion in tribulation with him, who is punished or troubled for his debt and offense. When Abiathar came to David, and told him how that his Father and his Fathers house were slain, for succouring of David, he presently took to himself, saying; I am the cause of the death of all the persons of thy Fathers House, abide thou with me and fear not, for he that seeketh my life, shall seek thy life also: for with me thou shalt be in safeguard. The truth of this reason is set down by the Prophet, when he saith: Surely for thy sake are we slain continually, and are counted as Sheep for the slaughter. Hereunto the Apostle alludeth and concludeth the reason, in the Epistle to the Romans. Cha. 8. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or perrill, or sword? As it is written, For thy sake are we killed, and are counted as Sheep for the slaughter. Seeing then, afflictions are sustained for Christ's cause, whose shall they be better accounted than his?

Secondly, there is a nearer conjunction between Christ and his members, so that we are made flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bones. If then we be made one with Christ, even members Of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones: the afflictions that are ours must needs be made his, the persecutions that are ours, must needs be made his; the persecutions that are ours, are his persecutions; our imprisonment, is his imprisonment. For they that are faithful, are the body of Christ, and he their head, so that they with him make but one Christ. Hence it is, that the Church which is the company of true believers, is called by the name of Christ. If any member suffer, the head suffereth with it as well as the members, there is such a sympathy & feeling between thē: so is it between Christ and his Church; their grief, is his grief; their sorrow, is his sorrow; their trouble is his trouble. This reason is included in the words of the Apostle writing to the Colossians, when he saith; I fulfill the rest of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body sake, which is his Church.

Let us come to consider the uses. First, see here what Christ accounteth of the sufferings of his Servants. He accounteth whatsoever is done to them that are faithful, a... done unto himself, whether it be good or evil, whether it be comfort and consolation, or trouble and persecution. True it is, Christ Jesus is ascended into the heavens, and sitteth at the right hand of his Father, so that he can suffer no more, he can die no more: yet now he suffereth in his members that confess his name, and rejoiceth in his members that praise his name: when they are troubled, he is troubled, and when they are comforted, he is comforted. And first touching afflictions, all such as offer wrong and injury to the Saints, do offer wrong and injury to Christ himself. This appeareth in the words of Christ to Saul, who had obtained letters from the High-Priests to put in prison those that called on his name, saying to him: Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? He might have said, why persecutest thou my Saints? Why bringest thou them bound to Jerusalem? But to enforce his reproof, he telleth him with whom he hath to deal, and to whom the injury and indignity is offered, to wit; to Christ. A notable lesson for all persecutors, to ponder upon, and carefully to remember. Whensoever they take crafty and wicked counsel against the Children of God, and they are plotting and contriving any mischief against them: when they whet their tongues, or draw their Swordes, or busy their heads, or set a work their hearts, to overthrow and destroy them, let them by and by consider, that Christ calleth unto them from Heaven with a revenging voice: Why persecutest thou me? If this voice of Christ were always sounding in their ears, and entering into their hearts, and piercing their consciences, it would repress their rage, and assuage their malice intended against the people of God. If any man among us that liveth in the Church, were asked the question, whether he would persecute Christ in his person, imprison him, revile him, wrong him, afflict him, and put him to death if he lived upon the face of the earth: he would be ready to answer, God forbid; and to defy him that should offer to charge him with it: he would answer, he looketh for salvation from him, and meaneth not to contrive the destruction of him: yea, he would be ready to say with Hazaell, what? Is thy Servant a Dog that I should do this great thing? 2. Kings 8. 13. But let us not deceive in our selves, in vain words that cannot profit, whatsoever is wrought against the Servant, redowneth to the reproach and contempt of the Master, and Christ will be revenged of the afflictions laid upon the least and poorest member that belongeth to his body, as if they were inflicted upon his own person. Hence it is, that the Evangelist describing the form and manner of his last judgment, when Christ shall break the heavens, and come to judge the quick and the dead: Set the Goats on the left hand and say unto them: Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepaered for the Devil and his Angels, for I was hungered, and ye gave me no meat, I thirsted, and ye gave me no drink: I was a Stranger, and ye took me not in unto you: I was naked, and ye clothed me not: sick and in Prison, and ye visited me not: Then shall they answer him; Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, or a thirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in Prison, and did not minister unto thee? He shall say unto them: Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me.

And as the wrongs wrought against the righteous, do reach up to Heaven, and touch the person of Christ: so on the other side, whatsoever benefit, whatsoever comfort, whatsoever good, is shown to the faithful, because they are faithful, shall be rewarded even to a Cup of cold Water, and Christ will esteem it as do one and offered unto himself. This likewise appeareth in the last judgment of Christ, when he shall say to his Sheep standing on the right hand: I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I thirsted, and ye gave me Drink: I was a Stranger, and ye took me in unto you: I was naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in Prison, and ye came unto me: for verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my Brethren, ye have done it unto me. He doth not say, ye have refreshed, ye have visited, ye have clothed, ye have comforted my Servants, but ye have done all these things to me; I have been filled, I have been refreshed, it is I, it is I, that have been clothed by you, and comforted of you.

If any were asked what he would do if Christ Jesus were in necessity among us, if he saw him naked, whether he would clothe him? If he saw him an hungered, whether he would feed him? Or thirsty, whether he would give him Drink? Or in Prison, whether he would visit him? He would be ashamed to deny him anything, that hath given him all things: he would think himself unworthy to live in the World, if he should see him want and not supply it. But every Christian man to another, is as Christ himself, when we feed, clothe, and visit him, we feed, clothe, and visit Christ; which made the believers set their Lands and possessions, and lay the price down at the feet of the Apostles, to be distributed as everyone had need. Among all encouragements to well doing, there cannot be a greater then this, that Christ accepteth it as done unto himself.

Secondly, seeing the afflictions of the Children of God, are the afflictions of Christ, we learn what to esteem of all their afflictions, they are not shameful and ignominious, but glorious and honorable, as the Crown of a Prince, or as the Banners and Ensigns of victory. This is it which the Apostle teacheth. Phil. 1, 29. To you it is given for Christ, that not only ye should believe in him, but also suffer for his sake. Where we see, he maketh it a special prerogative and preeminence, to endure affliction for Christ's sake, and maketh it as great an honor to suffer, as to believe; and therefore he joineth them both together. The prison into which the godly are cast, is better then the Palace of a Prince. The Chaines that are borne and worn, for keeping faith and a good conscience, are greater ornaments, then all the Chaines of Gold about the Neckes of the Men of this World. The Fetters wherewith the faithful are laden, are of greater price and estimation, then all the Bracelets and Abilements, then all the Silver and Gold, that the Sons and Daughters of Men delight to carry about them. Hence it is, that the blessed Martyrs that gave their lives for the truth, when they came to suffer death, kissed the stake to which they were tied, the Chaine with which they were compassed, and the Wood by which they were burned and consumed. We see it is the manner of the men of this World, to set out themselves with pomp and bravery, to win credit, and to get themselves honor and estimation, whereof we have an example in Herod, recorded in the Acts: Who arrayed himself in roall apparel, cunningly wrought, that it glistred as the Sun (as Josephus noteth) and made an Oration, and the people gave a shout, saying; The voice of God and not of Man. This outward pomp and ostentation, are not the notes and marks whereby true Christians should be known and discerned. Servants are known whom they serve, and to what Master they belong, by the Badge on their sleeve. The persecutions and afflictions of the faithful, are the Badges and Cognizances of Christ, whereby they are known to be his. This is it which the Apostle putteth us in mind of. Gal. 6. From henceforth let no man put me to business, for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus. Where we see, how the Apostle calleth his sufferings for the Gospel, the marks of Christ. What these marks are, he showeth in other places, when he reporteth the stripes, whippings, scars, and blemishes which he bare about in his body; I think that God hath set forth us the last Apostles, as men appointed to death, for we are made a gazing-stock unto the World, and to the Angels, and to men: we hunger, we thirst, we are naked, we are buffeted, we are reviled, we are persecuted, we are evil spoken of, we are imprisoned, we are whipped, we are stoned, we are made as the filth of the World, and the off-scouring of all things. These are the marks which the Apostle glorieth in, and whereof he is no more ashamed, then the Soldier is of his wounds and scars. We see how Soldiers that fight in a good cause, in their Princes quarrel, and for the defense of their Country, if they loose an Eye, or an Arm, or a Legge, are ready to show the place, they account it no blemish, they are not ashamed of it. If these can vaunt of the marks and maimes which they have sustained: how much more honor and glory should we account it, to bear the marks of Christ, and to suffer reproach with the people of God? Howsoever therefore the World judgeth of the scourgings, whippings, and imprisonments of the faithful, they are truly and rightly honorable with God and good men. And if we will judge rightly, we must esteem no otherwise of these their sufferings.

Thirdly, we see that it is not the bare punishment, but the cause that maketh a Martyr and Witness of the truth. It is the cause that maketh the crosses of Christians to be the Cross of Christ. The Apostle testifieth he was a Prisoner for Christ and the Gospel, not for his own sins and offenses. It is not our suffering barely and nakedly considered, can honor us with the reward of glory, and the Crown of Martyrdom, but the cause in which we die, and the quarrel in which we suffer. True it is, afflictions are common to the godly and ungodly, they suffer alike, they are imprisoned alike, arraigned, condemned, and executed oftentimes alike, but albeit the afflictions be one and the same, yet the cause is not one and the same for which they are afflicted. The ungodly are punished for their sins; the godly are afflicted for a good conscience. Abel is murdered of his Brother; Cain is cursed and condemned to be a fugitive upon the earth: both of them are afflicted, but the cause is diverse; Abel is killed for his godliness; Cain is punished for his wickedness. Joseph is sold to Strangers and cast into prison, so likewise are Pharaohs two Eunuchs, his Butler and his Baker: they lie all in one prison, but they had not one cause: for he is committed through the slanders and false accusations of his Mistress, they for their demerites and offenses against their Master. Christ had his feet and his hands nailed on the Cross, so had the two Thieves, they suffered all one punishment, but how contrary were the causes of him and them, seeing he suffered without cause, but they justly and worthily had the sentence of death executed upon them? Let us not therefore only fasten our eyes, and look upon the bare punishment, but consider what the cause is, and according to the cause, esteem both of the person and of the punishment. Some are prisoners of men, others are Prisoners of the Devil, of whom they are holden captive, and both of them for their wickedness: but if we will be Martirs of Christ, we must be the prisoners of Christ. This serveth to reprove the Church of Rome, who glory in their Martyrs (as sometimes the Donatists did) and fill up their Calendar with such as they have canonized for Saints in Heaven, which were no better then Traitors when they lived upon the earth. The Church of Rome, which vaunteth her self to be the only true Church of God, and condemneth other, honoreth diverse Saints which never were in the World; some that were Pagans; others, that were Jews in Religion, and refused Christ; and others, that were Heretics and Traitors, that neither had Faith on Earth, nor have salvation in Heaven, being Rebels to their Princes, and enemies to their Country, and disturbers of the State. And therefore also it condemneth those, who albeit they live under the Gospel, and shroud themselves under the branches of it, as under a comfortable shadow, whereby they have refreshed and enriched themselves, yet they magnify the Church of Rome, and set up the Faith professed therein, they balance it equal with the true Church of God among our selves, and thereby seek to shake in sunder the Faith of many. These men cry out, not only that there are and have been learned men on both sides, but Saints and holy men on both sides, and true Martyrs on both sides; and therefore would have the people carried about with uncertainty of Doctrine, as with a wave of the Sea. But we deny that any have suffered among us for the Roman Faith, or have been led to execution for their Religion. The truth is, they have but too much favor shown them, and too great liberty given them. Indeed, such as have been found factious and forward to advance foreign power, to adhere to foreign enemies, to stir the people to rebel and take arms against the Prince, to compass the death and destruction of the Prince, such as have been Authors of treacheries and conspiracies, and been convinced to be trumpets of sedition by the deposition of witnesses, by the form of their trial, and by their own confessions, have been justly executed among us, as by all men must needs be acknowledged. In the City of Rome, all that will not take the Popes part, or shall take him to be no Pope, or refuse to join with him if an Army should be sent against him, are adjudged to be no lawful Subjects, but disloyal Traitors. No foreign Prince will repute them for his people and Subjects, that shall deny to take his part against any foreign Usurper or Inuador whatsoever. So the Laws of our Land have seized upon some, who have busied themselves in matters of State, bringing over Bulls, declaring that the Prince was to be deposed, and the Subjects discharged of their alleagiance. As for pointes of Faith, they were never mentioned in the proceedings against them, they were not called into question for their opinion concerning the Mass, for transubstantiation, for worshipping of Images, or for any other point of the Romish Religion, or rather superstition. Therefore it is false, that any have died among us as Martyrs, or any otherwise then as Traitors. The true Church of God ever held them for Martyrs, that died for the profession of the Faith, and the testimony of Christ: but such of the Popish faith and faction as have been executed among us, died for maintenance of the Popes pleasure and tyranny, taking upon him to depose Princes, and seeking by open arms and secret Treasons to murder them. True Martyrs suffered for the truth wrongfully, and therefore deserved commendation, according to the rule of the Apostle: It is thank-worthy if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully: but these suffer not in matter of wrong, nor for a good conscience, unless the will of the Pope be the rule of their conscience. True Martyrs must be endued with Charity for as the Apostle teacheth; If I give my body to be burned and have not love, it profiteth nothing: but these have not any shadow of charity who plot the death of their Prince, and seek the destruction of their Country. To conclude this point, unless Treason be Religion, and falsehood truth, and unless Antichrist be to be received for Christ, these men cannot be esteemed and honored as Martyrs among us, who died not for Christ, but for practicing against the Doctrine of Christ, which teacheth to be gentle, patient, humble, and not any way to seek revenge.

Lastly, from this Doctrine ariseth great comfort to the Servants of God, and as great terror to all their Enemies. It is a great consolation for them that are afflicted for Christ's sake, to assuage their sorrow, and a great means to work in them patience, to consider that Christ putteth all their tears in his Bottle, and accounteth their afflictions to be his afflictions. If we suffer with Christ, we shall reign with him: if we die with Christ, we shall live with him: if we be made like unto him in ignominy, we shall be made like unto him in glory. The Apostle Peter exhorteth the people of God, Not to think it strange concerning the fiery trial which was among them, to prove them, as though some strange thing were come unto them, but to rejoice, inasmuch as they were partakers of Christ's sufferings. If anything be able to lift up your hands, and to raise up your harts under the Cross, this consideration is able to refresh our weakness, and comfort our feeble Spirits that our afflictions shall no otherwise be respected and regarded, then if the load were laid upon Christ himself. On the other side, this serveth to terrify the hearts of all persecutors of the godly, and Enemies of all righteousness, they can never escape the hand of God and of Christ, whom they do persecute in his members.

They have not to do only with men like unto themselves, but with him that is the eternal God, against whom they can never prevail. This is it that deceiveth the proud persecutors of the poor people of God, they dream they have to do no further then with weak men, who are not able to resist them, and that they have no farther account to make. But they must know, that their persecutions reach to Christ, and that they slander, revile, reproach, and hurt the person of Christ himself, so often as they slander, revile, reproach, and hurt the least and lowest member of Christ; and therefore shall not escape fearful punishment. Hence it is, that Christ speaking unto Saul when he was converted to the Faith: It is hard for thee to kick against pricks. It is therefore a fearful thing to be a persecutor. It is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you, and to you which are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall show himself from Heaven with his mighty Angels, &c. So the Apostle John describing the tribulation of the Church, saith: Behold, it shall come to pass, that the Devil shall cast some of you into Prison. He doth not say, the persecutors shall do it, but the Devil: because he ruleth in them, he carrieth them to do his will; albeit they be blind and see it not; albeit they be hardened and understand it not; albeit they be senseless and regard it not.

Here is the second person writing this Epistle. Paul joineth unto him Timothy, a man of reverent account, and famous in the Church, as he doth in many other places of his Epistles. The former Epistle to the Corinthians, was written by Paul and Sosthenes: the latter by Paul and Timothy. Paul and all the Brethren which he had with him at Rome, joined together in the writing the Epistle to the Galatians. Paul, Silvanus, and Timothy, wrote the Epistles to the Thessalonians. So in this place, Paul joineth Timothy with him in his suit, because howsoever he were in great credit with Philemon, and able to obtain a great matter at his hands, yet he knew he should prevail better by the help and assistance of another, then he could do himself alone, seeing two may prevail more then one. He honoreth him also with the name of a dear Brother (whom oftentimes he calleth his natural Son) that his gifts and graces may be considered with his person, and carry the greater weight in his suite, and so Philemon sooner yield his consent, and grant this request, being requested, and as it were set upon by so many. From this practice of the Apostle we learn, that what good thing soever we enterprise and take in hand, we shall better effect it with others then alone by our selves. The joining unto us the hand and help of others is profitable and necessary to all things belonging unto us for the better performing and accomplishing of them. This the Wise man teacheth. Eccl. 4. when he saith: Two are better then one. Abimelech, being directed by God to stir up Abraham, obtaineth by his means (who prayed for him) that which he could not compass and accomplish alone by himself. The like we might say of the three friends of Job, they obtained the favor of God, and the accepting of their Sacrifice through the intercession of Job, which without him they could not obtain. Absalom not being able to purchase & procure of himself the good will of his Father, moveth Joab to deal for him, Joab useth the help of the subtle Woman of Tekoah, whereby he is reconciled to his Father. Heereby it cometh to pass, that Paul so often requesteth and requireth the prayers of the Church, that utterance may be given unto him, that he may open his mouth boldly to publish the secrets of the Gospel. All these places of Scripture prove plainly and directly unto us, that what matter of weight and importance soever we enterprise and go about, it is good for us to take to our selves the help of others, to further us therein.

The truth of this Doctrine will better appear unto us, if we weight the causes and consider the reasons. For first, the labor and wages of two, is better and greater then of one alone. In all doing of duties there is profit & reward, but where greater strength is joined and force united, there is greater fruit of the labor seen. This is the reason urged by the Wise man. Eccle. 4. where the Doctrine hath his confirmation, when he had taught that two are better then one, he addeth immediately; For they have better Wages for their labor. It maketh us (having company) to be more cheerful in laboring, it devoureth the tediousness and wearisomeness of the work, and it provoketh us to an holy emulation, who shall go before each other. Hence it is, that Christ Jesus calling and sending out his Apostles, did send them forth two and two, and the Evangelist doth couple, and as it were yoke them together, Peter and Andrew, James and John, Philip and Bartlemew, Thomas and Matthew, &c. Thus they were sent, and thus they labored together. When God had called Moses to go to Pharaoh, and to will him to let his people go, he sent him not alone, but joined unto him his brother Aaron. When the Lord Jesus appointed the seauenty disciples to second the labors of his twelu Apostles: He sent them out, two and two before him into every City and place whither he himself should come. So then, there is more profit in a life that hath a fellow, then when all things are done alone, in the earnestness of the labor the works shall have more force, their strength is increased, their courage is kindled, by mutual exhorting and cheering up one of another, and by the mutual example that one giveth to another.

Secondly, in peril and danger if one fall or be overcome, he hath by his fellow, a fitter remedy against all the changes and adventures of this life. When a man doth take a journey into a far place, it falleth out oftentimes that he cometh into some great danger, out of which he is never able to rid himself, and therefore woe to him that is alone. This is more dangerous in the matters of the soul, if a man fall into sin, and have no man to pull him out of the pit into which he is fallen. In bodily falls it is accounted childish and sottish to fall and not to rise again, to stumble and to lie still in the mire, and therefore he hasteth to rise before any man know of his fall. But in spiritual falls which are more common and more dangerous, the case is far otherwise. For he that falleth into sin, is scarce ever lifted up and set on his feet, unless by the exhortations, admonitions, and reproofs of others he be restored and recovered. This we see in the examples of David, Hezekiah, and sundry others, who continued in their sins until the Prophets of God came and spake unto them in the name of the Lord. This is the reason that Solomon useth to commend the sociable life above the solitary; For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: and if one overcome him, two shall stand against him, and a three-fold cord is not easily broken. Seeing therefore, the recompense of labor, is better of two then of one, and the danger of falling, is lesser in one that hath his fellow with him; in both respects we see, that the help of others, especially of the faithful, is very necessary and profitable to all things belonging unto us.

The Uses are now in the next place to be observed and marked. First, this teacheth us, that in all occasions and adventures of our life, both in prosperity and adversity, we should use and seek the help one of another. We say commonly, that two eyes see more then one, and three more then two. Two hands are better to work withal, then one. Two heads are better then one, and three better then two, to contrive anything. Man is by Nature sociable, and loveth the company and fellowship of others, more then other Creatures that fly together and flock together. The Philosophers could say, that such as leave the society of men, and betake themselves to a solitary life, are either a God, or a Beast. Experience doth teach us, that all of us do stand in need of the help of another; the high, of such as are low; the rich, of such as are poor; so as we are bound together by common fellowship, as by a strong band, and one of us cannot be without another. Let no man therefore despise his Brother, neither let the head say to the foot, I have no need of thee. The Lyon which is accounted as the King of all the Beasts of the Forest, may want the help of the seely Mouse. Let us set no man at naught, be he never so seely and simple. All human things are uncertain and unstable, and are turned as with a swift wheel. Let us therefore maintain peace and concord one with another, that when we want, the comfort and counsel, the aide and assistance one of another, we may not be to seek of them, but have them at hand. Smal things are increased by concord: great reuennues are diminished, and large possessions decayed by discord. A bundle of sticks taken together, are not easily broken: but being severed one from the other, they are quickly pulled in pieces without any great pains or policy. An army of men so long as they incamp together, and march together, are not easily subdued, but one serveth to strengthen another: but if they go straggling and forraging out of order, if they fall to the prey and pillage, everyone providing for himself, it falleth out oftentimes, that the Conquerors have been conquered and overcome. And as there is great use and benefit in the company and society one of another, in regard of earthly and temporal things, so is there greater profit of it in regard of spiritual things. We have need to be instructed and comforted, to be admonished and advised one of another. We want daily, the daily prayers one of another, to commend our selves and our Brethren to God. The Apostle James saith; Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing. Is any sick among you? let him call for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray for him, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up. So the Apostle Heb. 13. stirreth up the Hebrews to this duty, Pray for us, for we are assured that we have a good conscience in all things, desiring to live honestly, and I desire you somewhat the more earnestly that ye so do, that I may be restored to you more quickly. We want oftentimes, nay at all times the prayers one of another, and we must continually be ready to help one another, and mindful of the welfare of the whole Church. This condemneth and reproveth the solitary and Monkish life of those, that abhor and abjure the fellowship and familiarity of men, and like the wild Ass, delight in no place but in the Wilderness, as if it were a work of merit to live alone out of the company of others. These men glory, that they are the light and salt of the world, yet they hate the light, and hide themselves in their dens, as it were in darkness, under a color, forsooth least they gather contagion and corruption from the base vulgar. But as the Gentiles teach by the light of nature, that we are not born for our selves alone, so is it their duty rather to come abroad, to enlighten others with the light which they make boast of, and to season the unsavory, and unseasoned, and unsanctified manners of the people which they complain of. Doth any man light a Candle to cover it under a Bushel, to hide it under a Bed, or to put it in a privy place?

But he setteth it in a Candlestick, & placeth it on a table, that it may give light to all that are in the house. And what use is there of the Salt, unless application be made of it to the meat, that it may be kept from putrifaction? Away therefore with this Monkish life out of the Church, which standeth neither with the ordinance of God, nor the society of man: and let us maintain concord and company one with another, not forsaking the fellowship, as the manner of some is, but remembering that God hath said; It is not good for man to be alone, and that two are better then one.

Secondly, this teacheth us to maintain the public meetings and assemblies of the Saints, and to magnify the Lord's Sabbaoths, when all the Church join in prayers, praises, and other exercises of our Christian Religion, making even Heaven and Earth to ring with the sound of their thanksgivings, and consents in the Doctrines of Faith, and fruits of their obedience. For seeing the doctrine we have in hand, teacheth, that the company of others, chiefly of the faithful, is very available to help us forward, and to further us in all good duties, we learn the excellent use of all Church-meetings, where with one mind, and with one mouth, we glorify God the father in Jesus Christ. Surely, as many sticks make a greater fire, and many strings a fuller Music: so is the meeting of many in the Church, to pray to God together, to hear the word together, to receive the Sacraments together, to sing the praises of God together; it is a fire that casteth abroad a great heat, and an harmony passing pleasing in the ears of the Lord.

Now the more gracious these meetings are, the greater is their sin that break off this fellowship of the Saints, and dissolve the people of God, which came willingly together at the time of mustering together his Army in perfect beauty. Now the Standard seemeth pulled down, and the Campe to be broken up, and the people disperced and scattered as Sheep without their Shepherds, wandering here and there (as it were) upon the Mountains, to seek pasture to save their lives. It is noted in the holy History, that a great Famine was sent upon Samaria, when the Prophets were destroyed; So that they sought for the Fountaines of Waters, and the streams of the Rivers, if so be they might find to save the Horses and the Mules alive, least the Land were utterly deprived of them. The word of God groweth precious in our days, and the people that hunger after the Bread of life, are constrained to go from place to place to sustain themselves. This made the Prophet to cry out: O Lord of Hosts how amiable are thy Tabernacles, my soul longeth, yea & fainteth for the Courts of the Lord, for my heart and my flesh rejoice in the living God. This serveth to reprove those that show no love or liking to Church-meetings, that despise the grace of God offered unto them, and prefer any assemblies in the World, and of worldly and wicked men before the assemblies of the Church. These men (if they be asked) say they hope to be saved, but they will not use the means of their salvation: they look to come into the Kingdom of Heaven, but they regard not the way and path that leadeth unto it: they will needs be of God, but they will not hear the word of God, and therefore we may truly conclude, that because they hear it not, they cannot be of God.

Lastly, we must not content our selves, or think it sufficient to pray unto God, or to praise him alone in the Closet of our house, or of our heart, or in the company of our Family, when we should do our duties to God publicly, and join with the rest of the Congregation. Christ

Jesus himself repaired to the Temple, at the set times of God's worship: so did the faithful in all ages of the Church, they were terrified, neither by the coldness of the weather, nor by the greatness of the heat, nor by the length of the journey, nor by the costliness of the worship: but had the greatest solace and chiefest delight in those holy meetings; where is the presence of God, the joy of the godly, the gate of heaven. Hence it is, that the Prophet saith; Blessed are they that dwell in thine house, they will ever praise thee: a day in thy Courts, is better then a thousand other where: I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, then to dwell in the Tabernacles of wickedness. Psal. 84, 5, 10. True it is, we are commanded to make private prayers, and to pour out the secret Meditations of our hearts before the Lord, but when we ought to assemble with our Brethren in one place, and frequent the meetings of the Church, God will not hear us, nor accept us if we refuse such solemn meetings, although we privately call upon him in our houses. They that come sildome to public Prayers, do also most sildome use private prayers. And such as enter into their Chamber, & when they have shut the door, do pray unto their Father which is in secret, will make conscience to enter into the Lord's Courts, and to pray unto him with the rest of the faithful. For if God promise his presence, where two or three are gathered together in the Name of God: much more will his ears be ready to hear us, and his mouth open to answer us, and his hands stretched out to help us, when we shall join together with the rest of our Brethren, as one man to call upon him. See then the difference between the godly and ungodly. The Children of God have desired nothing more then to abide and continue in the house the Lord all the days of their life, as the Prophet maketh known his request. Psa. 27. One thing have I desired of the Lord that I will require, even that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to visit his Temple. And nothing hath more troubled and disquieted them, then when they have been constrained to go from the house of God, and been banished from the exercises of their Religion. This we see in the example of the Jews carried into captivity. By the Waters of Babel we sate, and there we wept when we remembered Zion. But the ungodly are never more merry nor better contented, then when they are out of the Church: nor never more heavy and discontented, then when they are in the house of God. They think every hour seven. They count every Sabbath the loss of a day, and no time worse spent, then that which is spent in the service of God. All time is esteemed to little and to short, that is spent in pleasures, in Carding, in Dyeing, in Drunkenness, in vanity, and in all wickedness: never considering that we ought to number our days, and redeem the time, because the days are evil.

[To Philemon, our dear Friend and Fellow-laborer, &c.]

Hitherto we have spoken of the persons writing: Now we are to proceed to the persons, to whom this Epistle is written; which are four in number, whereof one is chief and principal; the other, such as are joined to him as less principal. The chief person here named, is Philemon. Touching this Philemon, who he was, and of what calling and condition, it is not agreed among all. Some think he was in the Ministry, and of some Ecclesiastical function, because the Apostle calleth him a Fellow-laborer. But the opinion and judgment of these men is not certain, and the reason whereupon it standeth, is weak and wavering. Rather he appeareth to be a Citizen of Colossae, of good wealth and worship, because both the Pastor of that Church was Archippus, as appeareth Coloss. 4, Say unto Archippus, look to thy Ministry that thou fulfill it; And many other are called by this honorable Title of Fellow-laborers, who never had calling to preach the word, as appeareth in diverse places, where Paul saluteth not only private persons, but Women, who were not to teach publicly in the Church by this Name, as Rom. 16. Phil. 4. 3. John. Now the Apostle useth two reasons, to persuade him to yield to his suit and earnest request; the one, of friendship and familiarity that was between them; the other, of his zeal and forwardness in furthering the Gospel, as indeed it is the duty, not only of the Ministers, but of all the godly, to promote the doctrine of the gospel, and to labor much in the Lord by their prayers, works, counsels, endeavours, and employments. So then in regard of the near conjunction of Christian love and common labor in the truth, and for the truth; the Apostle hopeth to prevail with him. From hence we learn this Doctrine, that where true Christian love is, there is a willing and ready performance of all Christian duties one to another. Christian friendship and familiarity, ought to prevail much, to entreat and obtain duties of love one from another, and to stay unchristian and uncharitable courses. When a contention grew between Abraham and Lot, and between the Heard-men of their Cattle, Abraham said unto him; Let there be, I pray thee, no strife between thee and me, neither between my Heard-men and thy Heard-men, for we are Brethren. Jonathan and David (a pair of sure and fast friends) entered into a covenant of peace and amity, either with other, this love would not suffer any evil to be pretended and plotted against each other, which they did not willingly disclose and discover. David loved him as himself, and Jonathan revealed and betrayed the counsel and conspiracy of his Father, even to the danger of his own life, and the loss of a kingdom. He preferred the maintaining of friendship before the gaining of a kingdom. The love that was in Christ to his disciples, caused him to reveal to them all things that he had from his Father; Henceforth call I you not servants for the servant knoweth not what his M. doth, but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard of my Father, have I made known to you. When Christ sitting at the table, told the disciples, that one of them should betray him into the hands of Sinners; Peter moved John, whom Jesus loved, and who leaned on his breast, to ask who it was of whom he spake, being assured he would not deny to tell him, because he loved him This the Apostle teacheth; Doubtless one will scarce die for a righteous Man: but for a good man it may be that one dare die. So in this Epistle that now we have in hand, verse 9. he saith; For loves sake I beseech thee for my Son Onesimus. All these several places serve to point out, and to prove this truth unto us, that a friend, a true Friend, a true Christian friend, will not deny, but readily perform any Christian duty to his friend.

The Reasons are; first, because true Friends are as one Soul in two Bodies. They agree in one, they consent in one, they take such sweet counsel together, and are partakers one with another, in weal and woe. The Heathen could say, that all things are common among friends: and that a sure friend is as another the same. It is said to this purpose, that David loved Jonathan as his own Soul. 1 Sam. 18. So Luke speaking of the faithful members of the Church, saith; The multitude of them that believed were of one heart, and of one Soul: neither any of them said, that anything of that which he possessed was his own, but they had all things common. Seeing then, that such as are joined in Christian friendship, have one Soul, one heart, one will, one purpose, how can they but perform all good things one to another? Who can deny anything to himself? Who hateth his own flesh, or doth not nourish and cherish it by all the means he can? How then shall not Friends, that have a Title and interest one of another, demand and obtain anything that is just and equal?

Again, this is a note of true love, that it seeketh not his own good, but seeketh and desireth the good of his Brother. The love that aimeth and endeth at it self, is nothing else but self-love (whereof there is great store in the World) when Men respect nothing but their own profit. But true love is so occupied about the thing loved, that in regard thereof, it is oftentimes negligent about it self, not enjoying all the liberty or commodity that lawfully it may have. The Apostle describing the properties of love, saith: Love suffereth long: it is bountiful: love enuyeth not: love doth not boast it it self: it is not puffed up: it disdaineth not: is seeketh not her own things: it not provoked to anger: it thinketh not evil. Seeing then this is one of the fruits and properties of love, that it is ready to neglect it own private profit and pleasure, in regard of the thing loved, we cannot doubt of a careful performance of all duties and demands that are required of it, where it is.

Let us see the Uses of this Doctrine. First, seeing Christian friendship will perform Christian duties, we learn, that a Christian Friende is a sure Friend, and Christian friendship, is the best friendship. These love in the Faith, and therefore cannot start back. Such friendship as beginneth in the Flesh, and ariseth upon carnal causes, and worldly respects, is easily broken and dissolved, the least displeasure doth over-turn it: but the friendship which is in God, and for God, endureth forever, no envy shall undo it, no occasion shall break it, no time shall dissolve it. This appeareth by the words of the Wiseman. Prouerb. 18. 24. A man that hath friends ought to show himself friendly, but a friend is nearer then a Brother. Seek such friends as fear God, and be Christianly minded. Choose none to be thy friend but him that is the friend of God. Let none be thy Brother, that is not the Brother of Christ. One such friend, is worth ten thousand others. If thou have in all thy life found by trial and experience such an one, make more account and reckoning of him, then of a natural Brother (which band is but in the flesh) assuring thyself, that grace will work above nature, and therefore prefer him before all earthly treasure. If then thou be careful to keep thy temporal Riches and Possessions, much more oughtest thou to be careful to keep a faithful friend, and join thyself in amity with him. True it is, there is a kind of friendship and familiarity among Drunkards, among Adulterers, among Robbers, and among all Malefactors; as Solomon teacheth. Prouerb. 1. 14. These sometimes seem most nearly joined, but by the least occasion that can be, they are easily separated. There is in all places and parishes, almost a band and knot of these friends, and good fellows. But such as the word of God maketh Friends, and the band of the Spirit gleweth together, are not easily sundered and disjoined, but have a sure and steadfast conjunction, and are built upon a strong and stable foundation. These love more in adversity, then in prosperity, & in time of need do show what their friendship is: whereas the friendship arising upon worldly causes, will fail and abate when wealth decayeth, when the world lowreth, when trouble cometh, & so show themselves not to have been the friends of us, but of our wealth: not of our persons, but of our prosperity.

Secondly, we learn from hence, to be bold with all Christian friends, and to suffer them to be bold with us. It is a true note of a true Friend, of a faithful friend, to deal plainly, to reprove, comfort, exhort, commend without flattery, without partiality. There is none of us all, how great soever our knowledge be, how great soever our graces be, how much soever we have profited in the faith of Christ, but sometimes we have need to be instructed, sometimes to be comforted, sometimes to be reprov'd, and sometimes to be threatened. It is a great blessing of God, when he giveth a friend, by whom (as by a true Glass) we may perceive and know our wants and blemishes. We shall find everywhere such as will be ready to sooth and flatter us in our offenses, & to tell us all is well done: but few there are that will deal faithfully with us.

This a great plague, and a great judgment, commonly waiting upon great men, and rich men, that they find few or none that dare admonish them of their faults, or tell them of their offenses; and so many times are suffered to run on to their destruction. Let us account it as a special blessing sent unto us of God, when we have a friend by whom we may hear what is amiss in us. We could give him thanks, that would tell us of some spot in our faces, or blemish on our Garments; and shall we envy or malign him, that will discover unto us the sins of our Souls, which do more soil and defile us, then all the blemishes of the Body? The Prophet David having found the benefit and comfort of a godly reproof, when he was reprov'd by Nathan the Prophet, saith; Let the righteous smite me, for that is a benefit, and let him reprove me, and it shall be a precious Oil that shall not break mine head. To this end speaketh Solomon in the Proverbs: Rebuke not a Scornor, least he hate thee: but rebuke a wise Man, and he will love thee. The correction of a Friend, is as the Rodde of a Father: the end is not to destroy, but to save: not to overthrow, but to deliver from death. We are all of us bound, as it were in a bond or Obligation, to perform this duty one to another: and we must in humility submit our selves, under the reproof of our Christian friends.

We cannot better make manifest our love unto our Brethren, then by admonishing of them, and reprov'ing of them. This is it which Moses teacheth in the Book of Leviticus; Thou shalt not hate thy Brother in thy heart, but thou shalt plainly rebuke thy Neighbor, and suffer him not to sin. Can a Physician show his love better, then by telling his patient his disease, and declaring unto him the means whereby to cure it? Can a Man meeting his Brother, wandering out of his way in Hilles and Dales, in Woodes and Wilderness, show his love better unto him, then by bringing him into the way, and laying his error before his face? So that no man can give a sounder Testimony of his sincere heart, and unfeigned love toward his Brother, then by dealing plainly with him when he walketh not uprightly. For a Friende is unto the Soul, as Physic is to the Body: and the admonishing of our Brother, is as the directing of a Trauailer. Let us therefore suffer the word of exhortation, Knowing that such as are out of order must be admonished; the feeble-minded, must be comforted; the weak, must be strengthened; the evil, must be reprov'd; the obstinate, must be terrified and threatened. And let us not fret and rage against our Brethren, when we are checked and controlled for our sins. It is a sign we are persuaded and resolved, to continue in our sins, when we cannot abide to be reprov'd, but are ready to say with Ahab: Hast thou found me ô mine Enemy? The word of God is good to him that walketh uprightly: and we shall find in the ende; That open rebuke is better then secret love; yea, that the Woundes of a Lover are faithful, and the Kisses of an Enemy are pleasant.

Lastly, seeing one Friende (especially a Christian Friend) may challenge and claim much from his Friende, we must know that it is a fearful sin, under color and show of friendship, to betray or undermine one another. Of such false and feigned Friends, David complaineth in sundry places of the Psalms; My familiar Friende whom I trusted, which did eat my Bread, hath lift up the heel against me: Surely mine Enemy did not defame me, for I could have borne it: neither did mine Adversary exalt himself against me, for I would have hid me from him, but it was thou, ô Man, even my Companion, my Guide, and my Familiar, which delighted in consulting together, and went into the house of God as Companions.

This falsehood have the faithful felt in all Ages: This had Christ himself experience of, being betrayed of one of his own Disciples and Household. So have his members continually proved the same, being exercised by the deceit of false Brethren. This was the sin of Cain; Who spake friendly to his Brother, but when he had him alone in the Fielde, he rose up against him and slew him. This was the sin of Joab, his false and fraudulent dealing with Abner and Amasa, he spake peaceably, but meant treacherously; Art thou in health my Brother? And so smote them with the sword that they died. This was the sin of Judas, who had Hail Master in his mouth, and covered the hollowness and Hypocrisy of his heart, with the kindness of a Kiss: but this was a token of his Treason, and the sign that he had given to apprehend him. It was not a Kiss of love, but a Testimony of his villainy; and therefore Christ said unto him: Betrayest thou the Son of Man with a Kiss? Hence it is that the Apostle John exhorteth. 1. John 3. My little Children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue only, but in deed, and in truth: for thereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall before him assure our hearts.

This is the true love which standeth not in word, but in deed: which lieth not in the tongue, but in the heart: which consisteth not in an outward show, but in the inward truth. Such was the love of the godly gathered together after the ascension of Christ, they loved together in truth, and had all things common in the use: For all that believed were in one place, and had all things common: they were of one heart and of one Soul, neither any of them faide, that anything of that which he possessed was his own, neither was there any among them that lacked. Where the Evangelist declareth, that their harts and affections were so joined in God, that being all members of one body, they could not suffer their fellow-members to be destitute, accounting the defeating and defrauding of them, as it were a spoiling and robbing of themselves.

We must not deny our help to them that are in Christ, but show our selves ready to clothe him, to feed him, and to visit him in all his members, as we shown before, otherwise we are no true members, but dead members.

[And to our dear Sister Apphia, &c.]

Hitherto we have spoken of the first and chief person, to whom the Epistle is directed: Now let us come to such as are less principal, being joined with him, which are these: first, Apphia: Secondly, Archippus: Thirdly, the Family of Philemon, to whom this Epistle was to be read. The first that cometh to be considered, is Apphia, whom he calleth a beloved Sister. This Woman seemeth to be the Wife of Philemon, my reason is, because she is placed immediately after Philemon, and before the Minister and Pastor of the Church. For no cause can be assigned why she should follow Philemon, and go before Archippus, but that she was the Wife of Philemon; and therefore the Apostle joineth her next unto him in place, as she was joined to him by the ordinance of God. And this is the judgment of many.

Now, as Paul before did join with himself Timothy, so in this place he joineth Apphia, as a Companion with Philemon, that thereby he might make the way more open to ob...ine his purpose. Good Women ought to do much with their Husbandes: and the Apostle provoketh her by naming and saluting her, to be a mover and persuader of her Husband, to this charitable and Christian duty. We learn from hence, that it is required of all Christian Women to be helpers and furtherers of good things in their Husbands. It is the duty of Wives to stir up, and spurr up their Husbands to all Christian duties and holy fruits of Religion.

The ende of her Creation was, that she should be an Helper unto Man, especially in the best things, for the Woman was made for Man, and not Man for the Woman; and therefore GOD said from the beginning: It is not good for Man to be alone, let us make him an Helper meet for him. Solomon describing in the Book of Proverbs a virtuous Woman, whose price is far abouethe Pearls, (he saith) The heart of her Husband trusteth in her; and he shall have no need of spoil: She will do him good, and not evil, all the days of her life, &c. She openeth her Mouth in Wisdom, and the Law of Grace is in her tongue, she overseeth the ways of her Household, and eateth not the Bread of idleness. An example of this duty, we have in the Wife of Manoah, the Mother of Sampson, when her Husband was greatly affrighted and astonied, at the sight of the glorious departure of the Angel of God, who ascended up in the flame of the Altar, and cried out in the perplexity of his Spirit, and terror of his heart: We shall surely die, because we have seen the Lord: She encouraged him and comforted him, being greatly cast down, If the Lord would kill us, he would not have received a burnt offering, and a meat offering at our hands, neither would he have shown us all these things, nor would now have told us any such. Another example we have in the Shunamite, a Woman of great estimation, when she perceived the Prophet Elisha to come often that way, she said unto her Husband: Behold, I know now, that this is an holy Man of God, that passeth by us continually, let us make him a little Chamber, I pray thee, with Walls, and let us set him there a Bed, and a Table, and a Stoole, and a Candlestick, that he may turn in thither when he cometh to us.

Where we see she stirreth up her Husband to do good to the Prophet, and to prepare him a study by himself, fit for his Meditations. And the Apostles do often urge this duty, and teach, that all Women should be helpess, not hinderers: furtherers, not discouragers: stirrers forward, not houlders backward from good things.

The Reasons are plain. For first, they may by the gracious goodness of GOD be blessed Instruments to win their Husbands to the Faith, by beating themselves toward them with meekness of Spirit, and by patient waiting for a blessing from God. The Water by often dropping, pierceth the hard Stone: the earth by continual touching, weareth the Tough Iron: and what is it that length of time doth not alter? The Apostle Peter exhorteth; Wives to be subject to their husbands, that even they which obey not the word, may without the word be woon by the conversation of their Wives, while they behold their pure conversation which is with fear.

Likewise Paul persuading the believing Wife to dwell with the unbelieving Husband, and not to depart from him, giveth this reason; What knowest thou, ô Wife, whether thou shalt save thine Husband? Seeing therefore they may be effectual means to save the Souls of their Husbands, and to win them without the word, and so gain them a good report and a sweet Name in the Church, they must consider that it belongeth unto them to be helpers unto their Husbands.

Secondly, she is his yoke-fellow, and ought to draw with him in an eeven and equal course, to make her obedience to him easy and cheerful in the Lord. The Oxen that draw in a yoke together, are an ease of the work and burden one to another. Such a pair of yoke-fellows were Abraham and Sara, Isaac and Rebecca, Zacharias and Elizabeth, and sundry others. The man and Wife are as the two eyes in the head, or as the two feet in the Body. The two eyes if they go together, and look both one way, be it upward or downward, be it to the right hand or to the left hand, all is well and comely in the face: but if they be severed and the one look one way, the other another way, what a blot and blemish is it to the face? The two feet, if they walk together, and one step do follow another, they become the body well, and one furthereth another: but if one step one way, and another step another way, there is no agreement in the body. So the man and the woman being made to draw in one yoke, being as the two eyes, the two hands, the two feet in the body, working together, and helping one another, should never be severed and divided to cross one another, to reproach one another, to shame or depart one from another. This piety and honesty, God and Nature doth teach us to practice.

Let us see what are the uses of this doctrine. First, seeing the Woman is made by the Law of her Creation to be an helper; we learn, that a good and Christian Wife that is wise and godly, encouraging her Husband, and stirring him up to godliness, is a great blessing of God. If she find her Husband backward and untoward, cold and careless in good things, she will labor wisely to bring him on, and to conceive a liking of them, that before distasted with him. If she perceive him forward, she will endeavor to make him yet more forward. If she find a spark, she will strive to kindle the Coals, and make it flame out to the comfort of many other. If she see him waver and wax faint, she will never cease until she have strengthened and sustained him. If she find a good beginning, she will further it by a timely proceeding, and a conscionable persevering unto the end. It is a worthy saying set down by Solomon: He that findeth a Wife, findeth a good thing: and receiveth favor of the Lord. And in another place; House and Riches are the inheritance of the Fathers, but a prudent Wife cometh of the Lord. He is blessed of God that hath such a portion. She bringeth a blessing to his person, to his Children, to his Family, to the means of his maintenance, and to his whole estate. She will seek to better his estate (howsoever she find it) both with God and the world, in heavenly things, and in earthly. This reproveth such as destroy or hinder his estate, impoverish him, decay him, or undo him, whether by dainty and delicate fare, or by gay and gorgeous apparel, by costly and sumptuous furniture, by feasting or idleness, by carelessness and negligence, or by any vanity whatsoever. A wise Woman (saith the Wise man) buildeth up her house, but the foolish destroyeth it with her own hand. Secondly, it reproveth such Wives as are uncomfortable and vncheerefull, much more such as are bitter and reproachful to their Husbands, such as Micholl was to David. Of such Solomon saith; A foolish Son is the calamity of his Father, and the contentions of a Wife, are like a continual dropping: Where he compareth the braulings and chidings of a Woman, to the cover of an house, which is so broken, that when it raineth, the Water droppeth in upon the Planckes and Walls, and rotteth the Timber of the house, so that in short time, it is very ruinous and ready to fall. So when Women are given to contention and brauling, they are the cause of great mischief and destruction to the whole family. Civil wars were always held among the Heathen most dangerous: but the iars that are at home, and made within the Walls of the house, are as noisome and grievous, and do threaten the ruin thereof. Every bitter word is as a shower of rain that falleth into the House. This maketh many Husbands ill husbands, and causeth them to delight anywhere, rather then where they should delight to be, and to desire any company, rather then to be with the Companion of his life, which he ought to desire. An house thus divided cannot stand long, albeit for a time it may continue.

Secondly, it serveth as a notable direction for godly Women, in regard of the honorable Name and Title of an helper given unto them, to teach them to watch all occasions, and wait all opportunities offered them to do good, and not to slack them. It is a great point of wisdom to take the occasion: and there is a fit time for every purpose under the Heavens. Hence it is, that the Apostle chargeth everyone to abide in his calling, when he speaketh of the Woman's winning of her Husband. And we have a notable example hereof in the behavior of Abigail toward Nabal, a wise woman, toward a churlish and drunken Husband, when she saw evil ready to come upon her and her Husband, and the whole Family, yet she told him nothing, neither more nor less until the morning arose, because he was drunken, and so had no reason to consider, or to conceive what she had done for their deliverance: but in the morning when he had slept out his drunkenness, and the wine was gone out of Nabal, then she told him, and set before him the wickedness of his heart, the purpose of David, the danger of death, and the working of the safety of the whole Family. It is a great profit and advantage to do a thing in season. On the other side, it is the note of unwise and wicked Women, to draw their Husbands to all wickedness and outrageousnesse, to further them in impiety and ungodliness, and consequently to hasten their own and their Husbands ruin and destruction. If there be any spark of godliness, they are as water to quench it in their Husbands. An example hereof we have in Jezebel, when Ahab longed after the Vine-yard of Naboth, and could not obtain it, so that he came to his house heavy and in displeasure: did she persuade the Kings heart to be content? Did she tell him he had enough, or move him to suffer Naboth to enjoy his possession in peace? No, as if he had not been of himself mad enough, she pricketh him forward; she saith unto him, Dost thou manage the Kingdom of Israel? Art thou fit to be a King? I will give thee the Vineyard, up, eat Bread, and be of good cheer. The like we see in the Wives of Solomon, that were Heathen, they turned away his heart from God, and provoked him to set up Idolatry. When Mordecai refused to bow down to Haman, and to give him the honor that was due to God, he was full of wrath, so that the glory of his Riches, the multitude of his children, the favor of the King, the greatness of his honor, the advancement of his Name, did nothing avail him, so long as he saw Mordecai the Jew sitting at the Kings Gate: Did his Wife persuade him to be patient? Did she show him, that favor is deceitful, that wealth is uncertain, and that honor is as a blast of wind; yea, lighter then vanity it self? No, she moveth him to set up a tree of fifty cubits high, and to speak to the King that Mordecai might be hanged thereon. It is great means to goodness, to delight in good company. It is a great allurements to wickedness, to follow evil company. A day-companion is strong to draw men to all impiety: but the Night-companion is stronger, and prevaieth farther, and oftentimes bringeth to the hight of all iniquity.

Lastly, as the consideration of the Name being made to be Helpers, putteth Wives in mind of their duty: so it teacheth all men two things. First, they must remember, that it standeth everyone upon, to have a care in his choice and match, to get such as may brook their Names, and be indeed Helpers, and not hinderers unto them. It is the greatest calling that we can enter into, and a band never to be broken. Therein standeth the comfort or discomfort of our whole life. It is our duty to be careful to marry in the Lord, that Christ may be bidden as one of our Gueste, and not shut out of our meetings. It is a profane marriage where he is not entertained, and we can look for no blessing to come upon such assemblies. The Apostle teaching, That the Wife is bound by the Law, as long as her Husband liveth, and that her Husband being dead, she is at liberty to marry with whom she will, he addeth, only in the Lord. The same Apostle chargeth us, Not to be unequally yoked with the unbelievers, because there can be no fellowship between righteousness and unrighteousness, no communion between light and darkness, no concord between Christ and Belial. Such unequal marriages between the Sons of God, and the Daughters of men, brought an universal flood upon the Earth. How greatly God detesteth this, the Prophet Malachi declareth. Cha. 2. 11. Judah hath transgressed, and an abomination is committed in Israel, and in Jerusalem, for Judah hath defiled the holiness of the Lord which he loved, and hath married the Daughter of a strange God. This condemneth such matches as are sought out for beauty, for riches, for honors, but no mention made of godliness, or of Religion. The chiefest things to be respected, are not wealth, and such outward things, of the world, for a man may be advanced in his estate this way, and yet in the end be cast down to hell.

Secondly, such as have received by the blessing of God, such helpers and comforts of their life, must learn to love, and delight in such wives, as in those companions that God hath sent them. This doth Solomon teach, Rejoice with the Wife of thy youth, let her be as the loving Hind, and the pleasant Roe, let her breasts satisfy thee at all times, for why shouldst thou delight, my Son, in a strange Woman, or embrace the bosom of a Stranger? For the ways of man are before the eyes of the Lord, and he pondreth all his paths. Where he teacheth, that the delight that the married folk ought to take one in another, is a notable preservative to keep them from uncleanness. They must confess, that it is God that hath knit them together in such wise, that the one should not desire to be separated from the other. The Apostle writing to the Ephesians, willeth Husbands to love their Wives, as Christ loved the Church, and gave himself for it: and showeth, that men ought so to love their Wives as their own bodies; So that he which loveth his Wife, loveth himself, for no Man ever yet hated his own Flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord doth the Church.

[And to Archippus our Fellow-Soldier, &c.]

Hitherto of the two first persons, to whom the Epistle is sent; to wit, Philemon and Apphia, the Husband and the Wife. Now followeth the third person, who was the Pastor of the Church, described by his proper Name, Archippus: and by his Office, a Fellow-Soldier. True it is, all Christians in this life are Warriours, and fight the battles of God, against sin, the world, and the Devil: and so may be called Fellow-Soldiers, in as much as they are members of the Militant Church: yet the Ministers of God are in a peculiar and special manner, so called, because they are as it were the Captains & Standart-bearers to go before others, and to order the battle. This Title to be called a Soldier, is a borrowed speech, (for their Weapons are not carnal) and importeth great labor and much trouble, it signifieth the necessity of the calling, and pointeth out the danger and opposition that is made against it. The Doctrine from hence is this, that the calling of a Minister is painful, most needful, and a troublesome calling, resisted and opposed against by Satan and wicked men. When Christ saw the people scattered abroad and dispersed, as Sheep without a Shepherd, he had compassion upon them, and said to his Disciples; The Harvest indeed is great, but the Laborers are few, pray ye therefore the Lord of the Harvest, to thrust forth Laborers into his Harvest. Where we see, he calleth the Ministers of the Gospel Laborers in the Harvest-field, and gatherers of the Lord's Corn. We see what great pains men take in Harvest, and how necessary Laborers are, when the Corn is ripe and ready to be reaped. The Apostle Paul speaking of himself, and the rest of the Apostles saith; We together are God's Laborers. And in another place; The Elders that rule well, is worthy of double honor, specially they which labor in the word and doctrine. Heerevnto agreeth that which he writeth in another Epistle: Study to show thyself approved unto God, a work-man that needeth not to be ashamed, dividing the word of truth aright. All these testimonies teach us this truth, that the office of the Ministry is not so much a dignity, as it implieth a duty; it is not only an honor, but a burden; it is not only a Title of renown, but a work of labor.

This will better appear, if we mark the Reasons following. First, the ordinance of God appointeth, that every calling should eat their Bread in the sweat of their brows; that is, should be industrious and painful in their several vocations, whether it be in bodily or in spiritual labor. The bodily calling, requireth bodily labor: the spiritual calling, requireth spiritual labor. Idleness and negligence in any work of the Lord is accursed. An idle hearer, that joineth not practice, is abominable: a loose and careless professor, that addeth not obedience, is a bad professor.

Secondly, the Ministers of God fight the Lord's spiritual battles for us, by their prayers, care, watchfulness, faith, and the whole Armor of God: by opposing and setting themselves against Heritiques, Atheists, Worldlings, Schismatics, Wicked men, and all things that exalt themselves against God. Is not this a great work, of great labor, to resist the budding and growing of so many sins as daily rise up, as men that strive with the whole Earth? To labor, in study, in word, in doctrine, in zeal, in watching? According to that which the Apostle saith; I was often in weariness, and painfulness, in watching often: besides the things which are outward, I am combred daily, and have the care of all the Churches: who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is offended, and I burn not? How did Moses fight in prayer, and labor in zeal for the people of Israel, when he stood in the gap and stopped the wrath of God that was kindled against them? If then we would reason from the general to the special, waying the purpose and appointment of God, who hath annexed labor to every calling, or consider that the Ministers of the word are the Soldiers of God, to fight his battles against sin and sinful men; in both respects we may conclude, that the calling of the ministry, is an office of great necessity, and of much labor.

This doctrine teacheth us, and offereth unto us diverse Uses. First, let us learn to acknowledge the work of the Ministry, to be a work of great diligence, painfulness, and labor, if it be performed as it ought to be. We must keep back nothing from the people, but show unto them the whole counsel of God. We must lay the Foundation of Religion among them, and build constantly upon it, which cannot be done without faithfulness. If we take heed to our selves, and to all the flock, whereof the holy Ghost hath made us Ouer-seers to feed the Church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood, we shall find our function to be full of labor and sweating, to receive much evil entreating, and hard entertainment here in this World. The Apostle teaching the duty of the hearers toward their Ministers, saith; Let a man so think of us, as of the Ministers of Christ, and disposers of the secrets of God: and as for the the rest, it is required of the Disposers, that every Man be found faithful. So he teacheth in another place: This is a true saying, If any Man desire the office of a Bishop, he desireth a worthy work. Where he showeth indeed, that the calling is a worthy calling, but it requireth also worthy laboring. This will farther appear unto us, if we consider the Titles that are given unto them. They are called Builders, that are continually busy in building, hewing tough Timber, and squaring rough stones. No Timber, no Stones of themselves so unfit for building, as we are by Nature to be coupled together, and to grow unto an holy Temple in the Lord. They are called Soldiers, they are always fighting or looking for their enemies, and drawing out the Sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. Is any calling under Heaven more necessary, then the profession of a Soldier in time of danger? And when an assault is made, or the battles join, is any profession more painful? Sometimes they are called Husband-men. Is not the life of the Husbandman a painful life, and is not the ending of one work the beginning of another? Doth not every season of the year bring his several travel? So that no calling is accompanied with more labor and less ease. Sometimes they are called Watch-men, who stand continually on their watch Tower, to discry the coming and approaching of the Enemy. Sometimes they are called Shepherds, abiding in the field, and keeping watch by night over their flock; they are in the day consumed with heat, and with Frost in the night, and their sleep departeth from their eyes. Seeing therefore the Ministers aie builders of the Lord's house, Soldiers in the Lord's Campe, Husbandmen in the Lord's field, Watch-men in the Lord's Citty, and Shepheardes over the Lord's flock, which he hath redeemed with his precious blood; we must all confess, that the Ministry of the word is a work of great labor, if it be discharged aright. For this, if we know not by practice, we may see by experience, that to study with constantnesse, to meditate with earnesse, to instruct with diligence, to exhort with carefulnesse, to reprove with zeal, to comfort with cheerfulness, to convince with boldness, to watch over the people with a godly over-sight, as they that must give accounts for their Souls, to conceive godly anger and great sorrow for sin, to pray in public and private, to go in and out before the people of God in the doctrine of Faith, and in example of life, to prepare themselves to handle the word, and to deliver it with power and evidence of the spirit, with earnest affections, being thus prepared; I say to perform all these duties, doth more consume the inward parts, wast the body, impair nature, decay strength, spend the vital Spirits, and cause them to be subject to sundry infirmities, sicknesses, and diseases, then any the strongest labor that is used among men. For this we may observe, that the labors of the body (though they be great) maintain strength, preserve the stomach, increase the appetite, and add vigor to every part: but it is far otherwise in the labors of the mind, they weaken the natural powers, they wast the vital Spirits, and they decay the health of the body. Hence it is, that the Apostle giveth this precept to Timothy, a Minister of the Gospel; Drink no longer Water, but use a little Wine for thy stomachs sake, and thine often infirmities: declaring thereby, that it often falleth out, that the Ministers of the Gospel wick take pains in their callings, are feeble in body, weak in strength, sparing in diet, and subject to diseases.

Secondly, seeing the calling of a Minister requireth pains and labor, it reproveth those that be Idol Shepherds, dumb Dogs, evil Beasts, slow bellies; not laborers, but loiterers; not workmen, but sleepers: which make not the calling painful, but gainful. How many are there that enter into this weighty and worthy calling for their own ease, and to follow idleness and pleasure? How many, to enrich themselves, and to gather wealth? The Prophet Isaiah complaineth greatly of such in his time. Chap. 56. 10. Their Watchmen are all blind, they have no knowledge, they are all dumb Dogs, they cannot bark: they lie and sleep, and delight in sleeping. Let all such consider the greatness and height of their excellent calling, and remember the honorable Titles whereby they are called, that so they may be put in mind of their duties. Let them be diligent (according to the counsel of Solomon) To know the State of their flock, and take heed to the herds: for Riches remain not always, nor the Crown from generation to generation. And howsoever many that possess the places, occupy the rooms, and usurp the Titles of Pastors, do glory in their calling, and account themselves sent of God: yet so long as they loiter in the Lord's Harvest, and will take no pains to win Souls to God, they are but Idols, They have eyes and see not, they have a mouth and speak not, neither make they a sound with their throat, they that make them are like unto them, so are all that trust in them. True it is, they can say somewhat for themselves, and can allege sundry reasons to maintain their ease and idleness; And the sluggard is wiser in his own conceit, then seven men that can render a reason: as appeareth in the example of the slothful Servant, who did hide his Masters Talent: notwithstanding, if the diligence in their calling, be not answerable to the dignity of their office, they shall have the reward of sluggards, they shall have the Talent and gifts which they have received, taken from them, and the blood of those that perish through their negligence, shall be required at their hands.

Again, it condemneth and convinceth the senseless opinion of vain and unthankful men, that cry out against the Ministers in every place, accounting their calling easy, and themselves idle, as living by the sweat of other men's brows, and receiving their means and maintenance without any manner of pains. Albeit, this objection be indeed idle, and deserve no answer, and that it is in vain to reason with the belly, that hath no ears to hear, nor heart to conceive; and albeit I stand in a slippery place, because I should be censured to speak rather for our selves, then for others, and to respect more our own gain, then the good of others: yet somewhat must be said to this foolish and peevish conceit. Indeed, I acknowledge freely, some are unprofitable drones, that do not gather, but eat the Honny: and some idle Shepherds that fleefe the sheep, but feed not the Flock: these I confess have their living come in easily, who indeed deserve no living, and because they will not labor, they should not eat; and woe be to them if in time they repent not. But these men that object as before, do exclaim and cry out, not against the abuses of the office, or the slothfulness and negligence of men, but against the calling it sefe, contrary to the saying of Christ, who teacheth, that the Labourer is worthy of his hire, and the workman of his meat: and opposing themselves against the ordinance of God, who hath appointed the Ministry to be maintained: for as they that Ministred at the Altar, did live of the Altar: so God hath ordained, that they which preach the Gospel, should live of the Gospel. As these men are ignorant of this high ordinance of God, so they seem not to know themselves. They are so blind, so brutish and blockish, that they know not by any experience from themselves, that men have souls, and that there is an immediate soul-labor, far greater then bodily labor, and likewise a soul-suffering (which they shall one day feel, if they repent not) many ways exceeding and surpassing bodily suffering, or any torment that befalls the body. Remember with me, and consider a little, (though it be in an higher degree) the sorrow of the Soul that was upon Christ in the Garden, without any the least touch and visitation of the body, whether it were painful and laboursome or not, When it so heated and crushed him, that it caused him to sweat drops of blood, that trickled down to the ground. Many diseases of the body are very painful and hard to be borne; but the grief, and anguish, and horror of the soul, is a thousand times more painful, according to that which Solomon speaketh in the Proverbs, Chap. 18. The spirit of a Man will sustain his infirmity, but a wounded spirit who can bear it? Furthermore, there is persecution of the Soul, as well as a persecution of the body; and these two are distinguished, and differing one from the other. For when Tyrants persecute the Church, and rage with fury against the Saints, their faith is not shaken, but Religion then flourisheth most of all, as we see when Israel was in Egypt. The greatest slavery and slaughter, is, when men's souls are corrupted with false doctrine. Lastly, is the calling of a Prince, of a Counselor, of a Noble-man, an idle calling, because they use not bodily labor? This is, as if a man should say, that the Governor of the Ship doth nothing in sailing, because while some climb the Masts, other walk upon the Hatches, he sitteth quiet and holdeth the Sterne: he doth not indeed as they do, but he doth far greater and better things. The Church and Common-wealth are not unfitly compared to a man's body, which consist of many partes, all needful and necessary, yet all have not the same uses and functions. If the members of a man's body should rise and rebel against the belly, if the feet should plead, that they only bear up the weight of the whole body, if the hands should affirm, that they labor painfully, earn their living, and bring many other commodities: if the shoulders should say, that they bear all burdens: or the head, that it seeth and heareth: the mouth, that it speaketh: and then if all jointly should turn themselves to the belly, and accuse it to be without profit, to remain in the midst of the body, without doing anything, and sustain no labor to the maintenance of the rest of the partes: were not this a foolish conceit of reasoning, and would not this tend to the ruin of the whole body? In the body political, if the people that dig and delue, should complain and conspire against the Prince and Nobles, (who labor by care, rule by authority, foresee by wisdom, and manage by government) because they work not with their hands, would not this draw with it the destruction of the Common-wealth? So is it in the Church, and in the offices of the Church. As the people labor by working, so do the Ministers in studying and preaching. All have not one office, all have not one use. Therefore the Apostle saith; The body is not one member, but many: if the foot should say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body, is it therefore not of the body? And if the ear should say, because I am not the eye, I am not of the body, is it therefore not of the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? And if the whole were hearing, where were the smelling? But now hath God disposed the members, everyone of them in the body at his own pleasure: for if they were all one member, where were the body? But now are there many members, yet but one body: and the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor the head again to the feet, I have no need of you. Whereby we see, that the body consisteth of many members, all have their necessary use for the preservation of the whole, and yet all have not one and the same function. So then, they despise the Ministers of the Gospel, and so account the Ministry of the word needless and unprofitable, because they work not with their hands, and not labor with bodily labor; are as mad and monstrous, as they that would have all the body to be an hand; no mouth, no head, no foot. For albeit, the Teachers of the Church be not the hands of the body, to handle the Carpenters Axe, or the Shepherds Crooke, or the Husbandmans Plough, or the saw of the Sawyer: yet he is as the eye of the body, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death: as the mouth of the body to speak to God, and to pour out supplications before him for the people: yea, he is also as the belly, for as the belly which receiveth all meats that nourish man's body, doth send them back again with advantage, to the nourishment of the whole body: so the Minister receiving maintenance from the Church, doth feed them again, and nourisheth them with the bread of life to the salvation of their souls. He receiveth temporal things, but he soweth unto them spiritual things. The Apostle saith; Who goeth a warfare any time at his own cost? Who planteth a Vineyard, and eateth not the fruit thereof? Or who feedeth a Flock, and eateth not of the Milk of the flock? The Soldier liveth by the receiving of his wages; the Husbandman, by the fruits of his labors; the Shepherd, by the increase of his flock: and therefore it must not seem strange unto us, that the Lord's Soldiers should enjoy their pay, and that his Workemen should have their hire.

Lastly, seeing the calling of the Pastor set over the people, is painful, it offereth good considerations and profitable Meditations, both to the Pastors, and to the people. Touching the Ministers, it serveth as a good admonition to such as purpose and intend to enter into this great calling of the Ministry, that they do it wisely and warily, that they run not before they be sent, that they enter at the Door, and climb not in at the Windowe, that they consider what provision, and store of new and old they have, to go through the work. Such as mean to build, do first make great provision and preparation. The Kings of the Nations, and Princes of the Earth, with great advise and consultation, do proclaim wars. The Ministry is a going to Warfare, it is a building of God's House; and therefore it is to be enterprized not rashly, but advisedly: not meanly stored, but plentifully furnished with all manner of provision fit for the Lord's work. Again, being the Soldiers of Christ, and the leaders of his people, they must seek to please, not men, but their Captain that hath chosen and called them, they must take heed they do not entangle and snare themselves in worldly matters, and so hinder their work in hand, whereby they are made unfit to serve God and his Church. The order and discipline of the Wars is such, that so soon as the Soldier hath enrolled and given his name to his Captain, he leaveth his house and other affairs, which might with-draw his mind, and mindeth nothing but the battle. So ought we to be wholly loosed, and throughlie freed from the impediments and incumbrances of this Worlde, that Christ may have our service in this warfare. This is that use which the Apostle maketh of this Doctrine. 2. Tim. 2. Thou therefore suffer affliction, as a good Soldier of Jesus Christ; No Man that warreth, entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, because he would please him that hath chosen him to be a Soldier. Touching the people, they must know, that when God sendeth such Laborers among them, they must be esteemed and accounted as the greatest defense and preservation of a Citty and Kingdom. This is confessed by Joash the King of Israel (when Elisha fell sick of his sickness, whereof he died) O my Father, my Father, the Charet of Israel, and the Horsemen of the same. The prayer of Moses, prevailed more then the Sword of Joshua, and all the furniture of war against the Amalekites. The Apostle writing to the Hebrews, exhorteth thē To obey them that have the over-sight of them, and to submit themselves, because they watch for their souls as they that must give accounts, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief, for that is unprofitable for them. Secondly, it teacheth them to account them worthy of their hire and wages, & to esteem them worthy of double honor. It is a grievous and a crying sin, to keep back the laborers wages, to diminish it, to grudge at it, and to take it to themselves, and it calleth for vengeance, & entereth into the ears of the Lord of hosts. The Ministers are the Lord's laborers and workmen, hired to labor in this Vineyard, to sow, to plant, to water, to prune, to dig, & he hath appointed to them their portion for their maintenance: if this therefore be detained from them by In-justice, it crieth unto God, and bringeth oftentimes his curse upon us, both in spiritual and temporal things. In spiritual things, because he dealeth with us in heavenly things, as we deal with his Ministers in earthly things. If we detain from them their maintenance, he will detain from us his blessing. If we be sparing in giving them their hire, he also will be sparing in bestowing upon them his graces. As we sow, so we shall reap. In temporal things, because God promiseth a blessing to such as pay the Lord his due, and threateneth to curse them that spoil him in his Tithes and offerings. This we see in the Prophet Malachi, where God complaineth of their spoiling and defrauding of him, he saith; Ye are cursed with a curse, for ye have spoiled me, even this whole Nation: bring ye all the tithes into the Store-house, that there may be meat in mine House, and prove me now here with, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open the Windowes of Heaven unto you, and pour you out a blessing without measure. If then we desire the blessings of God to come upon us in spiritual graces, or in earthly things, we ought not to with-hold the Laborers wages, that plough up our fallow grounds, and Till our barren hearts. It is a worthy exhortation, which the Apostle giveth to the Church of the Thessalonians, touching their Ministers, We beseech you Brethren, that ye acknowledge them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord and admonish you, that ye have them in singular love for their works sake. For seeing the true Pastors of Christ bestow their labor among us, and consume themselves as the Candle, to give light to others, we ought to show the bowels of love and compassion toward them, we ought not to be wanting unto them in the fruits of our love.

[And to the Church that is in thine House, &c.]

Hitherto we have handled the third person written to; namely, Archippus, together with the description of him to be a Soldier of Christ, and a Fellowe-Soldier with the Apostle: Now, we are to proceed to the fourth and last which yet remaineth, which is a joining of many persons together, for he addeth to the former, The Church which is in thine House. He adorneth the Household and Family of Philemon, with the Honorable and renowned Title of a Church. This serveth to commend as well Philemon the Master, who had instructed his Family in the Doctrine of godliness, as also the Household it self, which had been taught and trained up by him.

We see here a private House is called a Church. For seeing where two or three are gathered together in the name of Christ, he is there in the midst of them: every assembly or meeting of the Saints, is called not unfitly by that Name. Philemon to his perpetual commendation, had by his care and industry, made of his house a little Church, instructing, guiding, governing, framing, and ordering them in the knowledge and fear of God. We learn from hence, that all Householders ought to prepare, instruct, and order their Families in the knowledge of God, and obedience of godliness, that the house of the Master may be the Church of God. And that it is the duty of all such as have the government and oversight of others to see thē taught and instructed in the ways of God, it appeareth by many precepts and examples set forth unto us in the Scriptures. This is it which Moses gave in charge to the Israelites, Ye shall lay up these my words in your harts, and in your soul, and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as a frontlet between your eyes, And ye shall teach them your Children, speaking of them, when thou fittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. So the Prophet speaking of the great works of God, wrought for the safety of his people, & the overthrow of their enemies, declareth, How he established a testimony in Jacob, and ordained a Law in Israel, which he commanded our Fathers, that they should teach their Children, that the posterity might know it, and the Children which should be borne, should stand up and declare it to their Children, that they might set their hope on God, and not forget the works of God, but keep his Commandments. This it is which Solomon speaketh. Prover. 22. 6. Teach a child in the Trade of his way, and when he is old he shall not depart from it. Hereunto also agreeth the saying of the Apostle; Ye Fathers, provoke not your Children to wrath, but bring them up in instruction and information of the Lord. Now, as we have seen sundry precepts, pressing us to the performance of this duty, so we have many examples of the godly, that have put it in practice, and gone before us in their obedience. Abraham the Father of the faithful, is commended of God, for his care and conscience this way. Gene. 18. 19. where he saith: I know him that he will command his Sons, and his household after him, that they keep the way of the Lord, to do righteousness and judgment. Job is reported to have sanctified his Children, when the days of their banqueting were gone about, He rose up early in the Morning, and offered burnt offerings according to the number of them all. Cornelius, a Captain of the Italian band, feared God with all his Household. The Parents of Timothy, his Grand-mother and Mother, brought him up in the knowledge of the Scriptures of a Child, Which are able to make us wife unto salvation through the Faith which is in Christ Jesus. To these precepts and example before remembered, we might add diverse other out of the Book of God, to teach us, that to whom soever GOD hath vouchsafed this grace, and given this honor to make him a Father of Children, a Mayster over Seruaunts, a Governor over an Houshold; he requireth with all this duty, and therefore layeth it as a burden upon his Shoulders, to teach, to exhort, to admonish, to reprove, and to instruct all those that are under his charge and jurisdiction.

The Reasons enforcing this Doctrine, are many in number, strong in value, and manifest in the view of all that will rightly consider of them. For first, all Christians are generally charged to exhort and admonish one another, as we see. 1. Thess. 5. 11. Heb. 3. 13. 14. Levite. 19. 17. So then, unless the rulers of Families will exempt themselves out of the number of Christians, they cannot shake off this yoke, but they are bound to edify and exhort daily their Families, least their harts be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. If then we be bound generally to admonish one another, even those to whom we are less bound, much more are we to do it to such, as we are tied unto by a double band, and a nearer conjunction.

Secondly, every Mans house is his private charge, which he must over-see, it is as his Flock which he must attend, it is as his City, over which he must watch: and thereby fit them for the hearing of the public Ministry of the word; and therefore must answer for their negligence. This we see in the example of Eli. 1. Sam. 2. 29. He is charged with the sins of his Children which they had committed, and to have honored them above the Lord. This is a grievous fault, and an horrible offense, to set yp our Sons instead of God, and to make more account of them then we do of the most high. Hence it is that Solomon saith; *Be diligent to know the State of thy Flock, and take heed to the Heard*s. Such as are Shepherds, over the Sheep of the Pasture which are unreasonable, ought to care & provide for them: much more ought such to be diligent and watchful, as have the people of God committed unto them, and have a charge to look to his sheep which are endued with reason, whose Souls are immortal, who bear the Image of God upon them, and for whom Christ Jesus shed his most pure and precious blood. Every man hath some charge or other, greater or lesser, in the Church, in the Common-wealth, or in the family: and everyone must be diligent to know the estate of this charge, laboring earnestly to discharge it. And if we will make conscience of our duty, we shall find the least flock enough for our feeding, the least field sufficient for our tilling, the least house great enough for our teaching and ordering.

Thirdly, we may be drawn to the discharging of this duty, if we consider the profit and benefits that arise from hence. First, it will be a means to make them more carefully to learn to know the will of God, when they consider it shall be required of them, and an account taken how they hear. Secondly, it will cause them to retain in mind and memory the better, the Lessons which they have learned, when they have whetted them upon their Families. Thirdly, God will increase his gifts and graces that are in them already, he will bless them with a new supply, for to him that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance. Fourthly, it will breed and begin great obedience and dutifulness in all the degrees of their Families; first to God, then to themselves; and afterward to others, to the preventing of a thousand household griefs and troubles, that arise for want thereof. This obedience is a thing which all Fathers and Masters greatly desire. Everyone desireth to have dutiful Children and faithful Servants: this is the way and course to be taken, that we may attain unto it. So when such as have been instructed and nurtered by us, shall go abroad into other families of their own, and grow to have houses themselves, as they have been instructed, so will they instruct their Servants, and deal toward them as they have been dealt withal themselves. Lastly, the public ministry is made more fruitful unto them, in that the seed sown in their harts is watered, and thereby made to spring up. And this is found true by daily experience in our assemblies, that let the Minister teach never so diligently in his charge, unless there be a seconding and furthering of his labors, in several families at home, all the doctrine delivered and heard, is trodden under foot, choked, and forgotten.

Fourthly, innumerable are the evils, and manifold are the mischiefs that come of the neglecting of this duty. First, it is the Mother of all the ignorance and gross blindness, that ouerfloweth and overthroweth the Church. For from what cause cometh ignorance, but from the want of teaching, as darkness proceedeth from the want of light? Secondly, it causeth the Lessons and instructions taught on the day of the public assembly, to be forgotten of Master and Man, of Mother and Daughter, of Father and Child, before the next day. Often teaching and much repeating, make a diligent Master, and a profitable Scholar. Thirdly, from hence come all domestical braules, contentions, stubbornness, and disobedience, that the House is divided against it self, which would be remedied and prevented by this means. Lastly, the neglect of this duty, bringeth God's judgments upon the whole Family. So then, whether we consider the common duty of exhorting that lieth upon all, or that the private house is a private Church, or that the benefits are many where this duty is practiced, & the evils many that grow where it is neglected: in all these respects we see, that it is a special duty required of all governors, to labor, to plant, and to sow the Seedes of true Religion in the heart, as it were in the ground of those that are committed unto them.

Before we come to the uses of this Doctrine, certain Objections are to be removed, whereby many stumble and fall down. The Sluggard pretendeth there is a Lyon in the way, and feareth danger when there is none. So soon as Adam had sinned, by and by he sought Fig leaves to cover his shame. Many are the devises of men, daubing with untempered Morter, to excuse their neglect or contempt of this duty. Some say, they are ashamed to pray, to read, to teach in their families and households, and to call them together for such ends. They are ashamed of it, because it is good, because it is commanded: but they are not ashamed of committing open sins in open places. They shrink back when any good duty is to be performed: but they blush not with brazen faces and Iron fore-heads, to break out into all profaneness. Let these take heed least Christ be ashamed of them when he cometh into his kingdom. If we be ready to confess him, and to profess his truth, he will acknowledge us before his Father which is in Heaven. Some say, it is a note of hypocrisy to perform these duties, and condemn them as Hypocrites that teach their Families. These are evil Servants, that out of their own mouths may be judged. Let them pray to have their stony hearts taken away, and new hearts given unto them; For if their hollow and hypocritical hearts do condemn them, God is greater then their harts, and knoweth all things. And let them take heed, they sit not in judgment upon others, least with the same measure that they mete, it be measured to them again. Let them judge nothing before the time, but reserve judgment to the Judge of the whole world.

Others say, it will let and hinder their Servants work, we must have so much praying, that we shall have little working. These men can alot and allow no time for the Lord, but think every hour lost that is not spent in business of the World, and affairs of this life. These are like to profane Saul, who when the Philistines pressed toward him, and he was to ask counsel of the Lord; He commanded the Priest to with-draw his hand; that is, he said unto him, the season serveth not to seek unto GOD, we cannot spend the time in calling upon him, let us go unto the battle and fight against our Enemies. These men are like to wretched Pharaoh, when Moses called upon him to let the people go into the Wilderness to serve and sacrifice to the Lord, he is charged to make them idle, and to cause them to surcease from their works. These men are like to covetous Judas, who when Mary anointed Christ's feet, complained of the wast, and said; Why was not this Ointment sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor. Wherefore our Savior answereth such, in his reply to Martha, who was much troubled and cumbered about much serving, One thing is needful, Mary hath chosen the good part, which shall not be taken away from her. Nay, to be instructed in true Religion, and to set out a time for calling upon the Name of God, is so far from hindering our Servants work, that it shall further it, and give a blessing unto it.

We are commanded to meditate in the Law of the Lord day and night, that so we may make our way prosperous, and have good success in the works of our hands. And the Prophet teacheth, That except the Lord build the House, and watch the City, the labor of the Builder, and of the Watch-man, is in vain. Others say, they shall be mocked, taunted, and scorned by the World, they shall be termed Precisians, they shall be called Puritans. But we must not seek to please men by running into the displeasure of God. For oftentimes it falleth out, through the just judgment of God, that whilst we hunt after the pleasure and favor of men, against God, we have the favor neither of God nor Men. The Apostle saith of himself, writing to the Galatians If I should yet please Men, I were not the Servant of Christ. It was the lot of Christ, it hath been the portion of all true Christians, to be scourged by the viperous and venomous tongues of ungodly men, that care not for God, nor regard any Religion. We are faint Soldiers, not worthy to bear the Name of Christ, if we fly out of the field for every idle word, and taunt of the tongue cast out against us. We must prepare our selves against greater encounters, and arm our selves against words and Swords, we must buckle both with the Devil and with Deuilish men, hand to hand, except we will yield him both our bodies and Souls to our destruction. Some say, they cannot bring the unlearned to knowledge, and that youth are stubborn, they will be youth still, and we were once youths, & they should hardly keep any Servants, if they should strictly tie them to this order; nay they should fly the Parish rather than bear this yoke. I answer, first, let us remember, that GOD giveth the knowledge of his Mysteries, even to the simple and lowly minded that fear him. Secondly, consider, that young men are commanded to remember their Creator in the days of their youth, and shall give an account of all things unto God. As for their stubbornness, the word of God is the best remedy to bend them, and make them pliable unto all goodness: so that the Prophet saith; Wherewith shall a young Man redress his way? In taking heed thereto according to thy word. But if they be so stiffly and stubbornly minded, that they will not be reclaimed and reformed, their room is better than their company. If admonitions will not win them, they are to be avoided: thy house is better without them, then with them. Neither are we to fear their flying away, and departing to another place: for if this course of instruction were taken in hand everywhere, the Objection were answered, and their mouths stopped. For whether would they go to escape this training up in the principles of Religion? It is certain they could turn themselves no whither, but it would meet with them in all places. Others object, our Fathers did well enough without observing any such order; I trow you will not condemn them. Why should we make ourselves wiser then they? They troubled not themselves or their Children with learning of Catechisms: and we see men do well enough prosper in the World, yet busy not their heads about this. I answer, if they mean those forefathers and Ancestors, whose steps we should follow, as Adam, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joshua, David, and diverse others, which were indeed our Fathers, then we may be assured out of the word of truth, that these busied and bestirred themselves this way: they taught their Children, they instructed their families, they reformed disorders, they removed the disordered. If they mean our forefathers that lived in latter times, when darkness covered the earth, no marvel if they were not urged, thereunto themselves, or that they urged not others, for then they lived at the diet of the Prelates, and nothing pleased the Prelates better then the ignorance of the people, they were the blind Leaders of the blind, they could neither enter into the Kingdom of heaven themselves, nor suffer those that would enter. Notwithstanding, we will not meddle with condemning our forefathers, neither will we justify them, both these belong unto God; and therefore are not to be usurped by any man. We must judge the best of them, according to the rule of Charity, Which hopeth all things, and believeth all things. We know God reserved to himself 7000. in Israel, in the days of Ahab, that never bowed the knee to Baal: and he hath a few names yet in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments, which shall walk with him in white, for they are worthy. We may say with the Apostle of them; The time of this ignorance God regardeth not, but now he admonisheth all men everywhere to repent. We are not therefore to look what they have done, but consider what by the word they should have done, and what by the same we ought to do. And touching the thriving and prospering of them that neglect this duty: this is an Objection fitter for Atheists, then Christians to use. Christ hath taught us, that this is no rule to measure good or evil: he showeth, That the Father maketh his Sun to shine, and his rain to fall upon the just and unjust, upon the godly and the ungodly. The Wiseman hath taught, that by outward things we cannot understand, whether we be loved or hated of God. We see the wicked for the most part prosper more in the World in worldly things, then the godly, as we read Psal. 73. 3, 4, 5. and Job 21. 8. 9.

Lastly, it is objected, that some which have been diligently and duly taught, do yet live as leudly and profanely, as they that never knew anything of God. I answer, it may be this is thy wrong and rash judgment. The world speaketh evil of those that will not follow them into all excess of riot. But let us grant it to be so: yet herein they play the wrangling Sophisters and Cauillers, alleging a false cause for a true. For I am sure, this course of learning is not the cause of the looseness of their living. If grace had been in their hearts, it would be a means to make them believe and live better. He that knoweth his Masters will, is more likely to perform it, then he that knoweth it not, nor careth for the knowing of it. He that hath his eye-sight, is more likely to walk without stumbling and falling, then he that is blind: so he that is instructed in the ways of godliness, hath better means to walk in the fear of God, then he that is ignorant and knoweth nothing. True it is, some that know their Masters will do it not: some that have their eyes open, fall down now and then: yet none can be so void of reason to conclude from hence, that it is not necessary to know his will, or to open our eyes. Thus much for the removing of the objections, and the scattering of those Mists and Clouds that stood before us.

Now let us come to the Uses of this Doctrine. First, seeing it belongeth to the Masters and Governors of Families, to instruct them in godliness, we gather, that it is not enough for them to provide for the bodies of such as are under them, and belong unto them in this life, but they must care most especially for their souls and bodies in the life to come. They then are greatly deceived, who when they have given them meat and Money, think themselves sufficiently discharged. If we only feed them and fill them to the full, what do we more to them then to our brute Beasts? If we only clothe them and pay them their wages, what do we more to them then the Turks and Infidels that fear not God, that know not God, do perform to their Children and Servants? If we think our selves discharged by providing for them, and leaving unto them a temporal patrimony and possession, and never regard to make them heirs and Inheritors of the Kingdom of Heaven, what do we more then the Jews or Gentiles, that are ignorant of Christ and his Gospel? What should it avail us or them, to leave them rich in the World, and poor in God? To lay up for them treasures on earth, and to neglect the treasures of Heaven, which are the true and enduring substance? True it is, Fathers and Mothers are bound concerning this bodily life, to make honest provision for the sustenance of their Children; and therefore all unthrifty Dicers and Drunkards which wast and wash away their goods (whose Children may well be accounted fatherless, and their Wives as Widdowes) have no spark or portion of natural Fathers in them: nevertheless, they are charged, not only to bring them up in the World, but to prepare them for the World to come. It is a vain and foolish imagination to dream that we have done our part, or discharged a Fathers and a Mothers duty, when we have nourished, appartelled, and brought up our Children, whereas we have a far greater account to make before God for their souls. They are also greatly deceived, who if they send them to the Church on the Sabbath day, and bring them to the place of God's worship, they think they have answered the charge required of them. These men post over all their duty to the Minister, and lay the burden (to ease themselves) upon his shoulders. They care not, they spare not to lay load upon another's back, that they may not bear it, or touch it with their little finger. But God cannot thus be mocked or deluded, or defrauded, who commanded that themselves should rehearse his Laws and Commandments to their Children and Housholds.

Indeed, it is a commendable duty to see that they serve God, and to accompany them unto the house of God; but this is only half (if half) our duty, or rather to do our duty to halves; we must both provide that they may be taught, and also teach them our selves: when the Minister hath planted, we must water: when he hath preached, we must see how they profit, and by all means assist him in the work of the Lord. They are also greatly deceived, who take themselves to be discharged of their duty, when they have taught them to say the ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, and the Creed, or the Articles of Faith, because they say they have done what they can, and are able to perform no more. If they can do no more, it is a shame for them that they will be Fathers, before they can do that which is the duty of fathers. It is one thing to teach them to say them; another to understand them. It is not enough for us to help them to speak the words, unless we labor to make them conceive the meaning of the words. The Commandments of the Law, and the petitions of the Lord's Prayer stand not in the bare words, but in the true meaning. Let them know therefore, that they must render a greater account then of teaching them to utter and pronounce the words, they must cause them to understand them, they must sow the Seedes of Christian Religion in their hearts, they must instruct them with all diligence, they must exhort them with all earnestness; they must charge them to fear God, and to walk in his ways: that so their children may be made God's Children, and so give them to him again, of whom, and by whose blessing, at the first they received them.

Secondly, seeing all Householders must teach their families, it is their duty first of all to reform themselves, that so their people may be reformed. They that are the chief in the Family, must look unto themselves, and go in and out before them by good example, that so they may the better look unto those that are under them. It is a Testimony of our great love toward them, and an earnest desire to win them to the truth, and to embrace true godliness, when we seek to save their souls. He that loveth the soul, loveth truly: for the foul is the principal part of man. They therefore that are careless in training up their children in religion, cannot assure themselves that they bear any true love unto them. Let them show never so much comfort & compassion to their bodies, yet all their mercies are cruel, so long as they neglect the chiefest care that ought to be in them toward their souls. We may judge thē to be more inhumaine and unnatural, even more then savage beasts, who not only by neglect of teaching their Children the fear of the Lord, but by corrupt example of living do lead them into evil, and so murder their souls. For how many children instead of good education and godly instruction, do hear their Fathers delight in swearing, do see them deal deceitfully and unjustly, and walk in every evil way? If we should behold a man killing his own children, and laying violent hands upon his own flesh, if we should see him destroy his posterity, and shed the innocent blood of those that came out of his own loins: who would not accuse and condemn him of unnatural murder and barbarous cruelty? But there are many, many thousand Fathers in the world that are the Murderers and Butchers; yea, the death and destruction of their own Issue. They gave them life, but they are the causes of their death. They gave them a temporal being, but they bring them to eternal condemnation. They should direct them in the right way to Heaven, but they lead them into the paths of sin, and so thrust them down to Hell with their own hands. For so long as we teach them not to honor God, but to dishonor him, and regard not whether they know Christ Jesus or not, but are patterns and presidents unto them of all profaneness, we are guilty of their blood, and are worse then those that take away their natural life, and shall one day hold up our hand at the bar of God's Judgment, to be arraigned for it. For they only kill the body, and when they have done, can do no more: but we cast away and spill the Souls of our Children, which is the greatest rigor, the vilest murder, and the extremist cruelty in the world. If therefore we would be clear and pure from the blood of our children, let us train them up in godliness, and take heed to our selves, reforming our own ways, and endeavoring to be examples unto them in all holiness and true righteousness. This is it which Joshua professeth in his exhortation that he maketh to the people, that they would with full purpose of heart cleave unto the Lord. Joshua 24. 15. If it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, choose you this day whom you will serve, whether the God's which your Fathers served beyond the flood, or the God's of the Amorites, in whose Land ye dwell: but I and my house will serve the Lord. The like we see in the answer of Queen Ester to Mordecai, when she had exhorted to gather the Church together to Fasting and Prayer, that God might be entreated to open a way for their deliverance she addeth; I and my Maids will do likewise. A like practice we find in David. Psal. 101. as he declareth that his eyes should be upon the faithful of the Land, that they may dwell with him, and that such as are upright should serve him: so he professeth, He would walk in the uprightness of his heart in the midst of his house, he would set no wicked thing before his eyes, but hate the works of them that fall away. For well did David know, that if the Master of the house were evil, the Family ordinarily could not be good, and that the example of the highest, it alleged as a warrant to the lowest to follow. It is great pity, that a Child should hear an evil word, or see an evil deed, they are so ready to imitate that which they hear and see. Let us therefore look diligently to our selves, what examples we lay before them.

Thirdly, this doctrine directeth us to have in our private Families, the private exercises of Religion. It is no small praise of the house of Philemon, that he had so taught and instructed his Family, that he had the lively Image and true representation of a Church in it, discharging after a sort, the duty of a Pastor within his own walls. So the Apostle Paul saluteth Aquila and Priscilla, and the Church that is in their house. Every Governor of an house, and Master of a Family must endeavor, that his house-hold may deserve the Name of a Church. He should be the speaker, they the hearers: he the Pastor, they the flock: he the Minister, they the people: he ready to instruct, they ready to be instructed. A private Family, should be as a private school, the Governor is the Master of the School: everyone within his government, is a Scholar to learn of him.

This shall be a singular commendation unto us, if we so order our several charges and places of government, as that they may be called rather Churches, then private Families: rather Schools, then Houses: rather Temples of GOD, then dwellings of men: rather Tabernacles set up to serve the Lord, then buildings erected to serve our selves. Now we shall attain to this praise and estimation among the faithful, if our houses do resemble Churches, by the practice of such exercises as are performed in it. For the Master is both a King and a Pastor within his own house: a King, to rule and correct: a Pastor, to instruct and reprove; yea, to remove such as are obstinate and obdurate. Let us therefore all of us set up little Churches in our houses: let us use in them prayer to God, Catechizing of our youth, teaching of the ignorant, reading of the Scriptures, singing of Psalms, conferring one with another, examining of our people, taking an account how they profit, comforting them that are weak, encouraging them that are willing, discountenancing them that are froward and untoward, showing gentleness unto all, suffering the evil, and instructing them with meekness that are contrary minded.

Thus doing, we shall begin a Church in our houses, we shall erect a temple and Tabernacle unto God, and give to those that live with us, and depend upon us, an entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven. But alas, May we speak and write to many Masters in our times, as Paul doth in this place to Philemon? May we truly call their private houses little Churches, by reason of the exercises of Religion used in them? Nay, I would to God, there were not great multitudes swarming among us, which have such dissolute and disordered houses, so far from being Images and likenesses of a Church, that they are lively pictures of the profane World, and very representations of the Kingdom of darkness, and of the bottomless pit of Hell. These men, howsoever they shroude themselves under the names of Christians, and would be accounted faithful men, yet it is manifest, that they are far from true Christianity, and from a godly and religious mind. For shall they be esteemed sound and sincere Christians, that suffer their Families to be full of swearing, lying, railing, roysting, quarrelling, contention, and all other wickedness, and never go about to examine them, or exhort them to any goodness? So that it is a very hell to dwell in them, a very death to live in thē, a loathsome and stinking person to remain in them; yea, a foul and filthy lakes to abide in them, wherein all unsavory and unseasoned practices, are contained and continued. I dare boldly avouch, and constantly defend, that a man were far better to thrust his Son into a Pest-house, or place of infection, then to commit him to such Masters of misrule, and teachers of all abominations, most noisome and dangerous to Soul and Body, where those corruptions are quickly learned, which are afterward hardly forgotten, and bred in the bone, which are not easily removed out of the flesh. We usually and commonly say of him that liveth in a contagious place, Lord have mercy upon him: but much rather, and far better may we say and pray for such as are in lewd and ungodly houses, Lord be merciful unto them, and deliver them from evil. For if the plague and pestilence walk among us, and we among them, they can but kill the body, and make an end of this Mortall life: but the contagion of sin will bring fearful destruction, both upon Soul and Body, and will root out whole Houses and Families, wast Towns and Cities, and consume utterly Countries and Kingdoms. We see how by the instinct of Nature, Parents have a care to place their Children, where they may be well used, and where they may be well provided for, that they want nothing: but what folly is this to look to the body, and to have no respect to the Soul? To be curious in the least, and careless in the principal thing? To see that the back be clothed and the belly filled, and never require or inquire how the soul (which is the chiefest part) be provided for and sustained? To be angry if they want food for this life, and yet to seem pleased and contented, though they never taste of that bread and of that meat, which endureth to everlasting life.

It hath always been otherwise with faithful Governors and Christian Parents, they have made conscience of their duties to God and their Families. It is noted touching Jacob, when he was to go to Bethel the house of God, he sanctified and prepared his people, he reformed and redressed the abuses that were crept in among them, before they came to the worship of God. Abraham had in his house three hundred and eighteen persons which he had well instructed, who were ready to adventure their lives with him in the battle. The Apostle giveth this commendation to Timothy, That he had known the Scriptures of a Child, who are able to make him wise unto salvation, through the faith which is in Christ Jesus. His first years as it were the first fruits of his age, were seasoned with the doctrine of Christ, which was done by a familiar and easy order of instructing him. Our government therefore over others, must not be a meet civil government (as the government of most men is) but a religious government, to feed the soul as well as the body, to provide for the life to come, as well as for this present life.

Fourthly, it is required of us, to bring our several Families to the public exercises of Religion, of the word and prayers, that we may know how to use and practice these aright within the Walls of our private houses. It is not enough for us to serve God alone by our selves, and to plant true Religion in our own hearts, but we must endeavor to bring others to God, especially those that are nearest unto us. It is not enough for us, nor a sufficient discharge of our duties to go to the Church our selves, and to frequent the places of God's public worship to come to the house of Prayer, and to attend to the preaching of the word on the Lord's day: but we must look to our Children and Servants, we must have an eye over them, we must see that they be not absent, but present: and when they are present, that they attend and hearken to the Ministry of the word: and when as they are departed, we must know what they have profited. When we send our Servants to the Market, we will see what they bring home, and how they have provided for our bodies: much more when we send them to the Market of their Souls, should we require an accounts of them, where they have been, and what they have done, and how they have heard. How many are there among us that have a care to come to this place themselves, that have no conscience to look to their Children, whose salvation should be as dear, and as much desired as their own? Yea, even among you that are at this present in this place, if diverse were asked; Indeed here you are, here you sit, but where are your Sons, where your Daughters? Where are your Man-Servants, where your Maides, for whose Souls ye must give an account, what reasonable answer could ye make? Nay, how many are there to be found, who, if they have their work well done on the week-days, care not what they do, how they behave themselves, or where they become upon the Sabbath day? And so they make themselves guilty and partakers of their sins through their negligence, as Eli did of the offenses of his Children.

Hence it is, that in the fourth Commandment, prescribing the time of God's public worship, the Housholder is charged to have care of his Son, of his Daughter, of his Servant, of his Stranger. Jacob called for his people, and assembled them together, when he went to Bethel. David went with a great train and company into the house, as those that go to a Feast; when he saith; When I remembered these things, I poured out my very heart, because I had gone with the multitude, and led them into the house of God with the voice of singing and praise, as a multitude that keepeth a Feast. Behold here, the godly devotion of a religious heart, as the Hart brayeth for the Rivers of Waters, so his soul panted after God and his public worship: neither could he content himself to go alone, but it was his comfort and delight, to lead others as it were by the hand with him, that they might find that sweetness in the word that he found, and be partakers of the benefit that he reaped thereby.

Lastly, seeing it is so necessary a duty to teach our Housholds, we must acknowledge that it is as necessary for Children and Servants to be taught and instructed. It should be therefore our care and desire, to dwell and inhabit in such places and houses, as that we may be trained up in godliness, and learn our duties to God and man. It should be our care and desire to place and bestow our Children with such persons, as that they may be brought up in the fear of God. There is not one of those in our Families, even the lowest and meanest, but of meat, drink, clothing, or wages, be at any times denied or detained from them, they will think themselves wronged and misused, and are ready to complain of the injury. How much more (if there were in them any care of their Souls, or love of the life to come) would they mourn and lament when they are debarred and defrauded of this most necessary portion (the knowledge of true Religion) appointed by the Lord to be bestowed upon them. If a man be to take any Farm, he will not do it hand over head, but he will know what Acres he shall have, what arable ground, what Meddow, and what means of his maintenance: but how many are there that seek to others for their service, who never consider what instruction they shall have, or whether they be likely ever to hear of the Name of God? There is no Man so simple in wit, but if he put his Son to be an Apprentize, and his Master within his years do not teach him his occupation, he will and may justly think his Child much misvsed: what a wonderful blindness and blockishness then doth it argue in them, that care not where they put, and with whom they place their Children, so they learn their occupation, they regard not whether they learn any Religion, and never enquire whether their Masters take any pains or not, to teach them the precepts and instructions that belong to a Christian, which of all callings under heavens, is both the most honorable, and in the end, shall be acknowledged to be most profitable. Let us therefore put out our Children to be the Servants of those, that may learn them to be the Servants of God. Let us so bind them to their Trade, that we may be sure they may learn the Trade of Trades, the Art of Arts, the Mystery of Mysteries; that is, Religion and Godliness. If we have little to leave our Children, and small wealth to bequeath unto them, yet if we bring them up to this Trade, and bind them fast unto it, we shall leave them a worthy and wealthy portion: for all men must be of this Trade. We see how costly other Trades are, and what a round sum must be given with our children to serve for them: but we may without cost, and without Mony, make our Children of this Trade, which is the best and most gainful of all others. For godliness (saith the Apostle) is not only gain, but great gain, if a man be contented with that he hath. If thou have not learned this gainful and profitable Trade, thou wilt be never but a Begger and a Bankrupt: for being destitute of this, thou art without Grace, without God, without Heaven. Thus much of this doctrine.

3Grace be with you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

Hitherto we have spoken of the first part of the Praeface of this Epistle, touching the persons writing and written unto: Now we come to the second part; to wit, the prayers which he maketh, which are of two sortes: a salutation, and a thanksgiving: the salutation is a greeting, which the Apostle wisheth to all the persons before named, wherein we are to consider two pointes; first, what blessings the Apostle desireth to be given unto them. Secondly, from whom he craveth them. The blessings which he prayeth for, are two; namely, Grace and Peace. By Grace, we must understand the free favor, mere mercy, and good will of God towards us, whereby he hath eternally & undeservedly loved us in Christ, who are a people by nature not beloved, but deserving to be disgraced by him, and hated of him. The second blessing that he beggeth for them, is peace, whereby is meant all kind of benefits, spiritual and temporal, which flow unto us from this Fountain, and grow out of the root of grace; and therefore ordinarily in other Epistles, it is annexed unto it. Grace here mentioned, is not any gift in us, but it is God's, and in God; it is his gracious favor, free love, and good will, whereby he is well pleased with his elect, in, and for Christ. Peace, is not any gift in God, but in us, and is that holy unity and blessed concord, which is in the Kingdom of God among God's Children: this concord and agreement of God's Children, is a fruit and effect of grace. So then, the meaning of the words is this; We wish unto you all the favor of God in Christ, and that concord which is proper to God's Church and Children, having peace with God, with his holy Angels, with his Church, with your own hearts, with your enemies, and with all his Creatures.

Secondly, in this verse is set down the cause, the worker, and author from whom these blessings come; to wit, the Father, and Jesus Christ. God the Father, the Fountain of them; and Christ our Lord, as the Conduit pipe, by whom they are carried and conveyed unto us. But it may be objected, why is the holy Ghost left out? why is not he named? do not these gifts come from him as well as from the Father and the Son? I answer, It is a general rule in all Arts, and true in Divinity; That which is understood is not wanting. So then, the holy Ghost, the third person in Trinity is not omitted, though not expressed: for he must of necessity be understood, who proceedeth from them both; namely, from the Father and the Son. Christ saith in his Prayer. This is eternal life, to know thee to be the only true God, and whom thou hast sent Jesus Christ: yet the holy Ghost in this place, is not excluded from both the persons, but included and comprehended together with them, for these three are one, as the Apostle teacheth. Thus much touching the order and meaning of the words: Now let us proceed to the observations out of the same, and then come to the Doctrines.

The observations out of this verse, containing the salutation, are not many, which we will point out. First of all, we see the matter of his Prayer what it is; he asketh not the favor of Men, but of God: he craveth not earthly and worldly peace, but spiritual and heavenly. True it is, the favor and good will of Men, the outward peace and tranquility one with another, are worthy and excellent gifts, but the free and fatherly favor of God, together with peace with GOD the Father, being reconciled unto us in his dear Son, are much to be preferred in our desires. Heereby we have that peace of conscience which passeth all understanding, which teacheth us to rest in God as in a most loving Father, with all confidence and assurance.

Secondly, as we learn chiefly to ask spiritual blessings, so we see what blessings among such as are spiritual, are the principal and predominant; to wit, the favor of God and peace of conscience. He that is possessed of these two, hath an hid Mine of Treasures, with which, all the Wealth and Riches of the World are not to be compared unto. For these blessings are heavenly, are spiritual, are eternal: whereas the substance of this World is Temporal, is Transitorie, is corruptible. The Worlde it self must pass and vanish away, and all these earthly things must decay and perish with it.

Thirdly, the Apostle in some of his Epistles, useth three words; Grace, Mercy, and Peace: here he contenteth himself with naming two, Grace and Peace, omitting and leaving out Mercy: wherein there is no contrariety or diversity, for as much as Mercy is included under Peace. For by Mercy is understood our Justification, which consisteth partly in the forgiveness of our sins, and partly in the imputation of Christ's righteousness, which do bring true peace with them.

Fourthly, we see from whom he asketh all these; to wit, first from God the Father, to teach that he is the Author of every good giving and perfect gift. If then we stand in need of them, we must go to him, we must ask them of him, we can receive them of none but of him, as the Apostle James teacheth.

Fifthly, we see that to God the Father he joineth Jesus Christ: for all blessings are bestowed upon us through Christ, the Mediator of the New Testament. God the Father is the Fountain, Christ is the Pipe or Conduit, by whom they are conveyed unto us. He that hath not him, hath not the Father. He that is not in him, remaineth in death. Hence it is that the Evangelist saith; He that believeth in the Son, hath everlasting life, and he that obeyeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him.

Sixthly, observe the Title given unto him, he is called the Lord of his Church: it is a Kingdom, whereof he is the Prince: it is a City, whereof he is the Governor: it is an house, whereof he is the Master: it is a body, whereof he is the head. So then, all obedience is due to him, and all men (how great soever) must acknowledge his Lordship over them. Lastly, in that he craveth grace and peace from Christ our Lord, as well as from God the Father, it confirmeth our Faith in a Fundamental point of Christian Religion, touching the Deity of Christ; Who is GOD equal with, the Father; against the Arians, and other Heretics that deny his Eternity. For seeing he giveth grace and peace as well as the Father, we conclude him to be true God Co-eternal, and Co-equal with the Father.

This word in the Scripture hath two significations, the ignorance whereof hath bred great error, and be one the occasion of stumbling in the Church of Rome. First, it signifieth God's good will and favor: Secondly, some gift of God freely bestowed, which is grace of his grace: and so the Apostle doth distinguish the grace of God from the gift that is by grace. In this place, we must understand, not any particular gift of God infused into us, as faith, hope, love, and such like; but the free favor and love of God, whereby he accepteth of some in Christ for his own Children: for we see here, it is discerned and distinguished from peace, which is a gift of Grace, and therefore cannot signify the same thing. This grace and good will of God, is the Fountain of all God's blessings, and the foundation of all man's happiness. All that we have is of Grace, it is the beginning of all good things in us. Our Election, Redemption, Vocation, Justification, Sanctification, & Glorification is of grace only, we can ascribe nothing to our selves. Now in this Divine Salutation, and Apostolical Benediction, mark that the Apostle beginneth with this grace. From hence we learn, that the favor of God is to be sought for above all other things. The free grace and undeserved love of God, is the first, and highest, and only cause of all blessings, is above all things to be desired and entreated at the hands of God. Consider the example of David. Psal. 4. Many say, who will show us any good? But Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon me. As if he should say, let worldly men seek what they will, and let them place their happiness in riches, pleasures, and vanities, but my desire is after thy love and favor above all. Hence it is, that he calleth and accounteth God his portion, his lot, his inheritance, his rock, his refuge, his shield, and Castle of defense; to show, that all his joy was in God's favor, all his comfort in God's love, and that he preferred his grace before all things in the world besides. This affection is also expressed in the 73. Psalm. Whom have I in heaven but thee? And I have desired none in the earth with thee: my flesh faileth, and mine heart also, but God is the strength of mine heart, and my portion forever. So the Apostle Paul accounteth all things as loss and dung in comparison of the grace of God. Whereby we see, that all men should principally, and in the first place, seek, wish, and entreat for the feeling of God's favor in Christ, as the blessed Fountain of all good things to come upon us.

Let us consider the causes and Reasons of this point. First, one drop of his free love, is better worth than all the World, and it shall yield us more sweet and sound comfort in the latter end. If we should put the grace of God and the glory of the world, and peize them together in the balances, the least dram and drop of the favor of God toward us, would over-weigh, and over-sway all the whole World, and all the things that are in the World, which worldly men make their chiefest Treasure. This the Prophet David found by experience, so soon as he had prayed for the loving countenance of GOD, he addeth; Thou hast given me more joy of heart, then they have had, when their Wheat and their Wine did abound. This giveth a man more sound comfort, then he can find else-where. We have a common saying that runneth in every Mans mouth, Give a man good luck, and throw him into the Sea. But this is a Divine truth, Let a man have the free Grace and favor of GOD, and then neither Sea nor Land; neither Fire nor Water; neither Sword nor Pestilence; neither force nor Famine; neither any other thing shall be able to hurt him. We see this in Moses and the Israelites, when they were come to the Red Sea, and Pharaoh with his Army followed at their backs, they were brought through the Sea as on dry Land, and were carried safely in the Wilderness as on Eagles Wings by the providence and protection of God. The three Children were cast into the Furnance, Daniel was thrown into the Lions den: yet they were not consumed with the Fire, neither he devoured by the Lions. This made the Prophet say; Though I should walk through the Valley of the shadow of death, I will fear none ill: for thou art with me, thy Rodde, and thy Staff, they comfort me. All other comfort is no better then discomfort; all other joy is no better then sorrow and vexation of Spirit without this; according to the saying of the Wiseman: I said of laughter, Thou art mad; and of joy, what is this that thou dost?

Secondly, the grace and love of God, blesseth, sanctifieth, and furthereth all other things unto us, honor, wealth: wisdom, riches, strength, favor, friendship, and whatsoever befall the Sons of Men. The Prophet testifieth. Psalm 45. Because God had blessed him forever, therefore it is said unto him, prosper thou with thy glory, ride upon the word of truth, and of meekness. On the other side, the want of the love and grace of God, curseth all other things unto us; yea, defileth and poisoneth them, and maketh them deadly, our honor it turneth into shame, our strength into weakness, our wisdom into foolishness, our riches into snares, our beauty into vanity, our savor into hatred. We have many examples in the word of God, and by daily experience offered unto us of this truth, the wisdom of Achitophell, the honor of Haman, the valor of Joab, the beauty of Absalom, the knowledge of Judas, all these were good and great blessings of God, but all are turned to be curses unto them, because wanting the free grace of GOD, they wanted the sanctified use of them. Seeing therefore, the love of God is of greater price, and more excellent value then all the world, and seeing his grace sanctifieth and seasoneth all other blessings, and the want thereof bringeth a curse upon them, we conclude and gather from these reasons, that the free favor and mercy of God in Christ Jesus, is first and above all other things, to be entreated and desired for our selves and others.

Now let us make use of this point. First, let everyone of us seek to have our hearts established and settled in this free grace, to find and feel in us his love shed in our hearts by his holy Spirit. Let this be our first, our chief, our principal and special care, to obtain the love and favor of God, that we may be beloved of him. This was the prayer of the Prophet, Restore to me the joy of thy salvation, and stablish me with thy free Spirit. So the Apostle teacheth; It is a good thing that the heart be stablished with grace. We see how men are filled and carried away with natural presumption, even from their Cradle, persuading themselves to stand in a sure estate, and thinking to escape the wrath of God: but of this free grace they have no taste, no desire, no feeling of any want. They imagine themselves to stand in no need thereof, they presume they are in the favor of God; they dream that he cannot choose but love them. If we want any earthly blessing, the help of Friends, the health of body, the Treasure of this World, we can very quickly feel it, our senses are sharp enough to discern it: but though we want the grace of God and his favor toward us, we have no more feeling then dead Men hath, we neither feel it, nor desire it, nor once regard it.

We spend our strength, wast our life, and consume our days in seeking riches, honors, pleasures, and preferments, but we never look so high as to the grace of God. We lie groveling like the Beasts upon the Earth, we use every day; nay, every hour, nay, every minute, the blessings of God, In whom we live, and move, and have our being: yet we will not lift up our eyes to the chief cause of all, the Grace of God. Let us therefore above all things, seek earnestly for the grace of God, wherein the Foundation of all our happiness is laid. He that liveth in his favor, hath comfort in all sorrows and miseries. He that dieth out of his favor, dieth as a Beast; nay, worse then a beast, and shall have fellowship with the Devil and his Angels, it had been good if such a one had never been borne. For even as the rich man in the Gospel, desired one drop of Water to quench the fire, and to cool his tongue, and if he might have gotten it, he would have preferred it before the gaining and obtaining of a thousand Worlds: so when God shall set our sins in order before us, and the Gulf of his wrath ready to swallow us, we shall cry out for one drop of Grace, for one drop of Faith, for one drop of comfort, to refresh our pining Souls, and to deliver us from the shadow of death.

Now is the time to desire and seek after grace, if we let slip the present occasion offered unto us, we shall afterward cry out for it, and complain of the want of it, and yet shall never attain unto it. Thus was it with the rich Man, when he entreated Abraham to have mercy on him, and to send Lazarus, that he might dip the tip of his Finger in Water to cool his tongue, being tormented in that Flame: Abraham answered; Son, remember that thou in thy life time receivedst thy pleasures, and likewise Lazarus pains: now therefore he is comforted, and thou art tormented. Thus was it with the foolish Virgins who slumbered and slept, and regarded not to procure and provide Oil for their Lamps: for when the Bridegroom was come and had shut the Gate, they cried in vain, Lord, Lord, open unto us, who received their answer, Verily, I say unto you, I know you not. Thus it shall be with those in the last day, which shall say; Lord, Lord, have we not in thy Name prophesied? And by thy Name cast out Devils? And by thy Name done many great works? For then he will profess unto them, he never knew them, depart from me ye workers of iniquity. So shall it be with those that have neglected the time, and passed over the opportunity, who begin to say, Lord, open unto us, we have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our Streets: to whom he shall say, I know you not whence ye are. Let us all be wise, and beware by their examples, that we do not delay the time from day today. Let us crave this gift of God, that we may have it in time of need, and in the hour of temptation. If now while we have time, we shall desire and labor to obtain grace, we shall not need hereafter to stand in fear of Death, or to cry out through horror and despair! O that I had one drop of Faith! O that I had one drop of Grace.

Secondly, seeing grace is in the first place, above and before all other blessings to be desired and required at the hands of God, let us learn the highway, and enter into the beaten path that leadeth to this Grace, and when we have learned it, let us walk in it, in a constant and settled course. Now the steppes that we must make to trace it, and find it out, are these. The first degree or step, is to dislike our selves, and to be in disgrace with our selves. Every man naturally, is in love with himself, and his own shadow. But we must cast off this self-love, that cleaveth so fast and hangeth on, and learn to know our selves, and to hate our selves.

No man can magnify God's mercy sufficiently, until he attain to the knowledge of his own misery. Daniel, a man gracious and dearly beloved of GOD acknowledged this in his prayer, and as it were ascendeth into the presence of God by this step, O Lord, righteousness belongeth unto thee, and unto us open shame, as appeareth this day, to our Kings, to our Princes, to our Fathers, and unto every Man of Judah, because we have sinned against thee. This was the course that the Prodigal Son took, and the way that he entered, Father, I have sinned against Heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy Son. Thus did the poor Publican insinuate himself into the grace of God, and departed justified in his sight, he smote his breast, saying; Lord, be merciful to me a Sinner. To be proud, and puffed up with our own righteousness, and to trust in our own wisdom, is the fore-runner of a fall.

The second step to obtain grace, is, after we have felt this want and misery in our selves, we must not rest there, but earnestly desire, and inwardly hunger and thirst after the love and favor of God in Christ, above all earthly things. First, we must feel our selves empty, before our Souls can have this hunger. Our Savior describing true blessedness to his Disciples, and showing wherein it consisteth contrary to the judgment of the World, he saith; Blessed are the poor in Spirit; that is, that know themselves poor, that feel themselves poor and void of righteousness: and then he addeth, Blessed are they which hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled. We must hunger after the meat that never perisheth: we must thirst after that Well of Water which springeth up unto everlasting life. If we never hunger after grace, we shall never have grace. The whole desire not the Physician, but they that are sick: They which think they see, are made blind, and their sin remaineth.

Lastly, it is required of us, to lay hold by the hand of a true Faith, upon the grace and mercy of God in Christ Jesus, offered unto all of us in the promises of the Gospel generally, and learn to apply them to our selves particularly. Christ calleth those that are weary and heavy laden, promising to ease end refresh them. In the last and great day of the Feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying; If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. He teacheth; That he that shall believe and be Baptized, shall be saved. These are general promises, these require particular application. We cannot receive them into our hearts, and make them our own, except we lay hold of them by a special Faith. This lively Faith, bringeth Christ home to us, and openeth the doors of our Souls to entertain him. If then we feel our own misery, if we hunger after mercy, and if we apply the promises of the Gospel to us particularly, we shall be assured to find the grace of God, and taste plentifully and abundantly of his love. So many as truly desire grace, must look to attain it by these means, and climb up to the top of it by these steps and degrees, as by certain stairs.

Thirdly, seeing grace is first of all to be craved, it directeth us to observe and keep a good order, in seeking and craving things at the hands of God. We are taught first to seek his grace and favor, as the root and Fountain, and then peace, welfare, and other blessings. He that will receive fruit from the tree, must come to the root and body, before he can come to the branches: so if we would have peace, health, wealth, a good name, favor, friendship, or other gifts of the Spirit, we must begin at the root; that is, entreat first for the grace of God, take hold of his free love, and above all things, beg his fatherlie favor to compass us, as with a garment, and to defend us as with a shielde. It is in vain to ask anything, it is in vain to hope for, and to expect any blessing as a blessing, before this be asked and obtained. This order is to be observed, if we would enjoy and possess God's blessings. When the grace of God cometh, and maketh us accepted, it cometh not alone, but cometh accompanied, and bringeth a train of all other blessings with it.

He that will seek a benefit from a Prince, must first seek to be gracious with the Prince and get his favor: he must never look to be respected and regarded in his suit, that is out of the Princes favor: so if we would have wealth, welfare, ease, honor, peace, prosperity, or any other gifts, we must before all things, labor to be gracious with the great God of Heaven, and seek to be accepted in his beloved. This serveth to reprove the preposterous course of carnal Men, who set the Cart before the Horse, and place the Bobby before the Soul, and advance the Earth above the Heaven, and so overthrow the whole order of Nature, laboring first for wealth, and afterward for virtue; first, for Riches; afterward, for Religion: first, to be great in the World; afterward to be gracious with God. These men seek from day today, and from year to year for earthly profits, and vanishing pleasures: but never think on the root of all blessings, the grace of God. This corruption is reproved by Christ, who prescribeth unto us a better way, when he saith; Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be ministered unto you. If the things of this world be the first in our thoughts, the chiefest in our desires, the greatest in our estimation, and the best in our imagination, we have our reward, we must look for no other reward at the hands of God.

Lastly, when we have found our hearts persuaded, and our Souls possessed of this grace of God, let us delight in it, let us rest upon it, let it be made our stay and comfort in all times, and upon all occasions. Let us remember to be more thankful to God for it, and more joyful in it, then those that rejoice in Harvest, or such as find great spoils and rich booties. If thou shouldst find Mines of Silver and Gold, and Mountains of Pearls and precious Stones, they could not give such comfort and contentment unto thy Soul, as this grace of God is able to do, which is a Jewel of Jewels. Blessed is the man that findeth this Treasure, and getteth it into his heart, for the Marchandize thereof, is better then the Marchandize of Silver, and the gain thereof is better then Gold: it is more precious then Pearls, and all things that thou canst desire, are not to be compared unto it. For these treasures of the earth, which worldly men have in so great price and estimation, are bought at a deer rate of the owners, but the Lord offereth and giveth his grace frankly and freely unto us, which need the same, as we read in the prophesy of Isaiah, and in the Epistle of James.

Secondly, the Marchandize of these Pearls may be stolen from us, we cannot so safely and closely lay them up, but time will consume them, rust will rot them, and Thieves will steal them, as our Savior teacheth in the Gospel: But the grace of God shall never die or decay, but is ever flourishing, and everlasting. Lastly, the gain of Silver & Gold, if we could possess it in the greatest measure, is but to maintain the body, and to provide for this present life for a season: but the gaining of grace and the favor of God, is an entituling of us to the Kingdom of heaven, and to eternal life, which he that hath this grace of God in his heart, shall possess forever. Indeed, few men do believe this, because they make more reckoning of things earthly, then heavenly: but all men shall find it to be true in the end. This treasure the poor may have as well as the rich. In all temptations this will stand by us, and raise us up when we are cast down, and strengthen us when we are weak. This grace (whereby we are freely beloved) will go with us abroad, will stay with us at home, will lie down with us in bed, will sit with us at Table, will direct us in prosperity, will stick to us in trouble, will comfort us in sickness, will solace us in death, and will accompany us to heaven. To desire this, is the best covetousness, and that which only hath allowance and approbation from God, and therefore the Apostle chargeth us to covet spiritual things. All these things teach us to rest and rely upon the grace of God, as upon the only comfort of our Souls, and the very life of our lives, according to the practice of the Prophet. Psal. 4. after he had desired of God to lift up his loving countenance upon him, he addeth; I will lay me down and also sleep in peace, for thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety.

Hitherto we have spoken of the first blessing, which the Apostle craveth for them; to wit, the grace of God, which is the grace of graces: Now followeth the second, which is peace, which is a notable fruit, growing upon the blessed tree of grace. This signifieth the quiet concord and unity, which the faithful are made partakers of, being once engrafted into Christ, and brought into the bosom of the Church. They find peace and are at an agreement, which hath many branches, and standeth of many parts, everyone whereof is a most worthy blessing. First, we are at peace with God, when we are reconciled unto God in Christ, so that he hath no quarrel or controversy against us. Rom. 5. 1. Secondly, we are at peace with the elect Angels, which pitch their Tents round about us, and are set to guard us, least we dash our foot against a Stone. Thirdly, we are at peace with our selves, when our consciences enjoy quietness and tranquility, not accusing or condemning, but excusing and clearing us, being washed in the blood of Christ, This is that peace of God which passeth all understanding. Fourthly, we are at peace with God's Children, foretold by the Prophet, that the wild Beasts and tame should dwell together, the cruel and the gentle should couch together, and practiced by the Church and believers, who are said to be of one Soul, and of one heart.

Fifthly, we have peace with our enemies, who are charged not to touch the Lord's anointed, and to do his Prophets no harm. This is so far verified, as is expedient to set forth the glory of God, to procure the safety of the godly, and to repress the rage of the Reprobate. Thus Joseph was at peace with Pharaoh, Obadiah with Ahab, and Daniel with Nabucadnezzar, Mordecai and the Jews with Ahasuerus: and thus is the saying of the Wiseman verified; When the ways of a Man please the Lord, he will make also his enemies at peace with him. Lastly, we have peace with the Beasts of the field, the Foules of the Heaven, and all the Creatures of God, so that we shall find help and comfort from them, as we see in the Prophet, God maketh a Covenant with them for his people. Hos. 2. In that day I will make a Covenant for them, with the wild Beasts, and with the Foules of the Heaven, and with that which creepeth upon the earth: I will break the Bow and the Sword, and the battle out of the Earth, and will make them to sleep safely. Loe here how large and ample is this peace, and how many and worthy preeminences there are thereof. This peace followeth grace, as a fruit of it, and therefore (we see) it is joined unto it both in this place, and in sundry other Epistles. We learn hereby, that such as are under the grace and covenant of God, living under his protection and obedience, have assurance of all God's mercies, spiritual and temporal, of this life, and of the life to come, all which do belong unto them, and shall follow them, and overtake them. I say, such as are under the grace and favor of God have all his blessings following them, so far as they may further their eternal happiness. Moses showeth Deut. 28. that when once they belong to God, and are under his grace, as under the shaddow of his Wings, all his blessings should follow them, and come upon them from Heaven and Earth, from house and field, from soul and body, that they should be blessed in the fruit of their body, in the increase of their Cattle, and in the abundance of all things. Aaron and his Sons did thus bless the people, Num. 6. 6. The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. Where we see, he setteth peace after the shining of God's gracious countenance upon them. This the Apostle teacheth in the Epistle to the Romans, having proved at large that we are justified without the works of the Law, he addeth; Being then justified by Faith, we have peace toward God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. The Prophet David, expressing that God is his Shepherd, to refresh him with his grace, to feed him with his word, to rule him by his staff, and to deliver him from danger, concluded hereupon; I shall want nothing, doubtless kindness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I shall remain a long season in the house of the Lord. The like we see in another place; The Lord God is the Sun and Shield unto us: the Lord will give grace and glory, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. The Apostle Paul setteth down at large the blessings flowing from this love of God, Who hath predestinated us to be adopted through Jesus Christ, in himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, where-with he hath made us freely accepted in his beloved, by whom we have Redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins, according to his rich grace, whereby he hath been abundant toward us in all wisdom and understanding. Where he teacheth, that the free grace of God, whereby we are accepted in his beloved, in whom he is well pleased, and exceedingly contented, is the cause of all other mercies, and therefore such as are in his favor, shall find the fruits thereof to their comfort, and have all his blessings to overtake them.

If any doubt yet remain in us to trouble us, and hinder our faith from receiving and believing this Doctrine, as a pregnant and certain truth, consider with me a little farther the reasons, to ground and establish us herein. For first, when the wrath of God is once appeased, and the love of God opened unto us, we have free and bold access unto him, and to the Throne of grace, as▪ to a most merciful Father. The Apostle having declared, that we are at peace with God through Christ, he addeth immediately; By whom also thorough Faith we have this access into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice under the hope of the glory of God. We may freely come into the presence of God, we have boldness to ask anything that we want, we have assurance to be heard when we call upon him.

Secondly, it is the free love and favor of God, that spared not his own Son, but bestowed him upon us, who is our life, our peace, our atonement. Now seeing it is his grace only that hath given us the blessing of all blessings, we shall with him, and by him, have all other gifts to compass us about, and to come upon us, according as the Apostle teacheth. Rom. 8. If God be on our side, who shall be against us? Who spared not his own Son, but gave him for us all to death, how shall he not with him give us all things also?

Thirdly, his love reconcileth all his Creatures, and openeth the way to his mercies toward them whom he loveth. This is it which Moses speaketh to the Israelites: Because the Lord loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto our Fathers, the Lord hath brought you out by a mighty hand, and delivered you out of the house of bondage. And afterward he putteth them in mind, That the Lord would not hearken unto Balaam, but the Lord their God turned his curse to a blessing unto them, because he loved them. Thus doth the Prophet tell the people of God; That they inherited not the Land by their own Sword, neither did their own Arm save them, but his right hand, and his Arm, and the light of his countenance, because he did favor them.

Lastly, they love God again whom he loveth. His love worketh love, and constraineth them to express back again that which they have received. They that love him shall never be destitute, but feel the fruit thereof to their endless comfort. The Prophet saith to this purpose. Psal. 91. Because he hath loved me, therefore will I deliver him: I will exalt him, because he hath known my Name. Lay now all these things together, and consider, that seeing we have free access to the Throne of grace, seeing we have Christ, the greatest blessing of all given unto us, seeing all Creatures are reconciled unto us: and lastly, we being loved, do love God again, and pour out streams issuing from his Fountain, and all this proceedeth from his grace: we conclude, that such as are in God's favor have his blessings following them.

Now let us handle the uses. First, seeing the favor of God is the Fountain of all goodness and graces in us, we learn, that no favor is like to the favor of God. The grace and love of Princes, bringeth many privileges and preferments with it: but can they assure us of every good thing? Or do they remain and continue with us forever? Nay, they are most unstable, and uncertain, their honor is turned into dishonor, and all their glory is changed into shame and confusion. Haman was the happiest man in the kingdom in his own eyes, and in the eyes of many others; one day he was next unto the King, & the next day he was most wretched; one day in favor, the next day out of favor; one day honored, the next day hanged. Nay, thus it fareth & falleth out oftentimes with the godly, as we see in David; who was greater in Saul's Court than he? Who was more praised and preferred? Was made the Son in Law of the King, and the Captain of the Hoast: yet by and by he was disgraced, degraded, and depraved by flatterers and false informers, cast out of the favor of the King, and put in danger of his life. It is not so with God, it is not so with his favor shown toward the godly: whom he loveth once, he loveth ever: he doth not change, he cannot lie, he will not repent. He is unchangeable, there is no shadow of change with him, his gifts are without repentance. There is great comfort in such favor, seek therefore for his favor, above the favor of Princes: and make much of it when we have found it. Great is the love of Parents toward their Children: but the love of God surmounteth them all, and that love which can be in them.

Secondly, seeing such as are gracious with God, are laden with many blessings, we may see hereby the blessed estate of all that live under the grace of God, all things do serve them that serve the Lord, and have tasted how gracious the Lord our God is. He is counted happy in the World that hath the favor of Princes. The Queen of Sheba pronounced the people and servants of Solomon happy, which did stand ever before him to hear his wisdom. When Elisha demanded of the Shunamite what he should do for her, or whether there were anything to be spoken for her to the King, or to the Captain of the host: she answered, I dwell among mine own people. She lived in peace and quietness, she had no cause to make any complaint against any her Neighbors, she was not driven to make any suit to King or Captain, she troubled not others, and others troubled not her, and this she accounted an happy life. But the happy estate and blessed condition of the faithful, is a thousand times greater: they are at peace with heaven and earth, with Men & Angels, with themselves, and with all others, with life and death, nothing shall be able to hurt them.

True it is, they have no promise to be free from temptations and troubles, Famine may come, Persecution, Pestilence, nakedness, poverty, peril, and tribulation may come, and death shall come: but we have a gracious and sure promise, that they shall not hurt us, or destroy us, or hinder our salvation, they are all Enemies without Armor, as Soldiers without a Sword, as Serpents without a sting, and as Asps without venom. This is it which the Prophet handleth at large. Psal. 91. Who so dwelleth in the secret of the most High, shall abide in the shadow of the Almighty: surely, he will deliver thee from the Snare of the Hunter, and from the noisome Pestilence: thou shalt not be afraid of the fear of the night, nor of the Arrow that flieth by day: nor of the Pestilence that walketh in the darkness, nor of the Plague that destroyeth at noon-day, A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand, but it shall not come near thee: there shall none come unto thee, neither shall any Plague come near thy Tabernacle. He meaneth not in these words, that the godly shall be free from troubles, sicknesses, & all calamities, but that God doth so care for them, and watch over them, that nothing shall be able to hurt and harm them, but he will give them a sanctified use of the Cross, and make all things turn to their good, and further their salvation. This is it which the Apostle Paul offereth to our considerations; Let no man rejoice in men, for all things are yours: whether it be Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death: whether they be things present, or things to come, even all are yours, and ye Christ's, and Christ, God's. Great is the dignity and excellency of the godly, that all things are made to serve to their use, and are appointed in the ordinance of God to serve for their profit: according to that which he hath in another place, We know that all things work together for the best unto them that love God, even to them that are called of his purpose. Where we see he teacheth, that not only things present are ours, but things to come: not only life is ours, but also death, which is a gain and advantage to the godly, and an entrance or door that leadeth to everlasting life. What greater glory can befall us, or what greater happiness can we desire, then to have all things ours. Life is ours, death is ours, the world is ours, the Cross is ours, the Crown is ours, heavens is ours, the Angels are ours, Christ is ours, God is ours, all is ours, and what is there that is not ours? What a great honor is this? Or who is it that can doubt of these things? Or whom should not these privileges move? The World is a place of our resting: Life the time of our bettering: Death, is a change of our misery, and an entrance into glory: things present, are the beginning of our comfort: things to come, are the consummation of our comfort: the Cross is our instruction: the Angels are our Watchmen: the heaven is our happiness: Christ is our Savior: God is our Father: all things are favorers and furtherers of our salvation. It is a comfort of all comforts, that we are at peace with God, that he is our friend, and that he hath no controversy against us. If God were against us, who should be able to stand for us, or dare take upon him the protection and defense of us? But being justified by Faith, we are at peace with God. It is a great blessing to be at peace with men: but it is a greater blessing to be at peace with God. We are at peace with the blessed Angels, Who are all ministering Spirits, sent forth to Minister for their sakes which shall be heirs of salvation. They guard us from dangers, they carry us, as a Nurse doth her Child in her Arms, that we be not hurt by the Devil, or his Angels, or his Instruments.

We are at peace with the Church; that is, with all such as fear God, and believe in Christ. The Prophet Isaiah speaking of the Kingdom of Christ, and of the fruits of the Gospel, foretelleth; That the Wolf shall dwell with the Lamb, and the Leopard with the Kidde, and the Calf, and the Lyon, and a fat Beast together, and a little Child shall lead them, &c. Meaning thereby, that when a man is called into the State of grace, howsoever by Nature he have the greediness of a Wolf, the wildness of a Leopard, the fierceness of a Lyon, the cruelty of a Bear, he shall lay away his savage and brutish Nature, and become gentle, and live peaceably with all men. We are at peace with our own selves, which is the peace of a good conscience, when it being washed in the blood of Christ, ceaseth to accuse and terrify, and beginneth to excuse and comfort us; when neither Hell, nor Death, nor damnation, nor any danger doth dismay us, or bring us to despair: but in the midst of all, we have the peace of God ruling in our hearts, as the Apostle speaketh. Coloss. 3. 15. If a man wear at peace with the Angels, with men, and with all the Creatures, if he had no Enemy to encounter him, but lived at peace with others: yet if he were at war and Mortall enmity with himself, if he felt the terrors of conscience, and his own heart condemning him, he should quickly find what a great blessing it is to have a clear conscience, which is a continual Feast. This peace was in David, when he said, in the midst of manifold dangers, I laid me down and slept, and rose again; for the Lord sustained me: I will not be afraid of ten thousand of the people that should beset me round about. This is of such excellency, that it is called The peace of God that passeth all understanding: it is instead of a guard, to keep our hearts and minds in Christ. We are at peace with our enemies, both because so soon as we believe in Christ, we seek to have peace with all men, so far as is possible, and as much as lieth in us, and because God restraineth the malice of the Enemies, and inclineth their hearts to embrace peace; Thus God brought Abraham and Isaac into favor with Abimelec King of Gerar, that he was ready and willing, no only to receive peace when it was offered, but to crave peace when it was not desired. Thus God brought Daniel into favor with the chief of the Eunuchs and sundry others, to find the fruits of love at the hands of their enemies, because he hath the harts of all men in his own hand, to wind them and turn them at his own pleasure.

