Thus much concerning the order of these two Verses in this division: wherein we see, how in answering he argueth, and in convincing he replieth and proceedeth to defend his cause. Now let us see the meaning of the words, so far as they require opening and Interpretation. First, when he saith, [If he hath hurt thee, or owe thee ought.] These general words may be applied to any wrong, or damage, or In-justice; signifying thereby, the Theft that Onesimus had committed, but mitigating it by a more gentle term. For hereby we may gather, that he had robbed his Master, as the common fashion and usual manner of those is that run away. Such as are determined to go from their Masters, & to betake themselves to their heels, will not go away empty, but purloyn what they can: and yet the Apostle diminisheth the envy of the crime, choosing to use such words as either betoken a small fault, or contain no fault at all.

Hence it is that he saith, [If he owe thee anything.] For there was not any civil contract or bargain between them, in as much as there could be no such buying, or selling, or changing between the Master and his Servant, as the condition of Servants was in those times, whereof we have spoken before. Wherefore we see that they are deceived that think it cannot be gathered out of this place, or from this Epistle, that the Servant had robbed his Master, both because he is not directly charged with theft, and because the Apostle only speaketh by supposition, [If he have hurt thee.] I answer, that he doth not indeed name and express any robbing or rifling of his Masters House; yet we must consider, how he maketh the least of everything, in regard of his repentance which had wiped away the stain thereof. For whereas he had been hurtful to his Master, Paul calleth it [Vnprofitable:] whereas he had played the Runna-gate, Paul calleth it a departing away: so in this place, whereas he had pilferred and purloyned his Masters goods, Paul calleth it an hurting, which is a less fault, or a debt, which is no fault. Seeing then, throughout this Epistle the Apostles drift is, by expressing a little to understand more; and by naming a small offense, to understand a greater; we are not to doubt, but his meaning in these words, is to tax him of that theft which he had committed. Neither is it anything to the present purpose, that it is objected, that the Apostle doth not plainly and directly avouch, that he had any way hurt his Master, because he uttereth nothing simply, but by way of supposition; [If he have hurt thee] as if he spake by hear-say, and knew not the certainty of that which he had heard: For no doubt he knew the whole truth of the matter by Onesimus, who having truly repented, had particularly acknowledged and confessed the wickedness of his heart, and the unrighteousness of his hands in defrauding of his Master. Hethat hideth his sins cannot prosper, but he that confesseth and forsaketh them, shall find mercy. Whosoever will obtain pardon, must make confession. So long as sin is vnacknowledged, so long it is unpardoned. Seeing therefore he had received remission, we cannot imagine, but that before there went confession, and an unfolding of the whole matter from the beginning to the ending; so that the Apostle would not, nor could not speak waueringly and doubtfully of that, whereof he was fully instructed, and perfectly informed from point to point. Besides, the conjunction [If] is not condicionall in this place, but Illatiue, and is not spoken by supposition, but rather by way of confession or concession. True it is, sometimes it is condicionallie; directly affirming, and plainly denying nothing. As Job 31. If my heart hath been deceived by a Woman, or if I have laid wait at the door of my Neighbor: if I did contemn the judgment of my Servant: if I have seen any perish for want of clothing. Thus it is taken Gen. 18. 24. If there be fifty righteous within the City, I will spare all the place for their sakes. And thus it is taken most commonly throughout the Scriptures, in more then an hundred places, which are all to be understood condicionallie, not affirmatively.

Again, sometimes the word is to be taken as a particle, not only conuecting and concluding, but affirming, and knitting together that which is affirmed, as in many places of the 8. chapt. to the Romans, If we be Children, then are we also heirs: if God be on our side, who can be against us: as if he should say; seeing we are Children, seeing God is on our side. So the Apostle exhortheth the Colossians, If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above. Where he doth not speak vncertainly, but conclude peremptorilie, that they ought seriously to enter into the Meditation of the heavenly life, considering they had been instructed in the resurrection of Christ. Thus Peter speaketh in his second Epistle, If God spared not the Angels that had sinned, that is; seeing he spared them not. And thus is the word taken (to go no farther) in the words immediately going before, in this Epistle to Philemon, [If thou account our things common, receive him as myself.] Where the meaning is, seeing all things between us are common as among friends, do not thou stand or stick at the entertaining of him. So likewise when he saith, [If he hath hurt thee] it is a granting of the crime, and as it were a confessing of the action whereof he might be charged, as if he had said; seeing the case is so indeed, discharge him, and account me as thy debtor. Thus much for the clearing of the Interpretation of the first words, and the answering of the objections against it. It followeth [That impute to me] where he taketh the debt or wrong offered by Onesimus upon himself, and offereth himself to be bound in a band for him, and to become his pledge or surety. When he saith [I have written it with mine own hand] it is the confirmation of his promise by a civil Instrument, and by subscribing his name unto it. Lastly, when he addeth, [Albeit, I do not say to thee that thou owest to me even thine own self,] we must understand, that the debt which the apostle urgeth as due unto him from Philemon, is in respect of his conversion and winning unto Christ. Wherein he alludeth to such as being conquered in battle, are reserved alive to them that have overcome them, & made them their Servants, in saving them from death, in keeping them from the sword, and in preserving them from destruction. Thus then the Apostle argueth; I being a Captain under Jesus Christ, to win him a people from the bondage of sin and Satan, have among many other, won thee and thine whole Family, and have taken you away as it were Captive, delivering you in Christ Jesus from eternal misery; and therefore thou owest me much more than thy Servant can owe thee, even thine own self, and whatsoever is dearest unto thee: for thou hast been by my means rescued and recovered from the bondage of Satan, & the dominion of death, and hast been brought to the freedom and liberty of the Sons of God. Thus we see, how the Spirit leaveth no starting hole for Philemon to shake & shift off this duty, to the end it might be a perpetual rule to the Church in the like case, without all exception. As if the Apostle should have said; If thou object, that thy loss and detriment received by Onesimus, is more than thou mayest bear and canst forgive: I answer thee, that thou shalt not thereby be hindered, for I thy friend Paul will answer thee whatsoever he is indebted and endangered unto thee, even to the uttermost mite thou shalt demand. And that thou shouldst not doubt of mine offer; behold, this my hand-writing shall be thy warrant and assurance, which I have subscribed with mine own hand: albeit, I may by my right that I have in thee (pulling thee and thy Family out of the Captivity of Satan, the slavery of sin, and the bondage of hell) claim from thee more than thou canst from Onesimus: for thou owest to me indeed and in truth, not a part of thy goods and possessions, but thine own self, even thy Soul and Body, which are by my Ministry preserved to everlasting life: and thou canst not sufficiently esteem of thy Redemption and Salvation effected and merited by Christ, but manifested, applied, and warranted unto thee by my preaching, and the graces of God bestowed upon me for the effectual conversion of the elect.

Thus we have seen the order of the words, and have learned the meaning of them. It remaineth according to the manner and Method before propounded, to gather from hence such observations as are intimated unto us, and might be largely handled of us. First of all, observe with me, that the Apostle returneth here to a consideration of that which might be objected: so that we see it is the duty of the Ministers, not only barely to teach the truth, but to remove doubts, to answer Objections, to put away Impediments, and to clear all difficulties that may stick in the minds of the hearers, and hinder the believing and embracing of the truth delivered unto them. For howsoever our care be to teach plainly and evidently, yet the carnal reason of a natural man ministereth many cavils and questions, whereby diverse scruples remain in the hearts of the people, as dangerous stumbling blocks to turn them out of the right way, & to stay their course from running with a right foot in the paths of righteousness. Wherefore it standeth us upon, to consider diligently, what may be alleged against the truth that is taught by us, and to make a plain answer unto the same. This we see in every Epistle practiced by the Apostle. When he had taught free justification by faith apprehending Christ without the works of the Law, the Jews might have objected; If the law do not justify, then it was given in vain, it is abolished, it serveth to no purpose. He knew this would be concluded, and therefore he preventeth it; saying, Do we then make the Law of none effect through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law. And afterward, having taught that where sin abounded, there grace abounded much more, if he had rawly and barely left the matter thus propounded, a man might have objected; If this be true, that there grace aboundeth where sin hath abounded, then sin seemeth to be the cause of God's glory, and then why do we not sin fully and freely, that thereby the glory of God may be magnified? Wherefore he vnloseth this knot in the words and chapter immediately following, What shall we say then? Shall we continue still in sin that grace may abound? God forbid: How shall we that are dead to sin, live yet therein? Likewise to the same purpose he speaketh again, for having proved that sin shall not have dominion over us, because we are not under the law, but under grace, considering with himself, that profane men might abuse the grace and liberty of the Gospel to commit sin with greediness, he replieth, What then? shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid, &c. The like we see practiced in other places: When he hath taught the Ephesians to love their Wives as their own bodies, yea even as Christ loved the Church, and addeth, that this is a great secret or mystery: a man might ask, do you speak this of the love that ought to be between the Husband and the Wife, or of the love that is between Christ and his Church? he answereth, I speak concerning Christ, and concerning the Church. In like manner delivering a rule to the Church, that Widdowes should be chosen to attend upon the sick and those that were diseased, he would have none under threescore years of age set a part to this Office, he addeth, But refuse the younger Widdowes, for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry, having damnation: The Apostle knowing that these words might have been wrested wrongfully and applied contrary to his meaning, (for one might have said, what, have they damnation for marrying? Is marriage the cause of damnation?) He resteth not so, but answereth the point, they have damnation for denying and breaking their first faith. This wisdom is to be put in practice of all the Ministers of God's word, we must be able not only to teach, but to convince, and to fore-see what may be objected against that which we have delivered. So then the Ministers must be men of knowledge, thoroughly furnished to convince the adversaries, and replenished with store, both new and old, to overthrow all spirits of contradiction that seek to subvert and destroy the faith of many. And it belongeth to the people to resort and repair to their Ministers thus quallified, for resolution of doubts wherewith they are troubled, considering with themselves that the Priests lips must preserve knowledge, and that the people are to seek the law at their mouths, because they are the Messengers of the Lord of Hosts.

Secondly, we see again in the first words of hurting and owing, that there is used a certain mitigation. For whereas he might have called him a Thief and Runnagate, he expresseth them under much milder names, calling his robbing and flying away, an hurting, and debt; declaring thereby, how gentle and easy an hand, how loving and charitable an heart, we ought to bear, toward the penitent. We are not to aggravate the slips and falls, nor augment the sins and offenses of our brethren, nor to urge them and set them out in their colors to the uttermost, nor to follow them with extremity, but it is our duty to deal mercifully with such sinners as are unfeignedly and truly turned unto God, remembering always these three things. First, that we are subject to the like sins, and may be overtaken with the same offenses, through the temptations of Satan, and the corruptions of our own nature. Hence it is, that the Apostle admonisheth us, to restore such as have fallen, even with the spirit of meekness, considering also our selves least we also be tempted. Secondly, that as we are subject to fall, so we have offended as greatly against God as they, if not in the same kind and after the same manner; so that if he should enter into judgment with us, who could stand in his presence, or answer him one of a thousand? This is it which Christ Jesus laid to the charge of the proud Pharisees, when they brought before him the woman taken in adultery, he said unto them, Let him that is among you without sin, cast the first stone at her: who, when they heard it, being accused of their own consciences, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest even to the last. Thirdly, that we do desire and obtain forgiveness of our sins upon this condition, that we forgive others, when we are taught to say; Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us. Wherefore, let us be of a gentle mind and placable nature, easy to be entreated, ready to be persuaded, willing to be reconciled, and forward to forgive all injuries and wrongs offered unto us: without which affection all our prayers to God, and all the parts of his worship, are made void and nothing worth unto us. Hence it is, that we are moved, when we have brought our gift to the Altar, then and there remembering that our brother hath ought against us, to depart and leave our offering until we be reconciled unto him. Of this point we have spoken before: yet the great necessity of it, and the present use of the Lord's supper, which is a Sacrament of love and unity, requireth the renewing of it; and therefore, unless it be to those that are dead-hearted and heavy eared, that will neither hear, nor mark, nor understand, nor obey, it cannot but work some grace and conscience in them that have their ears opened, bored and prepared.

Thirdly, note the singular love and exceeding compassion in the Apostle, offering himself to become surety; yea, to enter into bands for so base a servant as had stolen away his Masters goods, and ran away for fear of punishment. Herein is great love; and herein Christ Jesus testifieth his love to his Church, in that he became sin for us, and undertook to bear the burden of man's wickedness and God's wrath: even wickedness most heinous, and wrath most horrible. Herein is unspeakable love, he offered himself as a pawn & pledge for us miserable sinners and bankrupt persons, not able to pay one penny of that great debt that we owe unto him.

Fourthly, we may learn that the imputation of another man's debt, may stand with the law of God and man, so that by all law divine and human he is reputed and holden a debtor, that offereth and maketh himself surety for another, so that he is justly charged to be the debtor and the other man for whom he becometh surety is discharged and freed from the debt: yea, the satisfaction of another is imputed to the debtor, even as his debt is imputed to the surety. This being cleere and evident in all Law, and by all reason, why should it seem a marvelous, or rather a monstrous thing in the eyes and ears of our adversaries, either that our sins should be imputed to Christ our mediator, or that his sanctification and justice should be imputed to us, and that we are not justified by inherent righteousness, but by the imputed righteousness of Christ, Who is made unto us of God to be our righteousness, to the end that we might be found in him, not having our own righteousness which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ. This ought not to seem strange or impossible to us, seeing he is no less just and righteous, to whom the justice and righteousness of another is imputed, then that person is who hath an inherent righteousness of his own within him: as it skilleth not who payeth the debt, so it be discharged, in as much as the debtor is as well freed when another hath satisfied the creditor, as if himself had done it. Nay he is more just and righteous that hath Christ's righteousness made his, then if he had an inherent righteousness of his own, albeit it were perfect and complete, full and absolute, without all stain and imperfection. For Christ's imputed righteousness is more worth and worthy than all the inherent righteousness that is in men and Angels: yea that imputed righteousness of Christ is more accepted and respected of God, than all the righteousness that is found in the Angels themselves: and when we shall live with Christ our head in the Heavens, albeit we shall have perfect righteousness inherent in us, and be like the Angels which always enjoy the presence of God, and behold the beauty of his face, yet even then we shall appear more glorious, gracious, and accepted of God, through that righteousness of Christ imputed unto us (which we shall never lose nor put off, no not when we shall be in immortality) then for this inherent sanctification when it is at the highest top and in the greatest perfection, without any want or weakness.

Fifthly, note also the Ironical preterition or passing by that which he would have carefully considered, and wisely imprinted in the mind of Philemon, [I say not that thou owest to me thyself.] This he doth to avoid all suspicion of arrogancy and ambition, or least he should seem proud and haughty, and challenge overmuch to himself; he lesseneth and diminisheth the matter greatly, whereas he might have uttered and signified more than he speaketh, so that he leaveth the rest to Philemons secret and serious consideration. This teacheth us to avoid all arrogant boasting, and to beware of vain vaunting of our selves above that which is meet and ought to be in us. Hereunto the Apostle oftentimes exhorteth us, Let us not be desirous of vain-glory, provoking one another, envying one another. And in another place, Be of one accord and of one judgment, that nothing be done through contention or vain-glory, but that in meekness of mind every man esteem other better than himself. We are naturally given to think well of our selves, and to desire to be magnified of others above that which is in us; whereas we ought to humble and abase our selves, that God may with his gracious hand lift us up.

Lastly, observe with me in the last words the Metaphor used by the Apostle, witnessing and warning him that he owed to him his own self; as if he had been taken by him in wars, by the law whereof he was as his own. This serveth to teach us, that all men are by nature captives to sin and prisoners to Satan, being delivered and freed from the subjection and slavery of them. This our Savior teacheth, Verily, verily, I say unto you, that whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin: if the son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed. To this purpose the Apostle Paul speaketh, Know ye not that to whomsoever ye give yourselves as servants to obey, his servants, ye are to whom ye obey: whether it be of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness: but God be thanked, that ye have been the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart unto the form of the Doctrine whereunto ye were delivered: being then made free from sin ye are made the servants of Righteousness. Where the Apostle showeth, that there are two sorts of Servants; some are Servants to sin; other, are Servants to righteousness: and whosoever is Servant to one, cannot be Servant to the other; they are so opposite and contrary the one to the other, that no man can serve these two Masters. This is it which the Apostle John handleth; He that committeth sin is of the Devil, for the Devil sinneth from the beginning: for this purpose was made manifest that Son of God, that he might loose the works of the Devil. Let us all suffer the Ministers of the Gospel to take us out of the hands of Satan, and to subdue us to the Kingdom of Christ, by the two-edged Sword that goeth out of his mouth. Thus much may suffice for the general observations which arise out of the words, and might be stood upon at large; but I have only briefely pointed them out. Now let us particularly lay open such doctrines as are more especially aimed at in these words.

[If he hath hurt thee, or oweth thee ought, &c.]

In the former verse, we have heard how the Apostle hath reasoned on this manner with Philemon, [If our things be common, thou oughtest to receive him to favor, whom I have so great cause to favor] urging a community and fellowship in all God's blessings. But in this verse he acknowledgeth a debt to Philemon from Onesimus, and doth take it upon himself to answer it. We learn from hence, that the communion which is among the faithful Saints, doth not take away the private possession, dominion, distinction, and interest in the things of this life. Albeit the things belonging to this temporal life, be in some respect common, yet in another respect they are private. They are common touching use, they are private touching possession. This appeareth in the practice of the Fathers that lived after the flood; as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Job, David, and diverse others; who albeit they willingly imparted to their Brethren the blessings of God bestowed upon them, yet they had their special houses of abode, inheritances of lands, possessions of goods, Flocks of Sheep, herds of Cattle, and distinction of Servants. Mark this in the order, that God took with his own people, when he had subdued their Enemies, and brought them into the Land, every Tribe had his several inheritance, and every Family in the Tribe, had his peculiar possession divided unto him by lot, to avoid all Controversie and contention among them. When Naboth was urged by Ahab to pass his Vineyard to him, either by sale or by exchange, he answered; The Lord keep me from giving the Inheritance of my Fathers unto thee. This is it which Solomon speaketh in the Proverbs, Drink the Water of thy Cistern, and of the Rivers of Waters in the streets, but let them be thine, even thine only, and not the Strangers with thee. He teacheth the faithful to live of their own labors, and to be helpful to the godly that want. Great were the wants and miseries of the poor Saints of God, (as we see in the Acts of the Apostles) so that many sold their possessions to relieve the distressed Members of the Church: yet the Apostle Peter saith to Ananias, who had kept back a part of the price of that he had sold; Whilst it remained, appertained it not unto thee? And after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? How is it that thou hast conceived this thing in thine heart? Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God. By which words it is manifest, that albeit the Saints accounted nothing their own, but had all things common among themselves, yet they always retained a several right and propriety in those things that they possessed.

This truth will yet further and better appear unto us, if we enter into the consideration of the Reasons that serve to strengthen it. First, it is confirmed by the Commandments of God, and by the fourth petition of the Lord's Prayer. The eighth Commandment forbiddeth us to steal away our Neighbors goods, and to do him the least hurt therein. The tenth commandment restraineth the inward lusts & motions that arise in our minds, and condemneth the coveting of his house, of his wife, of his servant, of his ox, of his asse, or of anything that belongeth unto him. If then, God commandeth the preservation of every man's goods, and forbiddeth all injuries to be offered unto them; it standeth us upon to acknowledge a right and interest that everyone hath in earthly things given unto him. Likewise, our Savior Christ teacheth us daily to ask our daily bread, so that no man ought to desire that which is another's bread, but everyone to know his own, what God hath given him, and what he hath given to others. If then there be bread that is ours, then also there is bread that is not ours. And if somewhat be ours, and somewhat not ours; it followeth that everyone hath an interest in his own goods, and cannot lay hold on another man's.

Secondly, the invading of other men's inheritances, and the encroaching upon their private possessions, is the fruit either of a confused Anarchy, or of a loose government, and both of them are contrary to that ordinance which God establisheth, and the order that he requireth. This we see in the latter end of the book of Judges, where it is recorded, and oftentimes repeated, that In those days, there was no King in Israel, but every man did that which was good in his own eyes. And what I pray you was that? Even that which was stark naught: they brake out into open outrages; riots, usurpations, oppressions, and community of women. All things were out of course, no man ordered his life aright, every man followed his own lusts. But God is a God of order, and not of confusion, as the Apostle teacheth, 1. Cor. 14 God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as we see in all the Churches of the Saints: let all things be done honestly and in order. But if every man may enter upon the labors of other men, and take to himself what he pleaseth, it would bring as great a confusion of families and common wealths, as once there was of tongues when one did not understand another, so that they were constrained to break off the work they had begun.

Thirdly, everyone hath a proper and peculiar possession, his own servants to order, his own ground to till, his own fields to husband, his own family to govern, and his own domestical affairs to manage, that he may provide things honest in the sight of God, that he may rejoice in the labor of his own hands, and be thankful to the father and giver of all good things. It is a rule taught by nature, approved by experience, strengthened by custom, and established by the founders of Cities and Kingdoms, that whatsoever is cared for of all, is cared for of none as it ought to be, but is neglected of all. This appeareth in every Town and incorporation, in every house and congregation. If a matter be committed to many servants to be dispatched, it is commonly either altogether left undone, or done negligently, and worse then if it had been assigned to one. I have heard it delivered as a proverb, that he which hath one man, is sure of a man, he that hath two men, hath but half a man; and he that keepeth three, hath none at all. One looketh upon another, and leaveth the work for his fellows, thinking with himself that albeit he neglect the doing of it, yet there are two others to finish it: and so among them all, the business of the Master lieth undone. We see this in mending of high ways, which because it is to be done by a common hand, and by a general agreement of many together, is generally posted over from one to another, and commonly left off from year to year. Mark this moreover in the provision for the poor, who ought to be charitably relieved by the laws of God and man: yet because the burden lieth upon the shoulders of all, all men are ready to shake it off from them, and pinch courtesy who shall begin. But when everyone knoweth his own, it increaseth care, and doubleth diligence in him, he rejoiceth with his family in the blessings of God, and learneth to be a good Steward in the use of them, disposing of them to the glory of the giver, and to the comfort of the receiver. This it which Solomon teacheth, Chap. 5. of the Proverbs, Let thy fountain be blessed, and rejoyce with the wife of thy youth, let her be as the loving Hind and pleasant Roe: let her breasts satisfy thee at all times, and delight in her continually. So then, the distinction of dominion and possession, when everyone knoweth his own and what is not his own, maketh men careful to look unto them. Wherefore seeing God is the author of propriety, the hater of confusion, and the commander and appointer of every man his several task and labor; it followeth, that the community of the Saints doth not destroy the propriety of substance, but every man keepeth the title and tenor of his own goods, which no other can challenge to himself.

As we have seen the reasons that confirm this Doctrine, so let us see the uses that instruct us in many profitable points tending to edification. First of all, this confuteth and convinceth the detestable and damnable sect of the Anabaptists, who deny to men any property in anything, but would have all things common. True it is, among faithful friends all things are common (as we have already proved and confessed) so that as we have one father, so we have one fraternity, and are of one family. Hence it is, that Tertullian in his Apology teacheth, that among Christians all things were common, except men's wives. What then? Were these first Christians, Anabaptists? Or are these Anabaptists like these first Christians? No, in no wise. They allege indeed the example and practice of the primitive church, but it doth not no way favor their opinion, nor countenance any such Communion, as these Heretics would bring in amongst us. But they object that all that believed were in one place, and had all things common; yea, they accounted nothing to be their own. I answer, that these words are not to be understood, as though they had forsaken their own houses, and lived together, in public, and in common, in the same house, as it were in the celled and Cloisters of Monks; but as it followeth in the next words, They continued daily with one accord in the Temple, and breaking bread from house to house; did eat their meat together with gladness and singleness of heart. If this be true, let the Anabaptists (a new sect of Monks) answer, at whose houses this was done? Was this meeting and eating of their meat in the houses of the Infidels, or of the believers? I think no man is so sottish, to say it was in the houses of the unbelievers, who would not receive them to house, nor give them any entertainment amongst them, seeing they hated them and their profession to the death. Wherefore it must of necessity follow, that these assemblies were in the houses of such as were faithful. If then the faithful Christians had their houses, in which they met together, then they did not at all sell nor forsake their houses and dwellings, nor coop up themselves as is it were in Monasteries or Hermitages from the society of men. Secondly, whereas they object, Chap. 4. As many as were possessors of Lands sold them, and brought the price of the things that were sold, and laid it down at the Apostles feet: It is not so to be understood, as if they had cast away all care of their household affairs, and possessed nothing in private afterward. For this was done by some of the richer and wealthier sort, who were not compelled to sell, neither can it be gathered that they sold all. Nay it appeareth throughout this book of the Acts, that many after this fact possessed houses of their own. The Evangelist Luke noteth, that when Peter the Apostle was brought out of prison by the Ministry of the Angel that was sent to deliver him, As he considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary, the mother of John, where many were gathered together and prayed. Frō whence I pray you, had this woman this house? If all Christians sold their inheritances and proper houses? So then, the communion of goods that was among the first Christians, was nothing but a sale of part of their possessions to succor the poor Saints, least being constrained through Famine, and left destitute of the help of the Brethren, they should turn back again to the Jewish Religion; and therefore it is said, that distribution was made of those things that were sold; not equally, or confusedly, But according as everyone had need: so that he that had the greater charge, had the greater allowance, and he that had the less Family, had the less maintenance. True it is, it is said; The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one Soul, neither any of them accounted anything of that which he possessed was his own, but they had all things common. But from hence we may rightly gather, that every man had special interest in his own goods. For if they had possessed nothing as their own, and that the community among them had destroyed the property that rested and remained with thē, what is this that he saith; anything of that which he possessed was his own? Whereby we see, that as yet they continued owners and possessours of their goods, as they did before: but they so possessed them, that they were content to employ them no less to the use of others, then to the benefit of themselves; according to the precept of the Apostle, That they which buy, be as though they possessed not: and they that use this World, be as though they used it not, because the fashion of this world goeth away. But be it, that the Apostles had instituted such a communion as these imagine, in this Church at Jerusalem: and let us grant, that among them there was no distinction or property retained: yet it cannot be proved, that the same was required of all Christians, or that it was unlawful for them to keep that portion of earthly blessing befallen unto them. We heard before what Peter said to Annanias; Why hath Satan filled thy heart that thou shouldst lie unto the Holy-Ghost, and keep away part of the price of the possession? Whilst it remained, appertained it not unto thee? And after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? How is it that thou hast conceived this thing in thine heart? Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God. How could Peter speak this, or with what warrant could he deliver it, if all Christians had been enjoined to sell their possessions, and to renounce their Title and interest in them, to live in common one with another? Doth he not say, that the possession might have been kept and unsold? And when State was delivered, doth he not affirm, that the Money that he had received was in his own power? If any ask, wherefore then is he so sharply reprov'd, and severely punished? I answer, because he supposed he could deceive the Holy Ghost, and so kept back a part of the price, and yet pretended to bring the whole sum unto the Apostles. His sin therefore was lying, fraud, and deceit. So then the Anabaptists are plainly convinced, and a lawful propriety of goods is established. This we read farther in other places of this Book, that the Christians held the possession of their houses and goods as their own. There was a certain Woman, a Disciple, named Tabitha; she was full of good works and Alms which she did, and made many Coates and Garments which she gave to the poor.

In the next Chapter, among many Christian virtues, Cornelius the Captain is commended, to Be a devout man, and one that feared God withal his Household, which gave much Alms to the people, and praised God continually. In the eleauenth Chapter we see, that after Agabus had signified by the Spirit, that there should be a great Famine throughout all the World; The Disciples, every Man according to his ability, purposed to send succor unto the Brethren which dwelt in Judea. Mark here that he saith; Every man according to his ability; for what ability could any have, if no man did hold anything as his own? Or what difference could there be between one another? In like manner, we heard before, of the house of Mary the Mother of John, where many were assembled: and we read of the house of Simon the Tanner where Peter lodged, and continued for the space of many days: he was a true Christian, and yet he kept his house after his conversion to the Faith of the Gospel. In the 16. Chapter, Lydia a seller of Purple, having her heart opened, and being baptized, said; If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into mine House, and abide there: and she constrained them. She doth not say; Sell my House, but enter into my House, which she so possessed, as that she communicated it also to the Apostles. In the twentieth Chapter the Apostle Paul doth glory before the Elders of Ephesus, saying; I have coveted no Mans Silver, nor Gold, nor Apparrell. What reason can be rendered of this saying; if no Christian might lawfully retain the possession and propriety of Gold or Silver? In the 21. Chapter it is said; that Paul and they that were with him, entered into the House of Phillip the Evangelist, whtch was one of the seven Deacons, and abode with him. If nothing ought in private to be possessed, why had he not sold his house? How dareth he retain and reserve anything to himself? Wherefore is he not reprov'd of the Apostle, and the rest of the Brethren, for breaking the supposed ordinance that they had planted and appointed in all Churches. But of this, I have spoken else-where; and others discuss and dispute this point at large, showing that God hath settled this order to be observed in the Church, that everyone govern aright his own house, and distribute to the necessities of the Saints. The Apostle speaketh to this purpose; If any Widow have Children or Nephews, let them learn first to show godliness toward their own house, and to recompense their Kindred, for that is an honest thing, and acceptable before GOD. And afterward, If there be any that provideth not for his own; and namely for them of his Household, he denieth the Faith, and is worse then an Infidel. Likewise writing to the Thessalonians, he saith in the first Epistle, chapt. 4. We beseech you brethren, that ye encrease more and more, and that ye study to be quiet, and to meddle with your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you. And in his second Epistle, Chapter 3. When we were with you, this we warned you off, that if there were any which would not work, that he should not eat: for we heard that there are some which walk among you inordinatelie, and work not at all, but are Busie-bodies: therefore them that are such, we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that they work with quietness, and eat their own Bread, &c. Thus then it evidently appeareth, that the Annabaptists are deceived, which go about to bring in such a communion, or rather confusion among men, as neither Christ hath commanded, nor the Apostles have instituted, nor experience hath approved, nor any Christians have practiced, nor the example of the Church at Jerusalem hath warranted. To this Pestilent and poisoned Sect of detestable Heretics, we may join as Cozin-Germans, those mischievous and miserable Male-contents, that hold in word the lawfulness of private possession, but follow in practice the unlawfulness of more then an Anabaptistical communion.

These are they that bring discontent to see others enjoy more then themselves, endeavor by unlawful and ungodly actions to bring in an equality of all things; pulling down Hedges, filling up of Ditches, burning of Houses, removing of Markes, breaking down Fences, digging down Enclosures, dispaling and disparking the bounds of Lands, and laying all things common, (as they did in the Insurrection of Wat Tyler, Iacke Straw, and many others) which we have seen or heard done in our days; yea, many idle and disordered people, hoped and looked for a commotion in the latter days of our late Sovereign. For as Esau hating his Brother, and thirsting after the murder of him, thought in his mind; The days of mourning for my Father will come shortly, then will I slay my Brother Jacob: so these ryotus routs of Rebels, intending to fish in troubled waters, and minding to make a prey of the richer sort, said among themselves; The days of mourning for Queen Elizabeth will come shortly; then we shall have enough, then we shall make the Chur•...es pay for all, then we will want nothing that is to be had. Let us take heed of such ungracious person as begin a conspiracy, and lay the foundation of an Insurrection. Though they call us to come with them, and would have us to join in league with them; let us beware we cast not in our lot among them, nor walk in the way with them, for their feet run to evil, and their broad paths, are the beaten paths of death.

Secondly, seeing every man hath a state in his own goods, it teacheth us this duty, that we ought to be content with that portion which we have; be it more or less, be it small or great, be it a simple or a worthy portion, and to be by all means thankful for it: considering with our selves, that the difference of places, Lands, Possessions, with the properties thereof, be of God, and are to be acknowledged as his gift. True it is, men do sometimes increase their wealth by unlawful means, by robbing and wronging of others, to their own condemnation: but then they want comfort and peace in the possessing of them; they cannot say they eat their own Bread; they cannot esteem God to be their helper. Let us hate such wicked shifts, and renounce from our hearts all deceitful dealing. Let us seek for a blessing upon our labor at his hands, that is the disposer of all things in Heaven and Earth. Let us learn, That godliness is great gain, if a Man be content with that he hath: for we brought nothing into the World, and it is certain that we can carry nothing out, therefore when we have food and raiment, let us therewith be content. This is it which the Apostle teacheth, Heb. 13. Let your conversation be without covetousness, and be content with those things that ye have, for he hath said; I will not fail thee, neither forsake thee: so that we may boldly say, The Lord is mine helper, neither will I fear what man can do unto me. We shall never deal faithfully with the goods of other men, nor for Conscience sake abstain from wrong and Injustice, until we rest contented in our hearts with things present, and depend by Faith upon God's providence, knowing that he hath by his gracious promise bound and charged himself with us, and for us, in all things necessary, as well for our bodies, as for our souls. He is a mighty God, and a merciful Father, that never faileth nor forsaketh his Children that trust in him, that call unto him, that depend upon him. If this Faith be in us, it will swallow up many cares, and consume many fears, which distract and distemper unbelievers in this life.

Let not our heart therefore be addicted to Covetousness, nor let us suffer our selves to be carried away from God, by the greedy and gaping desire of Riches, nor seek to augment them, & abound in them by unlawful means, nor possess them with vexation of mind, or with affiance in them. But let us rest in our several Callings and conditions of life with contentation, and a quiet Conscience, not swelling in heart, or disquieting our selves in vain, with longing after an higher state and standing, then the Lord hath allotted and allowed unto us. If once our affections over-flow the banks of our present conditions, so that we cannot use with thankfulness that which we have received, we can never be persuaded to be contented, but we will not stick now and then to borrow of the Law of equity, shifting & providing for our selves what ways we can without difference, and breaking out into dishonest and vnorderly courses, without conscience. Let us therefore for our better instruction in this point, lay up in our hearts, these few Rules follows, to work in us contentation.

First, that all of us enjoy more then we deserve, and can justly challenge at the hands of God. If we would have a crumb of bread, we must crave it of him, and say, Give us this day our daily bread.

Secondly, that we oftentimes do want outward things, because we esteem no more of inward graces and spiritual blessings. We have no promise of God to bestow upon us earthly gifts, any farther then we ask by prayer, and seek by faith heavenly things, according to the saying of Christ; First seek the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be ministered unto you. It is therefore God's great judgment upon such graceless and thanklesse men, as contemn these things that belong to a better life, that oftentimes they are brought to feel the want of the transitory things of this life.

Thirdly, that it is a great subtlety and policy of Satan, to inueigle and entangle our minds with the desire of such benefits as we want, thereby to cause us to murmur, and to move us to distrust for them, and to disgrace the present benefits which we enjoy, and so to provoke us to be unthankfull. The people of Israel abounded plentifully in many great blessings in the Wilderness, and tasted liberally of God's goodness; yet when they suffered the least want of Water, or Bread, and had not their lusts satisfied at their own desire, they did break out into impatency of spirit, and forgot the mighty works that he had done for them. Their present want made them to distaste and dislike all the rest of God's mercies; Even as the evil-favored and lean-fleshed Kine, did eat up the well-favored and fat Kine, or as the thin and blasted ears of Corn, devoured the rank and full ears, in the dreams of Pharaoh. Let us not therefore burn with a desire of an higher estate, but labor to find our hearts and minds thoroughly settled in that large and liberal portion which we have in present possession by the good hand of God toward us.

Fourthly, that the Lord doth not always actually bestow upon his Children the riches and wealth of this World, but nurtereth them up to depend wholly upon his faithful promise, who hath given them his word, that he will not leave them nor forsake them. And in the mean season, he worketh in their hearts a patient bearing of the wants and necessities of this life, but in the end, he will bestow upon them eternal blessings that never shall have end, and heavenly graces that never shall decay.

Fifthly, that one drop of God's favor toward us, is better worth, and more of value, then this whole World, that is but vain and transitory. If we cannot rest in this favor of God, in the want of outward things, it is most certain we have not yet learned truly to prize, and rightly esteem the favor of God. Such as cannot be content to forgo and forsake earthly things, never truly felt the forgiveness of sins. Let us learn to rest in the least taste and touch of the grace and favor of God, whatsoever it bringeth with it; whether wealth or want; whether plenty or poverty; whether prosperity or adversity.

Lastly, we must remember that Nature is content with a little; so that if we have food and raiment, we ought to be content, as we noted before. This was the vow of Jacob when he went from his Fathers house, while he was in the way to Haran; If GOD will be with me, and will keep me in this journey which I go, and will give me Bread to eat, and Clothes to put on, so that I come again unto my Fathers house in safety, then shall the Lord be my GOD. There are two pointes of man's life; his entering into the World, and his going out of the world: the space coming between both these, receiveth many changes and alterations, many differences and diversities. Some are poor, and some are rich; some noble, & some vn-noble; some high, and some low. The beginning of all is equal; the end of all also is equal touching this life: for as we brought nothing into this world, so we can carry nothing away with us, We came naked out of our mothers womb, and naked we shall return thither. The time between our rising and falling, our birth and death, is of short continuance, and therefore we ought not to be careful to heap up Riches, For as much as we shall take nothing away when we die, neither shall our pomp descend after us. If a Man have need of one only Pot or Pitcher of Water, it is small wisdom and great vanity to try to draw up a whole stream. If a little provision will serve for the journey and voyage that we undertake, it is a needless and bootless thing to hoard and heap up great store of furniture for a small occasion. Let us therefore take heed of all excess, and content our selves with the moderate use of outward blessings, enjoying such things as we have with cheerfulness and thankfulness, bearing the want of such things as we have not, with patience and meekness, depending upon GOD for his blessing, in all things that any way concern and belong unto us. To love Riches, is a token of a base and abject mind; to covet and desire them when we want them, is a sign of a wretched and miserable mind; to use them well to our private commodity, and the public utility when we have them, is a Testimony of a commendable and contented mind.

Lastly, we learn from this Doctrine, to take good heed that we do not abuse our property and dominion of those gifts that God hath given us, bestowing them only to our private use, and with-holding the comfort of them from others, to whom they ought of right to be imparted and employed. For albeit the possession of them be ours, yet there is an use of them belonging to the Saints; the property of goods, and the communion of Saints standing together. Whensoever we have these outward things, we must not with-hold them, when they may profit the Church, and refresh the Saints. We must not be covetously and corruptly minded, like Nabal; who, when David and his Men were in necessity in the Wilderness, said; Shall I take my Bread, and my Water, and my Flesh that I have killed for my Shearers, and give it unto Men that I know not whence they are? He challengeth all as proper to himself; his Bread is his, his Water is his, his Flesh is his, all is his; he hath nothing for David, nothing for his Servants, nothing for others. This we see in the dealing of Laban toward Jacob, he saith unto him; These Daughters, are my Daughters; these Sons, are my Sons; these Sheep, are my Sheep; and all that thou hast is mine. He challengeth all to himself, he leaveth nothing to Jacob. Gene. 31. 43. The Apostle James teaching us to prove our Faith by our works, saith; If a Brother or a Sister be *naked and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them; Depart in peace, warm yourselves, and fill your Bellies, notwithstanding ye give them not those things that are needful, what helpeth it? Whereby we see, that mercifulness to our poor and needy Brethren is commanded: so that as we believe a communion to be among all true professors, so we are charged to be as the Clouds that drop down the sweet shewers upon the Hearbes, as lively Fountaines of Water that flow out plentifully to the use of others, as fruitful Trees bringing forth store to feed others. We must consider, that we are but Stewards of our goods that are lent us for a time, for which we are to give an account, and of which we are to give a yearly rent to the chief Lord, which his poor Children are appointed to receive at our own hands, whom we are bound to relieve with our goods. He hath said; The poor ye shall always have with you, but me ye shall not always have. This duty is oftentimes required and beaten upon in the word of God. This appeareth in the practice of Job, who being accused falsely of his three friends, to be an Hypocrite, is compelled to boast after a sort of his works as the fruits of his Faith, and the assured Seals of his unfeigned profession; *I delivered the Poor that cried, the fatherless, and him that had none to help him: the blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me, and I caused the Widdowes heart to rejoice.

Where we see, how he rendereth an account of his life past, being of his Adversaries charged with great wickedness and much dissimulation. So the Prophet describing the blessedness of that Man that feareth the Lord, and delighteth greatly in his Commandments, saith; He hath distributed and given to the Poor, his righteousness remaineth forever, his Horne shall be exalted with glory. He showeth hereby, that the godly do not spare niggardlie, but distribute liberallie; according as the necessity of the poor Saints requireth, and as his own power and ability suffereth him. Hereunto cometh the precept of Christ: Sell that ye have, and give Alms: make you Bags which wax not old, a Treasure that can never fail in Heaven, where no Thief cometh, neither Moath corrupteth.

Let us consider, that God hath made the poor as well as the Rich; and that the poor man is our own Flesh. Especiallie, let us always remember that the godly poor are our Brethren in Christ, and that in the last judgment the Lord Jesus will account it, and reward it as done unto himself, whatsoever hath been bestowed upon his needy and distressed Brethren. If we be careful to practice these duties of Christian Charity and Community, it shall avail to seal up God's favor toward us in the remission of our sins, and much advantage us to obtain many blessings, seeing many supplications shall be made and offered up for us, and so we shall taste the fruit that we have planted, and harvest the Corn that we have sowed. For Whatsoever a Man soweth, that he shall reap, (as the Apostle testifieth to the Galatians) and therefore if we be diligent to help the poor and needy, we shall receive a full recompense, with much increase into our own bosoms.

[That impute to me, I will recompense thee, &c.]

See here the most earnest affection of Paul, for this poor Servant. He offereth himself to become Surety and Pay-master for Onesimus, to answer for his debt, and to stand as a debtor himself in his place, in respect of his Creditor, and to pay whatsoever would be, or could be required at his hands. But before we come to the point of instruction here offered to our consideration, it shall not be amiss to answer a question that may here be demanded, how he promiseth the payment of money to another, who unless he were himself helped and sustained of the Churches, had not whereupon to live. We know how it went oftentimes with the Apostles, by the confession of Peter, and of John, who said to the Cripple that lay at the gate of the temple, Silver & gold have we none. And the Apostle Paul was also constrained to labor with his own hands. How then is he on a sudden become so wealthy, as to offer his service to another, and to undertake to discharge the debt of another? I answer, the meaning of the Apostle is, that he would have him forgive his Servant, and to require the debt neither of him, nor of his Servant; as appeareth evidently by the whole course of the preventing of this Objection. He would not therefore have him to contend with his poor penitent Servant, nor seek any trouble against him, unless he would account him a debtor in his stead. And furthermore, he addeth forth-with, that Philemon was indeed wholly his, to whom he owed all that he had: so that if he would require the debt, he should consider that the payment was already made. From this offer that Paul maketh, which is, to satisfy another man's debt. We learn, that it is a lawful thing for one man to become Surety for another, and to engage himself for his sure and faithful Friend, of whom he is well persuaded. Howsoever suretyship be to some very hurtful, and to all dangerous, yet it is to none in it self, and of it own nature, unlawful or sinful.

This truth is confirmed unto us by diverse examples, of such as have gone before us in the practice of this duty. When Jacob refused to send his youngest and beloved Son Benjamin (whom he begat in his old age) into Egypt with his other Sons to fetch Corn, saying; Ye have robbed me of my Children: Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin: all these things are against me. Then Reuben answered his Father, saying; Slay my two Sons if I bring him not to thee again: deliver him to mine hand, and I will bring him to thee again. Where we see, he offereth his Sons in hostage, and was ready to deliver them as pledges, and to bind to his Father, Man for Man, Son for Son, body for body, and life for life: which is a greater matter then to be bound money for money, and goods for goods. The like we see more evidently in the Chapter following, when Jacob did hang back, and seemed resolved not to let Benjamin depart with them; Judah is earnest with his Father, saying; Send the Boy with me, that we may rise and go, and that we may live and not die; both we, and thou, and our Children: I will be surety for him, of mine hand shalt thou require him: If I bring him not to thee, and set him before thee, then let me bear the blame forever.

In which words we see, that when Judah considered the cause of their long delay, and the extremitie of the great dearth, and the danger of their present estate, that except they had made this tarrying, doubtless they might have departed from their Father, and returned to their Father again the second time, he undertaketh the matter, and becometh surety for the Child. This is it which he freely and francklie confesseth before Joseph, when they had been brought back to him, the Cup being found in Benjamin's sack, Doubtless thy Servant became surety for the Child to my Father, and said; If I bring him not unto thee again, then will I bear the blame unto my Father forever: now therefore (I pray thee) let me thy Servant abide for the Child, as a Servant to my Lord, and let the Child go up with his Brethren. Whereby also it appeareth, that he considering with himself, that he could not without impeachment of his credit, without breach of his promise, and without heaviness to his Father, return to him, except the Child were with him: he offereth himself as a pawn, and pledge, and prisoner to Joseph, as before he had done to his Father.

This also we see euidentlie in the Acts of the Apostles, when Paul was troubled fought preaching Christ crucified, and risen again from the dead, Insomuch, that the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain vicious and Vagabond Fellowes, and having assembled the multitude, they made a tumult in the City: It is said, that Iason received him and other of the Brethren into his house, and offered to baile them, and to be bound for them, putting in good assurance that they should appear and be forth-coming. And if we require an example in the same kind and condition, with this that is mentioned in this Epistle: Our Savior expresseth the like, in the Parable of him that went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, who wounded him with their weapon, and robbed him of his Raiment, and left him in his trouble, even half dead: A certain Samaritan (as he iournied) came near unto him, and when he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds, and poured in Oil and Wine, and put him on his own Beast, and brought him to an Inn, and made provision for him: and on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the Host, and said unto him; Take care of him, and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will recompense thee. This Samaritan did show himself a right Neighbor, both in showing his present charity toward him, and in offering himself to become a surety for him. All these approved and allowed examples of the faithful, do sufficiently and evidently teach us, that it is in it self lawful to undertake payment for another, and to become Surety for him.

And if we require better grounds to satisfy us in this truth, let us enter into the strength of reason to assure us, without any wavering herein. First, weigh with me the example of Christ, an excellent pattern and president of the practice of this, an example far beyond all exception, an example that ouersadoweth, and dazeleth and darkeneth, all that cloud of witnesses produced by the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrews; he became surety for his Church unto his father, to pay the debt of our sins, and to satisfy his justice. If then any doubt, or make a question of the former examples, wherein we saw how Reuben offered himself to become as a pledge to his father, Judah to Joseph, Iason to the Governor, and the Samaritan to his Hoast: behold a most absolute and perfect example of Christ Jesus, who bound himself for us; his body for our bodies, and his soul for our souls, that our sinful bodies might be made clean by his body, and our souls, washed through his most precious blood. For the Prophet prophesieth, that he should make his soul an offering for sin. And Christ himself saith, My soul is very heavy even unto the death, &c. Thus did his love exceed and abound toward us, that our love might exceed and abound one toward another. To this purpose, the Apostle showeth, that Jesus is made a surety of a better Testament. He stood in our places, he took upon him our sins, he bare in his body the punishments due to us, he felt the wrath of God kindled against us.

Secondly, it is a fruit of love even this way to relieve and help such as are like to suffer damage and detriment by want of outward things. Now, human society and Christian piety requireth, that one should sustain and succor another in their necessity, as we see in the former examples of Reuben, Judah, Iason, and the Samaritan before mentioned and remembered. The life of man can hardly stand without lending and borrowing, without letting and hiring, without buying and selling, without bargaining and trusting one of another. It is a work of mercy to become surety, and therefore as lawful (no doubt) as to give or lend. The law of God commandeth us to help our Neighboures, as we are able, and as they have need: and they are to be relieved by such means as are in our power; by giving, by forgiving, by communicating to them such things as we have, and they have not. For if we love them, and have true Charity in us, we must not be wanting to them, but be ready to profit them and do them good, so far as we do not hurt our selves. It is no unwise sentence of a wise man, The wicked will not become surety, and he that is of an unthankful mind, forsaketh him that delivered him: declaring thereby, that as he is a fool that is surety for every man, so is he ungodly that in no wise will be surety for any man. We are commanded to help up our enemies Ox that is fallen, or his Ass that is sunk down under his burden; how much more ought we to show pity and compassion to our brother himself, vexed with the creditor, terrified with the prison, oppressed with his debt, and dismayed and discouraged with the payment at hand, that is to be made? So then, whether we do consider that Christ Jesus is made our surety, or that suretyship is a fruit of Christian love one toward another, in both respects we see, that in it self it is not to be disallowed or condemned.

The uses of this Doctrine are diligently to be considered of us. And first of all, if it be lawful and warranted to become surety one for another (as we have before plainly proved) it convinceth and confuteth those that hold it to be evil and unlawful, to give their word, or offer their band, or tender their promise or engage themselves any way for their brethren. Love is a debt that we owe to all men, as the Apostle testifieth, Rom. 13. 8. and therefore we ought not to fail in the performance thereof. It is imagined and supposed by some, that all or the greatest part of the controversies between man and man, and suites of Law, between party and party arise from hence, that things are taken up upon trust, that there is borrowing and lending among us, and that there is crediting one of another; and so would have these quite taken away, and the Names of them utterly abolished out of all Incorporations and Common-wealths.

It is reported, that among the Turks are few suites and actions commenced one against another, because there is with them no bargain or sale, no buying or selling, but for ready Money, and for present pay. But this is a plain fallation, to put that for a cause which indeed is not the cause. For the corrupt conscience of men, the covetous desire of Money, the greedy gaping after gain, the malicious humor of revenge, the bitter root of strife, and the extreme want of love are the true causes of all wranglings & suites one against another, not the lending and borrowing of Money or money-worth. Hence it is, that God never forbiddeth in his Law the use of hiring, or of borrowing, but rather rectifieth the judgment, directeth the practice, and prescribeth the rules of the right and lawful use thereof. Hence it is that the Lord saith in the Law; If thou lend Money to my people; that is, to the poor with thee, thou shalt not be as an Usurer unto him, ye shall not oppress him with Usury: If thou take thy Neighbors Rayment to pledge, thou shalt restore it unto him before the Sun go down: for that is his covering only, and this is his Garment, for his skin, wherein shall he sleep? Therefore when he crieth unto me, I will hear him, for I am merciful. In these words, he forbiddeth lending upon interest to the poor, and forbiddeth cruelty in retaining pawns and pledges taken from them that are in necessity, whereas they ought to be restored.

To this end and purpose Moses speaketh in another place, If one of thy Brethren with thee be poor, within any of thy Gates in thy Land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor Brother, but thou shalt open thine hand unto him and shalt lend him sufficient for his need which he hath. So the Prophet saith; The wicked borroweth and payeth not again: but the righteous is ever merciful, he giveth and lendeth, and his seed enjoyeth the blessing. To these sayings of Moses and the Prophets, accordeth the Commandment of Christ; Give to him that asketh: and from him that would borrow of thee turn not away. All these rules of direction serve to instruct us in the practice of the duties of love, and teach us how to behave our selves in buying and borrowing, in letting and lending unto our Brethren that call upon us for our help in the time of need. Secondly, hereby they are reprehended, that bind themselves by vow or oath, from binding themselves in any respect, or in any cause, or upon any occasion for any person. This is an ungodly and unlawful shift that some men use, to disable and to bar themselves from doing this work of charity, and showing this fruit of love to their Brethren. For many, to the end they might not be enwrapped and entangled in the deceitful snares of suretyship, do enter into covenant one with another, and do firmly bind themselves upon a great penalty and forfeiture, never to enterpose their credit for any man whatsoever. But it is sometimes a necessary duty of piety, and a testimony of the soundness of our Religion, and a great comfort to our consciences, to stand between our Brethren, and the harms that are coming toward them,

It is a general rule taught in the word of GOD, delivered by the law of nature, and observed by the Gentiles; that we should so deal with others, as we would be dealt with all our own selves. It is taught by the mouth of Christ; Give to every man that asketh of thee, and of him that taketh away the things that be thine, ask them not again: and as ye would that men should do to you, so do ye to them likewise. There is no man if he were in want, and stood in need of the bare word, or honest promise, or firm band and Obligation of another, but he would be ready to request it, and willing to use it, and content to accept of it. Wherefore, we are to remember that we ought not to hang back when as we ought to perform the like service, and to show like compassion to our brethren. It is therefore a great sin, and a great sign of the want of love, when we are called unto this duty, not to be forward faithfully to discharge it. We ought at all times to be lovingly affected and charitably disposed one toward another; so that when God calleth us, and withal enableth us with no damage, or trouble, or loss to our selves, to deliver our neighbor out of his misery, then to shut up our compassion, and to refuse to pass our promise for him, is an evident token, that little love and small kindness abideth in us. If then, the not doing of this duty, be an offense against God and our Brethren, how much more to covenant and condition with our selves or others, or to enter into great bands, that we will never enter into any bands (great or little) for them that call upon us, and mean honestly to discharge whatsoever we mercifully undertake for them? No Vow can be good, no Oath can be lawful, no Band can be allowed, no Covenant can be equal, no promise can be warranted, that is not well grounded, and advisedly uttered. For, seeing suretyship is not of it self, and in it self unlawful, to bind our selves wholly from it, cannot be esteemed to be lawful.

Let us therefore in the acknowledgement of this truth, show brotherly Love as occasion serveth, as the need of our Neighbor requireth, and as our own ability permitteth. Some are willing to help their brethren by word and deed, and are not able: In these a willing heart, and a ready mind, are to be accepted. Others, are able to do much good by their wealth, and by their word; yet they cannot be brought to show any relief either by the one, or by the other. Wherefore, it standeth you upon, that have this worlds good, to be ready to employ it as faithful Stewards this way, And to make you friends with the Riches of iniquity, that when ye shall want, they may receive you into everlasting habitations. And in the mean season, Make you Bags which wax not old, a treasure that can never fail in Heaven, where no thief cometh, neither Moth corrupteth. But howe many are there, that are even dead in good works? They are dumb and tongue-tied when they should speak for the poor, or give their word for them; their hands have a shaking palsy, that they cannot write their names to do them good; so that if one poor man were not more ready to plight his promise for another, then the rich, they might many times starve and be undone. These are they that care not what become of those that are in necessity, which shall one day give an account of their Stewardshippe, and leave behind them, the Goods wherein they delighted, and made them the God's wherein they trusted.

Secondly, seeing we have shown it to be lawful to enter into suretyship, (for if it had been simply and altogether forbidden, Paul would never have proffered himself to be surety unto Philemon for Onesimus.) This serveth diverse ways for our instruction. For hereby we are directed to be careful to use it lawfully. A thing that is of it self, and in it own nature laudable and lawful, may be used wickedly, unwarrantably, and unlawfully. The Apostle Paul speaking of the Law saith, We know that the Law is good, if a man use it lawfully. The thing that is good, may be used in a manner that is not good. But it is a true and common Proverb, That the faults of the Artificers are not to be ascribed to the Arts themselves. The Law is not to be blamed, but the Teachers of the Law, who did falsely apply it, and wrongfully wrest it, and ignorantly corrupt it. Now, that which the Apostle speaketh of the Law, may rightly be spoken of suretyship: It is good and lawful, if a man use it well and lawfully. But if we use it, and enter into it rashly, not rightly; ordinarily, not warily; foolishly, not wisely; desperately, not discreetly; if we entangle our selves with it, without much deliberation, without good circumspection, and without due consideration, it becometh unlawful unto us.

True it is, it is not evil in it self, but to him it turneth to be evil, that useth it evilly, according to that which the Lord saith by the Prophet, I gave them Statutes which were not good, and Judgments wherein they should not live: because they brake them and abused them, and were made more inexcuseable without them, in that they framed not their lives according to the obedience of them. It falleth out oftentimes, that such as have incombred themselves with rash promises, and unadvised suretyshippe, seldom live in peace and quietness, without distraction of mind, or fear of trouble, or danger of loss, or feeling of misery. Hence it is, that Solomon teacheth us to behave our selves wisely and warily in this point, and beateth upon no Doctrine more often, more earnestly, more effectually, then he doth upon this matter that we have in hand. In the sixth Chapter of the Proverbs, he saith, My Son, if thou be surety for thy Neighbor, and hast stricken hand with the Stranger, thou art snared with the words of thy Mouth, and art taken with the words of thine own mouth. Where he compareth him that is free from bills and bands, and books of the Creditors, free from suretyship and such like bondage, to a Bird that hath the liberty of the whole air, to fly therein at her own pleasure: but he that is bound by Promise, or Covenant, or Statute, is like a bird in the net of the Fowler, the which (albeit she flutter with hir wing and cry with her voice, and hop with her foot, yet) is fast caught, and may be killed, or put in the Cage. So is it with him that is entered into bands, or hath given his word for another; he hath after a sort lost his freedom, he standeth in danger of falling into mischief. Wherefore, that this giving of assurance to others, and for others, either by our word or hand, may be performed lawfully to the good of others, and not to the hurt of our selves, we must mark, remember, and practice, two points: First, consider the persons of others for whom it is done; Secondly, our own persons that do it.

Touching those persons for whom we become sureties, we must know, that we are not to engage our selves and our credit, for everyone that will crave it at our hands, or will desire us to pawn our Word, and enter into bands for them, and promise us fair to see us discharged: but in such men who oftentimes have a greater feeling of their own wants and necessities, then of freeing them out of woe, that have pledged themselves for them, we are to observe three things. First, that they be well known. Secondly, that they be honest and godly. Thirdly, that they be sufficient to pay that which they would have us bound unto another, to assure him that they will pay. These are the persons that we are bound to help, either for Piety, or Charity, or Honesty, or Amitie, or Consanguinity, or Affinity, all which bands do bind us one to another, and require some duty to be performed towards them. This is set down as a singular point of true Wisdom by the Wiseman, Prov. 11, 15. He shall be sore vexed that is surety for a Stranger, and he that hateth suretyship, is sure. And afterward in the same Book, to the same effect, Take his Garment that is surety for a Stranger, and a pledge of him for the stranger. As if he should say, pity him not, let him feel the smart of his folly and rashness, and let him bear the punishment of his headinesse and heedlessness: according to that which is set down in another place, A Man destitute of understanding, toucheth the hand, and becometh surety for his Neighbor. Whereby we see, that we must not be so over-seen to undertake for all men hand over head without difference, but for such as are well and thoroughly known unto us within and without, with whom we have lived and been long conversant, and eaten (as it is in the Proverb) a Bushel of Salt, of whose care and Conscience in his dealings with others, either in the same, or in the like cases we have had some good trial and experience. He that doth engage himself far for a stranger whom he doth not know, shall repent afterward when it is too late. And if we have seen or heard of his unfaithfulness in former times to others, we are deceived if we expect any better dealing.

Again, we are to observe that Solomon by the word [Stranger] doth not only understand such an one as is unknown unto us, but would have us beware of those that are lewd and ungodly. For so throughout the whole book of the Proverbs for the most part, he taketh and useth that word, By the Strange Woman; he meaneth, a wicked Woman. So in the former places his purpose is to teach us to look to our selves, that they be not of profane life and loose behavior, for whom we promise to become sureties; they ought to be known unto us for their honesty and piety, that so our hearts may trust and rest in them. But such as are ungodly, and given over to all licentiousness, and spend their days and wealth in beastly drunkenness, will never make conscience of their word or band to save us harmless. They may well flatter us till we be bound, but they regard not to discharge us after we are bound. They are unfaithful to God, and therefore we cannot look to find them faithful to our selves. Whereby we see, how grossly they are deceived, and how greatly they are deluded, and how sencelessly they are besotted, that will sooner be bound for Shifters, Gamsters, Bankerouts, Tosse-pots, and other base Companions, most unwilling, and most unable to keep touch with their Creditors, then such as are sober-minded, and honest livers, painful in their callings, and careful to bring up their families as they ought to do. These are they, that as they are loose in life, so they are lavish of their word, and prodigal of their tongue for their consorts. If there be any Malefactors guilty of any heinous & horrible crime, they are ready to offer their word or band to baile them, and deliver them from prison, and account it a trick and token of good fellowship to stand for them, and to keep them from their deserved punishment. And therefore they are oftentimes rewarded according to their works, and left in the danger which they have brought upon themselves. These are they that will complain against the unfaithfulness of others, whereas rather they might & should accuse their own rashness and foolishness, that joined with them in their impiety, and brought upon themselves great misery.

Moreover, as we must know them in the face, and in the faith, so we must hearken after their sufficiency. We must not undertake much for them, that are not able to discharge a little. It is notably said of Solomon, There is that maketh himself rich, having nothing; and that maketh himself poor, having great riches; that is, a man cannot rightly judge of the estate of everyone by their course of life, and outward carriage: many being poor, and in debt, being Bankrouts and broken fellows, make show of great wealth, by putting on brave apparel, by delighting in costly fare, by setting up sumptuous buildinges, by frequenting chargeable company, and by keeping a great port: this is exceeding vanity, and endeth in beggary. Others, on the other side, fain themselves needy, and complain of poverty; they go barely, and fare hardly, as if they were nothing worth, who notwithstanding are of great wealth and substance: This is extreme parsimony, and endeth in misery.

Seeing therefore, it is so ordinary and common for men to dissemble their estates, by making it seem better then it is, we must be wise-hearted, not to think all Gold that glistereth. The world is full of those that lift up themselves in pride above that they are indeed, and make show of that which is not in them in truth, and thereby endanger those that look no nearer, and try no further then the outward pomp and appearance. These are like those running streams, that promise continuance, and yet incontinently are dried up, and deceive such as trusted in them; or like those living creatures that stouer with their wings and feathers, or raise up their backs and bristles, whereby they seem much greater then Nature hath made them: Or like to Quagmyres, that apeare fair without, but if you come near them, you stand in danger to be plunged in them, and to perish by them. Thus we see what is to be considered of us, in making our selves sureties for others; Namely, that in regard of their persons, we must know them thoroughly, we must have experience of their honesty, and we must learn what is their sufficiency: But if they be strangers utterly unknown unto us, if they be Varlets void of Conscience and fidelity, if they be boasting and bragging mates without substance and ability, let us take heed we do not strike hand for them, nor be deceived by them, nor offer our selves as pledges or sureties for them, which is seldom done without hurt, never without danger.

Secondly, touching our own persons, before we are to enter into band or suretyship for others, we must mark and meditate upon two things. First, what is the sum for which we shall be obliged. Secondly, the means how we may be discharged. It standeth us greatly upon, to bethink our selves both what is the quantity, and what is our ability to answer it. It is a moral precept, and wise saying worthy to be written in our harts, Be not surety above thy power: for if thou be surety, think to pay it. So then, there is more required of us, then to look to the persons of others, who they are, and what they are. It is a vain thing to be wise abroad, and foolish at home; to be sharp-sighted in prying into the estates of others, and never to enter into the consideration of our own. For whatsoever the persons be, and whatsoever their earnestness be, draw not a Bow above thy strength. Albeit they be not enemies unto us, but friends; not strangers, but well known; not hateful persons, but most dear unto thee; not loose Companions, but honest and godly minded: yet be well advised what thou do, and look before thou leap. If it be for thy assured friend, that is as thy soul; if it were for thy Brother, the Son of thy Mother; if it were for thy Kinsman that is of thine own blood; if it were for thine own son, that is thine own flesh, yet engage not thyself so far, promise not so much, bind not thyself in so great a sum, as may impair thy estate, hurt thy family, hinder thy trade, diminish thy stock, and vndo thy posterity, if the debt should be required of thee, and the stone be rolled upon thee. For whosoever giveth his word and promise for another, bindeth himself to pay and to discharge that debt wherein the principal party faileth: and the Creditor oftentimes relieth more upon the sufficiency of the assurer, then upon the honesty of the borrower. We are in kindness and courtesy so to pleasure another, as that no man is bound to vndo, or to hinder himself.

