doth retain the punishment, & who can deny this? therefore on the contrary, when he forgiveth the fault, he doth not retain the punishment. The fault is a greater matter then the punishment: if then God forgive the fault which is the greater, it may not seem strange that he should forgive that which is lesser, and only depending upon the fault. Besides, when once a debt is discharged, it were extreme wrong and injustice to require the payment thereof again: but sins are debts, Matth. 6.12. The obligation standing against us is cancelled, and the creditour is fully satisfied, how then should we fear any arrest or imprisonment? who shall sue us, or who can lay anything to our charge? In a civil court, he were a very corrupt judge, who having acquitted & cleared a man that stood as guilty, from all offense, would notwithstanding give sentence that he should be executed: for this were as much as to pardon the theft, and to hang the thief. They that are justified by faith, are at peace with God, Rom. 5.1. and there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, Rom. 8.1. When God forgiveth the sins and transgressions of the penitent, he remembereth them no more, Ier. 31.34. he blotteth them out of his sight, he setteth them as far from us, as the East is from the West, Psal. 103, he scattereth them as a cloud, and casteth them into the bottom of the Sea, Mic. 7.19. But touching the pardon mentioned in this place, the answer of God is to be referred to the prayer of Moses, & is proportioned out according to his request. He desired, that God would not utterly root out that whole people as one man, according as he had threatened: his prayer is granted, and God declareth that he had pardoned them, not absolutely, but according to his word: he requested they might not utterly be destroyed, he receiveth answer, they shall not utterly be destroyed. And concerning satisfaction to God for our sins by our selves, it is more then we are able to make it cost more to redeem a soul and to pay a price sufficient for it. For to satisfy is to yield a sufficient recompense to God for the transgressions y^t we have committed against him. This Christ our redeemer is only able to do, and his satisfaction is all sufficient. [Object.] But they tell us that man's satisfaction is not a supplying of any want in Christ's satisfaction, [Answer.] but an applycation of it to us. A most foolish and witless conceit. For when a man hath a medicine fully sufficient and available for the curing and healing of a wound, what needeth another medicine for the healing the same wound, which he must apply and lay to the former medicine to make it good? is not this applycation needless? And if a surety (undertaking for us) hath discharged our debts, it is very ridiculous to suppose that we must pay the debt again, that so our sureties payment may stand in effect. We read of the satisfaction y^t Christ hath made, and we believe it: but of a satisfaction applying his satisfaction, we read not and therefore we believe not; which is no better then a cloak to cover their shame, and soundeth harsh to the ear of reason it self.

But to pass over these things, let us consider the sentence pronounced against these men, that all of them should die in the wilderness, as they had all broken out into open wickedness. The doctrine, sin generally entertained, bringeth a general destruction: when it is once come to the height in the manner and measure, it causeth destruction to come upon such persons, The reasons follow.

This is agreeable to the course of God's justice, that his judgments may be answerable to the sin. A general sin deserveth a general plague. Secondly, as sins are resembled to sicknesses, so punishments are to medicines which must be fitted to the diseases, and not to a part thereof. Now if universal and spreading sins should not have universal & spreading judgments brought upon them, the plaster should be less then the wound, & the remedy much weaker then the disease. The uses remain.

First, seeing God giveth sentence to bring [Use 1] desolation upon this people for their common sins, we have great cause to fear, that the day of our desolation and judgment cannot be far off. For seeing it hath been already proved, that we are grown a cold and careless people, a lukewarm Church, neither hot nor cold, seeing we are grown to the height of wickedness, and have added sin to sin, as it were drunkenness unto thirst, what can be expected in the next place, but y^t destruction be brought upon us? If God have destroyed other nations, and rooted them out for the same sins that are found among us, what can be expected by us, but that we having the same weight of sins should also have the same weight of judgment? He hath made us already to drink of many judgments, only this remaineth that as yet we have not drank the dregs; we have not yet tasted of utter desolation. No nation hath brought forth worse fruits, or shown less thankfulness. We have just occasion therefore to fear, that the day of God's visitation cannot be far off by the course of justice, and doubtless it is the nearer, because we are grown sottish and senseless, and have put all fear thereof from us. The land is generally full of retchlesnesse and security; and this addeth to our sin, so that we may say, as it is, Ier. 6.28, 29, 30. They are all grievous reuolters, walking with slanders: they are brass and iron, they are all corrupt, &c. Thus was it with the Sodomites immediately before their destruction, the Sun was risen upon the earth, they thought there had been a fair day coming, but it was a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, for the Lord rained down fire and brimstone upon them, and all the wicked were as stubble. So it was also in the days of Noah, and so it shall be in the end of the world.

[Use] Secondly, it teacheth us, who are the greatest enemies to a state, to a nation, to a kingdom, to a land, to a people, to our towns and cities, & to our families; even they that are the greatest sinners. These are they that bring those days of desolation, the days of darkness and gloominesse, the days of wastnesse and confusion, to wit, such as sin with an high hand, that are obstinate and hardhearted and settled to continue in the dregs of them. When Jerusalem was besieged by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, Ier. 32.4. who were the chief enemies of the city and kingdom? doubtless, not so much the Babylonians and their army, as the citizens themselves; they were such as lodged within, not they that lay without, 2 Chron. 36.16. Dan. 9.10, 11. Nehe. 13.17, 18. The strongest enemies were in the heart of the city, and they were they that did weaken it. It is sin that openeth the gates, and throweth down the walls, and letteth in the enemy, and maketh havoc of all. The sin of Achan made Israel to turn their backs to their enemies, Josh. 7.8. according to the threatening, Deut. 28.15, 25. The contempt of the word, profaning of the Sabbaths, whoredom, drunkenness, covetousness, and oppression do sharpen the swords of enemies, and give them assured hope of victory, Hab. 1.3, 4, 5, 6. If we sin against God with an high hand, and break out into all enormities, it is in vain to trust in our fenced cities and multitudes of men. If our armies be never so strong, if our cities were never so sure blocked, if we had walls flanked with barracadoes and other fortifications, that we feared not to have them surprised by scalado; yet if sin be suffered and fostered within, it weakeneth all our force, it maketh frustrate all our devises, it throweth our castles and citadels down to the ground, it filleth up the trenches, and maketh the way easy to batter our walls and to break in pieces the towers thereof. Sin is as a Cannon that beareth all before it, and where it beareth sway, an hundred walls cannot keep out the enemy. And this the heathen knew and confessed. But where Religion is entertained, and godliness flourisheth, there the city is notably garded, Deu. 4.6. and 28.1.7.

Lastly, such as have any love to their country, [Use 3] and would have the people freed from destruction, and continue in peace and quietness, let them show it by their love to the Lord and his Law, and by seeking to be at peace with him. If we be reconciled unto him, that he hath no controversy against us, he will make even our enemies to be at peace with him. This serveth to admonish us all to take heed, lest we add sin unto sin. We account him an enemy, and that justly that conspireth and combineth with another to open the gates unto him, and to bring him in to destroy the city and people: such an enemy is sin, it taketh part with our enemies, and they both join together, and tend both to one end, to wit, to overthrow our peace and safety. Stay therefore the course of sin, that it grow not to have the upper hand. Seek not to be acquainted with it, be not any means to spread it farther, and to convey it from one to another. Mark then from this consideration, who are indeed and in truth the best Citizens, and best townesmen in places where they live. Not always the richest, not always the noblest, not always the strongest, not always the most political. The best citizen is the godly man: the best townesman is the man that feareth GOD, and walketh in his ways. Such are the chariots and horsemen of the kingdom. They are the strength of the land that are strong in the Lord. On the contrary side, the worst citizens are the ungodly, who pull it down as it were with their own hands. What hath been the ruin and overthrow of the most famous kingdoms in the world? and what hath turned the noblest Cities into dust? what hath brought infinite calamities of famine, of the sword, of the pestilence, of fire, of slavery, and such like, but the impiety of men? so that the Lord hath been compelled to revenge himself of the very places which they possessed, of the walls and buildings, yea of the cattle and beasts that fed thereupon. Stand fast therefore in the most holy faith, and let not sin enter: for when it cometh, it layeth all waste: from this cometh the ruins of countries, of cities, of houses, and of particular persons.

26 And the Lord spake unto Moses, and unto Aaron, saying, 27 How long shall I bear with this evil congregation which murmur against me? I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel which they murmur against me.

28 Say unto them, As truly as I live, saith the Lord, I will surely do unto you, even as ye have spoken in mine ears.

The Lord as a just Judge proceedeth to give sentence against these wicked men whose destruction was concluded. They had gone back from their obedience, God charged them to go back again toward the red sea, so that they were forty years before any of that people came into the land, which might have been possessed in forty days. This sentence pronounced by the mouth of God, is either general against the whole multitude, or special against the first contriuers and principal authors of this rebellion. The general punishment is concerning themselves or their children.

Touching themselves as they had sposed, so the Lord would do, they should not come into the land, their carcasses should fall in the wilderness; and touching their children, they should wander in the wilderness forty years. The fathers themselves had murmured against Moses and Aaron, verse 2. this doth God account as chiefly done against himself, You have murmured against me. He accounteth the disobedience shown to the Ministers that bring the word, as a disobedience against himself the author of the word, as Luk. 10.16. to teach us to submit our selves to God's holy word, albeit it be delivered to us by man, [Doctrine.] like unto our selves. The doctrine, when once the Ministers of God are no longer regarded, when they cry early and late, and we stop our ears, God himself taketh the matter into his own hand. When God sent Noah to preach repentance to the old world, and they repented not, he cometh against them to their destruction, Gen. 6.1, 4. Come thou and all thine house into the Ark, for yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain, upon the earth forty days and forty nights, and every living substance that I have made, will I destroy from off the face of the earth. So 2. Chro. 36.15, 16. Ierem. 7.13, 14. and 14.15, 16. Zach. 7.11, 12. This is the course of the Lord's dealing: first he preacheth by his Ministers, then he punisheth with his judgments. The reasons.

[Reason 1] First because the word offered and brought unto us, being contemned, they show contempt against God himself, and in despising his word, they despise the Lord himself, John. 13.20. and therefore no marvel, if he be constrained to take the matter into his own hand, and to deal with them himself, that they may know what he can do, who regard not what his servants speak.

[Reason 2] Secondly, God loveth those that are his own, and he is entered into a covenant with them, and cannot but continue his love unto them, John. 13.1. now these that he loveth, he chastiseth, Heb. 12.6. and if they will not be warned by his threatenings, he will make them seek unto him by his corrections and punishments. Job. 33.16.

[Use 1] This teacheth the Ministers of God how they may stay themselves in following the duties of their calling, among so many discontentments that they meet withal, both in the hearing and practicing of the people. For albeit their labor spent early and late cannot prevail, yet the Lord himself will take the matter into his own hand, and deal with them himself. The word which we bring is not our own, it is the Lord's: we are but as the Apothecaries box that holdeth the precious ointment: if then he be patient toward the contemners of it, much more ought we to be patient, and commit the cause to him whose cause it is. Peter being a Fisherman before his calling, Matth. 4.18. had toiled all the night, but had taken nothing, yet when Christ bad him continue his labor, he was ready to cast down the net into the sea, Luk. 5.5. and at length he enclosed a great multitude of fishes.

The Ministers are made the fishers of men, Matth. 4.19. to catch them with the angle of the word, and to take them in the net of the Gospel, Matt. 13.47. And albeit we do oftentimes toile and moil and take nothing, because men are grown so wily as to pass by the net, and can by no means abide to come near it: yet we are not to be discouraged, the master of the net commandeth us to labor in season and out of season: and if a multitude of them will not be taken in this net, Christ Jesus will take hold of them another way, to wit, by the net of his judgments.

Albeit therefore we do not see such profit of our pains and labors as we expected and desired, yet let us be content and commit the success of all to him that sent us, he will do that for us which we cannot do for our selves; he will take them in hand that hath their hearts in his own hand, and reform all that belong unto him, & bring everlasting confusion upon his enemies that shall never be forgotten, Jeremiah, chapter 20. verses 8, 9.

Secondly, it serveth to terrify all that obstinately [Use 2] set themselves against the word of God, because God will take the matter into his own hands. If his word cannot be a fire to burn up all corrupt affections in us, Ier. 23.29 God will himself be a consuming fire, Hebr. 12.29. If his word be not as an hammer to break in pieces our rocky and stony hearts, he will be an hammer that shall beat us to shiuers and grind us to powder, Matthew, chapter 21. verse 44. Let all such know, that albeit they escape the mouth of the Minister, yet they shall fall into the hands of God himself, which will be more fearful unto them, for he is able to destroy both body and soul in hell, Matth. 10.28. Indeed he is patient, but he will not bear long with the contempt of his word: and though he seem not to hear at the first, yet in the ende he will make it manifest that he heareth those which would not hear him: Let us therefore hearken unto the word with diligence and attention, while it is offered unto us.

Lastly, let everyone make conscience of hearing the word, and be admonished by it; otherwise most certainly it will fall out, he shall be forced to take us into his own hands, and to deal with us himself. This should move us to reform our selves and to amend our lives by the Ministry of the word, that so we may escape the hands of God, and not lie under his correction. Is it not better for children to be admonished by their fathers servants, then to fall into the hands of their fathers? Is it not better for men that live in lewd courses to be admonished by a friend, then to fall into the hands of the Magistrate, and to go to the stocks for correction? so in this case it is far better for men to be reformed by the word of God, brought unto them by the Minister, then to fall into the hands of the living God to be judged by him. This did Eli teach his children, 1 Sam. •, 25. If one sin against another, the Judge shall judge him: but if a man sin against the Lord, who shall entreat for him? Our condemnation shall be so much the greater, because we will not be admonished by his word. Let us therefore be wise in this point. Some children are so wayward and peevish, that no words will serve them, speak unto them never so much, they will not hear, neither will they regard. And Solomon saith well, A whip for the horse, a bridle for the asse, and a rod for the fools back, Pro. 26, 3: and of children he saith, Foolishness is bound in the heart of a child, but the rod of correction shall drive it far, Pro. 22, 15. So is it with all those that are stubborn and refractory, they esteem words as wind, they never lay them to their hearts: they must be brought low by strong hand, and they must feel the smart of their sins before they will be humbled. We see this in Pharaoh and his people, they had oftentimes heard Moses and Aaron speak unto them in the Name of the Lord, Exod. 5, 1, 8, 1, & 9, 1, 13, & 10, 3. But what did all this work in him, but as so many hard strokes vpo the anuill, which make it harder? so Pharaoh hardened his heart, and would not let the people go, Exo. 8, 15, so that God is constrained to enter into judgment with him, and he that would not give ear to the word, was constrained to give place to the waters, for he and his host were drowned in the red sea. Thus was it also oftentimes with the Israelites that refused & misused the Prophets, they ever brought upon their heads some judgment or other.

33. And your children shall wander in the wilderness forty years, and bear your whoredoms until your carcases be wasted in the wilderness.

34. After the number of the days in which ye searched the Land, even forty days (each day for a year) shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye shall know, &c.

In these words Moses farther describeth the sentence of God against these rebels: the punishment rested not only upon their own persons but slowed down to their children, like a violent tempest that first falleth upon the Mountains, and after descendeth into the valleys. Note here first of all, how God dealeth with these mutiners and with their offspring. The spies had been 40. days in searching the Land, and for their wickedness they shall wader 40. years in the wilderness, a year for a day. A dram of sin hath a pound of sorrow. A day of pleasure hath a year of pain. [Doctrine.] Observe from this, that in judging and punishing of sins, God oftentimes punisheth in proportion, so that the judgment is answerable to the sin. Of what kind the sin is, of the same kind is the punishment, Gen. 42, 21. God sent upon Sodom a punishment like to the nature of their sin, they burned in unclean and unnatural lust one toward another, and the Lord sent fire from heaven to burn them up. The people in the wilderness with their viperous and venomous tongues spake against God and Moses his servant, and the Lord sent venomous and fiery serpents to sting and to bite them, Numb. 21, 5, 6. So David sinned greatly in numbering of the people, through the pride of his heart, and vain glory in his own greatness: God could have punished him many other ways, but he meeteth with him in the same kind, he diminisheth y^e number of his people exceedingly by the pestilence, in whose strength he much trusted. The reasons follow.

First, God hath many ways to punish sin, [Reason 1] yet it pleaseth him to send his punishments according to our sins, thereby to strike us with inward remorse, and to work a deeper impression in the conscience. For when he punisheth after this manner rather than after any other, the judgment it self doth more effectually force the sufferer to acknowledge God's justice in plaguing of him in that sort. This we see in Adoni-bezek, who was served himself as he had served others, he had cut off the thumbs and great toes of threescore and ten kings which gathered their meat under his table, the Israelites served him with the same sauce, they also cut off his thumbs and his great toes; this measure repaid unto him caused him to say, As I have done, so God hath requited me, Judge. 1, 7. The punishment presenteth the sin as it were visibly before his face; and when God dealeth thus with a man, it oftentimes bringeth him to think of those sins which otherwise he would never have remembered: so that thereby he may justly acknowledge, that it is justly come upon him. Secondly, this maketh men not only to [Reason 2] justify God, whose judgments are always just, but maketh thē also to judge themselves, and thereby they oftentimes prevent y^e more heavy judgments of God. He doth it for their good, & judgeth no mā twice, if he be wise to judge himself. Thirdly, God hath given a law, [Reason 3] & by y^r law he requireth a proportionable punishment for sin, Levite. 24, 19. This course will the Lord take (who is the supreme Magistrate) so often as it pleaseth him, albeit he do not tie himself to that law.

[Use 1] This serveth to warrant us, that we may lawfully expect judgment from God in proportion upon men for their sins. For y^t which hath been, may be; and that which the Lord hath done, he will certainly do it again, so that we may promise and persuade our selves that they shall in the end be paid home to the full, with due proportion of punishment according to their sins. In the destruction of Jerusalem, we read, that the enemies came upon them the same day, that they put Christ our Savior to death, even then, I say, came the sword upon them, and recompensed them in the same manner by putting them to death. How many are there which have sometimes been servants (though now they are masters) and been faithless to their masters? & what hath followed? have they escaped? nay, hath not God met with them in the same manner, by giving to them faithless servants, deceivers, purloiners, and thieves, that have wasted and spoiled their goods, as they in former time did their masters? How many in our days have been stubborn and disobedient against their parents in their youth, never doing them reverence, nor yielding to them any obedience, mocking at their age and other infirmities? Have not these monsters been punished? Yes, God hath paid them home with the like, and sent them dissolute children, disobedient, such as grow weary of them and think they live too long, minding their patrimony, more then regarding their parents. How many are there that have abused and wronged their former wives? and hath not God usually plagued them in the same sort in giving them a second into their bosom which hath embraced the bosom of strangers, and dealt wickedly and falsely with them? 2 Sam. 12, 11. Job 31, 9, 10. God could have met with thē by other means and punished them a thousand other ways, but it pleaseth him to make his punishments answerable, and carrying a likeness with the sin for which it is inflicted: so that they are punished by that thing, by which they have sinned against God. Covetous persons which get their goods by fraud and oppression, are themselves or their heirs many times oppressed, and deceived, and brought to beggary. Gluttony, surfeiting, and drunkenness are oftentimes punished with dropsies and many gross and corrupt humors, distempering their bodies, and bringing them with speed to their graves. But all these judgments before rehearsed belong only to the body, & do not stretch to the soul and conscience: nevertheless the Lord ceaseth not to repay us even in this kind also according to our sin. Hence it is, that he threateneth to send strong delusions upon men to believe lies, which will not receive and believe the truth, 2 Thess. 2, 11. and they which will not believe wholesome doctrine, but having itching ears get them an heap of teachers, shall turn their ears from the truth, and be turned unto fables and believe lies, 2, Tim. 4, 3, 4.

Secondly, whensoever we remain under any [Use 2] judgment of God's hand, whatsoever it be, let us labor for spiritual wisdom, that we may be able to see and discern, what the sin is which is the cause thereof. For by the manner of the judgment, we may oftentimes find out the manner of our sin. And doubtless these benefits will come thereof: we shall be able to justify God, and also to judge our selves, and thereby we shall escape farther punishments and plagues that God purposed to bring upon us. This way we shall make the punishment profitable unto us, if we take it and lay it unto the sin, as it were a salve vpon the sore. This will bring us to remember many sins, and to repent truly of them, which otherwise we should not think upon. It will work in us a care to judge our selves, that we be not judged of the Lord, 1 Cor. 11, 31, 22. This is no small benefit and comfort and therefore we should entertain a joint-meditatiō, both touching the sins that we have committed, and touching punishments that we have suffered, that so we may to our farther good compare the one with the other.

Lastly, as God dealeth with men in regard [Use 3] of their sins, so he dealeth oftentimes with his childrē in good things & for good things. He will not only reward our good works, even to a cup of cold water, given to a disciple, in the name of a disciple, Mat. 10.42. but he will reward according to our deeds, blessing with the same blessing, and mercy with the same mercy, 2 Tim 1.18. Onesiphorus shown me^ccy unto Paul he prayeth to God, That he may find mercy of the Lord in that day. He that is merciful and liberal to the poor, hath a promise that he shall never want. Christ our Savior describing what is true blessedness, wherein it consisteth, saith, among other things Mat. 5 4. Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy. True it is, God is able to reward such many other ways, but he promiseth and performeth this rather than any other, to strengthen our faith in his word, and to teach us to acknowledge and confess his own in y^t work. And hereby have all such as are any way under the government of others, a notable encouragement in well doing, that God will return them a like measure of blessing according to that themselves have done. If we be truly serviceable and conscionable in our duties toward those whom God hath set over us, we shall by a special blessing of God find in time to come those that shall be under us faithful also toward us. He that will rule well, must first learn to obey well: if we be not obedient to others for conscience sake, let us never think to find others obedient to us. Hast thou been a dutiful child to thy parents, and obeyed them in the Lord? Thou mayest well hope and expect the same at the hands of thy own children hereafter. Or hast thou been a faithful servant to thy master according to the flesh, serving him with fear & trembling in singleness of thy heart? Thou mayest well look for the like service at the hands of others. It is the common rule of christianity, and that which the heathen themselves were not ignorant off, Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do you even so to them: for this is the law and the Prophets, Mat. 7, 12. On the other side, they that are stubborn and disobedient children, evil and unfaithful servants, may justly fear to have the same measure measured unto them again. They that are now young men & live under the roof and government of their parents, if they deal falsely and deceitfully with them, how can they but think that God will make them reap a plentiful harvest of such darnel as themselves have sown & scattered abroad? They that are now children of their fathers & mothers, may in time to come themselves be fathers & mothers of their children, & so have others stand in the same place to them, that themselves now stand to their parents. If they mock and scoff at them for their infirmities, as Ham & Canaan did, Gen. 9, 22. Or contemn their wholesome counsels and holy admonitions, as the sons of Eli did: Or if they beguile them, or closely conuay away their money or any of their goods from them as Micah did from his mother: as many make it a slight and slender matter to steal from their parents, as if all were their own they can lay fingers upon, even while they be alive; and others give liberty to take and embezell from them, if it be but a little and no great sums: Or if they think they live too long that they may enjoy their living as Esau did; let them know that there is a just God in heaven, that will another day withhold his grace from their posterity, that they shall find their own children ready to despise them and set them at naught, to reject their adm•nitions & threatenings, to circumvent them & purloine from them, yea to gape for their death y^t they may have their goods. And when this cometh to pass, then let them consider their own sin as the cause of their children's sin, and that their children do forget them to be their parents, because themselves never remembered y^t they were children. The like we may say of servants; they that are now servants of their masters, may also hereafter come to be masters of their servants. If then you shall deal wickedly with them, in word or in deed, you shall make a straight, yet a just & equal law against yourselves. The Apostle giveth an excellent precept unto such, Tit. 2, 9, 10. Exhort servants to be obedient to their own masters, and to please them well in all things, not answering again, not purloining, but showing all good fidelity, that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things. Let such therefore look to themselves, that they be not paid home in their kind. If they learn to give stubborn and froward answers, and to despise them that are over thē, as Agar did Sarah, Gen. 16, 4. Or if they return them sleeuelesse answers when they call them to an account of their doings, as Gehazi did to Elisha; who, when he asked him, whither he went, or where he had been, said, Thy servant went no whither, 2 Ki. 5, 25. Or if they slāder and bely their masters, or any way falsely accuse them, as Ziba did Mephibosheth, 2 Sam. 16, 3. Or if they run away from their masters, and will not tarry in their houses, like the servants of Shimei that fled from him, 1 King. 2, 39. Or if they pick and steal from them, as Onesimus did from Philemon; or any way deal fraudulently & falsely with their masters goods which he hath committed to their trust, as the unjust steward did with his Lord, Lu. 16, 5, 6, 7. Let these look for no better dealing in times to come at the hands of their own servants, but be well assured, that it is just with God to send them the like false and disobedient servants as themselves have been to their masters. Thus then we see how all inferiors should be encouraged to honor their superiors, because God will cause them to be honored and on the other side be terrified from despising and dishonoring them, lest another day he cause them also to be dishonored.

[Your children shall wander in the wilderness forty years, and bear your whoredoms &c] By whoredom, we must understand the punishment of the idolatry and infidelity of their fathers falling from God, and ceasing to trust in him. For as idolatry, so infidelity is spiritual whoredom. They were as a wife that had forsaken her husband, and broken the covenant of her God. So then observe, that according to the number of the days, in which the fathers had searched the Land, evē forty days, the children must bear their iniquities, and wander too and fro, forward and backward, forty years before they should enter into the Land. The doctrine from hence is this: [Doctrine.] The judgments and punishments of God, deserved and procured by the fathers sins and rebellions, do oftentimes fall upon their children and posterity: they do not end and cease in themselves, but descend to their stock & issue that live after them, Exod. 20, 5. and 34, 7, 8.

The reasons. First, because the children of [Reason 1] men and their posterity, though they be oftentimes infants, and have not understanding to conceive of sin, yet the same judgments that belonged to the fathers sins, shall light upon them, because God would thereby show his anger & sore displeasure against their sins, in that when it pleaseth him, he will punish those for their sins, which as yet had committed no sin at all, Rom. 5, 14, Gen. 7, 4, and 19, 25.

Secondly, touching those that are of ripe [Reason 2] years, they are of two sorts: either wicked, & so like to their parents, and then it is just with God to bring his judgments upon them, because he would show himself displeased with their sins: or else they are godly, not tainted and defiled with them, yet nevertheless there is other corruption enough in thē, which may lustly & worthily call for temporal judgment.

[Object.] But some haply will object, that this may seem to be quite contrary to other Scriptures, as Ezek. 18, 4, •0. where it is said, The soul that sinneth, shall die the death: and again, The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son: the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him. I answer, [Answer.] we must mark the occasion of these words. The children of Israel took up a taunting proverb against God, and in their afflictions said. The fathers have eaten sour grapes, & the children's teeth are set on edge, v, 2. that is, the fathers have sinned, and the children are punished. These were quick-sighted to look up, but they could not look downward upon themselves: they could see farther off, but were blind nearer home. These were rank hypocrites, who had rather accuse God than themselves; and as Adam cast the fault from himself upon his wife, Gen. 3, 12, so do they from themselves upon their fathers. They never think of their own eating of the sour grapes, they thought themselves free frō any sin that should procure such judgments, but God taketh the sons in the sins of the fathers, and then punisheth them for their own sins, taking occasion from their fathers sins. Every man's sin shall be upon his own head, so that though a wicked father be condemned, yet his son not treading in his steps, shall be saved. And though God punisheth temporally for y^e sin of the father, yet he doth not condemn any eternally for the same. For as the godliness of the father shall nothing help the son to eternal life; so his wickedness shall not hinder his salvation, except he be wicked himself; and walk in the steps of his wicked father. [Object.] But it will peradventure be said, that David sinned in the numbering of the people, & yet the people were punished, many thousands were plagued for his offense, and he escaped scot-free: Loe, I have sinned, and I have done wickedly: but these sheep, what have they done? Let thine hand, I pray thee, be against me and against my fathers house. I answer, [Answer.] this is a certain & infallible rule, that there is no unrighteousness with God, who is the Judge of all the world. And touching the people, though they were free from this sin of David, yet they had many other grievous sins, for which God might justly punish them, and God, either for some secret or else some open sin, had a quarrel against them, as is plain by these words; The anger of the Lord was again kindled against Israel, and therefore he moved David against them to say, Go number Judah and Israel. It is not said, that he moved David against himself, but against them. So then their own sin was the cause of the kings sin, and the kings sin brought this punishment upon them, and therefore their sin was the cause of the cause of their punishment. It may be they abused the peace & plenty given unto them after the three years of famine, & after the four great battles which they had fought against y^e Philistines: for it is hard to use God's blessings well, our corrupt nature being ready to turn good into evil, and blessings into curses, Deut. 32, 6, 15. Therefore the people are especially plagued, because their sin was the first cause of all, which sin he punished with the sin of David, and both of thē with that grievous pestilence. And touching David, we cannot say, he altogether escaped unpunished, for God by one and the same plague and judgment striketh many ways and many persons: his sword hath many edges, and cutteth every way: he useth no rod that hath not many sharp twigs, nor no whip that hath not many cords of wiar to draw blood in many places. True it is, he was not stricken with this raging pestilence: nevertheless, he was diversely punished with it, with grief and sorrow, with horror & fear, with loss of his subjects & of his honor, Pro. 14, 28

The uses. First, this serveth as an admonition [Use 1] to all parents, to teach thē, that if they love their sons, they must leave their sins, and walk in a careful obedience to the law of God. If they do not remember his commandments, it shall come to pass that he will not remember their children for good, but for evil. If thē there be no love in us, either toward God or our selves, yet for the children's sake of our body, and for our posterity that come after us, we should labor to forsake our sins. For his judgments shall not end in us, but follow us at the heels, and fall upon such as are near us and belong unto us. God will take vengeance of the children for the sins of the parents, although they have in themselves enough to work out their own destruction, yea, though they have no more in them but original sin. Many love their children better then themselves, and desire their good more then their own. If we would indeed show our love to them, we must walk in obedience unto God. To say we love them dearly, and yet to live profanely, is utterly to deceive our selves. To commit wickedness with greediness, is not the way to show our love to them, or to procure their safety, but rather to make them partakers with us in the punishment. Many children may now say to their parents, as Zipporah said to Moses; for as she said, Thou art a bloody husband to me; in like manner may many children say to their parents, Ye are indeed bloody parents unto us, because they have brought the curse of God both upon themselves and upon their posterity. Alas, do men marry wives to bring forth children to Satan? to be cast into the fire of God's wrath? Is there no care in you, O fathers? no love in you, O mothers to your own children, the fruit of your own bodies? If there be any spark of piety, nay of pity and compassion in us, let us show it in this, by forsaking of our sins, and by reforming of our lives, whatsoever is amis in us; and by giving unto them a good example of life: otherwise most certainly we shall find the wrath of God extended even to our houses and little ones, he will forget to show mercy unto them, but in great wrath & heavy displeasure will he remember them. Let not these things be forgotten but remembered, & graven in our hearts, to wit, that wicked parents are the greatest enemies to their children. We cannot abide that others should entreat them evilly, when in the mean season none do more hurt them and misuse them than our selves.

[Use 2] Secondly, it reproveth those parents, that imagine by fraud and oppression, wrongful & injurious dealing, to set up their children and enrich their posterity, and get to themselves great names: whereas this is the ready way to bring the curse of God upon their names, upon their substance, upon their houses, upon their children, upon their labors, and upon all their posterity. Such covetous practices (whatsoever their pretences be) cannot build up their houses, which they might easily know if they did believe the word, which teacheth that God is an avenger of all such things, 1. Thess. 4, 6. And the Prophet telleth us, that the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it; woe to him that buildeth a Town with blood, &c. This woe fell upon Ahab, that ruined his house: as it doth many great houses in our days.

[Use 3] Thirdly, this warneth us that therefore we should not sleep securely in sin, because God by and by punisheth it one way or other. The wicked are often seen in great power, spreading themselves like the green bay tree, Psal. 37, 35, and they go unpunished for a while, Ps. 73. Job 21. but look upon their posterity, and you shall see GOD meeteth with them in his good time, yea often when they are dead and rotten. Evil doing is always attended with evil success in themselves or in those that are theirs. We see tyrants and bloody persecutors flourish and prosper for a time, howbeit if not in their own persons, yet in the second or third descent, they have been buried under the ruins of those buildings, of which the mortar had been tempered with innocent blood. We noted this before in the person of Ahab, after he had shed the blood of Naboth the true servant of God and of his children; who, I pray you, could do greater hurt to his own house than himself? Did not he in a manner pull it down with his own hands? for therefore was the kingdom taken away and removed from his house, and his seventy children were all slain with the edge of the sword, 1 Kings 21, 21. Behold, I will bring evil upon thee, and will take away thy posterity, &c. Thus was it with Jeroboam who made Israel to sin, God swept him away and all his stock as dung from the face of the earth, 1 King. 14.10. It behooveth therefore Princes and subjects to pray one for another, forasmuch as GOD taketh occasion by the sin of one man to punish another. This duty should also be performed of fathers and children, of masters and their families, lest God cast them together in one judgment.

Lastly, children ought not in all things to [Use 4] follow the example of their parents. It is no just defense or good excuse before GOD, to say, our parents did so. If they have been wicked, swearers and blasphemers, contemners of the word & of the Sabbaths of God, we must not follow them in their sins, lest we reap the fruit of that which they have sown. Wherefore children must not walk in the wicked ways of their fathers, but rather be humbled and crave pardon and forgiveness even for their sins which they after a sort have bequeathed as a legacy unto them: so that their children inherit their sins as well as their substance, because they send forth an evil savor which bringeth down the curse of God upon them, as Dan. 9, 8, 16, where Daniel doth not only confess his own sin, and of others that then lived, but he is wonderfully cast down for the sins of their predecessors: For our sins, & for the iniquities of our fathers, Jerusalem and thy people are become a reproach to all that are about us. And the Lord promiseth on the other side, that he which seeth his fathers sins, & is humbled for them, and doth not the like, shall not be punished for them, but shall find God merciful unto him; but whosoever seeth the wickedness of his fathers, and justifieth them by word or practice, filleth up the measure of their sins, & bringeth down a plague vpon his own head, Mat. 23, 32, 35: Fulfill ye the measure of your sins, that upon you may come all the righteous blood that hath been shed frō the blood of Abel, &c. Verily, I say unto you, all these things shall come upon this generation.

36. And the men which Moses sent to search the Land, who returned and made all the Congregation to murmur against him by bringing up a slander upon the Land: 37. Even those men that did bring up the evil report upon the Land, died of the plague before the Lord.

After that God had given sentence against all the murmurers together; now he proceeds against the captains and ringleaders of y^e rest, I mean the men that were sent to search out the land, which opened the mouths of the rest against the Lord; these were smitten down & died by the plague and pestilence, according to the threatening before ver. 12. I will smite thee with the pestilence, and I will make of thee a greater and mightier nation than they; and this had been no hard thing with God, who had before as it were hewed them out of the rock, & multiplied them to many thousands out of small beginnings.

[Doctrine.] The Doctrine from hence is this: Such as are leaders and drawers forward of others and solicitors of them to sin, are capital offenders, the burden of the sin & of the punishment thereof lieth chiefly upon them. Judgments are principally intended & directed against those that have the chief hand in misleading others; we see this evidently in the fall of our first parents, the serpent is first punished, then the woman, and lastly Adam, Gen. 3, 14, 16. The judgment of God lay heavy upon the idolatrous kings of Israel, which in a few descents were rooted out; Thus is Jeroboam branded, that he made Israel to sin, 1 Kings 12, 30. 2 Kings 13, 2, and 10, 29. 1, Kings 15, 2, 3, 34. The reasons.

[Reason 1] It is a sin for man to err of himself, and bringeth judgment, to go out of the way, though he be nor set out of it: but it is a greater sin and bringeth a greater judgment to cause others to do soe, for now he sinneth not alone. Satan that old serpent was chiefly punished, because he was the chief procurer of man's fall, but Adam escaped not who was seduced, but was no seducer; he was deceived, but was no deceiver: the devil was a deceiver, but was not deceived: the woman was both deceived and a deceiver also. They that cause others to fall, have a greater judgment belonging unto them. We observed this before in Miriam, chap. 12, 10. she was a leper white as snow, who drew Aaron to join with her against Moses, and therefore as she had the chief hand in the sin, so she was stricken with a foul leprosy.

[Reason 2] Secondly, principal offenders in civil states are chiefly punished before such as are only accessories. In evil, we may say, Two are worse then one, because if one determine to give over, he hath a fellow to stir him forward, & if he be ready to cease, he hath another to help him up.

[Use 1] This serveth to reprove such as draw on others to sin, as they are capital offenders, so they shall be punished as capital offenders. Woe to such as lay a stumbling block before others to cause them to fall. In this number I range those that keep common houses of drunkenness, to tempt and seduce others, and such as haunt them continually, & meet there, and intend to make others drunk; of which places I may say as Solomon doth of other, Pro. 7, 27. Their house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death. These men are capital offenders, & are so hardened in sin, that they make a mock and a spott at it as at a pastime yea they make a mock of those that set themselves against it. It serveth also to reprove those that any way make others partakers of their sins, whether it be by commanding, or by counsel, or by persuasion, or by evil example. We shall find the number of our own sins to be great enough, and the account hard enough which we are to make for them, that we should be afraid to heap up more, and so to make the weight greater and the burden heavier.

Secondly, this must teach all such as are Rulers [Use 2] and Governors to look to their ways, and to take heed they be not any cause of the fall of others. A Governor lifted up above others, is as an high Cedar or mighty Oak, above the lower shrubs. The Oak never falleth but it beareth down the lesser trees that stand near unto it. So is it with such as are set before others, in what calling soever it be, they stand not alone, they fall not alone. If they stand fast and unmovable, they are as firm pillars to bear up others. If they fall, they wrap others in their own ruin, & God's judgments will lie heavy upon them and upon those that belong unto them. This doeth the Prophet teach touching negligent watchmen, that keep silence and do not blow the trumpet, and thereby cause many to perish in their sins, Eze. 3, 18. Their blood will I require at the watchman's hands. This may be spoken likewise of other Governors. God hath made the Magistrate a watchman, and requireth of him to cause his laws to be observed; and godly Nehemiah acknowledged it to be his duty to see God to be served, and his Sabaths to be sanctified, chap. 13, 17. What evil is this that ye do, and profane the Sabbath day? There was buying and selling upon the Sabbath day and he reproveth the buyers by name, as if the fault were chiefly in them; for as we say commonly in another case, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves, so we may as truly say, if there were no buyers, there would be, there could be no sellers. And it is certain, that because these find readily such as will buy of thē, it encourageth the sellers to come and offer their wares. For if the Jews had not been willing to buy their wares, the Merchants of Tyre would never have brought their commodities to vent them upon that day. If therefore the Magistrate do not his duty, but hold his peace, the blood of such as perish shall be required at his hands also. The like we might say of fathers and masters that ought to teach and instruct such as belong unto their charge; and this have all godly Governors observed: such then as are negligent in this duty, & open not their mouths, make themselves guilty of the sins that their servants and children commit, as it is noted of Eli, and bring upon themselves many grievous judgments.

Thirdly, we must nevertheless understand, [Use 3] that it shall be no just plea or pretence for such as are led aside out of the right way by others, or have a stumbling block laid before them to cause them to fall, to allege for themselves, Alas, I was deceived, I was moved & drawn by others: these are no better then Adams fig leaves, he posted his sin over to his wife,

The woman that thou gavest me, &c. So did the woman to the serpent, The serpent beguiled me, &c. So it was with Saul, he translated the fault from himself to his people, The people spared the best of the Sheep and of the Oxen to sacrifice unto y^e Lord thy God, 1 Sa. 15, 15.28. But God bindeth them all together as it were in one bundle, and they are all punished, the serpent, the woman, the man: And Saul hath the kingdom rent from him, and given to a neighbor of his better then himself. The people for the most part think themselves to be discharged, if they can lay the blame upon their Teachers: Alas, if we had been taught better, we would have done better; our Ministers shall answer for us: if we be ignorant, it is their fault. Thus do many deceive themselves, but this shall never go for good payment. Christ saith, If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch, Mat. 15, 14. not only the blind leaders, but they also for company that are blindly led. Therefore none shall be excused by the carelessness and negligence of their Pastors, for they shall die in their own sins and iniquities, Ezech. 33, 8. Jer. 14, 15, 16.

Thus the case also standeth with servants and others under the government of others, They think all shall go well with them, if they have the examples of their masters and rulers to go before them. The poor think themselves excused by the rich, the lower sort by the greater, the fewer by the multitude, the wife by the husband, the subject by the Magistrate. Thus also it falleth out in the breach of the Sabbath, of which we spake before. The seller turneth it over to the buyer, and the buyer putteth all the fault upon the seller, whereas indeed neither are innocent, but divide the sin between them, and therefore both of them are reprov'd as guilty, and shall divide the punishment also between them.

[Use 4] Lastly, this serveth as an instruction to the godly, that albeit we be overtaken in any sin, and fall into it our selves, yet let us take heed we do not pull others after us. We must not be so sottish as to think, that by procuring and persuading others to join with us as companions and brethren in evil, that the evil is thereby lessened: no, it is thereby rather increased. We should be grieved for our own faults, and know that the burden of our own sins doth press us down so deeply, that we have small cause to add the weight of other men's sins to our own. On the other side, happy are they that lead the way to true godliness, and bring on others unto the true fear of God, They shall shine as the brightness of the Firmament, and as the Stars forever and ever, Daniel 12, 3. As then, Whosoever shall break one of these least Commandments, and teach men so, shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: so, Whosoever shall do them and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven, Mat. 5, 19. It is a praise and commendation to perform the will of God, and to do his commandments: but it is a double praise, to bring others to the practice of them also. He that conuerieth his brother to the truth, saveth a soul, I am. 5, 19, 20. No man can do better service to God, or to his neighbor.

39 And Moses told these savings unto all the Children of Israel, and the people mourned greatly.

Moses rehearseth what the Lord had denounced and determined, or else he could not be said to be faithful in the house of God, Num. 12, 7. He hid nothing from them, but revealed the whole counsel of God. This is the Ministers duty, they must keep back nothing of all the things that he shall say unto them, 1 Sam. 3, 17. Numb. 22, 38. Matth. 28, 20. Otherwise they cannot take the consciences of the people to record, that they are pure from the blood of all men, Act. 20, 26. Again, we see what this message of Moses brought from the mouth of God wrought in the people, they mourn and lament, not slightly but bitterly. But they should have taken heed of murmuring at the beginning, and then they had prevented this mourning at the later end. And wherefore do they mourn so greatly? not for their sin, but for the punishment fallen upon themselves and upon their children; as Judas and other sons of perdition, who can quickly mourn when they are punished, but are hardly drawn to it when they have sinned. But Peter wept bitterly so soon as he had sinned, Mat. 26, 75. albeit he saw no punishment coming. A good child feareth the displeasure of his father more then the rod. So it ought to be with all of us.

We learn from the behavior of the people this Doctrine, [Doctrine.] That sin though it be pleasant in the acting, yet it bringeth much sorrow and bitterness in the latter end. It is conceived in pleasure, but it bringeth forth pain. Gen. 3, 6. Ier. 2, 19. Pro. 7, 22, 23. 1 Tim. 6, 10. Ahab took possession with great joy of the vineyard of Naboth, purchased with the reward of iniquity, but the prophet is sent unto him with this heavy tidings, 1 Kings 21, 19. Hast thou killed and also taken possession? In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth, shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine, Luke 6, 25. and 15, 13, 14, 16.

The Reasons: First, because sin is the [Reason 1] transgression of the law, so it is defined by the Apostle, 1 John. 3, 4. Whosoever committeth sin, transgresseth also the Law: for sin is the transgression of the Law. Now God hath set a curse to every transgression of the Law, Gal. 3, 10 and this curse must take place upon the sinner, and cannot be severed from the sin.

Secondly, in sin are two things, the act it [Reason 2] self, and the guilt of it • the act it self is transient, and hath the pleasure while it is in committing, but the guilt of it remaineth behind, and bindeth a man to judgment.

This teacheth every man, that he should envy no man in the pleasure of his sinning: for albeit he have some pleasure in the committing of it, yet so soon as the pleasure is gone and past, then followeth the guilt, then followeth the punishment at the heels, and waiteth upon the sinner, as the Sergeant doth upon the debtor. The ungodly are oftentimes thought the only happy men in this world, but there is no happiness to be found in sin; it is the highway to unhappiness, to misery, to grief, to anguish, to judgment, to confusion, to condemnation. These are like to a foolish traveler, who coming to his Inn, calleth for great variety of meat to delight his taste, and taketh great pleasure in eating and drinking of all that is set before him without refusing any; but he never thinketh of the reckoning which is to come immediately after, which dasheth all the mirth and iollitie that went before. Thus it is with the sinner, he followeth his sin with greediness, he taketh delight therein, and cannot be satisfied; but he never remembereth the day of account, neither the reckoning that waiteth upon him hard at the heels. Hereupon Solomon singleth out the young man, and telleth him, that albeit he follow the lusts of his eyes, the desires of his heart, together with the pride and pleasure of life, yet he must know that for all these things God will bring him into judgment, Eccles. 11, 9. O that every sinner would think upon this, and mark the latter end of sin! This would be a notable means to restrain us from wickedness, and to pull back our feet from those evil ways into which we are entered: if we would remember that the days shall come, yea the times approach we know not how soon, wherein the Lord will say to us, Come, give an account: but (alas) these things are now hidden from us.

Hence it is, that Zophar setting down the estate of the wicked, Job 20, 12. saith, Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth, though he hide it under his tongue, though he spare it and forsake it not, but keep it still within his mouth; yet his meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall of Asps within him: He hath swallowed down riches, and he shall vomit them up again, God shall cast them out of his belly. Where he compareth sin with sweet meat mingled with deadly poison, & he speaketh of goods evilly gotten, w^c turn to the destruction of those that possess them. The same doth Solomon teach touching drunkenness, Prov. 23, 31, 32. and touching whoredom, chap. 3, 3, 4. as also elsewhere he showeth, that in the transgression of an evil man there is a snare. It is otherwise with godliness, and the fear of God: it seemeth bitter to the flesh and is oftentimes accompanied with many troubles and afflictions which are very unpleasant to the outward man: notwithstanding afterward it bringeth enduring pleasure and contentment unto the soul: for, our light affliction which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.

Secondly, let no man measure the nature of [Use 2] sin by the beginning of it, but by the end: and when we are devising to commit any sin, let us bethink our selves what will be the end of it: this will be a great means and a sovereign preservative to stop the course of it. For sin is said to have deceitfulness in it, Heb. 3, 18. and the pleasures thereof to endure for a season. Heb. 11, 25. The sin of Judas that was a thief and kept the bag, and betrayed his master for thirty shekels of silver, was very sweet unto him; but in the end his mouth was filled with gravel, he had enough of them, & too much, for his conscience was vexed with horror, and he felt an hell in his own bowels; so that he carried them back to the Pharisees, and hanged himself, Mat. 27, 5. Then he repented, but then it was too late: and thus do the wicked repent. Esau a very profane person, sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, it was sweet meat unto him, but it had sour sauce: for he found no place for repentance, Though he sought the blessing carefully with tears, Heb. 12, 17. Thus it was with the foolish Virgins, Matth. 25. and so it shall be with foolish men in the latter end.

Thirdly, we must be careful to take heed [Use 3] of the least measure of sin that can be. There is no sin so little, but if it be neglected, it will increase: and whosoever despiseth small sins, quickly falleth into greater; it is like the infant conceived in the womb, James 1, 15. All sin, though it have not a wide mouth like a Lyon to swallow us at one morsel, yet by little and little it will sting us to death. The sand on the sea-shore, though it be very small and little in quantity, yet too much weight thereof will sink the ship. The drops of rain that fall from heaven are very little, yet they make great showers, and great showers bring mighty floods that sweep away all before them. A little spark of fire neglected, causeth a great burning, and kindleth a great matter, James 3, 5. If then we desire to preserve our selves safe and sound from the heighth of sin, let us take heed we be not oppressed with y^e weight of it, and set on fire with the sparks, and wet with the drops of it. Beware of small sins, if we would be preserved from the greater, one making an easy path and passage to another.

Fourthly, let us labor to prevent the first [Use 4] beginning of sin, and seek to pull it up as a bitter root in the first sprouting. In the diseases of the body, it is a good rule to withstand the beginning, because it is too late afterward to provide a remedy. Many a wound might have been healed, if it had been looked unto betimes, which by continuance proveth incurable. So the diseases of the soul should be prevented in time, while we perceive them to be growing and going forward. Men are careful to kill serpents in the shell, and to destroy noisome beasts before they can run and rauen abroad, thereby to prevent the danger that otherwise in time might grow by them, if they were suffered and let alone. Thus ought we to deal with our sins, we must endeavor to struggle against them, and to strangle them in the birth and beginning, that so they may never come to perfection, neither bring us to destruction. Destroy them or else they will destroy us: if we do not kill them, they will kill us, for sin when it is finished, bringeth forth death, I am. 1, 15. A young plant may easily be pulled up by the roots: but if it grow in the ground till it be a great tree, it can hardly be transplanted and removed. In like sort so long as our sins are young, they may with less strife and labor be rooted out: but if once they be confirmed by age, and strengthened by custom and continuance in our hearts, we shall find it a very hard matter to displace them and dispossess them, Ier. 13, 23. & 2, 22. If once they have gotten the mastery, they will hardly leave their hold. We shall find it little better then to wash a Tile or brick, and go about in a manner an impossible work, they are become a Cart-ropes which are not easily untwisted, Isaiah 5, 18. Or as a threefold cable which is not quickly broken, Eccles. 4, 12. Cōsider the truth of this in these three things, Drunkenness, whoredom, and swearing: what means soever are used to take these away, they are unprofitable: the drunkard will follow it still, Pro. 23, 35. Such as comit whoredom sildome return again, and take hold of the paths of life, Prov. 2, 19. & when a man hath once accustomed himself to swearing, he cannot but swear at every word, he never feareth an oath. Custom taketh away fear of sinning: where no fear is to offend men are bold to sin: & when men are grown bold and past shame they have no sense of sin You shall hear them swear ordinarily and horribly, and yet they know not of it, or at least never consider it, Rom 2, 4. Eph. 4, 19.

[Use 5] Lastly, it behooveth us to use all the means we can to keep us from sin, as we would do to keep us from the pestilence, least we grow secure and senseless, and think our selves in good case, when we are nearest to destruction and farthest off from salvation. The means which God sanctifieth as so many preservatives to work in us a conscience of sin, and to stay us from falling into the same are many: First the ministry of the word. I range this in the first place, both because of the power of it, and because it giveth force unto the rest. God commandeth his Ministers to cry allowed and spare not to preach the doctrine of repentance, and to tell the people their sins, Pro. 1, 20, 21. and 9, 2, 33. Ephes. 4, 11, 12. Thus he sent Jonah to the Ninevites, Jonah 3, 4. Nathan to David, 2 Sam 12, 1. and the prophets continually to the Israelites, 2 Chronic. 36, 14, 15 Acts 2, 37, 38.

Secondly, the benefits and blessings of God which are many and great, daily & continual, upon soul and body; he saveth and preserveth us, in him we live and move, who reneweth his mercies to us every morning, Psal. 68, 18 Lam 3, 23. he daileth loadeth us with benefits wonderfully. Moses telleth the people, that the Lord bestowed so many benefits upon them, that they should love the Lord with all their hearts, and with all their soul, Deut. 10, 12. That they should clean unto him, and knit their hearts unto him, Josh. 23, 8. and 24, 14. 1 Kings 14.7, 8. Paul beseecheth the Romans by the mercies of God to offer up their bodies as an holy sacrifice unto God. God hath made us to abound with this argument, and hath often spoken unto us.

Thirdly, he hath bestowed upon us his own Son, the greatest blessing in heauē or earth, for a greater cannot be promised of God, or comprehended of us, Rom. 8, 32 He spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, John. 3, 16. He gave his own, his only Son for us his enemies even unto the death, that we should be reconciled unto him. If the consideration of this and the earnest meditation in it, will not move us to repent of sin, nothing in the world will put life into our hard hearts

Fourthly, the corrections and chastisements which are laid upon us, Psal. 89, 31, 32. Job 33, 16. The Lord openeth the ears of men, even by their corrections which he hath sealed: so that we should humble our selves when we feel them, Heb. 12, 6, 11. It is our duty therefore to mourn for sin betimes, which will bring with it comfort in the latter end, Luk. 6, 21. Blessed are ye that weep, for ye shall laugh. This use did David make of them, Psal. 119, 71. To this we may join the chastisements of God sent upon others, though we feel them not ourselves: for if we see them or hear of them, they should be as so many warning pieces to our selves to call us to repentance, Isaiah 26, 9.

Fifthly private admonitions and exhortations, yea reproofs and threatenings of judgment when the former will not serve, Leu. 19, 17. Prov. 9, 8. Rebuke a wise man and he will love thee. Math. 18, 15. Thus he may be won by his brother, Psal. 141, 5. Let us not therefore refuse this means, but make good use of it.

Lastly, the inward motions and inspirations of the holy Spirit, which he stirreth up in our hearts, as it is said of David, that God caused his own heart to smite him, 2 Sam. 24, 10. and Psal. 16, 7. We have all of us at one time or other some good motions and desires put into our minds; let us make much of them and entertain them into our souls, lest he withdraw his Spirit from us, and give us over unto our selves.

40. And they rose up early in the morning, and gate them up into the top of the Mountain, saying, Loe, we be here, and will go up unto the place which the Lord hath promised: for we have sinned.

41. And Moses said, Wherefore now do you transgress the commandment of the Lord? but it shall not prosper.

42. Go not up, for the Lord is not among you, &c.

Here we have the behavior of this crooked and perverse people, hearing from the mouth of Moses the mind of God, that they must go back again by the way of the red sea, and shall wander up and down forty years in the wilderness, for the false report which the spies had brought up of the Land, and for their own believing of that report: Now they will not obey, but will needs go forward, though God had commanded them to retire and return. See here the perverseness of our nature, as if we had made a general conspiracy never to obey him, but to oppose against him whatsoever he say, so we evermore strive against that we are forbidden. They refused before to go into the Land, now they will needs in a Brauado proceed when they are forbidden. When they should go forward, thē they will go backward and make them a Captain to conduct them into Egypt. When they should go backward, then they will go forward, though they perish for it. This is our corrupt nature, that which God willeth us to do, we will not do: and that which he willeth us not to do, that we will do: whereby we see that the lusts of the flesh are enmity against God.

Again, observe that when God is not with a people, they cannot prosper, his presence is the cause of victory, 2 Chron. 20, 27. If he be gone from us, and go not forth with our armies, we fall by the sword of the enemy, we cannot stand before them, we go out one way, and fly before them seven ways. Deut. 28, 25. Moreover, we see in the example of this disobedience, that God oftentimes punisheth one evil man by another, one of his enemies by another enemy; nevertheless, afterward they also perish. They are his rod, and when it hath been employed to scourge malefactors, it is cast into the fire. [Doctrine.] But to pass these over, which partly have been handled before, and partly come more fitly to be handled after, let us consider this general point; that wicked men that have sold themselves to sin, do at length come to that measure of sin, that no bands or banks can hold them or contain them. Such as have given themselves up to sin, do not only proceed in sin willfully and violently, but come to that height, that neither the judgments of God, nor his mercies can restrain them, but they break through all, like an unruly beast, whom no hedge can hold, no fence can order, no bounds can keep in, whatsoever they be, Ier. 5, 8. 2 Chron. 36, 13, 14, 16. Psal. 50, 17. Isaiah 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

And no marvel. For their hearts are obstinate, [Reason 1] their consciences are hardened and seared as with an hot iron, so that they cannot be softened with the oil of his mercies, nor terrified with the fire of his threatenings, nor broken in pieces with the hammer of his judgments. They have gotten hearts that cannot repent, and therefore when sinfulness and obstinacy meet together, there must needs be an exceeding great measure of iniquity.

Secondly, because there is in such, a great [Reason 2] contempt of God & his word: now contempt joined with sin, maketh the sin greater. It is noted as the top of Esau's profane heart, that he contemned his birthright, Gen. 25, 34. It was a note of profaneness, to set it to sale, to prefer his belly before the pledge of God's favor, to swear rashly, and securely to pass over what he had done; but to contemn and despise the grace of God, passeth all the former, and containeth the height and depth of his profaneness.

This argueth, that the times wherein we [Use 1] live, are grown to a marvelous height of impiety, and that we are come to a fearful degree of all profaneness. For not only gross sins as great beams in our eyes are to be found among us, but evil men are carried violently with a full career in their sins, like an horse without a bridle that rusheth into the battle. We are grown to this perfection, as it were to a complete age of sin in the midst of the blessings and benefits of God, we turn his grace into wantonness, & the more grace aboundeth, the more sin continueth: and though he warn us by his word, yet we will not be warned. His word is as the wind that passeth away. Again, many men live in sin in the midst of the judgments of God, not only general judgments, but even special upon themselves, yet they are settled in the dregs of their wickedness, nothing can turn them or amend them. This cannot but argue a great height of impiety. This maketh all sin whatsoever to be unpardonable, when we grow obstinate and sapped in our evil ways, that nothing can prevail with us. If any have a servant or child, whom he hath warned of his evil course, and lately corrected him for the same, if this servant or this child should (notwithstanding words and blows used toward him) continue to do the same things, would you not think that he deserved a greater measure of punishment? Then let us, I pray you, judge our selves in this case. God hath given us his word and commandments, to tell us what we ought to do, & what not to do, & often sendeth his judgments among us for the farther manifestation of the truth of his word: yet we see men will to their old sins again though they die for it, & that eternally in soul and body. We must therefore expect daily a greater measure of God's judgments then before, because we continue obstinate and rebellious.

Secondly, seeing nothing will hold us from our sinful ways, but we will rush forward, it teacheth every mā, that it is our duty to humble our selves for our obstinacy, impenitency, and hardness of heart, in that we are so dull and slow of heart to believe and to repent of those things which we have heard reproved out of the word of God. The heinousness of obstinate sins committed with an high hand will appear unto us by these particulars. First, obstinate proceeding in sin keepeth all mercy from us, as a thick cloud that suffereth not the comfortable light of the Sun to shine in our faces. This made the Apostle say, that blindness was happened to Israel, that they were not his people, Rom. 11, 25. Woe unto them in whom this remaineth, for God hath given unto them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear, Rom. 11, 28. Secondly, it maketh the least sin that a man committeth or can commit to be like to that sin against the holy Ghost that shall never be forgiven, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. Mat. 12, 32. For it is not so much sin that condemneth a man (for then all men should be contemned, inasmuch as all men have sinned) as obstinacy and willful continuing in sin. And have we not therefore great cause to humble our selves for the same, and to lament bitterly? Thirdly, it is a sin against the Gospel it self, and against the doctrine of salvation, ought we not therefore to mourn for it? Notwithstanding many are so far from leaving off their continued practice of sin, that they repent of their repentance, they are sorry that they have turned and changed so far. This is such a sin as maketh men odious in the sight of God, and maketh them more acceptable to Satan, when they grieve that they have a little broken off their sins, and made a few steps, & some small beginnings to repentance. This is an high degree of sin: and this was it that did fill the hardness of Pharaohs heart to the full. He and his servants were at the last content that Israel should depart out of Egypt: this was some kind of relenting, and a bringing of their former hardness to a better temper: but they are much grieved for that which they had done, and therefore they say one to another, Why have we done this, that we have let Israel go from serving us? Thus it was also with the Israelites themselves, they had hitherto proceeded toward the land of promise, and as it were ranged themselves under the standard of God, but now they repent of all that they had done, and would needs return back again into Egypt. But on the other side, when a man can mourn that he hath not mourned; and repent that he hath not repented, & humble himself because he hath not been humbled, this is a true and great measure of grace: and this is that which a man must first do, before he can truly repent of any particular sin whatsoever. But some will say, [Object.] what need so many words of exhortation to repentance? We hope we have repented long ago, [Answer.] both often enough and well enough. Thus do some proud hypocrites deceive themselves. These are like to the young man, that being sent to the law for the direction of his life, answered, All this have I done from my youth, what is yet wanting? This convinceth those men to their faces of want of repentance. For if such men have repented, it is with such kind of repentance as many take up and use after their customary swearing, who when they have sworn and taken the name of God in vain, do presently ask forgiveness and cry God mercy, and yet presently swear again & again, like dogs that return to their vomit: I cannot say like the sow that was washed, walloweth again in the mire, for they were never washed from their sin: but I may more fitly compare them to the harlot in the Proverbs, That eateth and wipeth her mouth, and saith, I have done no wickedness. With such kind of repentance it may be these have repented, whereas in truth it is rather a bold presumption, than a true conversion: for alas, this is no repentance at all, but only a mere deceit and delusion of the devil. This is an evident truth, and a very plain rule not to be denied, or disputed, or gainsayed; Whosoever is come to this pass to think he hath repented enough, it is most certain he never truly repented, he is not in the account of God and his word a true convert or penitent. For all such as have repented aright, do think it, nay they know it to be impossible for them to repent enough: such are our offenses against the eternal and infinite majesty of God, as no man is so humbled for them as that he can say, he need be humbled no more for them. All our life, if it were or could be as long as Methuselahs, must be a continual practice of repentance. As we daily sin, so we should daily crave pardon of sin, and daily repent us of our sin, both of our known and secret sins.

Lastly, this serveth to exhort every of us [Use 3] to take heed of obstinacy, impenitency, and resolution to go forward in sin: we must fly from it, and labor against it. Let us break off our sins by timely repentance, & by doing the contrary good commanded. For this also is another rule certain and infallible without any exception or contradiction, that a man can never be free from the forbidden evil, w^c doth not earnestly labor to do the contrary good. A man is never free from unbelief, that is not also furnished with true faith in his heart. For there is no mean between faith & infidelity, between righteousness and unrighteousness, and therefore it is not possible for a man to be free from an obstinate heart frozen in the lees of sin and disobedience, that is not also furnished in some measure with repentance and other graces of the Spirit. As of ten as a man stumbleth in the streets, so often he will rise again, and that quickly to the end none should espy him in his fall, & point at him with his finger: so it ought to be with us in this case. Whensoever we fall into sin, we ought by and by to labor to rise up again by repentance, lest by delaying and deferring the time, we add impenitency to our impiety. Let us all labor after renewed repentance in this life, without which all must perish eternally in the life to come. This is a necessary duty, we must all strive and endeavor with might and main to attain unto it; & though Satan cast many lets, as it were so many blocks in our way, and seek to entrappe us with his subtle devices, yet we must break through them all, and set our selves close to the practice of this duty. The more profitable and necessary it is, the more doth Satan seek to hinder us and keep us from it. There is no way to come by life and salvation, but by repentance. It is a true saying of him that is the truth John 14, 6. That except we repent, we shall all perish, Luke 13, 3. If we will judge our selves, we shall not be judged of the Lord, 1 Cor. 11, 31. This is a good judgment: happy is he that sitteth thus in judgment with himself, he shall not fear the eternal judgment. Many there are in the world, that think this an unpleasing doctrine and duty, they would willingly come to salvation and to the kingdom of heaven, but tell them of repentance, they account it an hard saying, they are not able to abide it: they are loath to change their lives and become new men, they are loath to leave their sin and the old Adam. These may be fitly compared to a traveler, that desireth to be at his iourneies end, and coming to an hard, stony, & straight way, thorough which he must of necessity pass, or else he can never be there; what doth he? He seeketh for some other place or passage, he wandereth up and down, and coasteth hither and thither; and yet when he hath troubled and tired himself, there is no remedy, he must pass thorough the narrow lane, howsoever it seem hard unto him. So is it with us, we would fain have salvation, but how? we would have it by any means rather than by changing the sinful course of our lives, as we see Micah 6, 6, 7. If the Lord would be pleased with thousands of Rammes, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil; or if he would accept at their hands their first borne for their transgression, and the fruit of their bodies for the sin of their soul, they would be ready to give it unto him rather than mortify any the deeds of the flesh and crucify the old man. There is nothing savoreth more hardly in their ears then the doctrine of mortification. But to dream of an heaven without repentance, is as foolish, as to dream of passing over a broad and deep River without either bridge or barge. There is no coming into the land of the living, of the living God, and of those that live with God, without repentance and change of mind; the bridge is broken down that should transport us and set us over. For this is the only way this is the door by which we must enter, or else no salvation can be attained. Enter then into this way, and set open this gate, that the King of glory may come in, Psal. 24, 7, 9, exercise yourselves in this duty, so shall ye be able to stand before the presence of God at that great and terrible day, when he shall judge every man according to his works, Rom. chap. 2. verse 6.

CHAP. XV.

1 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the land of your habitations which I give unto you:

3 And will make an Offering by fire unto the Lord, a burnt Offering or a sacrifice; in performing a vow, or in a free-will Offering, or in your solemn feasts, &c.

4 Then let him, &c.

IN the latter end of the former chapter, we saw the desperate folly of y^e people, that albeit Moses made known unto them the heavy displeasure of God, that he had left them to themselves, and was no more among them, after they had so often played and dallied with his merciful sufferings, yet they would needs amend their former disobedience by a second contempt, making offer to enter into the land contrary to the direction of God and the advice of Moses. But what became of it? The swords of the enemies which God had hitherto bended and rebated, are left no less sharp then death it self, and are without mercy sheathed in their bowels. For the Amalekites and Canaanites being joined together, and watching their advantage, set upon them, put them to route, and slaughtered the greatest part of them: the Amalekites encouraging one another to be revenged of their former loss received at Rephidim, Exod. 17. the Canaanites seeking to prevent their own displantation & destruction threatened: after which slaughter they followed their victory, and pursued those broken and disbanded companies all the way of their flight even unto Hormah.

In this chapt. we have sundry ceremonial precepts, which seem to be delivered to them immediately after the former punishment executed upon the offenders: wherein God testifieth, that albeit the Israelites had justly deserved to have final destruction brought upon them, yet God would not utterly depart from them, and wholly leave them to themselves, but continue his love and favor toward them, and be reconciled unto them, smelling the sweet savor of a sacrifice, and verifying the saying of the Apostle, Ro. 3, 3, 4. Observe here certain new additions propounded as appurtenances to the laws before delivered at large in the book of Leviticus. These are four in number: first, touching the sacrifices: secondly, touching the first fruits: thirdly, touching the cleansing of sins that are committed: lastly, touching the fringes they are commāded to make: all ceremonial, all temporal in regard of the letter, but all significant in regard of y^e matter.

But before we come to handle these particulars, it shall not be amiss briefly to show the causes why these sacrifices were instituted in the Old Testament. First, to maintain the public assemblies of the faithful, and their meetings together to serve the Lord. For, if every man were left to himself, religion would quickly decay or corrupt. Secondly, that they might be shadows of good things to come, and as it were pictures set before their eyes, to put them in mind of Christ and his sacrifice, who is therefore fitly called the Lamb slain frō the beginning of the world, Reu. 13, 8. Thirdly, these sacrifices were also as the Sacraments of the church, and visible signs of invisible grace, & testimonies of God's infallible promise made to the fathers touching salvation in the Messiah to come. Fourthly, they served to be as an open confession of their faith, what God they served, & in whom they believed, and that they hated and detested the vanity and idolatry of the Gentiles. Fifthly, they were also a testification of their thankfulness for sundry benefits received that thereby they might be taught to acknowledge from whence they came. Lastly, they served for the maintenance of the Ministry, and consequently for the furtherance of y^e worship of God, Deut. 18, 3, 4. 1 Cor. 9, 13. These were the chief ends for which they were ordained. Now let us retu•n back to the particular handling of the matters contained in this chap.

[Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them] The first point is touching the sacrifices, the sum whereof is to teach what oblations are to be used in every sacrifice, how much wine, how much oil, how much flower is to be taken and applied in every special sacrifice. The several sorts of sacrifices are set down in the book of Leviticus: [Doctrinē.] but in what proportion these things should be added, is not there described, but here it is declared in this place. And these things thus performed according to the commandment of God, he is said to smell a sweet savor. This offereth diverse good uses unto us, albeit the things themselves be ceased and abrogated. [Use 1]

The Uses. First, the offering is said to be a sweet savor, or a savor of rest (often repeated verses. 3, 7, 10, 13, 14) which God accepteth, wherein he delighteth, and whereby he is appeased; such as he resteth in, & so ceaseth from his anger. This is a borrowed speech taken from sweet odors and perfumes, wherein he which smelleth a sweet savor, resteth & contenteth himself. If any ask the question, [Object.] whether God smell any savor or not? I answer, [Answer.] this must be understood figuratively or mystically. For if we speak properly, savor & smell is the object of the sense of smelling, which agreeth to sensible creatures, and not either to God who neither hath senses, nor is sensible; neither is a creature, or to any spirit. For as Christ saith, A spirit hath not flesh nor bones, so unto the same agree neither senses nor sensible things. And if it were true, that God were affected with smells, yet the fume and savor that cometh from the burning of the flesh, cannot it self be pleasant and delightful to the senses, but is rather noisome and unsavory, and therefore some other thing must be meant by it. How then cometh it to be a sweet savor? I answer, two ways; partly in regard of their willingness and obedience, w^c God preferreth before all sacrifice that hath horn and hoof. Behold, to obey is better then sacrifice; and to hearken, then the fat of Rams: therefore where the external work was separated from the inward devotion & obedience, it was no sweet savor but it was hateful and abominable to God: partly also and principally, because it was a type and figure of Christ, who was indeed an offering and a sweet savor to God, Eph. 5.2. He is the truth of all sacrifices, and his blood the accomplishment of all the blood shed in y^e sacrifices. He hath performed all in his own person, & brought an end to them, they are no longer to be continued: he hath appeased the wrath of God, he hath taken away our sins, & thereby testified his abundant love toward us, for greater love hath no man then this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. This sacrifice was very acceptable to God the father, in it he resteth and requireth no further satisfaction at our hands, contrary to the doctrine of the popish church. The force of this sacrifice is very great, not so of any other. None of them were of & in them selves a sweet savor of rest, neither brought they pardon of sin, and therefore God testifieth y^t he stood not in need of them: but they were a sweet savor as they were referred to the sacrifice of Christ, and were offered by faith in him, as Heb. 11, 4. by faith Abel offered, and thereby obtained witness that he was righteous. And now also none of our spiritual sacrifices are acceptable to God, but so far forth as they are offered by faith in Christ, 1 Pet. 2, 5. All our sacrifices are acceptable through Christ. [Objection] If any ask, whence it cometh y^t his sacrifice is so effectual and forcible? [Answ.] I answer, first from the dignity of his person, which offered himself for us, for he was true God equal to his Father, & therefore of infinite value, Acts 20, 28. John 6, 62, 63. Secondly, from the fullness of his obedience toward his Father, Phil. 2, 6, 7. & from his keeping of the law perfectly for us, Math. 5, 17. Gal. 4, 4. whence we see that he was tainted with no sin, 1 Pet. 2, 22. John 8, 46. that he should have need to offer first for himself, as the priests of Levi were constrained to do in the law, Heb. 7, 27. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, He gave himself for us, not for himself who was without sin, Heb. 9, 13.

[Use 2] Secondly, the sacrifice of the burnt offering made by fire, had a meat-offering joined to it, verse. 4. of a tenth deal of flour, mingled with the fourth part of an Hin. This was a measure of moist or liquid things, as the Gomer & Epha were of dry and solid containing six pints, according to the computation of the Hebrews, which ought to have most knowledge in these things. But to leave this, we must consider, that to the burnt offering is joined a meat offering, this meat offering is no other then the flesh of Christ, which he should offer for the sins of the world, John 6, 53, 54, 55. 1 Cor. 10, 3. They did all eat of the same spiritual meat, and drank the same spiritual drink, that is, Christ Jesus. [Object.] If any ask how he is made meat for us, and drink for us? [Answer.] I answer, in that he was crucified, dead and buried: our life ariseth out of his death: our strength out of his weakness, & our salvation out of his condemnation. This is our meat offering, as indeed it was theirs also, and this we must eat by faith, if we desire to live forever. This must teach us to hunger after him; the nature of this hunger must be according to the nature of the meat; spiritual meat requireth spiritual hunger in our harts. As truly as we hunger after our meat, so truly should we hunger after this meat-offering. This made the Apostle count all things as dung, that he might win Christ, Phil. 3, 8. Nevertheless, great is the profaneness of the world: for we are for the most part like those Israelites that preferred the Onions and Garlic of Egypt, before Angels food, Numb. 11, 5, 6.

[Use 3] Lastly, the sacrifices offered up, must have Wine poured upon them, ver. 5. as also oil, of which we have spoken before chap. 6. Out of which we must learn to acknowledge, that for the faith and truths sake, for Christ and the Gospels sake, we must not account the best things we have, no not our own lives dear and precious unto us, but be ready to forsake brethren and sisters, house and lands, & to offer up our bodies, and to have our blood shed and poured out as a drink offering to God, 2 Cor. 4, 10. Gal. 6, 17. 2 Tim 4, 6. Phil. 2, 17. For as Christ offered himself for us, so should we be content to offer up our selves to him: & as he shed his blood for us, so should we be ready to give our lives for his truth. He that will save his life shall lose it; but he that loseth his life shall save it, Math. 16, 25 This have the faithful done: for they considered that in heaven they had an enduring substance, Heb. 10, 34. If they lost a temporal life, they found an eternal: & if they parted from any earthly treasure, they obtained heavenly: and therefore their gains were infinitely greater then their losses. It is not enough to profess the truth in prosperity, so long as it is fair weather, and the Sun shineth warm von us. Every hypocrite will go so far: but we must remember the pouring out of the wine upon the meat offering, as the faithful complain that their blood hath been shed like water round about Jerusalem, Psal. 80, 3. We must know that it is our duty to stand in a storm as well as in a calm, when the wind bloweth as well as when it bloweth not, and when persecution ariseth as well as in time of peace and plenty, Mat. 10, 32, 33. Think it not therefore strange when trouble appeareth, and the fiery trial cometh, which is to try us, 1 Pet. 4, 12. We must rejoice under the cross. All men can rejoice and be glad when they have a plentiful harvest, when they find great spoils, & when the riches of their house increase, Psa. 4, 7. but we must rejoice if the will of God be to prove us so far, when we suffer the spoiling of our goods, and are companions of them that are so used. To conclude, we have all need of patience, Heb. 10, 36. that we do not faint when we are rebuked. Let us therefore be always ready for affliction, & when we have suffered much, yet make preparation and provision for more, for we have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin, Heb. 12, 4. But we for the most part promise to our selves rest and ease, we are willing to hear of y^e meat offering, but we care not for pouring wine upon it. We would have Christ, but we would not suffer for Christ. We are willing to have him our meat, but not our cross.

13 All that are borne of the country shall do these things after this manner, in offering an Offering made by fire of a sweet savor unto the Lord.

14 And if a stranger sojourne among you, or whosoever be among you in your generations, and will offer an Offering made by fire of a sweet smelling savor unto the Lord: as ye do, so shall he do.

15 One ordinance shall be both for you of the Congregation, and also for the stranger that sojourneth with you, &c.

Moses having set down sundry rites and ceremonies, showeth in these words the persons to whom they belong, & of whom they must be practiced; they belong even to the strangers & sojourners among the Israelites as well as to the Israelites themselves, namely, if they were circumcised; as it is said before touching the eating of the Passover, chapt. 9. One law is appointed for the one and the other. The doctrine is this: The members of the church (of what place & people soever they are) are one entire body, and are to be ruled by the same laws, Exod. 12, 48, 49. Eph. 1, 22. and 3, 15. & 5^a 21. Coloss. 1, 18. To this purpose it is called sometimes a body, sometimes a city, sometimes a temple, and sometimes a family. But it may be objected, if it be one body, one temple, one city, one family, how is it that we read of many Churches: as of the Romans, of the Corinthians, and of the seven churches of Asia? I answer, there is one Church, but it hath many particular parts: as the great Sea, though it be one, yet there are many parts according to the several coasts and countries by which they run, as the Britain, the French, the Spanish, the German seas, and yet all but one sea.

The reasons. First, the ruler thereof is one God and one Lord over all, who is blessed forever. This one God hath one church, & hath prepared for it one place and one salvation, Eph. 4, 5, 6. Secondly the body, tied as it were by joints and sinews in the same: the members are diverse, but they make but one body: there is one hope, one inheritance, one baptism, one faith, being united by means of the ministry, Ephes. 4, 12. They have the same Sacraments, they eat one bread, and they drink of the same cup. This inward means is one Spirit, by which they walk, 1 Cor. 12, 13. Thirdly, they are ruled by one head which coupleth them together. For, as one body can have but one head, so one head can have but one body: and though the members be many, yet the body is but one. Col. 1, 18.

[Use 1] The Uses. First, the toleration of diverse & contrary religions is not lawful. As the church is one body, so it is to be ruled by one law; one law is appointed for all. This toleration and dispensation is like the sowing of diverse seeds together in one field, or the mingling of linen and woolen together in one garment: as if a Painter should join to the head of a man the neck of an horse, & then add to the body sundry feathers of diverse sorts, and make the picture beneath to end like a fish, what a monster would this be? So this linsy-wolsy Religion, consisting of contrary parts, & not one agreeing to another, would make the church a very monster: and it is directly contrary to the first and second commandment, and the office of the Magistrate, appointed and ordained to maintain the pure worship of God. Ahab and his people are reprov'd for halting with God and wavering between his opinions. Solomon is reprov'd for this, 1 Ki. 11. and contrariwise the best Kings, Josiah, Hezekiah, Asa, and Jehoshaphat are commended for their constant profession and perseverance in the same truth. Secondly, all monuments of idolatry and superstition must be demolished and pulled down, and idolaters should be slain. Good king are reprov'd for suffering hil-altars and Groues, & not taking them away. Besides, it is a means to overthrow church and kingdom. 1 Ki. 11, 19. If a church be corrupt in the foundation of the doctrine, and the substance of God's worship, we ought to separate from it, & not join as a member with it of the same body. This unhappy toleration is accompanied with sundry mischiefs: it showeth a coldness in God's cause, and little or no zeal in defacing the monuments of idolatry, and no hatred of them at all, being content to give the glory of God to another, which he will not have to be given. It nourisheth a serpent in the bosom, and setteth up uncertainty of faith and religion; leaveth men in a mammering what to do, and to which side to join himself, maintaineth confusion in God's worship, fostereth schisms, troubles, seditions, and rebellions among subjects, breaketh the sweet & comfortable knot of the unity and amity of brethren, and lastly bringeth danger to Prince and State. It is directly against sincere profession, Joshua 24. verse 19. 2 John. 10, 1. The Samaritans served everyone the god of his country, and so served not God at all. The Apostle saith, There is one faith, Ephes. 4, 5. an house divided against it self cannot stand, Mat. 12, 25. Frō such separate, 1 Tim. 6, 3.

Now let us see what may be objected in defense of toleration. First, it is said, [Object.] it giveth to everyone contentment, [Answer.] and therefore it is a safety to a commonwealth. I answer, Contentment must be given by lawful means, otherwise discontentment is better: as just war to be preferred before unjust peace. Again, there is no true safety without God's blessing: and as the heathen Philosopher reasoneth against communion of all things, so we may against the toleration of all religions. He taught, That whatsoever is cared for of all, is cared for of none: so we may say, whatsoever giveth contentment to all, giveth indeed contentment to none. Hence it is, that there are so many iars and contentions, which indeed are the ruin of a kingdom, Neh. 2, 19, 20. from 1. ver. to the 16. This was the most devilish policy of Mahomet to patch up his Alchoran with shreds of all sorts of errors, schisms, and heresies, borrowed from Jews and Gentiles, that there might be somewhat to content all persons, that so some of all sects might be allured unto that superstition.

Secondly, [Object.] the Jews warranted by the word did suffer amongst them the idolatrous Gentiles, Deut. 14, 21. Exod. 12, 44. therefore we may do the like. I answer, [Answer.] private toleration in conversation, did not allow any open profession or practice of idolatry in those Nations, Deu. 12, 1, 2, 3. Again; though they by reason of their weak estate suffered many, Deut. 7, 22. yet afterward in a perfect state we find not any. Lastly, some things were tolerated contrary to moral laws, as we see in the case of divorce for trifling causes, and of usury to strangers, which we may not now tolerate.

[Object.] Thirdly, corrupt manners in well-ordered government have had open toleration, therefore the root from whence they spring may also, which is corrupt religion, as toleration of polygamy and of usury to strangers. [Answ.] I answer: first the sequel is false, for there is great difference between manners and false worship, yea between doctrines fundamental & otherwise, 1 Cor. 3, 11, 12, 13. Secondly, touching divorce and polygamy, there is no allowance, but a permission only, Math. 19, 8. and that of usury was particular for those nations, Deut. 23, 20. Exod. 21, 1.

[Object.] Fourthly, it doeth greatly manifest, commend, and extol true religion, 1 Cor. 11, 19. I answer no otherwise then as one contrary being set to another, [Answer.] doth make the same better to be seen: and thus doth sin serve to commend the grace and mercy of God, as Rom. 5, 20. Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound: howbeit this cometh to pass accidentally, not directly and properly.

[Object.] Fifthly, the conscience is not to be forced, therefore men should be left to themselves. I answer, [Answer.] it is lawful to force them to y^e means. Luke 14, 23. Compel them to come in, that my house may be filled; that by the blessing of God upon the use of the means, they may afterward willingly yield, 2 Chron. 34, 33. Ezra 10, 8. The son that answered his father, that he would not work in his vineyard, afterward repented and went, Matth. 21, 29. And some have been forced in the beginning to come to the word, who afterward could hardly be forced and driven from it. There is an active violence and a passive. Many are hailed to the means by violence, and come to the church as a Bear to the stake, but afterward the violent take the kingdom of God, and lay hold on it by force.

[Objection] Sixthly, all manner of wicked men and wickedness are to be left unpunished, for the tares and the wheat in one field must be let grow together until the harvest, and then they shall be separated, Mat. 13, 30. the tares shall be burned, [Answ.] the wheat shall be preserved. I answer, the scope is only to show that both good and bad are by God's decree to remain til the end of the world, to uphold the godly against that temptation, as the application or reddition (the second part of the comparison) doeth show in the exposition of it by Christ himself, Mat. 13 36, 37. The godly must not be offended at the multitude and growth of the wicked, we must never look for perfection upon the earth. This parable doeth no way touch the authority of the Magistrate, nor the discipline of y^e church, neither pleadeth pardon and impunity for malefactors, but warneth us that offenses shall never be wanting in the church to the end of the world, but it shall always be troubled with such abuses. There shall always be a mixture so long as the world standeth, and therefore we ought not to depart out of the church as schismatiks do, for the blots and blemishes that appear in it. Thus much of this parable.

Seventhly, [Objection.] every Christian Magistrate is not of power to suppress contrary religions without the ruin of his kingdom. I answer, [Answ.] we speak of such as God hath given power into their hands: whensoever God requireth it at their hands, he will enable them to perform it, and then they ought to set upon that as a special duty. Where there is no power, God accepteth the will for the deed: so that if they endeavor to restrain such and cannot, it is not their sin.

Hitherto we have spoken of false religions in general: now among all other false religions popery is one of the worst, and least of all to be tolerated in any State, or in any sort, as that which raceth the foundation of the Christian faith, and pulleth it up by the roots, as plainly appeareth by these particulars. First, it maintaineth inherent righteousness of their own, and justification by works done by themselves, & in themselves: and thereby make justification and sanctification all one, contrary to the Apostles doctrine, 1 Cor. 1, 30. & 2. Cor. 5, 21. It rejecteth and derideth the imputation of Christ's righteousness, whereby we stand righteous in the sight of God thorough his righteousness and merits imputed unto us. And hence it is, that they make his righteousness imperfect, and give a power to themselves to make satisfaction for sin by temporal punishment, and the sacrifice of the Mass. Secondly, they corrupt the worship of God in substance, by professing and practicing idolatry and worship of images, making the church an harlot, by forsaking her first husband, and bringing in more then heathenish idolatry by adoring Saints, angels, crucifixes, relics, & their breaden god, & by entertaining a mixture of Paganism and Judaism. Thirdly, the church of Rome is the church of Anti christ, therefore not of Christ: for to y^e bysh. of Rome do all the notes and properties whereby Antichrist is described in holy Scripture, agree truly, fully, solely. This will not be hard to resolve if we consider the place where we are to seek him, and where we shall find him: the time when the church was to look for him: and lastly the qualities whereby he is to be known. The seat of Antichrist is mystical Babylon: & mystical Babylon is no other thē Rome itself. For the whore of Babylon is the great city, w^c in the Apostlestime had rule and dominion over the kings of the earth, Reu. 17, 18. and this City is situated upon seven hills. Reu. 17, 9. the seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth: which agreeth properly to Rome, and every historian, nay every Poet almost, cal it the city on seven hills. Secondly, touching the time of the revealing and manifestation of Antichrist, it was foretold by the Apostle, that he should come when the Emperors were removed and taken out of the way, and when once the Empire in the west should be dissolved, then should Antichrist succeed in y^t seat, that is, in the government of Rome, 2 Thes. 2, 8. and this we see with our eyes to have long ago come to pass, that it needeth no farther inquiry. The Apostle had spokē plainly of this to the Thessalonians by word of mouth, & therefore forbearth to set it down in writing, lest he should bring on his own head, and on the church the needless hatred of y^e Roman monarchy; his own writing remaining as a strong evidence against himself and others. For when the Romans should read or hear that he had prophesied of the dissolution of the Roman Empire, they would soon raise persecution against him and the rest of the believers, as if they expected the ruin, & desired the downfall thereof. And this truth in all likelihood was well marked, and continued in the church from age to age, because it is generally understood of the Roman Empire and Emperor, by most of the Ancients.

Lastly, the conditions and qualities of Antichrist do bewray the same also. Now, he is plainly described by the Apostle, 2 Thess. 2, 4. yea so plainly, as if then he had been already come and revealed to the world. He is said to be an adversary opposed to Christ, yet not professed, but disguised: for under the mask and vizard of hypocrisy, he oppugneth Christ and his truth, and denieth the Lord Jesus to be that Christ, anointed to be the only King, the only Priest, and the only Prophet of the church; in all which the bishop of Rome will have a share, and communicateth them to others. This high priest is no better then an apostate, a star fallen from heaven; he lifteth up himself above all that is called God, that is, all to whom the name of God is communicated, and sitteth in the temple of God as god. Fourthly, a perfect papist, that is, such a one as acknowledgeth the Council of Trent, and is obedient to the doctrine of the Jesuits, cannot be a good subject, neither obey for conscience sake: for he believeth the Popes sentence in excommunication to be good, nay to be God's sentence: he obeys so long as pleaseth the pope and his instruments: he keepeth not promise or oath with heretics, he receiveth pardons to free from loyalty and allegiance, harboreth Seminaries, looketh for a golden day, practiseth the most devilish devices to establish popery; entertaineth conference with his Princes sworn enemies: and maintaineth that this proud prelate may depose Princes by his priestly power. Lastly, it is dāgerous to Prince and State to permit them, forasmuch as hereby they have means to work and wreak their malice: Recusants will converse with Jesuits most freely, and Jesuits shall not be kept to any good terms and behavior: whereby the secrets of the land are disclosed, home-bred foes are increased, good subjects are discouraged, and means afforded to hollow-hearted enemies, to forecast and to fortify themselves.

[Use 2] Secondly, this serveth to reprove diverse sorts that err in practice, & offend against this rule. And first of all, such as seek revenge, and thereby show themselves far from true love. To revenge wrongs is proper to God; we must not intrude upon his office, neither usurp his right Deu. 32, 35. Ro. 12, 19. Heb. 10, 30. Psal. 94, 1. Pro. 14, 29. If we practice this we work wickedness against him, and provoke him to work revenge upon our selves. Is it a small offense for any subject to usurp the office of y^e Prince? or of the Judge in giving sentence upon any? Such usurpers are such persons against GOD. Again, it serveth to rebuke such as will not forgive; how can such persuade themselves to be members of the church, and one body with their brethrē, while they refuse to be one with them? These do make an heavy law against themselves, Mat. 6, 14, 15. & 18, 22. & 5, 44. 1 Pet. 3, 8. Thirdly, such as have no feeling of the troubles & calamities of their brethren, Heb. 13, 3. much more such as add affliction to the afflicted. The captivate Jews complain against the insolency and cruelty of the Chaldeans, Ps. 137, 3. they required of them in scorn and derision to sing in their hearing one of the songs of Zion, and made themselves merry when they saw them heavy hearted. The enemies of God and his people are vnmerciful & have no pity, Isaiah 47, 6. God reproveth for this, Psal. 102, 19.

Lastly, all members of the church should live [Use 3] in all love, peace, and concord one with another, Gen. 13. considering we are brethren; and avoid all dissention and discord. As in the natural body we see how one member is ready to aid & affect another, and stand for the good of another: so should it be in the mystical body, all should be united together. As the subjects of one Prince that belong to one kingdom, are subject to the same laws, & bound to maintain mutual peace one with another: so if God be our king, and rule in our harts by his word and Spirit: and if we belong to his kingdom, we must embrace one another in love, and endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. We must do nothing through strife and vainglory, Phil. 2.3. We must all speak the same things, that there be no division among us. Hatred is a fruit of the flesh, Gal. 5, 20. On the other side, to walk in love, is to walk in the spirit, and it is a fruit of the gospel. If we have never so excellent gifts, all remain unprofitable without this. Now, the way to try whether this be in us toward the brethren, is to examine it by these four rules. First, Christian love must not begin for any worldly respects, nor end for worldly respects and considerations, but principally must be for and in God. Carnal love is begun for carnal respects, and therefore soon withereth away. We must love our brethren principally, because they are the sons of God, and members of Christ. They are his brethren, and he accounteth them so: and therefore if God be our Father and Christ our brother, they also must be our brethrē. This is expressed by the Apostle, 1 John 5, 1. Everyone that loveth him that begat, loveth him also which is begotten, that is, whosoever loveth God the Father, loveth also the sons of God. Secondly, true Christian love must not be outward in show only, but inward in the heart, 1 John 3, 18. To love in show, is the love of Cain toward Abel. Thirdly, we must love those that are our enemies and hate us: for if we love them only that love us, what singular thing do we? or what reward have we? Math. 5, 46, 47. Lastly, Christian love must not be only in time of prosperity, but is chiefly tried in adversity, when most need is. This rule is set down by the Apostle John, Whosoever hath this worlds goods, and seeth his Brother have need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? 1 John 3, 17. And Solomon showeth, that a friend loveth at all times, and a brother is borne for adversity, Prov. 17, 7. In time of peace and plenty, everyone will seem a friend, but not in misery: The poor is hated even of his own neighbor, but the rich hath many friends, Proverbs chap. 14. verse 20. howbeit in time of need is the true friend tried.

These rules must serve for our instruction: we must love all those that are the sons of God by grace and adoption: we must love all those y^t are the brethren of Christ by faith & sanctification: we must love them inwardly in truth and in heart: we must love our enemies: and not only in their prosperity and flourishing estate, but in their greatest need, and then be assured that the love of God shall be our shield and protection.

18 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them: When ye come into the land whither I bring you:

19 Then it shall be that when ye eat of the bread of the land, ye shall offer up an heaue offering unto the Lord.

20 Ye shall offer up a cake of the first of your dough, for an heaue offering as ye do the heaue offering of the, &c.

21 Of the first of your dough ye shall give unto the Lord, an heaue Offering in your generations.

Here is the law for the first of the dough to be offered to God. This is the same Law in effect with that often repeated touching the first fruits, Exod. 22, 29. & 23, 19. and 34, 26. Deut. 14, 23. The substance of these laws was to teach them to acknowledge from whence they enjoyed their Land, their Corn, their Wine, their Dough, and all their store that they possessed, to wit, by the mere gift and blessing of God. [Doctrine.] The doctrine from hence is this, The author and giver of all outward blessings whatsoever is God, and he alone. Whatsoever we possess, by the sole gift of God we do possess it, Isaiah 26, 12. and 45, 7. Job 21. Psal. 147, 14. James 1, 17. Ezek. 16, 17, 18, 19. Acts 17, 25.

The reasons. First, he hath made all things, and therefore they are his own by right of creation, Psal. 24, 1. & 50, 12 Rom. 12, 36. Secondly, all things are disposed by his providence being his own, for he doth all things in heaven and earth whatsoever he pleaseth, as at the first he made them, Psal. 113, 5, 6. Thirdly, we are sent unto him for our daily bread and for all temporal blessings, and are commanded to go to him in all our need, looking for them at his hands, Math. 6, 11.

This teacheth every man to be content [Use 1] with his portion whatsoever it be that God hath given to him, albeit we have less then others, yet we must consider it is GOD from whom we have it, and therefore we ought not to be discontented with it. Such as any way murmur when they have not their own mind fulfilled, are willful men and check the wisdom of God as if he were unrighteous, because he giveth not to everyone alike. This was the common sin of the Israelites, as we have often noted: we must not be like them, to murmur as some of them murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer. This is the mother of unthankfulness, and robbeth him of the honor due unto him: who better knoweth what is good for us then we our selves, Phil. 4, 11.

Secondly, it is our duty whatsoever we have [Use 2] received, whether it be little or much, to use it well and employ it to good uses. The heathen man could say, We are not born for ourselves only: then much more ought we that are Christians to know and testify that we were not born for our selves, but for the church & people of God, and thereby made servants unto all. We must therefore take special care y^t we do not abuse his gifts, or wrong any of his creatures which we enjoy, for which we must give an account: inasmuch as we in wronging of them do wrong God himself the giver of them; and then we may justly fear lest he take them away, who is as well able to take them away from us, as to give them to us, yea, and he will do it. Hence it is that Job joineth both together; The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away, Job 1, 21. so that we should be careful to use them to the glory of God; it is not enough that we do not abuse them, we shall be called to a reckoning for a farther duty, because we must not only abstain from evil, but do that which is good.

Thirdly, if we would have these blessings [Use 3] continued unto us, we must keep in with God, seeing he is the author of them; let us labor to serve him in righteousness and true holiness all the days of our life, Mat. 6, 33. Seek his friendship, and prefer his love and favor above all things in this world. He did make the world for such as are his friends, and not for those that are his enemies. And albeit the enemies of God have gotten a very great share of these blessings, yet they are no better then usurpers.

[Use 4] Lastly, this offering of their first fruits, was an acknowledgement that they held all from God, and they brought the same as a testimony of their thankfulness, when GOD had brought them into the Land, that they entered into houses which they built not, & fields which they sowed not, he requireth of them to bring the first of all that they had tasted unto him. The practice hereof we see taught to the people when they should come into the Land, Deut. 26, 9, 10. they must confess the benefits which they have received of him, saying, I have brought the first fruits of the land, which thou O Lord, hast given me: and thou shalt set it before the Lord thy God, and worship before the Lord thy God. If then we receive his blessings without the praise of his Name, we defile them, and we dishonor him, and his creatures become unclean unto us, 1 Tim. 4, 4, 5. Every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving: for it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer. Of whom shall we receive our food, if we seek it not at God's hand? If the child want food and raiment, to whom shall he go but to his father? He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young Ravens which cry, Psal. 147, 9, and 104, 27, 28. And as we have our meat from him, so we must eat and drink as in the presence of God, Deut. 14, 26. If this point were well printed in our minds, and grafted in our hearts, that God is present at the Table with us, that he sitteth down with us, and riseth with us, that he cometh with us, and departeth with us, it would teach us more sobriety & moderation then it commonly used among us. The very heathen had some knowledge of this, and were altogether ignorant of it, they called their Tables sacred, and thought that their gods were always attendant at their meats and meals. Thus by this light of the truth shining (though darkly) among thē, God left them altogether without excuse. Woe then to us that profess our selves Christians, if we do not learn that God is present with us at our Tables, & will take an account of us for all our words and deeds whatsoever. If a child be at the table with his father, and his father sitting at the upper end of the board have his eye evermore upon him, he will not dare to use such boldness as otherwise he would if he were absent: for then peradventure he would not stick to play his pranks, to throw his trencher under feet, and to dally as a wanton with his meat: but if he be at his fathers table, and sit at his elbow, and remain in his sight he will behave himself soberly and orderly, or else he shall be rebuked and chastised. So likewise it ought to be with us, if we did consider that God is with us in our eating and drinking, it would be of sufficient force to teach us to behave our selves reverently, and to take heed of all excess; but whether we consider it or not, we shall find in the end, that he is not far from everyone of us that abuse his creatures, to the dishonor of his Name, and to the danger of our own souls. If we do not praise God for our meats and drinks, we are no better then thieves and usurpers, (albeit otherwise they may be called our own) because God hath not wholly resigned up his right unto them, who hath created them.

22 And if ye have erred, and not observed all these commandments which the Lord hath spoken unto Moses, 23 Even all that the Lord hath commanded you by the hand of Moses from the day that the Lord commanded Moses, and thenceforth from among your generations.

24 Then it shall be, if ought be committed thorough ignorance, without the knowledge of the congregation, that all the congregation shall offer, &c.

Here we have a law set down touching the sacrifice for sins of ignorance. If the former laws were broken through error and ignorance, not willfully & of a settled purpose, the manner of cleansing the same is set down, whether it be done by the whole multitude, or by one private man. Where we see, that it may fall out, that the whole Church may err and go astray both in judgment and in practice.

Observe hereby, [Doctrine.] that the ignorance of the will and word of God, in whomsoever it be found, is a great and grievous sin against God, Levite. 4, 2. and 5, 17. Isaiah 1, 3, and 5, 13. and 27, 11. Ier. 10, 25. Luke 12, 48. The Prophet Hosea complaineth, that there was no knowledge of God in the Land, chap. 4, ver. 2. They were delivered out of Egypt, planted in a fruitful land, furnished with all commodities, he gave them his word and sacraments, he dealt not so with every Nation, Psal. 147, 20. yet they had no knowledge of his ways, nay they regarded not the knowledge of his ways. This is a foul sin to hate the light, and yet to live in darkness, and to love darkness more then the light, Ier. 4, 22. They were foolish and knew him not, they were foolish children and had no understanding, they are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge.

The grounds of this doctrine are evident. [Reason 1] For first, all the corruption that befell us thorough the fall and disobedience of Adam, is sin: therefore ignorance and blindness of mind being a part of that corruption, must needs also be sin; the natural man knoweth not the things of the Spirit of God, because they are spiritually discerned, 1 Corinth. 2, ver. 14.

Secondly, ignorance is contrary unto the [Reason 2] image of God, wherein at the first we were created, and therefore it must needs follow that it is sin. Now a part of God's image in man, was knowledge, Col. 3, 10. as well as holiness and righteousness, Eph. 4, 24. Ignorance therefore being contrary and opposite to this, must needs be sin.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, that for which Christ died to abolish and take away, must needs be sin, for wherefore died he, but for our sins? but he suffered even for our errors in life, & for our ignorances; which was represented by this, that every high Priest taken from among men, had compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way, for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity, Heb. 5, 2. and he entered into the holiest of all once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself and for the errors of the people, chap. 9, 7.

[Reason 4] Fourthly, as knowledge is the beginning and foundation of all piety and obedience: so ignorance is the mother and root of all error, evil, wickedness, and profaneness, Math. 22, 29. Ye err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God: and therefore it cannot be but displeasing unto God, Psalm. 94, verse 10.

[Use 1] This teacheth the folly of many men in our times, who think that ignorance shall excuse them; they regard not to learn or know anything, and then think themselves excused, because they know not. These are willingly, nay willfully ignorant, 2 Pet. 3, 5. They know nothing, because they will know nothing, like to him that shutteth both his eyes, because he will not see the light. But this cannot shield and shelter them from the judgments of God and from his heavy wrath, 2, Thess. 1, 8. who will come to render vengeance in flames of fire unto such as have not known the Gospel. We have the word of God among us, and we hear the sound of it, yet few or none at all care to get knowledge and understanding by it. This is a most fearful kind of ignorance, and a great measure of sin. Ignorance is twofold, simple, and affected; and both condemned, and both shall receive vengeance and judgment. The simple, is when we have not the means, and so have not that knowledge which we ought to have: for he that sinneth without law, shall also perish without law; and as many as have sinned in the law, shall be judged by the law, Rom. 2, ver. 12. This is a fruit of our original corruption, & taketh hold upon all, and is sufficient to condemn the very Turks and Infidels: because, not only to be ignorant of that which we have means to know, but to be ignorant of that which we ought to know, is a sin. Some things we may be ignorant of, without sin: nay, Christ our Savior as he is man, knoweth not all things, Math. 24, 36. Mark. 13, 32. Secret things belong not unto us, but unto the Lord, Deut. 29, verse 29. But the things revealed belong to us and to our children to do them; and to be ignorant of any of these, is a sin in the sight of God. Affected ignorance is, when we have the light of the truth shining in our faces, but we shut our eyes against it, lest it should shine into our hearts: and this is our case. We have the word, we may read it or hear it read, we have it preached, and other means of knowledge offered unto us, therefore all such are left without excuse. It shall not excuse a subject when he hath broken some penal statute, to say, Alas, I knew not the law, I was utterly ignorant of it, I never heard in all my life of any such matter. For the law is passed, printed, and published, and thou must take knowledge of it. Every man at his own peril must look to it, and if he run in danger of it, it is his own fault: so we may say of the law of God. He hath set it forth to the view of all, and all must make enquiry after it at their uttermost peril.

If then the Turks and Sarazens, if the Infidels and Barbarians that want the means, shall not be excused at the day of judgment by their ignorance, how shall we think to escape that have had the means? And so doth the Lord tell them of Corazin and Bethsaida, and denounceth a fearful woe against Capernaum, because they had much mercy shown unto them, & yet never regarded the same, and therefore telleth them, that it should be easier for Tyre and Sidon, yea for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, Math. 11, 21, 23, 24.

Secondly, woe to our times, woe to the age [Use 2] wherein we live: for little knowledge resteth in the hearts of the greatest part. They know nothing of God, of his nature, of his essential properties, of the Trinity, of the Law, of the Gospel, what faith is, what justification, or repentance. They are ignorant how to worship God, though they be often taught: they remain ever the same men, ever ignorant: ever learning, but never coming to the knowledge of the truth. Two chief causes there are of this, the one in the mind, the other in the will. In the mind, impotency of understanding, they are dull to conceive the things of the Spirit. The wisdom of God is foolishness to them, as man's wisdom is foolishness to God, 1 Cor. 2. The other is in the will, they savor the things of the flesh wholly, they find no sweetness in the word, their hearts are put out of taste by worldly things. These, as they that are evil and blind by nature, so are they become worse by nurture and education, they are nuzled in ignorance all their youth, & for the most part all their life: parents be generally ignorant themselves, and no care is in them to have them instructed. Solomon saith, Teach a child, or train up a child in the way that he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it, Prov. 22, 6. He will both sooner apprehend it, and better keep that which is taught him. If this time be passed over, it is harder to learn afterward; the eyes being blinded and filled with the dust of earthly things, can discern nothing; and when such come to age, they utterly despise the things that belong to a better life. It is with us as it was with the Land of Egypt, it was overspread with darkness, only a small part, where the children of Israel were, being excepted: so hath ignorance overspread y^e greatest part of our land. For look upon very many places, they lie waste as a wilderness for want of builders, the harvest is great, but there is great want of Laborers to gather together the corn, Mat. 9, 37. They have blind guides set over them, that can do nothing to the sheep but fleece them, & they can say nothing to them, but Bring ye, or pay ye. If we cast our eyes upon such places as have able Teachers over them, having gifts sufficient to instruct them, yet many of them are idle without care and conscience of their duties: is it then to be wondered at, that the land is full of ignorance and empty of knowledge? Again, in such places where are able Ministers and willing to take any pains amongst the people according to the measure of grace afforded unto them, yet even there you shall find little or no knowledge at all; and where they have bread enough, they starve themselves and perish for hunger; and where they may have plenty they live in penury and misery, and want of all things. They have meat and drink offered unto them, but they will not reach out their hand to take the same, like to the sluggard, that hideth his hand in his bosom, and will not so much as bring it to his mouth again, Prov. 19, 24. Many there are, that do manifestly and openly oppose themselves against knowledge, and set themselves against seeking after it so far as they can or dare. This plainly showeth, that indeed they never had any true knowledge at all: and others albeit they do not directly oppose themselves against knowledge, yet in the mean season (which is all one) they have no love of it, neither any holy desire to come to knowledge. If we consider farther how empty our churches and seats are, it will appear that our ignorance must needs be very great. For how should such careless & rechesse persons have knowledge? I am persuaded, if these were well and thoroughly examined, they would be found beyond all measure blind and sottish, old and ignorant, worse then infants and little children. Knowledge of God is not natural, it is not borne and bred in us and with us: neither is it to be gotten in our days by extraordinary means: seeing therefore they use not the ordinary, it followeth that they are destitute of knowledge.

Another reason why men are so drowned in the sea of ignorance, is because though they hear much, yet they digest little or nothing at all: like to him that seeth meat before him but tasteth none of it. In the body, he that eateth much and digesteth nothing, cannot have his health, nor prosper: so is it in the soul; it may be these will hear two or three times in a quarter, but they never make conscience to meditate on that which they have heard, but let that slip which they have learned, and so indeed are never bettered by that which they hear.

Another reason why so much ignorance is among men, is, because they want exercising of themselves in the Scriptures: they apply themselves to no constant reading of them, or reasoning and conferring about them; and therefore it is not possible for them to have any sound and well-grounded knowledge in them at all. The Ministers may wast themselves like lights in the Tabernacle, yet these people will never attain to any knowledge. Some allege, that their callings are such as they give them no leisure to attend the Scriptures, or to spend any time in reading. But it seemeth strange to me, that men should find a time for all other business under the Sun, and yet not find any time to further their own salvation. How monstrous a thing is it, that they have time enough and enough for the body, but can find none at all for their souls? They can find time and leisure to provide wealth for themselves and their children, and yet carry poor starueling souls to the grave, suffering them from time to time to languish and to perish for want of nourishment. As these live in darkness and ignorance upon earth, so it shall be just with God to thrust them into utter darkness in hell.

But it may be objected, [Objection.] that the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 8, 2. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth. I answer, [Answ.] the Apostle meaneth a false persuasion of knowledge, whereby a man thinketh he hath some great matter in him: & therefore he addeth in the next words, Verse 2. If any man think that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. If knowledge puff up any, the fault is in the person or vain persuasion of the person, not in the gift of God. We must know therefore that the Scriptures belong to all, and that the knowledge of them is necessary to all. And who may exempt themselves from them? or who shall say, they belong not unto him? Shall Kings and Princes, and such as sit in the throne? No, though they have a multitude of business waiting upon them; and are many ways disturbed and distracted by State affairs, yet they must have the law of God with them, & read in it all the days of their life, that they may learn to fear the Lord their God, Deut. 17.18.19. Shall Captains and Governors in war and peace? No, for was not Joshua such an one? yet the Book of the Law must not depart out of his mouth, but he must meditate therein day and night, &c. For that he might make his way prosperous, and have good success, Josh. 1.8. Shall Noblemen and Gentlemen exempt themselves? No, not they neither: for the Eunuch a man of great authority under Candace Queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, while he was in his chariot, read the prophesy of Isaiah, to further himself thereby in knowledge, Acts 8, 27.28. and 17.11: also the Noblemen of Berca searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so which the Apostles preached. Who then may think themselves discharged? May the Ministers? No, they should be men of knowledge, and give attendance to reading above others, 1. Tim. 4, 13. May the people? No, it is a general precept given by Christ to them, to search the Scriptures, John 5, 39. and yet no doubt many among them were poor, and tradesmen: so Psal. 1, 2. Col. 3, 16. May such as are weak in judgment, and simple witted? No, the law of God was written to give wisdom to the simple, Psal. 19, 7: and the Proverbs were penned to give subtlety to the simple, and to the young man knowledge and discretion, Prov. 1, v. 4. May the young man defer the matter until age? No, he must season his young years with the knowledge of the Scriptures, Psal. 119, 9. 2 Tim. 3, 15. May they that are rich and wealthy be privileged from this? No, Abraham saith of the brethren of the rich man, They have Moses and the Prophets, let them hear them, Lu. 16, 29. It is in vain to be rich in the world, and not to have the word also to dwell richly in them, that so they may be rich in God. May women be freed frō this duty? No, the grandmother & the mother of Timothy taught him & trained him up in the Scriptures of a child, which could not be, if themselves had been without knowledge, 2 Tim. 1, 5. So then we may conclude, that all which live in y^e Church, and would be accounted members of the Church, whether they be Princes or subjects, Ministers or people, noble or vnnoble, high or low, learned or unlearned, young or old, rich or poor, masters or servants, men or women, one or other, all I say, ought to be endued with the knowledge of the ways of God.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it teacheth everyone of us to examine himself and his own heart, how far he is guilty of this sin of ignorance. It is the first degree or step of knowledge, for a man to know and acknowledge his own ignorance. For till we come to this to find our selves to live in ignorance, and to mourn and lament for it, it is impossible for us ever to attain to sound and perfect knowledge. [Object.] But some will say, How shall we attain to this knowledge which you speak of? [Answer.] I answer, the way is to exercise our selves in the reading of the Scriptures. He that would have water, must draw it out of the well: and he that would have knowledge, must draw it out of the fountain of the Scriptures. This doth Christ often point unto, in the Evangelists, stirring up men to read, and reprovng those that would not: as Math. 12, ver. 3. he said to the Pharisees, Have ye not read what David did? and verse 5. Have ye not read in the Law? and cha. 19, 4. likewise he said to the chief Priests & Scribes, Have ye never read, Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise, Math. 21, 16. Psal. 8, 2. and verse 42. he said, Did ye never read in the Scriptures, The stone which the builders refused, the same is become the head of the corner? and chap. 22, 3. he said to the Sadducees touching the resurrection from the dead, Have ye not read that which was spoken of God? So he speaketh to him that asked what he should do to inherit eternal life, Luk. 10, 26. What is written in the Law? how readest thou? And Abraham saith to the rich glutton, They have Moses & the Prophets, they have their writings among them. And speaking of the destruction of Jerusalem, Who so readeth let him understand, Math. 24, 15. The contrary, when we do not and will not read and obey this commandment so often repeated and vehemently urged, is the cause of error and heresy, of evil, of discomfort, and of all profaneness, Acts 13, 27. Mark. 12, 24.

Secondly, such as would have the true and saving knowledge, must first of all lay before him the grounds and principles of Christian religion: otherwise whatsoever he knoweth, he shall know nothing as he ought to know, like him that would build without a foundation, Heb. 6, 1.

Thirdly, earnest prayer to God for the help of his holy Spirit to assist him, and to teach him how to profit aright by the reading of the Scriptures. For he that is the author of them, best knoweth how to give us understanding to edify our selves by them in our most holy faith. And hereby we shall learn more then such as only meddle with the Scriptures, and never practice this duty of prayer, neither crave a blessing of him upon their labors.

Lastly, conference with others, to minister help and comfort one to another. This did the two Disciples use going to Emmaus, who talked together of all those things which had happened touching Christ: they reasoned of his passion and suffering, and they are farther instructed in the truth of the matter, and in the understanding of the Scriptures. This was the blessing of God upon their practicing & performing of this duty. If we reason soberly & reverently, Christ Jesus will come among us, and be present with us by the grace of his Spirit, and by his blessing of our endeavors, which ought to be an encouragement to the same.

30 But the soul that doth ought presumptuously, whether he be borne in the Land, or a stranger, the same reproacheth the Lord; and that soul shall be cut off from his people, 31 Because he hath despised the word of the Lord, and hath broken his commandment, that soul shall utterly be cut off: his iniquity shall be upon him.

Hitherto we have spoken of the sin of ignorance: now of presumption and voluntary sins, which are said in the original to be committed with an high hand, that is, proudly, scornfully, arrogantly, despitefully, and desperately against God. And therefore it is said, that he reproacheth the Lord, and hath broken his covenant, such a one must be cut off from his people. This cutting off for iniquity, some understand of excommunication by the censure of the Church; others, of killing by the sword of the Magistrate: but which way soever it be taken, it showeth the greatness of this crime. And because there is no kind of sacrifice set down for the expiation of this sin, some do hold, that it figureth out the sin against the holy Ghost, which sin being unpardonable, Math. 12, 32. 1 John. 5, 16, there remaineth no sacrifice for it, but a certain looking for of judgment and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries, Heb. 10, 26, 27. Howbeit, I rather think, that no sacrifice is expressed, because there is no new addition prescribed touching any sacrifice, as there is of the other, because this is already handled in the book of Leviticus, chap. 6, 2, &c. And this sin is opposed against the sin of ignorance: but all sins of presumption are not the sin against the holy Ghost. God forbid, we should so entangle men's consciences, and hold all presumptuous sins to be that unpardonable sin. Neither can I be of their opinion, that think God would have no sacrifice offered for such sins, lest the sacrifices should wax vile and contemptible, and men should thereby be encouraged to give themselves over to commit sin with greediness, and never regard whether they sin ignorantly or presumptuously. It is no encouragement to sin of ignorance, because the means is set down to be cleansed of it. And who will willingly wound himself, albeit he have a Physician that can cure it?

From hence we may gather a difference between sin and sin: all break the law and deserve eternal death, Ezek. 18, 4. Rom. 6, 23. Nevertheless some are greater and some are lesser. There are therefore of sins sundry sorts, Jude, verse 22, 23. Hence it is, that sin is divided diverse ways; either it is original, which we draw from our parents, and bring with us into the world: this is an hereditary sin, it is the inheritance that all parents bequeathe unto their children, as Psal. 51, 5. Ro. 5, 14. Or else it is actual, which is a fruit of the former; such are evil thoughts, words, and works, such as agree not with the law of God. This distinction is proved, Rom. 5, 14, and 7, 20. and 9.11. Again, there is a raging and reigning sin, when the sinner maketh no resistance by the grace of the Spirit, Rom. 6, 12, and 1 John 3, 8. He that committeth sin, to wit, of set purpose, and delighteth therein, is of the devil: it is so called, because we foster and cherish it, and become bondslaves unto it, and likewise because it hath rule over man, & carrieth him headlong to destruction. Such are all sins in the unregenerate, and so continue till there be a new birth; and some also in the regenerate in their slidings and fallings against their conscience: and there is also a sin not reigning, which the sinner repelleth and resisteth by the grace of the Spirit, & daily reneweth his repentance for them. Such are the sins of ignorance, omission, and infirmity which remain in the regenerate so long as they live, which they acknowledge, bewail, hate, and resist, and pray daily that they may be forgiven them, saying, Forgive us our debts, 1 John 1, 8. Rom. 7, 17, and 8, 1. Many other such differences of sins might be noted, but these are sufficient to show that there is difference between sin and sin.

And no marvel, because the commandments [Reason 1] of God are not alike, but some are greter and some lesser. The laws of the first Table are called, the first and great commandment, Math. 22, 38, and do concern the Lord himself. The laws of the second are inferior to these, as they that concern our brethren like to our selves.

Secondly, there is great difference in the [Reason 2] manner of sinning; some sin ignorantly, some wittingly, Psal. 19, 12, 13. 1 Tim. 1, 13. Some are principal and ringleaders in the sin, others are only accessories; some are only in thought, others in deed; some offend of malice, some offend of weakness; some commit sin; others, besides this, have pleasure in them that do them, Rom. 1, 32.

Thirdly, in respect of God himself, all sins [Reason 3] do not alike dishonor him, neither is his wrath kindled alike against all; some are desperate sinners that will not be reclaimed, and despite the Spirit of grace, with whom the Lord cannot but be more offended then with such as are humbled for their sin.

This difference serveth to condemn such [Use 1] as make all sins equal, none greater or lesser then others, none before or after other. True it is, the Church of Rome lay this error to our charge (as also they falsely do many other) as if we were of the sect of the Stoics, holding an absurd opinion touching y^t absurd doctrine of the equality of all sins: which showeth that they are far spent and drawn dry, and cannot charge us with true crimes, when they are constrained to object against us such gross opinions as we detest and condemn, & have confuted more then they, both in Schools and Pulpets. What errors and heresies, think you, will these men be afraid to broch against us among their own disciples, that take up all things upon trust at the second hand? and what imputations will they not dare to lay upon us in their Sermons, which they know shall never come to be examined (forasmuch as their hearers are forbidden to read any of our writings) when they blush not, neither are ashamed to publish to the view of the whole world such open and manifest untruths?

[Object.] But they object, that we teach all sins to be mortal and to deserve death, even the least of them. [Answer.] I answer, we teach no other doctrine then the Scripture teacheth us, Rom. 6, 21, 23. I am. 2, 10. Nevertheless it followeth not by any good consequent, that though every sin in God's justice be adjudged worthy of eternal death, that therefore it doth equally deserve it. See more of this, chap. 19.

[Use 2] Secondly, from this doctrine received, it followeth, that the punishments of hell are diverse also, according to the different desert of sin, Luk. 12, 47, 48. Math. 23, 15, and 11, 22, 24. They that break the law and teach others to do the like, are twofold more the children of hell then others. They are the children of hell that transgress the law, but they that lay a stumbling block before others, and draw them out of the way, are guilty of a farther sin, and consequently of a greater punishment. Sodom shall be cast into hell, but Capernaum shall descend deeper and suffer more. This must we lay to our hearts, forasmuch as we are like to Capernaum not to Sodom. Every man must receive at the last day according to his evil works: but God's judgments should not be right, if he did judge sins to be equal, and punish sins equally. On the other side, we may conclude, that there are degrees of glory in the kingdom of heaven; which serveth to stir us up to labor to out-go and out-strippe others, considering that we shall receive a greater reward. It is a point serving to animate and encourage all men in well-doing, to know that the Magistrate shall receive according to his care, the Minister according to his pains, and everyone according to his duty and obedience in the life to come.

[Use 3] Lastly, hence is a direction for Magistrates, seeing offenses are different, there ought to be a difference in punishment of malefactors. All laws should not be written with blood, neither all punishments take away life. But if lesser sins should be punished sharply, & great more remissly, it were against the rule of reason and the law of equity. Hence it is, that Christ teacheth, that among the Courts of the Jews, they always punished according to the quality of the offense, and did not make an equality among offenders, Mat. 5, verse 22.

[Because he hath despised the word of the Lord, and hath broken his covenant, &c.] Here is the description of this sin: whereby we see whereunto it tendeth being once entertained.

[Doctrine.] We learn from hence, that men are come to the height of sin, when they commit sin boldly and boastingly, proudly, and presumptuously, Isaiah 3, 9. Numb. 25, 6. 1 Sam. 16, 22. Ier. 3, 3. Prov. 2, 14. The reasons.

[Reason 1] For this manner of sinning is without any sign of grace, & is done in contempt of God and his laws, as we see in this place.

[Reason 2] Secondly, this kind of sinning doth cry to heaven and calleth down judgment, so that he cannot but punish it severely, Gen. 18, ver. 20, 21.

This reproveth the sins of our times, for [Use 1] as we live in the light of grace, so we are come to the light of sin, because some maintain sin, and others brag & boast of those sins that they have committed, and greatly delight in them, Psal. 52, 3, 4. Isaiah 1, 23. 2 Pet. 2, 15. The sin of these men is so much the greater, because here we have the coupling and combining of two sins together, sin and the love of sin. Where there are two strong poisons mixed together, there the party is in great danger that drinketh of that potion: so it is in this case, two sins being joined in one, sin, & impudency in sinning, that person is much more guilty. This boldness and impudency is also accompanied with impenitency, for certainly, he that sinneth with an high hand and with a proud heart, cannot repent and leave his sin, he cannot be sorry for it and turn unto God, but lieth under a great measure and degree of evil.

Secondly, let such as are guilty of these bold [Use 2] and presumptuous sins, break them off by true repentance and by reforming such as are committed to their charge. For every sin must be repented off: but greater sins must have greater repentance for them: therefore we should labor to repent of all, whether they be moe or few, greater or less, once committed or often, that so God may pass by us whē his judgments run through the world. Take heed therefore of presumptuous sins. Some are suddenly overtaken, these sin, but not so greatly as they that run willfully and violently into evil. It is an evil to take the Name of God in vain, though it be in heat and in haste howsoever; but it is worse to swear and blaspheme in cold blood, in common talk, & that without remorse. The corrupt affection in these is worse then the action of sin. Such as once fall into drunkenness cannot be excused; but they sin doubly and trebly that delight in drunkenness, & haunt drunken houses, and keep drunken company, and nourish all occasions to bring themselves to commit sin upon sin. So it may be said, touching the breach of the Sabbath, he sinneth that pretendeth some necessity of some great business, and that he is unwilling to absent himself frō the house of God, and doth it sildome; but he that maketh a common practice of profaning the Lord's day, sometimes by saying at home in his chamber, sometimes by walking abroad in his fields, sometimes by lying in an alehouse, sometimes by sitting at tables & cards, do offend much more and come into the number of presumptuous sinners. [Object.] But some peradventure will ask the question, How may a man know whether he sin with an high hand, whether he be come to the height of sin, to sin presumptuously? To this I answer: [Answ.] it is no hard matter to discern thy estate by these notes.

First, whosoever disliketh and hateth the word of God, may justly fear and suspect himself. For he that cannot patiently endure to read it, or to hear it read or preached, because it layeth open his sin, and as a true glass maketh his corruptions manifestly to appear, he certainly is a bold and presumptuous sinner. So long as a man is content to submit himself to God's ordinance, and to be willing to hear his sins reprov'd, so long there is hope of such a sinner. Again, they sin purposely, and proudly, and presumptuously, that are offended either with the Minister or with a private friend that reproveth him for his sins. These are lovers of their sins and are resolved to dwell in them, because they hate those that love them, and out of love admonish them of their evil ways. And if peradventure they have failed in the manner of their reproof, these by & by conceive that they have sinned more in reprov'g, then themselves in committing the act it self. Thirdly, they are passing apace to the height of sin, that excuse and lessen their sins, or else defend them: such as say, it is no such great matter that they have done. Lastly, they are grievous sinners sapped in them, that make no use of the crosses and afflictions that God sendeth upon them: that are no whit bettered, or reformed, or humbled by his judgments.

[Use 3] Lastly, it is our duty to pray unto God that we may be kept and preserved from this high measure of sin, Psal. 19, 13. The Prophet prayeth to the Lord to keep him from presumptuous sins. This showeth to us, that we are ready to fall into them. And what do they but publish this as with a loud voice, that cry out that God is merciful, and thereupon take occasion to go forward, presuming of his mercy? We should be careful to beg from God his grace, that we may resist sin in the beginning, lest our hearts be hardened by it, Heb. 3, 13, and we thereby be drawn in the end to make no conscience of sin. If any ask how we may know, whether we be willing to leave sin and resist it in the beginning? I answer, we may examine our selves by the contrary rules to the former. If a man make the law of God his delight, and can therefore love it, & make much of it, because it maketh his sins manifest unto himself, he certainly is no lover of his sins. Thus it was with Hezekiah, when he had received an heavy threatening of an heavy judgment from the mouth of God, he submitted himself, and said to the Prophet, The word of the Lord is good, which thou hast spoken. Secondly, he loveth not his sins that loveth him that reproveth him for his sins. He that embraceth that Minister or that brother that telleth him of his corruptions, certainly he is not determin'd to embrace and entertain his sins. Thirdly, he that is so far from excusing of his sins, that he is ready to accuse himself; and he that is so far from defending and maintaining them, that he laboreth to reconcile himself to God, and to have a clear conscience toward God and man, he doubtless shall not need to fear to come to the height of sin. Lastly, he declareth that he is not besotted with the love of his sins, that loveth God that chastiseth him, even for his chastisements sake: who, so soon as any cross befalleth unto him, presently runneth home to his own heart, and condemneth his sin, and judgeth himself, and layeth all upon himself, as justly befallen him for his sins. If these things be found in us, we may rejoice and be glad, that albeit we cannot but commit the act of sin, yet we keep our hearts and souls from delighting in sin and the affecting thereof. Thus we may acquit our selves of a great deal of the guilt of sin, albeit not of the outward act it self, by seeking the asswaging and lessening of it.

33 And they that found him gathering sticks, brought him unto Moses and Aaron, and unto all the Congregation.

Here followeth an example of God's judgment upon him that gathered sticks on the Sabbath day. This is not to be considered in it self only, but as it dependeth upon the words immediately going before, as a reason or an example of that law, that whosoever doth anything presumptuously or with an high hand, shall die the death: and albeit it be set down after it, yet I take it to have been done before it. The Israelites had found out a man that had sinned, not of ignorance, or one that gathered sticks upon necessity, but they said to Moses, as the Pharisees did to Christ, touching the woman taken in adultery; We found her in the very act; so did they take this breaker of the Sabbath, in the very act of gathering sticks, who rushed desperately against the law, as a Ship that dasheth it self in pieces against a Rock, for he sinned in contempt of God and his ordinances. The Lord had delivered his law to all Israel, and repeated the same again, he had commanded it carefully to be kept, and none to go out of his place to gather Manna upon that day, Exod. 16, 29. The observation of this day was the establishing of the whole law, and the breach of it, a destroying of the whole worship of God. This did this wicked person know well enough, but he nevertheless would go out of his place. God hath said, they should not kindle a fire throughout their generations that day, neither could he be ignorant of it, yet he would kindle a fire to provoke God to anger against him. In this we see his sin, and the manner of it, he is brought to Moses, and is put in ward. Moses asketh counsel of God, what should be done with him: God appointeth him for examples sake, to be stoned to death, which is done accordingly. [Object.] But this may seem a small offense, he did not bear any great burden on the Sabbath, nor labor in the works of his calling, neither offend in any great matter, he did only gather a bundle of sticks and that (as it should seem) but once, he did not make any practice of it, [Answer.] I answer, we must consider, not only the deed done, but also the manner of doing; he did it to despise and despite God, a sin in whomsoever, worthy of no less punishment then death it self.

[Doctrine.] We learn from hence, that every sin is so much the greater, by how much less the thing is for which men sin. I say, the less the thing is for which a man will sin and transgress the law of God, the greater always is his sin. A man would think it nothing to pick up a few sticks, but the less it was, the greater was his contempt of God, that he would run into the breach of the law, and provoke the wrath of God for it. Thus we might speak of the sin of our first parents: God tried their obedience in abstaining from the fruit of one tree, & yet they would taste thereof, and thereby ruined themselves and all their posterity. The matter wherein they sinned, was small, but the sin thereby was made the greater. Esau is noted in holy Scripture for his profaneness, w^c was shown in this, that for one mess of broth he sold his birthright, Gen. 25, 33. Heb. 12, 16. So is it spoken of Judas, that for thirty shekels he sold his Master, and betrayed the Lord of life into the hands of sinners, Mat. 26, 15. & 27, 5. A goodly price at which he (that is God of heaven and earth, & heir of all things) was valued, saith the Prophet Zacharias, ch. 11, 13. The less the reward was, the greater was his iniquity: for thereby he made it manifest at how vile, how base and small a price our Lord Jesus Christ the Savior of the world was valued & esteemed by him. The like we might say of the sin of the Jews, when they denied the holy one and the just, & desired a murderer to be granted unto them at such time as Pilate was determined to let him go, Acts 3, 13, 14. They weighed him & Barabbas together in the balance, & they preferred him that was a thief & a robber, John 18, 40. a seditious fellow, Lu. 23, 25. who had also committed murder in the insurrection, Mar. 15, 6. Him I say, they preferred before the Lord Jesus. This might farther be proved out of other places, which I only point out, Prov. 28, 21. Ezek. 13, 19. Amos 2, 6. The reasons.

[Reason 1] First, this argueth plainly to their faces, that such persons are destitute of the fear of God and man, that they dare sin and dishonor God for so small and abject a thing. The smaller the thing is, the greater is the contempt. There are commonly two things that draw men to sin, either the fear of some evil that they would avoid, or else desire of some good that they would enjoy. Now doubtless there is but a small measure of the grace of GOD, whensoever men are drawn to transgress for such slight and slender occasions: Secondly, [Reason 2] it argueth a man's heart to be most corrupt, when he will not stick to sin and offend God for a small thing, and it warranteth others to judge the same man to be very wicked, and to presume he will much rather sin and much more offend for a greater thing, that is so easily brought to commit sin for every trifle of little or no value. He that will pervert justice for a few morsels of bread, will sooner do it for many pieces of gold: and they that will sell the poor for a pair of shoes, will make no bones to do it for a brace of angels. The uses follow.

This convinceth many, that they live under [Use 1] a greater guilt of sin then they are aware of, for they have an erroneous judgment of themselves; they think the less the matter is wherein they sin, the less is their sin, whereas indeed it is for the most part the quite contrary, for the less the thing is for which we choose to sin, the greater is our sin. He that will lie and face, swear & forswear for a small thing, and upon every occasion, certainly God will judge him more severely for it, then he will do those that have had some greater cause to do it, albeit no cause can excuse it wholly. So for a man to rob another, where are but small things to be had, he offendeth more thē others that rob for great store of gold and silver: and the reason is, because it argueth greater contempt of God, and lesser regard of his displeasure and of his law, it bewrayeth greater corruption of his heart, and less love of justice and righteousness: and besides, though he took but little, yet he would have takē more, if more had been to be taken, according to the saying of our Savior, He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much, Lu. 16, 10. Again, many a man doth abuse the Sabbath day (which is the point here in question) by walking abroad in the fields, or by following his base pleasures, perhaps he lieth asleep at home, or goeth to the alehouse, or sitteth at cards; such a one worketh not with his hands in his calling, he goeth not to plough, he doth not buy and sell, n••ertheles he offendeth God more, and his heart is more corrupt then he that walketh and worketh in his calling for his necessity.

But it may be objected, [Object.] that then a man were as good offend and transgress for great things as for small. To this I answer, [Answ.] that it is an evil and false consequent: he that so reasoneth, declareth himself to be most corrupt & sinful: for whether a man sin for much or for little, he provoketh God against himself both ways, and therefore both are to be shunned. Everyone in his several place ought rather to reason thus, I may sin against God and offend him in a small thing as well as in a great, and oftentimes move him unto anger more in a smaller than in a greater, therefore I will make conscience of both, I will avoid all kind of evil, I will walk uprightly; and work righteousness in his sight. So shall we be sure to reap the benefit and comfort of it here after in the life to come.

[Use 2] Secondly, it admonisheth everyone of us that we should labor to have such good hearts so sanctified, that not the greatest provocations of pleasure, of profit, of honor, of sin, or anything whatsoever should provoke us to sin; if not the greatest, then not the less; and if not the less, then not the least of all. For as he that withstandeth the greatest evils, showeth himself to have the greatest measure of grace: so he that is persuaded and provoked by small things to sin, it argueth him to have the greater corruption and hardness of heart, and therefore though we cannot be without sin, (for there is no man that sinneth not,) yet we should labor to make our sins the less sinful, and our selves the less sinners: which we shall do, if we take heed we be not provoked to sin by small things of little value. Whosoever will sin for a little, he may despair with himself of any great matter, and may well think that he shall never be able to restrain himself to any purpose, but in short time he shall be brought to sin in far greater things. It is the policy of Satan to be content to draw men only to little sins, and to let them continue long in them: for he is that old and subtle serpent, that knoweth there is more danger for the most part in little sins than in greater sins. A mote is not perceived in the eye, whē a great beam cannot be hid: and though a mote be discerned, yet because it is little, it is let alone, the danger of it is thought to be little or nothing. Touching great sins, all men will readily acknowledge and confess them to be sins; whereas little sins make them think them to be no sins, or that they may safely suffer them to remain & continue in them without any danger. Hence it is, that men are so much given to flatter themselves and to think all is well with them, because they find others tainted with greater sins than themselves, as it was with the Pharisee, Luke 18, whereas an enemy neglected and contemned, doth oftentimes more hurt than such a one as we are more watchful over.

[Use 3] Lastly, it reproveth those that give scope and liberty to themselves to follow some sins, because they are little in their eyes. Hence it is, that Solomon bringeth in the sluggard, saying, A little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep, Prov. 6, 10. and 24, 33. So it is with every sinner, he crieth out, a little more sin, a little more evil; the young man, a little more daliance; the covetous person, a little more riches and care: the oppressor, a little more wrong: the blasphemer, one oath more: the drunkard crieth for a little more drink, one pot more is not so much: that is, they persuade themselves they may live in these sins because they are little, or they may add some little more to them without any great danger. But many a little maketh a great deal, every drop of rain helpeth to make the flood, and every corn to fill up the measure; and as a little spark kindleth much wood and maketh a great fire: so a little added to sin, and to that little a little more, maketh the sin to be exceeding sinful, and the sinner a great sinner before the LORD our GOD.

Moreover, we must understand that God forbiddeth the least sins as well as the greatest; and the Prophet reproveth the hypocrites of his time, who though they would not eat of polluted or unclean flesh, yet the broth thereof was found in their vessels, Isaiah 65, 4: and the Apostle delivereth this precept, Abstain from all appearance of evil, 1 Thess. 5, 22. If Satan can draw Cain to hate his brother, he will quickly draw him to kill him. If he can entice Achan to covet the silver and gold which he saw, it will not be long before he move him to take them away; and therefore in the confession of his sin he joineth them together, I coveted and conveyed them away. The Cockatrice eggs are venomous and hurtful, not only to eat, but to tread upon them, and to be sprinkled with them, Isaiah 59, 5. So the least meddling with evil is contagious and bringeth infection. Therefore the Apostle willeth to hate the very garment spotted with the flesh, Jude, ver. 23. The smallest sins are to be shunned. Our first parents were forbidden not only to eat of the forbidden fruit, but to touch it, as appeareth by the confession of the woman. It behooveth us therefore to labor for spiritual wisdom that we may be able to see his policy, and for spiritual strength to withstand his strength and provocations, and by these two helps we shall be sure to keep our selves free from the guilt of many sins. And that we may the better do so, two things are required of us most necessary for this purpose, the fear of God and the love of God. If we get into our hearts the fear of God, who can destroy both body and soul in hell, we shall easily overcome all other fear of evil, the greater will prevail over the less; neither the smallest nor the greatest delights and desires of the world, shall cause us to offend him, nor provoke us or prevail with us to cause us to sin against him, because his fear doth keep and restrain us. But, where the fear of God is not, there is an easy lapse into all evil, Gen. 20, 11.

Again, we must have the love of God in us. This will cause us to love him better than our selves, and make us loath to offend him though we might get the greatest gain and commodity by it, much less for small and base things. We should account it, if we love him indeed, a more miserable thing than hell it self, to offend him.

Let us all therefore labor for these two, the fear and the love of God, to have them settled in our hearts; these are the strongest of all other passions.

34 And they put him in ward, because it was not declared what should be done to him.

35 And the Lord said unto Moses, the man shall be surely put to death; all the Congregation shall stone him with stones without the Campe.

We saw before the sin of him that brake the Sabbath: now we may behold how he is first put in ward until the will of God were farther known; then he is commanded to be stoned with stones, and by whom? by all the Congregation. This was an ordinary kind of punishment among the Jews, and also among some of the Gentiles. Neither had they any set persons appointed to be executioners and ministers of justice, as now is usual in our days, but it stood merely at the pleasure of Princes & Judges and others officers to name and assign sometimes one and sometimes another, and sometimes many; and it was done without any note of infamy. For it was no more reproach to execute a malefactor, then to condemn him. Neither were they of the baser, but of the better sort that were sometimes singled out for this purpose, Deut. 13, 9, 10.1, Sam. 22, 17, 18. Samuel himself hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord, 1 Sam. 15, 33.1, King. 2, 31, 34. Judge. 8, 20, 21. Exod. 32, 29. The like might be said of Phinehas that stood up and executed judgment, Psal. 106, 30. and of Elijah, who slew the Priests of Baal, 1 King. 18, 40. This was the order among the Hebrews: but now such persons deputed for executions are commonly evilly spoken off, & of base account; first, because the common sort that commonly offend, are commonly afraid at the sight of them, and their hearts arise against them, and therefore can hardly meet them in the streets, but they set themselves against them. And no man would willingly be punished for his offenses. Thus they hope, if there were no executioner, they should escape and not be executed. Now because the sight of such officers bringeth to their remembrance their own offenses, therefore they cannot abide them, as fearing that in the end they may also take their lives from them. Thus they hate his person more then their own evil: although it be not the person, but their own mischief & misdemeanor that taketh away their lives. Secondly, such persons are of evil note, because many of them lead a wicked & profane life, and are many times as evil as those whom they execute. The office doth not defile them, but rather they defile the office: it is they that make the office odious, not the office them.

But to pass this over, in the punishment executed upon this person that brake the Sabbath, [Doctrine] we learn that the Lord will punish wicked men, not only for sins of injustice, but for sins of ungodliness: not only for the breach of the second Table, but for breach also of the first Table, Exod. 20, 5, 7, and 31, 13, 14, and 32, 10. Ier. 10, 25. Ezek. 20, 13, 21. Neh. 13, 15, 18. Ier. 17, 29. Levite. 24, 11, 12, 14, 15. Deut. 13, 9, 10. This is farther to be strengthened with reason.

First, true godliness and religion have the [Reason 1] promises of the blessings of this life and of the life to come, 1 Tim. 4, 8. Deut. 28, 1, 2, 3, 4, &c. then it will follow on the contrary, that impiety and ungodliness have the curses & plagues both of the one and the other due unto them. For it were great injustice in God, if he should reward the works of piety and religion, and should not as well punish the works of impiety and profaneness.

Secondly, such works are committed directly [Reason 2] and immediately against the person of God himself, but the works of unrighteousness are against men. He is more severely punished that flieth in the Princes face & woundeth him, then he that hurteth any of his servants. Such as with an high hand break the first Table, do as it were fly in God's face and rebel against them; such as transgress the second, hurt some of his servants. So then, when we fall to practice against his own person or his honor, there is great reason to think he will visit for those especially, and therefore such laws are called, the first and great commādement, Math. 22, 36, 38.

Thirdly, such works of impiety are the causes [Reason 3] of wrong, injustice, hatred, and of all unrighteousness. The breach of the first Table procureth the breach of the second, Rom.

1, 21, 22, 23. Because they regarded not to know God, he gave them over to vile affections. When he gave them up to uncleanness, it was a punishment of their unthankfulness and not honoring of him.

The uses follow. Such are first of all reprov'd [Use 1] as are accounted civil honest men in the world and reputed unblameable among their neighbors. I do not mean that they are to be reprov'd for their civility and honesty, which are not to be condemn'd in themselves (for they are good,) but such as content themselves with an outward civil carriage among men, and to be praised of them, having no fear of God, or care of religion in them: but all their care and conscience is to deal justly with men, and in the mean season wholly neglect their duty to God; these are liable to God's judgments, as well as those that are altogether profane and wicked. These are they that have no care to sanctify the Sabbath, no delight in prayer, no hungering & thirsting after knowledge, but remain in blindness & ignorance, careless in frequenting the hearing of the word, and in receiving of the Sacraments. They will boast, they love the Church as well as any of their neighbors, but small fruits appear of their going thither, or of their coming from thence. They think all is well enough, if they be just in their outward dealings: they make account that they are not to be blamed, and they stand in fear of no judgments of God at all. So it was with the rich man, Math. 19, 20. he thought he had done all even from his youth, that he lacked nothing: but being tried by the first commandment, whether he did love God above all, he plainly descried that his civil honesty was mere hypocrisy, and his fulfilling of the law no better then a flattering of himself. In like manner do such men much deceive themselves, and are like to a subject whose whole care is to deal justly and uprightly with his fellows, but utterly neglecteth his duty to his Prince, and practiseth rebellion against him all his life. If such a man deal justly among other men, and will not commit adultery or murder by any means; tell me in reason, can all this his care help him, when he shall be convicted for high treason against his Prince? Certainly this just and upright carriage toward the people shall stand him in little stead. Likewise many men in all places do live continually in the practice of rebellion against the person of God himself, howsoever they seem very careful and conscionable of their duty toward men, yet God will find them out for the contempt of him. For they are grown to this profaneness, What need so much preaching? or so much hearing? and so they begin to scorn and scoff at those that live in the obedience of these holy duties. Let me tell these, though they be never so just in their conversation, doing no wrong, paying all mē, showing mercy to them that need, yet they lie open, notwithstanding all these, to God's judgments for want of the true power of religion. If thou shouldst see a man live in the gross sins of the second Table, in murder, adultery, robbery, drunkenness, false witness-bearing, and the like, wouldst y^u not think him worthy to be plagued by the hand of God? why then should we think that such as live in y^e breaches of the first Table (more gross thē these) which have the first place, are not liable to judgment, as well, or rather much more then the other?

[Use 2] Secondly, this teacheth all such as have any rule over others, to be careful to teach such as are under them in the ways of godliness, that they may know the Father to be true God, & him whom he hath sent Jesus Christ, John 17, 3. First, it is the duty of Princes and Magistrates to have a great care of true religion, that God be faithfully served by their people. It is not enough for them to provide that they may have a people faithful and loyal to themselves, except they be also faithful to God. The godly kings are commended for their care in advancing the glory of God, and for their zeal in causing all the people committed to their charge to be instructed. It were easy to enlarge this by the examples of David, of Asa, of Jehoshaphat, of Hezekiah, and Josiah: they made a covenant with God to serve him themselves, and to cause him to be served of their people. Asa commanded Judah to serve the Lord of their fathers, and to do the law and the commandments, that whosoever would not seek the Lord, whether he were small or great, whether man or woman, should be put to death, 2 Chron 14, 4, and 15, 13. Deut. 17, 19. 2 Kings 23, 2, 3. 2 Chron. 19, 7, 8, 9. Thus it ought to be with all fathers and masters, they must teach their children & servants, that they may know the Lord, and set their hope in him, & not forget his works, but keep his comandements, Psal. 78, 6, 7, & 4, 9, and 11, 19, 21. Eph. 6, 4. Eli the Priest of the Lord is first threatened, and afterward punished for neglect of this duty, 1 Sam. 2, and 3. The example is written for our instruction, that we should beware of the like transgression.

Thirdly, see the fearful condition of many [Use 3] men of all sorts, for they live under a fearful judgment of God, and yet do not see it, because through the whole course of their lives, they practice the works of impiety, living in palpable ignorance, in contempt of the Word, Sabbath, and Sacraments. If a man should do nothing but practice treason and rebellion against the King, despising his word and contemning his Proclamations, in what a fearful condition would we account him to be? And when the King himself should appoint a day, wherein he would have his own person specially attended and wholly waited upon, if his household servants should refuse to give him any attendance, but wait worse upon him that day then any other, and give themselves wholly to attend upon their own pleasures, would he not think himself notably abused, and discharge such of his service? and were they not sure to run into his displeasure, and to procure judgment upon themselves?

Notwithstanding, this is the state of many among us. God hath commanded us to reverence his Name, his Sanctuary, his Sabbath, his Word, his Ministry; if then we shall dare to swear & blaspheme openly, to reject the word of God, and to abuse the Sabbath by following after our pleasures and profits, our sports and recreations, and thereby practice after a sort against the person of GOD himself, do they not provoke me to my face, saith the Lord, and shall they go unpunished? No certainly, they shall not, his judgments shall overtake them for these things.

God hath ordained and enacted as by a solemn Proclamation, that all sorts that profess themselves his servants, should wait upon him on the Sabbath; he is then determined to set forth the greatness of his glorious Name, and the riches of his house, and y^e might of his power, and the honor of his Majesty: it is his will and pleasure that men, women, & children should assemble together before him to give him attendance: shall we answer with Korah and his company in the next chapter, We will not come up? Numb. 16, 14. And albeit we be not so impudent and shameless to say so, yet it is little better, because we do not appear before him. Nay we serve our selves by walking in our own ways, and many serve Satan the enemy of God, by following his ways with greediness. If we give up our selves to our pleasures and profits, we serve our selves: when we give up our selves to our sins, and delight in drunkenness and such like wickedness upon that day, we serve the devil. And in truth, let any man mark it, he shall see that God is no day worse served of the common sort, then upon his own holy day, so that when he requireth all our service, he can get little or none at all at our hands.

[Use 4] Lastly, let no man flatter himself in performance of duties unto men, and think himself in good case because he liveth vnblameably in the eyes of y^e world. We must learn to deny not only worldly lusts, but all ungodliness: and we must live not only soberly & righteously, but also godly in this present world, Titus 2, 12. Christ gave himself for this purpose, to purge us from all iniquity, and to purify us to be a peculiar people unto himself, zealous of all good works. And indeed the sins of the first Table are the greatest & most heinous sins, and deserve the greatest plagues of God, and most fearful condemnation: he will reward with everlasting fire, not only such as know not their duties to men, but such as know not God, neither obey the Gospel of Jesus Christ, 2 Thess. 1, 8. And this is noted as a main cause of the destruction of the old world, to wit, disobedience to the word, 1 Pet. 3, 20. When the Israelitish woman's son whose father was an Egyptian, blasphemed the Name of the Lord, and as it were thrust him through with horrible curses, Levite. 24, 11. he is commanded to be put to death and stoned, verse 16, 23. These sins are everywhere little thought upon, and supposed to be either no sins at all, or very little ones. But man's judgment is corrupt in the matters of God, except we look upon sin with the light of the Scripture: and if we shall parallel the sins of the first Table with the sins of the second in equal degree, the greatest of the one with the grossest of the other, & both done in knowledge alike, and ignorance with ignorance, comparing deeds with deeds, words with words, & thoughts with thoughts; the breaches of the law being thus considered, are far greater against the first then against the second Table, because they are committed immediately against the person of the great God, as rebellion against the person of a Prince is greater thē the insurrection against another: the murdering of a Prince more thē of many others, 2 Sam. 18, 3. See then from hence, the woeful abuse of our sinful times & profane people. Such as would seem to make conscience of stealing, of whoring, of robbing, and false witnessing in judgment, and hold them unworthy to live upon the earth that commit these things: mark their ways in matters that concern the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth; and you shall evidently perceive, they think it no evil or enormity to be ignorant of GOD and his word, to maintain superstition and set up human traditions, to abuse his Name by cursed oaths, to profane his Sabbath by cursed or corrupt works, to despise his Word, and to refuse his Sacraments. These are so ordinarily, so openly, so impudently committed with bold, nay with brazen faces, and defended also by those that do them, as if we would despite God to his face, and thrust him out of his kingdom and from the government of the world. I will tell you what I have observed by the common course of the world, that moe perish through ignorance and profaneness, then do by all the deeds of unrighteousness. Satan prevaieth more among the people by bringing them to a profane life, and keeping them in sottishness and blindness touching the will of God, then by murder, whoredom, and theft laid together. I know I speak this to many that have most wretched and swinish hearts, but no ears to hear: and therefore regard their own pleasures more then they do their salvation.

These are the dangerous days spoken off by the Apostle, 2. Tim. 3, 1, 4, 5. God in his mercy amend them: if not, let them that be ignorant, be ignorant still, 1 Cor. 14, 38. and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still, Revel. 22, 11. that so they may fill up the measure of their sins, Math. 23, 32.

It may seem strange at the first, that they should consult with God what to do with this profane person: seeing the Law had appointed death for him that transgressed this commandment, Exod. 31, 14. and 35, 2. why then did they enquire, or wherefore did they put him in mind to know what should be done unto him? Some answer, that albeit God had decreed that such should be punished, yet he had not declared by any law the kind of punishment: and therefore they asked how he should be punished, as for example, whether he should be hanged on a tree, or burned with fire, or stoned with stones, or stricken with the sword. But this answer cannot satisfy me: for when death is appointed in the Law, and the particular kind not expressed, the Magistrate was left free to set down the same, as also when no punishment at all is mentioned. Deut. 25, 13.14. neither were the people bound to ask counsel at the mouth of God upon every occasion of execution of justice against evil doers, where the manner of punishment is not limited. It was the law of God, that witches should not live, Exod. 22, 18. Saul did well, and is commended by the Spirit of God, that he cut them off that had familiar spirits out of the land, & rooted out the wizards; yet he did not ask, neither was he bound to ask counsel now or which way they should be put to death, though God had not defined the particular, Levite. 20, 27. This then is left to the discretion of the Magistrate, when he hath the general, to decree the particular punishment as he thinketh good. In sundry places of the books of Moses, we find sundry laws set down inflicting death upon the offenders, & yet the manner of death is not named, Genesis 9. verse 6. Exod. chap. 22, 19, 20. Levite. chap. 20. verses 9, 11, 15, 16, 17, 18. Deut. chap. 20. verse 25. and 24, 17. All this were to no purpose, if the Magistrate might not proceed against them ex officio, without knowing the farther pleasure of God. For it had been all one as if no sentence of death had been set down, inasmuch as they might as easily and with as little labor know the punishment in particular as when no punishment at all is expressed. Neither did the Jews take themselves to be bound in that case to enquire of God, Levite. 20, 10. Deut. 22, 22. John 8, 5. Wherefore, I rather think they consulted with God about the quality of the work, then the manner of the punishment. God had threatened, that whosoever did Work on the Sabbath should be put to death: but he had not followed his handy-work, nor labored in his calling: he had only gathered a few sticks. True it is, he had done it impudently, yet it was doubt full whether this fact were within the compass of that law or not: and therefore Moses would not call the life of this man in question without certain direction from the mouth of God. For life is precious, and blood being spilled, is as water poured upon the earth, y^t cannot be gathered up again. So then they desired to know, whether this fact were worthy of death, not by what manner of death he should die. And as the Jews in other things are full of fables, so in this they have devised of their own brains, that this man was Zelophehad, of whom we read afterward in this Book, chapt. 27, 3. where it is said of him that he died not in the conspiracy of Korah, but in his own sin: thereby casting an aspersion upon him, and charging him with an imputation which the Scripture doeth not charge him withal, of which we shall speak more afterwards. But who it was, and what his name was, and whether he were one of the Israelites or of the strangers that came with them out of Egypt, or what his purpose was, it is uncertain; but whosoever it were, he is put to death for profaning of the Sabbath. We learn hereby, [Doctrine.] that the Sabbath day ought wholly to be spent in religious and holy exercises. It is the end why it was sanctified of God, that we should sanctify it, and spend it in holy uses from morning unto evening, Genesis chap. 2. verse 2, 3. Where we see, he blessed it and sanctified it in the Garden, or at least in the time of man's innocence, Exodus chap 16, 20. Isaiah 56, verse 2. & 58, 13. Exod. chap. 20. verse 4. This was the practice under the Law, continued also under the Gospel. It was the custom of Christ to preach the gospel in the Synagogues on that day, he did it not for once or twice, but it was his ordinary and usual manner. So the Disciples, Acts 20, 17. and 17, 1, 2. 1 Cor. 16, 1. Revelat. 1, 10. The doors of the Temple were kept shut the six days, but opened from morning until the evening upon the seventh day, Ezek, 46, 1, 2.

There are many reasons in the fourth commandment, [Reason 1] drawn from the equity and liberality of God in giving us six days, from the example of God's rest, and from the consideration of the end why it was appointed to be kept holy, all these are of great force, Exod. 20, 4, 5.

Secondly, this serveth to preserve men from [Reason 2] barbarisme and Atheism, and all irreligions profaneness. We see notwithstanding this comfortable & profitable ordinance of God, how much impiety and looseness is in the world: but if every man were left unto himself to serve God as himself list, to his private devotions without this general observation: it is to be feared we should shortly have no knowledge, no faith, no church, no religion, no order: that the greatest part would scarce think of God, from one week, nay from one year to another, or have any acquaintance with his word and Sacraments, or read the Scriptures, or pray unto him: nay they would scarce know whether there were any Scriptures or Sacraments, or not. Therefore the Lord saith, The Sabbath is a sign between me and you throughout your generations, that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you, Exod. 31, 13 For when do the greatest part read, or hear, or confer, or meditate, or pray but upon the Sabbath? Take away therefore that day, you take away all these. Thirdly, [Reason 3] Christ Jesus vouchsafed to honor this day above the rest of the days of the week after his resurrection, and that by his special appearances in it, as well as by his rising again upon it. If we observe and mark it, we shall see he shown himself to his disciples and followers upon that day especially. First, to Marie Magdalene early in the morning, John 20, 1. and 14. Secondly, to the other women, as they were going to communicate to the Apostles the certainty of his resurrection, which the Angels had declared unto them before at the sepulcher, Matth. 28, 9. Thirdly, to the two disciples going to Emmaus, which also was the same day, Luke 24, 21, For they said, it was y^e third day since these things were done. Fourthly, the same day at night he appeared to his Disciples, John 20, 19. Fifthly, he appeared for the confirmation of the faith of Thomas in the matter of his resurrection upon this day, John 20. verse 26. Upon this day did the holy Ghost descend: and this was the first day of the creation.

[Use 1] The Uses follow. The sanctifying, separating, and keeping of the Lord's day, is a moral duty charged upon every soul, whatsoever & wheresoever we be, in what state and condition soever, in bondage and exile, upon the land or sea, in sickness or in health, at home or abroad, with our selves or with others, whether we be high or low, Prince or subject, master or servant, bond or free, male or female; all persons must know, that this day must be sanctified unto the holy worship of God, and be spent in the meditation of holy things. It is not as some profane persons have said, that favor of nothing but the world, that rich men may keep the Sabbath, but poor men cannot: for GOD will have the poor keep holy this day, as well as the rich. As with him is no respect of persons, so in giving his law he respecteth not persons: we have not one of the Commandments for the poor and another for the rich, but they belong to all, as he is God of all, and will be served of all. And if this be not a moral duty, then we should have but nine Commandments that bind perpetually, whereas they are often called the ten words, Exodus chap. 34, verse 28. Deut. 14.13. and 10, 4. and Christ showeth, he came not to destroy the Law, but to keep it and fulfill it, Math. 5, 17. Again he saith, He that shall break one of the least of the commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven, verse 19. he shall be shut out of it, and have no place in it. But it may be objected, [Object.] we keep not the same day that the Jews did, they observed the seventh day from the creation, we the first day of the week. Why then was this day changed? and who changed it? and whether may it be changed again? [Answer.] I answer first, touching the first; the reasons of the change are to put a difference between the Jewish and Christian Sabbath, which could not be so fitly done but by change of the day. Secondly, to keep a memorial of the day of our redemption: for as the seventh day kept a memorial of the work of the creation, so doeth this first day of the week of our Redemption: as great a work, yea greater then the former, for it was more to redeem us out of hell, then to create us out of nothing, Isaiah 66, 24.

Thirdly, to free the church from the sacrifices and ceremonies of the Jews, and to take from it they yoke that lay as an heavy burden on the necks of those that lived in the time of the Law, Acts chap. 15. verse 10. which neither they nor their Fathers were able to bear: for when this day was changed it was no more tied to the Jewish Sabbath, which was solemnized with many ceremonies belonging necessarily unto it. The Jews were tied to a strict and rigorous kind of rest, they might not kindle a fire throughout their habitations, Exod. chapt. 35. verse 3. It was also a figure of the everlasting rest of God's children in the kingdom of heaven, Isaiah 66, 23. Heb. 4, 9. It was observed in remembrance of their deliverance out of Egypt, which fell out that day, Deut. 5, 15. Exodus 11. It was tied precisely to the seventh day from the Creation, and celebrated with sundry set rites and ceremonies, Numbers 28. verses 9, 10. Nevertheless, there is a Sabbath moral and perpetual, a time to be set apart to the worship of God to the end of the world.

The next Question is, who altered it? I answer, Christ himself is the author of this change. The Apostles often teach, that whatsoever they taught, they received it from Christ: they learned it at his hand before, either by word of his mouth, or by revelation of his Spirit: but the Apostles enjoined the first day of the week to be kept as a Sabbath of rest, 1 Cor. 16, 1. The Church every first day of the week made a collection for the poor, which followed the hearing of the word, the offering up of prayers, and the receiving of the Sacraments, as a fruit of them, Acts 2. ver. 42. Wherein observe by the way, that the Sabbath was appointed for the benefit, good, and comfort of the poor, not for their hurt or hindrance; whereby as God is glorified, so the poor are encouraged to tender their service to God this day; and the mouths of those carnal men are stopped, that would have the rich keep the Sabbath, but not the poor. If any say collections for the poor were lawful, [Object.] and might be made any day as well as on a Sabbath: I answer, [Answ.] the Apostle doth not only say, that then collections were made, but this was made an Apostolical ordinance and institution to be done that day especially: for he commandeth the Corinthians to observe it that day, as he had ordained it in the Churches of Galatia. 1 Corinth. 16, 1, 2. So then, because he gave such order, we may conclude it to be an ordinance.

The Apostles also assembled themselves upon this day, for performance of divine duties, Acts 20. verse 7. They kept this day for a Sabbath: neither kept they orderly any other, saving when they came into the Synagogues of the Jews, who were so addicted unto the Law of Moses, that they would meet upon no other day. Besides, it is said of Christ, that after his resurrection, he taught his Disciples whatsoever belonged to the kingdom of God, as Acts 1. verse 3. but the alteration of the Sabbath belongeth to God's kingdom. The last questiō remaineth, whether it be in the liberty of the Church to change the day again? I answer, it is not. For as it was not at the first changed without the authority of Christ and his Apostles directed by Christ, who is Lord of the Sabbath, Math. 12, 8. so it can receive no farther change without him or them. But if the Church had this power, thē the Church might well be said to be Lord of the Sabbath. Again the times and seasons are in God's hand, Act. 1, 6. but they should be left to the Church as a treasure to dispense, if it might dispose & transpose the Sabbath at her pleasure. Again, one day to be kept in seven, is moral & perpetual, otherwise if once we depart from this simplicity, that we be not tied of necessity unto it, a mā may say, that one day in seuē weeks or in seven years is enough, and so at length it shall be said, we are not bound to meet together publicly, above one day in an hundred years. Therefore I set it down as an unchangeable rule, that the observation of one day in seven, not in five, or one in fifteen, but one in seven, neither more nor less is moral: but if it should ever be changed again, we could not keep the just number of one in seven, but at the first change the proportion and morality would be broken. If any ask, how then was it changed at the first? I answer, the Jews that believed, altered not the morality of one in seven, albeit they changed the day which was ceremonial. For in the first change they kept two Sabbaths together, to wit, the Jewish and the Christian, & yet without breach of the former proportion. The Jews kept the seventh day for the week past, we take the first day which is next to it, and so keep the Sabbath for the week to come: they observed that day in memorial of the work of creation which was past, we Christians keeping (as we have great cause) the remembrance of the work of redemption, begin our Sabbath at the resurrection of Christ for the time following. And thus was the day altered without breaking the morality of one day in seven, which is impossible ever to be so changed again. The Princes of Judah are charged to change the bounds and landmarkes, Hos. 5, 10. God hath set stakes and bounds as it were to compass and inclose his Sabbath, by appointing the time and limiting the season, therefore to remove this, is as great an offense to God, as to pull up the pales and hedges of the ground is a trespass to man. If then we take upon us to appoint another day of our own, it cannot be called the Lord's day, but man's day, or our own day, or the Churches day. And it may be said of us, as Isaiah 1, 12. Who required these things at your hands? To set up another day, is to appoint a strange day, like to Nadab and Abihu that offered strange fire: If any say, we may serve the Lord as well upon another day, I answer, so might Nadab and Abihu consume the sacrifice with strange fire, as well as by that preserved on the Altar, yet they were punished of God because they altered his institution, as we have seen before.

Secondly, this reproveth sundry sorts of persons [Use 2] that offend against this doctrine. Of all the commandments of God, none are more often urged, and yet not one is, or hath been more despised and transgressed. The breach of the Sabbath is the main sin of the world, a general evil spreading far and near, an iniquity abounding in every congregation, as if God had never spoken anything touching a Sabbath, or as if it were a mere ordinance of man. Nay, human inventions and traditions are ordinarily better observed and more regarded than this commandment of GOD. Now it reproveth especially three sorts. First, such as make the Lord's day, which should be the market day of the soul, a day of vain pleasures and carnal delights, a day of sports and recreations, thinking it enough if they follow not the works of their calling. For wherefore are the works of our ordinary vocations forbidden upon the Sabbath? and why are we restrained from them? not that they are unlawful in themselves, but because they take up the mind and suffer it not to be employed in God's business. The same may be said of our own pleasures much more, which naturally we follow with more greediness and earnestness. And it is well observed, that the multitude had rather go to Church than go to work, yet had rather go to play than to the Church. This is the disposition of the greatest part, especially of servants and of the younger sort, who commonly make no other reckoning of this day, than as of a day of riot and revelling, of gaming and drinking, never intending the worship of God, which ought then especially to be performed. Thus is the commandment turned upside down, and that day which should be kept holy to the Lord, is spent in the service of the devil. If they have been at the Church in the forenoone, they dispense with themselves to serve Satan in the afternoon. But as Christ telleth us, that none can serve God and Mammon, so no man can serve GOD and their pleasures on that day. Secondly, here are reprov'd such as seem more civil than the former, but yet take liberty to follow their own business & ordinary affairs. Such are they which go or ride about their worldly matters, to buy, to bargain, to sell, to talk with others, robbing God of his day to spare one of their own. God hath kept but one day in the week to himself, and even this also we take from him, and grudge at it to give it to him, like the rich thief that having many sheep of his own, yet killed his neighbors that had but one, 2 Sam. 12, 4. A third sort are reprov'd, who think it enough, if they observe so much as is enjoined by laws and injunctions of men, if they be at morning and evening prayer, they think they give to y^e Lord a large allowance, and justify themselves as if they were good observers & sanctifiers of the Sabbath. Such men take liberty all the rest of the day to do what they list pertaining to themselves, whether to their profit or to their pleasure Thus they make it partly the Lord's day, and partly their own: howbeit there is no parting of stakes with him. We cannot properly call it the Lord's day, except we make it wholly to be his, and consecrate it wholly to his worship.

[Use 3] Lastly, it is our duty to remember this day before hand, that so we may every way fit our selves to the sanctifying of it, and therefore the Lord said, Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Our nature is very forgetful of this performance of holy duties, and therefore we have need to think of them before hand. God hath given unto us sundry commandments, but he commendeth the Sabbath to us especially above all the rest: he dealeth with us like a master, that giveth many precepts to his servant, but willeth him to remember one above all the rest. So it is with the Lord, he saith; Thou shalt have no other God's before me, Exodus 20, 3. Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven Image. verse 4. Thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them. verse 5. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, ver 7. But above all these, Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. For indeed the right observation of all the rest consisteth in the due regard of this. How can we learn obedience to the rest, unless we be careful to keep this day? Or how should we be able to practice them, & to know what God requireth, except we give attendance at the posts of his house to hear his voice? We must evermore remember the precept of the Apostle, Col. 3, 2. Set your affections on things above, and not on things upon the earth: but this ought especially to be considered on this day. We must dispatch all worldly businesses before, that they do no way disturb us and distract us. And when the day of the Lord is come, we must assemble together, that so there may be an holy convocation, Levite. 23, verse 3.

It was the custom of the people to come together at such times, Luke chap. 4. verse 16. Paul showeth that at Antioch, He found the whole City assembled upon the Sabbath day, Acts 13, 43, 44. This assembly is called God's army, Psalm 110, 3. It was counted an happy thing to dwell in the Lord's house, Psal. 27, 4. and 84, 4. Then ought the word to be both read and preached; so was it in the time of the law, Acts 15, 21. And both of them did Christ himself perform ordinarily, Luke 4. ver. 17, 20. It is a part of the Ministers sanctifying of the Sabbath by doing the same. The idle ministry is a great cause of profaning the Lord's day, both in themselves and in others. It is the duty of the people to hear the word with all reverence and attention, to mark and lay up in their hearts what they have heard, to the end they might put it in practice. And when we are departed, we should spend the rest of the day in private duties, as Prayer, Reading, Meditation, and Conference; things not greatly regarded of the greatest sort. We are soon weary of the best things, and quickly loathe that we should chiefly love. The cause why we profit not by the public Ministry, is the want of the performance of these duties privately.

38 Speak unto the children of Israel, and bid them that they make them fringes in the borders of their garments, throughout their generations, and that they put upon the fringe of the borders a Ribband of blew.

39 And it shall be unto you for a fringe, that ye may look upon it, and remember all the Commandments of the Lord, and do them: and that ye seek not after your own heart, and your own eyes, after which ye use to go a whoring.

40 That ye may remember, &c.

This is the law of making Fringes upon the four quarters of their vesture whereby they covered themselves, that they might look continually upon them, and remember all the commandments of the Lord, and do them. Of this read Deut. 22, 12. These Fringes and Ribands served them for a monument, that they might consider they were a people consecrated unto God, not as Infidels to walk after their own fancies. For upon these were written some parcel of the Law. This was also the cause that the Jews were commanded to have the Law written upon the posts of their doors, and likewise that they should bear it about them evermore, & decke themselves with it, that it should be as a ring upon their fingers, as a bracelet upon their hand, & as a frontlet before their eyes, that is, always in sight and remembrance. To this end also it must be written upon the frontiers of the Land, upon the gates of the City, and upon the posts of every man's private house, Deut. 6, 8, 9: that they might have every day & every way occasion given unto them to talk and confer of the word of God, sitting, walking and lying, at home, or else abroad. This usage was afterwards abused by the pride and hypocrisy of the Pharisees, as Christ chargeth them, Matth. 23, 5. who because they would be thought to have a more special holiness then the common sort, had made long gardes, and sentences of Scripture written upon them that might be seen a far off. But for our selves, we must consider, that though this ceremony be no longer in use, and that these Fringes and Laces are shadows, which ended at the coming of Christ, yet an instruction remaineth to us, to exercise our selves in his law day and night, Psalm 1, 2.

Josephus reporteth of the Jews, that they knew the Scriptures as well as their own names, whereas many among us scarce know the names of the Scriptures. We learn from hence, That all sorts both young and old, of what condition soever, are enjoined to know the doctrine of the Scriptures, and the will of God revealed in them, Deut. 6, 6, 7. John. John 5, 39. Coloss. 3, 16. 2 Tim. 3, 15. Psal. 119, 9. The Reasons. First, because God hath appointed such as are governors over others, to be teachers of them that belong unto their charge. Such as are fathers and masters of Families are bound to instruct their children and servants, & therefore none ought to be without knowledge, Ephes. 6, 4. Gen. 18, 19. But how shall they be able to do this, except they have knowledge, whereby they may be able to perform this duty? Secondly, ignorance is the cause of all error, because the natural man perceiveth not the things that are of God, and the wisdom of God is foolishness to man. So then being of our selves blind, and wanting the light of the word, we must needs go astray. Hence it is, that Christ saith unto the Sadducees, Ye err, not knowing the Scriptures, Math. 22, 29. Thirdly, the want of knowledge is the cause of sundry fearful judgments, spiritual and temporal, Hosea 4, 6. inward and outward, Isaiah 1, 3, 7. So then as ignorance is the cause of sin, so it is the cause of judgment the reward of sin. If we care not to know him, but neglect and contemn the means of knowledge, no marvel if we be punished.

[Use 1] This reproveth the church of Rome of an horrible injury offered to the people of God. They teach that ignorance is the mother of devotion, and keep the Scriptures in the Latin tongue, as it were under lock and key. And albeit they have translated them, or the greatest part of them into English, yet they set out sharp edicts ratified under an horrible curse, that no Lay man (as they speak) shall presume to read them, unless they be specially licensed by their inquisitors and confessors: directly contrary to the end of the Scriptures, which were written that we should believe, and by believing have eternal life, John chapt. 20. verses 30, 31. They beat down ignorance, and teach that all ought to know the Lord from the highest to the lowest, Jeremiah 31, 30. and that God will pour out his Spirit upon all flesh, Joel chap. 2. ver, 28. Wheresoever he vouchsafeth great means he requireth a great measure of knowledge. This discovereth the bishop of Rome to be no better, and indeed no other then Antichrist, making laws contrary to God's laws, and yet binding the consciences of men unto them.

But it will be said, that the unlearned and unstable pervert them, 2 Pet. 3. and therefore it is dangerous to read them. I answer, be it that some do so, shall all therefore be forbidden the free use of them? All things, even the best are abused, meat, drink, apparel, the Sacraments, Christ himself, and what not? shall all be barred therefore from the heavenly Manna, which is sweeter then the honey and the honey comb? more to be desired then great heaps of riches? which is much more profitable then is the finding of great spoils? The Scripture is a notable part of our spiritual armor, Ephes. 6, 17. able to offend, and to wound our enemy. If a Captain should go into the field with his soldiers, and suffer them to carry with them no weapons but such as should serve to defend their own bodies, and forbid them such armor as should any way hurt their enemies; if he should permit them the shield but not the sword, or allow them a Corslet, but not the spear: would he not be thought, and that justly and worthily to betray thē into the enemies hand? But thus it is with the Popish captains that must or at least will be accounted the only masters of Israel; they allow to the people after a sort the girdle of truth, the breast plate of righteousness, the shield of faith, and the rest to defend themselves; but touching the sword, The two edged sword of the word, Heb. 4, 12: wherewith Christ our Savior resisted, and we after his example must resist the devil, Matth. 4, 4. they forbid them to gird that about their loins; as if it were like Saul's armor, which David could not go withal, because he had not proved it: whereas indeed it is like David's sling, & the stone which he slang that smote the Philistine in the forehead, and caused him to fall upon his face to the earth, verse 49. and therefore what do they but treacherously betray the people of God, and lead them naked into the field to be utterly spoiled, and so to fall before their enemies?

Secondly, it confuteth those amongst our selves, that say what need so much teaching and preaching? There are some that think themselves to be wise men, much wiser then their fellows, that stick not to speak thus: but this their wisdom is no better then foolishness with God. 1 Cor. 1.23. The preaching of the cross I confess is accounted no better then foolishness, but it is to them that perish: whereas to them that are saved it is the power of God. It is accounted a state-policy nowadays, to defend little preaching and less hearing. But ignorance can uphold no kingdom. Religion and the knowledge of it is the pillar and stay of a State and Common-wealth: the want of it is the cause of tumults, rebellions, insurrections, and seditions. What was the cause of the rebellion in the North in y^e days of our late Soueraign of blessed memory? was it any other then want of knowledge, and of Preachers to plant knowledge in the hearts of the people? but (blessed be God) they have since been better stored, and that hath brought better quietness in those parts. And what is the cause of the often risings, rebellions, and treasons in the kingdom of Ireland at this day, but because they remain either Atheists, or Popish, or sottish, wanting the means of knowledge to instruct and inform them better? True Religion is a bulwark and a Castle of defense to any kingdom, the very chariots and horsemen of Israel, 2 King. 2.12. and godliness hath the promises of this life, and of the life to come, 1 Tim. 4, 8. Wherefore, they are profane speeches of ignorant people, or of idle teachers going about to maintain their ignorance and idleness, who think that a sermon in a quarter is sufficient, either for y^e Minister to preach, or the people to hear. If you mark or would examine what the people are that live under such, and for the most part you shall see they know nothing. But the Minister must preach in season and out of season: & the duller the scholar is, he should have his lesson the more often repeated. Such for the most part are the people, slow in hearing, dull in conceiving weak in remembering & bearing away what they have heard. Some there are, who not only are ignorant, but defend their ignorance, and think men need not have any knowledge in the Scriptures, nor trouble themselves any way about it. These do imagine that it belongeth only to the Ministers and other learned men to know the Scriptures. And it is fit he should have more knowledge then a private man, because he is appointed of God to teach the people, but this exempteth not the people from it. For take this as a certain principle, that the poorest & simplest person must have as much knowledge for matters of salvation as the Minister hath, or else he shall never be saved.

[Use 3] Lastly, let all men know, men and women, children and servants, that in their several places they are bound to exercise themselves in the Scriptures, and daily to meditate in them, that so thereby they may come to knowledge: for without knowledge in the word, it is impossible for any to be saved. The way for a man to get his living by his trade, is not to exercise himself in it once in a week, or to employ himself to it once in a quarter, but he must use it daily and diligently, or else he shall never live by it, or thrive in it. So may I say in this case; a man that hath a desire to be saved, and to live hereafter in a better life, it is not sufficient for him to read the Scriptures, and to meditate in them now and then, or when he hath nothing else to do, and to keep himself from idleness; but he must observe a constant and continual course in the searching and reading of them, that by them he may come to knowledge, by knowledge to faith, by faith to obedience, and by obedience to salvation. Ignorance shall excuse no man at the day of judgment, He that knoweth not his Masters will, shall be beaten, Luke 12, 48. Hosea 4, 1, 3. If we think to plead for our selves, and to allege in our defense, that we followed our callings toerne our livings, & to maintain our families, it shall not serve our turns, this will not be taken for currant payment. Our particular and our general calling agree well together: God hath not joined them in every man. Our particular calling is to follow our business; our general calling is to know the Scriptures: y^e one doth not abrogate the other, inasmuch as God hath commanded them both, & what God hath coupled together, no man shall put asunder, Math. 19, 6.

CHAP. XVI.

1 NOW Korah the son of Izhar, the son of Kohath, the son of Levi, and Dathan and Abiram the sons of Elijah, and On the son of Peleth, sons of Reuben, took men.

2 And they rose up before Moses with certain of the children of Israel, 250. Princes of the assembly, famous in the Congregation, men of renown.

3 And they gathered themselves together against Moses, and against Aaron, and said unto them: Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the Congregation is holy, everyone of them, and the Lord is among them: Wherefore then lift ye up yourselves above? &c.

IN this chap. we have two other murmurings set down; the latter arising out of the former, as one stick on fire kindleth another. The former consisteth of a few, carried away with envy and emulation against Moses and Aaron; the original whereof arose from Korah, of the Tribe of Levi, who first blew the bellows, and took it grievously, that the Priestly dignity was translated to Aaron; and challenged Moses of partiality, as if he had preferred his own Kindred, and followed his private affection, rather than the direction of God. This seditious Korah associateth unto himself, Dathan, Abiram, and On of the Tribe of Reuben, whom he knew to be ill affected towards Moses; because he being the eldest son of Jacob, had by right of his birth-right, the Principality and government of the whole people belonging unto him, and therefore they thought themselves as worthy to have the Soueraignty in their hands, as Moses was to have it in his hands. All these joining together, made a schism or rent amongst the people, and assemble two hundred and fifty others, all Princes of the assembly, which seem to stand for the good of the whole Congregation; as also all Rebelles have ever had some pretence and color: for they plead that all the Lord's people are holy, that God is present among them, and therefore they should no longer usurp the sole government of the whole host. It is usual in all ages of the Church to have schisms and rents to arise in it, and for men to separate themselves from the Church, because (forsooth) it is not well governed as it ought to be. Now, albeit this open insurrection were a flat rebellion against the express ordinance of God, yet they set many goodly shows upon their doings, helping a bad cause with a beautiful color, lest they should seem to be mad without reason, alleging that all the Lord's people are holy, and the Lord is among them. We learn hereby that whatsoever corruptions break out of men and whatsoever evils they do, and howsoever they decline from God, from his word, and from his ordinances, yet they will labor to excuse it, to defend it, to color it, that it should not seem as it is. When evil men have committed evil, they are ready to justify their evils, that they may seem good. We see this in Saul, 1 Sa. 13.11.12. and 15.15. so John. 12.5, 6. Judas pretended the poor and his great care of them, albeit he cared not for them, but for himself, and chap. 11.48. So Caiaphas pretendeth the safety of the people, to wit, if Christ were not put to death, the Romans would come with a mighty army, and ouerrunne them: but the taking of him away and the putting of him to death, was indeed the true cause why the Romans came, and destroyed the Temple, the City, and the people. This we see sometimes also in those that are not the worst men. The fact of Simeon and Levi against the Schechemites was no better then horrible murder committed against the Law of God and of nature, and against the league and covenant that had passed between them, which ought to be held inviolable even among infidels: yet somewhat they pretend to cover it, Gen. 34.31. should he deal with our sister as with an harlot? So the Israelites touching their Idolatry, Exod. 32.1. and Aaron, verse 23. and our first parents, Gen. 3. and in a manner all wicked men do the like, that are unregenerate, without repentance and sanctification. The reasons.

[Reason 1] For men are affected to their actions as they are to themselves. Though they be corrupt & abominable, yet they would not be thought and judged to be so: so it is with their actions that proceed from them, though they be wicked and unjust, yet they would have them accounted just, and therefore they seek excuses for themselves, as Adam did fig leaves to [Reason 2] cover his shame and his sin. Secondly, if they should pretend nothing, all would be ready to condemn them, and to pass sentence upon them, therefore to blind the eyes of others, they cast a mist before them as iuglers use to do that they may not be espied. This did Herod, Mat. 2.8. he pretended to come and worship Christ. For he knew well enough, if he had dealt plainly, and told them he sought the life of the babe, they would have detested his detestable cruelty.

This serveth to reprove diverse sorts that [Use 1] go about to varnish their actions with false colors, thereby to blind the world and to put out their eyes. These show themselves to be rank hypocrites & exceeding sinners against the Lord, which serve to harden their hearts and to hinder them from a sight of their sins and sorrow for them. For no man can return from his sins, and repent of his evil ways, so long as he goeth about to defend them: because all such sinners do declare a firm resolution to continue and go forward in sin, and think themselves safe and sure, because they have some colors for their actions. But y^e first beginning of repentance is confession: a duty oftentimes commended, and continually practiced by the faithful. The first thing that Joshua persuaded Achan to perform when he was taken as guilty for taking the accursed thing, was, that he should give glory to the God of Israel, and make confession unto him, Josh. 7.19. Prov. 28.13. 1 John. 1.9. Whereas such as hide their sins shall not prosper, and they that say they have not sinned, do make God a liar, and his word is not in them. Wherefore we cannot give a more evident sign of our want of y^e grace of repentance, then by defending, denying, excusing, or lessening of sin.

Secondly, this showeth the cause why the [Use 2] dregs of Popish religion are so settled in the hearts of men that they are hardly rooted out; even because such deceitful colors are set upon them and their superstitious practices. If they be accused for their idolatry & worshipping of Images, they pretend they worship God in the Image. Touching the worship of Saints and prayer to them, they say they honor them as the friends of God, and that they are unworthy to approach or to come near to God themselves, and therefore in humility they go to the Saints and Angels: but this is nothing but to speak lies through hypocrisy, Col. 2.23. Concerning their sacrilege in withholding the cup from the people, they have their color, that the labor of the Priest would be too great, if he should deliver the same to all himself, or else that the blood of Christ might be spilled upon the ground: but these excuses cannot deceive God, he seeth their open declining from the word of God, from the example of Christ, and from the practice of the Apostles, their hypocrisy is made open and evident to all, they can now no longer hide it. They teach and maintain that heretical Princes especially being excommunicated, should not be obeyed. Thus they blanch the matter, whereas Paul taught and practiced obedience for conscience sake, and that such as resist, purchase to themselves judgment. [Use 3]

Thirdly, we are to judge no otherwise of all such as transgress the Law of God, whatsoever their allegations be. How many men are there that think even gross and palpable sins to be no sins at all, because they can blanch and color them over? How many think to excuse their ignorance, as if it were no evil at all? why is there no more store of knowledge in our days among masters and servants? why so much store of blindness in the matters of God? O say they, We are dull and forgetful, we have our callings to follow, we must provide for wife and children. This is a willful ignorance: this shall excuse no man. Such can find and take time enough for the world, but they lack time to lay a good and sure foundation for the world to come. Some pretend their age and infirmity, which hinder them from coming so often to the house of God. But many of them have resorted no better to it in their youth, and as yet they have strength enough also to walk farther for their pleasure. God knoweth their hypocrisy, that they are able to do more in civil things. It is a common practice in the common sort to pray for the dead, God be with him, the Lord rest his soul, God have mercy on him, God send him a joyful resurrection, and such like: What, say these ignorant persons, this testifieth our love and our charity. This is a blanching of the matter, and the casting of a new paint upon a rotten post. For who are these that pray for the dead, but such as never prayed for them being alive? nay, do not indeed know which way to pray? When the Scripture taxeth shows of hypocrisy, and reproveth private prayers in public places; they have their answer ready, they do it to stir up to devotion, and to fill and prepare themselves to perform holy duties. Yea, but this ought to be done at home: private places are appointed for private actions, and public, for such as are public. They kneel down to their own devotions, that sildome or never pray at home, and have no care to prepare themselves privately before they come; whereas GOD knoweth, and man knoweth, and the Minister knoweth, that these men that are so devout at private prayer in open places, sit most profanely, most unreverently and unseemly at public prayers. Touching the Sabbath day, it is notoriously known what blanches they have to cover their vile blemishes, or rather their sores; as that a man may learn as much at one Sermon in the forenoone, as he can well meditate upon in the afternoon, and practice all the rest of the week. O how do these deceive themselves! God knoweth the heart of these hypocrites. It is not the care they have of meditation and practice, that causeth them to speak this; for how do they spend that time but in pleasure and vanity? So for the Sacraments, they say they cannot come to communicate, because they are not in charity with their neighbors, they are not prepared as they ought to be. Thus they think to creep away in the dark, and to be holden excused. But this is to excuse one sin with another, and to add sin unto sin.

Lastly, this must teach us on the contrary, [Use 4] that we must not color our actions like hypocrites, and pretend to justify our selves when we know they are evil. This is a sign of an evil heart and of a guilty conscience: this is no better then to bind two evils together in one bundle, first to dare them to do evil, and then to color it. And this latter is worse then the former, it showeth less grace and more corruption. God cannot be deceived by any pretence cunningly contrived, though man may be, because our most secret actions and imaginations are manifest before him. This provoketh God's wrath the more, and when we must appear before his righteous judgment, all things shall appear as they are, and all colorable pretences shall vanish away as smoke, and all things shall appear as they are indeed. God is a perfect light, he dwelleth in light that none can attain unto, 1 Tim. 6.16. and yet if he be not light enough, he will take other lights to help him, and search Jerusalem with candles, that he may punish the men that are settled on their lees, that say in their hearts, The Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil, Zephan. 1.12. Then certainly he will discover all, even the secret parts of thy heart, which now thou goest about to hide and conceal. Then he will make us know that he knew all things which are written in this book of remembrance.

4 And when Moses heard it, he fell upon his face.

5 And he spake unto Korah and unto all his company, saying, Even tomorrow the Lord will show who are his, and who is holy, and will cause him to come near unto him: even him whom he hath chosen, will he cause to come near unto him.

6 This do: Take your censers, Korah and all his company.

7 And put fire therein, and put incense in them before the Lord tomorrow: and the man whom the Lord doth choose, the same shall be holy: Ye take too much upon you, ye sons of Levi.

Here beginneth the proceeding against these seditious, first by Moses, and then by God himself. The Lord first setteth his Ministers on work, to deal with this people, if that will not serve, then he will take the cause into his own hand. First, Moses fell on his face, a common gesture used in prayer: thereby no doubt making supplication to God to appease the multitude. Then he turneth his speech to Korah, and appealeth to the just judgment of God, that it would please him to decide the question whom he had chosen to be his Priests, as Elijah did, 1 King. 18.24. in their halting between two opinions. Then in the end he returneth their false accusation, justly upon their own heads, and showeth that he was not afraid of their faces: they had said to Moses and Aaron, Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the Congregation are holy; he payeth them home in their own language, Ye take too much upon you, ye sons of Levi. Here Moses setteth forth the dignity of the Ministry, that there is a special covenant and agreement between God and his Ministers. The doctrine, It is a special favor that God maketh a covenant with his Church, that they shall be a precious people in his sight; but it is a far greater favor, that among or out of his Church in general, the Lord should make a more special covenant with his Ministers, that he should take them to be a peculiar people to himself, 1 Sam. 2.28. and 3.20. Exod. 19.22. 2 Cor. 2.15.16. Mal. 2.5, 6.

[Reason 1] The reasons follow. First, the Ministers are God's servants and Ambassadors, 2 Cor. 5.20. they are in special place about him, such as stand before him, and minister unto him upon earth, as the Angels minister unto him in heaven, Mal. 2.7. and 3.1. Revel. 1.20. and 2.1. and 3.1.

[Reason 2] Secondly, they are as it were of God's privy counsel, not to give him counsel, but to take counsel from him, and to reveal his counsels to the sons of men, Amos 3.7. for therefore he teacheth them, that they should teach his people, Mal. 2.7. True it is, God revealeth his secrets to his people, nevertheless, it is by the means of the Minister.

[Use 1] This serveth fitly and fully to reprove such base persons that think basely of the Ministry, and those that account the Ministers as the scum or refuse of the people, who indeed are little better themselves, (I will not give them the titles which they justly do deserve) dishonoring that calling which God himself hath highly honored, and throw down that which he hath advanced and lifted up. I range among such those also, that think the Ministry too base for their birth or quality, yea they think their kindred exceedingly debased and disgraced, if they have a Minister of their name. We would think it an high honor for any of our children or kindred, to be preferred as a special fauorite about a Prince: and yet we cannot be content that they should have this special calling and judgment of the Ministry, which is not inferior to any place or calling whatsoever in the common wealth, as we have shown often before.

True it is, the greatest part of the world think otherwise, and I confess it: but it is because they have corrupt eyes which the vain pomp and glory of the world do dazzle, so that they cannot see nor perceive the glory of God in the calling of the Ministers of the Gospel. For if they had a better and a clearer sight, they would think it the greatest honor and highest favor to be set in that calling.

Secondly, this is an admonition and warning [Use 2] to all men, that they should not in any case abuse, offend, disgrace, wrong, and revile those that are called of God to be the Ministers of his word, whom he hath set to be near unto him: because they are in special grace and favor with God. Dare any oppose against him that is the kings friend or fauorite? Do not all desire and seek his favor? how then dare we disgrace and dishonor those whom God would have honored, and speak contemptibly and contumeliously of their Ministry, seeing God hath said they are the men whom he would have honored? When the king would have Mordecai honored for the good service he had done to his person, he said, What shall be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honor? The Ministers are God's special favorites, and therefore such as wrong and molest them shall not be left unpunished: for those whom God will honor, they shall be honored, especially of those that know the use, necessity, & profit of the Ministry.

Thirdly, from hence ariseth matter of comfort [Use 3] to the Ministers themselves. Hath he made a special league and covenant with them to favor and protect them? Then we are assured, that the injuries and wrongs which are done unto them, rest not in their persons, but extend to God himself who is wronged with them, so that he will revenge their wrongs, and protect their persons, Deut. 33.11. Smite through the loins of those that rise up against them, that they rise not again. We have also comfort as a shield and shelter from the base estimation of the unthankful world; though they hate us as enemies, yet God honoreth us as his servants, nay as his friends, and receiveth us into special favor: so that he often maketh us to be had in great honor & estimation, even of those that before had so basely esteemed of us. Let it not therefore trouble us, though we be not regarded of men, seeing we stand or fall, not to them, but to our own Master, who hath thus far honored us to be put into his service; and therefore let us say with the Apostle, It is a small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgment: yea, I judge not mine own self, 1. Cor. 4.3.

Lastly, it teacheth what the Ministers of God ought to be, they should be men of an unblameable life and holy conversation, because they come so near to God, lest it be said to them, as Psal. 50.16. What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my covenant in thy mouth? seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee.

If all the people of GOD must be holy, much more then ought the Ministers to be endued and adorned with integrity of life. They must be neither ignorant nor vain, because they come near unto God. He that loveth his friend, will be very wary and circumspect what manner of servants he commendeth to his friend to be in his service: and yet how unfaithfully do many deal with God y^t dare commend to him idle & wicked Ministers to be his servants, and to carry his word to his people? It were to be wished, that such as have authority in their hands would turn all such unworthy servants out of his service, and put them to silence, which cause the holy ordinances of God to be profaned and polluted by their wickedness.

8 And Moses said unto Korah, Hear, I pray you, ye sons of Levi.

9 Seemeth it but a small thing unto you, that the God of Israel hath separated you from the congregation of Israel, to bring you near to himself, to do the service of the Tabernacle of the Lord, and to stand before the Congregation to minister unto them?

10 And he hath brought thee near to him, and all thy brethren the sons of Levi with thee: and seek ye the Priesthood also?

Moses proceedeth and goeth forward to see if he could draw these proud conspirators to a sight of their sins, and thereupon putteth Korah in mind how graciously God had dealt with him and the rest of the Levites, to suffer them to come near unto him to do the service of the Tabernacle, and to stand before the Congregation to minister unto him: upon which consideration he moveth them, that they should not be carried beyond the bounds of their calling. [Doctrine.] We learn hereby, that the moe means and helps we have to prevent sin and to keep our selves from offending against God, the greater our sin is, and the greater sinners we are, if we break these bands and cast these cords from us. The sins of the Israelites are often aggravated, and made the more grievous and heinous, because the Lord had sent his prophets among them, Ier. 7.13, 14. and 11.7, 8. and 35.14. Psa. 78.17, 31, 35, 56. Matth. 11.21, 22, 23, 24. Dan. 9.5.6.

[Reason 1] The reasons. First, because those men sin against knowledge, having the word to inform them, and their own consciences to convince them. Knowledge maketh every sin the greater, Luk. 12 47. John. 15.22. and 12.48. They are like to a man that hath much meat and digesteth nothing, so that it corrupteth in the stomach and doth him no good at all. Now they that have many means for the soul, are like him that hath much meat for the body: for they that hear much and have many instructions, and yet do not bring forth fruits answerable thereunto, their sin is the greater, and themselves thereby made inexcusable. [Reason 2] Secondly, it argueth obstinacy and hardness of heart; they have many strokes given them, but they feel none of them. For such as transgress in the middes of those helps that serve to restrain sin, do not sin of infirmity or weakness, but of obstinacy and willfulness. Now the more willful a man is, the more sinful he is, and the greater is his sin.

This convinceth our times of much sinfulness, [Use 1] and in these times some places, and in those places sundry persons, to be greater sinners then others. And why greater? Because our times have had more means to prevent and keep from sin then other times have had. What could the Lord have done for us, that he hath not done? We have been as his vineyard which he hath fenced, he hath gathered the stones out of it, he hath planted it with the choicest plants, and hedged about it, that the beasts of the field and of the forest should not hurt it: he may therefore justly look that it should bring forth grapes, but it hath brought forth wild grapes, Isaiah 5.4, 5. or as his fig tree which he hath digged and dunged, and therefore he may well seek fruit thereon, especially having waited with patience for it.

What hath not God done for us and to us to reclaim us? Our times and people have had many deliverances from dangers, that other times and people have not had, which threatened us both within and without, both foreign and domestical. We have had greater blessings bestowed upon us then others: we have had the word more plentifully preached to us, then others. All these (we being unthankfull and disobedient) do make us greater sinners then others which have wanted these blessings. Thus do we turn our blessings to be our bane, and God's mercies to be curses upon us. We see many Congregations, where God hath risen early and late, giving them his word and faithful Ministers as diligent watchmen to admonish them, and to threaten his judgments, are oftentimes more sinful then other places that have wanted these means, and no worse persons in the world then some that live under the standing Ministry of the word, God in just judgment giving them over to Satan. If such be given to common and continual swearing and abusing of the Name of God, to contempt of the word and of the Sabbath, they are greater sinners then others, and are more guilty in his sight, and consequently shall be more sharply and severely punished.

Secondly, it admonisheth all that enjoy the [Use] means of preventing sin, as benefits and blessings, the Scriptures and word of God, his corrections and chastisements, his promises & threatenings, his patience & long sufferance, y^t they labor to make profit by thē & to fulfil all righteousness, lest God account their sin greater then others. For we must know this, whatsoever is a sin in others; is a treble sin in them, because they have the sword of God to cut the knots and sinews of sin in sunder, when others have not had that means. We may with grief speak of many places, that Israel hath been without a teaching Priest, and without Law, 2 Chro. 15.3. they have wanted the gracious means of salvation to teach, to reprove, to instruct, and to correct: & therefore no marvel if sin abound. But they that live where sin is daily met withal and encountered, do make their sin out of measure sinful. Let us therefore diligently examine our selves, how we are affected at the hearing of the preaching of the word, and of the threatenings denounced against our sins.

[Use 3] Lastly, learn from hence y^t the word is never preached in vain, whether we be converted by it, or not. For it is like the rain and snow that falleth from heaven, that returneth not thither again, Isaiah 55.10, 11. So the word of God shall not return to him as a void and vain thing, but shall accomplish that which he pleaseth, and shall prosper in the thing whereunto he sendeth it, But some will say, Then it is better to be without the word, then to have it: if men's sins be so much the greater, because they have been so much taught: and it may seem better, not to hear it at all. I answer, this is true in some sort, howbeit not simply in it self. Let no man think his case the happier, because he wanteth the word; for as Paul saith, they that have the law, if they contemn it, shall perish by the law: and they that want the Law, shall perish without the law, Rom. 2.12. Besides, they may be said to have the means, y^t want them when they may have them. No man must reject the word, because they that refuse it are made worse by it. Would a man be willing to cast away his wealth, because he seeth himself made worse by it, more covetous, more cruel, more hard hearted, more high minded? We see no, in the example of the rich man, Matt. 19. rather then he would cast it away, he would labor for a liberal hand and a merciful heart to use it aright: so is it in this case. Indeed, it had been better we had never known the word and the way of righteousness by the direction of the word, then to depart from it: better I say, in respect of the end of our estate and the judgment that hangeth over us, yet we should not therefore wish to be without the word, but rather to have a sanctified heart that we may keep our selves from the sins of others. Then we will account it an happy thing to live in such places, where the word of God is truly preached. Let us therefore labor to make good use of the good means that our good God hath afforded us for our good, and labor to profit by them in faith and obedience, or else our sins shall be made so much the greater, and consequently our judgments the greater also.

11 For which cause both thou and all thy company are gathered together against the Lord: and what is Aaron that ye murmur against him?

Here Moses farther layeth open the sin of Korah and his confederates; neither doth he charge them behind their backs, as if he were afraid to speak to them, but to their faces, that, if they had anything to say, they might answer for themselves. It is the manner of many men, to be liberal of speech of those that are absent, but are ready to hold their peace when they are present to plead for themselves. Now he telleth them that the contempt of Aaron was the contempt of God; and their murmuring against him, a murmuring against God. We learn hereby, [Doctrine.] that to rebel against the message of God, to scorn and reject it, is to rebel against God, to scorn and reject God himself, Exod. 16.8. 1 Sam. 8.7. Isaiah 7.13. Whatsoever is brought unto us, whether it be the promises of God for the establishment and confirmation of our faith, or instructions for our obedience, by the messengers and Ministers of God, if it be refused and resisted, God himself is rejected and the Spirit of grace is despited, Lu. 10.16. John. 13.20. 1 Thess. 2.15, 16.

The reasons, because first they come not in [Reason 1] their own name, neither do they discharge their own message: they are no other then the mouth of God; they come not from themselves, neither for themselves, their authority and calling is from God. Therefore Moses saith in this place, What is Aaron that ye murmur against him? And the Apostle saith of himself & the other fellow laborers, 1 Cor. 3.5. Who is Paul, or what is Apollo, but the Ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase is all in all.

Secondly, God doth account all things [Reason 2] done to thē, in the execution of their Ministry, as done to himself, Matth. 10.40. He that receiveth you, receiveth me: and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me: therefore he that receiveth the Minister, receiveth with him God the Father.

It is the duty of all to prepare themselves [Use 1] when they come to the Ministry of the word, because then they must consider that they are come into the presence of God himself, to receive, not so much from the mouth of the Minister, as from the mouth of God, direction and instruction concerning his will, Deut. 5.27, 28. Gal. 4.14. 1 Thess. 2.13. O my brethren, if we did believe this to be the truth of God, we would not stumble so much against it, and be so often offended at it, we would not reject it and set so light by it as too commonly we do. Let us be like to Cornelius, Act. 10.33. We must set our selves in God's presence, whensoever we begin to hear the <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> word of God. We ought as much as we can, to suppress all thought and consideration of men, and weigh with our selves from whence the word cometh, from whom the messenger cometh, & in whose Name he speaketh unto us. This is a forcible means to make us profit by hearing. He that can see in the person of the Minister the person of God, and settle his affections wholly upon God, whom he knoweth to be present with him, I never doubt of that man, but he will hear to his salvation.