Lastly, we are at peace with all Creatures in Heaven and Earth; above and beneath, which are made to serve for our benefit and salvation. The Prophet saith; Thou shalt walk upon the Lyon and the Asp, the young Lyon and the Dragon shalt thou tread under foot. And God promiseth, To make a Covenant for them with the Beasts and Fowls, that they shall walk safely. All these privileges teach us (having such a large peace with God and his Angels, with the Church and our own selves, with our Enemies and all Creatures) that it is the most comfortable thing in the world, to be under the grace and Covenant of God, and that nothing is more to be desired, then to feel the favor of God towards us: for having this, we possess all things. If we want him and his favor, though we have all the world, it will not nor cannot content us, but all things are cursed to us, and we to them.

Lastly, seeing all that are accepted of God, are blessed with all good things, this teacheth us the wretched and fearful condition of all such, as by reason of sin are out of favor with God, they shall find no rest, they shall have no peace, heaven and earth shall conspire against them, and deny them succor and comfort in the day of God's punishment and visitation. It is said of Ishmael, that his hand should be against every man, and every man's hand against him: so is it with all the ungodly, not reconciled to God, they shall find no sound comfort in any Creature, but shall have all the World against them. This is a great misery and torment, lying heavy upon the wicked, and piercing their Souls as the flashings of Hell, according to the saying of the Prophet; I create the fruit of the lips to be peace; peace unto them that are far off, and to them that are nere, saith the Lord, for I will heal them: but the wicked are like the raging Sea that cannot rest, whose Waters cast up Mire and Dirt, There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked. God setteth himself against them, and all Creatures shall confound them and fight against them, until they are confounded and overthrown. And as the Apostle speaking of the blessed and happy estate of the godly, declareth, that all things are theirs: so on the other side we may truly say of the ungodly, that nothing is theirs; they have Title and interest in no creature to receive any comfort in them, or stay from them, or protection by them. God is become their Enemy, the Angels are armed to destroy them, their own consciences convince and condemn them, the Heaven is shut against them, death is the gate of Hell unto them, affliction is a means of murmuring in them, the World is a Snare unto them, Christ is a Rock of offense unto them, the Gospel is the favor of death unto them, the mercy of God is made a Packe-horse for their sins, all the ordinances of God are abused by them, and all the works of God's hands shall be Instruments of their confusion. If anything may be accounted theirs, it is destruction of their Souls, confusion of their faces, contempt of their persons, horror of their consciences, the company of the Devils, the tormenting of their bodies, the feeling of God's wrath, and the separation from his presence and glory; all these shall indeed be theirs, and wholly theirs, and only theirs, and always theirs, when their secret sins and wickedness shall be revealed. Then they shall call to the Hills to cover them, and try to the Mountains to keep them from the sight of God, from the seat of his judgment, and from the fierceness of his wrath and indignation. And as the Apostle teacheth, concerning the godly (as we shown before) that all things work for the best to them: so we may truly teach on the contrary, that to those which love not the Lord, nor the Lord them, all things turn to their destruction, and further their condemnation; the Word, the Sacraments, and all other exercises of Religion, as we see in the Israelites, and in Judas, whom no instructions could convert, no miracles could move, no means could profit or bring to repentance. If a man had any suit in some Princes Court to make, or a supplication to put up, and there should find the Prince, the Peers, the Nobles, the Commons, and all men set against him to cross him and contradict him, to resist and gain-say him, his case would be judged of all men to be most miserable: but thus the case standeth with all evil and ungodly men that stand in need of God, and of good men, and of all God's Creatures; yet shall have no relief or refreshing from them: God will deny them, Christ will not know them, the Spirit will not comfort them, the Angels will not guard them, the Prayers of the Church will not help them, the Gospel shall not pardon them, the Sacraments shall not strengthen them, the Beasts shall not spare them, the Creatures shall not sustain them. And if they shall peradventure find any comfort or consolation in them, yet what would that avail them, when their own conscience within their own breasts, should arraign them as a Malefactor, convince them as a witness, condemn them as a Judge, and torment them as an Executioner? This we see in the example of Cain, when he had made a breach and wound in his conscience, he could rest nowhere, he could abide in no place, he stood in fear of every Creature, he cried out; My punishment is greater then I can bear: Behold, thou hast cast me out of this day from the Earth, and from thy face shall I be hid, and shall be a Vagabond and a Runnagate in the Earth, and whosoever findeth me shall slay me. In this State and condition do all the Reprobate and unregenerate stand, they shall find no peace in any Creature in Heaven and Earth, and their own conscience as a thousand witnesses shall torture and torment them. And if any time they seem to have peace and to find rest, their peace is a false and deceitful peace. They laugh sometimes, but it is from the teeth outward, and in mirth the heart is heavy. They have riches, but they are as Usurpers and as Thieves have them, who shall come to be arraigned and condemned for them. Their outward estate seemeth happy, but it is most slippery and uncertain: when they say, peace, peace, then cometh sudden destruction, as the pain upon a Woman in travail. But the righteous, howsoever they seem many times miserable in trouble, and destitute of all good things, do indeed want nothing which God seeth to be for his glory and their good, they have that true peace which our Savior promiseth to leave with them, and to bestow upon them: Peace I leave with you: my peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth, give I unto you: let not your heart be troubled, nor fear. Mark then the difference between the godly and the ungodly: the condition of the godly is in show miserable, but indeed most blessed; They are as unknown, and yet known: as dying, & behold they live: as chastened, and yet not killed: as sorrowing, and yet always rejoicing: as poor, and yet making many rich: as having nothing, and yet possessing all things. On the other side, the condition of the wicked is in show blessed and happy, but indeed and in truth, most wretched, lamentable, and miserable. Their laughter is madness, their peace is unquietness, their joy is sorrow of heart, and the end thereof is heaviness. To this purpose the Wiseman saith; There is away that seemeth right to a man, but the issues thereof are the ways of death. So then, howsoever the ungodly eat and drink, sing and dance, jest and talk of vain things, howsoever they labor to avoid grief, and put away the evil day far from them; howsoever they pass away the time merily, and live as if they had made a Covenant with death, yet they cannot be in quiet and rest, for they have an Hang-man and Tormentor within them, from whose hands they cannot be delivered; to wit, their conscience which doth check them and terrify them, before the judgment seat of God, although they strive to make themselves believe that there is neither God nor Devil; neither heaven nor hell; neither salvation nor damnation. Thus much of the blessings craved in this salvation.

[From God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.]

Now we come to consider from whence these gifts come, and who is the Author of them, to wit; from God the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghost. So then, these graces here entreated, are craved and wished from the blessed Trinity, distinguished into three persons. We learn from hence, that all good things of what sort soever, either for obtaining blessings, or avoiding judgments, are to be entreated and requested from God. All things temporal and eternal, are to be asked and begged from that one God, which is revealed unto us by the Scripture, in the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. When Isaac purposed and prepared to bless his Son Jacob, and to pronounce what blessings should come upon him and his posterity, he said; God give thee of the Dew of Heaven, and of the fatness of the Earth, and of the plenty of Wheat and Wine. God gave this form to Aaron and his Sons, of blessing the Children of Israel: The Lord bless thee and keep thee, the Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be merciful unto thee, the Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. The Book of the Psalms doth plentifully offer this truth unto us in the practice of David, and other the dear Children of God, Have mercy upon us, ô Lord, have mercy upon us, for we have suffered to much contempt. This is the direction that the Apostle James giveth; If any of you want wisdom, let him ask of God, which giveth to all men liberally, and reproacheth no man, and it shall be given him. This is that which the Apostle both teacheth and craveth: The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the Communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all. The like we see used by the Apostle John. Revel. 1. 4. All which testimonies serve directly to teach us, that what blessings soever we want, we must beg them of God, and of him only.

Let us see the Reasons to confirm us in this truth. First, God is the fountain of all good things, and the Well-spring of all graces whatsoever. He is a most bountiful and liberal Giver, none can help us but he alone. If he shut his hands, who can open them? If he stop his ears, who can hear? If he turn away his eye from us, who can see our wants? If he close up his heart, who can show mercy? Hence it is that the Apostle saith: For of him, and through him, and for him; are all things: to him be glory forever, Amen. And James, in the first Chapter of his Epistle. I am. 1. 17. Every good giving, and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.

Secondly, the three persons in Trinity, do work jointly together, even from the first beginning of our creation, to the last finishing of our salvation. It is said, all things were made by the Son, and that without him, nothing was made that was made; the Spirit also did sustain and uphold that confused Lump, which was the matter of the universal: so that they are said and set down to be Creators as well as the Father. In the work of our salvation, the Father willeth it, and electeth us; the Son meriteth and deserveth it, the Holy Ghost applieth and appropriateth it. This is it which Christ himself saith. John. 5. My Father worketh hitherto, and I work. And Chap. 16. When he cometh, which is the Spirit of truth, he will lead you into all truth. So we might say the like, touching the gifts of Sanctification and Justification, the Father forgiveth and washeth away sin by the blood of Christ, through the sprinkling of the Spirit: he mortifieth sin by the power of the death of Christ, through the working of the Holy Ghost: he raiseth unto newness of life, by the power of Christ's Resurrection applied by the Spirit: he justifieth us by the righteousness of Christ, imputed and appropriated unto us by the Spirit. Seeing therefore that God is a most munificent and liberal giver, rich unto all, and niggardly to none, and seeing these three persons being one God, do work jointly together in all things touching the creation of the World, and the salvation of man, and the redemption of our Souls; it followeth, whensoever we want any gifts needful for Soul or body, for this life, or the life to come, we must ask the supply of them at the hands of God only, the Father, the Son, and holy Ghost.

Now let us handle the Uses briefly that arise from hence. First, we see, that it is necessary for all that would pray aright, and would obtain that which they desire, to be well instructed in the Unity of the Godhead, and the Trinity of the persons, and to know the distinct properties of the persons, without the understanding whereof, we worship not the true God, but an Idol. Our Savior in his conference with the Woman of Samaria, chargeth the Samaritans to worship they know not what: so do many in our days, both Heretics and ignorant persons, they call upon God confusedly, but they have no particular knowledge of God at all. We must conceive no otherwise of God in our mind, then he hath expressed in his word. The scripture teacheth to knowledge, to believe, to worship one God, and him only. If we conceive or imagine, or receive a multiplicity of God's, we turn the truth of God into a lie, and we erect unto our selves so many Idols. Again, the same Scripture setteth before us three persons in that Godhead; the Father, which is the first person in the Trinity of himself; the Son, which is the second person, begotten of the Father; the holy Ghost, which is the third person, proceeding from the Father and the Son. The Father is God, the Son is God, the holy Ghost is God, and yet these three persons are not three God's, but one only God. And here we have in this place a notable Testimony of the God-head of the Son, where the Apostle desireth, and prayeth for grace and peace to be given to Philemon and his Wife, to Archippus and the Church, not only from God the Father, but from the Lord Jesus Christ. This had been monstrous & horrible Idolatry and blasphemy. Lastly, if Christ had not been in Nature, Majesty, and glory equal with the Father, he of whom, and from whom, we crave spiritual and eternal gifts, And of whose fullness we receive, and grace for grace, must be confessed and believed to be God: but such is Christ Jesus, and therefore let this be an article of our Faith written in our hearts, acknowledged with our mouth, and confessed in the Church forever, that Christ is true God.

Secondly, all good things are to be craved of God, whether it be the supplying of his graces, or the removing of our troubles, we are taught to go immediately to God by Christ whensoever he blesseth us, and to return unto himself the praise of his own work. This duty being required, it serveth to meet with many corruptions that are too common in the world. It convinceth such Heathnish minded men as are of dead harts, and have no spark of the life of God's Spirit in them, that receive and swallow up daily diverse blessings, yet never look to GOD that blesseth them, but we are like unto the Swine that go groveling to the ground, like the Horse and Mule that have no understanding at all, and so use all the profits and pleasures of this life, without any acknowledgement and consideration from whence they come, and of whom they have received them: or like unto the Israelites when they had forsaken God. They sate down to eat and drink, and rose up to play: or as Esau, He did eat and drink, he rose up and went his way, he filled his paunch, and such was his profaneness, that he was touched with nothing. These men do daily devour infinite mercies of God, and yet never call upon him. In him they live and move, and have their being, yet never acknowledge him, from whom they receive life, and breath, and being. This is an evident argument of a profane Spirit, and made the mark of an Atheist, not to pray to God. Moreover, it reproveth such as having great benefits bestowed upon them, do not magnify the Author and giver of them, but some praise themselves, and ascribe them to their own power, and so sacrifice to their own yarne, as Nebucadnezzao did. Dan. 4. 27. Is not this great Babel that I have built, for the House of the Kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honor of my Majesty? This way do the greatest sort of men offend, if they have anything, they impute it to themselves, and thank their own hands, and ascribe it to their own labors, to their early rising, to their late going to bed, but never remember the Name of God, nor consider that whatsoever we have for Soul and Body, and all things belonging unto them are from God, whether of necessity, plenty, or pleasure. Let us learn to confess, and say with the Prophet. Psalm 23. Thou dost prepare a Table before me in the sight of my adversaries, thou dost anoint mine head with Oil, and my Cup runneth over. Some likewise bless their Idols and the works of men's hands, which is detestable Idolatry, as Belshazzar did, who when he brought forth the golden Vessels that were taken out of the Temple of the Lord's house at Jerusalem, he praised his God's of Silver and Gold, to whom he ascribed the praise of the victory, and contemned the true God who liveth forever. Others, call upon Saints and Angels, instead of flying unto God; as they do that embrace the Religion of the Church of Rome, who for every purpose and use have a several Saint; as likewise the Heathen had that knew not God. For touching the Idolatry of the Gentiles and of the Papists, touching superstition of the one and the other, blood cannot be more like to blood, Milk to Milk, or an Egg to an Egg, then one of them is to another, as may appear by the conference and comparison of them both. For first, there was no Nation, no Province, no Citty, no House, which had not some peculiar protecting God to stand for them against Enemies, and to defend them from evil; as Babylon had Belus; Egypt had Isis and Osyris; Athens had Minerua; Ephesus, Diana, &c. Thus is it among the false Catholics, and false Christians; Spain hath James; France hath Saint Denis; Germany hath Saint George; Venice hath Saint Mark; Coloine hath the three Kings; Rome hath Peter and Paul; the Hungarians have Ludowick; Milen hath Ambrose; and so other people, other Patrones: Secondly, among the Gentiles, the Elements had their several God's to rule over them, and to bear all the sway in them, as the Heaven and Fire, had Jupiter; the Air, Juno; the Sea, Neptune; and Hell had Pluto: not much unlike is it among the Papists, where Agatha ruleth over the Fire: Nicholas over the Sea: Valesianus Theodulus over the tempests, &c. Thirdly, the Gentiles had a certain God assigned to their Cattle; as Apollo and Pan the Shepherds God, and likewise to the fruits of the Earth: as Apollo ripened their fruit: Bacchus increased their Wine: Ceres sent them store of Corn: so is it among the Romanists: Wendelinus taketh care of their Sheep, Eulogius of their Horse, Pelagius of their Oxen: Anthony of their Piggies and Swine: Iodocus over their Fruits of trees: Vrbanus over their Vines: and (to show themselves no wiser then a Goose) they gave the charge of their Geese to Gallus. Fourthly, the Religion of the Gentiles assigned several God's for several diseases, and those they called upon to heal them and help them, they called upon Apollo for the plague; upon Hercules for the falling sickness: upon Juno for Women in travail: so the superstition of the Papists, hath assigned and deputed diverse He-Saints and She-Saints to the same purpose: they pray to Sebastian against the Plague: to Petronella against the Ague: to Saint John against Poison: to Apollonia against the Tooth-ach: to Anastasius against the Head-ach: to Mark against sudden death: to Liberius against the Stone: to Margaret for Women in travail: to Uincent, for the recovering and restoring of things lost: Saint Felicitas gave Male Children: Anna, Riches: and Barbara provided that none should die and depart before that they had received the Sacrament.

Fifthly, the Heathen had peculiar God's that were the Patrons of learning and learned men, and gave knowledge in Handy-crafts, as such as were studious Apollo, Minerua, and the nine Muses: Smiths, had Vulcane: Physicians, Aeculapius: Soldiers, Mars: Hunters, Diana: Mariners, Castor and Pollux: Harlots, had Venus, Flora, Lupa, and the like: If we come and compare these with the Church of Rome, we shall see the like practice, for among them the God of the learned, is Gregory: of the Painters, Luke: of the Physicians, Cosmas and Damianus: the God of Soldiers, is Saint George: of Smiths, Eulogius: of Shooe-makers, Crispin: of Tailors, Gutman: of Hunters, Eustachius: of Harlots, Magdalena and Asra. Lastly, the superstition of the Papists in worshipping Idols, is the same with the Idolatry of the Gentiles: for the Heathen did build Churches and Chapels, erected Altars, ordained Priests, set up Images, appointed Feasts and forms of prayers, offered gifts, burned Incense, and fell down before their false God's, which are the true works of men's hands. They sware by their names, when they entered into their Temples, they sprinkled themselves with holy Water, and they carried about with them their Images to worship. Let any man compare the Roman Religion, and the manners of worship retained and practiced in that Church, and then let him openly declare, whether (the names only of the Idols being changed) the same Idolatry be not still maintained and continued; and whether the old Idolaters, which were the Gentiles; and the new Idolaters, which are the Papists, do any whit differ? But to leave them either to the mercy of God, to open their eyes, or to judgment, to make them that see not, more blind, let us acknowledge God only to be our Patron and Protector, who ruleth over Sea and Land, who taketh care of us and ours; whom we Are commanded to call upon in the day of trouble, with promise to hear us. Christ Jesus teacheth us a form of prayer, and willeth us to say: Our Father: and therefore let us go to the root, not to the branches; to the Fountain, not to the streams: to the Creator, not to the Creatures.

Lastly, seeing all gifts come from God by Christ, we are put in mind to use them all to his glory, of whom we have received them. If GOD have given us wit, wisdom, knowledge, authority, credit, riches, strength, honor, and such like, we must remember wherefore they have been bestowed upon us, and must be referred to their right end; not thereby to magnify our selves, and to set up our own Names, but to glorify the Giver of them, and to praise his great Name. If this be not the mark we aim at, and if every blessing do not make us gain some glory to God, who hath thus magnified us, and lifted up our heads above our Brethren, it had been better for us we had never received these blessings, but had been as wandering Clouds without Rain, as corrupt Trees without Fruit, and as empty Vessels without Water. Hence it is, that the Apostle remembering, that through God's blessing we are made partakers of food, he addeth; Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do; do all to the glory of GOD. It is a notable comfort unto us, to use his blessings aright, that they that used their Talents well, were honored of the Master, and had more given unto them.

It is a fearful sin to abuse them, and to turn them to the dishonor of God, to the hurt of his Church, and to his own destruction. This is a common sore and sickness in our days. Whatsoever we have received, we have received in not for our selves alone, but for the good of others, and the glory of God: so that wear not to be lifted up in the pride of our own hearts, nor disdain or contemn our Brethren, but consider that there is nothing which we have not received, and therefore we must not boast as if we had not received it.

4I give thanks to my God, making mention always of thee in my Prayers.

5(When I hear of thy Love and Faith, which thou hast in the Lord Jesus Christ, and toward all Saints.)

We shown before, that the Prayers used by the Apostle, are partly a salutation; and partly a thanksgiving. Of the salutation we have spoken hitherto: Now followeth the Thanks-giving, wherein he giveth thanks to God for such good things as were found in him, and thereby conceiveth hope to obtain of him that which he requested. The Thanksgiving is set forth: First, by the subject or person, to whom thanks are rendered, to God. Secondly, by the time, when he praiseth God for him, not sparingly, or sildome, but oftentimes, and continually when he prayed unto God, and poured out his supplications unto him. Thirdly, by the efficient cause, the hearing of his virtues and graces that abounded in him; to wit, his Faith in Christ, and his love to the Saints, the poor afflicted members of Christ. So then, we see to whom he gave thanks, to God: when he gave thanks for him, always when he prayed: and wherefore he gave thanks because he heard of his faith and love. As if he should have said; As I wish unto you all the full favor of God, and all prosperity, both of Soul and body: so I cease not to rejoice in thee, and to offer praise and thanks for thee to God whom only I serve and hang upon; even so often as I pray unto him, I remember thee, and that upon good ground and trial, for I do daily hear from the Churches of the worthy fruits of the Spirit of God that dwell in thee; namely, of thine unfeigned Faith which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus Christ, and of thy fervent love which thou showest to all the Saints, that stand in need of thy relief & comfort. Thus much touching the order and meaning of the words.

But before we proceed to handle the several Doctrines offered to our considerations in this division, it shall not be amiss for us to answer three doubts that may arise out of these words. First, the question may be asked, why the Apostle calleth God, his God, as if he were no man's GOD but his. Secondly, the Rhemists in this place gather two notable errors, Justification by works, and Prayer to the Saints, and make Faith to be no less in the Saints than in Christ. The like collection is made by Bellarmino, that we must believe in them, and hope in them, as in our Patrones, because the Apostle maketh mention of Philemons Love and Faith toward Christ, and toward the Saints; so that they gather, that there is Faith toward the Saints as well as toward Christ. Thirdly, it may be demanded why Philemons love is limited to the Saints, and to no other. Touching the first doubt arising out of the fourth verse, it may seem strange unto some, that the Apostle should say, I thank my God. Is he not the God of the rest of the Apostles and of all believers, as well as his God? Is he the God of the Mountains, and not of the Valleys? Is he the God of the Jews only, and not of the Gentiles? Yes, even the Gentiles also.

Paul therefore may be thought of many, to inclose a Commons, and to encroach upon the right of others, he may seem very courteous, and to claim and challenge as proper to himself, that which belongeth generally to all the faithful. But the Apostle setting down his right and interest in God, doth not deny or debar others of their privilege. He doth herein express the nature of a true Faith, which is to believe, not only that he is the God of other Men, but that he is his God, and that he was to believe in him, to rest in him, to depend upon him, to look for all good things from him. Hence it is, that the Prophet Daniel praying unto God, saith sometimes; O our God, and sometimes again, O my God. To say (our God) is a word of Charity: to say (my God) is a word of Faith: the one, respecteth others; the other, reflecteth upon our selves. When we pray Our Father, we show our love to the Brethren; when we say, My Father, we show our Faith, that we have our part and portion in God as well as others, and are to apply the promises of Grace, (made to all believers) particularly to our selves, otherwise they cannot help us and avail us. But of this we shall speak more afterward, when we come to the Doctrines.

The second question ariseth from hence, that Paul seemeth to make Faith respect the Saints, & so to teach us to believe in them, and to pray unto them. For in the fifth verse he saith, he heard of Philemons love and Faith which he had toward the Lord Jesus Christ, and toward the Saints. But if the Apostle had meant to teach Faith to men, and to direct us to believe in Saints, he should be contrary to the Doctrine delivered by himself, contrary to the rest of the holy Scriptures, and contrary to the Articles of our Faith. Contrarie to himself, because he teacheth, that we cannot call upon any, whom we do not know out of God's word, and believe to be both able and willing to help us, saying: Whosoever shall call on the Name of the Lord, shall be saved: how then shall they call on him, on whom they have not believed? Where he reasoneth thus, that we must believe only in God, and therefore pray only to God. He should be contrary to other Scriptures, because we are taught by them, To come with boldness to the Throne of Grace; & therefore the invocation of Saints is vain and needless, seeing we have a free access and bold approaching unto God through Christ: again, they are Cursed that trust in man, and make flesh their Arm, and so with-draw their heart from the Lord. Christ calleth us unto himself, and commanded us to ask the Father in his Name, for the Father himself loveth us. He should be contrary to the Articles of Faith, wherein we are taught to believe only in God, the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghost. Again, such as are not obstinately blinded, and peruersely disposed, may easily distinguish the Apostles words, and see that he referreth not Faith both to Christ and the Saints, but Faith to Jesus Christ, and love to the Saints. For after that he had commended Philemon, for two chief gifts of God, Faith and Love, in both which, consist the perfection of a Christian man, he assigneth to either of them their proper subject; namely, that Faith is in our Lord Jesus Christ, and Charity is toward all the Saints, which distinction and diverse Relation, may appear by the Latin Interpretour, and by their own Rhemish Translation, altering the preposition, and reading it thus; Love and Faith in Jesus Christ, and toward all the Saints. Thirdly, the Apostle else-where having occasion to mention these two graces of God, he doth describe them distinctly by their several obiectes, and expressly referreth Faith to Christ, and love to the Saints, as writing to the Ephesians he saith; Therefore also, after that I hear of the Faith which ye have in the Lord Jesus, and love toward all the Saints, I cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers. So in the Epistle to the Colossians, We give thanks to God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, always praying for you: since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of your love toward all Saints. Compare these two places with the words of Paul in this place, and we shall see they serve as a Key to open this, and do utter that plainly which here is spoken more darkly. Thus we see by the way, that the Scripture is the best Expositor and Interpretour of the Scripture, and that which is spoken obscurely in one Book, is made evident and manifest in another. Fourthly, it were not hard to produce and allege sundry authorities and testimonies of elder times, thus distinguish the words as we do, and avouching that no Faith and confidence is to be put in any of the Saints, as if the Apostle had said; I know how great Faith thou hast reposed in our Lord which hath saved us, and with how great Charity thou hast relieved them that are the Servants of God, and esteem godliness. Lastly, Faith in the Saints cannot be proved, and invocation of them established and grounded from hence, because the Apostle speaketh of the Saints living, not departed; in the Church Militant, not Triumphant: the Saints on Earth, not in Heaven. For the Saints on Earth want our help, and crave our relief to be extended toward them: but they that are in glory and have received their Crown, do not stand in need of our comfort and refreshing: and therefore this is a weak foundation to build the Popish

Faith and belief, in Saints that are dead and departed out of this life, seeing the Apostle understandeth it of one sort, and they take it and stretch it to another.

The third question is this, why the Apostle restraineth Philemons love to the Saints, whereas love is a common debt that we owe to all men, as the Apostle saith; Owe nothing to any Man, but to love one another, for he that loveth another, hath fulfilled the Law. Seeing therefore, love should not be restrained to the Saints, as though we ought to shut up our bowels of pity and compassion from others, and seeing we are not to despise our own flesh, but honor the Image of God engraven in our Nature: how is it, that his love which ought to comprehend all mankind, and enlarge it self to all others, is only mentioned to have been toward the distressed Saints and Members of the Church? The reason is, they which are of the Household of Faith, are tied to us by a stronger and straighter band of friendship and familiarity, and God commendeth them unto us more particularly, and so they ought to challenge the first place, in declaring the fruits of our love. The Apostle doth direct us to this point, when he saith; While we have time, let us do good unto all men, but especially to them which are of the Household of Faith. We are charged to love all, but we must love the Saints with a peculiar and special love, even as heirs with Christ, and Members of the same body with us. God requireth of us to love all men as his Creatures, but the godly as his Children. Though therefore our love should be common, and extend it self far and near into all the world: yet there should be certain degrees, and an order in our love should be observed. We are commanded to love all, but we are not commanded to love all alike. We are bound to love the godly and ungodly, but we are not bound to love the ungodly as the godly; the Reprobates as the elect; the Vessels of wrath, as the Vessels of honor; the Children of Belial, as the Children of God. We are therefore here directed, whom we are most nearly and deerly to love, even those that have Christ dwelling in their harts, and grace shining in their faces. Contrary to the practice of worldly Men, who only love such as are of this World; their love is like themselves, profane men, a profane love: carnal men, a carnal love: they love evil men for their evil, because they partake with them in evil: they hate the godly for their godliness, because they are unlike them, and will not run with them into all excess of riot, according to that which the Prophet hath, They that reward evil for good are mine enemies, because I follow goodness. This agreeth with that which Christ told and taught his Disciples, If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the World, but I have chosen you out of the World, therefore the World hateth you. Thus much touching the deciding of the doubts and answering of the questions, that arise out of these two verses: Now let us come to the observations that arise therein.

The words being interpreted, and diverse questions answered, let us see what points offer themselves fitly to be deserved. First, he beginneth with a thanksgiving, to teach that it is meet and necessary to give thanks to God for benefits received at his hands, according to the Doctrine of the Apostles In all things give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus. We are ready to forget such mercies as we have received, and thereby make our selves unworthy of further favor. Secondly, consider to whom he giveth thanks, to God: not to any Saint or Angel, or any Creatu•..., to guide us in the performance of this duty. Thirdly, mark the person, for whom, for Philemon: so that we are not only bound to give thanks for our selves, but for other, especially when we see God's word to bring forth fruit in the hearts of Men. Thus doth Paul in this place, rejoice for the godliness of Philemon, and everywhere in his Epistles showeth himself exceeding glad for the conversion of Nations and people to the Faith. Thus the Church of the Jews are said to glorify God, when they heard of Paul's conversion. This is the duty of all Christians, specially of the Ministers, to pray continually for the Flock committed unto them, and to praise the name of God for their increase in godliness.

Fourthly, observe that first he mentioneth his thanks-giving; then his prayers for him, so that he joineth the one with the other. Whereby we see, that prayers conceived for our selves or others, are not to be severed from giving of thanks. For no man is so perfect in this life, but he hath need of daily increase in grace: and therefore we must so give thanks for our Brethren to God, in regard of the graces of his spirit which they have received, that we also pray incessantly for their growth in those graces. Besides, no man standeth so firmly rooted and grounded in grace, but he may fall, and by his fall have his gifts lessened and diminished, unless he be strengthened and stayed up by the means and helps that God hath appointed: among the which are Prayers, both our own and others.

Fifthly, he saith his Faith and love were heard off, and spread abroad far and near: so that we see God's graces bestowed upon us, will not be hidden and concealed. We are set as upon a Theater to be seen, all men's eyes are fixed upon us, all Men's mouths will be opened to speak of us, and all men's ears will listen what they can hear of us, even then when they are absent from us. On the other side, what evil soever we commit, we cannot conceal and cover, we have many eyes upon us we shall have a thousand ears to hearken, and ten thousand mouths to prattle against us, so that we must so walk as we saw many with us, and many saw us how we walk. Sixthly, we see here a notable difference between unfeigned praise, and feigned flattery. The Apostle without any feigning and fawning, rehearseth in this place the commendation of Philemon, as he doth in other places of the whole Churches, thereby to encourage them in well doing, and to stir them up, to continue fast and faithful to the death, and to hasten to the end of the race set before them. But such as flatter and use colorable words are wholly at the beck of others, extolling and admiring whatsoever they do or speak, whether it deserve praise or dispraise. It standeth us upon to consider whom we praise, and wherefore we praise them, that it be for such good things as appear to be in them.

[I give thanks to my God, &c.]

The Apostle finding and hearing of the excellent and worthy graces of God that were in Philemon, was moved with great joy, and thereby stirred up to bless and praise the Lord God. We learn from hence, that all Christians (especially Teachers) are greatly to rejoice and praise God when they see, or know, or hear, that professors prosper and grow forward in heavenly graces. It is a matter of great joy and comfort to seemen grow in graces as they do in years, and to increase in heavenly things as they multiply their days. When the Prophet David saw the forwardness of the people in offering willingly unto the Lord, with a perfect heart for the building of the Temple; He rejoiced exceedingly, and blessed the Lord before all the Congregation. And Psal. 122. I rejoiced when they said unto me, Come, let us go into the house of the Lord. The Apostle writing to the Romans, giveth thanks through Jesus Christ for them all, Because their Faith was published throughout the whole world. When the Churches of Judea heard that Paul a Persecuter was converted to the Faith, and made a Preacher of the Faith, which before he destroyed, They glorified God for him. The Apostle John, writing to an elect Lady whom he loved in the truth, saith; I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy Children walking in truth, as we have received a Commandment of the Father. And writing to Gaius, he saith, I rejoiced greatly when the Brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, how thou walkest in the truth: I have no greater joy then these, to hear that my Sons walk in verity. By these several places alleged, as by so many witnesses produced, we see that it is our duty greatly to rejoice when we behold the Gospel flourish, and the professors of the Gospel grow forward in good things.

And there are many reasons to warrant and confirm this Doctrine. First, it serveth exceedingly to advance the glory of God that men grow in godliness, which ought to be an effectual reason to move us to rejoice: for what is there, that should more cheer and rejoice us, then when God's Name is magnified, and his truth extolled among the Sons of Men. In all things that we do, if we do them aright, we should aim at God's glory. Now, as the Name of GOD is blasphemed by careless and wicked professors, (the Apostle charging the Jews, that through their evil life, the Doctrine of God was slandered:) so on the other side, God is greatly honored, when our deeds accompany our words, and a godly life adorneth and garnisheth a good profession, according to ihe commandment of Christ; Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your goodworkes, and glory your Father which is in heaven.

Secondly, the forwardness of one, is a notable means to draw forward another. For as one wicked man maketh another, and he that is seduced, is an Instrument to seduce another: so he that is truly converted, will not rest in the quiet fruit and inward comfort of his own conversion, but labor to convert others, and so make them partakers of that comfort which they have found. The Apostle writing to the Thessalonians, saith of them; Ye became followers of us and of the Lord, and received the word in much affliction, with joy of the holy Ghost, so that ye were as ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and in Achaia. They that are gained to the faith, will be means to gain others, so that the winning of one is the gaining of another. This we see in the conversion of the Apostles. When Andrew was brought to Christ, He found his Brother Simon first, and said unto him, We have found that Messias; which is by interpretation, that Christ. So when Christ called Phillip, and said unto him, Follow me: Phillip found Nathaniell, and said unto him, We have found him of whom Moses did write in the Law, and the Prophets, Jesus that Son of Joseph, that was of Nazareth. The like we see in the Woman of Samaria, when Christ had preached salvation unto her, and offered unto her the Water of life, that she should thirst no more; she left her Water-pot, and went into the Citty, and said to the men; Come see a man which hath told me all things that ever I did, is not he that Christ? Being moved her self, she moved others: being drawn, she drew others to Christ.

Thirdly, it is a great comfort to the Pastors and Teachers of the Church, when such as are taught, do grow in grace, and prosper by those means that are brought and offered unto them. The Apostle calleth the Phillippians his Brethren beloved and longed for, his joy and his

Crown: wherein he accounteth their growth, his honor: their increasing, his rejoicing: their faith, his hope: their flourishing, his felicity: so when he had praised God for the zeal of the Thessalonians, in receiving the word, in following other Churches, and in suffering affliction for the Gospels sake, he addeth this reason; For what is our hope, or joy, or Crown of rejoicing? Are not even you it, in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? Yes, ye are our glory and joy. He doth not make the matter of his glorying, and the occasion of his rejoicing to be his calling, so much as the fruit of his calling: he doth not comfort himself so much in his Apostleship, as in the effect of his Apostleship; that is, the conversion and salvation of the Thessalonians. If a man have never so high and eminent a calling in the Church or Commonwealth, he cannot comfort himself so much therein, as when he seeth the blessing of God upon his labors, when he remembereth he hath kept a good conscience therein, and considereth he is to God the sweet savor of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish. It is a great comfort to the Husbandman after his toiling and tilling, after his planting and ploughing, to see the fruits of his labors, and to behold the increase of the earth, that yieldeth usury, advantage, and increase when it is sowed. So it fareth with the spiritual Husbandman, whose labor is greater & oftener, enduring all the year long, whose patience is greater in waiting for the early and latter rain, whose gain and profit is less in tilling a dry and barren soil, that yieldeth little or no increase, but a crop of cares, a bundle of Briars and Bushes, and an Harvest of Thorns and Thistles, that are reserved for the fire.

Lastly, the graces of God, and the growing in these graces, are fruits of their election, and seals of their salvation, so that the Angels in Heaven rejoice at the conversion of a Sinner. Every grace of GOD addeth assurance: the greater graces, the greater assurance: the more graces, the more assurance: the growth of graces, is the growing of our assurance. For if these things be found and abound in us, they will make us neither to be idle nor unfruitful in the acknowledging of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, but give us a comfortable assurance of our eternal election and effectual calling. So the Apostle giveth thanks for all the Thessalonians, making mention of them in his prayers, and remembering the efficacy of their Faith, the diligence of their love, and the patience of their hope: by all which he gathereth assuredly, as building upon certain knowledge, that they are elect of God. Now then, to lay these reasons together, and to gather them as upon an heap: seeing nothing bringeth greater glory to God among men, nothing serveth better to draw on others, nothing ministereth greater joy to the Teachers, nothing sealeth up more surely their salvation, then the increase of his Kingdom, the growth of the Saints, and the enlarging of the bounds of the Church; it followeth, that all God's Children must show their joy and gladness, when they see any to increase in the obedience of the Gospel, to grow in grace, and to proceed constantly in the truth of God,

The Uses remain to be considered and learned of us. First, we see that the principal and chiefest thing which the Minister should seek and search after, is the profiting of his people, and the building up of the Kingdom of God among them. For his joy in their growth, and his comfort in their conversion, will cause him above all things to labor after it. There is no comfort in the Minister like to this comfort, when he seeth the fruits of godliness, as it were the marks of God's Spirit to shine forth brightly in his people. What comfort hath the Husbandman, more in his husbandry, then to see the fruits of the earth; not to be blasted, but to be blessed; not to wither, but to grow; what joy hath the Shepherd like to this, when he seeth the flock not to be infected, but to flourish: not to be rotten and scabbed, but to be sound and whole: not to decrease and decay, but to increase and to bring forth thousands and ten thousands in our streets. What greater delight hath the Nurse, then to see her child live in health, grow up in strength and stature and prosper in the world? So there is no comfort like to this comfort, no joy like to this joy, no delight like to this delight, to behold the harvest of the Lord, the sheep of Christ, the Children of God, to flourish and to increase more and more to grow from faith to faith, & from grace to grace, until they all meet together unto a perfect man; and unto the measure of the age of the fullness of Christ. Hence it is, that after the Apostle had testified his joy and thanks to God for the faith and love of the Colossians he addeth: for this cause we also, since the day we heard of it, cease not to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be fulfilled with knowledge of his will, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding, that ye might walk worthy of the Lord, and please him in all things, being fruitful in all good works, and increasing in the knowledge of God, and let us by this example comfort our selves in such as increase in good things, and pray for such as are coming forward. We live in a decaying and declining time, wherein many have forgotten their first love: we see the cold season and Winter of all Godlines, wherein men are frozen in the dregs of Sin. We may behold with our eyes (if we be not stark blind) a general wasting, languishing, and consumption of the heat and heart of Religion. If then in this common pining of the vital parts, we may discern any reviving and refreshing to appear, or any flourishing of Godlines (which seemed dead at the root) to spring up, let it be a comfort unto us, and teach us to give God the glory, who maketh light to come out of darkness, and life to arise out of death. This serveth to reprove those that never desire the profiring of their people, nor regard what their estate, and how their standing is in heavenly things: they never consider whether they go forward or backward: whether they grow upward or down-ward, to Heaven or to Hell, to God or to the Devil, to Salvation or to damnation. These are they that feed themselves to the full, but regard not to feed the flock over which the holy Ghost hath made them overseers. These are they that live of the Alter, but care not to minister at the Alter: they will be sure to reap carnal things but they have no conscience to sow spiritual things. They live of the Gospel, but they will not preach the Gospel. The Apostle testifying his longing and thirsting after the salvation of the Church, said, I seek not yours but you. But these men, if they would speak the truth from their hearts, might say: we seek not you, but yours, we care not what become of you, so that we may find the sweetness of that which is yours. How far are these from the zealous affection of the same Apostle, who became all things to all men if by any means he might save some: he teacheth that a necessity lay upon him to preach the Gospel, and denounceth a woe upon himself if he preach not the Gospel. Let us all in our places follow his example, and pray unto God to give the grace of conversion to turn the hearts of men to the saving knowledge of the Gospel: and where he hath granted this mercy let us pray him to increase it more and more, and to continue it unto the day of Jesus Christ.

Secondly, as the growing in good things is matter of joy, so on the other side, it is caused of great sorrow and grief of heart, when the professors of the saith, and hearers of the word, and such as seemed lovers of the truth, do not profit, but revolt: do not go forward, but go backward, do not grow better and better, but become worse and worse. It must not seem strange, that great sorrow ariseth unto the servants of God, when men do not profit in good things. We see what worldly sorrow is found in worldly men that causeth death: the least occasion of loss, the least feeling of trouble, the least crossing of their humors can draw from them abundance of tears. But such as are led by the spirit of God, are spiritually minded, they have godly sorrow that causeth repentance unto salvation not to be repented of. This was in the Prophet David, when he saw a decay in Godlines, and a growing in wickedness, mine eyes gush out with Rivers of water, because they keep not thy law. This was in the Prophet Jeremiah, O that mine head were full of water, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the Daughter of my people. This was in Christ our Savior when he came near to Jerusalem, he beheld the Citty and wept for it, O if thou hadst even known at the least in this day those things which belong unto thy peace, but now are hid from thine eyes. This was in the Apostle Paul when he saw the revolting and backsliding of the Galatians, O my little Children, of whom I travail in Birth again, until Christ be formed in you: I am in fear of you, least I have bestowed on you labor in vain: ye did run well, who did let you that ye did not obey the truth? This is a special note to discern and distinguish true Pastors from hirelings, and faithful shepherds from Wolves: for the true Ministers of Christ are inwardly touched and grievously pained to behold the present sins of the people, and the future judgments of God hanging over their heads. This is a great grief of heart and goeth near them, to see so little growth of Godlines, so little fruit of their labors, so great increase of all ungodliness. This reproveth those that make a mock of sin, and can laugh as heartilie at the committing of iniquity, as at the best ieast and the greatest sport. If we begin once to laugh at sin, we will not make any conscience to commit it. When once we do not stick to ieast at it, we will quickly come to it in good earnest. When we can make a play of it, there is but a short step to put it in practice. The very Heathen saw thus much that had but half an eye, that if they suffered evil to be committed merrily and in sport, they should find it practiced in their earnest contracts & common affairs. And many of the heathen by other Heathen are commended, among whom vices were never laughed at. But how many are there among us that would be counted and are indeed called Christians, who come far behind the blind Infidels, who are open ieasters at evil, and deriders of good. This laughing is the beginning of evil, when ieastes turn to good earnest, and words into deeds. These men are far from the practice of those whom we heard before commended out of the word of God, and from the Godly affection of David and Jeremiah, of Paul and Christ himself, who mourned in soul to behold the sins that reigned and were commonly practiced in their days. This is a notable sign and assurance to our own hearts that we hate them indeed when they do draw out of us buckets of water and rivers of tears. This grief of heart was in the Apostle writing to the Phillippians, when he saw the loose behavior of of many that professed Christ in word, but denied him in deed, of whom he saith, Many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you weeping, that they are the enemies of the Cross of Christ, whose end is damnation, whose God is their belly, whose glory is to their shame, which mind earthly things. Now it cannot be but the hearts of the faithful Ministers and godly brethren, will be greatly grieved and vexed, when they see God dishonored by our careless walking, and standing still idle all the day long withou a laboring in his Vineyard: We must daily increase and grow strong in faith, or else we decrease and grow weak in saith. If we wax not every day better, we fall to be worse and worse. We never stand at one stay. If we walk not forward, we run backward, like the water of the Sea, that if it do not flow, it ebbeth: or like unto the life of man, if strength increaseth not, it decayeth. So then, if any would come to man's full and perfect stature, he must grow up by little and little, from one measure to another: So if any would become a perfect man in Christ, he must follow the truth in Love, and in all things grow up into him, which is the head; that is, Christ, by whom all the body being coupled and knit together by every joint, receiveth increase of the body, unto the edifying of it self in love. Let us therefore take heed to our selves, that we grieve not the hearts of the faithful, and by our sins, quench their affections toward us, as it were by pouring Water upon them. Let us seek to grow up in knowledge and in obedience, that we be not as Dwarfes or Vrchins, never coming to any growth, nor profiting any whit in the School of Christ; nor be as idle Drones, that never labor, but live unprofitably to themselves and others.

Thirdly, it is the duty of all God's people, by striving to go forward in good things, to delight the hearts of their Teachers, and the rest of the Brethren. So long as we increase and proceed unto a perfect man, and unto the measure of the age of the fullness of Christ, that we be hence-forth no more Children, wavering and carried about with every wind of Doctrine, by the deceit of men, and with craftiness, whereby they lay in wait to deceive, we make Christ glad, we rejoyce the Spirit of God, we make glad the Angels, we comfort and cheer up the hearts of the godly, and we bring that peace to our own hearts, which passeth all understanding. On the other side, if we grow backward, and decline by little and little from the holy profession of the truth, which we have received, we crucify Christ, we quench the Spirit, we grieve the Angels, we offend the faithful, and we wound our own Souls. This duty urged from this Doctrine, reproveth sundry sorts of people, that do not desire to delight the hearts of those that have instructed them, and to comfort them that have labored in the word and Doctrine among them.

First, such as have continued long in the Church, and grow in years, but not in knowledge. What comfort can these men bring to their Teachers and Instructors, when no increase is seen, or can be marked in them? It is a common, but a most fearful sin, not to profit and proceed in the ways of godliness: and yet it is to be feared, that not one of an hundred cometh with any desire of instruction, with any care of sanctification, with any purpose of reformation, with any hunger after salvation. If men go to the the Market to buy their provision, and to supply the necessities of the body, we see what they bring home, we see they return not empty, we see they come back laden. But when they go to the House of God, and frequent the exercises of his word, how often do they return with empty hands; nay, with empty hearts, nay, with hard hearts, and so worse then they came unto them? This is it which the Apostle teacheth. Hebr. 6. The earth which drinketh in the Rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth Hearbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing of God: but that which beareth Thorns and Briars, is reprovved, and is near unto curssing, whose ende is to be burned. Secondly, hereby is condemned the want of the fruits of kindness toward the Pastors, whereby they may be encouraged, and made cheerful and comfortable in their calling. Some there are, whom we may well account of the better, or (at least) none of the worser sort, who abstain from hurting, wronging, and molesting their Ministers, but they withal, abstain from showing succor, help, or countenance toward them: they will indeed do them no evil, but likewise they will do them no good, contemning them in their heart: they will not be open enemies, professing hatred toward them, but withal, they are not their friends to give them any comfort, they use them strangely and vnciuilly, as base abjects in their sight, when as their calling is as much honored and magnified in the word, by the mouth of God, as any calling under Heaven.

This was the sin of the Corinthians for a time, who wanted love & kindness in supporting the Apostle under the weight of his calling, so that he was constrained to stand upon the commending of himself, and the extolling of his Ministry, I was a fool to boast myself, ye have compelled me: for I ought to have been commended of you, for in nothing was I inferior unto the very chief Apostles, though I be nothing. This also the same Apostle complaineth of in another place, At my first answering, no man assisted me, but all forsook me, I pray God that it may not be laid unto their charge.

These men did not dispraise him, but they would not commend him: They would not renounce him, yet they would not defend him: as they would not disclaim him, so likewise they would not assist him. Of this sort are many that live among us, who think they have discharged a worthy duty toward the Minister, if they do him no harm, if they offer him no wrong, if they abstain from injury toward him. It was far otherwise with the Galatians, who loved Paul so dearly and entirely, that they accounted nothing to be too precious for him, The trial of me which was in my flesh, ye despised not, neither abhorred; but ye received me as an Angel of God, yea as Christ Jesus: what was then your felicity? For I bear you record, that if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them unto me. But in these days wherein we live, it were well, or not much amiss for the faithful Ministers of the Gospel, if such as should support them, would not subvert them; if such as should help them, would not hinder them; if such as should raise them up, were not ready to cast them down; and if such as should refresh them, were not rather given to revile them, and disgrace them. Here then is condemned all hard and bitter dealing toward them (whereby their calling which is an honorable office, is made an irksome burden unto them to bear) against such as taunt and scorn them, that jest and mock at the work of their ministry, which is the wisdom of God, and the power of God, against those that delight to vex the servants of God, to mingle their bread with gravel, their drink with gall, and their life with reproach. This made the Prophets and Apostles cry out continually, to see themselves abused, their Ministry contemned, the word of God himself refused, & all Religion profaned. When Elijah saw that the children of Israel had forsaken the Covenant of God, cast down his Altars, and slain his Prophets, he desired God to kill him, It is now enough, O Lord, take my soul, for I am no better then my fathers. The prophet Isaiah saith, I have spread out my hands all the day to a rebellious people, which walked in away that was not good, even after their own imaginations. Lord, who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? I have labored in vain, I have spent my strength in vain, and for nothing, but my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God. The Lord saith to Ezekiel, The Children of thy people talk of thee by the walls, and in the doors of houses, they sit before thee and hear thy words, but they will not do them, for with their mouths they make jests, and thou art unto them, as a jesting song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can sing well, for they hear thy words, but they do them not: and when this cometh to pass (for loe it will come) then shall they know, that a prophet hath been among them. So when Paul came to Athens, and saw the City full of Idols, he preached unto them the knowledge of God, and the resurrection of the dead, but they said, What will this babbler say? And others, worse then those that scorn and scoff at the word of life (which they should hear with fear and reverence) are fallen into this horrible depth of sin, that thorough malice to the word it self, do come unto them to hear them, not to learn, but to trap and entangle them; not to edify themselves, but to misreport and accuse them; not to receive profit, but to find occasion to persecute them, as the Jews did with Christ and his Apostles, who came not to hear them, but to tempt them; not to believe them, but to bely them. Many such Jews and Iudasses we meet withal in our days, who are so far from rejoicing the hearts of their Ministers, that they may do the work of their calling will ingly, not grudgingly; cheerfully, not heavily; with joy, not with greefel; that they think it a great duty done unto them, if they do not disgrace them, or molest them: It is a great sin not to help them, not to countenance them, not to stand with them in good causes, but to suffer every base companion, and beastly liver, to insult upon them as their footstool: but it is more grievous to scorn them, and deride them, to make them their Table-talk, and their Tavern-talk, to declaime against them from the Tribunal of their Ale-bench: but it is most fearful of all, to come to them, to catch them, and entrap them; to hunt after words and Syllables, and to wrest them against the mind and meaning of the speaker. Let us beware of these sins, let us not be in the number of such as are set down in the seat of scorners, and false accusers. If they shall not escape that do no good, if they shall not be excused that do not rejoice them; surely, they shall be guilty of a sorer and severer punishment that malice them, that mock them, that misinforme others of them, and every way misvse them, and contemn them.

Lastly, seeing we are all bound to rejoice in the proceeding of the faithful, it followeth from hence necessarily, that we are not to envy and repine at the growth of the Church, or of any member of the Church. This is a great fault and folly in many, when they see any parts of the Church flourish, and behold greater increase in others then in themselves, by and by they grudge and repine at it, and have their own eye evil, because the Lord's eye is good. These are like to those Laborers, that were hired into the Vine-yard, who when they saw such as were hired about the eleauenth hour to receive their penny, and to be made equal with them, who had borne the brunt and burden of the day, and had endured the heat and sweat of the work, they envied at the Servants, and murmured against the Mayster of the house. We must envy no man's good, we must repine at no man's Salvation. The calling and conversion of the Gentiles, was such a stumbling-block in the way, and n Mote; nay, a Beam in the eyes of the Jews, that they had rather renounce the Gospel, and depart from Christ, then to receive them into a fellowship of the same Faith, and make them partakers of the Kingdom of Heaven. So did the Scribes and Pharisees take it grievously, that the grace of God, and Remission of sins, and the Mysteries of Salvation, should be preached and published to Publicans and Sinners. There is no gift or benefit bestowed upon any, but it is given for the good and comfort of the whole Church, so that we should rejoice therein, not repine thereat, forasmuch as we have our portion and profit in it. Nevertheless, what is more common and usual, then to make the blessings of God upon others, a great eye-sore unto our selves? Such as are dull and back-ward themselves, cannot abide those that are forward: They that are ignorant, think all others to have too much knowledge: They that are cold and slothful in the matters of God, do carpe and cavil at the zeal which they see in others, and think them to be too hasty, too earnest, too praecise. Hence it is, that oftentimes the Husband checketh the Wife; the Father controuleteth the Son; and one Friend tebuketh another, as running too fast, and shooting beyond the mark. Howsoever this is not greatly to be feared in our days, wherein few run at all, & many stand still, wherein few shoot at the mark; yet if it were so, it is better to be a little too forward, then to be too backward; to have a little too much zeal, then to be stark cold, as many; or luke-warm as the most are. We see this in the state of a man's body, it is easier to work an evacuation of that which is too much, then to procure a restitution of that which is too little. It is an easier cure to purge our gross & superfluous humors when they abound, then to repair and restore Nature when it is decaying and consuming. It is much easier to take away the sharpness of an edge tool, then to set a sharp edge on that which is blunt & dulled. It is easier to pull down a part of the building which is over-much, then to lay a new foundation. If there be one among us that seeketh to be too just, and aimeth at a righteousness above the Law, there are a thousand that come too short, and fail in that which is required of them. It is a most blessed thing to keep the Golden mean between too much and too little. It is easier to bring him that is in the excess to the mean, then to reduce him to the mean, that is in the defect. When a man lieth dead in sins and trespasses, and hath no spark of the life of God in him, to bring such an one to true godliness, is, as it were, to raise him from the dead. When a man lieth languishing and consuming by little and little, and all good things begin to decay in him, so that he is grown stark cold; nothing is harder then to restore such a one; it is as much as to work a wonder and miracle. But when our zeal is grown to be a little too hot, and our edge made somewhat too sharp, it requireth no great labor, it asketh no great pains to reduce us back again, and to make us return home the way by which we went. There is no cause therefore, that we should so rashly and out-ragiously bear our selves toward those that climb up a step too high, and bear them-selves a little too forward: let us rather examine our selves, and consider whether we do not our selves many ways fail of our duties; so that we may say, and say truly, we are unprofitable servants. Let us never envy or grudge at the good of others, remembering always, that what grace soever is granted to one member, is given to the whole body, and to every particular member of the body; As he that doth good to the eye, doth good to the whole body, & the benefit redowndeth to the hand and foot. Thus it is in the mystical body of Christ, We being many, are one body in Christ, and everyone, one another's Members. We see in the Acts of the Apostles, when the Disciples had heard, that Peter was called and warned by an Heavenly Vision, to preach to Cornelius, and other Gentiles, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying; Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted Repentance unto life. Thus much of the Joy and Thanks-giving of the Apostle; Now let us see to whom he gave thanks, set down in the next words.

[I give thanks to my God.]

Here is the first illustration of the Apostles Thanksgiving, declaring to whom it is made, to wit; to God. The Apostle giving Thanks, and praising God, he calleth him, his God. He saith not simply, I give thanks to God, but particularly; I give thanks to my God. He calleth him his God, and applieth the promises of the gospel made to all that believe peculiarly and especially to himself. Whereby we see for our instruction, that the nature and property of a true and lively faith, is, to apprehend and apply God and his promises particularly to our selves. It is a duty required of us, to labor for that faith which may be as an hand to lay hold on the mercies of God, and to appropriate them unto our selves. This we see in the vow of Jacob, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this journey which I go, and will give me Bread to eat, & clothes to put on, so that I come again unto my Fathers house in safety, then shall the Lord be my God. This special application we see oftentimes in David, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? And again, O Lord my God thou art exceeding great. The same appeareth in Thomas, one of the twelve; when Christ (who will not break the bruised Reed, nor quench the smoking Flaxe) had respect to the weakness of his Faith, and bad him see the print of the Nayles in his hands, and put his Finger into his side, he cried out, Thou art my Lord and my God. This Christ practiseth himself, and teacheth others, when he said to Mary, Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father; but go to my Brethren, and say unto them; I ascend unto my Father, and to your Father; and unto my God, and to your God. The Apostle Paul, speaking of Christ, and the benefites which he reapeth by him, saith, I am crucified with Christ, but I live, yet not I anymore, but Christ liveth in me: and in that I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith in the son of God, who hath loved me, and given himself for me. And in another place, I thank him which hath made me strong, that is, Christ our Lord, for he counted me faithful, and put me in his service. All these consents of the holy Scriptures, serveth to confirm us in this truth, that true Faith standeth in a particular applying of the general promises of the Gospel.

The Reasons will make this yet more manifest unto us. For first, everyone that shall be saved, must have a particular Faith of his own, and not satisfy himself with the Faith of another. No man can be saved by another man's believing, no more then be nourished by another man's feeding. The Prophet Habbakuk teacheth this point evidently, saying; The just shall live by his own Faith. Faith is the work of the Spirit in the heart of man, so that if it must be in the hearts of everyone of us, it followeth that it must be special.

Secondly, true Faith giveth sound comfort, and worketh peace with God; this is the property of that Faith which we must have in us. But comfort cometh unto us, by hearing of a promise made to others, not belonging to our selves. What consolation of heart can this work in us, to know that others shall be saved? This the Apostle speaketh of, Heb. 6. God willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise, the stableness of his counsel, bound himself by an Oath, that by two immutable things, wherein it is impossible that God should lie, we might have strong consolation, which have our refuge to lay hold upon that hope that is set before us. No man receiveth comfort by the riches of another, himself being poor: or by the honor of another, himself living in disgrace: can so no man can feel any comfort by the Faith of another, so long as he wanteth Faith himself, to apply Christ unto himself. Seeing then, that every man must attain to salvation by his own faith, which is able to minister comfort unto him in the time of need, we see that Faith consisteth in applying the mercies of God unto our own selves.

The Uses of this Doctrine are now to be considered and stood upon, that so we may understand how to apply this applying of Faith unto our selves. First, this confirmeth the form and manner of speech, used in the Articles of Faith, wherein everyone is taught to say; I believe in God; Not, We believe in God. For howsoever we are to pray for others as well as for our selves, and are taught to say; Our Father which art in Heaven; yet, when the question is of our Faith, we must say, not [We believe] but [I believe.] We pray for others, but we believe for our selves. The like is to be said of every principle of Faith, every man must hold them all, and believe them all. This overthroweth the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, which teacheth a general and implicit Faith to be sufficient for us, to Justification and Salvation. For they teach, if a man can say, I believe as the Church believeth, though he know not how or what the Church believeth, though he understand nothing, though he be able to apply nothing unto himself, he hath a good faith, and by that faith may be saved.

Answerable to this Divinity, are the Jesuits and School-men's damnable and devilish positions, which maintain; that the people are not bound to know what the matters of Faith be; that ignorance is better then the knowledge of them; that they need not enquire after them; and that Faith is better defined by ignorance, then by knowledge. Hence it is, that they commend the Colliars Faith, who (as the tale is told) being at the point of death, and tempted of the Devil what his Faith was? Aunswared, I believe and die in the faith of Christ's Church; but being again demanded, what the faith of Christ's Church was, that faith (said he) that I believe in: and thus the devil getting no other answer, was overcome and put to flight. This fable hath been so long told and related among them, that now themselves begin to believe it to be a truth; as a liar by often telling an untruth, beginneth to think it may be a true tale. This Colliars faith is the popish Creed, which being founded in ignorance, is too weak a shield to quench the fiery Darts of the Devil, and to resist his temptations. Thus true faith is suppressed, & ignorance is set on foot by these ignorant Teachers, who as they are blind themselves, so they would put out the eyes of others. They require no knowledge of the things we pray for, but prefer ignorance: they require no ability to profess the particular points of our faith, but in gross and general. This ignorance is plentifully condemned in the Scriptures. We are taught, that the word must dwell plentifully in us, and that we must be able to give an account of the hope that is in us, to them that shall require an answer of us. We are taught that ignorance is the Mother of all evil, the root of all error, the cause of all unbelief, and that whatsoever things are written afore hand, were written for our learning, that we might have comfort and believe.

Thus do these enemies of God and his people, take from them their sword when they should go to fight, and strip them of their Armor when they should enter the battle; like Thieves, that put out the Candle which serveth to discover them. To conclude, let us know that an ignorant faith is no faith, for where there is no knowledge, there can be no faith. But such as live in the Church of Rome, being blindly led of blind Teachers, do know nothing to their comfort, they have the key of Knowledge taken from them, they are nuzled and encouraged in ignorance, they hear it magnified and extolled unto the skies. Some of them pretend the reading of the Scriptures in the mother tongue, and in the translation that all may understand, to be a principal cause of heresy. Another shameth not to avouch, that it was the invention of the Devil, to permit the people to read the Bible. Another blusheth not to write, that he knew certain men possessed of a Devil, because being but Husbandmen, they were able to discourse of the Scriptures. They teach, that it is Heresy for a Lay-man to dispute in a point of faith. These men speak not by the spirit of God, but utter the Devils language, and instruct the people in the Colliars Creed. It is written of Timothy, that he was trained up of a child in the knowledge of the Mysteries of Religion. It is written, that the things revealed, belong to us and to our children. In former times, the Doctrines of godliness, and several points of religion, were known of all, and the lowest of the people reasoned of them, and their Bishops exhorted thē thereunto; asking why they are uttered, if they may not be known? Why they have sounded, if they may not be heard? And wherefore are they heard, but that we should understand them?

Secondly, seeing it is the very form of faith to receive and apply: this teacheth, that it is not enough for men to have an historical faith to believe those things to be true which the word teacheth, touching God, Christ, Faith, Eternal life, and such like; but we must apply them to our own hearts, & have a particular faith of them: otherwise, we may be sent to School to learn faith of the Devils, who go so far. And howsoever some may think it to be a very gross and homely comparison, to compare men to the Devils, yet if we examine the faith and practice of wicked and carnal men, we shall easily perceive, not only that the Devils are equal unto them, but do go many degrees before them. For first, the Devils understand the Law and the Gospel: They know the end of the one, and the use of the other: They give assent to the Covenant of Grace that it is true, they know that it is certain & sure, and that God will give remission of sins, and the glory of immortality to the members of his Church. They know the Person, the Natures, the Offices of Christ. They know that all things spoken in the Scripture shall be performed. This appeareth in the confession which they make in many places of the Gospel concerning Christ, I know thee what thou art, even that holy one of God; thou art the son of God, thou art that Christ. And the Apostle James, speaking of such as gloried in a false faith, but wanteth the true Faith, saith; Thou believest that there is one God, thou doest well; the Devils also believe it, and tremble. He setteth down a chief point of Religion which the Devils believe, concerning the unity of the God-head; and this faith of the Devil, is not to be restrained to this one principal point, but it stretcheth to the whole Doctrine of faith: so that he setteth down expressly this one ground & foundation, instead of the whole body of Christianity. For the Devils do not only believe that there is one God, who hath created all things, and governeth all things, and shall judge all the world; but that there is one Christ, one Savior, one Redeemer. And this is a sure reason that they know this great Mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh, because they seek to overthrow, destroy, and deface it by contrary errors. But how many are there among the sons of men, that take themselves to be great Christians, and think they are better then the Devils that know not these things? Are there not many that are among us, and live in the bosom of the Church, who would defy them that should charge them to come behind the Devils, & yet know not the Doctrine of the Trinity, the person of Christ, the union of his Natures, the end of the Law, the Sacraments of the Church, the Covenant of the Gospel, the Nature of Faith, the Justification of a Sinner, and the way of salvation?

Again, the Apostle teacheth, not only that the Devils believe the things that are written in the scripture, but likewise that they tremble at the Judgments of God contained in the scripture. They know the promise of the Gospel, they hear of remission of sins, they believe there is in eternal life which the blessed of the Father shall inherit, but they feel no joy in it, they receive no comfort by it, they are never a whit delighted with it, because they know themselves separated from it, and to be reserved for the wrath to come; as we find it uttered of the Devils through the mouth of the possessed, Why art thou come to torment us before our time? Whereby they acknowledge, that they looked for the accomplishment of threatenings, and the feeling of torments, but they would have the time prolonged and put off so long as they could: And we see that they believe all matters of Faith to be true, but they are not persuaded, nor cannot believe, that they pertain anything at all unto them: They have no hope of mercy, they have no assurance of pardon, they have no expectation of salvation. Now, as they believe that the promises of God do not concern them, so they know that the threatenings of God shall certainly come upon them, and that eternal torments are prepared for them, which is the cause of their fear and trembling. But how many wicked men are there that live in sensuality, and are drowned in security. They are resolved to lie still in sin, and yet consider not what hangeth over their heads. Tell the Devils of their estate wherein they stand, and they tremble; Tell the ungodly of their condition, they are careless. The Devils in remembrance of Judgments, despair; the ungodly presume. The Devils are constrained to confess that God is just, the ungodly wash it away and say; tush God is merciful. Thus doth Satan besot and bewitch the Reprobate, & teacheth them a lesson which he could never learn himself; namely, that God's word is not all true, and that the threatenings there pronounced, shall not fall upon them, and therefore we see, such as are taught and reproved by the Ministry of the word, either to be as senseless blocks not moved at all with them, or as open blasphemers, reviling and railing at the word. These are notable and forward Scholars, and have profited deeply in the Devils School, they are grown to be more cunning then their Master, and have out-gone him in their profession, and therefore they must be as near condemnation as he. This faith then to believe that part of God's word, which consisteth in believing God's vengeance and threatenings is hardly to be found among the ungodly, and therefore the faith of the Devils is more perfect; which should teach us to labor that our faith may exceed and go beyond the Devils, and that we may seek to apply the merciful promises of God to our selves, and so to find comfort in them, which the Devils want. We must not only say, Christ gave himself, but he gave himself for me; It is not enough to say he loveth man, but he loveth me; he is a Savior, but he is my Savior; he is a Redeemer, but he is my Redeemer; he forgiveth sins, but he forgiveth me my sins. It is not enough to say, he saved others; but we must say, he saveth me: he is not only the God of others, but he is my God, and my Lord. This was the comfort that David felt, when he saith; The Lord is my Rock and my Fortress, my God, and my strength, my shield, the horn of my salvation, and my refuge.

It is the tenor of the Covenant that God made with Abraham, and all believers, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed. If then God have promised this mercy, and spoken peace unto our Consciences, saying to every faithful person, I will be thy God; why should not every believer take hold of this, and say; The Lord shall be my God, as I am one of his people? This is not to offer injury to other men, or to make him peculiar to our selves, but to leave him the same to others, that he is to us, as every man enjoyeth the light of the Sun, without excluding others from the use thereof.

Lastly, we learn that it is no Doctrine of pride and presumption, to teach assurance, confidence, and certainty of Faith, that everyone should believe that God is his God, that Christ is his Savior, that the Holy-Ghost is his sanctifier, that forgiveness of sins, and eternal life, shall be given unto him. If we believe not this, we believe nothing; if we deny this, or doubt of this, all our Faith is in vain. For, as we pray for the forgiveness of our own sins, so we must believe the forgiveness of our own sins. The promises of the Gospel are general, these we are to know do belong to us, and therefore must take them as spoken to us. It is promised to Joshua immediately after the death of Moses, that God would not leave him, nor forsake him. This the Apostle applieth and maketh it common to all the faithful, whom he chargeth to have their conversation without covetousness, seeing it is written, That God will not leave them nor forsake them. God commandeth us to call upon him with promise to hear us, Call upon me, and I will hear thee. This was the comfort of David, and the assurance that he had; When I call upon the Lord, he will hear him. Christ our Savior giveth us encouragement to prayer, because Whatsoever we ask in his name, that will he do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. Hence it is that John saith; This is the assurance that we have of him, that whatsoever we ask according to his will, he heareth us; And if we know that he heareth us, we know we have the petitions which we ask of him. When Christ said to the poor distressed man in the Gospel: If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth. He answered, Lord I believe, help mine unbelief. So saith the Prophet, Behold Lord, I am thy servant; I am thy servant, ô give me understanding that I may keep thy Commandments, &c. The Lord saith generally, Whosoever believeth shall be saved. Hence the Apostle inferreth this particular to the Jailor, Believe thou, and thou shalt be saved. When God saith, Seek ye my face; the voice of the faithful doth return and rebound this back again; Thy face Lord I will seek. God by his new Covenant bindeth himself to the heirs of promise, saying; I will be their God, and they shall be my people; whereupon they are emboldened to say; Loe this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us, we will rejoice and be joyful in his salvation. God saith unto us, I am thy salvation; our heart again with unspeakable comfort inwardly ministered, answereth; Thou art my God. So then, when we say aright we believe in God the Father, it is as much as to say; I believe that God is my God, and I have assurance and trust in him for my salvation. And to believe that God is my God, is to believe that he is my life, my peace, my deliverance, my salvation; not only that he is these things in himself, and in his own nature; not only that he is these things to other men, that trust in him, and depend upon him, but that he is indeed the same to me, that his mercy doth compass me, his power defend me, his providence watch over me, and his favor keep and preserve me to himself in life and death. For there are many degrees of faith, one step is to believe that God is; the second step, is to believe God, that is, to give credit to him, that all his words which he hath spoken, and the promises which he hath made, are true; the third step, is to believe in God, which requireth trust in God, according to his word and promise, being firmly resolved, that he will do whatsoever he hath said. Thus it is required of us to do in every Article of Faith, in every promise of Mercy, in every word of grace offered unto us: we must by a special faith receive it, and apply it. If such a faith be required, the question may be asked, how Infants can be saved, that cannot have this faith of their own, and therefore it seemeth they must be saved by their Parents faith? I answer, that the faith of Parents doth bring the Infants to have a Title and interest in the Covenant of grace, and in all the benefits of Christ; but it cannot apply the merits of Christ's death, his obedience, his righteousness unto the Infant. For this the Believer and faithful Parent doth only to himself, and to no other; but the merrites and satisfaction of Christ, and ingrafting into his body, are wrought by some special and secret working of the Holy-Ghost unto us unknown, but effectual to the Infant, and comfortable to the Parent, albeit it be not done by his faith: and therefore this, that men are justified by a special faith, holdeth to be true in men of years and discretion, not in Infants and children, who are justified and saved by an extraordinary working of God's spirit, Like the wind which bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whether it goeth: so is every man that is borne of the Spirit.

Again, sometimes the dear children of God fail in this special faith, & want this particular application; they are not able to say, God is my God; Christ is my Savior. I answer, this falleth out indeed sometimes in the temptations of Satan, and in the infirmities of the flesh, so that they have not a feeling of God's mercy toward them, but even then they cease not to believe. We must live by faith, not by feeling. A man may have life in him, though the sick man in extremity do not know it, or feel it: so may faith be in us, in some great temptation, albeit we feel it not present. David lost and wanted this feeling, when he prayed God to create in him a clean heart, and to renew a right spirit within him. But was it utterly lost? No, for he saith; Take not away thy Spirit from me. In this case, it shall be good for us, to remember the former mercies of God toward us, and consider how he hath dealt with us; and thereby assure our harts, that howsoever God for a season with-holdeth the light of his countenance from us, yet he will restore us to the joy of his salvation, as we see in the example of the Prophet; he could not in his trouble receive any true comfort, for howsoever he did think upon the Lord, he was still troubled, and though he prayed unto him, yet his spirit was full of anguish; the help then which he found in his present distress, was this; Then I considered the days of old, and the years of ancient time: I called to remembrance my song in the night, I remembered the works of the Lord, certainly I remembered thy wonders of old. So when we feel not that comfort and delight in praying that we felt, we must not wax faint & give over, we must continue in the Prayer of faith, though not of feeling.

[Making mention always of thee in my Prayers.]

This is the second circumstance whereby the Thanksgiving of the Apostle is amplified, wherein he witnesseth, that he usually prayed for Philemon, and others. In this practice of the Apostle we learn, that the faithful are to pray one for another. It is a duty required for all of us, not only to pray for our selves, but to pray for others, especially for those whose piety is known unto them. This we see plentifully proved and confirmed in the example of Abraham: he prayed for the Sodomites that they might be spared; he prayed for Abimelech, that he might be healed. When the people desired Samuel to pray for them, he said, God forbid that I should sin against the Lord, and cease praying for you. This Paul performed for the Romaines, God is my witness (whom I serve in my spirit in the Gospel of his Son) that without ceasing I make mention of you always in my Prayers, beseeching that by some means one time or other, I might have a prosperous journey by the will of God to come to you. Heerunto we are directed by that form of Prayer which Christ taught his Disciples, and left unto his Church, directing us to say, Our Father, give us, forgive us; lead us not, deliver us: Not My Father, give me, forgive me, lead me not, deliver me. So the Apostle shutting up what Armor a Christian must use against his spiritual enemies, he saith; Pray always with all manner Prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watch thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all Saints; and for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly to publish the secret of the Gospel. So he prayed for the Colossians, always since he heard of their faith in Christ, and of their love toward all Saints: and he required the Prayers of the Colossians again for himself, that God might open to him the door of utterance, to speak the Mystery of Christ, for which he was in bonds. Thus the Apostle James doth teach us to deal one toward another; Is any sick among you? Let him call for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray for him, and anoint him with Oile in the name of the Lord, & the Prayer of Faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up. All which examples and Commandments, serve to guide us to the performaunce of this special duty that we are charged and commanded to pray one for another, and to be mindful one of another, in our best thoughts and most serious Meditations.

The Reasons hereof being rightly weighed, will easily gain our affections to yield to this truth. For first, the Communion and fellowship that is among the Saints, requireth our Prayers one for another. We believe, that there is one body, one head, one company, one inheritance, one Brotherhood, as we see Ephes. 4. Endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace; there is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your vocation; there is one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, one God and Father of all, which is above all, and through all, and in you all. Now what Communion were this among the members of Christ, unless we were straightly tied to pray one for another, and to perform this mutual duty one for another? So that the want of it, is a plain argument, that we are not members of the same body, seeing we desire not the good of them.

Secondly, it is a most forcible weapon put into our hands, whereby we are made able to help our selves, and the rest of our Brethren which are fellow-soldiers with us, all of us fighting under the same Captain, Jesus Christ. Their fighting is our fighting; their retiring is our retiring; their victory is our victory; their loosing of the field, is our loosing of the field. For everyone is not a Soldier by himself, but we are all joint-soldiers together, we overcome together, and we are put to the foil together. For even as soldiers do not only stand upon their several guards, but unite their forces together, whereby it cometh to pass, that they who being severed asunder, and scattered abroad, might easily be overcome, having joined their forces, are unconquerable and irresistible: so if we do not only look to our selves, and our own footing, but join in Prayer with other, they for us, and we for them, our spiritual enemies shall not be able to confront us, or confound us, but we shall make them turn their backs to us, and their faces from us. The Apostle naming the Armor which we must all put on to defend our selves and our Brethren, and to offend our enemy, doth set down Prayer as a chief means to obtain God's assistance for our selves and others.

Thirdly, Prayer is a Medicine to heal all maladies, and a Plaister to cure all sores. What Physician is it that hath such a receipt? What Surgeon that hath such a salve? The Masters of that Art have several remedies for sicknesses and diseases that come of contrary causes; but this Medicine will take away all our spiritual griefs and infirmities; yea, albeit they proceed of contrary causes. So then, it must needs be a sovereign Salve that serveth to such several purposes. This is it which the Apostle James pointeth out unto us, Acknowledge your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed: for the Prayer of a righteous man availeth much, if it be fervent. Seeing therefore we are as a body standing of many members, and seeing prayer is a weapon to defend us, and a medicine to heal us: it followeth, that we must use it, one to help and succor another.

Now let us see what are the Uses. First, we learn, that the use of prayer, both public and private, for our selves and others, is most necessary. It is a special gift of the spirit, which is common to all, for all have not the grace of Prayer. The Apostle saith, I exhort that first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made for all men. The neglect of this is a note of a rank Atheist, who is described not to call upon God. Christ Jesus did oftentimes pray, he was fervent and continual in it; he spent whole nights in Prayer. When he was in his Agony, he prayed once, and again, and the third time. This condemneth those that are careless and negligent in the practice of this duty, that are so covetous for themselves, that they can crave nothing for their Brethren. If one member of the body should scrape all to it self, what would become of the rest? Such are unnatural members, as take care only for themselves. These can say the Lord's Prayer, and rehearse the words, but their hearts are far from the meaning and right understanding. They say, Lord give us our daily Bread, that is, to me, and to my brethren; not to me alone; nor to them alone, but to me, and to them; to these my Brethren, as well as to myself. These men are liberal in words, but covetous in mind; their mouths are opened and enlarged, but their hearts are restrained and instraightened; they think they never have enough, and that their Brethren have too much. They are far from giving thanks unto God for them, who repine at every morsel that they eat, and at every blessing that they enjoy.

Secondly, we learn that the weakest and meanest in the Church are not to be despised and contemned, inasmuch as they may by their prayers and other means help the strongest and the greatest. The Apostle teacheth, that God hath so framed the members of the body, That the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor the head again to the feet, I have no need of you; yea, much rather those members of the body, which seem to be feeble, are necessary. The strongest stand in need of the help of the weakest; the greatest, of the meanest; the highest, of the lowest; the richest, of the poorest; the Prince, of the people. All mankind are so created, as that they are not perfect of themselves, but everyone wanteth the aid of another.

One Nation standeth in need of another, no Country yieldeth all commodities. No man hath all the gifts of Nature, but someone, some have others. We see it even among the brute beasts, such as are excellent in craft, and mighty in strength, yet have their wants together with their wiles, and their maimes joined with their great might. The Fox is subtle to keep himself from snares, yet he is weak to guard himself from Wolves: on the other side, the Lion is strong enough to guard himself from Wolves, but he is not subtle enough to keep himself from nets. We have not all things requisite and necessary for us, we have not all properties to be commended: we run into many dangers, from whence the meanest may help to deliver the mightiest. So then, seeing we are enjoined to pray one for another, and thereby may help one another, let us know, that we must despise no man, reproach no man, hate no man, but consider that at one time or other, we may want the help & hand of him. This doth the Wiseman point unto, when he mentioneth a little City, and few men in it, and a great King came against it, compassed it about, and built forts against it: and there was found therein a poor and Wiseman, and he delivered the City by his wisdom. And we have a notable example hereof, in the siege of Abel by Joab, a wise woman cried out of the City, and moved him to return from the assault. We see how forcible the prayers of Abraham were to move the Lord to spare the Sodomites, if ten righteous persons had been found in the City. Thus God testifieth, that he was restrained by the Prayers of Moses, and (as it were) tied with bands, that he was not able to destroy the people. Let us therefore make much one of another, and let no man hate his Brother in his heart, but know, that his prayers avail with God for him. We see the Prayers of the Church profited Peter much, though he were an Apostle, for thereby he was delivered out of prison, and from the danger of death, by the Ministry of an Angel. So they profit us, if they be faithful and servant.

Lastly, it is our duty to entreat the mutual Prayers one of another. We heard before, how all the people prayed Samuel to pray for them: So did the people come to Moses, and entreat this duty of him, that they might be delivered from the fiery Serpents. The Apostle is oftentimes earnest in requiring this at the Churches hands, Brethren, I beseech you for our Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the spirit, that ye would strive with me by prayers to God for me. When we are poor, and can do our Brethren no other good, yet may we benefit them by our Prayers. When we see our Brethren in necessity, in danger, in affliction, in persecution, in sickness, and in great misery; when we have no hand to help them, no power to deliver them, no means to succor them, no favor to speak for them; yet, we have hearts to lift up for them to God, the Father of all mercies, and the God of all consolation, and by praying unto him for them, we shall do them much good, give them much comfort, minister unto them much help, and procure unto them speedy deliverance. This shall be more available and profitable unto them, then all other means of help and succor, used for their safety without this. Let such as are of the greatest gifts earnestly crave and call for the prayers of those that have lesser and smaller gifts. This reproveth such as never regard them, nor require them, that think they have no need of them, nor know the necessity of them. It is all one to these men, whether they be prayed for, or not; whom God no doubt doth oftentimes cross in the works of their hands, that they do not prosper, because they make no account of the Churches Prayers. It reproveth such also, as regard not the public assemblies of the faithful, and the meeting of the Congregation of Christ in one place, where Prayers are made for the Church, where praises are sung, and thanks are rendered for the blessings of God; yea, heaven and earth are made to ring and rebound with sounding out his glory, as it were with the voice of one man. All our Churches for the most part on the Lord's day, assemble at one hour, we come together at one time, a blessed hour, a blessed time; the best hour, the best time in the whole Weeke. O, how should we love it; how should we desire it, how should we delight in it? Then do we pray for the Church, then the Church prayeth for us: then are we mindful of our Brethren, then are our Brethren likewise mindful of us, then is God mindful of us all. Then we call upon God for his Saints, then do the Saints upon the earth call upon God for us, then doth GOD hear us all, both them and us; them for us, and us for them. This is a sweet Harmony and pleasant agreement, when we do thus with one mind, and with one mouth glorify God, and with a feeling of God's mercy, can cry out, O Lord of Hosts, how amiable are thy Tabernacles? My soul longeth, yea, & fainteth for the Courts of the Lord, for mine heart, and my flesh rejoice in the living God. On the other side, great is their wickedness and profaneness, that do not affect such times of public Prayers: they show themselves to be beastly minded, and led... with the wicked Spirit of the Devil into all abominations: neither may such look to find any benefit, or feel any comfort by the Prayers and supplications in those places, and at such holy times poured out. It is a great privilege belonging only to the faithful, to have right and interest in the Churches Prayers. It is not so with the wicked, so long as they abhor such meetings, which are the most fruitful seasons, when God with a gracious dew doth rain upon his inheritance, they are as barren trees, and as withered branches that are reserved for the fire of God's vengeance, and heavy indignation. This is it which the Prophet saith, They which go by shall not say, the blessing of the Lord be upon you, or, We bless you in the name of the Lord. So long therefore, as they remain in this contempt of God, and of his Religion, the prayers of the Church shall not avail them. Lastly, it reproveth such as neglect this duty, and whereas they should pray for others, do curse and ban them, and wish all evil to come upon them. The Prophet Jeremiah complaineth, that he had neither bought nor sold among that contentious people, and yet everyone did curse him. These men love cursing, and therefore it shall come upon themselves, and enter into their souls: and as they love not blessing, so it shall be far from them. We are commanded to love instead of hating, to do good instead of hurting, to pray instead of persecuting, and to bless instead of cursing. But of this Doctrine, we have spoken more at large else-where, and therefore will I here pass it over, and proceed unto that which followeth.

Verse 5. [When I hear of thy love and Faith which thou hast towards the Lord Jesus, and toward all Saints.]

In these words, the former Thanks-giving is amplified by another circumstance, containing the cause wherefore the Apostle gave thanks to his God for him, and did make mention of him in his Prayers, because he had heard by the report of the Brethren, howe great Faith and Love were in him. Herein we have these particulars to be considered; First, he reduceth the principal pointes of salvation to two heads, Faith, and Love. In these standeth the happiness of the godly: by these, a Christian man is perfected, for they are the chief graces of the Holy-ghost. Secondly, he beginneth with [Love,] and placeth it before [Faith.] Faith, indeed is more precious, but it is inward and hidden in the heart, and in Nature and order goeth before Love: but he first nameth [Love] because it is better known to us, better seen of us, and is as the Touch-stone to try our Faith. For though the cause be more worthy then the effect, yet the effect is more perspicuous and manifest: so Faith being the cause of works, is more excellent, but Love as an effect is more evident. Thirdly, we see, that albeit Faith be set in the last place, for the reason rendered before, yet Faith is first defined, and so the order somewhat inverted. Now, it is described and declared by his Object, that it respecteth Christ Jesus. Last of all, he defineth love, which he applyeth to the Saints, albeit it extend to Infidels, to reprobates, to profane enemies, whom also we are to love, yet a special manner of love is due to the Saints, which are members of the same body with us. For even as God loveth all mankind, and all the works of his hand, who as he created them, so he preserveth them, feedeth them, giveth them fruitful seasons, filleth their hearts with joy and gladness, and maketh his Sun to shine upon them, and the rain to fall upon them, to make them without excuse: but he loveth his Church with a special love, not only giving them temporal blessings, but such as do accompany salvation; the one, he loveth as his creatures; the other, both as his creatures, and his Children: so are we to love all mankind as our own flesh, but not in an equal degree with the faithful, who are tied together in a straighter band, because there is not mutual love between the godly and ungodly, neither do they grow up into one body. But the godly are charged to love one another...▪ and they are made the members of Christ, and heirs with us of eternal life; and therefore, love is especially and principally to be shown to the Saints, that is, unto the Elect, which ought to be above all the creatures in the world dear unto us, who are called Saints for two causes; First, because they are purged & cleansed from their sins by the blood of Christ; Secondly, because they are framed and fashioned by the spirit of God to an holy life, and godly profession and conversation. Thus much touching the order & interpretation of the words. Now let us see what doctrines arise from hence for our instruction and edification.

[When I heard of thy Love and Faith.]

The Apostle doth not say here that he saw and beheld, or was an eye-witness of the Faith and fruits of the faith of Philemon, but that he heard of them by the report of the Brethren. Paul at this time (as we have shown) lived at Rome, and Philemon dwelled at Colossae (many Miles distant the one from the other) yet his faith was published, and his love manifested throughout the whole world, which necessarily inferreth, that he openly professed them, and made it known what religion he was of. For if Philemon had not shown boldly his faith, and witnessed a good confession before many witnesses, it had been impossible, that Paul being so far from him, should have heard of it. Heereby we learn, that faith and the fruits thereof must be openly professed. True Religion, must not only be inwardly believed, and in the heart acknowledged, but must outwardly be confessed and professed in the world before men. We see this in Daniel, and the three Children, he was cast into the Lions den, they into the hot fiery furnace, because they thought it not sufficient to worship God closely and secretly in their hearts, but publicly declared what God they served, and what religion they embraced. The Apostle writing to the Hebrews, calleth Christ

Jesus the High Priest of our profession, that is, of the truth which we profess and believe. And afterward he saith, Let us keep the profession of our faith without wuering. And again, Let us by him offer the sacrifice of praise always to God, that is, the fruit of the lips which confess his name. This duty of acknowledging and confessing the truth, have all the servants of God practiced & made conscience of from the beginning, giving witness to God & his truth. When the Apostles were conuented before the counsel, they did not hide their faith, but said, Ye Rulers of the people, and elders of Israel, forasmuch as we this day are examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, to wit, by what means he is made whole; be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the Name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye have crucified, whom God raised again from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole. And when they were charged to ho de their peace, and to speak or teach no more in the Name of Jesus, they aunswared; Whether it be right in the sight of GOD, to obey you rather then GOD, judge ye; for we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard. The Apostle Paul useth this boldness of speech before Felix, I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call Heresy, so worship I the God of my Fathers, believing all things which are written in the Law, and in the Prophets, &c. And as the Apostle himself practiced this duty, so Timothy is commended and praised by him for the same, Fight the good fight of Faith, lay hold of eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses, wherein also he followed the steppes and example of Jesus Christ, which under Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession. All these, as a cloud of witnesses, serve to confirm us in the assured truth of this doctrine, that God requireth this duty of us to confess his word boldly, to manifest our faith openly, to show our Religion publicly, that so we may confess before the Lord his loving kindness, and his wonderful works before the sons of men.

And howsoever these Testimonies may serve and suffice for the strengthening thereof, yet it shall appear more plain and evident unto us, if we weigh the Reasons. First, the profession of our faith hath a great promise of a rich reward joined with it, and added unto it; and the starting back from it as a deceitful bow, hath a sore threatening of a grievous curse following after it. It is that which our Savior teacheth his Disciples, whom he sent out as Sheep among Wolves, and foretelleth them of afflictions and persecutions that should be raised against them, Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in Heaven; and whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in Heaven. It is an hard matter to stand when the storm falleth, and to confess Christ in time of danger, when persecutors arise, and enemies show themselves; but the earnest consideration of this, that Christ will confess us in the glory of his Father, and before the Angels of God, will be a forcible means and motive, to put life and courage into us, to enable us and persuade us to this practice. For what can be more right and reasonable, and stand better with the Law of equity, then that the servant should not fear to profess what Master he serveth, who will know him and confess him, when he is entered into his glory? If a Prince should come to a man among a great company, and single him out by name; if he should acknowledge him among a thousand others, and speak kindly unto him, it would encourage him to live and die in his quarrel; even so, seeing Christ Jesus the son of God, and the heir of all things, will at the last day do us this honor, to confess us to be his own children, and give unto us the Crown of glory; how should we be stirred up in love to him again, and strengthened in the inward man to wax bold in the faith, and fervent in spirit, to give out a clear Testimony before all the world, whose Servants we are, and in all troubles to cleave unto him with full purpose of heart? On the other side, we must be terrified from denying him, lest he be ashamed of us, and deny us before his Father which is in Heaven.

Secondly, confession is a necessary fruit, and consequent of faith; where true Faith is in the heart, there will follow confession with the mouth. This is it which the Prophet speaketh in his own experience, I believed, therefore did I speak, for I was sore troubled. This is made a note of Faith, what it believeth it speaketh, albeit the confession of the truth be accompanied with danger. And lest any should imagine this to be peculiar to the Prophet, & not common to others, the Apostle draweth it likewise unto himself, Because we have the same spirit of faith, according as it is written; I believed, and therefore have I spoken: We also believe, and therefore speak. He that is afraid to confess Christ, hath no true faith; but he that believeth in him will not be ashamed of him and his Gospel.

Thirdly, the Faith of Christ's true Religion, is a most glorious thing, containing in it the great praise and glory of God's wisdom, power, mercy, and righteousness, and it delivereth the matter of man's salvation, and eternal happiness. This was it that moved the Apostle to preach the Gospel freely and boldly, I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Grecian. Seeing therefore, Christ hath promised to confess us before his Father; seeing faith is manifested and shown by confession; and lastly, seeing the Gospel of Christ is the instrument of God's power, to work in us salvation; it followeth, that the Religion of God, and the gospel of Christ, must not only be believed in heart, and embraced in Judgments, but also be confessed by the mouth, and professed in the practice of an holy life.

Against this truth, somewhat may be objected. First, if true Religion must openly be confessed, then such as are dumb and cannot speak, can have no Religion: if Confession be a fruit of faith, then they must of necessity want Faith, that want the use of the tongue. I answer, the Doctrine must be understood of such, as have the use of the tongue given them to glorify God. If God have given unto us the freedom of speech, he requireth this duty at our hands. If he have given us no more then a sanctified and faithful heart, let us honor him with the holy Meditations thereof, he will exact no more of us, then he hath given unto us. Hence it is, that the Prophet David saith, or rather the Lord himself by the Prophet. Psalm 81. Open thy Mouth wide, and I will fill it. In like manner it is said, That Faith cometh by Hearing, and Hearing by the word of God, yet can God extraordinarily give faith to those that are deaf, and have not their hearing, who is not bound to the outward senses, nor tieth his graces to the outward ears, but supplieth those wants by the working of his holy spirit, to the endless comfort of such as have those infirmities.

Again, the Apostle saith, Rom. 14, 22. Hast thou Faith? Have it with thyself before God. Where we see, he seemeth to say, that it is sufficient if we have Faith inwardly in the heart, albeit no confession follow outwardly with the mouth. I answer, the Apostle in this place speaketh of another thing; to wit, of a persuasion touching Christian liberty in things indifferent: as if he should say, Art thou strongly persuaded and assured, that all Meats are lawful to Christians? Be it so; yet use it between God and thine own Conscience, and hurt not thy Neighbor with it, nor offend thy weak Brother by it. This serveth nothing at all, to maintain a dumb Religion without open Confession, which some would willingly bring in, considering (as one saith) that he which doth dissemble faith, doth deny it.

Lastly, it is Obiected, that Religion is better to be concealed, that we may give no offense unto others, and avoid the troubles that ariseth by Confession. I answer, that is no offense given to men, but a grievous sin committed against God, who requireth the profession of his truth. And the Apostle Paul was ready to suffer bands, and imprisonment; yea, even death it self, for the profession of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Thus much briefly shall suffice, in answer of the Objections that are made.

Now, let us see and mark the Uses that arise from hence. First, we learn, who are to be accounted true Christians, and true Believers, to wit; such as show soorth their Faith by their Confession. It is not left to our own choice, whether we will make a solemn and sound profession of the Faith, or not, no more then it is at our liberty, whether we will believe or not, or whether we will be saved or not. It is required of all, that belong to God, to confess his name, and maintain his Religion. All men must confess, that would be confessed before the Father. Christ Jesus will never bear and endure that servant, which is ashamed of his service. The Prophet prophesying of the Kingdom of Christ, and showing how they should grow and multiply as the grass of the field, maketh this as a fruit of their conversion to the Faith, One shall say, I am the Lord's: another shall be called by the name of Jacob: and another, shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and name himself by the name of Israel. This the Apostle also teacheth, Rom. 10. If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart, that God raised him up from the dead, thou shalt be saved: for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth man confesseth to salvation. So our Savior doth not make it proper to his disciples, but common to all, to confess him and his words before men. And he doth not say, whosoever shall confess me in heart, but with his tongue; not inwardly, but outwardly; not secretly, but openly. For albeit, the Faith of the heart be the principal thing, and cheefely required of us; yet the confession of the mouth must not be separated from it. This reproveth such as account this open confession of the truth to be of no absolute necessity, but a mere thing indifferent, left to our liberty to be practiced, or not to be practiced. These are those Libertines, that would live as they list, and make it no matter of what Religion they be. For, if it be indifferent whether we profess Religion, or not, it is indifferent whether we believe or have faith; and let them hold it indifferent also unto them, whether the Lord Jesus do profess to know them or not.

Again, we see, that it is not enough for us not to deny Christ, but there is required of us a farther duty, even to confess him before men. It is required of a dutiful son, to confess his Father with a sound and upright heart, but yet he must not deny his father before men, if he would have his Father confess him. So is it the part of a true Christian, to believe to righteousness, and to confess to salvation. Everyone would seem willing and desirous to be saved, but if we look to be partakers thereof, Christ must know us for his servants: and he will not acknowledge us in his kingdom, unless here we make confession of him. If we will not here know him, he will say to us hereafter, I know you not, depart from me, If we deny him, he will deny us; If we be ashamed of him, take heed lest he also be ashamed of us. The Thief that was upon the Cross, made open confession of his faith, reproved the blasphemy of his Companion, and called upon Christ for salvation, Luke 23. he rebuked his fellow, saying; Fearest thou not God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? We are indeed righteously here, for we receive things worthy of that we have done, but this man hath done nothing amiss: And he said unto Jesus, Lord remember me when thou comest into thy Kingdom. And albeit he were a Thief and a Malefactor, for which he suffered death, yet is not Christ ashamed of him, he doth not stop his ears and refuse to hear him, but to show himself true in his word, and faithful in his promise, he doth acknowledge him as his own, because he confessed him before that sinful and wicked generation, saying unto him; Verily, I say unto thee, today thou shalt be with me in Paradise.

The Apostle John living, when the Deity of our Savior began to be doubted of, and called into question, saith, Every Spirit which confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the Flesh, is not of God. If therefore we look to be confessed of Christ, and to have our souls saved in the day of the Lord, let us boldly bear and behave our selves under the Cross, and not shrink in the wetting like deceitful cloth; let us know that confession and salvation must go together, if we wait for the one, we must express the other; if confession go before, we may build surely, and ground our selves strongly upon the promise of Christ, that the salvation of our souls shall follow after, and no man shall take it from us. This made the Apostle say, For this cause I suffer these things, but I am not ashamed, for I know whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him against that day.

Secondly, seeing our Faith and Religion must be confessed, it is a duty that lieth upon us to seek to know the truth, and labor to express the power of godliness; otherwise it is impossible that ever we should make profession of it. For profession of the faith presupposeth a knowledge of the faith; for how can we confess that which we know not, or manifest that to other whereof we are ignorant our selves? This controlleth and condemneth those that live in the Church, hear the word, and have the Gospel sounding a long time in their ears, yet know not what faith is, nor how to believe; so that whereas in regard of their continuance in the Church, in regard of the means offered to them, and in regard of their age wherewith God hath blessed them, they might have been teachers of others, they have need to be taught the beginnings of faith, the grounds of religion, & the principles of the word of God, and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. Alas, who can consider without great grief of heart, and anguish of spirit, in what state the greatest number of our people stand, and remember that after all our planting, watering, sowing, and laboring, they are apt and fit to receive any religion, because they are blind and ignorant, and know not God aright, or any part of his truth, to their souls health. They are like the potters Clay, which is ready to take any form, and receive any impression; or like the earth, which altereth and changeth as the wind or weather, as the Spring or Winter shall work upon it. If they were taught to believe and receive the Cabala of the Jews, the Alcoran of the Turks, the Revelations of the Anabaptists, the Traditions of the Papists, or such like rotten trash of man's devises: and if they were countenanced by authority of Princes, and Laws of men, they were as easy to be wrought upon, as wax that is ready to receive any stamp and impression. A lamentable case, that we should be still as Babes and children, not knowing the right hand from the left, carried about with every wave of Doctrine, and receiving the darkness of error for the light of the truth. But we have not so learned Christ, and the Christian Religion. When we have once given entertainment unto the truth, and embraced it soundly in our hearts, we must not deny the faith whatsoever befall us, whatsoever trouble come unto us; whether prosperity fawn and flatter upon us, or whether adversity pinch us, and pain us; whether the Sun of peace shine upon us, or whether the clouds of affliction over-shadow us, we must always be the same, and our standing in the faith should not be wavering or wandering, to give over at every assault, and to shrink back for every brunt, and to deny our Lord and Master by every temptation. This serveth to reprove those that know nothing, and therefore can profess nothing; and as they know nothing, so they will know nothing, of whom we may say as the Apostle doth, This they wittingly know not, and so are willfully ignorant, and shut their eyes, because they would not see, and because the light should not shine into their hearts. For seeing God hath commanded the light to shine out of darkness, we may truly say, If our Gospel be then hid, it is hid to them that are lost, in whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds; that is, of the Infidels, that the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ (which is the Image of God) should not shine unto them. Thus doth God send them strong delusion, that they should believe lies, That all they might be damned which believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. Let us therefore seek after knowledge, as for great Treasures. Let us search the Scriptures, that in them we may find eternal life: let us have the word of God dwell plentifully in us, which is able to make us wise unto Salvation. Let us use all good means to increase knowledge in us, to begin in Faith, to hold out a good confession, & to maintain the truth against all the adversaries that rise against us.

Thirdly, seeing it is a duty to open our mouths, and lose our tongues, to confess to his name that hath called us to his truth, it standeth us upon continually, and constantly to pray for the Spirit of strength, or corroboration, that we may be made able to stand in the time of danger. It is not in all that know and acknowledge the truth, to avouch it, and to maintain it, to confess it, and to stand to it: but only of such as have received the strengthening power of Christ. Hence it is that the Apostle saith of himself, I am able to do all things, through the help of Christ which strengtheneth me. So he prayeth for the Colossians, That they might be strengthened with the glorious power of Christ. When a man hath once received to believe, he wanteth a new grace to be given unto him, that the grain of Faith which lieth hidden in the heart, and covered in the Ashes of man's frailty, may grow up openly, and bring forth in us the confession of the mouth. This appeareth by the words of the Apostle John, who testifieth; That even among the chief Rulers, many believed in him: nevertheless, because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be cast out of the Sinagogue: for they loved the praise of men, more then the praise of God. He speaketh in this place of such as were true believers, as appeareth both by the phrase of speaking, and the opposition, made between these, and those that believed not mentioned before. Verse 37. where it is said, That though he did many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him. The Evangelist noteth two lets and impediments that hindered them from the open manifestation of their Faith; to wit, the shame of the Cross, and the glory of the world.

Thus we see, that sometimes the dear Servants of God are for a time afraid to confess him, and to bewray themselves what they hold, and how they believe. When Peter was come into the High-Priests Hall, and saw himself in danger of death, he was so far from confessing, that he fell to open denying of his Mayster; he believed in him (no doubt) in his heart, but he gave not glory unto him (as he ought) with his mouth. This we have heard to be in some of the blessed Martyrs, who gave their lives to the death, they have sometimes staggered, and felt the weakness of the flesh, before they have been thoroughly strengthened in the Inner man. Nicodemus a Ruler of the Jews, and a Master in Israel, & bearing a love unto Christ, came unto him by night, and closely as it were by stealth. So Joseph of Aramathia, was first a Disciple of Christ secretly, for fear of the Jews: yet afterward being stirred up with those things that they saw at the death and passion of Christ, both of them shown themselves more boldly & confidently in his cause, and in the end forsook all, to follow him, and resolved to cleave unto him with the loss of all things that might be precious and dear unto them. Such then as our Faith is, such is our confession. A weak Faith, a weak confession: a strong Faith, a strong confession: no Faith, no confession: a staggering Faith, a wavering confession. Wherefore it belongeth unto us, to call upon God to give us his Spirit, which is called The spirit of strength, whereby we shall be enabled to bear the Cross patiently, and to confess the Faith constantly. For when once we are sustained and supported by the Spirit of Christ, no Cross shall daunt us, no temptation shall overwhelm us, but we shall endure all things with a contented mind, and persevere unto the end.

Lastly, we must show our selves ready and resolute to give a reckoning of our faith and hope, of our profession and Religion, when we shall be required. This is greatly to the honor of God, when his Servants prepare themselves to set forth his truth, and are not afraid of the threatenings of their enemies. This is it which the Apostle Peter teacheth us, Sanctify the Lord in your hearts, and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and reverence. This constant and Christian resolution was in Paul, when he was brought before rulers for Christ's sake, though when he came to his answer no man assisted him, but some fled from him, and others were ashamed of him, yet he quit himself like a man, and shown himself a faithful witness of that truth which he believed. This use meeteth with many corruptions, and reproveth sundry practices that reign among us. First, it convinceth such as think they are not to be blamed, but excused; not to be controlled, but defended; albeit, they deny the truth of God, for fear of men, in time of persecution; so that they cleave to it in heart, and embrace it in their souls, so that they inwardly believe it, like of it, and hold it to themselves. Yet we heard before, that it is not enough for us, not to deny the faith, but it is required of us to confess it. It is not enough for us to abstain from that which is evil, unless we be careful to do that which is good. The Apostle John teacheth. That all the fearful and unbelieving, the abominable and murderers, the Whore-mongers, and Sorcerers, the Idolaters and liars, shall have their part in the Lake which burneth with fire and Brimstone, which is the second death. Here we see, that among these wicked persons which he nameth, he nameth in the first place fearful persons, which fear men more than God; these are overcome by Satan, and led to hell and destruction. Hence it is, that the Apostle chargeth us (as we heard before) not only to keep our faith, but to keep the profession of our faith. And Paul, when he came to his first answering, doth not reprove the Brethren, because they openly denied the Faith, but because they secretly forsook him, and did not assist him, and he prayeth God that this sin may not be laid to their charge. So the Angel of the Church of Pergamos is commended, who dwelt where Satan's throne was set up, because he kept the name of Christ, and denied not his Faith, even in those days when Antipas his faithful Martyr was slain, among them where Satan dwelleth. It is not enough therefore not to deny the faith, or not to abjure the Doctrine of Christ, we must give an account of a farther duty, and know; that God requireth of us the confession of his truth, if we would have him confess us in the resurrection of the just.

Secondly, it reproveth such as keep their Faith and Conscience to themselves, and will not bewray it to others. A man shall live many years among them, and yet not know what Religion they are of. These are they that hide their Religion, and bury their Talent in the earth, and thereby make themselves ready for every change and alteration; like the Weather-cock which turneth with every blast of wind. These are they, that think themselves wise and wary men, by keeping them-selves close and private to themselves: and yet every simple man, nay every child may plainly perceive, that they are indeed of no Religion. For that faith which always is kept secret, is no faith at all. It is required, not only that every knee should bow, but that every tongue should confess, that Jesus Christ is the Lord, unto the glory of God the Father, Phil. 2, 10, 11. Such as never profess anything, do plainly make it manifest, and as it were light a Candle to others, to discover the secrets of their hearts. Sometimes they will be Gospellers, sometimes they will be Papists, sometimes they will be Newters, such (it is to be feared) at all times are Atheists, or at least in the right way and broad path, that leadeth unto Atheism. Let not such therefore flatter themselves, and deceive their own souls; let them show their religion, if they have any: or else they show themselves to be men of no religion.

Thirdly, it reproveth such as censure and condemn others, as too pure and precise, by reason of their profession. These men that are cold themselves, and care not whether Religion go sorward or backward, cannot abide that any should be more zealous and earnest than themselves; & because they will not run with them into all excess of riot, therefore they rail at them, and speak all manner of evil against them. They have borrowed many opprobrious terms, and drawn many reviling tauntes from the enemies of the Gospel, and grace of God, and apply them whete they ought not to be bestowed. When the Lord had restored the Gospel unto us, being brought out of Superstition and Idolatry, that the Romanists gnashed their teeth for anger, disgorged their malice with rage, and were like to break in pieces, through envy of the work of the Lord set up among us, they devised against us and our religion, most bitter reproaches: then was our profession called Puritanism, and our professors branded with the names of Puritans, Praecisians, and unspotted Brethren: which contumelies are now taken out of the mouths of enemies, and one Brother doth spit them in the face of another. What a shame and indignity is this, that we professing one faith, living under one Gospel, embracing one Religion, and enduring the same enemies, should borrow such venomous speeches from the scornful and despightfull Papists, and cast them as Dung in the faces of our Brethren? Let us therefore leave these railing and reviling speeches, and send them back to Rome (the Mother of cruelty, and of all biting and bitterness) from whence they come. Let us upbraid no man with his zeal, nor hit no man in the teeth with his profession. Let us rather be moved in love to follow their example, & be provoked in a godly aemulation to walk in their steps. And let us all know, that we must not be like the Laodiceans, which were neither hot nor cold: for if we scorn all zeal and forwardness in the ways of godliness; if we be lukewarm professors, and neither hot nor cold, it shall come to pass, that the Lord will spew us out of his mouth.

Fourthly, it reproveth such as think they may be present at the Sacrifice of the Mass, and hear and see their Idolatry, so they keep their conscience to God and themselves; yea, some go farther, and think they may not only be present at Idolatry, in the Idols Temple, but bow down to the Idolles, offer unto them, creep unto them, and serve them with their bodies, so that they abhor such worship in their minds, and serve God in their hearts. But these excuses cannot serve to justify such manner of serving of God. When God would assure Elijah, that he had his people in those ruins of the Church, & that he was not left alone, he said, He had left seven thousand in Israel, even all knees that have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth that hath not kissed him. He doth not say, he had reserved such as did not believe in Baal, but keep their heart to God; but they are noted by this mark to be the Lord's, that they gave not to Baal the bending of the knee, nor any outward subjection unto him. In the temptations offered to Christ our Savior, when the Devil only required of him to fall down and worship him, he answered; Avoid Satan, for it is written, thou shalt worship the Lord, and him only shalt thou serve. Nebucadnezzar required nothing of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, the three Servants of God, but to bow the knee, and to fall down to the golden Image that he should set up; and yet they did choose rather to be cast alive into the hot fiery furnace, and to endure the extremity of the flame. It is not therefore enough to worship God in heart and soul. True it is, he commandeth us to worship him in spirit and truth, but not only in spirit and truth. God requireth of us the body, as well as the spirit; the outward man, as well as the inward; the knee, as well as the heart. He challengeth every part & member of our body to be employed to his worship. He that hath an ear to hear, Must hear what the spirit saith unto the Churches: He that hath a Tongue to speak, must speak as the words of Gad. He that hath hands to lift up, Must lift up pure hands, without wrath, and without contention. He that hath a knee to bow, Must bow it to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. He that hath a mouth to open, Must make confession with it to salvation. He that hath feet must say, Our feet shall stand in thy gate, O Jerusalem. The cause why God claimeth and challengeth the whole body, is because the body is his, as well as the soul. It is his by creation, because he made it, and not we our selves; we are his people, and the Sheep of his pasture. The Clay was his whereof we were formed, so that we are his by the Law of Creation. He feedeth and findeth us of his own costs and charges; he clotheth us with his own wool, For all the Beasts of the field are his, and the Beasts on a thousand mountains. If then we live at his expenses, we are his by another right, even the Book of his providence. We are made his, by the freeing of us from the thralldom of sin, from the tyranny of Satan, from the bondage of corruption, by paying a price, a great price; by giving for us a ransom, a great ransom, not of Silver and Gold, but by shedding his blood, his precious blood for us; the Spear pierced his heart, the Nayles pierced his hands and his feet, the Thorns pierced his head. Seeing therefore, he suffered so much in his body, for our bodies; we are wholly his, by the work of our redemption, who before were not his. The Holy-Ghost likewise sanctifieth our bodies as well as our souls, and maketh them a Temple to dwell in: and lastly, we look for salvation and glorification, not only in soul, but in body, and therefore we must glorify God both in our bodies, and in our souls: we must offer up our bodies an holy Sacrifice unto him, and not commit Sacrilege against him, by plucking and withdrawing away any part of our bodies from him.

Lastly, it reproveth such as keep company with open enemies to God and his Religion, where they cannot but hear God dishonored, his truth blasphemed, his servants slandered and reviled, and yet make as though they heard nothing, or saw nothing, or could speak nothing; for they stop their ears, and close their eyes, and shut their mouths to the discountenancing of Religion, and the encouraging of evil persons. How many are there that make the true professors of the word, and the faithful Servants of God a common by-word, and their Table-talk at their bankets and meetings? We are at such times ashamed of Christ, of our faith, of our religion, of any matter that may tend to the edification of our souls, but we are not ashamed of the works of the Devil, and of the fruits of darkness. We are not ashamed to fill our tables, what shall I say? with spewing; nay, worse then spewing, with open blasphemy, and swearing, with slandering and reviling of our brethren. Such were the enemies that David had experience of; they reioysed and assembled themselves against him, the very abjects tare him, and ceased not with the false scoffers at bankets, gnashing their teeth against him, When he prayed daily unto God, and the zeal of his house did even eat him up, he became a Proverb unto them; they that sate in the gate spake of him, and the drunkards sang songs of him. When we see godly men thus handled, and their profession in our meetings taunted, let us open our mouths in the cause of the dumb, let us give glory to God in the midst of our assemblies, and not suffer the faithful to be so foully traduced, and Religion it self through their sides to be nipped and despighted. Let us follow the counsel of the Wise man, Open thy mouth for the dumb in the cause of all the children of destruction: Open thy mouth, judge righteously, and judge the afflicted and the poor. We are willed according to our places and power by all lawful means to help the afflicted, and to succor the distressed. We must not be faint-hearted and afraid to speak for them. This is it which the Prophet teacheth, I will declare thy name unto my Brethren, in the midst of the Congregation will I praise thee. This is a duty to be practiced of us, so often as we see our Brethren reviled, their profession taunted, and Religion it self slandered.

[I hear of thy love and faith.]

We have heard before the commendation of Philemons profession, so that Paul being far removed from him, yet had notice of it. Now, we are to consider wherein his profession stood, and wherefore he is commended. The things for which he is praised are these two,

Faith, and Love. He might have named many other graces and gifts of God, his knowledge, his temperance, his patience, his meekness, his gentleness, his goodness, his longsuffering; but these are the chief and principal, these perfect a Christians man's salvation. For our happiness standeth and consisteth in two things, partly in our Communion with Christ our head, and partly in our conjunction and fellowship with the members of Christ. Faith is that which uniteth us with Christ our head: love joineth us together one with another, which are the members of his body. From hence we learn, that the chief things that commend a man to God and his Church, are faith in Christ, and love to the Saints of God. Among all the gifts of God which bring unto us a good report, the principal are to be a believer in Christ, and to show forth the fruits of mercy. This appeareth in all the examples of the Fathers, and Patriarchs of elder times, that lived both before the flood, and since the flood, even unto the coming of Christ: for by it our Elders were well reported of. By Faith, Abel offered unto God a greater Sacrifice then Cain, by the which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: by the which faith also he being dead, yet speaketh. By faith was Enoch translated, that he should not see death: neither was he found, for God hath translated him, for before he was translated, he was reported of, that he had pleased God. It is said of Abraham, that above hope, he believed under hope, & it was imputed to him for righteousness. The Apostle speaking of the Romaines saith, I thank my God through Jesus Christ, for you all, because your Faith is published throughout the whole world. And afterward he greeteth Aquila and Priscilla his fellow-helpers in Christ Jesus, who for his life were ready to lay down their own necks, to whom not only he gave thanks, but also all the Churches of the Gentiles. So he giveth thanks to God, when he heard of the faith of the Colossians, which they had in Christ Jesus, and of their love toward all Saints: he praiseth God without ceasing, remembering the effectual Faith and diligent love which were found in the Church of the Thessalonians. All these examples teach us this truth, that it is faith and love, and such like graces of God's spirit, whereby we receive a good report, as that wherewithal we are accepted of God, and become renowned in the Church.

The Reasons follow to confirm this Doctrine. First, they give us good acceptance and approbation with God and man, because they are evident marks, and notable Testimonies of our election and perseverance. They are as two ear-marks, to know and discern whose Sheep we are. Hence it is, that the Apostle making mention of the Thessalonians in his Prayers, who had shown the effectual faith and diligent love, & the patience of their hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God even our Father, he addeth, Knowing (beloved Brethren) that ye are elect of God. So the same Apostle writing to the Phillippians, saith, That because of the fellowship which they had in the Gospel, he was persuaded of this same thing, that God which had begun this good work in them, would perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. For howsoever the faithful have a new name given unto them, and written in them, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it: yet do the godly after a sort know and understand the election of others, the calling of others, the justification of others. True it is, they are assured of their own election to eternal life, more certainly by the inward Testimony of the spirit: nevertheless we have some knowledge of the election of our Brethren, by outward signs and tokens. Now, there are two things to be considered, the knowledge and judgment whereof, is hard and hidden; the one of that which is past; the other of that which is to come. That which is past, is our election from everlasting, before the foundation of the world was laid; that which is to come, is our perseverance and persistence unto the end of our days; yet we see the Apostle professeth some knowledge, nay persuasion of them both, which is grounded upon the graces of God, bestowed upon those that are his. The more excellent these graces are in quality, the more they are in number, the greater they are in quantity, the better Testimony they give unto men, and the surer judgment ariseth from them, unto such as have them.

Secondly, God hath given praise and glory as an inseparable companion of godliness and goodness; and on the other side, he hath appointed and allotted shame to follow sin. He hath joined these together, to wit, glory with piety, and shame with iniquity. These draw together, as it were, in one yoke, so that one cannot be without the other. The Apostle speaking of the ungodly saith, Their glory shall be to their shame. Seeing therefore, the graces of God's spirit are Testimonies of election, and Companions of praise and glory, we must from hence conclude, that the good gifts of God that are found in us, make us accepted of God and man.

The Uses follow to be considered and learned of us. First, seeing faith in Christ, and love toward the Saints give us a good report in the Church, and lay up a good foundation for us in heaven, we see that only godly men have a good name, and evil men shall leave an evil name behind them. This is one difference between the godly and ungodly: the godly, as he leadeth a godly and sanctified life, so he leaveth behind him a good report, whereby he smelleth sweetly in the Nostrils of God and man. But the ungodly, as they dishonor God in their lives, so he will dishonor them in their persons and names, and reward them with confusion of faces. This is it which the Prophet threateneth in the name of God, Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, and ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of mind: & ye shall leave your name as a curse unto my chosen, for the Lord God shall slay you, and call his servants by another name. There is a praise and commendation, which turneth to shame and infamy, to woe and misery: and again, there is a shame and reproach, that bringeth glory and praise with it. This our Savior teacheth, Woe be to you, when all men speak well of you, for so did their fathers to the false Prophets: but blessed are you when men hate you, and when they separate you, and revile you, and put out your name as evil for the son of man's sake. It seemeth to many that look with an eye of flesh, and judge with corrupt judgment, that the righteous are forgotten, and their names buried as in the grave of silence, they seem above all other wretched and miserable, because no man revengeth the wrongs and injuries that are offered unto thē: yet God in the end will maintain their cause, and give them good estimation with all good men. On the other side, howsoever the ungodly flourish for a season, and are famous in the world, howsoever they are praised of others, and praise themselves with their own mouths, yet their names shall be filthy and abominable, according to that which Solomon saith, The memorial of the just shall be blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot. This overthroweth three sorts of men that offend, and esteem not of men according to their faith and profession.

First, such as slander the godly, and bring up an evil report of the faithful people of God, such as revile them, and seek to take away their good name from them, which is a Jewel more precious then Silver and Gold. But we shall less esteem what they speak, if we consider who they are that spake. For the witness of an enemy is by no Law to be taken, but always to be suspected. Secondly, such as magnify and advance the ungodly, give them the praise and applause of the world, speak well of them, as of the only honest men that deserve to be commended. But so long as they live in sin, their own wickedness doth testify to their faces, and their ungodly hearts proclaim their own shame, and shall bring upon them utter confusion. Let this be written and engraven in our minds, that ungodliness will bring a blot and leave a reproach behind it. Lastly, it convinceth such as are Civil men, that can say they are not Drunkardes, they are not adulterers, they are not Thieves, they lead an honest life, they pay all men their own, they are ready to pleasure their friends, they deal justly with their Neighboures: these men have a good liking of themselves, and are accounted the only men among others. For this civil honest man is reputed the only honest man. But a man may do all this, and be a Pharisee, yea no better in the sight of God, then a Turk and infidel. He may carry the countenance and have the report of such a liver, and yet smell strongly and savor rankly in the Nostrils of God, of ignorance, of unbelief, of pride, and of self-love. If we would deserve true praise indeed, we must not rest in these outward practices and in this moral civility, we must plant Religion in our hearts, we must have a sound Faith in Christ, we must know the Doctrine of the Gospel, we must worship God aright. This the Apostle setteth down as a rule to direct us in our praising of men, He is not a Jew which is one outward, neither is that circumcision which is outward in the Flesh: but he is a Jew, which is one within, and the Circumcision is of the heart; in the spirit, not in the letter, whose praise is not of men, but of God. It is the commendation of David, that he was a man after God's own heart. It is the commendation of Job, that he was an upright and just man, one that feared God, and eschewed evil. It is the commendation of Zacharias and Elizabeth, that they were both just before God, and walked in all the commandments and Ordinances of the Lord without reproof. If a man be void and destitute of this piety, he can receive no comfort by his civility, and albeit he have the estimation of an honest man, it shall avail him nothing, unless withal he be a Religious man: and if our praise be never so great for our external dealing toward men, it shall minister no profit unto us, except we show inward devotion toward God.

Secondly, seeing Faith and Love give us a good commendation and report, let us by these and such like graces of God's spirit seek after a good name, let us not hunt after the praise of men, but that which is of God: the other is a blast of wind, this is certain and never fadeth. This made the Apostle say, We did not use flattering words, as ye know, nor coloured coueteousnesse, God is record: neither sought we praise of men, neither of you, nor of others, when we might have been chargeable as the Apostles of Christ, we speak not as they that please men, but God, which approoueth our hearts. This use and conclusion being well pondred and considered in our hearts, it will discover the great vanity and folly of earthly minded men, who seek rather a great name then a good and godly name. Thus did they that built the Tower of Babel, they sought a great name by their great exploits, for they would build them a Tower that should reach to heaven, (that is, exceeding high) to get them a name. Thus did Absalom seek a name by adulation and flattery, by stealing away the hearts of the people, by creeping and crouching to everyone. Thus do hypocrites seek a name, by a vizard of holiness, & putting on a show of Religion, who indeed have a name, that they are alive but they are dead. Thus do rich men hope to become famous and to leave a name behind them, by getting goods, & raising up their Children, who think that their houses & their posterities shall continue from generation to generation, and call their Lands and Livings by their names. Thus did Nebucadnezzar seek a name, when in the pride of his heart he said, Is not this great Babel, that I have built for the house of the Kingdom by the might of my power, and for the Honor of my Majesty? Thus did Herod by his smooth words and eloquent speech, procure the applause of the people, that cried out, It is the voice of God, and not of man. All these were ignorant what a good Name is, and therefore they and their Names could not continue in honor, but perished like Beasts that die of the rot and murraine. Wherefore, we must labor to get a good name by faith in Christ, by favor to the Saints, by love to the Gospel, which we shall obtain, if we be careful to avoid all kind of sins, both gross sins, and light sins, and all occasions and enticements that may draw us unto them. It is impossible that we should have Faith to please God, and to have praise of God, if we never repented of Dead-works, if we live in open sins against knowledge, and against Conscience. And howsoever we account some sins small and slender (as the Church of Rome hold some Venial) yet As dead Flies cause to stink and putrefy the Ointment of the Apothecary, so doth a little folly him, that is in estimation for Wisdom and for glory. On the other side, we must strive to be rich in Faith, and in Good-Works, for such as endeavor themselves to honor God in these, shall receive Honor from God. And if by any weakness or infirmity we be fallen to the loss of a good Name, we must have a care, with all speed to repair it: we must be humbled by unfeigned Repentaunce; We must seek to be reconciled unto God, to be washed in the blood of Christ, to be purged in our Consciences, and to build up the ruins of our decayed life. For, the care to repair this good Name being lost, must be no less then to obtain it at the first. This we see in David, in Manasseh, in Peter, who turned unto God with all their hearts, who by their rising again from sin to Righteousness, built that which before they destroyed, repaired that which before they impaired, and increased that which before they had diminished.

Lastly, it is a great comfort and consolation to the faithful and godly, to keep Faith and a good Conscience, they are assured, that howsoever the Wicked shall undermine and nibble at our good Names, and cast some blemish upon them to defile them, yet God undertaketh the protection and preservation of our good Names, and it resteth not in the power of any creature to spoil us of them. True it is, our good Name is in danger of three great enemies, which are as three Catterpillers, that wast the fruits of the earth, or as so many Locusts, that eat up the grass of the field, or as three Canker-Wormes, that eat the barks of the Trees. Some are Authors and Inuenters of Slanders, and false Tales; Others, are Walkers and Talkers of them, spreading them abroad to the hurt of others: A third sort, are Hosts and receivers of the two former, believing such Ware to be good, as these Merchants and Brokers bring unto them. But howsoever, the Children of God are subject to the venomous tongues of ungodly men, whereby they are maligned and slandered; yet they must rejoice and comfort themselves in this, that their approbation is in Heaven, and their reward with their God, thorough whose abundant Mercy, they shall be had in perpetual remembrance.

This the Apostle putteth us in mind of, when he saith, Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are Honest, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are worthy love, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any Uertue, or if there be any praise, think of these things which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me. For what should it avail a man, to be praised and commended in the World; for Strength, for Nobility, for Gentry, for Riches, for Beauty, for Greatness, which cannot make us blessed? Nothing can give us true and everlasting Honor, and cause us to be approved of God and Men, but Faith and the fruits thereof, that accompany salvation. Hence it is, that the Apostle speaking of the Fathers that lived in faith, and died in faith, which followed them even to their Graues, saith, that all of them through Faith obtained a good report. Let us therefore above all things seeke to please God by faith, that so we may find that favor which never shall have end.

[Faith and Love]

We have shown before wherein the praise of Philemon standeth; to wit, in faith and Love: which offereth unto us another profitable consideration, in that he joineth and annexeth these two virtues together. He nameth not faith alone, nor Love alone, but he knitteth faith and Love as it were in one band together. So then we see, that these two graces given by one and the same spirit, are remembered, to take up their seat and lodging in one man's heart. We learn hereby, that faith and Love are always coupled together, faith is not without Love, nor Love without faith, but faith and Love go together in all the servants of God, and can never be separated and put asunder. When Paul prayed for the Thessalonians, he remembered these two to be in them, their effectual faith, and their diligent love. It is said of the Church gathered together after the assention of Christ that all they which believed were in one place, and had all things common. Such as were true believers, were also commoners together, such as had Faith in Christ, had Love toward the Saints.

This Luke showeth more plainly afterward, The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul, neither any of them said that anything of that which he possessed was his own, but they had all things common. Here we see Faith, and the manifestation of Faith, by the fruits of Charity joined together. To this purpose the Apostle saith, In Jesus Christ neither Circumcision availeth anything, neither uncircumcision, but faith which worketh by Love. Here also he coupleth Faith with Love in one Yoake, declaring that Faith is effectual in the duties of Love. So the Apostle John teacheth, that faith in Christ, and Love one toward another, are things ever joined together. This is then his Commandment, that we believe in the Name of his son Jesus Christ, and love one another as he gave Commandment. And the Apostle James speaking of the effectual faith of Abraham whereby he believed and was justified, declareth that the Faith wrought with his works, and through the works was the Faith made perfect. All these Texts and Testimonies of Scripture serve to teach us, that our faith must be accompanied with Love, and the one not divided from the other.

The truth hereof will better appear to everyone of us, If we consider the Reasons. For first, they are as the Tree and the Fruit, as the Roote and the Branch, as the Fountain and the Streame, as the cause and the effect. Faith is the Tree, the Roote, the Fountain, the cause: Love is the Fruit, the Branch, the Streame, the effect. The cause and the effect are Relatiues, and have relation and reference either to other: so that the cause cannot be without his effect; nor the effect without his cause: and therefore both these must go together. The Prophet describeth the blessed man to be like a Tree planted by the Rivers of Waters, that will bring forth her friute in due season, whose Leafe shall not fade: so whatsoever he shall do, shall prosper.

Secondly, faith separated from Love, or Love separated from faith, is a false faith and a false Love. Faith without Love, or separated from the fruits of Love, is dead and without life; a naked name without the thing, an empty shadow without substance, a dead carcass without breath. It is nothing worth without Love. The Apostle saith, If a man had all faith, so that he could remove Mountains and had not Love, it were nothing, he should be as sounding Brasse, or a tinkeling Cymball. So we read in the Epistle of James, That the Faith which is without works is dead, it is a Bastard Faith, a counterfeit Faith, an idle Faith, which is no true Faith indeed, but only in Name. For, as a painted hand is no hand, so a seeming Faith is no Faith. Again, Love without Faith, is without his right order, yea without his life & soul, his true cause and form, and so not good, but evil; not approved, but rejected of God, For without Faith, it is impossible to please God, and whatsoever is not of Faith, is sin. All works of Justice, Mercy, Righteousness, to relieve the poor, to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, without Faith are nothing worth; nay all these beautiful shows are beautiful sins, except they be seasoned with Faith. Again, to afflict thy soul, to humble thyself, to hear the word, to receive the Sacraments without Love, that is, to do the duties of the first Table, and to neglect them of the second Table, is but Hypocrisy, and maketh us abominable in the sight of God. Seeing then, Faith and Love are as the cause and the effect that live together, & seeing they loose their Names and Natures, being disjoined and divided one from another; we see it evidently and strongly to appear, that Faith in Christ, and Love to the Brethren, as Mother and Daughter, are joined together in every true Christian.

The Uses are now to be considered. First, seeing these two gifts are coupled together one with another, it followeth, that they must never be separated in a Christian man. He that is joined with the head, must also be joined with the members; and he that hath his part in the Communion of Saints, hath his fellowship also with Christ. If it be a general rule delivered by Christ, that the things which God hath coupled together, no man must separate; it holdeth in this particular, that Faith and Love are not to be disjoined and dismembered, forasmuch as God hath lodged them as two guests in one house, & locked them up as two Pearls and Jewels in one Closet. It is a rule published by the Heathen, that all Virtues are knit together in one Chaine, so that he which hath one, hath all of them; he that wanteth one of them, wanteth all: so is it with this worthy pair of Heavenly graces, we must not have a Faith without Works, nor Works without Faith, but our Faith must be fruitful to bring forth Works, and our Works must be thankful to confess them, to be received from Faith: Our Faith worketh by Love, our Love liveth by Faith: our Faith respecteth Christ, our Love respecteth the Saints.

Thus must these two be found in everyone of us, for they meet together in all such as shall be saved. This made the Apostle say in his Epistle to Titus, Chap. 3. This is a true saying, and these things I will thou shouldest affirm; that they which have believed God, might be careful to show forth Good-Works; These things are good and profitable unto men. Let us examine our own hearts, whether we find these two graces in us, which must be as two twins that rejoice and take delight to be together, or two Sisters that accompany one with another, like Martha and Marie in one house, so must these be two Virtues in one heart. Hence it is, that the Apostle John saith in his first Epistle, If any man say, I Love God, and hate his Brother, he is a Lyar: for howe can he that loveth not his Brother, whom he hath seen; Love God whom he hath not seen? And this Commandment have we of him, that he that loveth God, should Love his Brother also. Where he teacheth, that the love of God, and the love of our Brethren, are knit together with such a fast knot, as can never be loosed and dissolved, the Works of the first Table cannot be pulled asunder from the Works of the second Table. The Apostle Peter moving the dispersed Jews, to give diligence to make their Election sure, and their calling certain, that so they might never fall away, exhorteth them, To join Uertue with their Faith; and with Faith, Knowledge; and with Knowledge, Temperance; and with Temperance, Patience; and with Patience, Godliness; and with Godliness, Brotherly Kindnesse; and with Brotherly kindness, Love. These Christian graces of God's Spirit, he would have in them, and not only to be found in them, but to abound in them; and not only some of them, but they must endeavor to get them all, and to join one of them to another, that so we may be fruitful in all good Works. It is not therefore enough for us to have one gift alone, and then think we are well. Let us not flatter our selves, and boast of our Religion, to say we have Faith, or Knowledge, or Temperance, or Love. He that hath but one of them, hath indeed none of them. We must have many, or else we cannot assure our selves, that we have any at all. For, as he that is reformed in one sin, is reformed in all known sins, and he that truly repenteth of one, truly repenteth of all: so he that hath obtained one gift, hath gotten many. One sin commonly goeth not alone, so one Virtue goeth not alone. When Faith cometh, there cometh a Traine with it, it is as a Royal Queen, that never trauaileth abroad without her train. Faith layeth hold upon Christ, in whom all Treasures of Knowledge & Wisdom are hidden: Whosoever possesseth him, and hath him dwelling in his heart, he possesseth all things. If then we, by attending on the ordinance of God, have gotten Faith, which cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word; so soon as Faith is entered, a great multitude and mighty Army of God's Graces stand about us, and throng at the door of our hearts, as it were striving and thrusting, which of them should enter first, and they never give over, until they be all come in, and have taken up their lodging there, never after to be dislodged and dispossessed of that place.

Let us not therefore be so sparing and niggardly, to think one grace of God sufficient for us; we serve a liberal Lord and bountiful Master, that offereth to make us partakers of all his Treasures, and to bestow upon us all the riches of his house. We may put our hands into his Coffers, and store our selves with plenty and abundance. We see howe they that cover their houses, do lay Tile upon Tile, or Stone upon Stone, or Strawe upon Straw, so thick, that it may not rain thorough, and that they may be defended from wind and weather; so should it be with us that are setting up a Christian building, when we have laid a good foundation, we must cover our houses with a strong covering, we must lay Grace upon Grace, and join Virtue to Virtue, that though the storms of temptations beat upon us, yet they may not prevail against us; though the Rain of afflictions fall upon us, yet it may not enter into us; and although the Winds of wickedness do oftentimes blow upon us, yet they may not overturn and overthrow us.

Secondly, seeing Faith and Love go together, and dwell together, we are put in mind of a notable duty, and are thereby directed to prove our Faith by our Love, and our Love by our Faith, and to make one of them serve to assure the other. The cause will prove the effect, and the effect will manifest the cause. We may prove fire by the heat, and the heat by the fire; a good tree by his fruit, & the fruit by his tree. Many will seem faithful & religious, they will glorify that they believe, & boast of their piety and godliness; yet come to their lives, & you shall find therein no fruits of mercy, no works of charity, no tokens & testimonies of their love appearing in them. This man's religion is in vain, his faith is in vain, his show of godliness is in vain: for pure Religion and undefiled before God the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless & widows in their adversity, & to keep himself unspotted of the world. And the same Apostle in the next chapter teacheth; That it shall not profit any man to say he hath Faith, when his Faith bringeth forth no Good-works. Again, many will show some fruits of Love to their Brethren, in Alms, in liberality, in giving unto the poor, in dealing justly and uprightly; and yet have no faith, they do them as natural men, moved by a natural affection, or stirred up by vain glory, or hunting after the praise of men, or constrained by the laws of Princes, or fearing the reproach of the world, or seeking the merit of their own salvation. All such have their reward according to their work, but not according to their hope. They have their reward already, they must look for no other; they have it among men, they shall loose it with God; they have the applause of the world, but they must pass another doom in the life to come. Such faith (before spoken of) without love, is but a shadow of faith; and such love without faith is but a shadow of love, both are naught and nothing worth if they be asunder. The root joined to the Tree are both good, and make the branches fruitful, but separate the one from the other, pull the root from the Tree, and you destroy them both, you kill them both. This is that use which S. James urgeth, chap. 2. Some man might say, Thou hast the Faith, and I have works: show me thy faith out of thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works. Whereby we are taught to try the truth of our faith, & the sincerity of our love, that we be not deceived in the one, or in the other. But how shall this trial be made? Surely, by making one the Touchstone to the other, laying one to the other, and waighing one in the balance with the other. For the Apostle willeth the vain Christian, who hath nothing but the name of faith, to glory in (like a poor Begger that boasteth of great riches) to show the goodness of his Faith by the fruits of Good-works, or else his faith will appear to be no faith, and his claim to be a false usurpation. So then, if thou wilt prove thyself a true Christian, and to be just before God through faith in Christ, it is not enough to take unto thee the Title of faith, and to boast of such a belief as the Devils have, and every reprobate may have; but thou must be content to have thy inward faith examined and tried by thy outward works, whether it be the true faith or not. For a true Faith is always joined with love, and bringeth forth Good-works, as necessarily as a good Tree bringeth forth good fruits. An evil Tree bringeth forth evil fruits, but a good Tree hath good fruit coming from it. From this conjunction of these two superior virtues, to wit, Faith and Love; the Rhemists in their translation, and other Romanists in their disputations, do debate and conclude against a fundamental point of Christian Religion, on this manner:

- If Faith be not alone, but joined with Love,
- Then Faith alone doth not justify:
- But Faith is not alone, but joined with Love,
- Therefore Faith alone doth not justify.