Let every man therefore well weigh his own strength. It were foolish pity for the saving of another man's life to loose our own. It were amercillesse kind of mercy to leap into the water, and drown our selves, while we seek to deliver another. We are bound to have compassion of some, pulling them out of the fire, when we see them in danger to be burned; but it were more then childish to run into the fire, and so burn our selves. We are commanded to bear the burden one of another, but it were more then soolish pity to break our own shoulders, by sustaining the weight and bearing the burden of another man. Again, as we are to mark our own strength, so we are to consider our own discharge, how we may be secured and set at liberty. For, before we pass our word, or give our band & hand for the payment of other men's debtes and duties, we must know how we shall be assured to be delivered from that burden and bondage that we have undertaken. We ought indeed to bear good will to all men, but our good will should not be a looser. It is no Charity to receive a blow upon our own heads, to keep the stock from another. So then, let us remember these few points fit to be learned and practiced of us. Knowe what kind of man he is for whom thou becomest a surety. If he be a stranger to thee, meddle not with him: if he have broken his credit with any before, suspect him: if he be a shifting Companion, discard him; if he be insufficient to pay his own debt, deny him; if the sum be great, and thy ability little, so that it may hinder thee and thy Calling, if thou be driven to pay it, enter not into it; and if thou canst not see which way thou mayest be freed from the perrill and danger that hangeth over thy head, fly away from it, as from a Serpent that will sting thee, as from a Canker that will consume thee, as from a Gulf that is ready to swallow thee.

There are two eating sores, that are in Nature as a Gangrene, which are as two Vultures, that are continually gnawing upon the heart, & devour the flesh, even unto the bones; to wit, Usury, and Suretyship. These are near of Kin one to another, and are joined together as the Father and Son, as the cause, and the effect. The unmercifulness of the Usurer constraineth the poor debtor to crave mercy of the surety. I speak of that Usury that byteth, and of such suretyship as vndoeth: Of that Usury that oppresseth, and of such suretyship, as when it hath taken away the coat, will take away the Cloake also, which strippeth a man of the Jewels where-with he was decked, of the furniture wherewith he was stored, of the Garments wherewith he was clothed. Notwithstanding, there is great difference to be made between them: This Usurer is as the Hunter; the Surety as the prey: The Usurer as the Horse-leech doeth cry always bring, bring; the poo•... Surety is made as the Porter on the Packe-horse, that beareth till his shoulders break. It is necessary for every man to have these notes before his eyes, that he be not suddenly taken, or rather over-taken by the instigation and importunity of others. This reproveth such as make an ordinary and common matter of it, and a notable point of good fellowship, the part of a good nature & loving disposition, to be of a flexible nature (as the soft wax) to yield to every man's request in this business. We see generally, that they which have the least purpose to pay, and the smallest care to perform that which they have promised, are for the most part most forward to undertake and offer themselves, their words, their wealth, their bands, their bodies for other men. But such as are most careful and Conscionable in payeng their Debtes, answering the Arrerages that accrue by the false-hoode of feigned friends, are most backward to yield their necks to this yoke, assuring themselves, that it is far better to walk at liberty, then to have his feet put in the Stockes for Correction. Wherefore, let no man blame those men that hang back, and are not ready to serve every man's turn, nor to grant every man's request with their Band and Obligation. How many are there in this present, and have been in former times, that have been quite vndoone, and fallen into decay, and with that fall, have thrown down their Wives and Children forever, by yielding to gratify others, and damnifie themselves thorough this means of rash Suretyship? Such as are cruel Creditors, and live upon the prey, as the Eagle doth upon the Carkasse, will show no more mercy to the debtor, that is come in his danger, then the miserable rich man did to the Begger that lay at his Gate.

This we see in the Creditor mentioned, 2 Kings 4, 1. where one of the Wives of the Children of the Prophets, cometh, crieth, and complaineth unto Elisha, That her Husband that feared the Lord being dead, the Creditor came to take her two Sons to be his Bond-men. This also appeareth in the practice of the unmerciful Rich-men, mentioned in Nehemiah 5, 1. 4, 5. so that there was a great out-cry of the people, and of their Wives against them, who said; We have borrowed Money for the Kings Tribute upon our Lands and our Vineyardes, and now our flesh is as the flesh of our Brethren, and our Sons as their Sons: And loe, we bring into subjection our Sons and our Daughters, as Servants; and there be of our Daughters now in subjection, and there is no power in our hands, for other Men have our Lands, and our Vineyards.

If then, we would not willingly draw upon our selves the burdens of other men, nor see with our eyes the taking away of our goods, for which we have labored, nor hear with our ears the cry of our wives and Children spoiled of their hope and expectation, nor feel our selves bitten with hunger, pinched with cold, thrown into prison, and vexed with all kind of miseries, let us look to it betimes, least we repent when it is too late. It is profitable and Heavenly Counsel given by Solomon, Prov. 22, 26, 27. Be not thou of them that touch the hand, nor among them that are surety for debts; If thou hast nothing to pay, why causest thou that he should take thy bed from under thee? It is a true saying, [He is happy; that can by other Men's harms can learn to beware.] Let us not be cruel and unmerciful to our own Families, nor rush our selves into these Quicke-sandes of troubles and turmoyles that after follow at the heels of this rashness. Let us use all carefulness and diligence to know the party for whom we promise to become Pay-Masters. Let us weigh his Truth and Honesty, his Estate and Ability, his Profession and Piety: And withal, let us examine our selves thoroughly, and ponder our own sufficiency, that we be not at unawares surprised and hastily overtaken. Let us prove our selves, and enter seriously into this Cogitation and consideration, whether we be able, without shaking of our Wealth or Substance, or diminishing of our credit and estimation, or weakening of our estate, to discharge that which we have undertaken, if our friend for whom we are bound, should fail and fall down. Neither let any Foolish and Vndiscrete persons Object, that this pretending of danger, and entering with wariness, is to be accounted no better then a wanting of Love that ought to be in us: For, it is rather a point of good Wisdom and Discretion, to look unto our own estate, and to beware, and to be warned in time, by the falls and ruins of other Men. How many are fallen from great Riches, to extreme poverty; from much, to little; from an high condition, to great Beggerie and misery; and been as it were consumed with the scorching heat that this fire of Suretyshippe hath cast out? Wherefore, let us learn to be Wise betimes, and take heed by the chaunges and chances of other men, least by engaging our selves too deeply for other men's debtes, our minds be distracted with pensive thoughts, our hearts be pierced with bitter Sorrowes, and our bodies be cast into loathsome prisons, as it hath fallen out to very many before our eyes. If Riotous livers, and prodigal persons, that wast their wealth in vanity, and spend their goods vnthriftilly, do request and require us to give our words, or to be bound in bands for them, we are not bound to do it by the Law of God; nay, we are bound not to do it by the Law of God: we are bound to provide for our own families, or else we have denied the Faith, and are worse then Infidelles that are in the world, and out of the Church. The Apostle, in giving of Alms, and extending of our liberality towards the poor Saints, Would not have one overburdened, and another eased: One oppressed, and another released: One pressed down, another to high lifted up. The same proportion is to be holden and observed in this case. Indeed, Love seeketh not her own, but is bountiful; Nevertheless, it is no fruit of Love required to be in us, that one should be grieved, and another eased; that one should be hindered, and another helped.

Lastly, seeing it is not unlawful or forbidden, to bind a man's self by band or otherwise to another, it ought to teach all Creditors and Lenders, not to be rough and rigorous over a surety. No cruelty toward any is lawful. If it be a Malefactor that hath committed an heinous crime, and deserveth the punishment of death, he is not to be proceeded against with a desire of private revenge, and a satisfying of our cruel mind, and a thirsting after blood. If it be a Debtor that is fallen into decay, he is to be dealt withal in Mercy and Commiseration, not with Rigour and Seueritie. If then, we are to deal so with a Debtor, much more with a surety. When we see a man that hath been well advised in it, and circumspect to prevent dangers, and foresee damages so far as the eye of man's understanding and judgment can reach, we ought not to take advantage of his error, but to show him what favor possibly we can. If thou seest him fallen into thy hands, deal with all mercifulness toward him, and consider not so much what thou mayst do by Law, as what thou oughtest to do in love: neither think what rigor of Justice will permit, but what the right of equity will allow thee to do. It is a true saying, that the Heathen saw into, Extreimity of Law, is oftentimes the greatest injury and want of Charity that can be. Hence it is, that Solomon exhorteth sureties to deal wisely, to rid themselves out of danger, and to use all lawful means to free themselves from trouble, and not delay to promote and procure their own good, Prov. 6, 3. My Son, if thou be surety for thy Neighbor, do this now, and deliver thyself, seeing thou art come into the hand of thy neighbor, go and humble thyself, and solicit thy friends. He would never give this devise and direction what he should do that as ensnared and entrapped by suretyship, unless the Creditor were to be drawn to show pity.

Now, in these words, he giveth a three-fold counsel what to do, and how to behave our selves when we are entangled with rash suretyship. First, we must not sit still, or neglect the opportunity to deliver our selves from danger, we must submit our selves to him, to whom we are bound, and into whose power thou art fallen, and at whose mercy thou standest; crave pardon and patience at his hands, request him earnestly to be friendly and favorable toward thee in relieving or releasing thee, and letting of thee alone. Say unto him, and say it in truth of thy heart, and with full purpose of performing, Doubt not of your debt, be content for a while, and (God willing) I will discharge all at the last. Secondly, we are willed and warned to go to our friend, or to him whom we took for our friend, when we became surety for him, and to urge him instantly to pay his own Debt, and discharge thee of the danger without delay; tell him, it is for his cause, that thou endurest this trouble, and bearest this burden, and that for doing good to him, thou sufferest and sustainest this loss: will him to consid•... of thy kindness that haddest not the power to deny the engaging of thy •else to help him in his necessity.

Thirdly, we are admonished and advised to go to our friends that lou• us and desire our good, and are greatly grieved for our affliction, entreat•...g them to pity our case, pardon our negligence, and help us out of these b•iars in which we are entangled, hoping never to come into the like inco•...berances again. These are the ways that we are to take, and the pathe• that we are to walk in. In the practice of them being sanctified to our use▪ we may look for a blessing from God, and hope to find comfort in our own hearts. But if thou think to escape the hands of thy Creditors, by hyding or absenting of thyself from him, or standing out against him, or holding suit with him, and answering him at the Law, thou art deceived. Thou shalt better provide for thine own peace and security, by submitting thyself to the party to whom thou art bound, by entreating the person for whom thou art bound, and by soliciting thy friends, to consider thy case and their own in thee. All this doth Solomon not only counsel us to do, but to do it speedily, and to take little rest, until we be delivered from this danger, saying, Give no sleep to thine eyes, nor slumber to thine eye lids: deliver thyself as a Roe from the hand of the Hunter, as a Bird from the hand of the Fowler.

Hereunto accordeth and agreeth the saying of Christ our Savior, While thou goest with thine adversary to the Ruler, as thou art in the way, give diligence in the way, that thou mayest be delivered from him, lest he draw thee to the Judge, and the Judge deliver thee to the Jailor, and the Jailor cast thee into prison: I tell thee, thou shalt not depart thence, till thou hast paid the utmost Mite. There is nothing to be gotten, by opposing of our selves against such as may hurt us, and by keeping out of their sight, with a purpose to defraud them, and to defend our selves. It is most true, which Solomon speaketh in another place, The Rich ruleth the poor, and the borrower is Seruaunt to the Man that lendeth. Whereby he meaneth, that commonly it falleth out among men, that the rich over-rule the poor, and that the Debtors are Servants unto their Creditors. To conclude, if we show our selves ready and willing to put in practice the Rules given unto us, to bring us out of the Briars and bondage of suretyshippe, we shall find rest to our souls, and God will incline the heart of our Creditors, to show favor unto us, who hath the hearts of all men in his own hands.

Verse 19. [I Paul, have written this with mine own hand, I will recompense it.]

Philemon might well have contented himself with the bare word and naked Promise of Paul, forasmuch as his word and deed did not differ one from the other. This is the defense that he maketh for himself to the Corinthians, when he was accused of lightness and inconstancy, promising to come unto them, and yet he came not, When I was thus minded to come unto you, did I use lightness? Or mind I those things which I mind, according to the Flesh, that with me should be yea and nay? Yea, GOD is faithful, that our word toward you, was not yea and nay. Notwithstanding, albeit his word was as good as his bande, and his saying accorded with his doing, and his promise were as strong as an Obligation, so that he dealt not as men usually do, which will rashly avouch anything that cometh into their head, and by and by change their purpose in the turning of an hand. We see in this place, how he, promising to satisfy Philemons damage, and willing to leave no scruple or doubt in him, doeth farther confirm it, and assureth him by his hand-writing and Couenants, albeit they two were great and near friends, and had good interest one in another.

We learn from hence, that civil Instruments and Couenants in writing, together with other assurances that may be asked and granted, are good and lawful, even amongst the best and greatest Friends. I say, when Debtes are owing, when bargains are made, when money is lent, when Lands are sold, and when there are mutual Contracts between man and man; between Friend and Friend; between Kinsman and Kinsman; assurance in writing with hand and seal may be interchangeably given and received. This we see in the practice of all people in former times. When Abraham had made a Covenant of peace and unity with Abimelech K. of Gerar, he did deliver unto him seven Lambes, That the taking of them might be a witness of the truth, and an assurance unto him that he had digged that Well of waters. To this purpose, did the King require Abraham to take an Oath and solemnly to swear by the name of God, that he would not deal falsely and fraudulently with him, nor hurt him, nor his Children, nor his Children's Children. The like (or rather greater) assurance is required and yielded in the 23. Chapter of the same Book, where Abraham, buying a field of Ephron the Hittite, requireth an Instrument with witnesses, and a delivery of the possession, The Field of Ephron, which was in Machpelah, and over against Mamre, even the Fielde and the Cave that was therein, and all the Trees that were in the Fielde, which were in all the Borders round about, was made sure unto Abraham for a possession, in the sight of the Hittites, even of all that went in at the gates of his City. Where we see, all the circumstances and manner of the contract which Abraham maketh are set down and expressed.

First, we see a large description of the place that was bought, together with the bounding and confronting of the place, as also the appurtenances; Namely, the Trees that grew therein. Secondly, we see the name of the seller set down, who did openly avouch the sale thereof, as being his own. Thirdly, the name of the buyer, that no doubt might be left. Lastly, the witnesses are recorded of this bargain and sale, that none might hereafter lay claim unto it, or deny unto Abraham the lawful possession of it, and the holding of it to him and his. And if we would yet see this more clearly, we have more evident confirmation of it in the propheties of Jeremiah, where to show the certainty of the return of the Israelites into their Lande and Country again, he maketh a solemn purchase, I bought the Fielde of Hanameel mine Vncles son, and weighed him Silver, even seven Shekels, & ten pieces of Silver; and I writ in the Book, and signed it, and took witnesses, and I gave the Book of the possession unto Baruch, in the sight of Hanameel mine Vnckles Son, and in the presence of the Witnesses, which were written in the Book of the possession, before all the Jews that sate in the Court of the Prison.

In these words (which are more at large related in the Prophet) we see what assurance and security was taken and given, with Writing, Sealing, Witnesses, delivery and keeping the Rolles and Records thereof. This is set down likewise, in the latter end of the same Chapter, Jeremiah 32. 43, 44. where he saith, The Fields shall be possessed in this Lande, whereof ye say, It is desolate, without Man or Beast, and shall be given into the hand of the Chaldeans: Men shall buy Fieldes for Silver, and make Writings, and seal them, and take witnesses in the Lande of Benjamin, and round about Jerusalem, &c. for I will cause their Captivity to return, saith the Lord. This discovereth the practice of those times, and delivereth the forms and fashions observed among that people. When Jacob and Laban made a Covenant either with other, which might be a witness between them both, they confirmed it by Oath, and set up an heap of stones, to testify the amity and friendship renewed between both parties. In the Parable of the unjust Steward it is remembered, that all Debtors and Debts were recorded in writing, with the sum that everyone owed: For he called unto everyone of his Masters Debtors, and said unto the first: How much owest thou unto my Master? And he said, An hundred measures of Oil. And he said to him, Take thy writing, and sit down quickly, and write fifty. Then said he to another, How much owest thou? And he said, An hundred measures of Wheat: Then he said to him, take thy writing, and write fourscore. In this Parable, we see the manner that was used in the days of old; namely, that Books of reckonings and accounts were commonly kept, and usually brought forth, when men did level their debts, and make even one with another. All which Testimonies, ratifying the practice of former times & persons, serve to teach us, that it is lawful for the faithful, to use all circumspection to assure their debts, bargains, and contracts one with another.

And if we would enter into a further consideration of this truth, we shall see a plain confirmation of it by sundry reasons. For first, it is a common Proverb among us, Fast bind, fast find. That which is loosely bound, is lightly lost; but a three-fold Cord well tied and twisted by word, by writing, by seal, is not easily broken. A word affirmeth, a writing confirmeth, a seal assureth, and everyone of them bindeth to perform our promise. We see by daily experience, that men are both mortal and mutable, and words prove oftentimes but wind, albeit ratified with the greatest solemnity. True it is, our word ought to be as good as a thousand Obligations, but deceit is bred naturally in our hearts, so that we cannot ground upon the bare word of men to find good dealing. Otherwise, the Lord would never have given so many Laws to restrain wrong and Injustice, fraud and oppression. All these, or at least a great part of them are prevented, by setting down our Couenants and Agreements in Writing, under our hands and seals.

Secondly, it is needful to have this manner of dealing among us, to the end that equity and upright dealing might be observed among us, and that all occasions of wrangling and wresting of words and bargains, may be cut off, as with the sword of Justice. This is it which the Prophet Jeremiah expresseth in the 32. Chapter of his prophesies, mentioned before, where the Doctrine hath his confirmation, Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, Take the writings, even this Book of the possession; both that is sealed, and this Book that is open, and put them in an earthen vessel, that they may continue a long time. Where he maketh mention of a double writing or instrument, which is here called after the manner of the Hebrews [A Book,] One of them was unsealed; the other, was sealed, and so concealed; & both of them were evidences to assure unto him the Land that he bought and purchased. That which was sealed, seemeth to be the Original, and as it were the Court Rolles authentically recorded and laid up for the perpetual remembrance of the matter. That which was open and unsealed, seemeth to be a Coppie, delivered and taken word for word out of the former, to be carried about with them into Captivity. The end of both was for continuance, that the bargain and sale that passed between them, might never be forgotten.

Thirdly, that all occasion of Controuersie and couzenage might be taken away. For if there were no writings to show (the memories of men being frail, and their practices being unfaithful) the world would be full of all loose dealings, and concord would be banished from among men. The end why Abraham set seven Lambes by themselves, was; because Abimelech should receive them at his hands, to be a witness of their agreement, and that all controversies were finished and ended between them. It appeareth many times, when proofs in writing fail, that false witnesses are suborned, and so the seats of Justice are subverted: all which are easily remedied, when good assurances are at the first taken.

Fourthly, good assurance is to be allowed and received, to the end we may safely dispose of such things as are in our power and possession, either to our posterity or otherwise. Hence hath been in all ages, the laudable and commendable use of making Wills and Testaments, which the word of God approveth, by delivering diverse rules belonging to that profession. The Law of God and of Nature, hath taught; that the Will and Testament of the dead, ought not to be abrogated or altered: and that no Will is of force until the Testator be dead. Now, we know not whether the gifts that we give, & the Legacies that we bequeath, be of our own proper goods, or the goods of other men, except we have before hand a sufficient assurance of them made unto us. Seeing therefore, where there is a fast knot, there is a sure keeping; seeing upright dealing is to be observed; seeing occasions of quarrels and contentions are to be stopped; and seeing the goods that God hath given unto us, are rightly to be bestowed: it followeth, that everyone is to provide for the security and quietness of his estate by all lawful means, not only by word of mouth, but by assurance in writing, that thereby he may foresee the danger that may come upon him, and be wary and circumspect in all his doings; according to the saying of Christ, the Teacher and Author of true wisdom, Be ye wise as Serpents, and innocent as Doves. For if wisdom do season all our affairs, then also our contracts, that are common in this life.

We have heard this Doctrine confirmed: Now let us see how it may be applied, and what uses may be concluded out of it. First of all, it setteth for reproof of the Anabaptists, who are hereby directly overthrown, that condemn the property of goods and possessions, together with all contracts and conditions that pass from one to another. For we have shown, that bargains and sales are lawful, not only among the Gentiles, but even among the Christians; not only under the rudiments of the Law, but in the times of the Gospel. The end of such writings Obligatory is nothing else, but to assure everyone of his own, and to make it appear what belongeth to another man. If then it be lawful to possess House and Lands; Money and movables, as our own substance; it is as lawful to crave and take assurance of the possession of them, that they may not by fraudulent means be alienated from us. But of this we have spoken before. Secondly, they are reprehended, who are offended that men in these cases will not trust them, and rely upon their words without farther assurance in writing, and refuse to give men good security. For all is little enough, and many times too little.

I have heard it credibly affirmed and avouched by some Master of that profession, that albeit a conveyance of Land, a deed of estate, an Indenture of Couenants be drawn, as sure and certain as learned counsel can devise and contrive; yet it is an easy matter to pick holes in them, and to take advantage of them. We see daily, what quirkes and tricks of Law are broached and invented, whereby such as are simply and honestly minded, are defrauded and defeated, of Houses, Lands, and other Chattels. Never was there so little truth, and so great craft and cozenage in the World, as in these days. Satan himself seemeth now to have opened all his pack of devises, and his Instruments as good Scholars of so bad a Master, have learned sundry devilish practices, whereby true meaning men are oftentimes notoriously gulled.

Some there are that are thought to study little else, then to find wants and imperfections; in Statutes, in Leafes, in Lands, and in assurances given between man and man. This is the cause, that the Makers of our Laws are compelled to use so many words, and to heap up so many Tearmes, that thereby they might heal this sore, and remedy this mischief. Let us not therefore grieve or grudge to make sure that whereof we have made sale. No man ought to be so simple as not to ask it; and no man ought to be so peevish as to deny it. We may easily behold such as are friends today, to be enemies tomorrow: one while they affirm, another while they deny; at one time they promise to pay or repay; at another they hang back at it, and make it strange that they should be challenged of their promise. Everyone Seeketh his own, and not the things of other men: and how many have been foully deceived, and guilefully beguiled by trusting too far? But there is no reason or equity, that when we have received Money, we should deny or delay to give good security, and that other men should stand to our courtesy. Wherefore, it is a great injury and In-justice, to require men to depend upon us and our word, without further assurance in black and white. For albeit, we mean not falsely, but faithfully; not fraudulently, but honestly; and our Word be as firm as our Oath; and our Oath as sure as our Band; and our Band as good as ready payment, and present possession, in regard of our honest meaning and true intent: yet we cannot live forever, and we know not what may fall out after our decease. But some man may say; what need so much a do among Friends? And what stir do you make, as if we were Infidels, and not Christians? Or what need so many Couenants and conveyances, where there is a shorter course? And where the profession of Christ is a stronger band, then all the writings that the wit of man can imagine and set down? I answer, that all they that profess Christ in word, do not believe in him in heart. And albeit, the saving knowledge of Christ be a band of all bands, to link us together; yet this doth not hinder or abolish civil contracts, to be assured to us and our posterities. Be it, that we are the greatest friends, there is so much more need, of so much the more ado among them that are Friends, thereby to keep them Friends, and to hold the knot of friendship between thē. For oftentimes it falleth out, that through want of words, and writings, and witnesses; such as have been most faithful friends, have become most bitter enemies one to another. Were not Paul and Philemon Friends, near Friends; yea, the nearest and dearest Friends that could be? Were they not as the Father and the Son? Did they not so live together and love together, That they had all things common? Yet we see Paul offereth assurance of his word and promise in writing, subscribed with his own hand; I Paul have written it with mine own hand. Yea, notwithstanding all assurances that can be desired and demanded, we may well perceive by daily and lamentable experience, what suits and strifes arise about Titles and conveyances of Lands and Liuing: how much more would we contend one with another, if there were no Instruments drawn, no Evidences made, no writings engrossed, to testify the truth among us? All Kingdoms and Cities, all Towns and Villages, would be full of stirs and strifes, of troubles and tumults, that would never end: and the Judges and Justices might stand from Morning to Euening to hear cases, and decide controversies between man and man, to the wearying of themselves and others. He that hath an heavy pursse and a strong heart, would never rest satisfied, if no writing or records could be produced against him. Wherefore, it standeth all men upon; on the one side, willingly to yield good assurance; and on the other side, to ask good security, where they buy and sel, or borrow, or bargain, and do give or take upon trust; through want whereof sometimes, not only the Rents and Reuennues, but the Lands themselves are spent in suits and actions of Law.

Lastly, it reproveth such, as notwithstanding assurance given, do make no conscience to pay debts and demands due, upon agreement to their brethren. These are forward to give assurance, but backward to make performance. Many there are, that are content to yield to what promises, and enter into what bands you will crave: but when they have done, they use no care, and make no account to pay their debts, and to perform the Couenants whereunto they have consented and condescended, contrary to the counsel of the Prophet, who asking the question; Who shall dwell in the Tabernacle of the Lord, and who shall rest in his holy Mountain? He answereth, He that sweareth to his own hindrance, and changeth not. It is requisite for everyone, to be as wary and well advised in his promises as he can, and to deliberate with himself and his Friends, that he do nothing rashly: but when he hath stricken hands, and made a promise to his Neighbor, he ought to perform it, albeit it be to his hindrance, unless peradventure he be released.

Be it therefore known unto all men, that as it is lawful to converse and commerse one with another; so it is meet and convenient that they should deal, not upon vncertaineties, but upon assurances, as they that build not upon a sandy ground, but upon a sound foundation. As it is right and lawful, that there should be buying and bargaining, purchasing and possessing among us, so is it right and lawful, that there should be Deedes and Indentures to testify the same, and as it were to live when we are dead. And as it is needful and expedient so long as the world endureth and continueth, there should be borrowing and lending; so it is as necessary, there should be Bills and Bands, to show the truth, and to bind men to the payment of all dues, debts, and demands whatsoever: and after payment well and truly made, to give discharge & acquittance accordingly, that controversies (so much as may be) may be avoided, and concord (as far as is possible) may be maintained and established. They therefore are unworthy to live in any well-ordered and governed Common-wealth, that refuse (being able) to perform their promises, and satisfy their Creditors, and cancel the Obligations, that themselves have sealed and delivered before many Witnesses, who albeit they stand not by the high-way side with Swordes, or Staues, or Rapiers, or other Weapons, yet are indeed no better then Thieves and Robbers; nay, many times are worse, inasmuch they bring greater damage, and are the means of undoing many men. Such are they that are angry, and much offended with Notaries and Scriveners, which by their writings bind them (as they imagine) too strongly: and when they see themselves troubled and arrested upon the Obligation, they hate them, and curse them, and cannot behold them with a friendly look and a loving countenance: as if the fault were in the Clearkes, Bailiffs, and other public Officers, not in themselves and their own unfaithfulness, which is all one, as if a Male-factor should charge the Executioner (who is the Minister of Justice) to be the cause of his death,

Secondly, seeing it is needful, that to confirm our lawful contractes, there be Evidences to show, it is a good point of wisdom required of us, to use the advise of such as are learned in the law, and are both men of knowledge and of conscience. For here (if in anything else) we shall find the common Proverb true; That the best, is best cheap. Many there are that regard the Fee more then the Cause; and speak for themselves, rather then for the party that hath chosen them. Again, many suites arise through ignorance and unskillfulness of the Law; wherefore, it is meet we should resort to a learned Counsel: so that partly through the want of honesty and piety in some; partly, the want of skill and practice in others, many poor Clients go to wrack. We must all deal in the matter of our goods, as wise Patients do for the curing of their bodies, and the recovery of their health. They will not go to every Slubberer or Sorcerer; to every Leach or Mountebank, to take charge of their bodies; to whom a man would be loath to commit his Beasts. If any doubts arise, avoid all forgery, and perjury, suborning of false Witnesses, counterfeiting of Evidences, and such like deceitful practices; as the God of this world hath taught the Children of darkness and confusion. Take that course which God alloweth, and Justice warranteth; repair to men of that profession, give him good instruction, and follow thou his direction. For this purpose, I will crave leave to set down three rules, that are required and are to be performed of men of Law; the observation whereof, shall give peace and comfort of conscience with God, and gain them Crowns and credit among men.

First of all, if they disdain not to be advised and taught by us, let the end of all their pleas and proceedings, be the finding out of the truth. Let this be the mark that they shoot at, and the star whereby they direct all their course, which seasoneth all their pleadings (as it were) with Salt. If they regard not the trial of the truth, nor which way the cause go, so they may receive their Fee; they abuse the balances of Justice, and turn equity into Iniquity. God is truth, and everyone that belongeth unto him, should labor to bring the truth to light. It is a general rule taught by the Apostle, We cannot do anything against the truth, but for the truth. Woe therefore unto them that dig deep to hide the truth, and invent shifts to bury it out of sight, that it may not take place; and do all things against the truth, and nothing for it.

The second rule is, that they do not delay the causes of their Clients, and protract the time in hope of farther gain; from Tearme to Tearme, and from year to year. As there may be too great hast, so there may be too great delay, and there are Rocks on either hand; the safest course, is to sails in the midst between them both, for fear of shipwreck. It is a duty of the Surgeon, not to linger the curing of his Patient, and to torment him a whole year, where he might restore him in a quarter. Suites of Law are tedious and chargeable; they are as the fits of a Feauer, that vex the body and trouble the mind. It is an evil course, to keep sores always raw, and wounds green, in hope to get Mony: So it is an uncharitable proceeding, to retain causes, and to keep them always on foot, except they may have for expedition.

Lastly, as the end of their pleading must be truth and verity, and the course of it without delay; so it is required of them, when they know the cause to be evil, and see the manifest signs of an overthrow, that they do not conceal it, but discover and open it unto their Clients. They are to forewarn them of the end, that they do not entangle themselves in unnecessary and unlawful suites. It is delivered as a duty of the Physician, and of the Minister, when they come to a sick man that lieth on his death-bed, and see manifest signs of death, that they do not hide it from him, nor flatter him in his sickness, saying; I hope you shall do well and recover, and be as merry among your Neighbors as ever you were; but rather with wisdom warn him, and with discretion certify him of it, to the end he may renounce all confidence in earthly things, and put his whole affiance in God; according to that sentence of the Apostle, We received the sentence of death in our selves, because we should not trust in our selves, but in God which raiseth the dead. Thus ought it to be with the careful and conscionable Lawyer, when he seeth the cause of his Client desperate and languishing, without hope of life, he ought not to draw him on, and move him to proceed, but persuade him to give over, and tell him the danger that will come upon him. It is too late to bid the Soldier beware, when the victory is lost. The wisest way is to prevent a mischief betimes, before it be too late. So then, to truss up these things closely together, and to couch them in a narrow room, if he shall use his diligence that the truth may be discovered, and right take place, and make this the end of his pleading; if he bend his wits to give quick dispatch to the causes he undertaketh, and not to prolong the time for his own advantage: And last of all, if he lay open the weakness of his Clients cause unto him, and forewarn him of the issue thereof; he shall do the part of an honest man; of a faithful Christian; of a learned Lawyer; and of a discreet Counselor.

Thirdly, from these assurances in writing, to confirm our promises one to another; we learn the cause why it pleased the Lord to use so many ways and means with us, to give us his Word, his Oath, his promises, his Miracles, his Couenants, and his Seals. We learn wherefore all these do serve, even to strengthen our Faith in the good meaning of God toward us. And as he thereby assureth his own graces, so he provideth for our weakness. If there were in us that measure of Faith that ought to be, the bare word of God might be all-sufficient to teach us to acknowledge him to be the God of our salvation, and to depend upon him for our Redemption. But seeing we have much infidelity in us, and are cumbered with doubting in the promises of God, it pleased him in great mercy to provide a remedy for our infirmity: so that we may truly say; where Sin abounded, Grace hath abounded much more. Thus we see the Lord Jesus dealt with Thomas, one of the twelve, when he believed not the Resurrection, nor those that were chosen Witnesses thereof, but said; Except I see in his hands the print of the Nailes, and put my Finger into the print of the Nailes, and put mine hand into his side, I will not believe it. Here we may behold (as in a Glass) the example of exceeding great infidelity and unbelief; he neither believeth, nor will believe; he will live by sight, and not by Faith. This was no small obstinacy and incredulity in one of the Apostles, who deserved to perish in his sin. But Christ Jesus raiseth him out of this sleep, and offereth mercy with much compassion, as it were pulling him out of this danger; Put thy Finger here, and see mine hands, and put forth thine hand, and put it into my side, and be not faithless, but faithful. This is it which the Evangelist Matthew setteth down, Chapt. 12. A bruised Reed shall he not break, and smoking Flaxe shall he not quench, till he bring forth judgment unto victory. Now, such as Thomas was, such we are all by Nature: we cannot be persuaded to believe, except we see and feel. We will not believe the bare word of God, but are always ready to waver through unbelief.

Hence it is, that God in great mercy did from the beginning of the world, add to his word his Sacraments; to assure his people, that as he is the GOD of truth, so he meaneth truly, and performeth effectually whatsoever he hath promised. The Sacraments therefore, are as signs and seals of his promises, and dependencies upon the word that is gone out of his own mouth. The Apostle speaking of circumcision given to Abraham, saith; He received the sign of Circumcision, as the Seal of the righteousness of the Faith which he had, when he was uncircumcised, that he should be the Father of all them that believe, not being circumcised, that righteousness might be imputed unto them also. Whereby we may see, what the Nature of the Sacraments is, to wit; that they are visible signs instituted of God, to seal up his promises in the hearts of the faithful. The Author or efficient cause is God, who only hath power and authority to appoint and ordain them, because he it is that can give force and efficacy unto them. The matter is the visible sign: the form is the manner of institution, according to the Rites taught and prescribed in the word.

The end is, that the faithful may be confirmed and strengthened in the truth of GOD. The word was given to instruct the Church by hearing: the Sacraments were given to instruct the Church both by it, and by the rest of the senses. Indeed, if we were Angels, and not men; and were Spirits without bodies, and heavenly Creatures, not earthly: we should not stand in need of visible and bodily Sacraments; but because our faith is feeble, and wrestleth with Satan, the World, the Flesh, and such Enemies; it wanteth props and pillars to uphold it, that it do not fall. For albeit our Faith be mingled with doubting, & assaulted strongly with the waves of infidelity, yet it ceaseth not to be a true Faith. An imperfect Faith is a sound Faith, though it be weak; so that it standeth us upon with the Apostles, To pray for the increase thereof. Faith goeth before the Sacraments: the which without Faith, are idle and empty signs, without profit, without comfort, without use.

True it is, the Infidels, as the Egyptians, Ethiopians, and other profane people, who neither worshipped the true God, nor embraced the true Religion, had the outward use of circumcision (as Histories testify) as also the Turks and Jews have at this day: but their cutting off the flesh is not the Sacrament of God, but a mere civil thing; yea, an evil thing. Thus then we see, that the Sacraments were ordained of God to help our infirmity. The promise of God is certain, and his Covenant doth not waver: neither can these outward Seals make it stronger. But it is we that stumble and stagger, and have need to be supported. And woe unto us if we use not this help and remedy left unto us, nor profit thereby in confidence and assurance of our salvation. For God hath after a sort bound himself unto us, as by an Obligation. Indeed man, notwithstanding his words, his oaths, his promises, his bands, his seals, and his assurances; is oftentimes changeable and unconstant: but it is not so with God, whose word is yea, and Amen. Were it not that we are weak of Faith, and slow to believe, he needed not to swear by himself, and by his holiness: he needed not to have set Authentick Seals to his Word, saving that he minded to leave no place for doubting in us.

Hence it is, that the Apostle writing to the Hebrews, Chapt. 6. saith; God willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the stableness of his counsel, bound himself by an Oath, that by two immutable things, wherein it was impossible that God should lie, we might have strong consolation, which have our refuge, to lay hold upon that hope that is set before us, &c. The greater means God hath left unto us, the greater faith he requireth of us, and the more conscionable use of those means, that we may not always be Children. Woe then unto us, if in the store of so great mercies, and variety of so many means, we remain distrustful, and do not labor to gather strength of faith, and assurance of comfort. Let us therefore grow from Faith to Faith, as it were from strength to strength, and not stand at one stay: let us proceed from one degree and measure to another, until Christ Jesus be thoroughly formed in us.

Lastly, seeing Couenants in writing be requisite by the Laws of God and Man; we must know, that it is our duty to deal justly and uprightly one with another, and in our bargainings, to keep a good conscience toward God and Man. For this is the end wherefore Instruments in writing were brought in, that all cozenage might be cut off, & all occasion of strife might be prevented. Whereby we may gather, that in all ages of men, and times of the World, there have been many deceits, and much unrighteous dealing, to the disturbance of public peace, and the dissolving of concord among men: otherwise it had been in vain to require, or to receive such security in our buying and selling, in our borrowing and lending one with another. If every man's word and deed did ever go together, and the outward words of his mouth, did agree with the inward secrets of his heart, if he did hate fraud and falsehood, as Death and Hell: what need were there of so many men's oaths to be taken, of so many Witnesses to be called, of so many Writings to be engrossed, of so many Evidences to be drawn, and of so many assurances to be made. A man cannot in these days borrow or lend a little Money, but there must be Bills and Bands, Writings and Obligations, Seals and Witnesses, to testify the same. If there were those sincere hearts that ought to be among us, and that upright dealing that God requireth, there should not need so many Oaths, not so many Nouerint vniuersi be everywhere found. Let us therefore deal justly and truly, and not seek to wind away in the dark, so soon as any starting hole is offered unto us.

Hence it is that Moses saith; When thou sellest ought to thy Neighbor, or buyest at thy Neighbors hand, ye shall not oppress one another: but according to the number of years thou shalt increase the price thereof, and according to the fewness of years, thou shalt abate the price thereof, for the number of Fruits doth he sell unto thee: oppress ye not therefore any Man his Neighbor, but thou shalt fear thy God, for I am the Lord your GOD. Where we see, the Lord chargeth his people to keep a good conscience in their Traffique one with another, and condemneth all deceitful Sellers and cozening Bargainers, that aim only at their own gain, but seek not the good of their Brethren. Hereunto cometh the Exhortation of the Apostle. 1. Thess. 4. 6. Let no Man oppress or defraud his Brother in any matter: for the Lord is an Auenger of all such things. This is a notable warning to all men that profess holiness, without which no man shall see God; to beware of all injuries and In-justice, and to seek no commodity to our selves by the discommodity; nor advantage, by the disadvantage of another. We are all Brethren. Shall one Brother oppress another? Or deceive and defraud another? Thus doth the same Apostle increase the sin of the Corinthians, when he saith unto them, Why rather suffer ye not wrong? Why rather sustain ye not harm? Nay, ye yourselves do wrong, and do harm, and that to your Brethren.

There are many Bands, as it were joints, whereby we are knit and coupled one to another, to be of one Blood, of one Kindred, of one Country, of one City, of one assembly, and of one Family: all which kinds of conjunction, as so many strong Arguments do cry out in our ears, and publish to our hearts, that no injurious and unjust dealings ought to be practiced among us. And albeit the former reasons ought to be sufficient unto us, yet none can be more effectual to join us in mutual friendship, and to procure the good one of another, then the consideration of the conjunction that we have with Christ our head, and the communion that we have in Christ one with another; whereby it cometh to pass, That we are made one new Man in himself, And everyone, one another's Members. If all these things will not suffice and serve the turn, to turn us away from doing wrongs to those that are so near unto us; yet let the vengeance of God that hangeth over the heads of all Oppressors terrify us, who in all Ages past hath shown, in the seasons present doth show, and in the times to come will show himself the great Reuenger of Fraud, Pillage, Theft, Injury, and all wrongful dealings. If then the knowledge of God's will cannot work in us an hatred of In-justice, let us be assured, that after the breach of his Law, and the transgression of his will, followeth the execution of his wrath, and the inflicting of punishment due thereunto.

It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. If that his wrath be kindled; yea, but a little, blessed are all they that trust in him. These men that scratch and scrape together the Treasures of this life, which are but trash in comparison of the life to come, never consider the day of reckoning that shall follow, when the Lord will call them to an account of their stewardship, And judge every man according to his works. Rom. 2. 6.

[Albeit I do not say to thee, that thou owest moreover unto me, even thin own self.]

Hitherto we have seen the former part of the answer to the objection: Now remaineth in these words, to be considered the revocation of the former grant; wherein, albeit the Apostle will not speak what he thinketh, yet he leaveth it to Philemons secret cogitation, to consider what he was indebted unto him, as if he should say; I have offered to discharge thy Servants debt; nevertheless, if thou remember me, and if thou hast not forgotten thyself, the amends is already made, the debt is already paid. Whereby it appeareth, that Philemon was himself won to the embracing of the Faith by the Ministry of Paul, as his Servant also was. First of all, the Apostle claimeth at his hands, that duty he challenged at the Servants hand; as appeareth verse 13. where he showeth, that he would have retained him, that in his stead he might have ministered unto him in the bonds of the Gospel. Seeing therefore both of them owed the like service; it followeth, that both of them had the same occasion: for the Apostle joineth them together, as the fruits of his Apostleship.

Secondly, it is the greatest debt (that can be) that is here expressed, when he saith to him [Thou owest unto me even thine own self.] It was a great debt which the Servant owed to his Fellow-Servant, that required of him an hundred pence, but so much Money would have levelled the debt, and discharged him from prison, and have paid that he owed. They were great Debtors that owed; the one five hundred pence; the other fifty: but he that owed ten thousand Talents, was the greatest of all: and yet if they had been able to have paid so much, the debts had been fully discharged. For where Money is owing, Money will make even: a little sum, will be paid with a little; a great sum, with the like quantity. The unjust Steward called together his Masters Debtors; and one owed an hundred measures of Oil; another so many of Wheat, but the Apostle saith; he did owe unto him, not fifty pence, not an hundred pence, not ten thousand Talents, not an hundred measures of Oil, not an hundred measures of Wheat, but his own self; that is, even his Soul and body. This debt he urgeth because of his Ministry, by which he was at the first converted, and hitherto continued in the state of grace, which remained as a Seal engraven and imprinted in his heart. From hence we learn, that such as have gained us to God, or preserved us in the state of Salvation by the preaching of the Gospel, ought to be most dear unto us, we owing unto them even our selves, and whatsoever we have besides to do them good. The benefits bestowed upon us by the Ministry of the word, can never be sufficiently esteemed, nor worthily enough prized, nor abundantly enough be recompensed and rewarded.

Hence it is, that when Elisha sell sick of his sickness, whereof he died; Joash the King of Israel came down unto him, and wept upon his face, and said; O my Father, my Father, the Charrt of Israel, and the Horsemen of the same. Where we may learn what to account of the Teachers of the Church, by the testimony of a King that sitteth on his Throne: if he do so account of thē, such as are inferior to him must not make less reckoning of them. Hereunto cometh the saying of the Prophet; How beautiful upon the Mountains are the feet of him that declareth & publisheth peace; that declareth good tidings, and publisheth salvation; saying unto Zion, Thy God reigneth. Where he showeth by way of admiration, that it is one of the greatest benefits to have Pastors sent unto us, that may direct our steps into the way of peace, and guide our feet to eternal life. This is the estimation that the Galatians had of Paul, and the commendation which Paul giveth of the Galatians, that they accounted nothing too dear or too good for him; The trial of me which was in my flesh, ye despied not, neither abhorred: but ye received me as an Angel of God; yea, as Christ Jesus. What was then your felicity? For I bear you record, that if it had been possible, ye would have pulled out your own eyes, and have given them unto me. Where he showeth, that he was entertained among them as an Angel; nay, above an Angel, even as Christ himself. To this purpose he writeth to the Corinthians, Let a man so think of us as of the Ministers of Christ, and disposers of the secrets of God. By all which testimonies it is manifest, that such as converted us to the faith, and brought us to be Cittizens of the kingdom of heaven, ought to be dearly and entirely beloved of us.

Neither should this seem strange unto us. First of all, they are most of all to be loved and highly esteemed of us that do us most good: we are most deeply indebted unto them, that labor most for our benefit. This it is which our Savior insinuateth in the parable of the lender that had two debtors; the one ought him more, the other less; and he forgave them both: declaring, that he judged uprightly, Who supposed that he would love him most, to whom he had forgiven most. The greatest benefit requireth of us the greatest love. But the Ministers do us, or may do us the greatest good, if we lay not a bar in our own way. For the blessings that God bestoweth upon men by the Ministry of his Pastors and Teachers, are spiritual and eternal blessings: but the blessings that the hearers do return and recompense to their Ministers, are Temporal, and (as the Apostle speaketh, and calleth them) Carnal, saying; If we have sown unto you spiritual things, it is a great thing if we reap your carnal things? They fight our Spiritual battles for us, and what do we not owe to such?

Again, they are unto us instead of Christ: they are his officers that he hath appointed in his Church, who when he ascended into heaven, gave gifts unto men, and ordained those that should teach his people unto the end of the World. Hence it is that the Apostle saith; Now then are we Ambassadors for Christ: as though God did beseech you through us, we pray you in Christ's stead, that ye be reconciled unto God. If we did believe that the Ministers were left us in Christ's stead, and did supply his room, we would otherwise respect them and esteem of them, then we do.

Thirdly, they are the Ministers by whom we believe; and consequently, by whom we are saved: They are our Fathers in Christ, by whom we are begotten to eternal life. To this end the Apostle saith; Who is Paul then? And who is Apollos, but the Ministers by whom ye believed, and as the Lord gave to every Man? Can we have a greater blessing bestowed upon us then Faith; without which, it is impossible to please to God? But Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of GOD: And the word is brought unto us by the Ministers of God. Seeing then, that they deserve the greatest love, that do us the greatest good: Seeing the Ministers are unto us in the place of Christ Jesus; and lastly, seeing they are the Instruments by whom we believe. It followeth necessarily, that such as turn many unto righteousness, are highly to be regarded, and to be greatly magnified of us above many others.

The Uses arising from hence, are of diverse sorts. First of all, it directeth us to other necessary truths to be learned of us. It is noted by the Apostle, to be one general use of the Scripture; that it serveth and sufficeth to teach all truth needful to salvation: so the former point being received, will help us to find out and conclude other truths. First we learn, that wheresoever there is a true profession; a sound feeling; and true taste of Religion, or joy of salvation, there will be a reverent account, and joyful entertainment of the teachers and publishers of the Gospel. On the other side, a light & slender account of the Ministers, argueth a light account of the word of Christ, of the doctrine of salvation, and of the truenesse of Religion. Let everyone of us examine our own affections, and try our own hearts by this Touchstone. It is impossible to make any diuorse between the true Ministers of God, and the true Doctrine which is according to godliness. He that honoreth one, magnifieth the other; and he that contemneth the one, despiseth the other. Whosoever it is, that being distempered and diseased, esteemeth of his health, or desireth it, he will honor the Physician that cureth and recovereth him. He that being wounded, is thoroughly healed, will greatly regard him that gave unto him the salve to make a plaster. He that hath been ignorant, and is taught the knowledge that he had not before; will make much of him that hath been his Master. This will be the behavior of all such as have felt the burden of their sins, and been humbled under the heavy stroke of God's hand, and felt the unsearchable depth of the sore festering and fretting within them: They are the only men that know what necessary use there is of the Ministers, to search their wounds, to raise up with comfort, to bind up the broken-hearted, and strengthen them that are weak and ready to fall. As for those that never knew what the Nature of sin is, nor felt the intolerable burden of it, but think themselves sound, and not sick; heart-whole, and not diseased; Living men by Nature, and not dead in sins and trespasses; they take themselves to be in good case, according to the saying of Christ our Savior; The whole need not the Physician, but they that are sick. Thus then we see, how we may prove our selves whether we be in the Faith or not, even by the good estimation that we have of such as are the bringers of it.

Secondly, we may gather from hence, that the greatest part of the world lieth deeply and dangerously in condemnation, because such hath been the unthankfulness thereof toward the Ministers and Messengers of Salvation, that bring glad tidings of peace unto us, that it never respected them, or gave them any reverence. We see this by the examples of the Prophets, of the Apostles, and of Christ himself. So long as men resolve to entertain their sins, so long they will never be willing to entertain the Preachers of the Gospel; whose Office is, to beat down the Kingdom of sin and Satan, and to set up the Kingdom of Christ Jesus in the hearts of Men. When Herod was determined to keep his Brothers Wife, he could not abide to hear John preach unto him, but committed him to prison. It is an evident sign of a corrupt conscience and of a profane heart, to account vilely of those whom God hath highly advanced. The Ministers of the Gospel were never so much hated, scorned, and abhorred; they are made a common reproach and by-word for every base Fellow; they are set forth as upon a Stage or Scaffold, to be derided of every Man; They are made as the filth of the world, and the off-scowring of all things unto this time. If this be the estate of the Ministers, we may give a true judgment in what estate the cause of Religion standeth among us, and what harbor it findeth with the men of this age.

Such as esteem of the Ministers as the filth and off-scowring of the earth, do also account the knowledge of the word as the Dregges and draury of all other things. Such as respect not those that are the means of faith, will also reject faith it self. The Ministers of the word and true Religion, grow up as two Plants together; so long as the one is countenanced and upholden, so long the other will flourish and spread abroad, and prosper. But if the Ministers, that are as the Lord's Gardiners, or the dressers of his Vine, be evilly entreated, maliciously slandered, despitefully handled, and scornfullie reproached; Religion it self beginneth to faint and to languish, and cannot long go free. Let us know therefore by this sign, the sickness of this age, and the dangerous declining of all good things. There cannot be a more certain token of the ruin of the Church, then when we see the main posts and chief pillars thereof set at naught. It is an easy matter to give judgment what will be the issue of this disease; it is no hard thing to feel the pulses of this Generation, and to tell them that the very pangs of death are upon them, so long as the spiritual Physicians of their Souls are base in their eyes, that desire nothing more then to recover them out of that desperate consumption into which they are fallen. There is no man hath his vital Spirits so far spent, and the natural heat so much wasted, but is willing to hear of a Physician that is able and willing to set him on foot again, and to restore his strength unto him that he had before. But we are become so senseless or shameless, and so dead in our sins, that we have no desire of health, nor seek after any spiritual Surgeons or Physicians to look unto us in time of sickness. There is no disease without cure, if men of knowledge be inquired after, who have the tongue of the learned to minister a word in due season.

Secondly, as this Doctrine serveth to teach, so it is profitable to reprove diverse sorts of men; but I will only touch these three. First, it maketh against such as make a bad and base account of the Ministers of God, and think they owe no duty to their Pastors, but reckon them as their Vassals and Servants; suppose that they are bound to please them, and follow their humors, and account their Teachers beholden unto them for vouchsafing to hear them, as crediting their Ministry by their presence. It must not therefore seem a strange thing unto us, when we see the Ambassadors of God contemned, when we hear them reviled, and all manner of evil done to their persons. We know our calling to be of GOD, acceptable in his sight, and precious with all faithful men. We are the sweet savor of God, as well in them that perish, as in them that are saved: we know, that howsoever the preaching of the Word be a stumbling block to the Jews, and foolishness to the Grecians, and both a stumbling block and foolishness to the filthy Libertines, and carnal Gospellers: yet to them that are effectually called, it is the power of God, and the wisdom of God. We know what Christ hath pronounced of our Ministry, so long as we deliver the truth of God. Luke 10, 16. He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that despiseth you, despiseth me: and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me.

If a Man abuse an Ambassador of a Prince, and set him at naught, it is reputed and revenged as a disgrace and dishonor done to the Prince himself: so, if we shall abase and disgrace the Ministers of the Gospel, which are the Messengers of God, we shall never escape without punishment, but bring upon our selves swift damnation. Is not he a godless and ungracious Child, that mocketh and despiseth his Father, after the example of cursed Cham, who tasted of God's wrath for this contempt? The Lord pronounceth a fearful threatening against this fearful sin; The eyethat mocketh his Father, and despiseth the instruction of his Mother, let the Ravens of the valley pick it out, and the young Eagles eat it. In like manner, he is an ungodly and unregenerate hearer, that controlleth and contemneth the Preacher of the word, who is a spiritual Father of the soul, and giveth us not this life, but a new life; not the first birth, but the second birth; not the sight of the body, but the light of the mind; which things are far more excellent and precious then the other. There can be therefore no greater unthankfulness, then to contemn the Ministers of Christ.

Secondly, it meeteth with the starting holes and silly defences that many make for themselves, who to excuse their contempt of the Gospel, and treading under foot the word of God, do lay all the blame and fault upon the Ministers. Ask the question of the most proud Spirits and profane persons, whether they be enemies to the preaching of the Gospel, and open contemners of the Gospel, or not: they will deny it, and show themselves ready to abjure it; and yet none do more evidently contradict the truth then they. These are sly and secret enemies, who lightly esteem God's sacred and eternal word, under pretence of men's persons. They profess in word, to magnify the word; but they regard not the Ministers that bring it. They know well enough, that if they should openly oppose themselves against the Scriptures, and bid battle to God; all men would cry out against them; all men would hiss at them; all men would point them out with the finger; and nod their heads at them as they go in the streets. But they go more subtly and circumspectly to work, they pretend the greatest love to the truth that can be, all their quarrel is to the Ministers that deliver it. And thus they think to slide away in the dark, that they may not be espied: whereas their own consciences within them do accuse them, and their own hearts every way, and every day condemn them, to be deep dissemblers, hollow hearted Hypocrites, and the most dangerous enemies that the Church of God hath. The same Apostle, that writing to the Thessalonians, chargeth them Not to despise prophesying; exhorteth them also, and beseecheth them in the same Chapter, That they acknowledge them which labor among them, and are over them in the Lord, and admonish them, that they have them in singular love for their works sake. The same Apostle that honoreth the Scripture with the greatest Titles of Dignity, and maketh it sufficient to make The man of God absolute, being made perfect to every good work, writing unto Timothy: doth also command him, to Preach in season and out of season; to do the work of an Evangelist, and to cause his Ministry to be thoroughly liked off. It is a vain excuse, and worse then the Fig-leaves that Adam sewed together to hide his shame, to seem to approve and allow of the word, and yet to reject such as are appointed to speak in the Church, and are set over us in the Lord.

He would be accounted a stark fool, that being hungry, would dislike and distaste his meat, and so starve his body through a willful famine, because he cannot abide the Cook that dressed it: or that would refuse his drink to quench his thirst, because he neither loveth nor liketh him that drew it for him, and brought it unto him. Would not he be condemned of extreme foolishness and simplicity, that would not vouchsafe to receive or look upon, or hear to be read, a Letter sent unto him from his Prince, and that for his good, because he careth not for the Messenger that offereth it unto his hands? Or, would not all men account him worthy to die an hundred times, who having a pardon sealed and sent him from the King, for his offenses, whereby he justly deserved to have the sentence of death pronounced against him, to be immediately executed upon him, should scorn the pardon, and the Princes mercy; because he favoereth not the man that is employed to bring it? Or, would not all men say he were worthy to be drowned, who being fallen into a swift stream, ready to bear him away with the violence of the waves, would not lay hand and hold on that which is preferred unto him, because he accounteth him his Enemy that desireth to save him? The like folly and madness is in those that refuse the word, because they hate the person of the Minister that breaketh the bread of eternal Life, that doth the message that God hath put in his mouth, that publisheth in Christ's Name a pardon of sin to all people that will repent and believe the Gospel; that would bring them to salvation of their Souls, that they might not perish, but have everlasting life.

The Prophet commendeth good King Hezekiah, who albeit he were sharply reproved, and threatened with a grievous judgment, he did not break out into raging speeches, nor cast into prison, nor put to death the Prophet that denounced a great plague against him: but submitted himself to God, and revered the word of the Prophet, saying; The word of the Lord is good which thou hast spoken. All men will be ready to confess in general, that the word of God is good, even as God is good; but they cannot be brought to acknowledge the word in the mouth of the Minister to be good. This is the shift of those that are wise to deceive themselves. If they bring unto us the Doctrine of salvation revealed in the Scriptures, it is that word whereby we shall be judged in the last day, and be found guilty of horrible Treason against God.

Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, As many as have sinned in the Law, shall be judged by the Law, at the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my Gospel. The Jews and Gentiles oftentimes cried out against him, and accounted him unworthy to live, yet he showeth that at the last day they should be judged, not only according to the word, but according to his word; not only according to the Gospel, but according to his Gospel. When the Lord was determined to give his own people into the hand of their enemies, and to root them out of that good Land which he had given unto their Fathers, he hideth not from them the cause of his judgments, but setteth their sins in order before them, that they mocked the Messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his Prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, and till there was no remedy. Where we see, he joineth together the mocking of his Messengers, and the despising of his words. These two, do necessarily follow one another; & where the one goeth before, and leadeth the way, the other will not come far behind. If this were well and thoroughly weighed of us, it would avail us to great good, and further us in the word of salvation, and rid us from many stumbling blocks that lie in our way.

Lastly, it reproveth such as refuse to give them sufficient maintenance, and do bar them of that competent and convenient portion that God hath allotted unto them in his word. For, if such as have spent their strength to bring us unto God, ought above all others to be regarded of us, and have a worthy recompense of their labors; surely, they deserve to be checked and controlled, that deal niggardly toward them, who have kept back nothing from them, but revealed unto them the whole Counsel of God. We see in this place, what the Apostle Paul challengeth at the hands of Philemon, whom he had won to the Faith; he accounteth him to owe unto him all that he had, so that if he should give unto him all the substance of his house; nay, his own life, it were but due, it were but a debt that he owed unto him. He that hath ransomed a prisoner out of the hands of the enemies, hath jurisdiction and authority over him, and may worthily claim whatsoever he hath. He that hath saved the life of his enemy in battle, and made him captive, is wholly at his disposing that hath taken him. In like manner, such as have pulled us out of the fire of hell, out of the Iawes of death, and out of the slavery of Satan the Prince of this world, that ruleth in the hearts of the Children of disobedience; may by a Divine and human right reap, our temporal things, and require to be sustained and maintained by us. Might not he be registered for a most unthankfull person to all posterities that shall come hereafter, that would suffer him to want that hath fed him, that hath nourished him, that hath preserved his life? Who doth not cry out against Pharaoh and the Egyptians, who forgot Joseph a great Benefactor to their whole Land, that provided much Corn in the plentiful years, and saved the lives of many thousands by his labor and industry? So likewise, what a shame is it, to suffer such worthy Instruments of our good, to lack and suffer hunger? Vndoubtedly, they deserve to be forsaken of God and all good men, that forsake those that are their Fathers in Christ, and instructors in Christianity. Notwithstanding, this blemish and reproach sticketh nearer unto many men now living, then the skin upon their backs, which brandeth and blotteth them, as with a coal of perpetual infamy; who being brought to know themselves, to see their own sins, to understand their secret offenses, to make Conscience of their ways, to come to true repentance, and to begin to set their footing in the kingdom of heaven, by the blessing of God, upon the labors of his Ministers, yet have no consideration of them, are not greiued nor ashamed to see them want, and to live in necessity, but have forgotten all the comfort that they have received, and shut up the eyes of their compassion from them. So often as I consider the former times of men's zeal and forwardness, that being drawn to a love of the truth became Instruments to draw on others, and compare the same with the present estate of things, we may seem to live in a continual Winter, and under a frozen Climate, wherein appeareth nothing all the year long, but Frosts and Ice, and cold, and Hail, and Snowes, covering the Mountains and Valleyes, without any Spring or Summer, without any heat, or growing, or flourishing of anything. For I remember, how many being touched with a terror in Conscience, and feeling the burden of their sins more heavy then Lead, pressing them down to the nethermost Hell, could find no comfort in their pleasant Companions, in their delightful pastimes, and in sweet Instruments of Music, all these were tedious and bitter, and wearisome unto the flesh: one word of comfort from the mouth of the Minister, was as Balsam unto them, to refresh their faint and feeble spirits, by whom they were raised up. But now, living in peace and prosperity, they are fallen asleep, they remember not the kindness they have received, and the consolation that they have tasted, and can both hear and see their misery, and almost beggary, that were the greatest means of their bringing them from the greatest misery and slavery that can be imagined. For, what greater bondage, then the bondage of sin, of Satan, and of Hell? It is a great reproach to see a Christian Brother to beg his Bread, or to crave relief of others: a faithful Minister is a Christian brother, and more then a Brother; yea, a Christian Father, whose Children in the faith ought to give him maintenance in the flesh. It is truly said by the Apostle, Let him that is taught in the word, make him that hath taught him, partaker of all his goods: Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. To this purpose he speaketh in another place, The elders that rule well, let them be had in double honor, especially they which labor in the word and Doctrine: for the Scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the Ox that treadeth out the Corn: And, The Labourer is worthy of his wages. It is a great shame to the people of God, that such as are conscionable in their Callings, and are as faithful Stewards distributing to them in the family such store as they have provided, should complain for want of maintenance, and a liberal pension in temporal things. The Apostle James teacheth, That the hire of the Laborers which have reaped their fields (which was of them kept back by fraud) crieth, and the cries of them which have reaped, are entered into the ears of the Lord of Hosts. The Ministers of God are his Laborers, and labor for us, to gather us as good Corn into the Lord's Barn: if then, we detain from them the Bread that they should eat, and the fleece of the wool wherewith they should be clothed, and the fruits of the earth whereby they should be maintained; This is a crying sin, and will never cease, until it have brought down God's judgments upon our selves, and our substance.

Thirdly, seeing the benefits brought upon us, both upon our bodies and souls, by the means of the Ministry, can never be worthily esteemed, and sufficiently expressed; it serveth to instruct us in the necessary duties of our obedience, even to testify our love to the truth, by reuerencing and respecting them that are as the Lord's Messengers, to bring the truth unto our doors. This the Apostle commendeth unto us in the Thessalonians, For this cause also thank we God, without ceasing, that when ye perceived the word of God, which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is indeed the word of God, which also worketh in you that believe. Where we see, that after the Thessalonians had heard the Gospel of Christ published unto them, so many of them as were ordained unto eternal life believed; and submitted themselves to be duided and reformed by it.

This duty, hath many branches. First, it is required of us to hear the word of God with patience. This is the first step and degree that leadeth unto life, and it proceedeth from the mere grace and favor of God, whensoever it is wrought in our hearts. For, how many are there, that when they hear, stop their ears? That when they see, shut their eyes? That when they understand, do harden their hearts? When Stephen made a defense for himself, before the chief Priests that sat in the Counsel, They gave a shout with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran violently upon him all at once, and cast him out of the City, and stoned him with stones. When one Alexander a Jew beckned with the hand, prepared himself to speak, and would have excused the Apostles, There arose a great shout almost for the space of two hours, of all men crying, Great is Diana of the Ephesians. Likewise when Paul made a particular rehearsal of the manner of his conversion to the faith, before the Jews, they heard him quietly and with silence, until he said; He was sent to the Gentiles; but then thorough impatience, they cried out, they cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air, and lift up their voices, saying; Away with such a fellow from the earth, for it is not meet that he should live. We see by these examples, that it is a token of God's goodness, when he giveth us circumcised ears to listen and attend to the word preached unto us, with patience and perseverance unto the end, albeit we hear our sins reprov'd, & our secret thoughts opened unto us. It is our duty to show our selves swift to hear, but slow to speak, and slow to wrath. We must be slow to speak against that which hath been delivered, and we must be slow to anger and indignation against those that have delivered the truth unto us.