[Use 2] Secondly, acknowledge from hence, that the despising of the word of God, the not believing or not consenting to it when it is taught by men like to our selves, is one of the greatest sins of all other that can fall out among the sons of men. As it is most common, so it is most fearful, and shall receive the greatest punishment from God, Matt. 10.14, 15. Act. 13.51. O that all men would take a scantling of this sin by a right consideration of the doctrine which I handle, and you hear. For the doctrine teacheth that the withstanding of the Ministry of the word, and murmuring against his ordinance, is an open standing out against God, and a resisting of him. Can there be greater pride, insolency, contempt, unthankfulness, rebellion, and disobedience, then to resist the Lord? The Apostle speaking of the Magistrate saith, Whosoever resisteth the power, shall receive to himself damnation: if this be true of man, much more may we affirm it of God, that whosoever resisteth him shall bring upon himself swift and sudden damnation. For are we stronger then he? Now, we must understand, that all such as set themselves withal their might and cunning against the Ministry of the word, they do as it were take God to task, they single him out to combat with all, but they shall find in the ende themselves unequally matched. Shall he that is dust lift up himself against his maker? shall he that is no better then a blast or puff of wind contend with him that rideth upon the wings of the wind, and is able to scatter us as chaff before the wind? O then how fearful will the account be of many among us, that show as great scorn and contempt, as great security and infidelity, as the Jews did, 2 Chron. 36. for which they were carried away into captivity and swept out of the land of their habitation! Such persons do in a manner bid God defiance to his face. For when the Minister preacheth, God preacheth: when the Minister threateneth, God threateneth: when the Minister promiseth, God promiseth: when the Minister comforteth, God comforteth. It is he that speaketh by his servants the Prophets, Heb. 1.1. When they beseech us to be reconciled, God beseecheth us by their Ministry, 2 Cor. 5.20. True it is, they speak, but God speaketh to us in them & by them. This made the Apostle say, We then, as workers together with him, beseech you also, that ye receive not the grace of God in vain, 2 Cor. 6.1. That which is spoken of the Sacrament of Baptism, may rightly be spoken of the Ministry of the word. It is said, that Jesus came into the land of Judea and baptized, John. 3.23. but it was by the hands of his disciples, John. 4.2. The Baptism was his, but the Ministry was theirs. So doth the Lord preach unto us, as Christ then baptized, he preacheth to us by the mouth of his Minister, he speaketh whē they speak unto us. Such then as yield not to the promises, or threatenings, or admonitions that are offered unto them, what do they but say plainly, I will not believe God, I will not commit myself and mine whole estate into his hands, I do not think that he will do as he threateneth? This is no other then to give unto God the lie to his face.

Lastly, this giveth comfort and encouragement [Use 3] to all the Ministers of God in the thanklesse labors of their wearisome calling. God will care for us, howsoever men reject us. He will confirm our word by testimony from himself, in his mercies toward them that believe, in his judgments upon the wicked that resist, and in preserving us because we have been faithful in doing the message for which we are sent, Ezek. 33.32.33. Matth. 10.19, 20, 22, 26, 28, 29, 30. It is also a comfort to all such as do hear aright, such as bring forth the fruit of the Gospel, do not only receive the Gospel, but they receive God himself.

12 And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram the sons of Eliab, which said, We will not come up.

13 Is it a small thing that thou hast brought us up out of a land that floweth with milk and honey, to kill us in the wilderness, except thou make thyself altogether a Prince over us?

14 Moreover thou hast not brought us into a land, &c.

Moses having spoken to Korah the principal conspiratour that first began to roll this stone, and nothing at all prevailed against him, doth not give over, but trieth if any of the rest had anymore spark of grace, or fear of God in them. But the farther he proceedeth, the less hope he findeth. For Dathan and Abiram refuse to come unto him. Before this they assembled themselves tumultuously before they were called, but now being lawfully called, they will not assemble. Nay, they open their mouths to accuse him of cruelty and treachery, both of them heinous crimes, but both of them falsely ascribed unto him: Of cruelty, as if he purposed to kill them in the wilderness: of treachery, as if he had brought them from a land flowing with milk and honey, but had brought them to possess no land. Thus they prefer Egypt before Canaan, the place from which they were gone before the place to which they were going. And yet this is not the depth of their impiety; for I take this answer of theirs to be a very mock and scoff cast out partly against Moses, and partly against God, which will appear if we compare the words of Moses to Korah with this answer. For Moses had said, Seemeth it but a small thing to you to seek the Priesthood also? they borrow his own words and cast them in his own face, Is it a small thing that thou hast brought us into the wilderness to kill us? As if they had said, Thou tellest us that it is a great matter to usurp the Priesthood, but why dost thou not consider, that it is also a far greater matter to kill so great a multitude? And whereas God so often promised to give to Israel a land flowing with milk and honey, they turn it into a jest, and tell Moses that Egypt was that fruitful land, as for other land they could see none for their feet to rest upon. We learn hereby, that they which are hardened in sin, and resolved not to give over, do not only stop their ears against all reproof, which notwithstanding is a great sin, but revile, rail upon, and despise such as tell them the truth, and lay before them their faults, though they be the Ministers of God that do it; This we saw before verse 3. in Korah and his company, They gathered themselves against Moses and against Aaron, and said unto them, Ye take too much upon you, 1 King. 18.17. and 21.20. and 22.8. Ierem. 15.10. and 18.18. and 44.16, 17. Acts 17.18.

[Reason 2] Secondly, they are fallen into a sweet sleep of sin, and cannot abide to be awaked, or any way disturbed and disquieted. They love to go to hell with ease, they would not be troubled in their journey. But the reproofs of the Minister do cross them, and therefore they speak all manner of evil against him.

[Use 1] This showeth the miserable condition of such as justify themselves in their sins, who being convicted of a great height of iniquity and impiety, do cast the Ministers reproof as dung into his face, and defend whatsoever themselves have committed. A sick man that is so far from taking the potion given him by the counsel of a learned Physician, that instead of taking it, he doth cast it in the Physicians face, may well be thought to be in a desperate condition and must needs perish: so it is with men spiritually sick with sin, even heart-sick, who are so far from receiving a rebuke at the hand of the Minister, that they will be impatient toward him, and return rebuke for rebuke unto his face, nay storm and rail at him with opprobrious and contumelious terms, it argueth they are forlorn men and in a pitiful and desperate estate. It were infinite to speak of all sorts that are possessed with a spirit of contradiction to gainsay the truth. Some find fault because we reprove such sins as are not found in the place where we preach: others, because by reproofing sinners, we would seem to make the world believe, that they are more sinful then other people, and thereby make them odious to others. Others accuse us, that we reprove sin out of hatred and malice, not out of love: malice to their person, not hatred of the sin. But the Minister is to reprove any sin that is in the land: besides, how know they it is not in that place? And if it be not, we know not how soon it may be. We must learn to detest all sin, but how shall we detest that which we know not? and if we do know it, no man knoweth it so well, but he may know it better: and no man detesteth it so much, but he may learn to detest it more. The assaults of Satan and temptations to sin come suddenly, if we be not forewarned, we may be surprised suddenly.

Again, the reproofing of sin in one place is not the clearing of another, or in one person is not the justifying of another. Lastly, to accuse the Ministers of reproofing through malice, proceedeth in themselves from want of charity. Ahab accused Micaiah of hatred because he never prophesied good unto him, but evil: but indeed the hatred was in himself: as also he charged Elijah to be the man that troubled Israel, whereas indeed it was he and his fathers house, 1 Kin. 18.17, 18. we are thought to be their enemies, for no other cause but because we tell them the truth, Gal. 4.16. [Use 2]

Secondly, behold from hence the cause why the Minister of the Gospel is so ordinarily hated of the wicked world; it is upon no other ground, then because he doth reprove sin. If he would hold his peace and say nothing, or if he would sew pillows under men's elbows, or if he would prophesy to them of wine and strong drink, and give them liberty to do what they list, and then tell them all is well done, he shall even be the Prophet of this people, Mic. 2.11. The true Ministers of the word are never loved of the world, because they cannot but strike at the head and root of sin with the two edged sword of the word, wheresoever they find it: therefore they are made as marks for everyone to shoot at, John. 7.7. and if themselves spare them, yet they can be content to hear others speak evil of them, without defending them and their righteousness. But howsoever it go with us, it is our duty to preach the Gospel, and to go through good report and bad report, 1 Cor. 9.16. Eze. 3.17. We have the charge of men's souls committed unto us, we bring glad tidings of peace, and glad, tidings of good things, Rom. 10.15. We should be welcome unto our people, and therefore it is unreasonable we should receive such a recompense of our labors, as to be reviled and evil spoken off. But this hath been the condition of the Prophets, of the Apostles, of Christ himself: he was called Beelzebub, and charged to cast out devils by the power of y^e devil. Let us wait upon our Lord and master that hath called us, he will give us a better recompense of our service, Dan. 12. We shall shine as the stars, and Isaiah 49.4. My judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God.

[Use 3] Lastly, everyone ought to examine himself, whether he be guilty of this sin or not: and if he be, to labor to repent of it and to reform himself, if not for the Ministers sake, yet for our own sake, and the salvation of our own souls. True it is, the Ministers are oftentimes forced to speak many things that are not pleasing to the hearers: yet should the people suffer the words of exhortation, admonition, and reprehension, considering that in all of them they aim wholly at their good. The Physician is oftentimes troublesome to his patients, and the father giveth many checks to his sons, yet do they truly love them and seek their good, even while they do molest and trouble them: so is it with the Ministers of God, albeit they do grieve and molest the people of God, yet it is for their good and salvation, and therefore they may say with the apostle, If any have caused grief, he hath not grieved me but in part: that I may not ouercharge you all, 2 Cor. 2.5. Therefore it is y^e duty of the people, quietly to suffer the word of exhortation and to digest a reproof, thereby to show themselves obedient in all things, for this is the proof and trial of our hearts, 2 Cor. 2.9.

15 And Moses was very wroth, and said unto the Lord, respect not thou their offering: I have not taken one asse from them, neither have I hurt one of them.

16 And Moses said unto Korah, Be thou and all thy company before the Lord, thou and they, and Aaron tomorrow.

17 And take everyone his censer, &c.

18 And they took every man his censer, &c.

19 And Korah gathered, &.

We see here how Moses appealeth from them to God the judge of heaven and earth, and referreth the deciding of the controversy unto him. This is the preparation to the punishment of these men: wherein consider, first the anger of Moses against them; secondly his prayer to God to reject their offering: [Doctrine.] thirdly, his words to Korah. In his anger observe, that it is the duty of all God's children, to be angry at sin, whensoever they see God dishonored, and his ordinances contemned and despised. There is a sanctified and holy kind of anger, Exod. 16.20. albeit Moses were the meekest man upon the earth, as we heard before, Num. 12.3. Yet when he saw their disobedience, he was wroth with them. The like we see Exod. 32.19, 20. and in Elijah, 1 Kin. 19.14. Ier. 6.10, 11. it is called the fury of the Lord. All zeal consisteth of anger, Numb 25.7. The reasons will farther confirm this point.

For first, in many places of the Scripture it [Reason 1] is attributed unto God, Rom. 1.18. Josh. 3.36. But to the nature of God nothing can agree, but that which is just and holy. Secondly, [Reason 2] that affection was truly and naturally in Christ our Savior, Mar. 3.5. he looked angerly upon them, mourning for the hardness of their hearts: so John. 2.17.

The uses: first the affection of anger is not in it self unlawful. True it is, there is a [Use 1] corrupt anger, which we are to strive against and labor to suppress, 1 Tim. 2.8. Matth. 5.23. Job 36.18. there is also an holy and lawful anger, when it hath a good ground, and is seasoned with moderation, Levite. 10.16. 2. Sam. 12.5. and 13.21. Neh. 5.6. Ester 7.7. The Stoics, one of the stricter sects of the Philosophers, condemn all anger; but this is to make men senseless, and to transform them into stocks and stones. For it was created of God, and was in man before the fall, and before any evil entered into the world. All the workmanship of God was approved to be very good, Gen. 1.31. so that being more ancient then evil, it must be holden in it own nature to be good and lawful. But it will be objected that anger in many places is forbidden, [Object. 1] and condemned, Matthew, chapter, 5. [Answ.] verse 22. I answer, not all anger, but all corrupt anger, such as are angry unadvisedly. So then, he speaketh of this affection, not as it was created, or renewed by God's Spirit, but as it is corrupted and depraved with original sin. [Object. 2] Again, it will be said, that the Stoics define it to be a perturbation of the mind, [Answer.] and therefore evil. I answer, that perturbation is double: sometimes it is moved upon just causes, and sometimes upon unjust causes. The perturbation of the mind moved upon unjust causes is unjust and evil, the other is just and commendable. The perturbation is good if the causes be good: it is evil, if the cause be evil. Lastly, it will be alleged, that Christ [Object. 3] our Savior teacheth us, [Answer.] when we have received a blow on the right cheek, we should turn to him the other also, Matth. 5.39. I answer, the meaning is not, that we should expose our selves to all injuries but abstain from all private revenge, having no calling thereunto. Whensoever those two come in question together, either to revenge or to receive a new wrong and a fresh injury, we must choose the latter: because to revenge is simply evil in the doer, but to suffer wrong is not evil or sinful in the sufferer.

[Use 2] Secondly, this reproveth such as know not what this holy and sanctified anger meaneth, which can prosecute their own causes and quarrels with the greatest desire of vengeance, but know not what it is to be angry in the cause of God. It was not so with Moses, as we saw before. Some are provoked by every small and trifling occasion. Heereby charity is violated, which suffereth long, 1 Cor. 13.7. and covereth a multitude of sins, Prov. 10.12. Anger looketh in a deceitful glass, which maketh every Moul-hill to seem a mountain, every small slip is esteemed a capital offense, and every word of disgrace worthy of a stab. Others are provoked when there is no ground but their own suspicion, as Eliab was angry with his brother David, because he suspected him to have come to the battle in the pride of his heart,

1 Sam. 17.28. And this is y^e common cause of much anger and heartburning in our days, want of love causeth men to interpret the actions of others in worse sense, and upon their own false surmise they ground their anger. One is angry, because saluting his neighbor, he did not salute him again; and speaking friendly to him, he would not speak again: albeit haply he saw him not, or observed him not. Another, because he heareth his vices reproveth out of the word of God, beginneth to rage through impatience; in which regard oftentimes it falleth out, that he incurreth more anger and danger that reproveth sin, then he that committeth it. Of this evil anger doth the Apostle speak, Eph. 4.31.26, 27. and Solomon, Prov. 14.17, 29. and 29.22. Many are the evils and mischiefs that follow this evil affection, forasmuch as it overturneth both the Law and the Gospel. It were an easy thing to run over most of the commandments which it causeth men to break, and in a manner defaceth the whole image of God. For first, how should we love God whom we have not seen, if we do not love our neighbor whom we have seen? 1. John. 4 20.

Secondly, it overthroweth the principal part of God's worship which standeth in the invocation of God's Name, Ps. 26.6. 1 Tim. 2.8. Mat. 5.23. Thirdly, it causeth the breach of the third commandment, by causing men through impatience to fall to cursing and banning, to swearing and blaspheming the Name of God. For when they grow choleric against others, they utter sundry horrible imprecations, and begin to fret and rage against God himself. Fourthly, it maketh men altogether unfit for the exercises of the Sabbath, having their minds distracted and disturbed with thinking upon the wrongs and injuries of others and their own revenge. No man can hear the word of God aright that is choked with this thorn, I am. 1.19, 20, 21. 1 Pet 2.1, 2. Neither doth this passion work any better effects in the second Table, for as much as it turneth justice and charity upside down: Justice it self, which requireth that the same be given to everyone which belongeth unto him: whereas anger maketh men not only to neglect doing of good duties which they owe to their neighbors, but to oppress them with injuries and revenge: Charity, which is the sum of the Second Table, the effect whereof is this, that we love our neighbor as our self. But anger maketh men hate them as mortal enemies. It often bringeth forth murder and shedding of blood, Ge. 34.25. 1 John. 3.12, 15. Whereby we are also made like unto Satan, for he is the spirit of dissention, as God is a Spirit of love, and of peace. It is the nature of Satan to delight in rage and fury, for he is a murderer from the beginning, John. 8.44. Besides, it is a sin against the Gospel, and maketh us subject to God's anger, and bringeth impenitency and stoppeth the course of God's forgiveness toward us. For as we forgive others, so doth he forgive us, Matth. 6.14, 15. if therefore we retain our anger toward our brethren, God will retain his anger toward us.

Lastly, we must examine our selves, whether [Use 3] our anger be just or not. We are of our selves prone to break out into choler, and to be moved otherwise then there is cause. We must therefore mark two things, the causes thereof, and the effects: If the causes be God's glory, injury offered to our selves or our neighbors, if the cause be weighty, and the affection moderate: If the effects which it bringeth forth be duty to God and man, then it is a lawful anger: but if otherwise, it is unsanctified and unlawful. Let us learn to be most moved in God's cause, as Moses was; the glory of God was precious and dear unto him. So it was with Phinehas, Numb. 25.7, 8. so it was with Elias, 1 Kin. 19.14. because the children of Israel had broken down his Covenant, cast down his Altars, and slain his Prophets. Happy are we if these things move us, and go near unto us.

[Verse 15. Respect not thou their offering.] It may seem strange that he which before had spoken against them, should now pray against them. We are commanded to pray one for another, so that Moses may seem to break the rule of charity. I answer, this toucheth not their persons, nor their lives, but he desireth their amendment, that they may be ashamed of their own folly, & confounded in their own pride. He craveth of God no more, thē to show and make manifest his own innocence and uprightness, which was to be decided by that offering. We learn hereby, [Doctrine.] that God respecteth not the works of evil men, be they performed never so religiously outwardly, Gen. 4.4, 5. Isaiah 1.11.12, and 66.3. Prov. 15.8. and 21.27. Ierem. 6.20. The reasons follow.

First, whatsoever they do, is sin, 1 Tit. [Reason 1] 1.15 their mind and conscience is defiled. Secondly, [Reason 2] their persons do not please him, Gen. 4.4, 5. Mal. 1.10. God regarded not Caines Oblation, because he regarded not Caines person: and he regarded not Caines person, because he was a wicked and faithless man.

[Use 1] The uses. First, we may therefore conclude, that such works as God hath not commanded, shall not be received, Matth. 15.9. In vain they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Many do think to please God by their good intents, but that is a vain worship. God will be served according to his own will, not after our own fancies. He hath set down and appointed how he will be worshipped, he hath not left it to our discretion, whatsoever the Papists prattle.

[Use 2] Secondly, it reproveth such as think it enough to come to the place of God's worship, and to be present at prayer, the word, and Sacraments, albeit they bring with them no true devotion. These do exceedingly deceive themselves, dishonor God, and profane his holy things, which is a grievous sin. These men do lay the foundation of all their hope, and the stay of all their comfort upon the broken staff of an outward sacrifice, which in the end will fail them. For albeit they be never so loose in their lives, and profane in their conversations, yet they trust by virtue of their good prayers and other good deeds, to pacify God's wrath, to escape his judgments, to make amends for their sins, and to come to heaven by the string of their works. Of this sort are infinite numbers, who, as they satisfy themselves, so they think to satisfy God with external words and works. These are in deed holy in themselves, if they were religiously performed: but as they proceed from them, they are hypocritical and accursed. These are such as shall say, We have eat and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets: but he shall say, I tell you, I know you not, whence ye are, depart from me all ye workers of iniquity, Luke 13.26, 27. And to all such the Prophet saith, put away the evil of your works, Esa. 1.16. Our plausible shows (be they never so great) can do us no good, God seeth the falsehood of our hearts, and hateth the same: as on the other side, he commendeth and rewardeth the meanest service that the faithful yield, being offered in the uprightness of their minds.

[Use 3] Lastly, we must learn to come to God in an holy and right manner, with a true faith, a sincere affection, and a purpose to perform obedience, or else all is in vain. Hence it is that Christ saith, Take heed not only what you hear, Mar. 4.24. but also how ye hear, Luk. 8.18. If we look as well to the manner, as to the matter of our service, we shall be accepted; and be well assured of happy and good success.

[Verse 16, 18, 19. Moses said unto Korah, Be thou and all thy company before the Lord, &c.] In the words before, he protested his own innocence, that he had given them no just cause of this insurrection, he had not taken an asse from them, nor any way hurt them; wherein he speaketh modestly of himself, for he had done them all good, and preferred their safety before his own life, To teach us, that Magistrates should be upright in their government, and seek the good of those over whom they are set. Such was the sincerity of Moses in this behalf, that he appealeth unto God for the truth of it.

The like we see in Samuel, 1 Sam. 12.3. he made protestation in the sight of the Lord, and before his Anointed, that he had not laid his hand upon any man's goods, so much as a shoe, and no man could accuse him: and in Paul, Act. 20.18.33, 34. So Exod. 18.21. They must be men fearing God, and hating coueteousnesse, which is the root of all evil, 1. Tim. 6 and no better then idolatry, Ephe. 5. Gehazi coveted and obtained both money and raiment of Naaman, but he procured from God the plague of leaproisie, as the wages of his iniquity, 2 King. 5. Achan dreamed of a golden day, when he stole away the wedge of gold, but he was stoned with stones for his labor, Josh. 7. Judas received thirty pieces of silver for betraying his master, but it was not long before he brought them back and hanged himself. But to proceed, consider the care Moses hath of the good of these men, he laboreth again and again to reform them.

Hitherto he saw no good of his labors, yet he will not give over, until God command him to separate the people from them, as desperate persons that could not be recovered. The Ministers, though they see little or no fruit of their labors, yet must continue in teaching; and though they gain unto God few or none at all, they must not give over, but be constant in the work of the Lord.

The reasons follow. First, because we [Reason 1] know not when God may be pleased to bless our labors, and hear our prayers, and save the souls of those that are rebellious against him, 2 Tim. 2.25, 26. the man of God must be gentle unto all, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves, &c. The husbandman knoweth not what profit he shall receive of his labors, when he hath tilled his ground, and though he reap little profit the first year, he will not give over, but still he hopeth for better increase: so should it be with the Ministers of God, though we see little hope of gaining at the first, yet we should be constant, we know not how soon it may please him to bless our labors, to turn their hearts, and to add them unto the Church.

Secondly, we have the example of God, he [Reason 2] is patient and beareth long with the vessels of wrath, as Christ saith to Jerusalem, he would have gathered them together, but they would not, Matth. 23.37.

Thirdly, albeit we gain none, and when we hearken, we can hear no man repent of his wickedness, saying, What have I done, Ierem. 8.8. yet we do not altogether lose our labor: and in this it is better with us, then the earthly husbandman; if he have no increase, he loseth all his cost and labor. It is not so with us, for we shall have no less recompense, if we be found faithful in dispensing the word and Sacraments, then if we had gained many thousand souls to God, 2 Cor. 2.15. We are the sweet savor of God to every man, we shall have our reward with God. The servants, which our Savior sent out to invite the guests, moved none to come to the feast, yet were they never a whit less welcome (when they returned) to the master of the feast: he was indeed wroth with the guests that were bidden, not with the servants that did bid them, because they had done their deuoire. So God will not be offended with his Ministers, when they have done their endeavor, although they gain none to him, and therefore they have reason to be faithful and constant in their places.

[Use 1] This reproveth many Ministers, such as can be content to labor in their youth, and in time of their strength, and so long as they find good entertainment among men: but when once they grow old and are come to their gray hairs, and when they find not so good entertainment as before they did, or as they looked for, they grow idle and negligent in their callings, and as much as lieth in them they betray and deliver the people into the hands of their spiritual enemies. But these men are willing in age to receive the wages as well as in youth; and whether their doctrine be received or not, they are ready to receive their tithes. There is no reason, that while our hands are open, our mouths should be shut. When we are no longer able to labor through weakness of body, and the infirmities of age, we ought to be maintained of the Church, even for labors bestowed and strength spent in our youth. A good master will not turn out of his doors an old servant that hath been faithful to him, but keep him for the service he hath done him in his youth: and some will do as much to their very dog when he is grown old. Much more then ought it to be so with y^e Minister, he should not be turned out to the wide world, but reap the fruit that he hath sown in his youth. Others, while they are in poor and low estate, preach diligently, but when they are once grown warm, and have feathered their nests, and have caught that for which they fished, can be content to hold their peace, and hang up their nets, and say nothing at all. These lie under a fearful curse, Woe unto them because they preach not the Gospel.

These men grow rich themselves, but it is to be feared, they make a poor people. The flock hath fed them to the full, but they will not feed the flock, but suffer them to remain empty.

Secondly, this teacheth what love ought [Use 2] to be between the Minister and the people, seeing there is so much required of one toward another. If there be true love on the Ministers part toward the people, it cannot be that he should give over, but rather spend his strength and his time only for the good of those that are committed to his charge. This made the Prophet Isaiah answer the Lord, Here am I, send me, When he heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send? and who will go for me: Behold, I, and the children whom the Lord hath given me. So doth Christ charge Peter as he loved him to feed his sheep and his lambes, John. 21.15. On the other side, it is a great discouragement to the Minister, if he find not some love again from the people, answerable in some sort to his care and diligence. Nevertheless, if he find no fruits of love from them, it shall not excuse him if he hold his peace, forasmuch as God will give him his reward, upon whom he is to depend.

Lastly, great comfort should arise from [Use 3] hence to every faithful Minister, and make him conscionable in his calling, to know that God requireth of him to persevere in teaching, and therefore he must never give over to speak in the Name of God. Such as lay their hand upon the plough, and look back, are unfit for the kingdom of God, Luke 9.62. As then it is said of every Christian man, that if he be faithful unto the death, he shall receive the crown of life, Revel. 2.10. so it is true of every Christian Minister, if he be faithful in preaching the Gospel unto the death, he shall receive an incorruptible crown of glory, not otherwise.

The prophet Jeremiah would have ceased crying, and have holden his peace, but the word was as fire within him, that it could not be smothered and suppressed, but the flame of it brake out. We have no promise, except we continue. Let no man therefore faint and wax weary, let no man give over, but hold out constantly to the end.

20 And the Lord spake unto Moses, and unto Aaron, saying, 21 Separate yourselves from among this congregation, that I may consume them in a moment.

22 And they fell upon their faces and said, O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, hath not one man only sinned, and wilt thou be wroth with all the Congregation?

26 And he spake unto the Congregation, saying, Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, lest ye perish in all their sins.

Now doth the Lord take the cause into his own hand, and revealeth to Moses what he will do, that he would utterly destroy these conspirators, and all that belonged unto them. Touching the prayer of Moses and Aaron, who humbled themselves so soon as they heard the threatening of God, it teacheth that God's children have soft and tender hearts, if they hear the sound of God's threatening behind them: for it is as the crack of a terrible thunder like to rent the hard rocks in sunder, whereas the ungodly are senseless and feel nothing, albeit the threatening do concern themselves; see more of this before, chap. 14. Again, behold how, in this destruction, God provideth for the safety of his servants, he could do nothing till they were departed and separated from the wicked. The like we see in God's dealing toward Lot, he being merciful unto him, Gen. 19.16. for the Angels profess that they could do nothing till he were gone, v. 22. and chap. 18.32, We see then how the ungodly do fare the better for the company of the godly: for why were these seditious persons spared so long, but because many good men were among them? and so soon as they were departed from them, the earth opened and swallowed some of them, and a fire came from heaven, and consumed others. When the Sodomites were taken prisoners and carried away as captives, they were rescued and delivered, but it was for Lots sake, because he was among them. So then wicked men may thank the godly for their deliverance, 2 King. 3.13, 14. Job 22.30. Act. 27.24. And why doth God spare this wicked world? Doubtless it is for his children's sake: but when once the number of them is accomplished, then will he rain down fire and brimstone upon the reprobate. Now from this commandment of God given to Moses, and by Moses to the people for the separating of themselves from the Synagogue, and departing from the assembly of these sinful men, [Doctrine.] we learn, that they which have society and familiarity with incurable and incorrigible persons, whē God cometh to judge and punish, shall be partakers of their punishment, Gen. 14.12.

The Sodomites had much good, in that Lot was among thē; but Lot had no good by his being among the Sodomites. They were freed from captivity, because they had him in their company: but he was led captive by the enemies, because he had them in his company. The Scripture is plentiful in this point, Pr. 9.6. and 4.14.15. Act. 2.40. Re. 18.4.

[Reason 1] The reasons are, first, because either they commit the same sins with them, or else they are drawn after a sort to consent unto them, if not in word or deed, yet at least by their silence: and then it will follow in equity, that they which consent with offenders, shall also have one punishment with them. So it is with God in this case, they that partake with other men in their sins, shall also partake with them in the punishment. For as there is an evil in word, so there is an evil in silence.

Secondly, all unnecessary society is a countenancing [Reason 2] and a confirming of them in their evil, and consequently it keepeth them from a sight of their sins & from turning unto God by true and unfeigned repentance, 1 Cor. 5.

Thirdly, except we do renounce their company, we cannot keep the commandments [Reason 3] of God, and obey him. The Prophet kept his mouth as with a bridle, while the wicked was before him, Ps. 39.1. We must not cast pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again, and rent us, Matth. 7.6. Therefore doth David say, Depart from me, ye evil doers, for I will keep the commandments of my God: as if, while he was in their company and they in his, he could not do it.

This showeth the folly of such as tax those [Use 1] with a note of purity & singularity, which upon a good ground refuse to associate themselves with ungodly persons. They tax them of pride and term them self-conceited brethrē, reviling them & taunting them with one breath. For they call them brethren, no otherwise then in the spirit of scoffing; & self-conceited, in the spirit of Shimei railing at them, as he did at David, as if they did it for no other end, but because they would be thought better, holier, and wiser then other men; or as if they said, Stand apart, for I am holier then thou, Isaiah. 65.5.

Thus they accuse them to be uncharitable men, and to disdain their neighbors, and to think no company to be good enough for themselves. All these are false accusations, alleging false causes of their separation. It is not because they are new fangled, and so forsake their old friends and companions, and cast off all good fellowship: it is the commandment of God that doth require it, and their own both duty and safety that calleth for it.

Secondly, it reproveth such as can brook [Use 2] and digest all manner of people, and never refuse or find fault with any. It is no grief to them to hear and see anything, they never vex their soul for it, as righteous Lot did, and the reason is, because they want his righteousness, and therefore therefore they can brook, swallow, and digest unrighteousness.

They are not led by the same spirit that Lot was, who grieved at the unclean conversation of the Sodomites: neither is it with them, as it was with David, who cried out in the bitterness of his soul, Woe is me that I remain in Meshek, Psal. 120.5. that I dwell in the tents of Kedar. If they be in company with Ruffians, swaggerers, blasphemers, and drunkards, they can live and converse with them, as well or better then with others. And yet even these, when they come among those that fear the Lord, can discourse of points of Religion, they can report what excellent Sermons they have heard, and give a good testimony of many good preachers.

Thus do they gild and over-lay their tongues with fine gold, whereas there is nothing else but corruption and rottenness within. Take these when they are at the best, they are no better then hypocrites: for certain it is, they must counterfeit on the one side or on y^e other, Prov. 26, 7. But without craving any pardon, we may well conclude of these, that when they live among the worst sort, their behavior is natural: but when they converse among the better sort, it is merely artificial: among the one they show without any vizard what they are; among the other they put on a vizard to appear that which they are not.

[Use 3] Lastly, it teacheth us to beware of voluntary society, and unnecessary fellowship with wicked men, least being partakers with their sins, we be also partakers of their punishment. If the danger of the sin cannot prevail with us to cause us to shun it, let the consideration of the punishment teach us to refrain from them, 1 Cor. 5, 5. and 2 Cor. 6, 17. Come out from among them, and be ye separate, & touch no unclean thing, and I will receive you. If any ask what society is necessary, and what is unnecessary? I answer, If it be in necessary things, it is either for this life, or for the life to come. As for example, a man may converse with such in Faire or Market, to buy and sell, to trade and traffic, or in the private house, if our particular calling and abode there do require it: or if a man go to them to seek their reformation by exhorting and admonishing of them: or if a man have public society with them in the hearing of the word, or in receiving the Sacraments, or in joining together in prayer: this is also a necessary, a lawful, and warrantable society, and it doth not wrap a man in the guilt of those sins which are in them with whom we converse; & therefore such as are of the Separation have little reason and less conscience to separate themselves from the Church of God, because of the wickedness of some men which are therein. For be it granted that such are admitted to the public exercises of our religion: it will wrap those only in the guilt of their sins that have power and authority to remove them, and not those that do necessarily converse and communicate with them. No man may forsake the Church, because some wicked men are in it. Notwithstanding, here we are to mark, that albeit there be some necessary society which is lawful, yet under a color hereof we may not plead for that which is voluntary and unnecessary, for thus their sins become our sins. A blessed martyr sometimes made this prayer, O Lord deliver me from my other men's sins, from my guilt of the sins of other men: howsoever he did not commit them himself, yet because being present he did not reprove them, he acknowledged himself guilty of them. So if we have inward and private society with them, and we freely go to their houses, & invite them home to our houses, and can be content to hear their oaths and blasphemies, and not have an heart and tongue to reprove them for the same, we are thereby made partakers of their sins whatsoever they be. Thou hast power in thine own house to reprove them: there thou art both a Magistrate and a Minister; a Magistrate to rule, and a Minister to teach and to reprove. If thou do not therefore discharge these duties, it shall stand upon thy score and reckoning, & thou shalt give an account for it. We have sins in great number of our own, and therefore we need not draw the guilt of other men's sins upon our own head, to answer for those also which we did never commit in our own persons. The burden is already too great, let us not therefore by this adding to it, make the burden thereof altogether intolerable.

27 So they gate up from the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan and Abiram, on every side: and Dathan and Abiram came out and stood in the door of their tents, and their wives, and their sons, and their little children.

28 And Moses said, Heereby ye shall know that the Lord hath sent me to do all these works: for I have not done them of mine own mind.

29 If these men die the common death of all men: Or if they be visited after the visitation of all men, then the Lord hath not sent me.

30 But if the Lord make a new thing, and the earth open her mouth and swallow them up with all that appertain unto them, and they go down quick into the pit, then ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord.

31 And as soon as he had made an end of speaking, &c.

In these words see the willing obedience of the people to the former Commandment. They were willed to separate from the Tents of those wicked, they do separate and depart from them, by and by they gate them up from their Tabernacles. And Moses doth notably confirm them in their obedience, by foretelling both the death, [Doctrine.] & the manner of the death of these rebels. We learn from hence, that God never bringeth any grievous judgment upon any people or nation, nor upon any private person, but he doth always first forewarn the same and foretellet it. God always teacheth before he punisheth, and he warneth before he striketh, Amos chapt. 3. verse 7. Luk. 13, verse 7. 1 Kings 22, 17. We read that the world was once drowned by water, and it shall be destroyed the second time by fire. Of the first destruction, we find that he foretold it unto Noah, before ever he brought it upon the face of the earth, Gen. 6. verse 3. Heb. 11. verse 7. 1 Pet. 3.20. And touching the second destruction of the world by fire, GOD hath not left us ignorant, but in diverse places of the Scripture hath set it down unto us, 2. Pet. 3, 7, 10.

The Reasons hereof are partly in regard of the godly, and partly in regard of the ungodly. Touching the first, he would not take his own people at unawares, because he loveth them, and would have none of them to perish but would have all come to repentance, 2 Pet. 3, 9. that so they might prevent his judgments, Amos 4, 12. Secondly, touching the ungodly and such as are not the Lord's, they shall thereby be made without excuse, their mouths are stopped, and the justice of God is cleared, they having nothing to answer for themselves, or to accuse God of any unjust dealing, John 15, 22. These men therefore must learn to accuse themselves because they had warning, but they would not be warned: he would have healed them, but they would not be healed, Ier. 20, 6. & 51.9. 1 King. 22, 25.

[Use 1] Acknowledge from hence the great mercy and wonderful patience of God: whose manner is always to give warning before he send judgment. This the Lord needeth not to do, for upon our own peril we are bound to take heed of his judgments before they come: yet so good is our God, that he only deserveth this title to be called the good Lord, as Hezekia calleth him, 2 Chron. 30, 18. The good Lord pardon everyone that prepareth his heart. He would have us prevent his punishments before they fall, and to send out our prayers as Ambassadors to God, to treat of conditions of peace with him. He doth not play the part of a subtle enemy to steal upon us at unawares, forasmuch as before he striketh he always forewarneth, that thereby he might save all those that belong unto him, and bring upon others just condemnation. How graciously dealt he with Korah and his fellows? with Dathan & Abiran? How often did Moses warn them? Who is it then that ought not to confess that God willet not the death of a sinner? Or who can deny but that these malefactors perished most justly?

[Use 2] Secondly, when we see any overtaken with any judgment, we must confess that God is true, as in his promises, so also in his threatenings. If his desire were not that we should prevent them, doubtless he would never give warning of them. If he had a will and purpose to destroy us, he would not tell us before hand; both that he would bring them, and show us the way how to avoid them. There is no man that can justly say, that the silence of God, and the holding of his peace is the cause of his security: he causeth a trumpet to sound y^e alarm before he set himself in battle array against his enemies. For his manner is never to come with any judgment, but he always sendeth a warning piece before. [Object.] But some man will say, It was thus indeed in the time of the prophets: but we have no Prophets in these days to foret l things to come as in former times they had, and therefore we have no such direction. I answer these men as Abraham did the rich man in the Gospel, that his brethren had Moses and the Prophets among them, If they will not believe them, neither will they be persuaded although one rose from the dead, Luke 16, 31. True it is, that Moses and the Prophets were dead long before, but his meaning is, they had the books of the Law, and the writings of the Prophets before them, they were read & preached in their Synagogues every Sabbath day, Acts 15, 21. So I may truly say, that we have Prophets among us, and all that contemn them shall know there hath been a Prophet among them, Ezek. 33, 33. For we have the holy Scriptures, wherein are contained the works of the Prophets and Apostles: and beside these, GOD hath given us his Ministers, that they should as it were put life again into the dead Prophets, that is, that they should open & declare unto us those things that are doubtful and obscure: and therefore if any be admonished by them, that such & such judgments shall come, and they threaten plagues according to the general directions which they have in the word, Deut. 28, 15, 16. Levite. 26.15, 16. Let us not withstand the Spirit speaking in them, for it is the wonderful goodness of God that he vouchsafeth to send them unto us, and to tell us before of his judgments.

Lastly, it is the duty of everyone to make [Use 3] good use of the word of God, & to know that God looketh for attention and obedience at our hands, that so he may not be enforced to proceed against us in judgment. O happy are they that seek the Lord while he may be found, and call upon him while he is near, Isaiah 55, 6. Such then as reject the Ministry of the word, reject their own peace, and bring upon themselves sundry judgments. The word goeth before to prepare our hearts, and it is a two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, Heb. 4, 12. But if we be so hardhearted, & made of metal tougher than brass and iron, that this sword going out of the mouth of God cannot enter into us, he hath another two edged sword, the sword of his judgment, that shall cut us in pieces, and bring us to utter confusion. If the former be not sharp enough to cut the cords of our sins which we have so strongly twisted, yet the latter shall be able to consume us, and we shall not be able to resist it.

33 And it came to pass, as he had made an end of speaking all these words, that the ground clave asunder that was under them.

32 And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their houses, and all the men that appertained unto Korah, and all their goods.

The threatening of the judgment went before, denounced by God, pronounced by the mouth of Moses: the execution followeth, with wonderful terror and astonishment on every side, when the earth which GOD had made firm, and established by a perpetual decree to stand fast under our feet, could no longer sustain and bear up these wretches, but swallowed them up. We see here, that all the threatenings of God in their times and seasons come to pass, and that all the elements are armed for the confusion and destruction of the wicked. Now these rebels begin to cry, verse 34. but they cry out and howl when it is too late: they should have cried unto God for mercy and forgiveness while it was time, and pardon was offered. Thus no doubt did many men of the old world cry out when they were in the water, but then the acceptable time was past, they should have watered their hearts with the tears of repentance when Noah preached unto them. The Sodomites no doubt cried out when fire and brimstone was come down upon them, but they should have cried to God when he cried unto them by Lot whom he sent among them. But then was the time of judgment, the time of mercy was gone and past. So it was with Esau, when he had sold his birthright, and lost the blessing, he cried with a great cry and a bitter, but it was too late, Heb. 12, 17. Gen. 27, 28. So did the rich man being in hell in torments, Luke 16, 23. then he called for mercy, but mercy was departed from him. Here is time and place for mercy, but there is no mercy to be had in hell. The earth is the school of instruction, hell is the house of correction. There the Reprobate cry and yell, where is nothing but weeping & gnashing of teeth, but it is without ease, without end, without profit. They that could shed never a tear to God in this life, shall be constrained to shed abundance of tears in the pit of destruction. The tears of repentance that we pour out ascend up unto heaven, and are kept in a bottle of remembrance: but the tears that are wrung from the reprobate in hell, are never gathered up, nor regarded of God, and are utterly unprofitable to our selves. Let it therefore be our wisdom to make use of the time of God's mercy and patience, and know that there is no place of repentance after this life. But to leave this to our farther meditations, consider with me in these fearful examples of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, and their companions (as well those that were swallowed in the earth, as those that were consumed by fire) the end of all Conspirators and seditious persons, such as rise up against Princes and lawful Magistrates, that are the Lord's anointed, & have their power from him; they cannot prosper or have good success, but are made examples to others. The doctrine from hence assureth, that seditious persons come to destruction & to an untimely death, albeit timely enough in respect of their merits and deserts. Such as resist lawful and public authority, are justly cut off by that authority which they resist. I will not handle this point at large as it would require, I will be short in it, as the life of these men also ought to be. Look upon the attainder of the two Eunuchs that sought to lay hands upon King Ahasuerus, Ester 2, 21. In whose enditement, though there were no fact found, but only a plot and purpose to have done it, yet they died as justly as Mordecai was justly honored and rewarded for the discovery thereof. The Scripture is full of prohibitions and examples ratifying the same, Eccle. 10, 20. Prov. 24, 21, 22. Ier. 27, 8. 2 Sam. 18, 9. & 16, 23. This David knew well enough. For when Saul was delivered into his hand, and lay asleep in his tent, he would not kill him, neither suffer any to touch him, but said, Who can stretch forth his hand against the Lord's Anointed, and be guiltless? 1 Sam. 26, 9, 10. and 24, 7, 11.

They that slew Ishbosheth and brought his head to Hebron unto David, looking for a reward were indeed justly rewarded with death, and had their hands and feet cut off, and were hanged up, 2 Sam. 4, 11, 12. he required his blood at those wicked men's hands, and took them away from the earth. Hereunto come the words of Jezebel, 2 Kings 9, 31. Had Zimri peace which slew his master? But we need not seek so far for foreign examples: we have seen the truth of this oftentimes at home. I may not forget the late examples very memorable and remarkable, I mean the righteous & most deserved execution of those that prepared the powder, and would have lighted the match in that late & monstrous Gun-powder Treason; some of them hang in the air, others hanged themselves, &c. None escaped y^e hand of God or man.

And no marvel: because such as fight against [Reason 1] God, from whom cometh all power, and it is he that setteth Princes upon their throne, John 19, 11. Rom. 13, 1.2. Psal. 75, 7. Prov. 8, 15. Daniel 2, 21. He anointed Saul by the hand of Samuel, to be Head over his people, 1 Sam. 10.1. and he chose him to be King over Israel verse 24. He sent his servant Elijah to anoint Hazael and Jehu, the one to be King of Syria, the other over Israel, 1 King. 19, 15, 16. The God of heaven gave to Nebuchadnezzar a kingdom, power, strength, and glory, though he knew not God, neither acknowledged the hand that set him up, Daniel 2, verse 27. 2. Chron. 9. verse 8. and 1 Chronic. chapt. 28. verse 4. If then Caesar be ordained to be Caesar of God, they cannot prosper that set themselves against Caesar, because they set themselves against God.

Secondly, such are severely punished, because [Reason 2] disobedience and disloyalty, rebellion & treason, are not one sin only, but the sink of all sins, and as Paul speaketh of another, the root of all evil. An heathen man could say, That Rebellion is all kind of evil, and as a Channell from whence they do flow. The first spark of that fire is pride and ambition: discontentment giveth it entertainment, envy bloweth the coals, wrath & malice increase the flame, till all things far and near be in a combustion.

Thirdly, as rebellion is an heap of many sins, so it ruineth many persons, and therefore they justly deserve first of all to be buried in those ruins themselves, and to fall into the pit which they digged for another. The life of one Prince is of more value then of many others. Therefore the people suffered not David to go in person against Absalom, but said unto him, If we fly away, they will not care for us, neither if half of us die will they care for us, but now thou art worth ten thousand of us, as 2. Samuel, chap. 18. verse 3. And again, when Ishbi-benob which was of the sons of the gyants, was like to have slain David with the sword, (had he not been presently succoured by Abishai, who smote the Philistim and killed him) his men sware unto him saying, 2. Sam. 21, 17, Thou shalt go no more out with us to battle, that thou quench not the light of Israel. The King is the Sun and shield of the Land, he is the light of Israel, take him away, and all is left in miserable and uncomfortable darkness. Many men's lives depend upon his life: and the safety of thousands upon his safety. Princes are the Fathers of the Country, more dangerous for the subject to kill one of them then for the child to kill the Father, as much more as the ruin of the commonwealth, consisting of innumerable thousands of houses, is worse then the fall of one particular and private house. As then the Captain of an host is worth many soldiers, and the Governor of a ship many common passengers and Mariners, so is the Head of the kingdom more of value then many subjects. Though many soldiers have fallen in battle, yet often the victory hath been gotten: sildome or never when the General falleth, 1 Kings 22, 35, 36. And to this purpose we may well apply that which is written, though spoken to another end, I will smite the Shepheard, and the sheep of the Flock shall be scattered abroad, Matth. 26, verse 31.

Fourthly, such as conspire against Princes have been punished oftentimes in their house, in their lands, in offices, in death, in burial, in name, and in posterity. For who knoweth not the custom observed even from the beginning? as we may see also in holy Scripture, Ester 8, 1. 2 Sam. 16, 4. 1 Kings 2.16. Ier. 22, 8. Prov. 10, 7. All dignities and preferments are taken away from such: grievous torments and tortures are laid upon them: a violent death is prepared for them, an honorable burial is denied unto them, their blood is stained and tainted, and the children vnborn feel the smart of it.

[Use 1] This putteth us in mind of sundry duties due to Kings and Princes. First, we must stand in fear of them, they carry not the sword in vain, Rom. 13.4. Job 19, 29. It is not put into their hands for a show: for he is the minister of God to take vengeance on him that doth evil. Therefore Solomon saith, The wrath of a King is as the Messenger of death, Prover. 16, 14. and like the roaring of a Lyon, chap. 19, 12. We must therefore fear the sword of Caesar: and therefore have Princes the sword of justice born before them, that the beholding thereof might put all persons in remembrance of this duty. Among the heathen, the Roman kings, Dictators, Pretors, and Consuls had their Rods and Axes evermore carried before them, to breed a terror of their authority in all that see them. A good subject (as one saith) feareth blame as much as pain, and reproach as much as death. The good subject hath always one eye upon the sharpness of this sword that he doth not provoke it: and the other upon the heynousnesse of this offense, that he never commit it. This fear is the best porter at y^e Princes gate: it serveth notably to keep all traitors and rebels out of the kings Court, and treachery out of the people's heart. It is as a bridle y^t curbeth all disobedience: where it is not, there is an easy entrance for traitors and treasons: like the horse which having the bridle pulled out of his mouth, rusheth forward into the battle, without order and government. Hence it is, y^t Solomon joineth the fear of God and the fear of the King together, Prov. 24, 21. where the fear of GOD is, which is the beginning of wisdom, there will follow the fear of superior powers ordained of God.

Another duty is to honor Princes, whom [Use 2] God hath first honored, Rom. 13, 7. Give honor to whom ye owe honor. So Exod. 20, 12. and 22, 28. 1 Pet. 2, 17. Ester would not presume into the presence of the great King, until he held out his golden Scepter, Chap. 5, 1, 2. Joab though he were Captain of the host, gave David the honor of the victory, 2 Sa. 12, 27. Nathan the Prophet, and Zadok the Priest, made obeisance before David with their faces to the ground, 1 Kings 1, 23. And Bathsheba the Queen, bowed her face to the earth, and did reverence to the King, and said, Let my Lord King David live forever, v. 31. Every soul is bound to yield this honor, if they would be honored of God.

Thirdly, we are to perform obedience, [Use 3] whereunto a way is made by the former. For, if we truly honor them, we will readily obey them, even for Conscience sake. This is a duty yielded by the Child unto the Father, by the Servant to the Master: much more then ought it to be yielded by the Subject unto his Sovereign, as in Titus chapter 3. verse 1. and in the 1. Peter, chapt. 2. verse 13. This must be performed readily, sincerely, and heartily. [Object.] But it may be said, That some are evil Princes, wicked men, contrary to God whence springeth all goodness, are such to be obeyed? I answer, [Answer.] It skilleth not what their persons be, the 〈4 pages missing〉 full security, and therefore it is just with God to make us feel his judgments in our own persons.

41 And on the morrow, all the Congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron, saying, Ye have killed the people of the Lord.

42 And it came to pass, when the Congregation was gathered against Moses and against Aaron, that they looked toward the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and behold the Cloud covered it, and the glory of the Lord appeared.

43. And Moses and Aaron came, &c.

44 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, &c.

45 Get you up from this Congregation, &c.

In these words to the ende of the chapter, we see another murmuring the day after the former. The earth that had opened her mouth was scarce closed, and the fire that was kindled, was scarce quenched, when they fell to a fresh conspiracy. This is the nature of wicked men, they are never at rest, like the sea that is ever troubled, Isaiah 57, 20. This is the nature of sin, if it be not by and by stayed and repressed, it winneth ground, and spreadeth farther like a canker. Whereby we see, it is an easy step and descent from one evil to another, as it is to go down a steep hill. Now the sin of these men is three-fold: First, they are as blind men that cannot see the judgments of the Lord, but accuse Moses of murder, and impute to him the death and destruction of those that were buried in the earth, & consumed to ashes with the fire. Moses was only the Minister of God in their destruction, the cause of their own death was in themselves: as if a malefactor, never considering what himself hath committed, should cast the cause of his condemnation vpon the Judge, and cry out against him as a shedder of blood.

Secondly, their unthankfulness, who will by no means confess that they were saved the day before, and sundry times besides from destruction, by the intercession of Moses: if he had not prayed for them, they had perished as one man with the seditious. For they were all become as one sick body wherein no part was sound, but full of wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores, Isaiah 1, 6. They seek his death that after a sort had given them life; and they rise up against him, that had been the means of their deliverance.

Thirdly, as they did condemn the innocent, so they justify the ungodly, both which are an abomination to the Lord, Prov. 17, 15. Such wicked persons as God had rooted out of the Land of the living, and turned them into the earth, which was weary to bear such unprofitable burdens; they call them the people of God, which were no better then a cursed crew of conspirators against God and such as he had appointed to manage the State Civil and Ecclesiastical. These men therefore rising up in their stead that were fallen into the pit, and defending their cause (of whom GOD had taken the account) do make themselves guilty of their sins, & are justly swept away with the judgments of God. [Doctrine.]

We learn hereby, that such is the corrupt heart of wicked man, that it will take no warning by former judgments, though they be never so fearful and evident. They had often seen how great things God had wrought among his people, yet they are blind and do not see them; they are willful, and will not regard them; they are sottish, and will take no knowledge of them, Psal. 10, 5. Isaiah 22, 12, 13 Psal. 24, 38, 39. Luk. 19, 42. Dan. 5, 22. This maketh sin out of measure sinful.

The reasons. First, because they see God [Reason 1] is a merciful & patient God, he beareth long and holdeth his peace, and therefore they think he is like unto themselves, Psal. 50, 21. so they abuse his patience and will do nothing.

Secondly, they think the day of their judgment [Reason 2] is not near, they set it far off from them. It may be, it may come in time, but they hope there will be peace in their days. Ezek. 12, 27. The people judged that the Prophet had prophesied for many days to come, and of such times as were far off: and thereupon they concluded, that the days were prolonged, and every vision failed.

Thirdly, they love their own sins, and [Reason 3] out of that great love to their sins, they are unwilling altogether to take notice of any judgment due to their sin, & cannot abide that the Minister or any other should give thē warning of the same, for they hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly, Amos 5, verse 10. The uses remain. [Use 1]

First of all, are men naturally so unwilling of themselves to set before them God's judgments? Then this serveth as an admonition to the Ministers, that they should often threaten God's iudgeme• against the wicked, seeing they are so dull a•d unwilling to take any notice of them, or to be warned by them. God worketh out his judgments in every place, and he setteth his Ministers on work, that they should cry ou•nd not spare to publish them and make them •own, though men be never so much hardened in their sins, sometimes by reason of the profit that they make by their sins, & sometimes by reason of the pleasure that they find in their sins. But howsoever they be admonished of any judgment present or imminent, they are little affected with it, they are ready to say with the Atheists, 1 Cor. 15, 32. Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we shall die. Let us alone with our doing for the present, and we will take order for those judgments that are to come hereafter, well enough.

[Object.] If any say, it behooveth not the Minister to be so fervent and earnest in his reproofs, but to handle sin more gently, because many are the worse for sharp rebukes, and few or none the better. [Answer.] I answer, this is our grief, and causeth us often to mourn in secret, but yet this cannot be our discharge: for we must labor to free and deliver all men (so far as we can) from the fierce wrath & judgments of God, otherwise their blood would light upon our heads, and be required at our hands, if they perish through our negligence. It is the nature of the Cock (as some observe) that at the dead time of the night he croweth most loud and shrill: whether he doth so or not, I know not, but this I am sure of, that the Ministers of God ought to do so; when they see men to be most dull and dead in their sins, they should be most earnest and vehement, even at the deadest times of all, they must be most zealous, that so they may deliver their own souls, and not be constrained to answer for the sins of those that perish.

[Use 2] Secondly, this reproveth the age wherein we live, of much corruption, because it can sleep so securely at the noise of God's judgments. These murmurers in this place had heard the pitiful cry and fearful noise of those that were swallowed up in the earth; yet they have already forgotten that which fell out but a day before. We commonly say, A wonder lasteth but nine days: but behold how they had seen one of the greatest wonders in the world, when the earth, whose foundation the Lord hath laid to be firm and stable, that it should not be removed forever, Psal. 104, 5) opened her mouth and swallowed these unbelievers, and they had heard with their ears their outcries when they descended into the deep, yet this wonder lasted but one day, nay not one whole day, for on the morrow it was quite out of their remembrance.

We have had all sorts of warnings whatsoever, general & particular: by his word, by his works: by his judgments upon others, and upon our selves; yet we take generally and particularly little warning by them. How hath God dealt with many of us, and how near hath he come unto us with his particular judgments upon our families? We see this with our eyes, we need not say, we have heard and our fathers have told us: for we have seen and have known the hand of GOD heavy upon their wives, their children, their servants, and yet they take no more notice of them, then if they were in another world. Sometimes God doth punish men with less judgments, when they have deserved greater: he doth but as it were touch them with the little finger, when they have deserved to be stricken with his whole hand: and smiteth them with the back of the sword, that deserve to be cut in pieces with the edge. Take example in the sin of drunkenness, and wonder at it. How many drunkards hath God cast down in a ditch, from a bridge, from an horse, where peradventure they have broken arm, or leg, or face, whē God could as easily have suffered thē to have broken their necks, & so to have ended their sinful days wretchedly, as they lived profanely: yet which of them hath been bettered or admonished by it? or who hath taken instruction from it, to fear the Lord, or to repent of the same sin? Many there are that are companions in sin, and brethren in evil; they join together in the practice thereof. God giveth warning sometimes by the death of one of these companions which dieth desperately in his sins, yet will not the rest take warning, but proceed in their wickedness, as if there were no GOD to take vengeance of their presumptuous sins.

Lastly, it belongeth to everyone to take [Use 3] notice of the corruptions of his own heart, that he is very forgetful of God's judgments & very unwilling to be admonished of them, but is ready to pass them over, and to put thē from him, as matters that no way concern him. This is a voluntary and willful ignorance. Let us therefore learn to make good use of them, and to lay them up in our hearts, as we would do a treasure in our coffers. The consideration of these well digested, may do us more good, then all the gold and silver in the world. As David said, I will never forget thy precepts, Psal. 119, 61. so let us say, I will never forget thy judgments. And as he remembered his mercies of old, so let us remember his judgments of old. And whereas the greatest fort make a mock both of their own sins, and of God's punishments, let us say with the Prophet, My flesh trembleth for fear of thee: and I am afraid of thy judgments, Psal. 119, 120. He giveth warning of his judgments before he smiteth, and he smiteth one to teach another, that so we should not fall into his judgments, but might learn to prevent them by a timely care of avoiding sin. We are yet safe from his revenging hand; let us not be secure, nor abuse his patience. Security is one of the last sins that shall be in the world. For before the fearful day of the Lord, there shall be a general security, when all are ready to fall asleep. Let us be warned by other men's harms, lest we feel them upon our selves, Isaiah 28, 15. Christ our Savior speaking of the last times, saith, When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth? Luk. 18, 8: and therefore he compareth them to the days of Noah and of Lot, when they did eat & drink, build and plant, marry and give in marriage, even until his judgments fell in the midst of them, so shall the coming of the Son of man be. The more common this sin shall be, the more watchful we ought to be that so against this universal slumber, we may prepare a general remedy.

46 And Moses said unto Aaron, Take a censer, and put fire therein from off the Altar, and put on incense, and go quickly to the Congregation, and make an atonement for them: for there is wrath gone out from the Lord, the plague is begun.

47 And Aaron took as Moses commanded, and ran into the midst of the Congregation: and behold, the plague was begun among the people, and he put on incense, and made an atonement for the people.

48 And he stood between the dead and the living, and the plague was stayed.

49 And they that died in the plague, were fourteen thousand, &c.

50. And Aaron went again, &c.

We heard before the sin, or rather the many sins of these men: now Moses setteth down the punishment that fell upon thē. Albeit God at the intercession of Moses did not consume them in a moment, yet he sent a fearful plague, and a devouring pestilence among them, that smote down fourteen thousand and five hundred, beside them that died about the matter of Korah. And this plague had passed a great deal farther, had not Moses and Aaron by their fervent prayers prevailed mightily with God to stay his hand, so that we may say as it is in the Psalm, He said, he would destroy them, had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the breach to turn away his wrath, lest he should destroy them, Psal. 106, 23. This is a borrowed speech from warfare and the besieging of a City where the walls are battered with engines that make a breach in thē, so that nothing remaineth but for the enemy to give the assault, and to make an entrance, & put all to the sword: meaning thereby that the wrath of God is as the violent shaking of the walls of a City, there can no strength hold out against him. Now Moses and Aaron did as it were oppose themselves against God's wrath and the people's danger by earnest and hearty prayer made on their behalf, that God would spare his people & not destroy them with the pestilence. For as in times of greatest danger and distress, the most valiant Captains and Soldiers offer themselves to manifest perilles when a breach is made in the wall for the enemy to enter with all his forces, that thereby they may drive back such as are pressing forward to give the assault: so did Moses and Aaron stand between the living and the dead, & interposed body for body, and life for life.

We learn hereby, that the necessity, dignity, and worthiness of the Ministry, is exceeding great in respect of the good of the people, 1 Tim 3, 1. Eph. 4, 11, 12, 13. Acts 8, 29, and 9, 11, and 10, 20, and 16, 9 10, 14.15, 29.30. Math. 16, 19.

[Reason 1] This is farther confirmed by the titles whereby they are called and adorned. They are appointed to be Shepherds, by the great Shepherd of the sheep, 1 Pet. 5. Eph. 4, 11, 12: to be Overseers of the Church of Christ, Acts 20, 28: to be as fathers over their children, Exod.

20, 12. 1 Cor 3: to be as nurses over the infants, and to be as stewards over the house to give to everyone his portion.

Secondly, they have charge over men's [Reason 2] souls not to watch over the body only, Eze. 33, 1 Tim. 5, 16.

Thirdly, the Ministry of the word is the only [Reason 3] ordinary means to bring to salvation, 1 Cor. 15, 1, 2. Rom. 10, 14. If then the necessity and dignity of salvation it self be great, then ought the Ministry to be had in great price by which we are made partakers thereof.

The uses. Great should be the love of the [Use 1] Pastor toward his people. Great should their care be over the sheep and Lambes of Christ; for as they love Christ himself the Lord of the sheep who shed his most precious blood to redeem them, so ought they to love his sheep, which are after a sort become their sheep: for as the sheep have taken charge of them to maintain them, so they have takē charge of the sheep to feed them & instruct them. Our principal endeavor ought to be to procure their good, and we must hunger and thirst after their salvation, Exod. 32, 31, 32. They ought to be our crown and glory in this life, if we look for a crown of glory in the life to come, 1 Pet. 5, 4. And as at all times we ought to seek to win men to God, so especially we ought to have a care of these sheep when they are sick: when they are visited by the hand of God we should comfort the feeble minded, and support the weak. We see how Aaron the servant of God, when the pestilence was broken in among thē, took his censur, and ran in among them, & stood between the living and the dead, that he might make an atonement for them.

Here the question may be asked, [Objection.] whether it be the Ministers duty to visit those that are sick of the pestilence & other contagious diseases; and so much the rather, because the example of Aaron seemeth to infer and persuade no less.

I answer, [Answ.] the practice of Aaron in this place is not to this purpose, for he was High Priest, and did this as a figure of Christ. For Moses & Aaron were not so simple as to think that the burning of a little incense could stay y^e plague: but this did represent the sweet savor of the mediation & intercession of Christ, who made peace between God and man. Again, the Minister is a public person, and the servant of the whole Church, and every man hath interest alike in his office and Ministry, 1 Cor. 9, 19. 2 Corin. 5, 5. We preach not our selves, but Christ Jesus the Lord, and our selves your servants for Jesus sake. If then he be the servant of the whole Church, then no one hath so great interest in him as to cause him to endanger his life, and so the whole be deprived of him. So then, before he visit such, he ought at least to have the consent and approbation of the rest of the Church, and be assigned by them unto that office. Lastly, I do not hold the visitation of the sick to be a Ministerial duty, but a Christian duty. It is not laid upon them as they are Ministers, but as they are Christians. For if it were a duty proper to them, as it is to preach the word and to minister the sacraments, then no man ought to visit the sick, but such as are Ministers of the word. I grant indeed, it cheefly lieth upon thē and is required of them, when they are best able to perform it: but sometime the faithful brother is able to do it as well as the Minister himself: and according as God hath bestowed this gift so he requireth the practice of it, Gen. 48, 1. 2 Kings 8, 29. and 13, 14. Job 2, 11. Psal. 41, 4. Math 25, 37, 40. [Object.] John 11, 3. 2 Cor. 1, 4. What then? May the Minister at such infectious times forsake the flock? and leave them to the wide world? may he shift for himself, & leave them without instruction? [Answer.] I answer, in no wise. There is then more cause to call the sounder sheep together, and to pray heartily and earnestly to God for their fellow-brethrē, remembering the counsel of the Apostle, Heb. 13, 3. Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them: and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also afflicted in body.

[Use 2] Secondly, see from hence who are indeed the brazen walls that compass the land, and hold out the enemy; not only the policy, and wisdom, and counsel of Magistrates, but likewise faithful Ministers are a strength and defense unto it. For though they be oftentimes contemned and despised, derided and abused, though no account be commonly made of thē; yet they are the strength of y^e strength of the Commonwealth, and they are the pillars that bear up the pillars, and they are forcible and notable means of keeping out the judgments of God. Hence it is, that Elisha said of Elijah, when he saw him go up by a whirlwind into heaven, My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof, 2 Kings 2, 12. And thus also spake Joash of Elisha, when he wept over his face, when he was fallen sick of the sickness whereof he died, 2 Ki. 13, 14. O my father, my father, the chariot of Israel, &c. And they may be justly so called. They beat down sin which weakeneth the Land. For what bringeth the change of Princes, the alteration of kingdoms, the ruin of states, the overthrow of houses, the invasion of enemies, and the confusion and desolation of all things, but the provoking of God unto wrath by sin? Sin is as the breach in a wall that weakeneth the City, and openeth a gate to the enemy. Let the walls be never so well flanked with ditches, trenches, barricadoes, citadels, and castles, countermures and fortifications, sin maketh them all unprofitable. Hence it is, that the people falling into idolatry, are said to be made naked by Aaron, Exod. 32, 25. Obedience is as a strong bank & bulwark, that keepeth the flood of vengeance & indignation from the city of God. No manner of defense can keep out the enemy, if sin be freely entertained within. The wall is repaired and the breach is made up by repentance.

Thirdly, they are in poor and pitiful case [Use 3] for ignorance, for wickedness, for peril and danger to perish, where yet this benefit is not vouchsafed. They are as a land threatened with infinite and innumerable enemies, which are without chariots and horsemen, without armor and munition. A man of necessity must continue languishing in pain, having a broken member or a bone out of joint, except he have a skillful Surgeon or bone-setter. We are of our selves as members out of joint, rent and divided asunder in opinion and practice one from another, which are coupled and knit together between themselves by the Ministry of the word, which serveth for the gathering together of the Saints, Eph. 4, ver. 11, 12. When the blind are suffered to lead the blind, both fall into the ditch. The poor cripple remained for the space of thirty eight years in woeful taking, because he had no mā when the water was troubled by descending of the Angel, to put him into the pool: so is it with those that cannot come to the water of life, brought by the Angels of the Churches, they cannot be cured of their diseases. They are in a most pitiful case that want bread to sustain life, they must needs in short time famish because they have no food, Amos 8.11. It is often to be considered of us, what the Prophet Hosea teacheth, chap. 9, 6. The days of visitation are come, the days of recompense are come, Israel shall know it: And why so? the answer is, The Prophet is a fool, the spiritual man is mad. It is very uncomfortable to be in a wide house in a dark night, where is no light at all, and yet much work to be done and no means to give direction: such is their condition that want Teachers, who are the light of the house, and the salt of the earth, without which we rot and putrefy in sin, like flesh vnsalted and unseasoned.

Fourthly, woe to the foolish Prophets, that [Use 4] prophesy out of their own hearts, & follow their own spirit, and have seen nothing, Ezek. 13, 4, 5. These cannot assure themselves to be the Lord's watchmen. These Prophets are like the foxes in the Desert, they have not gone up into the gappes, neither made up the hedge for the house of Israel to stand in the battle in the day of the Lord. Where the Prophet setteth down sundry true notes of false teachers, how we should know them.

First, they teach themselves, and not the truth of God; they are wise out of their own wits, not out of God's word: they are ready to speak for themselves, not in the cause of God. The true Pastors bring the word of GOD that sent them, John 7, 16, 17, 18. 2 Pet. 1, 21, 22. Such then as broach new doctrine which they never learned out of the word, nor received from God, are without question false teachers. Secondly, they are like hungry foxes that lie in wait for their prey, given to covetousness and seeking after their own gain, they will transgress for a piece of bread. These intend nothing but filthy lucre, & love the wages of iniquity, as Balaam did, 2 Pet. 2, 3, 13, 14, 15. Jude, ver. 12, 16. Such a one was Judas. Thirdly, they never go up to the breach, nor make up the hedge for the City or Vineyard of God, they care not though the enemy spoil the one and root up the other: they never make intercession for the people, they rebuke not, they exhort not, they threaten not, rather they proclaim peace & promise liberty for everyone to do what he list, 1 Pet. 2, 19.

[Use 5] Lastly, the people must perform to their Ministers, such duties as are answerable unto their care. First, they must make good use of the Ministry, desiring truly to be gathered to the Church by the effectual working thereof, Acts 2, 37, 38, 47, & 16, 30. We have shown before, chap. 3, that the most flourishing commonwelths are nothing except this be among them. Secondly, it behooveth us to rejoice in seeing or hearing of any approved man and faithful Teacher brought into the Ministry of the word, and the service of the Church by an ordinary and lawful calling, Lu. 1, 14, 15. 16, 17. & on the other side to be grieved whē such are taken out of the Church, and the use of them denied, Acts 20, 37, 38. or such kept out that have worthy gifts & desire to be employed. But we see commonly men are glad to see such brought into y^e Church, as will speak of wine and strong drink, Mic. 2, 11. such as will use them well in tithes, such as will not trouble them long in teaching, such as will feast them often at his table. Lastly they must express their hearty love to their Ministers again, recompensing love for love, and laboring to do them good, whom they see to be so needful for thē: even as necessary as the Physician in time of sickness, as the Captain in time of war, as the reapers in time of harvest. Woe therefore shall be to those that account them worthless, needless, fruitless.

[Ver. 47, 48. He put on incense, and made an atonement for the people; and stood between the living and the dead, &c.] Observe again another point, that Moses and Aaron adventured their own lives in the time of this plague for the good of the people, they made supplication for them, because they were the people of God, the posterity of faithful Abraham, and were committed to their charge & oversight, and because the enemies, both the Egyptians and the Canaanites should not blaspheme the Name of God, and triumph in their destruction. Hence it is, that Aaron as he was appointed and commanded, did put incense in his censer, and made an atonement for the people. We learn hereby, that the force, efficacy, and necessity of prayer to God is very great, to obtain any blessing, or to remove any judgment, 1 Chron. 21, 17. Phil. 1, 4. 1 Thess. 5, 17. Thus did Moses often prevail, Exod. 17, and 32. Luke 21, ver. 36. Joash acknowledged that the prayers of Elisha an holy Prophet of god stood his kingdom in more stead, then all the horses and chariots of Israel could do, 2 King. 13, 14. The reasons.

First, it is a fruit of faith, and a testimony [Reason 1] to our own hearts, that we do believe. It is the prayer of faith that saveth. James 5, ver. 15. But where there is no calling upon the Name of God by prayer, there can be no faith in God at all. These cannot prevail with God, nor obtain anything at his hands.

Secondly, whatsoever we receive frō God, [Reason 2] we must receive it by prayer. For what is it that prayer cannot obtain? whatsoever we ask, we receive, Math. 7.7. Our wants therefore being great, the necessity of this duty must needs be great also.

Thirdly, it is a part of our spiritual armor, [Reason 3] or at least that which giveth us strength to use the armor appointed to every Christian, Eph. 6, 16. without which all the rest will serve us in little stead.

First, this reproveth such as think it to [Use 1] be needless to be performed to God, because he knoweth whereof we have need, and need not to be put in mind thereof. It had been a very needless thing for Moses and Aaron to be so earnest for the people, to run in with all haste, and to stand between the living and the dead, if prayer had been needless or bootlesse. It is true, he knoweth whereof we are made, and it is true, he needeth no remembrancer or informer to put him in mind of what he hath forgotten: howbeit this ought rather to stir us up to prayer, as we see, Math. 6, verses 8, 9. Your heavenly Father knoweth whereof ye have need, after this manner therefore pray ye: he concludeth that we ought therefore to pray, because our heavenly Father knoweth what we want: whereas these would gather the clean contrary, God knoweth what we need, therefore pray not at all. If the former be Christ's conclusion, the latter must needs be the devils.

Again, it reproveth those that would overthrow prayer by the decree of God, by the which indeed it is established. For thus they reason; forasmuch as God hath decreed and determined with himself before hand all things, what he will do and what he will not do, what he will give and what he will not give, which purpose of his, our prayer cannot alter, neither can it change the thing that is gone out of his mouth: to what end therefore should we pray? and if we do, what benefit shall we reap by our prayer, more then we should if we prayed not? These are like to those wicked men described in the Scriptures, Job 21, verse 15, What profit should we have, if we pray unto him? Mal. 3, 14.

To answer these, we must know that as God hath determined what he will give & bestow, so he hath also determined that we shall use the means to obtain them. The woman of Samaria, who pretended that Jacob their father had given them the well, whereof he drank himself, and his children, and his cattle, yet knew that they must have some waterpot or somewhat else to draw water out of y^e well. God's decree is as a well of living water, & as the headspring of all good things: prayer is as the bucket or pitcher to draw out the waters. As then God hath decreed to give, so he hath decreed to give by prayer, and hath appointed that we should ask, & without prayer we have no promise to receive. God determined that he would not utterly destroy the Israelites for this murmuring, though he threatened them, as we saw before. And why? because he had also determined, that Moses should turn away his anger by his prayer for them, so that by means of his prayer, they should be spared. The Lord promised to Elijah, that he would send a gracious rain in Israel, which it had wanted for the space of three years and six months; nevertheless, we read that the Prophet ceased not to pray for the performance of it, 1 Kin. 18, 42. I am. 5, 18. God had determined after 70. years captivity to deliver his people out of Babylon, nevertheless, Daniel ceased not to pray to God to remember his promise and to bring them back, ch. 9. that their sins might not hinder the work of God. Lastly, it reproveth such as are ignorant, and know not how to pray, neither yet what prayer means: not how to begin, nor how to make an end: neither what to ask, nor how to behave themselves in prayer.

[Use 2] Secondly, everyone must labor to perform this duty, and to make known his wants unto God, publicly and privately, and both of them must be performed constantly and feelingly. Some under pretence & color of their private prayers & devotions, neglect the public invocation of God, and the assembling of the Church. But these dally with the people of God, and deceive their own souls, and have taught their tongues to lie. For who will trust them or believe them? Doubtless, if they thought their own private prayers available, they would much more consider, that the public prayers of the whole Church gathered together in his Name are so, much rather. This is more forcible in it self, more acceptable to God, and more profitable to our selves. More forcible and powerful, because the mouths of many being opened, do make a louder cry in the ears of God, and move him the sooner to hear us, Joel 2, 16, 17. It is more regarded of God, because it tendeth more to his honor and glory, & he is much delighted in y^e joint-consent of his Saints worshipping of him, Mat. 18, 20. It is more profitable to our selves, because it bringeth down a greater blessing: to omit that it serveth as a special means of edification, because our common prayers serve to stir up the zeal and enflame the affections one of another, as every stick put into the fire, serveth to make the hear the greater. Again, others lurking under the shadow of public prayers, think themselves wholly discharged of any farther duty, and not once in all their lives prayed privately. But we must be careful to perform this duty, not only publicly with others, but privately with our families, in our houses, and secretly also by our selves in our chambers, when the door is shut and no man seeth us, but our heavenly Father only, who seeing us perform it secretly, will reward us openly, Math. 6, 6. Many think it to be sufficient to pray with others, or to be present at the prayers of others, & think some force to be in it, and some good to come to rhemselves by it: but these do greatly deceive themselves. This praying in the presence of others only, is only lip-labor; whereas our prayer should be heart-labor. For all the powers of the heart and soul ought to manifest themselves, and to be set on work in that holy exercise. If any sickness or other visitation from God befall them, they will peradventure say somewhat, but this prayer is often as sick as the sick man himself. These are like to wicked Ahab, he never prayed but in time of trouble; then they trouble God a little, but it is sore against their wills, for so that they might want their troubles, they could be content y^t he should want, & themselves spare their prayers. Such as pray only in the church, pray only for fashion, or for custom, or for company, because it is the manner of all others to do so. Thus while they think they have performed a service and sacrifice to God, they have rather dishonored and despised him. Every Christian that is of the Church, should make his house a Church, to perform the worship of God in it, Rom. 16, 5. Philem. verse 2. This is a great honor to any house & family. They are unworthy to be fathers and masters of families, that do not ordinarily assemble them to this duty; because thereby, they, and all their houses, their goods, and substance lie open to God's curse, neither can they look for any blessing to come upon them.

Lastly, let us all stir up our selves to perform [Use 3] this duty, let us often exercise it. Christ our Savior, a mirror and pattern of all righteousness, oftentimes used it, and spent whole nights in prayer, Luk. 6, v. 12. Psalm. 55, 17. and 119, 62. God hath commanded it; our own necessity hath commended it; the fruit of it hath sanctified it. We have daily sins, daily wants, daily temptations, daily dangers, daily decays in good things: prayer is as food, whereby the graces of God are preserved & increased.

[Aarō made an atonement for the people, & stood between the living & the dead.] Observe in these words that Aaron the high Priest, in taking his censer, & offering up with fire taken from the Altar incense to God, is a notable figure and type of the intercession of Christ, the true high Priest of our profession, Heb. 3, 1. that he maketh for all his elect to his Father. The doctrine is this, Christ Jesus hath set himself as Mediator between God and men. For Origen saith well, hom, 9. in Numer. that we must ascend unto the high mystery (or signification) of this Scripture, and consider how Christ Jesus, the great high Priest, (Heb. 4, 14.) taking our nature upon him, stood as in the midst between the living and the dead, and brought it to pass by his death, that death should spread no farther, 1 Tim. 2, 5. John 12, 32. Rom. 5, 11. and 8, 34. He maketh intercession for us, not that now he boweth the knee to his Father, or lifteth up his eyes, or spreadeth abroad his hands, or uttereth any voice of prayer for his Church being now in the heavens, for this he hath already sufficiently performed, John. 17, 1. Now he presenteth to his Father the merits of his death and passion, of his obedience and resurrection, which hath the force of a lively prayer, and reconcileth the Father unto us. Thus then we see that Christ Jesus is the true Aaron the high Priest that maketh atonement between God and us, Heb. 7, 24, 25. Eph. 1, verse 5, 6.

[Reason 1] The reasons. Christ Jesus our Redeemer hath fulfilled all the parts of a Mediator, and left none vnperfected, he alone hath trodē the winepress of the wrath of his Father, Isaiah 65, 5. He appeareth before the Father for us and in our names, as we do before the Father in his name, he offereth up our prayers, and worketh our salvation, John. 17, 9. Heb. 4, 14, & 2, 15,

17. He hath delivered all them which for fear of death [Reason 2] were all their life time subject to bondage. Secondly, the blood of Bulls and Goats outwardly sprinkled, & the ashes of beasts were not false & lying signs representing that which is not, but true and effectual signs of purifying and cleansing: these did sanctify the unclean as touching the purifying of the flesh, because such as were shut out of the Congregation for some legal and external uncleanness, had thereby entrance again into the assemblies, & might lawfully come to the worship of God, and be partakers of holy things: much more thē doth the blood of Christ (which is the truth & substance of all the former) and which indeed is the blood of the Son of God, Acts 20, 28. purge your consciences from dead works, to serve the living God, Heb. 9, 13, 14, 14, 24.

[Use 1] The uses remain. First, this teacheth that we have no other Mediator in heauē or earth, but Jesus Christ who maketh intercession for us. In the Old Testament, no prayer is made to Enoch though he walked with God; or to Abraham, though the father of the faithful: or to Moses, though God spake to him face to face: no prayer was offered up to any Cherubin or Seraphin, to any Saint or Angel. The Church of Rome therefore is an Apostate Church, which hath made so many Mediators and Advocates for us in heaven, as there are Saints departed and perfected; yea, which is more absurd, they make one Saint Patron for one disease, and another for another, so that they have left nothing for Christ to do, as I have shown more at large elsewhere. Neither let them object, that there is one Mediator of redemption, but many Mediators of intercession. But as this is an evil distinction, so it is as evilly observed by themselves. And will they bear us in hand that the simple people (simple indeed they are (God wot) among them) understand this difference? and can tell how to distinguish between these, to give to each his due and no more? But what speak I of the simple people? of whom I may speak as Jeremiah doth, Surely these are poor, they are foolish; for they know not the way of the Lord, nor the judgment of their God: I will go unto the great ones and speak unto them. The learned themselves among them do join with Christ our Savior other Mediators, not only of intercession, but also of redemption and salvation. Hitherto cometh the prayer to the Popes great martyr, Thomas Becket of Canterbury, who died in the Popes quarrel, which he maintained against his souereigne king, Henry the second, and therefore a false martyr, but a true traitor and rebel.

Tu per Thomae sanguinē, quem pro te impendit,

Fac nos (Christ) scandere, quo Thomas ascendit,

that is,

By the blood of Thomas, which he for thee did spend,

Make us (O Christ) to climb whither Thomas did ascend.

A most blasphemous prayer, wherein they present not the blood of Christ who gave himself a ransom for us, but the blood of Thomas to bring us to heaven. It were endless to show their idolatrous prayers made to y^e blessed Virgin, desiring to have her to reconcile them to her Son. Among the rest, consider this one:

O foelix puerpera, nostra pians scelera,

Iure matris impera

that is;

O holy mother, which dost purge away our sins, command thou him that is our redeemer by thy motherly authority. And touching Peter and Paul, they say, Concede vt amborum meritis aeternitatis gloriam consequamur, that is, Grant that by the merits of them both, we may obtain eternal glory. Neither shall we need to marvel at these things (although they sound harsh in all Christian ears) if we consider what they ascribe unto the Cross of Christ, I mean to the wood & tree to which they make their prayer to this day, saying,

O crux, aue, spes unica,

Hoc passionis tempore,

Auge pijs iustitiam

Reis{que} dona veniam;

that is,

O Cross, all hail, thou that art our only hope; at this time of the passion increase thou righteousness to the godly, and grant pardon to them that are guilty. Other gross blasphemies they have reformed in their Portesse, but this which giveth as great and gross honor to the wooden cross they have reserved and retained. What is become now of their distinction, that Christ is the Mediator of redemption, but the Saints of intercession, when as they ascribe to the Virgin Mary, to Peter, to Paul, nay to a vile traitor, nay to a wooden cross, power to purge away the sins of the faithful, to grant them pardon and forgiveness, and to bring them to salvation? Moreover, the Apostle speaking of one Mediator, and naming Christ to be that one, 1 Tim. 2, 5. speaketh in that place of prayer, and therefore even in prayer he will have us to acknowledge no Mediator of intercession, but Christ Jesus only. A Mediator of intercession as it is defined by Augustine, cannot agree to any saving to Christ; for he teacheth, that it is commanded that every Christian should pray for others, but he, who requests for all, and for whom none requesteth, is the one and true Mediator. Again, they object, [Object.] that the Saints pray for us, and therefore we may pray to them. [Answ.] I answer, this will not follow. Again, they pray for the perfecting of the body of Christ, & desire the full gathering together of the Saints, they long for the resurrection & restitution of their bodies which lie in the dust, they wish to see the auengement of the blood of the holy martyrs shed for the testimony of the truth, and crave to behold the last coming of Christ to judgment to restore all things: howbeit they know not the particular troubles of God's children, neither understand the inward wrestlings and bucklings with sin and Satan which the conscience sustaineth, no more then Eli knew the trouble of heart that Hannah had, though she prayed in his presence. Wherefore, let us content our selves with the only and all-sufficient mediation of Christ, remembering the saying of the Apostle John, We have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins, 1 John. 2, 1, 2. And seeing he calleth us unto himself, let us not refuse to go to him. When he saith, Come to me, Mat. 11, 28. shall we say, nay, we will go to some other? When Mary called her sister secretly, saying, The master is come, and calleth for thee; as soon as she heard that, she arose quickly, and came unto him. So it ought to be with us, Our master Christ calleth us, why do we run from him, why do we not run to him? why do we run to any other? Let us not refuse to come to him, who gave his life for us that we might live in him. Shall we then depart from him that calleth us, to them y^t call us not, that know us not, that hear us not, y^t help us not, y^t save us not?

Secondly, this condemneth the ignorant [Use 2] multitude, which through palpable and horrible ignorance rush into the presence of God without any Mediator, knowing neither God nor themselves. They dream that God is merciful, & never consider what he is in his own nature, to wit, a God of perfection, a most just Judge: and we can never reconcile his mercy and justice, but by looking upon him in y^e face and countenance of Christ Jesus, in whom only he is well pleased, Mat. 3, 17. We can receive nothing at his hands, except we come to him in his Son. For as he is perfect, so he accepteth of nothing that is imperfect. But we can offer nothing to God, but that which is tainted and defiled with sin; and if God look upon us & our wants out of his Son, we are no better then the children of wrath, he findeth matter enough in us to reject our works, and to condemn our persons. We have our prayers heard no other way but in the Name of Christ. We are no otherwise accepted but in his beloved, to wit, in Christ. He is the only Savior of the Church, he saveth his people from death, and him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil. He saveth us from our sins, guilt, and punishment. For sin is the power & sting of death, & an ugly serpent; Christ only hath quelled him, he hath merited our salvation by his death and passion, none else hath done it, none else could do it. The Saints glorified, and all the company of y^e elect Angels in heaven were too weak and unworthy to accomplish this work. The Papists, as we have shown, make him but half a Savior, joining others with him in y^e work of salvation. For they teach that with Christ's merits we must join the works of grace in the matter of iustificatiō, & that with Christ's satisfaction of y^e wrath of God, we must join our satisfaction by temporal punishment. But we have shown before, that he will be a sole Savior, or else no Savior at all.

Thirdly, it behooveth us in remembrance of [Use 3] this excellent benefit of Christ's atonement, to be thankful to God. This is the main cause of all thankfulness. The most common blessings which we receive, must at all times move us to be thankful, as meat, drink, health, wealth, liberty, peace, prosperity, and the like; but this should as it were swallow up all the remembrance of all the rest, and the zeal thereof cōsume us: What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the Name of the Lord. What deadness of heart then remaineth in many mē, that never remember this great work, thereby to be provoked to obedience and newness of life, that so we may return our love to God again, who loved us first?

Lastly, we must acknowledge, what we are [Use 4] in our selves, to wit, utterly lost, the enemies of God, the children of wrath, the bondslaves of Satan, and the heirs of condemnation. This we must confess frō the bottom of our hearts, & have a lively feeling thereof, before we can receive him as our Peace-maker and Savior, Math. 18, 11. and 15, 14. Luke 4, 18, and 19, 10. We must say with Daniel, Shame and confusion of faces belongeth unto us, chap. 9, 8. What was due to the people in this place, and what might they have looked for, if Aaron had not made an atonement, but present death? So is it with us, we are borne dead in sins and trespasses, & can look for nothing but wrath, and judgment, and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries, Hebr. 10, 27. if Christ do not make peace between God and us. Let us therefore look for salvation from him, as men hearing of cunning Physicians to cure diseases, do seek and send to thē far and near, Math. 9, 20, 21. John chap. 7, verse 37.

CHAP. XVII.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and take of everyone of them a rod, according to the house of their fathers, of all their Princes according to the house of their fathers, twelve rods; write thou every man's name upon his rod.

3. And thou shalt write Aaron's name upon the rod of Levi, for one rod shall be for the head of the house of their fathers.

WEe have seen in the former chapter, how the people envied Moses in the Camp, and Aaron the Saint of the Lord, Psalm. 106, 16, so that he was constrained to ratify & confirm the Priesthood by the swallowing up of Dathan and Abiram in the earth, and by consuming of Korah and his confederates with fire, all of them being the children of rebellion, as they are called in this chapter, verse 10. But here we may behold a notable example of God's wonderful mercy, who is more ready to compassion then to revenge, and therefore destroyeth some, that he may instruct others. Wherefore in this chapter Moses continueth the same argument handled before, and showeth how GOD once again establisheth the Priesthood to Aaron and his sons for an everlasting covenant; whereupon he commandeth that every Tribe should bring a wooden staff, with a name written upon them, & to put them together, so as they might not be discerned asunder, but by the sight of the names. These staves thus prepared and ordered, were laid before God in the Sanctuary, and when they were taken thence again, Aaron's staff that had his name upon it, did flourish, and all the rest without any change remained dry and dead, as they were before: whereby the Lord shown, that he had chosen that house to serve in the Priesthood.

Consider in this present chapter, two things: First, the confirmation of the Priesthood to Aaron and his snnnes. Secondly, the repentance of the people, and resting in the ordinance of God, after they were humbled by the plagues of God, and saw the flourishing of Aaron's rod.

Touching the first, to wit, the ratification of the Priesthood, and the deciding of the controversy to whom it did belong, & ought to belong hereafter, we must observe the commandment of God to Moses, and his obedience. God commandeth Moses to take of every Tribe a rod. Now whether it were of several kinds of wood, according to the number of the Tribes, or of one kind only, to wit, the almond, as Munster thinketh, it is uncertain. And the question may be asked, whereas every staff must have a name written, that is, the 12 rods, 12 names, what name was written? Some think, that the Tribe of Reuben had the name of Reuben; the Tribe of Simeon, y^e name of Simeon, and so of the rest. But it is to be thought, y^t the name of the Prince of y^e Tribe was written, rather thē the name of the author of the Tribe; and the words of the text do favor this interpretation, v. 2. else to what purpose is Moses appointed to take several rods of the Princes of every Tribe? so that for example the rod of the Tribe of Reuben had the name of Elizur, written, and so of the rest, as they have been set down before, ch. 1, 5, 6, 7. and 7, 12, 30, 36. For as the name of Aaron was written upon the rod of Levi, not the name of Levi himself, v. 3. so no doubt the names of other Princes that were heads of the families of their fathers, were written upon the rods of their Tribes, not the names of the authors of y^e Tribes. Al these rods were laid up together in the Tabernacle of the Congregation: then y^e Lord giveth them this token to assure them whom the Lord chose and ordained, that there might be no more contention about the Priesthood, namely, that his rod should wax green, flourish, and bear blossoms. Thus doth God cut off all occasions of murmuring among them.

[Speak unto the children of Israel, and take of everyone of them a rod.] The people ought to have been thoroughly humbled for their offense, & to have their hard hearts broken in pieces by the consideration of God's judgments and miracles, and so thoroughly to be moved to reverence the ordinance of God concerning the Priesthood. But because God is constrained to work another miracle, & to change the course of nature, and to call things that were not, as though they were, it appeareth they were not yet sufficiently touched and humbled: for God doeth no work in vain. If then the dignity of the Priesthood had been sufficiently confirmed by the punishment taken of the seditious and their partakers, this new miracle had not been wrought in the dry and withered rod. Wherefore God goeth about by this means to remedy their pride and presumption, and showeth his great mercy and goodness toward them in calling them to repentance and in curing of their infirmities. We learn hereby, [Doctrin^e.] that the Lord is very desirous to have sinners converted and brought to repentance, that so he may save them, Isaiah 65, 2. Ezek. 33, 11. and 18, 31, 32. Math, 23, 37. 2 Cor. 5, 20. Peter preacheth repentance to them that killed the Prince of life and denied him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go, Acts 3, 13, 15. Even to these that murdered and betrayed the Son of God, did the Lord offer salvation. To this end he is of such great patience, because he is not willing that any one should perish, 2 Pet. 3, 9. The reasons.

[Reason 1] Because first, they are his creatures and his workmanship, and therefore there is great reason, why he should desire their good. Natural parents do desire to save and keep in health their children. They that belong to God are his dear children, Isaiah 49, 15, 16. He loveth [Reason 2] Israel as his first borne. Secondly, he hath not only created them when they were not, but also redeemed them when they were lost, and that with no less price, then with the blood of his own Son, Col. 1, 20. 1 John. 1, 7. Ro. 5, 9, 10. If then he have done this for them, doubtless he will go forward with his love toward them: he will raise up them that are fallen, seek them that are lost, quicken them that are dead, and bring them home that are [Reason 3] strangers to him. Thirdly, it is more honor to God to convert and save, then to destroy and cast away his people. Doubt not, but be well assured, that God will do that which tendeth most to his own glory, Rom. 11, 1, 2. Justice and judgment causeth him to be feared, but his mercy and love is that which maketh him to be honored of men.

[Use 1] The uses remain. Hath God an earnest desire to convert and save men? Then it ought also to be our desire to be like in this to our heavenly Father, that is, to labor to convert and bring home others unto God, that go astray from him: for in so doing we shall follow the footsteps and example of God; dealing with our brethren in mercy and compassion as God hath dealt with us. Let the husband labor to convert the wife, and the wife to win her husband; the parents their children, and the children their parents: and everyone to convert his brother. A duty most acceptable to God, and most profitable to others. An argument of love and charity, greater love then this can no man show. So saith Christ to Peter, When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren, Luke 22, 32. I am. 5, 19, 20.

Secondly, this serveth to condemn the [Use 2] practice of many men in our times, and to testify that they are far from God, and can have no assurance to themselves that they are his children and bear his image. God is desirous to seek out and to save them that are lost, like the good Shepherd that leaveth 99 in the wilderness, and this was the end of the coming of Christ. But we are for the most part careless in this duty: few do think it to belong unto them. Others are so far from seeking to convert, that they rather seek to subvert others: and of these the number is far greater then of the former, who do cross by all means they can, the purpose and desire of God. He laboreth to save, and they to destroy: he to build, and they to pull down; he to plant, and they to root up; he to bring to heaven, and they to hell. These are of their father the devil, and his lusts they do: they join with him, they labor for him, they advance and enlarge his kingdom, and they seek to bring moe unto him. This is a fearful sin, which we must repent of, or else we shall repent of it when it is too late.

Lastly, this must teach everyone to have a [Use 3] special care of his own salvation, seeing God is so desirous of it. For every man should be more careful of his own good, then another, or of another's. It is so in the body, it ought also to be so in the soul. We cannot be more careful of our own salvation then God is: & therefore seeing he is so desirous of it, let every man labor to do what in him lieth toward his conversion, that so God may accept of him.

But some will say, [Object.] It lieth not in my power to convert myself, I can do nothing until it please God to work it. I answer, [Answer.] do that which is in thy power; and God will give a blessing. It lieth in thy power to hear y^e word, to read the Scriptures, and to attend to the Ministry of it. Come diligently and constantly to the place of God's worship, & God will work in thee his grace to thy conversion. If thou do not, never accuse God, but the frowardness of thine own will which failest in that which thou art enabled to do. For if we say we desire salvation, and yet despise the means, we deceive our selves. On the other side, from hence ariseth matter of special comfort to everyone that truly endeuoreth his own salvation, and can make enquiry into his estate, whether he be one of that number that shall be saved, or not. For although he be clogged with many sins, and daily addeth more unto the burden, yet let him not despair, nor think they shall hinder his salvation.

This is his comfort, that with God all things are possible: and when the desire and power of God go together, how great soever his sins be, he shall not need to doubt of his salvation. Let him look up to Christ, his merits do surmount all our sins.

4 And thou shalt lay them up in the Tabernacle of the Congregation before the testimony, where I will meet with you.

5 And it shall come to pass, that the man's rod whom I shall choose, shall blossom; and I will make to cease from me the murmurings of the children of Israel, whereby they murmur against you.

6 And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, &c.

The Lord goeth forward to declare his will to Moses, and foretellet his great and miraculous work, that in one day the rod should bring forth buds, blossoms, and fruits, to stay the murmuring of the people. All miracles serve to some good end, and as a kind of Sacraments do confirm some doctrine. These rods were not green and growing, but were long since cut off from their trees, and altogether withered: and (according to the opinion of some) were such as the Princes for honors sake did carry when they executed judgment. Wherefore it was impossible, according to the course of nature, that any of them should be fresh, and flourish, and bring forth fruit. For as they were all of them laid up together, so they were all of them alike dead, and without life: and therefore, whereas Aaron's rod flourished, and by flourishing the vigor of life appeared to be in it, it manifested apparently the power of God, and the Priesthood of Aaron. If any object, that the emulation and murmuring could not by this means be taken away between the house of Aaron, and the rest of the Levites, seeing his name only was written upon the rod, and not the names of any of them. I answer, that seeing God shown forth his power almighty, in that rod which had the name of Aaron upon it, it was a plain sign and infallible token, that Aaron was chosen to the Priesthood, and that all others were excluded from that dignity, and so the people confess in the end of the chapt. Now whereas God in the flourishing of the rod, saith that he would show whom he had chosen, he declareth that in bestowing his gifts and benefits in the church, he doth not respect any man's merit, but dealeth with everyone according to his own good pleasure. Aaron was not advanced to the Priestly dignity by any virtue of his own, but merely through the grace of God. So are we adopted and made heirs of everlasting life, not through our own works or merits, but by God's favor, seeing it is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that showeth mercy, Ro 9, 16. Of this we have spoken before, chap. 2. v. 18.19. Touching this miracle which God purposeth and promiseth to work in the sight of all Israel, we learn, [Doctrine.] That God hath from time to time wrought miracles against the course of nature for the good of his church. He is not tied to the ordinary course of natural things, but he worketh extraordinarily so often as it pleaseth him. All times and ages of the church witness this truth, and testify the miraculous works of his hand, in the Sun, in the Moon, in the Air, in the Waters, in the Fire, in the Earth, and in all creatures both high and low. Thus he plagued the Egyptians, Psal. 105, 27▪ 29, 30, 32, 34, &c. Thus he dealt with his own people when they came out of Egypt, Psa. 78, 12, 13, 14.15, 16. Levite. 9.24. Joshua 10, 12 Judge. 6, 21 & 13, 19. 1 Kings 18. In the New Testament we have sundry miracles of Christ our Savior: and the miracle of all miracles accomplished which was prophesied long before, that a Virgin should conceive and bear a son, Isaiah 7. verse 14. Math. 1. verse 23. Luk. 1, 31.

The Reasons follow. First, that so he might [Reason 1] work faith in them that otherwise would not believe. Thus doth God take away all excuse, when he worketh above nature, as Exod. 4, 1. When Moses was sent to the Israelites in Egypt, to tell them of their deliverance, y^t God had heard their groans and sighs, & had seen all their troubles and miseries: he alleged that the people would not believe him, nor hearken unto his voice; and therefore did the Lord enable him to turn his rod into a serpent, & the serpent into his rod, that so they might believe that the Lord God of their fathers had appeared unto him, Exod. 4, 5. Again, he is willed to put his hand into his bosom, and when he pulled it out, it was leprous as snow, verse 6. and putting his hand into his bosom again, when he pulled it out, Behold it was turned again as his other flesh, verse 7. Whereupon the Lord saith, If they will not believe thee, nor hearken to the voice of the first sign, they will believe the voice of the latter sign, verse 8. And if they would not believe either the one or the other, he is yet willed to take the water of the River, and to pour it upon the dry land, and the water should become blood upon the dry land.

Secondly, God getteth glory hereby among [Reason 2] his children, his praise is by it set forth, when by nothing else. We are moved at strange things, John 11, 15, 45. and taught to believe. Lazarus was raised from the dead, who had lain in the grave four days, ver. 39. to show forth God's glory, verse 40. Math. 9, 8. Luke 13, 13. and 23, 47. So that miracles serve to work faith in us, and to gain glory to God. The Uses.

First, consider from hence the greatness and [Use 1] power of God, who is to be compared unto him? Isaiah 44, 24. and 45, 5. None of all the creatures, be they never so excellent in strength and glorious in power, can do such things, & therefore nothing can be matched with him; let him therefore be preferred above all. This is the use urged by Moses in his song of thanksgiving after their passing over the red sea, Exod. 15, 10, 11. and Psal. 77.12, 13, 14. He is the only author of miracles, he it is only that properly doth them, and no other. For a miracle is a work wrought above the strength of nature, as we shall show more largely afterward. But no creature can work above the course of nature, he only that is the author of nature must do it.

[Object.] But it may be objected, that some of the Prophets did raise the dead, as Elijah 1 Kin. 17, 21, 22. and Elisha 2 King. 4, 34, 35. made Iron to swim, being an heavy thing, to ascend upward, 2 Kings 6, 6. commanded fire to come from heaven, being a light thing, to descend downward, 2 Kin. 1, 10. healed many incurable diseases, 2 Kings 5, 10. and wrought many great works, Heb. 11, 33, 34, 35. So did the Apostles raise the dead, cleanse the Leapers, restore sight to the blind, healed the sick, cast out devils, and this was their office & calling to which they were appointed, Math. 10, 8. [Answer.] Acts 5, 15. & 19, 12. I answer, the gift which they had was the faith of miracles. And this was done in this manner. God revealed unto them by his Spirit, that he would work such and such a miracle when they prayed, & thereupon either by commanding the evil spirit to depart in the name of Christ, or by imposition of hands in other works they wrought the same. They having this knowledge by revelation of the purpose of God, believed the same, and were as the mouth of God, and the hand of God, being his messengers, to signify what he would do, Mark 11, 22, 23. Heb. 11, 33, 34. They then had no power of their own, it was the divine power only that wrought them.

[Object.] But some will say, that the devils can work miracles contrary to nature, and therefore it is not proper to God. [Answer.] I answer, he can work wonders, but not miracles. For though every miracle be a wonder, yet every wonder is not a miracle. He can do things extraordinary, or otherwise then the common course of nature, but he cannot work above or against nature. Thus he caused fire to fall from heaven, & the winds to blow down dwelling houses, as we see in the history of Job. He also caused blisters and ulcers to arise in his body, and without question they were true ulcers, as y^e Scriptures plainly setteth down, and Job truly felt, Job 2, 7, 8. Howbeit this he did no otherwise but by the force of nature, for he cannot make rain, or thunder, or lightning, or wind, or storm, or tempest; this is the work of God, and cometh from his hand, Gen. 7, 4. Deut. 11, 14. & 28, 12. 1 Sam. 12, 17, 18. 1 Kin. 8, 35, 36. and 17, 14. & 18, 1. 2 Kin. 3, 17. Job 5, 10. and 28, 26. and 37, 23, 45. Psalm 105, 32. & 107, 25. & 135, 7. & 147, 8. & 148, 7, 8. Ier. 5, 24. & 10, 13. & 51, 16. Zach. 10, 1. Acts 14, 17. James 5, 18. The devil cannot make the matter whereof the rain is engendered. They then are deceived, that think the devil is able to make rain, or hail, or snow, or vapor, or the least fly that flieth in the air, or the smallest worm that creepeth in the earth. Nevertheless, when the matter of storms & tempests is prepared of God, he can gather it, and hasten it, and make it more terrible, and carry it from place to place, from country to country. For as he can assume a body, but not make a body: so he can use the wind, but not create the wind. If storms and winds might be raised and framed by the power of Satan, they might be said to execute his word, & he might be said to be the father of the rain. So then briefly, it is safest to hold this as a truth, that God caused the fire, but Satan brought it upon. Job's flock: God caused the wind, but Satan drave it upon the four corners of the house. For when once they are raised, Satan hath power by God's permission, to carry and transport them from Region to Region: so y^t when naturally they blow one way, he can besides nature turn them another way, nevertheless he is not able to send winds, or raise tempests where none are. It may be further said, [Objection] that the sorcerers of Egypt did bring forth Frogs, and turn water into blood, and rods into serpents and such like, Ex. 7, 11, 22. & 8, 7. I answer, [Answ.] it may be Satan did fetch these frogs and serpents from other places, and convey them in a moment into the presence of Pharaoh and of his Princes; for the effecting whereof, more hast and speed were requisite then power, and yet neither were wanting to him being a spirit. Sampson was able by Art and cunning to gather together 300. Foxes in short space, that with his foxes and firebrands he might annoy the Philistines, Judge. 15, 4. Much more is Satan able, who may most truly be called a mighty hunter before the Lord, to bring together on a sodain a great number of these Frogs, which could not be far to seek in the bogs, marishes, & fens of Egypt. Or else this was done in outward show and appearance only, not in deed and in truth. If it be further urged, [Object.] that it is expressly written that the sorcerers brought forth Frogs, and turned water into blood, &c. [Answer.] I answer, the Scripture often speaketh of things, as they appear and are offered to the sight, not as they are in themselves. As he that appeared to the witch at Endor is called Samuel, yet it is certain it was not the true Samuel, but the devil in his habit and likeness, 1 Sam. 28, 14. & Daniel saith, ch. 9.21. the man Gabriel appeared unto him, because he appeared in the shape of a man, whereas he was one of the Angels that stood in the presence of God, Luk. 1, 19. so have Images oftentimes the names of those whom they represent. Thus Josephus testifieth, that y^e serpents of these Magicians did creep in the show & likeness of true serpents. And Justin Martyr one of the most ancient saith (Quaest. Orthod. 16) that they did dazzle and deceive the eyes of the beholders, and cast a mist like Iuglers before them. And Ambrose calleth their fact, a counterfeit emulation of that they had seen Moses do before them. But howsoever this were done, whether by a real transportation, or by a deceitful apparition, certain it is, they could not make true serpents, true blood, true frogs, and y^t for these causes. First, because it is holden, that God only hath power to change and convert a dead substance into a living substance, a rod into a serpent. Secondly, these sorcerers could not do a less thing, therefore not possibly the greater. They could not by all their power and art preserve themselves from the botches & other plagues of Egypt, for the boils & blaines seized upon them that they could not stand before Moses, Exod. 9, 11. which notwithstanding is more easy then to make or change a creature; nay they could not bring forth lice, but said, This is the finger of God. Thirdly, the true serpents of Moses devoured the other Serpents, Exo. 7, 12. From whence Josephus and Ferus conclude, they were no better then images and representations. For it is not ordinary that one creature should devour another of the same kind, as a serpent, a serpent; or a Lyon, a Lyon. And if this were found, either we must imagine that the Magicians serpents and frogs were exceeding little, or else it is incredible & impossible, that one creature should receive into it self another creature of equal quantity, with preservation of it self. Lastly, if any such power had been in the Magicians, to make true frogs and serpents, they might also by the same power have removed those that Moses brought. For he that can build up, can also pul down: and it is one and the same art to knit and vnloose: nay, it is an argument of greater power to make them, thē to remove th•. Now they could not take them away, albeit they were annoyed by them, but were constrained to entreat Moses to pray for their removal, Exod. 8, 8. And if they had been able to make them, they should be more cunning artists and craftsmen then their master, I mean the devil. Thus much of the slights & juggling tricks of these cozening sorcerers.

[Use 2] Secondly, we must learn to fear God and to obey him; he commandeth Nature & it giveth place to him, who is the God of power, and he shall reign forever and ever, Exo. 15, 18. He stopped the mouths of the Lions, & quenched the violence of fire. True it is, that ordinarily the Lord governeth the world by second causes, howbeit he is free to use them, or not to use them: and he can change y^e course of them to the preservation of the godly, and to the destruction of the wicked. A singular comfort to all such as belong to him, to move them to cast their care upon him, and to cleave unfeignedly unto him with all our hearts by a lively faith. He never wanteth means to do us good, or to procure our safety. Upon this foundation did those servants of God build, that were threatened to be cast into the hot fiery furnace; for they considered, that the God whom they served, was able to deliver them, and therefore they feared God more then the King, Dan. 3, 17. And albeit God do not ordinarily in our days work miracles, yet he hath the hearts of all men in his own hand, and he turneth them as it pleaseth him, and maketh oftentimes our enemies to be at peace with us, Prov. 16, 7. On the other side, this serveth for the terror of the ungodly, that God hath infinite ways to work out their destruction: the least of all the creatures once armed by the Creator, are of wonderful force, and shall be sufficient to destroy all his adversaries. This doth Moses teach, touching the drying up of the red sea, a work far exceeding all the limits of nature, Exod. 15, 14, 15, 16. The people shall hear of it and be afraid, the Dukes of Edom shall be amazed, the mighty men of Moab shall tremble, and the inhabitants of Canaan shall melt away. Now they knew they had not to do with a weak & impotent God, such as were the gods whom they worshipped, but with him that could command sea & land: and this doth Rahab confess to y^e spies whom she received into her house, Josh. 2, 10, 11. Let all these therefore know, that they must fear him that is able to destroy, and to cast both body and soul into hell fire.

Thirdly, we must learn to give God that [Use 3] which is his own and due unto him. We must acknowledge him to be the sole author and worker of all the miracles that have been or shall be in the world. Neither Saint, nor Angel, neither Prophet, nor Apostle, neither Satan the prince of darkness, nor any of the devils, is able to work any miracle; it is the prerogative royal of God. Let us not stand in fear of the devil and his angels, they cannot of themselves do anything unto us, but that which the Lord willeth. The common and ignorant sort of men stand pitifully in fear of witches and of their practice, as the chiefest plagues of a Parish, & they confess they have been as glad to please them as their mothers, & as much afraid to displease them, as ever they were to displease their fathers, as if the whole world were governed by witches. O that these men would be as careful to please God, & as fearful to offend him: as for witches, they are more afraid of them thē hurt: they are but the devils instruments to deceive the world; the devil hath utterly blinded the eyes of these and of many others, to make them believe that they do those things which they never do, neither indeed can do. The devil himself is God's servant or rather slave, to do his will whether he will or no: for he can do nothing but what the Lord willeth. He ruleth all things by his providence, the devil cannot kill a fly except he have liberty given unto him. But to return to the former point, that it is God only that worketh miracles, observe with me that he worketh two ways; sometime by himself alone, and sometimes by some other creature. By himself alone, when he useth no instrument at all, as in the creation of the world, making all things of nothing, without help of Angel or other matter. So he turned back the shadow of the dial of Ahaz by himself alone, and many other such like. Again, when it pleaseth him he useth means, as in the miracles wrought in Egypt, he did them by the hand of Moses and Aaron. But here we must take heed of two extremes, and God is dishonored by both of them. First, that we derogate nothing from the Majesty of God, albeit it please him to use means in many of his miracles, because he useth thē freely, not of necessity, and he is as well able to work without them as with them. Secondly, that we do not magnify the creatures and instruments which the Lord useth above that which is convenient because that were to set them in the place of God, who have no more power then that which is given them from above. [Object.] But some may here ask the question, why doth God use means in working of miracles? Why did he use the holy Prophets, and Apostles, and sometimes also such as have no justifying faith, as Judas and others? no doubt as he preached, so he wrought miracles, for he had the same commission with the rest. I answer, [Answer.] he useth them, not because he standeth in need of them, or is tied unto them, but for these causes. First, to teach us that he approveth the means whereby things are brought to pass, and he showeth by his own example that we should make account of them: so that if any neglect or contemn them, he opposeth himself against the Lord. Secondly, to support and uphold man's weakness, who is not able to look upon his Majesty, when he worketh by himself, as a weak eye cannot see things that are far off, except he put on his spectacles. This is plain in the example of the Israelites, when they heard the thunder and lightning, and the sound of a Trumpet exceeding loud, and the Mountain smoking, they were so afraid, that they desired the Lord to speak no more unto them, but that Moses might speak unto them, and they would hear him. Thirdly, the Lord useth means for the trial of our faith, whether we will ascribe the work that is wrought only to the worker thereof, or to the means; or partly to the one, and partly to the other: or as some do, all to the instrument, and nothing to the principal. In the miracles wrought by Christ himself, we see how diversely men were affected: for though they were effected by the finger of God, yet the Pharisees blasphemed, and said, This fellow casteth out devils, by Beelzebub the Prince of the devils. This argueth great corruption of nature and want of faith. [Object.] And as we have shown why God useth means, so it may be asked, what means God useth in working miracles? I answer, [Answer.] they are of diverse sorts. First, such as may seem to have some force and power in them for the working of the miracle. When the waters of Marah were bitter, that the people could not drink of them, the Lord shown Moses a tree, which when he had cast into the waters, they became sweet. Secondly, he useth means that have no appearance of any power or use in the working of a miracle; such was the touching of the hem of Chrsts garment, which infinite numbers touched, and yet received no virtue from thence. Such was the lifting up of the rod of Moses, and the stretching out of his hand at the red sea, Such was the striking of the Rock with his staff at the waters of strife, which had no power to make the waters gush out. Such was y^e handkerchieffe of Paul to cure diseases, & the shadow of Peter, by which many were healed. For these cures were wrought when the Apostles were absent, and knew nothing of them, but were busied in other more important works of their callings. Thirdly, he useth such means as seem no way available unto the work, but rather quite contrary, to hinder it, as curing the blind man, He spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and laid upon his eyes; which might seem more available to put out sight, then to restore it, to make a man blind, then to make him see. Thus then we see, and learn to acknowledge, that every miracle is wrought by the sole and omnipotent power of God.

Lastly, we learn hereby, that we have a [Use 4] most sure word of the Prophets and Apostles, whereunto we must take heed as unto a light that shineth in dark places. We are not cunningly circumvented by devised fables, but we have the whole doctrine of salvation delivered in the Scriptures, fully confirmed unto us. For to what end do all the extraordinary works of God, done by the hands of the Prophets and Apostles serve, but to make plain the doctrine which is according to godliness, and thereby to work in our hearts faith and belief? The miracles of Christ unwritten, & therefore now unknown, were not unprofitable to be read, & unworthy to be known; nevertheless these were sufficient. When Christ came into the world, he was many ways wonderful, it is one of his names by which he was to be called; he was wonderful in his person, wonderful in his doctrine, and wonderful in his works. In his person, because of the union of his two natures, he was both God & man. In his doctrine, & the word preached by him, because he taught the way of God plainly, clearly, and evidently: nay, as one that had authority, for his word was with power, and they were astonished at his Doctrine. In his works and miracles, because they plainly proved him to be God. The doctrine of Christ served for faith: the miracles served for the doctrine: forasmuch as they tended, either to prepare the minds of men to receive the doctrine, or to strengthen faith in the doctrine already received. Both these were committed to writing by the will and appointment of Christ himself, to further the faith and salvation of the people to y^e end of the world. The doctrine long since written, is no otherwise to be regarded, then the lively voice of Christ if he were among us, & we heard him preach to us, as the Jews did: and the miracles that are written are no otherwise to be esteemed, then if we saw them done before our eyes, so y^t we need no other, no new miracles to confirm y^e doctrine of Christ & of his Apostles. They were needful when the Gospel was first planted, and seemed strange in the world, as it were in the infancy of the Church. That truth is already plentifully confirmed, except we should account it new evermore. Hence it appeareth, how found & unreasonable the Romanists are that require of the Ministers of the Gospel, to confirm their calling by miracles. For thus they reason, Extraordinary callings are to be confirmed by miracles: but y^e planters of our Churches show no miracles; therefore their calling cannot be of God. These are like to the Jews, of whom Christ speaketh, Mat. 12, 38. If I should ask of them what signs and miracles the Prophets shown, Nathan, Iddo, Obadiah, Micah, & many others, I think their best answer would be silence. We read expressly, that John the Baptist did no miracle, John. 10, 41. yet was his calling extraordinary. The rule that Christ giveth us to discern false doctrine from the true is this, By their fruits ye shall know them, Mat. 7, 16. The doctrine that is taught is the true fruit, they are known therefore by delivering the doctrine, not by working of miracles. We teach no other doctrine then is set down in the Scripture, so that it is sufficiently confirmed by miracles already. For if the doctrine of the Apostles be our doctrine, doubtless the miracles of the Apostles are ours also, which may not be severed and divided from the doctrine it self. This then discovereth the weakness of Turrian the Jesuit, who is more ridiculous thē the rest, that asketh the question, how we know that Luther was a teacher raised up of God, and what miracle he ever wrought? as also when he telleth us, that if any should ask of them, what sign they have given to them of God; they have this miracle, the Sacrament of orders. A very vnorderly answer: whereby it appeareth, that he knoweth not what a miracle is. For who can call an ordinary thing a miracle? As well we may say, the preaching of the word is a miracle; yea, we may better say that the wonderful effects wrought by the Gospel are a miracle, whereby faith is wrought in the hearts of the elect, and eternal life begun in them. If we will not believe the truth of the Gospel by beholding the glorious effects w^e it worketh in the consciences of men, it appeareth evidently, that we would not believe, though we saw a thousand others, yea though one should come from the dead unto us, Lu. 16, 31.

7 And Moses laid up the rods before the Lord, in the Tabernacle of witness.

8 And it came to pass, that on the morrow Moses went into the Tabernacle of witness, and behold, the rod of Aaron for the house of Levi was budded, and brought forth buds, & bloomed blossoms, and yielded Almonds.

We have in these words the obedience of Moses in word and work to the former commandment, as also the performance of y^e promise that God made touching the budding of Aaron's rod. Consider in these words, [Doctrine.] that it is the property of God's children to yield obedience to his word so soon as the same is delivered and revealed unto them. All the faithful are commended in holy Scripture in this respect. The ten lepers that were commanded to show themselves to the Priest, prepared themselves immediately to go, though as yet no cleansing or curing appeared in the flesh, Lu. 17, 14, 15. they never consulted with flesh and blood, they believe that Christ was true of his word, & able to perform in deed what he had promised in word. Thus did Noah, whē God commanded him to build an Ark, though he had many discouragements, the greatness of the work, the length of the time, the mockings of the wicked, y^e danger of putting himself into it, and committing of his life to the mercy of the raging waters, yet none of these could terrify him, but by faith he overcame them all. Peter being commanded of Christ to let down his net to take fish, showeth, that he had wearied himself & his fellows all night, nevertheless at the commandment of Christ he let it down, & hoped for an happy issue, Lu. 5, 4, 5, 6. Thus have God's childrē always done let us therefore beware of disobedience, under what pretence soever it be. Saul had his excuse, he could set a fair face upon a bad cause, but he was punished with the loss of his kingdom, 1 Sam. 15. Woe had it been to Naaman who shown himself discontented with the Prophet, because he (being before instructed of God) had willed him to wash himself seven times in Jordan; he had gone away a leper as he came, if he had not hearkened to the counsel of his servants, 1 Ki. 5, 10, 12. Moses was shut out of the land of promise, because he obeyed not God in striking the Rock, but spake unadvisedly with his lips. The Prophet received a commandment frō God, that he should go to Beth•el, & reprove the idolatrous worship of the two calves that Jeroboam had set up, and y^t he should neither eat nor drink in presence with the idolaters, 1 Ki. 13, 8, 9. but because he did contrary to the commandment, he was torn in pieces of a Lyon, paying the punishment of his disobedience, and teaching us by his example obedience to God.

Again, [Doctrine.] observe that God performeth more then he hath promised. He only told Moses, that the man's rod whom he had chosen should blossom, but it appeareth that for farther manifestation of the truth of his word, and the dignity of Aaron, he verified more; for y^e Lord did not only cause it to bring forth buds, and to bloome blossoms, but likewise to bear almonds. We see then from hence, y^t such is the goodness of God, that he performeth and bringeth to pass, more then he promiseth to do. He promised to Abraham to give him a child, but he gave unto him many children; for he had not only Isaac the son of promise, by Sarah, but he had Ishmael by Agar, Gen. 16, 15, 16. and many other by Keturah. God therefore is not only good, but much better then his word.

[Reason 1] And no marvel, for he is of infinite power, and can do much more then he will, Mat. 3, 9. and 26, 53. Secondly, he promiseth afore-hand more then we can look for, to make us ready and willing to obey him, as he did to Solomon, 1 Kin. 3, 12, 13. to the end that no man should think it tedious & troublesome to come unto him. The uses remain.

[Use 1] Acknowledge from hence, the infinite goodness, mercy, and power of God. His loving kindness is incomprehensible. Hence it is, that the Apostle prayeth for the Ephesians earnestly, with his knees bowed unto the Father, that Christ may dwell in their hearts by faith, that they being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all Saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that they might be filled with the fullness of God, Eph. 3, 18, 19, Thus then we must learn to magnify the exceeding love of God toward us, of which we have daily experience.

[Use 2] Secondly, from hence we may conclude, that much more he will give unto us, whatsoever he hath promised. He cannot deceive, nor fail, nor alter that which is gone out of his mouth; it is God that cannot lie which hath promised, Titus 1, 2. He is faithful, he cannot deny himself, 2 Tim. 2, 13. As he is not deceived, so he cannot deceive; man is subject, even the best men, both to deceive and to be deceived. Doubt not therefore of his word that is better then his word.

[Use 3] Thirdly, we have comfort to go unto him in all our necessities, and great encouragement to pray unto him in time of danger, He is able to give us more abundantly above all that which we ask or think, Eph. 3, 20. We see how men in their suite to their betters commonly ask more then they look for, they cannot look for more then they ask; thinking by y^t means of asking largely, to obtain somewhat answerable to their expectation. But God giveth more then we ask, we do not ask more then he giveth, as all the Saints of God have found to their endless comfort, Psal. 105, 20, 21. Gen. 39, 19, 20. and 40, 14. and 41, 14, 41, 42. Ester 7, 10. compared with chap. 9, 10. Lu. 15, 22. Math. 15, 22.

[Use 4] Fourthly, see the difference between God and man. Men for the most part are liberal in promising, but sparing in performing. It is not so with God; indeed he promiseth much, but he performeth more, he is a liberal pay-master, he dealeth bountifully with his servants. When Jacob was sent away to Padan Aram to his mothers father, God promised he would be with him, that he would ••epe him in all places whither he went, that he would bring him again to his fathers house, that he would not leave him until he had done that which he had spoken unto him of: and Jacob himself craved no more of God but this, y^t he would keep him in his way that he went, and give unto him bread to eat, and raiment to put on, Gen. 28, 15, 20. But God performed a great deal more unto him, for Jacob received more, & acknowledgeth more, ch. 32, 10. I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies and of all the truth which thou hast shown unto thy servant: for with my staff I passed over this Iordā, & now I am become two bands.

Lastly, it is our duty to be cheerful in the [Use 5] duties of our callings, the Magistrate, the Minister, the master, the servant, everyone as his place requireth, in ruling, in teaching, in instructing, in obeying, seeing God will reward so plentifully. Let no hindrances or pulbacks discourage us, whatsoever we meet withal, let us pass them over, & not regard them. Let us go constantly forward, as Moses did; there were many hooks baited and laid before him to catch him, many snares set before his eyes to entangle him: but he escaped as a bird out of the net of the fowlers, because he had respect to the recompense of the reward. God rewardeth abundantly, above our deserts & desires. Our deserts indeed are little, nay none at all, but our desires are great: and yet the bountifulness of God exceedeth our desires, though they be often enlarged very far and wide. If this will not give encouragement, nothing will.

[Behold, the rod of Aaron for the tribe of Levi was budded, & yielded almonds.] Out of these words, another point is to be considered, I mean from the flourishing of this rod, & that is, that God is able to quicken & give life to things that are dead & withered: though they have no sap, no moisture, no juice in them, yet God is able to put a vegetable force into them. This we see in Abraham & Sarah, they were in respect of generation as good as dead; for Sarah was aged and barren, and past bearing of children, for it ceased to be with her after the manner of women, Gen. 18, 11. and Abraham himself was an hundred year old, Gen. 17, 17. yet he was made a father of many Nations, even before him whō he believed, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not, as though they were. Rom. 4, 17. This we see evidently in the first creation, when out of the earth, dead in it self, he produced living creatures, and made it bring forth grass, and hearb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind, Gen. 1, 11, and 2, 7. So when God had formed man of the dust of the ground, he breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, & man became a living soul.

Again, it appeareth how God in all ages raised some out of the grave, and from the number of the dead; the dead man that was cast into the sepulcher of Elisha, so soon as he touched his bones, revived, and stood up on his feet. This we see among the miracles of Christ. When a young man was carried dead out of the gates of the City, the only son of his mother, he came and touched the Beer, and raised him to life. So he raised the daughter of Iairus, for he took her by the hand and she arose. The like we might say of Lazarus, that had been buried and had lain four days in the grave, for when he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus come forth, he that was dead came forth bound hand and foot, with grave clothes. So did Peter to Tabitha, a woman full of good works and alms deeds, he kneeled down and prayed, and turning him to the body, he bad her arise, and she opened her eyes and sate up. Hereunto also we may not unfitly apply the examples of such as have recovered out of eminent dangers, and have been in a manner, in the jaws of death, and held their souls in their hands, as Hebr. 11.17, 19. Touching Isaac, he lay bound with cords as a sacrifice upon the Altar, the knife was lifted up to have killed him, and his father ready to have offered him for a burnt offering, and therefore he is also said to have offered him, accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead, from whence also he received him in a figure. The like we might say of many other the Saints, that have had experience of God's power, who being no better then dead in their own opinions by incurable diseases, and incredible dangers, have notwithstanding been suddenly restored. Hezekiah was willed to set his house in order, for he should die, his disease was mortal, yet by prayer he obtained the prolonging of his days. When Daniel was in the lions den, and the three servants of God in the fiery furnace, Noah in the Ark upon the waters; Jonah in the belly of the Whale, where were they but after a sort in death? yet all these had deliverance, and flourished again like the Almond rod in this place. The like we might say of Paul, he was pressed with trouble, out of measure, above strength, insomuch that he despaired even of life, and received the sentence of death in himself; yet God which raised the dead, delivered him from so great a death. We read in the acts of the Apostles, that he was stoned with stones, so that they drew him out of the city, supposing that he had been dead, but when the disciples stood round about him, he rose up and came into the city. So doth this Apostle speak of Epaphroditus, he was sick nigh unto death, but God had mercy on him, and not on him only, but on me also, lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow. This was likewise the flourishing of the Almond rod of Aaron.

[Reason 1] This is not to be marvelled at, forasmuch as God is the living God, he hath life and being in himself, and he giveth life and breath and being unto other things. This is a title proper and peculiar to God, and therefore it is said, He is not the God of the dead, but of the living. Secondly, he is of infinite power and was [Reason 2] able in the beginning to create all things of nothing, so that the things which were seen were not made of things which do appear. Thirdly, he [Reason 3] can take away life and breath so often as it pleaseth him, yea cast body and soul into hell.

The uses remain. First, this was a type, as [Use 1] also the whole Priesthood was, of the person, doctrine, Priesthood, and kingdom of Christ, as appeareth in many places of the Prophets. Al our salvation springeth from his cross, and our life from his death, He offered up himself upon the cross for the redemption of our bodies, to obtain for us everlasting peace, perfect righteousness, and the kingdom of heaven; he rose again from death to life for our justification. This is the rod y^t came out of the stemme of Jesse; and as a branch that grew out of his roots, who though he were put to death in the flesh, and became as a dry and withered stalk and staff that was not regarded, yet he was quickened by the spirit, and God raised him from the dead, so that he became as the flourishing rod of Aaron, in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace, Eph. 1.7.

Secondly, here is also a type set forth for [Use 2] the confirmation of our faith in the doctrine of the resurrection of the body at the last day, which as dry seed is cast into the earth and brought to dust, yet in due time shall flourish again, as the rod of the almond in this place. Dan. 12.2. John. 5.25. and 11.24, 25. John. 19.25, 26, 29. This hath been taught in all ages of the Church from the very beginning, Gen. 4.10. and 5.24. Heb. 11.5. Jude ver. 14, 14. Exod. 3.6, 15.

2 King. 2.11. Isaiah 26.19. Notwithstanding in all ages some have been found that have denied the resurrection. Among the people of God, that Sadducees taught that man perished wholly, and that after death there is no rising or returning to life, but that he perisheth as the beast, Matth. 22.23. Act. 23.8. And the Apostle Peter foretelleth, that in the last days should mockers arise, that should say, Where is the promise of his coming? 2 Pet. 3.3, 4. and what is this else, but not to believe that Christ will come again to judgment nor raise up the dead to life? And in the Church of Corinth some were found, which said, there is no resurrection of the dead. 1 Cor. 15.12. Some have confessed the immortality of the soul, as many also of the heathen did, but touching the resurrection they have fancied it to be in this life, and not after death: so that the resurrection with them is nothing else but regeneration, to wit, a dying unto sin, and arising again to newness of life.

The authors of this heresy seem to have been Hymenaeus and Philetus, of whom the Apostle saith, Concerning the truth they have erred, saying that the resurrection is already past <◇> thereby do destroy the faith of some, 2 Tim. 2.18. Neither is this heresy dead with them, but is revived and continued in the damnable sect of the Family of love, who hold that hell and heaven are in this life, and no other resurrection of the body, or day of judgment, or coming of Christ, thē in this world. To these we may ioin as next neighbors y^e Anabaptists of our times, who utterly deny that the same bodies, which now we have, and shall lie in the dust, shall ever rise again; but they hold, that God at the second coming of Christ, will make us new bodies. This is to maintain a new creation of new bodies, but to deny the resurrection of the former bodies. For it is one thing to make and another to raise up. Against all these errors, we must cleave to the simplicity of the Scriptures. For this is a fundamental point of Religion, if this be shaken and overturned, all religion is pulled up by the roots. Hence it is, that the Apostle reasoneth against these at large, 1 Cor. 15. and proveth the point soundly & substantially by many arguments.

First, if there be no resurrection, then Christ is not yet risen from the dead, ver. 13, 15, 16. but he is already risen, and death shall have no more dominion over him, Rom. 6.9. and if the head be risen, then the members shall rise also. The head cannot be without the members: and how can that head be said to have life in it, if all the members should lie covered in the dust, and never be united to the head, neither one to another?

Again, if no resurrection, then of all men the believers were most miserable, verse. 19. Here they are vexed with sundry enemies, Satan, the world, and the flesh. Lazarus here wanteth and suffereth hunger, while the rich glutton is clothed with purple, and fareth deliciously every day, Luk. 16.19. The godly weep and lament, while the ungodly rejoice and be glad, John. 16.20. At this stone, the godly have often stumbled, Psal. 73.2, 3. Ier. 12.1, 2. and from hence the reprobate take occasion to harden their hearts in wickedness, because they think there is no God will reward them that seek after him, Mal. 3.14. but they are greatly deceived, Psal. 58.11. For woe were it to all God's servants, if there were no resurrection & eternal life. But they are not y^e most miserable, because they are pronounced blessed by the mouth of Christ, Matth. 5.4, 6, 10, 11. Luk. 16.25. 2 Thess. 1.5, 6, &c.

Thirdly, if there should be no resurrection of the godly, from death to life, then the first Adam should be more mighty and powerful, then the second: so that the second Adam should be impotent and weak, if he should not be able to deliver them from the jaws of death. Adam and Christ are compared unto two trees, and both of them communicate to [Use 4] their boughs and branches such things as they have of their own. Adam was as an evil and rotten tree, and therefore communicateth so men these properties and no better. Christ is the good tree and full of sap and life, and he infuseth into his members goodness and life, and no worse then these. It is not possible that an evil tree should bring forth good fruit, or a good tree evil fruit, Mat. 7.17.

Fourthly, all our enemies and the enemies of Christ are to be taken clean away, & made subject to Christ and to us, ver. 25, 26. All shall be put under his feet, Psa. 8. and he must reign, until all his enemies be made his footstool, Psal. 110.1. The last enemy of the head and members is death, this shall be quite abolished at the last day, and not before. True it is, that Christ himself can die no more, Rom. 6.9. Heb. 7.25. yet he accounteth it his enemy, because it is an enemy to his children: and he accounteth that as done to himself, which is done to any of his members, Act. 9. And it is our enemy, because it daily cutteth off part of our life, and seeketh to take hold of it, it weareth and wasteth our days by his messengers or harbengers, to wit, troubles and calamities, sicknesses, sores and aches: it bringeth sundry pains and dolours, it separateth the dearest and nearest friends that ever were, the body and the soul: it leadeth the body captive, and clappeth it up in a loathsome prison full of worms, and filthiness, and rottenness: it destroyeth that Tabernacle which was at the first a most glorious creature, and as far as lieth in it, it would deprive the body of eternal life, and keep it in ignominy forever under the earth: so that it is a most spiteful & malicious enemy raging upon us without any mercy or compassion.

Fifthly, If there were no resurrection, to what end and purpose are any baptized for dead? if the dead rise not at all, why are they then baptized for the dead? This place is dark, and commonly understood of the Sacrament of Baptism, but then it will not necessarily prove the point for w^e it is brought, and it is brought to prove the resurrection. Wherefore, to make the Apostles reason good, we must understand it, either of the washing and cleansing of the bodies of the deceased, as the word baptism often signifieth, Mar. 7.4. He. 9.10. for this was a common custom among the people of God, that first they washed the dead bodies, and then anointed them, Act. 9.37. (yea, among the heathen themselves;) which was a certain testimony to the living of the resurrection of the bodies of the dead. To this purpose doth Seruius allege an old verse of y^e Poet Ennius, Tarquiniij corpus bona foemina lauit & vnxit.

That is, A certain devout woman washed and anointed the body of Tarquinius. The like doth Pliny avouch in one place of his natural histories, as the same Seruius testifieth, and expresseth the cause, that thereby they might make trial whether the vital spirits yet remained in the body or not. And Virgil, declaring how the Trojanes solemnized the funeral of Misenus, hath these words,

Pars calidos latices, & athena vndantia flammis

Expediunt: corpus{que} lauunt frigentis, & vngunt:

That is,

Some brought the waters warm with heat, and cauldrons eke appoint:

The body cold they wash, and then with ointments it anoint.

These witnesses do sufficiently prove, that the Gentiles did ordinarily use to wash their dead, and then to anoint them, and this was a very ancient practice among them.

Or else we may understand the place of the death and afflictions of the Saints of GOD, which they suffer for righteousness sake, in which they are overwhelmed, as the body is plunged in the waters: and thus the word is taken, Luk. 12.50. Matth. 20.22, 23. where our Savior calleth them back from their ambitious thoughts of superiority over their fellows, and warneth them to prepare themselves for troubles, yea for death it self. This is the cup that all must drink off, 2 Tim. 3.13. Act. 14.22. Baptism properly signifieth a dipping or plunging into the water: and the cross is a certain plunging into calamities. Thus then the reason is framed, If there be no resurrection, then should they do foolishly, that would seal up the truth of the Gospel with their blood, and lay down their lives for the testimony of God: but such as resist unto blood and suffer persecution for the words sake, are not foolish. Life is precious and dear unto them as well as unto others, they would not therefore be so lavish and prodigal of it, as to lay it down, except they looked for a better life (which the Apostle farther amplifieth by his own example,) Matth. 10.39, 33. 2 Tim. 2.12. and 4.7.8. 1 Cor. 15.30, 31. Act. 5.41. & 16.25. John. 21.19.

Lastly, the Apostle reasoneth thus, If there be no resurrection of the flesh, then the Epicures and Libertines taught well, that we should follow our pleasures and delights, eat and drink and be merry, and never mind better things, or think of any other life, like swine and beasts that know not God, verse. 32. To tell the young man, that he may freely follow the lusts of his eyes, and walk in the ways of his own heart, Eccle 11.9. or the rich man that he may take his ease and pastime while he liveth here, because when he dieth, all is lost, Luk. 12.19. or the ambitious man, that he may say in his heart, Who shall bring me down to the ground, Obad. verse. 3. or the secure person that liveth deliciously, that he may say, I shall see no sorrow, Revel. 18.7. I have need of nothing, Revel. 3.17. I say to tell them thus, is a damnable and pernicious doctrine, and not to be taught and heard in the Church of God, 1 Cor. 15.33. for this were to open a gappe to all profaneness, and to hinder all practice of piety. This ministereth comfort against all pains, sorrows, afflictions, wrongs, and injuries done unto us, we shall in the end be free from all, all tears shall be wiped from our eyes, we shall shine as the Sun, and be raised again in glory, 1 Cor. 15.43.

Thirdly, is God able to put life into things [Use 3] that are dead, contrary to the course of nature? then from hence ariseth a notable comfort to all that are in trouble and affliction, though they be never so great and so desperate; he is able to restore us & bring us out of the same. When the Israelites went into the red sea, what was it, but as it were to go to present death, and descend into the grave? yet God brought them out again into a place of rest, and they beheld the confusion of all their enemies, Exod. 14.30. We are ready in every danger and trouble, to doubt, nay to despair of help and succor, which maketh many to seek unlawful means to recover themselves; we little remember this flourishing of Aaron's rod, that the Lord is able to quicken the dead, and to preserve in the midst of all peril, Psa. 33.18, 19. and 34.15.19. This point is notably taught by the Lord to Ezekiel under a type not much unlike in substance to this, chap. 37.5, 6, 7, 11, 12, 13, 14. The Jews lay now under an heavy judgment, they were in captivity in Babylon, their case seemed to be desperate: yet under that parable of the dead bones, doth God comfort the people with assured hope of deliverance. For as those bones, which were shown to the Prophet in a vision, had skin, and flesh, and sinews come upon them, and life and breath put unto them; so should it be with that captived people, they should be restored to their former estate; teaching them, and in them us thereby, that as it was easy with God to raise up these dry bones, to cloth them with flesh, and to quicken them that had been dead, that they stood upon their legs again; so it is as easy, nay more easy for him to bring our souls out of trouble, and to restore us to joy and gladness. It is in his power to hear us and help us in bondage, and banishment, in sorrow and sickness, and to deliver us out of all adversity, Psal. 30.5.11. The arm of God is infinite and stretched out far and near, he is Almighty and able to bring to pass whatsoever pleaseth him.

Lastly, this setteth forth unto us the state [Use 4] and condition of all the faithful, we may behold an image of our natural estate: we are by nature borne dead in sins and trespasses, and there is no life of God in us, Ephe. 2.12. & 4.18. Nevertheless we should not despair of our salvation or of the salvation of any other. There is hope of God's gracious acceptance, though they be grievous offenders. The gate of God's mercy standeth wide open, whose power is so great, that of persecutors, blasphemers, and oppressors of the Church, he can make converts, professors, and preachers, Matth. 21.31, 32. 1 Tim. 1.16. This mercy of God was shown to Paul, yet it was not proper to him, but exemplary; he was made a pattern to show the way of forgiveness unto others, that he would deal in like manner with them, if after his example they should forsake their sins, and embrace the Gospel. This doth Paul teach touching the Jews, that are now strangers themselves from the covenant of God and from the promises, God is able to graff them in again, albeit blindness be happened unto them, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in, Rom. 11.25. He can say to the dead, live: and they shall live, as he made the withered rod to flourish. This is sufficient to keep us and our hope alive, when things seem to be almost desperate, forasmuch as we believe in him, to whom it is not impossible to make them the sons of Abraham which are not his sons. And as it is easy for us to call those things that are, so it is not hard to him to raise up those things that are not, and to make them appear. When the Gentiles were no people of God, he made them his people, and raised them as it were from death to life; as also he will do the Jews, if they abide not still in unbelief, Rom. 11.23. for as he brought light out of darkness in the creation, so he bringeth us from the death of sin, ignorance, and infidelity, to the life of knowledge, faith, & obedience in our regeneration.

9 And Moses brought out all the rods from before the Lord, unto all the children of Israel, and they looked, and took every man his rod.

10 And the Lord said unto Moses, Bring Aaron's rod again before the Testimony, to be kept for a token against the rebels, and thou shalt quite take away their murmurings from me, that they die not.

11 And Moses did so: as the Lord commanded him, so did he.

The former miracle is made clear and open to all Israel. As God made Aaron's rod to blossom, so he would have the children of Israel to look well upon it and to take good notice of it, and to believe not the words of Moses, but their own eyes. The doctrine, All the miracles of God are wrought openly, apparently, clearly, and evidently to the senses of men, that no doubt or controversy should be made of them, Luk. 7.11, 12. John. 11.39, 44, 45. For either men might feel them as the darkness of Egypt that was palpable, or else they might hear them, or taste them, or smell them, or see them; and sometimes the most of them concur together. When the Lord brought his people out of Egypt, all the miracles which he wrought among them were most apparent unto their senses. When they went through the red sea, he made the waters to divide themselves, and to stand on an heap, on the right hand and on the left, like mighty mountains, that they did most manifestly see and behold the same with their eyes. They saw when Moses strake the stony rock, and when the waters gushed out, & they tasted of them. When God bestowed the gifts of tongues upon the Church, they heard the Apostles speak in their own tongues the wonderful works of God, Act. 2.11. When God would confirm the calling of Moses, he cast his rod upon the ground, and it became a serpent, his eye saw it, or else he could not have fled from before it, Exod. 4.3. Again, at the commandment of God, he put forth his hand, he touched it, and took it by the tail, and it became a rod in his hand, and therefore he must needs see it. All the miracles wrought in Egypt were sensible. Their water was turned into blood, the eye saw it, the taste discerned it, and they could not drink of it. When God sent down Manna to eat, which fell among their tents, they tasted of it what it was. Whē Christ turned water into wine at the marriage in Cana, the taste of the ruler of the feast discerned it by and by, John. 2.9. And the Jews said unto Christ, What sign showest thou unto us, seeing that thou dost these things? John. 2.18. The reasons.

First, that it might appear that God would [Reason 1] not deceive his people, he dealeth plainly and openly, as he speaketh to Thomas, John. 20.27. Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands, and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless, but faithful. Secondly, [Reason 2] he holdeth not his in suspense & doubting, but maketh the truth of his works plain and manifest. When the disciples of Christ were troubled, and their thoughts arose in their hearts, being sore terrified & affrighted, supposing they had seen a spirit, (for he came miraculously among them, and stood in the midst of them) he saith unto them, Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have, Luk. 24.39. The uses remain.

From this flourishing of the rod openly [Use 1] shown, we learn what a miracle is, to wit, a rare work apparently wrought, by the sole omnipotent power of God above nature or natural causes. It is no usual or ordinary work, but rare and extraordinary: and therefore we read when Christ, or his Apostles by him, did any miracle, the people marvelled and were astonished and amazed, and there came a sudden fear upon them, Luk. 7.16. Act. 2.12. Mat. 8.27. and 9.8. and 12.23. We cannot say, that repentance or regeneration is a miracle, though it be after a sort the raising of a man from death to life, and wrought only in a few men's hearts, in comparison of the multitude, because it is ordinarily and usually wrought in all God's childrē. Again, it must be wrought by God's almighty power as we have declared already. Touching the which we must know, that the omnipotent power of God cannot be communicated to any creature whatsoever, no not to the Angels in heaven. For as the Lord saith only of his wisdom, justice, and mercy, so also of his power, that he will not give his glory to any other. Again, though this power might be communicated to any other, yet there is no creature capable of it, whether in heaven or earth, none I say is able to bear it or comprehend it. This is evident in the example of Peter, when Christ had wrought a miracle before him, and thereby shown the glory of his power which in some sort he saw, he said unto him, Depart from me, O Lord, for I am a sinful man, Luk. 5.8. and Isaiah 6.2, 3, 4, 5. Lastly, a miracle is said to be above or against nature. Nature never had any inclination to work above it self, and so to bring forth a miracle, for that were to confound things natural and supernatural. When at the passage of the red sea, the waters stood on both parts, nature had a desire to make the waters run and flow in their course as before, therefore when they stood still as on an heap, it was contrary to the nature of them. True it is, there are many strange and wonderful works in nature, which yet are not above nature. The adamant, we see by experience, though we know not by what force, will draw iron to it self, though it be heavy, and of it self cannot possibly move from place to place, yet if it be above it, it will draw it to it self, which is strange and admirable: yet because it is not rare but usual and common, and wrought by an inherent force in the stone it self, albeit to us unknown, it cannot be accounted, neither doth any man account it a miracle. So we know the nature and power of some waters to be such, that they turn that which by nature is gold, as also any other metal into an hard stone. We see this to be true by experience, that whatsoever is put into it purposely, or falleth into it accidentally, is also turned into a very stone: as also there is some kind of earth that will turn stakes of wood fastened into it, into stone, as our best Herbalists do tell us. No man can show any sound reason for this, why that water or that earth should do it more then any other water or earth, yet doubtless there is a reason of it: and therefore though it be strange and wonderful, yet it is usual or ordinary, and according to the nature of the things themselves, and consequently no miracle.

[Use 2] Secondly, this condemneth the lying signs and wonders of Satan, which are mere illusions and deceits, and no true miracles. But cannot Satan work wonders & strange things? hath he no power at all that way? yes: Nevertheless, we must understand, that the power of Satan is no way equal or answerable to the power of God; it is not so great, so strong, so large, it is every way infinite less: forasmuch as there can be no comparison between a thing infinite and finite, between a creature and the creator. True it is, it is far greater then the power of men every way, and yet a limited and finite power, a natural power not a supernatural. Otherwise woe were it unto us, for then doubtless none could be saved, such is his malice and cruelty. If any ask wherein it consisteth. I answer, partly in his knowledge, and partly in his actions. For as man's knowledge is, such are his deeds; and therefore as his knowledge is great, so are his works great also. Touching his knowledge and understanding, he attaineth to it many ways. First, from his own nature, for he is not flesh & blood as we are, but a spirit, and therefore hath by nature such measure of knowledge, as is given of God to a spirit, which cannot be little. There is much more knowledge in man then is in a brute beast, by reason of that nature which God hath given to man above the beasts. And there is much greater knowledge in y^e devil then in all men, because of his spiritual substance. He hath not a body which may hinder him to see the nature, quality, and operation of a spirit. A brute beast is only corporal and visible: man is partly corporal and visible, and partly spiritual & invisible: the devil is wholly spiritual and invisible, so that being a spirit he hath the knowledge of a spirit, and consequently greater familiarity with our spirits, then otherwise he could have. Secondly, by his creation; for he was in his first estate by creation a good angel before his fall, and set by God in the Paradise of heaven, as Adam was in the Paradise of the earth: so that he had the same measure of knowledge given of God, which he gave to other Angels. So then what knowledge soever is in a good Angel by creation, the same knowledge is in Satan by his creation, and therefore must be exceeding great. I will not dispute, whether this knowledge be any way diminished, forasmuch as he still beareth the stamp of his creation this way. Thirdly since his Apostasy, he hath increased his knowledge, both of things on earth, and of the ways of God by long observation and continual experience; he knoweth the age of man, his affections, inclinations, nature and disposition; he knoweth what pleaseth him best in his youth, and in his age. If any one man had lived from the beginning of the world unto this day, perfect in sense, in body, in memory, in mind, in reason, and the like, and had daily observed all things that had fallen out heretofore, he might be able to discover wonderful things, and make himself much admired in the world. Therefore the devil must needs have great knowledge, seeing he hath had all these, he goeth about in every country and kingdom, he compasseth the earth to and fro, Job 1.7. and 2.2. observing what is done in every place, and is well acquainted with their conversation. Fourthly, he increaseth his knowledge, by communication with God, or rather by receiving commandment from God to execute his will, which he maketh known unto him. The Lord commanded him to appear before him to give an account of the works he had done. God had no sooner named Job, but by and by he knew him well enough, he knew his substance, and how God had blessed him, & therefore never asketh who he was, or where he was: he knoweth every man by Name, and he knoweth that man is ready to make show of religion in prosperity, and in adversity through impatience to fall away from his profession. God gave him liberty to afflict Job in his goods, in his children, in his body: whence then hath he this knowledge, but from the revelation of the Lord? he knew that Job should be visited with great sickness, and with great losses in his children and goods, and thus he knoweth many other things which are to come to pass afterward. And when he hath them thus revealed and made known unto him, he goeth many times to witches and wizards, and telleth them thereof, and they tell it to others before they happen: by which means he many ways enlargeth his kingdom.

Fifthly, by the revelation of the Prophets in former times he attained to great knowledge, by whō many things were foretold, in which also he hath knowledge, & can allege Scripture to serve his turn, Matth. 4.6.

Lastly, by continual observation of natural causes. An Astronomer, that is skillful in the stars, can tell, nay foretell many things: but Satan is skillful in all Arts, he can speak all languages in the world, he is the best artist and linguist that anywhere can be found. The second thing wherein Satan's power consisteth, is in his deeds and actions. He moved Cain to kill his brother, and prevailed. He tempted our first parents, and prevailed. He cometh to a witch in the shape of Samuel, and taketh upon him to tell what success Saul should have in the battle with the Philistines, and Saul thought it had been Samuel. He was wont to talk familiarly with men, and therefore God gave a Law, that if any consulted with familiar spirits he should die, Deut. 18.11. Levite. 20.27. which law had been in vain, if none had consulted familiarly with them. So he was a liar in the mouth of all the false Prophets of Ahab, though themselves did not perceive it. So he possessed men's bodies, as we see in the Gospel, whom Christ oftentimes cast out, Matth. 8.28. and being cast out they entered into an heard of swine, and threw them headlong into the waters where they perished. And when certain Exorcists would have cast out devils in the name of Jesus, the evil spirit ran upon them, and overcame them, so that they fled out of the house wounded, Acts. 19.16. Thus we see, that Satan is of wonderful power, to teach us, not to be careless in resisting of him, but to look diligently to our selves, 1 Pet. 5.8, 9. Nevertheless, this is our comfort, that his power is limited: he is as a raging beast, but is tied up with chain: he is the strong man armed, but a stronger then he cometh, and taketh all his armor from him wherein he trusted, Luk. 11.21, 22. And albeit he make show to work miracles, he hath no such power, and therefore he doth them not openly, but closely and in the dark, as they that do evil.

Lastly, it reproveth the miracles wrought [Use 3] in the Church of Rome, of which they talk and write so much. The works whereof they boast and wherein they glory, are dark and obscure, they are not plain, open, and evident. They tell us many a sober tale in sundry legēds of Saints lives, of puling souls that have appeared out of purgatory, and have taught prayer for the dead, adoration of Saints, worshipping of images, & such like superstitious practices, all tending to abuse the people, and to confirm false doctrine repugnant to the Scriptures; of all which we may say as Augustine doth, that they are, vel mendacia fallacium hominum, vel portenta mendacium spirituum; That is, either cosening tricks of deceitful men, or wonders of lying spirits. But to pass over these, let us by this property of a true miracle, examine the miracle of all miracles, much made off and mightily maintained to be in the Sacrament of the Altar (so called by the Church of Rome,) wherein after the Priest hath vttered and muttered a few words, they teach that a great miraculous work is brought forth, because the substance of the bread which was upon the altar is changed into the body of Christ by a strange Metamorphosis. If this were true, it were indeed a true miracle. But if it were a miracle, men might discern it by sense, as all the miracles of Christ were discerned.

Let them give us an instance, in any creature in heaven or earth, where the Lord wrought any miracle, w^c he did not subject to the senses of man: but here is nothing that can be discerned by y^e senses for as much as the bread by the judgment of all the senses remaineth, and appeareth to be the same in substance which it was before, of the same quality, quantity, color, taste, handling, smelling, virtue, and nourishment: there is not any one sense, or all the senses together that can judge otherwise of it then it did before, & therefore it can be no miracle. No work is a miracle which cannot be felt, smelled, seen, tasted, or perceived. Wherefore, let the Church of Rome teach in their schools, write in their books, preach in their Pulpits, and decree in their Councils never so often, that there is a miracle wrought in their Sacrament of the Altar, yet because we can neither see, nor touch, nor taste, nor feel anything, but the same that it was before, we cannot believe them. But they tell us, [Object.] that though the outward form and accidents of the bread remain, yet the substance of it is turned into the body of Christ: which though we cannot perceive by our senses, yet we are bound to receive by faith. I answer, [Answer.] that if the natural body of Christ were there present, we might feel him, as Thomas did, forasmuch as Christ still retaineth his true body, albeit it be now glorified. Wherefore, seeing there is no miracle in the Supper apparent to the senses, there can be no miracle at all. The difference which is, is in the use: before it was common bread, ordained for the nourishment of our bodies: now it becometh holy bread sanctified by the Lord, not so much to feed the body as the soul. To conclude then, by this strange and new found miracle, they overturn the doctrine of the Scriptures touching miracles. For whereas we have shown that a miracle is a rare work apparently to the senses, wrought by the sole omnipotent power of God; they make it to be an usual, common, and ordinary work, wrought by every Priests pronouncing of five words, yet so as no sense at all can discern of it.

12 And the children of Israel spake unto Moses, saying, Behold, we die, we perish, we all perish:

13 Whosoever cometh anything near to the Tabernacle of the Lord, shall die: shall we be consumed with dying?

Hitherto of the first part of the Chapter, here followeth the second part, to wit, the repentance of the people, craving to be delivered from present death, and from their sin wherewith they had provoked God to anger. As if they had said, We acknowledge that we deserve to die and perish through our sins, neither did we know so much until the plague that brake in among us, taught us, and the blossoming of the rod convinced us to our faces. We presumed to meddle with the office of the Priesthood that belonged not unto us, and therefore we deserve justly and worthily to die. But is there no place for mercy and forgiveness? We may observe from hence, that this should be the effect of all punishments (which God bringeth upon sinners) to humble us, to make us avoid sin, and to submit our selves to God with all obedience. Again, we must never despair of God's mercy, which is greater then our sins, as a garment wider then the body, and therefore more then able to cover the nakedness thereof. Thirdly, we must acknowledge and confess our sins to God, because all sin is committed against God, him only we have offended, Psal. 51.4. Briefly also learn, that the first degree of pardon, is to know that our sins are pardonable; this is as a spark of light in a dark night, and giveth hope of great mercy. But to leave these particulars, this is the general doctrine, In all chastisements, how grievous and sharp soever they be, God is to be acknowledged just and righteous in laying them upon us, Dan. 9.6, 7, 8, 9, 16, 19. Ezz. 9.6.10, 13, 15. Psal. 51.4, 5. 2 Sam. 24.10.

The reasons which are as the grounds of this truth are evident; First, because his punishments, though many times they be grievous burdens to bear, yet are always less then our deserts and offenses, Psal. 103.10. He dealeth not with us according to our offenses. Secondly, our sins are the procuring causes of all the evils which we suffer, Mic. 7.9. I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him. So then the cause of all our sufferings is in our selves. Thirdly, in all his corrections and judgments he remembereth mercy, Hab. 3.2. We see this often in this book, though the whole people sinned as one man, yet judgment came not upon the whole, but the merciful God striketh some to admonish and amende others.

The uses follow. First, it reproveth such [Use 1] as stand out with God, and are ready to justify themselves, and accuse God of overmuch sharpness and severity. These men never consider God's manifold blessings and their own unthankfulness unto him, who reneweth his mercies toward us every morning, Lam. 3.23. But we render unto him evil for good, and hatred for his good will. We are like unto stubborn children, that murmur under the rod, and cannot abide correction. So it is with us, we can abide to sin, but we cannot abide to suffer. We regard not how much we provoke him, but we care not how little he punish us. It is one of the hardest things in the world, to justify God, and to condemn our selves worthy of eternal death and damnation. We see it from the beginning in our first parents, they sought shifts and fig leaves to cover the nakedness of their souls, more then they did the nakedness of their bodies; as indeed there appeared much more deformity in the one, then in the other, and they had more cause to be ashamed of the nakedness of their souls, then of their bodies. For sin maketh us naked of God's protection, and causeth him to depart from us: it taketh away our shield and defense, and leaveth us in the hands of our enemies.

We see also in the example of Achan, & of Saul, 1 Sam. 15. how hardly they were drawn to confess their sins: they heard sentence pronounced against them, before they would pronounce sentence upon themselves. Let us not tarry until God judge us, but rather learn betimes to judge our selves.

Secondly, let us humble our selves under [Use 2] the mighty hand of God, 1 Pet. 5.6. and when he draweth out his sword, let us not say, we are righteous, like the Pharisee that condemned another, but justified himself, Luk. 18. rather let us cry out in the ears of God, Spare Lord, Joel 2.17. and confess that it is his mercy that we are not utterly consumed, Lam. 3.22. When Eli heard the punishment that God had determined to bring upon him and his house for the wickedness of his profane sons, he answered with all humility, It is the Lord, let him do whatsoever pleaseth him, 1 Sam. 3.18. God loveth a broken and contrite heart, it is a sacrifice wherein he greatly delighteth.

Lastly, let us make our whole life a continual practice of unfeigned repentance, and labor for godly sorrow, that we may mourn and afflict our souls for sin, because it is sin, a breach of God's law, and displeaseth him. Sin will not lodge long, where it is not cherished, and made much off, and entertained with delight. It is as a ghest that will not lodge in such houses where he is not welcome: but if once you make much of him and delight in him, then he is an importunate and a shameless ghest, you shall hardly rid your house of him. In the word of God, we find sundry means and motives to move us to enter these meditations. First, the commandment of God himself, so often urged and repeated, Ier. 3.12. and 8.6. and 18.11. This was the voice of John crying in the wilderness, Repent, bring forth fruits worthy amendment of life Matth. 3.8. This doctrine was preached in Paradise to our first parents, and was afterward figured out by circumcision before the Law, and by their purification after the Law, Isaiah 1.16. Wash you, make you clean. Again, such as repent not, lie under the bondage of Satan, they are as captives & prisoners bound to obey his will, and to do him service. 2. Tim. 2.26. Thirdly, such as die without repentance, remain forever without remission and forgiveness. They are lost children, and must needs perish, if they repent not before, 2 Pet. 3.9. Luke 13.3. Fourthly, the threatenings denounced & executed upon y^e rebellious and disobedient, are made examples and admonitions unto us: his vengeance justly fallen upon others, should serve to amend us, 1 Cor. 10.5.6. 2. Pet. 2.3, 4. Psal. 7.11, 12. Fifthly, the certainty and suddenness of the last and general judgment, which shall come as a thief in the night, when the heavens themselves shall pass away with a noise, and the elements shall melt with heat, and the earth with the works therein shall be burnt up, What manner of persons therefore ought we to be in holy conversation and godliness? 2 Pet. 3.10, 11. and 2 Cor. 5.10. We must all appear before the judgment seat of God, that we may receive the things done in this body, whether good or evil. This last day is called a day of Revelation, Rom. chap. 2. ver. 5. Lastly, we must be all led to repentance by the unspeakable fruits that follow it; as pardon of sins, reconciliation with God, peace of conscience, hearing of our prayers, and in the end blessedness in the heavens, Ezek. 33.11.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 AND the Lord said unto Aaron, Thou and thy sons, and thy fathers house with thee, shall bear the iniquity of the Sanctuary: and thou and thy sons with thee shall bear the iniquity of your Priesthood.

2 And thy brethren also of the tribe of Levi, the tribe of thy father bring thou with thee, that they may be joined, &c.

3 And they shall keep thy charge, and the charge of all the Tabernacle: only they shall not come nigh the vessels, &c.

4 And they shall be joined unto thee, and keep the charge, &c.

IN the latter end of the former Chapter, the people are brought in confessing their sins, and craving pardon of God: We heard their grief and sorrow for their sins, and bewailing their transgressions past, and saying, Shall we perish utterly? and is there no hope of forgiveness? Now we have in this Chapter, the answer of God to this question, which did proceed from a feeling of their sin, and a fear of present death, which they had justly deserved. For Moses declareth how God shown himself reconciled, notwithstanding their manifold provocations; he cannot keep his anger forever, but returneth unto them in mercy, when they turn unto him by repentance. Concerning the which reconciliation, we must consider in this Chapter, two points, first the persons procuring the atonement, which were the Priests & Levites attending to the Ministry of the word and Sacraments; secondly, the things appertaining unto them and to their charge: as also the next Chapter delivereth such things as belong to the people. Now the commandment belonging to them both, to wit, both to the Priests and Levites, which are here said to be brethren, is directed to Aaron, and not to Moses, because this was a mere Church matter; Ecclesiastical, not civil: and his Priesthood was newly ratified to him by the authority of God, and by a notable miracle in the flourishing of the Almond rod, Chap. 17.8. The sum and effect is this, that the Priests should minister in the Sanctuary & at the Altar, but the Levites should minister unto the Priests, and both of them both for themselves & the people. First therefore the charge of the Sanctuary is committed to Aaron and his sons, and to the oversight of the Levites, to the eight ver. that the service of God might not be profaned either by themselves or by any other, lest they made themselves guilty of sin: whereby the Lord would signify, that there was indeed no cause why any should envy them this dignity, forasmuch as it was joined with such danger and difficulty. The burden of the Priesthood was so great, and lay so heavy upon their shoulders, that they were threatened to be punished, if the worship of God, which ought to be performed with all reverence, were profaned through their default. From hence we learn, that as every sin is in it own nature great, so are these sins the greatest and most heinous, which are committed against a man's particular place and calling wherein God hath set him, Job 2.9. The Prophets denouncing judgments against sundry persons, do single them out for neglecting of personal duties. The Prophet Micah threateneth the Rulers and men of might, that they hate the good and love the evil, Who pluck off their skin from off them, and their flesh from off their bones: they break their bones and chop them in pieces as for the pot, and as flesh within the cauldron, Mic. 3.2, 3. Thus also he noteth out the falsehood of the Prophets, that made the people of God to err and cry peace, ver. 5. The idolatrous kings are most of all taxed for the abuse of their calling, not so much for private faults, as other men; but for their erecting or suffering of idolatry which they ought to have pulled down: yea, the good kings are often blemished that way, because they reformed not the abuses that publicly reigned. The Psalmist, exhorting Judges to their duty, and reproving evil in them, saith, How long will ye judge unjustly, and accept the persons of the wicked? Psal. 82.2. The Apostle saith of himself, Woe unto me if I preach not the Gospel, 1 Cor. 9.16. he doth not say, if I live profanely, as also he might have done, but he mentioneth the sin of his proper calling as the greater evil. The reasons follow.

[1] First, because God hath set men in several places and callings, and given them their limits and bounds that they should not pass. If then they break these bounds, as the waters do their banks, it must of necessity follow, that they commit a far greater sin against God, because they cast his cords from them, and will not suffer themselves to be tied with them, as we might easily show in the examples of Uzzah the Levite, 2 Sam. 6.7. and Uzziah the king, 2 Chron. 26.19.

[2] Secondly, from the proper works of our callings we have our name and denomination. For as our calling is, so we are esteemed: as this man is said to be a Minister: that man a Magistrate: another a master; another a servant: and therefore those offenses are the greatest which rush against our proper functions. It is noted that when Ahab began to reign, he did evil in the sight of the Lord, above all that were before him, 1 King. 19.30. and wherein did he evil? or what is he charged withal? the holy Ghost might have said, because he shed much innocent blood: but y^e evil wherewith he is charged, is, that he reared up an altar for Baal in the house of Baal which he had built, verse 32. and made a grove to provoke the Lord God of Israel to anger. The uses.

This teacheth that all sins are not equal, [Use 1] and that the same sins in several persons are not equal. The persons make a great difference concerning the sin, forasmuch as the person is, so the sin is. Ignorance is one and the same sin in whomsoever it be, whether in the Minister, or in a private man: but in respect of his office, in the Minister more then in another. If a thief shall rob a man by the high way side, it is an offense, but it is not accounted so great an offense, because it is his practice. But if a Judge, which should minister justice indifferently to all, and doth sit in judgment upon the common thief, if he shall rob or spoil a man, it is much the greater in regard of his place and office, wherein God hath set him. For he sinneth against his own calling, which he professeth: whereas the thief hath through custom made that his calling, albeit a foul and faulty calling.

Secondly, as we must avoid all sin, so especially [Use 2] those sins that are committed against our calling, & against the main scope of our profession, forasmuch as they are most heinous above all others, and do most dishonor God, and deserve the greatest punishment. Some men would account it a small offense for the Prophet, that was sent out of Bethel to cry aloud against the altar, to return back, and to eat bread and drink water in the house of the old Prophet: but because he sinned against his special calling, 1 King. 13.9.16. therefore he was devoured of a Lyon. If the Minister of the word shall be ignorant in the Scriptures, and not able to instruct the people, he shall be more punished then a private man, because he ought especially both to have and to teach knowledge. It is more shame for a Lawyer that professeth the law, to be ignorant in the Law, then for another that is no way toward it. It is a sin in fathers that teach not their children, and masters their servants: but more for the Ministers not to teach their people. This made Christ our Savior pronounce an heavy sentence against the expounders of the Law, Lu. 11.52. Woe unto you ye Lawyers: for ye have taken away the key of knowledge, ye enter not in yourselves, and them that were entering in, ye hindered. The woman was created and appointed of God to be an helper and comforter unto her husband; if then she shall grieve and vex him, her sin is far the greater then if another do it, because she sinneth against her calling and creation, and is thereby made the less excusable, as appeareth in Job's wife, whom he doth more sharply reprove, then he doth others, chap. 2.10. and 19.17. The like we might say of all other callings, of the Minister toward the people, and the people toward their Minister.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it teacheth us the cause why many of God's own people are more sharply punished in this life for the most part thē others, and why they suffer more for less sins then the ungodly do here for far greater, because they sin against their vocation and profession, because they are partakers of the heavenly calling, Heb. 3.1. Which words the Apostle useth as a reason to persuade to be obedient unto Christ: and therefore their sins are greater then of others that never had that calling, which know not what this heavenly calling meaneth. Moses and Aaron for a little want of Sanctifying the Name of God, and that but once at Meribah, were notwithstanding punished with this, that they should never enter into the land of Canaan; whereas many a profane and wretched man that sinned a thousand times more, entered into it: the reason is, because they sinned against their calling, unto which God had called them. So likewise for the children of God, to profane the Sabbath, is a greater sin, and they may look for a more fearful punishment for the same in this life, then the wicked shall have, because they sin against their heavenly vocation. And if they be not careful to order their families aright, to look to their children and servants that they serve the Lord, they may expect greater judgments from God then others that peradventure are a thousand times worse, and have their houses more a thousand times unreformed, as we see in the example of Eli otherwise a good man: for he & his whole house were overturned and destroyed, 1 Sam. 4.17, 18, 20. because God hath a purpose to condemn profane persons utterly in the life to come. The like we might say of David, he committed adultery but once, with Bathsheba the wife of Uriah, yet did GOD threaten to raise up evil out of his own house, so that he would take his wives, and give them to his neighbor that should lie with them in the sight of the Sun: and not long after did his son commit incest with his daughter. Thus did God severely punish his own servant, whiles many unclean persons live in filthy adultery, and daily embrace the bosom of a stranger, who notwithstanding taste no such punishment; their houses are safe from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them, Job 21.9.

Seeing this is so, we should not judge hardly and uncharitably of professors, because we see the hand of God sometimes to be heavy upon them, and more then upon others: but rather consider, it is or may be for the sins of their profession, and that afflictions fall out a like: for Judgment must first begin at the house of God, 1 Pet. 4 17. he will first set in order his own house, and his own children, and will deal more severely with them for smaller sins in this life, then he will with the ungodly for greater in this life, whom he specially reserveth for his wrath to come, Nah. 1.2. Let all those therefore, that make an holy profession of serving the Lord in truth, lay these things to their hearts, and not suffer themselves to be carried away with the force of sin: for God will surely meet with them, his hand shall first find them out, howbeit always for their good, whiles he seemeth not to regard nor reward the sins of the wicked: so that we must beware of those sins which are against our place and calling wherein God hath set us.

Lastly, everyone must be careful to walk [Use 4] carefully in the duties of their particular callings with a good conscience, that so they may please God, and take occasion to rejoice before him; looking to the ordinance of God, who hath set and appointed distinct callings in the family, in the Church, and in the common-wealth, 1 Cor. 7.7, 21, 22. Ephe. 4.11.12. Acts 20.26. There can arise no comfort to us that we belong to God, though we seem never so careful in the general duties of Christianity, if we fail in the special parts of our several callings. That Minister which liveth in all the common duties of other Christians, and yet doth not or cannot guide the people and feed them with the food of life, is a wicked Minister, and there belongeth to him a fearful woe, Woe to the shepherds of Israel that feed themselves; should not the shepherds feed the flocks? Ezek. 34.2. Ier. 23.1. Zach. 11.17. Such are not able to blow the trumpet, and therefore shall not deliver their own souls. That governor of a family which regardeth not to provide things necessary for them, so far as he may, and according to the means given unto him, is an evil governor, he is worse then the infidel, and hath denied the faith, 1 Tim. 5.8.

Again, he that regardeth not the education of his children, in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, Ephe. 6.4. is an evil and wicked father, howsoever he may deceive himself in thinking himself to be a good Christian. For hereby we shall indeed try what is in everyone, if we mark and regard what is in them in regard of private and particular duties in their several callings. I have oftentimes observed, that many people when they come abroad, behave themselves in the company of others very religiously and devoutly, they are ready to join with others in all holy duties; but mark what they are at home, and within the walls of their own houses, and you shall see them to be quite other men and women and not the same, never a whit careful to discharge their duties in their special callings.

There are sundry persons that would be judged of others to be Christian men, but they do not show themselves privately to be Christian governors, nor Christian husbands. And many women bear themselves publicly as Christian women of an holy conversation, who notwithstanding want the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price, neither show that subjection toward their husbands that ought to be in Christian wives, 1 Pet. 3.4, 5. It is not enough to profess our selves to be Christian men when God hath blessed us with children and servants, but hereby we shall be tried what is in us, whether Christ be in us & dwell in our hearts by faith or not, if we approve our selves to be Christian parents, and Christian masters.

5 And ye shall keep the charge of the Sanctuary, and the charge of the Altar, that there be no wrath anymore upon the children of Israel.

6 And I, behold, I have taken your brethren the Levites from among the children of Israel: to you they are given as a gift for the Lord, to do the service of the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

Here the Lord teacheth how Aaron and his sons should behave themselves toward the Levites, and likewise the Levites toward Aaron and his sons. For he willeth them to admit the Levites to the administration of holy things, but so, as they help them only in inferior things, not in the chiefest part of their Ministry. He will not have them come near to the Altar to sacrifice, neither to enter into the inner parts of the Tabernacle, which belonged only to the Priests themselves.

Here then we see, that God maketh a difference between the Priests and the Levites, and also wherein the difference consisteth: the more excellent dignity is committed to the Priests, the lesser to the Levites. They that had the higher calling were not to contemn the others, and they that obtained the lower place were not to grieve at it, or to envy at others, but God maintaineth peace and unity among them, so that both must be content, and one be ready to help another. And whereas God permitted not the Levites to offer sacrifice, or to enter into the Sanctuary, and that if either any of them or of the people should presume to do it, he appointeth death to them that brake this his ordinance, the cause is, that we should know that none hath power to reconcile us to himself and to give us entrance into his presence, but Christ himself only, whose person and office was figured out in Aaron and his sons.

Wretched therefore and blasphemous is the practice of the Papists, who go about to make reconciliation between God and his people by their idolatrous Masses offered up for the quick and the dead, whereby as much as lieth in them, they crucify again the Lord of life, and are no better then the betrayers and murderers of him. Evil also is the practice of all hypocrites, who by the merits of their own good works do think to procure and purchase unto themselves the favor of God: for they are so far from attaining hereunto by their blind devotion, that they offend God the more, and provoke his wrath and indignation against their own souls.

Again, note in this difference which God maketh between the Priests and Levites, how necessary and profitable it is, that there should be order kept and observed in the Church. There is not only one office and function in the Church, but many and diverse: neither can one man discharge all places without presumption, nor all discharge one without confusion, and therefore to avoid both, there ought a comely order to be observed, of which we have often spoken before. As then in the body of man, every member hath his proper function, so that if one should usurp to do all, or all to do one only, there would follow the destruction of the body: for the hand laboreth for the whole, the eye seeth, and the ear heareth for the good of the rest of the parts: the mouth receiveth meat, and delivereth it to the stomach, the stomach employeth it to all the rest: so should it be in the Church, every member must do his own duty, and employ himself to the common profit and edification of the whole. But to omit these, observe that the Levites are said to be given of God to Aaron and his sons to assist them, and consequently for the good of the whole congregation. From whence learn this doctrine, that a good Minister is a special gift of God, and a special token of his favor which he bestoweth upon his Church. The Lord is many ways gracious unto his Church, and poureth out many blessings upon it, howbeit none more excellent or worthy then to give this blessing which now we speak off, to send faithful teachers, Deuteronomy, chapter 18. verse 18. I will raise them a Prophet, Isaiah, chapter 66. verse 19, 31. Jeremiah, chapter 3. verse 14, 15. Matthew, chapter 23. verse 34. When God began to plant a settled state of Religion among his people, he commanded that the Tribe of Levi should be sanctified to be the public teachers of the Church, to instruct them in the will of God; showing thereby that Religion would not be upholden, without some special means and instruments to direct the people therein. The reasons are evident.

First, they are his only gift, because he is [Reason 1] the Lord of the harvest, as also he is Lord of the Sabbath wherein they exercise their gifts. Who then shall reap down the corn when the fields are white unto the harvest, John, chapter 4. verse 35. and gather it into the barn, but such laborers as he shall set on work, Matth. 9.37?

Secondly, he only is able to furnish them [Reason 2] with sufficiens gifts for the work of the Ministry. Therefore when the Lord Jesus ascended up on high, he gave gifts unto men, in the day of his triumph, when he rode in his chariot, as a glorious conqueror, and led all his enemies, even captivity captive, as it were in chains of iron, Ephes. 4.11, 12. Hence it is, that the functions and gifts for the Ministry, are particularly named in the most gracious promises which God hath made of the best things to bestow on the Church under the kingdom of Christ, Isaiah 59.20, 21. Joel 2.28, 29.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, the Ministry is the ordinary means which God hath left to bring us to salvation: for how shall we believe without a Preacher? Roman. 10.14. For the Apostle showeth that hearing is necessary to faith, faith to prayer, and prayer to salvation, and therefore also it is necessary that there be preaching, that so men may hear.

[Use 1] The uses follow. First, as good Pastors are tokens of God's love to his people, which do good in their places, and labor to turn many to righteousness: so on the contrary, to have evil and ignorant Pastors are tokens of God's wrath and judgment, as Saul was given to the Israelites in judgment to be a plague unto them. These win souls to Satan, and increase his kingdom. For an evil Minister is the devils collector, he gathereth souls for him, but he scattereth them from God. Or else I may call them the devils shepherds, whom he hath appointed to keep his sheep. For as God saith, I will give you Pastors according to my heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding: so the devil saith, I will give you idol Pastors according to my heart, that shall fill you full of ignorance and blindness. These supply the places of true Pastors, but they can do nothing, for the sheep of Christ cannot feed in their pastures, they are so bare and so barren that they cannot live upon them, and therefore they that live under them cannot thrive. Happy it were for the sheep, if either such sheepeards were removed from the sheep, or the sheep from such shepherds. Such drones seek nothing but their own ease, who never consider that the Ministry is a calling of great work and labor. These may be Ministers for the devils tooth, or after men's hearts, but they cannot be after God's own heart. They are blind guides which run before the Lord send them, he taketh no pleasure either in these silly sheepeheard, or in those foolish people that are contented with them. These are such merchants as gain many souls to the devils coffers by doing nothing. Other merchants gain by compassing sea and land, and traveling far and near, by laboring and taking great pains: but these sit idle all the day long, they labor not in the Lord's vineyard and yet by their ease and idleness they enrich the devils kingdoms, and bring him in many thousand souls. These are the devils factours, by them he getteth, & and groweth rich. The devils traffic is all for souls, he careth for no other merchandise: now the idle and ignorant Minister is his factor who sendeth them in these Wares by heaps and by throngs: he shippeth them with great pleasure, and putteth himself in the same bottom, and then ship and all go to the devil, who sitteth ready in his counting house to receive them all, and to give them such entertainment as he hath to give. Woe unto such factours, woe unto such people: woe unto such deceivers, woe unto them that are so deceived. Nevertheless, it is strange to consider, now the greatest part of the people are enamored of them, though they be the greatest & most dangerous enemies that they have: because howsoever they may, otherwise make much of them, yet indeed they withhold all succor and sustenance from them, and consequently starve them, and kill them.

Secondly, there is great punishment attending [Use 2] upon the contempt of this excellent gift, Deut. 18.19.10, 11. 2 Chro. 36.15, 16. 2 Thes. 1.7, 8, 9. and 2.9, 10, 11, 12. This meeteth with sundry abuses, that savor rankly of the rejecting of this great mercy, and therefore let such take heed that God do not also reject them. Woe then to the Anabaptists, the Family of love, and such like Enthusiastes, who refuse the Ministry under the pretence of revelations: whereas the Lord hath revealed unto us the dignity of the Ministry, and therefore the word hath revealed, that their revelations are devilish delusions, whereby they are seduced, to bring them to destruction. Woe also unto the common sort of besotted Christians, who think their home devotions enough, and their own reading sufficient to bring them to heaven: not considering that in their reading they want a guide to interpret. The Eunuch could read the Scriptures as well as they, he needed not to have come to Jerusalem to learn to spell his words and name his letters, and yet when he was asked of the meaning and interpretation, and whether he understood the words of the Prophet, he answered, How can I except I have a guide? Acts 8.31. But these will be their own guides, and therefore let them take heed lest they miss the way that leadeth to the kingdom of heaven. They will be their own Pilots to guide the ship, let them therefore take heed lest they suffer shipwreck, and be drowned. Reading is good, but it is not good enough, like a medicine that hath strength in it, but is not strong enough to cure the disease. The men of Berea could read, and did read and search the Scriptures daily at home, yet they came diligently to hear Paul preach unto them, Acts, chapter 17. verse 11. Woe also to all profane Atheists, who despise all means of salvation, having no regard at all to God or his word, at home or abroad, publicly or privately.

Do these believe the doctrine that now we have in hand? Do they think that a good Minister is a precious gift of God? when by their continual practice they make it manifest that they regard neither Minister, nor yet Ministry; neither the glad tidings of salvation, nor those that bring the same? The world is stored and replenished with such open contemners of the Gospel, which are enemies to their own peace, to their own lives, to their own souls, to their own salvation.

[Use 3] Thirdly, from hence ariseth much instruction to the Minister himself. Let us examine our selves, whether we be the true Ministers of God or not, that we may assure our own hearts, we are as a gift of God given unto the Church. This hath many branches. First, we must labor for a competency and sufficiency of gifts, that so we may approve our selves to be y^e Ministers of Christ, planted by him. But such as are rash and headdy in entering upon this calling before they are qualified, I do not mean by men but by God, are presumptuous persons, and are not a gift given to the churches where they have set themselves, because they are no way fitted thereunto. Secondly, we must be diligent in our calling, in the use of our gifts which we have received, that we suffer them not to rest & to rust in us, lest thereby they decay and be lost. If we use them conscionably, we keep them surely: if we use thē not, we lose them. The gifts & graces of God do not wear by use, but do exceedingly increase, for we have a promise, that we shall have abundance, Mat. 13, 12. Thirdly, we ought to labor above all things to seek the good of the people, unto whom we are given, not our own good or to get goods, as if we were sent for our own profits. The end that we must aim at, is the edification, instruction, and salvation of others, not our own private gain or promotion, nor the vain applause of the world to magnify our selves, as the manner of many is. The popish Church never regard this: they ordain their Priests to say Mass, & to minister the Sacrament of the Altar, but send them not forth to preach the Gospel. They have many sacrificers, but few preachers. But the ends that we must propound unto our selves, are, the glory of God, the good of the Church, and the discharge of a good conscience, that so we may say with the Apostle, Brethren, my hearts desire is, that Israel may be saved, Rom. 10, 1. If we do these things, blessed are we: we shall be such Pastors as God liketh and approveth, such as have our calling from him, and our gifts from him: we shall teach for him, and reprove for him.

[Use 4] Lastly, it is the duty of the people (whatsoever they be) to magnify the work of the Ministers, and by all means to promote it, for thereby we further the glory of God, and enlarge the kingdom of Christ Jesus. This also hath many particular branches. First, we are bound to pray to God and to commend unto him the Ministry as his own ordinance. For if the Ministers be a special gift of God, to whō should we go, or of whom should we ask this gift, but of him that is the giver of every good gift, and of every perfect gift? We must pray to God to send them where they are wāting, Mat. 9, 37. We must pray for the continuance of them where they are granted, and for the blessing of God upon their labors, that God would accept the work of their hands, Deu. 33, 11. We must be thankful to him for bestowing this gift upon us, which he hath denied to many places and people.

Secondly, we must repent of those sins which may hinder either the obtaining or the continuing of it. For as the Prophet truly teacheth, that our sins withhold good things from us: so it is certain, y^t God oftentimes denieth this blessing for the wickedness; & being once granted, remoueth it for the unthankfulness of the people, because they are not earnest with God to have it and keep it, neither walk worthy of it when they have obtained it, Isaiah 62, 7. Give him no rest, till he establish and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth.

Thirdly, we should have this gift of God in precious account, to make a reverent use of it, in being subject, unto it, governed by it, and reformed according to the same: because therein we are subject to Christ, as the Apostle willeth us to obey them that have the oversight of us, and submit our selves unto them, which watch for our souls, and must give an account for us. Let everyone examine himself, whether he make this use of the word; if we do, then we receive the Minister as a gift of God: if we do not, thē we do not only reject y^e Minister, but God himself that gave him and sent him to us; for he hath said, He that despiseth you, despiseth me.

Fourthly, lament the estate of the church▪ which is destitute or deprived of this gift, as Psal. 74, 9. We see not our signs, there is not one Prophet more, nor any with us that knoweth how long! We must acknowledge therefore, that great is the misery of that people, which want the ordinary preaching of the word. Alas, they see no vision, how then can they but decay? Pro. 29, 18. They have no Shepherd, what then shall the silly sheep do, but wander up and down they know not whither? They have blind guides to lead them, how then can they escape falling into the ditch? All knowledge and obedience will soon decay, if the word be not preached, as the grass withereth without rain, the body pineth without food, and the lamp goeth out without oil.

Fifthly, it directeth such as are Patrons of benefices whō they should present, namely such as they may commend as a gift of God: let him choose them before they make choice of him: & let y^e gifts of God in him commend him, before any write letters of praise for him. They shall one day answer to God for y^e souls of such as perish through their default, There is no dalying with Church-livings, let them therefore provide sufficient Preachers for their own discharge in the great day of account.

Sixthly, as they must look unto it, that have power to present, so must they that have authority to institute; for if they lay their hands rashly upon any, they are thereby partakers of other men's sins, 1 Tim. 5, 22. and therefore they ought to keep themselves pure.

Seventhly, touching the people, they must acknowledge themselves unworthy of such a blessing, and not take it as a fruit of their own deservings. We can deserve no good thing, much less the greatest good. We cannot deserve our daily bread that nourisheth the body, much less our spiritual meat that feedeth the soul. A good Pastor cometh not as lands and livings by inheritance: & therefore as Solomon speaketh of a good wife, so we may say of a good Minister, House and riches are the inheritance of fathers, but a good Minister is the gift of God. Prov. 19, 14.

Eighthly, our duty to God is to love him a-again that hath so loved us; and to give unto him our hearts, our souls and bodies, that hath given unto us such a gift. He could not •estifie his favor toward us more, thē by such a sure pledge and love-token. This the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 147, 13, 14, 15. where he praiseth God for many blessings, but for the word as a most special blessing above all the rest, and far surmounting all such things as are common to all nations and people; He shown his word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel: he hath not dealt so with any nation; and as for his judgments they have not known them. So then, among all the Lord's gifts none is comparable to have faithful Pastors to feed men's souls with knowledge and understanding, and so to bring salvation unto them. True it is, God hath many graces in store for us, he giveth riches, and health, and wealth, it is he that healeth all our infirmities, and restoreth us from sickness: but the gift of the Gospel is above all, which being entertained, bringeth salvation unto all men. The other also are graces, they are enriching graces, healthy graces, wealthy graces, healing graces; but this is a saving grace. Therefore the Prophet saith, If thy word had not been my comfort, I had perished in my affliction, Psal. 119, 92. Ninthly, the people should love their feet that bring glad tidings of good things, & account them best welcome unto them. True it is, the ungodly and profane of the world can see no such benefit in it, nor such good to come by it, as to be any way beholding to God the giver, or to the Minister that is the messenger: Satan the god of this world hath blinded their eyes, so that they are become like swine which find more savor in the mire of this earth, thē in the sweet perfumes of the Gospel, or like to children that value a beautiful toy before a precious stone. These account them their enemies that tell them the truth as Ahab did, 1. King. 21, 20. they think they come to trouble thē, as Herod & all Ierusalē thought of Christ.

Lastly, all good people such as are God's people, should earnestly desire to live under y^e Ministry of the word, where this gift of God is: that they may always hear the holy doctrine of salvation sounding in their ears, remembering that faith cometh by hearing, Ro. 10, 17. We see how careful commonly men are to dwell in wholesome and healthy places, where a sweet air is: so if we desire the health and wealth of our souls, let us frequent the preaching of the word, and keep the Sabbath with our families, by hearing the voice of God. As for those barren places where no corn groweth, and where no dew nor rain falleth, they are unwholesome, fly from them: they are dangerous, come not near them. Hence it is, that the word coupleth preaching and believing together, and therefore let no man put them asunder, John. 17, 20. Acts 8, 12, and 14, 1. 1 Cor. 15, 1, 2. No man can be saved except he be called for whom he did predestinate, them he also called, Rom 8, 30. but he calleth none by his voice from heaven but by his word in the earth. Either he calleth immediately by himself, or mediately by his Ministers: but now he hath ceased to call immediately, and if we wait for such a calling, we wait upon our own vanity, & we do but deceive our selves, like Herod that waited for the wisemen, but they never came unto him. If then we would be saved, we must first be called: and if we would be called, we must hear God's Ministers speak unto us and call unto us out of his word.

8 And the Lord spake unto Aaron, Behold, I also have given thee the charge of mine heave offerings, of all the hallowed things of the children of Israel, &c.

9 This shall be thine of the most holy things reserved from the fire: every oblation of theirs every meat offering of theirs, and every sin offering of theirs, &c.

10 In the most holy place, &c.

11 And this is thine, the heave offering of their gift, &c.

12 All the best of the oil, and all the best of the wine, and of the wheat, &c.

13 And whatsoever is first ripe in the land, &c.

14 Every thing devoted in Israel shall be thine.

15 Every thing that openeth the matrice, &c.

16 And those that are to be redeemed, &c.

17 But the firstling of a Cow, &c.

18 And the flesh of them shall be thine, &c.

19 All the heave offerings of the holy things, &c.

We see here that God would have the Priests to be wholly occupied in the Ministry of his service: & therefore they could not get their living with y^e labor of their hands, or by tilling of the ground; they might not be Merchants, Artificers, or Farmers, but must wholly attend upon the work of the Tabernacle, so that the Lord showeth by what means they should live, and how he would have them maintained. And first of all he speaketh of the stipend of the Priests which had the worthier calling; they were to be maintained by oblations, whether meat offerings, or sin offerings, or trespass offerings: by the first fruits of the corn, of the wine, or of the oil: by all things devoted in Israel: by the first borne that openeth the matrice in all flesh, whether of men or beasts: yet so as that the first borne of men and of unclean beasts, which might not be offered, should be redeemed, taking for a man five shekels of the Sanctuary, of which valuation we have spokē before. Add to these the shewbread, which was changed every week; & lastly, the tenth of tenths, which the Levites themselves were commanded to pay them out of those tenths which they had received of the people, of which we shall speak afterward. Thus we see that the Priests were to look to everyone of the people, how God blessed them in the City and in the field; how he blessed the fruit of their body, and the fruit of their ground, and the fruit of their cattle, the increase of their kine, and the flocks of their sheep: yea, how he blessed their basket and their store, and all that they set their hand unto: to what end served all this, but to put them in mind of their duty, that their care of the people should be according to the commodity they reap & receive by them. We learn from hence, that the Ministers of God, as in receiving their duties they look to every particular person what he hath, and to every particular benefit how it ariseth, so in performing of their duties, & discharging of their places, they must not only have a general care of the flock committed unto them, but also of every particular man. For as they require their duties, so they must be ready to do their duties: and as they look to themselves well enough in the gathering together of their revenues, arising from every particular person, so the purpose of God herein was, that as they should care for the whole flock in general, so also they should care for everyone in particular, Ezek. 34, 4. Luke 12, 42. Acts 20, 20. 1 Cor. 9, 22. 2 Cor. 11, 28. The reasons.

[Reason 1] First, the same price was paid for one that was paid for another: the same blood of Christ which was shed, is that which must save every particular soul, as well as the whole Church. It followeth therefore, that if Christ have shed his precious blood for every soul in particular, then every particular person must be cared for, that so he may be saved by his blood, John. 10, 11. He is that good Shepherd that will leave ninety and nine in the wilderness, and seek that lost one, Luke 15, 4, 6. Secondly, the Minister must give an account, as for the whole, so for every particular, Acts 20, 26, that he may be free from the blood of all: now he cannot be free from the blood of all, except he be free from the blood of every particular person, so that it standeth him upon, to have as great a care of the salvation of one as of another. Thirdly, because one unsanctified man may easily infect and corrupt the whole congregation, as one diseased sheep may infect the whole flock, 1 Cor. 5, 6. If then the Shepherd be wise, he will as well take care for the curing of that one, as he would do, if the rest were infected: so ought it to be with the Ministers of God, if they be spiritually wise, they should as well have a care of the salvation of each particular, as of the whole in general. The uses follow.

This reproveth all careless Ministers, that [Use 1] yield to have a general care over the flock, but cannot abide to hear of a particular. These are like to those men that yield to God a general care of things that fall out, and a general providence over y^e world, but by no means a special and particular, as if that would trouble him too much. But his providence extendeth to everyone, Mat. 10, 29. A sparrow falleth not to the ground without the will of God; yea, the very hairs of our head are numbered, v. 30. So do many acknowledge, y^t the Ministers ought to have a general care over the people, the Apostle is so plain, that they dare not deny it, 1 Pet. 5, 2. but yet they cannot abide to hear of a particular care, for that were to busy thē too far, and to lay too heavy a load vpō their shoulders, and to abridge them of many pleasures which they purpose & propound to themselves to take. But do they not receive part of their maintenance from every particular? Somewhat ariseth as due to them from everyone, though it be but a little, & many of them are such good husbands to look so near to their profits, that they will not lose a penny, nay they will wrangle oftentimes for an halfepeny. For as it was with the Priests in this place, if they had no meat offering, yet they had of them a sin offering: or if they had not a sin offering, yet they received the first fruits that they brought: and if nothing did arise for first fruits, yet for their first borne, that was redeemed, somewhat fell unto them: so is it with the Ministers, many of them can look into every quarter and corner of their Parish, to pry out what offals will come to their share: O that we were as careful to know the state of our flock touching their spiritual wants, as for our own temporal wealth. Let us busy our selves to enquire of their souls, as well as of their substance, and what they lack, as well as what we lack. We see the soul quickeneth every part of the body, and is wholly not only in the whole, but in every part potentially, albeit not essentially: the powers and faculties of it are dispersed to the communicating of life to every member. The Sun lighteneth with his beams the whole world, and there is no one thing hid from the heat thereof, Psal. 19, 6. A candle is set upon the candlestick, y^t it may give light to all & everyone y^t is in the house.

The Church is as an household, the governor of it must look to every part, as the father to all his children, from the eldest to the youngest: if he should have care for one, and not for another, feed one, and let another starve, he were an ungodly arid unnatural father. So ought it to be with the Minister, he should be as the soul in the body, as the Sun in the Firmament, and as the father in the family, that is, have care of every soul. Some converse wholly with the rich, but care not, nor indeed cannot abide to come among y^e poor; whereas a faithful Minister shall many times find most comfort, and most comfort because most fruit of his labors among them. Others think it a great disparagement & disgrace unto them to bind them to such particular duties. Again, other in their Sermons so are so high, and fly so far above the slow and slender capacities of the people, that they can learn nothing at all of them. They do so trouble themselves and the people with their latin, that the hearers have almost forgotten their english. There is a small deal of learning lieth in pronouncing a few latin or Greek sentences, which a slender scholar in the Grammar school may quickly do: whereas they ought to labor and strive to profit the meanest of their hearers, in which number the greatest part are. I have heard many judicious hearers many times complain, that the producing of foreign testimonies, and the speaking of strange tongues, much hindereth attention, and disturbeth the memory; they have so much variety of sauce set before them, that they forget to taste and eat of the meat. But our doctrine must put us in mind that the Minister must have a care of every part of his flock. The heathen Orator pronounceth that they are worthily laughed to scorn that use such words, as that they are not understood, Curandum est, vt sermon eo vtamur, qui notus est nobis, ne, vt quidam Graeca verba incultantes, iure optimo irrideamur. He wrote this to him that understood y^e Greek, but because he wrote it for the use of others also, he abstaineth from intermingling of unknown words. And in another place he saith, he disliked as much y^e speaking of Greek among latin, as the speaking of latin among Greek. So should we account it as unfit and unseemly to speak latin in an english Sermon, as to speak english in a latin Sermon. Thus the Gentiles that knew not y^e true God, yet by the light or natural reason amended by the help of art and learning, knew the inconvenience and incongruity of this medly: and therefore we should take notice of it. Again, it reproveth such Ministers as are ignorant that cannot, & are idle that will not teach the people: as also Non residents that never come among thē for their good, but for their goods not to teach the truth, but to receive their tithes: these do indeed take care of none, whereas they should take care of everyone.

Secondly, let the Ministers labor to practice [Use 2] this duty, & to show their care, as of y^e whole, so also of every part. Doubtless, they have not performed love to Christ, that have not care of his lambes as well as of his sheep, of the feeble as well as of the strong, of the small as well as of the great, and do not seek to be profitable even to the meanest and the simplest. Little children must have the bread broken unto them, and cut into little pieces for them, that they may eat it: if an whole or hard loaf should be set before them, they might rise up an hungered as they sate down, and we might justly be thought to desire to starve them rather than to feed them. So ought the Minister to study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed: rightly dividing the word of truth, 2 Tim. 2, verse 15. A Physician that dealeth with his patient, hath not only a care of the whole body in general, but he applieth his physic to every particular, as he seeth it in his discretion to have need: so he that is a spiritual Physician, must deal after the same manner, he must not only have a general care of all in gross, but a special care of everyone, to apply unto them, either doctrine, or reproof, or instruction, or consolation, as he shall see them to stand in need. He must labor to strengthen the weak, to beat down the proud, to instruct the ignorant, to comfort the broken-hearted, to raise up them that are fallen, and to deal toward everyone as his condition requireth.

Lastly, seeing this duty is required of the [Use 3] Ministers, it admonisheth the hearers, that they suffer them to deal thus in particular with them. They are wolves and not sheep, that cannot abide that the shepherd should touch them and handle them, whose desire is to tarre them, not to tear them, because he hath a care of their good in particular. It is the common corruptiō of the multitude, they cannot abide that the Minister should strike them home, or apply his doctrine to themselves. Some speak against the Minister because he is too sharp, he points at them, he aimeth at them: like those that would be angry with the Surgeon, because he toucheth the sore, & layeth the plaster upon it. Others reprove the Minister, because he bringeth common & known things, ordinary points: such men have itching ears, and hunt after new things, and so turn away their ears from the truth, 2. Tim. 4, 3, 4. These do not consider that the Minister hath charge of every soul, and must have a care of the whole and of every particular: and in the Congregation, though some be strong yet others are weak: though some be learned, yet the greatest part are unlearned: whereas their care must be to strengthen the weak, as well as to establish the strong. And as for them that are strongest, their memory is weak, & their affections oftentimes cold, that they have need to be put in mind often of the same things, & indeed it is profitable to thē. Phil. 3, 1.

20 And the Lord spake unto Aaron, Thou shalt have none inheritance in their Land, neither shalt thou have any part among them: I am thy part, and thine inheritance among the children of Israel.

21 And behold, I have given the children of Levi, all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

22 Neither must the children of Israel henceforth come nigh the Tabernacle of the Congregation, lest they bear their sin, and die.

The Lord declareth in these words, how the Levites shall be maintained. They had no inheritance in the Land as y^e rest of the Tribes, neither might they take upon them any trade, but must wholly attend the duties of their calling, and therefore they have the tenth in Israel assigned unto them, for the service of the Tabernacle of the Congregation. The doctrine arising from hence is this. The Ministers of the word of God must be liberally maintained of the people, Mat. 10, 10. 1 Cor. 9, 14. Gal. 6, 6. 1 Tim. 5, 17, 18 God claimeth and challengeth all tithes due to himself, Levite. 27, 30. Here he maketh an assignation or resignation of thē to the Levites, whom he maketh as his Bailiffs or Deputies to receive them as his rent and reuenue, and the Priests are appointed to receive the tenths of their tenths. Here two causes are rendered, wherefore God made over these tithes to these persons: First, because they had no part of the division of the Land, the rest of the Tribes had the Land divided to them by lot, therefore they must be provided for another way. Secondly because their labor was incessant and continual, and they were worthy to be rewarded for it accordingly. They were deputed to teach the people, & bestowed much pains and attendance in the Tabernacle, therefore they were worthy to receive their wages, and ought not to be defrauded thereof. Before the law, Abraham gave unto Melchizedek, tithes of all, Gen. 14, 20. And the Apostle to the Hebrews saith, that even the Patriarke Abraham gave the tenths of the spoils, Heb. 7, 4. It is therefore both lawful & just, that the Minister should require and receive, and the people pay unto thē that which is due in respect of their labor.