To this Objection I answer, they make an equivocation in these words, [Faith alone.] If they mean by Faith alone, a dead faith (as James doth) which is void of works, then they speak nothing to the purpose: for we never allowed of such a faith, we never taught justification by such a faith. But if they mean, as they should if they reason against us, that in the act of Justification, there is required hope and charity, or anymore then the hand of faith, which is the only instrument to take hold of Christ: if they join unto this, any of their works, we deny their assertion, and cannot admit of such justification. For, we believe and hold it as a sound foundation of our religion, that faith without any works doth iustifye, forasmuch as it doth alone apprehend the mercies of God, and apply the merits of Christ, whereby we are justified: so, that if the question be, what we must oppose between the Justice of God and our sins, why he doth not execute the curse of the Law against us, wherefore he is reconciled toward sinners, and receiveth them into favor, and how they stand as just before his Throne. Here works have no place, which are imperfect, which are stained and defiled, so that both we and our works must be accepted for another; namely, for Christ's sake, whom faith receiveth, and so putteth him and his benefits into our souls. True it is, Faith and Love are always joined in one Christian, they are required to perfect him, and to bring him to salvation. Thus Faith is necessary, Hope is necessary, Charity is necessary; they must all concur in one subject, & meet together in the same person, so that no believer must be without any of them. Thus we confess they are never alone, he that is without Hope and Charity is also without Faith; and whosoever hath a lively Faith, hath likewise an effectual Hope, and a fruitful Love. Nevertheless, howsoever they be joined, and must be joined in the practice of a Christian life, yet they are not joined, nor cannot be joined in the act and Article of Justification. The eye in the head alone seeth, not the ear, not the mouth, not the tongue, and yet it is never alone in the head, but joined with others. The hand in the body alone serveth to handle and to take the meat whereby we are fed and norished, yet it is not without the arm, without the foot, without the eye, without the head. Every part and member of the body in his place is necessary, and all serve to perfect the body, without which it were maimed and imperfect, but every member hath his several office and function: so is it with the gifts and graces of God, all are and ought to be joined together, to make up a perfect Christian, and he must be furnished with them to make him complete and absolute to every good work; but every gift hath his several object and Office. The property of the eye is to see, of the hand to handle, of the foot to walk; so the Office of Faith is to make us just, the office of Hope is to make us wait, the office of Love is to make us merciful. We do not separate Faith and Good-works from the exercise of a Christian man's life, but in the office of Justification, and acquitting of us in the presence of God. Faith in her Office is alone, as Love likewise is in hers; but in our practice & in our persons they must be joined. A Prince, albeit in her estate & Throne she be alone, yet she goeth not without her train, and Maids of Honor, waiting about her, and attending upon her. Faith, when she layeth hold on Christ, and receiveth the promise, is as it were upon her Throne of estate, and in her proper calling joining us to God. Neither do we ascribe our Justification to faith for it self, or as it is a work and quality in us, as if it were any part of our Justice or righteousness, as if we were justified partly by the merits of Christ, and partly by the worthiness of our own faith, for that were to seek Justification in our selves, which is the Doctrine of the church of Rome: but we are justified no otherwise by our faith, then we are fed by our hand. Now how doth the hand nourish the body? Not because it is meat to feed the dy, but because it receiveth and applieth unto it the meat whereby it is sustained. Even so, Faith iustifyeth and giveth life, not because it is our Justification either in whole or in part, but because it receiveth Christ to be our righteousness and life, in whom We have remission of sins, and an inheritance among them that are sanctified and reserved to eternal life. So then, we ascribe Justification to our faith, no otherwise then as it is the means or Instrument to apprehend and receive the mercies of God, the merits of Christ, and the promises of the gospel.

Thus we teach, that faith is the hand which we stretch to heaven, to take hold of Christ, and to embrace him sitting at the right hand of his father. It is the mouth, whereby we eat and drink Christ, because to believe in him is to eat him. It is the stomach whereby we digest him, because he is to be digested by Faith. It is the foot whereby we enter the possession of all the benefits of Christ, and so far we possess them as we walk towards them. By Faith it is, that we touch Christ, and so receive Christ, for look how much Faith we bring to receive, so much we draw of the abundant graces of God. To conclude therefore, we see how Faith is alone, and how it is not alone: how it goeth with Love, and when it goeth not with Love. It is alone in our Justification, it is not alone in our godly conversation: It is alone in receiving Christ, it is not alone in furnishing a Christian man's life, nor sufficient to adorn him with such graces as God requireth to be in his person, for all other virtues must be in him.

Lastly, seeing Faith and Love are always linked together in one man, this overthroweth another Doctrine of the Church of Rome, which teacheth that Faith may be without Charity, and separate from good works. For the true and justifying Faith of God's elect can be no more without works then the fire without heat, the water without moisture, the sand without heaviness, the Sun without brightness, the soul without life, or the good tree without good fruit. Neither let them pretend the Apostle James to color this their fancy, as though it proved that a man may have Faith without Charity. For he speaketh in that place of a dead Faith, not a lively Faith: of a false Faith, not of a true Faith: of the Faith of the Devils, not of the Faith of God's elect: of Faith in outward profession, not in the inward affection. He showeth that Faith if it have no works is dead, and again, Faith without works is dead: he likeneth such a Faith to the Faith of the Devils, and therefore it cannot be a justifying Faith: unless they will make the Devils good Catholics, and partakers of salvation.

He resembleth this Faith to the good words of him that wisheth well to a poor man, but doth nothing at all for him; he speaks him fair, but he doth not succor him. And as the body that breatheth not is dead, so Faith that bringeth not forth good works is dead. Now a dead Faith, is no Faith: it is Faith in name, but not in Nature. The Philosophers teach that when the body is dead, there shall be neither foot nor hand, but only a likeness of name, as a man termeth a hand of wood or stone, a hand: so in like sort is a dead hand called an hand, or a dead man, a man: because howsoever they are not the same, yet they retain the show and shadow of the name: but all true parts of the body are defined by their Office and faculty. Thus doth the Apostle call a dead faith by the name of faith, whereas indeed it is no more true faith then a dead man is a living man. Hence it is, that some of the Popish writers teach, that James by the name of spirit, understandeth not the soul, but the breath, and that he fitly compareth works to breath, and faith to the body: because as the body of a living creature if it breath not is dead, so faith if it bring forth no works is dead: for breathing is an effect of a living body, and working is the proper effect of a living faith: we say therefore, that there is a faith which may be without Charity, and there is a faith that cannot be without Charity. There is a general faith which believeth that there is one God, and giveth assent that the Scriptures be true, which goeth no farther; this we confess may be, and oftentimes is without good works. But there is a faith that worketh by Love, which can never be separated from Charity and good works, but wheresoever it is, there is infallibly and inseparably joined unto it the Love of God and man, bringing forth the fruits of Righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ to the glory and praise of God. If we have this true faith which purifieth the heart, it will be rich and plentiful in all good works, and teach us to show the fruits of Love to our Brethren. There hath been a long contention and much ado in the Church, how to reconcile Paul and James together, the one advancing faith, and the other good works, Paul saith we are justified by faith and not by the works of the Law. James saith, we are justified by works and not by faith only. These sayings by faith, and not by faith: by works, and not by works; seem one directly opposite and contrary to the other. This difference is only in the letter, not in the matter; in show, not in substance: in words, not in meaning; and the Doctrine which now we have in hand, will help easily to accord them, nay there cannot be a better reconciliation, then when we join them together in the practice of our lives and conversations. Let us join the lively Faith of Paul with the Good-works of James, let us bring them both into action, and so we shall be justified by S. Paul's faith before God, and by S. James Works before men. Thus the places will easily be made one, which seem different the one from the other. For, although Paul do commend Faith, yet he doth not condemn Works: and albeit James do commend Works, yet he doth not condemn Faith; and therefore as they teach both, so we must practice both, we must be void of neither of them. Seeing they preach both, we must know that both are required of us. This overthroweth two sorts of men; first, Papists; and then Libertines. First the Church of Rome do us great wrong and injury, both in falsely slandering us, and in filling the ears of the simple and ignorant people with lies, that our Doctrine is a Doctrine of liberty and licentiousness, that we teach men, (or at least open a gap to men) to live loosely and lewdly, and that we are enemies to Good-works, whereas in very deed, we do the clean contrary, as this Doctrine among a thousand others may bear witness, which now we deal withal, teaching us that Faith must always go with Works, that Faith purifieth the heart, and giveth victory over the world. We teach, that Christ is not only our Justification, but also our Sanctification. We charge men to beware, that they use not the liberty of the Gospel, as a cloak of maliciousness. We teach them to serve the Lord with fear, in holiness and righteousness all the days of their life. We will men to let their light so shine before men, that they seeing their Good-Works may glorify their father which is in heaven. This is no Doctrine of liberty, nor openeth a window to all wickedness, and yet this is our Doctrine, which is so plain and evident a truth, that some of our hottest adversaries are driven to acknowledge it. But who are they, that have this leisure, to pry and search into the lives of others abroad, and are ignorant of themselves, and their own Doctrine at home. For it is their Religion that is a broaching of lies, and of all liberty to do evil, as all men by the light of Nature, not blinded with the love of error might soon espy. Behold therefore some kinds of their Catholic Faith taught by their holy Mother the Church. They teach the lawfulness of deposing Princes, and discharging their Subjects of their allegiance and obedience toward them: This Doctrine filleth Kingdoms and Countries with Treasons and Rebellions, and alloweth Traitors, and Assassins, and Murderers of them at the Popes pleasure. They do teach and allow the worship of Images, and bowing down to Stockes and Stones, whereby the people are drawn away from the living God, to palpable Idolatry, as common experience hath declared, and some of themselves have confessed. They publish at large the benefit of Pardons, which may easily be procured for money, which open wide the Flood-gates of all vngodlynesse. For who will spare to commit sin, that is able to redeem it with his purse? Yea, this emboldened certain men, to rob the Popes pardoner, who before hand had given them a pardon to commit the next sin, though it should be a great sin. They teach, touching the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, that a Dog or Mouse, or Swine, or any Beast, eating a consecrated host, eateth the very flesh and body of our Savior, as I have shown else-where. They maintain the filthy Dunghill of Stews and Brothel-houses, which giveth allowance unto open whoredom and uncleanness; yea, they say it is good for a Commonwealth, and the Pope tollerateth the Curtezans in Rome, and in other places, upon a yearly rent, to practice and profess Bawdry. Unto this rablement of their Catholic conclusions, we might add many others, which suffice to discover what the holiness of the Romish Religion is, and to direct us to come out of it betimes, least partaking with the same sins, we also partake in the punishments. Secondly, this conjunction of these two Virtues, overthroweth the carnal looseness of all Libertines, such as are Hypocrites and vain boasters of Faith, which think it sufficient to speak of Faith, and to boast that they believe. These men doth the Apostle James plainly reprove in his Epistle, teaching, that where there is want of works, there is also want of Faith; of a true Faith, which is the right Faith. We must therefore examine our Faith by the fruits, and prove our believing by our working. We have many such in our days, that glory of their Faith, and boast that they are of a right belief, and yet lay them to the trial, and examine their lives what they are, and we shall find them to be liars against the truth, and deceiving their own souls. Knowe therefore, that our faith is, as our lives are: A good life, a good Faith; a dead life, a dead Faith; an unfruitful life, an idle Faith. And thus much of Faith and Love joined together: Now let us speak of them severally, as they are described; first, touching Faith; and afterward, touching Love.

[Faith in Christ.]

The first Virtue which is here commended to be in Philemon, is Faith, which is said to respect Christ. This Faith is a gift of God, whereby we apprehend Christ and his benefits, believing the remission of our sins, and our reconciliation with God. Mark therefore, that the faith here set forth, is said to be toward Christ, and Christ who is the proper object of Faith, doth also point us unto the Father, who willeth and ordaineth our Salvation, Redemption, Reconciliation, and Salvation; and to the Holy-Ghost, who applieth and appropriateth to the elect, these benefits which are willed by the Father, and merited by Christ. So then, when the Apostle saith of Philemon, that his faith was in Christ, he teacheth that true faith looketh unto Christ, dependeth upon him, trusteth and resteth in him for salvation, and not upon any creature in heaven or earth. Our faith must direct us to Christ to believe in him, to have recourse to him, and to look for salvation from him, as the Israelites did health from the Brazen serpent. This is proved unto us by many consents of the word of God. The Apostle John in his Gospel offereth plentiful Testimonies of the truth, as Chap. 1, 12. As many as received him, to them he gave prerogative to be the sons of God, even to them that believe in his name. And Chap. 3. God so loved the world, that he hath given his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life. And again, Chap. 17. I pray not for these alone, but for them also which shall believe in me through their word. So before in the third Chapter, As Moses lift up the Serpent in the Wilderness, so must the son of man be lift up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. Thus he speaketh in another place, This is the work of God, that ye believe in him whom he hath sent. When Phillip said to the Eunuch, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayst be baptized: He answered, I believe that Jesus Christ is that son of God. So Paul and Silas willed the Keeper of the prison to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and he should he saved. And the Apostle, Gal. 2. teacheth, That a man is not justified by the Works of the Law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we, I say, have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the Faith of Christ. All these places of Scripture plainly instruct us in this principle of our holy religion, that Faith must be in Christ, in whom it findeth a sure ground to rest upon.

The Reasons are to be marked and considered, which confirm this Doctrine. First, because the work of salvation is wholly and only wrought by him, and no part thereof is reserved to any creature, in whole or in part. To be called Jesus, is as it were the proper name of Christ, who is a perfect and absolute Saviour, beginning, continuing, and finishing our salvation. This is it which Peter preacheth: Among men, there is no other name given under heaven, whereby we may be saved, but by the Name of Jesus. And the author to the Hebrews saith, that he is able perfectly to save them that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. Thus we see, Christ is made the Author and finisher of our salvation.

Secondly, to put a difference between the Creator and the Creatute, between the things pertaining to God, and the things pertaining to men. No creature is to be believed in, nor any blessing that we receive from Christ. We believe the Church, not in the Church; the Communion of Saints, not in the Communion of Saints; the forgiveness of sins, not in the forgiveness of sins, as we shall see afterward. Seeing therefore, we have Justification and salvation from no other then from Christ, and seeing we must make a difference and distinction between him and all other creatures, it followeth; that we must believe in him, and fasten our Faith as a sure Anchor of our soul upon him.

Let us see what are the Uses of this Doctrine, and how we may profitably apply it to our instruction and edification. First, seeing it is our duty to believe in Christ, we learn that Christ Jesus is true and eternal God, equal with his Father, to be worshipped and glorified together with the Father, & the blessed spirit. This serveth to convince the Heresy of the Arians, Jews, Turks, Persians, and sundry other Infidels, who deny the Deity of the son of God, and cast him down into the row and rank of mere creatures, who notwithstanding being in the form of God, thought it no robbery to be equal with God, at whose Name every knee must bow, both of things in Heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth. Therefore, we saw before, that the Apostle in his salutation, wisheth Grace and Peace to come upon them, to whom he writeth this Epistle, as well from Jesus Christ, as from God the Father. If Grace and Peace come not only from the Father, but from the Son, it followeth that he is God equal with the other. Hence it is, that he saith in the Gospel, Ye believe in God, believe also in me, let not your heart be troubled. And again, He that believeth in me, believeth not in me (to wit, an ordinary man, as they falsely imagined) but in him that sent me. And in another place, Believe me, that I am in the Father, and the Father is in me: I and my Father are one. So when Christ had restored sight on the Sabaoth day to him that was borne blind, he said; Lord I believe, and worshipped him. Whereby we see, that whosoever is without the Son, is also without the Father: he that believeth not in the Son, believeth not in the Father: He that worshippeth not the Son, Worshippeth not the Father. So then, this is a certain and invincible Argument of the Deity of Christ, that we are to believe in him, forasmuch as Faith is a Worshippe due only unto God.

Secondly, seeing it is a principle necessary to be holden of all men, that we must believe in the Son, we must put a difference between these sayings; to believe God, & to believe in God. For, albeit he that believeth in God, believeth God, yet it is not so on the contrary, everyone that believeth God, doth not by & by believe in God. The Devils themselves (as we shown before) do believe God, they believe Christ, they confess him to be the son of the Father, they know him to be the Judge of the Worlde, the Savior of mankind, the holy one of God; and yet they do not believe in him, they put no confidence in him, they look not for life and salvation from him, but are assured they are reserved to destruction. This maketh them cry out in the Gospel, Why art thou come to torment us before the time. And the apostle James saith, The Devils believe and tremble. They believe God touching his Nature and attributes; they believe Christ touching his Person, & Natures, and Offices: They believe the Holy-Ghost touching his Person and Gifts: They believe there is a Church and singular perogatives imparted to it, and bestowed upon it. And albeit our Faith must go beyond the faith of the Devils, yet they go farther then many professors of the Gospel among us, that have no knowledge of these things. So then, it is required of us, not only to believe that there is a Savior of the world, but we must believe that he is our Savior; beginning our salvation in this life, and perfecting it in the life to come.

This confuteth the Popish opinion, that holdeth, that we may believe in the creatures, as well as in the Creator: in the Saints, as well as in Christ: in mortal men, as well as in the eternal God. They teach that we may believe, not only the Church, but in the Church; not only Moses, but in Moses; not only the Prophets, but in the Prophets. We are charged to believe in the blessed Trinity, in God the Father, in God the son, and in God the Holy Ghost: but when the speech is not of the God-head, but of the Creatures and Mysteries, we are not taught to believe in them; and therefore we are no more to believe in the Church, then to believe in baptism, in the resurrection of the body, the Communion of Saints, and in the participation of glory. We are indeed to believe Moses and the Prophets, that they spake not of themselves, that their word is not the word of man, that they ran not before they were sent; but we are not to believe in them. We are indeed to believe Peter and Paul, but not in Peter and Paul. We are to believe the Scriptuers, but not in the Scriptures; for that were to bestow upon the servant the honor of the Lord, and to give to man that which is proper to the divine Majesty. We must believe in Christ Jesus our only savior; as for those that believe in any other, or seek salvation in any other then in Christ, whether in Saints, or in Angels, or in themselves, they believe not in Christ as in their only Savior. For he believeth not in God, who doth not place in him alone the trust of his whole felicity, who doth not put his affiance in him, who doth not depend upon him, who is not assured of his good will and favor, looking for salvation from him, and for deliverance from all evils.

Lastly, seeing it is necessary for us to have faith in Christ, it is our duty to use all means to attain to this Faith. Many there are, which are deceived in thinking they have it, who indeed have it not. These suppose they are full of Faith, who are as empty vessels, and never tasted the sweetness of it, as may appear, by examining the common practice of our common professors, by these six notes. First, true Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word preached, as the Apostle showeth, Rom. 10. How shall they cal upon him in whom they do not believe, How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard, how shall they hear without a Preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent? This place is not unfitly called a Ladder that reacheth to Heaven, whereby as by certain stepes we climb up to heaven. God sendeth, the Minister preacheth, the people believeth. The same Apostle asketh the Galatians, Whether they received the spirit by the works of the Law, or by the hearing of Faith? But the Faith which many talk and boast of, is conceived and conceited without the preaching of the word, for they cannot abide it, they will not attend unto it, they regard not to hear it. True it is, if they be asked whether they have Faith or not, they will think it a strange question, and marvel that we should make doubt thereof, they suppose themselves to have a sound Faith in Christ; but how come they by this faith? They say they believe in Jesus Christ for their salvation, and yet they live in a perpetual neglect, and continual contempt of the public Ministry of the word. Such is their believing, as is their hearing; and their Faith is aunswerable to their attending. It is a great foolishness, & worse then madness, for any man to imagine to attain to Faith by any other means then God hath ordained. When God hath said, that the ordinary way to obtain Faith, is by the preaching of the word: wilt thou in the high pride of thy ignorant heart say, I can have Faith without preaching? This is to cross the ordinance of God, and to think thyself wiser then God. For, although all have not Faith that ordinarily hear; yet ordinarily none have faith that do not hear. If then we would have Faith, we must seek it as God hath appointed, where it is to be found; and when it is to be found, let us be diligent hearers, attentive hearers, constant hearers, and then we shall see the blessing of God upon us, that we shall be saving hearers.

Secondly, true Faith is also joined with Prayer to God, and with repentance from dead works: for how shall they call upon him in whom they do not believe? And the Apostle Peter teacheth, that Faith purifieth the heart. Paul exhorting the Elders of Ephesus saith, That he witnessed both to the Jews and to the Grecians, the Repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. It was the substance of Christ's Sermons, which he preached when he came into Galilee, The Kingdom of God is at hand, repent and believe the Gospel. But there are many amongst us that profess Faith, which have a Faith of another kind and Nature, it is not joined with invocation of God's name, they make no Conscience to call upon him, they have not the Spirit of Prayer, that crieth in their hearts, Abba Father: it worketh not in them conversion of heart, a turning of the mind, a change of life: they boast of Faith, but they remain the same men they were before, a dead life, a dead Faith; a profane life, a false Faith, that will in the end deceive them.

Thirdly, true Faith worketh in us an holy contentation in our estate, and teacheth us to depend upon God's providence, touching Food, Raiment, and all things necessary for this present life. This Christ our Savior teacheth us from the example of the Fowls of the Heaven, of the stature of our body, of the Lilies of the field, from the grass of the earth: what do pensive thoughts, distracting and distrustful cares avail to sustain us, or preserve our life? Wherefore, seeing the Birds are nourished, our stature is increased, the Lilies are beautified, the Grass is clothed by the power and providence of God, Shall he not do the same much more to you, O ye of little Faith? Faith therefore maketh us rest upon God, want of Faith taketh away all trust in him. But many among us, that will needs boast of Faith in Christ, want this Faith in his providence: for they dare not trust GOD with their life, they do not depend upon him for their living, they are afraid he will leave them, and forsake them, they do not believe he will be a merciful and gracious God unto them, they have not that affiance & confidence reposed him, that natural children have in their Parents. A Child doth not weary him-self with matters of the World, he doth not fore-cast for many years, he is not entangled and choked with earthly Cogitations, all his care is cast upon his Father, he trusteth upon him, he knoweth he will provide for him, and so passeth his days without distrust or despair. And shall we not be ashamed, to be sent to School to learn of little Children, that depend upon their Father, whereas we have not learned to lift up our eyes unto our Father that dwelleth in the Heavens, but use unlawful means and ungodly shifts to help our selves. A plain argument, that we have not that Faith, which we falsely imagine, and vainly imagine our selves to have.

Fourthly, true Faith is the Mother of love, and maketh us live in peace one with another; the Apostle Paul teacheth, That Faith worketh by love. And John in his first Epistle saith, This is his commandment, that we believe in the name of his son Jesus Christ, & love one another. But many that will seem to have faith in Christ, show no fruits of love toward their Brethren, they are not careful (if it be possible) and so far as lieth in them, to have peace with all men, they do not seek after peace, and ensue it, but live in hatred and contention, in malice and envy, and least of all do affect the children of God. An envious Faith, is no Faith; and therefore, let such men look unto it. Fifthly true faith is mingled with doubting and unbelief, with wavering and fear, and oftentimes strongly shaken and assailed as with a mighty Tempest. This we see in the Father of him that was possessed with an unclean spirit, he was ready to rest upon Christ, but he felt the fruit of his own corruption, the spirit was willing, but the flesh was weak, he found a fight within himself, between Faith and Infidelity. When he considered the infinite power of Christ, that was able to cast out Satan, and to bind the strong man he was moved to believe. On the other side, when he saw the strangeness, the continuance, the incurable disease of his sons, when he marked that the Devil took him, tare him, cast him into the fire to burn him, threw him into the water to drown him, and at all times sought to destroy him, when he beheld with the eyes of a Father that his child fumed at the mouth; gnashed with his teeth, pined away in his body, and was bruised in his bones, he was tempted with unbelief, and this made him cry out with tears, Lord, I believe, help mine unbelief. This is it wherein the Lord forewarned and fore-armed Peter, Behold, Satan hath desired you to winnow you as Wheat, but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not. He prayed not that their Faith should not be tried, but that it should not be destroyed, forasmuch as they must on every side be assailed. But the Faith of many is such, that they say they perfectly believe, and they thank God they never doubted in all their life. This Faith is no Faith, it is an idle conceit, a vain persuasion, a foolish presumption. Lastly, the true Faith increaseth by degrees, it is like unto a grain of mustard seed, which at the first is the least of all seeds, which afterward groweth unto a Tree, that the Birds of the Air come and build their Nests in it: and therefore, we must proceed from Faith to Faith. But many amongst us, that will needs be in the number of the faithful, never feel these Degrees of Faith, they see not any increasing or decreasing, any shining or eclipsing of their Faith; Nay, they never examine themselves whether they be in the Faith or not. They never consider whether they go forward or backward in the ways of Godliness: they can cast up their accounts every Weeke with the world, but they can suffer whole months and years to pass over their heads, and never once offer to make level with the Lord. If we will assure our own hearts, that we have this true and perfect Faith in Christ, let us observe the manner and measure of it, the steppes and degrees of it, how we walk by it, and labor by all holy means to increase it in us. Thus much touching the Object of Faith: Now, let us consider the Object of Love.

[Love toward the Saints.]

The meaning of these words, is first to be observed, and then the Doctrines are to be gathered, which the Spirit of God offereth in this place to our considerations. By love, we are to understand the fruits of love: mercy, consolation, compassion, brotherly kindness, relief, pity, and whatsoever fruits of charity we see them want & stand in need of. It standeth in the affection of the mind, in the words of the mouth, and in the works of the hand. By Saints, we do not understand such as are dead and deceased, but those that are living; not such as are of the Church Triumphant, but in the Church Militant; not such as are crowned with glory in heaven, but those that dwell upon the earth; not such as are enrolled in the Popes Register, and stand in red Letters in the Popish Calendar; but the faithful, whose Names are Written in the Book of life, which are the true members of Jesus Christ. Thus much touching the true Interpretation of the Words. We see here that Love is described by the Object thereof, to wit; the Saints. For, as Christ is not the Object of our Charity, for our well-doing extendeth notvnto him: so the Saints are not the Object of our Faith, but as Faith hath respect and relation to Christ, so hath love reference to the Saints. Now, we have shown already, that Philemons love is commended toward the Saints, because he had a principal and special care of them. True it is, he neglected not others, but he was most of all mindful of the godly, poor, and distressed Brethren. We learn hereby, that the works of mercy are especially to be shown to the poor among us that are faithful, which may be accounted of the fellowship and Communion of the Saints. Howsoever all such as are poor, are in their poverty to be regarded, inasmuch as Christ hath taught us that the poor we shall have always with us, yet the Godly poor, that have piety joined with their poverty, are before others, and above others, to be respected and relieved.

In the performance of this duty, we see the practice of the Prophet David going before us, and leading us the way. O my soul, thou hast said unto the Lord, thou art my Lord, my well-doing extendeth not to thee, but to the Saints that are in the earth, and to the excellent: all my delight is in them. In like manner also, our Savior Christ describing the manner of the last Judgment, when he shall give to everyone according to his Works, declareth, that the fruits of mercy bestowed upon the members of Christ, being sick, imprisoned, hungry, thirsty, naked, and in necessity, are allowed as notable fruits of a justifying Faith, and of a true love, and accepted as done to Christ himself. So the Evangelist Luke testifieth in the Acts, that the multitude of them that believed were of one heart, and of one mind, they had all things common, no man accounted anything he possessed his own, but to serve the necessary use of the Saints. The Apostle having proved in the Epistle to the Romans, that we are justified freely by the grace of God, without the works of the Law, whereby we are at peace with God, cometh to set down the fruits of Faith, Chap. 12. Reioycing in hope, continuing in Prayer, distributing unto the necessities of the Saints, giving yourselves to Hospitality. Hereunto come diverse Laws which God ordained among his people, If one of thy Brethren with thee be poor within any of thy gates in thy Land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother: but thou shalt open thine hand unto him, and shalt lend him sufficient for his need. All these testimonies of Scripture do prove, that the poor which are godly are most of all to be succoured and sustained, as they, that for the most part stand in greatest need to be helped.

The Reasons hereof are to be considered. First, it is a fruit of our election, which we ought to assure to our selves more and more. The Apostle John testifieth this, We know that we are translated from death to life, because we love the Brethren: he that loveth not his Brother, abideth in death. We ought daily to gather arguments to persuade our hearts of God's love towards us, which we shall see by our love toward our brethren. The election of God is hidden in himself, the cause of it is not in our selves; but we shall not need to climb up to Heaven to know it, God hath left us a better, a more easy & certain way then to search into the secrets of God, that he hath kept to himself, if we enter into our selves, and see the effects and signs of it, we shall not doubt thereof, but rest assured with unspeakable comfort that we belong to him. For as the Lord knoweth who are his, so we shall know that we are the Lord's, if we find the fruits of election graven in our hearts, among the which this is one of the principal, our unfeigned love to the Brethren, the forgiving of our enemies, our delight in the Saints, our doing good to them that are of the household of Faith.

Secondly, such poor as be faithful belong unto Christ, and what comfort soever is ministered, what relief soever is shown to them, is ministered and showed to Christ, as Christ himself witnesseth with his own mouth, who is truth it self, that they should the more readily embrace it as the truth. For he telleth us, that it shall be said to us in the last day, that have helped the Saints, and refreshed their bowels, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my Brethren, ye have done it to me. This is a notable motive and encouragement to move us to this duty, to consider that our love is shown not to men upon the earth, but to Christ sitting in heaven, at the right hand of his Father. Hereunto cometh the wise saying of Solomon, He that hath mercy upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord, and the Lord will recompense him that which he hath given. Yea, he is so rich a rewarder, and a bountiful recompencer of that which is done to those of his household, that if a cup of cold water be given to a Disciple in the name of a Disciple, to a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, he shall not loose his reward. When one lendeth to an honest man that standeth upon his credit, he seareth no loss, he knoweth he will perform what he hath promised, and accounteth his word as good as a band and Obligation: how much more ought we to be assured of right good payment, when we have done any good thing unto the poor, forasmuch as we have not done it to man, but unto God. He hath given his word to see us paid, will we not take his word? he offereth to enter into bands, & to be bound in a statute, is not statute-law good with us? Albeit he be indebted to none, but all in debt to him, yet he offereth himself as a pledge, and becometh surety for the money, who is so good a paymaster, that he will not only restore the principal, but pay the hire and profit to him that hath lent it, both in this life, and abundantly in the life to come.

Thirdly, we are bound to follow the example of our heavenly father, to love as he loveth; to love most where he loveth most of all; and least, where he loveth least of all. Now, he loveth all his creatures, which are the works of his hands, He saw them all when they were made, and loe they were all exceeding good: but he especially loveth mankind, Whom he created in his own Image, according to his likeness: and yet most especially he loveth the faithful, upon whom he bestoweth the riches of his love, and hideth not the secrets of his kingdom from them; yea, he hath given them his own son to be their Wisdom, Justification, Sanctification, and Redemption unto them, howe should he not with him give them all things else? This the Apostle teacheth, warning us to Trust in the living God, which is the Savior of all men, especially of those that believe. Here is a pattern and president for us to follow, that we may be like our Heavenly Father; we must love all mankind, but we must most entirely and dearly respect the godly: we must love all the poor, but the poor that are faithful we must love most of all. If we must bestow labor upon barren ground, we must not leave the fruitful untilled: and if we must cast our Bread upon the Waters where it may seem to be lost, we must not deny it to the living members of Christ's body, which are our Brethren.

Fourthly, we cannot by our well-doing benefit God at all; our goodness can do him no good, our love cannot profit or pleasure him. For, as our wickedness can do him no harm, so our kindness can procure him no good. This he saith, and thus he speaketh in the Prophet, I will take no Bullock out of thine house, nor Goats out of thy Foldes, for all the Beasts of the Forest are mine, and the Beasts on a thousand Mountains: I know all the Beasts on the Mountains, and the Wilde Beasts of the field are mine: If I be hungry, I will not tell thee, for the World is mine, and all that therein is. We receive all good from him, we can return nothing back to him again, to do him good. This is the reason which the Prophet David teacheth, which moved him to join himself unto the people of God, and to profit them, because he saw he could not pleasure God, his well-doing could not extend to him. Seeing therefore the duty of love shown to the Brethren, are seals of our election, and are accepted as done to Christ himself, seeing we must follow the example of our heavenly Father, and that we cannot by all our goods help him; it followeth, that we must begin our works of mercy at the faithful, & cast a pitiful eye, & open a liberal hand especially toward thē.

Let us now come to the Uses of this doctrine. First, this teacheth, that there ought to be among all the faithful a communion of Saints, they are as a family or household among themselves. They have a near fellowship, they are near brethren, they are fellow members of one body, they are knit together by one spirit, they are called under one hope, they are made Christ's by one faith, they are made one by one baptism, they have one bread to feed upon, they have one cup to drink of, they have one table to meet at, they have one God that they worship, they have one salvation that they aim at. This the Apostle expresseth at large. Ephe. 4. Support one another through love, endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace; There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your vocation: There is one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, one God and Father of all, which is above all, and through all, and in you all. We are charged to have a care of all mankind, but as it is fit and convenient, that they which are of the same family, should be helpful and beneficial one to another, rather than to such as are of another family, which are not so nearly joined unto them; so we must have a care to do good to all the sons of men, but it is requisite, that those which are members of the same body, nay which are Sons and Daughters; Brethren, and Sisters, having the same God for their Father, the same Church for their Mother, the same Christ for their elder Brother, which are begotten of the same immortal seed, nourished with the same Milk, and gathered together in one hope, should be beneficial and bountiful one to another, rather than to those that are forraigners and Strangers, not linked to them by the bond of Faith, nor joined with them in the body of Christ. Wherefore, the Apostle saith to the Phillippians, If there be any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of Love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any Compassion and Mercy, fulfill my joy, that ye be like minded having the same Love, being of one accord, and of one judgment. He teacheth us to have one mind and heart, he admonisheth us to cleave together, and to hold together. We see how those of the Kingdom of darkness and destruction, do couple and combine themselves together against the Church and chosen Children of God; for doubtless we may say as the Apostle did, Against thy Son Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentles and the people of Israel, gathered themselves together. And▪ as the Prophet speaketh, They have consulted together in heart, and have made a league against thee, the Tabernacles of Edom, and the Ishmaelites, Moab, and the Agarims; Gebal, and Amalech, the Philistines, and the inhabitants of Tyrus, &c. So is it in these days, the ungodly rabble of profane persons have joined together, and make as it were a Conspiracie against the godly: the profane and Atheists, the Papists and Libertines set themselves against the faithful of the Lande, and open their mouths against heaven, they devise all horrible and detastable slanders to work their confusion. We find hard entertainment in the World, because we are chosen out of the World. We are hated of them, because we are not Companions with them in evil. We are reviled and slandered of them, because we will not follow all excess of riot, to the slander of our profession, and to the dishonour of God. Wherefore, the Children of light should company and consort together, being the Sons of God, heirs of his Kingdom, members of Christ, Temples of the Holy-Ghost. The unreasonable Creatures may condemn us. We see Cattle heard together, Sheep flock together, Fishes shole together, and Birds of a Feather will fly together: O what a shame is it then for us, to make a rent and division in the body of Christ, by separating our selves one from another in affection of heart, and practice of life! A true Christian man or woman is like a Candle, that consumeth it self to give light to others. So must God's people spend those gifts which God hath given them for the benefit of their Brethren. This Communion which we are to yield to the Saints, standeth in two things; not to speak of the Communion that we have with Christ our head, but one toward another. First, in affection; Secondly, in gifts. In mind and affections we must be of one heart, to mourn with them that do lament, and to rejoice with those that God doth comfort. We see this to be in the natural members of our body, if one member do suffer, the rest are pained; if one rejoice, the other are comforted. This duty the Apostle remembereth unto us, Rejoice with them that rejoice, and weep with them that weep: be of like affection one toward another. So the writer to the Hebrews moveth us to Remember them that are in bonds, as though we were bound with them: and them that are in affliction, as if we were also afflicted in the body. If our selves were in prison, we would have a sensible feeling of our imprisonment, and we would be ready to complain of the want of the fruits of love in others toward us, if we were not visited and comforted. Let us therefore practice that toward others, which we would have practiced toward our selves. This must all true Christians have in mind, that they must have tender hearts and compassionate affections, putting on the bowels of mercy and commiseration in regard of the miseries that befall the Church in general, or our Brethren in particular. Christ Jesus is touched with a feeling of their miseries, and accounteth them as done to himself, as appeareth when he said, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? This reproveth those that weep when the Church rejoiceth, or rejoice when the Church weepeth. The Prophet Amos complaineth of this deadness of heart in his days, The people drank wine in bowls, they anointed themselves with the chief ointments, they stretched themselves upon Beds of Ivory, but no man was sorry for the affliction of Joseph. If we be not touched with a sight & sense of the Churches miseries, it is a plain argument that we are dead members, not living; rotten members, not sound; senseless members, not feeling. The second part of the Communion of the Saints, standeth in the communication of gifts. The gifts of God to be imparted to our Brethren, are of two sorts. For, as we consist of two parts, the soul and the body, so the gifts are of two kinds, Spiritual graces, and temporal Blessings. We must bestow upon them spiritual gifts, procuring their good, by example, exhortation, comfort, prayer, reproof. We are willed to exhort one another, while it is called today: we are admonished, when any man is fallen by occasion into any fault, as spiritual men to restore such a one with meekness, considering out selves, least we also be tempted. Touching temporal blessings, we must be ready & content to bestow such goods as God hath bestowed upon us, for the good of our fellow-members. If we have this worlds good, we must not hide our compassion from them, for then we cannot assure our selves that the love of God dwelleth in us.

Secondly, seeing we are charged to provide for the goodly poor, and not to see them want, it teacheth that we are all the Lord's Stewards, to dispense and dispose his blessings to others. We hold all that we have of him, and we hold all at his will, and during his pleasure: he may thrust us out of our houses when he listeth. For properly we are not Lord's, but Tenants▪ not Owners, but Stewards; not Possessors, but Borrowers; and whatsoever we enjoy, it is not ours only, but ours, and the poor's; they have their share and portion with us. A Christian man, though he be the freest man upon the earth, yet he is a Servant to all, especially to the Church of God. A Christian man, is only a Free-man; for he hath Christian liberty belonging •o him, And he whom Christ maketh free, he is free indeed. He is freed from •he curse of the Law, from the bond of perfect righteousness, from the burden of Ceremonies, from the bondage of sin. He hath a freedom in the voluntary worship and service of God, in the free use of all the Creatures of God, to come to the throne of grace, with assurance to be heard for Christ's sake, and to enter into the Kingdom of glory after this life. On the other side, a wicked man is the greatest slave and bondman that can be. He is in bondage under sin. He is subject to all punishments temporal and eternal. He is in bondage under the Devil, who keepeth all impenitent sinners in his snares to do his his will. He is in bondage under the wrath of God. But to let this pass, howsoever the faithful are free men, yet they are not only the servants of God, but the servants of men, especially of the poor, but most especially of the godly. We are not to seek our own things, but to refer the labors of our calling, and the blessing of God upon our labors to the common good of the Church whereof we are members.

This condemneth two sorts of men. First such as seek for nothing but to settle themselves and maintain their own estates, to enrich themselves that they may live in ease and wealth, like the rich man mentioned in the Gospel: these make no conscience of swearing, forswearing, lying, dissembling, oppressing, and such like unfruitful works of the flesh. These men may allege and plead for themselves what they will, but in truth they never yet knew what the Communion of Saints meaneth. The Apostle giveth this precept to all the Church, Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of other men. And in another place, Bear ye one an others burden, and so fulfill the Law of Christ. So the Apostle James teacheth that we often ask, and receive not, because we ask amiss, that we might consume the same upon our pleasures. Secondly, it reproveth such as wast and consume the good creatures of God in riotousnes, in drunkenness, and in all excess, and when they are in brotherly love and Christian compassion admonished, do by and by answer, what have you to do with my spending? I spend nothing but mine own, I spend none of yours. Yes, thou spendest that which is thy wives, thy Children's, thy families, even that which is God's, for which thou shalt give an account at the great and dreadful day of judgment. For when Christ shall come with thousands of his Angels to make an end of all things, and say unto thee, Come, give an account of thy Stewardship for thou mayest be no longer Steward: wilt thou answer to the Judge of all the world, and to Christ that shall sit upon the Throne, thou hast wasted none of his goods, and abused none of his Creatures? Thine own heart, and thine own conscience, as a thousand witnesses, will give in evidence against thee, that thou hast taught thy tongue to lie. They have forgotten they are the Lord's Stewards, and shall give an account to him as certainly of the bestowing of their substance, as themselves take an account of their servants, of that portion of their goods which they have committed unto them.

Lastly, seeing we are debtors to all men, but specially to the faithful, it reproveth such as show the chiefest fruit of their love and charity upon the ungodly and profane, whom it were many times more charity to see punished then relieved, and corrected then maintained. Many there are among us that have no care or compassion of the poor Saints, though they see their wants and necessities, yet they can shut their eyes and pass by them as the Priest and Levite did, by him that was robbed by Thieves and lay half dead of his wounds. But they will oftentimes be bountiful, and show their benevolence upon such, as a great deal worse deserve it. We see that our collections and distributions are made many times amiss, and such as are most profane, are best provided for. Such as are idle Drones, beastly Drunkards, filthy Harlots, and their graceless bastards, are more regarded and respected, and have better experience of our Alms then such poor as are godly minded, heirs by grace, Saints by calling, and sons by faith. This is an invertng and ouerturning of the order that God hath set and settled to remain among us, for this is his ordinance which he hath left with us, While we have time, let us do good unto all men, but specially to them that are of the household of Faith. So the Apostle prayeth for the Thessalonians, that the Lord would increase them and make them abound in Love one toward another and toward all men. First it must extend to such as are members of the Church, and afterward to all others. 1. Thes. 3. 12. Loe here is an Ordinance of God perpetually and inviolably to be kept, as a Law of the Medes and Persians which could not be altered: we must do good to the distressed Saints and poor servants of God before others and more then to others. God indeed is good to all, and his mercy is over all his works, but in a special sort he is good to Israel, and gracious to them that are pure of heart. He saveth man and beast in body, but he saveth the souls of his elect forever: He doth not only preserve them temporally, but he will glorify them eternally. From hence such as are poor and have godliness laid up in their hearts must learn, to bear the heavy burden of poverty with patience, seeing that howsoever they are neglected of men in the daily ministrations, yet they are highly respected of God, and he vouchsafeth to leave special direction for them above others, to be sustained. The greater our poverty is, the greater should be our piety: that the more miserable we seem to the world, the more honorable we may be in the sight of God and of all good men. True godliness will sweeten the bitterness of the Cross, which hath the promises of this life and of that which is to come. But a poor estate joined with a profane life, and extreme necessity accompanied with extreme iniquity and impiety, is a double misery, a double wretchedness, a double unhappiness. Let this therefore comfort us, and temper the greatness of our affliction, seeing God doth care for us above all his Creatures; yea, before the rest of mankind, charging those that are rich in this world to make a difference between man and man, between person and person, between poor and poor, even such a difference as he himself hath made, who preferreth the sheep of his own Pasture before Goats; the Sons and Daughters of his own family, before bastards; the heirs of his Kingdom before Aliens and strangers; the vessels of honor, before the vessels of dishonor. As for the poor that are wicked, ungodly, lewd, and profane, so long as they live in their wickedness, ungodliness, leudnesse, and profaneness, they are no parts of God's family, they are bastards, not sons; they are members of the Devil, not members of Christ; they are cages of unclean Birds, not Temples of the holy Ghost; they are as dung and dross of the earth, not silver and Gold for the Lord's house. Seeing therefore God doth cast them down into the second rank, let not us advance them above their place. God is the God of order, not of confusion: and if we be of God, let us establish among us the order that he hath planted. Let us judge with righteous judgment, and lay all partiality aside. Let us not respect the poor because they are our friends, but because they are the friends of God. Let us not see to those that are nearly alied to us, but to those that are of the kindred of Christ, which hear his word and keep it, who are his Mother, Sister, and brother. Heereby they shall be encouraged in well doing, and we shall by our godly care of them, provoke them to greater zeal, and to a constant continuance in their profession. Wherefore let this be the rule to guide and govern us: Such are to be used best which are indeed best, let them have most relief of the body, that have most grace and godliness in the heart. Godliness giveth the preeminence, and ungodliness bringeth reproach and setteth a note of infamy upon his face that is defiled with it. True it is, others must have their portion and proportion: but it must be so rated, that they be in the first place provided for, that are most religious in heart, and painful in their callings, and thankful to their weldoers. For where true Religion hath taken place, it will make them diligent in their business, and serviceable to those of whom they have received good things. As for those that are idle, and unthankfull, they never tasted of sound Religion, and do nothing else but abuse their profession. Thus much of the persons to whom we must do good; that is, especially to the faithful.

[Toward the Saints.]

The faithful are here called by the name and title of Saints. By this word are all such called as are the true members of Christ-Jesus, whether they be living, or dead; in this life, or out of this life. But in this place only such are meant, as live under the covenant of grace, and fight the Lord's battles against Sin, the World, and the Devil. Now they are called Saints, or holy, for these causes: First, because they are separated by the mercies of God, from the filthiness and damnable condition of this world: they are gathered into a Church, and set apart for the pure service of God. Secondly, because they are purged and cleansed from their sins, by the precious blood of Christ. Thirdly, because they express the fruit hereof in holiness and righteousness, they are altered and changed from that which they were by nature, they are regenerate and created anew, they are renewed in their willes, affections, purposes, and practices. This is contray to profaneness. We learn from this title given to the faithful, that they which truly belong to Christ are Saints; that is, are sanctified, cleansed, and purged from their sins and iniquities by the blood of Christ, are delivered from the slavery and bondage of sin, and are enabled by the grace of God in some measure to serve him in holiness and righteousness all the days of their life. In this respect the Israelites, when God had chosen them out of the world to be his people and servants, are called a royal Priesthood, and an holy Nation. This name of Saints is usual and common with the Apostle Paul in all his Epistles. In the Epistle to the Romans he writeth to all Rome beloved of God, called to be Saints. So he writeth to the Church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, Saints by calling, with all that call on the name of our Lord Jesus Christ in every place: and afterward he saith, God is not the author of confusion; but of peace, as we see in all the Churches of the Saints. So he showeth in the Epistle to the Ephesians, that to him the least of all Saints, this grace was given, that he should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ. The Prophet David also saith, I will hearken what the Lord God will say, he will speak peace unto his people, and to his Saints, that they turn not again to folly. All these places do plainly prove, that they which believe in Christ and belong to him, truly may be called Saints and holy men.

The reasons are these. First, because they are there-unto called and chosen in Christ, they are thereunto justified and redeemed by Christ. For we are chosen before the foundations of the world to be holy, He hath chosen us in him, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love. It is the end of our calling, as the Apostle teacheth 1. Thes. 4. This is the will of God, even your sanctification, and that ye should abstain from fornication, &c. for God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. It is the end of our redemption, as Zacharias showeth, that the Lord God of Israel hath visited and redeemed his people, that we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies should serve him without fear all the days of our life, in holiness & righteousness before him. Seeing therefore God hath called us with an holy calling, and appointed us to be Saints, by his decree of our election, by the efficacy of our calling, by the virtue of our Justification, and by the power of our redemption, it followeth, that all the faithful may worthily challenge the name of Saints.

Secondly, the servants of God must be Saints, to the end there may be a conformity and likeness unto him that hath had mercy upon us. It is requisite that there should be a resemblance between God and his people. God is holy, it is one of his names, he is called the holy one. Christ is holy, and he is called the holy one of God. Seeing therefore God is holy that hath called us, it followeth that holiness belongeth unto us. The son beareth the Image of his father, and thereby is easily known whose son he is. If we be the sons of God, we must express his Image in holiness and true righteousness. This is it which Moses declareth and repeateth Levite. 11. I am the Lord your God, be sanctified therefore, and be holy, for I am holy, and defile not yourselves with any creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. Hereunto accordeth the saying of the Apostle Peter, As obedient Children fashion not yourselves unto the former lusts of your ignorance, but as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation, because it is written, be ye holy, for I am holy. If then he that is the God of all the Saints be holy, if it be one of his essential attributes, so that he can no more cease to be holy then he can cease to be God, the Saints themselves must be Saints, not only in name, but in deed, they must be transformed into a likeness of him, they must show the fruits of holiness, and be partakers of the divine nature, in that they flee the corruption which is in the world through lust.

Thirdly, the faithful are called by the name of Saints, that there might be a difference between that which we have of our selves, and that which we receive from God; between the old man, and the new man; between our first birth, and our second birth: between nature, and grace. No man is a Saint by nature, we have not holiness from our selves, but we are strangers to it, and that is a stranger to us; nay, we are enemies to holiness who love nothing else but profaneness, and desire to be anything else then to be Saints and holy. The Apostle putting us in mind of our first birth, that we might so much the more magnify the grace of God, which is marvelous and glorious in his Saints, saith, Remember that ye being in times past Gentiles in the flesh, and called uncircumcision of them which were called Circumcision in the flesh, made with hands, that ye were at that time without Christ, and were Alians from the common wealth of Israel, and were strangers from the Couenants of peomise, and had no hope, and were without God in the world; but now in Christ Jesus, ye which once were far off, are made near by the blood of Christ. And to the same purpose he speaketh in the Epistle to the Colossians, You which were in times past strangers and enemies, hath he now reconciled in that body of his flesh through death, to make you holy and unblameable, and without fault in his sight. Seeing then, that we are called to holiness, seeing we must as Children resemble our father, and seeing God will have a difference between our natural condition and the estate wherein we stand by grace; we may conclude, that all such as are in the number of true believers, are also Registered in the number of true Saints, sanctified inwardly by the spirit of God.

Let us now make use and application of this Doctrine unto our selves. First, we see plainly hereby, that there are Saints upon the earth; that is, men and women regenerate and sanctified. The prophet David saith, All my delight is in the Saints that are upon the earth, whereby it appeareth, that there are two sorts of Saints, one in heaven, the other on the earth: one sort is the spirits of just and perfect men, the other such as are clothed with flesh, who have a righteousness begun in them but are yet far from perfection: some that have already received their Crowns, that are already glorified, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; others that are yet in warfare against sin, the world, and the devil, and carry about with them the remnants of natural corruption. Therefore we profess to believe in the Articles of our Faith, the Cōmunion of Saints. So the Apostle saith, Dare any of you having business against another, be judged under the unjust, and not under the Saints. Do ye not know that the Saints shall judge the world? And afterward, Such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. This serveth to reprove all those, which in scorn and derision, mock the servants of God, and upbraid them with their profession, saying; O you are a Saint, you are of the little flock, you are an holy man; A young Saint, an old devil. Thus is Religion made a Proverb and common by-word, and thus are men come to sit down in the seat of Scorners: but hear this, O ye contemners of God! and know, that whosoever is not holy, is profane; he that is not pure, is impure; he that is not a Saint of God, is a bond-slave of the Devil: there is no mean between the one and the other. He that is not of the little flock of Sheep, is of the great Heard of Goats, and of the multitude of unbelievers that shall be condemned. He that entereth not in at the strait gate that leadeth to life, walketh in the broad way, and entereth at the wide gate that leadeth to destruction. He that is not a Saint before he dieth, is a Devil incarnate before his death. This is that which our Savior speaketh concerning Judas, Have I not chosen twelve, and one of you is a Devil? Now he spake of Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon, for he it was that should betray him. This Judas was not a Saint, and he is pronounced to be a Devil. Now choose whether thou wilt be a Saint, or be accounted a Judas, a Devil, a member of the devil. For, he that is not in some sort changed, renewed, regenerated, and sanctified in the inner man, shall never see life. If we begin not the way to salvation in this world, we shall never be received into glory in the world to come. This is the Doctrine which Christ preacheth to Nichodemus, Verily, verily. I say unto thee, except that a man be borne of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. So the Apostle saith, If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye mortify the deeds of the body by the spirit, ye shall live: for as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God. And in another place, Thus we judge, that if one be dead, and he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again. Sanctification goeth always before glorification. Everyone would be glorified, but everyone will not be sanctified: everyone would live with God, but everyone will not die to sin: everyone would receive the victory, but everyone will not fight the battle. But let us not be deceived, God is not mocked. If we would attain to salvation, we must first have sanctification, we must be Saints in this life; if we look to be Saints in glory hereafter; we must be Saints upon the earth, if we would be Saints in heaven; we must first make a beginning, before we can come to the ending. We must take pains, we must labor hard, and sweat much, before we can come to our journey's end.

Let us therefore take heed we do not make a mock of the Saints, least we mock at our own sanctification, and consequently neglect, nay despise our own salvation. If we make any account of holiness of life, let us not cast it out as a reproach, to be holy. Let us consider, that this is the will of God, even our sanctification; it is not therefore his will that we should delight in profaneness, and ungodliness. And as for those that are scorned and abused, or rather not they, indeed, or their persons flouted and contemned, but their Faith, their Religion, their Sanctification: let them not hang down their heads, and be discouraged, but walk boldly through good report and evil report, and be so far from shrinking back for these taunts & revilings, that rather we should prepare our selves for an harder battle, & an hotter encounter. We have not yet resisted unto blood. Remember what our Lord and Master hath endured, the reproach of the world, the slanders of the ungodly, the mockings of the malicious, the shame of the cross, and what not. We must not look to fare better than he, we must not think to be entertained otherwise than he was. If this be the worst that they can say by us, if this be the greatest fault they can report of us, that we are Saints and holy persons, let us not be discomfited, but rather comforted herein, that God is glorified in us, his name is honored, and the mouth of Iniquity is stopped, having nothing to detect us off, nothing to object against us. The enemies of Daniel, howsoever they watched all occasions and sought all opportunities to betray him and destroy him, yet the greatest crime they had to charge him withal, was, that he prayed to his God three times a day, and made supplication unto him. The Chaldeans had no other fault to charge the Jews to have committed, then that they would not bow down unto an Idol. If they could have found any other matter to accuse them of, as Malefactors, their malice was so great to their profession and to their persons, for their professions sake, that they would not have spared and held their peace. But this was the glory of these servants of God, that they suffered not for their sins and deservings, but for their faith, and a good conscience. This was it wherein the Church and faithful comforted themselves, Psal. 44. If we have forgotten the name of our God, and holden up our hands to a strange God, shall not God search this out? For he knoweth the secrets of the heart: Surely for thy sake are we slain continually, and are counted as sheep for the slaughter. This is that place which the Apostle alludeth unto Rom. 8. Whereby he comforteth the people of God in their afflictions: whereby we see, what is the portion and condition of the Saints in this life: they are sheep, not wolves; they are afflicted, they do not afflict; they are killed, they do not kill: they are killed not because they have forsaken and renounced God, but because they would not forsake him and renounce him: They are slain not for their own sin, but because they would not commit sin against God. If this be our case and condition, that we are reproached for our righteousness and religion, and if we be railed upon for the name of Christ, we have cause to rejoice, in as much as we are partakers of his sufferings and shall be partakers of his glory; yea, blessed are we, for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon us, which on their part is evil spoken off, but on our part is glorified. Let us comfort our selves and our brethren with these things.

Secondly, seeing all the faithful living in the world are Saints, this serveth to convince the Church of Rome, who appropriate the word Saints to those that are dead, and honor none with this title that live upon the earth, but such as are departed out of this life, and being famous for miracles, are Canonized by the Pope, whom they account as a God upon the earth. Hence it is, that they add farther, that our Church cannot be an holy Church, because there was never yet any Saint or holy man of it, approved to be such by miracle or any other evident token. They renounce our Church, because it is no holy Church, and they conclude it is not holy, because we have no Saints that are in it or ever were of it. First, let us speak of our Saints, and then somewhat touching their Saints, whereof they boast so much, and in whom they glory so greatly. Touching the former, the Prophets, Apostles, and holy men of the first Churches, were professors of the same faith that we believe, as appeareth by the Scriptures, by which we offer to be tried in all controversies; but our Adversaries will not deny these to be Saints, and such Saints as have been approved by miracles. Again, we have in our Churches true believers, justified by the blood of Christ, and sanctified by the spirit of God, and therefore are Saints by calling, as we have shown before. We have the fruits of sanctification, as necessary effects of a living faith, we profit daily in repentance from dead works, we labor more and more for the full assurance of understanding and steadfast faith in Christ, for our redemption. But such as live in sin, and walk in the flesh, have not the spirit of Christ, they are not of our church, they are no true Saints; they may be among us, but they are not of us. As for the popish Saints which are found in their Golden Legend (so called) and stand in red letters in their Kalenders, it is no marvel if we do not account of them, when many among themselves do seem not much to respect them; and affirm, that the Saints canonized may be no Saints, and the miracles whereupon it is grounded, no miracles. And because the Church of Rome speaking of Saints do always mean such as are in the Popes Calendar, and of his canonization (who is now held to be the only Saint-maker upon the earth) and propound such to the people, to the honored and worshipped, let us consider a little what those Saints are, & whom they adore and call upon. Our Savior Christ accuseth and reproveth be Samaritans, Because they worshipped the thing which they knew not: a worship they performed, but they knew not what. But this falleth flatly and fully upon the papists heads, for they worship many fictions for Saints, & shadows for men; whereas there were never any such that lived upon the earth. It were easy to allege sundry of this stamp, but a few shall serve and suffice instead of many. Saint George is worshipped among the Papists, as a renowned Saint, but such a Saint as they report and receive this George to be, was never extant in the world, who is said to have killed a Dragon, that was so big, that four yoke of Oxen could hardly draw him out of the City, which sundry of their own writers esteem little better then a fable. Secondly, S. Christopher is solemnly adored by the Church of Rome, who is reported of some to be a man of twelve foot long, and of other to be twelve cubits high: this is he that went up and down to seek the Devil to serve him; for he said, I go to seek my Lord the Devil to serve him. If this were a Saint, he was one of the Deuilles Saints, whom he served, and called him Lord, and not one of God's Saints. The like we might say of S. Catherine, and infinite other, whom falsehood hath forged and devised, and superstition norished and retained. Moreover, their Legends of Saints are so full of fables and fooleries, that they do not only set them down for Martyrs, which never had being in the world, but they adore devoutly for Saints and Martirs, those which (by the confession of their wisest writers) were pagans & Jews, traitors & heretics, men of a wicked life, & of a doubtful faith: what was the soldier I pray you, that pierced the side of christ, but an Infidel? for otherwise he would never have thrust his spear so spitefully, and offered that villainy and violence to the body of our blessed savior; yea, it may probably appear & be gathered out of the scripture, that he was not only a cursed unbeliever, but a damned wretch & reprobate: and no approved history maketh mention of his calling and conversion, yet the blind ignorant papists do worship this soldier as a Saint, under the name of Longinus, what is this but to make Pagans and Infidels Saints; yea, when so many dead men's bones and blood, their relics and ashes, are worshipped in every coast and corner where popery reigneth; what assurance can any man have, that he doth not worship the bones & bodies of pagans & heathens? Gamaliell mentioned in the Acts, was an incredulous Jew, & a right Pharisee, as apeareth by the counsel which he gave to the Jews in the Counsel, fit for a Politician, unfit for a Christian; showing rather a wily & witty head, then a religious heart, & if he had believed in Christ, he would not have feared to confess his name; yet hath he a place among the Romish Saints, and reverently are his relics esteemed of them. How many of their English Martirs were devilish traitors, odious, perfidious, disloyal, seditious, rebellious, unfaithful to their Prince, & enemies to their country? Some endeavored to stir up foreign Princes against their Sovereign Lord, which no man can deny to be an act of treason. Some went about to stir up the Kings Subjects to rebellion, and stood at open defiance, and at the swords point with the Prince. Others, have been slain in the field in the midst of the rebellion which themselves raised, & among the rebels which themselves armed. Others were executed as notorious Traitors, for maintaining the Popes Bulls of deposing princes, and would by no means condemn them; none of them would promise to join with the Princesse side, and take her part, if the Pope should send an army against hir, to depose her person, to spoil her subjects,

& to invade hir country. Of this sort here set down, thus qualified and sanctified, are Becket, More, Fisher Forest, Sanders, Campian, Sherwin, Parry, Ballard, Babington, Someruil, and such like; who are canonized by the Pope, and agnized for Saints by the Papists: they pray unto them, and keep their bones and rags for holy relics, and worship them, whereby it appeareth, that they put those in the Popes kalender, as rubricated Martirs, and imagine them to be Saints in heaven, who by all likelihood are tormented & damned with the devils in hell. The time will not suffer us to make a Catalogue of these their Saints, but this may suffice to show, that the Papists honor diverse Saints, which never lived in the world, but are merely fansied and fondly imagined: others, that are doubtful, & not certainly known to be such as they are reported: others likewise, that were pagans in superstition, Jews in religion, Heretics in profession, traitors in practice, and wicked men in their conversation; of whose damnation in hell there is more certainty, then either of their faith in earth, or salvation in heaven. And thus we will leave them, their Saints, and their Saint-maker.

Thirdly seeing all they that belong to Christ are Saints, it belongeth to every man to try the assurance of his salvation, by the fruits of his sanctification. For hereby we may assure our selves that we are in the communion of saints if we lead a sanctified life. If we have our conversation in holiness, we shall have in the end everlasting life. The Apostle teaching that the foundation of God abideth sure, so that the Lord knoweth who are his, showeth how we shall know that we are the Lord's, even everyone for his own assurance must depart from iniquity. Hereunto cometh the saying of John in his first Epistle, If we say we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie & do not truly: but if we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth us from all sin. And Paul writing to the Romaines saith, If Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin, but the spirit is life for righteousness sake. We glory in the names of Christians, we would be accounted Christ's, we take upon us the Title of Saints, and yet we are not careful to bring forth the fruits of Christians, and to lead a sanctified life. All Trees in the beginning, when the world was created, were made fruitful, nothing was barren, nothing fruitless. If we be the Garden of God, we must be rees of righteousness, and bear much fruit even in our old age. Many that are barren in bearing good fruit, are too fruitful in bringing forth the unsavory fruits of the flesh, which the Apostle nameth, Gal. 5. who may justly fear the curse that God laid upon the Fig tree, and every day look to be hewn down and cast into the fire. It is not enough for us to be fruitful, but we must labor to be more fruitful. It is not enough to be holy, but we must be more holy. It is not enough to be Saints, but we must increase in sanctification. This the Prophet showeth in the Psalm, The righteous shall flourish like a Palme tree, and shall grow like a Cedar in Lebanon: Such as be planted in the house of the Lord, shall flourish in the Courts of our God: they shall still bring forth fruit in their age, they shall be fat and flourishing.

Where we see, that God's Children are never void of the fruits of faith, but have them in them to their endless comfort. Other Trees oftentimes fall to degenerate and grow out of kind; and if they do hold out, yet age maketh them decay and die, albeit you dignity, and dung, and water them never so much, it cannot keep them from wasting and withering; it is not so with the faithful, which are planted in his Church, as it were in his Garden, even in their old age they bring forth abundance and store of fruit, albeit they be never sold, yet they shall never be barren but yield a plentiful increase, being continually watered by the working of the spirit. To this purpose Christ speaketh in the Gospel, I am the true Vine, and my Father is the Husbandman, every branch that beareth no fruit in me, he taketh away; and everyone that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. And in the Revelation of John he saith, He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still; he that is righteous, let him be righteous still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still. On the other side, there is no comfort to profane persons, that are irreligious, that are mere natural men, that find no change in them, that are not bettered by the means afforded unto them from God, that keep the spots of the Leopard, and the skin of the Blackamoore continually upon them. These walk in the flesh, and savor nothing but of the flesh, and therefore of the flesh shall reap corruption. This is that which the Author to the Hebrews speaketh, The earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them, by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing of God: but that which beareth Thorns and Briars is reprov'd, and is near unto cursing, whose end is to be burned. Where he compareth those that continue in faith, and bring forth the fruits of faith to good ground, that answereth the labor of the husbandman; but such as forsake the faith, and a good conscience, he resembleth to evil ground; these bring forth nothing but the unfruitful works of darkness, as it were so many thorns & Thistles, and therefore are near to cursing & consuming. So the Prophet Isaiah notably expresseth this, There shall be no more there a child of years, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for he that shall be an hundred year old, shall die as a young man, but the sinner being an hundred years old, shall be accursed. The faithful in Christ's kingdom shall flourish through his gifts, & be blessed of God: but such as are unfruitful are accursed, & albeit they seem for a time fresh and flourishing, yet they are no better in the sight of God then dead carcasses, and stinking carrions. So that we see, there can be no comfort without sanctification.

Lastly, as all they that are in Christ, are Saints, so it is our duty to use the fellowship and to delight in the Communion of Saints, abhorring & renouncing, separating and with-drawing our selves from all ungodly and unlawful societies of men in the world. The delight of the Prophet was in the Saints. He professeth himself to be a companion of all them that fear the Lord, and keep his precepts. The conjunction & communion of the faithful is threefold, in piety, in amity, in glory. In piety, because the hearts of the faithful are joined together in faith, & in the fear of God. In amity, because they love together as children of the same father, knowing that hereby we shall be known to be the disciples of Christ, if we love one another. In glory, because they are heirs of the same kingdom where are many mansion places prepared for thē. If we desire to be partakers with the children of God in eternal happiness in the heavens (as all men will seem desirous of blessedness) we must be united to them in a godly life, & in Christian love: we are willing to hear of felicity, but we care not for the practice of piety, or for walking in charity. Balaam, that was hired with the wages of iniquity to curse the people of God, whē he saw the goodly order among them, cried out, Let my soul die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his. He desired to communicate with the godly in eternal life, but he would not join with them in a reformed life. But it is necessarily required of us to be linked to them in love, to be of one heart, and to be joined with them in godliness, to be of one faith, if ever we look to enjoy with them the same inheritance of immortality. Such therefore, as will neither be friends and familiars with them, but hate and abhor them worse then a Dog or a Serpent, nor be Worshippers of God with them, reforming their lives, & repenting from Dead-works, but follow the lusts of the flesh with greediness, and draw iniquity as with cartropes must know, that they shut out themselves from the kingdom of heaven, & shall not ascend with them into the mountain of God. Now, as the faithful delight in those that are faithful, and the godly in such as are godly, so they account it a great grief to be among the ungodly, where they shall see much iniquity, and hear God dishonored, & feel themselves many ways endangered. This made the Prophet lament his own condition, Woe is to me, that I remain in Meshech, & dwell in the tents of Kedar; my soul hath too long dwelt with him that hateth peace: I seek peace, & when I speak thereof, they are bent to war. These corrupt and contagious societies, are manifold in the world, which we are to avoid more then a place of infection that may endanger the body, among the which there is a knot and band of such lewd companions, and loose mates, as accompany together in drinking, gaming, swearing, whoring, rioting, revelling, and railing at all religion, and at the servants of God that are the professors of religion. This society in evil is to be found in every place, but this society is not of God, but of the devil: it is not the communion of Saints, but the company of sinners that make a practice of all wickedness. Again, there is another sort, who albeit they be not so fully & foully disordered, yet are as far from the kingdom of God. For, when they should accompany the faithful in the assembly of the Saints, they keep company with their catle, beasts, & swine. When the faithful on the lords day, are going into the house of God, they are going into their fields; when they should be with their brethren, they are looking on their bullocks, & show no more conscience to religion, then if they had no other souls, then their Swine or dogs have. A lamentable case, that such profaneness should be found in places where the precious word of God is preached, and yet it were easy to point out such prophan persons among us. These have the harts of Esau, who preferred a mess of pottage before his birthright. If these be busy in their bargaining and buying, or be with their friends & gossips at home, it is held no good manners to part company. Many of our poor brethren in other places would greatly rejoice to hear the word, that are barred from it, and would give god thanks if they might be suffered publicly to profess it with freedom of heart, and liberty of conscience, which we proudly and scornfully cast from us, as a contemptible thing. And yet if a survey of most of our parishes were made, & a view taken of them, it is to be feared, that both these sorts would take up the greatest company, and the fewest sort be found of those that with good & honest harts, attend to the word with diligence and reverence. These men that thus absent themselves from the church of God, deserve to be separated from the Saints and Sacraments, from the word and prayers, that they may learn not to be so profane, and be ashamed of their evil.

6That the fellowship of thy faith may be made effectual, & that whatsoever good thing is in you through Christ Jesus may be known.

7For we have great joy and consolation in thy love, because by thee Brother, the Saints bowels are comforted.

IN this place we have the shutting up of the entrance of this Epistle. We heard before how Paul gave thanks to God for Philemon, he prayed for him, & that daily: he praised greatly his Faith toward Christ, and his Love toward the Saints, that is, the poor and distressed Christians. These words do depend upon the fourth verse. For we must know that the Apostle goeth not on in the praise and commendation of Philemon begun in the former verse, magnifying his Faith and Love whereof he had heard by the report of the Church; but they agree with that which he had spoken before; namely, that he is mindful of him in his Prayers. For, if it be asked, for what cause did he pray for Philemon? The answer is, to the end that his Faith showing forth good fruits might not be found counterfitted, but approved to be true. We have therefore in these two verses, these two things to consider; first, what was the matter of his prayers, what was the substance and contents of them; to wit, that he might manifest his Faith, not to lie idle, but to be extended to others. Secondly, the reason why he made that, the matter of his prayers, & wherefore he prayeth that his faith might be effectual. Touching the first point, which is the matter of his prayers, he craved two things; first, that his faith might be made common to many, & the benefit of it might comfortably flow to the refreshing of many souls. For although faith have her secret and hidden dwelling in the heart, yet the fruits of it are imparted to others: Secondly, that it might be effectual; now faith is effectual when it worketh by Love, & bringeth forth good works to the relieving of others; as if the Apostle should have said, that thy Faith by communicating it self to others, & not remaining with thyself alone, may more & more show the virtue, force, and power thereof, in all goodness. Thus he prayeth not only for grace, but for the increase of grace to be given unto him. Then he declareth wherein this effectual faith standeth & consisteth; to wit, in the acknowledging of those good things which were in him, that so they may be brought into the light to be seen of all men, & to be felt of those that were in need. For the apostle James (as we have shown) calleth that not an effectual or living faith, but a dead & idle faith, which is not declared and professed by works. In the last place he addeth (through Jesus Christ) whereby he meaneth, that whatsoever good thing we have in us, we have it by christ without whom we have nothing that is good. Touching the second point, which is the reason why he prayeth for an effectual Faith in him, because the love that appeared to be in him, had wrought great joy and gladness of heart in him, which love of his he commendeth by the effect, The bowels of the Saints were comforted through him. This fact of his, the Apostle commendeth, first, by the consideration of the persons to whō his love was manifested, not to those out of the church, but to the saints. For charity to the Saints is to be commended, inasmuch, as it cannot be bestowed on a better subject; they do stand in the place of Christ, who accepteth of our love & liberality as extended toward himself. Secondly, his love is commended by the name of bowels, whereby the extreme necessity of the Saints is signified, who were (as it were) pained in their bowels and inward parts. Now, the great poverty & penury of those upon whom we bestow our charity, increaseth and maketh it the greater. Thirdly, the word of comforting, refreshing, and cherrishing the heart, is a matter of great commendation. For it is no small thing to comfort and strengthen the weak and feeble, and to give rest to the soul & body, that hath been tost & trobled with much affliction. Thus doth the Apostle set forth the fruits of Philemons love most effectually. This is to be observed of us concerning the method and meaning of these words, which are thus much in effect; If thou wouldest more fully know the cause of my giving thanks, and the remembrance of thee in my prayers, surely it is this, that as God in mercy hath bestowed upon thee a true saving faith, so my earnest desire and humble request is unto him, that the offices, fruits, and duties of thy faith may be more and more communicated and fitted to the benefit of the poor Saints; that so whatsoever good thing is to be found in thee through the grace and working of Jesus Christ, may be acknowledged, manifested, and published abroad, to the glory of God, the comfort of the faithful, and the provocation of others. For indeed thy love giveth me great occasion of much joy, because thou (my brother) dost not only cheer the Saints, and rejoicest them, but cause their very harts and bowels, even their secret and inward parts to be refreshed & rejoiced. But before we handle the doctrines arising in this division, it shall not be amiss a little to examine the force of the words, and the manner that Paul hath observed in the penning of them. First observe, that he saith not simply, thy faith may be made effectual, but [The fellowship of thy Faith] that the fruit thereof might redound and return to many. Secondly, he saith not barely [That his Faith might be known,] but [Every good thing,] that is; every grace that was in his heart, because when Faith is made known to others, and brought into sight & open light: many other gifts of the Holy-Ghost are made known, as Love, Patience, Liberality, and such like. For the grace of Faith is never alone in the heart, but is garded with a troop and company of all other virtues, and when it cometh as it were out of the doors, it cometh abroad with a band and train of all other graces. Thirdly, he declareth the author and cause of all these blessings, from whence they proceed, to wit; from Christ, that we should learn not to think or speak of any benefit, without making mention of Christ. Fourthly, he draweth an argument or reason why he prayed for the efficacy of his Faith, from the former experience of his Love, which was as effectual as his Faith, teaching that the experience of grace already given, should move us to beg and crave the increase of that Grace, and a perseverance and continuance in that grace: and therefore, we must not be so simple or senseless to imagine, when we see grace bestowed upon any man, that we have no more need to pray for the increasing and growing of that grace. For, we must know, that there are degrees of grace, there is a first Grace, there is a second Grace. Now, that Grace may be multiplied, and a continual increase and access to it may be added: we must make daily prayers, we must pray that we may have Faith, and when we have it, we must not be secure, but pray that it may be effectual and working by love. Last of all, in the commending of Philemons liberality, he doth not nakedly say, that [he gave to the poor,] but [To the poor Saints,] for all that are poor, are not poor Saints; many are poor that are wretched and ungodly, and have no part of sanctification: neither doth he say only, that he gave to the Saints, but he refreshed them; and not only that he refreshed the Saints, but the very bowels of the Saints. Now let us come to the Doctrines.

That the fellowship of thy Faith may be made effectual. Here the Apostle remembereth the matter and substance of his prayer, what it was that he besought and requested of God; where we see he affirmeth that it consisted in this, that the fruits of his Faith might be increased, & continually augmented. We learn from this place, that it is the duty of all men, earnestly to desire, wish, and procure the good of others, and to stir up our selves & others to increase in the graces of God's spirit. The growing and proceeding of our brethren in the best things should be sought for of us. When Moses had word brought unto him, that some in the host did prophesy; that is, had received notable gifts of the spirit, for the guiding and directing of his people, he said, I would to God, that not only these, but that all the Lord's people were Prophets, and that he would pour out his spirit upon them. The Apostle writing to the Thessalonians, saith, Furthermore, I beseech you Brethren, and exhort you in the Lord Jesus, that ye increase more and more, as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk, and to please God. They had increased already exceedingly, they had gained in the Faith, and were grown to a perfect age, they receive this Testimony and commendation, that they became followers of the Apostles & of the Lord; They received the word in much affliction with joy of the Holy-Ghost; They were as ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia, from them sounded out the word into all quarters; they received it, not as the word of men, but as it is indeed the word of God, which worketh in them that believe. Touching the times and seasons, he had no need to write unto them, because they knew perfectly that the day of the Lord should come as a thief in the night Touching brotherly love, they had no need he should write unto them, for they were taught of God to love one another: & yet he prayeth to God still to increase them, and make them abound in love one towards another, and toward all men; yea, he desired exceedingly night and day, that he might see their face, and might accomplish that was lacking in their faith. Hereunto tendeth the exhortation that Paul giveth to Timothy, Despise not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophesy, with the laying on of the hands of the company of the Eldership: these things exercise, and give thyself unto them, that it may be seen how thou profitest among all men. When the writer to the Hebrews had reproved the sluggishness of that people, he addeth, Therefore leaving the Doctrine of the beginning of Christ, let us be led forward unto perfection, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead-works, and of Faith toward God. All these places of Scripture serve to teach us the truth of this Doctrine, that we must all labor to perfection, that we may be perfect, as our heavenly Father is perfect, and endeavor to draw on others to perfection.

Let us see the Reasons. First, Christian profession is a way, in which men must not stand still, but must walk and go forward in the way, they must not stay in one estate, but be always stirring forward. So when the Apostle had exhorted the Thessalonians to increase more and more, he addeth, As ye have received of us, how ye ought to walk, and to please God. We are now in this life in our journey, we must not think that we are come to our journeys end, which cannot be before our lives end. As then they that have a great journey to go, do not rest till they come to their journeys end, so must it be with us, we must make hast on our way, and be swift in our race. The way which we are to go is our profession: the Traveler that entereth into the way, is every true Christian, the end of our journey is the entrance into life; the judge of our going, and giver of the victory, is God. He that standeth still can never come at his journeys end, it is he that goeth in his way, & runneth in his race, that shall receive the crown of everlasting happiness.

Secondly, Christians are compared to Children. Children are always growing in age, increasing in stature, going forward in knowledge and in Wisdom; if they do not prosper and proceed, we commonly call them and account them Vrchins and Changelings. So must we grow in grace, until we come to a perfect aged man in Christ. The Prophet speaking of the faithful that were zealous in the worship of God, saith, They go from strength to strength. So the Apostle exhorteth, that we should not be Children in understanding, but as concerning maliciousness we should be Children, but in understanding we should be of ripe age. He would have us as Children, and he would not have us as Children: he would have us Children in malice, but he would not have us Children in knowledge. We see they fall out for light offenses, because the mind is weak that ruleth and guideth them: one word will raise anger, and another word will make them friends, and therefore though they fall out quickly, yet their falling out is far from malice, and they are easily reconciled. Thus he would have us to be children, but in wisdom, in knowledge, and in understanding, he would have us to be of ripe age, & proceed in these gifts, as we do in our years. No man's life standeth at a stay, let us increase in the other as we do in this, that so the graces of God may be perfected in us.

Thirdly, we must so walk in our way, and hasten to our journeys end, that we may obtain the prize. He that over-commerh and holdeth out to the latter end, only shall be saved. He that giveth over, is a faint soldier, a weak Work-man, a slow runner, a feeble wrastler. We must so fight, that we may overcome, we must so work that we may rest, we must so run that we may obtain, we must so wrestle that we may receive the Crown, we must so prove Maisteries, that we may win the victory. Staying in one state is a token of reprobation and rejection from God, they are cast into a spirit of slumber and drowsiness, they sleep in security, and cannot see their way. This did the Prophet prophesy, and this doth the Apostle testify to be true concerning Israel, God hath given them the spirit of slumber: eyes, that they should not see, and ears, that they should not hear unto this day. Seeing then that our profession is the way wherein we are to walk toward the heavenly Jerusalem, seeing we must be like Children that grow in age and years, and lastly seeing we must labor to obtain the Crown, to win the victory, to receive the price, and to get the wages; it followeth, that we all must endeavor to go forward, and to bring others forward toward the Kingdom of Heaven.

The uses remain to be handled, that we may have the profit of this Doctrine. First we learn, that God hath a just action and suit to commence against all idle bellies, and unprofitable Drones, that be Truants and no proficiencie in the School of Christ. The church of God is the School of Christ, he is the Master, all of us are or should be his Scholars. We are brought forth into the world, that when we come to years of understanding, we may be Scholars in his School. If any of us put our Children to a free School to be taught, if they should still stay and stand in the lowest form, and never a whit proceed in learning, we would judge them either void of ordinary diligence, or destitute of ordinary capacity. We look when we set them to School, that they should increase in learning. We have a common proverb, that Scholars of all other have the best conscience, that whereas others never think they have enough, they think they have to much for their money. But let us see how it fareth with us, who are likewise Scholars in the best School that ever was, the Church of God: and have the best Master that ever was; to wit, Christ himself. God hath put us to School to learn at the mouth of Christ, who hath committed us to Pastors and teachers, as to his Deputies to be instructed. It is required of us, that we grow in knowledge, in faith, in zeal, in obedience, and in all the works of sanctification. If we be good Scholars, we must grow forward and ascend higher, we must proceed from grace to grace, and from one step to another. But alas, how many are there in our congregations, who having lived under the Gospel, that offereth salvation to men all the days of their life, and continued ten, twenty, thirty, forty years, hearing the word of God sounding in their ears, yet are no wiser in Religion then a young Child, and are no forwarder then when they first stepped and entered into the School-house of God. I doubt not but they are wise in matters of the world, but in the book of God and in matters of their salvation they have no knowledge. They receive the grace of God in vain, and are Dunces and Dwarfes in this School of Christ; without growing and increasing in Godliness. They are not in truth able to say unto their own Souls, I have received some greater measure of knowledge, I have attained better strength of Faith, I have found some increase in Godliness, I have felt some care and conscience to please God. Nay we may truly say, that many are more ignorant in knowledge, more lewd in life, more backward in good things, more profane in heart, more contemning the word of God, and loathing the means of salvation, then they were in the beginning of their days. This is our estate and condition, most lamentable and fearful, and yet we can complain of Idle boys and sluggish Scholars, that think they take to much learning for their money, and never consider that we are the men, and that the proverb concerneth our selves. God will enter into judgment with us, and if we be not learners in his School, he will remove us and discharge us out of his School. It had been better for us that we had never known God, that we had never received his truth; nay, it had been better for us that we had never been borne, or been borne Turks and Cannibals, Pagans and Infidels, then to have the Gospel among us, and not to hear it; or to hear it, and not to learn by it: or to learn by it, and not to obey it and grow daily in the practice of it. This appeareth by the grievous threatenings denounced by Christ our Savior against those Cities where his word had been preached and professed, and his great miracles had been wrought and shown, Woe be to thee Corazin, woe be to thee Bethsaida, for if the great works which were done in you: had been done in Tyrus and Sidon, they had repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes, but I say unto you, it shall be easier for them at the day of judgment then for you. And thou Capernaum which art lifted up unto Heaven, shalt be brought down to Hell, for if the great works which have been done in thee, had been done among them of Sodom, they had remained to this day. But I say unto you, that it shall be easier for them of the Land of Sodom in the day of judgment; then for thee. He compareth here Corazin and Bethsaida, with Tyre and Sidon: likewise Capernaum, with Sodom; that is, the places where Christ had dwelled, where the Gospel had been offered, where many of his miracles had been manifested, with such Cities as never had the Law, never heard the Gospel, never saw the Prophets, never knew the Doctrine of salvation, but lived in ignorance and in idolatry. And in this comparison he teacheth that such Towns and Villages as have had the preaching of the word, and the ministry of the Gospel among them, shall receive greater punishment in the day of judgment then other poor blind wretches that never had these means offered unto them. We would all of us think it a very harsh and homely comparison, and far from all likely-hood of truth, if I should compare us, even us of Isfield, with Sodom and Gomorrah, we know how foul and filthy these places were, we confess they are loathsome in our eyes, and odious in our ears, we know that for their wickedness they were destroyed with fire and brimstone from heaven: and yet I say unto you in the name of God, from the warrant of his sacred word by which we shall all be judged, that if we live in this contempt of the truth that is preached unto us, and do not bring forth the fruits of the Gospel, it had been better we had been borne Sodomites and Gomorrheans, for our judgment shall be greater, and our punishment heavier, because our sin is heinouser. No sin greater then the contempt of the Gospel, as no mercy is greater then the peaceable enjoying of the liberty of the Gospel, and therefore no reward of sin shall be more horrible; So that we may truly say from the mouth of Christ, it shall be easier for Sodom in the day of judgment, then for our Village. Let us apply this to our selves, and lay it to our hearts to work in us true repentance. Corazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum had many privileges, and might glory as much as we in the favors vouchsafed unto them, and yet they are upbraided by Christ with their vnthankefullness toward the Gospel, so that the case of Sodom is made better. Take heed therefore least we contemn the Gospel, and so committing one of the greatest sins we make our selves guilty of the greatest judgments that can fall upon mankind. The contempt of the Gospel, hath brought the heavy hand of God upon the Jews that were God's own people. Let us not be high minded, we are no whit better: but rather fear least God spare not us, and tremble under his grievous, but yet righteous judgments, who spareth not those that are deer unto him when they sin against him.

Secondly, we are bound to use the means that may further these gifts in us, that is, the ministry of the word, which being reverently used, hath a promise of blessing. It is a light unto our feet and a lantern unto our paths, it setteth us in our way, and directeth us unto our iourneies end. The Apostle teacheth, that Paul planteth, Apollos watereth, but it is God that giveth the increase; to wit, by the planting and watering of the Ministers. The Husbandman tilleth and toyleth about his ground, he soweth his Corn, but he cannot make it spring up, nor send the early and latter rain. So is it with the Ministers of the Gospel, the Lord's Husbandmen, they must labor in his field which is the Church, that the people may grow in faith and grace. This reproveth those that attend not to the ordinance of God, with care and diligence, but neglect the work of the Lord in them. They will not suffer themselves to be ploughed and tilled, that grace may grow in their hearts, as Corn doth in the Fieldes. They say they increase and proceed in the ways of Godliness, but they will not use the means which God hath ordained, and therefore they do deceive themselves. He that heareth not at all, doth not grow at all: he that heareth negligently, groweth slowly in any good thing. For as we sow, so we shall reap. Again, this checketh the dullness and drowsiness of such, as when they have begun in the spirit, would end in the flesh, which say the word is profitable and necessary to gather a Church, but not to continue it; to begin faith, but when it is begun and begotten in us, we need not hear still; we have faith already by the preaching of the word; we shall not therefore need to frequent the preaching of it still: we have that wrought in us which the word is appointed to work. These men under a color of having faith, do scorn and deride the preaching of faith. But the word is not only the immortal seed to beget us, but wholesome food to sustain us: it is milk for such as are weak, and strong meat for such as are of riper years. He never had faith by the word, that seeketh not the strengthening of it by the word. It is not enough to have saith, but we must seek the increase and continuance of it; which is continued & preserved by the same means that it is bred and ingenderd. This it is which the Apostle Peter teacheth in his first Epistle, that being borne anew, not of mortal seed but of immortal, by the word of God, which liveth and endureth forever, we should as new borne babes desire that sincere milk, that we may grow thereby. Whereby we see, that he calleth the word immortal seed to regenerate us, and sincere milk to nourish us, so that we have as well our growing up as our first birth by it, and there is a continual use of the preaching of the word as well to men that are called aready, as to them that are to be called hereafter. For the end of preaching is, not only to convert us, but to continue us: not only to raise us up, but to uphold us: not only to beget us to the faith, but to strengthen us in the faith: not only to give the first life to us, but to renew us after our manifold slips and often infirmities. We are even in the state of our regeneration as a ship, which if it lie still without use will rot in the Haven, and if it be kept never so carefully, it will want rigging and repairing. So is it with everyone of us in this life, we have not attained to perfection, we always lack somewhat, we stand in need of renewing and repairing, we must be mending that which is impayred, increasing that which is lessened, restoring that which is decayed, and keeping in his course that which is rightly ordered.

So then we must acknowledge a perpetual necessity of the word, to increase in us the graces of Faith and Sanctification, which without use of the means are subject, if not to dying, yet to decreasing; if not to perishing, yet to diminishing; if not to withering away, yet to a languishing and loosing of those degrees that have been begun in us. Hence it is that the Lord saith, I the Lord do keep it, (that is, the Church which is the Vineyard of the Lord) I will water it every moment, least any assayle it, I will keep it night and day. It is not with the Ministers of the word as it is with men of other Trades, who when they have begun a work and are departed from it, though they return not to it in a long time, yet they find it in the same case as they left it. The Gold-smith that hath melted his silver in the fire, and cast a vessel in the mould, & begun to hammer it with his Toolles, if he lay it aside at night, the next day when he cometh to his work, he findeth it as he left it. The Carpenter that hath hewed his Timber, or the Mason that hath squared his stones in what sort soever they left their work when they departed from it, in the same they are sure to see it, it is not better, it is not worse, but as it lay, so it continueth. And thus it is in all other Sciences. It is not so in the Art of hearing and teaching, we do not always find the people as we left them, we labor to have them reformed and made zealous; yet they are no sooner departed, but the multitude of business, the strength of temptations, the corruptions of their nature, do so beset them and besiege them round about, whereby they are beguiled and ensnared, that they make the work of reformation more hard and difficult then it was before. This made the Apostle Paul say of the Galatians, that he travailed in birth again with them until Christ were formed in them, and was afraid least he had labored among them in vain, Gal. 4. 11. 19. This also made the Apostles consent and agree together to visit the Churches where they had preached the Gospel, to confirm them in the truth which they had received. For as we eat often for the restoring of the force of nature, and repairing of the decays of the body: so it is our duty to hear often, for the making up of the breaches and ruins that Sin and Satan have made in our souls. We see by daily experience, that after our repentance & the renewing of our minds, we are subject to stumble and fall into sin, and ready to lie long in it, as men cast into a deep and dead sleep, if we be not awaked with the Trumpet of the Lord in our ears. David was by the subtlety of the enemy surprised, and drawn to commit two horrible sins, Adultery and murder, he lay a long space securely in them, until he was by the Prophet Nathan roused up and recovered. Wherefore as there is a continual use and exercise of repentance, so is there a continual use of the preaching of the word, that we should not stand at a stay, but increase more and more, until we come to the fullness of the perfect age of Christ Jesus our Lord.

Thirdly, seeing we should desire our own profit and others, it condemneth three sortes of men: first, such as stand at a stay: secondly, such as go backward: thirdly, such as envy the good and growth of others in the best things. Touching the first, we have many that stand still and move not, they are cast as it were into a dead sleep, call and cry unto them, lift up thy voice as a Trumpet, they have no ears to hear. If one come to a sick man, and feel his pulses, yet cannot perceive them to beat or stir, we will say he is near unto death, or in some ecstasy: so is it with such as have the word of God preached unto them, if they be not moved by it to go forward, but we find them at the years end, where they were at the beginning, it is an evident sign of a spiritual lethargy and slumber, and that they are in danger of death. He is accounted an evil scholar that learneth not somewhat every day, but many thousands remain in the school-house of Christ, that are so far from profiting every day, that they suffer whole weeks and months, and years to pass over their heads, without calling themselves to an account what they have learned that they knew not before, and wherein they yield obedience which they practiced not before. If a man should ask them, whether they have bettered their knowledge, increased their faith, furthered their sanctification more this year then before, they cannot yield a reckoning of any access is come to any of their gifts. In this number are the greatest sort that live among us, they are standers, and not walkers: they are sitters, and not mouers; where you left them this year, you shall be sure to find them the next year, and many years after. They see the time of their life, and the years of their age proceed and hasten unto an end, yet they never endeavor to proceed in Godliness, and to hasten to God's Kingdom: whereas we should all provide, that as the outward man decayeth, so the inner man may be renewed; and as the body is weakened, so the spirit may be strengthened. Wherefore let all such know, that not to go forward, is to go backward: not to increase, is to decrease: not to labor, is to loiter: not to go before, is to come behind; and not to proceed is not to profit, but to loose all. Our Savior speaking of the servant, to whom he had given one Talent that digged it in the earth, and hid his Masters money, saith: Thou evil servant and slothful, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I strewed not, thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the Exchangers, and then at my coming should I have received mine own with advantage: take therefore the Talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten Talents: for unto every man that hath, it shall be given, and he shall have abundance, and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away. Cast therefore that unprofitable servant into utter darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Where we see, he went not backward, he lost not that which he had, but he kept his own, and yet he is called an unprofitable servant and is cast into utter darkness. So the Apostle reproveth the Hebrews, because when as concerning the time they might be Teachers, yet they had need again to be taught what are the first principles of the word of God, and were become such as had need of milk and not of strong meat. Secondly, it reproveth such as run a while and then give over, so that all their righteousness is as a morning dew. These are they which were zealous, but they return to their old sins, and start away as if they had never been the men. This the Apostle condemneth in the Galatians, Chap. 5. Ye did run well, who did let you that ye did not obey the truth? Hymenaeus and Philetus were held to be great Christians, and obtained a good report in the Church, yet afterward they fell away, putting away a good conscience, making shipwreck of faith, and saying that the resurrection is past already, thereby shaking the foundation of religion as it were a main pillar of the building, and so destroying the faith of certain. In like manner he complaineth of Demas a great professor of the Gospel, that he had forsaken him, and embraced this present world. Good beginnings help not without good proceedings. If a man have a long journey to make, what availeth it to go many miles, if he stand still in the mid-way, he were as good never begin as not continue. We see this in Lots wife, she went out of Sodom with her husband and seemed as forward as he, but in the end she looked back, and was turned into a Pillar of Salt. We must forget that which is behind, we must not pause in our race, nor stay to take breath, until we come to the end of our course, when we shall freely breath and rest from all our labors. We must therefore strive and contend, that we may out-go not only others, but even our selves. We must never stay our journey, but always hasten, and so every day amend our pace, that we run more swiftly today then we did yesterday, and tomorrow then we did today. This the Apostle teacheth, setting down the laws to be observed in running, Know ye not that they which run in a race, run all, yet one receiveth the prize. So run that ye may obtain. And again, If any man strive for a Maistry, he is not crowned, except he strive as he ought to do. We have in the holy Scriptures many laws to incite and provoke us to walk, to go forward, to run, to strive, to wrestle, but we have none to sit still, to be idle, to loiter, to be careless and secure, like to those that stood idle in the Market place, to whom Christ said, Why stand ye here all the day idle. It is the will of God, that we should always make strait steps with our feet in this life, that when we have kept the faith and finished our course, we may rest from all our labors. It is a woeful case, to run, and never to come to the journeys end: to labor, and yet to reap no fruit of his labor. This made the Apostle say, I therefore so run, not as vncertainly: so fight I, not as one that beateth the air. It is not enough to run, except we run well.

Thirdly, it reproveth such as envy the good blessings of God upon their brethren. For if we should desire their profit as well as our own, and their increase as well as our own, we ought not to repine at their good success in or heavenly. It is noted to the great praise and commendation of Moses, that when Joshua envied the gift of prophesy in the Elders, and would have Moses to forbid them, he answered, Enuiest thou for my sake? Yea, would God that all the Lord's people were Prophets, and that the Lord would put his spirit upon them. He cared not what became of his own credit and estimation among the people, so that God might be honored & glorified among them. The like mind was in John the Baptist, when his Disciples told him that all men began to flock after Christ, and to resort to him, whereby they feared the fame of their Master would decay, he said unto them, Ye yourselves are my witnesses that I said, I am not that Christ, but that I am sent before him: he must increase, but I must decrease. The like we see, when the Disciples of Christ forbid him that cast out devils in Christ's name, because he was not one of the Disciples: for Christ said unto them, Forbid him not, for there is no man that can do a Miracle by my name, that can lightly speak evil of me: whosoever is not against us, is on our part. Let us take heed of this envy, which is a grief arising of another man's prosperity, always joined with a secret kind of malice towards him that is envied. This is a wild plant springing up in the soul, which destroyeth true Charity, rejoicing at the evil, and sorrowing for the good that befalleth our Brethren. And howsoever envy be noisome and pernicious to others, it is more hurtful to him that possesseth it, it tormenteth his mind, it wasteth his body, it fretteth his mind, it shortneth his days, and it destroyeth his soul. It setteth him on work to backbite and slander his Neighbor, and to deny him all duties of humanity. So then, envy, hatred, and back-biting, always go together, as three Cankers, and evil sores, that consume the body, hurt the good Name, lessen the gifts, and repine at the goods of our Brethren. And if it be evil to envy the gifts of God, & our eye should not be evil, because the Lord's eye is good: Much more evil is it, to scorn, mock, and disgrace the gifts of God in his Servants, as profane Beasts, and Heathnish Atheists do in these days, saying; you are an holy Brother, you are a Saint, you are a man of God. This sitting down in the seat of Scorners, is worse then dwelling in the foul and irksome Cave of envy; and therefore, let us beware thereof. Let us praise the gifts of GOD, in whomsoever we find them, whether in Friend or enemy.

Lastly, seeing we should all seek to profit our selves and others in godliness, we must know that it is our duty to stir up the gifts of God in us, that we do not bury them as in a Grave: we must exercise the gifts that we have by continual practice. Use maketh men prompt and ready, want of use maketh men untoward. Let us take heed we do not quench the spirit, and grieve him. The spirit of God is in many respects resembled to fire, which purgeth some things, consumeth other things, and heateth other things. So doth the Spirit of God purge, consume, and warm. It refineth and purifieth us as metal is from dross, it wasteth and consumeth sin in us as straw and stubble, it kindleth in us the heat of zeal, and warmeth us when we are frozen in our sins. Now, as the Spirit is compared to fire, so our sins are likened to Water; Water we know will quench the Fire, Sin will quench the Spirit. Let us therefore blow this Fire, let us kindle the Coals of it, let us stir up the Brandes, and put more matter to it, that it die not. The Priests in the time of the Law, were appointed to maintain the Fire upon the Altar day and night, that it should never go out, because it was from Heaven, and they were forbidden to offer strange Fire. So the Apostle warneth Timothy, and putteth him in remembrance that he stir up the gift of GOD which is in him, by the putting on of his hands. But here some man may Object; If the Spirit it self may be lost, then much sooner and easier the lesser gifts? I answer, the Spirit of Faith and regeneration can never be quite lost, for the faithful and regenerate are begotten not of mortal, but of immortal seed; their knowledge is like the light of the Sun, the others are like the brightness of the lightning, and flashing in the air, which shineth for a season, and by and by vanisheth and fadeth away. True it is, the best gifts may decay, but not die; they may be weakened, but not quite wasted; they may be lessened, but not utterly lost. They may seem to perish, and be wholly gone in time of temptation, as we see in David, Peter, and many others, yet even then they remain in them, though not felt, as fire covered in the ashes, or as the light over-shaddowed with a cloud. This the Apostle John testifieth, saying; Whosoever is borne of God sinneth not, for his seed remaineth in him, neither can he sin, because he is borne of God. Where he teacheth, that Faith and Love of Holynesse are never lost, which serveth to the comfort of the Godly, not to nourish security of the Flesh in themselves.

[The fellowship or communication of thy Faith.]

Here we see how the Apostle in the matter of his Prayer which he used for Philemon, entreated for the communicating and fellowship of his gifts, that is, that they should flow and issue out, to the good and benefit, to the profit and bettering of others. This teacheth us, that the gifts and blessings of God, whether temporal or eternal, bestowed upon any, must not lie hid or dead, but be used and employed to the good of others, and so yield a fellowship and communion to others. Whatsoever good things we have received, we must have them, not for our selves alone, but for the good of others. This we are taught in the Parable of the Scribe taught of God, unto the Kingdom of Heaven, he is likened to an Householder, which bringeth forth out of his Treasure, things both new and old. His old and new store must not be kept to himself, but be brought forth, and serve for his fellow Servants.

So in the parable propounded, Luke 19. this appeareth; A certain Noble-man went into a far Country, to receive for himself a Kingdom, and so to come again: and he called his ten Servants, and delivered unto them ten pieces of Money, and said unto them, Occupy till I come. And afterward, the first came, saying; Lord, thy piece hath increased ten pieces: and the second said, thy piece hath increased five pieces. The Apostle likewise showeth, that all the gifts of Wisdom, Knowledge, Faith, Prophesying, the gifts of healing, the operation of great works, the discerning of spirits, the diversity of toongs, the interpretation of tongues are distributed to every man severally to profit withal, and for the good of the whole body. And speaking of such as have temporal things, he chargeth Timothy to charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God who giveth us abundantly all things to enjoy, that they do good, and be rich in Good-works, and be ready to distribute and communicate. All blessings therefore are to be communicated and distributed to others, they ought not to be laid up in a Napkin, or be buried in the earth, or be covered under a bushel, as the manner of many men is.

The Reasons of this truth, are to be sought out and considered of us. First, we are servants unto all, to do them good, and to further their salvation. True it is, the faithful are most free, being set at liberty by Christ from the curse of the Law, and from the Dominion of sin, according unto the saying of Christ. John 8. If the Son make you free, you shall be free indeed. Notwithstanding this freedom, it is a part of their dignity to be the servants of God, and a part of their duty to be servants to men, to seek their good, to procure their benefit, to further their edification, and to finish their salvation. This is it which the Apostle Paul setteth down, 1 Cor. 9, 19. Though I be free from all Men, yet have I made myself Servant unto all Men, that I may win the more. We are brought into the World, to do good to others, and to be as Candles to give light to others, rather than to our selves. This made the same Apostle in another place say, We preach not our selves, but Christ Jesus the Lord, and our selves your servants for Jesus sake. If then, the Ministers be the servants of the Church, and all men Seruauntes one toward another; we must in all things show our selves Servants, by serving the necessities, and seeking the good of all our Brethren amongst whom we live.

Secondly, we are members of the same body, and therefore in this respect should profit one another. We see it is so in every part of our body; the eye seeth not for it self, the head inuenteth not for it self, the hand worketh not for it self, the foot walketh not for it self, but they do these duties for the whole body. Thus it ought to be among all the faithful; if Christ Jesus be our head, we must be affected as mutual members one to another. So the Apostle teacheth, that as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of the body, which is one, though they be many, yet are but one body; even so, is Christ. And afterward, If one member suffer, all suffer with it: if one member be had in honor, all the members reioice with it. If then we had Faith to believe, that we are nearly joined together, one to another, as members of one body, we would faithfully employ our selves to the good and comfort one of another.

Thirdly, we are all of us Stewards and disposers of the manifold graces of God. For God being as a great Noble-man that hath a great house, ruleth all things in it by his Steward. So hath God committed his goods to us, and made us Stewards of his family, to Minister in season to all in the Housholde; and he will take an account how we use them, when it shall be said to us, Give an account of thy Stewardship, for thou mayst be no longer Steward. This is the reason urged by the Apostle Peter, Let every man as he hath received the gift, minister the same one to another, as good disposers of the manifold grace of GOD. Seeing then, we are made Servants, Members, and Stewards, to serve one to another, to help one another, and to Minister one to another, we are bound to respect the faithful as our fellow-servants, to do them good as our fellow members, and procure their benefit as partes of the same Family with us.

The Doctrine being thus cleared by store of witnesses, and by strength of Reasons, let us not pass from it, until we see the Uses of it. First of all, this teacheth us to remember and mind the benefit and good of others, and not only to desire, but to effect the same, as much as we can, especially their eternal good. It is a good thing to do good unto the bodies of our Brethren; but the chiefest good is to do good to their souls. There is none of us but have received some gift, and by the use thereof may do some good. God indeed with a liberal hand distributed his blessings, he hath not dealt couetously, niggardly, and sparingly toward us; but liberally, richly, bountifully. He hath given all his goods among us all, he hath not given all to everyone, but he hath bestowed some to one, and some to another, in one measure to this man, in another measure to that man. But howsoever the number of our gifts be small, and the measure of them little, yet no man hath so small a number, or so little a measure, but he may gain some glory to God the giver of them, and do some good to his Brethren by the use of them.

We see in the Parable, he that had received five Talents, increased five other Talents; and he that had received two Talents, gained other two also; and these are called good and faithful Servants. The Apostle Paul writing to the Phillippians, Look not every man on his own things, but every Man also on the things of other men. Heereby such are reproved, as are Lovers of themselves, invent for them-selves, care for them-selves, labor for themselves, and do the duties of their calling for themselves: these do not mind or mean any good to the Church, or to their poor Brethren, they care for nothing but their own advantage.

Secondly, seeing such are reprov'd as have gifts, and yet use them not but hide them, and so diminish them by ydlenesse & want of conscience. Such as use their gifts, do increase them; such as use them not, decrease and diminish them. It is the just judgment of God upon all unconscionable persons, that have received gifts in a great measure, & never employ them or bestow them to the profit of others; they have their gifts taken from them, their knowledge is diminished, their judgment corrupted, their memory decayed, their zeal quenched, their diligence abated. We see this in the Ministers of the Gospel, who are made able and apt to teach, who are filled and furnished with gifts answerable to their calling, to do good in their places, when they grow slothful, and spend their days without care and conscience of their duties, they are infatuated of God, and abhorred of men, they run into gross errors, and are made ridiculous even to children. This is it which the Prophet long ago prophesied, and threatened from God to fall upon these proud & profane men, O Idol Shepherd, that leaveth the flock, the sword shall be upon his arm, and upon his right eye: his arm shall he clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened. The like we may say also of the people, who have profited by the preaching of the Gospel, and gathered much instruction, to their great comfort, when they begin to stand at a stay, and to cease the course into which they are entered; all things go backward with them, they become luke-warm, they have less knowledge (I speak of many of our professors) then they had; ten, yea twenty years ago: their zeal is turned into coldness, their forwardness into backwardness, their Prayers into pleasures, their earnestness into negligence, their love into loathing, their hearing into dullness and deafness, their ears are stopped, and are made hard and heavy; they were wont to draw others to the exercises of Religion, but now themselves stand in need to be hailed and pulled unto them: they were wont to light a Candle, and lead the way to others, now their light is put out, and they remain in darkness themselves.

These men through their benumbing and backsliding, cause the name of God to be evil spoken of, raise a scandal upon their profession, bring an evil name upon the word, and open the mouths of wretched men to speak against true Religion, and all those that do embrace it. True Religion is a worthy work, and a great building, it requireth hard labor, great patience, much striving, and long continuance, whereof our Savior Christ putteth us in mind, when he saith, Which of you, minding to build a Tower, sitteth not down before, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to perform it, lest that after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to perform it, all that behold it begin to mock him, saying; This man began to build, & was not able to make an end. Wherefore, it standeth all Pastors & people upon, to remember from whence they are fallen, and to do their first works, lest God come against them in his anger, and vex them in his fore displeasure. The calling of the Ministry is an high calling; it is one of the highest callings; but if we make it a calling of ease and ydlenesse, feeding our selves, and not teaching the people, we disgrace our office, and make it most vile with God and men. This is it which our Savior expresseth under the comparison of Salt, when he saith, Salt is good, but if Salt have lost his savor wherewith shall it be salted? It is neither meet for the Land, not yet for the Dunghill, but men cast it out. All other things, though corrupted and spoiled, yet retain some other use; as we see in Wine when it is sower, in a Tree when it is dead and withered, and in straw when it is rotten, they are turned into other uses; but if the Salt be unsavory, it is good for nothing, it is hurtful for the Land, it is unprofitable for the Dunghil, no reckoning or account is to be made of it, but to be trodden under foot as unsavory. So then, such as are made Ouer-seers of others to teach the Church, and watch over the people of God, are reprov'd, being idle & slothful, and such as will take no pains in instructing those that are committed unto them. Let Ministets be diligent and watchful to do the duties of their calling: let them preach the word in season, and out of season; let them beware of sluggishness and slothfulness. Al such as are idle and negligent, are not worthy to be maintained, they usurp that hire which they receive, they have no right or interest to live of the Gospel, that do not preach the Gospel; they have no just title to eat the milk of the flock, that do not feed the Sheep, albeit they may claim their wages by the Laws of men, yet they are no better in the account of the high God, then Thieves and robbers that live by ruin and spoil of the people, who are partakers of all their goods, and yet like wrongful usurpers, they will not teach them in the word; yea the good ordinances of men require, that such as receive wages should do the work, and such as take the hire, should take the pains.

If any man have an house to build, if he see the Carpenter and Mason idle, and do nothing, so that the frame to be set up, is in no greater forwardness in the end of the year, then it was in the beginning, will he pay them their wages? Or if we have any business to do, will we pay the workmen before the work be finished, or if they let it alone and leave it undone? And shall it go worse with the people of God, then all other that hire laborers to labor for them? Or shall they alone be constrained, to maintain and sustain idle Lubbers and loiterers that can do nothing, or will do nothing, more then a Child of seven years old may do as well as themselves? We are the Lord's Builders, and spiritual Masons to build his Church; we are his husbandmen to Till his ground; we are Shepherds to feed his flock. It is out duty to frame his building, and every day to add somewhat to the building. It is our duty to Plough up the fallow ground, and sow the precious seed of the word among them, that they may grow thereby. It is our duty to feed his Sheep with wholesome food, and to lead them into green pastures. If we be not careful to do our work, there is no reason we should receive his wages; and if we care not to discharge the duty, we cannot with a good Conscience take a penny: if we will be at no pains, what warrant have we to make any gains by our ydlennesse. God hath provided for us a liberal allowance; he requireth of the people a cheereful performance thereof, and he chargeth the ministers to have a careful remembrance to labor in the Lord's harvest, that so they may eat their own bread, and not live by the sweat of other men's brows. It is a general rule delivered by the Apostle, binding all persons and degrees of men, Even when we were with you, this we warn'd you of, that if there were any which would not work, that he should not eat: for we hear, that there are some which walk among you inordinately, and work not at all, &c. Let all such therefore, as are negligent in the work of the Lord, and stand idle without employment, consider, that as God hath given no gifts to be idle, but to be used, so he would have no idle persons to be maintained, he doth grudge them their meat, he doth not allow them a Morsell of bread, he regardeth not though they starve, that will not set their hands to labor. For, he inhibiteth and forbiddeth his Church and people, to bestow anything upon sluggards, or to give them any succor, to the end, that the forcible weapon of necessity may contstrain them to set their hand to work, and also to busy themselves in the Calling which they profess. And this standeth with exceeding great equity, and good reason. For, what is meat, but the reward of Labor? And what is the Wages which they have, but the recompense of the Work? Or, what is hire, but only the reward of pains-taking?

Now, he that doth no good, but is unprofitable to mankind, and is not dilligent in his business, what right or reason is it, that he should be rewarded as a Labourer? Moreover, they are here reprov'd, that use their gifts to the hurt and hindrance of others. For, if such be justly blamed and condemned, as hide their gifts to their hindrance, and use them not to the benefit of others, they are much worse, that abuse them unto evil, that use their wit to undermine the ignorant, their wisdom to beguile the simple, their learning to subvert the truth, their knowledge to overthrow the faith, their riches to vndoo the poor, their credit to cross justice, their authority to disdain, their strength to oppress the weak, their power to contemn others, and every gift to the dishonor of the giver, as the Serpent did his wilnesse to deceive. These are all like mad men armed. It were better that a mad man had no armor and weapon, then that he should use, or rather abuse them, to the death and destruction of others: so it were better these men wanted these gifts, then that they should profane them to the dishonor of God, to the hurt of others, and to the bringing of a fearful judgment upon their own souls. It were better to do nothing, then to do evil; as we say, it is better to be idle, then to be ill occupied. It were better to let the sword rest in the scabbard, then to draw it out to wound the innocent; to let our riches corrupt, and our garments be moth-eaten, and our treasure be cankered, then we wear them with pride, & wast them in drunkenness, whoredom, and all wickedness. We must one day give an account unto God, both what we have received, and howe we have bestowed that which we have received. If the Merchant that hath had his Factor in a strange Country, wasting his goods committed to him on harlots, and in riotous living, will call him to an account how he hath spent his time, and misspent his goods; shall we not think that the eternal God will summon us before the bar of his judgment seat, to give in a reckoning & an exact account what we have done with such gifts as he hath lent us, and how we have bestowed them?

Thirdly, they are here also reprov'd, which bar and lock up such gifts of such, as might be profitable to the Church and Common-wealth, which suffer them not to employ their gifts, that desire to employ them, which do little good themselves, and yet hinder those that would do good. The Dog that lieth in the manger, will not eat the Hay himself, nor suffer the Ox that laboreth to eat of it. So we have lamentable experience of such men, or rather Beasts, as open not their own mouths, but have learned to shut the mouths of others that would preach the gospel. These are like to Amazia, that proud Priest of Bethel, that falsely informed the King against the true Prophet of God Amos, and charged him to hold his peace, he sent to Jeroboam king of Israel, saying; Amos hath conspired against thee in the midst of the house of Israel, the Land is not able to bear his words. And he said to Amos, O thou the Seer, flee thou away into the Land of Judah, and there eat thy Bread, and prophesy there, but prophesy no more at Bethel, for it is the Kings Chapel, and it is the Kings Court. These are like to the cruel Priests and Prophets, that suffered not Jeremiah to publish the word of the Lord, but stopped his mouth, and clapt him up in prison, and if their rage had not been repressed, and their malice restrained, they would not have rested, till they had put him to death, and brought him to destruction. He was as a silly Lamb in the jaws and claws of blood-sucking Wolves, and led unto the slaughter, he sought not any revenge against them, but only said, As for me, behold I am in your hands, do with me as ye think good and right: but know ye for certain, that if ye put me to death, ye shall surely bring innocent blood upon yourselves, and upon this Citty, and upon the Inhabitants thereof, for of a truth the Lord hath sent me unto you, to speak all these words in your ears. These are like to the chief Priest and Pharisees, who threatened and charged the Apostles that they should thenceforth speak or teach no man in Christ's name; but they answered, We ought rather to obey God than men. And again, Whether it be right in the sight of God to obey you rather than God, judge ye. These are like to that ambitious Diotrephes, mentioned by the Apostle John in his third Epistle. who as he loved to have the preeminence among them, so he prattled against the true servants of God with malicious words, and not therewith content, neither he himself receiveth the Brethren, but forbiddeth them that would receive them, and thrusteth them out of the Church. It is an horrible sin to take away the preaching of God's word from men. For whatsoever men pretend to excuse their sin, and what Fig leaves soever they patch together to cover their shame, they are guilty of the destruction and damnation of so many souls, as by them might have been instructed. Judas was guilty of an heinous sin for betraying and delivering the body of one innocent to a temporal death: but these shall be arraigned of high treason against Jesus Christ, who betray many thousand souls into the hands of Satan, and throw them into the jaws of death, even of eternal death. Such are the bloody Papists, which deny the use of the scriptures to the people, and debar them of the means of getting knowledge. And such are all carnal Gospellers, which think the preaching of the Gospel, to be a needless and superfluous thing, and account the people to have sufficient, so that they have a praying Ministry alone, and the service read distinctly among them. Let us therefore take heed, that we do not stop the course of the Gospel, or put out the light that would shine into our hearts, but rather further (with all our power) the truth that God hath set up among us, and spread abroad his saving health, that so glory may be gained to his name.

Lastly, it reproveth the neglect of employing the gifts of God bestowed upon them; that is, in the people. Whether God have given us spiritual graces or temporal blessings, we must take heed how we use them. We are ready to hear, and willing to learn the faults of the Ministers; yea, we can speak of them our selves, and talk of them all day long; we can tell that some use not their gifts to the good of the Church, others abuse them to the hurt of the Church: but never consider how themselves employ their own gifts, or what account they shall give to God that hath bestowed them. The benefit of them, is not in having of them, but in the using of them; not in the enjoying, but in the employing; not in the possessing, but in the practicing. Not to use them, is all one as if we had them not. For, as the covetous man wanteth as well the things that he hath, as those which he hath not, so do these sluggards receive the grace of God in vain, which have the use of those things they enjoy, no more then of those things which they have not obtained. This made the Apostle say, We desire that everyone of you show the same diligence, to the full assurance of hope unto the end, that ye be not slothful, but followers of them which through Faith and Patience inherit the promises. God is constrained oftentimes to take away the means that he sendeth for our good, whē we make no good use of them; he taketh away good Pastors, he sendeth & setteth up evil Pastors in their rooms, when we do not profit, nor are careful to make others profit by us. This the Prophet Zechariah denounceth from the mouth of the Lord, I will raise up a Shepherd in the Land, which shall not look for the thing that is lost, nor seek the tender Lambes, nor healt that that is hurt, nor feed that which standeth up, but he shall eat the flesh of the fat, and tear the claws in pieces. This also Christ our Savior teacheth in the Gospel, Whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away, even that he hath.

Furthermore, in the parable of the man, that going into a far Country, called unto him his servants, and delivered unto them his goods; we see that the evil servant, that having received a Talent hid it in the ground, & brought only a Talent to his Master again, hath that taken from him, and it is given to him that had gotten and gained five Talents. It is accounted an evil Tree, not that only which bringeth forth evil fruit, but that also which bringeth forth no fruit. It is accounted evil ground, not only that which beareth Thorns and Briars, but that also which bringeth forth no Corn for the use of man. He is accounted an unjust steward, not only that wasteth his Masters goods & converteth thē to his own use, but he that keepeth them safe and sound without employment, which he had received to lay out, to dispense and to distribute. He is accounted an evil servant, not only that selleth to others or reserveth to himself his Masters Corn which he should have sowed in the earth, that it might have brought forth great increase and a plentiful Harvest, but he that keepeth it by him, and in the end delivereth it back in the same manner and measure that he took it. So are we unfaithful servants, unjust Stewards, and evil bestowers of our Masters money, if we let it lie by us, and do not employ it to some gain. If then they be blamed and unrewarded that gain nothing, what shall they be esteemed, that loose the Stock, and dash away the principal. Again, if God have given unto us this worlds good, he requireth of us to do good with it, to help those that are in want, and to distribute to the necessities of the Saints. Hath God been liberal to us, that we should be hand-bound and heart-bound unto others? He hath left the poor with us, that we should be instead of God to them, as Moses is said to be given to Aaron in God's stead as a wise Counselor, so we are appointed to be unto them as a wise distributor, supplying that which is wanting unto them. How should God give much unto us, when for his sake we will not give a little. If we were in their case and condition, and had experience how great the misery of want is, and how heavy the burden of poverty is, we would be willing to be refreshed, comforted, and eased: Therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, even so do ye to them, for this is the Law and the Prophets. Whatsoever we do unto them, shall not be unregarded, or unrewarded: we sow it in a fruitful ground, and we shall reap it again with great increase.

Lastly, seeing we must employ that which we have received to the benefit of others, it serveth greatly to comfort such as have been careful to communicate to others those things that they have received, and to make them partakers of the same comfort that they have reaped by them. It is a blessed thing when men have endeavored to their power to benefit others, to exhort them, to admonish them, to comfort them, to refresh them, and have used our gifts to the profit of our brethren. O what a wonderful comfort and consolation shall it be unto us when we must leave this world and go the way of all flesh, to remember that we have not spared to do good to others, we have not failed to benefit others, we have not ceased to scatter abroad a part of that which we have gathered. Let us lay this to our hearts and apply it to our consciences, both we that are the Ministers and you that are the people. If we that are made watchmen over the City of God, and overseers of the Church, shall to the utmost of our power employ our gifts and spend our selves to give light to others, God will not forget the labor of our hands, but great shall be our reward in heaven, according to the promise mentioned in Daniel the Prophet, They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the Firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the Stars forever and ever. Hereunto accordeth the answer of Christ to the question of Peter, Who is a faithful Steward and wise, whom the Master shall make Ruler over his household, to give them their portion of meat in season? Blessed is that servant whom his Master when he cometh shall find so doing. We shall find more comfort of conscience and joy of heart, and gladness of spirit, when we depart this life, that we have been faithful in that little committed to our trust, and made others partakers of it as well as our selves, then if we had great abundance of earthly blessings, and were owners of the whole world.

The like comfort shall all faithful people of God find, that have distributed their Masters goods, they shall receive their reward, according unto their work. We see the harvest is answerable to the seed time, and they shall reap as they have sowed. Then they shall taste the sweetness, and reap the comfort of their labor, bestowed in applying themselves to the profit of others. Their last day shall be a blessed day unto them, when they shall find God as ready to communicate unto them his glory, as they have been to do to others their duty, and to bestow upon them the fruits of mercy, and the works of charity. The greatest good is to seek to gain their souls; the next, is to give to their bodies. On the other side, how uncomfortable shall that day of our departure be, how woeful and full of trouble, bringing horror of conscience, vexation of spirit, and confusion of face: Woe then, woe (I say) to all idle Ministers, and sluggish people, that when they are to be gathered unto their Fathers, and lie upon their death beds, cannot remember what good they have done, but shall be troubled and tormented with the consideration of this, what good they might have done, that they might have been fruitful trees, but have been barren; Good ground, but have been evil. These men have nothing else to muse and meditate upon, but how they have spent whole days and nights, whole months and years, in eating and drinking, in feasting and company, in pleasures and pastimes, in surfeiting and drunkenness, and what comfort shall their poor distressed soul, and languishing body, feel in that day, but cry out with a lamentable cry, and a pitiful howling, able to move the stones, and to pierce the rocks, that all is vanity, and then condemn their folly, that have placed their happiness in this unhappiness, and the joy of their spirit, in this sorrow of their heart. For, if that be true which the Prophet saith, Blessed is everyone that feareth the Lord, and walketh in his ways: when thou eatest the labors of thine hands, thou shalt be blessed, and it shall be well with thee: It is no doubt as true, that such as eat not the fruit of their labors, but eat the fruit of their laziness and loitering, are accursed. This is it which our Savior addeth, If that servant say in his heart, My Master doth defer his coming, and shall begin to smite the Servants and Maidens, and to eat and drink, and to be drunken; The Master of that servant will come on a day, when he thinketh not, and at an hour when he is not ware of, and will cut him off, and give him his portion with the unbelievers, & that Servant that knew his Masters will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes. Where he teacheth, that as eternal life is the reward of diligence, and discharge of our duty, so is eternal destruction the wages of all idle bellies.

Such as do no good to others shall know at the last that they have indeed done no good unto themselves. The more serviceable we have been to others, the more profitable shall we be in the end to our selves, and the comfort of all shall be felt in our hearts, when we shall say with the Apostle, I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the Faith, henceforth is laid up for me the Crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. A notable example hereof, we have in Obadiah, who was Governor of Ahab's house, when he saw himself in distress of famine, & in fear lest Elijah should depart, he called to remembrance the fruits of his Faith, the worship of God, and the favor shown to his children, and herein he was comforted. When Jezebel slew the Prophets of the Lord, he hid an hundred men of the Lord's Prophets by fifties in a Cave, and fed them with bread and water. Let us therefore never be without such arguments to comfort us, we shall find the benefit of them when we are in trouble, and especially when we are going out of the world.

[And that whatsoever good thing is in you through Christ Jesus may be known.]

The Apostle in these words, mentioneth this to be the cause, why he would have the gifts of God bestowed upon Philemon, to be communicated to others, because by that means, they might be made known to others, and acknowledged by others, and so spread abroad far and near. We learn from hence, that it is the duty of everyone to manifest and show forth, yea, to spread abroad and to speak of the gifts of God bestowed upon themselves and others. When God is good toward us, and distributeth his graces among us, we must be ready to confess and acknowledge them, when we feel them in our selves, or see them in others. This our Savior teacheth Math. 5. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven. Thus the spirit of God in the Scriptures remembereth the righteousness of Noah, the faith and obedience of Abraham, the patience of Job, the chastity of Joseph, the meekness of Moses, the single heart of David, the sincerity of Nathaniell, the labors of Paul, the repentance of Peter, the restitution of Zacchaeus. Christ Jesus publisheth the graces of God that shined in John the Baptist, he saith he was a burning and shining Candle, and that they would for a season have rejoiced in his light. The Apostle declareth that the faith of the Romans is published throughout the whole world. The praise of Timothy was noised and notified in the Church, whereof Paul putteth him in mind to make his proceedings answerable to his beginnings and to the hope that was conceived of him, Despise not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prohecie, with the laying on of the hands of the company of the Eldership. So likewise the fact of Mary, anointing the body of Christ, and working a good work upon him to bury him, is commanded to be made known, and not kept secret, Verily I say unto you, wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached throughout all the world, there shall also this that she hath done be spoken off, for a memorial of her. Thus the Apostle remembereth the effectual faith, and diligent love, and the patience of that hope in our Lord Jesus Christ which was in the Thessalonians. So he recordeth and commendeth the liberality that was in them of Macedonia toward the poor Saints at Jerusalem that were in distress. All which Testimonies serve to teach us, that it is our duty to publish the gifes of God upon us or our brethren, not to hide them: to spread them abroad, not to smother them: to make them known, not to cover and conceal them to our selves.

And albeit these examples may be sufficient to move us to embrace this as a certain truth, yet we have sundry reasons yielded in the Scriputre farther to confirm it unto us. First, to the end that God's graces being seen & known he may be glorified and blessed for them, who is the author and giver of them. It ought to be our chiefest desire and study, that God may have his praise and glory among us. This is that reason which Christ our Savior pointeth out unto us, when he commandeth us to show forth our good works in our life, that God our Father may be glorified which is in heaven. One end of good works is the glory of God. They can never please him, unless they aim at that mark, and tend to that end. This the Apostle Peter teacheth, Have your conversation honest among the Gentiles, that they which speak evil of you as of evil doers, may by your good works which they shall see, glorify God in the day of visitation. The glory of men and the magnifying of their name is not to be sought after; but of God, to whom all glory is due.

Secondly, we are to make known the gifts of God in our selves or in others, because the more they be known, and the farther they are spread, the larger praise and more abundant thanksgiving may be given unto God and yielded to his name by many. The rendering of thanks unto him is a sacrifice that smelleth sweetly in his Nostrils. The Apostle speaking of the liberality of the Corinthians, and exhorting them to the works of mercy, he useth this reason, that by beholding of them, not only the godly are refreshed, but God is glorified, That on all parts ye may be made rich unto all liberality, which causeth thorough us thanksgiving unto God, for the ministration of this service, not only supplieth the necessities of the Saints, but also abundantly causeth many to give thanks to God. The reason is direct, and of great force.

Thirdly, in respect of others, because the more the goodness and graces of God are spoken of, and the more largely they are dispersed, the mo by that means may be provoked & stirred up to an imitation and following of their example, and to a treading in their steps. This is another end that we ought to respect in publishing the mercies of God to draw others to do the like, and to provoke them as by an holy emulation of their godliness. Hence it is, that the Apostle stirring up the Corinthians to a bountiful helping of the Saints at Jerusalem, he setteth before them the example of the Churches of Macedonia, that they should follow them, We do you also, to wit Brethren, of the grace of God bestowed upon the Churches of Macedonia, because in great trial of affliction their joy abounded, and their most extreme poverty abounded unto their rich liberality. Having set before them this glass to look upon, and in it to behold themselves, that albeit the Macedonians themselves had heavy burdens laid upon them, and many charges of their own that pressed them down, whereby they were made poor, yea extreme poor, yet they hung not back, but were forward according to their power, yea, beyond their power to succor others. He exhorteth the Corinthians hereupon, That as they abounded in everything, in faith, and word, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in their love toward the Apostles, even so they should show themselves to abound in this grace also. Likewise he commendeth the Thessalonians, that they became followers of them, And received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy-Ghost, so that they were as ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia, and in Achaia. So when he hath proved that Abraham's Faith was imputed to him for righteousness, he addeth; Now it is not written for him only, but also for us, to whom it shall be imputed, which believe in him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead. So then, if we lay these things together, & consider the person of God, of the Church, and of others, that God is to be glorified, that the faithful must have their mouths opened to praise him, and that all others must be provoked by our good example; in all these respects we learn, that whensoever God bestoweth his gifts, and we taste of his graces, or others are made partakers of his goodness, we must be careful to make the same known to others.

The Uses are now to be stood upon. First, we see there may be sometimes a foolish modesty in concealing those good things which should be uttered and published, if they may further the cause of Religion, or provoke others to godliness, or bring glory to God. God is not ashamed of us, to be called our God, and to do us good; let us not therefore be ashamed to acknowledge him to be good unto us, and confess his goodness to the sons of men. We see how men are not ashamed to make known their ungodliness, and proclaim it openly with brazen faces; they glory in it as at a triumph, & never blush at anything. Let us therefore be bold to speak of good things, & account it our duty to sound out allowed the graces that we have received. It is to great niceness to hide God's glory and our gifts. This was the cause, why Paul mentioned his labors, his calling, his knowledge, his pains, his visions, his revelations, when the false Apostles extolled them-selves above him, to the reproach of his person, to the slander of his calling, to the disgrace of the Gospel, and to the dishonor of God. This compelled and constrained him not to be silent in his own cause, or rather in the cause of God and his Gospel. For, albeit his enemies seemed only to contemn him, and set his person at naught, yet the contempt reached farther, and thorough his sides they gave a blow and a wound to the truth it self, we must not be so dissolute and careless to neglect what everyone speaketh of us, but be jealous of our credit and maintain our good name, especially when our sincerity and God's verity are joined together. We see how Samuel before all the people protested his innocence in his life, and uprightness in his calling, because the Israelites had rejected him and brought his ministry into question. There was a time when Christ would not have himself and his works known; to wit, when the knowledge might hinder him and his preaching, but he commanded his Apostles to speak that in the light which he had told them in darkness, and to preach that in the house tops, which he told them in the ear. This serveth to condemn those that derogate from the godly, and diminish the graces that God hath given unto them, and bestowed upon them. For howsoever the notes of Godliness are stamped upon them, and the gifts of God do shine as brightly as the light of the Sun in them, whereby they are marked to be his, and known to belong unto him, yet they will lessen and extenuate them and as it were clip the Princes Coyne, that so they may be disgraced. This is a manifest note of a Child of the Devil, and of representing his Image. For as the names given to Satan describe his nature, so the word (Devil) in the originall tongue which the holy Ghost useth, signifieth a false accuser, a carper, a cauller, a disgracer, a slanderer, one that by all means seeketh to deface the truth and those that uphold and support it. Thus the nature of our spiritual adversity is notably painted and purtraied out unto us. His whole practice standeth in false accusations, wrongful imputations, and willful calumniation of God to man, and of man to God. He falsely accused God to our first parents, in the beginning, to envy their good estate, and therefore of malice forbad them the Tree of the knowledge of good and evil. He falsely accused Job to serve God; in hypocrisy, not in sincerity; with show of the body, not with singleness of heart; to be seen of men, not to approve himself with an upright conscience in the presence of God. These qualities of the Devil are to be found in all the wicked. If you talk and reason with them, of such as truly fear God, either they will censure them as Hipocrits, and falsely accuse them not to be the persons which they make profession to be, or else they will detract from them and diminish those gifts that God hath abundantly bestowed upon them. Christ Jesus himself could not escape this viperous brood, who was accused by the Devils offspring, and the Children of darkness, the Scribes and Pharisees, to be a Samaritan, to have a Devil, to be a Drunkard, to be a Seducer, a Blasphemer, and what not? So was it with his Apostles, they were filled with the holy Ghost, and endued with the gifts of tongues, yet they felt the smart of this rod, and were wounded with this sharp sword, they were accounted Deceiuers, accused as Drunkards, slaunderd as Disturbers of the common peace, and reviled as Traitors, and Rebels against Caesar, for the Disciple must not look to be above his Master, nor the servant greater then his Lord. These revilings and reproaches are not peculiar to Christ and his Apostles, but common to all the faithful and true believers in his name, they taste of the same cup, and have the like measure measured unto them. They are slandered and backbited, they are reviled and taunted for the truths sake. But let all such carpers and cauilers look to themselves and take heed to their estate, they resemble their father whose works they do, and they show themselves to be petty-Satan's, and very Devils incarnate. Now such as are the Children of the Devil, must look to have their portion with the Devil, and his Angels. Let us therefore be ready to magnify the mercies of God toward our brethren; let us speak of the praises of him that hath given them; let us remember what God hath done for us and others; and especially let us beware that we do not disgrace them and their gifts, which tendeth to the dishonor of him that gave them. For as Solomon saith, He that mocketh the poor, reproacheth him that made him: so is it true, that whosoever contemneth and despiseth, reuileth and treadeth under his foot the Godly, adorned from the Throne of God with the precious graces of his spirit, he reproveth and reproacheth God himself who hath given that annointing which they have received of him. Thus we see how we are to behave our selves in respect of God's gifts; we must not be ashamed to confess them, but we must be both ashamed and afraid to deface them, and so to defraud God of his honor due unto him.

Secondly, seeing it is our duty, when God hath been good unto us or others, to make known his goodness: we learn hereby, how the Saints of God may be rightly and religiously honored of us, and remembered to their everlasting praise. It is our duty to give thanks to God, who hath blessed them with his graces, and governed them by his holy spirit, and to pray unto him so to direct us, & dispose of our ways, that we may follow their godliness, & walk in their steps wherein they have gone before us. True it is, the church of Rome go a great deal farther, and teach us to go further in the honoring of them than God alloweth, & the word approveth. For they lade them with the spoils of Christ, & take from him the royalties of his Priest-hood, & therefore indeed they do not honor them, but dishonor and disgrace them, when they decke them with feathers that are not theirs. Is there any good & godly man living on the face of the earth, that could be content to have thieves and robbers spoil other men of their goods, and bring them unto him, and if they offered them, would he accept and receive them? If he would not receive them as his own, but refuse & reject them as belonging to others, how should the blessed Virgin, the holy Apostles, and other Saints of God, account those sacrilegious wretches to be their friends, which rob & spoil God of his honor, and thrust Christ Jesus our mediator from his office to bestow upon thē? It is their honor to honor the same God with us, and to worship him. And it is our honoring of them, to give all honor to God, by walking in those ways wherein they have led us the way, and by following the light which they have carried before us. And if we would know how to honor the Saints aright, and to give them their due, it consisteth in these pointes: First, that God be magnified and praised in them: our praising of them must tend to the praising of him, who hath advanced them, and crowned them with his gifts. God must be all in all to us, and his glory must be preferred and sought for of us. The Apostle remembering the History of his own calling and conversion, telleth that the Churches of the Jews said, He which persecuted us in times past, now preacheth the Faith which before he destroyed; and they glorified God for me. When they heard he was gained to the Gospel, they considered therein, the power, goodness, and mercy of God, and with joy of heart, they gave him thanks for it. Secondly, the Saints should be honored by an approbation of God's gifts in them, and by an honorable mention of them. For, seeing they have used the gifts of God faithfully, he will have their gifts praised and extolled, and the Saints themselves to be magnified & commended. So the Apostle mentioning his persecuting of the church in the time of his ignorance, addeth, But by the grace of God I am that I am, and his grace which is in me, was not in vain, but I labored more abundantly than they all, yet not I, but the grace of God which is with me. So in the Parable of the talents, they that used their talents well, & increased much by the use of them, do hear this to their great praise, It is well done good servant & faithful, thou hast been faithful in little, I will make thee Ruler over much, enter into thy Masters joy. Moses is reported to be faithful in all the house of God, as a seruanr, for a Witness of the things which should be spoken after. So the Holy Fathers are commended by the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrews, who through their faith obtained a good report. 3. They are honored of us by following of their lives, and by an imitation of their virtues, being as examples and patterns for us, to walk after. For this is the glory of the Saints, if we follow their Faith, Hope, Charity, Patience, Doctrine, and other like graces that have appeared in them. The Apostle willeth the Phillippians to be blameless and pure, as the sons of God without rebuke, in the midst of a naughty and crooked Nation, shining among them as lights in the world: and he addeth, Holding fast the word of life, that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither have labored in vain. And to this end doth the Scripture make plentiful record of the graces of God, given to the Saints, that our Faith might be strengthened and confirmed, and we encouraged in all well-doing. This is the right manner of honoring the Saints and faithful Seruants of God, when God is honored in them, and for them, when they are praised and commended, and when we are stirred up to good things by their example. As for Religious Worship of adoration and invocation of them; it is not due unto them, it is proper to God, and the Saints do not desire it, or accept it. Wherefore, it is a notorious slander of the Church of Rome cast out against us, that we contemn and despise the Saints, that we deface them, and set them at naught, whereas we honor them as God hath commanded them to be honored, and give them that reverence that he hath appointed. It were horrible impiety to speak reproachfully, or to think unreverently of them whom GOD the Father honoreth, whom the Son acknowledgeth for his Brethren and Heyres with him, whom the holy spirit calleth his Temple to dwell in. The Righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance. The memorial of the just shall be blessed. The Virgin Marie saith, He hath looked upon the poor degree of his servant; for behold, from henceforth shall all ages call me blessed. On the other side, The name of the wicked shall rot, and in the generation following, it shall be put out. But the Romain Church, under a false Title of honoring the Saints, do hide and cover all their superstitions, and bring in their merits and mediation, under color of doing reverence unto them.