Secondly, it is required, that we receive the word that we have heard, & assent unto it as to the word of truth, and acknowledge it to be good and true, even that part of the word that containeth his judgments, his threatenings, his curses, his punnishments. This is to be craved of God, as being a special work of grace in those that belong to his kingdom. For many there are that hear, and have their ears open to attend; these are not dull hearers that mark nothing, but ate ready to listen and give care; and yet they will not give their assent to that which they have heard. The Apostle teacheth, That the natural man perceiveth not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. When Paul preached at Athens, in the hearing of the Stoics and Epicures, touching the resurrection from the dead, they said, What will this Babbler say? A great part of our ordinary hearers, may be placed in this rank, who are content to hear, and then sit in judgment upon that which they have heard, and never give credit unto it, but measure the truth of God by their carnal conceits, and natural reasons.

Thirdly, it is farther required of us, to embrace the truth in our hearts, & carefully to apply it to our own souls. It belongeth unto us, not only to hear it with the ear, and to assent to it with the mind but to lay it up deeply rooted in us, and to make it our own by a special application. This is the right use of the word, this is peculiar to the elect, and this is a work of grace in our hearts. The Hystoricall faith giveth a general consent to the truth of God, but never goeth farther to apprehend it, as we see in Simon the Sorcerer, who is said to have believed, that is; in a general manner to have consented to the Gospel; and yet Peter telleth him, That his heart was upright, and that he remained in the gall of bitterness. Let us not therefore appropriate the word of grace, that is able to build farther unto our own selves; otherwise we shall have no more comfort then the Reprobates have, who come so far, as to confess the word to be true, and that God by his Son will save the Vessels of mercy.

Lastly, it is required in this special manner, to entertain the word, to wit; as the word of God. Many receive the word and embrace it willingly, readily, cheerfully, and joyfully; but not as the word of God. I will not stand to speak of the Church of Rome, which holdeth that the word written, hath not authority in it self, unless the Church approve it, and therefore albeit it embraceth the word of God, yet it embraceth it not as the word of God. For how many are there among our selves, that receive not the word of God with that reverence and obedience that they ought, as appeareth by the evil practices of their lives? These men do not receive the word of God, as the word of God, who if they did in truth & sincerity acknowledge this truth to be of God, & to have him for the author thereof, they would lead their lives in another manner then they do; they would be afraid to rush forward, & to run headlong as it were with violence into the breach & transgression thereof. They would consider, that God will not bear and endure the contempt of his word, but revenge the dishonor done to his name, with great plagues and most grievous judgments. These are the duties that are to be performed of us, and the four degrees that testify our submitting of our selves to the truth of the Gospel, preached & delivered unto us by the Ministers of Christ.

Lastly, seeing they, by whose ministry we are gained to God, and preserved in the state of salvation being gained, ought to be most dear to us, we owing unto them our own selves. This must teach the Ministers of God a necessary duty and lesson, to be marked of them; to wit, to endeavor by their daily diligence, and continual preaching of the Gospel, to make the people indebted unto them. For how do the people come so much in their debt, but that they receive heavenly Doctrine by their Ministry, as from the mouth of God? Such as have need of admonition, must be exhorted; such as are weak in the faith, must be strengthened; such as need comfort, ought to be comforted; such as are ignorant, must be instructed; such as are willing to be taught must be beseeched and entreated; and everyone must be handled according to his nature and condition, according to the rule of the Apostle, Study to show thyself approved unto God, a Workman that needeth not to be ashamed, dividing the word of truth aright. All men are not to be handled after one manner, but one after one manner, and another after another. He were a bad and mad Physician, that would use all his patients to one receipt. Some have gross humors in them, and stand in need to be purged; some, more strongly; others more gently; according to their condition and Constitution. Others have more need to have nature restored, then purged, such must have Cordials and Restoratives ministered unto them. So is it with such as need Physic for the soul. The Minister must not be dumb and silent among his people, but speak unto them, and instruct them as a good Father doeth his Child, one after one manner, another after another manner, and everyone by some means or other. This the Apostle setteth down as a duty by his own practice, We were gentle amongst you, even as a Nurse cherisheth her Children: Thus being affectioned towards you, our good will was to have dealt unto you, not the Gospel of GOD only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us. Where the Apostle testifieth his great love and liberality toward them, that he accounted not his own life precious & dear unto himself, but was content to offer it up upon the Sacrifice and service of their faith, that he might rejoice in the day of Christ. So then, it belongeth to us the Ministers of the word, to preach the Gospel with all patience, diligence, and longsuffering. Let us be instant, in season, and out of season: Let us be gentle toward all men, apt to teach, suffering the evil, and instructing them that are contrary minded. Paul writing to the Romaines, and declaring unto them that he oftentimes purposed to come unto them, that he might have some fruit also among them, yieldeth this as the reason, I am Debtor both to the Grecians, and to the Barbarians: both to the Wisemen, and unto the unwise; therefore so much as in me is, I am ready to preach the Gospel to you also that are at Rome. So in another place he testifieth, that Albeit he was free, yet he had made himself a servant unto all men, that he might win the moe. To the Jews, he became as a Jew, that he might win the Jews; to them that are under the Law, as though he were under the Law, that he might win them that are under the Law: to the weak, he became as weak, that he might win the weak: he was made all things to all men, that he might by all means save some. Thus we see how the Ministers ought to apply, and to employ themselves in laboring in the Lord's harvest, to gain a people unto him, and to bring them into the sheepfold of Christ. For how or which way should the people be indebted unto us, if we never commit the Gospel unto them? A Debtor and a Creditor are Relatiues, and have reference one to another. If we do not seek to make our hearers partakers of the treasures of the Gospel, nor labor to enrich them with the saving knowledge of the Doctrine of salvation, we cannot be dear unto them, they cannot be indebted unto us. If we reap and receive their temporal things, and eat and drink, feed and clothe our selves by their labor, without labor in our places, we run continually into their debt, and they owe us nothing but shame and contempt to be poured upon us, according to our deserts. It is a great comfort to the people, that make much of them that have the oversight over them, submitting themselves to them that must give an account for their souls, considering that thereby they may gather confidence, and get assurance to themselves, that they are true believers, and have embraced the Gospel in sincerity. So on the other side, it is a singular point of sound comfort to all the Ministers of the word, that have been painful in the work of the Lord, they may claim as their own right and proper possession of their people, to be maintained and honored with double honor of them, and nothing indeed can be sufficient or answerable in proportion to their pains. But what reason can be alleged, that the people should be burdened, & not instructed? Charged with Tiths, and not helped with teaching? Pay their duties, and receive no Doctrine. Hence it is that the Apostle saith, Let a man so think of us, as of the Ministers of Christ, and disposers of the secrets of God; and as for the rest, it is required of the disposers, that every man be found faithful. Whereby we see, the good account and estimation that the Minister receiveth of his people, ought to move him to faithfulness and painfulness in his Office; so that we must conclude, that such as will be reputed for the Ministers of Christ, should show themselves to be so indeed, by their care of the flock committed unto them.

20 Yea, Brother, let me obtain this pleasure of thee in the Lord, comfort my bowels in the Lord.

21 Trusting in thine obedience I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt do even more then I say.

Hitherto we have seen the Reasons that Paul hath propounded to urge Philemon to receive and entertain his servant: In these words, we see the matter concluded and repeated again, howbeit not ydely or unprofitably, but with gain and an holy advantage: for in the closing up of the whole, he reasoneth farther, & inferreth a new argument to persuade Philemon, drawn from the benefit and comfort he should receive by it. This reason is taken from the effects, and may be thus concluded:

- If hereby I shall obtain fruit of thee in the Lord, and if thou doest refresh my bowels in the Lord,
- Then thou shouldest receive him to thee again.
- But I shall hereby obtain fruit, and have my bowels refreshed,
- Therefore receive him to thee again.

Or we may frame the Reason on this manner:

- That which may greatly rejoice me, and both please and pleasure me, I am assured thou wilt willingly do:
- But the forgiving of Onesimus will do so,
- Therefore I am assured thou wilt willingly do it.

This is contained in the 20. verse. In the next verse, we have the preventing of another Objection which might be made, not against some part, but against the whole Epistle, and the Apostles manner of handling thereof. The Objection is wanting, but may easily be gathered, and may be thus supplied out of the Answer which is expressed: Why are you so earnest and vehement in this matter? Have you so great distrust, and so little confidence in me, that you use so many words, and deal so earnestly with me? Do you think I have so little Charity in myself, and so small respect to you, and so hard an heart toward him, that no persuasion can mollify me, no reason overcome me, no friends turn me? The answer to this followeth: I have written unto thee, not because I doubt of thy favor, but because I trust in thy obedience: not because I fear thou wilt deny me, but because I know thou wilt pleasure me. This persuasion he amplifieth by a comparison drawn from the greater to the less, as if he should say: Nay I am well assured, that for my sake thou wilt grant a greater matter then I crave at thy hands. The Reason may be thus contrived:

- If thou be ready to yield more then this, then I know assuredly thou wilt do this:
- But thou art ready to yield more then this,
- Therefore I know assuredly thou wilt do this.

Thus much is to be marked of us touching the method, wherein we have the conclusion of the chief matter, howbeit adorned with much efficacy of words, and strengthened with great force of reasons. Now let us consider the meaning of such things as require interpretation. [Yea, Brother] This first word, is a note of exclamation, or an Adverb of asking, or wishing, or beseeching, or hoping well; as if he should say: Oh my Brother, I hope that this my intercession for him shall not be in vain, but carry sufficient weight and authority to work in thee moderation in relenting, and compassion in pardoning of him. This word of affirmation is put to garnish the sentence, & to make the exhortation more powerful and pathetical. When he saith, Let me obtain this favor, or fruit; benefit or pleasure; he useth the Optative mood, & alludeth to the name of Onesimus in the word [Onaimen] which fitly serveth his purpose. Touching these words [Comfort my Bowels.] The meaning is, receive him, and remit his offenses, and in so doing, thou shalt cheer and revive my heart: for the receiving of him, is the relieving and refreshing of my outward parts, and of my inward affections; so that nothing shall be more pleasing unto me. He addeth [in the Lord,] thereby signifying, that the duty required of him is such, that it pleaseth God, and setteth forth his glory, and may Religiously be performed; nay such, as could not with a safe Conscience be omitted or denied. So then, he understandeth hereby, that he should do him a great pleasure, and withal please God and obey him. That then which he doth request, is commended by two fruits; it shall benefit man, and it shall be acceptable to God. In the 21. Verse he saith, [Trusting in thine Obedience,] which is word for word (in thy hearkening unto me) expressing wherein Obedience consisteth; Namely, in hearkening to that which is commanded, even to hearken with a purpose to do it.

To this purpose Samuel joineth Harkning & Obeying together, Hath the Lord as great pleasure in Burnt-offerings and Sacrifices, as when the voice of the Lord is obeyed? Behold, to Obey is better then Sacrifice, and to Hearken is better then the fat of Rammes. So then, the use of this word [of Obedience,] is not without great force, for thereby he insinuateth, that Philemon could never escape the note of disobedience, if he did not yield to the Apostle of Christ, making so honest, so equal, so just a request. Lastly, when he saith, [Thou wilt do no more then I say,] the words are in the Original, [Above that I speak,] that is; thou wilt grant more then I ask or demand at thy hands; testifying hereby, the free hearts of true Christians, that being provoked to necessary & holy duties, they will oftentimes exceed that whereunto they are desired. This being the right order, and true interpretation of these words, in these two verses, they are thus much in effect; Oh my Brother, if thou regardest any good to me, or desirest to pleasure me in that which I desire or delight in, let me obtain this benefit & good turn at thy hands, which will also be accepted of God, being a work of mercy allowed & commended in his word; refresh I beseech thee my bowels, and comfort me in my son Onesimus, for what thou dost to him herein, shall be as done to me. If thou ask me, why I use so many words, and whither I do distrust of thy dealing? I answer, that I write nothing at all doubting, but altogether trusting thou wilt grant my request; yea, assuring myself, thou wilt show thyself willing to grant more then I have requested, even to set him free if I should require it.

These words are short, but the Observations that arise from hence, might be many: some I will only point out, and afterward handle others perticularly. First of all, mark the forcible farewell that the Apostle taketh. The Conclusions and Perorations that Orators use, are wont to have the sharpest edge, but they are wont for the most part to be long and tedious, and full of words; but the Apostle in this place useth the greatest brevity, with the greatest vehemency: Wherein he repeateth again the same manner of speech, [Of refreshing his bowels,] which we had before in the twelfth Verse. [Thou therefore receive him that is mine own Bowelles.] Likewise, as he saith, [Let me obtain this pleasure in the Lord,] so he doubleth it, [Comfort my bowels in the Lord.] This teacheth, that repetitions of the same Doctrine, are good and profitable to the Church, according to the practice of Paul, It grieueth me not to write the same things to you, and for you it is a sure thing. Let it not therefore grieve us, or offend us, to hear the same Exhortations, Reprehensions, and Threatenings, but rather learn to lay better hold of them at the last, then we have done at the first.

Secondly, by these phrases of obtaining a pleasure, and refreshing his bowels, we may learn, what joy and comfort the godly do feel & receive in themselves by the raising and restoring of a sinner. It is as if we wanted an hand, an eye, a foot, or an arm, and had it given unto us: would not this rejoice us, and revive us greatly? So is it with the faithful, when they behold a fellow member with them in Christ's body restored and coupled with the head, from whence it receiveth a gracious influence of all spiritual blessings; it ministereth occasion of the greatest joy that can be unto thē. Thus it ought to be with us, when we see any converted to the faith, we ought to have a fellow-feeling of the goodness of God bestowed upon them, inasmuch as the Angels themselves rejoice when one sinner is converted.

Thirdly, mark what words of beseeching & entreating he useth, of praying and desiring him to grant his request, albeit by his Apostolical authority he might command him. Whereby we learn, that the godly and faithful are more moved with mildness & gentleness, and with loving and friendly exhortations, then by severe threatenings denounced against them. They are endued with God's spirit, which is a Master to teach them, & worketh in them the will and the deed. Of unwilling, they are made willing; of tough & rough hewn, they are made pliable and apt for the building; of stubborn, they are become obedient & ready to learn. They are as good scholars in the school of Christ, who fear more the displeasure of their Master whom they love, and who loveth them, then the suffering of many stripes and strokes given unto them. This is a true note to know the disciples of Christ from all others. Evil men abstain from sin for fear of the punishment, & for feeling of judgment, so that if there were no threatenings denounced, no curses annexed, no plagues and torments feared, they would grow worse and worse, & quickly fill up the measure of their iniquity.

Fourthly, we may gather hereby, that pollitick order is not ouerthrown by the Doctrine of the Gospel, neither is the right and authority of Maysters over their servants abrogated by the faith of Christ. For Philemon was not an Infidel or unbeliever, but a fellow-helper with Paul; yet rule over his servants is not denied him, nor taken from him, but he is only bidden to receive him curteously, and to pardon him mercifully; yea Paul (as we see) doth humbly beseech him, that he may obtain and retain his former place, and doth not straitly command him to discharge him of his service. This jurisdiction standeth by good warrant of the Laws of God and Men: but of this we have spoken more at large before, in the 12. Verse of this Epistle.

Fifthly, we see the Title again repeated, that he giveth to Philemon, when he calleth him by the name of his Brother. Thus he called him before verse 7. and so he esteemed of Onesimus, verse 16. Whereby we see, that all men made members of Christ, and engrafted into his body, are become as faith. Brethren one to another. Thus doth the Apostle call this Onesimus A faithful & a beloved Brother, who is as one of them that were chief in the church. The consideration hereof, ought on the one side, to pull down our proud Feathers, and make us equal with them of the lower sort: and on the other side, to make us love one another not with dissimulation, but with brotherly love; not in word only, but in truth; as members of one body, and as brethren of one father.

Sixthly, he continueth his humble supplication for Onesimus, which showeth, that they are far from true repentance, that do excuse, or defend, or deny their faults and offenses; For he that hideth his sins shall not prosper, but he that confesseth and forsaketh them, shall find Mercy. When Onesimus did see so famous an Apostle of Christ, so carefully to entreat for his cause, he ought much more to be humbled with a feeling and remembrance of his former offenses, thereby to move the mind of his Master to gentleness and moderation.

Lastly, observe out of this place, that albeit we doubt not to obtain that which we desire, but are assured to enjoy that which we ask, yet we must deal earnestly and effectually, both in regard of the matter it self (for in a weighty and necessary cause, we ought not to proceed slenderly) and in respect of the nature of men, who many times are dull to conceive, and slow to grant that which we crave. There is no man so quick of pace, but needeth to have the spurs clapped to his sides now and then. No man runneth so swift a pace, but sometimes wanteth exhortations, consolations, reprehensions, admonitions, threatenings, and such like encouragements. We have not yet attained unto perfection, so long as we live we must be Scholars in Christ's school, and as it were, proceed from step to step. Thus much briefly touching the general Observations: Now, let us come to the handling of the particular Doctrines.

[Yea, Brother, let me obtain this fruit.]

By this conclusion it may appear, that albeit Onesimus had robbed his Master, and run away with a great part of his substance, yet he had spent all (as it often falleth out with ill-gotten goods) and then being beaten with his own rod (as the prodigal son) and brought to necessity, tasted of the sweet fruit of the Ministry of the blessed Apostle. Hence it is, that he urgeth so earnestly, and presseth Philemon so exceedingly to remit the debt, & to forgive the hurt he had received by his naughty servant, as being no way able to satisfy him, nor by any means hereafter being likely to satisfy him. For if any ability had been in him, to make satisfaction, there had been no place for pardon and remission, nor for Paul's undertaking of the debt. If we by fraud and stealth, by injury and injustice, possess the goods of other men, we are commanded to make actual and real restitution. The word of God teacheth us directly, that such as detain the goods of other men, are unmeet for his worship, & unfit for his service. Again, such as with-hold them from the right owners, shall die in their sins, and not have pardon before restitution, when God hath enabled them thereunto. But if we do keep back from them their own, our repentance is not conscionable, but counterfeit. Heerby it appeareth, that Onesimus was not able to pay unto his Master such things as he had taken away, for otherwise it had been an unreasonable request to have a debt pardoned which might be restored. For that which any man doth unjustly detain, is none of his, but that persons from whom it is detained. So then, this being the poor servants condition, that he had left nothing of all that which he had taken away (as commonly goods evilly gotten, are evilly spent) the Apostle craveth pardon. From hence we learn, that we ought not to be eager and extreme in urging and exacting debtes from the poor and needy, but rather be ready to remit & relieve, or at least to forbear what we may, and are enabled to do. Heerunto cometh the precept delivered in the law of Moses, Every creditor shall quit the love of his hand which he hath lent to his neighbor; he shall not ask it again of his neighbor, nor of his brother, for the year of the Lord's freedom is proclaimed. Where he teacheth, y^t mercy should be shown to their brethren in necessity, that they ought not to be hasty in calling for the things that are due to thē, but rather to give farther day & respite. So afterward, If one of thy Brethren with thee be poor, within any of thy gates in the Land which the Lord thy God giveth thee: thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor Brother. To these Commandments remembered unto us in the Law, let us join the practice of Nehemiah, in the time of a Public want and outcry of the people, when they complained that they were constrained to take up Corn upon trust, to morgage their Lands, their Houses, and their Vineyards, thorough extremity of the famine, to borrow Money for the Kings Tribute, which must be paid, and to sell their sons and daughters for Slaues, he said; Ought ye not to walk in the fear of our God, for the reproach of the Heathen our enemies? For even I, my Brethren, and my Servants do lend them Money and Corn: I pray you, let us leave off this burden, Restore (I pray you) wnto them this day their Lands, their Vineyards, their Olives, and their Houses, and remit the hundereth part of the Silver, of the Corn, of the Wine, and of the Oil that ye exact of them. Then they said; We will restore it, and will not require it of them, we will do as thou hast said. Where we see, the wonderful care that this Governor of the people had, to have the poor relieved, and to cause their case to be respected, and to move the Rich to be beneficial and bountiful unto them. So then, it is a clear point, that no man ought to be over-hasty in requiring such Debts as are due unto him from poor men, and such as are in great need.

If any will yet make a doubt and question of this Truth, let him dilligently mark the Reasons whereupon it is grounded. First, it is a common Proverb, That where nothing can be had, the King looseth his right. We must therefore consider the extreme necessity wherein some men are, and the poor estate into which they are brought. Compassion and Love, are to be extended towards such as crave favor, and are willing, albeit not able to satisfy us, according to their desire, and our demand. This is the Reason which is pointed out unto us, in the parable propounded by our Savior, ann expressed by the Evangelist Saint Luke, in the 7. Chapter, and the 41. Verse. A certain Lender had two Debtors; the one ought five hundred pence, and the other fifty; and when they had nothing to pay, he forgave them both. The like appeareth in another Parable mentioned in Matthew, Chapter 18, 24. When the Servant was brought that ought to his Master ten thousand Talents, because he had nothing to pay, he had compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him that debt. Whereby we see, that the cause why his Lord had compassion upon him, was his inability and necessity, he was not able to pay.

Secondly, it is a means to bring a blessing from God, that is the giver, and from them to whom we give, and it is accepted for righteousness. If then, our doing good to others, bringeth profit to our selves, it is our duty to show to them our Compassion, in easing and mittigating such burdens as otherwise we might lay upon them. This is the reason that Moses maketh, Deut. 24, 12, 13. If it be a poor body, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge, but shalt restore him the pledge when the Sun goeth down, that he may sleep in his Raiment, and bless thee, and it shall be righteousness unto thee before the Lord thy God. This Reason is not superfluous, but very effectual, considering what Hand-fasts and Hold-fasts we are, and how everyone seeketh to provide for himself. We think, the whole earth will fail us; we Dream that whatsoever is lent, is lost; we fear that GOD will forget us, and forsake us. Hence it is, that Moses doth encourage us to Liberalitie, by these two Arguments; Namely, that the poor shall pray for us, and GOD will hear them, and accept of us.

Thirdly, the example of God is to be set before us: he forgiveth his poor Debtors that are not able to pay him. We are all deeply indebted to God, we are desperate debtors, we owe unto him more then ten thousand Talents, and have nothing to satisfy the least mite of that he may require and challenge of us. We are in an hard case, if God should deal roughly and rigorously with us. But when we cannot restore, he doth remit; & when we are not ably to pay, he offereth pardon. This reason is urged by Moses, Deut. 24, 17, 18. Thou shalt not pervert the right of the stranger, nor of the Fatherless, nor take a Widdowes Rayment to pledge: but remember that thou wast a servant in Egypt, and how the Lord thy God delivered thee thence. In which words, he moveth them to show mercy, because they had received mercy; they had received it of God, they must return it back again unto their Brethren. Thus Christ himself instructeth us by his own mouth, Be ye merciful, as your heavenly Father is merciful. We must therefore be followers of the bountifulness of God. So then, if we lay these things together, and consider with our selves either the persons of our brethren that are in necessity, or our own persons, that receive by it a Commodity, or the person of God that pardoneth our iniquity, we may easily gather the truth of this Doctrine, that it is our duty to show mercy toward our poor debtors that •...e not able to make satisfaction to us, as they desire, and we require.

Let us come to the Uses. First, this serveth to teach us, that men are not always to look to their own benefit and profit, but likewise to the profit of others. We see by experience, that many are such great Deuourers and Sea-gulphes, that they are never contented, but seek to swallow up all they can lay hold upon: These will remit nothing, release nothing, mitigate nothing. It is a worthy precept given by the Apostle, Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of other men. This is a fruit of true faith, and a sign of true love, when we seek to do good one to another. It is a blessed and comfortable thing unto our own hearts, to be content to leave our own, to depart from our right, and to suffer loss and damage. We heard before, how Nehemiah remedied the oppression of the people, whereby he found as great comfort to himself, as he brought comfort to them, so that he prayed, Remember me, (O my God) in goodness, according to all that I have done to this people. If we feel the same affection in our selves, we shall find the benefit thereof in our hearts. On the other side, it shall fall out to be a matter of great grief and griping to our Consciences, to remember how hard-hearted and hand-fast, we have been, even when the Calamity of the times and the necessity of our Brethren have cried out unto us for mercy.

We may see a great number that lie in wait and ambushment, as skouts and espials, nay as Thieves and Robbers for their prey, who suck the blood of their poor Brethren out of their veins, and draw the Marrowe out of their bones. What persons are to be relieved sooner then the poor? And what times and seasons are there to show mercy, better then of Dearth and Famine? Yet then do merciless men (as Horses-Leaches) pull what they can from the poor, to enrich them-selves, albeit it be with the ruin of others. They are glad of such times, they are most welcome unto them, whereas (in very deed) they should then especially open their bowels and breasts to show Compassion to such as are in necessity. Their minds are only bent to enrich themselves, they praise it as a fair and fat year for them-selves, albeit it be a lean and lamentable year for all others. This is a most wretched desire: this argueth a small regard towards the poor, which have much ado to maintain them-selves, even when they are helped and succoured. We see how the prizes of all things increase of Meat, of Drink, of Bread, of Houses, of Lands, of Cattle, and other Commodities: but the earnings and wages of poor folks do not increase, but rather decrease, so that such as have been able to live and to maintain their families in reasonable sort, are now driven to beg, and go behind hand, and live by Alms. If in the general rising of all other things, if in the raising, or rather racking of Rents, if in the inhancing of the prizes of such wares as the rich men have to utter, the hire also of the Day-laborer were augmented and increased, it would be more easy for them to maintain an hard and poor life, and by the sweat of their labor to keep their Wife and Children. But this seemeth to be corrupt and unconscionable dealing against the Law of God, against civil Equity, and common Humanity, and to threaten the decay of many men's estates, that all commodities should alter to extraordinary prizes, and yet the poor have only his ordinary allowance for the day, and be made even a common Drudge or Packhorse, to bear the burdens of others upon his back. The Law of love requireth, that the more we see any man distressed, so much the more we ought to spare him, until he may recover his estate. If we see him willing to pay us, and grieved in himself that he cannot pay us, and use all good means to his utmost power to pay us, let us bear with him, and not show rigor toward him. If we should see a poor Cripple halting, and scars• able to draw his legs after him, and another, instead of reaching him a staff to stay him, or his hand to help him, would cut his sinnewes in sunder, or smite his Hamstrings, that he should be able to go no further, would not all men condemn him of cruelty and inhumanity? In like manner, when we behold our poor Brother in great necessity, having much ado to maintain himself, and sustain his life, if we thrust him down altogether, how dwelleth the love of God in us? Shall not his poverty cry unto him for vengeance? Let us therefore beware of adding affliction to such as are already in misery, and know, that the sparing of the poor, is an acceptable service & sacrifice unto God, wherewith he is exceedingly well pleased.

Secondly, this Doctrine serveth for reproof. First, against wretched Usurers, and extreme Creditors, that will neither spare nor forbear their poor Debtors any time, albeit their necessity be never so great, albeit their loss be never so inevitable, albeit their desire be never so earnest to make them satisfaction, yet they will extort and exact the utmost farthing, to the utter ruin of them, and of all that belong unto them. To these men the Apostle James saith, There shall be condemnation merciless, to him that showeth not mercy, and mercy rejoiceth against condemnation. For in the last day, when they shall stand at the judgment seat of Christ, they shall find him as rigorous to them, as they show themselves hard-hearted toward others. The rich man in the Gospel, that suffered Lazarus to lie at his gate, without relief and compassion, would have given an whole world (if he had had it) for one drop of water to cool his tongue that was tormented in that flame: but when he most of all wanted comfort, it was denied unto him. The servant in the Parable, that would not refrain his anger, nor forbear his fellow that fell down at his feet, and craved respite, but went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt, hath the same measure measured unto him again, for his Lord did call him unto him, and said unto him; O evil Servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou prayedst me, oughtest not thou also to have had pity on thy fellow-servant, as I had pity on thee? So his Lord was wroth, and delivered him to the Tormenters, till he should pay all that was due to him. It is laid to the charge of the Jews, that notwithstanding their outward profession and show of Religion, they were indeed irreligious and void of true piety, in that they refused to show mercy toward the poor. For the Prophet Isaiah, Chapt. 58, 3. or rather the Lord by the Prophet, saith; They will draw near unto God, saying; Wherefore have we Fasted, and thou seest it not? We have punished our selves, and thou regardest it not? Behold, in the day of your fast you will seek your will, and require all your debts.

Where the Prophet reproveth the hypocrisy of this people that gloried in the observation of the Ceremonies, and yet they shown no pity to their Neighbors, but delighted rather to fleese and flawe them to the uttermost. Is is wisely said of Solomon. Prov. 22. He that oppresseth the poor to increase himself, and giveth unto the Rich, shall surely come to poverty. Seeing therefore we ought not to pull out the throats, or grind the faces, or grieve the hearts of the poor that are not able to pay us, but to show all mildness and moderation toward them; it condemneth their practice that are hot and hasty in pursuing their right, and in persecuting such as bear honest minds to pay every man his own.

Hence it is, that the Prophet pronounceth him happy and blessed, that considereth wisely, and thinketh charitably of such as are in poverty and distress; abilitate, they want power to help them, albeit to relieve them, means to direct them, and counsel to comfort them; Blessed is he that judgeth wisely of the poor, the Lord shall deliver him in the time of trouble: the Lord will keep him and preserve him alive, he shall be blessed upon the Earth, &c. the Lord will strengthen him upon the Bed of sorrow, thou hast turned all his Bed in his sickness. Secondly, this Doctrine is against those, that count themselves clear and beyond all all reproof, if they keep the Letter of the Positiue Law, being notwithstanding therein cruel, unjust, and unmerciful. Extreame Law, is extreme wrong, and great cruelty: for even the laws themselves require to be mitigated with equity, and tempered with reason; and seasoned with conscience. It is not enough for us to say; I do but Justice; I do him no wrong; I seek but mine own. This cannot excuse our extreme courses, nor make our wicked words and works warrantable. The times and occasions may be such, as may make the seeking of our own to be theft; yea, Murder; when it taketh away the Bread of the poor which is their living.

We see, how the Prophet maketh it unlawful for all persons at all times, to require all their debts of all sorts of men. We see, that the Servant in the Gospel is punished for requiring all his own: he cast his Fellow-servant into Prison by a warrant of Law, and a strict course of Justice; he exacted no more then was due unto him; he required not two hundred pence, when an hundred only would have discharged the debt; yet himself was therefore thrown into utter darkness, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. For the times may be so hard, our Brethren may be so poor, and we may be so wealthy, that we ought to be content to depart from our right, and to yield to the necessity of such as are in want, and to say with the Prophet; Is this a time to take Money, and to receive Garments, and Olives, and Vineyards, and Sheep, and Oxen, and Men-Servants, and Maid-Servants? The creditor could say thus much for himself, & lay this for his defense, that came to take away the Children of the poor Widow to make them his Bond-men; He required but his own. The Apostle condemning the contentions that were among the Corinthians in Law-matters, saith; Why rather suffer ye not wrong? Why rather sustain ye not harm? Nay, ye yourselves do wrong and do harm, and that to your Brethren. Wherefore, when we see men's poverty so extreme, that they have need to have all forgiven unto them, we must be content, not by constraint, but willingly to loose sometimes the principal. It is a silly shift to say, I do nothing but that which Law warranteth me: for we must also be able to say; I have done nothing but that which a good conscience hath warranted me; which equity hath warranted me; which love hath warranted me; and (that which is more then all the rest) I have done nothing, but that which the profession of the Gospel of Christ hath warranted me. If we can say this truly, we have comfort in God, and peace in our own hearts. This is it which the Apostle speaketh touching himself, and his own practice; We have not used this power, but suffer all things, that we should not hinder the Gospel of Christ. We must diligentlie consider our calling, and labor to bring forth the fruits of the Gospel, that the name of God be not evil spoken off.

Thirdly, albeit we ought not to be rough or rash in exacting our own, but to deal mercifully, and to bear patiently with the poor: yet this must not give men liberty, to gather other men's goods into their hands, and then to defraud them as much as they can. There be some, that under a color of Religion, will cozen and deceive, creeping into men's bosoms, borrowing and getting from them what they can, with a corrupt mind and a guileful conscience, and spending it in idleness, in riotousnesse, in drunkenness, & such like leudnesse. These are they, that when they are demanded to pay their due, will be ready to curse their Creditours, and to keep from them their goods with a strong hand, and then upbraid them with covetousness, with miserableness, with extortion, with oppression. Yea, some are so unthankful, so proud, and so wicked, that they receive the favors of men, and their friendship toward them, as matters of duty; insomuch that some will say; what have these Rich men done unto me, but they were bound to do that and more also? And what is this in comparison of that, which by the Commandment of God they owe unto me? Thus, while these men ask relief, they think they require nothing but their own, and that others are much indebted and greatly beholden unto them, that they will take an alms at their hands. Others (who yet are more proud and profane) do shamefully abuse, not only the liberality of the rich, but the very word of God it self, framing it to serve their own turn, and wresting it to please their own humors, pretending that they Ought to lend, looking for nothing again. Thus they bend their Scriptures which way they list, not knowing what they say, nor understanding the purpose of Christ. For first, to speak properly when we look for nothing again; we do not lend, but give. When a Man lendeth, he may look for his own; whereas he that giveth, doth it freely.

Again, the purpose of our Savior is to be considered, who in that place moveth us to do good one to another, with a single eye, and with a simple heart; not to love, because we would be loved; nor to do pleasure, because we would receive the like; but to love even our enemies, of whom we have no kindness again. For in the words going before, he saith; If ye love them which love you, what thank shall ye have? For even the Sinners love those that love them, &c. And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank shall ye have? For even the Sinners lend to Sinners, to receive the like. Then afterward followeth the former sentence which these men allege; Love ye your Enemies and do good, and lend, looking for nothing again; that is, for no such pleasure at their hands, do not lend to them at one time, to the end that they may lend to you another time: for this were to respect more our own commodity, then their necessity; and the love of our selves, more then the love we bear to our Brethren. It standeth not with the rule of Charity, to give away part of our goods with this condition, that he pleasure us in the like with that which he hath. For these give or lend nothing, but to those of whom they hope to receive the like; and therefore obey not the counsel of Christ, that would have those called and invited to our Tables, which cannot bid us again, nor give us any recompense. So then, we must show our selves willing to make the poor partakers of that we have, although they be not able to do the like for us. This is it which our Savior meaneth By lending, and looking for nothing again: And thus much touching the natural Interpretation of that place, which these men abuse and pervert, as they do also other Scriptures. But to leave them, and to return to the former matter; It is a pernicious kind of Theft, in former days scarce heard off, or at the least not so commonly practiced, that men regard not how great sums, or what value of other men's good they get into their hands. If a man be holpen in his need, and he forget it; if he do not ackno•...ledge it; if he do not pray to God to requite and recompense it, when himself hath no means to do it, he abuseth the liberality shown toward him, and is no better then a Thief. But to gather the wealth of others to our selves, and to borrow Money, or take up Wares of credit, as far as they can be trusted; of one, an hundred pound; of another, fifty; of one more, and of another less; never purposing to repay, but as soon as they have laid held on it, to break up, is a more monstrous kind of robbery then the former. For then a report is noysed abroad that they are Banckrupt, and by and by an agreement must be sought with their Creditors, to satisfy them forsooth with the third, with the sixth, with the tenth part: they purposing afterward to live upon their stolen goods and the labors of other men; whereby oftentimes it falleth out, that many godly and honest dealing men are utterly undone, and their poor Wives and Children brought to great poverty. It is made a property of the wicked by the Prophet, to make care to borrow, but to take no care to restore. Psal. 73. The wicked borroweth and payeth not again, but the righteous is merciful and giveth. It testifies the wonderful care that was among the Servants of God to make restitution, in that when the Iron where-with one was felling of a Tree fell into the Water, he cried out and said; Alas Master it was but borrowed.

Whereby it appeareth, he was more troubled for the lack and loss of it, then if it had been his own. It is likewise to be considered of us, which the Apostle Paul teacheth. Rom. 13. Owe nothing to any Man, but to love one another: for he that loveth another, hath fulfilled the Law. Wherefore it standeth us upon, to restore the things we have borrowed, and to pay those to whom we are indebted; albeit, it be with the sale of the necessary things we have. The Widow of the Sons of the Prophets, at the commandment of Elisha, selleth the Oil that God sent her to pay her Creditor: as we see 2. King. 4. for the Prophet said unto her; Go and sell the Oil, and pay them that thou art in debt unto, and live thou and thy Children upon the rest. Where we see, God would not have the Creditor defrauded, but rather then the debt should be vnpaide, the Lord himself would pay it: and the Prophet did not give her counsel to rail and rage against the Creditor; to call him a Miser and covetous Cormorant, or to live in excess and abundance, without care to satisfy that debt which might be demanded: but charged her first of all to pay the whole, and if any were left, she and her Children should feed upon the rest. But some man may say, what if we be not able? What if we have nothing wherewith to pay? What are we then to do, or what course are we to take? I answer, God accepteth of a ready and willing mind, where there is no farther strength or better ability. Offer thy labor and service; show thy repentance and remorse of conscience; testify the truth of them by thy sorrow and tears, and if ever God make thee able, thou must do it actually.

It may be further objected, though a man be able to restore, how if in doing it, he shall utterly shame himself and his profession? If this of necessity must follow, make choice of some faithful Friende that may perform this duty for thee, and conceal thy Name. Secondly, it is better to seek the praise of God, then the praise of men. Thirdly, honor, and praise, and peace, are promised to all that be truly converted: and the reward of sin not repented off, is shame, and reproach, and contempt, both Temporal & Eternal; according to the Testimony of the Apostle, What fruit had ye then in those things, whereof ye are now ashamed? For the end of those things is death: but now being freed from sin, and made Servants unto God, ye have your fruit in holiness, and the end everlasting life. But if it be farther asked, How if the parties be dead, or what if I know not the special persons whose goods I possess? I answer, restore them to their Heirs; if they have none, or thou know none, yet keep them not with thee, they will kindle a fire in thy Family, that shalt wast all thy wealth and store, till nothing be left. In this case make the poor their Heirs, deal as Zacchaeus, Luke 19. Be merciful toward them.

Lastly, the question may be demanded, whether the Son be bound to restore the goods, which the Father hath gotten by oppression? I answer briefly, whatsoever the Son knoweth to be evilly gotten, cannot be justly kept from the lawful and just owners thereof. Ezek. 18, 14, 15. &c. Prov. 28, 8. If the Son follow the abominations of his Father, and walk in them, or approve of them, he maketh himself guilty of the same offenses also.

Lastly, seeing it is our bounden duty to forbear, and sometimes to forgive such as are poor and not able to pay: we may gather from hence, for the strengthening and confirmation of our Faith, that much more will God with patience forbear, and in mercy forgive us our debts and trespasses. He teacheth us to ask forgiveness at his hands, Being assured of it if we forgive. He chargeth us to forgive, Not only seven times, but seauenty times seven times. He instructeth us, That if our Brother sin against us seauenty times in a day, and seventy times in a day turn again to us, saying; It repenteth me, we must forgive him. We have not one drop of that infinite mercy that is in God, whose compassion is higher then the Heavens, and greater then the love of Parents toward their Children. He that commandeth mercy to others, will not be unmerciful himself: and he that forbids cruelty to others, will remember to be merciful himself. It is the greatest dishonor done unto God that can be, to doubt of his favor, and to call his loving kindness into question. We must build upon his promises as upon a stable and steadfast foundation that shall never be removed. Heaven and earth shall pass away, But his word shall not pass away. We have the word and Oath of God, as two unchangeable Witnesses, so that it is impossible that he should lie, or we be deceived. We have the Sacraments of God as two Authenticke Seals, to ratify his promises, and to make them most sure unto us. We have the earnest penny as a certain pawn left unto us, And the spirit of adoption testifying with our Spirits, that we are the Sons of God. We have the grace of Sanctification written in our hearts, whereby we are dead to sin, and crucified unto the world.

Wherefore, seeing we have so many ways to warrant his gracious goodness unto us; why do we yet stand in doubt? and wherefore are our minds wavering in his mercies, As a Waue of the Sea tossed by the violence of the Winds? Let us enter into our own hearts, and consider our own dealinges toward our Brethren. If we find our selves ready to forgive, and inclined to remit the injuries done unto us, and willing to release, or at least to forbear the debts, that we may worthily challenge of many our poor and needy brethren: we may from this compassion toward them, gather an undoubted persuasion (as a necessary conclusion) to our selves, that his mercy should be extended in great measure toward us, & that he will never forget his wonderful compassion, knowing that whomsoever he loveth, undoubtedly he loveth unto the end. He is never weary of well-doing, his gifts are without repentance. He is not as man, that he should lie; nor as the Son of Man that he should change, With whom is no variableness, nor shadow of turning. We are variable and unconstant, but he is always the same, and will make good the words that are gone out of his own mouth.

[Let me obtain this pleasure in the Lord, &c.]

The Apostle in these words doth testify, that these things which he requested of Philemon were in the Lord; that is, agreeable to the will of God. He doth not crave them to please himself, or to pleasure Onesimus only, but he asketh them, because he knoweth that the obtaining of the same will be acceptable to God. Here then he showeth what ought to be the end that we propound to our selves, in making suites and requests to others; we must consider, not so much what may content us, as what God commandeth and alloweth. From hence we learn, that whatsoever we do move, desire, provoke, and persuade others to do, must be in the Lord; that is, warrantable, and conscionable, standing with the will of God and a good conscience. This is it which the Apostle handleth. Phil. 4. Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are worthy love, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, or if there be any praise, think on these things. And afterward in the same Chapter, commending them for a work of mercy; he showeth, That it was an odour that smelleth sweet, a Sacrifice acceptable and pleasing to God. Likewise Ester 4. 14. When Mordecai would persuade Ester to adventure her credit and life in the behalf of the Church, which was sold to the mercy of the Sword, and to the tyranny of the Enemies; he showeth the equity and lawfulness of it, though it were dangerous for her, and threatened death unto her; Who knoweth whether thou art come to the Kingdom for such a time? As if he should say; Thou owest this duty to God and service to his Church, being advanced to the Kingdom for this end and purpose, and therefore it is well-pleasing in his sight. Thus doth Nehemiah exhort the Rich and the Rulers among the peoole, to restore the Lands, the Vine-yards, the Olives, the Houses, together, with the hundred part of the Silver, and of the Corn, and of the Wine, and of the Oil that they exacted of them; showing, that in so doing, They should walk in the fear of God, and redeem themselves from the reproach of the Heathen. Thus the Apostle persuadeth the Thessalonians to sanctification, Because it is the will and pleasure of God, who hath not called us to uncleanness, but unto holiness. By all these consents, as by most strong Evidences and firm Witnesses it appeareth, that we ought to have the warrant of God's word and approved will, to allow whatsoever we require or provoke others to do.

This will be made very plain and manifest by sundry reasons. First of all, true love will require only such things as are honest. Such as proceed further, and make their own will the rule and line to square out other men's actions with all, do want true love, and are not indeed true Frrendes. The Apostle describing the Fruits and effects of love, saith; It rejoiceth not in Iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth. It is a good & sound note of a right friend, to request such things only as are just and seemly. The very Heathen by the light of nature could see thus far, and teach how far we are bound to pleasure and profit our friends.

Secondly, such requests as are lawful and laudable, do give warrant in craving, boldness in asking, and comfort in obtaining. Such requests shall never make us ashamed to move them, nor cause us to take the repulse or denial when we have moved them. We see this in the example of Mordecai, when he craved of Ester to make intercession for her people, she looked more into her own danger, then into the Churches deliverance; and respected more her own person, then their safety: notwithstanding, he knowing his request to be honest and lawful, would not give over, but continued his suit; though he were delayed, yet he was not daunted; though he were denied, yet he was not discouraged; but went forward boldlie, until he received a gracious answer. The like we see in the Woman of Canaan, who came to Christ for her Daughter, that Was miserably vexed with a Devil; albeit, she received a three-fold repulse, or a three-fold delay; yet such was her Faith, that she would take no denial, but did stride over all things that might seem to hinder her, and never would cease until she had obtained her request. Whereby we see, that her honest request was granted, and she went not away empty.

Thirdly, such motions receive a blessing from God. If we crave and desire nothing at the hands of others but that which is right, our persuasions shall be accepted of God, who hath the hearts of all men in his own power, to change and alter as it pleaseth him. When Ester asked of the King to have her life given her, at her petition, and her people at her request; she had it granted, and more also then she asked. On the other side, unlawful and ungodly suits, do oftentimes turn to the confusion of such as obtain them; albeit they may flourish for a time, yet in the end they are snared with the words of their own mouth. We see this in the example of Haman, who after he was exalted in honor next unto the King, he craved of the King very earnestly, That all the Jews should be slain and put to death in one day: this he obtained, and prevailed in his suit, but he never lived to put it in execution, but was hanged on the tree which he had provided and prepared for Mordecai. Wherefore, seeing it is a chief and principal rule in friendship, to request and require only honest things; seeing such requests (though they be great) give comfort and assurance of obtaining, and seeing they receive a blessing at the hands of God: it followeth, that whatsoever we provoke or procure men to do, must have a fair warrant, and be agreeable to the will of God.

The uses of this doctrine are not to be omitted. First, we learn from hence other truths for the strengthening of our Faith. So long as any of our Brethren ask that which is good, & crave of us to give our consent to that which is lawful, we ought to have our ears and our hearts opened to hearken unto them. No request among ten thousand is more reasonable, then when the word of exhortation is offered unto us, and we are moved to repent, and bring forth the fruits of amendment of life. So long as we follow our own lusts, and delight in the profaneness of our corrupt hearts, we walk in darkness, and in the shadow of death, and run the way that leadeth to destruction. If then any come unto us, and persuade us to turn unto God, and to forsake our former ways: who are better, or greater, or surer Friends unto us then these? For who can wish us greater good, or procure us greater benefit, then to seek to save our souls, and to make us inheritors of God's Kingdom? We ought therefore to make much of them, and not send them away from us weeping. These seek not themselves, but us; they aim not at their own profit, but ours; it is our duty one to another, to exhort one another, while it is called To day. Are they charged and commanded to have mouths to speak unto us, and ought not we to have ears to hear them, and hearts to obey them? On the other side, it is necessary to deny whatsoever is unjust, and dishonest, and unreasonable, whatsoever we are required, and by whomsoever we are importuned. For as it is a commendable virtue not to deny, or delay a Christian request put up unto us: so is it as praise-worthy, to refuse to hearken and yield to any unlawful and wicked desire. What though we be dear friends, or great acquaintance, or near Brethren? What though we have a mutual communion of good things among us? Should we therefore abuse this conjunction that we have one with another? It is accounted by the Heathen Philosophers, as the first Law to be observed in friendship, that we neither request things shameful and dishonest, neither do them when we are requested. It is an absurd thing to imagine, that they which refuse to gratify us in ungodly things, and to follow our corrupt minds, and to be ready at our pleasure, to call light, darkness, and darkness, light; good evil, and evil good; should be said to part friendship, and to transgress the limits of peace and concord. For it is a base and blind excuse, and a weak pretence, not to be allowed; for a man, when he hath done evil, to confess he did it for his friends cause, or at his friends request. There is no man so closely tied unto any, that for their sakes he should submit himself to that which is evil, and so make himself partaker of their sins. There is little difference between him that committeth evil, and another that yieldeth to the committing of it. Let us therefore know, that God requireth of us this duty, to take diligent heed that we give no consent to evil, nor incline our hearts to obey those that would provoke us unto it. They are Instruments of the Devil, that would draw us to iniquity, and pull upon our own heads, the heavy wrath and displeasure of God: so that we ought as much to abhor them, and to fly from them, as if we heard the Devil himself speak unto us, and therefore to say unto them; Come behind me Satan, or avoid Satan, thou art an offense unto me.

We have a worthy example of this in Joseph, when his Masters Wife cast her eyes upon him and said; Lye with me, he hearkened not unto her, but denied her request, and refused to be in her company; Behold (saith he) my Master knoweth not what he hath in the House with me, and hath committed all he hath to mine hand: there is no Man greater in this House then I: neither hath he kept anything from me, but only thee, because thou art his Wife: how then can I do this great wickedness, and so sin against GOD. A Carnal Man, that is nothing else but a Lump of Nature, and a Mass of Flesh, and an heap of corruption, would marvel much at the great simplicity of Joseph in this place, and think he dealt like an unwise man, who by obeying his Mistress, might have gotten great honor, purchased much favor, and rid himself from much trouble, which afterward he fell into; as well through the false accusation and information of his Mistress, as also through the rashness and hastiness of his Master. Yea, Joseph himself, if he had looked no farther then to the beholding of glory and prosperity, might have reasoned thus with himself; What shall I do in this case? I am in great trouble on every side. If I do not consent unto her, I shall be falsely accused, evilly entreated, hardly imprisoned, and cruelly handled; I shall live in all woe and misery all the days of my life: were I not therefore better to hearken unto her voice, and thereby avoid all these troubles that hang over mine head: whereas on the other side, I am likely by her means, to come to honor and preferment, and to be in greater credit in my Masters House? He doth not thus consent with Flesh and blood, neither consent to her filthy lust; to the dishour of God; to the injury of his Master; to the blot of his own name; and the wounding of his own conscience: but standeth at denyance and defiance with her, notwithstanding her great flattery and daily importunity. Thus ought it to be with everyone of us, though it be our Master, our Governor, our Parents, our Friends, we must not yield to them in evil; we must not grant any wicked requests that may bring us out of favor with God, and procure his just judgments to come upon us. It were better for us to be out of favor with Men, then out of favor with God: and to fall into their hands, then to sin in the sight of the Lord. It were better to endure a little reproach for a small season for well-doing, then to undergo the wrath of God forever, for evil-doing.

The Mother of Zebedeus Children came with her Sons to Christ, worshipping him, and desiring a certain thing of him; to wit, that her two Sons might sit; the one at his right hand, and the other at his left hand in his Kingdom: he denied them, and said; Ye know not what ye ask: are ye able to drink of the Cup that I shall drink off, and be baptized with the Baptism that I shall be baptized with all? The like we see in Peter and John, when they were commanded in no wise to speak or teach in the Name of Jesus, they answered unto them; Whether it be right in the sight of GOD to obey you rather then God, judge you? This is duly to be considered, and carefully to be practiced of us. Let us not be carried away with the enticements and suggestions of others, knowing that if we follow their direction and counsel in evil, we shall incur the same punishment with them.

Secondly, this serveth to reprove and condemn their folly, that in making suites and requests, never consider what they ought to ask, and what another may grant unto them; but respect their own lusts; anger, malice, revenge, honor, and advantage. What did the Wife of Potipher respect in her raging and burning lust? Did she respect the Covenant of GOD, or the credit of her Husband, or her own honor or honesty? No, uncleanness had possessed her heart; Lust carried her eye; Impudencie ruled her tongue; and all partes of Soul and Body were out of order. The Mother of Solomon requested (as she thought) a small request of him, that Abishag the Shunamite, might be given to Adonijah his Brother to Wife: and the King promised not to say her nay: but when he heard it, he revoked his promise, denied his Mother, and executed Adonijah, as one that aspired to the Kingdom. Wherefore, she was not well advised what she asked.

The like we might say of Herodias & her daughter. For when Herod's Birthday was come and kept, the dancing Minion pleased the eyes of a light & lascivious King, so that he promised with an Oath, That he would give her whatsoever she should ask: and she being before instructed of her Mother, said; Give me here John Baptistes head in a Platter. The mark that these lascivious Women sought after in this request, was the murdering and making away of John, which also followed the giving of this counsel, and the asking of this request. It is an evil thing, to make any evil motion; yea, albeit no evil follow after it, and albeit no consent be given unto it. It was evil in Satan the Tempter, to tempt our Savior in the Wildernsse; albeit he found nothing in him, and could fasten no infidelity, no presumption, no sin upon him. So is it in his Instruments, although they cannot prevail to seduce any unto sin, and draw them to offend God; yet they have wicked hearts and intents, in laying snares and baits to entrap others. We see this in Joseph's unchaste Mistress, albeit she could not draw away his heart from the fear of God, nor weaken the Faith he had in him, yet her sin was not the less, nor her purpose any whit the better. We see this likewise in the suit that Haman propounded and obtained; If it please the King, let it be written that the Jews may be destroyed. Now albeit the Church was delivered, yet his malice was insatiable, and in the end turned to his own destruction. This ought to terrify all graceless Suppliants, that make no choice or conscience what they demand: for when they are not careful to desire such things as are warrantable and consonant to the will and heavenly pleasure of God, their own requests do many times in the just judgment of God, turn to their own confusion. Wherefore it standeth all men upon, to look with a single eye into the cause which they mind, before they seek it, and sue for it; that it be just, reasonable, conscionable and honest: against such, as never have in themselves such consideration, but so they may speed in their purpose, they regard not what they desire. This is a point worthy to be marked of all, especially of those that depend upon others to be advanced and preferred. It is a grievous sin to abuse the favor and authority of others, to bring their bad and lewd purposes to pass. It is the manner of many men that are in credit with great persons, to be bold to solicit any of them without difference or due regard of equity; not considering the lawfulness or unlawfulness of the thing; the making or marring of others; the doing of good unto them, or the utter undoing of them. Hence it is, that John the Baptist exhorteth the Soldiers that came unto him to be instructed; Do violence to no Man, neither accuse any falselie, and be content with your wages. We must therefore take heed what we ask, & into what inconveniences we draw and drive others into. Our requests must be seasoned with the fear of God.

Lastly, we learn, that no man hath an absolute power and authority over others, but limited and restrained within certain bounds. Paul had the highest office of Apostleship committed unto him, yet he could not require and command what we list, he could go no further then the will of the Lord, which is declared and doubled in this place. Albeit God have lifted up our heads above others, and made us Rulers to command, yet we cannot command what we list. The Master must remember, That he also hath a Master in heaven. The Father must consider that he also hath a Father which is in Heaven. Such as are inferiors, are not bound to yield an absolute obedience in all things, but they are tied to obey their Superiors, so far as they do not disobey the Superior power, which is above all power in Heaven and earth. Whatsoever they are commanded to do, can bind the conscience no farther then standeth with the pleasure of God. It is not enough for them to say; I was moved to it by others; I was commanded to do it; it lay not in my power to prevent it or resist it; I am under the jurisdiction of others, and am tied to obey. This will not go for currant payment, but beareth a counterfeit stamp; it is like the Fig-leaves of Adam where-with he covered himself, which served his turn well enough, until God came to examine him, and to enter into judgment with him. So these weak excuses, seem wise reasons to justify our wicked obedience, until they come to be searched and sifted by the light of God's word. For this cause the Apostle teaching subjection to Parents, saith; Children, obey your Parents in the Lord, for this is right. Whereby we learn, how to understand that precept which seemeth to exact a general or universal obedience, Coloss. 3. Children, obey your Parents in all things; namely, that it must be in good and lawful things.

In like manner, as the obedience of Inferiors is instinted and restrained, not left at random and at liberty; so the jurisdiction of such as are in Superior places, is not so great, as to tyrannize over men's consciences, to require what they please, and to command what seemeth good in their own eyes; but it must know the bounds that God hath appointed, and not exceed the same. This made the Apostle say to the Church of the Corinthians, Be ye followers of me, as I am of Christ. He chargeth them to go no farther with him, then they saw him to walk with Christ; and therefore in another place he showeth, That if any Man or any Angel from Heaven should Preach otherwise then they had received, he must be holden accursed.

This serveth to reprove all such as bind their Inferiors to do whatsoever they command. This is to set up our selves instead of GOD. Absolute obedience in all things without restraint is due to none, but unto him that hath an absolute power and command over all Creatures. His authority is infinite, and receiveth no limitation. As for the Sons of men, how great soever their power be; yet it is finite, and it urgeth us no farther, then they have warrant to command us.

Wherefore, they are greatly deceived, and take too much upon them, that think themselves abused, their places contemned, and their authority diminished, when they are not in all things obeyed. Nay, they themselves do not sufficiently know themselves, nor their high callings, that look for more then is due unto them, and require of their Inferiors, so much as they with a good conscience cannot perform. These are they that say; Do they not owe us a duty? Are they not under us? Have not we power over them? May not we command subjection and obedience unto us? True it is, all reverence and obedience is due unto them in the Lord; but if they will have subjection against the Lord, and against his will, they forget their places, they take too much upon them, and they usurp a Dominion that was never committed and communicated unto them. Let all that are in authority, beware of this pride of heart, and advancing themselves above that which ought to be in them.

This we see to have been in Saul, as he persecuted David from place to place, so he commanded the Sergeants that stood about him, To turn and slay the Priests of the Lord; as if they were bound to do it at his desire. The like appeareth in Absalom, when he would satisfy his own malice, and revenge the dishonor done to his Sister Tamar, he commanded his servants, saying; Mark now when Amnons heart is merry with Wine, and when I say unto you; Smite Amnon; kill him, fear not, for have not I commanded you? Be bold therefore, and play the Men. He doth not go about to persuade their consciences of the lawfulness of the fact, but he is blind himself, and seeketh to blind the eyes of other; he is carried away with malice, and filleth the hands of others with blood. Thus are the wicked possessed with pride, and presume in the height of their iniquity, that all their ungodly commandments whatsoever, are to be obeyed. But as they are reprov'd that execute whatsoever they are required to do; so are they reprehended, that will require everything that they list, to glut their own anger and malice. They that do command, and such as are commanded, are both culpable of judgment. Saul, in commanding to slay the Priests of the Lord, was an horrible Murderer; so was also Doeg, the Executioner of it.

Absalom charging his Servants to kill his Brother, was a detestible Parricide; so also the Servants had their hands defiled with blood that obeyed his commandment. Let us therefore all of us remember the rule of the Apostle. 2 Cor. 13. 8. We cannot do anything against the truth, but for the truth: So let all Superiors say; We can command nothing against the Lord, but for the Lord. And let all Inferiors say; we cannot obey against the Lord, but in the Lord; and whether it be better to obey God or Man, judge you. We must all consider, before we require obedience, what it is that we would have done, that we may have warrant to exact it; and others comfort to execute it.

[Refresh my Bowels in the Lord.]

This is another variable phrase, whereby the Apostle requireth, that Onesimus be received again into his Masters service. This earnestness for him argueth, both that the Man before his calling was most wicked; but now after his conversion, was turned to be most godly and religious: besides, that his Masters heart was wonderfullie estranged from him. So then, we are herein to consider two things: first, that unless he had greatly wronged his Master, and done him injury in some heinous manner, the Apostle would not have been so vehement, nor have doubled his request for him.

Secondly, unless he had been throughlie assured and persuaded of his unfeigned repentance, doubtless he would never have pleaded his cause with such effectual Reasons, earnest asseuerations, and often repetitions. Now, in these words of comforting and refreshing his Bowels, he witnesseth; that he should receive exceeding great joy, if Philemon would release Onesimus, and receive him into his love and favor again, as he desired of him.

We learn from hence, that it is a special duty required of us, to rejoyce at the good and benefit of our Brethren, both in Temporal and Eternal blessings. When we see any good befall them in matters concerning this life, or the life to come, it belongeth unto us greatly to rejoyce, and inwardlie be comforted. The practice hereof we may behold in Jethro, when Moses told him all that the Lord had done unto Pharaoh and to the Egyptians for Israel's sake, and all the travail that had come unto them by the way, and how the Lord delivered them; Jethro rejoiced at all the goodness which the Lord had shown to Israel, and because he had delivered them out of the hand of the Egyptians. The like appeareth in the Virgin Marie, Luke 1. 39. She arose in those days and went into the Hill Country with hast, to a City of Judah, she entered into the House of Zechariah, and saluted Elizabeth. They had both tasted of God's great mercy, and had experience of his mighty power: Elizabeth conceived in her old age: Marie conceived being a Virgin, and One of them rejoiced with the other, in a mutual feeling; not only of the goodness of GOD toward themselves, but of his loving kindness toward each other. The same we see afterward, When Elizabeth's time was fulfilled that she should be delivered, she brought forth a Son: and her Neighbors and Cozins heard tell how the Lord had shown his great mercy upon her, and they rejoiced with her. The same affection did the Angel fore-show to Zacharias to be at his birth; as appeareth in the former part of the same Chapter, Luke 1. 14. Thou shalt have joy and gladness, and many shall rejoyce at his Birth. The Apostle John testifieth, that He rejoiced greatly, when he found the Children of the elect Lady walking in the truth. So the Apostle Paul writing unto the Thessalonians, one of the most excellent Churches that ever was planted, calleth them His Joy, his Crown, his Glory. By all these examples we may see, that men ought greatly to rejoyce and be glad when they behold any good to befall their Brethren.

The Reasons are very plain. For first, we ought to be of like affection one toward another, as members of the same body. If we do draw nourishment from Christ our head, we must yield mutual help one to another. Thus the case standeth in the Members of our natural bodies: and this we are put in mind of, Rom. 12. 16. Be of like affection one toward another, be not high minded, &c. We have many members in one Body, and all Members have not one office: so we being many, are one body in Christ, and everyone, one another's Members. Seeing then, we are so neerelie coupled together, our joy ought not to be private to our own selves, but mutual.

Secondly, true love worketh hearty joy for the good of him whom we love. Where there is no true love, there can be no joy, but envy at the good estate of another. Every good and godly thing that we see upon them, will be judged to be too much; and every cross that we see upon them, will be judged to be too little. But if we do indeed love them, and have our hearts joined unto them, we will rejoyce and be glad in their good, as in our own. This is it which the Apostle Paul speaketh, as we have shown you before, 1. Corinth. 13. 6. Love rejoiceth not in Iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth. So then, forasmuch as we are members one of another, and that wheresoever and in whomsoever true love is to be found, there will also follow a rejoicing in the good things that befall unto him whom we love: we may well conclude, that when we see God any way good and gracious to our Brethren, whether it be in matters of this life, or in things belonging to the life to come, we ought to rejoyce and to be glad thereat.

Let us now proceed and pass to the Uses, and so apply this to our selves. First of all, seeing we are to rejoyce at the good of our Brethren, as at our own good; it is our duty to be sad and sorrowful at the hurt and loss that cometh unto them. This is that use which the Apostle deducteth from the contrary, Rom. 12. Rejoice with them that rejoyce, and weep with them that weep. This serveth to reprove such as are dull and senseless, that they cannot rejoyce at any grace or blessing bestowed upon their Brethren, they are not affected at it, they care not for it, they delight not in it, they are not comforted by it. This deadness of Spirit turneth us into the Nature of Beasts; nay, maketh us worse then brute Beasts, who are not wholly without natural affections. It is made a note of a ve... wicked and ungodly Man, To be without natural affection, and to be merciless. The Apostle chargeth us, To be affectioned to love one another with brotherly love. If a Man should be smitten and wounded, have Pinnes or Bodkins thrust into him, and yet never stir, or move, or wag at it, all men would conclude he were past feeling, and without life, and approaching to death. So is it with us, if we can behold the miseries of our Brethren, and never be touched at it, nor troubled with it, we are as dead men, and as rotten members. Secondly, if it make against them that are as stocks and stones, and are never a whit moved or cheered at the prosperous estate of their Christian Brethren; then they are much more to be reprehended, that rejoyce at the ruin and downfall of others, reproaching them, insulting upon them, laughing them to scorn. These men have no spark of true humanity, but are destitute of all Charity, which ought to abound in us toward those that are in misery.