[Reason 1] The reasons are; First, that thereby the Ministers may be encouraged in their duties, 2 Chron. 31, 4. It is said of Hezekiah, that he commanded the people that dwelt in Jerusalem, to give the portion of the Priests and the Levites, that they might be encouraged in the law of the Lord. They had received much discouragement and discontentment in the days of Ahaz his father, who regarded neither God, nor his word, nor his worship, nor his Ministers, for he took away a portion out of the house of the Lord, and cut in pieces the vessels of the house of God, 2 Chro. 28, 21, 24. And in our days I am well assured, that the Ministers of the Gospel have as many discouragements as ever the Levites had, and therefore stand in need of some encouragements. Secondly, it is an ordinance of God, y^t they which preach the Gospel, should live of the Gospel, 1 Corin. 9, 14. Thirdly, they are to attend wholly upon that calling, and do spend themselves to gain souls to God. Every art should maintain the artificer, and every trade the tradesman, and every profession the professor. The calling of the Minister is not of y^e lowest callings, and it is none of the least labors, so that their maintenance should arise from their great pains that they take in that calling. Fourthly, it is the law of God and nature, that children which have received liuelihood from their parents, should recompense thē: the Apostle showeth, that if any widow have children or nephewes, let them learn first to show piety at home, and to requite their parents, for this is good & acceptable before God, 1 Tim. 5, 4. If then children ought to recompense their parents for their care in their education, as Joseph did his father Jacob, much more ought faithful people to do y^e same to their faithful Pastors, to whom they owe even themselves, and of whō they have received the life of their lives, Gal. 4, 14. 15, 19. Phil. • 10. Lastly, every laborer is worthy of his hire; and whosoever deteineth the wages of the poor laborer, is a great oppressor, & committeth a crying sin, and the cry entereth into the ears of the Lord of Sabbath. How then should that w^c is due to all laborers, be denied to the labors of y^e Minister?

And howsoever this be an evident truth, yet it findeth hard entertainment in the world, & men's profits do so rownd them in the ear, that they can quickly find sundry objections against y^e same. I will touch some of the chief and principal. First, the Apostles had great [Object. 1] gifts, yet they preached freely, Math. 10, v. 8. Why then should not the Ministers in our days do the like? I answer, [Answer.] this must be understood of the gift of working miracles, as appeareth by the circumstances, and as I have proved elsewhere. Hence it is, that Elisha would not accept, though he were urged, of the blessing y^t Naaman offered unto him for the curing of his leprosy, 2 Kin. 5, 16. Again, if they may receive nothing for their labors, how doeth Christ say afterward, The workman is worthy of his meat? Mat. 10, 10. Besides, our Savior joineth these two together, receiving freely, and giving freely; and maketh the former the cause of the latter, that they ought to bestow freely, because they had received freely. And how had they received freely? Surely two ways; freely without any of their own deserts, and freely without any their own labor, for they had their gifts by revelation, Gal. 1, 1, 16, 17. True it is, we have our gifts by the gift of God freely, without any the least desert of ours, but we have not received them freely without our great labor and industry: therefore as in this sense, we have not received freely, we a^e not bound by this rule to go about and preach freely. That talent which we have, we have it by our great pains, and therefore it is lawful for us to take for our pains.

[Object. 2] Again, the Apostles are forbidden to provide and to possess gold and silver, Math. 10, 9. I answer, [Answer.] so he forbiddeth them to have two coats, or shoes, or staves for their journey, v. 10. But to observe this perpetually, were contrary to the practice of Christ himself, John 12, 6. and 13, 4. and 19, 23. Luke 22, 36, and of his own Disciples, who no doubt lived according to the direction and instruction of their master, Acts 12, 8. 2 Tim. 4, 13. So then, this precept had place only for that present sending, and was not to bind them forever, much less their successors that came after them: for now they were appointed to make haste, and might carry no provision with thē, but must cast themselves wholly upon the power, protection, and providence of Christ that sent them & gave them their commission.

Thirdly, Paul preached to the Corinthians [Object. 3] and Thessalonians without receiving any wages at all of them, 1 Cor 9, 15. 1 Thess. 2, 6, 7. Acts 20, 34. He labored with his own hands, and became a Tent-maker, Acts 18, 3. I answer, [Answ.] the question is not de facto, but de iure, not what he did or any of them did, but what he and they had right and power to do. For albeit he did not take wages, yet he had authority to do it, as himself professeth, 1 Cor. •, 6, 12. yea he saith, that at such times as he freed them, he robbed other Churches, and took wages of some to do service unto other, 2 Cor. 11, 8. And albeit he were well content to depart from his right, yet he ceased not to lay claim to his right, 2 Thess. 3, 8, 9. And in other churches where he preached the Gospel, he lived of the Gospel, and taught all the Ministers by his example to do the like. If any ask the question, why he abstained from pursuing his own right? I answer, that many things are lawful in themselves which are not expedient, and as circumstances often alter the matter, so Paul did this for sundry causes expressed in diverse places: First, lest he should overburden them that had already an heavy burden of poverty lying upon them, 2 Thess. 3, 8.

Secondly, that he might give example to those that were idle, which abounded among the Thessalonians, to teach them to work with their own hands, and to eat their own bread, 2 Thess. 3, 9.

Thirdly, that by this means it might manifestly appear, that he sought them rather than theirs, & that he might gain their souls to God, not their goods to himself, 2 Cor. 12, 14, 19. Phil 4, 17.

Lastly, that he might not be any way inferior to the false Apostles, 2 Cor. 11, 12. But let us come to the uses.

[Use 1] First, this serveth to reprove sundry persons▪ First, him that is the grand thief, that first robbed the Church by his dispensations & alienations of the rights and revenues thereof; I mean, the Bishop of Rome, who hath robbed the Church in soul and body, and is grown far with the spoils thereof. This he hath done by degrees: he would not let out all the blood at once, but opened the veins by little & little, that had he continued longer to bear sway he would have left no blood nor lively-hood in the body. The first wrong was offered to the Churches by depriving them of their tithes, in favor of his goodly creatures the cursed generation of his Monks, who obtained of the Pope and other Bishops, that the lands which they held in their own hands, & used for their own benefit, might be freed from any payment of tithes. So the council of Lateran under Alexander the third ordained, that religious men shall pay no tithes out of such their lands as they till themselves: but if they put any out, and take rent as other men, they shall pay tithe as other men do. Here was the flood-gates pulled up, and a way and passage made for all the mischief and misery that fell upon the Church in succeeding times: for here is the seed sown, that being watered from the Uatican, grew up apace to the robbing of many flourishing Churches, to the destruction of many Christian souls, and to the discouragement of many godly Pastors. For this exemption of religious men, I might say, irreligious, was indeed the cut-throat of all religion, and the bringing in of the streams & floods of irreligion; which stayed not here, but prevailed greatly and gate farther footing to the great prejudice of the Church: & therefore this rabble of Church-robbers sought in the next place to exempt all their farmers and tenants that belonged unto them from payment of tithes, the which, albeit it were disliked and resisted at the first in the Council of Cabilon, yet at the length it passed and prevailed. Nay, after that they had swallowed up the inheritance of the Church, like wolves that tasted the sweetness of the blood of the lambes which they had hurried & wearied, they went forward to steal, to kill, and to destroy as the thief doth, John 10, v. 10. till they had subjected those Ministers & Churches unto themselves, to whom themselves at the first paid tithes, as belonging to their jurisdiction. Thus these idle drones and evil beasts, were not content to slip their necks out of the yoke, and make themselves free from others, until they had brought others to be in bondage and subjection unto themselves. Thus did one thief make another, and one Church-robber gave free license unto another to rob & spoil, saying one to another Come with us, let us lay wait for blood let us lurk privily for the innocent without cause: let us swallow thē up alive, as the grave, and whole, as those that go down into the pit: we shall find all precious substance, we shall fill our houses with spoil: cast in thy lot among us, let us all have one purse. Prov. 1, 11, 12, 13, 14. Thus did one theft and robbery make clear way for another, & in all this time while the church was pillied and polled, and as it were left naked of her garments, the Pope, that would be called the Protectour of the Church, was so far from sitting still and looking on, that he was the ringleader in this sin, that upon his head may justly come all the blood of so many thousand souls as have by this means been lost utterly. Thus hath the wild boar rooted up the vineyard of the Lord, and made it a prey to wolves and foxes that entered into the same: and the ravenous cloisters of the insatiable Monks are guilty of that horrible sacrilege, which hath laid waste and desolate so many goodly Churches, & brought the Clergy to that poor estate wherein to this day it remaineth and continueth in many places. For it is not to be imagined, that any of the people who gave liberally to the Churches, and richly endowed them with lands and livings of their own, would ever have entertained any thought, much less entered into any practice of alienating tithes from the lawful owners, and appropriating them to themselves, had they not seen the way laid plain and open before them, and that by those, who by the original & institution of their order, were to pay tithes, yea and those same tithes consumed in most vile and shameful manner. Neither shall we find, that ever any inherited & possessed this portion by an absolute title of inheritance, as their feesimple and freehold, til the suppression of the houses of these vermin, which were become cages of unclean birds, and dens of thieves and robbers. I cannot see therefore, how at the first laymen could have any better title to these tithes, then their predecessors the Monks had, and therefore they yet bear the names of impropriations, as things that are so holden and possessed by an improper title. In other purchases, the Lawyers are wont to say, (if the case in this be not altered) caveat emptor, that is, let the buyer take heed and look to his right and title. To conclude therefore, I would gladly be resolved, whether our Improprieties hold the Church tithes by any better title then the Monks did at the first by the Popes pillage? and whether they were not given to y^e Church by a good law, and taken from it by a bad?

[Use 2] Secondly, seeing it is God's pleasure, that such as preach the Gospel, should be maintained by the Gospel, they are reprov'd that account it an idle and needless function, & care not if we were chased out of house & home, when we have spent our time, our labor, our strength, and our substance for the fitting of our selves to this calling. Such men are wholly carnal, and savor nothing of the Spirit. The Apostle saith, They that labor in the word and doctrine, are worthy of double honor, 1 Tim. 5, 17. Meaning by honor, the care and provision that is to be taken for them. And in the Epistle to the Hebrews, they are willed to be mindful of them that have the oversight of them, who have delivered to them the word of God, Heb. 13, 8. 1 Thess. 5, 12, 13. To these mis-prizers and false judges of good things, I will add another sort, that hold tithes to be a kind of alms, and so would not have the Ministers challenge anything as due for their Ministry and maintenance, but to stand wholly to the people's devotion & good will; and thus they would make them right beggars indeed. So that as Jeroboam made the basest of the people to be the Clergy, so they make the Clergy to be the basest of the people, and desire to bring them to their doors crouching & creeping for a crust of bread. But we demand that for which we have labored, of duty, not of courtesy; and as a recompense, not as a benevolence; not as their vassals, but as Stewards set over the family, or Captains over the host. In y^e law, the people were charged with tithes of four sorts. First, such as were paid distinctly and directly to the Levites. Secondly, such as were deducted out of these, and to be levied for the use of the Priests: both these kinds of tithes are touched in this chapter. Thirdly, such as the people laid aside for the furnishing of their sacred and solemn feasts when they should be at Jerusalem, to which the Priests were ordinarily invited, Deut. 14, 22, 23, 28, 29, and 26, 11, 12. Lastly, such as every third year were gathered for the relief of the strangers, the fatherless, the widow, and the poor. This last sort I will not deny to be in nature of an alms: but such tithes as were paid to the Priests and Levites were paid as wages is for work. This will be plainly proved by the doctrine of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 9, 7. producing the examples of soldiers, gardners, sheepeheard & such like, all which claim a recompense of debt, not of devotion. If then a common soldier lawfully requireth his stipend of that people for whom he fighteth; the Minister also, fighting for the people against their spiritual adversaries, may do the like: and if he that planteth a vineyard & he that feedeth a flock, may of duty challenge to eat of the fruit of the one, and the milk of the oth•r, then the Minister that planteth the vineyard of the Lord, and feedeth the flock committed unto him, may justly claim to live upon the same. Again, alms do always exceed the desert of him that taketh the alms: they testify the mercy of the giver, not the merit of the receiver: for charity is more worth then single thanks, and good deeds are to be valued above bare words. But it is not so in paying tithes of temporal things, all which cannot sufficiently countervail the work of the Ministry, 1 Cor. 9, 11. Is it a great matter, if we shall reap your carnal things? And the Apostle is bold to tell Philemon, that he did owe to him even himself, verse 29. It is a principle written in the heart of man by nature, to pay him his wages whom we set on work; not to send him away empty that laboreth for us. As then the laborer hath right to his wages, so the Minister hath his right and part in the goods of those whom he teacheth, & among whom he laboreth, and therefore when he receiveth his tithes, he doth not take alms, but receiveth his own, having as good right unto the tenth part, as he that payeth it, hath to the other nine. No man can say that the beggar is worthy of alms, he receiveth them by y^e law of charity, but cannot claim them as due by the rule of justice. The day laborer that hath labored all day, and wasted his strength and spirits, would think scorn (though he be a poor man) to receive his hire for his labor in the nature of an alms, as the beggar taketh a penny at the door: and shall the Minister receive his wages as a gift or as a gratuity? The householder that hath agreed with the laborers for a penny a day, saith unto them when he came to pay them, Take that which is thine own, and go thy way: as then they received their duty, so doth the Minister receive his due & his duty.

[Use 3] Thirdly, they are also justly reprov'd, who treading in the steps of the Bishop of Rome, do deteine from the Ministers of the Gospel, the tithes appointed unto them, which are not unfitly called, God's ancient d•main, founded originally upon the law of nature. For as we learn by the light of nature, that there is a God, and that he is to be honored, so the honor that is due unto him, cannot be performed without Ministers, neither can the Ministers attend their function without maintenance. To this I will add the saying of the wise man, Prov. 3, 9. Honor God with thy riches. For seeing he is the high possessor of heaven and earth, Gen. 14, 19, and giveth life & breath and all things unto us, Acts 17, 24. it is our duty to render back somewhat unto him again, thereby acknowledging, that we hold all of him in chief, except we will yield less unto him then the Infidels did to their heathenish gods. Now we honor God with our riches, not only when we use them soberly without excess, righteously without oppression, and charitably without defrauding of the poor, but when we employ them religiously toward his service. The Nicodemites were content to become Christians thus far, as to give their hearts to God, so that they might have liberty to dispose of their bodies as themselves pleased: but these will step one step farther, they profess to worship God both with soul and body, so they may be discharged & dispensed withal from honoring him with their riches. They will willingly offer the calves of their lips, so they may be freed from y^e calves of their stalls. They can be content to travail from the East with the wise men, to fall down before him and worship him, but they cannot abide to open their treasures, and present unto him, gifts, gold, frankincense, & myrrh, Mat. 2, 11. Paul had almost persuaded Agrippa to become a Christian when he exempted those bands and chains: and if ever we will persuade these to become Christians, we must also except these bands and chains that we speak off, for they are very heavy unto them, they cannot abide them. The tithes are the Lord's, he hath reserved them to himself, as a rent of the tenant due to the Landlord, or as a tribute and subsidy due to the king: & therefore when they are not truly paid, as GOD commandeth, but are unconscionably deteined, he complaineth, that he is robbed and spoiled, Mal. 3, 10. so that if we give not unto the Lord the tenth, who hath given unto us the other nine, let us take heed lest he resume the nine parts, and leave unto us the tenth only. And I may say as a worthy and learned knight of our times saith; Such as have taken away the Churches dowry, and s;poiled her of it, it had been great reason they should have made her a ioynter, to recompense the wrong they had offered, and the loss she hath sustained. Solomon saith, Prov. 20, 25. It is a snare to the man who devoureth that which is holy, & after vows to make enquiry: but gain blindeth the eyes of the wise. Ananias and Sapphira are severely punished, who withheld part of that money which was consecrated to God by their own gift: these deteine part of that, which neither they nor their fathers ever gave, and yet neither fear it, nor are touched with it. And who can deny but all tithes are due by vow in the times of the Gospel? and that the true and due payment of them is long before all customs and prescriptions? It is a rule of common equity, that no man having passed his consent and his deed, may change it to the prejudice of another. Now that which is given to the Church, is passed over to God for his service, and therefore whosoever shall take it away again without the consent of God whose it is, cōmitteth sacrilege against him, and dealeth worse with him then he will suffer any man to deal with us. [Objection.] But it will be said, the Ministers themselves consented to this alienation, and therefore being willing, no injury can be done unto them. I answer, [Answ.] our consent is not sufficient, because the vow is made to God, and thereby he is entitled unto them, and hath received a right in them by our vow, so that consequently they cannot be taken away without his consent. The donation of Ananias and Sapphira was made to God for the use of the poor, it lay not now in their power nor in the Churches to revoke & reuerse that grant, wherein God became now to be interested. We see this in marriage, published in the face of the Church, solemnized by consent of parties and parents, ratified by the action of the Minister, and celebrated in the presence of many friends; the knot cannot be untied, no not by agreement of the parents, of the parties, of the Minister, of the friends, & of the whole Congregation, because marriage is not of the nature of a civil contract, but God is a party and hath a special hand in it, and whom God hath joined together, let no man put asunder, or separate again without his consent. The like we may say of the Church-endowments, they are not merely civil where God is a party, and therefore that which he hath received, let no man take away without his allowance. Great was the devotion & zeal of the faithful gained to the Gospel in the beginning, our forefathers thought nothing too much for the spreading abroad of the saving truth of Jesus Christ. Many ministered unto Christ out of their substance, which he kept in a bag: wherein he kept the things that were given to supply his own wants, and the wants of others, John 13, 29. After the death and resurrection of Christ, when he was ascended into heaven, many devout men sold their possessions, Acts 2, 45, and 4, 34, 35, and brought the price thereof, and laid it down at the Disciples feet: which communication of all things, though it tended and extended to the benefit of all, yet was there especial regard had to the Apostles, that they should want nothing. For how unreasonable a thing were it, that seeing they ministered unto the Church all things that pertain to life & godliness, the Church should not minister unto them food, and raiment, and all things belonging unto this life? After the Church was once settled and established among the Gentiles, & dispersed throughout the world which before was contained within the bounds of Judea, it was better to give lands (commonly now called the glebe) as being a more sure and settled endowment than money, which as one merrily, but yet truly saith, he would have called the Churches fixed inheritance, but that he seeth the same also to be movable. At the first then the church turned their possessions into money, and afterward money into possessions. Thus we see, the zeal and fervency of the first times & ages of the Church, while the blood of Christ lately shed, was yet warm in men's hearts, whereby it came to pass that it had very anciently lands and possessions, both glebe and houses belonging unto it; wherein they followed the president of God, when he appointed Cities for the Levites to dwell in, with a convenient circuit of fields for the maintenance of their cattle, Numb. 35, 2. But never was the zeal of men so hot, but now their devotion is as cold: and we are so far from giving to the Church, that we live in a frozen age, wherein men strive who shall take most from the Church. I have heard some men affirm, who would be thought great friends to the Church, but they are such friends to the Church, as the East wind is to the fruits of the earth, that they are willing to pay so much (and they can see no reason why they should pay anymore) as the soil will naturally yield and bring forth of it self without charge of tillage or manuring; notwithstanding in the late case of Tithewood, which groweth out of the ground without their labor, or without any great cost (no other benefit arising to the Minister from thence) have also refused to pay any wood at all in kind, or anything else in lieu of it. If then these men will allow us, neither the tenth of the earth labored, neither yet y^e tenth of that which groweth without any labor, I would gladly know what they would allow us? Such is the covetousness of many men, that they seek to make new customs and prescriptions every day, and lay the foundation of many injurious courses, which in time to come will tend to the overthrow of religion. But let all such consider & look to themselves, that be any way authors of detaining tithes, and of bringing in prescriptions prejudicial to the Church; for how many soever perish for want of food in y^e places where they live, are guilty of the murdering of so many souls before the tribunal seat of the eternal Judge, as Augustine teacheth.

Lastly, seeing God hath provided that the [Use 4] Ministers should be provided for, and hath taken care that they should be cared for, it is their duty to be diligent in teaching of the people, and preaching in season & out of season. For as they are worthy of their wages, so they must be faithful laborers: and as they must live of the Gospel, so they must preach the Gospel. As the people must communicate unto the Ministers in all good things, so it is required of them to teach & instruct thē; and as they are counted worthy of double honor, 1 Tim. 5, 17, so they must rule well. As the mouth of the Ox must not be muzzled, so he must tread out the corn: and they that eat of the milk of the flock, must be careful to feed the flock: even so they that reap carnal things, must be as ready to sow spiritual things. Such then as are idle drones that will not labor, or dumb dogs that cannot bark, have no right from God to take the maintenance of such as discharge their places with care and diligence. He that hath no lust to labor, ought to have no liberty to eat. But it is the manner of many men, to look more to the feeding of themselves then to the Pastors of the sheep: and to mourn not so much for the loss of the flock, as for the lack of the fleece. These do possess much more than they do deserve. None can call for more duty to be paid nor look more narrowly to the utmost penny; but none perform less duty to the people then themselves. And if the people may not deteine their tithes under color and pretence of not being taught, no more may the Minister withhold his pains under color of having his tithes withholden from him. For albeit the people deal sparingly with us, yet we ought not to sow sparingly unto them. The more sparingly we feed, the more hardly they fare. It is not enough to preach now and then, for that were to nuzzle them in ignorance. O what grief is it to see the sheep of Christ famished, and how should it make our bowels to yearn within us to hear the young children ask bread, & to have no man break it unto them! God would have his sons and daughters fed to the full, and the table of his children furnished with bread plentifully or richly, and as David's table, with a cup running over, to keep them not only living, but in good liking; not only from being famished, but also fat and flourishing.

23 But the Levites shall do the service of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, & they shall bear their iniquity: it shall be a statute forever throughout your generations, &c.

24 But the tithes of the childrē of Israel which they offer as an heave offering unto the Lord, I have given unto the Levites to inherit: therefore I have said unto them, Among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance

The office of the Levites is set down, they must take the charge of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and do service therein. Now among these (no doubt) were men of all sorts and of sundry gifts, some were more learned, and some less, 2 Chron. 30, 22, yet the dispensation was committed unto them, and therefore all must be regarded and respected, the Levites (though inferior) as well as y^e Priests, and among them both such as were more meanly qualified. And as God had given thē charge of the Tabernacle, so he giveth charge to the people to accept of their Ministry.

The doctrine is, that all in the Ministry, whatsoever their gifts be, are to be accepted, yea though their gifts oftentimes be small & slender. True it is, they must all have some gifts to fit them to teach the people, but howsoever they be inferior to many others, yet for their office sake they must be regarded. I do not say, the people should depend upon them, that are utterly ignorant and unlearned, but if meanly gifted in comparison of others, the people must not forsake them, neither wāder from one Levite to another. Mark therefore, that Ministers endued with a small, and yet a competent measure of gifts, may notwithstanding do unto God good service in the Church, and gain glory to his Name. He putteth his rich treasures in vessels, not of silver and gold, but of earth. Among the Apostles, it is to be thought, that some had greater gifts then others, some were the sons of thunder, and some labored more abundantly then others, no doubt according to the gifts they had received, yet all profitable to y^t Church. There is a difference of gifts by the same Spirit, nevertheless, all given to profit withal, 1 Corin. 12, 4, 5, 6, 7. And Paul saith, he spake with tongs more then others, 1 Cor. 14, 18. Experience teacheth this among our selves, that many of mean gifts, and little human learning, yet have been profitable teachers, and powerful instruments of much good in the Church of God, & gaining many to him. The reasons.

First of all, the blessing of God is all in all [Reason 1] upon the labors of those that are called; he for the most part bringeth to pass the greatest works by the weakest means and the meanest instruments, and by them he will get and gain glory to himself, as well as by men of the greatest gifts, albeit they also be of his own planting. Exod. 4, 10, Moses was not eloquent, yet Moses was potent, he was not fine in speech, but he was full of the Spirit: Jeremiah complaineth he could not speak, chap. 1, 6. but God supplied his wants, and made him able to thunder out judgments against the impenitent. Secondly, that the power & glory might [Reason 2] be of God alone. If God should always work his will by men of highest place & of greatest gifts, the force of the word and the conversion of the soul would be judged to proceed from man and not from God. As the host of Gideon were too many for God to save withal, so sometimes the gifts of men are too great for him to convert with them, lest we should say, we have done it; therefore doth God often put this treasure in vessels of meaner account, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us, 2 Cor. 4, 7. Thirdly, such as [Reason 3] are conscionable in their places, do bring many blessings to the people, and convert many souls, so that the work of God doth prosper under their hands, which seek God's glory, & not their own praise; that the people might thereby be encouraged to hear them, and to depend upon them. It is an hard matter to deny our selves in the work of the Ministry, and to trample our own credit and estimation in the world under our feet, as the great Rabbies know well enough, that we may seek the glory of God only, with a right affection.

What then? Is it needless to have schools [Object. 1] of learning, or for the childrē of the Prophets to be trained up in them, and there prepared for the Ministry? I answer, [Answer.] No; these are notable & necessary helps to fit men to this great work and high calling: & all means, if they were greater, are little enough, for who is sufficient for these things? 2 Cor. 2, 16. We must use these, and leave the success to God's providence, who is not tied unto them, no more thē Christ to choose his Disciples out of the company of the Scribes and Pharisees.

Again, if God work his will, whensoever [Object. 2] he will, by men of mean gifts, then it skilleth not, whether men study or not, or seek to attain to knowledge, and to better their knowledge, because they may do more good with less gifts. I answer, [Answer.] this ought to make no man negligent or careless, but rather to double his care and diligence. For what greater encouragement can we have to perform the duties of our calling, then to hear this voice full of comfort, Well done, thou good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, enter into the joy of thy Lord? Mat, 25, 21. So then, no man ought to grow careless, because God will bless small gifts, for that were to continue in sin that grace might abound, Rom. 6, 1. Lastly, from hence some will object, that then it skilleth not whom the Officers and Overseers of the Church do choose and ordain, how ignorant and insufficient soever they be? I answer, they are to follow y^e ordinary rule, to appoint such as are apt to teach, 1 Tim. 3, 2. Again, God supplieth the wants of such as he chooseth, as appeareth in the Disciples, which men cannot. Lastly, there is difference between such as have mean gifts, and such as have none: the one sort are God's Ministers, the other are men's, not God's.

[Use 1] The uses remain. First we see, it is a special gift of God, not a fruit of learning, for a Minister to convert souls to GOD by preaching of the word: for this grace and favor is often denied to many famous servants of God, Isaiah 6, 10, and 53, 1, and 49, 4. Christ himself converted not all to whom he preached, he often complaineth of their infidelity and hardness of heart, they would not be gathered, whom he would have gathered and gained to the faith, Mat. 23, 37. Nevertheless, we shall be rewarded, not according as we have converted which lieth not in our power, but according as we have labored, which lieth in our power. If learning could do anything of it self, then the best learned should do most good. But as the most learned do not most labor, so they do not see the greatest fruit of their labor. We must therefore all of us, whatsoever our gifts are▪ depend wholly upon God for his blessing, forasmuch as Paul planteth, & Apollos watereth, but God giveth the increase, 1 Cor. 3, 6, 7. nay, he beginneth and maketh an end of his own work it is he that giveth us grace to will and to do of his good pleasure.

[Use 2] Secondly, everyone ought to make it the special end of our Ministry, the edification of the Church, thereby to bring many children unto Christ. This doubtless is the reason, why so many great Doctors and deep Divines are very drones, and altogether unprofitable in their places, albeit peradventure profitable enough to their own purses; they look altogether to the rewards of learning (as they call them) & to popular fame, as though they that had greatest rewards, had always greatest learning: or they that had greatest learning, had always greatest conscience: whereas they should look to the benefit of the people. These hunt after the praise and glory of the world, & desire to be called great Rabbin's, and therefore oftentimes God casteth dung in their faces, that they may learn to be ashamed: so that we may say unto them, as Christ doth, John 5, 44. How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor from God only? Whereas we ought to be like our Lord and Master, to be able in some measure to say with him I seek not mine own glory, there is one that seeketh and judgeth, John. 8, 50. Such a one as can truly speak thus, so far as human frailty will suffer him, shall have his defects supplied, and God will accompany the labor of his Ministry with the power of his Spirit. One such mean learned man, that hath zeal with knowledge, and knowledge with conscience, & conscience with diligence, & maketh the ends of his Ministry the good of y^e people & the glory of God, is worth an hundred of those proud Pharisees that love the uppermost seats and to be saluted in the market, Mat. 23, 6. The Apostle showeth in himself & requireth of others another spirit: He made himself a servant unto all, that he might win the more, 1. cor. 9, 19. Never came there greater detriment in former days or present times to y^e Church, then by unconscionable & unfaithful learned men. Who usurped greater tyranny in y^e church then they? Who hath starved moe souls, and sent them headlong in throngs to hell, then they? Who have fallen into the sin of Non-residency, and idleness in their residency, more then they? Who have been greater hindrances to the free passage of the Gospel, then they? Who have more disturbed the peace of the Church, and been the causes of atheism, popery, carnal liberty and open profaneness, then they by reason of their reputed knowledge? who stand so much upon their swelling titles and places of superiority, and yet want conscience of their duty lowliness of mind, love to God, and compassion to his people. What shall all their profound learning avail them, when they want an humble heart to season and sanctify their learning withal? [Objection.] What then, will some say? do you go about to condemn learning, so great an ornament in all? I do not go about to disgrace learning, [Answ.] or to contemn any learned men, or to bar the rewards of learning, much less to bring in ignorance, the mother of barbarisme. Learning is a precious jewel, it is a great blessing of God, it is a notable ornament joined with true godliness, wheresoever and in whomsoever they meet and are coupled together, there followeth an exceeding blessing. For as an unfaithful learned man is a great plague to the Church, so I hold this as a certain rule, there never came greater good to the Church then by a conscionable learned man. I wish, as Moses said to Joshua, that all the Lord's people were Prophets and that he would pour out his spirit upon them all Numb. 11.29. I grieve at no man's learning, I envy no man's preferment, I desire that all had the tongue of the learned to speak the language of Canaan, Isaiah 50 4. yea the tongues and gifts of Angels, 1 Cor. 13 1. whose names they bear, Revel. 1.20. and 2.1. but withal I add, that as a sword is a good thing and of necessary use to defend & offend, yet being put into the hand of a tyrant, or a mad man, it doth much hurt, because it is abused: so learning is a great blessing of God, and maketh us differ not only from y^e brute beasts but from other men also: it is profitable to prove, and improve, reform, & instruct: but being poured into a giddy spirit, and an unconscionable man, as wholesome wine into an unwholesome vessel, it loseth his taste, and becometh not only unprofitable, but hurtful, and bringeth much mischief, and sometimes the utter ruin not only of the person y^t possesseth it, but of the whole Church y^t is pestered with it, yet not of it own nature, but by his corruption that doth abuse it.

[Use 3] Thirdly, from hence ariseth comfort to men of mean gifts & of small knowledge, if they be painful and conscionable. True it is, they must not be Jereboam's Priests, that were neither Levites nor learned, but taken from the basest of the people, as unsavory salt good for nothing: howbeit if with their mean gifts they use not mean diligence, and so discharge a good conscience, God accepteth and approveth of them; yea, he blesseth their labors, & worketh his great work of regeneration by them, & sealet up thereby his favor to their own consciences. We see this in Apollos mentioned in the Acts, he was not altogether destitute of knowledge, though he had but little, knowing only the baptism of John, ch. 18, 25. that is, the doctrine of John preaching repentance which he sealed up by baptism: but his want of knowledge he did recompense with painfulness in his preaching, for he was fervent in the Spirit, and taught diligently the things of the Lord: so that albeit he came far behind others in gifts of understanding, yet did he parallel or equal them, and peradventure go before thē in fervency and faithfulness, and in the effect of his Ministry: for he was zealous of God's glory, eloquent in speech, diligent in his place, mighty in the Scriptures, and confounded the Jews that believed not in Christ. But woe unto them that have neither knowledge, nor zeal, nor diligence, nor conscience. It is noted of the Angel, that is, of the Minister of the Church of Philadelphia, that he had but a little strength, a small measure of graces and gifts, yet he maintained the truth resolutely, and brought much good to the Church of GOD by using them carefully; for he did not only keep the word, and confess the Lord in time of trouble and persecution, but converted many enemies that they came and worshipped before his feet, Reu. 3, 8, 9, though he had little strength yet he had many children whom he converted to the faith. For as the Apostle teacheth out of the Prophet, that the desolate hath many moe children, then she which hath an husband, Isaiah 54, 1. And as it often falleth out, that a weak man begetteth many moe children then he that is of greater strength: so such as have but weak gifts, do notwithstanding bring many to God. Let not therefore any be discouraged through the weakness of their gifts, from doing their duty, remembering the saying of Christ, Mat. 13, 12. Whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance.

[Use 4] Fourthly, this serveth to humble and abase such as have the greatest gifts, and are high Doctors of the Church, that they should not stand overmuch upon the glory of their learning, but crave with all humility the blessing of God, and cast down themselves and all their gifts at his footstool of whom they received them, that withal they may receive comfort in their Ministry from him. Their labors are oftentimes less blessed, because they stand so much upon their school-learning, terms, tongues, titles, degrees, and such like privileges, that they oftentimes forget the principal part of their calling to do good to God's people, & to know nothing among them, but Christ & him crucified, 1 Cor. 2, 2. Many there are that come far behind them in knowledge, that go far before them in conscience: which are beneath them in learning, but above them in labor, and find a greater blessing upon their diligence. For it oftentimes falleth out that such as are great Linguists, and profound Clearks bear themselves so proud upon their reputation, that they never desire a blessing from God, nor crave of him to sanctify their gifts, and therefore they oftentimes beat the air, & never pierce the conscience of the hearers, neither win any souls to God. They speak in the enticing words of man's wisdom, & utter strange tongues to gain admiration & astonishment in the hearers, but regard not the demonstration of the Spirit, 1 Cor. 2, 4. whereas others which preach in weakness, and in fear, & in much trembling, that the faith of y^e Church should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in y^e power of God, are made instruments of bringing a plentiful harvest to God.

Lastly, let the people content themselves [Use 5] with such as God hath set over them, though they be not most excellent in gifts; and count it a blessing from God, not refusing or disdainng to hear them and to depend upon them, as the Pastors y^t watch over their souls. They are oftentimes edified in their most holy faith, & profit in knowledge, in repentance, and in obedience under such a one, more then under another. For these do much good in their places, and turn many to righteousness. The diet of Daniel and of his fellows was no better then Water and Pulse: yet with that they prospered better, then they which had their portion from the Kings Table, because they were dieted at God's allowance, and therefore it was joined with his blessing: so are many fed with plain, yet with pure doctrine, taken out of the holy fountains of the Scriptures, whose souls do thrive & prosper far better in knowledge, in faith, and in obedience, then theirs that are fed after a more stately and costly manner with flowers of eloquence and ostentation of human learning, which puffeth up, but edifieth not. The people that have a painful and conscionable Minister, which bendeth all his gifts to edification that he may profit with them, and useth them not to gain glory to himself, but to God, are in far better case then such as have a great Doctor, a cunning linguist, an excellent Artist, a deep Philosopher, a subtle disputer, an eloquent Orator, an acute Logitian, or a profound schooleman, well seen in histories, and well red in Fathers; and is withal without conscience and leaveth his flock, or (if he be among them) hideth his gifts and burieth his talent: or, if he use his gifts now and then, bendeth them to vanity, not to piety; to ostentation, not to edification: or (as many do) use them against the truth, not for the truth; to destroy, not to build: to root out, not to plant. Woe unto that people that have such a guide: such a one can do no good unto them, whatsoever he doth to himself.

25 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

26 Thus speak unto the Levites, and say unto them, when ye take of the children of Israel the tithes which I have given you, &c.

27 And this your heave offering, &c.

28 Thus you also shall offer, &c.

29 Out of all your gifts you shall offer, &c.

30 Therefore thou shalt say, &c.

31 And ye shall eat it in every place, ye and your households: for it is your reward for your service in the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

32 And ye shall bear no sin, &c.

Moses speaking both of the Priests and Levites, speaketh first of their office, and then of their maintenance, for whatsoever they have, they enjoy it for their service, verse 21. it is given unto them as their reward for their service in the Tabernacle of the Congregation, ver. 31. Now the Levites are charged to deal truly with the Priests, as they would have the people to deal truly with them. They were to pay tithes out of their tithes to the Priests, by reason of their honor and labor, who did as it were bear the burden and heat of the day: and least covetousness and greediness of gain should make them base minded and hard hearted, he telleth them that they themselves should be no less guilty of theft, if they deal fraudulently and injuriously with the Priests, then the people if they deal falsely toward them. So then as the people must set out their tithes before they presumed to use the rest: so must the Levites the tithes of tithes, before they use the rest of the tithes. We might observe from hence the common rule of equity, Whatsoever we would that other men should do unto us, we should do the same unto them, Matt. 7.12. We are ready and forward to require good dealing of others toward our selves, but slack and backward to return the same to others. Beware therefore of hurting and hindering any man in his body, in his soul, in his substance, in his good name by cruelty, by oppression, by fraud, by lying, by slandering: this the darkish light of natural reason may teach us, because we would not have others to defraud & to defame us, to oppress us or to purloine from us, and therefore we ought not to deal so with others: nay we ought to be ready to do good for evil, and in all our dealings one with another to proceed by the rule of love, remembering how we desire others should deal with us. But y^e point which I will insist upon, is this, that it is a sin for any, especially the Minister, to take the profits and commodities of any place, and not to perform the duties that belong thereunto, Isaiah 56.10, 11. Ezek. 34.2, 3. 1 Cor. 9.13, 14. 2 Thess. 3.7, 8. 1 Tim. 5.17.

The reasons: first because profits are given [Reason 1] for duties performed, and therefore he is a thief before God, and stealeth the benefit, whosoever neglecteth the duty. It is a sin therefore, because it is injustice. If a man should make a bargain, and take money upon it, and yet afterward not perform his bargain, like to that son that promised his father to work in his vineyard, but went not, Matth. 21.30. every man would condemn him of wrongful dealing: so is it unjust and injurious for a Minister to take the profit that shall arise out of any place, and then not to perform that which is required, as belonging of right unto it, as it is to take a fee, and to do nothing for it.

Secondly, this is an occasion of the perishing [Reason 2] of many people, both of himself and of others committed to his charge, 1 Tim. 4.16. A faithful Minister by doing his duty doth save both himself and them that hear him; the unfaithful destroyeth both himself and his hearers. Therefore it must needs be wrongful. If it were so, that he did destroy himself only, it were no small evil to be a self-murderer: but when with himself he shall ruin many others, it must needs be more impious.

Lastly, because in not performing his duty [Reason 3] he doth defraud the people, and deprive them of that great good which the Lord hath bestowed upon them, and committed unto him to deliver and dispense unto them. He hath trusted them with a great charge, and willed them to keep the same to their use, 1 Tim. 6.20. 2 Tim. 1.14. If he that concealeth and keepeth back temporal things from his brother do offend the Law, Exod. 22. then great is his sin that keepeth back spiritual things from those to whom they ought to be delivered, and so much greater, as the difference is between spiritual and temporal.

This serveth to condemn the Popish teachers [Use 1] that live upon the spoil of the Church, and make merchandise of men's souls. We might tax these, and arrest them as guilty of an horrible crime, from the highest to the lowest, from the head to the foot, from the Pope the mightiest, to the Priest the meanest; they are all idle bellies, and conspire together to destroy the people, and happy is he accounted that hath his hand deepest in this sin.

For though many of them have goodly revenues, and have filled themselves with the fat of the earth, yet they live at pleasure, and are no whit serviceable to the Church, of whom I may speak with the Apostle, Rom. 16.18. They that are such, serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly, and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple.

The Cardinals do scorn this office as too base and simple for them, and choose rather to reign like Princes, then to rule as Pastors: and make more reckoning of their purple, then they do of their people, and therefore turn over the toile and labor of teaching to the Parish Priests, whereas themselves not long ago were no whit better. The Priests considering that they have no calling to preach, but to say Mass, and to read their portuise, do pass it over as a thing impertinent unto them. The Monks, which of ancient time labored with their hands, live at ease and pleasure in their Cloisters and Couens, but do no good to others. The Abbots fat themselves like boares in their styes, and are no way serviceable to the Church, but make their bellies their god, and their kitchen their heaven, and their table their joy: and the Pope, which sitteth at the stern and governeth the ship, taketh no care of anything, but letteth all alone; so that it is no marvel if all the rest follow his example.

[Use 2] Secondly, to let these pass, and to come unto our selves, it reproveth all such as are content to reap the profits of their places, and swallow great preferments down their wide throats, and yet take no pains at all in teaching. This certainly is a palpable sin, howsoever many, even those that are Non residents already, or would be, open their mouths, and set on work their pens to maintaine and defend the same. This we all confess to be unlawful in other callings, where notwithstanding the danger is not so great, how then should it be allowed and go for currant in that calling, wherein men are put in trust not with silver and gold, but with a greater treasure, to wit, men's souls? Woe then to those that are ready to take, but not to give: to swallow what they can, but will distribute nothing: they may be truly charged to live by the sweat of other men's brows, and to do no duty for it. If any man go about to take from them any part of their living, they cry out of sacrilege, if they have not their tithes paid to them without any subtraction or diminution; if any claim any customs or prescriptions, they exclaim by and by, of theft and robbing of the Church: when in the mean season, they are the greatest thieves and robbers themselves, and wrong the Church by their own beastly customs, and transgress the Law of God by their own traditions. For they can be content to rob the people, and to keep them from those things that are far more precious, which are due to them by the Law of God and man, whereby it cometh to pass, that the sin of the Minister turneth to be a great plague to the people. It is noted of Chrysostom, when they sought to bring him into the Ministry, that he began to excuse himself, and to break forth into these words, What grievous sin hath this people committed, that it pleaseth God to set over them such an unworthy Minister? but he spake this not for any insufficiency, but partly out of his own humility, and partly from a feeling of the weightiness of that high calling: but we may speak it out of experience and say, What grievous sin have sundry congregations committed in this land, that it hath pleased God in justice to set over them dumb and careless Ministers, that sweep away the benefit, but never perform any duty? and therefore whosoever they are that lie under any such heavy burden, they have no cause to rejoice, but rather to grieve and to groan under it, as a fearful judgment sent of God upon them for their contempt of his word, and for their other sins which they have committed against him. For wheresoever any such are settled, as it is a great sin in them, so it is certainly a great plague to the people, and therefore are to sigh and lament for it. I know these men pretend sundry reasons, but all their reasons are suggested from their own profit, and therefore it is no marvel that Moses teacheth, Deut. 16.19. that a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous. For many of these are of great sufficiency, yet it may not seem strange unto us, if they be blind in their own causes, and cannot see in matters that should hinder their own profit. They [Object. 1] tell us, that they teach the Church elsewhere, or benefit it by writing, though they teach not where they live and have taken the charge upon them. I answer, [Answ.] first for their writing, that is not generally commanded, nor so necessary to be performed, as the preaching of the word: and therefore though all the Apostles did continue in preaching, yet all of them did not set forth somewhat in writing.

Besides, these men ought to teach, where they tithe it: and it is required of them to show their learning where they have their living. Livings, no question, at the first were given in regard of personal pains where the profit is reaped and received. Is it likely that men would be so liberally minded to part from part of their own goods for nothing? A servant hired by one man may not go to another, and exact the wages of both; he must do his work, where he receiveth his wages, and where he doth no work, he cannot justly challenge any wages.

Again, when he is hired of one, he may not leave his business, and run to another.

[Object. 2] Again, some, say they, are Ministers of the Church of England, not of this or that church: and therefore so that they preach, it skilleth not where they preach. I answer, this is a silly shift, and no better then to receive an alms of one, and to give thanks to another: or to labor at Tarshish when thou art sent to Nineveh. Besides, why more a Minister of Enland, then of Scotland, Ireland, France, Germany, and the like? And let such men look upon their commission which is given unto them to preach. For albeit in their letters of orders they be authorized in general to preach, yet in their institution and induction, they have a particular charge assigned unto them to preach in such or such a place. Again, who can enter upon any other man's charge without the license and allowance of the incumbent? Can any Minister be said properly to be a Minister of England, when he is not allowed to do any Ministerial act without his consent that is Minister of the place, and if he do, he is punishable by the Laws [Object. 3] of the land? But they will object yet further unto us, that they have their charge from men and that distinction of Parishes is not of God or of Divine institution. I answer, all Ministers ought to have special flocks by the Law of God and man: for otherwise what difference between the calling of the Apostles and the calling of Pastors and teachers? Have we Apostles in our days, to take care indifferently and indefinitely of all Churches? True it is, the Church maketh Parishes greater or lesser, wider or narrower, to have moe or fewer hearers assembled together: but God himself limitteth congregations, and diuideth people from people, & appointeth them to be such as one Minister at once may teach them; otherwise we should make him the God of confusion and not of order, whereas he is the author of order, not of confusion, I would know therefore of these Ministers of the largest extent, that challenge themselves to have a larger calling then either Bishop or Archbyshop; for whereas they exercise authority over a Diocese or a Province, and out of them claim no jurisdiction, these claim to be Ministers over an whole country or kingdom: I say, I would know of them, whether their calling be Apostolical, or Pastoral? if it be Apostolical, then they are sent into all the world to teach all Nations, Matth. 28.19. if it be Pastoral, then they are confined to one place. The same watchman cannot watch in diverse places: the same shepherd cannot attend diverse flocks: the same steward cannot rule and provide for two or three families distinct and distant one from another. No man that is wise will entertain such a watchman, such a shepherd, such a steward, as hath been [Object. 4] already entertained. Lastly, they will plead for themselves, that they preach by substitutes so that though they have taken upon them the care and the cure, yet they have their Curates: and though they be charged with the people, yet they are discharged by their deputies. I answer, [Answer.] in matters of special trust, it is not lawful to substitute by the laws of the land. He that is the Princes Ambassador chosen of him, may not choose another to go for him, forasmuch as he shall be his Ambassador, and not the Princes: and he that is chosen to be a Captain, may not assign another to go in his place, & he in the mean season remain at home. But of this we have spoken elsewhere.

Thirdly, to leave the reproof of the Ministry, [Use 3] from hence by proportion we may extend the doctrine to all others that receive wages for their labor. It reproveth therefore servants and hirelings that serve for hire, whether they work by the day or by the year, and yet do not the business faithfully for which they are employed. Most of these are eye-servants, not heart-servants, who are more nimble with their tongues, then quick with their hands. These can find time enough to prattle with others, but they care not how little they work for their masters. To give these their right, and to do them no wrong, they are plain thieves, and no better then such as pick their masters purses. The law of GOD esteemeth no otherwise of them, which is the Law and rule of all equity. They ought to labor with a good conscience, and to be as ready to do their work as to receive their wages, and to be as unwilling to slack their hand in laboring, as they would be to have their master to slack his hand in paying of them.

Again, as they would have their servants in time to come, when God shall bless them with servants, & enable them to set workmen on work, to labor truly, diligently, and faithfully for themselves, so let them deal as true laborers with their bodily masters, that so God may bless them with faithful servants and faithful service another day. And as they ought at all times to be diligent, so then especially, when house keeping is chargeable, and groweth to be double so much as it was before. But what is this to the greatest sort? so that they have enough and feel no want, so their bellies be filled with meat, and they no way pinched with famine, they care not what themselves do, or what others suffer. Nevertheless, as the expenses are double, so their diligence should be double, with good will doing service, as to the Lord and not to men, Ephes. 6.7.

Lastly, to return to the Ministers, to [Use 4] whom the doctrine doth especially belong, it admonisheth them, that they should keep themselves from this sin, and seek with a good conscience to discharge their several places, whatsoever duties be required of them. For the Apostle doth set down a woe against his own soul, writing to the Corinthians, Chapter 9, verse 16. of whom he received no maintenance (as we declared before) but labored with his own hands to get his living; then much more shall it bring a woe to those that take the benefit, but do not discharge the function. And albeit many of these are grown great in the world, yet it is not their greatness, nor their dignity, nor their riches, nor their preferments that shall excuse them, but woe unto them if they preach not the Gospel. God grant that their rising be not by the fall of the Church, and their mightiness by the miseries of the Church. It should be our meat and drink to do the will of our heavenly Father that sent us, and to finish his work, John. 4.34. and the zeal of his house should eat us up, Psal. 69.9, And when we must go the way of all flesh and leave our riches and treasures behind us, the good which we have done in the Church shall more comfort us, then the heaping together of much goods. It is reported of Gregory Thaumaturgus. when he asked the question, being now ready to leave the world and to give up the ghost, how many Infidels yet remained in the city Neocaesarea, and answer was returned unto him, seenteene: that he rejoiced greatly, and comforted himself, and gave thanks to God, saying, There were only so many faithful and believers when I was made Bishop of this place, Totidem erant fideles, cum coepi Episcopatum. Let us all apply this unto our selves: you that be Ministers of the word, and have taken the charge of souls, must endeavor yourselves to preach the word constantly; forasmuch as you have undertaken to do it, let it be your care to perform and accomplish it. And you that are the people must give them encouragement, and draw them on to greater labor by your love to the Word. When the people grow careless, it maketh the Minister oftentimes careless also: and so it cometh to pass, that though they take the profit, yet they are no whit careful to take the pains: whereas if they could cause him to see the fruit of his labor, it would constrain him to go forward in his place with cheerfulness. For when doth the husbandman labor with joy, but when he beholdeth the increase of the earth, and his pains to come to some profit and perfection? so likewise doth the faithful Minister labor with comfort and delight, when he seeth his labor bring forth a fruitful and plentiful harvest in the people. True it is, if the Minister grow dull and dumb because he hath no encouragement from you, it is his sin, it shall be no excuse unto him; but the sin of the people is so much the greater, and their condemnation deserveth to be double. On the other side, if both of them be diligent, the one in preaching, the other in hearing, they shall mutually edify one another, and grow in grace together within the house of God, and hereafter shall receive the fruit and benefit of it in the life to come.

CHAP. XIX.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Aaron, saying,

2 This is the ordinance of the Law, which the Lord hath commanded, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring thee a red heifer without spot, wherein is no blemish, and upon which never came yoke.

3 And ye shall give her, &c.

4 And Eleazar the Priest shall take of her blood, &c.

5 And one shall burn the heifer, &c.

6 And the Priest shall take Cedar wood, &c.

7 Then the Priests shall wash his clothes, &c.

8 And he that burneth her, &c.

9 And a man that is clean, &c.

10 And he that gathereth the ashes of the heifer, &c.

AFTER the murmuring of Korah against Aaron, touching the Priesthood, we shown how God is reconciled to his people, and they brought into his favor again. Touching the which, we considered two points, the first belonging to the Priests and Levites, chap. 18. the other to all the people generally, in this Chapter, to the end they should have an ordinary means to purge and sanctify themselves from their uncleanness at all times. The sum therefore of this chapter is this, God hath instituted the way and means, how the unclean shall be cleansed, whereby to assure themselves, that no infirmity shall separate them from the favor of God. The parts of this Chapter are two, the first is touching the water of cleansing or separation, so called, because such as were separated for any uncleanness, were sprinkled with it: the second touching the persons that were to use it and to be cleansed by it. Touching the water, we are to know the matter whereof it was made, of the ashes of a red cow, without spot, without blemish, without yoke. And the rites used about the heifer, before it was offered, and also following the offering, all which may be learned in the words themselves. The persons that were to use this water of separation, are the unclean, which are of two sorts, first by touching a dead body of any man. Secondly, by approaching and coming near to the tent where the dead lieth, &c. It is dangerous to be near any unclean person, which pointeth out the danger of evil and teacheth to have no communion with it. Whosoever neglecteth this law, and being unclean seeketh not to be cleansed, shall be cut off from the cōgregation, verse 13, 20. declaring, that we should not suffer sin to rest upon us: though we fall into evil, and cannot keep our selves upright, yet we must not lie in sin, neither give it any entertainment, no not for a time. But to pass over particulars, observe the scope and drift of this chapter; which is, to proclaim the mercy of God to such as confess and forsake their sins. The Doctrine then is this, that all penitent persons shall be received into God's favor, so y^t no evil shall come nere them, Isaiah. 1, 17, 18. It skilleth not what our sins are, or how great they have been, but how true and sincere our repentance is, Ier. 50, 20. 1 John 1, 9. Ezek. 36, 25, 26. This truth is farther confirmed by many examples, as Manasseh, 2 Chro. 33, 12, 13. the sinful woman that had many sins forgiven her, Luke 7, 48. the penitent Thief upon the cross, Luk. 23, 41, 42, 43. To those that put Christ to death the Apostle Peter preached repentance, and many of them believed and were saved, Acts 2.37.

[Reason 2] Secondly, Christ Jesus hath satisfied for us all, Isaiah 53, 5, 6. Rom. 8, 33. he is our surety, and hath paid all our debt for us, whatsoever could in justice be required of us. God the father is the creditor, we are the debtors. Christ is the surety, sin is the debt, hell is the prison into which we deserve to be cast. But as the creditor cannot come in with any after reckonings, nor put the poor debtor into prison, when once the debt is satisfied by the surety; so the Lord will not lay anything to our charge, nor send us to hell as to prison, forasmuch as his own Son hath laid down his life as the full price of all our iniquities, whereby his wrath is appeased, and his justice satisfied.

[Use 1] The uses. First we learn how it cometh to pass, that the sin against the holy Ghost is said to be the unpardonable sin, the sin that shall never be forgiven, neither in this life, nor in the life to come, Matth. 12, 32. Mark 3, 28, 29. 1 John 5, 16. not because God cannot forgive it, for his mercy is infinite, and greater then all our sins, but because such as commit it can never repent. Such as were once lightened with the knowledge of the truth, have received the heavenly gift, have been made partakers of the holyghost, have heard the good word of God with joy, and tasted of the powers of the world to come, if they fall away, it is impossible they should be renewed again by Repentance, seeing they crucify to themselves the son of God afcesh, and put him to an open shame, Heb. 6, 4, 5, 6. & 10, 29. These are not only malicious and obstinate offenders, but desperate sinners that dash themselves in pieces against the rock: they know the truth, and salvation to be by no other then Christ, yet they reject and renounce salvation by him. These are like desperate murderers that hang themselves or cut their own throats. True it is, that many weak Christians, languishing under the burden of sin, are oftentimes afraid they have committed this sin, but whosoever feareth he hath committed that sin, I dare pronounce no evil against that soul. For I take this to be a certain rule, that Whosoever feareth he hath sinned against the holy Ghost, hath not committed that sin, neither can commit it, but is altogether free from

it. Such as are so forsaken and given over of God to fall into it, are not afraid of it, but rather boast of it, glory in it, and live and die with it. The fear to offend this way, is but the shadow of it, and not the substance: and this shadow is a notable preservative to keep them from it, and it from them; and therefore shall hurt no man, no more then the shadow of the sword can cut in pieces which hath no edge. But those wretched sinners that sin this sin, do it to despite God to his face, & would (if they were able) pull him out of heaven: they tread under their feet the Son of God, and count the blood of the Covenant (wherewith they were sanctified, as an unholy thing, and do despite unto the Spirit of Grace, Heb. 10, 29.

Secondly, it reproveth the Church of Rome, [Use 2] and quencheth the fire of Purgatory which they have kindled. They find it to be gainful merchandize, and a fire that heateth all their kitchins: and therefore as Demetrius and the rest of the craftsmen which received no small gain by making silver shrines for Diana, were zealous for idolatry; because thereby they had their wealth; so are the Romanists zealous for their Purgatory, knowing that if that fall, their whole craft is in danger to be set at naught, Acts 19, 24, 27. And if they did not find advantage by it, they would soon give over the defense of it. For it is directly against the Scriptures, w^c make only two places, heaven and hell. Lu. 16, 23. and two sorts of persons, such as believe, & such as do not believe, Mar. 16, 16. And as this is a mere fiction devised in the idle brain of superstitious men, so is their doctrine of praying for the dead no whit better. We read, Levite. 4, 3.13, 22. of sundry sacrifices appointed for all sorts of people, For the Prince, for the Priest, for the Congregation: for sins of ignorance & of knowledge, ch. 5, & 6. but we read nowhere of any for the dead. We read everywhere of prayers prescribed for the living, & Paul directeth the church how to carry themselves toward the dead; but we have no word of praying for them. They that die in the Lord, are pronounced to be blessed, Reu. 14, verse 13. even from the time of their death and dissolution; and therefore come not into any fire at all: whereas contrariwise, if we may believe the Popish Teachers that blow the bellows, it is made so exceeding hot, that it scorcheth beyond measure all such as are cast into it, and little difference between that fire and hell fire, but in the continuance. And if this tale were not handsomely tied together, and the furnace heated seven times hotter then ordinary fire, their kitchins would quickly wax cold. But wherefore serve all y^e purgings mentioned in this place & in other places of the Law of Moses, but to assure us that sin is pardoned in this life, and the punishment of sin pardoned also? so that nothing remaineth on our part to be satisfied: for that were to renounce and deny the satisfaction of Christ: But the Papists, making Purgatory neither heaven nor hell, but as it were a middle place between them both, do teach that such as die in venial sin are put in that prison to fry for a season, until by the prayers of the living made to God, but specially by alms deeds given to the Priests and Jesuits, and by the pardons and indulgences of the Popes, they be released. But if Christ have paid the price for our greatest sins, how should we not believe that he hath much more satisfied for the lesser? and they that believe not that he gave himself to redeem us from the lesser, how can they hope or have comfort that he gave himself for the greater? Wherefore this fond distinction of persons, of places, and of sins, cannot stand with the word of God: And as for prayer for the dead, it cometh as a pardon after a man is hanged, or as Physic to the body of him that is departed this life. We know how God appointed sundry sacrifices in the time of the Law, for all estates in the Church high and low, one and other; but among them all set down in this book and in the book of Leviticus, we find none at all, no not one offered for the dead: doubtless either God was very forgetful of them, or else this doctrine was not then hatched. The living are commanded to pray one for another, but never for the dead, for that were to pray with the foolish virgins, Lord, Lord, open unto us when the door is shut, Matth. 25.10, 11. And doubtless the Church of Rome in this point have a faith by themselves, for not only we of the reformed Churches have forsaken them, but the Greek Churches also renounce such a Purgatory as the Papists imagine: for they deny any purging fire to be after this life, such as is material and corporal. For albeit some of them think, that there is a middle condition wherein some remain after death, abiding in darkness, without enjoying the light of God's countenance, and are holden in a state of sorrow as it were in a prison, until by the mercy of God, and the prayers of the faithful they be delivered; and incline to this opinion that the lesser sins of men dying in the state of grace are remitted and forgiven after this life, without any punishment at all of fire or any other kind, by the mere grace and goodness of God: yet notwithstanding they confidently pronounce, that no Scripture or Council hath delivered a double punishment by fire after this life; and therefore let all the Romanists and such as adhere unto them take heed, lest while they dream of a temporary fire, they mistake themselves, and fall into the everlasting and unquenchable fire, Matth. 3.12. and 18.8. Now to make this more plain I will set down such strong and important reasons as were exhibited to the Council of Florence, and are propounded by others, whereby the foundation of that doctrine is shaken in pieces, and falleth to the ground. To this purpose observe, that as some little good in them that have great and mortal sins hath no reward at all, by reason of the prevailing evil which is found in them: so small sins in them that have great graces & works of virtue, are not to be sharply punished, the better things overcoming and ouerswaying them.

Again, the wills of men that are dead and departed hence, are either changeable or unchangeable, there is no third can be imagined. If they be changeable, then they that are good may become evil, and they that are evil become good, so that neither the good shall be unchangeably happy, nor the evil unchangeably miserable, but that the dead may fall from the top of happiness to the depth of misery, and contrariwise rise from the bottom of misery to the height of all happiness. If they be unchangeable, then they are not capable of any amendment, for he that is corrected from going astray, is set aright, being brought to dislike that which he liked before, and to love that which he hated before, and neither of them can be found in a will y^t is unchangeable.

Another consideration is drawn from the parable of the rich man and Lazarus in the Gospel, where Christ Jesus showeth, that the poor man so soon as he was dead was carried by the Angels into Abraham's bosom, and the rich man's soul so soon as he was dead was found in the torments of hell, Luke 16.22.23. There is no middle place of temporal torment as there are but two sorts of persons, so but two sorts of places, one dying in the favor of God, the other out of his favor; so there are but these places, heaven for the one, and hell for the other.

Besides, it is no way just, that the soul alone should be punished for the sins of the whole man: but Purgatory presupposeth a sole punishment of the soul without the body, which notwithstanding never sinned without the body. If it be justice in God to punish the soul for the supposed venial sins, how should it not savor of injustice to let the body go scotfree and suffer nothing? For what cause or color can they suppose or surmise, why the body, which hath had part and fellowship in the sin, and should have part & fellowship in the glory after the forgiveness of sin, should have no feeling at all, or suffering of the punishment that purgeth our sin? Furthermore, it is more proper to God to reward good things, then to punish evil, because he visiteth the iniquities of the Fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation, but showeth mercy to thousands, Exod. 20, 5, 6. & 34, 7. Numb. 14, 18. Ier. 32, 18. If then it be necessary to be believed upon pain of damnation, that the souls of such as are truly penitent should after death go into Purgatory punishments, why then ought we not as well to hold and believe, that the souls of such as have kept the Commandments of God all their life long, and at the last turn from their righteousness without repentance, should first go into a place of rest and refreshing, to receive the reward of their well-doing, before they be cast into eternal punishment? But this no man believeth as a truth, neither thinketh it reason, why then should any believe the other? If any object, that when the righteous man committeth iniquity he hath no reward, because all his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned, in the trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them he shall die. I answer, that this answer is no answer at all, neither anything to the matter in hand; for if this prove that such as are evil shall not for some good be recompensed and rewarded, because all their good that they have done shall be forgotten: then it will as strongly prove, that the righteous which have committed some small evils should not be punished for those evils, because all the evil shall be forgotten, according to the saying of the same Prophet, Ezek. 18, 21, 2^o. If the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath done, and keep the statutes of the Lord, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die; all his transgressions that he hath committed they shall not be mentioned unto him, in his righteousness that he hath done, he shall live.

Lastly, whereas they go about to prove Purgatory by the custom of prayer for the dead it is very clear and evident, that if once we admit Purgatory, we may not pray for the dead at all, because while we pretend to do them good, we shall do them harm. For no affliction is or can be laid upon others but in these three respects. First, when a man out of a cruel and unreasonable passion desireth and delighteth in the torments of others without any cause, as the heathen set forth men in their public plays, exhibited unto the people upon their devilish Theaters to fight, to wound, and kill one another; or else cast them unto Lions and other wild beasts to fight with them, while they in the mean season did solace themselves in it as at a sport: or else secondly for the upholding of justice and judgment, as when murderers and malefactors are put to death: or thirdly, in mercy and compassion, for the benefit of him that is afflicted, as the Physician afflicteth the sick patient. In this last respect, God is said and supposed to afflict souls in Purgatory, not to sport himself in their misery, because he is not a tyrant: neither to punish them as malefactors, because he is a father unto them, but to correct them for their souls health as a gracious God. So then as the Surgeon or the Physician do not delight in afflicting and torturing their sick patients, but deal as tenderly with them as possibly they can, due respect had to the recovering of their health & former estate; so God doth afflict no more, then is precisely necessary for the purging out of sin. As then it were vain and hurtful for the standers by, to entreat the good and skillful Physician that loveth and tendreth his patient, and no way afflicteth him more then is precisely necessary for the recovery of his health, to with-draw his hand, or to remit anything that he intendeth to do: as if he purpose to open a vein & to let him bleed ten or twelve ounces (knowing his disease requireth it) no man entreateth y^t it may be but two or three: or if he purpose to have him purge two or three days, to desire it may be but one day, or if he be constrained to cut and lance, to request him to spare his labor and let the party alone, because that were to hurt the sick man, and a token that we hate him rather then love him: so were it hurtful for the souls departed to entreat God any way to lessen or shorten their affliction which otherwise he would lay upon them, forasmuch as he intendeth not to hurt them at all, but to purge out of them the impurity that is found in them. Thus therefore we reason with them against Purgatory, as Luther doth with them about Pardons & indulgences. For as he saith, It profiteth not to be delivered from that which worketh so a man's salvation; but such are the afflictions and punishments of this life, as the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 119, 71. and the Apostle, 1 Pet. 1, 23▪ so that Indulgences should hurt to free us from that which shall do us good: so we may conclude from Luther's ground and foundation, that it profiteth not but hurteth, to be delivered from that which worketh unto a man's salvation: but the afflictions and punishments of the next life are such, so that we should not desire and crave of God to be delivered from them.

Lastly, from hence ariseth great comfort to [Use 3] all pen•tent persons, and such as are careful to cleanse their souls and bodies from all sin; they may assure themselves that this work of repentance, though it be painful for a time, ye• shall be gainful in the latter end, for we are assured to find pardon, and purchase favor at God's hand. But the afflicted soul, terrified with the feeling of sin, [Object.] will object the multitude and the exceeding great number of his sins, and thereupon sit in judgment upon himself, and give wrongful sentence against himself, that he neither hath nor can have any hope of obtaining mercy. I answer, we are oftentimes evil judges to judge even of our selves, especially in time of temptation, and therefore I may say unto them, as the Apostle doth in another case, Are ye not partial in yourselves, and become judges of evil thoughts? I am. 2, 4. For shall we suffer our hope to fail, or our selves to faint and wax feeble, when God biddeth us hope, and assureth us that he will make us clean from all our filthiness? Ezek. 36, 25. Ye shall be clean from all your filthiness. When he saith from all. I say from all, shall we say not from all? Or that they are so many that he cannot, or will not make us clean from all? Can anything be hard to him that is Omnipotent, whose mercy is above the heavens? He hath heaped up mercy in store for us, more then we have heaped sins against him, be our sins never so many. O but our sins, [Objection.] will some say, are not only many, but they are most grievous & horrible, greater they are then can be pardoned. I answer, [Answ.] be it that they are grievous, yet do not say they are greater then can be forgiven. For that is a greater offense against God, then the committing of those sins that lie so heavy upon our consciences. Hence it is that the Lord saith, Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow: and though they be red as Crimson, they shall be as wool, Isaiah 1, 18. Doth not he much abridge and cut short the Princes power and mercy, that shall say he can pardon only lesser and smaller offenses committed against him, but cannot pardon. Treason and rebellion? And doth not he shrink up the sinews of God's power that is infinite, and accuse him of impotency and weakness, that chargeth him not to be able to forgive such as are y^e greatest offenders against him? Nay, as the mercy of a Prince is most of all seen in sealing a pardon unto such as have provoked him in the highest degree: so is the grace and goodness of GOD especially manifested in forgiving those that are sinners above others, that so Where sin aboundeth, grace may abound much more, Rom. 5, 20.

Again, as well we might say in a pride & confidence of our own works, that our good deeds are greater then he can sufficiently reward, as in despair to pronounce, that our evil deeds are greater then he can pardon: because as his mercy is greater then all our good works, so his power is greater then all our evil works. Who did ever come unto him to entreat favor and forgiveness at his hands that went away unpardoned? Paul testifieth of himself, that he was the chief of sinners, 1. Tim. 1, 15. and the least of the Saints, Eph. 3, 8. yet he obtained pardon. And wherefore? even because this example of God's mercy shown him should be an instruction unto the Church of God forever, that he will deal in like manner with all other that truly repent, how great soever their sins be.

11 He that toucheth the dead body of a man, shall be unclean even seven days.

12 He shall purify himself therewith the third day, and the seventh day he shall be clean: but if he purify not himself the third day, then the seventh day he shall not be clean.

13 Whosoever toucheth the corpse of any man that is dead, and purgeth not himself, defileth the Tabernacle of the Lord, and that person shall be cut off from Israel, because the sprinkling water was not sprinkled upon him; he shall be unclean, & his uncleanness shall remain still upon him.

14 This is the Law, When a man dieth in a tent, all that come into the tent, and all that is in the tent, shall be unclean seven days.

15 And all the vessels that be open, which have no covering fastened upon them shall be unclean.

16 Also whosoever toucheth one that is slain with a sword, &c.

17 Therefore for an unclean person they shall take of the burnt ashes of the same offering, & pure water, &c.

18 And a clean person shall take hyssop, and dip it in the water, and sprinkle it in the tent, and upon all the vessels, &c.

19 And the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean the third day, &c.

20 But the man that is unclean, and purifieth not himself, that person shall be cut off, &c.

21 And it shall be a perpetual law unto them, that he that sprinkleth the water of separation, &c.

We have shown before how God appointed a red heifer to be offered, and of the ashes thereof hallowed water to be made, wherewith to sprinkle those that are unclean by touching a dead body, or by coming near anything belonging to the dead. The heathen themselves had certain purging sacrifices, & certain holy waters, whereby they cleansed and purified sometimes their land forces, and sometimes their sea-forces, and sometimes their cattle. But that which God prescribeth to his people in this place, is of another sort, and to another end. Moses therefore declareth what persons and what things are to be cleansed, verses 11, 14, 15. the time when, verse 12. the punishment of him that omitteth this cleansing, ver, 13, 20. the manner how to cleanse with this water, verses 18, 19. and how long this Law shall continue, verse 21. So then the point that cometh to be considered in this chap. is the water of separation, and the use thereof among the people of God. This though it concerned the Israelites only, and was to remain among them touching the practice as a perpetual statute, yet it had an end in him that brought an end to all types and figures; and he that was buried in the earth for our sins, buried with him in the grave these ceremonies. Nevertheless, as we have often noted before, there do still remain diverse and sundry moral uses from hence for our further instruction, which bind us to the end of the world.

The uses. First of all, this serveth to reprove the Papists, who have patched up their religion with sundry shows of ceremonies, partly Jewish, and partly heathenish. And from an imitation of this water of separation commanded in this place to be used in sprinkling of the unclean, their tents also, and vessels, they have brought in their holy water sprinkle, and maintain their superstitious blessing with crosses, and their hallowing of wax, palms, ashes, holy bread, salt, oil, and such like trash and trumpery, & bear men in hand that they have power to drive away diseases, and to cast out devils. These institutions are apish imitations of the Jewish rites, & a raising of them out of their graves where they lay buried and rotten long ago, and yet they seek to quicken them and to put life into them again. Bellarmino, handling this point at large, delivereth his opinion in two propositions: the first, that water, oil, bread, candles, ashes, palms, and such like are rightly blessed. The second, that they are rightly used to signify and to work supernatural effects. So then the question and controversy arising between the Church of Rome and us, is this, whether these creatures may be used not only to signify, but to work supernatural effects. To prove this, he alledgeth two testimonies out of this book, y^e one out of the 5. cha. touching the waters of jealousy, that if they were drunken, they brought to the adulteress certain destruction, for the water caused the curse to enter into her, so that her belly did swell, and her thigh rot. The other out of this Chapter touching the waters of separation, so called, verse 9. and 13. because they were to be sprinkled with it, who for some legal uncleanness were separated from the holy Tabernacle and the company of others. The Jews, were not hereby washed from their wickedness, that were sprinkled with this water, but it was used to wash them from the pollutions of the Law, when they had touched a dead corpse, or such like. But what is all this, being granted, to heal diseases, or to drive away devils, according to their doctrine, teaching that these sanctified creatures may be used to these purposes? And if this holy water had any such secret force or inherent virtue, what needed so great a multitude of poor impotent people, blind, halt, withered, to wait for the moving of the water of the pool of Bethesda at Jerusalem? or he that had an infirmity thirty eight years to lie languishing so long, for want of one to put him into the pool whensoever the Angel went down to trouble the water, John. 5.2, 3, 4? Seeing both he and all the rest might have been healed so easily by every Priest, if the water of separation, or the water of jealousy could have helped them? We read of many possessed by devils, brought to Christ that he might cast them out of them: could the Jews themselves do it by this sprinkling of water? If they could not, then is Bellarmino grossly deceived, and goeth about to deceive his readers, when he affirmeth, that these are creatures which were indeed effectual to work some effects, were also effectual to work these supernatural effects, to wit, to drive away devils, and to heal diseases.

This had been a ready way and a quick dispatch, if anything could have been done by them. When the disciples of John came to Christ, to know whether he were the promised Messiah, or that they should look for another, he wished them to tell John, what they had seen and heard, The blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up, Matth. 11.5. But if the common and ordinary use of the waters of expiation and cleansing, could have effected these miraculous works, he would never have gone about to prove himself to be the Messiah by these arguments which should have been weak, uncertain, and untrue. Nay, do the Jesuits think that the waters of jealousy have now any force to try the adulteress, that after she hath drunk thereof, her belly should swell, and her thigh should rot? No, doubtless: and therefore if it retain not the effect which it had at the first institution, how shall we think it can have other and the same far greater and stranger effects? True it is, when God appointeth the creatures to be used, they have oftentimes supernatural effects, as when Elisha by salt healed the unwholesome waters, 2 King. 2.21. and did cleanse and cure the leprosie of Naaman, by his seventimes washing in Jordan, 2 King. 5.14. when the Apostles and Elders did anoint the sick with oil, Mar. 6.13. I am. 5.14. and when Christ used spittle to heal the blind man, these we confess, were made signs of the power of God: but the question is, whether without any word or warrant from God we may use the creatures to such effects? The waters which now we speak off have approbation and allowance from the mouth of God, and therefore no marvel if they be effectual to the ends for which they were established. In like manner the water in Baptism we sanctify, the bread and wine in the Supper of the Lord we consecrate, as signs and seals of the power of Christ, assuring us of the forgiveness of our sins. See then how our adversaries dally and delude the world, to make them believe that we deny, that any consecrated creatures may be used to work supernatural effects: whereas they should join issue with us in this, whether they be able to do thus without the word of God: but in this they are altogether silent and hold their peace, as if they were stricken dumb. The Prophets and servants of God used these things well, but it followeth not hence, that the Priests of Baal the Romish Priests may therefore use them; no more then we conclude, that because the shepherds may eat one of their sheep, therefore the Wolf also may do the like. Or thus, Ishmael was circumcised at thirteen years of age, therefore his sons, the Arabians and the Mohammedans after his example might do the like. Or the woman of Samaria conclude, Our fathers Jacob and his sons worshipped in this mountain, therefore we may sacrifice there also. This kind of reasoning was the error of the disciples, Elijah prayed that fire might come from heaven, and consumed them that reproached him, therefore we may use such a prayer, Luke 9. Thus did the Cerinthians, Ebionites, Ethiopians, and other heretics reason, Christ was circumcised, therefore we also ought to be circumcised.

This is the conclusion of Bellarmino and of the Wolf, who gathered by the force of this reason, that he might devour the sheep as well as the shepherds; but the Wolf was a thief, the sheepeards did eat that which was their own. So saith the Cardinal, Moses used water to supernatural effects, Elisha cured the waters with salt, and the broth with meal cast into it, 2 King. 4.4. Therefore we may use holy water blessed after the Popish fashion, both to cure diseases, and to drive away devils, albeit the water were never instituted of God to any such uses and purposes. For we must consider there is great difference of times, of places, and of persons; that which is lawful at one time is unlawful at another: that which is allowed in one, is not to be allowed in another: And that which is good done after one manner, is evil being done in another.

Besides, we are not left to our selves to devise in God's worship what we list, Deut. 12.32. Luke 2.22. with Levite. 12.8. 1 Sam. 15.15 Gen. 22.16. compared with Jeremiah, chap. 19. verse 5.

Lastly, this practice giveth way and allowance to sorcerers, enchanters, charmers, and coniurers to use the word and creatures of God to their lewd practices, to cure diseases and such like, whereas God hath appointed no such means to heal them.

[Use 2] Secondly, from hence the Romanists go about to establish their unsound distinction of sin into mortal & venial. Some, they say, are so little as that they deserve not eternal death, but may be washed away with these holy waters that now we speak off. Doubtless, these sins must be exceeding little, or the force of these waters must be exceeding great when men are sprinkled with them. Whereas the Apostle is plain, speaking of this heifer, and of this water, Heb 9. that being bodily they can only purify the body, but in no sort purge the conscience from dead works.

True it is, they say these sins do somewhat offend God, yet they add, facili negotio expiantur, that is, they are with little ado easily purged and put away. But we teach according to the Scriptures, that all sin in it own nature, even anger and concupiscence which they call venial, is mortal. True it is, there is a difference between sin and sin, both in nature and in the punishment due unto them: some are greater & some lesser, some worther of greater punishment and some of lesser; yet the least sin committed in thought and motion, deserveth everlasting death and separation from the gracious presence of God, if he deal with us according to the rigor of his justice, and look upon us without the satisfaction of Christ.

The writers and teachers of the Popish Religion publish to the world, that we hold the sottish Paradox of the Stoics, that all sins are equal, the contrary whereof is manifest in the harmony of the confessions of our Churches. And why do they slander us with this dotish doctrine? or upon what foundation do they ground this accusation? forsooth because we hold that all are mortal. But this is a weak consequent, and will not prove the point for which they allege it. All men are mortal, even Princes, as it is said in the Psalm, 82.6. shall we hence conclude, that the people are equal to Princes, because they are alike subject to mortality? In the breach of the seventh commandment, there are sundry sortes of uncleanness and incontineny forbidden, as fornication when men defile themselves with filthy harlots and concubines: adultery between them that are married: incest committed with such as are near in consanguinity or affinity: the sin of the Sodomites, Who leaving the natural use of the woman burn in lust one toward another, man with man working filthiness, Rom. 1.27. revenged with fire and brimstone from heaven, Gen. 19.

Among all these several kinds, there are degrees of sin, one is greater then other, adultery worse then fornication, incest then adultery, and Sodometry then them all: and all these by the confession of the Papists themselves are mortal, and yet by their own confession also, one is more heinous and horrible then the other. If then their conclusion be good against us, that we hold all sins to be equal, because we teach that they are mortal: how should it not stand as strong and firm against themselves, that they also hold all these sins to be equal, fornication as bad as incest, and adultery as heinous as Sodometry, because they teach that they are all of them mortal? The like absurdity we might easily infer against them in the rest of the commandments, and that out of the Roman Catechism. But to understand this point the better, let us consider that our Churches teach no other doctrine then the Scriptures teach, that as all sins proceed out of the same fountain of corruption and infidelity, so all of them make us guilty of eternal death and damnation, unless we obtain pardon by faith in the Mediator Christ Jesus, Luke 12.47.48. All sins, whether committed of ignorance or knowledge, deserve stripes, either many or few, and these stripes are no other then eternal punishments, as appeareth by the words of the Apostle, 2 Thes. 1.8. so that they which know not God, neither believe the Gospel, shall be punished in hell; because according to the opinion of the Papists themselves, when the Lord shall come in flaming fire to judge the quick and the dead, Purgatory shall utterly cease and be no more, the prison doors shall be broken, the fire shall be quenched, the place shall be emptied, and the poor souls shall be discharged, then shall be a gaile delivery, they shall be quit by Proclamation. To understand this the better, we must know that sins may be said to be mortal or venial three ways. First, in regard of the event. Secondly, in regard of the cause. Thirdly, in regard of the nature of the sins themselves. They are venial, in regard of the success or event which do obtain pardon, and when forgiveness followeth them, though they be in themselves most grievous: as 1 John. 5.16. where the Apostle calleth those only sins unto death, whose reward certainly is eternal death; and those not to death, which may be forgiven, howsoever in their own nature they merit damnation.

Thus we may say, that David's adultery and murder were venial sins, because howsoever in the nature of them they were deadly, yet were they venial in regard of the event, because Nathan said unto him, The Lord hath put away thy sin, thou shalt not die, 2 Sam. 12.13. No sin is venial so long as we follow it: and no sin is mortal, when once we forsake it, Pro. 28.13. All sins are made venial by repentance: no sin is venial without repentance. Secondly, sins may be said to be venial in regard of the cause from whence they proceed, whereupon they sooner obtain pardon, because they are not done of malice and a settled purpose, but of ignorance and infirmity: as Paul showeth this to be the cause, why his sin was venial unto him, and why he obtained mercy and forgiveness, because he did it ignorantly through unbelief, 1 Tim. 1.13, And in the fifteenth Chapter of this book it is said, the Priest shall make atonement, when a private person or the whole Congregation hath committed anything through error or ignorance, and it shall be forgiven them, for it is ignorance, Numb. 14.25.

These sins springing from this fountain are damnable in themselves: from hence it came that Paul was a persecutor and a blasphemer, but the Father of all mercies and compassions, gave him pardon, because he sinned of ignorance and infirmity. So then, his sins were venial in regard of the event and of the cause But sin considered in the nature of the thing it self is not venial, but deserveth temporal and eternal punishment. Now the Papists themselves teach, that sin is truly and properly called venial, when it is so in it own nature, and deserveth only a temporal punishment, either in this life, or in the life to come: so that if God would examine it and enter into judgment with it according to his most rigourous and severe justice, he could not punish it with eternal death, for as much as in it own nature it deserveth pardon, or at least some slight or temporal punishment. And of these, the controversy is between the Church of Rome and us, and not of those that are venial by the event, or by the cause. But the Scripture teacheth us that all sin is the transgression of the Law, 1 John. 3.4. This is a true and perfect definition of sin, for every transgression of the Law is sin, and every sin is a transgression of the Law. From whence we reason thus,

Every transgression of the law is worthy of death:

Every sin is a transgression of the Law,

Therefore every sin is worthy of death.

The first part is plainly proved by many places, Gal. 3.13.10. Deut. 27.26. Matth. 5.22 whereby it is manifest that the Prophet, the Apostle, and Christ himself speak generally without limitation, that whosoever committeth any, yea the least sin, lieth under the curse and wrath of God. Now they that are wretched and accursed, are adjudged worthy of death, by the sentence of Christ himself the Judge of the world, Matth. 25.41. and none can be free from this curse of the Law, but by the death of Christ, Gal. 3.13. and he died not only for the greatest, but for the least sins, 1 John, chapter 1. verse 7. the least of them cost him dearly, or else we must have paid dear for them.

This point was expressed unto us before, chapter 15. verse 30. for as the soul that committed ought presumptuously or with an high hand must be cut off from his people, so if ought be done by any man through ignorance, verse 24. a young bullock shall be offered for a burnt offering, to be a sweet savor unto the Lord, and thereby an atonement shall be made, verse 25. Now by this offering of every private man or of the whole Congregation, they were taught that themselves had indeed deserved death, and that they were delivered by the sacrifice of Christ (as the Lamb that taketh away the sins of the world) represented by the blood of these sacrifices.

This is so plain throughout the whole Law of Moses, that the sins committed thorough error and ignorance, even the least they could do, were never remitted and forgiven unto them, but through the benefit of the Mediator Christ Jesus, who suffered death for them, and therefore the smallest sins deserved death, and made the committers guilty in the sight of God. If any should answer unto this, that it doth not appear, that an offering was always offered for the least sins of all, because some were wont to be washed away with water, let him know, that by that washing, and by that water, the blood of Christ also was signified, as well by the death of the sacrifices, as the Apostle teacheth, Heb. 9.10, 11. and he joineth the blood and water together, and with both the people were sprinkled, verse 19. So then not only they are pronounced accursed, as some of the Jesuits cavil, that commit most horrible sins, as murder, adultery, and the like, but he that continueth not in all: or else we shall frustrate the whole discourse and disputation of the Apostle. And therefore this is but a Popish shift to help at a dead lift. For the Galatians might answer, that they had all, or the most part of them abstained from those heinous crimes, and could not be touched justly with them, and therefore they might have justification by the Law. Against this justification by the Law, the Apostle doth purposely reason, that none can be justified by the Law, because none can keep the Law, and he is accursed that continueth not in all things. Forasmuch therefore as all are pronounced to be cursed and execrable unto God, which commit the least and smallest sin, and that they are worthy of death that are cursed and execrable, it followeth that every transgression of the Law is worthy of death. [Object.] But Bellarmino objecteth the saying of the Apostle James, chap. 1.18. Sin, when it is finished bringeth forth death: therefore until it be finished, it doth not bring forth death. [Answer.] But he should conclude, Sin before it be perfected doth not deserve death: for these are two several points, and both rest to be proved.

First of all, this is a weak collection, Sin once finished gendreth death, therefore not finished, it doth not gender death. If a man should reason in this manner, the reasonable creature is mortal, therefore the creature except it have reason is not mortal; he should conclude fairly, but falsely for the beasts, and make them noble creatures.

Or thus, All Princes, though they be God's deputies and vicegerents, and susteine his person, yet are mortal: therefore men, except they sustain the person of God are not mortal. These (we see) are weak consequences, and yet they are altogether like to our adversaries, as shall appear, if we consider the words and circumstances of the Apostle. For his purpose is to describe the proceeding of sin in us, and to declare that our sins are not to be imputed unto God, but to our selves to our concupiscence, which seeketh occasions on every side, stirreth up evil desires, bringeth forth actual sin, and then sin leadeth the way to death: howbeit from hence we cannot gather, that sin bringeth not death unto us, except it be finished. But what shall we say of evil thoughts that never come into act? As for example, the Pharisees thought and taught, that except a man did commit murder, and by shedding blood did take away life, he was not guilty of eternal death: and except he committed adultery, he sinned not against the Law. But Christ himself showeth, that whosoever is angry with his brother unadvisedly, is guilty of death, and he also that looketh on a woman to lust after her, Matt. 5.22.28. Neither of these commit the outward deed, and yet because they have given consent, the Papists themselves hold that they are guilty of eterall death: therefore a sin committed in thought only deserveth death, albeit it be not finished in the work, even by their own confession, and themselves being judges. It were endless to follow these fellows, and to trace them out in all their shifts, they have so many windings and turnings which argue a bad cause: but one more I cannot pass over, that Bellarmino will have sin finished, to be nothing else but sin consented unto: and that concupiscence shall not be sin, except it be consented unto, neither yet be worthy of death. But this is directly against the Apostle, and against his own doctors. For the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 which the Apostle useth, Ia. 1.18. signifieth, to perfect & fulfill by work. And so doth Thomas Aquinas understand the same and others also, Aquin. Comment. in Jacob. 1. Gagnae. in Jacob. 1. But to turn him out of these cavils, we will for this time grant so much as he requireth, what then will he answer, concerning original sin? It is already defined in the Council of Florence, that they are worthy of eternal death that are only guilty of original sin, albeit they have not sinned after the similitude of Adams transgression, Rom. 5.14. That is, which never committed actual sin.

So then, to reason in this sort, Sin finished bringeth forth death, therefore except it be finished, it bringeth not forth death, is a false conclusion. Consider this yet farther by another contrary saying of the same Apostle touching good deeds, chap. 1.12. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation, for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life; No man can reason from hence thus, The man that endureth temptation, when he is tried, shall receive the crown of life: therefore he that is not tried shall never receive that crown. And yet this hath the same force, and looketh the same way with the former. And therefore themselves teach, that infants baptized, though they cannot be tried, yet go immediately into heaven, and receive the crown of life.

But suppose this were a good conclusion, yet he playeth the notable Sophister, in that he proveth not, that sin is not worthy of death, which he ought to have done, before he conclude that some sins are in their own nature venial.

For many sins do not bring death, which notwithstanding are worthy of death: they do not bring death, through God's mercy: but they are worthy of death, through their own merit. Wherefore this place of the Apostle, being well understood, directly overthroweth this distinction of sin, from whence it goeth about to seek shelter and defense.

[Use 3] Thirdly, under these types and shadows here rehearsed, touching the water of separation which was made with the ashes of a red heifer without spot, wherein no blemish was, which was brought out of the host to be killed, and the Priest must sprinkle her blood seven times before the Tabernacle of the Congregation, &c. I say, under these shadows the chief mysteries of our faith are handled. For there was no way of salvation but by Christ from the beginning, and there shall be no other new way unto the end. He was evermore the door by which all enter into y^e kingdom of God. He is the same, yesterday, and today, and forever, Heb. chapter 13, verse 8. This the Apostle teacheth us plainly, by alluding to these words, Hebr. chapter 9, verses 13, 14. If the blood of Bulls and Goats, and the ashes of an Heiffer sprinkling the unclean, sanctify to the purifying of the flesh: how much more shall the blood of Christ, which through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works, to serve the living God? Here the Apostle hath reference unto the red heifer mentioned in this place, whose ashes gathered together, were sprinkled in the waters of separation, and served to sanctify touching the purifying of the flesh, so that such as were shut from the Congregation (being sprinkled therewith) had free liberty to come to the Tabernacle. The truth of all this was Christ Jesus, he is this red heifer, & his blood is the true purging, Psal. 51, verses 2, 7. 1 Pet. chap. 1, verse 2. And as the door posts of the Israelites were sprinkled with y^e blood of the Lamb, so must our hearts with the blood of Christ. Now of this type, observe these principal points of religion.

First, that Christ Jesus is true man, found in the form and shape of man, That he might humble himself and become obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross, Phil. 2, verse 8. This is the cause that he is pictured out unto us in the color of the red heifer, rather than in any other, to put us in mind of his death, and the shedding of his precious blood. Thus also he is described by the Prophet; Who is this that cometh from Edom, with died garments from Bozrah, &c. I that speak in righteousness to save. Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine fat? Isaiah 63, verses 1, 2. This is no small comfort unto us, especially in all temptations, though our sins have a bloody face before his face, though they be red as scarlet, yet the blood of Christ hath washed them away: These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, Revel. chapter 7, verse 14. He hath a feeling of our sorrows, and is touched with our infirmities, being made like unto us in all things, sin only excepted, Heb. 2, 17, 18. and 4, 15.

Secondly, we learn from this consideration, that the Heiffer must be without spot and without blemish, that Christ Jesus was a pure and perfect offering without any sin. Hebr. chapter 7, verse 26, he was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens. This is our comfort also and consolation, for if he had been sinful, we should yet walk in our sins, as an infant walloweth in his blood, and the price of our redemption were yet unpaid. Hence it is, that Moses doth so carefully set down this in describing of all sacrifices, burnt offerings, meat offerings, trespass offerings, peace offerings, all oblations brought to God must be without spot and without blemish, thereby to teach the people & us to the end of the world, that there was no sin in him that took upon him our sin, For he was wounded for our transgressions, and he was bruised for our iniquities, Isaiah. 53, 5. He suffered indeed for us, but the just for the unjust, 1 Pet. 3, 18, and 2, 22.

Thirdly, in that this Heiffer was such upon whom never came yoke, it appeareth that Christ (being at his own liberty & bound to none) offered himself freely for our deliverance, & therefore when such as were sent to take him, told him they sought Jesus of Nazareth, he answered, If ye seek me, let these go their way, John 18, 8. He gave himself, not by persuasion of others, not by compulsion from others, but willingly even unto the death, Phil. chapter 2, verse 8. John, chap. 18, verses 4, 5. Isaiah, chap. 53; verse 12. His death was not by constraint, for then it could not be meritorious. If it had not been voluntary, they could not have taken it away from him: for they often lay in wait for him, and sought to put him to death, John: 10. verses 17, 18. What he was able to do, if it had pleased him, he shown in the Garden; for so soon as he had told them that he was the man whom they sought for, they went backward and fell to the ground, John 18, verse 6. He knew all things that should come unto him, yet he went forth unto them that were come with Lanternes, and Torches, and weapons, to take him, verses 3, 4. He had therefore power to lay down his life, or not to lay it down, but how then should the Scriptures be fulfilled? But they had no power of themselves to lay hands vpon him, as he telleth Pilate, chap: 19, 11. This also serveth for our comfort, that Christ died not against his will but willingly and of his own accord, performing obedience unto his Father. Not y^t his enemies could overcome him, for he overcame them, & cast thē back to the earth with a word speaking. And what words did he speak? Were they terrible and dreadful? Were they words of thunder? No, he rored not as a lyon, but spake mildely as a lamb, I am he. Now if the voice of CHRIST, 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 by gentle and amiable, were notwithstanding so effectual to throw them all down headlong to the ground; how powerful shall the angry voice of Christ be, to throw his enemies as with a sudden flash of lightning into the pit and pains of hell at the last day? And if the voice of Christ in the days of his humility, were so fearful and available in y^e hearts of his persecutors, what a dreadful thunderbolt will he cast down against all his enemies and upon all the reprobate, being in glory and sitting at the right hand of his Father, when he shall utter this final and fearful sentence, Go ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. Math. chapter 25, verse 41.

Again, we are all put in mind, that his death is meritorious and the full price of our redemption.

Thirdly, we see that he is Lord of life and death, for he raised himself by his eternal Spirit; and as he had power to lay it down, so he had power to take it up, as appeared evidently at his resurrection. Let us serve him that is able to redeem from death such as believe in him and rest upon him for their salvation. He that restored himself to life, is able to give us life: and he that brake the sorrows of death, is able to destroy him that hath the power of death.

Lastly, let us also endure the cross willingly, following his steps, and showing our selves to be like unto him, remembering that the loss of life for his sake, is indeed not a loss of life, but a finding of it, or a changing of it, a temporal life with an eternal.

Fourthly, the heifer here mentioned, was brought out of the host, as also other sacrifices were, Levite 4, 12, 21. this signified Christ's suffering out of the gates of the City, as Heb. 13, 11, 12. John 19, 16, 17, 20. This circumstance is not without profit; for first it showeth and signifieth the abolishing of the types and figures of the Law, the truth standing in place of the ceremonies, and the body instead of the shadows: and therefore such as still serve at the Altar, cannot be partakers of our Altar, that is, of Christ, Hebr. 13, 10. We have an Altar, whereof they have no right to eat which serve the Tabernacle. The false Apostles taught, that the ceremonies were to be mingled with the Gospel: but these two cannot stand together, because the service performed in the tabernacle, was but a shadow of better things to come, Col. 2, verse 17. But the body is Christ. Wherefore, to observe them was to deny Jesus Christ; and to keep them still in force, was as much as to overthrow his sacrifice once offered upon the Cross. They are therefore much deceived, that go about to bring into use again, Altars of wood or of stone in the churches of Christians. For the Apostle speaketh not of Altars as of many, but of the Altar, as of one. There is but one Altar in all the Church, not infinite Altars: and by that one Altar he understandeth the offering upon the Altar, which is no other then Christ himself. So then, we may as well bring in the Levitical sacrifices, as the Levitical Altars into the Church of Christ, forasmuch as these depend one upon another, the sacrifice having relation to the Altar, and the Altar to the sacrifice, Math. 23, verses 19, 20. whereas now we have no more need, either of the one or of the other. For we have an Altar and an offering, which by offering of himself once up a full and sufficient price for our redemption, hath perfected all that are sanctified.

Again, as Christ was led out of the gates by the Jews, as though he were unworthy of the society of men, and afterward was crucified between two thieves, as if he were the greatest malefactor of all; having before preferred a wretched murderer before him: so let it not seem strange unto us, if the world cannot abide us, and if we be often made a gazing stock to men and Angels, and accounted as the off-scouring of the world, and the filth of the earth, 1 Corinth. 4, verse 9. But howsoever the world do judge of us, let us appeal from their corrupt judgment to the righteous judgment of God, saying with Job, Behold, my Witness is in heaven, and my Record is on high, Job 16, verse 19. He accepteth of us as of his children, and will admit us as heirs of his kingdom, with his Son.

Lastly, Christ was turned out of the City, to teach us what we must account of our selves in this life, that we have here no place to rest and repose our selves, our hope is concerning things that are not seen, Hebr. 13, verses 13, 14. Let us go forth unto him without the Campe, bearing his reproach; for we have here no continuing City, but we seek one to come. As then we must be content to bear part of the Cross of Christ, and to be reproached as he was reproached (for if we will not bear part of his cross, we shall not wear part of his Crown) so also we must account our selves as Pilgrims and strangers in this world, that we may enjoy his kingdom in the world to come. We must be content to leave father and mother, lands and lives for his sake, knowing that we shall find all again with a good advantage. Such as refuse to go out of the Campe of this world to Christ, and begin to nestle themselves as if they had here a sure & certain habitation: what other thing remaineth for them, but utterly to perish in y^e Camp of this world together with the wicked? Our hope is in heauē, our ankre is fixed fast above, not in this world, but in the next: we seek not a kingdom upon the earth, for then we should deceive our selves, God hath not called us here to reign, but to suffer. Thus it was with all the fathers, Gen. chapter 47, ver. 9. Hebrews, chapter 11, verses 13, 14. The Heathen people accounted this life as it were an Inn to lodge at for a short season, not an house to dwell in and continue forever: yet those poor souls knew not whither they went, but we know whither we go, and the way we know, John 14, 4. We look for a City which hath foundations, whose builder & maker is God, Heb. 11, 10.

[Use 4] Lastly, this purging and purifying water sprinkling the unclean mentioned in this place, is a figure of the blood of Christ, fit and sufficient as a well of springing water to purge us from all our sins, Levite. 1, 13. Zach. 13, 1. In that day there shall be a fountain opened unto the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and for separation from uncleanness; (so the words are in the original) in which the Prophet alludeth to these waters of separation in this place. Christ is this fountain flowing of it self, open and ready unto everyone that will drink of it for the cleansing of sins. And we heard before out of the Apostle, that the blood of Christ, which through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purgeth our consciences from dead works, to serve the living God Now the blood of Christ purgeth our consciences two ways: First, by his merit, because his death is the propitiation for our sins, whereby the wrath of God is appeased, and we are absolved, Rom. 3, 24, 25. and 5, 8. Eph. 1, 6, 7. 1 Tim. 2, 6. He paid a great price for us, and thereby hath reconciled us unto his Father.

The other cleansing is made by sanctification of the Spirit, regenerating our nature, and mortifying sin in our flesh by the power of his death and resurrection, Rom. 6, 6, 7, 8. 1 John 1, 7. Heb. 1, 3. The heathen had their continual purgations from offenses by sacrifices, and they had likewise their sprinklings & washings with pure water, but all these were impure and unprofitable unto them, because they wanted the inward truth, which was the life of them. Hence it is, that the Poet saith, —Ter pura socios circumluit vnda,

Spargens roar leui, et ramo foelicis oliuae,

Lustrauita{que} viros—

And again in another place,

—Donec me flumine viuo

Abluero—

That is, they washed themselves, and sprinkled themselves and others with pure waters, & thereby thought themselves cleansed. But these actions were mere nullities, like Pilate's taking water, and washing of his hands before them all, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person, see ye to it, Mat. 27, 24. but the blood of Christ did cleave nearer unto him, then all the water in the sea could wash away: or like the circumcision of the Edomites and other Nations, they had the outward action, but they wanted the inward signification.

In like manner, the Papists have their holy-water, wherewith they sprinkle such as enter into their Churches, and defend their practice from this place. But this is as much as to abolish Jesus Christ, and to bring us back again to Moses: it is no better then when we have the pure fountain, to seek the myery puddles of our own inventions, and to dignity to our selves cesterne that will hold no water. For the Apostle maketh the Jewish purifyings to be a ceremonial rudiment, Heb. 9.19. where he joineth the blood of calves and goats, with water and scarket wool, and hyssop together, wherewith the book and the people were sprinkled. Now if they will retain this hallowed water, & ground it likewise from the words of Moses, they must make it also of the same matter that this was made off, to wit, of the ashes of a red heifer, and that heifer must be first burned, and also use the other actions and rites here named and remembered. But as they have no commandment to make it, so they have no promise annexed unto it. To leave them, and to come unto our selves, though we have justly abrogated the outward sprinkling with this holy water, yet we have the true water, and the true sprinkling. First therefore we learn hereby, that we are by nature unclean and impure, from the which we cannot be freed by the strength of our nature, but by the blood of Christ, represented unto us in baptism, by which we are washed. This is no vain figure, but hath his force from the ordinance of God, Rom. 6.3. Gal. 3.27.

Again, this teacheth us, that we ought to come unto God, & into his presence with all purity and holiness: therefore it is said, that God heareth not sinners, such as have sin reigning in them; but if any be a worshipper of God, and doth his will, him he heareth, John. 9.31. and we must lift up pure hands, 1 Tim. 2.8. Psal. 26.6. and 134.2. The Prophet reproveth the Jews that brought many oblations, and offered up many prayers, but they were all rejected, because their hands were full of blood, Isaiah 1. And the Lord foreshewing the state of the Church in the time of the Gospel, declareth that a pure offering should be offered unto him, Mal, 1.11.

Lastly, we are all put in mind from hence, to labor after true sanctification and holiness of life, that we may be clean within and without. We must not vainly boast of any inward purity, when none appeareth outwardly; for if we cleanse that first which is within, the outside will be clean also: neither should we foolishly glory of that which is outward, when there is none at all within, for that is mere hypocrisy and dissimulation.

This also doeth the sprinkling of the water of separation signify unto us: as also in that they which meddled with the burning of this red heifer were unclean until the even, and must wash their garments before they come into the congregation, verse 7.2. The Apostle setteth down the truth hereof, 2. Corinthians, Chap. 7. verse 1.2. Let us cleanse our selves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. So that sin is an unclean thing, like the dung of this heifer which is commanded to be burned and consumed, verse 5. and it maketh us unclean and loathsome unto God, James 1, 21. Rom. 6, 19. Revel. 3, 18, and 22, 11. We see therefore hereby, what to judge of those that live and delight in their sins, namely, that they are as filthy and polluted persons, even as a man that hath a running sore or issue about him, though he be never so richly appareled, and have all the sweet savors that may be, yet he still remaineth a polluted person: so is it with a man that abideth in sin, though he abound never so much in riches and pleasures, though he be clad in purple, and fare deliciously every day, yet he is filthy, odious, and abominable in the sight of God, of which we have spoken before in the 5. chapter. Again, this teacheth every man to be careful to avoid sin as a leprosy, because it is so foul and filthy, and that which will pollute him, if he suffer it to continue with him.

To conclude, let everyone be willing to suffer the word of exhortation, and be content to undergo a reproof for his sins, that it may be a sanctified means to bring him to be cleansed from his filthiness, and so be made a fit vessel to be received of the Lord into everlasting happiness in his kingdom.

CHAP. XX.

IN the former part of this Book, Moses hath set down many murmurings of the Israelites against God, and against Moses and Aaron the servants of God, through weariness of their journeys, through loathing of Manna, thorough the emulation of Miriam, through the report of the Spies, through the envy of the Levites, through the indignation and discontentment of the people, for God's judgments against the rebellious; whereby it came to pass, notwithstanding they were compassed about with manifold mercies of God, as with a wall, that they waxed impatient and fretting against God, unthankful and forgetful of his former benefits, distrustful & disdaining the present blessings they enjoyed.

His right hand had delivered them out of Egypt, his out-stretched arm had divided the waters of the red Sea, and set them on an heap, the Cloud had shadowed them, the Pillar of fire had conducted them, the Angel of the Lord had guided them, the Ark had gone before them, and Manna from heaven had fed them: yet now all is forgotten, they believe not in God, but tempted and provoked the holy one to anger. And yet behold more provocations then these, in these chapters following; where we shall see how they complain and cry out through scarcity of water, and through weariness of their life, when they were stung with the fiery serpents. But let us consider the words of Scripture, as they lie in order in this chapter.

1 Then the children of Israel came with the whole Congregation into the desert of Zin, in the first Moneth, and the people abode at Kadesh, and Miriam died there, and was buried there.

2 And there was not water for the Congregation, and they assembled against Moses and against Aaron.

3 And the people chid with Moses, & spake, saying: But would we had perished when our brethren died before the Lord.

4 And wherefore have ye caused the Congregation of the Lord to come into this wilderness, that we and our cattle should die there?

5 And wherefore have ye made us to come up from Egypt, to bring us into this miserable place? No place for seed, nor Figs, nor Uines, nor Pomgranates? Neither is there any water to drink.

6 Then Moses and Aaron went from the face of the assembly unto the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and fell upon their faces: and the glory of the LORD appeared unto them.

7 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying;

8 Take this Rodde, and gather thou and thy brother Aaron this Congregation together, that ye may speak unto this Rock before their eyes, and it shall give forth his waters, and thou shalt bring them waters out of this Rock: so thou shalt give this Congregation and their Cattle drink.

9 Then Moses took that Rod from the presence of the Lord, as he commanded him.

10 And Moses and Aaron caused the Congregation to assemble together before that Rock, and he said unto them; Hear now O ye Rebelles: shall we bring you waters out of this Rock?

11 Then Moses lift up his hand, and smote that Rock with his Rod twice, and much water gushed out: so the Congregation and their Cattle drank.

12 Wherefore the Lord spake to Moses & Aaron: Because ye have not believed in me, to sanctify me, before the eyes of the childrē of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this Congregatiō into the Land which I have given them.

13 These are the waters of strife, where the children of Israel strove against the Lord, & he sanctified himself among them.

In this Chapter we are to consider three several things. First, the murmuring of the people: secondly, the purpose of the Israelites to pass toward Canaan by the borders of Edom. Thirdly, the death of Aaron in the Mountain, in whose stead Eleazar his son succeedeth, and for whom the people a long time lamenteth. All these particulars are amplified in the beginning of the Chapter, by the circumstances of time; to wit, the first month of the 40 year after their departure out of Egypt, as appeareth, chap. 33, 38. and likewise of the place, of Kadesh a City in the borders of Edom, at which time also Miriam the sister of Aaron and of Moses died. These circumstances being set down, the History of their murmuring followeth, which we have often before seen and considered: declaring that whensoever & wheresoever any adversity happened, by and by they became impatient, unthankful, and forgetful of present mercies and favors. A like history to this we saw before, Exod. 17. which is not the same recorded in this place, but differing in time & place, as may appear by collation & conference of both the places.

Now let us mark their behavior in this want of water in the wilderness. First, they wish they had died by the stroke of God's hand with the seditious rout of rebels that cōspired against God, whom notwithstanding they call their brethren. Secondly, they expostulate with Moses and Aaron, that they had brought them out of Egypt into the wilderness, being barren without fruit, miserable without harvest, and dry without water? Whereas they should comfort themselves in the former mercies of God, rest in the experience of his power, and remember his help ever ready in time of need: they rise up against Moses and Aaron in show, but in deed against God, whom they served; setting down their present condition, and comparing their abode in Egypt (where they had tasted all miseries, felt all oppressions, and groaned under the heavy burdens) with their present estate, to amplify the woe and wretchedness thereof: such is their blindness and unthankfulness.

But what doth Moses, whose meek and patient spirit they grieved, and whose righteous soul they vexed frō day today with their ungodly murmurings? He doth not here turn himself to them, nor dealeth with them to reclaim them as he did, chapter 16. but went with Aaron to God, flying to the Tabernacle as to a Sanctuary, throwing down themselves on their faces, and comforting themselves in his power, presence, and protection; who being always near to them that call upon him, shown forth his glory, and commanded them to take the Rodde and speak to the Rock, promising them water, and assuring them of an happy issue of all their troubles & necessities. Now, as God commandeth, so Moses obeyeth and taketh the Rod.

Here a question may be asked, what Rod God meaneth, and Moses taketh? for we read of two Rods famous among them, and well known; one the Rod of Moses, that he used when he kept sheep in the Land of Midian, whereby he wrought afterward many miracles in Egypt, and at the red Sea, & in the wilderness: the other the Rod of Aaron, which did bud and bear blossoms, to confirm the calling of Aaron, and to declare that God had separated the Tribe of Levi to serve in y^e Tabernacle. I answer, [Answer.] we are to understand in this place, rather the flourishing Rod of Aaron: first, because Moses made mention of this in y^e last place, not long before, to wit, chap. 17, the other is not spoken off in this book: so that we are rather to refer it to Aaron's Rod before specified, then to the other not named. Secondly, this served more fitly and fully to confirm their calling of rule and government over the people, which by these conspiratours was called into question. As if they should say, Do you doubt of our calling, & ask by what authority we do these things? Behold this rod, (do ye not know it?) this flourishing rod shall convince you, and serve to bear witness against you.

Thirdly, Moses and Aaron were fled into the Tabernacle, verse 6, now chap. 17, 10. it is said, that Aaron's rod was laid up before the Testimony, for a token and testimony against those rebellious companies.

Lastly, Moses is said, ver. 9, to have taken this rod from before the Lord, or from his sight & presence, where we shown it was laid up: but we never read, that Moses his rod, whereby his calling was confirmed, Pharaohs obstinacy was convinced, and the red Sea divided, was laid up before the Testimony. So then, here is a charge & commandment, that Aaron's rod budding & bearing blossoms, should be taken, the people assembled, and the Rock only to be spoken unto before the Israelites: a promise being added, and again repeated, that waters should gush from thence in abundance, whereof the whole Assembly should drink, and the plenty of it should flow even to their beasts and cattle.

These are the Commandments of God: let us see their obedience, with their failing & halting in it: For it is not perfect and entire, wanting nothing, as appeareth by the threatening presently denounced, and by the punishment afterward inflicted. Indeed they gathered together the people, as God commanded, but they spake not to the Rock as God willed thē: they were charged to speak to y^e Rock only, yet by impatience & doubting, they spake not to the Rock, but complained against the people, and smote the Rock once, and again, not commanded. So then, they that hitherto shown invincible constancy in resisting the rage of the people, and maintained zealously the glory of God, believed faithfully his promises, and stood as Rocks unmovable against all storms that beat against them, now fail in their faith and obedience, both in speaking to the people, and in striking of the Rock. For they ask whether they should bring unto thē water out of the Rock, as if it were impossible for God to perform what he had promised, & to make good the word that was gone out of his own mouth. Again, he lifted up his hand, and smote the Rock twice through impatience and distrust: so that albeit he were a notable Prophet and holy man of God, and that God gave this witness of him, that He was a meek man above all the men that lived upon the earth: yet as the Psalmist teacheth, they troubled him with their grudgings, and vexed him with their murmurings, that he spake unadvisedly with his lips.

But God, with whom is no respect of persons, who judgeth every man according to his ways and works, doth openly accuse & convince them of sin, complaineth that they had not glorified his great Name, pronounceth & decreeth the sentence of death against them, that they should not enter into y^e Land of promise. And lest this failing of Moses, and fall of the people should be forgotten, it is named the waters of Meribah, or of strife & contention. Thus we see their doubting and disobedience is here reprov'd and threatened, and afterward punished, which is amplified by the reason, because they were so far from strengthening the people, by confirming them in the truth of God's promises, and assuring them of the due accomplishment of them, that themselves waver, doubt, and dishonor God. For as God is much honored when he is believed, and we rest in his word as in a thing unchangeable; so he is greatly dishonored when his power is not acknowledged, whē his promise is not believed, and when his truth is not trusted of us. Thus much of the meaning of the words, as also of the order and circumstances of this history: now let us come to the doctrines that arise out of the same.

[Ver. 1. The people abode at Kadesh, and Miriam died there.] In this first verse, where this murmuring for want of water is described by the time and place, we see mention is made of the death and burial of Miriam. She was an excellent woman in the Church, an holy Prophetess, one that went before others in singing the praises of God after their deliverance out of Egypt, after their passing over the red sea, and after the overthrow of Pharaoh & his host; yet is subject to death as well as others. From hence we learn, that all flesh, men and women, high and low, rich and poor, godly and ungodly, how great soever their gifts and graces be, are subject to death and mortality. This appeareth, Gen. 5. where in the catalogue of the fathers that lived before the flood, it is said of them all, they died. Albeit God multiplied their days, many hundred years for the increase of mankind, & the spreading abroad of the truth from generation to generation, yet after many days, in the end, all of them died. So Psal. 89, 48. Heb. 9, 27. Job 17, 13, 14. & ch. 21, 23, &c. One dieth in his full strength, being in all ease and prosperity; another dieth in the bitterness of his soul, and never eateth with pleasure; they shall sleep both in y^e dust, and the worms shall cover them. And what shall I say more? We acknowledge in words, and see with our eyes, a decay and declining of of all things by experience. All earthly things under the Sun that have beginning, both have and hasten to their ending. The grass, when it is grown, is mowed: the fruit, when it is ripe, is gathered: the harvest, when it is ready, is reaped. The trees that flourish in the Spring and Summer, have their declining Autumn, and their decaying Winter. The Moon set in the Heaven to rule the night, hath her wane. The Sun which cometh forth as a Bridegroom out of his chamber, & rejoiceth like a mighty man to run his race, yet hath his setting and descending: the farther he goeth, & the more degrees he passeth, the nearer he is to the end of his course.

The reasons of this Doctrine, are these. First, [Reason 1] because all are dust; the matter whereof we are made, is the dust of the earth, & therefore must return to the dust, out of which we are are taken. All flesh is as grass, and the glory of man is as the flower of the field, the grass withereth, and the flower fadeth & falleth away. The Sea never resteth nor standeth still, but ever ebbeth or floweth: so is it with the life of man, it never standeth at one stay, every day cutteth off one part of our days, we are nearer to our end in the evening then in the morning, according to the saying of Job, we are consumed from morning to evening, & we hasten unto the grave, as the Rivers are carried into the Sea. This is that reason which is used, Gen. 3, 19. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou turn to the earth; for out of it wast thou taken, because thou art dust, and to dust thou shalt return. Where the reason is thus framed; Thou art made and taken out of the dust, therefore thou shalt return to the dust.

Secondly, we must all die the death, because [Reason 2] all have sinned, and are deprived of the glory of God: for the Scripture concludeth all, both Jews and Gentiles under sin. True it is, man was created to immortality, and if he had ever loved God and never sinned, he should ever have lived without seeing death. But whē sin entered, death followed in the world, as the wages doth the work: according to the threatening of God, Gen. 2, 17. In the day thou eatest of the forbidden fruit, thou shalt die the death. For as they that are adjudged and condemned to die, are accounted as dead men, albeit they be kept alive in prison: so our first Parents, although they did not immediately die, yet immediately were subject to death by desert of sin. So the Apostle, Rom. 5, 12. By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death went over all men, in whom all men have sinned. Where he proveth the cause by the effect, that sin was before Moses and the Law given by him, because death was in the world, which seizeth upon young and old, infants & sucklings, whereby everyone is convinced of sin, every mouth is stopped, and all y^e world subject to the righteous judgment of God. Seeing therefore we are all made out of the dust, and carry about with us this body of sin: we have here no continuing City, but are placed in the world for a season, as men set upon a Stage to play our parts, & then must be gone to give room to others, according to the saying of Solomon, One generation passeth, and another generation succeedeth.

[Use 1] The uses follow. First, the rich, the mighty, the learned, and men of high degree, must acknowledge, that there shall be no difference between them and the poor, the lowly and unlearned, in the grave, unto which all must descend. True it is, there is a difference and distinction between rich and poor, high and low, great & small, in their life time, in friends, in honors, in houses, in lands, in livings, in food, in apparel, in duties, in dignities, & such like external privileges and perogatives, which shall have an end: yet all these shall cease, and all degrees must equally meet together in the grave: so that albeit an unequal life have gone before, yet an equal death shall follow after. This is it which Job pointeth unto, chap. 17, which we named before, where he showeth, that all worldly prosperity and hope shall fail, They shall go down into the bottom of the pit, surely it shall lie together in the dust. And the Prophet, Psal. 49, 9, 10, 11. showeth, that neither wit, nor wisdom; neither might nor money; neither favor nor policy, can prevent or put away death: that all without difference & respect of persons must yield to Nature, and that all means which they can devise for the continuance of their names shall come to naught: For he seeth wise men die, and also that the ignorant, and foolish perish, and leave their riches for others.

Secondly, let men of excellent and eminent [Use 2] places live justly, and deal uprightly in their callings, wherein they are set. As they are placed above others, so they are seen & marked before others, and notwithstanding all their honor and estimation, their riches and retinue, they must die and depart hence, when it shall be said to them, Come, give an account of thy stewardship, for thou mayest be no longer steward. The remembrance of death must therefore admonish them of their duties, that they dream not of immortality, and they promise not to themselves continuance here and perpetuity. This David toucheth and teacheth, Ps. 82, 2, 3, 6, 7. How long will ye deal unjustly, and accept the persons of the wicked? Do right to the poor and fatherless, do justice to the poor and needy: deliver the poor and needy, save them from the hand of the wicked. I have said, ye are God's, and ye all are children of the most High: but ye shall die as a man, and ye Princes shall fall like others. So then, when we are tempted to evil, we must remember death, and the estate that followeth death. Therefore the Apostle chargeth them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, neither trust in uncertain riches, but in the living GOD; because we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain, that we can carry nothing out.

Thirdly, this consideration of the common [Use 3] condition of all flesh, must stir up our affections from resting & relying upon men whose breath is in their nostrils, to depend upon the eternal God, which continueth and liveth forever. Let us beware of all vain confidence. We are ready to rest upon creatures, and stay our selves upon an arm of flesh, as upon a broken Reed, whereby we deceive our selves of our hope, and rob God of his honor. This we learn, Psal. 146, 3, 4, 5. Put not your trust in Princes, nor in the sons of man, for there is no help in him: his breath departeth, and he returneth to the earth, then his thoughts perish. Blessed is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God. Man is vain, and all his pomp is lighter then vanity. If then we make him our stay and staff, we beat the air, we labor in the fire, we build upon a weak foundation, and rest upon the uncertain life of mortal and miserable man, who vanisheth as a shadow, passeth as a dream, flieth as an Eagle, speedeth as a Poste, consumeth as a garment, and goeth away as a thought that cannot be recalled. His life is as a span soon measured, as a vapor soon gone, as a tale soon told, as an hand-breadth soon measured, as a wind soon ouerblowne, and as the weauers Shuttle, quickly sliding.

Lastly, it is our duty to prepare for it before [Use 4] it cometh, that we may be found ready, and have oil in our lamps, whē the Bridegroom cometh. For death spareth none, it respecteth no person, no age, no Sexe, no State or condition, no power can withstand it, no wisdom can prevent it, no bribe can corrupt it, no cunning can overcome it. And albeit we often recover of some diseases, yet in the ende we are taken away. The whole life of a Christian should be a continual meditation of death, to teach us (as it were to die daily, and to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom: not to set our whole love and liking on the world, which we must shortly leave. Will a man bestow cost and charges on an house and tenement, in which he shall not long dwell, and out of which he is shortly to depart? Or will he be patching that Tent and Tabernacle which he hath pitched for a day or two? We dwell in earthly Tabernacles, as in houses of clay, 2 Cor. 5, 4. 2 Pet. 1, 14. What wisdom then is it, to bestow days, and months, and years, in plotting & plodding for the world, for riches, and the vanities of this life? Let us also prepare and provide before hand for the day of our dissolution, that such as God hath blessed with this worlds good, set their houses and their estates in order, as the Prophet in this regard warneth Hezekiah, Isaiah 38, 1. Set thine house in order, for thou must die. And we may learn this necessary practice of Ahithophel, though living in wickedness, and dying in despair, of whom the Scripture saith, whē he saw that his counsel was not followed, he went home unto his City, put his house in order, & hanged himself. 2 Sam. 17, 23. This duty is to be thought upon in health, as that which deeply concerneth our selves and our posterity. When we have rightly disposed the things of this life, let us prepare for a Nunc dimittis, let us commend our spirits into the hands of God, let us resign up our selves willingly to death, when we must enter into a particular judgment. For so soon as the soul is departed and separated from the body, God holdeth his Sessions, to which we are summoned by his messenger death, to come into his presence, to receive in part according to our works, whether they be good or evil. Even as we see in the affairs of this life, how Judges and Justices keep their sessions and assizes, wherein malefactors brought out of prison, are arraigned: so God holdeth his time of judgment and justice, to reward everyone according to his works. We have all a cause and case to be tried, the greatest, the weightiest, the worthiest that ever was handled, not touching silver & gold, not concerning house or land, not of titles or inheritances, but of the everlasting salvation or dānation of our souls forever: and therefore it standeth us in hand, to be well armed & thoroughly appointed, that we come not as the foolish Virgins, without oil in our lamps, or as the unprepared guest, without our wedding garment. We see in temporal Courts, when men have a cause to be tried, and an action to be determined, either of goods or good name, how careful they are before hand to read Evidences, to produce witnesses, and to search Records, that y^e suite may pass on their sides: how much more careful ought we to be to answer before the eternal Judge, where no man shall be admitted to appear by his Attorney, but all must come in their own persons, none shall be suffered to put in sureties? This will be a great day, whē the whole world shall appear together at once, high and low, Prince and Subject, noble and vnnoble, according to the description that John maketh, I saw the dead, both great & small stand before God, and the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life, and the dead were judged of those things which were written in the book according to their works, Revel. 20, 12.

[And was buried there.] Hitherto of the death of Miriam: now of that which followed her death, to wit, her burial. See here, when life was departed, what they did with the body; they committed it to the earth.

The Doctrine from hence is this, that it is a necessary duty to bury the dead. This appeareth by many examples of the godly which have practiced this duty, Gen. 23, 4. Abraham the father of the faithful, bought a possession of burial of the Hittites, who by the sight and light of nature, had their Sepulchers; & therefore answered Abraham, Thou art a Prince of God among us, in the chiefest of our Sepulchers bury thy dead: none of us shall forbid thee his Sepulcher, but thou mayest bury thy dead therein. So ch. 25, 8, 9. when Abraham yielded the spirit and died in a good age, and was gathered to his people, his sons Isaac & Ishmael buried him in the Cave of Machpelah, in the field of Hephron, where Abraham was buried with Sarah his wife. The like we see done to Isaac, when he gave up the ghost, being old and full of days, his two sons, Esau and Jacob buried him. Now as Jacob did to his father, so his children do to him, according as he had commanded them; for his sons carried him into the land of Canaan, and buried him in the Cave of the field of Machpelah, which Abraham had bought. The like may be said of Moses, Deut. 34, 5, 6. for albeit the people buried him not, neither knew of his Sepulcher, lest they should abuse it to idolatry, yet rather than he should want burial, he was buried of God. The men of Iabesh Gilead are praised of God, and rewarded of David, because they buried King Saul and his son, and adventured their lives to do unto him their last duty. 2 Sa. 2, 5, 6. The same might be said of the rest of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Judges, Kings, Governors, and Priests, yea of Christ himself, whose burial (albeit he were able immediately to have raised and restored himself to life) is set down in the Gospel, that his death might be confirmed, and his farther humiliation manifested. These examples teach that it is a Christian and commendable duty of the living to be performed to the dead, of children to be performed to their parents, and of the people of God one to another, to commit the body of the deceased to the grave, to put dust to dust, and so to cover earth with earth.

And no marvel. For first, among all creatures, [Reason 1] man is most loathsome and ugly when life is departed. As in his birth and bringing forth into the world, of all creatures he is most frail and feeble, without strength to stand, without help to defend himself: so being dead, he is most frail, filthy, and deformed. He that a little before gloried in his beauty, comeliness, feature, & proportion, is now become the mirror and spectacle of a deformed and misshapen carcass. Such a confusion and wrack hath sin wrought and brought into our nature. This made Abraham to say to the Hittites, I am a stranger & a foreigner among you, give me a possession of burial to bury with you, that I may bury my dead out of my sight, Gen. 23, 4. This is noted in Lazarus, who having been buried but four days, his body stank, John 11, 39.

[Reason 2] Secondly, burial is promised as a blessing from God, and the want of it threatened for a plague and judgment. God offereth it as a mercy to Abraham, that he should be buried in a ripe age; and to Josiah, that he should be put in his grave in peace, and his eyes should not behold the evil that should be brought upon that place. Contrariwise, the want hereof is threatened as a curse to Jeroboam & Ahab Kings of Israel, that they and their posterity should be devoured of dogs. And Ier. 22, 19. and 36, 30. because Jehoiakim fell from God, it was foretold unto him by the Prophet, that he should not be buried honourably, but he should be buried as an Ass is buried, even drawn and cast forth without the gates of Jerusalem. But it may here be objected, that the faithful oftentimes want burial, some consumed to ashes, some drowned in the waters, some devoured with wild beasts, some hanged on gibbets, of whom the world was not worthy: as the Prophet complaineth, Psalm. 79, 2, 3. I answer, all temporal chastisements are common to the godly and ungodly, as famine, plague, pestilence, sword, nakedness, & such like punishments, which God shooteth as his arrows against the sons of men. The favor of God bringing salvation, standeth not in these outward things. For as it cannot profit a wicked and wretched man to be solemnly enterr'd and costly buried, dying out of the favor of God, (as is noted in the parable of the rich glutton:) so it shall not hurt a righteous man to want a sumptuous solemnizing of his funerals.

[Use 1] From this principle we learn sundry instructions. First, we must make a difference between the body of man and beast. For as man differeth from the beast in his life, made after the image of God, fashioned to look upward, created with a reasonable soul, and sundry other perogatives: so he should in his death and burial. The bodies of beasts are drawn forth being dead, to lie in the open air, and to be devoured one of another, and it skilleth not. But it is unseemly and unlawful, against order and honesty, that the dead bodies of men should be cast out vnburied into ditches and dunghills, or such foul and filthy places; and therefore Jehu speaking of Jezebel cast down out of her window, and having her blood sprinkled upon the wall said, Visite now yonder cursed woman, and bury her. 2. Kings 9, 34.

[Use 2] Secondly, observe in this place, that all superstition in burial is to be avoided. We read here of her burial, and Josephus addeth, it was done at the common charges with great solemnity: but we read of no masses, obits, crosses, dirges, singing, ringing, watching, holy-water, bell and banner, trentals, & such like trumpery, practiced in these days in y^e Church of Rome. Thē they praised the Name of God for the dead, to stir up others to an imitation of their virtues: now they pray to God for the dead to get money withal. Then they rejoiced that they had overcome the enemies of their saluatiō, & had received their crowns: now they teach men to weep, for fear of the Popes painted fire of a supposed Purgatory. Thus we see in that her burial is nakedly set forth, without these superfluous and superstitious toys, it teacheth us to condemn shrines, tapers, torches, candles, pilgrimages, and such ceremonies as are hurtful to the living, unprofitable to the dead, chargeable to their friends, and dishonorable unto GOD. For it is great wickedness and gross superstition to hold any holiness in the manner of burial, to make one garment holier thē another, as to be buried in a Monks cool: to make one place holier then another, as to be buried in the Church-yard rather then out of it; to be buried in the Church, rather then in y^e Churchyard; in the Chancel rather then in y^e Church, and near the high Altar, rather then in any other place. This is great vanity, to place any religion in times, in places, in garments, all which we see passed over in this History.

Thirdly, it reproveth all keeping of dead men's bones vnburied, and reserving of relics [Use 3] practiced in the Church of Rome. It is a great part of the religion of Rome, to glory of their devout touching and adoring of holy relics, and to make Merchandize thereof. The Lord said in the beginning to Adam and all his posterity, Dust thou art, and to dust shalt thou return, Gen. 3, 19. So that the bones and bodies of men departed, are not to be kept out of their graves, neither can they be preserved without corruption. And when Stephen was stoned, we read that certain men fearing God, carried him among them to be buried, which was a duty of charity: and that they made great lamentation for him, which was a fruit of their piety: but we find no mention of shrining up of relics, or keeping any monuments or members of him. They allege for their purpose, the woman's touching the hem of Christ's garment, whereby she was healed. I answer, we doubt not but Christ living upon the earth, wrought miracles with his word, and without his word, present and absent, by outward signs, and without outward signs. But now the gift of miracles is ceased, and therefore to look for help by garments, by napkins and shadows, is superstition and tempting of God. Again, the force and virtue of healing her infirmity, did not proceed from his garment, but immediately from himself; and therefore Christ saith, Some body hath touched me, for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me: he doth not say, virtue is proceeded from my garments. The Disciples confess, the people thrust and thronged him. Likewise the soldiers cast lots for his Coat, and parted his garments among them; yet they received no benefit by him or them. Wherefore, it was her faith that healed her. Moreover, they allege the reserving of Manna in the golden Pot, and keeping of Aaron's rod in the Tabernacle, Heb. 9. I answer, these were reserved and laid up by the express commandment of God; let them bring forth like warrant for keeping their crosses, garments, images, bones, and such like scraps, and we will receive them. Secondly, as they were reserved by the commandment of God, so by the word of God they were preserved in their full strength from corruption and putrification: whereas their trumpery of Saints relics, rot and consume away, as our Writers have proved, and their own authors have confessed. Lastly, from this reservation, they shall never be able to prove any adoration. For these monuments, the Pot of Manna, and the rod of Aaron were never commanded to be worshipped. But the Romish relics are shown openly for men to fall down to thē, which is superstition and idolatry: and therefore being thus abused, they should be defaced, as Hezekiah brake in pieces the brazen serpent (though it were a special monument of God's mercy, and a lively figure of Christ) when it began to be worshipped, and the ordinance of God turned into an idol.

[Use 4] Fourthly, we learn from hence to strengthen our faith in the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead. For burial is a pledge of immortality, a sign of the resurrection, and as a glass to behold the life to come, and therefore the bodies of men are not contemptibly to be cast abroad, but decently to be laid in the earth, as the Corn is cast in the ground, & there rotteth, groweth up, and beareth fruit. We were not created of God to lie forever in the grave, and to end in corruption; but our burial preacheth to us another life, and showeth that we shall be restored into a new and better estate. We are laid up in the safe keeping of God, until the day come that he shall raise the dead again. Let us then stir up our selves to understand, that we are not appointed to live only in this world, but that there is another life prepared for us. This the Apostle teacheth, 1 Cor. 15, 29. What shall they do that are washed for dead? If the dead rise not at all, why are they then washed for dead? It was an ancient custom, both among Jews & Gentiles, among Infidels and Christians, to wash the bodies of the dead before they were buried, by which, all other ceremonies belonging thereunto, as embalming, mourning, wrapping, & burying, are signified; as if he should say, if there be no resurrection, why are the dead bodies costly anointed, cleanly washed, decently buried, solemnly accompanied, sorrowfully lamented for, and carefully wrapped in Linnen? Seeing then these rites commonly used, show that our bodies shall be renewed, let us labor to make them members of Christ, and Temples of the holy Ghost. Let us abhor all Atheists, Epicures, Libertines, and such proud heretics, that mock at all religion, & deny the faith of the resurrection, which is the ground-work and foundation of all our comfort. Howsoever therefore the wicked here flourish for a time, and spread as the green Bay-tree; contrariwise, the godly are destitute, afflicted, and tormented, and accounted as sheep to the slaughter, yet it shall be well with them that fear the Lord, and in the end he will reward the wicked according to their works. For it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you, and to you which are troubled, rest, when the Lord Jesus shall show himself from heaven with his mighty Angels. This is it which Abraham saith to the rich man, Son, remember that thou in thy life time receivedst thy pleasures, and likewise Lazarus pains; now therefore is he comforted, and thou art tormented.

[Ver. 2, 3, 4, 5. And there was not water for the Congregation.] The people had been brought out of the Land of Egypt, out of the yoke of bondage, and out of the furnace of iron: they had seen the great works and wonders of God, they had promised to yield faithful obedience, they had tasted of the bountiful hand of God, they had tried his power and presence in bringing waters out of the dry Rock, they had observed many thousands slain for their rebellion in the wilderness; yet behold their fresh unthankfulness; they cast out diverse reproaches, as it were so many darts and spears, not against Moses, but against God. The Doctrine from hence is this, that in all wants and dangers we are ready to murmur and repine against God. An example hereof we have, Exod. 14, 11, & 17, 1, 2. Whē the people were come out of Egypt, and saw the red sea before them, the host of Pharaoh behind them, the mountains on each side of them, and no means to escape, they repine against Moses, as if he had brought them out to die in the wilderness. Hereunto accordeth that which is recorded, chapter 17, when they came where no water was, they contended with Moses saying; Give us water that we may drink. Tempting God, distrusting his providence, murmuring against his servants, & not looking for succor and success from God. The like example we see Rahel, Gen. 30, 1, 2. when she saw her self barren & bare no children, she envied her sister, and said to Jacob, Give me children, or else I die. She went not to God, who only is able to open the womb, as Jacob teacheth her; Am I in God's stead which hath withholden from thee the fruit of the womb? but complaineth against her husband, envieth her sister, & manifesteth the corruption of her own heart. Therefore the Apostle exhorteth, 1 Cor. 10, 10. Neither murmur ye as some of thē also murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer.

[Reason 1] The reasons are, first, the bitter root of infidelity. For as the wickedness of man is great, and all the imaginations of the thoughts of his heart are only evil continually: so the fountain of all is an unfaithful heart to depart away from the living God, and therefore the Apostle chargeth, that There be not in any of us, an evil heart and unfaithful. Faith, apprehending the mercies of God, and applying the merits of Christ, is the mother of all graces, and the well spring of all obedience. And if we were acquainted with our corruptions, & the force of temptations, we would know the comfortable use, and the great necessity thereof, and magnify it above all other graces. The capital sin of unbelief, striketh at the very heart of God, and what do we leave unto him, if we deny his truth, who is truth it self. This reason is expressly set down, Psal. 78, 18, 22. They tempted God in their harts, in requiring meat for their lust: because they believed not in God, and trusted not in his help.

[Reason 2] Again, present things for the most part are wearisome and loathsome unto us, be they never so excellent. This we see in our first parents. What estate could be wished and desired, more goodly, more glorious, more gracious, thē their estate in the blessed time of their innocence: resembling and representing most lively the image of God in perfection of their Nature, in excellency of their gifts, and in preeminence of their place? Yet they were not content with this condition, they restrained not themselves within the bounds of their own calling, but presumed above that they ought to understand, and would be as God's, knowing good and evil. What is the cause of tumults and troubles in families, in Churches, in Commonwealths, and in all Societies? Surely even this, we loathe and like not the present estate of things, but seek chāges & alterations.

[Use 1] Let us apply this point to our uses. We are ready to accuse and condemn the Israelites to be a rebellious and stiff-necked people, ever tempting God, & provoking the holy one to anger. In like manner we use to inveigh against the Jews for crucifying Christ, and delivering up the Lord of glory into the hands of sinners: we accuse the partiality of Pilate, the treachery of Judas, the envy of the Pharisees, the malice of the high Priests, the villainy of the false witnesses, the cruelty of the soldiers, the taunts of the passengers, and the hard-heartednesse of the whole people. But we consider not that the same original corruption is in us that was in them, by the sway & swinge whereof, being all the sons of old Adam, we would have done as they did, if we had lived in those times. So when we hear or read of these murmurings and mutinies of the children of Israel, we are commonly wont to revile them, to defy them, and to account them the vilest people under the heavens. But we must cease to wonder at them, and learn to confess our own corruption of heart, and proneness to yield and fall down in time of temptation, unless we be stayed up by y^e mighty hand of God. For albeit he be most gracious and merciful unto us, hedgeth us round about with many blessings, and compasseth us with riches of grace on every side, yet we forget thē all, if any one cross do any way lie upon us. If the Lord touch us with sickness, as with his little finger; with losses, with crosses, with poverty, or any misery, such is our impatency, that we always dwell upon the meditation of that want, we look upon it with our eyes, we handle it with our hands, we toss it in our minds, and never remember the multitude of his mercies, the peace of a good conscience, the loving countenance of the Lord, the seal of our adoption, the assurance of our salvation, the sweet taste of his love shed in our harts by the holy Ghost; so that one trouble doth more daunt us, and strike us to the heart, then many blessings can comfort & refresh us. But God, taking away outward blessings, giveth spiritual to his children, & doth sweeten the bitterness of the cross with inward consolation, and doth recompense it with heavenly grace, whereby we gain more in the spirit then we lose in the flesh.

Secondly, we are taught hereby to pray [Use 2] to God in our troubles, to hold us up, and stay us with his grace, that we fall not from him. For seeing at all times, and upon all occasions of want, we are ready to repine and murmur against God, who can stand by his own power, or by the strength of his own free will? When a man holdeth fast a staff in his hand, so long it standeth upright as he retaineth it; but if he withdraw his hand never so little, it falleth. Carry up a stone to the top of a Mountain, so long as thou staiest it, there it abideth but if thou leave it, it rowleth down of it own strength, even to the bottom. So unless the Lord, in our calamities and crosses that befall us, do stay us by his heavenly hand, & strengthen us by his Almighty power, we break out into unthankfulness, forgetfulness, impatency, & grudging against him. This made the Apostle, after the reckoning up of the idolatry, fornication, murmuring, and tempting of Christ, to exhort them, that He which thinketh he standeth, must take heed lest he fall. As then we ought all to take special notice & knowledge of the corruption of our hearts, and behold a lively and express image of our nature in the glass of this people: so it is our duty to call upon God (from whom every good giving & perfect gift proceedeth) to put to his helping hand, that we may learn to depend upon him, that we may know how to want and how to abound, and in every condition to submit our selves to his heavenly pleasure. For we shall never be able by our own strength to subdue our own corruptions, nor to prevail over our own lusts, nor to overcome the temptations that oftentimes assail us, unless we be assisted from above.

[Use 3] Lastly, our corruption of heart, prone to murmur and complain against God, whensoever he trieth our faith, obedience, and patience, with any misery, warneth us to seek all holy means & remedies, to repress this rage and repining against God: which may be as sure helps to further us in this way, & to furnish us with strength able to hold us up in the day of trial. First, let us consider the high providence of God, ruling all things in heaven or earth, and ouerswaying all creatures, that nothing falleth out without his will & pleasure, as our Savior teacheth, Mat. 10, 29.30. For who giveth us our bodies? Who clotheth the Lilies, that Solomon in all his glory was not like one of them? Who feedeth the young Ravens that cry unto him? Who sustaineth the wicked that are his enemies? Who provided all things for man in the beginning, before he was made & created? Is it not the Lord, whose all the beasts of the forest are, and the beasts on a thousand Mountains? So that the resting of our selves upon this providence that he will feed and clothe us, and care for us, must take away the grief of all our wants that ouerpresseth, and oftentimes overcometh us.

Again, we must learn the benefit of contentation, and to grub up all distracting and distrustful cares, as noisome weeds out of our hearts, bearing with patience and meekness of spirit, whatsoever y^e Lord sendeth. This mind was in Jacob, when he went far from his fathers house, he did not desire silver or gold, house or lands, but only a competent & convenient living, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this journey which I go, and will give me bread to eat, and clothes to put on, then shall the Lord be my God. So the Apostle teacheth, Godliness is great gain, if a man be content with that he hath: for we brought nothing into the world, and it is certain, that we can carry nothing out; therefore when we have food and raiment, let us therewith be content. And in another place; I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content: & I can be abased, and I can abound, everywhere in all things, I am instructed both to be full, and to be hungry, to abound, and to have want; I am able to do all things through the help of Christ which strengtheneth me. Lastly, let us set our affections on things which are above, and not on things which are on the earth. If we believe that God doth forbear and forgive us our sins, & not deal with us according to our deservings; if he sanctify us with his Spirit, & make our bodies Temples of the holy Ghost; if he turn us to himself, working our conversion, which is as great a work as at the first to create us: we may be assured, he will deliver our souls from death, & preserve us in famine. For if he spared not his own Son, but hath given him for us all to death, how shall he not with him give us all things also? Fear not therefore the want of outward things which perish with their use; for it is your Fathers pleasure to give unto you a kingdom. If he have promised to give unto us the greater, nay the greatest blessings that can be rehearsed or remēbred, we may ground our selves on this assured truth, that he will not leave us nor forsake us; so that we may boldly say, The Lord is my deliverer, I will not fear what man can do unto me. Indeed, the judgment & practice of carnal men is otherwise, who esteem earthly things above heavenly, and prefer their Swine before Christ-like Esau, who prized one mess of pottage above the birthright. If these men be a little pained and pinched with famine, and suffer a little want of food, that they have not their necessities supplied, their bodies clothed, & their bellies filled, they cry out aloud in the anguish of their spirit, What shall we eat? What shall we drink? How shall we live? How shall we maintain & sustain our selves and our families? But (alas) though their souls be hunger-bitten, and hungerstarued, ready to pine and consume away through want of spiritual food, they are never grieved or vexed, it troubleth them not at all. Let us learn better things: let us value spiritual things at the highest rate, and set them in the chiefest place. If thus we set (as our honorable friends) all heavenly things in the chiefest place, and turn all transitory things with shame into the lowest room and rank, as saucie & aspiring guests, usurping & climbing above their betters, we shall bear all earthly losses and troubles with patience, and stay our selves from murmuring at the feeling of them.

[Ver. 6. Then Moses and Aaron went from the face, &c.] We heard before the complaint of y^e people; now let us see the behavior of Moses & Aaron. They do not rage, nor revile thē, they do not fret and fume against thē, or ask the life of their enemies, but possess their souls with patience; and declining the violent rage of the people, (as a beast with many heads) they go to the Tabernacle & declare their causes and cases before the Lord. From this their distress we learn this truth, that in all wrongs & injuries offered unto us, we must seek help and comfort of God. I say it is the duty of all the servants of God when they are wronged and oppressed, when they are evilly entreated, and spitefully handled at the hands of sinful men, to vnlade & disburden all their cares into the bosom of God, depending for counsel and comfort upon him alone. In the performance of this duty, the holy servants of God have gone before us. Read the book of the Psalms, as a plentiful storehouse and school-house to teach this truth, as Psal. 3, 1, 2. and 7, 1, 2. where we see, that in his troubles he had recourse to God, who smiteth his enemies on the cheek-bone, and breaketh y^e teeth of the wicked, but was a sure Buckler to him; not such as men hold up, that can defend one part, and in one place only; but a buckler to safeguard him round about, before and behind. And being grievously accused of some heinous crime by some of Saul's retinue, he flieth to God, he trusteth in him, who preserveth the upright in heart. So when Job had his camels and cattle taken away by the enemies, he did not through the greatness of his affliction and grief of mind rebel against God, but said, Naked came I out of my mothers womb, and naked shall I return thither; the Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken it, blessed be the Name of the Lord. The like appeareth in Hezekiah, when Jerusalem was besieged: This is a day of tribulation, and of rebuke and blasphemy, for the children are come to the birth, and there is no strength to bring forth: Now therefore, O Lord our God, I beseech thee, save us out of his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know, that thou (O Lord) art only God. All which examples teach us, that when we suffer wrongs, or fall into any wrongs, or fall into any dangers, we must have recourse to God, and crave of him, y^t the malice of the wicked may come to an end.

[Reason 1] The reasons of this doctrine are, first the gracious promise of God, who hath mercifully promised to hear and to help us in all our troubles. This the Prophet teacheth, Call upon me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. And the Apostle John, This is the assurance that we have in him, that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us: and if we know that he heareth us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we have desired of him. Let us not doubt and waver like a wave of the Sea, tossed to and fro by the violence of the winds, but by faith believe that God will grant our requests, which we make according to his will and word. Seeing therefore he is willing to hear, and able to help, and promiseth to grant our requests; our duty is to come when he calleth, to ask seeing he giveth; and to knock, seeing he openeth the gates that leadeth unto his treasures. Some put their trust in chariots, some in horses, and some in Princes, but we must remember the Name of the Lord our God, who never faileth and breaketh promise with these that depend upon him, that fear and trust in his mercy.

[Reason 2] Secondly, as he is our helper, who delivereth our soul from death, our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling, so whither shall we turn our selves to find comfort and consolation, besides in him? When God denieth to send succor, who shall save? When he refuseth to help, who shall deliver? When he shutteth, who can open? If we look to men or Angels, to heaven or earth, to the living, or the dead, we shall be deceived and deluded. The Prophet saith, Psal. 62.8, 9. Trust in him always ye people, pour out your harts before him, for God is our hope above all; yet the children of men are vanity, the chief men are lies, to lay them upon a balance, they are altogether lighter then vanity.

[Use 1] Let us now come unto the uses. First, from hence we gather that such is God's great goodness to his children, that he never leaveth them without comfort. For, if he require of us to repair to him in our troubles, surely he will not send us away empty, nor cause us to depart confounded and ashamed. How many came to our Savior Christ in the days of his infirmity, when he lived upon the earth, to be helped and healed; yet who returned diseased to his own house? Who came to be restored to sight, and went away blind? Who sought for help, & turned his back sick? who sought comfort, & went away sorrowful? Who came to him deaf or dumb, or lame, and went away without his speaking, his hearing, his legs and limbs restored unto him? This the Prophet David knew, and in the meditation of it found unspeakable comfort in the days of his affliction, when he was in perils among the Amalekites, in perils among the Philistines, in perils among false brethren, in perils in the wilderness, in perils of his own nation, he trusted in his God, and comforted himself in a sweet feeling of his manifold mercies. For when the city where he sojourned was sacked and burned, his wives taken prisoners, and the people intended to stone him, he comforted himself in the Lord his God. The enemies of God in their rage and cruelty may take from us liberty, friends, wife, children, lands, possessions, and all the substance of our house; but they can never rob us of this treasure, our comfort in God's promises, our hope in his mercies, and our affiance which we have in him, which are as the Anker of the soul cast in the storms and tempests that seek to drown us in the gulfs & quicksands of despair & unbelief. [Use 2]

Secondly, they dishonor God and deceive themselves, that run to Saints or Angels; from the Creator, who is blessed forever, to the creature that cannot help. The Prophet David saith, Who have I in heaven but thee? and I have desired now in earth with thee. Therefore the Church of Rome is deceived, and deceiveth others, making other mediators and intercessors, by whō we must have access to God the Father: through the multitude whereof the miserable people are so entangled, that they know not to which Saint they should turn themselves. The Prophet having good experience of trouble, sendeth us to God in the day of trouble. The Father saith, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased. Christ Jesus directing us to pray, willeth us to say, Our Father The Apostle teacheth us; that there is one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus. And John in his first Epistle saith, If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the just; and he is the reconciliation for our sins. To like purpose the same Apostle in the Gospel, Whatsoever ye ask in my Name, that will I do, that the Father maybe glorified in the Son: if ye shall ask anything in my Name, I will do it. Let us therefore detest the absurdities and abominations of the Romish Church, who masking under the blind distinction of mediation and intercession, seek to creep away in the dark, that their mischief may not be espied. They say a Mediator is of two sorts, one of redemption, to wit; Christ alone: another of intercession, and so they make all the Saints. Thus they divide & sever these things that indeed are one. Let us acknowledge one only Mediator of our salvation, let thē keep themselves other mediators of intercession. Notwithstanding, this distinction is not observed by themselves. For if Christ only be the Mediator of salvation, why do they call upon the blessed virgins, Save thou all them that glorify thee? Nay, why do they teach the people thus to pray, Command thy son, use thy motherly authority over him, let him know thee to be his mother. Howsoever it pleaseth some to excuse these speeches, as spiritual sporting and daliance: yet indeed it is most odious and open blasphemy to be detested of all God's people. And why say they thus of Thomas Becket, filled with ambition and vanity, O Christ make us to ascend unto heaven, whither Thomas is ascended, even by the blood of Thomas which he shed for thy sake. Here he is made more then a mediator of intercession: and yet he died for willful maintenance of manifest wickedness, to the dishonor of God, and to the infection of the Clergy, and to his own confusion, being a false Martyr, but a true traitor. Now against all these blasphemous trash and trumpery, we must know to whom to direct our prayers, and in whose Name we ought to pray. We must pray to God alone, in whom only we are to believe: and therefore Paul linketh prayer and faith together, Rom. 10.14. How shall they call upon him in whom they have not believed? And this we are taught in the articles of our faith, to believe only in God the Father, in God the Son, and in God the holy Ghost. But we are not to put our trust in Saints, or Angels; they know not our thoughts, see not our behavior, they hear not our prayers, they fil not all places, themselves are accepted in heaven for the blessed merits of Christ our Savior.

And as we must pray only unto God, so prayer must be mace in the Name and Mediation of Christ, not of any other creature beside, as we shown before. We have no commandment in the Scripture to warrant us, no promise to assure us, no example to go before us, and therefore let us renounce all comfort and confidence in man, and fly unto him that is the God of all comfort and the Father of all consolation.

[Use 3] Thirdly, let us use no unlawful means to come out of our troubles, but wait on God, and depend upon him in our necessities. This the Prophet warneth, Psal. 62. Trust not in oppression, nor in robbery, be not vain: if riches increase, set not your hearts thereon. This we see practiced in Joab, when he put the army in array against the children of Ammon, saying to his brother, If Aram be to strong for me, then thou shalt succor me: but if the children of Ammon prevail against thee, thē I will succor me: be strong, and let us show our selves valiant for our people, and for the cities of our God, and let the Lord do that which is good in his sight. So when Samuel had told Eli the judgment denounced against him and his house, because his sons ran into a slander, & he stayeth them not, he answered, It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good. This condemneth those, that in their losses and crosses seek strange help, and run a whoring after their own inventions, digging cesterne that will hold no water, and forsaking the living God, the author of salvation. Hence it is, that some send out to witches & wizards, as Saul: these cannot say the Lord is my helper and my deliverer, but their refuge and savior is the diuill. Others, in their sickness trust in the Physician, as Asa did: not in the living God, who killeth and maketh alive, bringeth down to the grave, and raiseth up again; he maketh the wound, and bindeth it up, he smiteth, and his hands make whole, he shall deliver thee in six troubles, and in the seventh the evil shall not touch thee: In time of war and day of battle, we trust in our strength, armor, men, munition, and defended places, and make them our God; whereas the Prophet teacheth that this is a cursed confidence, and shall not leave a blessing behind it.

Lastly, we learn from hence, not to revenge [Use 4] our own causes & quarels. For if we be taught in this practice of Moses, to go unto God in all our wrongs, who will judge his people, then we are not to render like for like, or to requite evil for evil, or to repay wrong for wrong, taunt for taunt, rebuke for rebuke, railing for railing, but contrariwise bless, knowing that we are thereunto called, that we should be heirs of blessing. This use is concluded, Prov. 20.22. Say not thou, I will recompense evil: but wait upon the Lord, and he shall save thee. This is the direction of y^e Apostle, Ro. 12.17.19. Recompence to no man evil for evil: dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but give place unto wrath, for it is written, Vengeance is mine, I will repay saith the Lord. Where we see God claymeth and challenge vengeance to himself, and taketh it from us: so that such as seek revenge, sit down in the seat of God, and as much as lieth in thē, wrest the scepter out of his hands, taking upon them the person of the accuser, witness, judge, and executioner, contrary to all true form of lawful judgment. And albeit it be hard and harsh for flesh and blood to put up injuries, yet if we will be the children of God, we must have more in us then flesh and blood. For they that are after the flesh, favor the things of the flesh, but they that are after the spirit, the things of the spirit: so then, they that are in the flesh cannot please GOD. Wherefore, when Zachariah the Priest, a faithful and fruitful witness of God, was unjustly and cruelly stoned to death, he raged not, he reviled not, he revenged not, but said, The Lord see and require it. When the Lord of life, Christ Jesus was accused, condemned, and crucified, the just for the unjust, he prayed for his enemies, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do: leaving us an example that we should follow his steps. When blessed Stephen, who was full of the holy Ghost, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing at the right of God, was cast out of the city, and stoned with stones, he kneeled down and cried with a loud voice, Lord lay not this sin to their charge. When the Archangel mentioned by the Apostle Jude, saw that the devil went about to corrupt the pure worship of God, he would not use railing and reproachful speeches, but desireth the Lord to rebuke him, and repay him for his malice. Seeing therefore this duty hath been practiced by Priest and people, by men and Angels, by the head and the members of his body: let us follow those things that concern peace: let us be of a patient and meek spirit, which is much set by of God; and let us commit our causes to him that is the God of vengeance. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

Verse 9, 10. Then Moses took that rod, &c. Hitherto Moses & Aaron have behaved themselves uprightly in respect of God, meekly in respect of themselves, and patiently in regard of the people. Now we shall see how they offend by transgressing the commandment of God, by distrusting his word, by raging against the whole assembly. God chargeth them to speak to the rock: they spake unto the people. Again, as if it were unlikely or impossible y^t the rock should yield water, they smote it twice through impaciency & vnbeeleeve. Thus they that had been the instruments of God in so many miracles, that had seen him face to face as a man seeth his friend that had stood so often in the gap where the hand of God had made the breach, that had divided the red sea, Moses, I say, and Aaron, the Ministers of God, the witnesses of his works, the pillars of the truth, now begin to fail, to faint, and to fall down, to show us and themselves the weakness that is in flesh and blood. From hence we learn, that many are the failings and falls of the children of God. Howsoever the faithful be borne again, and endued with the spirit of sanctification; howsoever they desire to please God, and endeavor to serve him with all the powers of soul and body, yet they often stumble in their race, thorough the burden that presseth down, and the sin that cleaveth so fast unto them. This truth is confessed and confirmed by many testimonies. Solomon in his worthy prayer at the dedication of the Temple acknowledgeth it, 1 king. 8.46. So Job. 15.14, 15. Likewise Prov. 20.9. And the Prophet, Psal. 14 2, 3. All which testimonies do plentifully teach this truth, that howsoever through the grace of God given unto them, y^e faithful fight a good fight, having faith and a good conscience, yet all are sinners and no flesh is clean and clear from sin, which Moses and Aaron here fall into.

The reasons of this doctrine are. First, because [Reason 1] the Scripture hath concluded all under sin. That every mouth might be stopped, and all the world be subject to the judgment of God. All matter of glorying in our selves is taken from us, we are found guilty before God, we have no excuse, no defense, no cloak for our selves to cover our sins: there is no difference, We have all sinned, and are deprived of the glory of God and everlasting life; so that all, both Jews and Gentiles are proved to be under sin.

Secondly, we see that death, the wages of [Reason 2] sin, hath reigned, and doth reign over all without difference; yea it taketh hold even on children that sinned not actually like y^e transgression of Adam. If then old and young taste of death, all the posterity of Adam are corrupted in him, when he wittingly, and willingly, & willfully sinned against God. We flow from an unclean fountain, we grow out of a bitter root, we are as branches of the wild vine. Thus the Apostle reasoneth, Death reigned frō Adam to Moses, even over them also that sinned not after the like manner of the transgression of Adam, which was the figure of him that was to come So then, sin and death go together, as mother and daughter, as the tree and the fruit, so that we may prove the one by the other, death by sin, and sin by death, the one giving light and luster to the other.

The uses remain to be considered. First, see [Use 1] hereby a difference between this present life, and the life to come. Here the relics and remnants of sin, as spots and stains in the flesh, remain even in those, that are cleansed by the blood of Christ, and washed by the renewing of the holy Ghost. But when the faithful shall be glorified, they shall be without blame, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. Take here the best Examples of the best men that have lived in the best times, as Noah, Abraham, Lot, David, and Peter, yet ye shall see shame in glory; darkness in light; folly in wisdom; infidelity in faith. But when Christ shall appear, and we likewise appear with him in glory, we shall be made like unto him. Therefore the Apostle saith, noting out this difference We know in part, and we prophesy in part; but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be abolished. Now we see through a glass darkly, but then shall we see face to face: Now I know in part, but thē shall I know, even as I am known. Here we cease not to provoke God, and every day of our life addeth to the number and measure of our sins, which should be bitter unto us as gall and wormwood; but when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality, and death be swallowed up into victory, the• we shall cease to sin, and shall be as the blessed Angels y^t are in heaven. The fervent desire of y^e creatures waiteth for these times, groaning and traveling in pain even unto this present, to be delivered from y^e bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. Much more therefore should we, which have the first fruits of the spirit, sigh in our selves, waiting for the adoptiō, even y^e redemption of our bodies.

[Use 2] Secondly, we learn that such as say they are without sin deceive themselves, and as much as in them lieth, make God a liar: we are deprived of his kingdom, we cannot keep the Law, nor have justification by the Law, or the works of the Law, but are justified freely by grace, and have need of y^e benefit of Christ's blood. If we keep the law, we shall live by it: but if we be transgressors of the law, we are under the curse: For it is written, Cursed is everyone that continueth not in all things written in the book of the Law to do them. Hereunto cometh that which the Apostle John saith, If we say we have no sin, we deceive our selves, the truth is not in us, we make God a liar, and his word is not in us. And to the same purpose the Apostle Paul, There is none righteous, no not one: they have all gone out of the way, there is none that doth good, no not one: we are justified freely by his grace thorough the redemption that is in Christ Jesus.•ence falleth to the ground the doctrine of merits, that advanceth proud flesh, and lifteth up the supposed worthiness of imperfect works, thereby to procure God's favor and everlasting life. The Church of Rome place such an inward and inherent dignity in men's persons, as maketh them worthy of grace or salvation. Moreover, they dream of such an excellency in the work, as fitteth and enableth them to deserve the favor of God, and forgiveness of sins. But in a sight of our sins, and in a feeling of our own corruptions, we must renounce all merits, and rest only on the merits of Christ. For when we have done all, we must say and confess, that we are unprofitable servants, &c. True it is, God will reward our works: but the reward is of mercy, not of merit; of promise, not of debt; of grace, not of desert. Again, hereby falleth another falsehood of theirs, holding that good works are every way perfect, not stained or tainted with sin, but being tried in the furnace of God's judgment, will suffer no loss or detriment. But the Prophet prayeth, Enter not into judgment with thy servant: for in thy sight shall none that liveth be justified. And again in another place it is written, We have all been as an unclean thing, and all our righteousness or good deeds as filthy clowtes: and therefore no good deed of righteous men is without some stain of sin; neither can we answer him one of a thousand. Lastly, we learn that they are deceived, which teach & preach a possibility for a man in grace to fulfill God's law. For the Apostle taketh it for a grounded and granted conclusion, that the law cannot be fulfilled, when he saith, It was impossible to the Law to give us life, because we are utterly unable to keep the condition; and therefore God hath sent his Son to take our nature upon him, and to abolish sin in our flesh. If we could fulfil the law, Christ died in vain, & we might be justified by the law: but Christ died not in vain, neither can we be justified by the law: therefore we cannot fulfill the law. Furthermore, the Apostle complaineth of his failings & defects, The law is spiritual, but I am carnal, sold under sin: what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. I find then that when I would do good, I am thus yoked that evil is present with me, I delight in the law of God concerning the inner man, but I see another law in my members, rebelling against the law of my mind, and leading me captive unto the law of sin.

Now whereas many of the faithful are said to be just, and to walk in all the commandments of God without reproof: the meaning is, they endeavor to perfection, & strive to obey God with all their heart, and with all their soul, as Phil. 3.13. God accepteth the will for the deed, and the endeavor to obey for perfect obedience, 2 Cor. 8.12. Secondly, they exempt themselves from none of the precepts of God, but labor to walk in all the known points of his commandments, albeit they fail in the performance of them, & cease not to acknowledge their own imperfections. Lastly, God accepteth them in Christ, as perfectly righteous: so that, albeit their obedience be in itself imperfect, yet is it acceptable to God through Jesus Christ, as if it were perfect; and his righteousness is as truly their own, as if they had wrought it in their own persons.

Lastly, seeing the most faithful have their [Use 3] failings in duties of piety and obedience, we must take diligent heed we do not rashly and rigorously censure others for falling into sin. For seeing we have all our frailties and infirmities, and are not able to keep our selves wholly from evil, we are not headily to judge of others, lest thereby we hasten the greater condemnation upon our selves. This the Apostle James urgeth, Chap. 3.1, 2. My brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater judgment, for in many things we sin all. Let us therefore consider our selves, before we cast our eyes upon other men: for they are the most sharp and severe Judges, that forget their own infirmities. As we would be dealt withal in meekness, so must we deal with our brethren with all gentleness. For howsoever they have sinned, nothing hath befallen them but that which is incident to the nature of man; we may be overtaken with the same sin, or with the like sin, or with a greater sin. The Apostle saith, Brethren if a man be suddenly taken in any offense, ye which are spiritual restore such one with the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. There cannot be a more effectual means to draw us to deal mildly and mercifully with our brethren, then the consideration of our selves. There is no man among us, that dealeth truly with his own heart, and entereth into the meditation of his own frailty with his own soul, but he hath daily experience in himself, how hardly sin is subdued and mastered of us, how many sighs and groanings it requireth, how many tears and prayers it costeth us? What striving and struggling we have with it to keep it under? What battles and combats we have with the flesh that lusteth against the spirit? And yet notwithstanding our continual watching▪ wrestling, laboring, endeavoring, and resisting, it oftentimes breaketh from us, so that the knowledge of our own weakness, must teach us to deal with all meekness and moderation with our brethren.

Verse 11. Moses smote that rock, and much water gushed out. We have heard before, the people complaining, and Moses praying: now we shall see God helping and relieving them, notwithstanding their rebellion and unthankfulness. The Lord commanded Moses and Aaron, to speak unto the rock without life, without sense, without reason, to convince those rebels, and to show that there was more understanding in the dumb and deaf creatures, then in this company of conspirators. For now y^e promise of God was performed above all natural means.

True it is, they were unworthy of any mercy, they deserved to perish in their thirst, through want of water: notwithstanding, at the striking of the rock with the rod, he gave unto them their hearts desire. This was the Lord's doing, & it is marvelous in our eyes. This rock was a figure of Christ, as the Apostle teacheth. Besides, the striking of the rock, was a sign unto them of the gushing out of the waters. When Samson propounded this as a dark riddle, Out of the eater came meat, and out of the strong came sweetness: It was resolved thus, What is sweeter then the honey, and what is stronger then the Lyon? But much more may we propound this miraculous work of God, Out of the hard rock came softness, out of the dry came moisture, and out of the strong came weakness. For what is harder, dryer, and stronger then the rock? and what is softer and weaker then the water? according to the common proverb, As weak as water. And yet the soft and moist waters issued out of the dry and hard rock, suddenly, abundantly, miraculously at the commandment of God. This teacheth us this doctrine, that we live by God's appointment, and in feeding and sustaining us, he is not tied to outward & ordinary means. Whensoever we want meat, drink, apparel, and the necessary helps of this present life, God is able to provide them, and to nourish us without natural means, when it pleaseth him. This Moses teacheth at large, Deut. 8.3, 1. He humbled thee and made thee hungry, and fed thee with Manna, which thou knowest not, neither did thy fathers know it; that he might teach thee that man liveth not by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth a man live: thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot swell these 40. years.

So we see he fed Elijah flying from Jezebel, who when he had eat and drunk, he walked in the strength of that meat forty days, and forty nights, unto Horeb the mount of God. The like we see in Moses, when he was in the mount with God: and the like we see in Christ our Savior, when he was in the wilderness tempted of the devil. So then, whatsoever the decree & determination of God is, whereby we shall live, whether it be by means or without means, whether by ways ordinary, or extraordinary, the same shall be effectual to man's preservation.

The reasons follow: First, the infinite power [Reason 1] of God which maketh weak things strong, and things of no value, that are despised, to effect great things. He is able to do and deal as he will. His soldiers were flies and lice against the Egyptians; his armies were mice against the Philistines. By such means he is able to work his will, to save his people, and to destroy his enemies. This reason is urged and pressed oftentimes, as Gen. 18.14. 1 Sam. 14.6. Zach. 8.6.

Secondly, hereby his honor and glory is [Reason 2] better set forth, that no flesh should rejoice and trust in it self but in God. Therefore he often worketh above reason, and beyond nature, that all the world may give glory to him, and magnify his great Name. This appeareth in the prayer of Hezekiah, who desired the presence of God to be with thē, that he might be glorified in their deliverance, O Lord our God, I beseech thee save thou us out of his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know, that thou O Lord art only God.

The uses follow: First, this teacheth us in [Use 1] all wants and necessities to depend upon God, and never to use unlawful means to come out of trouble, and so sin against God. If God send the sword, or famine, or other judgment to walk through the land, as he justly may do for our transgressions and rebellions, we must learn contentation and patience in poverty, in sickness, in misery, and not to be swallowed up with excessive sorrow. Our life standeth in the word and will of God, who can manifest his power, as well without means as with means in our preservation, and therefore let us not despair or fly from him to any creature for relief and succor. He can feed as well without bread as with bread, who increased the oil in the poor widows cruse, and the handful of meal in the barrel, teaching us to learn and labor to depend upon him. This the three servants of God mentioned in Daniel the Prophet, practiced, saying; O King, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter: behold, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the hot fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thy hand: but if not, be it known unto thee (O king) that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image that thou hast set up. They confess y^e power of God, they put their trust in him, they resolve to abide the extremity of torments, they know that to save their lives by sinning against God, was to lose them; and to lose them for his sake, was to save them.

[Use 2] Secondly, if we live by God's appointment, and by that which he will bless, then without this special blessing, no means can do us any good. For though we have outward helps at hand, they are unprofitable unto us, when they are not sanctified to our comfort and benefit by his blessing, as our Savior teacheth, Luke 12.15. Take heed and beware of Covetousness, for though a man have abundance, yet his life standeth not in his riches. The Lord also often threateneth, that he will take away, not only bread it self, but the stay and staff of bread; that is, the power of nourishing. Take away from a weak and impotent man his staff, whereby he stayeth himself, he falleth to the ground: so take from the means of feeding the virtue of God's blessing, it is unfit and unable to do us any good, or yield us any nourishment. So the Prophet saith, Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough: and he that earneth wages, putteth the wages into a broken bag. This should teach us never to presume, to apply any of the creatures of God to our uses and nourishment of our bodies, until we have sanctified them by calling upon the Name of God. For they are not able of themselves, and by themselves to feed and refresh us, being themselves without life, and without heat: it is God's special blessing that maketh them do us any good. O that profane and carnal men, whose bellies the Lord filleth with his hid treasure, would with wisdom remember this: who never consider they stand at God's allowance, nor lift their heads & hearts to heaven, from whence their food cometh, but receive his creatures as brute beasts, like the horse that falleth to his prouender, or like the swine that gathereth up the Mast upon the earth, but never look up to the tree: and when they are plentifully fed and filled, they depart away without remembering the author and giver of their meats and drinks: but as they sate down without understanding, so they rise up without thanksgiving. O consider ye that forget God, that when Belteshazzar was eating and drinking with riot and excess, the hand of God writing upon y^e wall, determineth his destruction. When he sent to his own people quail in the wilderness, a dainty food, he maketh them to come out at their nostrils in most loathsome manner, and while the meat was in their mouths, the wrath of God came upon them, and slew the strongest of them. So God can make every bit to be our bane, and every morsel we put into our mouths, turn to our destruction. Therefore the Apostle exhorteth us, Whatsoever we do, whether we eat and drink, or what else soever, we must do all to the praise and glory of God. Woe then shall be unto them in the end, that abuse these blessings of God to pride and excess, to surfeiting and drunkenness, to chambering and wantonness, to riotousnesse and forgetfulness of God, by whom they live, move, breathe, and have their being.

Lastly, we must not enlarge our desires, as [Use 3] the grave, which never saith it is enough, nor suffer our hearts to be oppressed and overtaken with the cares of this world, forasmuch as our life and welfare standeth not in these outward things, as food, raiment, house, land, living, and such like, but in the blessing of God: whatsoever he sendeth and affordeth, be it much or little, be it homely or dainty, shall be able to succor and sustain us. Daniel and his fellows, feeding on Pulse, and drinking water, appeared in their countenances fairer and fatter, then such as did eat the portion of the kings meat. Therefore the holy Ghost derideth the foolish rich man, Luke 12. who promised peace and plenty, length of days, and increase of riches to his own soul, having much laid up for many years. So is he that gathereth riches to himself, and is not rich in God: and such shall be the end of those that abound in earthly treasure, which the thief may steal, and the Moth may eat, and the canker may consume; but not in heavenly treasure, which endureth to everlasting life. Let us rest upon his providence, which arayeth the lilies, feedeth the fowls, clotheth the grass, numbereth our hairs, and promiseth to provide for us in all estates, if we rely upon him. True it is, when we cast up our eyes, and behold nothing but peace and plenty on every side, when we wash our garments in wine, when we abound in corn and pleasant fruits, or have the rocks to pour out rivers of oil, we can bless God, and confess our life dependeth upon his decree. But when we see nothing but horror and confusion, when the Sun seemeth to be darkened, and the day is turned into night, we must learn to wait on God, and to cast our care upon him who careth for us, as well in time of want, as of plenty; in time of sickness as of health; in time of war as of peace. This grace of contentation the holy Apostle felt, I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content, I can be abased, and can abound: I am instructed to be full, and to be hungry. The cares of this world, and deceitfulness of riches are a rank thorn, that choke the growth of grace in the heart, and as snares that drown men in perdition and destruction: and therefore he chargeth Timothy, to charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high minded, and that they trust not in deceitful riches, but in the living God, which giveth us abundantly all things to enjoy; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may obtain eternal life.

Verse 12, 13. Because ye have not believed in me. We heard before the sin of Moses and Aaron, speaking unadvisedly with their mouths, and striking the rock doubtfully with their hands: now let us see the judgment of God waiting upon them as a Sargeant to arrest them, and their punishment lying even at the door. Because ye sanctified not my Name before the children of Israel, ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them: He doth not only accuse and convince them of sin, but amplifieth it by the effect, that thereby he was robbed of his glory, and so excludeth them out of the land of promise. We learn from hence that God chastiseth his own children sinning against him. When his children forsake his laws, and walk not in his judgments, although he take not his loving kindness from them, neither falsify his truth, yet he will visit their transgressions with the rod, and their iniquities with strokes.

This we see thoroughly strengthened throughout the whole book of the Judges, as chap. 4.1.2. When the people of Israel proceeded to do evil in the sight of the Lord, he sold them into the hand of Iabin king of Canaan, &c. So when Jonah disobeyed the voice of the Lord, calling him to preach to Nineveh, that great City, and to cry against it for their wickedness, he was cast into the Sea as an unprofitable burden of the ship, and swallowed of a Whale; so that albeit he fled from the presence of the Lord, yet his hand followed after him and ouertooke him. When David had trespassed in the matter of Uriah, by adultery and murder, though he were a man after God's own heart, yet the Lord raised evil against him out of his house, the sword of y^e enemy was shaken against him, and his own wives were defiled in the sight of y^e Sun. When Miriam the sister of Moses withstood him in the pride of her heart, through ambition and vain-glory, albeit he accused her not, but in meekness of spirit put up the wrong, being lowly in his own eyes, yet she was stricken with leprosy by the hand of God, and shut for a season out of the host. The like we might say of Solomon, Asa, Jehoshaphat, Josiah, Hezekiah, and many others; all which seal up this truth to our hearts, that GOD spareth not his own people when they sin against him.

[Reason 1] The Reasons of this just dealing of God, are, first to clear his judgment and justice, that we should know him to be no respecter of persons, but to hate sin, whensoever, wheresoever, and in whomsoever he findeth it. He is not a God that loveth wickedness, neither shall evil dwell with him, for he hateth all them that work iniquity. This the Prophet David acknowledgeth, Against thee, against thee only have I sinned, and done evil in thy sight, that thou mayest be just when thou speakest, and pure when thou judgest. If then we break his statutes, and keep not his commandments, when he searcheth with lights and findeth out our sins, we must give glory to God, and make confession unto him, we must pronounce righteousness to belong unto him, and unto our selves open shame: yea, if he should destroy us, we must acknowledge him to be holy in all his ways, and just in all his works, who giveth us to eat the fruit of our own labors. As then he is just and righteous, so he must punish sin in whomsoever he taketh it: and as he denounceth sore judgments and grievous plagues of great continuance, and long durance, so he executeth thē to manifest the truth of his own word, and maketh good his own threatenings gone out of his own mouth.

Again, God chastiseth his own children, [Reason 2] lest they, sinning with the men of this world, whose portion is in this life, should be condemned with the world. For as in punishing of us, he respecteth his own justice, so he doth it in respect of our own good, and the great profit which thereby is brought unto us. If we should always enjoy health, wealth, liberty, peace, plenty, and other good blessings of God according to our hearts desire, we would wax fat and spurn with the heel, forsaking God that made us, refusing the strong God of our salvation, & joining hand in hand with wicked men reserved to destruction. Wherefore affliction is as the messenger of God, to call us back from sin, to wean us from the world, to kindle in us a desire of the world to come. This the Apostle aimeth at, 1 Cor. 11, 31, 32. If we would judge our selves, we should not be judged: but when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, because we should not be condemned with the world.

The uses of this Doctrine are many. First, [Use 1] consider with me the cause why they keep the word, and turn unto him with all their harts, why they run not on in evil as the horse rusheth into the battle, as the ungodly do: the reason is, God calleth them back by his hand, his afflictions are remembrances unto them, and his corrections are their instructions. This the Prophet David found true in his own comfortable experience, Psal. 119, 67, 71. Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now I keep thy word: It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I may learn thy statutes. The Children of Israel living under the Judges, and sinning against God, making a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, taking their daughters to be their wives, giving their daughters to their sons, serving their idols, forgetting the true God, and doing worse then their fathers: the Lord sold them into the hand of their enemies, whom they served: then they lift up their voices and wept, then they called and cried unto the Lord in their afflictions, and he delivered them out of their distress. The same we see in Manasseh, who for his evils that he committed like the abominations of the heathen, was carried away captive, put in fetters, and bound in chains: and when he was in tribulation he prayed to the Lord his God, and humbled himself greatly before the God of his father, and prayed unto him, and God was entreated of him, and heard his prayer, and brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom, Then Manasseh knew that the Lord was God. But of this we shall speak more in the chapter following.

[Use 2] Secondly, confess from hence, that great is the wrath and anger of God for sin, seeing he punisheth it so sharply and severely in his children, whom he hath engraven as a Signet in the palm of his hand, and whom he tendreth as the apple of his eye. Mark how he hath many times schooled his own servants offending. When Miriam murmured against Moses, and made other to murmur, she was stricken by the hand of God with leprosy; and albeit Moses made supplication for her, yet the Lord answered, If her father had spit in her face, should she not have been ashamed seven days? Let her be shut out of the host seven days, and after she shall be received. Thus he dealt with David whom he greatly favored and advanced to the kingdom, when he fell into grievous sins, 2 Sam. 12.9, 10. Thou hast killed Uriah the Hittite with the sword, and hast taken his wife to be thy wife, and hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon: Now therefore the sword shall never depart from thine house, and I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house. So soon as Solomon set up idolatry, and wrought wickedness in the sight of the Lord, he stirred up adversaries unto Solomon, and afterward rent the greatest part of the kingdom out of the hands of his son. This serveth to convince all such profane persons as presume of God's patience, and abuse his mercy to all looseness and licentiousnesse, saying, God is merciful, and yet continue in their sins. But we must know, that as he is merciful, so he is just: as his mercy is toward the penitent, so his justice is toward the obstinate: who spareth not his own people that forget his Law, and therefore will deal more fiercely against strangers.

[Use 3] Thirdly, measure not the favor and love of God toward our selves or others, by outward blessings, or outward crosses; by prosperity or adversity, which come alike to the godly and ungodly. Nay, oftentimes the wicked flourish when the faithful are in great misery, as Psal. 73.3, 4, 5. So Solomon teacheth, Eccle. 9.2. Therefore Christ our Savior correcteth the wrong judgment of the disciples, supposing that such as Pilate slew, were the greatest sinners of all the rest that dwelt in Jerusalem, because they suffered those things, Luke 13.1, 2, 3. If then we would find sound comfort in our hearts, and feel unfeigned testimonies of God's favor towards us, we must not seek for them in outward blessings, or in want of outward blessings, (both which are common to the godly and ungodly) but in joy in the holy Ghost, in remission of sins, in repentance from dead works, in the spirit of adoption, in faith in Christ, in peace of conscience, which passeth all understanding. As for other things place not thy heaven and happiness in them, if blessings come, receive them thankfully; if crosses, learn to bear them patiently.

Fourthly, we are hereby put in mind to [Use 4] search our own ways, to survey our own hearts, and to prove by the touchstone of the word, our own thoughts, words and works, that we have conceived, spoken, and done; what we have justly deserved if God in justice should proceed against us; examining seriously our own life, mourning bitterly for our sins past, and turning unfeignedly unto God with all our hearts. This duty is urged by Jeremiah the Prophet, Lam. 3.39, 40, 41, 42. This is the mark that God shooteth at, this is the end that he respecteth, even by his afflictions to bring us home to himself, not to destroy and confound us forever. Let us not despise the chastenings of the Lord, nor faint when we are rebuked. We have had the fathers of our bodies which corrected us for a few days, and we gave them reverence: should we not much rather be in subjection to the Father of spirits, who chasteneth those whom he loveth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth?

Fifthly, let us labor to strengthen our faith [Use 5] by the word and Sacraments, and by such ordinary means as he hath appointed for that purpose. Hereunto the Apostle exhorteth, 1. Cor. 11.30. To examine our selves, and so to eat of that bread, and drink of that cup, declaring that the judgments of God were broken in among the Corinthians, insomuch that many were weak and sick among them, and many slept. Wherefore, whensoever we find the hand of God sore and heavy upon us, it is our duty to seek strength of faith by the use of the word and Sacraments, whereby we shall learn to find out the true cause of those judgments, and submit our selves under his hand that striketh us as a father. For the Scriptures serve to direct us, the Sacraments serve to comfort us, Without which the Prophet had perished in his afflictions.

Lastly, seeing God chastiseth his when [Use 6] they offend, then most assuredly the wicked that are not his, shall not escape his revenging hand. If he correct the flock of his own pasture, the children of his own household, the citizens of his own kingdom, and the members of his own body, fed at his own table in this life, and made heirs of heaven in the life to come, really possessing that inheritance: with what plagues, punishments, & torments, will he visit the rebellion of aliens and strangers? If the Lord deal sharply toward these to whom he is a merciful Father and gracious Savior, and whom he often preventeth with his liberal blessings: Surely his revenging wrath, full of rage, shall find out all his enemies, whom he wipe will away as a man wipeth a dish, & turneth it upside down. This is that which Solomon teacheth in the Proverbs, Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, how much more the wicked and the sinner? There remaineth a day of judgment when they shall be punished as they deserve, either in this life, or in the life to come. With this the Apostle Peter sweetly accordeth, 1 Pet. 4.17, 18. The time is come, that judgment must begin at the *house of God: if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them, which obey not the Gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the wicked and the sinner appear? Where we see that God will scourge & whip his own children for their frailties and infirmities appearing in them. But he correcteth the godly in mercy, the ungodly in anger: the godly as a loving father, the ungodly as a just Judge: the godly to amend them, the ungodly to condemn them: the godly, albeit humbled and cast down with one hand, are comforted and raised up with another, whereas the punishments that fall upon the heads of the ungodly, are but the beginnings of sorrow, and as the flashings of hell fire. Now the earth is not properly the place of vengeance and judgment. For we must understand that God hath appointed three places; earth, heaven, hell, for three several purposes: the earth to be a place of working, the heaven a place of rewarding, hell a place of punishing: earth as a shop of labor, heaven as a palace of glory, hell as a prison of torment. Notwithstanding, rather than sinners should escape, and sin go unpunished, the Lord will call a privy or petty Sessions even in this life, and make the earth his gaile or house of correction. If then God will visit their transgressions with such heavy strokes: Alas, what shall become of all profane persons, unrepentant offenders, obstinate sinners, such as contemn God and his word every day? What shall become of swearers, blasphemers, profaners of the Sabbath, whoremongers, drunkards, oppressers, unmerciful men, and other like? The Lord indeed will try the righteous in his furnace: but the wicked and him that loveth iniquity doth his soul hate, upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and stormy tempest, this is the portion of their cup. Indeed he lifteth up his hand to strike the faithful that are his friends: but he will crush his adversaries with a scepter of iron, and break them in pieces like a potters vessel. Indeed he will judge the just man for his sins in this life, but he will wound the head of his enemies, and the hairy pate of him that walketh in his sins. Indeed the Lord will chastise his Church with the rods of men, yet his loving kindness will he never take from them: but he will correct his enemies with scourges of wyre, and his little finger shall be heavier on the reprobate, then his loins on his own people.*

Tremble at this all ye ungodly, and know that assured judgment is reserved for you at the great day of the Lord's general Assizes, when ye must plead guilty or not guilty at his bar, when the register book of all your actions shall be brought forth, and when you shall wish the mountains to fall upon you and cover you from the presence of him that sitteth upon the throne. Turn therefore unto him, return I say betimes, lest the Lord overturn you. If his wrath be kindled, yea but a little, blessed are all they that trust in him. This is the difference between a wise man and a fool, A wise man seeth the plague and hideth himself, but a fool runneth on and is punished. A reproof entereth more into him that hath understanding, then an hundred stripes into a fool.

14 Then Moses sent messengers from Kadesh, unto the king of Edom: saying, Thus saith thy brother Israel, Thou knowest all the trouble that hath happened unto us.

15 How our fathers went down into Egypt a long time, where the Egyptians handled us evil and our fathers.

16 But when we cried unto the Lord, he heard our voice, and sent an Angel, and hath brought us out of Egypt, and behold, we are in Kadesh, a city in thine utmost border.

17 I pray thee let us pass through thy country: we will not go through the fields, nor the vineyards, neither will we drink the water of the wells; we will go by the kings way, we will walk, we will not turn either to the right hand, or to the left, until we have passed thy border.

18 And Edom answered him, Thou shalt not pass by me, lest I come out with the sword against thee.

19 Then the children of Israel said unto him, We will go upon the high way: and if we shall drink thy water, I and my cattle, I will then pay for it: I will only without any harm go through on my feet:

20 He answered again, Thou shalt not pass through; then Edom came out against him with much people, and with a mighty power.

21 Thus Edom refused to give Israel passage through his border: wherefore Israel turned away from him.

Hitherto of the murmuring of the people, pretended against Moses, but indeed intended and practiced against God: Now followeth the second part of the Chapter, touching Israel's purpose to pass toward the land of Canaan, by the country of y^e Edomites; wherein consider two things. First, the solemn ambassage of Moses to the king of Edom. Secondly, the shameful and inhumane denial of the Edomites. Touching the first, having walked up and down thirty eight years, and wandered in the wilderness from place to place, forward and backward, from nation to nation, from one kingdom to another people: being now come near to the land, they request passage and safe conduct through the country of Edom, under honest and equal conditions of abstaining from all injuries, and keeping the kings high way, & crave their friendship and favor in respect of their near kindred and aliance unto them, both of them descending of Isaac, whose sons were Jacob, called also Israel, and Esau called also Edom. Besides, they show what travels and troubles they had sustained what evils they had suffered, what oppression they had endured of the cruel Egyptians; appealing to their own consciences touching the truth of these things, whereof they could in no sort be ignorant, saying; Thou knowest all the trouble that hath happened unto us. But because such as are themselves in prosperity, sildome respect the miseries and distresses of others, and the afflicted are for the most part destitute of all helps, and forsaken of all friends, they put them in mind of the mercies of God, assisting them in troubles, hearing their prayers, and sending his Angel; that is, Jesus Christ (as it is expounded by the Apostle) for their deliverance out of Egypt. And lest they should seem to request and require much of others, but promise nothing for themselves (as those that lay heavy burdens and grievous to be borne upon others, but will not touch them with their little finger) they covenant and condition with them on their parts, to deal uprightly and justly, being as ready to abstain from working injury, as to crave the duties of humanity.

So then, to effect their purpose of passing thorough Edom, and to persuade them to grant their request, they allege four reasons. First, in respect of the person of the Edomites. Secondly, in respect of the person of the Israelites. Thirdly, in respect of the person of God. Fourthly, in respect of the manner of their passage & perambulation through them. Touching the Edomites, they claim the kindred of consanguinity. Touching themselves, they plead their own misery. Touching God, they publish and proclaim his mercy. Touching their journey, and the manner of it, they promise equity and honest dealing. Thus they omit nothing that might serve to persuade the Edomites to pity, and to procure their own safety.

[Reason 1] The first reason, drawn from the right of brotherhood, is included in these words, Thus saith thy brother Israel. The Israelites came of Jacob, who was also called Israel, because he had power with God, Gen. 32.28. The Edomites came of Esau, who was also named Edom, both of the redness wherewith he was borne, and of the red pottage which he desired and preferred before the birthright. These two therefore were natural brethren, begotten of the same father, borne of the same mother, lying at the same time in the same womb; as if the Israelites should say: May it please you to consider, that we are not aliens and strangers one to another, we descend of two brethren, Jacob and Esau, you of one, we of the other, as two branches displaying themselves from one stock, we had one common father and mother, Isaac and Rebeccha, we are of one family and fraternity: so that it is right and equal, that they which are so nearly joined and linked by blood, should perform all kindness each to other. This reason from kindred may be thus framed:

If we be as brethren alied one to another, coming from one root and race: then deny us not this point of courtesy, to grant passage.

But we are brethren alied one to another, &c.

Therefore vouchsafe to give us passage,

The second reason is in these words, Thou [Reason 2] knowest all the trouble that hath happened unto us, &c. As if they should say, We have had a lamentable and woeful experience of many miseries, we have been exercised with many sorrows, so as yourselves cannot pretend ignorance of them: you know them, but we have felt thē: you have heard of them, but we have smarted for them. In Egypt we have had our poor infants drowned, our chief officers chastised, our selves every way oppressed with burdens too heavy for us to bear, and nothing but slaughter and destruction breathed out against us. Being delivered out of Egypt, when we expected an end of all miseries, we perceived that we had changed the place, but not the peril: the soil, but not the sorrow: we have been pursued with enemies, bitten with hunger, wearied with labors, and every way inuironed with dangers. By all these, as by the dearest tears of our inward hearts, we crave some mercy and commiseration. For it lieth in you to make an end of all troubles and to give us an happy issue of them, by opening us a passage thorough your country, that we may no longer wander in this desolate wilderness. The reason may be thus concluded.

If we have been long vexed and evilly handled, now at length pity us & give us passage But we have been long vexed, and evilly entreated, Therefore at length pity, & give us passage.

The third reason is, verse 16. We cried unto [Reason 3] the Lord, he heard us, sent his Angel, and he delivered us. As if they should say, Consider the example of God, (a perfect pattern of all righteousness) he hath in mercy looked upon our misery, be you like to him that ye may find mercy in the day of trouble. It is not meet to leave them destitute of help and succor, whose safety God commendeth, and committeth unto you by his own example. All human things are unstable and uncertain: ye know not what hangs over your own heads. The reason may be thus considered:

If God have begun to be merciful, it is not meet that you should be unmerciful. But God hath begun to show us mercy, Therefore it is not meet, you should be unmerciful.

The fourth reason is, verse 17. and 19. We [Reason 4]will not go through the fields nor the vineyards, &c. As if they should say, We desire not to help our selves to hurt you, we will keep the kings high way, we will deal justly toward all, we will offer wrong and injury to none, no not to the meanest, simplest, and poorest: if any among us shall take from any man by open oppression or forged cauillation, we will make satisfaction and restitution: The reason is thus gathered:

If we will do no wrong or injury to any among you, then suffer us quietly to pass. But we will do no wrong or injury to any among you,

Therefore suffer us quietly to pass.

This was the Ambassage of Moses, this was the petition offered, these were the reasons rendered thereof. Now let us see the answer of Edom, denying their petition and passage thorough their country. For fearing peradventure the multitude of the Israelites, and thinking they would make more hast to enter into their land, then to depart out again, being (as evil men are ever suspicious, and think others as subtle and deceitful as themselves) the Edomites give them this short, but sharp answer, Thou shalt not pass: So that when a man hath to deal with unjust and cruel enemies, whether he use few reasons or many, all is one. The Ambassadors of the Israelites (whether they gave present reply & resolution of themselves, or first returned to Moses. is uncertain) made supplication again, and renewed their request, promised to abstain from all terms of hostility, offered money for water, and every commodity they should use: yet they curiously and unkindly shut up their compassion, and issue forth with all their strength to stop their passage, verifying that which Solomon saith, A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast, but the mercies of the wicked are cruel: wherefore Israel turneth from them another way. This is the substance of this division, and the order observed by the Spirit of God in the same: now let us proceed to the doctrines offered herein to our considerations, first the general, and after come to the particulars.

Ver. 14. Then Moses sent messengers from Kadesh unto the king of Edom. Albeit Moses himself were shut out of the land of promise, yet he beareth the judgment of God patiently, and laboreth that the people may enter. And albeit y^e Israelites were assured to possess the land of Canaan, & had the vⁿchangable word and oath of God to themselves and their fathers, for their farther confirmation; yet it doth not make them idle and secure, but it stirreth them up to use all good and lawful means to effect the same. From hence we learn, that it is the duty of all God's children to use all good means to further his providence, I say, howsoever God standeth not in need of our help to bring his purpose to pass, who is able without all means, against all means, and above all means to work out his own will: yet it is the part of all the godly to further his decree and determination, by using all means that God shall put into their hands. This we see verified in this book, where we see the diligent search of the land, made by the messengers that Moses sent, viewing their cities, their country, and the people that were the inhabitants thereof: so that albeit, the land was promised of God mercifully, yet it must be searched of them diligently. The like practice we see in other the servants of God: When Gideon was sent to be the deliverer of the people and commanded to go in his might, hath assurance given him to prevail over the enemies, and to save Israel out of the hand of the Midianites: yet he did not run and rush naked into the battle, but took with him men and munitions, vitales, trumpets, pitchers and other instruments to set forward the work of the Lord which he had to do.

The necessity of using the helps of second causes that God affordeth, and endeavoring to the lawful means appointed, is shown by the Apostle Paul; for albeit the Angels of God had told him, there should be no loss of any man's life among them, save of the ship only; yet the decree & purpose of God was to save them together, and therefore he telleth them, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be safe. God is absolutely able to preserve our life without the taking of food, or the labor of our hands, or the apparelling of our bodies, as the fowls are fed, and the Lilies are clothed, which neither sow nor reap, neither labor nor spin: yet he commandeth us to labor the thing that is good. In the garden of Eden, in the time of man's innocence, Adam was called to labor: and after the fall it was said, In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return to the earth. So God can nourish to eternal life, without means of man, otherwise we should diminish his power: yet he will have his word preached in season, & out of season; he will have it heard and attended unto with all diligence, to begin and to increase faith in us, and he sendeth a comfortable blessing upon his own means. And therefore the Apostle teacheth, Ephes. 4.12. That Christ ascending up to heaven, and leading captivity captive, gave gifts unto men for the gathering together of the Saints, for the work of the Ministry, fitting teachers to their callings, although he can save without means.

The reasons follow. First we are commanded [Reason 1] to further God's providence by lawful endeavors in our callings. This is to us most comfortable, and giveth evident assurance of the blessing of God, without which holy endeavor we want this comfort and assurance. Thus the Apostle reasoneth directly, 2 Pe. 1. The election of God in it self is sure, for the foundation of God remaineth and hath this seal, The Lord knoweth who are his: yet he requireth of us to give all diligence to increate in knowledge, faith, temperance, patience, godliness, love, brotherly kindness, If ye do these things, ye shall never fall.

[Reason 2] Again, the end why God hath given us, means, and fitted us to our calling, is to serve his providence, not to make us idle in our selves, & unprofitable unto others. God's gifts are to some purpose, they were not given▪ and granted in vain, we must not hide them in the earth, but employ them to their use. This the Apostle teacheth, I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of GOD which is in thee by the putting on of mine hands, for God hath not given to us the spirit of fear, but of power, love, and a sound mind. And thus Mordecai reasoneth in his charge to Esther, that she should go into the king, & make supplication before him for her people, Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time: declaring that we have not our callings singled out and fitted unto us to hide our talents in the earth, but to employ them to increase and advantage.

The uses remain. First, we must know that [Use 1] extraordinary courses are not to be looked after, nor to be depended upon; we must leave them to extraordinary times & seasons which are now ceased and not to be expected. Many desire that God should show among his people, such great and miraculous works as he shown in bringing his people out of Egypt, with a mighty hand and out-stretched arm, and so feed themselves with fancies, and are carried away after their own imaginations. God hath tied us to ordinary courses which are more for our comfort, and therefore he that walketh plainly, walketh safely. This use is concluded out of the parable, where the rich man desireth to have Lazarus sent from the dead to his fathers house, to warn them, lest they also come into the place of torment. But Abraham answered; They have Moses and the Prophets, let them hear them: and when the rich glutton would have other means, if one come from the dead they will repent; he said again unto him: If they hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead and come unto them: Whereby our Savior showeth, y^t whosoever depends upon extraordinary means, visions, or revelations, or dreams, or the dead, when God hath left us ordinary ways, is to follow by-paths of our own, to dig cesternes that hold no water, and to trust in lying words that shall not profit. God hath ordained to teach us by the Ministry of his word, and hath put his hidden treasure in earthen vessels, whereunto we must attend as to a light shining in dark places. This is the ordinary way and common means left us to attain salvation and eternal life: Hereby then all ignorant persons are reprov'd and convinc'd, who (neglecting this usual way to begin and confirm faith and the rest of the graces of God in us) say: O, if God would himself speak unto us from heaven, or if we might hear Christ preach unto us, we would repent and believe the Gospel; as for men, we know not whether they speak the truth or not. Others say, we have the Scriptures in our houses, we can read them at home, can they by all their teaching & preaching make the word of God any better? Besides, if you urge Sermons so much, we have Sermon books at home, we read them and can serve God in our houses, as well as they that run after Sermons. Others also think they have knowledge sufficient already, that they need neither hear nor read anymore. Lastly, others object, we have good prayers and good homilies, why should not men be content with them, as the law prescribeth and enjoineth? All these excuses are but fig-leaves, to cover over their own shame, when once they are sifted and examined. We answer to the first objection many ways. First we are not able to endure the dreadful presence of Almighty God, and therefore the faithful have cried out, Alas we shall die, because we have seen the Lord. We hear not the thunder without fear: we behold not the brightness of the Sun without dazzling: how then should we hear the immediate voice of God, or see his glory without confusion?

Again, if the Lord should speak from heaven, and utter his voice from the place of his habitation, he would speak no otherwise, he would teach no other truth then the Prophets and Apostles have delivered. And if we should hear one of the elect Angels, he would set before us no new points of religion, he would bring unto us no new article of faith, and therefore the Apostle saith, Though we or an Angel from heaven preach unto you otherwise then that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. But it is more comfortable and profitable to us to be taught by men like unto our selves, then by the angels that are spirits: we cannot abide their glory through weakness of our flesh; we cannot be familiar with them through disparagement of our nature; we cannot have them always present with us through distance of place. Therefore the Spirit that could have taught the Eunuch by inspiration, commanded Philip to go near and join himself to his chariot, to be a guide to the blind, a light to him that sate in darkness, and an instructor of the unlearned. The Angel that appeared unto Cornelius could have told him and taught him those heavenly mysteries of salvation, whereby he and all his house should be saved: but he directeth him to Peter to tell him what He ought to do. Lastly, our own request hath concurred with the ordinance of God, desiring that man, clothed with the same infirmities, and subject to the like passions, might speak unto us. For when the Israelites at the delivering of the Law, saw the signs of his glory, as it were certain prints and footsteps of his Majesty, the sounding of the trumpet, the cracking of the thunder, the flashing of the lightning, y^e trembling of the earth, the darkness of the air, the appearing of the cloud, & the quaking of Moses himself at these sights: they cried out to him with great vehemency of spirit, Talk thou with us, and we will hear thee: but let not GOD talk with us lest we die. Seeing therefore the majesty of God is incomprehensible, who dwelleth in light that no man can attain unto, whose glory the Angels cannot behold without covering their faces: seeing the excellency of the elect Angels is so great, y^t we cannot so much as endure their presence, neither can we be so familiar with them as we do desire, and should be to deliver our estates to them, neither can at all times when we desire (being on earth) have conference and recourse to them being in heaven: seeing the Word is the same in the mouth of God, in the mouth of an Angel, and in the mouth of the Minister, and is with like regard and reverence to be heard, as Luk. 10, 16. He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that despiseth you, despiseth me. Lastly, seeing we desired the ministry of man to teach us, and God approved of our desire, saying: Oh that there were such an heart in them to fear me, & keep all my commandments always, that it might go well with them and with their children forever: the intolerable pride and presumption of those appeareth, that embase the high ordinance of God in the ministry of his word, & would call God or his Angels out of heaven to attend upon their fancies, & to minister to their wantonness. To the second objection, pretending reading of Scriptures and Sermons at home, and asking whether we can make the Bible better: we answer, y^t we preach not to make the Scriptures better, but the people; the Scriptures need it not, the people do. And albeit there be enough set down in the written word, yet men understand little, as Acts 8. whē Philip heard the Eunuch read the Prophet Isaiah, he said, But vnderstandest thou what thou readest? He said, How can I without a guide? The reading of the Scripture I confess is profitable, comfortable, and necessary to fit us and frame us to the saving hearing of the word preached, & to keep us that we be not easily deceived by false teachers. But notwithstanding the reading of the Scripture, we must have it further opened, divided, and applied, as 2 Tim. 2, 25. Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, dividing the word of truth aright. When a mā is grievously wounded, it is the salve that healeth, yet is the skill and cunning hand of the Surgeon necessary, and requisite to make the plaster, to spread it, and apply it to the part diseased. It is the meat that nourisheth the body, yet must it be cut, chewed, and digested. If there be little children in an house, and they have an whole loaf which is great & hard set before them▪ they find the crust too strong for them, so that it must be cut for them, and divided unto them in due season. Moreover, we find by experience, that such as plead for reading, either Scriptures or Sermons at home, when they should attend the public exercises of religion, do indeed spend the time nothing less then that way: as appeareth by their palpable ignorance; neither let such look for a blessing from God at home, when he requires them to join themselves to the congregation of the faithful: so that while they think to deceive others, they do most of all deceive themselves. Last of all, why do they not say as much of the other part of the Ministers Office? For as he is to preach the Gospel, so he is to administer the Sacraments. Now then as they allege they can read Scriptures & Sermons at home themselves, as well as hear them at the mouth of the Minister; so can they not pour Water on the face of their children, and rehearse the words of institution as well as the Minister? Can they not themselves take Bread & Wine, break the one, pour out the other, receive them both, and eat and drink them in their private families, as well as take them in y^e public assembly at the hand of the Minister? But should such water so sprinkled on the child be holy baptism? Or should such bread and such wine, so taken, so broken, so eaten & drunken be the Lord's Supper? No, such idle actions are not holy Sacraments, but shameful profanations of the precious blood of Jesus Christ. Wherefore, notwithstanding all our show of reading in our houses to our houtholdes, yet must the Lord's holy ordinance be magnified among us, to seek the law at y^e Pastors mouths as the Prophet teacheth, The priests lips should preserve knowledge; and they shall seek the Law at his mouth, &c. And examine when you will those that pretend reading, to exclude preaching, you shall find them (for the most part) ignorant in the grounds and principles of Religion, knowing neither the use of the Law, nor the end of the Gospel; understanding neither the Petitions of the Lord's prayer, nor the Articles of faith: and therefore if they bestow so much time as they would make the world believe, they are yet in the number of those whom the Apostle speaketh of, Which are ever learning, but are never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

To the third objection, boasting of sufficient knowledge, we answer: That as we prophesy in part, so we all know in part: and the Ministry of the word, serveth not only to begin faith and repentance in us, but to build us up to the day of Jesus Christ. It serveth not only to teach us knowledge, but obedience; lest our knowledge puff up, and add to our farther condemnation. Therefore, the Apostle writing to the Church of the Thessalonians, (being one of the most goodly and glorious churches that the Apostle planted) who above y^e rest of the churches surpassed in knowledge, excelled in faith, abounded in love, shined forth in obedience, yet he saith to them, despise not prophesy, and we exhort you in the Lord Jesus, that you increase more & more, as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk, and to please God. We are here in our race, we have not yet attained to y^e end of our journey. We see how men think they never have riches and substance enough, they always account themselves poor and needy, and are ever endeavouering to increase & better their estate: so it should be in true and heavealy Treasure, we should hunger and thirst after righteousness; we should grow up in grace, and desire evermore greater strength; assuring our selves that if we have an appetite and thirst after the Well of the water of life, we shall be fully satisfied; only we must use the means that God hath appointed to attain faith and other saving graces: as earnest prayer, reverent hearing of the Word, diligent receiving of the Sacraments, being careful to honor God for that which we have already received: and I am persuaded that he which hath begun his good work in us, will perfect the same unto the day of Jesus Christ. As for the perverse and crooked generation of those that think they have knowledge enough, they manifestly bewray their want of knowledge. For as such as have attained and received the greatest knowledge, do find in themselves the greatest ignorance: so such as imagine themselves to be most richly replenished in all knowledge & understanding, are indeed most sottish and ignorant in the matters of GOD; like empty vesselles which make the greatest sound. Hereby therefore we shall try our selves whether we have attained any measure of acceptable knowledge, if it work and kindle in us a desire of more knowledge; if it light us a Candle to see our own ignorance; and if it teach us that still our wants are greater then our store. The grace of God in the heart, is like a grain of mustard seed, small to see to at the beginning, but being once placed & planted in the ploughed ground of a fruitful heart, it increaseth speedily, and spreadeth itself far and near. The master delivering his Talents to his servants, saith to them, Occupy til I come; and not hide them in the earth. And the Apostle exhorteth Timothy to stir up the gift in him, and to blow the coals, lest the graces of God decay, as fire is apt to go out, being kindled in green wood.