Now, the Scripture hath fore-warned us, that nothing falleth out more often or easily, then to err and offend in honoring of the Saints. Christ reproveth the Scribes and Pharisees, who built the tombs of the Prophets, and garnished the Sepulchers of the righteous, yet they bare mortal hatred to the Gospel, and to the professors of it. And he reproveth the Jews, who magnified the memory of Abraham, and boasted themselves to be his Children, yet they shown themselves to be the children of the devil, and would not do the works of Abraham. But we give them sufficient honor, when we publish their praises and gifts, and follow them in our lives, as they followed Christ the author and finisher of our faith.

Thirdly, we must beware that vain-glory be not the end which we seek for. We are to give the glory to the Author, not to the Instrument; to God, not to man; to the Creator, not to the Creature. When Herod was magnified by the vain applause of the people, and honored for his great gifts as a God, Immediately the Angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not glory unto God, so that he was eaten of Wormes, & gave up the ghost. This is it which Christ objecteth to the Jews, How can ye believe which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh of God alone? Yea, this is it which he speaketh of himself, I seek not mine own praise, but there is one that seeketh it, & judgeth; if I honor myself, mine honor is nothing worth. This vain-glory here contemned and condemned, is as rank poison to infect, as a bitter root to corrupt, and as filthy mire to defile our best works, be they never so excellent. What more heavenly work, or profitable duty can we perform, then to pray unto God, and to call upon his Name, for the prayer of a faithful man availeth very much, if it be fervent; yet, if it be a Sacrifice offered with a vain heart, it becometh unfruitful. We ask, and we obtain not, because we ask amiss. The like might be said of alms & fasting, the one a fruit of Faith, the other a furtherance of Faith (for Charity testifieth, fasting helpeth our Faith) if we perform them in hypocrisy, hunting after the praise of men, not desiring the honor of God, we may have our reward from men, but we cannot receive any reward from God. They shall have the praise of men, they shall not have the praise of God. For, as the children of the Prophets among many herbs, gathered one that was bitter and dangerous, and shred it into the pot of pottage amongst the rest, who when they began to eat, cried out and said, O thou man of God, death is in the pot: So if among the duties we perform to God, we mingle the vanity of our own hearts, and sprinkle them with the darnel of our own glory, we may truly say, Death is in the work. In all things that we do, we must seek to set forth the glory of God. If any man minister (saith Peter) let him do it as of the ability which God ministereth, that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ. Likewise, the Apostle Paul giveth this precept, Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. If we aim at any other end, we miss the mark, and mar the work, how good and glorious soever, it may seem to be in the eyes of men. For, as God seeth not as man seeth, so he judgeth not as man judgeth: man looketh upon the outward appearance, but GOD pondereth the hearts. This is it which Christ spake to the Pharisees, Ye are they which iustifye yourselves before Men, but GOD knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men, is abominable in the sight of God. Let us therefore publish the gifts of God upon our selves and our Brethren, not to the magnifying of our own persons, but to the extolling of his praises; and let us so spread abroad our graces, as that we remember his glory, that wrought them in us by his Spirit.

Verse 7. [For we have great joy and consolation in thy Love.]

Hitherto we have spoken of the matter of his Prayer: now let us see the reason why he made this the matter thereof. For the Apostle might have craved and asked of God many other things for him of God; yet he desired that his faith might be communicated to many; and so be manifested to be effectual, working by love. The reason here rendered, is from the effect or fruit of his prayers, they were not uttered in the air, they fell not without profit & good success to the ground, but he felt great comfort and consolation wrought in him by the works of Philemon, performed to the glory of God, to the praise of his Faith, and with the approbation of the church. Here then he showeth, that he had occasion offered him of great joy and gladness, in regard of the graces of God, effects of faith, & fruits of true piety, which he heard and knew to be in Philemon. From hence we learn, that spiritual blessings and graces of God bestowed upon others, do give just occasion to the Saints of God, of great gladness and comfort. It is our duty greatly to rejoice, when we see spiritual blessings in heavenly things, given to the Children of God. This truth our Savior Christ teacheth in the Parables of the stray Sheep, of the lost Groat, and of the prodigal Son. The Shepherd having found his sheep, layeth it on his shoulder with joy, he cometh home, he calleth his friends, saying, Rejoice with me, for I have found my Sheep which was lost. I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven, for one sinner that converteth, more then for ninety and nine just men, which need none amendment of life. The poor woman having lost a Groat, lighteth a Candle, sweepeth the house, searcheth every corner, and when she hath found it, she gathereth together her neighbors, saying, Rejoice with me, for I have found the Groat which I had lost: wherevpon he addeth; Likewise I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the Angels of God, for one sinner that converteth. The Father of that riotousonne, which wasted his goods, hath compassion upon him, runneth to meet him, fell on his neck and kissed him, put apparel on his back, a ring on his finger, and shoes on his feet, reproved his son that envied and repined at it, saying; let us eat and rejoice, it is meet we should make merry and be glad, for this thy Brother was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, but he is found. Hereunto cometh the Thanksgiving of Christ to his Father, when he saw the increase of his Church, and the overthrow of Satan's kingdom, That same hour rejoiced Jesus in the Spirit, and said; I confess unto thee Father, Lord of Heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and understanding, and hast revealed them to Babes; even so, Father, because it so pleased thee. The Prophet David rejoiced with great joy, when he saw that the people offered willingly unto the Lord with a perfect heart, & he blessed the Lord God of Israel. When the Jews heard of the conversion of the Gentiles, & that the Holy ghost fell upon them, as upon themselves at the beginning, They held their peace and glorified God, saying; Then hath God also to the Gentiles, granted repentance unto life. When the apostle perceived the notable zeal of the Thessalonians, in receiving & entertaining the gospel not as the word of man, but as it is indeed the word of God, he witnesseth that they wer his hope & his joy, his crown & his glory in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming. Likewise the Apostle John rejoiced greatly, when the Brethren testified of the truth that was in Gaius, & how he walked therein, He had no greater joy then this, to hear that his sons walked in the verity. Whereby we see, there ought to be great joy amongst the faithful, when they see the Church prosper and flourish, and the graces of God to increase among them.

The Reasons are many that confirm this unto us. First, the glory & praise of God is much increased, which should comfort the hearts, & rejoice the spirits of the Saints. The more we abound with spiritual blessings in heavenly things, the more God is honored, and his name glorified. This the Apostle teacheth, speaking of the relieving of the Church at Jerusalem, The ministration of this service, not only supplieth the necessities of the Saints, but also abundantly causeth many to give thanks to God. Where he showeth his joy, that he received and conceived for their voluntary submission to the Gospel, and compassion to the brethren; this was a special cause, that God was praised; this ministered greater gladness to him, then that the Saints were comforted and relieved.

Secondly, the general good of the church must lead us to this duty, & cause us to rejoice, which next unto God should be dearest to us. For whē we see the Church increase, and many souls of many men & women saved, when we see their hearts converted, & regeneration wrought in them, so that they begin to live to God, who before in the time of their ignorance lived to themselves, to sin, to condemnation: who can have such hearts of Flint, or of Iron as not to be moved with joy, & even tickled with a sweet meditation of God's mercy, beholding the enlarging of the kingdom of Christ. The prophet reioysed to see the people willingly affected, & religiously minded to go to the house of the Lord, Because Jerusalem did thereby prosper, peace was within her walls and prosperity within her palaces. Where he showeth, that his rejoicing was for the wealth and welfare of the house of God.

Thirdly, the Ordinances and Laws of God are walked in and observed, & so his blessings procured and obtained. For, if we hearken & obey his voice, we have a promise to be respected and rewarded. Such as walk in the Statutes & commandments of the Lord to do them, shall be blessed in the house, in the field, in the City, in body, in soul, in temporal things, in spiritual things. Now, when God is obeyed, men should rejoice and be glad; and when his Laws are broken, they should be much grieved and troubled. The Apostle John writing to an elect Lady rejoiced greatly, that he found of her children, walking in truth, as they had received a commandment of the lord. On the other side, we see David's eyes did gush out with Rivers of tears, because Wicked men kept not his Laws. These Reasons, being duly weighed, and rightly considered, do teach us, that God's blessings bestowed upon our Brethren, must minister matter of joy, and great comfort unto us.

Let us now proceed to the handling of the Uses, that we may have the benefit of this Doctrine, and not suffer it to pass from us without profit. First of all, seeing God's graces upon others must work joy in our selves, we learn the truth of that article of our faith, which all profess to believe, but many do not understand, to wit, the communion of Saints. There is a double communion, one which we have with Christ; the other, which the church hath among themselves, & the former is the cause of the latter. For Christ our head, hath given himself unto us, whereby we have the right of adoption, the imputation of his righteousness, and a title to the kingdom of heaven. From hence, as from a fountain, issueth that communion which all the members, both in heaven & earth, have among themselves, howsoever severed in place one from another, howsoever the one sort be dead, the other living; & howsoever the one sort is triumphant, the other Militant. Our Brethren in heaven wish well to the Church, pray for it general, desire the perfect consummation of it, and crave the full and final deliverance of it from all troubles. The Apostle bringeth them in, speaking on this manner, How long Lord, holy & true! Doest not thou judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth. True it is, they know not, they see not, they hear not what things are done upon the face of the earth, and therefore they cannot pray in particular, for the particular conditions and persons of men. On the other side, we who live upon the earth have our conversation in heaven, our minds, our harts, & souls, are there; we do in our desires and affections converse with them, we pray to be dissolved, and to be with Christ. Our Communion among our selves consisteth in three things; first, in the affection of the heart; secondly, in the gifts of the spirit; thirdly, in the use of temporal riches. The first in heart, when we are so linked and coupled together, that we are like affectioned one to another, so that when one is grieved, the rest are grieved; and when one rejoiceth, the rest are refreshed. The Evangelist describing the estate of Christ's Church, saith, The multitude of them that believed, were of one heart, and of one soul. The Heathen wish well to their own blood and kindred, but we must wish well to all Christians, as to our selves; we must not only know & hear of, but feel their miseries, and mourn with them that mourn; we must not tell them as news, but lay them to our hearts. The second branch is in the blessings of God bestowed upon us, we must impart to our Brethren our spiritual gifts, we must teach them by our example, we must advise them by our Counsel, we must guide them by our admonition, we must stir them up by our exhortation, we must raise them up by our comforts, we must help them by our Prayers. The third part of our communion standeth in temporal things, when we are content not only to leave our superfluities, but even to spend our selves for the good of our fellow-members; we must be ready to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to harbor the harbourlesse, which are not only of our own flesh, but of our own faith; not only clothed with the same Nature, but adorned with the same Name. This is the communion which we profess and believe, and is confirmed and concluded in this place.

Secondly, we learn to desire the best gifts, that we may rejoice and comfort the godly. For, when we profit in good things, we cheer the hearts and minds of all the faithful. Every living thing hath his prospering & proceeding, and is known to have life in it by increasing from one degree of perfection to another. The grass springeth, the plant shouteth, the corn flourisheth, the tree groweth. If we have any life in us of God's Spirit, & be not as grass that is withered, as plants that are dead, as Corn that is blasted, and as trees that are plucked up by the roots, we must go forward from one measure of grace to another, from a lesser to a greater. This serveth to reprove sundry abuses, and to meet with many corruptions that abide and abound among us. First, it condemneth such as delight to offend, to grieve, and vex the Saints of God. For, if we should seek to rejoice and comfort them, and to Minister all occasion of joy unto them, then we are not to discomfort and trouble them, we are not to work sorrow and anguish in them. The estate of these offensive livers, is fearful, as Christ our Savior declareth. Woe unto the world because of offenses, for it must needs be that offenses shall come, but woe be to that man by whom the offense cometh: whosoever shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him, that a Millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the Sea. We ought to give no offense either to Jew or Gentile, or to the Church of God, for woe shall be to them that offend their Brethren, that grieve the Spirit of God, and cause the enemies of our Faith to blaspheme. Secondly, it reproveth such as converse only with the ungodly, and can be merry only in their company. The Children of God have always accounted it a great cross and vexation to dwell with such as are lewd in their course of life, and are bare and barren in good things. The Prophet saith, Woe is me that I remain in Meshech, and dwell in the Tents of Kedar. It is an heap of miseries, and a very representation of Hell, to be continually vexed, and exceedingly grieved with their wicked conversation. Just Lot was vexed with the unclean conversation of the wicked; for he being righteous and dwelling among them, in hearing and seeing, vexed his righteous soul from day today with their unlawful deeds. And in what place almost now can a man live, where all kind of vile and vicious dealing is not practiced, where all uncleanness of life is not used? There is great comfort in the society of the faithful, and not only great comfort, but great profit. The Wiseman teacheth, That he which walketh with the wise, shall be wise, but a Companion of fools shall be worse. On the other side, the company of the wicked is accompanied with danger. It is a presumption of our own strength, to thrust our selves among wicked companions. Such as are continually in the Sun, must needs be Sun-burnt. Such as walk in the mist, must needs be berayed: such as touch pitch, cannot but be defiled: so, such as abide in bad company, live in places of danger, by reason of the infection of sin, of the weakness of the flesh, of the forsaking of God, and of the power and liberty that Satan hath in such places where he setteth up his Throne. For wheresoever sin is practiced, defended, and maintained, where it covereth the earth as water doth the Sea, there the Devil reigneth; there he keepeth his court, there he hath his residence & remaineth, there he possesseth all things. So long therefore, as we keep company with those that commit sin with greediness, and run on in their evil courses without controulement, we shall be sure to learn their ways, and are in danger to receive destruction to our souls.

Thirdly, it reproveth those that go backward in their profession, that are corrupt trees and without fruit, twice dead and plucked up by the roots. Where shall we in these days find matter of joy to comfort our selves, when godliness so much decayeth, and wickedness is set aloft? The Apostle saith notably to the Corinthians, I fear least when I come again, my God abase me among you, and I shall bewail many of them which have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness, & fornication, & wantonness which they have committed. Suffer me a little to paint out unto you in his colors, the unclean leprosy, and filthy morphew, that hath by sprading so disfigured the face of this world, as it is made odious in the eyes and judgments of all that have any light of God's spirit to discern it. If we consider the times wherein we live, we may truly say, they are the perilous seasons foreshowed by Christ and his Apostles, when faith is scarce found upon the earth. What can we hear or see in any company to which we resort, and not be either grieved, or guilty? For when we behold iniquity practiced without fear, & maintained without shame, if we be not grieved at the committing of it, we are made guilty of it. If all Recordes were searched from the beginning, and a narrow vew of other times taken, it would be found by experience (our helps and means greater then theirs considered) that we ouermatch them all, in all kind of profaneness and abominations. As forswearing, lying, whoring, pride, Atheism, wantonness, looseness, unmercifulness, oppression, coueteousnesse, sacrilege, luxury, drunkenness, envy, Hipocrisie, malice, contempt of the word, and such like, they have overspread the whole world as a running soar, as a fretting Canker, and as a loathsome ulcer, whereby our age is become as the dregs and lees of all that have gone before us; yea, as a common sink that receiveth all filthiness and corruption into it. If any object, there was never more light of knowledge then is in our days, and that the word was never so plainly and plentifully preached. I answer, if it be granted that the light of knowledge is wonderful great, yet it is also as true that there was never more darkness of impiety, never moe mists of ungodliness, then now remain among us; so that it seemeth our greatness of knowledge, serveth to no other purpose, then to add to the greatness of our condemnation. We are grown worse then our predecissors and forefathers, because if there had not been such light, there could not be such darkness. If we had been blind and not seen the light, we should not have so greatly sinned. Thus our Savior speaketh to some of the Pharisees, If ye were blind, ye should not have sin, but now ye say, we see, therefore your sin remaineth. The Sun of the Gospel, having shined upon our marish grounds, hath raised these stenches, and given li•e and growth to these monsters. For where the Gospel doth not soften, it hardeneth; where it worketh not conversion, it worketh confusion; where it effecteth no good, it maketh men worse, yea, worse then Tyre and Sidon, worse then Sodom and Gomorrhah. Thus truth compelleth me, and woeful experience constraineth me, to be a witness of that I would not if I could otherwise choose touching the common corruption and iniquity of our age. But some man may say, the goodness of our professors will make amends; and heal this soar; yea, make a full recompense of the former disorders and abuses. Indeed I acknowledge with all thankfulness and rejoicing, that God hath his Church, and chosen flock among us, contrary to the opinion and practice of such as have made a rent and separation from us. But although we have a true Church of Christ with us, it is a little flock, a small remnant, a gathering after the Harvest, a gleaning after the vintage. It is an hard matter to find a true Isralite in whose heart is no guile. They are rare hands that are free from the contagions of the times, and pure from the spots of filthiness now reigning. We may take up the complaint of the Prophet, The best of them is a briar, and the most righteous of them ts sharper then a Thorny heage. A man would have thought, he might have engaged his life, and pawned his soul for the sincerity of some, whom now we may behold to be gone as far as Demas was, in the love of this world. Their love to the Saints, their zeal to the word, their affection to the Ministers, seemed to be such, that no man doubted but their names were written in the book of life; who now seem to be rased out of that book which God hath written. They endured the bitterness of the Cross, they despised the shame of the world, they suffered the taunts of the wicked, who now are set down in the seat of the scornful, and are become luke-warm in their profession. Self-love hath quenched brotherly love, mercy is swallowed up through hardness of heart, compassion is turned into sencelesnesse, yea all civil and just dealing seem to have taken their Wings and to be fled up into heaven, or else to be sunk down into the Center of the earth, and to have left the society of our new Christians. It is now accounted a rashness, an heat of youth; yea, a sin worthy of sharp punishment, to stand to the rule and line of the word. If a man give but a look toward the Gospel, and do not profess himself an open enemy unto it: if he show the least entertainment to the truth, and do not set himself against the professors of it, though he be a common Gamester, a rioteous liver, an usurer, an incrocher, and oppressor; he hath the name and title of a good Christian, he hath the praise and commendation of a good professor. What joy therefore can the Children of God have in such works of darkness, and in such workers of iniquity. We may wish with the Prophet, that our head were full of water, and our eyes a Fountain of tears, to weep day and night for the desolation and destruction that hangeth over their heads. The Husbandman taketh no pleasure to see Tares and Darnel grow in his field, instead of good Corn. The Gardener cannot without grief behold weeds spring up in his Garden instead of wholesome Hearbes. So when we see the Church of God, to bring forth Chaff instead of Wheat; Beanes, instead of Fruit; vice instead of virtue, and sin instead of righteousness; what greater grief can arise in our hearts, or what greater sorrow can be wrought in us? If we grieve through the wickedness of our ways, and profaneness of our lives the Children of God; we likewise grieve the spirit of God, and quench such good motions as are inspired into us.

Lastly, it is our duty to seek the good and prosperity of the Church, by all good means, and to draw them and move them, to embrace the ways of salvation. This duty hath many branches growing from it. For seeing God's graces bestowed, give occasion of great joy, it ought to teach us to exhort one another, to comfort them that are comfortless, to reprove them that go astray, to pray for our brethren, to seek to gain and win them to the faith; and when they are gained and won, to rejoyce unfeignedly at their conversion, and if we see any hope of their repentance and turning to God, to converse with them and not to be ashamed of their company. Certainly, he is not truly converted himself, that doth not rejoyce at the conversion of others. He never knew what true repentance meaneth, that conceiveth no joy at the repentance of others. He is ignorant of the way of salvation, that is not greatly delighted and comforted, when others begin to be saved: that we say of them, as Christ doth of Zacchaeus, This day is salvation come to this house, forasmuch as he is also become the son of Abraham. This doth directly reprove four sortes of men. First, such as rejoyce in those that will sin with them and run into all excess of riot with them. Great is the delight that sinners take in the society and company one of another. They join hand in hand together, it is their solace and pastime to agree together as brethren in evil, it is as meat and drink unto them to follow after ungodliness. Christ teacheth, that the Angels in Heaven rejoice for one sinner that repenteth. Our joy ariseth upon their repentance. Their turning to God worketh our rejoicing.

So long as men flatter themselves in their sins, and proceed in their evil doing, no matter of joy is offered unto us. Secondly, such as seek to draw them to evil, to vanity, and to all ungodliness, (a common sickness that reigneth in our days,) when men entice one another to evil. These men bear the Image of the Devil, and are transformed into his likeness. For how can they gain their brethren to Godliness, that are means to seduce them and so to bring them to all ungodliness. Hence it is that Solomon counselleth us, when sinners entice us, not to consent unto them. It is a grievous sin to be an entiser, but it shall not excuse him that is enticed. Let us therefore know, that we must exhort one another to piety, not to impiety, and further one another to salvation, not to condemnation; & bring one another to heaven, not to hell. Thirdly, it teproueth those that envy and murmur at the calling of our Brethren to Repentaunce, and at their bringing into the Kingdom of Christ. This corrupt affection was in Joshua, who repined that the Elders had the gift of prophesy bestowed upon them, as well as Moses. This was in Jonah, when he had preached to the Ninevites, and saw the great mercy of God in sparing of them, and not destroying them according to hls preaching, and their deseruings, was angry, and it displeased him exceedingly. He regarded his own credit and estimation among men, more then their conversion and preservation. This was in the elder Brother of the riotous and prodigal Son, when he saw the joy of his Father, at the receiving of his Child, and his readiness to forgive, he was angry and would not go in. But his Father persuadeth him, that there is no cause why he should be grieved, inasmuch as he is not himself hindered or indamaged by this receiving of his Brother into favor; and reproveth him, in that having no regard of his brother, he is sorry for the common joy conceived of his return. That joy did offend him, whereof he should have been a Companion. These two Reasons are to be noted and observed, to root up all envy and malice out of our hearts, considering that we loose nothing, whensoever God doth graciously receive into favor, those which through sin were fallen from him, & that it is haughtiness without godliness; grief without mercy; and cruelty without compassion; not to rejoice and be glad, when we see any of our fellow servants restored from death to life, raised from sin to righteousness; and found, who before were lost. He then is unrighteous and ungodly, who enuyeth his brother received into favor, and he doth peruersely and maliciously, which doth murmur at the mercy of God upon our brethren. Fourthly, it condemneth such as fail in the former duty, that never exhort their brethren to godliness, never dissuade them from sin, never comfort those that are in misery, never praying for them that are in distress, never desire God to be good unto them, never rejoice with them, when God hath shown mercy.

We live in these times, when the hand of God is stretched out against many of our brethren, they are restrained and shut up by the contagion of plague & pestilence. This their woeful condition, doth cal upon us, and cry unto us, to be mindful of them, and to pray to God our common Father, to have pity upon them, to call in his arrows that he hath shot against them, to remember his old mercies, that he was wont to show to his inheritance. The Prophet exhorteth and stirreth up the people to pray for the peace of Jerusalem: and that duty which he requireth of others, he daily practiseth himself, praying unto GOD to be favorable to Zion, and to build the Walls of Jerusalem, according to his good pleasure. Let us examine our selves, whether this affection be found in us, and learn to testify our Love towards them, by procuring their good and safety. When we are in misery, our desire is to taste of the kindness and compassion of our Brethren. Let us be as careful to promote their happiness. God is ready to hear us, his ears are open unto our Prayers, so that we plainly bewray, that we shall remain without feeling and sense of their misery, unless we pray unto him for them, who is the God of all Mercy, and the Father of all Consolation.

[Because by thee (Brother) the Bowelles of the Saints are refreshed.]

These Words, are a reason rendered of the words going before, declaring wherefore he had great joy and consolation in his love, because the needy Members of Christ were succoured by him. This tendeth to the praise of Philemon, who by his Charity and merciful dealing toward the poor Saints, did continually refresh and comfort the bowels of them that wanted. We learn from hence, that the works of mercy and compassion, are to be shown toward the poor Saints. It is our duty to be bountiful and liberal, to those that are in necessity. This Doctrine is proved and confirmed unto us by sundry commandments, and examples in the word of God. Hereunto cometh the charge given by Moses, If one of thy brethren with thee be poor, within any of thy Gates, in thy Land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thy heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother, but thou shalt open thine hand unto him, and shalt lend him sufficient for his need which he hath. Likewise Solomon saith, Cast thy bread upon the waters for after many days thou shalt find it, give a portion to seven, and also to eight, for thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth. Also the Apostle speaketh, to the same purpose, To do good and to distribute forget not, for with such sacrifices God is pleased. The examples of the Children of God that have gone before us in the performance of this duty are many, both in the old and New Testament. It is recorded to the perpetual praise and commendation of Obadiah, that he hid the Prophets of God in a Cave, from the cruelty of Iesabell, and sustained them with food, and ministered all things necessary unto them. The like we see in Job, who restrained not the poor of their desire, nor caused the eyes of the Widow to fail, he saw not any perish for want of clothing, nor any poor without covering; his loins blessed him, because he was warmed with the fleece of his sheep. The widow of Zarephath relieved Elijah in the Famine. The Apostle commendeth Onesiphorus, because he oft refreshed him, and was not ashamed of his Chaine, but when he was at Rome he sought him out very diligently and found him. The Evangelist Luke in the Acts of the Apostles declareth, that Tabitha was full of good works and alms which she did, for she made many Coates and Garments to cover the Saints. Cornelius is reported to be a devout man, and one that feared God with all his household, which gave much alms to the people, and praised God continually. All these Testimonies of holy Scripture teach us, that to do good, to yield relief, and to minister comfort unto men, especially to the Saints of God, is a necessary duty belonging to all the servants of God.

Now as we have heard sundry commandments and examples to move us hereunto, so diverse reasons may be produced to confirm the same unto us. The wise man in the book of Ecclesiastes is plentiful in this argument. First, he presseth upon us this duty, in respect of the rich reward that shall be rendered to those that are merciful to the poor. For exhorting all men to cast their bread upon the Waters, that is, even where it seemeth to be lost, & where no hope of recompense remaineth: he giveth this reason: for after many days thou shalt find it. And in the book of the Proverbs he saith, He that hath mercy upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord, and the Lord will recompense him that which he hath given. When one lendeth to an honest man he feareth no loss, but hopeth to receive again; much more may we be assured that God himself will restore and repay, who is not as the sons of men, that he should delude or deceive us.

Secondly, he moveth us to the fruits of Charity and compassion, from the consideration of the uncertainty and vanity of all things, insomuch as albeit we know what is present, we are ignorant of that which is to come. All things in this life are mutable and uncertain. 1 The life of man is uncertain, we know not how short a time we have to live and to exercise our liberality. We know not what one day may bring forth, and that one minute and moment may cut off all opportunity to show mercy. 2 It is uncertain, whether the riches, which now we have in plenty and abundance, shall continue and abide with us. The Apostle calleth Riches by this title; uncertain riches, and Solomon saith, Wilt thou cast thine eyes upon them which are nothing? For Riches taketh her to her Wings as an Eagle, and flieth into the heaven. Who was to be compared with Job, among all the men of the East, yet suddenly he was stripped of them, and made one of the poorest. It is uncertain, what our estate and condition may be, and to what necessity our selves may come, we may be brought to that extremity, that we may stand in need of the help of others, and be constrained to ask alms, and beg our relief of them, when as we by the righteous judgment of God shall find rich men so affected toward us, as others have found us, when we had the goods of this world. Lastly, it is uncertain what thy son and heir will prove, thou knowest not whether he will riotously wast, and prodigally consume all that thou hast left, which thou hast gotten with care and travel, or whether a stranger shall enter upon thy labors, and usurp that which is not his own. This is that reason which Solomon setteth down in his Ecclesiastes, Give a portion to seven, and also to eight, for thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth. In all these considerations, being compassed about, and hemmed in on every side with a world of uncertainties, it standeth us upon to follow the counsel and advise of Christ our Savior, who willeth us to make us friends with the riches of iniquity, that when we shall want, they may receive us into everlasting habitations, which is not spoken of goods evilly and wrongfully gotten, but of goods that may be wickedly and wrongfully taken from us by open force, or secret fraud; by violence of Robbers, by pretence of right, by color of Law, or by the power of the oppressor.

Thirdly, the poor cannot recompense and repay again that which is bestowed upon them, but God himself will restore it seven fold into thy bosom. We must herein imitate our Heavenly Father, who is ready to show mercy to all. This is the precept of Christ, Give to him that asketh, and from him that would borrow of thee, turn not away, &c. that ye may be the Children of your heavenly Father, for he maketh his Son to arise on the evil, and the good, & sendeth rain on the just and unjust. So likewise it behooveth us, to follow the example of Christ, Who being rich, for our sakes became poor, that we thorough his poverty might be made rich. This was the greatest grace and mercy that could be shown.

Fourthly, the poor have been in all ages, and shall always remain with us to the end of the world, to the end that their bowels may feel our refreshing, and their loins bless us, and pray for us. For, if it had pleased God, he could have made all men rich, and none to stand in need of the aid and assistance of others; but this difference in degrees among men, placing some above, and others beneath, making some rich, and others poor, setting some on high, and others low, serveth most for the advancement of his glory, and the maintaining of fellowship and friendship, of concord and unity one with another. If all were rich, and abounded in outward wealth, we should neither know God, nor our selves, nor our Brethren: we would be ready to say, Who is the Lord? We would be ready to disdain and despise our Brethren. If all were poor, and in necessity, there would be nothing but robbing, stealing, perjury, and all confusion. Wherefore, it is the ordinance of God, that some should be rich, and some poor, some wealthy, and others in want. He maketh some poor, to exercise their patience, and to try howe they will bear that burden, and behave themselves under the cross. He maketh others rich to exercise our mercy, to be objectes of our pity and compassion, and that we should never want some occasions to show forth the fruits of a lively faith. Seeing therefore, we shall receive a great advantage in this life, and be recompensed at the resurrection of the just; seeing we are uncertain what shall happen hereafter, and know not what evil may fall upon the earth: seeing we are commanded to follow the example of God the Father, who is good to all, and of Christ his son, who being rich, made himself poor, and of no reputation, and lastly, seeing we must always have the poor to exercise the works of mercy, and to relieve their misery; it followeth, that we are to distribute the outward blessings of this life to those that be in want and stand in need of comfort.

The Doctrine being thus cleared and confirmed, let us see the uses that arise from hence. First, this being so necessary a duty required of all men, it teacheth a difference between the Heathen and Christian religion. The Heathenish Religion never took order for the poor, nor required any compassion toward them; but the profession of Christ, chargeth this duty upon all true believers, and teacheth that judgment shall be without mercy, to those that show not mercy. When Paul departed from the rest of the Apostles at Jerusalem, they warned him only that he should remember the poor, which thing also he was diligent to do. But this was never remembered, nor regarded, nor intended among the Nations that were unbelievers. True it is, the Painims and Philosophers, have held and delivered many moral instructions, and spoken well of Justice, Temperance, Clemency, Prudence, and Friendship, of obedience toward parents, of Gentleness toward men, of liberality toward the poor, of love toward our Country, of Loialty toward Princes, and such other virtues. He that should deny their precepts in part to be well spoken, and in part to be well practiced, should do them great wrong. But the Christian Religion, as it hath all these in common with them, approving and allowing of them; yea, not disdainng to read their books and to learn such Doctrine of them as they have left in writing, so it hath lanced out a great deal deeper, and entered farther, and considered better of the precepts of good life, and the practice of good manners, then the Heathen and Infidels have done. It was a rule of one of the wisest among the Gentiles, that we are not borne only for our selves, but that our birth is partly for our Country, partly for our Parents, and partly for our friends. A goodly and Golden sentence much admired, and greatly commended, and oftentimes alleged. But if it be compared with the Doctrine of Christ, and the duty of all Christians, it will be found maimed in his limbs, and defective in his parts, neither having a good beginning, nor making a perfect ending. For first of all, he prescribeth that our Charity should be employed toward our selves, which they have well marked, allowed, and followed, which say, that a well ordered Charity beginneth at himself. But this is far from the Doctrine of Christ and his Apostles. Christ himself cōmandeth us to love our Neigh-as our selves, and Paul teacheth that Charity seeketh not her own things. Again, he maketh mention of our Country, of our parents, and of our friends, and rangeth them into good order, but what becometh of the poor? where or in what place of this notable sentence doth he place them? he speaketh not of them at all, let them shift as they can, they are quite forgotten, the Philosophers Charity stretcheth not to them; let them sink or swim, live or die, feed or starve, it was all one to him and to that Religion that he believed. And indeed a poor person in the time of the Painims had no other means to live and sustain himself and his family, then to sell himself as a slave to him that would buy him, if no man were found that would buy him, he perished for hunger, and died through want and famine. True it is, when they saw some men with their eyes languishing in misery, and heard them with their ears pitifully complaining in their extremity, they were sometimes touched with commiseration and compassion toward poor persons, but they never called or accounted this duty of humanity a virtue, but only an human passion or natural affection. Furthermore, they never built or erected any Hospitalls or houses of refreshing to lodge and nourish the poor, neither had the Princes their Almoners, to distribute their Alms as Christians have. When a Child was borne misshapen and evil-formed among them, it was killed; yea, it was not only allowed, but commanded, to stifle and strangle it, that it should not be brought up: a cruelty and inhumanity against Nature, and a despite and injury done to the Creator, who created them, and formed them in their Mothers womb. They made account of poor men as they did of Beasts; for alas, as those poor wretches came into the Market place, & set themselves to sale, as men do their Cattle, so such as bought them, standing there at offer & proffer, had full possession to do with them what they would, they had power to kill their bondmen at their pleasure, when, and how, and for what cause they thought good, and were not subject to give any account of their death, and for their so doing. They did ordinarily slay their slaves and Servants, when they became unprofitable unto them, and reserved such as were strong to labor, and able to do them service. Moreover, they set up sundry Theaters for Combates, to offer pleasure, and make pastime to the Beholders, and caused their poor Slaues to band themselves in two partes, one against another: then, they brought them forth, causing them furiously to set one upon another with naked swords, and with naked bodies, none of them being furnished with any defensive Armor; and the people assembled to see this most ungodly sport, laughed at it, and took no less pleasure to look upon it, then we take pleasure to see Cockes fight one with another.

Thus we see what the Religion of these Panims and Miscreants was, barbarous, beastly, bloody, defiled with all cruelty, contrary to all pity and piety, regarding the poor no more then brute beasts, and making no more account of them, but for their service they drew from them, and for the want they had of them. For among all the morral precepts which they taught and delivered, we never read that they spake anything, that they prescribed or persuaded anything touching the poor, nor that they ever established any good policy to help them. Notwithstanding, it agreeth well with natural reason, that everyone do good to his like. And it is a sound principle confessed among all, What thou wouldest not should be done to thee, do it not unto another: but we must do to another, as we would he should do unto us. But the Religion which is called the Christian religion goeth farther, and beginneth where nature leaveth us: It teacheth us to respect the poor as our own flesh, to regard them as the members of Christ, to account of them as of those that bear the Image of God, to relieve them as heirs of the Kingdom of Heaven, and to remember that the Lord Jesus accepteth and rewardeth that which is done unto them, as done unto himself. So then, no man can deny, but all men must confess, that the Christian Religion is in all points more excellent and perfect, then all other Religions, which are of Men, and savor of the Flesh.

Secondly, seeing the works of mercy must be shown to the poor Saints, it reproveth those that are weary and backward in doing good, and have no care to relieve them that live in great poverty and penury. We see many that are bountiful, and (as I may say) prodigal and wasteful in pampering of themselves, and feasting the Rich, which have no need, and stand not in want, but are sparing and fast-handed towards the poor. These are like unto the Rich man, that was cladde in Purple, and fared deliciously every day, but would not yield unto poor Lazarus, the Crummes and Offals that came from his Table. This is a great vanity, to gain praise and commendation from the Worlde, to be great Cheere-makers to the rich, and to be miserable to the poor and needy. Indeed, it is no sin to entertain thy rich Friends, and to Feast thy Kins-folks, as Abraham did Abimelech; but the other to feed the poor, rather then to Feast the rich, ought to be more common, and is approved to be more commendable. But such as follow all riot, and live in all excess, are most hard-hearted toward the poor. For devilish prodigality and Christian liberality, cannot stand together. Such as wast their goods in riotous living, think it ill spent that is given to the poor, especially that which is bestowed upon the poor Saints. We saw this in the rich Glutton, who abounding in outward blessings, would communicate nothing to Lazarus, as full of wants as he was of sores. We have hereof a lively picture, set up to be seen in the Sodomites, who exceeding in excess of pride, and fullness of Bread, offended there-withal in contempt of the poor, and weakening the hand of the ndeeie. Behold the practice of all that spend and wast their wealth in drunkenness, surfeiting, and such like wickedness, it greeueth them more to give a penny to good uses, then to lavish and dash away a pound, in following and feeding their beastly humors; whereby God is dishonored, the poor are robbed, their bodies are disfigured, their good Name is impaired, and their souls are endangered forever.

There is no man, that delighteth in any sin, hut he hath pretence and excuse for his sin. The slothful servant that hid his Masters Talent and treasure committed unto him, alleged this for himself, I knew that thou wast an hard man, which reapest where thou sowedst not, and gatherest where thou strowedst not. So the sluggard saith, There is a Lyon without, I shall be slain in the street. In like manner, such as are miserable and merciless toward the poor members of Christ, are ready to cover their shame, though it be with Fig-leaves; to daub up their hardness of heart, though it be with untempered mortar, and to paint their hypocrisy, though it be with deceitful and fading colors. Let us see what their Objections are, hindering their liberality, and shutting their hands, or rather their hearts from this compassion, so often commanded of God, and so much practiced of the godly. First, they say, they cannot do that which they desire, they fear that they themselves may want, if they should be liberal in giving. I answer, this proceedeth from the bitter root of infidelity. God hath promised to reward the liberal giver, but these men have not hearts to believe him, & to consider that he is true of his word. They think that by giving alms they shall be wasted, but the spirit of God pronounceth, that their wealth shall be increased. He that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord, & shall never lack. The liberal person shall have plenty, and he that watereth shall have rain. There is that scattereth, and more is increased, but he that spareth more then is meet, surely cometh to poverty. Whatsoever is bestowed upon the poor, is accounted as given to Christ, who is a rich Rewarder of all that seek him. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, He hath dispersed abroad, and hath given to the poor, his benevolence remaineth forever; also, he that findeth seed to the sower, will minister likewise Bread for food, and multiply your seed, and increase the fruits of your benevolence. The Wise man teacheth, that if our bread and our bountifulness were cast upon the waters, yet after many days we shall find them again. The Husbandman casteth his seed in the earth, and burieth it almost an whole year before he receiveth & reapeth the fruit of that he hath sown. Therefore, let not those that use to give relief to others, fear that they shall want the relief of others. Again, others plead and pretend that they are poor and needy themselves, they are rather constrained to receive, then to give; to take, then to distribute; to accept, then to bestow; for he that hath but little, cannot minister to others. But this cannot excuse the neglect of this duty. Let such know, that if there be a willing mind, A Man is accepted according to that which he hath, and not according to that which he hath not. The poor Widow mentioned in the Gospel, cast but one Mite into the Treasury, and yet that which she gave of her penury, was more respected of Christ, then all the abundance of the Rich. The Churches of Macedonia, were themselves in extreme necessity, and in great poverty, yet sent relief to others, above their ability. They that were converted to the Faith, after Christ's ascension, diminished their own substance, when they sold their possessions, and distributed the money among the poor, according to the necessities of everyone. Every man is bound to minister to his neighbor, and to supply his wants as God hath enabled him. Thirdly, others alleage for themselves, that they have a great charge and heavy burden lying upon their shoulders, they must provide for Wife and Children, they have Father and Mother, and Kindered to relieve, and if they should not sustain them, they are made worse then Infidels, and have denied the Faith. These shifts cannot serve our turn, nor justify us in our evil doing. True it is, these things must be done, but the other must not be left undone. The Church gathered by Peters preaching after Christ's ascending into Heaven, not only spent of their superfluity, but sold their patrimony to relieve the poor, yet no doubt they had Wife and Children of their own to provide for. So no doubt had the Macedonians, who not only according to their power, but also beyond their power, were willing to do others good.

We must commit our Children unto him that hath promised to be a Father unto them. He hath promised, that he will not leave us, nor forsake us, but be our deliverer, So that we shall not fear what Man can do unto us. We have a full assurance of his word, That the righteous shall not be forsaken, nor his seed beg their Bread.

Such therefore, as set their hearts to prepare and provide much for their posterity, do withdraw themselves commonly from helping the poor, and by this means do oftentimes bring a curse upon their own goods, so that some of their Children, or of their Children's Children riotously wast them, & make havoc of all most vnthriftilly. Fourthly, some there are, that hang back, and will give no Alms, because the poor are lewd and wicked, they are Idle and abuse their alms, they have bad tongues, and are unthankful persons towards such as relieve them. I answer, we must in our giving respect more the Commandment of God, then the persons of men: and though it fall out, that their tongues curse us, yet if we succor them in their necessity, the loins of the poor shall bless us, and we shall thereby heap Coals of fire upon their head, and make them ashamed of their evil. We are likewise commanded to love our Neighbor, it is not mentioned in the gospel, that we should not love him except he be godly. We are commanded to set before us the example of God, Who maketh the Sun to shine, & rain to fall upon the just and unjust, upon the godly and the ungodly, that so we may be perfect, as our heavenly Father is perfect.

Again, the Apostle Paul having taught, that idle persons which will not labor should not eat, addeth one thing further to be practiced, That we should not be weary of well-doing. Let us not therefore so much look upon the person of the men, as consider the greatness of their want: Let us not look for a recompense from them, but from him that hath promised unto us, that a Cup of cold Water shall be respected, and rewarded by him. This is it which Solomon meaneth, Eccles. 11, 3. when he saith, If the Clowdes be full, they will pour forth Rain upon the Earth, and if the Tree do fall towards the South, or towardet the North, in the place that the Tree falleth, there it shall be. In this place, the Wiseman persuadeth the Church to liberality toward the poor; the Clowds, when they are full of water, do not keep it to themselves, but pour it on the earth that gapeth for the rain, as if it were a thirst, and openeth his mouth to be refreshed; so when men are laden with wealth, they are bound to cherish their brethren, as it were pined away with hunger & third. Then he preventeth that objection which Covetous men make, to stay their hands from showing mercy, and to shut up their compassion from the needy, because they are wicked and unworthy of any favor, that they will abuse it to Whoredom, to Drunkenness, and to excess. For, he telleth them of the profit and reward, that they shall receive, because as the Tree, howsoever it falleth, on the right hand, or on the left, on the North, or on the South, it skilleth not, seeing it becometh the owners, and it falleth to him; so the bountifulness of good men, whether it be given to the worthy or unworthy, to the faithful or unfaithful, shall turn to his benefit that bestowed it. To conclude, every Christian man, must have the Spirit of Christ, if he be his; he that hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. But Christ is merciful, and therefore we must be merciful.

Lastly, seeing it belongeth to those that have the goods of this world, out of their plenty to supply the wants of the poor, it belongeth unto us to have an earnest care and diligence to provide for the poor, especially, the poor Saints. This duty and diligence was in the Apostle Paul, as it is expressed, Rom. 15. where it is said, That he Ministred to the Saints at Jerusalem, and withal, that he gave himself no rest in this, until he had sealed this fruit unto them; that is, till he saw it done and effected, according to his desire. It is not enough for us, to give good words, or to utter from our mouths good wishes, but we must in our several places, and particular callings, do our utmost endeavor, that relief may even be sealed to our poor. It is not enough to give to those that ask and crave the fruit of our liberality, but we must learn to enquire of the wants of the Saints, and to search what is their condition. It belongeth unto us, not only to have ears prepared to hear, but to have mouths opened, to ask of the welfare of those that are in necessity. We would desire to be so dealt with all our selves; and therefore let us be so minded toward our Brethren. This we see in Abraham, he stayed not till those strangers came into his house, till they desired to be received & have lodging, but he went out of his tent of his own accord, to see whom he could espy, that he might bring them to his house. So did Lot, so dealt all the Fathers. Thus did Nehemiah, when he saw some of his brethren that were come from Ierusalem, he asked them concerning the state of the Church, and of the residue of the Captivity. We must not always wait, till we be entreated and urged to show mercy, but offer it our selves, to testify the willingness of our hearts. We must not only readily give our relief when the poor require it, but go unto them, search them out, and call for them, whether they ask our Alms or not, whether they require our relief or not. As Christ hath loved us, so let us love one another. Now, he loved us being his enemies, when we never asked remission of our sins, for he was found of them that sought him not, and shown mercy to them that desired it not, so ought we also to deal with our Brethren, not tarrying till they crave, but offering our Compassion. There have ever been poor, that make not their wants openly known, and are so dejected and rejected of many, that they are ashamed to show their necessity. This duty requiring our earnest care, to seek after, and see to the wants of our poor Brethren, reproveth three sorts of men. First, such as help them only in words, but not in deeds; with their mouth, not with their hands; in outward show, not by any true fruit of Charity. Such men doth the Apostle James note in his Epistle, who when they see a poor man, or a poor Woman, which wanteth bread to eat, and clothes to put on, they say unto him; God help thee (poor man) and succor thee, and send thee relief, it is great pity thou art no better provided for. These are destitute of a true Faith, which standeth not in word only: and the poor, notwithstanding all these fair Words, and goodly promises, may starve for cold, and die for thirst, and perish for Famine, if they should find no better comfort, and if every man should serve them after this sort. It is a very true saying of the Wise Solomon, A Man that boasteth of great liberality, is like Clouds and Wind without Rain. So the Apostle John saith, My little Children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue only, but in deed, and in truth. It is not enough for a man to say, he will help and succor his Neighbor, unless he help him indeed.

Secondly, it reproveth those that do not rightly consider what poor the Apostle meaneth, and setteth before us as objects of our compassion. He doth not understand the idle Begger, or sturdy Rogue, or vagrant Companion, who not applying himself in any lawful calling, maketh a profession of beggary, and liveth altogether upon the spoil of other men's goods, the profit of other men's labor, and the sweat of other men's brows. Neither doth he mean such manner of persons, as are common and continually haunters of Ale-houses, Vnthrifths, Spend-als, Carders, Dicers, Drunkards, which spend all the Weeke in going from one tippling place to another, having Wives and Children at home, that want those things which they wast, and when they come unto them, they rail and rage as mad men, against those they should relieve. These are excluded and wiped out of the roll and Register of the poor Saints spoken of in this place, being worse then Infidels, and denying the Faith. The Turks and Sarazens shall rise up in judgment against this wretched generation, and condemn them. But the Apostle pointeth out such unto us, to be holpen and comforted, as albeit it hath pleased God not to bestow so great a portion of worldly blessings upon them, as upon others, as the Artificer, the Handy-crafts man, and Day-Labourer, yet labor diligently in their Callings, and follow their Trades with all carefulness to relieve them-selves, and to maintain their Families, as those that profess the fear of God, and the Faith of Christ. Under this rank, we may range poor Widdowes and Fatherless Children, all aged and impotent persons, such as are lame and diseased, that would work, but cannot; that desire to labor, but are not able. It is the rule of the Apostle, that ought to take place in all Churches, That such as will not take pains, must not eat. All those, that through frailty of Child-hood, or weakness of Olde age, or impotency of limbs, or greeuousnesse of sickness, or thorough greatness of their charge, laboring according to the utmost of their strength, yet are not able to maintain themselves, must have their wants supplied willingly and cheerfully; not grudgingly and sparingly, showing our selves to have a feeling of their necessities.

Thirdly, it reproveth such as never open their mouths to know the estate of the poor Sain•s, or to enquire how they fare: Alas, how should they offer their help of their own accord, and open the bowels of pity before they be entreated, that will depart from nothing, but urged and constrained by force of Law, or taxation of others? Or how should they extend their compassion to the poor that are absent, who are like unto the rich man that despised Lazarus lying at his gate, and would not give him the crumbs that fell from his table? It is noted to the great commendation of David, that after the death of Saul, he sought not revenge upon his issue and posterity, but did good to his children's children, & said; Is there any left of the house of Saul, that I may show mercy for Jonathan's sake? So ought we to seek out the servants of God, and to find out the poor, and to enquire after the distressed Saints, and say; Is there any of the poor yet left, to whom we may show mercy for the Lord's sake? For they represent the person of Christ: when they come unto us; Christ himself cometh unto us; and when they ask of us, it is Christ that asketh of us, and saith; I am hungry, I am thirsty, I am naked, I am harbourlesse; so that whatsoever we would do to Christ if he were with us, the same must we do to them that are among us.

8Wherefore, although I have great liberty in Christ to command thee that which is thy duty.

9Yet for loves sake, I rather beseech thee, being such a one, even Paul an Old man; yea now a prisoner of Jesus Christ.

IN the words going before, we have heard the preface or entrance of this Epistle, consisting partly in the Title of it, and partly in certain Prayers used by the Apostle: Now we are to proceed to the rest of the Epistle, wherein we must observe two points; First, the chief matter is handled; Secondly, the whole matter is concluded. The chief matter, is touching Onesimus, or himself. The first, concerning Onesimus, is handled from the eight verse, to the 22. verse. The latter touching himself, is expressed in the 22. Verse, wherein he willeth to prepare lodging for him, hoping by their Prayers to be delivered out of prison. The former point is set down in this short speech or sentence, I Paul pray thet to receive Onesimus: The parts of which sentence are not barely propounded, but amplified; and then, the whole is proved & confirmed. We are therein to consider three partes; First, the entreating and praying of Philemon; Secondly, the person praying and entreating; Thirdly, the person for whom he prayeth and entreateth. His praying of Philemon, is declared by a diverse reason, Although I have great liberty to command thee, yet I pray thee and beseech thee. The person praying and beseeching, is Paul, who is described generally, being such a one, and then particularly by his old age, and by his bonds. Touching the person, for whom he beggeth and beseecheth, we shall see afterward, Verse 10.

This is to be observed touching the order of the words. Now, let us consider the interpretation of them. First, he speaketh of his liberty in Christ, that is; as an Apostle and Minister of Christ, whose Messenger or Ambassador he is; whereby he insinuateth and signifieth, that this power is not his own, or of himself, but is Christ's; it is not the servants, but the Lord's; it is not man's, or the Ministers, but God's. For even at Magistrates ordained and sent forth by the Prince, can do nothing in their own name, but in the Kings name; so Ministers called of God, and fitted to the office whereunto they are called, must teach, command, reprove, and exhort, not in their own name, but in the name of Christ their Lord and Master. He addeth, That for loves sake he entreateth him. Love, in this place, may be referred either to Philemon, or to Paul, seeing the Apostle leaveth it at large, and restraineth it not either to his love, or to his own. If it be referred to Philemon, it carrieth this sense, I do entreat thee, and not command thee, for thy compassion and loves sake, which I have before commended in thee, and thou so diligently and devoutly showest unto the Saints. But I do not take this to be the natural meaning of the words, so that we are to understand them rather of Paul's love toward Philemon, that he so tendered and loved him, as that he had rather deal with him in kindness, and by intreatance, then roughly and severely. Lastly, he saith, Paul, an Old man, and now a prisoner of Christ. In these words, is included great force to move Philemon: We must understand the first Words of his Age, not of his Office; of his years, not of his Ministry; and he calleth himself a prisoner of Christ, that is; for Christ's sake, and the preaching of his Gospel.

So then, according to this Interpretation, these words are thus much in effect, as if he had said; Seeing I hear everywhere of thy fervent Love, and exceeding tender Compassion thou bearest to the poor Saints, though I may many ways command thee in things that are right and equal, as in that I am an Apostle of our Lord Jesus Christ, in that I am stricken in Age, ready to leave this life, and in that I am now a Captive and Prisoner, for the cause of Christ and his Gospel, yet the love and tender affection I bear unto thee, do move me rather to beseech and to entreat thee.

Now let us see what may be observed out of these words. First of all, the Apostle would not do that which he might do, and was lawful for him to do, which may teach the Minister and all men sometimes to be content to depart from their right, as Abraham did toward Lot, when a strife arose between them, and as Paul did oftentimes, according as himself testifieth in his Epistles. Which condemneth those that stand strictly upon their right, and consider what is lawful but forget what is fit and expedient. For in things that are indifferent we are not by and by allowed to do that which is lawful, nor to use our power, but must suffer all things, that the Gospel of Christ be not hindered. Likewise, the Apostle would not sometimes take any wages of the Church, but preached freely and was not chargeable to any, because he would not give occasion of speaking evil against the Gospel. Secondly, the Apostle publisheth his liberty to command, but it is only in Christ whose Ministers he and we are, and not our own. Thus he calleth himself an Apostle, not by man, nor by the will of man, but of Christ. This is the difference between a civil Magistrate, and an Ecclesiastical Minister. The civil Magistrate may give charge and send out commandments in his own name, but the Minister must command in his Masters name, in as much as Christ hath not imparted the power, nor communicated the right which he hath over men's consciences unto any mortal man, no not to the Angels in Heaven. Wherefore, whatsoever we speak or do, we must do all in his name that hath sent us. Thirdly, mark how far his authority stretcheth and extendeth, he can require and exact no more then that which is right and equal and their duty to do. It is no absolute or immoderate power, but limited within these bounds, that he go not beyond them. This is required of all the Ministers of the word, they are to teach that which is right, and he people are bound no farther to hear them. Fourthly, he declareth why he yielded up a part of his right and did not prosecute it to the full, for love sake, it was for Charity sake that he turned his power into prayer. All indifferent things must be measured by this rule. Charity will cause a man willingly to give place where it is in the heart, but where it is not, he will not regard to use his liberty with offense, nay to the destruction of his brother. 5 Lastly, Paul to move Philemon propoundeth his bands and afflictions, to teach that no man ought to grieve at the afflictions of the Church. We ought to be so far from being ashamed of the Cross in our selves, and from being offended at the Cross in others, that rather we are to know, it commendeth the Ministry, and serveth greatly to edification. For by this title he commendeth himself, and purchaseth authority unto his Ministry, whereby he signifieth not only that he is an Apostle, but somewhat more; an Apostle, a prisoner; that is, adorned with the marks and tokens of Apostolical honor, seeing the badges of the Apostleship are such bands as he suffered for Christ's sake. So then, a Minister afflicted, is more then a Minister: a Christian persecuted, is more then a Christian: and every faithful man and woman, the more they are tried by suffering for the Gospel, the more they are to be honored and the better to be esteemed in the Church.

[I have great liberty in Christ, to command thee.]

The Apostle having to deal with Philemon, whom he had won by his Ministry to the Gospel, and whom he had authority to command in the Lord; saith, that he might be bold to urge and press him to this duty in regard of the Office of Apostleship, of the greatness of his age, and of the sufferings of bonds and imprisonment. Heereby we learn, that the Pastor by his Office hath power and authority to require and to command men as the Minister of Christ to do their duties. The Teachers of the Church have power by their calling and placethat they are employed in, to be bold with their people, they have an interest in them, to urge them to good things. We see then, that the Ministry is an office of power, and the Ministers must have boldness in the discharge of their duty, and in the execution of their calling. This we see in the practice of the Prophets of God, and of the Apostles of Jesus Christ.

When Elijah was charged by Ahab to be a troubler of Israel, he answered with freedom of speech, and boldness of spirit, and vehemency of zeal, I have not troubled Israel, but thou, and thy Fathers house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalim. The like we see in Jonah, he was not afraid when he came to Nineveh, to cry out against the Citty and the Inhabitants thereof, That except they repented; within forty days they should be destroyed.

This Doctrine among other places hath most plentiful confirmation out of the prophesy of Jeremiah, whether we consider the commandment of God, or the practice of the Prophet. Heerunto cometh that which the lord speaketh to him, Behold, this day I set thee over the Nations, and over the kingdoms, to pluck up, and to root out, to destroy and throw down, to build and to plant. When Pashur had smitten him, and put him in the stocks, the Prophet said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, behold, I will make thee to be a terror to thyself, and to all thy friends, and they shall fall by the sword of their enemies, and thine eyes shall behold it, &c. This authority the Apostle Paul doth often claim & challenge unto himself over the people, and he showeth what power he had by reason of his Ministry. When he giveth sundry instructions to diverse degrees among the Corinthians, he saith, Unto the unmarried I command, not I, but the Lord. And in another place, Seeing then that we have such trust, we use great boldness of speech. It is noted by the Evangelist, that Christ taught as one having authority, and not as the Scribes, that is; boldly, not fearfully; zealously, not coldly; with great power, not as one that telleth a dream. The Apostle writing to Timothy, doth not only gently entreat him, but straightly charge him before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect Angels, that he observe those things, without preferring one to another, and do nothing partially. And in the Chapter. following, I charge thee in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Jesus Christ, which under Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession, that thou keep this commandment without spot, and unrebukable until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. Likewise, in the latter Epistle, I charge thee before God, and before the Lord Jesus Christ, which shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing, and in his kingdom, preach the word, be instant in season, and out of season, improve, rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and Doctrine. All these places of Scripture laid together, comparing the Commandments, together with the examples of the Prophets of Christ, and of the Apostles, do teach us by the Ordinance of God, power, and Authority are always joined to the Pastors Office, and never to be severed and divided from it.

Let us see what are the Reasons. First, if we consider the names that are given unto them, and the honorable Titles whereby they are called, we shall be moved to confess their calling to be accompanied with power under Christ. They are Fathers in Christ, but Parents may be bold with their children. They are Pastors and Shepherds, but the Shepherd is to direct & order the Sheep of his pasture. They are Ambassadors, but the Ambassador is not sent without authority from him that sendeth him. They are Captains of the Lord's host, but the Captain hath rule and government over those that are under his charge and regiment. If then the true Ministers of Christ be Fathers, Shepherds, Ambassadors, and Captains under Christ the great shepherd of the Sheep, their Office cannot be without jurisdiction and authority over the people of God committed to their charge.

Secondly, if we consider the fruits and effects that are ascribed in the word to the Ministers of the word, we shall see that their Ministry is joined with authority. They are the means and instruments to bring us to the knowledge of Christ, to the bosom of the Church, and to the Kingdom of Heaven. Their Office is to convert sinners, and to save souls. When Christ ascended up into Heaven, he appointed Pastors and Teachers in his Church for the repairing of the Saints; for the work of the Ministry, and for the edification of the body of Christ, till we all meet together (in the unity of faith and that acknowledging of the son of God) unto a perfect man, and unto the measure of the age of the fullness of Christ. So the Apostle exhorteth Timothy to take heed to himself, to exercise his gifts, to give attendance to Reading, to be diligent in exhortation, and to continue in delivering sound Doctrine, because in doing these things he should save both himself and them that hear him. God hath put into them and their mouths the word of reconciliation, so that faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the preaching of the word of God, and therefore the Ministers are said to save their own souls, and the souls of others.

Thirdly, there is a co•peration of God and the Ministers Office together, and an admirable sympathy between them. If then God and the Minister do work together, he may lawfully enjoin men to do their duties. This is it which the Apostle teacheth, We are together God's laborers, and in another place, We therefore as workers together, beseech you that ye receive not the grace of God in vain, where to comfort the Ministers against the contempt of the world, he declareth, that it pleaseth God to use their Ministry to work faith in whom he will. True it is, the Ministers are not able to give or work faith in the hearers, either in whole or in part, it is God only that giveth increase and a blessing upon his own means, but they are the instruments which he employeth. He commandeth the Ministers to preach, and he giveth a blessing to their preaching. The Minister laboreth on the heart and conscience God reformeth it, and giveth the grace of repentance. The Minister delivereth the Doctrine of faith, God giveth the gift of faith. The Minister teacheth righteousness and holiness of life, God saith; be it so, he shall be righteous and holy. The Minister pronounceth mercy to the penitent, God bestoweth mercy and forgiveness of sins upon him. Thus God ratifieth their word, and after a sort tieth his blessing unto it. Seeing rherefore, that the Ministers of the word have many titles of power and jurisdiction given unto them, seeing they are the means and instruments appointed to bring us to salvation, and Lastly, seeing they work with God and as it were help him in bringing men to faith and eternal life; we may conclude, that their Office is joined with power and authority.

Let us see what are the uses of this Doctrine. First, touching the Office it self, we gather, that it is a worthy calling, an honorable Office, an excellent Function, how base and mean soever it be esteemed among men of this world. This the Apostle setteth down writing to Timothy, If a man desire the Office of a Bishop, that is, a Minister of the Gospel, he desireth a worthy work, not only a work, but a worthy work. Therefore this Office, is not only a lawful calling; but a worthy calling. It is hard to discharge it aright, for who is sufficient for these things? but those things that are hard, are excellent. The Minister beareth the person of Christ in preaching the word and administering the Sacraments. We heard before that in furthering and finishing the salvation of men, God worketh with them. It is a great and glorious account which God maketh of his word in the mouth of his Ministers, when it is truly preached and rightly applied, he giveth grace by it, and ordinarily worketh not salvation without it. This is no small honor and estimation to the Ministers of God, and to the Ministry of his word, that he admitteth them as joint-workers, and as it were fellow-laborers with him, he worketh when they work, he exhorteth when they exhort, he reproveth when they reprove, he teacheth when they teach. This the Prophet teacheth to be the Ministers commission given him of God, when he hath preached righteousness to man, God will have mercy on him, and will say to the Minister, Deliver him that he go not down into the pit, for I have received reconciliation. This the Apostle saith, Now then are we Ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you through us, we pray you in Christ's stead that ye be reconciled to God. This our Savior Christ also himself speaketh, and avoucheth, in the person of Peter, I will give unto thee the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind upon earth shall be bound in Heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in Heaven. Whereby he teacheth, that the Ministers are the Porters of Heaven, they have the Keys committed unto them, they are appointed to bring the Children of God into the sheepfold of Christ. They shut the Kingdom of Heaven against all unbelievers, by preaching, that they shall not enter, but be cast into utter darkness and be tormented in Hell. They open the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers and penitent persons, by preaching that they shall enter into the kingdom of Heaven and enjoy eternal life. To this end and purpose Christ speaketh to his Apostles after his ascension, Whose sins soever ye remit, they are remitted, and whose sins ye retain they are retained. True it is, God only forgiveth sins properly, but he hath appointed his Ministers to preach, publish, and to witness to their consciences that repent and believe the Gospel, that all their sins are forgiven. And on the other side to preach and declare that such as will not believe and repent, shall never have their sins forgiven them. For, how the Ministers bind and loose, shut and open, forgive and retain, the Prophet Isaiah showeth, when he saith, Chapter 44. I will destroy the Tokens of the Sooth-sayers, and will make them that conjecture, Fools: and turn the Wisemen backward, and make their knowledge foolishness; but he confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the Counsel of his Messengers. Whereby we see, that God doth bind and loose, forgive and retain with him, when he confirmeth their word, and performeth their Counsel. This is the Dignity of the Ministry, which serveth to reprove the unthankfull world, and ignorant people, that make no reckoning or account of this ordinance, which is the power of God, and the wisdom of God.

First, it condemneth those that think the Ministers proud and presumptuous, and accuse them as saucie and malapart, when they command us from the Lord, and check us for our sins. It is their duty, not only to teach and admonish, to exhort, and to comfort, but to convince and reprove, to threaten, and to denounce Judgments from God, against the obstinate and unrepentant. When they are stirred up with boldness and courage to tell the people of their sins, we must know they do that which they may do, & speak no more then they ought to speak: they must not hold their peace, unless they would dishonor their Lord that sent them, and bring judgment upon their own heads. An Ambassador, if he should not use the name and authority of his Prince, should abuse his Prince, & make himself liable to grievous punishment. So the Ambassadors & Lieutenants of Jesus Christ, if they should not command and charge us (his subjects) in the name of our Lord & Master, they should abuse and abase him that put them in the office, and sent them to their charge. Therefore the Apostle saith, Let a man so think of us, as of the ministers of Christ, & disposers of the secrets of God, & as for the rest, it is required of the disposers, that every man be found faithful. Zachariah reproveth Joash & his princes for their Idolatry, they thought him to be a mad and malapart fellow, & put him to death. So when Jeremiah was sent to prophesy against the Temple, and the Citty, and to exhort them to amend their wages and their works, they could not bear his words, but threatened to kill him. Secondly, it reproveth those that account the Ministers, their Vassals and Slaues, whereas the case of a Pastor is not to be made an underling or a block for everyone to insult & tread upon, as the wicked Worldlings use them. This is the measure indeed that is met unto us, this is the recompense that is received by us, and this is the complaint that the Apostle maketh, I think that God hath set forth us, the last Apostles, as men appointed to death, for we are made a gazing stock unto the world, and to the Angels, and to men; unto this hour we both hunger and thirst, & are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling place. Whereas they should be regarded as the Ambassadors of God, and respected as his Stewards set over the house of God to dispense the mysteries of life and salvation. True it is, great contempt lieth upon our calling to the Ministry, even as much reproach is laid upon the profession of Christ in sincerity. The Prophet declareth that his adversaries rejoiced at his calamity, and hated him wrongfully, because he followed goodness, so do the Ministers of the Gospel suffer much hatred and contempt by wicked and profane men, because they discover their Hypocrisy and open their iniquity; yea, the word of God in their mouths is many times as a fretting Corasiue applied to their consciences, that they cannot welter and wallow so secretly and securely in their sins, as they would and as they wanted to do. When they are resolute and resolved to continue in sin, and think to rest and sleep quietly therein, as in a bed of ease, the word of God doth often raise them up, and rouse them out of their senseless security, and summoneth them to the bar of God's judgment. This is it that troubleth their peace and their patience, this maketh them to spurn against their persons and their calling, this causeth them to watch them narrowly, and to hunt after advantages through their infirmities, that thereby they may disgrace them: this draweth them to cast all contempt and dishonor upon their Office, that so their disorders and profaneness may not be espied. For how should they abide the Ministers of the word, that hate the word of God? Or how should they suffer the Ambassadors, that cannot endure the Ambassage and message that they bring? But we must arm our selves against the scorn and contempt of the world, which by wicked men is cast as mire and dirt in our faces, considering that we are the sweet savor of God as well in them that perish, as in them that are saved. Thirdly, the high excellency of this calling, reproveth those that account the Office to base and low for them and for their Children. Many there are that live by the Gospel, that are ashamed to preach the Gospel. They live by the Altar, and yet are ashamed to serve at the Alter. They can be content to have the Milk and to cloth themselves with the wool of the sheep, and yet disdain to feed the sheep. These are they that love the chief places at feasts, and to have the chief seats in the assemblies, and greetings in the Markets, and to be called of men Rabbi, Rabbi. Ambition and vain glory have tied up their tongues, and made them cleave to the roof of their mouths. Covetousness and idleness have choked them and stopped the passage of their voice. Pride in themselves and contempt of others, have sowed up their lips and made them cast the care of the flock upon their substitutes, who many times are as careless as their Masters, and in the mean season between them both, the sheep of Christ bought with his precious blood, go to wrack and run to ruin. What a shame is it, that any man should be raised up and advanced merely by the Gospel, and yet account the preaching of the Gospel a reproach to their high dignity? The son of God himself refused not to serve in this calling, he went about all Cities and Towns teaching in their Synagogues and preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom. If then Christ Jesus the son of God took pains in this calling, what son of the earth shall disdain to discharge this office that he hath undertaken, and by which he is maintained. Again, seeing the calling is so excellent, why should any be ashamed to consecrate their sons to God, in the service of the Ministry, thereby to gain souls to him and to his kingdom?

Fourthly, if it be a calling of such dignity, it reproveth those that run before they be sent, and wait not a lawful calling from God, that they discharge it afterward with peace of heart, and comfort of Conscience? We see many young men make more hast then good speed in entering into the Ministry, who for the most part want that judgment, staydnesse, experience, gravity, & moderation that is meet to be in men of that profession. Hence it is, that they are called by the name of Elders in the Scripture. The Apostle thought it necessary to give this charge to Timothy, a young man (though he were of rare hope, and of excellent gifts) To fly the lusts of youth, and to follow after righteousness, Faith, Love, and peace, with all them that call on the Lord with a pure heart. And in another place he saith, Let no man despise thy youth, but be unto them that believe an ensample, in word, in conversation, in Love, in Spirit, in Faith, in Pureness. If he had this need of instruction, howe much more others?

Fifthly, it reproveth those, that are so hand-fasted, that they repine at their maintenance that labor among them. How many places and Parishes are there, that regard not how they be taught; or whether they be taught or not, so they may be well dealt withal in their Tithes; that is, if they might pay little or nothing to maintain their Minister? There is grown in many congregations this agreement and bargain, between the Pastor and the people, if he will spare them in temporal things, they regard not how he deal with them in spiritual things. If they may pay little, they are content he shall preach little; If they may enjoy their Tithes at a low rate, they are well pleased, that he take his ease, and teach them seldom. But albeit, he preach in season, and out of season, and do his duty with all diligence, yet they murmur and repine at his allowaunce, and think everything too much, that is bestowed that way.

Lastly, it reproveth such as regard not the censures of the Church, inflicted upon evil doers. The censures of the Church are made as a scar-Crow, and esteemed of many as a mock. But if that power and authority were regarded in the Ministers hand, that the word of God alloweth and appointeth, whereby he is authorized to exercise spiritual jurisdiction in Church-matters, not only to preach, but to punish; not only to teach, but to correct; not only to instruct, but to excommunicate; then would the Office be magnified, then would the Ministry be esteemed according to the institution of them. Our Savior giving order and direction to inform the Governors of the Church, when scandals and offenses arose among them, addeth; Verily I say unto you, whatsoever ye bind on earth, shall be bound in Heaven; and whatsoever ye loose on earth, shall be loosed in Heaven. We see God promiseth to ratify the sentence pronounced and denounced in his name. The abridgement of this power is the contempt of the men, and of their Ministry, and the curbing & cutting short of their authority, doth open a gappe to all contumely and reproach of their persons and office. If a Magistrate should prescribe and ordain that Law which is wholesome and profitable to the Common-wealth, and have no power at all to punish the Malefactors and misdoers that transgress, who is it that would regard the Commandment? If a School-master had authority only to rule and to teach, but were restrained to take up the rod to correct and chastise the obstinate & sluggard, what Scholar would hearken or give ear to his teaching? In like manner, so long as the Minister is allowed only to speak the word, or to threaten, but stinted that he shall go no farther, his Ministry will be little regarded; as if a Master should tell some of his Scholars of their shrewde tricks, but were not licensed to punnish their evil doing. God hath joined authority to the Pastors office, & put into his hand the discipline of the Church, and the Ministers of God, have exercised & executed the same according to his ordinance. Hence it is, that the Apostle reprovng an heinous offense amongst the Corinthians, and showing the use of Ecclesiastical correction, saith, What will ye? Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love and in the spirit of meekness?

Secondly, seeing boldness to command under Christ, belongeth to the office of the Minister; it teacheth us, and putteth us in mind of many good duties; as first, to ask this gift of God, and crave of him to indue us with the zeal of his glory, and other graces of his spirit, that we may speak the word boldly, as we ought to speak. We see an example hereof in the Apostles, when they heard the threatenings of the enemies of the Gospel, They lift up their voices to God, with one accord, and said, O Lord, thou art the God, which hast made the heaven and the earth, the sea, and all things that are in them, behold their threatenings, and grant unto thy servants with all boldness to speak thy word. So, when the chief Priests said, Did not we straightly command you, that ye should not teach in his name? And behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with yoar Doctrine, and ye would bring this man's blood upon us. Then Peter and the Apostles answered, We ought rather to obey God then mē. Many men are endued with great gifts of learning and knowledge, but they want the tongue of the Learned to minister a word in season, they want zeal and utterance to deliver the word of God to the people. Let everyone therefore, seek to fit and furnish himself to this calling, and in Christ Jesus be bold to do this duty. This the Prophet saith, Crie allowed, spare not, lift up thy voice like a Trumpet, and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins.

This reproveth those that have the word in respect of persons, who dare not do their duties, and are afraid of men's faces. They would be counted the Ambassadors of God, but they are afraid to do their Masters message. Let such learn of John the Baptist, who shrunk not back, but was bold to tell Herod, that it was not lawful for him to take his Brothers Wife. We must not be Dastards and faint-hearted soldiers, to fight the Lord's battles, but first be sure, we have a good warrant out of the word, and then go boldly into the field, and fear not to look the enemy in the face. True it is, if we have not our Commission signed and sealed unto us, we have just cause to fear; we speak in our own names, and not in the name of God: we send our selves, we are not sent of him; We are our own Messengers, to do our own Message, not the Ambassadors of the eternal God. But when he hath put his word in our mouths, we must go to those that he hath sent us, and whatsoever he commandeth us, that we must speak. So, when God had stretched out his hand, and touched the mouth of the Prophet Jeremiah, he said; Bee not afraid of their faces, for I am with thee, to deliver thee, saith the Lord. Thus he speaketh to Ezekiel, I have made thy Face strong against their Faces, and thy Fore-head hard against their Fore-heads, I have made thy Fore-head as the Adamant, and harder then the Flint: Fear them not therefore, neither be affrayde at their looks; for they are a Rebellious house.

Secondly, it teacheth them not to loose their Authority, and so to shame their Calling, and their Mayster that hath put them in that Calling, bringing them-selves and their Ministry, under the subjection and slavery of others. The Apostle by all means seeketh to magnifye his Ministry, and to beautify his Calling. Hence he saith, Am not I an Apostle, am not I free? This reproveth those that serve the lusts and pleasure of others, and dare do nothing to displease such as are in high place. Thus Aaron in the absence of Moses offended, who was at the commandment of the people, when they said unto him, Make us God's to go before us, he received their golden earrings, and fashioned it with the grauing tool, and made of it a Molten Calf. The like we see in Uriah the Priest, when Ahaz (who did not uprightly in the sight of the Lord, but walked in the way of the Kings of Israel) saw the Altar that was at Damascus, he sent unto him the pattern of the Altar, and the fashion of it, and all the Workemanship thereof, and he made an Altar in all points, like to that which the King had sent from Damascus. This departing from the Commandment of God, to please the humor or honor of mighty men, must be far from us. We have a plain way set before us, we ought to walk in it, we must not decline either to the right hand, or to the left hand. We must not make merchandise of the word of God, but deal faithfully with God and his people. The Prophet Micah complaineth of such Prophets in his time, as flattered the people in their sins, And Prophesied unto them of Wine and of strong drink, and in such Prophets the people delighted. The Lord chargeth Jeremiah, to truss up his loins, to arise, and to speak to the Children of Israel all that he commanded him, not to be afraid of their faces, lest he destroy him before them. Let us beware of such smooth tongues, that flatter with their lips, and bring us in danger of destruction. Solomon teacheth us, That a man which flattereth his Neighbour, spreadeth a Net for his steppes; declaring thereby, that as a Birde which is taken in the Net, is in danger of death; so they which believe flatterers, fall into great perilles of Soul, of Body, of Goods, of good name, of life.

Thirdly, it teacheth the Ministers, to take heed they abuse not their Authority, and turn it into tyranny, but employ it unto edification, not to the destruction of the Church, or any member thereof. This the Apostle plainly teacheth concerning himself, Though I should boast somewhat more of our authority, which the Lord hath given us for edification, and not for your destruction, I should have no shame. And in another place, We have not Dominion over your faith, but we are helpers of your joy, for by Faith ye stand. We must remember and consider that we are under Christ: we are his Substitutes and Lieutenants. He is the chief Shepherd of the Sheep. We must not bear our selves as Lord's over his heritage, but as ensamples to the flock. Christ himself testifieth, that he was among them as one that served: For the son of man came not to be served, but to serve, and to give his life for the ransom of many. Let us have the same mind in us, that was in christ Jesus; let us behave our selves as Stewards, not as Lord's; as Officers, not as Princes; as Ministers, not as Usurpers; as Stewards, not as Masters of the house.

Lastly, it serveth for instruction of the people, that they despise not the Ministry of the word, but always ready to hear it with reverence. For wheresoever there is authority in the speaker, there should be fear and reverence in the hearer. They are Ambassadors sent, not from Man, but from God; they speak not in their own names, but in the name of God; they publish not their own Dreams or devises, but the Doctrine of God, and therefore ought reverently and obediently to be regarded. Thus the Prophet teacheth us to reason, The people must hear the Law at his Mouth, for he is the Messenger of the Lerd of Hosts. True it is, they are men that bring it, but they are Messengers sent of GOD, they are subject to the same passions that we are, but God hath put his word in their hearts, and in their mouths: and therefore, both they and it must be received with all reverence, and entertained with the inward obedience of the soul. Hence it is that our Savior Christ saith, He that heareth you, heareth me, and he that heareth you, heareth him that sent me. The Prophet teacheth, that their feet are beautiful that bring glad tidings of peace, and bring glad tydings of good things. They are said to be worthy of double honor, and to teach the way of salvation. If a man had lost a precious Jewel, and Rich Pearl, which was all the riches and substance of his house, and being in this case, should meet with a man that can tell him who robbed him of it, where it is, and how he may come to have it again, how would he respect him, and reward him? A godly Minister is such a one unto thee, who when Adam had lost himself, and all his posterity, and that peerless Jewel of righteousness the whole wealth of our souls, can truly tell us who did steal it away from us, and how it is to be recovered again. The Devil is the Thief; Christ doth restore it: Faith applieth Christ, the Word of God worketh Faith; the Minister preacheth the word whereby we believe. How well dost thou account of that Physician, and how highly doest thou esteem of him, who when thy health is lost, and sickness fallen upon thee, can tell thy disease, open the cause of it, show thee the cure and remedy of it, and restore thee to thy former state and strength; so when thy soul is sick unto the death, and even to damnation, the man of God can heal the deadly wound that Satan hath given, and apply a sovereign plaster for thee, made of the precious blood of Christ.

From hence all men may learn, how to esteem God's Ministers, and with what affection we are to hear them. The Sheep of Christ will hear his voice and follow him. This is a notable token to know the children of God by: to disobey the Ministers of God, is to disobey God himself; & to despise their word, is to despise the word of God himself. Is not the Ambassador of an earthly Prince received with great honor & reverence? Is not his message received as undoubtedly as if the Prince himself were present? Are not they which despise his authority as heinously punished, and as vilely accounted of, as if they resisted and rebelled against the King's own person? Shall then the Messengers of the living God, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, be received less worthily than the other, whose authority is greater, whose message is weightier, whose place is higher? It is requisite therefore, that the people fear and reverence their Minister, or else they will in no case honor and obey him. For where fear is not present, all honor is absent; & whosoever scorneth to perform this duty of fear, let him be well assured, he contemneth not him, but the Lord that sent him. This fear is to be yielded, not to his person, but to his Office. For as the Apostle exhorteth the Thessalonians to acknowledge them that labored among them, and have them in singular love for their works sake; so we ought to fear those that are set over us in the Lord, for their worker sake. So he witnesseth that the Galatians received him as an Angel of God; yea more than so, they received him as Jesus Christ himself. This was not as he was a man, but as the Minister of God: this was not for the excellency of his person, which he acknowledgeth to be simple, and testifieth to be contemptible; but he was received for that excellent message which he brought among them. Therefore Paul writing to the Phillippians, saith, As ye have always obeyed me, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, so make an end of your salvation with fear and trembling. This reproveth all those that are stubborn and disobedient, and will not obey the word of exhortation delivered unto them: such also, as hear not often and constantly, but seldom and carelessly, as if they were persuaded, that they had nothing to do with God, or God with his word: such as when they hear are not stricken with any fear of the presence of God, or of the power of the word, or of the truth that is delivered, so that they never can hear aright, seeing GOD accounteth those only the right Hearers, that tremble at his Word, and are of humble and contrite hearts.

Lastly, such as are content to hear and listen with their outward ears, but it is no longer than they list, and no farther than their own fantasies are fed, and their desires followed, and their humors pleased. They are willing to hear, until their special sins be reprov'd: but when they find themselves touched, or their iniquities (which they dwell in) discovered, they grow out of patience, and begin to revile and rail at the Ministers that seek with a good Conscience to discharge their duties. This is an evident note of a corrupt hearer, and a plain testimony of an evil heart. We must be ready to hear the curses of the Law, as well as the promises of the Gospel: we must account it a benefit to be reprov'd our selves, as well as to hear others reprov'd. A sick man would not content himself to have the Physician show unto others their diseases, but would have his own disease discovered unto him; so is it profitable unto us, to see our own sins, and to hear our own corruptions revealed and manifested unto us. If we once desire to come out of our sins and iniquities wherein we have lived; if once they become bitter and unpleasant unto us, it will be no grief or burden, to see our selves stripped, and laid open to the view and sight of the world. Let us therefore with meekness of spirit submit our selves to the stroke of God's word, and not rage when we are reproved, as the manner of those is, that purpose to persevere, and to continue in their sins unto the end.

Verse 9. [Yet for your loves sake I rather beseech thee.]

Here we have the second part of the diverse reason before remembered. The former Verse, was a preparation or entrance into the prayer or petition of Paul, and containeth the authority that he had (if he would use it) to command Philemon that which was convenient for him to do. These words are a mild mitigation of the former; namely, that albeit he might command him by his office, yet he would rather entreat and beseech him thorough love. The Apostle having to do in this place with a matter of Christian moderation and equity, wherein he might from the Lord command with authority, doth notwithstanding pray and beseech; and when he might lawfully urge and require the practice thereof, he rather resolveth to use gentle, humble, and loving means. The Doctrine arising from hence, is this; That the Servants of God, ought to use mildness and meekness in delivering the will and message of God to his people, rather entreating them with lenity, then commanding them with authority, albeit they have liberty so to do. Courteous and gentle means are first to be used, if they may prevail, rather then checking and chiding sharply and rigorously with Offenders. We see this in Christ Jesus himself, who did not break the bruised reed, nor quench the smoking Flaxe, he saith, Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will ease you, for my yoke is easy, and my burden is light. This appeareth in sundry places of Paul's Epistles, Rom. 12, 1. I beseech you Brethren by the mercies of Christ; that ye give up your bodies a living Sacrifice, holy, and acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable serving of God. So, 2 Cor. 5, 20. Now then are we Ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you through us, we pray you in Christ's stead, that ye be reconciled to God. And in the tenth Chapter of the same Epistle, I Paul myself, beseech you, by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, which when I am present among you, am base, but am bold toward you being absent. Thus the Apostle Peter speaketh, Dearly beloved, I beseech you as Pilgrims and Straungers, abstain from fleshly lusts which fight against the soul, and have your conversation honest among the Gentiles. Likewise the Apostle John writing to a Noble woman by birth but more noble by Faith and Religion, saith, I now beseech thee (Lady) not as writing a new Commandment unto thee, but the same that we had from the beginning, that we love one another. Whereby we see, that it is a duty required of us, that in delivering the word of God, & in declaring his will, we should use mildness rather then sharpness; gentleness, rather then roughness; beseeching rather then commanding; and meekness of spirit, rather then threatening of judgment.

Now to confirm this doctrine, sundry reasons may be rendered and produced. First, we are bound to use those means, and to take that course, which is most forcible & effectual. But to deal with love and lenity, and to handle our brethren kindly and meekly, is most likely to prevail with most men. Therefore the Apostle requireth, that the servant of God must not strive, but must be gentle toward all men, apt to teach, suffering the evil, instructing them with meekness that are contrary minded, proving if God at any time will give thē repentance, that they may acknowledge the truth, and come to amendment, out of the snare of the devil, &c. There is no way so available to bring evil men out of the dangers wherein they stand, who are as it were taken prisoners, and made bondslaves to do the Devils will, then to allure them by gentleness, to draw them by long suffering, and to overcome them by patience.

Secondly, this course well and duly observed, serveth to persuade them with whom we deal of our love and tender affection towards them. For loving and friendly dealing, argueth loving and affectionate minds, and with whomsoever we have to do, it is a great means of prevailing, and the ready way to bend and incline him unto that which is good, and to turn him from that which is evil, when his persuasions are perceived to tend to the profit and benefit of him whom we would persuade. We shall never do any good, or prevail with our Brother, to bring him into the right way, unless he can assure his own heart that we love him, and seek his good, and desire his Salvation. It is Love in the Speaker, that moveth the Hearer to embrace that which he speaketh, to like that which he teacheth, to hate that which he reproveth, to avoid that which he condemneth, and to practice that which he commendeth. We must work this Opinion, and ground this persuasion in their hearts, that we love them, and that all our Doctrines, Instructions, and Reproofes, proceed only from this Fountain, before we can move them to Attention, Reverence, and Obedience, unto that which they hear delivered. Hence it is, that the Apostle in sundry places, writing to diverse Churches, and moving them to follow the examples and exhortations given unto them, laboreth to persuade them of his unfeigned Love towards them, as it appeareth, Phillippians 4, 1. Therefore, my Brethren, beloved and longed for, my joy, and my Crown, so continue in the Lord, ye beloved.

Thirdly, we are to imitate our Head and Master Christ Jesus, he used not his Authority and Power that was in him, he dealt not roughly and severely with his enemies, but meekly and mercifully, and most compassionately, he was meek, and as a Lamb before his shearer. When he might according to his mighty power in Justice have destroyed his Persecutors and enemies, he prayed for them, he entreated pardon for them, that their sin might be forgiven. Therefore the Apostle Peter teacheth us, that we are provoked to a patient bearing of wrongs, and suffering of troubles, by the example of Christ, saying, For heerunto ye are called, for Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an ensample, that ye should follow his steps, who did no sin, neither was there guile found in his mouth. Seeing then, that mild and merciful dealing pulleth out of the snare of the devil, openeth the love of the speaker; and lastly, maketh us like to Christ, whose example is a perfect pattern of all meekness and moderation, it followeth, that it is carefully to be used of us when we speak to the people of God, in the name of God.

Let us see what Uses may be raised and remembered unto us out of this Doctrine. First, we learn that mercy and compassion, yea all tokens and testimonies of love are to be shown toward Malefactors, even when Justice is to be executed, and punishment inflicted, and the course of Law is to proceed against them, that they may know it is not malice, but Justice, hath brought this fall upon thē; it is not their blood, but their good that is sought, and the good of others. The truth hereof we see practiced in Joshua, when Achan was apprehended, and his sin discovered, whereby he had offended God, sinned against his express commandment, and troubled Israel, he said unto him, My son, I beseech thee, give glory to the Lord God of Israel, & make confession unto him, and show me now what thou hast done, hide it not from me. Cruelty in deed, or bitterness in word, even toward evil doers that are already adjudged, or stand at the bar to be judged, is barbarous and inhuman. To insult over a poor prisoner, or a condemned man that is guilty of death, and carried to the place of execution, standeth neither with an human disposition, nor with a Christian affection, nor with Brotherly compassion. Behold the proud and insolent behavior of the savage and beastly minded Pharisees and Priests against our Savior Christ, mocking, spitting, buffeting, railing, reviling, whipping, and crucifieng him between two thieves. They were not content to seek his life, and to shed his blood, but laded him with contempt and all shameful calumniation. This also is the practice of their successors the Romish Clergy, who are the followers of them in malice and cruelty, when the faithful have been, not only conuented before them, but condemned of them, they have embrued their hands, and defiled their garments with their blood, which crieth to the God of Heaven for judgment; neither were they contented to feed their eyes with their torments, and to satisfy their lusts with their sufferings, but proceeded to all extreamities of rage and madness, railing at them, and speaking all manner of evil against them. This abuse is sometimes too usual and common in the places of Justice & judgment, from whence all gall and bitterness should be banished: we may hear unseemly jests, bitter taunts, & uncharitable reproaches cast out of their mouths (as a loathsome vomit out of the stomach) who should Remember that they sit in the seat of God, and are to execute the Judgments of God, with whom is no iniquity, nor respect of persons, neither receiving of reward. Jehu the King of Israel, executing the judgments of the Lord against the house of Ahab, according to all the word of the Lord, is threatened himself to be punished, because he did it with a cruel and bloody affection; The work was good, but his heart was evil; the deed done was righteous, but the manner of doing was corrupt; he respected not the glory of God, but his own revenge; he did it not to serve God, but to serve himself. This was the cause why the Lotde visited him, his house, and all Israel for it, and revenged their blood thus shed, because he failed in the manner, though otherwise he did that which is just and right. We must regard not only what we do, but in what sort and manner, to what end and purpose we do it. It is our duty to show Mercy and Love to Offenders, even in punnishing of Offenders. We must have respect to their bodies and souls: We must admonish, reprove, threaten, and correct, in great compassion and mercy, not in rage and revenge to fly upon them.

But here the question may be asked, whither a Christian man may not be angry with them with whom he dealeth, being stubborn and perverse, and deal sharply with them? I answer, the Apostle giveth direction what to do in this case, Be angry, but sin not; let not the sun go down upon your wrath, neither give place to the Devil. If we break out suddenly into any passion, let us speedily recall that affection, and not suffer it long to lodge with us. But there is a godly anger, and an holy kind of indignation; there is a lawful zeal to be commended in the servants of God, which they are to conceive inwardly, and to utter outwardly against sin, not against their perverseness. So it is said of Christ, that he looked round about him angrily, mourning also for the hardness of their hearts. His anger was joined with pity and compassion, & it was not so much against the men, as against their blindness. The Church of Ephesus is commended, that it hated the works of the Nicolaitans, which Christ also hateth. It hated not the Nicolaitans themselves, as they were men, but the works of the Nicolaitans. Again, it may be said, that the Prophet David, Psal. 109. and in many other places, prayed for the destruction of his enemies, both their persons and posterity. So did Elijah for fire from Heaven, to destroy the Captains that came to take him. I answer, we have not the same spirit that they had, and consequently have not the same warrant. They were Prophets, and God revealed unto them that they were obstinate enemies, so that they were enabled to judge, that their malice and wickedness was incurable, and that they would never repent, They had an extraordinary measure of God's spirit, not only to see their present condition, but to discern their future confusion; and hence it is, that they were endued with a pure zeal of God's Glory, and not carried with an evil desire of Reuenge, of Envy, of Hated, and of Emulation.

Again, the imprecations of the Prophets, are prophesied of plagues to come, but we have no such extraordinary instinct revealed unto us, to know what is to come: wherefore, we cannot allege their examples for our imitation, we must walk in the Kings High way, and follow the general rules of the Scripture, to deal mildly, to put away pride and cruelty toward those that are under us, to banish tyranny; and treading of them under our feet. This is to be observed of all Fathers, Masters, and Governors, remembering that in Christ we are all Brethren, that by Nature we are all of one mold and making, that (as men) we have all one Creator. This consideration we find to have been in Job toward those of his Family. If I did contemn the judgment of my Servant, and of my Maid, when they did contend with me; what then shall I do when God standeth up? And when he shall visit me, what shall I answer? He that hath made me in the womb, hath he not made him? Hath not he alone fashioned us in the womb? This the Apostle also teacheth, Eph. 6. Ye Masters do the same things unto them, putting away threatening: and know that even your Mayster also is in heaven, neither is there respect of persons with him. So then, we are to deal with gentleness, not with roughness; we are rather to seek to win others by love, then to compel them by rigor. We must endeavor that all bitterness, and anger, and wrath, crying, and evil speaking be put away from us: we ought to be courteous one to another, and tender-hearted: we are not to think that any are privileged, and freed from reproof, but we must reprove meekly and modestly, least whilst we go about to amend them, we make them worse. It is an heavenly Counsel given by the Apostle, Brethren, if a man be suddenly taken in any offense, ye which are spiritual restore such an one with the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted: Bear ye one another's burden, and so fulfill the Law of Christ. Where we see, he would have the faithful endeavor to reform a man with all gentleness, when he hath done amiss. We must not flatter him in his sins, for then we encourage him, and uphold him in his wickedness, nay, we betray him into the hands of the Devil, and by that means drown him deeper in destruction. Whensoever therefore our Brother falleth into evil, it is no love nor charity to cloak his evil doings, or to dissemble his lewdness which he hath committed, but we must have a care that he may rise again. If a man be in the mire, or in a ditch, we will reach him our hand to help him out; much more ought we to have pity on his soul, when we see it sinking into perdition?

Secondly, seeing we are to win men rather by gentleness and love, we must acknowledge that great wisdom and discretion is required in the Ministry, to divide the word of God aright, and to be able to apply himself to every degree and calling of men. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, writing to Timothy, Rebuke not an Elder, but exhort him as a father, and the younger men as brethren, the Elder-women as Mothers, the younger as Sisters with all pureness. There is indeed a profitable and necessary use both of rough and tender dealing. When the people of God went out to war. the Lord commanded them to offer conditions of peace to that Citty, if it refuse to make peace they should besiege it, smite it, and destroy it. So should we, when we execute our Office, first offer peace before we proclaim war; first, allure by Gentleness, before we thunder out judgments; first, exhort, before we threaten. In the material building, all the stones that are to be fitted to the building, are not of one nature, some are soft and easy to be hewed and hammered, others more hard and of a flintier marble disposition, they require sharp tools, strong blows, & sturdy arms, before they can be brought into form, or be squared for their place which they are to hold. So it is with the lively stones of the spiritual Temple of God, some have soft hearts of flesh, & are of humble & contrite spirits, like the bruised reed or the smoking flax, others have hearts hard as the Adament, and cannot easily be brought to feel the strokes of the word of God. These are not to be dealt withal and handled alike, but after a diverse manner. This is the counsel of the Apostle Jude, Have compassion of some, in putting difference, and other save with fear, pulling them out of the fire, and hate even that Garment which is spotted by the flesh. This serveth to reprove, first, such as use unseasonable lenity, when Godly severity is required. Some diseases, require sharp medicines. This is a great sin, whether it be in the family, in the common Wealth, or in the Church. Eli heard many complaints against his sons, that they sinned against God, and caused his people to abhor his offerings, yet he did bear with them, and was not sharp toward them as he ought to have been, he said unto them, Why do ye such things? for of all this people I hear evil reports of you: do no more, my sons, for it is no good report that I hear, which is, that ye make the Lord's people to trespass. He shown mercy, where he should show severity, and he winked at those that were worthy to be punished. This proceedeth not from a love to our Children, but rather from a looseness in our selves, and a carelessness of their good and salvation. This causeth vice to increase and maketh sin grow in all places. The like we see in Ahab King of Israel, when God had delivered a cruel enemy into his hand, he spared him, and suffered him to escape out of his hands, a man whom God appointed to die, and thereby is threatened, that his own life should redeem and ransom the life of his enemy, and so the one pay the price of the other. The like we might handle in Saul, who receiving a commandment to destroy Agag, and his substance, together with the Amalekites, he gave life to those that God would have him put to death, and shown mercy to such as should be smitten with the sword. This negligence in punishing offenders is too common in the common Wealth, and is a means to increase sin, to see sin punished. It is a true saying of the wise man, The blueness of the wound serveth to purge the evil, and the stripes within the bowels of the Belly. Thus it falleth out also oftentimes in the Church. When the incestuous person among the Corinthians was (according to the Ordinance of God,) to be cast out, he was suffered in the Church, and had not the censures of the Church executed against him, so that the Apostle telleth them, that their rejoicing was not good, Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump. Such was the carelessness and coldness in many of the Churches of Asia, they were too mild toward Heretics and evil livers, and suffered the sword of excommunication to rust in the sheath, which should be drawn out to the terror and fear of all stubborn and unrepentant sinners. Secondly, it reproveth such as are too sharp and rigorous, against offenders, and forget all rules of Charity toward them. All laws must not be written with blood. The law of God, albeit it did not stint what stripes every offender should have that deserved stripes, yet it limiteth and restraineth what number they should not exceed, that the offender might think himself loved, not hated: all the Corrections that God layeth upon his Church come from love. True it is, the Pastors and Ministers are to rebuke such as are fallen, but when they see sorrow for sin, and repentance from dead works wrought in them, they should begin to raise them up again and comfort them with the precious promises of the Gospel, least they should be overwhelmed with despair, & be swallowed up with over-much heaviness. Our Savior hath set down an order perpetually to be observed touching offenders, If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him, if he hear thee, thou hast won thy brother, but if he hear thee not, take yet with thee one or two, that by the mouth of two or three Witnesses every word may be confirmed, &c. We must proceed slowly, and as it were with a leaden foot against our brethren, and beware of rash and hasty judgment. The ancient Church in former times offended this way being so austere and severe against offenders, who for small offenses enjoined punishment for the space of many years. This is the sin of such as are of the separation, and have departed from our Churches, condemning our Church to be no Church, our Ministers to be no Ministers, our sacraments to be no sacraments, refusing to hear the word at our mouths, to pray and communicate with our people, and to perform other religious duties with us. Thus they have noted and marked us out with the black cole of condemnation, who deserve rather to be excommunicated by us, had they not voluntarily excommunicated themselves from us. On the other side, it behooveth us to show compassion to them that sin of ignorance or infirmity, and to season our admonitions and exhortations with a loving affection, let us bear with them so long as we see any hope of amendment, following the example of Moses, who mourned and prayed for the Israelites fallen in Idolatry, and of Christ, who wept over Jerusalem to make them weep for their sins, who seemed to have no sight or feeling of them. Lastly, it reproveth the Church of Rome, who are very Tirants and Tormenters of the people of God, for as they have burdened them from time to time with men's Traditions, so for every slight matter they have thundered against them with their excommunications, and thereby made themselves terrible to the whole world. Hence it is, that the Pope and his Bishops threaten Princes, challenge authority to excommunicate them, to depose them, and to discharge their subjects of subjection and allegiance. This is cruelty joined with impiety, this is severity accompanied with Hipocrisie, this is cursing and banning, contrary to the Christian faith, and therefore being causeless they cannot come.

Thirdly, and last of all, we learn for our obedience, that whensoever entreating, beseeching, gentle, or loving dealing is used to call men home to God and to themselves, it is their duty to yield themselves and to embrace earnestly the mercies of God offered unto them. The sin of contempt and contumacy is fearful, when the bountifulness of God is despised, his mercies loathed, his patience and long suffering abused. If we will not hear when he crieth to us, we shall cry also in the days of our misery, and he will not hear us in our trouble, but mock at our affliction. Our Savior remembereth the Jews, that he would often have gathered them together, as an Hen gathereth her Chickens under her wings, but they would not, and therefore their Habitation should be left unto them desolate. First, he preached mercy, then judgment, first he gathereth, then he scattereth, first he counselleth, then he confoundeth. This is the order which the Apostle teacheth to be observed by the Lord himself, in the first place, by patience and long suffering he calleth men to repentance, nevertheless if they will not turn unto him, but harden their hearts against the means and Ministry that he useth to call them, he hoardeth and heapeth up wrath for them against the day of wrath. This hath been the dealing of God with us in this Land more then fifty years, he hath preached unto us by his mercies, he hath entreated us and provoked us by peace, by plenty, by patience, by temporal blessings, by spiritual blessings, by prosperity which the glorious Gospel of Christ hath brought with it, he hath planted his Vine among us, he hath looked for good fruit answerable to such great means and long mercies. But what have we performed according to that which God hath expected? and how have we behaved our selves in respect of this bountifulness which we have tasted and received? Surely, we become every year worse then other, more barren, and less fruitful; we are not only void of good fruits, but full of evil fruits, bearing nothing but leaves of vanity, and shows of Hipocrisie. We cannot deny, but God (as a careful dresser of his Vineyard) hath often times been constrained to take his pruning knife into his hands, he hath scourged us by famine, and chastened us by plague and pestilence; yea, still doth visit us in sundry places, and yet though he have put us into the furnace, and tried us with the fire of his judgments, he cannot purge out our dross, or take away our tin, or cleanse away our corruptions from us, but still we swerve from him, & swerve with blasphemies, with oaths, with profaneness, with drunkenness, with whoredom, with contempt of the Gospel; we abound with the fruits of the flesh, and works of darkness, which agree not with that light into which we are brought. The word of God was more reverently esteemed, better regarded, and more carefully practiced thirty; yea, forty years ago, then it is in these declining times in which we live. We have a long time gone backward, and not forward; we grow downward, and not upward; we are farther from the Kingdom of Heaven, and not nearer. What then remaineth for us, but a fearful looking for of judgment and violent fire, which shall destroy his adversaries? If he open the Treasures of his wrath, and the store-houses of his judgments, if he bring forth the arrows of his quiver, and draw his sword out of his sheath, let us prepare to meet our God by unfeigned repentance, let us forsake our sins which bring all curses and callamities upon us. If his mercies will not move us, his judgments shall remove us out of our places. The Fig-Tree is first Husbanded and digged about, if the digging and dunging of it will not make it bring forth fruit, it is appointed to be cut down. The patience of the Lord goeth before denuntiation of judgment, or execution of punishment. A Physician never aduentureth upon a desperate Physic, but in a desperate disease. A Surgeon applieth salves and all possible remedies before he proceed to the cutting off of Arm or Leg: So hath the Lord dealt with us, & so he doth deal with us, if his word could convert us, his judgments should not overtake us; if his mercy could turn us, his justice should not destroy us; if his love could save us, his wrath should not condemn us.

[Being such a one, even Paul aged, and now also a Prisoner of Jesus Christ.]

We heard in the words before, Paul's beseeching of Philemon, amplified by a diverse reason of commanding. Now we have to consider the second part of the sentence, which is a description of his person, generally and particularly, which hath great force to move him and instruct him. He mentioneth his age and the term of his life now almost ended, together with his afflictions and bands for Christ's sake and the Gospels, thereby to teach him, not to be ashamed of him, or to be offended at him, but to reverence his person, and to and to obey his word. Here then we see, that the Apostle doth challenge much to be due unto him (which he might justly do) in regard of sundry privileges of his calling, of his age, of his sufferings and imprisonment that he sustained for the cause of Christ. Heereby we learn, that such as God hathmarked out from others by age, gifts, or other privileges are much to be regarded and revered. We must acknowledge it to be a duty belonging unto us to yield much to such as God hath distinguished and separated from the common order of men, by length of life, by greatness of gifts, or other worthy respects which they have received. The Apostle teacheth that the King and Magistrate are to be honored, Let every soul be subject to the higher powers, for there is no power but of God, and the powers that be, are ordained of God. And 1 Pet. 2. 17. Honorall men, love brotherly fellowship, fear God, honor the King. Thus also he speaketh a little before, Submit yourselves unto all manner Ordinance of man for the Lord's sake, whether it be unto the King as unto the superior, or unto Governors as unto them that are sent of him, for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well. Touching such as are superiors in age; it is a precept given by Moses, Thou shalt rise up before the hore head, and honor the person of the old man, and dread thy God, I am the Lord. Where we see the Lord prescribeth that duty to be performed to old age, which Paul challengeth to himself: being aged in this place. An example hereof we have recorded in the book of Job in Elihu, when Job's three friends ceased to answer him, he began saying, I am young in years, and ye are ancient, therefore I doubted, and was afraid to show you mine opinion, for I said, the days shall speak, and the multitude of years shall teach wisdom. Likewise touching the teachers and Ministers of the Gospel, the Apostle saith, The Elders that rule well, let them be had in double honor, specially they which labor in the word and Doctrine. And in another place, Obey them that have the oversight of you, and submit yourselves, for they watch for your souls, as they that must give accounts, acknowledge them that labor among you and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you, that ye have them in singular love for their works sake. Lastly, to endure adversity, to suffer imprisonment, and to be put in fetters for Christ's sake, is so far from putting them to shame that are in Chaines, and ought to be so far from offending any, that rather it commendeth their person, beutifieth their Ministry, adorneth their gifts, magnifieth their calling, and maketh their Office more effectual, and much more to be respected, and more available to edification. It is an honor to be set as an ouerseer in the Church, but it is a greater honor to suffer in Christ's cause.

Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, Be not ashamed of the Testimony of our Lord, neither of me his prisoner, but be partaker of the afflictions of the Gospel, according to the power of God. And Ephe, 3. 13. I desire that ye faint not at my tribulations for your sakes, which is your glory. All these Testimonies serve to confirm this truth sufficiently and abundantly, that such as God hath made any way superiors unto us, and preferred before us in calling, in age, in gifts, in sufferings, or any other perogatives, are much to be accounted off, and greatly to be respected of us.

This truth will better appear unto us, and be more deeply grounded in us, if we mark and observe the reasons whereon it standeth as upon a firm foundation that cannot be shaken. For first, it standeth with the Ordinance and commandment of God as we see in the xx. Chapter of the book of Exodus where the law is established, and a promise of blessing annexed. Thus the Apostle expresseth the one and the other, Ephe 6. Honor thy Father and Mother (which is the first commandment with promise) that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on earth. If this be a precept of God, that we ought to honor those whom God hath any way honored, and if the obedience unto it be joined with our good, and that good which all men so much desire; to wit, length of days and continuance of long life upon the earth; if we respect either his precept, or regard our own profit, we are bound to acknowledge those privileges of age or gifts which he hath given them, and to honor them for them.

Secondly, all superiors, in what respect soever they be placed above us and set before us, do bear the Image of God. He hath sealed them in the forehead with his own stamp, and marked them out with the print of his own finger, that they should resemble him. He hath advanced them to be instead of fathers, and honored them to bear a simillitude of his person. In the Magistrate is the Image of the power and glory of God, Dan. 2, 37. In the father, of his providence and authority; in the Elder, of his continuance and eternity: in the learned man of his knowledge and wisdom. Now, wheresoever the least and lowest title of the image of God appeareth, albeit it be blemished with many infirmities, it is to be confessed and acknowledged; yea, to be honored and revered.

Thirdly, God will be severely revenged on all such as break his order, and seek to confound those things which he hath distinguished. The light of nature hath imprinted this Ordinance of God in all men, and the Heathen, living in darkness and destitute of the light of the word of God and of the knowledge of true Godliness, have established wholesome laws and sharp statutes to that purpose, to avoid confusion, and to maintain a peaceable communion one with another. Old age was honorable among the Gentiles, so that the moe white hairs they had on their heads, the moe wrinkles they had in their faces, and the less strength in their bodies: the more were they esteemed of their equals, feared of young men, and honored of all men. As every year did add to the time of their age, so it added reverence to their persons. When the keepers of the house trembled, the strong men bowed, the grinders ceased, the doors were shut up, the lights were darkened, the Almond Tree flourished, and the Daughters of singing were abased (all which are evident signs, not only of old age coming toward us, and approaching near unto us, but present with us and attending upon us) then were they most regarded, all other arose from their seats to honor them, no man durst utter an unseemly word, show an irreverent gesture, or commit an ungodly action before them. If then we go about to quench the light of nature, and refuse to reverence those that God hath exalted, it is no marvel if he draw them out to shame and bring them to misery which rise up against lawful authority, or despise such as he hath honored, ouertaking them in their devises, turning their wisdom into foolishness, and bringing upon them final confusion. We see this in the fearful examples of Absalom, Ahitophell, Shimei, Joab, and such like Childen of rebellion. The son of Noah that mocked his father, is cursed with an heavy and horrible curse. The Children of Ierico that derided and reproached the Prophet, were torn in pieces with two Bears that came out of the Wilderness. Seeing therefore that all superiors have the Image of God shining upon them, and seeing God on the one side commandeth them to be honored, and on the other side threateneth to punish such as despise them; it followeth, that such as God preferreth, we must highly regard and yield them much honor.

The uses remain to be considered. First, we learn from hence that it is no disgrace or disparagement to a man's modesty, when such as are bound by the law of God and nature and by all good order, do forget to yield their superiors their due, or (which is worse) do in pride and contempt insult over them, to claim and challenge that which is his right. The Apostle doth oftentimes remember his place and calling to the Corinthians, which had forgotten him and rejected him. He putteth them in mind of his Office, Am I not an Apostle? am I not free? have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord? are ye not my work in the Lord? If I be not an Apostle unto other, yet doubtless I am unto you, for ye are the seal of my Apostleship in the Lord. This we see likewise in Samuel, I am old and Gray-headed, I have walked before you from my Childhood unto this day, bear record of me before the Lord and before his anointed, whose Ox have I taken? or whose Ass have I taken? or whom have I done wrong too? or whom have I hurt? or of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it you. We are bound to yield to every man his due as a debt which we owe unto him, according as God hath distributed his Talents among the several degrees of men. This Christ himself teacheth, Give unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's, and to God the things which are God's. So the Apostle saith, Rom 13, 7. Give to all men their duty, tribute, to whom ye owe tribute; Custom, to whom Custom; fear, to whom fear; honor, to whom ye owe honor. Whensoever therefore this Honor, or Fear, or Reverence is denied us which God hath given unto us, it is no Pride or haughtiness of heart, to challenge it, and require it at their hands that are bound to yield it. If they will not know us, it is lawful for us to know our selves. If they contemn us and cast us at their feet, we must learn to magnify and make much of our Callings and Guiftes. This reproveth and condemneth those that dispraise and disable them-selves too much, wherein there may be as close and secret Pride, as in them that rise up early to praise themselves. We must not deny the graces of GOD that are in us, but acknowledge them to the praise of God, and submit our selves to the judgment of others, that will not flatter for us for that we have not, nor craftily conceal that which we have.

Secondly, seeing such as excel us in Age, or any Guiftes, ought to be much esteemed of us, and prevail very much with us: it putteth all Inferiors in mind of many good duties. First, it is required of them to praise and commend the Guiftes of God in them, and give the glory of them to God the giver. We must magnify them, and prefer them before all others that have not the same Guiftes, though they be our enemies and such as hate us. We must not so much consider their persons, how they are affected toward us, as their Guiftes, they are the Guiftes of God, and therefore should be acknowledged and approved. They have worthy Guiftes that we want, and yet are given for our good and benefit. We do not see their Guiftes so defiled with infirmities and mingled with Corruptions as our own are; all which things should help to add Grace and Glory to the Guiftes that are in others. When Pharaoh perceived the great Wisdom that was in Joseph, he spared not to speak of it, he shamed not to place him over all the Land of Egypt, to make him Lord of his house, and Ruler of all his substance, that he should bind his Princes unto his will, and teach his Auncients wisdom. So when Nebucadnezzar saw that Daniel was endued with knowledge and understanding from above, more then all the Astrologians and Enchaunters that were in Babylon, he doth confess them to be in him, and reverence him for them. So ought we all to do when we hear or behold the gifts of God in our brethren, let us acknowledge them and praise God for them.

This reproveth the common practice of those that will diminish and disgrace their gifts, and like of nothing but that which is in themselves. Let us beware of Pride and Envy, disdainng others, deprouing, and lessening such inward graces of God's spirit as are in them. If another man should not readily acknowledge their outward gifts wherein they glory, and reverence them for their Parentage, Titles, and dignities, they would think themselves wronged, and disgraced, they would be ready to cast them in the teeth with forgetfulness of their duty. Why then should not they confess the inward gifts and heavenly graces that appear in their brethren, which are far more excellent then the former? Secondly, it is our duty to make profit of the gifts of our Superiors, and take benefit by them. This is the end for which they were given by God himself, and this is the use that we must make of them. It is a great blessing of God, when he is gracious and bountiful unto his people, and largely and liberally bestoweth his blessings upon them: we have many examples of godliness, of mortification, of patience, of meekness, of mercy, and many other gifts in the godly, so that we may take counsel and comfort from them. Yea, as we are greatly to reverence these gifts in others, so we must labor to feel them in our selves, and to keep them in the Closet of our own hearts. It is ashame to see others religious, and to be without Religion in our selves? To see others godly, and our selves to be without godliness? To see so many graces in our Brethren, and we remain without grace? This is a plain argument, that we esteem nothing at all, and make no reckoning or account of any good gifts in our Brethren, for as much as we are not desirous to be partakers of them our selves. For whatsoever we regard in others, we will labor to have and enjoy our selves.

Lastly, it behooveth all young persons, to conceive a reverent opinion, and to carry a dutiful and discreet behavior toward their elders, that are more ancient then they in years. Old men are instead of Fathers, and the Apostle would have them to be exhorted as Fathers. Again, old age is a blessing of God, which few obtain and attain unto, in comparison of the rest. The contempt of it, is the contempt of God, and a deriding of his Image, as appeareth by the commandment expressed. Levite. 19. When the Lord had prescribed a reverent behavior toward aged men, he addeth; Thou shalt dread thy God, I am the Lord: declaring thereby, that where there is want of reverence to their persons, there is the want of the fear of God, for he joineth rising up before the Elders, and the reuerencing of God together. Where the fear of God is not, there can be no duty performed to men. This reproveth the rudeness, the common and customable sausinesse that is in young persons, that refuse to give them liberty and freedom to speak before them. In all Companies, the younger is the readier to speak, although he utter nothing but words of folly and of vanity. Likewise, it reproveth those that will not give them room and place when they come in presence. It is indecent and uncomely in the Church or else-where, to see weak and feeble old Men stand, and young Boys to sit down on their seats, without wagging, stirring, or giving place unto them. This is directly contrary to the Law of God; Thou shalt rise up before the hore-head, and honor the person of the old man. We may now renew the complaint of the Prophet, in regard of this conclusion; The Children presume against the ancient, and the vile against the honorable.

Lastly, seeing we must have a great respect to such as are in gifts above us, or in age before us, or go beyond us in both, it teacheth us so to live and behave our selves, that we may be worthy of all honor & reverence. Let such as have good gifts, employ them to the greatest good of others. He that hath received much, must bring forth much fruit, as the Servant that had five talents committed unto him, gained five other talents. So old men must be grave and sober, and carry a Majesty in their countenance, that they may after a sort resemble the Majesty of God. As gravity and sobriety agreeth to every age, so most especially to the elder age; contrary to which, is lightness, lasciuiousnesse, and waywardness, which make them not honorable, but odious; not to be revered, but to be despised in the eyes of the younger sort. Let them adorn their years with those virtues which the Apostle nameth. Let the elder-men be watchful, grave, temperate, sound in the faith, in love, and in patience. If they be careful to express these things which become wholesome doctrine, they shall manifestly show, that their living so long in the World hath not been in vain. The Wise man saith, The beauty of the young men is their strength, and the glory of the aged is the gray-headed; that is, Wisdom, Counsel, Experience, whereby they are more adorned, then the young man is beautified by his bodily strength. For, the Ornaments of the mind are to be preferred before the properties of the body. Again, they must be examples of a godly life, and holy conversation, that youth may stand in fear to commit any indecent and unseemly thing in their presence. Thus Job saith of himself, Chap. 29. When I went out of the gate, the young Men saw me, and hid themselves. But when the Elder sort are Ring-leaders and examples of an evil and corrupt life, there is more gravity on their heads, then piety in their hearts; in their white hairs, then in their behavior; and so the Crown of honor is taken from them, and they are justly contemned, despised, and reproached of those, of whom they should be honored. For, we may see old men so hardened in Wickedness, that if a man would find whole heaps of wickedness, he need seek no farther, but to them. Some, by their age and long experience, have learned nothing but craft and spitefulness, so as if a man should frame himself after their example, he should have neither faithfulness in him, nor upright dealing. Others are loose and disordered in their whole life. Some have been given to swearing and blaspheming in their youth, and they are not reformed; nay they are more deformed in their age. Others, are so drenched and sapped in Covetousness and Whoredom, as that they infect all places, and defile all persons where they come, they delight in such rotten and filthy communication, that even young men are ashamed to hear them spew out such ungodly and unsavory talk. Such as lead their lives as Fathers in the Church, and adorn their age with godliness, shall not need to be offended at these things, nor to say with the Lawyers in the Gospel, In saying this, thou putttest we to rebuke also. We are all to honor the gray-head, and to magnify old age: For (as Solomon saith) Age is a Crown of Glory, when it is found in the way of Righteousness; Whereby he meaneth, that old age seasoned with a Godly life and upright, bringeth with it as great glory, as a Crown on the head, and a Scepter in the hand doth unto a King; and therefore such old men are greatly to be revered, and highly to be esteemed. But many, except they should be honored for their Ignorance, Superstition, Frowardness, Maliciousnesse, Waywardnesse, Covetousness, Drunkenness, Licentiousness, and Self-will, there is nothing else to be found in them, to be learned of them, to be gathered from them. By these foul enormities, they bring themselves into contempt, and bring shame and reproach upon their own heads; so that no man defameth and dishonoreth them so much as themselves. For, do they behave themselves with such Stayednesse, Wisdom, and Grauity, that young men fear to behave themselves lewdly and licentiously in their sight? Or do they show themselves examples of good things? Nay, they serve for nothing but to corrupt and infect youth, they be patterns, nay Patrons and Maintainers of all filthiness and loose living. Surely, if young men mis-behave and misgouverne themselves, they are not to be excused, but to be reprov'd, because they ought to order their lives aright, and Remember their Creator in the days of their youth; and not deserve to be evil spoken or reported of: but Olde folk, are double worthy of the shame that men do them, if they be not honored for their Virtues. They should learn by their long life, and old age, to grow in the knowledge of GOD, and his Son Jesus Christ; to hate sin, to delight in righteousness, and daily to die unto the Worlde, that as they bear about them a body declining and decaying in strength, so they should be renewed in the inner man, long after eternal life, and not nestle them-selves here upon the earth, as if they should continue forever therein, nor pursue so greedily after the Worlde, when they can scarce go or creep up and down in the world. It is a testimony of God's great mercy toward us, when he lengthneth our life, and prolongeth our days to the last period and power of Nature; Oh, how might we have profited in the knowledge of Religion, in the fear of God, in the ways of godliness, in the means of salvation, and in good example of life? If we had learned, since we entered into Christianity, but now a little, and then a little; here a Precept, and there a Precept; we might (in short space) have attained to a great measure of understanding, and be daily fitted to God's Kingdom. But alas, such as should be old in Faith, are very Babes and Children, a thing greatly disgraceful and reproachful to their years & condition.

The Apostle chargeth the Corinthians, that they should not be Children in understanding, as concerning maliciousness, he would have them Children, but in understanding to be of ripe age. Whereby we see, that aged persons do quite degenerat from that which they ought to be, when they remain void of knowledge, and destitute of spiritual Wisdom, and suffer many that are young in years, to overtake them, yea to over strip them, and go many degrees before them. If a man should bind his son an Apprentice to some Science or Occupation, and when he had served his time, should be to seek in his trade, and be never a whit the more his Crafts-master, in the ending of his years, then he was at the beginning, we would think he had lost his time, and complain of the injury of the Master, or of the carelessness of the Servant. If a Father should put his son to School, and he always continue in the lowest Fourme, and never ascend higher, we would judge great negligence to be either in the Master, or in the Scholar. Behold the Church of God is the School of Christ, and the best place to learn the Science of all Sciences, if we have lived long therein, some of us twenty, some thirty, some forty years, and some longer, and yet be no wiser in Religion, then a child of seven years old, is it not ashame for us, and may we not be condemned of great negligence in the matters of our salvation? Let us examine our selves how we have profited, and compare our proceeding in knowledge with the length of time that God hath granted unto us. He may justly require great things of us, and challenge at our hands much fruit, who hath afforded unto us, great means for our growth and increasing in all good things.

Verse 10. I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds.

Hitherto we have spoken of the description of Paul, craving to be heard and respected in regard of his age and office, which is the second part of the sentence before remembered. Now, we are to observe the third point, which is concerning Onesimus, whom he setteth forth; first, by a note of relation, [My Son;] then by the cause, [Whom I have begotten in my bonds.] The Apostle in this Verse beginneth to enter into his suite, showing for whom he doth entreat, and afterward for what he doth entreat. To his request, he annexeth diverse reasons: first, because he begat him; that is, brought him by the preaching of the Gospel, to the true Christian faith, and therefore he is earnest to entreat for him. Secondly, because his Master should now find him profitable unto him; that is, faithful, trusty, and serviceable, for so will true Christian servants be; whereas such as are ungodly, will be unfaithful, and such as have not the fear of God before them, cannot answer the trust that is reposed in them for Conscience sake. Thirdly, because Paul loved Onesimus tenderly and dearly, as his own bowels, not as a servant, but as his son; not only as a Brother, but as his own bowels. This is the order of the words.

Let us briefly see the Interpretation of this Verse, and reserve the rest to his proper place. First of all, when he calleth Onesimus his son, he meaneth it not in respect of the natural birth and generation, but of the spiritual and super-natural. So that by a borrowed speech he meaneth, one brought to his Faith by his Ministry. Likewise when he saith, [Whom I have begotten,] the meaning is, whom God by me did effectually call to embrace and believe the Gospel. It is not the work of a mortal man to frame and reform the soul unto the Image of God. He only nameth himself as the author of his regeneration, which he doth not to oppose himself to God, but only to show what God doth by the ministry of man. Lastly, when he addeth, [In my bonds,] he meaneth, when he was a prisoner, and lay in prison. This Verse according to this exposition of the words, is thus much in effect, as if he had said, Having thus prepared thee for that which I am to entreat from thy hands, if now thou wouldst know the party or person for whom it is, surely it is thy runagate servant Onesimus, and upon these grounds, he is my spiritual son, for I have begotten him in the time of my captivity, to the true profession and obedience of the Gospel.

Before we come to handle the Doctrines and instructions arising out of this verse, it shall not be amiss to set down diverse profitable observations that may be considered. First, we see here a Rhetorical repetition of the same word, I beseech thee being aged and a prisoner, I beseech thee for my Son Onesimus. This redoubling of his prayer, and entreating (used also elsewhere) showeth the desire, and manifesteth the earnestness of his mind: he was not cold in his suite, as if he regarded not whether he obtained it, but prosecuted it with his whole desire and full purpose, so that he contenteth not himself once to beseech him, but beseecheth him again.

Secondly, we see, that the person of him, whom we will commend to any man, hath great force to move him, and to prevail with him, to grant unto us that which we crave and desire at his hands. Wherefore, whosoever would be commended unto any, must look to himself that he have in him somewhat worthy commendation. For, as another man's mouth should praise us, & not our own; so the matter of praise must be in our selves. A false praise, is a true dispraise; and a wrongful commending, is a real discommending. The praise that cometh from others, must proceed from a due desert in our selves. If the Apostle had not found a great alteration, he would never have given this commendation to Onesimus. Thirdly, we see an example in Paul, of wonderful humility, and lowliness of mind. See here the difference between Paul the Apostle, and the proud Bishop of Rome. Paul beseecheth where he might command; but he commandeth where he hath no warrant to beseech. For the Pope usurpeth authority over Princes and Kings; he cursseth and banneth, he threateneth and thundereth out his excommunications. It is not so with our Apostle, for such is his exceeding modesty and mildness of Spirit, that he abaseth himself to be a false and fugitive servant, whom he embraceth as his own Son. What could be more reproachful, then to rob his Master, and then to play the runagate, that so he might run on in his evil course, and deliver himself from punishment? Yet we see, the Apostle is not ashamed of him, is not ashamed to cal him his Son, that Philemon might not be ashamed to receive and to accept him as his Servant. For if he be the son of Paul, he may be esteemed the servant of Philemon.

Fourthly, we see how effectual the sound conversion of a sinner to God ought to be, and how forcible it should be to prevail with us, to win our Love towards him, and cause us to perform all the duties belonging unto him. For we may not be ashamed to account him either as a Son, or as a Brother, whom GOD accounteth for his own son and servant. We are most unworthy to be called the sons of God, if we refuse his children to be our brethren. But if we mark this aright, we shall find the number of those to be few, which regard the Faith, conversion, salvation, & other spiritual blessings bestowed upon their brethren, as they ought, and therefore testify no love, show no joy, perform no duties, when they behold sinners converted unto God. Fifthly, we see that the name and praise of a spiritual Father (which is proper to God alone) is communicated to the Apostles and Ministers of God: whereas God only doth renew and regenerate us by the power of his spirit, the Ministry only is man's, whether he be Pastor or Apostle. Our Savior teacheth us, to cal no man Father upon earth. It is no work of man (be he never so excellent) to frame and reform the soul into the Image of God. But because we are borne anew by Faith, and Faith cometh by hearing, the Minister as the disposer of the Mysteries of God, doth under God perform the duty of a Father. So then, seeing the word of God preached by the mouth and Ministry of man, is the immortal seed of eternal life, it is no marvel if he be called by the Title of a Father, from whose lips we conceive that seed, and receive that word. Thus much is to be observed of us in general out of this verse. Now let us come to the particular Doctrines.

We are here to mark the scope and purpose of the Apostle in these words. We see he useth exceeding earnestness and importunity to have him received to his Masters favor. The condition of Onesimus was this, he was a servant of the basest calling. For men Servants and Maid-servants in those days were not as they be now: Men had them not for Wages and hire, as they that wer bound to do no more then Covenant, but they were Bondslaues, to be bought and sold in the Market, and their Masters possessed them as Oxen and Cattle, and had power over them of life and death. Now, albeit he were a servant of this kind and condition, and had been besides a runagate and a Thief, deserving grievous punishment, even death; yet he pleadeth his cause being converted, with as great force and fervency as can be expressed. We learn, from this love appearing in the Apostle, that the basest person in the Church, truly converted & brought unto Christ, should not be contemned, but most lovingly, tenderly, and Brotherly regarded. The least & lowest member that belongeth to God, ought not to be rejected and debased, but highly for Christ's sake to be honored and respected. We see how Christ calleth unto him all that are weary and heavy laden, promising to ease and refresh them. Likewise he embraceth the poor and simple, as lovingly and cheerfully as the rich and wise of the world. The Publicans and sinners are accepted of him, that were hated of the Jews. The Woman taken in adultery, accused by the Pharisees, is exhorted by him to repentance. The Blind man restored to his sight, and cast out of the Synagogue, is sought out by Christ, and taught to believe, and brought to be a true member of the Church. The penitent Thief hanging upon the Cross, and hearing Christ preach, is converted to the Faith, and received into paradise. It is not the will of our heavenly Father, that one of these little ones should perish. When the prodigal son had wasted his wealth, and his strength in riotous living, so that necessity fell upon him, and Famine constrained him to eat of the husks wherewith he fed his Swine, his Father received him into his favor, and had compassion upon him: he willed him not to return back to his Harlots, and to betake himself to his former companions, but while he was yet a far off, he rejoiced to see him, and embraced him when he saw him, saying; This my son was dead, but is alive again, he was lost, but he is found; and they began to be merry. The incestuous Corinthian swept out of the Church, by the censures thereof, and delivered up to Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the Spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus, and wandering as a stray Sheep from the sheep-fold, is brought again into the house of God, and into the assembly of the faithful. The Apostle hearing of his sorrow for his sin, and of his unfeigned repentance, saith; It is sufficient unto the same man, that he was rebuked of many, so that now contrary wise, ye ought rather to forgive him, and comfort him, least the same should be swallowed up with overmuch heaviness. The like we see, & might say of Mary Magdalene, who was infamous in life, out of whom Christ cast seven devils. Of the Cananitish woman, whom he heard and helped: of the Cripple that lay at the Poole, whom when Jesus found in the Temple, he exhorted to sin no more, being now made whole, least a worse thing come unto him. Likewise the Evangelists declare, that by the power and love of Christ, the blind had their sight restored, the Leapers were cleansed, the dead were raised, the halt walked, the sick were healed, and the poor received the Gospel. So the Apostle willeth servants that are under the yoke, to account their Masters worthy of all honor, that the name of God & his Doctrine be not evil spoken of. All these places of Scripture, serve to teach us, that such as are of meanest account, and least estimation, being converted to the Faith, and belonging to Christ, are greatly to be regarded, and entirely to be beloved.

This shall not seem anything strange unto us, if we mark the Reasons whereupon it is grounded. For first, those that are least esteemed, and are of lowest condition, were bought with as great and high a price as others, and were redeemed not with corruptible things, as Silver and Gold, but with the dear and precious blood of Christ. Rich and poor, high and low, great and small, had all one price paid for their ransom. This is the reason urged by Christ, See that ye despise not one of these little ones, for I say unto you, that in Heaven their Angels always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven: for the son of man is come to save that which was lost. If then, the least be redeemed by his death, and saved by faith in him, as well as the greatest; it followeth, that all should be regarded, none contemned; all loved, none despised. Hence it is also, that the Apostle chargeth those that are strong, to receive unto them the weaker sort, and not to despise them whom God hath received and for whom Christ hath died.

Secondly, there is no respect of persons with God. He doth not esteem men for accidental things; as for poverty, or riches; for honor, or dishonor. The poor, the fatherless, the widow, the stranger, the servant, are as dear to him, and as greatly respected of him, as those that are set in high places, & are honored with great callings. When we speak of a person in our talk and communication, we mean some man, or some woman; but the Scripture meaneth a more special thing, to wit; the outward quality or condition of man, which may purchase him grace or disgrace, favor or disfavour. When God will call us to his truth, and bestow his graces upon us, it is done according to his holy will and good pleasure; he is not moved to it by the outward appearance and condition of the person, he respecteth not Country, or sex, or birth, or riches, or poverty, or Nobility, or wisdom, or learning, or friends. This is it which the Apostle teacheth, Al ye that are baptized into Christ, have put on Christ, there is neither Jew, nor Grecian; there is neither bond nor free; there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And to the same purpose Peter speaketh, Of a truth I perceive that God is no acceptor of persons, but in every Nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. Seeing then, God accepteth the person of no man, he would have no man rejected for the meanness of his person.

Thirdly, they shall receive with others the same recompense of reward, the same kingdom of heaven, the same measure of glory. The differences that now are in this life, shall cease. As there is now the same precious faith, so then there shall be the same precious felicity. The poorest members of Christ have the same spiritual graces that are necessary to salvation, and therefore shall be partakers of the same inheritance. This the Apostle James setteth down, chap. 2. Hearken my beloved Brethren, hath not GOD chosen the poor of this world, that they should be rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he promised to them that love him? He hath not prepared and provided one place of glory for those that are Rich, and another place for those that are poor; he hath not left one inheritance for the Noble, and another for the vnnoble; but as they have one Faith to apprehend Christ, so they shall have one glory to be like unto Christ. The Lord Jesus himself testifieth this, In my Fathers house are many mansion places, if it were not so, I would have told you, I go to prepare a place for you. If then, we consider these points, that the lowest in the Church, and the most unworthy to be of the Church, are bought with one & the same price, that God accepteth and respecteth no man's person, and that they shall receive with others an eternal weight of glory and immortality, we may conclude this as a necessary truth, that we ought not to be ashamed of any, though of the lowest sort, and poorest estate, and meanest condition, to whom God hath imparted and vouchsafed this mercy to believe in Christ, and to be a member of his body, and to be in the number of true believers.

The Doctrine being made evident, the Uses will be as apparent. First, seeing we are bound to love the lowest in the Church that belong to Christ, we learn that our affections must be carried most earnestly, and in the greatest measure to those that have the greatest measure of heavenly graces, not regarding Riches, or Kindred, or outward respects, before the other. It is a sound and sanctified love that is wrought in us toward those that are faithful. The Apostle in this place, was so far from being ashamed of Onesimus converted to Christ, and gained to the Gospel, though he were a Servant, and had been a Thief and a Runnagate, that he glorieth in his Faith, rejoiceth in his Conversion, accounteth him as his Son, and respecteth him as his own bowels. This affection no less then fatherly toward him, he expresseth afterward, Receive him, not now as a Servant, but above a servant, even as a Brother beloved, specially to me, how much more then unto thee, both in the Flesh, and in the Lord? If therefore thou count our things common, receive him as myself. He saw in this man being a Proselite, newly converted to the Faith, such fruits of sanctification, as seals of his conversion, that he loved him most dearly, and sought by all means to procure favor for him with his Master. Whatsoever the former life of men hath been, when once they make Conscience of their ways, beginning to lead an holy life, and to blot out the infamy & reproach of their conversation led in the time of their ignorance, it is our duty to begin to love them as entirely as our Brethren in Christ, and as children with us of the same Father.