These are far from being grieved at other men's troubles, that after a sort feed upon them, and make a sport at them. If we were in trouble, and any should thus deal with us, that is; not pity us, but make a pastime of us; not comfort us, but deride us; not mourn with us, but scoff at us; we would think our selves greatly abused and injured at their hands. That which we could not have men offer unto us, that we ought not to do unto them; according to the rule of Christ our Savior, Math. 7. 12. Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, even so do you to them: for this is the Law and the Prophets. This is the substance of the second Table: And thus far did diverse of the Heathen see. They saw this to be a very great cruelty, and a savage and brutish usage of men, to throw them down that are ready to fall, and to cast them flat on their faces that begin to stumble. If these Men did but consider that all troubles are of GOD, and that no troubles befall to others, but are incident to the Nature of Man, and may come upon our own heads, it would be an effectual means to hold us back from jesting and scorning at others, in as much as it bringeth the wrath of God upon us and our posterity.

Secondly, seeing it is our duty to be glad thereat, when any good things befall our Brethren; it standeth us upon to search and enquire in love after the condition of the Saints in particular, and of the Church in general. For how shall we rejoice and be glad at their good, if we be not careful to know in what state they are, and how they fare? This duty we may see practiced in the holy Scriptures; by Abraham, Lot, Nehemiah, David, and diverse others, who were both careful to succor and relieve such as were in distress, and watchful to inform themselves of the wants and necessities of their Brethren. And thus we may see how one Church provideth for another, as the Church of Antioch, of Macedonia, and of Corinth, for the poor afflicted Members of Christ that were at Jerusalem. This reproveth such, as albeit they see the troubles of the Church with their eyes, and hear the complaint of the poor with their ears, yet shut their eyes, and stop their ears, and pass by them, as the Priest and Levite did, when they saw him that fell upon Thieves lie wounded and half dead. These shall find as little mercy at the hands of God, as they show to their afflicted and distressed brethren. If then we would find mercy in time of need, let us show mercy and comfort in the time of calamity, when our Friends, our Neighbors, our Kindred are in trouble. And albeit we never see our Brethren lie in their affliction, nor over-whelmed with sorrow, that we should succor them, yet are we not thereby justified and discharged, unless we also have been careful to enquire of others how they do, what they want, and wherein they stand in need of our help. It is recorded of Abraham and Lot, that while they offered their service to entertain strangers, they received Angels into their houses at unawares. When Nehemiah met with some of his Brethren that came from Jerusalem, he tarried not until they made relation of the estate of the Church, to testify his zeal to God's worship, his love to the poor Saints, his desire of the prosperity of the faithful, but he prevented them, and asked earnestly of their welfare. Thus did David remember the kindness between him and Jonathan, and forgot not to show it to his posterity, and to the house of Saul: and albeit he had dealt graciously and mercifully with many, yet he called for more, and left none of them unregarded.

Let this affection rule in us, and draw out of us this testimony of a loving heart. Many there are, that will seem to be friends of the Church, and to regard the good thereof, and when help is craved of them, will not be behind hand to deal liberally toward the relieving thereof. This is a good beginning, and a commendable virtue which is to be cherrished in them, for there are hundreds and thousands that never come so far, nor proceed to this step, but declare themselves either open enemies, or senseless Newters, that look only to them-selves, but have no feeling of the estate of others. Nevertheless, if God have given unto us a bountiful hand, we must not rest there, and stand at a stay, we must learn a farther lesson, and ascend up higher, and show more love to the Church, then to give to them that ask, and to succor such as we see in necessity; for we must give an account of a farther duty, even use our tongues that God hath given us to inform our selves in the knowledge of their condition that we see not, that are absent from us, that are unknown unto us. We see how desirous and greedy men are of news, and to enquire of Travelers the estate of places and persons, that they may seem to be ignorant of nothing: and in this they are very Athenians, who gave themselves to nothing else, but either to tell, or to hear some news. But this desire of novelty, argueth the vanity of our minds, or serveth to the delight of the outward man, or at the farthest bringeth with it only a momentary pleasure, and slender profit. If we would know such news as may delight our selves and others, and bring great pleasure, and greater profit both to our selves and others, let us inquire how the poor people of God do, let us ask of their welfare, let us use all means to know their estate; this shall be well pleasing to God, comfortable to our selves, profitable to the Church, and auayleable to stir up others to follow our example.

Thirdly, if it be required of us to be touched with a feeling of the good things that come to our Brethren; then it followeth, that we ought much more to be moved to rejoice at our own good. He will never be glad at the benefit that befalleth another, that is no way affected at the good that befalleth him-self. When we have the means of instruction offered unto us, and we begin to be converted unto the faith, there is matter of exceeding great joy and gladness set before us. It hath been an old custom for men to celebtate and solemnize their birth day, the day wherein they were borne and brought forth into the world: and we have one example of it in the Gospel, of Herod, who when his birth day was kept, made a Banquet to his Princes and Captains, and chief estates of Galilee. If this were used among the Heathen, to retain in memory the remembrance of that time, wherein it was said, A Man-child is borne into the world, how much more ought we that are Christians, to make the day of our new birth, a day of joy and gladness, a day of mirth and delight, a day of feasting and rejoicing in the Lord, wherein we have been borne again, and made the Children of God. For the first birth is unto death; the second, is unto life. The first birth giveth us a being; the second, giveth us a good being in God; the first birth is to condemnation, the second birth is to salvation. By the first birth we are made the vessels of wrath; by the second, we are made the heirs of the heavenly kingdom. The first birth is in uncleanness; the second birth is in righteousness, and in true holiness. By the first birth, we bear the Image of the first Adam; by the second, we bear the Image of Christ the second Adam. By the first birth, we can do nothing but evil, inasmuch as the immaginations of the thoughts of our hearts, are only evil continually; by the second birth, we are enabled and strengthened by the spirit to do good, and to walk in the ways of God that are well pleasing in his sight; so that this ought to be much more esteemed of us, then the former, and to comfort us above all things and times in the world. We see this in the example of Zacchaeus, who at his new birth was comforted exceedingly, he received Christ Jesus joyfully, he acknowledged him as the Father that begat him willingly: he made a great feast for gladness, and gave great gifts to the poor, with all alacrity. The like appeareth in the Jailor, recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, Who being converted, at the same time he took his two Fathers, Paul & Silas, and washed their wounds; he set meat before them, & reioysed greatly with all his household. We ought therefore to know them that have begotten us in the Lord, and have been Instruments of our conversion.

These examples serve as a reproof against those, that never had knowledge either of the time when, or of the place where, or of the manner how, or of the person by whom they were converted and begotten again as new borne babes in Christ; that never had the feeling of this grace of regeneration. This is a wretched condition, and a fearful sign, that they savor still of the flesh, and lie in the corruptions of the old Adam, and know not what a second birth meaneth. Thus it was with Nicodemus, a man of the Pharisees, a Ruler of the Jews, and a Teacher of Israel, when Christ had taught him, That except a Man be borne again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God, he answered, How can a man be borne which is old? Can he enter into his Mothers womb again, and be borne? We see in all Churches there is an order appointed (and to good purpose) that a note should be taken, and a Register kept of our birth, and the birth of our Children. If there be a good use of this, much more benefit and comfort shall we find by the recording of our second birth, of our life in God, and our dying to sin, by remembering the time, the place, the party, & other such like circumstances, to the everlasting peace of our own Consciences, by whom we have been brought to this life. And indeed it is impossible that ever we should rejoyce at the conversion of a sinner, except we have learned to conceive great joy and gladness, when our hearts are opened and softened to receive the Graces of God into them.

Lastly, seeing we are to rejoyce at the good of our brethren, we must from hence be drawn to an higher and farther duty; Namely, to give thanks to God for them, as for the blessings bestowed upon our selves. It is our duty to crave of God such things as they want, and to give him the praise for such things as he hath bestowed upon them. Our joy must not be carnal, but our rejoicing must be in the Lord. If then we order our joy and gladness aright, it will lift us up to behold and consider from whence all good things proceed. We oftentimes receive at the hands of God many good gifts, but never remember to return unto him the praise. So it falleth out, that diverse will seem joyful and glad at the prosperity and happiness of their brethren, who nevertheless are tongue-tied, & never open their mouths to give glory to the giver and granter of them. We must therefore know, that it is our duty to render thanks to God for his benefits vouchsafed to his people. And this is a notable sign and token whereby we may try and examine what our mirth and gladness is, and whether it be rightly ordered and disposed, or not. If it be Spiritual, and not Carnal; Holy, and not Profane; Heavenly, and not Worldly; it will stir us up to cast up our eyes and hearts to the Father of Lights, acknowledging all to come from the seat of his holiness. The Apostle directing the Church what their joy ought to be, saith, Phillip. 4, 4. Rejoyce in the Lord always, again I say rejoyce. This use which now we urge of this Doctrine, is expressly confirmed and concluded in the practice of Jethro, as we see, Exod. 18, 10, 11. before remembered unto us: so soon as he had testified his rejoicing; at all the goodness which the Lord had shown to Israel, immediately he said, Blessed be the Lord, who hath delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of Pharaoh: who hath also delivered the people from under the hand of the Egyptians: now I know, that the Lord is greater then all the God's, for as they have dealt proudly with them, so are they recompensed.

Thus Moses declareth, that the great works and wonders that God had shown to Israel, wrought great joy of heart in Jethro his Father in Law; but he rested not there, nor stayed in an outward rejoicing; his joy did end in thanksgiving, which sanctifieth all our mirth and gladness. For if our mouths be filled with laughter, and our tongue with joy, and yet God be shut out of our minds, there is nothing in us, but pride and profaneness of heart. Then is our mirth true mirth; and our joyfulness true gladness; when God is all in all, when we acknowledge him to be the author of it. This appeareth in the people, when God brought again the captivity of Zion, They were like them that dream, and became very joyful: Then said they among the Heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them; the Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we rejoyce. Where we see, that their joy of heart was accompanied with giving of thanks. The like we might say of Melchizedek King of Shalem, and Priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the Kings, and blessed him, saying; Blessed art thou Abram, of God, most high possessor of Heaven and Earth, and blessed be the most high God, which hath delivered thine enemies into thine hand. This reproveth those that know no joy, but that which is fleshly, like unto themselves, who as they are carnal, so they rejoyce in nothing but that which is carnal. The end of this joy is heaviness. It is the faithful only that are of God in Christ Jesus, that can truly rejoyce and be merry from the heart: as for the joy of others, it is but from the teeth and tongue outwardly, it cometh not from the inward parts. This the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 32, 21. and 33, 1. Be glad ye righteous, and rejoyce in the Lord: and be joyful all ye that are upright in heart: Thereby declaring, that the ungodly and profane men of the Worlde, have nothing to do with this gladness whereof we speak: their joy is not in the Lord, but in the Flesh, it is not accompanied with thankfulness, but with all looseness, excess, and riotousnesse.

Verse 21. [Trusting in thine obedience, I have written unto thee.]

In these words the Apostle excuseth, that he hath hitherto been so earnest with Philemon, declaring, that notwithstanding his exact and effectual manner of handling the matter, he doubted not of his receiving of him into his favor again. So then, his drift is to show his good opinion of him, that he would not stick to forgive him, but yield readily to every honest & reasonable request. He knew not certainly what Philemon would do, he knew what wrongs he had received, and what losses he had sustained at his Servants hands; yet we see how grounding himself upon the former trial of his Faith and Obedience; he hopeth the best, he doubteth nor the worst; he trusteth in his obedience, he feareth not his denial. From hence we learn, that it is our duty always to hope well, and to think the best, not to suspect the worst of our brethren. This appeareth to have been in Jacob towards his Children, when they had sold their Brother, and dipped his Coat in a Kids blood, and brought it to their Father. Albeit he knew they hated Joseph whom he loved exceedingly, yet he would not suspect them for the murthuring and making away of his Son, but said; Gen. 37, 33. It is my sons Coat, a wicked Beast hath devoured him, Joseph is surely torn in pieces. The like appeareth in Joseph, who was betrothed to Marie the Mother of Christ, when he saw that she was with Child, he concluded rather, that it was by committing Fornication before the contract, then by committing adultery after her betrothing. When the matter was uncertain and unknown unto him, he judged the best. Thus dealt Jonathan, who was faithful toward David, he persuaded himself and his friend the best of his Father. For when David said, What have I done? What is mine iniquity? And what sin have I committed before thy Father, that he seeketh my life? He said unto him, God forbid, thou shalt not die: Behold, my Father will do nothing, great nor small, but he will show it me: and why should my Father hide this thing from me? He will not do it. There was more Charity in the son, then there was piety in the Father; for he judged better then Saul deserved. Likewise when the Apostle Peter had reproved the Jews for crucifying Christ the Lord of glory, and delivering of him into the hands of sinners, he exhorteth them to repentance, saying; Now Brethren, I know that through ignorance ye did it, as also your Governors, amend your lives therefore and turn, that your sins may be put away, when the time of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord. He hopeth the best of them, and doth not keep or hide in his heart any hard conceit against any of them. In like manner, the Apostle writing to the Hebrews, and denouncing a sharp and severe threatening against those that fall from God, deny his truth, and renounce his Religion, he addeth, But beloved, we have persuaded our selves better things of you, and such as accompany salvation, though we thus speak. Whereby he mittigateth and asswageth all that he had said, hoping better of them to whom he writeth. All these Testimonies, taken both out of the old & New Testament, do serve to teach us, that we are bound to judge the best, and charged not to nourish any hard conceits against our brethren.

The Reasons following will make it more plain, if anything can yet be plainer. First, it is a property of love to be charitably affected, as the Apostle testifieth in his description of it, 1 Cor. 13, 5, 7. Love thinketh not evil. Again he saith, It suffereth all things, it believeth all things, it hopeth all things, it endureth all things. The Wise man also teacheth, That love covereth a multitude of sins. So then, where Christian Love and Brotherly kindness is, there is the best opinion and judgment one of another.

Secondly, it is a fruit of a righteous man to hope the best, and to judge charitably of his Brother. The best man doth hardly suspect others to be bad. It is said of Joseph, Math. 1, 19. that being a just and righteous man, he was not willing to make the Virgin Mary that was betrothed unto him a public example, but was minded to put her away secretly. Whereby we gather, that the reason why he would not pursue his right with extremity, but conceived the best according to the rule of Charity, was, because he was a just man, ready to give to every man his own. On the other side, it is a note of a wicked man, to think or imagine the worst of men. It is a common Proverb, A man doth muse, as he doth use; as himself, useth to do, so he imagineth of another. He that judgeth lewdly of another, by mere suspicion or supposition, is commonly lewd himself. For such as are wicked, do think others as wicked as them-selves: and such as are Hypocrites themselves, are most forward to tax others of hypocrisy. Seeing therefore, to be charitably minded, is both a property of love, and a fruit of righteousness; it followeth, that we ought to hope the best of all our brethren.

The Uses remain to be considered. First, this serveth to reprove sundry abuses that are crept in among us, and are too common in our practice, directly condemned in the ninth Commandment; which tend to the hurt of our Brothers good name, as all hard conceits and evil surmizes, all uncharitable opinions, and suspicions, against them. The good name of a man is very precious, yet it hath many enemies. If then we be charged to conceive the best in doubtful cases one of another, the capital sin of Calumniation or slander, is hereby condemned, as the chief opposite to a man's estimation and credit. This hath many branches, that are breaches of the Law: all of one kind and Kindred, and all enemies unto the good Names of our Brethren. In this number are ranged these three, as Companions one of another: the Tale-breeder, the Tale-bearer, and the Tale believer.

The first beginner of all the mischief, is the Inuenter and Deuiser of Tales, who forgeth them in the fire of hell, who hammereth them upon the A nuile of malice and envy, who venteth them abroad, and letteth them fly upon the wings of fame and report, thereby maliciously intending the disgrace and damage of his Brother. There is no sin maketh a man so resemble the Devil, as this doth; inasmuch as he hath his name from slandering and backbiting. These men the Lord doth greatly detest, and will shut them out of his kingdom.

Secondly, hereby is reprov'd the Tale-carrier; the former Merchant bringeth in the wares, this man is as a Pedler to utter the wares, and to set them to sale. And thus the Scripture it self speaketh of these broachers and bringers of them, as Levite. 19. 16. Thou shalt not Merchandize tales, or walk about with Tales among thy people. This sort of men is not idle, but is always stirring up and down; they sit not at home, but frequent many places; they are not strangers, and unknown abroad, but are acquainted with many persons, and will insinuate themselves into their company. It is a notable Metaphor that the spirit of God useth, to compare them to Pedlers, or petty-chapmen. We see what the Trade and fashion of Pedlers is, so soon as they have bought their wares of someone or moe Merchants, they sel the same commodities to others. Thus it is with Backbyters and Tale-bearers; when they have gathered together a fardle of tales, of rumors, and reports; as it were with a pack of Wares, they wander from one place to another, from one house to another, from one person to another, that they may set out to sale such stuff as they have heard, and utter them in the absence of their Neighbor, to his disgrace and infamy. These are they, which increase hatred among enemies, and make discord among the best Friends. Hence it is, that Solomon saith, Without wood the fire is quenched, and without a Tale-bearer strife ceaseth. Such persons are the very plagues and poison of human society, they wound a man in his good name, they rob him of his goods, they wrong him in his friends, they bereave him of his life. This we see in the example of Doeg the Edomite, who caused the Priests of the Lord to be slain: of Ziba the false and unfaithful servant of Mephibosheth, who by slandering his Master, obtained his goods. It is a great injury to rob a man of his goods, it is an heinous Theft in the sight of God: it is a greater injury to spoil a man of his good name, which is sweeter then Oyntments, and better then Riches; for that which is stolen may be restored, but the blot of infamy is hardly or never wiped away. There is some remedy against the biting of Serpents, mad Dogs, and venomous beasts; but against the toong of the slanderer & Sycophant, there can none be found. We see that thieves (who come to spoil and to steal) may be prevented or shunned, but who can stand before the tongues and tales of the Tale-bearer? But it is the greatest injury to bereave a man of his life; which the slanderer doth oftentimes, by sowing discord between party and party, as we shown before in Doeg, of whom the Prophet David complaineth, Psal. 52, 2, 4. That his Tongue did cut like a sharp Razor, and that he loved all words that may destroy. They are pronounced happy by the mouth of Christ that are peace-makers; are not they therefore to be holden accursed, that sow hatred among friends, as it were Darnell in the fields; that are Make-bates and pick-thanks, seeking to please the fancies of others? If then, the makers of peace be the sons of God; surely Tale-bearers, that are makers of debate, are the Children of the Devil, whose Image they bear. These are the Devils Merchants, and carry about with them his wares; they are his Apprentises or Iourny-men, and serve him for wages. And albeit they set up one Trade, yet they sell not after one fashion. Some come whispering and leasting secretly to the disgrace of others; some come glozing and perverting the words that they utter, contrary to their meaning; some have no sooner sold their commodities that they carry into one place, but they store themselves by and by with new. For, as they speak to us of other men freely, and fully, and falsely; so they will speak as largely and lewdly of us, to other men.

Thirdly, here is condemned another enemy of our name and credit, to wit; he that loveth, believeth, and entertaineth lies and slanders. These are such, as deal not toward others, as they would have others deal with them. This sin is reprov'd in the Law, Exod. 23, 1. Thou shalt not receive a false Tale, neither shalt thou put thine hand with the wicked, to be a false witness. This the Prophet David teacheth. Psal. 15, 3. He that slandereth not with his tongue, nor doth evil to his Neighbor, nor receiveth a false report against his neighbor, shall dwell in the Lord's Tabernacle, and rest in his holy hill. But on the contrary, such as slander, and defame, and receive, and believe false tales, are delivered up to Satan, and are heirs of hell. In theft we see, that such as receive stolen goods, are accessory to the theft; so he that willingly heareth and receiveth the reports of whisperers, is guilty of the crime of back-biting. For it is a true saying; If there were no Tale-inuenter, there would be no Tale-receiver; and if there were no Tale-receiver, there would be no Tale-bearer. Against all these Maladies and Mischiefes, an approved and often tried Medicine, is true Charity; for if there be in us a Charitable Mind, a Charitable Tongue, a Charitable Eare, a Charitable Heart, we shall be safe from these euilles. Where there is a Charitable Mind, there will be no devising and inuentering of slanders. Where there is a Charitable Tongue, there will be no carting and carrying of false reports. Where there is a Charitable Eare, there will be no hearing of evil surmises one against another; And where there is a Charitable Heart, there will be no believing of them. Many attain to the first step, they have a Charitable Mind, they will invent and forge no tales; but they miss in the second, they want a Charitable tongue; for when they have heard false tales, they carry them about from one to another, and by that means the mischief spreadeth farther: But many do come to these two first steppes, and yet fail in the third; they have Charitable Minds and Tongues, they will devise nothing, they will disperse nothing, yet they want a Charitable Eare, because they take delight to hear false tales, and to have them brought unto them. It behooveth us to watch over our Ears, as well as our Tongues; and consider, that if we did not desire to hear them, others would not long take delight to report them.

Secondly, it is our duty to expound and interpret all doubtful things in the best part, before the truth do plainly and clearly appear unto us, and what we may to cover their infirmities. We must not be suspicious without great cause or good ground, but to give all uncertain and wandering reports of our brethren, the best Interpretation, according to the rule before remembered, Love believeth all things, it hopeth all things. True it is, we ought not to be over-credulous and light of belief, to credit all things that are brought unto us, as David was when he entertained & believed false Ziba against his faithful subject. Neither ought we to be hard of belief, to believe nothing that is told us, though never so constantly and certainly, as appeareth in Gedaliah, who would not believe Iohanan and the Captains of the host, that certified him that Ishmael was sent to slay him. But this his want of belief, he bought with the loss of his own life. Again, as we are to construe things in the best sense, and beware that we wrest nothing contrary to the meaning of the speaker, considering that they are heinous sinners, that take all things in the worse part: so we are also bound to show a loving heart, a tender affection, and a Charitable compassion toward our brethren, in seeking to defend and maintain his good name, when we hear him slandered, and his good name impaired. If we hear a malicious enemy broach his malice, by speaking lies, and uttering slanders against our brethren, ought not we as their friends, in love to open our mouths in the cause of the dumb, showing our dislike of their evil reports, and testifying our good affection toward their persons, and relating the truth in their defense? For we must know, that we may be slanderers as well by silence, and holding our peace, as by discrediting them by our tongues. He is a false witness, that hearing his neighbor falsely accused, doth not labor to clear him, when he is able by giving Testimony unto the truth.

When Jonathan by his own knowledge, perceived that the reports were false which flatterers had devised, and Saul had immagined against David, (being then misled and misinformed) he could not hold his tongue, but spake in his defense, in the cause of the innocent, saying; Wherefore shall he die? What hath he done? The like we see in Nicodemus, when he saw the malice of the Scribes and Pharisees to have been so great, that they would have condemned Christ absent and unheard, he stood up in the Counsel, & said; Doth our Law judge a man before it hear him, and know what he hath done? This ought to be an example unto us, how to behave our selves, when we hear good and godly men reviled and railed upon, wrongfully accused, and unjustly slandered, we should not be tongue-tied, but open our mouths in their defense. It is a firm testimony of our love both to their person & profession. Lastly, we are to show the grief & sorrow which we conceive, whensoever we hear a true report of any faults and sins committed by them that have been a blot and blemish unto him. We see this in Nehemiah, in Ezra, in Paul, and many others. So then, such as are ready to judge the best of their brethren, will be careful to make the best of everything, to defend their good name from slanders and reproaches, and to testify their grief for such evils as break out of them.

Thirdly, albeit we are to hope the best of others, and to judge charitably of them; yet we must know, that it is our duty to admonish one another, and seek to convert one another from going astray. Heereby we shall save a soul, clear their good name, and cover a multitude of sins. For it is most certain, we can never conceive a good Opinion of them, nor have them in any estimation, nor entertain a Charitable Judgment of their doings, unless we show our selves forward to exhort and admonish them, when we see they walk not with a right foot, nor tread in the steppes that lead unto eternal life. When Paul saw Peter dissemble with the Jews, he reproveth him to his face: so did Nathan the Prophet David after he had sinned.

It is a witness infallible of our love, in that we admonish our Brethren, and suffer not sin upon them. It shall be a precious balm, that shall not break their heads. On the other side, as we are to judge the best of others; and to admonish those that fall and offend: so we ought not to think that they hate us that show us our faults, or that they are our enemies that reprove us. A sharp reproof, is more hardly digested, then a bitter pill is swallowed. We desire for the most part to be soothed and flattered in our sins, and to have soft pillows sowed unto our Elbowes, that we may sleep in sin, without controulment, and so run into destruction without trouble, and with much ease. Never were there more miserable times then these ate, in the which we live. He that reproveth, maketh himself a prey: and he that is reproveth, stormeth and rageth at the matter, as if he had received a great injury, and as if men had gone beyond the bounds of their Calling. But if there be true Wisdom in us, we must regard those that do admonish us in the Lord.

Lastly, seeing it is our duty to hope and esteem the best one of another, let this be acknowledged and confessed of us, that we must judge of no man before the time; we must take heed of rash judgment, according to the rule of Christ, Judge not, that ye be not judged; for with what Judgment ye Judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measuee you mete, it shall be measured to you again. Likewise our Savior in the parable of the Housholder, which went out at the dawning of the day to hire Laborers into his Vineyard, signifieth, That God calleth at all hours and times of the day; some at one time, and some at another, according to the good pleasure of his own will. We must despair of no man's salvation, but hope the best of them, that God will give them repentance, to come out of the snares and subtleties of the Devil, whereby they are holden captives to do his will.

This offereth unto us these three Meditations. First, it is a comfort to those that at the last are brought to repentance. No man is excluded from grace in this life, and from glory in the life to come, that turneth unto God with all his heart. The Thief upon the cross was received to mercy: they that were called at the eleventh hour, and labored but one hour, had their penny. It falleth out oftentimes, That the last are first, & the first are last. Let none despair through the greatness, heinousness, and multitude of his sins, but rather make hast, & delay not the time, to put off from day today, considering how ready the Lord is to embrace him, to receive him, to forgive him.

Secondly, albeit the gate of mercy be set wide open for all penitent persons, yet this ought not to harden men's hearts in carelessness and security. For the ungodly that continue in their sins, have no defense for themselves and their presumption in God's Mercy, by the example of those that were called at the last hour of the day. Mark, that so soon as the thief and Laborers were called, by & by they repented: the reason why they turned from their sins no sooner, was, because grace was no sooner offered unto them: but when God spake, they heard his voice; when God called, they answered without delay: whereas these impenitent persons have had the means oftentimes offered unto them, and yet refuse the calling of the Lord.

Thirdly, we are to hope the best of our brethren, to commend them unto God, to pray for their conversion. There cannot be a greater injury done unto them, then to pass the sentence of condemnation upon them, and as much as lieth in us, to blot them out of the book of Life. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, 1. Cor. 4. Judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will lighten things that are hid in darkness, and make the counsels of the heart manifest, and then shall every man have praise of God. The secrets of God belong unto him, we are not to search into them, but to adore them.

[Knowing that thou wilt do even more then I say.]

This is a confirmation of the former conclusion, drawn from a comparison of the greater to the less, in this manner: I doubt not but thou wilt receive him, because thou art ready to perform more then I require at thy hands, which is amplified and enlarged by an human testimony, I know it well enough. Here then we may see, the good opinion that Paul had conceived of Philemon, that he was willing not only to grant whatsoever he craved of him, but to yield more then he required. The Doctrine arising from hence is this, that righteous men being moved to Honest, Charitable, Just, and necessary duties, will yield more then men can well request and require them to do. The people of God have from time to time shown themselves ready, not only to do what they have been commanded, but to practice more then hath been charged upon them.

This we see in the Children of Israel, when they were required to bring their Offerings to the Lord with a willing heart, they brought too much & more then enough, for the use of the work and the building of the Tabernacle. They were not slack and backward in furthering the service of the Sanctuary, but zealous and forward in promoting the glory of God and the place of his worship, so that they prepared and presented more then was looked for at their hands. When David saw that the plague was stayed, and the hand of God removed from him and his people, he was willed to go up and rear an Altar unto the Lord in the threshing floor of Araunah the Jebusite (where the Angel stood being commanded to stay his hand) which he desired to buy with his money: but Araunah said unto David. Let my Lord the King take and offer what seemeth him good in his eyes: Behold the Oxen for the burnt Offering, and Chariots, and the Oxen for Wood: all these things as a King, he gave unto the King.

True it is, David would not accept of this kindness, nor offer a burnt offering unto the Lord his God, of that which cost him nothing, so that he bought the threshing floor & the Oxen of him at a price; notwithstanding, it showeth the readiness, willingness, and forwardness of this good man to do more then was required at his hands. And as we saw the free-heartednesse of the people at the building of the Tabernacle: so we may see the same in preparing for the building of the Temple, for when David provoked thē by word and example to offer freely, and said Who is willing to fill his hand today unto the Lord? The Princes of the families, and the Princes of the Tribes of Israel, and the Captains of thousands, and of hundreths, with the Rulers of the Kings work, offered willingly, and they gave for the service of the house of God, five thousand Talents of Gold, &c. and they with whom precious stones were found, gave them to the Treasure of the house of the Lord, &c. So that among them they brought more to the helping forward of the building of the Temple, then David looked for.

The like we see in the practice of the Churches of Macedonia, who provided for the Saints of Jerusalem, not only as they were able, but beyond that which they were able: for though themselves were brought to great misery, and extreme poverty, yet they fainted not, but became so forward, that he saith of them, I bear them record, that to their power; yea, and beyond their power, they were willing, and they prayed us with great instance, that we would receive the grace and fellowship of the Ministry which is towards the Saints. The Apostle craveth of them a little, and they perform much: he beseecheth them to do according to their power, and they bring unto him beyond their power. By all these examples, as by a Jury of many witnesses, it appeareth, that the faithful will not hang back, but be ready to perform and practice more then is required of them; they will not do less, but more then is looked for at their hands.

Though this truth be plain in it self, yet it will be made much plainer by reasons. First of all, the obedience of the faithful, will super-abound, because they set before them the example of God, and delight to come near unto him. They have experience of his bountiful dealing toward them, he is ready to grant not only what they ask, but more then they ask. They find him not only willing to hear them when they pray, But forward to prevent them with his blessings before they pray. When Solomon desired a wise heart to go in and out before his people, he gave him Wisdom, Riches, & Honor. Seeing therefore, the godly do feel this unspeakable liberality of God toward them, that he heareth before we call, and granteth before we ask, and answereth before we request, we ought to resemble our heavenly Father, and to put on his Image, that we may show our selves like unto him in yielding more at the suite of our brethren, then can be required of us.

Secondly, the Children of God have a free and willing mind, and seek to walk before him with a perfect heart. And what will not a willing heart do? Will it not strive to attain to perfection? When Moses setteth down the forwardness of the people, in offering to the Lord for the work of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, he maketh this to be the cause: They had a willing heart. And again, Everyone brought somewhat, whose heart encouraged him, and whose spirit made him willing: both men and women; as many as were free-hearted, came and brought Taches & Earrings, and Rings, &c. The like is mentioned of Araunah the Jebusite, that he had in the service of God The heart of a King. Now where there is a free spirit, a willing mind, and a perfect heart, there is no dallying or delaying in the duties of piety and obedience, but so fervent and zealous a proceeding, that we see men voluntarily inclined to do more then we could desire of them.

Thirdly, their joyfulness in the works of righteousness and godliness do exceed the trial of necessity. Though the Lord try his people with manifold afflictions, yet they are so far from quailing and cooling their willing readiness, and ready willingness to do according to that they are required, nay above that they are required, y^t they make the same much more excellent and famous. This is the reason expressed by the Apostle, that the Churches of Macedonia were liberal according to their ability, & beyond their ability, Because in great trial of affliction their joy abounded, and their most extreme poverty abounded unto their rich liberality. Such joy and comfort do the faithful take in doing the duties required of them, that they think they can never do too much, or proceed too far.

Fourthly, they acknowledge all things to be from God, and to be his; and therefore they will yield freely, where he requireth, and what he requireth, and as far as he enableth them to their uttermost strength. This maketh strive with themselves, even to out-go themselves. The Prophet David acknowledgeth this upon the practice of a good duty performed with an earnest and zealous affection, he blessed the Lord before all the Congregation, and said; Blessed be thou, O Lord God of Israel our Father, forever & ever: Thine, O Lord, is greatness, and power, and glory, and victory, and praise: thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou excellest as head over all, &c. The same doth the Apostle remember of them of Macedonia, This they did, not as we looked for, but they gave their own selves, first to the Lord, and after unto us by the will of God. All these Reasons being laid together, and duly considered, do persuade to our Consciences this truth, that we should show our selves ready to yield more, rather than less, touching those duties that are required of us.

The Uses remain to be handled. First, from hence we learn this point, that forwardness and zeal in good things is greatly to be commended. We cannot yield more than is looked for at our hands, unless we be earnest and fervent in the spirit, as men that are led by the spirit. True it is, there is no warrant to walk without our warrant, or to run too fast without any guide. Hence it is, that Solomon saith, Eccl. 7, 18, 19. Be not thou just over-much, neither make thyself over wise, wherefore shouldst thou be desolate? Be not thou wicked over much, neither be thou foolish; wherefore shouldst thou perish, not in thy time? Meaning thereby, that as we should not suffer sin to reign in our mortal bodies (though we cannot wholly drive it away) so we should not seek a righteousness beyond the Law. This over-much righteousness was in him, who being commanded in the name of God to smite the Prophet, & in smiting to wound him, refused to obey, because it seemed strange unto him to wound a man that was godly, and not guilty of any crime. The like is that which Saul did, who being expressly charged and forbidden to save alive any persons or Cattle that belonged to the Amalekites, preserved the chiefest of the things, and the choicest of the Oxen and Sheep to offer up in sacrifice unto the Lord. But the one of them was slain of a Lyon; the other lost his kingdom; to teach us, that to obey is better than sacrifice; & to hearken, is better than the fat of Rams. So then, we must understand, that albeit we are to be ready to yield more than well can be required of us, yet we must not think to do more than God requireth of us. If we speak of the duties that God commandeth, we come far short when we have done what we can, & we must confess we are unprofitable servants; but when we speak of good and Christian duties which our Ministers or brethren crave of us; & desire us to practice, we should willingly perform more than they ask at our hands. Let us therefore be fervent and zealous in all lawful and honest things. It is good always to be earnest in a good thing. The Lord abhorreth and detesteth the Luke-warm Laodiceans, that are neither hot nor cold, but will spew them out of his mouth. If any should deal in our cause for us, we would not have him deal negligently and carelessly: shall we then be remiss and careless, when we deal in matters that belong to God, and our own salvation? Shall we deal as men benumbed with cold, that seem to have no life in them, but are frozen-hearted, and have no motion of the spirit of God in us? Let us not stand at a stay, but always proceed forward, as Travelers that hasten to the end of their journey: or as Sea-faring men, that think it long until they lie at rode in the Haven, as in a safe harbor from wind and weather. This serveth to reprove all those, that accuse and reproach others, for being too forward and zealous. If we be not zealous in Religion, we are of no religion, whatsoever we account of our selves.

Secondly, this Doctrine is a comfort to our selves, and to other the servants of God, and an occasion of great joy, when as we our selves or others are forward and cheerful beyond expectation in good things. A notable example of both, is offered to our consideration, in the provision that was made, and the furniture that was provided for the building of the Temple, 1 Chron. 29. 9. Where we see, that when David himself having a great zeal and delight in the house of his God, gave of his own Gold and Silver, and the people and Princes following his example, spared no cost and expenses, it is said, The people rejoiced when they offered willingly, for they offered willingly to the Lord, with a perfect heart: and David the King also rejoiced with great joy. Again, there is great occasion offered unto us to glorify God, & to praise his name, whensoever he worketh this willingness in the hearts of his childsen, and when we see their zeal to abound, and their readiness to go beyond any request that we can make unto them. It is a property of the good and diligent servant, who being bidden to go, will run about his business; or being required to do little, will gird up his loins and do more: as, on the other side, the Wiseman teacheth, Prov. 10, 26. that as Vinegar is to the Teeth, and smoke to the eyes, so is the slothful to them that send him. When we behold such an increase in godliness, and a running in the race of Christian duties, let us be mindful to give God the glory and the praise, who hath touched their hearts to bring forth so great fruits. Contrarywise, it is the cause of much grief and sorrow, when men deceive the hope and expectation that is conceived of them in the best things, when we look for a plentiful Harvest, and find only a few blasted ears; when we expect an increase, and see nothing but a fearful fainting and languishing in honest and holy duties. This is it which the Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews reproveth in them, When, as concerning the time, ye ought to be Teachers, yet have ye need again that we teach you, what are the first principles of the word of GOD: and are become such as have need of Milk, and not of strong Meat.

The like reproof is cast upon the Galatians, Chap. 3, 1. O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth to whom Jesus Christ was before described in your sight, and among you crucified? Oh! see, see, the misery of our days, all come short of the duties that are required of them, be they never so just, honest, necessary, so greatly to God's glory, and the advancement of true Religion. If men would come thus far, to yield half so much as is requested of them; or as far as they should, we should judge it much, and it would appear greater then it is. Behold, the barrenness and backwardness of our days, that yield no better fruit. If a man would take a Light, and search up and down from house to house, where shall he find a true-hearted Philemon, of whom we may boldly say, as Paul doth in this place; I know that thou wilt do even more then I say? I would we were come thus far, to say of our professors, I know thou wilt do as much as I say. We have not learned to perform so much; we have started back from our former zeal; we are fallen from much, to little; and from little, to nothing at all; and from nothing, to less then nothing; that is, from no good, to much evil. For, how many might a man single out by name, and point out with the finger, who notwithstanding their happy beginnings, & raising a wonderful expectation of a glorious end, are now become dry and withered; of whom we may say, I know thou wilt do nothing, I know there is nothing in them, I know they have embraced this present World. These are like those Streames or Channelles, which immediately after a shower of Rain run swiftly, and promise to the poor Traveler, that wandereth in the Wilderness, a most comfortable refreshing, but in time of need deceive him: So is it with such as have embraced the Faith, and seem to have received into their dry hearts the sweet Dewes, and pleasant showers of the Word, who appear zealous for a time and afterward fall away, they deceive the hope that hath been conconceiued of them, and the end with them is worse then the beginning.

The Doctrine, that hath dropped upon them as the rain upon the herbs, and the great rain upon the grass, is quite dried up, and no remnants thereof are to be discerned; according to the saying of Christ, Unto every man that hath, it shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away. This is notably expressed in the parable of the Man that going into a strange Country, called his servants, delivered and divided to them his goods, and when one of them went his way and hid his Talent in the earth, it was taken from him that had been slothful, and given to him that had gained five Talents. Again, if the time would serve, it were easy to show, how sumptuous, costely, and full of expenses men are, to maintain their vanities, pleasures, and delights, above that we can desire or imagine: but in other things most nigh and niggardly and hand-fasted. We see how wasting and prodigal they are in the pursuit of their carnal lusts, they think no cost to be too much, no charges too great.

Lastly, it is the duty of every man to labor to be answerable at the least to the expectation that the Church hath had of him, and to endeavor to be as good as he hath made show off, performing therein the practice of his profession, not deceiving any of the Servants of God therein. This requireth of us a careful observation and marking of the manners of men, both of their beginnings, and proceedings, and not to stand (as idle behoulders) gazing in the air; that we may understand the time, the means, the forwardness, the knowledge, the show that hath been in many; all which have promised much, and caused us to expect good things at their hands, and yet oftentimes in vain. This appeareth in the song of the Prophet Isaiah, Chap. 5. Wherein he setteth before the people's eyes their great unthankfulness, that albeit the Lord had done for his Vineyard what he could, yet it brought forth wild Grapes instead of good Fruit: and therefore he threateneth that the Thorns shall ouergrow it, the Beasts should spoil it, the Rain shall not nourish it. Thus also the Apostle speaketh to the Hebrews, who as he exhorteth them, that leaving the Doctrine of the beginning of Christ they should be led forward unto perfection, so he threateneth such as turn backward with an horrible judgment that shall come upon them, a fearful curse that shall overtake them, For the earth (saith he) that drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth Hearbes meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing of God: but that which beareth Thorns and Briars, is reprovved, and is near unto cursing, whose end is to be burned. Whereby we see that an heavy curse belongeth unto all such as answer not the hope that is conceived of them: they deceive men much, they deceive as far (as lieth in them) God himself, but especially they deceive their own souls. We pity those greatly, whom we have seen fresh and lusty, strong and sturdy of body, when they grow weak, faint, sickly, and decaying in age and strength: but much more ought we to lament to see those that have been forward and gone before many others, to have need to be taught again the first principles of Religion, and to feed on Milk as they that are inexpert in the word of Righteousness. It is a sign of health, when men grow in strength and stature: and it is a token of the true Child of God, when men grow in grace. This is it which the Apostle speaketh to the Corinthyans, As ye abound in everything, in faith, and word, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love toward us, even so see that ye abound in this grace also. And afterward he saith, Shew toward them and before the Churches, the proof of your love, and of the rejoicing that we have of you. Likewise, Timothy had great praise in the Church, who, according to the propheties that went before of him, did answer the expectation of the faithful, approving himself in the sight of God and men. Heerevnto cometh the counsel and commandment of the Apostle; These things exercise, and give thy seife unto them, that it may be seen how thou profitest in all things. It is a great comfort and encouragement to the people of God, to see any the members of Christ to prosper and profit in good things: On the other side, it ministereth occasion of much grief and heaviness of heart, to behold the zeal of the Spirit quenched, and the light of the Gospel that hath shined in their minds, eclipsed. If a man should look upon the members of his own body, and see any one of them shriveled and withered; as Arm, or hand, or Leg, not prospering, not growing, not moving, not receiving life from the head: it would work sorrow in us, and we would pity others, in whomsoever we should see such infirmities. In like manner, we must be well assured, it cannot but greatly grieve the Church of God, to behold the parts thereof to begin to faint and wax feeble, to grow groveling downward, when they should cast up their eyes to Heaven, and live as Cittizens of that Kingdom.

22Moreover also prepare me lodging: for I hope through your Prayers I shall be freely given unto you.

The chief matter of this Epistle concerning Onesimus, hath hitherto been handled, and is now finished; wherein we have heard diverse and sundry reasons drawn; partly from the person of Paul; and partly from the person of Onesimus. Now followeth the remainder, intended chiefly by the Apostle, concerning himself. For we have already shown, that the principal scope of this Epistle is double: one touching Onesimus, which hath thus far been expounded; the other, touching Paul himself, which now cometh to be considered. This point is knit unto the former, and hath an evident dependence upon it, and is amplified by a transition in the first words [Moreover also.] Heereby he doth effectually move Philemon, and seeketh to obtain his former purpose. For when he heareth that he shall shortly entertain the Apostle himself in his house, it must needs kindle a greater forwardness and willingness in him to grant his request, least he make him heavy, and deceive his expectation. Whereas therefore, Philemon might have thought with himself, and thus reasoned touching Paul's suit; It skilleth not whether I grant it or not, he hath been a most lewd Servant unto me, and Paul liveth far off from me, he is held in Prison at Rome: either he will not hear what becometh of Onesimus, or if he do hear, peradventure he shall never be delivered out of prison, but remain a Prisoner all the days of his life; and therefore I will deal with Onesimus as seemeth good to myself. These and such like imaginations, the Apostle putteth out of his head, and telleth him he should shortly look for his coming unto him, whereby he should know what account he made of his words, and what obedience he would yield to his request.

Hence it is, that for this cause Paul craveth to have lodging prepared for him, rather by Philemon, then any other Citizen at Colossae: not that he required much provision and preparation to be made for his entertainment, Who had taught others, and learned himself to be content with a little, but because by this commandment, as by a sharp Sword, he would pierce the Bowels of Philemon, and as by a strong Engine, batter the Fort and Bulwark of his heart, and thoroughly persuade him, and prevail with him, to receive Onesimus, both into his house, and into his favor. In this verse, we have to consider two pointes: first, a Commaundment; secondly, a reason whereby the commandment is strengthened. The commandment is, to prepare him hostage and lodging: wherein he answereth a double doubt and question that might arise in him, and trouble the motion and matter that Paul intended. For first he might have said; I may use Onesimus as I list, Paul is far enough from hearing of it. Again, he might have thought, It is well he had such a cause to plead, and such a request to make, otherwise I should never have heard from him. These suspicions the Apostle remooueth, when he saith in this place; I have not written for his cause alone, but for myself, that thou make account to be mine Host, and to receive me into thine House. The reason is drawn from the working cause, I hope to be given unto you through your Prayers, and may be thus frame;

- If I hope to be given unto you by your Prayers, then prepare me Hostage,
- But I hope to be given unto you by your Prayers:
- Therefore prepare me Hostage.

Or rather, the latter part of this Verse is the the taking away of an Objection which Philemon might have made, upon the hearing of the charge given unto him of preparing him lodging, which may be thus supplied. Shall we look for thy coming? Why, Thou art a Prisoner? Thou art safe enough from coming to us, and lodging at mine house: thou must be content with a cold lodging in another place; thou mayest well tell us of thy forth coming, but I doubt thou wilt not yet be coming forth. To this the Apostle answereth; I hope in short time to be delivered: whereunto he annexeth two causes of his hope, that he might know it was, not built in the Air without foundation, but grounded and established sufficiently, relying upon the prayers of the faithful, and upon the grace and mercy of God.

This is the order of the words: Now let us consider the Interpretation of them as they lie. When he saith [Prepare me lodging] he meaneth the entertainment of Hospitality, whereof lodging is but a part. The word signifieth all things requisite for the well using of a Stranger; as receiving to House, food, lodging, and all other necessaries belonging thereunto, whereof many parts are expressed by the Apostle, in the description of the Widdowes that were to be taken to serve the Church, in attending unto the sick. In the next place when he saith, [I hope through your Prayers, &c.] it argueth, that the Churches of the Gentiles did pray incessantly unto God, for the deliverance of Paul out of Prison; as we see in the Acts of the Apostles, when Herod had killed James, and put Peter in Prison, earnest Prayer was made of the Church to God for him. So that we see he had the Prayers of the faithful, and that he did acknowledge the benefit & necessity of them, that they should prevail with God.

Lastly, when he addeth [I shall be given unto you.] We must understand, that the word which the Holy Ghost useth in this place, signifieth to be freely and frankly given: noting thereby, that when he should be delivered, and find the effect of their Prayers, it should be through the free grace and mercy of God, and not merited by the Saints. So then, according to this order of the words, and interpretation of the Text, the reading of this Verse is to this effect. Having now ended my suit moved unto thee touching Onesimus, I am in the next place to solicit thee for myself; namely, that as thou art inclined in love to all the Saints of God, so that thou prepare thyself to entertain me at thy house, with all the fruits of hospitality. For although I be in bonds, and kept fast in hold, yet my hope is; that by reason of the continual and effectual Prayers of the Saints, I shall ere long, through the free mercies of God be given unto you, and to the other Churches, for their further edification in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Thus much touching the meaning. Now follow certain general observations, which I will only point out, and not stand upon at large. First of all, observe the different manner of the Apostles dealing here, and in the former words. When he entreateth for another, he is large and earnest, but when he commendeth to him his own cause and private business, he dealeth in a word; he dispatcheth it briefly; he toucheth it by the way; as if it were a thing impertinent, or from the matter. This showeth, that he had more respect, and a greater regard to obtain his suit for Onesimus, and to further his salvation, then to speed in his own suit, which pertained to the supporting and supplying the necessities of this present life. This teacheth us to be more earnest in another man's cause then in our own, but especially all Pastors, that have the charge of Souls committed unto them, to be more earnest for the saving of Souls, then to procure their own ease; and that they seek the benefit of others, rather then the profit of themselves; according to the rule of the Apostle. 1. Pet. 2. Feede the Flock of God that dependeth upon you, caring for it; not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind. This affection if it be found in us, shall minister exceeding comfort to our hearts, when we remember that we have employed our gifts and labors to gain a people to God, and have not sought theirs, but them. On the other side, woe unto idle Shepherds, that feed not the Flock, but feed themselves. Such as are to work in the Lord's Vineyard must be Laborers, not Loyerers; they must be able to feed, not to fleese; they must blow the Trumpet, and not hold their peace.

Secondly, the Apostle doth not assure himself or the Churches of God that he shall be delivered, but [he hopeth] to be set free, as if he should say; I have conceived an hope not vain and foolish, without ground of reason, but I trust in God's mercy to be set in safety, that I may serve the Church, and profit you in the Gospel a long time. Now, whether the Apostle being delivered out of Prison, ever came among the Colossians, and took up his lodging in the House of Philemon, it is uncertain, and not to be found in the holy Scriptures. The like hope he conceiveth in other places of his Epistles, as when he writeth to the Phillippians, Chapt. 1.

To abide in the flesh is more needful for you, and this am I sure off, that I shall abide, and with you all continue, for your furtherance and joy of your Faith. And in the Chapter following, I hope to send Timothy as soon as I know how it will go with me: and I trust in the Lord, that I also myself shall come shortly. The like we see in the Epistle to the Hebrews (if that were Paul's) Chapt. 13. Know that our Brother Timothy is delivered, with whom (if he come shortly) I will see you. Observe in this place, that his hope is not absolute, but condicionall; not simply purposed, but limited; I hope in the Lord. This is expressed by him in the first Chapter of the Epistle to the Romaines, I make mention of you always in my Prayers, beseeching that by some means, one time or other, I might have a prosperous journey by the will of God, to come unto you. We must therefore know, that all our steppes are directed of God, they are not in our own power to be ordered at our own pleasure. We must also beware of all vain confidence and presumption in our selves, and in under-taking our business and affairs of this life, seeing the success is unknown, and our life is uncertain. Whatsoever we take in hand, we must depend upon the providence of God, and rely upon his will.

Hence it is, that the Apostle James reproveth them that say, Go to now ye that say, today or tomorrow we will go into such a City, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain: (and yet ye cannot tell what shall be tomorrow.) For what is your life? It is even a vapor that appeareth but a little time, and afterward vanisheth away: For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, both we shall live, and we shall do this and that. God is the chief Ruler and Moderatour of all persons and actions, nothing is guided and governed by Fortune, nor falleth out by Chance: he sitteth as it were at the Sterne, and ordereth all things to his own glory, and the good of his Church.

Thirdly, he putteth them in hope and comfort, that he should be delivered and come unto them, as a matter that would be welcome and profitable unto them. Which teacheth, that the company, fellowship, and presence of the faithful Servants of God, is much to be desired and looked after, and much to be rejoiced in. Thereby they receive mutual comfort one in another, and bestow mutual graces one upon another, and likewise by having the fellowship one of another, they whet and sharpen one another. We are ready to grow dull, as an edge-tool that is quickly blunted and turned. Now the communion and communication which we have together among our selves, will quicken our Faith, and kindle our zeal, that it will break out into a great flame. Hence it followeth, that they are happy that delight to frequent the company of the godly, and of such as may profit us in the best things. He that walketh with the wise, shall be the wiser; but he that is a companion of Fools, shall learn foolishness. Wherefore, they are hereby reproveth, that never think themselves better at ease, then when they are farthest from them that delight in the Lord, and take pleasure in lewd and riotous company, by whom they are misled and carried out of the right way.

Lastly, we see that the Apostle always ascribeth much to to the Prayers of the Saints. We know, that Paul was one of the chief of the Apostles, whose gifts were great; whose labors were painful; whose visions and revelations were wonderful; yet he rejecteth not the prayers of the Church; as appeareth in this place, and Phil. 1, 19. I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and by the help of the spirit of Jesus Christ. So then, the excellency of any member and worthiness of the chiefest in the Church, doth not exempt him from standing in need of the Prayers of the poorest Christian and lowest part of the Church. Nay, the greater and higher, and more eminent any man is, the more he hath need to be prayed for, and commended to the grace of God; inasmuch as he is set in a more slippery place, he lieth open to greater danger, and is exposed to stronger temptations and assaults of Satan, then those that are in a lower place, and a meaner condition. Such then as excel others in gifts or calling, ought to desire the prayers of the faithful (which avail much if they be fervent) no less, if not more then others. Note also the great necessity and force of prayer, that all persons, as well high as low, stand in need of it.

Lastly, let everyone labor to have a feeling of his own want of the supplication of others; yea, the higher we are set, the greater will be our fall, if we be not strongly assisted by all such means as God hath left, to further our salvation and deliverance out of troubles that hem us in on every side. Hitherto of the observations: Now let us come to particular doctrines.

He requireth in these words, of Philemon, an entertaining of such as are destitute, and driven out of house and home for the Gospels sake; as if he should say, when any of the poor Saints are banished, persecuted, and put to great extremitities, as the World doth always carry an hard and unmerciful hand toward them, be careful to receive them cheerfully, and to minister all comfort ye can unto them willingly. The word therefore used in this place, hath a general signification, and containeth all duties belonging to the entertainment of Strangers. And by Strangers we mean, not such as ordinarily come to visit us, nor such astrauaile about the business of this life, and take up their lodgings in Inns or Taverns: but such as fly from place to place, and are compelled against their wills, to leave Country, or Kindred, or House, for the Gospels sake. The word used in this place, is not to be restrained to giving of them lodging, as if they had discharged so much as could be required of them, but under that, all duties of the same kind and nature are comprehended; as Meat, Drink, Apparrell, and all other things necessary for them. These the Apostle knew would be joyfully yielded by Philemon to him, and all other the faithful, especially such as labor in the word and Doctrine. Hereby we learn for our instruction, that Hospitality; that is, the courteous and joyful entertainment of distressed Strangers, is to be used and practiced diligently by all the Children of God. The succouring of Straungers that are destitute, especially the poor Ministers that are employed, or would be employed in the affairs of the Church, is required of us.

This we see in the examples of sundry of the faithful, one very famous among the rest, is the Shunamites Wife, Who called the Prophet of God to her house to eat Bread; and she said to her Husband; Behold, I know now, that this is an holy Man of God that passeth by us continually, let us make him a little Chamber with Walls, and let us set him there a Bed, and a Table, and a Stoole, and a Candlestick, that he may turn in thither when he cometh to us. This is it which the Prophet Isaiah commendeth, Chapt. 58. 7. Is not this the fasting that I have chosen, to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that wander unto thine house? When thou seest the naked, that thou cover him, & hide not thyself from thine own Flesh? This is noted as a part of the innocence and integrity of Job, Chapt. 31. The stranger did not lodge in the street, but I opened my doors unto him that went by the way. The like we might say of of the Woman of Sarepta, that entertained Elijah in the time of famine: of Lazarus and his Sisters, that received Christ into their house: of Zacchaeus, who lodged him joyfully: of Lydia, who entreated Paul and his Compaons, to come into her house, and to abide with her: of Onesiphorus, who sought out the Apostle diligently, refreshed him oftentimes, and was not ashamed of his Chaines. All these examples, Registered and recorded in the Olde and New Testament, teach us, that God requireth it as a special duty at our hands; to entertain, lodge, and refresh such poor Straungers as are constrained to wander up and down, either for preaching or professing of the Gospel.

This duty is urged upon us by diverse reasons in the holy Scriptures. First, it is to be practiced of us, because it is the commandment of God, that we should love and lodge strangers, and show all pity and compassion toward them, to succor them in their necessity. This is it which Moses saith, Deut. 10. Love ye the Stranger, for ye were Strangers in the Land of Egypt. Herevnto cometh the rule of the Apostle, Rom. 12. Distribute to the necessities of the Saints, give yourselves to Hospitality. This is the precept of the Apostle Peter, Chapt. 4. Be ye harborous one to another, without gruding. Seeing therefore God commandeth, it is our part to obey, and submit our selves to his will and pleasure.

Secondly, as God requireth this duty of us, so we have his own example to teach it unto us. It is a property of God to love Strangers, and therefore to be imitated and followed of all that belong unto him. This reason is expressed in the Book of Deuteronomy, Chapt, 10, 18. The Lord our God, is God of God's, and Lord of Lord's, a great God, mighty and terrible, who dothright unto the Fatherless and Widow, and loveth the Stranger, giving him food and raiment, love ye therefore the Stranger. Where we see, he urgeth this duty to love the stranger, moved by the example of God himself, who is always ready to help him, and to defend him: so that it ought to be our desire and delight to study to be like unto our heavenly Father.

Thirdly, God doth greatly honor such as honor Strangers: they have been so far honored by God, as that Angels have entered into their houses, been entertained by them, and have blessed them. This the Apostle teacheth, Heb. 13. Be not forgetful to entertain Strangers: for thereby some have received Angels into their Houses unawares: Declaring hereby, that they which in the simplicity of their hearts serve God, and comfort his Saints in the duties of Hospitalitie, and other fruits of love, shall obtain great honor, and many blessings from GOD, even more then ever they thought of, or could expect at his hands; as we see in Abraham and Lot, who became the Hosts of his special Servants, most dear unto him, even the most glorious Angels, nay of the Lord Jesus Christ, who was among them. Thus doth the Lord honor them that honor him. Seeing therefore God commandeth this duty in his word, approveth of it by his example, and honoreth the performance of it in his Servants, it teacheth, that the kind entertainment of such as are desolate and destitute Strangers, poor Widows, or fatherless, friendless, and comfortless Orphans, is an acceptable service approved in the eyes of God.

The doctrine being thus cleared, the Uses remain to be shown. First, this declareth, that Hospitality is a commendable virtue, and a worthy fruit of love; yea, an excellent ornament in the Children of God, whereby they receive good report of the Church. We see this in Rahab, Who by Faith received the Spies peaceably, and sent them out another way. We see this in the old Man of Mount Ephraim▪ that dwelt in Gibeah, who wished peace unto the Levite and his wife, and brought him into his house, and gave Fodder unto the Asses; there they washed their feet; there they did eat and drink; and there their hearts were merry. So the Apostle Rom. 16. commendeth Phebe, a dear Sister to the Romans, That they receive her in the Lord as it becometh Saints, and that they assist her in whatsoever business she needeth of their aid: for she hath given Hospitalitie unto many, and unto himself also. Likewise Gaius is commended to the Host of Paul, and of the whole Church: yea, to be faithful to all the Brethren, and to Straungers, which did bear witness of his love. The Church was then in persecution; the people of God were often driven into banishment. There were in those days no Inns to receive Straungers, and to entertain Trauailers, as there were afterward, and now are in all places. Every godly man's house ought to be their Inn to receive them. We love the truth, as we love the entertainment of those that profess it, and suffer for it. Especially it is required of us, to make much of the true Ministers of Christ Jesus, when we see them made as Straungers, to want house, living, maintenance. Seeing therefore many troubles were raised through the tyranny of the Enemies against the Saints; so that they were constrained to forsake their Country and Kindred, to enjoy the profession of the Faith, and the peace of a good conscience: the Apostles of Christ do oftentimes beat upon this point, and require this duty, to receive such to our houses as the World rejected, and accounted unworthy of the company of men. If we do good to these poor members of Christ, that are glad to wander up and down in sheep's skins, and in Goats skins, being destitute, afflicted, and tormented; who, to save their lives from the rage of the oppressor, and the sword of the persecutor, were driven to hide their heads in Wildernesses, and Mountains, and Dennes, and Caues of the Earth; we testify our unfeigned love to the truth, and to the Brethren; nay, to Christ Jesus himself, as we shall see and show afterward. But if we do good to such as are able to requite it, and to such as are linked unto us by Kindred, or any other band, it is no true trial, no due proof, no perfect testimony of our charity.

True it is, kindness and humanity are good, if they be ordered aright, and ruled according to piety and godliness: but when they extend farther, even to such as are not able to recompense it, and to such as are unknown unto us, therein we make demonstration, that we serve God in sincerity, and hold fast the right rule of Charity. Such as are at home in their own Country, shall find relief enough, they shall have Kinsfolke to minister help and succor unto them, according to the saying of the Shunamite, when the Prophet said unto her; Behold thou hast had all this great care for us, what shall we do for thee? Is there anything to be spoken for thee to the King, or to the Captain of the Host: she answered; I dwell among mine own people. But such as are poor godly strangers are destitute of help; they have neither Friends nor Kinsfolkes; they have neither aide nor favor shown unto them; they lie open to all injuries and indignities. The poor Children of God are often exiled and banished from their houses, and are as silly Birds whose nests are taken, so that they know not whether to go, or what to do, or whom to fly unto, or under whose roof to shroude themselves, from the storm and tempest that hath overtaken them. Now the greater their misery is the more accepted is our charity: and the more heavy their persecution is, the better accounted is our compassion, which shall never be forgotten, but receive a reward. This is that promise which Christ our Savior maketh; Whosoever shall give unto one of these little ones, to drink, a Cup of cold Water only, in the name of a Disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward. Let us therefore delight in showing the works of mercy, that GOD may delight in us: and succor the poor Saints that are distressed, that we also our selves may find help in time of need.

Secondly, this Doctrine serveth for reproof. First of all, of such as think that Hospitality consisteth in feasting and keeping great cheer, and bidding the Rich to their Tables: whereas the Scripture understandeth by it, a courteous entertainment of such poor Christians as are bannished out of their Countries. They therefore are much deceived, that commend those to be the only House-keepers that feed men of all sorts, without difference and discretion, and relieve idle persons that flock unto their Gates, and gather together such as are sturdy and vagrant to receive their Alms, contrary to the rules of the word, and the Statutes of well-governed Common-Wealths. These may be said rather to keep great houses, then good houses; and to be great House-keepers, rather then good House-keepers. It were more charity to punish, then to relieve such unruly persons, as will submit themselves to no Laws, nor live in any Family or society, to the ende there may be sufficient for them that are Strangers indeed. And such as wander up and down, and are incorrigible, are no better then Thieves, in as much as they live by the sweat of other men's labors, and as idle Drones suck away the Honey from the Bees, and devour that which should maintain the faithful of the Land, and such as labor the thing that is good. Let such therefore, as have their affections ready to receive others into their houses, and to make them partakers of the blessings that God hath bestowed upon them, use it most commonly toward the poor Saints, and destitute members of Christ; according to the precept of our Savior. Luke 14. When thou makest a Dinner, call not thy Friends, nor thy Brethren, nor thy Kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors, lest they also bid thee again, and recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a Feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, and the Blind, and thou shalt be blessed, because they cannot recompense thee, for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. True it is, our Kinsmen, our Friends, and rich Neighbors, may be invited and bidden, but not they only, as the custom is of our days; we entertain such, as may entertain us again.

Secondly, this meeteth with the corruption of our times, we cannot abide those that are Strangers, but are enemies to the very name when we hear it. But all neglect of them, and injurious dealing toward them is a great sin, and such as are haters of Strangers, are grievous Sinners. Such were the Sodomites, such were the men of Gibeah, that offered all violence they could, to the Strangers that came to lodge among them; it was an evident sign of horrible impiety and iniquity that reigned among them. They that cry out so much against Strangers, and use it as a word of reproach, do show plainly that they do not deserve to be numbered among the Children of God, nor to be accounted as members of Christ, anymore then Dogs and Swine, inasmuch as out of their own mouths they shall be judged. It is a shameful barbarousness for men to have pity and compassion on them that are helpless. Among the Heathen and Infidels they were evil thought of, that had not this reason and understanding to receive them gently and peaceably that were cast out of their houses and dwellings: how much more is it requisite for us, when we see the Church of GOD tossed and tumbled, and tormented by Tyrants and enemies of the truth, to give courteous entertainment to the poor Christians which are banished out of their Countries, bereaved of their friends, and separated from their Kinsfolkes, of whom they might be succoured? If we do not these things, it is an evident token, that we renounce God, and have no spark of true piety in us. For the Lord doth more rigorously condemn the outrages and wrongs that are done to strangers, then those that are done to a man's own Neighbors. The Heathen shame us; nay, shall rise up in judgment to condemn us in this behalf: for when they intended to show that some man was of a wicked and slavish Nature, they were wont to say; Get thee hence, thou art an Enemy toward Strangers: and this check and taunt was more with them, then if they had branded a man with the Name of an Whore-master, a Drunkard, a perjured person, a Murderer, or if they had said; Thou art worse then a brute Beast. They accounted the poor man and the stranger to be both sent unto us of God, and therefore ought not to be despised. They called them to lodge and sojourne with them, and acknowledge that there ought to be a compassion of the miseries one of another. They shown not a niggardly mind, but a cheerful look, and a friendly countenance toward such as they had received to their house.