Touching the last objection of having already good prayers and good Homilies: I answer, as they are hated of God and men, that make dissention between brethren, so such as magnify prayer, to juttle out preaching, which join hand in hand together, and walk as friends that are agreed, are indeed enemies to them both. Indeed we confess the prayers of the Church are good, as it is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but these men little regard them, save to serve their own turn: for few of them make conscience to be present at the confession of sins, or absolution of a sinner. Nay, if they stand at the Church doors, they scarce afford us their presence to come in; and if they do, we must be deeply indebted to them for their company. Now where they think to stop our mouths, & to choke us with the Law, they cross the high Ordinance of God, slander the good laws of Princes, and sin against their own souls, making the reading of Sermons and exhortations of equal dignity and preeminence, with the lively preaching of the word. For first, no people under heaven should want (so far as is possible) the preaching of the Gospel, it is the commandment of God, it is his ordinance necessary for the planting and continuance of a Church, which cannot be said of the other, w^c also are appointed to give place & hold their peace as an inferior institution, when any is present to preach unto the people. Again, the lively preaching of the Pastor, applieth Doctrine and exhortation to the present circumstances and occasions of times, and budding of new sins, and broaching of new heresies, so that according to their manifold windings & turnings, it is ready to meet them, & to strike at the very heart and head of them.

Thirdly, there is a great difference in gifts of interpretation, exhortation, zeal, vtterāce, memory, moving of affections, and such like, as the very Heathen have in another case and kind acknowledged. For when the people after the reading of an Oration, penned in the perswasible words of human eloquence, greatly wondered, it was replied: Do you marvel hearing me read it? What affections would it have wrought in you if you had heard himself with lively voice utter & pronounce it? As for godly and learned Homilies, we do not condemn or contemn them in the famine & scarcity of teaching: we know that a cup of cold water is better then no drink, and half a loaf better then no bread; yea as Solomon saith, the person that is full despiseth an honey-comb, but unto the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet: yet it is no disgrace or disparagement unto them to give place to the preaching of the word: as a man may say, the Peers & Nobles of a kingdom are inferior to the Prince, without defacing of them, or that silver is baser thē gold without disgracing of it. Thus much in answer of the Objections that are made against the preaching of the Gospel, being the ordinary means which God hath left unto us, to further our salvation.

Secondly, see God's mercy to his Church: [Use 2] his Decree is concluded, his providence is determined, all things are written in his Book, yet he will use men as his own hand and instruments, to do that which himself could work alone: he will have them as Ioynt-workers, and as fellow-helpers with him. This is a great honor, and special prerogative, as the Apostle showeth, We together are God's Laborers, ye are God's Husbandry, and God's Building. And again, We are Ambassadors for Christ, as though GOD did beseech you through us, we pray you in Christ's stead to be reconciled to God. It is a very great honor and dignity to represent the person of an earthly Prince, whose breath is in his nostrils: but it is a greater privilege and preeminence to stand in y^e room of God. They are greatly honored that sit in his seat, whether in the Church, or in the Commonwealth. This is a great comfort to all godly Magistrates, that bear on their shoulders the burden of government, of whom it is said, I have said ye are God's, and ye are the children of the most High, to know that they bear the person of God, and that he useth them as his vicegerents. This is a singular comfort also to all godly and painful preachers, whom the Lord useth as his Stewards and messengers, of whom he hath said, He that heareth you, heareth me, which ought to be all-sufficient unto us, to make us walk thorough good report and evil report, and ouerstride all the discouragements and discontentments that the unthankful world throweth upon us.

[Use 3] Lastly, we learn to forsake no work belonging to our calling, yet still to trust in God, & to rely upon him, not to trust in the outward means. Our Savior Christ teacheth, that they tempt God and provoke him to wrath, that refuse or neglect the ordinary means appointed for their life and preservation. He that is sick, and neglecteth the ordinary means of Physic; he that is hungry, and refuseth the ordinary means of feeding; or being in an high and dangerous place, will not descend the common way, but casteth himself down, maketh a needless trial of God's power, and so tempteth God. It is our part not to be idle upon his providence, but to use profitable helps for our safety and maintenance. Our endeavours and labors are required in his providence, who as he ordaineth the end, so he appointeth the means leading and tending to the end. Now, whensoever God hath offered and afforded an ordinary means for our succor and salvation, we are bound to use the same carefully, and not seek redress & remedy another way. This serveth to convince all such as wait upon vanities, and forsake their own mercies; which say, Cannot God save us without so much preaching? hath he no other means to work our conversion? Hath he bound himself to the Ministry of the word? Indeed God hath not tied himself to this ordinance, he can work our salvation by other ways: but he hath necessarily tied us unto it, where he hath sent it unto us, and if we think to find it any other way, we shall toil and trouble our selves in seeking, and shall not obtain it. God norished his people with Quails, fed them with Manna, and commanded the Rock to give them water in the wilderness extraordinarily; but when he had planted thē in the land of Canaan, and given them Corn and provision to live ordinarily, they must use those helps, or else perish and famish for hunger. As he dealt with their bodies, so he dealeth with our souls. If we neglect ordinary means, we may not look for extraordinary. Moreover, this serveth to condemn the practice of such as reason, If we be appointed to salvation, it shall never be taken from us: whomsoever we oppress, whatsoever we commit, howsoever we live. This is to covet the end, but to neglect the means. We desire salvation, but we refuse to walk in the way that God hath chalked out unto us. Such as never use the means, make it plain and manifest, they were never ordained to the end. Wherefore the Apostle saith, God hath chosen us that we should be holy, and without blame, before him in love. Repentance, faith, sanctification, are the means and the way, salvation and eternal life are the journeys end. Al such as God hath ordained to eternal life, he hath ordained them to use the means to pray unto him, to hear his word, to receive the Sacraments, to have faith in Christ to repent from dead works, and hereby we shall make our election sure. The more we increase in the gifts of God, the greater shall our assurance be. Thus much of the necessary use of the means used by the people, to further God's providence, and to come unto the quiet possession of the land of Promise.

[Verse 17. I pray thee let us pass thorough thy Country.] Before we come to the consideration of the reasons, let us see what their request is of the Edomites, which were a people lying Southward, in respect of the land of Canaan, toward the Desert of Arabia, & the dead sea, and sprang of Esau, as we heard before. Now the Israelites were the Lord's own people, the visible Church of God upon earth, which is y^e foundation & pillar of truth, of whom he said, Touch not mine anointed, and do my Prophets no harm: yet see here, how they are brought to so low an ebb as to ask a License, & to crave a Passport and passage of their enemies. We learn from hence, y^t the true church is oftentimes brought so low, as to stand in need of the help, favor, friendship, and good will of strangers that live out of the church. God doth so far make his servants drink of the cup of affliction in y^e outward wants of earthly things, y^t they must crave help of those that are their enemies. This we see in Abraham, he had not a place to bury his dead out of his sight, but was constrained to crave it of the Hittites. So Jacob and his household were so sorely pressed with famine, that they came and bowed to the Egyptians for a piece of bread. So David being in distress in the wilderness, was driven to send to churlish Nabal, to give to him and his whatsoever came to his hand. This misery of the poor church the Prophet confesseth, Lam. 5, 6. As if they should say, We are so oppressed by the Chaldeans, that we are compelled thorough necessity, to crave relief of our greatest enemies. So Ester a nursing mother of the Church, begged her own life, and the life of the people of God, at the hands of an Heathen King. Thus we see, that howsoever the faithful be right heirs of the world, & the just owners of all things in Jesus Christ, yet sometimes for their necessary relief in things of this life they stretch out their begging hands unto their enemies, as Lazarus did.

[Reason 1] The Reasons are. First, in respect of God, who will try the faith and patience of his servants, how they can bear outward afflictions, whether they will cleave to him in their troubles, not. It is his will and heavenly pleasure to try and prove the obedience of his servants. Not that he getteth or gaineth any knowledge which he had not before, but by trial of his own gifts, to let us see what is in our selves, who are ignorant of the hidden corners of our own hearts. Peter supposed himself to be constant and courageous, till he was brought into the field to be tried: like the fresh-water soldier that dreameth of victory before the battle. Abraham then knew that he loved y^e Lord indeed with all his heart, when he had sealed it up with forsaking his country & fathers house. And God commanded him to offer up his son to prove his faith. So he humbled the Israelites and made them hungry, to teach and to prove them, that he might do them good at the latter end.

[Reason 2] Secondly, in respect of their enemies, he will also try them whether they will show pity or not. God hath made the needy and oppressed his treasurers, and offereth those men as Objects and occasions to open their bowels of compassion. If they shut their eyes, and stop their ears from the cry of the poor that are in trouble, they are made without excuse, and themselves shall cry in the day of affliction, when they shall not be heard. Thus he tried y^e heart of Pharaoh, when the Israelites put up a supplication unto him, to let them go 3. days journey into the wilderness to offer sacrifice. Thus he tried the rich glutton, when he sent distressed Lazarus to his gate, showing what was the liberality of one, by the poverty of another.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, in respect of the Church of God, that should acknowledge God to be the Author of every good gift, and should fly unto him in their miseries, who hath the hearts of all men in his own hand, to dispose of them as seemeth good in his divine wisdom. He turned the heart of Esau to favor Jacob, who came against him with a band of men. Let us first of all come into the presence of GOD, humbling our selves before him, confessing our sins, acknowledging our unworthiness of the least of his mercies, and praying him to turn the hearts of our enemies to favor us, according to the promise of his own mouth, who hath said, that whē the ways of a man please God, he will make even his enemies to be at peace with him. Thus having reconciled our selves to God, let us not doubt but that he which brought water out of the hard Rock, will mollify the stony harts of our greatest adversaries & will make them instruments of our greatest good. This we see practiced by Nehemiah, who prayed unto God to give him favor in the sight of that heathen king, and he obtained his request.

The uses are these. First, seeing it pleases God [Use 1] to make his own people to creep and crouch to his and their enemies, we see it is lawful in our necessitous estate, to crave alms & relief of our enemies and those that hate us, to help us for our needful sustentation. This condemneth the niceness and scruple of those y^t hold it unlawful to buy and sell, to deal and Trafficke with the enemies of the Church, or to be any way indebted or beholding unto them. But as we are commāded to do good to them that are without, and are debtors to all men that are our own flesh, and are enjoined to succor thē in their necessities, so far as we do not maintain and help them against Christ: so is it fitting our profession (when God denieth other means) to ask relief and refreshing of them, otherwise we tempt God in despising such means as he openeth unto us for our good. Let us not disdain or refuse to take at the hands of men, but withal acknowledge it to come from God the chief giver, whosoever be the instrument, as Elijah received meat of the Ravens, both morning and evening.

Secondly, let us never promise any certainty [Use 2] or assurance of the things of this life. For, as the Kings daughter is said to be all glorious within: so the comeliness, beauty, and happiness of the Church standeth not in meat nor drink, but in righteousness of life, peace of conscience, joy in the holy Ghost, & in the loving countenance of the Lord towards his servants. For the things that are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal So Solomon saith, Riches remain not always, nor the Crown from generation to generation. And again, Travel not much to be rich, but cease from thy wisdom: wilt thou cast thine eyes upon nothing? For riches taketh her to her wings as an Eagle, and flieth into the heaven. And indeed this is the cause why men bear want and poverty so impatiently, because they promise immortality unto themselves, make an act of perpetuity, and wholly toil and moil for the mucke of this world. They dream sweetly of dwelling forever upon the earth, and make their money and riches the god of their refuge. If Job had made gold his hope, & had said to the wedge of gold, Thou art my confidence, he could never have spoken this in the patience of his soul, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord. Therefore the Apostle teacheth, that if we have food & raiment, we ought therewith to be content. For we brought nothing into the world, and it is certain, we can carry nothing out. Wherefore let us often and seriously enter into the meditation of the poor and low estate of y^e church driven many times into a corner, and constrained to seek help of others, thereby to teach our selves the uncertainty and slippery state of all human things.

Lastly, take this low estate patiently, whensoever [Use 3] such extremities do befall us, as the lot that God hath appointed us. Let us consider that no temptation hath overtaken us, but such as appertaineth to man, and God is faithful which will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able, but will even give the issue with the temptation that we may be able to bear it. Indeed every affliction for the present is grievous, and not joyous, but afterward it bringeth y^e quiet fruit of righteousness unto them that are thereby exercised. So then, we must know that we have need of patience, y^t after we have done the will of God, we may receive the promise. And without this heavenly grace, considering the present or eminent calamities of the Church, we shall never be able to hold out our profession unto the end. We shall never apprehend the love of God in our sufferings, but be always grudging, repining, and rebelling against the will of GOD. This made the Apostle to say, I have learned in whatsoever estate I am, therewith to be content. Let us not therefore in our necessities and calamities fret and fume, rage and be angry against God, but pray for this patience & the silence of the heart, which is much set by of God. For albeit the affliction we endure be grievous for the measure, manifold for the number, strange for the manner, and long for the continuance; yet if we put on the armor of a Christian, it shall work in us experience of God's mercy, and bring forth hope of a full deliverance, which maketh not ashamed.

[Verse 14. Thus saith thy Brother Israel.] Hitherto of the request sent by Moses, delivered by the Ambassadors, and consented unto by the whole congregation: now we are to mark the reasons used to stir up the hearts of the Edomites. The first is drawn from their nerenesse of blood and kindred in the flesh, We are your Brethren: Now, if we be Brethren, then help us: But we are Brethren, therefore help us. The word [Brother] is taken in Scripture sundry ways. First, for such as are brethren by birth, as Cain & Abel, Jacob & Esau. Secondly, by affinity, which come of one family, as branches of one root, and streams issuing out of one fountain: so Abraham and Lot were brethren, and the kinsmen of Christ are called his brethren. Thirdly by Country & Nation: thus all the Jews are called Brethren one to another, Deut. 17.15. Rom. 9, 1. Fourthly, by profession: thus all Christians are accounted Brethren, being of the same religion and profession. Now in this place it is taken in the second sense, for such as were of the same kindred & stock, as if they should say, We are all the seed of Abraham, we have Abraham and Isaac to our father. Thus we see they allege their alliance & communion of the same blood, descending long ago by many generations from one father. Observe here first of all the manner of their reasoning, If we be Brethren of one kindred, deny us not this favor, but suffer us to pass. Where we see the strength of this reason, how that to persuade some kindness, they plead some kindred, and beseech them by the amiable name of a Brother. From hence we learn, that the consideration of our nerenesse and conjunction of blood, must urge and enforce from us all duties of love and brotherly kindness. Howsoever we are to do good to all, yet our Communion in blood should be a forcible means to move us to all duties of humanity. This moved Abraham to take away the heat of contention kindled between his Heardmen and the Heardmen of Lot, Let not us I pray thee strive for we are Brethren. The like we see pressed by Moses to the Israelites striving together to the dishonor of God, to the slander of their profession, and to the opening of the mouths of the enemies, Sirs, ye are Brethren, why then do ye wrong one another? This consideration was so strong, that it prevailed with Laban toward Jacob, saying, Though thou be my brother, shouldst thou therefore serve me for naught? I will give thee wages? So David upon this ground expecteth kindness, and reproveth the Tribe of Judah for their negligence in bringing him unto his house, Ye are my Brethren, my bones and flesh are ye; wherefore then are ye the last that bring the King again?

The Reasons follow. First, the communion [Reason 1] and fellowship of the same nature, ought to move us to be bountiful and beneficial unto men, because we must do to others, as we wish and would that others should do unto us. Let us put the case, & suppose we were in distress, would we not be glad to receive good at the hands of others? and would we not think it a duty belonging unto them as men, to relieve & succor us as men? Even so ought we in like case to do and deal with them according to the rule of the Law, and the exhortation of Christ, Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even the same unto them, for this is the Law and the Prophets.

Secondly, the flesh of one, is as the flesh of an [Reason 2] other; all the world was made of one flesh, so that we are as it were parts and members one of another. We see in the members of our body, how one is helpful and serviceable to another; when one is pained, the rest are troubled; when one is honored, y^e rest rejoice. So should it be in the general communion and conjunction of mankind. This is that which the Israelites affirm, being oppressed by their brethrē: Our flesh is as the flesh of our brethren, & our sons as their sons: and therefore in this consideration, they looked for the duties of kindness, and fruits of humanity to come from them.

The Use of this Doctrine, is first of all, to reprove those that break these bands, and [Use 1] cast these cords from them, wherewith the Lord hath tied us one to another. For, where many times shall you find less familiarity and friendship one with another, then among those that are most nearly linked and allied one to another? Their often jars and most deadly dissensions, proclaim to their open shame, that they are void not only of true piety, but of all due humanity. What a reproach is it? yea what a blot and blemish, that the husband setteth himself against the wife, and the wife against the husband; the father falleth out with the son, and the son with the father: the mother cannot live peaceably with the daughter, nor the daughter with the mother: the mother in law with the daughter in law, nor the daughter in law with the mother in law; and that the love of brethren and sisters is so geason among us? Great is the force and strength of Nature in all such as are not wholly without natural affections, as we see in David, albeit he had a godless and ungracious child, aspiring in the pride of his heart to usurp the kingdom, and driving his father out of Jerusalem; yet when he was slain in the battle, the King was moved, and mourned, saying; O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom, would God I had died for thee. O Absalom my son, my son, 2 Sam. 18, 33. The like we see in the true mother to her child, whose bowels yearned within her, when Solomon called for a sword to divide it. The like force of love could not be dissembled in Joseph toward his brethren, but he turned from them, & his heart melted toward them. Yea, cruel Esau when he saw his brother a far off, though he had threatened to kill him, yet he ran to meet him, and embraced him, he kissed him, and wept upon him. And yet we now see by lamentable experience, that every toy & trifle maketh debate, not only between dearest friends, but between nearest Kinsfolkes, that they can never be reconciled. And as no band knitteth faster, nor bindeth closer then this, while love and liking lasteth: so no contention is so bitter, no hatred so deadly, as that of brethren and others that are near in blood, when the knot is broken and dissolved. The tender glass when it is once broken, will never be set together again. No water proveth so exceeding cold, as that which was once heated exceeding hot: so no hatred proveth like to the hatred of brethren, which are often found merciless one toward another, & such as can never be appeased: as we see in the malice of Cain toward Abel. This is it that Solomon pointeth out in Prov. 18, 19. A brother offended, is harder to win than a strong City, & their contentions are as a bar of a Castle. For as they loved most entirely & dearly before, so when once they grow enemies, they hate one another most extremely, whose hearts are as stony walls that cannot be pierced, and as bars of iron that cannot be broken. Now as the Prophet teacheth, That it is a good and comely thing for brethren to dwell together in unity: so it is a noisome and unnatural thing to behold greatest envy and most mortal malice, where the greatest and nearest bands of kindred should knit together.

Secondly, how much more is it required of those that spiritually are knit together in the profession of the same faith, to love and help one another, that have one God to be their Father, one Church to be their Mother, one Christ to be their elder Brother, one Heaven to be their hope, and one Faith to be their assurance. These considerations are of far greater might and moment, then all bands of other societies, which begin in the flesh, and end in death. Wherefore the Apostle handleth this at large, Eph. 4, 3, 4, 5, 6. Endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit, in the bond of peace. There is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your vocation. There is one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, one God and Father of all, which is above all, and through all, and in you all. To this purpose Christ our Savior teacheth, that there is a nearer conjunction between himself & the faithful, as also between the faithful among themselves, then between brethren and kinsfolkes in the flesh. For when some of his hearers said: Behold thy Mother and thy Brethren stand without, desiring to speak with thee: he answered and said to him that told him, Who is my Mother? and who are my brethren? And he stretched forth his hands towards his Disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren: for whosoever shall do my Fathers will which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother.

Lastly, there is no man in the world, but we are after a sort charged with him to affect him as a brother, to account him as a friend, to help him as a neighbor, and to love him as he is a man. Albeit he be never so far removed from us, albeit we never saw him, albeit we know him not in the flesh, yet we are appointed as his keeper and guardian, to do him good all the days of his life, defending him from wrongs, garding him from enemies, & saving him from dangers. It was a profane voice of a profane man, who being asked where his brother was, answered, I cannot tell, Am I my brothers keeper? Therefore our Savior in the Parable of him that fell among thieves teacheth, that every man is to be called and accounted our neighbor. It is not for any to advance and lift up himself above his brethren in disdain or pride of heart, be he never so high & great in the world, but to acknowldge from whence he came, and in that respect to make himself equal with them of the lowest sort.

[Thy Brother Israel.] Hitherto we have spoken of the strength of the reason, and considered the words not simply in themselves, but as they are referred to the point they argue, that is, to persuade their passage. Now we will weigh them as they stand by themselves. They declare in their plea, that there is a conjunction between them in the flesh. The Doctrine from hence arising is this, Among kinsfolkes, and generally among all mankind, is a certain brotherhood, acquaintance, familiarity, and union one toward another. True it is, there is not fleshly kindred immediately among all men, to make them so near of blood, as to call one another kinsmen, and to descend of the same line and lineage: but there is a certain common kindred in general, to join & bind us one to another. So then, all mankind, though seated and placed far one from another by large and many Countries, and distinguished by several languages, rites, laws, religions, and customs, are one blood, one flesh: yea, all as brethren issuing out of one fountain, & hewn out of one Rock. Everyone is of kin to every man, whether Jew or Grecian, Turk, Barbarian, Scythian, French, Spanish, Italian, German, &c. This appeareth in many places of the word of God. Thus Ahab calleth Benhadad King of Aram his Brother, that is, his Friend. So Christ compriseth every man under the name and title of a neighbor. This also the heathen knew and acknowledged well enough, as the Apostle testifieth, Acts 17, 26. God hath made of one blood all mankind, to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath assigned the seasons which were ordained before, and the bounds of their habitation; declaring hereby, that there is an union and conjunction among all mankind.

[Reason 1] The Reasons are these. First, we had all one beginning from God, who is the Creator and Maker of all things visible and invisible, and therefore he being the efficient cause of all, there must be some dependence upon him, and some fellowship among the works of his hands. This the heathen confessed, as the Apostle alledgeth out of their own Poet, Acts 17, 29. We are the generation of God. He is the Creator, we are the works of his hands: he is our Father, we are his children, & consequently brethren one to another.

[Reason 2] Secondly, as we had one beginning, so we all were made of one mould and matter, being framed of the clay and dust of the earth, which the Lord tempered and fashioned to make man, as appeareth in the history of the Creation. So then, the matter of all mankind is remembered unto us to be the earth. This Moses teacheth, Gen. 2.7. & 3, 19. Hereunto the Apostle accordeth, 1 Cor. 15, 47, The first man is of the earth, earthly. Thus the most noble and notable creature, of a wonderful frame and composition, representing in it the glory of y^e world, was made of the most base matter, and lowest element, as it were the dregs and lees of the Vniuerse.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, touching the form of man's Creation, they are all made in the image according to the similitude of God, which is a certain band of Nature to knit us together. There is one image and likeness of God that shineth in all men, which we must regard & reverence wheresoever we find it. This is it which Moses sets down, Gen. 9.5. At the hand of a man's brother will I require the life of man, for in the Image of God did he make man.

[Use 1] The Uses are these. First, it serveth to condemn the sundry sects of Monks, Friars, Hermits, and all Cloyster-men, that live apart by themselves in woods and desert places, & separate themselves from others, as if they were borne for themselves alone, and not to do good to others. These live as in another world members of no society, parts of nobody, limbs of no Family, of no Church, of no Commonwealth. Every man must bring some good, not only to himself, but also to others, & choose some honest and lawful calling When a man is out of his proper lawfull calling, it is as if a member were put out of joint, or a part of the building were thrust out of order. So then that life which is the forsaking of human society, is neither comfortable for themselves, nor profitable for the Church, nor commendable for the family, nor warrantable by the word, doing good neither to themselves, nor to any other. This the Apostle reproveth to the Hebrews, Let us consider one another, to provoke unto love, and to good works; not forsaking the fellowship that we have among our selves, as the manner of some is: but let us exhort one another, and that so much the more, because ye see that the day draweth near.

Secondly, it followeth from hence, that it [Use 2] is a singular and special mercy that grace is offered to some more then to othersome, that one nation or kingdom is preferred before another, that one place or person is respected above another, being by birth like and equal, and seeing there is no difference between man and man by nature. It cometh not of our selves, that the Gospel of the kingdom, and word of salvation is offered unto us, there is no dignity in us above our brethren. This Moses bringeth the Israelites to consider, Thou enterest not to inherit their land for thy righteousness, or for thy upright heart. Esau and Jacob were brethren, borne of the same parents at the same time, yet one was received, and the other forsaken. So y^e Apostle to the same purpose speaketh, Gal. 3, 28, There is neither Jew nor Grecian: there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are alone in Christ Jesus. This therefore must teach us to acknowledge our own unworthiness, & to magnify the mercy of God toward us above all earthly things.

Thirdly, we are bound to do good to all men, [Use 3] to be servants one to another in love, to help and succor each other in time of need, as the Samaritan did him y^t fell among thieves: and as the barbarous nations did the Apostle. True it is, the nerer God bringeth men together, and the straighter bands of kindred, acquaintance, society, and neighborhood, he tieth us withal, y^e more prompt & ready we ought to be to do service one to another. But seeing he hath set a kind of brotherhood among all, we must love one another, & be kind-hearted to all our flesh, otherwise we bid battle to God, and are at defiance with nature it self. Notwithstanding, if we consider the common trade & practice of the world, we shall see an open conspiracy to do contrary to the will of God, and the secret instinct of nature it self. For where is this employment of our selves to the good one of another? Do we not see among brethren, many times such divisions, as everyone shifteth for himself, and shrinketh from another; drawing still to themselves without respect of reason, without care of honesty, and without sign of pity or compassion? So y^t the wolves are not at such variance, neither do the Lions or Leopards pursue one another as these men do. But man from man is in daily danger. A storm threateneth before it riseth: a building cracketh, before it falleth: a fire smoketh, before it flameth: even the dog barketh, before he byteth: but mankind hurteth suddenly, they are felt oftentimes before they are seen, they strike before they warn, having y^e shape of men, but the mind of beasts. This made Solomon to give out this counsel, Prov. 27, 10. Thine own friend and thy fathers friend forsake thou not, and enter not into thy brothers house in the day of thy calamity: a neighbor near, is better then a brother far off. Where he showeth, that sound and sincere love between brethren is rare, and the kindness of kinsfolkes tried to be no better then unkindness, especially in the day of adversity. Therefore he adviseth, that we go not to our aliance and kindred in our afflictions, to crave their help, and require their succor, inasmuch as the brethrē of the poor man for the most part hate him, and are soon weary of him. Nature is oftentimes without good-will, but friendship is never without good-will. Natural men may prove to be unnatural, but a friend which is as thine own soul, cannot; and therefore ordinarily will sooner help his friend, then a brother will his own brother, albeit the Son of his own mother. If so little love be among brethren, no marvel if lesser be among the rest of mankind, where lesser bands are to hold them together. What marvel therefore is it, that neighbors fo sildome live as brethren, and generally men with men: seeing such as are Children of the same father show no more friendship one to another then wild beasts? But we, who besides the common conjunction of man with mā, have learned Christ, have all one Father, who hath called us to the knowledge of his Name, & to the inheritance of his kingdom in Christ, by the means of one faith, which is confirmed both by one baptism, being a badge of our engrafting into the body of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by his last Supper, being a seal of our perpetual nourishment from him: we (I say) must practice better things, and seek (if it be possible) to have peace with all men, having this double communion, both in the flesh and in the Spirit to follow after love. Heereby shall all men know that we are the Disciples of Christ, if we love one another: and hereby we shall know, that we are translated frō death to life, if we love the brethren. We must not live as Wolves and Tigers, by rauine and spoil, we must not oppress one another, for God is an avenger of all such things. This is it that Moses teacheth, Deut. 23, 7. Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite, for he is thy brother: neither shalt thou abhor an Egyptian, because thou wast a stranger in his Land. Thus the people of Israel complain against the rich, and cry out upon the unequal & injurious dealing of their brethrē, upon this ground; because their flesh was as the flesh of their brethren, the sons & daughters of the poor, as the sons and daughters of the rich.

Lastly, this serveth to reprove & convince [Use 4] three sorts of men. First, it condemned all railing at, and reviling one of another, all words of reproach and contumely, as if they were our slaves and villains; which practice Christ reproveth, Mat. 5, 22. Secondly, it meeteth with such as delight in contentions, as the beggar doth his sores, & nourishing dissention in the Church or Common-wealth, contrary to the amiable name of brethren that ought to be acknowledged among us. All contention is irksome, but especially y^t which is between brethren. All war is lamentable, but especially civil war, where brother is divided against brother, & sometimes the son against y^e father. This victory should not be sounded with triumph, but passed over with silence. Therefore the Roman Captains, after a civil war, never triumphed when they returned victors, as we see in Cinna and Caesar, in Silla and Marius. So among all quarrels and controversies, those among brethren are most unnatural. Wherefore, the Apostle Paul saith, I beseech you brethren, mark them diligently which cause division and offenses, contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them. So the Apostle James teacheth, If ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, rejoyce not, neither be liars against the truth. This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, and devilish: For where envying and strife is, there is sedition, and all manner of evil works. Wherefore let us learn to cut off all occasions of contentions, even from them that seek occasions. Thirdly, this reproveth all unmerciful dealing towards those that are in necessity, such as was in the Priest and Levite toward him that fell into the hands of thieves & was wounded. Whē we see a poor man or woman destitute of daily food, in misery and want of this worlds good, we must thus think with our selves, This man or this woman is my flesh, my brother, my sister, as good by nature and in creation, as myself, having the same Maker, and made of the same matter, and bearing the same Image of God as well as myself. It is only God's goodness toward me, that I possess those things which he wanteth; the same Lord requireth of me to my utmost power to relieve and help him. This is taught by Moses, Deut. 15, 7. Thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand frō thy poor brother. Let it not grieve us to give and forgive. Let us have a cōpassionate heart, a pitiful eye, a liberal hand. Remember it is an easy thing with God to bring thee into as low an ebb, though thou be now afloat, as we see it hath fallen out to many great Kings & mighty Monarchs. This is that charge which the Prophet giveth, Es. 58, 7. Is not this the fasting that I have chosen, to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that wander, unto thine house, when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him, and hide not thyself from thine own flesh? Let this consideration move us to love all mē under heaven, and to show the fruits of mercy unto them in distress, as the Samaritan did to the poor wounded man, Luke 10, 33. Let us pray for the conversion of Jews & Gentiles, as Stephen did for his enemies.

[Ver. 15. Thou knowest our trouble, how our fathers went down into Egypt, therefore I pray thee let us pass.] This is the second reason before remembered, drawn from the woeful experience of many miseries, which they have had in Egypt and out of Egypt. Here we see, they allege the afflictions endured in •gypt, to stir up the Edomites to pity, and to give thē quiet passage. This reason is thus contrived, If we have suffered many sorrows and afflictions, and been evilly entreated in Egypt, then pity our poor condition, and deliver us out of our distress: but we have all suffered many sorrows and afflictions, &c: therefore pity us and give us passage. Mark here the force and strength of the reason: he persuadeth thē to grant them free passage, moved with this consideration, that the miseries of the Church have been many, and as yet they saw no end of them. They were bound by all good means to procure their peace, and seek a blessed end of their present sorrows, that entering into the Land, they might sit under their Vines & Fig-trees, and reason of the ways and word of the Lord without fear. Now the want of this liberty and freedom to serve the Lord, and the distressed estate of the oppressed Church, is made a motive to mercy in these Edomites to redress their troubles, and so the Israelites might have been eased, & themselves no way burdened. From hence we learn, that y^e wants and miseries of the Church should move the hearts of others to pity them, and to procure according to their power the remedy thereof. Whensoever we see the people of God in affliction, if there be any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any compassion and mercy, we must be touched inwardly even to the quick, and put too our helping hand to end their calamities as we are able. This hath been put in practice from time to time by the holy servants of the Lord. When Nehemiah heard that y^e people returned from captivity, were still in great misery, Neh. 1, 3, 4, Jerusalem trodden down, the gates burnt with fire, he sate down and wept, he mourned, fasted, & prayed before the God of heaven for the redress of those evils, and for a blessing upon his holy endeavours. The like affection we see in Mordecai & Ester; chap. 4, 8, 16. when Mordecai saw what evil was concluded against the Church, and that a commission was sued out at Shushan to destroy and massacre the people of God in one day, he rent his clothes and put on sackcloth, he goeth to Ester, he chargeth her that she should go in to the King, and make petition and supplication before him for her people. She undertaketh the cause of the Church with the hazard of her life, she relieth upon the all-giving providence of God, saying; If I perish, I perish, I will go in to the King, albeit it be not according to the Law. So the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 80, 5, where he complaineth, that God had given them bread of tears, and fed them with tears to drink in great measure; Thou hast made us a reproach to our enemies, thou hast brought a Vine out of Egypt, thou hast cast out the Heathen, and planted it, yet the wild Boar devoureth it, the beasts of the field eat it up. Upon this consideration he showeth his affection, and oftentimes doubleth it: Return we beseech thee, O God of hosts, look down from heaven, and visit this Vine. The like care of redressing the distressed condition of the Church, appeareth in Habakkuk; for when God revealed unto him, that for the wickedness and iniquity, the strife and contention of the people, he would punish and visit them by the Chaldeans, a Nation worsen than themselves, it cōstrained the Prophet to break out into an earnest prayer; When I heard thy voice, I trembled and was afraid, Lord, in wrath and in the midst of judgment remember mercy. Hab. 1, 3, 6, & 3, 2. What should I add more? The book of Lamentations showeth, that the horrible desolation of the Church did draw up whole buckets of water, and fountains of tears frō the Prophet, even bowels of compassion and most earnest prayer to God for the delivery of his people, being moved with a sensible feeling of the Churches distresses. Lam. 1, and 2, and 3.

And although this meditation alone be sufficient [Reason 1] to enforce this affection of compassion, yet it may be more earnestly considered, and deeply enforced by sundry reasons. For first, nothing ought to be more precious and dear unto us, then to see the flourishing estate of the Church: nothing ought to go nearer unto our hearts, and to make our eyes a fountain of tears to weep day and night, then to behold the decayings and desolations of Zion. This appeareth evidently unto us, Psal. 137, 1, 2, 5, where the Prophet layeth down the miserable estate of the Church under the Babylonians, and the affection of the Church conceived upon that distress, We sate down and wept when we remembered Zion, we hanged our Harps upon the willows in the midst thereof; if I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget to play, If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave unto the roof of my mouth, yea if I prefer not Jerusalem before my chief joy. Wherein ariseth this reason, that howsoever many things are ministered to comfort the people of God, as favor, friends, honor, glory, pleasure, and prosperity, yet above all other joy, the peaceable and prosperous estate of the Church affecteth thē, as that which sticketh nearest, and cleaveth closest unto them, at the sight whereof the Angels take occasion to wonder at the mercies of God. Contrariwise, the troubles and tumults raised against the Church, beginning to prevail against it, and threatening to make havoc of it, have caused the greatest sorrow of all other incident to the sons of men.

We see a worthy and memorable example of this in the wife of Phinehas, when the Philistines prevailed over the people of God, many sorrows fell upon her, one in the neck of another; the taking of the Ark, the fall of her father, the death of her husband, the slaughter of her brother, the overthrow of the host, the triumph of the enemy: yet above all (as if the rest were nothing) the report of taking the Ark, was as a sword to pierce through her soul, and suffered her not to receive any comfort in her travail, but she named her child, Icabod, that is, no glory, saying; The glory is departed from Israel, because the Ark of God was taken, and because of her father in law, and her husband: She said again, For the Ark of GOD is taken. 1 Sam. 4, 19, 21, 22. Whereby we see, that howsoever we feel nothing but worldly losses, being men of this world, whose portion is in this life, and are acquainted with nothing but worldly sorrows which cause death, choosing rather to leave Christ, then to lose our commodities; to sell our birth-right, then to want our pottage, like profane Esau, or the swinish Gadarenes: yet she sealet up her sorrow in the name of her son, and repeateth the departure of the glory from Israel, as that which most of all doubled and increased her affliction. If then, all things in this life are not to be compared and matched with the prosperous proceeding & increase of the Church in spiritual things; if no earthly loss of things nearest and dearest unto them, do so far enter into them as the calamities and ruins of the Church, marvel not if the wants thereof go near unto the Church, and stir them up to labor the redress thereof in their best meditations.

Secondly, the distresses of the Church set [Reason 2] open a wide door to faithless and profane men, to insult contumeliously, and to triumph vain-gloriously over the Church, as though God had forsaken them, & left them as a prey in the jaws of the enemy, whereby the truth is slandred, & the Name of God which ought to be precious unto us, is blasphemed. This appeareth, Psalm. 70, 1, 4, 5, 8, 10. when the heathen rushed into the inheritance of God, defiled the Temple, and made Jerusalem an heap of stones, that they were a reproach unto their neighbors, even a scorn and derision to them that were round about them. The Prophet expressing his affection, saith; Lord, how long wilt thou be angry, forever? Shall thy jealousy burn like fire? And thē he addeth this as a reason: Wherefore should the heathen say, where is their God? Let him be known among th^e heathen in our sight by the vengeance of the blood of thy servants that is shed. So then, as on the one side the flourishing estate of the Church is that which giveth inward joy and true comfort of heart above all other things to God's servants, & on the other side, the distresses of the Church do set open a door to faithless and rebellious men, to take advantage to rejoice over the Church, and in the spirit of Ishmael to scoff at it with taunts more bitter then gall and wormwood: it followeth, that the troubles thereof must draw us to pity, move us to prayer, and incite us to use all good means to redress them.

The uses follow. First, we must be grieved for the troubles of the Church, as fellow-members [Use] of the same body. Can that be a true and lively member, that is not any way touched with a fellow-feeling of the rest of the members? The Apostle teacheth, 1 Corin. 12, 25, That the members should have the same care one for another, therefore if one member suffer, all suffer with it: if one member be had in honor, all the members rejoice with it. Would we then know, whether we have Christ for our head, coupling us together, whether we be members of Christ, and have him dwelling in us by faith, and whether we be made bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh, without which we have no salvation? we must examine our harts by this note that is found in all the members of the body one toward another. If any member be hurt or endangered, the rest are ready to help, everyone according to his office; the foot runneth for it, the eye looketh upon it, the hand stretcheth out it self for the good thereof. If it be so with us in the dangers and desolations of the Church, we have comfort in our own hearts, we carry a witness about us that we are lively members of Christ. But if we have no feeling, no compassion, no pity toward them that suffer for Christ's sake, we are dead and rotten members, we want life and quickening in Christ, we cannot assure our selves that as yet we are engrafted into his body. Therefore the Apostle saith, Gal. 6, 2. Bear you one another's burden, and so fulfill the Law of Christ. Again, Who is weak, & I am not weak? Who is offended, and I burn not? 2 Cor. 11, 29. And in another place, Be of like affection one to another, rejoice with them that rejoice, and weep with them that weep, Rom. 12, 15, 16. Hereunto the Apostle accordeth in the Epistle to the Hebrews, chap. 13, 3. Remember them that are in bonds, as though ye were bound with them: and them that are in affliction, as if we were also afflicted in the body: teaching us hereby that their condition must be as our own condition, and their trouble as our own trouble. So the Prophet uttereth his affection, Lam. 2, 11, 13, 20, that although he should be preserved from the judgment executed, yet beholding Zion lying waste, he crieth out, Mine eyes gush out water for the destruction of the daughter of my people, thy breach is great like the sea. And afterward he stirreth up his zeal, Behold, O Lord, and consider to whom thou hast done thus? Wherefore, whensoever God offereth us the sight of any chastisement upon our brethren at home, or the neighbor-Churches abroad, we ought not to be as those that are dull, senseless, and past feeling, but to have a simpaty of their sorrows, and draw out the bowels of compassion toward them.

[Use 2] Secondly, woe and woe again to them that are secure, that laugh when the Church weepeth; that live in bravery and excess, whē the Church putteth on sackcloth and ashes; that fill, and feast, and fat themselves with all delicates, when the Church fasteth; that awake not out of their sleep, when the judgments of God are here unto them. This the Prophet reproveth, Isaiah 22, 12, 13, 14. In that day did the Lord of hosts call unto weeping & mourning, and to baldness, & girding with sackcloth: & behold, joy & gladness, slaying oxen & killing sheep, eating flesh and drinking wine, for tomorrow we shall die. When we are once come to this carelessness and contempt of our brethren's condition, the threatening denounced in these words following shall fall upon us: Our iniquities shall not be purged from us until we die. A fearful sentence of a grievous judgment, to teach us humility, and to drive away all security. Hereunto also cometh the saying of Amos chap. 6, 1, 2, 3, 4.5, 6. Where we see, he pronounceth the woeful estate and condition of those that lived without fear and regard of God's judgments, neither remembered their brethren carried into captivity, and living in great adversity. We live in the time of the distresses and wants of the Church. This calleth us to practice this duty, of seeking the good of the Church, and using all good means by supplication to God, and by petition to men, for the redress thereof. Especially let us be mindful in our prayers of the peace of Jerusalem, Because of the house of the Lord our God. This was the prayer of the Prophet, Lord, be favorable to Zion, for thy good pleasure, build the walls of Jerusalem. If then we would have both the Common-wealth and our private wealth to flourish, we must tender the good and flourishing estate of the Church, we must be tender-hearted to procure the prosperous estate thereof. For the Church and Common-wealth are as those twins which are said to weep together, and to laugh together; they flourish together, they fade together, they fall together. So long as pure religion and preaching of the Gospel are maintained, it cannot go ill with the common-wealth, they are as a brazen wall, as a strong fortress and bulwark, as a Castle of defense, to keep out all invasion of enemies, and crying in our streets. For the one addeth strength unto the other, whilst the Common-wealth fighteth against the visible enemies of the Church by counsel and authority, the Church fighteth against the invisible enemies of the Commonwealth by prayer and supplication. If then the Church be spoiled, & the publishing of the Gospel be hindered, the Commonwealth cannot long go free, but the foundation thereof is dangerously shaken, which hath no promise to be kept in good estate, but as it is a Nurse to the Church, and a Lantern to hold the light of the word. The like might be said of private families, and of particular persons, we have no assurance of the protection of God, & of the continuance of our estate in peace, farther then we promote his glory, and give entertainment to the Gospel. We see in the second book of the Chronicles, ch. 36, 15. when the people of Israel came to this height of iniquity, to mock the messengers & misuse the servants of God, which he sent unto them rising early, Because he had compassion on his people and on his habitation, then he brought upon them the King of the Chaldeans, who slew their young men with the sword, in the house of their Sanctuary, & spared neither young men nor virgins, ancient nor aged, God gave them all into his hand. So Christ saith, Mat. 23, 37. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the Prophets, & stonest thē that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, as the Hen gathereth her Chickens under her wings, but ye would not. Now what followeth this contempt of the word, and neglect of the Gospel? Behold, your habitation shall be left unto you desolate. To conclude therefore, let us promote true religion, and then we shall prosper and be safe; otherwise we have no promise of blessing.

Lastly, this doctrine of pitying the Churches [Use 3] troubles, serveth most fitly to condemn the contrary practice of those miserable and merciless men that are without all humanity & natural affection, that are borne of wolves, nourished of tygers, and have sucked y' milk of most savage beasts, or rather the poison of asps and vipers, whose very bowels of mercy are the breathings out of cruelty, as the wise man speaketh: who are so far from pitying the miseries of others, and helping them in their distresses, that they add to the heap of their afflictions, oppress them with an heavier burden, and thrust them quite down that are ready even to fall. This the Prophet condemneth, Psal. 69, 26, 27. This is a note of extreme hatred and malice, and yet how many are there among us, that live in the bosom of the Church, who make the miseries of others as a game and pastime to refresh themselves, reviling & reproaching with most bitter taunts and terms of infamy, such as lie under the cross, as those passengers that mocked Christ hanging on the Cross? Let all such remember the wise counsel of the wise man in sundry places of the Proverbs, chap. 11, 8. & 24, 16, 17, 18. Where he showeth, that howsoever the faithful may fall into many adversities, yet their adversaries are not to triumph over thē, and tread them under their feet as dung of the earth, no nor show signs of mirth & gladness in their affliction, lest the Lord who pondreth the spirits, lay the same affliction upon them. So then, to rejoyce at the misery of another, that he may have sorrow upon sorrow, is the ready way to bring misery and draw God's plagues upon our selves: and therefore if at any time we see them sink down in affliction as under a burden, it is our parts not only to pity them, but to comfort and relieve them, who are commanded to raise up the Ass of our enemy that is fallen down, as we see in the law of Moses: Thou knowest our trouble, how our fathers went down into Egypt. Hitherto we have handled the strength of the reason: now let us consider the truth of the words, which set forth the miseries and afflictions of the Church of God. From hence we learn, that the afflictions of the church are many: the troubles that it endureth at the hands of evil men are very great. True it is, the people of God are endued with the first fruits of the Spirit, and are reserved unto a kingdom, yet if we will live with him, we must first die with him: if we will reign with him, we must first suffer with him; if we will have him wipe away all our tears in heaven, we must first shed them on earth. This is expressly taught, Psal. 34, 19. So the Apostle James, chap. 1, 2. 1 Cor. 4, 9. & 2 Cor. 11, 23, 24, 25, 26. This was the estate of the whole Church of the Hebrews described, Heb. 11, 35, 36, 37, 38. This we might farther consider in the examples of the Patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Job, Joseph, David, Jeremiah, and sundry others, whose lives are a plentiful storehouse to testify this truth, that the people of God do many times endure manifold afflictions from evil men.

The reasons are evident. First, the enemies [Reason 1] of the Church know not the Father, neither Jesus Christ his Son. They have nothing to stop and to stay their fury and violence, being stirred up by their own malice, and set on fire of hell. This is it we read, John. 16, 2, 3. They shall excommunicate you: yea, the time shall come, that whosoever killeth you, will think that he doth God service: and these things will they do, because they have not known the Father nor me. For whatsoever their pretence be, yet their rage against the servants of God, proceedeth from their ignorance of God, and instigation of the devil, who beareth all the sway in their harts. Therefore Christ saith, Revel. 2, 10. Behold, it shall come to pass, that the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried. Howsoever thē, they bear themselves oftentimes in hand that they do well, yet whensoever they take crafty counsel against the innocent, the suggestion is of the devil: when they give their tongues to lying and cursed speaking, they are thrust forward by the father of lies: when their hearts are inflamed with malice, the devil is as the bellows to blow the coals. Finally, whensoever they work injuriously against the Saints of God, he is the master of the mischief, and of him in the end they shall receive their wages.

Again, the delight of God's people is to [Reason 2] follow goodness. Now so long as the devil is in the world, and his instruments stirred up by him that walk after the vanities of their own mind, and the corruptions of their own heart, so long they will always malice and abhor the servants of God, wherein it seemeth to them strange, that we run not with them into the same excess of riot, therefore speak they evil of us; which shall give accounts to him that is ready to judge the quick and dead. 1 Pet. 4, 4, 5. The Spirit of God teacheth this from the beginning, I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: he shall break thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. Where we see, there is and there must be always a perpetual opposition and enmity between believers and hypocrites, between the godly & the ungodly. The world hateth them that are chosen out of the world, John 15, 19. Thus it was in Abraham's family which was the Church of God, where he that was borne after the flesh, persecuted him that was borne after the Spirit, even so it is now. Gal. 4, 29. Hereunto Solomon had respect when he said, A wicked man is abomination to the just, and he that is upright in his way, is abomination to the wicked, Prov. 29, 27.

The uses now to be considered are these. First, we must learn hereby, that afflictions [Use 1] are not simply evil, neither shall they be able to separate us from God, as we see, Rom. 8.35 28, 38, 39. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword, as it is written, for thy sake are we killed all day long, we are counted as sheep for the slaughter. Nevertheless, in all these things, we are more then conquerors through him that loved us. Where we see, that seeing it is the lot of the righteous to suffer persecution, he concludeth, it shall never be able to separate us frō the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. For God giveth to all those that are his, a sanctified use of the Cross, who disposeth all things to work the best to them that love God, even to them that are called of his purpose. This is the unspeakable mercy of God, that maketh not only the Ministry of the word, the use of the sacraments, the grace of prayer, and such like exercises of our holy religion turn to our good, but blesseth the bitter cup of the greatest afflictions that is offered us to drink, to be unto us the medicine of the soul, the trial of faith, the mortifying of corruption, the school house of humility, the preaching of repentance, the renouncing of the world, the taming of the flesh, and the stirring of us up to prayer. We may now comfortably conclude to our own consciences with the same Apostle, I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God. Let us know then there is great use of the cross, being assured, that tribulation bringeth forth patience, & patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our harts by the holy Ghost, which is given unto us.

[Use 2] Secondly, we learn hereby, not to promise to our selves worldly peace & prosperity, but prepare to endure the cross before it cometh, and know that the end of one cross is the beginning of another, while we live here. We must not look to find heaven upon earth, we must not dreme of the victory before we fight. We think of receiving the prize, but we would not run the race. We would put on the crown, but we shun the cross, like those foolish husbandmen that would receive the fruits of the earth, but care not for the labor. And surely the reason why we are many ways impatient under the cross, & murmur under the mighty hand of God, is, because we are unprepared & unprovided to bear any storm, or endure any trial. We must not think to live at ease and pleasure, but know, that whosoever taketh not up his cross & cometh after Christ cannot be his Disciple. So Paul teacheth Timothy, Thou hast fully known my faith and my patience, my persecutions which came unto me, but from them all the Lord delivered me: yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution. 2 Tim. 3, 10, 12. For as the head was first crowned with thorns, so the members must not look to live in pleasures.

Lastly, be not offended at the great afflictions [Use 3] that oftentimes we hear to befall y^e faithful, or we see to be upon such as fear God; let us not marvel and wonder at it, as at some rare and strange thing, much less should we start back from our profession for the persecutions and fiery trials that come upon the Church. Therefore the Apostle John saith, Maruaile not my brethren, though this world hate you: nay, rather we have cause to rejoice, that God vouchsafeth us this honor, not only to believe in him, but to suffer for his Name. This made Paul say, Acts 21, 13. being entreated that he would not go up to Jerusalem, What do ye weeping, and breaking mine heart? For I am ready, not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem, for the Name of the Lord Jesus. Doubtless, if we were of the world, the world would love his own; but because we are chosen out of the world, therefore the world hateth us. It is noted to the everlasting praise of the Apostles, Acts 5, 21. Heb. 10, 33, 34. Cast not away therefore your confidence which hath great recompense of reward. God hath no need of us to maintain his glory, he is able to maintain it without us; therefore it is a great privilege and prerogative, that God calleth us out to suffer for his Names sake. Besides, such and so great are our infirmities, that the Lord might worthily make us suffer for our own sins, and bring shame and confusion of faces upon us, according to our own deservings.

Now, in that he mercifully passeth over our faults and frailties, & covereth our transgressions, and maketh us suffer taunts, reproaches, & persecutions, for his truth and Gospel, it is a great honor and dignity whereunto he exalteth and advanceth us; and therefore our Savior saith, Blessed shall ye be when men revile and persecute you, & say all manner of evil against you for my sake falsely, rejoice and be glad: for great is your reward in heaven. Mat. 5, 11, 12. Wherefore, let us not shrink back for trouble, but rejoice in our sufferings, and praise God for our afflictions.

[Ver. 16. But when we cried unto the Lord; he heard our voice: therefore let us pass through thy Country. Here we have the third reason used to the Edomites, to persuade them to give them passage, drawn from an experience of God's help, who seeing their misery, and hearing their groanings, brought them out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Now it would argue great cruelty, to forsake those and leave them in their affliction, of whō God hath taken the protection. If then God have helped us, do not you deny us help: but God hath helped us, therefore deny not us your help. Thus the gracious dealing of God is propounded for their imitation.

This is a forcible and effectual reason, teaching us this Doctrine, that the consideration of God's love & mercy shown to his childrē, must move us to mercy. The truth hereof hath the consent and agreement of many other Scriptures. Hereunto cometh the exhortation of Moses, Deut. 10.17, 18, 19. The Lord your God is God of God's, and the Lord of Lord's, a great God, mighty, and terrible, who doth right unto the fatherless and widow, & loveth the stranger, giveth him food and raiment: Love ye therefore the stranger, for ye were strangers in the Land of Egypt. Thus the Apostle reasoneth, 1 John. 4, 9, 11. God hath manifested his love in sending his only begotten Son into this world, that we might live thorough him. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. Wher we see, he persuadeth to brotherly love in respect of the experience which we have of the free love of God toward our selves. So our Savior concludes, Lu. 6, 36. Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful. Hereunto cometh that which we read in the Apostle John, in another place, Hereby have we perceived love, that he laid down his life for us, therefore we ought also to lay down our lives for the brethren 1 John 3, 8, 16. There is nothing more effectual to persuade brethren to unity among themselves, thē to know they have a gentle father that loveth them all. Nothing is able to bind faster those that are fellow-servants in one family, to seek the mutual good one of another, then to consider they have a good master, careful of the good of them all, to give them their portion in due season [Reason 1] The reasons are evident. First, we are bound to follow the example of God, which must be our direction and instruction. This the Apostle teacheth. Phil. 2, 5, where he exhorteth to humility and lowliness of mind from the example of Christ, Let the same mind be in you, that was even in Christ Jesus. And the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrews, chap. 11.32, having propounded the examples of the Patriarchs and Prophets, y^t by faith received a good report, concludeth, that we must rather look to the example of Christ, the Author & finisher of our faith, who endured the Cross, and despised the shame for the joy that was set before him. If thē the example of God be to be followed of us, we must be moved to show mercy where we see y^e bountiful hand of God opened before us.

[Reason 2] Secondly, we are the children of God, we are the servants of God, we are the subjects of his kingdom; we must therefore seek to be like to him, & resemble him in our obedience to his Commandments, as the Apostle Peter showeth, As obedient children fashion not yourselves unto the former lusts of your ignorance, but as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation, because it is written, Be ye holy, for I am holy. And thus saith the Lord by Malachi the Prophet, ch. 1, 6. A son honoreth his father, and a servant his master: If then I be a Father, where is mine honor? If I be a Master, where is my fear? Hereunto accordeth and agreeth the exhortation of Christ, John. 13, 12, 13, 14. Know ye what I have done to you? Ye call me Master, and Lord, and ye say well, for so I am: If I then your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do even as I have done to you.

[Use 1] The uses. First let us learn to acknowledge from hence this truth, that great is God's mercy, who never faileth nor forsaketh those that are his. For assuredly, his mercy and compassion should never be propounded to us as a rule to direct us, and as an example to guide us, if there were not infinite love in him, and in our God plentiful redemption. Wherefore, we may safely conclude this principle of our faith and teach it to others, that the mercies of God are sure and certain to his Church. This the Prophet handleth at large, Psal. 103, 8, 11, 13. The Lord is full of compassion and mercy, slow to anger, and of great kindness as high as the heaven is above the earth, so great is his mercy toward thē that fear him: As a father hath compassion on his children, so hath the Lord compassion on them that fear him. There is no end, no measure, no limitation of his mercy & compassion. The height of it is not to be taken, the depth of it is not to be found, the length and breadth of it is not to be comprehended. It is higher then the heavens, it is deeper then the grave, it is longer then the earth, it is broader then the sea: Who is it that by searching can find out God, or search out the Almighty to his perfection? For love, and mercy, & pity, are not in God as they are in men. In us, they are such graces of the Spirit of God as we are qualified withal through his gift, they are streams flowing from his Fountain, and as light drawn from his Candle. But in God are no qualities or accidents, he is of none, but hath his being of himself, & giveth being to all other things. Therefore the Apostle saith, God is love it self: not only the Fountain and well-spring of love, but love it self. And one saith truly and properly: God is not wise, but wisdom it self: not just, but justice it self: not pitiful, but pity it self: not merciful, but mercy it self: not good, but goodness it self. This is a great comfort and refreshing to us in all afflictions, be they never so great, be they never so grievous: there is no infirmity and weakness in God, his mercy is over all his works, he is infinite in compassion, he can no more cease to be merciful, then cease to be God, and therefore it being essential to him, our misery can never exceed or countervail his mercy. Secondly, we must [Use 2] learn from hence, to love all the creatures of God (albeit not all equally) after the example of God. We read everywhere in the Scripture, of the love of God, loving not only his Son, his Church, his Elect, but the rest of the world, the reprobate, and all his creatures, Giving them rain and fruitful seasons, filling their hearts with joy and gladness. Let us therefore first see what the love of God is. He loveth all his creatures, even all the works of his hands, He saw all that he had made, and loe, they were exceeding good. Yea, he doth good to all, in him they move, live, breathe, and have their being. Notwithstanding, he loveth his elect and chosen people, ordained to eternal life, more then the rest of mankind, whom he leaveth in their sin, to work out their own confusion, as the Apostle teacheth, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated. For touching the faithful, he calleth them effectually, he justifieth thē freely, he sanctifieth them thoroughly in soul and body; yea, as the faithful increase in grace & the exercises of piety, so they more and more feel the love of God toward them, as Christ speaketh, He that keepeth my Commandments, is he that loveth me, and he that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father. Here then we have an example before us for our continual instruction to guide us in the matter and measure of our love. For first, the meanest of the creatures are to be loved, none of them are to be abused of us. Hereunto tend the laws givē to the Jews, not to oppress our Cattle, not to musle the mouth of the Ox, nor to take the dam with the young, to help up the Ass sinking & falling under his burden, and such like. Secondly, we must much more love mankind, made after the Image of God; yea even our enemies, according to the commandment of our Lord and Master Christ, Math. 5, 44, 45. This is not a counsel, but a Commandment, charging us to love our enemies, seeking their good, thirsting after their salvation, overcoming evil with goodness, heaping coals of fire upon their head, and thereby gathering an assurance to our own hearts that we are the children of God. Thirdly, it belongeth to the faithful, to love the faithful with an especial love, as children with them of the self same Father, & heirs with them of the same kingdom: for hereby we shall know that we are translated from death to life, because we love the brethren. This the Apostle teacheth, Gal. 6, 10. While we have time, let us do good to all men, but especially unto them that are of the household of faith. So that in the duties of love, we must prefer our godly brethrē, that are Christians by profession, Saints by calling, heirs by faith, sons by adoption, partakers of the same grace with us; yea, as we see the gifts of God more clearly to shine, and more manifestly to multiply in them, so our love must increase toward them. As they go forward or backward, increase or decrease; as we see them zealous, or cold, or luke-warm, so must our inward love proceed or stay, grow or slake toward them; & always where God showeth forth the abundance of his love shed into their hearts, we must most wisely bestow our love according to his example, which the nearer we follow, the more conformable we are to God, wherein standeth our happiness.

[Use 3] Lastly, it reproveth such as are vnappeasable, and will never forgive and forget the injuries that are done unto them. Assuredly, such shall find judgment without mercy, as show no mercy. Who is there among us, that doth not daily (even with the air) draw in y^e mercy of God. It is his mercy that we are not all consumed. If then, having our selves received so great mercy, we can return in way of thankfulness, no compassion to others, we make a law against our selves, and as it were stop and shut up the spring of grace from flowing unto us. This the Apostle James teacheth, There shall be judgment merciles to him that showeth no mercy, and mercy rejoiceth against judgment. It standeth us all therefore upon, not to rest in y^e bare and naked name of the sons of God, but labor in the truth of the inner parts and in sincerity of our hearts to be like to him, practicing the exhortatiō of the Apostle, As the elect of God, holy and beloved, put on tender mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, &c. There is no salvation without pardon and remission of sin. Would we then have salvation? Do we desire forgiveness at the hand of God? The means to assure us that we have attained it, is to put away wrath & all maliciousness, and to be courteous & tender-hearted one to another, forgiving one another, if we desire to feel any true comfort to our own souls in the forgiveness of our own sins.

When we cried unto the Lord, he heard our voice. The truth of the former reason, setteth down the love of God to his people, hearing their prayers, sending his Angel, and bringing them out of Egypt. The doctrine out of these words considered in themselves, is this; God loveth and favoereth his own people. Howsoever they be hated of the world, because they are not of the world, but are chosen out of the world, yet he setteth thē as a seal on his heart, and as a signet on his arm. Hereunto come the amiable and lovely titles y^t Christ giveth to his Church, calling it, & knocking unto it, saying; Open unto me my Sister, my Love, my Dove, my undefiled; for my head is full of dew, and my locks with the drops of the night. So the Prophet expresseth his love in the Psalm, toward his people, Albeit they were few in number, yea, very few, and strangers in the Land, and walked about from Nation to Nation, from one Kingdom to another people, yet suffered he no man to do thē harm, but reproveth Kings for their sakes, saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my Prophets no harm. So Moses testifieth the same; The Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a precious people unto himself, above all people that are upon the earth. The Lord did not set his love upon you nor choose you, because ye were moe in number then any people (for ye were the fewest of all people) but because the lord loved you, and would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers. Thus God in great mercy brought Abraham from his Country, took David from the sheepfolds, chose Peter and Andrew from their nets, called Matthew from the custom, converted the thief upon the cross, and turned Paul from a persecutor to be an Apostle, being oftentimes found of them that sought not after him: by all which testimonies and examples it appeareth, that God doth show himself good and gracious unto his people.

The reasons are; First, because they are his [Reason 1] sons and daughters. This is an argument of great love, & a testimony that he will not forsake us forever. We are not only the servants and friends of God, but the sons of God, & the spouse of Christ. Indeed Christ is the natural Son of God, and the eldest brother, by whom we are adopted to be the sons of God. This reason the Apostle propoundeth, 1 John 3, 1. Behold, what love the Father hath given to us, that we should be called the sons of God; for this cause the world knoweth you not, because it knoweth not him Great is the affection of fervent love y^t parents bear toward their children; no heart of any can well express it, but he that hath been a father himself to feel it. Others may, well speak of it, but they are not able to comprehend it. And yet all their love is a cold & frozen love, yea it is no love indeed, yea it is no better then hatred in comparison of the love that the Father of heaven and earth beareth to his children, whose love to us is wonderful passing the love of men and women. This the Prophet teacheth, Can a woman forget her child, and not have compassion on the son of her womb, though they should forget, yet will not I forget thee. Es. 49, 15. Likewise Christ saith, Mat. 7, 9, 10. What man is there among you, which if his son ask him bread, would give him a stone? Or if he ask fish, will he give him a serpent? If ye then which are evil, can give to your children good gifts; how much more shall your Father which is in heaven, give good things to them that ask him?

[Reason 2] Again, he hath sent his Son into y^e world, who came from the bosom of his Father, and took our nature upon him, he endured the infirmities of our nature, the shame of the cross, the wrath of his Father, to bring us into his favor. He was punished, we are pardoned: he was charged with our sins, we are discharged from our sins: he was crucified, we are acquitted: he was condemned, we are justified. Thus the Apostle John reasoneth, Herein was the love of God made manifest among us, because God sent his only begotten Son into this world, that we might live through him. Herein is that love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be a reconciliation for our sins. The natural Son of God was smitten for the unnatural: the only begotten, for the adopted: the beloved, for the enemy: greater love then this could no man show, then to die for his enemies. But God setteth out his love toward us, seeing that while we were yet sinners, [Use 1] Christ died for us. The uses follow. First, we may conclude from hence, that no creature shall be able to hurt his people. If he have takē them into his protection, & loved them with an everlasting love, who shall by the hatred of thē procure their harm? If he be on our side, who shall be against us? If he be our friend, who shall show himself our enemy? What servant feareth the face of his fellow servant that hath the good will of his master? Or what mā feareth the hatred of any subject, that hath the love of his Prince? So then, the consideration of God's love toward us, assureth us of our blessed condition, and of our safety & defense from all dangers that may surprise us. Whosoever dwelleth in the secret of the most High, shall abide in the shadow of the Almighty, he will deliver him from the snare of the hunter, and from the noisome pestilence. This the Prophet concludes, Extend thy loving kindness unto them that know thee, and thy righteousness unto them that are upright in heart: Let not the foot of pride come against me, and let not the hand of the wicked move me. Let us labor to have a true feeling of the love of God shed in our hearts by the holy Ghost, then will he cover us under his wings, and we shall be sure under his feathers. The cause why we fear him that can kill the body, is, because we are not rooted & grounded in the love of God.

[Use 2] Secondly, hereby we receive another comfort to our faith; for as the wicked shall not hurt us, so we are assured to have our prayers heard & granted. Why? because God loveth us as his dear children. Comes not that child with boldness unto his father that loveth him in all his need? So if once we have this persuasion settled in us, that God will show himself gracious unto us, we may ask in faith and not waver, but be assured of the promise of God, that he will give to them that ask, and open the gate of mercy to them that knock. This Christ our Savior affirmeth, Verily, verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my Name, he will give it you: Ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full: for the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and have believed that I came from God. What greater comfort can there be then this, that God will hear our prayers? that we may vnlade all our cares and troubles into his bosom? There cannot be a greater daunting and dismaying unto any, then when God will not respect and regard them, though they pour out many prayers, yet he will not hear them, as he threateneth those that will not hear his voice, speking and crying unto them in the ministry of his word, They shall cry and not be heard. Prov. 1, 28. Zach. 7, 13. So, of all comforts that can befall us in this life, this is one of the greatest, which cannot be taken from us, though our mouths should be stopped, yet we may safely lift up our hearts and souls unto the Lord, from whence our help cometh.

Thirdly, it is our duty to love one another, [Use 3] as everyone of us hath a blessed experience of God's mercy & favor toward us, let us deal in like measure toward our brethren. This the Apostle John exhorteth unto, Herein is that love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, & sent his Son to be a reconciliation for our sins: Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another: for hereby shall all men know that we are his Disciples, if we love one another. This is my Commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you: greater love then this hath no man, when any man bestoweth his life for his friends. Great was the love of God toward us, as appeareth by many circumstances & considerations. For he loved us first, not we him; as Christ chose his Disciples, not they him. Heereby God cōmendeth & setteth forth his love toward us, that he loved us first, and not we him.

Again, he loved us when we were not, whē we had not our birth or being, he chose us to be a peculiar people unto himself before the foundations of the world, as Rom. 9. Before the children were borne, and when they had done neither good nor evil, it was said, Jacob have I loved.

Thirdly, he loved us, when we were enemies unto him, he was found of us when we sought not after him, nay when we fled from him and rebelled against him, as Ro. 5, 6. & 10. Christ, when we were yet of no strength, at his time died for the ungodly: so as God setteth out his love toward us, seeing that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

Fourthly, he loved us frankly and freely, without any merits or deserts of our own, but of his own mere grace and favor only. Our salvation is wholly of grace. We are elected according to the good pleasure of his will. We are called with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, 2 Tim. 1, 9. We are justified freely by his grace, without the works of the Law, Rom. 3, 24, 28. We have salvation of grace, not of our selves: It is the gift of God, not of works, lest any man should boast, Eph. 2, 8, 9. Lastly, the love of God is so great, that he spared not his own Son, but gave him to the death, That whosoever believed in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. If then the love of God be such and so great to his servants, that he loved them first: freely, when they were not, when they were his enemies, & spared not his well-beloved Son for them: how great should our Christian love be one to another, to promote the good one of another, and to relieve the necessities one of another? We know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that he being rich, for our sakes became poor, that we thorough his poverty might be made rich: Whosoever therefore hath this worlds good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his compassion frō him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? Wherefore, let us not love in word, neither in tongue only, as Cain, which was of that evil one, and slew his brother; but in deed and in truth; for hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall before him assure our hearts. It is not enough if we hurt no man, it is required of us to do good from the heart, to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to visit the sick, and to seek all occasions of showing our compassion unto them.

[Verse 17. We will not go through the fields.] This is the fourth and last reason yielded to y^e King of Edom, to obtain their purpose and passage through his country. Wherein the Israelites promise a peaceable marching, without doing wrong to any. As if they should say, We do not desire that our selves should be benefited, and you hindered; our selves eased, and you burdened; our selves comforted, and you grieved; our selves to gain, and you to live by the loss: we covet no man's silver nor gold, we gape after no man's goods, we will not take any possession of your country, we will not enter your fields, we will not drink of your wels, we will not invade your vineyards, we will not stay to take up your places as our own dwelling, we will only make a thorowfare among you, keeping the Kings high way, and not taking so much as a thread or shoe-latchet from any man to enrich our selves, having learned not to do that to another, which we would not have done to our selves. So thē, the strength of the reason to move them to grant them free passage, standeth in propounding & laying before them their just dealing toward them. This may teach us, that as good men in love and kindness deal with us, so must we deal with them again: and with what measure they measure to us, it must be measured to them again. The Apostle describing the properties and effects of true love, affirmeth, that It doth nothing uncomely: it seeketh not her own things: it is not provoked to anger: it thinketh no evil. So our Savior, having expounded the Commandments of the second Table, compriseth the sum of them all in this, saying; Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, even so do ye to them: for this is the Law and the Prophets. And there is good use to be made of this point, that we learn to be so affected to others, as we wish and desire in our hearts to have others minded toward our selves.

Now there is no man but seeketh his own good, and desireth to be respected when he wanteth the help of others; therefore let us do good to other men, let us abstain from wrongs and injuries, let us hurt no man, but procure the profit and safety one of another: and every man be a rule to himself of just and upright dealing toward his neighbors, performing that to others which we require to be done to our selves.

We will not go through the fields, nor the vineyards, &c. We will go up by the high way. Having in the former Doctrine pointed out y^e strength of the reason, let us now proceed to consider the words themselves, by themselves, wherein we see the solemn promise the people make, to observe the rule of charity, & law of equity, to know their own frō other men's goods, & to medle nothing with that which belonged to others. We learn from hence, that God's people must offer no wrong, nor violently intrude themselves upon the possessions of other men. In that the Israelites show their innocence, and harmless purpose, the servants of God must learn to abstain from all injuries; fraud, and oppression. Hereunto cometh the commandment, Deut. 24, 17. Thou shalt not pervert the right of the stranger, nor of the fatherless, nor take a widows raiment to pledge. So Zeph. 1, •. I will visit all those that dance upon the threshold so proudly, which fill their masters houses with cruelty and deceit. Likewise when the soldiers demanded of John the Baptist, what they should do, he said unto them, Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely, and be content with your wages. Thus the Apostle also teacheth, showing, that love suffereth long, is bountiful, envieth not, boasteth not it self, is not puffed up, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth. And in another place: Let him that hath stole, steal no more, but let him rather labor, and work with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give unto him that needeth. Thus we see, this is a plain and evident truth, that no deceit & defrauding of our brethren, whether openly or closely, whether in bargaining or out of bargaining, must be used among the people of God.

And no marvel. For first, we are called to better things. It standeth not therefore with [Reason 1] our profession to intrude upon other men's substance, and to use unjust dealing in heart or deed, being forbidden to steal or to hurt any man. This the Apostle urgeth, 1 Thessalonians, chapter 4, verse 7. Let no man oppress or defraud his brother in any matter, for God hath not called us to uncleanness, but unto holiness. We must everyone know the end of our calling; which is, that we should be holy & unblameable before him, that hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light. Therefore brethren, partakers of the heavenly vocation, let us walk so, as we may adorn the Gospel of Christ, and beautify our profession of the doctrine of Christ. If then any that is called a brother, or a Christian, walk inordinately, and live wickedly, if he circumvent any man, if he oppress his brother, this must be charged upon his person, not upon his calling; & be imputed to the man, not to his profession, as the manner of some is, who are ready to catch the least advantage to speak evil of the truth of God. For our calling is heavenly, and our profession is holy, it will not bear out any unjust practice.

[Reason 2] Again, God is a just Judge, an avenger of all wrongful dealing between man & man. It is God that distributeth this worlds good, and the things of this life to whomsoever he pleaseth. He is the general Lord of the whole world, he hath the souereigne right in his own hand, and hath in most excellent wisdom distributed and disposed to every man his several portion, and no man lawfully enjoyeth anything but by the gift and giving of God. So the, whosoever circumventeth his brother, getteth anything from him by fraud, & impaireth any way his wealth, crosseth God's ordinance, inuerteth his order, and will bring in a new and another division of the earth thē God hath made. For whereas God hath said, This man shall have this portion, he shall have this house, this horse, this land, this money; this corn, this cattle: the thief cometh and saith, The churl shall not have it, or he shall not have so much, I will part stakes with him, and so turneth upside down the distribution that God hath made, making himself wiser then God, and bringing upon his own head the due and deserved curse of God. For if the Lord pronounce him accursed, that remooueth the bounds and marks of his neighbor, of ancient time set, as the listes and limits of men's possession: how much more accursed shall he be, that changeth the bounds which God, the ancient of days hath made in the world, having given the earth to the sons of men? Wherefore, God maintaining his own right and office, showeth himself a just avenger of such pride and presumption, as the Apostle reasoneth, 1 Thess. 4, 6. Let no man defraud or oppress his brother in any bargain; for the Lord is an avenger of all such things, &c.

The uses are these. First, it teacheth us to [Use 1] be content and well pleased with that estate wherein we are put and placed by the hand of God. This will be a notable means to keep us from rushing violently into the possessions of other men. Let us not suffer our hearts and affections to overflow the banks and bounds of our condition, but rather show our thankfulness to God for our present estate, considering that how much or how little soever we have, we have more a great deal thē we have deserved. Therefore the Apostle saith, I have learned, in what state soever I am, therewith to be content. Phil. 4, 11. 1 Tim. 6, 6, 7. Heb. 13, 5, 6.

Secondly, we must be careful to give to every [Use 2] one his own, that we do no way oppress the fatherless and the widow, neither do injury to the stranger, lest they cry to the Lord, & he hear them, and his wrath be kindled: then saith the Lord, I will kill you with the sword, and your wives shall be widows, and your children fatherless, Exod. 22, 22, 23, 29. Again, we must not use false weights and deceitful measures, to enrich our selves by the spoils of others, Levite. 26, 35, 36. Ye shall not do unjustly in judgment, in line, in weight, and in measure, &c. Now, greater injustice there cannot be, then to turn the measures of justice to be instruments of craft and subtlety. Therefore Solomon saith, Divers weights and diverse measures (buying with a greater, and selling with a less, or selling to the wise and wary• buyer with the greater, and to the simpler sort that trust them too far & see not their fraud, with a lesser, thereby deceiving others to enrich themselves) both these are such an abhominatiō to the Lord, as he will not leave vnpunisht.

Lastly, we are from hence instructed to restore [Use 3] that w^c is wrongfully gotten, otherwise we cannot truly repent of our oppression. It is a bad practice used of many y^t grind the faces of the poor, as the Lyon roaring after his prey, or the wolf in the evening which leaveth not the bones till the morrow: which do use devoutly to bequeath their souls to God, & presently give their evil gotten goods to their heirs; and therefore God oftentimes bloweth upon them, so that being unrighteously gotten they are vnthriftilly wasted and consumed. The reason is, because with such goods they likewise bequeath the curse of God. It is an evil practice of servants to convey from their masters, and of one man to purloine from another the substance that they have. If such will have God pleased with them, and hear their prayers, they must make recompense and restitution of things wrongfully taken, & unjustly detained, as we have shown before at large, ch. 5. This offer did Samuel make, 1 Sam. 12, 3. Behold, here I am, bear record of me before the lord, & before his anointed: Whose Ox have I taken? Oy whose Ass have I taken? Or whom have I done wrong unto? Or whom have I hurt? Or of whose hand have I received any bribe, to blind mine eyes therewith, and I will restore it you? The like we see in Zacchaeus, Lu. 19, 8. He stood forth in the day of his conversion, and said unto y^e Lord, Behold, half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken from any man by forged cauillation, I restore him four fold. The performance of this duty is the pathway to life: Restore and thou shalt live. The contrary leadeth to death: they are worse then Micah the Idolater, then Judas the betrailer of his master. Wherefore it behooveth all oppressors to practice the counsel of y^e

Prophet; Let my counsel be acceptable to thee, & break off thy sins by righteousness, & thine iniquities by mercy towards the poor: let there be an healing of thine error. Otherwise there is no promise of pardon, or hope of life, or assurance of mercy, if God have made him able thereunto.

[Verse 20. He answered again, Thou shalt not go through. Then Edom came out against him with much people, and with a mighty power.] We have already handled the request of the Israelites: now let us consider the answer of the Edomites, wherein we see they deny their petition, and withal come out with an host of men to stop their passage. The people of Israel spake kindly, and did no way deal injuriously against them to provoke them: but they answer roughly and curiously, they deal also maliciously and cruelly against them. We see hereby as in a glass, the nature of the enemies of the Church, they are merciless & malicious, destruction and calamity is in their ways, their feet are swift to shed blood, & the way, of peace they have not known, Prov. 12 10. 2 Kings 8, 11, 12. Thus dealt Hazael with Israel, and Pharaoh was no better before him. If all the pictures and patterns of merciless tyrants in the world were lost, they might all be painted to the life in the histories of these two, Exo. 1. & 2. For one of them did set their strong cities on fire, slew their young men with the sword, dashed their infants against the stones, and rent in pieces their women with child. The other, so envied the growth and increase of the children of Israel, that they threw their male children (the fry and seed of the Church) into the waters. A like plot and practice against the Church, we read in the Book of Ester, when Haman was exalted, and his seat set above all the Princes that were in the kingdom, he sought to destroy all the Jews, without difference of sex or age, Ester 3, 1, 6, 13. The book of the Lamentations is plentiful in this point, as Ch. 5, 4, 5, 10. &c.

[Reason 1] The Reasons are plain and evident, whether we respect the Church it self, or the enemies of the Church. Their malice exceedeth toward the Saints of God, because they follow righteousness, and do not follow them in all excess of riot: so that, Whosoever refraineth from evil, maketh himself a prey, Isaiah 59, 15. For albeit when GOD setteth up merciful Princes that rule in peace and quietness, they dare not show y^e inward malice of their hearts: yet hatred evermore boyleth and burneth within: and in the late days of the grievous afflictions of the Church (in the memory of many yet living) they shown it to the full, striking many innocents with the sword, that deserved not to be touched with the scabbard. They raged against young and old, learned and unlearned, rich and poor, men and women, children and sucklings, against the living & the dead. They beat them with rods, they cut out their tongues, they smote them with Halberts, they burned their hands with torches, and their whole bodies with fire: and the poor babe breaking out of the mothers belly they cast into the fire again, as the brood of heretics. This is the reason added by the Prophet, Psal. 38, 19, 20, where he showeth wherefore the servants of God are so much maligned, not because they had holden up their hands to a strange god, not because they had raised any tumult, not because they were found in any wickedness, but because they follow goodness. A lively image and picture of this persecuting Church we have in Cain, who slew his brother: and wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his Brothers good, 1 John. 3, 12. And this hath been the estate of the Church, even from righteous Abel (whose blood cried for vengeance) unto this present time.

Again, as their hearts are inflamed with [Reason 2] rage and fury, so the devil is the bellows to blow the coals, he moveth their minds to madness and mischief, albeit they perceive it not. He is compared in Scripture to a Lyon, to a Dragon, to the old Serpent. He was a murderer from the beginning; and therefore no marvel if his instruments thirst after the shedding of blood, being no better then a wretched generation of cruel beasts. There is nothing so sweet and pleasant to the Wolf, as to suck the blood of the Lambes. This they have learned of him that is the father of all mischief & murder. This is noted by the Apostle John Revel. 2, 10. Behold it shall come to pass, that the devil shall cast some into Prison, that ye may be tried. For in all persecutions although the devil be not seen to work and contrive the plot, yet he is the grand Captain and chief agent. It was Cain that lifted up his hand against his brother, but it was the devil that set him on work. It was Judas one of y^e twelve, that with a kiss betrayed his master, but it was the devil that first Put it into his heart, Lu. 22, 3.

Here then is a great mystery and deep secret to be considered. We think men to be Actors of all mischief, but indeed it is the devil in them. Ahab's false Prophets bad him go up against Ramoth Gilead and prosper, 1 Kings 22.6, 22. but it was a false and lying spirit in the mouth of all his Prophets that enticed him and them to their destruction. Ananias and Sapphira sold a possession, and kept away part of the price, but it was Satan that had filled their heart, that they should lie unto the holy Ghost, Act. 5, 2, 3. Elymas the sorcerer, withstoode the Ministers of God, and hindered the course of the Gospel, neither embracing the faith him self, nor suffering them that would embrace it, but it was because he was an enemy of all righteousness, and the child of the devil, Act. 13 10. The Sabaeans took away the Oxen, the Chaldeans fell upon the Camels, the fire of God burned up the sheep of Job, his sons & daughters were eating and drinking in their elder brothers house; and loe, a vehement and violent wind smote the four corners thereof, that it fell upon all of them and slew them: but Satan had an Oare in this boat, he was the master workman that gave to everyone his task, Job 1, 12. For whosoever is the instrument, the devil is the principal mover and procurer of all evil and trouble unto the Church of God.

[Use 1] The Uses are these. First, marvel not at all, if the Church lie under many great crosses and afflictions, insomuch y^t the ploughers plough upon their backs, and make long furrows, For they have many and mighty enemies that plot crafty counsels against them, and seek to suck out their heart blood, and to draw out their last breath. Many Controuersies and contentions arise in the world for things of this life, for houses, for lands, for possessions and inheritances, for slanders and trespasses, whereby many actions are brought, and many suites commenced between party & party, from whence much hatred and great hartburning oftentimes ensueth: but there is no hatred like to that which cometh for matters of religion, no bands of affinity or of consanguinity can tie them together, as our Savior teacheth, Matth. 10, 34, 35, 36. I came not to send peace into the earth, but the sword: for I am come to set a man at variance against his Father; and the daughter against the mother, and a man's enemies shall be they of his own household. Ye shall be betrayed also of your parents, and of your brethren, and kinsmen, and friends, and some of you shall they put to death, and ye shall be hated of all men for my names sake. All questions and quarrels among men for temporal and transitory things find easy means of reconcilment, either the Judge doth judge them, or Arbitrators determine them, or friends do end them, or the parties themselves (wearied with costs and charges in suites of Law) do grow to an agreement & composition: but the rage of the ungodly set on fire of hell is vnappeaseable; no bounds of reason, no bands of nature, no chains of Law can tie them or tame them, whence once they have set themselves against the truth of God.

The cause of this hurly burly, and of these persecutions is not properly in Christ, or in y^e Gospel of Christ, For he is the Prince of peace, and his Gospel is the Gospel of peace preached unto them that were a far off, and to them that were near, Ephe. 2, 17. But the true cause of all these dissensions and troubles in the world, is the malice of the devil and the hatred of y^t world against Christ and against his Gospel. Here is the cause of division and disagreement, that the wicked man is abomination to the just, and he that is upright in his way is abomination to the wicked. Here is the right and proper cause of mortal hatred that the wicked beareth and breatheth out against the godly. Hence came the Popish Canon and conclusion, That faith is not to be kept with such as they call and account Heretics. Thus then we see, that the greatest hatred hath risen evermore from difference and diversity in religion. This appeareth in Cain and Abel, in Isaac and Ishmael, in Jacob and Esau, in the Israelites & the Egyptians, in David and Saul, in Christ and the Pharisees, in Paul and the Jews, in the heathen and God's people, in the believers & infidels. There is no fellowship between righteousness and unrighteousness, no communion between light and darkness, no concord between Christ and Belial: and therefore a confused mixture between the religion of Antichrist, & the Gospel of Christ hath an impossibility of any agreement. This is also manifest in all histories of the Church from the beginning. These things being thus considered and thought upon, we cannot think it strange, that the Church lieth under the cross, and groaneth under the heavy burden of it. So soon as H•man was advanced, by & by the Church mourned and sighed. This the wise man teacheth, Prouerb. 28, 28, and 29, 2. When the wicked rise up, men hide themselves: but when they perish, the righteous increase. Let us then acknowledge that the Church is subject to many sorrows and much affliction, as a campe besieged of enemies, as a ship tossed of the winds, as Corn ground in the mill, as a vineyard eaten with beasts, as a building beat upon with storms, and as a flock daily in danger and assaulted with Wolves, whilst the enemies clap their hands, and stamp with their feet, and reioice in heart with all their despite against the Church of God, as the Prophet confessed, Psal. 79, 1, 2, 3, 4. O God, the Heathen are come into thine inheritance, thine holy Temple have they defiled, and made Jerusalem an heap of stones. We are a reproach to our neighbors, even a scorn and derision to them that are round about us. The first use is, that which the Apostle John directly concludeth from this doctrine, having produced the example of Cain, who slew his own brother, gathereth this consideration from thence, Maruell not my Brethren, though this world hate you.

Secondly, we learn from hence a point of [Use 2] wisdom and godly policy, to look to our selves, that we do not rely upon them, lest they beguile us and betray us. There is no truth in them, and therefore no trust is to be given to them. Herod made a show of love & reverence to Christ, he would needs love and worship him, but his meaning was, he would come & kill him. Beware thou be not seduced and entrapped by such secret enemies which pretend piety, but use treachery: see thou do not rely upon them, commit not thyself unto them. They cannot love thee that do not love the Lord, neither can they be faithful to thee, that are unfaithful to God. They will close and gloze with thee, til thou be come within their danger, as Cain spake kindly to Abel til he was in the field, then he rose up and slew him: or as Joab, whose words were smoother then oil, and softer then butter, 2 Sam. 20, 9. Art thou in peace my Brother? But he smote him that he died, shedding the blood of battle in the days of peace. These men have the voice of Jacob, but the rough hands of Esau: they have the words of a brother, but the hearts of an enemy: they salute with a kiss, but persecute with the sword. For deceitful amity is double enmity, and feigned friendship is a double mischief. The Fisher baiteth his hooks when he would catch the fish: the Fowler singeth sweetly, when he would deceive the bird: the Hunter hideth his nets warily & wisely when he mindeth to take his prey. We have oftentimes to do with such cunning Fishers & mighty Hunters. Wherefore there is great cause to look to our selves: for when they cannot prevail with the Lions paw, they put on the Foxes skin, and go to work with craft and wiliness. Yea, the Church of God from time to time, hath sustained greater hurt by their own simplicity, then by the enemies cruelty: and by their own lightness of belief, then by the sharpness of their sword. When they pretend the greatest courtesy, thē they intend the greatest villainy. When they offer treaties of peace, leagues of marriage, and such like confederacies, then the hook is baiting, the snare is laying, the net is spreading before the eyes of all y^t hath wings, that they may effect their treasons and conspiracies. And this is it which one of the heads of their Church once said, If the keys of Peter could not prevail, they would take up and draw out the sword of Paul. Thus like false Prophets, and false brethren, they come in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening Wolves. It remaineth therefore, that we stand upon our guard, and watch over our selves, that we be not intrapped by their subtleties. Upon this ground our Savior warneth us to be wary, Matth. 10, 16. Behold I send you as sheep in the midst of wolves, be therefore wise as Serpents, and innocent as Doves: where we are taught, that we must all be armed with wisdom and simplicity against our enemies. Two needful graces to be sought after, as in all ages; so especially in these dangerous times wherein we live. Let us labor to have true policy, and true simplicity, let both these be found in us, that they may accompany always each other, and never be separated the one from the other. For policy without simplicity is deceiveable craftiness, and simplicity without policy, is deceived sottishness.

[Use 3] Lastly, it is our duty to pray earnestly unto God, not to deliver us into their hands whose rage and malice knoweth no end or measure. Indeed our sins have deserved this scourge, but let us rather desire him to correct us by his own hand, for he is gracious and merciful, He desireth not the death of a sinner, but that he may turn unto him and live. This made the people of God from time to time, rather then they would fall into the hands of cruel enemies, to be willing and ready to receive any punishment at God's hand. This we see, Judge. 10, 15. when the Israelites had forsaken the Lord and his worship, he complaineth against them, saying; Did not I deliver you out of the hands of the Egyptians, Ammorites, &c. yet ye have forsaken me, and served other God's that ye have chosen, let them save you in the time of your tribulation: then they cried in their danger, We have sinned O Lord, do thou unto us whatsoever pleaseth thee, only we pray thee to deliver us this day from the Ammonites. This we see yet more evidently in the example of David. 2 Sam. 24, 13, 14. when in the pride and presumption of his heart he had numbered the people, after God sent him this word, and offered him the choice of famine, or sword, or pestilence, he said: I am in a wonderful straight, let us now fall into the hand of the Lord, for his mercies are great, and let me not fall into the hand of man. Who had not rather receive punishment at his fathers hands, of whose love he is assured, then to be punished with the strokes of an enemy, that loveth him not, but hateth him to the death? Men are proud and cruel, fierce & ambitious: but God is full of compassion, and his mercy endureth forever, he knoweth whereof we were made, he remembereth that we are but dust, he considereth that we are mortal, yea a wind that passeth and cometh not again. He will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able to bear. Hitherto the Lord hath visited us with his merciful and gentle corrections, famines, sicknesses, and strange diseases. Let us behold his gracious dealing toward us, and profit by these fatherly admonitions; for if he should deliver us into the hands of barbarous and beastly enemies, we should soon discern the difference between the loving chasticements of a father, and the bloody strokes of an enemy.

22 Then they departed from Kadesh, and the childrē of Israel, even all the congregation came unto Mount Hor.

23 And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron in Mount Hor, near the border of the land of Edom, saying:

24 Aaron shall be gathered unto his people: for he shall not enter into the Land which I have given unto the children of Israel, because ye rebelled against my commandments at the waters of strife.

25 Take Aaron and Eleazar his son, and charge them to come unto this Mount.

26 And cause Aaron to strip off his garments, and thou shalt put them upon Eleazar his son: then Aaron shall be gathered unto his Fathers, and shall die there.

27 And Moses did as the Lord had commanded: for they went up unto Mount Hor in the sight of all the congregation.

28 And Moses caused Aaron to strip off his garments, and he put them upon Eleazar his son: and Aaron died there in the top of the Mount: So Moses and Eleazar came down from off that Mount.

29 And when all the Congregation saw that Aaron was dead, all the house of Israel wept for Aaron thirty days.

Hitherto of the Ambassage of Moses to the King of Edom: These words contain the third and last part of the Chapter, to wit, the death of Aaron after the people were removed from the borders of the Edomites. For albeit the King did so unkindly deny them any passage, yet Moses and the Israelites do not oppose themselves against them, or attempt to break through by force of Arms, & multitude of men, and dint of sword, but pass by their borders peaceably, and fetch a compass about their land. True it is, those envious Edomites, were worthy to perish, and to be utterly destroyed for their inhumanity; yet because the time was not yet come wherein the Lord had prophesied and promised, that the elder should serve the younger, therefore the Israelites commit vengeance to the Lord to whom it belongeth. Now in these verses, we see how God beginneth to execute the former threatening against Moses and Aaron. For here we are to consider three things. First, the death of Aaron. Secondly, the succession of his son. Thirdly, the mourning of the people. The father dieth, the son succeedeth, the people lamenteth the death of the high Priest. If Aaron had died without any prediction and foretelling of his death, all men might have thought it had fallen out at adventures, and ascribed it wholly to the decaying of strength, & wasting of nature: but being revealed to Aaron himself, and manifested to the whole Congregation, both the time when, and the place where he should die, it appeareth that his days were numbered, and his years limited, which he could not pass.

As then God had determined the death of Aaron, and denounced his shutting out of the land of Canaan so that sentence is here executed upon him, the other concerning Moses, is reserved unto his time appointed of God. In this place God commanded both of them what to do, even to ascend up to the Mountain, and showeth that Aaron shall die there for his disobedience; whose garments must be pulled off, and put upon Eleazar, lest by touching of the dead, the holy garments should be defiled. After this commandment followeth their obedience agreeable to the same, they come up to the Mountain, Aaron is stripped; Eleazar is clothed with them: Aaron without fear of death, or longer desire of life, or prayer for life, departeth in peace, according to the word of God, he is gathered to his Fathers, Moses and Eleazar descend from the Mountain, Moses, Eleazar, and the people, mourn for Aaron thirty days.

[Verse 23, 24. And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron.] We see here according to the former threatening pronounced by the mouth of God, verse 12. that Aaron cometh not into the land of Promise, but dieth in Mount Hor. We learn hereby, that the threatenings of God are accomplished. Howsoever his judgments are many times deferred, and his punishments prolonged because he is patient toward us, and would have no man to perish, but would have all persons come unto repentance: yet in the end all his threatenings shall be verified and fulfilled in their times and seasons. Consider this truth in our first parents, God threatened them that if they did eat the forbidden fruit they should die the death: we see the effect in them, and all their posterity throughout all times and generations. Behold other threatenings of God, we shall always read the execution after the denunciation. So when God by the Ministry of Noah a Preacher of righteousness, had threatened to destroy the whole world, if in an hundred and twenty years they repented not; we see how he brought in the flood upon the world of the ungodly, & swept them away from the face of the earth, which they had corrupted with their cruel and unclean conversation. This we see likewise taught unto us throughout the books of the holy history of Joshua, The man is cursed before the Lord, that ryseth up and buildeth the City Jericho: he shall lay the foundation thereof in his eldest son, and in his youngest son shall he set up the gates of it: meaning thereby, that whosoever should attempt to build this City he should pay for it dearly, because what time he layeth the foundation of the walls his eldest son shall die, and when he setteth up the gates and hath finished it, his youngest son shall die. When this threatening seemed quite forgotten, and consumed with the rust of time, God doeth bring it to pass: as we see in the book of Kings, in Hiel the Betheli•e, according to the word of the Lord which he spake by Joshua, the son of Nun. The like we see in Zachariah, when resting in the power of nature, and the strength of his own body, he believed not the Angel, he was stricken dumb, and could not speak unto the people, Luke 1, 20. A memorable example also we have in the straight siege of Samaria, where a Prince answered the man of God, and said, Though the Lord would make Windowes in the heaven, could it come so to pass? And he said, Behold thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not eat thereof: and so it came unto him for the people trod upon him in the gate, and he died.

The Reasons here of are evident. For first, [Reason] the Nature of GOD is true and unchangeable: Heaven and earth shall pass, but one jot or tittle of his word shall not pass, but shall be fulfilled. This is that which is urged afterward in this book, Chapter 23.19. God is not as man that he should lie, nor as the son of man that he should repent. Hath he said, and shall it not be done? hath he spoken, and shall he not accomplish it? Seeing therefore God is unchangeable, with whom is no variableness, or shadow of turning, he will let none of his words fall to the ground; he is in one mind, and who can turn him? yea, he doth what his mind desireth.

[Reason 2] Again, who can hinder him, or say unto him, Why doest thou thus? No might, no power, no policy can withstand him in his works, albeit men rebel never so much, and resist never so mightily against him. There is great power in Princes, they are able to bring mighty things to pass, and to cross the attempts of others, yet sometimes they are crossed and resisted themselves. It is not so with the Lord our God, Who is in the heavens, and doth whatsoever he will. He hath the hearts of all, even of Princes in his own hand, as the Rivers of waters he turneth them about as pleaseth him. This made the Apostle cry out, O the deepness of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? Or who was his Counselor? Or who hath given him first, and he shall be recompensed? And who hath resisted his will? So then, whether we consider the nature of God without change, or the weakness of man without power, we may safely and truly conclude, that all the threatenings which have been pronounced and denounced by the mouth of God, shall be verified and performed without any altering or diminishing of them.

[Use 1] Let us apply this to our selves, and gather assuredly from hence, the woeful estate of all wicked and ungodly men. For, seeing he doth not dally with us, or scare us without cause, so that all his threatenings faithfully denounced, shall be undoubtedly accomplished: how shall they escape so great condemnation as lieth at the door, and hangeth over their head? Howsoever therefore they put away the evil day far from them, and live as if God sate idle in heaven, beholding all things, but punishing nothing: knowing all hearts and thoughts, but not regarding the works of men: saying, We have made a covenant with death, and with hell we are at agreement: though a scourge run over and pass thorough, it shall not come at us, for we have made falsehood our refuge, and under vanity are we hid: yet he that dwelleth in the heaven shall laugh, the Lord shall have them in derision. For what followeth? Your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when a scourge shall run over and pass through, then shall ye be trodden down by it. This is y^t which the wise man saith, Eccles. 8.11, 12, 13. Because sentence against an evil work is not speedily executed, therefore the heart of the children of men is full, set in them to do evil. Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and God prolongeth his days, yet I know that it shall be well with: them that fear the Lord, but it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days: he shall be like a shadow, because he feareth not before GOD. And to the same purpose the Prophet Ezekiel speaketh, Chap. 12, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. where the Prophet reproveth two sorts of persons, open deriders of God's word, as if it should never be performed: and such as prolong the evil days, as if the plagues were for many years, and should not come in their days. But God expressly and directly meeteth with them both, and bindeth them together in one bundle, declaring and making it plain to their consciences, that when he speaketh the word it shall be done, and when he pronounceth a decree it shall stand. Thus in all ages of the Church, satⁿ prevaieth with the children of disobedience, and draweth more to destruction by presumption, then he is able to do by desperation. Let us not harden our hearts thorough the deceitfulness of sin, Let us seek the Lord while he may be found, and call upon him while he is near.

Secondly, let us ground our faith in the undoubted [Use 2] performance of those judgments y^t are yet to come: as that the Lord Jesus at the appointed time will break the heavens, and will come to judge the quick and the dead, at his appearance and in his Kingdom: that the wicked shall rise again, and stand before the bar of God's throne. These things we see not yet accomplished; for all things continue alike from the beginning of the creation. Hence it is, that Mockers arise which walk after their lusts, and say, Where is the promise of his coming? But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a noise, and the Elements shall melt with heat, and the earth with the works that are therein shall be burnt up. Yea, When they shall say, peace and safety, then shall come upon them sudden destruction, as the travail upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape. Thus the Prophet Malachi prophesieth: Behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an Oven, and all the proud, and all the wicked doers shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, and shall leave them neither root nor branch. Thus then we see a day of judgment is decreed and determined, and remaineth for the appointed time, but at last it shall come, and not lie: though it tarry, wait: for it shall surely come, and not stay.

Thirdly, we must not be dismayed when [Use 3] we see the wicked prosper and flourish, spreading themselves as the green Bay tree: for loe God hath set them in slippery places, and casteth them down in the end unto desolation; they are suddenly destroyed, & horribly consumed, as the chaff which the wind driveth away, and as a dream when one awaketh. This temptation hath overtaken the children of God, and caused them oftentimes to shrink back when they saw the prosperity of the ungodly, and on the other side the troubles of the godly, & hath made them to reason within themselves of the providence of God. But shall not the King rule his own kingdom? or the Master govern his own house as pleaseth him? And shall not we give the Lord leave to dispose of all things in heaven and earth, after the good pleasure of his own will? He fatteth the wicked against the day of slaughter: he leaveth them without excuse, and maketh his blessings as a witness against them. Contrarywise, the children of God, although they suffer afflictions, yet afflictions to them are not evil, but try their faith, as the furnace doth the gold. Let us not deceive our selves in judging and esteeming of good and evil. That is good which maketh us better, that is evil that maketh us worse. The works of the flesh, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, wantonness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, debate, emulations, wrath, contentions, seditions, heresies, envy, murders, drunkenness, covetousness, and such like, are manifestly evil. These God keepeth from his deer children, and his deer children from them, that they reign not in them.

The Israelites in Egypt lived under hard masters, and carried many heavy burdens, and sent up many passionate sighs to God, with deep groans of spirit, whilst Pharaoh and the Egyptians took crafty counsel together, and sported themselves in the miseries & mischiefs which they had brought upon them. But whose condition was the more happy, let the red Sea testify, from which the Israelites were delivered, in which the Egyptiās were drowned. David taken from the sheep-folds, tasted of many sorrows, being in perils among the Amalekites, in perils in the Wilderness, in perils of his own Nation, in perils of his own servants, in perils among false brethren, and was hunted from place to place as a Partridge in the Mountains, whilst Saul sought his life, and enjoyed the pleasures and treasures of a kingdom. But whose estate was the more happy, let the end and issue of them both determine; the one lived in glory, & ended his days in peace, the other sheathed his sword in his own bowels, and so died in despair. The Apostle James willeth us to take the Prophets for an example of suffering adversity, and of long patience, which have spoken in the name of the Lord: Ye have heard of the patience of Job, & have known what end the Lord made, for the Lord is very pitiful and merciful.

Lazarus a poor beggar, destitute of succor and friends, lying at the rich man's gate, having his mind as full of cares as his body was of sores, whilst the rich glutton was clad in purple gorgeously, and fared deliciously every day. But whose condition was the more blessed and happy of them twain, let this tell us and teach us for our instruction, that Lazarus when he died had the holy & elect Angels to attend upon him to carry his soul into Abraham's bosom, that is to say, into the kingdom of heaven: the rich man also died, & his body was buried, his soul was carried & cast into the torments of hell, Where the worm never dieth, and the fire never goeth out: the one unsufferable, the other unquenchable, both infinite. Let us not therefore rest in beholding the present face of outward things, but possess our souls with patience in a sweet meditation of God's providence, considering that it shall in the end be well with all them y^t fear the Lord: and that howsoever the wicked do prosper in the world, & increase in riches, yet if we enter into the Sanctuary of God, we shall see they are set in slippery places, they are lifted up on high, and therefore their fall shall be more fearful, seeing all the threatenings of God must without fail fasten upon them.

Lastly, seeing the menaces and threatenings [Use 4] of God must be performed, this serveth also to assure us that the gracious promises of God made in mercy to his people, shall in truth and righteousness be accomplished. The Lord that is always the same, as he is true in his threatenings to the ungodly, so will he be found true in his promises toward the godly. For, seeing no part of his word shall pass away, & that he will not falsify his truth, nor alter the thing that is gone out of his mouth, one part serveth to confirm another; his threatenings are ratified by the assurance of his promises, and his promises are established to be surer then the heavens by the assurance of his threatenings. So then, let us learn to depend upon God, & to trust in him, knowing, that all his promises are yea and Amen, unto the glory of his name. Let us rest in him for the pardon of our sins, for the hearing of our prayers, for the feeding of our bellies, for the resurrection of our bodies, for the inheritance of everlasting life, having a strong assurance of faith, that the Lord is just and true in all his promises. This is a notable comfort and consolation to all the childrē of God, to cause us to set our hope in him, having a patient and constant expectation of all things that by faith we have believed, saying with the Apostle, 1 Tim. 1, 12. For this cause I also suffer these things, but I am not ashamed: for I know whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him against that day.

[Verse 25, 26. Take Aaron and Eleazar his son, and cause Aaron to strip off his Garments, and thou shalt put them upon his son.] Here is delivered, how Aaron yet living, his son is invested and installed into his Office with the ceremonies and solemnities thereunto appertaining, at the appointment of God, to show the continuance of the Priesthoode, & to take away all occasions of dissensions from the people. Thus we see the good estate of y^e Church is provided for by Moses before Aaron died, and went the way of all flesh. The Doctrine hence is, that the good of the Church must be regarded of us, to leave it in good case after our death and departure. I say, it is a principal duty required of us, when we must leave the world, to provide for the continuance of the Church and truth of God, that it may flourish after us, and not die with us, or be buried in the earth forever. This appeareth by the Apostle Peter, I will endeavor always, that ye also may be able to have remembrance of these things after my departure. 2 Pet. 1, 15. Hereunto accordeth the care of the Apostle Paul writing to Timothy, Watch thou in all things: suffer adversity; do the work of an Evangelist; cause thy Ministry to be thoroughly liked of, for I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departing is at hand, 2 Tim. 4, 5, 6. This we see many ways in Moses, who would not leave the people without a guide, as sheep without a Shepherd, and therefore prayed for a fit Governor, Let the Lord God of the spirits of all flesh appoint a man over the Congregation, who may go in and out before them. And therefore it is said, Deut. 34, 9. that Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom, For Moses had put his hands upon him, and the children of Israel were obedient unto him, and did as the Lord had commanded Moses. Likewise David at the point of death exhorteth the Officers of his kingdom, and Solomon his son which was to sit upon his Throne, to know the God of his fathers, and to serve him with a perfect heart, & with a willing mind, assuring him, that if he seek him, he will be found; and threatening him if he forsake him, y^t God will cast him off forever. [Reason 1] And great reason it is, we should have this care and consideration of the good & beauty of the Church. For the Church is our Mother, who hath conceived and brought us forth to live a spiritual life to God, we have sucked her breasts, and through her we have here begun our heaven & happiness. What unkindness and unthankfulness were this to leave her destitute, who hath travailed in pain of us until Christ be formed in us, and to withdraw all duty and endeavor from her touching her condition to come? Were it not a note of an unnatural, a lewd, a shameful child, to forsake his own mother who bare him in her womb, nourished him with her breasts, dandled him in her lap, refused no base service for his good, cared for him whē he could not care for himself, in whose eyes he was tender and dear; were it not (I say) a note of great infamy to leave her in misery, or as a prey to the enemy? We see the Lord Jesus Christ being on the Cross, provided for his Mother, & committed her to the care of the Disciple whō he loved. In like manner the Apostle requireth this duty, If any faithful man, or faithful womā, have widows, let them minister unto them: And if there be any that provideth not for his own, he denieth the faith, and is worse then an Infidel. Whosoever therefore hath been brought up in the bosom of the Church, begotten by the immortal seed of the word, nourished at the Table of Christ, and taught to look for an eternal inheritance in the heavens, can never assure himself to be the true child of his mother, but rather a base and bastardly brood unless he show it by the continual care he hath of the safeguard and protection of the Church, which is the mother of all the faithful.

Besides, grievous and greedy wolves enter [Reason 2] upon the labors of faithful and painful Pastors, to make haucock of the Church, and to seduce the people of God. For Satan is never idle, though never well occupied, and as a reverent father once said, he is the most diligent Bishop in his Diocese: he never resteth, but always compasseth the earth too and fro, and walketh therein: He hath his instruments which he setteth on work, that poison the church with the leaven of false doctrine, and sow y^e Lord's field with the Darnell of their devilish devices. Therefore the Apostle exhorting the Elders of Ephesus, Acts 20, 28, 29, 30 saith, Take heed to yourselves, and to all the flock, where of the Holy Ghost hath made you Overseers, to feed the Church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood: for I know this, that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Moreover of yourselves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw Disciples after them.

Now it remaineth to see the uses hereof [Use 1] First, we learn from hence, the con•inuance of the Church upon the earth, and the perpetual remaining of it, so long as the earth endureth, and so long as the Sun abideth a faithful witness in the heavens. Though it be sometimes driven from place to place, and abideth not in one stay and state, like y^e Moon that sometimes shineth in the full, sometimes in the wane, and sometimes in the eclipse, as the woman constrained to fly into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there: and as the reign of Ahab, when Elias thought himself left alone, as a Sparrow upon an house top: yet there always hath been a Church from the beginning, and ever shall be a Church to the end, from Adam the first, to the last man that shall stand upon the earth. This the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 72, 5. & 102, 26, 27, 28. Let the enemies fret and storm, let them rage & roar never so much, they labor in the fire, and sweat in vain, they shall perish & fall down; but the Lord that is able of stones to raise up Children unto Abraham, holdeth up y^e heads of his people that they stand as an house built upon the Rock; the rain falleth, the flood cometh, the wind bloweth and beateth upon that house, yet it abideth firmly and falleth not, for it is grounded on the Rock, Math. 7, 24, 25, like the bush that burned with fire, but was not consumed. Exod. 3, •.

Secondly, seeing our care must be, that the [Use 2] truth of God may live when we are dead, and remain after our departure: It is the duty of all the Ministers of God to preach the word of God in season and out of season, 2 Tim. chap. 4, verse 2, 3, to be instant in reproving, rebuking, exhorting, with all longsuffering and doctrine: yea, to do these things with all their power, seeing there is neither work nor wisdom in the grave whither they go. For (alas) how shall they mind the future good of the Church after their death, that mean not the present good of the Church in their life? Wherefore, let us take all occasions & opportunities to promote the Gospel, Let us keep back nothing that is profitable, but reveal to the people the whole counsel of God, knowing that they are redeemed by the blood of Christ, and we are put in trust after a sort with the price thereof. We have a great account to make in that day, in y^e great day of the Lord; let us therefore stir up our selves to feed the flock of God that dependeth upon us. And surely, the cause of the ruin and desolation of many Churches, is the negligence and idleness of the Pastors thereof, For while the Husbandmen sleep, the Enemy soweth tares among the wheat. From hence it cometh, that the people live in ignorance, lie in open sins, and are carried away with every blast of false doctrine, whithersoever false Teachers will carry and conduct them. This the Prophet Isaiah expresseth, Chap. 56, 9, 10, 11, 12. All ye beasts of the field come to devour even all the beasts of the Forest: their watchmen are all blind, they have no knowledge, they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark: they lie and sleep, and delight in sleeping: and these greedy dogs can never have enough, and these shepherds cannot understand, for they all look to their own way, everyone for his advantage, and for his own purpose. Where he teacheth, that the people are ready, and lie open to be seduced by Atheists, by Papists, by Libertines, by Familists, by Anabaptists, by Brownists, where there are blind guides, and idol shepherds, evil beasts, and slow bellies, that feed themselves, but feed not the flock. And he noteth four monstrous vices and capital sins that poisoned the Church. First, albeit they were appointed watchmen, yet they were blind, & their judgment corrupted. They were made Seers, and yet did not see; Lights, and yet were in darkness; Teachers, and yet were unlearned; Instructors of others, and yet wanted knowledge themselves. If then the light be darkness, how great is that darkness? Secondly, they were sluggish and slothful dogs, they cannot for drowsiness and laziness open their eyes to see, or their mouths to bark. And when they are called upon and spoken unto, saying, How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard? When wilt thou arise out of thy sleep? They answer, Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep. Prov. 6, 9, 10. Thirdly, they are greedy of their own gain, covetous, and given to filthy lucre, being carried away by the deceit of Balaam's wages. Lastly, they are given to belly-cheer and all riot, Jude v. 12. They follow their pleasures and pampering of their bellies, making them the god whom they serve, and do not serve the Lord Jesus. The Apostle said, I seek not yours, but you, 2 Cor. 12, 14. but these might say otherwise of themselves, I seek not you, but yours. And are not such Pastors to be found among us, that through covetousness & Epicureanism regard not the duties of their calling? They join living to living, as those that joined house to house: they live at pleasure, they eat, they drink, they feast, they say, Come I will bring wine, and we will fill our selves with strong drink, and tomorrow shall be as this day, & much more abundant. Heereby they are made unfit & unable to do the duties of their Calling: so as like crammed dogs they lie bathing and beaking themselves by the fire: and though never so much harm be done in God's church, they cannot be made to awake and bark in any season to warn the people, and to fray away the Wolf. But if any go about to raise and to rouse them up out of their sleep, they disquiet their consciences too much, and trouble their patience so, that they are ready to gnaw, yea they begin to snap and snatch at him with their teeth. So that the best way is to follow the counsel of our Savior which he gave concerning the Pharisees, Mat. 15, 14. Let them alone, they be the blind leaders of the blind: and if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch. Seeing then, such as teach not the people over whom the holy Ghost hath made the Overseers, can never soundly desire the aftergood of them: it behooveth such to labor with all their strength, to build up the people in knowledge, faith, and obedience, that so God may have a people to serve him after their departure.

Lastly, it standeth everyone upon that hath [Use 3] the government of others, whether it be in the Church or in the Common-wealth, or in the private Family, to look to their charges, that by their godly care and holy endeavor, God may be worshipped & served after their departure. This is to be considered of Magistrates, Ministers, and Governors of houses. The Magistrate ruling in the Commonwealth (whether it be the King as the superior, or whether it be other Governors, as they y^t are sent of him for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well) must provide to the utmost of his power for y^e godly and peaceable estate of the kingdom, or incorporation where he remains, by maintaining the Ministry, by promoting Religion, and by executing Justice. This Moses did (as we saw before Deut. 31, 2, 6, 7, 8) he assembled the people, he signified his departure, he encouraged them against their enemies, & took order for their welfare after his death, by appointing Joshua to succeed him, and to bring the people into the land which the Lord had sworn unto their Fathers. Thus Joshua dealt, walking in the steps of Moses his master, he giveth the people charge to worship the true God, to stick fast unto him with full purpose of heart, to love him, to fear him, to serve him in uprightness and in truth, and to put away the gods which their fathers served beyond the River. Thus did David set his son upon his throne before he died, 1 Kings 2.2, 3. and gave him a great charge to maintain that Religion which he had established. The duty of all Ministers when they are dying and departing this life, is, to provide as carefully as they can, that the good work begun by them, may be furthered by their successors, and that the truth which they have planted may not be supplanted & pulled up by the roots by such as shall enter into their labors. It is not enough for them to labor in their own persons while they live, but to endeavor that others may succeed them in piety as well as in place, & in diligence, as well as in office. Thus dealt Christ our Savior in calling his Apostles: thus dealt the Apostle in ordaining elders in every City, and appointing Pastors and Teachers in several places so soon as they had gained them to the faith. Lastly, it is the duty of all Fathers and masters of families to provide for the souls and salvation of all such as are under their jurisdiction and government; even of such as are the meanest and lowest in the house, to charge them to know the true God, and to serve him in the simplicity and sincerity of their hearts. This we must do in health, this we must do in sickness, this we must do in death: and so we shall glorify God living and dying. Thus did Abraham teach his children and servants, and for this is he commended of God, Gen. 18, 19. I know Abraham my servant, that he will command his sons and his household after him, that they keep the way of the Lord to do righteousness and judgment. Thus said Jacob when he died, Gen. 49, 1, 2. & this must all of us be careful to practice, if we will be the children of faithful Abraham, to speak of the laws of God in our houses, whē we walk by the way, when we lie down and when we rise up.

[Verse 27, 28. And Moses did as the Lord had commanded, he caused Aaron to strippe off his garments, and he put them upon Eleazar his son.] We see the obedience of Moses to the Commandment of God; for Aaron pulled off his Priestly robes, and they are put upon Eleazar, to whom lineally the Priesthood did descend: whereby we see that there was a personal succession belonging to the Priesthood from father to son, & from one man to another. Hereby we learn, that the Priesthood under the law passed from one to another. The Priesthood begun in Aaron, and continued in his line, rested not in one man, but continued by succession from age to age. This we see evidently proved throughout the old testament: for as they were cut off by death, so others arose in their rooms that served at the Altar. As Eleazar succeeded Aaron so did Phinchas succeed Eleazar, & so the Priesthood proceeded from father to son, and from one generation to another, as appeareth in the genealogies of the Priests. This the Apostle to the Hebrews plentifully proveth, Many among them were made Priests, because they were not suffered to endure by reason of death; declaring y^t the Priests after the order of Aaron, succeeded each other, and confirming it by the reason & cause thereof, because the Levitical Priests were taken away by death, and could not endure forever.

This then we must hold to be one reason forcible and powerful, to prove the continued [Reason 1] succession of the Priesthood of Levi from father to son, because they were cut off by death and so not suffered always to execute their Priesthood. Seeing therefore these Priests were mortal, there must be a succession from one to another. This is that reason which was remēbred before out of Heb. 7, 23. showing that they had many Priests, because they were all subject to mortality, and could not continue through necessity of death.

Secondly, the promise of God made unto Aaron and to his posterity must be accomplished [Reason 2] and performed. He consecrated Aaron and his sons, and made a covenant with them, not with Aaron alone, not with his children alone, but with their posterity, he established it as a testimony in Jacob, and as a law in Israel, that their posterity might know it, and the children which should be born of them should stand up and minister before the Lord, in the beautiful garments and glorious robes of the Priests, Exod. 28, 2. Therefore the Lord said by Moses, Exod, 29, 29, 30. Num. 3, 10. & 18, 7. The holy garments which appertain to Aaron, shall be his sons after him, to be anointed therein, and to be consecrate therein. That son that shall be Priest in his stead, shall put them on seven days, when he cometh into the Tabernacle of the Congregation, to minister in the holy place. So God made his covenant of peace with Phinehas the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, & confirmed the Priests office to him & his seed after him; because in the zeal of his Spirit he had turned away the wrath of the Lord from y^e Children of Israel.

This teacheth us first of all the imperfection [Use 1] and insufficiency of it, both of the Priests themselves, and of the Priesthood it self. It pointed out a better Priest, and a better priesthood, and directed them to rest not in it, but in some other. So the Apostle, Heb. 7, 11, 12. declareth, that the Levitical Priesthood was imperfect, because another Priest is promised a long time after, according to the order of Melchizedek: If any perfection had been by the Priesthood of the Levites, what needed it furthermore that another Priest should arise after the order of Melchizedek, and not to be called after the order of Aaron? &c. Where we see, he showeth to what purpose there must be a Priest after another rule and fashion; not after the order of Aaron, even because perfection is not in the Priehhood of the Levites, nor under the Law which was established under it: so that we must acknowledge it hath an end, forasmuch as with the ceremonial law, the ceremonial Priesthood was cancelled and abolished.

[Use 2] Secondly, from hence we learn to acknowledge a difference between the Priesthood of Christ, and the Priesthood of the Levites. This standeth in diverse points and circumstāces, as the same Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, evidently declareth. The Priesthood of Christ is eternal, as the Prophet declared long before, Thou art a Priest forever after the order of Melchizedek: he was made with an oath by him that said unto him, The Lord hath sworn and will not repent. But the Priests of Aaron's order were mortal, not eternal; they were made by the word of God, but without an oath. Besides, our great high Priest Christ Jesus, holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher then the Heavens, hath a Priesthood which cannot pass from one to another: wherefore he is able perfectly to save them that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them who by his own blood entered in once into the holy place, and obtained eternal redemption for us, purging our Conscience from dead works to serve the living God; for it is impossible that the blood of bulls & Goats should take away sins. Thus we see, that the Priesthood of Christ can have no succession, inasmuch as being once performed, it hath no imperfection: and whereas the Jews in the time of the law had Aaron and his posterity, which were but mortal and miserable men, we have Christ the immortal and blessed God, who liveth forever, to be our everlasting Priest.

[Use 3] Lastly we learn, that seeing the Levitical Priesthood passed from one to another, so as by death they were not always suffered to exercise and execute their Priesthood: we see, I say, that the Church of Rome bringing in again such a Priesthood & such Priests as are cut off by death, do renew the Levitical priesthood, and labor to raise it out of the grave, w^c hath long ago been buried with honor. For this is common to them both, to end their days and leave their Priesthood to others: so y^t the Dart which the Apostle casteth against the Levitical Priesthood, pierceth and perisheth the very heart of the Popish priesthood, when he saith and proveth, that there can be no other Priests but Christ under the New Testament, because he continueth forever, considering that the multitude of Priests, and succession of them one after another, ariseth from the imperfection and insufficiency of the Priests, which were continually by death taken away. If then the upstart Priests of the Sinagogue of Rome will be Priests properly, they cannot be Priests after the order of Melchizedek (as they wretchedly and blasphemously claim themselves to be) who was both King and Priest; neither cā they be successors of Christ, forasmuch as he hath none to succeed him. For if y^e Jews might not continue to offer their sacrifices and oblations after the sacrifice of Christ was once offered, because it was perfect and all-sufficient, yea the consummation of all that went before; it followeth, that the Popish sacrifice (being an addition unto that which is perfect) as a rotten and ragged patch to a new garment, cannot stand, but is to be thrown down and abolished like an abominable idol.

[Verse 29. All the house of Israel wept for Aaron thirty days, when the Congregation saw that Aaron was dead.] The last point observed in this chapter, is the affection of the people, after the death of Aaron one of the chief pillars and protectors of the Church, and of true Religion among the Israelites. They mourn for him, not a day, or a week, but a whole month, to declare what a sensible feeling they had of the incomparable loss of the Church. We learn hereby, that when the chief members, stays, props, and pillars of the church be taken away, the rest of the parts are to be hūbled and touched to the quick for the same. True it is, a measure in mourning and lamentation is to be used, that we be not sorry as men without hope: yet by this example we see it is lawful to mourn for the dead, & the greater loss the Church hath received, the greater lamentation and grief ought to be expressed.

This is evident by the practice of God's servants in all ages of the Church, proportioning their sorrow according to the greatness of their loss. We see Ge. 50, 1, 10, 11. when God called Jacob to himself out of this world, a Father of the Church (and a great light that shined not only within the doors of his own family, but in the darkness of Egypt) he was greatly and exceedingly lamented for y^e space of seventy days: so that the Canaanites said, This is a great mourning unto the Egyptians. So when Moses the servant of the Lord died (like unto whom there arose not a Prophet in Israel) unto whom GOD spake not by vision or dream, but face to face as a man talketh with his friend, Deut. 34, 8. the children of Israel mourned for him thirty days, whom he had guided with a fatherly care many years. So when Samuel, another principal pillar of the house of God died, 1 Sam, 25, 1. All Israel assembled, and mourned for him, and buried him in his own house at Ramah. When God took away good King Josiah, like to whom there was no King before him that turned to the Lord with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might, according to all the law of Moses, who bowed neither to the right hand, nor to the left, who remembered his Creator in the days of his youth, and honored God with the first fruits of his life; all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for him, 2 Chron. 35, 23, 24. yea Jeremiah lamented Josiah, and all the singing men and singing women mourned for him in their lamentations, and made the same for an ordinance to Israel & behold they be written in the Lamentations. But touching Jehoiakim y^e son of Iosia, who degenerated from his father, & walked not in his ways, it is said, They shall not lament him; saying; Ah my Brother, or ah my Sister: neither shall they mourn for him, saying, Ah Lord, or ah his glory: he shall be buried as an Ass is buried, even drawn and cast forth without the gates of Jerusalem. The like comparison we see in the New Testament, when as Stephen was stoned, a faithful witness of Christ, a worthy member of the Church, and a constant defender of the faith, certain men carried him to be buried, and made great lamentation for him. But when Ananias and Sapphira filled with Satan, keeping away part of the price of their possession, tempting the Spirit, and lying unto God, fell down and gave up the ghost, young men arose, took them up, and buried them, but no mention of any tears or lamentatiō, much less of any great lamentation made for them. God swept them away as dung from y^e earth for their hypocrisy; but the Church lamented not the death of these wicked persons. So then to omit many other examples that might be alleged, we see, that howsoever men may be mourned for in a natural affection & compassion by their friends and kinsfolks, yet chiefly and principally we are to bewail the loss of the church, whē such are taken away as might do good service to God and his people.

[Reason 1] This truth appeareth by good force of reason. First, the Ministers are as the Chariots & horsemen of Israel in their Ministry, that is, the strength and defense of the Church and Commonwealth. Therefore Elisha seeing Elijah taken up by a whirlwind into heaven, cried out, My father, my father, the Chariot of Israel, & the horsemen thereof. And as Elisha said of Elijah, so did Joash the King of Israel of Elisha. For being sick of his sickness whereof he died, the King came down unto him, and wept upon his face, and said, O my father, my father, the Chariot of Israel, and the horsemen of the same. Thus spake the King himself to the Prophet, and these honorable Titles he gave unto him. And no marvel. For they fight and bend their forces against swearing, blasphemy, contempt of God's word, profaning of his Sabbaths, whoredom, drunkenness, idleness, covetousness, and such like, as lay us open to the wrath of God. These and such like sins are they that weaken the land, and lay it naked to the invasion of enemies, as appeareth, Exo. 32, 25. Moses saw that by their idolatry the people were naked, for Aaron had made them naked unto shame among their enemies. We do oftentimes fear enemies, and invasion by enemies: but we fear not that which bringeth in the enemies, and openeth them a free passage to spoil and destroy without compassion, to wit, sin. So long as we walk with our God, and are reconciled unto him, we are under God's protection, and he is a Buckler round about us, we are in league with the stones of the street, and the beasts of the field. For if God be on our side, who shall be against us? Rom. 8, 31. If then the Ministry of the word be as a brazen wall, and the Ministers thereof stand in the breach between the living & the dead to turn away the wrath of GOD, when his judgments run through the Land, there is great cause to be humbled, when God pulleth from the Church and Commonwealth, so great posts and pillars that help to hold them up.

Again, it is a sign of God's wrath & heavy [Reason 2] displeasure, and a fore-runner of a farther judgment. When God took away the good and godly King Josiah, a nursing father of the Church, that reformed religion in his young and tender years, sought unto the Lord, hūmbled himself before him, and wept when he heard the threatenings denounced against the land: he spared not Jerusalem and the inhabitants thereof long after. If there be a good Pastor in the church, if a good Prince in the land, if a good Magistrate in town or city, if a good Master in a family, and God take him away, there is cause to lift up our voice by mourning, weeping, and great lamentation: this being a token of God's displeasure, & a sign of taking his former mercies from us: so that the seeing and feeling of God's wrath in bereaving us of such as might do good along time publicly or privately, ought to be no small grief to us. The prophet teacheth, that when God hath any vengeance ready to be poured upon a people, he taketh away the righteous from the plague, as he did Lot out of Sodom, saying; The righteous perisheth, and no man considereth it in heart: and merciful men are taken away from the evil to come. Therefore when God taketh excellent and principal members from the rest of y^e body, it is as a threatening always to those that are left behind, and an evident testimony to them, that they are unworthy of their company and presence, as the Apostle declareth, That the world was not worthy of those faithful men that shined as lights in the midst of a froward & crooked generation. So then, it is a right mourning and well ordered grief, when we lament the taking away of good men, endued with the graces of the Spirit, which have lived in the fear of God, and done notable service in the Church or Commonwealth.

Let us apply this point to our instruction & [Use 1] edification. First, it serveth to condemn the Stoicall senselessness and blockishness of such as take it to be a part of manhood & courage, to be affected with nothing, to be grieved at nothing. It is lawful to mourn for the dead: so did Abraham the Father of the faithful for Sara: nay, so did Christ the head of the church in whom was no sin, neither guile found in his mouth, mourn for Lazarus. These lamented the dead, but not the state of the dead, which they knew to be most comfortable to all the faithful, as the Apostle teacheth, Reu. 14.13. Blessed are they that dy in the Lord, for they rest from their labors and their works follow them. In regard whereof, Paul warneth the Thessalonians concerning them that are asleep, that they sorrow not even as they which have no hope. True it is, we cannot so renounce or reform our affections, but that there will be always somewhat worthy of blame and fault in us, in our mirth and mourning, in our love and hatred, in our hope and fear, in our anger, and such like passions: and we find it the hardest thing in the world to keep the mean between excess and defect, between too much & too little: yet it is absurd to dream of such a kind of dullness and stupidity as over-turneth human nature, and cannot be found in flesh and blood, yea standeth not with the condition of mankind, as he was created, or as he became corrupted. For so long as man remaineth in this life, he cannot be void of affections and perturbations, or be senseless like stocks or stones: albeit wise men are to moderate their passions, that Reason remain mistress of the soul, as it were the governor of the house.

Wherefore, we must know that Christian Religion doth not abolish natural affections, or pull them up by the roots, but only doeth moderate them and keep them, that they over flow not the banks, and doth bring them in subjection unto the will of God. So the Apostle (as we heard before) did not forbid the Church to sorrow for the dead, but putteth as it were a bridle into their hands, & only restraineth immoderate sorrow. Again, he doth not absolutely condemn and reprove all anger and indignation conceived in the heart, but represseth the excess & abundance thereof, as a wise Physician that seeketh to purge the over-flowing of choller. And in another place, he doth not condemn weeping in adversity, or rejoicing in prosperity, but he requireth that they which weep, be as though they wept not, and they that rejoice as though they rejoiced not: and they that use this world, as though they used it not. Furthermore, Christ our Savior doeth not forbid the loving of Father and Mother, of wife and children, of brethren and sisters, as that which standeth with the law of God and man; but only ordereth it aright, & bringeth it into his compass, saying, He that loveth father or mother more then me, is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more then me, is not worthy of me. Thus then we are taught to use temperance and moderation in all the affairs of our life, in speaking or holding our peace; in joy or in sorrow, that we give not scope to our vnbrideled affections, but always order and dispose them as there is just cause.

[Use 2] Secondly, it condemneth such as are bereft of all sense and feeling of such grievous judgments of God. Alas, how can such assure themselves to be true members of Christ's body? For tell me, Can a man lose a principal part of his body, as his eye, his hand, his foot, and not be grieved? Or can a man be deprived of thē, and make a sport of it as at a play or pastime? Even so, such as in the suffering of y^e members of y^e Church do rejoyce, or in the public joy of the Church do mourn, cannot in truth persuade their own hearts that they have any part or portion in the body of Christ. Wherefore, whensoever God taketh away any principal stay of Church or Common-wealth, we have cause of mourning, and humbling our selves under God's judgment. When the husbandman layeth his Axe to the root of y^e tree, or vndermineth the ground about it, we cannot doubt but he meaneth the felling and falling of it. Or when we see a Gardener take away the hedge or wall of his garden, pluck up by the roots the chieftest & choicest plants disfigure the ornaments and beauty of it, and lay it open for the beasts to enter, we may gather he mindeth not to continue, but deface the Garden. Or, when a Carpenter pulleth down the master-pieces and posts that doth hold up the whole frame, and layeth the foundation even with the ground, we may conjecture by these means, that he meaneth to remove the building to another place. So when we see the evident footsteps of God's wrath, and begin to discern the fire of his jealousy breaking out by the smoke beginning to appear, in taking away serviceable men as plāts of his own garden, as pillars of his own house, and as branches of the Tree which his right hand hath planted, we must lay it to our hearts as tokens going before destruction. This our Savior handleth, Matth. 42, 32, 33. speaking of the signs going before his glorious appearance at the end of the world, Learn the Parable of the Fig tree, when her bough is yet tender, and it putteth forth leaves, ye know that Summer is near: so likewise ye, when ye see all these things, know that the kingdom of God is nere, even at the door. And now (beloved) behold and consider, lift up your eyes, and look how God hath dealt with us: and mark whether his dealings toward us be not tokens of his anger and fore-runners of his judgments. Hath he not taken from us a most worthy Prince, our late Sovereign, who by the course of nature might have lived longer? Of whom we may truly say as David did, 2 Sam. 1, 24. Ye daughters of Israel weep for Queen Elizabeth, who clothed you with Scarlet and pleasures, and hanged Ornaments of Gold upon your apparel. Or else as Solomon doth speaking of a good woman, Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou surmountest them all. She opened the house of the Lord in the first year of her reign, as good K. Hezekiah did: she called back the reverent Ministers fled out of the land as Elijah into the wilderness, through the tyranny of Jezebel: she brought in the pure worship of God, cast out the Romish abominations, set forth the service of God in a known tongue, repealed the bloody acts of the persecutors: and therefore she thus honoring God, and advancing his Gospel, he likewise exalted her Throne on high, as the Throne of Solomon, 2. Samuel, 2, ver. 30. so that she shined in her time in the world, as if all the firmament thereof had been but one star, and as if in all the cope & compass of heauē, there had shined none but she. This star is now set and gone down, which should go near unto us, and pierce us to the quick, and make us (seeing a great Prince is fallen in Israel) never to forget y^e great works which the Lord did among us by her happy hand. Besides, hath not the Lord taken from us many lights out of the Vniuersity, whence flowed many comfortable streams that watered the Garden of God? many out of Cities and particular Churches, whereby the Church hath received a deep and dangerous wound, and yet we seem to have feared consciences and to be past feeling? When the vital parts begin to fail or to languish, the life of the body is in hazard. While the disease or distemperature is in the outward parts far from the head or the heart, there is hope of health and recovery; but when the lively parts begin to waste and consume by little and little, it is a sign of the decay of life, and of the approach of death. Howsoever therefore, the greatest part never lay these things to their hearts, nor interpret them as present tokens of imminent danger and judgment, yet we that have learned better things, ought to consider, that as they are taken away from the evil to come, & rest quietly in the grave (as in a bed,) even so they have left us behind for the evil to come.

[Use 3] Lastly, it is our duty to pray to God to stay his hand, to show mercy to his Church, and to pour out the full Vial of his vengeance upon his enemies that know him not, and upon the Nations that call not upon his Name. This the Prophet practiseth, Psalm. 74, 2, 19, 20, 21, 22. Think upon thy Congregation which thou hast possessed of old, and on thine inheritance which thou hast redeemed, and on this Mount Zion wherein thou hast dwelled. We see how he putteth God in mind of his Covenant, and entreateth him to strike through the loins of his enemies to their destruction; to maintain his own cause, and to spare his people, the sheep of his own Pasture, the dwelling place of his own Name, and the Congregation of his poor afflicted ones. So when in like manner we behold the hand of God upon his own Sanctuary, & to begin judgment at his own house; let us call upon him to consider whereof we are made, and to remember that we are but dust. This did the Prophet Habakkuk, when God threatened to enter into judgment with his church, O Lord, I have heard thy voice, and was afraid: O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of thy people: in wrath remember mercy. Hab. 3, 2. Where he teacheth, that whensoever we hear of the threatenings and judgments of God, we must pray him to repair and restore the state of the Church, which is ready to perish, who is able to heal the wound that his own right hand hath made. True it is, the great sins of this Land do cry out against us, & may justly provoke him to make havoc of all: yet let us call for mercy at his hands, and stay the course of our sins, that so he may stay the stroke of his judgments.

CHAP. XXI.

IN this Chapter we are to observe four principal pointes. First, the battle fought between Arad King of the Canaanites, & the Israelites. Secondly, another murmuring of the people (the last recorded in this Book) which God punisheth with fiery serpents, & cureth them with a brazen serpent. Thirdly, their happy proceeding in their journey toward the Land of promise, where God gave them water, and brought them to the borders of the Amorites. Lastly, the victories which Israel obtained on Sihon, King of the Amorites, and Og the King of Bashan. Now let us come to the first point, which is the encounter with the Canaanites, in these words.

1 And Harad a Canaanitish King dwelling toward the South, heard tell that Israel was come by the way of the Spies; then fought he against Israel, and took of them a multitude of prisoners.

2 So Israel vowed a vow unto the Lord, and said; If thou wilt surely deliver this people into mine hand then will I utterly destroy their Cities.

3 And the Lord heard the voice of Israel, & delivered them the Canaanites; and they utterly destroyed them & their Cities, and called the name of that place Hormah.

What Canaanitish King this was, whereof Moses maketh mention in this place, is uncertain. Some think it to be the king of the Amalekites, which Moses pointeth out; but this carrieth no show or semblance of truth. For first, the Amalekites long since endeavored to stop the passage and proceeding of the children of Israel, and were destroyed with a great destruction; and therefore it is not likely, that now they would come out again to make a new on-set, especially seeing the Israelites invaded not their Land. Besides, the Amalekites cannot be accounted in the number of the Canaanites, inasmuch as they descended not of Canaan, but of Esau, and so were alied to the Israelites, being of the race of Shem. Rather we are here to understand some King of the Amorites, who because they came of one common stock, as Moses teacheth, Gen. 10, 15, 16, are comprehended under the Canaanites. But to come to the matter it self, here we see how the Israelites encounter with Harad, occasion of the battle being offered by himself. For when by his espials and scouts sent abroad, he had intelligence that Israel approached, he levied an host, armed them, and issued forth against them of his own accord, not challenged, not provoked, not injured by the Israelites, but himself challenging and provoking, rusheth forward to the destruction of his person, and the confusion of his army. The success of this encounter was double. First, the Canaanites had the upper hand, slew some of the Israelites, and took many prisoners, & led them away captives, so that they turned their backs and were not able to stand before their enemies. The people of God having had this loss, & taken the foil, do not fret against God, nor despair of his help, but after this fresh disaster & discomfit, they reconcile themselves to God, they fly to him by prayer, they humble themselves as Joshua did, when the mē of Ai put them to flight, saying, O Lord, what shall we say when Israel turn their backs before their enemies. They vow unto God to turn nothing of this Kings Country to their own use and profit, but consecrate and sanctify all to God, destroying their enemies, and razing their Cities, if he would grant them victory, and deliver the Canaanites into their hands, in whom now was equal their proud insolency, and good success, through the former battle. No doubt the Israelites had sinned before against God, and not repented of their sin, they provoked him by their security, glorying in their strength, trusting in their multitude, and puffed up with the victories w^c God had given them, who had fought their battles gone in and out with their armies, and covered their heads in the day of slaughter: thus lying in their sins, nothing can prosper, God curseth the works of their hands, and letteth them see their own weakness, and that they should not be able to prevail against any of their enemies, unless God did fight for them, according to that in the 127. Psal. v. 1, 2. Except the Lord keep the City, the keeper watcheth in vain: it is in vain for you to rise early, and to sit down late, and eat the bread of sorrow; but he will surely give rest to his beloved. So long as they trusted in their own strength and number, & looked not for victory as a blessing from God, they could not stand: but when they had repented and craved protection from him that is the strength of Israel, they join again their power, unite their forces, order their battails, resist their enemies, prevail and put them all to flight. For if God be with us, who shall be against us? But if he be against us, who shall be with us, or who shall plead for us? It is not the wisdom of the Leaders, nor the virtue of the soldiers, nor the counsel of the wise, nor the planting of munition, can any whit prevail, until we be reconciled unto God, and God unto us.

Lastly, the Israelites being masters of the field, having the Cities and persons standing at their mercy, they perform the solemn promise and vow made to the God of heaven, not to halves, or in part, as Saul did, who spared the better sheep and the fat beasts: but they utterly destroyed their enemies, & their cities, & in memorial of the great goodness of God, hearing them in their prayers, and respecting them in their miseries, they call the name of y place, Hormah, that is, destruction and confusion. This is the principal drift of this division. Now let us consider the doctrines that directly arise from this place, that our faith may be strengthened, & our obedience increased.

[And Harad a Canaanitish King, &c.] We see here how the Canaanites appointed to destruction, and to be rooted out, enemies to the people of God, such as had now filled up the measure of their sins, yet here prevail against Israel, kill some of them, and take others prisoners. This teacheth us this Doctrine, that oftentimes [Doctrine] the enemies of the Church prevail over them: I say, the enemies of God and of his people, who in the secret counsel and purpose of God, are vowed to destruction, do insult and triumph over the Church and particular parts thereof, God correcting the rebellion of his children by them. This truth God sealed up in the beginning by the blood of Abel, Cain spake friendly, But rose up desperately against him, and slew his brother, because his own works were evil, & his brothers good. So just Lot vexed with the unclean conversation of the wicked (for he being righteous, and dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day today with their unlawful deeds,) was notwithstanding carried away captive by a proud and insolent enemy. Besides, the book of Judges serveth us as a plentiful storehouse to teach this truth, where we see, that whē the people of God did wickedly in the sight of y^e Lord, served Baalim, and forsook the Lord God of their fathers which brought them out of the Land of Egypt: the wrath of the Lord waxed hot against them, he delivered them into the hands of spoilers, he sold them into the hands of their enemies round about them, yea whithersoever they went out, the hand of the Lord was sore against them. So that the people of God are oftentimes driven to the wall, and constrained to yield unto the violence of bloody and cruel enemies.

Neither can we marvel at the Lord's doing, [Reason 1] if we consider; First, that his own people sin against him, and therefore God is even compelled to correct and chasten them, howbeit in mercy, not in his fury; for their instruction, not for their destruction. This the Prophet teacheth, Lam. 1, 3, 4, 5. Josh. 7, 1, 4. What father doth not correct when he seeth his children run astray, though he love them dearly? So God chasteneth his dearest Saints and servants because they should not be condemned with the world. It is the sin of the godly that causeth him to lay sundry troubles and his heavy hand upon them, causing him to correct severely, evē those that he loveth most dearly, as he did David and diverse other of his people, that we should repent thereof, that God may cease smiting of us.

[Reason 2] Secondly, he maketh the adversaries prevail over his children, that they may learn to rest in God alone, to put their trust & affiance in him, and not to rely upon vain man, who is lighter then vanity it self. We are ready to rest upon our selves, & upon an arm of flesh, rather then upon the living God, as David in his prosperity said, I shall never be moved. Some trust in Horses, and some in Chariots, which are deceitful helps, & some in Princes, whose breath is in their nostrils: it is expedient therefore, that God should leave us for a time in the hands of our enemies, that we may learn our own weakness, and acknowledge his goodness. Thus he dealt with Manasseh, when he gave himself to sorcery, fell into idolatry, & shed much innocent blood with all cruelty, when he did evil in the sight of the Lord, and caused Judah to err, and to do worse then the heathen: He was led away prisoner into Babylon, being put in fetters, and bound in chains. But when he was in tribulatiō, he prayed to the Lord his God, and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers. He learned that in Babylon, which he could never learn at Jerusalem: profited more lying in prison, thē he did sitting on his throne and he got more true godliness in his heart, in the days of his captivity, then ever he gained in the time of his prosperity.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, to harden the hearts of the enemies, that they may run forward to their own confusion. For a little prosperity puffeth them up, thereby they sorget God, they grow in malice and madness, and tip their tongues with the venom of their hearts. Sometimes they are lifted up on high, that God may give them the greater down-fall. So he dealt with the men of Ai, Josh. 8, 6: after they had smitten many of the Israelites with the sword, they rushed headlong out of the City, to their own ruin and destruction. So he dealt with the wicked Benjamites, triumphing in their victories glorying in their own strength, and saying one to another, Surely they are smitten down before us as in the first battle, but the judgment fell upon their own heads, Judge. 20, 39.

[Use 1] The uses remain. First, we learn hereby not to measure the Church or the truth of religion by outward prosperity or peace, which is a deceitful measure and a false rule, seeing God often humbleth his servants under his & their enemies. True it is, God sometimes giveth unto his Church a flourishing estate in wealth and peace, in glory and visible beauty, to give thereby even a taste of all kind of earthly blessings, and that they might have opportunity to serve him, & every kind of comfort and encouragement in well doing: yet he oftentimes altereth the outward estate of the Church in this world, and changeth the condition of his servants from one extreme to another. Let us not therefore measure the favor and love of God towards our selves or others by the blessings or adversities of this life. Here the wicked many times flourish and flow in peace, when the godly live in great grief and misery; and on the other side, the godly sometimes prosper & have rest, and a time of breathing and refreshing granted unto them, whē the wicked are in great distress. This is it which the wiseman teacheth, Eccl. 9, 1, 2. All things come alike to all, and the same condition is to the just and to the wicked, so that no man knoweth either love or hatred of all that is before them. No man can esteem by any outward estate, whether he be loved or hated of God, for neither do the righteous always prosper, neither are the wicked always crossed and afflicted; but the wicked flourish more commonly and more gloriously than the just, and the hand of God lieth heavier and sorer upon the godly, than upon the ungodly: both sorts are subject to death, both are laid in the grave, without any show or appearance of difference between the one & the other. The love of God toward the believers is not discerned by the eye, but apprehended and embraced by faith.

Secondly, we must learn not to publish & [Use 2] spread abroad the miseries and calamities of the Church, that the enemies may not rejoice in the days of her tribulation. We ought not to blaze & brute abroad the private infirmities of private persons, lest we kindle coals of hatred and contention & take away the good name of our brother: much more are we forbidden to divulge the miseries and afflictions of the Church, to give occasion to the enemy to rejoice and solace himself in the sorrows of the Saints of God. We know the rage of enemies, nothing is more joyful to them than to hear of the distresses and desolations thereof. Therefore David after the slaughter of Saul and Jonathan by the sword of the enemy, provoketh to this duty, 2 Sam. 1, 19, 20. O noble Israel, he is slain upon thine high places: how are the mighty over thrown! Tell it not in Gath, nor publish it in the streets of Askelon, lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph. Where he forbiddeth to tell and declare to the profane enemies the fall and overthrow of the King, his sons and host of Israel, lest the Philistines should insult upon them, and scoff at them, and consequently blaspheme the God whom they served and worshipped. The like charge the Prophet Micah giveth, speaking of the afflictions that should befall Israel and Judah, Their plagues are grievous, for it is come into Judah: Judah: the enemy is come unto the gate of my people, unto Jerusalem: Declare it not at Gath, neither weep ye: in the house of Hophrah roll thyself in the dust. Mich. 1, 9, 10. He enjoineth the silence, lest the same thereof spread it self to their enemies to increase their reproach, and to multiply their sorrow. For what doth more vex us & double our misery, then to see men so far from pitying us, that they triumph over us and laugh at us? This condemneth many that live among us in these days of dissention, that tender not the peace of the Church, which ought to be as dear unto us as our own lives, but publish the shame & reproach one of another, as with the blast of a Trumpet, albeit our enemies and the enemies of our religion live among us. Abraham took up the controversy between him and Lot, saying, Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, neither between my heard-men & thy heardmen, because the Canaanites dwelled at that time in the Land. If we did aright consider this point that our enemies are among us, y^t are as whips on our sides, and thorns in our eyes, that seek the subversion of the Common-wealth, not the conversion of the Church: there would not be so many bad & bitter invectives written as it were with gall and wormwood, setting on fire the hearts of one against another, as if we were enemies, not friends; strangers, not brethren; infidels, not believers. These contentions are a stumbling block unto the weak, an hardening and heartening of the adversary, and an utter estranging of us one from another. Let us therefore follow those things that belong to peace, and unite our forces together as one man, that we may seek y^e building up of the Church among us, and double our strokes upon the back of the enemy.

[Use 3] Thirdly, let us use patience under the cross, lying as under God's hand, and in the midst of all our afflictions say with the Prophet, I was dumb and opened not my mouth, because thou didst it. Psal. 39, 9. This we read to have been worthily practiced of Job, when the cup of affliction began to overflow, chap. 2, 10. Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and not receive evil? In all this did not Job sin with his lips. This also we find expressly required, Heb. 10, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36. Where we see in the example of these afflicted Hebrews, that when our enemies insult over the Church, we must not murmur & tepine, but be still and silent under the cross, and according to the counsel and commandment of Christ, Luke 21, 19, By patience possess our souls: and without this, we shall never have comfort and contentment in such afflictions as we are called to endure.

[Use 4] Lastly, seeing God at sundry times and in diverse manners giveth those that are his, into the hands of their enemies; surely in the ende he will not spare the wicked, he deferreth his punishments, but he striketh at the last. As he is longer in drawing his Bowe, and making ready his Quiuer, so his Arrows when they come, pierce the deeper, and wound the sorer. The higher his hand is lifted up before it falleth, the greater the blow is when it lighteth. He hath a leaden foot and hasteth slowly, but howsoever he tarry till the appointed time, yet surely he will come and will not stay, but recompense the slowness of his coming, with the greuousnesse of his punishing, When he will crush them with a Scepter of iron, and break them in pieces like a potters vessel. This Moses teacheth in his song concerning God's benefits toward his people, and their unthankfulness toward him; If I whet my glittering sword, and my hand take hold on judgment, I will execute vengeance toward mine enemies, and will reward them that hate me, and I will make mine arrows drunk with blood. Deut. 32, 41, 42. Let them not therefore triumph over the Church & people of God: and let us wait a while, and see the end of all her enemies, how God hath set them in a slippery place. We see in this History, that albeit these Canaanites were as the rod of God to chastise his servants for their security, yet God in the end threw them in the fire, and gave them as a prey to his people, as appeareth afterward. The like the Prophet David declareth, Psal. 137, 3, 7, 8, 9, that howsoever the Edomites and Babylonians flouted at the Church in affliction, and they that led thē captives required of them in mockage, songs and mirth, saying, Sing us one of the songs of Zion: yet they escaped not the just hand of a revenging God, according to the prayer of his people, Remember the childrē of Edom, O Lord, in the day of Jerusalem, which said, raze it, raze it to the foundation thereof: O daughter of Babel worthy to be destroyed, blessed shall he be that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us: blessed shall he be that taketh and dasheth thy children against the stones. And the Prophet David being greuoufly persecuted under Saul, and hunted frō place to place as a Partridge in the Mountains, assureth himself that flying to God in his afflictions, and possessing his soul by patience, he shall in the end behold God taking such vengeance on all his enemies, & rewarding them seven fold into their bosom, that he shall in pity and compassion pray unto God for them in their miseries. True it is, he doth not always recompense them presently, so soon as they have sinned, because he is the God of patience, waiting for their repentance, bearing with the vessels of wrath, and making them without excuse; yet at the length he will reprove them, and set their sins in order before them, Psal. 50, 21.

[Verse 2. So Israel vowed a vow.] Before the Israelites trusted in themselves; now being overthrown by the enemies, they turn to God, and learn obedience by the things which they suffered. So then the present overthrow given unto them, maketh them consider their own weakness, and driveth them to God in their distress.

The doctrine frō hence is this, that affliction is profitable to the Church, it bringeth & driveth us unto God. The Church of God in general, and the servants of God in particular, which cannot profitably use prosperity, and bear themselves thankfully in the days of peace, do learn in adversity to turn to God, and are thereby brought unto him. Hereunto cometh the example of the Israelites, Judge. 3, 8, 9, 10. When the wrath of God was kindled against Israel doing wickedly, forgetting God and serving their idols that turned to their ruin, then they cried unto the Lord, and he stirred up a Savior unto them. Hereunto also cometh the threatenings of Moses, Deut. 4, 27, 28, 29, 30. 2 Chron. 15, 3. To this purpose the prophet speaketh, Psal. 107, 6, 13, 19, 28. Whē they wandered in the Desert, and found no City to dwell in; when they were bound in misery and iron, because they rebelled against the words of the Lord; when they travel by sea and occupy by the great waters, that the winds and storms toss them up and down, so that all their cunning is gone: Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, and he delivereth thē out of their distress. So immediately before their captivity, they mocked the messengers of God, despised his words, misused his Prophets, which spake unto them, rising early and late; and abused their peace when they dwelled in their Cities and abode in their houses: but in the days of their affliction, when the enemies insulted upon them, their hearts were smitten, they could not sing the songs of the Lord in a strange land, then they remembered Jerusalem and the Temple, the sacrifices and service of God in the Temple, w^c they had frequented and too much prophaned, verifying that sentence in the Proverbs, chap. 27, 7. The person that is full, despiseth an Honey-comb; but unto the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet. This the Prophet Isaiah setteth down in the song of the faithful, chap. 26, 16. Lord, in trouble have they visited thee, they poured out a prayer whē thy chastening was upon them. Now let us come to the reasons.

[Reason 1] For, from whence come they? or who is the author of them? Are they not from GOD? There is no evil in the city, which the Lord hath not done, Amos 3, 6. He hath his quiver full of arrows. Hath he not the sword to strike us? Hath he not the pestilence to consume us? Hath he not the famine to pinch us and pine us away? Hath he not all creatures in his own hand to send out against us? If then afflictions be the work of his hand, there is great reason and cause the church should turn to him that sendeth them, that by returning to him, the judgment may be removed & put away. This the Prophet teacheth, Lam. 3, 37, 38, 39, 40. Who is it then that saith, and it cometh to pass, and the Lord commandeth it not? Out of the mouth of the most High proceedeth not evil and good? Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord: let us lift up our hearts and our hands to God in the heavens, saying; we have sinned and rebelled, therefore thou hast not spared. Seeing therefore, afflictions are from God, not from men; from heaven, not from the earth; they must needs be of necessary and profitable use to the children of God, to whose good all things tend and fall out.

Again, none else in heaven or earth can [Reason 2] help us. To whom then should we turn but to the Lord? Can any other relieve us, or deliver us? Is there any help on the right hand or on the left hand? Can any take away that which GOD hath laid upon, the children of men? He is God, and there is none beside him: he killeth and giveth life, neither is there any that can deliver out of his hand. This is that which the Prophet urgeth Psal. 142, 4, 5. I looked upon my right hand, and beheld, but there was none that would know me: all refuge failed me, and none cared for my soul: then I cried unto the Lord, &c. If then God be the author of afflictions, and if none can take from us the smallest cross and the least touch of his little finger that lieth upon us, there is great cause that in all our troubles we should fly unto God, and draw near unto him.

Now let us consider the uses of this Doctrine. [Use 1] First, seeing the Church is brought to the Lord by afflictions, observe herein the mighty power of God, that hath many ways and sundry means to turn the hearts of men, to humble them, and bring them home unto himself; to call them and cast them down at his footstool. Indeed among all means that God hath sanctified to further our salvation, the chiefest is his messenger, one of a thousand to speak to them out of his word, & to preach unto them his truth, which is the power of God to salvation to all that believe. But he hath also many other ways that he useth when it pleaseth him, as he saith by y^e Prophet Isaiah, chap. 5, 4. What could I have done anymore to my Vineyard that I have not done unto it? He hedged it, he gathered out the stones of it, he planted it with the best Plants, he built a Tower in the midst thereof, and made a wine-press therein. He beseecheth us by his sweet mercies, and when no fair means will serve, yet affliction is often made powerful to turn our hearts, & to prepare the way for repentance, as the needle doth for the thread. This use is made in Job 33, 16, 17, 23. God speaketh once or twice in dreams and visions, by his Messenger and Interpreter, even by their corrections which he hath sealed, that he might cause man to turn away from his enterprise, and that he might hide the pride of man. Let us therefore hereby all of us learn to acknowledge the greatness, both of the mercy and power of God in working out our salvation effectually by so many means, who being infinitely good, is able to bring good out of evil, as he did light of darkness.

Secondly, we see that albeit afflictions be [Use 2] grievous and bitter, yet they are not unprofitable to those whom God hath chosen to better graces. Albeit tribulation and anguish, peril and the sword, nakedness and famine fall upon us, And though we be slain all day long, and counted as sheep to the slaughter, yet in all these we are more then Conquerors; there is a sweet issue and a comfortable end of them, that thereby we are made better. This appeareth by the confession and experience of the Prophet David, Psal. 119, 67, 71, & 94, 12, 13. Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now I keep thy word. And again, It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I may learn thy Statutes. And in another place, Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest him in thy Law: that thou mayest give him rest from the days of evil, whiles the pit is digged for the wicked. True it is, we ought to make use of the mercies and patience of God, to be led forward unto repentance, that so where grace aboundeth, our obedience may abound also. But because we make his blessings and benefits an occasion of evil, and turn the grace of God into wantonness, I am persuaded it were a great deal better for many of us in respect of our souls and salvation, that we were in affliction and in persecution, that the enemies were at our backs, and their swords at our throats, that the pestilence did walk among us, that the sickness destroyed us at noon-day, that a thousand did fall at our right hand, & ten thousand at our left hand, that we heard the sound of the Trumpet, the roaring of the Canon, the clattering of Armor, & crying in our streets: for then it were to be hoped, we would turn unto God in our misery, repent us of our iniquity, and fly unto God in our adversity. We see by woeful experience, that peace & prosperity have lulled many of us asleep in a bed of ease, & have done the Church more harm, then cruel war, and bloody persecution. True it is, the blessings of God are not hurtful of themselves, but our corruption turneth that into a curse which God bestoweth as a blessing, So that he which should have been upright, is laden with fatness, and spurneth with his heel. Therefore God is constrained to punish us, to take his benefits from us, and to bring us into order and obedience by the want of them.

[Use 3] Lastly, seeing afflictions and chastisements draw us to God, as loss of the battle did here the Israelites; we learn, that whensoever they lie upon us, and press heavily upon our bodies, our souls, our neighbors, our families, our friends, whether they be common or private calamities; then it is high time to turn unto God, and to search out the cause of our affliction. This must be our practice & feeling when his hand is upon us, when he scattereth the brands of his fire, and shooteth the Arrows of his Quiuer, when he draweth out his glittering sword, and his hand taketh hold of judgment, whē he sendeth famine & dearth of bread, or the famine of his word, which is the sorest and sharpest famine, as the Prophet affirmeth, Amos 8, verses 10, 11, 12. Then is cause of humiliation, then it is time to cast down our selves at the foorstoole of God, to cry to him to spare his people. The Lord threning by his prophet a great and fearful judgment upon the Land, that shall turn their feasts into mourning, and make it as the mourning for an only son. Doth he mean the sharpness of the sword, or the arrows of famine, or the invasion of enemies, or the devouring of wild beasts, or the raging of the pestilence or the carrying away into banishment and captivity, w^c are the things that worldly minded men fear and regard? No, But a famine of hearing God's word: that they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the North even to the East shall they run to and fro, to seek the Lord, and shall not find it: In that day shall many perish for thirst, according to the doctrine of Solomon, Pro. 29.18. Where vision ceaseth, the people perish. Howsoever therefore carnal & profane men, have no sense or feeling of anything but of earthly losses, yet the Spirit of God teacheth, and every faithful soul acknowledgeth, y^t as there is no blessing like to the blessing of the word: so there is no work of his judgment like to the want of his word. And howsoever the Pastor may not want the people in respect of the means of his maintenance, inasmuch as God hath ordained, that they which preach the Gospel, should live of the Gospel; yet the people want the Pastor more, as the child wanteth the nurse, more then the nurse the child, as Lam. 2.11, 12. The babes & sucklings swound in the streets of the city, they have said to their mother, Where is bread and drink? when they gave up the ghost in their mothers bosom. Now the Ministers are called not only the Fathers, but the Nurses of the Church, 1 Thess. 2. We were gentle among you, even as a Nurse cherisheth her children: and the Apostle exhorteth, that as new borne babes we desire the sincere milk of the word, that we may grow thereby, because we have tasted that the Lord is bountiful. And thus much of the end and use of afflictions, which God sanctifieth to the good of his Church, that thereby they may draw nearer unto him.

Israel vowed a vow unto the Lord, and said, If thou wilt deliverer this people into mine hand, &c. The people pray, promise, and vow unto God the destruction of men & cities, if God would deliver them into their hands. We learn hereby, y^t vows are lawful, & so vowing we are to perform the same. This we see practiced by Jacob going to his uncle Laban for avoiding the fury of his brother Esau, Gen. 28.20.21. Hannah, upon condition of having a son, vowed him for a perpetual Nazarite to the Lord. So doth David oftentimes make vows to God in the time of his trouble, upon condition to be delivered out of his trouble.

Thus in this example of the Israelites in this place we see, that if God would be on their side when their enemies rise up against them to swallow them up quick, and deliver them as a bird out of the snare of the Fowler, they promise and vow the performance of an outward and bodily exercise. So then out of this place the doctrine of vows may be strongly confirmed, and the lawful practice of them sufficiently maintained, and warranted to be good and godly.

[Reason 1] For, to come to the reasons whereupon the doctrine standeth; a lawful and holy vow is a profitable help to further us in the worship of God. True it is, a vow is not a part of God's worship, no more then fasting is, (as fasting is no more a part of God's worship then feasting, or eating and drinking is) which in it self and by it self considered, pleaseth God no more then external and bodily exercises do: yet it is an help and furtherance of the true service of God, a prop and stay to further the same. The kingdom of God standeth not in outward things, as the Apostle teacheth, It is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the holy Ghost, Romans, chapter 14.17. But when we promise to God with full purpose of heart some outward duty, it serveth the better to excite and stir us up to repentance and thanksgiving toward God. And thus the servants of God have used it.

[Reason 2] Again, it is far better never to vow, then having vowed not to pay and perform that which is gone out of our lips: so as we may reason as Peter doth with Ananias, Acts 5.4. Likewise may it be said to such as break their lawful vows offered unto God, was it not in thy liberty to vow or not to vow? how thē hast thou conceived this wickedness in thy heart, to lie, not to men, but unto God? Vowes were prescribed or appointed by the Law of God as testimonies of faith, and bonds of that reverence and obedience which we owe unto him: therefore to vow, and not to pay & perform the solemn promise and covenant that we have made, is impudently to mock God, and consequently to pull great punishment upon our own heads. This the Wise man teacheth, Eccles. 5.3, 4, 5.

[Use 1] Let us apply this to our selves. First, from this example we may learn the doctrine of vows, what is to be holden of vows, & what is not to be holden. For we see here, what a vow is; namely, a free and solemn promise made to God touching such things as please him, tending to the glory of his Name, the profit of our brethren, or the repentance and salvation of our souls. Secondly, we see who may vow, (to wit;) such as are free and at liberty, nor under the power and jurisdiction of others. Thirdly, to whom vows are to be made, not to Saints or Angels, but to God only, and to him alone they are to be performed, according to the saying of the Psalmist, Psal. 76.11. As he only is to be prayed unto, and from him we are to look for all good things: so to him only we must vow, and offer to him y^e calves of our lips. Fourthly, it appears what we may vow to God; not things unlawful, impossible, and unwarranted by the word of God; not things whereof we are uncertain, whether they please God or not: for who would offer to a Prince, or promise to him such things as he knoweth he will not accept, or doubteth whether he will accept thereof? Whatsoever is not of faith, is sin, as the Apostle teacheth: But such things as y^e Scripture warranteth, being the true rule of all right ways, such was this vow in this place. Lastly, we see that vows thus made, are carefully to be kept, and religiously to be performed, having an eye to the party with whom we have to deal. For as they are to be made with reverence, so they are to be performed with care and diligence; otherwise we do foully and falsely abuse the Majesty of God, and take his Name in vain. All these considerations and conditions teach us, that vows are not in themselves unlawful and to be condemned, so as they be restrained and bounded in the compass of the law of God, and not suffered to wander after our own fancies.

Secondly, it serveth to beat down all false [Use 2] doctrine and erroneous opinions touching vowing, which are many: and to rectify our judgments by teaching what vows are lawful, what unlawful.

First, if they be made of anything flat against the word of God, they cannot bind or tie us to the performance thereof; for all the force and power of binding us, is to be borrowed and derived from the word of God. Wherefore it must be agreeable to the will of God, and whensoever it is against the word of God, it hath no strength or efficacy to constrain or command. They which would have murdered Paul, and had conspired together by a solemn league of agreement, did make a solemn vow not to eat nor drink, until they had executed their devilish purpose, and put the Apostle to death. But who now dare say, that they were bound in conscience by their vow, or that God liked of it? For this were all one, as if they would make God a companion of their murder. Therefore David vowing the slaughter and destruction of Nabal and his family, revoked it at the wise counsel of a discreet woman.

Secondly, they must not be made by such persons as want sufficient reason, judgment, discretion, and understanding: as children, fools, or furious persons; for these cannot be made with freedom of conscience, nor can be said to be taken up by a man's own accord, in as much as the mind cannot truly discern what is done, as is proved at large in the thirtieth chapter of the book of Numbers, and the fourth verse.

Thirdly, it condemneth such as vow, having no power or authority in themselves, to bind themselves; such vows cannot bind, being made against the law of nature. For all lawful vows must be made with consent of their superiors, so long as they are under the government of others, as appeareth by the fifth commandment, Honor thy father, &c.

Fourthly, they must be so made, as they may stand with Christian liberty: for we may not in any sort make such things absolutely necessary, as God hath left free unto us, snaring the conscience, and abridging the liberty which Christ hath purchased, contrary to the commandment of the Apostle, Gal. 5.1.

Fifthly, it reproveth such as vow things impossible, and out of the power and liberty of the makers thereof, to do, or not to do: so that a vow made of a thing impossible is no vow at all: but an intolerable presumption, and a willful tempting of God: As if a man should vow to walk upon his head, or to fly in the air, or to stay the stars as Joshua did, or to divide the sea as Moses did; wherein we have no assurance of any extraordinary gift of God.

Sixthly, they must not be against a man's general or particular calling; that is, neither against his calling as he is a Christian, neither that special calling wherein he liveth. If they be made against the one or the other, they are unlawful: As if the Minister should vow to do the office of the Magistrate in executing justice upon Malefactors; or the Magistrate vow to discharge the function of the Minister in preaching the Gospel: or if a man should vow to live in no calling in the Church, in the Common-wealth, or in the family, but walk inordinately with scandal and offense.

Seventhly, it convinceth all such vows as are rash, heady, sudden, idle, and unadvised; and requireth on the other side, that they be made with advice, meditation and deliberation. For rash vows be not lawful, albeit the things vowed may be done lawfully. Therefore the Wiseman saith, Eccles. 5.1. Be not rash with thy mouth, nor let thy heart be hasty to utter a thing before God, for God is in the heavens, and thou art on the earth, therefore let thy words be few. If we make a promise unto a man like to our selves, we will have this consideration, and think with our selves, whether he will accept of it or not, whether his will be to like of it or not. We must not therefore mock with God, and make lighter account of him, then of a mortal man, whose breath is in his nostrils. They ought not to be made without judgment and aduisement, for that were a defiling of God's service, and an abusing of his Name.

Now, as they ought not to be made rashly, but with sobriety, so ought all our vows to be of great moment and importance, and therefore we are forbidden to vow idle and trifling toys to observe, (as is usual in the Church of Rome) where one voweth a pilgrimage to the Saints, another voweth to fast and eat no flesh at such a feasts Even; whereof one is superstitious, the other devilish. As for their pilgrimages, it is a wicked corruption, and an idolatrous service which God rejecteth. For albeit (under the Law) it was the ordinance of God to build one Temple, and to choose one place to which man should resort to worship him, yet this order is now abolished; every coast and country is Iewry, every town and city is Jerusalem, every faithful company, and godly person is a Temple to worship God in: We may call upon God everywhere, and lift up pure hands in all places, no land is a strange land, no ground is unholy ground. And touching their abstinence from flesh on certain times for religion sake, it is a doctrine of devils, 1 Tim. 4, 1, 3.

Lastly, it reproveth such as propound to themselves false and wrong ends of vows, as conceit of merit, and opinion of deserving the favor of God and everlasting life. For the ends which we respect must be good, as to exercise and stir up the gifts of faith, prayer, obedience, repentance, and other graces of the Spirit, and to testify our thankfulness to God for blessings received at his hands. The intent therefore and meaning is here to be considered, and we must be well advised, not only that our vows be directed to God, but for what purpose, and how we vow to God; not to bind God unto us, but to bind us the closer to God & to render all honor unto him.

Now if we would examine the vows, practiced in the Church of Rome, by these things before delivered, we shall easily perceive the fondness and falsehood, nay the wickedness of them. For here are condemned all vows of pilgrimages, and abstinence from flesh for religion, noted before: their doctrine that children may enter into their orders and cloisters against the counsel and consent of their parents, and that persons contracted either to other, may vow continency without the liking and approbation of the other party, which cannot stand with the doctrine of the Scripture, or ancient councils. For the word establisheth the authority of parents over their children (which the former vows abridgeth and cutteth short) and teacheth, that if a woman vow unto the Lord, and bind her self by a bond, being in her fathers house, in time of her youth, if her father disallow her the same day that he heareth all her vows and bonds, they shall not be of value. Lastly, by the former observations, fall to the ground the ordinary vows of single life, voluntary poverty, and Fryarly obedience to vain and superstitious men, which they absurdly make, and tie themselves necessarily to observe. For such vows are directly and flatly against the former rules prescribed & delivered; impossible. intolerable, beyond our own strength & calling: a will worship, according to the decrees and traditions of men, and directly contrary to the commandment of God, 1 Cor. 7.9. Again, they are not in the power of him y^t voweth, for no man can promise perpetual chastity in single life out of the estate of wedlock. Continency is the special and proper gift of God, who giveth it not unto all, but to whom he will, and as long as he will.

This our Savior teacheth, Matth. 19. All men cannot receive this thing, save they to whom it is given: he that is able to receive this, let him receive it. To this accordeth and agreeth the doctrine of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 7. I would that all men were even as myself am, but every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that. Furthermore, they abolish Christian liberty, in the lawful use of the good creatures and ordinances of God, as riches and marriage; food and apparel; making that absolutely necessary, which God hath freely left to our liking and liberty. Lastly they are made most commonly to Saints, and not to God, and they are made for merits sake, thereby to deserve salvation, and the substance of religion and worship of God is made to consist in them: whereas the Apostle teacheth, That bodily exercise profiteth little, but godliness is profitable for all things. Therefore these vows practiced and defended by the Church of Rome, being unlawfully, rashly, unconscionably, superstitiously, meritoriously made, and impossible to be performed, cannot bind the conscience, but are better broken, then irreligiously kept, according to the doctrine of the former Churches.

Thirdly, seeing vows be lawful, which are promises made to God, of some duty to be performed to him, to some good end; the vow which all believers have made in Baptism, is, to be kept of everyone: wherein we promised to believe in Christ, to obey God, to bring forth the fruits of true repentance; to renounce the works of the devil, the allurements of this present evil world, and the lusts of the flesh, which lust against the spirit. And albeit we are bound to these duties by our calling & redemption, without any new vow, yet we may lawfully renew our covenant with God, and so bind our selves faster and faster. As he that hath bound himself in a bond, may yet give greater and better assurance, & bind himself more then before: So be that is bound to have faith in Christ, and to yield obedience to all his commandments, may yet further and faster bind himself, to help his dullness, coldness, and want of zeal, and to make himself more forward and servant in duties of the first and second table: according to the practice of David, I have sworn, and will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments. He was bound hereunto, without and before his oath, yet he kindled his zeal, and reneweth his covenant with God by this oath to stir up the gift of God that was in him, and to help his own infirmity. We have all in baptism vowed to consecrate our selves, even our souls and bodies to God, by renouncing the devil, the world, and the flesh: if we go back as cowardly Soldiers from this our vow, shall we not be convinced as false and unfaithful to God? And how shall we conscionably keep any other vows, that break the first vow we made to God? What a fault is it accounted among our selves, to promise and then to break? But have we kept this our general and common vow, to fight under the banner and ensigne of Jesus Christ, against the devil and all his works? Or rather have we not walked, and do we not still walk in the works of darkness, after the inventions of our own hearts? And do not our open sins cry out and proclaim as much to the dishonor of God, and our own reproach: So that all such as walk in the blindness of their own minds, have besides all their other sins, this great burden upon their consciences pressing them down, that they are found vow-breakers, and have broken their faith and promise made to God. Let us all remember, that we have vowed to God our selves, and take heed we perform that which we have vowed, lest it be imputed unto us for sin.

Lastly, it followeth from hence, that such [Use 4] special and peculiar vows as we have made upon particular occasions, as everyone hath had cause in time of war, sickness, necessity trouble, and danger, we must be careful to keep, and to pay our due and debt unto God. If we feel our selves slack and slothful to good duties, we may stir up our selves, and bind ourselves by some earnest and faithful promise to God. If we be inclined to any vice, we are to do the like. If a man have fallen into whoredom and fornication, he may, to bridle and halter his lusts, vow never to delight in the harlots company. If we have fallen into drunkenness, we may vow fasting and abstinence, yea, the abstaining from all hateful houses of drunkenness, being allurements & provocations to the same. The oppressor may vow restitution and mercy to the poor, to stir up his affection the better to perform it. Now in all these, we must beware and take heed, that we be not rash in the words of our mouth nor hasty to utter a promise before the most high. What a reproach and blemish, is it in such as will readily promise much to men, and yet perform at leisure little or nothing? Do not all despise such persons? But the fault and offense is more grievous, when there is a set and solemn promise made to God, and not performed. So then, we that require true, honest, and just dealing toward our selves, and promises to be kept to our selves by a day, have we done the like to God our Lord? Let us enter into our selves, and examine our hearts, a little. We are ready in sickness, in want, in great affliction and adversity to vow, and solemnly to promise if God deliver us, to glorify him, to be thankful and obedient unto him, to enter into repentance and amendment of life. When a man hath loosely and lewdly spent his time in drunkenness, riotousnes, idleness, wantonness, envy, hatred, contempt of God and his word; if God strike him with grievous sickness, that he feareth death as the messenger sent of God to seize upon him then doth he tremble, then doth he desire that God would have mercy upon him, and then doth he make vows: If God restore me to health again, and give me life, I will never be the man I have been, I have been given to drunkenness, I will never haunt the Ale-house: I have led a naughty life, I have dishonored God, and despised his word, I will hereafter obey his voice, and attend to his word: I have hated the children of God, I will hereafter show my love to them, renouncing my sins, and living to God's glory.

Oh what goodly promises are these; and how well were it, if men did so indeed? and how were it to be wished, that as they have opened their mouth unto the Lord, so they would do according as they have promised? But when God hath heard their prayers, and restored them to health; mark, and ye shall find, that for the most part, so soon as they are recovered, and are able to craule out of the doors, they return again to their former ways, as the dog to his vomit, and the Sow that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire. What shall we say of these men? Nay, what may we not say of them? Are they not covenant breakers, and grievous offenders against God? They are like unto Pharaoh King of Egypt, when the hand of God was heavy upon him and his people, then he humbled himself, he confessed the righteousness of God, the wickednesse of his people, and the heinousness of his sins: Then Moses and Aaron must be sent for in all haste to pray for him, whom he before despised in his heart; and scorned in his talk: yet so soon as the plague was ceased, and the hand of God removed, he hardened his heart, and would not let the children of Israel go.

But he dallyed so long with the judgments of God, that he deceived himself, and in the end was drowned in the red Sea; as the Flye that playeth with the candle, until she be burned and consumed in the flame. So when men have been terrified with the hand of God, have confessed with tears their ungodly behavior, and have promised and vowed to God (if he would restore them) newness of life, and repentance from dead works: and yet being restored and recovered, being as vile in sin, as loose in life, as bestly in behavior as they were beforr: God hath in justice stricken them again for their unthankfulness, so as they have died in fury and frenzy without any appearance of grace, or assurance of mercy, or remorse of conscience, or acknowledgement of sin, or craving of pardon, or hope of forgiveness, or sign of sorrow, or joy of heart, or consolation of spirit, or purpose of amendment: but are wholly possessed with a shame of sin, and guilt of conscience, and fear of judgment, and the flashings of hell fire. Doth not this show that God's wrath is heavy against such unfaithful persons as break their oath, and falsify their promise made unto the Eternal, who always keepeth covenant with us, and will not alter the word that is gone out of his mouth? O consider this ye that forget God, lest he tear you in pieces, and there be none that can deliver you. Contrariwise to conclude let us follow y^e example of David, Psal. 66.13, 14. I will go into thine house with burnt offerings, and will pay thee my vows which my lips have promised, and my mouth hath spoken in mine affliction.

Verse 3. And the Lord heard the voice of Israel. Here is the fruit and effect of their prayer and humiliation, showing also the lawfulness and approbation of their vow; God accepteth, and respecteth them in their distresses. From hence we do learn, that God heareth and granteth the prayers of his children. For howsoever sometimes he deferreth to hear and hearken to their prayers, to exercise their faith, to kindle their zeal in prayer, to teach them whence good things proceed, to sharpen their hunger, to make them highly to esteem the graces long begged, and to prove them by delay; yet in the end God heareth and helpeth, he granteth and giveth the things which they ask according unto his will. This the Prophet declareth, Isaiah 65.24. Before they call, I will answer: and while they speak, I will hear And Psal. 120.1. I called upon the Lord in my trouble, and he heard me. And again, Psal. 145.18, 19. The Lord is near to all that call upon him, yea to all that call upon him in truth: he will fulfill the desires of them that fear him, he also will hear their cry, and will save them. Thus the Lord Jesus, being zealous in prayer, confesseth that his father always heareth him: Thus the Angel telleth Cornelius That his prayers are heard Thus the Apostle also teacheth, I am. 1.5. If any man want wisdom, let him ask of God, which giveth to all men liberally, & reproacheth no man, and it shall be given him. And in the last Chapter, Is any among you afflicted, let him pray: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick: Helias was a man subject to like passions as we are, he prayed earnestly that it might not rain, and it rained not on the earth for three years and six months: and he prayed again and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

The reasons to assure us of this truth, are [Reason 1] first, the promise gone out of his own mouth, and the assurance of his own word, who can never deceive nor falsify his truth. This is it which Christ our Savior urgeth, Mat. 7.7, 8. Ask, and it shall be given you: Seek, and ye shall find: Knocke, and it shall be opened unto you: for whosoever asketh receiveth: and he that seeketh, findeth: and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened. This is the ground and foundation of our faith in prayer, (to wit,) the promise of God, without which, we can have no confidence or trust in the mercy of God.

Again, what man heareth not, accepteth [Reason 2] not, granteth not the requests of his children that come unto him? Men that are evil and corrupt, that have scarce a spark of the love that is in God, will not turn away their eyes from the miseries of their children, much more then will God open the treasures of his graces to bestow upon us. This comparison our Savior presseth, Mat. 7.9, 10, 11. Where the doctrine hath his confirmation, What man is there among you, which if his son ask him bread, would give him a stone? Or if he ask fish, will he give him a serpent? If ye then which are evil, can give to your children good gifts, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven, give good things to them that ask him? And the Prophet saith, Can a woman forget her child, and not have compassion on the son of her womb? though they should forget, yet I will not forget thee.

Let us come to the uses of this doctrine. [Use 1] First, it teacheth the blessed estate of the Church, and a great privilege that the faithful have; so that no man should say, It is vain to serve God, and what prosit is it that we have kept his commandments, and that we walked humbly before the Lord of hosts? But it will be said, Here they are in troubles and torments; here they suffer sorrows and afflictions every day. Be it so, Yet herein they are more then conquerors through him that loved them; so that neither life nor death shall separate them from Jesus Christ our Lord. The Lord is the Sun and shield unto us, the Lord will give grace and glory, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly.

So then, their tribulations and afflictions shall not hinder their blessedness, but by manifold troubles we shall enter into happiness and everlasting life. Let our present care be to serve the Lord, and then we shall be safe under his protection, and not fear what man can do unto us, as the Prophet teacheth, Psa. 118. 5, 6, 7. I called upon the Lord in trouble, and the Lord heard me, and set me at large: the Lord is with me, therefore I will not fear what man can do unto me, I shall see my desire upon mine enemies. Let us therefore walk worthy of this blessed estate and condition, seeing we have God near unto us, and ready to hear us, so often as we pour out our meditations before him. There is no comfort like unto this, in this life; whereby we obtain health in sickness, riches in poverty, safety in danger, rest in trouble, joy in sorrow, comfort in adversity. So then, howsoever the ungodly accounteth the life of the faithful, contemptible and miserable, above all other, yet we see one are truly happy but they. For if I can say, I have been hungry, and the Lord hath fed me; I have been naked, and he hath clothed me; I have been sick, and he hath restored me; I have been in dangers, and he hath delivered me; I have a blessed experience of God's favor given unto me, and an assurance of future happiness reserved for me in the heavens.

[Use 2] Secondly, let us acknowledge it to be our duty to call upon him in the day of trouble, and in all our necessities to come unto him. For if the righteous crieth, and the Lord heareth him, yea delivereth him out of all his troubles, let us fly unto him; the name of the Lord is a strong tower, the righteous •unneth unto it, and is exalted: Here is the only refuge of the godly against all troubles and adversities; hereby we are instructed to whom we should run and repair in all need and necessities. A strong Castle secureth those that fly unto it for succor and defense. Such is the favor of God toward the elect in Christ, who are sanctified by the holy Ghost, he protecteth those that fly unto him, and they shall abide in the shadow of the Almighty. This the Prophet presseth, Psal. 50.15. Call upon me in the day of trouble, so will I deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Let us not look to the hills or mountains; to men or Angels; let us not trust in friends or in riches; in power or policy, but know that our help cometh from the Lord, which hath made heaven and earth, who will preserve our going out, and our coming in, from henceforth and forever. This serveth to condemn the Church of Rome, who refuse the mediation of Christ to come unto God, and set up Saints and Angels in his place to usurp his office. But we are sure that Christ Jesus will never fail us, nor cease to discharge the calling appointed unto him of his Father. Why then do we not go directly unto him, that gently calleth, and lovingly allureth us, Come unto me all ye that are weary, and heavy laden, and I will refresh you?

Thirdly, doth God hear us when we call? [Use 3] and when we ask, doth he answer? Then it standeth with the right of reason and with the law of equity, to hear him when he calleth upon us, and crieth unto us. For whensoever we pray unto God, we speak unto him, and call upon him to hear us. Whensoever the word of God is preached and delivered, he speaketh to us, and calleth upon us to hear him. If then we would have God regard us, when we cry to him, we must respect him whē he calleth to us. We cry by prayer; he calleth us by his word. Therefore, it is that the Lord often denounceth and threateneth all impenitent persons, that he will despise them that despise him, and will not hear them praying unto him, that will not hear him preaching unto them, as Pro. 1.24, 26, 27, 28, 29. Zach. 7.11, 12. Mic. 3.4 Prov. 28.9. Of all comforts that we feel in this life, none is greater then to pray unto God in our troubles, with assurance to be heard: this the ungodly with all their rage and cruelty can never take from us.

Therefore this is a sore judgment, when God openly professeth and proclaimeth, that he will not hear our prayers crying unto him in our miseries. When we are rejected and forsaken of men in our afflictions▪ yet we have our recourse and refuge unto GOD, and we are comforted. How wretched therefore is the estate of all unrepentant sinners, who stopping their ears at the hearing 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 of the Law do make all their prayers to be abominable. So did God threaten his people to number them to the sword, because (saith he) I called, and ye did not answer: I spake, and ye heard not, but did evil in my sight, and did choose that thing which I would not. If then we would have God open his ears to hear us, let us acknowledge it to be our duty to open our ears to hear him. God will never stop his ears against any, but those that have stopped their ears against him.

[Use 4] Lastly, learn to acknowledge the greatness of God's mercy and loving kindness, and return the praise and glory of his own works to his great Name. As he hath heard us graciously, so let us bear our selves thankfully in rendering to him the calves of our lips, and offering to him the sacrifice of praise. Even as he filleth us with his mercy, let us fill our mouths with his praise, and the memorial of his Name, and say: What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the Name of the Lord. This use the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 145. having declared that God showeth himself near to those that call upon him and fear him, he addeth: My mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord, and all flesh shall bless his holy Name forever and ever. If I can say, when all men forsook me, the Lord took me up, I have been running into the paths of death, and was near to destruction, but thou hast brought me back, showing me the ways of life and salvation: I have been ignorant, and thou hast instructed me: If I have this experience of his goodness, so many ways toward me he openeth my mouth to praise his mercy, and I can never sufficiently magnify his Name that hath brought so great things to pass for me.

This practice is likewise taught, Psal. 107. where the Prophet mentioning sundry deliverances that God showeth his people in times of famine, and in the days of affliction, by land or by sea, he doubleth oftentimes his affection, Let them therefore confess before the Lord his loving kindness, and his wonderful works before the sons of men. [He delivered them the Canaanites, and they utterly destroyed them. See here the uncertainty of war. The Israelites after their overthrow fight again, and have the victory. They were at the first overcome and taken prisoners by their enemies, but now they prevail & get the upper hand. Albeit the righteous fall for a time, yet they are not cast off forever, for the Lord putteth under his hand. Great deliverances giveth he to his servants, he teacheth their hands to fight, and their fingers to battle: he is their strength and their fortress, their tower, and their deliverer, their shield, and in him they trust. The horse indeed is prepared against the day of battle, but salvation is of the Lord, to whom it is not hard to save with many or with few. This the Prophet setteth down, Psal. 81. Oh that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways, I would soon have humbled their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries. Heereby we learn, that howsoever God think it meet that his Church lie under the cross, yet in his good time he helpeth, he forsaketh it not forever, but returneth again in great mercy and compassion. Albeit affliction dwelleth upon the servants of God, not only for a moment, but oftentimes presseth them for a long season, that they have no breathing time, No not to swallow their spittle, (as Job speaketh:) yet in due time God is not unmindful and forgetful of them. Hereunto cometh the saying of the Psalmist, He endureth but a while in his anger, but in his favor is life: weeping may abide at evening, but joy cometh in the morning. This the Lord expresseth in the Prophet, For a little time have I forsaken thee, but with great compassion will I gather thee: for a moment in mine anger I hid my face from thee, for a little season, but with everlasting mercy have I had compassion on thee. We see this point largely declared in the book of Judges, when God raised up enemies against the Israelites, and sold them as a vile thing of base account (for whom he took no money) yet when they called and cried unto him, he sent them a deliverer, who saved them out of the hands of their adversaries. This appeareth in the histories of Joseph, of Job, of the Church in Egypt, of David, of Daniel, who first endured shame and the reproach of the cross, yet afterward he returned unto them when the time of refreshing came from the presence of God.

The reasons are plain: First, his ears are [Reason 1] always open to the cries of his children, he putteth their tears in his bottle of remembrance, and writeth them in his Register, so that when they cry, their enemies shall turn their backs, for God is with his. This he saith, Exod. 2. the children of Israel sighed for the bondage and cried, and their cry for their bondage came up unto God: Then the Lord said, I have surely seen the trouble of my people which are in Egypt, I have heard their cry and moan, for I know their sorrows, and I will deliver them: verifying that in the Psalm, He led his people like sheep by the hand of Moses and Aaron. So long therefore as we have a voice, so long as we have an heart to lift up to God, and can pour out the meditations thereof before him, we have comfort and assurance to be helped. When the poor infant is fallen into danger of fire or water, or other misery, if he can cry that the father may hear his voice, there is hope of safety and deliverance: So, if we can call upon God the Father in Jesus Christ, in our distresses, our heavenly Father will not leave us nor forsake us in our dangers.

Secondly, albeit the faithful fall into many [Reason 2] afflictions, and their enemies make long sorrowes upon their backs, yet God will not always suffer them to be oppressed, lest they should sink deep, and shrink down under the burden, & so turn from their obedience, and forsake the faith which they have professed; according to the saying of the Prophet, The rod of the wicked shall not rest on the lot of the righteous, lest the righteous put forth their hand unto wickedness. He knoweth whereof we are made, he spareth us in our infirmities, he will not suffer us to be tempted above our strength he seeth our weakness, and how unable we are to resist, and therefore he will not give us over to perish in our afflictions, inasmuch as our light afflictions which are but for a moment, cause unto us a far more excellent and an

[Use 1] To apply this unto our selves, we learn first, that the devises and practices of enemies, albeit they be never so secret or malicious, are vain and frustrate. The people of God shall be preserved, howsoever they be ever plotting and banding themselves together, as we see in the days of the Apostle, Herod, Pontius Pilate, the Priests and people, the Jews and Gentiles conspired together: yet we shall always have assurance of safety, and all shall work for the best to them that fear God, whose love, no powers, no principalities, no Potentates shall be able to remove, as the Prophet teacheth, Rejoice not against me: O mine enemy; though I fall, I shall rise; when I shall sit in darkness, the Lord will be a light unto me, then she that is mine enemy shall lock upon it, and shame shall cover her which said unto me, Where is the Lord thy God? mine eyes shall behold her, now shall she be trodden down as the mire of the streets. This serveth notably to daunt and dismay the wicked and ungodly, who insult over the righteous, and seem wise in their own eyes; considering that The faithful escapeth out of trouble, and the wicked shall come in his stead. This truth the Prophet Isaiah confesseth and confirmeth, Chap. 8. Gather together on heaps (O ye people) and ye shall be broken in pieces: take counsel together, but it shall be brought to naught: pronounce a decree, yet it shall not stand, for God is with us. So then, if the faithful be not ever forsaken, nor stand continually under the strokes of their enemies, but God will put to his hand and his help to deliver them, we see, that all their devises, and all their consultations against them, and insultations over them shall be brought to nothing.

[Use 2] Again, it behooveth us, in all the time of our distress to rely upon him whatsoever temptations come, though we should walk by the gates of the grave, and pass by the gulf of death. Many indeed are our infirmities, fears, cares, sorrows, and troubles: yet in them all we must say with the Prophet, Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me? Waite on God, for I will yet give him thanks: he is my present help and my God. Let us not therefore despair in the day of trouble, When the snares of death compass us, and the griefs of the grave take hold upon us, when we find trouble and sorrow to pursue us and overtake us, let us call upon the Name of the Lord to deliver our soul, who is merciful and full of compassion. The Name of the Lord is a strong tower, the righteous runneth unto it, and is exalted. This is the surest and safest refuge of the godly against all troubles.

Lastly, let all such learn, as lie not under [Use 3] the cross, to commend the common cause of their brethren to God, as if themselves were in affliction. For wherefore doth God promise to free his from the oppression of the enemy, and to restore them to the joy of their salvation, but to move us to this duty of praying for them, pitying their distressed estate, and seeking by all lawful means the comfort and continuance of the Church? This the Apostle setteth down, 2 Cor. 1.3, 4. Where we see he urgeth the Church at Corinth to think of this point, to be mindful of the miseries of others, and to comfort them that are in discomfort, as God hath comforted us. This is taught by Moses, Thou shalt not do injury to a stranger, neither oppress him: for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt. And hereunto the Apostle accordeth, Remember them that are in bonds, as though ye were bound with them: and them that are in affliction, as if ye were also afflicted in the body. Where he would have us so much to be touched, as if their misery were our own. This duty it is needful to think upon. We know not what troubles may fall upon our heads. When we take our selves to be freest and farthest from all dangers, then we may be nearest unto them, and suddenly fall into them, as a bird into the snare of the fowler. Wherefore, let us remember them to God that suffer afflictions, that so we may be delivered, if we fall into any troubles. But if we harden our hearts in the miseries of others, and have no feeling of their sorrows; others shall be as unmindful of us, and unmerciful unto us, as we have been to them. For with what judgment we judge, we shall be judged: and with what measure we meat, it shall be measured to us again. Nothing is more grievous unto a man, then to be scorned in his misery, and to be insulted upon in the day of his calamity. The affliction it self is bitter and yrkesome to the flesh, but the derisions & mockings of the enemy serve to double the cross, and to add to the measure and manner of our misery. If then we shall see with our eyes, and hear with our ears, the lamentable condition of the Church, and laugh when the people of God weep and lament, the justice of God shall overtake us, and make us a mock to our enemy.

4 After they departed from mount Hor, by the way of the red sea, to compass the land of Edom, and the soul of the people was sore grieved because of the way.

5 For the people spake against God, and against Moses, saying; Wherefore have ye brought us out of Egypt to die in this wilderness? for here is neither bread nor water, &c.

6 Wherefore the Lord sent fiery serpents, &c.

7 Then the people came to Moses; and said; We have sinned, &c.

8 And the Lord said unto Moses; Make thee a fiery serpent, &c.

9 So Moses made a serpent of Brasse, &c.

Hitherto of the first part of the Chapter, containing the encounter between the Canaanites and the Israelites: now we come to the second part, handling the eight and last murmuring of the people through weariness of their way, and compass they were compelled to fetch, through the unmercifulness of the Edomites; whereby they offended God again. In this history we are to consider sundry circumstances, setting down their sin, who fall again into their former faults and offenses, As the dog returneth to his vomit, and the Sow unto the wallowing in the mire. First, the place and occasion hereof is described. Secondly, the manner of their sin. Thirdly, the matter and substance thereof, wherein it consisteth is set down. Fourthly, the punishment, and judgment of God inflicted upon them for their sin. Lastly, the events and effects following the punishment.

First, touching the circumstances of the place, and occasion of the sin: observe that the Israelites departing from Hor, and crossed in their purpose, were constrained to travel all along the coasts of Edom, and to pass over a most perilous and dangerous desert, as it is set forth, Deut. 8.15. Where the hearts of the people failed and fainted, where the fiery serpents stung and destroyed them, and where thirst pined them away. It was no small grief and vexation unto them, having only a short cut into Canaan by crossing over the country of the Edomites, to wander up and down, to traverse the ragged rocks, the high mountains and the vast wilderness; and thereupon they brake out (through impatience of spirit) to murmur against Moses. They think themselves in the high pride of their haughty hearts, able to match and to meet with the king of Edom in the field, to give him battle, and to work their own peace and passage by dint of the sword, as they had overthrown Harad, a king of the Canaanites, and destroyed his cities; and therefore needed not to stand at the mercy and courtesy of others, nor fetch such compasses as Moses made them to do in the wilderness.

Secondly, the manner of their murmuring is remembered, verse 5. where the hand of God being heavy upon them in that great and terrible wilderness, they do not cry to him, they do not call to mind that blessed experience of his helping hand, which they had found ever ready to succor and sustain them; they consider not the revenge and punishment that God from time to time had taken of their murmurings; but they fly upon him as a mad dog in the face of his master that feedeth and fostereth him, that breedeth and bringeth him up; they revile and rail upon his servant Moses. Such is the slippery place of government, such is the nature of the multitude, and such is the lot of God's Ministers.

Thirdly, the sum and substance of their mutiny and murmuring is twofold. First, a very vehement expostulation with Moses for bringing them out of Egypt: wherein they disgorge their malice with full or rather foul mouths, As if he had advisedly and purposely brought them into the wilderness to destroy them. Secondly, observe the reasons of that expostulation, which are two: first, because at this present, no bread, no water, no food appeared unto them, who measured the strength of God by the length of their bellies: now they account themselves ready to be famished. Which kind of death proceeding from hunger and famine, of all other kinds that can be thought upon, is most wretched and miserable; it hath driven men and women to this exigent to eat their own flesh, and the flesh of their children. Secondly, because they were weary of Manna, which they call a light, a sight or vile meat, such as no reckoning or account was to be made thereof. Wherein they slander God, bring up an evil name and report of his miraculous work, and complain of their necessity, where no want was; and of hunger, where no hunger was; and so their unbridled tongues testify their unthankful hearts, saying: That they were weary of their lives for this light meat, which God notwithstanding had sent them from heaven, and fed them with Angels food in great abundance, verifying the saying of the Wiseman, The foolishness of man perverteth his way, and his heart fretteth against the Lord.