The practice hereof we see in Christ our Savior, and have this instruction given us from his own mouth, Matthew 12. when it was told him, as he was preaching his word to the multitude that came to hear him, that his Mother and Brethren stood without, desiring to speak with him, he answered, Who is my Mother, and who are my Brethren? And he stretched forth his hand toward his Disciples, and said, Behold my Mother and my Brethren: for whosoever shall do my Fathers will which is in heaven, the same is my Brother, and Sister, and Mother. To this purpose the Prophet David speaketh, All my delight is in the Saints that are upon the earth. The Godly must be most dear unto us, and we are bound to be kind to them, as to our Kin. For if they ought to be unto everyone of us, as the Mother & brethren, yea as the flesh & members of Christ, they ought not to be neglected or contemned, but to be cherished. Heereby we shall know that we are translated from death to life, if we love the brethren. On the other side, we ought to mourn and lament for such as remain in ignorance of God, lie under the dominion of sin, and continue in the profaneness and abominations of their youth. It is noted by the Prophet, that his eyes gushed out with rivers of waters because they kept not the law of God. Christ Jesus mourned for the hardness of heart that appeared in his hearers, he wept for Jerusalem when he came near unto it. Righteous Lot was vexed day by day, when he beheld the unclean conversation of the sinful Sodomites. The Apostle told the Phillippians of vain walkers, and that with tears, that they are the enemies of the Cross of Christ. We see by common and daily experience, when any of our friends and familiars are dead or lie at the point of death, a natural affection toward them causeth us to weep and lament for them, and draweth oftentimes from us abundance of tears; how much more ought it to go near us, and make us sob and sigh from the very depth and bottom of our hearts to see our brethren lie dead in sin, and as it were rotting in the Grave of their corruptions, or else to walk in the paths of death that bring with it certain destruction and eternal damnation. If a man should come into a field where he should behold thousands slain with the sword, wallowing in their blood, and others having received their deaths wound to languish in pain and to strive and struggle for life, who would not account it a lamentable show and most pitiful sight? But thus is it with us, and this is the condition of many thousands that glory that they abide in health, and yet are most dangerously sick and diseased; that think they are alive, and yet behold they are a company of dead carcasses, that boast they are far from the Gates of death, and yet (alas) they lie gaping and gasping for breath which is ready to be gone? If there be in us any life of God's spirit, or any love of Godliness, it cannot but grieve our souls to behold the desolations that are in the earth, and the languishing of many ready to die; nay, which are already dead in sin, and stink in the nostrils of God and man. For as a man having escaped shipwreck and gotten into an Haven and Harbour, reioyseth in his own safety, and comforteth himself in his deliverance, but when he behouldeth the misery of his brother suffering shipwreck and cast away by the violence of the storms and Tempestes that beat upon his bark, which drown both it and him in the Seas, he cannot but greatly be grieved, and exceedingly perplexed. So ought it to be with us, howsoever the escaping from the filthiness of the world, and the uniting of us with Christ our head, doth breed in us matter of great joy, and may worthily cause us to reioice, yet when we see the bondage of our brethren under sin, and the ruins into which they are come, it cannot but work in us great anguish of spirit. If we perceive them to wander out of the way and to go astray from the simplicity of the Gospel and from the fold of Christ and fellowship of the faithful, it is our part to turn them back and to gather them home. For howthink ye? If a man have an hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave ninety and nine, and go into the Mountains, and seek that which is gone astray? and if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, he reioyseth more of that sheep, then of the ninety and nine which went not astray, so is it not the will of your father which is in Heaven, that one of these little ones should perish. This love toward the lowest that are converted to the faith and coupled to Christ, reproveth two sorts of men. First, such as are ashamed of the poor Saints, who being without the comfort of friends, but not without contempt of the world, are not regarded or esteemed. He that despiseth his poor brother redeemed with the blood of Christ, would also despise and despite Christ himself if he walked upon the earth. He that honoreth not a faithful man of low degree, doth dishonor the faith it self and reproacheth the Gospel that he professeth; yea, he despiseth the Church, and shameth such as are members of it. This the Apostle James teacheth, If there come into your company a man with a Gold Ring and in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poore man in vile raiment, and ye have a respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a goodly place: and say unto the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my Footstool. Are ye not partial in yourselves, and become Judges of evil thoughts? The needy servants of God and poor afflicted Saints are ashamed and blamed of the world, they are scorned and scoffed at by the ungodly: shall we then, that are of the same Religion, profession, and communion, join hand in hand with them, and contemn the faithful that deserve to be honored; thereby adding more sorrow to their affliction, and doubling the misery that is upon them. For it must needs lie heavy upon them and even oppress them with anguish, to find this measure at our hands, of whom they looked for comfort and counsel. This appeareth in the saying of the Prophet, Surely mine enemy did not defame me, for I could have borne it, neither did mine adversary exalt himself against me, for I would have hid me from him, but it was thou (O man) even my companion, my guide, and my familiar. It is made a note and mark whereby we may try our selves whether we belong to the Church of God, and shall be received into the Kingdom of glory, that a vile person is contemned in their eyes, but they honor them that fear the Lord. But the practice of many men is directly contrary, who as they are of this world, they magnify and make much of the ungodly, but tread and trample under their feet the Children of God, as if they were a thing of no value. The Apostle blameth the Corinthians, and noteth it as a blot and blemish in them, that they put the poor to shame, separating themselves from them, and refusing to partake the supper of the Lord with them.

Secondly, it reproveth such as contemn those that have once sinned and fallen into gross and grievous sins, and albeit they be come out of the mire in which they wallowed, and renounce the wickedness in which they walked, yet they always remember them to their reproach, and speak of them to their infamy. But when once their sins become bitter unto them, and they have given good Testimony of their unfeigned repentance, we must not be unmerciful and without compassion toward them, but rather restore them with the spirit of meekness, considering our selves, least we also be tempted. The former failings in faith or obedience are not to be objected, or they rejected with reproach after repentance. God remembereth their sins no more, and therefore we ought to forgive and forget them. They that truly turn unto God, and repent of their sins from the bottom of their hearts, have blotted out the stain of it before men, and must be esteemed of us, as if they had not fallen or offended. For even as the Prophet teacheth, that if the Righteous turn away from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, all the righteousness that he hath done, shall not be mentioned, but in the transgression that he hath committed, and in the sin that he hath sinned, in them he shall die: so if the wicked shall return from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all the statutes of God, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live and shall not die, all his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned unto him, but in his righteousness that he hath done he shall live. Sin indeed bringeth a wound with it, but when once repentance cometh, the wound is cured, and the scar is healed, and the remembrance of it is abolished, for God will blot it out of his book of remembrance.

Secondly, seeing every member of Christ must be much esteemed, be he never so mean, it teacheth us not to have the religion of God & the faith of Christ in acceptatiō of persons. We must esteem of the faith that is grounded on our Lord Jesus Christ simply, according to the excellency and sincerity thereof, and not regard it, in one more, and in another less, according to the condition of one above another in outward things. This corrupt opinion and deceitful judgment is reprov'd by the Apostle James in his Epistle Chap. 2. My brethren have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ in respect of persons. Where he teacheth, that the profession of the faith ought to be esteemed with a single eye and a simple affection, and that partial affection of one before another is to be avoided. But may we not prefer one before another, and is it unlawful to have respect of degrees among men? may I not honor a wicked man with honor due to him, and set up the ungodly in higher place above the Godly? yes, in outward respects everyone is to be advanced and revered according to his calling without respect of his Godliness or ungodliness; of his Religion or superstition; of his faith or infidelity. For to whomsoever God hath given preeminence, it is our duty to yield them obedience. A wicked father is to be honored no less then a Godly, an hard Master is to be feared no less then a gentle, a wicked Prince is to be served no less then a faithful. It is God's Ordinance that hath lifted them up above others. The purpose of the Apostle is not to take away, no not from evil men their external dignity, or to draw others to deny them duty, but his meaning is, that we ought not to measure the soundness of faith, or the truth of Religion, by outward perogatives, or to conclude that such have a right profession and true belief, because they have Riches, and are men of authority; and the faith of others contemned, because they are poor in goods, few in number, weak in strength, low in degree, base in birth, and mean in all outward things, which are greatly accounted off in the world. This reproveth such as stand upon men's outward persons, and make the quallity and condition of the outward appearance a rule to try and examine their faith and Religion. These are such as build upon the Sand, and set their house upon a slight and slender foundation, which is soon shaken and suddenly falleth to the ground. These are such as measure the matters of faith by the deceitful line of men's persons. Hence it is, that if a man persuade his brother that he holdeth an error, and move him to embrace the truth, though he be convinced by the Testimony of the Prophets and Apostles, yet he will readily reply and answer; you are not learned, you are no Scholar, you have not been at the Vniuersity, other great men are of another mind, who are before you in age, above you in knowledge, and beyond you in judgment. Exhort a man in these days to hear the word with all diligence, and to attend unto it with all carefulness, as to the Ordinance of God, and the ordinary means to work in us salvation, tell him that he that is of God must hear God's word, show him that every man should be swift to hear, slow to speak, and slow to wrath, convince his conscience that he must desire the sincere milk of the word that he might grow thereby, he is wise in his own conceit to shift off all these instructions, and to deceive himself: saying, If this were so needful and necessary a duty, we should not have so many great men, and rich men, neglect the word: They like not this so much preaching and preciseness, we see such are great Clerks and profound Divines do preach seldom, some once or twice a year, others once a month, why cannot we be content to follow them? They know their duty they read the Scriptures, they are deep learned men, they would preach oftener, if it were required of us to hear oftener? These are they that build upon men, and think to excuse themselves by other men's corrupt examples. These are they that look only to others, and rejoice to follow a multitude to do evil. These are they that are like to the Pharisees mentioned in the Gospel, who said to their Officers sent out to apprehend Christ, returning empty again, Are ye also deceived? do any of the Rulers believe in him, or of the Pharisees? but this people which know not the Law are cursed. We must not, hang upon the pleasure of men, though they be great in the world, noble in birth, rich in wealth, high in calling, many in number, mighty in strength, glorious in account and reputation of others. We must consider, not so much whether great and learned men like and approve of it, as whether it be agreeable to the truth of the word of God or not. One man defending a truth is to be preferred before an hundredth others, holding and upholding an error or heresy, and we are rather to believe a poor and silly man grounding himself upon the scriptures, before a thousand Doctors building upon human Traditions and unwritten verities. If these men that are blind themselves, and look upon all things through other men's spectacles, had lived in the days of Elijah, Micaiah, and Jeremiah, when the truth of God was so often contradicted and ouerswaied by multitudes of men, when for one true Prophet of God there were five hundredth false Prophets, whom would they have believed? whom would they have received? whom would they have condemned? It would have gone hard with the truth and been evil spoken off by the evil mouths and malicious tongues of these partial Judges. They would have said, Elijah is but one, the Prophets against him are many, are not they liker to see the truth then he? Thus the faith of Christ and pure Religion is not weighed in the balance of the Sanctuary, nor measured with a just Ephah and a true Hin, but with false weights and deceitful balances, which are an abomination unto the Lord. In all causes and questions that rise, the word of God must judge.

Thirdly, this giveth comfort and contentment to the meanest & smallest of God's Saints, and putteth them in remembrance not to be discomfited and out of heart for their mean calling or for their low estate, for they are nothing the less regarded of God or to be esteemed of his Church. They have as great an interest in all God's blessings, as the richest sort, and many times a greater; they have as great a portion in Christ, as the mightiest men, and many times a greater. For God hath put down the mighty from their seats and exalted them of low degree, he hath filled the hungry with good things, and sent away the rich empty. What grace of God, what means of salvation, is hidden from these poor little ones, so accounted off by the men of this world? They have interest in the word and Sacraments, they have free access to come into the glorious presence of God, to pray unto him, and to pour out their supplications before him, as well as they that swell with riches and abound in earthly things. When God had made a covenant with Abraham, and planted his Church in his family, he gave Circumcision as a sign and seal thereof, not only to Abraham, but to all his house, and commanded him to

Circumcise not only himself and his seed, but all the men of his household, both borne in his house, and bought with money of the stranger. Whereby we see, that the lowest of his servants and bondmen that belonged unto him, have as great right to the Covenant, and as good a Title to the promises of God as he had; in as much as they were assured by the commandment of God, that the visible sign that was in their flesh was not in vain. The like we see in the Apostle writing to the Corinthians, Moreover brethren, I would not have you ignorant, that all our fathers were under that Cloud, and all passed through that Sea, and were all baptized unto Moses in that Cloud and in that Sea, and did all eat the same spiritual meat, and did all drink the same spiritual drink, for they drank of the spiritual Rock that followed them, and the Rock was Christ. This people was a great body standing of many members, some of them were the Elders of the people, and the heads of the families, others were of the lower sort and of inferior degree, yet they had alike privilege in the Sacraments, and the Apostle five times remembereth that all of them were partakers of them. This is it that made him say in another place, Art thou called being a servant? Care not for it; for he that is called in the Lord being a servant, is the Lord's free-man; likewise also, he that is called being free, is Christ's servant. We see this in the members of our natural bodies, some members are more high and honorable than others, yet none are contemned. We have a care, not only of the head and heart, of the hands and lively parts, but of the least and smallest that belong to the body; Yea, much rather those Members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary: and upon those Members of the Body which we think most dishonest, put we more honesty on, and our uncomely partes have more comliness on: for our comely parts need it not, but GOD hath tempered the body together, and hath given the more Honor to that part which lacked, least there should be any division in the body, but that the Members should have the same care one for another. So ought none that belong to Christ Jesus to be neglected. He contemneth Christ himself, whosoever contemneth the least member that belongeth unto him. This Christ our Savior showeth, Whosoever shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him ehat a Mill-stone were hanged about his Necke, and that he were drowned in the depth of the Sea. As this causeth contentment in the poor, so it worketh Humility in the rich, considering that their Honor, Wealth, Authority, and such like privileges of the flesh, cannot commend the more to God, or to the Saints, but their soundness in Faith, and sincerity in life, according to the saying of the Apostle James, Let the Brother of low degree, rejoyce in that he is exalted. Again, He that is rich in that he is made low, for as the flower of the grass shall be vanish away. The poorest man that is of base account and reckoning in the World, hath as great and as good a Title to Christ, as the greatest men that be. They have not so great a portion in outward blessings, but they have as great a part in Heavenly Graces. He that hath Christ is a Rich man, he bringeth with him all things else; for in him are hid, all treasures which we are bound to seek after. He that wanteth Christ, is a poor beggar, if he had his house full of Silver and Gold, and possessed Mountains of Pearls and precious Stones. The Apostle teacheth, that If we be Christ's, then we are Abraham's seed, and heirs by promise; so, that the poorest person that is in the Church, if he believe in Christ, is in the place of Abraham, and succeedeth him in the inheritance of the Kingdom of Heaven, which is a greater Honor and preferment unto them, then the want of outward benefits can bring abasement. This is a most worthy and excellent comfort, whereof we shall be assured, if we walk in the steppes of faithful Abraham, if we repent and believe in Christ, and walk worthy of our calling.

[I beseech thee for my Son Onesimus.]

The party for whom the Apostle entreateth, is in these words both named and described. He is described, first by relation, when he calleth him His Son; secondly, by the means and manner how he is his son, by a spiritual generation, through the immortal seed of the Gospel, and through the ministry of the word in the time of his restraint and imprisonment at Rome. Touching the former point, which is the Title given unto Onesimus, he esteemeth him as his Son, and therefore accounteth himself as his Father. If then Onesimus be his son, the Apostle must needs be his Father; and if Paul be his Father, he must needs be his son. For the Father & the Son have mutual reference one to another, & cannot consist one without the other. We learn from this name given unto Onesimus converted to the Faith, that there ought to be the same affection between the Pastor and the people, which is between the Father and the Son. The same love that is between Parents and their Childeren, ought to be between the Shepherd and his flock, between the Steward & the household, between the Master & the Scholar, between the Minister & the people, between him that winneth, and them that are won to the Faith of the Gospel. The Apostle Paul writing to Timothy and Titus, calleth them his natural and beloved sons, according to the common Faith, because he had begotten them by the seed of the Gospel to be the Children of God, without which new birth, they could not belong to his kingdom. So, when the King of Israel came to the Prophet Elisha, who lay sick in his bed, he wept upon his face, and said, O my Father, my Father, the Chariot of Israel, and the Horsemen of the same. Likewise, John writing unto his beloved Gaius, declareth that he rejoiced greatly when the brethren came & testified how he walked in the truth, and addeth; I have no greater joy then these, to hear that my sons walk in verity. And Paul writing to the Corinthians, toucheth this at large, I write not these things to shame you, but as my beloved children I admonish you; for though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers, for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the Gospel. To this purpose he also speaketh to the Thessalonians, We were gentle among you, even as a Nurse cherisheth her children: Thus being affectioned toward you, our good will was to have dealt unto you, not the Gospel of GOD only, but also our own souls, because ye were deer unto us. And afterwards in the same Chapter, Ye know how that we exhorted you, and comforted, & besought everyone of you (as a Father his children) that ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory. These allegations are so many witnesses of this doctrine, teaching that it is a most tender affection of Love and compassion that ought to be between him that teacheth, and them that are taught in the word.

This will farther appear by the Reasons whereby it is confirmed unto our Consciences. First, the Ministers of God give as a being in Christ, and consequently to be the children of God, which is the best being and birth that can be bestowed upon us, the word of God being the precious and immortal seed, and they by teaching and applying it, are the Instruments, whereby through God's blessing we are begotten to be new borne babes in Christ, and of the children of men, or rather the children of the Devil, are made the sons and daughters of almighty God. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, In Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the Gospel. And Peter in his first Epistle showeth, That we are borne again, not of mortal seed, but of immortal, by the word of God, who liveth and endureth forever. So then, by their Ministry we are made alive, that before were dead; we are made sons that before were enemies; we are made Cittizens that before were strangers; we are made heirs, that before were Aliants.

Secondly, the Ministers of the Gospel are as our Mothers, and do conceive us in their womb, travel with us in pain, and bring us forth as with labor of Childbed, to fashion us in grace, and to perfect us in Christ. We know the Sorrowes, the Paines, the Passions, and the perilles of a Woman's travail to be exceeding great: so the measure of the Ministerial pains and labor is marvelous great, which the Apostle expresseth, 2 Cor. 11, 23. He endured labors abundantly, stripes unmeasurably, imprisonment plenteously, the danger of death continually. Elijah, being raised up of God to restore Religion, to pull down Idolatry, to destroy Baals Priests, and to set himself against the enemies of God, was at length so worn with care, so wasted with sorrows, and so wearied in this business, that he desired the Lord to take him out of the world, saying; It is now enough, O Lord, take my soul, for I am no better then my Fathers.

The pains and perplexity of the Prophet Isaiah, made him cry out alowde with great anguish of spirit, My leunnesse, my leaunnesse. So Jeremiah crieth out, My belly, my belly, I am pained at the very heart, mine heart is troubled within me; declaring thereby, that his gripings and griefs in his Ministry were so great, that they were like the pains of a vehement Colicke. Likewise the Apostle, being careful to bring back the Galatians to the truth of the Gospel which they had forsaken, saith; My little children, of whom I travel in birth again, till Christ be formed in you; meaning, that he endured much trouble, and sustained great pains, to fit them & frame them to God's kingdom. Seeing then, the Ministers of Christ be as spiritual Fathers and Mothers; Fathers to beget us, and Mothers to bear us, and bring us forth, we may concludde, that the Pastors and people have as near a conjunction between them, as Parents and their children.

But because somewhat may be objected against this truth, we will remove those doubts, and take away those Objections, before we proceed any further, or handle the Uses that are to be learned of us. First, our Savior saith, Math. 23, 9. Call no man your Father upon the earth, for there is but one your Father, which is in heaven: Bee not called Doctors, for one is your Doctor, even Christ. If then, God only be our Father, and no man is to be called by this name, either we must account the Ministers God's, which were blasphemy; or debar and deny them this Title, which were contrary unto other Scriptures. I answer, Christ doth not in these words forbid the denomination, but restrain the ambition of men, as appeareth by the conclusion of the words, Verse 12. Whosoever will exalt himself shall be brought low, and whosoever will humble himself shall be exalted. Hence it is, that the Apostle calleth himself as well the Doctor of the Gentiles, as the Father of the Corinthians. It is one thing to have the name, and another thing greedily to hunt after it, and proudly to challenge it to our selves. Besides, touching the fountain of our first birth, and the foundation of our faith and regeneration; he is our only Father, we ascribe it to no man upon the earth. But even as touching our natural being, he hath ordained subordinate causes as his Instruments and fellow-workers, to beget us, and bring us into this world, and to give us life, whom he doth honor with the titles of Fathers and Mother. So touching our new birth, although it be the sole work of the spirit, and therefore proper to God, yet because he worketh it by the word & Sacraments, the preaching and dispensation whereof, he hath committed to the Ministers, and appointed to be conveyed to men by their means, he doth communicate to them the appellation of Fathers, as those whom he useth, to bring us & beget us unto God. So then, Paul so giveth himself the name of Father, as that he neither robbeth God, nor taketh from him the least jot of the honor that is due to his name. For it is a common rule, that they are not contrary, which are subordinate. When one is under another, and inferiorly ordered & ordained to another, there is a good agreement between them. God is the choice cause, Paul is the Instrumental.

Again, the Apostle depresseth and derogateth from the Ministry, and saith, I have planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase. So then, neither is he thar planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase. How then doth it come to pass, that he doeth there so much debase them, and here so greatly honor them, as to make them fellow workers, yea, fellow-fathers with God? He may seem to be unconstant as a Reede shaken with the wind, and to lift up and cast down at his own pleasure. I answer, the contrariety is not in the words of the Apostle, the difference is in the persons with whom he dealeth, and to whom he writeth. So there seemeth a contradiction between Paul and James, in the matters of Faith and Good-works, Paul saith, We are not justified by works; James, saith, We are justified by Works; Paul saith, We are not justified but by Faith; James saith, We are not justified by Faith only. Here is a show of dissention, but it is only in show, not in truth: for then, in one of them should be no truth. The Reason why they use a different order of teaching, is the diversity of the Scholars, which they instructed, and the contrary affection of such as they taught and informed. Paul had to do with Iusticiaries that sought to be justified partly by faith, and partly by works; partly by Christ, & partly by themselves; partly by somewhat in another, and partly by somewhat in themselves; partly by the merits of another, and partly by their own strength and merits. James had not to do with such persons, but with Libertines and loose livers, which confessed in words free Justification thorough Faith in Christ, yet they were deceived and had not learned, that all those that are justified, are also sanctified, that all that are in Christ, are become new Creatures, that they are borne anew, and walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit, and therefore thought works needless and fruitless. Thus Paul dealt in this place. If at any time he saw so much honor given to the Ministers, as that God's honor was diminished, or any way obscured, and so he robbed of his glory; then he pulled down their estimation, that God might have his right, and be unto us all in all. But if on the other side, they were debased and disgraced (as in these days they are) whereby the word also was abhorred, and God, the Author of it, and the ordainer of them dishonored; they ought to have their due, they are to magnify their office, and to be esteemed as the Ministers of Christ. As for example, when we have to deal either with the Anabaptists, that wait for revelations, and utterly reject the Ministry & Ministers of the word, or with those profane Atheists of our time, who contemn them, and count them idle and of no use, and so have no regard of them, or respect unto them: we are to show in what an high calling God hath seated them. He saith of them, It is not you that speak, but the spirit in you. He saith of them, He that heareth you, heareth me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth me. He saith of them, Whose sins ye remit, they are remitted; & whose sins ye retain, they are retained. This serveth to stop the mouths of carnal men, and alloweth us to know our selves, when the world will not know us, or acknowledge us. But when we have to deal with those of the Church of Rome, who make their Pope a God on earth, and set their Cardinals and Clergy above the word, we are to be taught what the Ministry is of itself, being separated from the spirit of God; an empty sound without force, and a bare Instrument without effect in the hand of the workman, that can do nothing of it self, but as it is used and applied by the work-man. Thus much of the removing of such Objections, as might hinder the use and profit of this Doctrine.

Now let us come to consider the Uses, which are either general, belonging jointly both to the Pastors & people; or special, belonging to either of them. First, seeing the Minister and people ought to love as Father and Son, it teacheth them to cut off all occasions of discord and division, and to nourish love and mutual concord one with another. It may be many occasions may arise, which if by wisdom they be not smothered and suppressed in the beginning, they are as little sparks that quickly break out into a flame, and the flame suffered to continue consumeth all things that are near unto it. We must show our selves ready to bring water to quench this fire. We must stop the Flood-gates, that the streams of contention do not over-flow, and in the end drown us as in the deep waters. It is a deceitful snare, and wonderful subtlety of Satan, to cast matters of dissention between the Minister and people (as it were a bone to gnaw upon) that so though the word be among them, yet that it may by that means be with less fruit and profit with them. Well doth this enemy of mankind know, that where there is hatred to the person, there can be no love to his preaching; and where there is desire of contention, there can be no hope of edification. For whom the people hate, they regard not to hear; and where there is no liking to the man, there will follow a loathing of his Ministry. We see this in the example of Ahab toward Elijah and Micaiah, whom he hated to the death, and professeth his enmity toward them, and therefore despised the word that came from their mouths. When Elijah reproveth him for killing of Naboth, and taking possession of the Vineyard, he said, Hast thou found me, O mine enemy? So when Jehoshaphat asked, if there were not a Prophet of the Lord that they might enquire of him, Ahab who had sold himself to work wickedness in the sight of the Lord, answered; There is yet one man, Michaiah the Son of Imlah, by whom we may ask counsel of the Lord, but I hate him, for he doth not prophesy good unto me, but evil. Where we see, he hated the Prophet, and therefore abhorred his prophesy, and regarded not to have him in his presence. We may behold this in the example of the Scribes and Pharisees toward Paul, they could not abide him nor his doctrine, so that he was employed principally among the Gentiles. On the other side, as the people love the Ministers from the heart, so for the most part they profit by them. The Apostle giveth this Testimony of the Galatians, that they loved him exceedingly, and therefore regarded his Doctrine accordingly, The trial of me which was in my flesh ye despised not, neither abhorred; but ye received me as an Angel of GOD, yea, as Christ Jesus: what was then your felicity? For I bear ye record, that if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them unto me. Hence it is, that Christ and his Apostles labor to plant this truth, and to settle this persuasion in the hearts of those whom they taught, that they were dearly beloved to them. When the Disciples were afraid at Christ's words, he answered again & said unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches, to enter into the kingdom of God. So the Prophet Isaiah speaketh, Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me, are as signs and as wonders in Israel.

Thus do the Apostles write in this manner to the Churches, calling them beloved brethren, and dear children. As we have loving words in our mouths, so we should have loving affections in our hearts. It is a pitiful sight, & lamentable condition, when the Pastor in any place setteth himself against the people, and the people against the Pastor; when they that should love together as Father and Son, do wrangle together as Cats and Dogs, and are ever snarling and biting one of another. If a private house be divided against it self, it cannot stand; so, if a particular Church, be in a bitter mutiny, it runneth to ruin, and is miserably torn in pieces. It is a great praise of that congregation, where they are at peace and unity, join together in the word & Sacraments, and sing the Psalms and songs of God, to his endless praise. It is a comfortable thing, when the people rejoice in their Minister, & the Minister in his people: when the people desire and delight in the company of their Minister, and the Minister in the company of his people, and so take comfort in the sweet society one of another. This reproveth those, that upon every slight occasion, for every slender profit, yea for every toy & trifle, follow suits of Law, and bring actions of trespass one against another, whereby they trouble not only their neighbors at home, but the Country abroad. These have forgotten the words of Abraham to Lot, when a debate arose among their Heard-men, Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between thee & me, neither between mine Heard-men, and thine Heard-men, for we are Brethren. It is therefore a great shame and reproach to hear of such jars and civil wars as are in many parishes. It is a plain argument that there is little love between them, and less good wrought among them. The Minister accounteth them not as his Sons and Daughters, he seeketh not to win them to the faith, he esteemeth them not as his Crown in the day of the Lord. On the other side, the people do not reverence their Minister as their father, but hate him as their enemy. God is not among such Ministers and people, but is gone far from them, and they are departed far from him. God is love, & they that dwell in love, dwell in God, and God in them. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfect in us. The Devil is the Father & fountain of all debate and hatred, For where envying and strife is, there is sedition, and all manner of evil works. How then can we otherwise think, but that Satan beareth rule among them, and possesseth the chief hold of their hearts, seeing so small tokens of love, and so great fruits of the Old man, nay of the old Serpent, appear among them? Wherefore, to return thither from whence we began, we must remember the amiable names given to the Pastor and people, they must consider they are as Father and Son, nearly coupled and joined together, and thereby stir up themselves, and admonish one another of their duties, to open their hearts in love, and again to shut them up, that hatred have no entrance into them, and that malice do not abide in them.

Secondly, these most loving Titles applied to the Minister and people, show the duties required of Pastors toward their charge, and teach them to love them as their children, to tender their good, to exhort them to lay up for themselves spiritual riches. Great is the love of Parents towards their Children. If the Child be sick or wayward, they do not cast him out of doors, or withdraw their affections from him. Hence it is, that Christ when he saw the people scattered abroad, and dispersed here and there as Sheep without a Shepherd, He had compassion upon them, and shown great love toward them. We see how Christ applieth this to the Conscience of Peter, & willeth him to try his love toward him, by feeding his Sheep and Lambes, thereby assuring him, that if he persuaded himself to love Christ Jesus, and yet was not careful to teach his people, he deceived himself, and lied to the Holy-Ghost, who would find him out in his sin. This serveth to reprove sundry corruptions, and to meet with many abuses in the Ministers, that make them unworthy of the name of Fathers, and testify that their hearts are empty of this unfeigned love, that ought to be in them towards God's people, whom they should affect as dear Children. First, it condemneth the willful and ordinary absence of the Pastor from his flock that is committed to his care and charge, whereby the duties of teaching, and example of life, in his own person are neglected. True it is, there may just and lawful causes of the Pastors absence sometimes fall out, so that the Church be not endamaged, but as far as is possible be sufficiently provided for: as sickness of body, whereby he is restrained; Church affairs, whereby he is hindered; Persecution, whereby he is enforced to fly; Private affairs, whereby he is necessarily constrained for a time to be absent: but a willful, long, and continued Non-residency from that particular Congregation enjoined him to feed, is evidently convinced by many Reasons grounded upon the word of God, and the practice of the Church of Christ. The Scriptures of the old and New Testament, do directly forbid it. The Lord saith by his Prophet Isaiah, I have set Watchmen upon the walls, O Jerusalem, which all the day, and all the night continually shall not cease; ye that are mindful of the Lord, keep not silence, and give him no rest, till he repair, and till he set up Jerusalem the praise of the world. The Prophet Ezekiel is plentiful in this argument, who speaking of unfaithful Levites, saith; Ye have not kept the ordinances of mine holy things, but you yourselves have set others to take the charge of my Sanctuary. So the Prophet Zacharias setteth down this as a great judgment of the Lord, I will raise up a Shepherd in the Land, which shall not look for the thnig that is lost, nor seek the tender Lambes, nor heal that which is hurt, nor feed that which standeth up; but he shall eat the flesh of the fat, and tear their Clawes in pieces. It is noted of Solomon, when he built the Temple to be the place of preaching and Prayer, (which he did according to the word of God) he also built Houses and Chambers round about the Temple, & joined unto it, to teach the Priests and Levites that they should be near unto their charges.

For this cause also it is expressed; That Eli the Priest of God, sate at the door of the Tabernacle, to espy the manners, and to answer the doubts of those that came and resorted unto him. And the Apostle Paul expressing the Priests function, saith; They did minister about the holy things, and did wait at the altar: He useth a word of great force and strength, that bindeth them to a continual residency and sitting at their charge. If we come to the New Testament, we shall see sundry directions, importing and implying the Pastors presence with his people. The Apostle speaking to the Elders of Ephesus, saith; Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the Flock, whereof the holy Ghost hath made you Ouer-seers, to feed the Church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood: for I know this, that after my departing, shall grievous Wolves enter in among you, not sparing the Flock. The Apostle Peter likewise exhorteth the Elders, Feede the Flock of God which dependeth upon you, caring for it, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind. The Apostle to the Hebrews warneth the Church, To obey them that have the oversight of them, and submit themselves, for they watch for their Souls, as they that must give accounts. It is a great wonder, that negligent Pastors reading these places, and considering these charges laid upon their shoulders, can so easily shake them off, or so slightly pass them over, or so soon forget them. They may seem more then sufficient to convince them of want of love, of abundance of covetousness, of excess of idleness, of hardness of heart, of contempt of the word, which they should teach to others. A great and heavy judgment of God is upon them, that can pass over this duty without fear and trembling, that can see neither the danger of their own souls, nor the danger of the people's Souls through want of instruction.

Again, the Titles given to the Ministers under the Gospel, as also to the Prophets and Priests under the Law, do urge diligence, faithfulness, and careful attendance; and consequently, the personal presence of the Pastor. They are called, Shepherds, Watch-men, Stewards, Captains, Builders, Ambassadors, and such like; so that, though they teach oftentimes by themselves, and continually and constantly by others, they are not excused. The office of the Minister is set forth in the Picture of a Shepherd, who, by reason of the multitude of ravenous Wolves & other hurtful Beasts, keepeth watch day and night over his flock. He is a Watch-man set in his Watch-Tower to discry the enemy, and to give warning of the danger. He is a Steward to provide for the Family, and to give them their portion of meat in due season. He is a Captain of the Lord's Hoast, to lead them into the obedience of godliness, and to go before them in example of life. He is a Builder, to frame them and fit them to be stones in the Lord's building. He is an Ambassador, to deliver the will of him that sent him, and to speak being called, as the words of God. These comparisons, as they serve to teach diligence and continuance in preaching, so they are forcible to press him to attend upon his charge, that attendeth upon him.

Thirdly, the Apostle speaking of the office of the Minister, saith; Who is sufficient for these things? When he hath done all he can, and employed himself to the utmost of his power, yet he shall come far short of his duty: how much more, when he is ordinarily absent from his charge, which requireth his ordinary presence?

Fourthly, it is against the order of Nature, the rule of reason, and the law of Justice, to take wages for that work which he doth not perform; and to eat where he doth not labor. It is a great wrong and injury done to those that labor in feeding the Flock, to be denied to eat of the Milk of the Flock: to do the service, and another to receive the reward: to take the Corn, and to give others the Straw: to sow spiritual things, and to be deprived of temporal things: to bear the burden, and to endure the heat of the day, and other to come and take away the penny and price for which they covenanted. It is a kind of theft to eat without labor, and to feed themselves without taking pains.

Fifthly, the danger is very great, that groweth both to the Pastors and people, by this sin of absence and want of attendance. For if any of the Souls which belong unto their charge do perish through their negligence, and starve through want of food, they shall be arraigned as guilty of their death and destruction. The Prophet Ezekell setteth down the threatening of God, When I shall say unto the wicked! O wicked man, thou shalt die the death, if thou dost not speak and admonish the wicked of his way, that wicked man shall die for his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand. Hereunto accordeth the saying of Christ; If the Blind lead the Blind, both shall fall into the Ditch. The loss of the flock, is the reproach of the Shepherd: and the people's destruction, shall be the Pastors confusion. And when the Pastor is absent, the people will soon decline, from zeal to coldness, fall from virtue to vice, turn from the worship of God to Idolatry, revolt from the works of piety, to damnable security. Let a man withhold his hand, and cease from sowing good seed, or under-sow his ground by sparing his Corn, Thistles and Weedes will spring up instead thereof. Let a man have food withdrawn from him, and abstain from nourishment that feedeth the body, he shall be filled with wind, and fall into weakness. When Moses was absent from the Children of Istaell but forty days, while he was talking with God in the Mountain, they committed horrible Idolatry, and turned the glory of God into the similitude of a Calf that eateth hay. Iehoash the King of Judahdid that which was good in the sight of the Lord, all his time that Jehoiada the Priest was with him, and taught him: but after his death, both, King, and Princes, & people, left the house of the Lord God of their Fathers, and erected Groues, and served Idols, so that wrath came upon them, because of this their trespass. This also experience taught the Apostle in the Church of the Galatians: while he was present, they kept the Faith, they turned neither to the right hand nor to the left, they did cleave to the Doctrine of Christ's Gospel: but when he was gone, the false Apostles entered, and took occasion by his absence, to sow Tares among the Wheat, and to corrupt the truth with Leaven of false Doctrine. When the Shepherd is gone, the Wolves may safely enter into the Sheepfold, not sparing the Flock. When the Watch-man is gone or fallen asleep, the Enemy may enter and sack the City. When the Husbandman that sowed good seed in his field is departed, the envious man came and sowed Cockle and Darnell among the Corn. While the people have the presence and residence of their faithful Pastor to feed them, and to go in and out before them, both in Doctrine and example, yet such is the weakness of Flesh, the corruption of Nature, the strength of sin, the subtlety of the Enemy, the vanity of the world, the inconstancy of human things, that they are ready to fall and to give over; albeit I say that he be with thē, and conversant among them, and remain in the midst of them? If then much evil be done while the Ouer-seers are present, much more will be committed while they are absent, while there is none to stay them, while the Bridle is cast in their own necks. Thus Moses proveth that the people would corrupt themselves, and turn from the right way after his death, because they had been rebellious and stiff-necked he being alive. Deut. 31, 27, 29. I know thy rebellion and thy stiff-neck: behold, I being yet alive with you this day, ye are rebellious against the Lord: how much more then after my death?

Sixthly, the necessity of having the presence of the Pastor continually to call upon the people, appeareth herein, because the danger of the Wolf is continual, and therefore the use of the Shepherd is continual. The Apostle telleth the Elders of Ephesus, That he knoweth this, that after his departing, grievous Wolves would enter in among them, not sparing the Flock. Besides, Satan is busy in tempting, subtle in undermining, crafty in deceiving, malicious in spoiling, and cruel in destroying: he compasseth the earth too and and fro, and walketh up and down in it. Now, the more diligent the spiritual enemy is, the more violent and watchful ought the Pastor to be. If the good man of the House knew at what hour the Thief would come to rob and to steal, doubtless he would watch, and not suffer his house to be broken down. Hence it is that Peter saith; Be sober and watch, for your adversary the Devil as a roaring Lyon, walketh about seeking whom he may devour. And surely this is the cause, that in some places the people are defiled with all abominations; in other places they are perverted and seduced by Jesuits and Seminary Priests, and in all places grow cold and careless in Religion, because they want means to guide them and stay them in the right way, they have not zealous Pastors to stir them up to godliness, and to drive away the Wolf far from them.

Seventhly, it is of evil report, a note of covetousness, or evil suspicion of it, and giveth great offense to the Church of God. For where there is an unnecessary absence of the Minister from his cure and charge, he giveth occasion to suspect, that he rather desireth to feed upon them, then to feed them: to seek theirs, then them: to prey upon them, then to pray with them: to possess their goods, then to win their Souls. We are commanded to abstain from all appearance of evil. And the Apostle approoueth his Ministry to the consciences of the Corinthians by this, That he sought not theirs, but them.

Eighthly, the inconvenience is great that cometh by this absence, it is the cause of a Vagrant, in-sufficient, idle, and reproachful Ministry, and an evident occasion of keeping out of sufficient men and able Work-men, both able and apt to teach, and of impouerishing such as are already entered. This is the cause of many wandering Levites, and of sundry that sit idle for want of employment.

Lastly, this ordinary absence is against the Statutes of Princes, and the decrees of Counsels, holden not only in the most pure times, but in the most palpable times, even as it were at midnight, when the whole earth was over-shaddowed with darkness. These appointed many Cannons and Constitutions, charging the Minister to be resident in God's Tabernacle, not to be absent from his Parish, lest he loose that excellent Talent which God hath bestowed upon him: appointing that no man should be ordained Minister of two Churches, but limiting him to remain in that, unto which he was first called. If any be called to another charge, let him simply give over the former, and claim no interest in it. If any be otherwise, he shall be prohibited from the Lord's Table, and be excommunicated.

Hitherto we have shown the necessity of the Pastors presence, and opened the reasons whereby it is confirmed and strengthened. Now it remaineth to answer such objections as are brought, to justify the ordinary absence from the charge which he hath taken upon him. There are many things brought and alleged to warrant this absence. Solomon teacheth, that the Sluggard is wiser in his own conceit, then seven men that can render a reason. The causes that are pretended to excuse and defend the Pastors absence, are taken partly from the holy Scripture, and partly from natural reason. First, they say it was lawful and lawfully practiced in Epaphras, who was the Minister of the Colossians; yea, a faithful Minister, yet absent from that Church. Col. 1, 7. and 4, 12. The like might be said of Epaphroditus absent from the Phillippians. I answer, first it doth not appear plainly and directly, that they were the Pastors of those Churches; rather it seemeth they were Evangelists, that went from place to place, and always seconded the labors of the Apostles. For it is to be thought that Archippus was the Pastor of the Colossians, who is charged to look to his Ministry that he had received in the Lord, that he fulfill it. Secondly, their absence was not willful and ordinary, but they were employed by the necessary occasions of the Church, chosen and enjoined to dispatch the business thereof.

Again, they object that he which preacheth the Gospel, must live of the Gospel. 1 Cor. 9. but without joining Living to Living, as it were house to house, all cannot live by reason of the smallness and slenderesse of the living, therefore it is tolerable in some. I answer, the want of sufficient provision, cannot bring with it a sufficient toleration. It doth no more warrant the Act, then to do evil, that good may come thereof, whose damnation is just. If there be a roving Ministry among us, and a wandering up and down of such as offer their service for ten shekles of Silver, and a suit of apparel, and an ordinary allowance of meat and drink: it belongeth to the Magistrate to reform this disorder, and to redress this mischief. Thus it was among the Jews in the Old Testament: but this misery and calamity fell upon them, when there was no King in Israel. Secondly, it is better to take some other lawful means in such poverty of the Church, as to labor with the hands as Paul did, or to practice some other laudable science, which will be without offense to God or Man.

It is in his power to root up, that did plant: it belongeth to him to pull down, that did build: he can destroy, that doth preserve. But the positive Law of man appointed them their circuit and bounds, and consequently may order them as it thinketh, and may give leave of absence.

I answer, that Magistrates may not abrogate and abolish Laws constituted and conformed according to God's Laws. Again, the division of Parishes is not from men, but of God. For when the Scripture willeth Elders to be chosen for every Church, and that these assemblies should be with the greatest convenience of order and comeliness; it is plain, that thereby is prescribed, a division of national Churches into particular Congregations. For this cause Paul left Titus in Creta, that he should continue to redress the things that remain, and should ordain Elders in every City. So the Apostles ordained Elders by election in every Church.

Again, it may be said, a man may have two Livings, being by Law united, Therefore before they be united. I answer, if the union be such, that there may be but one body, and one competent and commodious resort thereof together in one place, so as one Pastor may fitly instruct them, and lead them out and in, in the duties of Religion, in the sanctification of the Sabbath, in the practice of holiness, and in example of life: then it followeth, that albeit it be lawful to make this conjunction, yet it is not proved lawful before the union. It is lawful, being made one Congregation, one assembly, one Church, which is unlawful so long as it remaineth divided, & maketh two Congregations, two assemblies, two Churches. For the Minister may conveniently teach them together, whom he cannot possibly teach asunder; as the School-master may teach the Scholars that belong to one School, but not those that belong to diverse.

Moreover, if it be unlawful, then especially in this point, and for this cause, because he receiveth maintenance where he doth not labor. But it is lawful to take wages, where there is no work done, as appeareth 2. Cor. 11, 8. Where Paul saith; I robbed other Churches, and took Wages of you to do you service. I answer, the place is to be understood of extraordinary

Ministers, and of extraordinary occasions, when, and where, no settled and sufficient maintenance is established, and therefore doth not prove the matter in question. And where as according to our division of Parishes, lands, are occupied by Forrainers and Strangers; and consequently, Tithes and duties taken of them, without any feeding of them, it was ordained to establish a certain, known, and definite maintenance, and besides the Minister not failing in his calling, they may be partakers of his labor.

Furthermore, it is objected, that Pastors are not tied to particular places, but are discharged by a general teaching. It skilleth not where they teach, so they be not idle. They are Ministers of the Church of England, and therefore may preach in any part of the Land, and are blameless. Therefore there is no unlawful non-residency. For God hath ordained (saith the Apostle) That they which Preach the Gospel, may live of the Gospel. I answer, they are not only Ministers of England, but of such a particular Congregation, and have their maintenance of such a particular Church, and therefore are bound to employ their labor in that particular place. He that hath not a particular charge and Church to care for, will care indeed for no Church as he ought to care. For if that which is cared for of all, is cared for of none: then he that hath but a general care, of one place no more then of another, commonly neglecteth all. When God sent Jonah the Prophet to Nineveh, he sinned in going to Tarshish. If he had preached never so duly and diligently in that Citty, when God called him to another, he had not discharged the duty of a good Prophet. Besides, whereas they say they are Ministers of England, & therefore sufficeth to preach in any corner or quarter of the Land: they may as well say they are Ministers of Europe, and consequently may preach in any part of Europe, and be discharged in conscience of any farther duty to be required of them. Nay, some are so shameless, as they dare openly avouch, that they are as much bound to the Church of Jerusalem, if they might have access thereunto, as to that people that called them, and do maintain them. Verily, this argueth little learning, and less conscience. For this were to change a Pastor into an Apostle, a limited office into an unlimited, and as great a wonder as to bring all the world into the circuit and compass of a little Town. And we see it is directly against the order of the Scripture, which calleth them Ministers of such and such a particular Church; as of Ephesus, of Pergamos, of Sardi, and the rest. So when general teaching is Apostolical, particular is Pastoral, which is limited to a certain place. Again, it is a thing in it self unreasonable, and to the people injurious, that they should receive their Wages in one place, and perform their service in another place: that one should give them their hire, and another have the profit of their pains. Would not a man think he had wrong done him, if he hyring a servant, another should take the labor of his hands? Or should that servant be excused, who having wages paid him by his Master, should apply himself in another man's work? Or, when a man hireth a shepherd to look to his sheep, will he not complain if they be neglected, and another man's sheep fed and attended? Or, can such a shepherd think his duty discharged, albeit he be never so diligent and watching in looking to the sheep of another? A Shepherd hath a particular Flock to attend, which he must watch: a Servant must dispatch his work that hath hired him. Thus it ought to be with every faithful Minister, he hath his special ground to Till, his proper house to build, his Flock to feed, his Citty to watch, his Army to lead, and may not wander out of the bounds and borders limited unto him.

Others allege in excuse of this absence, that many of them give necessary attendance upon their Lord's and their Families, and being their Household Chaplains, and so doing service to great persons, are forced to be absent from their Cures. I answer, this savoreth of covetousness, or of ambition, or rather of both. They have covetous hearts, and aspiring minds. If they have peculiar charges of their own, Who compelled them to be other men's Chaplains? Or if they be to attend upon their Lord's, who compelled them to take the charge of Souls? It was an usual thing among the godly Kings of Judah, to have their Prophets at their elbows to teach them, to stir them up to good things, and to keep them from falling into sin. The Prophet David had Gad the Seer belonging unto him, who was with him in his banishment, and was as his Counselor, he was retained both in prosperity and adversity with him. And it is a commendable thing, not only in Princes, but in men of State and high place, when they entertain such for a love of the truth, to instruct them and their families in the knowledge of godliness: when they esteem them as the Ministers of God, and give them (not single, but) that double honor which God's word alloweth them: and when they can be content to hear the Law at their mouths, and submit themselves to the obedience of that which is spoken unto them in the Name of the Lord. Yea, such as are so entertained, may highly advance God's glory, and do great good with such great men, and in such great Families, if they regard to do good service to God, rather then to themselves; if they do not flatter to please men, but deal carefully and conscionably in their places. But such as are of high calling, may have attendance and sufficient service done unto them by others, that are without Cures, and have no charge of souls committed unto them: and as they are willing to entertain them, so they are able to maintain them, that they shall not live of the Churches which they do not instruct.

Lastly, they pretend that they teach commonly by themselves, but continually by their substitutes. They come often among their people, and teach them by Curates which they have set in their places: and therefore they sin not by Non-residency. I answer, this often teaching is not sufficient, where continual watchfulness is required. The Lord never said unto him [Teach often:] but preach the word in season, and out of season. He is accursed that doth the work of the Lord negligently. Jer. 48, 10. Diligence is required, where danger is feared. The flocks that are in danger of the Wolf, are watched day and night. The Enemy is always at hand, and watcheth his advantage by the absence of the Pastor. If they could covenant and agree with the adversary, never to assault their charges, but at certaine times and seasons of the year, and bargain with him not to meddle in their absence, they had some good pretence for their negligence, and might be ready to meet him when he cometh to tempt and seduce their people.

Again, they cannot be discharged by a Deputy, where they are to perform personal duty: neither are they freed from blame by other men's gifts, where they are to practice their own gifts. These are like to the Priests, who being commanded to bear the Ark upon their own Shoulders, did set it upon a Cart, and draw it with Oxen. So ought the Ministers to feed their Flocks themselves, and not put them to be fed of others. Some compare such foolish and idle Pastors that put over their charges to others, unto Harlots, which so soon as they have brought forth their Children, by and by commit them to be kept and nourished of others, that they may sooner give themselves to their lusts again. Others resemble them to a man that doth marry a Wife, and being himself unapt for generation, or unwilling to give due benevolence, is content she become fruitful, and made the Mother of many Children by another Father: so is he accounted and presumed to be as vain a man, who being espoused and married to a Church (as a man to his Wife) doth use the help of others in getting spiritual Children unto God. Christ Jesus is the Shepherd, the chief and great Shepherd of the Sheep, all other Pastors are but his Servants and Substitutes: and therefore themselves being his Deputies, they cannot make a Deputy, no more then one Servant discharge himself by another. So then, we must know, that they can no more be said to preach the Word, that preach by others; then to be resident, that are resident by others: or to be godly that lead a godly life by others; and thus they may be saved by others, and themselves go to Hell. But as every man is bound to live godly himself, so is every Pastor bound to preach in his own person. This appeareth under the comparisons and similitudes of Builders, Captains, Ambassadors, Stewards, and Shepherds, which we spake of before. When a man hath made choice of a skillful and cunning Builder to build his house, the Work-man hath not done his duty, if he put it out to be finished by another. When a Prince hath made choice of a General to lead his Army against the Enemy, he may not send another in his room, and himself sit idle at home, but his allegiance bindeth him to go in his own person. The like we might say of the rest. Thus we have seen at large, that the love between the Pastor and people overthroweth the ordinary absence, without just and conscionable causes the one from the other, so that if the Minister would assure his own heart that he loveth the sheep which he hath taken upon him to teach, he must show it by feeding them with the wholesome and heavenly pastures of the word of God.

Secondly, it reproveth such as outwardly are in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravening Wolves unto the Flock; not careful Pastors, not loving Parents, but such as have no provision, no store, no food, no Bread of Life to break unto them, but seek to starve and famish them through want of Milk and meat to put in their mouths. If they be resident and remain with them, and yet do not instruct them, and preach unto them, it is all one as if they were absent from them. If there be meat and drink in the house, and none set upon the Table or given to the Children, they may die and perish for hunger.

These idle Drones are no better then Murderers and Man-slayers; nay, Soul-slayers, which is the greatest and most bloody Murder. For as the Steward that should feed the bodies of such as are in the Family, and pineth them to death, is a Murderer: and the Nurse, that undertaketh the nourishing of the Child, and yet either through daintiness or idleness, or willfulness, will not draw out the breast, but suffereth the Child to languish and perish, is a Murderer of the Child: so such as are Stewards of God's house, and Nurses of God's people, yet feed not their Souls, but starve them to death, are Blood-suckers and Murderers in the highest degree. They are worse then the Cannibals that live upon blood: for these live upon the souls of men, and carry them head-long to Hell. The Lord complaineth in the Prophet, That the people perish through want of knowledge. Such as are blindly led, do fall into the Ditch with their blind Leaders. The blood of such as perish in their ignorance through want of teaching, shall be required at the Watch-man's hand. The Prophet David having the Water of the well of Bethlehem (that he longed and lusted to taste) brought unto him, yet would not drink thereof when he had it, but poured it for an offering unto the Lord, because it was the blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives. O that these men would consider of their sin, and had a feeling of their iniquity, that they eat and drink the blood of Men, and maintain themselves by the destruction of their souls. Suppose he lead an unblameable life, give good example to others, keep hospitality, fill their bellies, make peace among his Neighbors, be able privately to exhort and comfort them, and to perform other common works of Charity: yet he hath not discharged the duty of a Minister, unless he preach unto them diligently and faithfully, and divide the word of truth aright.

Lastly, seeing the Minister and people ought to be as Father and Son, this showeth the duty of the people that are under their Ministry, that they regard their Ministers as their Parents, honoring them, yielding them due recompense, esteeming them as Fellow-workers with God, to beget them to Christ, to turn them to Salvation, to nourish them up, and continue them in the estate of Christ. Nay, we should account of them (if it be possible) more then of natural Parents. Of our Parents we have received only to be; Of our Ministers we have received to be well. Of our Parents we have taken our first birth: of our Ministers we have obtained our second birth. Of our Parents we have been brought into the World by Generation: of our Ministers we have been brought into the Church by Regeneration. Our first begetting was to death: our second or new birth, is to Life and Salvation. By the first birth we are Heirs of Wrath: by the second we are made the Sons of God. So then, if it be better for us to be borne again of Water and the Holy Ghost, which cannot proceed from the will of the flesh, nor from the will of Man, but of God: we ought to esteem of those that are Instruments of our Regeneration, as dearelie and tenderly as if they were our Parents, and to say with the Apostle; How beautiful are the Feet of them which bring glad tidings of pceace, and bring glad tidings of good things? Hence it is that he speaketh to the Thessalonians, We beseech you Brethren, that ye acknowledge them that labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you, that ye have them in singular love for their works sake.

The fifth Commandment calleth and comprehendeth, all Pastors under the Name of Parents, to teach us to know those that have begotten us unto the Lord, and to note the time, the means, and the person that hath brought that blessing upon us. It hath been an old and ancient custom, for men to celebrate their birth-day, as we see in Herod, who usually made a great Feast at it: much more oughtest thou to make thy New-birth day, wherein thou was borne again and made the Child of God, a day of solemnity never to be forgotten, and to rejoice therein above all things and times in the World. This reproveth those, that regard not to hear them, nor care to attend to their Doctrine. For as God condemneth the absence of the Pastor from his own people; so he reproveth the absence of the people from their own Pastor. Some hold of Paul, some of Cephas, some of Apollos, and delight more in the gifts of a Straunger, then in the Ministry of him whom the Lord hath placed over them. But may we hear none but our own Pastors? What if they be unapt to teach, and unable to instruct? I answer, we may hear others, and prove many Spirits, but we ought not willingly to be absent from our own assemblies, where our presence and company is especially required. I am no Patron of unpreaching Prelates, I wish them either reformed, or removed: either amended or deprived. If a man want food at home, he may lawfully ask Bread and take relief abroad: but when a man is plentifully stored, or at least, competently and conveniently provided for at home, it is a shame to take the Bread that is appointed for others. Be it that other Pastors have greater gifts of learning, of zeal, of utterance, then our own: yet we are bound to hear them, to pray for them, to attend upon them, as they attend upon us. He hath commanded every Man to eat his own Bread, and to drink the Water of his own Cistern, contenting himself with his own estate, not envying the better estate of another.

We see how mercifully the Lord dealeth with those of the lower and poorer sort, who have little and the same homely provision of fare, in comparison of others that are full fed, and fare deliciously every day, and are charged with many Children to bring up; yet both they and their children are as healthful in body, and as strong in their Limbes, as comely in countenance, and as well graced in their outward persons, as they that abound in Wealth, and their Cuppes over-flow in all the dainties and delicacies of the World. So we may be well assured, that the Lord will much more provide for our Souls, and bless that provision that he hath appointed for us, albeit it be but mean and simple. When a man is sick in body, he will prefer that Physician which knoweth best the state of his body, who is most likely to do him most good, although perhaps some other be better learned and deeper skilled. Thus ought it to be with us, our own Pastor, which is the Physician of our Souls, knoweth best our estate, seeth whereof we have need, understandeth the Nature of our disease; and consequently, is best able to restore us to health again. He that hath more learning, may profit by him that hath less, may profit (I say) even in knowledge. For the Lord speaking by the mouth of his Minister, whom he hath in some measure furnished with gifts, many times teacheth the wise by the simple, and the great learned man, by him that is inferior to himself. The Lord Jesus was oftentimes present at the Sermons of John. The Prophets that were extraordinarily called, disdained not the Ministry of the Priests, but were content to learn the law of them. This is the Lord's doing, to advance his own glory, and to humble the highest Teachers of the Church. The Apostle hoped to profit by the Romaines, as they should by him. Every Congregation or Parish, should consist of so many Christians as can meet at one assembly.

The Apostles directed by the Spirit of God, were the Authors of this division and distinction; who having converted many to the Gospel, separated them, and ordained them Elders, not only according to the number of their Cities, but also according to their several multitudes, which are called Churches. For even as God hath distributed the Civil State of the World into Kingdoms, Provinces, Shires, Cities, and other Dominions, and hath ranged them into several meetings: so he hath divided his Church into certain and several assemblies, for the better ordering and edifying of them: and therefore the distinction of particular Churches, is not of human invention, but of divine institution.

Hence it may be concluded and inferred, that one Pastor cannot be over all assemblies, nor all assemblies under one Pastor. Every Shepherd must have his own Flock, and every Flock must know his own Shepherd. There is a near band and mutual conjunction between these two. The Minister is charged with his own people by the ordinance of God, he must attend the Flock committed to his care and Cure, over which the Lord hath made him Watch-man and Ouer-seer. This is the knot that tieth the people fast to their own Pastor. Everyone in the Civil State knoweth his own Citty, and to what company he and his whole house doth belong. Every Company in the Citty, knoweth to what jurisdiction he belongeth. So it ought to be in the Church of Christ, every particular Christian should be annexed unto one certain assembly, and be there enrolled as a member of that society, to live under the Ministry and government thereof. For where shall we rather hope to receive good, then under that Ministry which the Lord hath set over us? Or from whom rather shall we expect the blessing of God, then from him whose labors he hath promised to bless? Hence it is that the Apostle saith; Obey them that have the over-sight of you, and submit yourselves, for they watch for your Souls as they that must give accounts, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief, for that is unprofitable for you. Here he addeth many reasons, as it were upon an heap, to urge us to this duty. If they watch for our Souls, we also ought to wait upon them: If that they must render an account for our Souls, we must also render an account of their labors bestowed upon us. If they must do it with joy, and not with grief, we are charged by our obedience to the Gospel, and by submitting our selves to the Ministry of our own Pastors, to Minister all comfort, and give them cause of rejoicing in their labors. But if we sever our selves from them, and refuse their Ministry; we grieve them, not comfort them: we discourage them, not encourage them: we afflict them, not rejoice them. It is therefore a most vain pretence, and great folly of such as being reprov'd for their negligence, in resorting to their own Pastors; answer, that they can profit more by another, they can be edified better by hearing in another place, whereas peradventure, they regard not to hear any man, and contemn the Gospel, out of whose mouth soever it proceed and be uttered. Besides, we have greatest hope of receiving blessing from our own Pastor, and every member of the same assembly, must seek the Lord, and serve him in the place appointed unto us for that purpose, and therefore we ought not to with-draw our selves from thence, where our presence is required. If God have put the word of Reconciliation into his mouth, to say unto us in the Name of the Lord, be ye reconciled unto God, and have made an Ambassador to speak in his Name, who is he that shall over-rule the ordinance and counsel of God, or refuse to submit himself unto his most holy and merciful assignement? Secondly, this convinceth and reproveth those, that contemn, deride, scorn, abase, abuse, and revile their Ministers.

These are ungodly and ungracious Children, that thus behave themselves toward their spiritual Fathers, and bereave themselves of the blessings that belong to such as obey their Parents. These are like to cursed Cham, that mocked his Father, and heard an horrible curse denounced against him, which took effect afterward in his season: or to those malicious Children, which mocked the Prophet, scorned him and his calling, and brought upon themselves the judgments of God. If we follow their sin, let us look for their end; if we walk in their ways, we must be assured of their wages: and if we imitate their deeds, we shall be partakers of their destruction. How many are there among us, that are grown to that height of sin, that they regard not the doctrine that is delivered, but set themselves against the Minister that doth deliver it? These men are grown to be shameless and impudent, that regard not the means of salvation, nor esteem of the ordinance of God, nor desire to hear of their sins. These have stiff necks and hard hearts, they are come to sit down in the seat of the Scorers, and they shall have the reward of Scorers. And let all such as will know nothing else, learn this as a certain rule gathered out of a continual Tenor of the Scriptures, and the constant course of God's judgments, that when once they begin to make a mock of sin, and of the means that should recover them out of their sin, then wrath is not far from them, but is near unto them. The more presumptuous and secure they are, the nearer to destruction. We see this in the people of Israel. 2. Chron. 36. 16. When once they began to dally with God; nay, with their own souls, and mocked the Messengers that the Lord God of their Fathers sent to them, rising early and late (for he had compassion on his people, and on his habitation) he brought upon them the King of the Chaldeans, who spared neither young man nor Virgin, neither ancient nor aged, God gave all into his hands. This is a fearful example of his judgments, that fell upon this people for their contempt of the word, and misusing the Messengers that were sent unto them; to teach all men to beware, and be warned of falling into the same sin, and return betimes, that (if it be possible) his plagues may be prevented by timely repentance. Few that run thus far look back again, to say, what have we done? When the measure of sin is perfected, the time of judgment is hastened. Howbeit God is able to touch and to turn their hearts; and his word before contemned, if now it be believed, is able to save their Souls.

[Whom I have begotten in my bonds.]

Before we heard how the Apostle calleth Onesimus his Son. In these words he expresseth how he became his Son; namely, that by his Ministry he begat him to God, and turned him to believe the Gospel. He setteth down the force and efficacy of the Ministry of the word, and showeth, that it is not an empty sound, and an idle noise of wast words vanished in the air without fruit or profit, as foolish and frantic Spirits do blasphemously report, but is an effectual instrument, whereby God worketh the Regeneration, Conversion, and Salvation of Men. Heereby we learn, that men are regenerated and borne a-new by the Ministry of the Word to be the Children of God, and Coheires with Christ of eternal life, God working by the means of his word, and by the Ministry of his Servants, whereby he conveyeth it unto us, his Spirit being the powerful Applyer, Blessor, and Effectour of this new-birth. So the Apostle saith, In Christ Jesus through the Gospel I have begotten you. The Prophet Jeremiah teacheth, That his Word is like a fire, and like an Hammer that breaketh the Stones. It is able to burn up and consume our corruption, and to mollify our stony hearts, that we may have hearts of Flesh. This the Apostle Peter speaketh; We are borne again, not of Mortall, but of immortal Seed, by the word of God which endureth forever, and this is the word which is preached among you. In like manner James saith; Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be as the first Fruits of his Creatures.

To conclude, Elihu setting down diverse means that God hath, and useth to instruct Man, and to draw him out of sin unto himself, maketh this one, and one of the principal; If there be a Messenger with him, or an Interpretour, one of a thousand, to declare unto man his righteousness, then will he have mercy upon him, and will say; Deliver him that he go not down into the pit, for I have received a reconciliation. These testimonies, both of the Prophets and Apostles, are plain to prove, that the word preached is the ordinary Instrumental cause of our conversion and regeneration, and the means that God hath sanctified to bring us to be members of the Church, and Heirs of Salvation.

The Reasons are very plain to confirm this point of Doctrine. First, the word is of a most powerful and piercing Nature, it is hotter then the fire, it is stronger then the Hammer, it is sharper then the Sword, it is sweeter then the Honey, it is purer then the Gold: it is better then the Pearls: more nourishable then meat, more forceable then the Leaven, more profitable then the Rain, more comfortable then the Dew that falleth upon the Herbs. It is able to make a Blind man see; a Crooked man, straight; a Bond man, free; a poor man, rich; a sick man, whole; nay, a dead man, it is able to make alive again. This is a great work, it is a wonderful Miracle that God worketh in the time of the Gospel. We are borne dead in sins and trespasses, without Faith, without Repentance, without Grace, without God, without Hope, without Sanctification, without Salvation: but the Word of God is able to bring restoring of sight to the blind, deliverance to the Captive, liberty to the bruised, healing to the broken hearted, and life to the dead. This is noted, as the end of Paul's calling and sending to Preach the Gospel; To open their Eyes, that they may turn from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and an inheritance among them that are sanctified by Faith in Christ Jesus.

Thus also the Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews writeth; The word of God is lively and mighty in operation, and sharper then any two-edged sword, and entereth through, even unto the dividing asunder of the soul and the spirit, of the joints and the marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. If any ask the question how it hath this power? I answer, not by any inherent quality in it self, nor by any force it receiveth from man that preacheth it, but from the Supernatural power of God, who is mighty in the hearts of men, rejoicing the heart, converting the Soul, giving wisdom to the simple, granting light unto the eyes, and keeping from presumptuous sins by it.

Secondly, that way whereby God worketh Faith in us, by the same means he beginneth our new-birth, and maketh us his own Children. But the ordinary means to work Faith in us, is the preaching of the word; For how shall they call on him, in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him, of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a Preacher? And how shall they Preach, except they be sent? So then Faith is by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. We see hereby, that Faith is the cause and beginning of repentance: we see also that Faith is wrought by the word, and therefore by necessary consequence, repentance must come by the word. Here are three things offered to our considerations; the Word, Faith, and Regeneration. Regeneration is a fruit of Faith: Faith is an effect of the Word; the Word is preached by the Minister. Now, it is a true rule, that the cause of the cause, is also the cause of the effect, and therefore the preaching of the Word being the cause of Faith, which causeth Repentance and Regeneration, must also needs be the cause of Repentance, and of Regeneration.

Thirdly, it is the ordinance of God to work this good work of Regeneration in us, because we cannot by our wisdom, or any natural gifts in our selves (though most esteemed in our own eyes, and greatly magnified by others) attain sanctification of life, or believe unto salvation.

This the Apostle testifieth. 1 Cor. 1. and maketh this the reason why God will save us by the hearing of Faith preached; Seeing the World by it own wisdom, knew not God in the wisdom of God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. There is a double knowledge of God, and a double way to know him: one, Natural, the other Spiritual. Natural, by the sight of the Creatures, by the view of the world, by beholding the heavens, which declare the glory of God, whereby the eternity, the Majesty, the power, the wisdom, the greatness, the goodness of God do appear. Spiritual, by hearing and hearkening unto the word of God, which not only beareth witness to those essential properties of God, more sufficiently and fully then the former, but setteth down distinctly the Trinity of the persons, and the mercy of God toward the elect, promised and performed unto them for Christ's sake. Natural reason is blind in the matters of God, and though it may serve to make us without excuse, it cannot suffice to bring us to salvation without a farther and better guide. So then, the Lord, to make the wisdom of the World foolishness, and to gain glory to his own Name, and to show that he hath vouchsafed that grace & mercy to us which he denied to the wisest among the Gentiles, that were learned and skillful in all human knowledge, but were utterly ignorant of his Word, hath raised up to us a light which they never saw, and made us to hear the sound of a voice which they never heard. Seeing therefore the word preached is of so great force, that it causeth Faith in us, which all the wisdom of the World could never work: it followeth, that this word of God, is the ordinary cause or Instrument of our conversion and salvation.

This is so plain, & so pregnant a truth, that it is greatly to be wondered, that any should stumble or stagger at it, and that all do not submit themselves unto it. But because doubts arise, and Objections are made against this point and principle, plainly proved, and firmly established by reasons out of the Scripture; let us see what they are, and how they may be answered. First of all, it is objected, that there are other means effectual, to work Faith, and to bring to Repentance: as afflictiō, or private admonition. Touching affliction, such as lived in Idolatry, in ignorance, in uncleanness, that favored wholly of the flesh, and nothing at all of the spirit, have been brought to confess and forsake their sins, and to humble them-selves under the mighty hand of God; some being afflicted in body as Manasseh: others, troubled in Conscience, feeling the wound of the spirit, & groaning under the stroke of God's judgments, as Paul in his conversion, have by this means had Faith and Repentance given unto them. And touching private exhortation, it is made auayleable to turn us to God. Hence it is, that the Apostle teaching that a believing Husband may with a safe Conscience use the company of an unbelieving Wife, and a believing Wife use the company of an unbelieving husband, so that the one ought not depart from the other: he useth this Reason, For what knowest thou, O Wife, whether thou shalt save thy Husband? Or what knowest thou (O Man) whether thou shalt save thy Wife? So the Apostle Peter setting down the wives duty toward her husband, saith Let their wives be subject to their Husbandes, that even they which obey not the word, may without the word be won by the conversation of their wives. Where we see, that some are won to the Faith, without the preaching of the word. I answer, it is true that God blesseth and sanctifieth many means beside the preaching of the word, to the good of his Children, as Meditation, Conference, private instruction, Prayer, fear of Hell, and such like. Notwithstanding, many that are converted to God, are deceived in the means and instrument of their conversion. For, albeit such as are afflicted are brought to know themselves, and to acknowledge the damnable estate wherein they stood, yet it is not the affliction it self that wrought their conversion. The trouble that they sustained and endured, whether it were in body, or in mind, or in both, was sent by the goodness of God upon them, to bring them to a love of the word, who before loathed it, and made no account or reckoning of it. This is it which the Apostle teacheth, That by the Law cometh the knowledge of sin. So affliction may lay before us the knowledge of our sins, but it cannot take them away: it may show us our wound, but it cannot help us, and heal us: it may cast us down, but it cannot raise us up: it may be a School-master to bring us to Christ, but it cannot make us partakers of Christ. It is like a sharp Needle, which doth not, nor cannot sow the cloth, but it is necessary to prepare the way for the thread; or it is like an eating or a fretting corrasive which cannot cure, but yet it is profitable to make the way for the healing medicine. So the afflictions that God layeth upon us, may bring us to the sight and knowledge of our sins, and to the consideration of the miseries which we deserve, and to the feeling of the flashes of hell fire: but they cannot work Faith in us, nor assure us of pardon, nor apply to us the promise of God touching the remission of sins. It maketh a good beginning, but it cannot bring the work to perfection. The like may be said of private admonition, and a godly conversation, which the Apostles teach may be means of salvation to others: it is not spoken to lessen or weaken the authority or efficacy of public preaching, as if it were not the ordinary means to conceive, nourish, and increase faith in us; neither is it simply to be understood that they are able to convert the soul, but only that they are good occasions, fit inducements, and profitable helps to draw us and allure us to a liking, and loving, and longing after faith. For when a man that is not a Christian, but an Infidel, beholdeth the holy, pure, & chaste conversation of his Wife after her calling to the knowledge of the truth, and hir subjection and obedience toward himself, he may be moved to embrace the Christian Religion, whereof he seeth such worthy fruits. We have a notable example heerof, in the woman of Samaria, who persuading the men of the City to go out and hear Christ, they said unto her after they had heard his preaching, Now we believe, not because of thy saying, for we have herd him our selves, and know that this is indeed that Christ the Savior of the world. The exhortation of this woman prevailed with them to hear Christ, and by their hearing they were converted: she was the cause of their hearing, their hearing was the cause of their believing; she was the Instrument that brought them to Christ, and he wrought Faith in them, when they were brought unto him.

Secondly, it is said that reading is preaching, and therefore it is a sufficient means of salvation. To this purpose they quote, Acts 21. Moses of old time hath in every City them that preach him, seeing he is read in the Synagogue every Saboth day. Loe (say they) he is preached when he is read, therefore the bare reading must needs be preaching; yea, some add it is better then preaching, because when they hear the Scriptures read, they know it is the word of God; but when they hear preaching, it is men's exposition and interpretation, and they know not whether it be true or false, sound or unsound, right or wrong. I answer, this objection falleth of it self, and it is overthrown by that, whereby it is sought to be strengthened. For if reading be preaching, then reading cannot be better then preaching, inasmuch as nothing can be better or worse than it self. It is not denied but the word (Preaching) may in a general sense include not only the reading of the word but any other way of declaring and publishing the power, truth, glory, and works of God, Rom. 2, 20, 21. Psal. 19, 1, 2. but then it is not used as we take the word in the state of the question. For we mean by preaching the expounding of the Scripture, according to the proportion of faith, & applying thereof according to the capacity of the hearers. And thus they are set down in the place alleged before, as two distinct things, one accompanying and following the other, according to the ordinance of God, and practice of the servants of God. Hence it is, that the Apostle giveth this as a duty and direction belonging to Timothy, Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, and to Doctrine. So it is said in the book of Nehemiah, The Levites caused the people to understand the Law, and the people stood in their place, and they read in the Book of the Law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading. Likewise when Christ came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up, and went into the Synagogue on the Saboth day, he stood up, He opened the Book, and read the Scripture: then he closed the Book, he sate down, the eyes of all of them were fastened on him, and he began to preach unto them. Thus also we see, that when the Apostle Paul wrote his Epistle to the Romaines, he excused himself that he could not come to preach unto them, For he longed to see them that he might bestow some spiritual gift among them, and acknowledged himself a debtor to the Grecians, and to the Barbarians, to the Wisemen, and unto the unwise, so that as much as lay in him, he was ready to preach the Gospel to them also that were at Rome. Whereby we see, that preaching and hearing are not witing and reading: and therefore, as the Apostle when he wrote, did not preach, so the people when they read, did not hear.

Moreover, if we should reason a little farther with such as prefer simple reading before sound preaching, how do they know that the word which they hear read, is the word of God? For the Scripture inspired of God is the Originals, the Hebrew of the old Testament, the Greek of the new Testament, in other tongues it speaketh not but by an interpreter; for from these two tongues and languages the Scriptures were turned and translated by men, into the French by Frenchmen, into the Dutch by Dutchmen, into the English by Englishmen, and so of all other Nations. So that when we read, or hear read the Scriptures in our own tongues, we read and hear read the translations of men: as when this word is preached we hear the expositions and interpretations of men. And hence it is, that the translations; even the best translations which are among us, may be amended and corrected, according as it pleaseth God to give greater sight, and better insight into those learned Languages, and as time discovereth the wants and imperfections of them. But the Scriptures themselves are free from all error, no weakness can be discovered in them, they cannot be made better by the judgment of men, or by length of time. For all God's works are pure and perfect, and no man can control anything in them. If this be true (may some say) that the translations of the Scriptures are in some sort the work of man, how shall the people know when they have and hear the word of God, and when they have and hear the word of man? This may seem to leave them in a maze and mammering, and to hang their Faith upon the will of men, that they shall not know what to believe. I answer, they must have in all doubts that arise, and in all Controuersies that do trouble them, they must have (I say) recourse to their faithful and learned Pastors, whose care over them, and love unto them, may give them hope that their senses are exercised in the wise discerning between good and evil. Whereby, by the way we may see, the necessity of having Pastors and Teachers, able to teach, to convince, to correct, to instruct, to comfort, to resolve such doubts and demands as are moved unto them. Besides, the people of God have for their direction, both the help of comparing one place of Scripture with another, and the assistance of the spirit, to lead them unto all truth that shall be necessary for them to salvation.

Moreover, if we should demand of these men that are wise in their own eyes, how they know the word read to be the holy Scripture, what will they answer? Will they say, by the authority of the Church, or by the testimony of the spirit? But whatsoever they speak, they must speak against themselves. If they say by the Church, the Church also setteth forth the preaching of the Gospel, and chargeth us to hear the same at the mouth of the Minister. Will they say by the Spirit? the same Spirit will lead them into all truth, and open their hearts to attend the preaching Ministry, if they be led by the spirit of God. Wherefore to conclude, and to return to the former objection, such as hold reading to be preaching, or better then preaching, are either such as are Idol-Shepherdes that cannot preach, or idle Shepherds that will not preach, or ignorant people that cannot judge, or carnal Gospellers, that regard not to hear, or such conceited sluggards, as live under a reading Ministry. These are they that condemn the Priests and Prophets, nay Christ and his Apostles of want of wisdom and discretion, to choose the best means; or of ignorance to know and understand what is most profitable; or of malice and envy, to hide from them that which is most profitable, or of malice and envy to hide from them that which is most available for their souls health. For, if reading be better, they are to be blamed that use the worse, and refuse the better. Surely, they would never have preached at all, if the naked reading had been as effectual. Moreover, the reading Minister by this reason, should be the best Minister, & reading, a better gift then preaching; yea, every child might be a better Minister then he that preacheth the word. And then, what should we do with Universities and Schools of Learning, which are the Nurseries and Seminaries of the Church, to train up able men, and to furnish them with gifts of knowledge. But the gifts which Christ bestowed for the edification of his Church, when he ascended on high, and led Captivity Captive, are all preaching gifts. The want of gifts which the Prophets complain to have been in the guides of the people, was not of reading and reciting the words out of the book, but the gifts of preaching and expounding the Scriptures. Hence it is, that God rejecteth those that be ignorant, as unfit and unable Instruments of salvation, My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge, because thou hast refused knowledge; I will also refuse thee, that thou shalt be no Priest to me. And in another place, The Priests lips should preserve knowledge, and they shall seek the Law at his Mouth, for he is the Messenger of the Lord of hosts. Lastly, the preaching of the word is acknowledged & confessed to be the only essential mark of the Church, so that it alone is of force to work faith and salvation.

Thirdly, if reading of the Scriptures be not an ordinary means to work Faith in Christ, and Repentance from dead works, as well as the lively preaching of them, it will follow that the Ministers themselves want the ordinary means, because they by reading do furnish themselves to preach to others, but seldom do hear others preach. I answer, they want not the ordinary means from their own preaching, though they have no other, though they hear no other. They have faith before they enter into that calling, but it is confirmed by their own Ministry. Hence it is, that the Apostle moving Timothy to give himself to reading, to be diligent in exhortation, to plant sound Doctrine, and to increase in such gifts as were bestowed upon him, addeth, Take heed to thyself, and unto learning: continue therein, for in doing thus, thou shalt save both thyself, and them that hear thee. Where we see, he showeth that his Ministry should be a means not only to save others, but to save himself. And there is no faithful Minister, but in reproving, he reproveth himself; in teaching, he teacheth himself; in threatening, he threateneth himself; in comforting, he comforteth himself; in strengthening others, he strengtheneth himself; yea, he findeth and feeleth his own Ministry as forcible and powerful to his own soul, as ever he perceived the Ministry of another. The threatenings of God denounced by his own mouth in the name of GOD, have made him shake: the consolations that he hath pronounced, have entered into his soul, and refreshed his bowels. And of this we have from time to time to our own comfort, a blessed experience. Besides, if the Lord would bless other ways and means to the Minister, who is necessarily restrained by the commandment of God, & the discharge of his calling from the hearing of others, what is that to the people, who are charged to hear the Law from their mouths, and no way hindered from the performance of this duty? so that they must follow the way that God hath left unto them, that is; to attend to the ordinance which he hath chalked out unto them.

Fourthly, it may be said, that Christ appointed reading to be an ordinary means to beget Faith, when he sendeth out his Apostles into the world, to teach all Nations, which includeth a commandment to teach them by writing, as well as by word, and consequently implieth, that the people should be taught as well by reading their writings, as by hearing their preachings to come unto faith. Hereupon it is, that Christ willeth the people to search the Scripture, because in them they thought to have eternal life, & they did testify of him. And the Apostle John saith, These things are written that ye might believe, that Jesus is that Christ, that son of God, and that in believing ye might have life through his name. So Abraham said to the rich man, They have Moses and the Prophets, let them hear them. I answer, the commandment given to the Apostles, concerneth principally the preaching of the Gospel by word of mouth, and lively voice uttered in the hearing of the nations, and therefore some of them wrote more, some of them less, some of them nothing at all. But if the commandment had been as general for writing as for preaching, none of the Apostles would have omitted it, nor could have stayed their pens without a manifest breach of their own duty, and God's commandment. Now, so far as their writing was one kind of teaching, and included in that word, the meaning is for confirmation & preservation of that truth which they delivered & preached among them. Thus the Apostle speaketh to the Corinthians, I declare unto you the Gospel which I preached unto you, which ye have also received, and wherein ye continue, & whereby ye are saved, if ye keep in memory after what manner I preached unto you, except ye have believed in vain. Likewise writing to the Romaines, I myself am persuaded of you (my Brethren) that ye also are full of goodness, & filled with all knowledge, and are able to admonish one another: nevertheless, I have somewhat boldly after a sort, written unto you as one that putteth you in remembrance, thorough the grace that is given me of God. So the Apostle John saith, I have not written unto you, because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, & that no lie is of the truth. Whereby we see, that they wrote to those to whom before they had preached, to confirm them in the truth, which they had embraced and received. They did not write to them that were wholly ignorant of the truth, and had never heard the Gospel: but to such as they had taught, to the end that either standing in it, they might be established, or being fallen from it, they might be recovered and reclaimed. Thus he commendeth the Thessalonians, because they had kept all the ordinances and traditions received from him; and thus he telleth the Galatians, That he marvailed much, that they were so soon removed away unto another Gospel, from him that had called them in the grace of Christ. It remaineth therefore, to answer such testimonies as are alleged to justify the sufficiency of reading, and to make it an ordinary means of salvation.

Touching the place, John 5. commanding the searching of the scriptures, Christ Jesus in the same referreth them to the Scriptures or word written to correct their judgments touching himself, his person, and offices. For, whereas they believed not the Sermons of Christ, and the Lord Jesus could not safely refer them to the chair of the Scribes and Pharisees, who were grossly deceived, and maliciously blinded in that Mystery, there remained only the reading and searching of the Scriptures, that thereby they might learn the truth of his Sermons.

Again, where the Apostle saith, These things were written that ye might believe, John 20. it is to be understood of the Miracles of Christ, wrought for confirmation of his Doctrine, and for strengthening of faith, as appeareth in the words immediately going before, Many other signs also did Jesus in the presence of his Disciples, which are not written in this Book. And that this is the true and right end of Miracles, appeareth by the Apostle to the Hebrews, where he showeth, that the Gospel began first to be preached by the Lord, and afterward was confirmed unto us by them that heard him, God bearing witness thereto, both with signs and wonders, and with diverse Miracles & gifts of the Holy-ghost, according to his own will.

Lastly, where it is said, They have the Books of Moses, and the writings of the Prophets, let them hear them, Luke 16. This is the sum of all our Sermons and preachings, we preach nothing out of the Law and the Prophets, but both Moses and the Prophets, must be expounded and applied. The Eunuch sitting in his Chariot, had Moses and the Prophets, and read them as he sat; yet when Phillip came to him, and asked, Understandest thou what thou readest? He answered, How can I without a guide? Furthermore, the reading of the Scriptures, is not here opposed against the preaching of them, but against Visions and Apparitions of the dead, as the Prophet speaketh, When they shall say unto you, Enquire of them that have a spirit of divination, and at the Soothsayers which whisper and murmur, should not a people enquire at their God? From the living to the dead? To the Law, and to the Testimony, if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.

Fifthly, if the word preached be the ordinary means of bringing us unto sanctification, and so to salvation; then where it is not, there is not ordinarily salvation, and consequently no Church visible, where no Minister is. Heerby we shall condemn many particular Congregations to be no visible churches, because they want the public preaching of the word. I answer, let this be supposed which is not granted, yet in such assemblies many may appertain and belong to the Church Catholic. Secondly, the reputation of the Church, holdeth them to be visible assemblies, which we are not lightly to esteem or pass over, notwithstanding the want of a preaching ministry, both because they have the use of the word, the administration of the Sacraments, and the exercise of Prayer, which no doubt are auayleable, where more cannot be attained: and because the wants of the Minister, having an outward calling, bringeth not a nullity to a Church. Thus no doubt it was in Israel, when they were without a Priest to teach them, even then God reserved unto himself seven thousand that bowed not the knee to Baal. Thus Christ himself teacheth, that when the Laborers were few, Mat. 9, 37. yet the Harvest was great. Thus it was in many of the Jewish Synagogues, that were dispersed here and there among the Nations, where they had the Lecture of the Law and the Prophets: and when Paul and Barnabas entted into the Synagogue on the Saboth day, the Rulers of the same sent unto them, and said; Ye men and Brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on. Whereby it may be gathered, that unless the Apostles had come at that present, the assembly had been dismissed without preaching. When Zechariah the Priest, was stricken dumb by the hand of God, so that he could not speak to the people, yet he continued the time of his course, & the people were present at his ministration. The Priests under the law were oftentimes unlearned and insufficient, yet were they not therefore no priests at all, neither did the people refuse the service of the tabernacle, being done with their unwashen hands. So ought we to do in the want of a preaching ministry, when we cannot have all that we would, or that we should have, we must be contented to take what they can give, & what we cannot have at home, we must seek abroad, or rather with David, We must seek with all care & endeavor with all our power to bring home the Ark of the Lord unto our own dwellings. And in the mean season, we may pray with them, we may hear them read the word of God, and we may receive the Sacraments at their hands. This is not spoken to defend ignorant Ministers, who are unworthy of the places which they hold, but to show that we are not to separate for every want and blemish in the Church, but rather to tolerate that which we are by no means able to redress.

Lastly, it may be said, that Sermons written by the Minister, and read to the people, may breed Faith and Repentance in us, and therefore much more the Sermons of the Prophets and Apostles. I answer briefly, first of our Sermons written, and then of the Sermons of the Prophets & Apostles written, and then read to the hearers, or by the hearers. First, touching our Sermons written, if they be the right dividing of the word, and proceed from the gifts of the Minister, enforced thereunto by weakness and infirmity, they are to be held a preaching, and may work a faith. This is not spoken to be a Patron of ydlennesse, of ignorance, of negligence, of carelessness, but it is spoken to support the weak, to move them to cal upon God to strengthen them, and to persuade the people not to despise their ministry. Secondly, touching the Sermons recorded and read in the Scriptures preached by the Prophets and Apostles, they are not rehearsed at large as they were delivered, but summarily set down, with intent to be divided and opened by the Ministers of the Church. So then the comparison holdeth not, from the Sermons of the Ministers that are read to the Sermons in Scripture, because there we have not whole Sermons, but only the chief points and principal heads, and as it were the contents of them set down unto us. Thus we have run over the objections that are alleged against this doctrine, and answered them particularly, that no starting hole might be left unto them that impugn it. For the enemies of this truth, are such as take themselves to be wise, and will not easily receive satisfaction, like unto him that was so skillful in wrestling, or rather in wrangling, that though he received a fall, yet he would persuade the wrastler that cast him, and the people that beheld him, that he was the Conqueror.

Having now cleared the doubts that were brought against this principle which now we have taught, and over-maistered the enemies thereof, stripping them out of their armor wherein they trusted, and turning them out of their shifts whereof they boasted, let us come to make use of this point. First, seeing the preaching of the word is the Instrumental cause of our regeneration, we learn for the increasing of our Faith, that the preaching Ministry is necessary to salvation. No Sons without it are begotten unto God. Regeneration is a most needful grace of God's spirit, whereof if we be destitute, it had been better for us that we had never been borne. Thou must be conceived of another seed, thou must have another Father, thou must feel in thee another byrrh then that which is Natural, thou must find another change, and a new disposition in thy heart, mind, affections, and conversation, before thou canst turn from sin to righteousness, and come from hell to heaven. This the Apostle John teacheth, Whosoever is borne of God sinneth not, but his seed remaineth in him, neither can he sin, because he is borne of GOD. This is the point wherein Christ instructeth Nicodemus, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except that a Man be borne of Water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of GOD.

This regeneration making a beginning, and giving us an entrance into the kingdom of God, cannot be attained without the hearing of God's word preached; and the word it self cannot be published without a preacher, so that Preachers are the sovereign means appointed of God to work Faith, Repentance, and salvation in all his children. To this purpose Solomon speaketh in the Proverbs, Where there is no vision, the people decay; but he that keepeth the Law is blessed. This necessity of the preaching of God's holy word, and our necessary attending upon it, as upon the ordinance of God, offereth to our considerations, these three points: First, the misery of those that want it: Secondly, the fearful condition of all such as have it, & yet contemn it; that enjoy it, and yet make no account of it; that live under it, and yet will not submit themselves unto it: Lastly, the blessed estate of such as have this means and profit by it.

Touching the first, we may behold the wretched case of those that are without the preaching of the word; they live in blindness & darkness, they walk in places of continual danger, and yet cannot see their way, they live without the ordinary means of life and salvation, and so without hope to come to repentance, without which there can be no salvation. This is the estate of Jews, of Turks, and Infidels, that are deprived of the comfortable use of the word, and they that live in corners where the sound thereof is not heard. These want the bread of life, and therefore must needs starve & perish. They have not the words of eternal life, which are the power of God to salvation, & therefore are near to destruction. For it is the manner of gods dealing to deny unto men the means whereby they should believe, when he hath no purpose that they should believe, & he withdraws from them the instrument whereby they should be converted, when he doth not purpose and intend their conversion. It was a fearful curse when God said to his Apostles, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into the City of the Samaritans enter ye not. Likewise, when they had gone through Phrygia, and the Region of Galatia, they were forbidden by the Holy-Ghost to preach the word in Asia; then came they to Mysia, and sought to go into Bithynia, but the spirit suffered them not. So when God vouchsafeth not this mercy unto us, to wit; the Ministry of his word; it is a fearful sign of his heavy indignation, and as much in effect, as if the Lord should say, I will not have them converted, I have no purpose to bring them to salvation.

This is it which is spoken concerning Israel by the Prophet, Now for a long season Israel hath been without the true God, and without a Priest to teach, and without Law. And to the same purpose Amos speaketh, Behold, the days come saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the Land, not a famine for Bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord: and they shall wander from Sea to Sea, and from the North even unto the East, shall they runne too and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it, in that day shall the young Uirgins, and the young men perish for thirst. O that we could consider of these things, and lay before our eyes what danger it is to want the preaching of the word, that thereby we might be moved to pity the desolations of so many of our poor Brethren, and to fear the taking of it away for our unthankfulness from our selves, and to magnify the unspeakable mercy of God toward us, while we do enjoy it. Great are the plagues, and horrible are the ruins of the Church in many places. Oh, that we had hearts to mourn for it, and to pray to the Lord of the harvest, to thrust forth Laborers into his harvest.

Secondly, it teacheth the fearful condition of such as contemn this ordinance of God, and think it too base for them to seek salvation by it. It is very strange, that so plain a point as this, should be so proudly gainsayed and resisted. These carnal men will not give the Lord of heaven leave to appoint how and by what means he will save us. Shall flesh and blood presume thus far, and advance it self against his Creator? If we will be saved, we must seek salvation, as it is left us to seek, and not after our own fancy. When God hath said, Give attendance to my word; wilt thou answer, I will not attend, and yet have salvation as well as if thou diddest attend? Take heed thou do not deceive thyself and thine own soul, and in the end find thyself frustrate of thy salvation. How men will shift off these duties, I know not, because I know not their hearts; but this I know, and this I would have them know and understand, that as there is a God that will be worshipped after his own will, and not according to our natural wit; so this must be our wisdom, to submit our conceits and immaginations to his heavenly pleasure. It is the first point in Christian Religion, to be learned, to account thyself a Fool, that thou mayest be wise in Christ, and to throw down all thy Natural parts at his feet, that thou mayest seek true and Heauenlie Wisdom of him. Thou must account thyself stark blind, and able to perceive nothing aright in the matters of God, and in the means of thy salvation, to the end thou mayest recover sight, and see thy way wherein in thou oughtest to walk. Hence it is, that the Prophet saith, Open mine eyes, that I may see the wonders of thy Law: Make me to understand the way of thy Precepts, and I will meditate in thy wondrous works; Give me understanding, and I will keep thy Law, yea I will keep it with my whole heart. Where he acknowledgeth his eyes to be closed, his ears to be stopped, his mind to be darkened, his heart to be hardened by nature, before Grace and Mercy come and make the way plain before him, whereby our eyes shall be opened, our ears bored, our minds enlightened, our hearts softened, and our selves prepared to hearken to the voice of God speaking unto us. But is not God able to save us without the Ministers preaching, and the people's hearing? Are not all things possible to him? Is he bound and tied to his own means? Is not he free to work as it pleaseth him? I answer, he is not tied, he is free, he is able to save without preaching, yea without reading, without the Sacraments, without Prayer. Wilt thou from hence conclude against reading of the Scriptures, against receiving of the Sacraments, against joining in Prayer? The question is not of the power of God, but of his will; not what he is able to do, but what he hath promised us to do; not what he is tied to, but what he hath bound us to seek. He is able to preserve our life without Bread, without food; but he that presumeth upon this power, and abuseth his providence, and neglecteth to seek his nourishment at his hands, must look to perish: So we deny not but God is able to save us without preaching, but he hath not made us any promise to obtain life any otherwise then as we seek the Law at the mouths of his Ministers, that bring glad tidings of good things. He was able to preserve his three servants in the hot fiery furnace, and did preserve them; yet he that will voluntarily and violently cast himself into the fire, shall feel the smart of his own folly, and the danger of tempting God. Let us not therefore think our selves wiser then God, lest our wisdom in the end be turned into folly, our presumption into despair, our dallying with the word, into destruction. Thirdly, we are put in mind by this means of our regeneration, to acknowledge the happy estate and condition of that Nation, of that people, of that parish, to whom God hath vouchsafed the preaching of his word, because it is a sure pledge & proof of his love toward them, and a manifest argument and testimony that he hath a Church there to be gathered, a people to be converted, and many souls to be saved. For even as God withholdeth the means of salvation from those that he doth not determine to save, As he stayeth the heavens from raining upon the earth when he will bring a famine, so when he will show mercy, he will send the means plentifully. It was a great mercy to the Jews, when Christ called his Disciples, and bad them Go and preach to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, that the kingdom of heaven was at hand. It was a great blessing intended to the Macedonians, when a vision appeared to Paul in the night, There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come into Macedonia, and help us: whereby Paul was assured, that the Lord had called him to preach the Gospel unto them.

It was a great favor bestowed upon the Corinthians, when the Lord said to Paul, Fear not, but speak, and hold not thy peace, for I am with thee, and no man shall lay hands on thee to hurt thee, for I have much people in this City, so he continued there a year and six months, and taught the word of God among them. Where the Lord telleth his servant, that he had people there, whom he meant to save, and therefore he sent them his word to save them; yea, he had much people there to save; and therefore the Apostle must bestow much time and diligence among them, to bring them to salvation. When God would preserve Moses out of the waters that might have drowned him, he sent Pharaohs daughter to the River, to take up the Child, and to provide for it, who brought him up at her own cost. So when God will save a people from their sins, and make them partakers of his Kingdom, he offereth unto them the means, he sendeth his word, he giveth gifts unto his Ministers, he toucheth their hearts with a Conscience of their duties, and causeth them to preach unto them, that so they might be converted and saved. If God have thus blessed us, and bestowed this mercy upon us, which he hath denied to many places and persons, causing it to rain upon one City, and not upon another City, so that one piece was rained upon, and the piece whereupon it rained not, withered. Let us therefore acknowledge this goodness, and walk worthy of this benefit, least the Gospel be removed from us, and given unto another Nation, that will bring forth the fruits of it. When the Gospel was offered unto the Jews, and they resisted & blasphemed, the Apostle shook his raiment, and said unto them; Your blood be upon your own head, I am clean, from henceforth will I go unto the Gentiles. It had been better for us we had never had the word preached among us, then to have it offered, and we not regard it. It shall be easier for the Turks and Sarazens in the day of judgment, then for us; for if they shall be condemned, that never had the truth of God among them, and knew not what the preaching of it meaneth; much more justly shall we perish, that have had the Gospel taught in our streets, and brought unto our doors, and Christ Jesus described in our sight and among us crucified. Let us therefore take heed that the Gospel be not the savor of death to death unto us, and that Christ be not a rock of offense to stumble at, least if we fall on him, he grind us to pieces, and to powder.

Secondly, seeing the word preached is the means whereby we are regenerated, it teacheth the Minister to be careful to exercise his duty with faithfulness and serviceableness to Christ and his Church. Heereby he shall deliver his own soul, gain glory to God, and turn many unto righteousness. This made the Apostle say, We preach not our selves, but Christ Jesus the Lord, and our selves your servants for Jesus sake. The Lord Jesus himself went about all Cities and Towns preaching the Gospel, and healing the sick. The Apostle Paul saith of himself, A necessity is laid upon me, and woe unto me if I preach not the Gospel. And thus he exhorteth the Elders of Ephesus, Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock, whereof the Holy-Ghost hath made you Ouer-seers, to feed the Church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood, Acts 20, 28. It is his duty to be well studied in the word of God, & to exercise himself carefully in the reading thereof, that he may be able to declare the same unto the people. He must be as a plentiful Store-house of all necessary provision, that they may resort to him, and seek the Law at his mouth: For how shall he be able to teach another, that which he himself hath not learned? Or how shall he deliver that which himself never received? Neither is it enough for him to seek knowledge himself, and to keep continually in his study, till he become (as one saith) as a Tun that will not sound being full when one knocketh upon it: but he must come forth, and preach the word of God, and deliver wholesome doctrine, and declare by feeding the flock of Christ that he loveth his Master, and the Master of the Sheep, whose servant he professeth himself to be. This is it which the Apostle Peter teacheth, Feede the flock of God which dependeth upon you, caring for it not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; not as though ye were Lord's over God's heritage, but that ye may be ensamples to the flock: and when that chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive an incorruptible crown of glory. If we do not thus labor, but loiter in the Lord's Vineyard, we cannot assure our selves to be the Ministers of the Lord, but robbers and spoilers, nay murderers and man-slayers, who do not only eat the sins of the people, and fill our bellies with the sweat of other men's brows, but make a prey of their souls, and expose them to be destroyed and devoured of their enemies. When the great day of the Lord shall come, and the great Shepherd of the Sheep shall appear, and a great account of our Stewardship shall be taken of us, we shall bear the burden, not only of our own sins, but of all the sins of the people, and every soul belonging unto our charge (that hath perished thorough our own negligence) shall be laid to our charge, and his blood be required at our hands, and so shall become horrible Reprobates in Hel, to be tormented with everlasting pains. For even as the holy mā speaking of this calling, teacheth that a faithful messenger of God, and interpreter of his will is but as one of a thousand, that though they be many that undertake the office, yet the number is few & rare that make Conscience of their duty to God and his people: so on the other side, few of this many shall be saved, but be cast as notable devils into hell, & draw with them thousands into destruction. Neither is it sufficient for the Ministers discharge, if he teach sildom, or now and then, as at every quarter day when he cometh to reckon with them, or once a month to avoid the Law, but he must watch, and teach, and feed his flock continually, And preach the word in season, and out of season. The greatest labor shall have the greatest reward. They that turn many to righteousness, shall shine as the Stars forever and ever. Everyman shall have his wages according to his work. They that employed their Masters money & gained by it, are accounted good & faithful servants, but the idle and loitering servant that would do nothing, but hid his talent that was given unto him, was cast into utter darkness, and rewarded according to his deserts. Let us therefore labor to have a clear conscience toward God and man. The more pains we take, the greater shall be our comfort; the more diligently we sow, the more plentiful shall be our harvest. If we be painful in our callings, and diligent in teaching the people, We shall not need, as some other, Epistles of re commendation unto them, or Letters of re commendation from them: for they shall be our Epistle written in our harts which is understood and read of all men. And concerning those committed to us to feed, we see by experience that they cannot live without food, they cannot grow and prosper without a daily supply, so their souls cannot live unto God a spiritual life, unless they be often fed, and plentifully nourished by the milk of God's word. When Paul took his leave to depart from Ephesus, he propoundeth before the Elders his own example, Remember that by the space of three years, I ceased not to warn everyone both night and day with tears. This faithfulness is to be found in us, as our comfort in this life, & our crown in the life to come, always proving when God will give faith and repentance never to be repented of. We know not the times and seasons that God hath kept in his own hand. If he touch not the heart at one time, and leave a blessing behind him, he may touch it, and frame it unto obedience at another time. It behooveth us therefore, to use the means to sow unto them spiritual things, and to commit the success of our labors unto God, seeing Paul planteth, and Apollos watereth, but it is GOD that giveth the increase.

Thirdly, seeing the word preached, is the ordinary means of our regeneration, it teacheth the people to look to their feet when they enter into the house of God, and to take heed how they hear. It is not left to their own choice whether they will hear or not, no more then it is to y^e Minister whether he will preach or not. It is required of them, that they reverence them, obey their Doctrine, love them, provide for them, pray for them, and in all things esteem of them as the messengers of Christ, as the Ministers of the word, & as the overseers of the Church, yea it standeth them upon, to hear the word at their mouths, to account of it as the means of their salvation. It is great ignorance & impiety to desire any other means to have faith, then that which he hath appointed for us. It is the great mercy and goodness of God to appoint mortal men subject to sin and all infirmities as we are, at whose hands we may be fed, at whose mouths we may be taught, and with whom we may talk familiarly, and yet by their simple Ministry may have as good assurance of salvation in this life, and of glory in the life to come, as if the Lord himself should speak from heaven. For, the word of God is as the gate of heaven, and he hath committed the Keys thereof to his faithful Stewardest, That whatsoever they bind on earth, should be bound in heaven; and whatsoever they loose on earth, should be loosed in heaven. True it is, many foolish & faithless men persuade themselves, that they should repent and believe the Gospel, if they might hear God himself speak, or if one came from the dead to tell them what they should do to be saved. When Cain had conceived malice and murder in his heart, and intended to kill his Brother, the Lord spake unto him, set his sins in order before him, and threatened judgment against him unless he repented; but did he repent at the voice of God, and turn unto him with all his heart? No, he fell from evil to worse, and added one sin unto another, till he had filled up the measure of them. All the Israelites heard the Law of God in the wilderness, and saw his wonderful works that he shown among them, yet they believed not, neither ceased to murmur and rebel against him. Judas one of the twelve was reprov'd of Christ for his treason; so were the Scribes and Pharisees for their hypocrisy, yet none of them repented, or at the least many of them repented not at his preaching unto them; wherefore, it is not the hearing of the voice of God can give us repentance, it is his changing of our hearts, and renewing of us in the inner man, that casteth us into a new mould, and worketh in us a new birth. When Christ Jesus was nailed upon the Cross, they said, He saved others, but he cannot save himself: if he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the Cross, and we will believe in him. But if he had come down at this taunt cast out upon him, would they, or could they have believed? Or could Christ have been the true Messiah, if he had descended, seeing it was the end of his coming into the world that he might suffer, and fulfill the things that were foretold by the Prophets? Or would they not rather have said he was some couzener or Coniurer, some Impostor or deceiver, as often before they had falsely and blasphemously charged him? Or had they faith in their own power to believe when they would, and to receive him to be the Savior of the world? These carnal men do resemble and reason like unto the Scribes and Pharisees, If God would descend from heaven (as they would have Christ come down from the Cross) then they would immediately believe, then they would no longer lie in their sins. But if God should with his dreadful and terrible voice speak unto us, we were not able to appear before him, nor to abide the hearing of it, but should be swallowed up with fear, and stand amazed as dead men.

When God spake unto the Children of Israel in the Mount, they fled from him, and could not endure his presence, they stood a far off, and cried unto Moses, Talke thou with us, and we will hear; but let not God talk with us, least we die. Shall we then in the foolishness and pride of our own harts challenge the Lord to come forth unto us, and presume to settle our selves to enter talk and communication with him, when the earth quaketh at his voice, and trembleth under him? When the Mountains are removed before him, and the Angels cover their faces from him? If we will not believe the preachers of the word, nor content our selves with this ordinance of God, but would have either revelation from Heaven, or the presence of God, or the person of Christ, or the glory of an Angel, or the appearaunce of the dead, or we know not what, we shall never be partakers of the benefits of Christ, we shall never receive to believe, we shall never have the grace of regeneration bestowed upon us. God hath not left us to the preaching of Angels, but to the Ministry of men. If we will not yield obedience to the voice of God speaking to us in his Ministers, we would not regard his own immediate voice thundering down upon us, nor believe if a damned soul or ghost shall come out of hell to preach unto us. If we will not believe Moses and the Prophets, we would not believe, though one came unto us from the dead. Wherefore let us leave this vanity, and in a conscience to God, and obedience to his ordinance, in a love to our own souls, and desire of our own saluatiō, let us everyone be swift to hear, slow to speak, & slow to wrath.

Now, to the end we may hear aright, three things are required of us; Preparation, Attention, and Meditation, joined with practice. Preparation before we hear; Attention in the time of hearing; Meditation and practice, after our hearing. When Christ had propounded the parable of the Sower and the seed, in the end he gathered from thence this note, and draweth this conclusion and admonition; Take heed how ye hear. For some present themselves to the Ministry of the Word, for form and fashion, for company and custom, without conscience; others think it enough to be present, howsoever they be affected in the hearing, or moved after the hearing. It is therefore necessary that we should be prepared before we come: Now to this preparation, three things are necessary; Faith, Fear, and Desire: first, we must have Faith, without which, the Word is as a dead Letter without life, and as an empty sound without power: and if we do not give credit unto it, it cannot profit the hearers. Secondly, we must come with fear, that we may fear God in his word, and avoid the breach of it. For the Lord hath respect unto them that are of humble and contrite hearts, and tremble at his word. We must set our selves in the presence of God, and hear as if we saw him present before us, and so receive the word as from Christ himself, the Teacher of his Church.

Thirdly, we must come with good stomachs, as unto a feast prepared for us, we must hunger and thirst after the word to feed our empty Souls, desiring it, and longing after it, as doth the dry ground after the Dew of heaven, and the shewers of Rain. This the Apostle Peter teacheth; Desire the sincere Milk of the word of God, that ye may grow thereby. He that thinketh himself full before he come to the Lord's house, is no fit Guest to be partakers of his dainty fare. In hearing the word, we must be attentive, and intentiue to that which we hear. As we are present in body, so we must be present in mind. God opened the heart of Lydia, to attend to those things that were delivered by Paul. This is very profitable many ways, and helpeth as a Sovereign remedy against the roving cogitations of the mind, against the entertaining of other actions of another Nature, and against the loathsomeness and weariness, that for the most part accompanyeth the most holy things of God. First, we are subject to inconstancy and lenity of mind, our hearts are ready to wander and go astray from the present work in hand, and oftentimes are carried away from the best matters, so that we neither remember where we are, nor consider what we do, nor endeavor to profit as we ought.

Secondly, it availeth against those deceits and destructions, whereby we entertain other actions of piety, which with-draw us from the present occasion and duty of hearing required of us. For some think they do God good service, when they offer unto him no better than a will worship, which is abominable before him. Hence it is, that many think it enough to be present with the assembly, and regard not how they be occupied, so that while the Congregation is employed one way, they are employed another, & while it performeth a public action, they are exercised in some private devotion: as for example, when the Church is hearing, they are praying: or when the Church is praying, they are reading. This is to offer the Sacrifice of Fools. For the public actions of the Church, must be publicly attended of all the assembly, and there is neither time nor place unto anything that is private or proper to one, or to few. For the Minister being a public person, is always either the mouth of God, or the mouth of the the people: the mouth of God to speak unto us from him, and to deliver the word in his name; the mouth of the people and Congregation, to speak unto the Lord for us, so that the action is common to the whole Church. So then, it cannot stand with the rules of the word, and the comely order that God hath left to his Church, that in the time of public prayer, of hearing the preaching, of receiving the Sacraments, of singing of Psalms, any should exercise and busy themselves otherwise, then as the whole assembly doth, in their private reading, or in private prayer, or in private meditation, thereby severing themselves in devotion and action from their brethren, with whom they have joined themselves in bodily presence. Our Savior Christ speaking of private Prayer, giveth this direction; When thou prayest, enter into thy Chamber, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray unto thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly. For it is a manifest contempt of the ordinance of God, a disdain of our Brethren, and a dividing of our selves from the Communion of Saints, to worship God in public place alone by our selves, and it were better for us to hearken, then to wander; and to use our ears then our eyes. Thirdly, this earnest attention helpeth against the common disease of weariness and irkesomenesse of hearing, whereby it falleth out, that we sit in our Seats as men placed upon Thorns; impatient, discontent, moving hither and thither, and angry that we are detained so long from that which we more desire. If we would examine our own hearts, how earnest oftentimes we are, and not in following our own vanities and idle pastimes (to note them with no worse Title) that we can spend whole days and nights in them without tediousness: it might worthily make us ashamed, not to be able to stay and abide an hour or two in the house of God, for the increase of our Faith, and the furthering of our salvation.

Hence it is, that we make such hast to be gone, and think every minute and moment of time an hour, till we depart: we abide not the Prayer after the Sermon, to crave of God his blessing upon our hearing, which as it is a necessary part of the Ministers duty, so the people with all reverence and humility ought to join therein. For he that will not wait and stay to crave the blessing of God, doth carry home with him to his house, the curse of God, and never profiteth by that which he hath heard. After our hearing, is required Meditation and practice of that which we have heard, that we may be bettered in judgment, in knowledge, in affection. We should be careful to remember it, to ponder upon it, to lay it up in our hearts, and to frame all our doings by it. There is a double use and benefit of Meditation. It serveth us against the negligence and security of those, that hold the Word no longer in the mind, then the sound is in the ears, and remember the instructions no longer, then they abide in the Church, like riuen and rotten Vessels, that leak and let out the liquor as fast as they received it. For they are no sooner dismissed, and risen from their seats, but their hearts are strayed, and their tongues applied after earthly; nay, after profane things, according to their several affections and vain delights.

Again, it helpeth more deeply to imprint in our minds, and engrave in our memories, that Doctrine which we have heard, and it furthereth us in a wise and profitable application of every point taught unto our selves. He proveth the best Scholar that thinketh often upon his Lesson, after he hath had it. And touching practice, which is the end of our hearing, preparation, attention, and meditation, Christ himself hath said; Blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it. Likewise the Apostle James, pronounceth those only to be blessed, Which are not forgetful hearers, but doers of the word. So then it is plain, that the end of hearing is not vain speculation, or a bare knowledge of the will of God, but a care to obey it and perform it. For which cause the word is called a light for our paths, and a Lantern for our steppes, to the end we should walk in it, and live by it, and seek direction from it.

Lastly, this Doctrine giveth good direction to such as have authority, either to ordain and appoint fit persons, or to present them to certain places. For seeing the regeneration of man is wrought by the preaching of the Word, it teacheth the over-seers of the Church to look to their office, and to take heed that they do not rashly lay their hands upon ignorant and vn-sufficient persons, or such as are scandalous and loose Liuers, and then thrust them upon the people to look to their Souls, which are not worthy to feed their Cattle, or to wipe their shoes. The Apostle giveth this rule to Timothy, Lay hands suddenly on no Man, neither be partaker of other men's sins, keep thyself pure. Moreover, he would not have the Deacons to have the office of attending on the poor, unless they were first tried & examined, and after trial approved, let them (saith he) first be proved, then let them Minister, if they be found blameless: therefore much rather ought the Ministers themselves to be proved, before they be approved, as the calling is higher, and the danger greater, if they be found unfaithful and unworthy. They must not be carried away by friendship or favor, or Letters of commendation, but approved only of such as are apt to teach, and unblameable in life. The Apostle giveth this as an unchangeable rule never to be broken, A Bishop must be vnreproueable, apt to teach, not given to Wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre, &c. For when an unfit man contrary to this order, is put into the Ministry, he is as much to be reprov'd that doth admit him, as he that doth present him, and as he that is represented and admitted, seeing he maketh himself partaker of his sins. But to pass this over, let us come to such as are Patrones, and have the bestowing of Church-livings, it standeth them upon to make choice of all Teachers, that may bring the people to Faith and repentance, least it come to pass through their means that the people be untaught, and least the Prophet complain of them, as he did of the chief Rulers and Leaders after their return from Captivity, when everyone sought their own private profits and pleasures, but had no time, or at least would spare no leisure to provide for the setting up of the Temple of God; Is it time for yourselves to dwell in your Fielde-houses, and this House lie wast? This offense and abuse, cometh from three chief heads, and issueth from three Fountaines, for it proceedeth partly from ignorance; partly from carelessness; and partly from covetousness. By ignorance, when they know not what care is committed unto them, and what trust is reposed in them. By negligence, when they feel not the greatness of the sin, nor consider the injury offered to others, but suffer themselves to be drawn and overcome by affection, or kindred, or other men's suites, to bestow sufficient places upon vn-sufficient persons. By covetousness, when they reserve a portion or pension to themselves, and when they so pare it and share it from the incumbent, that they sequester the greatest benefit of the Benefice for themselves, and bestow ten Shekles and a suit of apparel by the year to another, to bear the name and to serve the Cure. These bestow as much upon their Horse-keeper to keep their Horses; as upon the Minister that hath the charge of Souls. If ignorance be the cause. I would in the Name of God, and in reverence to their high places and callings, crave liberty to use a word of Exhortation unto them, to beseech them to give me leave to put them in mind, and to be content to learn how they came by this right and authority to be put into their hands. After that the bounds and limits were assigned to every Parish, and several Churches were appointed for several Ministers, and Lands and livings bestowed for their maintenance, to the end that everyone should keep his own, and no man to intrude upon the right of another, nor rob the Church of that which was given, there were certain temporal men chosen, either by godly Kings, or by such as had endowed those Churches and given them Lands, to be Patrones of those Churches, who might be able and ready to defend the Church rightes and privileges, to the end the Pastors themselves should with more convenience and less incumbrance, apply their vocations. It was thought unfit for them to follow suites of Law, whereby their studies might be distracted, and so the people should not be instructed: and besides, those holy men, resembling Christ, and employed in the service of the Church, would not be contentious in the law to strive with any: whereby we see they are called Patrones, because they were appointed by the first Doners, to defend the right of the Donation against all Intruders and Incroachers upon their gifts, and to protect the Church-livings from the injuries and insolencies of covetous and contentious men. They were not appointed by the first institution to bestow Church-livings (as now they do) but to patronize the right of the Lands consecrated to the Church. Afterward, they were allowed to nominate the Minister, that the burden that lay upon them might be the better borne, and that the trouble might be eased with some honor. Seeing therefore they have as men of trust, the right of Patronage and presentation put into their hands, and may not only defend the place, but name the person, let them be careful to discharge the trust that is reposed in them, and show themselves worthy of that power and privilege committed unto them. Again, let them consider that it is a great calling & of great importance, and therefore great gifts are required for the execution of it. It hath annexed unto it the charge of Souls, and therefore is not slightly to be passed over.

Ignorance shall excuse no man, He that knoweth not his Masters will, shall be beaten with fewer stripes: but willful ignorance of such as do not know, nor will not know, is a double sin. This is not spoken with any malice or hatred to their persons, but in a desire of their good, and a love to the people, so that we say no otherwise of such Patronages, then Christ did of his persecutors; Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. If negligence and carelessness be the cause of this offering of unworthy persons to be the Overseers of the Church, then I crave humbly and heartily the wise consideration of these profitable Meditations. The Lord threateneth to the Watchman death, that warneth not his hearers, and saith, he will require their blood at his hand. If then God have made me, or the people hath chosen me, or the Church hath suffered me to be a Patron, I ought thus to reason: If I negligently place such a one, as for want of ability cannot, or for want of conscience, will not give warning, and admonish the wicked of their sins, can I want my portion in the wrath of the Lord that is threatened against all such defaults? Christ Jesus teacheth, that it is a sign of love to him in the Minister to feed his Sheep, to feed his Lambes: if then I be a Patron of any place, I must think that it is a token and witness of my love to Christ, if I cause his Sheep and Lambes to be fed. And if it be want of love in the Minister, when he doth not feed, but fleese the Sheep; when he doth not teach, but starve them; is it not so in me, if through my sluggishnes and sin it so come to pass? It is a great sin to lay hands rashly to admit any into the ministry, and thereby to give that worthy calling to an unworthy man: and is it no offense in me being Patron, to bestow the Living upon such a one? If he be to be blamed that giveth institution and induction, he cannot be excused that giveth the presentation. It is noted by the Evangelist; that when Christ saw a great multitude of people gathered together from all quarters, he had compassion upon them, because they were as Sheep without a Shepherd.

The word used in that place, is of great force, derived of a word that signifyeth the Entrails, the Bowels, and inward parts; expressing thereby, as it were an aking of his head, or a yerning of his Bowels, to see so pitiful a sight, so doleful a spectacle. If then there belong unto me the right of a Patronage, and presentation to any Living, I must thus consider, if I be led by the Spirit of Christ, or have any zeal of his glory, or care of the salvation of his people in me. I must show mercy and compassion to those Souls that are so dearly bought and purchased, even by the precious blood of Christ. If we have an house to build, we will not admit of every Work-man that offereth his help, or is commended to us by others, or will labor best cheap: but we will make choice of the most expert and sufficient. And shall we then choose or commend to the building of the Spiritual house of God, every Cobbler and Bungler, insufficient persons; either Jereboam's Priests, that were of the lowest of the people, or such as Eli's Sons, who were the leudest of all the people? When the Tabernacle of God was to be built, they took not tag and rag from among the refuse of the Congregation, but such as were filled with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, in understanding, in knowledge, and in all workmanship. If covetousness be the cause of placing such blind guides, which is as great an over-sight, as to set a blind man to be a Watch-man, or a dumb man to be a Messenger, or a Lame man to be a Post, or a deaf man to be a Judge: we must observe, that the Lord complaineth in the Prophet; that he was spoiled and robbed when the Tithes and offerings were taken away from the true use, and from the right Owners, and therefore would visit it with a grievous plague and heavy judgment. The Jews in the Gospel allege it unto Christ, as an Argument of love to them and their Nation, that the Centurian, whose Servant was sick, had built them a Synagogue: so that on the other side, they would have branded him with the note of hating them and their Nation, if he had spoiled the Synagogue, or taken away the privileges belonging unto it. The Prophet David (as we heard before) would not drink of the Water of Bethlehem, because it was gotten with the danger of some few men's Temporal lives: Ought not this to teach a great conscience to everyone, to take heed that he do not eat and drink that which hazzardeth the Souls and bodies of many of their Brethren, and to make them afraid to clothe themselves and their families, by leaving the people naked to their enemies, to be a pray unto them, and to be destroyed by them? It is noted as a thing worthy of note and memory in the life of S. Augustine, that he sharply rebuked and reprov'd a Gentleman in his time, for re-calling and taking away his own gift, which before he had given to the maintenance of his Church: how much more would he have been offended if he had lived in our days (wherein many are as friendlie and favorable to the Ministry, as the East wind is to the fruits of the earth) & how much more severely would he have censured those Caterpillars and Cormorants, that take away by injurious customs and corruptions the maintenance of the Church, which neither they nor their Fathers have given? The ancient Romaines by the light of Nature (as Liuy testifieth) disliked and checked Qu. Fulvius Flaccus, because he had uncovered a part of Iuno's Temple, to cover another Temple of Fortune with the same Tiles; they told him that Pirrhus or Hanniball would not have done the like, and that it had been too much for him to have done it to a private Cittizens house, being a place far inferior to a Temple, and in conclusion, forced & compelled him to send home those Tiles again, by a public decree of the Senate. Let those things be duly waied, and make these men ashamed to come behind the Heathen, who did more to their Idols, then they will do for the honor of the true God. If they be not hewn out of Oaks, and have hearts of Flint, let them open their eyes and behold the oppressions of the Church, and the pulling away in whole or in part, the provision appointed for the Pastor, whereby it cometh to pass, that many places want the preaching of the Word, and many Souls perish for the want thereof.

When the Philistines sent home God's Ark from them, they sent it not back empty, they returned it not without a gift. When Zacchaeus repented of his injurious dealing, he offered to restore four-fold. If these Church-pollers, who have robbed the Church, and enriched themselves with the spoils thereof, will not restore that which they have wrongfully taken, and make up the breaches which they have wastfully made, being without the fear of God, and any fruit of true Religion, they shall in the end receive judgment according to their works, and in the mean season, their own consciences shall sting and torment them. It goeth indeed hard with the poor Church that is oppressed, and it groaneth and sigheth under the burden of her oppression: yet in the end, when the Lord chief-Justice of Heaven and Earth shall pronounce sentence against them, it shall be known that they, who oppress others, do more hurt themselves, then those whom they oppress; in as much as the sorrow and smart of the oppressed have an ende, but the woe and torment of the oppressor shall be everlasting, because he heapeth unto himself wrath, against the day of wrath, and of the declaration of the just judgment of God.

11Which in times past was to thee unprofitable, but now very profitable, both to thee and to me.

12 Whom I have sent again: thou therefore receive him; that is, mine own Bowels.

Hitherto we have heard the chief matter of this Epistle propounded and amplified: Now let us see how it is proved and confirmed. The matter handled, is; that Onesimus should be received and entertained again by his Master. This is first strengthened, and then concluded. To effect his purpose, Paul draweth diverse reasons; some taken from Onesimus; others, from the Apostle himself. From Onesimus in the eleventh verse, because he should find him very profitable and serviceable, which is amplified by the contrary, albeit he have been unprofitable and unthrifty unto thee. The reason may be thus framed;

- If he will prove profitable unto thee, then thou oughtest to receive him, lest thou be found an enemy to thine own profit:
- But he will prove profitable unto thee,
- Receive him therefore.

This hath included in it, the force of a close and secret Objection. For Philemon might object, I have found him hurtful: why then should I receive into my House as a member of my Family, that Servant which will cause more harm, then bring profit: I have had experience of the damage that he hath done me, what homage he will do me, I know not. To this the Apostle maketh a double answer; first, by granting, then by correcting that which he had granted, and both ways, by comparing the time past with the time present; the time before he embraced Religion, with the time of his conversion: as if he should say; true it is, and I grant he was once unprofitable to thee, for while he was unfaithful to God, he could do no faithful service unto thee: but why dost thou urge the time of his ignorance? And why dost thou consider so much what he hath been? For now he is become a new man, he hath tasted of the true Religion, he hath learned to know God, to know himself, to know thee, and to know me. To know God, his merciful Creator; to know himself, a wretched Sinner; to know thee, his loving Master; to know me, his spiritual Father; whereas in former times he was ignorant of all these. As he regarded not to know God, so he could not regard thy good: but now thou shalt receive a new Onesimus, a new Servant, a new man, the same in substance, but renewed in quality, and altered from the Crown of the head to the sole of the foot. He was not before so unprofitable, but now thou shalt find him as profitable unto thee, as I have found him both diligent and dutiful unto me, in my bonds and imprisonment.

The reasons taken from the Apostle himself, are of two sorts: first, from his action of sending him: secondly, from the Communion and fellowship which Paul had with Philemon. The first, touching his present sending of his Servant back, is propounded, and then the objections that might be alleged, are prevented. The reason may thus be concluded;

- If I have sent him back again, then thou oughtest to receive him at my hands.
- But I have sent him back again unto thee, Verse 12.

- Receive him therefore.

This is the reason: the preventing of the Objections is in the three Verses following, which come afterward to be considered.

This is the order of the words, it remaineth briefly to vnfolde the meaning & Interpretation of thē. When he saith of Onesimus; That he was in times past unprofitable: he meaneth in the time of his ignorance, before his conversion, before his calling by the preaching of the Gospel, and before he came to the knowledge and understanding of true Religion. By [Vnprofitable] we must understand, lewd, untrusty, unfaithful, stubborn, dissolute, and every way carnal. Again, when he saith [But now] he meaneth since his conversion, and since a new-birth was wrought in him, he is made [Profitable] that is; honest, helpful, dutiful, faithful, serviceable, so that he opposeth and compareth the State and condition of Regenerate Onesimus, with the State and condition of unregenerate Onesimus, and maketh the one contrary to the other. When he willett Philemon to receive him, he meaneth to grace and favor, forgiving and forgetting his former faults and bad dealing. Lastly, when he calleth Onesimus his own Bowels; he meaneth as dear to him, as his own Bowels; who, although he were a poor Slaue and abject Servant by calling, and a Fugitiue and Runna-grate by his former condition, yet now greatly beloved of the Apostle, even as himself. As if he should say; If thou lovest me, account of him no other-wise then thou dost of me, entertain him as mine own heart, receive him as my Son, and as if he were begotten of mine own bowels.

In these two Verses, containing two reasons, to persuade Philemon to receive his Servant, being made much better by his departure from him, we are to observe diverse pointes, worthy of our diligent observation, and of our careful consideration. First, we are to mark, how the Apostle, speaking of the offense of Onesimus, and of his former State before his conversion, doth mittigate the greatness of his sin, by the mildness of the word. For whereas he might have called him, a Thief, a Rogue, and a Runna-gate, he doth allay it, and express it under a gentler Name, (as we shall see better afterward) to teach us, that when we have to do with Sinners that are converted unto Christ truly, and have repented of their sins unfeignedly, we should deal favorably with them, we should not rack and stretch their offenses, but after a sort, cover them with the cloak of charity, and bury them in the Grave of forgetfulness. Secondly, we may observe how the Apostle speaking of his Conversion and Regeneration, doth set it out to the full, not only that Philemon should be persuaded, but that Onesimus might be comforted. Wherefore he doth not only say that he was become profitable, but very profitable, or exceeding profitable. And he addeth; not only very profitable to Philemon, but to himself, even to them both; whereof Paul had experience already, Philemon should have hereafter: which teacheth us to use all good and loving means, to strengthen such as are newly converted, and to remember for their comfort and encouragement, such good things as appear to have been in them, not to diminish or lessen them, but fully to express and declare them to others, that God may be glorified in their calling, and they themselves may be strengthened in all well doing.

Thirdly, we see in the strength of the first reason, that men are greatly moved to do anything by hope of receiving profit and commodity. It is an Argument not only to induce profane and ungodly men to commit wickedness, but to persuade the godly and faithful to follow holiness of life. Whatsoever is offered unto us under the Title of profit, doth carry with it a certain force and power to lead us to the practice of it: whereby we ought to learn, that in moving men to well doing, we may lawfully lay before them the hope of Heaven, and assurance of profit; yea, all men for their better encouragement in the works of godliness, may have respect to the profit of their labor, and the recompense of reward. True it is, the glory of God, and the discharge of our duty, ought to be the principal means to move us, but the consideration of our own profit should not be neglected. Hence it is that the Apostle moving all that have believed, to be careful to show forth good works, addeth; These things are good and profitable unto men: on the other side, removing them from foolish questions, and Genealogies, and contentions, and brawlings about the Law: he concludeth, for they are unprofitable and vain. So the Apostle declaring the wonderful Faith of Moses, who refused to be called the Son of Pharaoh's Daughter, chose rather to suffer adversity with the people of God, and esteemed the rebuke of Christ greater riches then the treasures of Egypt, showeth, that he had respect to the recompense of the reward.

Fourthly, Paul's sending is made a reason for Philemons receiving, and he concludeth, that he is to be received of his Master, because he is sent back by Paul himself. For seeing Onesimus returned not of his own accord, or through compulsion of others, or through danger of law, or through fear of punishment, but by the purpose and appointment of Paul, and came not again empty, but laden with letters of commendation; it serveth highly to set forth the matter. To present himself in this sort before his Master, by the direction and advise of Paul, was more then if he had returned of his own head, and it was more effectual to move Philemon to receive him: which teacheth us, that the author and persuader of any journey or embassy, doth serve greatly to commend the journey, and to set forth the embassy it self; and therefore a message sent from a faithful and good man, is not lightly to be passed over, or rashly to be contemned, or unreverantly to be received of him to whom it is sent.

Lastly, we are to observe the tender and inward affection of Paul toward Onesimus, who was as dear unto him as his own bowels, and therefore would have him so received and respected, as he would receive and respect his own bowels. Where we see, that together with his petition, he bewrayeth and discloseth his affection toward him for whom he maketh request. This teacheth us, partly, that to the end our request and commendation may take place, and work in him whom we beseech and entreat, we ought to show our love, and make manifest our dear affection for him, in the manner of making of our suit and supplication; and partly, that whosoever is truly turned unto God, and repenteth of his sins from the bottom of his heart, ought to be dearly beloved of us; yea, albeit he were a Servant, a Fugitive, and one stained with much wickedness. For a sound conversion of the heart, doth blot out all reproach from the penitent, and raseth out of our minds all remembrance of former offenses, as if they had never been committed. These are the general observations: now let us descend to the particular doctrines.

[Which in times past was to thee unprofitable, but now very profitable, both to thee and to me.]

We heard before, that in these words one Argument is included, to persuade Philemon to receive his Servant, which is, because howsoever he had been unprofitable, now he was turned to be most profitable. In which Words the Apostle maketh an allusion, to name Onesimus, which in the original signifieth profitable. It is an usual and common thing in the Prophets, to allude to the Names of Men and Women, of Cities and Countries, and from thence to draw some profitable consideration and conclusion, that thereby they may move to some virtue, or condeme some vice, or give warning of some judgment, or set forth some mercy of God. The like it were easy to show in the New-Testament. So in this place, the Apostle putting Philemon in hope of receiving profit by him, alludeth to the Name of Onesimus, that is profitable. In like manner, one of the Heathen Poets using this Name, hath a wise and worthy sentence; The gifts of Enemies, are not gifts, nor profitable.

The last word is the same with the Name of this Servant, wherefore it is as much as if the Apostle should have said; I do not fear, and do not thou doubt, but he will behave himself answerable to my expectation and commendation given of him, beseeming the profession of the Faith worthy his own Name, and will approve himself unto thee to be a right Onesimus, that is; thrifty and profitable. Before he was Onesimus in name, now he is so in deed: before he held the Title, now he hath the truth; before thou sawest the shadow, now thou shalt see the substance; thou hast had experience of his unprofitableness, now shalt thou have the benefit of the profit that he bringeth with him, being made a new Creature in Christ Jesus. We learn from hence, that Christian Faith or Religion, of a man unprofitable, maketh him profitable; and of one unfit, maketh him fit to every good work. The conversion of men to the true Faith, worketh the greatest change and alteration that can be, and maketh them good, profitable, and helpful unto others, that have been before, unjust, injurious, cruel, and hurtful. This appeareth by the Prophecy of Isaiah, where he showeth; That the Wolf shall dwell with the Lamb, and the Leopard shall lie with the Kidde, and the Calf, and the Lyon, and the fat Beast together, and a little Child shall lead them: the Cow and the Bear shall feed, and their young ones shall lie together, and the Lyon shall eat Straw like the Bullock: the Suckling Child shall play upon the hole of the Asp, and the weined Child shall put his hand in the Cockatrice hole.

These things are not literally to be understood, but he meaneth by these Beasts, men of a ravenous and brutish Nature, who when they shall be brought into the Kingdom of God, and Church of Christ, they shall lay aside their wicked and Woluish properties, and become loving, gentle, kind, and courteous one to another. This the Apostle teacheth. Ephe. 2, 11. Remember that ye being in times past Gentiles in the Flesh, and called uncircumcision of them, which are called Circumcision in the Flesh, made with hands, that ye were at that time without Christ, and were Aliants from the Commonwealth of Israel, and were Strangers from the Couenants of promise, and had no hope, and were without GOD in the World: but now in Christ Jesus ye which once were far off, are made near by the blood of Christ. It is noted in the Words of the Prophet, and of the Angel; That John the Baptist, by the power and force of his Ministry, shall turn the hearts of the Fathers to the Children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just Men, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.

This truth is farther confirmed unto us by sundry examples, as by the example of Paul toward others, and others toward Paul. Let us look upon the example of Paul, no man is ignorant, that before his conversion to the true Faith of Christ, he was a bloody Persecuter, an horrible Blasphemer, and a cruel Oppressor, one that made havoc of the Church of God, and sought to overthrow Religion: but after he was called to the knowledge of Christ, he was turned into a new man, he became gentle unto all, he thirsted after their Salvation, which is the sincerest Testimony of the soundest love. The like affection we see in the Jailor after his conversion. He had executed his office with all rigor and extremity; He cast the Apostles into the inner Prison, und made their Feet fast in the Stockes, because he would be more sure of them: but immediately after the feeling of the Earthquake, the hearing of Paul, the opening of the Prison, the preaching of the Faith, and turning of his heart; He took them the same hour of the night and washed their stripes, and was baptized with all that belonged unto him. Whereby we see the fruit of his unfeigned love, after the truth of his unfeigned conversion. Before he shown his cruelty, now he testifieth his Charity; before he manifested his rage, now he declareth his Religion; before we heard of his fury, now we see his Faith. The Jews, that crucified the Lord of glory, and shed innocent blood, even the blood of the Son of God, when they were exhorted to amend their lives, and to save themselves from that froward Generation: they received his word, they were added to the Church, they continued in the Doctrine of the Apostles, in the fellowship of the faithful, in the singleness of heart, in the breaking of Bread, in the communication of goods, in the praising of God, in the selling of their possessions, and in the distribution of them to all men, as everyone had need. The like we see in Zacchaeus, he was at the first a Publican, a chief receiver of the tribute, and a chief deceiver of the people, he had robbed many by false accusations, so that he was grown rich, and by his Riches, into reproach and hatred: but when Christ had revealed himself unto him, he stood forth and said unto the Lord: Behold, Lord, half my goods I give unto the poor, and if I have taken from any man by forged cauillation, I restore him fourfold.

This is a great work of God that he worketh at our conversion, which the Apostle speaketh off. 1. Corin. 6, 10, 11. Be not deceived, neither Fornicatours, nor Idolatours, nor Adulterers, nor Wantons, nor Buggers, nor Thieves, nor Covetous, nor Drunkards; shall inherit the Kingdom of GOD: and such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the Name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our GOD. All these Testimonies and examples teach us, that where is a right conversion of the heart, there is also a true alteration of the life; and where there is an embracing of the true Christian Religion, there is a change of our conversation.