The Painims have spoken and practiced after this manner: what shall then become of us that profess our selves to be God's Children, when we fight so directly against the order of nature? For God hath set one common and general band among all mankind, and it is required of us, to extend our charity toward all such as resemble us, and carry the Image of God upon them: but especially it behooveth us to respect such as are more nearly knit unto us by the band of Faith, and therefore ought to be more dear unto us, then all others. True it is, all Strangers are to be warned and admonished for their part, that they abuse not that name and privilege. If a man have a privilege and protection from a Prince, and then abuse both himself and it, so that under the color of that benefit and honor done unto him, he commit some outrage and wicked Act, shall he not be worthy of double punishment? It falleth out sometimes, that a great number will say, they are driven out of their Country for their conscience, yet they show a corrupt conscience, defile the Church with their dissolute life, & give occasion to unbelievers, to blaspheme the purity of doctrine, and to have their mouths wide open against the professors of it. Notwithstanding, we must take heed, that for the offense of some, we do not reject those that are God's strangers, that we do not leave them helpless, but succor them as God hath enabled us. They are among us, to try our benevolence and charity. If we show mercy to them, though they be not able to requite it, yet God is both able and willing to recompense our works of mercy.

Thirdly, it is our duty to take the opportunity offered unto us of God; nay, it is required of us to seek the opportunity to express our obedience to God, and our love to his people, in doing all good to such as stand in need. The practice hereof we see in Abraham, who sate at his Tent door, to invite such as he saw passing by, and had need of the fruits of mercy to be shown unto them. So Lot his Nephew, who had been brought up in his house, and had learned of him to express the duties of Charity; sate at the Gate of Sodom (into the which strangers did enter) to call them to his House, to refresh them with meat, and to defend them from injuries, to which otherwise they lay open above all other. This reproveth those that grudge and are grieved when any occasion falleth out, that they are tried what affection and compassion they bear unto them. We see this eidentlie in Nabal, toward David and his men: for when he was entreated by the Messengers that were sent unto him, to give whatsoever came to his hand; he railed at them, and sent them away empty; he was lavish of his tongue, but sparing of his pursse; they had words, but they had nothing but words. It was otherwise with Abraham: when he saw men come toward him, he ran to meet them, he bowed himself unto them, he entreated them to receive the means of refreshing themselves at his hands, he pressed upon them very earnestly, that they should not deny him. To this purpose we heard out of the Apostle Peter, That we should be harborous without grudging. We must therefore, not only do good to Strangers, but do good cheerfully, and with a ready mind, without murmuring and repining at the occasion offered unto us. We now dwell in our own Country, and among our Kindred; we rest quietly in our Houses, and in our Beds; we live in peace and quietness; but we know not what days may shine upon us, and what times may come over our heads. We that now hate and abhor strangers in our own Land, it may happen, that our selves may be Strangers in a Land that is not our own. Moses, exhorting the people of Israel to be merciful toward such, as above all others stand in need of mercy; to wit, Strangers, Widdowes, and fatherlosse Children; maketh this as a reason unto them; Love the Stranger, for ye were Strangers in the Land of Egypt. And albeit this reason do not hold in many of us, neither can be persuaded to deal kindly with Strangers, because we have been already Strangers: yet this Argument may be alleged unto us, to be careful to love Strangers, because we our selves may be strangers in another Land. For we know not where we shall end our days, or in what manner, anymore then when we shall die, which all of us know to be uncertain. If then we be hard-hearted unto others, we must not look to find others pitiful to our selves. It is God's will, that we should be Strangers in this World; as appeareth by the example and confession of the faithful. Heb. 11. 9. 10, 13. By Faith Abraham abode in the Land of Promise, as in a strange Country, as one that dwelt in Tents with Isaac and Jacob, Heirs with him of the same Promise: for he looked for a City having a Foundation, whose bulder and maker is GOD. Thus did all the godly cast up their accounts, and confessed that they were Strangers and Pilgrims on the Earth; yea, we are his Children upon other condition. The Lord is in Heaven, and we live upon the earth, yet he cometh down unto us, and governeth us; he showeth that he hath not forgotten us, but giveth us an example what pity we ought to have of them that fly unto us, as poor sheep that are scattered by ravenous Wolves; we should deal with them, as we would have the Lord deal with us, and show that mercy that we expect of him.

True it is, the Apostle noteth it among the properties required of the Pastor and Minister, That he should be given to Hospitality: but he meant it also in general, to all the faithful; howbeit the Ministers must show them the way, and hold out the Candle to give them light. For his purpose is not to bind the Ministers only to beware of intemperancy, to fly Covetousness, to avoid Pride: and on the other side, to move them only to be just, sober, courteous, chaste, and harborous; in the mean season, leaving all others to do what they would, and live as they list. But the Apostle singleth them out by themselves, and chargeth these duties upon them: first, because the word of God should not be evil spoken off by the enemies, beholding such scandals and faults to be in them. Secondly, to the end they should approve their Doctrine by their good life, and ratify it to the consciences of all that hear it, and so make it better welcome to them, and them more willing to embrace it. Thirdly, that the people should follow them, and frame their lives according to those virtues and graces which they see in their Shepherds. And by the way let us note, that if chiefly among others, the Minister must be harbourous, and it be a virtue that commendeth him to the Church to be given to Hospitality, then the means should be cheerfully and plentifully afforded unto him, that he may be fitted and enabled to perform it. This duty indeed is looked for from him, and he lieth open to obloquy and reproach when he doth not discharge it; and yet in the mean season, his present ability, or rather disability and insufficiency, is not considered; yea, the means either are denied unto him, or with great grudging & much lessening, yielded unto him, contrary to the precept of the Apostle; Let him that is taught in the word, make him that hath taught him partaker of all his goods. To conclude this point, let us learn to rejoice when we can do good to the distressed Saints, that offer themselves as objects of our compassion; and be glad that God hath enabled us to help them; Remembering, that it is a more blessed thing to give, then to receive. We saw before how God plagued the Sodomites and the men of Gibeah, for their sauagenesse and cruelty toward the strangers that came to lodge among them. God oftentimes blesseth those places and persons, where, and by whom they are entertained: as on the other side, many judgments and punishments fall from Heaven upon their heads, that are currish and unkind unto them.

Lastly, it is a great comfort and peace to a man's conscience, that God will in his Son Christ regard him▪ when with a single heart he hath been careful to testify his love toward distressed Strangers for the truths sake. Let us rejoice in this consolation, that we shall be assured that God will pity us, when we have thus pitied others. This persuasion we see in Nehemiah, who resteth himself upon it, and raiseth comfort of obtaining from it, Nehe. 5. 19. Remember me, ô Lord, in goodness, according to all that I have done for this people. The like appeareth in Obadiah, 1. King. 18. 13. who being in distress and fear of his life, said to Elijah, Was it not told my Lord what I did, when Jezebel slew the Prophets of the Lord? how I hid an hundred men of the Lord's Prophets, by fifties in a Cave, and fed them with Bread and Water? These men we see, found great comfort to their own Souls in the practice of this duty. If the same fruit of Faith, and testimony of love be found in us, we shall not be left comfortless, when we desire comfort of God. Nay, if this entertainment of the Saints, whom the profession of the faith in time of trouble, hath made Strangers, be among us, and do abound, it will make us that we shall be neither idle, nor unfruitful, in the acknowledging of our Lord Jesus Christ. And that we may yet have farther comfort and encouragement herein, we must understand, that whatsoever comfort and compassion we show to the Servants of God, that are harbourlesse and succorless, the Lord Jesus doth account it as done unto himself. For Christ is oftentimes left without help and harbor in his poor members: and in them he wandreth up and down from place to place, to seek relief.

Thus he shall say in the end of the World; I was a Stranger, and ye took me in unto you: I was naked, and ye clothed me: I was in Prison, and ye came unto me: for verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my Brethren, ye have done it to me. Let this comfort and refresh us; let this encourage us to love Strangers, and to perform all duties of love toward them, considering that Christ Jesus will abundantly reward our well-doing, and accept it far above the worthiness of the work, albeit it be shown to the poorest and simplest soul that belongs to his Body. On the other side, this serveth as a great terror to those that are without natural affection, and spiritual compassion, to consider wisely of the poor Strangers, to whom Christ shall say; I was a Stranger, and ye took me not in unto you; sick and in Prison, and ye visited me not; for verily I say unto you, in as much as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me. This serveth to increase their sin, and to make the judgments of God to enter into their bones, considering that they have not to do only with men, but with Christ: and the contempt is offered not only to a base stranger, but to our blessed Savior.

He that striketh and woundeth the hand, or the foot, maketh pain and grief to arise in the head; inasmuch as one part is touched with a sympathy of the others misery. The faithful are all the members of Christ's body, whereof he is the head: if then any of them be afflicted, he suffereth with them; he is grieved for them; he is hurt through them. Let all the enemies of the godly therefore take heed unto themselves, lest they kick against the truth of God, and hurt the least of the professors thereof, considering that he that toucheth them, toucheth the apple of his eye; yea, toucheth and pierceth Christ himself, of whom we may truly say; Whosoever shall fall on this stone, he shall be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will crush him in pieces. Who is it that dareth break out into this blasphemy, to profess that he wisheth to wound Christ, to reproach him, to defy him, to turn him out of doors, to suffer him to perish, and to shut up their compassion frō him? But whiles we are ashamed of our poor Brethren, we are ashamed of Christ; whiles we deny to stretch forth our hands to help them, we pass by Christ, and look awry or a squint upon him. Would we have the Lord of life and glory deal with us, as we deal with them, and behave our selves toward them? We live, if not in the persecution, yet in the necessity of the Church and Children of God: we cannot but see many want. If the enemies of the Gospel hate them for the truths sake, shall not we love them for the truths sake? If we desire to find comfort in the great day of the Lord, let us now show comfort as God hath blessed and enabled us, according to our ability. He will never be wanting to them, that consider wiselie of the wants of them that fear him. If we do not deny our comfort to them, he will never deny to minister comfort to us in time of need. But if our harts be hardened, and our hands full of cruelty, we deceive our selves if we look for any comfort at the hands of God. The Rich man and Miser, that had Lazarus at his Gates. Clad himself in Purple, and fared deliciously every day, yet shutting his eyes from beholding the misery, and stopping his ears from hearing the cry of the poor; himself was cast into torments, and cried with a great cry and a bitter, and was not heard nor regarded. Then his sumptuous fare could not refresh him; then his gorgeous apparrall could not comfort him; then his resort and retinue could not revive him, but he continued in endless, and remidelesse tortures and torments. If we follow his example, let us fear his ende; and if we practice his sin, we must look to feel his punishment. If we behold the troubles of the Ministers and Professors of the Gospel, driven out of house and home, and cast out of Land and Living, and we cannot afford them a good word, nor give them anything to supply their wants when God hath given unto us this worlds good, we our selves shall cry and not be heard. We shall all stand in need of the mercy of God. If we were rich & noble, if were Kings and Princes, if we have had thousands that have required and received mercy from us, yet a time shall come, when we shall stand at the Judgment seat of the Almighty, and call for mercy at his hands. The Lord in that day shall recompense us according to our works. Have we delighted in the deeds of mercy, and shown pity to the poor wandering Saints? Let us be of good comfort, we shall not find God a severe Judge, but a merciful Father and Savior unto us; we shall receive the fruit of our Labors in due time, gather as we have scattered, and reap as we have sowed. On the other side, have we seen the Saints of God sick, and not visited them? Strangers, and not harboured them? Hungry, and not fed them? We shall hang down our heads in that day, when we would give all the world for one drop or dram of mercy to come near us, For there shall be condemnation merciless to him that showeth not Mercy, and Mercy reioyseth against Judgment.

Let us consider these things whiles we have time. It was too late for the Rich man, when once he was in Hell, to cry unto Abraham to have mercy on him, and to Send Lazarus, that he might dip the tip of his Finger in Water, and cool his Tongue tormented in that flame: but in his life time, he had shown no mercy, he had denied the Crummies that fell from his Table; and therefore now no mercy is shown to him, all comfort is denied unto him. Thus shall it be with all that are enemies to the distressed Saints, that are constrained to wander without any certain dwelling, as poor strangers, from place to place to save their lives, with loss of their Liivings: God shall measure out to them, as they have measured to others, then shall they condemn their folly that is past, and repent of their Crueltie, when it is too late.

[For I hope through your Prayers, I shall be bestowed upon you.]

Here the Reason is rendered, wherefore the Apostle requireth Philemon to prepare to entertain him coming as a Stranger unto him; because he was in hope that their prayers should prevail with God for his deliverance out of prison. It was the duty of the Church, to make prayer and supplication to God incessantly for him, to see if he would be entreated to release him out of prison, and to deliver him from the mouth of the Lyon. Touching the effect of them, the Apostle declareth that they were not poured out in vain, but it should undoubtedly come to pass, that God being stirred up by the prayers and desires of the faithful, would graciously hear them, & speedily procure his safety and freedom. From hence we learn, that the prayers of the faithful made to God, are very auayleable and effectual. The supplications of the Godly, that come from a faithful heart, and proceed from lips unfeigned, are not idle and unfruitful, but of great power and force with God, as well to obtain the blessings which they want, as to remove such plagues and judgments as are heavy upon them.

The Testimonies that might be brought to prove this point, are infinite. The prayers of Abraham prevailed to heal Abimelech and his servants. The prayers of Abraham should have prevailed, if ten righteous persons had been found in Sodom. The course of the Sun and Moon were stayed by the prayer of Joshua, till he was revenged of his enemies. Isaac prayed for his wife, because she was barren, unto the Lord, and the Lord was entreated of him, and Rebekah his wife conceived: so that she became fruitful▪ and had two sons given unto her, of whom came two Nations. Elijah by prayer obtained Rain, which had been withheld from the earth three years, and six months. So did Hezekiah the continuance of his life for fifteen years. The Church by prayer obtained the deliverance of Peter out of prison, when as he should have been brought forth to the place of execution, and slain as James was. This is that which the Apostle John setteth down, John 5, 14, 15. This is that assurance that we have in him, that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us; and if we know that he heareth us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we have desired of him. These consents of holy Scripture teach us, that the prayers of the faithful are the means and Instruments appointed of God to obtain his blessings for us, and to remove his judgments far from us and others.

And as the examples are many that might be alleged, so the reasons are many that might be produced to settle this truth in our hearts. First of all, our Prayers do delight the Lord exceedingly, he loveth to hear our voice, as the Father doth to hear his Child. True it is, the grace of Prayer is his own gift; yet he smelleth the savor of it as sweet Incense, he heareth the Harmony of it as pleasant Music, he accepteth the odour of it, as a burnt Offering. Hereunto cometh the commendation that Christ giveth to the Church, Cant. 2, 14. Shew me thy sight, let me hear thy voice: for thy voice is sweet, and thy sight is comely. To this purpose the Prophet saith, Ps. 141, 2. Let my Prayer be directed in thy sight as Incense, and the lifting up of mine hands as the evening Sacrifice. All the faithful are to him as the sweet singers of Israel, he taketh pleasure to hear them, as we do to hear the best Consort that is among men.

Secondly, true Prayers are of such strength, that they do after a sort force the Lord, and constrain him to yield himself as overcome and vanquished, inasmuch as it pleaseth him by this means to be conquered. They are as mighty weapons, whereby all Christians show themselves valiant Champions, not only to defeat their enemies, but to prevail with God. It is noted, that Jacob wrestled with God in the form of man, and he could not prevail against Jacob: for as God assailed and assaulted him with the one hand, so he upheld and strengthened him with the other. He had power with God, as it were to overcome and to carry away the praise of the victory. Thus shall it be with all the godly (who are true Israelites) that are fervent in faithful prayer, none shall be able to stand against them, God will yield himself unto them, as it is said, he could not prevail against Jacob. The like we see in Moses, Exod. 32, 9, 10. to whom the Lord said, I have seen this people, it is a stiff-necked people: Now therefore, let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them, for I will consume them, but I will make of thee a mighty people. As if he should have said, thy prayers bind me hand and foot, and after a sort take me prisoner, so that I am not at mine own liberty: thou over-rulest me, and overmaimest me by thy prayers. Hence it is, that the Prophet saith, He minded to destroy them, had not Moses his servant stood in the breach before him, to turn away his wrath, lest he should destroy them. And the Apostle rehearsing the Christian man's armor of proof, & weapons of defense, nameth the Prayers and supplications of the Saints, which are not the least part of that Harness.

Thirdly, his promise goeth with our prayers, he cannot deny the words of his own mouth, nor frustrate that which once he hath spoken. It is that which the Prophet mentioneth, Psal. 50, 15. Call upon me in the day of trouble, so will I deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Here we have a Commandment to call on God; we have a promise & assurance to be heard: we must perform the condition, to glorify him that hath heard us. To disobey the Commandment, is horrible Rebellion; to distrust the promise, is monstrous Infidelity; to refuse the condition, is vile ingratitude and unthankfulness. This promise is also laid before us by Christ himself. Math. 7, 7, 8. Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you; for whosoever asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; & to him that knocketh, it shall be opened. This promise of God is the shield of the faithful, it giveth them comfort and boldness in asking, and confidence and assurance in obtaining. If we had no promise, there could arise in our hearts nothing but fearing and doubting; nothing but terror and discouragement. So then, whether we consider, that the prayers of the people of God are as pleasant Music to delight him, or as a strong weapon to enforce him, or as a sure building settled upon the Rock of his promise, we may safely conclude, that they are very available to help us and others, when as they proceed from an humble and faithful heart, which giveth life and quickening unto them.

Let us see the Uses that naturally arise from hence. First, it teacheth us, that if prayer be so available, we ought to learn what prayer is. Manie there are, that know the Commandment of God, that he requireth this duty at their hands; they see what they should do, who yet are altogether ignorant in the right manner of the doing of it. They come to this work as to an ordinary matter, they perform it of custom, they make it a Lippe-labor, they come without feeling of the Majesty of God, or their own wants. We must therefore understand, that to pray, is to put up our requests to God, according to his will, from a contrite heart in the name of Christ Jesus, with assurance to be heard.

In which description of Prayer, there is offered to our considerations, these five things: First, that it is a putting up, and pouring out of our requests to God: For how shall we call upon him in whom we do not believe? And as he only is to be believed in, so he only knoweth our conditions, & heareth our cries, and seeth our necessities. It is therefore our duty to seek unto him in our misery, and to make him a Tower of refuge to resort unto. This the Prophet Isaiah teacheth, Chap. 17, 7. At that day shall a man look to his Maker, and his eyes shall look to the holy one of Israel. We must acknowledge, that it is not left in our own choice to pray, or not to pray; we have an express Commandment, After this manner pray ye. And again, Pray continually. Let them therefore be ashamed, that make no care or Conscience to pray, and such as cannot pray at all. These two may well be joined together, and are brethren in evil, and Companions in wickedness. For Prayer is a gift bestowed upon all the faithful, in some measure. Some have this blessed grace in a greater degree, and some in a less; but all are endued with it in some sort, none do wholly want it, that want not the spirit. Hence it is, that we read of the Spirit of supplications. David and Daniel were often in the practice of this duty, and failed not three times a day to humble themselves in the presence of God. There is no man so simple and sottish, but knoweth how to ask a benefit when he wanteth it: he can ask for bread, when he lacketh it: he can crave drink, when he is thirsty: he can crave apparel when we would be clothed. We see the practice of this in little Children, they are quickly brought to do this: and yet I fear me, the greatest part of men, neither desire, nor know how to desire anything at the hands of God, who is a liberal rewarder of all that come unto him, and call upon him. They can beg of men, but they have no knowledge to put up any supplication to God.

If a Prince should set out an Edict, and make a Proclamation, that whosoever would come and make humble suit unto him, should have such a fair Lordship or rich Manour, there are few that would miss it for want of asking: no man would want words, all men would be eloquent enough, there would be suters and suppliants great store, that would make their tongues serve them ripely and readily for such a purpose. Thus it is between God & us, he hath published, that Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord, shall be saved: Let us not now be wanting to our selves, nor lose a kingdom for want of asking. If we ask for grace and glory, we shall obtain. That which we would do for a temporal possession, let us not leave undone to obtain an heavenly inheritance; and if we would go unto men, let us not neglect or omit to pray unto God.

The second thing to be observed in the right invocation of the name of God, is that it must be offered up according to his word and will. We are not left at our own liberty, and our voluntary choice how we will pray, the manner prescribed, allowed, and accepted of God, is when it is done according to his own will. He will be worshipped according to his own appointment, and not as we please. This was taught us before, out of the Apostle John, Chap. 5, 14. This is the assurance that we have in him, that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us. He doth not promise, that whatsoever we crave, we shall receive; and whatsoever we ask, we shall obtain; but he restraineth the promise, Whatsoever we shall ask according to his will.

This therefore, is the right manner of praying, to pray according to his will, that commandeth this duty of us. We must crave of him such things as he alloweth, and not lust after the things that he hateth and forbiddeth. This being the rule of Prayer (that is shortly set down) doth direct us in all our supplications to seek to know his will, & then to submit our selves unto it, if we would pray with fruit and profit. We see among men this order observed, that such as desire to obtain the favor and help of other, do frame themselves wholly unto their will. So ought it to be with us, if we would have God to respect us, and hear us, we must fashion our selves according to his pleasure, otherwise we deceive our selves, if we hope for any blessing at his hands. Now the will of God directing our prayers, consisteth in three things. First, that our bodies and souls be no otherwise settled, then becometh those that are to enter talk and communication with God. This the faithful declared, by lifting up their hands, by casting up the eyes, by bowing down the knees, and such other gestures, as testified the sequestering of all their thoughts from the earth and earthly cogitations, and the bringing of all their mind to the meditation of heaven and heavenly things. Secondly, we have need in prayer, of perseverance & continuance. We must not give over, and wax weary. It pleaseth the Lord oftentimes to defer to hear & to help us, not that he neglecteth us, or forgetteth us, or wisheth our hurt, but to exercise our Faith by delaying. Wherefore all rash presumption ought to be far from us, which dareth to prescribe unto God, either the time, or the manner of our deliverance, and of granting our requests. It is our duty to wait patiently upon the Lord, and to refer unto him the means and manner of helping of us. The woman of Canaan is a notable example to teach us to continue in prayer, even then when we seem to have the repulse and denial. The Widow in the Gospel is a worthy president to this purpose, to move us to this perseverance, and not to give over. Lastly, we must beware, that we ask no more then God giveth us leave to ask in his word. We must require those things that are fitting us to crave, and beseeming God to grant. Many men never consider these things, but are rash and heady in their petitions, regarding neither what he in goodness and Justice can give, neither what is profitable for themselves to receive. Some crave riches to spend in lust and riot: other wish for strength to be revenged of their enemies, whom they ought to receive with goodness. Others are not ashamed to ask foul and filthy things, which one would blush to ask of a mortal man, which the Heathen themselves have condemned. These are the causes why our prayers are not heard, because we ask amiss, and do not submit our willes to his will. Our wills are carnal and corrupt: his will is pure and holy, and the rule of all righteousness.

The third point to be observed in prayer, is, that it proceed from an humble and contrite heart. If pride do compass us as a Chain, and an high conceit of our selves possess us, we are deceived if we suppose to obtain anything at the hands of God. A proud Begger is hated of God, and scorned of men. There can nothing be seen more deformed and despised, then a poor man that is proud. There is nothing can worse sort together, then a proud heart, and a beggars purse. God ever-more resisteth the proud, and giveth grace unto the humble and lowly. The Prophet David declareth this Psal. 51, 16, 17. Thou desirest no Sacrifice, though I would give it: thou delightest not in Burnt Offerings. The Sacrifices of God are a contrite spirit, a contrite and a broken heart, O Lord, thou wilt not despise. We must learn therefore truly to feel our own poverty and misery: let us consider that we need all things that we ask, and so join an earnest and fervent affection and desire of obtaining. Indeed, we cannot always have a like feeling, but we must always strive against deadness of heart, and dullness of spirit▪ Let us shake off all vain-glory and pride, and give all the glory to God, as the poor Publican did in the Gospel. Thus have the faithful done, as appeareth in David, Daniel, Isaiah, Jeremiah. We must not be like the proud Pharisee, that stood upon his own righteousness, and condemned other of wickedness and profaneness. Let us also come with Repentaunce, not only craving pardon for sins past, and making an humble Confession of faults present, but desiring grace to be strengthened in time to come.

Lastly, let not our prayer be a lip-labor for form and fashion sake, but earnest and fervent. When Saneherib invaded Judah, and besieged the strong Cities, and thought to win them for him-self, Hezekiah and the Prophet Isaiah with him cried to heaven. Thus doth the Prophet Jeremiah speak, Arise, cry in the night; in the beginning of the Watches, pour out thine heart like water before the face of the Lord lift up thine hands toward him, &c. Heerunto accordeth the Apostle, Rom. 8, 26, 27. The spirit helpeth our infirmities, for we know not how to pray as we ought: but the spirit it self maketh request for us with sighs, which cannot be expressed: but he that searcheth the hearts, knoweth what is the meaning of the spirit; for he maketh request for the Saints according to the will of God. Thus it appeareth out of the practice of the Prophets & Apostles, what kind of prayers God accepteth. True it is, they avail much, howbeit they must be fervent. Cold prayers turn into sin, and never bring with them any blessing. We will seem to draw near to God, and to honor him, howbeit it is only with our mouths and lips, which is a vain worshipping of him. We will needs call upon his name, but our prayers freeze between our teeth, and are uttered without zeal. These are they that pray, but it is in such sort, as if they never meant to speed. If a Child should crave anything of his parents in that manner, they would take them-selves to be abused.

The 4. thing expressed in the former description of prayer, is, that it must be put up in the name of Christ Jesus. He is the Mediator of the New Testament, he standeth between the wrath of his Father & us; he maketh continual intercession for us. If then, we would have our prayers accepted, we must come in his name, he is the High-priest of our profession, he offereth them up unto his Father, who accepteth them not for their woorthinesse, but for his worthiness; not for their merits, but for his merits; as we shall show farther in the Doctrine following. In his Name, did the Fathers come to the Throne of Grace, and presented their prayers before God, assuring themselves to be heard for his sake. This is manifest in the prayer that Daniel maketh, Chap. 9. 17. Now therefore (O our God) hear the Prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and cause thy face to shine upon thy Sanctuary that lieth wast, for the Lord's sake. He acknowledgeth Christ Jesus to be the heir and Lord of all things, in whom, and through whom God would accept his prayers. This we might farther show by other examples; yea, it is taught us by the mouth of Christ himself, Verily, verily I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you. As no man can come to the Father, but by him, so no man can obtain anything but by him. We cannot ask in our own name, that is; for our own merits anything; we ask and obtain in the name of Christ. By his name we must understand his incarnation, his passion, his death, his deserts, his intercession. For, as he that hath Christ, hath eternal life, because Christ is the way, the truth, and the life; so he that hath Christ, obtaineth all things, because he it is alone in whom the Father is well pleased. It is therefore a lawful and laudable custom of the true Church, to conclude and shut up their prayers in the name of Christ, declaring thereby, that their trust and confidence to be heard, standeth not in themselves, nor in any other then the Mediator between God and them. True it is, the Church of Rome useth this form, and endeth in his name, but this is no better then a mere mocking of Christ. For, albeit they add in the closing up of their prayers, Through our Lord Jesus Christ; yet the substance of them is full of Idolatry, and the Saints are made Idols, and Christ a Mediator to bring us to them, which is as foul a dishonor, as if the eldest son, who is heir of all, should be used and employed to bring us into the favor of the servant of the house. So then, we must hold it as a principle of our Faith to direct us in our prayers, that they be not made in the name of any creature, but in the name and mediation of Christ alone. And hereby is discovered a manifest fault and palpable error of ignorant people. They pour out many Prayers, and cry out oftentimes, Lord help me, Lord have mercy upon me, Thus do these poor and simple blind souls, rush upon the Lord, as it were into the Chamber of presence, without a guide: they know not the nature of God, that he is as well a most fearful judge, as a most merciful father: and they are ignorant of the Office of the Mediator, in whose name they should present their prayers to him. He that cometh in his own name, cometh in a wrong name; and he that cometh without Christ, departeth without fruit. He sprinkleth our prayers with the sweet Odours of his merits and mediation, without which, our prayers and our persons are abominable.

The fifth and last thing required in Prayer is, that it must be made with assurance to be heard. Prayer is to be made in faith, whereby a man must have confidence that he shall obtain that which he hath asked. This affiance being wanting, maketh Prayer to be no prayer. Whosoever doubteth whether God will grant his requests or not, can never pray for anything earnestly and effectually. This our Savior teacheth, Mark 11, 24. Whatsoever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye shall have it, and it shall be done unto you. None can have this persuasion to be heard, none can have this affiance, that God is both willing and able to help them, but the faithful, who have assurance that their sins are pardoned, and their persons reconciled unto God in Christ. Such as stand in doubt of this, can never believe any other promises revealed in the word, nor be sure that any of his prayers shall be heard. If any come and make any suite or supplication unto us, whom we know to doubt of our good will and meaning toward us, can we regard them, or accept of them? So they can by no means please God, that while they are praying, doubt of his good meaning, or Almighty power, and know not how he is affected and disposed toward them. For this cause the Apostle James directing us in the right course of prayer, commandeth that it be made in faith without doubting, James 1, 6, 7. Let him ask in Faith, and waver not: for he that wavereth, is like a wave of the Sea tossed of the wind, and carried away: neither let that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord. It is a great corruption of the flesh, and such as springeth from the bitter root of Infidelity, to imagine that God doeth not, or will not regard our prayers, according to that saying of the Prophet, Psal. 10, 13. Wherefore doth the wicked contemn God? He saith in his heart, Thou wilt not regard. But here some may Object & say; How can we have this assurance, seeing many pray, and yet receive not; they ask, and obtain not. The Prophet David complaineth, O my God, I cry by day, but thou hearest not; and by night, but have no audience. And in another place, He prayed for the life of his child with great earnestness of spirit, with great humbleness of mind, with great anguish of heart, and yet he obtained not the life of his son that he desired, for the Child died. I answer to this many ways. First, God doth sometimes defer to answer his servants, to make them cry more earnestly. We are made of a dull Mettall, we quickly wax weary in prayer; we must have some means to kindle our zeal. Now, it is a great error in the faithful, to think that GOD deceyueth us, because he delayeth us; it is the purpose of God to try us for the exercise of our faith, and the increase of our zeal.

Secondly, men do sometimes pray that are profane, and lie in some grievous sin, that is unrepented of, which is as a thick cloud standing between the Lord and us, and as it were stopping his ears, that he cannot hear us: or as a bar that lieth in our way, that we cannot possibly come into the presence of God. True Repentance will scatter the Cloud, and remove the bar that is before us; but till sin be forsaken, our Prayers cannot be granted. Many complain that they are not heard, and murmur that they spend their words as in the Wind; but they never consider what the cause is, and where the fault lieth, and how it is to be reformed.

Thirdly, they pray to satisfy their lusts, and do not ask such things as they ought to desire, according as the Apostle James upbraideth the Jews to whom he wrote, Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye might lay the same out on your pleasures. It is not enough to crave good things, but we must ask them to a good end. If our purpose be evil, our Prayers cannot be good, our requests cannot be granted.

Fourthly, we must pray for earthly things, with condition, so far as they may serve to the glory of God, and our own good: and therefore, we must refer our selves wholly to his will and pleasure, as we are taught in the Lord's Prayer to say; Thy will be done. Spiritual Graces we may ask without exception, but earthly benefits with limitation.

Lastly, God heareth our prayers two ways. First, when he granteth that thing which we ask. Thus he heard Isaac, Moses, Hezekiah, Jehoshaphat, & others. Secondly, albeit God do not bestow upon us always those lawful things which we desire and demand, yet he heareth our prayers, and answereth our cries, when he giveth something proportionable to that we ask: As if we crave earthly blessings, he giveth us heavenly; and if we crave temporal things, he yieldeth eternal life; and if, instead of deliverance of us out of trouble, he giveth us strength and ability to bear trouble, and patience to endure under the cross without murmuring. Thus is Christ said to be heard in that which he feared, albeit he suffered death. He prayed that the Cup might pass from him, yet he was to drink of it; his Father had decreed it, he had undertaken it, and we were to be redeemed by it. Notwithstanding, he was heard when God gave him strength to bear it, and sent an Angel to comfort him in his Agony, according to that he speaketh, John 11, 41, 42. Father I thank thee, because thou hast heard me, I know that thou hearest me always.

So when Paul felt a prick in the Flesh, the Messenger of Satan to buffet him; for this thing he besought the Lord thrice, that it might Depart from him, and he said unto him, My Grace is sufficient for thee, for my power is made perfect through weakness. God did not hear him, and yet he did hear him. He requesteth one thing, and God granteth him another. He craveth freedom from temptation, but he is promised a supply of grace to be made able to overcome temptations. Thus it fareth with everyone of us; we must consider what we ask, and how God heareth us. We must not think he forgetteth us, when he doth not feed our fancies, and answer our expectations: he knoweth what is best for us, and he will give us that which he seeth to be best for us.

Secondly, as this Doctrine sendeth us to school to learn what true prayer is, so it serveth to reprove three sorts of men. First, such as are grown to this height of profaneness, that they think it to be in vain to pray unto God. The faithful find by a blessed experience of God's favor, that nothing is more profitable unto them. They would rather leave any earthly Commodity, and loose their lives, then cease to call upon the Name of God. We see this in the example of Daniel, Chapter 6. 7, 8. when a Decree was confirmed, sealed, and published, according to the Law of the Medes and Persians, which altereth not, That whosoever shall ask a petition of any God or Man for thirty days, save of the King, he should be cast into the Den of Lions. It might seem no great matter to forbear and abstain from prayer for so short a time, yet when Daniel understood, that the writing was passed and published, he went into his house, and his window being open in his Chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his Knees three times in a day, and prayed and praised his God, as he did afore-time.

It is therefore a Testimony of a very profane and proud heart, not only not to pray, but to contemn and abhor it as an unclean thing, or as a superfluous and needless thing. Thus doeth Job bring in the ungodly speaking, who differ but one step from Atheists, the dearest and best beloved sons of the Devil, Chapt. 21. *They say also unto GOD; Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways: Who is the Almighty, that we should serve him? And what profit should we have, if we should pray unto him? Ah, vile Wretches, whether will your blasphemous mouths reach? Will you thus be at defiance with the most high and Omnipotent GOD, and set yourselves against Heaven? Whereas we are so oftentimes allured and provoked to prayer, and have most gracious and precious promises added, that God will hear us? Shall we bid him battle (as if we were stronger then he) and say; If we cry unto him Day and Night, what do we gain, or what advantage shall grow unto us? Do not they prosper alike, that never have God in their minds, and they that frequent diligently and daily the house of Prayer? Who are more subject to troubles, then such as trouble themselves with the word of God, and study to keep his commandments? Wherefore, whether we pray, or not pray, all is one, all is alike, there is no difference, we loose our labor, we receive no profit. Thus do many speak, thus do mo think; the world is full of such vermin and venom. Against which most wicked imaginations, we must oppose the commandment of God willing us to pray, the promise of mercy, the examples of the faithful, which have been heard when they prayed. Secondly, this Doctrine reproveth such as go to Saints and Angels; from the Creator to the Creature, which is a great dishonor done to God, and a reproach to Christ. Were not he a foolish and sottish suppliant, that when the Kings son offereth to speak for him to his father, would refuse to use his mediation, and go to one of his servants to entreat for him? Is it not meet that such a one should be said nay, and depart without his purpose? Even so, inasmuch as the father sendeth us unto his son, and the son calleth us to himself, what madness is it to run as well from the one, as from the other, to go from the son to the Saints; from him that can hear, to them that cannot help? Nay, as the Father is deprived of his Honor, and the son robbed of his Office, so the Saints themselves are disgraced. If a man should set any of the Subiectes down in the Chair of estate, and then bow down before him, and give him any of the Royalties of the King, were not this high Treason against the Prince, and extreme wrong to the Subject? Thus the case standeth between us, God, and the Saints. If we shall advance the Saints to so high a degree, as to pray unto them, which is proper unto God, and (as it were) the Princes Regality; if they did see our impiety, they would blush at it, and be ashamed of it. The Apostle Peter would not suffer Cornelius when he met him, to fall down at his feet and worship him. Paul and Barnabas rent their cloths, when they saw Jupiter's Priest bring Bulls with Garlands unto the gates of the Citty, to the end they might offer sacrifice unto them. Did they reject this service done unto them when they lived upon the earth, and shall we think they do now affect it, or would now accept of it? Away therefore, with the mediation of the Angels, who know not our hearts, nor hear our prayers. Away with the mediation of the Saints, who being now in heaven, are accepted of God, not for themselves, but for the precious merits of their Savior Christ. I except not the blessed Virgin Mary his* Mother, but as once she rejoiced in God her Savior, so now she triumpheth in Christ her Redeemer, and is accepted through the deserts of her son. To conclude this point, let us remember the saying of the Apostle John, If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the reconciliation for our sins. Where we see, he joineth these two together, to be an Advocate, and to make reconciliation, and appropriateth them both to the person of Christ. If then, the Saints be our Advocates, that we should present our prayers unto them; they to Christ, and Christ to God; they must also make reconciliation for our sins, and appease the wrath of God the father, which is impossible for them to do, and blasphemous for us to affirm. It is our duty therefore to repair & resort unto God the father through the merits of his son Jesus Christ. The Prophet complaineth, That some trust in Chariots, & some in horses. So in time of trouble, some seek to Saints & Angels, others fly to Witches & Idols, but we must remember the name of the Lord our God. But of this point we have spoken before more at large. Thirdly, it reproveth such as see the want of many blessings in themselves and others, & feel great judgments and public calamities upon themselves & others, and yet pray not at all to have the one bestowed, and the other removed. These are like to brute beasts, that roar & cry out for their prey when they want meat, but they never consider from whence they receive it; and as the swine that eat the Mast in the woods, but never look up to the tree from whence it falleth: or as the dog that biteth the stone that is cast at him, but looks not to the hand that threw it. So do these men; they can mourn and murmur when they sustain any loss, feel any plague, or find any want; but they have no knowledge to search out the cause or the means how God's blessings should be obtained, or his judgments be prevented. Hence it is, that the Prophets complain of this sencelesnesse and want of feeling of God's mercy, and our own misery, as we see in Ezekiel, and in other places, I sought for a Man among them, that should not make up the hedge, and stand in the gappe before the Land, that I should not destroy it, but I found none. It is a vain thing for a Physician to know the Disease, and not to apply the Remedy; so likewise is it a great folly for us to know our own wants, and yet to want Wisdom to take a right course to redress the same. What deadness of heart hath entered into us, that we have forgotten the commandments of God, and cannot remember the examples of his servants that have obtained great things at his hands, and cannot be encouraged by his manifold and merciful promises that he hath made unto us? Let us then be provoked to this duty, and not be wanting unto our selves, but respect our own good and benefit in seeking unto the Lord daily, in calling upon him early and late. The servants of Naaman reprove him, in that being commanded an easy and ready way to be cured and cleansed of his Leprosy, yet he hung back, and would not use the remedy, If the Prophet (say they to their Master) had commanded thee a greater thing, wouldest thou not have done it? How much rather then, when he saith to thee, wash, and be clean? So may it be said to us, to shake off our drowsiness, and to work forwardness in us to practice this duty, If the Lord in our present wants should require at our hands any hard and difficult thing, ought we not to obey him, and to perform his Commandment? How much more then, when he respecteth our weakness, and saith only; Ask, and you shall have; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. We shall not need now to say in our own hearts, Who shall ascend into Heaven, or descend into the deep, to bring his blessings unto us from thence. The remedy is at hand, the means are near even in our mouth, and in our heart; this is the prayer of faith, which availeth much if it be fervent. It teacheth us the way to the Lord's treasures, & to put our hand into his Coffers, to take such benefits as we want, and to put up the arrows of his wrath into his quiver, which he hath drawn against us, to shoot at us.

Thirdly, from hence ariseth great comfort to all the faithful that call upon the name of God. For, are the prayers of good men auayleable for our good? Do they procure blessings, and stay judgments? Then have we great cause to rejoyce, and matter of great joy offered unto us in the diligent practice of this duty. We are assured, that the Lord will not defraud & deceive us, but give us those things that we desire, and he knoweth what we want. Is our Faith weak? He will strengthen us. Are we ignorant? He will enstruct us. Do we want the Graces of his spirit? He will supply them. Is our Love cold? He will quicken it. Is our Repentance imperfect? He will perfect it. On the other side, are his Judgments among us? He will remove them. Are we in distress? He will have mercy upon us. Do our sins trouble us? He will discharge us. Are we in sickness? He will restore us. Are we in any misery? He will deliver us. If the consideration of this gracious dealing of God, and the performance of his precious promises, do not put life into our dead hearts, and assure comfort to our feeble spirits, and raise us up when we are cast down: what weapon can be of sufficient force to pierce our hearts, and to drive us to the Conscionable practice of this duty? If we had not a blessed experience of God's goodness towards us, we should have the less sin to doubt thereof. But seeing there is no faithful Man or Woman, who hath not found the Lord ready to hear him in time of his need, and that we are compassed about with so great a Cloude of witnesses, let us comfort our selves, and one another in these things, and be stirred up to call upon his name.

Lastly, are the Prayers of the faithful profitable to all things, and available to make us partakers of God's blessings, and to stop the course of his Judgments? Then we must remember that it is our duty to praise his name when he hath heard our prayers, and granted our requests, either for our selves, or our brethren. It is a note of an unthankfull heart, to obtain a benefit, and not to acknowledge it; to receive a gift, and not to praise and commend the giver. This is it which the Apostle teacheth, 2. Cor. 1, 9, 10, 11. speaking of the afflictions which came upon him in Asia, whereby he was pressed out of measure, passing strength, so that he doubted altogether, even of life, We received the sentence of death in our selves, because we should not trust in our selves, but in God which raiseth the dead, who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver us; in whom we trust, that yet hereafter he will deliver us, so that ye labor together in Prayer for us, that for the gift bestowed upon us for many, thanks may be given by many persons for us. In which words he declareth, that as he had experience in the time past, of the mercy of God, in the deliverance which was given unto him: so he hopeth of the like assistance of his spirit, if that the Corinthians would be mindful of him in their prayers. Where we see, he ascribeth much to their Prayers, and yet, so much, as that he would have the glory of his deliverance to be given only to God, and thanks to be rendered unto him. A point worthy to be considered of us, and a duty needful to be performed by us. As he hath promised, and we have prayed: so when he hath paid, he is to be praised. Praise is comely, and well becometh the Saints of God, the want whereof, taketh away the comfort and sweet fruit of his blessings from us. It is a great offense to be unthankfull unto men, but far greater to God, in whom we live, and move, and have our being. Wherefore, whensoever

we have opened our mouths unto God, let us return the Calves of our lips unto him, and never show our selves more ready to ask, then we are willing to praise and magnify the Lord, who hath granted that which we have asked. And hereby we may try our selves, whether we be truly thankful unto him, or not.

[I shall be freely given (or bestowed) upon you.]

The Apostle in this place, useth a word derived from grace, so that it signifieth to be given by Grace. Thus the word is taken in sundry places of the Scripture, as Rom. 8. If he have given us his own son, how should he not with him give us all things else. And 1 Cor. 2. We have received the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are given to us of God. So likewise, Galath. 3. God gave the inheritance to Abraham by promise. The meaning of the Apostle is thus much in effect; the Prayers of the Saints shall prevail with God, and being offered up for my deliverance, shall not return to them without comfort, nor ascend to him without effect, nor concern me without effect. Notwithstanding, albeit they shall not go empty away, but have their full force and power, yet it is to be acknowledged and Learned, that they so obtain, as that my deliverance is to be wrought out by the free gift of his Grace, not by the merit and desert of your prayers.

From hence we learn, that the gifts of God bestowed upon his Servants, come from his free grace, not from our deserts; from his mercy, not from our merits: from his Goodness, not from our Worthinesse. This is set down in the second Commandment of the Law, Exodus 20, 6. where the Lord promiseth eternal life unto the Keepers of the Commandments, yet they must not look to obtain it as a due desert, For he will show Mercy unto thousands to them that love him, and keep his Commandments. Faith is an excellent gift, and a notable means to bring us to eternal life, For he that believeth in the Son hath eternal life, and he that obeyeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of GOD abideth on him.

We see then, the necessity of having a lively Faith, because to believe in Christ, bringeth with it eternal life: yet it is not for the merit of our Faith, but for the Mercy of God, and the Merit of Christ apprehended by Faith, inasmuch as Eternal life is the free gift of God. The like we may say of Prayer, we have a comfortable promise, that if we ask, we shall receive; if we seek, we shall find; not because our Prayers do deserve acceptation: and therefore, when Daniel prayed unto God, he confesseth that righteousness belongeth unto the Lord, but unto us open shame, because we have sinned against him. Whereby we gather, that although our prayers are not without effect, yet they prevail not by any excellency is sound in them, and therefore he saith; Compassion and forgiveness is in the Lord our God, albeit we have rebelled against him. Thus also we might perticularly speak of all the good ordinances of God, and the good duties that proceed from us, as the saving hearing of the word, the fruitful receiving of the Sacraments, & such like holy exercises of our Religion: inasmuch as he doth accept them, and is well pleased in the performance of them, howbeit not through our worthiness that do perform them, but thorough his goodness that doth command them, thorough his mercy that doth approve them, thorough his promise that doth receive them, and thorough his liberality that doeth reward them.

If we would know the Causes and Reasons why the Graces of God are freely bestowed upon us, and nothing given in our deserts; First, let us consider that all matter of boasting is taken from us, and God will have the glory of his own works, and the praise of his mercy. If he should take anything of us, he should loose so much of his own glory, and we would be ready to ascribe our sanctification and salvation to our own selves. This doth the Apostle set down at large in sundry Epistles; for speaking of Abraham he saith, If Abraham were justified by works, he hath wherein to rejoyce, but not with God. And having shown before, that God accepteth of the faithful, making him just, and without blame, by imputing of Christ's righteousness unto him, he confirmeth it by the end of Justification, which he maketh to be the glory of God, saying; Where is then the rejoicing? It is excluded. By what Law? Of Works; Nay, but by the Law of Faith. As if he should say; If we were justified, either by our own Works wholly & only, or partly by Faith, and partly by works, then the glory of our justification should be wholly given to our selves, or at least not wholly given unto God. To this purpose he speaketh in the Epistle to the Ephesians, By grace are ye saved through Faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God, not of works, lest any man should boast himself. God will have the glory of our justification, he will be accounted and acknowledged to be the Justifier and Savior of us; he hath not left us to justify our selves, nor to be our own Saviors, as shall better appear afterward.

Secondly, there are no such properties in any man's works, as that they cannot merit or proceed from any other fountain then Grace. Let us therefore see what properties are necessarily required in works, to make them meritorious. First, they must be done of a man of himself, & by himself: but we have nothing of our own to give him, but are most poor men and mere beggars, and can but pay God with his own. The works that are our own, are sufficient to deserve his wrath: but have no power at all to procure his favor. For in our selves we are wretched and miserable, poor, naked, and destitute of all goodness, so that it is truly said by the Apostle Paul, Who separateth thee? And what hast thou, that thou hast not received? If thou hast received it, why reioycest thou, as though thou hadst not received it. Without him therefore we can do nothing: it is he that must work in us the will and the deed.

Secondly, they must be such works as are not due unto him, they must not be due debt, they must come from our own free will, they must be such as God cannot justly challenge at our hands. But whatsoever we do, we do as poor debtors; nay, we are worse then poor debtors, we are miserable Bankrupts, we have nothing, we have less then nothing to pay. Our Savior hath a worthy sentence to this purpose, Luke 17, 10. When ye have done all those things that are commanded you, say, we are unprofitable servants, we have done that which was our duty to do. And what could Adam do, and offer unto God in his innocence, but that which was his duty; and whereunto he was bound unto his Maker, for his Creation and other blessings bestowed upon him?

Thirdly, the work must be done to the benefit and profit of him, from whom we look to be repaid. But our goodness and well-doing reacheth not to the Lord, Psal. 16. We may benefit men, but we cannot benefit our maker, from whom we have received life and limb, soul and body, & all that we have, but we can give him nothing. Now they that cannot give anything to God, can deserve nothing from him: but we cannot give anything to God, according to the saying of Paul, Who hath given unto him first, and he shall be recompensed? For of him, and through him, and for him are all things, to him be glory forever, Amen: therefore, it is evident that we cannot deserve.

Fourthly, whatsoever is imperfect, cannot stand in the presence of the most just and perfect God: we must bring nothing before him, but that which is absolute, and able to bear and sustain his wrath. But all that we do offer, or can offer unto God, is maimed and imperfect: such are our best Works, our Prayers, our Meditations, our Hearing, so that our righteousness is like a menstruous clothe. Whatsoever proceedeth from us, is foul and faulty, no man is able to satisfy the Justice and rigor of the Law, according to that of the Apostle, There is none righteous, no not one; they have all gone out of the way, they have been made altogether unprofitable, there is none that doth good. no, not one; and therefore by the works of the Law shall no flesh be justified in his sight. We must all entreat for pardon and forgiveness of our evil Works, and not stand upon the perfection and sufficiency of our good works.

Lastly, the work and the reward must be in proportion equal, for if the reward be more then the work, it is not a reward of desert, but a gift of good will. The Apostle saith, Rom. 8, I account that the afflictions of this present time, are not worthy of the glory, which shall be shown unto us. Thus then we reason; Nothing can deserve, but that which is equivalent to the thing deserved: but nothing that we can do, can equal or deserve the gifts, the least gift of God. So then, albeit we had some-what to give, and that we were not as most naked and needy beggars; yet it cannot be compared or correspondent to that which we receive. For grace and glory are vnvalewable and unmatchable, no price can purchase them, no money can buy them, no merits can match them. So then, whether we consider that GOD will have the glory of all his works, or that there is a great disproportion between Mercy and Merits; in both respects we conclude, that the gifts of GOD given unto his faithful servants, proceed from his free grace, not from our free will, so that they are not deserved of us, but bestowed upon us.

This Doctrine being thoroughly strengthened, let us see what Uses may be grounded from thence. First, we learn from hence, that seeing God giveth not by desert, but of his mercy; that whatsoever we have obtained and received by any prayer, or other means from the hand of God, we must ascribe all to the glory and praise of his name, and acknowledge him to be the Author and giver. True it is, we are commanded to call upon the Lord, and to put up our suits and supplications unto him: and when we have prayed, and God hath heard our prayer, we must not think that we have well deserved to speed in our desires, and say; For my righteousness, & the strength of my Prayers, I have gotten this or that: but as we use the means, so we must acknowledge that God findeth such faults in our best prayers, that he might curse us, rather than bless us; and condemn us rather than hear us; and withal consider, that in hearing us, he respecteth more that which is in himself, then anything that is in us, he is moved rather of his own mercy, then any absoluteness that he can see in our well-doing. Let us therefore meditate upon our own wants, and albeit we use those helps and Instruments that he hath appointed, yet let us give him all the glory to whom it is wholly due. When a great multitude of enemies came against Jehoshaphat, he set himself to seek the Lord, and proclaimed a fast through out all Judah, They asked counsel of the Lord, and prayed unto him: yet when God had given them the upper hand; they blessed not themselves, but the Lord; they praised not their own zeal, but his mercy; and they ascribed not the victory to their fasting and prayer, but to his favor and power: For they assembled themselves in the Valley of Berachah, and there they blessed the Lord: then every Man of Judah and Jerusalem returned with Jehoshaphat their head, to go again to Jerusalem with joy, for the Lord had made them to rejoice over their Enemies.

The like we might say of Hezekiah. The example of the Prophet David is plentiful in this Argument, he oftentimes praiseth the Lord, because he had heard the voice of his petition, as Psal. 65. O God, praise waiteth for thee in Zion, and unto thee shall the vow be performed, because thou hearest the Prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come. And Psal. 98. Sing unto the Lord a new song, for he hath done marvelous things: his right hand and his holy arm hath gotten him the victory. And Psal. 115. Not us, ô Lord, not unto us, but unto thy Name give the glory, for thy loving mercy, and for thy truths sake. And hereby we may discover a deep devise, a dangerous plot, and a deceitful policy of the Devil. He laboreth by all means to keep us from Prayer, he cannot abide that we should call upon the name of our God. He will tell us of the fearful Majesty of God to dismay us; he will suggest our own baseness and unworthiness to discourage us; he will object that others pray not at all, yet do well enough, & that they live in all abundance, and want nothing, yet are not so devout; he will tell us (to make us secure) that God knoweth whereof we have need before we ask, that he needeth not to be put in mind of his mercy, and that he cannot forget the covenant that he hath made with us. These are subtle baits to entrap us, and mighty stumbling blocks to trip us, and strong temptations to slay us, and by these he oftentimes prevaieth in the Children of disobedience. If he cannot obtain his purpose of us at the first, yet he will not give over, but follow us hard at the heels, till he hath subdued us; and mark our foot-steppes, till he hath ensnared us. He will say unto thee, when thou preparest thyself to pray, what needest thou pray at this time? Thou art now unfit; thou art without feeling; thou hast other business to go about, another time will serve as well, or better then this, when thou mayest be better fitted to this work. For if thou pray without feeling and zeal, thou sinnest, and thy prayer is abominable; wherefore take heed thou pray not, least thou sin against God.

Thus he prevailed with Saul, when the Priest brought the Ark of God to ask counsel of him what he should do, Saul said unto him, Withdraw thine hand: as if he should say; Let us pursue our enemies, I have no leisure to stand asking counsel of God. If he prevail with us, to neglect this duty at one time, he will take advantage of it, so that if he see us ready to pray afterward, he will allege, what needest thou pray yet? Thou omittedst it at such and such a time, and thou speddest well enough, thou hadst no evil or hurt by it, why then wilt thou now begin? It will but trouble thy Conscience to be always praying, it will hinder thy business, and cause thee to neglect thy calling: yea, when thou hast done all thou canst, thou shalt get nothing by it, but shalt make thyself a laughing-stock, and a gazing-stock to the whole World; wherefore it were much better for thee to do as many other of thy good and honest Neighbors, that are not so curious and precise in these matters, who are beloved in the World, and look to come to heaven as well as thyself.

Moreover, he will not forget to tell thee, that if thou betake thyself to this strict course of life, it will bring thee into many melancholy dumps, and so cast thee down, that thou shalt never be merry at the heart. This is the Devils Logic and Language, or rather his sophistry and subtlety, and thus he doth discourse and dispute with us, to draw us away from this duty. For well doth he know, that prayer is a principal part of our spiritual Armor, whereby we are safe garded from him, and all other enemies, and the most effectual means to kindle in us the saving and sanctified Graces of God's Spirit: and therefore when we cease praying, God will stay his hand from blessing us; he will with-hold his graces from us; he will give us over into the power of our spiritual enemies, and renounce us from being in the number of his Children. But if he cannot thus far prevail with us, but that the conscience of God's commandment and our own duty, will stir us up to this practice: then he worketh in us another way, and creepeth upon us after another manner. He will after a sort close with us, and join in the acknowledgment of the necessity of daily exercising our selves in making Prayer unto God: but withal, he will foyst in a false finger, and tell us, that by devout Prayer we shall merit salvation, and that the moe our Prayers are, the greater shall be our merits.

Thus he mingleth and tempereth rank Poison with Prayer, so that albeit we use it, we do abuse it; so that it is all one as if we used it not. Thus he showeth himself to be ready at our Elbow, to puff us up with pride, and to tell us that we pray oftener then others, better then others, with greater feeling then others, with greater faith then others, with greater zeal and assurance then others. Thus he prevailed with the Pharisee, mentioned in the Gospel, he stood and prayed thus with himself; O God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men, Extortioners, unjust, Adulterers, or even as this Publican: I fast twice in the week, I give Tithe of all that ever I possess: I love to pray in the Synagogues, and in the Corners of the streets: but under a color of long Prayers they sought the praise of men, and the enriching of themselves, and therefore were to receive the greater damnation. And as in the former times of the Church, when he could not keep them any longer in Fornication and uncleanness (as if it were a thing indifferent) he taught chastity, thereby to destroy chastity; and under a false praise of single life brought in the detestation of marriage, and the practice of incontinency: so doth he persuade Prayer, thereby to overthrow Prayer. For to move to pray, thereby to meritt and deserve, is to corrupt Prayer, and to make it of none effect. It is the duty of the Minister of God to preach the word, it hath the promise of blessing, and of great reward: but if he go about to persuade us, that we shall merit eternal life by our faithfulness in our Ministry, and by diligent instructing of the people committing to our charge, we must resist the subtle Serpent, and defy him, and deny his merrits. It is the duty of all the godly that have this Worlds goods, to give alms to the poor, especially to the godly poor: but if he move us to give Alms, that we may get Heaven or gain the praise of men, we must strive against his temptation, and not suffer our selves to be deluded by him. For this is as much as if he should say unto us, I would have thee pray, but thou shalt obtain nothing: I would have thee give alms, but thou shalt have no reward. Seeing then, we are subject to a double temptation of Satan (who goeth about like a roaring Lion seeking whom he may devour) so that he will (if it be possible) hinder us from Prayers, or (if he cannot) will corrupt them with his Leaven of meritt: we must prepare to resist him both ways. Whensoever he goeth about to stay us from praying unto our heavenly Father, we must resist him strong in faith, and oppose against him these Meditations. Let us remember God's most holy commandment, to call upon him in the day of trouble, and that we are continually to watch and pray, least we fall into temptation. We have together with the precept, a promise annexed for our comfort and greater encouragement to this duty, that he is near to all that call upon him; even to all that call upon him in truth; yea, the eyes of the Lord are upon the just, and his ears are open unto their prayers.

Let us consider, that there is an absolute necessity of the invocation of his Name, and of craving his assistance, that we may be freed and delivered from the snares and assaults of the Devil, and that he would give us strength to overcome them, and not suffer us to be tempted above our power, but give a blessed issue of the temptation, that we may be made able to bear it. And as the necessity is great to call upon him daily, In whom we live and move, and have our being; so the profit thereof is no less; it bringeth a blessed experience and trial of God's goodness and mercy toward us: It increaseth his spiritual graces in us, and maketh us zealous in all good works: It obtaineth those things that we want, and remooueth the judgments that hang over us, or are upon us. We have the examples of all the faithful, as a Cloud of Witnesses to incite us to this duty. And if we put forth our hands to take and use any of the Creatures or blessings of God without asking him leave, we are no better then Thieves and Robbers. These and such like Motiues, serve to kindle our zeal in Prayer, & to quench the fiery darts of the Devil which he casteth at us. If he go about to puff us up with pride, through an opinion meriting by any, even our best works of Prayer, or Preaching, or Alms-deeds, we must know that all our works are imperfect, and that the good things in us are his own gifts.

Hence it is, that the Apostle saith of himself and all his labors; I am the least of the Apostles: by the Grace of God I am that I am, and his Grace which is in me, was not in vain. I labored more abundantly then they all, yet not I, but the Grace of God which is with me. And in another place, Neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase. Again, What hast thou that thou hast not received? If thou hast received it, why boastest thou as though thou hadst not received it? It is a worthy saying set down by our Savior, When ye have done all those things which are commanded you, say; We are unprofitable Servants, we have done that which was our duty to do. Wherefore, we must labor in all our works to see our imperfections, to cast down ourselves in humility before the Judgment seat of God, and to refer all things to his glory. The Apostle giveth this general rule; Whether ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. And if in these ordinary and natural works, we must aim at that end as at a mark: how much more, in the Mysteries of our salvation, and the great keys of our Religion, ought we to give thanks unto God for blessing us with spiritual blessings in heavenly things? We are not able to inspire Grace into our barren hearts, it is the gift of God, and therefore he must be confessed the giver of every good giving and perfect gift, to the glory of his own Name. And for our selves, let us in all duties of our obedience; Prayer, Alms, or whatsoever works approved of God, prepare our selves to bring humble and broken hearts, freed from the Thorns of pride and vain-glory.

This is taught by David in the Psalm, The Sacrifices of God are a contrite Spirit: a contrite and a broken heart, ô God, thou wilt not despise. The like we see, Isaiah 66. To him will I look, saith the Lord, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my words. And thus was the practice of Daniel in his Prayer, O Lord, incline thine ear, open thine eyes, and behold our desolations: for we do not present our supplications before thee for our own righteousness, but for thy great tender mercies. This humility shall appear to be in us, if we refer the end of all our actions to the honor of God, and make that to be the scope. Let the principal end be the glory of God: the next, the salvation of our Souls: the third, the edification of our Brethren in Christ Jesus. Let us cause our light so to shine before men, that they may glorify our Father which is in Heaven: and then let us follow those things which concern peace, and where-with one may edify another.

Secondly, as by the free bestowing of the graces of God, we are taught to give him all possible praise, so it taketh away all opinion of the merits of works, wherein proud flesh is ready to trust. For to place Merit and Justification in our own works, is to rase down a chief Foundation and principal Pillar of Christian Religion; both because thereby we abolish Grace, and renounce salvation by Christ, and make every man a Savior to himself, and so exclude salvation by Christ: all which are shameful Heresies and horrible blasphemies, and detestable abominations. As many as seek to be justified by the Law, are fallen from Grace. Therefore the Apostle Paul saith, Rom. 11. There is a remnant according to the election of Grace, and if it be of Grace, it is no more of works, or else were Grace no more Grace: but if it be of works, it is no more Grace, or else were work no more work. This serveth to confute the Romish Doctrine, & giveth us just cause to come out from among them, and to make a separation from them, as being no true Church of God. For in as much as they take away the foundation and chief pillars whereupon the house of God standeth, they pull it down and bring it to ruin. We see how they exclude Grace, and bring in Merrit. They establish a twofold kind of Merit, and both of them (as they understand them) plants of their own setting, but mere Strangers in the Garden of the Scriptures, and therefore shall fall; according to the Doctrine of Christ, who saith; Every Plant which mine heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up. One sort is the merrit of the person; the other, is the merrit of the work. The merrit of the person, they make to be a dignity in the person, wheredy he is esteemed worthy of eternal life; and this they say is found in Infants dying after Baptism, who, though they want the merit of good works, yet they want not the merrit of their persons, by which they receive the Kingdom of heaven. The merrit of the work, is a Dignity or excellency in the work in it self, whereby it is fitted and enabled to deserve life everlasting. Hence it is that they teach, that the work and the deed are meritorious two ways; first, by Covenant, because God hath made a promise of reward unto them. Secondly, by their own Dignity, because Christ hath merited, that our works should merrit. A strange opinion, and a strange language and manner of speaking, never heard of in the Book of God. As for us, we renounce all personal merrits; that is, all merrits within the person of any mere man: also all merrits of works done by any mere man whatsoever. The true merrit whereby we look for the favor of God and life everlasting, is to be found in the person and works of Christ alone, who is the treasury and storehouse of all our merrits.