The fourth point followeth: namely, the punishment which God inflicted without any communication had with Moses, or denouncing of it before it fell, (as God had done before, when he hid not from Moses what he was determined to do before he hid it) but presently punished them, to show the greuousnesse of their sin, and the greatness of his wrath conceived against them. The punishment was, That whereas they had sharpened their tongues like Serpents, so as the poison of adders and astes was under their lips, he sent among them a kind of Scorpions and Serpents, which with their biting infused their venom and poison, which immediately being shed, dispersed it self into all their body; whereby they were inflamed with such extraordinary heat, that they endured great drought, and suffered a great thirst, whereof they complained before. They thought they complained of thirst justly, but now they feel it indeed to the full; so that such are were stung with this venomous biting, died the death.

The last circumstances to be considered, are the effects following. For first, the people in this great extremity, and anguish of spirit, come in haste to Moses (against whom before they maliciously murmured) to whom they confess their offense, that now began to lie sore upon their consciences, and desire earnestly his prayers, that they might be preserved, and delivered from the venomous bytings of those stinging serpents; which Moses doth willingly & faithfully perform, being mindful of his own duty, and unmindful of their wrongs. Secondly, the Lord having brought the people to a sight of their sins, by a feeling of his judgments, that they humble themselves before him, confess their offenses, and call for mercy: he heareth the prayer of Moses (For the prayer of a faithful man prevaileth much if it be fervent,) is reconciled unto them, and witnesseth the same by giving them a true token, and showing the means and remedy of their present malady; commanding a visible sign and shape of those fiery serpents to be set up in brass upon an high pole, which the people might behold a far off; so as the Israelites looking thereupon, should presently and immediately be healed of that deadly sting.

Thirdly, the obedience of Moses is set down, which is greatly to be praised and commended. For albeit it might seem foolish to carnal wisdom, and impossible to human reason, for a dead image to help the deadly biting of those living serpents, yet he asketh not counsel with flesh and blood, nor measureth the commandments of God by the deceitful measure of man's understanding, but submitteth himself and all his thoughts to the word of God. He did not reason against the commandment of God, as Nahaman the Syrian did against the commandment of the Prophet, Bidding him go and wash seven times in Jordan, whereby his flesh should come again, and he should be cleansed of his leprosy: But he did simply as God commanded, and as the people desired, he set up aloft the brazen serpent, having the image and similitude of the true fiery serpents; he advanceth it on high, openly, publicly, speedily, in the sight and view of all, at the only beholding whereof, the Israelites bitten, were cured & restored to health, that none of them died afterward of that poison and infection, that did behold the image that was set up.

But before we proceed to the Doctrines of this division, sundry questions are to be demanded, and determined, touching this act of Moses, setting up the sign and image of [Objection 1] these fiery serpents. And first of all, how doth this agree with the second commandment, which forbiddeth the making of an image, or representation of anything in heaven above, or in the earth beneath? hath Moses so soon forgotten the law which God gave in mount Horeb? Or doth he now fall into idolatry, which himself so zealously revenged, and severely punished before, in the Israelites setting up the golden Calf, himself now erecting a brazen serpent? I answer, [Answer.] this fact is no breach of the second Commandment, which forbiddeth to make an Image of our own head, by our own authority, at our own will and pleasure, and therefore the Law saith, Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven Image.

Again, the Law forbiddeth Images which are worshipped, and have divine honor given unto thē, or else are made to be worshipped and adored. But this Image of the brazen serpent was not made by the authority of mā, but by the express commandment of God▪ saying unto Moses, Make thee a fiery serpent, that is, a similitude of one of those serpents. Neither was it made to be worshipped, but only to be looked upon: not to bend y^e knee unto it but to fasten the eye upon it; not for it self, but for another end; even to heal the people, and by healing them to represent Christ crucified and hanging on the cross, whereof this Image was a sign and token: & therefore when in process of time it came to be abused to Idolatry, Hezekiah stamped it in pieces with contempt. This also we may say and answer to the Church of Rome, maintaining the worshipping of Images, defacing the glory of God, and objecting in defense of them the example of Moses making the Cherubims, & setting them over the Mercy-seat. And the Jesuits reason, that seeing they were set in the holy place, they may much more be set in our Churches; seeing the Jews were permitted them, a people prone to Idolatry, & gross in imagination, much more are they allowed to Christians under the Gospel. And lastly, seeing y^e Angels were portrayed, which are mere spiritual substances, much more may the Images of Christ, his blessed mother, his holy Apostles, and his beloved Saints. The Jews were children, and as an heir in his nonage, and were suffered to have these rites and rudiments to be their book to help their capacity, and to instruct them in knowledge; but now the Church, being as a man grown to fuller strength, and able to digest stronger meat, doth not stand in need of such rude Teachers and School-masters. Besides, these were set up by the express commandment of God: we are forbidden to make any images according to our own fancy, and by our own appointment in his service. But when God forbiddeth us the making of Images, he gave not a Law to bind himself, nor restrained himself from commanding & ordaining such signs and similitudes, such forms and figures, as he thought fit for the furnishing & finishing of the Tabernacle.

Again, a particular commandment given of God, doth not give a discharge of the general Law, nor set men at liberty, or open a gap to do at their pleasure that which GOD expressly and directly forbiddeth to be done: so that every commandment must be understood with this restraint and prouiso, Except God command the contrary.

Furthermore, it is a foolish comparison and an evil conclusion, to reason, because these Cherubims were set in the sovereign holiest place of all the tabernacle, therefore much more the images of Christ, of his mother, and of Saints, may be placed in churches. For how fondly and childishly do they dispute, arguing from such as were set up by the commandment of God, to justify such images as God never commanded; nay, which are forbidden to be made to any use of religion?

Again, those Cherubims (as themselves confess, though others of them deny it) were set in the most holy place, whereinto the high Priest only entered and that once a yere; where they were never seen of the people, and consequently there could be no danger of idolatry, standing in a place farthest removed from the people's sight: whereas the Romish images are not only set openly in Churches in the people's view and pefence, but are commanded to be worshipped, & men commonly kiss them and creep unto them in sign of honor. Yea, the writer to the Hebrews teacheth, that the holiest place signifieth the highest heavens: Now, we cannot conclude, that because the images of the Cherubims were set up in the place that representeth and resembleth the heavenly condition of the life to come, therefore they may be set up in earth, and in this present life.

Moreover, the comparison will not hold, from Angels to other, that seeing they being spirits were portrayed; such as had bodies may be: as Christ, his mother, & the Saints. For we may better draw a contrary conclusion; that seeing the Lord commanding some images and similitudes to be set up, would have none of such things which can possibly be portrayed by the Art and cunning of man's hand; therefore ought men much less to do it by their sole and single authority. Neither was there any resemblance or representation of the nature, substance, or essence of Angels, but only of their office and function alone: so that if this serve to confirm and ratify imagery in the Church, it can prove no image of the persons of Christ, of his Mother, and of the Saints but only of their office.

Moreover, these new idolaters do borrow the weapons of the old idolaters that lived in the days of Tertullian, who alleged this example of the Cherubims, which the Rhemists do: to whom he answereth, it was done for ornament of the Ark, not for worship of the images: so that to warrant any setting up of religious images against the second commandment, a man must have the like special warrant and word that they had from the Lord.

For if Moses had set up the Cherubims or brazen serpent for those causes without God's commandment, he had sinned grievously, and committed idolatry, which God abhorreth. And whereas they say, God forbiddeth only the idols of the heathen, made for adoration of false God's, it is a vain cavil, and an old and cold evasion. For the commandment is general, condemning the images of all heretics made for any use of religion.

Again, this conceit is evidently confuted by Moses, who opposeth the voice of God heard in the mountain, to all images; and namely to the image of God himself, who is said to have appeared in no likeness, lest they should make an image of him Deut. 4.15 16. Take good heed to yourselves, for ye saw no image in the days that the Lord spake unto you in Horeb out of the minds of the fire, that ye corrupt not yourselves, and make you a graven image or representation of any figure, whether it be the likeness of male or female: where he reasoneth, that because they saw no image, they must make none.

The second question is of the manner how [Objection 2] this curing and healing was wrought and performed. It was set upon an high pole or perch to be seen and viewed of all the people. They were stung, they looked upon it, they were by and by healed at the very sight thereof, none that saw it perished, though they were stung before. Now the question is, how this naked sight and bare beholding of the brazen serpent, could cure this biting, and turn the rank poison into a counterpoison.

I answer, [Answer.] there was no proper force or natural power inherent in the image it self. For in all natural things consisting of the matter and the form, the force which they have, proceedeth either from the one or from the other; either from the matter whereof it is made, or from the form whereby it consisteth. The matter of this serpent was brass, without sense, without breath, without life, which hath no virtue or vigor to cure the stings and bytings of venomous beasts, more then the brazen Lauer, the brazen Grate, the brazen Taches, the brazen Sockets, the brazen Pot, the brazen Censors, the brazen Sea, the brazen Pillars, the brazen Basons, and other holy instruments applied about the Temple and Tabernacle; none of which wrought any such strange and wonderful miracle. Nay some of the Hebrew Rabbin's and Doctors do declare, that the cure was by contraries, inasmuch as the nature of bright shining brass is such, that whosoever being bitten of a serpent beholdeth it, presently dieth.

The outward form of this serpent was not of nature but from Art, made in proportion like to the serpents that stung them: but the artificial form worketh nothing of it self, which it receiveth from the workman: Wherefore this brazen serpent could perform no such work by any force or virtue of it own. Whence then had it this wonderful power and operation? Surely, from the ordinance, appointment, and institution of God only. Thus was the cure performed, not as by ordinary means of Physic or Chirurgery, or by any natural property of the Serpent, such as we know, learn, and perceive to be in herbs & simples, applied to places affected and infected. For this extraordinary work must be weighed, either by the nature of the thing, or by the apointment of God, beside & beyond the nature of the thing it self. But not by'the nature of the thing considered in it self; for we see if a man frame such an image it hath no such strength, neither had this any such virtue remaining after this season. Therefore by the institution of God it was made forcible and effectual, who can heal all our infirmities at his own pleasure, as he healed Naaman by washing in Jordan, 2 King. 5, 12. restored a great multitude of sick folk by stepping into the troubled water, John. 5.4. gave sight to the blind, John. 9.6. by making clay of spittle and anointing the eyes of the blind therewith. Now this institution was Sacramental (as we have shown,) for the serpent hanging on a pole, figured out Christ hanging on the Cross, who is made of God, Jesus, that is, A Savior unto us, that such as look on him, that is, believe in his Name, should not perish, but have life everlasting: and this kind of cure did greatly magnify God's mercy. For if the serpents had been suddenly taken away, as the plagues brought upon Egypt were, it would be thought they had come by chance and fortune; yea, the great favor of God would soon have been forgotten: Now, albeit these serpents remain among the people, albeit they oftentimes sting them, albeit they tread upon them and feel the venom of them, yet they may well bite them, but they cannot kill or destroy them, seeing they had so sudden and sovereign a remedy at hand to restore them.

[Objection 3] Another question may be asked, why this brazen serpent was kept and reserved so long after the serpents were gone from the Israeites, and the Israelites from the wilderness, and were placed in the land of promise? for it appeareth to have been in king Hezekiah's time, seven hundred years after the erecting of it.

I answer, it was preserved to be a monument of this history, to wit; of the people's rebellion, of God's compassion, and of Christ's passion, because it was a lively figure of his crucifying, and of spiritual grace received from him. But when once another end contrary to the first institution and God's ordinance crept in, that the people offered incense unto it, albeit it were the commandment of God, the work of Moses, the type of Christ, the cure of the people, yet it was justly demolished, & rightly commanded to be destroyed, that all occasion of superstition and idolatry might be cut off forever afterward.

[Objection 4] But are all things to be destroyed that are abused? and to be abolished that are and have been worshipped?

I answer, [Answer.] no: for then the Sun, the Moon, and the Stars should be pulled out of heaven, Deut. 4.19. Ier. 7.18. in as much as the whole host of heaven have been worshipped as gods. So the bread and wine in the Lord's Supper, should be abolished, seeing they have been horribly abused to palpable idolatry. Besides, we must make a double difference in the deciding of this doubt.

First, between the ordinances of God abused to superstition, and the inventions of men abused to superstition. The mere devices of men, when once they are abused, may be taken away; but the ordinances of God, which he hath appointed, must not be repealed and refused for the abuse of them. Again, we must make another difference between the ordinances of God instituted upon special and particular occasion for a temporal benefit at someone time, and such ordinances of God, as have necessary and perpetual use, which for no abuse are to be omitted and cut off, as the Sun, the Scriptures, the Sacraments, and such like. But the brazen serpent was not so: wherefore by Hezekiah it was religiously demolished and destroyed; albeit at the first setting up, it were a comfortable and profitable ordinance of God for the present good of his people: yet being grossly abused, and then no necessary use of it remaining to the Church, counteruailing the danger of the continuance thereof, 2 Kings 18.4. he is commended by the Spirit of God for his zeal toward God, in stamping it to powder, and utter defacing that brazen stuff. Neither did he account it sufficient to withdraw worship from it, or to forbid the people to burn unto it, or to send out the Levites to instruct them better in the service of God, or to punish such as gave the glory of God (whereof he is jealous) to a molten image: but cast it down in detestation, and the better to avoid the sin, took away the occasion, which was as a stumbling block before their eyes.

Verse 4, 5. The soul of the people was sore grieved, because of the way, for the people spake against God, and against Moses, &c. Here we see how they fall again into their former sin and murmuring, so often noted in this book, and elsewhere, as Exod. 15.24. and 16.2, 3, and 17.2, 3. for the greatness of their labor, for penury of water, for lack of flesh, for want of dainties & delicates, they distrust God's great providence; and for these rebellions they had been often grievously punished: yet loe, they fall into the same sin again. Their tents were replenished with his heavenly blessings, all places did yet smoke with the fire of his judgments; yet behold, there is no ende of their rebellions, verifying the saying of the Prophet, Can the Black-Moore change his skin, or the Leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil. Heereby we learn for our instruction, that lamentable is our condition if God leave us, we fall into the same sins again and again, which before we refused and renounced. I say, such is our great frailty and weakness, if we be not stayed and vnderpropped by the assistance of the Spirit, that we return with greediness unto our former sins which we seemed to have forsaken and abjured. This the Prophet plentifully teacheth, Psal. 78.40, 41. How oft did they provoke him in the wilderness, and grieve him in the desert! yea, they returned, and tempted God, and limited the holy one of Israel. Thus did Pharaoh, Exod. 9.37, 38. I have now sinned, the Lord is righteous, but I and my people are wicked; pray ye unto the Lord for me (for it is enough) and I will let you go: but when the hail was gone, and the thunder ceased, and the judgment was removed his heart was hardened, and he continued in his sin. The like we see in Saul, who could clear David more then he? His own conscience roused him up, which before was asleep, and he confesseth with tears, Thou art more righteous then I, for thou hast rendered me good, and I have rendered thee evil: thou hast shown this day that thou hast dealt well with me, for as much as when the Lord had closed me in thine hands, thou killedst me not: yet the same Saul fell again into the same sin, and acknowledgeth his own wickedness; I have sinned, come again my son David, for I will do thee no harm, because my soul was precious in thine eyes. We see this in the example of the Israelites in the book of Judges, they committed evil again and again, they transgressed by idolatry, they knew what that sin was; they had experience of God's severity against it, they had confessed it and cried for mercy; yet the same people, and the children of the same people, not taught by their former falls, nor admonished by former judgments, nor instructed by former deliverances, do proceed in the same sin, and provoke God to punish them by their relapse into the self same iniquities. Hereunto cometh the allegory and similitude, of the unclean spirit that wandered in the wilderness, and ranged up and down without rest, but in the end found his house empty, swept and garnished, so that he took seven other spirits worse then himself, they enter in and dwell there. So the places of the Apostle, Heb. 6. Do directly offer this point, that many sin again, after the receiving and acknowledgment of the truth, according to the faying of the Wise man, As the dog turneth again to his own vomit, so a fool turneth to his foolishness. So that except the Lord uphold, and hold men back▪ they fall into the same sins before committed, and provoke him afresh by those sins which before they refused.

[Reason 1] For first of all, who is the author of constancy and perseverance in any good work? Is it of our selves? Is it of our own power? Nay, as every good giving and perfect gift is of God, so he that in his nature is unchangeable giveth us the gift to stand, and preserveth us from falling, as the Apostle teacheth, Rom. 11.18, 19, 20. Where he taketh away all occasion of boasting from the Gentiles, against the Jews, reasoning from their chargeable condition, not being firmly fastened, and deeply grounded as the root it self; but moouable and mutable as the boughs and branches knit to the root, being easy to be broken off. So then, God is the author of constancy, and of perseverance, Who worketh in us both the will and the deed & not man by his own proper strength who if he be not stayed by him that is the stay and strength of Israel, he falleth into horrible sins, and such as go against his own conscience, as may appear very evidently by many examples. Again, none can come to God, except the Father draw him. We are the greatest enemies to our salvation. All within [Reason 2] us, is against us: we naturally contemn the word which is the rule of constancy, and the staff to uphold us, and as the arm of GOD stretched out to pull out of destruction. Thus the Prophet chargeth the Jews, Nehe. 9.26.27. They were disobedient, and rebelled against thee, cast thy law behind their backs, and slew thy Prophet, which protested among them to turn thē to thee, and committed great blasphemies. Man then left to himself, whereunto is he left, but to see his own weakness? And what remaineth in him that may bring him to God, and lead him in the right path? Vndoubtedly nothing is in us, but self-love, pride, hautinesse, contempt of God, neglect of his word, as we see in y^e manifold relapses, & often reuoltings of these Jews, in whom as (in a glass) we may see our own faces, yea our own hearts, seeing we are of our selves no better then they.

Now let us come to apply this doctrine to [Use 1] our selves. First, we conclude, that fearful and dangerous is the estate of those from whō the Lord taketh the light of his countenance. If he leave us to our selves, we work our destruction by rebellion against him. It is a great grace & mercy of God toward us, to be once enlightened, to taste of the good word of God, to be made partaker of the holy Ghost, and to taste of the powers of the life to come (which he denieth to many thousands in the world, who proceed not so far:) now to leave these goodly and glorious beginnings, and fall from light to darkness, and from righteousness into sin, is to make our end worse then the beginning, and our case most fearful by returning to our uncleanness, as the Apostle Peter declareth, chap. 2.20, 21. For Satan will enter deeper into such, and take fuller possession of their hearts. Even as a Jailor, when his prisoner hath escaped out of his hands, & broken prison, if he fasten upon him again, will lay better hold, will cast more irons upon him, and keep him faster then before: so will the devil deal with all evil men which are his slaves and prisoners, So that he that is unjust, shall be unjust still: and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still, Revel. 22, 11. We see this by daily experience▪ in all such, as having washed their garments, do defile them again, they grow worse and more wicked then they were before. We should let our light so shine before men, that they seeing our good works, may glorify our Father which is in heaven. Mat. 5, 16. So many therefore as have quenched the good motions of the Spirit, and put out the light that began to shine in their hearts, are as smoking Torches, and stinking snuffes, odious in the nostrils of God and men. Let us therefore make much of the least seeds of godliness sown in our hearts, and kindle the flame that is begun in us, if so be we have tasted how bountiful the Lord is. Let us be earnest in prayer to God, that he would stablish us with his grace, and not take his holy Spirit from us, Psal. 51, 11, nor leave us in the hour of temptation when the flesh is weak.

[Use 2] Secondly, let no man presume of himself, or glory in his own strength, But let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall. If any good be in us, it is of another, who must work the will and the deed, the beginning and the ending; we stand by his hand, we continue by his grace, we run because he moveth, we seek because he preuenth, We come to God because the Father draweth. Remember Peters cōfident bearing of himself, which was the first step to his fall, as we see, Math. 26, 33, 34, when he said, Though all men should be offended by thee, yet will I never be offended: yet Christ telleth him, Verily I say unto thee, that this night before the Cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And the Evangelist declareth, that when he saw the swords and staves, the high Priests servants, & the higher powers armed against him, he denied him thrice, first barely & more fearful and faintly, then with cursing and execration to himself. Let every soul learn from hence, that seeing God only must help and uphold us, to lay hold on the sweet mercy of Christ, and come boldly before y^e throne of his grace. Let us not rashly presume upon our selves, but confidently rely on him, and pray him earnestly to preserve us, to bear us in his arms, that we dash not our foot against a stone, nor ruin our selves upon every Rock.

[Use 3] Lastly, hence ariseth great comfort to God's children that fall of weakness and infirmity into the same sin after repentance. Such is the depth of Satan's temptations toward those that are afflicted in conscience, that wrestle with the Law, that feel the wrath of God, that bear the heavy burden of sin, and are entered into the very suburbs of desperation. He telleth them, that the children of God fall not into the same sins again after their repentance. If they do, he subtly suggesteth unto them, that there is no place for a second repentance, nor hope of God's mercy, nor fruit of Christ's merit. This is a false spirit in the mouth of false Prophets, which broach damnable and detestable lies in the Church of God, 1 King. 22, 4, and 2, 37. And this was the error of the Nauatians, which denied repentance after baptism for offenses committed even through frailty, through fear and force of persecution. But the promises of God are without limitation of times, or consideration of sins, or respect of persons; he will receive to mercy all repentant sinners, whether the sins be committed before or after baptism, whether once or often. This pardon Christ our Savior publisheth, Mat. 11, 22. Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will ease you. So the Apostle John testifieth, 1. John. 2, 1. My little children, these things write I unto you, that you sin not: if any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father JESUS CHRIST the just. Furthermore, the Lord enjoyneth, that we sinful men forgive our brother seventy times seven times, if he turn again and say, It repenteth me: therefore himself will much more freely forgive; whose mercy is infinite, whose favor is incomprehensible, whose loving kindness endureth forever. This also appeareth plainly in the examples of the servants of God. We see how Abraham the father of the faithful faileth in calling his wife Sarah his sister, whereby himself was injured, the unbelievers tempted, and her chastity endangered; yet he fell again afterward into the same sin, and incurred y^e same danger, and laid a stumbling block before the blind, so that he had ruined himself & his wife, if the hand of God had not assisted and preuēted the mischief. The like we see in Lot, in a greater sin, who being delivered out of Sodom, and growing secure, fell twice into horrible incest with his own daughters, and yet recovered himself by unfeigned repentance, The like we see in John, one of y^e twelve Apostles, and the Disciple whom Jesus loved, how he fell into idolatry, and worshipped an Angel, for which he was reprov'd of the Angel: yet he failed the second time, in giving divine worship to a creature, which belongeth properly and peculiarly to the Lord the Creator. Here then is comfort and consolation to all such as groan under the burden of sin, & have fallen through infirmity into the same sins: let not such doubt of God's mercy, Who is much in sparing sinners, and with whom is plentiful redemption. Psal. 130, 7. Let them not fear the temptations of the devil, who goeth about like a roaring Lyon, seeking whom he may devour, 1 Pet.

5, 8, but assure themselves, that albeit with Peter they fall often, yet if with him they repent truly, & weep bitterly for their sins, the Lord is merciful to forgive them their sins. Not that we should sin proudly presumptuously, stubbornly, stiffly and obstinately against him, that grace may abound, Romans, chapter 6, verse 1: but if we sin thorough frailty, he will not shut us frō his mercy. The devil will tempt often, the world allure often, the flesh entice often; so we may fall often through the temptations of the devil, thorough the allurements of the world, and thorough the enticements of the flesh. If they did draw us and provoke us to sin but once, we should fall but once; but they are ever at our elbow to work our ruin, and forsake us not forever, as the devil departed from Christ only for a season. Luke. 4, 13. But the Lord knoweth whereof we are made, He remembereth that we are but dust: he considereth that we are but flesh, yea as a wind that passeth and cometh not again. Psal. 103, 14, and 78, 39. So that albeit we be often overcome by sin, yet if we often repent and return unto him, he is a Father that hath more then one blessing in store, and a liberal giver that reproacheth no man, and pardoneth those that have often asked and begged pardon. It followeth.

[Here is neither bread nor water, and our soul loatheth this light bread.] Here is the sin of this people: after God had plentifully and abundantly fed them to the full, they wax wanton and weary of this food, they account their Manna a vile and contemptible meat, albeit it were most precious, and named therefore, Angels food. The doctrine from this corrupt practice, is this; y^t we wax weary, loathe, and contemn God's blessings, which we seemed at the first with joy and gladness to receive. We soon learn to contemn, to make little and light account of spiritual and temporal blessings, for this Manna was both. We see this in our first parents, they were compassed with the kindness of God, and hedged about with his mercies, yet were not long contented with them, nor rested in them with thanksgiving, but lusted to taste of the tree of be knowledge of good and evil, and would be as gods, knowing good and evil. Gen. 3, 6. So Esau was the first borne, he should have delighted therein as in a pledge of God's favor, and a mirror of his great mercy, yet he grew profane and secure, he sold the birthright, and contemned the blessing. This Solomon teacheth, Prov. 27, 7. The person that is full, despiseth an honey-comb, but unto the hungry soul, every bitter thing is sweet. The like we read in Moses, Deut. 32, 15. He that should have been upright, when he waxed fat, spurned with his heel: thou art gross, thou art laden with fatness: therefore he forsook God that made him, and regarded not the strong God of his salvation. Thus we see how ready we are to despise God's graces, and so to come to the very top of iniquity.

[Reason 1] The reasons follow to be considered. First, it is not much to be maruailed at, that we wax weary of good things, because we want the spirit of discerning and of judgment to see into our own selves. Hence it is, that we hold not on in a certain and settled course the way of godliness which we are entered into. We halt in our journey, and many ways trip before we come to the end, thereof. And the reason is, because we weigh not heavenly things with the weights of the Sanctuary, but put thē in the partial and deceitful balances of our own brains, whereby we deceive our selves, rob God of his honor, & prize the best things at a vile rate, as Christ was valued at thirty pence. This sencelesnesse & sottishness, Christ himself checked in the Israelites, saying unto thē, when he was come near to the City and beheld it with tears, O, if thou hadst even known at the least in this day, those things which belong unto thy peace; but now are they hid from thine eyes. Where there is this blindness of mind, this security of heart, this want of judgment to discern of their estate & condition aright, no marvel if there be a loathing and leaving of good things, as was among the Israelites in this place.

Secondly, we are so besotted and bewitched [Reason 2] with the glittering show of this world, and of the things in this world, that we have no leisure to mind the world to come, and are so pampered up with the peace, and plenty, and pleasures of the world, that as resty horses we spurn against our Creator, as Moses complaineth, and we heard before. As we are of the earth by creation, so we always carry a lump of this earth about us, our hands are full of it, our eyes look upon it, our feet tread upon it, our senses are exercised with it, our talk & communication is upon it, our hearts are possessed with it, and all our life long we dwell upon it. Seeing therefore this mould of earth & earthly things hath taken such root in us, no marvel if we grow carnal and secure, wax wanton and weary of the word, and of those ways that lead unto life and salvation. This doth our blessed Savior teach us, Mat. 13, 22, in the Parable of the Sower, He that received the seed among thorns, is he that heareth the word, but the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word, and he is made unfruitful.

The uses hereof are, first to show us the [Use 1] difference between the godly and ungodly. For the godly do magnify God's graces, set them at an higher rate, & make a greater reckoning of them than of all earthly things. This appeareth, Mat. 13, 44, 45, 46. The kingdom of God is like unto a treasure hid in the field, which when a man hath found, he hideth it, & for joy thereof departeth, and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field. Again, the kingdom of heaven is like to a Merchant man that seeketh good Pearls; who having found a Pearl of great price, went & sold all that he had, and bought it. So the Apostle Paul accounteth all things loss, and judgeth them as dung, that he might win Christ, & might be found in him; not having his own righteousness which is of the Law, but the righteousness of God through Christ. But the ungodly despise the graces of God, like the Gadarenes, who preferred their swine before Christ, Math. 8, 34, and like profane Esau, who for one portion of meat sold his birthright. If they sustain any damage or loss in their riches, and substance of their house, how are they grieved and vexed? How do they howl and cry out as if they were utterly undone? What seeking and searching, far and near, is made to find the same? And they are of such impatency of spirit, that they are never quiet till they have found the same. What man having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave ninety and nine in the wilderness, & go after that which is lost, until he find it? Either what woman having ten groats, if she lose one groat, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it? Luke 15, v. 4, 8.

But if the gifts and graces of GOD decay in them, if they lose his favor and loving countenance, if they grow poor and thread bare in spiritual blessings, it never troubleth their minds, it never grieueth their hearts, they never complain of any wants: for being wholly earthly, plodding upon the world like earth worms, they have no feeling of the want of heavenly things. Would we therefore know a faithful man from an unfaithful? and would we have some assured mark and token to discern the one from the other? Mark how they esteem things that concern a better life. If they rejoice in the word of God as they that find great spoils, if first they seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, if they labor after the excellent knowledge of Christ, and stir up the precious gifts of God in them, we have unfeigned testimonies of their unfeigned faith. But if we see any contemn knowledge, and despise the graces of God, if we see them tread under their feet the sweet blessings of God, as swine do precious Pearls, they give evident witness against their own souls, and do carry about them in their own bosoms, a note of horrible profaneness.

Secondly, let us look carefully unto our [Use 2] selves, and learn daily to call our selves to a reckoning & account for the benefits of God which have been bestowed upon us, lest we unthankfully devour and wickedly swallow them up, forgetting both them and the giver of them, which are moe in number then the hairs of our heads. Let us also learn to feel our own poverty and wants. Hunger, we say, commonly is the best sauce; so the surest and fittest remedy to recover us of this sin of loathing and discontentment, is to consider our need and necessity of heavenly graces, and what want we have of the word, which is the food of our souls, sweeter then the honey and the honey-comb, more to be desired then the finest gold yea, then all riches, more precious then Pearls, and all things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto it. Psal. 19, 10, and 119, 103. Prouerb. 3, 15.

Now we shall never be weary of this our weariness and contempt of the best things, until we have learned as new borne babes to desire the sincere milk of the word of God, that we may grow thereby. 1 Pet. 2• 1. Therefore the Prophet calleth such to hear him, Isaiah 55, 1. Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and ye that have no silver, come, buy and eat▪ come, I say, buy wine and milk without silver, and without money. Hereunto cometh that which Christ proclaimed at the last▪ and great day of the feast, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. John 7, 37. This was the affection of the Prophet David, Psal. 143, 5, 6. and 63, 1, 5. I meditate in the works of thine hands, I stretch forth mine hands unto thee, my soul desireth after thee as the thirsty Land exceedingly. So thē, when we come to the banquets of God w^c he hath furnished for us, we must come with hungry stomachs, craving to be satisfied and filled with his dainties. We see when men go to a great feast prepared and prouidedfor them, whereunto they are curteously invited, they do not fill themselues before hand, but come with hunger and desire: so must we do in coming to the exercises of our religion. Seeing then, Wisdom hath built her an house, killed her victualles, and prepared her Table, calling us to come eat of her meat, and drink of the wine which she hath drawn, Prov. 9, 1, 2, 5, it is our parts to come to the Word and Sacraments, as to the high ordinances of God with a ready mind, with a thirsty soul, and with a good appetite, that we may be satisfied as with marrow and fatness. He affordeth unto us a plentiful allowance, and appointeth unto us a liberal diet: he dealeth not sparingly and niggardly with us, but inviteth us as his guests to good cheare and bountiful provision of his word, prayer, and Sacraments. If then God have denied unto us this worlds good, that we are driven to rise early, & fare hardly at home in our own houses, and sometimes have scarce a crust of bread, and a pot of water, yet here is matter of great contentment and cⁿsolation, that we have such plenty of spiritual provision provided for the soul in the house of God whereby we are nourished to eternal life, and comfortably taught to bear the penury and distresses of the body. A dinner of green herbs, and God's word going with it, are notable sare. For as one said; The Gospel and brown bread are good cheer.

Lastly▪ consider from this natural loathing of the blessings and best things of God, why GOD especially punisheth those places and people; even because they are fallen into a spiritual surfeit, as it were into a deadly sleep and slumber, and are clogged and cloied with the store and plenty of that food which God hath given them. When the Gospel was restored to us again, as the book of the Law that Hilkiah the Priest found; with what joy of heart, and applause of the people; with what comfort and courage was it heard in the beginning? How precious and sweet was it to our taste? How zealous and forward were we in hearing the Lord, and calling others thereunto? But in these days, wherein we have it continued in plenty and abundance that we may sit under our Vines and Fig trees, conferring and reasoning of the ways of God, how many loathe it? how many neglect it? how few receive it? who doth prize it as he ought to do? We are cloyed with the preaching of the word: we are heart-sick of peace and prosperity. It were an happy and blessed cure to restore us to the former days of our health. This surfeit is the common sickness, & almost desperate disease of our Land, that all her spiritual Physicians know not which way to turn their hands and their heads to cure & recover her. Such as once have taken a surfeit by eating any meat, are ordinarily prescribed by the Physician to fast, to bring them to a stomach and appetite again: and whensoever the body is distempered by repletion, the way to recover, is to take the diet, as the masters of that faculty do affirm. So God, as the chief Physician of the soul, when we once begin to loathe and abhor our meat, and to surfeit of the food which he sendeth, bringeth upon us most worthily and justly the famine of his word. And do we not see (if we be not altogether blinded) how he beginneth now for our sins to diet us? and many assemblies ranged in goodly order, which made heaven and earth to ring and resound with the praises of God, to be left as sheep dispersed abroad, and wandering in the Mountains without a Shepherd? This is that which the Lord long since threateneth to his people, as one of his sorest and sharpest judgments. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the Land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord: and they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the North even to the East, shall they run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it, &c. Amos 8, 11, 12, 13. A great & grievous Thunderbolt thrown down upon the heads of all careless contemners of the word, they shall have it taken from them. The child that is plentifully and fully fed, and hath whatsoever he craveth and calleth for, at last waxeth wantō, he beginneth to play & dally with his meat, he breaketh it into pieces, & casteth it to the dogs: therefore it is necessary sometimes that he should be abridged & pinched, and cry heartily for it before he have it. So doth God deal with us when the food of his heavenly word is danled and dallied withal, and trodden as a vile thing of base worth under our unclean feet, he is constrained to take away the benefit of his word ftom us, & make us oftentimes in the anguish of our spirit, to call and cry unto him in the want of it, before he restore the same unto us again. And ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, keep not silence, and give him no rest until he repair, and until he set up Jerusalem, the praise of the world. Let us repent and return betimes, evē while it is called today, lest the Gospel be taken away from us. For as we shown before, among all sins, the contempt of the word is one of the chiefest that crieth to heaven for vengeance to fall upon us. This the Lord Jesus teacheth in many places, Whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or that City, shake off the dust of your feet: truly, I say unto you, it shall be easier for them of the Land of Sodom and Gomorrhah, in the day of judgment then for that City. Mat. 10, 14, 15, and 11, 23. Acts 13, 51.

This serveth to comfort the Ministers in the course of teaching, and showeth how much God esteemeth his Gospel, and striketh a fear into all rebellious contemners of his word. This ceremony of shaking off the dust from the feet used among the Jews, served to be as a figure of cursing, & as a witness against the inhabitants of that wicked place, as if they corrupted the earth and infected the places of their abode with their contagion. The Apostles of Christ were not commanded to use such a solemn kind of denunciation and detestation against murderers, drunkards, adulterers, thieves, false witnesses, perjured persons, & such heinous malefactors, but against the contemners of the Gospel; which teacheth that God is not more offended with any offense, then with the contempt of his word: therefore he affirmeth, that such shall be more grievously punished thē the Sodomites, who were destroyed with fire and brimstone from heaven. This toucheth us nearly who yet enjoy the Gospel, and live under the shadow and protection of it: let us remember that we are fallen from our first love and liking of it: let us repent and do the first works, lest the axe being laid to y^e root of the tree, he come against us shortly, and remove our candle-stick out of his place, except we repent from our harts.

[Ver. 6. Wherefore the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, &c.] He showeth in these words whence the punishment of fiery serpents came upon them; not by chance or fortune, not from the nature of the soil and wilderness it self, but from God. So then the present judgment upon them is amplified by the author, The Lord sent them. This teacheth, that all punishments, diseases, and judgments of what sort and condition soever, are inflicted upon us by the hand of God. Whatsoever visitations fall upon us, and the rest of the sons of men, are laid upon us at the will & pleasure of God. This appeareth in Moses, when the old world was not spared, but a general flood brought upon the ungodly, God warned Noah to prepare the Ark to the saving of his household, and said, An end of all flesh is come before me, I will destroy from the earth, the man whom I have created, from man to beast, to the creeping thing, and to the fowl of the heaven. And speaking of the destruction of the Sodomites, (who were exceeding sinners against y^e Lord) he saith, The Lord rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrhah, brimstone and fire, from the Lord out of heaven. Gen. 19, 24. So when Abimelech King of Gerar, took away Abraham's wife, & afterward was constrained by the hand of God to restore her, it is said, Gen. 21, 17, 18. God healed him and his wife, and they bare childrē, for the Lord had shut up every womb of the house of Abimelech, because of Sarah Abraham's wife. This point is also at large confirmed, Leu. 26, 16, 17. If ye will not obey me, nor do all these commandments, I will appoint over you fearfulness, a consumption, and the burning ague, the sword, famine, and pestilence to destroy you, and to make you few in number, so as your high ways shall be desolate. It was the Lord that brought the ten plagues upon Egypt. It is the Lord that smote Nabal that he died. It is the Lord that formeth the light, and createth darkness; he maketh peace, and createth evil. It is the Lord that doth all these things. Finally, there is no evil in the City, which the Lord hath not done, Amos 3, 6. All which things agree fitly with this history in hand, that God sent fiery serpents among his people, and do teach us, that he is the author of all judgments & punishments that fall upon us, or upon any of the sons of men.

The reasons hereof are evident and apparent. [Reason 1] First, afflictions come not upon us at all adventures, they proceed not from the earth, or the air, or the heauē, it is the hand of God that lighteth upon us for our sins. For what can any one or all the creatures of God do of themselves? or what power is there in them to be revenged upon us? This therefore is our great folly, that we unwise men, gaze about here and there, wandering up and down in our own imaginations, and searching all the corners of our wits to find out the causes of our calamities out of our selves, and yet all y^e while we perceive not the true and right cause to be in our selves. Whensoever a man hath any adversity, he must look up to God, & into himself. When we see the air infected, it is not so disposed of it self. When God sendeth famine, and maketh the heaven as iron, y^e ground as brass, it is not so hardened of it own nature. When the earth is barren and unfruitful, it proceedeth not of it own kind, but we our selves are the cause of all. Whensoever therefore we have woeful experience, and a lamentable feeling of many miseries, we must not cast our eyes hither and thither, but every man must enter into himself, & search out his particular sins, assuring himself that God knocketh at the door of his heart, and thereby provokes him to consider beter of his own ways. This Eliphaz beateth upon, Job 5, 5, 6, 7. The hungry shall eat up his harvest, and the thirsty shall drink up their substance: for misery cometh not forth of the dust, neither doth affliction spring out of the earth, &c.

[Reason 2] Secondly, God worketh out afflictions, he claimeth and challengeth them as his own peculiar work, that no man should be able to control anything in this world. This the wise man urgeth, Eccles. 7, 16. In the day of wealth be of good comfort, and in the day of affliction consider GOD also hath made this contrary to that, to the intent that man should find nothing after him.

The uses of the doctrine are many. First, we [Use 1] learn in all troubles and calamities on us and those that are ours, to look up to God as the chief & principal author of them frō whence they come, and upon our selves and our own sins, from whom they come. It falleth out with many, as it doth with the dog, if a man throw a stone at him, he runneth eagerly and angerly after it, he falleth upon it, and biteth it: so do men of this world, when God any way visiteth them, they look upon inferior means, as the highest causes which they can reach unto, but never cast up their eyes to the Lord, whose hand and work it is: whereas we are bound to behold the stroke of God in all our distresses. We silly men accuse sometimes heat, and sometimes cold; sometimes drouth, & sometimes moisture; sometimes y^e ground▪ and sometimes the air; sometimes one thing, and sometimes another thing, to be the cause of our calamity, but cannot be brought to find out the true and proper cause. True it is, the Lord hath secret causes that we know not of, sometimes the manifestation of his own works, sometimes the trial of our faith; and we must take heed we measure not the greatness of the sin by the greeuousnesse of the cross, wherein the Apostles themselves were deceived. Notwithstanding, the revealed and original cause of all calamity, hath his beginning and head-spring from our iniquity, insomuch that if we had in us no guilt of corruption, we should not taste at all of the cup of affliction. This the Prophet teacheth, Lam. 3, 39. Wherefore is the living man sorrowful? Man suffereth for his sin. And our Savior warneth the man that had been diseased 38 years, finding him in the Temple, to consider the cause of his long and lamentable affliction, Thou art made whole, sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee: so that this disease was laid upon him for his sin. He thought himself an happy man when he was restored to health. Now lest he should rest therein, the Lord telleth him he must change his heart, or else God will bring seven times more plagues upon him, according to his sins: though he had been afflicted many years, yet he would make his judgments upon him more wonderful, even great plagues of long continuance, and sore diseases of long durance. To the same purpose the Apostle saith, The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, which with-hold the truth in unrighteousness Ro. 1, verse 18. Wherefore, every visitation of God, should be a sermon of repentance, to put us in remembrance of our sins, & to admonish us, not to sow upon the furrows of unrighteousness, lest we reap the crop of affliction an hundred fold. Let us desire God to sanctify the cross unto us, that it may consume sin in us, and provoke us to a more holy conversation.

[Use 2] Secondly, the meditation of this, that God is the author of all afflictions, must teach us to have patience in our troubles; not to murmur not to repine, not to grudge when we are under the cross. For seeing God hath visited me with his hand, I must take it patiently, as a dutiful child beareth the chastisements of his father. This the Prophet practiced, as we see, Psal. 39, 9: I spake not a word, but held my peace, because thou Lord didst it. This the Apostle teacheth, Heb. 12, 5, 6. My son, despise not the chastening of the Lord, neither faint when thou art rebuked of him; for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and he scourgeth every son that he receiveth. The flesh always seeketh ease, and is ready to be impatient, if deliverance come not by and by; so that we must remember from whence our trouble cometh, to assuage the sorrow and bitterness of our affliction. For this is a great comfort to God's children, that our sickness, yea every pang & fit of our sickness is from God; the manner of it, the measure of it, the time of it, the matter of it, is of God: which giveth good assurance and affiance that God will be merciful and gracious unto us, seeing he striketh us, that is our Father, and in the stroke (be it never so sharp) he cannot forget his former compassions, but he will make all things fall out to further our salvation; neither will he lay more stripes and strokes upon us, thē we shall be able to bear. He will make a way for us to escape: he will make our bed in all our sickness: he putteth our tears in his bottle: his left hand is under our head, and his right hand doth embrace us. Let us comfort one another in these things.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it standeth us upon, whensoever his hand is upon us, to seek to him for health, that smiteth and no man healeth; that maketh the wound, and no man restoreth. We are directed by this consideration, to whom to seek for our recovery; to wit, first to the hand that striketh, and next to go to man's help, which is his ordinance. We must not first seek to the Physician, as Asa did, 2 Chron. 16, 13, but first be reconciled to God, the chief Physician of soul and body, and pray unto him in our trouble, as Hezekiah did, Isaiah 38, 2. Let us never look, that any means (be they never so excellent) shall profit us, and prosper with us, until we be at peace with God, and have renewed our repentance from dead works for our daily sins. This the Apostle showeth, I am. 5, 13. Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. This condemneth those that seek to witches and wizards, and forget the God of their salvation, who killeth and maketh alive, bringeth down to the grave, and raiseth up again. Let us thereby be put in mind of our death, which is God's messenger and seriant to arest us, and to bring us into his presence. Let us ever prepare our selves to depart in peace, cOnsidering that as the home of death shall take us, so the day of judgment shall find us. Here we repent, or else we repent never. Here is time of changing and turning, but after this life, there is no more place of repentance, but an horrible expectation and fearful looking for of judgment, which shall devour the adversaries. The Scripture teacheth, that Cain that evil man, was of evil one and slew his brother: we may multiply thousands of years since he uttered that fearful and comfortless speech, My sin is greater then ca be pardoned, my punishment is greater then can be suffered; yet when Christ shall break the heavens, and come to judge the quick and dead, he shall appear no otherwise at the last day, thē as he was taken out of this life. The like we might say of Esau, of Saul, of Judas, and of others, who ended their days in desperation; as they died, so they shall be judged, & abide forever after judgment. As they turned not to God their Creator while they lived, so they shall receive no ease or alteration in their estate when they are once departed, and have received judgment: of whom we may say as Christ once spake of Judas, It had been good for these men, if they had never been borne. Mat. 26, 24. For not to be, is ten thousand times better then ever to be in a living death, in cōtinuall horror and desperation, where their worm dieth not, & the fire never goeth out. This was the use that Hezekiah made of his sickness, Es. 38, 10, 11: I said in the cutting off of my days, I shall go to the gates of the grave, I am deprived of the residue of my years: I said, I shall not see the Lord, even the Lord in the Land of the living, I shall see man no more among the Inhabitants of the world. Wherefore, in sickness we are taught to seek health of God, and to be put in mind of our mortality.

Lastly, when God hath shown mercy upon [Use 4] us in our deliverance, let us spend the residue of our days in a godly conversation. It is a common and ordinary matter to make solemn promises and protestations to becOme new men if we recover. Many do then lament the former errors and ignorances of their life: but when they have obtained mercy at the hands of God, when they have found a blessing and been restored, they become as lewd and profane as they were before. And this moved Christ our Savior to exhort the impotent man to sin no more, lest a more grievous judgment were brought upon him. John. 5, 14. We see how Hezekiah being healed, the third day after he went up to the house of the Lord to praise him, & to speak of his goodness, who had seen his tears, heard his prayers, and who had removed his afflictions: The grave cannot confess thee, death cannot praise thee, they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth; but the living, the living, he shall confess thee, as I do this day, the father to the children shall declare thy truth. This duty is required of us all, when we are delivered from our sickness or sorrow, from trouble & calamity, to be thankful to God, and mindful of his mercy. Let everyone examine his own heart, how he hath practiced this duty, & what use he hath made of his affliction. There is none of us but hath a blessed experience of God's goodness toward him, he hath oftentimes preserved us from dangers, restored us from sickness, delivered us from diseases, freed us from troubles: happy are we, if thereby we have profited unto amendment of life, and in the study of godliness and be careful that we fall not back again into our former offenses. We must not be like to Pharaoh, who returned to his vomit, and the hardness of his heart, after he was freed from the plagues of God, lest with him we be destroyed by the just hand of God.

[The Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, which stung the people, so that many of them died.] God might have destroyed these ever-murmuring Israelites by the Canaanites or Edomites their adversaries; he hath men and Angels at his book and commandment to afflict them, and overthrow them: but he sendeth stinging serpents which tormented thē, and a multitude of venomous beasts upon thē, that they might know, that where with a man sinneth, by the same also he shall be punished, as we shown before.

The Doctrine from hence, is, that GOD hath all creatures in his own hand, and he armeth them at his own pleasure to execute his will, and being so employed, they are of great force. the least, the meanest the smallest of God's creatures being sent of God, do mightily prevail to the advancement of his own glory & to the destruction of all his enemies. This is plentifully taught in the history of the plagues of Egypt; God did not send out his Angels against them, nor leauy an host of horse-men and foot-men, but he sent an army of lice, of frogs, of flies, and these were confessed to be the finger of God, Exod. 8, 6, 16, 19, 24, and were able to daunt and bring down all the pride & presumption of the Egyptians. So when God would plague the Philistines, who had destroyed his people, taken the Ark of God, and blessed their Idols for the victory, he sent a multitude of Mice that destroyed their Land, to the ende they might learn to give glory unto the God of Israel, and acknowledge the plague to proceed from him. Thus likewise when the Assyrians, brought into the Cities of Israel, worshipped not God aright, but made them molten Images, and served all the host of heaven, 2 King. 17, 25, he sent Lions among them which slew them. When Herod had stretched out his hand to vex certain of the Church, Acts 12, 1, 2.23. had killed James, and put Peter in prison, intending after the Passover to bring him forth to the people, the Angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not glory unto God, so that he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost. The Scripture is full of such examples, how God destroyed the old world with waters, Gen. 7, 41, Sisera and his army with the River Kishon, that ancient River, the River Kison, when the Stars fought in order against Sisera. Albeit we say in a common Proverb, As weak as water: yet it was strong enough, and it is still strong enough (as we see by experience in such floods and inundations as pleaseth God to send) when he armeth it against his enemies, whereby he taketh away the fruits of the earth, wasteth the increase of our cartell, casteth down our houses and dwelling places, and sweepeth away (as with a besom) the Inhabitants of the earth. Sodom and Gomorrhah were consumed with fire and brimstone from heaven. All these things as examples of God's judgments teach us, that he need not march against us in his own person, or set upon us with millions of his Angels, or assault us with an host of men; he can send out the smallest and silliest of his creatures to our destruction, and make the least and lowest of them accomplish the greatest works, so often as it pleaseth him.

This appeareth by sundry reasons. First, all [Reason 1] power is of God, who as he saveth with many or with few so he destroyeth with many or with few; with the strong, or with the weak▪ with reasonable creatures, or unreasonable, with living things, or wanting life. The meanest and basest have power enough, the most contemptible have force and might enough to hurt, to punish, and to destroy, when God useth their service; neither can any flesh resist them with all their craft and cunning, they are able to cast down our high looks, when we swell in pride against him. So then, whatsoever the means are, the power of then is of God, Ezek. 5, 16. When weak man taketh up any weapon into his hands (though without sense & life) whē he shooteth an arrow, draweth a sword, throweth a dart, or pusheth with the Pike, we see oftentimes great and deadly effects to follow. How much more whē the strong God armeth himself with any of his creatures, shall he be able to overthrow his enemies, and to bring strange things to pass?

Secondly, it pleaseth God to employ, and [Reason 2] set on work contemptible and base things, to use foolish things to confound the wise, & to choose weak things of the world to overturn mighty things, yea, vile things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, & things which are not, to bring to naught things that are; to daunt pride by weakness, and glory by shame, and honor by dishonor, that no flesh should rejoice in his presence. It more fretteth and galleth an high mind to be crossed and countermanded by mean things, then by things of reckoning and account. We see this in the example of Abimelech, Judge. 9, 54. who being wounded by a woman, besought his servant to slay him, rather then it should be said, that a woman had slain him. It had been an easy thing with the Lord, whē in the Land of Egypt he turned the dust of the earth into Lice, to have turned it into Lions and Bears, into Wolves & Tigers, of strange greatness, and cruel fierceness; but it pleased him rather to deal in this manner, the more to pull down the mighty, and to scatter the proud in the imaginations of their heart.

Thirdly, he is the Maker and Creator of all [Reason 3] things, so that they are not only his creatures, and the workmanship of his hands, but his servants and soldiers, to serve him, & fight his battles against his adversaries, such as all ungodly persons are; he is the General of this army, and therefore is called, The Lord of hosts, Isaiah 1, 9, having these as his serievants and attendants to do his will. When he saith to his army go, it goeth; or come, it cometh: or do this, by and by it doth it.

The uses remain to be considered. From [Use 1] hence we learn, that the power of God is absolute and infinite, without limit or restraint, who is able by an army of mean creatures, to put us to foil & flight, whatsoever our might and manhood be we boast of. What? hath not God, men and Angels to command? Yes, yes, he hath them all at his pleasure to be employed. But he needeth not to arm the sons of men, or troops of Angels, if he do but hiss or whistle for any of his creatures, they come forth with store & strength out of their places against us; as it were in battle array. This the Prophet Joel teacheth, chap. 1, verses 3, 4, 19, 20. So then, we must learn to acknowledge the great power of God; who governeth all things in heaven and earth to work his will. For as the Prophet saith, Psal. 94, 9. He that made the eye, shall not he see? or the ear, shall not he hear? So may we in like manner reason: He that giveth power, shall not he have power? He that putteth strength into his creatures shall not he be armed with strength himself? Now, we have already declared, that what force and might soever is in any of his creatures, it is a spark of his flame, it is an arm of his sea, it is a gift of his treasures, & therefore we are bound to acknowledge and confess, to believe and to rest in his power that doth terrible things, for his own Names sake.

[Use 2] Secondly, we are taught hereby to stand in fear of God, to tremble under this mighty Commander of sea and land, and to beware we do not teaze with him, or provoke him to anger & indignation against us, seeing he hath so many royal Camps of armed soldiers in readiness, to be revenged of us, & to destroy us, when, and how, and where it pleaseth him. He is able to cut us down as grass, to blow us away as dust, to sweep us away as dung, & to tread upon us as worms of the earth: he needeth no weapon for the matter, he can scatter us as chaff before the wind, he can make the least dust to be our death, and the smallest vermin to be our destruction. If he arm the silly & simple fly, it is able to work out our confusion, and is far above our power to encounter and buckle withal. These are the men of war that God chooseth to wage battle for him, and to pull down the hautinesse of our hearts. Let us profit to humility, and stoop down under his hand. He can as easily send strange plagues, strange diseases & mortality among us, as he in former times hath done. This the Prophet Jeremiah teacheth, chap. 5, 21, 22, 24. Hear now this, O foolish people, and without understanding, which have eyes and see not, which have ears and hear not; fear ye not me, saith the Lord? Or will ye not be afraid at my presence? which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea, by a perpetual decree that it cannot pass it, & though the waves thereof rage and roar, they cannot prevail or pass over it.

Lastly, this teacheth, that none can escape [Use 3] judgment, and though hand join in hand, the ungodly shall never go unpunished. For as it ministereth comfort to the faithful in all dāgers to put their trust & affiance in God, who hath so many soldiers and servants to protect and defend them; so on the other side it assureth tribulation and anguish, death and destruction to every soul that doth evil. Look how many creatures he hath, so many means he hath to destroy us, and we cannot escape if we be at war and defiance with him. If God be on our side, who shall be against us? Rom. 8, 31. But if he be against us, what creature shall stand with us? Nay, what creature is not armed against us? If God be our enemy, nothing in heauē or earth can show us any good, or be in league and friendship with us, but is ready to bid us battle, and to proclaim open war against us. Therefore the Prophet saith, God is jealous, and the Lord revengeth, he will take vengeance on his adversaries, and here serveth wrath for his enemies: the Lord is slow to anger, but he is great in power, and will not surely clear the wicked: the Mountains tremble, and the Hills melt before him, the earth is burnt at his fight, yea the world & all that dwell therein: Who can stand before his wrath? his wrath is poured out like fire, and the Rocks are broken by him. If a man were compassed about with thousands of his enemies, and hemmed in on every side with a mighty host ready to draw their swords, and discharge their Ordinance at him, would he not despair of deliverance, and put his soul in his hand as the Prophet speaks? This is the estate of all natural and wicked men. All creatures above their head and under their feet, on the right hand, on the left hand, and round about them, before them and behind them, are set against them, & have made a general conspiracy against them. It were a vain hope and foolish presumption for such a prisoner to dream of freedom & deliverance. The murder of Abel lying heavy upon the heart and conscience of Cain, made him stand in fear of every creature that came to meet him, or ouertooke him. If then we would be at peace with the creatures, and find peace in our own selves, which passeth all understanding, labor first of all to be at peace with God. Let him have no quarrel or controversy against us. Let us send out an Embassy of peace, and hang out of our hearts a flag of truce, that he may call back his army from pursuing of us. If he once blow the retreat, all his soldiers retire, they are all able to do us no hurt, the stones of the street shall be in league with us, all creatures shall serve them that serve the Lord. Seeing therefore, the least of God's creatures are made by him too strong for a kingdom, who shall be able to resist his power? Seeing in his wrath he can arm all the creatures in heaven and earth against us, the meanest whereof is above our strength, what vain hearts have we in our breasts, and what wicked tongues in our profane mouths, to think and speak it, that we will shift well enough with his judgments? Let us shake at his infinite power betimes, lest the fire of his jealousy burn against us, and it cannot be quenched. Let us tremble at our security and presumption, that have taken hold upon us, lest the guiltiness thereof shake and shiuer us in pieces for evermore, seeing he bringeth out his armies by number, & calleth them by their names. Isaiah 40, 26.

[Verse 7. Then the people came to Moses, & said, We have sinned, for we have spoken against the Lord and against thee.] Mark here, how the Israelites seek help and succor of Moses. A man would have thought, that this rout of Rebels, of all other would not have gone to Moses, nor have stooped down to him, whom before they had contemptuously scorned, contumeliously abused, and despitefully spoken against; yet in their misery they making a virtue of necessity, come with one accord to Moses to be helped & succoured, to be relieved and prayed for; they can find no comfort nor remedy but in him. We learn from hence, this doctrine; Such as are disobedient & wicked, are oftentimes driven to seek comfort and help of the godly, whom they have scorned and derided, reviled and spoken against I say, ungodly men, and such as blaspheme God, and are enemies to God and to his servants, are many times enforced and constrained to sue to them whom they have despised, and to seek to them in their necessity and extremity, when they are in affliction, and the hand of GOD is any ways heavy upon them. This appeareth in many places of the word of God; Abimelech having taken the wife of Abraham, and wronged him in the most precious part of his possession, standeth in need of his prayer, that he might live, & be healed of the diseases that God had laid upon him and his people. In like manner Isaac was hated of the Philistines, they envied his riches, they stopped his wels, they oppressed him with injuries, and banished him their country: and yet behold, they are constrained immediately to seek peace of him, and to make a covenant with him, so that albeit they hated him, and put him away from them, yet the King & his Captain are glad to come unto him, Gen. 26, 24, 25, 26. For they feared him, and saw certainly that the Lord was with him. The like submission we see in Pharaoh, albeit he hardened his heart, and often had contemned and reviled Moses, yet in the greuousnesse of the judgment, he sendeth for Moses and Aaron, and saith, I have now sinned: the Lord is righteous, but I and my people are wicked; pray ye unto the Lord for me, that there be no more mighty thunders amd hail. Exod. 9, 27, and 11, 8. Such an example is recorded, 1 Kings 13, 4, 6, touching Jeroboam, who albeit he regarded not the word of the Prophet, but raged against him, and stretched out his hand from the Altar, saying Lay hold on him: yet when his hand was dried up, so as he could not pull it in again unto him, he humbled himself greatly in the present feeling of this punishment, and besought that Prophet to pray to the Lord his God, and make intercession for him, that his hand might be restored. Thus Saul seeketh to David, 1 Sam. 24, 21, 22. Beltshazzar to Daniel, Dan. 5, 12, 13. Zedekiah to Jeremiah, Ier. 37, 3. The foolish virgins to the wise, Mat. 25, 8. Haman had conspired the destruction of the Church, and thirsted after the bloody massacre of the Saints of God, (whose death is precious in his sight) yet in the end he saw mischief prepared for him, & he stood up to make request for his life unto Queen Ester, chap. 3, 9, and 7, 7. Thus the saying and sentence of the wise man is verified, Prov. 14, 19. The evil shall bow before the good; and the wicked at the gates of the righteous.

Neither let us doubt of this truth, or greatly marvel at it. For God hath planted & imprinted [Reason 1] such a majesty in the person of those that are unfeignedly godly, & truly religious, that the most desperate and despicable wicked men fear their faces, and reverence their presence. If then the ungodly fear them, it is no great marvel, though they fall down before them many times in submissive manner. But the ungodly do often fear them, therefore it cannot seem strange unto us, if they do some reverence unto them. This we see in Herod, Mark. 6.20. He feared John, knowing that he was a just man, and an holy, and revered him; and when he heard him he did many things and heard him gladly. So when the people saw how God heard the prayer of Samuel, they feared Samuel exceedingly. 1 Sam. 12, 18. Such is the force of innocence, that it convinceth the enemies in their own consciences, and driveth them to do homage, and veil their bonnet to the servants of God.

Again it is the will of God, that all such [Reason 2] as humble themselves, should be exalted, and the lowly in heart should be advanced: so also such as exalt themselves, should be brought low; and therefore it is no marvel, if GOD even in this life do many times for the manifestation of his mercy and justice, lift up the heads of his own children, & cast down the wicked under their feet. Hence it is, y^t Christ Jesus was so much delighted with this sentence so often repeated by him in the Gospel, Whosoever exalteth himself, shall be brought low, but he that humbleth himself shall be exalted, Math. 23, 12. Luke 18, 14.

[Use 1] Now let us make use of this doctrine. First, seeing the unfaithful be oftentimes constrained to sue to the faithful for their help, as the rich glutton did to Abraham; let us all learn to plant true godliness in our hearts, and to turn to the Lord with all our souls, that we may have our part and portion in this preeminence: and let us walk worthy of our places, and of this privilege, honor, and dignity. Seeing almighty God maketh us spiritual Kings to rule and reign, and often subjecteth the wicked under us, let us not be slaves to our own lusts and corruptions, but rule with authority and dominion over them, and labor to subdue sin unto us. We see the Princes of this world will not dishonor and debase themselves with base Offices. We are Kings and Princes to God in this life, let us then walk worthy of this dignity, as the Apostle urgeth this duty from us, 2 Thess. 1, 10, 11. The Lord shall come to be glorified in his Saints, and to be made marvelous in all them that believe in that day: wherefore, we also pray for you always, that our God may make you worthy for this Calling, and fulfill all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power. Where we see, that after he had set down the great glory that belongeth to God's children at the coming of Christ, he exhorteth them to walk worthy of their calling, seeing it shall be glorious with Christ, and the ungodly shall be brought to utter shame, contempt, dishonor, reproach, & confusion. There is no way to bring any to true honor, but to purchase to our selves true godliness. Therefore the Lord said, 1 Sam. 2, 30. Them that honor me, I will honor, and they that despise me, shall be despised. Old age is rightly honorable, but it must be found in the way of righteousness. Prov. 16, 31. This we see to have been in Job, chap. 29, 7, 8. When I went out to the gate, even to the judgment seat, and when I caused them to prepare my seat in the street, the young men saw me, and hid themselves, and the aged arose and stood up, the Princes stayed their talk & laid hand on their mouth. Loe, thus shall they be honored that fear the Lord: and therefore blessed is the estate & condition of the godly.

[Use 2] Secondly, seeing the wicked (even in this life) are urged to seek mercy at the hands of godly men, so that God here upon earth bringeth down their heads, that before were lifted up in great pride: how much more shall this be verified in the life to come? when the redemption of God's children draweth near, their happiness shall be perfected; then they are appointed to triumph, and to have the victory over all their enemies, & tread the wicked under their feet. For the true children of God shall rule and over-rule the world, and shall trample upon the kingdom of darkness, over hell, death, damnation, the devil, the reprobate, & whatsoever setteth it self against their peace. This the Lord from the beginning taught the Church, Gen. 3, 15. He shall break thine head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. The devil shall tempt Christ, & assault his members, but not overcome them: whereas Christ shall conquer the power of death, and make his children partakers of his victory. And the Apostle Paul confirmeth the same, Rom. 16, 20. The God of peace shall tread Satan under your feet shortly.

Wherefore, albeit there be in this life and wicked world, many beastly minded men, that spread their arms far and near, & seem even to dazzle the eyes of others, through their riches, honors, power, friends, aliance, might, credit, possessions, & dominion over others, so that none dare mutter a word against them; yet the time is appointed & cometh quickly, that the godly shall sit in thrones of glory, & judge these wicked wretches that have been enemies to the Church; they shall stand at the bar like poor caitiffes, and receive frō Christ and his Saints, the sentence of condemnation, as 1 Corinth. 6.2, 3. Paul calleth the Saints of God to consideration of this prerogative, and checketh them, that they would submit themselves to the ungodly, Do ye not know, that the Saints shall judge the world? If the world then shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? Know ye not, that we shall judge the Angels? How much more, things that pertain to this life? If then the Lord bring the wicked down, and make them stoop to his servants in these days of their pilgrimage, wherein iniquity is often advanced, how much more shall we see our desire upon our enemies, when Christ which is our life, shall appear? for then we shall appear with him in glory, and be made like unto him, and see him as he is. This the Prophet assureth the Church, Mal. 4, 2, 3. Albeit therefore we be persecuted & pursued in this life, and find no rest or refreshing anywhere, yet there shall be a sudden change of our condition, when we shall triumph with Christ, over all principalities and powers, that lift themselves up against God, who shall •ue shame and contempt poured upon them. The coming of Christ shall lighten things hidden in darkness, and make a manifest difference between the godly and the ungodly. Let us wait for his glorious appearance: let us hold fast till he come that which we have, that no man may take away our crown. This Christ our Savior (who hath overcome the world) assureth, Revel. chapter 2. verses 26, 27. He that overcometh and keepeth my work unto the end, to him will I give power over Nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron, and as the vessels of a Potter, shall they be broken. And the Apostle Peter assureth us, that the Lord is not slack of his coming (as some men count slackness) but is patient toward us, that we should not perish, but come to repentance. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a noise, and the Elements shall melt with heat, and the earth with the works that are therein, shall be burnt up. Then woe shall be to the wicked, then they shall be cast down, and never be able to rise again: then they shall howl, and weep, and lament, and never be comforted again: whereas the godly shall lift up their heads, because their redemption draweth near, When it shall be a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation unto them that trouble you, but to you which are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall show himself from heaven with his mighty Angels. 2 Th. 1, 6. This therefore is a great comfort unto us, & giveth peace to our souls, that he will deal with all the ungodly, as Joshua did with the Kings which he had conquered and subdued in battle. For he commanded them to be brought out of the Cave where they were hidden, and called for all the men of Israel, and said unto the chief of the men of war which went out with him; Come near, set your feet upon the necks of these Kings, and they came near and set their feet upon their necks: and Joshua said unto them, Fear not, nor be faint-hearted, but be strong and of a good courage, for thus will the Lord do to all your enemies against whom ye fight. Josh. 10, 24, 25. So will Christ Jesus deal with all our enemies, who is the Captain of the Lord's host, he will pour shame and contempt upon them, and therefore let us not stand in fear of them, to turn out of the right way, and to forsake our profession, but be steadfast and unmovable, abounding always in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. Thus if we be faithful to the death, we shall receive an incorruptible crown of glory.

[Use 3] Lastly, observe and mark how God magnifieth the Ministry, and is able to enforce the wicked to the acknowledgement of himself, and the true Ministers of his word: and let this comfort us in the midst of all contempts and disgraces of our God, of our religion, of our faith, and of our persons. Ah, we Ministers despised by profane men, let us mark and consider this, and lay it unto our hearts: let us bear their contempts & contumelies thrown upon us. In their extremities they shall acknowledge us, they shall reverence our Calling, they shall magnify our Office, our Ministry, and Doctrine, they shall justify us & desire our prayers, they shall stoop, they shall stoop when it pleaseth God. And let this suffice all true Teachers & Preachers of the Gospel of Christ, that the power of the truth is such, as that it maketh the enemy bow y^e knee unto it, which before seemed to have no joint to bend. This is the time which the Lord hath made, let us rejoice and be glad in it, when he giveth us a comfortable experience of this doctrine, that the enemies of God and our enemies are driven to resort and repair unto us: and such as made iestes and songs of the word and of the Ministers of the word, cry out, O, how beautiful are the feet of them which bring glad tidings of good things? Rom. 10, 15. There is none of us all poor contemned men, that labor in sincerity in the vineyard of God, & bear the burden of the work and the heat of the day, but sometimes God lifteth up our heads, and honoreth us in the world, that we should not sink down under the burden; and maketh our mortal and greatest enemies, beseech us to be good unto them, and to help them in their extremities. The people of Israel despised the ministry of Samuel, & would not hearken unto him; but when they saw the lightning, and heard the thunder, and felt the rain at that unseasonable time, They feared the Lord and Samuel exceedingly, and they said unto him, Pray for thy servants unto the Lord thy God that we die not. 1 Sam. 8, 7, and 12, 18, 19. Let this profitable meditation of God's mercy toward us, devour and swallow up all disgracing and defacing of our Ministry, and teach us to wait patiently upon the Lord, who, whē the ways of a man please him, will make his enemies to be at peace with him, and alter their hearts as pleaseth him. This is a very great dignity and high privilege that God bestoweth upon his poor and contemptible servants, reproachful in the world, a gazing stock to the wicked, accounted as the off-scouring of the earth, a wonder to men and Angels: this is their honor and preeminence, they are magnified of God, and respected of the wicked in their manifold miseries, when God toucheth them in body, or afflicteth them in mind, or punisheth thē in goods, or layeth his hand vpō such as nearly concern them in the flesh. Excellent then is the estate of God's children advanced by him, and a great honor unto them, that their enemies are brought under them, & are made to sue unto them. God is able to deliver them from contempt, and to give us for the truths sake a due regard and reverence when he will. So he magnified the ministry of Moses and Aaron (as we heard before) when Pharaoh could find no comfort in his enchanters and sorcerers, nor any help in his gods or Idols, he is forced to seek comfort & help of those despised Ministers & messengers that were before hated of him: for Moses must pray unto God for him. So he magnified the ministry of his Apostles, so that the stubborn and stiff-necked Jews, that could not abide the Gospel, nor the Preachers of the Gospel, being wounded in conscience, came to Peter and the rest of the Apostles, saying, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Acts 2, 37. The laylour, mentioned in the 16 of the Acts, v. 26, 27 29, put the Apostles into close prison, & made their feet fast in the stocks: but when y^e earth quaked, the prison doors opened, and every man's bands were loosed, when once he was waked out of sleep, and his conscience out of security, he called for a light, & leaped in, he came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas, & could find no comfort but from them whom before he had cruelly entreated, nor recover himself from the gulf of desperation into w^c he was entering, but by their blessed ministry, who ministered a word in due season to y^e weary soul, to the heavy heart, and to the conscience burdened and oppressed with sin. So he magnified the ministry of John the Baptist, who was revered of the covetous Publican's, of the violent soldiers, and of the merciless people, so that they demanded of him, What shall we do? Thus hath God dealt from time to time, compelling the wicked to know and to acknowledge his faithful Ministers to his great glory and our endless comfort. It is a vain & needless fear in many, that fear the fall and decay of the Ministry, & the utter ruin and overthrow of the Ministers of the word. There are many trades of this present life, that will never decay nor wear out of use. So long as building, planting, sowing, and tilling of the ground are in request, there will be use of the builder, of the planter, of the husbandman. Who feareth the contempt of harvest men in the time of harvest? Who feareth the discharge of watchmen, while the City is besieged? Who feareth y^t no reckoning will be made of Shepherds, so long as there are sheep to be attended, and wolves to be feared? The Ministers are the Lord's builders, the people are his building: the Ministers are his husbandmen, the people his husbandry: the Ministers are the Lord's harvest men, the people his harvest to be gathered into his barn. This the Apostle teacheth, 1 Cor. 3, 9, & Christ our Savior, Mat. 9, 37. So long therefore as God hath a Church to be built, a Vineyard to be planted, a Field to be tilled, a Flock to be watched, an Harvest ripe and ready to be reaped, we need not to be afraid of the decay and downfall of the Ministry. For so long as men have souls to be saved, the means of salvation shall be continued. We see this in the history of the Acts, how diversely it pleased y^e Lord to dispose of this his ordinance. Where he had no people to be called, he suffered not the Apostles to go thither: but where he had much people, there he commanded thē to labor more, and to tarry longer, and suffered them not to depart so soon as they would. Wherefore, let us be bold and constant in the work of the Lord, and not fear to labor in his Vineyard, knowing that our work shall not be in vain, & assuring our selves, that he will hold up our heads whom we serve, and maintain his own ordinance unto the coming of Jesus Christ.

[We have spoken against the Lord, and against thee, we have sinned.] The people of Israel being brought to true repentance by y^e former judgment of the fiery serpents, do not content themselves to confess their sins in general, saying, We have sinned; but they acknowledge the particular offense that had brought upon them y^t particular judgment. As then they felt the judgment in particular, so they have a feeling of their special and particular sin. This teacheth, that howsoever we are to repent & crave pardon generally for general sins & unknown sins, yet we must be most pressed & perplexed, touched and grieved with particular sins. This truth appeareth lively in y^e practice of Naamā, who being won to the faith by the experience which he had of the mercy & power of God, as also the Ruler was by the miracle shown upon his son, John. 4, 53, he was touched with a feeling of his former idolatry; and confessed his great blindness in the corrupt worship of false gods. Hence it is that he desireth God to be merciful unto him, that in going with his master into the house of Rimmon, and he leaning on his hand, he had worshipped that Idol, to the dishonor of God, and the wounding of his conscience. The words themselves will naturally bear this construction. For we must understand them of the time past, not of the time to come: of his craving pardon for that which he had done, and not for that he would do. He was a true convert, and testifieth his conversion by acknowledging his former impiety, and promising to forsake the same, and to worship the true God hereafter. This is indeed true repentance, whē we are ready and willing to acknowledge those particular sins and trespasses that lie heavy upon the conscience, and have called down particular judgments upon us. We have a notable pattern of this kind of repentance in the Prophet, Psal. 51, 1, 14: thus do the people of Israel deal in their conversion, 1 Sam. 12, 19, and many others. 1 Tim. 1, 13. 1 Cor. 15, 9. Acts 2, 23. Luke 19, 8.

The reasons. First, because repentance only [Reason 1] made generally & confusedly for known sins, is never true repentance, but a common & hypocritical repentance of one resolved and settled to continue in sin, & not yet touched with a true feeling thereof. True it is, for secret and unknown sins, which we in weakness & ignorance commit, the Lord accepteth a general confession, as we see in the practice of the Prophet David, saying, Who can understand his faults? Cleanse me from secret sins, Psalm. 19, 12. Thus did the rest, no doubt, of the godly deal, & such an acknowledgment of their unknown sins (which they took not to be sins) did they make in a general manner, which were hidden not only from other men, but even from themselves. This we may say of their polygamy or their marrying of many wives, and other their dail infirmities.

Secondly, we must make a particular account to God at the hour of death, when we [Reason 2] must plead guilty or not guilty at his bar. A general reckoning and account will not then be taken, neither will the Lord set before us gross sums, but the account shall be made of specials; which may cause the stoutest and strongest men to tremble and quake for very fear of that day. All the sins of thy former life shall be represented before thee, like • squadron of enemies ready set in battle array to assault thee, & to give in evidence against thee. This is taught and witnessed unto us by the Apostle John, describing the manner of judgment to which we shall be summoned, Revel. 20, 12. I saw the books opened, and the dead were judged of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. It standeth us upon in regard of these books, to make up our books, and to look to our reckonings, forasmuch as we must gave an account of our stewardship, Luk. 16, 2.

Let us now make use of this doctrine. First, [Use 1] we learn from hence, that it is not enough to say, we are sinners, and so to cry God mercy for a pa•g or a brunt and so away, or to desire God to forgive us our sins; but we must uncase our selves, and uncover our particular trespasses, if we would have God to cover thē with the precious garment of Christ. If a sick man come to the Physician, and only tell him he is sick, and never show him his particular grief and disease that troubleth him, in what part he is pained, and in what sort he is taken, he can never look to be cured and restored to health. If we come unto God, the Father of spirits and Physician of souls; and only say, We have sinned, we cannot assure our selves of pardon. We declared before, that we must confess our unknown sins generally, but our known sins we must confess particularly, without any excuse or defense, without any hiding or diminishing of thē; as the same Prophet doth after he had sinned in numbering of the people, I have sinned greatly, because I have done this thing,&c. Wherefore •t standeth us, upon with great grief & heaviness of heart, to confess our special sins & to give sentence against our selves, and to pray with earnestness of spirit as for life and death, for the pardon of our offenses which we have committed at such and such times, in such places, with such persons and in such manner: otherwise our repentance is only in show, and for fashion sake, which is never acceptable to God; being done in hypocrisy, and without a conscionable feeling of sin in the soul.

[Use 2] Secondly, this particular confession overthroweth and overturneth sundry corruptions and abuses in the case of repentance. It condemneth all impenitent persons, such as live & continue, in one estate, never sorrow for any sin, neither at any time turn from it, neither have any feeling or •eefe for sin, neither know what it meaneth. This is a dangerous estate and a most perilous judgment. For as a sick man is then most dangerously sick when he hath no feeling of his sickness, and is ready to say, he is well, and hath small sense or none at all of any pain or peril: so sinful man is then in greatest misery by reason of his sins when he thinketh himself to be no sinner. Such one is far off from mourning & sorrowing for sin, from turning from them and returning to God, seeing he taketh himself to be in good case and to stand in need of no repentance. Such were the Pharisees in the days of Christ, whom he reproveth, Mat. 9, 12, 13. Besides, it condemneth ceremonial repentance, which carrieth an outward show of dying to sin, but is separated from the inward truth of a sound heart. Thus Saul repented, 1 Sam. 15.74, and 26, 21, and 24, 17, 18. And Ahab rent his clothes, but not his heart, he fasted from food, but not from sin, 1 Kin. 21.27.29. Thus the hypocrites repent, mentioned in the Prophets, when a man afflicteth his soul for a day, and boweth-down his head as a bulrush, yet looseth not the bonds of wickedness: and therefore immediately afterward, he embraceth his former sins, and returneth to his old ways, as Pharaoh did: who being annoyed with the frogs, smitten with the hail, terrified with the thunders, troubled with the grasshoppers, pestered with the flies, disquieted with the darkness; this was the even and issue of all, as soon as he had rest given unto him, he hardened his heart, and hearkened not unto the Lord. This is the common sickness of the common repentance, that men ordinarily practice in these days, whereby they deceive themselves and their own souls, dealing in hypocrisy & dissembling with the Lord, catching at the shadow instead of the body, & resting in shows instead of the substance. Lastly, it condemneth all such as have hardened their hearts in sin, and are grown thereby to be past feeling, such as cannot discern between good and evil, nor tremble at God's judgments, but draw sin to themselves as it were with cart-ropes; and work all uncleanness even with greediness. These have their conscience seared with an hot Iron, and it accuseth them not for any sin, but bringeth them into a reprobate mind so that they are so far from confessing their proper and particular sins, that they have no sense or remorse of any sin, but are full of all wickedness and unrighteousness.

Lastly, it behooveth us to search out our ways, to see what we have left undone, and [Use 3] what lieth most upon our consciences, and especially bewail the same; otherwise there is in us no sound conversion. This the Prophet testifieth, Lam. 3, 40, 41. Some are specially inclined to lust & uncleanness, some to covetousness, some to surfeiting & drunkenness, some to envy & revenge, some to swearing & blaspheming, some to pleasures & delights of the outward man; now where we are weakest, Satan will be strongest; where our defense is slenderest there his temptations will be thickest; where the hedge is lowest, every beast will seek to enter; so it is with us: if one place be left open & vnguarded▪ Satan will enter there, as well as if we gave him a passage many ways. One known sin nourished in us, is sufficient for him to bring us thereby to damnation. He can well abide to have us reformed in many faults that we should deny them, defy them, hate them, and cry out against them; yet someone sin or other (whereto we are by nature most inclined) he fosteteth and furthereth in us, and by it in a vile manner he wholly possesseth us, and dwelleth in us. It is a wonderful policy of Satan, when he cannot make us to walk and wallow in all sin, he endevoeth to poison us with someone sin, lest he should wholly give over his hold, and by it will bring us to destruction, as well as by a thousand. A Bird entangled with one foot, and holden in y^e snare of the Fowler, is as unable to escape and fly away, as if she were taken and held by both the feet. So is it with man, if he beholden in one notorious sin, and flatter himself in it, he is in as great danger of death and damnation, as if he gave over himself to many sins. What I pray you, should it profit, when a City is besieged and compassed with the enemy, to shut up all the gates, and to leave one standing open? May not the enemy enter at that one, as well as at many, and by assault take the City and people? Or what should it avail a Mariner to stop all the holes of the Ship where it leaketh, and leave one vnstopped? Will it not sink the Ship as well as many? So, what shall it profit and help us to set open one corner of our hearts for one sin to enter, albeit we should shut up, and lock the doors of our hearres against all other sins? Will not Satan enter there, and fill us full of all wickedness, & bring us to destruction of soul and body? Consider the examples of Saul, Herod, Judas, Ananias and Sapphira, all these turned from sin, yea from many sins, but not from all sin, nor from their special sins whereof they should have repented, and therefore their repentance was but the show and shadow of repentance, and not true repentance indeed. If then we would have that true & godly sorrow which causeth repentance, not to be repented of, we must turn from all our sins to God, and bring forth fruits worthy amendment of life, and hereby learn to try our own hearts by this special conversion. We must consider our proper and personal sins. Endeuouring to be perfect, as our heavenly Father is perfect. Mat. 5, 48, and not exempting our selves from the obedience of any of the Lord's holy Commandments.

[And Moses prayed for the people.] They desire the prayers of Moses, as we heard before, who refuseth not, but prayeth for thē to God. He was not mindful of the wrongs sustained, and of the injuries received of them, for in all y^e indignities offered unto him he was patient and meek above all men that were upon the earth; therefore he goeth to God, and desireth him to remove the judgment. The Doctrine from this place is this; It is our duty to pray one for another. The Lord requireth of us, not only to commit to God, and commend in our prayers the Saints, but to be mindful of our enemies, and them that hate us, and to desire their good and conversion. This affection we see in Abraham, who prayed earnestly and oftentimes for the Sodomites, that God would spare them, & not destroy the righteous with the wicked, but rather to spare the wicked for the righteous sake. This was also in Samuel, when the people besought him to pray for thē that they died not, he said, God forbid, that I should sin against the Lord, and cease praying for you, &c. 1 Sam. 12, 23. How often did Moses & Aaron pray for Pharaoh, and spread out their hands unto the Lord, That the plagues might cease, and that he might know that the earth is the Lord's? Exod. 9, 29. This duty Christ our Savior setteth down as a rule to guide us, both by word of mouth, and by example of life. For he taught his Disciples this Doctrine, Mat. 5, 44. Love your enemies: bless them that curse you: do good to them that hate you, and pray for the that hurt you, and persecute you, &c. Now this point as Christ preacheth, so he practiseth and prayeth for his enemies, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. Luk. 23.34. Thus did the faithful witness of God, Stephen whē he was stoned, he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. Acts 7, 60.

The Reasons are plain and direct. First, we [Reason 1] are fellow-members of the same body, and fellow-soldiers that fight under the same Captain Jesus Christ. We see them embers of our body are careful for the good one of another, unless they be dead and senseless; so should we be moved at the consideration of the troubles and wants of the Church, as the Apostle by this similitude teacheth us, 1, Cor. 12, 20, 21. We are many members, yet but one body: and the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor the head again to the feet, I have no need of you. So it is in the body of Christ, we cannot want each other, but stand in need one of another, to keep y^e whole body in peace and concord. In regard hereof it is, that we are partakers also of their prayers, so as we pray one for another, and seek the good & benefit one of another, as the Church did the deliverance of Peter. Acts 12, 5.

Secondly, this duty of praying for our brethren, [Reason 2] is enforced & charged upon us, because it is acceptable to God, and an oblation wherewith he is delighted and well pleased. For our prayer is directed in his sight as Incense; and the lifting up of our hands as an evening sacrifice. It availeth much if it be fervent, it pierceth the heavens, and obtaineth every good blessing at the hands of God for our selves, & for others.

The Uses fo•low. First, we are especially in [Use 1] duty bound to pray for Magistrates and those that be in authority, as the subjects for their Princes, and the people for their Pastors, that the work of God may prosper under their hands. This the Apostle teacheth, 1 Tim. chapter 2, 1, 2. So the Jews were commanded to pray for Babylon, that persecuting City, where they were captive, Ier. chap. 29, ver. 7. We see in the natural body, that albeit the members have care one of another, yet the chiefest care is for the head. A man, will be willing to receive a blow on another part, to save the principal; it is that which Satan alleged to God, Job 2, 4. Skin for skin, all that ever a man hath, will he give for his life. So it standeth us upon, to desire indeed the good of the least and lowest member in the Church of God, but our chiefest and greatest endeavor should be for men in highest calling, who are set in slippery places, compassed with many dangers, environed with many temptations, beguiled oftentimes by flatterers, led away by false informers, so that the higher they are exalted, the greater is their downfall. When they stand upright, they stand not alone; whē they fall, they fall not alone. When a mighty Oak that seemed deep rooted in the earth, falleth down, it casteth down with it the lesser Trees and lower shrubs that grow near unto it. As we have light or darkness from the Sun, so we have vice or virtue from such as are superiors. For all inferiors commonly follow the example and tread the steps of such as are in higher places. This the wise man noteth in his Proverbs, ch. 29.12. of a Prince that hearkeneth to lies, all his servants are wicked. This the Prophet toucheth, Behold, all that use Proverbs shall use this Prouerb against thee, saying, As the mother, so is he• daughter. Wherefore it behooveth us to remember our Princes and men of great callings in our prayers, as we see Moses is ready to pray for Pharaoh, & as Darius King of Persia willeth the Jews to pray for the Kings life, and for his sons: Ezra 6, 10, according as the Prophet also prayeth, Give thy judgments O God, to the King, and thy righteousness to the Kings son. Psal. 72, 1. Thus then it appeareth to be a principal duty, to pour out our prayers and supplications for our Magistrates & Ouer-seers that watch for our souls, and to fall down upon our knees for Prince and Country. The Apostles command it, and the faithful practice it toward Infidels and wicked Kings that professed not the faith, nor believed the truth: how much more careful then ought we to be, to perform all Christian duties to Christian Princes, that are members of the same body, that are the breath of our nostrils, that are nursing fathers and nursing mothers to the Church, that are shepherds of the people of God to feed and govern them, that are chosen instruments to bestow their power and authority for the preservation of the sheep of Christ, and are firm pillars to bear up the truth upon their shoulders?

[Use 2] Secondly, it followeth that we are to do it much more for our selves. For how can we be truly affected to pray for others, and be inwardly touched with their wants, when we have no feeling of our own? We shall hear many oftentimes very liberal and lavish in offering their prayers, as if they did set them out to sale, or to be hired, saying, I will pray for you; who notwithstanding sildome pray for themselves. And what are the prayers of blind and ignorant men, but rehearsing the Commandments, saying over the Creed, & a pattering of the Lord's Prayer without understanding? Besides, prayer is a mutual duty to be practiced one toward another, as we perform the same for our brethren, so do the brethren for us, and therefore we are no more endebted to other for this benefit, then others for the benefit they receive of us. Let us therefore learn from hence, that if we must pray for our friends and families, and other members of Christ, we must learn especially to pray for our selves, and by our selves. We can never of conscience pray with others, unless we sometimes separate our selves from them, enter into our Chamber, shut our door, and pray alone unto our Father which is in secret, That our Father which seeth in secret, may reward us openly. Mat. 6, 5, 6. For he that never prayed solitary, never prayed truly. He that never sequestreth himself from the company of others, to humble his soul before God, never knew what true prayer meant, but doth all in hypocrisy for fashion sake, and to be seen of men, and therefore they have their reward accordingly. It is a note of hypocrisy, never to pray but in company; and therefore whosoever always and only prayeth with others, is an hypocrite. Hence it is, that the faithful have used daily private prayer. It is noted of Isaac, that he went frō the presence of others, to pour out his meditations before rhe Lord. We see it in David in sundry Psalms, yea in Christ himself, though he were Lord of life, and heir of all things: so that this is a sound and infallible rule in our holy and Christian religion, that what man soever never prayed alone, never prayed aright.

Thus then we see how it standeth us all upon, in regard of this general duty to be performed to others, to be principally mindful of our selves, that from a sight of our own sins, from a feeling of our own wants, from a desire of God's graces, we may have a due respect and regard of our brethren. For all our love shown to our neighbor, is as a stream issuing from the fountain of love toward our selves; and the rule to square out the love of our brethren, is the true measure of it to our selves, by due and right proportion. Let us therefore be diligent our selves in prayer, and pour out our meditations before the Lord. It is made a note of a wicked man not to pray, by the Prophet. Psalm. 14, verses 1, 4. The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God; they have corrupted and done an abominable work, there is none that doth good; they call not upon the Lord. It behooveth us therefore to crave of GOD, the grace of prayer, to the ende we may pray aright as we ought to pray; that so we may learn to pray for others. This we see practiced by the Apostle Paul, who having exhorted the Church of Ephesus to put on the whole armor of God, and to pray always with all manner prayer and supplication in the spirit for all Saints: he annexeth hereunto immediately, and for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly as I ought to speak; and himself beggeth the grace of God to come upon them. So writing to the Thessalonians, and exhorting them to pray continually, and namely for the preachers of the Gospel, himself giveth an example, beginneth the work, and first prayeth for them, that the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ may be with them.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it behooveth us all in our wants and necessities to crave the prayers of the Church, which avail much with God if they be fervent. He hath promised to hear his servants that call upon him. He hath promised, That wheresoever two or three are gathered together in his Name, he will be present in the midst of them. He hath promised the graces of his spirit plentifully to them that ask. Wherefore, when Daniel was to declare to the King the dream which he had dreamed, and the interpretation thereof, which none of the Astrologians or enchanters could declare, He shown the matter to his Companions, that they should beseech the God of heaven for grace in this secret. The like we see in Ester, when she heard that all the Jews were appointed to destruction, and of that great danger which threatened the Church, she willed Mordecai to go and assemble all the Jews that were found in Shushan, saying; Fast ye for me, eat not, nor drink in three days, I also and my maids will fast likewise, and so will I go in to the king, which is not according to the Law, and if I perish I perish. So doth S. Paul in every Epistle almost, desire the Church to pray for him, that he might be delivered from unreasonable and beastly men, disobedient to the Gospel, that did vex and trouble him; that his service in his Ministry might be acceptable to the Saints for their profit and edification, that he might have the door of utterance opened and freedom of speech given unto him to publish boldly the will and counsel of God as he ought; that the gifts and graces of God bestowed upon him, might redound to the benefit of the Church, & praise of God. True it is, the wicked and ungodly do many times desire those whom they think to be the children of God, to pray for them. But they want the Spirit of Christ, and the grace of prayer, so that they cannot pray themselves, nor have any heart to lift up to God, as we see in Simon the Sorcerer, who craved of the Apostles to pray for him to the Lord, that none of his threatenings might fall upon him. He was not touched with a feeling of his sin, nor desired any pardon thereof, but only craved a freedom & deliverance from judgment to come. So then, he was not grieved for sin, but feared y^e punishment.

Again, as the Reprobate may desire the prayers of the children of God, when they fear judgments to come upon them hereafter, so they may do when punishment is upon them, as we see in Pharaoh, who desired Moses and Aaron to pray for him, that there be no more mighty thunders in the Land. The same we see in Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, that made Israel to sin; when his hand was dried up, that he could not pull it in again, which he had stretched out to lay hold on the Prophet, threatening the destruction of the idolatrous altar at Bethel, he said to the man of God, I beseech thee, pray unto the Lord thy God, and make intercession for me, that my hand may be restored unto me. So then, the wicked desire to be prayed for, but it is only in extremity, it is only to escape punishment, either present, or to come. But the Godly respect sin, and are grieved for it, more then for the punishment, they are troubled more for the loss of God's favor, then of temporal commodities. Therefore when he prayeth for himself or for others, he is moved with a fear and reverence of the Majesty of God to whom he prayeth, he is touched with a feeling of his own wants for which he prayeth, he poureth out his heart before the Lord, and showeth a fervent desire to obtain his wants, he prayeth not for a brunt or two, but continueth in prayer, he doubteth not through unbelief, but through faith assureth himself to obtain the requests he maketh according to his word.

Fourthly, it followeth also, that when God [Use 4] hath heard us for them, we must praise his Name, and give thanks for the blessings he hath vouchsafed unto our brethren. So doth the Apostle in many of his Epistles, I thank my God for you all through Jesus Christ, because your faith is published throughout the whole world. As we are not to pray only for our selves, so we are not to offer the sacrifice of thanksgiving only for our selves. This serveth to reprove all those that repine and envy at the blessings bestowed upon others, who have their own eye evil, because the Lord's eye is good. This sometime creepeth upon the servants of God, and therefore ought to make us more wary & watchful over our selves. When Joshua the servant of Moses, saw the spirit of God to rest upon Eldad and Medad, so that they prophesied in the host, he said, My Lord Moses, forbid them: who answered him, Enuiest thou for my sake? yea, would God that all the Lord's people were Prophets, and that the Lord would pour his Spirit upon them. So when the disciples of John saw that Christ Jesus made more disciples than John, and increased in glory more than he, they complained to John, that all men flocked to Christ, and began to forsake him, John replied, Ye yourselves are my witnesses, that I said, I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him: he must increase, but I decrease. Let us beware y^t we be not possessed with the spirit of envy: rather let us labor after brotherly love, which suffereth long, is bountiful, enuyeth not, it seeketh not her own things, it thinketh not evil, it rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth, it suffers all things, it believeth all things, it hopeth all things it endureth all things. Whatsoever good things God bestoweth upon any member of Christ, he hath given them not only for the benefit and comfort of him that hath received them, but for the good of the whole body. Seeing therefore we have our part and portion therein, in as much as there is in the Church one Communion of Saints: it is our duty to return the praise and glory thereof to the giver, and not repine and grudge against him to whom they are given.

[Use 5] Lastly, consider from this Doctrine, whence it is that God spareth the wicked and ungodly, and beareth long with the vessels of wrath, appointed to destruction. It is for the prayers of his people that are his remembrancers day and night, that stand in the gap and breach which the hand of God hath made, that cry unto him without ceassing, Spare thy people (O Lord) and give not thine inheritance unto reproach, that the unbelievers should say, Where is their God? True it is, the people of God are contemptible in this unthankfull world, yet were it not for these simple and silly ones, the judgments of God had long since fallen upon us, which by their prayers hitherto they have stayed. For had we continued in peace, dwelled in our houses, possessed our inheritances, enjoyed our lands and goods thus long, but for the faithful servants of God, who mind the peace of Zion? Doubtless, he would not spare the world one minute and moment of time, but for the godly. He would have spared the cities of Sodom and Gomorrhah, if ten righteous persons had been found in them. For the faiths sake of Rahah, who hid the spies and sent them out another way, he spared her kindred, and her fathers house. For the faith of Lot, whose righteous soul was vexed day by day, in seeing and hearing the unclean conversation of those sinful men, he would have saved his sons in law, that should have married his daughters. For Paul's sake, a chosen vessel to bear the Name of God to the Gentiles, he gave freely those that sailed with him and saved their lives. Thus we see, that for the godly, he beareth with the ungodly: but when they are safe and sealed in the forehead, then judgment shall come upon the wicked. Contrariwise, a nation, a city, a town, an house and family is cursed for the society and company of the wicked. The Israelites could not prosper at the siege of Ai, so long as Achan was among them. The Sea could not be calm, the ship could not be safe, the Mariners could not be at rest, so long as unrepentant and unreformed Jonah was a burden unto it; for he said unto them, Take me and cast me into the Sea, so shall the waves work no more so troublesomely, for I know that for my sake this great tempest is upon you. Wherefore, it is a sweet and comfortable thing to be in the number of the faithful; we have benefit by the prayers of the Church, which pierce the ears of God, and bring down his blessings in great abundance.

Verse 8. And the Lord said unto Moses, Make thee a fiery serpent. We heard before how the people repented of their sins, and how Moses prayed for pardon: Now see how God remooueth his hand. He will not always chide, nor keep his anger forever: he doth not deal with us after our sins, nor rewardeth us according to our iniquities. Indeed he showeth oftentimes his severe judgments, but so soon as the sinner is humbled, he receiveth him to mercy, the sin is pardoned, and the punishment is removed. The doctrine from hence is this, that God is merciful to all penitent sinners. Repentance once going before, mercy followeth after, albeit we sin grievously against him. This the Prophet teacheth in the Name of God, Isaiah 1.18. Ezek. 18.21, 22 23. and 33.11. David sinned exceedingly in numbering the people, for which God sent a pestilence three days in Israel, that many thousands died; yet when his heart smote him, that he said, I have sinned exceedingly, I have done wickedly, but these sheep what have they done? Let thine hand I pray thee, be against me, and against my fathers house, and not on thy people for their destruction: the Lord repented him of the evil, and said to the Angel that destroyed, It is enough, let thine hand cease.

Let us consider the reasons of God's merciful [Reason 1] dealing, which are first the comfort and relief of his people, that none should to the end of the world despair of obtaining of mercy. For the mercy of God in Christ, is above all his works, which he extendeth to thousands; it is infinite, without measure. He pardoneth such offenders, to make them examples to others of God's great mercy, he receiveth them to favor, and remitteth their offenses, not only to manifest his mercy to the offender himself, but to teach others to resort and repair unto him for pardon and forgiveness. When the Prophet testifieth, that by acknowledging his sin unto God, and confessing his wickedness against himself, he obtained the remission of his sin, and punishment of sin: he addeth immediately, Therefore shall everyone that is godly, make his prayer unto thee in a time when thou mayest be found. This is the reason that the Apostle toucheth, 1 Tim. 1. teaching that he was received to mercy, for this cause, That Jesus Christ should first show on him all long suffering unto the example of them which shall in time to come believe in him unto eternal life. So then, from these and such like examples of great sinners, that have obtained much mercy, we likewise should be assured of the goodness of God for our salvation, whensoever we can be brought to believe the Gospel, & repent from dead works.

Secondly, the consideration of the nature [Reason 2] of God, ministereth a strong and invincible reason to gain our affections to yield to this truth. For his mercy is abundant, and his goodness is infinite. It surmounteth the reach and understanding of all mortal men: It passeth the highness of the heavens, the depth of the earth, the breadth of the Sea, the power of the devil, the strength of the Law, the measure of the whole world, and nothing can be compared with the perfections of the Almighty, Job 11.7, 8, 9. Paul, who before his conversion, to the faith which he sought to destroy, was a blasphemmer, a Persecuter, & an oppresser; maketh this the cause why he was received to mercy, The grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith and love, which is in Christ Jesus, that is, giving unto me faith, that chased away infidelity, and love that overcame cruelty. So the Lord maketh this the chief and principal cause, why he spared that rebellious and idolatrous people, The Lord, the Lord, strong, merciful and gracious, slow to anger, abundant in goodness and truth forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin.

[Use 1] The uses follow of this doctrine. First, we learn, that there is no sin that doth exceed the mercy of God. None can say without injury against his own soul, without reproach against God, and giving the lie to the glorious Majesty of God, My sin is greater then can be forgiven. True it is, there is an unpardonable sin, that shall never be forgiven, either in this world, or in the world to come, the blasphemy against the Spirit; but that is, because they cannot relent or repent that commit it; they are so far gone, that they can never return back again; not because God is not able to forgive it, or that it doth exceed the mercies of God. Seeing then, vile sinners find such infinite and unspeakable mercy, let us never despair or doubt of his mercy & favor, though we be suddenly overtaken through infirmity, and fall into diverse and grievous sins. He hath mercy in store for such as have been exceeding sinners against him. If they can repent of their sins, his mercies are as great as himself. Consider the examples of Peter, that denied his Master, of Paul, that persecuted the Saints, of David that committed adultery; of Solomon that fell into idolatry; of Lot, that lay with his own daughters; of Noah, that offended in drunkenness; of Manasseh that shed innocent blood; of Mary Magdalene, out of whom were cast seven devils; of the Jews that crucified the Lord of life: all which returning from their iniquity were received to mercy, so that where sin abounded, there grace hath abounded much more. Hence therefore great comfort ariseth to the heavy soul and troubled conscience, oppressed with the burden of sin, and hanging after grace and pardon. When terrors and temptations grow strong upon us, supposing that our sins are moe then can be forgiven, and the punishments greater then can be pardoned; we must know it is the lying spirit of the devil, to draw us into the bottomless and comfortless gulf of desperation, which is (as it were) the mouth of hell gaping wide, to swallow up the soul quick, to utter and endless destruction. If our sins be never so great and grievous, if they be never so many and monstrous, moe then the hairs of our head, or the sand on the sea shore which is innumerable; as heavy as lead, as infectious as a leprosy, as red as scarlet, as filthy as dung and mire: yet if God give repentance, and we believe, there is promise of mercy, assurance of forgiveness, and hope of comfort and consolation. Such they are that Christ calleth; saying, Come unto me all ye that are heavy laden, and I will ease you; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light. It behooveth us all to seek favor at his hands, to crave pardon and to plead for mercy and forgiveness: of whom to ask it rightly, is to obtain it assuredly.

Secondly, the truth of this doctrine of [Use 2] God's pardoning offenders, and the consideration and feeling of this infinite kindness of God, must work in us unfeigned thankfulness. and continual praise, sounding out and magnifying his mercies, to speak of his goodness, and to show our selves loving and dutiful unto him again, for his exceeding compassion. This sacrifice of thanksgiving, we see offered by the Apostle unto God, for the experience he had of his bountifulness toward him, 1 Tim. 1.12. I thank him which hath made me strong, that is Christ Jesus our Lord; for he counted me faithful, and put me in his service, when before I was a blrsphemer, and a persecutor, and an oppressor. Now unto the King everlasting, immortal, invisible, unto God only wise, be honor and glory, forever and ever, Amen.

The like we see in Mary Magdalene, who had been a grievous and heinous sinner, as she had received much mercy, so she expressed back again much love and kindness; as she had been delivered out of the chains of Satan, so she followed Christ Jesus with the fruits of piety and thankfulness, all the days of her life; she entered with him unto Simon's house, kissed his feet, anointed them with ointment, washed them with her tears, wiped them with her hairs, followed him to the Cross, and was the first with him in his resurrection; of whom the Lord Jesus said, Many sins are forgiven her for she loved much: to whom a little is forgiven, he doth love a little. There is a forgiveness in God that goeth before, there must be a thankfulness in us that must follow after: as this womā knows much to have been forgiven her, and therefore she loveth much; even as the debtor loveth that creditor most, that hath forgiven him most; so should the affection of our love toward God be increased, as he giveth everyone experience of his greater mercy. As then we feel this sweetness, and the infinite riches of this benefit, so we should open our mouths, and vnloose our tongues, and enlarge our hearts, to sing and to set forth the praises of God, according to the example of the Prophet in the Psalm, My soul praise thou the Lord, and all that is within me praise his holy Name: forget not all his benefits, which forgiveth all thine iniquities, and healeth all thine infirmities. And in another place, What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the Name of the Lord: I will pay my vows unto the Lord even now in the presence of all his people. For seeing he taketh away all our iniquity, and receiveth us to favor graciously, it is great reason we should offer the sacrifice of praise, and render unto him the calves of our lips. This doctrine of free forgiveness of sins, openeth unto us the most blessed news that ever came into the world; it is the sum of the Gospel, and of the glad tidings of salvation, the key of all our comfort, y^t entrance into life, & the most precious balm of our health and recovery, which giveth more, joy and refreshing to the fainting soul and broken heart, to the tender conscience and weary spirit, then all the glory of the world can minister unto it; as the Apostle testifieth, This is a true saying, and by all means worthy to be received, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief.

[Use 3] Thirdly, seeing there is mercy in store for the penitent, seeing God will have compassion upon them, is ready to fall on their neck, and to embrace them with both his arms, as the father of the prodigal child did: it is required of us speedily to turn, and not defer our repentance from day today, lest our harts be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. No sin is so small, but is able to plundge us down to the bottom of hell, if we live in it without repentance, and continue in it without remorse. The longer we remain in the dregs of sin, the faster we shall stick in the mire of it, and the harder we shall find it to come out of the prison thereof. This is the use which we are to make of God's mercy to miserable sinners. Let us take heed we abuse not his goodness, nor take occasion of liberty, to turn his grace into wantonness; saying as the manner of some is, Oh, God is merciful, he is gracious to great sinners; and so conclude thereupon, that they may live as they list, and may put off the season of repentance to the last gasp. But the Apostle teacheth us to reason otherwise, What shall we say then? shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid: how shall we that are dead to sin, live yet in sin? Let us not therefore allege the examples of the faithful that have offended, to encourage us in sin, or hold them out as bucklers to embolden us in falling from God. Take heed of presumption. Many presume confidently with Peter, but they weep not bitterly with Peter. They fall by frailty with David, but they rise not by repentance with David. They sin with Solomon, but they repent not with him. They sin with the Jews, but they are not pricked in heart with the Jews, saying; What shall we do? They persecute the Saints of God with the laylor, but they tremble not at their sin, nor seek to the servants of God, saying: Sirs, what must we do to be saved? They break out with their tongues and justify themselves as Job; but they set not a watch before the door of their lips, they do not abhor themselves, neither repent in dust and ashes with Job, saying; I will take heed to my ways that I sin not with my tongue, I will keep my mouth bridled. They fly from the presence of God with Jonah, but they remember not to pray with him for pardon, acknowledging that such as wait upon lying vanities, forsake their own mercy. Let us therefore all learn to profit by the favorable dealing of God toward offenders, neither abusing his loving kindness, nor continuing in sin, nor presuming of his mercy; assuring our selves, y^t if the persons receiving pardon, be such as are penitent, then assuredly to the impenitent there is no forgiveness. This the Apostle setteth down, Rom. 2.4, 5. The acceptable time of repentance for all of us, is the time present, what time we have to come is uncertain. Late repentance is oftentimes constrained, and sildome true repentance. The longer a diseased man continueth in his sickness, the harder is his recovery. Let us not delay and defer our repentance. This is the blessed time and the acceptable season, To day therefore if we will hear his voice, let us not harden our hearts in sin, Heb. 3.7, 8.

Fourthly, let us not spare to seek the salvation, [Use 4] and thirst after the conversion even of the greatst sinners. Let us not account their estate and condition forlorn and desperate, Neither judge any before the time, until the Lord come, who will lighten things that are hid in darkness, and make the counsels of the heart manifest, and then shall every man have praise of God. The husbandman waiteth for the fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the former and latter rain. Now, we are God's laborers and husbandmen, ye are God's husbandry and God's building. Paul planteth, and Apollo watereth, but God giveth the increase. So then, neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase. We are unto God the sweet savor of Christ in them that are saved, and in them which perish to the one we are the savor of death to death, and to the other, the savor of life unto life.

This must be our comfort in the midst of all discomforts, injurious dealing, and hard measure offered unto us; to know that every man shall receive his wages according to his labor. And the Prophet prophesying of the kingdom of Christ, that he should spread out his hands all day unto a rebellious people, maketh this his stay and staff of rest; I have labored in vain, I have spent my strength in vain, and for nothing: but my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God. Let us therefore go Iustile forward in building up the house of God, preach in season, and out of season, and commit the fruit of the work and success of all our labors to the Lord, whose word is never delivered nor heard in vain, as the Apostle urgeth it, 2 Ti. 2.24, 25, 26.

[Use 5] Lastly, seeing God is merciful to miserable Sinners, as a good shepherd taking them out of the jaws of the Lyon, bringing them unto the sheepefolde, and feeding them in green pastures: let us seek to be like our heavenly Father in showing mercy and forgiveness toward such as grievously offend against us. Every man's experience telleth and teacheth him, the mercy of God to be exceeding great, we feel it toward our selves, we see it daily toward others, we read that blasphemy it self findeth place for pardon. We find this to be the nature of God, The Lord, the Lord, gracious and merciful, slow to anger and abundant in goodness, reserving mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity, trangression, and sin. If we will be the children of God, we must resemble our heavenly Father, we must express the lively lineaments of his face, we must be transformed into his likeness, and bear his image in all holiness and righteousness. This the Apostle teacheth, Col. 3.12, 13. To this purpose Christ propoundeth the parable, Matthew, chapter 18. verses 32, 33, 35. teaching us, that we must forgive small things, that receive the pardon of greater: we must remit a sew pence, because God forgiveth us many talents, an huge sum, an infinite debt. But if we will not forgive, nor forget the trespasses done to us, we are stamped in the image of the devil, who was malicious, and a murderer from the beginning, & we make a law against our selves, inasmuch as we shall find the Lord so toward us, as we deal toward our brethren. For there shall be judgment merciless, to him that showeth not mercy: and with what measure we mete, it shall be measured to us again.

Verse 9. Moses made a Serpent of brass, and set it upon apole: and when a serpent had bitten a man, then he looked to the serpent of brass, and lived. We saw before, how the prayer of Moses was heard, and the remedy provided of God to heal the people. We saw in God, the greatness of his compassion; we saw in the people, the fruit of their confession; we saw in Moses, the grace of meekness and gentleness suffering all things, and enduring all things. Here there is offered to our considerations the obedience of Moses, the setting up of the serpent, and the recovery of the people. Moses doth not here consult with flesh and blood, neither doth he use carnal wisdom to be his counselor, which in matters of faith is an enemy to God. He doth not reason, whether it were likely that a piece of brass should remedy this biting, or whether a dead thing should give life: but so soon as he receiveth the commandment of God, he prepareth himself, maketh ready a brazen serpent, pitcheth it upon an high pole, the people look upon it, and are recovered. This cure was not by Physic or Chirurgery, or by inherent virtue in the brass, as in a medicine: but by casting up the eye upon the serpent, and believing the ordinance of God, who had appointed the serpent for that purpose. We are all of us from hence, to learn and consider, That the brazen serpent standing on the pole, was a type and figure of Christ crucified and hanging on the cross, who is made of the Father to be a Savior unto us. This Christ himself testifieth, John. 3.14, 15. As Moses lift up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of man be lift up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. Hereunto likewise he alludeth, Chap. 8.28, 29. Then Jesus said unto them, When ye have lift up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself; as my Father hath taught me, so I speak these things. In both these places our Savior hath respect and reference to the brazen serpent in the wilderness, showing, that as it was erected to heal the body, so must Christ be crucified to cure the soul; therefore this serpent set up, was a type of his death. And howsoever some of reverent account in the Church do understand this lifting up, of the preaching of the Gospel, which is as a banner displayed, that all men may behold him, and esteem the referring of it to the Cross, neither to be pertinent to the matter, nor to agree in the text: yet if we compare the former places & phrases, with another like Testimony of John, chap. 12.32, 33. the true interpretation of the words will easily and evidently appear, where Christ speaketh thus to the Pharisees, Now is the judgment of this world: now shall the Prince of this world be cast out: and I, if I were lift up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. Here, by lifting up, we must necessarily understand the death of Christ upon the Cross, on which he was lifted up on high, and seen a far off, as the Evangelist himself expoundeth it in the verse following; saying, Now, this said he, signifying what death he should die.

The reasons of this similitude, shadowing [Reason 1] out the manner of Christ's death, are very evident and apparent. For first, as the brazen serpent in the wilderness, had the show and shape of a serpent, but within there was no venomous or deadly thing, as the true fiery serpents had; so Christ took upon him the shape of a servant, he was made like unto men, he was sent of God in the similitude of sinful flesh, and was counted among the wicked; yet he was pure, and void of sin, neither could be charged of his enemies with any sin: so that this is no vnpropper or far-fet similitude, but fit and natural.

Secondly, even as the brazen serpent was [Reason] lift up on high upon a pole, appointed for that purpose: so was Christ first lift up upon the wood of the Cross, and was after exalted by the Gospel, and set in the sight of all, as the Prophet Isaiah teacheth, Isaiah 11.10, 12. And as the brazen serpent, before it could be a type of healing, must be advanced and lifted up; so before Christ Jesus could be a Savior of his people, to save them from their sins, he must be fastened upon the Cross, he must have his hands & his feet pierced, that he might spoil the principalities, and make a show of them openly with triumph. As therefore it was not sufficient once to make the brazen serpent, and so to look upon it, but it must as well be mounted as at the first made: so it was not enough to bring us to life and salvation, for Christ to be conceived by the holy Ghost, and borne of the virgin Mary, unless he also suffer death for our sins, and so bear our sins in his body on the tree.

Thirdly, as the Israelites which obeyed the [Reason 3] commandment of God, embraced his promise, believed his word, and so beheld the brazen serpent standing on y^e pole, were healed of y^e deadly bitings of these fiery serpents: so all men, who are moved with the commandment of God, & embracing the promise, do behold Christ hanging on y^e tree of the cross, with the eyes of faith, are cured of the sting of that old serpent the devil, and recover of that mortal wound, being freed from death, and restored into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. A serpent did hurt, a serpent did heal the Israelites. Man did destroy us, man did restore us. The first Adam did draw into condemnation: the second Adam draweth unto salvation. The brazen serpent albeit it were lift up never so high, and mounted into the open air, profited none, but such as steadfastly beheld it and looked upon it: so Christ crucified, profiteth none but such as believe in him by faith. Many beheld him with the bodily eyes, that reaped no benefit by him; they heard him with their outward ears, and handled with their hands that word of life: yet it auailed them nothing to know him after the flesh, neither furthered them in their salvation.

[Reason 4] Fourthly, as it seemed to human wisdom, a most foolish and ridiculous thing to be healed by the bare and only sight of a brazen serpent; so to all natural wise men of the world, it seemeth as unlikely and unreasonable, that any should be saved by faith in Christ crucified, as the Apostle showeth, We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews even a stumbling block, and unto the Grecians foolishness: only to them that are saved, Christ is the power of God, and the wisdom of God. So then, it is clear and evident, that the serpent set up upon the pole, signifieth Christ hanging on the Cross.

[Use 1] The uses of this type and similitude are many, directing us to sundry points, of religion: As what sin is, whence it came, what it worketh and bringeth forth: likewise, what the force of the Law and Gospel it, who Christ is, how we must use and apply him to have comfort and salvation in him. First, seeing the serpent was a sign and signification of Christ, we learn that Christ was preached and published in the time of the law; albeit, darkly and obscurely. For as there is but one salvation, so there is but one way to attain unto it; to wit, faith in Christ. The faith of the fathers, is one and the same with the faith of the children. There was never any man saved without the knowledge of JESUS CHRIST, neither is at this day saved, neither shall be hereafter to the end of the world. This the Apostle teacheth to the Hebrews, Jesus Christ yesterday: and today, the same also is forever. And to this truth John giveth witness, All that dwell upon the earth shall worship the Beast, whose names are not written in the book of life, of that Lamb which was slain from the beginning of the world. Albeit he were manifested in the flesh, and crucified on the Cross, in the last age of the world, when the fullness of time was come; yet his death was as forcible frō the beginning of the world, is now also as available and effectual, and shall be ever hereafter to the end of the world, as when he hung upon the Cross in the days of his Passion, and when the blood really streamed and issued out of his body. The Israelites in the time of the Law, were the children of God, heirs of eternal life, and had the promises of salvation, as well as we under the Gospel: God did not seed them and fat them as swine in a sty, but under certain figures and types, he gave them a taste of heavenly things. The offering of brute beasts in sacrifice, was a sign, that they were made partakers of the redemption wrought by the blood of Christ, which was shed to wash away our sins. Under y^e promise of giving thē the earthly Canaan, so often remēbred, he gave thē a taste & representation of the heavenly inheritance. The abundance of temporal blessings was a pledge and earnest penny to them of the life eternal, they having the same faith, the same Father, the same spiritual meat, the same spiritual drink, the same Lord, the same hope, the same heaven, the same Christ that we have. Albeit, they were as little children under tutors and governors, and were taught in rude manner, by shadows and ceremonies, which are as certain pictures and looking glasses to behold the outward manner of his dispensation, whereas we are come to man's estate in comparison of them, and behold

Jesus Christ openly in the face, we know his death, resurrection, ascension, and opening the kingdom of heaven to us. Therefore our Savior saith, John. 8.56. Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it, and was glad. So the Apostle to the Hebrews saith, That the Fathers died in faith, and received not the things promised, but saw them afar off, believed them, received them, thankfully, confessed that they were Pilgrims and strangers on the earth: so that they judged the promises made to them to be spiritual, and expected more then temporal blessings. This is one point which we are to learn and imprint in our minds, touching the Jews, who had an image of the serpents lifted up, to teach them the doctrine of Christ hanging on the cross. If then the unbelieving Jews in these days blaspheme Christ crucified, & account the blood of the New Testament an unholy thing, and impossible to give salvation; let thē know, that their fathers received life, and recovered health by a brazen serpent, an image without life and motion: the meaning & signification hereof were not hard, but easy to gather, saving that the Apostle teacheth, that their minds are obstinate, and that a veil is laid over their hearts in reading the Old Testament, so that they understand nothing, &c. 1 Corin. 3, 14. Thus doth God send them strong delusions, that they should believe lies, that all they might be damned which believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. 2 Thess. 2, 11, 12. Thus then we see, that the Covenant which GOD made with man, to be gracious and favorable unto them, is one in substance and matter; seeing there is but one God, one Mediator between God and man, one faith, one mean of reconciliation and one way of salvation to all that are saved, and have been saved from the beginning. Christ Jesus was appointed over all things, to be the head of the Church, by whom all the body is coupled and knit together Eph. 1, 22, & 4, 16. He is the way, the truth, and the life, no man cometh to the Father but by him. John 1, 18, and 14, 6. All therefore (he being only the way) as well under the Law, as under the Gospel, who were to be saved, had respect to the only Mediator Christ, by whom alone they were reconciled to God, and saved by faith. The differences between the Jews and us, were only in certain circumstances, in promising of corporal benefits, in giving them outward signs and oblations, in propounding things more obscurely and darkly, in restraining his gifts, and in limiting them to the Jewish Nation: whereas otherwise the old and new covenant agree together, not only in the Author of them, which is God, and in the Mediator of them, which is Christ, but in the promises of grace, touching remission of sins, and everlasting life to be freely given for Christ's sake; and in the condition, in respect of man, that we should walk before him uprightly, & believe the Gospel unfeignedly.

[Use 2] Secondly, we observe from this similitude, the natural estate and condition of all mankind what it is: we are all naturally stung with the poison of the old serpent, and the wound is mortal. All the Israelites that were bitten by the fiery serpents, whether deeply, or but a little, whether more or less, whether once or often, died the death if they used not the remedy ordained of God, albeit y^e wound were slender and shalow. So such as look not on Christ hanging on the Cross, are sure to fall into damnation. The guilt of sin is as the poison of a serpent; this we have drawn frō our first parents, by whose offense we are culpable of judgment. We are all stung with it unto death. The wound is so deep & deadly, y^t we are guilty of the transgression of Adam, being in his loins. We have the spawn and seed of all sin in us, we are corrupt in soul and body, we are prone to fall into the most dangerous and desperate sins. The Israelites felt the anguish of the pain, and the danger of death, otherwise they would never have looked up to the brazen serpent. If the sick man find not the want of his health, feel not the grief of his sickness, fear not the loss of his life, he will never seek to the Physician for ease and recovery. And indeed, what should it have auailed these distressed Jews, to have any recourse to the brazen ferpent, unless they had perceived themselves to be stung even to death, and no other way or remedy to procure their deliverance? So it behooveth all of us, to have a lively and sensible feeling of our spiritual wounds. We must know, that sin is as a poison to the soul; and the Law giveth strength to sin. We must be grieved for our sins, which draw upon us the loss of God's favor, more then for the lack and loss of bodily health. Let us not therefore make a mock of sin. We see no man will dally or delight in poison: no poison is so dangerous to the body, as sin is to the soul. Let us beware of the wiles and subtleties of the old serpent, lest as he beguiled Eve through his craftiness, so he corrupt our minds from the simplicity that is in Christ, & carry us headlong to destruction and damnation of soul and body.

Thirdly, in this Type we see the nature of [Use 3] the Sacraments. The brazen serpent in it self had no operation to work anything; in it self it had no virtue to cure or recover any man of any disease. The Sacraments of themselves cannot confer grace, only they are instruments of God's mercies, which he useth of his goodness toward us, to convey to us good things. They are as the Kings gracious pardon, that sealeth up unto us forgiveness of sins: so that being by his institution very available, we must frequent thē with a feeling of our wants, with reverence of his ordinances, with hungering after his graces, with calling upon his Name, to fit and prepare us to that heavenly work. God could have healed his people with his word alone, (without the serpent, as well as with the serpent) as the Centurion confesseth to Christ, Speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed; yet he addeth the serpent set upon a pole for farther assurance of his word, and to be a sign of their recovery: so God can save by the Ministry of his word without the Sacraments, if it please him; yet he addeth and annexeth them as appurtenances to the word, to confirm the weakness of our faith, and to make good the truth of his own promise. And as it was not enough for them to believe the word of God to the curing of their bodies, & the taking away of the stinging of the serpents, unless they used the help of the brazen serpent: no more is it sufficient for us, to believe the forgiveness of sins by Christ, unless we labor to strengthen our faith by the Sacraments. Nay, if any would not vouchsafe to look upon the Serpent, being the means that God ordained for their recovery; it is certain they regarded not the word of God it self, that they should live: so, if any contemn or neglect the Sacraments being holy seals of heavenly blessings, they are plainly convinced to their faces, that they respect not the word it self, whatsoever they pretend to the contrary notwithstanding. This we see in Ahaz, who neglecting a sign offered unto him, for the better strengthening of his faith, is said to tempt God, and to despise his word, Isaiah 7, 12. The natural reason of man would never believe, that he should be healed by a serpent of brass, having no virtue or vigor in it: so carnal wisdom and understanding cannot discern, how a little water sprinkled on the body, should be the laver of regeneration; or how a small cantle of bread, should bring and convey unto us the body of Christ; or a little wine, offer and exhibit unto us the blood of Christ: So that as in this bodily cure both their eye did behold it, and their faith did believe: in like manner, in the Sacraments we must shut the eyes of our carnal reason, and open the eyes of faith, believe his word, and we shall be comforted. For every man doth in them receive (through the promise of God,) so much as he believeth he receiveth. This Christ assureth to the woman of Canaan, who had shown an undaunted and invincible faith, taking no repulses, ouerstriding all difficulties, refusing all denials, and striving against all doubts that might arise in her heart, saying; O woman, great is thy faith, be it to thee as thou desirest. Mat. 15, 28. So when two blind men followed him, crying & saying; O son of David, have mercy upon us, he said unto them, Believe ye that I am able to do this? and when they answered, Yea Lord, he touched their eyes, saying; According to your faith, be it unto you. Mat. 9, 29. Moreover, albeit the Serpent restored life, yet was not life present and inherent in the brazen serpent, neither abiding in the matter, or resting in the form thereof: so albeit Christ be offered and signified, yea conveyed and conferred unto us in the Sacraments of Baptism, and the Lord's Supper, yet he is not carnally and corporally present, nor carnally and corporally eaten, as the Capernaïtes imagined, but he is spiritual meat for spiritual men; the rest eat the outward signs, but are not partakers of the thing signified. Thus we see, how the consideration of the similitude of the brazen serpent directeth us in sundry conclusions to be holden and acknowledged touching the Doctrine of the Sacraments of the New Testament.

Fourthly, this present type teacheth us, that [Use 4] we are justified by faith alone, without the works of the Law. For as the Israelites stung of these serpents were cured, so are we saved; as health was offered by the serpent, so is salvation by Christ. But the Israelites did nothing at all, but only look up to the brazen serpent, they were not willed to make satisfaction for their rebellion, or to go on pilgrimage, nor so much as to dress and bind up their wounds; but only to behold the serpent set upon the pole, & as Christ saith to the Ruler of the Synagogue touching the healing of his daughter, Fear not, only believe, Mar. 5, 36, so is it in the saluing of the sores of the soul, in the attaining pardon of our sins, and obtaining the righteousness of Christ. There is required nothing of us touching our justification and salvation, but to fixe the eyes of our faith upon Christ. True it is, many other virtues and graces are required to make up the full perfection of a Christian man, that he may be complete, wanting nothing; yet he is justified and doth stand as righteous in the sight of God by faith only. It is a great & weighty controversy in these days, between the Church of Rome and us, what is the cause of life and salvation: they ascribe the cause of salvation in part to y^e merit of our own works, and to a righteousness inherent in our own persons, and in part likewise to Christ, who (say they) hath made us able to merit the favor of God, and to satisfy for our own sins. We ascribe all our salvation to the mercy of God, and the merit of Christ, wholly applied to us by a lively faith; the which manner of saving us, most fitly agreeth to the nature of God, the chief Fountain of our salvation, who can abide no pollution, neither can any wickedness stand in his presence; who is of pure eyes, & requireth our perfect obedience, so that wanting the perfect righteousness of the Law, of our own, we must be clothed with the righteousness of another, whereby we may be saved. Even as Jacob, though he were not by birth the first borne, yet hiding himself under his brothers garments, and having put on his coat which smelled most sweetly, came into his fathers presence, that under another man's person, he might receive the blessing of the first borne; so is it necessary that we lie hid under the precious pureness of Christ our elder brother, that having the sweet savor of his garments, our sins may be covered with his perfection, that we may offer our selves to our most loving Father, and obtain of him the blessing of righteousness. And this some of our adversaries themselves cannot but approve, and have given their own fellows the slip. Besides, this Doctrine standeth best with the glory of God, which shineth more clearly in our salvation obtained by justice imputed, then by justice inherent For suppose there were a miserable and desperate debtor, perishing and languishing imprisonment, were it not far more honorable & gracious for a Prince wholly to pay the debt, and to cancel the bond & hand-writing standing against him, then to put into his hands a stock of money, whereby himself might be enabled to work out his debt? Therefore the Apostle teacheth, that we are made the righteousness of God in Christ, and are saved by grace thorough faith, not of our selves, it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast, Eph. 2, 8, 9. Thus Paul concludeth also concerning Abraham, the father of the faithful, Rom. 4, 2. Thus doeth Christ determine this question, drawing a comparison from the brazen serpent, John 3, 14, 15, 16: for he teacheth, that y^e son of man must be lift up on the cross, as the serpent was on the pole in the Wildernes, that whosoever belieueth in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life. Let us then renounce all merit and righteousness in our own selves, & fly to the merits and righteousness of Christ, according to the practice and example of the Apostle, Phil. 3, 8, 9: I have counted all things loss, and do judge them to be dung, that I might win Christ, and might be found in him; not having mine own righteousness which is of the Law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, even the righteousness which is of God through faith. Hereunto cometh the reason of the same Apostle: Abraham believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness: now to him that worketh, the wages is not counted by favor, but by debt: but to him that worketh not, but believeth in him that iustificieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness Rom. 4, 3, 4, 5. True it is, works are necessarily required as the fruits of faith, and of justification by faith: but our justification is one thing, our sanctification is another, for they are made several graces & distinct gifts: neither is it likely, that the Apostle would repeat the same thing twice without cause. And in another place he concludeth, that a man is justified by faith without the work of the Law: if it be of grace, it is no more of works, for then were grace no more grace: but if it be of works, it is no grace, for then were work no more work. Rom. 3, 28, & 11, 6. Therefore it is truly said, that good works follow a man being justified, but do not go before; in him that is to be justified. Neither let any say, It is absurd that one should be made righteous by the righteousness of another, for the righteousness of Christ, is both his and ours. His, as being inherent in him, as in a subject. Ours, being given unto us, and imputed to us; so that by it we are justified before God, and accepted to eternal life. And that horrible blasphemy is this, to teach, that by the Popes indulgences, we should be made partakers of the merits and good works of the saints, and to deny it as most unreasonable, what we should be partaker of the merits and righteousness of Christ Jesus. But as the transgression of Adam was both his and ours also; not his alone, nor ours alone, but his and ours together, because he stood in our places, and we were in his loins: so is Christ's righteousness and obedience his and ours. And why should not the righteousness be of another, seeing guilt is of another As another maketh us sinners, why should not another make us righteous, and justify us from sin? It might seem to flesh and blood as unreasonable, that the brazen serpent in this place, being an artificial work, made with man's hands, without sense & life, should restore health, and give life to such as were mortally bitten: yet we see by beholding it, they were recovered.

Moreover, the people stung by the fiery serpents, ryled out in the anguish and bitterness of the pain, yet none was able to help himself or his brother, by his own power of strength, or by any act wrought by him; no, nor Moses himself could minister any cure or comfort unto them, but only the graces of God, directing them to look upon the brazen serpent set up, (for when GOD had appointed them one way, they must not seek another way:) so although a man feeleth the sting of the old serpent, that is, sin; yet no man can deliver himself or others; nay, if he should fly to the works of the Law, they can do nothing. The Law showeth the disease, it is Christ that must take it away, it is God that must show mercy, it is faith that must justify us. We affirm therefore with the Apostle, Gal. 2, 16, that we are justified freely, not of the Law, not by the Law, not of works, not of our selves, not of the works of the Law, but by faith; all matter of boasting is excluded, justification by grace is concluded, that God may be all in all.

Fifthly, great consolation ariseth from this [Use 5] comparison and similitude, to all such as we weak in faith, & feel the corruptions of their hearts pressing them, and the temptations of Satan often overcoming them, & always assaulting them. For we have great comfort given us to enter into the combat, and to fight the battles of the Lord against the enemies of our souls, by consideration of these fierce and fiery serpents. True it is, they did continually bite & sting the children of Israel, (for otherwise there had been no need of the brazen serpent) yet they could not destroy them; they did not ceaffe to vex thē, but they could not wound them unto the death; for they had a remedy at hand to help themselves, they looked upon the brazen serpent and were healed. So hath God restrained the rage and malice of all the enemies of our peace and salvation. For howsoever the devil & his angels are always tempting, provoking, and seeking to ◇ us as men do wheat, yet their homes and ot short, and their strength is diminished, their will to hurt, is greater then their power of hurting; so that they cannot execute the cruelty they desire, as the Lord himself testifieth from the beginning, Gen. 3, verse 15. Albeit therefore the battle be long, & the skinnis oftentimes hot & bloody; albeit we take many a foil, and have the Bucklers beaten to our heads; albeit we be felled with the stroke, and driven to fight upon our knees, yet the victory shall be ours, and we are assured to prevail over our adversaries, who may fight against us, but can never overcome us.

Again, note that God requireth not of the Israelites stung in the Wilderness, the use of both eyes, nor exacteth a perfect sight to behold the serpent. Such as looked upon it with a weak and dim sight, even with half an eye only, (as no doubt among that great people, multiplied as the fish in the sea in great abundance, there was great difference in sight) there being among them young & old, strong and weak, sharp-sighted, and blear-eyed; yet all that saw the serpent set up, were cured and restored; not for the goodness of their sight, but for the promise and ordinance of God. So such as have a true faith, though it be as a grain of mustard-seed, which is the least of all seeds, can lay hold on Christ, and apply him to themselves. A small drop of water, is as well and truly water, as the whole Ocean sea; a little spark is true fire, as well as a mighty flame; a little quantity of earth is as truly earth, as the whole Globe thereof. So a small measure of faith, is as well true faith, as a full persuasion and assurance, & the gates of hell shall never prevail against it. The least faith is acceptable to God, A bruised Reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, until he bring forth judgment unto victory. A weak faith doth as truly apprehend & apply Christ with all his merits and obedience, as a stronger faith. Even as a small and weak hand, if it be able to carry and convey the meat unto the mouth, serveth for the nourishment of the body, as well as an hand of greater strength, because it is not the strength of the hand, but the goodness of the meat that nourisheth the body: so a weak faith, laying hold on Christ, and applying him and all his benefits to the believer, is sufficient to nourish him to eternal life, because it is not the worthiness or excellency of faith, but of Christ applied, which is available and effectual for our justification and salvation. All the Israelites being an huge host of many hundred thousands, were not alike sharp-sighted, and quick-eyed: but some no doubt were pur-blind, and could not see afar off, and saw the serpent exceeding darkly & dimly; yet was not the blear-eyed man hindered of his health, because of his weak and tender eye, but if he looked thereupon, and were not wholly blind, he was delivered and restored, though otherwise never so slender-sighted. So whosoever are stung to death with sin (as all are by nature, and the wound sticketh deeply in their soul) if they look up to Christ with the eye of faith, resting upon him alone for their salvation; though never so weak in faith, yet shall be restored to the joy and health of their salvation, and be eternally saved. There is a weak eye, and there is a strong eye; so there are diverse degrees of faith, there is a little faith, there is a great faith, and there is a fullness or assurance of faith. And as a weak eye seeth vnperfectly, the strong eye discerneth strongly; so a little faith believeth faintly, a great faith believeth steadfastly, an assured faith believeth fully, under hope, even against hope, with faithful Abraham; yet the least of them believeth truly & effectually. The Disciples of Christ said unto him, We believe and know that thou art Christ, the Son of the living God, John 6, 69, yet this faith was quickly shaken, when the storms of wind and rain arose, it was quailed in his death, but repaired in his resurrection. Themselves feeling their own wants prayed, Lord, increase our faith. Luke 17, 5. The poor distressed man saith in the Gospel, Lord, I believe, help mine unbelief. Mark. 9, 24. Where we see (as one noteth) he saith, I believe, therefore he had faith: he addeth, Help mine unbelief, therefore he had not attained to a fullness and assurance of faith, and yet was accepted. Peter was in believing a lively pattern of us all, sometimes he believeth, sometimes he wauereth; sometimes he confesseth Christ, sometimes he shrinketh back from that confession. It was faith that made Peter at the word & commandment of Christ to step into the sea, to go to Christ upon the waters, & to believe that he should be safe through his word that commanded, otherwise he would never have adventured to depart out of the ship: yet he believed not with a full persuasion, forasmuch as the weakness of his faith made him begin to sink, and earnestly to cry out unto Christ, Master, save us; to whom Christ answered, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt? Math. 14, 28. Yet this weak faith was a true faith, and this little faith was a lively faith, because that fear and doubting made him run and have recourse to Christ, expecting all strength and succor from him alone, finding no power or ability in himself to deliver himself. And thus do many of the faithful believe their own particular salvation, albeit not fully and perfectly, yet truly & effectually to the comfort of their own souls: albeit they sometimes waver and stagger, yet they recover themselves, and increase more & more in strength of faith.

Lastly, this teacheth us what is the nature [Use 6] and property of a true justifying faith, and wherein it consisteth, namely, in a special and particular application of Christ's righteousness to our own selves. It was not enough for these Israelites which were stung, that others should look upon the serpent set up, but it was required of everyone (to work the cure) to behold it himself. So must we have a particular faith in Christ, apprehending his merits. Thus the Apostle setteth down that faith whereby he lived and was justified, Gal. 2, 20. I was crucified with Christ, &c. who loved me and gave himself for me. Here we see the right property of a lively faith to stand in application of the love of God, & the merit of the passion of Christ to our selves, albeit there be great weakness in our applying of him, considering that it is not the perfection of our faith that doth save us, but the perfection of the obedience of Christ, which faith apprehendeth. This faith was in David, as he witnesseth in sundry Psalms; The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, my God, and my strength, my shield, the horn of my salvation, and my refuge. Psal. 18, 2. Thus have the faithful learned to apply the general promises of the Gospel unto themselves. When God saith, Seek ye my face, Psal. 27, 8, the faithful soul answereth to God, I will seek thy face. When God saith, Thou art my people, Zach. 13, 9, the faithful resoundeth back again, Thou art the Lord my God. When Christ saith, If thou believe, all things are possible to him that believeth, Mark. 9, 23, the believer answereth, Lord, I believe, help mine unbelief. When God requireth to do his will, the believer saith to him again, Loe, I come, O my God, I am content to do it, yea thy law is within mine heart. Hence we must all learn to abhor & abjure the false faith of the false church of Rome, which teacheth that to be true faith, which generally believeth the word of God to be true. This is the faith of the reprobates, and thus the devil and all damned spirits may be said to have faith. For every article of the Creed, teacheth us to believe, not only generally that there is a God, a Savior, a Sanctifier, a Church of God, a Communion of Saints, a forgiveness of sins, a resurrection of the body to everlasting life, which the devil and his angels knoweth, confesseth, and believeth: but particularly that God the Father is our Father, that Christ is our Savior, that the holy Ghost is our Sanctifier, that there is an holy Catholic Church, and that we are true members of it, that we have our part and fellowship in the Communion of Saints, that our sins are forgiven us, and that we shall rise again to glory and immortality. Hence it is, that we pray daily, not only for remission of sins to be given to the faithful, but for the forgiveness of our own sins. Hence it is, that in coming to the Lord's Table, we receive Christ as the bread of life and the food of our souls. There can be no eating and drinking but by a particular taking and receiving: so can there be no believing in Christ without a special receiving & apprehending of Christ, according to the saying of Christ, John 6, 56, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me and I in him. No man is fed by the meat that another man eateth: so no man is justified by the faith whereby another man believeth, but the just man liveth by his own faith, Hab. 2▪ 4. For he is the bread of life that came down from heaven, He that cometh to him, shall never hunger: and he that believeth on him shall never thirst. Let us therefore labor for this special faith and affiance in the mercy of God, and make particular application of the merits of Christ. Let us believe in him who is the true brazen serpent, or rather the truth of the brazen serpent; let us make him to be our life, who is of God made unto us to be wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, 1 Cor. 1, 30.

10 And the Childrē of Israel departed thence, and pitched in Oboth.

11 And they departed from Oboth, and pitched in the hills of Abarim, in the Wilderness which is before Moab at the rising of the Sun.

12 They departed thence, and pitched upon the River of Zared.

13 Thence they departed, and pitched on the other side of Arnon, which is in the Wilderness, coming out of the Coast of the Amorites: for Arnon is the border of Moab, between the Moabites and the Amorites.

14 Wherefore, it is spoken in the book of the battles of the Lord, against Uaheb in the Land of Suph, and against the Rivers of Arnon.

15 And the stream of these Rivers which goeth down to the dwelling of Ar, lieth upon the border of Moab.

16 And from thence they removed to Beer, the same is that Well, whereof the Lord said unto Moses, Assemble the people, and I will give them water.

17 Then Israel sang this song, Rise up Well, shout ye unto it.

18 O Well, which the Princes digged, the Nobles of the people digged it, by the direction of the law-giver, with their staves. And from the Wilderness they went to Mattanah.

19 And from Mattanah to Nahaliel, and from Nahaliel to Bamoth.

20 And from Bamoth to the Ualley which is in the Land of the Moabites, at the beginning of the Hilles, and looketh toward the Wilderness.

In this division is contained the third part of this Chapter, describing the peregrinations and perambulations of the Israelites, in what places they pitched their Tents, till they came to the possession of the Amorites.

Touching these several journeys, some are barely and nakedly mentioned, because no notable matter or extraordinary and memorable accident fell out therein: other are passed over, and not at all mentioned or remembered, because the whole order of their traveling in the Wilderness, is particularly recorded afterward, Numbers, chapter 33, how they removed from place to place, and after what manner. But upon some other of their remoouals, Moses doeth somewhat more largely insist, and as it were make a stay as in the setting down of two points: First, rehearsing the bounds by which the Israelites passed into the Land of promise: secondly, describing the well which they digged for water.

Touching the first point, they are said to have pitched in Oboth, then at the heaps of the hills of Abarim, situate right over against Moab; then at the brook Zared: lastly, at the borders of the Amorites near to the River Arnon. Now because these were at the first the bounds and borders of the Moabites, Moses showeth how by conquest they were lost; declaring both who lost them, and likewise who won thē by the dint of the sword. For he telleth us by the Spirit of God, y^t these places were once in the power, possession, and dominion of Vaheb, who before managed the state and kingdom of the Moabites: but Sihon, thirsting with ambition to enlarge the bounds of his dominion, set upon Vaheb, bad him battle, and won these Coasts & Countries from him.

Now to continue the memorial & remembrance hereof to posterity, there was a public register made hereof to posterity, showing that the name of those quarters was Suph, and declaring that Vaheb had been the lawful possessor of thē, as Sihon was now y^e wrongful usurper. Nevertheless, as all things else are ouerswaied by an higher power, so this battle was fought and directed by the providence of God, that y^e Moabites for their horrible idolatry, might be punished, that Sihon, provoking Israel to battle, might be repressed, and that thereby an inheritance for y^e people of God might be prepared and obtained. This is the cause why God drew out y^e swords of these Infidels one against another, that the Moabites lost a part of their dominion, and the Amorites enlarged their borders. Thus the Israelites took nothing from the Moabites, neither possessed any part that was in their present possession, as Iephtah prescribeth in the book of Judges, chap. 11, 26. For when the King of the Amonites challenged Israel for encroching upon his ancient dominion, & deteining part of his Country from him, to wit, from Arnon unto Iabbock and Jordan, after their departure out of Egypt, and required of them to make present restitution: Iephtah convinceth them, and disproueth this allegation as false and unreasonable, declaring (as the truth was) that Israel took not away that land which they claimed as their own, but won it from the Amorites by the law of war, and [Verse 20] by right of conquest, who denying them passage, and moreover making assault upon them, constrained them to draw out their swords & to defend themselves: by occasion whereof they obtained victory through the help of God, and possessed their Cities. And as they took them by force of arms, so they held thē [Verse 26] by prescription of time, three hundred years. So that he declareth, that if any had right to those Cities, or could lay any just claim or title unto them, it should be the Moabites who were the lawful owners of them, before Sihon had encroched upon them, and taken them away from the first inhabitants. But the Moabites having once lost them in battle, never asked [Verse 25] them of the Israelites, neither laid any claim unto them: therefore much less should the Amonites, to whom they appertained not by any just title, neither belonged any way unto them, either as owners by law, or conquerors by sword; and therefore they had no cause to dispute what right Israel had unto that Land which now they possessed.

The second point here amplified and enlarged, is touching the well, which by a divine revelation to them they had digged. For when they departed from the River Arnon, they came into a dry place where they wanted water, such as the wilderness affordeth many, where the streams are swallowed up in the hot sandes, but at the special commandment of God they were directed what to do; as Peter was, where he should cast his Net, Luke, chapter 5, verse 4: they digged and found water in great abundance, and therefore they praise God by an effectual song of thanksgiving, amplified by many rhetorical figures, as goodly flouers, or as precious jewels to beautify and garnish the same withal.

For first, they eloquently by an Apostrophe, turn their speech to the Well it self, though a dumb and senseless creature, and speak unto it, as if it had ears to hear, and understanding to conceive, Rise up, O Well: confessing thereby the great power of God, who contrary to the nature of all heavy and weighty things, made the water to ascend, whose property is to descend: and exhorting with many acclamations and loud out-cries one another to the work.

Secondly, they set down who were the laborers and workmen about the Well, together with the tools and instruments wherewith they labored, to wit, the Princes and Nobles, directed by Moses, (by whose ministry they received the Law) and holpen with their staves and such like instruments (wherewith they labored) fit for that purpose. And this is the third miracle which God wrought in giving them waters. First, in Rephidim, immediately after they had passed over the red Sea, Exod. 17. The second in the desert of Zin, whē they came to Kadesh, as we shown before in the former chapter. The third is that recorded in this place, in the desert of the Moabites. Afterward Moses reckoneth up other places, by which they passed, as Mattaanah, Nahaliel, Bamoth, and so that Valley which is in the plain of the Moabites.

In this History of the passage of the Israelites from place to place, a question ariseth, what is meant by the book of the wars of the LORD, mentioned in the fourteenth verse? For where is it now extant? or what is become of it? From hence also, & from such like places many conclude, that sundry books of Canonical Scripture are lost. I answer, [Answer.] the word (Sepher) is taken diversely and doubtfully: it signifieth any publishing or rehearsing, whether it be written, or unwritten; whether it be set down by the pen, or uttered by lively voice; as also the word Tradition is taken for that which is delivered, either by word of mouth, or by course of writing. So then we cannot necessarily conclude, It is rehearsed, therefore it is written: Nor thus, It is written, Therefore it is an holy book, and put into the Canon of the Scripture. Let these three things be cleared and decided, that it was a book, that it was an holy book, and lastly that it was a Canonical book, and then we shall easily be satisfied, But Moses speaketh barely of rehearsing the wars, not of writing them: as if he should say, Whensoever the wars, ordered and disposed by the providence of God, shall be spoken off; this war also and work of his shall be remembered, which he hath wisely wrought and accomplished for his people against Uaheb King of the Moabites, giving part of his Country to Sihon, that so his own people might recover the same out of his hands again, and retain it as a possession for themselves, as Iephtah telleth the Ammonites, Judge. 11, 23, 24, that they had held it by prescription of a long time peaceably without any molestation from the Moabites, or desire of re-entry. But if this had been penned in a book, and reserved to posterity, no doubt Ieptah would have produced it as a sure witness to clear the whole matter, and to put it out of all doubt.

Wherefore this truth must be holden of us, that no part of the Canonical Scripture, inspired of God, is lost and perished: I mean such as was committed as the Lord's treasure to the Church, for the perpetual instruction thereof in faith and obedience, so that no one oracle or sentence of God can fall away. True it is, these sacred books may sometimes be neglected and carelessly kept of men, they may be furiously burned, and despitefully handled by cruel tyrants that seek the overthrow of all piety and religion, but they can never be finally lost and wholly extinguished. As he that keepeth Israel cannot slumber or sleep: so he that keepeth the holy Scripture, the glory of Israel, cannot slumber nor sleep. For first of all, who is the author and enditer of thē but God? and will not he preserve his truth, and keep it for the good of his Church in all ages? Shall we make him unable, or unwilling to defend and continue them? If unable, we make him a weak and impotent God: if unwilling, we make him envious and malicious, both which are far from the pure and perfect nature of God, and cannot stand with his essence. Secondly, all the works of God remain forever and ever, and are done in truth and equity. Take a perfect view of all creatures under the Sun, which are the works of his hands; though they may be abolished and rooted out in one place, yet they continue in another. If thou wouldst ascend into the heavens, or go down into the deep, if thou wouldst take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the utmost parts of the sea, which of all the Creatures are now missing? What place is void & empty? What hath been, that is not now being, and extant in the world? This is it which the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 111. The works of his hands are established forever and ever, and are done in truth and equity. If then all his works abide and continue from the glorious Creatures in the heavens, to the silly worm creeping in the earth: much more the holy Scripture must abide without decaying or diminishing, (as the durable Cedar without rotting and consuming) which is not only his handywork, but a masterworke chief above all others, as the Diamond among pearls of great price. And if the least and lowest creature in the world hath been in his kind continued hitherto, and shall be continued to the end, by the mighty hand of God, upholding and supporting all things that he hath made: much less shall the Scripture perish and fall away, which bringeth greater glory to God, and greater gain to his people? Thirdly, y^e Scripture was written for these ends and purposes, for instruction and admonition, for teaching and confutation, for comfort and consolation, that so the man of God may be absolute, 1 Tim. 3, 16, 17. Neither was God deceived in his purpose and intent: so that it must remain & continue, being written for those ends and uses. But what error can be convinced, what comfort can be received, what vice can be corrected, what truth can be published, what grace can be commended to the Church, out of those books which are supposed to be lost? Let us not therefore doubt of God's providence, and so shake the faith of the Church thereby. Fourthly, we see the Old Testament hath reserved entirely the Genealogies of the fathers, which are not absolutely necessary to faith and salvation, as also the whole body of the ceremonies set down in Leviticus and other places of the Law, which notwithstanding were shadows of things to come: why then should we not presume, that the same his providence hath also watched over other books, which more properly belong to our practice and times, and so more fitly might inform us against ignorance, teach us in our religion, warn us in dangers, and comfort us in afflictions? And if we have no word missing or sentence wanting in such books as are left to the Church that there should need a void room: or a desunt nonnulla; or an Asteriscus and some little star to give warning of some defect, as we see it is in many profane writings, and those of the best note: how should we be induced to believe that whole volumes of the old and New Testament are utterly lost & never to be repaired? Lastly, let us hear the testimony of the Scripture it self, & observe what it can say, and doth witness for it self. Moses an old and ancient witness, teacheth, Deut. 29, 29, that secret things belong to the Lord our God, but the things revealed, belong unto us and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this Law. But how do they belong unto us, that are not reserved for us? Or how shall our children be directed by them, that cannot be found in their days, or in the days of their fathers before them? Or how shall either father or son do that which they cannot know? Hereunto David accordeth, Psal. 119, 152. I have known long since by thy testimonies, that thou hast established them forever. And our Savior giveth his holy consent unto this heavenly truth, saying, Truly I say unto you, till heaven and earth perish, one jot or one tittle of the Law shall not escape, till all things be fulfilled, Mat. 5, 18, and 24, 35. So then, we must hold the durableness and continuance of the Scripture in the Church, which is the pillar of truth, that it cannot fail or fall away, as is proved at large in the answer to the Preface of the Rhemish Testament.

But before we proceed to the Doctrines of this division, it shall not be amiss to answer the objections that are raised and moved against this point, touching the perpetuity of the whole Scripture, and of every part of it.

First, we find often mention made of the books of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah and Israel, of the book of the just, & such like, which are lost. If then these be lost, and by no means to be found; how shall we truly say, that the whole Scripture doeth continue?

I answer, these books were never Canonical Scriptures, but civil stories and chronicles of the Commonwealth matters, not of the Church, whereunto the Reader is directed if he be desirous to read and know the History more at large: whereas the Prophets do only touch so much, as served for the edification of the Church, and the building of it in faith toward God. For as all civil Nations have the Chronicles of their forefathers and ancestors acts, Ester, chap. 6, verse 1. Ezra 4, verses 15, 19, so had the Jews their civil Histories; such were those we now speak of, which were good and profitable books of men, but were never committed or commended to the care of the Church to be preserved and maintained.

Again, we read in sundry places, of the books of Nathan and Gad, the words of Samuel, the works of Ahia, of Shemaia, of Isaiah, and other Prophets, which likewise seem to be lost, as well as the other we named before.

I answer, they seem so to such as do not duly consider of them, which indeed are not lost, but contained in the old Testament in the books of Samuel and of the Kings, which were not written by any one Prophet; but by diverse Prophets at diverse times, even in the several ages wherein they prophesied, albeit their several names be not to every part expressed, as appeareth, 2 Chron. chapter 26, verse 22, where the Spirit of God testifieth, that Isaiah wrote the acts of Uzziah, first and last: meaning that he wrote them in the second book of the Kings, and in his Prophecies, and not pointing out any book which now is lost: both the former books remaining as a treasure to the Church. As then we confess these books mentioned in this objection, to be of another nature then those expressed in the former, so they have been preserved, and ever shall be preserved in the Church, and be as it were laid up in the Ark thereof.

Thirdly, it may be objected, that many [Object. 3] worthy books of Solomon are lost which he wrote.

I answer, [Answ.] his works are of two sorts: first, sundry books of Humanity and of Philosophy, natural and moral: secondly, books of Divinity, written as he was moved and inspired by the Spirit of God.

The first sort of human and earthly things, which the Church might best spare without peril or impeachment of faith, have long since failed, as it is thought in the captivity: the rest, which are parts of the Canonical Scriptures do abide. And mark herein a special work of God's providence, preserving his own truth, and reserving it to all posterity.

Few are found in the world to affect or regard the pure and sincere word of God, in comparison of the multitude that seek after human wisdom, and labor to know the nature of Birds, of Beasts, of Fishes of Trees, and of earthly things, which delight the outward senses, and ravish the understanding of natural men: yet see how those books of Solomon that handle mere matters of human Philosophy, which the wise men of the world hunt after, are utterly lost: whereas the divine books which he wrote by inspiration, less regarded, and more contemned, are notwithstanding by the watchful eye of God remaining, and are reserved for the comfort of the Church forever.

Lastly, we read of the Prophecy of Enoch [Object. 4] in the Epistle of Jude, verse fourteenth, who prophesied of the second coming of Christ in power and great glory, with thousands of his Saints: which Prophecy also seemeth to be among those books which are lost.

I answer, [Answer.] this could be no Apochryphall Book of holy Scripture; for Moses was the first Pen-man or Scribe that wrote the holy Scripture, whose five books are perfect, and contained in them sufficient instruction for that CHURCH, whereas that Prophecy did not, nor indeed could not.

Secondly, it cannot appear that this Prophecy was ever written. It is said, he prophesied & foretold the end of the world by the Spirit of God in that most corrupt age that hasted to destruction, to the end that such as were ordained to eternal life might believe, and the rest being hardened might be made without excuse; but it is nowhere said, It was written. It is said to be a Prophecy, but no word or mention is made of the writing of this Prophecy: so that it seemeth, the Apostle learned it by tradition from the father to the son, as the Apostle Paul setteth down the names of the sorcerers that withstood Moses and Aaron. Neither let the Church of Rome lay the foundation of unwritten traditions upon this ground-work: seeing we deny not all unwritten traditions conveyed from hand to hand, but only such as are made rules of God's worship, matters of faith, and parts of religion necessary to salvation.

To conclude therefore, seeing the providence of God, the fidelity of the Church and diligence of the faithful is so great, that the whole body of the Canonical Scripture hath been kept entire and perfect, without loss or lack of any part or parcel of it, of any book or sentence, we must detest the blasphemous shufflings & shiftings of the Church of Rome that make the Scripture to be a maimed, lame, and imperfect doctrine, not containing all things necessary to faith and salvation: whereas the Apostle teacheth, that the whole Scripture inspired of God, is able to make us wise unto salvation, 2 Tim. 3, 15, 16 17, through the faith which is in Christ Jesus; and is profitable to teach, to convince, to correct, & to instruct in righteousness, that the man of God may be absolute, being made perfect unto all good works.

[Verses 10, 11, 12, 13. And the Children of Israel departed thence, and pitched in Oboth, &c. Here we have painted and portraied out, as in a Table, certain stations and journeys of the Israelites: wherein we may behold as in a glass, the providence of God protecting thē, and the obedience of the people following him. We see how they remove from place to place in the wilderness, they are never long at one stay, but either they went forward or backward, as the sea continually ebbeth or floweth. Now as the Land of Canaan was a figure of their rest in the kingdom of heaven: so their wandering up and down in the wilderness, did figure and represent the condition of their life to be vain and transitory in this world.

We learn from hence the state of the faithful, what it is, we are pilgrims and strangers in this life: we are as guests lodging here for a night, but by and by we must depart and be dislodged, we have here no continuing City. This the faithful have in all ages confessed; Jacob being brought into the presence of Pharaoh, saith, The whole time of my pilgrimage is an hundred and thirty years, few and evil have the days of my life been, Gen. 47, 9. But we may say, the days of our pilgrimage are threescore years and ten, if haply we reach so far, to which not one amongst an hundred cometh, few indeed and evil we may truly call them. This Abraham pleadeth, Gen. 23, 4, wanting a place of burial to interre his dead, I am a stranger and a forreigner among you, give me a possession of burial with you. Thus he confesseth it went with him in Canaan, neither was his estate any better elsewhere. This the Prophet David acknowledgeth, though a great King, Psal. 39, 12. Hear my prayer, O Lord, and hearken unto my cry, keep not silence at my tears, for I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner as all my fathers: our days are like a shadow upon the earth, and there is none abiding. So then we see what our life and condition is, we are altogether vanity, like grass that soon withereth: we are as tenants at the will of the Lord, our age is as nothing, it passeth as a tale that is soon told, it is as an hand-breath quickly measured, surely every man in his best estate is altogether lighter then vanity it self.

The reasons. First, all our days are stinted [Reason 1] and limited: as they are short and vain, so they are uncertain and unknown. The strongest natures and constitutions that seem to be framed & settled as a sure building to continue for many years, yet are soon cut off & are no more. We see this confirmed by the daily experience of many examples, as in Uzzah suddenly smitten, 2 Sam. 6, 7: in Job's children quickly overwhelmed, Job 1, 19: in Ananias and Sapphira presently destroyed, Acts 5, 5, 10: in the rich man that had his soul in one night taken from him, Luke 12, 20, and in a continual beholding the hand of God, striking as pleaseth him. If then uncertainty be an apparent argument of vanity, we may conclude from hence, our life to be vain & transitory, inasmuch as God revealeth not, when, or where, or how we shall die and be taken out of this life. We know not when we shall die, at even, or at midnight, at the Cock-crowing, or in the dawning. When we lie down, we know not whether we shall rise again: when we arise, whether we shall lie down again, except we be laid in our grave, and make our bed in the dust. Moreover we know not where we shall die, at home or abroad. When we go out of our houses, we know not whether we shall return to them alive or not, forasmuch as we carry about us evermore houses of clay. And when we come into them, we know not whether we shall go out of them again upon our feet, or be carried out upon the shoulders of others. Lastly, the manner and kind of our death is also as unknown as the rest, whether we shall die a natural or a violent death; a sudden, or a lingering death; whether our life shall be prolonged to the last point and period of nature, our heat and moisture being consumed, as the light of a candle consumeth by little and little and at length goeth out of it self; or whether it shall be taken away by fire, by water, by sword, by famine, by pestilence, by beasts, and such like casualties incident to the sons of men; all which proclaim and publish in our hearts the vain condition of all flesh.

[Reason 2] Secondly, God hath prepared for us a City, whereof he is the builder and maker. This City we seek, being Citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, the mother of us all. For we shall never sufficiently be brought to acknowledge our frail and brittle estate, unless we be raised and lifted up to the meditation of our future condition in the life to come. If then the kingdom of glory be a place of rest, what is this present estate, but a sea of sorrows? If the heaven be our native Country, what is the earth but an exile and banishment? If it be true happiness to enjoy the blessed presence of the living God, then it must needs be a miserable thing, and death it self to want it. If to leave this earthly tabernacle, be a setting of us free and at liberty, what is this body but a prison? If immortality be as the putting on of a garment, what is our mortality, but as it were a nakedness? Lastly, if to die in the Lord, be to go unto God, what is this life but an absence from him? This did the Patriarchs profess, and to this they sealed by their practice, Heb. 11 13, 14, 15, 16. Abraham possessed not one breadth of a foot, saving the purchase bought to bury his dead: Jacob was banished out of that Land, a great part of his life: Isaac and the rest of the fathers had but their walk in it, and enjoyed it as a pledge of another Country which is above.

[Use 1,] The uses follow. If we have here no abiding City in the days of our vanity, then acknowledge God's great mercy toward us being so vain. We see other creatures in their estate more permanent than man is, far exceeding and excelling in natural gifts, in seeing, tasting, moving, hearing, touching, and such like properties: yet no creature tasteth of his saving mercies as man doth. This consideration doth the Prophet lead us unto, Psal. 8, 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, that he is mindful of him and visiteth him, and hath put all things under his feet. There is no merit in us to be a motive to move him to show so great mercy unto us. He findeth us walking in our sins, as it were wallowing in our blood: all our righteousness is as a foul and filthy cloth, Isaiah 64, 6. This use David urgeth, Psal. 103, 14, 15, 16, 18. He knoweth whereof we are made, he remembereth that we are but dust: the days of man are as grass, as a flower of the field so flourisheth he: but the loving kindness of the Lord endureth forever, he is full of cōpassion and mercy, slow to anger, & of great kindness. So that he confirmeth himself & others in God's mercy, by the consideration of our own vanity.

[Use 2] Secondly, seeing our days be vain & short, why do we care and care so much for the things of this life, what we shall eat, what we shall drink, and what we shall put on? Why do we eat the bread of sorrow, & with too much painfulness heap up worldly things? It may be we shall not come to the sight of the fruit of our labors, much less to the partaking of it. A traveler, the shorter his journey is, the less his provision is. We are all travelers, we are in the way to our country, and we are not far from the end of our journey; what folly then and madness is it to cast all our thoughts and meditations to earthly things, and to care not only for the morrow, but for months and years. This our Savior setteth down, Luke 12, 19, 20, 21, for when the rich man said to his soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years, live at ease, eat, & drink, and take thy pastime; It was answered him: O fool, this night will they fetch away thy soul from thee, then whose shall these things be which thou hast provided▪ So is he that gathereth riches and is not rich in God. Hereunto consenteth the Apostle James chap. 4, 13, 14, 15. Go to now, ye that say, today or tomorrow we will go into such a City, and continue there a year, buy & sell, and get gain, and yet ye cannot tell what shall be tomorrow, for what is your life? It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and afterward vanisheth away; for that ye ought to say, if the Lord will, both we shall live and we shall do this or that. Solomon having had plentiful experience of the shortness and vanity of man's life, penned to this purpose the Book of Ecclesiastes, which is (as it were) the marrow and pith; yea, the very quintessence of all his best knowledge, and wherein we may see the refined wisdom of reformed Solomon; he proclaimeth, Vanity of vanities all is vanity: there is an evil which I saw under the Sun, and it is much among men, one to whom God hath given riches, treasures, and honor, & he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that it desireth: but God giveth him not power to eat thereof, a strange man shall eat it up: & though he leave no spark behind him neither son, nor brother, yet doth he not think, for whom do I travail, and defraud my soul of pleasure? This also is vanity, and this is an evil travail, Eccles. 1, 2, and 4, 8, and 5, 12, and 6, 1, 2.

To conclude this use, if we be not strangers in this life, we shall have no part in the kingdom of heaven: If we will have God to avow and acknowledge us for his children, let us live here as foreigners and warfaring men in our journey, or rather in our race. We have pitched and patched up a Tent or Tabernacle, for a day or a night, we must not nestle our selves here, we must not always go groveling to the ground, nor entangle our selves in the affairs of this life to make it our everlasting habitation, but be flying upwards as birds sitting upon a bough. True it is, God is so favorable to many, that they never remove out of the place where they were born, but continue at home in their own houses; they are not driven hither and thither, they are not tossed from poste to pillar; yet must not they make their resting place in this world, & look for heaven upon the earth, but be always ready to follow the calling of God, and know that he hath reserved a better resting place for them in his kingdom. Wherefore the Apostle Peter exhorteth, Dearely beloved, I beseech you as strangers and Pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts which fight against the soul; & have your conversation honest among the Gentiles. This is the beginning of godliness and true religion, to deny this world, and to acknowledge our selves to be but strangers in y^e same. And let us pray with the Prophet, Psal. 119. I am but a stranger upon earth, hide not thy Commandments from me.

[Use 3] Lastly let us learn to depend and rest only upon God, who only dwelleth in immortality, and not on the sons of men, who are nothing but vanity and cannot help. Who would in danger rest upon a weak reed, which beside the weakness is ready to run into our arm? All men are frail and transitory, if then we put confidence in an arm of flesh, we shall be deceived. This the Prophets of God everywhere record, Isaiah 2, 22, and 30, 7, and 31, 3. Ceasse you from the man whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherein is he to be esteemed? Teaching us to cast off all vain confidence in man, if God stop his breath but a little, he is dead and gone. And chap. 30. The Egyptians are vanity, and they shall help in vain: they are men, & not God, their horses flesh, and not spirit: and when the Lord shall stretch out his hand, the helper shall fall, and he that is holpen shall fall, and they shall altogether fail. To this purpose David exhorteth, Psal. 62, 9, 10. The children of men are vanity, to lay them upon a balance, they are altogether lighter then vanity: trust not in oppression nor in robbery: be not vain; if riches increase, set not your heart thereon. Let us set our hearts on our God, and the God of our fathers: abuse not the favor and countenance of great men to do wrong, for he taketh away the greatest: rather let us pray to him to give us wise hearts to number our days, and to think often of our vanity, thereby to keep us from offending against God, that our life passeth as a sleep in the night, that it groweth up as grass, which in the morning flourisheth, but in the evening is cut down and withereth.

[Verse 14. It shall be spoken in the book of the battles of the Lord.] He declareth that the place mentioned in the former verse, should be so ennobled and renowned, that the memory of it should never die or decay. As if Moses should say, when the battles of the Lord shall be spoken off, the River Arnon shall be remembered, and the battles that Vaheb the King of Moab lost. Now they are called the battles of the Lord, that were fought by mē. For howsoever men run together like wild Bears, or wild Boars, and leuy forces of mē, yet their armies are conducted and ruled by God. From hence we learn, That all watres are disposed & ordered of God. Of all things done here beneath, nothing seemeth more casual or confused, and nothing more out of the right course and order then the time of war, when men seem to run together at all adventures: yet God hath his hand in it, he guideth and governeth the same as seemeth good in his own wisdom. This the wise man handleth, Prov. 21, 31. The horse is prepared against the day of battle, but victory is of the Lord. This the Prophet confesseth, Psal. 144, 1. Blessed be the Lord my strength, which teacheth mine hands to fight, and my fingers to battle. No war falleth out in any place, or upon any people, but it is sent of God. When Abraham recovered Lot his brothers son from the enemies, of whom he was taken prisoner, it was God that gave him good success and prospered the work of his hand. When the Israelites revenged the villainy of the Benjamites, in abusing a woman unto death, it is said, the Lord smote Benjamin, and the children of Israel destroyed them. So when Gideon was armed with courage and comfort to encounter with the Midianites, & to perform the work of the Lord against thē, when he was to join battle, he cried out, The sword of the Lord and of Gideon. Judge. 7, 20. Wherefore, howsoever men do manage the battle, yet it is ordered at the will of God.

The reasons are plain. First, who is the [Reason 1] chief Captain of every host and army? Is not the Lord? And is not every battle fought at the discretion & disposing of the General? If then God be the General of the field, and Captain of the host, & President of the war, let us acknowledge that all wars are ordered at his pleasure. This is the Title given unto God, Josh. 5, 13, 14, 15. When Joshua lifting up his eyes, saw a man come against him, having a sword drawn in his hand, he said; Art thou on our side, or on our adversaries? And he answered, Nay but as a Captain of the host of the Lord, am I now come: then Joshua fell on his face to the earth and worshipped him. This chief Captain and Leader of the people, was the Lord, as appeareth by a like place, Exod. 3, 5, where the Angel appearing unto Moses in a flame of fire, is called the Lord.

Secondly, all things whatsoever are ordered [Reason 2] by the appointment and providence of God, that are in heaven and earth; his government over all creatures, and of all actions, is universal, nothing can exempt it self out of the circuit of his dominion, as the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 113, 6. He abaseth himself to behold things in the heaven and in the earth. And the Apostle saith, that of him, and through him, and for him, are all things. Rom. 11, 36.

The uses come now to be considered. First [Use 1] this teacheth us, that the victory is not man's, but the Lord's. For if the battle be the Lord's, then the victory also is the Lord's, that the glory likewise may be his. It is not the sword, nor spear, nor horse, nor man, nor money, that can save or succor: these are vain things to rest upon: so that where some trust in Chariots, and some in Horses, we must remember the Name of the Lord our God, Psal. 20, 7. Therefore the Prophet showeth, Psal. 33, 17, 18, that a King is not saved by the multitude of an host, neither is the mighty man delivered by great strength: an horse is a vain help, and shall not deliver any by his great strength. And this David confesseth, whē he was to encounter with the uncircumcised Philistim, that reviled and railed upon the host of the living God, 1 Sam. 17, 46, 47, and 14, 6. This day shall the Lord close thee in mine hands, and I shall smite thee, that all the world may know that Israel hath a God, and that all this assembly may know that the Lord saveth not with sword nor with spear, (for the battle is the Lord's) and he will give you into our hands. It is not hard with him to save with many or with few: he maketh the weak strong, he causeth one to chase a thousand, and two to put ten thousand to flight, when the mighty God selleth them and shutteth them up. An example we have, 2 Chron. 24, 24. when Joash King of Judah sinned against God, shedding innocent blood, and forgetting the kindness shown to him, the Aramites came up against him, Jerusalem was besieged, the Princes were destroyed, their goods were spoiled; and though the army of Aram came with a small company of men, yet the Lord delivered a very great army into their hand, because they had forsaken the Lord God of their fathers.

Give God the glory of his own works, and let us not sacrifice to our own Nets. This is the cause why God oftentimes doth not bless and prosper our wars, we glory greatly in our multitudes of men, whereby God is robbed of his glory, and constrained to show us our own folly, and to chasten us for our presumption.

[Use 2] Secondly, it behooveth us to consult with him before we enter into it, to pray for a blessing, and to depend upon him touching the success. If nothing ought to be enterprised rashly, or taken in hand unadvisedly; then should wars be seriously thought upon, and warily begun, and wisely undertaken. The wise man teacheth, Prov. 20, 18, & 24, 6, that by counsel the thoughts of the heart must be established, and by counsel wars are to be enterprised. Thus when God promised victory to Ahab by one of his Prophets, over a great multitude of the Syrians, that he might learn to know him to be the Lord, Ahab asked of the Lord, who should order the battle? 1 Kings 20, 14, & 22, 5. So we must do nothing before we ask counsel of God to know his will & pleasure, as Jehoshaphat taught Ahab, craving his help against Ramoth Gilead, Ask counsel I pray thee of the Lord today, whether he will make our way prosperous. When the children of Dan sent expert men to view the Land and search it out, Judge. 18, 5, 6, they asked counsel of God, to guide their feet in the way of peace. It is dangerous to be cold and careless in consulting with him, & coming to his ordinance for it. Good King Joshua the Pillar of y^e hand, and nursing father of the Church, was killed by Pharaoh Necho, 2 Chron. 35, 22, because he consulted not with the mouth of the Lord, but went out to try his own strength. Let us not in the day of battle, think the season lost, or the time il spent that is employed this way: now is the acceptable time, and it is no wisdom to delay or defer it. This was the wickedness of Saul's heart, when the noise of the Philistines army came to his ear, & the Priest had brought the Ark to ask advice of God, he said, Withdraw thine hand: 1 Sam. 14, 18, 19, that is, the time serveth not to stand & stay counseling and consulting with God, have away these things, and let us draw near to the enemy: an evident testimony that God had forsaken him, and taken his Spirit from him, that he might run from one evil into another, and so work out his own confusion. Contrariwise we see, that while Joshua encoūtered with Amalek, a malicious and bloody enemy, Moses continued in prayer, and he prevailed more to the discomfiture and destruction of the Amalekites, by the force of prayer, then Joshua by the dint of the sword.

Lastly, let us not fear the enemies of the [Use 3] Church, but be strong and valiant, and commit the cause unto God. Thus did Joab when he entered the battle for the defense of God's people and true religion, 2 Sam. 10, 12. Be strong and let us be valiant for our people, and for the Cities of our God, & let the Lord do that which is good in his eyes. Thus David comforteth himself when he fled from his son Abson, an was driven out of his kingdom by treason & treachery, Psal. 3, 6, 7, 8. I will not be afraid of ten thousand of the people that should beset me round about: O Lord arise, help me my God, for thou hast smitten all mine enemies upon the cheek bone, thou hast broken the teeth of the wicked salvation belongeth unto the Lord, and thy blessing is upon thy people. Be not therefore dismayed & discouraged, when the enemies breathe out their threatenings against the Church, band themselves together against Christ & his religion, and make their unholy leagues for the utter extirpation thereof: the Lord that sitteth in heaven▪ knoweth how to vex them in his sure displeasure, and to break them in pieces like a Potters vessel, and therefore blessed are all they that trust in him.

[Verse 16. Assemble the people, and I will give them water.] So soon as they were removed from the River Arnon, they came into a dry place where they wanted water, but have it immediately supplied of God. Somewhat we see they had profited by the former judgments which brake in as a fire among them & consumed many. For here being in need and necessity, they do not murmur against God, as they had done before, nor rage against Moses as in former times; but they wait the Lord's leisure, until he relieve them, & render thanks unto him for his mercy received. This benefit then is here amplified by the cause, I will give them water. From hence this Doctrine ariseth, that the Lord supplieth the wants of his, and helpeth them always in time of need. When we are hungry, he feedeth us; when we are thirsty, he giveth us drink; when we are naked, he clotheth us; when we are destitute, he succoreth us; when we are in want, he supplieth us; when we are in any necessity, he helpeth us; yea, he worketh miracles, and changeth the course of Nature, rather than forsaketh us. He sent Manna to Israel when they wanted bread: he struck the stony Rock when they wanted drink: he sent his Angel to Elijah with food to strengthen him. He never forgetteth those that are his, he maketh the rain to fall, and the sun to shine upon the very wicked and ungodly. This the Prophet David handleth, Psalm. 147, 9, & 145, 15, 16. The eyes of all wait upon thee, and thou givest them their meat in due season; thou openest thine hand, and fillest all things living of thy good pleasure. He giveth to Beasts their food, and to the young Ravens that cry. This the Lord himself teacheth out of the whirlwind, Job 39, 1, 2, 3. Who prepareth for the Raven his meat, when his Birds cry unto God, wandering for lack of meat? Wilt thou hunt the prey for the Lyon, and fill the appetite of the Lions whelps? We know the Lions & other savage beasts are insatiable, they are not filled with a morsel of meat, they couch not down in their dens whē they have taken a little, they require much sustenance, according to their devouring nature. Now who is it that findeth them this food and provision, but he that is the Creator of all things, who saveth man and beast, for the Lions roar after their prey, and seek their meat at God. Then let us come to the comparison which the Prophet maketh, Psalm 34. If he feed the Lions who suffer hunger, and seek their prey with violence; how shall he forget or forsake us whom he auoweth for his children, and hath created after his own Image? The Lions do lack and suffer hunger, but they which seek the Lord, shall want nothing that is good. Psalm. 34, 9, 10. All these things teach us, that God reserveth to himself the office and charge of maintaining us, and giving unto us whatsoever is necessary and meet for us.

[Reason 1] The Reasons may easily and evidently appear unto us. First, his providence watcheth over those that are his, for their comfort and benefit, as the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 33, 18, 19. Behold, the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, and upon them that trust in his mercy, to deliver their souls from death, and to preserve them in famine. This made him say in his old age. He saw never the righteous forsaken, & their children begging bread. Psal. 37, 25. This provident eye can never be deceived or disappointed, neither can it deceive or disappoint such as rest upon it for their comfort and preservation.

Again, he is the Creator of all, a merciful [Reason 2] Father, a careful Shepherd, a gracious Redeemer, a loving Husband to his people. Will the Maker forsake the work of his own hands? Can the Shepherd forget his flock and the sheep of his pasture? Can the Father forget his child, or the Mother not have cōpassion on the son of her womb? Can the Redeemer cast off his inheritance that he hath bought and dearly purchased? Can the husband deny protection and provision unto his wife that lieth in his bosom? Thus the Prophet reasoneth, and from the titles of God, assureth his faith, that it should never fail. The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want: he maketh me to rest in green Pastures, and leadeth me by the still waters, &c. Psal. 23, 1.

The uses of this Doctrine are lastly to be [Use 1] stood upon. First, we are hence to gather, that we ought in all estates to fear God, and not to fear want of worldly wealth, or transitory things: let us have our conversation without covetousness, which is insatiable and enlarged as the grave: let us take heed of diffidence & distrustfulness touching the things of this life: let us as well in adversity as in prosperity, be ready to rest on God's providence, whatsoever fall out unto us. True it is, we ought to labor in our callings, and to take pains to get meat and drink, but we must beware of carking and cares, and using unlawful means to sustain our selves. If we see not such success on our labors as we look for, let us be content: if we see his blessing, let us remember to render him thanks. This duty the Prophet declareth, Psal. 34, 9, & 37, 5, for having declared, that albeit the Lions lack, yet God will nourish those that be his, he concludeth hereupon, O fear the Lord, ye his Saints, for nothing wanteth to them that fear him. Commit thy way to the Lord, and trust in him, and he shall bring it to pass. Let us pray to him in our necessities, and call upon him for our daily bread: let us especially be mindful of heavenly things, and lift up the eyes of our minds to that kingdom that is reserved for us. As for this world, we must use it and all the things therein, as if we used them not, and as though they were not our own, but another's; according to the example and practice of the godly Patriarchs. Let us use our houses and dwelling places, as strangers do an Inn wherein they lodge and seek harbor for a night, and then are gone. Let us use our goods and riches, as Pilgrims do other men's goods for a small season, but we must take heed we set not our hearts upon them. Let us reject and cast off all things that may clog and hinder us in the way to the kingdom of heaven, like good travelers, that will burden themselves with nothing that may hinder them in their journey. And let us all learn true contentation of heart in every estate of life, whether in health or in sickness, whether in want or in abundance, whether in trouble or in peace; considering, that as we brought nothing into this world, so we can carry nothing out of the same.

Again, seeing God supplieth the wants of [Use 2] the body, let us seek also at his hands the nourishment of our souls, and depend upon him for our spiritual food. We see how men being in any adversity are vexed and grieved, & how near it goeth unto the quick. If they want bodily food and sustenance, they compass sea and land, they spare no labor, they refuse no charges to have it supplied. How much more should we double our care for the soul, which is of a more divine nature, and cometh nearer to the Image of God? The soul of man is the more precious and noble part of a man, the soul of a man is truly himself, the body is but his instrument: & therefore being of a more excellent substance, it is more to be regarded and cared for, then the body. If therefore a man would leave country and kindred to provide for his body, he should be willing to go out of house & home; yea, even to forsake himself to save his soul. If a man be ready to travail a thousand miles by sea and land for the increase of his wealth, or the bettering of his knowledge, or the delight of his body: we should not think much to go ten thousand miles, & to take any pains for the good of our soul, and to get food for the same. But the practice of the world goeth clean contrary; the soul is least regarded, the health, the wealth, the welfare, the peace, the sustentation and preservation thereof is nothing esteemed. They that are of the earth, do savor only of the earth: and will never leave caring for it, till their mouths be full of it. As we do tread vpon the earth, so let us tread under our feet all earthly things: and as we are borne to look upward toward heaven, let us have our conversation in heaven, & set our affections upon heavenly things, & as we ask of God our daily bread, so let us depend upon him for the daily food of our souls.

[Use 3] Lastly, let us return to him praise and glory due unto his Name. We see men look for this duty at our hands, as an acknowledgment of their favors, who are but the instruments of God for the good of his people. How much more then ought we to be careful to remember the Lord, and to lift up our hearts to the heavens? We must not be always groveling upon the earth, like the swine that eat the Mast, but look not to the Tree. Wherefore the Prophet teacheth us this duty, I will praise thee, O Lord my God, with all my heart: yea, I will glorify thy holy Name forever: for great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest grave. Psal. 86, 12, 13. If we be not careful when God hath opened his hand toward us, to open our mouths, yea our minds toward him, we deprive our selves of many other blessings that God would plentifully bestow upon us. A skillful husbandman will not always till a barren soil, nor cast his corn in the high-way, where it shall neither be increased nor received; so if there be found in any of us a dry and unthankful heart, we stop the stream of God's blessings, and hinder many good things from us. So then, it is not enough to desire a supply of our necessities, & to have a sense and feeling of our own wants, we must not be idle beggars, always craving & catching what we can out of the Coffers of God's Treasury, and never acknowledge what we receive, and from whence we receive it. It is a notable note and token of the child of God, to be often in praises and thanksgivings. If we have received but a little measure of knowledge or faith, learn unfeignedly to be thankful for that, to the end thou mayest procure a farther blessing from God, and that thou mayest grow from faith to faith, and from strength to strength. Many hypocrites & dissemblers, nay many Atheists and Libertines, in trouble and affliction are ready to ask, seek, and knock at the gate of God's mercy, as we see in the Israelites, and in sundry others; but these prayers proceed from fear, not from faith: from a feeling of sorrow, not from a feeling of sin: from a sight of their own necessity, not from a sight of their own misery through want of reconciliation unto God. But we must testify our love to God, and our zeal of his glory, by our acknowledging of his gracious blessings, and rendering unto him the praise of his works of mercy.

[Verse 17. Then Israel sang this song, &c.] The goodness of God was great toward the Israelites, in those dry and desolate places to send them water, & reveal unto them where they should dig a Well. Wherefore so soon as they have experience of his kindness, they make a song of thanksgiving, and sing a song of praise to remain unto all posterity, to testify the acknowledgement of God's mercy toward them.

The Doctrine from this place is this. That it is required as a special duty to God to offer the sacrifice of praise, and to pay unto him the calves of our lips, when we have tasted of his bounty and loving kindness. We must give thanks for mercies received at his hands. When the people of God received any victory over their enemies, they returned the glory to him for their deliverance. Gen. 14.20. Exod. 15, 1. and 18, 10. The Prophet David, as he abundantly tasted of the favor of God, so plentifully poureth out praise and thanksgiving, as the 18, Psalm. It is a Psalm of praise, which he sang in the day that the Lord delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul. Likewise Psal. 116, 12, 13. What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me? I will take the Cup of salvation, and call upon the Name of the Lord. This duty we see practiced by Melchizedek on the behalf of Abraham, Blessed be the most High, which hath delivered thine enemies into thine hands. This we see performed by Moses and Aaron, when they saw the mighty power of God ouerturning the Egyptians; I will sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and him that rode upon him hath he overthrown in the sea: they sanke to the bottom as a stone. This duty is not omitted nor deferred by Deborah and Barak in the day of their deliverance, Praise ye the Lord for the avenging of Israel, and for the people that offered themselves willingly. Judge, 5, 1, 5. This is it also that the Apostle teacheth, Phil. 4, 6. In all things let your requests be shown unto God in prayer, in supplications, and in giving of thanks. Yea Job fearing God and eschewing evil, performed this duty to God, after the loss of outward wealth, when he had been bereft of his children, robbed of his goods, spoiled of his servants, reproached of his wife, and tempted of the devil, he said, Naked came I out of my mothers womb, and naked shall I return again: the Lord hath given, & the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the Name of the Lord forever. Job 1, 21. Teaching us hereby to glorify God, not only for meat, drink, apparel, peace, liberty, health, children, success in domestical affairs, and such like; but even for the losses & crosses that he sendeth upon us, which he sanctifieth to the salvation of his servants. Let us therefore acknowledge, that it is a duty belonging unto us, to offer the sacrifice of praise always unto God, that is, the fruit of the lips which confess his Name.

[Reason 1] The Reasons remain to be considered. First, we must give him y^e praise of his works, because it is the will and pleasure of GOD (who is so good unto us) to require it of us, who can give him nothing else. For what are we able to require and return to the Lord for his great mercies? Can we deserve them at his hands or glory of any our own merits? Without him we can do nothing. If then we can render nothing but this, let us not deny him this duty of praise. It is the will of God we should not kill, or steal, nor commit idolatry, or adultery, & such like: few but make conscience of these sins, because we see the will of God restraining us, and condemning them. So it is the will of God we should beware of unthankfulness, and open our mouths in setting forth his praises, for his goodness unto men. This reason the Apostle useth, 1 Thess. 5, 17, 18. Pray continually, in all things give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus toward you.

[Reason 2] Secondly, of all sacrifices, this is the chief and principal, and groweth in the Garden of God, as one of the Cedars in Lebanon, eminent above the rest of the Trees of the Forest. It excelleth and surmounteth all the rest, in respect of the enduring and continuance of it, in respect of the use and end of it, and in respect of our unwillingness and untowardness to perform it. First, touching the lasting of it▪ it was in Paradise before the fall, it was before the flood, it was before the Law, under the Law, under the Gospel, and shall hold to the end of the world. It is performed of men and Angels, in heaven and earth, it shall never end, no not when other exercises of our religion shall cease. The Scripture shall have an end, preaching shall cease, prayer shall fail, the sacraments shall fade, we shall have no need of these things; but the sweet singing of God's eternal praises, shall never cease. The blessed Saints, and all the host of heaven shall give praise, and power, honor, and glory, to him that sitteth upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb for evermore. Revel. 5, 13, and 11, 17.

Again, it is the end both of the works of [Reason 3] God, and of the other exercises of religion. It is the end of our election, for he hath predestinated us to the praise and glory of his grace, wherewith he hath made us freely accepted in his beloved, Eph. 1, 5, 6. It is the end of our creation: for he hath made all things to his own glory, even the wicked for the day of wrath, Prov. 16, 4. It is the end of our redemption, for the holy man blesseth the Lord God of Israel, for visiting and redeeming his people, who would send us deliverance from our enemies, and from the hands of all that hate us, that we should serve him without fear all the days of our life in holiness and righteousness before him, Luke 1, 68, 74, 75. And the Apostle teacheth this, Eph. 1, 3, 7. Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of our sins, according to his rich grace. It is the end of our justification, for we are justified freely by grace, that no man should boast in himself, But he which rejoiceth, should rejoice in the Lord. 1 Cor, 1, 31. It is the end of our sanctification, of our salvation, and of our glorification, to return all glory & praise unto God, that sanctifieth and saveth us, & will glorify us in soul and body. And as it is the end of these works of God, so likewise all the exercises of our religion are directed and referred unto it, as to the principal mark they aim at. A chief part of God's service is prayer. But why do we pray unto him, but that obtaining our requests, & having experience of his mercies, we may give him the praise? According to the saying of the Prophet, I will hear thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Psal. 50, 15. Wherefore do we hear his word, but that receiving increase of knowledge, and the gift of faith, we may give thanks to God? Wherefore are we partakers of the Sacraments, but that finding and feeling comfort by them, we might return the greater glory to God, the author of them?

Lastly, the unwillingness of our corrupt [Reason 4] nature to do this duty, manifestly proveth the worthiness and excellency of this exercise. We are willing enough to pray for the gift, but we are not so ready to praise the giver: we are forward and fervent in asking, but cold & dull in thanksgiving. In time of sickness and dangers, we are large in promises and protestations; but being delivered, we are backward in performing. We are full of desiring the things we want, but we are empty of praises when God hath heard us, and so lose the fruit of that good which he hath sent us. Seeing therefore the offering to God the sacrifice of praise, is a principal part of his service, and standing directly with his will, it

[Use 1] Now let us come to the Uses. First, forget not his mercies and goodness toward us. We are ready to remember our own wants, and our mouth with our desire is enlarged to pray for health in sickness, for deliverance in danger, and for comfort in heaviness; but when light is risen in darkness, and joy to the upright in heart, we forget the hand that lifted us up, and that our help is in the name of the Lord which hath made heaven and earth. This use the Prophet David maketh, Psal. 103.1.2. My soul praise thou the Lord, and all that is within me praise his holy name: My soul praise thou the Lord, and forget not all his benefits. This also Moses urgeth to the people, when they were compassed about on every side with the mercies of God, Deut. 6, 10, 11, 12. & 8, 10, 11. When they should possess Cities that they built not, houses full of all manner goods which they filled not, Welles which they digged not, Vineyards and Olive trees which they planted not: when they have eaten and are full, then he willeth them to beware lest they forget the Lord their GOD, that brought them out of the Land of Egypt, from the house of bondage. Why is it that he willeth thē especially to take heed to themselves when their bellies are filled, when their cattle is increased, when their substance is multiplied, and when their possessions are enlarged? Surely, because if ever we forget God, it is when we are full. If ever we despise his laws and commandments, it is in the time of plenty & abundance, even then when we are most of all bound to serve him: When he hath been on our side, and made an hedge round about us, then we stand in a slippery place, ready to have our hearts puffed up, & our minds hardened in pride, and to forget God and his goodness, as Pharaohs chief Butler did forget Joseph, Gen. 40, 23. The more love is bestowed upon us, the less duty is performed unto him, whereby Satan goeth about to take away all the graces of God from us. In 2 King. 20, 8, 13. Hezekia was delivered from a deadly sickness, and went up to the house of the Lord to magnify his mercy for his recovery: yet see how soon after he was overtaken with unthankfulness, and lost the comfort of his deliverance, and received heavy tydings that his posterity should be carried away captives into Babel. He thought that in his prosperity He should never be moved. This is taught us also in the curing of the ten lepers mentioned by the Evangelist Luke, 17.15, 16, 17, 18. of the which one only returned back, and with a loud voice praised God, and gave him thanks: and Jesus answered, saying, Are there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine? There are none found that returned to give God praise, save this stranger that was a Samaritan.

Secondly, seeing we must give God thanks [Use 2] for benefits received, of what sort soever they be: then especially we must praise him for spiritual blessings that are of an higher nature, & belong to a better life. This the Prophet, Psa. 103, 1, 3. thought upon, provoking himself to praise the Lord, & preparing his heart with his tongue to extol his mercies he beginneth with this, Which forgiveth all thine iniquities, & healeth all thine infirmities. For well did he know that if a man enjoyed the world at will, and yet wanted the persuasion of the pardon of his sins and reconciliation towards God, it were nothing: For what shall it profit a man if he win the whole world, and lose his own soul? &c. Mat. 16, 26. When Israel was oppressed in Egypt, it was joyful tidings to hear of a deliverer, and they rendered praise to God for their deliverance. When they had been carried to Babylon, and accomplished the years of their bondage prophesied by Jer. 25, 12. and the Lord brought again the captivity of Zion, they seemed at the first like them that dream, Ps. 126 1, 2. Then was their mouth filled with laughter, & their tongue with joy: then the heathen confessed, The Lord had done great things for them: Then the church sang, The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we rejoice. Suppose the case stood with any of us bodily, as it standeth with all of us spiritually, without any supposition at all, y^t we were taken by enemies, bound in chains, cast into prison, sticking fast in the mire, pinched with famine, and wasted with despair of ever coming out of such a dungeon: & that lying thus without help or hope, a king should come unto us, smite off our fetters, free us out of prison, pay our ransom, and promote us to honor in his kingdom; would we not render unto him all possible thanks, & depend on him all the days of our life? But we are delivered from greater enemies, and from greater dangers; from sin, hell, death, darkness, the devil, and damnation. For as the devil doth exceed all bodily enemies, and hell fire infinitely surpasseth the pains of this life, which endure but for a season: so we must consider that our deliverance being greater, our Thanksgiving must not be the less: but our praise must be answerable to his power▪ who hath cut y^e cords of our enemies, and restored us into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. Let us acknowledge our selves tied to this duty, to offer to him the offering & sacrifice of praise, for the spiritual blessings of our redemption and salvation, for his word & Gospel, he hath not so dealt with every nation & people. This is the only recompense that we can make him, to give him all y^e glory. How shall we requite his 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 mercies, who finding us neither washed in water, nor swaddled in clouts, nor pitied of any, but cast out in the open field, to the contempt of our person, and polluted in our own blood, covered our filthiness, anointed us with oil, clothed us with broidred work, girded us with fine linen, decked us with ornaments, and entered into a covenant with us to become his? Shall we come before him with burnt offerings, and Calves of a year old? Will the Lord be pleased & praised with thousands of Rams, and with ten thousand rivers of oil? All these be as nothing; For all the beasts are his, and the beasts on a thousand Mountains: yea, all the world is his, and whatsoever therein is. Psal. 50, 10, 14. The service & sacrifice wherein he delighteth is an humble, contrite, and thankful heart, which is more acceptable to him then all sacrifices that have horns and hooves. Offer therefore unto him praise, and pay thy vows unto the most High, which thy lips have promised in the presence of all his people.

[Use 3] Thirdly, let us acknowledge this truth, that his name is most glorious, and confess the greatness of his name to be worthy of all glory. Let us not set up our own names, nor sacrifice to our own nets, nor say we have escaped by our own power, but thorough the favor and kindness of God, as the Prophet teacheth, Psalm 124, 1. Let us not claim the praise of God to our selves, nor rob him of his honor, but confess that his mercy endureth forever. This use the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 8, 1, 9, where setting down many arguments of the praise of God which he showeth in the earth, he concludeth the majesty of God to be worthy of all honor: O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the world? None can praise him aright, except he be touched with a feeling of God's greatness, goodness, and majesty: even as our prayers are cold when we have a small and slight feeling of sin.

[Use 4] Lastly, seeing praise and glory is due to God for his blessings, it is our duty to pray for thē, and to ask them at his hands. When the Prophet, Psal. 50, 15. had stirred the people up to offer unto God praise, he addeth withal, Call upon him in the day of trouble, so will he deliver thee and thou shalt glorify him. For when we come to him by prayer, and have experience of his goodness who delivereth our soul from death, our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling; and are assured that our help cometh neither from the East nor from the West, nor frō the wilderness, that is, from the North, nor South (inasmuch as Judea was on both sides included and compassed with a Desert:) we are hereby provoked and pricked forward, to cast down our selves, and all our glory at his feet, to magnify his mercy, to exalt his praise on high, and to say with the Prophet, Ps. 115, 1. Not unto us O Lord not unto us: but unto thy name give the glory, for thy loving mercy, and for thy truths sake. But if we trust in our own strength, and rest in our own labors, and think the good things we possess, be y^e works and fruits of our own hands, not the blessings & gifts of God, we shall never give him praise for them, but set up our selves in his stead, to the dishonor of his name, to the confusion of our own faces, and to the hindering of the course of his blessings toward us. Let us therefore confess, that every good and perfect gift cometh down from above, from the father of lights, and then we shall render him the Calves of our lips.

[Verse 18. O Well, whom the Princes digged, &c.] We have already declared in the former doctrine, that the people gave thanks to God for sending them water miraculously, and supplying their want in that necessity. Here we see offered to our consideration, who were the chief workmen and principal Laborers in digging the Well; the Princes & Heads of the people, the Captains, and Moses himself disdained not to set their hands to work. No doubt many of the people joined with them as helpers forward, but the principal men and heads of the families are here named, because they did direct, strengthen, and encourage others that were under them by their good example. The doctrine arising from hence is this That public persons unto whom God hath granted honor and principality, and preferred before their brethren, are not only to inform their inferiors, and give directions unto them by word, but by their example and practice to go before them. All superiors are to teach by example of life, as well as by word of mouth their inferiors. So then, we are all from this example of the zeal of Moses, and forwardness of the Princes of the Tribes, to consider that it is required of chief persons, whose heads are advanced above others, to have in them a zeal and forwardness to further good things in others, that so their care may be answerable to the place wherein God hath set them. This is proved unto us in the example of Eliud, one of the Judges, who having slain Eglon King of Moab, and knowing there was a greater work behind to do, it is said, he blew a Trumpet in Mount Ephraim, he assembled the people, and he went before them saying unto them, Follow me. Mark here, how he thought it not enough to show the Children of Israel what was to be done, and to direct them in the way, but himself joineth with them, nay goeth before them; he followeth not his own ease, he seeketh not his own pleasure, he layeth not the burden upon them to keep at home himself, but being fitted & called of God, he began the enterprize, and looked for the issue from him. His example not only in speaking, but in going before them, was very available. The like we see in David, whose zeal for the Lord's house had even eaten him up, having an intent to cal the Ark home to Zion from the house of Abinadab, he called the people together, he praised God with instruments of music, he danced before the Ark, and gave a notable testimony how fervent he was, and with what joy of heart he went about it. The like practice we see in Solomon's son who sat in his Throne; when once the Temple was built, when the work of the Lord was finished, and when the people were assembled, he in their sight and hearing doth dedicate the Temple, with a fruitful, comfortable, and passionate prayer, and entreateth the Lord's gracious presence when in that holy place they should call upon him. 1 Kin. 8, 22. The like forwardness in the works of the Lord we find in Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, Josiah, Ezra, Nehemiah, Zerobabel, Mordecai, and sundry others; these went before others in zeal, and accounted it a shame & reproach unto them to be matched in goodness of those, whom they over-matched and over-mastered in greatness. This made Joshua say (who was Governor of the people) I and my house will serve the Lord Josh. 24.15. This made David say, Psal 101, 2. I will walk in the uprightness of my heart in the midst of my house. This made the Apostle say, 2 Thes. 3, 7. speaking of the idle that walked inordinately, and would not work, Ye yourselves know how ye ought to follow us, for we behaved not our selves inordinately among you, urging his own example to provoke and prick them forward.

[Reason 1] This truth will yet further appear unto us when we shall consider how it is proved and under-propped by strength of Reason. •irst, it is the Lord's doing to make them a distinct people and order by themselves. Hath he advanced them to no purpose? had he no end in choosing them from among their brethren, and setting them in degree of dignity before them? We know that all God's works have some end which he respecteth, he worketh nothing idly, every action hath his special and proper end. His separation of them to rule in the Land or Church, is, that they should execute the things that concern God's glory with all zeal. This we see in the book of Ester, ver. 4 when she was desirous to shrink back and not adventure her self, beholding the hazard of her life, and the danger of death before her eyes, except the king did graciously respect her, and favourably hold out his golden scepter: Mordecai presseth her with this reason, Who knoweth whether the LORD hath brought thee to the kingdom for such a time? And Nehemiah aimeth at this in chap. 6. ver. 10, 11. where being counseled to hide his head, and to shut the doors of the Temple upon him, because the enemies would come suddenly upon him and slay him, he opposeth his calling, Should such a man as I fly? Who is he, being as I am, that would go into the temple to live? I will not go in. As if he should say, God hath promoted me to this place of honor, & hath brought upon me the dignity that I never looked for, and therefore I will adventure to stand out in the discharge of the work of the Lord, inasmuch as promotion cometh neither from East nor West, but from him.

Secondly, such as are advanced above others, [Reason 2] lie open to wrath and judgment as well as others. Albeit they be great in the world, and can plead with men, yet they cannot plead with the Lord, seeing the greatest men lie open to the greatest punishments. If therefore they would not kindle God's wrath against themselves, against their houses, and against their posterities, they must go before others in all godliness, and instruct them by word and by example. This is the reason that king Artashast useth, Ezra 7, 23. Whatsoever is by the commandment of the God of heaven, let it be done speedily for the house of the God of heaven, for why should he be wroth against the realm of the King and his children? So in Num. 25 4, 9. the Lord commanded a thousand of the Rulers of the people to be hanged before him against the Sun, because they stayed not the people from joining themselves to Baal •cor. In like manner, because Eli reformed not his sons, but suffered them to run forward in their sins (who through their extreme wickedness caused all Israel to abhor the offerings of the Lord) his house was destroyed, his sons were slain, and himself brake his neck with a fall from his seat.