The Reasons of this Doctrine are evident, and shine as clearly as the Sun at Noone-day. For first, if we consider our natural estate and condition what we are before our conversion, we shall easily be brought to acknowledge, both where, and what, and whence the change is. For naturallie we hate the truth, and the professors of the truth, Being full of all unrighteousness, Fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness, full of Envy, of Murder, of Debate, of deceit, taking all things in the evil part, Whisperers, Back-biters, Haters of GOD, Doers of wrong, proud, Boasters, Inuenters of evil things, disobedient to Parents, without understanding, Covenant-breakers, without natural affection, such as can never be appeased, merciless, Lovers of themselves, cursed speakers, unthankfull, unholy, false accusers, intemperate, fierce, no lovers at all of them which are good, Traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures, more then lovers of God, having a show of godliness, but have denied the power thereof.

Behold here a Glass to behold our selves in, a perfect Glass to look upon, that we may see our selves, and know our selves what we are. And albeit all these sins do not actually break out of us, yet they are all originallie bred in us: and albeit the fruit of them do not appear outwardly, yet the very Spawne and Seed of them remaineth inwardly: and albeit we do not feel the Branches, yet we have cause to fear the bitter Rootes and Remnants and Relics, of them that are deeply settled in the Garden and Ground of our hearts. Seeing therefore our Nature is thus corrupt, and we so far alienated and estranged one from another, we cannot be healthful or profitable to any of God's people and Children. Our Savior teacheth, That the Men of this World should always hate his Servants, and be unto to them as Wolves to the Lambs; yea, that the time should come, that they which kill them, should think they did God good service. This is it which the Apostle speaketh and confesseth as well of himself, as of others; We our selves also, were in times past unwise, disobedient, deceived, serving the lusts and diverse pleasures, living in maliciousness and envy, hateful and hating one another, until the bountifulness and love of GOD our Savior appeared; who according to his mercy saved us, by the washing of the Newe-birth, and renewing of the Holy-Ghost. This is our natural condition, before we have freedom from this thralldom, and deliverance out of this misery which we bring with us, and upon us.

Secondly, when men are truly converted, they will make conscience of hurting, they will abstain from wrongs and injuries, they will be ready to do good to others, to profit others, to walk in all the duties of their callings, and to keep a good conscience toware God and man. This appeareth in the Prophet Isaiah, Chapter 65. where this Doctrine hath his confirmation, when he hath said; That the Wolf and the Lamb shall feed together, and the Lyon shall eat Straw like the Bullock, and to the Serpent Dust shall be his Meat: He addeth; They shall no more hurt nor destroy in all mine holy Mountain, saith the Lord. The Apostle saith, Acts 24, 16. I endeavor myself to have always a clear conscience toward God and toward men. Christ Jesus himself saith, My meat is, that I may do the will of him that sent me, and finish his work. So it is, and will be meat and drink to everyone of us, if we belong unto him, to do good unto all Men; yea, even our Enemies and Persecutours, as appeareth in the example of Stephen, who prayed for his utter Enemies, that hated him with deadly hatred, and stoned him to death: and in the example of Joseph, when his Brethren feared revenge, and to be rewarded evil for evil, according to their deserts, he said: Fear not, for am not I under God? Thus he comforted them, and spake kindelie unto them.

Thirdly, true conversion worketh in us the love of God and men, and so maketh us fruitful in all good works; it suffereth us not to be barren and unfruitful, and it subdueth the rage and corruption of our sinful Nature. For such as perform not their duties to God in the several partes of his worship, nor abstain from violence toward men, whom they ought to love as their Brethren, do make it plain and manifest, that they were never rightly converted. Such as are rightly converted, are truly sanctified; and therefore that is a false conversion, where there is want of sanctification. When the Prophet hath sore-shown the wonderful change and alteration that the Gospel of Christ should make, he maketh this the cause; For the Earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the Waters that cover the Sea. We saw and shown this before in the example of Paul, we cannot doubt, but he was before his conversion, as a roaring Lyon, and as a raging Wolf against the poor Lambes of Christ: but being made a Christian, and called to the knowledge of the truth from Heaven, he couched down quietly with them, so that we may truly say with the Prophet; That the wolf did dwell the Lamb, the Leopard did lie with the Kid, the Lyon did eat Straw like the Bullock. Seeing then, that the conversion of a man worketh in him the love of God and man, seeing before true conversion we hate others, and other hate us; and lastly, seeing after true conversion we begin to make conscience of hurting and harming others; it followeth, that such as by nature were as Bears and Bulls, as Asps and Vipers, as Wolves and Cockatrices, as Lions and Leopards; that is, fierce, cruel, covetous, injurious, and unjust, being converted to the Faith, and gathered into the Church, are made gentle, mild, and merciful.

Now let us come to the consideration of the Uses, and to the application of the Doctrine to our selves. First of all, we see hereby, that they are greatly deceived, that think true godliness to be unprofitable, and no gain at all to return and redowne to the practiser of it. Great is the benefit of true Religion, and much is the profit of our conversion. Without this, a man is no better then a Beast; nay, worse then any Beast. He liveth like a Swine, he dieth like a Dog, he becometh afterward a Devil. The holy man Job describing the life and death of ungodly men, saith of them; They spend their days in wealth, and suddenly they go down to the Grave; They say also unto God: Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways: Who is the Almighty, that we should serve him? And what profit should we have, if we should pray unto him? This is the voice of Atheists that regard not God; yea, that think there is no God. But true Religion bringeth with it the greatest profit, and no gain is comparable unto it. It maketh us profitable to our selves and others: the benefit that it bringeth to others, is both to their Bodies and Souls.

Hence it is that the Wise man saith; The Marchandize thereof, is better then the Marchandize of Silver, and the gain thereof is better then Gold, it is, more precious then Pearls, and all things that thou canst desire, are not to be compared to her; Length of days is in her right hand, and in her left hand riches and glory: her ways are ways of pleasure, and all her paths prosperity, she is a Tree of Life to all that lay hold upon her, and blessed is he that retaineth her. Howsoever therefore the World, and the Children of this World, do repute and esteem of godliness, it is most certain it is the greatest Jewel, and offereth all other blessings with it. Hereunto accordeth the saying of the Apostle, Godliness is great gain, if a man be content with that he hath. And in another place; Bodily exercise profiteth little, but godliness is profitable unto all things, which hath the promise of the life present, and of that which is to come. What can be more profitable, then that which maketh a man happy and blessed, who is, by the fall of man (and the corruption of his nature) cursed and miserable? And who is it that doth not desire blessedness? But godliness joined with true conversion of a Sinner to God, maketh his State and standing blessed. The Psalmist witnesseth, That he isblessed that feareth the Lord, and delighteth greatly in his Commandments: blessed are they that are upright in their way, and walk in the way of the Lord: blessed are they that keep his Testimonies, and seek him with their whole hearts: blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsels of the wicked, but delighteth in the law of the Lord, and exerciseth himself therein day and night.

What can be more profitable then to have interest in Christ the treasure of all treasures, and the Jewel of all Jewels; to have him our Mediator, our Redeemer, our Savior? But when once we are truly converted, we have gotten Christ, he is become ours, we have him dwelling in us, him I say in whom dwelleth the fullness of the Godhead bodily, who is the head of the church, whom to know is eternal life. By him our bondage is turned into freedom, our beggary into riches, our thralldom into liberty, our death into life. Who is it then can be so simple or ignorant, to affirm that profession to be without gain and profit, that bringeth Christ Jesus with it, in whom all treasures are hid and had? Or who can be so sottish or senseless to deny, that when we have done all that we can, our means are too slender, our cost too small, our time too short, and our labor too little, in seeking to find him, and in digging and deluing after him. For if we find him, we are sure to find all things, and to want nothing that is good. What thing can be more profitable then that which giveth a man just Title to God's blessings, and a sanctified use of his creatures? The ungodly man that is not converted to God, but perverted in all his ways, hath no part or interest in the promises and mercies of God, to warm himself with his wool, to feed himself with his meat: For all the Beasts of the Forrests are his, and the beasts on a thousand Mountains. Such as are wicked persons, are wrongful Usurpers, and unjust intruders upon the Lord's goods, and the portion that he hath prepared for his own people, nay they are shameful Thieves, and shameless Robbers that steal from the godly, that which was created for them, bestowed upon them, and sanctified unto them. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, Unto the pure are all things pure, but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving, is nothing pure, but even their minds and consciences are defiled. In Adam we have lost the pure and free use of the creatures of God; in Christ Jesus the second Adam, and heir of all things, we recover our Title unto them again. Now, that which putteth us in possession, and bringeth the full fruition with freedom of conscience, and comfort of heart of all these things, must needs be holden most helpful and profitable unto us in this life.

Last of all, if we consider the enduring and continuing of the gain of godliness, we shall find the price of it to be above all other commodities: the sweetness whereof may delight us, and the contentment thereof may satisfy us, and the certainty thereof, may allure us to the seeking and preferring of it before all other, and to travel and traffic for it far and near. What commodity canst thou name or remember, that the richest Merchants bring from strange Countries, which is not subject to be lost by land, and to perish by the Sea, by storms, by robbers, by rousers, by tempests and shipwreck, so that when thou hast fetched it with the greatest danger of thy life, it may be taken from thee, and thou from it, which maketh it to be but a shadow of true gain? But the profit of godliness is of a contrary Nature, if once we have gotten this Pearl, the Thief cannot steal it, the moth cannot corrupt it, the Sea cannot drown it, the rust cannot fret it, the Land cannot loose it, the length of time cannot consume it, the greatness of danger cannot take it from us; the unfaithfulness of servants, the subtlety of enemies, the fraud of false Brethren, the force of the mighty, the violence of the Oppressor, the partiality of the Judge, the wresting of the Law, can never deprive us or debar us of this benefit; yea, that which an Heathen man said once of human learning, may more truly and justly be spoken of godliness, which indeed is true learning; the which whosoever wanteth (what Ornaments of Nature and Art soever otherwise he hath) is utterly unlearned; nay a stark fool: It will follow us as a sweet guide abroad, to solace us, it will stay with us a pleasant companion to delight us at home; it will lie with us as a bed-fellow in the night, to teach us whereon to meditate; it will sit down with us as a guest at the Table to direct us; it will be with us as a skillful Physician in sickness to comfort us; it will stick and stand to us in prosperity, to humble us; it will cleave fast to us in adversity, and in the evil day to refresh us; it will wait upon us in death, it will descend with us into the grave, it will ascend with us into heaven, and always follow us from place to place, as the shadow doth the body. This made the Apostle John say, Blessed are they that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors, and their works follow them. Revel. 14, 13. To conclude therefore, so often as we think of true Religion, or remember the day of our conversion, we must think with our selves, that we made the most blessed change that ever was made, and hold this for a firm and sure principle, that no gain is like to this gain, no profit like to this profit.

Secondly, seeing Christian Religion, planted in the heart of a man, maketh him good and helpful to others, who before was unjust and unprofitable, let everyone prove his effectual calling, and true conversion, by earnest seeking after the good of others, and by a careful abstaining from hurting, troubling, and wronging of others. It is to be chosen as a better thing to suffer, then to offer wrong; to receive, then to requite; to take, then to give. Obadiah living in Ahab's Court, is commended for the manifestation of his Faith by his Works (as the Tree that showeth what it is by the fruits) he hid the Prophets of God from the sword of the persecutor, and fed them in the Cave in the time of famine. The Prophet affirmeth and assureth, that such shall dwell in the Tabernacle of the Lord, and rest in his holy mountain, as make much of those that fear the Lord, and honor them whom God hath honored. To this purpose, the Apostle setteth this down as a certain sign of our adoption, that God accepteth us as his sons and daughters, to wit; our love to the Saints, We know that we are translated from death to life, because we love the Brethren. Everyone must be able to show the soundness of his faith, and the truth of his conversion, by the fruits of his calling, and by the works of regeneration and amendment of life. An injurious man, that loveth himself, but not another, that hath no care to do good to his Brother, but to himself only, is not yet truly converted to God, nor delivered from the bondage of sin, nor made a member of Christ, nor engrafted into the true Church, nor endued with the grace of sanctification; he is yet in the flesh, and not in the spirit; he is yet in death, not restored to life; he is the bondslave of Satan, not brought into the liberty of the sons of God. For where there is no change in conversation, there can be no assurance of true conversion.

The meditation of this point, must enter deeply into our harts, & teach us to try our selves, whether as yet we born again by water and the spirit, or not. Whosoever can say thus, I have been in bondage to sin, now I am set free; I have been the prisoner of Satan, now I am at liberty; I have lived unprofitably to God, unprofitably to myself, unprofitably to others, now I have learned to lead my life to the honor of God, to the benefit of my brethren, and to the comfort of mine own soul; whosoever (I say) can say thus, may be assured of his conversion and turning unto God, and that God hath begun his good work in him, which he will finish at the appearance of Jesus Christ. Let us all therefore know and consider, that it is required of us to repent of sins, to turn to God, to change our hearts, and to amend our lives, that so we may bring forth the fruits of righteousness, and express our obedience to the Gospel. To be without the fruits of the Gospel, is to deny the Gospel; and to be without godliness of conversation, is to be without Christ; and to be without an heart inwardly sanctified, and without a life outwardly regenerated, is to be without faith. It had been better for us that we had never had the Gospel offered unto us, then to have it, & to contemn it: It had been better we had always remained in darkness, then to have light come among us, and not to walk in the light. It is a worthy exhortation that the Apostle maketh to the Thessalonians, Ye are all the Children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, neither of darkness. Therefore, let us not sleep as others do, but let us watch and be sober: for they that sleep, sleep in the night, and they that be drunken, are drunken in the night: but let us which are of the day, be sober, putting on the Brest-plate of faith and love, and of the hope of salvation for an Helmet. It is not everyone that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that hath an earnest and careful endeavor to do his will. It is not enough for us to be called a Christian, to bear the name of a Protestant, to renounce the name of a Papist, to make show of the true Religion, and to be an hearer of the word: we have learned better things, and must give an account of a farther duty. We will say peradventure, we hate and detest all the blind and erroneous opinions of Heretics, of Arians, of Papists, of Atheists, of Anabaptists, of Libertines, and such like; that we renounce all those opinions, that derogate anything from the true worship and honor of God, as denying of Christ's Godhead, his Manhood, his Mediation; that we abhor all kind of Idolatry, and superstitious serving of our God. But is this the whole conversion of a man? Or is this the perfect work of Repentance, that ought to be wrought in us? We must go farther then thus, and yet (my Brethren) I would we all went so far.

Many stand in the midway, and have not proceeded to learn and practice those duties. We must hate all ignorance of God and of his word, which is the Mother and Mistress of all sin and error: we must love and embrace the knowledge of God revealed and offered unto us from time to time: we must seek after it as a Treasure, we must receive it, otherwise we deceive our selves. We must hunger and thirst after the sincere milk of God's word, and account their feet beautiful, that bring it unto us, we must say; Come, let us go up to the house of God, that he may teach us his ways, and that we may walk in his paths. But do we thus? Nay, when it is offered, do we not spurn and kick against it, as the Horse and Mule, that is without understanding? Do we not mock and deride the Prophets of God, and preachers of the word, laboring to instruct us in the right way, and are we not for the most part made worse, and our hearts hardened, that we can receive no instruction? If we loved the light, we would delight in it, we would be reformed by it, we would be transformed into the obedience of it: but our profane works do testify against us, that we hate both the light, and those that are the Authors and the bringers of it. I might allege many other works of darkness, that swarm in our lives, and make us swerve from the rule of righteousness left unto us in the word. If we live in beastly drunkenness, in unclean lusts, in hatred, in malice, and such like fruits of the flesh, we are not yet partakers of a new birth, we are not become new creatures, we have not yet put on the new man, we cannot do good to any of our brethren. When Abraham was to travel among the Heathen that knew not God among the Idolaters that worshipped not God, among the profane Infidels that were never converted to God, he said, The fear of God is not in this place, and they will slay me for my wives sake. He could look for no duties of love, no practice of righteousness, no fruits of humanity toward him, to proceed from them that were vnmortified, vnsanctified, and unregenerated. It is the great mercy of God to mankind, to give to them his word, which restraineth their actions, subdueth their affections, and ordereth men which otherwise would be outrageous Monsters, as Wolves, Tigers, Lions, Bears, Bulls, Bandogs, nay Devils incarnate one to another; who being left to themselves, they would be as Cormorants or Cannibals, ready to devour and eat up one another, being not only without piety, but without civility, without courtesy, without humanity. If therefore his word do not alter us, nothing will, nothing can. Thus then we see, that seeing it is the conversion of a man, that maketh him any way profitable or serviceable to others, we must all labor to be born again, otherwise it had been better we had never been borne; and we must seek true Repentance, and the conversion of the heart, otherwise we shall be unprofitable members in the Church of God.

Lastly, seeing it is the turning of us to God, that turneth us to the good of men, it serveth as a notable direction unto us, to teach us, that whosoever desireth that such as belong unto him should be profitable and faithful unto him, let him labor to plant godliness in their hearts, and to sow the seeds of eternal life in their minds. It will be able to minister no comfort unto thee, to see godliness flourish in others, and to hear of their conversion to God; endeavor to bring it home to thine own house, and to settle it in the doors of thine own family. A better duty thou canst not perform unto their souls, and so unto them, then by this, which will bring the blessing of God with it, and remove the curse of God from thee and thy family. Who is it (if he were asked the question) that would be troubled with an unfaithful Wife, with stubborn Children, with untrusty Servants, or who is it that would not account them the greatest plague and punishment that can befall a man in this life, to have such a dissolute and disordered house? If then, any desire to be with comfort and contentment matched with a provident and profitable wife, blessed with gracious and obedient children, furnished with diligent and dutiful servants, let them seek out such as truly serve the Lord, make choice of such as show lively fruits of their unfeigned conversion, be careful to train them in the knowledge of God, and to procure their salvation.

This was Abraham's care and Conscience, to instruct such as did belong unto him, and this was the cause that he had a blessed wife, partaker of the same inheritance with him, that followed him up and down in every place, as God called him; he had a faithful Isaac, ready in all duty to obey him; he had careful and trusty servants, that contented not themselves with eye-service, but performed their duties in the singleness of their hearts, as serving the Lord, and not man. Would we then have our Wives that lie in our bosoms, and are given as the dearest and nearest companions of our life, to be found faithful unto us, of pure and chaste conversation, loving their children, governing their house, and giving no occasion to the adversary, to speak evil? Let us make them faithful to God, and endeavor to work true Religion in them, as they which are heirs together of the grace of life. Such a blessed couple were Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebecca, Zacharias and Elizabeth, Aquila and Priscilla, with sundry others. This made the Prophet say, Blessed is everyone that feareth the Lord, and walketh in his ways, &c, thy wife shall be as the fruitful Vine on the sides of thine house, & thy children like the Olive plants round about thy Table.

Moreover, if we desire to have our Children the fruit of our own body, and the fry of the Church to be good and dutiful unto us (as everyone would have them do their duty to him, and will cry out against them when they behave themselves rudely and unreverantly) let us be careful of their conversion, let us give them the sweet taste of Religion, and let us teach them this trade of the fear of God. We see that many complain of the hardness of the world, of the straitness of the times, and of the miserableness of many men; Alas (say they) it never went worse with poor men, we know not what to do with our Children, how to employ them, or where to bestow them, except a man be able to give a round and rich sum with his son, he cannot get him a Master, or provide him a service, or bind him to a trade, or place him to get his living another day. But understand, O ye unwise among the people, and ye Fools when will ye be wise? How long will we live in the Church, and yet not learn this one lesson which is the foundation and fountain of all the rest, that godliness is the greatest gain? Bind them to this trade, this is the best trade, with which no other can be matched or compared; this requireth no great stock or substance to put them forth. They that have nothing to give, and little to live upon, may as soon advance and prefer their children this way, as they that have great riches, & large possessions. Hence it is that the Prophet saith, Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the Waters, and ye that have no Silver, come buy and eat; Come I say, buy Wine and Milk without Silver, and without Money: wherefore do ye lay out Silver, and not for Bread? And your labor without being satisfied? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat that which is good, and let your soul delight in fatness.

Whereby we see, that whosoever are called to be of this Science, it will be able to maintain the Tradesmen, it will bring in the greatest profit. There are so many of some Trades, that they fear one will not be able to live by another, one enuyeth another, and hindereth another. It is not so in this Trade, the moe the better, the moe the merrier, everyone helpeth another, and all do make up a blessed fellowship and communion of Saints. If then, thou have a care to put thy son to an Occupation, that he may learn to live another day, and neglectest this which is the chief and ground of all, thou art greatly deceived in thy choice, and Christ Jesus shall laugh thee to scorn for thy folly. Let me therefore commend this weighty business of bestowing thy son, to thy wise consideration; a greater gain I cannot name, a richer trade thou canst not find, a better Master he cannot serve, a farther freedom he cannot obtain, a surer inheritance he cannot purchase. This is it which Solomon pointeth out unto us, Prov. 22, 6. Teach a child in the trade of his way, and when he is old, he shall not depart from it.

Furthermore, if we desire to have our Servants that attend upon us, and labor for us, to be obedient and faithful unto us, painful in their calling, and trusty in their business, let us know that we our selves must be the means to procure it, and further it by seeking their salvation, and laboring earnestly their conversion. If they be truly Religious, they will be truly righteous; if they once know how to serve God faithfully, they will soon learn to serve us faithfully for Conscience sake. Many have evil servants, and ungracious Children, they see it, they complain of it, they seem to lament it; but they never consider that the chiefest fault is their own. Have we Servants or Children given to lying, to deceiving, to fraud, to falsehood, to robbing and stealing, and breaking out into sundry disorders in their life? Let us mark what the cause is, let us see where is the occasion, and let us provide how these abuses may be remedied and redressed. There is no better way to recover them, then to teach them their duties, to show them their sins out of the word of God, and to lay before them his Judgments that are due unto them. It is a great blessing of God to have a Religious servant, he bringeth the blessing of God with him, the heart of his Master may trust in him, and he shall have no need of spoil, he will do him good (and not evil) all the days of his life. This we see in the servant of Abraham, who as he had a care to teach and train up his household in the ways of godliness, so the Lord blessed him with a faithful family, and a religious servant, whom he employed in a weighty business, of fetching home a Wife for his Son Isaac.

The like we see in Joseph, he was sold for a slave, and brought down into Egypt, and bought at the hand of the Ishmaelites, And the Lord was with him, and he was a man that prospered, and was in the house of his Master the Egyptian, and his Master saw that the Lord was with him, and that the Lord made all that he did to prosper in his hand. So afterward, when as thorough •he slanderous accusation, and false information of his Mistress, he was cast into prison, where he was laid in Irons, and his feet were held in the stocks, the Lord made his innocence known, and shown mercy unto him, and got him favor in the sight of the Master of the prison, and the Keeper of the prison committed to Joseph's hand all the prisoners that were in the prison, & whatsoever they did there, that did he; and the Keeper of the prison, looked unto nothing that was under his hand, seeing that the Lord was with him, for whatsoever he did, the Lord made it to prosper. Behold here in Joseph (as in a clear glass) the right picture and pattern of a right religious servant, who being a poor prisoner, and lying in a dark Dungeon, being unjustly fallen into the displeasure of his Master, and wrongfully cast into a close prison, did in that woeful and pitiful condition, both gain glory to God, beautify his own profession, and seek the good of his Master, that put his trust in him. For no man is in so low and mean an estate, if he be a poor Servant, a base Kitchen boy, or a vile prisoner, but by diligence in his Calling, (such as it is) and by showing fidelity to his Master (such as he is) may greatly glorify the name of God whom he doth serve, and adorn the Gospel of Christ which he doth profess.

Hence it is, that the Apostle exhorting all religious servants, saith, Let as many servants as are under the yoke, count their Masters worthy of all honor, that the name of God and his Gospel be not evil spoken of, and that they may adorn the Doctrine of God our Savior in all things. The example of Jacob also is worth and worthy the observation in this case, who albeit he served an hard & froward Master, yet he rather considered what he ought to do, then what the other deserved to suffer, so that he witnesseth, He was in the day consumed with heat, and with frost in the night, and his sleep departed from his eyes, whatsoever was torn of Beasts, he brought it not unto him, but made it good himself. This is it which the Centurion in the Gospel confesseth, and commendeth in his servants, For I am a man also under the authority of another, and I have Soldiers under me:

and I say to one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh, and to my servant do this, and he doth it. These examples also of that servant and Soldier, that waited upon Cornelius, is notable to this purpose, who being trained up in the fear of God, shown all fidelity and forwardness to perform the will and commandment of his Master, and went to bring Peter, by whose Ministry they might be further instructed. Thus we see, that religious servants are the best Servants, the most dilligent Servants, the most true and trusty Servants, the most provident and profitable Servants, and therefore it belongeth to all Masters of families, to be careful to teach them the fear of the Lord, and to train them in the ways of godliness. Heereby they shall honor God, hereby they shall do great good to their souls, hereby they shall discharge a good Conscience, hereby they shall procure their own profit, and further their own gain.

[Which in times past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable both to thee and to me.]

The Apostle in this place, speaking of the estate of Onesimus, and showing what he was before his Conversion, and what he was after, doth fitly distinguish the times, and saith, that before his Calling to the Faith, he was unprofitable, serving to no other purpose, but to feed himself, and fill up a place; but no good, no grace, no godliness appeared to be in him. But where did he converse and lead this life? Was it where the name of God was not known, or where the sound of the Gospel was not heard? No, it was in faithful Philemons house. This may at the first seem a very strange and wonderful thing, that he living in so religious an house, in so reformed a family, with so godly a company, which had the reputation of a little Church, should favor nothing of piety, nothing of Christianity, but remain in unfaithfulness toward God, and in unrighteousness toward his Master. From this description of Onesimus, in the time of his ignorance, before his eyes were opened, and his heart reformed, we learn that it falleth out (notwithstanding the desire and diligence of the Governors of the house) that in reformed families, are oftentimes found unreformed persons. In godly places, do many times lurk ungodly Children, and vncorrigible servants, into whose hearts no instruction will enter, and whose disposition no means of reformation can alter. We see this in the first family that ever was upon the earth; and there have been no more wicked men in the world then they, that have had the best means to direct them. Adam had malicious and murthering Cain, Abraham had persecuting and savage Ishmaell; Noah had scoffing and cursed Cham; Isaac had ungracious and prophan Esau; David had ambitious and aspyring Absalom. So it was with Eli, with Samuel, with Hezekiah, with Josiah, & sundry others, who after good means used by themselves, have found much evil practiced by their Children. The Fathers are often careful to lay a good foundation, & to nurture their children with good instruction, yet few children prove like their Fathers, but are a degenerate and unregenerate offspring.

And albeit this do sufficiently appear unto us by Testimonies of Scripture, and by daily experience, yet we shall farther be confirmed in this truth, if we weigh the Reasons whereupon it standeth. First, Religion cometh not by inheritance, and grace cannot be conveyed by propagation, but every man begetteth his like, as he himself is by nature, as one Serpent engendereth another. This Moses teacheth, that when Adam was fallen from God, and had lost the grace of sanctification, He begat a child in his own likeness, after his own Image. Godly Parents may leave their children temporal possessions, but they cannot bequeath unto them Faith and a good conscience, which are not to be found in the natural man.

Secondly, there must be a new birth begun by God's spirit; for the grace of regeneration, whereby we are brought to have one foot in God's Kingdom, is not of flesh and blood, but of water and the spirit; it is not of the will of man, but of the work of God. This is it which our Savior setteth down, As many as received him, to them he gave prerogative to be the sons of God, even to them that believe in his Name, which are borne not of blood, nor of the will of the Flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. Likewise, when he disputed with Nicodemus, who was ignorant of this Doctrine, he saith; Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except that a man be borne of Water, and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. It is he only that gave the heart, that is able to change the heart; it is he that gave the eyes, that is able to open the eyes.

Thirdly, albeit the unregenerate persons, and loose livers, do not want education and good bringing up, yet they are not amended and reformed, because God doth not purpose their conversion, but appoint their confusion. The Lord stirred up Pharaoh to this same purpose, that he might show his power in him, and that his name might be declared throughout all the earth, yet he sent unto him Moses and Aaron to clear his own Justice, & to make him without excuse. The like the Scripture speaketh of the sons of Eli, who were reprov'd of him, for making the Israelites to trespass, and to abhor the offerings of the Lord, yet they regarded not his reproof, being the Father of their bodies, the Priest of the most high God, and the judge of the people: and this reason is rendered, why they obeyed not his voice, & hearkened not to his Counsel, Because the Lord would slay thē. So then, whether we do consider that grace cannot be conveyed by propagation, or that it is the proper work of the spirit, to effect our regeneration, or that God will glorify his great name in the confusion of such as break the bands, and cast away the Cords of Discipline from them, we cannot greatly marvel, that in reformed places, are oftentimes to be found unreformed persons.

Let us make use of this Doctrine, and see both what may be learned by it, and how it may be applied unto us. First of all, it teareth, that though education be a notable means of reformation and working good in the hearts of those that hear instruction, and albeit Parents and Maysters be thereby discharged, as they that have done their duty, yet bare teaching is not sufficient to convert the soul, and to settle the Conscience in good things. Noah was as careful for the instruction of Cham and Canaan, as of the rest that were of his house, & belonged to his charge: yet they followed not his Doctrine, but scoffed at him that was both Pastor and Parent. David a man after God's own heart, walked in the midst of his house, in the uprightness of his Conscience; yet he had an incestuous Ammon, a Rebellious Absalom, a licentious Adoniah, all of them ungodly and ungracious Children. So then, although education be a good means, yet it is not a sufficient means to work reformation. He that laboreth in planting and watering, is nothing, except God give the blessing of increase. We see this evidently in the public assembly, as well as in the private family; in the house of God, as well as in the house of man. There is a difference of hearers, according to their diverse dispositions, some are deaf hearers, that have not their ears bored through to the heart, they have only outward ears, and regard no more but outward hearing, and are no way moved with that which is spoken, dead-hearted, dull-eared, dim-sighted, heavy-headed. Others, beside their bodily ears, have the ears of their hearts opened by the word and work of the Spirit, made pliable and tractable to receive, embrace, and believe, that which they hear. So is it in the private instruction, used in private Families, all that hear with the outward ear, are not reformed; all that are instructed, are not converted. What then? Shall not Fathers teach their Children, and Masters their Servants, and Householders their Families, because some have not believed, and many remain as blind and blockish as they were at the first? Yes, it is their duty to be dilligent in teaching them, and in laying the foundation of Christian Religion among them, howsoever it be received or rejected of such as be in their houses, and belong unto them. Were not he a simple Husbandman, that would neglect to sow his Ground, because he knoweth that some of the Corn will never grow up, to bring forth fruit, but die in the earth? Or were not he an unwise Law-giver, that will not have wholesome Laws enacted and established, because some transgress them, and disobey them, and make no account of them? Or were not he a very foolish Father, who because he hath one rude and riotous Son, that will not reverence his person, nor fulfill his Commandments, nor regard his Authority, nor fear his threatninges, would therefore hold his peace, and refrain himself from instructing and informing his other Children in the ways of Godliness? Or were he not a bad Gardener, who because some of his Ground bringeth forth Weeds and Nettles, would therefore refuse to water the Hearbes that are meet for the use of man? When the Lord sent his holy Prophets to reprove the stubborn and stiff-necked Jews, he knew what entertainment them-selves should find, and what effect their Doctrine would have taken, yet to make them without excuse, they were commanded to go, that they might be convinced of sin, seeing there had been a Prophet among them. The Prophet Jeremiah being called of God to preach the word, is told afore-hand, that they should not obey his word, but fight against him. Likewise Ezekiel being sent to the children of Israel, is shown that they would not hear him, nor cease from their ways. Whereby we see, that howsoever the people were stiff-necked, and stif-hearted, howsoever their faces were stronger then the Flint, and their fore-heads were harder then the Adamant, yet God would have his word offered unto them, and laid before them. He hath mo ends then one of the preaching of his word; sometimes he useth it to soften, and sometimes to harden; sometimes to save, and sometimes to condemn; sometimes to be the savor of life unto life, and sometimes to be the savor of death unto death. So should it be with all godly householders, howsoever they have many that harbor in their houses, & are entertained within their walls, that regard not the fear of God, but pull away their shoulders from the sweet yoke of God, yet they are not to surcease or wax faint and weary, but to continue the instruction of them & the pouring of water upon the hard stone, proving if God at anytime will soften their harts, and give them repentance, that they may come out of the snares of the Devil, of whom they are hold captives. We know not at what time God may work in them, and call them to a sight of their sins, and to a turning from their sins. They may hear that in the time of their ignorance, which they may practice in the time of their knowledge. They may hear that Doctrine, which though it lie hid and covered, as Corn in the earth, or as fire in the ashes a long time, and seem buried in perpetual forgetfulness, yet it may afterwards break forth as the light, and kindle in their hearts as a mighty flame. Thus peradventure it might be with this Onesimus, when he was converted by the Ministry of the Apostle to the Faith of Christ, he might call to his remembrance many good things that he had heard before, but never a whit regarded nor respected, and now profit by that Doctrine that before he had despised and derided. The Disciples of Christ did not by and by receive, nor conceive of his preaching; but when he was risen again, they remembered what he had delivered unto them. So ought we to deal toward such as are committed unto us, let us plant and water, committing and commending the success and increase of all our labors unto God.

Secondly, seeing where there are good means, are many times godless and graceless men, we learn that to hear to salvation, and to receive willingly instruction, is no general or common grace, no man can believe, saving he to whom it is given. It is the gift of God that must open the understanding, and boar through the ear, and sanctify the heart, before any can hear, with a desire to understand, or lay it up with a purpose to practice and obey. Hence it is, that the Prophet saith, The Lord GOD hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned I back. The Evangelist Luke teacheth, that when the Apostles preached the Gospel, so many as were appointed to salvation, believed, which was a fruit of their election; others mocked, which was a sign of their Reprobation. Lydia is commended, in that she attended unto the things which Paul spake, but it was the Lord that opened her heart before she could be a faithful and fruitful hearer. To this purpose Moses speaketh to all Israel, Ye have seen all that the Lord did before your eyes in the Land of Egypt unto Pharaoh, and unto all his servants, and unto all his Land, the great temptations which thine eyes have seen, those great Miracles and wonders: yet the Lord hath not given you an heart to perceive, and eyes to see, and ears to hear unto this day. Now, as this over-throweth such as teach and maintain an universal Vocation, so it must serve to settle us in the truth of the Doctrine of particular election, and predestination, That it is neither in him that willeth, nor in him that rundeth, but in God that showeth mercy. He showeth mercy upon whom he will show mercy, and will have compassion upon whom he will have compassion: therefore, he hath mercy upon whom he will, and whom he will he hardeneth. God loved Jacob, and hated Esau, so that it was said, The elder shall serve the younger. The Lord electeth some unto life and salvation, before the foundations of the world; he elected some, and therefore not all; before the beginning of the world, and therefore not for their deserts, who then had not their being upon the earth. Who art thou that wilt dispute with GOD? Or what shall it avail us to question it, and quarrel it with the Almighty? May the Clay reason with the Potter, or the Axe with the Carpenter, or the Sawe with him that draweth it, or the Rodde with him that taketh it? Or shall the thing formed, say unto him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Dare any Servant pry and search into all the secrets of his Master? Canst thou follow & track the way of the Fish in the Waters, of the Fowls in the Air, of a Serpent upon a stone, of a Ship in the Sea? Let us not ask a reason of his will, but rather say with the Apostle, O the deepness of the Riches both of the wisdom and Knowledge of GOD! Howe unsearchable are his Iudgements, and his ways past finding out? For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who was his Counselor, or who hath given unto him first, and he shall be recompensed? If God should do equally well unto all his Creatures, then were he after a sort so much less to be praised and magnified of some for his benefits, seeing he should do nothing specially and singularly to them, more then to others. Neither is there are iniquity in our God in so doing, for may he not do with his own what he will? May he not lighten what eyes he will, or shoot away what arrows he is disposed, without our certain knowledge of his secret counsels?

But some man may say, when an whole assembly have the same means, the same Ministry, an whole Family the same teaching and instruction; How is it that some believe, others will not believe? Some are converted, others are hardened? Some are elect, others are rejected? I answer, it is not for the Creature curiously to search into the works of the Creator, but to be wise, according to sobriety: and as well a man might demand, why all in the field is not pure Corn, but some Tares? Why all in the Barn is not Wheat, but some Chaff? Why Trees bear some leaves, and not all Fruit? Why in a great house there are Vesselles of Golde and Silver; some to an honorable, and others to a dishonorable use? Why there are as well Goats that will not hear, as Sheep that hear the voice of the Shepherd? The Lord Jesus adareth the Counsel of his Father herein, and confeseth the reason to be his will and heavenly pleasure, and farther then this whosoever goeth, higher then this whosoever ascendeth, and deeper then this whosoever searcheth, shall wander as in a maze, and never return, shall fall down headlong into a Gulf, and never rise up again. Our Savior saith, I give thee thanks, O Father, Lord of Heaven and Earth, because thou hast hid these things from the Wise and men of understanding, and hast opened them unto Babes, It is so, O Father, because thy good pleasure was such. As for the condemnation of the wicked, and the execution of the heavy wrath and just judgments of God, there is more then sufficient due desert in the Reprobate; and though the righteous Lord work therein, yet beware thou imagine any evil in him. The rain moystneth an evil Tree, and therefore it beareth bitter, and no better fruit. In that it beareth fruit, it cometh of the moisture: but in that it bringeth forth evil fruit, it cometh of his own Nature. The Sun by the strength of his heat, and virtue of the Beams thereof, raiseth out of the Dirt and Dunghill, many foul and filthy savors, that infect men, and corrupt the Air; the raising of them up, is from the Sun, the unwholesome and noisome smelles are from the places themselves. The Rain is not properly the cause of the evil fruit, but the Nature of the Tree, and therefore it worthily calleth for the Axe to cut it down, and then justly deserveth to be thrown into the fire. The Sun is not directly the cause of those filthy savors that are extracted out of stinking Ponds and puddles, but the Miery and marish Ditches themselves. So is it with God, he is as the Rain that falleth, and as the Sun that shyneth from Heaven, He moveth the evil man who worketh evil: the action is of God, the evil is from the free will of man, and from the soul spirit of the Devil. God is not the Author of the evil, and therefore let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: but every man is tempted, when he is drawn away by his own concupiscence, and is enticed.

Seeing then, the grace of Election, of Redemption, of Justification, of Vocation, of Sanctification, is not general, nor generally given unto all, but according to the free purpose and pleasure of him that chooseth, redeemeth, calleth, justifieth, and sanctifieth: Let us acknowledge his great mercy to the praise and glory of his name, when he maketh his own ordinances auayleable, which we see in many to be unprofitable: let us confess his loving kindness toward us, when he doth beget us by the immortal seed of regeneration, and worketh effectually our salvation. For what have we in us, to move the Lord to savor us, and follow us, with a multitude of his compassions? Doth he see us any better by Nature then others, whom he hath rejected and refused? No, in no wise. We are of the same mould with them, and by nature no better then they. Let us not stand upon the righteousness of our own nature, or the deserts of our own works, or the goodness of our Ancestors, but seek to have grace in our hearts, and not to call that our own, which we our selves have not done. The Father shall not be saved by the Child, nor the Child by the Father, but every man shall confess the ways of God to be equal, and give an account for himself. Manie godly and faithful parents have had children appointed to wrath, and reserved to destruction: and therefore, whether our forefathers were believers or unbelievers, let not us look so much upon them, to glory in them, or to rest upon them, or think to be saved by them, as enter into our selves, and labor to approve our obedience in the sight of God.

Thirdly, seeing that in good houses are found evil persons, it putteth all Parents and Masters in mind of a necessary duty, and offereth them comfort in the discharge of their duty. Their duty is not to forget or neglect to pray unto God earnestly, constantly, and continually, for God's blessing upon his labors in their family. For when we have done our best endeavours, and used the greatest diligence, there remaineth somewhat behind to be performed for our Children and people, even to wait for the increase of our labors, and the work of God's Spirit, to season and sanctify their hearts that belong unto us. It is not the outward work of teaching, that can convert the soul, and reform the life. We can but speak unto the ear, it is God that speaketh unto the heart. Hence it is, that some believe, and others blaspheme; some are bettered by the word, others are made worse by instruction, and become desperate, and extremely wicked, as the Sun that softeneth the wax, and hardeneth the Clay. The Jews that were fed by the word, were filled with envy, and contemned the ordinance of God offered unto them, and spake evil of the way of God, and the means of salvation. So it was with Pharaoh, the more Moses and Aaron spake unto him, so much the more his heart was hardened. For the word, thorough the corruption of our nature, is as an Hammer that hardeneth the Anvil, as a fire that consumeth the Stubble, and as a Rain, that bringeth up briars and bushes, that are reserved to be burned. There is no godly Housholder, but if he be diligent to mark the manners, and to know the behavior of the people about him, he shall espy not only many unreformed in themselves, but secret enemies to reformation in others. So that it is their parts, to entreat God, both before and after the means used, to make them effectual and profitable, and to desire him to incline their hearts to practice and obedience. We must follow the example of the Husbandman, who after the sowing of his seed, and Tilling of his ground, looketh for the early and the latter rain to come from heaven, so must we call upon God our Heavenly Father, to send a gracious rain to moysten their hard hearts, and so to soften them, as that they may be fit to receive instruction. This the Prophet Jeremiah teacheth, I have heard Ephraim lamenting thus; Thou hast corrected me, and I was chastised as an untamed Calf, convert thou me, and I shall be converted, for thou art the Lord my God. And in another place the Church saith, Turn thou unto us, O Lord, and we shall be turned; renew our days as of old. Whereby we see, that we must depend upon God to pour out his grace upon them, and to begin in them the work of regeneration.

Moreover, this serveth to comfort all faithful Parents, and godly Maisters, who have with a good conscience been careful to discharge their duties, and to reform their families, albeit many remain obstinate, and continue settled in the Dregges of their sins. It is impossible for the black Moore to change his skin, and the Leopard his spots; it is hard for them to do good, that are accustomed to do evil. Our labor shall not be in vain to our selves, albeit it be in vain to others; our work shall return into our own bosom, albeit it will not enter into the bosom and breast of others. This is it which Christ our Savior said to his Disciples, whom he sent unto the lost Sheep of the house of Israel, Whenye come into an house, salute the same, and if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you. Our careful endeavours shall be rewarded of God, albeit they be smally regarded of men; they are approved in Heaven, albeit reprov'd & rejected in earth. When the Prophet Isaiah bringeth in the Lord Jesus, complaining that his preaching took none effect among the unthankful people of his own hard-hearted Nation, he comforteth himself in this assurance, that he knew his labors should not be in vain in the Lord, I said, I have labored in vain, I have spent my strength in vain, and for nothing, but my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God. So shall it be with everyone of us that are devout and diligent in doing our duties, and in instructing our families, God will not measure our pains by their profit, nor reward our diligence according to their negligence, For every man shall receive his wages according to his labor. This ought to be an encouragement to all men to take pains with their people, and to comfort them against all discomforts that arise in their way, to slake their diligence, to cool their zeal, to hinder their pains, and to stop the course, that happily they have begun to win their families to a love of the truth.

Lastly, seeing evil persons are found, where good means are used, it teacheth all those that are under the government of godly Masters, not to bless themselves as though they were happy, because they dwell not in profane places, because they serve not profane Masters, because they are partakers of instruction, which many thousands want; but it belongeth unto them to labor by all means to make the use of the means offered unto them, to be fruitful and effectual for their salvation. For, as when we come into the congregation of the faithful, we ought to be prepared and fitted to receive the spiritual food of our souls; so in coming to the private exercises of Catechizing & instruction, we are not to present our selves rashly and vnreuently, as if we went to hear a Play, or to see some pastime, or to dispatch some worldly business: but we must perform these holy actions with a conscience of our duties to God, & with a care of our own salvation. We have not of our selves ears to hear, nor eyes to see, nor hearts to understand: we are not able to conceive the things that are of God, without the assisting and strengthening Spirit of God.

Before we come to hear the word read unto us, or the principles of Religion laid before us, or to join in prayer with our Brethren; we must purge our affections, of wrath, filthiness, maliciousness, dissimulation, hypocrisy, envy, and evil speaking. For so long as these corruptions are found in us, to offer unto us the Word, is all one, as if most pure Waters were poured into a stinking and polluted Vessel, whereby they are made unprofitable. We must use earnest and hearty prayer unto the Lord, to open our blind eyes and deaf ears, That we may understand the wonderful things of his Law: That he would take away our stony hearts, and give us hearts of Flesh, in which his Word may be deeply imprinted. And whensoever we are performing these heavenly duties, we must account our selves to be in God's presence; we must remember, that he is either speaking to us, or we are speaking to him; and we must stir up our selves to all attention. Thus it shall come to pass, that the word of God, which worketh in many to condemnation, shall be to us the Seed of regeneration, the food of the soul, the curing of our corruptions, the light of our ways, and the means of working in us all necessary graces of God in this life, and of assuring unto us everlasting happiness in the life to come.

[Verse 12. Whom I have sent again: thou therefore receive him, that is; mine own Bowels. Hitherto the Apostle hath named and described the party or person for whom he prayeth: Now he showeth briefly the matter of his request, and the account that he maketh of him. The request is, that he would receive him into his House, and retain him into his service again: the account made of him, that he was to him as his Bowels, even most dear and tender, being made a member of Christ, though a poor Slaue and abject Servant by his calling, and a Fugitiue Runna-gate by his former condition: whereby we see the loving affection and tender compassion of Paul toward him for our imitation. As if he should have said; If I thought or imagined that he would be as unprofitable unto thee hereafter, as he hath been heretofore, I would never have given him my Letters of commendation, nor have sent him back unto thee in this manner. For I should be of this mind, rather to have him punished then received. But now I am not afraid of it, or discouraged from sending him unto thee, I have had a comfortable experience of his faithful service, who ministered unto me in my necessities. I have therefore good cause to conceive a good opinion of him, and to give this testimony of him, that he was never so unprofitable to thee, as I have found him profitable to me.

We learn from hence, that former offenses upon true repentance and amendment of life, are to be remitted and pardoned by all true Christians. Whensoever our Brethren have trespassed against us, and offended us, it is our duty, upon their unfeigned repentance to forgive them, to forget their injuries, and to receive them into favor again. Whereas Onesimus fled from his Master, it was a sin, from so good a Master it was a greater sin: but whereas he conveyed away with him his Masters goods, and did steal from him at his departure, this was more heinous, and made his offense worst of all: yet upon his repentance, he laboreth to have him forgiven, and to have his trespass put out of remembrance. This is offered to our considerations in the Parable of the prodigal Son, when once he resolved to leave his loose life, and to return back to his Fathers house, from which he shamefully departed, he was entertained with a kiss, and received into favor, and had his former misdoings and misdemeanors forgiven. When Peter came to Christ and said; Master, how oft shall my Brother sin against me, and I shall forgive him: Unto seven times? Jesus said unto him; I say not unto thee, Unto seven times: but unto seauenty times seven times. To this purpose Christ propounded a parable of a certain King, which would take an account of his Servants, and finding one that was unmerciful and hard-hearted to one of his Fellow-Servants, he called him unto him, and said unto him: O evil Servant, I forgave thee all that debt because thou prayedst me: oughtest not thou also to have had pity on thy Fellow-Servant, even as I had pity on thee? So his Lord was wroth, and delivered him to the Tormentours, till he should pay all that was due to him: so likewise shall mine heavenly Father do unto you, except ye forgive from your hearts, each one to his Brother their Trespasses. We have in the Scriptures sundry examples of the practice of this Doctrine, and of the performance of this duty. We see this in Joseph toward his brethren, when they desired forgiveness, and craved pardon at his hands after the death of their Father, he said unto them; When ye thought evil against me, God disposed it to good, that he might bring to pass as it is at this day, and save much people: Fear not now therefore, I will nourish you and your Children, and he comforted them, and spake kindly unto them. This Paul himself practiced, and moved others to practice toward the incestious Corinthians, It is sufficient unto the same man, that he was rebuked of many, so that now contrary-wise, ye ought rather to forgive him and comfort him, least the same should be swallowed up with over much heaviness. Wherefore I pray you, that you would confirm your love toward him: to whom ye forgive anything, I forgive also: for verily, if I forgave anything, to whom I forgave it, for your sakes forgave I it, in the sight of Christ. To this purpose the same Apostle saith; Be angry, but sin not: let not the Sun go down upon your wrath, neither give place to the Devil. And afterward; Let all bitterness, and anger, and wrath, and crying, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all maliciousness: be ye courteous one to another, and tender-hearted, freely forgiving one another. All these Testimonies and examples, as a Cloud of Witnesses serve to teach us, that repentant offenders must be forgiven, and their offenses blotted out of our remembrance.

The reasons to confirm this truth farther to our consciences, are not far to seek, but near at hand. For first, hereby we imitate our heavenly Father, and are made like to him. As we are commanded to be holy, as he is holy: so we are charged, to Be merciful, because our Father also is merciful, who hath not desire that the wicked should die, but that he should live, if he return from his ways. God is provoked of us every moment, and we are indebted unto him ten thousand Talents, yet he is entreated of us, and he is reconciled unto us, so that he maketh his Sun to arise upon the good and evil, and the rain to fall upon the just and unjust: ought not we therefore to love one another, and to forgive one another after his example? This is the reason used by the Apostle; Now therefore as the elect of God, holy and beloved, put on the bowels of mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another: if any man have a quarrel to another, even as Christ forgave, even so do ye. It were woeful to us, if God were not ready to forgive: for we find our selves ready to offend, and one sin unpardoned, is sufficient to make us be condemned.

Secondly, our forgiving of our Brethren, giveth comfort and confidence that we our selves shall be forgiven. We are taught to gather assurance of pardon to our own hearts, from our readiness to forgive others, that God will, & in Christ hath forgiven us our trespasses. This we see in the fifth petition of the Lord's Prayer, when we are taught to say, and to pray: Forgive us our sins, for even we forgive every man that is indebted to us. Everyone would be glad to have a sure testimony and infallible witness of the forgiveness of his sins, for from hence cometh our greatest comfort. Now there cannot be stronger Argument to work in us this persuasion, seeing that we by examining our affections toward our Brethren, may conclude the certainty of God's mercy toward us. For our forgiveness is not made the cause, but the sign and Seal of God's forgiveness, for as much as his pardoning of us, doth work in us the pardon of others.

Thirdly, it is a certain thing, that such as will not forgive, shall themselves never be forgiven. Our forgiveness is upon condition, if we remit the offenses of others: if we retain them, our own sins are also retained. If then the example of God and our own assurance cannot draw us to this duty, let the greatness of the danger move us to forgive, which hangeth over their heads, that harden their hearts in hatred and malice against their Brethren. This our Savior setteth down immediately after the Lord's Prayer; For if ye do forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye do not forgive Men their trespasses, no more will your Father forgive you your trespasses. And in another place he saith; When ye shall stand and pray, forgive, if ye have anything against any Man, that your Father also which is in heaven, may forgive you your trespasses: for if you will not forgive, your Father which is in Heaven will not pardon you your trespasses. This the Apostle James assureth, That there shall be condemnation merciless, to him that showeth not mercy, and mercy rejoiceth against condemnation. This we see in the example of that evil Servant that fell from his Masters favor, and was denied forgiveness. For when as being unable to pay, He cried for mercy, desired forbearance and promised payment, his Master had compassion upon him, loosed him, and forgave him the debt. But when that Servant dealt hardly with his Fellow-Servant that ought him an hundred pence, so that he laid hands upon him, took him by the throat, and cast him into Prison, his Lord called back his grant, and required the debt of him, and delivered him to the Tormentours. This may seem very strange at the first, that his Lord should forgive the Debtor, yet and afterward exact the debt of him: to pardon the offense, and to punish the offender. This may seem all one, as if a Magistrate should remit the theft, and execute the Thief. But we shall not greatly marvel at this dealing, if we consider that God giveth pardon upon condition, and that we receive pardon upon condition. True it is, this condition is not always or here in this place expressed, but it is here and always to be understood. Notwithstanding, sometimes the condition is added, as when Christ saith; Condemne not, and ye shall not be condemned: forgive, and ye shall be forgiven. Luke 6. So that he forgiveth us our offenses, conditionally that we forgive the offenses of our Brethren. Thus he forgave the Servant that was not able to pay, to teach him compassion and mercy toward those that were indebted unto him. If we will not forgive, but require of our debtors the utmost farthing, we shall find the Lord as hard, and our selves to make a Law against our selves. Wherefore, to the end that God's example may be followed in well doing, that our own consciences may be assured of forgiveness, and that great danger is incurred through want of forgiveness: we learn, that God requireth it as a special duty of us, to show our selves ready and forward to forgive our Brethren, that have wronged and offended us.

And howsoever this Doctrine be proved by Scriptures, cleared by examples, and confirmed by reasons, yet as it standeth not with the liking of flesh and blood, which is ready to revenge and breath out threatenings; so carnal reason ministereth many objections which are not to be passed over, but to be diligently discussed and dissolved. It shall not therefore be amiss, before we proceed to the uses, to answer such questions as stand in the way, whereat the vnleatned stumble, as at a stone that lieth in the way: which being determined, we will handle the Uses.

First, seeing we are bound to forgive everyone that is indebted unto us, the question may be asked whether, this extend to all debts, and that we are charged to forgive all our Debtors? I answer, debts are of two sorts, either Civil, which cometh by Couenants of buying and bargaining one with another, without which, the life of man cannot consist. Of these mutual Couenants and Contracts between man and man, we must not understand our Savior Christ when he speaketh of Debts and Debtors: but of private hurts and damages that are done unto us, in our bodies, in our goods, or in our good Names. These injuries done to our bodies, which oftentimes are misvsed; to our goods which are diminished, to our good Names which are impaired, are to be remitted. As for other debts due to us, we may require them, so we do it with showing mercy to such as are in necessity, toward whom we ought to have patience in forbearing.

The second is, whether a man may lawfully sue him at the Law that hath offended him? Or how doth suing and forgiving stand together in a Christian? I answer, the Law is free for all men, and the end of it is to redress all disorders. And as a Soldier in a lawful war may kill his Enemy, and yet love him: so may a man forgive an injury, and yet use the remedy of the Law, and thereby seek in a Christian manner, to redress the wrongs that are done unto him. Now, in suing at the Law, we must observe these six rules. First, it must not be for toys and trifles, but in matters of wait and importance, which do nearly concern us, and whereby we are some way damnified. But trifles cannot damnifie us. This reproveth those that are so far carried upon the spleen, as that they are ready to prosecute every action and slight occasion that is offered unto them, if it be but the wagging of a Straw, which bewrayeth an evil heart in them. Secondly, we must take heed of private revenge and inward hatred, which if we conceive, we do not forgive. We must not suffer our suites to cool our love to our Brethren, nor to weaken our Faith in performing our service & worship unto God. For albeit the cause be never so just and lawful, yet if we handle it unlawfully, uncharitably, and vnchristianly, we offend God, and transgress against our Brother. Thirdly, we must beware of giving offense to the Church of God. Some offenses are taken, but not given, as when men are offended for doing our duty to God. We must not omit that which God requireth, because man will be offended. Our care must be, to be ready to give satisfaction to the godly, that our doing be not justly scandalous, observing the rule of the Apostle; Give no offense, neither to the Jew, nor to the Gentile, nor to the church of God, and abstain from all appearance of evil. Fourthly, the end of all Controuersies and Suites in Law, must be to live in concord, and to maintain godly peace. If we have not this end, we aim at a wrong end. The end of all lawful War, is not murder and tumults, but peace and quietness. So the end of all strife, must be to live without strife. For if all injuries were put up and were not repressed, many would grow worse and worse, and overturn the Civil State and government.

Fifthly, another end we may at, must be, that the truth may come to light that is hidden, that the party offending may be chastised, and by chastisement be brought to repentance for his wrongs. For such is the malice of many, that the passing by of one wrong, would but open a wide gap or gate to bring other injuries upon our own heads: and the more we suffer, the more hard measure they would offer. Lastly, the Law must be used, not upon pleasure, but upon necessity, and we must take it up as the last refuge and remedy. We must use it as a Father useth correction, or as a Physician useth desperate Medicines, or as the Surgeon useth searing and cutting, when other will not serve the turn. If a friendly agreement and private arbitration may be had, let it be preferred, and the Magistrate not troubled with our contentions. Thou oughtest not to produce into public Courts of Justice and judgment, that which may well be decided and determined by grave, sober, godly, and discreet men at home, as the small causes which the Rulers might judge, were not to be brought before Moses. Exod. 18, 22. If it cannot be had, so that though we seek peace and ensue it, yet it flieth from us, it is lawful for us to go farther, even to sue our neighbor at the law, and use the benefit of the Magistrate.

The third objection is, how can the Magistrate practice this Doctrine to forgive offenses and offenders, seeing (as the Apostle teacheth.) Rom. 13. He beareth not the Sword in vain? If his duty be to punish, how can he pardon? If he be to execute judgment, how can he forgive them that trespass? I answer, a Magistrate is to be considered two ways, according to two several persons which he doth sustain; to wit, either as he is a Man, or as he is a Magistrate, as he hath a common condition, or a special. As he is a man, or a Christian man (which estate he hath common with his Brethren) he is to bear and forbear, and behave himself as others: but as he is a Magistrate, which estate he hath as properly belonging unto him; he is the Deputy and Vice-gerent of God, he sustaineth his person, he executeth his judgment; and therefore he ought not to have any respect of persons, or wink at the committing of any wickedness.

The fourth Objection, is, how we can be said to forgive our Brethren their trespasses, seeing no man can forgive sins but only God. Hence it is that David saith in the Psalm; Against thee, against thee only have I sinned, and done evil in thy sight. Psal. 51. Likewise the Scribes and Pharisees, when they heard Christ speak to the man sick of the Palsy; Thy sins are forgiven thee, began to reason among themselves, Who is this that speaketh Blasphemies? Who can forgive sins but God only? Luke 5, 20, 21. I answer, in every sin there are two things to be marked and considered; the evil of the action, and the damage that ariseth to man by the evil action: the one God forgiveth; the other man forgiveth. God pardoneth the evil; Man pardoneth the damage or detriment that befalleth his person, goods, or name. So then God forgiveth, and Man forgiveth: God forgiveth the sin, man forgiveth the hurt. For we must observe, that in every trespass are two offenses; one to God; the other to man. To God, when he forgiveth the breach of his law, and imputeth it not to the offender which belongeth properly to him, and no man is able to do. To man, when he remitteth the injury or harm that hath risen to him, in the things that appertain to him. It is not in man's power to forgive the sin, whereby God is offended: and he oftentimes pardoneth the wrong done to him, when God forgiveth not the sin: for God never forgiveth any, but such as are penitent.

Lastly, the question may be asked, whether all offenders against us are to be forgiven, or only such as repent. The Apostle moveth Philemon to pardon his Fugitive and false-fingered Servant upon his repentance. So Christ our Savior speaketh to his Disciples: Take heed to yourselves, if thy Brother trespass against thee, rebuke him: and if he repent, forgive him: And though he sin against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying; It repenteth me, thou shalt forgive him. Whereby it may seem at the first, that either we are only to forgive the penitent, and retain malice against the impenitent, which were want of Charity: or say, that the condition annexed by Christ, is void and idle, which were a voice of blasphemy. I answer, offenses are forgiven two ways, as there are two kind of persons that offend against us. Some acknowledge and yield their offense, others are obstinate and stiff-necked. So, one kind of forgiveness is, when we bear no malice, when we do no wrong, when we seek no revenge. Another kind, is; when we think well of them that have offended us, when we are persuaded that God hath forgiven them, when we are ready to receive them into our favor again. Wherefore we have no liberty granted unto us to deny mercy and forgiveness to the wicked. If a man have done us wrong, and then either denieth it, or diminisheth it, and will not repent of it: True it is, we are commanded to love him, we are forbidden to hate or to hurt him, we are restrained from revenge, we are bridleed from wishing or desiring vengeance to fall from Heaven upon him, we are charged to do him good and not evil, we are willed to procure his salvation, to seek his amendment, and to further his repentance that he may see his sin; but we are not bound nor bidden to have a good opinion and estimation of him; for though we must love him, yet we must think of him as he deserveth. But when a man hath offended us, and trespassed against us, and being reprovved and admonished confesseth his sin, desireth pardon, craveth reconciliation, offereth satisfaction, bewaileth his former transgression, and promiseth amendment of life, it is our duty not only to love him, but to like of him: not only to hate him as an Enemy, but to account him as a Brother: not only to desire vengeance to come upon him, but to accept of his repentance, and to assure his heart that God hath forgiven him, and will not lay his sin unto his charge. So then, if any man do me an open injury, and I laying aside a thirsting after revenge, do not cease to love him, but instead of evil do good, and instead of wrong, do bestow a benefit upon him, though in regard of the wickedness of his heart, the mischief of his hands, the want of repentance, and the nature of his offense, I think hardly and heinously of him (as he is worthy) yet am I truly said and rightly accounted, to forgive him. For when God requireth that we do good to our Enemies, love them that hate us, bless them that hurt us, pray for them that persecute us, and to do good to all them that speak all evil against us: he doth not thereby presently command that we allow in them those things that he condemneth, or praise in them the things that he reproveth: but he only would have our hearts free from hatred, our minds from malice, our tongues from slander, & our hands from revenge. The second manner of forgiveness (which is a free and full forgiveness) is, when beholding lively fruits of their repentance, we esteem them as brethren, we account them as the children of God, we favor thē as fellow-members with us of Christ, & are persuaded that the remembrance of their sins committed against God, and of their injuries offered unto us, are blotted out of God's sight. For true repentance is an high and holy work, greatly accepted of God and his Angels. Of God, because when we repent, he will put all our sins out of his remembrance. Of the Angels, because there is joy in their presence for one Sinner that converteth, more then for ninety and nine just men that need no repentance. The substance of that which hath been said, is this: If an offender have wronged thee, and continue obstinate and settled to wrong thee still, thou shalt forgive him, that is; thou shalt not hurt him, nor malice him, but love him, and seek to do him good: but as yet thou art to think him a willful and wicked man, Because thou art not to speak evil of good, or good of evil; to put darkness for light, and light for darkness; to call bitter sweet, and sweet sower. If he turn from his evil ways, and repent him of his sins, thou shalt forgive, him, that is; think as well of him, as ever thou didst think ill of him, comfort him, raise him up with the sweet promises of the Gospel, and assure him that God hath forgiven him, & therefore he need not doubt of the forgiveness of his Fellow-Servant. And if we will a little search the Scriptures, we shall find examples of both these sorts and kinds of forgiveness recorded unto us. Of the first sort of forgiving evil doers, even while they remain evil doers, we have in David toward Shimei, that cursed him with an horrible Curse, he sware that he should not die, and pardoneth him (albeit Abishai the Son of Zeruiah said; Shall not Shimei die for this, because he cursed the Lord's anointed?) Notwithstanding, he thought of him as of a wicked man, and gave Solomon his Son charge, not to account him innocent. And this is that forgiveness which Moses speaketh off. Levite. 19. Thou shalt not hate thy Brother on thine heart, but thou shalt plainly rebuke thy Neighbor, & suffer him not to sin. Of the second sort of forgiveness, which is toward the penitent, we have an example in Paul and the Church of Corinth, toward the incestuous person which had committed Fornication, And such Fornication as is not named without detestation among the Gentiles, taking unto him his Fathers Wife. For when he being rebuked of many, and put out from among them, sorrowed for his sin with a godly sorrow, which caused repentance not to be repented off, he willeth them to receive him, and entertain him among them as a faithful Brother, and to think well of him as they did before, And to minister comfort unto him, lest he should be swallowed up with over-much heaviness, and lest Satan should circumvent us, for we are not ignorant of his enterprises. Hence it is that he saith; ye ought to forgive him, and to comfort him, and to confirm your love toward him, which is as much as if he should desire them to take him again for a Brother.

The Objections being answered, which stood before us as a Cloud that dimmed and darkened our sight: let us come now to the Uses of the Doctrine, and see what we may conclude from hence. First, seeing former offenses are upon our repentance to be forgiven, we learn that we ought all to be of a plakeable Nature, easy to be appeased, and ready to be entreated; we must be inclinable to mercy, and pass by offenses that might provoke us to anger. It is a fruit of true love, described by the Apostle; It suffereth long, it is bountiful: Love enuyeth not: Love doth not boast it self: it is not puffed up: it doth no uncomely thing: it seeketh not her own things: it is not provoked to anger: it thinketh not evil: it rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth: it suffereth all things: it believeth all things: it hopeth all things: it endureth all things. There is no man but gladly desireth to have God (that is able) to be ready and willing to forgive him his sins: and therefore we ought to be like affectioned toward our Brethren. It is a great comfort to the weakness of our Faith, which needeth all props and pillars to sustain and uphold it. For though the forgiveness of our Brethren be no cause of our forgiveness, it is a sign and testimony, whereby we are infallible confirmed, that as surely as we remit others, we shall be remitted. Nothing maketh us more resemble the Lord, then to be merciful, he is the God of patience, He is slow to anger, he is full of compassion, and of great kindness, he will not always chide, neither keep his anger forever, he knoweth whereof we are made, and he remembereth we are but Dust. On the other side, nothing in the World maketh us so like unto Satan, and to be transformed into his Image, as malice and envy. Hence it is that he is called a Tempter, a Slanderer, a false accuser, the author of all hatred and dissention. This appeareth in the example of our first Parents, so soon as they were placed of God in the Garden, immediately Satan set upon them, and sought to dispossess them of that happy estate. If then we give our selves to hatred and malice, and never think our selves well, but when we are disgorging the rank or and envy of our boiling stomachs, we show our selves not to be the Sons of God, who is Love it self; but to be the Children of the Devil, who is maliciousness it self. For, Hethat committeth sin is of the Devil; for the Devil sinneth from the beginning: for this purpose was made manifest that Son of God, that he might loose the Works of the Devil: Whosoever is borne of GOD sinneth not, for his Seed remaineth in him, neither can he sin, because he is borne of GOD.

This reproveth those that keep old revenge and settled malice as a festered sore, rusting and rankling in their hearts, to the satisfying of their own lusts, to the poisoning of their own Souls, and to the dishonoring of Almighty God. This we see to have been in Cain, who hating his Brother, and suffering the Sun to go down upon his wrath, in the end his wrath conceived, brought forth Murder, and Murder when it was finished, wrought out his destruction. The like appeareth in Absalom toward his Brother Ammon. For when Ammon had defiled his Sister Tamar, respecting neither the wickedness of the Fact, nor the shame of his Sister, nor the reproach of his person, nor the offense of his Brother, nor the blaspheming of the enemies, nor the scandal of the Church, nor the offense of his Father, nor the defiling of his Fathers house: Absalom conceived hatred in his heart, and executed vengeance upon him to the full, two years after: he dissembled his purpose till occasion served, and afterward his malice brought forth a lamentable effect, when he goared his Sword in blood. It is esteemed among carnal men, a token of valor to revenge, but indeed it is no better then slavish weakness, and want of true fortitude. So then, they are possessed with the Spirit of the Devil, that are content to shake hands and promise forgiveness, that speak deceitfully everyone with his neighbor, flattering with their lips, and gloze with a double heart; yet keep in mind the remembrance of old injuries waiting and watching for opportunity of time, place, and means, to execute the bloody designs of their beastly hearts. Would we be thus dealt with all at the hands of God? Would we be thus forgiven? Would we have half a forgiveness, and no more of him? Woe, and woe again were it to us, if we were thus forgiven. Let us deal as faithfully and fully, as sincerelie and unfeignedly with them, as we desire to have the eternal God to deal with us: For with what judgment we judge, we shall be judged: and with what measure we mete, it shall be measured to us again. Let us bannish from us, all lame, and half, & halting remission, which keepeth a part and piece vnforgiuen: if we would have the Lord forgive all, and cast them into the bottom of the Sea forever, let us be like minded toward our Brethren. Otherwise, our own consciences shall convince and condemn us, so often as we say the Lord's Prayer, seeing we pray most fearfully against our selves: and as we reserve behind in a corner of our hearts a piece of our malice, so we desire the Lord also to reserve a part of his wrath for us, and of his punishment against us.

If any think himself wise enough to shift off this danger, and say; so long as I cannot resolve with myself to be in Love and Charity with my Neighbor, and to forgive him that hath offended me, so long I will not use the Lord's Prayer, but some other good and godly Prayers.

For we are not tied to this or that form, we have many excellent Prayers beside, we may use any of them. See, Fool, Fool, how subtle and crafty thou art to deceive thyself. Blind people play with the Lord's Prayer, as the Fly doth with the Candle, or as the child doth with the Knife: whereby it falleth out, that the one is burned, the other is wounded. Take heed, God is not mocked, we cannot dallie with him. It is not this or that form that God regardeth, it is our being in that estate, not reconciled to our Brother, that bringeth upon us sudden destruction. For God is Love, And he that dwelleth in Love, dwelleth in God, and God in him: he that loveth not his Brother, abideth in death: Whosoever hateth his Brother is a Man-slayer, and ye know, that no May-slayer hath eternal life abiding in him. Whereby we see, that to such as are malicious, there is no forgiveness, as we have noted before.

Secondly, seeing such as offend us, must upon their sound repentance be forgiven; we are taught hereby, not to reproach and upbraid men what they have been, when they are renewed by amendment of life, but consider their present condition what they are. For when God hath put out of his remembrance their sins, we must not set them upon records: when GOD hath discharged them of them, we must not lay them to their charge: when God hath cured and covered them, we must not uncover them, and make them bleed afresh. Let us remember what we our selves have been, before we were in the State of grace, even as evil as others, and had our delight in all sin. The Apostle saith. Rom. 7, 18. I know that in me, that is, in my Flesh, dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me, but I find no means to perform that which is good. Likewise, he forbiddeth and restraineth the Gentiles from insulting and triumphing over the Jews, that were through infidelity for a season cut off: Thou wilt say; The Braunches are broken off, that I might be grafted in: Well, through unbelief they are broken off, and thou standest by Faith: boast not thyself against the Braunches, be not high minded, but fear. It is a great reproach to us, to reproach such as have fallen, and are risen again by true repentance: to upbraid such as have sinned, & have forsaken their sins. It is a greater blemish to those that check them after they have turned from them, then to those that committed them. For they have washed away by their tears the filthiness of them, and blotted out the deformity that did cleave unto them.

True it is, so long as we continue in sin, and follow the lusts of our own hearts, we must be content to be reprov'd and shamed for them, that so we may be brought to see them, and be sorry for them. Thus it is noted, that Christ began to upbraid the Cities, Wherein most of his great works were done, because they repented not. So the Apostle feared, Least when he came again to the Corinthians, his God should abase him among them, so that he should bewail many of them which had sinned already, and yet repented not of the uncleanness, and Fornication, and wantonness which they have committed. They then that repent nor, are to be disgraced: but such as have repented, are to be loved and cherished. It skilleth not what they have been, for they are accepted according to the grace which they have received, which serveth as a singular comfort unto them. They that labor to disgrace those whom they should embrace, do imitate the example and practice of the Devil, who tempteth those that he seeth to have renounced his service, and departed from his Kingdom, and telleth them what they have done, how loose they have been in their lives, and into what horrible sins they have fallen, that thereby he might bring them to despair, and to let go their strong confidence that they have in the promises of the Gospel. So it is with sundry of the Servants and Children of the Devil, they taunt and revile the faithful, for former faults which now they hate and abhor. But as they answer Satan, so they may all his Instruments, that they should consider rather what they are, then what they have been; and behold their present condition, not that which is past. Let us be like the good Angels, who do rejoice at the conversion of Sinners, but never cast them in the teeth with their offenses that have stumbled, and are recovered.

Lastly, let us cut off all occasions of dissention, & quench the fire that is begun to be kindled. A small spark, if it be not quenched, will break out into a great fire: a little smoke nourished, will turn into a flame. So when causes of contention and division do arise, we must endeavor to stay them and appease them. It is easily stopped in the beginning, which afterward is hardly, or not at all resisted. This wisdom we see in Abraham, (when strife arose between his Heard-men, and the Heard-men of Lot) he said unto him; Let there be no strife (I pray thee) between me and thee, neither between thy Heard-men and my Heard-men: for we are Brethren. They were not natural Brethren according to the flesh, as descending of one Father, but of a near kindred according to the flesh, and a nearer according to the Spirit: he was Lots Vnckle and elder, and in that respect his better, he was richer & wealthier, he had more Servants also to take his part, to join together, and to over-master him, if he had listed: yet he standeth not upon one, or upon all these: he looked not when Lot should stoop and bow unto him, but as in years, wealth, and authority, so in godliness, meekness, and moderation he went before him. Let us all consider this, & be provoked by the example of Christ, to be meek and lowly, That we may find rest unto our souls. The Lord Jesus hath taught us to call upon one Father, shall we then disdain our Brethren? The Apostle teacheth, that we are one body: if the members of the body should disagree and fall out; would not the ruin and destruction of the whole body follow? Again, we are all called to the same hope of eternal life; there is one mark, at the which we all shoot; there is one end, whereunto we bend; being Children of the same Father, and Heirs of the same Grace, and partakers of the same inheritance. O that this Meditation were settled and grounded in our hearts to love with brotherly kindness, and to hate all malice as a Serpent.

Let us learn, that we ought no more to be divided asunder, then the kingdom of Heaven can be divided: and that whosoever renteth himself from his Brethren, banisheth himself from the place of glory, which we all look for. Christ Jesus cannot be divided: for as his Coat was without seam, so his body must be without separtion. There are not diverse Faiths, diverse Baptismes, diverse Suppers, diverse God's: but one Lord Jesus, one Baptism, one Faith, one Lord's Supper, one God and Father of all. All these things, Abraham (no doubt) did consider and believe, and therefore said; We are Brethren. He doth not stand upon his reputation, and say; Shall I stoop to him? Shall I creep and crouch to him? Am not I better then he? Am not I wealthier then he? Am not I elder then he? He layeth all these aside, and resolveth thus; Are not we Brethren? And shall we strive? What a shame would this be to us? What a dishonor to God? What an evil example to these Nations that live among us? What a stumbling block of offense shall we lay before them to cause them to blaspheme God, and to speak evil of us, of our Religion, and of our holy profession? Let not us therefore tarry till others come and offer conditions of peace, but let us seek peace and ensue it.

Shall we stand aloof and hang back from agreement with them, because we take our selves to be abused, wronged, slandered, and injured? Shall God command us to forgive, and will we answer presumptuously, we will not forgive? Shall the Lord say unto us; Thou shalt not hate thy Brother in thine heart: and will we reply audaciously, we will hate him? Or if we do not scorn God to his face, what will we, what can we allege, or what shall we bring for our defense, that Abraham might not have brought as well as we? Will we say we are more excellent, and therefore reason it is, that they should bow the knee unto us? Will we say we are the better men? So was Abraham. Are we richer and wealthier? So was Abraham. Are we elder in years, and so look that the younger should yield? So was Abraham. Have we many Friends to join with us, to see we shall have no wrong, and to take our partes? So had Abraham. Are we mightier in force and power? So was Abraham, he went every way beyond Lot. Now then, if we be the Children of Abraham, we must do the works of Abraham. Whatsoever privileges we have to advance us above our Brethren, under color whereof we shroud the corruption of our Nature, and the malice of our hearts, let us lay all aside and cast them into the Dust, let us renounce age and honor; let us cast from us birth and years; let us deny wealth and worship, to the end we may be little and lowly in our eyes. Abraham got more true honor by yielding, then we can do by our proud looks, lofty stomachs, and corrupt minds. He that hath most godliness will relent soonest.

Let us strive who shall go before another in mercy and forgiveness, and put far away all bitterness of Spirit, and put on all humbleness of mind. But (alas) where is this meekness and longsuffering, while we rail and rage one against another? If the least occasion of contention and iarre be offered, how ready are we to embrace it, to nourish it, to prosecute it with all extremity? When we are a little moved, are these the words of Brethren, I will not take this abuse at his hands, I will never put up this injury, I will not be made such a Noddy, I will sue him at the Law, I will not leave him worth a Groat, I will make Dice of his Bones, I will tread upon his Grave: and shall I yield unto him, I will never do it.

O my Brethren, is this to follow the stepes of faithful Abraham, or to be like him, who was so wise, so meek, so great a lover of peace and concord? If we be ashamed to tread in his paths, take heed least the God of Abraham be ashamed of us, both in this life, and in his Kingdom forever. We boast our selves to be the Children of Abraham, we account our selves to be true Christians, and yet we will neither follow the example of Abraham, nor obey the commandment of Christ. The Lord remitteth the debtes that we are not able to pay, and will we require the utmost farthing? He forgiveth ten thousand Talents, and will not we forbear an hundred pence? It is the Master and Lord of all that is so merciful, and shall the Servant be so cruel and hard-hearted to his Fellow-Servant? Let us take heed least our malice and unmercifulness unto others, do cry out for vengeance against us, and shut up the mercy and compassion of God toward us, rendering seven fold into our bosoms, and barring us from any access to the Throne of his Grace. For if we forgive not men their trespasses, our prayers shall be abominable, our religious exercises shall be turned into sin, and our offenses shall not be forgiven.

To conclude, let us consider these three pointes. First, that no Man can offend us, as we daily offend God, in thought, word, and deed. Secondly, that we may fall, and perhaps have fallen already into the like offense that we blame and reprove in others. Thirdly, we would be greatly grieved, not to be respected and relieved in the bitterness of our hearts, therefore we should regard the sorrow and supplication of others, craving mercy and commiseration at our hands. If we suffer our Brethren to call to us, and we be deaf, stopping our cares against them, we greatly deceive our selves, if we think to find the Lord other-wise minded toward us.

He calleth Onesimus his Bowels or Entrals, being nothing of Kin to him in the Flesh, in respect of his earnest and fervent love that he beareth to him in Christ, being a true professor of the Faith. He knew well the lewd disposition of Seruaunts, for the most part in those days, as the Masters were cruel to them, so they were unfaithful to their Masters. It was found commonly true by common experience, which churlish and covetous Nabal spake falsely of David. 1. Sam. 25, 10. Who is David? And who is the Son of Ishai? There be many Servant now-a-days, that break away every Man from his Master. The like we see in the Servants of Shimei. 1. King. 2, 39. Who fled away from him to Gath. It was therefore a rare thing; and consequently more wonderful to find a man of this quality so well qualified: and a man of so bad note, to be so notable, which made the Apostle so earnest in speaking for him, and in commendinh of him. For nothing could have been said more effectual to pacify the wrath, and to mollify the heart of Philemon, in as much as he inferreth, that if he would not be appeased at his request, he had raged by this means on the very bowels of Paul. Behold therefore in this place, the conjunction of two heavenly virtues in the Apostle; to wit, Humility, and Love; that it is hard to say which was the greater, so that he was not ashamed to receive as into his Bosom and Bowels, a base Bond-slave, and besides, a Thief and a Runna-gate, to the end he might protect and defend him from the displeasure of his Master. And doubtless, if the conversion and turning of man unto God, were as highly prized and worthily esteemed of us as it ought to be, we would lovingly tender, and charitably embrace and such as we see truly, without hypocrisy converted unto God.

We learn from hence, that the love which Christians ought to bear to all the Saints, especially to those whom they have been means to convert, ought to be entire, dear, hearty, earnest, most faithful, and most fervent. It is our duty to love all men, more especially the Saints, but most especially such as have been gained to the Faith by us. The Lord himself testifieth his tender compassion toward his Children, to provoke them to follow his example. The Prophets declare; That he which toucheth them, toucheth the apple of his eye. So Zachariah blessed the God of Israel, Who through his tender mercy gave life to them that sate in darkness and in the shadow of death, and guided their feet into the way of peace. This appeareth notably in Christ Jesus, Who was made like unto his Brethren, that he might be merciful, he will not break the bruised Reede, nor quench the smoking Flaxe: These things (saith he) have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, this is my Commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you: greater love then this hath no man, when any man bestoweth his life for his friends. This affection we find in many places in the Apostle; God is my record, how I long after you all, from the very heart-root in Jesus Christ: we had consolation in you, in all our affliction & necessity, through your Faith, for now are we alive, if ye stand fast in the Lord. The Evangelist Luke describing the Church of God gathered together after the ascension of Christ, saith; All that believed were in one place, and had all things common, and they sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as everyone had need. This is a precept given in the Law, and no duty more often urged and touched in the Gospel. Moses saith, Thou shalt not avenge, nor be mindful of wrong against the Children of thy people, but shall love thy Neighbor as thyself, I am the Lord. The Apostle Paul among many precepts that he giveth, this is one of the chief and principal, Let love be without dissimulation, abhor that which is evil, and clean unto that which is good: be affectioned to love one another with brotherly love. All these testimonies of God the Father, of Christ Jesus our Lord, of the Apostle, of other Christians, and of the whole Church, do sufficiently teach us, that howsoever all the Saints of God are to be loved, yet those especially that have been converted to us.

The reasons that may be rendered to uphold (as firm pillars to strengthen) this Doctrine, are many and infallible. For first, there is great labor employed, long time spent, many means used, and continual care bestowed to convert a Soul to God. It is no idle work, it is not brought to pass without much ado. A Woman having had an hard labor with her child, doth love it the more, and will use speech accordingly, saying; This was a very dear Child unto me, I must needs love it; yea, her love is so hearty and entire, that she forgetteth the pains and sorrow that she hath sustained. Benjamin among all the Sons of Jacob, was most tenderly beloved, in whose birth the Mother died, the fruit was saved, but the Tree withered and fell down, he cost Jacob therefore dear, even his best beloved wife, and indeed his only lawful wife, whom Laban promised, & for whom he served, so that he called him Benjamin, the son of his right hand. If then, that which is dearly bought, be deeply beloved, it is no marvel if it work effectually in spiritual things, where the greatest pains and labor is shown. We see this in the Galatians, who had put the Apostle to much trouble and exceeding torment in their recovery to Christ, are by him called his Little Children of whom he travailed in birth again, until Christ were formed in them, and he was in much fear and perplexity, lest he had bestowed on them labor in vain. This appeareth in his behavior toward the Israelites, to whom pertaineth the adoption, the glory, and the Couenants, I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my Conscience bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost, that I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in mine heart, for I would wish myself to be separated from Christ, for my Brethren that are my Kinsmen according to the flesh. The like affection is bewrayed in Moses toward God's people, who had carried them in his bosom as a Nurse doth the sucking Child, when God was offended with them, and threatened to consume them, he cried unto the Lord, Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them God's of Golde, therefore now if thou pardon their sin, thy mercy shall appear: but if thou wilt not, I pray thee rase me out of thy Book which thou hast written. Thus he shown the bowels of his love toward that people, with whom he had taken so great pains, for whom he had so often prayed, and by whom he had been so oftentimes provoked.

Secondly, by testifying of our love, and showing forth the fruits thereof, we gather great assurance that we are of the company of the faithful, of the Communion of Saints, and of the society of them that belong to the truth, when we love vnfaignedly those that are of the truth. The Apostle John teacheth that our love to the brethren, is a fruit of true faith, Heereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall before him assure our hearts. And again he saith, We know we are translated from death unto life, because we love the Brethren; he that loveth not his Brother, abideth in death. Whereby he showeth, that we are assured that we belong to God, are his children by the fruits of love, which are certain tokens of our election to eternal life.

Thirdly, love is the livery of Christ, and as it were the badge and cognizance whereby we are known to be his Disciples, and to be taught and directed by his spirit. This agreeth with the Doctrine of Christ, A new Commandment give I unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you; that ye also love another; by this shall all men know, that ye are my Disciples, if ye have love one to another. Christ Jesus did instruct his Disciples, especially in love, and did as it were graft it and engrave it in their hearts, and thereby made Charity a note of Christianity, seeing that where love doth not rest, there Christ doth not dwell. If then, we would make it manifest, that we have been brought up in the School of Christ, we must love one another.

Lastly, seeing it is the sum of the Law, and a token and testimony that we make Conscience to walk in the ways and commandments of God. Heerunto cometh the laying of the Apostle, Owe nothing to any man, but to love one another: for he that loveth another, hath fulfilled the Law. For this; Thou shalt not commit Adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet, and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. This is a special praise, and singular commendation of love, that it is a short sum and brief abridgement of the whole Law, and of every Commandment contained in the Law. This truth is taught in sundry other places, and repeated again and again, All the Law is fulfilled in one word, which is this, Thou shalt love thy Neighbor as thyself. And Col. 3. Above all things put on love, which is the bond of perfectness. Likewise 1 Tim. 1, 5. The end of a commandment, is Love out of a pure heart, and of a good Conscience, and of Faith unfeigned. Love therefore comprehendeth all duties: for Charity is the Law abridged, as the Law is Charity enlarged. Love is as it were a general Virtue, like unto the soul which is said to be whole, in the whole & in every part, or as the blood which is dispersed through the whole body, so is love enlarged and lengthened through all and every virtue. Seeing then, such as are converted by us, are the fruit of our labor, and that Love to the brethren is the seal of our salvation, the badge of our profession, and an Epitome or a breuiary of the whole Law, it followeth that it ought to be hearty, earnest, and fervent, toward all the faithful, especially such as have gone astray, and been brought by us into the right way.

This then being a virtue so necessary, that everyone which belongeth to the Lord Jesus Christ, must yield their obedience, even to love the Brethren, and show himself a true Christian, by showing Charity to his neighbor: let us consider the nature and properties of this Love, that we may have the right and true use of this Doctrine. For here is occasion offered unto us, to search into the knowledge of this Virtue, which is almost banished from among men, or weeded and worn out of the world, or carried from hence into the wilderness from the sons of men, or departed up from heaven from whence it came, and to have quite and clean abandoned the gross earth, which is unworthy to entertain so precious a Jewel any longer. First therefore let us know what Brotherly love is. It is a work of God's spirit, whereby a man is moved to affect his Brother for God's sake, and to show forth the fruit of this affection. I call it a work of God's spirit, because it is not Naturally in us, it is not borne with us. Naturally, everyone is a lover of himself, and unnaturally is an hater of his neighbor, so that true love is the print of God's finger, and a mark set upon us by his spirit. Hence it is, that the Apostle setting down the fruits of the spirit, reckoneth up Love in the first place, as one of the principal, The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, &c. So then, we want this grace, until God work it in us. We need not seek far for self-love, for Love of the world, and the things that are in the world, for the Love of pleasures & carnal vanities, we have these near unto us, even within us; but we can never love the godly for God's sake, until it be given us from above, of whom only we must ask it, and from whence only we can receive it. Again, to be well affected toward our Brother, is to wish and seek his good, to rejoice at his prosperity, and to be grieved at his misery. True love is not idle, and it maketh us that we shall not be unfruitful and unprofitable unto others. We must be ready to help them bear their burden, and show the bowels of compassion toward them. That love which doeth not manifest it self to the relief and help of his neighbor, is no true Love, but beareth only the shadow of it.

Moreover, it is added, that we must do it for God's cause, because God is principally and first to be loved with all our power, and for himself. Our neighbor is to be loved in God, and for God, because he is God's creature, and beareth his Image. For Love extended to man is a fruit of the Love of God. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, This Commandment have we of him, that he that loveth God, should Love his Brother also. God cannot be loved, and our Brother hated, because there is one and the same Law-maker, that commandeth both to love him and our neighbor also. Lastly, we must consider, who is our Brother, and what is our neighbor that we must Love, which are the parties to whom it is to be shown. By [Brother] we are not only to understand the son of our Father, that is our own blood & kindred; and by [Neighbor] we must take heed we do not deceive our selves, restraining it to such as are joined to us in friendship, or near unto us in dwelling, or such as bear unto us good will, but such as are of the same Nature with us, even any of mankind. He is to be accounted as our neighbor that is a man as we are, and doth bear the Image of God as we do, of what condition so ever he be, whether he dwell near unto us, or far from us; whether he be our own Country-man, or a Stranger; whether he be worthy or unworthy; whether he be a friend or an enemy; whether he be known or unknown; because we are to consider him in God, not in himself, as we noted before. This our Savior teacheth in the parable of the Samaritan, answering the Scribes question, Luke 10. that we must show the duties of love to him that wanteth our help and relief, though he were our enemy & one that did hate us (as the Samaritans were unto the Jews) whether he be godly or ungodly, we must extend the duties of love toward them. Thus did David deal toward Saul his enemy, that sought his life to take it away: he spared him when he might have slain him, and he cut off only a piece of his coat, when he might as easily have cut off his head; which kindness of his heaped up coals of fire upon his head, and so wrought with him, that he called him Son, and prayed God to recompense unto him that goodness that he had shown, and ceased from persecuting of him at that time. The like example we have in Elisha, who would not suffer the Horsemen that were sent to take him, to be smitten with the sword, but commanded Bread and water to be set before them; so they did eat and drink, they refreshed themselves, and returned to their Master. Let us follow these worthy presidents, and account all men our neighbors; let us account our selves bound in duty to help them, and do unto them, as we would have them deal toward us. Thus we see what love is, we have heard from whence it cometh, wherein it consisteth, and to whom it is to be shown. It cometh from God, and is the work of his spirit; it consisteth in a fellow-feeling of their good and grief, of their prosperity and adversity, so that we should rejoice with them, and mourn with them, according to the condition wherein they are; it is to be shown to all such as are of the same nature, and are covered with the same flesh; that is, to all mankind.

Secondly, we are to consider the property of this Love, how it is to be performed. For, as we have seen the parties who are to be loved, even all; so we must mark the manner how they are to be loved; that is, fervently, and earnestly. This is taught by the Apostle John, My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue only, but in deed and in truth. This also he pointed out a little before, This is the Message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should Love one another, not as Cain who was that wicked one, and slew his Brother. And the Apostle Paul saith, Let Love be without dissimulation. Likewise in the Epistle to the Galatians, It is a good thing to Love earnestly always in a good thing, and not only when I am present with you. Our Love therefore must not only be true, but fervent, and that for these causes. We have the perfect example of Christ, Who gave his life for his Sheep, and suffered the shameful death of the cross to redeem them. Again, if occasion require it, and our calling will bear it, we ought so to Love them, as we should give our lives for the brethren; which duty we can never fulfill, except our Love be fervent. Lastly, there are many means to quench Love, as wrongs, injuries, unkindness, unthankfulness, hatred, and emulation; all these corrupt affections, are as water to the fire. Seeing then, it is so quickly, and by so many means cooled and quenched, let us kindle it, and labor to continue it, that it may always burn, and not decay. This fervent Love is a rare Jewel, which seemeth almost gone out of the world.

Thirdly, we must know the form and manner how we are to Love our brethren, to wit, even as our selves. By this rule our practice must be squared, and by this rule shall our love be judged. As we wish our own good heartily, sincerely, and vnfaignedly, so ought we to desire the good of our neighbor. It is the Law of Nature that teacheth us to do to others, as we would have others do to us. It is the Law of God that commandeth us to Love our neighbor as our selves. Our Love must be without hypocrisy and dissimulation from the very heart. This hearty Love is as it were the life and soul of the duty due to our brethren. Let us therefore love them with a sincere affection, and in unfeigned simplicity. This appeareth plainly in such as prayed for their persecutors and utter enemies, as Stephen when they stoned him, kneeled down and cried out with a loud voice, Lord lay not this sin to their charge. And our Savior Christ when they crucified him, said, Father forgive them, for they know not what they do. If we can practice and perform the like, wish their good as our own, pray for them as for our selves, and desire their forgiveness, as we would be forgiven of God, then is this true love to our true comfort found in us.

Secondly, seeing this is the Love that must be found in us towards the Saints, it serveth to meet with many enormities, and to reprove many sins that reign in the world, and are as the fore-runners of the full and final ruin thereof. Our love to others, is a cold love; frozen, without heat; dead, without life; barren, without fruit; such as our Savior speaketh of in the gospel, Because iniquity shall be increased, the Love of many shall be cold. But our Love is hot toward our selves, we have abundance of self-love, which ouerfloweth in us, and overcometh true love. This is the only love that remaineth in the world in these days, which is the corruption, nay the bane and poison of true love. This is it which the Apostle prophesied of long ago, This know also, that in the last days shall come perrillous times, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, without natural affection, no lovers at all of them which are good. Where we see, that Paul prophesying of the last days, days of great peril, and much impiety, doth put self-love in the first place, as it were in the forefront, and make it the fountain from whence the train floweth, that followeth afterward. For he which loveth himself, will not regard what he doth to others, and arrogateth all things to himself; he setteth up himself as the only man of account, he magnifyeth himself, he contemneth all others. Hence it is, that he is covetous, proud, treacherous, stubborn, heady, high minded, and heapeth or hoordeth up sin upon sin, till he fill up the measure. The world is pestered with these Monopolies, which are all for themselves, nothing for the common good of Church or Country. We have a common Proverb rife in their mouths, but more rife and ripe in the practice of the people, Everyone for himself, and God for us all. The first branch showeth what is in use, but the second part must be changed; for where everyone is for himself, there the Devil is for all. Wherefore the former is the Devils Proverb, and is no more to be used among God's people. The Christian Proverb must be, Everyone for his Brother, and God for us all: because Love seeketh not her own, but the good of others.

Secondly, as we see self-love checked and controuled, so they are condemned that place brotherly love in fair words, and gentle speeches (and yet many fail in these, and cannot afford them, as if every word of their mouth were worth Gold) whereas in such is no sound Religion, but a vizard only of holiness. True love must be shown in the fruits, in sustaining, helping, pitying, & relieving those that crave our relief, and are in necessity. The Apostle teacheth them that are destitute of true faith, that shroud themselves under the profession of the Gospel, and yet are not able to make demonstration thereof by their works. A good Tree bringeth forth good fruit. If the Tree bring forth either no fruit, or evil fruit, it is an evil tree. If we have only good words, and either no works at all, or evil works, it is a plain argument, we are not yet in the number of true believers, neither are endued with that faith which worketh by love. Hence it is, that the Apostle James saith, If a Brother or a Sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say to them, Depart in peace, warm yourselves, and fill your bellies, notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body, what helpeth it? Even so the Faith, if it have no works, is dead in it self. If then, we content our selves to give the Alms of fair words, which are but empty shows, it showeth that we are barren trees full of leaves, but void of fruit, and it shall minister as little comfort to our hearts, as it doth relief to their bodies. We are taught to visit Christ in his members, and apply our selves to do them good, that in the last judgment we may find that mercy and compassion at the hands of Christ, which we have shown to the members of his body. To give kind words, is not that fervent love which here is commended unto us.

Lastly, it reproveth such as give themselves to fraud and deceit, to cruelty and oppression, to subtlety and circumventing their brethren, to lying & using false Waights and Measures. For if this should be the rule of our love, that it ought to be fervent, we should examine our own hearts whether we would have another man to deceive and oppress us, by forgery & falsehood. The Apostle reproveth all such wrongful and injurious dealing, and as a Prophet of God denounceth severely certain judgment upon such wickedness, Let no man oppress or defraud his Brother in any matter: for the Lord is an avenger of all such things, as we also have told you before time, and testified. It is common and wicked Objection. May I not do with mine own as I list, who shall hinder me to use mine own as I think good? This is the common argument of Harlots, Drunkards, and other beasts, which ought not to be in the mouths of Christians. Let them use it that are out of Christ, let us be ashamed of such profaneness and ignorance. For indeed, thou hast nothing that is thine own; thou art but a Steward, and the time shall come, when thou must give an account of thy Stewardship, because thou mayst be no longer Steward.

Lastly, seeing all are to be loved, but especially such as have been converted by us; it teacheth us to further their salvation, that have been brought into the way by us, and never to forsake them, until we have brought them to their journeys end. For what a vain thing were it, to find a man wandering out of his way, and going astray from the right path, and when he hath brought him back, to leave him without farther direction? Or what an unnatural part were it for a Mother to bring forth her Child into the world, and then to take no more care of it, neither to wash it in water, nor to wrap it in swathing Clowts, nor to have any compassion upon it, but to cast it out into the open field. The love of Moses his Mother was greater toward him, who being borne, was hidden three months from the cruelty of the Egyptians, and being put among the Bul-rushes in the water, was watched by his Sister, to see how God would provide for his deliverance; even so, it standeth us upon, having been made blessed means and Instruments of the good of others, to be assistants unto them, and to further their salvation, as God shall enable us.

It is the part of a good Work-man, not to leave his work imperfect. A good Physician will not leave his patient, when he hath done but half his cure. An Husbandman will not give over when he hath half sown, but will labor unto the end. He that doth but half build an house, is but half a Carpenter. He that entereth into Christianity, and beginneth well, is but half a Christian, the greatest part of the work remaineth behind. Let us all follow the example of God, when he began the great work of the Creation of the world, he left not his workmanship vnfashioned and vnfinished, but in six days fully accomplished it to the glory of his name. And as he did in the generation of his creatures, so he doth in their regeneration, Those whom he loveth, he loveth unto the end. This is it which the Apostle teacheth, I am persuaded of this same thing, that he that hath begun this good work in you, will perform it unto the day of Jesus Christ. As then God never leaveth him whom once he loveth, so should we have a care of those that we have moved to embrace the truth, and watch over them for their good. The Minister must preach sound Doctrine in love, to the souls of men that he hath undertaken the charge of, for whom he is to give an account in the great day. We see the Apostles having taught the Gentiles, & planted a Church among them, did not cast off all care of them, nor think themselves to have discharged a sufficient duty toward them, but knowing the malice of Satan, the deceit of false Teachers, and the frailty of man's nature, They returned back to confirm them in the faith, and to settle them in that truth which they had received of them. When Peter professed great love to Christ, he willed him to manifest it by feeding of his Sheep and Lambes: the greater his diligence was in feeding the flock of Christ, over which he was made a principal Watchman, the greater duty he performed to Christ himself. When Agrippa the King had heard the defense that Paul made for himself, and the confirmation of his calling, by the heavenly vision that appeared unto him, he said, Almost thou persuadest me to become a Christian. But did Paul him so? Or doth he think it enough to make him almost a Christian? No, half a Christian is no Christian; and almost godly, is not godly. Therefore his desire was to take him by the hand, or rather by the heart, if he could have sounded into the depth and bottom of it, and to have led him from Almost, to Altogether. Hence it is, that when he seeth him coming toward Christ, he casteth out his Net to catch him, if it were possible; saying unto him, I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me today, were both almost and altogether such as I am, except these bonds. Thus he ceaseth not continually to call upon the Churches, to increase more and more, and to proceed from grace to grace. Again, it belongeth to every Master of the Family, to water that which himself or the Minister hath planted, and to be always weeding out the bitter roots that spring up in his Garden. If we have brought any of his family to godliness, and to embrace the Gospel, let him make much of them, let his countenance be toward them, let him favor them above others, and admonish them to frequent the exercises of Religion, remembering that it is as great a Virtue to keep, as to get; to preserve, as to find; to hold fast, as to take.

Moreover, as it is a general duty belonging to all of us, to exhort one another, while it is called today, and stir up one another to good things; so if by our example of life, or lighting of them a Candle to see their ways, they shall come to the acknowledgement of the truth, we should love them dearly, and provoke them to go farther forward in good works, assuring them that such as continue to the end, shall be saved. This serveth severely to reprove those, who having been zealous in the faith, and witnessed a good confession before many witnesses, and been a means to open the eyes of others, to behold the glorious light of the Gospel, that before wandered in darkness, are now gone back themselves, or seem to stand at a stay, and have left their first love. To whom I can say no more, but wish them to turn back to consider what they have been, and to remember what they are, knowing that it had been better for them, never to have known the way of righteousness, then after they have acknowledged it, to turn away from the holy Commandment. Let all such therefore call to mind the exhortation of Christ, to the Angel of the Church of Ephesus, Remember from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works, or else I will come against thee shortly, and will remove thy Candlestick out of his place; except thou amend. It is a great shame to show the way to another, and to go out of it himseife; to teach another, and not to teach himself; to stir up another to go forward, and himself to go backward; to kindle zeal in others, and himself to grow cold & lukewarm, and therefore to give occasion to others to think, that their former profession, was but an heat of youth, seeing they decline in their old age. On the other side, such as have been won to the Gospel by others, ought entirely and fervently to love such as have converted them, to show themselves every way thankful unto them. The Apostle beseecheth the Thessalonians, To acknowledge them that labor among them, and are over them in the Lord, and admonish them, that they have them in singular love for their works sake. Who is it, if he were blind and had his sight restored unto him, would not speak well of him by whom it was restored, and acknowledge himself bound unto him all the days of his life? We are all naturally borne blind, & have not one eye to see the saving truth of godliness: If then, we attain the sight of our selves, and to know our natural blindness, how ought we to praise God's mercy toward us, and to love those by whom we have the eyes of our minds enlightened? He is a very unkind and unthankful person, who, having lost his way in a great and terrible wilderness, where he knoweth not which way to turn or return, not whether to go to get out, meeteth with a certain guide that is able and ready to conduct him, and to enstruct him in his way, will never so much as open his mouth to give him thanks. Or having been cured and recovered from a dangerous and desperate disease, that brought him to the doors of death, will never acknowledge the benefit and good turn that he hath received. So is it with those that have wandered a long time in the vanities of this world, and in the pleasures of the flesh, as in a wilderness; it is the greatest ingratitude not to acknowledge those his best and surest friends, that have shown them the strait gate, and the narrow way that leadeth unto life. And if our souls have been saved from death, to which we made hast, and ran with greediness; if there be any comfort of love, or fellowship of the spirit, or any compassion and mercy in us, we ought to show it to those that have been as spiritual and special Physicians unto us, to deliver us from death, and to restore us to life.

[Whom I have sent again.]

Hitherto we have spoken of the first reason that concerneth the person of Onesimus, who was unprofitable, but now is become very profitable. The second sort of reasons are touching Paul himself, and touch either the present action of his sending of him back, or the common friendship that a long time had been between Paul and Philemon. The first of these reasons is in this 12. verse, which may be thus concluded:

- If I have sent Onesimus back unto thee, then it is thy duty to receive him:
- But I have sent him back again,
- Therefore it is thy duty to receive him.

If there had not been great cause that Philemon should receive him, the Apostle would never have sent him, especially seeing he found his abode with him and his service done unto him very profitable. Now we are to mark in this place, that Paul requireth not Philemon to make his servant free, and to discharge him of his bondage; and albeit Paul had great need to have used the ministration of Onesimus in the extremity of his imprisonment, yet being another man's servant, and not his own; belonging to his own Master, and not to him; and knowing that he ought not to covet another man's servant, he would not detain him, but sent him back to Philemon to whom he did appertain, and from whom he departed. This is consonant to the truth and purity of the Gospel, this the Master might well require, and this duty the servant was bound to perform, even to return and repair again from whence he came. Heereby we learn, that the Gospel of Christ doth not dissolve or abolish, but confirm & establish civil ordinances, distinct degrees, and politick constitutions among men, as between Princes and Subjects, Parents and Children, Husband and Wife, Master and Servants, Superiors and Inferiors.

This appeareth in many places of the word, where the several and distinct duties of several and distinct callings, are mentioned and required by the Apostle. Hereunto cometh that which he setteth down, Rom. 13. Let every soul be subject to the higher powers, for there is no power but of God, and the powers that be, are ordained of God. Likewise writing to the Ephesians, he chargeth Wives to submit themselves unto their husbands, as unto the Lord: he willeth Husbands to love their wives, even as Christ loved the Church, and gave himself for it: he requireth of Children to obey their Parents in the Lord, for this is right: he commandeth Fathers not to provoke their Children to wrath, lest they be discouraged, but to bring them up in instruction and information of the Lord: he prescribeth unto Servants, to be obedient unto them that are their Masters, according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of their hearts, as unto Christ; and he setteth down the duties of Masters, that they should deal justly with their servants, putting away threatening, knowing that even their Master also is in Heaven, with whom there is no respect of persons. In like manner, when he writeth to Timothy, he saith, Let as many Servants as are under the yoke, count their Masters worthy of all honor, that the name of God and his Doctrine be not evil spoken of. And Titus 2. Let Servants be subiect to their Masters, and please them in all things, not answering again; neither pickers, but that they show all good faithfulness, that they may adorn the Doctrine of God our Savior in all things: for that grace of God that bringeth salvation unto all men hath appeared.

The like exhortations, and establishing of civil ordinances, we see in Peter, Submit yourselves unto all manner ordinance of man, for the Lord's sake; whether it be unto the King, as unto the Superior; or unto Governors, as unto them that are sent of him, for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well. So likewise he chargeth the Wives to be Subject to their Husbands, that even they which obey not the word, may without the word he won by the conversation of the wives, while they behold their pure conversation which is with fear. And the Husbands he teacheth, That they should dwell with them, as men of knowledge, giving honor unto the woman, as unto the weaker vessel, even as they which are heirs together of the grace of life, that their prayers be not interrupted. Christ our Savior willeth us to Give unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's; and unto God, the things that are God's. The Apostle hath heaped together many such precepts unto the same purpose, 1 Cor. 7. Let the Husband give unto the wife due benevolence; and likewise the wife unto the Husband: defraud not one another, except it be with consent for a time: unto the married I command; not I, but the Lord, let not the wife depart from her Husband, and let not the Husbände put away his wife: If any Brother, have a wife that believeth not, if she be content to dwell with him, let him not forsake her; and the woman that hath an Husbande which believeth not, if he be content to dwell with her, let her not forsake him. Let every man abide in the same Uocation, wherein he was called: Brethren, let every man, wherein he was called, therein abide with GOD. All these rules and commandments, serve to teach us this truth, that howsoever the gospel doth make us all as brethren, and join us together in one body, yet it doth not abrogat and abolish the difference between man and man, and bring in an Anarchy and confusion, but settleth a distinction between Prince and subject, between Master and servant, between high and low.

This Doctrine of the gospel will better appear, if we mark the reasons. For first, God is not the author of confusion and disorder, but of peace and order. Look upon all the creatures of God in heaven & earth, on high and beneath, and we shall be constrained to cry out with the prophet, O Lord, how manifold are thy works? In wisdom hast thou made them all, the earth is full of thy riches. Al tumult and sedition, all disorder and insurrection cometh from the devil, he is the author thereof. For he first brought in sin, and sin brought in disorder. Hence it is, that the apostle saith, God is not the author of confusion, but of peace as we see in all the churches of the Saints. He commandeth that all things be done honestly, and in order; he commendeth the goodly order that is observed among the faithful, and therefore he teacheth not any disorders, nor alloweth them where they are.

Secondly, Christ came not into the world to abolish the Law, but to establish it, as he testifieth, Mat. 5. Think not that I am come to destroy the Law or the Prophets; I am not come to destroy them, but to fulfill them: for truly, I say unto you, till heaven and earth perish, one jot, or one tittle of the Law shall not escape, till all things be fulfilled. Now we know that the moral Law commandeth the honor of Father and Mother; that is, of all superiors, who bear a part of his image. If then, the end of his coming were to ratify the Law; then it followeth, that the Law making a difference between superiors and inferiors, remaineth, and shall remain in his full strength, power, and virtue.

Thirdly, the Gospel commandeth hearty obedience, as unto God, and therefore doth not dissolve or disannul true obedience; nay, it is a praise and ornament to the Gospel, when all sortes walk in the duties of their several Callings, and specially such as are the obedience of others. Servants are the lowest condition in the Church, and yet the Apostle teacheth, that by vprighnesse of their life, and obedience to their Master for Conscience sake, they may adorn the Doctrine of God our Savior in all things; and on the other side, by the evil life, stubbornness, and disobedience of servants, that profess the knowledge of the Gospel, the name of God and his Doctrine is blasphemed and evil spoken of. Likewise, speaking of believing Wives, that have unbelieving Husbands, he putteth them in mind of subjection, to the end that by their holy conversion, they may win their husbands to embrace true Religion. To this purpose the Apostle Paul teacheth servants to be obedient to them that are their Masters, according to the flesh, and chargeth them that whatsoever they do, they do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not to men. Seeing therefore, that God is the author of order, not of confusion; seeing Christ came not to abolish, but to establish the Law; and lastly, seeing the Gospel teacheth subjection, and doth not release or acquit any of their duty; it followeth, that the gospel doth not bring in parity and equality among all (the Mother of all mischief)

but discerneth and distinguisheth of the Callings of men; it doth not give liberty to pervert all order, it maketh not Servants to be Masters, and Masters to be servants, but directeth everyone to keep his place, and to abide in his vocation.

Seeing this is the honor & commendation of the gospel, let us see what Uses arise from the knowledge of this point. First of all, we conclude from hence necessarily, that it hath always been a lying devise, and devilish slander to Christian religion, to be the author and fauorer of carnal liberty, and to Christian professors, to be enemies to states and commonwealths, to magistrats, laws, & civil ordinances. This hath always been the accusation of slāderous tongues, to brand the Gospel, as the breeder and bringer in of all uproars and conspiracies: & yet there is no Doctrine under the Heaven, that less deserveth to be defamed. For the Gospel was a friend to Princes, when Princes were enemies to the Gospel; it teacheth to be subject unto them, to pray to God for them, & to obey all their godly constitutions, and therefore it is the Father of lies, and enemy of all truth, that hath sought to disgrace & discredit the holy truth of God, and such as in truth do embrace it. He seeth and perceiveth, that if the Gospel stand, his kingdom must fall; if the Gospel flourish, his kingdom must decay. Hence it is, that the church & people of God, have in all ages and times of the world, been accused of rebellions, treasons, seditions, insurrections & many other grievous impieties Heerof the scripture & experience afford plentiful examples. In the book of Ezra, the enemies accuse the guiltles Jews to be a rebellious people, & that they have of old been always given to sedition. Ahab burdeneth Elias, that it was he & his fathers house that trobled Israel. Haman suggesteth unto the king against the Jews, that their laws were diverse from all people, & that they did not observe the kings laws, and therefore it was not for the kings profit to suffer them. The Apostles are accused to be authors of sedition, troublers of cities, raisers of tumults, causers of rebellion, breakers of laws, and teachers of ordinances not lawful to receive, they said of them, These men that are Jews trouble our City, & they preach ordinances which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe seeing we are Romans. Where we see, they cover their covetousness with a shadow & pretence of standing against innovation, but they discover the hollowness & hypocrisy of their harts, when they join troubling of the state and preaching of the gospel together. Whereby it appeareth, that their troubling of the city was nothing else, but because they preached the word, which the devil & his instruments could not bear and abide. Paul is accused by Tertullus, to be a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and that he taught all men everywhere against the law of Moses. And no marvel, for thus they dealt with the son of God, when he taught the truth without mixture of error, and without respect of person, he was accounted & accused not only to be a Sorcerer, a Samaritan, a Drunkard, a glutton, a deceiver, a devil, but an enemy to Caesar, and a troubler of the public peace. Now all these things being considered, let us remember what the Lord Jesus saith to us, The servant is not greater then his master, if they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you. The heathē after Christ's time, cried out against the Christians, that they were the authors and causes of all public plagues & calamities that fell upon kingdoms & countries. If Nile flowed not over the fields, if the heaven stayed, if the earth quaked, if famine increased, if the pestilence continued by and by the poor Christians, as the sheep of Christ, were cast unto the lions. They charged them to make privy conspiracies, to devise secret counsels against the commonwealth, to murder children, to feed themselves with man's flesh, and to practice all Iniquity; they were so blinded, that they could not perceive that their Idolatries brought God's judgments. Thus we see how the church hath lien open to all false surmises and suggestions of sedition. But what can be immagined more unjust or vettrue? If there be any peace in this world in any lande, it is for the Gospels sake, and it cometh through the bountifulness of God for his people's sake that call upon him. Nevertheless as the Gentiles dealt with the Jews and Christians from time to time; so do the wicked in these days with the godly, they lay to their charge that they keep no laws, that they disobey Princes, that they are seditious and tumultuous, and enemies to the State. If we see or hear the Saints of God thus handled, and evilly entreated, we must know that this is an old devise of the devil practiced against the Prophets, against Christ against the Apostles, and against all true Christians, even from the beginning. And let this serve to comfort us, when we find such slanderous imputations and accusations laid to our charge, considering that thus they have reviled and railed upon the Servants of GOD, that have been before us in all times, and that we have Christ Jesus, the witness of our innocence, who if not in this life, yet in the life to come, will reveal the things that are hidden in darkness, and bring to light the things that are covered. In the mean season we must remember that they are pronounced blessed, that are reviled and persecuted for righteousness sake: and we must labor to convince them, not so much by words, as by deeds, answering the falsehood of their slanders, by the uprightness of our lives, which shall be able to speak for us, even when we ohld our peace.

Secondly, we see that Christian poillicy is not against Common-wealth policy, so that there is no State under heaven, whether entertaining the regiment of one, or of many, but may give entertainment to the Gospel. For seeing it meddleth not with matters of civil government, whether it be a free state, or depending of others, it shall receive no impeachment or detriment in temporal affairs. Our Savior teacheth, That his kingdom is not of this world, but spiritual for the soul & Conscience. When one came unto Christ, and entreated him to bid his Brother divide the with him, he said unto him, Man, who made me a Judge, or a diuider over you. When tribute was required by the Officers and Receiuers, he sent Peter to pay it, declaring by his willing obedience, that civil policy is not taken away by the preaching of the Gospel.

This serveth to overthrow two sorts of Heretics, both of them (enemies to the Crown and Dignity of Princes) the Anabaptists, who take away Magistracy, and despise government, and the Papists, who follow apace after them; and if they make hast (as they begin) they will soon overtake them. The Anabaptists, take away all dominion and power, deny Magistracy to be lawful, take away the propriety of things, and will have all things common. These are such as the Apostle Jude prophesied of in his Epistle, which despise government, and speak evil of them that are in authority. Their error, or rather heresy, they ground upon diverse places of Scripture, which we will briefly answer.

First, they object, that Christ saith, Resist not evil, which is required of all Christians: What use then is there of the Magistrate, who beareth the sword and resisteth evil? I answer, Christ in these words exhorteth us to Christian patience, and reproveth private revenge, he doth not abrogate the Office of the Magistrate, as appeareth by the words of Christ, if they be aright considered. For he doth not say, if any man shall strike thy neighbor on the right cheek, command him to turn the left also; neither doth he say if any will sue his neighbor at the law, & take away his coat, charge and require him to deliver his cloak also; but whosoever shall give thee a blow on the right cheek, turn thou to him the left also; & if a man shall take away thy coat, let go thy cloke also. Wherefore it appeareth, that this concerneth private persons, not public Magistrates. Again, To resist evil, is not simply and in it self evil; but to do evil, is evil indeed. For if it were simply evil in it self; no householder among Christians should withstand and resist the evils of his house, but suffer them to do what they list, and lay the bridle in their own neck: No Schoolemaister shall bridle the folly and licentiousness of youth, which the rod of correction doth drive away; no Father shall be allowed to chastise and punnish his children, but must let them alone to run into all evil. If these things be absurd & unworthy the person and doctrine of Christ; it followeth, that it is not simply & absolutely forbidden, to resist evil. For what is the Magistrate else in the commonwealth, then as an householder among his family; as a schoolmaister among his scholars; as a father among his children; nay if there be need anywhere, of a Christian Magistrate, it is among faithful Christians; that is, amongst those that do not revenge themselves, but are patient before their oppressors, as the Sheep that is dumb before his shearers. The Children of this world are like brute beasts, who as they make no conscience of wrong, so they make no conscience of revenge.

Secondly, they object that we are charged to stand fast in the liberty which Christ hath purchased for us, and whereby he hath set us free, Gal. 5, I answer, this is to be understood of spiritual liberty, not civil; the liberty of Conscience, not of obedience; of Christian liberty, not Anabaptistical. For the liberty of Christ, is a freedom from the power of Satan, of sin, of death, of hell, and of condemnation; it is not a freedom from the power of Princes, and an exempting of men from civil subjection.

The third objection is, that Kings sons are free from tribute, and therefore from subjection. Math. 17, 26. I answer, though all Christians be made the sons of God, yet Christ Jesus speaketh that of himself, who according to his deity was the natural son of God, and according to his humanity & birth into the world, was of the lineage of David, and heir to the crown and kingdom, and consequently was freed from payment of tribute. But this serveth nothing to free men from Magistrates, and the duties we owe unto them.

Fourthly, the Apostle saith, Ye are bought with a price, be ye not the Servants of men, 1 Cor. 7, 23. But Magistracy maketh us the servants of men. I answer, this toucheth nothing the calling of Magistrates, but teacheth that in matters of Religion we should not depend upon the aurtherity of men, or hang upon their sleeve, as the Corinthians did, who are reprov'd for addicting themselves, some to one teacher, some to another. This is to make men Lord's of our faith. To conclude, we must know that the Magistrate is the Minister of God, and hath received from God, not an absolute power to do what he list, but a limited power, to take vengeance of the wicked, to countenance the godly, that so we may live a peaceable and quier life in all godliness and honesty. He is the keeper of both the Tables of the Law, he executeth Justice and judgment without respect of persons, he abolisheth Idolatry, and maintaineth public tranquility; without whom, one of us could not live by another, but men would be as Wolves and wild beasts one to another; so that the Anabaptists that would abolish this ordinance of God. are enemies to religion, to godliness, to equity, to honesty, to peace and quietness.

Secondly, the Popes, Jesuits, and Papists, that hang upon the Pope, as upon their God, doth cut short the authority of Princes, thar they may establish an absolute sovereignty and supremacy of Antichrist, the man of sin, who tyrannizeth over men's Consciences, and advanceth himself above all Kings, and Emperors, and Magistrates of the earth. Hence it is, that the Priests and Jesuits; bring in an immunity and exemption of the Clergy, from the authority of the civil Magistrate, and secular powers, which is a kind of rebellion, & this is claimed as a privilege belonging unto them by the whole Roman Clergy. Again, the Jesuits are medlers in State-matters, in establishing and deposing of Princes, in troubling of Common-wealths, in plotting and practicing of Treasons, in murthuring of Princes, and in setting all things in an uproar.

Thirdly, the Bope usurpeth a power to free subjects from their allegiance and their oath of obedience, as appeareth by the Popes two Breeues that he sent over, forbidding his popish Catholics to swear homage and fidelity to the King.

Fourthly, their teachers of popish Divinity, publish and maintain many Treasonable positions, tending to the dishonor of Princes, and to the overthrow of Kingdoms. It is well known to all the World what Bellarmino hath delivered in the Controuersies of Religion, that he hath published to be read and viewed of all men; how basely he hath spoken of Princes, and how boldly he hath diminished their authority, that he might establish the Popes Temporal Soueraignty. He teacheth out of his Doctors Chair, or rather from his Orators Deske, that Princes are rather Servants, then Lord's, subject not only to Popes and Cardinals, but to Bishops and Priests: that Princes have their authority, not immediately from God, nor from the Law of God, but by the Law of Nations: that Princes may be deposed and dethroned by their Subjects, and other placed in their stead; that the Pope hath Temporal power indirectly: that obedience is due to the Pope for conscience sake, but to Princes for policy sake. That the cause why Christians in former time deposed not Nero the Tyrant, and Julian the Apostate, and Valens the Arian, and such like, was, because they wanted Temporal power, and if they had not wanted strength, they would not have wanted will to do it: that if Princes go about to turn away the people from their base-Roman, and Bastard-Catholic Faith, they may and ought to be deprived of their dominions. Hereunto we might add many like principles of their devilish Divinity taught in their Schools, and brought into the State, and practiced by their Disciples, out of Sanders, who was himself an Arch-rebel, and perrished in his rebellion that he had raised, being not only a beholder of it, but an Actor in it.

Whereby we see, if he had no other matter, what we are to esteem of the Roman Religion; namely, that it is a counterfeit Religion, to be abhorred of all true Christians, being the Nursery of Treasons, and the Mother of all abominations; which setteth up the Pope, as the great Idol and Arch-rebel of the World, so that he usurpeth a Supremacy over all Civil Gouernments in the Earth: whereas the true Christian Religion is as contrary to this, as light to darkness, which teacheth to be subject to the higher powers for Conscience sake; which teacheth to fear God, and to honor the King: which teacheth all degrees, as well Ecclesiastical as Civil, to stoop down to this ordinance of God. Our Weapons are Prayers, and tears; our means that we use, are supplications to God and to Man. But these Seducers put down the honor of Kings and Princes, and teach them that depend upon them, to take up Fire and Sword, and all other seditious practices which the God of this World teacheth the Children of rebellion, so often as occasion of advantage, and hope to prevail serveth them.

Lastly, seeing the Gospel doth establish, not abolish; strengthen, not weaken; confirm, not disannul the ordinances that God hath settled among Men; we learn, that whosoever is a good Christian, and hath rightly embraced the Gospel, is also a good observer of Household Government, and of Common-wealth Government, which stand with the word of God, and the maintenance of peace and human society. I say then, that a faithful and sound Christian, is a good Subject, a good Father, a good Master, a good Wife, a good Child, a good Servant, a good Common-wealths-man. The Church and Common-wealth are as loving Sisters, living, dwelling, growing, flourishing, prospering, decaying, and falling together. We must all consider our common and special calling; and know, that Christian duties and Personal duties, must not be divided the one from the other, but be coupled and joined in one man. It is not sufficient for a man in common conversation to be a Christian, but he must show himself to be so in his special calling. A Magistrate must not only be a Christian, but he must be a Christian Magistrate. A Father and Master must not only be Christians, but they must be Christian Fathers, and Christian Masters. It is not enough for us to be Christians abroad, we must not content our selves to be Christians in the sight of others, but we must manifest our selves to be so, in the administration and government of our particular Families, and in the discharge of our several duties, toward Wife, Children, and Servants. This reproveth many that live among us, who bear themselves abroad as men, forward in Religion, eatnest in their profession, and such as would be accounted to go before many others: yet take a view of them what they are privately in their own houses, and what duties they perform toward their Families, they have lost the reputation at home that they had abroad, and show themselves to be more careful to seem religious, and to be thought great Christians, then to be good Christians indeed. The like we may say of all Inferiors. It is not enough for the Wife, the Child, the Servant, the Subject, to show themselves faithful and religious openly in the Congregation, and other places of resort, but they must show themselves right Christians in their reverence, subjection, and obedience toward those Superiors that are set over them.

Thus we see, that as everyone hath two callings; one general, which is the calling of Christianity, common to every member of the the Church; the other, personal or particular, which is the discharge of special duties, in regard of that distinction made between man and man: so both these callings must be joined together in our life, as the body and soul are in one man. If one of them be wanting, the other is missing. If they do not meet together in one person, there is only a show of true Christianity, but the substance is absent. A good Christian therefore cannot be an evil Subject, an evil Servant. If they have Christ Jesus formed in them, it will make them obey for Conscience sake. Nay, hereby we see, that only such as fear God are good Subjects, others cannot be. For the wicked and ungodly do provoke God to anger; against the King, against the Kingdom, and to procure the destruction of them both by their sins. This is it which Solomon teacheth in the Proverbs; For the transgression of the Land there are many Princes thereof: but by a man of understanding and knowledge, a Realm likewise endureth long. Thus the Lord took away good King Josiah from the Children of Israel, because the people were not worthy of him, and God was angry against Judah because of their iniquities. This is the chief cause of the alterations of Kingdoms, and of the often mutation and changing of Kings and Princes. For how can it be, that such as are Rebels against God, should be Frinds to Princes?

True it is, it hath been the ready way which the Devil hath used (as we shown before) to bring such as are godly and fear God, into hatred and detestation, by his Instruments; to bear the World in hand that they are Enemies to Princes. Christ Jesus, though he obeyed Caesar, and taught obedience to Caesar, and paid poll-money, yet he was accused of Treason, and charged to be an enemy to Caesar, and condemned for it. So was Paul slandered, as a disturber of the State and Common-wealth. But if we will rightly consider this point, we shall find, that these men that have nothing in their mouths but obedience, and harp upon no string so much as disobedience, (as if they themselves were made of obedience) may justly be censured and convinced to break three Laws for their one, whom they falsely and fraudulently accuse. So that we may invert the accusation, & turn it as a wheel upon their own heads, and charge them justly with that, wherewith they unjustly ouercharge others. When the zealous Prophet Elijah was blamed and reprov'd to be a troubler of Israel, he answered the crime objected unto him, and rejected it back, that it rebounded upon him that gave the charge; I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy Fathers house, in that ye have forsaken the Commandments of the Lord, and followed Baalim. Such then as break the Commandments of God, and despise his laws, cannot for conscience sake to be obedient to Princes: and they that have been found unfaithful to God, can never be judged faithful to men. It is well known and seen how they transgress the Kings laws, in their apparel, in their meat, in their words, in slandering, in fighting, in quarrelling, in carding, in bowling, in dicing, in drunkenness, in sitting at Ale-houses, where the Magistrate and Minister are the common Table-talk, and an hundred such like inormities. As for the godly, though they be branded with breach of obedience, and duty to Princes, they will be found the best, the greatest, the chiefest; nay, the only true Friends that Princes have. For first, they pray unto God earnestly and heartily for their Prince, and the whole Land fareth the better for their prayers: for God heareth the Prayers of such only as hear his voice, and love his Laws, and fear his Name, when they call and cry unto him for their Prince. But he heareth not, he granteth not, he regardeth not the prayers of wicked men: for he that turneth away his ear from hearing the Law, even his prayers shall be abhominable.

Hence it is that Solomon saith; The Sacrifice of the wicked is abomination to the Lord: but the prayer of the righteous is acceptable unto him: he is far off from the wicked, but he heareth the Prayer of the righteous: the Sacrifice of the wicked is an ahhominaion, how much more when he bringeth it with a wicked mind. So then, there can be no more utter enemies to Princes, then such as are wicked against God, according to the saying of the Wiseman in another place; Take the dross from the Silver, and there shall proceed a Vessel for the finer: take away the wicked from the King, and his Throne shall be established in righteousness. All men therefore may see how absurd and preposterous a thing it is, that such as are no better then rebellious against God, should be the Friends of the Prince, and that such as are godly should be accounted enemies.

Again, the godly are ready to subject themselves according to God's ordinance to Magistrates, their obedience is in the Lord. When lawful things are commanded and required at their hands, they address themselves to do the things commanded: if unlawful, they submit themselves in all things, they resist not in anything, but suffer according to the pleasure of the Magistrate. If then they be subject with all fear, not only to such as are good and courteous, but also to the froward, knowing that this is thank-worthy, when a man for conscience sake toward God endureth grief, suffering wrongfully: How is it, that wicked men are not ashamed to account them as Traitors and Rebels? If it should fall out, that godly Princes command something which is contrary unto God's word, we must obey God rather than men, but we must submit our selves in well-doing unto Princes. It is a gross and unreasonable thing to imagine, that a man in obeying God doth disobey his Prince. This appeareth in the example of the three children, mentioned in the Prophecy of Daniel, when the King commanded them to fall down before the golden Image that he had set up, they answered; We are not careful to answer thee in this matter: Behold, our God whom we serve, is able to deliver us from the hot fiery Furnace, and he will deliver us out of thy hand, ô King: but if not, be it known to thee, ô King, that we will not serve thy God's, nor worship the golden Image that thou hast set up. The like we see in Daniel himself, when he had been thrown into the den of the Lions, he saith to the King; My GOD hath sent his Angel, and hath shut the Lions mouths that they have not hurt me: for my Justice was found out before him, and unto thee, ô King, I have done no hurt. He had indeed broken the Kings edict, but he accounted it no disobedience, seeing therein he obeyed God. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith; Fear GOD, honor the King: where he showeth the order that is to be observed, the fear of God challengeth the first place, and goeth before the honor of the King. Let us therefore suffer the reproaches that are cast out against us, and learn always to obey in things lawful, but to submit our selves even in things unlawful, by enduring the punishment that shall be inflicted upon us. Thus the Servants of God, and faithful Martyrs from time to time have done: they never rebelled, they never took arms, they never made resistance, but always prayed for Princes, when Princes were enemies unto them. And concerning the ungodly, whatsoever they pretend, they cannot be the Princes Friends, because (as we have shown) they care not to keep their Laws, and if they had a care of Princes Laws, they would also have a regard of God's Laws.

13Whom I would have retained with me, that in thy stead he might have ministered vnto me in the bonds of the Gospel.

14But without thy mind would I do nothing, that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly.

Hitherto we have spoken of the reason that Paul urgeth to Philemon to receive his Servant, drawn from the action of his sending of him back: Now followeth the preventing of Objections, taken either from Paul his retaining of him, Verse 13. and 14. or from Onesimus his departing from his Master, Verse 15. and 16. The first objection is concerning the keeping and retaining of Onesimus, the objection is wanting, and may be thus supplied. For Philemon might have said; I hear many words, how profitable he is to me, how dear to thee. I know no such profit in him, I can see no benefit that I am like to receive by him: of this I am well assured, I have sustained great loss by him. If then he be so necessary and profitable, and if he be as dear unto thee, as the Son that cometh out of the Bowels of the father, why didst thou not retain him still with thee? To this the Apostle maketh a double answer; first he granteth, and then he reuoketh that which he had granted. For he confesseth, that his desire was to have detained him: which he maketh plain by a reason drawn from the end, that he might have continued [To minister unto him in the bonds of the Gospel.] In the next verse he joineth a correcting of that which he had granted; to wit, that he would do nothing in this matter without the assent and consent of Philemon his Master: which revocation he amplyfieth by an Argument from the end, That thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, which also is declared by the contrary, [but willingly.] In these words, howsoever they be naturally the preventing of an objection, is included also a certain reason. For the Apostle in this Epistle useth more show of Art, and force of persuading, and power of reasoning, and skill of creeping into the heart of Philemon, then he useth ordinarily in other places: and therefore in removing objections he argueth, and in arguing he remooueth Objections. This appeareth evidently in this place. For he reasoneth and strengtheneth his request by this Argument:

- Whom I desire for the good parts that I see in him to retain, that in thy place he might serve me in the bonds, or, cause of the Gospel: him thou oughtest to receive lovingly, and willingly.
- But Onesimus for whom I entreat is such a one;
- Therefore thou oughtest to receive him lovingly and willingly.

This is to be considered of us, touching the order of the words: Now let us see what is to be known concerning the meaning of them. When he saith [Whom I would have retained] he showeth again what great account he maketh of Onesimus, being as it were the only man whom he would have made choice off (if it had been in his liberty) to have comforted him, and ministered unto him in the time of his affliction and imprisonment. Again, when he saith; [For thee] or in thy stead, he inferreth, that Philemon himself did owe unto him that duty, if he should require it of him, and urge it from him. He mentioneth, The bonds of the Gospel, meaning thereby, the afflictions which the Gospel had brought him, wherein the Genetive case doth note the cause as we saw before, verse 1. and 9. As if he should say, the cause why I am prisoner and put in bands, is the preaching of the Gospel. In the 14. verse he saith; Without thy mind I would do nothing, where, by the general put for the special, he meaneth without thy counsel and consent I would not do this thing; that is, retain Onesimus with me, I would do nothing touching the keeping of him from thee, to whom as thy Servant he doth properly belong.

Lastly, he addeth, Least it should be of necessity; that is, least I should extort and wring it from thee against thy will, and so seem to compel thee hereunto, whereas thou shouldst do it cheerfully and willingly. This is the Method and meaning of this division, according to which order and Interpretation, the words are thus much in effect. If thou ask a reason why I kept not Onesimus with me, seeing I make him so profitable, and worthy to be loved and liked, so comfortable, trusty, and serviceable: I answer, I could have been content with all my heart to have done so, he is my Son, and I his Father: but withal, he is thy Servant, and not mine; and thou art his Master, and not I; and therefore I ought not, without thy leave, knowledge, and consent to keep him, for the Gospel maintaineth, and not dissolveth political order and household government, which both are the ordinance of God. Besides, a benefit and good turn should come, with a cheerful heart and a willing mind, and ought not to be gotten by constraint and compulsion, and therefore I would know thy will, before I kept him to myself.

Before we come to the particular handling of the Doctrines that arise from hence, some things briefly are to be noted, which I will briefly observe, without any long and large application. First of all, the Apostle intimateth his desire, to have retained Onesimus with him, and that he was loath to suffer him to depart from him: which declareth that the presence of those that are dear unto us in Christ, is welcome, pleasant, comfortable, & much set by, and we greatly desire to keep them continually with us. For as love is the knot of conjunction that bindeth us together, though we be absent and far severed one from another: so it craveth and requireth the bodily presence of those whom we entirely love, which howsoever we cannot obtain in this life, for as much as our earthly affairs will not suffer it, yet we shall be sure to enjoy it perpetually, and without end in the life to come, when we shall have the greatest joy and comfort one in another that can be wished or desired; such as the eye hath not seen, nor the ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive.

Secondly, note with me the end why he desired to retain Onesimus with him, that the Servant might do service to him in the Masters stead. The end then, is, the Ministry and attendance which Paul might of duty require of Philemon himself. If then the Master be bound to do his service, and wait upon the Apostle, much more the Servant! Whereby we may note and mark, how great right and jurisdiction he that hath gotten and gained a man to Christ, hath, over him whom he hath gained, so that he may challenge not only one of his Servants, but himself to Minister unto him, and to help him in temporal and transitory things. For he that hath received spiritual blessings, cannot without great unthankfulness deny corporal benefits, so that it cannot be expressed how well he hath deserved of that person, whom he hath won by the word to God, And delivered him by his Ministry from the power of darkness, and translated into the Kingdom of his dear Son.

Thirdly, we may observe, in the Apostles correcting of his former grant, that as he is commended that doth his duty that is required of him, freely and willingly, so he is worthy to be praised and commended, that doth not go about to wring and wrest a benefit against a man's will, though it be due debt and a bounden duty, but laboreth by all means, that it may be voluntary, and not upon necessity: for hereby it cometh to pass oftentimes, that he not only getteth a benefit, but winneth his heart and good will that giveth it: and many times it falleth out, that the mind of the giver is more to be respected then the gift it self, as we see in the poor Widow mentioned in the Gospel; who casting into the treasury two mites, is said to have given of her penury, more then all the rich men that bestomed of their superfluity. Thus much of the general observations. Now let us come to the particular Doctrines.