But here some man might object and say; The promise of reward is made to them that believe and work, therefore our works do merit: for merit and reward be Relatiues. I answer, there is a double reward; one of Merit, the other of Mercy. Every good work, be it never so little, done in Faith, done to the glory of God, done in that manner that he commandeth, shall be rewarded, but the reward is not given for the worthiness of the work, but through the liberality of him that hath promised. Hence it is, that eternal life is called an Inheritance. The obedient Child hath promise from his Father to be his Heir, and to inherit his Lands, Goods, and Possessions, after his decease; yet not for his obedience sake, but because his Father loveth him, and in kindness and compassion preferreth him before others. Let it suffice us, to have the Kingdom of Heaven as a free inheritance, and not dream as Hirelings, that we shall have it as an hire and Wages of our work, for then we shall be deceived of our hope and expectation. It is a vain confidence to set up such an high price of our works, as thereby to make them able to buy Heaven. These men do know, neither the weakness of their own strength, nor the unworthiness of their own works, nor the wretchedness of their own persons, nor the excellency of God's Graces, nor the praise of his glory, whereof he is jealous, which he will not give to any other. They are like to Simon Magus, who offered to buy the gifts of God for his Money, as a purchase: or like to the Heathen, that look to be heard for their much babbling sake: or like to Servants that do all for their hire. So these Merit-mongers will have no Heaven, except they may have it as their hire, and as a penny-worth for their penny; they will not be indebted unto God, nor beholding unto him for it. As for us, we value not our good works at so high a rate, we know their imperfections, we crave eternal life as a Sons portion, and an inheritance freely promised unto us, and freely bestowed upon us.

Indeed, it is the will and pleasure of God, that we should labor and bring forth good works, to express our thankfulness to him that hath adopted us for his Children; and after our labor, receive the inheritance: yet we cannot deserve it by our obedience, and we have a better claim unto it, by being Sons, then working as Servants. We confess, that the reward shall be given of bounty, not of necessity; by gift, not by debt; by promise, not by desert; by God's acceptance, not through our perfection. As for the Papists, that glory in their own works, let them take heed they do not deceive themselves, and whilst they rob God of his honor, let them beware they do not rob themselves, and deprive themselves of the honor promised to the Saints: and whilst they challenge and lay claim to everlasting life, as to the Wages of Servants, let them in time look to themselves, least they be denied the Inheritance that belongeth unto Sons.

Lastly, seeing all God's gifts come from him to us, of Grace and Mercy; It is our duty above all things to desire Mercy, and to crave the free gifts of God. The Children of God, whensoever they presented themselves into his presence; they have stripped themselves of all things; they have renounced all privileges of the flesh; they have acknowledged their own unworthiness, and have craved nothing but his favor, and to be satisfied with his Image. This we see in the Prophet David, Psal. 6. My Soul is sore troubled, but Lord, how long wilt thou delay? Return (ô Lord) deliver my Soul, save me for thy mercies sake. He desireth nothing but of Mercy, he pleadeth nothing but favor; he standeth not upon his own righteousness; he willeth not

God to respect him according to his own worthynesse. Again, Psal. 63. Thy loving kindness is better then life, therefore my lips shall praise thee: thus will I magnify thee all my life, and lift up mine hands in thine Name: my Soul shall be satisfied as with Marrow and fatness, and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips: Where he preferreth the goodness of God before all things in Heaven and Earth, whiles he advanceth it above life; signifying thereby, that his life could not be pleasant unto him, and that he would not wish to live without it. What is more desired then life? Yet he preferreth the loving kindness of God before it. So in another place, If thou (ô Lord) straitly markest iniquities, ô Lord, who shall stand? But mercy is with thee, that thou mayest be feared. Likewise the Church in the Lamentations of Jeremiah, confesseth as much, chapt. 3. It is the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not. In all which places we see, that the godly sue for pardon, and cry out for mercy. If they desire any blessing, they ask it of favor: If they crave to have any judgment removed, they crave it of mercy: and they esteem his grace above their own lives, or any earthly thing that they can desire. We must acknowledge that it is of his mere mercy that we live, and move, and have our being. It is our duty to praise his name daily for his great mercies toward us, which are infinite for measure and continuance. If he accept us, it skilleth not greatly though men reject us, and condemn us. If his wrath be kindled against us, and his loving countenance be turned from us, what is it that can delight us, who is it that can comfort us? We see by many & sundry examples in our Brethren, that have been cast down through the multitude and greuousnesse of their sins, and an apprehension of the heavy wrath of God, and a withdrawing of his favor for a season from them, albeit they have had Riches, Friends, Lands, Prosperity, and outward peace, yet none of these could Minister comfort unto them, so long as God's countenance was hidden from them, as the Sun covered in a Cloud. But when once he appeared in mercy and goodness to them again, their bones and bowels have been refreshed, according to the words of the Prophet in the Psalm, If thou, Lord, lift up thy countenance upon me, thou shalt give me more joy of heart then they have had, when their Wheat & their Wine did abound. Labor therefore, by all means to feel his favor; use all means to obtain it, employ thyself diligently to keep it, and to continue it toward thee, that in thy life it may be with thee, and in death it may not depart from thee.

23 There salute thee Epaphras my fellow-prisoner in Christ Jesus.

24 Marchus, Aristarchus, Demas, and Luke my fellow-helpers.

Hitherto, we have handled the chief matter touching this Epistle, containing his suit for Onesimus, and his commandment to prepare him lodging. Now followeth the Conclusion and shutting up of the Epistle, consisting in certain salutations, which are of two sorts; either from others, or from himself. The salutation from others is in these two Verses: the salutation from himself is in the Verse following. In these Verses he saluteth Philemon in the name of five persons which were famous and well known in the Church, and of great authority and credit above many others. This salutation as it was very honorable unto him, so also it carried with it great weight and moment to effect his principal purpose with more easiness. For seeing he joineth with him His Fellow-prisoner, and Fellow-helpers in this suit, that he might the better obtain his request, so that they all put up as it were with one voice and consent the same petition, Philemon could not but consider, that it was a very unseemly and unworthy thing to reject so many suppliants in so reasonable a cause. So then, the sum of these words is this, Epaphras, Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, and Luke do salute thee. The first man is described by an adjoined property, my Fellow-Prisoner; which is declared by the cause, For Jesus Christ. The rest that are here named, have one common adioynt as a title of honor ascribed unto them when he calleth them his Fellow-helpers.

Thus much touching the Order and Method. Now, let us see the meaning and Interpretation of the words. By [Saluting] in this place, we are to understand, to use all kind and courteous speaking, and to wish all peace and prosperity of soul and body, which are fruits of that Brotherly Love that ought to be among all the Saints. Thus did the faithful pray one for another. In this salutation he nameth five persons. In the first place, he rangeth Epaphras, a Cittizen of the same Cittiy with Philemon and his Countreyman, as appeareth in the Epistle to the Colossians, chap. 4. Epaphrasthe Servant of Christ, which is one of you, Saluteth you, and always striveth for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect and full in all she will of God. This man had been the Teacher of the Church at Colossae, and had converted them to the faith of Christ, as we read in the same Epistle, Cha. 1. As ye also learned of Epaphras our deer fellow servant, which is for you a faithful Minister of Christ. It seemeth he was an Evangelist, who succeeded in the labors of the Apostles, but now being at Rome, he was put in prison, and here saluteth Philemon as a Fellow-prisoner of Paul, not for any wickedness and crime that he had committed, but for the Testimony of Christ, and for preaching the Gospel, and therefore is called not Caesar's prisoner, but Christ's Prisoner. Whereby it appeareth, that this Epaphras was falsely accused by the enemies of the Gospel, and therefore brought unto Rome, and put in hold.

Secondly, he nameth Marcus, who is mentioned also in other places of the Scripture, who was Cozen to Barnabas, and the son of that Marie, who was wont to give entertainment to the Disciples at Jerusalem; yea, such was her godliness, that she made her house as an Inn to lodge the poor Saints, and as a public Temple for the people of God to meet together to pray unto him, and to praise his name. This appeareth, Col. 4, 10. Marcus saluteth thee Barnabas Cousin, touching whom ye received Commandments, if he come unto you, receive him. So▪ when Peter was delivered out of prison, it is said, He came to the house of Marie the Mother of John, whose sur-name was Mark, where many were gathered together in Prayer.

Thirdly, he saluteth Philemon in the name of Aristarchus, of whom also mention is made in the Epistle to the Colossians, and there likewise he is called Paul's prisoner, Aristarchus my Prison-fellow saluteth you. As they embraced one Faith, and believed in one Christ, so they suffered for one cause, and were Companions in affliction?

Fourthly, he nameth Demas, who at this time was a constant Confesser of the truth, and a zealous follower of the Gospel, but afterward he started back from the Doctrine of Christ, forsook the fellowship of Paul, & embraced this present world, as the Apostle complaineth of him afterward, as we see, 2 Tim. 4, 10. Demas hath forsaken me, and hath embraced this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica.

Lastly, he reckoneth up Luke, to wit, the Evangelist, who came to Rome as a Companion with Paul, as we read, Acts 28, 14. and is named in the Epistle to the Colossians, Luke the beloved Physician greeteth you. He was a Physician by profession, and after his conversion he accompanied Paul in his greatest dangers. Of these men here described, we might speak much, and handle their lives at large, but this is done by others, and this may suffice for the Interpretation of these verses.

We heard in the beginning of this Epistle, that Paul joined Timothy to him, as a joint Writer thereof, and directeth it to others, besides to Philemon, that they might be means and Mediators unto him; so in the winding up of the Epistle, he hath mustered together many others: by all which, he setteth upon Philemon, as it were, with an Army of Intercessors and Advocates, to soften and overcome his grieved and offended mind, and to incline him to mercy and compassion.

Moreover, this salutation giveth us some direction of the time when this Epistle was written. Touching the which time, there is some difference among the learned. Some are of opinion, that this Epistle was written after the second that he wrote to Timothy, and this reason is rendered, because in that Epistle it appeareth, that Timothy and Mark were not with him, and he willeth them to make speed to come unto him, Only Luke is with me: Take Mark and bring him with thee, for he is profitable unto me to Minister. But in this Epistle it is evident, that these men were come unto him. Seeing therefore, there he sendeth for them, and here they are found to be with him, it should seem that this Epistle is Written after the other.

This is the Reason urged by many, which seemeth to be of great force to persuade. But if we diligently mark it, and thoroughly consider of it, we shall find it to be too weak to bear the weight of this conclusion. For this present Epistle, as also that to the Colossians was written when he was first taken; the second to Timothy, when he was taken the second time. For Paul having appealed to Caesar from the partial dealing of the High-Priests, and the cruel persecution of his own nation, was brought to Rome in the beginning of Nero's reign, about the third or fourth year thereof. Now it is evident and known to all, that Nero in the five first years, was one of the most mild and merciful Princes; and as in his last years, he exceeded all men in Tyranny and Crueltie, so in his first, he passed all his predecessors in Mercy and Gentleness. In the beginning of his Empire, Paul pleaded his cause before him, and was delivered out of prison, and let go whether he would. But the rage of the enemies of the Gospel being endless, he was taken again about the end of Nero's reign, who waxed mad against Christian Religion, at which time he wrote the latter Epistle to Timothy, wherein he fore-telleth the approaching of his death, and the time of his dissolution, I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departing is at hand. Thus much touching the time when this Epistle was written.

Now, let us point out some general Observations out of these Verses that might be enlarged, and farther stood upon, if time would serve. First, we see the Apostle setteth down a salutation proceeding from others: which teacheth that salutations are an ordinary means ordained of God to nourish and cherish mutual love, and that union and conjunction which the members of Christ's body have one with another, who are only in body, & in regard of bodily presence severed one from another in this present life; whereas in heart they are joined together, and shall be hereafter both in soul and body.

Secondly, albeit the Apostle were a prisoner for the faithes sake, yet God doth not leave him alone, he hath A Fellow-prisoner joined with him, and many Fellow-helpers added unto him. And albeit he delighteth not himself in the imprisonment of another, but could rather wish him delivered, as appeareth by his words to Agrippa (who said he was almost persuaded to become a Christian,) I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me today, were both almost and altogether such as I am, except these bonds: yet notwithstanding the Company of the Godly is gracious and comfortable both in prosperity, and in adversity, both in prison, and out of prison. Thus it is set down by Luke, Acts 16, 25. when Paul was whipped and imprisoned, and his feet made fast in the stocks, he had Silas joined with him, and they two spent the night in praying and praising God together, teaching & admonishing themselves in Psalms and Hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with a grace in their hearts to the Lord, so that the prisoners heard them. Thus we see the endless Mercy of God, towards his afflicted and distressed Servants, he raiseth them up some comfort, and some Comforters, verifying the promise made to his Church, If I depart, I will send the Comforter unto you. He knoweth our infirmities, he seeth how ready we are to yield and slide back: & therefore as he strengtheneth us by others, so he maketh us means to strengthen others.

Thirdly, he calleth Epaphras a prisoner of Christ, as he also had called himself before in the beginning of this Epistle. The reason is, because he had preached Christ. Heereby we learn, that persecutions oftentimes follow the sincere preaching of the Gospel; not that it is the property of the Gospel, but the cause is the malice of such as will not embrace and receive the Gospel; and therefore, they hate and persecute those that believe in Christ, and give entertainment to the Gospel. This is it our Savior teacheth, Mat. 10, 34, 35. Think not that I am come to send peace into the earth, I came not to send peace, but the sword: for I am come to set a Man at variance against his Father, and the Daughter against the Mother, &c. and a man's enemies shall be they of his own household.

To this purpose he speaketh in another place, I am come to put fire on the earth, and what is my desire, if it be already kindled? The Gospel is the proper cause of peace among the godly, so it is the occasion of great trouble among the wicked. They are therefore much deceived, that make the Gospel the cause of all division and hurly-burlies that are in the Worlde. When any troubles arise, the preaching of the Gospel is accused to breed them, but this is a false imputation. The true cause, is the malice of Satan, and the fury of his Instruments, that cannot abide the Light of the Truth to shine among them. So then, let us not think it a strange thing, when we see such stirs and tumults arise, but Arm our selves with Patience; Learn to be Wise as Serpents, and Innocent as Doves, and condemn those that are the authors and beginners of those broils and contentions.

Fourthly, observe the Titles that he giveth unto our Lord and Savior, he describeth him by two Names; First, he calleth him Christ; then, he calleth him Jesus. Christ, signifieth as much as Anointed; Jesus, importeth as much as a Savior, who was so called, because he saveth his people from their sins. From whence, observe that Christ is the King, the Prophet, and the Priest of his Church, to govern us, to teach us, to Redeem us, to save us. This is his Office, for these Ends and Uses he was anointed of the Father with the Oil of Gladness above his fellows. This serveth to our great good, and the benefit of it is communicated unto us; he maketh us Kings and Priests to God his Father; he armeth us with power and strength against sin, the Flesh, the World, the Devil; and maketh us able to overcome them: thorough him we have access to the father, and may boldly appear in his sight, and offer up our Prayers with assurance, Yea he enableth us to offer up our selves, our souls, and bodies, an holy, lively, and acceptable Sacrifice unto him, which is our reasonable serving of him: he doth enstruct us in the will of his Father, enlighten us in the knowledge of the truth, and maketh us (as it were) his Household Disciples and Scholars, to reveal unto us all things needful for our salvation. Let us therefore confess him to be the only son of God, perfect God, and perfect Man, the sole Mediator between God and Man, and let us acknowledge no other Savior able to Redeem and ransom us, to pay so great a price, and to deliver us from so great wrath and destruction. If we make other Mediators, and set up other Saviors, we renounce the Mediation of Christ, and Salvation purchased by Christ. This pierceth the very Marrow, and entereth into the bowels of the Romish Religion, which setteth up other Mediators, and consequently establisheth a false Christ of their own, which indeed is no Christ, no Jesus, no Savior, no Redeemer?

Fifthly, observe with me, that speaking of Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, & Luke, he calleth them his fellow-helpers; whereby he putteth the Ministers of the Gospel, and all the Children of God in mind, to be helpers to the truth, and to further the preaching and propagation of the Gospel by all possible means that God hath enabled them. For this cause, the Apostle commendeth many of the faithful, Rom. 16, 3, 9. Greet Aquila and Priscilla my fellow-helpers in Christ Jesus. We must do all for the truth, and nothing against the truth.

This reproveth those that employ their wits, and bestow their strength, to hinder the truth, and the professors thereof. These have no part nor fellowship in the Ministration, nor in the sound profession of the Gospel, but are professed enemies to the faith of Christ. Moreover, this shall Minister unspeakable comfort unto us, to consider that we have been helpers to the truth, and furtherers of the Faith which is in Christ Jesus, we shall leave a good Name behind us, and receive and incorruptible Crown of eternal Glory.

Lastly, note with me, that when Paul wrote this Epistle, he was at Rome, and he joineth with him sundry others, which were the chief and principal, whose very names might carry some credit and authority to persuade Philemon in this matter which he undertook; yet in all this Epistle we have no mention of Peter, who is supposed to have lived there, to have died there, to have been Bishop there five and twenty years. He joineth to himself so many Assistants as he could, to obtain his suite. He writeth (as we heard before, from Rome) to have Onesimus pardoned, and he useth the name of Timothy to that purpose; why is Peter here forgotten?

Why doth he not join him with himself in the same Epistle, if he had been resident at Rome, as a good Bishop ought to have been? Again, we see he specifieth many by name, Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, and Luke: but we have no mention of Peter. And it is said, that Mark was the Disciple of Peter, and by his Commandment wrote his Gospel: was it fit to name the Disciple, and to forget the Master? to remember the members, and to forget the Head? To express meaner persons, and to omit the principal? Besides, he calleth these men his fellow-helpers; Paul was as the Master-workman and chief builder, they were his helpers and partners in the business. Was not Peter also one of his brethren, and either a fellow-prisoner, or a fellow-helper in the Gospel? Wherefore then is he concealed? Observe with me from hence, and by Conference of many other Scriptures, that Peters being at Rome, is an uncertain opinion, and an ungrounded assertion.

It was by composition agreed upon between Paul and Peter, that Peter should preach to the Jews, and Paul to the Gentiles; how then could Peter sit as bishop at Rome? Or if he preached to the Jews at Rome, how cometh it to pass that the christiā religion was strange, & in a manner unknown unto them when Paul came to Rome, as appeareth in the end of the Acts of the Apostles, where they say unto him, We will hear of thee what thou thinkest, for as concerning this Sect, we know that everywhere it is spoken against. Again, when Paul wrote to the Romaines, he willeth them to salute many particularly, and by name, both men and women: but he maketh no mention at all of Peter, which no doubt he would have done, if he had at that time also been at Rome. Furthermore, the Apostle Wrote many of his Epistles from the City of Rome (as we shown in the beginning of this Epistle) as for example; to the Galatians, Ephesians, Colossians, Phillippians, to Timothy, this to Philemon, and that other Epistle unto the Hebrews, (if it were his) and from thence, he sendeth many salutations, in the Name of many, that remained at Rome: Among whom, Peter is never mentioned, but his name and being there, is over-passed. Lastly, the Apostle testifieth, that while he was called forth to give an account of his Faith, All did forsake him, and none assisted him: wherefore, either Peter was not then at Rome, or if he were, he did shamefully forsake him. Thus then we conclude from these and such like Circumstances, that it cannot be gathered out of the holy Scriptures, that Peter was ever at Rome. Whereby we learn, that the Popish Religion is a doubtful and uncertain religion; their Faith is uncertain; their Hope is uncertain, their Heaven is uncertain. For, the supremacy of the Pope, and subjection to him, is made a fundamental point of Religion, and the believing of it necessary to salvation. Bellarmino a Cardinal of Rome, defining the Church, maketh it to be a Company of men, professing the faith, and partaking of the Sacraments, under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Rome, so that such as hold no Pope, are judged and censured to build upon a false foundation, and therefore to be no true Churches, no sound Catholics, no right Christians.

The chief Controuersie between us and the Papists, is, for the Popes Monarchy and Authority over the Vniuersal Church, which is maintained by many of them, as a material point, and necessary for everyone to hold that looketh to be saved. Which is an Opinion both absurd, and ridiculous, and unreasonable. The Church Triumphant in Heaven, is not subject to the Pope of Rome. The Church of the Old-Testament, was never subject to the Pope of Rome. The Church of the New-Testament, which was when Christ lived upon the earth, was not subject to the Pope of Rome. The Primitive Church, that was in the days of the Apostles, was not subject to the Pope of Rome. For during all this time, there was no Pope of Rome at all, and yet there was (during all this time) a Church; or else they must say, that the Triumphant Church, the Jewish Church, and the Christian Church, are no Churches at all.

Moreover, the necessity of subjecting every soul to this supposed supremacy, and pretended primacy, doeth blot out of the number of Churches; the East-Churches, and the South-Churches, and leaveth only the Roman Church, to whom the Title least of all belongeth, or at least, as little, as to any of the rest. Besides, at the death of every Pope, and in every vacancy of that Sea (which sometimes hath been no small time) the Church should fail and fall: for how should the faithful then be subject to the Bishop of Rome, when there is no Byshoppe of Rome at all in the World. Furthermore, when there falleth out a Schism, so that there are two or three Popes that are together by the ears for the Popedom and Prelacie, the people are uncertain to which of them to cleave, and whether of them to obey.

Lastly, it is false, that the members of the Church must be subject to the Pope, seeing he is no better, nor no other, then that Antichrist which the Scripture hath fore-shown; time hath discovered; and the faithful have felt and suffered. Thus then we have seen, that howsoever the Romanists make it a principal matter of faith, to put our heads under the Popes Girdle, to bow our knees, to kiss his holy feet, and to fear the Thunderbolts of his wrath, yet all his jurisdiction is besides the Scriptures; nay contrary to the Scriptures: seeing Peters Byshopprick and being at Rome is very uncertain. To say no more: If then it be uncertain whether Peter were ever at Rome, then it must also be uncertain, whether he were Bishop of Rome; and if it be uncertain whether he were ever Bishop of Rome, then it must also be uncertain whether the Pope be Bishop of Rome, and his successor in that Sea; and if the Popes succession and Dominion over the Church be uncertain, his Triple Crown shaketh, and beginneth to totter: all which weighty burdens, do hang by a twines-thread of Peters being at Rome, which hath no footstep or foundation in the Scriptures. True it is, we dare not directly and peremptorily say, that he was never at Rome; we know how hard a thing it is to prove a negative, yet it is more likely and probable, that he was never there, then that he was ever there; the Scriptures being Judges. Who would willingly travail in a blind and uncertain way, where he cannot be assured whether he go right or wrong? But such is the journey that the popish passengers enter into, they walk in unknown paths, and tread the Mazes of many doubtful steps.

The Popish Writers cannot agree in what year Peter came to Rome: One hath assigned one time; Another, pointeth unto another time: They agree not how many years he stayed there, when he departed from thence, how long he sate Bishop there, who succeeded in his place immediately after him; whether Clement, or Linus, or Cletus, or Anacletus. It is made of absolute necessity by them to receive the Saeraments; yet by their Doctrine, no man can certainly know, whether he be partakers of them, or not, inasmuch as they teach, that all standeth upon the Priests intention, which can be known to none but to God and himself. Thus we see, how weak and woeful a Religion the Romish Religion is, and upon what silly and sandie foundations it resteth. Let us leave these uncertain by paths, and tread in the beaten way of the Scripture, which cannot deceive: let us build our faith upon the rock which cannot be shaken, and forsake that Church that goeth a way she knoweth not, and leadeth her Children she knoweth not whether, and teacheth them to receive she knoweth not what, and believeth those things which she cannot prove. Thus much for the general Observations.

[There salute thee Epaphras my Fellow-prisoner, &c.]

These Verses do contain mutual salutations, with kind and Christian wishes one toward another. This is the winding up of the whole matter, wherein he reporteth the friendly greetings of the faithful which they sent to Philemon. This we see to be very common in the beginning of every Epistle. From hence we learn, that courteous speeches, and friendly salutations, are to be used of one Christian toward another, whether present or absent. All kind and courteous dealing ought to be shown mutually toward each other.

When Melchizedek met Abraham, he blessed him, Gen. 14. When the Angel came unto Gideon, he saluted him thus, The Lord be with thee, thou valiaunt Man. When Boaz in harvest time came among his Reapers, he said unto them, The Lord be with you; and they answered him, The Lord bless thee; that is, so soon as he saw the Laborers that reaped his fields, he began kindly to salute them, and to wish them well: they likewise returned the like answer back again (as an Echo) unto him.

The Angel Gabriell being sent of God unto the Virgin Marie, he said unto her, Luke 1, 28. Hayle, thou that art freely beloved: the Lord is with thee, blessed art thou amongst Weomen. When Christ sent out his Apostles, and gave them Commission to preach to the lost Sheep of the house of Israel, and afterward, appointed seventy Disciples to second their Labors, he willed them to salute the places whether they came, Into whatsoever Citty or Town ye shall come, enquire who is worthy in it, and there abide till ye go thence: and when ye come into an house, salute the same, and first say, Peace be to this house. That which Christ commandeth his Disciples, himself practiseth toward his Disciples; for when he appeared to his Disciples after his resurrection, he said, Peace be unto you. The Apostle writing to the Romaines, spendeth the greatest part of the sixteenth Chapter in Salutations & Commendations sent too and fro among the Saints. Thus he concludeth another of his Epistles, Finally (Brethren) fare ye well: be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of Love and Peace shall be with you: greet one another with an holy kiss; all the Saints salute you. All these examples teach us this as an undoubted truth, that the use of kind and courteous speeches are beseeming the servants of God, and becometh their profession.

We shall not need to seek far to find out the true causes and reasons of this Doctrine. First, our well wishing one to another is a fruit of our love, and a means to maintain and continue love among us. To this purpose the Apostle Peter, doth command, not only that they should salute one another, but such as they loved, and such as loved them, Chap. 5. Greet ye one another with the kiss of love. If we would maintain love, we must wisely and carefully entertain such helps as may further us in the perfourmance of that duty, whereof this that now we speak off is one: so that we are to express our inward love by outward tokens, to the end it may be seen and appear unto others.

Secondly, our salutations are remembrances of our care and good affections toward these whom we greet well. It is a sign that we are not forgetful of them, but do greatly regard and respect them. This doth the Apostle Paul signify, Colos. 4, 12. Epaphras the servant of Christ, which is one of you, saluteth you, and always striveth for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect and full in all the will of God. Where we see, he joineth these two things together, as depending one upon the other, his saluting of them, and his praying for them.

Lastly, to desire the good of others from the heart, is both a fruit of the spirit, and a good sign and testimony to our own selves that we are chosen of God to eternal life. To this purpose the Apostle numbering up many notable fruits of the spirit, maketh mention of Love, Peace, Gentleness, Goodness, meekness, Long Suffering. And in another place, he exhorteth them as the elect of God, holy, and beloved, to put on the bowels of mercies, Kindnesse, Humbleness of mind, Meekness, Long-Suffering, Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another. So then, if we shall consider that courteous speeches are tokens of love, remembrances of our affection, fruits of the spirit, and testimonies of our election, we may conclude, that it is the duty of one Church to wish well to another, and of one Christian to speak kindly to another.

We have heard the Doctrine confirmed, but before we come to the uses that arise from hence, it shall not be amiss briefly to answer an Objection or two that may stand in our way, which may seem to restrain and forbid that which here is commanded and allowed. We read in the book of the Kings, that when Elisha sent his servant Gehazi to the Shunamites house, he bad him if he met any, not to salute him: and if any man saluted him, he should answer him nothing. And when Christ sent out his disciples to preach, he gave them the same charge, and willed them to Salute no man by the way. Where the duty which is here approved, may seem there to be reprov'd. I answer, the drift and scope of those places is to be considered, and not the bare words to be urged. The intent of the Prophet speaking to his servant, and of Christ to his Disciples, is to enjoin those persons to omit for that time the practice of duties of common courtesy and civility, so far forth as they might stay or any way delay the performance of weightier affairs enjoined unto them. We must therefore understand the meaning of them comparatively, as if it had been said: Rather then you should any way hinder the quick dispatch and speedy practice of that business which is laid upon you, speak to no man in the way. So then, the meaning of the places is not simply and absolutely to forbid men to salute others, but so far to require the omitting of it, as it should be a let and an impediment unto them in doing their duties.

Secondly, we read in the Apostle John, in his second Epistle, If there come any, and bring not this Doctrine, receive him not to house, neither bid him God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed, is partaker of his evil. Here again seemeth to be another prohibition, contrary to the precept and Injunction in this place. I answer, this place doth not forbid salutations & courtesy of man to man, but familiarity and acquaintance with Heretics, even such joining and closing with them, as may seem to give the least applause and approbation to their bad proceedings, and wicked opinions. Thus much of the loosing of these knottes, and answering the Objections that seem to contradict the Doctrine taught out of this place. Now let us handle the Uses.

First, we learn, that courtesy, with civil, gentle, friendly, & soft speeches, are to be entertained of the servants of God. This is it which Solomon teacheth in sundry places of the Proverbs, A soft answer putteth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger. And Cha. 25. A Prince is pacified by staying of anger, and a soft tongue breaketh the bones. This is the commandment that the Apostle giveth, Be ye courteous one to another, and tender-hearted. This is the commendation of Gideon, against the rage of the Ephraemites, that were grievously incensed, and sharply set against him; he answered them mildly and gently, and thereby their spirits abated towards him. The like we see in Abigail, when David's wrath was kindled against her husband and household, she pacified him by her loving and lowly answer, so that he blessed God that sent her, and her that counseled him, and her counsel that restrained him from shedding blood. A fire is soonest quenched by water, and anger is soonest appeased by gentleness. Let us plant this in the Garden of our hearts, and learn to give good speeches one to another, and show a friendly Countenance (even to them that wrong us, and abuse us) without any purpose or desire to revenge.

This is a Virtue hard to be found in these days among the sons of men, they cannot speak well one of another. This gentleness that teacheth us to deal courteously toward each other, is thinly sown in the furrows of our hearts. Wherefore, we must know that humanity and courteous dealing are not (as some imagine) excluded from Christians, as if nothing should be in them, but rigor and austerity. Indeed they are to deal roughly and rigorously with willful and wicked men, that are offensive and unruly, but we must be gentle, meek, and lowly toward such as are willing to be instructed. Hence then it appeareth, that our common forms of salutation are commendable, both practiced by word of mouth, and used in writing, standing upon the warrant of God's word, and example of the faithful. Let us therefore accustom our tongues to civility, to blessing, & wishing all good one to another. This becometh our profession, and witnesseth to all the world, that we are of pure conversation.

Secondly, this Doctrine serveth for reproof of diverse and sundry abuses that are too rife and common among us. It seemeth a light and ridiculous thing to many, to salute, and to be saluted, but it is of great force, and availeth much to the obtaining and getting of good will. It is a point of courtesy and humanity to salute others, and to pray for them. Let no man say these are very small and slender matters to be spoken of, and stood upon. We must acknowledge that our obedience is to be shown even in the least, and not in the greatest matters only. And a true Christian is to be seen and known, when he will yield in the practice of lesser points, and such as are not of greatest importance. Wherefore, seeing every Christian must thus behave himself, it reproveth diverse sorts of men.

First, such as are so strongly possessed, and rankly over-grown with malice and revenge, that they neither will salute such as they meet, nor answer such as salute them. These men are dainty of their speech, and as sparing of their words, as if every word of their mouth were worth a wedge of Gold. Hence it is, that many stand upon terms of their reputation, and look to have others bend unto them; they say, Why should I salute him first? Or wherefore should I begin to speak unto him? Shall I yield myself or bring myself under him to be made his Foot-stool? I will not stoop or bow down: he hath first wronged me, let him therefore first seek to be reconciled: and if I should speak to him, I know he will not answer me, nor look toward me. These are goodly pretences and colourable shiftings to maintain Hatred, Displeasure, and privy Grudgings one against another, and cause us to pinch courtesy who shall begin to deal curteously one with another. But art thou resolved, that thou wilt not begin first, and as it were break the ye, but wait until another begin to salute thee? Thou must consider that the very Publicans and Sinners do the same, as our Savior teacheth Math. 5, 46, 47. If ye love them which love you, what reward shall ye have? Do not the Publicans even the same? And if ye be friendly to your Brethren only, what singular thing do ye? Do not even the Publicans likewise? Wilt thou not yield and give place first? Be constant, and settled, and vnmoouable in a good thing: but in keeping an old grudge or a new displeasure, a goodman ought not to be stubborn and obstinate to continue therein forever. Doest thou think it a shame and reproach to thee, to change thy mind. Who doth so esteem and judge? Doth God? No, he accounteth it thy greatest honor to yield to that which he commandeth. Do the godly among whom thou livest? No, thou shalt rejoice them, and give good example to other, and and heap coals of fire upon their heads whom thou hast offended, and give a sound testimony of thy unfeigned love to thy brother that hath offended thee. Hath he hurt thee first, and done thee wrong? Be it so: he hath done evil, every man will confess it, no man will deny it, no man can defend it. Do thou good to him again for his evil, and provoke him by thy example, and do that which becometh thee, without looking wherein he faileth.

Let us seek to be like our Heavenly Father, who maketh his Sun to arise upon the evil and good: and sendeth Rain on the just and unjust. It is a common thing in such as are rich and mighty, to pass by the poor, and never or seeldome vouchsafe them a word of their mouth which costeth them nothing. It is a praise and commendation to be honorable, yet humble. A proud heart testified by a scornful eye and a silent tongue, is to be reprov'd, wheresoever and in whomsoever it be found. On the other side, it is a great encouragement to men of the lower sort, when such as are great and mighty in the world, do kindly salute them, and friendly speak unto them: they are greatly affected at it, they are moved to love them, and stirred up to be cheerful in well doing, when they see they are regarded, and not despised, or accounted base in their eyes, nor respected as their Foot-stool.

Secondly, such as are reprov'd make an outward show of the performance of this duty, but inwardly are as far, and some-times farther from the right practice of it then the former. These are such as are true Christians in name, but not in deed: in show, but not in substance; in word, but not in heart. These have Charity in their lips, but enmity in their souls. They speak of peace, but they nourish hatred. A man would judge them to be the flower of courtesy, and to have all couplements of humanity in them, and yet notwithstanding, all this is but a mask and vizard to color their hypocrisy. These are a most vile and wicked kind of men, that have sweet and sugared tongues, but malicious and envious hearts, and full of venom. This we see in Joab, who took Abner aside in the Gate to speak with him peaceably, and smote him under the fifth rib, that he died: and likewise he dealt with Amasa, he said to him, Art thou in health my Brother, and took him by the Beard with the right hand, to kiss him: but with the other hand he smote him with the sword, and shed out his bowels to the ground. The like salutation we see in Judas, who had given the multitude that came with swords and staves from the High-Priests and Elders of the people, a Token, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that is he, lay hold on him: and forthwith he came to Jesus and said, God save thee Master, and kissed him. Thus he betrayed the son of man with a kiss.

We must have our words and hearts go together, and not one wander and stray from the other. We must not have our words softer then Oil, & hide swords and spears within us. This is cruel and deceitful dealing; this is far from true Christianity; this is far from that plain and simple dealing that ought to be in us. Such men are the most dangerous and pernicious enemies that are, they are hardly known, and therefore hardly avoided. One of these false hearted Brethren, is worse then an hundred open & professed adversaries. A pit which is covered, so that thou canst not see it, is more likely to work thy hurt, and cause thee to fall into it, then that which is manifest to be seen. Let us therefore remember, that our words be always seasoned and accompanied with truth. Let our mouth speak as the heart thinketh; and let us take heed of lying, cogging, cozening, glozing, smoothing, and dissembling, which are the works of the devil, & the fruits of the flesh, and the badges of Hypocrites.

Thirdly, as we have heard that they are to be reprov'd, that disdain to speak to others; and such as are content to use friendly greetings in word, but their hearts go not with them: so likewise, such are condemned as use unkind and vncourteous speeches; nay foul and unclean, ungodly and profane communication. This the Apostle teacheth, Ephes, 4. Let all bitterness and anger, and wrath, crying, and evil speaking be put away from you, with all maliciousness. Such was the snappish answer of Cain, Am I my Brothers keeper? So for this cause Nabell being a churlish & currish man, is concluded to be a fool and a wicked man.

This uncivil & bitter dealing, is a great sign, and a certain note of an unregenerate and carnal man. Let us beware of all railing & rotten speeches. The mouth is the Messenger of the heart, and from the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh. A filthy tongue, argueth a filthy heart: an vnbrideled tongue, a licentious heart. A poisoned tongue, that casteth out banning and cursing, doth manifest a cursed and corrupt heart. The tongue that raueth and rageth beyond all measure, and belcheth out blasphemies, and vomiteth out pocky and plaguy speech (as it were) the over-charging of a loathsome stomach, doth show (be it spoken with reverence) a pocky and plaguy heart.

It is a shame almost to speak those things, I will not say which these men do in secret, but which they speak openly, publicly, evidently. And yet (alas) how common a thing is it (when men and women are a little heated and provoked) to wish all evil to fall upon the persons of their Brethren and their Cattle; nay sometimes upon their own wives, their own children, their own Servants, their own Cattle, crying out a vengeance on them, a plague of God to come upon them, a Murraine take them, the Devil of hell go with thee, and such like; which come from an uncircumcised mouth, nay from an uncircumcised and unregenerate. Neither, let any allege for the excuse of their cursed and wretched speeches, It is a custom they have gotten, but that they mind and mean no such thing, whatsoever they speak; for first, this is a cursed custom: and a custom in sinning, the greater it is, the worse it is. The more thou doest accustom thy tongue unto it, the harder it is to be left. Our Savior teacheth, that A good man out of the good Treasure of his heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of an evil

Treasure bringeth forth evil thing: But I say unto you, that of every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof at the day of Judgment. If then we must reckon and account at the end of the World and of our life for idle words; what madness is it for us to cast out and disgorge blasphemous, wicked, and cursed speeches, which will bring upon us horrible plagues and heavy punishments to be suffered in hell fire? Hence it is, that Christ saith in the words following, By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned. Here-unto the Apostle James agreeth, Chap. 1. If any man among you seemeth Religious, and refraineth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's Religion is vain. Neither let them say, they think not evil, they mean not as they speak: for this doth not take away the evil, but rather increase it, in as much as they add sin unto sin, hypocrisy to impiety; as it were drunkenness unto thirst. Let such acquaint their hearts with blessing, not with cursing: and strive against their corruptions which are grown to an head and have gotten a custom in them, remembering the saying of the Prophet, Psal. 109. As he loved Cursing, so shall it come unto him: and as he loved not blessing, so shall it be far from him: as he clothed himself with Cursing like a raiment, so shall it come into his Bowels like water, and like Oil into his Bones. Let us therefore all of us put in practice the precept of the Apostle, Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouths, but that which is good, to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers. Where he declareth, that corrupt speech should be to the ear, as unsavory meat to the stomach. A rotten Sheep is known by his bleating, so is an unregenerate heart by his words. Wherefore as the taste abhorreth rotten meat, so should our minds loath and detest rotten and irreverent talk.

Lastly, seeing we are taught to use all gentle and courteous communication, and all loving salutations and well-wishings one toward another; this teacheth us, that we must all diligently study and practice the government of the tongue, to order it aright and in due manner. This is a worthy study, it is an hard study, it is a profitable study. Hence it is, that the Prophet saith, Psal. 34. What man is he that desireth life, and loveth long days for to see good? Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips that they speak no guile. To this purpose he speaketh in another Psalm, I thought, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue, I will keep my mouth bridled, while the wicked is in my fight. The difficulty and hardness of this study, the Apostle James signifieth and setteth down, when he calleth the tongue a world of wickedness, and an unruly evil, Chap. 3. The whole nature of Beasts and of Birds, and of creeping things, and things of the Sea, is tamed and hath been tamed by the nature of man: but the tongue can no man tame. The profit of this study, together with the hardness, is noted by the same Apostle in the same Chap. If any man sin not in word, he is a perfect man, and able to bridle all the body.

Now because it is so excellent and difficult a study to guide and govern the tongue aright, we must know, that there is an Art and Science thereof to be learned, and diverse rules and precepts to be observed; that we may know when to speak, and when to hold our peace. There is no Art whatsoever attained unto, without knowledge, practice, and experience. The first lesson that we must learn in this study, is, to crave of God his assisting grace, that may make this labor easy, and the work pleasant unto us: without which, we shall find it impossible to hold in the Reins of our unruly and untamed tongues.

Hence it is that the Prophet saith; Set a watch (ô Lord) before my mouth, and keep the door of my lips: Declaring thereby, that of our selves we are not able to govern our tongues. And again he saith else-where; O Lord, open thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth thy praise. If God do not open our mouths, we can never order our tongues as we ought. Before we speak, we must diligently consider what we speak, and to what end. The Wiseman telleth us, That he which answereth a matter before he hear it, it is folly and shame to him.

To this purpose the Apostle teacheth us, To be slow to speak, and swift to hear. This virtue appeared notably in Elihu, Job 32. Who waited till Job had spoken, for they were more ancient in years then he. In our speaking, we must be careful that our words be gracious, and seasoned with wisdom, truth, reverence, modesty, meekness, and sobriety, as it were with Salt, which are contrary to the foolish, rotten, and graceless talk that aboundeth in our days; wherein men are grown to be very Beasts, Their Throat is an open Sepulcher, they use their tongues to deceit, the Poison of Asps is under their Lips, their Mouth is full of cursing and bitterness. Nay, the venom and Poison of their tongues, is worse then the poison of Serpents: and yet they would think themselves greatly wronged if they should be charged to be as a Brood of Adders, and a Generation of Vipers. For who knoweth not that the Serpent cannot hurt a man, except he be present to see him and bite him: but such as have not learned to rule the tongue that is unruly, and to govern it from breaking out into ungodly and cursed speaking (which is the Devils Language) do hurt men as well absent as present; as well far off, as near at hand; as much when they are from them, as when they are with them. The holy use of the tongue is the language of Canaan, which we must all covet to speak, that it may be ordered according to the Word and will of GOD. But when the tongue, which is an excellent Member, given unto us of God to praise and glorify his Name, is abused, it is kindled by the fire of Hell; according to the saying of the Apostle James, Chapter 3. The Tongue is Fire; yea, a World of wickedness: so is the Tongue set among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of Nature, and it is set on Fire of Hell. This he setteth forth more at large in the words following, and exhorteth us, that the harder it is to rule the tongue, the more care we should use in the government of it, and apply it to the honor of God, and the good of our Neighbor.

Hence it is, that he reproveth those that one while are blessing, another while are cursing with it, blowing sometimes hot, and sometimes cold, sometimes praying to God, and anon railing at, and reviling their Brethren; There-with (saith he) bless we GOD, even the Father; and therewith curse we Men, which are made after the similitude of GOD: out of one mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing: my Brethren, these things ought not to so to be. Doth a Fountain send forth out of one place sweet Water and Bitter? &c. Let us then use such meekness and moderation in our speech, as that we do not break out into Choller: let our answers be soft and mild, that anger be not kindled, nor increased, nor continued. If any shall revile us, and rage against us, our duty is to bless, and not to rail. This is the Commandment of Christ, I say unto you, love your Enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that hurt you and persecute you, &c. Thus doth the Apostle Peter speak, Love as Brethren: be pitiful, be courteous, not rendering evil for evil, neither rebuke for rebuke: but contrariwise bless, knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should be heirs of blessing. If the least occasion of strife and contention arise among men, it cannot be decided; nay, nor heard without such bitter tants & reproaches, as ought not to be, nor to break out among Brethren. We ought to be of a patient Nature, and follow the example of God, who beareth with us all. The Apostle Jude affirmeth, That Michaell the Archangel, when he strove against the Devil, and disputed about the body of Moses, durst not blame him with cursed speaking, but said; The Lord rebuke thee. Where we see, that the Arch-angel abstained from all railing, having to do with the Devil, the greatest enemy of God and his people. Be it, that we have to deal with bad men, and such as are notoriously evil, yet we must not take liberty to our selves to use reviling speeches, to brawle, and contend, seeing the Angel would not do it, and he would not do it against a worse adversary then we have, or can have any. We must commit revenge unto God, who hath said; Uengeance is mine, I will repay.

[Marcus, Aristarchus, &c.]

Touching Mark mentioned in this place, we have spoken already, and declared out of the Acts of the Apostles, that he was a Jew of the circumcision, and called to be an Evangelist, who also wrote one of the Gospels as he had learned of Peter. It appeareth, that his Parents were well acquainted with the Apostles, and received them into their house; whereby it came to pass, that Mark himself was converted to the Faith, and endued with the gifts of the Holy-Ghost, so that he was chosen to be a Fellow-helper unto them, and travailed with them into diverse partes of the Worlde. True it is, he did at one time forsake Paul in Pamphilia, and shrunk in his shoulders from the trouble: yet notwithstanding this weakness, he ceased not afterward to labor in the preaching and propagation of the Gospel; and albeit Paul would not take him with him into their company, Who went not with them to the work, yet Barnabas took him, and sailed unto Cyprus. He was present with the Apostles at the first and famous Council holden at Jerusalem, and heard the matters debated and disputed among them. We see here in this place, and other places of the Scripture, that he had reconciled himself to Paul, and blotted out the infamy of his backwardness and backsliding; and therefore he is accepted again among them, so that they gave unto him the right hand of fellowship.

From hence we learn (this Scripture being compared with other) that it is required of us to have a care and compassion toward the weak, not utterly to cast off such as have fallen and failed in any duty. When we see any not so constant in the truth as they ought, and we desire, we must not by and by shake them off, or stand aloof from them, but rather strengthen and encourage them, and make much of them. This practice is commanded unto us in sundry places. The Apostle exhorteth hereunto; Him that is weak in the Faith receive unto you, but not for Controuersies of disputations: Why dost thou condemn thy Brother, or why dost thou despise thy Brother? And in another place of the same Epistle, We which are strong, ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please our selves. To this purpose he writeth to the Thessalonians, We desire you, Brethren, admonish them that are out of order: comfort the feeble-minded: bear with the weak: be patient toward all men. To these Commandments, we may add sundry examples of the faithful, that have given us an example to follow. But first let us see the most perfect example of all, the example of Christ Jesus our Lord, of whom it was prophesied thus; A bruised Reede shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he bring forth judgment unto victory. This appeareth, in his loving calling of all unto him that are weary and heavy laden, promising to ease them, and refresh them: so that he refused not the company of Publicans and Sinners. When Aquila and Priscilla had heard Apollos, who was weak in knowledge, They took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly. The like we see in Paul toward the incestuous Corinthian, whom he would have received again into the bosom of the Church, and admitted into the company and society of the faithful. All which commandments and examples do evidently prove unto us this truth, that such as are weak in the faith are not to be cast off, but rather cherished and encouraged.

See the farther confirmation here of by force of reason drawn from the nature of God, from the members of the Church, from the person of such as are weak. First, if we consider the gracious and merciful dealing of God toward such as err of frailty and infirmity, that he is both willing and able to strengthen and confirm them, we shall be put in mind thereby of our own duty. The Apostle writing to the Romans Chap. 14. and exhorting them not to shun, but to take into their company him that is weak in the faith, giveth this as a reason, He shall be established, for God is able too make him stand. If then, God will establish them, we must make much of them: and if he will make them stand, we must not thrust them down.

Secondly, it is required of all the members of the Church to have a special care not only of the strong, but also of the feeble partes. We see how it standeth in the members of our body, The eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor the head again to the feet, I have no need of you: yea, much rather those members of the body which seem to be more feeble, are necessary, &c. Now as it is in the natural body, that the chief members have a care of the least, so it ought to be in the mystical body, wherein the faithful should have the same care one for another. Add heerevnto that we are commanded to exhort and admonish one another, according as we see them to have need.

Thirdly, we must take heed least by our rigorous and austere dealing, the weak brother be discouraged and driven from the faith. It is no wisdom to lay a great and heavy load upon the back of a weak Beast, least his back be broken, and the burden miscarry, and the Master be disappointed. To this purpose it is, that the Apostle, persuading the Corinthians to take unto them the incestuous person whom they had put out from among them, saith: Ye ought now to forgive him, and comfort him, least the same should be swallowed up with overmuch heaviness: wherefore I pray you that you would confirm your love toward him. No man almost is so unmerciful to his poor Beast, but he considereth what he is able to bear. Vnseasonable severity can do no good, but much harm. Seeing therefore God is able to establish the weak, seeing the partes of the Church must have a care one of another, and lastly, seeing the feeble minded are not to be discouraged, in all these respects we may conclude, that the weak in knowledge, in faith, or in obedience, are not to be despised, but rather to be instructed, strengthened, and confirmed.

Let us come to the uses, and handle them as briefly as we can. First, this serveth to reprove those that do not only passover, but contemn and despise such as any way come behind them. If they see a man weak or feeble, they are so far from helping of him up, that they are ready to disgrace him and cast him down. These are like to them that are described in the Prophet, who, together with Hypocrisy nourish pride in themselves and join unto it contempt to others, Which say, Stand apart, come not near to me, for I am holier then thou. Or like unto the Pharisee mentioned in the Gospel who prayed thus with himself, O God, I thank thee that I am not as other men, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this Publican. If a man have one of his eyes, or legs weaker then the other, will he reject or neglect it, and not rather look to it, and seek to strengthen it, and cure it? Whē the fire is going out, we are wont not to cast water upon it, but to thro on more Coals, or to bring more Wood to kindle it. When the body is feeble and sickly, we do not use to starve it, or stifle it; but to cherrish it, to diet it, and keep it warm. So ought it to be in the members of Christ's body, when we see any stand at a stay, and as it were begin to pine and languish, we should bring them home into the Sheepfold of Christ: when we see any wounded, we should bind up their wounds, and pour in Oil and Balm to refresh them: we must seek them that are lost, and gather them that are dispersed. As for those that discourage and discountenance such as are of humble and broken harts, and by their unseasonable severity bring them to despair, let them know, that they are no better then the very Instruments of the Devil, who are hired as Journey-men to do his work, and do usurp the very office of the Devil. He is the accuser, hater, and persecutor of the faithful, but especially he seeketh to undermine the weak, and to swallow them up in the quick sandes of desperation, without help or hope. In this consideration the Apostle moveth the Corinthians to forgive the incestuous person, saying; To whom ye forgive anything, I forgive also: for verily, if I forgave anything, to whom I forgave it, for your sakes forgave I it in the sight of Christ, least Satan should circumvent us, for we are not ignorant of his enterprises. Wherefore, as God hath appointed comfort to his afflicted and contrite servants, so they are justly to be taxed, that show rigor, when they should show mercy, and draw out the sword when they should put it up. Of these merciless men, doth the holy man Job oftentimes complain, who when he lacked and looked for comfort, but could find none; he was as one mocked of his Neighbor, and crieth out (in the extremity of his sorrow) of his friends, Miserable comforters are ye all. Thus it fareth with many of God's dear Children, and our poor Brethren, when as thorough great anguish of soul, and vexation, they call (as Job once did) for comfort, Have pity upon me: have pity upon me (O ye my Friends) for the hand of God hath touched me: yet their acquaintance are strangers unto them, their neighbors have forsaken them, their brethren are removed far from them, and their familiars have forgotten them.

True it is, there is a time of severity and sharpness, and such as are obstinate and intractable, as an untamed Heifer, are to be terrified with sharp handling, that they may be made fear. But, there is a difference to be made between sinner and sinner, and the servants of God must discern aright between Offender and Offender, not judging of all alike, nor dealing with all alike, according to the Doctrine and direction of the Apostle Jude, Have compassion of some, in putting difference: and other save with fear, pulling them out of the fire, &c. This Wisdom we ought all to crave, that we may do things in due season, that we may not purge humors when we should restore Nature; neither yet go about to heal, when we should cut and lance.

The Wiseman to this purpose, hath a worthy saying, Proverbs 25, 11. A word spoken in his place, is like Apples of Gold, with pictures of Silver. Let us not be in the number of such, As with our lies make sad the heart of the righteous, whom the Lord hath not made sad: nor strengthen the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life. Let us take heed, that it be not justly and truly spoken of us, which the Prophet chargeth upon the Shepherdes of Israel, The weak have ye not strengthened, the sick have ye not healed: neither have ye bound up the broken, nor brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost, but with cruelty and with rigor have ye ruled them, &c. God will require an account of us touching his Sheep, and such as we despise, he accounteth and respecteth as most dear and precious in his sight.

Secondly, must we have a respect to the weak? Then we must acknowledge it to be our duty, to cherrish such good things as we see in any of our Brethren, remembering the saying of our Savior, Math. 18, 33. Oughtest not thou also to have had pity on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity on thee? God doth show mercy and pity upon us; and therefore, if we will be his Children, we must not be unlike our heavenly Father. Such is the state and condition of men, that whethersoever we turn us, we cannot but see some of our Brethren feeble and fainting, and ready to sink under the burden; so that they are ready to perish, unless we put under our hand to uphold them. In this respect, so many as are members of the Church, ought to be so many Physicians one to another, that we may be means of curing and comforting one another. We are charged to be keepers of them, to look unto them, and by all good means to tender their good. It is an excellent precept given by the Apostle, Gal. 6, 1, 2. Brethren, if a man be suddenly taken in any offense, ye which are spiritual, restore such one with the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, least thou also be tempted: bear ye one another's burden, and so fulfill the Law of Christ. Where we see the Apostle urgeth us to this duty by putting us in mind of our own infirmity. We so stand today, as that we are ready to fall tomorrow; nay, we continue this hour, that we are ready to give over the next. Yea, such is the mercy of God oftentimes toward such as are weak ones, that when he hath made them once to see their own frailties, he maketh them at the last stronger, and more steadfast in the Faith, then such as seemed to be more forward, and many degrees before them. How weak was Nicodemus? He came to Jesus by night at the first, he had a good desire to be instructed, but he was ignorant in the principles of Religion, he durst not show himself openly to be his Disciple for fear of the Jews.

The like we might say of Joseph of Arimathea, another Disciple of Christ, (but secretly to avoid danger;) notwithstanding God did so bless them both with increase of strength, and the spirit of courage and boldness, that the little light of Grace and spark of Faith that was in them, did so shine and break out into such a flame, that they were not ashamed to profess themselves to be his Disciples: when the rest forsook him, they begged his body of Pilate, they wrapped it in linen clothes, with Myrrh, and Alloes, and sweet Odours, and bestowed the honor of burial upon him. Thus it falleth out oftentimes, that they which are first are last, and the last are first. We know not what storms and Tempestes hang over our own heads, and what perilous times may come upon us: we know not what weakness we shall show in them, howe great the Rebellion of the Flesh will be, and what comfort we shall want our selves. The Prophet pronounceth him Blessed, that judgeth Wisely of the poor, and promiseth that the Lord shall deliver him in the time of trouble. If we have any feeling of this happiness, or have any Faith in our hearts touching this promise, let us make it manifest, by seeking the good of our weak Brethren. It is an hiddeous and horrible cruelty and out-rage by our want of mercy, and of feeling their infirmities, to hinder the salvation of any one for whom Christ died.

Hence it is that the Apostle saith, Rom. 15, 2, 3. Let every man please his Neighbor, in that which is good, to edification: for Christ also would not please himself, but as it is Written, The rebukes of them that rebuked thee, fell on me. It cost a great price to Redeem a soul, and to bring it from Death to Life; from Hell to Heaven; and therefore, we must use all means (wherewith the Lord shall enable us) to comfort such as are Comfortlesse, by the Comfort where-with we our selves are comforted of God. There is no Man but desireth to find Peace and Comfort in himself. What is this life of ours without it? If a man should live many thousand years upon the face of the earth, and have experience of nothing but sorrow, anguish, misery, and vexation of Spirit, so that he could feel no quietness, no rest, no consolation, no tranquility in these days of his Pilgrimage: would he not desire to be out of such a life, and prefer death before it? Do we then wish for peace? And would we find comfort? The greatest comfort in the World that can come unto us, and refresh and cheer up our Souls, is to win and save Souls. Blessed are we, if we have been Instruments to gain but one Soul unto God. It is the greatest gain; it is the best Traffique; it is the sweetest Marchandize. It shall be said unto us in the last day; Thou good and faithful Servant, well done: thou hast been faithful over little, I will make thee Ruler over much, enter into thy Masters joy. Let us set this before our eyes, and consider before hand the price of the reward, when the time of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord.

Lastly, seeing God hath such a care of them that are weak, that he would not have them cut off, but cared for of all men: this ought to serve as a notable encouragement unto them, to labor to grow in Grace, and to increase more and more, that they may proceed from strength to strength, and so come to a perfect man in Christ Jesus. True it is, there are degrees of Faith, all have not one measure of Grace; and yet the least measure, if it be but as a grain of Mustard-seed, is of power to save our Souls. If there be wrought in us by the sanctifying Spirit of God, the beginnings and seeds of Faith; to wit, an humbling of our selves under the burden of our sins, an acknowledgement and feeling that we stand in need of Christ, an hungering and longing desire to be made partaker of Christ and all his merrits, and a flying to the Throne of Grace from the sentence of the Law, troubling the conscience, trembling under the same: if these preparations (as it it were ploughings up of the furrows of our hearts) be found in us, God will not cast us away, but make this weak measure of Grace to be effectual to salvation. This is a sweet comfort to all saint hearts, that are every foot like to sink down, and as it were to give up the Ghost. This ought to be a forcible means to work thankfulness in them, when in the examination of their hearts, they shall find the least measure of Grace settled in them, and know their merciful Father willing to acknowledge it, to accept it, and to reward it. Not that we should flatter our selves in our wants, or content our selves in our weakness, to stand always at one stay: but hereby to be brought forward in well-doing, and to run the race with all cheerfulness that is set before us.

This a notable sign of a true and sincere heart, when we feel our strength to come every day unto us, and an access to be added to our former course. For if we desire to be better and better, and deal as men that run in a race, who stand not still in the mid-way, but press with might and main to the mark: this is an infallible note of a sincere heart. This is it which the Apostle testifieth. Phil. 3, 14, 15. Brethren, I count not myself, that I have attained to it, but one thing I do: I forget that which is behind, and endeavor myself unto that which is before, And follow hard toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. It is the goodness of God to accept the small measure of Faith that we bring unto him. This granteth not liberty unto us to do nothing, to stir neither hand nor foot, or to content our selves that we go not backward. For we must all know and understand, that the beginnings of grace are deceitful and counterfeit, unless there be a growth and increase.

The kingdom of Heaven is like to a grain of Mustard seed, which at the first is so small and little, that it is scarce discerned, but after that it is cast into the ground of a prepared and purified heart, it rooteth deeply, it groweth speedily, it spreadeth exceedingly. It is like unto Leaven, which a woman taketh and hideth in three pecks of Meale, till all be Leauened. The Master delivering his Talents unto his servants that he had called, saith unto them, Occupy until I come; he doth not bid them hide them in the earth, Luke 19, 13. Hereunto cometh the exhortation that Paul giveth unto Timothy, who had greatly profited in godliness, and was brought up in the understanding of the holy Scriptures from a child, Chapter. 1. I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God which is thee, by the putting on of mine hands. The word is a borrowed speech from the fire, which must be evermore kindled and kept with a new supply from going out. If a man see his Corn that is in the field stand at a stay, and not shoot forward, he conceiveth little hope of any plentiful Harvest. If we set a Scholar to School, and he always continue in the same form, and never come forth in his learning, we will by and by conjecture, he will prove a Dunce. Or if we see a Child that doth not grow in strength and stature, we use to say; he will never be a tall man; he will never be but a Dwarf. So is it with all those that have had the plough of God's word brought in among them, and the ground of their hearts sowed with the precious and immortal seed of the word, and their hearts moystned with a gracious rain, as it were the shower upon the herbs, and yet continue dry and barren without any fruit; it is to be feared, that they will shortly fall back and wither away. If we have been brought up in the School of Christ, and have heard the Lecture of the Law and Prophets; nay, of Christ and his Apostles read unto us, and often sounding in our ears, and yet find no access of knowledge or increase of obedience, we may look every day to be thrust out of this School; yea, to see the School dissolved and turned to another use. If we have had both Milk and Meat brought unto us, and placed at the Table of the Lord full fraught with all delicates, And yet neither as New-borne Babes desire that sincere Milk of the word that we may grow thereby: nor yet know that strong meat belongeth to them that are of age, that in the end we mayall meet together unto a perfect Man, and unto the measure of the age of the fullness of Christ, certainly we shall always remain as Children, wavering, and carried about with every wind of Doctrine by the deceit of men, and with craftiness, whereby they lay in wait to deceive. But if we feel the weakness of our Faith, and the rest of the Graces of God's Spirit, and unfeignedly desire the increase and supply of them, he will fulfill our desire, and we shall know to our endless comfort, that our desire is not in vain: yea, to feel the weakness of Grace, is of Grace; to see the weakness of Faith, is of Faith; and that which is yet more, he accepteth the desire to believe in Christ, as Faith it self; the desire to repent from dead works, as repentance it self: the desire to be reconciled to God, as reconciliation it self. They are pronounced Blessed, that hunger and thirst after righteousness, because they shall be satisfied. Whosoever is a thirst, hath promise made unto him, That he shall have the Well of the Water of life freely given. We know by a natural feeling what hunger and thirst is, and when we are hungry, when thirsty; and when not. Properly we are hungry, when we are empty, and thereby wax faint and feeble, and finding both our emptiness and weakness, desire meat to satisfy and content us. Properly we are thirsty, when we feel a drouth or dryness in us, and desire some drink to refresh us. In like manner, and by good proportion, they are said to hunger and thirst after righteousness, that feel they want it, and would fain have it. If we feel our selves to be out of Christ, and do long after the blood of Christ to be redeemed with it, and to be justified by it, then we truly do hunger after Christ. Thus much touching this Doctrine, which ariseth only by comparing this Salutation with other Scriptures.

In these words also by conference of other places, ariseth a good instruction to us that profess the Gospel of Christ Jesus. For this is he of whom he was forsaken, as he showeth, 2. Tim. 4, 10. Demas hath forsaken me, &c. He is called in this place a fellow-helper of Paul, yet the vanity of this world drew him back, being overcome with the toil and trouble that accompanied the professors of the truth, and the preachers thereof. He doth not mean that he had clean renounced the Gospel, and was become a back-slider and cut off from the Church as a rotten member, but he shrunk back for his advantage, or because he was loath to suffer adversity with the people of God: as it he should have said, he preferred the love of the world before the love of God. But whether ever he recovered himself or not, and renounced the world which he overmuch loved, we have not so full and fair a warrant, as we have for Mark: seeing Paul endeth with forsaking of him, and the Scripture leaveth him in the embracing of this present evil world, so that his repentance is uncertain unto us. Behold here, how this man is set as upon a Stage or Scaffold, a and mark of infamy branded upon him forever, so long as the world shall continue, and the name of Christ Jesus shall be preached, because he withdrew himself from the pains and publishing of the Gospel, and from the company of Paul, waxing dainty and delicate, loving his own ease and pleasure too much. From hence we learn, that many which seem faithful and forward in the profession, do afterward fall back and give over. Such as seemed to have life in them, are become dead: such as seemed to have heat in them, are stark cold: such as did run a great pace, and led the way to others, do now some of them stand still, many run back-ward, and others do wander out of the way, and others hinder those that would enter into the right way. These first give their names to Christ, and afterward shake hands with the world, and embrace the friendship thereof. We see this truth verified unto us by sundry examples and lamentable experience of all times. Judas was chosen to be one of the twelve Apostles, yet he fell away dangerously and desperately, he became a Traitor and a Devil, according to the saying of our Savior, Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a Devil? To this purpose the Apostle John describeth such back-sliders, Chap. 2. They went out from us, but they were not of us, for if they had been of us, they should have continued with us. Hereunto cometh the Parable propounded by Christ, Math. 21, 28. A certain man had two sons, and came to the elder, and said; Son, go and work today in my Vineyard: but he answered and said, I will not: yet afterward he repented himself and went. Then came he to the second, and said, likewise, and he answered, I will sir, yet he went not. He seemed forward, but he hung back: he promised much, but he performed nothing at all. The like we might say of the rich man, he came unto Christ, and said unto him, Good master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? yet when he was tried, he went away sorrowful, and his good beginnings were as the morning dew, verifying that which is spoken in the same Chapter Many that are first shall be last, and the last shall be first.