The Uses are these. First of all, see how comfortable [Use 1] it is to all inferiors, when the Lord blesseth a land and people to give them faithful Rulers, godly Princes, zealous Nobles, righteous Magistrates, painful Ministers, by whose example and practice they are led and guided to all well-doing? It is an ancient saying, Of what disposition soever Princes are, the people will not be unlike •hem. Experience in all ages and places teacheth us, That many wicked men make this an Apology for themselves, and allege it as a suffi•ient excuse for their wickedness, that men of chief place above them, like their courses, and give them directions what to do. This the Prophet pointeth unto, Ier. •4 1•. It went well with us, when we burnt incense to the host of heaven, and when we poured out drink offerings to them, di•••e it without our husbands? Thus it commonly falleth out, that wicked persons pretend the example of chief men, and thereby go about to justify their evil doings. Exhort the drunkard and riotous person to forsake his drunkenness, and to leave his beastly sin, admonish him to shun houses of drunkenness the very nurseries of all abominations, what is their answer? We have the chief of the parish to keep us company, we have the best and richest sort to join in our society, they like our doings, they justify our courses, and only a sort of fellows that are more precise then wise, speak against us. Thus do these men take heart, and encourage themselves in all evil practices, yea, are hardened against the reproof of others because they find the chiefest sort to be on their side. Wherefore it must needs be accounted a great blessing to a nation, to send wise, discreet, and faithful Rulers amongst them. This we see in the practice of Ezra, when he saw the forwardness of the King, read the Edict, knew the liberty given to all that would return, beheld the Jewels to be restored to God's house, and how the Princes were ready to give a Free-will offering, the perfect Scribes of the Law, together with the fathers of Judah & Benjamin, took great comfort, and were greatly refreshed through the hand of the Lord their God: so that among many points of God's mercy toward his people, this is not the least, to have godly governors given unto them. Let us then all of us acknowledge, that it is a great mercy of God to a kingdom, place, parish, family, when the Rulers are reformed and well ordered, touching the service, worship, and obedience of God. When Solomon had established religion and justice in Jerusalem, & amended his court according to the ordinance of God, so that all things were performed according to the law: the blessing spread over the whole kingdom, religion flourished, peace and righteousness kissed each other, and the blessings of God came upon the people: They had Cedars as plentiful as wild fig-trees, Iron was as common as stones, silver as iron, and gold as silver. They had peace and plenty on every side, there was not so much as a dog that opened his mouth against them.

[Use 2] Secondly, this should serve as an instruction to all Magistrates and mighty men, to endeavor by their godly life and good example to draw on other that are under them to the knowledge and fear of God. Great is the force of evil, and the power of sin in private persons. We see •n our small parishes and little villages in our private families and households, one or two children of Belial, wicked men, profane in life, are stronger to poison and pester the whole Congregation, neighborhood, and family, in a short time, then the ordinance of God in the ministry of his word and the company of the faithful in the church or house, are able to bring forward to obedience. One profane person fostered and nourished in an house, is as a scabbed Sheep in a whole fold, and therefore shall more corrupt and infect by secret suggestion & persuasion in a week or two, then a sincere and godly Governor shall be able to edify and build up in a year. Now, if inferior persons can spread sin over all the body, as an unclean leprosy, who are of small account and estimation; what shall the chief and principal members do when they are evil? What an hell of wicked men shall swarm in that corporation or congregation, where both Magistrate & minister, where the chief men as the head, and the Ministers as the eye, are contagiously infected and desperately diseased? For, as there is an happy and blessed union in religion and Christian obedience, where all estates of men do join unfeignedly in it, and help with both hands to build up an holy Temple to GOD; where Moses and Aaron, that is, the Prince & the Priest, where the Magistrate and the subject, the head and the body, the governor and they that are governed, the Pastor & the people, as one man, with one mind, and with one mouth, seek to set forth the glory of God: so on the other side, what an assembly of wicked and loose persons, what an house of infidelity and profaneness must that be, where the governors and householders have no sap or seasoning of the fear of GOD in them, where none is found to give thē light, but all walk in darkness and ignorance? If the eye be dim, how great is that darkness? Let us therefore remember this one point, That as our place is eminent in the Common-wealth, or in the Church, or in the Family or household, so must we labor and endeavor (as we said before) by example, by exhortation, by admonition, and by reprehension to use all godly means to provoke and stir up others to the fruits of holiness. It is not enough for those in high places, set as on a watch tower, placed as on a hil, from whence they may be seen far and near, to look only unto themselves, and to watch over their own ways; it is not enough to have light in themselves, but they must hold out the candle unto others: they must not only know the way themselves, but be able to guide others in the right way; they must not only give no offense to hinder others, but be examples to instruct others. Lastly, they must not only come into the house of God themselves, but tol the bell to bring others to God with all forwardness and cheerfulness.

Lastly, it is our part that are of the people, [Use 3] to commend them to God in our prayers, to entreat him that hath the hearts of all men in his hands, that in his own wisdom he would dispose them to be careful of our good, that under them we may live a peaceable & quiet life in all godliness and honesty. Good Magistrates bring the greatest blessings unto the people, they are nursing fathers to the church, they are the light of the kingdom, they are the bulwarks of the country, they are the means of erecting up the pure worship of God, and of keeping from us barbarousnes, brutishnes, outrages, violence, and all villainies. Seeing then we receive these and sundry other blessings from them, it is our bounden duty above all other callings among men to pray for thē, and to praise God for them. And certainly▪ if any nation under heaven be bound to rejoice and praise GOD for their Prince (who is as the comfort and consolation of our life, and the very instrument of our peace) we are they. Under his shadow we live and abide as in a place of rest, and sleep quietly in our beddes, free from all fear and danger whatsoever. This we see described in the peaceable and prosperous days of Solomon, there is no crying and complaining in our streets. We are blessed with earthly blessings; we are an astonishment and wonder to our neighbor Nations. They have all deeply drunk of the cup of God's wrath, that hath been filled with full measure, whiles we have looked on, and our soul hath escaped. And above all the rest, we have all this time enjoyed, and do enjoy the bright light of the glorious Gospel, and have been most of us borne under the profession thereof, to the establishing and continuing of many millions of thousands in the coueuant of grace and eternal life▪ when other have been kept in horrible darkness and damnable idolatry to the destruction of their souls. We are therefore unhappy wretches, if among all the mercies of God upon us, this be not remembered as one of the first and chiefest. And let us learn to have in abomination from the bottom of our hearts, the bloody practices and desperate attempts of all cursed Shemeis, who open their mouths against the Lord, and against his anointed with horrible execrations, I mean the Jesuits and Priests, (brethren in evil) together with the rest of that damned crew and generation, who instead of prayer and thanksgiving for our Sovereign, use falsehood, practice treasons, and devise mischievous conspiracies, seeking the life of their gracious Prince, and laboring to stop the breath of our nostrils: whereas he that curseth the King should die the death.

The Prophet Jeremiah speaking of the estate of the people after the death of Josiah, bringeth them in thus complaining: The breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord was taken in their Nets, of whom we said: Under his shadow we shall be preserved alive among the heathen. Whereby he meaneth, that the office of the King as the Superior, and of all Magistrates as Governors sent of him, for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well; is to protect and preserve the people in peace and safety, even as the breath that we draw in at our nostrils, giveth life and health to the body. Wherefore it standeth us that are Subjects upon, not only to be obedient for conscience sake unto all lawful ordinances of Princes, who are the Lord's Lieutenants appointed of him over his people for their good, but to pray earnestly for them, that they may further us in piety, keep us in honesty, and maintain us in tranquility one with another: piety in respect of God; honesty in respect of our selves; tranquility in respect of others. This charge the Apostle giveth, when Magistrates were Infidels and Heathen, that the Church should pray unto God for them: how much more therefore doth it stand us upon to practice this duty, when as our Magistrates are the children of God, and pillars of the Church? And thus much of the third part of this chapter.

21 Then Israel sent Messengers unto Sihon, King of the Amorites, saying;

22 Let me go through thy Land: we will not turn aside into the Fields, nor into the Vineyards, neither will we drink of the waters of the Welles: We will go by the Kings way, until we be past thy Border.

23 But Sihon gave Israel no license to pass through his Border: and Sihon assembled all his people, and went out against Israel into the Wilderness: and he came to Iaboz, and fought against Israel.

24 But Israel smote him with the edge of the sword, and inherited his Land, from Arnon unto Iabbok even unto the children of Ammon; for the Border of the children of Ammon was strong

25 And Israel took all those Cities; therefore Israel dwelled in all the Cities of the Amorites in Heshbon, and in all the Villages thereof.

26 For Heshbon was the City it self of Sihon, King of the Amorites, who fought against the former King of the Moabites, and took away all his Land out of his hand, even unto Arnon.

27 Wherefore they that speak in Proverbs say, Come to Heshbon, let the City of Sihon be built and repaired.

28 For a fire is gone out of Heshbon, and a flame from the City of Sihon, and hath consumed Har of the Moabites, and the inhabitants of the high places of Arnon.

29 Woe be to thee, Moab: O people of Kemosh thou art undone: he hath delivered his sons which escaped, and his daughters into captivity to Sihon, the King of the Amorites.

30 Their Empire also is lost, from Heshbon unto Dibon, and we have destroyed them unto Nophah which reacheth unto Medeba.

31 Thus Israel dwelt in the Land of the Ammorites.

In these words and those that follow to the end of the Chapter, is contained the last part of this Chapter; to wit, the subduing of two mighty enemies, in two several battles; namely, Sihon, King of the Amorites, and Og, the King of Bashan. The Amorites were a people that came of Ham the youngest son of Noah, as appeareth, Gen. 10, verses 6, 15, 16. For Ham begat Canaan, who disclosed the nakedness of his Grandfather; and Canaan begat Emori, of whom came the Amorites, who inhabited the Land of Bashan, & Mount Gilead. This History is more at large recorded, Deuter. chapter 2 and 3. •irst, touching Sihon, we must observe two things; the just occasion and advantage which he gave to Israel to subdue him, and take possession of his Land: For the Lord had hardened his spirit▪ and made his heart obstinate, because he would deliver him into the hands of the Israelites: Deuteronomy, chapter 2, verse 30. Then secondly, the overthrowing of him, the entering into his Country, & the possessing of his Cities. Hitherto they had compassed the Land of Edom with great danger, with much weariness, and sundry temptations: they come to the Land of the Amorites, there y^e King withstandeth them, and will give them no passage, but fiercely and furiously encountreth with them. Touching the occasion whereby Israel was justly moved & compelled to enter fight with the Amorites, it offereth two points to be considered. First, a friendly and loving request of Moses. Secondly, a curish and unkind denial made by Sihon. Concerning the petition of Moses, observe the Embassy which he sent, together with the reasons, containing both the ground of his reasonable demand, showing the equity of the petition, and laying down most equal conditions of peace: because he desired only passage through his Land, without spoil of the Country in general, or damage to any person in particular. The refusal of the King followeth; and albeit the Israelites freely and frankly professed, that their purpose was to pass by all things as travelers, not possess anything as Conquerers; yet nothing at all (albeit never so right or reasonable, and so equal or honest) is granted & permitted to God's people.

Wherefore Sihon, either resolving with himself to deal unjustly and unkindly, or suspecting that under a fair color and outward show of honest dealing, they might have a further project, and hide the depth of their cunning devises (as oftentimes is used at the dyets and consultations of Princes) and being enflamed with the malice of his own heart, he dealeth more unmercifully with thē than the Edomites and Moabites had done, and denieth that favor and friendship which they had found among them. Indeed the Edomites denied them passage thorough their Land, as we saw before, chapter 20, yet they suffered them to travel by their Coast & Borders, and sold them food for their money, Deut. 2, 29. The Moabites (another enemy) permitted them indeed to pass by their Borders, but refused to give them meat or water for money, as appeareth, Deut. 23, 3. But the Amorites, worse then both the former, not only afforded them no commodity, but being destitute of all sparks of humanity, denied thē passage in word and deed. In word, he answered, Thou shalt not pass: In deed, he united his forces, he took the field, and so provoked Israel to battle, who lay still, and stirred not against him. True it is, Israel had God's purpose revealed unto them, to subdue them, and enter their Land: but Moses waiteth with wisdom, until they were teased and constrained to defend themselves, lest (if they had begun and given the occasion) the enemy should upbraid them with injustice, and charge them with oppression, & challenge them for wrongful usurpation. Now they deal uprightly, even their enemies being Judges, inasmuch as Nature teacheth every man to resist force with force, and defend himself with his weapon against open and outrageous violence.

The occasion being offered, and the fire kindled by Sihon, Israel being compelled, fighteth against him, overthroweth him in the battle, and inuadeth his Dominion, and maketh them all pass under the mercy of the sword, without compassion, sparing neither men, women, nor children. This victory is amplified by a particular enumeration of y^e Cities which they subdued, and they inhabited even in the head-Citty, Heshbon Afterward their right to these places is proved and confirmed. For albeit Heshbon properly belonged to Moab, as a part of his Dominion, yet all that coast, even to the River Arnon, was come by conquest into the possession of Sihon, King of the Amorites: so that the Israelites took not away anything from the Moabites, according to the commandment of the Lord, Deut. 2, 9. Josh. 13, 25, but from the Amorites, whose whole Country was allotted to his people, GOD scattering the people that delight in war, and take pleasure to shed blood. This is that mercy of God which Nehemiah magnifieth, chap. 9, 8. Thou madest a Covenant with Abraham, &c. And Psal. 78, 55. He cast out also the heathen before them, &c. Thus did God show himself to be the Shepherd of Israel, that led his people like sheep, and brought them into y^e Borders of his Sanctuary which his right hand had purchased. Here was the beginning of all comfort; here they began to set down their rest: here they saw the first fruits of their labors, assuring them, that as God had begun to perform his promise, so he would continue to finish his own work.

Furthermore, their right in possessing of these places, is declared by a public song of triumph and victory, as it were a Trophie fet up, which was made by the Poets of y^t time, to make known to posterity the victory of y^e Israelites, and their lawful claim to those Cities which they had won by the dint of the sword. This Poeme was not a song made by the Amorites, as many suppose, but composed by the Israelites, as appeareth by these reasons.

First, we see it to be a most common and usual thing with the people of God, when they had obtained any victory, or received any benefit, to leave some token & monument of it to posterity, & to acknowledge by whose hand they have prevailed. This we see in the words going before, ver. 17, 18, where they sang a song of thanksgiving, for the Well which God had granted, and they had digged.

Secondly, it is no ordinary and usual thing with God, to allege the sayings of heathen Poets, and so to sanctify their profane writings to be holy Scriptures. True it is, the Spirit sometimes produceth a short sentence to convince the heathen by their own Prophets, but never citeth an whole Poeme, as Moses doth in this place.

Thirdly, in the 30 verse it is said, We have destroyed them unto Nophah, and subdued Sihon that had conquered the Moabites, by which means Israel came to dwell in the Cities of the Amorites.

Fourthly, here is pronounced and concluded the woeful and wretched estate of Moab, for their idolatry and trusting in their god Kemosh, which had deceived them, and delivered them into the hands of their enemies; which agreeth not to the Amorites, as deep in the sin of idolatry as the Moabites, and worshipping the same Idol the Moabites did. For Kemosh was the god of the Amorites, Ammonites, and Moabites. Therefore as the Prophet saith, that the Gentiles will not change their gods, so it may be truly said, they will not reproach and revile their gods. Thus then we see, this was one of the songs of the Israelites, most likely to be penned and published by Moses himself, who, as he was brought up in all the learning of the Egyptians, so he was cunning in this faculty, as appeareth in other places of his works.

This Song or Sonnet, remaining as a Testimony and witness of their just conquest to ages succeeding, setteth down both the usurping of the Amorites, & the recovery of those places out of the hands of the Amorites by the Israelites. First, it showeth how Sihon invaded the Moabites, and exhorted his army to play the men, appointing Rendevous & place of meeting to be at Heshbon, willing them to resort thither to begin the battle, stirring thē up to repair the breaches of that City which Sihon made the head and mother-city of his kingdom, and then invading other parts of Moab, which were wasted & consumed with fire and sword. Thus he seemed to have most reason and right, who had greatest strength. They got their superiority by cruel injustice and wrong usurpation, the distressed Moabites choosing to sell their lives in y^e field with honor, seeing they could not enjoy them with safety in their Cities. Sihon then being thus Conqueror, the Poet bringeth him in, insulting over his enemies, vaunting in his own strength, and ascribing the victory to his own power: their god Kemosh (the Patron of that people) could do them no good, but suffered them to be taken and spoiled. Such is the vain hope of poor Idolaters in their Idols, which cannot help or deliver themselves, much less their worshippers that trust in them.

Lastly, touching the Israelites, they spoiled them that were the spoilers, and conquered them that were the conquerors: for they recovered for themselves, and for their own use, the Towns and Cities which the Moabites had lost. Thus Israel meddled not with the Moabites, neither took anything from them, but peaceably possessed that which they won frō the Amorites, none laying any claim or title thereunto, as Iephtah pleadeth, Judge. 11, 13. And this is the right which the Israelites had to dwell in the Cities of the Amorites, and to possess as their own goods, the labors and livings of other men: which they could justify by the Law of God and man. For when Abraham had subdued in battle the five Kings, he challenged to himself a right in the prey that was taken, and paid y^e tenth of all to Melchizedek? Hereunto belongeth the commandment given of God, touching the dividing and retaining the spoils of war; saying, All the spoil thereof shalt thou take unto thyself, and shalt eat the spoil of thine enemies which the Lord thy God hath given thee, Deuter, 20, 14. And this we might plentifully prove by the Laws, Decrees, and Constitutions of Princes and States in former times.

[Verse 21. Then Israel sent Messengers.] In this division generally, is set forth the end of the enemies of the Church, that albeit they prevail for a season, and plow upon the backs of the godly, and make long and large surrowes, albeit they plant themselves strong, & flourish as the green Bay-tree, yet they pass away suddenly, and are cast down in desolation.

The persecutors and enemies of the Church shall perish and come to confusion. Howsoever they lift up their heads & horns on high, and their honor reach up to the Clouds, there shall be a downfall, they shall be confounded and consumed in his wrath. Look upon Cain, who was the first persecutor of y^e church in Abel, and we shall see the same confirmed which is offered to our considerations in these present examples. He killed his brother, Gen. 4, 11, and wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brothers good. But did cruel Cain escape? No, the curse of God came upon him, he was made a runagate and fugitive upon the earth, and so God revenged y^e innocent blood of his brother Abel, which he had shed with barbarous and unnatural cruelty. The like we might say of Pharaoh, an arch-enemy of the Church in Egypt, who oppressing the people of God with burdens, and destroying their children, was overwhelmed in the red Sea, Exod. 14, 28. Another fearful example we have in Saneherib, which set himself against the people that called upon the living God, and blasphemed his Name which is holy throughout all generations; he was slain of his own sons, 2 Kings 20, 37, which judgment the Lord foretold, that being accordingly performed & accomplished, it might be known whence it was, & wherefore it came to pass. The like is reported & recorded of Haman in the book of Ester, ch. 7, 9, who procured the Kings writ, to root out, to kill, and to destroy all the Jews, young and old, children and women in one day: yet abusing his high favor with the King, and great honor in the Court, God threw him down, and laid his honor in the dust, so that he was hanged on the same tree which he had prepared for Mordecai, that spake good for the King. Thus his mischief returned on his own head, and his cruelty fell upon his own pate, and himself was taken in the snare which he made for another. Hereunto tendeth y^e end of Nebuchadnezzar, whose service God used to chasten his own people, to destroy the Temple, to waste the City, and to carry them away captive; he was thrown down, his reason was taken from him, and he had the heart of a beast given unto him.

The Jews, to whom pertained the right of adoption, the glory of the Ark, the tables of the Covenant, the giving of the Law, the service of God, the accomplishment of the promises, the coming of the Messiah, the Oracles of trust committed unto them; were notwithstanding all these privileges, enemies of Christ and of the Apostles, enemies of Christian Religion and the professors thereof, they put the Son of God to death, and persecuted his Apostles that he sent among them to preach and teach the Gospel of the Kingdom: in the end, themselves were justly slain for sedition, which they falsely charged upon the Apostles; nay as themselves cried, his blood be upon us, and upon our children: so that which Christ foretold, came upon them in full measure, pressing down and running over, when the abomination of desolation sate in the holy place: there was such trouble amongst them, and so great tribulation came upon them, that the like never was, nor shall be to the end. Herod that bloody tyrant, which had slain James with the sword, and putting Peter in prison, intended the like measure and murder upon him: this wicked wretch escaped not the hands of God; for being arrayed in his royal Robes, sitting upon the Judgment seat, and making an Oration unto the people, The Angel of the Lord smote him, & he was eaten of worms, Acts 12, 23. Judas the child of perdition, and betrayer of the Son of God, despaired, Hung himself, burst in the midst, and his Bowels gushed out, for whom it had been good if he had never been borne. What should I say more? If we remember the late days of persecution, wherein the patience of the Saints was tried by bloody executions, tortures, murders, massacres, hanging, beheading, burning, and imprisonment: we may observe, that the heavy hand of God was one way or other against those bloody Inquisitors, and cruel persecutors, that had imbrued and defiled their hands with their blood, that they died not the ordinary and common death of all, nor were visited after the visitation of all men. Some died fodainly, falling down on the ground that they never stirred, as Ananias and Sapphira: some had their bowels and inward parts fall out, and died the death of Judas their elder brother: some could not swallow and digest their meat, but it came forth again sometimes at their mouth, and sometimes at their nostrils, most horribly to behold. Some were stricken in the one half of their body, that they lay benumbed, half alive, and half dead, to the great terror and astonishment of all that were present, and did look upon them. Some brake their Neckes: others became mad and frantic immediately after their reproaches and indignities shown against the servants of God, and ran up and down justifying those in words, whom they had condemned in deed. And scarce any of them escaped, but the hand of GOD was strongly and strangely upon them all before they died: To tell us and teach us this truth, that the persecutors of the Church, defiled with the blood of the Saints, shall not always escape unpunished, albeit for a time they do prevail.

The Reasons are these. First, because God [Reason 1] is true in all his words, & just in all his works. He is a most righteous Judge, who will take his own cause into his hands, and be glorified in the confusion of his adversaries. It cannot therefore be that they should escape, seeing GOD so tendereth them, their blood is precious in his sight, Matth. 23, 35. Not one drop of it shall fall to the ground vnreunged: he hath said, Psal. 105, 35. Touch not mine anointed, & do my Prophets no harm. He hath put all their tears in his bottle, & such as touch them to do them hurt, do touch the apple of his own eye. Yea whatsoever injuries, wrongs, oppressions, and indignities are offered unto them, he accounteth them as done unto himself. This our Savior testified from heaven, when Paul made havoc of the Church, and breathed out threatenings against the Saints, saying, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? They have not to do only with men, they fight against God, and therefore shall not prevail. This reason is urged by the Apostle, 2 Th. 1.6, 7. It is a righteous thing with God, to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you & to you which are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall show himself from heaven with his mighty Angels.

Again, he is a gracious God, and merciful [Reason 2] to his people, therefore in his good time he will punish their enemies and those that hate them. He is as pitiful toward his children, as he is just against all their adversaries. This the Prophet expressly handleth at large, Psalm 136 1•, 16, 17, 18. &c. He overthrew Pharaoh & his host in the red sea, for his mercy endureth forever: which smote great Kings, for his mercy endureth forever: and slew mighty Kings, for his mercy endureth forever: as Sihon King of the Amorites, for his mercy endureth forever: and Og the King of Bashan, for his mercy endureth forever. And gave their Land for an heritage, for his mercy endureth forever: even an heritage unto Israel his servant, for his mercy endureth forever.

It remaineth to make use and application of this Doctrine. First, it is a great comfort to the Church, to consider how God is mindful of us in our distresses, he doth not forget our afflictions: he seeth the injuries that are offered unto us, as he surely saw the trouble of his people in Egypt; and therefore we ought not to sink down in our miseries. No chastising indeed for the present time, seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; but afterward it bringeth the quiet fruit of righteousness to them that are thereby exercised: Heb. 12, 11. So that in the midst of them we must rejoyce, Knowing that tribulation bringeth forth patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost which is given unto us. Rom. 5, 3, 4, 5. Albeit he make us run through fire and water, he will in the ende bring us to a sweet place of rest. Let us not therefore be dismayed for tribulation, all that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Let us not be ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, Which is the power of God to salvation unto all that believe. Let us wait for the day of our deliverance, assuring our selves, that albeit the enemies of God's people and Religion band themselves and assemble together against the Lord, and against his Christ, yet in the end he shall crush them with a Scepter of Iron, and break them in pieces like a Potters vessel, & not leave so great iniquity unpunished. Thus doth Moses comfort the people, Exod. 14. Fear ye not, stand still, and behold the salvation of the Lord which he will show to you this day: for the Egyptians whom ye have seen this day, ye shall never see them again: the Lord will fight for you, therefore hold you your peace. He will harden the hearts of the Egyptians, and will get him honor upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, and upon all his Chariots, and upon his Horsemen, to show his power in thē, and to declare his Name throughout all the world. Thus doth God comfort Abraham, Gen. 15, by foretelling that the same Nation which should deal so churlishly and cruelly with his posterity, should not always escape unpunished, but in the end he would recompense them according to their deserts: Know for a surety, that thy seed shall be a Stranger in a Land that is not theirs, four hundredth years and shall serve thē, and they shall entreat thē evil: notwithstanding, the Nation whom they shall serve, I will judge, and afterward shall they come forth with great substance. Gen. 15, 13, 14. As if the Lord should have said unto him, I would not have thee dismayed and discouraged (O Abraham) by these heavy tidings which I have told thee, that thy children shall be strangers in a strange Land, and not only strangers, but be made servants and bondslaves, and not only made slaves, but be evilly and despitefully handled: (thus God by a Rhetorical Gradation seemeth to augment his sorrows) rather I would have thee strengthen thy faith against this temptation, & comfort thy heart with this cogitation, that I will in the end punish that barbarous Nation, and bring upon it all those evils which it hath brought upon thy posterity, when they have filled to the full the measure of their sins. The truth of this promise is set down in y^e book of Exodus, from the seventh chapter to the fifteenth, which we may read, and in reading consider, that God is true in all his promises and Prophetesies, and will accomplish whatsoever he hath spoken for the confusion and destruction of his enemies. Let us therefore comfort our selves, and comfort one another in these things, that God will arise, and his enemies shall be scattered.

Secondly, let us refrain anger and revenge [Use 2] toward such as deal evilly with us. It is the nature of flesh and blood to rise in choler, to desire revenge, and not to put up wrongs and injuries. We must be more then a lump of flesh, if we will be the children of God. We see that Stephen, when he was stoned, prayed for his persecutors, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. Acts 7, 60. The like we see in Christ our Savior toward those that crucified him The consideration of this truth, that God reserveth wrath for his enemies, and taketh vengeance on his adversaries, will help to redress and repress our corrupt affections, and make us able to prevail over them, and to withstand them. Let us not recompense like for like: let us not measure evil for evil: let us do good against evil, committing our cases and causes to that just Judge, that always judgeth uprightly. Therefore the Prophet ascribeth this Title as peculiar to God to right and revenge the quarrels of his Children, Psal. 94, 1, 2. O Lord God the avenger, O God the avenger, show thyself clearly: exalt thyself, O Judge of the world, and render a reward to the proud. It is the proper Office of God to take vengeance on the wicked and ungodly. Wherefore the Apostle exhorteth the church, Rom. 12, 17, 19, to recompense to no man evil for evil, Dearely beloved, avenge not yourselves, but give place unto wrath: for it is written Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord So the Apostle John, after the foretelling o^r troubles and persecutions, addeth, Here is the patience of the Saints, declaring thereby, what our armor, and what our weapons of defense are, to give us victory over our enemies. Let these things stay us in our afflictions, from breaking out into impatience of spirit, and from returning wrong for wrong; albeit the unfaithful rise up against us, & the Drunkards make songs of us, and we suffer reproof and reproach for the Gospels sake: yet he, whose cause it is, will not suffer the water-floods to drown us, neither let the deep swallow us up nor let the pit shut her mouth upon us.

Thirdly, it is the duty of his people to praise [Use 3] him greatly, when he avengeth the cause of his Children. When they see the wicked punished, and those that forget God taken in the snare of their own hands, let them rejoice and be glad, and give unto God the glory due unto his name. This practice we have in the Prophet, Ps. 136, 1. speaking of the overthrow of Pharaoh in the red sea, and remembering the slaughter of sundry mighty Kings, yea, even the names of those which we now speak of: he provoketh the people by a most earnest exhortation to give thanks unto God for their destruction, Praise ye the Lord, because he is good, for his mercy endureth forever. Hereunto cometh the prayer of the Israelites, enduring the bitter scorns and reproachful tauntes of most malicious enemies in the days of their captivity, who as they demanded an heavy curse against those Edomites, so they pronounced a blessing upon them that shall vex and trouble them. This appeareth evidently in Ester 9, 17. when the Church of God saw a great work wrought for them, their enemies destroyed and themselves delivered, they rejoiced with an exceeding great joy, and kept a feast in remembrance of their deliverance. It is not cruelty to rejoice at the destruction of God's enemies, and to magnify his most great name for it. This the Apostle John teacheth, Reu. 19, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. where the heavenly companies of Angels and blessed souls set forth their gladness and triumph, that God had judged the enemies of his people. So chap. 18. v, 20. O heaven rejoice of her, and ye holy Apostles and Prophets: for God hath punished her, to be avenged on her for your sakes. The innocent blood of the patient martyrs so cruelly murdered, crieth out for vengeance in the ears of the Lord of hosts, as the blood of righteous Abel, and shall not the Judge of all the world do right? It is his office to render into the bosom of his adversaries seven fold. Now as it is our duty earnestly to desire the accomplishment of his judgments, so when they are performed (as surely they will come and not tarry) we must glorify his blessed name, with all rejoicing that we can conceive and express.

Lastly, this serveth to be a terror to the ungodly, [Use 4] when this Doctrine shall sound in their ears, that God will judge the wicked for persecuting the members of Christ Jesus. If they escape in this world, the Lord reserveth them for greater judgment. When the Lord Jesus cometh with thousands of his Angels, he will render vengeance unto them in flaming fire, and punish them with everlasting perdition from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. This the Prophet assureth. Isaiah 8, 9, 10, 14. & 17, 11, 12, 13, 14. where by an Ironicall insulting, he setteth down the ruin of the enemies of the Church, who albeit their rage be restless, and their malice endless, yet they shall not stand, and their counsels shall come to nothing: they do fight against God, and against his son Christ Jesus, who is the invincible Rock whereon the Church is built, against which the gates of hell shall not be able to prevail, So that whosoever shall fall on this stone, he shall be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will dash him in pieces, Mat. 21. Thus shall all the ungodly be scattered as chaff before the wind, and swept away as dung in the just judgment of God. So let all thine Enemies perish, O Lord: but they that love him shall be as the Sun when he riseth in his might, Judge. 5, 31.

[Verse 21.22. Let me go through thy Land: We will not turn aside into the Fields, nor into the Vineyards, &c.] Here Moses setteth down another danger of the Israelites, greater then the former remembered in the former chapter. Thus one trouble followeth in the neck of another, As one deep calleth to another deep by the noise of his water spouts, Psal. 42, 7. We see here again, how Israel is driven to the same exigent they were before. After they have compassed the land of Edom, they come to the Amorites, and crave of them some help and compassion. They seek comfort and an end of their sorrows, at the hands of Sihon a wretched Idolater, an enemy of God, and of his people. Thus low are the people of God oftentimes brought, to stand in need of the favor of the ungodly, as we have shown in the former chapter. Furthermore, Moses assureth before hand what their behavior shall be, and promiseth to abstain from all hurt & wrong. From hence we learn this doctrine, That the people of God must abstain from all violent incroching upon the goods and possessions of others: they must not intrude them selves upon their goods and substance, they must keep their hands from robbing and stealing, and their hearts from coveting and desiring that which is another's, and not their own: they must not take of all that is another man's, so much as a thread or shoo-latchet to enrich themselves. Hereunto come the laws given of God unto his people, Exodus 22, 1. If a man steal an Ox, or a Sheep, if a man hurt his neighbors field, or Vineyard, his Corn or Pasture, he shall make recompense of the best of his own Felde, or Vineyard, or Corn, or Pasture. Likewise in Deut. 19, 14. Moses chargeth them not to remove their neighbors mark, which they of old time have set in their inheritance, that they might peaceably inherit the Land which God had mercifully given unto them. This Christ teacheth the young man in the Gospel, Mark 10, 19. Thou shalt hurt no man, meaning by force or fraud, or by any other mean whatsoever in his goods. Thus John the Baptist instructeth the soldiers that came unto his baptism, demanding what they should do, Luke 3. verses 13, 14. Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely, and be content with your Wages. And hereunto cometh the general rule, being the law of Nature and Nations, Matth. 7, verse 12. Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, even so do ye to them, for this is the Law & the Prophets.

The reasons of this doctrine are many. First, in respect of God, who is an avenger of all such dealings. Oftentimes it falleth out, that men cannot right their own causes, and Magistrates to whom they should fly, will not. For who are they that for the most part lie open to violence and oppression, but the poor and fatherless, the widow and stranger, and such as are destitute of friends to help them in their good and lawful causes? But God, both can right the causes of such distressed persons, because he is Almighty; and he will remedy them, because he is merciful. He is God of God's, and Lord of Lord's, a great God, mighty and terrible, which accepteth no persons, nor taketh reward, Who doth right unto the Fatherless and Widow, and loveth the stranger, giving him food and raiment, Deut. 10, ver. 17, 18. This reason the Apostle urgeth, 1 Thess. 4, 6. To this purpose Moses speaketh, Exod. 22, 21, 22, 23, 24. So the Lord threateneth in the Prophet Habbakkuk, chap. 2. This ought to prevail with us, to teach us equity, forasmuch as GOD threateneth to be revenged of all iniquity.

[Reason 2] Again, God is the God of righteousness and judgment, therefore he commandeth and commendeth unto his people that which is just and equal, and forbiddeth them the contrary. He hath the Sovereign right of all things in his own hand, and hath in most excellent wisdom distributed and disposed to every man his several portion. If this then be the nature of God to deal justly and righteously toward everyone, that no man can cōplain of wrong and injury done of God toward him: then such as are the Children of God, must resemble their heavenly Father in doing the works of righteousness and equity. This the Prophet in many places teacheth, Thou art not a God that loveth wickedness, neither shall evil dwell with thee: the foolish shall not stand in thy sight, for thou hatest all them that work iniquity. Seeing therefore God loveth righteousness & hateth wickedness, he must needs detest and abhor whatsoever is contrary to his nature; to wit, all unrighteousness and injustice.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, we are brethren, we pr fesse the same faith, we worship the same God, we look for the same inheritance, we are sealed with the same baptism, we are nourished at the same Table, we live by the same faith, we wait for a better life by the same hope; and therefore being called with such an heavenly calling, oppression and deceit stand not with our holy profession, as Moses speaketh to the Israelites, when it came in his heart to visit his brethren, to join himself to the Church, and to forsake the treasures and pleasures of Egypt, Exod. 2, 13. Sirs, ye are brethren, why do ye wrong one another? This is the reason that Abraham used to Lot, to take up the contention begun among their servants, as it were a fire kindled in their houses, threatening to consume them with the Timber thereof, & stones thereof, Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between thee and me, neither between thy Heard-men, and my Heard-men, for we are brethren. Gen. 13, verse 8.

Let us see what may be the uses and applications [Use 1] of this point. First, all community, maintained by the Anabaptists, and Family of love, is overthrown, (being contrary to the direct Law of God.) To possess goods in private as proper to one, is approved by the examples of the Christian Churches planted by the Apostles: and therefore to hold and teach, that nothing doeth, or ought peculiarly and properly to belong unto another, is reprov'd and rejected by the doctrine of the Apostles. The eight Commandment being moral and perpetual, forbiddeth us to hurt and annoy our neighbors goods, and establisheth a distinction of goods and a propriety of possessions. They are therefore greatly and grossly deceived, and do notoriously deceive others, that imagine the difference and distinction of lands and goods, to be brought in by tyranny, not by law; by violence, not by justice; by force and fear, not by right and reason; because as children of the same Father have the same right and interest in the goods of their Father: so all men have equal right and jurisdiction in the earth, and in all things that are upon the face of the earth: and for this cause they suppose all things common, & nothing proper by the Law of God. But this opinion falleth to the ground, [Answer.] and shall fall so long as the Commandment standeth in full force, strength, and virtue, as a Bond and Obligation that bindeth us and our posterity forever. For if all were a Commons, and nothing enclosed, if the hedge of propriety were pulled up, and all lay wide and waste as a Wilderness without inclosure; then there could be no stealing, no injury or wrong offer'd, every man should take his own by his own right: and God should forbid that by Law which cannot be committed. As if a Law were made, that man should not fly in the air, nor climb up into Heaven, nor walk upon his head, nor be in many places at once, which things are impossible to human Nature. But God forbiddeth nothing in vain.

Again, if propriety of goods were not ordained of God, but devised of man, God by precept and commandment should establish and confirm the violence and usurpation of men, and as it were give them a free Charter, and his broad Seal to have and to hold all goods wrongfully gotten, as if a Prince should make a Law, that whatsoever thieves & robbers catch by hook or crook, they shall possess them by a good and rightful title: then which what can be thought more unreasonable, or spoken more absurdly? Besides, what need were there to set bounds and marks in Lands and possessions? And wherefor are they accursed of God and men, that remove ancient bounds and marks, if there were no propriety? Now where theft is restrained, where wrong is condemned, where abstaining from the goods of others is required, there is a difference supposed between thine and mine.

Moreover, there could be no giving, nor buying, nor bargaining, nor selling, nor hyring, nor lending, if all things were left to the wide world, to be caught and snatched according to the lust and pleasure of every man: in all which notwithstanding, God by special Commandments tieth up and restraineth the gripings and greediness of covetous men. For if the Corinthians had had all things in common no strife could arise among them of things pertaining to this life: but inasmuch as they wronged one another in these temporal things, and wrangled for them under the Infidels, it is plain, that every man had his own portion distinct from the possession of other men. And the same Apostle, bridling the gaping and greedy desires of men, teacheth, that they that use this world, should be as though they used it not, and they that buy, should be as though they possessed not. 1 Cor. 7, 30, 31. Therefore by this exhortation, buying is allowed, possessing is granted, so that the heart be not set upon the world. This is farther confirmed by sundry precepts of the Apostle, Let him that hath stolen, steal no more, but let him rather labor, and work with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. Eph. 4, 28. The wise man saith, Prov. 25, 17. Withdraw thy foot from thy neighbors house, lest he be weary of thee, and hate thee. But if all were common, it were lawful to enter everywhere, and use all things at our own pleasure.

Lastly, to what ende and purpose should the word of God strictly command alms-giving, and the works of mercy and charity, if there were no propriety or seueralty, but an equal communion of all worldly goods? So to what ende should the Apostle charge the wealthy in this world to do good with their goods, and those that be rich, to be rich in faith, and in good works, to be ready to give to such as are in need, and to lay up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come? Surely the difference between rich and poor could not stand, between high and low, but all should be shuffled together in great confusion, contrary to the order and ordinance of God, who is the God of all order and comliness among the people. Neither let any object the practice of the Primitive Church, [Object.] Acts, chap. 4, 32, & chap. 2, 44, where it is said, The multitude of them that believed were of one heart, and of one soul: neither any of them said, that anything of that which he possessed, was his own, but they had all things common. For there is a double kind of communion, [Answer.] in respect of propriety, and in respect of use. The community in the faithful, stood in y^e use of these outward things, which they employed for the good of their fellow-members. And therefore albeit some sold their goods and possessions, and parted them according to the necessities of the poor members of Christ, yet the Apostle Peter saith to Ananias, who had sold his possession & kept away part of the price, While it remained, appertained it not to thee? And after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? But how could they sell their goods, if they were not right owners and lawful possessours of them? Neither doth the Text say, that those Christians sold all they had possessed. It is said indeed, As many as were owners of lands and houses, sold, & brought the prices of those things which they sold, and laid it before the Apostles feet. The Scripture showeth, they sold and brought the price of that they sold: but it saith not, they sold all, and then brought the price of all: for it appeareth, that Philip, one of them kept his house still, & entertained the Apostles in the same, and consequently had it furnished for these uses, and fitted to lodge and harbor the godly & faithful brethren.

This community should be in every lively feeling member of Christ, who in the public want of the Church, should be ready and willing to dispossess themselves of somewhat, for the succor & comfort of other members. So then, they are overthrown, which do affirm, that it is unlawful for Christians to have or possess any riches: whereas no man in the Primitive Church was compelled to make his goods common. For Peter plainly avoucheth, that it lay in the power of Ananias, whether he would sell his Land or not: and when he had sold it, the money was his own, so that he might have kept it to himself if he had listed. His sin was, that he pretended to bring the whole price of that which they had sold, whereas they brought a part thereof, & so lied unto God. But God requireth at our hands, that we should give cheerfully, not grudgingly; willingly, not constrainedly, readily, not backwardly.

Secondly, everyone must look that he [Use 2] live in a lawful calling, wherein he must abide, eating his own bread, and laboring y^e thing that is good. So we shall defraud no man, but deal righteously and justly, and get by lawful means: we must restore again that which hath been unlawfully gotten, and unconscionably deteined, though haply hidden from men, so that the world cannot lay it to our charge, yet our own heart knoweth it, and chargeth it upon us, and our conscience will not pass it over, but we must evermore hear of it, and receive a check from it. The crying of an accusing & condemned conscience cannot be stopped, but is as a thousand witnesses against us.

Again, goods wrongfully gotten & kept from the Owner, do cry against us, and do lay bitter accusations to our charge. This the Prophet Habbkkuk teacheth, chap. 2, 9, 10, 11. True it is, the stones have no mouth to cry, neither the timber any feeling to suffer wrong at our hands: but the Scripture useth such manner of speech & form of words, to make us perceive the better, by this vehement raising up of the dumb and senseless creatures, that if we do amiss before GOD, and deal wrongfully with men, the creatures shall bear witness against us, and ask vengeance upon us at the latter day. Therefore he bringeth in the several parts of the house answering one another, and singing one to another: one side crieth out, behold blood: the other, behold murder: the one, behold deceit: the other, behold cruelty. Thus the Apostle James speaketh, chap. 5, 4. Behold, the hire of the Laborers, which have reaped your field (which is of you kept back by fraud) crieth, and the cries of them which have reaped, are entered into the ears of the Lord of hosts. Thus we see, how the creatures abused, do groan to be delivered from the bondage of corruption, & cry out against oppression: the oppressed crieth in the ears of the Lord, and the conscience of the oppressor as an honest Iurate witnesseth against him, and crieth for vengeance. And shall the Lord be deaf, and not hear such great and loud out-cryings of so many distressed and oppressed persons entering into the highest heavens, and piercing the ears of the Lord of hosts? Shall not God avenge his elect which day and night cry unto him, yea, though he suffer long for them? I tell you, he will avenge them quickly, to the comfort of the oppressed, but to the confusion of the oppressor.

[Use 3] Lastly, seeing wrongful dealing must be avoided, it serveth to condemn all inordinate living in no settled or lawful calling, idly, vnthriftily, and prodigally. For every man living in the Church, of what degree or condition soever, must have some particular calling to walk in, how high soever his estate be, how great soever his revenues be: which condemneth the wandering up & down of rogues and beggars, the Cloisters of Monks and Friars, the idleness of rich men that have lands and livings, all such as are Drones, unprofitable to the Church or Common-wealth, or family, wherein they abide. Adam in time of his innocence immediately after his creation in the Image of God, had a special calling appointed him to dress and keep the Garden. It was likewise said to him and his posterity immediately after the fall, In the sweat of thy brows thou shalt eat thy bread, till thou return unto the earth, out of which thou wast taken So the Apostle saith, 2 Thess. 3, 11, 12. Christ Jesus, the head of men and Angels, before the solemn inuesting and entering into his Office, lived privately in Joseph's house, and wrought in his trade, and therefore it is, that the Jews call him, not only the Carpenters son, but a Carpenter. If then we would settle our selves in a lawful calling, eating our own bread, trusting in the providence of God, contenting our selves with our present estate, thinking it the best and fittest for us, we should keep our selves from oppression & wrong. But because some live without any calling, some without a lawful calling, others live distrustful & discontented, it driveth them to make ungodly shifts, and use unlawful means which God abhorreth. Let us lay these things to our own hearts, and not spend our days in ydlenesse. The time is precious, let us seek to redeem it. Let us every day do some good or other, let us learn some good of others, or be teaching some good thing to others. But alas, how many are there in all places that spend whole days, and months, and years in vanity? who if they would call themselves to an account of their lives past, might see and perceive many days pass over their heads without doing any good, whereof, albeit they will take no account of themselves, yet they must give an account to God at the day of judgment.

Verse 23. But Sihon gave Israel no license to pass through his Border: and Sihon assembled all his people, and went out against Israel into the wilderness, &c. The request to give the Israelites a quiet and peaceable passage, being quiet & peaceable men, was just and reasonable; yet the petition is denied, and the people themselves that made it, are persecuted. They offered no wrong, they drew no sword, they shot no Arrow, they cast no Dart, they took away nothing, yet they are hated and hurried unto the death, and assaulted without mercy. This teacheth, that the ungodly do hate and persecute the godly without cause. This is the practice of wicked men, to pursue the children of God with all injurious and despiteful dealing, albeit they offer no occasion of hurt or harm unto them. We see this practice in Cain, who hated his brother, and albeit he spake friendly unto him, yet drawing him into the field, he rose up against him & slew him. This the Prophet complaineth of Psalm. 69, 4, and 35, 7. Joseph was sold as a slave, and imprisoned as a malefactor. Jeremiah was many ways troubled and clapped up. David was hated & hunted frō place to place. The Apostles were whipped and scourged in the Synagogues; Stephen was reviled and stoned; Christ was scorned and crucified: Paul was buffeted and persecuted. The Saints were tried by mocking, burned in the fire, slain with the sword, they wandered in the wilderness, they were hidden in caves and holes of the earth.

The Reasons are very plain & direct. For first, it seemeth unto them more then strange, [Reason 1] that the faithful are not brethren with them in evil, but separate themselves from them, & will touch no unclean thing. If we were of the world, the world would love his own, but because we are chose out of the world, therefore the world hateth us. So long as Paul ioynd with y^e Pharisees in persecuting the Church, & imprisoning all those that called vpō the Lord Jesus, who was in greater favor and credit with thē? But whē he was called to preach y^e truth which before he had oppugned, and became zealous in the faith which before he destroyed, by & by the Jews took counsel to kill him. Christ Jesus the Lord of life, before he was installed into his Office, was in favor with God and men: but when he was baptized, albeit he was always in favor with his Father, yet immediately afterward, he was tempted of the devil, contemned of his Country-men, and led to the edge of an hil to be cast down headlong. This is that which the Apostle Peter witnesseth, 1 Pet. 4.4, 5. But it is better for us to have the hatred of men, and the ill will of all the world, then fail in any part of our duty unto God, who is able to cast body and soul into hell.

[Reason 2] Secondly, no marvel if the wicked hate the godly, for the world hateth Christ. He was called a Samaritan, he was counted a Coniurer, he was esteemed as a drunkard, a deceiver, a devil, a friend of Publicans and sinners, If they have thus reviled the Master of the house, no marvel if they respect not the members. The Ambassador must not look to be greater then he that sent him: the Disciple must not dream of a better condition then the Lord: if they have done thus to the green Tree, what will they do to the dry and withered? If they deal thus with him that is always fruitful & flourishing, and liveth forever, we must not look that they should deal better with us that are unfruitful and full of the unsavory fruits of our corruption. This Christ himself teacheth in sundry places, Mat. 10, 24 25. The Disciple is not above his Master, nor the servant above his Lord: it is enough for the Disciple to be as his Master is, and the servant as his Lord: if they have called the Master of the house, Belzebub, how much more them of his household?

[Use 1] Now let us see what uses may be gathered from hence. First, we may assure our selves, that it is a lamentable and woeful condition to live and dwell among such mallitious & mischievous enemies. They grin and grind their teeth at us like Dogs: they gape at us with their mouths, like the ramping and roaring Lyon: they push at us with their heads like the fat Bulls of Bashan: they run at us with their horns like the Unicorn, they whet their tuskes at us like the wild Boar out of the wood: they seek to eat us up like the savage beasts of the Field and Forest. Would we not take it to be a fearful condition to be carried into a great and terrible Wilderness, and to be compassed about with Dragons, Tigers, Bears, and other devouring beasts, ready to eat us in pieces while there is none to help? But man unto man, is many times all these; especially the unfaithful man to the faithful. •or what fellowship is there between the seed of the woman, and the seed of the serpent? Wh^t communion between light and darkness? and what concord between Christ and Belial. This the Prophet acknowledged & felt by experience in his own person, Woe is me that I remained in Meshech, & dwell in the tents of Kedar: my soul hath too long dwelt with him that hateth peace: I seek peace, and when I speak thereof, they are bent to war. For, as the society of the faithful is good and comely, like the precious ointment upon the head of Aaron, and as the dew falling upon the mountains of Hermon and Zion, because they take sweet counsel together, and go unto the house of God as companions: so the accompanying & conversing with evil persons is irksome and tedious unto the godly, as if they lived with Wolves and wild beasts in the Wilderness. True it is, the people of God hate and abhor the sins of the ungodly, but yet love their persons, as the Physician hateth the disease, but loveth the person of his Patient. But the ungodly hate not only the infirmities of the faithful, but their persons, even to the death, as the dung of the earth, and the off-scouring of all things: and therefore we must needs account it a woeful condition, full of grief, anguish, and vexation of Spirit to live among them. This life is as a continual death.

Secondly, seeing this is the entertainment that we must look for, and shall find in the [Use 2] world to be hated and harrowed by the ungodly, it standeth us upon to live in unity and to love one another, as the children of the Father and the disciples of Christ. When enemies daily increase and join their forces together in a common band, & an united league it standeth all those upon that are of the communion of Saints, that are come unto Mount Zion, to the City of the living God, and to the assembly and congregation of the first borne, which are written in heaven, to unite & combine themselves together as one man. The adversaries of the Church are many, their power is mighty, their malice is insatiable against y^e little flock of Christ: it is time therefore for us to join our selves against the common adversary. Who can be ignorant how the popish crew associate themselves together, seeking to subvert the state, and to overthrow religion established among us, being resolved by murderous Mass-Priests, and set on fire of hell? We have also many hollow-hearted hypocrites, damnable Atheists, filthy Libertines, & sundry loose livers, y^t can abide none to make any sincere profession of godliness. The poor sheep and innocent Lambes of Christ amidst so many subtle Foxes and cruel Wolves, had need love one another, being hated of the world, and seek the good one of another, being maligned of the wicked.

Hereunto Christ exhorteth in sundry places as John. 13. A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another. And in the 16. Chapter he moveth the Disciples to love one another, seeing they are hated of the world as their Mayster was. This therefore is the comfort of a true Christian, that albeit he be hated of the ungodly, yet there is a true communion among the believers of all gifts and graces granted unto them, being ready to teach the ignorant, to gather home them that go astray, to bind up the broken-hearted, to comfort the weak, to convince the deceived, to admonish the unruly, to stir up them that are dull, & to encourage all in well-doing. And touching the bodies of our brethren, those that have this worlds good, must show themselves willing to help the poor, to feed y^e hungry, to clothe the naked, to raise up the distressed, to visit the sick, and to do good to all, but especially to them that are of the household of faith. Gal. 6, 10.

Lastly, seeing hatred lodgeth in the heart [Use 3] of a wicked man toward the faithful, it is our duty to pray to God to be delivered from unreasonable and evil men, Seeing all have not faith; and that living among them, we may be established and kept blameless, and pure from evil, and may shine as lights in the midst of a crooked & naughty Nation, holding forth the word of life. This the Prophet David declareth, Psalm. 35, 12, 13, 15, 16.17. Thus doth God wean us from the love and liking of this world, that we should look and long after his kingdom, where is fullness of joy for evermore.

Verses 25, 26. And Israel took all those Cities: therefore Israel dwelled in all the Cities of the Amorites in Heshbon, and in all the Villages thereof. These Cities taken by the Israelites did sometimes belong to the Moabites, as appeareth, Judge. 11. But Sihon had taken them from Veheb the former King of the Moabites. So thē in these words we have the preventing of an Objection, as Lyra well observeth upon this place, where it is said, that Israel dwelt in Heshbon, & in the Villages thereof, which properly belonged to the Land of Moab, as part and parcel thereof, being now rent and torn in pieces as a body that had lost many limbs and members. Some man therefore might ask the question, how came the Israelites to possess that Land, seeing they were expressly restrained and forbidden of God to fight against the Moabites, & they were told that they should have no part nor portion of their Land given unto them? Deut. 2, 9. Thou shalt not vex Moab, neither provoke them to battle, for I will not give thee of their Land for a possession. To this Moses answereth, that albeit it could not be denied and gain-said, but that the Cities were in former time within the Borders and Territories of Moab, yet Sihon had taken them away by right of war, and conquest of the sword: so that now they were alienated from the Moabites, and appropriated to the Amorites, who possessed them and dwelt in them. So then the Israelites offered no wrong to the Moabites, but recovered the places to their own use out of the hand of the Amorites. Neither did Moab lay any claim to them for many generations, as Iephtah declareth, Judge. 11. And this is the right that Israel had to these Cities.

Thus we see what dealings passed between the Moabites and the Amorites, before Israel came to these places: both of them were idolaters, both wicked men, both grossly ignorant of the true worship of God, and desperate enemies to the true Church: one is ready to cut the throat of another, and killeth one another in battle. We learn from hence, that God punisheth oftentimes one wicked man by the hand of another. He raiseth up and armeth one of them to destroy another, to eat up and consume another. This truth appeareth in many other places of holy Scripture. Chedor-laomer usurping dominion over other Nations, made war against them, and took away all the substance as a prey & booty out of Sodom and Gomorrhah. God in his providence causeth one evil man to slay another. The Sodomites were exceeding sinners against the Lord. He raised up an enemy, not much better then themselves for their destruction. The like we see in the example of the Midianites, Who sheathed their swords in their own bowels. Indeed Gideon gave his men at arms, that went with him to that service, Lamps, Trumpets, and Pitchers, and thus he marched against his enemies: they sounded their Trumpets, they brake their Pitchers, they lighted their Lamps, then the host of the Midianites fled, & every man's sword was set against his neighbor, their own weapons were their own bane, their own men were their own murderers, and so they destroyed one another. This the Prophet Habbakkuk showeth, when the Law was dissolved, Justice oppressed, cruelty practiced, and all wickedness was advanced among them, the LORD would work a wonder among them He would raise up the Chaldeans against them, a bitter and furious Nation to destroy them, a people worse then themselves. This is that which Isaiah the Prophet pointeth unto, when he saith, Everyone shall eat the flesh of his own arm, Manasseh Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasseh: and they both shall be against Judah, Isaiah 9, 21. Likewise he prophesieth the destruction of Babylon by the Medes and Persians, chap. 13, 17. The destruction of the Egyptians by the Assyrians, chap. 19. Yea he would set the Egyptians against the Egyptians, so that everyone should fight against his brother, and everyone against his neighbor, City against City, and Kingdom against Kingdom.

The reasons of this order and manner of God's working, are not hard to find. For first, [Reason 1] who shall limit him what means to use, and what persons to employ in his service? Dare any Subject prescribe unto his Prince whom he shall send? Or shall a servant teach & appoint his master whom he shall entertain to perform his business? Or will any Magistrate & master take well such pride & presumption? Shall God then, the King of Kings, & the master over all men, be stinted and limited whom he shall use? As none can appoint him what he shall do, or when he shall punish, or whom he shall correct: no more can we decree or determine the means and manner of his proceedings. He appointeth the times and seasons of punishing, he singleth out the persons to be punished. For who hath known the mind of the Lord? Or who was his Counselor? He will find out his enemies in their sins, and he will choose out the instruments of his own judgments. He armeth many times men of evil hearts, and of unclean hands to do his works diligently, and to accomplish his ways fervently. When the Lord would smite the house of Ahab, and avenge the blood of his servants the Prophets, Jehu is anointed King over Israel, & made the Rod of the Lord, who performed his word and will to the full, he slew Jehoram, cast down Jezebel, and slew the Priests of Baal: yet notwithstanding all his zeal which he pretended for the Lord, his heart was not upright before him, neither regarded he to walk in the Law of the Lord God of Israel, neither departed he from the sins of Jeroboam which made Israel to sin. As then the work is the Lord's, so is the workman: and as the judgment is his, so is the instrument which he chooseth and fitteth to effect the same, without the prescription & appointment of any other.

[Reason 2] Again, albeit they be wicked and ungodly men, infidels and idolaters that he imploieith to finish his work, & to bring his decree & determination to pass, yet he frameth their hearts to serve his providence, as seemeth good in his heavenly wisdom. He hath the hearts of all men in his hand, even of Kings, to turn them about to be instruments of his will. If then he can change the hearts of enemies, no marvel if he use them as his servants. So he useth the service of the devils and evil spirits, and maketh them to do his will, and against their will▪ & further the salvation of his children, whō they purposed to bring to despair and damnation, as appeareth in the History of Job's temptations. Albeit they be not his faithful servants to do his will cheerfully, yet they are his slaves to serve him by constraint and compulsion. This the Apostle John declareth in the destruction of that great whore which is drunk with the blood of the Saints, with whom the Kings of the earth committed fornication; namely, that they gave their power and authority to the Beast; but they shall hate the whore, make her desolate, eat her flesh, and burn her with fire: for God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to do with one consent, for to give their kingdom unto the Beast, until the words of God be fulfilled. Reu. 17, 15, 16, 17. Nothing is done without the will of God. He holdeth in his hands the hearts and purposes of Princes, and great men upon earth, and directeth them by a secret motion to work what he pleaseth, whether they know his will, or know it not, the whole action cometh of him, and from him. For howsoever it might seem hard and harsh, that the Angel saith, it was GOD that put it into the harts of Kings to advance the Papacy, which was the work of the devil to seduce the world: yet after a sort the Lord also doth it, who as a just Judge for the wickedness of the world, and contempt of y^e Gospel, letteth loose Satan, to deceive in his heavy, yet righteous judgment. So the Apostle teacheth, that God shall send strong delusions, that they shall believe lies, that will not embrace and receive the truth. 2 Thes. 2, 11.

The uses are to be thought upon, and to be [Use 1] learned of us. First, marvel not if wicked mē many times prosper and prevail. For if God use them as his Rods, and enableth them to work his will, albeit they do not fear God, nor purpose to serve him, nor aim at his glory, yet they shall overcome and have the upper hand, for God hath sent them, God hath armed them, God hath said unto them, go and prosper. Let us not therefore think when evil men prevail, that all things are shufled & hudled together: let us not doubt of God's high providence over-ruling the world: let us not make prosperity a note of the Church, as if it were always here in flourishing estate, multiplying in wealth, abound•ng in friends, glorious in victories, flowing in honors, increasing in multitudes, and excelling in outward privileges, for God many times raiseth up the heads of evil men to bring mighty things to pass. This the Prophet Ezekiel declareth, chap. 29, 18, 19, 20. Son of Man, Nebuchadnezzar King of Babel, caused his army to serve a great service against Tyrus: every head was made bald, and every shoulder was made bare: yet had he no wages, nor yet his army for Tyrus, for the service that he served against it: therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will give the Land of Egypt to the King of Babel, and he shall take her multitude, and spoil her spoil, and take her prey, and it shall be the wages of his army: I have given him the Land of Egypt for his labor that he served against it: because they wrought for me, saith the Lord God. Where the Prophet showeth, that Nebuchadnezzar had served God's providence in the siedege and sacking of Tyrus; and therefore he had another kingdom given him for it, and blessed with victory over other enemies. This is the reason why evil men are set up, and have a reward of temporal blessings, because they are God's soldiers, and are under his pay, who suffereth them not to go and depart without their wages. Thus all earthly things fall out alike to all, & there is the same outward condition belonging to all, To the just and unjust, to the pure and to the polluted. Eccles, 9, 2.

Secondly, let us from hence know assuredly, there are no ways to withstand his wrath, [Use 2] no policy to prevent his judgments, no force that can resist his purposes. We see how many means he hath to bring forth his decrees: he can make the ungodly serve him, whensoever he will command them. True it is God's children guided by his Spirit, and framed to the obedience of his will, will always be serviceable to him with cheerfulness of heart and willingness of mind. If he command his adversaries any work, they must obey him, albeit against their wills: he enforceth them as slaves to do his will. Whatsoever their purposes be, God disposeth them to bring his own decrees to pass. What man then can promise to himself rest and peace, or think to wind himself from the hand of God, or escape the sentence gone out against him, or stand against God coming out to take vengeance upon him? Seeing he hath so many servants in readiness set in battle array to perform his purposes, and can single out what instruments he listeth, albeit as evil as themselves. This the Prophets teach everywhere, to the terror of all God's enemies. Consider that Jeremiah is bold, and saith to Zedekiah King of Judah, Deceiue not yourselves, saying; The Chaldeans shall surely depart from us, for they shall not depart: for though ye had smitten the whole host of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained but wounded men among them, yet should every man rise up in his Tent and burn this City with fire. The destruction of the ungodly hangeth not upon the power and pleasure of men, nor on the might and multitude of Soldiers, but on the judgment of God, who giveth strength to the weak, and courage to the coward, and might to the maimed man, to root out and to destroy. This should greatly humble and terrify the wicked man, that promiseth safety & security to himself, who notwithstanding lieth open every way to the wrath and indignation of God.

Lastly, let the people of God comfort themselves, [Use 3] though they be over-burdened and over-mastered by them. A time will come, and loe, it tarrieth not, when those wicked men that oppress and vex the Church▪ shall be rooted out. The Lord of hosts hath men and Angels, and all creatures to work out their destruction: he can whistle for other enemies, as evil as themselves to come against them, to conquer and overcome them. Be not therefore daunted to see them rule and reign: Fret not thyself because of the evil men, neither be envious for the evil doers, for they shall soon be cut down like grass, and shall wither as the green Hearb. Trust in the Lord and do good, dwell in the Land, and thou shalt be fed assuredly. I have seen the wicked, strong and spreading himself like a green Bay-tree, yet he passed away, and loe he was gone, and I sought him, but he could not be found. Let us therefore no whit be troubled to see the enemies of God and of the godly exalted and lifted up; they are set in slippery places, they are suddenly destroyed and horribly consumed as a dream when one awaketh: For God sendeth an evil spirit among them, as he did between Abimelech and the men of Shichem, to be revenged of the cruelty which they had shown toward the 70. sons of Ierubbaal. Judge. 9, 23, 24. We see this in the delivery of the Church out of Babylon; God stirred up the Medes & Persians, as great idolaters, as proud and profane persons as themselves, and by Cyrus delivered them, whom long before he had designed and deputed to that work. This the Prophet Isaiah showeth, chap. 21, 2, 10. So the•• albeit y^e Church were as it were thrashed with a Flaile, and a Cartwheeled upon their backs, albeit their loins were filled with sorrow, yet shall their enemies come to ruin and destruction, Babel is fallen, it is fallen, and all the Images of her God's hath he broken to the ground. Isaiah 21, 9. Howsoever therefore the estate of the Church in Babylon seemed desperate, and past all hope of recovering her former glory, yet we see God wanted not ways and means to free his chosen people, and set them at liberty, he raised the Medes and Persians to lead them by the hand out of y^e hand of their oppressors. His hand is not now shortened, his power is not now weakened, he can deal thus with all his enemies, & the enemies of his Church. If he blow upon them with the blast of his mouth, they pass away suddenly, as the chaff is scattered before the wind. An example hereof is recorded in the holy History, 2 Chron. 20, 23. when a great multitude of the Moabites, Ammonites, and Amorites, assembled themselves to fight against Jehoshaphat, after he had set himself to seek y^e Lord, proclaiming a fast throughout all Judah, asking counsel of the Lord, and praying to him in the zeal of his spirit, the enemies slew one another with the sword. Thus doth God turn the edge of the sword drawn against the Church, upon themselves, & rescueth his people when there is none to help. We have had experience of God's protection of his church, our eyes have seen, and our ears have heard how one hath butchered and murdered another, whereby God hath given a time of rest and breathing unto his servants. He is the same without changing, with him is no variableness, neither shadow of turning; if we turn to him with all our hearts, he will turn to us, and not suffer the rod of the wicked always to rest on the lot of the righteous, lest they should put forth their hand to wickedness.

Therefore Israel dwelled in all the Cities of the Amorites in Heshbon, and in all the Villages thereof. We have heard of the murders & slaughters that were between the Moabites & the Amorites, in the which, howsoever one sought to defend himself, the other prevailed by usurpation (as might sometimes over-cometh right:) yet the purpose of God, who over-swayeth all actions of men, and draweth good out of evil, was to give rest to his people, and to make them inherit and inhabit the Cities and Villages which the Amorites had wrongfully gotten. Hereby we learn for our instruction, that God oftentimes bringeth the godly and faithful that please him, to inherit the Lands and possessions of the wicked and ungodly. Howsoever the believers that fear God, are many times thrust out of house and home, and have their lawful possessions taken from them, as we see in Naboth's Vineyard, and in Abraham's Well: yet sometimes God returneth in mercy to the faithful, and maketh the substance and inheritance of the unfaithful, to descend unto them. This is confirmed in the Book of Exodus, at the departure of Israel out of the Land of Egypt, at which time GOD recompensed the sore labors and heavy travels of his people, imposed upon them by cruel task-masters, For they asked of the Egyptians Jewels of silver, and Ingots of gold, and change of raiment; then the Lord gave them favor in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they granted their requests, enriched the Israelites, and spoiled themselves. Exod. 12, 35, 36. This goodness of God the Prophet with praise acknowledgeth toward his people, saying; He cast out the Heathen before them, & caused them to fall to the lot of his inheritance, &c. Psal. 78, 55. This verifieth the saying of the wise man, Prov. 28, 8. He that increaseth his riches by usury and interest, gathereth them for him that will be merciful to the poor. And in another place, The good man shall give inheritance to his children's children, and the riches of the sinner is laid up for the just. In like manner Job describing the condition of the ungodly, fheweth, that though he should heap up silver as the dust, and prepare raiment as the clay; he may prepare it, but the just shall put it on, and the innocent shall divide the silver. Thus God taketh away the things of this life from such as use thē wickedly, and bestoweth them upon such as will employ them lawfully.

[Reason 1] The Reasons remain to be considered to strengthen this truth, and to make it appear to the consciences of all of us, to be a necessary and apparent truth. First of all, the mercy of God, toward such as are sealed up to be his servants, is without end; there is no brim nor bottom of it. If then his mercy surmount our thoughts he will let pass no part of his kindness toward them that do fear him. Thus the Prophet reasoneth, Psal. 136, 21, 22. Where, upon these examples of God's great kindness toward Israel, in overthrowing Sihon King of the Amorites, and Og the King of Bashan, he saith, He gave their Land for an heritage, for his mercy endureth forever: even an heritage unto Israel his servant, for his mercy endureth forever, Whensoever therefore we see this come to pass, we must acknowledge the cause of it to be in God, who ceaseth not to be good to those that be his.

[Reason 2] Again, God maketh known his power among his people, to teach them to depend upon him, to show unto them that they serve not a weak and impotent God, & to instruct them to walk in the obedience of his ways. This the Prophet pointeth out, Psalm. 44, 2, 3, and 111, 6, & 105, 44, 45.

[Use 1] The uses follow. First, this truth teacheth, who is the sovereign disposer of all things in heaven and earth; namely, God. He ordereth kingdoms, and disposeth Countries, he giveth and taketh away, he increaseth and diminisheth, he maketh rich, and maketh poor. It is not our own strength or policy; it is not our own care or labor, it is the bountifulness and blessing of God, that is all in all. We have here beneath upon the earth, Owners and Land-lords, we have such as account themselves possessours of houses and lands: but we must know that we are all Tenants at will, we enjoy nothing by Lease or Indenture for term of years, but hold the tenure of the Lands and livings at the will and pleasure of the great and high Land-lord of all the world. This is the confession of Hannah in her song of thanksgiving, 1 Sam. 2, 7, 8. The Lord maketh poor, and maketh rich, bringeth low, and exalteth: he raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among Princes: and to make them inherit the seat of glory, for the Pillars of the earth are the Lord's, and he hath set the world upon them. Whatsoever therefore we have, let us acknowledge therein, not our own deserts or merits, but the goodness of God toward us, filling us with good things to serve him.

Secondly, let us from hence confess, that [Use 2] all the cark and care of man with his best endeavours, cannot always attain to the benefit and fruit of his travel, but he provideth that which another enjoyeth. This the Prophet Haggai testifieth, chap 1, 6.9. Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat but ye have not enough; ye drink but ye are not filled; ye clothe you, but ye are not warm, &c. According to that which our Savior addeth, Math. 6, 27. Which of you by taking care, is able to add one cubite unto his stature? This the wise man teacheth in the Proverbs. chap, 12, 27. The deceitful man roasteth not that he took in hunting; but the riches of the diligent man are precious. Wherefore it standeth us upon, not to be immoderately pensive, and distrustfully careful for the profits and commodities of this life, nor trust in the labors of our own hands, but pray to God to send us his blessing, & to pour down the riches of his grace upon us, as the shower upon the herbs, and as the great rain upon the grass. It is not our own work that can give us wealth, or our own labor can make us rich. Except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it: except the LORD watch the City, the keeper watcheth in vain: it is vain for you to rise early, and to lie down late, and eat the bread of sorrow, but he will surely give rest to hi• beloved. So thē we must confess, that nothing in house or City, nothing in Church or Common-wealth can be enterprized & finished aright, except God be the directer and guider of it. To the end therefore y^e blessings of God may ever concur with our lawful labors, let us sanctify thē with prayer, & crave of God his special favor to bless the works of our hands to his glory and our comfort.

[Use 3] Thirdly, seeing wicked men after all their pains and labors do lay up in store for the faithful, both the one and rhe other sort must lay this unto their hearts. Let the ungodly lament and howl their folly, and not trust in their own strength. It is a great grief for a natural and carnal man to depart from his substance and treasure, upon which he hath set his heart; but this doubleth his grief, and increaseth his sorrow, to see such as he holdeth his enemies, to enter upon them, & quietly to enjoy them. What can more humble them, then to take from them the comfort wherein they rested, and the staff whereon they leaned, and the confidence wherein they trusted, so bereaving them of the fruit of their hands, which was the joy of their hearts, the hope of their lives, and the key of all their comfort. This use is directly concluded by the Prophet Jeremiah, chap. 42, 3. Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will cause a noise of war to be heard in Rabbah of the Amonites, and it shall be a desolate heap, and her daughters shall be burnt with fire, then shall Israel possess those that possessed him, saith the Lord. Howle, O Heshbon, for Ai is wasted: cry ye daughters of Rabbah, gird you with sackcloth, mourn & turn too and fro by the hedges, &c. Wherefore let us not put our affiance and confidence in these earthly, transitory, and uncertain things, which take their wings as an Eagle, and fly into the heaven. On the other side, this should comfort the faithful in the uprightness of their harts, and teach all persons to labor to be truly godly and religious. For this is the fruit and advantage that righteousness bringeth with it, it causeth a man's own goods to be stable and continue in his family, and draweth unto it the riches of others by the free gift of God. Thus we see, Deut. 28, 30, 31. that whereas in the law it is denounced as a curse, that a man should build an house, and another should dwell in it: plant a vineyard, and yet shall not eat the fruit: have his Ox slain before his eyes, and not eat thereof: it showeth the woeful condition of the ungodly, that he shall not reap the fruit of his labors, nor attain to the end he expecteth. Contrarywise, the godly are comforted, and have their bowels refreshed, forasmuch as they learn by this dealing of God, that the wicked man is so far from leaving his goods to his posterity, that they are oftentimes stripped from him, & put upon the righteous, who by the providence of God is made heir against his will. Wherefore, if we desire to leave our posterities in good estate, we can no way better provide for them, secure their persons, and settle their estates to continue, then if we lead a godly life, and keep a good conscience toward God and men.

[Use 4] Lastly, this Doctrine declaring how God translateth the substance and possession of the ungodly to the godly, ministereth matter unto them to praise the Lord, who is the giver of every good giving, and of every perfect gif•. This the Prophet teacheth Israel to acknowledge, Psal. 44, 3. & 105, 2, 3, 44, 45. & 136, 1, 21. that they inherited not the Land of Promise by dint of the sword, by the strength of their arm, by the multitude of their men, but confess the power of God's right hand, the light of his countenance, and the comfort of his favor. Hereupon he stirreth up the people to praise him, to call upon his name, and to declare his works to their posterity, Sing unto him, sing praise unto him, and talk of all his wondrous works, rejoyce in his holy name, and let the heart of them that seek the Lord, rejoyce. We are unworthy of these exceeding mercies, not only to find the comfort of our own labors, but to inherit the possessions of others, if we do not endeavor to stir up our hearts, and all y^t is within us to praise his holy name. Therefore Moses putteth the people of Israel in remembrance of this duty of thanksgiving whē they should come unto the land of Canaan, to Cities and houses built by their enemies, they should take heed they forgot not that good God that should bring them thither. This sacrifice was offered willingly and joyfully by the Israelites, when they saw their desire upon their enemies, and their goods given to the members of the Church: they rejoyced and were glad, joy and gladness arose among them.

[Verse 27. Wherefore they that speak in Proverbs.] Here is mention of a piece of Poetry, and an ancient song made by some skilful Poet, as Moses or some other among the people of God, containing Sihons invading of the Moabites, his possessing their Cities, with the cause, to wit, their idolatry, and the Israelites recovering and regaining them out of his hand to their proper use. This Poem was made in verse, both for the better remembrance of the singers, and for the more effectual setting down of these victors, to move attention, admiration, and other affections. We learn from this practice of the people of God, that Poetry is ancient in the Church of God, and commendable among the godly. The setting forth of the works of God, not only truly, soundly, and simply, in a plain form & frame of words, but strictly, poetically, artificially, is worthy of praise and commendation. This appeareth by the manifold practice of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Prophetesses, and other holy men and women in the old & New Testament. See the examples of Moses singing the praises of God after their deliverance out of Egypt, after the overthrow of Pharaoh, and after their passage over the red sea; he footed it not in a low, but in a lofty style praising God in verses, not in prose, for the greater efficacy of the matter, and the better expressing of their affections. The like we might say of his sweet song sung not long before his death, Deut. 31, 19, 22. & 32, 1, 2, &c. which he taught the children of Israel, thus did Deborah and Barak. And thus did David make an Epitaph in verse upon the death of Saul and Jonathan, after they were slain by the Philistines, not penned after the plain and vulgar manner, but with many rhetorical flourishes of Tropes and figures according to the nature of the verse, and the substance of the matter.

[Reason 1] The Reasons hereof are easy to be conceived, to avouch the lawfulness & praiseworthiness of this Art. For first, every Art and knowledge is of God. Every good giving and every perfect gift (saith the Apostle James) is from above, and cometh down from the Father of Lights. Every Mechanical trade and handy-craft is the gift of God: there is no excelling in any of them but by his special gift, who is the God of knowledge: which maketh a difference, not only between man & beast, but between man and man. Such as found out curious works in Gold, Silver, & Brasse, in grauing of stones, in caruing of wood, in making any Needlework about the Tabernacle, Were filled with the spirit of God, in wisdom, in knowledge, and understanding. As it is God that frameth the hand to such inventions, so it is he that guideth the pen, & giveth the tongue of the learned, to speak or write after an excellent manner. The Heathen men were wont to say, That Poets were inspired of God to go beyond the reach of the vulgar sort. So then, this gift being more then ordinary, must needs in a peculiar and special sort be from God.

[Reason 2] Secondly, sundry parts and books of holy Scripture are penned poetically, and those of excellent & worthy note; albeit we know not the kinds and measures of them (howsoever sundry have labored to find out the several numbers and natures of them) inasmuch as every Language hath his peculiar frame & fashion, yet not only some certain parts and parcels, but sundry whole books, as hath been said, were Poetically penned, and in that respect may be fitly called Poetical Books. Of this kind and nature, are the book of Job, the Psalms of David, the Proverbs of Solomon, the book of the Preacher, and the Song of songs: all which seem to be contained & comprehended by our Savior Christ, under the title of the Psalms, when he diuideth the whole Scripture into the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms, as Luke 24, 14. Besides, when anything of greatest note, worthy of greatest remembrance and commendation was to be set down in the Scriptures, the Prophets did choose to speak in this artificial composition of words & sentences to give a greater grace, and add greater glory unto the same, as appeareth in sundry places of the Law and Prophets.

[Use 1] The uses of this truth, direct us to sundry profitable meditations, and weighty considerations. For first, it teacheth us in part the majesty and authority of the Scriptures. They are not certain rugged and ragged writings to be contemned for their rudeness and simplicity, and to be condemned for their baseness and homeliness, as the Atheists and others, that boast and brag of their fine wits, are not ashamed to give out; but Books full of holy excellency, and wonderful stateliness; not only working grace in the hearts of the hearers, but carrying a grace to the ears of the hearers. Books filled with true eloquence, and more able to persuade, then all the enticing words of human wisdom. Therefore, the Lord to deliver his word from disgrace & reproach, doth sometimes fly aloft with a majestic gravity, and stately port, able to astonish the outward senses, & sufficient to draw the whole man into admiration; and thereby showeth what he could do in the rest of the holy Scriptures, if it had pleased him. Let a man read with singleness of heart, and with the eye of judgment the 104. Psalm, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. verses, describing the Majesty of God: or Ecclesiastes 12. verses 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, &c. describing the approaching of old age: or the first chap. of Isaiah, verse. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, &c. describing the unthankfulness of the people; and having diligently read, and advisedly perused them, let him tell me whether he do not despise in comparison of them, not only the descriptions of Homer and Virgil, but the Orations of Tully and Demosthenes, as froth and scum, having only the empty shadow of the true and right eloquence.

So the Apostle Paul being charged to be rude in speaking, doth not confess any want in his style, or crave pardon for any fault, but doth justify his manner of writing, & purposely auoideth the wisdom of man's eloquence. He opposeth his plainness to the set and curious speech of the false Apostles, who came in gay appearance, and hunted after fine phrases, and show of words, as if they had had all the strength of truth that might be on their side: yet notwithstanding, in this plain style the Apostle showeth himself most mighty, and most eloquent, garnishing his words, and adorning his sentences with all the figures that Art can afford, so far as served to move affections, and to touch the conscience. For the power of the Scriptures inspired by God, stādeath in the inward force and virtue, working upon the soul, piercing the heart, casting down the imaginations that lift up themselves against the truth, converting the whole man, and entering through to the dividing of the soul and spirit, of the joints & marrow, yea discerning the thoughts and intents of the heart. The Apostles of Christ, subdued the whole world, not with fire and sword, not with carnal and bodily weapons, but by the plain preaching of Christ crucified, as Paul himself confesseth, 1 Cor. 2, 2. He regarded to know nothing among them, but Christ Jesus, and him crucified. And in 1 Cor. 2, 3, 4. I was among you in weakness and in fear, and in much trouble: neither stood my word and my preaching in the enticing speech of man's wisdom, but in plain evidence of the Spirit and of power, that your Faith should not be in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. Seeing therefore it hath pleased God to give us a taste, and to leave as it were the prints and footsteppes of all learning and Arts in the world, insomuch that no form of reasoning, no ornament of speaking, no gift of persuading is read in any profane author but the same is found in the Scripture, as in a plentiful storehouse: yea, with far greater grace and excellency then anywhere else; let us acknowledge the majesty of the word, and reverently esteem of it above all other Writings.

Secondly, seeing Poetry is a good gift, to [Use 2] be revered and received for the antiquity and worthiness, it serveth to reprove those that abuse this gift, to the reproach of the Art it self, and to the dishonor of the giver. And howsoever many among the Heathen excelled in this kind, and have lighted a candle to others, yet was this Art nowhere more disgraced and disgraded from the former glory, and ancient estimation thereof, then amongst themselves. For, whereas Poetry at the first was used to express some memorable accident, and record some great work to posterity, that it might be better remembered and regarded: they turned these uses into wrong ends, & changed the truth into horrible lies. For, what are all the Poems of the Infidels & unbelieving Gentiles, but a detestable mingling of histories with Fables, of truth with lies, of deeds done with their own dreams and inventions? And whereas of old time, there was no difference between a plain story and an artificial Poem, but in the manner of penning and enditing: the one being easy and evident, the other curious and cunning, more exquisite and labored: they have set the one against the other, and opposed them as contraries; charging an history to speak the truth, all the truth, and nothing but the truth, but discharging a Poeme of this burden. They require the foundation to be some deed done indeed, and then build upon it Fables and falsehood: so that the plain song being a truth, the descant shall be a lie. Neither hath this Noble Science been abused only among the Gentiles, but the remnants of it have crept into the Schools, and defiled the pens of many Christians. We must feek to restore its ancient honor, and being a grave matrone, we must pull from her the Ornaments and deckings that do not become her. Therefore, let not young men addicted to this Art, abuse this gift, but use it to the praise of God and to the publishing of his works. Let them in their Poems show themselves Christians, and manifest themselves to differ from the unbelieving Gentiles that know not God. Let all songs and Sonets of love, or rather Lusts, all scurrilous jests and Satyricall Pamphlets, be banished from us; which are not the fault of Art, but of the Artist: not of Poetry, but of the Poet: not of the matter, but of the man. Let all invocation of strange gods, and heathenish inducing of many gods, be odious to our ears, speeches usual among many, but not seasoned with salt as they ought to be. We have liberty enough to follow the verse without wandering into such licentiousness; whereunto the Apostle directeth us, Ephes. 4, 29. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouths, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers.

Lastly, seeing the Art of Poetry is lawful [Use 3] and laudable, let us praise God and sing to him in spiritual songs penned by the Prophets, and endited by the Spirit of GOD, for the instruction and direction of the Church, not only in the book of Psalms, but in other places of the Scripture. And surely, it were a worthy and profitable labor, tending to the advancing of the glory of God, & serving for the comfort of the Church, if all the songs of prayer and praises which are found in the Law and the Prophets, were turned and tuned for the ordinary use of our assemblies, and joined to the book of Psalms, as the song of Moses, of Miriam, of Deborah, of Isaiah, of Hezekiah, of Habakkuk, of the Canticles and Lamentations, together with some others in other places to be found; that we might have plentiful matter, and perfect direction, to lift up our hearts and voices unto God upon all occasions that shall be offered unto us. Hereunto cometh the exhortation of the Apostle Paul, Col. 3, 16. Let the word of God dwell in you plentifully in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing your own selves in Psalms & Hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with a grace in your hearts to the Lord. This duty of singing Psalms is not proper to the Church and the public assemblies of the Church, but an exercise of our Religion to be used publicly & privately, whether we would give thanks for some deliverance, or crave forgiveness of sins, or desire restoring of health, or crave the graces of God's Spirit, which we want. True it is, there are many abuses of this part of God's service (as also in the rest) yea even in singing y^e Psalms of David, 1 Cor. 14, 15, 26. as using of an unknown tongue without understanding, the spending of too much time, shutting out thereby the preaching of the word, and hindering other exercises of our Religion: as we see it usual in the Church of Rome, where the chanting of their Mattins and Masses hath iustled out the publishing of the Doctrine of the Gospel, making the deed done, to be meritorious, available for the forgiveness of sins, singing many sinful and superstitious things touching the intercession of Saints and such trumpery, bringing in their broken Music, that nothing can be understood anymore, thē if it were in a strange tongue, & an unknown language; whereas all things should be done to edifying in the Church of God.

Notwithstanding all these abuses, we must maintain the right and holy use of singing in the Church, and in our houses, which is an exercise excellent in it self, acceptable to God, profitable to our selves, and those that hear us. The Apostle exhorteth the Ephesians, Not to be drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but to be filled with the Spirit, speaking unto themselves in Psalms and Hymns, and spiritual songs, making melody to the Lord in their hearts. Ephe. 5, 18, 19. Likewise the Apostle James, chap. 5, 13. Is any among you afflicted? Let him pray. Is any merry let him sing Psalms. This was the practice of Paul and Silas, while they were in prison, They prayed at midnight, and sing Psalms unto God. Let us follow these examples of godly men, and take up this exercise better then we have done, being a notable gift of God: which duty, albeit commanded by precept, and commended by example, is greatly decayed in all places, and among all estates of men; instead whereof, profane songs and beastly Ballads are come in places, filling and defiling all shops, houses, and meetings, iustling out the other, to the decay of Religion, to the disgrace of the Psalms, to the corrupting of youth, to the contempt of the word, and to the dishonor of God.

[They that spake in Proverbs, say: Come to Heshbon, let the City of Sihon be built and repaired, &c.] The end of this Song, made of the people of GOD, was to keep a perpetual memory of the victories that God gave to the Israelites, and to teach the posterity to come, how they came to be owners and possessours of these Citiss. We learn from hence, That it is the duty of the faithful to remember and publish the works of God, whereof we are partakers or witnesses. Whensoever GOD showeth any of his works of mercy or judgment, toward our selves or others, toward soul or body, we must not hide them and bury them in forgetfulness, but spread them abroad, and make them known to others. This appeareth in sundry places of the word of God. The Prophet teacheth this duty, Psalm. 105, 1, 2. Praise the Lord, & call upon his Name, declare his works among the people: Sing unto him, sing praise unto him, and talk of all his wondrous works. And Psal. 107, 8. Let them confess before the Lord his loving kindness, and his wonderful works among the sons of men. So likewise Psalm. 111, 2, 3. The works of the Lord are great and ought to be sought of all them that love them: his work is glorious and beautiful, and his righteousness endureth forever. So Psal. 66, 16, 5, he provoketh all men to hear what God hath done for him, Come and hearken, all ye that fear God, and I will tell you what he hath done to my soul: and in the same Psalm he reproveth the dullness of men, that are cold in the consideration of the works of God, Come and behold the works of God, he is terrible in his doing toward the sons of men. When the Shepherds had found the word of the Angel true, and seen the Babe laid in the Cratch, They published abroad the thing that was told them of that child, to the great wondering of all those that heard it. And when the man, out of whom a legion of devils was departed, besought Christ that he might tarry with him: Jesus sent him away, saying; Return into thine own house, and show what great things God hath done to thee; so he went his way, and preached throughout all the City, what great things Jesus had done unto him. When Paul and Barnabas returned to Antioch, from whence they had been commended to the grace of God, to the work which they had fulfilled, having gathered together the Church, They rehearsed all the things that God had done by them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles. Acts 14, 27. The practice of this duty, Christ commanded to the man that he had dispossessed, Mark. 5, 19, 20. Go thy way home to thy friends, & show thē what great things the Lord hath done unto thee, & how he hath had compassion on thee: so he departed, and began to publish in Decapolis, what great things Jesus had done unto him, and all men did marvel. All which precepts and examples teach us, that it is not enough to have received God's benefits, and to be mindful of them our selves, but also we are bound to make others according to our places to profit thereby, and to praise God for them, agreeable to the words of Peter and John to the council, We cannot but speak the things which we have seen & heard. Acts 4, 20.

The Reasons of this Doctrine are diverse, [Reason 1] whether we consider God, or our selves, or the faithful with whom we live. First, in respect of God, inasmuch as it standeth us all vpō, to set forth his glory, with all our strength and might. This is the chief and principal end, that we must aim at in all our ways, to seek to gain glory to his great Name, according to that general precept of the Apostle, Whether ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. So when God doth make known to us the works of his own right hand, this must be one motive to stir us up to spread them abroad, that thereby his Name may be glorified, and his saving health published among all Nations, as we see the practice in the Apostles.

Secondly, in respect of our selves. For this is a notable sign and token of a true and lively faith, that we believe the works of God, and lay them up deeply in our hearts, when we hide them not under a bushel, nor cover them in the ashes, but lift up our voice, as a Trumpet, to declare to others what our selves have learned. This the Prophet testifieth in his own practice, I will walk before the Lord in the Land of the living, I believed, and therefore did I speak. Psalm. 116, verses 9, 10. This is not peculiar to the Prophet only, to testify his faith by the words of his mouth, but is made general and common to others by the Apostle, Because we have the same spirit of Faith, according as it is written, I believed and therefore I have spoken: we also believe, and therefore speak. Such as do not believe the words and works of God, can never be fit instruments to give notice of them to others: but such as do in heart believe them, cannot but with y^e tongue confess them, thereby to assure their own hearts, and to confirm their own faith more and more.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, we must have respect to others. For as Christ speaketh to Peter, when thou art converted strengthen thy brethren: so when we believe the works of God, we must labor to bring all other to a sound faith and right judgment. It is our duty to hunger and thirst after the salvation of others: and being called to the profession, we must toll the bell to others. There is no man that hath been truly acquainted with the works of God, and hath in conscience been convinced of the undoubted truth thereof, but ought to be as a public Cryer, and as the Lord's Herald to blaze them and publish them abroad for the good of others. This is the reason that moved the Prophet David to make such often & so many protestations, to speak of all his wondrous works, to tell his marvelous works, to publish the praises of the Lord & his great power.

This is the reason that Peter immediately after his deliverance out of prison came unto Mary, where many were gathered together in prayer to entreat the Lord for the enlarging of his liberty, saying unto them, Go show these things unto James, and the rest of the Brethren. Acts 12, •7. So then, whether we do consider that it is required of us to seek the glory of God, to testify the assurance of our Faith, or to win our brethren; we must acknowledge that it is a special duty laid upon us to publish the works of God, whereof any of us be witnesses, of the truth whereof we are convinced. Indeed Christ charged the Leaper not to publish and spread abroad the miraculous work of his cleansing: but this was to correct the perverse judgment of the people, who regarded more to see his miracles, then to hear his doctrine, and that he might have the greater liberty to teach from the persecutions of the Pharisees. Mar. 1, 45.

[Use 1] Now let us proceed to the uses of this Doctrine. First, it teacheth that we must not slander and discredit any of his works, but say with the sorcerers, This is the finger of GOD, Exod. 8, 19. When the Pharisees heard that Christ cast out the devils by the power of his deity, they back-bited and blasphemed the works of God maliciously, saying, This man casteth out devils no otherwise but thorough Belzebub the Prince of devils. Matth. 12, 24. & 28, 12, 13. So the watchmen set to keep the sepulcher of Christ sure, shown unto the high Priests all the things that were done; who took wicked counsel, and gave large money unto the soldiers to spread abroad that his disciples came by night, & stole him away while they slept. Likewise, when the holy Ghost fell upon the Apostles, that they began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance, they mocked and slandered the work of God, saying, These are full of new wine, Acts 2, 13. so that Peter justified as well the Apostles of Christ, as the miracle of God. In like manner are we to do in like cases: when an evil name is brought upon the works of God's election or reprobation, upon y^e works of his providence, and protection of his people, we must stand forth to give glory to God and to stop the mouth of iniquity when it is opened against heaven. For if a man be commanded to open his mouth in the cause of the dumb, much more in the cause of God. It is one kind of taking the name of God in vain, to hold our peace when any reason & dispute against God's works. If we deny him any way before men, Christ Jesus will deny us before his Father. We must therefore open our mouths in defense of God and his works, & put the obstinate gainsaiers to silence, & wipe away the slanderous reports raised of them, lest others receive hurt thereby, and to the end God may have the glory and praise of his own work. And albeit we do not always conceive the right cause and reason of them, let us not deride but admire them with the Apostle, Rom. 11, 33. O the deepness of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out? If a man should take upon him to judge those that are out of his liberty, and over whom he hath no authority, and to pronounce sentence upon their doings, would a worldly man think well of this presumption? But it is less wisdom, and greater p^re^sumption, to take upon us to rule God, and to give him his lesson, and to enter into judgment of his works. Therefore Elihu wisely teacheth in the book of Job this point; Who hath appointed unto him his way? Or who can say, Thou hast done wickedly? Remember that thou magnify his works, which men behold. Job 36, 23, 24.

Secondly, it is required of us to be diligent [Use 2] markers and observers of the works of God's providence. For how shall he report them & remember them to others, that is not careful to muse upon them, and to mark them himself? Or how shall he open his mouth to declare them, that shutteth his eyes lest he should see them, and stoppeth his cares lest he should hear of them? It standeth us therefore greatly upon, wisely to obs^rue the works of God, and suffer nothing to pass from us, nothing by us, without making profit of it to our selves, & bringing it to the use of others. This wisdom Eliphaz one of the three friends of Job teacheth, having shown that the ungodly shall not escape unpunished, but that God will find them out in their hypocrisy, he addeth, Job 5, 27. Loe, thus have we inquired of it, and so it is, hear this, and know it for thyself. This we are all to mark by continual experience, how God dealeth with the godly, sometimes chastening them, sometimes blessing them, never forsaking them, albeit sometimes leaving them for a season, yet in the end returning in mercy unto them.

Likewise, how he dealeth towards the wicked, thereby to avoid their steps, consider that though they flourish for a time, it is but the pleasure of sin for a season that they enjoy: and always God's judgment in this life arresteth some, and maketh them fearful examples unto others. Thus did the Prophet ponder in his heart the ways and works of God, and profited thereby to his great comfort: as we see, Psal. 37, 35.36. I have seen the wicked strong, and spreading himself like a green Baytree, yet he passed away, and loe he was gone, and I sought him, but he could not be found. Mark the upright man, and behold the just, for the end of that man is peace; but the transgressors shall be destroyed together, and the end of the wicked shall be cut off. And if we will give our hearts to this meditation on the works of God's providēce, ruling the world, and disposing all things, we shall see how he always meeteth with the ungodly, though they dignity deep to hide their counsels, and dive down unto the depth and bottom of their devices, yet the hand of the Lord doth find them out, and bringeth to judgment every secret work. So if we shall weigh with wisdom his works toward his own servants, as he doth love them with an everlasting love, so is he always gracious unto them, and maketh all things fall out to further their salvation. This the Wiseman teacheth by his experience, Eccles. 8, 11, 12, 13.

[Use 3] Lastly, let all Fathers of families teach the works of God's mercy, and the works of his judgments, according as they see them to be offered unto them. For to whom should we rather publish them then to our posterity, & the children that come out of our loins? when a Father beholdeth the Lord punishing the ungodly, and taking vengeance on the contemners of his word, the blasphemers of his name, the profaners of his Sabbaths, the uncleanness of adulterers, the beastliness of drunkards, the oppression of userers, the perjury of false witnesses, and the cruelty of merciless dealers: should he suffer such public examples to die, and these works of God to sleep in the dust? Nay, seeing God doth single out some, and maketh them examples & admonitions unto others, we ought to whet them upon our children and servants, & teach them thereby to serve the Lord, and to hate those heinous and horrible sins that provoke such great and grievous judgments.

Abraham is commended by the Spirit of God, for this care and conscience of his duty, when he should behold the woeful destructi- of Sodom and Gomorrhah, Genes. 18.19. I know him that he will command his sons, and his household after him that they keep the way of the Lord, to do righteousness and judgment, that the Lord may bring upon Abraham, that he hath spoken unto him. This the Prophet urgeth, Psal. 78, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. So the Prophet Joel, or rather the Lord by the Prophet, threatening a grievous plague of dearth and famine, that the field should be wasted, the corn destroyed, the new wine dried up, the oil decayed, and the husbandmen howl, because the harvest of the field should perish, saith, Joel 1, 2, •. Hear •e this. O Elders, and hearken ye all inhabitants of the land, whether such a thing hath been in your days, or yet in the dayers of your Fathers. Tel you your children of it, and let your children show it to their children, and their children to another generation. Thus we see how God requireth of us a diligent consideration of his judgments, seeing he smiteth one to admonish another: we must not account these strokes only as punishments upon the offenders, but as examples offered for the amendment and repentance of others, as our Savior taught his disciples of those that were murdered by Pilate, and of those were slain by the fall of a tower, Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish, Luke 13, 1, 2, 3, 4.

[Verse 28. For a fire is gone out of Heshbon, and a flame from the City of Sihon, and hath consumed Har of the Moabites, &c.] When war is once begun and set on foot, it is not so easily laid down, neither is the thirst of ambition in a proud man so easily quenched. Therefore this song decla•eth, that when Sihon had assaulted and taken Heshbon, he rested not there but proceeded farther, and led his army against the villages adjoining, dealing with them as he had done with the inhabitants of Heshbon. Thus we see the people bordering upon the Heshbonites, are touched with their ruin, and companions with them in their adue•sity: as when a mighty tree falleth, it throweth down with it the lesser & lower shrubs. Now Moses in this borrowed speech, setteth forth the misery brought upon the Moabites, which like a violent and vehement fire consumeth wheresoever it lighteth. Mark therefore in this place the comparison & similitude which the Spirit of God useth, to express the rage of war, wasting far and near, as a mighty flame of fire. We learn from hence this Doctrine, That great is the misery and mischief of war, whereby blood is shed, Nations are spoiled, Countries are ruined, Cities are disp•pled, Murder is committed, and the image of God defaced. And albeit the life be spared, yet liberty is restrained, and oftentimes death is better than b•ndage, and the sword not so bitter as captivity, even to become slaves to them, who are slaves to Satan. This we see expressed in the war of Chedarlaomer, Genes. 14, 5, 6, 7. who coming to chasten the rebellion of Sodom, and other Cities in the plain, he seized upon the people bordering, so that they tasted the bitterness of the sword, being neighbors to the Nations offending against him. This Moses expresseth, Deut. 28, 50, 51, describing the fierceness of the enemies, and the plague of wars; saying, They shall not regard the person of the old, nor have compassion of the young, they shall eat the fruit of thy Cattle, they shall consume the profit of thy land, they shall besiege thee within thy walls, they shall drive thee to eat thy children, the fruit of thy body, during the siege and streightnesse where-with they shall compass thee in thy Cities. Hereunto that Proverb guideth us, used by the King of Israel against such as boasted before the victory, Let not him that girdeth his harness, boast himself, as he that putteth it off. Hence it is, that we read, how thousands and ten thousands are consumed in battle, which devoureth one as well as another, to teach us the casualty and calamity of war.

[Reason 1] The Reasons are not to be forgotten, that we may the better settle this Doctrine in our hearts. First, it is threatened as an heavy plague and fearful judgment to be brought upon that people that set their faces against God, and walk stubbornly in the breach of his commandments. It is one of the arrows of God, which he hath in his quiver, & reserveth to shoot against all the contemners of his Statutes; he will send upon them famine to punish them, evil beasts to spoil them, the pestilence to consume them, & blood to pass through them. This is that which the Lord threateneth, Levite. 26, 25, 31. I will send a sword upon you that shall avenge the quarrel of my Covenant, and when you are gathered in your Cities, I will send the pestilence among you, and ye shall be delivered into the hand of the enemy, & I will make your Cities desolate. If then God proclaim open war against such as bear themselves stoutly and stubbornly against him, if he be at utter defiance with them that despite and despise him, if he denounce against those the day of battle, as a day of wrath, a day of trouble and heaviness, a day of destruction and desolation, a day of obscurity and darkness, a day of clouds and blackness, a day of the Trumpet and alarm against the strong Cities, against the high Towers, and against mighty warriors that their blood shall be poured out as dust, & their flesh made as the dung; it must necessarily follow, that the time of war is the time of woe, yea, of weeping and wailing, and great lamentation of young and old, rich & poor, women and children, babes and sucklings.

[Reason 2] Secondly, great is the benefit of peace, and many are the blessings that come with it and ensue after it. If then peace be a great benefit, then must war needs be acknowledged to be a great want, and a fearful judgment. The peace of a State, is as the health of a body of strong constitution: therefore war is a dangerous disease in anybody political, whē it cannot be purged and washed without blood. We see how Moses among the blessings that shall come upon Israel and overtake thē, reckoneth up peace in their borders, I will send peace in the Land, and ye shall sleep, & none shall make you afraid, and the sword shall not go through your Land. If there be but a iarie in a private house, or a strong faction in any society, it threateneth the ruin thereof. If an house or City be divided against it self, it cannot stand. If a kingdom be divided against it self, it is brought to naught. But when God giveth peace and rest to his Church, many blessings come with it and great contentment on all sides, and in all estates; especially the free liberty of the Gospel with the preaching and professing of it, which we should account as the life of our lives. Seeing therefore, on the one side, War is the just wages of great sins; and on the other side, peace bringeth with it many blessings of all sorts, spiritual and temporal, we conclude, that many are the miseries of war.

The uses are in the next place to be thought upon, and application •o be made of this Doctrine. [Use 1] First, let us pray earnestly to God, and call upon him faithfully, to keep from us both wars, and the rumors of wars, and continue peace in our borders, with the free & public use of the Gospel, to us and to our posterities: that there may not be the voice of lamentation lifted up in our streets, weeping & mourning, and great howling, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they were not. Mat. 2, 18. Ier. 31, 15. We live in a plentiful and well-peopled Land, no Nation under heaven is more populous. This is a blessing of God, as Moses declareth, Levite. 26, 9. Likewise Proverbs 14, 28: Yet many times we repine at his mercy, we think the Land will be too little for us, and that we shall not be able to live one for another. He can make room enough for us, if he once send y^e bright weapons of war, and the glistering sword of the bloody enemy among us. He can make fewer of us and turn our Land into briars & thorns, and make it a place of Salt-pits and Nettles. Then shall a man nourish a young Cow and two Sheep: and for the abundance of Milk that they shall give, he shall eat Butter. The number of men shall then be so small, tha^a a few beasts shall be sufficient to nourish the remnant abundantly. Then shall seven women take hold of one man, saying: We will eat our own bread, and will wear our own garments, only let us be called by thy name, and take away our reproach. Let us therefore in this great increase of the land and store of people, acknowledge his mercy, let us rejoyce in the society one of another, and pray that we taste not the bitterness of war, & that there be no slaying with y^e sword, no shedding of blood, no carrying into captivity. This the Prophet teacheth, Ps. 144, desiring God to continue his benefits toward his people, the fruit of the womb, the filling of store-houses, the increase of sheep, & the quietness of peace, Psal. 144, 12, 13, 14, 15. That our sons being as the plants growing up in their youth, and our daughters being as the corner stones, may be the building of the temple: that our corners may be full, and our Oxen strong to labor: that there be no invasion nor going out, nor no crying in our streets: O blessed are the people that be so, yea blessed are the people whose God is the Lord. Where we see, the Prophet prayeth, and directeth us to pray, that there may be no taste of the sharpness and misery of war, nor we know the assaulting of our Cities, nor going out to warfare, that there may be no sorrow of heart, no weeping of eyes, no wringing of hands, no shrieking of voices among us. Were it not a woeful and lamentable thing, to see fire without mercy, and without quenching, consuming houses, eating up all things, and sparing nothing? How much more to see, and hear, and feel the affliction of war, when all things are in confusion and combustion? For, this is one great mischief and bitterness of war, that all things are holden to be lawful, and all men make themselves to be lawless. There is no regard of right or equity, of shame or conscience, when many times the soldiers are as hungry as wolves, as cruel as Tigers, as fierce as Lions, as merciless as Bears robbed of their whelps, which spoil in the evening, and leave not the bones until the morning. Liberty is oppressed, good men fear, evil men expect, knowing it is best fishing in troubled water; if there be any place free from tumult, at least there is none void of suspicion and free from jealousy; few then are to be trusted, and none assured; all things in confusion, violence, spoiling, blood, murders outcrying, and nothing else before our eyes, but a lamentable face of all calamities & extremities. The Prophet Zacharias, describing the golden days of a peaceable life, w^c should be given to the Israelites when they were returned from captivity, saith; Zac. 8, 4, 5. There shall yet old men and old women dwell in the streets of Jerusalem, and every man with his staff in his hand for very age; and the streets of the City shall be full of boys & girles playing in the streets thereof. Then is the mouth of the people filled with laughter, and their tongue with joy, Psal. 46, 9. When the Lord maketh wars to cease unto the end of the world, he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear, & burneth the Chariots with fire. But in the time of war, and in the day of battle, all things are turned topsie-tururý, all things lie open to sacking and pillage, to insolency of soldiers, to desire of revenge, and to most horrible accidents. Then we are constrained to see and lament the slaughter of men, the ravishing of women, the deflouring of virgins, the spoiling of goods, the robbing of houses, the taking of prisoners, the breaking of laws, y^e defacing of justice, the intermission of sowing, the innovation of estates, the subversion of realms, the desolation of countries, the violation of religion, the destruction of Cities, the effusion of blood, the suffering of famine, and sometimes the extremity of eating children, and always the overthrowing of all order and honesty. Who is able to recount & rehearse the great horror and fear, the sorrow and mourning, the weeping and lamentation, the seditions, tumults, outrages, villainies, insurrections, conspiracies, calamities, dangers, difficulties, and the miserable train of infinite miseries and maladies that war bringeth with it? No marvel therefore, if David preferred the pestilence before the sword, 2 Sam. 24, 14. desiring that he might fall into the hands of the Lord, because his mercies are great; and not fall into the hands of man, whose bowels of pity are instruments of cruelty. Let us therefore pray earnestly and fervently unto God, that we may not have experience of these troubles, nor endure the violence of this fire, and entreat him to continue a gracious God to us and to our posterities forever. This we see fruitfully and profitably practiced by the people of Israel, when the Lord for their idolatry threatened to deliver them no more out of the hands of their enemies, and bad them cry unto the gods which they had chosen, that they might save them in the time of their tribulation: they said unto the Lord, We have sinned: do thou unto us whatsoever please thee, only we pray thee to deliver us this day from our enemies, Judge. 10, 10, 11, 12.

Secondly, let us learn by the horror of the [Use 2] sword, and trouble of war, to be thankful for our long peace and prosperity, and pray for y^e continuance thereof among us. We may sit everyone under his Vine, and under his Fig-tree; we may rest in peace in our gardens and Orchards, reasoning of the ways, and conferring of the word of the Lord, whilst many of our neighbor-Nations are shaken and tossed with the tempest of wars, and all things round about us are in an uproar. Let us desire God to spare them, and be touched with a feeling of their sorrows. And if there be such fearefulness and devouring in the sword, let us cast off all dissensions and debates, let us cut the cords of all contention, and live peaceably as brethren one with another. Hereunto the Apostle James persuadeth, ch. 3, 15, 16. & 4, 1, 2 This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, and devilish: for where envying & strife is, there is sedition & all manner of evil work. From whence are wars and contentions among you? Are they not hence, even of your pleasures that fight in your members? Let us take heed we give no occasion of contention, nor sow the seeds of division, which in time to come may yield a comfortless crop of cares and confusions. Let us not go forth hastily to strife, lest thou know not what to do in the end thereof, when thy Neighbor hath put thee to shame. Pro. 25, 8. It is in vain to desire considerations and conditions of peace, when we have laid the foundations of war: like as the bow being drawn, and the Arrow discharged, it is too late to wish it may do no hurt where it falleth. For after that the coals of contention be once kindled, there is no long expectation for the fire to flame, and burn amaine with a swift course, even as when a cloud is gathered to his thickness, the storm of rain that hath been long in breeding, is ready to fall and disperse it self. It belongeth to all wisemen to foresee a mischief before it happeneth, & it is the reward of men unhappy to lament it when it is once felt. The counsel is without fruit that cometh after the fact; it is too late to apply the remedy when the evil is happened. The soldier serveth to no turn, that beginneth to march when the battle is done. The Medicine that is ministered out of time, worketh not to the benefit of the Patient. It is too dangerous to broach a vessel of poison, and have the virtue of the Antidote or counter-poison uncertain, or far to seek. A smoke suffered long to continue, conceiveth a spark, a spark of fire let alone ingendreth a flame, and the flame burneth without mercy and measure. Let us therefore resist the first beginnings as it were the first motions of malice and strife. Small things increase by concord, great things fall and come to ruin by discord and disunion. We must therefore desire peace, and follow after it albeit it seem to fly from us, let us pursue it with all our strength vnt^l we overtake it & bring it home as a blessing into our own houses and habitations: as a man of war concludeth, 2 Sam. 2, 26. Shall the sword devour forever? knowest thou not that it will be bitterness in the latter end? how long then shall it be ere you bid the people return from following their brethren? As if he should say, If we shall join army against army, and forces against forces, we shall fall down on every side, one brother shall devour and destroy another without pity and compassion. This serveth to reprove those that provoke to battell without cause, and delight in war as in a matter of sport and play, who delight to shed blood as water. Thus speaketh Abner Captain of the host, 2 Sam. 2, 14. Let the young men now rise and play before us. Whereby we see, that murder is made as a game & pastime to laugh at. Let every man live contented with his own estate. Great is the benefit of contentation. Beware of ambition and aspiring thoughts. The power of many rising suddenly to height and Soueraignty, taketh end with a ruin more sudden. They are like to a tree that groweth till he cometh to his height, and then is plucked up by the roots in a moment. The heavy stone commonly ouerwhelmeth it self with his own weight. Whosoever coveteth the fruit, and never considereth the height of the tree whereon it groweth, let him take heed that whiles he laboreth to climb to the top, he fall not with y^e boughs which he clasps and embraceth with both his arms. It is the part and property of a wise man, to consider always his own estate: whereas the vain ambitious man liveth for the most part in the remembrance & contemplation of those things which make him to forget himself. Let us therefore all labor in our places to quench this thirst, before it do grow to be as a dropsy that can never be cured, especially it standeth great men of high callings upon (even y^e greatest men of highest callings in hand) to look to this swelling of the heart (an evil whereunto they above all other are most inclined) that they lift not up their hearts against their Brethren, neither forget that they are mortal and frail men.

Lastly, seeing the sword respecteth no person, neither old nor young, neither learned nor [Use 3] unlearned, but destroyeth father and son, maketh the wise widow, and the child fatherless; it is our parts when we see such judgments present or imminent, to humble our selves unto God, to desire him to remove the fearful noise and rumor of war: and in the mean season, to pray that we may use our peace aright, lest he bend his Bow, and shoot his Arrows, and draw his glittering sword upon us. We see how Hezekiah when he saw the host of the King of Ashur, sought y^e Lord carefully, and prayed unto him to fight their battles, 2 Chro. 32, 20. & 20, 3. so Jehoshaphat when a great multitude banding themselves together, came against him, set himself to seek the Lord, reconciled himself to him, asked counsel of him, & proclaimed a Fast throughout all Judah. Thus the Prophet, Lam. 5, 20. considering that the strong men were trodden down, and the enemy rejoiced at their trouble, prayeth unto God, because the sword devoured without, and the people were led into captivity; Behold (O Lord) how I am troubled: my bowels swell, mine heart is turned within me: for I am full of heaviness, the sword spoileth abroad as death doth at home. We live (as yet) in great plenty and prosperity, we enjoy life and liberty, we sleep quietly in our beds, and rest in our houses in peace; we hear not the sound of the trumpet, the clattering of armor, the fury of the enemy, the noise of gunshot, the cry of the wounded; we see not the blood of the slain on the right hand, and on the left hand; we know not what the misery of slavery and slaughter meaneth; we do not behold our Cities besieged, our Countries wasted, our Towns entrenched, our walls better'd, our houses fired & consumed; blessed be the great name of our most gracious God therefore, for evermore. Let us then take heed that we abuse not these mercies and good things of Almighty GOD, lest he take them away from us in his fierce wrath and indignation. O, that there were in us wise hearts to consider these things, whilst we dwell safely in these our houses and habitations, and before the enemy approacheth ne•e unto us, and casteth a trench about us. But if we provoke God and make war with him, how can we have peace with men? how can we look to live in safety any longer with our wives and children? This our Savior hath set down, and with •ears taught the Jews long before their destruction came upon them. For when he came near and beheld the City, he wept for it, and passionately said, Luk. 19, 41, 42, 43, 44. O, if thou haddest even known at the least in this day, those things which belong unto thy peace! But now are they hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, & keep thee in on every side, and shall make thee even with the ground, and thy children which are in thee: and they shall not leave thee a stone upon a stone, because thou knowest not that season of thy visitation. Let us apply these things unto our selves, and if we desire to live peaceably with men, let us first seek to be at peace with God; and if we would be reconciled to our brother, let us in the first place be reconciled to our God, and then all things shall speak peace unto us.

[Verse 29. Woe be to thee Moab: O people of Chemosh, thou art undone: he hath delivered his sons which escaped, and his daughters into captivity to Sihon king of the Amorites.] Here the Poet rhetorically turneth his speech to the Moabites, describing their foolish confidence in their dumb Idoll'es, Psal. 115, 4, 5. Which are the work of men's hands, which have eyes and see not, ears and hear not, they have a mouth and speak not, noses and smell not, hands & touch not, feet and walk not, neither make they a sound with their throat; they that make them are like unto thē and so are all they that trust in them. The Nations of the Gentiles had multitudes of gods, and every Nation his several Idol-go•: As Chemosh was the idol of the Moabites, Baal of the Chaldeans, Ashteroth of the Sidonians, Moloch of the Ammonites, Rimmon of y^e Syrians, Dagon of the Philistines. These are false gods, and had the godhead or divine nature falsely ascribed unto them, who were not able to save such as did worship them, as the author of this song here declareth, He hath delivered his sons and daughters to captivity, and was not able to deliver them out of the hands of Sihon king of the Amorites. For as the Israelites cried for fire to come from heaven from morning to noon, O Baal hear us: so no doubt did y^e Moabites for deliverance from their enemies, cal to their idol Chemosh, O Chemosh hear us, but there was no voice, nor any to answer, so that they fell into the hands of the Amorites, and received no profit or benefit by their idol service. Here then we see, how the idolatrous Moabites, worshipping a false god, and trusting in their great Idol, are defeated and destroyed. Hence we learn, That Idolaters lie open to judgment. The worshipping of Images, howsoever it be coloured with false reasons, is the true cause of God's judgments. We see here how the Moabites were rooted out of their Towns and Cities for this sin. Hitherto come the threatenings of the Prophets against the Nations by Isaiah, chap. 46, 1, 2. and Ier. 46 & 44, 7, 8. for their idolatry. We see in Judge. 2, 11. when Israel committed idolatry, & began to cleave to strange gods, and forsook the Lord God of their fathers, God sold them into the hands of their enemies, so that they could no longer stand before them. This was the destruction of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, that made Israel to sin: and of Jehu, who set up idolatry after he had destroyed it. This was the cause that the wrath of God brake in upon the Israelites, when they had erected the golden Calf, which sin was revenged with a grievous and horrible slaughter. Hereunto also the Prophet hath relation, Psal. 106, 34, 35. They destroyed not the people as the Lord had commanded them, but were mingled amongst the heathen, and learned their works, and served their Idols, which were their ruin. Thus we see, how idolatry turneth to the destruction of the idolater.

The Reasons follow. First, God is the husband [Reason 1] of his Church, and can no more abide to have his honor and worship communicated to any other, then the husband any partner or fellow in his love. Prov. 6, 35. •ho cannot bear the sight of any ransom, neither will he consent, though thou augment the gifts. Idolatry therefore is spiritual whoredom, and God is a jealous God of his honor and glory, and will not suffer the same to be given to any other, Isaiah 42 8. Exod. 20, 5. This is notably declared, and worthily expressed by the Prophet Hosea, where the idolatry of the Israelites is resembled to the adulterous and whorish woman, that doateth upon her lovers, that forsaketh the guide of her youth, and forgetteth the covenant of her God: Their mother (saith y^e Lord by his Prophet) hath played the Harlot, she that conceived them hath done shamefully, &c. As then God is the husband of his Church, so our spiritual worship is as a certain marriage of our souls consecrated unto the Lord: & therefore all false and forged worship is spiritual whoredom and adultery toward him. To this purpose speaketh Hosea, ch, 2, 19, 20. I will marry thee unto me forever: yea, I will marry thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, &c. Thus also the Prophet Jeremiah speaketh, ch. 2, 2. Thus saith the Lord, I remember thee with the kindness of thy youth, and the love of thy Marriage, when thou wentest after me in the wilderness in a Land that was not sown.

Secondly, Idols are the works of men's [Reason 2] hands, whether they be of Silver or Golde, they are the work of the Founder: or whether they be carved or graven in stone or timber, they are the hand of the workman: or whether they be wrought in blew silk, or purple, Jeremiah 10, 9. All things are made by cunning men. Hereupon it followeth, that they that depend upon them, and seek help of them, do seek help of flesh, and do make stocks and stones their god, and therefore they cannot prosper, but shall be confounded. This the Prophet Hosea testifieth, chap. 8.8, 9. Israel is devoured, now shall they be amongst the Gentiles as a vessel wherein is no pleasure: for they are gone but to Ashur, they are as a wild Ass alone by himself, Ephraim hath hired lovers.

The Uses are in the last place to be observed. [Use 1] First, this teacheth that the idol is vain; yea, vanity it self. Howsoever the idolater be enamored of it, and greatly dote upon it, yet it shall be a broken reed, which in stead of staying him that leaneth upon it, breaketh in his hand, and the shiuers thereof serve to wound him that leaneth thereon. For if it could deliver any, it should save them th^t have their hope and confidence in it. But such are deceived and deluded to their destruction. This the Prophet Ier. 3, 23, 24. & 10, 15. witnesseth at large in sundry places, Truly the hope of the hills is but vain, nor the multitude of mountains, but in the Lord our God is the health of Israel: for confusion hath devoured our fathers labor, &c. Hereunto cometh that saying, Isaiah 44, 9, 10. All they that make an image are vanity, and their delectable things shall nothing profit: and they are their own witnesses that they see not, nor know, therefore they shall be confounded who have made a god, or molten an Image that is profitable for nothing. They are not therefore lay-men's books, neither have any profitable use, but an abominable abuse, being vanity and the work of errors, in the time of their visitation they shall perish. The Assyrians were famous, or rather infamous for Idols, and great boasters of thē; yet the Prophet showeth they should come to confusion: hereupon the use is inferred, what profiteth the Image? For the maker thereof hath made it an Image and a teacher of lies, though he that made it trust therein, when he maketh dumb Idols: woe unto him that saith to the wood, Awake; and to the dumb stone, Arise up, it shall teach thee: behold, it is laid over with gold and silver, and yet there is no breath in it. Thus the vanity of Idols is set out by the destruction of the Idolaters.

[Use 2] Secondly, let them labor to see their own blindness. It is a great judgment of God upon thousands and ten thousands in the world, that worship the works of men's hands, and yet think themselves wise. We see also the preposterous and disordred desire of the children, to follow the idolatrous ways of their parents: whereupon it cometh to pass, that they excuse their sin by the example of their parents; and because they were borne in it, they are resolute to die in it, never examining how their religion standeth with consent of the Scriptures. Thus we see, that all idolaters are blind, and because they say they see therefore their sin remaineth. This the Prophet teacheth, Isaiah 42, 17, 18, 19. They shall be turned back, they shall be greatly ashamed that trust in graven Images, and say to the molten Images, Ye are our gods. Hear ye deaf, and ye blind regard that ye may see. Who is blind, but my servant? or deaf, as the messenger that I sent? Who is blind as the perfect, and blind as the Lord's servant? If therefore we would not grope in ignorance, as the blindeman that gropeth in the dark, let us fly Idolatry, and keep our selves from Idols.

Lastly, let us bless and praise the name of [Use 3] God, whē he delivereth his people from idolatry, to serve him purely and sincerely. Let us ever be mindful of his mercy, and walk as a thankful people redeemed out of so great a thralldom. This sacrifice of praise we see required in the Prophet: for having set down the folly & vanity of Idolaters, who cut down a Tree, warm themselves with part thereof, roast their meat with another, and with a third part make a god and worship it make it an Idol, and bow unto it, pray unto it and say Deliver me, for thou art my God: he acknowledgeth God's great mercy in forgiving these sins of the people, Isaiah 44, 21, 22, 23, Thou art my servant, O Israel forget me not: I have put away thy transgressions like a cloud, and thy sin as a mist, &c. Behold the beastliness and brutishness of these god-makers, not much unlike y^e Romish idolaters, who knead their dough, & of one part they make bread, and a god of the other. If this be the dot•ge of idolaters, we have great cause offered unto us, to magnify the mercy of God toward us, that hath freed us from such devilish devices of the false worship of God. He hath restored to us the true worship of God according to his holy word, he hath rooted out the Idols that were set up to be adored, he hath given us the Scriptures in our mother tongue, he hath free•d us from the burden and bondage of the Popes Decrees and Decretals, he hath pulled down the great idol of the Mass, and hath abolished the manifold heresies and corruptions of false Doctrine. What shall we now render to the Lord for all these tokens and testimonies of his love toward us, but take up the cup of salvation, and praise with tongue and heart the name of God, acknowledging his only goodness in delivering us from the bondage of Idolatry; and laboring to bring forth y^e fruits of his Gospel, to his glory, and our own comfort in Christ Jesus.

32 And Moses sent to search out Iaazer, and they took the Towns belonging thereto, and rooted out the Amorites that were there.

33 And they turned and went up the way toward Bashan: and Og the King of Bashan came out against them, he and all his people to fight at Edrei.

34 Then the Lord said unto Moses, Fear him not, for I have delivered him into thine hand, and all his people, and his Land: & thou shalt do unto him as thou didst unto Sihon the King of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon.

35 They smote him therefore, and his Sons, and all his people, even until there was none left him: so they inherited his Land.

Hitherto we have spoken of the first Enemy overcome by the Israelites, to wit, Sihon King of the Amorites: the second enemy w^c they subdued is Og the King of Bashan, an enemy more mighty and terrible then the former. For he was one of the race and posterity of the gyants, at whose sight the scouters and espials sent out to serch the land were afraid, and despaired of inhabiting and inheriting of the land, and weakened the hearts & hands of the people as appeareth in the 13. chapter of this book, We came into the Land whither thou hast sent us, and surely it floweth with milk and honey: nevertheless, the people be strong that dwell in the Land, and the Cities are walled & exceeding great: and moreover we saw the sons of Anak there. And more plainly and particularly Moses describeth this King, Deuter. 3, 11. Only Og the king of Bashan remained of the remnant of the Giants, whose bed was a bed of Iron: is it not at Rabbah among the children of Ammon? The length thereof is nine cubits, and four cubits the breadth thereof, after the cubit of a man.

Now the more mighty and monstrous t^{is} Giant was, the greater occasion had the Israelites to ascribe the victory to God, and to give him the glory alone. And the Prophet singleth out these two enemies by name, Deu. 29, 7. Psal. 135, 11. & 136, 19, 20. Sihon the King of the Amorites, and Og the king of Bashan, above all other kings, and in the meditation of God's mercy delivering them into their hands, stirreth up the people to praise y^e name of God: which showeth that they were enemies greatly to be feared, and such as brought great terror unto the Israelites, yet no power can prevail ag^{inst} God, There is no counsel, nor wisdom, nor understanding, nor strength against the Lord. The horse is prepared against the day of battle, but salvation is of the Lord. The land of Bashan was a fertile & fruitful soil, commended in sundry places of the Scripture: it was a goodly mountain abounding with rank and rich pastures, yielding cattle of great bone and bigness, and flourishing with sundry commodities, which kindled a desire in the two Tribes and the half, to have it given them in possession. Wherefore Moses commending the bountifulness of God toward his people, Deut. 32, 14. showeth, that he gave them butter of Kine, and milk of Sheep, with fat of the Lambes and Rams fed in Bashan. And David to express the lustinesse and loftiness, the pride and presumption of his enemies, resembleth them to y^e mighty bulls of Bashan, fed to the full in most fruitful pastures. Moses knowing the goodness of the soil, the strength of the Cities, and the malice of the enemies, sendeth out his scouts and espials, to search out the situation of the places, and the purposes of the persons that inhabited therein; and having taken Iazer, he marched toward this Bashan whereof we speak. The king advertised of the matter, and understanding the drift and design of the Israelites, cometh forth to meet them, and to hinder their approach to his Towns and Dominions, thinking his safety to consist only in his weapons, forgetting that all mortal things are mutable, and the end of war uncertain, and providing more for revenge, then for his own defense. Hereupon Moses before he made an head against the enemy (as it should seem) made a stand to know the will of God, whether he should fight with them in y^e place, and whether God would deliver them into their hands. The answer of God showeth, that they were greatly afraid, and stood in need of comfort: wherein consider, first the Commandment of GOD, Fear not your enemies: Secondly, the reason rendered to encourage thē, I will deliver all your enemies into your hands: which is amplified by a like example, and by the former experience which they had of the mercy of God in the destruction of Sihon king of the Amorites. After this comfort and raising up of their hearts that began to shrink, they joined battle, they fought with the king of Bashan, they overcame their enemies, and put them all, men, women, and children to the sword, and possessed his Land as he did the Land of the Amorites. Thus God gave them a joyful victory, who had before determined the destruction of Og, even while the giant thought nothing of the hand of God against him: and who is it that knoweth what God intendeth against him in heaven, while he offendeth him, and sinneth against him on the earth? The Lord that sitteth in Heaven, seeth the wickedness of man's heart abiding on Earth.

[Verse 33. And they turned and went up the way toward Bashan: and Og the King of Bashan came out against them, &c.] We see here another judgment of God upon another enemy of the Church, and the mercy of God in his overthrow, after the destruction of the former enemy. God could have brought them together, and bound them in one bundle to be cast into the fire, but they are destroyed one after another: some in the days of Moses; others are reserved for Joshua who succeeded Moses in the government of the people. We learn hereby, That the enemies of God and his Church are not consumed in a moment, but wasted and consumed in the providence of GOD by little and little. True it is, God is able to rain down fire and brimstone, snares and stormy Tempests upon them, he is able to bring them unto nothing at once with the breath of his mouth, when once the Coals of his wrath and indignation are kindled; but it is his pleasure to wast and consume them one after another: now one, and then another, that sin against him. This Moses declareth unto the people of Israel, Deut. 7, 21, 22, 23. Isaiah 9, 22. The Prophet Amos setteth down the dealing of God in the destruction of his enemies, chap. 9, 10, 11. So that God brought not all his judgments upon them at once, nor discharged the whole volley of shot against them together, but one punishment came in the neck of another, & the first was overtaken of the second, and the second of the third. The like may be said of the plagues which God brought upon Pharaoh and the rest of the Egyptians, he did not draw out his arrows, and empty his Quiuer at once, but wasted the Land, consumed the fruits, smote the cattle, and destroyed the inhabitants one after another: some were destroyed with hail; some were slain by the destroyer, others were drowned in the red Sea: these came not altogether, but as a softly fire consumed them, or as a lingering disease pined them away by little and little, until they came to utter ruin.

The Reasons remain to be considered. First, [Reason 1] God will not root them out at once, to the end, that by them he may try the faith, & exercise the patience of his servants. There are none that have received to believe, but God will have thē proved, to declare to themselves, and manifest to others, what is in their hearts. No marvel if others be oftentimes deceived in us, and are ignorant of the secrets of our souls, seeing we our selves know not thoroughly our selves, until we have ended and endured trial. For such we are indeed as we are in the time of temptation. Therefore Solomon teacheth in the Proverbs, chap. 24.10. If thou be faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small. Wherefore, it is necessary, that so long as we live in this world, we should be kept in a continual exercise of faith, of prayer, of repentance, and of obedience: as the Lord speaketh evidently in the book of Judges, chap. 2, 20. Because this people hath transgressed my covenant which I commanded their Fathers, & hath not obeyed my voice, therefore will I no more cast out before them, any of the Nations which Joshua left when he died; that through them I may prove Israel, whether they will keep the way of the Lord, to walk therein or not: So the Lord left those Nations, and drove them not out immediately, neither delivered them into the hand of Joshua.

[Reason 2] Secondly, the people of God trespass against him, so as the Lord cannot root out their enemies together, but leaveth some among them, as we saw before, the Nations were left among the Israelites, to be as snares in their paths, whips in their sides, and thorns in their eyes, because they transgressed y^e Covenant that God had made with their fathers. So the Prophet speaketh, Psal. 81, 13, 14. Oh that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways, I would soon have humbled their enemies, and turned mine hand against their adversaries. Likewise Moses, among the curses and judgments denounced against such as are disobedient to the laws of God, Leu. 26, 18, 21, 24, 28, showeth, that when he hath chastened and corrected us for our sins, yet if we go forward to despise his ordinances, & our soul abhor his laws, he will punish us seven times more, according to our sins. And if we proceed to walk stubbornly against him, he will then bring seven times more plagues upon us, & walk stubbornly against us in his anger.

The Uses of this Doctrine remain to be considered, & are not to be passed over. First, [Use 1] this teacheth, that the prosperity of the wicked, cannot assure them of the favor of God, nor secure thē from his punishments. It showeth indeed the patience and longsuffering of God toward the vessels prepared to wrath, to make them without excuse: but when they have filled up the measure of their sins, they shall know that GOD hath not forgiven or forgotten them. This the Prophet teacheth, Psalm. 50, 19, 20, 21, and 73, 6, 7, 18. When thou seest a thief thou runnest with him, & thou art partaker with the adulterers: thou givest thy mouth to evil, and with thy tongue thou forgest deceit: thou sittest and speakest against thy brother, and slanderest thy mothers son. These things thou hast done, and I held my tongue, therefore thou thoughtst that I was like thee, but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thee: O consider this, ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none that can deliver you. And in another place it is declared, that albeit the wicked be malicious, speaking wickedly, talking presumptuously, and setting their mouth despitefully against heaven; yet GOD hath set them in slippery places, and cast them down into desolation. Wherefore, whensoever we see the wicked prosper and flourish, and the glory of his house to increase, let us not conceive evil of God, as though he loved unrighteousness, or favored the sins of men, nor think that the wicked shall escape: therefore Elihu saith, Job 35, 15, 16. Although thou sayest to God, thou wilt not regard it, yet judgment is before him, trust thou in him; yet his anger shall visit the evil, and call them to an account with great extremity.

Secondly, let them not set their hearts upon [Use 2] evil, But let them seek the Lord while he may be found, let them forsake their wickedness & ungodliness, and return unto the Lord, that he may have mercy upon them, who is very ready to forgive, Isaiah 55, 6, 7. What maketh many sin against God, but a vain confidence and presumption to escape the judgment of God? What maketh them to put off the evil day, & to make a league and covenant with death, but the abuse of God's patience, who doth not presently punish them? This the wise man teacheth, Eccl. 8, 11, 13. Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the children of men is fully set in them to do evil: but it shall not go well with them, he shall be as a shadow, because he feareth not before God. Albeit therefore they seem to sin scot-free, and without punishment, yet the greater patience appeareth to be in God, the greater destruction is reserved for them. Even as whē the shadow groweth to be longest, then the light fadeth and departeth soonest, and the night approacheth nearest: so when God hath waited a long time for our conversion, & the ungodly flatter themselves in their sins, thē suddenly is the wrath of God revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men: so that the greater y^e stay & delay of his judgments hath been, the heavier will the stroke fall upon them. The punishment is prolonged, it is not forgotten. Their judgment is coming, and sleepeth not, it gathereth force in going. The higher the axe is lifted up, the slower it striketh, but the deeper it pierceth into the wood. If then God do not by and by smite the offender, and strike him in the profaneness of his wicked heart, let us not be secure and continue in sin: God doth not at once make hauock of his enemies, but bringeth them to judgment one after another. Wherefore let us conclude with the saying of the Prophet, Say ye, surely it shall be well with the just, for they shall eat the fruit of their works: woe be to the wicked, it shall be evil with him, for the reward of his hands shall be given him.

[Use 3] Lastly, as the bodily enemies of the Church shall be wasted with lingering & long lasting judgments, so shall it be with the enemies of our souls. The spiritual enemies of our souls and of our salvation, are not brought under our feet at once to trample upon them, and to triumph over them, they are brought in subjection by little & little. For as these enemies are cast down, so our sanctification ariseth. As the Corn which the husbandman soweth, before it can come to ripeness, and yield a plentiful increase, must first take root, shoot into a blade, and spring up by little and little, till it bring forth an ear: so is it with the grace of sanctification and newness of life. The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustardseed, which a man taketh and soweth in his field, which indeed is the least of all seed: but when it is grown, it is the greatest among Herbs, and it is a Tree, so that the Birds of heaven come and build in the branches thereof. Again, the Kingdom of heaven is like unto Leaven, which a woman taketh, & hideth in three pecks of Meale, till all be leavened. So is the work of God, little and small in the beginning, it is as a building that goeth slowly forward, there must be much sweating and toiling about it, there must be great laboring and hammering before we can bring it to any greatness. The more we increase in grace, waxing strong in faith, firm in hope, and constant in our profession, The more do we grow to be conquerors through him that loved us. 2 Cor. 4, 16. Let us always fight against sin, watching in prayer, fervent in spirit, rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, cleaving to that which is good, procuring things honest in the sight of all men: and the God of peace shall tread Satan under our feet. Rom. 12, 11, 12, & 16, 20. Let us always in this life look for enemies, and prepare to with-stand them; let us stand on our watch-tower, and descry the approaching of them. Let us know that our adversary the devil, goeth about like a roaring Lyon, seeking whom he may devour, and be strong in the grace which is in Jesus Christ. Here is not the place of triumphing, but the place of fighting. No man is crowned, except he strive as he ought to do. The husbandman must labor before he receive the fruites of the earth. We must die with Christ before we can live with Christ. We must suffer with him, before we can reign with him. So long as we live in this life, we are soldiers and live in warfare, we must not dream of the victory before the combat. If we will here skirmish with our enemies, putting on the whole armor of God, the day shall be ours, we shall win the field. Here is our comfort, that when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal hath put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, 1 Cor. 15, 54. Death is swallowed up into victory, which is the last enemy that shall be subdued. If we be the children of God, and are escaped from the bondage of corruption, if we cast off Satan and his temptations, we must never think to live in rest, but look for him to buffet and batter us, that he may re-enter the Fort, which he hath forsaken. We must be content sometime to take a foil, and to have the Bucklers and Wasters driven to our heads, yet so as our stepping back, should be but to recover the greater force and strength. They indeed that have not a lively faith in the Son of God, nor have given their names to their Captain, to serve in the wars, against the flesh, the world, and y^e devil, do not know at all, but are altogether ignorant, what the suggestions of the flesh, & allurements of the world, and the temptations of the devil do mean. They strive not, they fight not, they resist not, they overcome not: they understand nothing what killing & conquering meaneth. This our Savior teacheth in the Parable, Luke 11, 21, 22. When a strong man armed, keepeth his Palace, the things that he possesseth, are in peace: but when a stronger then he cometh upon him, he taketh from him all his armor wherein he trusted, and diuideth his spoils.

Verse 34. Thou shalt do unto him, as thou didst unto Sihon, King of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon. In these words is an illustration and amplification of the promise of deliverance, and assurance given them to prevail, drawn from a present and comfortable experience, which they had of the power of God in subduing Sihon, King of the Amorites. As if the Lord should have said unto them, Why do ye shrink and hang back, when ye should make an head against them, & look them in the face? What though this King be puissant and of great stature, of the race of those mighty Giants? Have ye forgotten my power? And do ye not remember what I did to Sihon King of the Amorites, how I gave him, his people, and his Cities into your hand? Have ye not experience that I give the victory to whom I will? Is my hand shortened, that it cannot help? Nay, be of good comfort, & assure yourselves I will not leave you nor forsake you, but as you have overcome those that have hitherto stood against you, so ye shall see your desire upon all your enemies. Whereby we learn, That the experience of God's former favor, casteth off fear, causeth affiance in him, and assureth future grace to come from him.

Among other means to work faith in him and a resting our selves in his promises, the blessed experience and comfortable proof which we have had of God's mercies toward us in former times, is one of the chiefest to cause us still to trust in him, and evermore to call upon him in our necessities. We see this proved unto us in sundry Psalms of the Prophet, as Psal. 4. Hear me when I call, O God of my righteousness: thou hast set me at liberty when I was in distress, have mercy upon me, and hearken unto my prayer. Where the Prophet reasoneth from the time past, to the time to come, and entreateth God to hear him, because he hath already had mercy upon him. The like ground of his assurance we find again, Psal. 22, 9, 10, 11. Thou diddest draw me out of the womb, thou gavest me hope even at my Mothers breasts, I was cast upon thee even from the womb, thou art my God from my Mothers belly: be not far from me, because trouble is near, for there is none to help me. In these words we see how the Prophet by benefits past, assureth himself of deliverance from dangers present, and in time to come. As if he should say, seeing I was committed to thy providence and protection so soon as I was borne, and came into the world, when I could not feed and defend myself, and seeing I have hitherto received so many benefits from thee, do not now depart from me when affliction is at hand, and when there is none beside to help. So the same Prophet layeth the foundation of his hope, expecting mercy from God, upon the consideration of God's dealing with him before, as in the third Psalm, verse 4, 7, where being combred and compassed with a wonderful number of adversaries revolting from him in the conspiracy of Absalom, he gathereth comfort to himself of God's present aide, from the experience he had felt before, saying; I did call upon the Lord with my voice, and he heard me out of his holy Mountain: O Lord, arise, help me my God, for thou hast smitten all mine enemies upon the cheek-bone, thou hast broken the teeth of the wicked. This is farther confirmed and strengthened unto us, in David's faithful behavior, going to encounter with the uncircumcised Philistim, 1 Sam. 17, 34, 35, 36, 37. Thy servant kept his fathers Sheep, and there came a Lyon & likewise a Bear, and took a Sheep out of the flock, and I went after him and smote him, and took it out of his mouth; and when he arose against me, I caught him by the beard and smote him, & slew him: so thy servant slew both the Lyon and the Bear: therefore this uncircumcised Philistim shall be as one of thē, seeing he hath railed on the host of the living God. Whereby it appeareth, how he strengtheneth his faith by the experience y^t he had in time past, of God's helping hand, nothing doubting, but the same God that had preserved him from the iaw of the Lyon, and the paw of the Bear, would keep him in this single combat with that Champion that defied Israel. This the Apostle Paul also concludeth, 2 Cor. 1, 9, 10. We received the sentence of death in our selves, because we should not trust in our selves, but in God which raiseth the dead; who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver us, in whom we trust, that yet hereafter he will deliver us.

The Reasons follow. First, his gifts are freely and frankly bestowed, he never repenteth [Reason 1] of them, he never changeth nor altereth that which is gone out of his mouth, he giveth liberally, and reproacheth no man. Therefore the Apostle saith, Rom. 11. The gifts and calling of God are without repentance: so that whom he loveth, he loveth to the end, and where he hath once shown mercy, he will persevere in in his kindness, and he that hath begun his good work in us, will perfect the same unto the day of Jesus Christ. He never waxeth weary of well-doing, but delighteth in the works of mercy. When the Lord would reveal to Abraham the father of the faithful, his decree touching the destruction of Sodom, he maketh this the reason and motive to move him unto it, because he had begun already to show him mercy: Shall I hide from Abraham my servant that thing which I do, seeing that Abraham shall be indeed a great and mighty Nation, and all the Nations of the earth shall be blessed in him? Gen. 18, 17, 18. If then he never repent him of his gifts that he hath bestowed, nor reuoketh the riches of his graces that he hath granted; Then we see, that the giving of one gift assureth that a multitude shall follow after, as Leah said, A company cometh.

Secondly, he is merciful to his enemies, and [Reason 2] them that hate him, to such as never seek after him, or the knowledge of his ways: he maketh the Sun to shine, and the rain to fall upon the godly and ungodly: yea, his mercy stretcheth to the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air. He prepareth showers for the earth, he maketh grass to grow upon the Mountains, he giveth to beasts their food, & to the young Ravens that cry. Psal. 147, 8, 9, and 36, 6, 7. He saveth man and beast; so that we may boldly say; How excellent is thy mercy, O Lord; therefore the children of men trust under the shadow of thy wings. He is merciful to our bodies, in him we live, and move, and have our being, he hath given us life and breath; much more therefore will he be the GOD of our spirits, and maintain our spiritual life with the continuance of his graces, and sending fresh supply of his Spirit, after he hath once given us faith, and wrought our conversion; he which hath vouchsafed some portion, as it were the first fruits of his mercy, will add greater store of mercy unto it, as it were store upon store, and heaps upon heaps.

The uses are next to be considered. First, [Use 1] we learn from hence, to acknowledge his great mercy, that maketh mercy the seal of mercy, and one grace as the pawn & pledge of receiving and obtaining a new grace. O the unspeakable mercies of God, who can sound the bottom of them, or who can ascend up to the height of them! Can any tongue express, or heart conceive this goodness of God, teaching us to draw an argument from his first mercy to a second, and from a second to a third, always to arise from one degree to assure another, & to conclude a farther proceeding from the first beginning? What man or woman hath not received thousands, and ten thousands of mercies from the Father of mercies, and much consolation from the Father of all consolation, and thereby so many comforts to his own soul, to assure him that he will never forsake him? so that we may boldly, & with a cheerful heart, say, Lord be merciful to us, because thou hast begun to be merciful: we have received much mercy, therefore continue thy mercy toward us, not because we have been good and profitable servants to thee, or have deserved thy favor, but because thou hast been gracious to us. If our own works, if our obedience, if our righteousness were to be made the ground & reason to persuade the Lord to have compassion on us, we should build upon a weak and sandy foundation, our comfort were gone, and our hearts should fail us. For we know our own wickedness, and our sins are ever before us. But since former mercies are arguments of further mercies, and the granting of one grace, is a key to unlock the gate, and open an entrance for the rest to follow; since the first love is a testimony and token of more love to be shown and continued; we abound with such arguments to move his Majesty, blessed be his Name for them, whereby we may be assured that he will add mercy to mercy, and favor to favor. Thus we see how fruitful the loving kindness of God is, always producing more, as one Corn increaseth an hundred fold. This was the stay and staff of Paul the Apostle, when he was in danger of death, and was brought unto his answer; At my answering no man assisted me, but all forsook me: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge: notwithstanding the Lord assisted me, and strengthened me, that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles should hear, and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lyon: & the Lord will deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly Kingdom, to whō be praise forever & ever, Amen. 2 Ti. 4, 16, 17, 18.

Secondly, it is a special comfort to the afflicted when they are fallen into diverse temptations. [Use 2] For when the Tempter cometh unto us, and persuadeth us that God hath cast us off forever, and that we are none of his, tempting us to despair of his mercy, and suggesting unto us our unworthiness: let us record and recount God's former mercies, taking sweet comfort therein, and stirring up our selves to prayer, with assurance to be heard. If he go about to persuade our harts by a strong illusion, that we are not effectually called, or freely justified and elected, or endued with faith, and therefore shall be certainly condemned: let us never yield to Satan, nor to his Angels, neither to their helpers & assistants, the flesh and the world. When we are enticed to commit sin, yield not to the subtleties and suggestions of the devil, but fly from it, and follow after the contrary virtue very earnestly. When he calleth to our remembrance our sins and falls past, let us call to mind the remembrance of God's mercies past, and rest in them as in a Sanctuary or place of refuge against all the storms that Satan raiseth, and the floods that he sendeth to sink our soul in the gaping gulf of hellish despair. So long as God bestoweth upon us one drop of mercy, let us never doubt of his great goodness to be continued toward us and to dwell in us forever. Wherefore the Apostle Paul saith, We rejoyce in tribulation, knowing that tribulation bringeth forth patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost, which is given unto us. This is an excellent & notable virtue, to be thoroughly acquainted with God's providence & dealing toward us, wrought in us by patience, & to have experience of his continual eye watching over his. Now we can say to our endless comfort in this manner: God hath kept me from many dangers, he hath blessed me with many graces, he hath assisted me against many enemies, I will therefore still trust in him, and depend upon him; thus one benefit draweth on another. From this experience we have a certain hope of his mercies to be continued toward us, and are assured of the truth & constancy of God's promises, and of his good will toward us: so that in all tribulations and afflictions we must consider with our selves the former benefits of God, and from them gather new hope of the continuance thereof, whose mercy is a Fountain that never can be dry, but springeth up to everlasting life, and as a Tree that is always green, and yieldeth the sauory fruits of righteousness.

Thirdly, this Doctrine teacheth a notable [Use 3] difference between God and man, in bestowing of benefits. We see men are soon weary of their liberality, & cannot abide continual beggars.

It is not so with the Lord our God, rich in mercy, abundant in kindness, and plentiful in redemption toward all that call upon him. The more bold we are in asking, the more bountiful he is in granting. It is a common thing in the richer sort, to check a man for often craving, and to upbraid and reproach the poor with those things they have bestowed upon them, as when they say, Why do you always come to me, and beg of me? I have given you this and that, at this time, and at that time, in such and such a place; ask no more of me, for if you do, you shall go without. Thus do men reprove and reproach for often demanding. But see the different dealing of God to our endless comfort unto the faithful, he doth never upbraid his benefits, he is not unwilling to grant, he refuseth no man's person, he giveth liberally and bountifully to all that come unto him. This is also a singular comfort to the weak conscience and afflicted soul, whē he is tempted to reason thus, Will God hear me, or respect me? Will he show his loving countenance toward me a grievous sinner, a miserable and wretched sinner, a silly and simple soul? Ask boldly of him, he reproacheth none, as the Apostle James teacheth, chap. 1, 5, 6. If any of you want wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, & reproacheth no man, and it shall be given him. The oftener we ask, the better we are accepted. The more we do desire, the more always we do obtain. He chargeth us to call upon him in the day of trouble, and assureth us of our deliverance, Psal. 50, 15. He would have all come to him that are heavy laden, with promise to be refreshed and eased. This is a notable encouragement to all persons to fly unto God, not to run to Saints or Angels, which neither can hear us, nor give any gifts unto men. Let us always be ready to crave of him, & praise him for his mercies received, seeing they assure more unto us, as we see the Apostle doth, who having experience that God had delivered him, and gathering from thence, that God would deliver him, breaketh forth into this thanksgiving, To whom be praise forever and ever, Amen. 2 Tim. 2, 18.

Lastly, let us not stand in fear of any enemies [Use 4] that rise up against us, and conspire to hinder the peace of the Church, and stop the passage of the Gospel; when God beginneth to take the cause of his people into his own hand, and smiteth any of his enemies on the jaw-bone, the rest are reserved to the like destruction. For wherefore doth God punish his adversaries, and enter into judgment with them? Wherefore doth he visit them, & strike them down with his right hand? Is it only to take vengeance on their sins, & to show his justice in their confusion? No, it serveth for the comfort and consolation of his servants, that howsoever God be patient, yet in the end they shall not escape. This did Joshua the Captain of the Lord's host, teach the people and men of war, chap. 10, 24, 25, when they had brought out those Kings unto Joshua which they had taken, he called for all the men of Israel and said unto the chief of the men of war, which went with him, Come near, set your feet upon the necks of those Kings: and they came near and set their feet upon their necks. And Joshua said unto them, Fear not, nor be faint hearted, but be strong, and of a good courage: for thus will the Lord do to all your enemies against whom ye fight. Where we see, that as God destroyeth not all the enemies of his Church at once, but singleteth out some, that y^e rest might have a time of repentance: so if the rest despise the riches of his bountifulnes, patience, and longsuffering. Not knowing that the bountifulness of God leadeth them to repentance, Ro. 2, 4, they shall be bound up in the same bundle, and be cast into the fire, as the Tree that being spared, brought forth no fruit.

[The Lord said unto Moses, Fear him not, for I have delivered him into thine hand, and all his people, and his Land.] This King of Bashan was a strong and dreadful enemy, descended (as we have shown) of the race of the Giants, mighty in body, fearful to behold, terrible to the Israelites, as may appear by the comfort ministered unto them. For God never exalteth and raiseth up in vain, he never willeth any to cast off fear, where no fear is. From hence we learn, That the enemies of the Church are not to be feared. Howsoever such as set themselves against the people of God be many & mighty, growing in strength, excelling in malice, raging with cruelty; yet must not God's servants be fearful and distrustful by dreading the power of men, but always rely upon God, keeping faith, and a good conscience, depending upon him in life and death. Thus did the Lord strengthen the feeble heart of Hezekiah, when Rabshakeh with his bold and blasphemous mouth had railed upon the strength of Israel, and had proudly threatened the King and his people, that they should be compelled to eat their own dung, and to drink their own water: Be not afraid of the words which thou hast heard, behold I will send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a noise, & return to his own Land, and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own Land, Isaiah 37, 6, 7. And afterward, chap. 43.1, 5, when the people of God were grievously oppressed by their bitter and bloody enemies, so that they were robbed, spoiled, snared, thrust and thrown into Dungeons, fettered in prison-houses, and every way evilly entreated; he speaketh unto them on this manner, Thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel, fear not, for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by name, thou art mine: fear not, for I am with thee. So Christ forewarning his Disciples what entertainment they should find in the world, Mat. 10, 26, 28, and how hardly they should be tried; as to be betrayed, hated, persecuted, imprisoned, scourged, railed upon, and in the end brought to their end, he prepareth them to this duty, and repeateth it oftentimes, Fear them not. And the Apostle Paul, after he had earnestly instructed the Philippians to grow in all graces, & to lead their conversation worthy the Gospel of Christ, he remembereth thē of this point, In nothing fear your adversaries, Phil. 1, 18 Answerable to these precepts, are the worthy practices of the faithful. Hereunto cometh the example of Moses, Heb 11, 27, when he led the people of Israel out of Egypt, notwithstanding the threatenings and bloody words of Pharaoh, he feared not the fierceness of the King, but endured a constant maintainer of the Church of God, & ceased not to encourage the people against their enemies, whose hearts failed and quailed when they were pursued and overtaken by the Egyptians. Likewise, the three servants of God being threatened by that great Tyrant Nebuchadnezzor, to be cast into the fiery Furnace, were not daunted or feared by his high power & fierce displeasure, but answered him; We are not careful to answer thee in this matter. Dan. 4, 15. This appeareth at sundry times, & upon sundry occasions in David, whē he waxeth bold and courageous in the Spirit, & saith, I will not be afraid for ten thousand of the people that should beset me round about. Psal. 3, 6.

[Reason 1] The reasons follow. First, God is with his people. If he be with them, shall we fear any to be against them? If we have a protection from the Prince, shall we fear the face of the subject? If the Lyon fight for us, shall we fear the fly or the worm, y^t are weak in strength?

This is the reason urged by the Lord in the Prophet, Fear not, for I am with thee, Isaiah 43, 5. Now God is with us by his power and providence. If we consider these things that are in God, as his general & special providence, which guideth and overruleth all things for the glory of his Name, and the benefit of his children, the holy meditation hereof ought to remove from us all distracting and distrustful fear. When Christ had dissuaded his Disciples from the fear of men, he saith; Are not two Sparrowes sold for a farthing, and one of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father? Yea, the hairs of your head are numbered, Math. 10, 29, 30. And indeed the cause why in trouble we faint and fail for fear of men, whose breath is in their nostrils, and whose malice is limited, is, because we distrust God's promises and providence, which is indeed a fearful sin. Again, if we consider that God is with us by his power, which being endless & infinite, is able to redress & repress the greatest tyrant and tyranny in the world, we shall find nothing more available to keep us from the excessive fear of weak man, seeing he can restrain them when it pleaseth him. This the three servants of God acknowledge in their danger, Behold, our God whom we serve, is able to deliver us from the fiery Furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O King. Dan. 3, 13.

Again, let us have our conversation without [Reason 2] fear, in regard of the persecutors themselves, and the power which they have. For consider the difference between that which God can do, and that which man can do. The most vile and cruel tyrant that breatheth out threatenings and slaughter against the Saints, when he hath done his worst, and raged to the utmost, when he hath disgorged all his malice, and quenched his thirst in blood, can go no further but to kill the body; but God can go further, who hath the keys of hell and death. Nay, these enemies cannot so much as kill the body or touch the skin with all their power, without the will of God, as our Savior speaketh to Pilate, when he boasted of an absolute power in his own hands to bind or loose, to crucify, or to absolve, Thou couldst have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above. John 19, 10, 11. This is that reason which Christ himself expresseth, Mat. 10, 28. Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.

Thirdly, the enemies shall be destroyed. [Reason 3] They fight against God, they fight against his people, & therefore they cannot prosper. True it is, they may for a time prevail and proceed in their evil enterprises, and God may for a season use them as his Rod, to try the faith of his children; but when he hath used them as instruments to bring his judgments to pass, they shall prevail no longer. This consideration served to encourage the people of Israel, when Pharaohs host pressed upon them, and marched toward them: Fear not, stand still, & behold the salvation of the Lord, which he will show to you this day; for the Egyptians which ye have seen this day, ye shall never see them again: the Lord shall fight for you, therefore hold you your peace. Exod. 14, 13, 14.

The uses remain to be stood upon. First, this teacheth, that the child of God must be [Use 1] a man of valor and courage, and as a mighty man of war, not to be daunted with any terror to forsake his faith & a good conscience: but such an one as is able by the fortitude & power of Christ, to undergo all trials, to over-stride all dangers, to overcome all enemies, and to triumph over all things that oppose themselves against their peace. So then the godly, whose faith overcometh the world, are not only soldiers, but valiant soldiers, and victorious conquerors. The Apostle having commended Moses, that he forsook Egypt, & feared not the fierceness of the King, addeth this withal, For he endured, as he that saw him which is invisible. Some were racked, tempted, tormented, burned, stoned, & would not be delivered. A wicked man is a very dastard and coward. He feareth every creature, which is a great judgment upon him that will not fear God. The darkness of the night, the solitariness of the place, the falling of a leaf, the crawling of a worm, the flashing of the lightning, the cracking of the thunder, the guilt of conscience doth terrify them. But the godly are endued with true fortitude & magnanimity of mind, springing from the grace of faith, and are bold as a Lyon, Prov. 28, 1, they are resolved of God's presence with them, and of his providence over them, being ready to say with David, The Lord is my light and my salvation, of whom shall I be afraid? The Lord is the strength of my life, whom then shall I fear? Though an host pitched against me, mine heart should not be afraid. Psal. 27, 1, 2, 3. This made the Apostle, when he heard that bands and afflictions abode for him in every City, to say, What do you weeping and breaking mine heart? For I am ready, not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem, for the Name of the Lord Jesus. Acts 21, 13. The faithful indeed walk thorough many temptations, on the right hand, and on the left, and enter into many combats; yet they sh•nne not the brunt of the battle, nor fear to loke the enemy in the face, nor shrink back from the push of the P•ke, because they have put on the whole armor of God, and have their hearts settled, and their heads covered in the day of trial. Therefore the Apostle exho•teth, that we should be strong in the Lord, and put on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the assaults of the devil, & to resist in the evil day. Eph. 6, 11, 12, 13. It is not enough for us to provide armor, and to have it lying by us, as we see men in •heir houses have Pikes, and Halbets, Corslets, and Muskets, hanging by the walls, waxing rusty through want of use: but we must put them on, and buckle them about us: we must always have our loins girt, & our lights burning, having on the breast-plate of righteousness, taking the shield of faith, and drawing out the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. Neither is it sufficient to defend us, to put on armor, but we must put on the whole armor of God. We must be armed from top to toe, and leave no part unarmed and vnguarded, lest the enemy espye his advantage, and work our destruction. We must be armed within and without, before us and behind us, in soul and in body, in tongue and ear, in head and heart. For if Satan (who as a roaring Lyon seeketh whom he may devour) find us in any part or member naked, & vndefended, we lie open to him to surprise us at his pleasure, and to bring upon v• swift damnation. David was armed with the armor of God, being a man after God's own heart; bu• because whē he saw the beauty of Bathsheba, he made not a covenant with his eyes not to lust, Satan ensnared him to commit folly. At another time, leaving his ears unarmed, and setting them open to the false information and accusation of Z••ba, he was drawn away to pervert justice, and to betray the cause of the innocent, and to condemn the just without hearing. So four ear be at any time unarmed, it is ready to hear and receive, and believes slanders & false tales against our brethren. If the Helmet of salvation do not cover our head, if y^e toong be not fenced, the devil will set th• on work, to devise evil slanders, and to publish them to the disgrace and discredit one of another. Jonah was a man of God, and a Preacher of repentance to the Ninevites; yet because he left his tongue unarmed, and did not set a watch before his mouth, he brake out into an open and insolent contempt of God, saying, I do well to be angry unto the death, chap. 4.9. Seeing therefore, we are compassed about with such an army of enemies, that watch all occasions, and seek all opportunities against us, they are greatly deceived, that make the life of a Christian to be an easy and idle profession, & take the Gospel to be a profession of liberty: (as y^e enemies of the grace of God object against us) for it may cost us dearly, even the resisting unto blood, and the forsaking of all earthly commodities, that the wo^eld holdeth in greatest price. Let us therefore as wise builders, sit down and cast our accounts before hand, what our work may cost us. For such only as continue to the end, shall be saved.

Secondly let us go boldly forward in the [Use 2] duties of our calling. The Church of God is not always in one state. Sometimes it liveth in quiet and peaceable times, when the Gospel is publicly preached & professed, taught & received with liberty of meeting together, & with freedom of conscience, without opposition or gain saying, as by the blessing of God it is among us. Sometimes the truth of God is resisted, the professors are persecuted, the Gospel is suppressed and oppressed by the rage of the enemy, the faithful are slain and put to death with all kind of cruelty. Notwithstanding let us not fear their fear, neither be troubled, but sanctify the Lord in our hearts, & be ready always to give an answer to every man, of the hope that is in us, with all meekness and reverence. So then the godly should not fear the threatenings of the ungodly, nor so be troubled as thereby to abstain from such necessary duties, as their callings do lead and direct them unto; but on the contrary, make the Lord their fear and their dread, and make a bold confession of the precious faith they conceive, as those that labor to maintain a good cause with a good conscience. Let us all go forward with courage and constancy in our callings, let us perform with diligence the duties laid upon us; and albeit crosses do cross us in the way, and many dangers meet us, we must not shrink back, but stand fast, and go forward in our profession. This should be in all Magistrates, that are as the God's of the earth, and the Ministers of justice, they must be men of courage, to perform the duties of their calling, Exodus, chapter 18, verse 13: they must be endued with the spirit of power, and of godly boldness, to go through with every good work with a constant resolution, and not stand in fear of any man, considering that the cause is the Lord's which they handle. They must call and compel others to walk in their duties, that so the sword of the Magistrate may be joined with the word of the Minister. This should be also in all Ministers of the Gospel, though the power of man rise up against them, they must depend upon him that is highest in power. This Christian courage appeareth to have been in the Apostles, when they were persecuted & imprisoned for preaching in Jesus Name the resurrection from the dead; considering the multitude of enemies, the assembling of the Rulers, the corruption of Pilate, the malice of Herod, the cruelty of the Pharisees, the rage of the Gentiles, & the tumult of the people, they prayed, saying; Now O Lord, behold their threatenings, and grant unto thy servants with all boldness to speak thy word. And this generally should be practiced of all the godly that have in mercy received to believe, they must go forward in their holy faith and obedience, and arm themselves against the temptation and fear of restraining their liberty, of losing their goods, of laying down their life: and when men persecute us for embracing the faith, and professing of godliness, we must remember God's care over his servants, and his special providence over them that fear him, with the most blessed end that shall certainly follow, to wit; the kingdom of heaven, and an exceeding weight of glory.

Lastly, seeing the godly must lay down all [Use 3] fear which the wicked seek to cast upon them for righteousness sake, let us labor truly to fear God. For if we may not stand in fear of men, let us know whom we ought to fear and reverence, even the Majesty of God, fearing to offend him, as a good child feareth his Parents, as the Prophet teacheth, A son honoreth his father, and a servant his master: If I be a Father, where is mine honor? If I be a Master, where is my fear, saith the Lord of hosts? Mal. 1, 3. This fear is the beginning of wisdom, as the wise man showeth, Prov. 1, 7, for this fear the holy man Job is exceedingly commended in the Scriptures: & this fear should be stronger in us to keep us from sin, in respect of God, then in respect of mē. This is the use directly made by the Prophet Isaiah, chap. 8, 11, 12. Say ye not, a confederacy to all them, to whom this people saith a confederacy, neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid of them: Sanctify the Lord of hosts, and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread. Where we see, that having removed from them the false fear of men, he planteth in them the true fear of God: having shown where it should not be, he teacheth where it should be: having declared what fear is evil: he toucheth the remedy. The ready way to take from us the fear of men, & dangers that may fall upon us from men, is the fear of God. For whosoever feareth God aright, he will not provoke him to wrath for fear or love of any creature, knowing that God is stronger and mightier then all, and assuring himself that if God be offended no creature is able to secure him and safeguard him from danger of judgment Again, whosoever hath God his friend, shall not need to fear man to be his enemy. If then we seek to fear God with all our heart above all things, we shall be free from the immoderate and excessive fear of the mightiest enemies. But if we do not fear to offend him, we shall be constrained always to tremble at the least occasion, and to fear the wicked, the devils, death hell, and damnation. Every storm of troubles shall be able to overturn us. Let not our hearts therefore be troubled, let us rest in God, and believe in him. Let no danger drive us to deny h•m, lest we be denied of him in his kingdom. And let us consider the heavy punishment determined and reserved for all distrustful and fearful men which shall fear man more then God, and so make ship-wrack of faith and a good conscience, they shall be punished with unbelievers, with the abominable, with murderers and whoremongers, with idolaters and liars, in the Lake which burneth with fire and brimstone.

CHAP. XXII.

1, After the children of Israel departed, and pitched in the plain of Moab, on the other side of Jordan from Ierico.

2 Now Balak the son of Zippor, saw all that Israel had done to the Amorites.

3 And the Moabites were sore afraid of the people, because they were many, & Moab fretted against the children of Israel.

4 Therefore Moab said unto the Elders of Midian, Now shall this multitude lick up all that are round about us, as an Ox licketh up the grass of the field, and Balak the son of Zippor, was King, &c.

5 He sent messengers therefore unto Balaam the son of Beor to Pithor (which is b• the River of the Land of the children of his folk) to call him, saying; Behold, there is a people come out of Egypt, which cover the face of the earth, and lie over against me.

6 Come now therefore, I pray thee, and curse this people, for they are stronger then I:) so it may be that I shall be able to smite them, & to drive them out of the Land: for I know that he whom thou blessest, is blessed, and he whom thou cursest, shall be cursed.

7 And the Elders of Moab, and the Elders of Midian departed, having the reward of the soothsaying in their hand, and they came unto Balaam, and told him the words of Balak.

8 Who answered them, Tarry here this night, and I will give you an answer, as the Lord shall say unto me, so the Princes of Moab abode with Balaam.

9 Then God came unto Balaam, and said, What men are these with thee?

10 And Balaam said unto God, Balak the son of Zippor, King of Moab, hath sent unto me, saying:

11 Behold, there is a people come out of Egypt, and covereth the face of the Earth: come now, curse them for my sake, so it may be that I shall be able to overcome them in battle, and to drive them out.

12 And God said unto Balaam, Go not thou with thē, neither curse the people, for they are blessed.

13 And Balaam arose up in the morning, and said unto the Princes of Balak, Return unto your Land, for the Lord hath refused to give me leave to go with you.

14 So the Princes of Moab rose up, and went unto Balak, and said, Balaam hath refused to come.

Hitherto we have seen y^e prosperous and happy success, which y^e Israelites had against three mighty enemies, and the threefold triumph over them. But here ariseth a new enemy, with a new device, or rather a knotte and band of many enemies, to stop their passage, to lessen their multitude, and to weaken their strength. Moses therefore first declareth what lets and impediments they had, as blocks lying in their way, and what stopping of their quiet and peaceable proceeding. Thus they meet with many stays, and encounter with many dangers that will dwell in Canaan. They had already ouerpassed many perils, and overcome sundry enemies, now they might begin to look for rest, and to repose themselves in peace and quietness. But see here in the example of the Israelites, as in a glass, the life of a Christian: here is no time long to sit still, here is no place of pleasure, when one danger is past, we must look for another. For when they had overcome some of their enemies, as the Canaanites and Amorites, now the very jaws of death, & the very gates of hell seem to be opened against them, and the devil to pour out, as it were at once, all the venom of his malice upon thē. These hindrances which here they meet withal, are set down in four chapters, whereof some are outward, & some inward, partly from others, and partly from themselves, so that they had missed of their inheritance, both through the counsels & plottings of their enemies, & through their own sins and wickedness, had not God in mercy defeated the one, and pardoned the other.

Touching these hindrances cast in their way; observe first of all the preparation of thē in this chapter: Secondly, the substance of them, and setting of them on work, in the two next chapters following. Lastly, the conclusion of those hindrances, both prepared & employed in the 25. chapter. Touching the preparing and providing of means to stop the Israelites, consider in the first place a seeking and trying to get them: secondly, the obtaining and procuring of them. But first, the occasions of seeking and sending abroad are noted. The Israelites possessed the plain of Moab. Balak had heard wha^t the Israelites had done to his neighbors the Amorites, their victories bred in him fear, and fear ingendered a very wary proceeding. He saw an huge multitude of them encouraged with their late prosperous success, and lying as Grashoppers upon the earth, ready to eat up all that was round about them, as an Ox licketh up the grass of the field. He thus beholding his neighbors house on fire, nay consumed with the fire, and his own in imminent danger, thought it high time to look about him, and to seek new remedies for those new accidents. For fearing in himself what might be the event, fretting inwardly against his enemies, & doubting the loss of his own kingdom, he resolved not to be idle, but to procure means to work their confusion, knowing, that providing before is better then repenting after, and esteeming it an high point of wisdom, not at all to trust, rather then afterward vainly to accuse those whom thou hast foolishly trusted.

Now because nothing serveth so fitly to avoid rashness as counsel, and that two eyes see more then one, and three more then two, he associateth unto himself the Midianites his neighbors, bordering upon him, & therefore hopeth, that the nearness of the common danger would easily join them in the same cause. These entering into a confederacy, as brethren in evil, after long aduisement and consultation had among themselves, in y^e ende do resolve to join together against Israel, as against a common enemy, thereby to lessen his number, to weaken his strength, & to impair his greatness rising by degrees, who seemed able to eat up the Moabites, to consume their Towns, to possess their substance, & to take both their Cities & substance into their own hands. And because they thought it a great dishonor & disparagement unto themselves, to sue to Israel for peace, and yet find not themselves able to meet him openly in the field, they determine to send to a with & wizzard, who for magic was renowned among the Infidels, that when they could not prevail by help of man, they might overcome by the help of the devil, like unto the desperate resolution of Juno in the Poet:

Flectere si nequeo superos, Acheronta mouebo.

that is,

What should I doubtful stand, where ever

I can my friends to make?

Since Heavens I may not move, yet pits of hell I will vprake.

Thus the wicked forsake God, and go for succor to the devil, and therefore, while they seek to avoid one mischief, they draw upon themselves many. Wherefore, messengers are directed, and great men are sent with great gifts from them of the league to Balaam, who in regard of his City was of Pethor, which Ptolemy calleth Pacor, lying on the River Euphrates; in regard of his Country, he was of Mesopotamia, a part of Syria, as appeareth in many places. In regard of his profession and practice, he was a Sorcerer and Soothsayer, as we shall see afterward: He was sent for to curse the people, that is, to bewitch them, to weaken them with his charms and spels, that so they might be able to match them, and to encounter with them, presuming upon him (as the Church of Rome do of the Pope) that he hath blessing and cursing in his own sleeve, to apply and use either of them at his own pleasure But we know indeed, that he is blessed whom the Lord our God shall bless, (though the devil and his instruments should throw and thunder out their curses against him) and he is accursed, whom our God shall curse (though all the world should pronounce him blessed.) As for the blessings & cursings of cunning men and women, they are nothing; neither the one helpeth, nor the other hindereth, nay the devils themselves, wholly set upon mischief, cannot hurt us any further then God permitteth. True it is, Satan, and consequently Sorcerers, his slaves and vassals, sometimes do effect great things, as we see in the history of Job chap 1, 12, and in the temptations of Christ, Mat. 4, 5, they exercise their power, not only over the goods, but over the bodies of men, even of the believers; yet without the sufferance of almighty God, they can do nothing. They could not enter into the Swine before they were allowed. The hairs of our head are numbered. Not a Sparrow falleth to the ground without the will of our heavenly Father.

When Balaam saw the messengers, that they came not with their hands empty, but brought great gifts, and promised greater, which oftentimes blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous; the covetous wretch thirsted after the wedges of gold. as the wages of unrighteousness, and his heart ran after filthy lucre to curse the people of God, that he might enrich himself, and so to become a cursed instrument to y^e cursed counsels that were taken against the people of God: whereas the true Prophets are not beguiled with bribes and led away with gifts, 2 Kings 5, 16. Dan. 5, 17. He desireth of the messengers one nights respite to bring his business to good effect (not able at the present to resolve them) to see whether he could draw the Lord to favor his purposes and proceedings. God appeareth unto him, and asketh him what the men were that came to him; not that God was ignorant, and needed to be taught or instructed what those persons were, but to draw from him a voluntary confession of the matter, which being truly opened and declared, God forbiddeth him to go to the Moabites, because they had a mischievous purpose, and to curse the Israelites, because they were a blessed people. Whē he perceived to his great grief, that God had concluded and determined to continue his mercy and blessings upon his people, which no device of man could diminish, no works of the devil could abolish; the morning being come, he returned an answer to the messengers, and sent them back without their long-hoped desire, excusing himself, that he could not go with them, as himself desired, and as they had deserved at his hands; and having his mind wholly fixed on his reward, he saith, Return back to your Lord; as for me, I desired nothing more then to accompany you, but the Lord hath stopped and restrained my purpose, and will not suffer me to go with you, or to help you. Wherein observe how this covetous hyreling, & false Prophet, being willing to undertake y^e work, because of the wages, and to promise his best help, that he might finger the hire, behaueth himself fraudently and unfaithfully (as hyrelings do) mincing the matter, and revealing one part, but concealing another part of the revelation given him of God. For whereas God had said, Thou shalt not go, thou shalt not curse the people, because they are a blessed people, denying unto him, as well his purpose of going, as his promise of cursing, he declareth the former, but dissembleth the latter; he showeth to the Princes and Governors, that GOD restrained him from going, but hideth this, that the same GOD had forbidden him to curse the people, together with the reason of it, That they are blessed, lest the messengers should be offended, and his expected hire denied & detained.

This is the sum and substance of this division. But before we enter into the handling of the Doctrines offered herein to our considerations (to the end we may clearly see into the meaning of the whole history) it shall not be amiss for us to answer certain doubts and difficulties that arise, as well from the purpose of Balak, as from the person of Balaam. Some of reverent account in the Church, interpret this history otherwise then can stand with the circumstances of the Text, and the proportion of faith in other Scriptures. For they suppose that Balak sought help of the true God, revered his Prophet, and had the seed of religion remaining in his heart. If this were so, why doth he not himself fly to God by prayer? And why doth he not stir up his people to prayer? Why do they not all as one man, join in supplications and intercessions to be helped of God? Why did he require Balaam to come with cursings and bannings against Israel, if there were any spark of true piety left in his heart? Again, it is imagined, that Balaam was a Prophet of God, and endued with the spirit of Prophecy, to whom GOD used oftentimes, and ordinarily to appear, & so do make him as it were a mean between the true Prophets and the false Prophets, thereby God making himself known among the Infidels, and never leaving himself without witness. Such were the Sybils thought to be, living among the Gentiles, and giving testimony to the truth of God. But we know no such mean between true and false Prophets. For whosoever is not a true Prophet, is a false Prophet: and whosoever is a false Prophet, cannot be a true Prophet of God. He that is of God, is a true Prophet: he that is of the devil, is a false Prophet. Neither doth the delivery and utterance of some truth, make a true Prophet, for then the devil should be a true Prophet, who sometime speaketh the truth, albeit to a sinister end. For he confessed the Messiah to be the Son of God, thereby to darken the Doctrine of Christ, and to discredit the power of the Gospel, raising a suspicion that he hath some familiarity & friendship with Christ, & by drawing men to doubt of the truth of our redemption, inasmuch as the devil is a liar from the beginning, & the father of lying. And touching the Sybils, they carry not any certain credit and authority, being all, or the most part, forged & foysted in, to win credit to the word of God, which needeth not the lies of any, to uphold the truth and authority thereof. For they are brought in, speaking more clearly and evidently, more plainly and particularly of Christ and his kingdom, then any of the Patriarchs or Prophets, then Moses, or any that lived after him. Isaiah is worthily accounted to be an Evangelical Prophet, prophesying distinctly and determinately of the passion & sufferings of Christ, yet it is as nothing in comparison of that the Sybils express, touching the name and nature of Christ, touching his original & offspring, touching his death and resurrection, touching Antichrist and other enemies of the Church. Now shall we think that God would reveal more to them then to his own Prophets, and the sons of the Prophets? to such as lived out of the Church, more then to all that were brought up in the Church, and sucked the sincere milk of the Scriptures, and had the most sureword of the Prophets, to the which they did take heed, as to a light that shineth in a dark place. Besides, we cannot hold this Balaam for any true Prophet, but for a false Prophet, such as Simon the Sorcerer mentioned in the Acts: Notwithstanding all the goodly glozes that he maketh, to win himself credit and estimation, whereof we shall speak more afterward. Furthermore, others think that Balaam meant his own false gods, when he saith, Tarry here this night, [Object.] and I will give you an answer as the Lord shall say unto me. And again, Return into your Land, for the Lord hath refused to give me leave to go with you, but that he was prevented of his purpose, by the true God appearing unto him. But this conjecture is overthrown by the express words in this place. For the word is Jehovah, [Answer.] a name always in Scripture given to the true God only, and never applied to any false gods; yea, the true God was known by his name among the Gentiles, and by it was discerned & distinguished from the Idols of the Nations, which indeed are no God's.

Now that we may attain to the true meaning of this Scripture, and resolve of the right interpretation thereof, I will set down certain rules and conclusions, which concern the matter in question, which being fully determined, and thoroughly descided, the truth will evidently appear to all men, how to carry this whole history, and make one part to agree with another. The first conclusion is, that Balaam was a lewd and wicked man. True it is, if we look into his bare and naked words without the matter, and examine his sayings without his practices, he may seem a very faithful and right religious man; yea, a most worthy and notable Prophet. He hath God always in his mouth, and at his fingers ends, he will not resolve the messengers before he have asked counsel at the mouth of y^e Lord: if he might have an house full of silver and gold, he cannot go beyond the word of the Lord his God to do less or more: he telleth them he can deliver nothing unto them, but what he receiveth of the Lord. But if we consider the matter aright, and try his fair speeches by the touch-stone of his foul life, and measure his wretched acts with his wicked counsels, we shall easily discern in his smooth carriage, a deep dissembling, and the Lord to be sparingly in his heart, that was abundantly in the mouth. He had a profane mind, & evil meaning, loving the wages of unrighteousness, and being carried away with desire of money (which is the root of all evil) to curse the people of God, as the Apostle teacheth, & therefore he was rebuked by a dumb beast for his iniquity. He also was Balaks school-master, and instilled the greatest mischief that might be into his heart, informing him how to subdue the people of God, and teaching him how to lay a stumbling block before the children of Israel, to draw them to spiritual and bodily fornication, when he saw that by his charms he could not prevail against them. And albeit the Israelites were increased as the Fish in the Sea, and as the Stars of Heaven, wherein were many thousand persons that could not discern between their right hand and their left hand, yet he was ready and willing to curse, where GOD had not cursed. And as a wretched death followeth a wicked life, so the justice of GOD found him out lurking among the Midianites, Numb. 31, 8, to verify the threatening of the Prophet; As he loved cursing, so it fell upon him, and as he loved not blessing, so was it far from him; as he clothed himself with cursing like a raiment, so it entered into his bowels like water, & like oil into his bones. Psal. 109, 17, 18.

Thus we see, as his life was, so was his death, a cursed beginning, a fearful ending; God swept him away by a violent & sodain death, together with those that set him on work, that as they conspired together, so they might be consumed together. If then he be a wicked man that intendeth to curse the people of God, that hath his heart possessed with covetousness, that loveth the wages of unrighteousness, that layeth a bait and snare to entangle men in evil, that seeketh to draw upon them the wrath of God, and after all is slain by the sword of those whom he intended to destroy, himself falling into the pit which he had digged for others: then the first conclusion holdeth as a certain truth, that this Balaam (whatsoever vizard of piety and holiness he pretend and put on in outward show) was indeed a very lewd and wicked man.

The second conclusion is, that Balaam was no true servant of God, but an open Idolater. This confirmeth further, and giveth strength to the former point. As he was lewd in his life, so he was corrupt in his religion, one of the idolatrous Gentiles, an alliant from the Commonwealth of Israel, a stranger from the covenant of promise. For whether he were one of the Midianites, as some imagine, or whether he were one of the Aramites, as we declared before; whether he were sent for, nearer or further off, the conclusion holdeth, that he was none of the Israelites, Rom. 9, 4, to whom pertaineth the adoption of Sons, the Ark of the Covenant, the Tables of the Law, and the service of God. Moreover, when he was come into the presence of Balak, Numb. 22, 41, and 23, 1, 2, they both went up into the high places of Baal, where that abominable Idol was worshipped, where no doubt they served Baal in the Idols Temple. Besides, it is apparent in the whole history following, that he joined with Balak in his idolatrous sacrifices. If then he had not been one of the Idolaters, he would not have gone to that Idol, nor have erected new Altars, contrary to the will of God, who would only be served in the place that himself had appointed.

The third conclusion is, that Balaam was a very witch and wizard, a false Prophet, but a true sorcerer, famous, or rather infamous for his devilish magic which he practiced among the wicked and idolatrous Nations. Such a one was Simon that sorcerer, mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles, chap. 8, 9, 10, 11, and 13, 6, 8, who used witch-craft, and bewitched the people of Samaria, saying, that he himself was some great man: to whom they gave heed from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is that great power of God; and they gave heed unto him, because that of long time he had bewitched them with sorceries. Such a one also was Elimas, who was likewise a Sorcerer, a false Prophet, the child of the devil, and an enemy of all righteousness, withstanding the preaching of the Gospel, hindering the hearing of the word, and perverting the straight ways of the Lord. So had this Balaam, through his enchantments and superstitious arts, obtained a great name far & near among the Infidels, so that they resorted to him as to an Oracle, and esteemed him as an Angel of God, being able to help or to hurt, to further or to hinder, to bless or to curse whomsoever he pleased. Such were wont to be in great favor and credit with Kings and Princes, as appeareth by the enchanters of Pharaoh, Exod. 7, 11, 22, and by the Sorcerers and Astrologians of Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 2, 2, who were oftentimes called into their presence, and brought before them, as men in whom their special delight was, & their confidence reposed. These men, howsoever they were magnified in Princes Courts, and had an honorable name among the Nations that knew not God, yet were profane Prophets of profane men, & the very chaplains of the devil, practicing charms and conjuring, which by the judicial Law of God was death, Exod. 22, 18.

Thus the Scripture calleth him a Sorcerer in plain terms and express words, Josh. 13, 22. Balaam the son of Beor, the soothsayer, did the children of Israel slay with the sword, among them that were slain. The word which the holy Ghost there useth, is Chosem, which signifieth one that diuineth by divination, and fetcheth answers from the devil whom they took to be God; and it is one of those eight sorts of witches and practicers by devils, mentioned in the 18, chapter of Deuteronomy. And his very drift and purpose was to curse; that is, to bewitch them, and so to weaken them with his enchantments, that they might be a cursed and detested, a loathsome and forlorn people. So it is noted, that when the Ambassadors came first unto him to acquaint him with the purpose of Balak, they had the reward of the soothsaying in their hands, Numb. 22, 7. Yea, when the Lord opened the mouth of Balaam to utter his will against his own will, & the truth hath this wretch upon the rack, he confesseth, that all his sorcery and soothsaying could not prevail against God's people, saying; There is no sorcery against Jacob, nor soothsaying against Israel. Numb. 23, 23. This also sundry of the Fathers affirm, that he was famous in art-magic, and mighty in working by hurtful charms, and thereby grew in great estimation among all the people of the East. This likewise is the judgment of Origen, Gregory, Nissen, Basil, and others, reputed him as a Prophet of the devil, thinking he had been oftentimes hired for like purposes, & persuading themselves he had made many like experiments of his science in former times. Lastly, the manner of his whole proceeding, in going to fetch diuinations and answers from the devil, and in preparing seven Altars, seven Bullocks, seven Rams, seven sacrifices, is altogether correspondent and answerable to the ancient Discipline of the Magicians, who ascribed a certain kind of heavenly force and virtue unto uneven numbers, as appeareth by the Poet, Numero Deus impare gaudet, that is,

A mystery divine it is, that God

Delighted is in numbers that are odd.

This devise proceeded at the first from the Pythagoreans, who made all things to be the resemblance & similitude of numbers, whom Aristotle and Galen in many places laughed to scorn. Wherefore seeing we have sufficiently proved by testimony of the Scripture, and authority of the ancient Fathers, that Balaam was no better then a Witch & Sorcerer, therefore he dealeth in all his actions according to the learning of the Augures and soothsaying, which we will unfold for our better understanding of this History in the last conclusion.

Hitherto we have spoken of the person of Balaam, and have discovered his wicked life, his wretched idolatry, his execrable sorcery: we have made it plain, that both Balak the King, and Balaam the false Prophet, were of the unbelieving Gentiles, without hope in God, without belief in Christ, without taste of religion, without spark or spice of godliness: so that in the next place we will lay down certain rules of the base or bastard religion of these Nations, and upon those cōclusions as upon a sure and certain foundation we will build the interpretation of this place.

Therefore the fourth conclusion shall be, that the Gentiles had and held many gods, & only the people of Israel believed and worshipped one God, to whom Moses said; Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is Lord only. Deut 6, 4. When Solomon by marrying strange wives, embraced also a strange religion, it is noted that his wives turned his heart after other gods, So that he followed Ashtaroth the god of the Zidonians, Milcom the abomination of the Ammonites, and Chemosh the Idol of the Moabites. 1 Kings 11, 4, 5. This the Apostle Paul plainly teacheth, 1 Cor, 8, 4, 5, 6. We know that an Idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one: For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be many gods and many lords,) yet unto us there is but one God, which is that Father of whom are all things, and we by him. Where we see, the true religiō touching one God, is opposed against the superstition of the Infidels, touching the plurality and multitude of gods. Thus then we see, that in the corrupt opinion of corrupt men, they had many gods; some worshipping the Sun, the Moon, the Stars: some the Angels, others Jupiter, Mars, Mercury, Diana, and many such of like sort. For being left to the vanity of their own mind, they gave divine worship wheresoever any divine gift appeared in any creature, And so while they professed themselves to be wise, they became fools. They turned the truth of God into a lie, & worshipped the creature instead of the Creator, which is blessed forever: so God gave them up to their hearts lusts, and delivered them up into a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient.

The fifth conclusion is, that as they believed many gods, so they imagined that every people had his protecting god to be their patron and protection, to store them with blessings, and to preserve them from their enemies. In each Town and City one was chosen to be the Deus tutelar, that is, the Patron of the place: (for every house is a little City, or rather every City a great house. Uiuus his annot. on August. de Ciuit. Dei. lib. 1. cap. 3.) When he was well pleased then they prospered; when he was angry they were overcome & destroyed, as is testified by sundry writers of good credit. Thus do the Papists at this day. For as they call upon sundry Saints for sundry purposes; upon some for the plague, upon others for the safe deliverance of women, upon others for the tempests on the sea, upon others to obtain fair weather, and have a several Saint for every season; so they account them their Patrons, and call them by the name of their protecting gods, as appeareth by Paulus Iouius one of their own writers of histories. Thus we see, that the idolatry of our time is indeed and in truth the same with the ancient idolatry of the heathen: so that albeit the names of the Idols be changed, yet y^e nature of the idolatry is still retained. Now the truth of our conclusion is evidently collected & gathered out of the Scriptures. Hereunto cometh the reason produced by Iephtah to avow the lawfulness of inheriting the Cities of the Amorites which Israel had conquered by the sword, & held by prescription for three hundred years, Judge. 11, 24. Wouldest not thou possess that which Chemosh thy god giveth thee to possess? So whomsoever the Lord our God driveth out before us, them will we possess. This also appeareth in the description of the wickedness of Ahaz, 2 Chron. 28, 23. In the time of his tribulation did he yet trespass more against the Lord, for he sacrificed unto the gods of Damascus, which he falsely supposed had plagued him, and he said, Because the gods of the Kings of Aram helped them, I will sacrifice unto them, and they will help me; yet they were the ruin of him & of all Israel. It was the Lord that smote him, not the gods of the Aramites: so that he is deceived in thinking they were holpen by their protecting gods. For such was the wickedness of his profane heart, that he did not acknowledge the hand of God to be gone out against him, but ascribed it to the power of those false gods, and therefore sacrificed unto them to his own confusion, to the ruin of Israel, and to the dishonor of God. Therefore the Prophet before reproveth Amaziah, 2 Chron. 25, 14, 15, who after the slaughter of the Edomites, brought the gods of the children of Seir, and set them up to be his gods, and worshipped them, Why hast thou sought the gods of the people, which were not able to deliver their own people out of their hand? Hereunto also cometh the boasting of Saneherib over Jerusalem, 2 Chro. 32, 13, 14. 2 King. 18, 33, 34. Know you not what I and my father have done unto all the people of other countries? Were the gods of the nations of other Lands, able to deliver their land out of mine hand? &c. Thus in the heathenish Religion every wood and field had his local gods, without whose good favor no human action could in that place have any happy success, as appeareth in sundry Authors: when Cambyses and Cyrus departed out of Persia, they besought the gods protectors thereof, to send them forth favorably and with good speed. We see then that Idolaters held this as a certain ground and principle of their religion, that every place, every people, every Province and Kingdom, had a peculiar god to be their patron and protector, to defend their worshippers, to fight their battles, and to deliver them out of the hands of their enemies.

The sixth and last conclusion remaineth, (which is the chief point to be considered) that is, y^t the Gentiles going to war against any nation, used ordinarily to conjure & call up the protecting god of that people, to forsake them and come on their part, promising to bestow either that place on him again, or else a more large and spacious place, so that he should be sure to lose nothing by the bargain. This is recorded at large by Pliny in his natural histories, where he saith; The first thing that the ancient Romans were wont to do when they laid sledge to any City, was to bring forth their sorcerers, and by them to call forth the god or goddess which was the patron or patronesse to protect that place: therefore it was never known and diuulged what god was y^e protector or patron of Rome, lest some of our enemies should assay to conjure him forth, and so deal with us as we do by them. Hereupon Saint Agustine saith, that It was their predecessors manners, that long ago chased all their great multitude of little gods from the City Altars like so many flies. For where was all this nest of deities when the Gaules sacked the City long before the ancient manners were contaminate? Were they present and yet fast asleep? The whole City was a^l subdued at that time, only the Capitol remained: and that also had been surprised, if the Geese had not shown themselves better then the gods, and waked when they were all isleepe. And in lib. 1. cap. 3. de C^oit. Dei, he saith, Would any wiseman have commended the defense of Rome unto gods already proved to be unable to defend themselves? Notwithstanding, saith Macrobius (lib. 3. cap. 9.) the name of their protector is registered in the books of the ancients, albeit much disagreeing and diuersely dissenting among themselves: some thought him to be Jupiter, some Luna, some the goddess Angerona: but others that thought it to be Ops, are of better credit. This is also avouched by Plutarch a learned Philosopher in his Roman questions; where demaunding the question why it was accounted an heinous & horrible offense, either to ask or to utter the protecting god of Rome, whether it were mad or woman, he answered, That there are certain Charmes and Sorceries, whereby the gods are fetched up, which the ancient Romans using, and thereby prevailing in battle, and drawing the gods of their enemies to their side, they provided by this deep silence of their own Patron, that none should be able to deal with them as they had done to others, nor render unto them the measure that they had measured unto others. And therefore Valerius Soranus lost his life for being so bold as to name that name, as L. Uiuēs observeth in his Annotations upon the first book and the third chapter of S. Agustine de Ciuitate Dei. This is it which the Poet remembereth in setting down the destruction of Troy Virg. lib. 1. Aenead.

—Quae fit rebus fortuna videtis,

Excessere omnes adytis, aris{que} relictis

Dij quibus imperium hoc steterat.

That is;

The state of things ye see, the seats and Temples left alone:

The Altars and the gods whereby this Empire stood, are gone.

In these words it is observed by the interpreters (Seruius in lib. 2. Aeneid) that the gods of the Troyans were gone away, and departed from them, and turned Grecian, because to avoid sacrilege they were called forth by their enemies. And Viues in his Annotations, Lib. 2. Cap. 22. de Ciuitat. Dei, telleth, that Seruius and Macrobius think these verses of Virgill to belong unto this calling out of the gods, because when as a City was besieged, and the enemy had an intent to raze it to the ground, lest they should seem to fight against the gods, and to force them from their habitations and places of abode against their willes (which they held to be as a most wicked deed) they used to call them out of the besieged City by the General of the army that did besiege it, that they would please to come and dwell amongst the Conquerors. So did Camillus at the Veij, so did Scipio at Carthage & Numance, and Mummius at Corinth, Hence it is, that Liuy the flower of the Roman Historiographers, bringeth in the same Camillus, going to the assault of Veij a City of Hetruria, praying thus, Tuo ductu Pythice Apollo, tuo{que} numine inductus pergo ad delendam urbem Veios, tibi{que} hinc decimam partem praedae voueo: te simul Juno regina quae nunc Ueios colis, precor, vt nos victores in nostram tuam{que} mox futuram urbem sequare, vbi te dignum amplitudine tua Templum accipiat: that is, As by thy conduct and divine power (O Apollo) I do enterprize the sacking of the City Veio, so I vow unto thee the tenth of all the booty: and thee I request Queen Juno, that sittest as Patron of this place, to accompany us as Conquerors into that City which now is ours, but by and by shall be thine, where thou shalt receive a Temple beseeming thy might and Majesty. And to conclude, if we would yet further understand the order and manner of this Magicall supe•stition, we may read the very form and fashion a• large (which those nations used) in Macrobius whom before we recited, Si Deus, si dea est &c. that is whether it be god or goddess that have undertaken the guidāce and gardianship of this City and people, we pray and beseech you to forsake this City and people, to relinquish their places, temples, & holy things, and to depart without them; strike ye a fear into the hearts of that people and City, betray them, and come to our side: defend our Armies protect our Cities, & safeguard our Temples &c. This was the charge that was used when they went to the sledge and sacking of any City: and in this manner they prayed, which was made when the Romans as called out the gods of Carthage to come unto them. The like we read in Appian also, in his book of the Parthian wars.

I confess I have stood ouerlong in handling and debating these points, which I have laid as the foundation of all that followeth, and serveth to clear such doubts as arise out of the text, and is nothing at all from the purpose of that which we have in hand. For these points, as certain Principles being thus concluded, may easily be applied to our present purpose, and comparing the fashions of the Gentiles with the fitness of the person that the King of Moab chose, and by whom he proceedeth in this practice, we may evidently gather the true sense of this history, and see how the whole matter was carried and conue•ed. For, as the manner of the vnbel•euing N•tions was to sue and seek to the gods of th••r enemies to forsake them, & betake them selves to their side; so Balaam being a notable and notorious sorcerer (as we have proved before in the third Conclusion) worketh by the Principles of sorcery, and intendeth to begin his business and whole action, by calling up the protecting God of the Israelites, which indeed was the true Jehovah; as we see in the Chapters following by the words of Balaam himself. Besides, we may be the rather induced to receive and believe this truth if we consider that all this sorcery and superstition had his first original and beginning out of the East (from whence Balaam came) these were the manners of the men of the east, as appeareth in Pliny before remembered, and in others, who excelled all other people in the Art of Magicke: so that the manners and the man arose both of one place. Furthermore, as the sorcerers in Egypt being confounded by the mighty power of God in a base creature, confessed the miracles of Moses to be wrought by the finger of God; so when this soothsayer hath assayed at sundry times, and in diverse manners to work his will, in the end he witnesseth with his own mouth. Numb. 23, 23. that there was no sorcery effectual against Jacob, nor soothsaying against Israel.

Lastly, we may observe how he calleth the Lord his God, verse 18. I cannot go beyond the word of the Lord my God: because he knew if he should work anything against Israel, he must do it by their own God. For he doth not use these words as the faithful do in a special feeling of God's favor, and in the particular assurance and affiance of their own faith, inasmuch as he was a covetous wretch, and an old witch (as the Scriptures witness;) but his meaning is, he is the God whom in all this cause I have heed of, and by whō I must of necessity deal withal. He saith no more of him then he would have done of the Idol-god of any Idolatrous people, he would have called him his god, as being the god by whom he must work all his feats. Thus then Balaam intending to bewitch Israel, he must by the rules of his own profession conjure up the God of the Israelites, whereupon it was that he deferred the Messengers sent unto him. As if he should say unto them; If I work not by him, ye cannot prevail over his people, he must first be drawn to your side, and afterward ye shall easily obtain the other. Neither let any here object against these things, that Balaam was ignorant of the true God, or that it agreeth not to the nature of God to reveal himself to Magicians, and to attend upon their trumpery. For albeit he did not acknowledge him to be the Creator and Governor of the world, by whom all things stand or fall: yet he knew him to be the God of the Israelites, which was sufficient for his purpose: so that he meaneth not in speaking of the Lord, his own false gods, but he consulteth with the true God, as sundry places in this present Chapter make manifest, Numb. 22, 8, 18, 19. as when he saith, He would answer them as the Lord should say unto him, and that he cannot go beyond the word of the Lord. So that he asketh counsel of the true God, and receiveth his answer of the true God. And this he doth not as a Prophet of God, but as a Sorcerer. Neither may we think it strange that God should have ought to do with witches and wizards, seeing he giveth answer not only to his own people that cleave unto him, and call upon his name, but to such as are out of the very bosom of the church for his people's sake, sometimes reproveth them, sometimes instructing them, sometimes convincing them of evil, and always leaving them without excuse. As here he teacheth Balaam, that all his coniurations & enchantments were vain and void, seeing he hath decreed and determined so to continue his blessing unto the end toward the Israelites as that no device of man, or work of the devil, shall be able to hinder, or lessen, or abolish the same, as we shall see afterward.

[Verse 3. And the Moabites were sore afraid of the people.] Having in the former words searched into the meaning of this history, and examined the several circumstances thereof: now let us come to the doctrines that arise out of this division. And first, see the occasion of the Moabites confederating themselves with the Midianites, and the project of them both, in sending out to a cunning man to help them; namely, a sudden fear arising in their hearts, danting all their courage, weakening all their strength, and driving them into despair. Israel was an innocent and harmless people, professing righteousness, abstaining from all wrongs, surceasing from all injuries, for conscience sake, as we saw before when they desired passage through the lands of the Edomites and the Amorites, Numb. 20, 19. Deut. 2, 25. they would not enter into their fields, they would not meddle with their vineyards, they would not drink of their water freely; yet see with what a terror and trembling they were stricken at the approach of the Israelites near their borders. And this was the heavy hand of God upon them, as Moses declareth, Deut. 2. This day will I begin to send thy fear and thy dread upon all people under the whole heaven, which shall hear thy fame, and shall tremble and quake before thee. Heereby we learn for our instruction, That the enemies of God and his people are many times afraid where no true cause of any fear is. Evil men are often afraid of the people of God, that fain would live in peace. So Saul lived in continual fear of David, 1 Sam. 18, 15, 29, he was vexed & disquieted in heart, and never in rest, although he we•e harmless, though he sought peace, and ensued after it; yea, the more David prospered, the more Saul feared him. So did Pharaoh and the Egyptians fear the Israelites, when they began to multiply and increase in abundance. Exod. 1.12. Thus Herod feared John, knowing that he was a just and holy man, reuerencing him greatly, hearing him gladly, & doing many things at his preaching, Mark 6, 20. Thus the high Priest feared the Apostles, and the officers of the people, Acts 5, 26. Whē Herod and the rest of Jerusalem heard of the birth of a new King, they were greatly troubled and perplexed in mind. Mat, 2.3. Al these things confirm the truth of this doctrine, & verify the saying of the wise man, The wicked fly when none pursueth, but the righteous are bold as a Lion, Prov. 28, 1.