[I would have retained him with me, that for thee he might have ministered unto me in the bonds of the Gospel.]

The Apostle in these words, doth claim both Philemon and Onesimus to owe unto him, being in bonds, their service and comfortable administration. Indeed he senderh his Servant back to him: yet he seemeth closely and secretly to insinuate, that he would take it thankfully at his hands, and receive it as a gift most welcome unto him, if Philemon would return him to him again: and that he should deserve more praise, if of his own accord and liberality he would have sent back his Servant now restored unto him, of whose help and Ministry he had so great need. The Servants of Christ that suffer for his Name, are to be succoured by what duties soever we can. For seeing the banishing of our persons, the whippings of our bodies, the spoiling of our goods, the impairing of our good Name, and many other reproaches and afflictions do accompany the preaching and profession of the Gospel, whosoever shrinketh back from suffering them, and refuseth to be partaker of them when God calleth him to bear witness unto the truth, he renounceth the Gospel, forsaketh his Brethren, and separateth himself from Christ. The defense of the Gospel is common to all, and every man must be an helper to the truth. Therefore the man that suffereth persecution for God's cause and the Gospels, is not to be accounted as a private person, but as one that dischargeth a public duty of the whole Church, and therefore the care of him, generally lieth upon the shoulders of all those that profess the faith. From hence we learn, that help, succor, and service, is a due debt from all that truly are religious, to them that suffer for the Gospel and for righteousness sake. We see how Paul requireth it of Philemon and Onesimus, that they should in his bonds Minister unto him, and help him in his distress. The virtue here required, is that fruit of love, by which a man becometh a Servant to everyone for their good, within the compass of his calling. So then, every Christian is bound to serve the common good of the Church, and of them that have need therein, by his gifts, by his goods, by his wisdom, by his authority, and by what other means soever God hath enabled him. This is commanded by the Apostle. Gal. 6. While we have time, let us do good unto all men, but specially to thē that are of the household of faith. So the same Apostle setteth out love by his effect, Love seeketh not her own things but the good of others, it suffereth all things, it endureth all things. The Church of the Hebrews is commended for the notable fruits of their love shown unto the Saints, that thereby they might be encouraged to go forward, and to hold out unto the end, For God is not unrighteous, that he should forget your work and labor of love, which yeshewed toward his Name, in that ye have ministered unto the Saints, and yet Minister. This we read to have been the practice of the Primitive Church in time of extreme misery, and the hard weapon of necessity pressing sore upon them; Great grace was upon them all, neither was there any among them that lacked, for as many as were Possessors of Lands or Houses, sold them, and brought the price of the things that were sold, and laid it down at the Apostles feet, and it was distributed unto every Man according as he had need. The examples of the godly are worthy to be considered, who have shined in the world by this virtue, as by a light in dark places. Obadiah ministered to the Prophets in the time of Famine, and in the days of persecution; He did not only hide them from the rage of the enemy, but supplied their necessity. Nehemiah employed himself for the good of Jerusalem, by his authority, power, wealth, and credit that he had with the King. This was in Paul, as he testifieth of himself, Though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself Servant unto all Men, that I may win the moe: So that he was ready to offer up himself upon the Alter of their Faith. Likewise he requireth of the Widdowes employed in the Church-service, to attend upon the sick, that they should be of this good report, Asto have lodged Strangers, to have washed the Saints feet, to have Ministred to them that are in necessity. So the Church of Thyatira is commended by Christ for the performance of this duty; I know thy works, and thy love, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works, and that they are moe at the last then at the first. This is so general a duty; that the Apostle Paul expresseth it among the common fruits of Faith. Rom. 12. Be affectioned to love one another with brotherly love, in giving honor go one before another; Not slothful to do service, fervent in Spirit, serving the Lord. No man is exempted from this duty be he never so high, is is no disparagement, but a great advancement, even of the honor and glory of Princes, as the Prophet teacheth; Kings shall be thy nursing Fathers, and Queens shall be thy Nurses, they shall worship thee with their faces toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet; That is, they shall reverence and serve Christ and his Church, and they shall account it no dishonor unto them to do any good to the Saints. All these Testimonies serve as so many proofs to witness this truth, that we must account this our condition, that we are all as Servants, to do service to our Brethren, and to employ our selves and best endeavours, to do them good according to their wants.

The reasons follow, which will cause this Doctrine to sink deeper into us, and make the truth appear without all gain-saying. First, whatsoever gifts are bestowed upon us, to this end they are bestowed, to profit with all, to help one another, and to edify that body whereof we are members. We are all Fellow-members of one body, and therefore are bound to relieve and refresh our Brethren. Every member serveth one another, & are for the whole. Nature it self in other things, teacheth us this duty. The Sun as the eye of the World, shineth not for it self, it yieldeth not heat for it self, but for others. The clouds which are as the bottles of heaven, do not drop down rain for themselves, but for others. The earth, which is as the Mother of these inferior things, bringeth forth Hearbs, and Grass, and Fruit, and Corn, for the use of man, and not for it own benefit. This comparison drawn from the members of the body, serving one another, and everyone caring for the whole, is often urged by the Apostle: He teacheth, that As we have many Members in one Body, and all Members have not one office: so we being many, are one Body in Christ, and everyone, one another's Members. And in another place; There are many Members, yet but one Body: the Members should have a care one of another, least there should be any division in the Body: Therefore if one Member suffer, all suffer with it: if one Member be had in honor, all the Members rejoice with it. If then one of the Members of our natural body be ready to do service to the other, & to the whole, it should be our care to do the like that are of the Mystical body of Christ Jesus, from whom as from the head we receive all influence of spiritual grace necessary to salvation.

Secondly, it is our duty to follow the example of our Lord and Master Christ Jesus, he came to serve, not to be served; to Minister, not to be ministered unto; to redeem, not to rule. This our Savior preached to his Disciples, when they began to think of Lordship, and to disdain one another, Whosoever will be great among you, shall be your Servant: and whosoever will be chief of you, shall be the Servant of all, for even the Son of man came, not to be served, but to serve; and to give his life for the ransom of many. Where he showeth, that the way to true honor is to serve, so that the greater service we do to the Brethren, the greater honor we shall receive at the hands of God. The greater our service is, the greater shall be our reward, when everyone shall receive according unto his work. This we see farther strengthened unto us in the example of Christ, who humbled himself to wash his disciples feet, and to wipe them with a Towell being washed, and said unto them; Know ye what I have done unto you? Ye call me Master and Lord, and ye say well, for so am I: if I then your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one another's feet: for I have given you an example, that ye should do, even as I have done to you, the Servant is not greater then his Master, nor the Ambassador greater then he that sent him. We are taught to set Christ the most absolute example before our eyes, to learn humbleness of mind, and the duty of service one to another: we must consider him in his glory, and in his humility. First, in his glory as our King, as our head, as our Lord, and as our Master: then in his humility, as abased and humbled in our Flesh unto death, even to the death of the Cross. When we have done this, then we are thus to reason with our selves; hath Christ in his great glory cast down himself for my sake: and ought not I, if I were the highest upon earth, stoop down to my equals? Ought not I, that am his Subject, his body, his Disciple, his Servant, to serve the necessities of my Fellow-servants? Thus the Apostle commending Love to the Saints, and meekness of mind, leadeth us to Christ; Look not every man on his own things, but every Man also on the things of other Men: let the same mind be in you that was even in Christ Jesus, who being in the form of GOD, thought it no robbery to be equal with GOD, he made himself of no reputation, he took on him the form of a Servant, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto the death. If then we look unto Christ Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our Salvation, we have him as a perfect example without blemish, and as a pure Glass without stain to look upon, who in the greatest glory hath shown the greatest abasement, in the greatest honor, he hath set before us the greatest humility.

Thirdly, true Religion consisteth in ministering to the Saints, in helping and succouring of the poor, in employing himself to the good of others, as a Candle that spendeth & wasteth it self to give light to them that are in the house. It consisteth not in bare knowledge, but in practice; not in an idle Faith, but in the fruits of love. This the Prophet Isaiah showeth and sets down, If thou pour out thy Soul to the hungry, and refresh the troubled soul, then shall thy light spring out in the darkness, and thy darkness shall be as the noon day; And the Lord shall guide thee continually, he shall satisfy thy Soul in drought, he shall make fat thy bones, so that thou shalt be like a watered Garden, and like a Spring of Water, whose Waters fail not: Meaning, that they which relieve the poor, and comfort such as are comfortless, their light shall never be put out, but shine forever, God will be their comfort in the day of trouble, and he will recompense abundantly their good works. Seeing then, the gifts that we have, are given to every man to profit his Fellow-members withal, seeing we are to tread in the steps of our blessed Savior Jesus Christ, and seeing the truth of Religion standeth in the fruits of love; we may conclude necessarily the former Doctrine, that we ought to account it no disgrace unto us, to abase our selves to do service, and to Minister to the wants and necessities of the Saints.

Let us now proceed to handle the Uses, and edify our selves thereby in our most holy Faith, and in all Christian obedience. First, this serveth to reprove those that have forgotten all true service to the faithful. Many there are that have no feeling of the troubles and turmoyles that fall upon the dear Servants of God. Their eyes are closed, and their hearts are hardened, they have no bowels of compassion to Minister unto them, they have no hands open to relieve them. The rich of our Churches, who have this Worlds good given unto them, are either in their insatiable desires (as Hell or the Grave) poor, wrongfully getting, miserably keeping, unconscionably scraping, and unjustly pulling from others, without mean or measure; or else they spend their wealth and consume their substance; some in Haukes and Hounds; others, in sumptuous apparel; others, in excessive Feastings; others, in worse uses, which I will not name, all being unnecessary and fruitless things, unprofitable for the Church or Common-wealth, so that little can be spared for the poor Saints, and that which is spared, is as hardly drawn from them, as a piece of flesh out of their sides. These men never think of doing service to others, but of serving their own turns and commodities: which ought not so to be among them that profess Christ Jesus, who served not himself, nor sought his own benefit, nor minded his own gain and glory, nor lifted up himself above others, nor desired to get earthly riches, nor went about to empouerish others: but being rich, he became poor; being Heir of all things, he had not whereon to lay his head; being Lord of all, he became Servant unto all. Hence it is that the Apostle saith, We have not an High-priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all things tempted in like sort, yet without sin. And a little before in the same Epistle; In all things it behooved him to be made like unto his Brethren, that he might be merciful and a faithful High-priest in things concerning God, that he might make reconciliation for the sins of the people: for in that he suffered he was tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted. Whereby it appeareth, that Christ Jesus hath a lively feeling of our infirmities, and an inward touch of our wants, he is not slightly affected with our infirmities, but as the head is when the members are pained. And if we be the true members of his body, we will remember, and cannot forget them that are in bonds; But be grieved as if we were bound with them: and them that are in affliction, as though we were also afflicted in the body. This compassion toward those that are in misery, is an assured pledge, and a comfortable Testimony unto us, that we are engrafted into Christ, and united to all true Christians, that we have a Communion with him as with our head, and that we have a communion with the faithful, as with his members. But if we be without feeling of the afflictions of Joseph; that is, of the troubles of the Church, we are without Christ, without Faith, without Love, without compassion; and consequently, without peace and consolation in our hearts. For what peace can he have that is out of Christ, who is the Author of peace? Without whom, all things are but trouble and vexation of Spirit. Or what consolation can we have that we are his members, when we have no sense or sight of the troubles and infirmities that are incident to our Fellow-members?

Secondly, it reproveth such, as in the pride and haughtiness of their hearts do scorn to do service to the poor Saints, and think it a great disgrace to them, to cast their eyes upon such contemptible creatures. But wouldest thou have Christ look upon thee, and have a respect unto thee? Then disdain not thou to look upon his members, which are unto thee in place of Christ, so often as they suffer in his cause. In what a miserable case shall they be in at the last day, to whom Christ Jesus the Lord of life, shall say; Depart from me, I know ye not? Now, if we in this life, turn away our faces from the faithful, and are ashamed of them in the day of their calamity, & say to them, Depart from me, I know you not. Let us take heed that he be not ashamed of us before his Father, and before the elect Angels. The highest that are upon the earth, must not refuse to show all fruits of love even toward the meanest for Christ's sake, but be ready to acknowledge that they have received their Callings and Dignities, not to lift up their hearts above their brethren, but be as Fathers, as Shepherds, as Nurses, to nourish and cherish such as want their help. This is it which good Mordecai did teach Ester, when the church was as it were in travel, and in great danger, Think not with thyself, that thou shalt escape more then all the Jews, for if thou holdest thy peace at this time, comfort and deliverance shall appear to the Jews out of another place, but thou and thy Fathers house shall perish, and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time? Where he putteth her in mind, that the cause of her advancement was to be a Nursing Mother unto the Church, and that it was the end which God aimed at, in calling of her to that place of dignity. And as the greatest are not to scorn the smallest, nor the highest be ashamed of the lowest, nor the richest trample under their feet, the poorest; so on the other side, the meanest and lowest, must not envy others that are above them, but know that they likewise are bound to do service to them, according to the utmost of their power and endeavor. Who was meaner in place and condition then Onesimus? yet the Apostle testifieth of him in this place, that He had ministered unto him in the bonds of the Gospel. So there is no man so poor, so low, so small in his own eyes, and in the eyes of others, but he may do some good to others, and thereby gain glory unto God, and to his Gospel.

If then, we think that the poverty of our condition, or the meanness of our place, or the baseness of our person, shall excuse us, or exempt us from serving Christ and his Church, and that it skilleth not, though we live as idle Drones, and unprofitable burdens to the earth that beareth us; we deceive our selves, and bereave our selves of much comfort, that we might receive, by bearing our selves painfully and profitably in our Callings. The Apostle instructing all persons in the Church, to behave themselves without contempt and envy, proveth it notably by a comparison drawn from the members of the body, There are many Members, yet but one body: and the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor the head again to the feet, I have no need of you; yea, much rather those Members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary. The Rich, cannot want the poor, and therefore may not contemn them; and the poor cannot want the rich, and therefore may not backbite them, and envy at them. For as God hath tempered the body together, that one member should stand in need of the help of another; so is it in the things of this life, one liveth by another, and therefore, one must have a care of another, and seek the good one of another.

Thirdly, here are reprov'd all merciless men, that shut up their pity and compassion from the poor, and therefore have not the Love of GOD dwelling in them, nor the Love of Children remaining in them. For whosoever loveth GOD, will for his sake Love his Brother also. The Apostle John, handleth this Argument at large, in his first Epistle, and the fourth Chapter, where he saith, Beloved, let us love one another, for love cometh of God, and everyone that loveth is borne of God, and knoweth God: he that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love. If any man say, I love God, and hate his Brother, he is a liar; for how can he that loveth not his Brother whom he hath seen, love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we of him, that he which loveth God, should love his Brother also. To this purpose the Apostle James saith, There shall be condemnation merciless, to him that showeth not mercy, and mercy rejoiceth against judgment. If then, we look for mercy, let us show mercy. There is no poor Begger that craveth an Alms at thy door, there is no man standeth in so great need of thy help, that liveth with thee, as thou wantest the mercy and favor of God to comfort thee, to clothe thee, to feed thee, to succor thee, to hear thee, to help thee, when thou criest unto him. We are all as naked and needy Beggars that knock at his gate, and we are wholly nourished by his hand. We are all as poor suiters, suing for his grace and favor, and we cannot live if we be denied, and take the repulse of him. We receive mercy, under condition to show mercy again. If we be vnmerciful, we make our selves unworthy to receive any mercy from God.

Secondly, seeing we are servants to all, to help them by all the means we can, by comfort or counsel; by word or deed; by our wealth or authority; or whatsoever God shall enable us: from hence ariseth a great comfort unto a man's conscience, and an assurance of his peace and acceptation with God, to pray unto him with comfort for his graces, not doubting to obtain them, if we have been serviceable and comfortable unto others, especially to the servants of God, that are as dear to him as the Apple of his eye. It is a means of excellent joy and peace to a man, to consider that he hath employed all the good things he hath to the use of God's house, and his household servants: for when any common danger shall fall, or he find anguish and affliction of Conscience for sin, he may be assured of comfort, seeing GOD hath wrought this sincerity, and set it as a seal of his mercy in his heart. Obadiah having been in the practice of this duty a diligent servant, and performed most notable service when Jezebel sought the destruction of the Prophets, he hid an hundred of them, by fifty and fifty in a Cave, and gave them Bread to eat, showing himself liberal handed, and tender-hearted, with the hazard of his own credit, favor, and life. When he met Elijah, that willed him to go to his Lord, and told him, he would show himself unto him, although Obadiah at the first feared and distrusted, and thought the spirit of God would carry him away to some other place, and then Ahab would kill him, he began at the length to comfort himself with the meditation of his service that he had done to the Saints: Doest thou not know that I fear God? and hast thou not heard of the fruits of it that I took in the heat of this persecution, and in the bitterness of this long judgment, and in the extremity of this famine, an hundred of the Lord's Prophets, & how I hid them, and fed them secretly in two Caues of the earth? If thou account of this my service, and hast judged me faithful to the Lord, let this move thee, not to give me over into the hands of thine and mine enemy.

The like we see in Nehemiah, an excellent Prince, he did so employ himself and his service to the good of the Church, that he regarded not his own profit, but spent of his own Goodes and substance, because the necessity of the people was exceeding great, so that he entertained them at his own cost and charges: From whence, he gathereth unto himself this comfort (as Obadiah had done before, who proveth, that he feared the Lord, and assured his Conscience thereof, because he had preserved and nourished the true Prophets of God. Nehemiah (I say) gathereth this comfort, by succouring the poor servants of God in distress, that God, not for the desert of the work, but the grace of his own mercy (who crowneth not our merits, but his own gifts) would not forget them, so that he saith; Remember me, ô my God, according to all that I have done for this people. Now, as the remembrance of our service ministered to the Saints, shall Minister comfort to us, so the contrary practice must of necessity gall a man's conscience, and the horror thereof accuse him for not doing any good service to the Church of God, when he shall remember how long he hath lived in the world, and yet been barren of all good works, and never done any good to the people of God. Nay, it were well with many, if they had only done no good, if they had only been barren and brought forth no good fruit, and if they had only done no hurt to the Church. For their daily practices cry out against them, and the tears of the faithful which they have shed; what said I, their tears? Nay their blood which they have poured out as Water, doth witness evidently against them, that they have brought forth plentiful fruits, of hatted, of enmity, of malice, of outrageousnesse against the Church. Their own consciences accuse them, and God's people have felt them, and in the end fearful judgments shall overtake them. No enemy of the Church that set himself against Zion, hath ever prospered. O that that they had hearts to consider these things, but now are they hidden from them. God hath given them breath and life to do good to his Church, and he hath lifted up their heads above others in wealth and authority to serve him: but they are going out of the World, before they know wherefore they came into the World. And when they must leave the World and depart out of it, wherein they have been but Tennants at will, they remember with anguish and terror of conscience, that they have done nothing less then that for which they were sent into it, but have employed their goods, their strength, their wit, their wisdom, their life, their dignity, and all to oppress and vex the Church; yea, to root it (if it were possible) out of the earth. It were good they could in time remember their fore-Fathers, Pharaoh, Senacharib, Ahab, Jezebel, Judas, Herod, and such like Persecutours and Enemies, that breathed out threatenings against the Church: and as they resemble them in their life, let them take heed they follow them not in their death, and after their death. But let us that practice better things know, that God doubtless will remember them in kindness, that remember the afflicted Saints, and cast such off with shame and dishonor, that do despise and despite them. We have a worthy example hereof in Ebed-melech, recorded by the Prophet Jeremiah, who because he entreated for the Prophet, and suffered him not to lie in the Dungeon, and to die for hunger, through the false suggestions of his malicious enemies, God shown mercy unto him, and delivered him from the plague that fell upon the City.

This serveth as an instruction, both to the Minister and people. If the Minister have labored in the duties of his calling, and in the service of the Church, and in the execution of his Ministry, and in the feeding of the flock committed unto him, he hath wherein to comfort himself, he may be assured of his love unto Christ, and consequently of Christ's love toward him. We must remember what Christ said to Peter; Louestthou me? Feed my Sheep, feed my Lambs. So the Apostle mentioning his great pains and troubles, and dangers, to preach the Gospel, that he seemed as a man either distract of his wits, or puffed up with ambition and vain-glory, he assigneth this as the true cause; The love of Christ constraineth us. If then we consider what love the Lord hath shown toward us, or behold how dear his Church is unto him, and with how great a price he hath redeemed it, we cannot but in the Meditation thereof be thrust forward (if we love him, or regard him) to perform the duties of our Ministration, although they be mighty painful, in seeding, in weeding, in plauting, in strengthening, and in comforting, according as daily occasion shall be offered unto us. But if we be entered into this calling, and do nothing therein but please men, and serve our selves, and our own lusts being entered, what comfort can we find, or what reward do we look for at his hands, that hath chosen us to be Shepherds and Watchmen? We must not be like unto the Prophets mentioned in the Prophet Micah, The Priests of Zion teach for hire, & the prophets thereof prophesy for Money. If then we have greater respect to the fleece, then to the Sheep; or to the wages, then to the work; we serve our selves, and not the Lord Christ, and he will accept no such service at our hands. For we serve our own bellies, but not the Church; we fill our purses, we feed not the people. Woebeth unto such Shepherds, should not the Shepherd feed the flock? What will our gain and glory profit us at the last day, when they must leave us, and we must leave them? We shall receive more sound comfort and peace, when we shall depart this world, and remember what account we are to give of our pains taken in our calling, in our labors undertaken in the Ministry, then in the heaping up of many liuinges, and the getting of much riches. If we have gained but one soul to God, he shall stand up for us, when all the mucke of this earth shall fall down. He shall be our joy and our crown, when all other delights shall give us the farewell. Neither doth this Doctrine and duty serve only for the comfort of the Minister, but for the comfort of the people that have endeavored in their callings to serve the Church, and labored vnfaignedly to seek the well-fare thereof. They that have had a sweet feeling of the love of God, are careful to love him again: and they that love him in singleness of heart, will be enforced and constrained to love his children, and to do all the service they can unto them. They will think no duty too much, they will think all they have done, all they can do to the Church, to be too little. Hence it is, that Christ Jesus commending the Church of Tyatira, for such good works as were found therein, beginneth with Love and Service; First, he mentioneth their Love, then he addeth their Service, to show that as our Love must appear by our fruits of Service, so all our Service must proceed from Love to those whom we serve. If a man employ himself never so dilligently, and take never so great pains, and travail with all his power, for the peace and good of the church, yet if it proceed not from a sincere love toward them, but either from a love of gain, or a desire of glory, or a fame of praise, he shall receive no reward at the hands of God. This service, as at all times we must be ready to make it appear, so especially we must show it in the necessities of the Church. When it lieth under the heat of persecution, or feeleth the Arrow of famine, or beareth the affliction of poverty, and groaneth under the weight of these burdens, we must remember that we owe our service to them as a duty, and that we are the servants of the Church. This shall be our crown and comfort in the last day.

Thirdly, seeing God requireth of all true Christians, of what condition soever they be, according to the means afforded unto them, to use their gifts, their power, their possessions, and whatsoever benefits they have received, to use them (I say) to the comfort and service of God's Saints, it kindleth the affections of God's people to bless and praise God for them, to speak well of them, to pray unto God for them, and to obtain greater blessings for them, then they have bestowed. Thus they that do good to the Church, do good to themselves: they that give much unto them, do receive more; and such as have been helpful and serviceable to God's people, shall find them as their remembrancers to God, who will not forget the labor of their love, and the duty of their service. This ought to be a notable encouragement unto us, not to deal niggardly toward the Saints, nor to withhold from them the fruits of our love, seeing nothing shall be lost, that is bestowed upon them, but we shall receive an hundred fold into our bosom, grace for grace, love for love, blessing for blessing, mercy for mercy. For this comfort and consolation will arise to them that do good to God's people, they shall have favor with God, they shall gain a good report with the world, and they shall purchase the sweet savor of a good name, as of a precious ointment among the Saints, and shall stir them up to entreat God's manifold mercies for them. Jehoiada that good High Priest, was so honored of the people, for suppressing the tyranny of Athalia, for setting up the kingdom of Joash, and for restoring the true religion of God, that he was accounted a common Father of the Country, and they gave him the burial of a King, for they buried him in the City of David with the Kings, because he had done good in Israel, and toward God and his house. So the apostle Paul declaring that Onesiphorus had done him great service, prayeth unto God for him, The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus, for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain: but when he was at Rome, he sought me out diligently, and found me. The Lord grant unto him, that he may find mercy with the Lord at that day. Whereby we may gather, that the benefits bestowed upon the Saints, shall not perish, although they themselves cannot requite thē; for though they want ability to pay them, yet they want not hearts to pray for them; yea, the Lord will not only have pity of them that take pity of his people, but he will show mercy to their households, because when Paul praiseth the bountifulness and zeal of Onesiphorus, he wisheth well for his sake to his whole family. The blessing of God shall not rest only upon the head of the just, but it shall descend into his whole house, such is the love of God toward those that be his. If the consideration of this great promise, and rich recompense of reward, do not prick us forward to exercise the works of love, and fruits of compassion, we are more then blockish and brutish. On the other side, such as have been, not helpful, but hurtful; not industrious, but injurious; not serviceable, but unprofitable to God's people; when God shall visit them either with public calamities, or private judgments, their own Consciences shall gall them, and gnaw upon them, when they remember their own works, which shall provoke men to speak evil of them, cause them to pray against them, and constrain them to call upon God to work their confusion. This we see in Paul the Apostle, in the latter end of the same Epistle, Alexander the Copper-smith hath done me much evil, the Lord reward him according to his works. Thus doeth the Prophet David deal oftentimes in the Psalms, Think upon thy congregation which thou hast possessed of old, & on the rod of thine inheritance, which thou hast redeemed, and on this mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt: lift up thy strokes, that thou mayst forever destroy every enemy that doth evil to the Sanctuary. Thus we see the people of God have from time to time prayed against the malicious enemies of the Church, that sought the ruin and destruction thereof. Their prayers are of great force, & enter into the ears of the Lord of hosts, whether it be to obtain mercies upon the friends of the Church, or to draw down vengeance upon the adversaries thereof, that oppress it with cruelty, and blaspheme the name of God, which is holy throughout all ages and generations. There is no greater honor that we should desire or delight in, then to be called the friends of God, and the servants of the Church. If we be the servants of God, we must also account ourselves the servants of the Church. The Prophet David did esteem the faithful that were in Jerusalem, as his Brethren. So on the contrary side, there cannot a greater dishonor and reproach befall us, then to be reputed the enemies of God and his people. For if we set ourselves against his people, that are his portion and inheritance, he will no otherwise deal with us, then with his enemies. If God come against us as his enemy, we shall not be able to prevail, we cannot stand before him, but shall be as stubble in the fire, and as chaff before the wind.

Lastly, seeing God requireth service to his Church at our hands to do all good to them by all good means, it is our duty to enquire and learn the estate of the distressed Church, that we may know and be informed where, and when, and how it is afflicted. How many are there that never think upon the people of God to do them good, but forget their affliction and oppression. The Butler of Pharaoh did not remember Joseph, but forgot him and the kindness he shown toward him when they were prisoners together, who had said unto him, Have me in remembrance with thee when thou art in good case, and show mercy I pray thee unto me, and make mention of me to Pharaoh, that thou mayst bring me out of this house. So when Zachariah the son of Jehoiada (whom we mentioned before) was, for preaching the truth, and denouncing the judgments of God from his mouth, oppressed with envy, and overborne by the might of the Rulers, the King would not deliver him out of their hands, but commanded him to be stoned with stones, and remembered not the kindness that his father had done to him, but slew his son. This is the common course and current of the world, we will not see the afflictions of the poor Saints, but turn away our eyes from them; or if we cannot choose but see them, we quickly forget them, as if we had never either beheld them, or known of them. This is one misery of the faithful, that men do not regard them when they are in misery. The Lord hath determined, that there shall be always some objects offered unto us, and set before us to exercise the fruits of our Faith and Love. He hath said, that the poor we shall always have with us, and such as stand in need of our help and comfort. It is in easy thing to boast of Faith and Love: but if we will be assured, that we have true Faith indeed, we must show it by our works, which are the fruits whereby it is known. We must not turn away our faces from the faithful, as the Priest and Levite did in the Gospel, but be ready to help, as God giveth ability, and offereth opportunity. Nay, it is not enough for us to succor such religious Saints, as we see want succor, but we must learn and labor to know the state of the Church, and ask of others howe it fareth with the godly poor among us. The children of God have gone before us in the doing of this duty. It is noted of Abraham the Father of the faithful, that he waited not till the strangers craved entertainment at his hands, but he ran to meet them from the Tent door, and prayed them to take some refreshing at his hands, whereby he received Angels into his house at unawares. If we believe him to be the Father of the faithful (as the Scripture calleth him) & that we would be accounted as his children, we must be careful to do the works of Abraham. They are not children that tread not in his steps, and follow not his example.

The like we might say of Lot, who sat at the gate of Sodom, and rose up to meet the men, and prayed them to turn into their servants house, and to lodge with him all night. The holy man Job justifieth his innocence, & cleareth himself from Hypocrisy, That he suffered not the stranger to lodge in the street, but opened his doors unto him that went by the way. Nehemiah was careful to know the state of the Church, and asked his brethren that came from Jerusalem, concerning the Jews that were delivered, which were of the residue of the captivity, by whom he heard, that they lived in great affliction, & in reproach, that the Citty was broken down, and the gates thereof burnt with fire. So the Shunamite having prepared a Chamber for Elisha to lodge him, and set therein a bed, and a Table, a Stool, and a Candlestick, constrained him to come into her house to eat bread. We see how Lazarus and his two Sisters, Martha and Mary, received the Lord Jesus to house, & ministered unto him. They fed him, and he fed them; they gave him the meat that perisheth, but he gave them the bread of life, and the meat that endureth forever.

Likewise the Evangelist Luke noteth in the Acts of the Apostles, that when the heart of Lydia was opened to attend to the things that Paul delivered, she besought them saying. If ye judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there, and she constrained them. These are worthy examples of faithful men and women, that teach us by their own practice, what manner of service is due to the Saints, not only to help those whose misery we know, but to enquire of them whose state we do not know. This indeed is pure and perfect love, when we do to our brethren, as we desire they should deal toward us. The Wiseman would have everyone to be diligent to know the state of his flock, much more it is required of us, to enquire the state of God's flock, which is his Church, that he hath redeemed with his precious blood. It is not therefore enough for us to say, we knew not their wants, seeing all those are willfully ignorant, that have the means to come knowledge, and yet will not use the means. We may oftentimes know the necessities of the Saints, but we will not enquire of them, because we will not know them. This shall not excuse us in the sight of God; but accuse the more, because our ignorance is affected ignorance, inasmuch as we might know, and yet we do not desire to know.

Verse 14. [But without thy mind would I do nothing, that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly.]

We have seen already the reason why Paul was desirous to have retained Onesimus with him, to wit, that he might have ministered unto him, and served him in his afflictions that did befall him for the Gospels sake. Now he declareth the reason, why without the knowledge and consent of Philemon, he would not detain him, to the end, that the duty or good turn which he might that way receive at his hands, might be done freely, willingly, and cheerfully, not by constraint and compulsion. Heereby we learn, that all Christian duties done to God or man, must be done with a free, willing, cheerful, and hearty affection. This is it which the Lord requireth. Deut. 6. Hear, ô Israel, the Lord our God is Lord only. And thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. So the Prophet David prayeth, O Lord I beseech thee, accept the free offerings of my mouth, and teach me thy judgments. No other Sacrifices please God, but such as are free and voluntary: all things must be done in love with a ready mind. The Apostle teacheth, that He that distributeth, must do it with simplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that showeth mercy, with cheerfulness. This also was figured out unto us in the shadows and Ceremonies of the Law, when the people were commanded to offer a male without blemish, presenting him of his own voluntarily will, at the door of the Tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord, declaring thereby, that our serving of him must not be grudgingly, but we must perform it frankly and freely, and with a willing mind. The Apostle moving the Corinthians to bountifulness toward the poor Saints at Jerusalem, teacheth them that they must offer a free will offering, I sent the brother whose praise is in the Gospel, (which seemeth to be Barnabas) who is also chosen of the Churches, to be a fellow in our journey, concerning this grace which is ministered by us unto the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your prompt mind. All these words of Scripture, are witnesses of this truth, beyond all exception, that God never liketh of constrained service, but will have men to do their duties to him voluntarily, as is fit to be performed of the creature toward his Creator, and of the Child toward his Father.

Let us see how the reasons will make this better to appear unto us, that we may have strong proof to put the matter out of all doubt. First, God loveth a cheerful giver, a cheerful servant, a cheerful service. It is the heart and the inward affections that he accepteth & regardeth, which is the principal part of a man, and the fountain from whence all outward actions proceed. He will have the heart, or else he will have nothing of us. This is the reason urged by the Apostle to the Corinthians, As every man wisheth in his heart, so let him give, not grudgingly, or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver. Now, that which the Apostle speaketh of charity and of alms, may as truly be spoken of every duty that God requireth of us. When we pray we must call upon God cheerfully, for he loveth a cheerful prayer. When we give thanks to his name for blessings received, we must thank him cheerfully, for he loveth a cheerful giver of thanks; and albeit these be notable parts of God's worship and excellent duties commanded of him, and required of us; yet without this cheerfulness, they are as a dead thing, & not regarded.

Secondly, our obedience unto God, must be answerable to the obedience of Christ, that he performed to his Father; for he hath therein given us an example, and taught us how to obey. The manner of his obedience was willing, and done of his own accord, not extorted and wrested from him, for then it could not have been accepted of God, nor meritorious for us, nor praised in him. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, Then said he, Loe I come to do thy will, ô God, he taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified, even by the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once made. Thus Christ himself speaketh in the Gospel, Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again: No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself, I have power to lay it down, & have power to take it again. Where he showeth, that the cause wherefore he suffered, was not because Caiaphas conuented him, or the witnesses accused him, or Pilate condemned him, or the Jews executed him, but because it pleased his Father and himself to make himself an offering for sin. For except he had died willingly, all his adversaries had been too weak to work anything against him, as appeareth in evidently the Garden, when he cast them all down to the ground with a word of his mouth. Here is set down a pattern for us to follow: we must perform the like obedience that he did, as his was voluntarily and willing, so ought ours likewise to be, that it may be acceptable in the sight of God.

Thirdly, the things that are not done in Faith and Love, are sin. For, without faith it is impossible to please God. And though I had the gifts of prophesy, and knew all secrets, and all knowledge, yea if I had all faith, so that if I could remove mountains, and had not love, I were nothing; & though I feed the poor with all my goods, and though I give my body that I be burned, and have not love, it profiteth nothing. So then we see, that no duty is acceptable without Faith and Love. But nothing done unwillingly, uncomfortably, or hypocritically can be done in Faith and Love. And therefore such duties as are thus performed, have no life nor virtue in them, to give them any grace or acceptation with God.

Lastly, God knoweth our hearts, and seeth how we bring our gifts, & offer our offerings. He looketh not upon the outward work, but regardeth the intent of the heart. When Cain brought unto God an oblation of the fruits of the ground, he had no regard to him nor to his offering, because he saw the hollowness and hypocrisy of his heart. This is the reason that David useth to persuade Solomon his son, to have a care to learn and to practice the will of God, 1 Chro. 28, 8. And thou Solomon my son, know thou the God of thy Father, and serve him with a perfect heart, and with a willing mind: for the Lord searcheth all harts, and understandeth all the imaginations of thoughts, if thou seek him he will be found of thee, but if thou forsake him, he will cast thee off forever.

Where we see, the Father careful for the future good of his son, moveth him to endeavor and strive to know God by learning what he willeth, & to serve him uprightly and willingly, by practicing as he enableth, because our thoughts are not hidden from the all-seeing eye of God, and because he offereth himself to them that seek him, but forsaketh them that refuse him, when he is offered. We may easily deceive the eye of man, that looketh only to the person, and beholdeth only the outward work; but it is impossible to deceive the searcher of hearts. If then we gather all these reasons into a short sum, and set them as in a Table before our eyes, if we consider that God loveth a cheerful service, that Christ performed a willing obedience, that faith and love giveth acceptance to the work; and lastly, that God giveth recompense according to the heart, which he knoweth; we see that the strength of them will bear the full weight of this conclusion, that the duties of our Religion must not be performed constrainedly, but freely; not grudgingly, but cheerfully; not unwillingly, but readily; not of necessity, but voluntarily.

Now we are to make Use of this Doctrine. First, seeing no man must perform any holy duty to God or man upon compulsion, or against his will, but with all his mind and might, we learn that every action or duty is accounted of by God, not according to the greatness of the worker, or outward show of the work, but according to the will and affection of the doer: it is the manner of doing that God more accepteth, then the action or deed it self. A Child in his obedience to his Father, is esteemed for his reverent, loving, obedient, and dutiful heart, and not for the greatness or worthiness of his work. For what can he do, when he hath endeavored to the utmost, to pleasure his Father? So is it with us, when we have done all that we can, we must confess we have been vnprofitable servants, and therefore God more respecteth the intention, then the action; the Work-man, then the work; the affection, then the effect. Mary is commended of Christ, because she loved much. The poor widow that cast into the treasury one mite, is praised by Christ above the rest, that offered of their substance and superfluity. He that giveth a cup of cold water, in the name of a Disciple to a Disciple, shall not lose his reward. What is the bestowing of a Mite? Or what is a cup of cold water? Are they of themselves, & in themselves considered anything worth? Or can they deserve to be accepted? No, in no wise: but God accepteth the manner, more then the matter; how they are done, more then what is done. This is it which the Apostle expresseth, 2 Cor. 8, 12. If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that a man hath not. This layeth before us the abundant kindness of God, who albeit he be a spirit every way perfect, yet he accepteth our lame and defective service. Our duties shall be all acceptable in his sight, though they be performed in great weakness, and mingled with many imperfections (which were sufficient to cause them to be rejected and refused) if we be careful to do them in the truth and uprightness of our hearts, and with cheerful and ready minds. All things must be done in love, and this must be considered in all the works of our hands. This ministereth a double comfort; First, unto such as are of poor and low degree, to consider that GOD regardeth the heart more then the hand, and our willingness more then our work. Hence it is, that even servants whose condition is lowest in the family, and which meddle not in great matters, or in weighty affairs, or in excellent works, yet are charged with this affection, and in sincerity to behave themselves in those inferior duties, Servants be obedient unto them that are your Masters, according to the flesh in all things, not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart fearing God: and whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not to men.

Where he showeth, that servants must do their duties, not as serving for the penny, or aiming at the filling of their belly, or contenting themselves to please their masters eye, but even as serving God, looking for a recompense from him, knowing that he hath placed them in that estate, & requireth those things in truth and sincerity to be performed as unto him. For the Lord doth not see as man seeth, he doth not look to the outward action, but he beholdeth with what heart all things are done, and therefore measureth according to every man's deed, whether he be high or low, rich or poor, Lord or Servant. The best heart hath the best recompense; the worst heart hath the worst wages. There is a great difference between work and work; some are great, some little; some beautiful, some base; some high, some mean, some low; but whatsoever I do, if I do it cheerfully, as serving my master Christ, that looketh upon me, albeit my calling be never so simple; as to wash dishes, to wipe shoes, to scour the spit, to sweep the house, I please God therein as well as he that manageth a kingdom, that ministereth Justice, that preacheth the gospel. True it is the work is greater to rule the affairs of State, then to remain in the kitchen, yet he shall be better accepted of God, that performeth these small things heartily, then he y^t doth the greatest works grudgingly, either drawn by importunity, or cōpeld by necessity. Thus it doth fall out, that a poor servant, carrying this mark and testimony with him, is more acceptable to the Lord, then he y^t hath done greater things to the judgment of the eye, to the show of the world and to the sight of men. Secondly, this serveth as a singular comfort to everyone of us, that groan under the burden of sin, that feel the weakness of our faith, and are dismayed at the smallness of our sanctification. We know how busy Satan is to watch his advantage of our infirmities and imperfections, & to persuade us that we have no faith at all, that we are without repentance, without grace, and without regeneration, because we feel great defects, and many wants in our best works, and our best gifts. But this must comfort us, that God accepteth of that measure that he hath given us, even according to that which we have, not according to that which we have not. A weak faith, shall be as auayleable to apprehend Christ, as a strong faith. If we have a desire and an hungering after grace, He will fulfill the desires of them that fear him, he also will hear their cry and save them. God hath assured us, that as he hath begun his good work in us, so he will finish his work, and in his good time bring it to perfection. When we find any dullness and untowardness in our selves, if we hate and dislike them, and labor to profit and grow forward in sanctification, God accepteth our willingness and readiness, though our strength be not answerable to our desire, or the outward work answerable to our heart. For God is faithful, and will not suffer us to be tempted above the strength that he shall give us; and the Lord Jesus is a merciful High priest, who will not break the bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax. Let us all therefore look that a willing and ready mind be found in us. Again, this must be considered in all things: If we come to hear the word, and to exercise the duties of God's worship, if we do it for fashion sake, for fear of the law, for the praise of men, or for custom, they are nothing worth; they ought to be performed in obedience to God, in love of his ordinance, in delight of his worship, in singleness of heart, and in an earnest affection, to the means of our salvation. The like we might say of giving of alms and liberality toward the poor, if they be not bestowed with promptnesse of mind, with compassion of heart, and with feeling of the wants of those that crave our help, they are nothing at all respected of God, nor they that distribute thē rewarded of him.

Secondly, seeing only that duty which is done freely and not by compulsion, deserveth due commendation; this reproveth all those things that are don upon wrong grounds, and evil foundations. It is not enough to do a good thing, but we must do it well; It is not sufficient to do those things that are godly, but we must do them in a godly manner. Let everyone herein carefully examine his soul, and try his own heart, whether he do the duties of his calling unwillingly, uncomfortably, and upon necessity, for fear of danger, for avoiding of shame, for keeping of his credit, for praise of the world, or such like causes, which are all false motives; or whether he do them heartily and cheerfully as in the sight of God, before whom all things are naked & open. This is to be considered as well of the Minister himself, as of the people that hear him, and are partakers of his labors. The calling of the Minister is an high and mighty calling, he is the Steward of God, and a watchman over the people, for whose souls he must give an account in that great day of the Lord. It is not enough for us to labor among them (though we should work, and weary, and toil our selves never so much) but we must do it diligently and cheerfully, as serving Christ the Shepherd of the sheep. If the chief end that we respect be to maintain our selves, to live easily, and to increase in riches, we have our reward. Or if we preach unto them, because the law doth enforce us, and enjoin us unto it, and because otherwise the people would cry shame upon us: if reaping their Temporal things, we do not give them Spiritual, or if we so entangle our selves in the affairs of this life, that we cannot intend the duties of our calling, we cannot possibly please him that hath chosen us, to be as Soldiers to fight his battles, and hath appointed us to be as Shepherds to watch his flock. It standeth us upon, to be so touched with a care of our duties, as that if there were no Law to compel us, and urge us to be painful therein, yet the zeal of God's glory, and love of his people should constrain us. Hence it is, that the Apostle Paul speaking of his own practice saith, Though I preach the Gospel, I have nothing to rejoice of: for a necessity is laid upon me, and woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel: for if I do it willingly, I have a reward; but if I do it against my will, notwithstanding the dispensation is committed unto me. Whereby we see, he showeth, that such a necessity of the divine calling, did press sore upon him, that he must preach or perish. For, if he held his peace, and did not do his duty, the curse of God would lie hard and heavy upon his shoulders, and bring such intolerable torments upon him, as should make him cry out, woe, woe, alas, alas, what a wretch am I? yet notwithstanding this necessity, he must have a willing mind, and do his duty gladly. A good work done willingly, is made much better by the willing doing.

Again, there is nothing so easy, but it becometh difficult and unpleasant, hard and tedious, which a man doth by compulsion. No man therefore hath done his duty, or discharged his calling, that worketh against his will. Jonah the Prophet went to Nineveh against his will, he could have wished that his preaching had taken no effect, so that he was chastened of God. When Moses was called to go to Pharaoh, to charge him to let the people go, that they might serve the Lord in the wilderness, he provoked God to anger, because he delayed the matter, and excused himself, & framed objections, and shown himself backward to enter on the work. Hence it is that Peter speaketh to all the Ministers of the gospel, Feed the flock of God that dependeth upon you, caring for it, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind, &c. that when the chief shepherd shall appear, ye may receive an incorruptible crown of glory. That which is not done willingly, is not performed conscionably, and where there is not found readiness of mind, there cannot be looked for any recompense. The Prophets of God being inwardly touched with a feeling of God's effectual calling, have obeyed immediately, and ran whether he sent them to preach. The Prophet Isaiah speaking of himself saith, I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, whom shall I send? Or who shall go for us? Then I said, Here am I send me. When Christ Jesus called Simon and Andrew his brother, and said unto them, Follow me, and I will make you Fishers of men, they forsook their Nettles straight way, and followed him. The like we see in Paul, when he was converted and called by a voice from heaven, he was not disobedient to the heavenly voice and vision, he communicated not with flesh and blood, but prepared himself to the work; whereunto he was separated from his mothers womb. This practice ought to be in all of us that are entered into this calling, we must labor cheerfully, willingly, and gladly, that the work may prosper and go forward under our hands: The end of our labor should be the salvation of men's souls; the drift of our sowing, to see a plentiful harvest; and the purpose of our preaching, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord. Secondly, such as are hearers among the people are from hence also to learn their duty, to do those things that are required of them; not daily, but dilligently; not heavily, but heartily as to the Lord. Many seem desirous to have the Gospel, but they would have it of free cost, and therefore repine at the costs and charges it bringeth with it. If we give maintenance to the Ministry, not for conscience, but of necessity; not for love to the Gospel, but by compulsion of Law; not as a free-will offering to God for the recompense of his kingdom among us, but as a taxation which we cannot resist to retain with us, or detain from them, accounting the Gospel not a benefit wherein we delight, but a burden which we should shake and shift off if we might; it is our sin, and eo acceptable service unto God. For God in this respect loveth a cheerful giver. These men are wholly carnal, and regard not the salvation of their souls. If they have an Horse-keeper that dresseth their horses, or a Shepherd that watcheth their Sheep, or an Heardman that looketh to their Swine, or a Cobbler that mendeth their shoes, they are more willing to consider him for his pains, and to recompense his labors, then to minister to the necessities of the Minister. They think that well gotten that is gotten from him, and that ill spent & employed, that is bestowed upon him. Again, as we are to give them a liberal maintenance cheerfully, so when we come to the exercises of our religion, we must come unto them willingly, not unwillingly; joyfully, not tediously. For as he is accursed that doth the work of the Lord negligently, so is he also accursed, that cometh into the house of the lord grudgingly and grievously, not as one delighting in the work, but as one discouraged with the weariness, whether it be of the way, or of the word. He is an evil servant that doth his masters business committed unto him vnpleasantly & untowardly; he is an unfaithful subject that obeyeth the laws of his Prince by compulsion; he is a disobedient child that performeth his Fathers will against his will, & honoreth him without his heart. So he is an evil and unfaithful hearer, that treadeth in the Lord's courts unwillingly, & reioyseth not when the time cometh to perform his duty unto him. It is noted of the people of God, that they travailing to the place of God's worship, passed through many dangers, & endured much heat, and suffered many wants in the wilderness, for the pleasure that they took in his service. The profit they reaped, did swallow up the tediousnes of the pains; & the love to his court, did mittigate the greatness of the labor. This made thē say, A day in thy Courts is better then a thousand other where: I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, then to dwell in the tabernacles of wickedness. Where is this zeal to be found among us? Who showeth this forwardness to God's service? Or whom can a man single out to say of him, that no want or weather doeth hinder him from the exercises of godliness? We are grown unto that loathing of the heavenly Manna, that albeit it fall in the midst of our Campe, and round about our habitations, yet we will not step out of the doors to see it, nor open our mouths to taste it, nor stretch out our hands to gather it: either the blasts of wind do trouble us, or the fear of rain doth hinder us, or the heat of Summer doth burn us, or the cold of Winter doth pinch us, or a Lyon in the way doth stay us, and every trifle stoppeth our journey. If our heart were in the house of God, it would quickly move our feet to carry us thither. But where the heart is not, every member is heavy, and hardly drawn to do their duty. The Devils do the will of God by constraint, and against their wills, it must be otherwise with us. Where the heart is, there is our delight. The Prophet describing the flourishing estate of the Church, saith, The Lord shall send the rod of thy power out of Zion, be thou Ruler in the midst of thine enemies: thy people shall come willingly at the time of assembling thine Army in holy beauty, the youth of thy womb shall be as the Morning Dew. Where he showeth, that the people of God were wont to come to the hearing of the word, to the partaking of the Sacrifices, to the receiving of the Sacraments, and to the exercises of Religion, they assembled and gathered themselves together freely and of their own accord, to present themselves before the Lord. This duty is required of us, we must come willingly to Christ, to hear him speak unto us. It is one virtue to come into the house of God, but to come cheerfully and comfortably as to a feast, is a double virtue, and that which giveth life unto her coming. If we come unwillingly, and be drawn to our duty on the Lord's day, either by shame of the world, or by fear of law: we come as dead men that are without working of the spirit, or desire of profit, or feeling of comfort, or increase of Faith, or bettering of obedience. If the danger of law did not more compel thē, then the conscience of their duty or the love of religion allure them, many among us would sildome or never keep the Lord's Sabbaths, nor attend upon his ordinances: they come to them as willingly as the Bear goeth to the stake, & as cheerfully as the malefactor passeth to the place of execution. Hence it is, that some come to this place once a month, others once a quarter, others only upon high days & solemn feasts, more I think to show themselves, then to labor to save their souls. Such was the zeal of our brethren to the gospel in the days of persecution, that they went more willingly to the fire & flame, then these men in the days of peace come to the hearing of the word, and to the house of prayer. They were more cheerful in suffering of death, then these are in seeking the means of life. Hence it is, that some linger so long before they come, & are afraid they shall be there too soon. Others, when they are present, give little attention, & not at all regard to profit themselves. Others, are ready to depart and be gone before the assembly is dismissed, and think they have learned enough. These are they that think they are at liberty to do what they list, & to go and come when they list. They make no conscience to begin & end the exercises of religion together, and so profit accordingly, having little more knowledge then brute beasts.

Thirdly, this confuteth the common adversary, which ascribe all to the work done, & regard nothing at all either the mind of the doer, or the manner of doing, as their blind distinction, de congruo & condigno teacheth. They hold that the bare presence at the sacrifice of the Mass, without any good intention of the mind, is meritorious in the sight of God. This is their opus operatum, the which is indeed the cutthroat of all true religion. For admit once into the worship of God an outward resting in the work done, who will regard the reformation of the heart? But this fitteth well enough the new Roman religion, which consisteth wholly in external observations, in delighting the eye, in pleasing the ear & the other senses: but requireth nothing aright which may not be performed of a Reprobate. God is a spirit, & they that worship him, must worship him in spirit & truth: so that whatsoever religion resteth & teacheth men to rest in ceremonial and carnal observations, is a false religion invented by the devil. This also is the error of the ignorant people, that will not be accounted Papists, & yet are as ignorant as they in their practice, and as superstitious in their devotions, and as corrupt in their opinions. They never look to their hearts to purge them, nor to their affections, to order them aright, when they come to the service of God. If they can say, oh we have heard the word, we have been at the church, we have prayed to God, they think all is well, and that God can require no more at their hands. They dream the whole service of God to stand in outward things only, as though they were the things wherein the Lord delighteth, and not rather the truth and uprightness of the heart. This is it for which the Prophet Isaiah reproveth the people in his time, and compareth them to the Princes of Sodom^a and to the people of Gomorra, notwithstanding a zealous observation of the outward ordinances that they practiced, & God commanded, What have I to do with the multitude of your Sacrifices? I am full of your burnt offerings, and the fat of Rams, I desire not the blood of Bullockes, Goats, and Lambes: when you come to appear before me, who required this at your hands? Bring no oblations in vain: Incense is an abomination unto me; I cannot suffer your New-Moons, nor Sabbaths, nor solemn assemblies, I am weary to bear them, because your works are evil. But wash you, make you clean, take away the evil of your works from before mine eyes, cease to do evil, learn to do well. All these were but as outward Ceremonies without substance, which the Prophet Jeremiah, calleth Lying words that cannot profit. Outward observations of religion will deeeiue us, if we rest upon them, & put our trust in them. If we perform a worship to God without the heart, we dishonor God, we deceive our own souls, and we increase our condemnation. We draw near to God with our mouths, and honor him with our lips, but our heart is far from him, and therefore we worship him in vain, who is not delighted with outward shows, and with idle shadows, but requireth the singleness of the soul, and the willingness of the mind. He looketh upon the heart when we come before him. We see how careful men and women commonly are, when they come to the place of God's worship, to have all things in the outward man decent and cleanly; they look upon themselves, that their faces be washed, their Garments brushed, their linen white, that no spot, no blemish, no want, no wrinkle may appear in them; but if we go no farther, we are but Hypocrites and dissemblers in the sight of God, all our glorious shows are no better then abomination before him. So then, as the wiseman teacheth, it standeth us upon to give to God our hearts, which is the best present we can offer unto him. We are taught in the Lord's Prayer, to pray unto God, that we may do his will upon the earth, as the Angels do which are in heaven. They perform the will of God readily, and without any grudging; they obey his commandments (whensoever he sendeth & employeth them) faithfully and cheerfully. No one of them slacketh in his function, but is diligent in the execution of that which is given him in charge. Thus it ought to be with all of us, we must delight in God's worship, and encourage others to delight therein. We must make the house of God a place of pleasure, we must make his word our meat and drink, and our continual hearing, must be a daily refreshing unto our souls.

Lastly, seeing all Christian duties must be performed of us willingly, we are hereby guided and directed in our obedience, that we are not to hinder the necessary duties of Christianity belonging unto us, by objecting fleshly reasons, as it were laying stumbling blocks in our own ways, to keep us back from a willing, free, and cheerful going forward in the works of our calling, and in the parts of God's worship. We see, when many are called to a new course of life, and told of the necessity of laboring to get knowledge, and hearing the word of God, they can object for themselves, I shall loose my time, neglect my business, hinder my estate, make myself a laughing stock unto others. I shall miss such a bargain, I shall omit such a journey, I shall want such a meeting of Good-fellows, of Friends, and of Neighbors. These are like to those Guesse mentioned in the Gospel, who being bid to the banquet, made their excuses, and would not come; they made light of it, and went their ways, one unto his Farm, and another about his Merchandize. Our Savior teacheth, that when the word of God is preached unto us, the cares of this world, the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things, choke the word, and it is made unfruitful. The world is a deceitful bait, and the glory thereof dazleth our eyes, that we cannot discern the vanity thereof.

Again, when the duties of Love and Charity, ought to be extended toward those that want relief, and the fruits of mercy, they are ready to object, I shall weaken by giving to others the means of my maintenance, I shall disable myself, I shall hinder my family and Children (whom I must provide for, or else I should be worse then an Infidel) and thereby give cause to my adversaries, to rejoice and triumph over me. Thus everyone is wise in his own eyes, and carnal reason is apt enough to Minister fleshly objections, to slake our zeal, and to hinder our course of obedience. But let us stop our ears against the songs of these enchanters, which seem to bewitch, not our bodies, but our souls. These are nothing else but words, full of distrust and doubting, proceeding from Infidelity. Let us learn to rest upon God's providence, by well-doing, and look for his blessing. This is it which the Apostle remembereth, where he laboreth to move the Corinthians to relieve the distresses of the Saints, Give not grudgingly, or of necessity, and God is able to make all graces to abound toward you, yet ye always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound in every good work, As it is written, he hath spered abroad and hath given to the poor: his benevolence remaineth forever. Such as lived in the Church, in the days of the Apostles, when there were many poor, many extremely poor, were moved to be liberal, yea very liberal and bountiful unto them, so that they that had possessions sold them and distributed them, as everyone had need. Many of them no doubt had wives & Children, and were burdened with charge and family of their own, yet they accounted nothing peculiarly their own, but they had all things common, they had them not only for themselves, but for their brethren. To conclude therefore, we must beware we be not led aside by the subtlety of Satan, and the corrupt immagination of our own Nature, to be hindered thereby, from practicing such duties as are required at our hands. He that will not follow the calling of God, until the flesh minister no objection against it, shall never have the commendation of obedience. He shall never go about any good duty, but we shall find somewhat stand in the way to cross it, either our pleasure or profit, or somewhat else will round us in the ear, to make us forsake it, or delay it, or condemn it. When the word of God reproveth any sin in us, that seemeth sweet unto the flesh, we shall meet with a thousand temptations, to persuade with us to continue in it with greediness, and to follow after it with all eagerness. Wherefore, so soon as we know the will of our heavenly Father, let us prepare our selves to do it, and to delight in it, and step over the rocks of offense, that stand before us to make us fall; that so God may be delighted with us, & take pleasure in our obedience proceeding from the heart.

15 It may be, that he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldest receive him forever.

16 Not now as a Servant, but above a Servant, even as a Brother beloved, especially to me: how much more then unto thee, both in the flesh, and in the Lord?

IN the words going before, we have already handled the removing of the first Objection which ariseth from Paul's sending of Onesimus back again to his Master. The next Objection is touching his departure from his Master, mentioned in these two Verses, wherein he both aunswareth the Objection, maketh a new reason, and seeketh to extenuate the displeasure that Philemon had conceived against him. The Apostle answereth here in this place, that Objection which might be made and moved from the former matter of this suit. He hath entreated Philemon (as we have heard) to receive Onesimus, he might hereunto have said; But why should I receive him? Shall I entertain a Runna-gate Servant, a base Varlet, that hath wasted and purloyned my goods, and sought to undo me? If he were well with mē, why did he depart from me? If not well, why will he return to me again? He that is once evil, is always presumed to be evil. This is the Objection: whereunto the Apostle maketh a double answer, as he did before: first, by way of granting and yielding to Philemon: secondly, by a kind of correcting his former grant. The granting is, I confess and acknowledge willingly, that he departed from thee, and would not tarry with thee. The correcting is, though he did depart, it was not forever, it was but a very short time, as thou seest. So then, the answer is from the adioynt of time, he went from thee for a little season, which is not barely set down, but with an illustrastion added unto it from the ende, [That thou shouldst receive him forever:] which also is enlarged by a comparison from the greater; Not so much as a Servant, but as more then a Servant. The latter part of this enlargement, being the second part of the comparison, is declared by the special [A beloved Brother] more then a Servant, for a Brother carrieth with it a better respect, and a farther regard then the name of a Servant. This also is enlarged by a comparison from the greater to the less, especially to me, which comparison also is amplified by another from the greater, how much more to thee, which is farther strengthened by a division or distribution of the Subject, showing wherein he was more bound to Philemon then to Paul himself; Both in the flesh and in the Spirit.

Thus we have seen the resolution of these Verses, and the order which is propounded in them. Now let us see what are the points that require interpretation. First, he saith; [He departed] he useth a kind of diminution, called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, or a qualification of his fact and fault committed against his Master. For he useth a more gentle and friendly word to lessen the offense, that it might not appear to Philemon so great as it was, calling his running away, a departure from his Master. Now the Apostle saith; It may be that he departed, or peradventure he departed. The word, used in this place, is also found. Rom 5, 8. where he saith; Doubtless one will scarce die for a righteous man, but yet for a good man it may be that one dare die. Properly it signifieth quickly or speedily, or hastily: but that signification cannot fitly agree to these places, and therefore it must be turned and translated [It may be he departed.] Where the Apostle doth not speak of this secret work of God precisely and peremptorily, but with an exception or limitation, warily and reuerentlie, least offense should be taken, and encouragement given thereby to the committing of evil. For if he had said simply and absolutely, he departed for this end, and he fled away that he might be converted: other Servants might have been emboldened in wickedness, and have pretended the same cause, and have run away from their Masters: who, being asked the cause why they took them to their heels, would readily answer; It was that I might be converted to the Faith, as Onesimus was: he ran away from his Master, and was saved; I ran away also that I might be saved. So then, the Apostle by this word, noteth out the special providence and mere goodness of God, ordering and governing this Fact, which is not to be drawn into a general practice. In the next place he addeth [For a season.] the word signifieth for an hour, that is; for a small time, even so much as Onesimus was travailing from Colossae to Rome, from his Master to Paul, by whom being converted, he was immediately sent back, which was no long time, but a very little while, even as it were an hour, in comparison both of the time that he before had been with him, and of the time he was like to stay with him hereafter. Wherein also he seeketh farther to lessen his fault & offense by the circumstance of the time, as if he should say; If he had been from thee any long time, or that thou hadst missed him many years, thy wrath might be harder to be appeased; but he hath been from thee a small time, it is but as it were one hour, and therefore have patience toward him, especially considering by his absence, thou shalt gain this, that he shall never depart from thee hereafter, but remain faithful & profitable unto thee many years. Thou mayest well bear the lack of him one hour, seeing thou shalt thereby get the advantage of many months and years. Therefore he addeth, That thou shouldst receive him forever; that is, all the days of his life, unto his death. Thus the phrase is taken in sundry places of the Olde Testament; when circumcision is called an everlasting Covenant: the Passe-over is commanded to be kept holy by an ordinance forever: whereby he meaneth a long time, even unto the coming of Christ in the flesh. So if a Servant would not go away from his Master, because he loved him, and was well with him, the Master should take an Aule and pierce his ear through against the door, and he shall be his servant forever, that is; to the year of Jubilee. So in this place the Apostle saith; Philemons Servant should remain with him forever; that is, a long time, even so long as he should live upon the face of the earth. Lastly, when Paul saith, he must be beloved [In the Flesh, and in the Lord] he meaneth, both in things appertaining to this life, and the life to come. In the Flesh, in regard of his service which he shall perform to his Master, in matters belonging to this Mortall life. In the Lord, in respect of the common faith in Christ. This is the meaning of the words in this division: wherein (as we noted before) howsoever the Apostle doth purposely answer an objection, yet in this answer also he propoundeth two new reasons, to move Philemon to receive his servant. One is in the 15. verse, taken from the secret work of God's providence, which may be thus concluded:

- If the providence of God have governed his departure, that by occasion thereof he is changed, for his good, and for thine, that he might be saved, and thou better served: then receive him again unto thee:
- But the providence of God hath guided his departure, &c.
- Therefore receive him again unto thee.

The second reason is contained in the 16. verse, because Onesimus of a Servant, is made a Brother to Paul, much more to Philemon; and therefore to be loved exceedingly, being bound by a double band; to wit, in the Flesh, & in the Faith. In the Flesh, as a Servant. In the Faith, as a Christian: whereas Paul had only one cause to love him; namely, the common Faith. This reason may be thus framed;

- If Onesimus of a bad Servant be made a good Servant; yea, more then a Servant, even a Brother much to be loved, then receive him.
- But Onesimus is become more then a Servant,
- Therefore receive him.

Thus we see how the Apostle interminglenth Reasons with Objections, and Objections with Reasons. So then according to the former order and Interpretation of the words: the sum of them is thus much in effect: But thou will say unto me; He ran away from me. I grant indeed, and cannot deny, but that his purpose was wicked, and I acknowledge the cause that moved him to leave thee, and to forsake thy house to be very lewd; to wit, the fear of punishment for his offenses, but look, look I say unto the end, purpose, and counsel of God, in his departure from thee, which appeareth to be far from the drift and intent of Onesimus; to wit, by his flight to bring him to Rome, by bringing of him to Rome, to direct him to me in prison, by directing of him to me, to convert him to Christ, and by converting of him to Christ, to change him from a bad and lewd, to a faithful and profitable servant. What said I, a Servant; nay, a degree higher, even a Brother. Consider therefore (I pray thee) how many ways thou art to respect this my son Onesimus, and to accept of him. For in that he is now joined to thee in the common fellowship of the Faith, through the great mercies of God in Christ, thou art bound to regard him hence-forth, not as an ordinary Servant, but as a dear Brother in Christ, equal with thyself in the Covenant of grace, and the inheritance of eternal life: withal, remember how many ways he is joined to thee, rather then to me. He is for the common faiths sake dear, I confess, to me, and tenderly beloved: but he is bound to thee by two bands; first, in respect of the flesh, in that he is of thy charge and family, he is thy Servant, and an helper of thee in the means of thy outward maintenance, and withal, in the Lord Jesus (our common Master) he is thy Brother and fellow-heir of the same promises, being together with thee a member of his body. Now the more ways we are bound to any, the more we should regard them: he is dear indeed to me, but he is nearer to thee then me; and therefore he ought to be much dearer to thee, in regard of this conjunction between you.

From these verses, diverse worthy considerations do arise, which are not unprofitable to be observed of us. First, mark that the Apostle entitleth the shameful running away of Onesimus, the Servant of Philemon, by the Name of a departure. If we will speak properly, a departing is one thing, a running away is another thing. For albeit, everyone that runneth away departeth: yet everyone that departeth, runneth not away from his Master, because he may depart by consent, either having leave and license, or that the time of his service is expired. So a little before, verse 11. he called him [Vnprofitable] whereas he might lawfully have given him an harder Title. This was not done in regard of the offense, because it was small; but in regard of his repentance, because it was great. So he speaketh afterward ver. 18. If he have hurt thee, or if he oweth thee anything; whereas he might have said, he had robbed him, and stolen his goods from him: declaring that we should deal friendly and favorably with those that are truly converted to God, we are not to augment and agrauate a Penitents offenses, but to be gentle and merciful toward him, as often as we make mention of him. Such as have repented, are by all means to be fauored, we cannot be of too mild a spirit toward them.

Secondly, in the Apostles answer to Philemons objection, we may mark; that we are bound to forgive and forget the injuries and offenses done unto us, when once God hath forguien and covered the sins committed against him, and received the Sinner that repenteth to mercy: when God maketh all things turn to our good that love him, and thereby recompenceth by a double benefit, the loss and damage that we have sustained.

Thirdly, we may observe, that Christian Religion doth more strongly bind all persons to their particular callings, and maketh the knot greater then it was. For that which he speaketh here of a Christian Servant, even a Brother, is true of all callings in the Family and Common-wealth. For as a faithful Servant is more then a bare Servant: so a Christian King is more then a King; a Christian Master, is more then a Master; a Christian Father, is more then a Father; a Christian Husband, is more then an Husband: so on the other side, a Christian Wife, is more then a Wife; a Christian Subject, is more then a Subject; and so of all the rest. Great is the Dignity and preeminence of our Christian calling, which (as the Apostle speaketh) is a translating of us from darkness, into the Kingdom of Christ Jesus, so that it is a royal prerogative which they want that are unbelievers.

Fourthly, the Apostle, notwithstanding the great account he maketh of this Servant, doth not deny subjection to his Master, nor exempt him from the condition of a Servant, but he addeth, [More then a Servant.] He saith not, he is no more a Servant, but he is more then a Servant: so that our Christian calling doth not abolish policy, and politique Constitutions, and Domestical government: but rather doth strengthen and sanctify them. He that is called to the truth being a Servant, must not be discouraged and discontented, but rejoice in this, that he is the Lord's Free-man.

Fifthly, when he styleth him [A Brother] he doth after a sort signify he is equal unto him. For albeit, in the Common-wealth and private Family, it be necessary that some should be Superiors, and others Inferiors; and that this disparity and in-equality among men, be the ordinance of God: yet in the Kingdom of God and in Christ Jesus, there is no distinction; There is neither Jew nor Graecian: there is neither Bond-man, nor Free-man: there is neither Male, nor Female: for we are all one in Christ Jesus. When God will punish sin and the breach of his Law, he doth it without respect of persons. Such as are in greatest Dignity and highest place of authority upon the earth, are subject to sicknesses, to diseases, to death; so that (as the Prophet saith) Ye Princes shall fall like others. That which God laid in the beginning upon mankind; In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy Bread, until thou return to the Earth: And to the Woman he said: I will greatly increase thy sorrows and thy conceptions, so that in anguish thou shalt bring forth Children: What Man, or what Woman, can free themselves from this burden, or deliver themselves from this punishment? We see the high, subject unto them as well as the low, the rich as well as the poor, the Prince as well as the people. So on the other side, when God will bestow the graces of his Spirit that accompany salvation, he distributeth them according to his pleasure, and respecteth not the outward person, he maketh no difference between Bond and Free, between Master and Servant, but giveth where it pleaseth him: which serveth to teach patience and contentation to those that live in lower places. God looketh upon them, when he passeth many times by those that are greater in the world; yea, he filleth them when he sendeth the other empty away.

Sixthly, we may observe, that he joineth love with Christian Brotherhood, and calleth Onesimus [A beloved Brother] not only a Servant, not only a brother, but a Brother dear and beloved; signifying thereby, that where a Christian calling is found, there Charity and Love is as a due debt required: so that if any man be converted, to become a true Christian indeed, & thereby is made our Brother (who before was a Christian only in Name & naked profession) even for this cause we are bound to embrace him with the greater love. Every man in his order to be loved, even he that is no Christian, if it be Turk or Infidel: but whosoever is a right Christian, not only in title, but in truth, must more specially be loved of us, and be dear unto us, who is nearly joined unto us as a member of the same body with us, and is to be esteemed of us, not so much another man from us, as one and the same man with us. He that is out of Christ, is another from us, he is diverse to us, and yet is to be loved as a man, as one that beareth the Image of God.

Lastly, observe, that the more causes there are of love and conjunction one with another, the dearer and deeper ought our love to be. There are many degrees of uniting us together, now the more there are, the more degrees should there be of love between us. The conjunction between the Master and the Servant in the private society, ought to be a cause of mutual love: but when to this natural respect there is added a spiritual fellowship and communion in Christ, whereby the Servant becometh more than a Servant, even a Brother with his Master; this requireth a farther degree of love in them one toward the other. Thus we see sundry observations, and all very profitable offered to our considerations out of these words: we cannot stand upon them all, and therefore we will only select some of the prin pall and chiefest of them.

Verse 15. [It may be that he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldst receive him forever.]

In these words we see, how he goeth about to mitigate the wrath and displeasure of Philemon, by teaching him to consider; that those things which were done peruersely and corruptly, are by the direction and determination of God turned to another end. For a joyful end and good issue in evils, is as it were a remedy offered unto us by the hand of God, to blot out offenses. Paul therefore admonisheth Philemon, that he ought not now to be so greatly offended at the flight and running away of his Servant, because it fell out to be the cause of good, not to be repented off. So then he warneth, that this departure of Onesimus from his Master, is not to be waied and pondered by his purpose and meaning, but by the end & event which was most wholesome and profitable. For by this means he was brought to the Apostle, and by hearing of him, was instructed in the way of salvation, to the end that afterward he might be made more diligent and faithful to his Master. Whereby we see, that when he saith [Therefore he departed for a season, that thou shouldst receive him forever:] It is not to be referred to the purpose and intent of Onesimus flying away, who had no such thought or determination ever to come back to his Master again, much less to come back better or a believer: but it hath relation to the providence of God, disposing of his fault and flight to a good and gracious end. Heereby we learn for our instruction, that all things (even sin it self) are by the high providence of God turned to the good of the elect. Such is the infinite wisdom and power of God, that he bringeth evil to a good end.

We see in this place how the Apostle maketh the providence of God to turn the sin of Onesimus to good, and to the benefit of himself and many others. For by running from his Master, he came to Rome: by coming to Rome, he lighted upon Paul: by falling into his company, he heard the Gospel preached: and by hearing the word, he was converted, which had not fallen out if he had not departed: so that his stealing and running away, turned by the goodness of God to his great benefit. So the sin of Adam turned to the greater gain and glory of the elect. To this purpose we may profitably consider the vile and villainous act of Iocobs Sons against their Brother Joseph, who considereth that it was done by the marvelous providence of God, that being sold for a Bond-slave, he might be advanced to that honor and Dignity, whereby he might nourish both his Father and Brethren in the years of Famine: therefore he said unto them when he made himself known: Be not sad, neither grieved with yourselves, that ye sold me hither: for God did send me before you for your preservation. The like we might say of the crucifying of the Lord of Life, he was delivered into the hands of Sinners through the Treason of Judas, and other wicked and cursed Instruments; for Judas betrayed him, the Jews accused him, and Pilate judged him, whereof the Apostles say. Acts. 4. Doubtless against thine holy Son Jesus whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, gathered themselves together, to do whatsoever thine hand and thy counsel had determined before to be done. So then, albeit they wickedly intended nothing but to show their hatred, and testify their envy in the death of Christ, yet God brought another matter out of their malice, and made his endless mercy to man appear in his work of Redemption. God would have him die, Caiaphas would have him die, Pilate would have him die, Judas and the Jews would have him die; but God for our Redemption, they for other ends, as Judas for covetousness; and the Priests for envy. The History of Job is a plain and direct proof of this point that now we have in hand: he was robbed of his goods, deprived of his Servants and Children, through the rage and covetousness of his Enemies, and by the cruelty of Satan: the enemies intended herein to satisfy their own covetousness; the Devil purposed to bring the Servant of God to despair: neither of thē aimed at any good to Job: but God that overruleth and over swaieth all, had another end, to try his patience, to make known his Faith, to try his obedience, and to give the devil the foil & overthrow. Thus then we see, that all things (whatsoever they be) are ordered and disposed by the providence of God, to the good of those that belong unto him, even then when they do not intend it.

The reasons of this Doctrine are apparent, to settle our hearts and consciences therein. The first is, the infinite wisdom and unsearchable power of God, who, as the Apostle teacheth, bringeth light out of darkness, & worketh by contrary means, such as men count foolishness, as to save men by the foolish preaching of the Gospel, that is; which is esteemed among the wise men of the World no better then foolishness. When Christ would make a blind man see, and restore his sight unto him; He spat on the ground, and made Clay of the spittle, and anointed the eyes of the Blind with the Clay. A natural man would think this had been a way and means (judging by human reason) rather to make a man that seeth to be blind, then a man that is blind to see. Christ was able to have healed him with a word, or to have given unto him new eyes: but he chose rather to use these weak means, that in themselves had no power or strength in them.

Thus was Naaman the Syrian cleansed of his foul Leprosy, whereas he imagined the Prophet would come forth unto him, lay his hands upon him, and call upon God for him, it pleased God to work by other means, and to cleanse him by washing seven times in Jordan. We see this in nothing plainer, then in the glorious work of our Redemption. The Lord Jesus, By death, overcame death; by humbling of himself beneath all, he was exalted above all. By making himself poor, he made many rich. By suffering himself to be condemned, he hath brought us to be justified and saved. Thus he also dealeth with his own Children; he bringeth men to Heaven by Hell; he leadeth to immortality by corruption; he guideth them through fire and water to set them in a wealthy place. He worketh not by ordinary ways, by extraordinary, so often as it pleaseth him. When he would comfort, he terrifieth; when he would raise up, he casteth down; when he would revive, he mortifieth; when he would exalt, he bringeth low; when he would make a man rich, he maketh him poor.

This it is which Hannah setteth down in her Song of Thanks-giving; The Lord maketh poor, and maketh rich; bringeth low, and exalteth; the Lord killeth, and maketh alive, bringeth down to the Grave, and raiseth up. This also the Prophet Isaiah signifieth; The Lord shall stand as in Mount Perazim, he shall be wrath as in the Valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his strange work: and bring to pass his Act, his strange Act. This is one of the works, of the strange works: one of the acts, of the strange acts of God, when he turneth evil into good, and ordereth the wicked actions of men to the glory of his Name, and the good of his Children.

Secondly, it is the pleasure of God to confound the wisdom of Man, that cannot attain to great matters, but by great means. For God hath chosen the foolish things of the World to confound the wise, and GOD hath chosen the weak things of the World, to confound the mighty things, And vile things of the World, and things which are despised hath God chosen, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are, that no flesh should rejoice in his presence. God disposeth of all things as pleaseth him, and oftentimes crosseth the devises of men. They intend one thing, but God bringeth to pass another: they purpose one end, but he will have another come forth, to teach man's wisdom to be but foolishness.

Thirdly, he expresseth his wonderful love, making all things that fall out in the world to serve his Church. True it is, the Church of God is beset with many enemies, that as wild Boars seek to root it out of the Earth, as the Devil which is the Captain of this Army, under whose Banners are gathered together the wicked world, the flesh, hell, death, sin; all which multitude as a great host muster together, to work the utter overthrow thereof: yet God that sitteth in heaven, maketh all their endeavours and enterprises further the salvation of his Church. This the Apostle teacheth; We know that all things work together for the best unto them that love God, even to them that are called of his purpose. He blesseth their troubles and afflictions, and worketh in them patience under the cross, humility in suffering, and experience of his mercies, and maketh them confess, that it was good for them that they have been afflicted. We see this evidently in the example of Job's troubles and torments that he endured, there were many work-men set on work to wast his goods, to destroy his Children, to kill his Servants, to afflict his Body, to torment his Soul, all aiming at this to bring him to despair, and all these Wheelles were set to move by the Devil: but the Lord out of their sins wrought his great good; Making trial of his Faith to bring forth patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed. So then, seeing God is able to work, and doth work, both above, and contrary to means that men imagine, seeing he confoundeth the wisdom that is in man, and maketh manifest the abundance of his love to his people, in turning all things that fall out to their good, and making them serve them: we conclude, that God's providence disposeth and ordereth all actions, whether they be good or evil, for the benefit of such as fear him, he will make all things that come to pass, to serve them that serve him.

This doctrine of God's providence is a firm pillar of our faith, and a fundamental point of our Religion, and therefore it is thoroughly to be cleared, and the questions to be answered that they may be raised against it. First, it may be objected, that if God govern all things by his providence, it skilleth not what we do, whether we do good or evil, seeing his will must come to pass, and we cannot change it. It seemeth no matter whether we hear the word, or pray, or labor to do well, inasmuch as his will must be accomplished. I answer, that this is a false and wicked conclusion, which is founded upon our own devise, but doth not follow upon his providence. For albeit, he order all things, yet he hath appointed us to use the means. It is a great error and ignorance to separate the decree of God, and the endeavor of man which he would have coupled together. Rebecca the wife of Isaac, had heard it from the mouth of God that could not lie, that her two sons should make two Nations, and the elder should serve the younger; whereby she knew that Esau could not kill Jacob, howsoever he threatened, and whatsoever he intended, yet did she not tempt God, nor presume carelessly upon his providence, but she used the ordinary means to save and preserve the life of Jacob, and sent him to her Kindred out of his Brothers reach: which she did not in distrust, but in faith. The like we see in Paul when he was in the Ship, and the Angel of God had told him there should be no loss of any man's life, but all should come safe (though with much danger) to the land: yet he saith unto them; Except these abide in the ship ye cannot be safe. Christ our Savior prayeth to his Father to glorify him, and yet he was sure and certain of it before, to teach us, that as we believe God's providence, so we must use, and not refuse the means that he hath ordained. But of this we have spoken else where more at large, and therefore will pass it over.

If all things come to pass by the unchangeable decree of God, then nothing is done freely: and so the liberty of the Creatures will is taken away. I answer, a thing may be done by the unchangeable counsel and necessary decree of GOD, and yet changeably, and contingentlie, and freely, in respect of diverse causes by which it is produced: so that God's unchangeable purpose and man's free will may stand together. We see this in the History of Christ's Passion; the Soldiers brake the bones of the Thieves that were crucified with him, but his bones were not broken. How came this to pass? In their own nature they might have been broken, as well as not broken, as well as the Thieves were: and if we consider the Soldiers, in respect of the Nature of their will, they might have chosen the one or the other. But in regard of God's will and purpose, it was necessary they should not be broken, that the Type might be fulfilled, and that the Scripture might be accomplished.

If God rule all by his providence, how is it that there is so great confusion and disorder under the Sun? How is it, that evil men prosper and flourish, and the godly are driven to the wall, and to the worst? How is it, that there are so many Murthers, Blood-sheds, Cruelties, and Riots. I answer, the faithful are afflicted in this World for their good; That they should not be condemned with the World, as the Prophet confesseth it in his own experience. On the other side, the ungodly receive God's blessings for their farther condemnation, and to make them in-excusable before the judgment of God.

Moreover, there is no disorder in the Worlde in respect of God, albeit there be confusion in respect of Men. For there is order in the greatest disorder that happeneth among us. Hence it is that the Wise man saith, God hath made all things beautiful in his time. Even those things that seem most foul and deformed in our eyes, are yet fair and beautiful, being sent as just and due punishments from God, as the execution of his wrath and vengeance, for the wickedness and unthankfulness of the World, and for the trial of the Faith, patience, and obedience of his Servants. When peace maketh us secure, and security bringeth a forgetfulness of GOD, an abuse of his blessings, and a breaking out into all excess: are not the Sword, the Pestilence, and Famine, justly sent upon us of GOD? When we see men thrive by oppression, and get their goods with Covetousness, unjust dealing, deceit, and unmercifulness to the poor; is it not a just revenge from God's own hand, that an unthrift should arise, and ryotously was the goods that have been naughtily and wrongfully gotten? Mark a little (I beseech you) the example of David, the dear Child of God, so often commended in Scripture. He committed Adultery with the Wife, and caused her Husband to be slain by the Sword of the Ammonites, wherein he sinned grievously, and provoked the Lord exceedinglie. For he is threatened by the Prophet, and the threatening is performed. Nathan is sent unto him to show him his sin, to denounce the chastisement of God, and so to bring him unto repentance; he said: The Sword shall not depart from thy House; Behold, I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own House, and will take thy Wives before thine eyes, and give them to thy Neighbor, and he shall lie with thy Wives in the sight of the Sun, &c. This was the punishment that was threatened, which was most just in respect of God that did decree it, in respect of Nathan that did denounce it, and in respect of David that did deserve it. See now, how it was brought to pass in the house of David. First, Amnon his Son defileth his Sister Tamar: then Absalom another of his Sons, in revenge of that Incest, slayeth his own Brother, and afterward rebelleth against his Father, gathereth a power of Men, and driveth his Father out of Jerusalem, and when he cometh thither, by the counsel of Ahithophell, he causeth a Tent to be spread, and in the sight of all the people, went in and lay with his Fathers Wives. Here are sundry devilish and wicked practices, Incest, Murder, Rebellion, treason, all abominable enormities: and yet God saith; He did all these things. These sins were most foul and filthy to look upon, as they were the inventions of the Devil, the persuasions and practices of evil men: but as they are punishments sent of God upon David for his offenses, they were beautiful in their time, they were the righteous sentence of a just Judge, who cannot deal unjustly in judgment. Thus much of answering these few Objections: Now let us proceed to conclude some Uses out of this truth.

The Uses that will arise from hence, are many, but we will only touch the principal. This Doctrine serveth for reproof, for comfort, and for obedience. For, it serveth to reprove and convince sundry persons, that either know not, or knowing, do abuse this providence of God, whereby he taketh care of all things that are in the World, and directeth them to a right end. And first of all, we set against it, and oppose unto it, the dreams and dotages of Atheists, Epicures, Libertines, and such like Wretches, who either deny wholly there is a God, or make him sit as idle in heaven, as themselves are upon the earth: so that, albeit he know and see all things, yet he worketh or ordereth not the special actions of men that fall out. These are they that pull God out of his Kingdom, and set up Chance and Fortune as an Idol, and make it their God. We must all learn and confess, that the Lord, that is the Creator of Heaven and Earth, is also the Ruler and Governor of all (even the least) Creatures. The whole world, from the highest heaven to the center of the Earth, is subject to his providence. He worketh all things according to the counsel of his own will: he giveth life and breath, he preserveth them: so that nothing cometh to pass without his appointment. Whether they be things with life or without life; with reason, or without reason; general, or particular; evil, or good; Angels, or Men; necessary, or not necessary; all are ruled by his decree. So then, Chance & Fortune are words of the Gentiles, and are blindly used by such as are called Christians, whereas nothing can be done without his will and working, who is omnipotent. What seemeth more casual then the Lot? Yet, The lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposition is of the Lord. Prov. 16. 33. This is it which our Savior teacheth: Are not two Sparrowes sold for a farthing, and one of thē shall not fall on the ground without your Father? Yea, and all the hairs of your head are numbered. So that we see, Chance and Providence cannot stand together, but the one overturneth the other. Secondly, it reproveth such as frō hence take encouragement to commit sin, to break out into sundry outrages, or to live securely, because God can turn it to our good, and maketh it serve to set forth his mercy. This is that presumption and sin of rebellion touched by the Apostle. Why do we not evil that good maycome thereof, whose damnation is just. So in another place; What shall we say then? Shall we continue still in sin, that Grace may abound? How shall we that are dead in sin, live yet therein. We confess indeed, that God is the Sovereign cause of all events that are brought to pass, and whatsoever the enemies of the Church intend and enterprise, whether the Sons of Men, or the Devil and his Angels, he stayeth and hindereth, or represseth and disappointeth, and always disposeth it to the good and salvation of his children. Nevertheless, this doth not excuse or free the Instruments that he useth from fault. They do the will of God blindly and ignorantly, but they do cross his will openly and purposely: so that his providence doth not exempt the wicked from their evil doing. David knew well enough, and confesseth as much, that Shimei was sent of God most justly to curse him, and to rail upon him, when he fled from the face of his son Absalom: yet in his last speech to the King his Son, he doth not defend him or excuse him, But giveth charge and commandment to be revenged of him, and not to account him innocent. If then evil instruments cease not to be guilty before men, much more faulty shall they be before the judgment Seat of the Almighty, and much less shall they escape punishment for transgressing the Law of God. For howsoever wicked men be well moved by God to execute his work by them, who may use any of his creatures according to his own power & pleasure; yet in as much as they (being moved of God) do peruersely and crookedly, and wickedly move themselves, to will and work evil, so that themselves are the workers and causers of their own evil works; whereby it cometh to pass, both that they grievously offend God, and afterward severely punished of him. Wherefore such as resist God, & rebel against his law, and strive against his will, cannot say they have done his will, inasmuch as they had no purpose to keep his ordinances, & therefore make themselves subject to all his judgments. Lastly, this reproveth the Church of Rome, that among many slanders cast out against us, are not ashamed to lay to our charge that we maintaine, that God is the author of sin. We hold, we teach, privately, publicly, by word, by writing, in Schools, in Churches, that God is not the author of sin, but the devil & man's own corrupt will: & whosoever teacheth and preacheth otherwise, if it were an Angel from heaven, we hold him accursed. Hence it is that the Prophet saith, Thou art not a God that loveth wickedness, neither shall evil dwell with thee. So the Prophet Habakuke, Thou art of pure eyes, and canst not see evil: thou canst not behold wickedness. Likewise Zephany saith; The just Lord is in the midst thereof, he will do none iniquity. In like manner the Prophet Zacharias saith; Let none of you imagine evil in your harts against his neighbor, and love no false Oth: for all these are the things that I hate, saith the Lord. Thus we hear that he loveth righteousness, and hateth wickedness, so that he is the author of all good, of no evil. If we would hear this farther opened, the Apostle James is a witness of it; Let no Man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: but every man is tempted, when he drawn away by his own concupiscence, and is enticed. This is the conscionable Doctrine of piety, and the contrary we renounce and abhor as open blasphemy. This also is the opinion of all our Teachers that ever were among us, as were easy to show by infinite Testimonies out of their writings, if it were necessary: Nay, which is more, we teach no more then the School-men of their own side, the Men of their own Religion, the Doctors of their own profession. First, I will declare what we hold touching God's providence ordering all things, even sin it self, which is out of order: and then confirm the same out of Popish Writers, thereby to stop their mouths, and to answer the false imputations that are laid upon us, that if they will not see what we hold, yet they may understand themselves; or if they will needs condemn us, let them condemn their own Prophets. That which we teach of God's actions concerning sin, may be reduced and referred to these three heads. First, he is the Universal cause of all things, he sustaineth mankind, that in him he liveth, and moveth, and hath his being; yea, he upholdeth the being and moving of all his Actions, good and bad: insomuch that no Man could move hand or foot to an Action, no nor have being himself, if God sustained and supported not: so that the act is of God, as also the actions of all Creatures.

Now, if they will not be ignorant, but take knowledge of their doctrine, many among them affirm full as much, that God is immediately the first cause of all things, produced by the second causes: but of things evil, he is the mediate cause, in that he produceth and preserveth the Creature that is the mediat cause of evil. So likewise another saith; A Sinner when he sinneth, doth against the law and will of God in one sense, and in another not against them. He doth indeed against his signified will, and against his precepts and prohibitions, &c. but against the will of his good pleasure he doth not, nor against the effectual ordination of God. In this manner and meaning write many others, that no sin falleth out beside the will and intention of God.

Secondly, we teach that God being free to bestow where he will, to restrain where he will, and being bound to none, doth with-hold his Grace, & withdraw his spirit, and leave the wicked to themselves: whereupon it followeth, that their minds are blinded, their harts are hardened, and they cannot choose but sin. But how, may some man say, doth God harden? I answer, not by inspiring evil into men, not by creating any sin or corruption in their will, which was not there before (as he doth grace in their heart) but by denying them the power of his grace which might mollify them, and by offering them sundry objects, which they convert into occasions of sin, and by delivering them over as a just Judge to the temptations of Satan; whereby they are overcome, and have neither power nor will to stay themselves. For when God departeth, how can it be but Satan should come in place? This is not strange Doctrine among the Papists themselves. One saith; that GOD is a debtor to no man, and therefore he is bound neither to cause that Act, nor the contrary, nor yet not to cause it: but the will of the Creature by God's Law is bound not to cause the act; and so consequently sinneth by doing it.

Lastly, we teach that God doth both order or ordinate the sin that is committed, which is nothing else but a directing of it as pleaseth him, that it go not beyond his will, neither otherwise then seemeth good in his wisdom. Sometimes he restraineth it that it shall not pass nor proceed farther then he appointeth, who giveth bounds unto the Sea. Sometimes he turneth it to another end then the person intended that practiced it. Both these we see evidently in Job's temptations. The Devil desired nothing more then to destroy body and soul, but God restrained his rage, & appointed how far he should go, and what he should not do, and wrought Job's greater good by his greatest malice. Sometimes also he maketh way for sin to pass, that thereby he may punnish one sin with another. And doth not the Church of Rome teach as much? Yes, fully as much. Bellarmino in the third Tome of his Controuersies, saith as much, that God not only permitteth the wicked to do many evils, neither doth he only forsake the godly, that they may be constrained to suffer the things done against them by the wicked; but he also overseeth their evil wills, and ruleth and governeth them, he boweth and bendeth them by working inuisibly in them. Thus we see, that if our Adversaries look well into their words, and know their own voice, t...y shall not need to exclaim and cry out against us, that we make God the Author of sin, seeing the same speeches in the same cause are used by themselves. We freely confess, that God willeth nothing that is formally sin, as he willeth that which is good; but he hateth it, and forbiddeth it absolutely; within us by the light of his holy spirit, and without us by the light of his holy word.

The first entrance of sin into the World, was by the voluntary action of man's will corrupting it self, God inspiring or infusing no evil into it. To conclude, let us know, that as we all agree that every Act is of God, so we must take a difference between the action, & the evil that is in the action. The action itself is of God, but the defect or disorder of the action, is from the Instrument, which being corrupt, can it self bring forth nothing but that which is corrupt. If a man spurn forward a lame Horse that halteth down right, in that he moveth and goeth it cometh from the Rider, but in that he halteth, it is from the Horse himself. If a man cut with an evil Knife, he is the cause of the cutting, but not of evil cutting, but the badness of the Knife is the cause. Or as a cunning Musition, that playeth upon an Instrument that iarreth and is out of tune, the sound is from him that playeth, who observeth due proportion of time, and a right order of striking, but in that it iarreth, it is in the Instrument it self. The like we must hold of God's providence over wicked men and Angels, and all their actions, he putteth no wickedness into them, but he ordereth and governeth that which he findeth in them, and bendeth it by his infinite wisdom and power to a far other end then the evil Instrument intended. The whole cause of sin is truly and properly in Satan, and in our selves.

Secondly, this Doctrine serveth greatly to comfort us, both in prosperity and adversity, and that for the time to come we should repose our whole hope in God. For seeing all things come to pass by the providence of God, so that not so much as sin it self is committed without his will, it is a great comfort many ways to God's Church and chosen Children. We know that he can moderate, and will moderate the rage of the Devil, and the malice of wicked men, that they shall not hurt or hinder their Salvation. For the Devil is the Lord's Servant or slave, to work his will, albeit he do it unwillingly and by compulsion. The Prophet David saith, The Lord is at my right hand, therefore I shall not slide. And when his Soldiers were purposed to stone him to death, he was in great sorrow and heaviness, But he comforted himself in the Lord his GOD. If then we cast up our eyes, and behold the providence of God evermore watching over us, we shall not doubt of the love and goodness of God, nor of deliverance to come from his hand, albeit we see no ordinary means, but all things go a contrary way. This made the holy Man Job say; Though the Lord would kill me, yet will I trust in him. And the Prophet, Though thou cast me into the place of Dragons, and into the shadow of death, yet will I fear none evil. The church being in great perplexity and danger in the days of Mordecai, he was not without comfort, he lived not without hope, he ceased not to use lawful means for the delivery of it, he was not at his wits end, nor dispaired of an happy issue, because his heart was grounded and established in the Doctrine of God's providence, as appeareth by his words to Ester: Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the Kings House, more then all the Jews, for if thou holdst thy peace at this time, comfort and deliverance shall appear to the Jews out of another place, but thou and thy Fathers House shall perish: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the Kingdom for such a time.

Again, this providence of God in everything, teacheth contentation of mind in every estate; yea, in adversity when we lie under the Cross, so that all things go against us; forasmuch as God's providence hath appointed us our lot and portion. When we live in peace, and have abundance of outward means to maintain us; as plenty, riches, health, pleasure, friends, liberty, and such like, we must remember from whom they come, and so be put in mind to be thankful for them, because they come not to us by chance, but by God's providence: so that we must not barely look upon them, nor wholly rest upon them, but behold his goodness and blessing in them. For if we consider that all prosperity cometh from him; as Meat, Drink, ease, peace, and all plenty, who is not pricked forward, and stirred up unto Thanksgiving towards so loving and bountiful a Father? Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, In all things give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus. The Prophet Isaiah, complaineth of the unthankfulness of the Jews towards GOD, I have nourished and brought up Children, but they have rebelled against me: the Ox knoweth his Owner, and the Ass his Masters Cribbe, but Israel hath not known me, my people hath not obeyed me. The Prophet David dealt otherwise, and behaved himself with greater duty, teaching us all what to do, when he saith, What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me? I will take up the cup of salvation, and praise the name of the Lord. But when these outward things, whereby life is maintained do fail us, we must not fail to remember whence famine, war, pestilence, sickness, trouble, and affliction come, that there is no evil in the City which the Lord hath not done.

Moreover, let us depend upon him for the time to come, assuring our selves that he will not leave us, nor forsake us. He giveth us every day experience of his mercies, so that by remembrance of benefits received from him, we cannot doubt of his favor toward us. Lastly, this should be a very strong reason unto us, not to be unmeasurably dismayed, nor excessively offended, when offenses and great evils break out among us, as oftentimes it falleth out; whereby many are ready to shrink back, and others are much disquieted to see the Church of God so troubled. We are not to think it strange, or to forsake the faith through these scandals: for God would not suffer any evil to come to pass, unless out of that evil he were able to bring good; and out of that sin to bring forth righteousness, to the glory of his great name, and for the salvation of his deer Church. He would never have left Adam unto himself, if he had not determined out of his fall, to gain praise to himself, and to provide better for his people. It is necessary that offenses come, but woe to that man by whom they come: Let us not therefore fret our selves because of the wicked men, neither be envious for the evil doers, for they shall soon be cut down like grass, and shall wither as the green herb. And we must rest, and be resolved assuredly, that God doth not allow or favor their sin, nor purposeth to free them from the guilt and punishment of sin, howsoever he turneth their wicked purpose to a good end. For sin is the transgression of his Law. But God never swarueth nor stayeth from the strait rule of his own will, neither putteth wickedness into man; but as the earth affording sap and moisture as well to the evil trees, as the good, cannot be reprov'd, because the cause why the evil trees bring forth evil fruit is of themselves and their own nature, or as the Sun that raiseth evil smells, and noisome fauors from unsavory puddles, cannot justly be found fault withal, because the reason thereof is not in the Sun beams, but in those corrupt places; even so, when God disposeth to good ends the sins of men that proceed from the instigation of the Devil, and abide in the ungodly themselves, he cannot be called the cause or author of sin, although by his providence he moveth all things, yea, even the ungodly, that are not able to move or remove themselves.

Lastly, seeing God's providence extendeth to everything that is, and disposeth it according to his own pleasure, it directeth us in our obedience, & putteth us in mind of a Christian duty; namely, to be patient in all adversity. If we consider that nothing can befall us, but that which is sent by the fatherly will and counsel of God, who hath always just causes to exercise his children with chastisements, either to try them, or to humble them: we shall learn to submit our selves to him, to hold our peace because he hath done it, and to keep silence that we offend not against him. This will keep us that we do not rage against second causes, that we do not mutter and murmur against God, that we seek not revenge against our enemies. We are ready in sickness to complain, in poverty to repine, in injuries and oppressions to retaille and return like for like, and in all troubles to be impatient, and to use unlawful means to deliver our selves, not attending the Lord's leisure; and the reason is, because the providence of God is not learned of us, we cannot depend upon him, we know not that he hath all things in his power to employ them to his glory, and to use them to our good. We heard before, that Joseph was sold by his own brethren, & made a servant and slave to the Egyptians. If he had only called to mind the unkind & unjust dealing of his unnatural brethren, could he have retained a brotherly affection toward them? Could he forgive the wrong offer'd unto him? Could he have repress'd his rage, and staid him self from revenge and recompense, to give them according to their deeds and deserts toward him? But when he lifted up his mind to the Lord, and saw how God had disposed their treachery to another purpose then they meant or imagined, he forgave them their offense, he inclined to mercy, and of his own accord did comfort his Brethren, saying; But now be not sad, neither grieved with yourselves that ye sold me hither, for God did send me before you, to save you alive in this land, and to preserve you by a great deliverance: Now then, you sent me not hither, but God himself, who made me a Father unto Pharaoh, & Lord of all his house, and Ruler throughout all the Land of Egypt. So the holy man Job, if he had rested in the roberies of the Chaldeans & Sabaeans, by whom he was hurt and annoyed, had by and by been kindled with wrath, and set on fire to work revenge; but because he ascended higher, and acknowledged the work of a superior hand, he possessed his soul with patience, & comforted himself with this notable saying, left unto us for our imitation, The lord hath given, & the Lord hath taken away, as it pleaseth the Lord, so is it come to pass. The like we might say of David, when Shimei cursed him, as he fled to save his life, And Abishai the son of Zeruiah said unto the King, Why should this dead Dog curse my Lord the King? Let me go now I pray thee, & take away his head. He answered again, What have I do with you ye sons of Zeruiah? For he curseth, even because the Lord hath bidden him curse David; Who dare then say, wherefor hast thou done so? Behold, my son which came out of mine own bowels, seeketh my life, then how much more now may this son of Iemini? Suffer him to curse, for the Lord hath bidden him.

He knew that God's providence would turn this to the best, & therefore he was ready to forgive the wrong which this wicked man measured unto him. Thus doth the Apostle Peter speak comfortably to the people that gave their consent to the killing and crucifying of Christ whom God raised from the dead, Now brethren, I know that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your Governors; but those things which God before had shown by the mouth of all his Prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath thus fulfilled. Such therefore as are malicious, to desire revenge and cannot be entreated to moderate their anger, never understood the Doctrine of God's providence. We have indeed many excellent reasons, and notable Meditations to move us to put up wrongs that are done us, and to root out of our hearts the weed of revenge; and instead thereof, to set the sovereign plant of patience and longsuffering, brought out of the Garden of God, which is the Scripture, that it may grow and flourish among us. And never was there more need of them, never was there less practice of them; for now the manner is, (as one truly speaketh) a word and a blow, a word and a stab, a word and a Writ. He that hateth his Brother, is a Man-slayer, for rash anger, is the Fore-runner of murder, and a degree and step to murder. God is of a patient Nature, and slow to anger; Christ Jesus is meek and lowly, whose example we ought to remember, that we may repress all choller, and so find rest unto our souls: for he forgiveth more to us, then we can forgive to others. The wrath of God hangeth over all their heads that retain wrath; for such as will not forgive, are in danger never to be forgiven, seeing we ask forgiveness, as we our selves do forgive. It is a property of love to suffer and bear, and it is a note of injustice to revenge our own quarrels; for we take away the honor of God, and make our selves the parties that receive wrong, the witnesses that accuse, the Judges that condemn, and the Executioners that punish, which is against all Law of God and Man.

Lastly, all wrongs done to us by wicked men, come by God's providence, to which we are to submit and subject our selves, knowing what he is able to do, and what he hath promised to do toward us, even make all things fall out for our comfort and salvation. When Saul persecuted David in the wilderness, and had enclosed and compassed him round, ready to fall upon him, there came a Messenger to Saul saying, Hast thee and come, for the Philistines have invaded the Land: Wherefore, Saul returned from pursuing David, and went against the Philistines. They were the means of David's deliverance, but they had no purpose to do him good, or to deliver him out of the hands of Saul, or to free him out of trouble; for their intent was wicked, ambition moved them, malice carried them, revenge furthered them, and covetousness resolved them to go to work, and invade the Israelites. Nevertheless, the Lord used their unlawful act to his own glory, and over-ruled them to do that which they never dreamed, even to be the Instruments of preserving David, that was near to death.

To conclude, by all these things it appeareth, that the Doctrine of God's providence, is the ground of all godliness; but where it is denied, the foundation of Religion is pulled asunder. For, until we know and consider, that nothing happeneth by hap-hazard, but all things are swayed by the determination of the most highest, so that a drop of rain doth not fall, a puff of wind doth not blow, a clap of thunder doth not sound, a flash of lightning doeth not shine, an Arrow of famine cannot fly, a plague of pestilence cannot destroy, a judgment of War cannot arise without his appointment; we shall never be thankful for his benefits, we shall never be patient in troubles, we shall never conceive hope of delivery out of our adversities. And thus much of God's providence in the departure of Onesimus out of the house of Philemon, which being evil, God turned it to good as well of him that departed, as of him from whom he departed.

Here we see, that the Apostle to a loss of small continuance, opposeth a perpetual use, that the Master should gain of his servant. For to persuade him to patience in regard of his loss and hindrance, and to prevail with him to be reconciled toward him that had so offended him, and caused his loss; he doth assure him of gain & advantage; namely, that his short departure should recompense him sufficiently, with a continual possessing of him, being assured to retain him forever. We learn from hence, that God doeth oftentimes take away from his servants, many outward and earthly commodities, to the end he might bestow upon them, both mo and greater blessings. When the Mother is determined to wean her child, and take away the breast from him, it is not to famish him, but to give him a diet and food that is fitter for him. So when it pleaseth God to deny to his servants such blessings as they desire, he recompenseth the wants of them with benefits of a more high and heavenly nature. This we see in the example of Abraham, when he was sent by the calling of God out of his Country, from his Kindred and Fathers house, there was given to him and his posterity, the whole Land of Canaan; yea, God entered into a Covenant with him to be his God, and to acknowledge his posterity to be his people; so that albeit he wanted the pleasure of his Country, and the delight of his Kindred, yet he gained the friendship and favor of GOD by obeying his calling and commandment. We see this in Jacob, he was robbed of his son Joseph, by the treachery of his sons, and lived a long time without him whom he so much desired; yet in the end he beheld him in glory and dignity, and blessed him & his posterity. We see the same in Joseph himself, he was cast out of his Fathers house by his brethren, he was sold into the hands of strangers, he was cast into close prison, he endured many slanders, troubles, and crosses that fell upon him, but he bare them patiently by Faith, and in the end he was delivered, and became Ruler over the Land of Egypt. He wanted his Father, and his Father wanted him for a season, but in the end they were restored either to other, with full advantage. Let us set before our eyes the example of Job, he lost his Goods, his Children, his Servants, his Cattle, he became poor, and yet was patient, and in the end God made an happy issue of all his afflictions, so that he had them doubled and restored unto him twofold. Our Savior Christ beateth upon this point, teaching his Disciples, Whosoever shall forsake houses, or Brethren, or Sisters, or Father, or Mother, or Wife, or Children, or Lands, for my Names sake, he shall receive an hundred fold more, and shall inherit everlasting life. For when Peter said to the Lord, Loe, we have forsaken all, and followed thee, Christ answered him; Verily, I say unto you, there is no man that hath forsaken Lands or house, &c. for my sake and the Gospels, but he shall receive an hundred fold now at this present, houses and brethren, and Sisters, and Mother, and Children, and Lands, with persecution, & in the world to come, eternal life. This appeareth farther unto us, in the Parable of the rich Glutton, and poor Lazarus, one of them was clad in Purple, and fared deliciously every day; the other, lay at the rich man's gate, who was not admitted to his Table, and continued without the doors, who was not admitted into his house: God denied unto him the blessings of this life, but he gave him the riches of faith, and received him into eternal glory. All these places of Scripture, and examples of the godly, teach us, that God denying unto his Children the things of this life, doeth it not, because he hateth their persons, or enuyeth their good, or purposeth their destruction, but rewardeth the lack and loss of bodily things with spiritual; of earthly things with heavenly; of transitory things with eternal; of lesser things with greater.

Thus the Doctrine is made plain by these testimonies, but will be made much plainer, if we consider the Reasons following. First, the loosing of these outward things for a good cause, is as the seed season when we sow our Corn, looking for a plentiful Harvest, as an after blessing. There is that scattereth, and more is increased, as the wiseman speaketh. So the scattering away, and loosing of the commodities of this life, and the pleasures thereof, when God requireth it at our hands, and calleth for it, shall be no loss, but a gain; no hindrance, but a benefit; no pulling of us down, but a setting of us up; no undoing of us, but an enriching of us forever. This is it which the Psalmist setteth down, speaking of the return of the people out of captivity, They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy, they went weeping, and carried precious seed, but they shall return with joy, and bring their sheaves. Where he compareth the people going into captivity, to needy Husbandmen, who cast into the ground for seed, that which was left them for succor and sustentation of their life, and returning out of captivity, to reapers which rejoice at the abundance of increase which they find: as if he should say, the Jews, who were sad and heavy, when they were carried Captives into Babylon, shall be joyful when they obtain the fruit of their hope, which is a glorious deliverance.

Secondly, God is our exceeding great reward, with whom it is an easy thing to bless and increase, to restore and multiply the good things given unto us. When God would comfort Abraham whom he had brought out of Vr of the Caldees, to dwell in the Land of Canaan, he said unto him, I will make of thee a great Nation, and will bless thee, and make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing; I will also bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curse thee, and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed. If then he will restore that which he hath taken away, and make up the breach that his hand hath made, we cannot doubt of his liberality toward us. The poor widow had but an handful of Meale in a barrel, and a little Oil in a Cruze, but they were increased, not wasted; multiplied, not diminished, unto the time that the Lord sent rain upon the earth, 1 Kings 17, 14. Whether therefore we consider, that the loss sustained for Christ's sake, and the Gospel, is rather a sowing then a loosing, and a laying up, rather then a scattering abroad; or whether we consider, that God is rich in mercy, and the most bountiful rewarder of his servants; in both respects we conclude, that lesser blessings are sometimes taken from us, that we may have greater supplied unto us, whereby our gain is made better then our loss.

This Doctrine being duly weighed, will be very profitable both to comfort such as are in trouble, and to instruct such as are ignorant, and to direct such in their obedience, as wander out of the right way. First, let this be our comfort, when we sustain any losses, or feel any wants, though they be never so great, though we must depart from lande and life, yet in this case, it shall be a gain and advantage unto us. For to gain and save where we ought not, is a certain loss. This gain is little, but the loss is great; it is to enjoy temporal things, and to loose eternal; it is a getting of the earth, and a loosing of heaven; a getting of substance, and a loosing of the soul. Miserable is this gain, and wretched is the lucre that is thus dearly bought & purchased. On the other side, to be content to forsake and renounce all for Christ's sake, shall in the end bring with it assured and perpetual riches. For, what is it that we have not received? It is God that hath made us, & not we our selves; it is he that hath enriched us, and not we our selves; and whatsoever we have, whether it be much or little, we have it not of our selves; and therefore we hold all of him, as Tenants at will, he may re-enter and dispossess us of them when it pleaseth him, so that we must render them up into his hands, when he calleth for them, and be resolute to leave them, when he demandeth them of us.

Let us not therefore shrink back for fear of trouble and persecution, but set before us the example of Christ, who hath gone before us, he for the joy that was set before him, endured the Cross, and despised the shame, and is set at the right hand of the throne of God. The servant must not be above his Master, nor the disciple above his Lord. We must account it an honor to bear about us the marks of Christ Jesus in our body. If we be partakers of his afflictions and patience, we shall also be partakers with him of his glory. This is it which he exhorteth us unto unto. Math. 16. If any man will follow me, let him forsake himself, and take up his cross, and follow me: for whosoever will save his life, shall loose it; and whosoever shall loose his life for my sake, shall find it: for what shall it profit a man, though he should win the whole world, if he loose his own soul? Or what shall a man give for recompense of his soul? Whosoever is not thus persuaded and resolved for the profession of the Gospel, and the faith of Christ, and the witnessing of the truth, to endure tribulation, and to suffer persecution, is not yet a Christian in deed, but in name; not in heart, but in show. So then, howsoever we be afflicted and made sorrowful for a season, yet the time will come, when our souls shall be comforted, and we have our heads lifted up, which blessed day, we ought to attend with all patience, and desire with earnest Prayer.

Secondly, seeing God sometimes depriveth his dear Children of outward and earthly blessings, but rewardeth them with heavenly; it serveth notably to instruct us in the right meaning and understanding of the reason annexed to the fifth Commandment, where such as Honor Father and Mother, have a promise of a special blessing made unto them, that they shall live long upon the earth. Where we see, that godly Children have the promises of this life made unto them. For Godliness is profitable unto all things, and hath the promises both of this life, and of the life to come. And on the other side, the fearful Judgments of GOD are oftentimes upon rebellious and disobedient Children. The Wiseman saith, The eye that mocketh his Father, and despiseth the instructions of his Mother, let the Ravens of the valley pick it out, and the young Eagles eat him.

But we see it come to pass many times, otherwise then hath been spoken of; and some will object, that wicked persons, & disobedient Children live long, and contrariwise, good men & obedient Children, do oftentimes die quickly, they prolong not their days to old age, but depart hence in the prime of their youth. I answer, first touching the ungodly, then concerning the godly. The ungodly indeed do continue long upon the earth, and die full of days, but it is to their farther vengeance, and to heap up wrath against the great day of the fierce wrath of God, and to fill up the greater measure of their sins, that God also may fill unto them the greater measure of his Judgments. This we see in Cain, who was tormented with fear of punishment, and gripings of Conscience, and horror of hell, and feeling of sin, which was worse unto him then many deaths. It had been a great benefit to him, if he had died so soon as he had been borne, for then he had not sinned so horribly, then he had not murdered his natural brother so shamefully, then he had not offended God so outrageously; but now, the longer he lived, the more sins he committed, and the greater judgments he deserved, and the heavier torments he endured. This we may say of all the ungodly, who commit sin with all greediness, and consequently live to their heavier punishment. But concerning the godly, he calleth them many times out of this present life betimes unto himself, and provideth far better for them, then if he had given them a long life. For he taketh and translateth them from the miseries of this world, to the joys of eternal life. And it is often good for us, that the Lord take us soon from hence; for as thereby he bringeth us to a better place, so we reap a double benefit.

First, we are kept from the corruptions of the world, for living in a corrupt air, we are ready to gather infection, and to take the scent as quickly as flax is apt to take the fire. But by taking us from hence into a sweeter dwelling, we are prevented & kept from many sins which otherwise we would fall into. This is it which the Prophet David showeth, The rod of the wicked shall not rest on the lot of the righteous, lest the righteous put forth their hand unto wickedness: do well, O Lord, unto those that be good and true in their harts. He knoweth whereof we are made, he seeth our infirmities, & how prone we are to decline after evil examples that are set before us; so that it is a benefit unto us, to go hence before we have corrupted our hearts, and defiled all our ways. Enoch lived in a most dangerous time, when wickedness began to cover the face of the earth, but because he walked with God, he was taken away, that malice should not change his heart. This is it which the Apostle Paul testifieth. For this cause many are weak and sick among you, & many sleep: for if we would judge our selves, we should not be judged: But when we are iduged, we are chastened of the Lord, because we should not be condemned with the world.

Secondly, God dealeth mercifully with his people, in removing them out of this life, that they should not feel the present miseries, nor see the imminent calamities which he knoweth hang over them, and is determined to bring upon the sons of men, and be overborn and swept away by them with others. This we see in the example of Abijah the son of Jeroboam that made Israel to sin, who is branded with this note of reproach in sundry places of the holy history, That he did sin, & made Israel to sin: the Prophet said of this one only good son of this wicked father, that he should die being a child, and all Israel should mourn for him, & he only of Jeroboam should come to the grave, because in him there is found some goodness toward the Lord God of Israel in the house of Jeroboam. God in great mercy toward him, took him away being a child, that he should not be infected and afflicted. For if he had lived to see the white hairs of his old age, he had been in great danger of the fearful sins of his fathers house, & been in great affliction to behold the horrible judgments that were to fall upon that godless and graceless family. The like might be said of good Josiah, he was gathered betimes to his fathers, and was put in his grave in peace, that his eyes should not see all the evil which the lord would bring on the land. He took him out of this world, before his wrath fell upon the ungodly. This is it which the Prophet Isaiah telleth us, The righteous perisheth, & no man considereth it in heart: & merciful men are taken away, and no man understandeth that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come: Peace shall come, they shall rest in their beds, everyone that walketh before him. Lastly, God calleth away his children out of this transitory life, to make them partakers of a blessed life, Seeing they are blessed that die in the lord, they cease frō their labors & their works follow them. Neither do the godly lose by this bargain, neither doth God falsify his word, but is better then his promise. For if he take away a short & frail life, and reward with a long and eternal life, the promise faileth not, but changeth for the better. Change (as we commonly say) is no robbery; but this change is a commodity. If a man promised yard of cloth, and perform an ell; if he promise silver, and pay gold; if he promise to give a cottage, and put him in possession of a Palace; if he promise little, and perform much, he breaketh not his promise, but performeth it with advantage; & thus doth the Lord deal with us, who is not as man that he should lie, nor as the son of man that he should deceive, who oftentimes granteth more then we ask, and bestoweth more then we beg, but never denieth that which he promiseth. If any farther reply, how then is God true in his promises, y^t promiseth long life in this life. I answer, that all God's promises concerning earthly blessings, must be understood with a condition, namely, so far forth as he shall see them to be expedient for his glory, and our salvation. But so far as long life shall be a benefit unto us, so far he will give it; but if in his all-seeing, and all-serching wisdom he know it to be better for us to dy then to live, to be gathred to our fathers, then to continue with our children, he taketh us away, and recompenseth the want of temporal life, with a kingdom of eternal glory. This is it which the Apostle expresseth, who repeating this blessing to come upon them that honor father & mother, doth not only say, That thou mayest live long on earth, but addeth, That it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long upon earth. So then, long life is not always a blessing, for sometimes it is better to leave the world then to live in it; to depart out of it, then to enjoy it. The ungodly man, the longer he liveth, the greater is his sin, and his condemnation for sin. This the wiseman setteth down, Thogh a sinner do evil an hundred times, & God prolongeth his days yet I know that it shall be well with them that fear the Lord, & do reverence before him: but it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, he shall be like a shadow, because he feareth not before God. Heerunto agreeth the Prophet Isaiah, There shall be no more there a child of years, nor an old man that hath not filled his days, but he that shall be an hundred years old, shall dy as a young man, but the sinner being an hundred year old shall be accursed. Thus then we see how to expound the promise of long life, which God performeth really, or if he take away such as are godly and obedient, he recompenceth it more fully with a better life, and so he bestoweth a great deal more then he taketh away, and granteth a better measure then he withheld from them.

Lastly, we learn for our obedience when we suffer losses, not to be vexed through impatency, nor to break out in storming, fretting, and fuming manner against God, but to rest our selves upon him, being ready to bless his name, & not to cast away all hope & confidence of being restored. It is a worthy saying of the Prophet to Amaziah K. of Judah, being like to loose a great sum of money which he had disbursed for the leuying of foreign forces, The Lord is able to give thee more then this. If he see it good & profitable for us, he can and will repay it in the same kind; for who looseth for God's cause, & doth not get? but if he do not recompense earthly things with earthly, he will assuredly bestow upon us such riches as are immortal & immutable, & such a treasure as is eternal, not fading, but enduring forever in the heavens. A notable practice heerof we have in Job, ch. 19. in all his troubles (which were exceeding great) he comforted himself in this, I know that my Redeemer liveth, & that I shall see him in the last day. Somtimes he doth restore in the same kind, that which we have left, & seemeth to be lost: we see in the former example of Job what a blessed end the Lord made; so if we will wait with patience, and tarry his leisure, & be content with his works, we shall behold the end better then the beginning. Moreover, we see the merciful dealing of god toward his children, from whō he withholdeth personal blessings. To some he giveth strength of body, swiftness of foot, quickness of sight, readiness of hearing, & aptness of the hand, together with a due proportion & comliness of every part. But to others, he denieth these things, so y^t we see some blind, others lame, crooked, deaf, deformed. Notwithstanding, God oftentimes supplieth these wants, and recompenseth these infirmities with a most plentiful measure of better, that is, of heavenly graces. We see this in the example of the blind man mentioned by the Evangelist John, he wanted the sight of his bodily eyes, but he had a greater light shining in his heart, & a deeper insight into the doctrine of salvation, then the chief of the Pharisees that were accounted the only Rabbies and masters in Israel, so that we may truly say, that the blindman did see, and they that thought themselves to have their eye-sight were stark blind. For when the Pharisees said of the Messia, We know not from whence this man is, the blind man answered & said unto thē, Doubtless this is a marvelous thing, that ye know not whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine eyes: now we know that God heareth not sinners, but if any man be a worshipper of God, & doth his will, him heareth he, &c. if this man were not of God, he could have done nothing. This was a worthy and open confession of the great work of God that had been wrought upon him, wherein he saw more true and heavenly light then all his enemies, who then boasted of the name of the church, and cast this simple man out of the Synagogue. But if we consider the poor man of the one side, & the proud pharises on the other side, which of them was most blind, and whither of thē was a member of the true Church? Surely, God gave a marvelous light of knowledge to his weak servant, that he was not ashamed to confess Christ Jesus, according to the measure of grace given him: whereas the blind Pharisees were blind, leaders of the blind, & saw nothing. Heerupon Christ saith, I am come unto judgment into this world, that they which see not, might see: & that they which see, might be made blind. And when the Pharisees which were with him heard, these things, & said unto him, Are we blind also? He answered, If ye were blind, ye should not have sin, but now ye say, we see: therefore your sin remaineth. Let us not therefore despise such as have infirmities or deformities of the body, nor upbraid them with them, which are not in their powers to put away; rather let us take heed of the blots and blemishes of the soul; to wit, of sin, which maketh the greatest scab and scar, and bringeth reproach unto the person. Let us beware of the blindness of the mind, of the hardness of the heart, of the wounds of the soul, and of halting with God. The blindness of the mind is a sin, and the punishment of sin, so that God is offended with it: whereby it differeth from the blindness of the body, which indeed is a certain affliction, but it is no transgression; it is a kind of misery, but no iniquity; it is a cross, but it is no sin. But the inward blindness of the mind is in it self a sin and breach of God's Law, and maketh a man culpable of judgment, and guilty of eternal death: because none is so blinded, but he hath first pulled out his own eyes, and refuseth the light of the Gospel offered unto him through the hardness of his heart. Again, this ought to be a special comfort unto us, and to suffice to assuage all grief conceived for the want of earthly blessings, if God have denied unto us the use of one or many of our members, as of our eyes, our ears, our tongue, our hands, our feet, and have made us blind, or dumb, or deaf, or lame, or maimed, let us not be discomforted or sink down under the burden; but rather considering the recompense that he giveth us another way, and the supply that he maketh by spiritual graces, let us humbly give him thanks, remembering that it is better for us, that one of our members perish, then the whole body should be cast into hell. We see the holy man Job, having had great losses and damages brought upon him to his great hindrance and decay in earthly things, acknowledged the hand of God in it, & gave him the glory, saying, Naked cam I out of my mothers womb, and naked shall I return thither: the Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken it, blessed be the name of the Lord. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, Hearken my beloved Brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, that they should be rich in faith, & heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him, James 2. If God have made me blind, yet if he have given me the eyes of my mind, to see the mystery of faith in this life, and the excellency of glory reserved for me and all his Saints in the life to come, I have wherewith to comfort me abundantly in the want of bodily sight. If God have made me lame, & to halt with my foot, and thereby want many outward pleasures, that many seek and find; yet if he have vouchsafed this mercy unto me, to make me walk with a right foot to the truth of the Gospel, I cannot want sound comfort and inward peace to my own soul. God looketh not upon the person of man, he accepteth no man for his outward form and feature of the body, but looketh upon the grace and garnishing of the heart; so that albeit we be every way deformed, yet if we be thoroughly reformed in the inner man, we shall be accepted before him a thousand times more, then such as have the greatest Ornaments of the body, but have nothing to decke and adorn the soul.

[It may be he departed for a season.]

Note here how the Apostle describeth the sin of Onesimus committed against his Master: he doth not aggravate and exaggerate his offense with big & swelling words, to show the greatness of his sin, but doth lessen it by gentle & mild terms whereby he calleth it. His running away he nameth a departing; his absence from his Masters house & service, the missing of him as it were an hour. This the apostle speaketh, not so much to assuage the anger of Philemon provoked thorough the offense of his servant, as to testify his unfeigned repentance, whereby he had buried and blotted out the wickedness which he committed by running from his Master, & by robbing of him. We learn hereby, that the falls & sins of our brethren that repent, are not to be increased with odious and extreme words. Whensoever (I say) we see the fruits of unfeigned repentance in any of our brethren that have fallen into sin, and been overtaken through the weakness of the flesh, we are to bind up their wounds, as careful Surgeons, and to comfort them with the sweet promises of the Gospel; not to revile them, or rail at them, or reproach them for their former falls: we must not speak the most, or the worst, or the hardest of them, but in mildness of spirit mollify the greatness of the sin what we can. This Doctrine is made evident unto us, by many testimonies and examples in the word of God. When Joseph saw his Brethren sad and grieved with themselves, because they had sold him into Egypt, he comforteth them with the providence of God, whose work it was to have him sent and sold into the hand of strangers, Now then you sent me not hither, but the Lord, who hath made me a father unto Pharaoh, & Lord of all his house, and Ruler throughout all the land of Egypt. This we see in the Lord himself toward Job, who reproveth him for much weakness that he had shown in the combat and temptation: yet when he had repented in dust and ashes, and laid his hand upon his mouth, the wrath of the Lord was kindled against his three friends, because they had not spoken of him the thing that is right, like his servant Job. The like practice appeareth in Nathan, toward David, whom he reproveth: first covertly and closely under a parable, then openly and evidently he chargeth him with adultery and murder, together with great unthankfulness toward God that had been so gracious to him; but when he repented and humbled himself under the stroke of the two-edged sword of God's word, saying, I have sinned against the Lord; the Prophet doth no more upbraid him with those foul and filthy sins of committing Whoredom, and shedding of blood, but said unto him, The Lord also hath put away thy sin, thou shalt not die. Thus did Christ our Savior deal with the woman taken in adultery, even in the very act, brought before him by the Scribes and Pharisees, he preached unto her the Gospel upon her repentance, I do not condemn thee, Go and sin no more. The like we see in the Apostles dealing with the incestuous Corinthian; before his conversion, the Apostle chargeth him with fornication, and Such fornication as is not named among the Gentiles, that one should have his Fathers wife, and reproveth the whole Church that they had not put him away from among them: yet when he had confessed his sin, and testified his repentance by his unfeigned sorrow for his sin, the Apostle would have his sin forgiven, and his person comforted, Least he should be swallowed up with overmuch heaviness. Likewise remembering the Corinthians what they were in the time of their ignorance, Thieves, Oppressors, Fornicators, Idolaters, Drunkards, Railers, & riotous persons, by their conversion to the Gospel, and Faith in Christ, they were changed to a better life, and so could no longer be charged by such sins, Ye are washed, ye are sanctified, ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, & by the spirit of our God. Whereby we see this truth plainly proved unto us, that it is our duty not to aggravate and amplify the sins of such as have repented them of their sins.

To this duty we shall be better directed and strengthened in the truth of it, if we mark the reasons. For first, we are not to increase in words the sin of a penitent person, because love worketh softness and gentleness in us, a care of the good name of our Brother, and banisheth all evil surmises & suspicions from us. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, Love is patient. When Peter exhorteth us, that above all things we should have fervent love among us, to the end he may confirm his exhortation, and show that there is nothing more profitable unto the faithful, then to maintain mutual Charity; he bringeth this reason, For Love covereth the multitude of sins. If this love rule in our hearts, & remain among us one towards another, it bringeth excellent benefits, and we avoid innumerable evils. But if hatred bear sway, men in biting and tearing one another, are ready to consume one another, to reproach and detract one from another, to slander and defame, to strike and quarrel one with another, without measure or mercy.

Secondly, we are not always to upbraid our Brethren, and cast them in the teeth with their former falls, because we must account it sufficient, that they have been checked and teproued by us, or by the mouths of many witnesses. The nature of God himself, is gentle toward us, that he will not always chide, nor keep his anger forever. So ought we to deal one toward another. For, if he doth not deal with us after our sins nor reward us according to our iniquities, we should have compassion one toward another. If he know whereof we are made, and remember that we are but dust, we must also learn, that we have all need to be forgiven, as there is no man but desireth to be forgiven. If then it be available to our Bretherens good to have them reprov'd, we ought not to proceed to reviling of them, and railing upon them for those offenses which they have forsaken. This is the reason touched by the Apostle, mentioning the transgression and conversion of the incestuous person, who washed away with his tears, the guiltiness of his sin, he saith; It is sufficient unto the same man, that he was rebuked of many, so that now contrary-wise, ye ought rather to forgive him and comfort him, &c. If then, it be sufficient to reprove; then to revile and reproach, is more then sufficient, even superfluous, and unprofitable, and uncharitable, as we noted before.

Thirdly, whensoever our Brethren repent, we are bound to testify our forgiveness of them, and to bring a cloak to cover the foulness and deformity of their offense. But so long as we publish them abroad, and proclaim them in the ears and audience of others, it is very plain we do not forgive them: so long as we remember them to their discredit and reproach, we do not cover them. It is that reason which we heard before out of the Apostle, where he instructeth the Corinthians in Christian meekness and moderation toward him that offended and repented that had fallen, and was risen again; and chargeth them to esteem it enough that he was reprov'd, so that now they should confirm their love toward him, and freely forgive him. Seeing therefore, that love covereth the multitude of sins, seeing it sufficeth to reprove the sinner, and that it is a duty belonging unto us, to testify our forgiveness of him that sinneth; we may from all these considerations, as from evident consequences conclude, that the sins of our brethren, committed and repented of, ought not above measure to be stretched and augmented, but rather mittigated and lessened by us.

Before we come to the Uses of this Doctrine, it shall not be amiss, to answer some Objections. First, the Evangelist Matthew, called to be an Apostle, calleth himself a Publican, for in numbering up the twelve, he mentioneth himself, Matthew that Publican. I answer, the office of a Publican was no unlawful calling, and therefore not of that Nature that falleth within the compass of this Doctrine that we have in hand. True it is, in regard of the abuse of the Office, the name of the Officer was become odious, and therefore the Publicans and Sinners are oftentimes joined together. Now their Office was, to be Collectors of the Toll and tribute imposed upon them by the Romains which was as lawful for thē to gather, as for the people to pay. Hence it is, that John the Baptist doth not exact of the Publicans that came unto him to leave their office, but exhorted them to beware of bribery & oppressions, Require no more then that which it appointed unto you. So then, the condition of a Publican, & the profession of a Christian, may both stand together; so that a man converted to the faith, may hold the office, and be called by the Name, without any disgrace of his outward or inward calling.

The Prophet denounceth a fearful woe against all those that call evil good, or good evil; which put darkness for light, & light for darkness. If then, we are to speak of a penitents sins favorably, & not to deal rigorously with a Convert, it seemeth to give liberty to utter a lie, & to smother the truth. I answer, it is one thing to speak of the nature of the sin, and another thing to speak of the converted sinner. The sin is one thing, but the Conversion maketh it another. When we speak of the Nature of the sin, and the offense against God, we are not to lessen or diminish it; but when we consider it in the person that hath repented, the shame and reproach is done away, so that we may speak of it with all gentleness and mercy toward them.

The Scripture often mentioneth the unclean life of Rahab, and albeit she turned to God, forsook her filthiness, and joined her self to the people of God, yet she is branded evermore with the name of an Harlot. So the Apostle saith to the Hebrews, By Faith the Harlot Rahab perished not with them which obeyed not, when she had received the spies peaceably. In like manner James speaketh, Was not Rahab the Harlot justified through works, when she had received the Messengers, & sent them out another way? I answer, this is not mentioned to her reproach, but spoken to their praise: she is not upbraided with it, but commended, because she had forsaken it. We see hereby, what she was before her calling, she is not reproached with it after her calling. Thus our Savior speaketh in another place, to the chief Priests and Elders of the people, Verily I say unto you, that the Publicans and the Harlots go before you into the kingdom of God. Where he meaneth, that they were such (as the Apostle speaketh of the Corinthians) but now they had given over that life. Thus he saith of his Miracles that he had wrought, The blind receive sight, the halt do walk, the Lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up. These men, while these infirmities were upon them, could not be delivered from them; but he showeth what they had been, and what they were: they had been diseased, but now were restored. So in Rahab, the Apostles testify, what she had been, to wit; an Harlot: and what she is, not any longer an Harlot, but a true believer with the people of God. It is added therefore, not any way sounding to her defaming, but to show the greatness of God's compassion, and the soundness of her conversion.

The Uses remain to be stood upon, that the Doctrine may serve to our comfort and instruction. First, we learn from hence a notable point of Christian wisdom, to esteem of all men as they are, and not as they were, according to their present estate wherein they remain, and not according to the condition wherein they lived in times past. It skilleth not what they have been, we must consider what they are. The Apostle reckoning up many horrible sins committed by the Corinthians in the dark night of their ignorance, he saith, Such were some of you, but now ye are washed, now ye are sanctified. Where we see, he maketh a flat opposition between their former estate before their calling, and their estate after their conversion; and setteth a difference between that which they were once, and that which they are now. He saith, such they were, he doth not say such they are; they were, but now are not, because they had repented. The like we see in his affection towards one particular member of that Church (of whom we spake before) while he continued in his Incest, he chargeth them to cast him out from among them; but when he heard of his sorrow for sin, and of his repentance from dead works, he exhorteth them to confirm their love toward him more and more. We see this offered unto us in the example of God and his elect Angels. When we have sinned against the Lord, and fallen into horrible offenses, whereby he is dishonored, and our Consciences wounded, he sendeth means to turn us from our sins, and is ready to forgive us when we repent; he never upbraideth us with our iniquities that we have forsaken, but accepteth of us as we stand in the state of regeneration. This serveth to reprove two sortes of men: First, such as are so uncharitable and malicious, that they never forget the falls of their Brethren, but ever remember them, and reproach them for them. If any of the faithful have suddenly fallen into any sin, it shall always be laid to their charge, and hit in their teeth, and spread abroad from one to another, and be made far greater then it is. Wherein, see the peeuishnesse and partiality of wicked men, who love their own, and bear with a boulder up one another in wickedness. If the ungodly that make a continual practice of sin, and have their whole delight therein, do run out of one evil into another, without touch of conscience, without shame of men, without fear of God, without turning of the heart by repentance: they shall find those that will defend them, justify them, speak well of them, as if they had committed no sin. But if any that are true Believers, have been overtaken by the suggestion of the Devil, and the corruption of the flesh; one fall of theirs shall never be forgotten, it shall always be kept on foot, it shall run in the minds and mouths of profane men, as if it had not been forgiven them: whereas a thousand enormities of lewd and ungodly men are passed over, and never spoken off. The World loveth her own, and speaketh well of her own, even of such as God abhorreth. As for the Godly that desire to please God, it cannot abide them, all their actions are narrowly pryed and searched into, and never were they so much hated as in these our days. Seeing then we have to do with such sharp sighted Eagles, that behold all, and more then all that we do, who like deceitful Workmen, are ready to stretch them upon the tender-hooks, and like slubbering Surgeons, spare not to make the wound wider then it is, whereas they ought to seek to cure and heal it: let us look more earnestly into our own ways, and know that we have a thousand eyes fixed upon us, and a thousand mouths that will be opened against us, and ten thousand ears that are prepared to listen to any slanders and surmises that shall be reported of us. Thus shall we take profit and reap a benefit even by our enemies. Thus we see how they are reprov'd that upbraid men with their sins which they have repented off, and do not acknowledge the change that is wrought in them; not by Men, but by God. He that is truly converted, is made a new man, and hath a new work begun in him, so that his old works are renounced, and no man abhorreth them more then himself, no man is grieved for them so much as himself. If then we truly love our Brethren, especially whom we see to be sorry for their sins past, we will think of them with all Charity, we will speak to them with all gentleness, we will have no evil suspicion of them, we will not hinder their good Name: so that when they are evil spoken off by others, we will endeavor to excuse them, to bury their faults, and to save their credit.