Our Savior setting down the parable of the sower, yieldeth diverse effectual reasons to move us to embrace this truth. For first, the Devil is a subtle enemy that stealeth upon us, and goeth about like a roaring Lyon, seeking whom he may devour. If the word be not deeply rooted in our hearts, but do only swim in our brains, and abide in our mouths, it is in continual danger to be taken away from us. Hence it is, that Christ saith, Whensoever any man heareth the word of that Kingdom, and understandeth it not, that evil one cometh, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart, and this is he which hath received the seed by the way side. This enemy is ever busy with us, and will never suffer us to have any rest, so long as any good thing appeareth in us.

Secondly, the Cross is for the most part the companion of the Gospel, which while some seek to avoid, they make shipwreck of faith and a good conscience. Our Savior describing another sort of hearers saith, He that received seed in the stony ground, is he which heareth the word, and incontinently with joy receiveth it: yet hath he no root in himself, and endureth but a season: for as soon as tribulation or persecution cometh because of the word, by and by he is offended. So long as we may profess the truth with peace and liberty of conscience, and with the favor of men, it is an easy and ordinary matter to be a professor of the Gospel, and an hearer of the word. But when troubles and temptations arise, they that are not thoroughly grounded, do quickly fall away.

Thirdly, as persecutions do follow the Gospel, so for the most part doth shame, reproach, and poverty. And as it is a common thing with us to desire the ease of the flesh and the pleasures of the body, so we are inclined to covet the profits and commodities of this life. This caused Demas to forsake Paul, because he embraced this present world. Heerevnto cometh that which Christ teacheth, Math. 13. He that received the seed among Thorns, is he that heareth the word: but the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word, and he is made unfruitful. So long as the world (as a rank Thorn) sticketh in our throats, or rather in our hearts, and we begin to prefer it in our thoughts and practices, before the truth, it is impossible that we should hold out our profession unto the end. Wherefore, seeing the Devil is always ready to fist us, persecution to try us, and the world to ensnare us, we must know that for these causes it cometh to pass, that many fall back, which seemed forward in the faith.

The Uses are many that may be made hereof. First, we may conclude, that woeful is their estate and condition that shrink away, and melt as wax before the Sun. The estate of such men is most fearful, inasmuch as they are become very Dogs and Swine. It had been better for them, that they had never known the truth: nay, it had been better, if they had never been borne, as our Savior speaketh of Judas. This the Apostle Peter setteth down in his second Epistle, Chapter, 2. If they, after they have escaped from the filthiness of the world, through the acknowledging of the Lord, and of the Savior Jesus Christ, are yet tangled again therein and overcome, the latter end is worse with them then the beginning. For it had been better for them not to have acknowledged the way of righteousness, then after they have acknowledged it, to turn away from the holy commandment given unto them. But it is come unto them, according unto the true Proverb, the Dog is returned unto his own vomit: and, the Sow that was washed to the wallowing in the mire. It is a notable comfort unto us, when we are as faithful trees in the Garden of God, That will bring forth their fruit in due season: whose lease shall never fade, when we do not suffer everyone to go before us, but have an holy emulation and striving to go before others, and even to out-go our selves: so it is an evil sign and a fearful forerunner of condemnation; to run, and then to give over running: to wrestle, and then to give over wrestling. It is an hard thing to make a good beginning: we are not easily brought to set forward: but to trip while we are in our journey, and to wax weary of proceeding, is the common custom of our common professors. We see this in the Children of Israel, while they were in the Wilderness going to the Land of Canaan, they did not keep a constant course, but sometimes they stood at a stay; and sometimes they went backward, and sometimes they wished themselves again in the Land of Egypt. Thus it fareth with us that are Pilgrimes and Strangers in this life, when we have once given our hand to the Plough we are ready to look back, as Lots wife did when she was gone out of Sodom. Every little thing is able to turn us out of the way: and being once turned out of it, it is harder to bring us into it again, then if we were never entered into it. Woe therefore be unto such as follow Demas, That begin to build but are not able to make an ende. Great plagues and grievous judgments hang over their heads, they do not return And repent, and do their first works, and redeem the time, because the days are evil He that knoweth his Masters will, and doth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes. Yea, often-times God giveth over such time-seruers and back-sliders, into a reprobate sense, and taketh away his holy spirit from them, so that they prove mere Monsters, and worse then savage beasts. Who were greater enemies to the Gospel then the Jews, that hade the light among them, and offered unto them, whereas by their calling they were the outward Church, and the professed people of God. Judas being an Apostle of Christ, became the most deuelish man upon the earth, exceeding all the Jews in treachery and impiety. This a grievous judgment of God, punishing sin with sin, and recompensing great vengeance upon their heads, that start from the Faith as a deceitful Bow, and renounce that truth which they have solemnly professed. Let these punnishments be always before our eyes, so often as we begin to slake our course, and to grow negligent and secure, that so we may begin to renew our covenant with God, and to recover our selves from the pit of Apostasy, into which we were falling.

Secondly, this Doctrine teacheth the difference between those that are truly godly and religious, and such as are Hypocrites. Such as profess well for a time, and afterward slide back, are like the Grass or Corn that groweth upon the house top, which flourisheth and waxeth green for a season, but it decayeth incontinently, and cometh not to any seasonable ripeness. Howsoever therefore there be a great likeness, and a near resemblance between the faithful and the Hypocrite, yet God will have the one discerned from the other, and Hypocrisy to be laid open, and seen in his colors as it is. This is that use which the Apostle John maketh of this doctrine. Chapt. 2. where comforting the Church against the offenses and stumbling blocks that were rise and common in those days, and persuading them not to be terrified with the falling back of certain, he maketh it plain, that albeit they had place in the Church as corrupt humors have in the body, yet they were never of the Church. Whreupon he concludeth, This cometh to pass that it might appear, that they are not all of us. Would we therefore know who are Hypocrites? And would we have eyes to see them, and judgment to discern them? Behold here a plain mark and evident token to bring us to a perfect understanding of them; they shall not always deceive the Church, they shall not always cover their faces with the Vizard of holiness; they shall in the end be made evident to all men, that everyone may point at them with the finger, and say; This is an Hypocrite, this is a Dissembler, this is he that went about to deceive both God and Man, but now he is revealed, that all men may look upon him, and hiss at him. On the other side, it is a notable privilege of a man truly sanctified, to be constant and continually set upon good things, to persevere in good things, and never to repent of the doing of them: he buildeth his house upon the rock, and therefore no blasts or tempests of temptation can overthrow it. He receiveth the seed into good ground, and therefore it taketh root downward, and beareth fruit upward with patience, he is careful to please God in the duties of both Tables, both of holiness and true righteousness, and therefore he shall never be removed.

Thirdly, seeing many begin well, that are as a morning Cloude which is quickly scattered, and therefore do not continue; we learn, not to be offended when we see any or many faint or fall away, nor to be discomfited whē we have examples before our eyes of those that have professed the saith, and been thought zealous above many others, who now are fallen into a deep, or rather a dead sleep, that no life of God's spirit appeareth to be in them. Thus it hath always been in the Church, thus it is at this present, & thus it will be hereafter. When Samaria had received the Gospel, Simon Magus himself believed also, and was baptized, and continued with Phillip, & wondered when he saw the signs and great Miracles which were done: yet notwithstanding this embracing of the faith, was but as the flash of Lightning, which suddenly appeareth, and presently vanisheth, as appeareth by his offering of money to buy the Graces of the Spirit, and by the answer of Peter, denouncing an horrible curse against him, renouncing him for having any part or fellowship in that business, discovering the hypocrisy of his heart, and manifesting to all men that he was in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.

The like we might say of Hymenens, Phyletus, and Alexander, mentioned by Paul in his Epistles to Timothy; they were counted famous, and esteemed as Pillers of the Church, yet they fell to renounce everlasting salvation, which was purchased for us by our Lord Jesus Christ. Let us all hereby be wise and warned, and take heed that we build not upon men, least the foundation sinking and shrinking down, we fall and perish with it. True it is, they shall greatly be punished, that lay a stumbling-block before others, & give occasion unto them to fall & to depart from the faith; yea, it were better that a Mill-stone were hanged about their neck, and they drowned in the sea, then one of the members of Christ be offended. Woe therefore shall be to those that give a scandal to the Church; yet such as follow them, and forsake the fellowship of the Saints, through their evil example, cannot be excused.

Wilt thou refuse thy Corn, because thou seest much Chaff and Trash mingled with it? No man must forsake the Church, because he seeth offenses to arise in it, every man must labor with himself to be good Corn, and then the Chaff shall hurt us nothing at all. And albeit we see some fall away and make a separation every day, the Church looseth nothing, but is made more pure and perfect, even as it hindereth not, nor hurteth the Wheat, that the Tares wither away. When we behold those that were chief men, & reputed as Angels in comparison of others, to fall as Lightning from Heaven, let us not be dismayed or discomforted thereby, though men turn as the wind and the Weather-cock, let us stand fast, and build upon the rock that can never be shaken. Albeit we may point out thousands on the one side, and ten thousand on the other side, let us not fear the falling of the Church, which standeth upon a sure and certain foundation. Thus doth the Apostle comfort God's people, when sundry made Shipwracke of their faith, and fell into Apostasy, The foundation of God remaineth sure, and hath this seal, The Lord knoweth who are his.

If men show their frailty, and be as a Reede shaken with the wind, it is no marvel nor new thing, we rest not upon them, we build not our Faith upon our Teachers that have been the means of our conversion: so that if they should revolt and renounce the doctrine that they have preached, we must not go with them, nor follow after them. Indeed we should be grieved to see those that seemed forward, to turn clean backward; and as we ought to rejoice to see the Church of God increased, so it cannot but trouble us, to have it diminished: notwithstanding, this must be our comfort, that God will maintain his Church, and keep all those safe and sure which he hath chosen to himself. As for others that are unconstant and give over, they were never true believers, but Hypocrites, which here are for a season mingled together, until the time of separation. But the gifts of God bestowed upon his people (whose salvation is surely laid up with him) are without repentance. Our Savior handleth this point at large, John 6, and 10. All that the Father giveth me shall come to me: and him that cometh too me I cast not away. And again in another place, I give unto my sheep eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of mine hand; my Father which gave them me, is greater then all, and none is able to take them out of my Fathers hand. So then, whensoever any among them that were judged most forward and upholders of others, give back and become unbelievers, we must not by and by dream that the Church of God falleth, he will always have a people to call upon him, and worship him, so long as the Sun and Moon endureth, from generation to generation. The Church is grounded upon God, and upon no condition of man. Our salvation is settled upon the election of God, and founded upon his unchangeable decree which can never be altered or disappointed.

Fourthly, seeing the Church hath always had back-sliders, we learn hereby to beware of all allurements and enticements, that may be means to draw us back from the truth which we have embraced. Demas (of whom mention is made in this place) had been in good account, he hath an excellent witness even of Saint Paul's mouth to be an helper to the truth. Is it a small commendation to be called the fellow of such an Apostle? Is it a little matter to be set up in the midst of the house of God, as a burning Lamp, or a shining Candle, to give light to others in the Church? yet after all this estimation that was had of him, he loved the world better than the word.

Let us therefore walk warily, and look upon our selves in the person of this Demas, as in a looking Glass, who is cast in the teeth with his embracing the profit and pleasures of this life, that hindered him in the work whereunto he was called. We must take heed that things present do not swallow up the love of things to come, as they do in many who wax cold and have no desire of the Kingdom of Heaven. These are they that have their eyes so dazzled and darkened with these flitting things, that they break out in an admiration of them, and say: It is good for us to be here: but never think that these delights must have an end, and that the world shall be restored. The Apostle Paul teacheth us, that the present estate of the world is like a woman in travail, Rom. 8. We know that every creature groaneth with us also, and travaileth in pain together unto this present. The Creatures, as now they abide, are not in their perfection by reason of Adams sin (which brought in all disorder and confusion.) There is nothing but is subject to vanity and misery, everything hath some blot of corruption. What a shame then is it for us that are the Children of God, and have received the first fruits of the Spirit, not to draw toward perfection, and not to keep company with the senseless Creatures. Let us learn so to love the truth, as that we prize it above all corruptible things; that must have an end, so as this present world may not stay us from desiring and longing after spiritual blessings. Among all the baits and snares wherewith many are taken, nothing is so dangerous or so common, as the love of this world. Take a view of many that did run well, but now run not at all, and you shall find they are right Demasses, the world is a beam in their eyes that they cannot see, a Thorn in their feet, that they cannot walk, a canker in their mouths that they cannot speak, a clog to their consciences that they cannot proceed, and a snare to their souls that they cannot profit or prosper in good things. Our days are full of two many examples of men that are fallen into a deep sleep of carnal security, so that nothing can wake them. Others there are, that shrink back for fear of troubles and crosses, as it may appear this Demas also did. He saw many storms come toward him, and he thought it best to put into some Haven or harbor. In the time of peace and prosperity, in quiet and joyful times, and in such golden days as our eyes have seen, and our hearts have enjoyed, many will seem, and do seem to persevere in the faith, and to embrace the word: but when the Sun ariseth in his strength, and persecution cometh for the words sake, by and by they are offended. Satan is privy to this corruption lying hidden in our Nature. For when as God said unto him, Hast thou not considered my Servant Job, how none is like him in the Earth? An upright and just Man, fearing God and eschewing evil? He answered the Lord and said; Doth Job fear God for naught? Thou hast blessed the works of his hands, and his substance is increased: but stretch out now thine hand, and touch all that he hath, to see if he will not blaspheme thee to thy Face. We see heerby, that God will have those that think they believe, and would have others to think so also, to be tried and known what they are. Dost thou make show of Religion? Dost thou glory in thy profession? It pleaseth God to offer thee the means and occasions to try thee, he sendeth the persecution of the tongue; thou art reviled, scorned, slandered, and derided for professing the truth, for hearing the word, for frequenting of Sermons: and then it cometh to pass, that rather then they with endure these crosses, they shrink away, and strike hands will evil men, and embrace the friendship of this present evil World. Thus we see how Satan busieth himself to undermine us, and to overthrow us, and what temptations he setteth before us on the right hand, and on the left hand; on the right hand, the profits of the World, and the pleasures of the Flesh; on the left hand, crosses and persecutions for the words sake. These are the means that he useth; these are the allurements whereby he prevaieth; these are the discouragements whereby he terrifieth us.

Fifthly, seeing we are ready to revolt and slack our peace that we have run toward the mark that is set before us, let no man be secure and careless, or presume too much upon his own strength, as though it were impossible for him to fall: but let every man grow circumspect, and beware of Carnal security. Hence it is, that the Apostle Paul, mentioning sundry judgments that fell upon the Israelites for their sins and offenses, gathereth this Exhortation; wherefore Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall. They had the use of the Sacraments, and other pledges of God's favor, yet they could not privilege them, or defend them from the punishments that God brought upon them. Let no man therefore trust too much to the zeal of one or two yeasers, but persevere to the end, and know he must be faithful unto the last gasp. God hath not hired us for a season, to labor in his service for a day, or a month, or a year, neither giveth us leave to depart at a time appointed, nor maketh us a Certificat under his hand, that we are at liberty to serve another: but we must all know, that there is one condition of worshipping him; to wit, that we dedicate both our Soul and Body, both our life and death, both our beginning and ending unto him.

What did it profit Lots Wife to go out of Sodom, commanded by the Angel, and accompanied by her Husband, in as much as she looked back, and was turned into a pillar of Salt? What profit was it to the Israelites to depart out of Egypt, and to pass over the Red Sea; seeing afterward they fell to murmuring in the Wilderness, and were destroyed of the Destroyer? What gain, or what good was it to Jehu, to slay the Priests of Baal with the sword, and to be zealous for the execution of the judgments of the Lord, to deface the Image, and to throw down the house of Baal, and to make a Iakes of it forever, seeing he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam, and regarded not to walk in the Law of the Lord God of Israel, but worshipped the Golden Calves that were in Dan and Bethel? It were as good never to begin, as not to continue unto the end. When we have once given our Names to Christ, and tasted of the good word of God, and see many men come far behind us, we flatter our selves in an opinion of our sure standing; we are ready to say: If all the world should turn to be back-sliders and Apostataes, yet we would never slide away. But let us take heed we be not deceived, for God will not be mocked. It is a worthy saying of the Prophet Ezekiel, Chap. 18, 24. If a Righteous Man turn away from his righteousness, & commit iniquity, and do according to all the abominations that the wicked man doth, shall he live? All his righteousness that he hath done, shall not be mentioned: but in his transgression that he hath committed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he die. It is not enough to purpose well, it is not enough to begin well, it is not enough to proceed well; it is required of us to persevere well, and to continue in a constant and settled course unto the end.

If a man continue unto his latter days, and then give over, all is gone, all is lost, all is in vain. If a Child that is set to School, do go lustily forward in his Learning a long time, and afterward prove an idle boy, and one that will take no pains, he will never prove Learned, nor is ever like to come to any preferment. If a man begin to build an house, and have laid a good foundation, it is never the better, unless the work be brought to an end and perfection. He that runneth in a race, though he set out never so swiftly, and have passed a great part of the way never so resolutely, yet if he stay in his course, and hold not on to the end, he receiveth not the prize, he obtaineth not the reward. He that is Valiant and Couragious in the beginning of the fight, never winneth the field, nor getteth the Victory, unless he continue to the end of the battle. We are taught and trained up in God's School, we are partes of the building of his house, and as lively stones fitted to make an holy Temple unto him: we all run in a Race, and prove Maisteries: We are the Lord's Soldiers to fight hand to hand against Sin, the World, and the Devil: let us therefore hold out till we come to the mark, and receive the ende of our Faith, even the Salvation of our souls.

Saul began well, but he declined, and in the end became an open persecutor. Joash behaved himself uprightly all the days of Jehoiadah, and repaired the house of the Lord; but after his death, he fell to Idolatry, he left the house of the Lord God of his Fathers, and he served Groues and Idols; so that wrath came upon Judah and Jerusalem, because of this trespass. The Israelites that would have returned into Egypt, died in the Wilderness. It shall not be needful to heap up mo examples; we have too many such stumbling blocks lying in our way, and set before our eyes; let us take heed by their falls, and learn Wisdom by their foolishness: and constancy by their inconstancy.

Lastly, seeing many slide back, that have seemed forward men, and of great and eminent note above others: it is our duty (in regard of the small strength, and the little power of our own Nature, to pray heartily and earnestly unto God, not to lead us into temptation, nor to take away his holy spirit from us, but that he would stay us up by his grace. We must entreat at the hands of God for our continuance, as well as for our first conversion. For, as the opening of the heart, and the beginning of our regeneration and new birth, is of Grace; so we proceed in the midde way, and persevere unto the end, not by our selves, or anything in us, but by the same grace and goodness of God, who worketh in us both the will and the deed. Hence it is that the Prophet prayeth unto God, To restore unto him the joy of his salvation, and to establish him with his free Spirit. And in another place he prayeth to the Lord, who had kept him in his youth, that he also would be his keeper in his old age, when his head was hoare, and hairs gray; Cast me not off in the time of age, forsake me not when my strength faileth: ô God, thou hast taught me from my youth, even until now: therefore will I tell of thy wondrous works; yea, even unto mine old age and gray head, ô God, forsake me not, until I have declared thine Arm unto this Generation, &c. The Prophet knew well enough his proneness and inclination to go back, and that it is at easy to fall through dotage as noneage, and by the weakness and coldness of old age, as by the lusts and frailty of youth. Yea, we see many that have held a good course a long time, and dedicated their young years, as it were bringing their first fruits to God, who notwithstanding have turned out of the way when they have been going out of the World. Even as it falleth out sometimes, that such as have failed safely in the wide Sea, and kept an upright course, that they have escaped the dangers of storms, and tempests, and Rocks, and quick-sandes, have notwithstanding been cast away in the very Haven, through negligence and security, and want of heed taking: so is it with many, that have stood out in dangerous times when the Winds have blown, and persecutions have been hot, who in calm weather and peaceable times, in their latter times have suffered shipwreck, and have dashed the Barks of their Souls against the vain-pleasures and vanities of this World, which drown Men in perdition and destruction.

Hence it is, that the Apostle writing to the Thessalonians, prayeth unto God for them in this manner; Now the very GOD of peace sanctify you throughout, and I pray God that your whole Spirit, and Soul, and Body, may be kept blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. He saw they had need of God's gracious assistance, even unto the last breath of their body to uphold them, and to keep them in his fear. Let us therefore remember what the Prophet speaketh of those that are truly regenerate, Psalm 92, 12, 13, 14. The righteous shall flourish like a Palme Tree, and shall grow like a Caedar in Lebanon: such as be planted in the House of the Lord, shall flourish in the Courts of our God, they shall still bring forth Fruit in their age, they shall be fat and flourishing. If we be in the number of these men described in this place, always fruitful in good things, and never barren of heavenly graces, we shall be assured, that we shall never be removed. Trees (as we see by experience) grow barren when they grow old: but such as are planted in the House of God, must be most fruitful in their age. But with many it is clean contrary: the more old in age, the more old in sin, and sapped in all sorts of wickedness.

This is a searefull sign and prognosticate of a final Apostasy, when our ending is not answerable to our beginning. But here some man may say, Can the faithful fall away forever? Can they loose their Faith altogether? I answer, such as live in the Church, and seem to themselves and to others to have faith, may fall away: but such as have the faith of God's elect, can never fall away, God doth stablish them in Christ, 2 Cor. 1, 12. And they are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation. 1. Pet. 1, 4. So that our life is hid with Christ in God, Col. 3, 3. The gifts and calling of God are without repentance: and he that hath begun this good work in us, will also finish and perfect it until the day of Jesus Christ. Phil. 1. 6. We are persawaded, that neither life, nor death, nor Devil, nor any means whatsoever, shall be able to separate us from the love of God. Notwithstanding, we must beware of carnal security, least these gifts of God be weakened and diminished in us; for albeit they cannot die, yet they may decay and decrease; and we may fall, though not fall away; and our Faith may be less, though not utterly lost. Christ Jesus hath somewhat against the Angel of the Church of Ephesus, because he had left his first love. He was not finally fallen from Grace, but is highly praised for his patience and perseverance, but is charged to have slacked his course, and to have cooled his zeal; and therefore, he is not said to have lost his Love, but to have left his first Love, so that they were not so earnest, so servant, and so zealous as they were at their first Conversion. We have therefore continual need to be often in prayer, that we may ever-more increase in heavenly Graces, and be preserved by the power of God, that we be not overcome by the power and subtlety of Satan, who desireth nothing more then our Destruction; nothing less, then our good and salvation.

25The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, be with your Spirit, Amen.

Hitherto of the first part of the Conclusion, which is the salutation sent from others: Now of the salutation that cometh from him-self, which is as his last farewell, and shutting up of the whole Epistle, and (as it were) a solemn taking of his leave of him, and the rest; which is thus much in effect, [Grace be with your Spirit.] The first part, or former word, is amplified and enlarged by the efficient cause from whence it cometh and proceedeth; to wit, Christ Jesus, who is also declared by that Sovereign Authority which he hath over all: Our Lord. Lastly, the whole Prayer is garnished with a certain exclamation of hearty well-wishing to them in the last word, [Amen.] Thus much touching the Order.

Let us come to the Interpretation of the Words, and search out the meaning of them by other places of Scripture. Wherein we are to consider what is meant by grace: why it is called [The Grace of our Lord Jesus;] why he is called [A Lord.] why [Our Lord,] what is meant by [Spirit,] what is meant by [your Spirit,] and lastly, what is meant by this word [Amen.] First, touching [Grace] (whereof we have spoken before, Verse 3.) we must understand, that there is a twofold Grace mentioned in the word of God; One, which maketh a man gracious and acceptable to God, which is the free favor and love of God, whereby he is well pleased, and exceedingly contented with his elect in Christ his beloved son: which is in God himself, and in no Creature whatsoever, either Saint or Angel. The other, is Grace freely given to men, both common to the elect and Reprobate, or proper to the elect only, which are supernatural and saving graces. The former, is called the first Grace, which is no inherent quality in us, but an essential property in God, and the cause of all graces in us, and the Fountain of all benefits that flow unto us. Thus it is taken in many places, as Rom. 1, 7. and 3, 24. and 4, 16. and 11, 6. The latter, is called the second Grace, because it is derived from the former, as we see 1. John 1, 16. and 1. Pet. 1, 14. and 5, 10. and 2. Pet. 3, 18. Now in this place, I understand it of the favor and Love of GOD, with the which he began his Epistle before, and with which here he closeth it up, ending even as he made his entrance.

Secondly, he calleth this [The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ] for two Causes; first, because he is the fountain of it, he is as the Well-spring, we have it not of our selves, we have it from him, according to that which the Evangelist John setteth down, Of his fullness we have all received, and Grace for Grace. Secondly, it is called [the Grace of Christ,] not of God the father, not of God the Holy-Ghost, but of Jesus Christ our Lord, because he is the means, or as the Cunduit-pipe, whereby he it is brought and conveyed unto us; Thus the same Evangelist speaketh in the words following; The Law was given by Moses, but Grace and Truth came by Jesus Christ. He it is that is the Mediation and Propitiation for our sins, he hath purchased the favor of God, he hath wrought reconciliation for us, so that through him we are accepted of God the Father, and beloved in his beloved, Ephe. 1. 6.

Thirdly, we must consider the Title given to Christ Jesus, he is called a Lord or Ruler, and that in many respects: First, by creation, in that he made us of nothing when we had no being, For all things were made by him, and without him was nothing made that was made. Secondly, by right of Inheritance, For he is made Heir of all things. Thirdly, by right of Dominion, for he hath Dominion over all things, and over us also; so that he ruleth, preserveth, and keepeth us as his own to eternal life, being bought with his most precious blood. None of them can be lost that are committed unto him, neither can any pluck them out of his hands. All things are put under his feet, and subject unto him.

Fourthly, he is said to be our Lord; he is not only a Lord, having right and might granted unto him over others, but he is called our Lord. First, because the Father gave him a people and chosen Generation, over whom he should rule. So then, by reason of this donation appointed unto him before all worlds, he is truly called our Lord. Secondly, in regard of the work of redemption which he hath wrought for us, he alone hath paid the ransom for us, and delivered us from the power of the Devil: so that he hath the greatest right of possession in us. Lastly, we are thereby put in mind, that we ought so to believe in Christ our Lord, that we put our trust and confidence in him, and that we rest thoroughly persuaded, that by him we are thoroughly freed and delivered from all evil. It is not enough for us, or sufficient to salvation, to believe Christ Jesus to be a Lord, but we must believe him to be our Lord. For we all know and believe that the Devil is a Lord, and ruleth in the hearts of the Children of disobedience; he is the God of this World, and a Prince that beareth great sway: but we do neither know nor believe him to be our Lord, as we believe Christ Jesus to be the Lord of us all.

Fifthly, he addeth [With your Spirit.] He craveth this Grace to be with his Spirit: whereby he meaneth as much, as if he had said with you; one part of man being named for the whole, the more principal part being put for the whole person. For man consisteth of two essential parts, of Soul and Body. True it is, the Apostle Paul doth sometimes divide man into three partes; the Spirit, the Soul, the Body; as when he prayeth for the Thessalonians; That their whole Spirit, and Soul, and Body, should be kept blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. By the Spirit, he understandeth the mind, reason, or understanding, which else-where he calleth the Spirit of your mind. This is nothing else but a faculty of the reasonable soul, which is seen, in invention and judgment. By the the Soul, he understandeth the inferior faculties and powers, as the will, and affections: both which followeth the body, which is the Instrument whereby the Spirit and Soul do work. By the Spirit in this place, is not meant only the mind, or only the Soul, but the whole man is to be understood; as it is expounded Phil. 4. 23. The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. And Col. 4, 18. Grace be with you: yet he nameth the spirit, because it is the principal subject and seat of grace.

Sixthly, the Apostle proceedeth and saith [Your spirit.] he speaketh not to Philemon alone, saying, [With thy Spirit;] but he enlargeth his heart, and saith [With your Spirit,] as speaking to many. Whereby we are to understand those to whom this Epistle is written and delivered, to wit; chiefly to Philemon, whose Title it beareth, and to Apphia his wife, to Archippus the Minister, and to the Church that was in his house, to all these he wisheth the Grace of Christ.

Lastly, he endeth with the word [Amen,] which is as much as even so, or so be it, or so it shall be. Indeed it is no part of the former prayer, but it betokeneth and signifieth two things; First, an hearty desire, whereby we wish that we may be heard, and that God would answer unto our requests. Secondly, the certainty of our confidence, and the confirmation of our Faith, whereby we trust that we shall be heard. It is an Hebrew word retained by the Apostles in their Epistles, and in other places, wherewith we are taught to conclude our Prayers withal, by Christ our Savior. It is added, to show that we should come with boldness, and believe that we shall obtain, trusting in the truth of God's promises.

Having thus laid open the sense and meaning of the words in this last Verse, it shall not be amiss to speak some-what of the words following, which are the subscription and under-writing of this Epistle, in these words:

Written from Rome to Philemon, and sent by Onesimus a Servant.

It is most likely, that this Epistle was written and sent at one and the same time, with that entitled to the Colossians, both because the same persons are named in both the Epistles, the same persons writing, and the same persons sending salutations to others; and both of them in the Post-script, are said to be sent by Onesimus, as it were by a Carrier; only herein resteth the difference, that this Epistle was delivered to Onesimus alone, to be carried to Philemon a private man; but the other was conveyed by Tychicus and Onesimus, to the whole Church of the Colossians, whereof Philemon and his Family were but one part. But touching this subscription, as also others in other Epistles, we must understand that they were added by men, and are no part of the Canonically Scripture, which is the rule of our faith, & to which we must yield, without all contention or contradiction; and from which, we cannot appeal without intolerable injury to the spirit of God. For, howsoever diverse of these Post-scripts may be true, yet it is very plain and evident, that some of them are false, and many of them very uncertain. Of this sort, is the former Epistle to the Corinthians, which is said to be written from Philippi, and likewise to be sent by Stephanas and Fortunatus, &c. where two things are avouched, and both of them seem to be false. For first, it appeareth that he was not then at Philippi a chief City in Macedonia, that is in Europe, but at Ephesus which is in Asia. Secondly, it may be gathered, that it was sent by the hands of Timothy and Erastus, partly out of that Epistle, and partly out of the Acts of the Apostles. The like we may say of the Post-script of the latter Epistle; of both the Epistles to the Thessalonians, of both the Epistles to Timothy, of that to Titus, and others. And as we show that these Post-scripts, whether true or false, were not written by the Apostles, but by some other men after their days, for the most part either unlearned, or not so well advised: so we might affirm and confirm the same touching the Inscriptions or titles prefixed and set before the Epistles of Paul, James, and the rest.

For first, both the inscriptions and subscriptions, are variably set down in Copies, that there can no certainty be gathered out of them, which of them should stand as Authentical. Secondly, some of them have both strange and unfit Titles; as when the seven Epistles, written by James, Peter John, and Jude; are called sometimes Canonical; and sometimes Catholic Epistles: which are Names not found in the Scriptures, and seeming derogatory to the rest of the Epistles, as though none were Canonical but they. Thus much shall serve and suffice to give warning, both touching Inscriptions and Subscriptions, both which are of one stamp, and no part of the pure word of God: whereof more might be spoken, if it were either necessary, or profitable, or expedient.

The next point, according to the order observed in the former words, is to point out such observations as might be enlarged and amplified for our instruction. First of all, we see here, that as in the entrance of the Epistle, and as it were at their first meeting, he wished unto him the Grace of Christ, so he doth in the farewell and departing: thereby teaching, that nothing is better or more to be desired then his Grace: that all our Salutations and Farewells, should be grounded in his Grace: this must be the beginning and the ending of all our talk and communication.

Secondly, when the Son of God is called Jesus, we observe again that he is a perfect and absolute Savior, the alone Savior, inasmuch as the work of our Salvation and Redemption is wholly and only wrought out by him, and no part left unfinished, and reserved for any Creature in heaven or in earth: For among Men there is no other Name given under Heaven, whereby we may be saved, but by the name of Jesus. And the Apostle saith. Heb. 7. He is able perfectly to save them that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. Let us learn by this Name, given to the Son by the Father, and brought from Heaven by an Angel, that in our selves we are as lost Sheep, and going astray. We are wretched Sinners, lying under the heavy wrath of God; he came to seek and to save that which is lost. We are Prisoners, he came to set us at liberty; we are wounded, he came to cure us; we are dead, he came to restore and revive us. No man can truly and with a feeling heart say, Christ is my Savior, unless he find, that without him he is utterly lost and cast away. Again, this is a wonderful comfort to our hearts, that being shut up under sin and condemnation, the Lord had mercy upon us, and made an everlasting Covenant of Grace with us, that his own Son shall be our Redeemer. Hence it is that the Angels Who desire to look into the Mysteries of the Gospel, so greatly rejoiced when Christ was borne, and themselves sent to publish the glad tidings thereof. Luke 2. Behold, I bring you tidings of great joy that shall be to all the people; that unto you is borne in the City of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. If these blessed Spirits be thus affected at the birth of Christ, who came not to be a Savior and Redeemer unto them, because they did want the benefit of Redemption: how much more ought we to rejoice whom this glorious work doth chiefly concern; yea so much, that if we wanted this Savior, it had been better with the Beasts of the field, and the creeping things of the Earth, and the Fishes of the Sea, and the Fowls of the Air, then with us, with us (I say) that were fallen from him. For the end of the unreasonable Creature, is the end of his woe; but the death of man without a Mediator, is the beginning of woe.

Thirdly, the Son of God is called Christ, which signifieth as much as anointed. In the time of the Old Testament, three sorts of men were anointed with Material Oil; Kings, Prophets, and Priests. This Legal anointing, was a Type and Figure of the anointing of Christ let is, who was set apart from all Eternity, to do the Office of a Media our betweene GOD and Man, and had the fullness of the Spirit poured into his Man-hoode; and therefore he is a King, to gather and govern his Church; a Prophet, to reveal and teach the will of his Father; a Priest, to make satisfaction and intercession for the sins of his people. From hence we learn, that when we are baptized into Christ, and are called to the profession of the Gospel, we are after a sort consecrated and set apart to be spiritual Kings, spiritual Prophets, and spiritual Priests: we have the same Oil of gladness, not indeed as he hath it which is without measure, but a small pittance of it, and a little measure, whereby we are called Christians of Christ; that is, men anointed with the Oil wherewith Christ himself was anointed, albeit in a far inferior degree. This the Apostle John setteth down, The anointing, which ye received of him, dwelleth in you, &c. and that same anointing teacheth you all things. Everyone pleaseth himself in the title of a Christian, all men challenge the name of Christians as their proper right, and would cry out of extreme wrong, to be denied a portion in this honor: but ask them what Christ signifieth, and how themselves become Christians, they are able to answer nothing at all. But let us take heed we do not deceive our own hearts, and flatter our selves in a bare title, when the truth of the thing doth not belong unto us. If a poor simple Begger that hath nothing but rags and rents to brag and boast himself off, should foolishly persuade himself he were a King, and Monarch of the world, could this vain opinion any whit avail him, or minister any comfort unto him? In like manner, if we delight to be called Christians, and yet want the anointing of Christ, we are as far from being true Christians, as the former beggar is from being a Prince of the earth. Wherefore, if we will have the thing, with the name, and the truth, with the title, we must be as Kings, bearing sway over our own lusts, and proclaiming continual war against the Devil, the World, and the flesh. We must thus reign over our selves, and then we shall be Kings indeed. We must be careful to have the word dwell plentifully in us, and endeavor to instruct others. We must offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable unto the Father; we must make prayers and supplications unto him, and resign up our selves, our souls and bodies to his service. A carnal Christian that liveth in the flesh, is no Christian. An ignorant Christian that walketh in darkness, is no Christian. Such then, as are led by their own lusts, and carried away by their own corruptions, giving themselves over to all looseness of life, are not spiritual Kings, but very Slaues and Bond-men, nay the basest Vassals that breath upon the earth. Such as are blind in the matters of God, and have nothing in their minds, but gross ignorance, knowing nothing of religion, nor desiring to know nothing of the means of salvation, cannot be spiritual Prophets, but sottish persons, and blind men that are not far from falling into the pit of destruction. Such as approach not to the Throne of grace with broken and contrite hearts, and call not upon God, are not spiritual Priests, but come nearer to the profane Athiestes, who are said, not to call upon God, and think it no profit to pray unto him.

Fourthly, let us consider the third title given to the Son of God, he is called, our Lord: which teacheth us to acknowledge him to be the Ruler and Governor of his Church, and of every particular member thereof. And if he be the Governor and guide, woe unto them that will not be ruled and governed by him. When he persuadeth us to perform obedience to the moral Law, he giveth this as the reason I am the Lord thy God. Thus doth the Prophet bring in the lord speaking unto us, If I be your Lord, where is my fear? We must therefore conform our willes to his will, and resign body and soul to be ordered and directed by him. All men are willing to acknowledge Christ a redeemer, but not a Ruler: a Savior, but not a Lord. Every man would gladly and willingly have a portion in Christ's redemption, but they regard not to perform him any obedience. They are forward to hear of this Mediatorship: but they take no delight to hear of his Lord-ship: they love not to be under his dominion, they care not for the bearing of his yoke, they desire not to yield subjection to his word. They determine to make their lusts to be their Lord's, and themselves servants and slaves to their sins. These are such as have another Lord set over them, which ruleth in their hearts, to wit; the Prince of darkness, and the God of this world, his works they do, his lusts they fulfill, and to him they obey. These are those enemies mentioned by Christ, Luke 19, 27. that will not that he should reign over them, who in the end shall be brought and slain before him. Wherefore, if ever we look to find Christ our Savior, let us first make him our Governor: if we would have him be our justification, let him become also our sanctification; if we would have him ease us of our burden, and refresh us of our weariness, we must take his yoke upon us, and suffer our necks to be acquainted with it.

Fifthly, observe that the Grace here asked for Philemon and others, to whom the Apostle wrote, is called the grace of Jesus Christ; to teach us that God's graces and benefits come upon us thorough him, and as nothing was made without him that was made, so nothing is given without him that is given. If then, we would have right and interest in any of the blessings of God, we must labor to be in Christ, and to have assurance that we are in Christ. If we touch and taste any of them, and yet be not engrafted into him, we are Usurpers, and no better then Thieves and Robbers; we have no more right and Title to any of the Creatures or Graces of God, then the Thief hath to the true man's purse. Christ Jesus is heir of all things, and we by him. For, if we be sons, then are we heirs, even the heirs of God, and heirs annexed with Christ: as for the ungodly, they are Bastards, and not sons, and the Bastard cannot inherit, he is barred from claiming any interest in the inheritance.

True it is, such as are out of Christ, do many times abound in earthly blessings, and they enjoy Houses, and Lands, and Temporal possessions, and they can show their Writings, and Conueyances, and Leases, & Deeds, and Evidences, how they hold their inheritances from men: yet notwithstanding all these, in the midst of them they are miserable, and that for three causes.

First, because albeit they may have many things, yet they can have right to nothing, and they lay hold on such things as do not belong unto them. God made the world, and all things therein for his own sons, not for the base borne; for his Servants, not the Devils slaves. They are like the Moth which breedeth in another man's Garment, but is soon shaken out: the Moth hath no right to be there, and therefore is brushed off, or picked out, and cast away. This is the comparison of the Holy-Ghost, teaching that all unregenerate persons are Intruders, and can lay no lawful claim by the Law of God, to the things they possess; and therefore, the Land-lord of the world, may and will thrust them out at his pleasure.

Secondly, as their right is nothing, so they want the right use of them. If they had right unto them, yet had no comfortable use of them, it were a great judgment: but these men have neither. The Apostle teacheth, that Unto the pure, are all things pure: but unto them that are defiled, and unbelieving, it nothing pure, but even their Minds and Consciences are defiled. There is no peace to the wicked: in the midst of joy they are in heaviness, in the midst of life they are in death, like Belshazzar, who in the midst of his Feast and fullness, saw the hand-writing upon the wall, as a Prognosticate of his destruction.

Lastly, albeit they have the blessings of God, and keep them in bondage, yet withal they possess the Curse of God, which always waiteth upon them, and is ready to seize upon them. The Thief liveth always in fear of the Judge, and of the day of Assizes, so do these men live in continual danger of God's Judgment and punishment, which shall one day meet with them.

Sixthly, observe that he desireth grace to rest in their spirits: and albeit he mean heereby their whole persons (as we have shown before in setting down the Interpretation of the words) yet hereby he assigneth the proper Seat of Grace, to be the Soul. For the Grace of Christ, is an inward and spiritual thing, and therefore taketh up the inward and spiritual part of man. Indeed, when once grace is entered into the heart, and sitteth there as a Queen to order all our thoughts and affections, it will spread it self through the whole man, and afterward as it were go out of the doors into the outward actions. We see hereby where grace is especially felt: for as the Soul is the subject of it, so the Soul hath the especial feeling of it. Our Justification and forgiveness of sins, the peace of conscience which passeth all understanding is felt in the Soul: yea, Glorification and eternal life through Jesus Christ is felt in the Soul. This teacheth us to labor earnestly to have grace in the heart, that from thence it may flow into all our actions. It is not enough to have gracious tongues, gracious words, gracious mouths, we must first have grace within, and give unto God our hearts. Nothing is more detestable to God and man then Hypocrisy: there appeareth grace without, but there dwelleth none within: there is great show, but little truth, or rather no truth at all.

Lastly, observe with me the last word, whereby the Apostle shutteth up the Salutation and the whole Epistle, to wit, [Amen.] This is set down in a word, and yet it containeth more then the prayer it self. For in prayer we testify our desire, by this we witness our Faith. By this we observe that unto our requests and petitions in prayer, must be joined Faith and Belief, that God will grant the things craved. This appeareth in the Prophet, Psal. 89. Praised be the Lord for evermore, So be it, even so be it. We are taught thus to shut up our prayers, by Christ our Savior in that platform which he hath left us. Thus the Apostle closeth and concludeth his Epistle, The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all, Amen. And indeed prayer availeth only in them that believe: It is the prayer of faith prevaieth much, if it be fervent: yea, we must ask in faith and not waver, if we think to obtain anything at his hands. From hence we learn, that we ought always to labor to give assent to God's promises when we pray, and to strive against doubting and infidelity. All the promises of God are in Christ; yea, and are in him Amen, unto the glory of God through us. This we see in the Father of the Child possessed, Mark. 9. When Christ Jesus said unto him, If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth: he answered, Lord, I believe, help mine unbelief. To pray without Faith, is not to pray at all. And to say Amen in the end of our prayers, and yet to pray with doubting, and without believing, is to make a lie, and to teach our tongues to deceive our hearts. For this is a great iarre and discord, when infidelity is in the heart, and faith in the tongue: when inwardly we waver, and outwardly the mouth uttereth, Amen. More-over, so often as we use public prayers, they must be pronounced and delivered with that plainness, feeling, and zeal, as that the people, being thereby moved, and their faith and affections going with that which is delivered and prayed for, may answer Amen unto that which is desired. This is it which the Apostle toucheth, 1 Cor. 14. I will pray with the spirit, but I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing with the spirit, but I will sing with the understanding also: Else when thou blessest with the Spirit, how shall he that occupieth the Roome of the unlearned, say, Amen at thy giving of thanks, seeing he knoweth not what thou sayest. This reproveth the Popish and Romish Liturgy, that use in divine service a strange and unknown tongue, whereby the people are nuzeled in ignorance, and can receive no edification or instruction. And hereby consider the deep devise of the Devil, how far he hath prevailed in this false Church. For when he saw he could not thus far have the upper hand, as utterly to cast the word out of the Church, and to take away the use of prayer; when he perceived it to be impossible to root out the word of God, and to abolish the invocation of his holy name, he fell to work another way, and that is, to suffer the things to remain, and to take away the right and profitable use of them, so that albeit the word is read, it is read without knowledge: and albeit prayers be made, yet they are made without comfort. Thus the names of the word and prayer remaining, the benefite of them is taken away. The like we might say of the Sacraments, especially of the Supper of the Lord: they will seem to have it, yet in truth they want it: to allow of it, and yet they destroy it and abolish it. If the Devil should utterly remove these things out of the way, so that the names, neither of the word, nor of prayers, nor of the Sacraments were heard among them, all men might discover this deceit, no man would easily be seduced by this palpable grossness: but he is a more cunning work-man, he can hide his snares from being seen, so that he will not have them utterly removed and renounced, that the people might say, we have the word read unto us, we have good prayers said among us, we have the Sacraments with us, yet all is done in a strange manner, the Priest useth a strange tongue, and the people are nurtured in strange ignorance. For the word is heard ignorantly, prayers are made ignorantly, and the Sacraments are received ignorantly. The whole frame of the Popish Religion is maintained by ignorance. Thus much of the general observations, that might be enlarged and farther amplified, which I have briefly pointed out: and albeit all of them be very pertinent, yet I will in this manner pass them over. Now let us handle the particular Doctrine that ariseth from this Salutation.

This is the last clause of the Epistle, wherein he wisheth the same that he did in the beginning, to wit, the grace of Christ. If there had been anymore notable or excellent blessing to crave and desire for him then this grace of Christ, no doubt he would have asked it, and should have obtained it for him. He would have made some mention of it, either in the beginning or at the latter ending, or in some other place of this Epistle. But seeing we find no other blessing rehearsed or required, beside this grace of Christ, it is most certain the Apostle knew no greater or better gift then this grace of christ. And indeed, he which nameth and commendeth the grace of Christ, doth except or exclude nothing which is good for us, or profitable unto us, either in this life, or in the life to come. For the grace of Christ, whereby we understand the free favor of God, which we by no duties or works have deserved, or can any way deserve, comprehendeth under it, as it were within the compass of it, every good thing, and every perfect gift. For the spiritual blessings of God; as Remission of sins, Justification, Sanctification, and eternal Life, do all flow from this grace as from a Fountain. Now it is called the grace of Christ, and that fitly and worthily; because he hath obtained it for us, by the price of his own precious blood he hath deserved to have the same bestowed upon us. For the grace of God the Father properly belongeth unto him, and Christ Jesus, his natural son, in whom alone he is well pleased, is the Treasure & Store-house of his Father, by whose hand is bestowed whatsoever is bestowed upon us.

Seeing therefore the Apostle maketh so great reckoning of this grace, that he speaketh of it first and last, and remembereth it in the beginning and in the ending, and sendeth this Salutation unto him, we learn from hence, that Spiritual things are to be prayed for and preferred before earthly things: they must have the first place, and earthly things be set in the last place. This appeareth in that form of blessing, which God prescribeth unto Aaron and to his Sons, Thus ye shall bless the Children of Israel, and say unto them, The Lord bless thee, and keep thee, the Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be merciful unto thee, The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. Here we see what the Priests and Levites were especially to crave; to wit, the favor of God, and his free grace. This is plentifully proved in the Psalms of David, as Psal. 4. Many ask, who will show us any good; but Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us: where he showeth, that the multitude call for Riches, and Honor, and Pleasure, and account them the only good things: but the godly prefer the favor of God before all, and make it their chief felicity. And in another place, Turn us again, ô God, and cause thy face to shine, that we may be saved. The Church was now in affliction, they wanted temporal blessings, yet their chief desire was, to feel the loving countenance of God to shine upon them. This appeareth farther unto us, in the Lord's prayer, left unto us by Christ our Savior, to direct us to pray: he teacheth and prescribeth this order unto us, that we first of all ask such things as concern God and his glory, and then those things that belong to our selves. Thus are the prayers directed that the Apostle Paul maketh, and offereth up for the Churches to which he writeth, he craveth above all things grace and peace: he desireth, that they might have the Spirit of wisdom and of revelation, that the eyes of their mind may be lightened, that they may be strengthened in the inner man. Yea, this is so plain and pregnant a truth, that the very Heathen in their best meditations have confessed this, that God must have our first thoughts, and the beginning of all our works, who blesseth those that are so begun, and giveth unto them good success. If all these Testimonies, produced out of the Old Testament, alleged out of the New, and confirmed by the uniform consent of the Gentiles, be laid together, we may gather from thence, that in our prayers and judgments we are to prefer and desire especially and principally spiritual things.

If any doubt remain in us, let us consider the reasons, that so it may be removed. First, Spiritual and Heavenly blessings are beyond all comparison more excellent, and bring more sound joy of heart than earthly blessings can do. The Prophet testifieth this by his own experience Thou hast given me more joy of heart, than they have had, when their Wheat, and their Wine, did abound. The things of this life are corruptible: the things of the life to come are incorruptible. The Apostle Peter speaking of the inheritance of eternal life, calleth it immortal and undefiled, and that withereth not, reserved in heaven for us. But among the earthly Treasures, what more excellent then Gold? Yet he calleth it the Gold that perisheth: and afterward, Ye are not redeemed with corruptible things, as Silver and Gold, from your vain conversation, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb undefiled, and without spot. If then all worldly things, even those that be most pure and precious, be transitory and corruptible, they are not chiefly to be esteemed.

Secondly, howsoever the wedge of Gold prevaileth much with men, and can in a manner do all things: yet it is of no force with God, it cannot remove his judgments or turn away his wrath from us, it cannot redeem or pay the ransom of one Soul, we were bought with a greater price. Hence it is, that the Prophet saith, They trust in their goods, and boast themselves in the multitude of their Riches: yet a man can by no means redeem his Brother, he cannot pay his ransom to God. If riches (that can do much) could do this, then the richest should be the happiest: and the poorest men should be the most miserable. But this standeth not with the will and wisdom of God. To this purpose the Prophet Ezekiel saith, They shall cast their Silver in the streets, and their Gold shall be cast far off: their Silver and their Gold cannot deliver them in the day of the wrath of the Lord: they shall not satisfy their Souls, neither fill their Bowels, for this ruin is for their iniquity. The rich man thinketh himself fenced against all dangers of soul and body, and knoweth not his own error, and ignorance, and folly. It is the spiritual Armor that giveth strength, it is the spiritual Graces of God that do defend us: one drop of them is better then an whole River or a great Sea of earthly blessings.

Thirdly, the obtaining of spiritual things is the cause of the other blessings. They bring with them, when they come, earthly things. When we get wealth, we do not by it get Heavenly wisdom: for many times, they have the greatest riches, that have the least Religion. But when we get Godliness into our hearts, it bringeth with it a competent and convenient measure of all outward things. The Prophet saith, The Lions do lack and suffer hunger, but they which seek the Lord, shall want nothing that is good. He knoweth what is good for us, better then we do for our selves: as the Father knoweth what is good for the Child, better then the Child doth, and therefore he doth not say, they shall want nothing, but nothing that is good. Likewise, the Apostle, 1 Tim. 4. Godliness is profitable unto all things, and hath the promises of this life, and of the life to come. He doth not say, that riches are profitable to all things, neither doth he affirm that they have the promises of this life and of the life to come; but Godliness hath those profits and promises. So then, if we lay these things together and consider, that the spiritual blessings being incorruptible, and invisible, and eternal, are in themselves more excellent; that they are of great force and power with God; whereas the earthly, are vain and transitory, weak, and unable to remove any judgment, and that Heavenly blessings are causes of the earthly, and companions with them: we may truly gather and collect from hence, that it is our duty to prefer and pray for spiritual things before transitory, for heavenly things before earthly, for eternal things before temporal.

Now let us see what uses will arise from hence. First of all, this serveth to condemn the practice of the greatest part of men that go clean against this rule. There is no truth of God oftener confessed in word, that is more commonly denied in deed. We are willing to acknowledge in judgment the excellency of spiritual things, above all things that are mortal and mutable, and among spiritual blessings the price & priueledge of God's grace, which bringeth a goodly train and troop of his greatest Treasures: yet notwithstanding our judgment, our affections are chiefly set upon the world, and our desires run after earthly things. Such men are wholly earthly and carnal, according to the rule of our Savior, Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. Such can never lift up their minds unto Heaven, that account the earth, and earthly things, their chiefest Treasure: as on the other side, they can never settle their desires and studies upon the earth, that esteem the Heavens and Heavenly things their greatest Treasures. When the Stomacke is ouerladen with meat and over-burdened with the same, there followeth an obstruction and stopping of the passages of Nature: so the inordinate desires of the world pressing down better things, bringeth a forgetfulness of God, and so ouerfilleth the heart, that it oppresseth and suppresseth all care and cogitation of a better life. For even as we see, that when the shadow groweth lesser; the heat groweth greater; but when the shadow groweth greater, the heat groweth lesser, so it fareth and falleth out with us, whē this (world which is but a shadow) taketh up the least room in our hearts, then the love of the world to come, is the greatest in us: but when this present world and the things therein, occupy the gretest space and place in our hearts, then the heat that was kindled in us toward heavenly things is abated and diminished. These two, the love of this world, and of the world to come, are so cross and contrary one to another, that they cannot rest and remain in the highest degree within us, but one cooleth and quencheth the other, one overcometh and ouermastereth the other. We would account him a fool and destitute of ordinary understanding, a simple man or a very Child, that would prefer Copper before Gold, a grain of Barly before a Pearl or precious Stone, or would make choice of Chaff before the Wheat, or choose the Huskes before the Corn, and yet there are a thousand and ten thousand worse Fools in the World, which take themselves to be great wise men, prudent and politic men of deep and profound reaches, who would disdain and scorn at it to be accounted either Childish or foolish. Nabal was a rich man, and no doubt took himself and was taken of others to be a wise man: yet setting his mind wholly upon his goods, he is called by the Scripture a fool. The rich man mentioned in the Gospel, when his ground brought forth fruits plentifully, thought with himself, I will pull down my Barns and build greater, and said to his Soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years, live at ease, eat, drink, and take thy pastime: but though he were rich, and therefore thought himself wise, yet God said unto him, O fool, this night will they fetch away thy Soul from thee, and then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided? Neither was this the case and condition of this man alone, but it is the case and condition of everyone that gathereth riches to himself, and is not rich in God. This rich man is dead and gone: but he hath left a plentiful of spring and a great generation behind him. Look upon men's lives, and see whether the cares of this life, be not the first in their thoughts, purposes, prayers, and practices. Give them enough of this world, and let him that will, take the world to come. All their study, all their toiling and moyling is for the red and white earth, that is, for Gold and Silver, and other trash of this world, as if they could never be full of it, as if they would never be weary of it, as if they should never depart out of it. It is said of Solomon Prov. 30 The Horse-leech hath two Daughters which cry, bring, bring, so is it with these worldly minded men, they can never be satisfied, they always cry out for more, they will not be content, they cannot say, they have enough. It is a token of a brood basely borne, that respecteth not the inheritance of sons: so it is an evident sign that we are not the sons of God, when we mind not the Kingdom that the father hath prepared for us, and the son hath purchased unto us. The Beasts were borne and fashioned to look down-ward: man created after the Image of God, looketh upward and beholdeth the Heavens. It is a great discord and iarre between the eye and the heart, which should go together: when the eye is cast upward, and the heart of man groweth downward: the eye is fixed above, and the heart delighteth to be always groveling upon the ground, and glued unto the earth.

Secondly, as this Doctrine meeteth with their corruption that have their conversation below, in the center and bowels of the earth, whereas it should be in heaven from whence we look for a Savior, even the Lord Jesus Christ: so it reproveth such as regard not the obedience to the first Table, and duties of piety and holiness which are to be performed immediately to God. Our Savior, speaking of the first Table of the Law, calleth it the first and great commandment: first, in dignity and order; in dignity, because it comprehendeth and containeth the duties we owe to God: In order of Nature, because from the love of God proceedeth the love to our Neighbor, Likewise great, because it is of greatest weight and stretcheth farthest, and is chiefly to be respected of us. Hence it is, that when an expounder of the law asked him a question, Master, which is the greatest commandment in the Law? He answered him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, this is the first & the great commandment. These precepts are first commanded, but they are last practiced and least regarded. They are called of Christ, great: but they are very small and little, in the eyes of the greatest part and sort of men. If they lead an honest and civil life before men, if they deal justly and truly with their Neighbors, they think all is well, they esteem themselves as perfect men, though they live ignorantly, profanely, and irreligiously, though they have no knowledge of God and of his word, though they regard not his worship priuatelie or publikelie. If they can say, we are no Thieves, or Murderers, we are not defiled with Fornication, and Adultery, we pay every man his own, and do as we would be done unto; they suppose they bear as good a Soul to God, as the best, and shall be saved as soon as any. But ask them anything of the worship of God, or mark what their practice is touching his worship, they have no love to it, they take no delight in it, their meditation is not upon the word, their care is not to sanctify the Sabboath, and consequently the duties which they perform toward men, have no right ground to stand upon, and therefore, though they may bring profit to others, yet can they minister no comfort to themselves. The first Table is the heart of all Religion, and the foundation whereupon the duties of Righteousness are built. If they proceed not from a religious respect to God, they are as an house set upon the Sand, which wanteth a sure ground-work.

Secondly, we are put in mind from hence, not to care over much for earthly things, or to run so far after them that we forget our selves where we are. True it is, we are bound and charged in duty to use the means that God hath appointed for us, and to exercise our selves with diligence, labor, and industry in our callings; but we must not trust in these means and put our confidence in them, and distrust the care and providence of God toward us. There is a double care for the things of this Life: there is a good and godly care, which is necessary for everyone; the contrary whereof, is to be careless, idle, wasting, and spending vnthristily and wickedly, such things as are gotten by our labor. This providence and fore-cast is commended and commanded in many places of the Scripture. This the Apostle teacheth and speaketh off, 1. Tim. 5. If there be any that provideth not for his own, and namely for them of his household, he denieth the faith, and is worse then an Infidel. The other sort of care, is a care joined with grief and pensiuenesse, and of this the Apostle saith, I would have you without care. This care is an over-great care, disquieting the heart and maketh it bond to the unrighteous Mammon; this is always to be condemned, as that which breedeth in us a distrust in God's providence, and choketh the love of heavenly things, and therefore is hurtful and pernicious. This our Savior reproveth in the Gospel according to Matthew, Chap. 6. I say unto you, be not careful for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, nor yet for your Body what ye shall put on, &c. Behold the Fowles of the Heaven, for they neither sow nor reap. Which of you by taking care, can add one Cubite to his stature? And why care ye for Raiment? Behold how the Lilies of the field do grow, and yet they neither labor, nor spin. Therefore take no thought what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, or wherewith ye shall be clothed, for your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things, &c. We have the Lord to care for us, who knoweth our wants, and the means how to supply them. He made all things before we had our being, to teach us his providence. All the Mines of Silver and Gold, that lie in the heart of the earth, are his, and at his commandment. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, Heb. 13, Have your conversation without Covetousness, and be content with those things that ye have: for he hath said, I will not fail thee, neither forsake thee: so that we may boldly say, The Lord is mine helper, neither will I fear what man can do unto me. Can we therefore doubt of his succouring of us, and the supplying of our wants? If we consider his power, he is God: if his will, he is our Father. Will God forsake or forget his Creatures? Or can a father be unmindful or unmerciful toward his Children? This were to make him no God, no Father, which is Blasphemy and impiety. The Prophet David having himself had a long experience of God's watchful eye over him, teacheth us also to depend upon him, Psal. 55. Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall nourish thee: he will not suffer the righteous to fall forever. It is great vanity to be ouergreedy and gaping after the transitory things of this world, to be carking and caring in the seeking for them, and to eat the bread of sorrow in going about them. We should use them, as though we used them not: and enjoy them, as though we possessed them, not. To this purpose the Apostle Peter saith, Chap, 5. Cast all your care on him, for he careth for you. Wherefore then should we nourish immoderate and excessive cares in our bosoms, seeing we have assurance of God's care towards us? Let us trust in him, and be secure without all distrust and fear. If we have spent our days in the following and pursuing after the vain profits of this life, let us bethink our selves what we have done, and study to redeem the time that is to come, and consider wherefore we were created & redeemed. The things that are seen are temporal, the things that are not seen they are eternal. Let us above all prefer those things that are able best to prefer us. Let us not live here as men that spend all their days in catching after feathers, and following toys and trifles that cannot profit. If we should see a man wast his years, from day today, and from month to month, and from year to year, and having lived forty or fifty years hath done nothing but catch after shadows, run after Butter-Flies, follow after Gew-gawes, or behold the Moon-shine in the waters, or always look down upon the earth, or always blow up Feathers in the Air: would we not think him stark mad, and judge him out of his wits? Every man is ready to accuse him of Madness, no man would think he did him wrong to call him so, or crave pardon for that he hath done. But be not too hastye to censure such, and to pass the sentence of Madness upon them, least the Parable be applied to thyself, and be verified of thyself. The wise man, who knew best who are Fools, and what to judge of folly, preacheth and proclaimeth both in the entrance and end of his words, Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher, Vanity of Vanities, all is Uanity. If then these things be all vain, nay; Vanity it self: it is more then certain that such as spend their time, and wast their years, and consume their strength in catching after these toys, these shadows, these shows, these feathers, these follies, these trisles, and spend more years in pursuing after these earthly things, then they do hours in attaining Heavenly things, may truly be accounted Fools, or Mad-men, or sottish, or such as are possessed with a Spirit of giddiness, that run up and down hither and thither, and know not what they do.

We use commonly to pittye such as are mad and beside themselves and out of their right wits. None are farther out of the way, nor more destitute of true Wisdom then these men are, that have the least care of the best things, and the greatest care of the least things. Let us beeware, least while we think our selves to be wise, we become stark fools; while we think our selves spiritual, we be proved to be carnal: and while we loath madness and folly in others, we love madness and folly in our selves?

Lastly, seeing spiritual things must be placed and preferred before earthly, we learn another duty from hence, namely that we ought to make greatest account of the greatest blessings, and such as are highest of all, must also be highest in our estimation. These we ought especially to pray for, of the want of these, we must have a special feeling. We are ready to ask for our daily bread: but we do not desire the bread of life, we do not hunger and thirst after Righteousness. We are wholly ignorant of the right manner and method of praying, we regard not to observe the order which God hath ordained.

Christ Jesus instrcting us to pray, and leaving us a perfect pattern how to make prayer, both for matter and method, hath made this the fourth Petition, to have our daily bread given unto us. But we will not pray after this manner, we will not observe this direction, we make this our principal care, we make it the first Petition, nay; we make it both first and second, the third and sournth, the fifth and sixth: we make it the beginning and the ending, we set it before and behind, we enter with it, we conclude with it, we make it all in all, to have earthly blessings, and temporal commodities, and bodily necessities supplied unto us. What a shame is it unto us, that if we will not know the preeminence of heavenly things, above these mortal and transitory vanities, we should be such great strangers at home and so ignorant of our selves and of those parts whereof we consist. Who is so simple that doth not understand, that the soul is more noble and excellent then the body? If then it be more worthy as being a spirit, an immortal spirit: ought we not in the first place to provide for it? Ought we not to adorn it with all spiritual graces? Ought we not so to quallifie it, as that it may be inheritor of eternal glory? Let us therefore affect the things of certain abode, and seek after Wisdom, Faith, Sanctification, and the true Riches of the Spirit. If our Treasure be in Heaven, our hearts will be there also.