[Reason 1] The Reasons are these: First, because an evil man carrieth in his own bosom a conscience for sin, which striketh and accuseth him, which citeth and summoneth him before the bar of God's judgment seat. Albeit no man can be deposed against him, albeit none can give sentence and judgment against him, yet he carrieth that about him which is instead of all, Mala men's, malus animus as the Poet saith; An evil mind, an evil meaning, an evil conscience arraigning him at the Tribunal of the eternal Judge, who shall give to everyone according to his works. It shall serve as plaintiff, witness, judge, and executioner against him. This is confirmed unto us by many examples in the word of God. When Cain had slain his own brother, & shed his innocent blood which cried for vengeance unto heaven, the revenging hand of God pursued him, Gen. 4, 10, 12, 17. living as a runagate and vagabond upon the earth, and fearing the sight of every creature to be armed against him: he began to build a City to hide his head, to yield him comfort, to provide for his safety, and to defend him from injury: but there also the justice of God ouertooke him the vengeance of his hand followd him, and he was driven from that enterprize. The like we see in Belteshazzer, Dan. 5.56. when there appeared fingers of a man's hand, which wrote over against the Candlestick upon the plaster of the wall of the Kings Palace; albeit he knew not the substance and signification of the miracle, whether it fore-shown good or evil, yet he carried his witness with him, that could not be bribed or corrupted, so that his countenance was changed, his thoughts were troubled, the joints of his loins were loosed, and his knees smote one against the other. This terror of conscience the Lord fortold as the punishment of sin, Leu. 26, 17, 36, 37. and Deuteronomy 28. verses 65, 66, 67.

Again, no marvel if the wicked be oftentimes [Reason 2] smitten with fear, as with the spirit of giddynesse, because they want the shielde of Faith and the helmet of Hope, which are as two strong Anchors to hold the ship that it be not shaken in pieces with the storms, or dashed on rocks, or drowned in the water, or swallowed in quick-sands. A lively faith in the Son of God is the mother of all true comfort, the peace of the soul, the life of good works, the key of heaven; for being justified by Faith, Rom. 5, 1. We have peace toward God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and rejoyce under the hope of the glory of God. We have not received the spirit of bondage to fear again, but we have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba, Father, Ro. 8, 15. We have boldness against the day of Judgment, there is no fear in love, but perfect love casteth out fear, for fear hath painfulness and he that feareth is not perfect in love. 1 John 4, 17, 18. The stronger our faith is, the less is our fear, as one increaseth, the other decreaseth. If our faith be little, our fear is great: as our Savior showeth in the example of his disciples tossed with a tempest on the sea, crying unto Christ, & saying, Master, save us, we perish, Mat. 8, 25, 26. who said unto them, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little Faith?

Now let us come to the Uses. If this be the [Use 1] nature of the wicked, that he carrieth about with him a troubled and trembling conscience, then a wicked man is a very coward & faint-hearted, being afraid of everything. True it is, there are many who neither fear God nor the devil, who seem to be valiant, to adventure their flesh, and to expose themselves to desperate dangers in fighting and quarrelling, as the manner of sundry Ruffians and swashbucklers is, who fear not to meet any man in the field at any weapon, and for every cross word are ready to give the stab: yet bring these venturous and fool hardy fellows to encounter hand to hand with the enemies of our souls, to wrestle against spiritual wickednesses in high places, and to strive as for life and death against pride & profaneness, against concupiscence of the flesh, and contempt of the word, against idle games of evil report, against our lusts and sins which fight against our own souls, we shall see no child so weak and willing to turn his heels as these Ruffian-like spirits; who albeit they walk with long blades by their sides, or long poles on their necks, and iet up and down as •ords of the earth, ready always to lay the hand upon the dagger, and to pick a quarrel at every word, yet they have not the hand or the heart to strike one stroke, to conquer sin, and the tyranny of the devil in themselves, but yield themselves like slaves and captives to do his will, and are led away to destruction as an Ox to the slaughter. Notwithstanding, this is true valor and manhood, to wound more and more the corruption of the old man. He is stronger that conquereth himself, then he that winneth a City, Prov. 16, 32. He is a better man of his hands that overcometh his own concupiscence, then he that hath the upper hand in battle. Let us everyone learn this use, and apply it to our hearts, that the wicked man, what face soever he set on the matter, can never have a good heart, but standeth in fear of every creature in heaven and earth. Genes. 4, 14. like Cain affrighted at the sight of everything, and thinking whosoever findeth them, will slay them. Do they look up to heaven? there they have God their enemy? Do they look down to hell? there they see Satan their tormenter, and his angelles their executioners? Would they take y^e wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea? they shall find every creature to fight against them, and to conspire their death, and even to groan to be delivered from such an unprofitable burden. The heaven saith, Why do I cover him? The air saith, Why do I yield him life and breath? The water saith, Why do I not drown him as Pharaoh & his host? The fire saith, Why do I not consume him as Sodom and Gomorrhah, as the Captain and his fifty? The earth saith, Why do I bear him and sustain him? and not swallow him up, as Dathan and Abiram? His food saith, Why do I nourish & not choke him? His apparel saith, Why do I warm him? The ground saith, Why do I yield him increase, and bring forth any other crop then thorns and briars, then nettles and thistles? Death saith, Why do I spare him, & not strike him? Hell saith, Why do I not receive him? The sword crieth, Why do I not smite him? Famine, Why do I not pine him? The Pestilence, Why do I not waste him and make havoc of him? The Sun and Moon say, Why do I give him light? His bed saith, Why do I give him rest? Thus every creature is up in arms, and rebelleth against him that rebelleth against God: they sound defiance unto us, and proclaim open war against us, whē we are not at peace with our God. What then? Shall he look homeward, & turn his eyes toward himself? There he findeth and feeleth an accusing conscience as a thousand witnesses against him to whip & terrify him. Howsoever the evil man rejoiceth in his wickedness, and glorieth in his own shame, Deut. 29, 19. howsoever he put away the evil day far from him, and promise peace unto himself, yet a man would not have the heart of a wicked man for a thousand worlds, nor possess his pleasures to have his pains. Thou knowest not the torments of his conscience, when he feeleth the strength of the Law, the terrors of the Almighty, the temptations of the devil, the gripings of death, and the flashings of hell fire: howsoever he seemeth to make a mock of sin, and foolish men, as vain as himself, do flatter him in his sins, Yet in laughter the heart is sorrowful, and the end of that mirth is heaviness. There is a way that seemeth right to a man, but the issues thereof are the ways of death. Wherefore, seeing the evil man feareth oftentimes where no fear is, trembling at the fall of a leaf, starting at his own thought, and shaking at his own shadow: we conclude that he can have no true might and manhood in him, but is a dastard, and a coward, in regard of true manhood and fortitude, which are far from him.

Secoⁿ•y, it standeth us upon to be at peace with God, and learn to lead a godly life. For so long as we live in our sins, we are as a loathsome carcass and carrion, casting out a filthy favor, and stinking in the nostrils of God. A wretched and profane man, lying rotting and rioting in his sins, is more loathsome to God then any dead body is loathsome unto our senses. So long as we corrupt our ways before him, the Lord hath a controversy with us, and will commence an action against us. And we shall never have true peace with men, nor true peace with our selves, but shall feel the terrors of our own consciences, and be at deadly and dangerous war with our own hearts, until we be reconciled to God. But if we be truly godly and religious, and be indeed at peace with God, we shall be at peace with others, and with our selves, nothing shall be able to hurt us. For whom should we fear, or whereof should we be afraid? God is become our Father, Whom have we in heaven but him? and whom can we desire on earth with him? Psal. 73, 25. The Angels are our attendants, they pitch their Tents round about us to deliver us, they are charged to keep us in all our ways, and to bear us in their hands, that we dash not our foot against a stone. Psal. 34, 7, and 91, 11. For are they not all ministering spirits, set and sent out to minister for their sakes, which shall be heirs of salvation? Heb. 1, 14. The Saints in heaven and earth are our fellow-brethren, so that we are Citizens with •hem of the same kingdom, and of the household of God. Eph. 2, 19. The Lord Jesus, to whom all judgment is committed, (who shall judge the world with thousands of his Angels,) is become our Savior; So that we shall never come into condemnation, but shall pass from death to life. John. 5, 24. The creatures are our friends, nay as our sworn servants, by the law of their creation to do us good, and not evil all their days: The stones of the field are in league with us, Hosea 2, 18: and the Beasts of the field shall be at peace with us, Job 5, 23. Death shall not be able to hinder or to hurt us (though it be a Scorpion or Serpent) the poison is dispersed, the sting is pulled out, 1 Cor. 15, 54, 55. The devils and all the powers of darkness shall not destroy us, Christ hath spoiled Principalities and Powers, and hath made a show of them openly, and hath triumphed over them upon the Cross, as a mighty conqueror in a chariot of triumph. Col. 2 15. He hath bruised his head, he hath crushed him at the heart, so that the Prince of the world is cast out, John 12, 31. What then? Shall tribulations and afflictions, or anguish, or persecution, or famine or nakedness, or peril, or the sword, separate us from the love of Christ, and peace with our God? Rom. 8, 28, 35, 37. Nay, these proceed from a loving Father, and end at our own good, who sanctifieth all things, and maketh them work together for the best to them that love God: He will cover them under his wings, and they shall be sure under his feathers: they shall not be afraid of the fear of the night, nor of the arrow that flieth by day, nor of the pestilence that walketh in the darkness nor of the plague that destroyeth at noon-day: a thousand shall fall at their side, & ten thousand at their right hand but it shall not come near unto them. Psal. 91, 4, 5, 6, 7. Lastly, as they shall fear no danger that can hurt them, so they shall not be afraid of themselves, their own hearts shall minister comfort unto them, for they shall be at peace with themselves; so that Howsoever all the days of the afflicted person are evil, yet a good conscience is a continual feast, Prov. 15, 15. Behold, what a blessed and comfortable thing it is to be a true Christian, in whose heart is no guile: O consider this, ye sons of men, that such as have a sound faith in Christ, and lead a godly life, are at peace with God! Wherefore let us conclude with the saying of the Prophet, Psal. 31, 11. Be glad ye righteous, and rejoice in the Lord, and be joyful all ye that are upright in heart, seeing that neither life, nor death, nor Angels, nor Principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Rom. 8, 38, 39.

Thirdly, see the difference between the [Use 3] godly and ungodly, between a good and an evil man. Nothing can make the faithful man wretched and miserable, nothing shall be able to daunt him or dismay him: He shall not be afraid of evil tidings, for his heart is fixed, and believeth in the Lord, who in his good time will deliver him, Psal. 112, 7. He repositeth himself on the heavenly providence of God, and casteth all his care upon him that careth for him, being bold as a Lyon, like the child that in danger runneth to the lap of his father. This the wise man further declareth, Prov. 3, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26. This is the condition of the godly, both at home and abroad, with themselves and with others, in the day time, and in the night season, when terrors most trouble the heart, and enemies most practice mischief, & conceive malice, they shall be safe and secure without trouble and perplexity of spirit. But the wicked man is never at rest, he knoweth not what the peace of conscience meaneth, which indeed passeth all understanding, he feareth where no fear is, every creature helpeth to increase his misery; yea, the things that are not, trouble him no less then things that are, and the greatest terror that he can never shake off, is his own conscience. Whē Felix only heard the Apostle reasoning and disputing of the judgment to come, he trembled, and commanded him to depart out of his sight. Acts 24, 25. When they take themselves to be most sure, and speak peace unto their own souls, then they shall be taken with fear Psal. 14.5, and 53, 5, because God is in the generation and assembly of the just. This the Prophet Isaiah teacheth, chap. 57, 20, 21. The wicked are like the raging sea that cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt: there is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked: I create the fruit of the lips to be peace peace unto them that be far off, and to them that are near, saith the Lord, for I will heal him. Where the Prophet maketh a flat opposition between the faithful and unfaithful, he calleth the elect by the preaching of the Gospel, which is the power of God to salvation, 2 Cor. 5, 20. So that they break out into this admiration of the mercy of God, and into a joyful embracing of the Messengers sent unto them, How beautiful are the feet of them which bring glad tidings of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! Rom. 10, 15. Contrarywise, the unfaithful and impenitent are never at rest and quiet, but as a troubled sea tossed with the violence of the winds. And howsoever they seem to them selves and to others, to be happy, and sleep securely in sin, yet the terrors of the night, and the troubles of their own Conscience shall awake them, and rouse them out of this security, Prov. 23, 34. So that they shall be as one that sleepeth in the midst of the sea, and as he that sleepeth in the top of the Mast, that is always in danger.

Thus we see, that the fears of profane persons are not rightly ordered, but evilly placed. For what do they fear? Not God, not his heavy displeasure, who is able to destroy soul and body in hell, and cast them into utter darkness, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, Matth. 10, 28. nor to commit sin, for that is their delight: So that they eat the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices. The things that they cheefely fear, are afflictions, troubles, crosses, losses, and temporal calamities, like those that dread their friends and familiars. They are more troubled for outward damages of this life, then for the loss of God's favor: like profane Esau, who preferred a mess of pott•ge before the blessing, and like the carnal Gadarenes, who preferred their filthy Swine before Christ the Lord of life. The Lord Jesus compareth the Jews to children sitting in the Market place, Luke 7, •2. so are wicked men in the bestowing their fear like unto little children: Tell them of bugs or beggars, of goblins or shadows, that are nothing and cannot hurt, they are greatly afraid: but of fire and water, of candle or knife, & such like edge-tools which are hurtful and dangerous, they are bold, fearing no harm or peril. Thus it is with all the ungodly. Tell them of sin, of hell, of death, of damnation, of eternal separation from the most sweet and comfortable presence of God, and of the fellowship with the devil and his angelles, they are not moved at all, but dally with their own souls. But if they hear of afflictions, & fear any losses to come upon them, which cannot hurt or hinder our salvation, if we be in Christ: they are oftentimes brought to their wits end, and break out into all impatience of spirit. But the godly fear nothing more then to offend God their merciful Father: nothing is more bitter unto them then to feel his anger, and the turning of his loving countenance from them: and therefore there is as great a difference between the fear of the one, and the fear of the other, as between heaven and earth, as between good and evil, as between light and darkness.

[Use 4] Lastly, seeing evil men fear whereas no fear is, this overthroweth all Atheists, Epicures, Libertines, and loose livers, which do think there is no God at all, teaching every man to do what seemeth best in his own eyes, and hold Religion to be nothing else but a policy and invention of man to keep the people in order and obedience. This profaneness and Atheism is a grievous sin; it is the very top and height of all impiety and iniquity, committed of those that are forsaken of God, and given over to work all uncleanness with greedynesse. The Apostle speaking of one only part of religion, saith, If there be no resurrection of the dead, then Christ is not risen: and if Christ be not raised, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins. 1 Cor. 15, 13, 14, 17. So if there be no belief in Christ, nor truth in religion, nor knowledge of God, nor salvation of souls, y^e foundation of all go•lines is shaken, and the word of God is made of none effect. Wherefore those Atheists and godless persons, which hold in judgment, affirm in words & avouch in disputation, contrary to Scripture, Nature, Laws, and common reason, that there is no God at all, ought worthily according to their deserts to die the death. Murderers and malefactors, thieves and robbers, for their own offenses have the reward of death, & are carried to the place of execution: of how much sorer punishment suppose you shall they be worthy that commit high treason against God, murder the souls of men, tread under foot the Son of God, and count the blood of the Testament as an unholy thing, and do despite the Spirit of Grace? Of which sort there are too many that find greater favor then such as better deserve it.

And first, the universality of Religion, dispersed over all places, entertained of all persons, embraced & acknowledged at all times, proveth it to be no device of man. We have read and heard of diverse and sundry Nations and people, that have lived without Laws, without Magistrates, without Mariages, without Garments, without Houses, without civility and common honesty, wandering nakedly up and down in holes and caves of the earth; but never of any Nation or people so barbarous and beastly, from East to West, or from North to South, which were without God, without Religion, without worship, without prayers, or without sacrifices. Albeit there be indeed diversities and differences in their Religion, being destitute of the knowledge of the true God; but there hath been no Region without some Religion; which proveth it could be at the first entertained, and afterwards retained by no compact or conspiracy amongst men. Besides, we may reason from the spiritual Natures that reason and experience teach: namely, that there is a devil and his angels set upon mischief, and going about seeking whom they may devour, Contraries compared together, do receive light and luster one from another, as black laid to white, and virtue matched with vice, are better seen and manifested what they are. All laws divine and human, all Nations both Jews & Gentiles, (Cicero de legib. lib. 1.) even the twelve Tables of the Romans, decreed against witches and sorcerers, which have familiarity with devils, and work by evil spirits. And we see by Witches and Coniurers, that Satan is stronger and mightier then we. If then, the devil have a spiritual nature, and be our enemy, he would have brought desolation and destruction upon us, had there not been a Sovereign and superior power above him to restrain his will, and to keep him short. But this superior power can be nothing else but God himself: otherwise, how is it that we are not all destroyed? Why do we not perish and come to confusion, if we stood at the mercy of this our great adversary? Whereas this is our comfort, that his power is limited, and that he can do nothing farther then he is licensed and allowed. All the hayres of our head are numbered. He cannot hurt a Sparrow or a Fly, without the will of God. He could not touch the body of Job before he was permitted, Job 2. verse 6. He could not enter into the Swine before he was suffered, Matth. 8, verses 31, 32. He cannot run out at his own liberty, but is restrained and reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day, Jude 6.

Thirdly, men in all dangers by sea & land, in time of sickness, and in extremity of their distress, by the very light and instinct of nature call upon God: which showeth that we have naturally a common notion that there is a God. We see it not only in the Children of God, 1 Kings 22. verse 32: as Jehoshaphat, when by his confederacy and friendship with Ahab, he was in danger of sudden death, he cried unto the Lord for help in the battle, but in the very Infidelles, when a mighty Tempest threatened to overwhelm them in the Sea, the Mariners being sore afraid, they cried every man of them unto his God, Jonah 1. verse 5. These principles written in Nature, engraven in the heart, and sealed up in the conscience of man, remain to give light as a flash of lightning in the dark night, and teach a difference between good and evil; between right and wrong, to those that never knew the law of God, and to such as thorough profaneness regard not his ways. Ham and Canaan being both evil men, and scoffers at godliness, Genesis 9. verses 22, 25. and 23. verse 42, saw it was uncomely and indecent for their father to lie with his shame uncovered, being overcome with wine. Esau, though a wild and wicked man, yet he would not kill his brother Jacob, till the days of mourning should come for the death of their father. Absalom, though he wrought wickedness in the sight of God, and rebelled against David his Father, yet rebuked unkindness and unthankfulness in Hushai toward his friend, 2 Sam. 16. verse 17. These general notions, as sparkles kindled in our hearts by the gift of Nature, serve to set forth the difference between righteousness and unrighteousness, and to make men altogether without excuse, Because when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, Rom. 1, 20, 21.

Lastly, not to use in an vndoubtfull point unnecessary proofs, nor to prove that the Sun shineth at noon day, (which were to make a question of that which is without question) every man carrieth a witness about him, to wit, his own Conscience. He that hath committed any sin, as blasphemy, rebellion, murder, adultery, fornication, robbery, and such like; albeit he can so smother and conceal it, that no man living know it, or can accuse him of it: yet oftentimes he hath a grief and griping in his Conscience, and feeleth the very flashings of hell fire; the which proveth inuincibly that use which now we urge against all Atheists whatsoever, that there is a God, before whose judgment seat he must one day stand and answer for his fact and fault which he hath so heinously committed. Neither let any say, that this cometh thorough the guiltiness of the Law, shame of the world, and fear of punishment: for, let them have security given them from all Law, a discharge from all reproach, and freedom from all punishment, yet a murderer should never be quiet, his Conscience would ever beat and whip him, trouble and torment him, affright and follow him up and down in all places, and open his own mouth to betray and bewray himself. For GOD hath many ways to discover most secret sins, and most close dissembling sinners: he maketh them either in their sleep to dream of it, or in frenzy to rave upon it, or in sickness to confess it, or unawares to disclose it, or in anguish of the mind to void it and vomit it up, verifying the words of the Prophet Isaiah, chap. 66, 24. Their worm shall not die, but always gnaw upon them with continual torment. As also Mark 9, 44. Thus is God's judgment upon them, that they should fear all things, who will not fear him that made all things. If a man had all the pleasures & treasures that heart could desire or delight in, yet can they give him no true comfort and contentment, when the conscience is guilty of horrible sins.

These terrors, are those Furies which the Poets fain, Cicer. pro. Ros. Amori. & Orat. in Pisonem; which never suffer offenders to be at rest, as we have seen in the examples of Cain, Belteshazzar, Saul, Absalom, Judas, and others. The noise of the Thunder-claps, Psal. 29, 3, 4, 5, 7. which is the voice of God, hath so danted the vildest Atheists, that they have covered their heads, hidden them selves under their beddes, and been ready to creep into every hole. Thus we see, how the ungodly are punished in this life, how they are arraigned as Malefactors at the bar, how they lie confounded in themselves, and how the testimony of every man's conscience proclaimeth and crieth out, Psalm 58, 11. Verily there is fruit for the righteous, doubtless there is a God that judgeth in the earth. So that they shall sooner pull their hearts out of their breasts, then God out of their minds. And albeit the conscience of carnal men, that never truly repented of their sins, seemeth to be at rest, yet it is as a wild and savage beast, which lieth asleep, seemeth tame and gentle; but being raised and roused up, flieth in a man's face, and snarleth at him. Joseph's brethren were not much troubled for their vice and villainy, in selling their brother, at the present time: but long afterward, when they were afflicted with extreme famine, and distressed in Egypt, they remember the iniquity which they had committed, and the cruelty which they had shown, and not truly repented of, Genesis chap. 42. verse 21. Let us therefore strive by all means, & always endeavor to keep a good conscience toward God and man, and take heed how we break out into open sins, provoking God unto anger, wounding our own souls, offending our brethren, diminishing the graces of God, lessening our assurance of his favor, and greewing the Spirit of God, by whom we are sealed unto the day of our redemption.

[Verse 4. Therefore Moab said unto the Elders of Midian, Now shall this multitude lick up all round about us, as an Ox licketh up the grass of the field, &c.] Hitherto of the occasion of the proceedings of the Moabites: now we are come to the plottings and conspiracies of the enemies of the Church, the Moabites joining and combining themselves with the Midianites, men as wicked as themselves. See here how the adversaries of Israel associate themselves to destroy the Church, though differing in Nation, in Religion, in Tongues, in gods and Idolles, among themselves, not because Israel had offended, but because they thirst after blood. Heereby we learn this Doctrine, y^t the enemies of the true Church, howsoever they differ in judgment and affection, yet they are ready to join and iumpe together against the children of God. Notwithstanding the differences and divisions amongst the enemies of God and his truth, they can join hand in hand together, to oppress the Church. This is noted in diverse and sundry practices of the wicked in all ages of the Church. The wicked Midianites & Amalekites with those of the East, not inhabiting in the land of Canaan, but both Nations dwelling beyond the River, differing much in their courses and conversations, and serving vain gods and Idolles, assaulted Israel, came into their land to destroy it, as is witnessed in the book of Judges, chapt. 6, 3. So against Jehoshaphat, a godly King, that sought the Lord God of his father, and walked in his Commandments, Came the children of Moab, and the children of Ammon, and the inhabitants of Mount Seir to battle, 2 Chron. 20.1, 2, 23. This likewise the Prophet David teacheth & declareth, Psal. 83, 5, 6, 7, 8. They have consulted together in heart, and have made a league against thee, the Tabernacles of Edom and the Ishmaelits, Moab, and the Agarims, Gebal and Ammon, &c. Where he noteth out the multitudes of the enemies which the Church had, albeit at jars among themselves, and fighting sundry battles one against another, yet notwithstanding consent & conspire together to destroy God's chosen. This also is plentifully taught by many examples in the New Testament. As Mat. 22, 15, 16. when the Pharisees had taken counsel against Christ how they might entangle him in his talk, they sent unto him their disciples with the Herodians. So Herod and Pilate, Luk. 23, 12. agreeing like Cats and Dogs, were made friends together, and pleasure one another, which had been enemies one to the other, to the end they might make a mock of Christ. Thus the hatred of godliness, joineth the wicked together. This is it which the Apostles confessed in their prayer, Acts 4, 25, 26. & 6, 9, 10, Why did the Gentiles rage, and the people imagine vain things? The kings of the earth assembled, and the rulers came together against the Lord, and against his Christ: for doubtless against thine holy son Jesus whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel, gathered themselves together. Moreover, when the Apostle disputed against the idolatry of the Athenians, Act. 17, 18. then certain Philosophers of the Epicures and of the Stoics banded themselves together against him, albeit they were two contrary sects that never agreed and consented: one strict in opinion, the other loose in conversation; one placed their happiness in virtue, the other in pleasure; making a mock of all Religion. We see this true by common & continual experience. Look upon the enemies of the truth, there is no love or liking among them one of another: they dare not trust or believe one another, yet they strike hands & join together against the faithful, like to Samson's Foxes, Judge. 15, 4. who albeit they look several ways with their heads yet they join tail to tail, to burn up the harvest & vineyard of the Lord.

The Reasons are evident. For albeit they be [Reason 1] separated one from another, and often spoil each other, yet they unite themselves in league together, because they fear the faithful, and the decay of their own kingdom. They persuade themselves, that the rising up and flourishing of the Church, will be the pressing down and frustrating of all their hope & expectation. This appeareth in the book of Ester, when Mordecai was honored of the king for his faithful service, in detecting and disclosing the conspiracy intended against him, Haman's wife and his wise-men said unto him, Ester chap. 6. verse 13. If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews, before whom thou hast begun to fall, thou shalt not prevail against him, but shall surely fall before him. And hereunto also come the words of the Moabites & Midianites to Balaam, Numb. 22. verses 5, 6. Behold there is a people come out of Egypt, which cover the face of the earth, they are stronger then we. So that they joined together, because they feared the multitudes of Israel, lest they should lose their Dominions and their ancient glory through their conquest.

[Reason 2] Again, they hate the people of God and their Religion. Although the Church be weak, and want human strength, so that the enemies need not fear it: yet still they plot and bring forth new devices, & the children of Belial are always packing and contriving mischief against the Church. For as true faith and love of religion, uniteth hearts together, that we may with one mouth glorify God the Father: so contrariwise, where hatred of the true Religion reigneth, there can be no love to the Professors thereof. No marvel therefore, if such join in league against God's people. As we see, when the Rulers and Governors could not find any fault in Daniel, in regard of his faithfulness concerning the kingdom, envying his honor and promotion, They picked a quarrel against him in matters of the pure worship of the true God. So then, whether we consider that the wicked fear their own fall, and hate the faithful with a deadly hatred: in both respects we may conclude this as a most certain truth, that notwithstanding the bandings and brawlings of the wicked and ungodly among themselves, yet they can consent and consort themselves together, to impugn and slander the Church of God, and the doctrine of Christ.

[Use 1] The Uses now remaining to be handled, are these. First, this teacheth, that seeing sundry sects dissenting and varying greatly one from another, do many times join together in one: unity is not always a note of the Church, except it be conjoined with verity. For as dissention is sometimes in the church, so agreement is oftentimes out of the Church among the enemies of Christ. There was an unity between the Moabites and the Midianites: between the builders of Babel, between the Priests of Baal, between y^e Scribes and Pharisees, between the Rulers and the people. There is an unity between thieves, conspirators, murderers, and malefactors: there is an unity between the Turks against the Christians: between Antichrist and his adherents, between Satan and his members; yea, between the devils themselves, all using the same means, all aiming at one end, all conspiring & consenting against the kingdom of Christ. Howbeit the agreement of evil men is not truly to be termed an unity, but rather rightly to be called a conspiracy. Wherefore, they are greatly deceived, that make all agreement and unity an essential and inseperable note of the Church. If we would know what are the proper marks and evident notes of the Church, agreeing to every Church, always and only, they are the powerful preaching of sound doctrine, the right administration of the holy Sacraments, the spiritual worship of the true God, and holiness of life and conversation. Where these are not found, it cannot be that there should be the true Church.

This the Evangelist Saint Luke testifieth in the second of the Acts, verses 41, 42, 46, 47, They that gladly received the word were baptized, and the same day there were added to the Church about three thousand souls: and they continued in the Apostles Doctrine, and fellowship, and breaking of bread, and prayers. So Christ calleth and accounteth those as his Brethren, Mother, and Sisters, that hear his word and keep it: and those his Disciples that abide in his word, and his Friends if they do whatsoever he commādeath them. as Luke chap. 8. verse 21. and chap, 11. verse 28. John chap. 8. v•se; 31, and ch. 15. ver. 14. These are the notes that are peculiar and proper to the Church: by these we shall find the true Church, and learn to join our selves unto it wh•n we have found it, and descry the false signs of the Romish Synagogue, where neither the gospel is truly preached, nor the Sacraments rightly administered, nor the pure worship of God is spiritually instituted, nor holiness of life is sincerely practiced. As for unity, universality, antiquity, succession of Bishops, multitude of believers, the title of Catholic, the working of miracles, the glory of victories, obedience to the Pope, and such like, which the adversaries of the grace of GOD make notes of the Church, (which is an assembly of Antichrist) they are not proper only, nor always, nor unto all Churches (for this is indeed to be proper, as all know that have tasted the first rudiments of Logic.) Besides, these supposed signs are subject unto the outward senses, are open and visible unto the eyes, not matters of faith which are to be believed. They are as obscure, dark, and hard to be known, as to know which is the the Church; they may be claymed and challenged by every heretical congregation. Wherefore as Hilary in one place teacheth. The name of peace is beautiful, & the opinion of unity is fire. Notwithstanding far better is a dive•s•ty in judgment, then an unity in falsehood, The Apostle Paul commending concord and consent to the Church, addeth that all our unity must be in Christ, Ro. 15, 5.6. The God of patience and consolation give you that ye be like-minded one toward another, according to Jesus Christ: that ye with one mind, and one mouth may praise God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Let us therefore seek for unity in verity, and honor it as the greatest comfort of our hearts: otherwise a just war is far better then an unjust and an dishonest peace. The true and Christian unity is, when the sheep of Christ hear the voice of the shepherd, and follow him: and that our Sheeheard is Jesus Christ, by whom alone we enter into the sheepefold.

[Use 2] Secondly, seeing diverse men at great variance within themselves, yet are content to join together in wicked amity and unity against the Church of Christ; we must confess that the salvation and safe keeping of the Church is only of God. If men of all lewd devices, & of different opinions, men at mortal hatred and deadly war amongst themselves, cloase together and plot against the Church: how shall they be able to stand of themselves, being few in number, weak in strength, destitute of friends, and lying open to so many and mighty enemies? For the Church albeit it be the house of God, the mother of the faithful, the body of Christ, and the pillar of the truth, yet it is as a flock of Sheep in the jaws of the Woolfe, and as a prey in the teeth of the Lion: so that the Church standeth, and the truth preuayleth, albeit the power of men, the malice of the devil, and the gates of hell be set wide open against it.

Wherefore, in this distressed estate of the Church, being as a Citty battred on many sides, besieged of many enemies, smitten with many weapons, and assaulted with many Engines; let us not boast of our own power, nor glory in our own greatness, as though we stood by our own strength, held out by our own might, and overcame by our own multitude. For if the Lord should leave us, yea, but a little, and suffer these enemies to rise up against us, they would soon devour us with open mouth, and we quickly see our own weakness. This then is our duty, in the deep consideration of this unity of the enemies, in such great diversity of hearts, to ascribe all the glory of our safety, to God and to acknowledge his only power in our standing: least if we presume of our selves, the Lord in justice leave us unto our selves.

This is it that the Prophet David confesseth and practiseth in many places, as Psalm 3, verses 1, 2, 6. Lord, how are mine adversaries increased? How many rise against me? Many say to my soul, There is no help for him in God at all. Hereupon he concludeth, Salvation belongeth unto the Lord, and thy blessing is upon the people most of all. And Psalm 124. verses 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. If the Lord had not been on our side, may Israel now say: if God had not been on our side when men rose up against us, they had quickly swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us: then the waters had drowned us, and the stream had gone over our soul: Praised be the Lord, which hath not given us as a prey unto their teeth. Our soul is escaped, even as a Bird out of the snare of the Fowler: the snare is broken and we are delivered: Our help is in the Name of the Lord, which hath made heaven, and earth.

Thirdly, seeing so many of so diverse dispositions [Use 3] plot against the Church, it is required of us to be the Lord's Sollicitors and Remembrancers, calling upon him night and day, to be merciful to his Church, to be a buckler about them, to be a Rock of refuge, and a Tower of defense to those that be his. Wherefore, as at all times we ought to be mindful of the flourishing estate and welfare of the Church, so especially when we see enemies of such nature & disposition to increase, it standeth us upon to be mindful of the Lord, and to give him no rest, Till he repair, and until he set up Jerusalem the praise of the world, Isaiah 62, 6, 7.

This we see to be practiced by the Prophet David, in the 64. Psalm, verses 1, 2. where he prayeth against the fury of his enemies: Hear my voice, O God, in my prayer, preserve my life from fear of the enemy: hide me from the conspiracy of the wicked, and from the rage of the worker of iniquity. This also was put in practice by Jehoshaphat and Hezekiah, 2 Chron. 20, verse 3. and chap. 32. verses 7, 8. seeing the multitude of their enemies, and acknowledging their own weakness, not able to deliver or help themselves, or to save others; the Children being come to the birth, and there was no strength to bring forth; they called upon the Lord, set themselves to seek him with all their hearts, and proclaimed a solemn Fast to be kept throughout the land. So when we see the enemies consult and talk together, and take crafty counsel against the servants of God, and against his truth, then it s high time to join with pure hearts in prayer to Almighty God, to protect his people, to turn the wisdom of his enemies into foolishness, Psalm 83. verses 13, 14, 15, 16. O my God, make them like unto a wheel, and as the stubble before the wind: as the fire burneth the Forest, and as the flame setteth the mountains on fire, so persecute them with thy Tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm: Fill their faces with shame, that they may seek thy name, O Lord. Let them be confounded and troubled forever, yea, let them be put to shame, and perish.

Lastly, seeing there is a league and confederacy [Use 4] amongst the wicked conspiring together, notwithstanding their own contentions at home, let us not stand in their ways, let us not walk in their paths, let us not be partakers of their counsels, lest we be partakers also with them in their punishments. Albeit they agree as brethren in evil, we must take heed we have no fellowship and familiarity with them. This is it which Solomon teacheth, Prov. 1, 10, 11, 15. My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not: if they shall say, Come unto us, let us lie in wait for blood, let us freely hide our selves against the innocent: My son, walk not in the same way with them, draw back thy foot from their path. We are by the corruption of our own nature prone to evil: Now if beside the inward inclination of the heart, there be an outward temptation and allurement, we are carried unto evil as a violent stream, or as the horse that rusheth into the battle. Many have dashed themselves into pieces against this rock of offense. Wherefore, although we hear their words, we must not follow their deeds. Let us not have our ears open to such seducers, but stop them (as the Adder) when they seek to draw us into their counsels and practices. This is that which Jacob speaketh, Genes. 49, 5, 6. Simeon and Levi Brethren in evil, the instruments of cruelty are in their habitations, into their counsel let not my soul come, my glory be not thou joined with their assembly, for in their wrath they slew a man, & in their self will they digged down a wall.

[Verse 5. He sent Messengers to Balaam the son of Beor to call him, saying, Behold there is a people come out of Egypt.] Mark here the resolution and determination of the Moabites, confederate with the Midianites in their distress, fearing Israel, and perceiving themselves not able to meet them in y^e field. They do not seek the Lord in their trouble, but they send out to an old witch, & to a notable Sorcerer. Hereby we see, that it hath been the usual practice and custom of the wicked in their crosses, troubles, and perplexities (seeing no other help) to repair and resort to witches and sorcerers. I say, evil men in dangers and distresses amongst other unlawful means, use to go to coniurers and cunning men, which are very witches and wizards. This we see in the example of Saul, when the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Vrim, nor yet by the Prophets; and when the Philistines assembled themselves, & pressed sore upon him, he sought to the witch at Endor, which had a familiar Spirit, & raised up the devil in the likeness of Samuel. The like is approved unto us by the practice of Amaziah King of Israel, in the second book of the Kings, the first chapter and the second verse: When he was fallen thorough the Lattice window in his upper Chamber which was in Samaria, and thereof grew sick unto the death, he directed Messengers to go and enquire of Baallzebub the god of Ekron, whether he should recover of this his disease.

So did Haman likewise, an enemy of the Jews, and one of the race of the Amalekites, thirsting after the blood of Mordecai, and the destruction of the whole Church, dealt by Sorcerie for to effect his intended purpose, Ester chap. 3, verse 7. And cast Pur, that is, a Lot; to know when he might have a lucky and prosperous time to enterprize this business.

Moreover, it is noted by the Prophet, that when Nebuchadnezzar King of Babel was come out of his kingdom with a mighty host, and stood at the parting of the way, doubting unto what place he should go, whether against the Ammonites, or against the Tribe of Judah, as in the one and twentieth chapter of Ezekiel, and the eleventh verse, He consulted by Diuination, and made his Arrows bright, he consulted with Idolles, and looked in the Liver. Hereunto cometh the threatening denounced against the Egyptians by the Prophet Isaiah, in chapt. 19. verses 3, 4. The spirit of Egypt shall fail in the midst of her, and I will destroy their counsel, and they shall seek at the Idolles, and at the Sorcerers, and of them that have spirits of Diuination, and at the Soothsayers, And I will deliver the Egyptians into the hand of cruel Lord's, and a mighty King shall rule over them, saith the Lord God of hoastes. Thus we see it was very usual with the wicked, when they saw no other help at hand, to seek unto witches, and to resort unto enchanter.

The Reasons hereof are these: first, because they want Faith and belief in God, they trust not in him, they look not for salvation from him, they dare not repose their confidence in him. This we see in Saul, when he had once forsaken God in breaking his commandment by sparing the Amalekites, in offering sacrifice, in killing the Priests, in persecuting the Saints, in refusing to consult with God as a needless thing, and proceeding from one degree of wickedness to another; in the end he said unto his servants, 1. Sam. chap. 28. verse 3. Seek me a woman that hath a familiar spirit, that I may go to her, and ask of her. This is that reason which the Spirit of God poynteth out in the first book of the Chronicles, and the tenth chapter, Saul died for his transgression that he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord which he kept not, and in that he sought and asked counsel of a familiar spirit, and asked not of the Lord, therefore he slew him, and turned the kingdom unto David the son of Ishai.

True it is, we read in the first of Samuel, chapter 28. verse 6. that he asked counsel of the Lord: and here we hear he asked not counsel of the Lord: these are not repugnant and contrary one to another, no more then these words, in the eleventh Chapter of S. Matthew, and the fourteenth verse, John the Baptist is Elias, and John the Baptist is not Elias. Christ said of John the Baptist, This is Elias. John the Baptist said of himself, I am not Elias, John 1, 21. Notwithstanding, here is no contradiction: for Christ understood it one way, & John another. Christ meant he was Elias in spirit, Luke 1, 17. as coming in the spirit and power of Elias. John meant he was not Elias in person, which the Pharisees thought and imagined. So these words seem contrary in show, but are not in substance, and in deed: In deed he asked of the Lord, but not in faith, nor with a purpose to cast himself upon God but in hypocrisy, and with resolution to go to the witch. As Ahab consulted with y^e Prophet of the Lord, but he was before determined what he would do, whatsoever the Prophet should say. Wherefore, that which was not done rightly and religiously, is as it were not done at all, as the Apostle, speaking of irreverent coming to the Lord's Table, saith, This is not to eat the Lord's Supper, 1 Cor. 11, 20. Where he denieth that absolutely, which many did corruptly.

Again, no marvel if the wicked forsake God in their troubles, betake themselves to Sorcerers and Wizards, which are the enemies of God, seeing sorcery is the invention of the devil, and a manifest work of the flesh. If then it came from the father of lies, and be a fruit of our own corrupt nature, it is not strange or to be wondered at, that carnal and corrupt men give themselves over to this practice. This the Apostle teacheth, Gal. 5, 19, 20. The works of the flesh are manifest, which are, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, wantonness, idolatry, witchcraft, and such like. Seeing therefore evil men want faith, joining to God, purifying the heart, working by love, & making up the marriage between God & our souls; and seeing witchcraft is a work of the flesh, it is natural to natural men, in their distresses to use unlawful means, as charming, figure-casting, and such curious acts and arts as are wrought by the device of the devil.

Now let us make use of this Doctrine. First, [Use 1] this condemneth the common custom and practice of the people in our days, who when the hand of God is any way on them or theirs, when they be strangely visited, or their children grievously afflicted, or their Cattle either lost or languish with any extraordinary disease (at which time especially they should acknowledge God's over-ruling and over-swaying providence, that not a silly Sparrow falleth to the ground without the will of our heavenly Father) by and by they send out to that cunning man, or that cunning woman, & so forget God that made them. These men will not tarry the Lord's leisure, nor wait upon his mercy for ease and comfort, they will have present help, or else they will run to the devil, resort to witches, and fetch health out of hell it self. This is the folly and vanity of such as know not God, neither acknowledge that all things are disposed according to his purpose and good pleasure. Let us beware of this sin which is a forsaking of the true God, a renouncing of help from his holy place, and an entertainment of familiarity with the devil, which is the very height and top of all iniquity. This the Lord himself teacheth, Levite. 20, 6, 7. If any turn after such as work with spirits, and after soothsayers, to go a whoring after them, then will I set my face against that person, and will cut him off from among his people: Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be holy, for I am the Lord your God. Now what a foul shame and reproach is it for those who profess Jesus Christ, & have solemnly vowed in baptism to renounce the devil, and the works of the devil, yet in their trials and temptations to consult with the devil, to abjure the Lord of life, and to resort to witches and wizards, the very instruments of the devil, then which, nothing can be imagined more horrible? Let us therefore all take heed of this practice; let us beware of all compact and society with the devil: let such as hate it, learn yet more to hate it, and fly further from it; and such as have followed this way, and followed after these abominations, crave pardon of God, and confess their own wickedness.

Secondly, acknowledge hereby the difference [Use 2] between the godly and the ungodly. So soon as the sons and daughters of God are smitten, they cast their care on God, and quiet their hearts in his will. They turn unto God by true and unfeigned repentance, and bring forth fruits worthy amendment of life. They believe in God, and trust in him for help: they say unto him, Thou art my salvation. As for the ungodly, when they are visited with any judgment, & are punished in soul, or body, or goods, or children, or servants, or cattle, they do imagine that they are hurt by witches, and presently challenge and charge someone or other of witchcraft: then by and by they send out without delay, for fear lest they should come too late, to some cunning man, in whom they repose all their confidence, and so they make the devil their God.

Furthermore, this is their common practice, to foretell things to come, by chattering of Birds, by crying of Ravens, by turning down of Salt, by having a Hare cross him in y^e way, by sudden bleeding, and such like, which are accounted unlucky and ominous signs. Thus doth the devil craftily creep, and cunningly convey himself into the ignorant minds of unbelieving people, by making them retain the remnants of the old superstition, when he cannot prevail to bring in the devilish divination, practiced in former times. Therefore the Lord saith by Moses, Deut. 18, 10, 11.12. Let none be found among you that useth witchcraft, &c. This also the Prophet reproveth, Isaiah 8, 19, 20. The children of God must in all their afflictions ask counsel of God by his word, and by his Ministers. They do not wait upon lying vanity, nor forsake the mercy of God. They say, Though the Lord would kill me, yet will I trust in him, Job 13, 15. Though they be brought to the gates of hell, they will not cease to depend upon him.

Thirdly, we learn in all our dangers to [Use 3] seek comfort at God's hand, while he may be found. This is the use that we ought to make of all our troubles and tribulations, thereby to be drawn and driven nearer unto God, & unto his word, and to stoop down under his mighty hand. This humiliation we see in Job, he did not seek to God's sworn enemies for help, he sought not to cunning men and women, he did not ask counsel of Coniurers, he knew he must seek to the Lord, and lift his eyes to him that had made the wound, saying; The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken, blessed be the Name of the Lord. Job 1, 21. We must not therefore renounce the Lord in the day of our calamities, but cleave unto him with full purpose of heart. Let us say with the Prophet, Why art thou cast down my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? Waite on God, for I will yet give him thanks: he is my present help, and my God. Psalm. 42, 5, 11, and 43, 5. Wherefore, if it be the practice of the wicked in their troubles to seek to the devil; let us on the other side go unto God, Who killeth & maketh alive, who woundeth and maketh whole, who bringeth low, and exalteth: neither is there any that can deliver out of his hand. Deut. 32, 39. 1 Sam. 2, 6. Let us make the word of God our chief stay and comfort. This was the practice of the Prophet David, Psal. 119; 29. Except thy Law had been my delight, I should now have perished in mine affliction. And this is the end for which the Scriptures were penned by the Prophets and Apostles, that in our distresses we should not be left destitute, as the Apostle declareth, Roman. 15, 4. Whatsoever things are written afore time, are written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of Scriptures might have hope. Though God for a small season bring troubles upon his dearest servants, yet he will not always keep them in heaviness, he will return again in compassion at his appointed time. For he endureth but a while in his anger, but in his favor is life: weeping may abide at Euening, but joy cometh in the Morning. Psalm. 30, 5. So then, afflictions shall not always claspe and compass y^e loins of the godly; the days and years, the hours and months of their sorrows are numbered and determined. And albeit we, as evil measurers of times & seasons, do judge every hour a day, and every day be reckoned with us a year of affliction; yet if we had wise hearts to number our days aright, either in respect of God's eternity, or in respect of the due desert of our sins, or in respect of the glory of immortality reserved for us in the heavens, it would make us rest in God, and to possess our souls with patience, & to consider whatsoever our crosses and losses are, yet he is able to recompense them another way, and render them an hundred sold into our bosoms. This we see in the example of Job, before remembered, upon whom the Apostle James willeth us to look, saying; Take my brethren, the Prophets for an example of suffering adversity, and of long patience, which have spoken in the Name of the Lord: Ye have heard of the patience of Job, & have known what end the Lord made: For the Lord is very pitiful and merciful. For albeit he did drink deeply of the cup of afflictions, & God for a season did hide his face from him; yet with everlasting mercy he had compassion upon him, his substance was increased, his cattle were doubled, other sons & daughters were granted, his honor was augmented, and his days were prolonged upon the earth. The like mercy of God we see in the words of the Prophet to Amaziah; he had hired Israelitish soldiers for an hundred Talents of silver, he was commanded to dismiss and cashire them, 2 Chron. 25, 9. Because the Lord was not with Israel, nor with all the house of Ephraim. Then the King said to the man of God, What shall we do then for the hundredth Talents which I have given to the host of Israel? Then the man of God answered, The Lord is able to give thee more than this. This is that which Christ assureth, when he saith to his Disciples, Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath forsaken house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands for my sake and the Gospels, but he shall receive an hundred fold now at this present; houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions, & in the world to come, eternal life. Let us then be patient in our troubles and losses that are sent upon us: let us not seek to restore them and recover out of them by unlawful means, and running to witches: if we depend upon God, we shall not need to be troubled with these worldly respects, he will give us all things necessary, and is able to restore more than he hath taken from us.

Lastly, this Doctrine teacheth us the reason why wicked men do not prosper, but seeking comfort from coniuers and cunning men, are more tormented, even because they forsake the Lord, and seek help where no help is to be had. This appeareth in the examples of Saul and Amaziah, they sought to witches, but they found not that which they sought for. The devil was a murderer from the beginning, is he now become an helper? He was an enemy to mankind, is he now made a welwiller unto them? He was an adversary, is he now reconciled unto us? Nay, he is to be feared, not only whē he ladeth us with sorrows, and laboreth to draw us to despair, but much more when he offereth us his gifts, and pretendeth friendship toward us. And albeit he sometimes speak the truth, and reach out his hand to help us, it is but to deceive and delude us, and to claspe us the faster in both his arms. For as God hath his word & sacraments instituted for the comfort and consolation of his Church; so the devil hath also his means and ways to train up his disciples: he useth certain charms and characters, certain spels and enchantments, which are as it were Satan's sacraments. All these have no power or force at all, unless we believe strongly and steadfastly that they can do us good. As then God requireth faith toward him, so doth the devil require a sound belief in these toies and trumpery, otherwise they are not available. This the very heathen confess, as appeareth in Pliny, that no charms or enchantments can work any cure without belief. But this faith is a false faith, and no better thē the service of the devil; as the believing in God, is a principal part of the worship of God. For we must believe nothing, we must trust in nothing, we must depend upon nothing, against the direct and express word of God: if we do, we enter into a covenant with the devil, and offer sacrifice unto him, which is an abomination against God.

[Verse 6. For I know that he whom thou blessest, is blessed, and he whom thou cursest, shall be cursed.] These words show the great confidence they have in him. It doth not appear that they were spoken to flatter him, or uttered to him otherwise than they thought of him, as Origen supposeth; but are as a reason rendered to induce him to come unto them, because their trust & affiance was set upon him, and they had made him their only refuge in their trouble. Indeed this is peculiar and proper to God alone to be able to bless & curse, to save and to condemn, to bind & to loose, as we have the like speech of the Lord to Abraham, Gen 12, 3. I will bless them that bless thee and curse them that curse thee, and thou shalt be a blessing. This is most truly spoken of God, which they vainly boast of Balaam, who could do nothing against his people, yet they rest and rely upon him. This was a weak and devilish means, thinking to curse the Israelites, and so to prevail against them: yet see what hope they had in him, and how they repose themselves upon this frail and foolish, this wicked and unlawful means. Heereby we learn the vanity and folly of evil men, resting upon most vain things which cannot help them, they trust to a broken Reed, they stay upon an arm of flesh. The wicked enter into lewd and licentious practices, grounding themselves upon weak and vain means that will deceive them. Thus God upbraideth oftentimes the confidence of the Jews in their vain Idols, Let them rise up and help you, let them be your refuge: Go and cry unto the gods which ye have chosen, let them save you in the time of your tribulation. Deut. 32, 37, 38. Judge. 10, 14. So the Philistines gloried and boasted in their great Captain and Champion Goliath, 1 Sam. 17, 10, triumphing upon his strength, insulting over the servants of Saul, reproaching the childhood of David, and defying the host of Israel So the Aramites were proud & confident in their army, resting upon weak means, glorying that the dust of Samaria should not be enough for his host to take every man an handful, and blaspheming with open mouth, that God was the God of the Mountains and not of the Uallies. 1 King. 20, 10, 23. All these examples teach the vanity of proud flesh, resting on weak and deceiveable means, that cannot profit or prosper.

And no marvel if vain men rest upon [Reason 1] vain things, and build upon a sandy foundation, because the GOD of this world hath blinded their minds, that the glorious Gospel of Christ, which is the Image of GOD, should not shine unto thē. 2 Cor. 4, 4. Thogh the Sun shine never so bright and clearly, yet if the eyes be closed, a man cannot see the light thereof. So when Satan worketh strongly in y^e children of disobedience, he prevaieth so far with them, that they glory in their own shame, fortify themselves with weakness, and build their house upon the sand.

Again, they want true faith in God's promises, [Reason 2] to make him their stay & staff to lean upon: for all have not faith (as the Apostle teacheth, 2 Thess. 3, 2.) to rely and rest with confidence upon him. Hence it is, that some trust in Horses and Chariots, some in the strength and multitude of men, some in Princes and Potentates of the world, but never look to the Holy one of Israel. So then, whether we consider the illusion of the devil in blinding, or the want of faith in staying men, we may conclude the former Doctrine, offered to our considerations in the vain confidence of the Moabites and Midianites, that vanity is exalted among the sons of men, that they rest upon a broken hope, and trust in vain things, to their own confusion and destruction.

The uses of this Doctrine are many. First, observe the difference between the stay of [Use 1] the godly, and the hope of the ungodly. The righteous man resteth on God, he maketh him his refuge, he fasteneth his heart on things that the eye seeth not, and trusteth not in any carnal means which are deceitful: but the ungodly (being of the world) rely on worldly means, and put their confidence in an arm of flesh. This difference David acknowledgeth and setteth down, Psal. 20, 7, 8. Some trust in Chariots, and some in Horses, but we will remember the Name of God our Lord: They are brought down and fallen, but we are risen & stand upright. Where the Prophet declareth the diverse practices of the men of this world, & the children of God which are not of this world, and showeth the issue of them both. The godly shall stand upright, and abide unmovable as a Rock, but the other shall fall to the ground, and vanish as a shadow. The godly grow strong, and their defense is sure: albeit many oppose themselves against them, and intend mischief to overthrow them, yet still they rest in God, and remain undaunted, and therefore shall prevail in the end: whereas worldlings that put not their trust in God, but in the things which they behold with a fleshly eye (which are temporal) deceive themselves, and all their hope shall perish.

Secondly, let us mark the certainty of the [Use 2] destruction of carnal men, concluded with God. For if their confidence be weak, and all their hope and expectation vain wherein they trust, then let them not think to escape, whē they promise unto themselves peace and security; suddenly the day of vengeance cometh, and shall light upon them, and all their trust shall be as the Spiders web, which albeit today it be built aloft, yet tomorrow it is swept away. For they lean on a broken staff of wood, which not only cannot help, but the shiuers run into their hand, and wound it. 2 Kings 18, 21. Ier. 17, 5, and 49, 16.

[Use 3] Lastly, let us learn this duty, not to depend on vain things, as riches, friends, honors, and policies, but on God, which is unchangeable & unmovable, and let us resign up ourselves into his hands. This the Prophet urgeth and exhorteth unto in many places, Psal. 62, 8, 9, 10, & 118, 8, 9, and 146, 3, 4. True it is, we are not to refuse good means offered and afforded of God unto us, but are bound to use them as blessings and instruments by which he will help us; for then we trust not in the creature, but in the Creator himself, in whom only we must confess, is the power to help. It is a great cause why God oftentimes blesseth not good means when we trust in them, rob God of his glory, and do not wait for a blessing at his hands. This causeth the Lord to cross us, & to curse his own benefits, because we seek not him, but sacrifice to our own Nets, Hab. 1, 15, 16, & burn Incense to our own yarne, we put our confidence in the outward means, sometimes in Princes, sometimes in policies, sometimes in men, sometimes in Mountains, forsaking God; and therefore when we hope for help by them, God bloweth upon them, and turneth them to our hurt and destruction. Asa King of Judah, Being diseased in his feet, sought not the Lord in his disease, but trusted in the Physicians, 2 Chron. 16, 12, & therefore they could do him no good. The rich man in the Gospel, that said to his soul, Luke 12, 19, 20, 21. Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years, live at ease, eat, drink, and take thy pastime, received this answer, O fool, this nigh• will they fetch away thy soul from thee: then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided? So is he that gathereth riches to himself, and is not rich in God. Wherefore it standeth us upon, to call upon God, to give a blessing upon his own helps and means given unto us: otherwise, though we have all helps in our own hands to defend our selves, and offend the enemy, fenced by the Sea, fortified by Ships, blessed by Princes, backed with friends, stored with munitions, ayded with confederates, and armed with multitudes of men; yet must our comfort, affiance, and confidence be in the Lord alone. Hereunto cometh that which the Prophet Isaiah saith, chap. 31, 3. The Egyptians are men, and not God: and their horses, flesh, and not spirit: and when the Lord shall stretch out his hand, the helper shall fall, and he that is holpen shall fall, and they shall altogether fail.

[Verse 7. And the Elders of Moab and of Midian departed, having the reward of the soothsaying in their hand.] In these words note the policy of the wicked, they lay a bait before him to catch him, and carry not their hands empty, which was a great trial and temptation to a man of his humor, and one of the devils hungry Chaplains. For albeit Wizards and Coniurers, and such as are counted cunning men and women, offer to help others to money, and to enrich them with treasures; yet live most commonly basely and beggarly themselves. Take a view of Witches and Coniurers, that sell their souls to the devil, and receive his mark as the badge of their profession, and behold how wretchedly and miserably they live above all others, in a poor and simple estate, glorying to be able to stand others instead, but not enabled to help themselves. Wherefore, these leaguers knowing the disposition of Balaam, carry their reward and his wages with them, to make him to assent to them, and to grant their petition. This teacheth, That gain and rewards are a great temptation to attempt evil actions. Man (I say) is of himself prone to wickedness, but when gain is offered, and gifts are given, they are a powerful means to deceive and corrupt the conscience. The devil being by long experience privy to our corruption, and knowing how effectual bribes and rewards are to draw men to sin, laid his bait before Christ, and offered all the Kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them if he would fall down and worship him. Mat. 4, 8, 9. So when he entered into Judas, and filled him full of all iniquity, he prevailed this way with him, to sell his Master for money, & to betray him into y^e hands of sinners, saying; What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? This prevailed in Lot; he forsook Abraham, dwelt in Sodom, was carried away with earthly commodities, and smarted for it. This the Apostle noteth to have been the cause that Demas fell from the truth, Because he embraced this present world, forgetting y^t the amity of the world, is the enmity of God, insomuch that whosoever will be a friend of the world, maketh himself the enemy of God. 2 Tim. 4, 10. I am. 4, 4. This also our Savior declareth by the Parable of the rich man, Luke 14, 16. who sent out his messengers and bad his guests, who refused to come, pretending sundry excuses; one said, I have bought five yoke of Oxen, and I go to prove them, I pray thee have me excused: another said, I have bought a Farm, and I must needs go out and see it, I pray thee have me excused: showing hereby, that the cares of the world, the deceitfulness of riches, and the commodities of this life are lets and pull-backs from embracing the Gospel.

The Reasons of this truth are very apparent. First, the profits and pleasures of this present life, are as rank thorns that choke the precious and immortal seed of the word of God, that it cannot grow up in our harts. For when once they are received into the soul, they choke the truth of God, and give a check to the Spirit of God. These two can never lodge together, so fast as one springs, the other withereth. This our Savior teacheth in the Parable of the Sower, where he saith, The seed is of the word of God; that which fell among thorns, are they which have heard, and after their departure, are choked with cares, and with riches, and voluptuous living, and bring forth no fruit, Lu. 8, 11, 14. This caused the Prophet to pray unto God, to incline his heart unto his Testimonies, and not to covetousness. Psal. 119, 39.

Secondly, gifts and rewards put out the eyes of those that saw clearly before, and stop the ears of those that could hear before, and shutteth up the mouth of those that could speak before. If then the receiving of bribes, and taking of gifts, be a setting of justice to sale, if they have force to pervert and corrupt, not only such as are lewd and lime-fingered to draw presents unto themselves, but the wise and righteous: then we must acknowledge them to be dangerous temptations, laid before us of Satan to surprise us by his wiliness. This Moses teacheth the Judges and Officers which were to be chosen in the Cities: Thou shalt not wrest the Law, nor have regard of persons: Thou shalt not take any reward: for gifts blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous. Deut. 16, 19. Neither let them say, though I take rewards, I will never swerve from Justice, for that is to presume vainly of thine own strength, and to give the Spirit of God the lie, that speaketh the contrary.

Let us proceed to the uses of this Doctrine. [Use 1] First, this teacheth us, not to love the world, nor the things of the world, but to beware we be not deluded by the glittering show of this earthly vanity. Take heed of cares and covetousness, which is an immoderate desire of getting & enjoying the wealth of this world. For it stealeth away the heart of man from God and godliness, and maketh him bend the whole course of his life on earthly pleasures. This is the common sickness and disease of this age wherein we live. For give me one among many, that is not overcome with the pleasures of sin, and the profits of the world? It stealeth on such as have sanctified affections, and have escaped out of the filthiness of the world, through the acknowledging of the Lord, and seeketh to overcome them. It is so deceitful and dangerous a sin, that it hath greatly assaulted, and fearfully overcome them after their calling to the truth, and profession of the glorious Gospel of Christ our Savior, and after they have begun to make some conscience of their life and conversation. Nay, such as before their calling and conversation felt no such desires and cares, now begin to be pressed, combred, and tempted with them. For as Satan by all means seeketh whom he may devour, and how he may hinder the repentance of sinners, so when he cannot any longer hold men in horrible sins of Idolatry, Blasphemy, Adultery, and contempt of GOD, then like a wily and subtle serpent, he creepeth in another way before we can espy him: then he suffereth us to hate evil company, surfeiting, drunkenness, riot, and excess, but he driveth to another extremity, and possesseth us with distrustful cares, and immoderate thoughts of this world, to desire greedily, to seek continually, to keep wretchedly, and to depart heavily from the vain and momentary things that perish with the use. And as this is a secret and subtle sin (albeit deeply rooted, yet hardly espied) so is it sildome cured and recovered, because men do not much consider of it & regard it, but please and flatter themselves in it. If we would willingly attain to our former estate, and see the danger of this disease, consider the vanity and uncertainty of all worldly things; compare them with spiritual blessings, and they are as dung and dirt matched with gold and silver: acknowledge that nothing is more unseemly for those whose conversation should be in heaven, then to be plodding upon the earth, & wallowing in the puddle of profane pleasures. Therefore the Apostle John saith, Love not the world, neither the things that are in this world, &c. John. 2, 15, 16, 17. Hereunto cometh the counsel of Paul, 1 Tim. 6.17, 18, 19.

Secondly, seeing gifts and rewards offered, [Use 2] be as a bait laid up to entrap the soul, let us refuse them, and not hunt after them as the manner of some is. Therefore the Prophet said to his servant, detesting his covetous mind, Is this a time to take money, and to receive garments, and Olives, and Vineyards, and Sheep, and Oxen, and men servants, and maid-servants? The leprosy therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee and to thy seed forever. So when Simon the Sorcerer offered to the Apostles money, to have power to bestow the gifts of the holy Ghost, Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou thinkest that the gift of God may be obtained with money. Acts 8, 20. Likewise when the King of Babylon offered unto Daniel, garments of purple, and a chain of gold, for the interpretation of his dream, he would not sell the gift of God, but said, Keep thy rewards to thyself, and give thy gifts to another, to one of thy enchanters, that set to sale their superstitions. Dan. 5, 17. So then the servants of God must always aim at, and seek the glory of God, and their daily prayer must be, That he would give them clean hands and a pure heart Psal. 24, 4. They must not rashly gape after gain, but follow the duties of their calling, with a single and sincere affection, knowing That their labors shall not be in vain in the Lord, and that they have a reward laid up for thē in the heavens. This was it that Moses looked after when he was come to age, refusing the aliance of the King, partaking with the adversity of the Church, and esteeming the rebuke of Christ, greater riches then the treasures of Egypt, for he had respect to y^e recompense of the reward. It is enough for us that we shall be glorified, albeit we be not rewarded at the hands of men.

[Use 3] Thirdly, let us follow after the best gifts which may further the salvation of the soul. Those indeed are good gifts, that make the possessors of them better. This duty the Apostle declareth, 1 Tim. 6, 9, 11. They that will be rich, fall into temptations and snares, and into many foolish and noisome lusts, which drown men in perdition and destruction: But thou, O man of God, fly these things, and follow after righteousness, godliness faith, love, patience and meekness. The things of this life are common to y^e godly and ungodly, nay, oftentimes the ungodly have the greater share and portion in them: let us therefore labor after those graces that accompany salvation. Let us lay up our treasure in heaven, Where neither the Moth nor Canker corrupteth, and where thieves neither dig through, nor steal. Mat. 6, 20. These gifts in the day of trouble, and in the hour of temptation shall minister more comfort and more true peace unto us, then all earthly and transitory things, which end in corruption. But a lasse, if it were possible for us to gain the whole world, what should it avail or advantage us, and afterward lose our own souls? Or what comfort can we take in our riches and possessions, when it shall be said, Thou fool, this night shall they fetch away thy soul from thee, then whose shall all these be that thou hast gathered? For so shall it fall out to all those that are rich, but not in God. Luk. 12, 20, 21. So then, let us learn to trust in the living God, and not in uncertain riches: let us cast all our care upon him that hath cared for us: And let us first of all seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all other things shall be cast upon us. Mat 6, 32.

Lastly, let us learn to bear the yoke of poverty with patience. If we want this worlds goods, let us not be discouraged. God oftentimes recompenceth the want of earthly blessings, with great abundance of heavenly graces, Making the poor of this world, rich in faith, and such as have nothing to inherit, to be heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him. I am. 2, 5. This Christ declareth in the Epistle which he commanded John to write to the Church of the Smyrnians, I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, but thou art rich. Revel 2.9. He maketh them rich in knowledge, in faith, in obedience, and joy in the holy Ghost. He blesseth them with inward comfort, and with peace of conscience that passeth all understanding. He giveth them patience in troubles, meekness of spirit, and an holy contentation, to sustain the weight of their affliction. And albeit they bear a grievous burden, yet he hath eased them of a greater, (to wit) the burden of their sin, which in Christ they feel to be lightened and remitted. This the Apostle testifieth, 2 Cor. 6, 10. We are as dying, and yet behold we live, &c. Hereunto acords the witness of Peter, who albeit he said, Silver and Gold have I none, yet he confesseth, that the Divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the acknowledgement of him that hath called us unto glory and virtue. This is that Jacob persuaded his own heart, and told to his brother, Gen. 33, 11 God hath shown mercy unto me, and therefore I have all things. Seeing therefore riches are as thorns to choke us, and as snares to deceive us, let us learn to be content with our estate, and not greedily desire that which may turn to our destruction.

[Verse 9. Then God came to Balaam, saying, &c.] We shown before, that the purpose of Balaam the sorcerer, was to raise up the God of the Hebrews to consult with him, and to entice him to leave the protection of the Israelites, according to the guise and fashion of Coniurers, as we declared before in the sixth conclusion. For when the unbelievers began to lay siege to their enemies, they called forth the god or goddess of that place, to forsake that people, and come unto themselves. Thus did the devil seduce the world, and set up the kingdom of darkness in the children of disobedience. The Infidels indeed thought they dealt with their god, but they had to do with the devil. We see in all histories, how carefully they resorted to the Oracle of Apollo, as it were to know the will and pleasure of God in things to come; but a lasse (poor souls) they were deluded by the voice of the devil: so that whilst they supposed they asked counsel of one, they received answer of another. Therefore the Apostle Paul saith, These things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not unto God: and I would not that ye should have fellowship with the devils. 1 Corinth. 10, 19, 20. Wherefore, when the sorcerers and soothsayers used to call up the protecting god of their enemies, the devils ordinarily used to return them their answer. But in this place, whilst this enchanter goeth about his superstitious practice, (supposing the true God to be like their false gods of other Nations) & so thinketh to bring up the God of the Israelites, God suffereth not the devil to give him answer, but himself preventeth his apparition, & appeareth unto him, both to procure the good of his own people, and to make known his power: to convince the rage and madness of the enemies, and to declare to all the world, the blessed estate of the Church. Heereby then we learn, in that God came unto him, and shown him what to do, that God sometimes speaketh to wicked men, and revealeth his will unto them. God (say I) not only teacheth and instructeth his own people, and hath appeared to them by visions and dreams, but hath appeared and made known his will, even to his utter enemies, and to open Idolaters that know him not. Thus he spake to Cain, Gen. 4, 6, 7, and reproveth him for his malice against his brother, exhorting to repentance toward God, and reconciliation toward his brother, and threatening him with destruction if he continued. So he dealt with Abimelech, when he had taken away Sarah from Abraham; God came unto him in a dream by night, and said unto him, Thou art but dead, because of the woman which thou hast taken, for she is a man's wife. Gen. 20, 3. So he did to Laban the Aramite, speaking unto him in a dream by night, and saying; Take heed that thou speak not to Jacob, ought save good. Gen. 31, 24. Thus he dealt with Pharaoh King of Egypt, God shown him in a dream what he was about to do, which was a means used of God to deliver Joseph out of prison, where the iron entered into his soul; and to provide for his Church in time of famine that was to come Thus he revealed his will to Necho, King of Egypt, God willed him to make war against the Assyrians, and commanded him to make haste: but Josiah would have stopped his journey, and hearkened not to the words of Necho which were of the mouth of God. The like we may consider oftentimes in the book of Daniel, when Nebuchadnezzar had dreamed a dream which was not human, but divine, neither of a natural cause, but of a supernatural, wherewith his spirit was troubled, Daniel said unto him, Dan. 2, 28. There is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and showeth the King what shall be in the latter days.

The Reasons are evident. First, to set down his great love and favor to his Children. For as God did show himself in sundry manners, and speak by lively voice to the ungodly, so in all the manifestations of himself unto thē, he had respect and reference to his Church, as appeareth in the former examples. Herein therefore appeareth the wonderful love of God to his chosen people, who hath the harts of all men in his own hands, and turneth thē about as pleaseth him. This is that reason which the Prophet pointeth unto, Psal. 105, 13, 14, 15, where speaking of Abraham & his posterity, he saith, Albeit they were few in number, yea very few, and strangers in the Land, and walked about from Nation to Nation, from one Kingdom to another people, yet suffered he no man to do them wrong, but reprov'd Kings for their sakes; saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my Prophets no harm.

Secondly, it pleaseth God to make himself and his great Name known out of the limits and circuit of the Church, to contstrain even the wicked to clear him in his proceedings, to acknowledge his judgments to be just and righteous, & to give sentence against themselves. For God is holy in all his ways, and pure in all his works: he causeth their own consciences to be witnesses against thē, to accuse and to convince them, inasmuch as they become unthankful, and do not glorify him as God, who is worthy of all glory, and never leaveth himself without witness, no not among the Infidels.

Thirdly, he declareth and revealeth himself [Reason 3] to Infidels, not because they be worthy, but because by the mouth of the very Infidels, he will strengthen and confirm his children. True it is, the chief and principal means which he useth, is to teach them by his servants the Prophets and Apostles, by Pastors and Teachers, which he hath set in his church: but he will also use the tongues of profane men to his own glory & comfort of his children. This we see evidently shown, Judge. 7, 13. When Gideon came to the outside of the host of the enemies. Behold, a man told a dream unto his neighbor, and said, Behold I dreamed a dream, and loe, a cake of Barly-bread tumbled from above into the host of Midian, and came unto a Tent, and smote it that it fell down & was overturned: and his fellow answered, This is nothing else save the sword of Gideon, for into his hand hath God delivered Midian, and all his host: When Gideon heard the dream delivered, and the interpretation opened, he worshipped, and returned into the host of Israel, and said, Up, for the Lord hath delivered into your hand the host of Midian. Whereby we see, that God made known his purpose to these unbelievers, for y^e strengthening of Gideon's weak faith, and the enabling of him to the work whereunto he was appointed

The uses follow. First, confess from this [Use 1] dealing of God, not only that he is great in •ion, and high above all the people, but •hat his Name is great & glorious among his enemies.

He reigneth as King, not only over his Church, but over all creatures, and he maketh them to acknowledge his greatness, & stoop down under his hand. •his we see in the Prophet Daniel, chap. 6, 26, 27, by the decree that Darius wrote unto all the people, nations, and languages that dwell in all the world I make a decree, that in all the Dominions of my kingdom, men tremble and fear the God of Daniel, for he is the living God, and remaineth forever, and his kingdom shall not perish, and his Dominion shall be everlasting: he refuseth and he delivereth he worketh signs and wonders in Heaven and in Earth, who hath delivered Daniel from the power of the Lions. The like confession Nebuchadnezzar maketh before, chap. 3, 32, 33. I thought it good to declare the signs & wonders that the high God hath wrought toward me: How great are his signs, and how mighty are his wonders! His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and his Dominion is from generation to generation.

Secondly, we see that God leaveth not men [Use 2] without excuse, because he maketh known his truth unto them: they have some means or other offered unto them, to teach them to acknowledge God, and to glorify him whom they have acknowledged, Rom. 1.20.24. So Christ our Savior speaketh to the obstinate Jews, John, chapter fifteen. verse 22. If I had not come and spoken unto them, they should not have had sin, but now have they no cloke nor color for their sin. Thus was Pilate the Judge of Iewry convinced in his own conscience of wrongful judgment against Christ, being warned of his wife, to whom God had revealed his innocence, that he was a just man as a Lamb unspotted and undefiled. For the Evangelist Matthew testifieth, that when Pilate was set down on the judgment seat, his wife sent to him, saying; Have thou nothing to do with that just man, for I have suffered many things this day in a dream, by reason of him. Mat. 27, 19. This was no mere human or natural dream, arising from multitude of business, or proceeding frō an evil constitution of the body, or evil digestion of meat, or such like ordinary causes as daily befall us; but it was divine from the special instinct of God, and the inspiration of the Almighty. For as God the Father diverse ways approved the innocence of Christ, that it might appear he died not for his own offenses, but for ours, & for our redemption: so did God send terror and trouble upon the Judges wife in the night season, to discover his hypocrisy, & make him without excuse altogether, in condemning the Innocent, that all the water in the wide sea was not able to wash away the guilt of his sin, much less the water he called for to wash his hands before the multitude, when he said, I am innocent of the blood of this just man, look you to it. Math. 27, 24. The stain of sin soyleth the soul, and defileth the conscience, & cannot be washed away with water, which only putteth away the filth of the flesh, and cleanseth the body, but cannot enter any further.

Thirdly, seeing God hath shown and manifested [Use 3] himself to wicked men unworthy of his favor, we may be certain and well assured, that he will never leave his own children destitute of instruction, that call upon his Name. If he deliver his will to his enemies, he will show himself to his friends. If he vouchsafe to instruct such as be strangers, doubtless he will open himself and reveal his secrets to those that be Citizens of his kingdom. If the servant be taught by him, who doth not know what his master doth: he will not pass over his own sons, who shall be heirs of his inheritance that he hath prepared for them that desire the knowledge of his ways. For he will fulfill the desires of them that fear him, he also will hear their cry and will save them, Psalm. 145, 19. Thus did David assure his son Solomon, standing by him when he was going the way of all flesh, If thou seek him, he will be found of thee; but if thou forsake him, he will cast thee off forever. 1 Chron. 28, 2. & 2 Chron. 15, 2, 3. So when the noble Eunuch repaired to Jerusalem, and gave himself to read the Scriptures, that his knowledge might be increased, & the word of God dwell plentifully in him, the Lord sent Philip unto him, who joined himself to his Chariot, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly. Likewise when Cornelius the captain, a devout mā and one that feared God, had prayed to God for further knowledge, that God who had begun his good work in him, would bring him to perfection: he is directed to send for Peter, who should tell him what he ought to do, verifying the saying of Christ, Math 13, 12, and 25, 29. Unto every man that hath, it shall be givē, and he shall have abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath. Would we then know why we are ignorant in the ways of God, weak in faith, bare and barren in the gifts of God? We do not believe the promises of God, offering himself to those that seek him, and opening to those that knock at his gate, neither hunger and thirst after his graces, nor know the want of them in our selves or others.

Fourthly, let us follow the example of God, and do good to those that are evil. He maketh the Sun to rise upon the evil and the good, he sendeth rain on the just and unjust: so should we do good to all, although especially to the household of faith. Math. 5, 45. Gal. 6, 10. Let not their unworthiness hinder our goodness, but labor that our light may so shine before them, that we may gain them to the faith, & heap coals of fire upon their head. Let us admonish and exhort them with all patience and longsuffering, that they may come out of the snare of the devil, of whom they are holden. Let us preach the Gospel in season and out of season, and 1 Cor. 9.22, take all occasions to win those that are without, that by all means we may save some. What though they be not turned and converted to God by the preaching of the Gospel, & we seem to bestow our labor in vain? Many are enlightened of God, that are not saved; they attain to knowledge, that never grow to faith. We are the sweet savor of God, as well in them that perish, as in them that are saved, to the one we are the savor of life to life, and to the other, the savor of death to death. 2. Cor. 2, 15, 16. And this must serve and suffice to comfort us, and strengthen us, to bear out the heat of the day, & the weight of the burden that lieth upon our shoulders; to consider that howsoever our persons be entertained, & our doctrine received, and our strength be wasted and consumed in vain, yet our judgment is with the Lord, and our work with our God, who will reward us according to our labor.

Lastly, seeing GOD maketh known his will and word to wicked and profane men, who are sundry ways enlightened with many gifts of the Spirit: let us not rest in seeking after common gifts, but labor to be partakers of such as are proper to the elect, and do always accompany salvation and eternal life. This is it that the Apostle exhorteth unto, 1. Cor. 14, where mentioning diverse gifts of the Spirit, as the gift of knowledge, y^e working of miracles, the word of wisdom, the power of healing, y^e discerning of spirits, the diversity of toongs, the interpretation of tongues; all wh^{ch} are common to all sorts of men both good & bad: he addeth as the use that now we teach & persuade, But desire you the best gifts, and I will show you a more excellent way. 1 Cor. 14, 30, 31. Let us not therefore content our selves with such knowledge and illumination as the reprobate and ungodly have: but let us covet such as are peculiar and proper to the elect, that we may be the Temples of the holy Ghost, that the Spirit of God may dwell in us, not for a time, but forever; and dispose our hearts as the owner of the house, and govern it wholly after his own will. Let us labor to feel a certain knowledge of our reconciliation to God in Christ, the gifts of regeneration, a dying unto sin, arising up to newness of life, the grace of hearty prayer, comfort in distress, and such like, which y^e elect of God find in some measure wrought in them. These are infallible notes of election: these are the best gifts that y^e Apostle urgeth: these are such fruits of the Spirit, as we must delight in, and follow after. If these be in us, & do abound, we shall have that peace of conscience through them that passeth all understanding; if these be not in us, whatsoever knowledge we have beside, though we have tasted of the heavenly gift, been enlightened by the Spirit, been partakers of the holy Ghost, tasted of the good word of God, and received the Gospel with joy: we shall find no more sound comfort in them, then Balaam did in this place by the revelation which he had received from God.

15 Balak yet sent again moe Princes, and more honorable then they.

16 Who came to Balaam, and said unto him, Thus saith Balak the son of Zippor, Be not thou staide I pray thee from coming to me.

17 For I will promote thee unto great honor, and will do whatsoever thou sayest unto me: Come therefore I pray thee, curse for me this people.

18 And Balaam answered and said unto the servants of Balak, If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of the Lord my God, to do less or more.

19 And now I pray you, tarry ye here also this night, that I may wit what the Lord will say unto me more.

20 And God came unto Balaam by night, and said unto him, Forasmuch as men are come to call thee, rise up, and go with them, but only what thing I say unto thee, that shalt thou do.

21 So Balaam rose up early in the Morning, and saddled his Ass, and went with the Princes of Moab.

Hitherto we have heard the message and sending out to this cunning man, seeking to draw him to come to curse the people. Now followeth the second part of the Chapter, wherein is published, how Balak prevailed with him, by offering him present gifts, and promising to him future honors. And because in the former message, Balaam had rather cunningly delayed, then flatly denied them, and rather craftily allured them, by protracting the time, then withstood them by giving thē the repulse, to the end they should buy his cunning the dearer, as well became a man of his trade and occupation; therefore here the Spirit of God proceedeth to declare how the message is continued, the suite renewed, and their purpose obtained. Wherein we are to observe these three things. First, the departure of the Magitian with the messengers. Secondly, the anger of God for his departure. Thirdly, the entertainment which Balaam sound at y^e hands of Balak, when he was come unto him.

The first part touching the journey of Balaam (having obtained leave, or rather wrung it from God by his importunity) is contained in the words before remembered and recited; wherein behold how the desires of men are kindled & increased by delay, and give them no rest, until they enjoy the things hoped for. Balak the King, and Balaam the false Prophet, are here described, being pointed and painted out unto us in very lively colors. Balak proud in his Riches, ambitious in his honors, prodigal of his gifts, scorning to receive foil or repulse: On the other side, Balaam base in mind, covetous after money, thirsting after honor, as unwilling to give a denial, as the other to take it. Wherefore, as he sendeth a new ambassage, so he employeth more honorable men to credit and countenance the action the better, he furnisheth them with other gifts, he promiseth him in the word of a king to promote him to some place of dignity, and omitteth no human policy to draw him to his lure. The messengers mindful of their charge and commission, and considering the weightiness of the cause, do bend all their wits, and set on work all their cunning to effect the matter committed unto them; they stir him up to be forward, they add great promises of high honors, they allure him with great hope of rich rewards, which were effectual baits to entrap, and indeed the mightiest Rhetoric to persuade, and to prevail with a covetous man.

This was the Message of the King, thus was the employment of the Messengers: Now let us consider the answer of Balaam, wherein a man at the first sight would think he carried himself most uprightly toward men, and most religiously toward God, like a true-hearted man, and a faithful Prophet: he telleth them, If Balak would give him the Riches and revenues of his Kingdom, he cannot go beyond the will of the Lord his God. But all is not Gold that glistereth (as the Proverb teacheth) & sometimes a subtle Serpent lurketh in the green grass. A man would likewise conjecture, that when God bad him go with the Messengers, he was pleased with his journey: but the wrath of the Lord was kindled against him for his disobedience and presumption, which was no better then a tempting of God. So in this answer of the Wizard, we are not to consider the outward sound of the words, but the inward purpose and intent of the speaker. For his reply is thus much in effect, as if he had said unto them, Why do you thus solicit and importune me? Do you think it resteth in my will to come, or not to come? Or if I do come, that I can in this case do what I list? Or that the God of Israel is like the gods of the other Nations? He compelleth me to tarry here, he forbiddeth me to go with you, he is stronger then I, and I am constrained to obey him. You know my desire, but it lieth not in my power to curse your enemies, (unless I can charge and charm their God to leave & forsake them,) albeit the King would give me a great reward: What said I, a rich reward? Nay, if he would fill for me this Palace with silver and gold, replenish all his storehouses with treasures, I cannot accomplish mine own purpose, I cannot perform the desire of mine own heart. The God of the Israelites is too powerful and mighty for me, he it is that restraineth me, by whom notwithstanding I must only work in this my business, or else I cannot profit you nor pleasure myself, nor effect my purpose. Neuertheles be not discouraged and discomfited, I am yet in good hope to prevail, and I will yet try him the second time, although before he utterly denied me to go with you.

This is the sum and effect of Balaam's answer, which consisteth of two parts. First, he stayeth them to be advised what to do. Secondly, he granteth their request, to go with them. Touching the staying of them, when he hath excused his former refusal and denial, to go with the former messengers (inasmuch as he could not alter and change the decree of the Lord, whom he saw to over-rule him in all this business, he promiseth to try him again, whether he could draw him to stand with thē, and to withstand the Israelites. And here again (as before v. 8.) observe how he worketh, not in the open day, and in the light of the Sun, which is the fittest season to work in, but as Coniurers use to do, he chooseth the night season for his purpose. For as Sorcery is one of the fruits of the flesh, and the work of darkness, and proceedeth from the Prince of darkness: so it fitteth best the children of darkness, & serveth to be practiced in the time of the night, according to the saying of him that is the author of life and light, Every man that evil doth, hateth the light, neither cometh to light, lest his deeds should be reproved: but he that doth truth, cometh to the light, that his deeds might be made manifest, that they are wrought according to God. Well, God appeared unto him, and made himself known unto him. whatsoever his purpose and intent were, not by any force of his sorcery, but for diverse and sundry other reasons; first, because he would put an hook in his jaws, and a bridle in his mouth, to stop him from cursing Israel. For his whole drift and meaning was to curse thē, in the accomplishment whereof, he is hindered and stayed by the appearance of God unto him. Secondly, because he would hinder the devil from giving Balaam an answer, and so deluding him, as in former times he was wont to do, when he was hired and sent unto for such purposes. Thirdly, it serveth greatly for God's glory, to make his Name known even among the Infidels, when they should learn, that he is the God that ruleth and ordereth all things in heaven and earth, that disposeth the counsels of his enemies, and maketh them further the good of his people that depend upon him. Yea, when God saw his covetous humor and wicked heart, that he would not rest in his word, nor obey his commandment given unto him, first by way of an Ironicall concession, he biddeth him go, howbeit in his wrath & indignation, but yet reserveth to himself the rule of his tongue, the power of his speech, and the government of all his works, as seemed good in his heavenly wisdom. As if the Lord had said, Forsomuch as the messengers be so importunate with thee, and thou so earnest with me, that thou wilt take no denial, nor rest in my word, nor yield thyself to my charge; go to, go forward, follow thine own course, run on of thine own head: yet will I bridle thy tongue, thou shalt not speak what thou desirest, nor do what thou delightest in, but what pleaseth me. Balaam glad of this answer, and thinking this concession better than a denial, rejoiced in his heart that he had leave, as if there had been some change in God, and told it to the Ambassadors, he prepareth for the journey, sadleth his Ass, and consenteth to go with them, which is the second part of his answer. Here observe with me againe a false finger, most wretchedly dissembling one part of the divine Revelation, imitating therein his master the devil, who in his temptation of Christ, and allegation of the Scripture, omitteth a principal part to pervert the meaning of the words, and to draw our Savior into wickedness. So whereas God had challenged as proper and peculiar to himself, the ordering and disposing of all his affairs, that albeit he had liberty to go, yet his going was with restraint and limitation, that he should speak no more then God should put in his heart: yet the wizard never declareth this to the messengers, which neither pleased him, nor would pleasure them, neither profit him or them. Only he feedeth his own foolish fancy in this, that he was bidden to go, which God before had denied unto him: Now he taketh hold presently on these words, and went with a joyful heart, hoping that in time the same God would suffer him to curse them also. For as God had said at the first, thou shalt not go, yet after said, Go with them: so he supposed, that albeit he had forbidden him to curse the people, yet afterward he hoped to find a change in this, as he thought he had gained in the other, and so conceived a strong imagination, that the Moabites should be fully satisfied, himself plentifully rewarded, and the Israelites miserably cursed and detested. This is the sum and effect of these words: Now let us come to the Doctrines arising out of the same.

[Verse 16. Be not stayed from coming unto me, for I will promote thee unto great honor.] Consider here the covetousness of this false Prophet. He had received a charge and commandment not to go; yet seeing new regards come with y^e new messengers, he would not rest in God's former answer. He had heard the will of God, wherein he ought to have rested: but pricked forward with covetousness, and allured with the recompense of reward, he comforteth the men that were sent unto him, to attain their purpose. This the Apostle Peter noteth, describing the false Teachers, which privily brought in damnable heresies, he saith; They forsook the right way, and have gone astray, following the way of Balaam, the son of Bosor, &c. 2 Pet. 2, verse 15. And the Apostle Jude, speaking of such like Teachers as turn the grace of God into wantonness, and bring upon themselves swift damnation, saith, Woe be unto them, for they have followed the way of Cain, and are cast away by the deceit of Balaam's wages, and perish in the ginesaying of Core. See here the force and power of worldly wealth, it is able to set open the gates that are shut up with bars and bolts. And albeit this point hath in part been handled before: yet because it is offered to our considerations again in this place, it is not to be passed over without further meditation. From hence we learn, that the love of this world, and the hunting after honor and dignity, preferment and promotion, cause men to make shipwreck of a good conscience, and draw them from observing the laws of God, and from resting in the known will of God. Hereunto cometh the reproof of Reuben, who being called, came not to y^e battle fought against the Canaanites, neither furthered the work of God that his people had in hand, but had their minds fastened to their riches, and dwelling in a fat and fruitful soil, they set their hearts upon the world; For the divisions of Reuben were great thoughts of heart: Why abodest thou among the sheep-folds, to hear the bleatings of thy flocks? for the divisions of Reuben were great thoughts of heart. Judge. 5, 15, 16. The like appeareth in the Prophecies of Haggai, where the people fell to build their own houses, and left the house of the Lord desolate, & therefore the Prophet saith, Is it time for yourselves to dwell in your seeled houses, and this house lie waste? What was it that prevailed with our first Parents in the Garden, to entice thē from God, and to hearken to the temptations of the devil, but hoping for honor and advancement in a better condition? This bait was laid before Moses in Pharaohs Court, he was tempted with dignities, allured with delights, provoked with profits: he had laid before him the glory of a kingdom, the pleasures of the Court, and the treasures of Egypt: yet he preferred the suffering of adversity, the shame of the Cross, the fellowship and communion of Saints, that so he might be received into the bosom of the Church. Thus we see, that the love of the world. & the things of this world, drew this Sorcerer away from upright & just dealing If honor had been offered unto him alone, or riches alone, if they had come severally unto him, they had been of great force; but coming jointly together, and rushing upon him as an armed man, they are more forcible and powerful to prevail with him.

The Reasons are to be wisely weighed of [Reason 1] us, to gain our affections to embrace the Doctrine before delivered. First, the setting of the heart upon the love of riches, is the beginning of all evils, and the fountain frō whence sundry mischiefs do proceed, & is available to draw from all good, into all evil. This the Apostle urgeth, 1 Tim. 6, 9, 10. They that will be rich, fall into temptations and snares, and into many foolish and noisome lusts, which drown men in perdition and destruction: for the desire of money is the root of all evil, which while some lusted after, they erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. Where Paul teacheth, That there is no evil which covetousness cannot bring forth. It is a monster of many heads, and a fruitful mother of many bad children. From hence oftentimes come hatred, contention, envy, unthankfulness, treasons, treacheries, perjury, poisoning, deceit, couzenage, oppression, and what not? It bringeth in, as a violent stream, contempt of God, & it turneth God into an abominable Idol. It worketh a wretched trust in earthly possessions & treasures, more then in the living God. It is a bottomless pit of all iniquity.

Secondly, there is a contrariety between [Reason 2] God and the world, and they draw contrary ways, there is no affinity or agreement between them. This Christ our Suiour setteth down, No man can serve two masters, for either he shall hate the one, and love the other, or else he shall lean to the one, and despise the other, ye cannot serve God and riches. Mat. 6, 24. Hereunto cometh the exhortation of the Apostle John, 1 John 2, 15.

The uses are now to be thought and entered [Use 1] upon. First, consider from hence the dangerous estate of the men of this world how hard it is for them to enjoy eternal life and to enter into the kingdom of heaven See therefore, how riches are often reserved to the hurt of the possessors, & wrack of the owners thereof. Many seeking to enri•h themselves, and to scrape much together for th••posterities, do lose the favor of GOD, the quiet peace of a good conscience, and heap to themselves wrath against the day of wrath. This the Apostle James leadeth us to consider, Chap. 5, 1, 2, 3. Go too now ye rich men: Weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you: your riches are corrupt, and your Garments are moth-eaten, your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire: ye have heaped up treasures for the last days. If therefore outward things pull away from God, & hinder the duties of godliness, then assuredly men whose heart is glued unto them, and governed by them (they being made their chief treasures, and the god of their hope) cannot yield to the power of godliness, but by a special and extraordinary work of God in their hearts.

True it is, they may hold the profession, they may receive baptism, they may partake of the Lord's Supper, they may hear y word, they may hold salvation by Christ alone; yet unless they feel a peculiar sanctifying grace of God's Spirit, they shall find an hard entrance into life, and the way leading unto the kingdom of heaven, hedged & stopped up. This our Savior teacheth his disciples, upon the occasion of the young man's sorrowful departure from him, having great possessions, Matth. 19, 23, 24. Verily I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the Kingdom of heaven: It is easier for a Camel to go through the eye of a Needle, then for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. Wherefore, it behooveth all rich men that have this worlds good to pray unto God (being compassed with such dangers, and clogged with such cares) to govern them by his Spirit, and to preserve thē, that they be not overcome with the temptations of the world, and to teach them what it is to abound, Phil. 4, 12. which is far harder to know and practice, then to learn what it is to want.

[Use 2] Secondly, seeing honors and riches choke good things, follow not them that walk that way, and be not drawn away by the evil examples of others, but follow the examples of the godly, according to the exhortation of the Apostle Phil. 3, 17, 18, 19. Many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ, whose end is damnation, whose god is their belly, and whose glory is their shame, which mind earthly things. Hereupon followeth the use before remembered; Brethren, be followers of me, and look on them which walk so, as ye have us for an ensample. How many be there in the Church, that live of the Gospel, and therefore in reason sould preach the Gospel, who corrupt their own consciences, and wound their own souls by hunting after promotion and •ignity, who for money sell their master with Judas and are carried away after the wages of iniquity with Balaam, and gape after gain only like hyrelings, who join Living to living, as it were, house to house, and field to field; eating the fat, and clothing themselves with the wool, But they strengthen not the weak, they heal not the sick, they bind not up the broken, they seek not that which is lost, they raise not such as are fallen. Woe be unto such idle shepherds that feed themselves: Should not the shepherds feed the flocks? Ezek. 34, 2, 3, 4. Let not us walk after such examples, which in the just judgment of God, are reserved to death & shame: who albeit they regard their pleasures above all, yet as they walk inordinately, so the things they rejoice in, shall be their confusion: but let us propound to our selves the examples of the godly, for our instruction and imitation in well-doing, Heb. 6, 12. That we be not slothful, but followers of them which through faith and patience inherit the promises.

Lastly, let us not be immoderately careful [Use] for them. The more careful we are for these things, the more careless we are in better things. The more our affections are set on the earth, the less care we have of heaven & immortality. It is no profit to win the whole world with the loss of our own souls. It is an incomparable loss, greater then the loss of a kingdom. Job had a great loss, when he lost his Sheep and Asses, his Oxen and Camels, his Servants and his Children, Job 1, 14.15. But all this is scarce to be mentioned or spoken of, being compared and laid in the balance with the loss of the soul. Let us therefore be contented, and rest satisfied with the estate wherein God hath set us. A little with a good conscience, and with peace, is better then a stalled Ox, Prov. 15, 17. Godliness is great gain with contentation, 1 Tim. 6, 6. Let us use this world as though we used it not, 1. Cor. 7, 31. All is vanity, nay misery, if we depart not hence in the fear and favor of God. Let us so live, that in life and death we may be the Lord's. Affect not only or chiefly the things of this life, but let us have before us the example of Lots wife, made unto us as a fearful spectacle and terrible monument of carnal and careful thoughts, whose heart was wholly set upon those things which she left behind, and therefore was turned into a pillar of salt. We are borne again unto a better life. If a Princes children should give themselves to base courses, to follow Fairs and Markets, pitching up their standings, and selling pins and points like Pedlers and petty Chapmen, would not all men think it a great reproach and high disgrace to their estate, being royally descended, and borne to a Kingdom? We are the sons and daughters of almighty God, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, and it is his pleasure to appoint us heirs unto a Kingdom. Luke 12, 32. We are a chosen generation, a royal Priesthood Reu. 1, 6. an holy nation, 1 Pet. 2, 9. a people set at liberty, that we should show forth the virtues of him that hath called us out of darkness into this marvelous light. Shall we then being Kings children, and borne to inherit a kingdom not of this world, but of the world to come, so much debase our selves as always to look downward, and go poring and stooping to the earth like brute beasts, and not cast our eyes upward like men, made after the likeness and similitude of God? Let us seek those things which are above, Col. 3, ver. 1, 2. where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God; let us set our affections on things which are altogether above, and not on things which are here beneath upon the earth. It is unfit for our calling and holy profession, evermore to have our hand on our half-penny, making gain to be godliness, and our belly our god, wholly minding earthly & transitory things. Let our conversation be in heaven, Phil. 3, 20 and from thence look for a Savior, to change our frail and mortal bodies, and to make them like to his glorious body: we are free denizens of that City made without hands, whose builder and maker is God, & therefore let us not spend all our days in vanity, and waste our years in folly, Math. 6, 25, 33. nor be excessively careful what to eat, or what to put on: but have our conversation without covetousness, and first of all seek y^e kingdom of God and his righteousness.

Verse 20. [Forasmuch as men are come to call thee, rise up and go with them.] These words contain an ironical concession, not a plain approbation: a figurative tainting, not a simple allowing of his journey, or a giving of him liberty to depart. As if the Lord should have said: If being warned of me thou wilt take no warning, but art resolved what to do, and standest firm in thine heart to be gone; go too, proceed in thy purpose, and walk in the ways of thine heart, but know, that thou makest hast to thine own confusion, and that all thine endeavors shall turn to thy destruction. Thus we see God reproveth him by a tant, because he rested not in the will of God before delivered unto him, and uttered in a plain manner. Thus, when as men receive not the love of the truth that they may be saved, God sendeth them strong delusions that they might be seduced and deceived. Heereby we learn, That all reproving of sin and of sinners by way of tainting, is not unlawful, and unbeseeming the profession of godliness. All jesting and mocking are not forbidden to be used & practiced of the godly. This we see by the example of the Lord himself, Judge. 10, 14. Go and cry unto the gods which ye have chosen, let them save you in the time of your tribulation. Thus Moses speaketh to the people, Deut. 32, 37, 38. Where are their gods, their mighty gods in whom they trusted? Let them rise up and help you, let them be your refuge. The like we see in Job, vexed unjustly, and censured rashly by his friends, when he saith, Job 12, 12. Indeed because that ye are the people only, wisdom must die with you. So the Prophet Isaiah speaketh to the enemies of the Church, Isaiah. 8, 9. Gather together on heaps O ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces, gōrd yourselves, take counsel together, pronounce a decree yet it shall not stand. Thus the Prophet dealeth with Amaziah, 2 Chron. 25, 7, 8. Let not the army of Israel go with thee, for the Lord is not with Israel: if not, go thou out, make thyself strong to the battle, but God shall make thee fall down before the enemy, for GOD hath power to help, and to cast down. And if we would farther see the warrant of this practice in reprovng, we have examples of it in Christ our Savior, when he said to Judas, That thou doest, do quickly, John 13, 27. And when he spake to his disciples, Sleep henceforth & take your rest: behold, the hour is at hand, and the son of man is given into the hands of sinners. Al which examples, in the old and New Testament, of God, of the Prophets, of Christ, and other holy men, serve to teach us, that all reprovng of sin by sharp tants, is not unlawful and unwarrantable.

The Reasons justifying this practice, are: [Reason 1] First, to make Idolaters and wicked men, to see their sins, and the greatness of them, to move them to repentance, and to come out of them, to bring them to be ashamed of their offenses, and so to move them to turn unto God. This the Prophet Isaiah urgeth, chap. 46, 6, 7. They draw gold out of the bag, and weigh silver in the balance, and hire a Goldsmith to make a god of it, and they bow down and worship it: they bear it upon their shoulders, they carry & set him in his place, so doth he stand and cannot remove from his place, though one cry unto him, yet he cannot answer, nor deliver him out of his tribulation: Remember this, and be ashamed, bring it again to mind, O you transgressors. This then is one reason why the holy Ghost reproveth and reproacheth in a deriding manner, to bring offenders to true wisdom and to open their eyes which are blinded, that they see nothing.

Secondly, an holy deriding may be used [Reason 2] to disgrace and discountenance sin, and to set it out in his colors. For, when it is magnified among the sons of men, & followed with all greediness, the servants of God must uncover, and uncase it and lay it open, that others may eschew it. Thus we see the prophet Elijah dealeth with the Priests of Baal, he scoffeth at their simplicity, he derideth their folly, and in an holy manner triumpheth over their vanity, when he saith, 1 Kings 18, 28. Crie a loud, for he is a god; either he talketh, or pursueth his enemies, or is in his journey, or it may be that he sleepeth, and must be awaked. Where he doth not stir them up to their Idolatry and idolatrous worship of Baal, nor allow their superstitious prayers, but mocketh at their madness, to disgrace their wickedness, and to reproach their falling from the true God.

The Uses are to be considered in the next [Use 1] place. First, this teacheth, that the Minister: of the word, may in their teaching use this figure when they deal with an obstinate people, and reprove obstinate offenders. True it is, the man of God should be patient toward all men, 2 Tim. 2, 25: suffering the evil, instructing the ignorant, and waiting for the repentance of such as are fallen: but when they refuse to hearken or pull away their shoulder, and stop their ears, and make their harts as an Adamant stone, it is both lawful & requisite after a sort to insult over them, not that their persons should be scorned and contemned, but that their profaneness should be corrected and amended.

Thus doth Solomon deal, Eccl. 11, 9, when he hath to deal with proud and insolent young men, that think themselves privileged by their age, to run riot with all greediness, and without all controllment, Rejoice O young man in thy youth, and let thy heart cheare thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know that for all these things God will bring thee to judgment. This we see practiced by the Apostle, 1 Cor. 24, 38. If any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant. And the Apostle John speaketh after the same manner, Revel. 22, 11. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still. Whereby we see, that the Spirit of God doeth not give leave, neither doth encourage, or command men to be filthy or unjust; but seeing them in a settled rage and willful course, obstinately bent and resolved to go forward, that they will not be hindered, nor hearken unto any wholesome counsel, he telleth them they may proceed, but they shall smart for it in the end. If the Ministers in the zeal of God's Spirit, tread in these steps, & follow the example of God, of Christ, of the Prophets and Apostles, they have a fair warrant set before them, & cannot be reprov'd for this imitation. They may say unto the stubborn and stiff-necked contemners of the word, If ye will needs be ignorant, be ignorant still, but God will find you out in your blindness and ignorance. If ye have the light, and yet will willingly and willfully shut your eyes, go forward, yet God will open them in the day of his visitation, that ye shall see your own misery. If ye have the bread of life, and food of salvation brought unto you, and yet ye will needs sterue and famish, what remedy? Pine away your souls, and sterue them: but know, that it will be bitter in the latter end.

[Use 2] Secondly, seeing this scoffing at evil is lawful, let men take heed they deserve not thus to be dealt withal. When we have the word of God in all meekness and gentleness, with all patience and long suffering offered unto us, let us rest in it, and not reject it from us, let us believe it, and obey it, and grow every day from faith to faith. When Micaiah the Prophet saw Ahab addicted to flatterers and false informers (two very dangerous plagues to Princes) he judged him not worthy to have the truth revealed unto him, and therefore in derision he saith unto him, Go up and prosper, and the Lord shall deliver it into the hand of the King, 2 Kings 22, 15. It is a grievous thing to be scorned and derided, and we hardly brook that indignity. If then, we would not be so roughly and tantly handled in the ministry of the world, let us hear the voice of God while it is called today, lest being hardened through the deceitfulness of sin, the Lord be compelled so to deal with us. It is used for our benefit and salvation, albeit it be bitter and sharp. But many times bitter things be most wholesome and healthful. And this answereth the objection of carnal men, when they are admonished to turn to the Lord with all their hearts, to attend to the ministry of the word, and to walk before the Lord with a perfect mind; they answer, If I shall come to be a professor, and make profession of the word, I shall be mocked, everyone will deride and flout at me; I shall be a laughing stock to the world, I shall become a Proverb unto them, and the drunkards will sing songs against me. But choose whether thou wilt endure a reproach here for a season, or be mocked of the Lord forever. It is better for thee here to suffer affliction with the people of God, then to have the Lord scorn thy folly forever. Therefore, the wise man teacheth us this doctrine, Prov. 1, 25, 26. Because ye refused my counsel, and would none of my correction, I will also laugh at your destruction, and mock when your fear cometh. And the Prophet David declareth, that when the wicked band themselves against the Lord, and against Christ, He that dwelleth in the Heavens shall laugh, the Lord shall have them in derision, Psal. 2, 3, 4.

True it is, this is spoken according to our capacity and understanding: not that there is any disposition of laughing, or affection of scorning in God, but he leaveth men in their miseries, and maketh them oftentimes a mocking stock to the world. They shall have no comfort from his presence, he shall rejoice in the day of their calamity, which shall be to them as bitter as death, and as hard to be born as hell it self.

Lastly, hereby a door is not set open to fleering and flouting one of another, which proceedeth from the scum and froth of many men's wits. For, as all deriding is not unlawful, so all taunting is not lawful. Wherefore, whatsoever mocking proceedeth from the gall of our hearts, from the contempt of our brethren, from pride, disdain, lightness, bitterness, biting, disgracing, and reproaching of others, cannot stand with our holy profession, but is a fruit of the flesh, & a corruption of the old man, which must be pulled up. Therefore the Apostle writing to the Ephesians, and instructing them to walk in love, as Christ hath loved us, saith, Fornication and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let them not be once named among you as it becometh Saints, neither filthiness, neither foolish talking; neither jesting, which are things not comely, but rather giving of thanks. Where he doth not simply forbid all mirth and jesting, but the peevish humor of many men that delight in jesting and gibing against others, who regard not what jests they break upon their brethren, so they may revenge their own malice, and disgorge the venom of their own hearts. These men seek to build up their own names by the ruin of others, and desire to grace themselves by the disgrace of others. Such persons may well be in love with their own wits, but all discreet men may espy the want of much wisdom in them. This biting and bitterness one toward another cannot stand with our calling, to the truth and profession of the faith. We have not so learned Jesus Christ. We must account the good name of our brethren, as their chiefest Jewel. The credit and reputation of many men is as their chiefest Jewel. Therefore the wise man saith, Prov. 22, 1. A good name is to be chosen above great riches, and loving favor is above Silver and Gold. Eccles. 7, 4. Wherefore, let no man think to raise himself by the fall of others, or to gain estimation to himself by the discredit and defamation of other men.

[But only what thing I say unto thee, that shalt thou do.] In the•e words, God before hand instructeth and informeth Balaam what shall be the event and issue of all his desires, namely, that howsoever he coveted to curse the people of God, and so to earn his wages and hire by the practice of wickedness; yet he should be compelled and constrained against his will, to wish the flourishing estate of the Church, and to pronounce the blessing with his own mouth. Howsoever therefore he were maliciously bent, and carried with extreme fury and frenzy against the godly, yet God declareth that all his rage should turn to the good of the Church, and his tongue should vary from his heart. Hereby we learn, That the malice of the wicked, how great soever it be, is limited and restrained. Albeit the enemies of the Church be oftentimes suffered to proceed and prevail, and to lay very great afflictions on the servants of God, yet all their power is stinted and determined, & they can proceed no further then God suffereth and permitteth. This truth is taught us in sundry Scriptures for our instruction. When Laban intended evil against Jacob, God appeared unto him, and said, Gen. 31, 24 Take heed that thou speak not unto Jacob ought save good: and Jacob telleth him, that except the God of his father, the God of Abraham and the fear of Isaac had been with him, he would have sent him away empty; but God beheld his tribulation, and the labor of his hands, and rebuked him yesternight. When Pharaoh and the Egyptians pursued after Israel with horses and Chariots, and sought their utter destruction, God fought for his people while they stood still and held their peace, Exod. 14, 25. This is it which our Savior signified when y^e Pharisees said unto him, Luke 13, 32, 33. Depart and go hence, for Herod will kill thee, Then he said unto them, Go ye and tell that fox, Behold, I cast out devils, and will heal still today and tomorrow, and the third day I shall be perfected: nevertheless, I must walk today, and tomorrow, for it cannot be that a Prophet should perish out of Jerusalem. So Isaiah comforteth the messengers of Hezekiah against the blasphemies of Sancherib, against the dangers of the city, and against his railing on and reproaching the living God, 2 Kin. 19, 6, 7. So shall ye say to your master, Thus saith the Lord, Be not afraid of the words which thou hast heard, Behold I will send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a noise, and return to his own land, because he hath raged against me, and his tumult is come up into my ears, therefore I will put my hook in his nostrils & my bridle in his lips, and I will bring him back again the same way he came. All these things teach us the truth of that doctrine which we have in hand, namely, that howsoever the ungodly rage and fret against the church of God, yet their malice and madness is limited, and the time of the continuance thereof appointed of God.

The reasons to confirm our faith farther [Reason 1] in this point are these. First, the providence of God ruleth all things in heaven and earth, the least and smallest things are ordained and ordered by him, nothing falleth out by chāce, neither is whirled about in the wheel of fortune. The Birds fall not to the ground, the hairs fall not from our heads without the will of our heavenly Father, Matth. 10, verse 30. Howsoever therefore the enemies of the Church do take crafty counsels, and make bloody decrees against the peace and prosperity thereof, yet they can do no more then God hath concluded, and then he hath in his purpose determined. This the Apostles acknowledge, Acts 4. verse 2^a, in their prayer to God: Doubtless against thine holy Son Jesus, whom thou hast annoⁿted, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel gathered themselves together, to do whatsoever thine hand and thy counsel hath determined before to be done. They cannot satisfy th^eir own lusts, nor accomplish the desseignes of their own hearts, their rage is restrained as with a bit and bridle, that it should not hurt the people of God.

Again, marvel not that the course of wicked [Reason 2] men is stopped by the hand of God, for the devils are limited, and all the power of darkness is curbed, so as the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church. We see this in Job 1, 12. & 2, 6. he could not slay his servants with the sword, burn up his sheep with fire, spoil him of his Camels by Robbers, destroy his children with winds, and touch his person with boils, before the Lord had said unto him, Loe all that he hath is in thine hand, but save his life. Likewise when the Lord Jesus dispossessed the two possessed with devils which came out of the graves very fierce, so that no man might go by that way, Matth. 8, 31: the devils could not enter into the heard of Swine, before they had besought him to suffer them to enter into them: so that we may be assured, that howsoever they be bloody spirits, and greedy to hurt, yet their tyranny is bound up, being compassed within the listes and limites of the power of God, and enclosed within the circle of his jurisdiction, that they cannot annoy such as are created after the image of God, and redeemed with the blood of Christ, without the divine permission. For, the Prince of this world is judged, and cast out, John 12, 31. and 16, 11. his weapons are taken from him, & the spoils divided, his works are dissolved and loosed, his head is bruised and broken.

[Use 1] The uses of this Doctrine minister great comfort and instruction unto us. First, we learn from hence to acknowledge the infinite power of God above all earthly power that is in flesh and blood. True it is, the rage of the enemies is great, and the gates of hell are set wide open against y^e church of God, yet they cannot prevail or have the upper hand, for God is with us, his power is manifested, and his malice is abridged. It hath always been an hard matter for men to stay in dangers and fear; the remnants of infidelity and the dregs of distrust, do rest and remain in the best men. The truth and omnipotency of God is hardly yielded and consented unto, as appeareth in the example of Moses & Aaron, Num. 20, 12. They believed not God to sanctify him in the presence of the children of Israel, but spake unadvisedly with their lips. The like we see in the siege of Samaria, when the Lord promised, that tomorrow that time should be great plenty of Barley and fine flower to be sold, a Prince answered and said, 2 Kings 7, 2. Though the Lord would make windows in the heaven, could this thing come to pass? This appeareth in Zacharias, Luke 1, 18. when God promised him a son in his old age, he said, How can this thing be? And whereby shall I know this? When the Israelites were pursued & overtaken by the host of the Egyptians, and were in present danger of death, they wer so^e afraid, and forgot the power of God, able to deliver them. So the experience of our own hearts in all dangers and difficulties, that ordinarily fall upon us, doth tell us how hard it is to rest upon God, as an all-sufficient helper in time of need. We distrust God's promises, and fear in every evil that he will not or cannot succor us. Forasmuch therefore as we are privy to our own corruptions, being ready to think our help and deliverance to be impossible, let us in all troubles build on God's power, as on a firm rock and sure foundation, that can never be removed.

Secondly, hereby we have a great comfort in our troubles and sufferings, to consider the strong hand of God prevailing over them that do insult and triumph over the Church. The years and days, the very hours & moments of time touching the Churches afflictions are determined of God, so that the ungodly shall rage but their time. This is it which God speaketh to Abraham, Gene. 15, 13. That his seed should be a stranger in a Land that is not theirs, four hundred years, and shall serve them. Thus when the people of Israel were carried into Babylon, The days of their captivity are determined to be seventy years, Ier. 25, 11, 12, & 29, 10. When Pilate the Lieutenant of the Romans, and Judge of Judea had said unto Christ, John 19, 10, 11. Knowst thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to loose thee? Jesus answered, Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above. Let us therefore go constantly forward in our vocation, to do our duties, to speak freely in the midst of the enemies, though they do hear us & sit among us. This we see to have been the behavior of Christ, John 8, 20, 21. These things spake Jesus in the treasury as he taught in the Temple, and no man laid hands on him, for his hour was not yet come. Where we see, the place, the persons, the time, seemed to favor his enemies: yet he taught boldly, and preached openly amongst them. This example must be our imitation. Though we live among many dangers, & are enclosed with a thousand deaths, yet we must know that we are protected, regarded, & defended of God, we are by his right hand made able to stand, when so many devices of the ungodly assault us, and so many horns of the wicked push at us to overthrow us. It is an admirable and marvelous thing, considering the enemies of the Church and Gospel (both open and secret, professed and close, known adversaries, and close brethren, all mischeeuous, having also such men and means to work their malice) that any Church continueth in the world, being as a little flock among many wolves. Wherefore, if there be any light of the Spirit of God in us, the consideration of this, that their rage is determined, must give courage and constancy both to us that be teachers, and to you that be hearers, and work in us all assurance of help and assistance, to come from the highest heavens.

Thirdly, this doctrine is a great terror to [Use] the wicked persecutors and malicious enemies, to consider their estate, and to remember their condition, that they cannot do what they list, but what God will, they cannot execute wh• they please, but what pleaseth God. This limitation of their rage & abridgement of their doings, is sufficient to dane their hearts, and to pull them back from fighting against God. If they could prolong their days and double their strength, as they can increase their malice, and double their devices, they might have some cause to insult and triumph over the faithful. But seeing they are stinted as the hireling that hath his task shared out unto him, it serveth notably to abate their pride, to asswage their malice, & to confound their devices and enterprises against the servants of God. They are not their own men, they are not free and at their own liberty, God holdeth them in, and tieth them short, that they cannot rage and reign at their own pleasure. Herod and Pontius Pilate, the Gentiles and the Jews, could do no more then God had determined. Let all the ungodly remember this doctrine, and consider it in their hearts, it will be a notable bridle to restrain them from all evil practices, and to stop the course of their corrupt purposes. They cannot prevail over the Saints of God, albeit for a time they have the upper hand. The time shall come when they must give an account of all their works.

Lastly, seeing the times of the enemies [Use 4] prevailing be set, let us not fear the faces of men, they can but run the race that God hath set them, albeit they rush forward like blind men, and think themselves able to do great things, yet their power is subject to an higher power, and their malice shall quickly have an end•. If a Prince should encourage any of his poor subjects against the might and oppression of any of his Nobles, and say• unto him; Fear not his fear, I will be thy defense and protection, I will stand between thee & danger, he shall do thee no harm: would not this make him joyful, and banish all fear from him of being overborne and over-matched by his might? But this is our case and condition lying under the cross, afflicted of enemies, and persecuted for our profession: the Lord hath promised to bear us out, and to be a buckler round about us. If then the Lord be our light, and our salvation, whom shall we fear? If the Lord be the strength of our life, of whom shall we be afraid? Psal. 27, 1. Therefore, Christ Jesus comforting and imboldning his disciples against dangers to come, Matth. 10, 25, 26, 28, 31. & forewarning them that they should be delivered up to the Councils, be scourged in the Synagogues, be brought before Governors, and be hated of all men for his names sake, exhorteth them to patience & courage; I care them not, for there is nothing covered that shall not be disclosed; nor hid, that shall not be known: Fear ye not them that kill the body, & are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell. We are safe under God's shield, they cannot cut off one hour of our life, they cannot shorten one moment of our time. But God will cut them off when it pleaseth him, & will stop them at a sudden, that they shall proceed no further. This is that which was laid before the Church of the Smyrnians, to assuage their sorrow, Reuelat. 2, 10, Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: Behold it shall come to pass, that the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried, &c.

12 But the wrath of God was kindled because he went: and the Angel of the Lord stood in the way to be against him as he rode upon his Ass, & his two servants were with him.

23 And when the Ass saw the Angel of the Lord stand in the way, and his sword drawn in his hand, the Ass turned out of the way, and went into the field: but Balaam smote the Ass to turn her into the way.

24 Again, the Angel of the Lord stood in a path of the vineyards, having a wall on the one side and a wall on the other.

25 And when the Ass saw the Angel of the Lord, she thrust her self unto the wall, and dashed Balaam's foot against the wall: Wherefore he smote her again.

26 Then the Angel of the Lord went further, and stood in a narrow place, where was no way to turn either to the right hand, or to the left.

27 And when the Ass saw the Angel of the Lord, she lay down under Balaam: therefore Balaam was very wroth, and smote the Ass with a staff.

28 Then the Lord opened the Mouth of the Ass, and she said unto Balaam, What have I done unto thee, that thou hast smitten me now three times.

29 And Balaam said unto the Ass, Because thou hast mocked me, I would there were a sword in mine hand, for now would I kill thee.

30 And the Ass said unto Balaam, Am not I thine Ass which thou hast ridden upon since the first time unto this day? Have I used at any time to do thus unto thee? Who said, Nay.

31 Then the Lord opened the eyes of Balaam, and he saw the Angel of the Lord standing in the way with his sword drawn in his hand. Then he bowed himself, and fell flat on his face.

32 Then the Angel of the Lord said unto him, Wherefore hast thou smitten thine asse three times? Behold, I came out to withstand thee, because thy way is not straight before me.

33 But the asse saw me, and turned from me now three times, or else if she had not turned from me, surely I had even now slain thee, and saved her alive.

24 Then Balaam said unto the Angel of the Lord, I have sinned: for I wist not that thou stoodest in the way against me: now therefore if it displease thee, I will turn home again.

35 But the Angel said unto Balaam, Go with the men, but what I say unto thee, that only shalt thou speak. So Balaam went with the Princes of Balak.

In the words going before, we have seen the departure of Balaam with the Princes: Now, we are to consider what befell him in the way in these words, and what entertainment he had at the kings hands, when he came to his journeys end, in the words following, to the end of the Chapter. Touching the former point, we see the wrath of God breaketh out and proceedeth against him for his going. For this journey being undertaken with a resolute purpose to curse the people, as Moses testifieth, Deut. 23, 5. hoping to prevail with God to have his consent; we see how God setteth himself against him, and reproveth him two ways: first, by the Ass, and afterwards by the Angel: and yet in the end sendeth him away to those his masters that had hired him.

[Object.] But here the question may be asked, Why God was angry? and wherefor his wrath was kindled against him, seeing he had granted him leave before, saying; Rise up, and go with them? if then God consented to his departing, why is he offended with his going? [Answer.] I answer, God did never simply allow and approve of his journey, but Balaam through ambition & covetousness rushing into evil, & not hearkening to the voice of God restraining him, he permitteth many things which he doeth not approve, and granteth the petitions of men, sometimes in wrath and indignation, as when he gave the people flesh in the wilderness, and set over them a King after the manner of the Nations round about them, Numb. 11, 12. So we have shown before, how God ironically taunteth and derideth the importunity of this sorcerer, but never gave his consent and approbation unto his wicked intent; and therefore the judgment of God attended upon him as a Sergeant to arrest him as he sate on his beast, and as his two servants waited upon him. For to the end he might be the better accepted of the King, and respected in his divination, the cunning man goeth with his two men to attend upon his worship. The true Prophets of God (as we read in the holy history) had but one man, as Gehazi served Elisha, 2 Kin. 3, 11. & Elisha poured water on the hands of Elijah, 2 King, 5, 20. & 6, 17. so Baruch was y^e servant of Jeremiah, & Joshua of Moses. Exod. 24, 23. Nu. 11, 28. Deut. 1, 8. But this false Prophet is attēded with his two servants, whose praise and estimation was from men, & not of God.

Now the wrath of God appeareth against him two ways, and both miraculous and extraordinary. For first, he is convinced by the dumb beast that bare him, who had more wit then the wizard that rod upon her. Therefore the Apostle teacheth us, 2 Pet. 2, 15, 16. That because he loved the wages of unrighteousness, he was rebuked for his iniquity, for the dumb beast speaking with man's voice forbad the foolishness of the Prophet. Secondly, he is reprov'd of y^e Angel of God, who was ready to smite him, & to destroy him for his iniquity. Touching the first point, the Spirit of God setteth down three marvelous things to be thought upon of us; the quickness of her sight, the speech of her tongue, and the discourse of reason, or y^e communication between her and her master. The sharpness of her eye is first of all noted as strange in that beast, who saw that which Balaam could not see. The Ass by nature is dull and heavy, slow and sluggish by kind above every beast of the field, both slow paced, and dim sighted: therefore where as she saw the Angel, her eyes must of necessity be opened of God, and endued with force above the course of hir nature; so that when the Angel stood armed in the way three times with his drawn sword to smite Balaam, she three times avoided the stroke by declining out of the way, & at y^e third time saved her master by sinking down under the burden: and yet for hir good service was three times smitten with the staff in his hand. And as God opened her eyes, so also he opened her mouth, which is a wonderful miracle above nature; and gave her power to speak, which is a peculiar preeminence of mankind. True it is, God hath given many gifts to the unreasonable creatures, wherein also they excel man; yet to none hath he given the use of speech and benefit of language but unto man only, among all the works of his hands. And as he gave her the use of the tongue to speak with man's voice, so he gave her the benefit of reason, to speak with understanding. For she discourseth as a reasonable creature, and showeth forth the Art of concluding from many particulars, clearing her self of present blame by her by-past actions, and appealing to him as a witness and judge in that matter. Where she reasoneth after this manner:

If I have done thee from the first time I came into thy possession hitherto faithful service, then am I at this present faultless:

But I have hitherto served thee faithfully,

Therefore, I have not at this present mocked thee.

The assumption is proved and confirmed by an human testimony, for she appealeth to Balaam to speak his conscience what he had ever found in her. And albeit God stirred up the Ass to be his schoolemistris, & wrought a wonder to check him to his face, yet the wretch is not moved at the matter, nor stirred up at the miracle to lay his hand on his mouth and give glory to God, but bursteth with anger, threateneth with words, and striketh her with a staff, & recompenceth evil for good. He chafeth and fretteth that the asse had mocked him: he considereth the fact of the asse, but marketh not his own fault, which was far worse, who had mocked with God. For y^e authority of God is greater over man, then of man over his beast: and there is a greater difference and disproportion between the Creator and the creature, then is between creature and creature. There is greater equality between man & beast, between the work & the workman, between the potter and the clay between the saw and him that moveth it, between the Axe and him that heweth with it: then is between man whose breath is in his nostrils, and the eternal God, who is even a consuming fire. For every creature is finite, God is infinite, between which is no equality or proportion: so that the asse deserved not to be smitten of the man, but the man deserved to be stricken of God, as the Angel witnesseth.

But how could the Ass speak? or how could a brute beast, which is without reason, as the Apostle teacheth, discourse and conclude? Or where learned she the art of Logic, which is nothing else but the art of using reason, teaching to invent arguments, and then dispose them in order with good judgment? This seemeth to minister matter to Atheists and Libertines to deride all Religion, and to scoff at the Scriptures, taking occasion at this and other like places. For when they hear that an Ass could speak and reason the case with her master, they believe it no more then one of Esopes Fables, or a strange tale out of Ouids Metamorphosis, where trees, and birds, and beasts are made to speak. I answer, touching our selves that are nourished in the bosom of the Church, and been instructed in the Gospel of Christ, and trained up in the school of the Prophets, it is sufficient for our faith and staying up our consciences in the truth, to know that which Moses mentioneth verse 28. the Lord opened the mouth of the Ass, the which was as easy for him to do, as to give us reason and reasonable souls at the first. For when thou hearest that GOD opened the Asses mouth, it is as much as if it had been said, He that is almighty, powerful, and all-sufficient did it, that is without want or weakness, with whom nothing is impossible, who sitteth in heaven and doth whatsoever he will above the course and order of nature. And albeit we have not any like example in former times, nor in the generations afterward of the like work of God, yet whence hath mankind the use of speech and understanding, but that God gave it in the creation? We see sometimes he denieth it to some men that are borne deaf and dumb, and cannot speak, to the end we should acknowledge speech to be the gift of God, rather then of Nature. Sometimes also the Lord hath taken away the use of the tongue for a time, as we see in Zachariah, and peradventure also of his ear that he could not hear, inasmuch as the people spake not to him when they came together to be present at the circumcision of his son, but made signs to him how he would have him called. As then the Lord denieth the gift of speaking, and depriveth of it where he once hath given it: who can limite the holy One from bestowing speech, & framing the tongue of a beast to utter a voice and communication, as with the tongue of a man? or to give to the creature inferior in nature, that which is proper to the superior? For albeit God hath set, & settled an order in nature, yet himself is not ever bound unto it. Neither is this miracle in this dumb beast more marvelous, then that of Nebucadnezzar, he was driven from the society of men, he did dwell with beasts, he did eat grass like the Ox and the Ass, his body was wet with the dew of heaven, till the hair of his head did grow as Eagles feathers, and the nails of his fingers like birds claws, and to conclude, he wanted all use of reason and understanding. Now the Ass did no more in this place resemble man, then this man did resemble a beast: as the Ass had reason given her, so had the King his understanding taken from him, being stricken by the hand of God with madness, and bereft of common reason and judgment, for it is said afterward, that his understanding was restored. Besides, we see the devil in the beginning used the tongue of the serpent to speak to our first parents. If Satan did this in the serpent, shall not the author of Nature be able to do it in the tongue of the Ass? for as the serpent by nature can do no more but hiss, so the Ass can do no more but bray. Shall we not ascribe so much to God, as to the devil? Could the devil use the serpents tongue as his instrument, and cannot God open the mouth of the Ass to teach a false and ignorant Prophet? Or if we confess that God can work miracles, why not this among others? If not this, then neither others. Now touching Atheists and Infidels that believe not the Scriptures, nor the power of God; to convince them that are patrons of Nature, but enemies of the God of Nature, we see how in Pies and Popin-iayes, he hath left a certain resemblance of speech, and thereby showeth forth what he is able to do in the rest when it pleaseth him. We know by experience in all ages, and learn by relation and report of all histories, that the devil hath spoken in the mouth of other creatures: what impiety then is this, to yield that to the devils which they deny to God, and detract from the most High?

Hitherto of the reproof of the Ass reprehending his master, now of the reproof of the Angel. True it is, he was unworthy of any other teacher then his own Ass, being a fit master for such a scholar: for such as refuse to hear the Lord speaking, are worthy to be sent to learn of brute beasts and senseless creatures. Notwithstanding, because this proud Prophet scorned so base a teacher, and disdained to learn wisdom in y^e Asses school, to y^e end he should not be exalted out of measure, nor insult with contempt over his beast, the Angel of God appeareth unto him, represseth his folly, and giveth light and sight to his blind eyes. This showeth that his eyes were first of all closed and shut up, whereby he was withholden from discerning the Angel. And this restraint was rather miraculous then natural. For if it had been natural, it would have failed in the discerning of other objects, as well as of this one. But his eyes being opened, then he began to behold the Angel, to cast himself down before him, to confess his own wickedness and ignorance, & to submit himself wholly to his pleasure, after that the Angel had reproved his cruelty, and testified the Asses innocence; who, if she had not been warier and wiser then her master, had procured the speedy death and destruction of the Sorcerer. Lastly, Balaam having acknowledged his sin and confessed his ignorance, the Angel giveth him leave to go his journey: so he goeth merrily with the messengers, hoping that as he had obtained liberty to resort & repair to the Moabites, (which before was denied unto him) so he should in time likewise draw the Lord to give his consent that he might curse the people. But here the question may be asked, who, or what this Angel of God was, that had this conference & communication with Balaam? whether it were one of the created Angels, or not? Some suppose it was Michael the Archangel that was appointed ruler over that people. Some, that it was another of the elect Angels and invisible spirits. Others affirm, that it was Christ Jesus the Angel of the covenant, the Prince of the Angels of God, and the head both of men & Angels. And this I rather assent & subscribe unto, for these causes and considerations. First, because so often as Moses doth make mention of the Angel of God, for the most part, or always he understandeth Christ the leader and conductor of his people in the wilderness; and therefore the Apostle saith, They tempted Christ in the wilderness, and were destroyed of serpents. Whosoever shall diligently read the books of Moses, & carefully observe his manner of speaking, shall easily find, that when he speaketh of the Angel of God, and the Angel of the Lord, he meaneth Christ Jesus, & calleth him sometimes the Lord, as Gen. 16, 7, 13, & 22, 20, 12, 16, & 31, 11, 13. Exod 4, 19. So in this place, he calls him sometimes the Angel, sometimes the Angel of the Lord, sometimes the Lord, understanding by them all, one & the same Christ. Secondly, it is said, verse 31. that Balaam fell down and worshipped him, which no one of the elect Angels and blessed spirits (albeit excellent and glorious creatures) would ever have accepted, but all of them would with one consent have refused and rejected the same. For when John, ravished with the glory of the Angel, fell at his feet to worship him, he forbade him, and shown the reason thereof, Revel. 19, 10. & 22.8. See thou do it not, I am thy fellow-servant, and one of thy brethren the Prophets, & of them which keep the words of the prophecy of this book worship thou God. Now the Angel of God in this place doth not forbid divine worship to be exhibited unto him: but if he had been a creature, and had usurped the honor of God, he should be an angel of the devil not of God, Neither let any say, that he bowed himself upon his face, adoring God, when he saw his Angel ready to take vengeance of him, which doth not appear by any circumstance of the Text, but rather that he understood this Angel to be the same Lord y^t had before appeared and spoken unto him. This Angel of the Lord talketh with him as God himself, Ver. 32. saying, I came out to withstand thee, because thy way is not straight before me: he doth not say, his way was perverted before the Lord, as Peter speaketh to Simon the Sorcerer, Acts 8, 21. Lastly, Balaam speaketh to him, as to that God which had before appeared unto him, restraining him from cursing the people, and the Angel repeateth the same words, verse 35. which the Lord himself had uttered before, verse 20. For the Lord Jehovah had said unto him, Forasmuch as the men are come to call thee, Rise up, and go with them; but only what thing I say unto thee, that shalt thou do: so here the Angel is brought in, speaking in the same manner, Go with the men, but what I say unto thee, that only shalt thou speak. He saith not, what the Lord saith unto thee, but what I say unto thee. Now then, if it were the Lord that said before unto him, What thing I say unto thee, that only shalt thou do: then the same words being also pronounced by this Angel, making himself equal with the Lord, must needs be accounted to be uttered by God himself. Neither let any think it unfit or unlikely, that Christ should appear to a Sorcerer, for we heard before, how the Lord oftentimes appeared unto him; and we see, that when Agar was fled from Abraham's house, the Lord spake unto her from heaven. Thus much touching the order of the History, the interpretation of the words, and the clearing of the Objections that arise out of the same. Now, let us come to the doctrines, which the Spirit of God offereth to our considerations, to be marked and remembered of us.

Verse 22. But the wrath of the Lord was kindled because he went, and the Angel of the Lord stood in the way to be against him.

Here we have to weigh and ponder in our hearts, in these words, the care of the Lord watching over the godly. The Israelites, after the fresh discomfiture of their enemies, do think themselves out of all danger, and imagine not, either Balak to be consulting, and the Midianites to be assisting, or Balaam to be practicing, and all of them joining and confederating against them, they know not that a pit is digged, and a snare to entrap them. But behold, how the Angel withstandeth, reproveth, and forbiddeth him again to attempt anything against his people. We learn hereby, that God delivereth those that are his, from dangers unknown to them, and when they have no power to deliver themselves. This the Prophet David testifieth, Thou didst draw me out of the womb, thou gavest me hope, even at my mothers breasts, I was cast upon thee, even from the womb, thou art my God from my mothers belly. He provided for his Church, by selling & sending Joseph into the land of Egypt, when they knew nothing of the famine that was to come, whereby he saved much people alive, neither were they any way able to save themselves.

Herod the King invented great mischief against the Messiah, whereby also Joseph and Mary were in danger, he disclosed the secret counsel of his heart to none, but pretended worship toward him: yet we see how God preserved them all from the imminent dangers, which Christ through his tender age, and his parents thorough ignorance of his bloody purpose could not prevent, by sending them out of the reach of Herod, and commanding them to fly into Egypt. The like we see in the Acts of the Apostles, Chap. 12. where we read of another Herod, that slew James with the sword, and put Peter in prison, intending the next day to bring him forth to execution: no doubt he kept his intent secret to himself, yet by the earnest Prayers of the Church he was delivered from the imminent peril, and the Church comforted. In the dangerous voyage and shipwreck mentioned in the same book, wherein Paul was, who had deserved well of all the Passengers, had comforted them in their distresses, and had assured them of safety: yea, they were all saved for his sake: yet the unmerciful & unthankful Soldiers consulted to kill him, while he suspected nothing, but the Lord delivered him out of their hands, and moved the heart of the Centurion to save him. Whereby we see, that the afflictions of the righteous are many some known to them, and some unknown, but the Lord in mercy is mindful of them, and bringeth them out of them all, as he did the Israelites in this place, from the cursing and conjuring of this Sorcerer.

The Reasons serving to confirm this doctrine are many. First, consider for this purpose, the titles of God whereby he is called, for our comfort. God is named a Father. Will a father save his son only from the perils that he seeth before his eyes, or will he suffer him to run into unknown dangers of fire or water, which the child could not understand, or understanding, could not prevent, but the father in his wisdom and providence knoweth? If we then that are evil know how to help our children, how much more shall our heavenly Father, that knoweth all things, give good things unto his children? God is called a shepherd; will the Shepherd see the silly sheep run ignorantly into places of danger, and not with his staff bring them back again? So the Lord watcheth over us, He will make us rest in green pasture, and lead us by the still waters, so that his mercy and kindness shall follow us all the days of our life.

[Reason 2] Again, we are guarded by the Angels, so that there are more with us, then are against us. They are sent out to be ministering spirits, they incamp themselves about the Church for their protection. Wherefore, albeit we be simple & ignorant, & know not oftentimes the plots & policies of our enemies, yet seeing we have such mighty helpers, & such safekeepers, we must know that we shall not fail to be delivered. This the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 3•7. & 91.11.12.

Thirdly, God would stir us up to be [Reason 3] thankful, and teach us wholly to depend upon him in all our dangers. Now what is able more effectually to work this in our hearts, and to open our mouths to the praise of our God, then to have a blessed experience of the comfortable presence of God for our deliverance, when we neither know our own miseries, nor find any means in our selves, •o rid our selves? Therefore the Prophet promiseth, being delivered from the mouth of the Lyon, to declare the Name of God unto his brethren, and to praise him in the midst of the congregation. Again, what may teach us better to trust in him, and to wait upon him for our salvation, then to consider his knowledge of our estate in the ignorance of our own dangers? Thus did David behave himself, thus he did dwell in the secret of the most High, and thus did he abide in the shadow of the Almighty, and being assured of his protection, he resteth in him. I will say unto the Lord. O mine hope, and my fortress, he is my God in him will I trust, he will deliver me from the hunter, and from the noisome pestilence.

The uses follow. First, this doctrine should [Use 1] direct us, and instruct us, to whom to go when we lie under the cross. For if God fore-see the dangers which we over-see, and keepeth us from those perils that we know not, whither can we go for help, but unto him? Shall we go to Saints or Angels? Doubtless thou art our Father: though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel know us not, Yet thou O Lord art our •ather and our Redeemer, thy Name is forever. Shall we trust in chariots or in horses? An horse is a vain thing to save a man, and shall not deliver any by his great strength: hope in the Lord, be strong, a•d he shall comfort thine heart & trust in the Lord. We cannot honor him more then when we depend upon him, and rest upon his mercy. This doth Ezra notably declare at the retu•ne of the Jews from captivity, saying, I was ashamed to require of the King an army, and horsemen to help us against the enemy, because we had ••oken to the King, saying. The hard of God is upon all them that seek him in goodness, but his power & h•• wrath is against all them that forsake him. e thought it fi••er & far better, to commit himself to the protection of God, then by craving these ordinary means, to give any occasion, either to the weak brethren, to doubt of God's power, or to obstinate enemies to blaspheme God, and to say, What? is not the God whom ye serve able to defend you? he hath brought them out maliciously to slay them, & was not able to bring them again into their land, without our strength & help! Wherefore, to stop the mouths of the Gentiles, to avoid all offenses, & to strengthen those y^t were weak in faith, (albeit it were not in it self unlawful to ask aide, and to crave help of the higher power, but only in respect of circumstances) he proclaimeth a Fast, he humbleth himself before God, and looketh for all help to come from him.

Secondly, let us not stand in fear of them, but fear him before whom all things are naked and open, who discloseth the hidden things of the heart, who hath said, There is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed: neither hid, that shall not be known. Hell and destruction are before him, how much more the hearts of the sons of men? Indeed the heart of man is an hidden thing, and an unsearchable thing: howbeit, God not only searcheth the heart and trieth the reins, but understandeth the deepest things of the earth, he knoweth the state of the dead and damned souls that are in hell, which things of all other are most hidden from the eyes of man. Albeit therefore the ungodly conspire against the Church never so closely, and albeit they conspire never so deeply to hide their counsels from God's all-seeing Spirit, yet he shall find them out in their sins, and bring them unto judgment; he shall bring to light their privy devices, and scatter them in their own imaginations in his good time. This serveth to put life and courage into us, to lift up our hands which hang down, and strengthen our weak knees. Let us not fear them that fear not God; but fear God, and comfort our selves in him.

[Use 3] Thirdly, seeing God breaketh the snare of the Fowler that is hidden, and setteth his servants at liberty, that want the knowledge of the danger, and means of escaping: let us seek betimes to be parts of his family, to be citizens of his Kingdom, to be members of his body, and to be children of the true Church, that we may be under the protection of this mighty God, whose presence is every-where, whose Throne is the heaven, whose footstool is the earth, whose Dominion is infinite. If a man abounded in wealth, lived in honor, bathed himself in pleasures, yet if he be not in the number of the faithful, he cannot take any sound comfort in all these, For all outward blessings in an unsanctified man are unsavory; To them that are defiled and unbelieving, is nothing pure, but even their minds and consciences are defiled. To the pure are all things pure, but the unfaithful defile all things that they touch and handle. Their sweet savors and pleasant smells are stench. Their good meats and strong drinks are gall and worm-wood. Their delicious fare is as poison. Their costly apparel is as a menstruous clothe. Their beds of ease are sinks of sin. Their life is a death. The best things they do are foul and filthy. So long as we continue in this estate, and have not our hearts purified by faith, we cannot please God; (For without faith it is impossible to please him) neither can we be under the wings of his defense. This therefore shall be our comfort, to be sheep of his fold, that he may be our Shepherd to seek us when we are lost, & to bring us home when we are gone astray, to feed us in his green Pastures, & to pull us with his right hand out of dangers, when we are falling into them. Otherwise, if we content our selves to be in the Church, and labor not to be of the Church, we can look for no defense or deliverance from him, but rather destruction of soul and body, and calamity upon calamity, to fall upon us.

Fourthly, this doctrine teacheth, that seeing [Use] God bringeth us out of unknown and desperate dangers that we think not of: how much more can he, and will he deliver us, when we knowing them, do call and cry unto him for help, that we may escape them? If he be not far from us when we do not pray unto him, but be found of them that sought him not, and answer them that asked not for him: how much more may we assure our selves, that he will preserve us from dangers, when we crave his aide and assistance? seeing his hand is not shortened, that it cannot save, neither is his eye dim and dark, that he cannot see and behold our miseries that are upon us.

This doctrine therefore serveth greatly to comfort and encourage us to pray unto him in all our afflictions, and to increase a double care in us, to pour out our Meditations before him. How many in their troubles and crosses into the which they are fallen, begin to sink down under the burden, and to cast off their confidence, which notwithstanding hath great recompense of reward? Surely, if we did wisely consider the watchful eye of God's providence over us, who fore-seeth our dangers before they come, and preserveth from the troubles which we through our blindness and ignorance cannot understand; we may assure our selves of the presence of his hand when we know our selves to be in trouble, and pray unto him for deliverance out of trouble. When a son hath had experience of the loving kindness of his father, in pulling him out of danger, as it were out of the fire, which he saw not to be kindled against him: can he doubt or despair of the care of his father over him, or think he will leave him, when he calleth unto him for help out of dangers that are seen and felt? Doubtless, he that hath an eye to fore-see dangers, will have an ear to hear in the time of danger. Let this comfort us greatly, and cheare up our hearts, while we lie under the cross; let us persuade our own souls, that he which performeth the greater, will always be ready to accomplish the less: he that delivereth from the pit that was hidden, will help us to escape from that which lieth open▪ and he that discovereth a secret snare laid to entrap us, will not leave us, nor forsake us when we entreat for succor in the midst of our greatest afflictions that we find and feel to be upon us.

Lastly, we are admonished by this favor [Use 5] of God towards us, to give him the praise and glory of his own works. True it is, when we have used all holy means for our delivery, yet the praise is due to the Lord. How much more therefore ought we to render all thanksgiving to God, when he hath done it without our means? and confess that he hath done great things for us?

Thus did the people when they returned out of Babylon, as the Prophet declareth, Psal. 126. When the Lord brought again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream: then was our mouth filled with laughter, & our tongue with joy; then said they among the heathen. The Lord hath done great things for them: the Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we rejoyce. He watcheth for us, when we rest: he waketh for us when we sleep: he heareth, when we are deaf: he riseth up for us, when we lie down: he is a buckler about us, when we are assaulted: he is the God of knowledge, when we are ignorant. And if ever there were people under the heaven that hath experience of God's watchfulness in this kind, it is this Nation of great Britain. O unthankfulness, if we do not acknowledge it! O wretchedness, if we do not ever remember it! O wickedness, if we do not teach it to our posterities! For hath not God delivered us from the most cursed and execrable plot of desperate enemies that ever was contrived, against the King, the Queen, the Prince, and the rest of their progeny? against the Lord's, the Commons, the whole Church & kingdom, determining suddenly to have blown up the whole house of Parliament with gun-powder. Now as this was an invention bloody, an intention barbarous and inhumane, so by what means were we delivered? was it by our fasting and prayer? was it by humbling our selves before our God, and crying strongly in the ears of the Lord of hosts? was it by our tears and weeping for our sins; saying, spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine inheritance into reproach, that the Priests and Jesuits should rule over them? Nay, we used none of all these, we suspected no danger, we feared no enemies, we dreamed of no devilish devices against the land: so that to detect and disclose the fore-named cursed conspiracy was the Lord's doing only, and it is marvelous in our eyes. When an invasion in the year 88. was intended by the supposed invincible Armado, glorying in their strength, munition, ships, preparations, & confederates, it was indeed the Lord's mercy toward us, to cross and curse their attempt, and to raise the winds and seas against them; howbeit this was not without using of means, as rigging of ships, arming of men, mustering of soldiers, yea it was not without sanctifying of fasts, calling solemn assemblies, and crying unto the Lord. If then we did sing songs of thanksgiving for that deliverance, how should our hearts be kindled and inflamed with joyfulness, and with what praises should we express our thankfulness, but even vow unto the Lord, our selves, our souls and bodies, to offer them up a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto him? For, as many have been the practices of the malicious and bloody Papists, yet this surmounteth them all: so many have been the deliverances of our Princes, of our Rulers, of our Magistrates, of our Ministers, of our people; but this surmounteth and surpasseth them all. Let us therefore rejoice unto the Lord, let us sing aloud to the rock of our salvation: let us come before his face with praise, let us sing loud unto him with Psalms: for the Lord is a great God, and a great King above all gods. He sitteth in heaven, and laugheth to scorn the devices of the wicked. He ruleth in earth, and maketh all his enemies his footstool.

Verse 28. [Then the Lord opened the mouth of the Ass.] When Balaam had smitten his Ass three times y^t had saved his life, it pleased God to work a wonder, to alter the course of nature, to give speech to the Ass, & to make her able to reprove her master. God indeed could otherwise have set his sin in order before him, but a dumb beast is teacher fit enough for the falls Prophet. We see hereby, that God so often as it pleaseth him, worketh above nature & ordinary means. Hereunto come all the miracles w^c God hath shown from the beginning of the world. He gave unto Abraham & Sarah a son in their old age, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not, as though they were. He stayed the course of the Sun, divided y^e red sea, fed his people with Manna, stopped the mouths of Lions, quenched the violence of fire, opened the earth to swallow his enemies, brought water out of the hard rock. He sent signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, unto this day, & in Israel, and among all men, & hath made him a name, as appeareth this day. He brought his people out of the hand of Pharaoh with signs & with wonders, & with a strong hand, with a stretched out arm, and with a great terror. He gave power to a virgin to conceive & bear a son, y^t he might save his people from their sins.

The reasons remain to be considered and [Reason 1] handled, to confirm us farther. First, mark the nature of God, he is great in counsel, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, mighty in his works, and in his enterprises. Who made the heaven? who framed the earth? and laid the foundation thereof upon the depth? who brought light out of darkness? Is it not the Lord that doth whatsoever he will, in heaven, in earth, in the depth, and in all the world? This the Prophet Jeremiah teacheth, chap. 32. Ah Lord God, behold thou hast made the heaven, and the earth by thy great power, & by thy stretched out arm, and there is nothing hard unto thee he maketh the barren fruitful, he brought all things out of nothing, who only doth great wonders, for his mercy endureth forever; who by his wisdom made the heavens, and hath stretched out the earth upon the waters, for his mercy endureth forever.

Again, thereby he maketh his name known, [Reason. 2] and his power to be acknowledged in the world. This is declared by Nehemiah in the prayer of the Levites, chap. 9. Thou hast considered the afflictioⁿ of our fathers in Egypt, & heard their cry by the red Sea: and shown tokens and <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> wonders upon Pharaoh, and on all his servants, and on all the people of the land: for thou knowest that they dealt proudly against them, therefore thou madest thee a Name, as appeareth this day. Wherefore, to the end the power and presence of God may be known both to the Church and the enemies of the Church, he breaketh and interrupteth the natural order and course of things. Hereupon it is, that Joshua calleth the children of Israel, and telleth them, that by the miracle of dividing the waters of Jordan, they should know that the living GOD was among them, and would cast out the Canaanites before them.

[Use 1] The use of this doctrine may be made in this manner. First, it serveth fitly to condemn all Atheists and earth-worms, that advance nature to throw down the power of God. Indeed if GOD only wrought by ordinary means, and according to the strength of second causes, some pretence might be alleged, and some color of reason produced to doubt of the divine power. But seeing GOD worketh not only by nature and by means, but sometimes above nature, and without all means, and sometimes against all means; the evidence of this truth is cleared, the power of GOD is manifested, and the mouths of all Infidels, and of iniquity it self is stopped. Our faith must go beyond reason, if we will profess our selves scholars in the school of Christ. In the schools of the Philosophers, reason goeth before assent; but in the school of GOD, first we have use of faith, and after followeth discourse of reason. Let us therefore learn to magnify the Scriptures, and by the authority of them tread and trample upon all Atheism and Prophaneness. As many miracles as we find expressed and wrought by the finger of God, so many testimonies and evidences we have against these patrons of Nature, who being wholly carnal & corrupt, know nothing that is spiritual. These deny the resurrection of the body, and the immortality of the soul, that so they might escape the sentence of the eternal ludge, by whom they shall be judged in the last day, and shall know to their confusion that there is a GOD whose power is infinite, who will not make the wicked innocent, but visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon children's children to the third and fourth generation, and reward everyone according to his works. He is able to be revenged on all his enemies, who shall sooner pul their hearts out of their breasts, then God out of their minds. This Moses setteth down *Deut.2.Behold now, for I, I am he, and there is no gods with me, I kill and give life: I wound and I make whole: neither is there any that can deliver out of mine hand: If I whet my glittering sword, and my hand take hold on judgment, I will execute vengeance on mine enemies, and will reward them that hate me, I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, and my sword shall eat flesh, for the blood of the slain, and of the captives, when I begin to take vengeance of the enemy. This is God's arrow against all Atheists: this is a fearful thunder-bolt thrown down upon their heads, which shall crush them in pieces, & testify their destruction, which shall come upon them when there is none to help. Let such therefore betimes acknowledge a God of Nature, that he may be to them a GOD of grace: let them confess him to work when he will, by extraordinary means, that he may direct them in the ordinary paths that lead to salvation and eternal life: let them reverence him as the ruler of the world, that he may rule in their hearts by his Word and Spirit, and Sacraments, whereby he applieth to us his heavenly gifts.

Secondly, let us learn by this miraculous [Use 2] manner of working, to trust in him when all means fail us: and tie not him to the ordinary course of second causes, that is able to make the Sun and Moon to stand still, as in the pursuit of Joshua: and to bring the Sun back again many degrees in the Diall of Ahaz, as in the comforting of Hezekiah: and to turn the Sun into darkness, as we see in the time of the passion of Christ. He is able to do whatsoever he will, and more then he will do. It is an easy matter for every man to say he trusteth in God, and boast of his faith, when no means fail him, when he hath abundance and store of all things, when he is fed to the full with his hid Treasure, that they leave the rest of their substance for their children: when God compasseth them about with his mercies, That they wash their paths in Butter; and have the Rocks to pour them out Rivers of Oil, as Job speaketh, it is quickly said and spoken, that we will rely upon God, and acknowledge his providence. But if GOD blow upon our means, they shall do us no good: he can take us from them, as he dealt with the unfaithful rich man: or he can take them from us, as he dealt with his faithful servant Job▪ We must therefore depend upon him in time of war, as well as of peace: in want, as well as in time of wealth: in sickness, as in health: when he shall make the heaven as iron, and the earth as brass; when he shall take away the staff of bread: when he shall cause thee to walk through the valley of the shadow of death, thou must then call on him for thy daily bread, and say with Job: Loe, though he slay me, yet will I trust in him. Commit thy ways and works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts shall be directed. Cast all your care on him, for he careth for you. Such we are indeed, as we are in adversity. Such is our faith, as it is found in the day of temptation. Wherefore, let us lift up our eyes to him that sitteth in the heavens, and swayeth all things by his providence, and say with the Prophet, Psal. 28. The Lord is my strength, and my shield, mine heart trusted in him, and I was helped; therefore mine heart shall rejoice, and with my Song will I praise him. The Salvation of the righteous men shall be of the Lord, he shall be their strength in the time of trouble. For the Lord shall help them and deliver them, he shall deliver them from the wicked, and shall save them, because they trust in him.

Thirdly, let us not doubt of the promises, [Use 3] or providence of G G D, who is able to make good the words of his own mouth, how incredible or impossible soever they seem in our eyes. Therefore, the faith of Abraham the Father of the faithful is commended by the Apostle, that above hope he believed under hope, that he should be the Father of many Nations, and he not weak in faith, considered not his own body which was now dead, neither the deadness of Sarah's womb, neither did he doubt of God thorough unbelief; but was strengthened in the Faith, and gave glory to God, being fully assured, that he which had promised was able to do it. This is a great comfort, if at any time we see the miseries and ruins of the Church, if we behold the desolation & havoc that is made of it, that God is able to restore the flourishing estate thereof again. God can work above means without; so that albeit we can see with an eye of flesh no way to work the safety of the Church, let us not despair or cast away our confidence and hope, which hath great recompense of reward. We read how God saved Israel, when there appeared no means of deliverance in the eyes of men, the rocks and mountains hemmed them in on both sides, the red Sea was before them, the host of the Egyptians marched behind them, no way was left them to escape the dangers in man's judgment. But as the Church in this world, is ever subject to affliction, and to lie under the cross; so God doth not incontinently deliver it out of danger, but many times continueth their troubles, and augmenteth their calamities, to exercise their faith, to try their patience, and to prove their obedience; notwithstanding, in the end, God maketh an happy issue, and showeth that the gates of hell shall never prevail against the Church. Therefore, when the Israelites began to murmur, and not so much against Moses, as against God, and looked more to the danger of death before them, then to the power of GOD above them, and considered more what they did want, then what they should believe; Moses said unto them, Fear ye not, stand still, and behold the salvation of the Lord, which he will show to thee this day; for the Egyptians, whom ye have seen this day, ye shall never see them again: the Lord shall fight for you, therefore hold you your peace.

When there was a great persecution raised against the Church at Jerusalem, so that the sheep of Christ were scattered abroad, and nothing but threatenings and slaughter breathed out against the Disciples of the Lord, Authority being given by the High Priest to imprison all such as called on his Name: rather than the Church should be rooted out, the Lord Jesus appeared in the Heavens to Paul, as he was in the way, being now come near to Damascus, called him to the knowledge of the truth, and appointed him to be a teacher of the Gospel that before he destroyed, so that we may renew the ancient Proverb, Is Saul also among the Prophets? So when we see the dangerous times, and perilous seasons of the Church, let us not hang down our heads, but rather lift up our hearts, and cry unto God, saying; Help Lord in the time of need, forsake not thine inheritance, which thou hast purchased, nor the Vine-yard which thy right hand hath planted. And let us assure our selves, that when the cause thereof seemeth most desperate, and help appeareth to us to be farthest off, then is his mercy greatest, and his presence nearest; then is his power made perfect through our weakness. This is that which the Prophet Zacharias witnesseth, chap. 8. speaking of the return of the people from captivity unto Jerusalem, and of the loving kindness of GOD to be extended toward them. For albeit the residue that were left, were reproached, the City ruined, the gates burned, and the wall broken down, yet he prophesieth. That old Men, and old Women shall dwell in the streets of Jerusalem, and the streets of the City shall be full of Boys and Girls, playing in the streets thereof. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, Though it seem impossible in the eyes of the remnant of this people in these days, should it therefore be impossible in my sight, saith the Lord of hosts? [Use 4]

Lastly, as this Doctrine teacheth us to believe the promises of God, so it teacheth us not to doubt or despair of the saluatiō & conversion of our brethren; for God is able to call and convert them to the saving knowledge of the Gospel. This the Apostle urgeth, entreating of the calling of the Jews, to embrace the faith of the Gentiles, And they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in, for God is able to graft them in again. Likewise when the Disciples saw and heard the difficulty of entering into heaven for those that trust in their riches, that they have need of a singular gift of God, to escape out of the snares & subtleties of Satan; Christ Jesus beheld them and said unto them, With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible. He calleth at all hours of the day, at the dawning of the day, at the third hour, at the sixth, at the ninth, and at the eleventh hour. For as he is bound to no person, so he is bound to no time: he calleth whom he will, he teacheth and toucheth the heart when he will. This we see in the example of the Apostle Paul (which we spake of before,) he was at the first a blasphemer, a persecutor, and an oppressor, yet he was received of God to mercy, to the encouragement of them which shall in time to come believe in him unto eternal life. So was Mary Magdalene a grievous sinner, an unclean liver, out of whom he had cast seven devils, yet many sins were forgiven her, inasmuch as she loved much; & was the first to whom the Lord appeared after his resurrection. Wherefore, albeit we see men run on in their wickedness, and shut their ears against the wholesome admonitions of the word of God, albeit their whole life be a continual practice of sin, and that they drink in iniquity, as the fish doth the water, yet we must judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will lighten things that are hid in darkness, and make the counsels of the hearts manifest, and then shall every man have praise of God.

God is not tied to ordinary causes, but as he fed the people with Quails in the wilderness, so he can inwardly instruct the conscience, he can make the least means powerful and effectual to salvation: so that as many which are first shall be last, so sometimes the last shall be first. He called John the Baptist, as it were in the dawning of the day, whom he sanctified from his mothers womb. He called Timothy and Titus, & some others as it were at the third hour of the day, Who were brought up in the knowledge of the Scriptures of children, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through the faith which is in Christ Jesus; and honored the Lord with the first fruits of their life, He called Paul to be an Apostle, Mary Magdalene to be a believer, as it were at the sixth hour, who after their conversion redeemed the time; and though they were inferior to other in respect of time, yet they were equal unto them, or before them in regard of zeal, & other graces of God's Spirit. He called the thief upon the cross, as it were at the eleventh hour, to be partaker of his kingdom, to whom Christ said, This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise. Let us not therefore enter into judgment against our brethren, let us commit them to God, Seeing it is not for us to know the times and seasons which the Father hath put in his own power. Let us pray for their conversion to God, that he would give them repentance to know him, and to come out of the snares of the devil, of whom they are holden captives. In the mean time, until this wonderful work of grace be wrought in thē, Who art thou that condemnest another man's servant? he standeth or falleth to his own master, yea he shall be established, for God is able to make him stand.

Verse 31. [Then the Lord opened the eyes of Balaam, and he saw the Angel of the Lord standing in the way with his sword drawn.] The Lord that before opened the mouth of the asse, now openeth the eyes of Balaam, who is here called, the Lord, and the Angel of the Lord. Not that his eyes were shut or closed before, or that he was blind; but his senses were holden, that he saw not the Angel of God who appeared in a visible and bodily shape, otherwise he could not be seen of the Ass. And the Lord Jesus did often appear in the Old Testament in a bodily shape, to teach the Church, that when the fullness of time should come, he would take upon him the nature of man, made of a woman, & made under the Law. Thus he appeared to Abraham, accompanied with two of his Angels, Genesis 18, For we do not read that God the Father ever took upon him the shape of man, or God the Holy-Ghost: to show that the second person in Trinity only, should be incarnate, & neither the Father, nor the Holy-Ghost. The senses of this Sorcerer were so astonied, that before his eyes were opened, he discerned not the Angel standing by him with a drawn sword ready to strike him: now he perceiveth the presence of the Angel. We learn from hence, that we can have no use of the senses further then God enableth and blesseth. True it is, nothing can be more natural, and nothing seemeth more in our own power, then for the ey to see, the ear to hear, the heart to understand, the hand to handle, the foot to walk; yet all our senses, gestures, and motions of the body, are ordered at the will & pleasure of God. We cannot open our eyes to see, further then he will: and when they are open, we shall discern no more then blind men that grope in the dark, without his direction. Hereunto cometh the example of the Sodomites, Gen. 19. who pressing upon Lot with threatening words, and unclean thoughts, and running with rage to break open his doors, The Angels smote them all both small and great with blindness. They could have stricken them with sudden death, but they are reserved to a greater judgment: and this work of God is the greater, in that their eyes are open, & they are not utterly deprived of sight, and yet they see or discern nothing at all. Thus they stand amazed, going up & down, & yet not knowing whither they went. That which was one, seemed double: the thing near at hand seemed far off: that on the right hand seemed to be on the left: that before them, seemed to be behind them. Thus they see the door, & seek to break it up, but know not where it standeth, or which way to find it. The like we see afterward, Chap. 21. when Hagar the bondwoman with her Ishmael were cast out of Abraham's house, and wandered in the wilderness of Beer-sheba, God opened her eyes, & then she saw a Well of water. Hereunto also come the prayers of Elisha, both touching his servants, and the Aramites. For when the King of Aram sent horses and chariots, and a mighty host to take the Prophet (who had discovered his secret counsels) and his servant beholding the Army, cried out, Alas Master, how shall we do? he answered, Fear not for they that be with us, are moe then they that be with them: and he prayed, saying, Lord I beseech thee open his eyes, that he may see; and the Lord opened the eyes of the servant, and he looked, and behold the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha. Again, when the Aramites came about him, and thought themselves sure of him, he prayed unto the Lord to smite this people with blindness: He did not pray unto GOD, to kill and destroy them, that they might fall into the pit which they had digged for his life: neither did he pray to GOD to take away wholly the use of their sight, and put out their eyes. They saw their way, they saw the Prophet, they saw the towns and cities as they took their journey; but they discerned not the way, they knew not the cities, they perceived not the Prophet who he was. So then, howsoever we have eyes to see, and ears to hear, & want neither wisdom nor counsel, yet we can see, hear, mark, and perceive no more then God will have us: our sight is confused, as at the building of Babel, their language was confounded.

[Reason 1] The Reasons are: First, because nothing can prosper or be blessed unto us without his special guidance and direction. We cannot perform and accomplish anything, except the Lord's blessing concur with the same. This the Prophet David teacheth, Psal. 127. Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the keeper watcheth in vain. Whereby we see, that all the labor and industry of men, in governing a family, or in upholding a Commonwealth, shall prove vain and unprofitable, unless God guide them, and give good success unto them.

True it is, the providence of God ruleth ouerall, and nothing is impossible to him to bring to pass, he is able to change Nature, and to alter the course of natural things. For shall anything be hard to him who worketh miracles and wonders at his own pleasure? And we must not neglect the means, but use them to his glory, and our comfort: and yet no means can do us any good any farther then they receive strength and virtue from him.

[Reason 2] Secondly, if we consider who made all things, and gave them unto man, we shall not greatly marvel that God hath the sovereignty and dominion over all that we have. For, who made the eye of man? who fashioned the ear? who created the heart? who gave to men wisdom and understanding? Is it not God who maketh all things in all men? If then he made the eye, how can we doubt but he hath power and authority to open and to shut, to lighten and to darken, to give sight, or to strike with blindness? If he planted the ear, and fashioned the heart, it is certain he can bore the ear, and open the heart, or he can harden the heart, and make the ear heavy. For as he knoweth what is in the heart, so he hath the ordering and disposing of it at his pleasure.

[Use 1] This doctrine offereth to our considerations, very good uses. First, seeing we can neither see, nor hear, nor use the means open before us, except God open our eyes; let us pray to God to guide us in the right use of our senses, as he hath given the senses themselves. Let us use all the means that God hath put into our hands, always with prayer to God, to bless them to us, and our comfort. Especially, when we come to hear his Word, let us crave of him to open our hearts, as he did the heart of Lydia, that she attended unto the things which Paul spake: so he that hath ears to hear, shall hear. For by nature we have uncircumcised hearts and ears: and through our corruption, we are as closed vessels unfit to receive the wholesome liquor, and pure waters of the Word of God, which is oftentimes preached to the condemnation of those that hear it. Therefore the Lord speaketh by the Prophet, Ye shall hear indeed, but ye shall not understand, ye shall plainly see, and not perceive; make the heart of this people fat, make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes, lest they see with their eyes, hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts, and convert, and he heal them, even until their cities be without Inhabitants, their houses without possessours, their fields without tillers of them. He doth not always take away his Word, for the sins of men, but causeth it to be preached to their condemnation that will not obey it, nor express the power of it in their conversations. And surely, if we would know the cause of the ignorance & contempt of the Word, of the want of profiting and regarding of the preaching of the Gospel, which is the high ordinance of God in his heavenly wisdom, sanctified for the salvation of his Elect: we shall find this to be the chiefest: we rest and trust in our selves, we think it sufficient to bring our natural eyes, and carnal ears with us: whereas we should earnestly desire of God, the true use and comfortable fruit of them, otherwise we may see and hear to our further condemnation. This we see in the same sort practiced by the Prophet Elisha, when he was compassed with his enemies, he prayeth God to open the eyes of his servant, to see the help that God had sent him: he prayed likewise to God touching his enemies, first, to strike them with blindness, y^t they might run into danger, then to open their eyes to see themselves in danger. Let us also continually give him thanks so often as we find his hand to be with us, and feel him with his gifts, to bestow upon us the use of his gifts, whether natural, or spiritual; to bless our senses, to direct our judgments, to sanctify our understandings, to soften our hearts, and to circumcise our ears. Now, if we must be fain to beg of God the proper functions, and right uses of our outward senses (which we have by nature) as if we had them not, and render praise unto God for them: how much more are we to ask of God a pure and clean heart, an humble and contrite spirit, the gift of repentance, and the grace of regeneration, which we have not by nature, but are contrary to nature? For the Apostle teacheth truly, that the wisdom of the flesh is enmity against God, because it is not subject to y^e Law of God, neither indeed can be. And again, The natural man perceiveth not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. It is God that must reveal unto us by his Spirit the mysteries of his kingdom, which none of the Princes of this world have known: the spirit searcheth all things, even the deep things of God. This we see noted unto us in the communication and conference of Christ with the two disciples that went to Emmaus; he drew near to them to hear their reasoning together, of the things that happened at Jerusalem, touching the passion of Christ, but their eyes were holden that they could not know him. His body indeed was not invisible, the change was not in him, but in their eyes which after a sort were dim'd & holden back, that they should not discern him for a season, & afterward their eyes were opened, that they knew him, as likewise Mary Magdalene, albeit she were neither blind nor deaf, yet discerned him neither by seeing, nor hearing of him. Wherefore, we have not an absolute power over our senses, it is God that giveth the eye, y^t must open it: much less have we power over our understanding, will, judgment, memory, & affections: & least of all concerning heavenly things, in which we are wholly blind, as we have already declared: so that it behooveth all of us to acknowledge all these to be in the power & disposition of God, either to diminish or restrain them, or utterly to bereave us of them, & take them away from us at his pleasure y^t is the giver, & consequently we are always to entreat him to give us grace and power, that we may carefully use them as we ought to the glory of his Name, the profit of our brethren, and the comfort of our souls and bodies.

[Use 2] Secondly, let us take heed how we abuse them to our own hurt that have received thē, & to the dishonor of God that gave them, frō whō every good giving, & every perfect gift proceedeth. If we see not but at the pleasure of God, who is able to strike us with blindness & mists, that we shall grope in darkness, & seek some to lead us by the hand; or if we have our eyes open, we shall discern & distinguish nothing, but have the outward & inward senses dazzled, until he take away the scales from our eyes that cover them. The Apostle Peter complaineth in his time of corrupt men, led with sensuality, having eyes full of adultery, & that cannot cease to sin. We must beware how we turn our sight to a contrary end, then for which God hath lent it unto us, but rather with Job, We should make a covenant with our eyes, that they wander not after folly: and pray with the Prophet David, Psal. 119. Turn away mine eyes from regarding vanity, & that they be not carried away after covetous affections. If we have ears by nature, yet hear at y^e pleasure of God, how shall we thē give over our ears, & hearing to hearken to hateful slanders, lewd surmises, evil backbitings: flying tales, false accusations, & hurtful reproaches, raised and forged to the hurt of our brethren? He is able to try and touch us with dumbnesse, as he did Zacharias; with lameness, as he did Jacob; with blindness, as he did Elymas; with crookedness & deformity, as the woman in the Gospel; with foolishness, as he did Achitophel; with want of reason & understanding, as he did Nebucadnezzar; to teach us to take heed to our selves and our senses, lest we abuse them to our destruction.

Lastly, seeing God can blind the eyes, and [Use 3] bind up the senses when it pleaseth him, let us go forward & walk boldly in the duties of our calling, let us not fear any enemies, seeing the Lord hath so many ways to help his chosen people, to succor them, & to save them harmless Let us commit & commend our selves to his providence, who albeit he suffer us to fall into many dangers, yet he can smite his enemies with many & sudden judgments. He can visit them oftentimes & in sundry manners. Every thing serveth to his will, & therefore, if we serve God, let us be assured he will make it serve to our benefit. They shall not stir a foot, or move any member, or lift up an hand, but at his beck and appointment.

Jeroboam stretched out his hand from the Altar to lay hold on the Prophet, but immediately it dried up, and he could not pull it in again unto him. Ananias & Sapphira his wife, were among the Apostles, and seemed to be in perfect health & far from death: yet suddenly they fell down, & were carried out. Olde Eli, whose sons walked not in the steps of their father, sate upon a seat by the way side, waiting for the success of the battle fought against the Philistines. A man would have thought he sate safely and surely at his own pleasure, and no doubt he judged no less himself of himself; but when he heard that the Ark was taken, suddenly he fell from his seat backward, and his neck was broken. When Uzziah King of Judah presumed to burn incense upon the Altar of incense, & lift up his heart, to his own destruction, while he waxed wroth against y^e Priests of the Lord, & had the incense in his hand to burn it, suddenly the leprosy arose in his forehead, & he was compelled to depart out of the Temple. We are able to do nothing of our selves, as of our selves, seeing that in him we live, & move, and have our being. Let us in all our sufferings comfort our selves herein, that the Lord holdeth the wicked in his own hand, & turneth their wisdom into foolishness. Absalom rebelled against his father, and was assisted by Achitophel. David's companion, and chief counselor: (for the counsel which he counseled in those days was like as one had asked counsel at the oracle of God) David prayed unto God to turn his counsel into foolishness, God heard his prayer, and confounded the deep wisdom of this great Politician so that he set his house in order & hanged himself. He catcheth the wise in their own craftiness, for the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God: the Lord knoweth that the thoughts of the wise be vain: If any therefore seem to be wise in this world, let him be a fool, that he may be wise. All human wisdom in the unregenerate is oftentimes turned into extreme folly. Jezebel enemy against the Church, hated Elijah unto the death, but sending him this word by a messenger, The God's do so to me, and more also, if I make not thy life like one of theirs (whom thou hast slain) by tomorrow this time. 1 Kings 19, 2.3. hereby he had fit occasion and opportunity to fly away and to shift for himself, receiving warning, and learning wisdom by his enemy. Herod, a subtle Fox, and withal a bloody Lyon, and wise in his generation, might have sent one of his Courtiers with the wise men for his greater assurance, yet he sendeth them alone, and appointeth not one to go with them. Mat. 2, 8. Thus the Lord striketh his enemies with the spirit of giddiness, and turneth all their devices into sottishness: he circumventeth the wise in their own policies, and the counsel of the wicked is made foolish: They meet with darkness in the day time, and grope at noon day as in the night: but he saveth the poor from the sword, from their mouth, and from the hand of the violent man, so that the poor hath his hope, but iniquity shall stop her mouth. Job 5, 12, 13, 14, 15. Indeed they seek ways & imagine means to destroy the godly, but they cannot find them out: they are endued with wisdom, judgment, & counsel, they are very subtle and deceitful, but that which happened to the eyes of the Sodomites, falleth upon their minds, They are smitten with blindness and madness, & are smitten with astonying of heart, &c. Deut. 28, 28, 29.

[Verse 34. Then Balaam said to the Angel of the Lord, I have sinned.] Here is offered to our considerations, the corrupt conscience of an evil man. So soon as the Lord charged him with his sin, by and by his heart smote him, and he confessed his offense. Here was no true sanctificatiō of the conscience, which indeed did check and condemn him for his disobedience and covetousness, but did not bridle & suppress the inclination of his heart unto evil, neither could testify that his transgression was pardoned. We learn in this example, that evil men are oftentimes compelled to confess their own sins. God wanteth not many ways and sundry means to draw from men a confession of their own iniquities. This we see in Pharaoh, when the hand of God was heavy upon him, and his plagues pressed sore against him, he called for Moses and Aaron, and said unto them, I have now sinned, the Lord is righteous, but I & my people are wicked. Exod. 9, 27. Albeit he could not believe to obtain remission, yet he confessed his sins to his condemnation. The like we see in Saul, who persecuted David, and sinned against his own conscience; yet when he saw that David had saved his life, when some willed and cried to kill him, he said, Thou art more righteous than I, for thou hast rendered me good, and I have rendered thee evil: I have sinned, come again my son David; for I will do thee no more harm, because my soul was precious in thine eyes, &c. 1 Sa. 24, 18. and 26, 21. So then, howsoever the ungodly delight in sin, and regard not to provoke God to wrath, yet their own mouths are made witnesses against themselves and they publish their own shame as with the blast of a Trumpet.

The Reasons are these: First, the wrath of [Reason 1] God is gone out against them, and their own consciences summon them unto judgment, to answer for their sins, before the high Judge of heaven and earth; so that the more they seek to cover and smother them in the ashes of their own corruptions, that the flame of them break not out, the more do the sparks fly out & are scattered abroad, to the shame and confusion of their own faces. This is it which the Prophet noteth in the people of Israel, whom God of his mercy had chosen to be his Church above other Nations, When the wrath of God came even upon them, and slew the strongest of them, and smote down the chosen men of Israel, then they returned to him and sought him early, then they remembered that God was their strength, and the most high God their redeemer: but they flattered him with their lips, and dissembled with him with their tongue, for their heart was not upright with him, neither were they faithful in his couenat. Psal. 78, 31, 34, 35, 36. Where we see, that howsoever hypocrisy were in their secret souls, and deep dissimulation in their secret parts, yet a counterfeit repentance is in their mouths, & their own harts had taught their tongues to lie against God.

Secondly, they would be like the children [Reason 2] of God in their afflictions, whom they regard not to follow, in their conversations. They hate them with a deadly hatred, and cannot abide them in their life, so long as themselves live in peace and sleep in security: but when the hand of God is heavy upon them, thē they would follow their example, and would give a world that they were like unto them. That they might die the death of the righteous, Numb. 23, 10. yet is their confession no true confession, because it proceedeth not from a feeling of the filthiness of sin, but ariseth from a fear of punishment; and therefore it is without conversion to God, without hope of mercy, without prayer for pardon, without hatred of sin, and without purpose to amend.

The uses of this doctrine are these. First, [Use 1] this overthroweth the doctrine of the Church of Rome, which teacheth that confession is a part of true repentance, which is a turning of the heart, and a right reformation of the life. For they make three parts of repentance, cont•ition of the heatt, confession of the tongue, satisfaction of the work. But these are not to be holden of us as essential parts of a right repentance, inasmuch as they may agree to the Reprobate and unregenerate, and are all of them found in Judas that betrayed his Master, Math. 27, 34. For when he saw that Christ was condemned, he sorrowed, & was stricken with grief for the treachery he had committed: again, he confessed his sin before the high Priests, in betraying innocent blood. Lastly, he made satisfaction and restitution of the money which he had received. Besides, if we mark their own doctrine, who teach that contrition is an act of a man's free will proceeding from it, not an act of the Holy-Ghost: and, that satisfaction may be performed by another, one satisfying for another, as well as for himself; we may truly and soundly conclude from their false and unsound doctrine, that the reprobate may have sorrow of heart; yea, make confession and satisfaction, and consequently, their confession is no true member of repentance. This therefore cannot be the true Religion which faileth and faultereth in the chief points and foundations thereof. The like we might say of the faith of the Roman Church, which a reprobate may attain. For they define it to be a gift of God, and a certain light of the mind, whereby a man giveth a sure and a certain assent to those things that are revealed in the Word of God. And therefore our English Rhemists write, that we may know and feel whether we have faith, but cannot know whether we be in the state of grace. So Bellarmino in his first book of Justification avoucheth, that whereas we are taught in the Creed to believe the forgiveness of sins, The meaning of that Article is not, I believe or trust that my sins are forgiven, but I believe and confess that the gift of forgiving sins is found in the Catholic Church, which is received by Baptism, and other Sacraments. All this is but an historical and general faith, which the devil himself hath, who believeth and trembleth (as the Apostle teacheth, and therefore also the reprobates, whose minds are so far enlightened to know the truth. This is to believe as the Church believeth, albeit they know nothing how the Church believeth. If then the reprobate may be made partakers of the faith and repentance of the Church of Rome, which are the two chief parts of Religion, it confuteth those Politicians (wise in their own eyes) who neither shame, nor fear to maintain that the Romish Religion differeth not in substance from the doctrine of the reformed Churches, and consequently that they may be united & reconciled. If they can make a fellowship between righteousness and unrighteousness, a communion between light and darkness, & concord between Christ and Belial, then they may make an harmony and hotch-potch between these two, so contrary the one to the other. But they shall as soon bring the North and South pole together, and cause heaven & earth to join in one, as these two; the one grounded upon the infallible rock of the Scriptures only, the other built upon the traditions of their fathers.

[Use 2] Secondly, we must learn that they are further from the Kingdom of heaven that deny their sin, that hide it, that excuse and justify it; the reprobate shall rise up in judgment, and condemn this generation. It is one step toward the Kingdom of Heaven, to tremble at the judgments of God, to fear to commit sin, to sorrow and weep for it when a man hath committed it, to humble himself, and acknowledge his particular sins before men's, and to pray to God in his distresses; yet the reprobate may go thus far in his profession, and afterward fall away. This we see in Ahab, when Elijah had reproved him for his bloody oppression and Idolatry, and had denounced the wrath of God to fall upon him and his posterity, He rent his clothes put on sackcloth upon him, fasted, and went softly in token of mourning. Thus he humbled himself for some sins which he had committed, yet not for all his sins, neither did he ask pardon for them. So the Israelites murmuring against God, & desiring flesh for their lusts in the wilderness, had their prayers granted. If then the ungodly may go thus far in Religion, then they are hereby condemned, that justify themselves in their iniquities, and cannot be brought to a free confession of them, but hide them as Adam, or excuse them as Saul, or deny them as Achan, or defend them as Cain. Therefore, if we would find pardon at the hands of God, we must confess unto him as David did, weep for them as Peter did. If we uncover them, he will cover them; if we condemn our selves, he will justify us. Therefore the Wiseman saith, He that hideth his sins shall not prosper, but he that confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.

Lastly, we see hereby that sin endeth [Use] not as it beginneth. Albeit the fool maketh a mock of sin, yet when the soul is tormented, and the conscience oppressed with desperation, and can find no ease, then a man ceaseth not to utter his secret filthiness, to the shaming of himself, and to the astonishment of the hearers. Let us not look for Pharaoh, or Saul, or Judas to come out of hell to warn us. These things are written for our learning, we have Moses and the Prophets, let us hearken to them. When as terrors take hold upon the soul, we cannot cover sin any longer. Howsoever therefore sin to the carnal man be sweet unto the taste, and Satan baiteth his hook with profit on the one side, and with pleasure on the other, yet afterward it shall prove more bitter then gall and worm-wood, it shall wound the conscience, as with a deadly dart, and pierce the soul through with many sorrows. For albeit it begin in sport, it shall end in horror and despair. This we see in the example of Cain, My punishment is greater then I can bear. So Judas, when he saw Christ condemned, felt an hell in his conscience. The money was pleasant, and the gain was sweet unto him, but it was as a two edged sword, that woundeth incurably, and as the teeth of a Lyon that biteth mortally. It seemed unreasonable to Gehazi, that Naaman the Syrian should depart with so great a benefit, by so little a consideration, 2 King. 5, 23, 27. And therefore followeth after him for a bribe and reward, but with the reward he gained the leprosy, that did cleave unto him and to his seed. This is the deep subtlety of Satan; before sin be committed he hideth the deformity of it from the eyes of men, he maketh as if it were no sin, or a little and venial sin, or a little punishment due unto it; or that there shall be time enough hereafter to repent of it; he be cometh a preacher of God's mercy and pardon, he telleth the sinner that God is gracious and merciful. Thus he covereth the greatness of sin, and hideth the greuousnesse of the punishment, and concealeth the wrath of God that is drawn upon us. But when he hath once prevailed and ensnared the poor soul that hath swallowed the bait, he openeth the eyes which before he had darkened, he rouzeth up the conscience which before he had seduced, he striketh the heart which before he had hardened, he vncovereth the fire of God's indignation and jealousy, which before he had smothered. Then he maketh sin appear as vile and ugly as he can, then he layeth it open in his colors, then he will make a small sin appear the greatest; then he setteth forth the justice of God due to the least sin, and all to bring the person that hath sinned to desperation. Wherefore let us fly from sin, as from the biting of a Serpent, that we be not stung therewith to eternal death, Knowing that the wages of sin is death, Rom, 6, 23.

36 And when Balak heard that Balaam came, he went out to meet him unto a City of Moab, which is in the border of Arnon, even in the utmost coast.

37 Then Balak said unto Balaam, Did not I send for thee to call thee? Wherefore camest thou not unto me? Am not I able indeed to promote thee unto honor?

38 And Balaam made answer unto Balak: Loe I am come unto thee: and can I now say anything at all? The word that God putteth in my mouth, that shall I speak.

39 So Balaam went with Balak, & they came unto the City of Huzoth.

40 Then Balak offered Bull•kes and Sheep, and sent thereof to Balaam, and to the Princes that were with him.

41 And on the morrow, Balak took Balaam, and brought him up into the high places of Baal, that thence he might see the utmost part of the people.

In these words, being the shutting up of this Chapter, is contained the last branch of Balaam's going to curse the people. We heard before of the wrath of God against this Wizard, who would not be stopped from his desired journey, and therefore the Lord opened the mouth of the dumb beast to reprove her master; and afterward the Angel of God, further to discover the hollowness and hypocrisy of his heart. Here we are to consider the meeting and coming together of the King, and the false Prophet, together with the entertainment he findeth at Balaks hands. Herein we are to observe two things: First, their talk and communication; secondly, the actions of them both. In the first part containing the speech that passed between them, we are to mark, that the King to honor him the more, so soon as he is advertised of his approach near to the borders of his kingdom, he goeth out to meet him. For no doubt he sent the Princes and messengers of the Moabites back, to go before to give some notice and bring joyful tidings of his coming to their Lord. Therefore the King hearing the message, and conceyuing (no doubt) in his mind, the utter overthrow of the Israelites, stayed not until he came within his dominion, but met him in the bounds and limites thereof, and brought him home with him to go about his business. When they are met, note in their talk first the question moved by Balak, then the answer of Balaam. In the question we see, that albeit he had basely dejected himself, and crept lowly into the favor of the false Prophet, honoring him to his own dishonor, going out, to bring him in, and after a sort casting his crown and dignity under his feet; yet on the other side he glorieth in his own power, and boasteth of his high dignity, as if he had all the riches and honor in his own hand. Balaam doth not deny the favor of the king, placing him with his Princes, rewarding him with his presents honoring him with his own presence, and sending for him from far, but maketh a short answer unto him truly, albeit unwillingly, that albeit he were come at the kings desire, and brought by his deserts, yet it was not in his own power what to do: he could go no farther then the Rules and Principles of his Art would suffer him: he had called up the God of the Hebrews to forsake them, and he must of necessity speak that which God should put into his mouth. As if he should say, I cannot speak what I would, but shall be constrained to speak that only which he willeth me.

After the communication of these parties, followeth a description of their actions; when the king had brought him into the City, he spareth for no cost and charges, he feasteth him with his Princes, as if they were his Companions, and laboreth by all means possible to give him contentment in his abode. Having now refreshed himself after his journey, and having had experience of the kings good estimation of him, he is employed in the business for which he was sent for, and carried up to the high place of Baal, where no doubt was a solemn Temple consecrated and dedicated to that Idol, and from thence he beholdeth the whole host of Israel. Thus much of the order of the words: Now let us come to the doctrines arising out of the same.

[Verse 36. When Balak heard that Balaam came, he went out to meet him.] The cheef point offered to our considerations in this division is, to mark the honor done unto Balaam by the King. Himself goeth out to meet him, as if he had been some great Prince or Potentate, he bringeth him honourably into the City, he setteth him among his Princes, and maketh him inherit the seat of glory: he killeth bullocks and sheep to prepare a royal feast for him. From this example we learn, that Idolaters and Infidels were wont greatly to honor their Priests and Prophets. Howsoever they were destitute of the, knowledge of the true God, and served the creature instead of the Creator, which is blessed forever, Amen: yet they accounted it a special duty to honor the Priests of their Groues and Altars, and persuaded themselves they should never receive any blessing at the hands of their gods, unless they honored those that were esteemed as the servants of their gods, and greatly in their favor. This is taught us in many places of the word of God. Hereunto cometh that which Moses witnesseth, touching the Egyptians, during the dearth and famine that was in Egypt, when the king had received all the money, bought all the cattle, and purchased all the land of the people to supply their necessity, and to save their lives, Genes. 47, 22. yet he would not buy their Priests lands, but sustained them for their office sake. He removed the people unto the Cities from one side of Egypt, even to the other: only the land of the Priests bought he not, for the Priests had an ordinary of Pharaoh, & they did eat the ordinary which Pharaoh gave them, wherefore they sold not their ground. This also further appeareth in the book of Exodus, chapt. 7, 11, 22. and is confirmed in the Prophecies of Daniel: where we see, when Moses and Aaron wrought miracles, Pharaoh sent for his sorcerers that came into y^e kings presence. So when Nebucadnezar had dreamed a dream, wherewith his spirit was troubled, and his sleep disquieted. Dan. 2, 2. and 4, 3, 4. & 5, 7. be commanded to call the enchanters, the Astrologians, the soothsayers, and the Chaldeans who were about him, and near unto him, and in credit with him. The like we read in Samuel, 1 Sam. 6, 1, 2. when the Ark of the Lord was in the country of the Philistines, they called their Priests, and consulted with their soothsayers what they should do with it; and without their counsel and advice, without their direction and commandment, the Princes would do nothing. So when Ahab purposed to go to battle against Ramoth Gilead, he assembled the Prophets of his idol groves, whom he used familiarly, who were in credit and authority with him; insomuch, that one dareth smite Micaiah in the Kings presence, 1 Kin. 22.4, 6, 24.

The Reasons follow in order: First, naturally [Reason] all men are extremely given to superstition, and even dote in corrupting the worship of God, being destitute of the true knowledge of the true God, and the right manner of his service, who will be worshipped according to his own will and word, not after the inventions and devices of the wisest men. Christ Jesus teacheth in the Gospel, John 15, 19. that the world will always magnify and make much of his own, If ye were of the world, the world would love his own. And likewise the same Apostle saith elsewhere, They are of this world, therefore speak they of this world, and this world heareth them. If then men naturally turn the glory of the incorruptible God, into the similitude of corruptible creatures, and so change the truth of God into a lie, no marvel if they be greatly beloved and befriended, w^c further their idolatry, and help forward that worship of God which they have framed and fashioned to themselves.

Secondly, the false Prophets have always [Reason] been honored as fathers in the world, and therefore it cannot seem unto us strange, that they be highly esteemed. For as the true teachers are indeed spiritual Fathers, and spiritual Nurses of the Church as the Apostle declareth, 1 Cor. 4, 15. Though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many Fathers, for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the Gospel. So likewise idolaters did respect and reverence their Teachers as their fathers, giving them all honor, and accounting them worthy of all estimation. This we see in Judge. 17, 10, 11. & 18, 19. in the corrupt and ruinous times of the church, When there was no King in Israel, and the Levites (confined unto their Cities by the ordinance of God) wandered now up and down from place to place, for want of maintenance and employment, & glad as journey men to be hired for meat and drink, for ten shekels of silver, and a suit of apparel yearly. For Michah entertained one of them, and said to him, Dwell with me, & be unto me a Father and a Priest: now I know that the Lord will be good unto me, seeing I have a Levite to my Priest. So in the chapter following, when the Danites were come unto the house of Michah, they allured the young man the Levite to go with them, saying, Come with us to be our Father and Priest.

The uses are in the last place to be considered [Use 1] of us. First, we learn from hence, that all men have some light and sight of religion, & of God, by nature, though not so much as may bring them to salvation, yet so much as may suffice, and so far as serveth to make them without excuse. For why did they honor, reverence, and obey their idolatrous Priests, but because they were conversant about their holy things, and had their calling to further and finish the worship of their gods? Acts 14, 13. This therefore serveth to stop the mouths of all Atheists, that say in their hearts, defend with their tongues, and maintain with all their wits, that there is no God; speaking of him contemptuously, using reprochful words against him, savoring of profaneness and contempt. These are as mad dogs which fly in their masters face, that keepeth them, and feedeth them: so do they blaspheme the most High that made them, that ministereth all things unto them, in whom they live, and breath, and to whom they shall one day give an account, when all flesh shall appear before h^m. Would not he be judged among men a most ungodly and ungracious child, y^t should slander, and curse, reprove and reproach his •aren s with contumelious words? And if he should deny his father that he knoweth him, •r only doubt of it, would not such an one be thought unworthy to live upon the earth? How much more are they to be abhorred and •etested that blaspheme the name of GOD, which is blessed and holy throughout all generations? Which say unto God, Depart from us for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways: Who is the Almighty that we should serve him? & what profit shall we have if we should pray unto him? Job. 21.2• 25.

[Use 2] Secondly, see hereby how forward & zealous men are in their will-worship; and let us take notice of our own dullness & backwardness in the true worship of the eternal God, in comparison of these poor blind Idolaters. We see this evidently in the Israelites, when they determined in the absence of Moses to set up the golden Calf, Exo. 32, 3, 6. they pulled off their earrings, they bestowd their gold, they spared no cost, to the end they might have a service of God after their own fancy: and when it was made, they rose early in the morning to worship it, and expressed their delight in it by •eaping and dancing before it. We see it also in the old Idolaters, they were so zealous and superstitious, that they were content to part with things most dear and precious: they offered their sons and daughters unto devils, and shed innocent blood even the blood of their sons and of their daughters, whom they offered to the idols of Canaan. This also appeareth by our ne• idolaters, by their pilgrimages, vows, garnishing, g•lding, and clothing of images. Let us therefore be zealous in the true worship of God, and learn of these blind men to be ashamed of our coldness and carelessness, of our backwardnesse & unwillingness in the best things. When the mother of Machah would make a molten image, Judge 1•, 3• she dedicated eleven hundred she•else unto the Lord, to make thereof a graven image or idol. Whereby we see, in this voluntary worship and will-service (being agreeable unto the corrupt n•ture of man) how forward and fervent, how ready & willing they were to follow and further their idolatry. But how many be there that live in the bosom of the Church, and profess the true religion, prospering under the shadow of it, and tasting how bountiful the Lord is, y^t to maintain the truth, repine and grieve to give one half penny? Albeit they waste their years in vanity, and think nothing too much to bestow on pride, drunkenness, riotousnes, whoredom, and all excess; to the dishonoring of God, to the impairing of their estates, and to the destruction of their souls and bodies: yet when they should bestow and contribute anything for the maintaining of a learned ministry to instruct them & their families in the word, which is able to save their souls, how do they pinch and repine at it, as if they were like to be undone? Or if a collection or contribution be to be made for the poor, to relieve them in their necessities, one penny given this way doth more grieve them, & make them grudge at it, then a pound co•sumed in bad• and baser uses. What a shame is this, for those whom the Lord hath blessed with abundance, that they should spend all on their backs and bellies, on hawks or houndes or whores, and nothing at all to the glory of God, to the comfort of their souls, and unto the help of their brethren: nothing on the Church of God, and upon their brethren in Christ, dearly bought with y^e blood of Christ, as of a Lamb unspotted and undefiled. To this purpose

Solomon speaketh also, Prover. verse 23. Bu• the truth but sell it not; likewise wisdom, instruction, and understanding. This our Savior Christ teacheth also, Mat. 13, 44, 45, 46.

Lastly, seeing the heathen were wont to [Use 3] esteem highly, and provide liberally for their prophets and soothsayers, how much more ought the faithful and painful Ministers of God that labor in the word and doctrine to be maintained? For seeing they plant in the Lord's vineyard, 1 Cor, 9, 7, 13, 14. why should they not eat the fruit, and gather the profits thereof? Seeing they go a warfare, and fight the battles of God, why should they not take their press-money, & receive their pay? Seeing they feed the flock of God committed unto them, whereof the holy Ghost hath made them overseers, why should they not eat of y^e milk thereof? Seeing they be nurses to nurse the sons and daughters of God, with the two breasts of the Olde and New Testament, why should they not receive their wages? If they sow spiritual things, why should they not reap carnal things? Seeing they minister about holy things, why should they not eat of the things of the Temple? And seeing they wait at the Altar, why should they not be partakers with the Altar? If they be the Lord's Laborers, why should they no• have the reward and recompense of their work? For the Lord himself hath decreed and ordained, that they which do preach the Gospel, should likewise live of the Gospel. All the Heathen people throughout the world, are bountiful, and open their hands wide to their Priests and Prophets. Jezebel so provided for the Priests of Baal, and the other Prophets of the Groues, that she kept four hundred at her own Table, 1 Kings 18, 19. The Papists have thought nothing too much, nothing too dear to be bestowed upon their Priests and Jesuits, and upon their foolish superstition. And as they do liberally maintain, so they do greatly honor and highly advance them, they account them as the Fathers and Pillars of the Church. This should stir us up, having a founder religion, and making a better profession, to have the Teachers thereof in singular love, for their works sake that is in their hands, 1 Thess. 5, 12, 13, and to account their feet beautiful, that bring glad tidings of good things, who are as spiritual fathers of our souls, and as Joash said to Elisha, the Chariots of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. For when Elisha fell sick of his sickness whereof he died, the King came down unto him to visit him, and wept upon his face, saying, O my father, my father, the Chariot of Israel, & the horsemen of the same. 2 Kings 13, 14. This serveth to condemn our contempt toward the Messengers and Ministers of God, that rise early and late to speak unto us in the Name of the Lord, who instead of honor are disgraced: instead of countenance, are contemned: instead of maintenance, are every way defrauded, partly by profane Atheists, partly by dissembling hypocrites, and partly by cunning Papists. Hence it is, that the Church is oppressed, and groaneth under the burden of sundry corrupt customs, and injurious prescriptions, to the decay of religion, and hindrance of the true worship of God. If these mē had only cut off the lap of our garments, it were reason they should have some remorse for it: and it were well with them if their harts would smite them for it. But they have served us as the Ammonites served the messengers of David, whom he sent to comfort the King, who shaued off half their beards, and cut off their garments in the middle, 2 Sam. 10, 4. Of whom we may say as Paul said sometimes of the Jews; Thou that abhorrest Idols, committest thou sacrilege? Rom. 2, 22. That is, thou hatest the false gods, and yet thou spoilest the true God, which seemeth to be much worse then the worshipping of Images, and the giving of our selves to the sin of Idolatry. Thus we offer to the Lord, the lame and the sick, the torn and the blind, which if it were offered unto thy Prince, would he accept it at thy hands, & be content with thee? Mal. 1, 8, 9, 13, 14. yet we think him deeply indebted unto us. Thus do we spoil the Lord of hosts in his Tithes and Offerings, yet the Idolaters will not spoil their gods, as we have spoiled and do spoil the true God. Mal. 3, 8. Thus oftentimes it fareth better in this world with those which prophesy errors, and speak flattering things, which daub with untempered Morter, and preach of wine, and of strong drink, thē with such as are found faithful witnesses of y^e truth, denouncing the judgments of God, and dealing faithfully with his people. Whilst the true Prophets of God are hid in Caues, and fed with bread and water, to sustain their feeble souls and faint lives: four hundred Prophets of the Groues are fed to the full, and fare deliciously every day at Iezebels Table, 1 Kings 18, 13, 19. Whiles M•chaiah is clapt up in the Prison house, and fed with the bread of affliction, &c. the false Prophets walked at liberty, were richly provided for, tasted of the best, and did eat the portion of the Kings meat. Whilst Jeremiah the true Prophet of the Lord is put in the court of the prison, & hath given him daily a morsel of bread out of the Bakers street, and is cast into the Dungeon, where was no water but mire, where he stuck fast: the false Prophets insult over him, and live in all pleasure & abundance. Whilst Daniel and his companions feed upon Pulse, and have water given them to drink, the Priests of Bel with their wives & children made merry with the meat allotted to the Idol. But howsoever this hath ever been the lot and portion of the Prophets and Apostles, and of other servants of God, and the recompense of their labors, who spend their vital spirits, and waste their strength, to speak to an unthankful people: let us (notwithstanding the disgraces and indignities offered unto us) go forward in our callings, looking for our wages and reward at the hands of GOD, in whose service we are employed, and who hath promised, That they which are wise, shall shine as the brightness of the Firmament, &c. Dan. 12. Thus the Apostle exhorteth the Elders to feed the flock of God, which dependeth upon them, assuring themselves, That when the chief Shepherd shall appear, they shall receive an incorruptible crown of glory, 1 Pet. 5, 3, 4.

[Verse 39. So Balaam went with Balak: He took Balaam, and brought him up into the high places of Baal, that thence he might see the utmost part of the people.] After the communication, followeth a description of their actions, they prepare for their coniuration, they offer sacrifices, and going into the Chapel of Baal, they take a view of the utmost part of the people of God. God hath set himself against Balaam, he had forbidden him to curse his people, the sword was drawn out against him for his disobedience, and he promised to submit himself unto the good pleasure of God. All this was known also to Balak that set him on work, and payeth him his wages; yet see here how they proceed and go forward in their wicked course, and cannot be stopped & hindered from it.

From hence we learn, that howsoever the ungodly be checked & reprov'd of God, yet they continue in their ungodliness: howsoever they be crossed and contradicted, they hold on their course in sin which they have begun. This appeareth in the example of Cain; albeit he were admonished and reprov'd of God for his wrath and malice against his brother, yet he runneth forward, and never ceaseth till he had killed him. This is seen likewise evidently in the example of the old world, when the Lord saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and all the imaginations of the thoughts of his heart were only evil continually, he stirred up Noah a Preacher of righteousness, and gave them an hundred and twenty years to repent; yet they sinned still, corrupting their ways, and defiling the earth with their cruelty; they did eat and drink, and gave themselves unto all excess till the flood came, and swept them all away. Hereunto cometh the practice of Pharaoh, Exod. 6, 34. what could the Lord have done unto him that he did not? He sent Moses and Aaron to speak unto him, he brought sundry plagues upon him, he corrected him by diverse and sharp afflictions, yet he waxed obstinate, and hardened his heart more and more, to his own destruction. This is that which the Apostle Paul teacheth, 2 Tim. 3, 1, 2, 3. This know, that in the last days shall come perilous times; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, cursed speakers, disobedient to parents, unthankfull, unholy, &c. So that it appeareth to be an evident truth, that the wicked are so obstinate and hardened in their evil, that by no means they can be brought from it, Pro. 27, 22. And if thou shouldst bra• a fool in a mortar among wheat brayed with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him.