True it is, we must not allow of wickedness, nor call evil good; but such as have offended us, we must bear with them, and deal with them by admonitions, exhortations, reproofs, & threatenings, laboring thereby to heal them, & to give a remedy unto them. Now, if such be worthy reproof and reprehension, that remember the offenses of their Neighbors, which before they have practiced, and now have renounced: how much more are they to be condemned, that mock and deride such as have unblameable infirmities, and are blind, or deaf, or lame, or any way blemished in their bodies. The Wiseman teacheth in the Book of the Proverbs, That he which mocketh the poor, reproacheth him that made him. So it may be truly said, that whosoever reproacheth his Brother for his blindness, or lameness, or deafness, or deformity, reproacheth God that hath made him so. And who knoweth what hangeth over his own head? Or what judgment may fall upon himself or his? The little Children that came out of Beth-ell, mocked the Prophet, and said unto him; Come up thou Bald-head, come up thou Bald-head. Where we see they scoffed at him for his infirmity: but what followed? He turned about and looked on them, and cursed them in the name of the Lord; and two Bears came out of the Forest, and tare in pieces two and forty Children of them. A grievous judgment fell upon them, notwithstanding the tenderness of their age: and they are made an example unto us, to teach us to beware, that we make not a mock at the miseries of others. It is our duty rather to pity them, and show compassion toward them; to defend them, not to offend them; to comfort them in their affliction, not to lay an heavier burden upon them. This is a notable comfort unto all Parents, when they have Children borne unto them any way blemished and deformed, that they do not therefore cease to love them, that they ought not to be ashamed of them, that they should not neglect the education of them, but rather be the more careful to train them up in the fear of God, which shall more beautify them, then their blindness or lameness shall be able to blemish them. For it may be, that God will give unto us more comfort by them, then by all the rest that have the ornaments of Nature. And if we think them to be greater sinners then other men, because they suffer such things, and have those infirmities, we are deceived. When the Disciples asked Christ concerning the blind man, Who did sin, this Man or his Parents, that he was borne blind? Jesus answered; Neither hath this man sinned nor his Parents, but that the works of God should be shown on him. So then, these wants that appear in many; as the blindness of the eyes, the lameness of the foot, the deafness of the ear, the baldness of the head, the maymednesse of the hand, the stuttering of the tongue, the crookedness of the body, the deformity of the face, or other defects of nature, are not in themselves sins, but infirmities without blame or blot, which are not to be charged upon those that have them. If we be careful to eschew the blemishes of the Soul, that make us ugly Monsters, and misshapen Creatures in the sight of God, we are blessed & happy: as for outward deformities, they shall all be done away, when this Mortall shall put on immortality; and this corruption put on incorruption, so that we shall be made like unto Christ our Savior in glory.

Secondly, seeing the faults of Brethren repenting, are not to be exaggerated and increased with odious Names, but rather covered with the cloak of Charity; as Sem and Japheth did the nakedness of their Father. It teacheth us to rejoice at their conversion, to foster and cherish good things in them, that are Prosolites and Conuerts to the Faith. The Scribes and Pharisees Would compass Sea and Land to make one of their Sect and profession: they spared no labor to win them unto them. How much more then ought we to endeavor to encourage all that be coming on, and to kindle good things appearing in them? Our Savior teacheth; That there is joy in the presence of the Angels of God, for one Sinner that converteth. Thus it ought to be with the members of the Church, when they see the increase thereof, nothing should so rejoice them, as when an access is made and added thereunto. If the body had long lacked the use of one part, and should see the same restored unto it, would not the rest of the members much rejoice? Yes, no doubt. So when we see one of the Sheep of Christ, that hath wandered far from the Sheep-fold, brought home, and following the true Shepherd, we cannot but receive great consolation by it. It is a true saying, that there are many Wolves within, and many Sheep without. Some there are that lurk in the bosom of the Church, which depart out of it, and are found to be indeed no better then Wolves. Others, are for a time out of the Church, and are as savage and cruel Wolves, who in the end are gathered home, and are in the number of the Sheep of Christ. Such a one was Saint Paul, who was a Persecuter: such were many that were the Crucifiers of Christ, yet were the Sheep and Lambes that belong unto Christ. When these join themselves to the Church, and are converted unto the Faith, their former life led in ignorance and blidnesse, must be forgotten, and we are to rejoice at their conversion.

Did any of the Church ever reproach Paul with his blasphemy against God, with his oppression of the Saints, and breathing out threatenings against the Disciples of Christ, when once he became a believer? Did any tell Peter in scorn and contempt, that he was a denyer of his Master, a Swearer and cursser that he knew him not, after that he had testified the truth of his repentance by the bitterness of his tears, for his weakness that he had shown? Did any object to Noah his drunkenness, or to Lot his Incest, or to Solomon his Idolatry? No man laid any of these things unto their charge, neither were they hated for them.

Hence it is, that the Prophet Daniel having denounced a great judgment to be accomplished against Nebuchadnezzar, for his cruelty and oppression, saith unto him; O King, let my counsel be acceptable unto thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by mercy toward the poor: Loe, let there be an healing of thine error. Where he showeth, that howsoever he grievously sinned and provoked God to wrath, yet if he could repent of his former ways, all his wounds should be healed, and the judgments of God should be reuersed and revoked. This serveth to reprove those that regard not the repentance of those that have sinned, nor esteem of them any whit the better. These were the Nouatians, that gloried of a kind of purity and perfection in themselves, and denied Salvation to those that denied Christ in persecution, and to such as fell into sin after Baptism; yea, albeit they did repent. But God delighteth not in the death of a Sinner, but that he should live. It is our duty to raise up them that are fallen, and to heal the broken-hearted, after the example of Christ, who will not break the bruised Reede, nor quench the smoking Flaxe. And if we be commanded to leave ninety and nine in the Wilderness, seeking that which is lost, and bearing it home upon our shoulders: how much are they to be reprov'd that keep them from the Sheep-fold that are come unto it, and bar the door against them that desire to enter? The Apostle saith; That to the weak he became as weak, that he might win the weak; and he was made all things to all Men, that he might by all means save some. The Lord Jesus calleth the Church of Ephesus to repentance, To remember from whence they were fallen, and to do their first works: Now he would never have exhorted them to repentance, except there had been pardon and forgiveness for the Penitent. If any should say to the Husbandman, follow thy business, till thy ground, plough thy fields, sow thy Corn, but thou shalt see no increase, thou shalt gather in no harvest, thou shalt have no fruit of thy labor: do we think that by this means he could be encouraged or stirred up to labor? Or if the Master of a Ship should bid the Mariners in a tempest and storm to look to their Tacklings, and everyone to work with his hands in his place wherein he was set, and withal should tell them (when they had done all) that they should neither save the Ship, nor the lives of such as were in the Ship, it were a cold comfort, or rather a certain discomfort.

In like manner, what should it avail to exhort and excite any to repentance, and to call upon them to turn unto God, when in the mean season, we bar them from salvation, and hedge up the way that leadeth unto eternal life, that they cannot enter into it, albeit they do repent and return unto him? So then, there is greater mildness and moderation required of us, & we must labor to suppress hatred and malice toward our Brethren, If any be sudainly overtaken by the snares of Satan, and the subtlety of sin, let us restore them with the spirit of lenity, considering our selves, least we also be tempted. Let us not be glad at their falls, nor triumph at the victory which Satan seemeth to have gotten, but rather mourn for them, and help them out of their danger. We are commanded in the Law, when we see the Ass of our enemy to couch down under his burden, not to cease or fall to lift him up: how much more ought we to support the weakness, to asswage the sorrow, to bear the infirmity, and to relieve the misery of our Brother? It is the manner of ungodly persons, to make it their daily sport in their devilish meetings, to insult over him, and to leap upon his back with all the reproach and infamy that they can devise to lay upon him. But it skilleth not what such foul mouths do utter, they shall one day reap the reward of their malice, and the penitent person that holdeth his peace, shall find in the end the fruit of his patience.

Thirdly, it teacheth us for our obedience, to repent betimes, and not to delay the time thereof, but while the acceptable season is to bring forth the fruits of amendment of life. For seeing we are not to make the most, or speak the worst of the falls of our penitent Brethren, it serveth as a good encouragement, and a profitable inducement to lead us and guide us unto true repentance, that so our sins may be put away. Sin is as a most filthy Leprosy, but when we repent, we are cleansed of that Leprosy. It is as unsavory Dung that stencheth the earth, and the evil savor thereof ascendeth up to Heaven; but when we repent, we smell pleasantly, as a sweet perfume in the Nostrils of God. It is as filthy Mire, that soyleth the Soul, corrupteth the Body, and spotteth the Garment; but when we repent, the stain and blemishes of sin are put out of his sight, and blotted out of his remembrance. For when God forgiveth iniquity, transgression, and sin; he throweth it into the Sea, into the bottom of the Sea, that it may never arise again to our confusion and condemnation, and he remembereth it no more. As far as the East is from the West, so far hath he removed our sins from us, as the Prophet speaketh, so that they are so far taken out of his sight, that they and we shall never meet together. He covereth them, and will not impute them unto us; So that we which were in times past strangers and enemies, are now reconciled, being made holy and unblameable, and without fault in his sight. If then God do cover them when we repent, who are we that go about to uncover them? If he do not impute them, why should we lay them to their charge, who have a discharge from God, who hath cancelled the band and hand-writing that was against them? If God have washed and wiped away the filthiness of them, why should any man cast the mire of them in their faces again? The most expert and excellent Pysician, cannot cure a deep wound & a festered sore, but some scar will remain, and some print in the flesh is left behind: but God so healeth our infirmities, that he taketh away the stain, the guilt, and the punishment, that no token, no mark, no sign of his wrath and indignation ever appeareth to appall us, or dismay us. This is the great love and unspeakable mercy of God toward the broken heart and contrite Spirit. He that hath been an Adulterer, and hath repented of his uncleanness, is no Adulterer. He that hath been a Drunkard, and repenteth of the beastliness and abuse of the good Creatures of GOD, is no longer a Drunkard. He that hath been an Enemy and hinderer of God's word, and now loveth it above Silver and Gold, is no more an enemy, but a friend of the Gospel. He that hath been a Swearer and Blasphemer, and repenteth of his blasphemies, is not a blasphemer. He that hath been a profaner of the Lord's Sabbaoths, and now is careful to sanctify them, and spend them in holy exercises, is no longer a profane person. True it is, these men have been such, but when they see their sins, hate them, forsake them, are grieved for them, and are departed from them, true repentance is as the Fullers Sope to wash them, and to make them whiter then the Snow. We must therefore make a great difference, between that which they have been, and that which they are. Shall we say, that he, who is come to man's estate, and hath put away childishness, is still a Babe and Suckling, as Infant and Child, because once he was so? Or shall we say, that he, who is made a Free-man, and had served out his Prentishippe, is a Bond-man still, and under the jurisdiction of another, because that once he was so? In like manner, shall we change our Brethren to be Children in knowledge, to be the Servants of sin, and Bond-slaves of Satan, because they were so in the time of their ignorance, before God gave unto them repentance, that they might come out of these snares wherein they were holden Captives? Nay, I will say more, whosoever reuileth and reproacheth him with his Adultery, Idolatry, Blasphemy, Drunkenness, or Prophanesse, that hath fallen into these offenses, but dwelleth not nor delighteth in them, is a malicious enemy, a false accuser, a slanderer and liar against his Brother. The Apostle Peter denied his Master (as we shown before) he forswore him, and cursed himself if he knew the Man, which he did through fear to save his life. But because he went immediately out of the High-Priests Hall, and wept bitterlie, did any of the rest ever upbraid him, and reproach him with Apostasy, with swearing, with curssing, with his infirmity and presumption? All they therefore are led by another Spirit then the Disciples were, who despightfullie cast them in the teeth with their sins, which are more odious and grievous to them, then to those that set them afoot, and blaze them abroad to their disgrace.

This is a great comfort, and bringeth wonderful peace of conscience to all those that truly repent of all their sins past, which they have followed with greediness: seeing, that as God forgiveth them, so he will not have others to charge them with them. For if the Lord and Master of us all remit them, we are not to charge our Fellow-Servants with them. If the Prince forgive, upon the sorrow and submission of his Vassall, the Treason intended against his person, shall the subject dare to call him Traitor, seeing the Princes pardon is the Subjects protection and discharge? If the Father forgive the Child his disobedience, shall the rest of his Brethren speak evil of him, and always keep it in fresh remembrance? If these things were duellie regarded and rightly considered of us, we would not lie one hour in our sins, but make hast to be reconciled unto God, that so we may abolish the guiltiness and greuousnesse, together with the infamy of them. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith; As ye have given your members servants to uncleanness, and to iniquity, to commit iniquity, so now give your members servants unto righteousness, in holiness: for when ye were the Servants of sin, ye were freed from righteousness. What fruit had ye then, in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? For the end of those things is death, but now being freed from sin, and made Servants unto God, ye have your fruit in holiness, and the end everlasting life.

Where he teacheth, that such as continue in their sins, are as dead trees, or as rotten branches that bringeth forth no fruit: but they that are made free from sin, are made the Servants of righteousness. The Tree that hath a long time brought forth no fruit, when once it beginneth to bring forth good fruit, cannot be called an evil tree. The ground that beginneth to yield plentiful increase, cannot be called barren, whatsoever it hath been in times past. So is it with everyone of us, we are accounted Trees of righteousness, and fruitful ground, so soon as we lay aside the unsavory fruits of wickedness. Wherefore, whensoever we hear the taunts and reproaches of uncharitable men, cast out against us for such sins as we have long ago left, let us not be grieved at them, nor sorrowful for them, nor seek revenge against them, but rather comfort our selves in this, both that God hath given us repentance to see and forsake our sins, which before we made our chiefest pleasure, and that he hath pardoned them in his Son, and will never lay them to our charge, so that he accounteth them as if they had never been committed, and accepteth of us, as if we never had offended him. As for the ungodly, that have sin reigning in them, and never truly repented of heir sin, they may and ought to be charged with their sins, and as we find them in the present time to be, so we may justly account of them, so we may truly call them, and so we may censure them and pronounce of them. For as it is lawful to call a Spade, a Spade: so he that is known to live still in Adultery, may be named and noted to be an Adulterer, and a filthy liver. He that maketh a continual practice of drunkenness, and is resolved to remain in it, may be called a drunken beast, a drunken sot, a drunken companion, and we need crave no pardon if we give him that style. He that regardeth not the hearing of God's word, but liveth in open contempt of God, and of his ordinances, may be justly branded with the reproach of his sin, and may be called the enemy of all righteousness, and the Child of the Devil. We know, that Judas through covetousness betrayed his Master, and when he had done, he dispared of pardon and hanged himself: the reproach of this fact and offense, remaineth to this day, and shall never be blotted out, but he is called Judas the Traitor, and Son of perdition. Math. 10. 4. Acts 1. 16. 17. And thus the case standeth with all other unrepentant Sinners, that use not the remedy appointed of God to bring them out of the state of damnation, into the way of salvation. Hereupon we see the Prophet Isaiah, Chap. 1. calleth them the Princes of Sodom, and the people of Gomorrah, a sinful Nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of the wicked, corrupt children, Witches Children, the seed of the Adulterer, and of the Whore. Christ calleth the Pharisees a brood of Vipers, blind Guides, Hypocrites, such as were of their Father the Devil. This appeareth in the Psalm, where the Prophet speaking of such as hated to be reformed, and cast the words of God behind them, saith; When thou seest a Thief thou runnest with him, and thou art partaker with the Adulterer: thou givest thy mouth to evil, and with thy tongue thou forgest deceit: thou sittest and speakest against thy Brother, and slanderest thy Mothers Son: these things hast thou done, and I held my tongue: therefore thou thoughtest that I was like thee, but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thee: O consider this, ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none that can deliver you. Where we see, he layeth to their consciences their sins, and applieth unto them the judgments of God that did hang over them: so that thereupon he calleth them to serious and earnest consideration of their former works, thereby to draw them to repentance. Heereby are reprov'd diverse sortes of evil and corrupt minded men. First, such as aggravate and augment the sins of the godly, and make those that are no sins, to be taken for sins: and such as are lesser, to seem the greatest of all.

These are they that broach and belch out of their envious hearts and filthy mouths, and stinking breathes, all the venom that lieth hidden within them against the godly, when they can espy any of them (who have their weakness as other men, and being left unto themselves, cannot but fall) to be overtaken with the frailty of the flesh; Oh (say they) these are the holy men, these are the holy Brethren, these are the godly folk: see, see what they are, none are worse people then they. These men have quick eyes to see their sins, but they are blind and cannot see their repentance. They know what they have committed, but they are ignorant and will not know that their sins are remitted, and that whatsoever the Son of God remitteth, ought not to be retained and remembered of the Sons of men. It is no disgrace to a man to have been wicked and infamous for his offenses, if he be throughly changed and altered: for their reformation giveth them more grace and honor with God and all good men, then their former life doth shame and discredit. The Apostle saith; The time of this ignorance God regarded not, but now he admonisheth all men everywhere to repent, because he hath appointed a day in which he would judge the World. Secondly, they are reprov'd that lessen the sins of the impenitent, and mollify them with gentle Plaisters, thereby hartning and hardening them in their sins, thereby fawning upon them, and flattering them in their wickedness. They are men of the profane World like themselves; and therefore their sins shall be no sins, and their great sins are little motes that cannot be seen. It hath always been a practice and ancient custom among evil Men, to lessen odious vices, & to abate them with softer and milder terms: and that fraud and fashion was never never more frequent, then where the vice was most common. Thus it is, when Thieves are called Taking-men: Covetous persons, Thrifty-Liwers: Thus Adultery is accounted but a trick of youth; fighting and quarrelling is named man-hood; drunkenness is reputed good fellowship, and Drunkards the only good fellows. Thus is sin extenuated and diminished by those that know not the Nature of sin; and therefore seek to blanch the foulness and filthiness of it, to which they are so continually accustomed. But howsoever these men account of sin, and whatsoever they call it, they shall find that the lessening of it, is the way to increase it, and the diminishing of it, is the means to make it greater. If we would have our sins and offenses not to come into account, we must forsake them, and repent of them.

Thirdly, it reproveth such as disclose and reveal a Penitents confession. When our Brethren in the anguish of their Souls, and in a feeling of the horror of sin, have sought peace and comfort at our hands, and have discovered their offenses that trouble them to us, as the sick man doth his disease to the Physician that he may be healed: it is our duty to comfort them, not to disgrace them; to conceal them, not to reveal them; to hide them, not to publish them and blaze them abroad, to their disgrace and discredit. True it is, when evil is opened unto us, not past, or present, but to be done afterward, as if a man confess his determination and resolution to commit Murthers, we are not tied to cover and conceal it, but are bound to manifest and make it known. This showeth the wonderful abuse of the Church of Rome committed in holy things, and things supposed by them to be holy. The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is most horribly profaned of them, which being instituted in remembrance of the death of Christ, to assure us of our spiritual communion in him, and of our spiritual nourishment from him, is often received of them to combine them together in wickedness, and to take security thereby one of another, not to reveal the Treasons and Conspiracies that are plotted among them. Thus it is in the supposed Sacrament of Penance, when they would reveal the hidden mischief and poisons of their hearts, to the Priests and Jesuits their Confessors, they will seem to do it by way of confession, that so it might be (as it were) locked up and sealed with this Seal, as a secret never to be disclosed and discovered. Thus is confession become nothing else but a cover of Treason and Rebellion. But when our Brethren being afflicted in Conscience, and wounded with the Darts of Satan, and the poison of sin, shall accuse themselves, and confess some heinous sin committed that lieth heavy upon them, and can find no comfort in concealing of it, but greater horror, & thereby are brought to the gates of Hell; and like to be swallowed up in despair, when they shall (I say) confess to the glory of God, and the shaming of themselves, the wickedness of their hearts and hands, we are not to utter it to others to their disgrace, but by all means we can to cover it in secret and silence. For as we are to acknowledge our faults one to another, and to pray one for another: so we are in love to conceal the falls one of another, and not to open them in choller and malice to their reproach.

Lastly, this reproveth our remissness and wretchlesse in dealing with recusant Papists, the members of the Pope and Popish Church, who because we would not offend them, we speak of them honourably, and give them the Name of Catholics, and honor them with the Title of the Church: whereas we should give them their right, and call them by their proper Names, of Idolaters, and enemies of the Grace of God, and disturbers of the State. We have many among us that are ready to join with them, and to give them the right hand of fellowship, who can be content to mingle together God and Baal, Christ and Belial, light and darkness, the Temple of God, and an Idol. But as we believe the High-priest of Rome, to be the very Anti-christ described in the Scripture, so we also hold that the Church of Rome is a false and Bastard-Church, and no true Church of Christ Jesus, who not only have shaken, but razed down the very foundations of Religion, maintaining the worshipping of Images, and the merrits of works, by making a mock of Christ's merits and satisfaction, by devising other Mediators, and by presuming to offer him up an unbloody Sacrifice to God the Father. Let us not therefore halt between two opinions, nor go about to reconcile those things which can never hold or hang together. The false Apostles would join the Law and the Gospel together, the works of the Law, and the grace of Faith in the matter of Justification, which can never be, the one destroying and pulling down the other: because if it be of grace, it is no more of works, or else were grace no more grace: but if it be of works, it is no more grace, or else were work no more work. So we have those that dream of an union between Christ and Antichrist, but if the Lord be God, follow him; if Baal be he, then go after him. No man can serve both these Masters so contrary one from the other, so that whosoever cleaveth to the one, forsaketh the other.

Verse 16. [Not now as a Servant, but above a Servant, even as a Brother, &c.]

Here is a singular commendation of Onesimus, expressed by many steps and degrees; the one ascending and climbing above the other. He was not only as a Servant, but above a Servant; not only as a Brother, but a beloved Brother; not only dear to Paul, but much more to Philemon himself. This is so much the more worthy praise and commendation; nay, of wonder and admiration, as the disposition of Servants in those times was lewd and licentious, who albeit they had good and godly Masters, yet they were light-fingered and light-footed, and upon every occasion they were apt to run away from them, as appeareth in Hagar that lived in the house of Abraham, when Sarah began to deal roughly with her, immediately she fled from her. Seeing therefore it was so rare a thing among those kind of men, to find any well minded and disposed, the Apostle maketh the more account of him, and would have his Master to make account of him. As if he should reason thus:

- Him, who in Christ Jesus is become thy Brother, thou oughtest carefully to tender, and dearly to love:
- But Onesimus is now by his unfeigned conversion become thy Brother;
- Therefore receive him.

Here we see the Apostle reasoneth for Onesimus, to have him received and respected above an ordinary Servant, because he was truly converted, and had in him a good measure of Grace, and was become a true and sound Christian. We learn from hence, that the more Grace appeareth in any, the more should they be tendered and regarded of us, whether they be Servants, Children, Neighbors, Pastors, People, Wife, Kinsfolke, or Acquaintance. In whomsoever the greatest store of heavenly things is to be found, such as most of all to be loved and regarded; tendered, and respected. The Prophet David teacheth, when the Lord, who had anointed him to be King over his people, should bring him unto the Kingdom, and make him Ruler and Governor over a great and mighty People, what they were that he would most of all regard, and upon whom he would cast his eyes; Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the Land, that they may dwell with me, he that walketh in a perfect way, he shall serve me, &c. Solomon hath many heavenly sentences, and Divine Proverbs to this purpose: as Chap. 14. 35. The pleasure of a King is in a wise servant: but his wrath shall be toward him that is lewd. So in the 16. Chapt. The righteous lips are the delight of Kings, and the King loveth him that speaketh right things. Likewise, in the Chapter following, A discreet Servant shall have rule over a lewd Son, and he shall divide the heritage among the Brethren. The practice of this duty we see in Abraham, he had a faithful Servant, whom he made the Steward and Governor of his house, and made more reckoning of him, then he did of Ishmael his Son, or of the rest that did attend about him; and therefore purposed to have made him his heir. When he purposed to provide a Wife for his Son Isaac, he called him, and employed him to go to his Country and to his Kindred to bring a wife for him. The like we see in Jacob, Who loved Joseph above all his Brethren, because he saw most grace in him. This was in Elkanah toward his wife Hannah, he comforted her in her affliction, and said; Why weepest thou? And why eatest thou not? And why is thy heart troubled? Am not I better to thee then ten Sons? This appeareth in Jonathan toward David, He loved him as his own soul, and made a covenant of peace, and a league of friendship with him, not in any worldly respect, not for any earthly commodity, not to enjoy any temporal benefit (for he seemed thereby to loose a Kingdom) but because he saw the Lord to be with him. So the Apostle writing to the elect Lady and her Children, testifierh; That he loved them in the truth, and rejoiced greatly that he found them walking in the truth. Heereby we see, laying all these testimonies together, the truth of this doctrine, that it is our duty to regard them most, that have greatest grace shining in them.

The reasons hereof are plain to inform us. For first, where Grace is, it bringeth blessedness to that society, kingdom, congregation, family, and person; as appeareth by the confession of Joseph's Master. Gen. 39. 2. 3. whom he served. Now who are more to be regarded, or better to be thought off, then such as are blessed, and cause blessedness to others? The wicked man is accursed of God, and draweth the curse of God upon the places where he dwelleth, and upon the persons with whom he dwelleth. But such as have found grace with God, and have grace laid up as a precious Treasure in their hearts, do bring the blessings of God to others, and serve to conuay them to them, as we see by infinite examples in the Scripture.

Secondly, we see that God is most gracious to such as have most Grace in their hearts, he tendreth them as the apple of his eye, and loveth them as own Sons. Indeed he loveth all the works of his hands as they are his Creatures: he maketh his Sun to shine, his rain to fall, his fruitful seasons to refresh them: he hath not left himself without witness among the Infidels, that he might make them without excuse. He giveth to Beasts, and to beastly men their food, their Corners and Garners are full, and abounding with diverse sortes, and their Sheep bring forth thousands, and ten thousands in their Streetes: but GOD is specially known in Judah, his Name is great in Israel: he showeth his Word and his Statutes among them, he hath not dealt so with every Nation, neither have they known his judgments. As this is the dealing of God toward those that are his, whom he maketh partakers of the secrets of his Kingdom: so it is our duty to follow his example, and to show our selves like unto him in our brotherly kindness toward his chosen Children, and our beloved Brethren.

Thirdly, the more grace appeareth in any, the nearer he doth resemble God, the more evidently doth the Image of God show it self in him. The Image of God, standeth and consisteth, especially in holiness and true righteousness. The ungodly are stamped and marked with profaneness and wickedness, which is the Devils badge and impression. The more they grow in evil, and bring forth the fruits of impiety and unrighteousness, the nearer they come to Satan, and are like unto him. On the other side, such as bear the Image of their heavenly father, must be exceedingly respected and regarded, as the Apostle teacheth; Everyone that loveth him which begat, loveth him also which is begotten of him. He that loveth the Father, will for the Fathers sake, love the Child. And he that loveth God, will (for his sake) love the Child of God. Seeing therefore it is blessedness to every society and Congregation, to have men therein endued with grace, seeing God delighteth to rest among them that seek after grace; and lastly, the more grace is found in any, the nearer he draweth to God: in all these respects we conclude this as a certain truth, that it is our duty to respect them above all others, that have the greatest measure of grace abiding in them.

Let us gather the uses that arise from this Doctrine. First of all, this ought to stir us all up to labor to grow in grace and in the gifts of the Spirit, that thereby we may procure & deserve the love of men. They that grow in grace, are truly to be reputed and accounted gracious. It is noted in Christ, That he increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and men. When a man groweth in strength of body, it is a sign his meat nourisheth him, and doth him good. So when we profit in knowledge and understanding, in holiness and sanctification of life, it showeth that we are good hearers of the word. Solomon saith in the Proverbs, A wise man shall hear and increase in learning: and a man of understanding shall attain unto wise counsels. We must therefore proceed in good things, that we may be well pleased, that we may be enriched in his graces, and established more firmly in the ways of godliness. For there cannot be a better means to keep us from a fearful Apostasy, and to preserve us from a dangerous backsliding, then to go forward in that journey into which we are entered, and to make strait steps to the place of our rest. So long as we walk to the end of the race set before us, there is no fear of fainting or falling backward. But when once we begin to stand still, and do not go forward, our case is to be pitied, we have given room to Satan, and taken the foil, who will not rest there, but take farther hold of us. Whosoever standeth still, and remaineth at one stay in matters of Religion, will shortly turn backward. The heavenly bodies are ever in motion, it is the earth that standeth still at one stay: so such as are heavenly minded, are always going and growing toward heaven; whereas such as think upon nothing but the earth, are so cloyed and clogged with that gross matter, that they cannot move a foot forward to lay hold of happiness. Hence it is that the Apostle exhorteth the Corinthians, Seeing we have these promises (dearly beloved) let us cleanse our selves from all filthiness of Flesh, and spirit, and finish our sanctification in the fear of God. Likewise, writing to the Thessalonians, He stirreth them up, and exhorteth them in the Lord Jesus, that they increase more and more, as they had received of them, how they ought to walk and to please God. Thus also speaketh the Apostle Peter,; Ye therefore (beloved) seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye be also plucked away with the error of the wicked, and fall from your own steadfastness: but grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

This serveth to reprove those that either stand still or go backward, and are not proficience in the School of Christ, who hear much and learn little; who know somewhat, and practice nothing at all; who think they have gotten enough, and that now they may be idle and slothful. It was not so with the Apostle, who was a better Scholar then these Drones; he labored evermore to be better & better, as himself testifieth; I forget that which is behind, and endeavor myself to that which is before, and follow hard toward the mark, to the price of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. He was not like unto a foolish Runner, who running in a Race for a great price, will every foot be looking back how much ground he hath run and rid, but his eyes were fully fixed upon the mark, considering how far he had yet to pass, and waighing how much he was distant from perfection. It had been better, that we had never made profession of Christ, or been called by his Name, then to stand at a stay, or to start aside, whereby it may be probablie suspected, if not rightly gathered, that we never had any soundness in us. Let us therefore labor to abound more and more in wisdom, and in all godliness. Whosoever glorieth that he hath so much Grace as he desired, did never truly desire any grace. Whosoever sitteth still, and never intendeth to go forward, shall never come at his journeys end. And whosoever thinketh himself to be good enough, and purposeth never to be better, will presently grow to be worse, and never cease until that he be stark naught.

On the other side, such as have a care to proceed, and are at the mending hand, though they do it slowly and slackely, though they have many defects and defaults, though they feel in themselves many infirmities and imperfections, yet it is a notable comfort and testimony unto their hearts, that GOD will give them grace to continue unto the end, and to persevere in the Faith unto the death. For such do get ground of their enemies, do weaken the force of sin, do strengthen the gifts of the Spirit, and do profit daily in the exercises of Religion which they frequent. Secondly, this reproveth such as regard most of all, and bestow the greatest fruits of their love and compassion, upon the most ungodly and ungracious, which are most unworthy to be respected. For the more men grow in wickedness and profaneness, the less they ought to be loved and liked of us. It is true godliness that should join us in mutual friendship one with another, and unite our affections one toward another. The more godliness appeareth to be in them, the nearer ought our conjunction to be with them. And as they grow in good things, so ought our love to increase toward them. This the Prophet David teacheth. Psalm 15. 4. Lord, who shall dwell in thy Tabernacle, who shall rest in thy holy mountain? He in whose eyes a vile person is contemned, but he honoreth them that fear the Lord. And in the Psalm following, Thou art my Lord, my well doing extendeth not to thee, But to the Saints that are in the earth, and to the excellent: All my delight is in them. But how many are there among us, that have no society or familiarity with the faithful, and such as fear the name of the Lord? That think themselves in a Prison or in Hell, so long as they are among them? That can be merry and pleasant among profane Companions, but hang down their heads when they are with the godly, and never rest till they be gone from them. If a Man or a Woman should always delight to be in the company of Bears and Wolves, and to converse among Dogs and Swine, that when you seek for them, you should never find them but among the Beasts, as if they had abandoned the company of reasonable Creatures, we would think them strange bodies, we would wonder at their humors, and be ready to say they were of a wild and woluish Nature, and (as it were) transformed into the qualities of Beasts, like unto Nebuchadnezzar, who had his understanding taken from him, and his dwelling appointed among the Beasts of the field. Dan. 4. 30. So is it with those that frequent no company but of wicked persons, and use no society with any, but of such as are as blind as Beetels, and as senseless as stones, & as brutish as beasts in matters of Religion: may we not truly conclude of them, that they are beastly minded, and like to them with whom they sort, and to whom they resort? The Prophet saith, I am a Companion of all that fear thee: but these may say; I am a Companion of them that forsake thee. He saith; Do not I hate them that hate thee? But these men say, Do not I love them that hate thee, and hate them that love thee? They hate the godly in their hearts, and the more grace appeareth in them, the more they despise them; as Michall did David, when she saw his zeal in bringing home the Ark of the Lord into his own City. They esteem more of their dogs and Swine, then they do of the dear Servants of God, bought with the precious blood of Christ, & therefore they say! Oh, these are the little flock, these are Saints, these are holy folks, we are not for their company. But if we belong to God and to his Kingdom, we must of necessity be of the Communion of Saints. And if indeed thou think them holy, thou oughtest to conclude; therefore we are, and must be, and will be for their company. For either we are holy, or unholy; either godly, or profane; either righteous, or unrighteous. If we be not true Christians, we are no better then Devils incarnate: and therefore shall have our portion and reward among the Devils. So then, either they utter those words with a scoffing spirit, and then we leave them to his judgment that will take vengeance of all such taunts that he accounteth cast out against himself: or else they make a fearful conclusion against their own Souls, disclaiming themselves to be Members of the Church, renouncing the sweet society & communion of the Saints, refusing the forgiveness of their sins, and accounting themselves unworthy of eternal life: or else they speak ignorantly, as poor silly blind Souls, who are to be pitied and prayed for, and this all the hurt we wish unto them for all the malice they bear against us, being bold to crave more good for them, then they do for themselves, saying; Father forgive them, for they know not what they do: Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. Thus we desire God to give them them eyes that are blind, and to open their hearts that have shut them against the truth, and the professors thereof.

Secondly, seeing it is our duty to respect everyone of the faithful, according to the grace of God measured out unto him, it is required of all men to look always to the best things in the choice of the companions of their life. We learn not to enter rashly into any near society with such as have not the graces of God's holy spirit to commend them. When any of us are to seek friends, to match our selves with a Wife, to entertain Servants, to make choice of teachers, our care must be to enquire after such as have true piety in their hearts, and may yield unto us sound comfort. And whensoever we have made that happy and heavenly choice, we must labor to cherish, to increase, and to strengthen them in all their ways, and for our parts, must delight and rejoice in them above all other. One good Friend, one godly Wife, one religious Servant, is worth ten thousand others, what privileges of the flesh soever they bring with them. Hence it is that the Apostle saith; The Wife is bound by the law, as long as her husband liveth: but if her Husband be dead, she is at liberty to marry with whom she will, only in the Lord. We see how David among all the Sons of Saul, made choice only of Jonathan, to join with him in a strong league of sure friendship, because he knew him to have an upright and faithful heart toward God: These two did take sweet counsel together, and had their souls knit in a fast and firm knot of mutual love. Likewise, concerning the servants of his house that he would receive and retain, he saith; Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the Land, that they may dwell with me, he that walketh in a perfect way, he shall serve me: there shall no deceitful person dwell within mine house, he that telleth lies shall not remain in my sight, &c.

The Apostle Paul, called to be an Apostle, & teacher of the Gentiles, having converted many to the faith, did take the greatest delight, and reaped soundest consolation in them, he accounted them his Crown, he esteemed them his Sons, he called them his glory, he rejoiced in them as his hope. This appeareth in the example of Onesimus, whom he had begotten in his bonds, the greater fruits of Faith he found in him, the greater account and reckoning did he make of him. The like we might say of others, even of whole Churches gained to the Gospel; the more they increased in godliness, the more his bowels were enlarged in care and compassion toward them. This affection ought to be in all true Pastors toward their people, they must love such above the rest, as exceed and excel the rest in the knowledge and practice of true godliness. This affection should be in the Father towards his Children, he should love them most, he should give them most, he should provide and prepare for them most, that have most Religion in their hearts, most grace in their souls, most soundness in their lives. Let them be used best that are best, and find most favor, that show the greatest faith. The Scripture teacheth us, that Isaac had two sons; Esau was the first borne, yet Jacob had the blessing. Godliness maketh the younger to be the elder, the second to be the first, the lowest to be the highest, the least to be the greatest; but ungodliness causeth the first borne to be last, maketh the elder to be younger, and easteth down the highest into the lowest room. So we see, that among the sons of Jacob, Joseph had the double portion, albeit he were the youngest of them all saving one, because the rest of his Children had stained themselves with some gross sin, which did put them out of their proper place, and disinherit them of the blessing.

This point here to be learned and practiced, reproveth two sorts of men, as well such as make choice of such as be wicked, as those that hate them which are good and godly. We must not delight our selves in those that be carnal and corrupt, albeit they be never so near unto us. Ahab did repose and rejoice himself in Jezebel against Naboth; Saul in Doeg, against David, when he saw that God was with him, and his spirit departed from himself. Rehoboam made choice of youthful, vain, and vicious Companions, and refused the Counsel of the prudent, and the advise of the Elders, & the friends of his Father. Jeroboam made choice of the ignorant multitude, of the scum of the people, and of the Rascall sort, to be the teachers of Israel, and their guides and Governors in the matters of God's worship. It is a common evil to delight in evil company, in profane persons, in Idol-shepherds, in carnal friends. The delight that men take in these is vain, and of no value; nay it bringeth in the end Gall and Wormwood, and biteth as a Serpent. If thou delight in thy Wife, Children, Servants, Friends, and Familiars in the flesh, in a worldly and wicked manner, and never considerest from whence thou hast them, nor receivest them as the gifts and blessings of God, that thereby thou mayest have sound joy, and true happiness heaped upon thee, it is extreme folly and madness. What was the end of Ahab's joy in his wife, in his sons, in his posterity? They were at the last, though multiplied exceedingly, cut off from man to beast, and none of them left to water a wall. How many are there, that being free and at liberty to make choice of Friends, of Wife, of Servants, of Companions, do never set the Lord before their eyes, who having little grace in their own hearts, make an election of such as are most ungracious and graceless. They desire not to be Companions of such as love the Lord and his Law, but respect riches or beauty, or honor, or such outward Ornaments, as perish with the use, and cannot cleanse the soul. Wherefore, let all superiors know and understand, that it is a duty and instruction belonging unto them, to delight themselves, and set their hearts upon such as are religious and virtuous, and to show their anger and displeasure against those that are faithless, and fear not to offend the Lord with their wicked lives and ungodly behavior. For this shall be our praise and commendation in the choice of our friends, and in the government of our houses, to follow the example of God our Creator, who is the most prudent and perfect Governor. His favor doeth embrace, and his goodness compass on every side, such as faithfully serve him, and sincerely worship him: but his wrath and angry countenance is fierce against those that walk rebelliously in the contempt of his Laws, and live licentiously in the profession of his service. Thus ought it to be in his people that govern in his fear, such as they see fear God they must honor, they must commend, they must encourage, they must countenance; but such as are stubborn against themselves, and stiff-necked against God, they must reprove and reject, they must discommend and discountenance by all means they can. For, all such as suffer disorders and misbehavior in their charges, without check and controulement, shall find the faults of their Inferiors turn to their own reproach and reproof. The Wiseman teacheth, that sin is a shame to a whole people, and to a great company; much more then shall it turn to be infamous and ignominious to a house, and to the Master of the house, as we see in Eli and his sons.

Secondly, it reproveth such as hate and abhor those that show the seeds of Faith, and the sparks of grace, and the fruits of the spirit to be in them. It is an evil (as we heard before) not to prefer and make choice of such as are good; but it is a great deal worse to loath and dislike such as are godly, when they have made choice of them, and brought them home into their own doors. They that have obtained this mercy to find grace with God, do bring the blessings of God with them into the house, they come not empty and alone, but full fraught and furnished with great Treasures, if that we had spiritual eyes or hearts to discern it. A Religious and a virtuous Wife isa great Jewel, her price is far above the Pearls, for she will do her Husband good, and not evil, all the days of her life: and yet many repine and murmur that their wives have so much knowledge, and that they are too zealous in the truth. They never think they bring them to much riches and substance, but if they labor to be rich in God (which is the true Treasure) they think a little to be too too much. They never complain that they are in favor with great men, from whom they may reap a commodity; but if they seek to be in favor with God, from whom every good giving, & every perfect gift proceedeth, they make a scoff and a mock at it. They ought to encourage them, and stir them up to good things, and not hinder them in their course. They ought themselves to teach and instruct them, & not discourage them from learning of others. Thus it is also many times with many Fathers, that pretend a love to their children, but it is in the flesh, not in the spirit; in the world, not in the Lord; in earthly things, not in heavenly. If their Children have embraced the Gospel in sincerity, and seek after the means of their salvation with diligence, they think they are too forward, and fear they will prove too praecise, and so make more account of others, that are more loose in life, and profane in conversation.

This fault was in good Isaac, who preferred his son Esau hated of God, before Jacob that was loved of him. So do the Fathers of our times, delight themselves most in their Children that are most lewd, and show least favor to such as most deserve it. And thus it fareth with many Pastors & Teachers of the people, who ought to go before them in soundness of Doctrine, and uprightness of life, and by all means to bring forward such as are coming on, to spurr and stir up such as are sluggish, to comfort such as are careful and zealous, and to discountenance such as are open or secret enemies. But how many are there that would be called and accounted faithful shepherds and true Teachers sent of God, who are afraid their hearers should be too forward: like envious Masters, that are loath to have good Scholars, & repine at it to have any profit too much under them. Thus they nuzzle them in ignorance that are blind, they strengthen the hand of iniquity, they encourage evil doers, and discourage those that would fain walk in the ways of godliness. It was the earnest desire of Moses, That all the Lord's people were Prophets, and that the Lord would put his spirit upon them. If we have this spirit, let us never reproach those with learning too fast, that are under our charge, who ought to be our comfort in this life, and shall be our crown in the life to come.

Lastly, seeing it belongeth as a special duty unto us, to show our greatest affection to such as have in their harts most religion, it serveth as a comfort and encouragement to all callings, even the lowest that are among men, to labor after good things, and to seek to serve and fear the Lord, seeing such as are the meanest, and of basest reckoning with many, are respected and recompensed of him. This is a notable encouragement, to consider that God taketh care of us, and requireth of men to do us good. The least member of the body is honored, and not despised; cherrished, and not contemned; tendered, and not abhorred of us. So it ought to be in the members of Christ's body, which are all dear to him (which he bought with an equal price) and therefore ought to be dear unto us, if we believe our selves to have our part and portion in his body. Notwithstanding, if thorough the pride, contempt, disdain, and unthankfulness of men, we find our selves little regarded, made as a foot-stool for men to tread and trample upon, & as a ball to spurn at with all reproach, and so scorned for our well doing: let us not be dismayed with this dealing, but consider that the poor servants of God have tasted of the like measure that have gone before us, so that we are not the first that have been thus used, and we are not like to be the last that are in this sort to be abused.

Mark a little how it fell out with Joseph, one that performed the best service, and yet one that received the worst recompense. When he was brought down to Egypt, and bought and sold as a slave, or as Ox in the Market from one to another; at length he came unto the hands & house of Potiphar, whom he served faithfully, so that the Lord was with him, and made all that he did to prosper in his hand; his Master put all that he had in his hand, and made him Ruler of his house; nevertheless, not long after, thorough the false suggestion of his Mistress, and the hasty and over-rash credulity of his Master, his good service was forgotten, he is cast in prison, and lieth bound in setters. The like we might say of Jacob, who served for his wives in the house of Laban. Who could do better service, or who could show himself a more painful and profitable servant, then he had done? He speaketh it before Laban's face, and doth not whisper it behind his back, he avoucheth it before him, that he might take exception to it, if he had ought to object against it, Whatsoever was torn of Beasts, I brought it not unto thee, but made it good myself: of mine hand didst thou require it, were it stolen by day, or stolen by night, I was in the day consumed with heat, and with frost in the Night, and my sleep departed from mine eyes. This duty and diligence did he perform, and yet what was the wages of the work, and the recompense of his labors? It followeth in the next words, I have been twenty years in thine house, and served thee fourteen years for thy two daughters, & six years for thy Sheep, and thou hast changed my wages ten times. Thus we see, how good and gracious servants have been served in former times before us, and what hard measure hath been rendered and repaid unto them.

The examples of the Israelites is fit to be thought upon, and worthy to be considered in this case, when they sojourned and served in the land of Egypt, according as the Lord fore-shown unto Abraham, Know for a surety, that thy seed shall be a stranger in a Land that is not theirs four hundred years, and shall serve them, and they shall entreat them evil. They never plotted any rebellion, or attempted act of hostility against them, but served their task-masters that oppressed them, and labored in making brick, and gathering straw, and finishing their task, yet they were blamed and beaten, and laden with many sorrows. Let us therefore by all these examples be encouraged, and know that nothing can happen unto us, which hath not fallen out to others that have lived before us, who have done as good and faithful service to their superiors, as we have done or can do, and yet have been evilly entreated, and wrongfully pursued, and cruelly handled, and unjustly rewarded. Let us not suffer for evil doing, and as evil doers; but let us suffer as Christians, that so God may be glorified, and we not ashamed of our afflictions. For this is thank-worthy, if a man for Conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully, it is acceptable before him, & is respected of him, albeit among men it go away unrewarded. We herd before of the good service of Jacob, of Joseph, of the Jews; of Jacob toward Laban, of Joseph toward Potiphar, of the Jews toward the Egyptians, and how evilly they were rewarded and recompensed of their cruel and covetous Masters. But they knew they served a better Master in Heaven, who would not suffer them to want the fruit of their labors, nor to loose the work of their hands. Hence it is, that he increased Jacob in substance, he brought Joseph out of prison, he gave the Israelites favor in the eyes of the Egyptians, that gave them Jewels of Silver and of Gold, and sent them not empty away. Thus will God deal with us, if we suffer with patience, and will honor them that are careful to honor him.

We heard before howe the Apostle commendeth Onesimus to his Master, that he was to be received of him not so much as a servant, as one that was more then a servant; that is, not an Infidel, but a Christian. This point, is in these words declared by the special, or by a word of Relation, a beloved Brother, which was more then a simple servant. For if he had any unbelievers (that were not of the household of Faith) either borne in his house, or bought with his money, they were his servants, but they were not beloved Brethren. But this man converted to the Faith was above the rank and degree of such persons, he was both a Servant and a Brother. True it is, there was great difference between Philemon and Onesimus, between the Master and Servant in things of this life; one, was Superior; the other, Inferior: one was to command, the other to obey; one was to rule, the other to be subject in the Lord; yet we see, how the Apostle in this place is not afraid to call Onesimus his Masters Brother, and would not have the Master ashamed to acknowledge it in words, & to show it in his practice. This is not spoken, as if they were natural Brethren in the flesh, and descended of one Father, according to the common generation of the rest of the sons of men; but they were Brethren in Christ, partakers of the common Faith, equal in the participation of heavenly graces, alike in the favor of God, one not dearer to him then another. Hence it is, that the Apostle before Verse 7. and afterward, verse 20. calleth Philemon his Brother in Christ, though he were his son in the Gospel, because he had begotten him unto God by the immortal seed of the word, as we shall see in the words following, where he challengeth as his own, and as a due debt unto him, whatsoever Philemon had.

From hence we learn, that we are all of us equal before God and our Brethren in Christ Jesus our Lord. Although Christian Religion doeth not take away the difference of persons, and conditions before men, but alloweth some to be high, and some low; some above, and others beneath; some to be Masters, and others to be Servants: yet, it maketh us alike and equal before God, inasmuch as it causeth us to be brethren in Christ. This truth hath plentiful confirmation out of the books of Moses, where all the Jews, of what quality and condition soever they were, are oftentimes called brethren. The poor are named the Brethren of the rich: the Debtor is called the Brother of his Creditor: the Servant is Brother to the Master: the King set over them, must not lift up his heart above his Brethren. This is it which David confesseth in many places of the Psalms, I will declare thy Name unto my Brethren: in the midst of the Congregation I will praise thee. And in the 122. Psalm, he wished prosperity, and would procure the good of God's house, for his Brethren's and Companions sake. Where we see, that albeit he were the King of Israel, and sate in the throne of glory and seat of dignity above them, yet he refuseth not to cast himself into a common condition with others, and to give them the honor of his brethren. This is it which the Prophets teach everywhere, They shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his Brother, saying, Know the Lord for they shall all know me from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord. This is it which Christ speaketh to his Disciples, Be not ye called Rabbi, for one is your Doctor, even Christ; and all ye are Brethren. The like precept the Apostle enioineth and the same rule he delivereth to the Romans, chap. 12, 16. Be of like affection one toward another, be not high-minded, but make yourselves equal to them of the lower sort: be not wise in yourselves. And to the Phillippians, Chap. 2, 3. Let nothing be done through contention or vain-glory, but that in meekness of mind every man esteem other better than himself. Again, to this purpose he writeth to the Galatians, All ye that are baptized into Christ, have put on Christ; there is neither Jew nor Grecian, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. All these Testimonies of the Old and New Testament, do fully and evidently teach us, that howsoever the Gospel permitteth and prescribeth the differences and degrees of persons, that some be Lord's, and others bear themselves as servants, yet it alloweth and maketh them to be equal in Christ, to be brethren and Sisters in the common faith, all members of Christ, all partakers of the same hope, all heirs of the same kingdom.

And what can be more plain then this principle? First, it is the nature & property of God to accept no man's person. An high place, a noble birth, a comely personage, are much respected amongst men, and such persons are highly advanced and preferred. But it is not so with God: for, in his election of us to life, in his calling of us, in his justifying of us, in his sanctifying and saving of us, he respecteth not whether we be high or low, rich or poor, learned or unlearned; he chooseth, he calleth, he justifieth, he sanctifieth, he glorifieth the bond as well as the free; the low as well as the high; the Servant as well as the Master. This is it which the holy man Job setteth down, Wilt thou say unto a King, thou art wicked? Or to Prince, ye are ungodly? How much less to him that accepteth not the rich more then the poor, for they be all the works of his hands. To this purpose the Apostle Paul speaketh, To every man that doth good, shall be glory, honor, and peace, to the Jew first, and also to the Grecian, for there is no respect of persons with God. Likewise, the Apostle Peter teacheth this in the Sermon that he preached unto the Gentiles, Of a truth I perceive, that God is no acceptor of persons, but in every Nation he that feareth him, & worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. Seeing then, this is the Nature of God, that he regardeth not the outward appearance and countenance of men, we must know that he respecteth all as equal and alike.

Secondly, Christ Jesus accepteth all that believe in him as his Brethren and members of his body, even flesh of his flesh, & bone of his bones. This is it which he speaketh to Mary Magdalene, after his resurrection, when he had appeared unto her, and manifested himself unto her; Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and to your Father; and to my God, and to your God. Where he showeth, that God is a common Father, & that all the godly are as brethren one to another. Likewise, the Apostle writeth to the Hebrews, He that sanctifieth, and they that are sanctified, are all of one, wherefore he is not ashamed to call them Brethren, saying; I will declare thy name unto my Brethren, in the midst of the Church I will sing praises to thee. The Lord Jesus is infinitely above us, who being in the form of God, thought it no robbery to be equal with God, and we are poor, wretched, and miserable men; yet he is ashamed of no man, except we first be ashamed of him. He will deny no man, he will reject no man, except we first do deny and reject him. If then, Christ do vouchsafe to account and accept us as his brethren, we must needs acknowledge an equality and brotherly fellowship among all the faithful that are in Christ.

Thirdly, all the godly that are truly regenerate, are adopted to the hope of the kingdom of glory, and are redeemed by the blood of Christ. It is not Gold, or Silver, or Pearls, or the treasures that are in the world, could pay a price sufficient to redeem and ransom our souls;

it is the precious blood of Christ alone, that must purchase our peace, as of a Lamb undefiled and without spot. Now, he came into the world to seek and to save that which was lost; he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. How mean soever our places, how simple soever our persons, how base soever our conditions are, we have as good a title, and as great an interest in the death and passion of Christ, as they that shine in the world, that are clad in Purple, and fare deliciously every day. And as these have redemption by him, so God affordeth to them the means of salvation, as well as the mightiest Monarkes upon the earth. The poor man hath the word of God offered to him, read unto him, and preached unto him as well as the rich: he hath the Sacraments of God provided for him, as well as for them that are of high place: he may pray unto God as freely, as comfortably, as cheerfully, as the great men of the earth, and he hath a gracious promise to be heard and respected, as well as they. Though thou farest hardly and meanly at home, yet God hath prepared thee a feast, and biddeth thee to his Table richly furnished, and plentifully stored with all provision. Though thou do not iet up and down in Silks and Veluets, and hast no gorgeous attire to put on, yet God hath provided thee a better garment, he giveth thee his own son to put on, and clotheth thee with his righteousness, which shall cover all thy shame, that thy nakedness shall never appear in his sight. So then, seeing God accepteth no man's person, seeing Christ vouchsafeth to call us Brethren; and lastly, seeing the faithful have redemption by his blood, it followeth necessarily, that our Christian Religion, and Faith in Christ, do make all persons after a sort equal, as Brethren and Sisters of one and the same Father and Family, and Ioynt-heirs of one and the same Kingdom, that is immortal and never fadeth.

The Uses of this Doctrine are many, putting us in mind of sundry good duties. First, seeing that in Christ, who is the elder brother of the house, we are all made Brethren and Sisters together, having one Father, which is God; one Mother, which is the Church; one inheritance, which is heaven: it is our duty, being nearly joined by so strong bands, and in so fast and firm a society, to love one another, to seek the good one of another; and to cut off all occasions of discord and division that may arise among us. For, shall such as are members of one body be divided one against another? Or shall such as are the dear Children of the same Father, nourish hatred and heart-burning among themselves? Or shall such as are parts of the same family, foster malice in their hearts, and follow contentions and emulations, to the ruin one of another. My Brethren, we see these things are, but these things ought not so to be. How shall God be our common Father, if we live not together as loving Brethren? Or how shall he call us his children, if we behave our selves as strangers or enemies one to another? This Brotherly love, is the root of all good duties to be performed; where it is wanting, there is nothing but strife and sedition, and all manner of evil works. This is the old commandment, That we love our Neighbors as our selves. This is the new commandment given unto us, That we love one another. Seeing therefore, there is one body, and one spirit; one Faith, and one Father; one Church, and one Baptism, let us support one another by love, and endeavor to keep the unity of the spirit, in the bond of peace. This is it which the Apostle proveth, when he hath shown, That there is neither Grecian nor Jew, neither circumcision, nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond, free, but Christ is all, and in all things; he addeth, As the elect of God, holy and beloved, put on the bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another; if any man have a quarrel unto another, even as Christ forgave, even so do ye: and above all these things, put on love, which is the bond of perfectness. When a Controversie & contention arose in the houses of Abraham and Lot among their servants, though there were a great difference and disparity between them, yet Abraham said, Let there be no strife I pray thee, between thee & me, neither between thy Heardmen & my Herdmen, for we are Brethren. This is that whereof the Prophet putteth us in mind, and offereth to our consideration, Behold, how good and comely a thing it is, Brethren to dwell even together, there the Lord hath appointed the blessing of life forever. To this purpose the Apostle saith, Be affectioned to love one another with Brotherly love, in giving honor go one before anothee; not slothful to do service, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. It cannot be denied, but many occasions of jars and janglings arise among men, and the more they are given to the world, the more they are wrapped and entangled in them, & the less desire and delight they have to be loosed from them. He that is given to contention, shall always feed himself upon it, and never want matter to keep him in it. But would we know what is the cause of so much hatred & malice that remaineth among us? Hereupon it ariseth, even from hence, that we forget that we are Brethren, and do all look for one and the same inheritance.

Secondly, seeing the Gospel of Christ teacheth us to account our selves as brethren, albeit it take not away the degrees of persons, & the differences of Callings, it serveth as a good instruction to all Superiors, to use all mildness and moderation, patience and meekness towards those that are their Inferiors, and placed under them, and to teach them not to contemn and abhor them, not to despise and disdain them. For howsoever there be one way a great inequality between them in matters of this world, and in the things of this life, inasmuch as God set superiors above us, in an higher place and requireth subjection, reverence, and obedience of those that are beneath, yet in another respect they are matches and equals, having a like portion in Christ, and a like interest in the means of salvation. We see in many things of this life, the Lord maketh no difference between high & low, between Prince and people. True it is, their food is daintier, but are their bodies stronger? Their attire is costlier, and their apparel finer, but are they kept the warmer? They may have greater help of the Physicians, but can they deliver them from death? They may have a more costly Coffin, a more sumptuous Tomb, and a greater train following them to the grave, but can these things help the soul? No, no, the Prophet is plain, and experience should make us able to see it, and wise to confess it; they have great names, and high Titles of honor given unto them, I have said, ye are God's, and ye are all Children of the most high, But ye shall die as a man, and ye Princes shall fall like others. If then, there be so little difference in the life, and less difference of the death of rich and poor, of Master and Servant, of Magistrate & Subject, we shall find a greater equality and parity between them in holy and heavenly things. We allow them to be as the elder brethren, but they must know and consider that other are as the younger brethren of the house, and have the same privileges given unto them. For if the Lord Jesus be not ashamed to call us all brethren, shall they be ashamed to confess one another to be equal in the matters of our redemption and salvation? Shall the rich man disdain the poor, or the Prince his people, or the Master the servant, or the Free-man him that is bond, seeing the Lord of life, that is equal with his Father in might and Majesty, vouchsafeth to repute us all in the place of Brethren? Hence it is, that he saith in the Gospel (speaking of lodging the stranger in our houses, of clothing the naked with our Garments, of feeding the hungry with our meats, of visiting the prisoners with relief, of refreshing the sick with our comfort.) Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my Brethren, ye have done it unto me. Who are more disgraced and contemned in the world, then such as are Strangers, or Prisoners, or naked & in necessity? Yet these poor contemptible ones are dear in his sight, tender as the Apple of his eye, and acknowledged of him to be his Brethren. We are not worthy therefore to be esteemed of Christ, if we regard not such as are in greatest price, and chiefest account with him.

So then, we must take heed, that we never despise, and deride, and disdain those that are called the Brethren of Christ, nor refuse to embrace them as our own Brethren. This is that use which the Apostle urgeth, in setting down the duties of Masters, Ye Masters, do the same things unto them, putting away threatening, and know, that even your Master also is in heaven, neither is there respect of persons with him. Where we see, how he moveth all Masters to cast off all pride and high conceit of themselves, and to Love their faithful servants, as their faithful Brethren. It is not far from this purpose, which Job speaketh touching his practice and behavior toward his Servants, If I did contemn the judgment of my servant and of my Mayde, when they did contend with me, What then shall I do when God standeth up? And when he shall visit me, What shall I answer? He that hath made me in the womb, hath he not made him? Hath not he alone fashioned us in the womb? Where the holy man commendeth mildness in all Governors, and reproveth the exercise of cruelty toward their servants. He gave them free liberty to declare and debate the matter with him, to allege what reasonable excuse soever they had, considering with himself, that we have one common Creator and maker, and are partakers of the same Nature, and concluding thereupon, that albeit such as are bound to serve us, be of low degree, and despised in the world, yet they nevertheless are our brethren. So then, such as are advanced unto high places, and set in authority over others, are not to trample them under their feet, to despise and set them at naught, to account them as vile persons in their eyes, but to use them with mildness, and to behave themselves in all lowliness, & to rule their houses with all gentleness. We must remember that we have a Master in heaven, so that albeit he hath exalted us on high, yet God standeth above all, and is the Master both of the Master, & of the servant. O that this were well weighed, and wisely considered, and thoroughly learned of all Superiors, that sit at the stern and guide the ship. The higher and greater our places are, the lower and lesser ought our hearts to be. If we be made Magistrates and Masters, and Rulers, to govern others, let us confess they be Brethren with us. This yieldeth a profitable meditation to all Christian Governors, when we behold any of our Inferiors (though they were our bondmen) in any trouble or distress, to think earnestly upon these things. If God have made me never so high, when I see the people pinched with dearth and famine, that they are ready to perish and famish in the streets for want of Bread, I must know they are not Dogs, (though many make no better nor farther reckoning of them) alas, alas, they are my Brethren.

When the Pestilence walketh in the darkness, and the plague destroyeth at noon day, that God striketh down with his fearful hand; that thousands fall at our side, and ten thousands at our right hand (for he oftentimes maketh havoc, and bringeth desolation into many houses and families) I must think it is no Murraine of Cattle, they are my brethren. When I behold the oppression of the poor, and the grinding of the faces of the needy, that they are eaten up as bread, and sold as old shoes, for nothing; I must have this feeling of their affliction, they are not as Horsses or Asses over-laden with their burden (whom yet, if it were so, we were bound to pity & raise up, though belonging to our enemy) they are my poor and dear brethren, whom God hath created, whom Christ hath redeemed, whom the holy spirit hath sanctified, whom the word hath regenerated, whom the church hath nourished, whom the Angels have guarded, and who, together with me, in the last day, shall be glorified. At that day shall God be all in all, when Christ Jesus shall abolish all power and authority among men, when Princes must resign their kingdoms, and cast down their crowns at his feet, then there shall be no more Prince and Subjects, Pastor and people, Mayster and Servant, Father and Son, Husband and Wife. These degrees endure but for a season, which must have end, when Christ shall come to judge the quick and the dead. If God have made me a Master, and committed Servants to my charge, they must not be respected as my Swine or Oxen; they are my Brethren, and therefore I must look unto them in time of their sickness, & use all good means for their deliverance. The Centurion in the gospel is commended, that when his servant fell sick, & was in danger of death, he came to Christ for help and succor. If a man have a Bullock and beast that is diseased, he will ask counsel, & seek remedy, much more ought we to deal mercifully with our servants which God hath made our brethren, & not to show more mercy to our Cattle for our commodity sake, then to man made after the Image of God for his sake. To conclude, let us from this Christian equality, learn Christian mercy, and know the estate of them that suffer any kind of misery. For what is the cause that we tyrannize over those that are our Inferiors, but because we forget that we are their brethren, and that in this respect they are equal unto us?

Thirdly, this Title of Brethren communicated to all the faithful, serveth as a comfort and consolation to all Inferiors, and to teach them this duty, that they ought not to grudge, or to be grieved that they are placed in a low estate, as though they were therefore less esteemed and regarded of God. For seeing God hath thus far provided for them to call them their Brethren, and to make them equal with those of greater Callings, they are to be contented with their places. It is a great Honor, to be so greatly in his favor, and to be so highly regarded of him, who rejecteth no man for his poor degree, for his low estate; for his mean condition. This is it which the Apostle Paul setteth down, 1. Cor. 7, 21, 22. Art thou called being a Servant? Care not for it: but if yet thou mayest be free, use it rather: for he that is called in the Lord, being a Servant, is the Lord's freeman: Likewise also, be that is called being free, is Christ's Servant. Where he showeth, that no man's poor calling should be his discouragement: but this must be his comfort, and bring peace unto his soul, that if he be a true believer, although he be man's servant, yet he is God's free man. And whomsoever the son maketh free, he is free indeed. For, we must know, that whosoever committeth sin with greediness, and draweth iniquity as with Cart-ropes, he is the servant of sin, though he were the Master of a family, or the Ruler of a kingdom. And on the other side, whosoever is freed from the bondage of sin, and the slavery of the Devil, he is a right free-man, although he be a Captiue, a Prisoner, or a Servant. If we have our part in Christ, we have our part in this comfort, seeing the Servant is saved as well as •...e Master, if he believe.

Furthermo•..., we must consider these two things, both that whatsoever our calling be, wherein we abide, whether it be high or low, we have it from God, we are allotted unto it by his appointment, and that he seeth it, and knoweth it to be the fittest place and best calling for us under the Heavens. For, he respecteth in all his purposes, his own glory, and our profit. If he saw any condition of life to be better for us, or a means to further us in our holy faith and salvation, he would not keep us from it, he would not deny it unto us, he would not restrain us of it. It is a spice of the Devils poison, which he inspired & instilled into the minds of our first parents, to conceive hardly of God's dealing toward us, as if of malice or envy he had held us from the greater good, and bestowed upon us the lesser. He came to them in the Garden, and told them, That God doth know, that when they should eat of the tree of knowledge of good & evil, in the midst of the Paradise of God, their eyes should be opened, and they should be as God's knowing good and evil. So when we grow discontented, and dislike our callings which God hath appointed unto us, we begin to be inueigled by the subtlety of Satan, and shall be always aspiring higher, then God hath judged to be meet for us. Let this serve us, & suffice unto us, that how low soever in our own eyes, and little in the eyes of others, our condition is, yet God hath made them equal with us, and us Brethren with them, to our great and endless comfort. This is that use which the Apostle maketh to encourage and strengthen servants in their duties, Servants, be obedient unto them that are your Masters, according to the flesh with fear and trembling, in singleness of your hearts, as unto Christ. Not with service to the eye as men pleasers, but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart, with good will serving the Lord & not men, And know ye that whatsoever good thing any man doth, that same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free. Whereby he declareth, that the obedience of such as are bond, is no less acceptable to god, then the obedience of such as are free: he looketh not so much to our persons, as to our actions, nor so much to our actions, as to the manner of our doing of them. He liketh and alloweth that which is done of the servant, as well as that which proceedeth from the Master: and he that is of low degree, pleaseth God in the duties of his calling, as well as the man that is of greatest reputation in the world, and highly magnified for his Riches and Honors.

Lastly, seeing God respecteth all alike, and hath made all as one, and as Brethren that are in Christ, it serveth as a reproof, and threatening, and terror, to all drowsy and secure persons, that think they shall escape the judgments of God for their high places. There is no difference with God, there is no inequality with Christ, to them that are in Christ, high and low are all alike with him. None are saved for their highness, none are condemned for their lowness. Christ Jesus accepteth no man for his glory, he rejecteth no man for his ignominy. Let us therefore not bear our selves bold and confident upon our outward excellency, but stand in fear of his judgments, and prepare our selves with all reverence and diligence, that we may be found worthy to stand before the great God in that great day of account. For we must all appear before him, when he will judge every man according to his works. When we shall come personally before his Throne of glory and seat of judgment, he will have no respect to the Nobleness of our birth, to the greatness of our learning, to the beauty of our faces, to the strength of our bodies, to the largeness of our livings, to the abundance of our Riches, or to any outward privileges and dignities of our persons. Then shall all flesh be gathered together from the four winds, and stand before the Judge of all the world. God will respect us as we are, not as we appear to be; not as others have accounted of us, but as he shall manifest us to have been, when the secrets of all hearts shall be disclosed, and hidden things shall be revealed. Then must every man answer for himself, and plead guilty or not guilty, when no pretenses, or excuses, or delays shall avail us. Then shall the poor beggar appear without his rags; the rich Glutton without his Robes; Covetous Indas without his bags; Crafty Gehazi without his money; Proud Haman without his Honor; Aspyring Absalom without his Ambition; Murthering Cain without his Weapon; Cunning Achitophell without his Pollicy. The Kings of the earth must lay down the glory of their Crowns, and the dignity of their Scepters, the Nobles must renounce the Ensigns of honor, and all persons must set aside outward respects of honor and dishonor, of glory and shame, of favor and contempt. Nevertheless, it is to be observed, that albeit these men must stand before the throne of God, without these respects that they made their chiefest felicity; yet they shall not appear without their cruelty, bribery, treachery, blasphemy, covetousness, & such like impiety, for their evil works shall follow them, & cleave fast unto them. Let us therefore never think to escape, when we shall come naked before the eternal Judge, as ever we came into the world, & more naked then we departed out of the world; for whereas some have their Coffins to cover them, others their Tombs to beautify them, and all men their winding sheets to wrap their Carkasses in, whē the Lord shall descend with thousands of his Angels, they shall not have a rag, or a poor fig-leaf to hide their shame. Let us seek while we have time to put on Christ's righteousness as a Garment, that we may be able to stand before the son of man, and receive the glory prepared for us, before the foundations of the earth were laid.

[Specially to me, how much more then unto thee, both in the flesh, and in the Lord.]

We have heard how the Apostle accounteth, and how he would have Philemon account of Onesimus; to wit, above a Servant, even as a beloved Brother. In these words, he urgeth him farther, and showeth that he had more cause to respect him, and greater reason to love him then himself had, because he was joined to him by more bands, whereof two he nameth; one of the flesh, as being his servant; the other in the Lord, as being his brother. Paul was moved to respect him, only in regard of the common faith, and therefore he saith; if he were, not so much a Servant as a Brother to him, much more he ought to be so to his Master; not because he was his servant as other servants are, but because he was the Lord's servant, so that he was bound to love him, both for the Lord's sake, and for his own sake. Heereby there is offered to our considerations, this Lesson to be learned, that the more bands and reasons are given unto us of God to care for any, the more we are bound to care for him, and to respect him. A professor of the Gospel, is more to be regarded then he that is wirhout: One of the same Nation, more then a stranger; one of our own Kindred, more then another farther from us; a Neighbor, more then one that dwelleth many Miles from us; one of a man's house, more then him that is out of his house; a Kinsman converted to the faith, & become a true and perfect Christian, morethen a Kinsman not converted. A Child that hath the sparks of grace in him, more then a Child void of them; a Servant fearing God, more then a Servant in the same family, that doth not fear God, nor regard his word, nor make Conscience of the means of his salvation. Abraham loved Isaac, the son of Promise, having more graces in him, more then Ishmael, the son of the bondwoman, and a scoffing wretch, and more then all the Sons of Keturah, to whom he gave gifts, and sent them away. We see this in the dealing of Abraham toward Lot his Nephew, he would suffer no contention to rest among them, and when he heard he was taken prisoner, he would not have stirred for the wicked sinners that dwelt in Sodom, but he armed his servants to recover him out of the hands of his enemies. This is it which Solomon teacheth, Better is a Neighbor that is near, then a Brother far off. The Apostle teacheth this truth, when he giveth this precept, While we have time, let vt do good to all men, but especially to them which are of the household of faith. And in another place, If any Widow have Children or Nephews, let thē learn first to show godliness towards their own house, and to recompense their Kindred. To this also we are directed in the fifth Commandment, when we are commanded to Honor Father and Mother. Whereby appeareth the truth of this doctrine, that it standeth with God's ordinance, to have the most care of those, and to show the greatest fruits of love unto them, to whom we are bound in the greatest and nearest bands.

The Reasons being wisely considered, will make this plainly to appear unto us. It is a general sentence delivered by Solomon, in the book of Ecclesiastes, Two are better then one, and a threefold Cord is not easily broken. Wheresoever there are stronger Cords to tie us, and moe bands to join us together, our Love ought to be the more greater one towards another. Manie sticks make the greater Fire, and many stringes, the better Music.

Secondly, it is a thing very well pleasing in the sight of God, to consider what means he hath afforded to increase mutual love and society, one with another. This is the reason urged by the Apostle, to persuade the Children and Nephews of poor Widdowes to take care for their Parents, according to their ability, Because that is an honest thing, and acceptable before God. Now, we are bound unto them by many effectual Reasons, as it were with bars of Iron, and bands of Brasse, to nourish those that have nourished us, that have fed us, that have clothed us, that have begotten us, and brought us into the world, so that we must acknowledge it both right and reasonable.

Thirdly, such as break these bands, & cast away these Cords from them, do set themselves against the Doctrine of Christ, and may be sent to school to the Infidels, nay to the brute beasts, which are not void of a certain natural affection. This the Apostle teacheth, If there be any that provideth not for his own, and namely for them of his household, he denieth the faith, & is worse then an Infidel. For howsoever they profess the Faith in words, yet in deed and in truth they deny it. But God is delighted with our works, not with our words, and looketh upon the substance, not the show of our Religion, according as the Apostle speaketh, They profess that they know God, but by works they deny him, and are abominable and disobedient, and unto every good work Reprobate. This profession is vain and hyppocritall, and no more regarded of God, then the leaves of a Tree of him that looketh to find fruit upon it. So then, seeing two are better then one, seeing it is a thing well pleasing with God; and last of all, seeing the Faith is denied of those that regard such as are nearest to them nothing at all, we learn howsoever, we owe somewhat to all mankind, and there is a common band that knitteth us fast together, yet where the debt is greatest, there we are bound to pay most, & where the Obligation is straightest, there we are to perform the greatest duties.

The Uses remain to be considered. First of all, if it be a duty of man toward man, to require most where most is committed, and to yield the greatest love again, where are the greatest occasions to couple and combine us together: then much more are we bound unto the Lord, of whom we have received all, to whom we do own all, and by whom we do enjoy all. We must do homage to him as to our King; we must give honor to him, as to our Father; we must yield him fear, as to our Master; we must perform subjection to him, as to our Creator; we must show obedience to him, as to our Law-giver. He would be holden as a man utterly void of all wit and wisdom, who being indebted unto many men, and owing to some more, and to others less; bound to some in one band, to others in two; to others in many bands; to some owing all that he hath, and to others more then he hath, or is able to pay: would begin to pay his debts without difference and discretion, delivering much to whom he oweth little, and little to whom he oweth much; satisfying two bands where he is bound in one only, and regarding only to have one cancelled, where many other are required at his hands. Thus it fareth with everyone of us; to one, we owe one Talent; to another, three Tallents; to another, five Tallents; but to God we are above all others most deeply indebted; we owe unto him, our goods, our good Names, our substance, our liberty, our lives, our selves, our souls, our bodies, and when we have given him all, all will not serve to pay him, seeing we owe unto him more then we have.

Hence it is that our Savior saith; Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, with all thy Soul, and with all thy mind: this is the first and the great Commandment: and the second like unto this; Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. We see then the order of the Commandments set down by the God of order, that God hath the first place, and man the second; the duties we owe unto him, are preferred before the duties we owe to our Brethren. And if we mark the Lord's prayer, and the order which we are taught to observe in our Prayers and Petitions, we shall find those ranged in the first place that touch the honor of his Name, before such as belong to our necessities: so that the duties are greater, the Chaines are stronger, the bands are faster, and the reasons are firmer to bind us, and knit us unto God. In him we live and move, and have our being. He sendeth Rain and fruitful seasons, he filleth our hearts with joy and gladness. He made us, and not we our selves, he made us of nothing, and when we became deformed, he reformed us. He hath written his Laws in our hearts, and our sins and iniquities he will remember no more. What wrong and injury hath the Lord done us, that having received so many pledges of his favor, and sealed so many bands, acknowledging the infinite debts that ws owe unto him, we should prefer Dust and Ashes before him, and set up proud flesh in disgrace and despite of him? We see what mighty and weighty reasons we have to magnify him above all Creatures in Heaven and Earth, and to advance him above all excellency that is in man, whose breath is in his Nostrils: and yet who is it that giveth him his due, and doth not extol the Creature above the Creator, who is blessed forever?

True it is, every man will pretend love to God, as to him that hath elected him, created him, redeemed him, called him, adopted him, justified him, sanctified him, and preserved him. But do we love his word above our own pastimes and pleasures? Our Savior saith; If any Man love me, he will keep my word, and my Father will love him, and we will come and dwell with him: he that loveth not me, keepeth not my word. If then we prefer the following of our own vanities before the hearing of his truth, we plainly bewray the hypocrisy of our hearts, and show that our love is fastened upon the Earth. We will all seem to love the Lord, and his word, least all men should condemn us, and cry shame of us: but this our love continueth no longer, then till some profit or pleasure round us in the ear, and come in comparison (as it were) to be weighed in the balance together; then farewell God, and his Word, and his Sabbaoths, we will none of them, so long as we have the other to follow after. What is more common in continual practice then this? Will not a drunken Feast, a riotous company of profane Fellowes, sooner draw us to their Lure, then a conscience of our duty to God to keep us at home, to attend to his ordinances for the salvation of our Souls? Every man almost can say the Commandments, and pronounce the words, but they consider not the meaning of them, and how large they are. They know the Law; Thou shalt have no other God's but me: and they would complain of the injury done them, if they should be charged to break the same. Nevertheless, if we love the World more then we love God, or delight in our Riches more then in his Worship, if we trust in the Creature more then in the Creator, or if we fear men more then God, we offend him, and transgress his Commandment. Let us now consider with our selves, how deeply we are indebted unto God, and remember that we owe many duties unto him: he hath given us much, so that he may require much of us again; he hath bestowed many blessings upon us, and therefore he looketh for the greater service at our hands.

Secondly, seeing the Band and Obligation, is much more powerful and astringent to some, then unto others (albeit we are required and charged to love all men as they are men, and to wish well unto them) according to the diverse degrees whereby they are coupled together, both by the sense of Nature, and by the Commaundement of God, it serveth to reprove sundry abuses, and to meet with many disorders that are most rife and common among us.

First of all, it reproveth the blind superstition, not only of elder times, but of the present days wherein we live, and the wicked sniftes of Popish Monks, which being wise in their Generation, would persuade it as meritorious to foolish and sinful men, to give away all their Lands and possessions, and means of maintenance from their Children and Kindred, and bestow them upon the feeding of idle Drones, and unprofitable Beasts, that live by the sweat of other men's: labors to this end, to say Masses for the quick and the dead, and to pray for the puling Souls that languish in Purgatory. For such as was their cruelty over men's bodies, and their Dominion over their consciences, and command over their goods, that the poor people have been, and at this day are besotted and bewitched by them, that they are ready to give a thousand Sacrifices of Rammes, and ten thousand Rivers of Oil, and to forgo their first borne for their transgression, even the fruit of their body for the sin of their Souls. The spiritual consenage and deceit of the fraudulent Jesuits as greedy Cormorants, is notorious and famous, or rather infamous in this kind and case whereof we speak, who make hast to the sick person that is rich (as the Eagle flieth to the Carkasse) to make a prey of him, and the Priests themselves, greeuing that such a fat Morcell should go by their mouths, and so great a bootie should escape their hands, have lamentably complained of their bribery, hypocrisy, cruelty, and iniquity. These are they that eat Men's sins as Bread, and regard not to dam their Souls, to fat their own Bodies, and fill their own pusres.

Again, this reproveth the impiety and vnnaturalnesse in men that regard not their own flesh, nor have a respect to their own Kindred, but are strangers from them, unkind unto them, and void of love toward them. The Apostle prophesieth and complaineth, that in the last days shall come perrilous times, when men shall be cold in Charity, and destitute of natural affection. He would be accounted a stark fool that would seem to show compassion to feed another, and yet starve his own body; to be liberal abroad, and miserable at home; to see other men's miseries, and to take no notice or knowledge of his own; to quench the fire kindled in another man's house, and to suffer his own to be turned down stick and stake, and nothing left to cover his head, and to give him shielde and shelter from the wind and weather.

So standeth the case with all such as open their hands to those that are far off from them, and turn away their eyes from such as are their flesh, and bone, and blood, to whom God and Nature hath made them more indebted, then to other men. It was not so with Joseph, when he lived in wealth, and Jacob was in want: he was stored with plenty, and his Father tasted of scarcity, he gave him Corn freely, and sustained his Kindred willingly. The like care we see in Ruth toward Naomi, the Daughter in Law toward the Mother in Law, she labored and travailed for them both, she gleaned and gathered after the Reapers among the sheaves, and what she left when she was sufficed, she reserved it, and brought all home to relieve and refresh her old Mother. These examples are agreeable to the rule, and these practices are aunswerable to the prccept of the Apostle, requiring of Children and Nephews to recompense the kindness of their Parents. When Christ our Savior was upon the Cross, he shown his godliness toward his Mother, and committed her to the Disciple whom he loved, himself being ready to leave the World. For when he saw his Mother and John standing by her, he said unto his Mother; Woman, behold thy Son: then said he to the Disciple, Behold thy Mother, and from that hour the Disciple took her home unto him. It is the duty of Children to honor their Parents, not only by obedience, but by maintenance; not only by reverence, but by recompense; not only by subjection, but by thankfulness for the benefits that they have received. If they be hungry, they must feed them; if poor, they must relieve them; if in necessity, they must help them; if weak, they must Minister unto them. For if this must be performed to Strangers, much more to Parents? There is nothing more just then this kind of duty, because the light of Nature teacheth, to requite one good turn for another, and to do unto another, as thou wouldst have him do to thee. Wherefore, to deny the performance of these duties, is unnatural and inhumaine: but to break out into the contrary practices, is monstrous and beastly. Absalom conspired against David, Sheba the Son of Bichri, a man of Iemini conspired against David, both of them raised Israel against him, and blew the Trumpet of rebellion. Both the persons were wicked, both their practices were devilish, both their punishments were just and righteous. But if we consider the manner of the offense, by the condition of the offender, and weigh the persons in a balance by the several bands, whereby one was tied above the other, we shall easily find that the sin of Absalom did exceed, and his fact was more odious and hateful in the sight of God and man. For Sheba indeed rose up against his Liedge-Lord, and lawful Prince. But Absalom ought to have shown himself as a Son, as a Servant, as a Subject, and to have acknowledged David his Father, his Master, his Magistrate. He was the Lord's anointed to them both, and therefore they should have been afraid to lay their hands upon him, or to set themselves against him, or to take away the Crown and Kingdom from him: Nevertheless, Absalom's attempt was accompanied with a multitude of offenses, he wronged him that had begotten him, that had nourished him, that had nurtered him, that had honored and advanced him, that had given him life, and all things appertaining unto life. All these bands, that ought to have been as a strong Cord or Cable, never to be untwisted, and as a Chaine of Iron, never to be broken, he rent in sunder as a thread of Tow is broken when it feeleth the fire, and therefore as the fault was most foul, so his fall was most fearful, according to the saying of the Wiseman; Whosoever recompenceth evil for good, evil shall not depart from his house. Thus then we see, that such as contemn their Parents, and refuse to help and succor those that GOD hath made nearest unto them, and so bound them in a greater band, do commit the greater sin, and plainly declare that their hearts are void of natural affection.

Thirdly, this Doctrine reproveth those, that where most causes and reasons concur and meet together to urge them to their duty, do not make use of them, nor bind themselves more closely and straightly with them, nor show more kindness being moved by them, so that the greater and moe the means are to tie them in affection one to another, the less many times their love is. This may be made plainly to appear unto us, if we consider the particular practice of the people toward their Minister, and the general behavior of one of the faithful toward another. God hath bound the people to their own Pastor, by a straighter and nearer conjunction, then to the Shepherds of other Foldes, because they have a greater charge of their Souls, and must give an account for them to the chief Shepherd of the Sheep: and yet we see they are most bitter and violent against them, because they reprove their sins, and discover their corruptions, that they themselves may see them and forsake them, and God may forgive them. Shall the sick person hate the Physician because he showeth him his disease, and offereth his help & best endeavor to cure it? In like manner, shall we be spitefully entreated and cruellie handled, and mortally maligned, that wish them the greatest good, show our selves their best friends, deal faithful with their Souls, and labor to bring them to eternal happiness? This is it which the Apostle speaketh to the Galatians; Am I therefore become your Enemy, because I tellyou the truth? Thus also the Prophet Jeremiah complaineth, Shall evil be recompensed for good? For they have digged a pit for my Soul: remember that I stood before thee to speak good for them, and to turn away thy wrath from them. We pray for them, we stand in the gap, we exhort and admonish them, we desire to cure them of those sins, that fight against their Souls to destroy them.

Secondly, we are to draw from hence a general consideration, that as God hath called us with an holy calling, into the bosom of the Church, so he hath linked the faithful in love one to another, and yoked them together with the sweet yoke of his Gospel: and yet how many are there that profess the name of Christ, and will needs be accounted true Christians, that cannot abide the Children of God, but hate them with an unfeigned hatred, and account them as their Mortall enemies? If we should see a man rage against the members of his own body, and strike himself with stones to the wounding of the flesh like the man possessed, would we not seek to bind him with Chaines, and say he were mad and out of his wits? So likewise, if we be in Christ, we have him as our head, and are members one of another; and therefore such as nourish the passions of hatred as Coals of fire kindled in their breasts, are out of their right mind, as men distracted and beside themselves. No man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord doth the Church. We have many effectual means and strong reasons to join our affections one to another, There is one Body, and one Spirit; there is one hope, and one inheritance; there is one Faith, and one Baptism; there is one God and Father of all, which is above all, and thorough all, and in us all: These are so many bands to hold us together; if we pluck these Chaines asunder, and break the Fetters in pieces, that no man can tame us nor bind us, we are not living but dead members, and offer violence to our own flesh. The single knot of nature ought to be sufficient to knit us one to another, and the least thread of natural conjunction of our human Nature, ought to sew us together as a Garment fitted for our body: how much more when many occasions meet together, which should establish brotherly love to continue among us?

Thirdly, seeing coupling of many reasons together, and the meeting of many good respects in one, giveth the more cause of joy and gladness, of loving and caring one for another, it giveth a profitable instruction to all Children and Servants, and other inferiors to perform the duties of honor and reverence to their Fathers and Masters. If there were no other means, this were a sufficient means to make them tractable and attentive to the words and directions of their Fathers and Masters, even because they are their Fathers and Masters. For this includeth many reasons, and joineth them in nearer bands, then they were tied together before, and detecteth them of a greater sin, and maketh them guilty of a greater judgment. When it pleased God to open the mouth of Baalams Ass, to reprove the foolishness and wickedness of that false Prophet, it was his fault not to hearken, nor give heed to that which is spoken unto him. When God instructeth us by the Creatures which are the common Masters of all mankind, we must learn the invisible things of God by them. When the Wiseman passed by the field of the slothful, and by the Vine-yard of the Man destitute of understanding, which was grown all over with Thorns and Nettles: he beheld and considered it well, he looked upon it and received instruction. But when the Lord chooseth one to speak unto us, and to inform us in his ways which hath been the Instrument of our life and being, of our peace and welfare, of our good and salvation; we ought to have more respect to his person, and to his persuasion, as he is a more honorable Messenger, and as his words do proceed from greater love and kindness toward us. This serveth greatly to reprove all rebellious Children and contemptuous Servants, which dislike and distaste the holy instructions and informations of their Fathers and Masters. If they receive any temporal commodity from them, this doth relish well in their mouths, but they regard not their counsels, they will none of their instructions. These are wicked Children; these are ungodly Servants. An evil Child, is but half a Child; an evil Wife, is but half a Wife; an evil Servant, is but half a Servant; an evil Subject, is but half a Subject. The godly and gracious Child, is a Child indeed; a godly and gracious Wife, is a true Wife indeed; a godly and gracious Servant, is a right Servant indeed; a godly and gracious Subject, is to be accounted and acknowledged a true Subject indeed. For as there are degrees of conjunction of mankind one to another, which are as certain steppes, whereby we climb up to the society and mutual love of others; so the more steps and degrees there are, the greater ought our love to be. To be a man created after the Image of God is one degree, and challengeth love from us to be performed toward him.

To be joined in a Political or Domestical knot; to wit, in the Common wealth, or in the private Family (as the Prince and Subject, the Father and Son, the Master and Servant) is another, and a nearer degree, and ought to be the cause of farther love. But if to these natural and civil respects, there be added a spiritual Communion in Christ, which is the best band, that bindeth faster than all the rest, whereby the Subject is made his Princes brother; the Child, his Fathers Brother; and the Servant, his Masters Brother: this requireth a more faithful and fervent love, and a farther degree of our affection toward them. On the other side, if the conjunction between them be only in the two former considerations, there can be no true and sincere love between them, albeit they be so closely tied together: no, although they be Fathers and Children, Husbands and Wives, Masters and Servants, Princes and Subjects. For where Christ Jesus is not, there can be no singleness and soundness of the Soul; whosoever loveth not in the Lord, he cannot love from the heart: and where there is no true piety, there can be nothing else but hypocrisy, which is the bane and poison of true love. Hence it is, that he which hath an evil Servant, doth not in truth possess him, he hath an interest and propriety in the least part of him: he may have his hands, but he cannot have his heart. So the Apostle showeth, that while Onesimus was a wicked man, and an unbeliever, his Master Philemon could not commodiously use him: he wandered therefore a while from his House, that by changing of the place he might be turned into another, and return a new man; before an unworthy Servant, but now a profitable Servant; nay, a beloved Brother, made near, and after a sort equal with his Master thorough Faith in Christ.

Whensoever therefore Kings and Princes, Fathers and Masters, being believers, have under them, and belonging unto them, such as are unfaithful and unbelievers, they cannot promise to themselves that they have the whole rule and command over them. This appeareth evidently in the Popish sort, that believe the Doctrine of the Council, or rather Conuenticle of Trent, if one that professeth the Gospel have a Wife, or Child, or Servant, embracing that falsely named Catholic-Religion, that rest upon the deceiveable errors of the Priests and Jesuits, and all of them upon the decree and determination of the Pope; he cannot make his accounts (except he account amiss) that he hath full power over them, or the rule of their lives, or the love of their hearts. We see it oftentimes come to pass in Subjects adhering to the Dregges of Popish superstition, that notwithstanding the bands of fidelity and allegiance, whereby they are obliged to their Princes, they break out into actions of open Rebellion, and seek the subversion of King, and Country, and Religion. If then a man would have an absolute and Sovereign command over his Inferiors, and be assured to have a whole and entire Wife, that his heart may trust in her, and her heart rest in him: if a man would have a dutiful Child, and a faithful Servant to do his will, and perform service unto him for conscience sake, he must make choice of such as have in them the fear of God, the Faith of Christ, the gifts of the Spirit, the love of Religion, the desire of instruction, and the care of salvation. If these be wanting, never think their affection can be firmly settled toward thee: but upon every occasion it will be easily removed from thee. It is the surest and fastest knot that Christ knitteth, all other bands will quickly be broken and loosed.

Lastly, seeing the increase of many bands meeting together, doubleth and trebleth the care and love one toward another, so that where the smallest number of means is found, there also is found the smallest love: and where the greatest number of occasions concurrerth (as it were) on an heap, there ought to be the surest knot of friendship and amity: it should put all superiors in mind of a necessary duty, to be careful to instruct those that belong to their several charges and iurisdictions, that so they may tie them with a surer knot to themselves, and have the better service at their hands. For seeing they are nearer coupled unto them that are under the reach of their authority, or the roof of their houses, then unto the rest of mankind: they ought to have a greater respect unto them, and bear a dearer love unto them, even unto their bodies, how much more unto their Souls? But we cannot better testify our love unto them, and show our care over them, then by making known unto them the works of the Lord, and the ways of salvation. If we be commanded to Exhort one another while it is called today, and to stir up one another to good things, if we must admonish them that are out of order, and comfort the feeble minded; how much more are we bound in conscience to perfect it to those that depend upon us, and are nearer unto us? It was the first and principal care of all the godly Kings that had true Religion in their own harts, to provide for the instruction of their subjects. The Apostle writing to the Ephesians, and prescribing the distinct duties of sundry persons, forgetteth not the Father and the Son, and as he chargeth Children To obey their Parents in the Lord: so he commandeth Parents, to bring them up in the instruction and information of the Lord. Thus godly Masters have used all diligence to bring their Servants to have a desire of Religion, and a love to the exercises of piety; whereby oftentimes such a good work hath been wrought in them, that they have accounted their Masters as second Fathers, and as spiritual Fathers, & confessed themselves more bound in all duty to them, then to their natural Parents, having learned that to the glory of God, and the salvation of their Souls by their Masters instruction, which they could never understand by their Fathers education. They have confessed themselves to have gained more by such a service, then if a large portion, a rich inheritance, and great reuennues had been left unto them. And indeed, this is the only way to teach Children dutifulness, and to frame our Servants to obedience, to plant godliness in them, and to water that which is planted. The neglect of this care in us, will make them careless: and the making of no conscience to teach them, will bring them to be unconscionable in their places. If we be dumb and open not our mouths to instruct them, we shall have deaf Children, and deaf Servants; that will stop their ears against all good admonition that is offered unto them. If we be bound in a double Band, common and special, and do perform a single duty unto them: it will follow, that as they owe unto us a twofold duty, general, and particular; the general of all mankind; the particular of Servants, they will perform a single, and maimed, and imperfect service. Thus much shall suffice for this Doctrine and division.

17 If therefore thou account our things common, Receive him as myself.

Hitherto we have spoken of the former reason drawn from the Apostles action of sending him back to his Master, together with the convincing and confuting of the two objections that might be made against the receiving of him; one touching the retaining of him with himself; the other, touching the Servants departure from his Master. Now followeth the second reason of the second sort, taken from the person of Paul, and it is of his communion with Philemon, and the participation of the same heavenly gifts and graces with him. This reason is first handled, and then another Objection is prevented. The reason is in this 17. Verse: the prevention is the two next following; to wit, the 18. and 19. Verses. This reason here used, is briefly propounded, and yet nothing is omitted which may carry any force of Argument to persuade and assuage Philemon. For he inferreth out of the former words wherein he hath commended Onesimus, not so much to be accounted as a Servant, as to be received as a Brother, that he is worthy to be forgiven: and withal, he insinuateth and signifieth that he was necessarily joined with him in these bands of mutual love, that he could not be separated and divided from him, whereby it must come to pass, that one of these will follow; either thou must love us both, or else forever refuse us both. If thou hate him, thou canst not love me: or if thou love me, thou must not hate hate him. This reason is thus framed:

- If we have fellowship together in all common blessings, then receive him.
- But we have fellowship together in all common blessings:
- Therefore receive him.

The first proposition of this reason is in the beginning of this verse, [If therefore thou account our things common, receive him.] The conclusion is amplified and made manifest by a comparison of the like, [Receive him as myself.]

Thus much of the Method: now let us see somewhat concerning the meaning of the words, which are few, and not hard. When the Apostle saith [If thou account our things common] the words in the original are; If thou have me a Fellow or partaker; that is, One in common with thee: whereby he expresseth his singular affection to this poor fugitive Servant, and maketh his cause and this request all one, so that to reject him, was as much as if he rejected Paul; and on the other side, to embrace and receive him, is accounted by him, as done to himself. Again, when he craveth to have him received; by receiving, we must understand, not only the entertaining of him into his service, and the taking of him home into his house, but therein also he requesteth of him, to forgive him his offenses committed against him, and to think well of him, as of a Brother in Christ. Lastly, when he addeth [As myself] he meaneth, lovingly, friendly, heartily, as thou wouldst do me if I came unto thee. As if he should have said; seeing no man denieth to his companion and familiar friend, anything that is honest and just, it cannot stand with that love and familiarity that hath ever been between thee and me, to deny me this reasonable request: but we have been and are most dear and inward friends, communicating one with another all good things, so that I have accounted thee another myself, and thou hast accounted me another thyself, and therefore I do not doubt, but thou wilt receive him again into thy favor, as if he were another Paul, or as a member of his body.

This is to be marked and considered concerning the meaning. The words in this verse are not many, but the observations are not few that might be concluded and collected out of the same. First of all, many may marvel that the Apostle is so earnest, vehement, and importunate for a Servant, and especially for such a Servant. Surely, fear of hard and severe dealing might have moved Onesimus to distrust and despair, and therefore he useth all means to hold him up, to cherish his faith, and to further the good work begun in him, being as yet a young plant, a new convert, as a joint newly restored, and having yet a tender conscience: whereby he provoketh us and all others, to seek tenderly the upholding, maintaining, confirming, and comforting such as have given witness of their true repentance, not to quench the smoking Flaxe, nor to break the bruised Reed. For seeing we are with all mildness to receive unto us such as are weak in the faith; woe unto them that stay them that are coming forward, and lay stumbling blocks in their way to bring them back, and to cause them to return to their vomit with the Dog, and to the wallowing in the mire like the Sow that was washed. And seeing the sinner is thus to be helped, which hath approved his conversion unto us, that we are to make intercession unto others, to obtain pardon for the penitent; we are admonished, that they are much more favorably handled, and carefully to be received, and gently to be remitted by our selves.

Secondly, we see, that to the old request he addeth a new reason: for we shall never find in this Epistle, his petition barely and nakedly propounded. He hath used diverse Arguments before to persuade Philemon, yet here we have another annexed, to move him to grant it without denial or resistance. This giveth instruction to the Ministers of the Gospel, to teach the truth soundly and substantially, as that the consciences of the people may be well grounded, and thoroughly settled therein. When matters of weight and importance are in question, they must not deal rawly, they must not use weak proofs and insufficient reasons, whereby men may be rather hardened in their errors, then helped out of their errors.

Thirdly, the Apostle doth not simply say; If our things be common (as he might have done) but if thou account them common, and us to have a communion between our selves: declaring thereby, that it is not enough to know a truth, unless we also yield unto it as unto a truth. It is one thing to know what is good, and another thing to embrace it in our practices. It is one thing to know what is evil, and another to refuse it in our actions. We must labor not only to have our minds cleared, our understandings and our judgments rectified to see the truth, but to have our harts and affections sanctified to follow it. It behooveth therefore not to rest our selves satisfied with general notions, but so to ensue after them, as that we make special application of thē: David in general knew that Adultery was evil; Noah knew that drunkenness was beastly, Peter knew the denying of his Master was fearful; yet in the brunt of temptation, though the mind had knowledge of it, the affections would not refuse it, but yielded as a City besieged by an enemy.

Fourthly, the Apostle putteth Philemon in mind, that seeing there was so near a conjunction between them twain, that they were become as it were one man, and had one mind in two bodies; it followeth, that whatsoever was joined to one of them, ought of necessity to be joined to the other. Whereby we see, that such as are our friends, ought to be also the friends of our friends, that is; of those that are joined unto us. Philemon was the friend of Paul, and therefore if Onesimus were the friend of one, he must needs be the friend of the other. Paul and Philemon were as two Brethren, if then Onesimus were the Brother of Paul, he ought also to be accounted the Brother of Philemon, and therefore he would have him received as himself. It is no true friendship when one taketh profession to love another man, and yet hateth him which is his chiefest and dearest friend: for if indeed we loved him, we would for his sake love the other that loveth him. This we see in the covenant made with Abraham, who is called The friend of God, whereby it appeareth, that the Lord promised to be a friend to his friends, and an enemy to his enemies.

Fifthly, in the amplification of the conclusion, he addeth [As myself] thereby showing, that he would have him regarded no otherwise then himself. Whereby we learn, that our love to the Brethren ought not to be in word, or in tongue, or in show, but in deed, in truth, and in heart. This is Christian love, this was in Christ toward us, and this should be in all of us one toward another. 1. John 3, 18. Rom. 12, 9. 1 Pet. 4, 8. These particular observations and sundry others might be stood upon, and farther enlarged, but I have only pointed them out, and will leave them to your farther consideration. I will only stand upon the Doctrines that are more principally intended, and more particularly purposed, which consist in the strength of the reason, and in the truth of the words in themselves considered.

[If thou account our things common, receive him as myself.]

This reason is drawn from the working cause. Where, to move Philemon to grant his petition, he allegeth the communion that was between them. If I be partaker with thee, and thou with me of the common benefits, so that the same thing which is mine is thine, and the same things which are thine, I may account mine; thou being my Friend, canst not deny to loue and receive him that is my Friend. Indeed, if we had only a private respect unto our selves, so that my things were mine own, and not thine; and thy things were thine own, and not mine, thou mightest deny me my request: but seeing thou art another, myself, and dear unto me as mine own soul, it is a forcible reason to stir thee up, both to hear and grant that which I desire and request of thee. From hence we learn, that the consideration of the mutual conjunction that we have one with another, giveth us an interest one in another, and ought greatly to move us to hear and regard each other. So then, the acknowledgement of our communion ought to stir us up to have such a care one of another, that nothing requested upon good ground should be denied. This is it which the Father of the faithful calleth unto Lots remembrance; Let not us strive, for we are Brethren. So dealeth Moses toward the Israelites, he shown himself unto them as they strove, and would have set them at one again, saying; Sirs, ye are Brethren, why do ye wrong one to another? The Apostle telleth the Ephesians, that they were as one Body, and one Spirit, they had all one Faith and Baptism, and hope of salvation, and thereupon persuadeth with them to endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the Bond of peace. Thus he teacheth the Corinthians; By one spirit we are all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Grecians, whether we be bond or free, and have been all made to drink into one spirit, so that the gifts given unto us, are given to profit withal. The Apostle John speaketh to this purpose; Hereby have we perceived love, that he laid down his life for us, therefore we ought also to lay down our lives for the Brethren. This appeareth in the practice of Christ, he said unto his Disciples; Our friend Lazarus sleepeth, but I go to wake him up. Where we see he maketh the friendship that was between them a motive to go to Bathania, to raise him up from the dead. This is offered also unto us in the parable propounded by Christ, Which of you shall have a friend, and shall go to him at midnight, and say to him; Friend, lend me three loaves, &c. declaring thereby, that he which hath a friend indeed, resteth upon him, and is bold with him in the time of his necessity. All these places and examples teach us to be ready to perform all duties of love and kindness one to another, seeing there is, or ought to be a common fellowship among us.

The reasons of this truth are very plain and apparent. For first of all, we have all of us one common Father, we are all his children; we have one common Maker, we are the work of his hands. If then we be so nearly tied, so closely linked & yoked one to another, we ought to have a great care and respect one of another. This is it which Job considered to move him to mildness toward his Inferiors, He that hath made me in the womb, hath he not made him? Hath not he alone fashioned us in the womb? Where he showeth, that the Master and the Servant have one and the same Creator, so that they are so straightly joined together, as that they are bound to be beneficial one to another. To this purpose Solomon saith, The rich and the poor meet together, the Lord is the maker of them all; that is, they live together in a common fellowship, and one standeth in need of another.

Secondly, as we have one common Father, so we have one head, and are the members one of another. This is it which our Savior teacheth in the Gospel; There shall be one sheep-fold and one Shepherd. There cannot be a nearer conjunction & communion, then the members of the same body have one with another: everyone seeketh the good of another, and all labor after the benefit and preservation of the whole. This comparison is fitly alleged by the Apostle, As the body is one and hath many Members, and all the members of the body, which is one, though they be many, yet are but one body: even so is Christ. So then, seeing God is the common Creator of us all, and seeing we are made the members one of another, through our conjunction and union with Christ, we gather from both these considerations, that our fellowship and communion one with another, must cause and compel us to do all good one to another, and to have a special care one of another.

Let us briefly see what profitable Uses may be concluded from hence. And first, if the communion that we have one with another, and the intercourse of friendship ought to move us to Christian duties; then it followeth much more, that the communion that we have with Christ, and the honor which God vouchsafeth unto us to account us his Friends, should be available to join us to him, to teach us to obey him, to honor him, to serve him, to worship him, and to walk in the practice of his Commandments. Hence it is, that Abraham performing the condicions of the Covenant that God hath required of him, when he promised to be his

God, and the God of his Seed, is oftentimes renowned with this honorable Title, to be termed [The Friend of God.] This Christ our Savior teacheth, Ye are my Friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you: henceforth call I you not Servants, for the servant knoweth not what the Master doth: but I have called you Friends, for all things that I heard of my Father, have I made known to you. No friendship is more glorious and gainful, then the friendship of God, none is more constant or continual, seeing whom he loveth, he loveth to the end. Hereby we have access unto God, as to our Friend, then which▪ what can be a greater Dignity.

Now the honor is great, so we must know wherein it consisteth: for friendship is not an idle name, without the truth of the thing. The love of God to us is seen in his favor toward us, in blessing of us, in taking the care of us, in pardoning our sins, in adopting of us to be his Sons, and in giving of us eternal life. Our love toward God is to be measured by keeping his Commandments, in depending upon him, in believing in him, and in looking for all good things from him. But if we rebel against him, and forsake his laws, we cannot make any account of God's friendship, nor make our reckoning to have him to be our friend. For sin is a Make-bate. Commonly we hate and detest those as the worst sort of men, that raise contention among Friends. But such is the nature of sin, it causeth the greatest enmity, where there should be the greatest amity. The Prophet Isaiah teacheth this very evidently; The Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save, neither is his ear heavy, that it cannot hear; but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear: for your hands are defiled with blood, and your Fingers with iniquities, your lips have spoken lies, and your tongue hath murmured iniquity. They wanted many good blessings, but they considered not the cause, that their sins had made God their Enemy, and caused him to depart from them. If then we desire the friendship of God, we must have a desire to walk in his ways. So then they are in a miserable case that have no care to please him, for they have not God to be their friend, but their adversary. We say commonly, a friend in the court, is as good as a penny in the purse: but to have a friend in the highest Court of heaven, and the friendship of the most high, who is the King of Kings, is more worth and better to be esteemed then all the World beside. From this ground our Savior teacheth us to regard his friendship above all, to fear his wrath, which if it be kindled, rageth as the fire, and not to stand in fear of the displeasure of men, thereby to be hindered in our obedience; I say unto you my friends, be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that are not able to do anymore: but I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear, fear him which after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell: yea, I say unto you, him fear. Thus it behooveth us, from the consideration of our communion one with another, to ascend and rise up to the contemplation of our fellowship with God: and from the meditation of our duties to be performed to men, to proceed to the practice of our duties to God.

Secondly, seeing our communion is accompanied with duties of godliness, we must be careful to associate our selves with godly men, to whom we are most bound, and from whom we may receive the greatest benefit. For seeing our fellowship one with another, teacheth us to love and make much one of another, we must delight in the company of the faithful, that so we may hear, counsel, comfort, regard, and exhort one another. All mankind are combined together in one society, but if we be brought by God's ordinance into one Family, we have another, and a nearer band to couple us in the same yoke. We must beware lest we give room and entertainment to those that are ungodly, whereby the rest of the House may be insected. Thus the Apostle Peter exhorteth the believing Jews; Save yourselves from this froward Generation. It is certain, that such as are good, by using evil company, are made evil; and such as are evil, are made worse. Such as make no conscience of their company, will make no conscience in time of any iniquity.

Thirdly, we must learn by this communion, to show the duties of compassion one to another, to help and relieve them that want, and every way to sustain and succor such as are in necessity. When Job considered that we have one Creator, and sprung all out of the Earth, which as a common Mother bare us in her Womb, He could not see any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering. And in another place he complaineth of them that offered great kindness unto him in his prosperity, when he had no need of them or their courtesy, but forsook him in his greatest necessity. These he compareth to Winter brooks, which flow and over-flow when there is an over plus of water, but are dry and dammed up in time of Summer, when the earth gapeth, and the Grass withereth, and the Flower fadeth for want thereof. Such men forget themselves, and the condition wherein God hath set them. They know how to require and look for duties from others, but they are unmindful of their own, and so become unmerciful to their Brethren. They do not remember, that the time shall come, when they will preferred one drop of Mercy before a thousand Kingdoms; yea, before ten thousand worlds.

Hitherto we have considered the strength of the reason, and gathered the Doctrine that ariseth from hence. Now we are to weigh the words alone by themselves. The Apostle taketh his Argument from the communion and fellowship that is between him and Philemon, so that he could not deny him his suit. From hence we raise this Doctrine, that among Christian Friends all things are common. Such as are true friends, not in tongue, but in truth; not in hypocrisy, but from the heart; should have great interest one in another, to use themselves, their gifts, their blessings without grudging, to the natural comfort one of another. When Jonathan entered into a covenant of love and league of friendship with David, By and by he put off his Robe that was upon him, and gave it David, and his Garments, even to his Sword, and to his Bow, and to his Girdle: Yea, he discovered the secret counsels and consultations of his Father, that he might deliver his friend from danger of death. This is it which the Apostle speaketh to the Romans; As we have many Members in one body, and all Members have not one office, so we being many, are one body in Christ, and everyone, one another's Members. The Evangelist Luke describing the state and condition of the Church, after the Resurrection and ascension of Christ, saith; All that believed were in one place, and had all things common, and they sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as everyone had need. And afterward, in the fifth Chapter he addeth at large the same point, Great Grace was upon them all, neither was there any among them lacked, for as many as were possessors of Lands or Houses, sold them, and brought the price of the things that were sold, and laid it down at the Apostles feet, and it was distributed unto every man, according as he had need.

Hence it is, that we are taught in the Articles of Faith, to believe the communion of Saints; yea, this is so plain and manifest a truth, that the Heathen had this sentence as a common Proverb commonly in their mouths, that among friends all things should be common. Whatsoever is bestowed upon us, we should have it not only for our selves, but for others. If we have riches, it is our friends; if we have any gifts bestowed upon us, they must be at the commandment of our friends. Whatsoever we have to profit them withal, it must be theirs, as well as ours. All these Testimonies of the holy Scripture, and common experience teach us, that wheresoever Christian friendship is, there must be also a Christian community; that there be no lack, but the want of everyone must be supplied by a common hand of those that do abound.

Let us see how this is confirmed unto us by reasons. First, it is the ordinance of God, that one man should be an hand and helper unto another in all necessities, and hath united us as Brethren. so that they should seek to comfort one another. This is it which Solomon propoundeth, As Ointment and perfume rejoice the heart, so doeth the sweetness of a man's friend by hearty counsel. If then, we be bound to help our brethren by our hands, by our mouths, by our feet, by our hearts, and by all that we have in our power, it followeth, that there ought to be a communion in the use of all blessings that we enjoy.

Secondly, the Lord Jesus, which is the great peace-maker of the world, and sole Mediator between God and man, who hath joined Heaven and Earth together by his Cross, so that through him we have an entrance unto the Father by one spirit: he, I say, hath brought peace unto us; he hath made perpetual friendship between his Father and us, and consequently settled sure friendship among our selves. This is it which the Apostle speaketh Ephe. 2. He is our peace, which hath made of both one, and hath broken the stop of the partition wall, to make of twain one new man in himself: that he might reconcile both unto God in one body, by his Cross, and stay hatred thereby. It is the Office of Christ's Priesthood to make peace, not only between God and man (which notwithstanding is the chiefest work) but between man and man, whereby we become one body in him.

Thirdly, the faithful have the same privileges, and live as it were in common together. They have the same Father, they expect the same inheritance, they hear the same word, they receive the same Sacraments, they are born of one Mother, they are begotten of one immortal seed, they are fed by the same sincere Milk, they live as by one soul the spirit of Christ, they are as near as Father and Children, and as members of one body, we are all one in respect of the promises of salvation. Albeit there be a distinction amongst them in Country, Nation, Age, Sex, and such like; and live in diverse ages and places, yet there is such a spiritual Kindred, and near society between them, that these common privileges bind them mutually and manifestly one so another. Wherefore, seeing it is the ordinance of God, that we should put our helping hand to do all good to our brethren; seeing Christ Jesus hath reconciled us to God his Father, and made peace amongst our selves; and lastly, seeing the faithful have a common interest and privilege in the same holy things, whereby they are fitted to the Kingdom of Heaven, in all these respects we learn, that among true Christian friends, there should be a Communion and fellowship of all the blessings of God bestowed upon them.

Now, order requireth, that we handle the Uses of this Doctrine. And first of all, we learn that there is no friend like to the Christian friend, who is another of the same. Such as are coupled together in this society and fellowship, are made one soul. Hence it is, that Moses teaching that no natural affection toward those that are nearest unto us, ought to withdraw our hearts from God, describeth such as are most dear, and so have greatest interest in us, where he calleth Brethren the sons of the same Mother; he calleth the wife, her that lieth in the bosom; he saith of a Friend, that he is as a man's own soul, whom he loveth as himself. The Heathen glory in certain Golden paires of steadfast friends, that have been ready to lay down their lives one for another. Howbeit, in all ages and times of the world, they are able to reckon up very few, and those for the most part forged and counterfeit, rather to teach what should be done, then what ever was truly done. And yet if such friendship had ever been practiced, and such friends ever really extant, it had been begun and ended in the flesh, and therefore had been but a corrupt and carnal friendship. For, where God doth not couple together, and make the knot, and where the glory of his name is not the mark we shoot at, there the very life of true friendship is wanting. All the former examples of supposed friends, that were fastened without the glew of Religion, and the fear of God to hold them together, might make a goodly show of rare love, to the eyes of natural men, howbeit they did all things to be praised of men, to be magnified of the world, to be spoken of after their death, and to be highly esteemed of others. But they are not to be matched & compared with true Religious friends, which have the bond of the spirit, and of a good conscience to couple them together. Such were Ruth and Naomi; for when Ruth was willed to return after her Sister, she answered, Intreat me not to leave thee, nor to depart from thee, for whether thou goest, I will go: and where thou dwellest, I will dwell: thy people shall be my people, & thy God my God: where thou diest, I will die, and there I will be buried; the Lord do so to me, and more also, if ought but death depart thee and me. Such were Jonathan & David, of whom we spake before, who did cleave and adhere one to another, as if they had been no longer two, but one man; and as if one had been of the bone and flesh of another. Such were Jacob and Rachel, he thought no time too long, he judged no service too bitter, he esteemed no wages too little, because he loved her. Such were Reuben and Joseph, he would not content to shed Joseph's blood, nor to lay violent hands upon him, but counseled his Brethren to cast him into a pit, to the end he might deliver him out of their hand, and restore him to his Father again. Such were Moses & Aaron. Such were Solomon and Hiram, between whom was peace, & they made a Covenant one with another, so that they did communicate either to other such commodities as they were stored withal. Among these was mutual love and friendship did bind them together. There is a difference between love and friendship. For, he may love, that is not beloved; but he cannot be a Friend, unless he love, and be loved; which the Apostle noteth when he saith, Owe nothing to any man, but to love one another. This is the sum of the whole Law, for he that loveth another, hath fulfilled the law. Hence it followeth, that the nearest band, and surest conjunction, is between the faithful, they only can be true and trusty friends, because they love, and are loved; that which one doth, the other is ready to require and return the like, to perform mutual kindness one to the other.

This is the right and religious friendship, and this is only to be found among the Saints that are members of the same body, and joined in one brotherhood and Communion. But it is not so between the godly and ungodly, between the holy and profane, between the elect and the reprobate; There is no fellowship between righteousness and unrighteousness, there is no communion between light and darkness, there is no concord between Christ and Belial. These being mixed and joined together, are like the feet of Nebucadnezars Image which he saw in a dream, which were part of Iron, and part of Clay, which was easily dissolved, and quickly broken in pieces; so is it in the agreement and love that is between the faithful and unfaithful, it is partly strong, and partly weak, but it cannot be joined fast one with the other, as Iron cannot be mixed with Clay. For albeit the godly do love the ungodly, even the Infidels, according to the commandment of God, yet there can be no sound and sincere friendship between them, because that is not mutual love, it is not in both parties, inasmuch as the wicked do hate extremely the Children of God, and contemn them in their hearts, as Cain did Abel. Let us therefore sort and associate our selves with those that are godly men, who will in time of trial prove our safest friends. All other society, how strongly soever it seemeth to be planted and built, will fall to the ground. We see Neighbors oftentimes forsake us, we see our alliance and Kindred renounce us, we see Brethren oftentimes show themselves as strangers one to another; but where grace and Religion is, there the friendship will never fail, but is as a running stream, that never waxeth dry.

Mark this in those sweet paires of friends which before we coupled together in an equal yoke, whom grace and godliness joined, and therefore no unkindness could separate. Ruth loved Naomi as greatly when she returned empty, as when she came out full and well stored. Jonathan was found as faithful to David when Saul sought to slay him, as when he began to honor him; when he lowred at him, as when he shown the best countenance toward him. And howsoever the ungodly may hide the intents of their hearts, and promise to perform all duties of love towards us, yet their love hath no certain foundation, but will deceive them that trust unto it. When Job was in prosperity and authority, everyone respected him, and was ready to pleasure him, he was honored in the gate, he was revered in the street, he was feared in the house. But when his goods were gone, and all his dignity failed, no man regarded him, his friends, his servants, his Wife despised him. Let us hear in his own words the complaint that he maketh, and attend to that he speaketh, where he declareth what befell him, My Neighbors have forsaken me, & my familiars have forgotten me: They that dwell in mine house, and my Maids took me for a stranger in their sight: I called my Servant, but he would not answer me, though I prayed him with my mouth: My breath was strange unto my wife, though I prayed her for the Children's sake of my body: The wicked despised me, and when I arose, they spake against me: All my secret friends also abhorred me, and they whom I loved, are turned against me. Whereby we see, we can make no account of the friendship of an ungodly man, where profit is the band, and not piety; he loveth for carnal respects, and temporal commodities, and not for the truths sake. Our delight must be to be amongst the faithful servants of God, who love always, not by hrunts and pangs, who love wholly and entirely, not to halves; who live in trouble and adversity, as well as in the days of prosperity, so that one may say to another, as Jehu did to Iehonadab the son of Rechab, coming to meet him, Is thine heart upright, as mine heart is toward thine? He would be accounted an unwise man, that would take more delight in the shadow, than in the body; in the show, than in the substance: the friendship that is among the ungodly, is only the shadow of true friendship, so that they are destitute of true wisdom, that advance it above the friendship that is among the faithful, or make any account and reckoning of it, in comparison of the other. Let us therefore join in a firm League of amity and friendship with the faithful, which no time shall dissolve, nor no occasion shall break.

Secondly, seeing Christian Friends have a community among themselves of all good things, it serveth to condemn the Niggardlinesse and Covetousness of those that overthrow this Communion, and even pinch and pine away themselves, depriving themselves of the lawful use of that which they have in their own keeping. Of these there are two sortes; first, such as say in word and practice, That which is mine, is mine, and that which is thine, is thine; I will keep mine own, and keep thou that which is thine own: I will crave nothing of thee, and thou shalt receive nothing of me. Secondly, such as say, whatsoever is mine, is mine: and whatsoever is thine, is mine: mine own is no way sufficient for me, but I hope & gape for a part of thine. The first sort do not convey other men's goods to themselves, but refrain from wrong and oppression: yet they cannot abide to do good to any, nor to give away anything that is their own. The second sort are yet farther removed from true Charity, who regard not what means they use to get other men's goods. Let such men consider, that they offend against God, they offend against their Neighbor, they offend against themselves. Against God, because they detain from him his due; against their Neighbor, because they deny to him things necessary; against themselves, because they with-hold things fit and reasonable. They are unthankful to God, they are unjust to their Neighbor, they are cruel to themselves. The Apostle chargeth them to commit Idolatry, and to make a God, or rather an Idol of their money, because as the Idolater serveth his Idol, so doth the covetous man his riches, and as the one maketh his Image his hope and trust, so doth the other his treasure; and as the one is afraid to break his Image, so is the other afraid to lessen his substance. These are they that are content to cut large thonges of other men's goods, but are sparing in spending of their own; who empty their bellies, that they may fill their Coffers, who pinch their body, that they may enlarge their gain, and draw back their hand when they should give, but stretch it forth when they would receive. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, Mortify your members which are on the earth, fornication, uncleanness, the inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness which is Idolatry, for the which things sake the wrath of God cometh on the Children of disobedience. And in another place he teacheth, that the love of money is the root of all evil, which while some lusted after, they erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. In which words, howsoever the Apostle useth an excessive kind of speaking (for properly original sin is the root of all evils, because as a fruitful offspring they arise from thence) yet it is a Mother that bringeth forth many Children; Cruelty, Injustice, Oppression, Fraud, Deceit, Ignorance of God, contempt of his word, and security in all heavenly things. These things being duly considered, serve to the condemnation of those that shut up the bowels of compassion from God's Children in their afflictions and necessities. For the Apostle John in his first Epistle saith, Whosoever hath this worlds good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? Woe therefore unto them that make all things private, and with-hold their love from such as are to be loved, and their relief from such as are to be relieved. How can these men think to find mercy at the hands of God that show no mercy to their brethren, seeing there shall be judgment merciless, to such as show no mercy? Let us have our conversation without covetousness. Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth. The wise man teacheth, that the liberal person shall have plenty, and he that watereth shall also have rain: There is that scattereth, and is more increased, but he that spareth more then is right, surely cometh to poverty. The treasures of wickedness shall not prosper or profit us anything at all, but righteousness delivereth from death.

Secondly, this reproveth such as have no familiarity with the faithful, but show themselves strangers unto them. For, whereas all our love should be toward the Saints, all our delight should be in the Saints, all our care should be of the Saints; there are many that boast themselves to be of the communion of Saints, yet make no difference of any company; the most wicked are most welcome unto them, and the most profane, are most pleasant. No company is so sweet and so much desired, as the Communion and communication of Ruffians and scoffers; and on the other side, nothing is more sower and sharp unto them, then the presence and conference of such as fear God. But we must all know, that much help or hurt cometh to men, by the company which they haunt and frequent. Hence it is, that the Prophet saith, Away from me ye wicked, for I will keep the Commandments of my God. So the Apostle Peter admonisheth all those that would be delivered from destruction, To save themselves from a froward generation. Likewise Moses & Aaron exhorting the people to beware of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, and the Rebellious rowt of their adherents, saith, Seperate yourselves from among this Congregation, depart from the Tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, lest ye perish in all their sins. The ungodly have their profane meetings, their drunken feasts, their unlawful pastimes; let us not partake with them in their evil, which is the right way, and the ready means to quench all holy desires, and good purposes in us, as fast as the friendship of the faithful is able to kindle them in our hearts. When shall we see wicked men strive and contend to come into the Company of the godly? They account nothing so unsavory unto them, nothing so irksome, nothing so troublesome, albeit they might be helped and benefited by their blessed meetings. How is it then, that we should desire or affect the conversation of the ungodly, by whom we can no way be furthered in any good thing, but be corrupted and defiled in our ways, to the dishonor of God, to the danger of our souls, and to the perverting and poisoning of others.

Lastly, seeing there is a Communion and fellowship of all the blessings of God bestowed upon us, it is our duty to love one another, & to perform all duties of love, to the benefit of others, as if we were one man. This the Prophet teacheth, They shall be my people, and I will be their God, and I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me forever, for the wealth of them, and of their Children after thē. So the Apostle Peter chargeth us, to love brotherly fellowship, saying; Be of one mind, one suffer with another; love as Brethren. be pitiful, be courteous, submit yourselves one to another, render not evil for evil, neither rebuke for rebuke, but contrariwise, bles; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should be heirs of blessing. Whereby it appeareth, that there are many duties, as it were branches of this love, as we see, Rom. 12, 9, 10, 13. where many particulars of this unfeigned and fervent love are expressed, and we are admonished as members of one body, to provide one for another. We are bound to employ our gifts, not only to our own benefit, but to the benefit of the whole body: as the eye seeth not for itself alone. the hand worketh for all the parts, the foot walketh for every member. So if we be true and faithful Christians, we ought to carry this mind, to be ready to do service one to another. If we have knowledge, it is our duty to teach others; if we have wisdom, it is our duty to counsel and direct others; if we have the gift of exhortation, we are to dissuade from Vice, to persuade to Virtue, and to stir up others to good things. If we have riches and outward blessings, we must give cheerfully, not only of our superfluity, but of our penury and necessity, if need so require. We have all received some gifts, none is an empty vessel without liquor, or a dead tree without fruit; God, to make men without excuse, hath bestowed somewhat upon all, Some have received five Talents, some two Talents, and someone Talent. Let every man as he hath received the gift, minister the same one to another, as good disposers of the manifold grace of God. We are joined together in a spiritual society, and have great need one of another; as the hand cannot say to the foot, I have no need of thee; so no man can say to any of his Brethren, I have no need of you. The rich cannot live without the poor, and contrariwise, the poor cannot continue without the rich. As it is the duty of such as are poor to labor in their callings, it is the duty of the rich to relieve them, not to despise them; to comfort them, not to contemn them; to help them, not to disgrace them. These practices of love are a Christian man's badge, declaring evidently what Master he serveth, & to whom he belongeth. We must show our selves ready to ride and run, to use our Friends and purse for the good of others. Hence it is, that the Apostle commendeth in the Church of the Thessalonians, not only their love, but their labor of love performed with all carefulness and cheerfulness. Our love therefore must not be idle, but diligent; not standing in word, but in work; not in profession, but in action.

Moreover, we must by all good means procure the good one of another, and bear the reproof of a friend that seeketh to set our sins before us, and to bring us into the right way. This is it which the Apostle signifieth to the Galatians, Be you as I, for I am even as you, I beseech you Brethren, ye have not hurt me at all. Whereby he meaneth, that albeit he was compelled to use sharp reproofs (as it were) eating Corasiues and strong Purgations, that thereby he might stir them up to repentance, and show them from whence they were fallen, yet his mind was not changed toward them, nor his love turned into hatred, as if he should say; Think not that my convincing of your errors, and reproofing of your backsliding from the sincerity of the Gospel, proceedeth from any malice toward you, for I am the same man I was, and therefore look that your minds be not estrange from me, for I do tender you, even as mine own self. Seeing therefore a man's friend is all one with himself, one is bound to seek the good of another, and to bear the reproofs of things amiss with all patience.

Lastly, let our communion work in us a lively feeling, as well of the prosperous estate, as of the hard condition of our Brethren; either to rejoice with them, or to lament with them, as occasion is offered. This is the exhortation of the Apostle to the Romans, Chapt. 12. when he hath stirred them up to love without dissimulation; to service, without slothfulness; to humility, without disdain; to patience, without revenge; to bless, without cursing; to distribute, without grudging; to pray, without fainting; he saith, Rejoice with them that rejoice, and weep with them that weep: be of like affection one toward another. This teacheth us, that all the godly ought to have (as it were) the same will and wish: they ought to think the same things, to speak the same things, to further the same things one in another. The profits and disprofits of our Brethren, we must have in common with them, and it is our duty to account them our own. We are to mourn for the one, and rejoice for the other, as if it were our own estate. When any good is befallen unto them, we are to be glad, and to be merry at the heart, as it had befallen us; and so much the rather, seeing we have our portion in it. If we see them weakened in their estate, and go backward and not forward in matters of the World, it ought to be our grief and sorrow: especially if we see them decline in the best things, and turn aside out of the way from him that called them in the grace of Christ, wavering and wandering wide from the truth of the Gospel which once they embraced, we ought so to take it to heart, & to be swallowed up with heaviness, as if we our selves had gone backward. This affection is worthy great praise, where it is to be found. It assureth us that we are living and feeling members in the body of Christ, and have a near conjunction with the other parts. It greatly pleaseth God, and hath an assured promise of a rich reward, according to the saying of our Savior, Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy. This serveth to reprehend the common practice of common Christians, that live as those that know not, or regard not this Communion and enterchange of the same blessings that they have received at the hands of God. These are they that say, God for us all and every man for himself. These are they that make what benefit they can of others, but will depart from nothing themselves: who prize men as sheep and Oxen, and bethink with themselves how much they may make of them, as if they brought them openly into the Market and set them to sale for what will you give me? These are they that never esteem, nor make any account of their brethren, but when they have occasion to use thē, and stand in great need and necessity of them. These are they, that seek themselves only and their own good; as for others, they regard them, so long, and so far, as they may get and gain anything by them, according to the common practice of the world deciphered and described by the Apostle, All seek their own, and not that which is Jesus Christ's. Is it thus in the partes and members of the natural body? Doth the eye see only for it self? Doth it not give direction to hand and foot, and serve to the good of the whole body? Doth the hand labor only for it self and to sustain it self, or doth it not rather work both for it self, & for every member of the body besides? The foot, doth it not likewise walk up and down, and take pains for the general good and common benefit even of the least part that belongeth to the body? If it be thus in the several members of our body, ought it not much rather to be so in the mystical body of Christ Jesus? Shall we then make a Mart or Monopoly of our brethren, and fell them for our own filthy gain and private advantage? But whereas we ought to rejoice at their good, how many are there that repine at it, and pine away at the sight of it? And whereas we ought to be greatly grieved to see them go back in goods, or in goodness; in the world, or in the word; they are glad to behold their wants, and are ready to push them down that begin to fall. These men are not only without piety, but without humanity: not only void of conscience, but of common Ciuillity, and are no better then rotten members. Everyone would be taken and holden for a true member of Christ Jesus, but few regard to do the duties of members. The partes of our bodies delight and rejoice one in another, but many of us that dwell near together, regard not to see one another in the face, or to converse and communicate either with other, and yet they would be accounted Christians. The partes of our body are ready to help and defend one another, the hand is at hand to be lifted up to save the head; to endanger one member to shield another, otherwise it were no hand: we will not hazard the least trifle, for the greatest good of others, and yet we would be accounted Christians. The partes of our body, when one is in pain, will not leave it destitute and distressed, but seek by all means to free it out of trouble; but we are hand-fast in helping the poor and needy members of the same body with us; nay, such paymentes as are imposed by Law upon us, are hardly wrung from us; otherwise we could be content to suffer the poor Servants of God to perish, and yet we would be accounted Christians.

If God love the cheerful giver, how should he then accept of such Guiftes? If we have this worlds good, and see our brother have need, and shut our compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in us? If we say we love God, and hate our brother, are we not liars against the truth? For how can he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, love God whom he hath not seen? Assuredly we may conclude, that there is no love of God at all in them that have no eyes of compassion to see their miseries, no ears of pity to hear their necessities, no harts of mercy to melt and relent at their sorrows, no hands of liberality to supply their wants. For judgment without mercy shall fall upon them that will show no mercy: and we shall never have fellowship with the Father, if we have not fellowship and communion with his Children. Wherefore (as the Apostle saith) Let us consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works, not forsaking the fellowship that we have among our selves, as the manner of some is: but let us exhort one another, and that so much the more, because ye see that the day draweth near. Let us be ready to practice these fruits of love toward others, that we may taste of the Fruits of God's love toward our selves. Would we then briefly know what community ought to be among us? Would we understand how, and in what manner we ought to have all things common? Would we live as true Friends, and practice true friendship one toward another? The holy Man Job giveth us a good and full direction in these duties, and such a direction as was sealed up by his own example: He restrained not the Poor of their desire, nor caused ehe eyes of the Widdowes to fail: he did not eat his Morsels alone, but the fatherless did partake thereof: he saw not any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering: he made not Gold his hope, nor said to the Wedge of Gold; Thou art my confidence: he was the eyes to the Blind, and the Feet to the Lame: he was a Father unto the Poor, and when he knew not the cause, he sought it out diligentlie. Here is a worthy president set before us, and a pure Glass to look upon, wherein we may see cleerelie into the Communion of Saints, what it is, and how it is to be practiced. Let us evermore have this as a Table painted before our eyes, and join with our knowledge obedience, remembering that God is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him.

18If he hath hurt thee, or oweth thee ought, that impute thou unto me.

19I Paul have written this with mine own hand: I will recompense it, albeit I do not say to thee, that thou owest moreover unto me, even thine own self.

Hitherto we have spoken of the reason in the former Verse. Now we come to the removing of another Objection, which the Apostle preventeth in these two Verses, which seemed to stand in his way, & hinder the obtaining of his request. For Philemon might have said; Thou intrestest me for a Servant that hath been injurious and hurtful unto me, wasting and misspending my goods, and hindering much mine outward estate, therefore I must entreat thee to give me leave to punish him according to his deservings, and to recover as I can my damage inferred by him. How then can I receive him that hath hurt me, and robbed me, and is in my debt? To this Objection of Philemon, let us consider the answer of Paul, which he doth make two ways; first, by a concession; then by a correction: as we saw before in removing the former Objections. By concessions, or by way of granting, impute it to me, require it at my hands, and lay it upon my accounts. This first answer, is confirmed & strengthened by an humain testimony, [I Paul have written it with mine own hand] I have not set to my mark, and used the hand of another. This Argument also hath the force of another secret Objection, for Philemon might have said; Thou promisest fair, and vndertakest much, thou offerest thyself to undergo the debt in word only, but I require some better assurance, and some stronger evidence. To this Paul answereth; If thou refuse to take my bare word and naked promise, thou shalt have more. For behold, I do not request it without script or scrole, I have written it with mine own hand: take this as a Bill or Obligation of my hand-writing, that I will well and truly satisfy, content, and pay, or cause thee to be well and truly satisfied, contented, and paid whatsoever he oweth thee. Loe, I bind myself firmelie unto thee by these presents, which shall be thy warrant, that the debt shall be fully and wholly discharged, without any fraud or delay. The reason may be thus concluded:

- If thou have a Bill or Band of my hand to show for his debt, then doubt not of the payment of it:
- But thou hast a Bill or Band of my hand,
- Therefore doubt not of the payment of it.

The correction of his former offer to satisfy the debt, followeth, which is the second part of the answer; [Albeit, thou owest to me thyself.] As if he should say; that which I have promised to discharge, I am ready to perform, I will pay thee every penny. And yet why do I say, I will pay thee? Forasmuch as thou art in my debt, and owest more to me, then he doth to thee: he oweth thee a little Silver, but thou owest me thine own Soul. Seeing thou art so much indebted unto me, and that I may justly claim from thee and challenge at thy hands thine own Flesh, which art in a special regard bound unto me in all that thou hast, it is no great matter for thee to remit a little Money, or Money-worth, that thou mayst otherwise require from him. This is amplified by an Ironicall passing over of the matter, and yet by a certain Rhetorical Elegancy he uttereth it, and calleth Philemon to acknowledge it. He seemeth to be willing to forget it, and yet he would have him to remember it. A like speech unto this the Apostle useth. 2 Corinth. 9. 4. I have sent the Brethren that ye may be ready: least if they of Macedonia come unto me and find you unprepared, we (that we may not say, you) should be ashamed in this my constant boasting. Where he showeth, that having boasted among the Brethren of the forwardness of the Corinthians, if they should be found unprepared, he will not say that themselves should be ashamed, but he meaneth that they should consider of it, and confess it. This revocation or denying, to express in word, that which he was willing another should understand, may be thus concluded in form of an Argument;

- If the case stand thus between thee and me, that thou owest unto me thy very self: Then much more thou mayest forgive thy Servant this debt for my sake.
- But the case standeth thus between thee and me,
- Therefore thou mayest forgive him for my sake.