[Reason 1] The Reasons to strengthen and confirm this truth to our consciences, are to be considered. First, sin is as the Gangrene or Canker, i• fretteth and cateth further and further, the hand infecteth the arm, and the foot the leg, unless the part that is infected be cut off at the beginning, as the Apostle teacheth, 2 Tim. 2, 16, 17. Stay profane and vain babblings, for they shall increase unto more ungodliness: & their word shall fret as a canker, of which sort are Hymenaeus and Philetus. So the Apostle James resembleth and compareth sin to child-bearing for the fruitfulness of it, I am. 1, 15, When lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin, and sin when it is finished, bringeth forth death. Likewise, it is a leaven which leaveneth the whole lump, and therefore no marvel if it proceed by little and little, from one degree to another.

[Reason 2] Secondly, evil men are given over of God into a reprobate sense by his judgment, so y^t it is no marvel if they become vile and abominable. This Paul declareth, Rom. 1, 26, 29, 30. This is likewise noted of the sons of E•i, who albeit they were reprov'd of their father that they caused the lords people to trespass, Yet they continued in their sin, and obeyed not his voice, because the Lord would stay them, 1 Sam. 2, 24, 25. And the Apostle writing to the Thessalonians, maketh mention of the unbelieving Jews, who killed the Lord, murdered the Prophets, persecuted the Apostles, withstood the truth, and forbad them to preach unto the Gentiles, that they might be saved, To fulfill their sins always, for the wrath •f God is come on them to the utmost. Seeing therefore such as cast away the warnings of God, are themselves cast off and given over of God to fill up the measure of their sins, and seeing sin is of it self fruitful, branching and budding as a Tree, fretting as a canker, souring as a leaven, growing as a child, multiplying as the fish in the waters: we are not to marvel, if men once beginning to sin cannot be stayed and stopped from whatsoever they have imagined to do.

Now, let us apply this doctrine to our uses. [Use 1] First, seeing the ungodly proceed and persevere in sin, assuredly great shall be their judgment: and as they increase in sin, so shall they increase their punishment, and hoard it up as a treasure against the day of wrath. This the Apostle setteth down as an evident truth. Despisest thou the riches of his bountifulness and patience, and long sufferance, not knowing that the bountifulness of God leadeth thee to repentance?

But thou after thine hardness, and heart that cannot repent, heapest up as a Treasure unto thyself wrath, against the day of wrath, &c. This ought to be a terror to all the ungodly, to consider that as their hearts are hardened, and their consciences seared, so the plagues and punishments of God attend upon them, and always grow according to the degrees of their sins. This the Lord threateneth in the Law, Levite. 16, 21, 23, 24. If ye walk stubbornly against me, and will not obey me, I will then bring seven times moe plagues upon you, according to your sins: but if by these ye will not be reformed by me, but walk stubbornly against me, &c. Thus we see the equal proportion between our sins, and God's punishments.

Secondly, see how dangerous it is once to make shipwreck of faith and a good conscience, and to wound our souls by falling into sin. The further a disease runneth, and the longer it continueth, the more vncureable it is. The further a fire spreadeth, the more it consumeth. The more sin groweth to an head, the more the Spirit of God is quenched, & the work of grace is diminished, the assurance of comfort is weakened and lessoned. Let us therefore always keep a diligent watch over our souls, let us seek to cut off all occasions of evil, and endeavor to stop the first beginnings. If a disease be taken in the beginning before it spread and seize upon the vital parts, it is easily cured. A fire when it is first kindled, is quickly quenched. The Spring of the year is the best and fittest season to purge out evil humors, and to apply medicines unto the natural body. When a ship hath an hole that it beginneth to leak, it is soon stepped. So if we will labor and strive to purge out the old leaven betimes, before it gather strength, we shall with more ease & less difficulty be able to withstand the force thereof: whereas the more sin is practiced, the more the heart is hardened, according to the saying of the Prophet, Ier. 13, 23. Can the Blackmoore change his skin? Or the Leopard his spots? Then may ye also do good which are accustomed to do evil. Therefore the Lord seeing that Cain had offended, and that his countenance was dejected (which were the fore-runners of murder) stirred him up to look unto these things. Gen. 4, 7. If thou do well, shalt thou not be accepted? And if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door. This is that use which the Prophet pointeth out, Isaiah 5.11, 18. Woe unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sins as with cartropes. Woe unto them that rise up early to follow drunkenness, and to them that continue until night, till the wine do enflame them. Where he teacheth the woeful and miserable condition of all those that run from evil to worse, as it were, adding drunkenness unto thirst, and warneth us to take heed lest at any time there be in any of us an evil heart and unfaithful, to depart from the living God.

[Use 3] Lastly, seeing the ungodly being reprov'd of God, and checked of their own conscience continue in their evil, we must know that on the other side it belongeth unto the faithful, according to the truth of the word revealed unto them, to grow in grace more and more, and to make every day some step to the king dome of heaven. So many as are truly grafted into Christ, as it were into a vine, must draw juice from him continually, and bring forth fruit plentifully, according as he teacheth, John 15.22. Every branch that beareth not fruit in me, he taketh away, and everyone that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. It is the commendation of the Church of Thyatira, Revel. 2, 19. That their works were more at the last, then they were at the first. Let us begin to believe in Christ, and to express the power of godliness, neither let us be terrified and dismayed from a constant resolution, to forsake sin, and embrace righteousness, with the hardness and difficulty, with the lets and stumbling-blocks that lie in our way, with the troubles and temptations that abide for us: all these are hard in the beginning. A settled course, and a continual practice of faith and repentance, shall make the matter easy, and the way plain before us. An Apprentice that first beginneth to learn his trade and occupation, is much troubled at the strangeness of it, he findeth in himself great unfitness and untowardness, he saith he shall never attain unto it, he shall never go through with it, and the reason is, because he hath not used it: but when once he is entered into that course, he taketh delight in it, and wondereth at his own folly and simplicity. A Scholar that first beginneth to read, to write, or to learn any liberal Art, is discouraged through the hardness of it, and if he might be put to his choice, had rather give over then hold out; but use and custom makes it easy, and then he learneth with great pleasure & little pain: for that which a man doth often, he doth easily. So is it with all Nouices and young Scholars in the school of Christ, when first they begin to be trees of righteousness, set in the garden of God, they meet with many hindrances and pull-backs, they wrestle with many temptations, and encounter with sundry enemies: but when they have once practiced the duties of the first and second Table, and entered into the race of Religion, they run swiftly, they obey God willingly, and follow their calling cheerfully. For now they practice all holy duties often, and therefore do them easily and willingly, not grudgingly and untowardly.

This Solomon teacheth, Prov. 14, 6. A scorner seeketh wisdom, and findeth it not; but knowledge is easy to him that will understand. And hence it is that Christ our Savior exhorteth us, Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, for I will ease you: For my yoke is easy and my burden light, Matth. 11, 28. So the Apostle John testifieth, This is the love of God that ye keep his Commandments, and his Commandments are not burthenous: for all y^t is born of God over cometh this world and this is that victory that hath overcome this world, even our Faith. 1 John 5.3, 4. They have their transgressions of the law pardoned, they have Christ's obedience in fulfilling the law imputed: repentance from dead works is wrought and effected in them. All things saith Christ are possible to him that believeth, Matth. 17, 20: according to the saying of Paul, I am able to do all things through the help of Christ which strengtheneth me. Let us do his will cheerfully, readily, willingly. For as God loveth a cheerful giver, so he loveth a cheerful servant. Let it be meat & drink unto us to do the will of our heavenly Father, and finish his work appointed unto us.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 And Balaam said to Balak: Build me here seven Altars, and prepare me here seven Bullockes, and seven Rams.

2 And Balak did as Balaam said, and Balak and Balaam offered upon every Altar, a Bullock and a Ram.

3 Then Balaam said unto Balak: Stand by the burnt Offering, and I will go, if so be that the Lord will come and meet me: and whatsoever he showeth me, I shall tell thee: So he went forth alone.

4 And God met Balaam; and he said unto him, I have prepared seven Altars, and have offered upon every Altar a Bullock and a Ram.

5 And the Lord put an answer in Balaam's mouth, and said; Go again to Balak, and say on this wise.

6 So when he returned unto him, Loe, he stood by his burnt-offering, he and all the Princes of Moab.

7 Then he uttered his Parable, and said, Balak the King of Moab hath brought me from Aram, out of the Mountains of the East, saying; Come curse Jacob for my sake, come and detest Israel.

8 How shall I curse, where God hath not cursed? Or how shall I detest, where the Lord hath not detested?

9 For from the top of the Rocks I did see him, and from the Hills I did behold him: Loe, the people shall dwell by themselves, and shall not be reckoned among the Nations.

10 Who can tell the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his.

11 Then Balak said unto Balaam, What hast thou done unto me? I took thee to curse mine enemies, and behold, thou hast blessed them altogether.

12 And he answered and said, Must not I take heed to speak that which the Lord hath put in my mouth?

IN the former Chapter we have heard the busy preparing and providing of an enchanter and sooth-sayer, to weaken and bewitchthe people. Now in this Chapter and the Chapter following, we see his diuinations delivered, and his sorceries explained unto us. For Balaam being gotten and hired with the wages of unrighteousness, he laboreth and sweateth by all means to waste and weaken the host of Israel, but effecteth nothing against them, verifying the saying of the wiseman, Prov. 21, 30. There is no counsel nor wisdom against God, who scattereth the purposes and policies of the wicked.

In this Chapter observe two principal points (to wit) two devilish attempts to destroy the Israelites with Magicall enchantments. Touching the first endeavor and practice, we are to consider, both the facts & actions, and then the issue and events thereof. The first action is, that Balaam (as the masterworkman in this business) commandeth preparations to be made for his diuinations, he must have seven Altars built, seven sacrifices prepared, seven Bullocks, and seven Rams offered; seeking to please and appease GOD thereby, and to draw him to favor the Moabites, & to forsake the Israelites, for he knew he could do nothing for the one, and against the other, until he had procured the God of the Israelites to depart from them.

But here it is to be observed, that he dealeth wholly by odd numbers, willing all to be done by seuens. The number of seven was always accounted an holy and sacred number, and religiously observed, even from the Creation, whereof the Gentiles marked sundry examples in Nature, and in the worship of God. Besides, a certain divine force was imagined to be in the odd number, and therefore the Sorcerers and Enchanters did for the most part deal with these uneven numbers. This we see in the Poet Uirgil, Eclog. 8.

I twist for thee even first of all, th•se threads in number three,

In color threefold differing, and thrice about these Altars

I draw thy lively counterfeit: God joys in number odd.

The like appeareth in another Poet, describing the practices of certain witches, as Medea, Circe, and others. He bringeth one in, speaking thus:

The Stars alonely fair and bright,

did in the Welkin shine,

To which she lifting up her hands, did thrice her self incline:

And thrice with water of the Brooke, her hair besprinkled she,

And gasping thrice, she opt her mouth, and bowed down her knee.

And afterward,

Loe, thrice with Brimstone, thrice with Fire, and thrice with Water pure,
She purged Aesons aged corse, that stepped and slumbered sure.

The Altars being made as Balaam commanded, the King and this Sooth-sayer offer thereupon to God. For Nature taught, that there is no access to God, without a sacrifice: as God from the beginning of the fall of man, trained up his people in the rudiments of the Law, & enjoined them this carnal service, and these carnal ceremonies which now are ceased, in as much as we have the consummation and perfection of all in the all-sufficient sacrifice of Christ once offered upon the Cross, who sitteth forever at the right hand of God, and with that one offering, he hath consecrated forever them that are sanctified, Hob. 10, 12, 14 Now they offer these kind of Beasts rather than any other, because they had heard that the God of Israel commanded them to offer Bullocks and Rams unto him, so that they would give him his own desire, and please him with the service he seemed to be delighted in. But God regardeth not sacrifices that are offered with a corrupt heart. Again, they offer seven Bullocks and seven Rams upon the seven Altars, because as this number was thought to be holy, so it was supposed to be of secret virtue, seeing God sanctified & separated from the beginning, the seventh day, and nature hath left examples of sundry sevens in the heavens, as the Pleiades, the Planets, and many other. Lastly, he commandeth the King to stand by the sacrifices and burnt-offerings very devoutly, and whiles they were burning, he withdraweth himself, & seeketh a secret place to work his feats, as the witch of Endor did, 1 Sam. 28, 13, and as Sorcerers do; to the end that by this separation of himself he might raise a superstitious opinion in Balak of his doings, and the better being solitary, to put in use his ceremonies. The events ensuing after these actions before handled, are double: First, in God, and afterward in Balaam. God appeared to this profane man, as he hath done to diverse of his enemies, for his children's sake, not for their own sakes, as also Elisha said to Jehoram, As the Lord liveth, in whose sight I stand, if I had not regarded the presence of Jehoshaphat, I would not have looked toward thee, nor seen thee this day. 2 Ki. 3, 14. Now as all hypocrites please themselves in their outward ceremonies, so Balaam telleth God what Sacrifices he had offered unto him, that he had spared no cost nor charges. And as he thought he had done well, so he looked to have been respected; he telleth of his good deeds, he boasteth of his works, he numbereth up his burnt offerings, he hopeth by these allurements, that God would change his mind. He thought him to be as one of the gods of the Gentiles, which were devils, & not God's, and they that sought unto them, sought unto devils, not to God. But whereas he glorieth in the works of his own hands, and putteth confidence in his worship performed to God, he receiveth no answer hereof, only the Lord willeth him to return back to the King his master, that set him on work, and speak unto him what should be put in his mouth.

Touching Balaam, he goeth, he obeyeth, he uttereth a Prophecy before the King and his Nobles, speaking after the manner of the true Prophets, not moved by the spirit of the devil, but inspired by the Spirit of God, and declaring truly what he had received of God. The Prophecy and Parable of Balaam is first uttered, then the effect of it is set down and declared. The Prophecy hath three points to be considered: First, the entrance: Secondly, the substance and matter it self: Thirdly, the conclusion. Touching the entrance into the Prophecy, it is taken from the present work now in action, and detecteth the folly and dotage of Balak, who had sent from far to fetch a Sorcerer, and doubted not of the force of his diuinations, seeing he was cunning in the East manners. Thus were Idolaters given over, by the just judgment of God, to believe lies. The substance of this Prophetical speech followeth, first propounded, and afterward proved and confirmed. For he showeth, that Israel is blessed of God, and therefore not to be cursed. Israel is protected of God, as with a shield, and therefore it lieth not in his power, or in the power of any man to make them a cursed people, to be had in execration and detestation. This sentence is uttered by way of an interrogation and asking a question, for the greater force, and giving power unto it, for the better assurance of the truth of it, and to put it out of doubt, How shall I curse, where God hath not cursed? Or how shall I detest, where God hath not detested? Now he proveth that they could not be cursed of God, nor hurt by the enchantments of the devil, nor annoyed by the devices of men; first, by his own testimony in the present seeing of them, and the comely order observed among them, From the top of the Rocks I did see them: as if he should say, The very sight of this people, and of their government, daunteth my heart, and dasheth my purpose, so that I am called back from conceiving a thought of cursing them, both by the authority of God, and by the presence of thē which I behold. Secondly, by the pureness and holiness of the people, they walked with God, they dwelled in his presence, they observed his Laws, they submitted themselves to his ordering and government, they embraced his religion, they separated themselves from the Gentiles, they abstained from their superstitions, they would have no fellowship with them, they differed from them in their Laws, in their Religion, in their life, in their sacrifices, in their sacraments, and other ceremonies.

The conclusion and shutting up of this Prophecy is double, and containeth two points: First, in respect of Israel: Secondly, in respect of Balaam himself. Touching Israel, he pronounceth the blessing of God towards them, that they should increase as the dust of the earth, and as the sand on the sea-shore, which is innumerable, according to the promise made to Abraham, Gen. 12. Heb. 11, 12. And to move the heart of Balak and of all the Moabites the more, he uttereth it by way of asking the question, and doubling it, he increaseth God's mercy toward them, and saith, he could not number the fourth part of Israel. Touching himself, he testifieth, that the blessedness of this people was great in regard of the life to come, and therefore wisheth that in death he might be like them, that after death, he might be partaker of the same happiness with them. But wishers and woulders were never good Christians. For this is a peevish & perverse kind of wishing, not to perform that which belongeth to the blessedness of eternal life, and yet to wish and desire it to come upon him.

The effect of this unlooked for Prophecy, is set down by a question and an answer. The Question of the King expostulateth the matter with him, why he blessed the Israelites, as one forgetting himself, and unmindful of his business, whereas he was hired to curse them, being his enemies. The answer of Balaam casteth the fault upon God, and excuseth himself. For y^e same God that opened his mouth, constrained him to utter this blessing against his will. As if he should say, I have used all my skill, and practiced my art to the uttermost, but no sorcery will prevail against them: why then dost thou check and controule me, for that which I can by no means remedy & redress? But the question may be asked, whether his charms and coniurations could have hurt the Church, if they had been pronounced against them? I answer, the curses of the wicked cannot hurt or hinder the godly, as Balaam in every Prophecy acknowledgeth. And Solomon teacheth, That the curse which is causeless, shall not come. Prov. 26, 2. Wherefore then did not God suffer him to run his race, & to follow his own imagination? Why did God appear unto him, and not suffer his curses to be denounced? Surely, because hereby the Name of God is more glorified, the Sorcerer confounded, and all the expectation of the enemies dashed, in that the curses are not pronounced, and their desires and endeavours disannulled.

[Verse 1. Build me here seven Altars, and prepare me seven Bullocks, and seven Rams.] They begin their work with great pomp & show of zeal and religion, as the manner of the heathen was, when they went about any enterprize. He buildeth not one Altar alone, but seven: he contenteth not himself with one Bullock, and one Ram, but prepareth seven: so that on every Altar he offereth two burnt offerings to appease the Lord toward them. He nameth the Name of the Lord, and goeth apart from the society of men, as it were to have conference with the living God, whereas his drift and purpose was nothing but to practice his sorcery. Thus we see the Gentiles observed the manner of sacrificing, received by tradition from their Fathers, yet not purely and vncorruptly, both because they had not respect to the Messiah promised; and supposed the outward work of sacrificing to be so precious and meritorious, that for it their sins should be forgiven; and because they mingled and corrupted the worship of God, with their own inventions. For the sacrifices instituted of God, are defiled and depraved, partly by the opinion of merit, partly by the addition of new-fangled worship. Hereby we learn, That all religion pretendeth order and zeal, although it be removed from truth. Howsoever all false religion proceed from the spirit of disorder and confusion, that is, the devil: yet it maketh some show of holiness, & putteth on a shadow of the true religion. This appeareth in the high places that Solomon built for his outlandish women, Where they burnt Incense, and offered oblations to strange gods. 1 Kin. 11.7, 8, and 18, 26, 28. It is noted touching the Priests of Baal, y^t they prepared a Bullock, and called upon the name of Baal, from morning to noon, They cried aloud, and cut themselves, as their manner was, with kniues and Launces, until the blood gushed out upon them. Loc, what zeal and forwardness here was. The like appeareth in Zedekiah, one of the former generation; he made horns of iron in resemblance & imitation of the true Prophets, who taught by such signs, and said, With these shalt thou push the Aramites, until thou hast consumed them. 2 Kings 22, 11. The same is offered unto us in the Prophecies of Jeremiah, chap. 32, 34, 35, where describing the zeal of Idolaters, he saith, They set their abominations in the house of God to defile it, they built the high places of Baal, and caused their sons and daughters to pass through the fire to Molech. So when Hananiah brake the yoke of Jeremiah, he said, Thus saith the Lord, Even so will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babel, from the neck of all Nations, within the space of two years, Ier. 28, 10, 11.

The Reasons are to be considered: First, [Reason 1] because Satan can turn and transform himself into a resemblance of the glorious Angels that dwell in the heavenly light; albeit he dwell in utter darkness, yet he never appeareth in his own likeness, he shadoweth his lies with the Name of God, and covereth his temptations with the vizard of holiness. This Reason the Apostle useth, 2 Cor. 11, 13, 14, 15. If then Satan hide his horns, and dissemble the hollownes of his dealings, so that his baits and snares are not perceived, and the poison of them is not seen, no marvel if his instruments that are led by his spirit, follow their master in their hypocrisy. For as the spirit is that leadeth them, so are they that are led.

Secondly, it satisfieth ignorant and foolish men, from further searching and enquiring into [Reason 2] the hidden mysteries of corrupt religion. If it should be propounded in the name of the devil, and the rottenness thereof appear in his likeness, everyone would defy it, and spit at it, and Satan well knoweth, he should gain nothing to his kingdom. But when he taketh up the Name of God, pretendeth the zeal of God, and sometimes alledgeth the Scriptures of God, he carrieth many blindfold to perdition, and leadeth away captive simple souls laden with sins, and led with diverse lusts, for they never make further enquiry, nor dive to the depth of Satan's wiliness. This appeareth in the Idolatry of the ten Tribes, erected by Jeroboam, who said to the people, It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: hold (O Israel) thy gods, which brought thee out of the Land of Egypt: and this thing turned to sin, for the people went (because of the one) even to Dan. 1 Kings 12, 28, 30. Judge. 17, 13. The ignorant multitude ran headlong after this counterfeit worship, coloured with show of reason, and followed those Idols, that they might go with ease to the devil.

[Use 1] Let us make use of this doctrine, and see what may be learned from hence, for our edification. First, acknowledge from hence, that all zeal and appearance of zeal is not good. Balak and Balaam here pretend the worship of God, and who would think they intended my mischief? Yet they were in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity. Therefore the Apostle saith of the Jews, I bear the record, that they have the zeal of God, but not according to knowledge, for they being ignorant of the righteousness of God, and going about to stablish their own righteousness have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God. So the Church of Rome besotted with superstition, and having drunk deeply of the cup of abominations makes an outward show of great zeal, by their multitude of ceremonies, partly borrowed from the Jews, and partly patched from the Gentiles; by their Pilgrimages to Saints, by the counterfeit strictness of their disordered orders, by their solemn vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, by the pretended straightness of their whipping Jesuits, and deluded disciples, imitating herein the Priests of Baal, and resembling the heretics, which of whipping themselves, are called Flagellantes. But notwithstanding all these shows of holiness, they are far from true zeal, having a voluntary religion, like unto those whom the Apostle Paul reproveth, Col. 2, 21, 23. In which place the Apostle doth lively describe what the Roman Religion is, and portrayeth it out as a Table before our eyes: It hath goodly shows, which indeed seem to have some exquisite and excellent thing in them, but the inward and spiritual worship is neglected among them, the Name of God is dishonored, the Sabbath is profaned, the Scriptures are abused, the doctrine of faith and repentance is buried, & many open sins are maintained among them. If that be the true religion which giveth all glory to God, the Popish religion cannot be so, which giveth all glory to themselves, and robbeth God of the honor due to his Name, by their doctrine of merits, & by their works of supererogation, which indeed is more than supererogation. If it be the true religion that magnifyeth the Scriptures, resteth in the perfection of them, submitteth all persons & causes unto them, and acknowledgeth them the sole and supreme Judge of all Questions and Controuersies of religion, then that must be a false religio, which patcheth other writings and traditions unto them, which in matters of doctrine flieth from them, which preferreth the authority of the Church before them, and enveth to be wholly ordered by them. If that be the true religion, which advanceth the sufferings of Christ, and resteth in his perfect Oblation once performed upon the Cross, which acknowledgeth Christ to be the only Savior and Redeemer of his people, and teacheth to rely upon him alone for our justification: then that must be confessed to be a counterfeit religion, which setteth up a mock Christ, and honoreth instead of him, the cursed Idol of the Mass, whereby the remembrance of his death is shamefully euded, and the people of God are miserably deluded. Learn therefore, that all zeal is not true zeal; and to hate all evil, albeit it have the appearance of good, and come masked under the vizard and habit of holiness. For counterfeit piety, is double impiety.

Secondly, let us not be carried away and [Use 2] seduced with every vain blast of false Doctrine, but stand constant, settled, and unmovable, as they that are built, not on the weak sand, but upon the firm Rock that cannot be removed. This the Apostle teacheth, Heb. 1, 9. Bee not carried about with diverse and strange doctrines, for it is a good thing that the heart be stablished with grace, and not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied in them. This use is urged by the Apostle Paul, 2. Tim. 3, 5. This know, that in the last days shall come perilous seasons for men shall be lovers of their own selves, &c, having a show of godliness, but have denied the power thereof; turn away therefore from such. We see how easily the greatest part are carried away with shadows without substance, and shows without inward truth. They have itching ears after new Teachers, and forsake the ancient Teachers, that have fed them with the milk of the word, & gained them to the faith of Christ. Wherefore it standeth us upon, to take heed we be not seduced and deceived with false Prophets, and to make a trial of their doctrine, by the truth of the Scriptures, according to the counsel of Christ our Savior, Math. chapter 7, verses 15. 16.

Lastly, it is our duty to learn to discern [Use. 3] the spirits, and to be able to judge of the Doctrine, whether it be of God, or not. Christ commandeth his Disciples to beware & take heed of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees, that is of their doctrine: but in another place he chargeth them to hear the Pharisees & obey their doctrine, sitting in Moses chair, because they were appointed for the time to be the Teachers of the Church. Now then, if they must hear and do what they say, and yet avoid their mixtures & corruptions of sound doctrine, it is required necessarily of the people, to discern between the Law of GOD and the leaven of the Pharisees, being charged to cleave to the truth, and to forsake error. This is that use which the Apostle John urgeth, 1 John, chap. 4. verse 1. Dearely beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they be of GOD: For many false Prophets are gone out into this world. And in the second Epistle, chap. 7, 8. he speaketh to the same purpose, Many deceivers are entered into this world, which confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh: look to yourselves, that we lose not the things which we have done, but that we may receive a full reward. Hereunto likewise cometh the exhortation of Elijah to all the people that were seduced by false Prophets, 1 Kings 18, 21. How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal be he, then go after him. And the Apostle Paul chargeth the Thessalonians to try all things, and to hold fast that which is good. 1 Thess. 5, 21. This condemneth the Church of Rome of sacrilege, that take from the people the key of knowledge, and nuzzle them in ignorance, as the mother of devotion, accounting it sufficient, that they believe as the Church believeth, and credit in all things their Pastors and Teachers, and forbid them all trial of the doctrine delivered unto them. But the Scriptures require of them the spirit of discerning, and all judgment, that they may allow those things that are best, and that they may be without offense, until the day of Christ; to take heed that they walk circumspectly and wisely, that they may understand what the will of the Lord is, and beware that they be not seduced. And it is no excuse to the people being misled and misguided, to say, Thus have I been taught and instructed: For when the blind lead the blind, they both fall into the pit of destruction, Mat. 15, 14. So that if they embrace not faith unto salvation, but withdraw themselves unto perdition, they that follow false Teachers, are sure to perish as well as they that lead them the way, or rather out of the way: and if the Watchman see the sword drawn, and judgment coming, and blow not the Trumpet: albeit the blood of the people shall be required at his hands, yet they shall also be taken away in their sins.

[Verse 5. The Lord put an answer in Balaam's mouth.] Here is set down the Author of his Prophecies. He sought a cursing, but God put in his mouth a blessing, so that the spirit of Prophecy is sometimes given to wicked men, as appeareth in Saul, & sundry others. Wherefore it is said. God put his word in his mouth, not in his heart. He hath God plentifully in his mouth. but his heart was far from him, so that he speaketh not far otherwise then his Ass spake before, because God compelled him against his will, to utter that which he put in his mouth. Heereby we learn, that God's truth is oftentimes enforced and drawn out of those that know it not, nor believe it. Profane men of an evil spirit, are constrained & compelled to give testimony and witness to the truth of God, the Lord as it were wringeth and wresteth it out of the mouths of those that be ignorant of him; as we see how Balaam in this and the chapter following, uttereth excellent and heavenly things (albeit against his will) of God, of the enemies of God, of the Church prospering and flourishing thorough his favor: yet he was lewd in life, and profane in heart, loving neither God, nor his truth. This we see in the Sorcerers in Egypt, when they saw and felt the plague of Lice, but could not with their enchantments bring forth the like, they confessed, This is the finger of God, Exod. 8, 19. This appeareth farther in the history of Gideon, when one of his enemies had told a dream to his neighbor which he had dreamed, his fellow answered and said, This is nothing else save the sword of Gideon the son of Joash, a man of Israel, for into his hand hath God delivered Midian and all the Hoast. Judge. 7, 14. This likewise we see in the Centurion and soldiers that were with him watching Jesus, Math. 27, 54, when they saw the renting of the veyle, the trembling of the earth, the opening of the graves, the cleaving of the stones, and arising of the dead bodies, they feared greatly, saying; Truly this was the Son of God. Hereunto cometh the confession of Caiaphas, an enemy to Christ, and to the doctrine of salvation which he persecuted; for he uttered a Prophecy of the death and passion of Christ, John. 11, 49, 50, 51, 52. It was an extraordinary motion of God, that guided his tongue to Prophecy of Christ. So he spake afterward in thē that cried out at his arraignment, Mat. 27, 25. His blood be upon us and upon our children: which was plentifully performed in its time and season. The like we may observe in Pilate, when he was admonished by the Jews to amend this title of Christ set on his Cross, Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews; Pilate answered, What I have written, I have written: John 19, 22. wherein at unawares he is made after a sort, a Preacher of the kingdom of Christ, who governed his tongue, as here he did the tongue of Balaam.

The Reasons remain to be considered. [Reason 1] First, to leave the wicked without excuse, when they hear the truth. For God never leaveth himself without witnesses, no not among the Infidels, as the Apostle declareth, Acts 14, 16, 17. Now if the pouring down showers of rain, sending the fruitfulness of the earth, feeding all creatures with bodily food, be the Lord's witnesses and testimonies of his power, how much more is the word of God, which is the savor of life unto life, to all that believe? Forseeing God opened the mouth of Caiaphas (as we shown before) to utter a Prophecy concerning Christ, the obstinate incredulity of the Jews was convinced, when both the cause and virtue of his death was uttered by their own high-Priest, albeit he spake it in another meaning.

Secondly, he speaketh often in wicked men, to increase their judgment, and bring upon [Reason 2] them the greater damnation. If God had not revealed his truth unto them, their punishment should be the less. This we see set down, Luk. 12, 47, 48. This appeareth by the words of Christ to his Disciples, Math. 7, 23. Luke 13, 25, 26. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not by thy Name prophesied? And by thy Name cast out devils? And by thy Name done many great works? And then will I profess to them, I never knew you, depart from me, ye that work iniquity. Thus Christ upbraideth the Cities, wherein most of his great works were done, because they repented not, and telleth them it shall be easier for Tyre and Sidon, for Sodom and Gomorrhah at the day of judgment, then for them. Math. 11, 22.

Thirdly, to strengthen & confirm his childrē [Reason 3] in the truth revealed unto them. Great is their wavering and weakness: when God maketh known his word unto them, & sealeth it unto them by his signs and sacraments, they are full of doubting, and their faith is mingled with infidelity, as we see in the example of Gideon, Judge 7, 14. God appeared unto him at the thrashing-floor, commanded him to go in his might to save Israel, promised him the victory, and strengthened him by the signs that he asked, yet he remained fearful & fainthearted, after these so many means used to give him courage & confirmation, Judge. 7, 10. Hence it is, that God raised up one in the host of his enemies, and guided his tongue to be a Preacher and publisher of his truth, telling this dream of his to his fellow, that loe, a Cake of Barley-bread tumbled from above into the boast of Midian, and came unto a Tent and smote it that it fell, and overturned it, that the Tent fell down: which is expounded and interpreted to be the sword of Gideon. Whereby we see, that God opened the mouth, and directed the tongue of this Idolater, for the strengthening of Gideon, and the furthering of him in his work.

Now let us make use of this Doctrine First, [Use 1] behold herein the greatness of his power & Name, causing his enemies to profess and acknowledge it. We see how they resist & rebel against God. We see how they abide not to submit their necks to his obedience, but cast away the cords of discipline from them: yet he overruleth them, ordereth their tongues, and disposeth the words of their mouth to his own glory. This is it which the Prophet declareth, Psal. 8, 1, 2. This also appeareth in the example of Saul, and of the messengers that he sent to take David, For the Spirit of God fell upon them, and they prophesied, therefore it was a Proverb, Is Saul also among the Prophets? 1 Sā. 10, 11 and 19 24. This verieth the saying of the wise man, Prov. 16, 1. The preparations of the heart are in man, but the answer of the tongue is from the Lord: that is howsoever a man many times m*streth an whole Army of thoghts in his mind, as it were in battle array, and concludeth with himself, both what, & how to speak: yet man is ruled by a superior power & shall speak as God guideth his mouth, not as himself purposeth and determineth. Seeing therefore God frameth unfit instruments to his own purpose, and maketh them serve for the advancement of his own glory, we must conclude again with the Prophet, O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy Name in all the world!

Secondly, it is not hard with God to retain [Use 2] and reserve a people to himself in all ages, albeit there be never so many enemies, & albeit the Church be not always visible to the eye, and kept in outward beauty. He is not tied to any Nation, people, or place. Let us never fear the decay or destruction of the Church: he that did gain it to himself, will maintain it against all the practices and pollices of evil men, so that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. This is it which Christ teacheth, Mat. 3, 8, 9. He can draw the strong and flinty hearts of the adversaries to be his Church, albeit all the Jews were scattered & destroyed. God is not bound to continue his Church among thē, and the privileges which in mercy he vouchsafed unto them: if he remove his standard, and take away his Candlestick, and break off the succession they boasted of, he can call a people unto himself whensoever he pleaseth. As then we are not to fear the falling away of the Church, so we are not to presume of our selves, because we have present testimonies of God's favor, and visible marks of the Church amongst us, but labor to find out our own sins, and turn unto the Lord, assuring our selves, that every Tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the fire.

Lastly, seeing profane persons be enforced [Use] to speak the truth of God, let us know that it is our part, who are enlightened with more knowledge and endued with better graces, in a more willing and cheerful sort then they do, to testify the praises of God for conscience sake, with care and comfort, not grudgingly, nor unwillingly, nor enforced unto it. This the Prophet Malachi setteth down, ch. 1, 11. Where he showeth, that the Gentiles knew the excellency of his Name, and were not ignorant of his greatness, and therefore if we be the true children of God, our righteousness and obedience must exceed the righteousness and obedience of others. For what a shame is it, that strangers from the covenant should acknowledge him, and those of his family, and as it were his household servants, come behind them? Let us be like the Angels that be in heaven, Mat. 6, 10, who obey him readily, willingly, cheerfully, perfectly. If we obey him grudgingly, and by constraint, the reprobates, yea the devils do him as good service, as we do. They perform his secret will against their will. Let us accomplish his will revealed in his word, with the full desire of our hearts, otherwise we shall never find true comfort to our selves in that we do. If we would have God to accept & reward our service performed unto him, we must not do it by constraint, as Balaam did, nor to halves as Saul did, 1 Sam. 15, 21, 22, 23: nor to merit, as the Pharisees did; but in conscience of our duty, as children to their fathers, that we may receive the inheritance of sons.

[Verse 9 Loe, the people dwell by themselves, and shall not be reckoned among the Nations] Now we come to the Prophecy it self, wherein he confesseth the blessed estate of y^e church, so that nothing can make them miserable, or separate them from the favor of God. This we shall have fitter occasion to show afterward. Here let us consider the reason whereon he groundeth the happiness of the Church. In the description of the Church, he saith, they are a people cleaving to God alone, believing in him, and severed from other Nations in religion and laws. From hence we learn, That the Church of God is an holy people, called and gathered by the word, to hear and obey God, separated from the profane of the world in life and conversation. This we see evidently, when the posterity of Cain began to multiply and replenish the earth by many generations, who were the malignant Church; the true Church (increasing later) began to divide themselves from thē, to restore the purity of God's worship, and to meet apart by themselves for the public service of God, which the Scripture meaneth, when it saith, Then men began to call upon the Name of the Lord. The like we see afterward in Abraham, whom the Lord called beyond the flood from serving other God's, to serve him purely apart from the superstitions of his forefathers This was figured in the vow of the Nazarites, the intention whereof is expressed in the description of the ceremony of it, To be separated to the Lord. Numb. 6, 2. Thus Moses describeth the common condition of all that people, to be separated to the Lord, as God himself giveth them to understand, I am the Lord your God, which have separated you from other people, &c. Levite. 20, 24, 26. This is it which Christ our Savior saith to his Disciples, That they are not of the world, but he hath chosen them out of the world, John 15, 19. Hereunto cometh the exhortation of Peter, preaching repentance & amendment of life, to those that had crucified the Lord of glory, With many other words he besought and exhorted thē, saying; Save yourselves from this froward generation Acts 2, ver. 40, 41. Hereunto cometh the practice of the Apostle Saint Paul, Acts 19, 9, when the adversaries were convinced, and their hearts hardened, they disobeying, and speaking evil of the way of God, before the multitude, he departed from them, and separated the Disciples, and disputed daily in the School of one Tyrannus.

[Reason 1] The Reasons hereof are these. First, there is an opposition between God & the world. The Governor thereof is Satan, who is the Prince of this world, and hath set up his throne in it: it persecuted Christ and slew him. Neither do the children of God find any better entertainment then Christ did, as it hateth him, so it hateth them, John 14, 17, 30. Again, The amity of this world is enmity with God: the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God, 2 Cor. 4, 4. 1 am. 4, 4. And Christ testifieth, That the works thereof are evil, John 7, 7. Seeing then it is evil in respect of y^e governor, which is Satan, evil in respect of Christ, whom it hated and persecuted; evil in respect of the Spirit of truth, whō it neither seeth, nor knoweth, nor receiveth; in respect of the Children of God, whom it abhorreth; evil in respect of the friendship thereof, which is enmity; evil in respect of the wisdom thereof, which is folly; and lastly, evil in respect of the works thereof, which are impiety; howsoever the beauty of it be glorious, and the show gorgeous and glistering; yet the Church is to come out of it, & is clean contrary unto it. For if the friendship of the world be the enmity of God, then the friends of the world are the enemies of God. And as there is an agreement between the devil and the world, so is there an union between God, and his Church. And as God and the world are opposed, so are the Church and the world contrary one to another: so that whilst we are parts of this world, we cannot be members of his Church, and when we are called out of the world, we are gathered into the bosom of the Church.

Secondly, God hath chosen the Church to [Reason 2] himself, before the foundation of the world, to be adopted thorough Jesus Christ, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherewith he hath made us freely accepted in his beloved, as the Apostle teacheth, writing to the Ephesians, chap. 1, 5, 6. 1 Pet. 1, 2. Thus the Church is built upon the unmovable rock that cannot be shaken. The foundation of God remaineth sure, & hath this seal, The Lord knoweth who are his. 2 Tim. 2, 19.

Now let us see what uses we may rightly [Use 1] conclude out of this doctrine thus confirmed. First, we learn from hence, that the opinion of those is condemned, that bring in universal grace, universal election of everyone, universal redemption of everyone, and universal vocatiō of everyone, to the saving knowledge of the Gospel. For whereas the Church is as it were the Park of God, impaled in from other waste Land, or rather the Paradise of God, wherein the wild beasts of the Forest may not enter; this Doctrine pulleth up the Pale, and taketh away the enclosure, laying it in common, and joining it to the rest of the wilderness. The people of God are the little flock in respect of the world. Luke 12, 32. We see frō the beginning of the world, there was a difference and distinction between the sons of God, and the sons of men, Genesis, chapter 6, verse 1, between the Jews and the Gentiles, between the circumcised, and the uncircumcised, between the people 〈1 page duplicate〉 of God, and those that were no people of his, being out of the covenant. To some God giveth faith, to other he giveth not faith, For all have not faith, 1 Thess. 3, 1. Therefore our Savior Christ saith, Many are called, but few are chosen, Math. 20, 16, and he chargeth his Disciples, when he sent them out to Preach, not to go into the way of the Gentiles, neither to enter into the City of the Samaritans, Math. 10, 5. and he showeth, that it is not given to everyone to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God, Mat. 13, 11. So the Apostles in spreading abroad the glad tidings of salvation, and working the conversion of the Nations, to whom they were sent to preach the Gospel, are commanded to remain certain years in some Cities, because the Lord had much people in those places: and when they were entering into other Cities, the Spirit suffered them not to publish among them the way of salvation. Act. 18, 10.

[Use 2] Secondly, we must look for a full and perfect separation of the Elect from the Reprobate, of the sheep from the goats, of the vessels of mercy, from the vessels of wrath, when the Lord Jesus shall break the heavens, and come to judge the quick and the dead. Indeed here is some separation made by the fan of his word, by the power of the keys, & by the fire or furnace of affliction, yet still the chaff is mingled with the wheat, the Tares with the Corn, bad fish with the good, the hypocrites with the faithful and true believers. But when Christ shall come with thousands of his Angels and the heavens be dissolved. The books shall be opened, and things hidden in darkness, shall be disclosed, Revel. 20, 12. Here a beginning is made, but then shall be an absolute perfection and consummation of this separation. This is opened unto us by the Evangelist, Mat. 25, 31, 32, 33. Seeing this separation shall come, what manner of men ought we to be in all holiness of life and conversation? Let us search and try our own ways, and turn unto the Lord with all our hearts, that when Christ shall appear at the great day of the harvest and solemn season of separation, we may be found good Corn, and not be blown away by the voice of his mouth, whē he shall blow the chaff into unquenchable fire, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. But if we be not here separated from the sins and corruptions of the wicked, whē God separateth the soul and body, we shall be separated from the comfortable presence of God, we shall remain with the devil and his angels forever, never to be separated and sundered from them.

[Use 3] Thirdly, this giveth good assurance and comfort unto them, that God will hear their prayers, and respect them in their miseries. For seeing they are his chief treasure, Exod. 19, 5, 6, (albeit all the earth be his) seeing they are a kingdom of Priests, and an holy Nation, he will not see them want and stand in need of anything which he knoweth to serve for his own glory and their good. This is that use which Solomon remembereth in his prayer at the dedication of the Temple, 1 Kings 8, 52, 53. Let thine eyes be open unto the prayer of thy servant, and unto the prayer of thy people Israel, to hearken unto them, in all that they call for unto thee: for thou didst separate them to thee, from among all the people of the earth for an inheritance, as thou saidst by the hand of Moses thy servant, when thou broughtest our fathers out of Egypt, O Lord God: whereby we see, that the consideration of the dear account & estimation that God hath of his Church, separating it to himself, and calling it out of the world, ought to move us with boldness to draw near to the throne of grace, and to comfort us with assurance to be heard in our necessities. For what can God deny unto us, that hath given us him self? Or what can we want that know the love of God toward us, before we were? Wherefore, whensoever we are brought into any affliction, and stand in need of help, let us be mindful of the mercies of God toward us, and assure our selves, that he which hath separated and sanctified us from our mothers womb, will perfect his own work that he hath begun, & finish it unto the day of Christ.

Lastly, we must know that it is our duty to [Use] fly from all ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to have no fellowship with the ungodly, nor the vnfruitefull works of darkness, Tit. 2, 12. This indeed is pure religion, & undefiled, to keep our selves unspotted to the world. This the Apostle Paul urgeth, 2 Corin. 6, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. We know that a little leaven leaveneth, the whole lump. One rotten sheep infecteth a whole flock. One leaper spreadeth the difeaise further, to the hurt of sundry other. Now there is no leaven like to the leaven of sin, 1. Cor. 5.6. no infection comparable to the infection of sin; no leaproisie so deadly and dangerous as the contagion of sin, which bringeth danger and destruction to soul and body. Therefore we must not join our selves with the ungodly, seeing we are an holy people to the Lord our God, he hath chosen us to be a precious people unto himself above other people that are upon the earth. We are a chosen generation, a royal Priesthood, an holy nation, a people set at liberty, that we should show forth the virtues of him that hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light.

Seeing we are washed from the corruptions of the flesh, let us not defile our selves again: seeing we are called out of the world, let us not return into the world: and seeing we are freed from the thralldom of sin, let us not sell our selves again to our own lusts, which fight against the soul. We cannot come near an infectious disease without danger of infection. We cannot touch pitch, without danger to be defiled with it. The Apostle saith, Be not deceived, Evil words corrupt good manners. The Wiseman teacheth, That he which walketh with the wise, shab be the wiser, but a companion of fools shall be the worsser. Prov. 13, 20. Jonathan by the friendship and familiarity which he had with David, changed his life to better. Solomon by the society and conjunction with his idolatrous wives, fell into Idolatry. And Rehoboam his son, by walking with his young Counsellors, and following their advice, became worse. If then we would avoid evil, we must beware of all occasions. No occasion more dangerous then evil company. Every man therefore must take heed to himself, and beware how he join himself in acquaintance with all men indifferently. Many that have been of a stayed course, and an approved life, have ruined themselves, by making no choice of their company, and have lost their honor and honesty, a Jewel which being once lost, can never be repaired and restored. This we see by woeful experience confirmed unto us in the examples of many young men and maidens, who hating eu•ll, and making conscience of sin in themselves have fearfully fallen, and made shipwreck of all godliness and goodness, through the seducement of others.

[Verse 10 Who can tell the dust of Jacob, & the number of the fourth part of Israel?] Here beginneth the conclusion of this first Prophecy, setting down the infinite multitude of the faithful, compared by an hyperbolical or excessive speech to the dust of the earth, which cannot be numbered. This he speaketh, being as it were ravished and astonied at the great number of them, according as the Lord had promised long before to Abraham, Gen. 15, 5. Look up now unto heaven, and tell the stars if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, So shall thy seed be. Thus then this false Prophet is made a Preacher and Publisher of the glory of the Church, and of the largeness of the bounds thereof. Heereby we learn, That God hath a great & infinite people that belong unto him. Albeit the good Corn be scarce seen when it is mingled with y^e chaff, yet when it is severed and brought together, it maketh a great heap. The number of the elect and chosen people of God, which he hath redeemed, & will in the end glorify, is a great people. This appeareth unto us in many places of the word. The Prophet prophesying of the kingdom of Christ, telleth us, that his Dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the River unto the ends of the Land: that all Kings shall worship him and all Nations shall serve him, bless him, and be blessed in him. Psal. 72, 8, 11, 17, 19. Christ teacheth us, that many shall come from East and West, and shall sit down with Abraham Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven: He saith, that when the laborers were few to put their sickle in the ripe Corn, yet God had a great and plentiful harvest to be gathered into his Barn, Math 8, 11, and 9.37, And likewise 26, 28. at the institution of his last Supper, he saith, This is my blood of the New Testament, that is shed for many for the remission of sins. This the Apostle showeth to the Hebrews, chap. 2, 10. The Oracle of God answereth evidently at one time, when Elias thought he had been alone, that he had reserved to himself seven thousand that never bowed their knee to Baal, 1 Kings 19, 18. This truth was revealed to John, Revel. 7, 8, 9. So then the Church is stored with many believers, and is as a fruitful mother, that aboundeth with many children.

The Reasons are plain and evident. For [Reason 1] first, it is a matter of faith, and an Article of our Creed to believe the Church to be Catholic. And it is Catholic in three respects; In respect of time, of place, and of person. Of time, because it hath been in all ages and times since the first promise made to our first Parents in Paradise, Heb. chap. 13, verse 8. Revel. chap. 13, verse 8. and shall continue unto the end of the world. Of place, because it is gathered from all parts of the earth, whereas before the days of Christ our Savior, it was included within the Territories of Judea, now it is dispersed far and near in the time of the New Testament. Of persons, because it standeth of all estates and degrees of men, high and low, rich and poor, male & female, Jew and Gentile, learned & unlearned, whereas before God called and singled out the seed of Abraham to be his people. If then the Church be thus large, and spreadeth it self to all times, to all places, and to all persons, if it be so general and universal, it must necessarily follow, that many are the parts and members of it.

Secondly, we do not marvel that there are many members of the Church made partakers [Reason 2] of the righteousness of Christ, seeing by one man's disobedience many are made sinners. For we are guilty of the sin and transgression of Adam, and we sinned in his sin. When he sinned, we sinned, & are made guilty thereof in the sight of God, because albeit we were then unborn, and without a being, yet we are his seed and posterity, and were all in his loins. Through this guiltiness it is come to pass, that we are conceived in original sin, having all the powers of the soul & parts of the body corrupted, and y^e spawn of all sin is infused into us, and we are there by made the children of wra^h, as well as others, the enemies of God, the heirs of hell and condemnation. If then the power of Adams fall were so great, as to infect & corrupt all his posterity, then much more shall the righteousness of Christ be imputed to many, and be able to m[•]ke them partakers of everlasting life. As Adam by natural propagation hath spread his fault, and guiltiness o[•] his fall, to the destruction of many: so Christ's obedience hath by grace ouerflowed to many, who was appointed for the rising again of many in Israel, Luke, chapter 2, verse 34. This the Apostle teacheth, & thus he reasoneth. Ro. 5, 14, 15, 18, 19. As by one man's disobedience, many were made sinners, so by the obedience of that one, shall many also be made righteous. Wherefore, seeing the Church is every way Catholic in respect of the largeness, and seeing the obedience of Christ is not less available then the disobedience of Adam: we fear not to avouch, that the Church hath many children, as a tree with many branches, as a body with many members, as a fountain with many streams, and as an army of many soldiers, making up one Campe.

But before we come to the uses of this Doctrine, it shall not be amiss to answer a question, [Object.] and to remove an Objection that may be raised from hence. For this may seem to be contrary to other places of Scripture, where it teacheth, that few shall be saved, that few are chosen, that a remnant shall be saved, that the flock of Christ is a little flock, that the way is narrow, and the gate straight that leadeth to life, and few enter into it. If then they be few, how are they many? If a small company, how are they moe then can be numbered? To be few, and yet to be many; to be a remnant, and yet moe then can be reckoned, seem not to agree together. I answer, the Church may be truly said to have many children, [Answer.] and few members, in diverse respects For it is considered two ways: First, simply; Secondly, by comparison. First, in respect of themselves, and the several parts thereof: Secondly, in respect of the unbelievers. If they be compared with the world of Infidels and Hypocrites, with Reprobates and Castaways, with the vessels of wrath that shall be consumed, they be a very few, and as a little handful, like a spark in respect of a great fire, or like a drop of water in respect of a great stream: for the number of the damned is far greater. But if they be considered in themselves, not compared with others, The multitude of them that are ordained to eternal life, and shall be saved, is very great, and exceeding many, yea, so many, as no mā is able to comprehend the number of them. Hebr. 12, 1. To express this difference by some similitudes and examples: we see in a common collection and gathering, albeit every man can give but a little, yet when it cometh together, the total sum amounteth to a great matter. When a Captain is to leuy forces, and to muster his soldiers, if he should take but ten out of a Parish through this kingdom, when they come together, and meet in one place, they make a great Army and a Campe-royal: yet if they be compared with the multitude of men, women and children, that are left behind, they are as nothing, they are as an handful, and are scarce missed. So is it with the true Church of God, they are both few, & yet many: they are few in respect of those that shall be condemned, which multiply upon the earth, and cover the face thereof; and yet they are many in number, in respect of the particular parts, as shall appear in the end of y^e world, & when they shall be gathered into one place from all places of the world.

Having answered this Objection, and cleared [Use 1] the Doctrine before delivered, let us come to the uses arising from hence. First, we learn from hence the great power of the word of God. Albeit the Ministry thereof be of the world esteemed foolishness, yet to them that are justified, to them that are sanctified, to thē that are effectually called, it is the wisdom of God, and the power of God. The Church is called our Mother, the word of God is committed to the keeping of the Church, being the Pi•lar of truth; so that by preaching of the word, the Church bringeth forth children to God. The word is the seed of regeneration, 1 Pet. 1, 23: it is milk for children, 1 Cor. 3, 2: it is strong meat for men of riper years, Heb. 5, 14, whose senses are expert and exercised in the discerning of things that differ. If then it work such a glorious effect, we may conclude, that it is lively and mighty in operation, entering through to the dividing of the soul and spirit, the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Seeing therefore the increase of the Church is by the effectual preaching of the Gospel, whereby the members of Christ are united into his body, and the Sheep of Christ are gathered into his fold, we must acknowledge the power and force of the word to be exceeding great whereby it is brought to pass.

Secondly, hereby we have matter of great [Use] rejoicing & praising God, to see the prosperity and flourishing estate of the Church, increasing and growing to so many millions or multitudes, and to consider how glorious the Name of Chr•st shall be, when all concur & meet together to praise him. The honou• of an earthly Prince standeth in the multitude of his Subjects, Prov. 14, 28: then how glorious and excellent shall the Name of Christ be, when so many thousands and thousand thousands, that none can number for the infinite multitude, shall assemble together to sing the praises of God, saying: Salvation cometh of our God that sitteth upon the Throne, & of the Lamb? Prai•e, and glory, and wisdom, and thanks, and honor be unto our God for evermore, Amen Reu. 7, 9, 10, 12. Sing praises to God, sing praises, sing praises unto our King, sing praises: for God is the King of all the earth. Psal. 47, 6, 7. What can minister more joy unto us, then to behold the beauty of Zion, when one member is added unto the Church? We see how men rejoyce when their house is increased, when they have children given unto them, being the inheritance of the Lord and the fruit of the womb being his reward Psal. 127, 3. How much more should we rejoyce and be glad, when we see y^e church which is the house of God, to multiply & flourish, That he ma^reth a barren woman to dwell with a family, and a joyful mother of many children? Psal. 113.9. It is noted by Christ our Savior, that the Angels rejoyce at the repentance of men when he saith, I say unto you, that joy shall be in heaven for one sinner that converteth, more then for ninety and nine just men which need none amendment of life: how much more then ought we to comfort our selves when y^e faithful are increased, when the ways of the Lord are known upon earth, and his saving health among all Nations? The Evangelist Luke testifieth, That when the Apostles and Brethren heard that God had granted repentance unto life to the Gentiles, they praised and glorified God. Acts 11, 18. And this is that use which the Apostle Paul teacheth, Gal, 4, 27. It is written, Rejoyce thou barren that bearest no children: break forth and cry, thou that trauest not: for the desolate hath many moe children, then she which hath an husband. So then, the increase of the Church (when one member is added unto it) is the joy of the several parts: and the multiplying of many members, is matter of great rejoycing to the whole body, and cause of stirring of us up to the praise of God, who quickeneth th^e that are dead, and maketh them to be found that were lost. In the natural body found deformed or defective, if sight were given to the blind, or hearing to the deaf, or speech to the dumb, if life or limb were restored where it was wanting, what great comfort would this bring, what great rejoycing would it work? So in the mystical body of Christ, when any part, or when many parts are added, as ornaments of the body, and helping to accomplish the number of the elect, let us break forth into joy of heart, and rejoyce that we have part and fellowship in this company.

Thirdly, let us not measure the Church by [Use 3] our own outward senses. When Idolatry and open wickedness, when superstition & cruel persecutions over-spread all, as an universal darkness covering the earth, let us not suffer our selves to be deceived, nor judge rashly of God's people. We think the Church oftentimes like to perish, and to be rooted out of the earth: but the foundation of God always remaineth sure, and hath this seal, the Lord knoweth who are his. Therefore the Apostle teacheth, That the Lord hath not cast away his people. Rom. 11, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. When Elias saw the Prophets of God killed, and the Altars digged down, God said unto him, I have reserved unto myself seven thousand men, which have not bowed their knee to Baal. Even so then at this present time there is a remnant according to the election of grace. Wherefore let us not judge rashly of private persons, whether they be in the number of the elect or not: much less of whole Nations and kingdoms. We say commonly, he runneth far that never returneth. Paul was a persecutor of the Church, 1 Tim 1, 13, but Christ appearing unto him, made him a Preacher of the Gospel. Manasseh was an Idolater, a sorcerer, and shedder of much innocent blood, when he sate in his Throne and kingdom; but he remembered God afterward in the days of his affliction. 2 Chron. 33, 12. Mary Magdalene, who led a wicked life, out of whom Christ cast seven devils, Mark. 16, 9, had her sins forgiven, and loved him much of whom she had received so great mercy. The thief that all his life had run astray, and hunted after the goods of other men, was upon the Cross converted to the faith, he abhorred his former life, confessed his sins, craved pardon, blamed his fellow, and longed after the kingdom of God. This the Apostle avoucheth concerning the Corinthians, when he had taught. That neither fornicaters, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor wantons, nor buggers, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor railers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God; he addeth, Such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the Name of the Lord Jesus, & by the Spirit of our God. 1 Cor. 6, 9 10. So thē, we must judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who shall lighten things that are hid in darkness, and make the counsels of the heart manifest, and then shall every man have praise of GOD. And let us not be daunted and dismayed at the great number of the wicked, of Atheists, Libertines, Epicures, Idolaters, Hypocrites, Scorners, Blasphemers; seeing there is an universality of the elect and faithful, though few appear to our senses, as did to the eyes of Elijah, who in heart & soul join with us, of whose prayers we are partakers.

Lastly, seeing there are many elected unto [Use 4] life and salvation, let us use all means to draw others to faith in Christ, and repentance from dead works. Let us exhort one another while it is called today, lest any be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin, Heb 3, 13. Let us provoke to good works, and so much the more, seeing the day of the Lord draweth near. Heb. 10, 25. For what knowest thou (O man) whether thou shalt win thy brother? The husbandman planteth and watereth, he tilleth & soweth, and when he hath done, he committeth the success to God, looking with patience for early and latter rain. So must all the Ministers of God (which are his laborers) preach in season and out of season, divide the word of truth aright, and take all occasions to win souls to God. And this is that use which the Lord himself teacheth and prescribeth. Acts 18, 9, 10. Fear not, but speak and hold not thy peace: For I am with thee, and no man shall lay hands on thee, for I have much people in this City. Where we see, that howsoever Paul found much opposition against him at Corinth, some resisting, and others blaspheming, & himself ready to depart; yet the Lord appeareth unto him, and encourageth him to continue his labors, with promise of a plentiful harvest, & a rich recompense of reward, that he should not labor in vain, but be the Minister of life unto many. This is the greatest comfort to the Ministers of God, to turn many to righteousness. This shall be our Crown and glory in the great day of account, when the chief Shepherd of the sheep shall appear. Therefore, the Apostle chargeth the man of God to be of a patient spirit, gentle towards all men, 2 Tim. 2, 24, 25. suffering the evil, instructing them with meekness that are contrary minded, proving if God at any time will give them repentance, that they may acknowledge the truth, and come to amendment out of the snare of the devil, of whom they are taken prisoners to do his will. To conclude, let us remember the saying of the Apostles James chap. 5, 19, 20. Brethren, if any of you have erred from the truth, and some man have converted him, let him know that he which hath converted the sinner from going astray out of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins. Where the Apostle teacheth, that so many of us as have received any gifts at the hands of God, it is our duty not only to use them to our own comfort, but to labor diligently to profit others, that so we may gain glory and win souls to God, by furthering the salvation of our brethren. It followeth in the Text.

[Let me die the death of the righteous.] In these words, is contained the second part of the conclusion of this first prophesy, which is Balaam's demand and desire, that after the end of this temporal and mortal life, he may rest with the Saints, and obtain the blessed estate reserved for them. This had been a good and godly prayer, if it had not proceeded from an evil heart, and been stained with a wicked life. This desire of his was not constant, and followed unto the end, but as the sudden flashing of a lightning quickly vanishing, or as a fire kindled in green wood, soon going out again: or as a deceitful bow, that starteth back with great violence. Hereby we learn, That the wicked have oftentimes many good motions of the Spirit, desire the happiness of the Saints, and in the midst of their malice, wish their own condition like the condition of God's children. Pharaoh, albeit reserved to destruction, yet had this sight & light in him, when in the remembrance and feeling of his plagues he cried out, I have now sinned, the Lord is righteous, but I and my people are wicked. Exod. 9, 27. The sorcerers of Egypt, ministers of the kings lust, had this light, when GOD confounded their wisdom, and they confessed before the King and his Princes, This is the finger of God, Exo. 8, 19. This appeareth in the Jews, John 6, 34. they wished to come unto happiness, and in the very midst of their rage there was an inward sighing of the spirit, that they might eat the bread of life. They had rebelled against Christ, yet in a certain remorse of conscience they wished to be partakers of eternal life. This was found in the messengers sent to apprehend Christ, and to bring him before the Court and Commission that was ready to sit upon him, when they returned empty, they said to the Pharisees, Never man spake like this man, John 7, 46. This is that true light that lighteth all men that come into the world, John 1, 9. & that spark of grace which is kindled in the heart of everyone: and there is no man so far given over unto wickedness of life, but sometimes he hath this touch of conscience, and remorse of heart, and grief for sin.

The Reasons hereof are not hard to be rendered. [Reason 1] For first, the light of their own conscience doth shine in their hearts to make them without excuse. This is the victory and triumph that virtue hath over all vice, and godliness over wickedness, that where it is most hated and abhorred, there it is sometimes desired and oftentimes acknowledged. Albeit the wicked have filled up the measure of their sins, hardening their hearts like the Adamāt, and making their face like flint, yet the force of grace so pierceth their lusts, that they are constrained to say, The way of virtue is better. Consider the impure and dissolute adulterer, that giveth his strength and wealth to harlots, yet sometimes he confesseth the chaste body to be better. There was never so vile and blasphemous a swearer, Acts 24, 25. but sometimes he trembleth at the Majesty of God, and at the remembrance of judgment, as Felix did. The proud and ambitious man, that swelleth until he be ready to burst, and exalteth himself to heaven, sometimes is cast down in a feeling of his mortality, and remēbreth that he is but dust and ashes. The beastly drunkard, that wasteth and washeth away his wealth and his wits, confesseth sometimes his own folly, and praiseth the gift of abstinence and temperancy. And this is that which the Evangelist declareth of Christ, the eternal word of the Father, In it was life, and that life was the light of men, & that light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not. Where he showeth, that albeit the mind of man be darkened, and the will corrupted, yet still there is clearness enough to make him without excuse.

Secondly, the good motions of the wicked [Reason] are not long and lasting, but as a blast, or for a brunt, suddenly decaying like the grass upon the house top, Which withereth before it cometh forth, whereof the Mower filleth not his hand, neither the gleaner his lap, Psal, 129, 6. because their hearts are so possessed with evil, and so carried away, sometimes with pleasures, that they cannot bring forth full & perfect fruit to the ripening: so that albeit they begin, yet they cannot make an end, like unto the builder noted of folly by Christ, scorned by all that beheld the foundation of a goodly building, saying. This man began to build, but was not able to make an end. This reason is offered to our considerations in the parable of the sower, where sundry sorts of hearers are set down according unto the different nature of ground in which the seed fell. These make many steps in Christianity: They have knowledge, they believe the word, they receive it with joy; yet notwithstanding these beginnings and proceedings, they are resembled to stony ground, and in time of temptation fall away. Seeing therefore the ungodly are left without all excuse, and entertain gross sins in their hearts; we conclude, that they have oftentimes good motions arising in them, yet such as vanish without fruit, and end without comfort, and pass away without profit to their own souls.

[Use 1] The Uses follow of this Doctrine. First, we are taught hereby, that it is not enough to begin well, to entertain holy thoughts, and to have heavenly meditations, but we must nourish and cherish them, we must prosecute thē with continuance and perseverance unto the end. Many make a fair beginning, but y^e end is fearful and dangerous. They lay their hand to the plough, but they look back, Luke 9, 62. Lots wife went out of Sodom, together with her husband, she seemed as forward as he, she took her journey with him; but she did not continue and hold out unto the end, for contrary to the commandment of the Angel, she looked back, and was turned into a pillar of salt; and being left as a monument and memorial to all posterity, our Savior Christ putteth us in mind of her, Luke 17, 32, Remember Lots wife. So in the Gospel, one came running to Christ, and kneeled unto him, asking him what he should do, that he might possess eternal life: he seemed zealous in the ways of God, & even to make hast to the kingdom of heaven; but when Christ tried him and his love to God, by one precept of selling his possessions, and taking up the cross to follow him, he was sad at that saying, and went away sorrowful. He had three great pull-backs and impediments as bolts and shackles about his legs, that hindered him in his race; he was a young man, he was a rich man, he was a Ruler, or a man of great authority, and therefore all his good beginnings were but as the morning dew, which at the rising of the Sun fadeth away.

Likewise we see in the Acts of the Apostles when Paul had constantly defended himself, & boldly preached the resurrection of Christ, Acts 26.28, Agrippa said unto him, Almost thou persuadest me to become a Christian: but there he stayed and rested, and would proceed no further. These are fearful examples: it had been better for such, they had never known the way of righteousness. Wherefore to the end we may not deceive others, nor flatter our selves in the good motions of the Spirit, we must carefully observe these few rules and directions following. First, we must begin to cherish in our harts, a loathing and detestation of all sin. Not of some few sins, and retain others that agree with our corrupt Natures, but we must hate all sin. If the old & subtle Serpent get in his tail, he will wind in his head also, and after followeth all the body. If we give him scope to possess us in any one known sin, he will thereby bring us to destruction, as we see in Saul, Herod, Judas, Ananias and Sapphira. Wherefore, we must truly turn to God, and repent us of all sin. Secondly, we must be changed and renewed in our minds and consciences, & bring forth fruits worthy amendment of life: otherwise we may still suspect our selves y^t saving grace is not yet planted in the heart. Let us carefully look to our hearts that the work of regeneration be truly begun there. If we have once given our hearts to God, all other parts will soon follow. Our ears, our feet, our eyes, will not be far behind where the heart leadeth the way. This is it which Solomon teacheth in Prov. 23, 25. My son give me thine heart, and let thine eyes delight in my ways. One can take no pleasure but where his heart is. Thirdly, we must not stand at a stay, or look back: we must not think we have knowledge, faith, zeal, and obedience enough: therefore the Apostle saith touching his own practice, Philip. 3, 12. Brethren, I count not myself that I have attained to it, but one thing I do, I forget that which is behind, and endeavor myself unto that which is before, and follow hard toward the mark for the price of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. And indeed in our Christian race there is no standing at one stay. For either we go forward, or else we go backward. If we do not increase, we do decrease, like the sea y^t never rests, but ever ebbeth or floweth. To stand still is the first step to declining, and declining the first degree of decaying, and decaying the forerunner of a final falling away, and falling away the worker of our confusion and destruction: as the water that hath been heat, first waxeth luke-warm, & afterwards turneth to be key-cold. Lastly, we must endeavor every day to grow better and better, more strong in faith, more constant in hope, more rooted in charity, more settled in obedience, more abounding in all good works. This is made the commendation of y^e church of Thyatira, Reu. 2, 19. I know thy works, & thy love, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works, which are more at the last, then at the first. So the Apostle Paul exhorteth the Thessalonians in the Lord Jesus, that they increase more and more, as they had received of the Apostles, how they ought to walk & please God. Hereunto accordeth the doctrine of Christ, where he teacheth, John. 15, 2. That every branch that beareth not fruit in him, he taketh away, &c. And Peter writing to the dispersed Jews, dwelling here and there, stirreth them up as new borne babes to desire the sincere milk of the word, that they might grow thereby &c. But alas, where is this increasing, proceeding, and persevering to be found? He that was ignorant, is ignorant still; he that was faithless, is faithless still: he that was unjust, is unjust still: he that was filthy, is filthy still Reu. 22, 12. Behold the Lord Jesus cometh shortly, & his reward is with him, to give every mā according as his work shall be.

[Use 2] Secondly, seeing the wicked do desire the death of the righteous, it is plain and evident that the godly cannot but die well, their end shall be in rest, their departure shall be in peace. Their sorrow shall be turned into solace, their pain into pleasure, their mourning into mirth, their heaviness into happiness. God will wipe away all tears from their eyes. No man so happy as the faithful Christian. He that liveth well, cannot choose but die well, whether he die suddenly or leysurely, whether he be taken away by a natural death, or by a violent death, whether it be by land or by sea, in youth or in age. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints: the Lord redeemeth the souls of his servants, and none that trust in him shall perish, Psal. 116, 15. & 34, 22. Blessed are they that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors, and their works follow them, Reu. 14, 13. Let us solace our selves, and comfort one another with these words. All men naturally have a desire of salvation, whē God toucheth their conscience, and summoneth them to answer at his bar. Ask the most wicked and notorious liver that forgetteth God, and contemneth him every day, that never thinketh of godliness, that giveth himself to blasphemy, profaning of the Sabbath, whoredom, covetousness, drunkenness, cruelty, hatred, slandering, and backbiting his brother: ask him I say, whether he would be saved and inherit everlasting life, he will by and by answer, It is his whole desire, and he will think you offer him the greatest wrong that may be to make a doubt of it. But these words are no better then Balaam's wish. Balaam would die the death of the righteous, but he would not live the life of the righteous, for he loved the wages of unrighteousness, and thirsted ambitiously after the honor of ungodliness, and therefore he continued in his sorcery, & went still to fetch his diuinations. So likewise many in these days have the wishes of this Wizard, they desire the death of the righteous, but they never regard their life, they desire their end, but they will not walk in their way: they are willing to end with them, but not to begin with them: they catch for the Crown, but will not come to the Cross: they would taste the sweet, but they cannot abide the sweat. If we will live with Christ forever, 2 Tim. 2, we must here die with him for a season: if we will reign with him in heaven, we must first suffer with him on earth: we can never die comfortably, unless we be careful to live vnblameably. If we would find life and peace in the end of our days, we must here seek it. If we would have God to be our God in sickness, we must be his people in our health. If we hate and abhor the life of the righteous, they are foolish and vain wishes of carnal men, to desire to die the death of those that are spiritual. For what shall it profit us to come nere them in our words, and to fly from them in our works? Wherefore, as the ungodly cannot abide the life of y^e righteous, nor seek to cut off the least lust, nor endure the doctrine of mortification, to prepare them to the kingdom of heaven, but follow the fruits of the flesh, the lusts of their eyes, and the pride of life: so they shall find their own death to be far differing from the quiet sleep of the righteous, who see by faith the heavens open for them with Stephen, and know that the glorious Angels are their attendants ready to conduct and to direct their souls into glory. They know that their Redeemer liveth, and that they shall see God in their flesh with the same eyes, albeit their reins be consumed within them, for the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous. As for the wicked, it shall not be so with them. Psalm 73.19, 20. They shall suddenly be destroyed, and horribly consumed, as a dream when one awaketh: O Lord, when thou raisest us up, thou shalt make their image despised. Their death is full of fear and horror, they see three fearful objects represented before their eyes, dismaying all their senses, and affrighting all the powers of their souls, so soon as they apprehend them: thorough all which dying without repentance, they must pass without redemption or deliverance; to wit, death, judgment, and hell, the one following the heels of another. They shall know the pangs of death, they shall appear at the day of Judgment, they shall feel the torments of hell, and fire unquenchable. When they have run out their miserable and wretched race, they shall suddenly be attached and arrested by death, death shall call and cry out for judgment, and judgment shall take them, and throw them into hell, and perpetual perdition. If a man in this life, that hath lived wantonly, been clad gorgeously, and fared deliciously every day, should see these three fearful spectacles, the sword to smite him, the plague to touch him, and famine to consume him, it were able to astonish him, and bring him to despair. But all these are nothing in comparison of the former: for as it is appointed unto them once to die, Heb. 9, 27. which is the entrance into the next plague, so after death cometh judgment, which shall be according to their works, whē their most secret thoughts shall be written in their foreheads, and graven as with a pen of Iron to remain in remembrance forever; and after judgment cometh hell fire, then shame and contempt shall be poured upon them, then utter desperation shall seize upon them, then an eternal separation from the comfortable presence of God shall overtake them, & fall upon them, and they shall have perpetual fellowship with the devil and his angels. This is it which maketh the ungodly so loath to hear of death, and so willing to wish in word to die the death of the righteous. They would live like themselves, but would die like the faithful. But we cannot sever and divorce the life and the death of the people of God, they must always go together, and follow one the other necessarily. Thus we see, as there is great difference between the godly and the ungodly in their life, so there shall be a greater difference between them after this life. For albeit all sleep in the dust of the earth, & shall awake out of their sleep, yet the godly shall inherit everlasting life, but the ungodly shall go into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. This appeareth unto us in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus: there was a great difference between them while they lived upon the earth; the one abounded in riches, was clad in purple, and fed with dainty fare, Lu. 16, 22, 23: the other was clothed in rags, covered with sores, and abounded in nothing but in penury and misery: here was a main difference between thē. But when they went the way of all flesh, and were gathered unto their Fathers, then was y^e greatest difference of all, as if the other were not to be thought upon: For when this poor beggar died, he was carried by the Angels into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died, and was buried, and was carried into the torments of hell, to whom Abraham said, Luk. 16.25. Son, Remember that thou in thy life time receivedst thy pleasures, and likewise Lazarus pains; now therefore is he comforted, and thou art tormented. This is that great gulf and wide space set between the godly and the ungodly.

[Use 3] Lastly, it is our duty to stir up the gifts of God in us, and to take heed we quench not the graces of the Spirit in us. The gifts of God given unto us are as a spark of fire kindled in our hearts, our corruptions are as a water seeking to quench them. Wherefore it standeth us upon to be careful and diligent in kindling this fire, and in blowing these coals, that the talents committed unto us may be increased, and the Lord receive at his coming his own with advantage. This the Apostle Paul teacheth Timothy, who had been brought up in the Scriptures of a child, 2 Tim. 1, 6. I put thee in remembrance, that thou stir up the grace of God which is in thee, by the putting on of my hands. Christ Jesus compareth in the Gospel y^e grace of God in the heart to a grain of Mustard seed which is small to see to at the beginning, but when it is once planted in the fruitful ground of a regenerate heart, it springeth up incontinently, increaseth speedily, spreadeth mightily, and prospereth exceedingly. If a man at the first beginning of his conversion, have some little feeling of his wants, some weak and faint desire of faith, and some small testimonies of his adoption, he must remember to be thankful for these, and seek to increase them by the use of the Word, Sacraments, Prayers, Meditations, Conference, and such like helps, that we may be always proceeding, endeavoring, striving, asking, seeking, and knocking to know the height, depth, & breadth of the love of God <...> we must always grow up• <...> God, Psal. 143, 6. and desire <...> be given us to supply our weakn• <...> must long after him as the thirsty l•• <...> should pant after him, as the Hart bray <...> rivers of waters, Psal. 42, 1. Blessed are <...> hunger and thirst after righteousness, for t•• <...> be satisfied, Math. 5, 6. He will give to him t•• <ϕ> a thirst, to drink of the Well of the water of <ϕ> freely. If we have this appetite, using all the means which God hath appointed, and being careful to honor him for that which we have received already, I am persuaded that he which hath begun this good work in us, will perfect and finish the same unto the day of Jesus Christ.

[And let my last end be like his.] Here is a lively testimony of the immortality of the soul. For if he had believed that man had ended with death, and then there had been no further reckoning nor account to be made, it had been a vain and idle thing to desire his last end to be like the righteous. We see the ungodly live and wax old, Job 21, 7, 9, 13. and grow in wealth, their children prosper, their houses are peaceable without fear, the rod of God is not upon them, they spend their days in pleasures, and suddenly they go down to the grave. They are not afflicted with tedious diseases, they are not tormented with long sicknesses, they go away many times quietly as a Lamb, their life is with greater delight, their death is with greater ease then the life and death of the righteous. But after this life beginneth the trouble and torment of the Reprobate. Here they have received their pleasures, and the righteous their pains, therefore these are comforted, and the other confounded. They must appear before the judgment seat of God, they must come after this life to their trial, they must all stand at the bar, and plead guilty, or not guilty. The consideration of this day of account immediately after the separation of the soul from the body, made Balaam in this place, cry out in y^e sight and feeling of the blessedness of the Church, Oh let my last end be like his. From hence we learn this principle of our faith, That the soul of man is immortal, having a beginning yet is without ending, & being severed from the body, it liveth in place either of joy, or of torment, either it receiveth the reward of godliness, or it is plagued and punished for wickedness. This appeareth by many testimonies of the word of God. When the Lord had made man's body of the dust of y^e ground, He breathed in his face the breath of life, and the man was a living soul able to live of it self, and by itself. And afterward it is said, Enoch walked with God, and he was no more seen, for God took him away; to show that there was a better life prepared and to be a testimony of the immortality of the soul, and the resurrection of the body, seeing he was translated, that he should not see death, neither was he found, for God had translated him. Hereunto cometh the prayer of Simeon, Luk. 2, 29. Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: he was ready & willing to be loosed from the prison of the body, and calleth death a departure from hence. Likewise, it is said in the Parable, that Lazarus died, and was carried by the Angels into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died, & was buried, and was thrown into the torments of hell. And at the passion of Christ hanging on the cross, when the penitent thief prayed, Lord remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom; he said, Verily I say unto thee, today shalt thou be with me in Paradise, Luke 23, 43. Furthermore when the Lamb had opened the fifth seal, Reue. 5, 6, 9. John saw under the Altar the souls of them that were killed for the word of God, & for the testimony which they maintained.

[Reason 1] The Reasons of this Doctrine are to be known and considered of us. First, if the soul were not of an immortal Nature, the godly of all other should be most wretched, & their life most miserable, unless they did believe that a time of refreshing should come from y^e presence of God: and contrariwise the condition of the ungodly should be most blessed and happy. This the Apostle setteth down, 1 Cor. 15, 19, 20. And if the soul did not remain after this life, being separate from the body, all Religion and piety were in vain, our preaching and your faith were in vain. Why are we in jeopardy every hour? and why suffer we affliction for righteousness sake? nay, why do we not eat and drink, for tomorrow we must die?

[Reason 2] Secondly, nothing that is immortal and transitory can cite a man before God's Tribunal, or terrify for sin unknown to any other. But the soul of man accusing him for secret sins, maketh him hold up at his hand at the bar of God's judgment seat. This we see in Belteshazzer, when he saw the palm of the hand that wrote upon the plaster of the wall of his palace, His countenance was changed, his thoughts troubled him, & his knees smote one against another. Before he was thus awaked he contemned the true God, and blessed his Idols: but when God manifested a small token of his power and presence, he did shake & tremble every joint of him, for fear of that sight. This is the justice of God, revenging the sin of men, that they should tremble at his judgments that wretchedly abuse his mercies. The like example we see in Felix; albeit he looked for a bribe, and set justice to sale at offer and proffer, yet when he heard Paul dispute of righteousness and temperance, and of the judgment to come, he quaked and quivered at that discourse, and was not able to endure the mention of it. Now, if the soul were subject to mortality, and to perish with the body, it would not, it could not thus accuse man, nor draw him before the judgment seat of God.

Thirdly, the soul of man can reason of immortality, [Reason 3] it is insatiable in seeking knowledge, and is not changed or altered with the estate of the body, it contenteth not it self to rest satisfied with anything in this life. The more it knoweth, the more it coveteth & desireth to know, & the more it is able to learn, It desireth blessedness and happiness, it respecteth glory and good estimation after death: it hath many actions and operations above sense and the natural appetite of the body; as to love God, to fear God, to put our trust in him, to believe in him, to embrace religion, to cleave unto God with full purpose of heart. The senses of the body cannot climb and ascend so high to know God, and to meditate on heavenly things; nay, they cannot reason, define, divide, number, or order anything. Therefore, the soul that performeth these things, is a spiritual substance like unto Angels, not subject to death or mortality.

Now let us come to the Uses of this point [Use 1] of Religion, and principle of our Faith. First, it serveth to confute & condemn all Atheists, Epicures, Libertines, Sadducees, and the late upstart family of love raised out of the ashes of the old Sadducees, which deny the immortality of the soul. These defy all Religion, and deny any spirits, either Angels of God, or spirits of devils, or souls of men: all which standing at defiance against heaven, and bidding battle to the Lord himself, shall one day know that they had once given unto them immortal spirits, when they shall be cast into unquenchable fire, and endure everlasting torments. The Evangelist noteth out this damnable sect of the Sadducees. Luke 20, 27. Acts 23.8. which denied the rising again of the body, and the subsisting of the soul after the separation. For when Paul cried out in the Council, I am accused of the hope and resurrection of the dead: there was a dissention between the Pharisees and the Sadducees; for the Sadducees say, That there is no resurrection, neither Angel, nor spirit: but the Pharisees confess both. These Christ confuteth and convinceth in the Gospel by the testimony of Moses, I am the God of Abraham the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob: God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. Matth. 22, 32. Exodus 3, 6. And if these heretics and enemies of God, would not for conscience sake yield to this truth, and subscribe with heart and hand unto it, yet at least for the profit of it, and the excellency above their beastly dotage about the mortality of the soul, they should embrace it, and cleave unto it. For it is surer and safer to believe as the Church holdeth. For if this opinion be true, that the soul is immortal, whosoever believeth it not in heart, and confesseth it not with the mouth, shall suffer eternal punishment and bear his condemnation. If it should not be true (which we speak only by supposition, the doctrine being most certain) there is no danger after death, to have holden the immortality of the soul in the time of our life; forasmuch as if the soul do not remain, it cannot be reprov'd of error, nor punished for sin. Again, it is most honest and honorable, to hold the dignity of our soul received of God, and so to think reverently and religiously of it, resembling it to God & the Angels, not to debase and disgrace it, making it like unto the beasts and unreasonable creatures.

Lastly, it is better to believe the souls eternity, as fitter to stir us up to live soberly, righteously, & godlily in this present world, and to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, to mind heavenly things, that we may be holy as our heavenly Father is holy. For if we believe our selves to be immortal, Math. 16, 26: we will have a greater care of virtue, a greater respect to the reward, a greater conscience of Religion, a greater fear of sin, and of the punishment due to sin. So then, as there is greater verity, so there is more safety & security to hold the immortality of the soul against the erroneous opinions of all heretics that have desperately and damnably denied y^e same, to the decay of piety, dishonor of God and unto the utter confusion of their own souls.

[Use 2] Secondly, acknowledge from hence a great difference between the soul of man, and the soul of a beast. Every beast and living creature hath a kind of soul which perisheth with the body, so that he which killeth the body of a beast, destroyeth also the soul, which ariseth from the mixture and temperature of the Elements. But man was made after the image of God, Gen. 1, 26. according to his likeness, Eph. 4, 24, to resemble him, especially in his soul, which is of an heavenly nature, albeit not of the substance of God. This difference and distinction Moses teacheth and observeth Gen. 9, 4, 6. But the flesh with the life thereof, I mean with the blood thereof shall ye not eat: who so sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed, for in the image of God hath he made man. Where he maketh an opposition between man and beast, and between the soul of man and beast. Man was made in his soul to resemble his Maker and Creator, but the soul of a beast is in his blood. And therefore, God charging his people to abstain from eating of blood, even of clean beasts, useth these two reasons, Levite. 17, 11, 14. First, because their blood is the seat of the soul: secondly, God hath commanded it to be used in attonemēts for sin, as a type and figure of the blood of Christ. The soul of man is a substance, the soul of a beast is an accident, whose being is always to be in another. The soul of man is a spirit, the soul of a beast is a quality arising of the matter of the body, vanishing also with the body, and having no being at all out of the body.

Thirdly, see here a difference between the [Use 3] soul and the body of a man. For, as this truth teacheth a distinction between the soul of a man, and the soul of a beast, so it maketh a division between one part of man, and the other. Man consisteth of two parts, of the body which is visible, and of the soul which is invisible. The body dieth and is laid in y^e grave, for as it was taken out of the earth, so it returneth to the earth again. But the soul, as we have proved by diverse Scriptures, and confirmed by strong reasons, never dieth or decayeth. Therefore, albeit we be taught in the Articles of our faith, to believe the resurrection of the body, yet we are never taught to believe the resurrection of the soul. For a rising up presupposeth first a falling down. The soul falleth not into the jaws of death, nor goeth down into the house of the grave. This difference the wiseman teacheth, Eccles. 12, 7. Dust returneth unto the earth as it was, and the spirit returneth unto God that gave it. The dwelling place of the body is the earth, the habitation of the soul is with God. The soul never dieth, nor decayeth, nor sleepeth, nor riseth again, but is a spiritual substance and invisible, having neither flesh, nor bones; living and abiding forever, as well out of the Tabernacle of the body, as in the same. But the body is an earthly and visible substance, consisting of sensible parts, never living nor breathing without the soul. Wherefore these abide together as two the nearest and dearest friends, rejoicing together, sorrowing together, and alike affectioned one toward another; yet the day of separation cometh, and will come, when a departure must be made of these two, that cannot always continue together: the body must return to the earth, the soul must be carried unto God the eternal Judge, who immediately will pass the sentence of life or death upon the same.

Fourthly, we must be careful to live a godly [Use 4] and upright life, that when we shall go the way of all flesh, our souls may be received up into the heavenly habitations, and be carried by the Angels into the glorious presence of God. There is no man if he be to stand before Princes, and to come into the presence of great men, but prepareth and maketh himself ready for that purpose. When Joseph was to appear before Pharaoh, albeit he were called hastily, and brought suddenly before him, yet he shaued his head, and changed his raiment. How then ought our care to be increased? and how ought we to work out our salvation with fear and trembling, seeing the day of account cometh and seeing we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, to receive y^e things which are done in this body, whether they be good or evil, so soon as the some & body are separated? Let us remember our Creator in the days of our youth, Eccl. 12, 1. Let our conversation while we live upon the Earth be lifted up to the heavens. Let us mortify the lusts of the flesh, and not walk in the ways of our own hearts; assuring our selves y^t for all such things God will bring us to judgment. Therefore the Apostle Peter speaking of the dissolution of the world, the passing away of the heavens, the melting of the elements, the burning of the earth, and the destruction of y^e ungodly, draweth from these words this exhortation, Seeing therefore all these things must be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in holy conversation and godliness, looking for, and hasting unto the coming of that day of God? 2. Pet. 3, 11, 12. Let us set this day before our eyes whatsoever we do, and then we shall not sin forever. Let us arraign our selves at his bar, and thereby provoke one another, and be provoked our selves to our duties: For if we would judge our selves, we should not be judged of the Lord, 1 Cor. 11. Let us be careful to lay a good foundation of salvation, and never give over, until we have Christ dwelling in our hearts by faith, and receive the spirit of adoption to cry in our hearts Abba Father. For, if we depart out of this life without faith in Christ, and without hope of salvation, it had been better for us that we had never been borne, as Christ speaketh of Judas the son of perdition. For what will it profit us to win the whole world, & then lose our own souls? To live in pleasure, & to have all that our heart can wish or desire for a season, and afterward to be tormened in hell fire forever?

[Use 5] Fifthly, this is a great and exceeding comfort to the childrē of God, to know that after this short, this weak, this feeble, this frail life, our souls shall return to the Lord, and be lifted up to the kingdom of heaven. Let us therefore prepare our selves for death, that we may be fit vessels for eternal life, and commend our souls into the hands of God at our departure. This was it which the Apostle practiced, Phil. 1, 23. 2 Cor. 4, 18, & 5, 1.2. The greatest afflictions that can befall us here, are nothing in respect of the blessed reward of immortality, as the same Apostle teacheth, Rom. 8, 18. I count that the afflictions of this present time are not worthy of the glory which shall be shown to us. Let us not fear the enemies of the Church: they may separate the soul from the body, but they can never separate the soul from God. They may kill the body, but they cannot kill the soul. They may take from us a little momentary pleasure of this life, but they cannot keep us from the presence of God, at whose right hand are pleasures for evermore. This is that which Christ teacheth his Disciples, Mat. 10, 28. Nay, they have no power over y^e body further then God permitteth them, as Christ answered to Pilate, glorying in his authority, & saying. Knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and to loose thee? Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above, therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin. So then, let us not fear their fear, whose power is limited is limited & restrained: death with one stroke shall set us at liberty, and free us from y^e yoke of all oppression, to our unspeakable and endless comfort. Contrariwise, this is a doleful and woeful doctrine to the wicked and ungodly, who live here after their own lusts, & follow their pleasures, delighting in vanity, and forgetting God, to consider the perpetuity & immortality of their souls; and that they must give a straight account of all their ways and works. This must needs be a doctrine of fear and terror unto them, able to break their stony hearts, and astonish their inward senses, and dash them upon the rocks of hopeless and helpless desperation. What can be more heavy news to a servant that hath wasted & consumed his masters money with riotous living, then to hear of a day of reckoning & account to be given of his Stewardship? So is it with all the ungodly, they fear nothing more then their appearing before the heavenly Judge, to be tried according to their works. Oh, it were well with them if their souls were mortal, that they might sleep in the dust, and lie in the grave forever, to be buried with their bodies, never to be raised again! Oh, their case were happy, and thrice happy should they be, if they might never come to judgment, or had been borne as toads and serpents, or worms of the earth that living their life, they might also die their death! But it shall not be so with them, their case shall not be so well: the end of this life bringeth them into eternal torments, and when they have tasted the first death, the second death shall take hold on them. Then they shall pronounce a thousand woes against themselves: then they shall wish they had never been borne. Then they shall weep and howl without recovery: then they shall gnash with their teeth, and gnaw their tongues for anger, Mat. 22, 12. Thē they shall desire the mountains to fall upon them, and the hills to cover them from the presence of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb, &c. For as they are happy that die in the Lord, being joined to him, and freed from all sorrows: so they are wretched and a thousand times miserable, that depart hence out of God's favor, & have the sins of their youth and age accompanying them: to whom he will say, Depart from me, ye cursed into everlasting fire, which is prepared for the devil and his Angels, Matth. 25, 41. We see how the consideration of the Sessions or Assizes striketh a terror into the heart and conscience of the guilty malefactor: how much more then shall the solemn day of the Lord's last judgment, amaze, affright, and astonish the Reprobate, who have drawn sin unto them as with Cart-ropes, and have clothed themselves with shame, as with a Robe? This will be a day of blacknesse and of darkness, a day of clouds and obscurity, a day of horror and confusion unto them that dwell upon the face of the earth, when God shall come to judge without respect of persons. For what rest or comfort can the malefactor take when he is always in expectation of the coming & approach of the Judge? Whereas the godly have peace of conscience, and shall lift up their heads, because their Redeemer draweth nere. So thē, as Balaam wished, y^t he might die the death of the righteous, and his last end might be like his: so let us all crave and desire of God, that we may not die the death of the unrighteous, nor our last end be like his.

[Use 6] Lastly, let us care for it more then for the body, & bestow more labot & pains in adorning & garnishing of it. For what is the body, & what is this mortal life, but a little blast? Stop his mouth, & hold his nostrils but a while what is he but a carcass? But the soul, albeit it have time of beginning, yet shall never die, or cease to be, but remaineth eternal without an ending, and shall never be extinguished. It standeth us thereupon, in regard of the divine nature of the soul, and the excellency thereof above the body, to employ more time, and to bestow more pains in beautifying the soul with heavenly graces, then trimming & attiring the body with outward ornaments. For as the body hath his garnishings, so hath the soul likewise her proper deckings. And yet (alas) if we should enter into a survey and examination of the deeds of men, and mark what their behavior is concerning their soul, and compare it with the care they have of their vile bodies and rotten carcasses, we shall quickly perceive and discern, that the provision of the one destroyeth and swalloweth up the preparation for the other. We see how men toile and moile all their life long, rising early, watching long and late, faring hardly, laboring continually, and sweating exceedingly, to provide for the body and for the belly, the things of this life that must fade & perish, according as the Apostle saith, 1. Cor. 6, 13. Meats are ordained for the belly, and the belly for meats, but God shall destroy both it and them. But the soul lieth unprovided and unregarded of the greatest number, they pass not greatly whether it sink or swim, whether it starve or prosper, whether it go to hell or to heaven. If a man or woman have a small spot in their garment, or a blemish in their face, we see how careful they are to correct and amend it: but if their souls lie full of sores and corruption, full of boils and blisters, full of wounds and grievous swellings, they never regard it, they have no feeling of it; they are never grieved at it, or troubled with it. Mark the practice and common behavior of most persons, on the Lord's day, which is the market day of the soul: do they not bestow greater time, & more hours in the day, in trimming of the body, & providing for the belly, then in the exercises of Religion? Which overmuch care of the body argueth a carelessness for the soul. Doth not this bewray our contempt of the food of our souls, & a lamentable loathing of the heavenly Manna of the word of God, following after our worldly profit, & running mad after our vain pleasures? And yet these men, if they were asked, are not ashamed to say, they take more care for their souls than for their bodies. We see how far men will travail, & what tedious journeys they will take to increase their wealth: & if a little famine pinch, & hungerbite them, they will compass sea & land, & wander far & near to serve the body, & fill the belly. If the care for the nourishment of thy soul, were answerable to this diligence, thou woldst not doubt for y^e everlasting good of thy soul, to take at least as great pains to provide for the food of thy soul that endureth to eternal life. For what shall it profit a man, if he win the whole world, and then lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give for the recompense of his soul? Mat. 16, 26. First therefore seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, &c, Math. 6, 33.

Verse 11. [Then Balak said unto Balaam: What hast thou done unto me? I took thee to curse mine enemies, and behold thou hast blessed them altogether.] Hitherto we have spoken of the prophecy, which God constrained the false Prophet to utter: now let us see the effect thereof. We cannot be ignorant that the purpose both of Balak and Balaam was malicious and full of cruelty: they looked for a glorious success and event of their labors, but all their practices are defeated and disappointed. Balak hoped through Balaam to prevail against Israel, he comforted himself in this wizard, he carried him to an high mountain to see them; he said before him (as we heard in the former chapter) Numb. 22.3. I know, that he whom thou blessest, is blessed: and he that thou cursest, shall be cursed: yet this hope is built upon the sand, or standeth in the air, and faileth him that trusteth in it. From hence we learn, that the expectation, hope, and confidence of the wicked come to nothing in the end. Albeit, they comfort themselves in evil, and promise to themselves an happy end, yet the issue is vain, and the snare is broken. Esau in the profaneness of his heart having sold his birthright, promiseth to himself a golden day, to recover again both blessing & birthright, and therefore thought in his mind, and uttered with his mouth, Gen. 27, 41. The days of mourning for my father will come shortly, then will I slay my brother Jacob. But notwithstanding this devilish drift and purpose of his, the blessing took place, and this hypocrite was disappointed. The Canaanites comforted themselves in Sisera, and promised themselves victory over the Israelites: The mother of Sisera looked out of a window, and cried through the lattesse, Judge. 5, 28, 29, 30. Why is his chariot so long a coming? Why tarry the wheels of his chariot? They have gotten and divided the spoil, every man hath a maid or two: Sisera hath a prey of diverse coloured garments, a prey of sundry colors made of needle work for the chief of the spoil. See how the e-enemies of the Church glory, and oftentimes triumph before the victory, and putting on their armor, boast, as if they were putting it off. This we see in Rabshakeh railing against the people of God, and boasting in his own strength. Let not thy GOD deceive thee in whom thou trustest saying; 2 Kings 19, 11. Jerusalem shall not be delivered into the hand of the King of Ashur. Hereunto cometh the saying of the Prophet Hosea, Hosea 12, 15. Ephraim is fed with the wind, and followeth after the East wind, he increaseth daily lies and destruction. Thus they flattered themselves with vain confidence, and rested upon deceitful hope. Thus likewise the Prophet bringeth in the enemies of Christ, & of the Church conspiring against God, and encouraging one another in wickedness, Psal. 2, 3, 4. Let us break their bands, and cast their cords from us: but he that dwelleth in the heaven shall laugh, the Lord shall have them in derision, and break them in pieces like a potters vessel. So then, when the wicked say, peace, peace, unto themselves, and think themselves sure of their purposes, they shall fail in the midway, and suddenly come to destruction, verifying the saying of Solomon, Prov. 11, 7. The hope of the unjust shall perish.

[Reason 1] The reasons are, first because as they set themselves against the Church, so God setteth himself against them. Can we then marvel that they are confounded and consumed, against whom God opposeth himself? they are the enemies of God, and God professeth himself their enemy. Who ever arose against him and prospered? Who ever fought against him, and prevailed? They shall consume as the fat of Lambes before the fire, and melt as the wax against the Sun. This hath been the faith and assurance of the Church of God in all their dangers that have threatened and assailed them; namely, that God would take their cause into his hands, and revenge the wrong done unto them. Therefore when the enemies took crafty counsel against them, and consulted cruel things to compass their destruction, saying; Psal. 83.12. Come, let us cut them off from being a nation, & let the name of Israel be no more in remembrance, and let us take for our possession the habitation of God: they prayed to God to confound their enterprises, to fill their faces with shame, to make them afraid by his judgments, to turn them upside down as a wheel, to persecute them with his tempest, that they might be as stubble before the wind, as the fire burneth the forest, and as the flame setteth the mountains on fire.

[Reason 2] Secondly, they trust in lying words that cannot profit, and consequently they cannot prosper, because no man by his own strength, or the power of his own hand can bring anything to pass. God scattereth the devices of the crafty, and taketh the wise in their craftiness: so that man cannot by his care and confidence attain to the fruit of his desire, Hagg. 1, 9. For God bloweth upon it, and it cometh to nothing.

The uses of this doctrine remain to be [Use 1] considered and handled. First, mark hereby the unhappy estate of those that have only eyes of flesh, to rest upon the things which they see. Nothing shall be able to help them, woeful therefore is their condition. This the Prophet teacheth, Ier. 17, 5, 7. Thus saith the Lord, Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, & maketh flesh his arm, and withdraweth his heart from the Lord; but blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is. So then, all they that make not God their Lord, are unhappy. If the ungodly did consider these things, that they setting up their rest upon vain things, and putting their confidence in a broken reed, cannot prosper, it would be a notable means to bridle their vanity, and to suppress their folly. If we should see a man naked & unarmed to go into the field against his enemies, and persuade himself with a blast or bullrush to thrust them through, and throw them down on every side, and make no doubt to get the victory: we would think him s^ttish, and pity his folly; we would wish him to keep a good diet, and keep himself and his head warm, fearing the man were breeding mad. But thus it is with all the enemies of God and his people, that raise great hope by their own devices, and imagine great matters by their own counsels, they are as distracted and distempered men, they are in a miserable and woeful condition, leaning upon a bulrush, and settling their trust and rest upon a rotten reed. They build up the tower of confusion, God will come down against them, and divide their tongues, as he did at Babel. Woeful therefore and wretched is the case of all those, whose confidence raised up to high attempts, falleth on the ground: they trust in an arm of flesh, and are deceived, for GOD laugheth them and their inventions to scorn. They attain not to the end of their desires, but are disappointed, and so their hope perisheth; and this is chiefly in death, when they shall remain in misery forever.

Secondly, let us not rely upon such vain [Use 2] things, nor rest upon deceitful vanity, nor wait upon lying dreams and devices of men, for then all our expectation shall deceive us. What man is there in his right wits, y^t would in danger lean on the spiders web, and yet think to be delivered? Who would trust to a broken staff? who would lay his strength upon a weak reed? This is it that Bildad one of Job's three friends uttereth, ch. 8, 14. & 20, 5, 6. where he teacheth, That the rejoicing of the wicked is short, & the joy of hipocrits is but for a moment: though his excellency mount up to the heavens, & his head reach unto the clouds, yet he shall perish forever like the dung, & they which have seen him shall say, where is he? His confidence also shall be cut off, & his trust shall be as the house of a spider: therefore it can minister no comfort to such as catch hold upon it. Hereunto come sundry exhortations of the Prophet in the Psalms, Psal. 62, 10. & 20, 7, & 125, 1. If we rest upon God, we shall have a sure staff that shall never fail: we build upon that hope that shall never make ashamed; They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but remaineth forever.

[Use 3] Lastly, seeing the glory of our enemies shall end in shame, and their vain rejoicing be buried in confusion: let us all take comfort and cheer up our selves, and one another, when we see the enemies of the Church plot and conspire against the Church. Albeit they lay their heads together, and be very busy to stop the course of the glorious Gospel, yet this is our hope, that their hope is but on the spiders web, the gates of hell shall never be able to prevail against the Church, and themselves shall work out their own destruction. Thus doth the Prophet comfort himself, Psal. 49.5, 6, 7. Let this stay our faith, and comfort our hope, when we see mighty plottings, subtle proceedings, deep devices and conspiracies of the wicked. For why should we fear, seeing they wait on lying vanities, and forsake their own mercy? See this in the example of Pharaoh, of Haman, of Sancherib, of Herod, and sundry others. If other enemies in our days follow their deeds, let them also fear their ends. And for this purpose the Prophet speaketh unto them, Isaiah 8, 9, 10. Gather together on heaps, O ye people, & ye shall be broken in pieces, and hearken all ye of far Countries: gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces: gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces: Take counsel together, yet it shall be brought to naught: pronounce a decree, yet shall it not stand, for God is with us. Thus the enemies shall be confounded: thus their counsels shall be overturned, so y^t we need not to fear them, or their devices. They are like a reed of Egypt, which if one lean on it, will break in pieces, and run into his hand to his great hurt.

13 And Balak said unto him, Come I pray thee with me unto another place, whence thou mayest see them, and thou shalt see but the utmost part of them, and thou shalt not see them all: therefore curse them out of that place for my sake.

14 And he brought him into the field of the watchmen to the top of Pisgah, and built seven altars, and offered a bullock and a ram on every altar.

15 After he said unto Balaam, Stand here by thy burnt offering, and I will meet the Lord yonder.

16 And the Lord met Balaam, and put an answer in his mouth, and said, Go again unto Balak, and say thus:

17 And when he came to him, behold he stood by his burnt offering, and the Princes of Moab with him: so Balak said unto him, What hath the Lord said?

Hitherto we have spoken of the former part of the Chapter, which is the first attempt and the first prophecy. Now we come to the second attempt and practice which Balaam maketh, to hurt and bewitch the people of God, when he seeth his first succeedeth not according to his purpose and desire. Wherein consider three things: First, their preparation for a new project: Secondly, the second Prophecy: Thirdly, the issue and effect thereof, together with a fresh purpose to make another attempt, and a new encounter. Touching the preparation, after that Balaam had shown the true cause of his blessing of Israel, and had declared that he was ready for his part to have wrought his skill upon them that they might languish and pine away, and had therefore prepared altars, sacrifices and enchantments; but the Lord put a blessing into his mouth, which he was compelled to utter and pronounce against his will, according to the saying of the Wiseman, Prov. 16.2. The preparations of the heart are in man, but the answer of the tongue is of the Lord: After this answer, I say, Balak leadeth him to another place, and chooseth such a standing for him, that he should no more see the whole host of Israel, but only the utmost part of them, supposing that the change of place would work an alteration of his purpose. For he thought that Balaam was dashed and daunted in his intent, by beholding the great multitude and comely order of God's people: so that the superstitious King thought, that the reason of not cursing the people proceeded from weakness and want of courage, not from the vanity of his enchantments. As if he should have said; It may be thou faintest and fearest the people being many (as also I both fear them for their multitude, and hate them for their strength,) and therefore darest do nothing against them: thou seest all of them, and therefore thy heart faileth thee. But come with me, I will bring thee to such a place, where thou shalt take a view only of the reareward of them. So then, be of good courage and fear nothing, I know thou hast skill enough, and therefore that which thou couldst not do out of the other place, perform thou readily and resolutely out of this place. And for this purpose he brought him into y^e field of watchmen where the sentinell was set, and where the spies lay to mark the marching and approaching of the enemy, & guideth him to the top of a certain hill, where again seven Altars are built, and seven sacrifices are offered.

After this, Balaam commanded the King to stand by the burnt Offerings, and himself to please his humor, goeth to see if he can have any better success then he had had hitherto, in raising up the God of the Hebrews. For to color his sorcery, he betook himself to a solitary place, not to ask counsel of God (as the true Prophets of GOD used to do,) but to perform his intended coniuration, & to raise a great expectation of his art, as appeareth in the Chapter following. Now whilst he goeth about his devilish Magicke, GOD met him, and without speaking moe words unto him, he put another prophecy into his mouth, which returning back to Balak, he commanded him to utter. Not that God was compelled and enforced by his enchantments to appear unto him, or had any respect at all to his witchcraft; for he was unworthy that God should vouchsafe him a word; but it was in regard of his own people Israel, that their enemies might know they were a blessed people, and witness against their wills, that they were under the power and protection of God, the poorest and lowest member whereof, God more respecteth then a thousand Balaam's. This was the cause why GOD suffered him not to go forward in his sorcery, or to raise up the devil to delude and deceive him, as Saul was deluded by the likeness of Samuel, 1. Sam. 28, 14. Albeit therefore this causeless curse could not have succeeded, if he had proceeded: yet this curse made most for the manifestation of God's glory, and the good of his people.

Verse 13. [Come I pray thee with me into another place, and thou shalt see but the utmost part of them, and shalt not see them all.] Here we have another preparation of a cursed plot or project. They change the place, but not their mind. The former atremp^t was dashed and overthrown: yet here we see the net is spread again, and the snare laid, so insatiable is their malice against the Church of God. We see then how he carrieth him to another place, to begin a new practice, the former frustrate. From hence we learn, that the wicked leave no means vnattempted still to seek the Churches overthrow. Although they be oftentimes crossed in their purposes, and find hard success in their intended wickedness, yet they never rest nor give over, like desperate enemies that will never be quiet, whether they be conquerors or conquered, as once Annibal said of Marcellus. This is it which the Prophet Isaiah declareth, Isaiah 29.8. Where he showeth, that it is no marvel if the Chaldeans thunder against the Jews, and suddenly sweep them away, as a whirlwind carrieth away the chaff, seeing their rage against them is insatiable, being compared to hungry men that dream they are eating, and are not satisfied: to thirsty men that think they are drinking, and when they awake, their thirst is not quenched: so the enemies do hunger & thirst most earnestly, so that nothing can content them, but the subversion of the Church. This endless & restless fury we see in all ages of the Church. The Aramites were subdued by Israel, and had received a notable foil in open field: but will they give over & desist? No, they persist & proceed, they repair their forces, & will not give over. This appeareth in Cain toward Abel; in Saul toward David; in the Scribes and Pharisees toward Christ; in Haman and his sons toward Israel; in the chief Priests toward Paul. Albeit they be ouermastered, their counsels detected, their purposes defeated, and themselves be disappointed, that they may see how they fight, not against men, but against God yet their diligence is unweariable, and their rage unspeakable.

This truth will further appear unto us by [Reason] sundry reasons drawn from the person of God, and from the conditions of the enemies of the Church. God seeth the wickedness of their hearts, & heareth the groans & afflictions of his elect, yet he suffereth the ungodly to whet their tongues, & sharpen their swords against them, to the end he may gain glory to his great Name in the confusion & destruction of them. Pharaoh contrived sundry plots & fetching devices to subvert the Church in Egypt, some secret, some open, Exo. 1.17. & 9, 16. Rom 9.17. He commanded the midwives to stifle & strangle the young infants coming out of their mothers womb, which are the spawn & fry of Religion, & the hope of the succeeding Church. When this devilish device was discovered and disappointed, because the midwives feared God, & did not as the King charged them, but preserved alive the men children, then he attempteth another way, commanding by public edict to drown and destroy their children, & afterward vexeth them by making bricks, and carrying burdens. Thus he proceedeth from one evil to another. God setteth him up as a mark, and appointed him to show his power in him, and to declare his Name throughout all the world. Thus GOD draweth good out of evil, and manifesteth his own glory in confounding the malice of mischievous enemies.

Secondly, the enemies of the Church run [Reason 2] on in malicious courses to undermine y^e good estate of the Church, because they are led by the spirit of the devil, as his vassals and slaves to do his will. Why did Cain burst with envy against his brother, hanging down his head, & drawing his weapon? Because he was led by that evil one, the prince & god of the ungodly 2. Cor. 4, 4, who blindeth their minds, worketh in their hearts, & holdeth them in full power & possession. The greatest devouring beasts in the wilderness always keep their courses & recourses, either weariness constraineth them to cease, or the light of the Sun affrighteth them, whereby the silly prey getteth some respite and refreshing: But Satan the Prince of this world is never at rest, he is ever greedy, and never weary, always plotting, practicing, catching, destroying and devouring. The light of the day, and darkness of the night are both alike to him: Job 1, 7. Who compasseth the whole earth, and walketh in it too and fro, 1 Pet. 5.8. like a ramping and roaring Lyon seeking whom he may surprise and subvert. The end of one temptation is the beginning of another. He will never make peace with us, unless we deliver our souls unto him in hostage. Nahash the Ammonite is noted of extreme cruelty, that would no otherwise make a covenant with the men of Iabesh Gilead, but on this condition, that he might thrust out all their right eyes, and bring y^e shame upon all Israel, 1. Sam. 11. But Satan, as he is more mighty, so is he more malicious; he will have both eyes and hands, he will have both head and heart, he will have possession both of soul and body. And therefore no marvel if the sons of Belial be stamped with his Image, and resemble him in an unweariable desire of mischief, plotting and performing day and night one mischievous attempt or other against the children of GOD.

[Use 1] Let us now carefully apply this doctrine to our uses. First, consider from hence the cause of the confusion of the enemies of the Gospel, and of the godly. They devise crafty counsels and conspiracies against the faithful, but withal, they work out their own death and destruction, and overthrow themselves in their malice & mischief. For of all such the Prophet saith, Psal. 7, 15, 16. He hath made a pit, & digged it for another, and is fallen himself into the pit that he made: his mischief shall return upon his own head, and his cruelty shall fall upon his own pate. The hatred of the ungodly goeth before, and the judgments of God follow immediately after, who hath prepared him deadly weapons, & will ordain his arrows for them that persecute his servants. This the Prophet pronounceth against y' enemies of the Church, Isaiah 8, 9, 10. Gather together on heaps, & ye shall be broken in pieces: gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces: take counsel together, yet it shall be brought to naught; pronounce a Decree, yet it shall not stand, for God is with us, Behold the horrible down-fall of Haman an Arch-enemy of the people of God, raised up from the highest degree of honor and dignity, who thought it too little to lay hands on Mordecai alone, but sought to destroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom: he fell into the lowest step of shame & reproach, & was hanged on the tree that he had prepared for Mordecai. The advancement of the wicked is but for a momēt, & their destruction cometh suddenly, according to the saying of the Prophet David, Psa. 37, 35, 36, & 58, 6, 7, 8, & in Job 20.4. Thus we see, that the malice of the wicked turneth to their own calamity and confusion, so that when they have raked & ransacked all the corners of their heart to contrive means to over-throw the Church, they shall find by woeful experience that God hath many moe means and ways, to turn their own devices to their own destruction.

Secondly, see hereby God's almighty power [Use 2] and abundant kindness in saving and preserving the Church among so many enemies, as it were a little flock of sheep among so many wolves.

For we may behold a part of his chastisements upon his Church, by setting them in the world as in a wilderness, and that among the wicked, as it were among so many beasts, whereby their faith is tried, their obedience manifested, and their patience proved: so we see his marvelous mercy in their deliverance from them as out of the den of Lions, inasmuch as we know to our endless comfort, that notwithstanding, all the policies and practices of the devilish and damned crew of most spiteful and desperate enemies, yet God holdeth up the heads of his people that they are not drowned, like the Ark that floated on the waters: Reu. 12, 15. Howsoever the serpent cast out of his mouth water after the woman like a flood, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood. Let us therefore confess before the Lord his loving kindness, and acknowledge surely that salvation is of the Lord, and not of our selves, of his mercy, and not of our own merit. This the Prophet professeth at large, If the Lord had not been on our side, may Israel now say, if the Lord had not been on our side, when men rose up against us, then had they swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us. Then the waters had drowned us & the stream had gone over our soul: then had the swelling waters gone over our soul: Praised be the Lord, &c.

Lastly, let us lay up these things in our [Use 3] hearts, and know the nature of our enemies, and the greatness of our own danger. Let us consider the present peril and estate of the Church, and look for such enemies. Let us all watch over our selves, and weigh our calling and condition. It is not a calling to outward peace and prosperity, neither must we look here to find carnal ease and delight, but when one trouble and tempest is over-blown, and the grief of one affliction is ended, we must not then grow careless and secure, we must not lull our selves asleep in the cradle of sensuality; but in the end of one affliction, we must look for another to begin, & always to keep watch and ward, knowing the frailty of our own flesh, remembering Satan to be an enemy of our peace and happiness, and considering our life to be as a continual warfare, so long as we tarry in this Tabernacle. If we be compassed about with many enemies, and to be put into the furnace of affliction made exceeding hot, let us still have comfort and consolation, God will make the end glorious, & the issue happy. This use is taught and practiced by the Prophet Daniel, where a vision of four beasts is shown unto Daniel, and the calamities to come successively upon the Church of the Jews thereby fore-shown, he apprehended this doctrine by faith, and kept it in his memory, to remain with him for his comfort and instruction forever.

Wherefore, let us not promise rest to our selves after one deliverance, the enemies will gather themselves together again: and when we have victory over one temptation, let us prepare our selves for a new combat, and make ready our armor for another assault. This we see in Christ, the head of the faithful. This we see in Job a man that feared God and eschewed evil, who having vanquished Satan in one temptation, he returned eftsoons, and redoubled his forces upon him with another. If this practice of the devil were well pondered and thoroughly considered, it would not only prevent and redress much impatience, but work much peace and contentment in our hearts. For what is the cause that we are so impatient under the cross, murmuring against God in our trials and temptations, accounting them heavy and intolerable burdens unto us, but because we promise to our selves peace and pleasure, in the days of our pilgrimage, and we dream of an heaven here upon earth?

But if we will profit aright in affliction, whereby our faith is tried, and made much more precious than gold that perisheth: we must look continually to be assaulted, if we would not suddenly be surprised, & so come as a prey into the jaws of Satan.

Verse 13.14. [Thou shalt not see them all: So he brought him into the field of the Watchmen, &c.] We have heard before how the enterprises of Balaam were disappointed of God, and so the wisdom of the wise confounded. Now the King, seeing himself crossed in his purpose, and desiring to make an end of this matter, carrieth him up to another place, where he might only see a part of the Israelites his enemies. Why doth he take this course? Surely because he thought he feared the sight of that great multitude, and considereth not the vanity of his sorcery. Howsoever therefore they might see with their eyes, and (as it were) feel with their hands God fighting against them, yet both of them proceed in their purpose: the King in provoking, the false Prophet in hearkening and obeying. Lo how obstinate the wicked are in evil, & settled with a full resolution to continue in their course; so, that albeit they change the place, yet abide in their former purpose, and cannot be brought to acknowledge their own folly. From hence we learn, that wicked men when they have evil success, never look up to God whom they have offended, nor consider their sins whereby he is provoked, but lay the fault in second causes, and in anything rather than upon themselves. This corruption appeared in our first Parents, immediately after their transgression. For when they saw the filthiness of their nakedness, and the miserable experience which they had gotten, losing the good, and enjoying the evil, Adam laid the fault upon the woman, as the woman did upon the serpent, and could not be brought to acknowledge their own offense. When the Philistines were plagued, and the hand of God was sore upon them for abusing the Ark, they did not strike their hand vpon their thigh, and confess they had sinned, but do ascribe all things to blind-chance and uncertain fortune, whereas nothing is done without the decree and providence of God: Therefore, determining to send back the Ark, they reason thus, 1. Sam. 6.9. If it go up by the way of his own coast, it is the God of Israel that did us this great evil: but if not, we shall know then that it is not the hand that smote us, but it was a chance that happened us.

This like we see in the Aramites, when they had ill success in the battle against the Israelites, they said, 1. Kings 20.23. Their gods are gods of the mountains, and therefore they overcame us; but let us fight against them in the plain, and doubtless we shall overcome them. Hereunto accordeth the saying of the Wise man, Prov. 19.3. The foolishness of a man perverteth his way, and his heart fretteth against the Lord; that is, when the scourge of God lieth sore upon the transgressors for despising the Word, for abusing the Sacraments, or for practicing any wickedness, they learn not by his plagues and judgments to accuse and judge themselves, but accuse God as the author of their evils and adversities, and murmur against him for dealing so rigorously & sharply with them, like to the dog that byteth the stone, but looketh not after him that casteth it.

The reasons. First, wicked men want the [Reason 1] knowledge of the true God, to judge of their crosses and afflictions; and therefore no marvel if they be disquieted, and fret through the evil success they have in their enterprises. This made the wise Solomon to say, Prov. 19.3. They s^et against the Lord. The want of sound judgment and a right understanding, is the mother of all the corruptions which are in us, and of the sin which we commit. For we should ascribe to our own folly the things that go not well with us, and not through impatience accuse God, neither impute the evil successes of our affairs to him, but to our selves; even as he that stumbleth and falleth against a stone, should not accuse the stone, but his own hastiness and heedlesnes. Now then, if wicked men want the knowledge of God, and the fear of his Name, to guide them in the search and survey of their own ways, to enquire into the true cause of their evil successes, we cannot marvel if they wander up and down in their own imaginations, and can never find the fault to be in themselves.

Secondly, the ungodly are blinded with a [Reason 2] self-love and self-liking of themselves, above God or his Word. The love of the creature, or of our selves more then God, or equal with God, hindereth us in good things, and quite swalloweth up the love of our brethren, and darkeneth the light of upright judgment, that it cannot shine in our hearts. The conceited person thinketh himself a wise man, and imagineth his own course to be the best, using no advice of others, as if he himself were in all things sufficient of himself, to see what is best for himself. This Solomon excelling in wisdom, teacheth to these conceited persons abounding in folly, Prov. 12.14. The way of a fool is right in his own eyes, but he that hearkeneth to counsel is wise. So in another place, Prov. 18.2. A fool is not delighted with understanding, but with those things which are in his own heart. And again, Prov. 26.12. Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit? There is more hope of a fool then of him. These self-loving and self-liking fools are delighted with their own folly, which they labor to publish and make known to all men, and may worthily bear away the bell from all the fools in the world. For these are proud fools that highly esteem of their own wisdom, and scornfully disdain the counsel and wisdom of all other men. Seeing therefore evil men want the wisdom of God that is from above, and abound with self-love, which descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, and devilish: we cannot greatly marvel if wicked men will acknowledge no fault in themselves, but wholly look to second causes, and lay the blame upon the most High, when they fail in their purposes.

[Use 1] The uses of this doctrine. First of all, we learn this truth, that no evil man can look for any good success in the matters he taketh in hand: but let him always be sure to be crossed & cursed of God. Albeit thou lay in thine own conceit never so strong a foundation, & work never so wisely in thine own imagination, yet if thou make not God thy Counselor, and his Word thy director, thy wisdom shall be turned into folly, and thou shalt be taken in the snare of thine own hands. For all sin against God bringeth with it the wrath of God, and the evil life of a sinner, draws upon his own head sundry crosses and calamities, causeth him to have ill success, and raiseth up infinite judgments against him. Whensoever we despise his word profane his Sabbaths, defile his Sacraments, and practice any unrighteousness against men, and impiety against God, then followeth and falleth upon us some sickness or trouble, some cross or affliction, one way or another: as the Apostle showeth, For your dissention and irreverent receiving of the Lord's Supper, 1. Cor. 11.30. many are weak and sick among you, and many sleep. Now, when the rod and scourge of God lieth upon the back of transgressors, and they feel themselves sore plagued, either they accuse God as the author of their trouble, or murmur against his punishment, or rest upon second causes, which are ordered by him, who is the principal cause.

[Use 2] Secondly, we learn, that if we would have God bless us, and the lawful labors of our hands, we must be godly in Christ Jesus. If we lead a sincere and sanctified life, & purge our hearts to be a peculiar people to God, zealous of good works, we have a sure promise of good success, and strong assurance of a plentiful blessing to follow us all the days of our life. There is no good success in anything without God's blessing. And this is the cause why God blesseth us not, because we bless not his Name, we live not as a people under his protection, we do not deny ungodliness & worldly lusts, living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, having our conversation in the heavens, and looking for the blessed hope of glory and immortality. Hereunto cometh the saying of Solomon, Commit thy works to the Lord, and thy thoughts shall be directed.

This is a worthy saying to redress our weakness and distrust, and to make us rest and rely our selves on God's good providence. This also the Prophet David teacheth, Psal. 127, 1, 2. All the fruit of our labors & cares dependeth upon the providence of God; yea, all our industry and study shall be vain and unprofitable, unless he guide all our affairs. To this purpose the Prophet speaketh in another place, that the godly, refusing the counsel of the wicked, the way of sinners, the seat of scorers, shall bring forth fruit in due season, so that whatsoever he shall do, shall prosper. It is God alone that directeth the ways and works of the faithful, and without him is no good success. This we see verified in Joseph, Gen. 39, 2, 3. The Lord was with Joseph, & he was a man that prospered, and was in the house of his master the Egyptian: And his master saw the Lord was with him, and that the Lord made all that he had to prosper in his hand. The like the Scripture testifieth of Hezekiah, that he prospered in all his works. So Jehoshaphat spake to the people, Hear ye me, O Judah & the inhabitants of Jerusalem, put your trust in the Lord your God, and ye shall be assured: believe his Prophets, and ye shall prosper. Thus also the Lord exhorteth Joshua after the death of Moses, Josh. 1, 8. We do all of us desire the blessing of God upon our labors, and to have good success in our several callings: this is the pathway that we must walk in, namely, a godly life and conversation: without this, his blessings shall turn into curses, and we shall never attain the end of our hope. This appeareth by the words which the man of God spake to the King of Israel, saying; Thus saith the Lord, Because the Aramites have said, the Lord is the God of the Mountains, and not of the Valleys, therefore will I deliver all this great multitude into thine hand, and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

Lastly, we are bound everyone to consider [Use 3] the true cause of evil success to be in our selves. When the hand of God is any way upon us, that he plagueth us in the house, or in the field, in our persons, or in our families, in our bodies, or in our souls; we must not accuse the air, or the earth, heat or cold, moisture or drouth, but learn to lay the fault upon our selves and sins, and fly to God to have the plague and punishment removed from us. Thus Balak and Balaam ought to have done, when they saw the judgment of God upon them, crossing their attempts; and not flatter themselves with better success, by changing the place, by renewing their altars, and by multiplying their sacrifices. They should have forsaken their old practices, and not have thought upon new places; they should have changed their mind, and not their place. For GOD is everywhere, and the godly are under his hand and protection wheresoever they are. Therefore the Lord by the Prophet Jeremiah saith, Ierem. 23.23. Am I a God at hand, and not God a far off? Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him, saith the Lord? Do not I fill Heaven and earth, saith the Lord? This is diligently to be considered of everyone of us, when we meet with any crosses and contradictions, not laying the fault upon this place or that person; but let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord. Let us lift up our hearts with our hands unto God in the heavens, saying: We have sinned and have rebelled, therefore thou hast not spared, Lam. 3.40. We oftentimes can cast our eyes upon others, and sit in judgment upon them, we are ready to censure with a sharp censure, and esteem them as men forgotten and forsaken of GOD, when they are corrected and punished by his hand. So did the friends of Job, Job 4, 7. So did the disciples of Christ, Luke 13.1. John 9, 2. So do the men of this world: we are quick sighted, and have Eagles eyes to look into the actions of others: but we are blind and blockish to perceive the blemishes; yea, the beams that are in our selves. We can see the least mote in the eye of another, but cannot behold the blocks that lie in our own. We set the sins of others before our faces, but we cast our own behind our backs.

We must therefore all remember, to begin with our selves, and so descend to others, lest it be justly said to us, Luke 4, 23. Physician, heal thyself. Thus Christ admonisheth and calleth back the proud Pharisees from censuring the woman and requiring sentence against her, whilst they themselves lay without repentance in their sins, and were guilty of the same or greater iniquities. Let us all begin with our selves, and so proceed to others. Let us first of all hate sins in our own persons, and thereby we shall learn to hate them in others.

18 And he uttered his parable and said, Rise up Balak, and hear: hearken unto me, thou son of Zippot.

19 God is not as man that he should lie, neither as the sons of man that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? And hath he spoken, and shall he not accomplish it?

20 Behold, I have received commandment to bless: for he hath blessed, and I cannot alter it.

21 He seeth not iniquity in Jacob, and he beholdeth not transgression in Israel: the Lord his GOD is with him, and the joyful shout of a King is among them.

22 GOD brought them out of Egypt, their strength is as an Unicorn.

23 For there is no sorcery against Jacob, nor south-saying against Israel: according to this time, it shall be said of Jacob and Israel, what hath God wrought?

24 Behold, the people shall rise up as a Lyon, and lift up himself as a young Lyon: he shall not lie down till he eat of the prey, and till he drink of the blood of the slain.

In the words immediately going before, we have handled the Preface and preparation for for a new attempt: now cometh to be considered and handled the prophecy it self, which is the second in number: wherein we are to consider two things. First, the entrance: secondly, the matter it self. In the entrance he singleth out Balak by his name, and by the name of his father, and stirreth him up to a reverent and religious attention. Now, because he was to speak unto him in the Name of GOD, he commandeth him to rise up, as servants arise when their masters call them, willing him to hear and hearken what he should say unto him from the Lord, Note also, that to make him ready to be taught, and quick to conceive, he doubleth the sentence, and crieth out to have audience given him. Indeed he had rather to have murmured and muttered closely, then uttered openly this blessing, if he might have been at his own choice, fearing to purchase the Kings displeasure, & to lose both crowns and credit to himself: but he is constrained to publish and proclaim it aloud in the ears of Balak, and to repeat his words again and again, saying; Rise Balak, & hear: hearken unto me thou son of Zippor.

Touching the substance of the Prophecy, we must observe that the matter is first handled, and then concluded. In the propounding and handling of the matter, he showeth, that howsoever to pleasure the King, he would have cursed the people of God, yet he is not able to utter one word against them, but is made against his will, as a crier to publish, as a witness to confirm, and as a messenger to divulge their happiness, and so to strengthen that which before he had delivered and pronounced. But first he setteth down the unchangeable nature of GOD in his decrees and works, who is constant, true, and faithful in performing his will: as if he should say; At thy commandment (O King) I am come up hither, thou thoughtest if I changed my place, GOD would also be changed; but thou art greatly deceived. For GOD is not a liar, nor changeable as a man is, he will not alter that which is gone out of his mouth, nor call back that which he hath decreed, touching the people of Israel. Yea, Balaam himself is here made an helper and furtherer of God's providence, in publishing as an Herald, the praises of his people, so that seeing he had received a commandment to bless them, he declareth; that forasmuch as GOD will not alter his purpose, he is not able to alter and change it, neither to stand and resist the work and Word of God, although he desired it never so earnestly and instantly. So then the sum of this Prophecy is this: The people of Israel continue an happy and blessed people under God's mighty protection and preservation, notwithstanding the diverse and devilish practices of all their enemies. This truth is further strengthened and confirmed, both from the person of GOD, and from the person of Balaam. To begin with the former point, he setteth forth sundry special tokens and testimonies of the favor of GOD, blessing them both with spiritual blessings in heavenly things, and with temporal blessings in earthly things, In regard of benefits belonging to the life to come and accompanying salvation, he showeth diverse privileges bestowed upon them, concerning their justification, sanctification, regeneration, and comfortable use of the Word vouchsafed unto them, Touching their justification, he saith; He seeth none iniquity in Jacob, and he beholdeth not transgression in Israel: Whereby he meaneth not, that they were freed from sin, (for if we say, we have no sin, we deceive our selves, and there is no truth in us) 1. John 1, 8. but that he imputeth it not; he layeth it not to their charge, but he covereth it, and freely forgiveth it. He doth not charge them with it, but discharge them from it. He seeth their sins well enough with the eyes of his knowledge; but because they are covered in Christ, he will not look upon them with the eyes of his judgment; he beholdeth them, as well able to discern them, but not with a purpose to revenge them. Touching their sanctification, he saith; The Lord his God is with him: not only with his presence, but with his grace and Spirit of sanctification, For if we speak of the presence of his essence and being, he is with all persons, and filleth all places. This Solomon in his worthy and excellent prayer, 1. King. 8, 27. confesseth to GOD, saying: Is it true indeed that GGD will dwell on the earth? Behold, the heavens, and the heaven of heavens are not able to contain thee: how much more unable is this house that I have built? Hereunto accordeth the saying of the Prophet Jeremiah, Ier. 23.24. Can any hide himself in secret places, that I shall not see him, saith the Lord? Do not I fill heaven and earth saith the Lord? How then is this made a special privilege and prerogative bestowed on the people of GOD, to have GOD with them, which is the common condition of all places and persons? I answer, that in respect of his Natute and being, he is no more in heaven then on earth; with the godly, then with the ungodly; in the Church, then out of the Church: but in respect of his effects, and the presence of his grace, favor and protection. For as the soul of man is wholly in the whole body, and sitteth therein as a Queen, ruling in every member and part of the body, in respect of the essence thereof, and is no more in the head than in the hand, nor in the hand more than in the heel: but it is said to be especially in the head, and in the heart, because there it exerciseth most worthy and weighty effects: so God is present everywhere in the world, even in the wicked and reprobate, in respect of natural gifts of preservation, knowledge, and such like. But he is present in the godly in more special manner, by more special graces of regeneration, and sanctification, of faith and repentance, ruling them by his Spirit, pardoning their iniquities, and remembering their sins no more: so that howsoever he may leave them for a season to see their own infirmity, and the necessity of his mercy, yet he never totally and finally departeth from them, but returneth in compassion toward them, and followeth them with his loving kindness, until he have brought them to eternal life: In these respects he is said, to be far from the wicked, and not to come near their habitation. Touching the next privilege, which is his word, he saith: The joyful shout of a King is among them, that is; he ruleth them by the Scepter of his Word, which soundeth shrill among them as the blast of a trumpet, whereby is wrought in them both faith and sanctification. Touching temporal blessings, he painteth and pointeth out the long experience which his people have had of his mercy in saving them, and of his power in overthrowing their enemies. This he showeth by a particular example of his wonderful deliverance from the tyranny of the Egyptians, who could not hold them in that slavery and bondage, but were constrained by great wonders and grievous plagues to let them go. And as he delivered them from the hard and heavy yoke of their oppressors, so he armeth them with strength, as with a shield against all their enemies, and fenceth them with his mighty hand, as the Unicorn is with his borne: so that all the devilish devices, that devilish men can practice, can no more prevail against them, then poison against the Unicorn.

For we read partly in the holy Scriptures and partly in other authors that have searched out the nature of four-footed beasts, both of the strength of the Unicorn, and of the nature of his horn to expel poison. This is it which the Lord himself speaketh in the book of Job: Job. 39, 12, 13, 14, 15, Psal. 22, 22, and 92.11, Isaiah 34, 7. Will the Unicorn serve thee? or will he tarry by thy cribbe? Canst thou bind the Unicorn with his band to labor in the furrow? or will he plough the valleys after thee? So the Prophet David describing his enemies, resembleth them for their cruelty to the Lyon, for their strength to the Unicorn.

Likewise all men agree about the Unicorns horn. Writers do confess, and experience doth confirm, that it hath force to expel poison: therefore his horn being put into the water, purgeth it, and driveth out the poison, that he may drink without harm, if any venomous beast happen to drink therein before him. So the Israelites are compared to the Unicorn in this place; partly, in respect of their own strength, who whilst they were obedient to God, and served him with a faithful heart, could not be overcome of their enemies, but stood victorious and invincible against all dangers: and partly because no hurtful or noisome arts used against them, should be able to work their confusion.

Now to the latter point, which respecteth the person of Balaam, he acknowledgeth, that notwithstanding his sorcery and devilish divination, he was destitute of all power & ability to hurt them by his enchantments, & therefore saith; There is no sorcery against Jacob, nor southsaying against Israel: that is, the people of God, which were his posterity, Some understanding these words, as if the people were praised and commended because they were not given to sorcery, and such like superstitions, as GOD condemneth in the Law, and had forbidden to be among his chosen people; but the meaning of Balaam's words, rather seemeth to be this; that the elect people of GOD were so protected from above that no sorcery or southsaying could have any force against them to do them hurt.

This mercy of GOD was so great, so marvelous, so miraculous in the eyes of the very infidels their enemies, that from hence forward Balaam resolveth to leave his Magicke, and extol the works of GOD toward Israel, that he had done great things for them, saying; How great things hath the Lord wrought?

This is the substance of this Prophecy: now the conclusion followeth, shutting up the whole with an admiration and commendation of the power and glory of God's people. whose courage and happiness shall be so great in subduing and subverting their enemies, that as the Lyon resteth not till he hath gotten his prey, so they shall not put up their swords and dwell in peace, until they have sheathed them in the bowels of their enemies, and seen the destruction of them before their eyes. The meaning of the words is not, that they should be cruel and ravenous, or to stir them to be barbarous and beastly in shedding man's blood, and spilling it on the ground, as water that cannot be gathered up again: but to declare and assure, that their hearts were valiant and victorious, so that they should be able to withstand all that did stand against them. This was performed and accomplished in Joshua and David, who fought the battles of the Lord, and trod down their enemies, Josh. 23.10. One man of them did chase a thousand, for the Lord their God fought for them, as he had promised them: but especially it was verified in Christ, Reu. 5.5. who as the Lyon of the Tribe of Judah rose from the dead, led captivity captive, and hath put all things in subjection under his feet.

Verse 18. [He uttered his parable and said; Rise up, Balak, and hear: hearken unto me thou son of Zippor.] This is the entrance of the Prophecy, wherein he moveth Balak to attention by three words, rise, hearken, hear. And when he chargeth and commandeth him in the Name of GOD, to rise up, he requireth of him to give ear with meekness and reverence. This we see in the book of Judges, when Ehud appointed to be a deliverer of the people said to Eglon King of the Moabites, I have a message unto thee from God, then he arose out of his throne. So when Samuel was to anoint Saul King over Israel, & to be governor over God's inheritance, he said unto him; Bid thy servant go before us, but stand thou still now, that I may show thee the word of God, & that thou mayest hear it with reverence, 1 Sam. 9, 27. To the same purpose it is noted, that when the Law of God was read, Josiah stood by the Pillar, and made a covenant before the Lord. The like we see in the book of Nehemiah, when Ezra the Scribe read the Scriptures to the people, and gave the interpretation of them, All the people stood up in token of their reverence and attention, Neh. 8.5. So in this place, Balaam requireth Balak to rise and stand up when he was to speak unto him in the Name of the Lord, as if he should say; Albeit thou be a King, and sittest in the throne, yet I come unto thee from the King of Kings: thou rulest over thy subjects, but thou must be content to suffer God to rule over thee: thou requirest silence and subjection to thyself, but thou must hold thy peace, & hearken with all reverence & respect when he speaketh. From [Doctrine] hence we learn, y^t the Word of God is always to be heard with great reverence & wonderful attention. Whensoever we come to the exercises of Religion, we must come with humility and humbleness of mind, albeit they be delivered and brought unto us by wicked & ungodly men. The truth of this doctrine is confirmed unto us by diverse precepts, proved by many promises, and sanctified by sundry examples out of the Word of God.

Touching precepts, when Moses exhorted the people without adding or diminishing to observe the Law, he saith, Deut. 4, 1, & 34, 12.13. Now therefore hearken, O Israel, unto the ordinances and to the Laws which I teach you to do, that ye may live and possess the land. And afterward, Gather the people together, men, women, and children, and the stranger that is within thy gates, that ye may hear, & that ye may learn and fear the Lord your God, and keep & observe all the words of this Law: and that your children which have not known it, may hear it, and learn to fear the Lord your God. This Solomon teacheth, Eccl. 4.17. Take heed to thy foot when thou enterest into the house of God, and be more near to hear, then to give the sacrifice of fools, for they know not that they do evil. Hereunto accordeth the saying of our Savior so often urged, Mat. 13, 9. Revel. 2, 17, 9, and 3, 6. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. Touching the promises made to such as come with such an affection, we may read in the Prophet Isaiah, chap. 66, 2, 5. To him will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my words. And again, Hear ye the word of the Lord, all ye that tremble at my word. Lastly, touching the examples of the faithful that have gone before us in the performance and practice of this duty, we have a cloud of witnesses recorded unto us. The Israelites after their return from captivity, are commended, Neh. 8, 2, 3. that when Ezra the Priest brought the Law before the congregation both of men and women, & read therein from the morning until the midday, the ears of all the people hearkened unto the book of the Law. So when Samaria was called & converted to the faith of Christ, by y^e preaching of Philip, Acts 8, 5, 6, 10, 11, it is said; that the people gave heed with one accord to those things which he spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did, as before they had given heed from y^e least to the greatest, to the enchantments of Simon the sorcerer. And in the sixteenth Chapter ver. 14. the Spirit testifieth, that Lydia heard the Apostles diligently, whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which Paul spake. The Apostle Peter writing to the dispersed Jews, testifieth this, 2. Pet. 1.19. We have a sure word of the Prophets, to the which ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, & the daystar arise in your harts. All these precepts commanding, promises assuring, and examples confirming this doctrine, do teach that it is our duty to stir up our attention, and to be forward to learn God's will with all reverence and readiness, when it is revealed and delivered unto us.

[Reason 1] The reasons hereof are plain and evident. For first, it is God that speaketh unto us, so often as his word is preached among us. He is a most mighty and terrible GOD whom we worship, and in whose presence we stand, having all power and Majesty in him, who is even a consuming and devouring fire, and we in comparison of him as dust and ashes, as vile and base vassals. This is the reason used & urged by the Wiseman, Eccl. 5, 1. So the Apostle saith, 2 Cor. 5.20. We are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you through us, we pray you in Christ's stead, that ye be reconciled to God. Our Savior sending out his seventy disciples, and giving them in charge how to behave themselves, saith, Luke 10, 16. He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that despiseth you, despiseth me: and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me. Thus doth the Apostle give testimony to the faith and obedience of the Thessalonians; that when they received of him the preaching of God, 1. Thess. 2, 13. They received it not as the word of man, but as it is indeed the Word of God, which worketh in them that believe. So then, to be cold and careless herein, is a plain disgrace and mere mockery of God, worse then mocking and misusing of father and mother. He that hath to do and to deal with an earthly Prince, will be circumspect in his behavior: how much more ought we to behave our selves with all reverence in hearing the Word, having then in special manner to deal with God, who is the author of it, and the worker by it? [Reason 2]

Secondly, we shall be judged by it at the last day, being the rule of our faith, and of all our actions. It is a letter written from God, published by his Son, sealed by his Spirit, witnessed by his Angels, conveyed unto us by the Church, which is the pillar & ground of truth. This is that w^c our Savior Christ teacheth, John 12, 47, 48. Seeing then, it shall be the Judge by which we must be tried, and the word whereby our souls shall be saved, it worthily claimeth and challengeth at our hands the greatest attention to be yielded unto it.

Thirdly, negligent and contemptuous hearers, shall be grievously and severely punished, [Reason 3] according to the nature and quality of their sin. The Prophet Jeremiah hath a general rule, holding in all things warranted and done by God's appointment, and confirmeth this by a strong reason, when he saith, Ier. 48, 10. Cursed be he that doth the work of the Lord negligētly. This is more particularly touched and taught by the Apostle to the Hebrews, chap. 2, 2, 3. If the word spoken by Angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward: How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be preached by the Lord, and afterward was confirmed unto us by them that heard him? To this purpose Christ himself denounced and delivered the greatest threatening of most grievous judgments, to fall upon all negligent hearers, Math. 10, 14, and 11, 21, 24. Willing his Apostles to shake off the dust from their feet, as a witness against thew, & telling them that it shall be easier in the day of account, for Tyre & Sidon, for Sodom & Gomorrah, then for them. So then, whether we consider the person of God that speaketh, or the power of the word that judgeth, or the punishment of death that falleth upon careless contemners, we see that we are all bound to come to the exercises of Religion, with all reverence and attention,

Let us now gather some uses that follow [Use 1] from this doctrine. First, we learn from hence that everyone which cometh to hear the word of the Lord, must be persuaded, that though it be a poor, weak, sinful man, subject to the same passions that we are, which is the minister and messenger to deliver whatsoever we hear, yet notwithstanding we stand and appear before the great God of heaven, and most mighty Judge of the world, to be informed and reformed of him, and to receive his word which is able to save our souls. Cornelius the captain coming with his kinsfolke, family, friends, and whole retinue, made this use, which now we urge, saying, Acts 10.33. We are all here present before God; to hear all things that are commanded thee of God. He doth not say, we stand here before thee, but we are all present before God; nor to hear only the Apostle, but all things that are commanded thee of God to deliver unto us. Thus Paul commendeth the Galatians, Gal. 4, 14. that they received him as an Angel of GOD, yea, as Christ Jesus. It is the high ordinance of God, to put his heavenly treasure in earthen vessels, 2 Cor. 4, 7. That the excellency of that power might be of God, and not of us. Would it not argue an intolerable daintiness and niceness of a wanton stomach to refuse good & wholesome meat, because it is brought in platters of pewter, or dishes of wood, not in vessels of silver or gold? So is it an evident argument of loathing the heavenly Manna, when we have the precious word of God in respect of persons; and hear it not for the words sake, but according as we fancy and affect the teacher, verifying the saying of Solomon, Prov. 27.7. The person that is full despiseth an honey comb, but unto the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet. This serveth to reprove those which come to the hearing of the word, as to an ordinary matter, and never have any thought or meditation of God's presence to keep them in awe, but come to hear some news, or some new man; & use the practice of the Jews condemned by the Prophet Ezekiel, chap. 33.31.32. They come unto thee as the people useth to come: my people sit before thee and hear thy words, but they will not do them, for with their mouths they make jests, &c.

[Use 2] Secondly, this serveth to condemn all abuses, unseemly gestures, and irreverent behavior when we come into the house of God. True it is, the devil (if he can prevail) will keep us from hearing the word, and suggest unto us matter of profit or pleasure, to stop & stay us from resorting unto the place of God's worship: but if he cannot so far obtain his purpose, he will go with us, and accompany us thither. When we are nearest to that which should do us good, and further our salvation, Math. 13, 19, he is ready at our elbow, to hinder the word, and to work our destruction. Hence it is, that many are present in body, that are absent in mind, forgetting that they have to do with God, and with the means of their sanctification. They have their hearts wandering about worldly matters, they find no joy, they feel no delight, they taste no sweetness, they perceive no comfort nor gladness wrought in them in these exercises of their faith; but they are rather a burden unto them, and take them as a weight and weariness lying heavy upon them. Many come for custom of the time, for fashion of others, and for fear of punishment: whereas, if they might be left free to themselves, and to the liberty of their own will; they could find in their hearts not to pray at all, not to hear at all; not to partake the Sacraments at all; yea to break out into open blasphemy, and say with the Atheists and ungodly men, Job 21.15. Who is the Almighty that we should serve him, and what profit have we if we should pray unto him? Many are carried away with dullness and heaviness of body & mind; an ordinary and dangerous abuse, hindering the saving knowledge of the Gospel. This is a subtle slight and suggestion of Satan, whereof many complain, but few strive against, and therefore spend the greatest time allotted and allowed for hearing the word, in drowsiness and sleeping: and whereas they should raise and rouse up themselves, they hang down these heads, and lay them on their seats, and frame themselves to snort and sleep, rather than to hear and attend. An unfit and very unseemly gesture for so high an work.

If thou shouldst so behave thyself to thy father or Prince speaking unto thee, would they not take themselves ••e abused at thy hands? Balaam chargeth Balak to rise up and hear, but these lie along vnciuilly, or turn their backs vndecently, or lay them down unreverantly, contrary to the religious practice of the people, when Christ preached at Nazareth on the Sabba•th day, Luke 4, 20. The eyes of all that were in the Synagogue were fastened on him. Many are talking and speaking to others, when they should hear God speak and talk unto them: they remove out of their places to place others, and bring them in their s••tes.

True it is, kindness and courtesy are commendable virtues. But it is cursed courtesy which is so dearly bought, even with the loss of rhe least sentence and saying of the word of God. Others are reading in the Church, and bring with them books besides the Scriptures, peradventure of prayers or sermons, or such like godly treatises, (if not of unprofitable matters) in them they exercise themselves, & spend the time; whereas they should hearken to help their instruction, and not read to hinder their attention. But do you condemn reading, will some say? Is it not a good and godly exercise? Do not men rather need to be encouraged, then discouraged from that duty? I answer, that reading is not to be condemned, and no man ought to be discouraged from reading. We do not reprove the work done, but the time wherein it is done. A good thing done in season is twice done. A thing done out of season is evilly done. To all things there is an appointed time, and a time to every purpose under the heaven; there is a time to keep silence, and a time to speak; there is a time to read, and a time to hear; a time to pray, and a time to receive the Sacraments. To pray by our selves, or read by our selves, whē we should hear together with others in the Congregation, or to exercise the tongue whē we should use the ear, or to speak to God, when we should hear him speaking unto us, cannot stand with the general rules of Scripture, appointed to direct us in our public assemblies, Let all things be done to edifying Let all things be done honestly, and in order, 1 Cor. 14, 5, 40. The Apostle reproveth the disorders crept into the Lord's Supper, that when they should eat the Lord's Supper, every man took his own supper afore, and tarried not for his brethren, whereby it came to pass, that some were hungry, and others full, saith; Have ye not houses to eat and drink in? Despise ye the Church of God, and shame them that have not? 1. Cor. 11, 21, 22. Where he doth not simply condemn eating and drinking, (no more then Christ, when he whipped out of the Temple, such as made the house of prayer a den of thieves condemned buying and selling) but using them at an unfit time. Thus we see how it standeth us all upon, to beware & take heed of all abuses, that take away reverence & hinder attention, to the end we may with meekness receive the word engrafted in us, that is able to save our fowls.

[Use 3] Thirdly, this duty directeth us unto another duty, namely, to prepare our selves before we come, ordning the affections of our minds, and disposing the powers of our souls in such sort, that they may be fitted and furnished for that work. When the people of Israel were to receive the Law on Mount Sinai, they sanctified themselves, & purged their conscience from dead works. The Apostle having set down the institution of the Lord's Supper to the Corinthians, and taught them, that unworthy receivers eat to themselves judgment, and make themselves guilty of the body and blood of Christ, willeth them to examine themselves, and so eat of this bread, & drink of this cup, 1 Cor. 11, 28, 29, and not to come hand over head in profane manner.

Now to this preparation, sundry things are required. First, we must bring with us diligence, to mark earnestly, and observe carefully the word of God delivered, which availeth and aduantageth us much for profiting thereby in knowledge and obedience. Diligence maketh a rough way, plain; bitter things, sweet; and hard things, easy. This Solomon prescribeth to the sons of God, Prov. 2, 1, 2, 3, 4. My son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments within thee, and cause thine heart to hearken unto wisdom, & incline thine heart to understanding, if thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for treasures, then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, & find the knowledge of God. This Christ commandeth, John 5, 39. This also the Apostle requireth, I am. chap. 1, verse 19. We must use labor and industry, not upon some sudden motion and pang, nor by reason of some good company only, or for fear of danger, but in a continual course & earnest manner, as worldlings use to take pains to attain treasure and riches, inasmuch as the heavenly treasures of a better life, do far surpass all earthly riches that carnal men make their greatest happiness. We see how artificers and handy-crafts men follow their Trades, who rise early and sit up late, who labor night and day, who endure cold and heat to earn a little of this worlds good: but where shall we find that Christian, who so eagerly and earnestly followeth after the kingdom of God and his righteousness? Behold how Merchants compass Sea and Land, and sail to the furthest parts of the world, with danger of their lives, to get the goods of the earth. But greater is the gain of godliness and heavenly wisdom, and therefore we should redeem the time, to procure it, and sell all that we have of our own, to purchase it. Mat. 13, 44, 45.

Secondly, we must be touched with the fear and dread of God's Majesty; for fear engendereth teachableness, meekness, & humbleness of mind, & is the beginning of wisdom, Pro. 1, 7. This is so necessary a work, that GOD evermore wrought it in his servants, before he revealed himself unto them. Thus he dealt with Abraham, Gen. 15, 12. when he made a fearful darkness fall upon him. Thus he dealt with Iacob, Gen 28. He was afraid, and said, How fearful is this place! This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven. Thus he dealt with the Israelites and with Moses himself, at the delivering of the Law, and entering into covenant with them. Thus he dealt with Paul at his conversion to the faith, which before he destroyed; there shined suddenly a light round about him from heaven, Acts 9, 4.6. Whereat he fell to the earth, trembling in body, & astonished in mind, and troubled in conscience. Thus he dealt with the Apostle John, when he saw a vision of Christ, Revel. 1, 17, he fell at his feet as dead. The want of this reverent fear, lifteth us up against God, & causeth us oftentimes to check the word, & to be bold to controule it, y^t we cannot suffer our selves to be checked & controlled by it. This fear ariseth in our hearts, and is wrought partly by the consideration of God's Majesty, and partly by the meditation of our own infirmity, and serveth to correct our natural pride, and to redress our corrupt affections. Thirdly, we must bring with us faith in Christ, and believe in the promise and word of God, that it is infallible; as Heb. 4, 2. Unto us was the Gospel preached as unto thē: but the word that they heard, profited them not, because it was not mixed with faith in those that heard it. This is that gift of God that purifieth the heart, boreth the ear, and maketh the way for other graces to follow. Lastly, if we would hear with profit, we must have good and honest hearts, sanctified unto every good work. This our Savior showeth in expounding the Parable of the Sower, That which fell in good ground, are they which with an honest and good heart, hear the word and keep it, & bring forth fruit with patience, Luk. 81, 5. This the apostle James to the same purpose, (who charging us to be swift to hear, & slow to speak,) addeth, Wherefore lay apart all filthiness & superfluity of maliciousness, and receive with meekness the word that is grafted in you, I am. 1, 21. The want of this preparation maketh so many unprofitable and fruitless hearers. No man is so simple and sottish to sow his seed & cast away his Corn, upon ground vnploughed & untilled. Shall we have this knowledge & understanding in earthly things, and shall we discern nothing in heavenly things, but suffer the immortal seed of the word to vanish away thorough want of due preparation? Hence it is, that the Prophet exhorteth to break up our fallow ground, and not sow among the Thorns; to be circumcised to the Lord, and to take away the fore-skins of our hearts, lest the wrath of God come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, Ier. 4, 4.

[Use 4] Fourthly, it serveth to guide and direct the Ministers of the Gospel, to speak the word with all reverence, as the Ambassadors of God, that our preaching be with power and authority, and so minister grace unto the hearers, to the end they may think of us, as of the Ministers of Christ, and disposers of the secrets of God. For how shall the people hear it with reverence, if we be not careful to deliver it with reverence as the word of our master that sent us? Hereunto cometh the exhortation of the Apostle Paul, 2 Tim. 2, 15. And the Apostle Peter speaketh to the same purpose, 1 Pet. 4, 11. Now that this gracious delivery of the word may be retained, some things are to be observed in the very action. Touching the fitting and preparing of our selves to the work of the Ministry, that we may preach with fruit, and speak with comfort, it is necessarily required of us to use prayer, reading, study, meditation, and such like helps, as may further us in our calling. For albeit we have wits quick to conceive, memories firm to retain, and tongues ready to utter, yet we must not abuse these excellent gifts to ydlenesse or vain-glory, but when we have done all that we can, account all our pains and labors too little, saying with the Apostle, Who is sufficient for these things? 2. Cor. chap. 2, verse 16. The Prophets and Apostles of Christ were endued with extraordinary gifts, and had a plentiful measure of knowledge given unto them, yet they ceased not to study the Scriptures. Peter pronounceth of them all, that They took great pains in their Prophecies, the Prophets inquired and searched diligently the things that concern the salvation of the Church, 1 Pet. 1, 10. Peter read the Epistles of Paul, 2 Pet. 2, 16, and Daniel the Prophecies of Jeremiah, Dan. 9, 2. Paul received the Doctrine of the Gospel by revelation, was taken up into Paradise, and heard words which himself durst not express, and the Saints were not able to conceive: he was ready to lay down his life, & saw himself at deaths door, yet he had a desire still to profit, as appeareth in that he willeth Timothy to bring the Books and Parchments with him, when he came unto him. Wherefore it beseemeth not y^e weightiness of the work which we handle, nor the presence of the people to whom we speak, nor the reverence of the place wherein we stand, nor the worthiness of the person whom we represent, to step up suddenly to stand in the stead and room of God, like horses that run away with an empty Cart, and set forward in the way before they have their load. No man dareth to speak of Princes affairs before Princes, with levity: no man dareth give sentence of life and death rashly. The Minister speaketh of Christ, before God and Angels. He setteth before his hearers, life and death, heaven and hell, and pronounceth the sentence of salvation or damnation upon thē, as Moses testifieth, Deut. 11, 26, 27, 28. Behold, I set before you this day, a blessing & a curse: the blessing, if ye obey the Commandments of the Lord your God; and the curse, if ye will not obey. Thus much for the preparation: In the action it self, we must use all seemly and decent behavior: comely and reverent gestures of the body, have always a sober look and modest countenance, that it may appear to others, that we are inwardly moved and touched our selves with that we speak. We must utter gracious words, to work godly edifying in the spirit, not ridiculous iestes to procure laughter. We must lay aside the perswasible words of human wisdom. We must not relate stories, and tell merry tales to fill up the time, and to make our auditors merry. We must avoid all light gestures, that may bring our Ministry into contempt. Many use in their teaching, casting abroad of their arms, knocking of the Pulpit, lifting themselves up, and immediately sinking down, hemming in the throat, rolling of the eyes, rubbing of the brows, nodding of the head, stamping with the feet, turning every way with the body, snuffing with their nose, fiddling with the fingers, tuning with the voice, as if they were acting their part upon the stage, or as if they were Fencers playing their Prizes. These and such like abuses we must labor to reform, by using advised deliberation in our selves, & observing what is comely or uncomely, what is decent or defective in others. The world is full of carpers and scoffers. Many will sooner mark what behavior is amiss in us, then what doctrine we deliver, or what is amiss in their own lives. When Jacob sell sick of his sickness, whereof he died, he gathered his sons together, to give them instruction before his death, and not being able through weakness to stand on his feet, he raised up himself in his bed, and leaned on his staff, that he might show reverence unto the word that he pronounced, Gen. 47, 31, and 49, 33. The like we see in David, he stood upon his feet, to give honor to the word, 2 Chron. 2. To conclude this point, as we have occasions offered unto us to speak of God, of his judgments, or mercies, of sin against God, of the calamities of others, we must always remember to speak of the person of God with reverence; of the judgments of God, with fear; of the promises of God, and comforts of his word, with cheerfulness; of sin against God, with hatred and detestation; of other men's miseries, with feeling and compassion. Thus we shall become most profitable Teachers, and thus we shall be as wise Scribes taught unto the kingdom of heaven, which bring forth out of their treasure, things both new and old, Math. 13, 52.

Lastly, we learn from hence, not to forsake [Use 5] the exercises of religion, for the wickedness or unworthiness of the Ministers. Who was it that prophesied in the Name of God in this place? was it not Balaam, a lewd liver, a cursed Idolater, a devilish Sorcerer? And yet Balak is commanded to rise up out of his throne, & to hearken unto him with all attention. It standeth us upon more to regard the matter, then the speaker, and to mark what is delivered, then the person that doth deliver it. The Pharisees in the days of Christ were lewd livers, and many of them of other Tribes then of Levi; yet so long as they sate in Moses chair, the Disciples are commanded to hear them, and to observe whatsoever they commanded. We must discern and distinguish the life of the Ministers from their Doctrine. As we are not to receive their doctrine for their good life, so we are not to reject it for their evil life. Therefore the Apostle saith, Some preach Christ through envy and strife, and some also of good will. What then? Yet Christ is preached all manner ways, whether it be under a pretence, or sincerely, I therein rejoice, yea, and will rejoice, Phil. 1, 15, 18. Although he were sorry that the Gospel was preached by such men, yet he was glad it was preached. This serveth to reprove those that will not hear scandalous Ministers, nor receive the Sacraments at the hands of ignorant Ministers, Who have itching ears, and after their own lusts get them an heap of Teachers, 2. Tim. 4, 3. Who are ever learning, and are never able to come to the acknowledging of the truth, 2. Tim. 3, 7. Evil Ministers of corrupt life, may deliver the good things of God. So long as they preach the word of God truly, and administer the sacraments sincerely, according to the ordinance of Christ, the wickedness of their persons cleaveth to themselves. If a Prince should send us a message, or offer us some present by the hands of some messenger that were an evil man, would we reject them for the fault of the person, or accept them as the favor of the Prince? So should it be with us, when God's word is preached, and his sacraments administered: we must hearken what it is that is preached, consider what it is that is delivered. If it be of God, we cannot refuse it, lest we be found contemners of his ordinances. The people of Israel abhorred the sacrifices of God, for the profane life of the Priests, but judgment is denounced against them for their contempt.

[Verse 19. God is not as man, that he should lie, neither as the son of man, that he should repent, &c.] Hitherto we have spoken of the entrance of this second Prophecy: now we come to the Prophecy it self. Hitherto in the nature of God, is described and expressed unto us, that he is constant in his merciful promises toward his Church, with whom is no variableness, nor shadow of turning. This is one of the names and essential properties of God, whereby he is known to be God, who is unchangeably good, unchangeably holy, unchangeably just and merciful, and is found firm and faithful in all his promises. Against this it may be objected, [Object.] that he is oftentimes said in the Scriptures to have repented, as Gen. 6, 6, 7. 1 Sam. 15, 11. Jonah 3, 9. How then can God be said to be immutable & unchangeable? I answer, [Answer.] the Scripture speaketh of God two ways; sometimes properly, and then he is said to be unchangeable, no variableness to be in him, and that he cannot repent, as 1 Sam. 15. The strength of Israel will not lie nor repent: for he is not a man that he should repent. Sometimes improperly and figuratively for our capacity, and because of our weakness, not otherwise being able to conceive of the high things of God. Hence it is, that we read of the eyes, ears, hands, arms, the heart of God, and such like. Not that these parts and members are in God, who is a Spirit invisible and infinite. But because we cannot understand how one should see without eyes, or hear without ears, or show strength without arms, these parts are given to God, to teach us that he seeth all things, he heareth all things, he worketh all things in Heaven and earth, as pleaseth him. Thus is God set sometime before us, as it were turned and transfigured into our nature, and (as one said) He hath not these things by nature, but by effect. The change is not in GOD, but in his work. Repentance in him is no perturbation or grief, he knoweth all things, and is ignorant of nothing. When he is said to repent that he made man, the meaning is, he determined to destroy him whom before he had created. When he is said to repent of making Saul King, the meaning is, he determined to take the kingdom from him, to whom before he had assigned it, and whom he caused to be anointed. So then, we have here in this attribute, a testimony of the constancy of God.

From hence we learn, that God is vnchangable, infallible, faithful, & true in all his ways, words, and works. His decrees are immutable and irrevocable, and without show or shadow of turning. This is that which the Lord claimeth and challengeth to himself, I am the Lord: I change not: I am God, and there is none other God, there is nothing like me. My counsel shall stand, and I will do whatsoever I will. So the Prophet speaketh in the Psalm 105, 7, 8, 10. He is the Lord our God, his judgments are thorough all the earth: he hath always remembered his covenant and promise that he made to a thousand generations, and since hath confirmed it to Jacob for a Law, and to Israel for an everlasting Covenant. To this purpose the Apostle saith, The gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom. 11, 29. By all these places we see this truth plainly proved unto us, that God is unchangeable in his mercy and goodness toward his Church and Children.

[Reason 1] The Reasons follow to be considered. First, he is not like unto man, his ways are not like man's ways, nor his thoughts like unto man's thoughts: but as far as Heaven is distant from the Earth, so far are the works of God from ours. We know by experience y^e changeable nature of man, of whom the Scripture saith, All men are liars, Psal. 116, 11. He is ready to say and unsay, to affirm and deny with one breath. He is constant today, he changeth tomorrow. He loveth one day, and hateth another. The people that received Christ with great joy when he rode to Jerusalem, not long after cried out, Crucify him, crucify him. It is not so with God, whose mercy endureth forever, he falsifieth not his truth, neither alreth the thing that is gone out of his mouth, He giveth liberally unto all, and reproacheth no man.

[Reason 2] Secondly, his love and mercy to his people is not changeable as the Moon, unconstant as the wind, floating as the sea, uncertain as the weather, but stable as the earth that cannot be moved out of his place, and steadfast as Mount Zion that remaineth forever. This will plainly appear unto us, if we consider the similitudes and comparisons whereby it is expressed. His love is like to the Covenant of waters, & as sure as the promise that he made to Noah, that the waters should no more overflow the whole earth, as the Prophet Isaiah teacheth, chap. 54, 7, 8, 9.

[Reason 3] Again, his goodness is as the ordinance of God, that hath set an order for Summer & Winter, for day and night, for seed-time and harvest, for cold and heat, which shall not be changed, therefore the Lord saith by his Prophet, If thou can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, that there should not be day and night in their season, then may my covenant be broken with David my servant. Ier. 31, 35, and 33, 20. Nay, his mercy is said to be more stable then the Mountains; for they shall remove, and the hills shall fall down, but my mercy shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace fall away, saith the Lord, that hath cōpassion on thee, Isaiah 54, 10. We see the love of mothers is tender & full of pity toward their children, who bare thē in her womb, brought them into the world, nourished them with her breasts, and refused no base service for their good; yet the Lord saith, Can a woman forget her child, and not have compassion on the son of her womb? Though they forget, yet will not I forget thee, Isaiah 49, 15. Seeing therefore, that God is not like to the sons of men, and seeing his loving kindness is firmer then the waters of Noah, surer then the covenant of the day, faster then the foundation of the Mountains, and stronger thē the love of mothers toward their children, we may conclude, that the stablenes of his counsels are as the Pillars of the earth, that cannot be shaken, and the changeablenes of his goodness, as the standing Rocks that cannot be removed.

Now let us come to the uses of this Doctrine. [Use 1] First, hereby we learn, that God is to be preferred before all creatures. They are changeable and subject to alteration, which agreeth not with the nature of God. True it is, God hath highly honored and advanced man above the rest of the works of his hands, he made him a little inferior to the Angels, & crowned him with glory & dignity, Ps. 8, 5, he hath made him Ruler over the earth, & put all things in subjection under his feet; yet he is subject to mutability and mortality, and must return unto the earth, out of which he was taken. Great is the excellency of the heavens and the stars, yet they shall be changed & delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. But with God is no change, neither any alteration with the Almighty, who remaineth one & the same forever. This difference between the Creator and the creature, between God, and the works of God, the Prophet teacheth; Thou Lord hast in the beginning established the Earth, & the Heavens are the works of thine hands, They shall perish, but thou shalt remain, and they all shall wax old as doth a garment, and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed: but thou art the same, & thy years shall not fail. Thus we must magnify the Lord above all creatures that are weak and frail, and acknowledge a great difference between the infinite and incomprehensible Majesty of God, subject to no change at all, but remaining the same forever; and the creatures of God, subject to vanity & misery.

[Use 2] Secondly, we may from hence assure our selves, that God will make us unchangeable like himself, and we may rejoice in the comfort of this his favor. For seeing his nature is unchangeable, and altereth not, he will make us in our measure partakers of immortality, when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, this weak shall put on power, and death be swallowed up in victory, we shall be like the Angels of God; nay, be transformed into the lively Image of God, to reign with him in everlasting glory. This is a great comfort unto us in these days of sorrow, to consider that the time will come, when our state shall be changed, and we continue forever without change. Here we are subject to many turnings and returnings, but after this life shall be no more place for changing: our happiness shall be unchangeable, and firmly established with God. This the Prophet sets down, Psal. 16, 12. In thy presence is fullness of joy, at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore. This the Apostle confirmeth, describing the second coming of Christ to judgment, The dead in Christ shall rise, and we which live and remain, shall be caught up with them in the Clouds, so shall we ever be with the Lord. 1 Thess. 4, 17. This circumstance serveth to commend the happiness of y^e godly, in that after they have once made an entrance into it, & taken possession of that heavenly inheritance, they shall never have experience of any change, nor find any ende or intermission of euerl•sting glory. When we shall lay down this earthly tabernacle, & be clothed with immortality, we shall taste of a better condition then ever Adam had in his greatest felicity. True it is, Adam in his innocence had a glorious estate, and he was created in the Image of God, according to his likeness; yet withal he was made mutable & changeable, as we see by the event, for he fell from all his glory, so that the excellency of his dignity, and the excellency of his power were lost, and turned into weakness and misery: but so many as shall reign in the kingdom of heaven, shall live forever, & be unchangeable, they shall never fall away, but shall be unmovable. So then hereby we see to our endless comfort and consolation, that so many as be true members of Christ, have mortified the corruptions of the old man, to bring forth the fruits of a sanctified life, have lost nothing by the fall of Adam, but shall recover a more excellent estate in Christ, then ever they lost in Adam, so that our loss is turned to be gain and advantage unto us.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it teacheth that it is time for us to repent and turn unto God. Every soul that will escape the wrath of God, and be partaker of his mercies, must be fashioned anew & framed to please God, sanctifying his heart, and changing his will to be agreeable to the will of God. For God will never apply himself to us, nor alter that which is already gone out of his mouth. Many in this life take a privilege unto themselves by reason of their high places, riches, friends, & other outward respects, to sin against God, and claim a toleration and qualification to be borne withal above others. But with the Lord there is no partiality to be found, but being a most constant God in all his doings, he observeth one rule & way with all he regardeth no man's person or persons, nor accepteth any gift or reward; he favoureth the Prince no more then the Subject, the honorable no more thē the base of birth, the rich no more then the beggar, but dealeth with all sorts of men and women, according to that which he hath already in justice and righteousness determined in his word, that is, To them which are contentious, and disobey the truth, he sendeth indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul that doth evil, the Jew first, and then the Gentile; but unto those that continue through patience in well doing, he giveth glory and honor, &c. Rom. chap. 2, ver. 8. This admonisheth us, that we deceive not our selves in hoping for another manner of dealing from God, then he hath already manifested in his word. It is a common practice in the world, when we are admonished of any duty, or reprov'd of any sin, and hear the penalty thereof denounced out of the word, to answer, We hope it is not so hard as you would bear us in hand, we trust God will disspence with us if we do no worse, there are few or none but offend in as great matters as these. And thus, although not plainly and peremptorily, yet in very deed we do as much as if we accused God to be a liar, to be inconstant and deceiveable, and his word to be a counterfeit word, which notwithstanding is said to be like unto silver, which is seven times tried in the fire. It hath no dross or deceit in it, it hath never failed or beguiled any. An unchangeable God, an unchangeable word. Let us be transformed into the obedience of it. It is not a leaden rule to bend every way to us. All our ways must be brought and framed unto it. And when once we are turned to God, let us not return back again to our old ways, but persevere and continue constant unto the end. The unchangeable God requireth an unchangeable servant. As he is everlasting and eternal, so he requireth faith and obedience to remain and endure with us to the last breath.

Lastly, herein is great comfort offered to [Use 4] the seruan s of GOD, as on the other side, horror to the wicked and disobedient. For seeing GOD is immutable, the same now which he hath been heretofore, and so is to continue forever, we may from hence take strong consolation by former examples of God's dealing toward his dearest children, and in all temptations and trials build our selves upon that blessed experience, as upon a sure foundation that can never fall or fail us. As God hath heretofore never forsaken those that trusted in him, rested and relied upon him, but loved those forever, whom he loved once, preserved and defended the godly from the rage of their enemies, his gifts toward them being without repentance: so will he continue unto the end of the world; and therefore David saith, that in his experience he never saw the righteous forsaken, Psal. 37, 25. And our Savior saith in the Prophet, that They are Plants, planted by God, that shall never be plucked up. Isaiah 61, 3. Thus the Apostle teacheth, that The foundation of God standeth sure, and hath this seal, The Lord knoweth who are his, 2 Tim. 2, 19. We have heard of the patience of Job, and know what end the Lord made, Job 5, 11, albeit he did try him, yet he did not destroy him, albeit he did afflict him, yet he did not leave him, Many have been the troubles of the righteous, yet the Lord delivereth them out of them all, Psal. 34, 19. They have been stoned, they were hewn asunder, they were tempted, they were slain with the sword, they wandered up and down in sheep-skins, and in goats skins, being destitute, afflicted, & tormented, Heb. 11, 37, yet he evermore succored them in their temptations, so that they became more then Conquerors through him that loved them, and were made able to comfort others. His right hand is not shortened, he is ever the same, yesterday, and today, and abideth like himself forever. He will deal with us, as he hath dealt with them. He will show himself toward his children in these days, as he shown himself toward our fathers in former times. He doth not show himself to be one God in our age, another God in another age: but in all ages and generations he is one & the same to his people, to our endless comfort and consolation. And as this ought to be effectual, to stay us in our obedience, because God will continue the same God of mercy and truth unto us, without alteration, which he was to Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, and all the faithful, so highly renowned and greatly commended in the Scriptures: so it must serve to be a bridle in the jaws of the ungodly and profane wretches of the world, that as he hath plagued, consumed, and thrown down into the bottomless pit of hell, the wicked heretofore that rebelled against him, and resisted his will; so he is unchangeable in Name and Nature, and therefore he will do the same to them now, and to as many as shall walk in their steps forever. This we may see to be a plain case in the righteousness of God, Eccl. 8, 12, 13. Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and God prolongeth his days, yet I know it shall be well with them that feare the Lord, and do reverence before him: but it shall not be well to the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, he shall be like a shadow, because he feareth not before God. And the Apostle Jude in his Epistle, alledgeth and applieth the examples of God's vengeance vpon the wicked past, to those present, and to come; showing, that if God spared not the Angels that had sinned, but cast them down into hell, and delivered them unto chains of darkness, to be kept unto damnation: neither spared the old world, but brought in the flood upon the ungodly, &c. Let us remember, that we shall find God the same toward us forever, & never presume that he can or will be changed now from that which he hath been heretofore toward others.

[Verse 21. He seeth not iniquity in Jacob, he beholdeth not transgression in Israel.] Hitherto we have spoken of the vnchangeableness of God's love toward his Church. Now let us see the reasons of it, both in spiritual things, and then in temporal. The chiefest privilege of the Church, standeth in the fruition and enjoying of spiritual blessings. Among all spiritual blessings, this is one of the chiefest, Remission of sins. This is expressed by this phrase, that God seeth not sin in them, that is, he forgiveth their iniquity, and imputeth not sin unto them. To the same purpose the Prophet saith, Our sins are covered, Psalm. 32, verse 1.

These may seem at the first, strange speeches and phrases. For shall not he that made the eye, see? Psalm 94. Shall not he that made the ear, hear? He that made the heart, shall not he understand and know the secrets of the heart? Are not all things naked and open before him? or can any hide himself from his presence, and wind himself from his providence? The meaning is not, that God doth not behold them, but it is a borrowed speech from the custom of men, which lay away those things out of sight, which they do not use, or would not remember: so that he doth not see them when he doth not punish them, he covereth them when he doth pardon them, and account them as if they were never committed. So Hezekiah saith, Esa. 38, 17. God had cast his sins behind his back. Thus the Prophet speaketh, Isaiah 1, 18. Though your sins were as Crimson, they shall be made white as Snow: though they were red as Scarlet, they shall be as wool. And chap. 44, 22. I have put away thy transgressions like a Cloud, and thy sins as a Mist, So the Prophet Micah saith, chap. 7, 19. He will turn again and have compassion upon us: he will subdue our iniquities, and cast all their sins into the bottom of the sea. From all these Testimonies we learn this truth, That to every true member [Doctrine] of the Church, belongeth the forgiveness of all their sins. It is a peculiar privilege of the faithful for the merits and righteousness of Christ, to have their sins forgiven, whereby it cometh to pass, that God esteemeth of sin as no sin, and of iniquity, as if it had never been committed.

Here then we have offered to our considerations, a principal and fundamental point of our Christian Religion, and of the holy faith, That all our sins, wants, and impections, original, and actual, as well in the committing of evil, as in omitting of good, in thought, word, & deed, are covered, healed, and released thorough the righteousness of Christ imputed unto us: which being apprehended by faith, and applied unto us, doth not only make them as if they had never been, but also justify & discharge us, causing us to appear blameless and spotless in the sight of God. Thus God proclaimeth him self to be a most gracious and merciful God, readily inclined to forgive sins, Exod. 34, 6, 7. Isaiah 33, 24. and 43, 25. Ier. 31, 31, 32. and 33, 8.

[Reason 1] And this truth, to wit, that justification stãdeath in the remission of sins, through the satisfaction of Christ, is confirmed unto us by sundry reasons out of the word of GOD. For first we must appear as just and perfect in God's sight, either by the imputatiõ of Christ's righteousness, or by the merit of our own works; there is no third way can be devised. This is a full distribution of causes, as appeareth by the Apostle, speaking of the election and calling of the Jews, Rom. 11, 6. If it be of grace, it is no more of works, or else were grace no more grace: but if it be of works, it is no more grace, or else were work no more work. Thus we see he maketh an opposition between the grace of God, and the works of men. But no works can justify us, neither of congruity, nor condignity; neither of nature nor of grace wrought in us by the spirit of God, but by God's acceptation of the intercession and merits of his own Son. This the Apostle witnesseth, Rom. 3, 20. Gal. 3, 6. By the works of the Law shall no flesh be justified in his sight. And in another place, I count all things but loss for the excellent knowledge sake of Christ Jesus my Lord, that I might be found in him, not having mine own righteousness which is of the Law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, even the righteousness which is of God through faith, Phil. 3, 7, 8, 9.

[Reason 2] Secondly, whatsoever giveth the creature cause of boasting, and robbeth God of his glory, may not be admitted, and cannot be accepted in the work of our justification. But all things saving the righteousness of Christ, minister to us matter of boasting, & deprive God of the honor and glory due to his name. This the Apostle teacheth in sundry places, Rom. 4, 2. If Abraham were justified by works, he hath wherein to rejoice, but not with God. By grace are ye saved thorough faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast himself. So then, our justification standeth not in our good works, but in that God pardoneth our evil works. For we have all been as an unclean thing, And all our righteousness is as filthy clouts, Isaiah ch. 64. ver. 6.

[Use 1] Now, let us make use of this doctrine. First, this ministereth great comfort to the faithful that are in Christ. The glory and happiness of our souls and bodies in this life, & in the life to come consisteth herein. The forgiveness of sins comprehendeth under it, as it were in a short sum, all the mercies of God. This is it which the Prophet Isaiah teacheth, chap 40, 1. So David declareth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works, saying, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered: blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth not his sin, Psal. 32, 1, 2, 7. This mercy of God will be sweet unto us, and cheer up our hearts with unspeakable comfort, and give us joy in the holy Ghost, if we consider these circumstances, that we daily offend God after our new birth, that all sin is odious in it self, and maketh us vile and abominable in the sight of God, keeping all good things from us, and pulling down all evil upon us, and that the wages thereof is death, being able to press us down to the very bottom of the gulf of hell, Ier. 5, 25. Isaiah 59, 1, 2, 3. If a man had all the skill of wise Solomon, to speak as he did of the nature of beasts, of birds, and creeping things, & knew the virtues of all trees and plants, from the Cedar that is in Libanus, unto the Hyssop that springeth out of the wall, and were ignorant of this blessed privilege, and had not the comfortable assurance of it in his conscience, it could not avail or profit him one whit. It might peradventure delight the outward man for a season, but wanting the sweet feeling of God's favor in washing away his sins, the other can be but vanity and vexation of spirit. If a man were able to measure the heavens, & to tell the order, height, distances, influences, and number of the stars, and yet be ignorant at home, and do not know what is done, as it were within his own house, and within the doors and clossets of his own heart, what should it profit him thus to gaze up into heaven, when the burden of sin is ready to thrust him down to hell? If a man were so excellent and expert, as out of the knowledge of herbs and Simples to remedy all the diseases of the body, yet if he be not able to salve the sores of his soul & know not how the sicknesses and infirmities thereof shall be cured, this can be little comfort to him; for then he may have a sound body, but an infected soul; an healthy body, but a sickly soul, full of the botches and blemishes of sin, which of all diseases is most dangerous and deadly. If a man had the knowledge of all laws, and statutes, and were able to decide any controversy, and end any suite between man & man, yet is not assured how himself shall be acquitted, when the Judge of all the world shall come and hold his Assizes, and how things shall stand with him: it can bring no peace unto him, seeing God hath a controversy against him so long as his sins are unpardoned Hos. 4, 1. What shall it profit a man to be passing well seen in music, by voice or instrument, to be skilful in reports and descant, and be always troubled with a iarring conscience? Last of all, what shall it avail, if a man understood all Arts and Mysteries, if he could work miracles, and speak with the tongues of men and Angels, if he knew all sciences and secrets of nature, yet were ignorant of the forgiveness of his sins, and of the grace of Christ? whom only if we know, the matter is not great if we know nothing else: whom if we know not, it is worth nothing if we know all things in the world beside.

[Use 2] Secondly, woeful is their estate that are not of the Church, that are not in Christ, that are without true faith and feeling of this heavenly doctrine. Wretched and miserable is the condition of many thousands in the world, w^c want this assurance; it is such a burden as •tayeth us from the heavens, and weigheth us •own to hell. Pouerty is a great burden, the •word, famine, pestilence, imprisonment, sickness, oppression, and such crosses are indeed •eavy burdens; but the burden of sin sur•ounteth them all. Therefore the Prophet •aith Psal. 38, 4. Mine iniquities are gone over mine head, and as weighty burdens they are too heavy. Hence it is that the Apostle exhorteth us, Heb. 12, 1, to cast off everything that presseth down, and the sin that hangeth so fast on, that so we may run with patience the race that is set before us. So heavy it was on the Angels that kept not their first estate, That it cast them down to hell, and they are reserved in chains unto the judgment of the great day, 2 Pet. 2, 4. So heavy it was upon the shoulders of Dathan and Abiram, that the earth was not able to hold them, but received them to destruction. Yea, it is so intolerable a burden, as it bringeth terrors and horrors that cannot be expressed, and leadeth to the gulf of desperation, when God chargeth the conscience with sin: so that though a man had all riches and honors, all pleasures and delights, all kingdoms and glory of the world, what joy or comfort can he feel in these things, so long as he is not at peace with his God? Contrarywise, he that is eased of this weight, & lightened of this burden, though he have all the troubles, crosses, and afflictions of Job, be laid in fetters with Joseph, be banished his country with Moses, be cast to the Lions with Daniel, he put in the stocks with Jeremiah, be fed with bread of affliction with Micaiah, and have no more comfort and compassion shown unto him then the poor beggar in the Gospel to have the dogs lick his sores, though his estate be vile, contemptible, and miserable to the world: yet so long as he hath a discharge of his debt, a pardon of his sin, & a cancelling of the bill of enditement drawn against him, written in his heart, and feels that peace of conscience which passeth all understanding, sealing him up to the day of redemption; this man before God is most happy and blessed forever. But if sin be imputed unto us, and God enter into judgment with us, Who shall be able to stand before him, or be righteous in his sight? Psal. 130, 3. & 143, 2. This feeling of sin and wound of conscience, which y^e stroke of God's hand hath made, will weary the strongest and lustiest man that liveth, when he shall open the eye to see, and the heart to feel the horror thereof, together with the heaviness of his wrath & indignation for the same. This made Cain to speak desperately, My punishment is greater then I can bear, Gen. 4, 13. This made Judas to do desperately, when he wrought his own destruction, and hanged himself, Mat. 27.5. This made David to say, If thou Lord straitly markest iniquities, who is he that shall be able to endure thy judgment? They then are grossly deceived, and most unhappy, who think happiness to consist in committing of sins with all greediness. These are in the number of those fools (howsoever worldly wise) that make a mock of sin, Prov. 14, 9, 12, 13. There is a way that seemeth right to a man, but the issues thereof are the ways of death: even in laughing the heart is sorrowful, and the end of that mirth is heaviness. The world hath always been full of such fools, but if they depart hence without the feeling of God's favor in the forgiveness of their offenses, it had been good for them that they had been brute beasts, or that they had never been borne, as it is said of Judas, Math. 26, 24. No unclean thing shall enter into the kingdom of heaven. Such as have not their sins pardoned, have no part in Christ. Out of Christ there is no salvation, nor unto such any imputation of his righteousness. Sin shutteth up the way that leadeth unto life, it separateth us from God and his Kingdom, it maketh us the children of the devil, & God displeased with us: for they that are in the flesh cannot please God.

Thirdly, we see some are happy in this life [Use 3] and attain to the certainty of their salvation. The salvation of the Church standeth in the remission of their sins, Luke 1, •7. We do not then begin to be happy when at the end of our days we enter into the kingdom of heaven: but while we are upon the earth, we lay the foundation of our happiness, and set the first stones of it, or else we never attain unto it. We are all in this life builders, 1 Cor. 3, 9. We have a great and weighty work to set up, it requireth a long time and great labor to bring it to pass and perfection. Every day of our life should add somewhat to the building; & this day should make it in greater forwardness then the former. Let us diligently consider these things, and seriously examine our selves what we have done for the furthering of our salvation, whether we have already made an happy entrance into it. So soon as we begin, and the first stone is laid, the door of the kingdom of heaven is opened unto us. The further we proceed, the nearer we come to the mark. This our Savior preached to his hearers, John 5, 24. Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, & believeth him that sent me, hath everlasting life: and shall not come into condemnatiō, but hath passed from death to life. When Zacchaeus was converted to the faith, and testified the sincerity of his repentance by actual restitution, he said, This day is salvation come unto this house, forasmuch as he is also become the son of Abraham, Luke 19, 9. So the Apostle speaketh, Rom. 13, 11, Considering the season, it is now time that we should arise from sleep: for now is our salvation nerer then when we believed it. And in that holy Prayer of Christ recorded by the Evangelist John, he saith, This is eternal life to know thee to be the only very God, & whom thou hast sent Jesus Christ, John 17, 3. This is the great mercy of God to give us here a taste of the glory to come. We have here as it were the first fruits of eternal life, and by hope possess that which we shall really inherit: so we may truly say with the Apostle, 2 Tim. 1, 12, I know whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him against that day. Heereby we see, that it is not a doctrine of pride and presumption (as the Church of Rome teacheth) to believe the remission of our own sins. For generally to believe y^t God forgiveth sin, or that some men have their sins forgiven, is no privilege of the Church, but the common faith of the devils, I am. 2, 19. All the Articles contain the confession of a special faith, and a particular application to our selves. As I must believe God the Father to be my Creator, the Son my Redeemer, the holy Ghost to be my Sanctifier: so I am bound to believe the remission of mine own sins, the resurrection of mine own body, and that life everlasting shall be given to me. Thus the Apostle speaketh, Gal. 2, 20: I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me. This special faith must be the faith of us all.

[Use 4] Lastly, from hence we are put in mind of sundry good duties necessary to be practiced of us. First, seeing every true member of the Church, hath the forgiveness of his sins given & assured unto him, it is our duty to acknowledge our selves to be grievous sinners, to have godly sorrow for them which may cause repentance, not to be repented of, and to seek pardon by daily prayer for the forgiveness of them at the hands of God. He resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. He filleth the hungry with good things, and sendeth the rich empty away. He is ready to forgive, and to have compassion on his children: he is slow to anger, and of great kindness. He doth not deal with us after our sins, nor reward us according to our iniquities. Hence it is that the Apostles have taught, and the godly have acknowledged themselves grievous sinners, yea, even the most regenerate, as David, Daniel, Paul, and others. Seeing therefore we have a promise of forgiveness, & as it were a privilege above others of the world, it behooveth us to have in us an humble acknowledgement of our sinful estate, joined with godly sorrow and earnest prayer for the forgiveness of them. Secondly, it is required of us to have a reverent care and fear, not to offend him anymore, as heretofore we have provoked him, yea a most earnest study and desire to please him better thē we have done. This the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 103, 3, 4. If thou O Lord straitly markest iniquities, O Lord who shall stand? But mercy is with thee, that thou mayest be feared. This was the instruction that Christ gave unto the diseased man whom he had healed, when he found him in the Temple, he said unto him, Behold thou art made whole, sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee, John. 5, 14. Thus the Apostle Paul describeth true repentance by the fruits and effects of it, 2 Cor. 7, 11. Behold this thing that ye have been godly sorry, what great care it hath wrought in you, yea what clearing of yourselves, yea what indignation, yea what fear, yea how great desire, yea what a zeal, yea what revenge. Where this care is not to please God, and fear to fall again and offend him, there was never true repentance, nor any feeling of the forgiveness of former sins. This were exceeding unthankfulness for mercy received, and a turning of the grace of God into wantonness, to commit sin anew that grace may abound. Thirdly, it is our duty to return all praise and thankfulness to God for this so infinite and unspeakable mercy, which appeareth in nothing more thē in the forgiveness of our manifold sins. It belongeth to God only to forgive sins, therefore to him only belongeth the glory of forgiveness, as being only worthy to receive all praise. This Daniel confesseth in his prayer, O Lord, righteousness belongeth unto thee, but unto us open shame, as appeareth this day. So the prophet David provoking all to praise the Lord, alledgeth this as the chief reason to move them, Which forgiveth all thine iniquities, & healeth all thine infirmities, Psal. 103, 3. This also we see in the practice and example of the Apostle, who mentioning his sins, and magnifying the exceeding and abundant mercy of God in the pardon of them, he breaketh out into a thanksgiving to the eternal God, Unto the King everlasting, immortal, invisible, unto God only wise, be honor and glory forever & ever, Amen, 1 Tim. 1, 17. Rom. 7, 25. If we have tasted of this mercy, let us be mindful of this duty: and if we have had experience of this forgiveness, let us be careful to express unto him our thankfulness. Fourthly, we must show back again our love toward our heavenly Father, according to the measure of his love toward us. The greater sins he hath pardoned, the greater love should be returned. This is it which y^e Prophet professeth to have wrought exceeding love in his heart towards the Lord, when he considered how gracious and merciful he had been unto him, Psal. 116, 1. I love the Lord because he hath heard my voice and my prayer. The practice of this duty is remembered and commended in the sinful woman, Luke 7, 47. Many sins are forgiven her, for she loved much: to whom a little is forgiven he doth love a little. Let this example be continually before our eyes. Let us examine our selves how near we come unto her in the practice of this duty. Let us behold our selves in her, as in a glass. If we have had a blessed experience of God's loving kindness toward us, in blotting out and burying our sins out of his remembrance, let us be answerable in love to him again, who hath loved us first. Where little love appeareth to God, there is little knowledge of forgiveness of sins. Where no love is, there is no feeling of the comfort of this doctrine. If we have found God exceeding kind and gracious unto us, it will work an exceeding measure of love, where God hath assured and sealed up that grace by his holy Spirit. Lastly, the receiving of this mercy from God, must work in us mercy toward our brethren, that as we have obtained forgiveness of sins at his hands, so we should be ready to forgive one another, And so be merciful to others, as our heavenly Father is merciful to us, Luke 6, 36. This our Savior teacheth in the parable of the King that would take an account of his servants, to wit, that he requireth mercy where he hath shown mercy, and that judgment shall be without mercy, to him that showeth no mercy. Hence it is that the Apostle giveth this in charge, Eph. 4, 32. & Colos. 3, 13. This we are also directed unto in that form of prayer which Christ did teach his Disciples, and hath left unto his Church, warranting us to ask forgiveness, as we feel our selves ready to forgive. This we are to apply unto our selves, and learn every day to be like to our heavenly Father, Matth. 5, 45. Who maketh his Sun to arise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and unjust. If then we desire to be partakers of the goodness of God in forgiving the infinite debt whereby we are deeply indebted unto GOD, and would find him merciful unto us (as everyone will seem to be desirous of it) let us show our selves ready to forgive from our hearts the injuries and offenses done unto us. Among all testimonies that we may gather to our selves of God's goodness and mercy towards us, none is more excellent, more comfortable, more certain then this, if we find it in us; that is, the pardoning and passing over the wrongs offered us, and a readiness to forgive, even our enemies that most envy and hate us; and that frankly and freely, as we our selves have received forgiveness at the hands of God.

[The Lord his God is with him.] These words contain the second privilege peculiar and proper to the Church, which God hath bestowed upon it, to wit, the presence of his Spirit. True it is, in regard of his essence and deity he is everywhere, the heaven is his throne, and the earth is his footstool, Psalm 139, 7, 8. So that we cannot hide our selves from his presence. If we ascend into heaven, he is there: If we lie down in the grave, he is there: if we take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, thither shall his hand lead us, and his right hand hold us: if we say, yet the darkness shall hide us, the night shall be light about him. But in this place this prophesy poynteth us unto us another presence, to wit, of his grace, protection, defense, and deliverance; the presence of his Spirit, sanctifying his children, purging them from dead works, to be a peculiar people unto himself, working in them regeneration, and finishing all good things in them, to bring them to everlasting life. We learn from hence, That it is a great privilege of the Church, to have God present with it, and president over it. He is not far off from those that are his (howsoever in time of affliction, and in the hour of temptation, he seemeth so to them:) he is near unto them, he is ever with them, he holdeth a gracious hand over them. This is it which the Lord so often promiseth in his word, & truly performeth, to the great comfort of all his children. This is it which the Lord speaketh to Jacob, going from his fathers house to Padan Aram, Gen. 28, 15. This also the Prophet David acknowledgeth, Psal. 34, 15, 18. And lest any should restrain that exhortation, and take it peculiarly to belong to him alone, the Apostle extendeth it farther, and applieth it to all the people of God, speaking to them as well as unto Joshua, chapt. 1, 9. I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee; so that we may boldly say, The Lord is mine helper, I will not fear what man can do unto me. This is it which Christ our Savior often alledgeth for the comfort of his disciples, John. 14, 18. Math. 18, 20, & 28, 20. I will not leave you comfortles, but I will come unto you: Loe, I am with you to the end of the world.

The reasons are these. First, his presence appeareth, [Reason 1] that the faithful might be assured of his protection and defense, being gathered together by his power, without which, they could not have any comfort. If the soldiers should be destitute of the presence of their Captain, the wife of her husband, the people of their King, they would remain comfortless, and in continual fear to do their duties and perform their allegiance. But having their continual presence, they have continual assurance, and joyfulness in their place and charge committed unto them: otherwise, the best servants of God & most painful in their callings, should be in the worst case and condition. To this purpose Christ saith, Go and teach all nations, to observe whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you always until the end of the world, Mat. 28.18, 19, 20. Seeing therefore God would not have us danted with danger, or discouraged with fear, but to go lustily forward where he hath called us, we cannot doubt of the assurance of his presence with us in all assays and assaults, whatsoever shall be offered unto us.

[Reason 2] Secondly, he is ready to hear their prayers, to help them in their distresses, & to yield them those things that they stand in need of. If he were absent from us, & not present with us, he could not consider of our wants, nor succor us in our necessities, nor deliver us from our enemies, nor refresh us with his help, while we walk through the valley of the shadow of death. Therefore when Christ teacheth, Mat. 18, 20. that by the grace of his Spirit, and the power of his Deity, he is in the midst of the Church, he confirmeth it hereby, that whatsoever they shall desire, it shall be given them of his Father which is in Heaven.

[Use 1] Let us now proceed to the uses of this Doctrine. First, it followeth from hence, if God be still with his Church, then there is never any separation & diuorcement between God and his Church, between Christ & his members; so that whosoever would find the Lord to be his God, he must be in the Church, & of the Church. Christ is said to walk in the midst of the seven golden Candlesticks, that is, of the Church. Christ is evermore in his Church, and wheresoever the Church is there is Christ. No man shall ever find Christ as a Savior, but in his Church. The Emperor is to be acknowledged wheresoever his standard is: the King is where his Court is. So there is always a near conjunction between God and his Church. Where he is present with his grace, there is his Church. We shall not need to say with Martha, Lord, if thou haddest been here, my brother had not been dead, John 11, 21. for God is ever with us, in all dangers he standeth present by us, His left hand is under our head, and his right hand doth embrace us. This is a notable and singular comfort to all the true members of the Church, who are assured of y^e spiritual and special power and love of God toward them, supporting them and staying them up with both his hands, that they fall not from him through weakness and infirmity of the flesh. And seeing his love is such unto us that he will not be far from us, but in all our troubles embrace us in both his arms, this ought to stay and strengthen us in all trials, and confirm us in all temptations, which are as it were so many storms and tempests beating upon the barks of our souls, and threatening to make shipwreck of them. We are ready in all our troubles, when we find not present help at hand, to suppose the Lord to be far from us. We are impatient of delay, we cannot abide to wait the Lord's leisure. So soon as we are entered into the Furnace of affliction, y^t we feel the flames thereof to scorch us, and the anguish thereof to enter into our bones, by and by we think that God should help us, every moment and minute appeareth to be a day, and every day seemeth a year unto us, until he scatter the coals, and pull us as a fire-brand out of the fire. This made the Prophet in the heat of his affliction to cry out, Why standest thou far off, O Lord, and hidest thee in due time, even in affliction? Psal. 10, 1. Whereby we see, that the children of God are wonderfully assaulted, & the flesh wrestleth against the Spirit, & sometime prevaieth, and for a time getteth the upper hand. So the same Prophet saith, Psal. 13, 1, 2. & 22, 1, 2. How long wilt thou forget me ô Lord? forever? How long wilt thou hide thy face from me? &c. And again, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? and art so far fr̄m mine health, and from the words of my roaring, &c? And in another place, Will the Lord absent himself forever? and will he show no more favor? Is his mercy clean gone? &c. Thus his faith was assaulted, and his hope tried, that he should not fall into infidelity, and yield to distrust in God. But seeing our doctrine affirmeth, that God is never from us, howsoever he seemeth to delay and defer his help, let us learn (how great soever our conflicts be) not utterly to despair of God's mercy, though it tarry. Waite, for it shall surely and certainly come, and not stay, when the time, even the appointed time cometh. So when the faithful recover themselves out of the former temptations, as it were out of a gulf ready to swallow them up, they gather strength of Faith, rest upon the power & presence of God, and wait with patience the Lord's leisure, and confess it was their own infirmity.

This the Prophet David setteth down, in Psal. 40, 1. and 42, 5, 11. and 43, 5. and in diverse other places. Thus it standeth all of us upon, when affliction trieth us, when the flesh tempteth us, when Satan winnoweth us, and all of them consenting and conspiring together, seek to overthrow us; to consider that howsoever God oftentimes deferreth to help us, yet he is still present with us, and to assure our selves that doubtless he is not far from everyone of us. It is the will and pleasure of God to try our faith, to stir up our zeal, to exercise our patience, and to teach us to make greater account of his blessings, whē we have obtained them: but in the end, to our endless comfort, he will declare by the effects of his love and favor, that he was never indeed absent from us, howsoever we judge so according to the weakness of the flesh, and he for a time hide his countenance from us. Moreover this serveth to teach us, that in our troubles and necessities we stand not in need of the intercession of Saints and Angels, we shall not need to pray unto them to be our Mediators to God the Father. For seeing God the Father is near us, yea even at hand, shall we turn our backs to him, and go from him, seeing he turneth to us to give us help? This invocation of Saints hath neither commandment to move us to pray, nor example to go before us in the practice, nor promise to assure us that we shall be heard. The direction that we have in prayer, is to go to God, and to say to him, Our Father which art in heaven, Mat. 6, 9. This the Prophet acknowledged, when he said, Psal. 73, 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee? & I have desired none in the earth with thee. God is evermore present with us, the Saints departed are absent from us, they know not our particular wants, Isaiah 63, 16, Psal. 94, 9. 1 King. 8, 39. they understand not our desires, they are ignorant of the motions of our hearts, and the estate of our lives. Besides, we are charged to worship the Lord our God, & to serve him only, who only searcheth the hearts, & trieth the reins, as the God that made them in the beginning. Let us therefore go directly and immediately to God, and when we have help at hand, let us not seek help far off. Let us still trust in the living God, for vain is the help of Saints or Angels. Were not he a foolish man, and worthy to perish, who in extremity would refuse the help of an expert & excellent Physician present with him, able to help him, willing to help him, offering to help him and give him present ease, and yet calleth and crieth to some Mounte-bank, a thousand miles from him, not so able, not so skilful, not so ready to relieve & release him? And are not they much more simple and sottish, that when God willeth them to call upon him in the day of trouble, and promiseth to hear and deliver them, will not come to him, but fly from him to the Saints, that know neither him nor his grief? When the Prince is present, and calleth to come to him, were it not madness to go to y^e subject? So, forasmuch as Christ saith, Come unto me all ye that are weary and laden, and I will ease you, Matth. 11, 28: let our souls answer, Lord we will come, accept thou the prayers of thy servants.