Let us lay up and lock up our Treasure in Immortality: let us be sure to lay a good foundation against the time to come. One thing is necessary, this is the good part that shall not be taken away from us. All human things are full of uncertainties, and the means of their decaying and vanishing are manifold, the Rust, the Moth, the Canker, the Thief, beside a thousand other casualties that take them away from us. It is an holy and heavenly admonition given unto us by Christ, Math, 6. First seek the Kingdom of God and his Righteousness, and then all other things shall be ministered unto you. This checketh and controlleth the preposterous order and bad practice of most men in their callings, they set the wrong end forward, they labor first of all to get wealth and welfare from day today, and from year to year, but never think of the root of welfare, and from what Fountain all earthly blessings spring, to wit; from the grace of God. Let us employ our pains to get God's favor, and then transitory things, Wealth, Peace, Honor, Liberty, and such like will follow, so far as they shall be expedient for us: otherwise, all our abundance shall turn to be our bane, woe, and destruction, all things shall be accursed unto us, our Table shall be made a snare to take us and torment us. The grace of God in Christ is sufficient to make a man blessed: and without it, all other things (though we had them in the greatest measure) cannot free us from cursedness. Now it is impossible that ever we should seek for these gracious gifts of God, except we feel our own misery in the want of thē. It is the want of health which we desire to have restored, & the feeling of our disease which we desire to have removed, that driveth us to the Pysician. And we have no promise to obtain earthly things, except we seek them as we ought to seek them, and follow the right manner that God hath left unto us to find them. Many seek after them, and pray for them; but they do not obtain, because they ask amiss. It is our duty, not only to pray for lawful things, but also in a lawful manner. A man may do a good thing after an evil manner: it is in our actions, so it may be in our prayers. An indirect and unsanctified order, may mar and corrupt a good and godly prayer. To conclude therefore, let us know, that this grace and favor of God so often remembered in Paul's Epistles, and so often craved and prayed for, to be bestowed upon the Saints, is only able to give satisfaction and contentment unto the soul to stay and rest upon, and therefore we ought above all other things to labor earnestly to feel it in our hearts. Indeed, it seemeth nothing and base in his eyes that hath it not: but when a man once knoweth the worth and value of it, and tasteth the sweet comforts of it within him, he is ready to sell all that he hath to enjoy it and retain it, he is content to renounce and forsake all Dignity and Honor, all Glory and Praise, all Health and Beauty, all Friends and Favor, all Wealth and Treasure, all Joy and Delight, all Mirth and Melody, yea; Brethren and Sisters, and Lands, and Wife, and Children, and all things that may be dear unto him, rather than depart from this Jewel of grace, far in price above all the Jewels of this World. It is with us in respect of spiritual things, as it fareth with the buyer, while he is in buying his commodity before he is possessed of it, according to the description of Solomon, Prov. 20. It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone apart, he boasteth. He diminisheth the goodness of it, he saith it is to much, it is not worth the money you ask for it, but when he hath purchased and possesseth it, he praiseth his penniworths, and judgeth it better then his money. So is it with all Heavenly graces, so long as we are destitute of them, we think them not worth our labor and travel, & seeking, and enjoying, we esteem every hour too much, that is spent in following the means appointed to obtain them, and albeit God call unto us to come, to buy and eat, to come I say, and buy Wine and Milk without Silver & without money, yet we have no ears to hear, nor leisure to attend, nor hearts to consider of his calling. But when once we have found thē, and know the just price and value of them, we would not loose them for all the World, nor for a thousand worlds if they were offered unto us: nay we are willing to sell all we have, to have them continue and abide with us, according to the counsel of the same Solomon, Prov. 23, 23. Buy the truth, but sell it not, likewise wisdom, and instruction, and understanding. Let us therefore grow in love with this grace of God, that we may have our hearts established with it. Let us do that now which we would do at the last gasp and breath. Then we are ready to renounce the World, and to prefer one drop of grace and faith before a Kingdom. Let us now begin to learn wisdom, let us prostrate our selves before the Throne of grace, let us never give rest to our souls until we find it, and let us sue unto him that is the Author and Fountain of all grace, to wit; Christ Jesus, to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost be all glory and praise forever, Amen.

P-WA2-2. A commentary upon the fourth book of Moses, called Numbers Containing, the foundation of the church and common-wealth of the Israelites, while they walked and wandered in the wilderness. Laying before us the unchangeable love of God promised and exhibited to this people ... Herein also the reader shall find more then five hundred theological questions, decided and determined by William Attersoll, minister of the word. - Attersoll, William, d. 1640., Attersoll, William, d. 1640. CHAP. I.

1 The Lord spake again unto Moses in the Wilderness of Sinai, in the Tabernacle of the Congregation, in the first day of the second month, in the second year after they were come out of the Land of Egypt, saying:

2 Take ye the sum of all the Congregation of the children of Israel, after their Families, the households of their Fathers, with the number of their names: to wit, all the males man by man. And so forward unto the end of the 16. verse.

WE have shown already, that Moses in the ten first chapters, prepareth the people of Israel, to undertake their journey toward the promised Land, the land of Canaan. If they had been taken unprepared and unprovided, it would have stopped their course, and hindered their way, and encouraged their enemies. Wherefore there is order taken in the first place, that all should be in readiness, fitted to go, and rightly disposed to attain the end of their desires. In these chapters, we must consider three things. First, the numbering of the people, & taking the sum of them. Secondly, laws are prescribed how to keep themselves pure and holy in their journeys. For how should the Lord their God go with them, unless they walked in holiness? Thirdly, the manner of their going is delivered, in what sort they were to proceed. The numbering of the people is set down in the four first chapters. The laws of sanctification are handled in the five chapters following, to wit; the 5, 6, 7, 8, & 9. chapters. The manner of their journey in the tenth and last chapter.

The taking of the number of the Israelites, and setting down the sum of them (which is the argument & drift of the four first chapters) is of two sorts; the one of the people, the other of the Priests and Levites that ministered before God, and served in the Tabernacle of the congregation. The gathering of the sum of the people is in the two first chapters: the numbering of the tribe of Levi is in the 3. & 4. chap. Touching y^e numbering of the people, we have a rehearsal and reckoning up of their persons in the first chapter: and of the ordering and disposing of them under several Ensigns and Regiments in the second chapter.

This first chapter, into which we are now entered, cōtaineth these two points: the former is the taking of the sum of the people of Israel in the wilderness of Sinai: the latter is the exempting of the Levites, together with the cause wherefore they were not numbered. So then, we see who they were that were numbered, and then who were not numbered. Touching the former, it comprehendeth both the commandment of God to number them, and the obedience of Moses. The commandment of God is amplified by sundry circumstances, as of place, of time, and manner of doing. The place is twofold, general in the desert of Sinai, where the Law was given: and special in the Tabernacle of the Congregation, from whence God promised he would declare himself unto them, and tell all things which he would give in commandment unto the children of Israel. For we must know there were three places, out of which God gave audience to Moses, and used to speak unto him. One was at the door of the Tabernacle, where the Altar of the burnt offerings was, as Exod. 29, 42. This shall be a continual burnt offering in your generations at the door of the Tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord, where I will make appointment with you, to speak there unto thee. Another was out of the cloud of pillar, Num. 12, 5. But this for the most part did concur with the other, inasmuch as the pillar of the cloud did most usually stand in the door of the Tabernacle, whensoever the Lord did from thence speak unto Moses. The third was the Mercy-seat, which was the chief and principal place, Numb. 7, 89. When Moses went into the Tabernacle to speak with God, he heard the voice of one speaking unto him from the Mercy-seat, that was upon the Ark of the testimony between the two Cherubims, and he spake to him.

The second circumstance, is the time when God commanded the people to be numbered, that is, the first day of the second month, and of the second yere, after they were come out of the land of Egypt. By this it appeareth that the Israelites abode in the desert of Sinai almost an whole year. For they came into that wilderness, the first day of the third Moneth, in the first year, Exod. 19, 1: and they continued in that place unto this time, neither did they remove their Tents before the twentieth day of the second Moneth of the second year, as appeareth, chap. 20, 11, of this book. The cause of this long stay and continuance in this wilderness was, because God would have his people thoroughly taught and instructed in all things belonging to his worship and service, before they inhabited and possessed the Land of promise. For within this space of time, the Lord published the Law in Mount Sinai, commanded the Tabernacle to be built, which Moses erected the first day of the second year, and in the days following of the first month, he gave them Laws touching the sundry sorts of sacrifices, and touching the difference of clean and unclean, prescribed at large in the book of Leviticus.

The third circumstance is the manner of their numbering, namely, that Moses & Aaron must take other Princes, the heads of y^e house of their Fathers to be helpers and assistants unto them, who joining with them, must take the sum of all the Congregation of y^e Children of Israel, after their families and households of their Fathers from 20 year old and above, all that go forth to the war in Israel. Whereby we see in this particular numbering, who are excepted and exempted; to wit, first, all that were strangers from y^e Children of Israel, Moses did not meddle with them. Secondly, women, for he was charged to take account only of the males. Thirdly, such as were under twenty year old. Fourthly, old men that were not fit for Shielde and Spear, or to draw the sword. Fifthly, such as were maimed, or impotent, or sickly & diseased, are also essoined by this Law, and have as it were a passport given unto them,

[Question 1] In this division two questions arise, which are to be answered. First, touching this numbering, whether it were the same which is mentioned in the Book of Exodus? I answer▪ [Answer.] there is a threefold numbering of them described by Moses; first, that in Exodus, chapt. 30. The second is in this chapter: the last is afterward in this book, chapt. 26. These sums were taken upon several occasions, at several times, for several ends, and differ much in the number of such as were accounted, as may appear by the several comparing of one of them with another.

Secondly, it may be demanded for what [Question 2] cause God commandeth a particular account & sum to be taken of his people, to whom they were well known. I answer, [Answer.] not because God would understand whether they wer sufficient for number, or able for strength, to buckle and encounter with their enemies, forasmuch as nothing is unknown to him, nothing is hard to him, or impossible for him to bring to pass, who is able to save as well with a few, as with many. The causes are these: First, for order sake▪ that there should be no occasion of contention for primacy or precedency, but that every Tribe and family should know his place and time when to remove, and when to stand still; when to fight with their enemies, and in every point what to do. Secondly, that such things as were to be paid for the use of y^e Tabernacle, might the more easily be collected and gathered, when they were separated according to their Tribes, and the Tribes according to the families, & the families according to the household, man by man. Thirdly, to make manifest the truth of his promise, and the power of his hand: his truth, in performing his promise, made long ago to Abraham, y^t he would increase his posterity: in power, partly in multiplying the people so greatly in so short a time, and partly in feeding and sustaining them in the wilderness, without harvest or husbandry, without planting or tilling, without sowing of Corn, or without feeding & breeding of Cattle. Fifthly, to testify his exceeding great love toward them, and special care over them. Such things as are dear unto us, we delight oftentimes to look upon them and to take the number of them, lest any of them should be lost. A faithful shepherd will many times tell the sheep committed unto him, lest any of them should be missing. So in this Commandment to have all his people numbered, is set forth an infallible token of his care and providence toward them. Lastly, they are severally and distinctly numbered every Tribe by himself, that in time to come it might be certainly known and perceived, of what Tribe & family Christ Jesus the promised Messiah should be borne: for as much as according to the ancient promise uttered by the mouth of Jacob and other Prophets, he should be borne of the Tribe of Judah, and of the house of David, to whom also he is often promised. Now let us come to the doctrines of this division.

Verse 2, 3. Take the sum of all the Congregation of the Children of Israel, &c: from twenty year old and above, all that go forth to the war in Israel, &c. We see in these words who is the Author of this numbering of the people, not Moses, not Aaron, not the heads of the house of their Fathers, but God alone who hath sole authority both over Princes & people. From hence we might observe, that God is the director, commander, and instructor of his people: and therefore we should depend upon him, and ask counsel at his mouth. But we will not stand upon every particular circumstance▪ nor examine every word; here let us mark who they were that God would have numbered, not women, but males: not children, not old men, not impotent men, but such as are able to handle the sword, and to draw the bow, and to fight against their enemies for their lives, for their wives, for their children, and for the maintenance of God's worship. [Doctrine 1] This teacheth us, that a godly man may lawfully be a warrior. If war were not in it self lawful, God would never take order in this place, to have a muster taken of such as are able to bear arms True it is, every good ordinance and profession may be abused, and nothing is so well instituted, but by man's corruption it may be wrested, and the right use thereof overturned. We see in this place, in this Commandment of God▪ that his Church and people may lawfully take up weapons, and make war against their enemies. Abraham is said to be the Father of the faithful, and the faithful to be carried into his bosom, and to sit down with him in the Kingdom of Heaven: Yet he made war, and over threw the enemies that had spoiled Sodom, and carried away the riches of it as a prey; and was not reprov'd of Melchizedek, the Priest of the living God, but refreshed together with his army. The like we might say of Moses, Joshua, the Judges, and other godly Kings, who fought many battles by the commandment of the Lord. The Scripture teacheth that David a man after God's own heart, did fight the battles of God, and the people of God standing in battle array against the Philistines, are called, The host of the living God. When the Soldiers heard the preaching of John, the fore-runner of Christ, they came unto him, and asked of him what they must do: he did not dissuade them from war, or persuade them to cast away their weapons, but gave them directions how to behave themselves in that honorable profession, Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely, and be content with your wages. Neither did Peter, being sent for to come to Cornelius, a captain of the Italian Band, a devout man, and one that feared God command him to follow a new trade of life. Neither did Paul persuade Sergius Paulus the Deputy, a prudent man, to renounce that calling: which no doubt they would have done, if the profession of Chivalry, had not stood with the profession of Christianity. The Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrews, teacheth touching the faithful, that through faith they subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained the promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, of weak were made strong, waxed valiant in battle, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. All these testimonies and examples of the old and New Testament, set forth expressly this truth, that it is a lawful thing and allowed to the godly to follow the wars.

The reasons to confirm this truth do follow. [Reason 1] First, God doth command it▪ and therefore doth allow it as just and lawful For he doth not will things because they are just, but they are just because he willeth them. Now the holy Scripture affordeth sundry testimonies of this truth, and setteth down the precepts & commandments that God gave to his people to be their warrant to use their weapon. So he commanded them to destroy the Canaanites, The Lord thy God shall give thē before thee, and thou shalt smite them, thou shalt utterly destroy them, thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor have compassion on them. Thus he commanded Saul to slay the Amalekites, who set upon the people of God when they were come out of the Land of Egypt; and as God commanded the work, so he gave a blessing unto it, so that those enemies were brought to destruction. For we read in the holy history, that God said unto him, I remember what Amalek did to Israel, how they laid wait for them in the way, as they came up from Egypt, now therefore go and smite Amalek and destroy ye all that pertaineth unto them, and have no compassion on them, but slay both man and woman, both infant and suckling, both ox and sheep, both Camel and Ass. Many other precepts are found in the word of God, which we cannot stand upon. But God the Lord of hosts commandeth nothing y^t is unjust & unlawful, therefore war rightly used is lawful & warranted.

Secondly, as God gave direct and express [Reason 2] commandment, so the people of God going forth to battle were to call upon him for a blessing, and to sanctify the work by prayer, and in so doing have been heard. Things in their own nature unlawful, are so foul and filthy, that no prayer and invocation of God's name can cleanse them: nay▪ they make such prayer foul and abominable. If an idolater going to worship his Idol, and serve the creature which is the work of man's hands, should pour out his prayers all day long, as y^e Priests of Baal did to be heard, O Baal hear us: what were this but a bellowing or beating of the air, or what profit should they receive by it? But the people of God having prayed for good success, building themselves upon the commandment of God, upon the promise of blessing, and upon the example of the faithful, have earnestly prayed, and effectually obtained that which they asked and desired. This we see in the practice of the sons of Reuben, and of Gad, and of half the Tribe of Manasseh, Ualiant men, able to bear shield and sword, and exercised in war: when they made war against the Hagarims, they were holpen against them, & they delivered into their hands; for they cried to God in the battle, & he heard them because they trusted in him. Seeing therefore God commandeth, and blesseth, and heareth, and delivereth such as go to war, it must needs follow▪ that war & true religion may well stand together, so that one and the same man may be both a warrior and yet religious.

Let us make use of this point. First, it serveth [Use 1] to convince the cursed sect of the Anabaptists and other spiritualists, who glory of the Spirit, and under a color of seeking peace, and establishing unity and concord over all the world, do bring in detestable doctrines and absurd opinions, as if none were the true Church but only themselves. True it is, it were to be wished, that all persons and nations maintained amity and league one with another, and that there might be no more use of the sword: but this is rather to be wished, then expected: and may sooner be spoken, then it will be obtained and effected. They object the Law of God, Thou shalt not kill, [Objection 1] Exod. 20, and the words of Christ, Resist not evil, [Answer.] Math. 5. But these and such like places must be understood of private persons, and of private revenge. It is unlawful for any person without a public calling to that duty, to kill another: but a public Officer may and ought to do it. So did Moses kill the Egyptian: so did Phineas those that committed fornication, as appeareth afterward in this book: so did Elijah to the Priests of Baal that committed Idolatry, and seduced y^e people. And thus it is in all lawful wars, for soldiers have a public calling, they seek not private revenge: and therefore the battle is said, Not to be theirs, but the Lord of Hosts. Likewise there is a private revenge which Christ forbiddeth and condemneth; but the public revenge committed to the Magistrate who beareth not the sword in vain, must be duly and diligently executed, that evil may be taken away out of the City of God. For as in necessity it is good for man's body to cut off a rotten and dead member betimes, lest the sound parts be corrupted, and the whole body perish: so it is profitable for the safety and security of human society, to sweep away as dung hurtful and noisome Citizens, before they infect others that live among them.

Wherefore so long as wicked men live up on the face of the earth, and so long as the Devil stirreth up his instruments to set themselves against God and his truth, and his servants, so long there will be use of the sword and of the Magistrate to handle it. Wherefore the Apostle calleth upon us to call upon God for Kings and Princes, and them that are in authority, that under them we may live a peaceable and quiet life▪in all godliness & honesty. If then these be the ends of Magistracy, to maintain peace, to settle quietness, to establish religion, and to confirm honesty of manners, surely it may be discharged and performed by one that is religious and fearing God. Besides, God promised as a special grace and favor to the Church of Christ in the New Testament, that Kings should be the nursing Fathers, & Queens the nursing Mothers of it: which could not be unless a godly and faithful man might bear the Office and discharge the calling of a Magistrate, and take vengeance of the wicked, & maintain the cause of the righteous.

Secondly, we learn hereby, that no calling [Use 2] and condition whatsoever, so it be accompanied with faith and the fruits thereof can separate us from salvation, and shut us out of God's Kingdom. For seeing a man may be a good Christian▪ and a great warrior, which profession many times is most stained and corrupt; it cannot exclude any from eternal life, if themselves by infidelity & iniquity do not exclude themselves. And albeit such persons many times have no regard of equity, or honesty or word, or oath, or Law, or shame, or conscience, but entitle themselves to all that their hand can lay hold upon, as men wholly bent upon spoil and rapine: yet the cause hereof is not in the profession, but in the professor: not in the war, but in the warrior: and therefore it pleased GOD to show forth his great mercy in calling to his marvelous light many men out of that kind of life. Such were the Centurion that came to Christ to have his servant healed, who is commended for his excellent faith: Cornelius is reported to be a godly man, and to have under him godly soldiers.

Seeing therefore warfare is no hateful [Use 3] kind of life in it self, such as are soldiers and fight in the field have no less access to salvation then others, and shall rest in Abraham's bosom, who was also a warrior as well as they; if they labor to be the children of Abraham, and study not so much to be soldiers, as Christian soldiers, which aim at the glory of God in all their actions, and not seek to satisfy their own lusts. How many are there that delight in nothing but in effusion of blood and all oppression? in doing violence, and robbing without difference of friend or foe, brother or enemy? If we profess the name of Christ Jesus, and believe to be saved through his name, let us so live in war, as we remember under whose banner we fight, and whose name we do profess, and whose blessing we look for.

If we be assured and persuaded of the lawfulness of the war, why do we not carry our selves as men that fight not our own battles, but the battles of the Lord of hosts? And if we do not run as desperate men, or as the horse that rusheth into the battle, why do we not consider that our soul is in our hand, that we are in continual danger of death, and must give an account of the things done in this flesh, whether they be good or evil?

Lastly, as the godly may lawfully make War, so they must be careful to observe such conditions as make it lawful and allowable: otherwise, the running of men together in hostile manner after the manner of wild beasts, to shed blood, and to take away life, is of it self most savage & barbarous.

The conditions to be observed are these. First, it must be proclaimed by y^e Magistrate, and such as have authority: otherwise it is private revenge, not public justice. We must not be like Simeon and Levi, the sons of Jacob, who having wrong and indignity offered of the Shechemites, revenged their own cause without authority or calling; for They drew their sword, and went into the City boldly, and slew every male, and took the spoil both of the place and people. They had no commandment or commission from Jacob their father, as appeareth in the reproof uttered unto them, & the curse denounced against them, Ye have troubled me, and made me to stick amongst the Inhabitants of the Land. And in another place, Cursed be their wrath, for it was fierce: and their anger, for it was cruel: I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel. We see therefore that the people must not run upon their own head, nor take arms in hand at their own pleasure, but must look for the warrant and direction of the Magistrate.

Secondly, it belongeth to such as go unto war against another nation and people, to offer them conditions of peace▪ and to receive such to mercy as yield unto them, thereby to avoid the shedding of blood, and to show themselves inclined to mercy. This proclaiming of peace is taught by the Lord himself. Deut. 20. When thou comest near unto a City to fight against it, thou shalt offer it peace: and if it answer thee again peaceably, and open unto thee, then shall all the people that is found there n, be tributaries unto thee, and serve thee: but if it shall make no peace with thee, but make war against thee, then thou shalt besiege it, and smite the Males thereof with the edge of the sword. Likewise when Joab pursued Sheba, a Traitor against David, and besieged him in Abel, so that they cast up a Mount against the City, & began to cast down the wall, There cried a wise woman out of the City: Hear, hear, I pray you, say unto Joab, Come thou hither, that I may speak with thee: and when he came nere unto her, the woman said: Hear the words of thine handmaid, they spake in the old time, saying, They should ask of Abel, and so have they continued. In which words she alludeth unto the former Law, that before any City were ouerthrown, or any people put to the sword, peace should be propounded, and the Citizens that yielded be received to mercy.

This is so equal and reasonable, that the unbelievers among the Gentiles thought it expedient and necessary to accept of such as yielded; albe t the Ram (a warlike instrument in those days, described by Josephus in the wars of the Jews) had shaken the wall, that is, were even ready to fall down. And the Turks themselves (proud and merciless enemies) that spare not to shed Christian blood, and pour it out as water, are persuaded that God will not prosper them in their affairs & assaults▪ except they first make unto their enemies some of•er of peace. This putteth us in mind, that we should indi•e our hearts to s•e• mercy as much as may be; and not rage with fire and sword, but remember the common condition of mankind, the uncertainty of all human things, and the danger that may fall upon our selves.

Thirdly, keep all lawful promises, even to the enemy; which is a token of an upright heart. When the spies that were sent to Jericho, and made a faithful promise, and bound it with an oath to save Rahab and her fathers house from the common destruction of that City, Joshua the General of the host, was so far from denying to stand to that oath, that he called the two men that had spied out the Country, and said unto them; Go into the Harlots house, and bring out thence the Woman, and all that she hath, as ye sware unto her. Therefore the Prophet teacheth, that he shall dwell in the Tabernacle of the Lord, and rest in his holy hill, That sweareth to his own hindrance, and changeth not. If there be no faith in our words, nor truth in our dealings, nor constancy in our promises, but that we can take up the name of God in our mouths and use it as a color to hide our bloody deseignes; we must not look for any blessing from GOD, nor to have him to go out with our armies.

Fourthly, let the ends of our wars be holy and righteous, not tyranny, not vainglory, but to maintain the honor and glory of God, to defend the Church and Commonwealth from violence and invasion, and to establish peace and concord in our borders. The Heathen by Natures light saw these three ends of a just war, first to withstand force by force, and to defend themselves and the things that belong unto them. Secondly, to recover things lost, and regain things taken away. Thirdly, to revenge wrongs and injuries offered, being before provoked. Many examples are set down in the Scriptures, of the godly Kings, and other Governors, who propounded these ends unto themselves, and so were able to warrant to themselves and others, the bearing of Arms.

Fifthly, we must not suffer lewd & evil persons, incorrigible and vnreformable, to remain in the host of God, who may endanger the whole host, and bring the curse of God upon them. For how should God give a blessing to such wicked instruments? or how should he fight their battles that fight against him? Hence it is, that he commandeth, Deut. 23. When thou goest out with the host against thine enemies, keep thee then from all wickedness. &c. When the Israelites gathered themselves together to smite At, they could not prosper, but were smitten down & overcome by their enemies, Because they had sinned and transgressed the covenant of God which he commanded them, for they had even taken of the excommunicate thing, and had stolen and dissembled also, and put it even with their own stuff. So long as Achan remained among them, who had taken two hundred shekels of silver, a goodly Babylonish garment, and a wedge of gold contrary to the commandment of God, they could not stand before their enemies, but were constrained to turn their backs.

This example doth Phinehas afterward propound as a warning to the Tribe of Reuben & Gad and the half Tribe of Manasseh, ch. 22 Did not Achan the son of Zerah trespass grievously in the excommunicate thing and wrath fell on all the Congregation of Israel? and this man alone perished not in his wickedness. This is the cause why our wars do not prosper, that when we have sent out our armies by thousands, they have returned by hundreds: and when we have sent out hundreds, they have come home by ten's, because they have given themselves to all wickedness and ungodliness: they have broken out into all disorder, and committed all abominations with greediness, and none is careful to restrain them and reform them. They have not desired God to guide them, and as a Captain to go out with their armies; they have had nothing to do with him, nor he with them: they have been led by the devil, he hath gone out with them and returned home with them, & taketh the government of their whole lives; they live to him, and without repentance they die to him. Sixthly, that we may use our wars aright it behooveth us to put our trust in God alone, to depend upon him, to pray unto him, and to look for safety and help from him. It is not the Shield that can defend us, it is not the sword that can deliver us, it is not the horse that can save us: the best shield is, The Shield of faith, the surest armor is The breastplate of righteousness the helmet of salvation, & the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. The Prophet Jeremiah teacheth, chapt. 17. Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and with-draweth his heart from the Lord. David putting confidence in God when he went to encounter with Goliath, put off Saul's armor, and said, Thou comest unto me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield, but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of boasts, the GOD of the host of Israel, whom thou hast railed upon. Thus did Jehoshaphat arm himself when he was assaulted by his enemies. 2. Chron. 20. There is no strength in us to stand before this great multitude that cometh against us, neither do we know what to do: but our eyes are toward thee. Saneherib glorying in his own strength, and boasting of his own power, is driven to flight with his whole army, 2 Kings 19.25. We have seen sometimes the swift not to gain the prize in running, nor the valiant the victory in fighting▪ nor the strong the praise in wrestling: for as Sa•omon saith, Prov. 21. The horse is prepared against the day of battle, but saluat on is of the Lord. Such therefore as trust in the greatness of their own strength, and do not put their confidence in the living God, lie open as a prey to their enemies▪ and cannot look for God o be their deliverer. Seventhly, no man should go out to warfare but with greese of mind, and sorrow of heart. For albeit the war be lawful yet when the enemies are slain in battle, it is a defiling of men's hands, and a defacing of God's Image. God hath imprinted his Image in man, as he teacheth, Gen. 9, 6: in as much as in the image of God he made man. Likewise when David would have built a Temple unto God, it was said unto him 1, Chron. 22. Thou hast seed mu•h blood, and hast made great battles: thou shalt not build an house unto my name, for thou hast shed much blood upon the earth in my sight. Not that he imputeth it simply for a crime, but to give everyone a lesson and direction which is constrained to fight against his enemies▪ though the cause be just▪ and the quarrel lawful, that they should be grieved, to see the order of nature so troubled and perverted by reason of men's sins and wickedness. We ought so to live together, and love one another as brethren, and acknowledge our own flesh in all that are created after our likeness what corruption then and confusion is this that we shall be driven to destroy each other after this fashion? Wherefore, even in the time of war, he that putteth on armor against his enemies, and girdeth his sword by his side, must do it after a sort against his will, and with sorrow conceived in his heart, knowing that such outrage happeneth not without great iniquity of men; and desiring rather to live quietly, and to maintain peace and concord with all men, as far as it is possible, and as much as lieth in us, as if our hands were tied behind us from committing any outrage or evil deeds. Lastly, because the liberty & licentiousness of Soldiers is many times left free, and is without bit and bridle to restrain them, it belongeth to Captains and Governors of the host to range the common Soldier in good order and military discipline, that they break not out to endamage or destroy those whom they ought above all to protect and defend. War is judged and esteemed of them to be the time wherein laws are silent, and all things held lawful that their own heart lusteth after. Hence it cometh to pass, that there is such thirsting after goods, deflowring of virgins, ravishing of wives, slaughter of parents, robbing of houses, burning of Churches, and scorning of religion and all holy things, yea making a mock of Christ our Savior. So then, if severe discipline be not used, & order taken that the people living in peace be not abused, all things will be held lawful beside right and honesty: injuries will be accounted good dealing, and all things taken to be common, and to belong to him that first can seize upon them. It is said of the Centurion in the Gospel, that his authority was such over them that belonged to his band, that none durst oppose themselves against him, or resist his charge that he gave unto them, saying, I am a man also under the authority of another, and have Soldiers under me; and I say to one, go, and he goeth: and to another, Come and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doth it. This was a commendation both of the Captain that so ordered and ruled them, that he had them so obedient and serviceable unto him; and likewise of the Soldiers that would submit themselves unto his authority, and suffer themselves to be governed according to the martial laws of a well trained garrison. But of this point occasion will be offered to speak in this book afterward, chap. 21. ver. 28. and chap. 24. verse 20. and chap. 25. ver. 17. & chap. 31, 7.

[Verse 5] These are the names of the men that shall stand with you; of the tribe of Reuben, Elizur the son of Shedeur, &c. As this Book of Moses beareth the title of Numbers; so a great part of it is spent in numbering of the people, to assure us that God hath numbered those that are his, he keepeth the tale of them, & none are hidden from him, none escape his knowledge, or sight. We learn from hence that the Lord knoweth perfectly who they are that are his, both what their numbers and what their names are. When Israel had corrupted their ways and set up idolatry, so that Elias thought himself left alone; what said the Oracle of God, that made answer unto him? I have reserved unto myself seven thousand men, which have not bowed the knee to Baal. Where we see, the Lord saw not as man seeth, he knew those whom Elias could not know. To this end the Prophet saith, Psalm 147, 5. He counteth the number of the stars, and calleth them all by their names: albeit to man it be incredible and impossible, that he should number and name the stars in the firmament, yet this to him shall not be hard, much less impossible. Thus saith the Lord also by the Prophet Isaiah, Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things, and bringeth out their armies by numbers, and calleth them all by names: by the greatness of his power and mighty strength, nothing faileth. Hereunto we may refer that usual phrase of speech in the Scripture, that the names of the elect are said to be written in the book of life which God hath made: which is a borrowed speech from such records as are kept in a City, wherein the names of the Freemen and Cittizens in the same are written. All these testimonies are so many consents of the Scripture to prove and confirm this truth; namely, that the servants of GOD are known to him, and approved of him; not only in general, but specially and particularly, so that he is able both to number them, and to name them.

The reasons are not hard to be gathered. [Reason 1] First, the knowledge of God is so exact and perfect, that most secret things are known, and the smallest are regarded of him. What is a less matter, or of less moment then a Sparrow that doeth fall to the ground? Or the hairs that fall from the head? yet even these are ordered by him, and his divine providence ouerswayeth them. This Christ our Savior putteth in our minds, in the tenth chapter of Saint

Matthew, and the 29, 30. verses. Are not two Sparrowes sold for a Farthing? And one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father: yea, and the hairs of your head are numbered. If then, things so small and slight, and little regarded of men, be numbered of Almighty GOD; much more are we respected of him? And if our very hairs be numbered, much more are our names.

Secondly, Christ Jesus setteth forth himself [Reason 2] as the true Sheepeheard of his Sheep. A Sheepeheard knoweth his own Sheep, whereof he hath taken the charge and oversight. Christ is the Sheepeheard, the Church is the Flock: his word is the staff whereby he ruleth, and the pastures wherewith he feedeth them; and therefore he knoweth them all by their names. A good Sheepeheard oftentimes numbereth his Sheep, and misseth none of them but he seeketh the lost one. So is it with Christ: he is a far better Sheepeheard and more faithful then those that have the guidance and governance of such as are but for the belly and the slaughter; For he giveth his life for the Sheep. This he teacheth at large in the tenth Chapter of Saint John, and the 2.3. and 11. verses. I I am that good Sheepeheard: that good Sheepeheard that giveth his life for his Sheep: to him the Porter openeth, and the Sheep hear his voice, and he calleth his own Sheep by name, and leadeth them out. Seeing then, Christ is a faithful Sheepeheard, he cannot be ignorant of our numbers, or our names, or our natures.

Thirdly, all his people are evermore present [Reason 3] with him, wheresoever they be; yea albeit they be absent from him; yea albeit they have no being. He seeth them when they are from him, he knoweth them when they are not. Nathaniel was seen of Christ, and known by name, being far from him, while he was under the Fig-tree. Josiah was named of God long before he was borne, as we see in the first book of the Kings, chap. 13. and the second verse: (and so is Cyus, as appeareth in the prophesy of Isaiah.) For, when the Prophet was sent to cry out against the Altar at Bethel, he said; O Altar, Altar, thus saith the Lord: Behold, a child shall be borne to the house of David, Josiah by name, and upon thee shall he sacrifice the Priests of the high places that burn Incense upon thee, & they shall burn men's bones upon thee. This was threatened long before Josiah was borne, yet God knoweth his name before he was, and revealeth him as if he had been alive in that time.

The like we may say of Cyrus the deliverer of the Jews, whom the Lord nameth and appointeth to free his people from the bondage & captivity wherein they lived: albeit at that time he was not borne, nor in an hundred years after, nor Josiah in three hundred after his name was published. Seeing therefore the very hairs of our heads are numbered; seeing Christ is the good Shepherd of his Sheep; and seeing all things both past and to come are present with God, so that he beholdeth them with one act; we conclude, that the people of God are known to him, and that particularly.

[Use 1] The Uses. First, this giveth singular comfort to all God's children, if anything else be able to minister them comfort. If an earthly Prince should vouchsafe to look upon us, & show us this favor to single us out from the rest, and call us by our names, how would we rejoyce, and how much would we esteem that the King would stoop so low as to know us? So doth this doctrine seal up to our hearts this great consolation, that the King of heaven doth know us by our names. Are we then in trouble and persecution? Are we accounted silly men, obscure, base, and unregarded? Do we live as contemptible persons to the men of this world? and will they not once vouchsafe to know us? Let not this trouble or grieve us; let it not dismay or discomfort us, we cannot sink down in destruction; but rather let us lift up our heads, assuring our selves, that albeit they turn themselves from us, yet God looketh upon us; though they reproach us, yet he will respect us: and though they seek to root out our names from the earth, yet he will know us, and call us by our names. Thus the Lord speaketh to Moses, and encourageth him. Exod. 33. and showeth how he regardeth him in all trouble, because he knew him by name, Thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name. Where we see, he joineth these two together, Finding grace in his sight, and knowing him by name. The like doth Christ say to his Disciples that returned from preaching of the Gospel, In this rejoice not, that the spirits are subdued unto you: but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven. And indeed, what greater comfort can there be then this? If thou hadst all the delights and pleasures of this life for a season, and haddest thy name written in the black book of reprobation, and thy condemnation graven in thy forehead, what could the former allurements comfort thee? Or how could they drive horror and heaviness from thy heart? So when he sent out his Apostles, and gave them power to cast out unclean spirits▪ and to heal all sicknesses, having taught them that the hairs of their head were numbered; he addeth, Fear ye not them that kill the body, and are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell. So then, here we have the foundation of sound comfort laid before us, and this we must lay up in store against the day of temptation and time of trouble. For albeit we live now in time of peace and plenty: yet we know not how long they shall continue, and how soon they may be taken from us, and we be scourged with the contrary judgments

It is a rule in our holy Religion, that the Church must taste of the Cross▪ and God will try us this way, that we may be acquainted with our own infirmities; that we may be preserved from many grievous sins; that we should not be condemned with the Worlde; that others beholding God's hand correcting his Church for sin, might learn thereby to hate and abhor sin, and to love righteousness; and that the Church might gain glory to God's name, by striving for the truth unto the death. But when the cross is any way up on us▪ and we feel the sharpness of his rod we are ready to sink down to desperation and to say we are no more had in remembrance, as Psal. 10, 1. Why standest thou far off O Lord, and hidest thee in due time, even in affliction? And afterward, Psal. 22, 1, 2. My God, my God why hast thou forsaken me, and art so far• from my health, and from the words of my roaring? O my God, I cry by day, but thou hearest not: and by night, but have no audience. Thus are we inclined to judge in our miseries, and to think God to have forgotten us, and to be utterly absent from us. But if we in time of trouble remember him and his name, he will remember us and our names for good, & not for evil. If we can say in trouble, I will delight in thy statutes, I will not forget thy word: behold mine affliction & deliver me, for I have not forgottē thy law: we may lay this up as a truth, & plant it as a chief plant in the ground of our hearts, that God will never forget us, nor put us out of his sight forever. True it is, he will prove his people, and try their faith for a season, but he will never forsake them, nor leave them as a prey in the jaws of their enemies, who rejoice at their fall, and delight themselves in their adversities. And as true it is, that the ungodly triumph over them, & trample upon them, even as abjects and men out of the favor of God; but if we wait a little while, he will remember his people according to his mercy, and recompense his adversaries according to their iniquity. This doeth the Prophet declare, Psal. 10. where he complaineth of the fraud, wrong, rapine, and tyranny of the ungodly, He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten, he hideth away his face, and will never see: yet thou hast seen it, for thou beholdest mischief and wrong, that thou mayest take it into thine own hands, the poor committeth himself to thee, for thou art the helper of the fatherless.

Howsoever therefore the faithful say they are forsaken, and the unfaithful judge them also to be forsaken: yet there is great difference between the temptation of the one, and opinion of the other. The godly speak of themselves according to their present feeling and utter such words while the temptation is heavy upon them: howbeit at that time they are unfit judges of themselves & of their condition how it standeth between God & their souls. They are ready to speak according to their temptation; the ungodly utter their rash and uncharitable opinion: the devil broacheth his false and forged suggestion. The faithful indeed do oftentimes cry out in the bitterness and anguish of spirit, *How long wilt thou forget me, O Lord, forever? How long wilt thou hide thy face from me? And again, I will say unto God which is my rock, why hast thou forgotten me? Why go I mourning when the enemy oppresseth me? Why art thou cast down my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? Waite on God, for I will yet give him thanks, he is my present help, and my God. And Psal. 44. Up, why sleepest thou, O Lord; awake, be not far off forever: wherefor hidest thou thy face & forgettest our misery, and our affliction? For our soul is beaten down unto the dust, our belly cleaveth unto the ground: rise up for our succor, and redeem us for thy mercies sake. And in another place, Will the Lord absent himself forever, and will he show no more favor? Is his mercy clean gone forever, doth his promise fail for evermore? Hath God forgotten to be merciful? Hath he shut up his tender mercies wholly in displeasure? And I said, This is my death, &c. Thus do the faithful cry out and complain, as if they were without both faith and feeling of any favor of God: and yet in all these distresses and afflictions God is not absent from them, neither hath forgotten them. Some diseases of the body are so forcible and violent▪ that they seem to have taken away all life, and to have brought present death, yet afterward there is a recovery and raising up again contrary to the feeling of the person diseased, and the judgment of the beholders: thus standeth the case with many dear servants of God, who in the extremity of affliction, and brunt of temptation, seem to themselves and others to have utterly lost the life of faith, and light of grace, w^c in former times they have felt and enjoyed. The trees in winter seem to be dead, without sap, without leaves, without life; nothing appeareth to yield any hope of future fruit in time to grow upon them: but when the winter season is passed, & the Spring approacheth, they show forth by lively effects that they had life in them, and were not dead. The hour of temptation with the faithful is y^e time of Winter, they seem benumbed for a short season: but as they gather strength, and faith beginneth to spring up, they shall find and feel a present operation of unspeakable comfort. And hereunto our present doctrine in hand maketh a way, when it teacheth that God will show his help in time of need, seeing he knoweth the numbers and the names of us. When the Church was in great misery in Egypt, so that his people sighed for the bondage & cried, their cry for the bondage came up to God; and he said, *I have surely seen the trouble of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry, because of their Task-masters: for I know their sorrows. The Prophet Isaiah to this purpose joineth together their affliction and God's compassion, chap. 49. But Zion said, The Lord hath forsaken me, and the Lord hath forgotten me: Can a woman forget her child, and not have compassion on the son of her Wombe? Though they should forget, yet will I not forget thee; behold, I have graven thee upon the palm of mine hands, &c. Loe here what comfort is given against all the discomforts that happen unto us, and against all the disgraces and distresses that are thrown upon us: though men will not know us, but stand far from us, yet GOD will know us, and not be ashamed of us. Our particular estates, our particular names are not unknown to him: so that we may everyone of us say with the Prophet, The Lord hath called me from the womb, and made mention of my name from my mothers belly. Let us apply this promise unto our selves and esteem little to be judged by the corrupt judgment of man: neither let us sit in judgment upon our selves to esteem of our selves by our present feeling: for we are not upright judges in time of temptation, and we must walk by faith, not by feeling. For there may be faith, when we are void of feeling, as we heard before in the former examples: we suffer a kind of eclipse as the celestial lights do, but in the end recover the light which we seemed to have lost.

Secondly, we may gather from hence the [Use 2] woeful and wretched estate of all the ungodly, that think themselves happy and blessed men, and yet they find in the end, that they are the only unhappy men in the world, and that it had been good for them if they had neuet been borne. For better never to be borne, then to be borne to hell and destruction. Now as it is a great part of the comfort of all God's children, that he will know them; who as they have a regard to know God in this life, to know him in his word and other means appointed for their salvation, so shall they be known of God in his kingdom, and acknowledged before the Angels in heaven: so this is not the least of the misery belonging unto all that work iniquity, that God will not know them.

Here some man may say, [Objection.] It skilleth not what they do, or how they live, if GOD will take no knowledge of them. I answer, [Answer.] these men might think themselves in good case if God were ignorant of them, and knew not their lives. But all things are naked to him, & open before his eyes with whom we have to do. This the Prophet Jeremiah confirmeth in his prayer to God, Thou showest mercy unto thousands, and recompensest the iniquity of the fathers into the bosom of the children after them. O God the great & mighty, whose name is the Lord of hosts, great in counsel and mighty in work, for thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men, to give to everyone according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his works. If then he know and understand all things past, present, and to come, and all persons are evermore in his eye, how can he be said not to know the ungodly? The answer is, there is a twofold kind of knowledge spoken of in the Scripture. One is, that knowledge whereby he alloweth, accepteth, and approveth of his creatures to be his, vouchsafing to them his special favor, & loving them as his own children: of this the Psalmist saith, The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous or godly, but the way of the wicked shall perish. So the Apostle saith, Rom. 11, 2. God hath not cast away his people whom he knew before, that is, whom he approved and loved The other is that knowledge whereby he disalloweth of the wicked, and disavoweth them to be his; and therefore he will not show forth his mercy toward them: and of this we now speak, which setteth forth the greatness of their misery and unhappiness. Though he know them by the general knowledge of his power and providence, yet he will not see them with the eye of his pity, nor touch them with the hand of his favor, nor hear them with the ear of his bounty, nor speak unto them with the mouth of his goodness, nor compass them with the arm of his protection, nor come unto them with the feet of his presence, nor behold them with the Face and countenance of his loving kindness. Can there be a more miserable condition described, and felt then this is? Yet these are they that count themselves happy, and entitle themselves to the Kingdom of heaven. But as soon shall they bring heaven and earth together, and make an agreement between fire and water, between God and the devil between righteousness and unrighteousness, as procure the love and favor of God toward them, so long as they walk in their evil ways. For, as they regard not to know God, in his word; so he regardeth not to know them with his grace in this life, and to crown them with his glory in the life to come. These are they that Job speaketh of, chap. 21. ver. 14, 15. Who say unto God, Depart from us: for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways. Who is the Almighty that we should serve him? And what profit should we have, if we should pray unto him? Though they speak not this with their tongues, nor utter such words with their mouths: yet such corruption and Atheism is in their hearts. For there is a double kind of voice, and a twofold speaking. One with the tongue, the other with the heart: and the fool speaketh with them both, sometimes with the former, and sometimes with the latter. On the other side the Lord recompenceth them according to their words and works, and meeteth with them according to their sins: for he will profess unto them his despising of them as they have despised him, and his passing by of them in the day of judgment, as they have passed by him in the day of his mercy. This is it which Christ himself speaketh in the manifestation of the just condemnation of the Reprobate, Math. 7, 23. Then will I profess to them, I never knew you: depart from me ye workers of iniquity. Here is a description of the estate of all unreformed and unrepentant persons, God disclaimeth them, & commandeth them to depart out of his sight. Both these are joined together, and both of them are most fearful. If God once disclaim us, who can lay claim to us but the devil? If we may not enjoy the presence of God, whose fellowship shall we enjoy but the devils? And mark with me how God justly repayeth such men, and findeth them out in their own wickedness. They say to God in their life, as we heard before out of Job, Depart from us: and God in the last day shall say to them, Depart from me. They say in their life to God, we desire not the knowledge of thy ways: and he shall say in the end of the world, I know you not, ye workers of iniquity. They will not know the Lord who he is, and the Lord will not know them with his favor, but with his fury: not with mercy, but with judgment: not with glory, but with shame and contempt poured upon them.

Hence it is, that in another place amplifying the last judgment he saith, Then shall they begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets: But he shall say, I tell you, I know ye not whence you are; depart from me ye workers of iniquity. Let us therefore all betimes seek to know the Lord, to have him dwelling in our hearts, to call upon him, and to attend unto his word with fear and reverence, that he may know us and accept of us. When a certain man going down from Jerusalem to Jericho fell amongst thieves, was robbed of his goods, stripped of his raiment, wounded in his body, and left half dead, did it not increase his sorrow and misery, that a certain Priest saw him and passed by on the other side? And that likewise a Levite came near to the place, looked upon him, and departed his way without counsel or comfort, without succor or assistance? This did add to the heap of his misery: but how much more lamentable shall it be, when we shall lie not half dead, but without any life of God in us▪ without any pity shown unto us, without any Samaritan to have compassion upon us, to bind up our wounds, to pour in oil and wine, to give us any ease, or to make provision for us? When God will not know us, none of his creatures shall acknowledge us, or comfort us, or call us by our names. It shall be with us, as with the rich man, to whō the Scripture vouchsafeth to give no name, as not worthy to be spoken of, verifying the saying of the Wiseman, Prov. 10, 7. The memorial of the just shall be blessed: but the name of the wicked shall rot. Seeing therefore, God promiseth to take notice of all such as are his, it followeth, he will not know, that is, love or allow the wicked or their deeds, and therefore their condition must needs be miserable, as being out of his number.

[Use 3] Thirdly, seeing all that are God's are numbered of him, and have their names written in his book, this serveth to seal up the assurance of our salvation and election to eternal life. For, if God know us even by name, our names shall never be blotted out of his account, but remain there graven forever. This the Apostle teacheth, 2 Tim. 2, 19. The foundation of God remaineth sure, and hath this seal; The Lord knoweth who are his: and let everyone that calleth on the name of Christ depart from iniquity. Where he showeth, that God's decree is infallible and unchangeable, and built upon a sure foundation, that cannot be removed. True it is, Satan will not cease to winnow us, the world to allure us, the flesh to corrupt us, and sundry other temptations to set upon us; yet the elect shall not be seduced and perverted by those subtleties and suggestions, but only the Reprobate which were of old ordained to condemnation.

Christ our Savior fore-showeth of the perilous times that are to come, that there shall arise false Christ's, and false Prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; so that if it were possible, they should deceive the very elect. He addeth, if it were possible, because it is altogether impossible, both by reason of Christ's intercession, John 17, 20, 21. & 16, 13. and also through the holy Spirit which is in them, comforting them, and leading them into all truth, Hereunto also he hath respect when he saith unto Peter, Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath desired to winnow you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy Faith fail not. For the elect are the members of his body, which he will save: the Sheep of his pasture, which no man shall take out of his hand: they are his people, whom because he hath justified, he will also glorify. He hath loved them, and whom he loveth, he doth love to the end; so that no creature shall be able to separate them from his love.

[Objection.] Here a question may be demanded, whether the gifts and graces of God may be lost, or not? Whether they may decay and die in us or not? And whether the elect may lose their salvation or not? I answer, [Answer.] we must consider that there are diverse gifts of God, some general, others particular: some lesser, and some greater. First therefore we must know, that the general or common gifts may be utterly taken away, and quite lost, as if they had never been given, never been received. This we learn in the parable of the sower, Luk. 8, 13, 14. many that are hearers of the word receive it with joy, and believe for a season, yet in time of temptation fall away. So the Apostle to the Hebrews showeth, that some who have been enlightened and tasted of the heavenly gift, and made partakers of the holy Ghost, may fall back again, and crucify to themselves the Son of God, and make a mock of him. There are other graces and works of the Spirit, which are special, and of an higher nature, & of greater importance; these are proper to the Servants of God: such are faith, repentance, regeneration, sanctification, and other fruits of election, these are of another nature; and shall never be lost, but are as a light that shall never be extinguished.

This the Apostle John setteth down, 1 John. 3, 9. Whosoever is borne of God, sinneth not, that is, cannot quite fall away by sin: because his seed remaineth in him; neither can he sin, because he is borne of God. Hereunto Paul accordeth, Rom. 11, 29. when he saith, The gifts & calling of God are without repentance. This appeareth evidently unto us in inferior things of this world. Consider the seed that is sown and cast into the earth. Some corn is sown and never riseth, but rotteth in the ground: some springeth up and promiseth hope of a plentiful harvest, yet shortly after withereth: this is soon up, and soon gone. Some proceedeth farther, it groweth up to an ear, and showeth beautiful, yet it is blasted: other—some by God's blessing continueth, and cometh to a timely and seasonable ripeness. And as it is in corn, so we may see the like in trees. Some trees are planted, and never take any root: some take root, and never have blossom: some bear blossoms, but never bring forth fruit: and some by the blessing of him that is The true Husbandman, both root deeply, and blossom fairly, and bring forth fruit plentifully in due season. So is it in this matter, touching the gifts of God.

Some, when they have heard the word, which seemeth sowed in the furrows of their heart, do give a show, and offer an hope, but they decay by and by, and wither as fast as they began to flourish. Others have taken deeper root of earth, and hold out a long time, and make promise of better things, yet they decay at the last as corn blasted in the ear, & deceive themselves and others. Others continue to the end; these are planted surely, and built upon the rock, who may be shaken, but cannot fall; neither shall ever be plucked up by the roots, but grow and prosper with much increase. These are described, Psal. 1, 3. & 92, 13, 14. He shall be like a Tree planted by the rivers of waters, that will bring forth fruit in due season, whose leaf shall not fade, so whatsoever he shall do shall prosper. And also in another place, Such as be planted in the house of the lord, shall flourish in the Courts of our God: they shall bring forth fruit in their age: they shall be fat & flourishing. Thus then we see, that some graces may die and wither away, and also what they be, namely, such as are general, and common to the godly and ungodly.

Secondly, touching the gifts pertaining to salvation, they are also of two sorts, some are simply necessary, without which a man cannot be saved; such are faith and sanctification. Other be less necessary, not always going with faith, but sometimes only, & sometimes are separated for a time from it; of this sort are, a plentiful feeling of God's favor, boldness in prayer, joy in the holy Ghost, and a full assurance of salvation: these not being absolutely necessary, nor always found in them (though only proper unto them) may for a time be wholly lost in the best and most approved servants of God. Thirdly, we must know that the gifts that are simply necessary to salvation; without which, no man of years can enter into the kingdom of heaven, as Faith and Repentance (considered in themselves) may both wholly and finally be lost: for there is nothing in them or their nature, or in us and our nature to make them or us unchangeable. The state of the elect Angels is changeable, who keep their original estate by the power of God confirming them therein. We see innumerable companies of the Angels fell down from heaven, when they were left unto themselves, And are reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day. Nothing is in it own nature unchangeable but GOD, With whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Hence it is that the Apostle calleth him the King everlasting, immortal, invisible, the only wise God. Thus we see that this title of immortality and vnchangeableness is proper to God alone.

Fourthly, those gifts and graces of absolute necessity may perish fully and finally, unless they be confirmed in us by the grace of corroboration: so likewise it was with the Angels, they were subject to fall without special strength, whereby they are enabled to stand, and to hold fast their habitation in heaven. So then, the reason why the elect after their calling do not fall from grace, is not in the nature of faith, or the constancy of grace it self, but it proceedeth wholly from y^e merciful promise of God made to the faithful & to their faith, which he cannot frustrate; and therefore we cannot be deceived, because he that hath made the promise cannot lie We know and are not ignorant, what Christ saith to Peter, Math. 16, 18. Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

Lastly, these gifts of God, though they cannot totally and finally be lost in regard of God's promise, yet the enemies of our Faith and obedience may greatly assault them, and grievously weaken them, and pitifully diminish them, and thereby make a deep wound and impression in our souls, so that thereby we may lie languishing, gaping and gasping for life, and draw as it were to the point of death. The Prophet felt few or no effects of the Spirit working in him, when he said, There is no hope for me in my God. So then, albeit it be sure & certain, that the saving gifts of GOD are without repentance, and that a true justifying faith (peculiar to the elect) cannot totally and finally be lost; yet when we have received them, if we wax proud and wanton; if we grow secure, and give our selves to commit iniquity, these graces of God may so decay in us, as that in our own judgment and feeling, and in the opinion of others, it may seem that they are quite lost, and the Spirit of God to be departed from us. Take the Galatians for an example, who were truly called by the Gospel, and received Christ Jesus to salvation, as appeareth in that they received the Apostle as an Angel of light: yet by false teachers they so fell away and so dangerously, as that Christ was without fashion in them, & the Apostle did travel in pain with them as a woman in child-birth, until Christ were anew fashioned in them. David, by giving liberty to the flesh, and committing of sin, & not watching over his own ways, was brought into that horror and anguish of spirit, as that he entreateth God to create a new heart in h m, & not to take his holy Spirit from him; the work of grace seemed wholly perished; and the graces of the Spirit touching▪ his own feeling, were quenched. When a man by the force of a violent temptation, as it were a sore tempest beating him down, hath profaned the gifts of God, and checked & grieved his Spirit, quenching with sin as it were with cold water, the heavenly graces kindled in his heart, wherewith he was sealed to the day of redemption, it will cost him dear, draw from him many sighs and sobs, drive him into great horror and grievous agonies, and cause him to shed many tears, before he shall recover himself again: yea, he would give the whole world to see the loving countenance of God toward him, to hear God speak peace to his conscience, to feel with comfort the joy of his salvation. The sin of relapse is a fearful sin, as the relapse into a sharp disease is dangerous to the life. God did whip and torment y^e conscience of David, that he roared as a Lion for the disquietness of his heart, and caused his bed to swim, and watered his couch with tears. The like we see in Peter after his falling and denying of his master, He went out & wept bitterly, before he could find the favor of God renewed again toward him. Thus then we see y^t albeit upon this ground that our names and our numbers are known to God, we learn that our salvation is sure, and our state unchangeable: yet we must not grow secure, but use all means whereby his graces in us may not be in vain, but be cherished (as a fire is with Fuell put unto it) y^t they go not out, and die in us.

Fourthly, seeing God vouchsafeth in mercy [Use 4] to number us▪ let us labor to learn the Art of numbering & measuring our days and times▪ y^t so we may be wise hearted. It is a great skil & a divine to number aright as we ought. If a man could understand all languages, & speak with the tongue of men & Angels, and were not able to utter the language of Canaan, it should little avail him. We must all prepare our selves, if we would have the name and reputation of good Linguists and Artists, to learn the heavenly Arts and the true liberal Sciences. Many there are that are accounted deep Scholars, great Linguists, profound Philosophers, good Grammarians, excellent Mathematicians, sharp Logicians, cunning Politicians, fine Rhetoricians, sweet Musicians, & rare in all witty conceits: yet while they wax old in human learning, and spend all their time therein to delight themselves and to please others, they are utterly ignorant oftentimes of the right use of those arts; catching after the shadow of them they leave the substance; and studying the circumstances, they omit the marrow and pith of them. There is a divine Grammar, a divine Arithmetic, a divine Geometry, a divine Astronomy, divine Music: there are Christian Ethics, & Economics, Christian Politikes and Physicks which are to be known of us and studied by us, without which the other cannot profit. He is the best Grammarian, that hath learned to speak the truth from his heart. It is the greatest incongruity that can be, when the heart and the tongue (between which two there ought to be a concord) do not agree together. If we do not for an advantage lie one to another, we have gotten the right art of Grammar, which teacheth to speak truly. They are the best Musicians that have learned to sing the praises of God, Speaking to themselves in Psalms, and Hymns, and spiritual songs, singing and making melody to the Lord in their hearts, giving thanks always for all things unto God the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. He is the best Astronomer that hath his conversation in heaven, and treadeth under foot earthly things; that setteth his affections on things that are above, and not on things that are beneath. He is the most expert Arithmetician that useth daily to number not only his years and months, but his days, and the short times of his life that he is to live upon the earth. He is the most skillful Geometritian that measureth his days with a right line, and considereth that while the chain is in his hand, some part of his life is consumed and cut shorter. Whosoever amendeth his life, and every day groweth better and better, is cunning in the Ethics. Whosoever traineth up his family in the fear of God, is a good Oeconomicke. Whosoever is wise unto salvation, and prudent in giving and taking godly counsel, is a good Politician: and if he know aright his own state how he standeth with God, he is a right good states-man. But what shall it profit a man to be a good Linguist, and not be able to speak the language of Canaan? to abound in the perswasive words of human wisdom as an Orator, and to want the evidence of the Spirit? to be skillful in consort, and to have iarre and discord in his own heart? to be able to measure the whole earth, & yet not to measure the narrow compass of his own life? What shall it advantage a man to be cunning in the heavens, and to have one foot in hell? to number his kine, his sheep, his cattle, and not to number his own days? Job was a very rich man, the richest among all the men of the East, yet the number of all his beasts was known, His substance was seven thousand Sheep, three thousand Camels, five hundred yoke of Oxen, and five hundred she-asses. There is no Shepherd but knoweth the number of his whole flock, and oftentimes telleth them that he may not be deceived. No man is so simple but he can reckon the number of his Cattle, & rehearse the names of his Oxen. What extremity of folly then is it to have skill to number up his sheep and other goods, and yet in the carelessness of his heart, to suffer whole years to pass over his head, and the greatest part of his age to fly away, and never number his days, thereby to get spiritual wisdom? We see that Merchants & other Trades-men have their counters and counting-houses to cast up their accounts, and to make eeuen reckonings: but alas, it is more then childishnes, and worse then madness to keep right reckonings between man and man, and never to reckon with God, nor to make level with him, The Prophet setting down the shortness of man's life, that his time is threescore years and ten, which pass away as a thought, doth break out into this effectual prayer, Teach us so to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. This is divine arithmetic and most heavenly numeration, to enter into our counting houses, that we may understand how short a space we have to live, and thereby become circumspect and heedy how we spend the time of our life that remaineth. If then we remember our last end, and think upon the hours of our age y^t run away swiftly, we deserve the praise and commendation of good Arithmeticians, and we may be said to have the best art and habit of numbering that can be in the world. Al other knowledge of numbering without this, is of less value then a cypher. Besides, the greatest part of men that would be thought cunning in the practice of this faculty, are out of their numbers & much deceived; they evermore busy themselves in addition & multiplication, and dream of many years that they are to live: whereas we must be careful to practice subtraction & diminution, knowing that every day, nay every hour & momēt cutteth off a part of our time. The rich man in the Gospel was a bad cypherer & an evil Arithmetician, whē he set down a false sum to his own soul, saying, Thou hast much goods laid up for many years. He set down years for days, like the deceitful trades-man y^t writeth pounds for shillings. The Prophet David was more skillful in this art, and had learned better to cast accounts, saying, Ps. 39. Lord, let me know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is, let me know how long I have to live. Thou hast made my days as an handbreadth and mine age is nothing in respect of thee, surely every man in his best estate is altogether vanity: Doubtless man walketh in a shadow, and disquieteth himself in vain, he heapeth up riches, and cannot tell who shall gather them. In which place, howsoever some impatience appeareth in regard of the present troubles wherewith on every side he was encombred and compassed about yet he confesseth the vanity of his life, the shortness of his days, and the uncertainty of all his actions. We are ready to promise unto our selves a long life, and to multiply the thoughts of many years, which drowneth us in the desires of this world, and taketh away the meditation of heavenly things. Job in sundry places teacheth us this art of numbering, ch. 14. Man that is borne of woman, is of a short continuance, & full of trouble, he shooteth out as a flower, & is cut down &c. Let us learn of these godly men the art of arithmetick, and know that we have profited well in y^t school, when by skillful diduction we can bring the years of our life unto a consideration of the number of our days, which pass away and not be recalled.

Lastly, seeing the Lord knoweth us, it is our [Use 5] duty also to seek to know him in all love and obedience. He knoweth us not only with that knowledge wherewith he knoweth y^e wicked; but with a special knowledge of his favor & good pleasure. This must be considered of us. For some man might say Is this any priuiledg y^t God will know us? doth he not also know the wicked? or is there anything dim & dark to him, or hidden frō him? He doth know the ungodly, even all their thoughts and imaginations, their goings out, & their comings in for evermore. It were good for thē if he knew them not, with his all-seeing providence▪ for then they might escape the vengeance of his powerful hand. But they shall know in y^e end, that he knoweth them to their final condemnation. His knowledge of his dear elect is far otherwise, he knoweth them to protect & defend them, to justify and save them. He knoweth them as a father knoweth his children, or as a friend loveth his friend, he knoweth them particularly and by their proper names, he loveth thē with an unfeigned love. On the other side, it standeth us upon to know him with an especial knowledge, as the child knoweth & loveth his father after a special manner and in an earnest measure even from a feeling of that love wherewith the father loveth him. True it is, the child loveth others, but in a general sort; but his own father he knoweth more particularly, & with an inward affection of the heart he knoweth his voice, and can discern it from others. So is it with the sons of God, who have a blessed experience of his love toward them, they love him, they delight in him, and they rejoyce in him; as John 3.29. He that hath the Bride, is the Bridegroom, &c. We must all of us begin to know him here in this life, that we may know him perfectly in the life to come. Here we must see him as it were through a glass darkly, that hereafter we may see him face to face fully. If we do not know him in his Word and Sacraments, we shall never know him in his kingdom. For the word is the path way that leadeth unto it, and therefore is called the Gospel of the Kingdom. This teacheth us to consider diligently the saying of Christ, John 17. This is eternal life that they know thee to be the only very God, and whom thou hast sent, Jesus Christ. If then we desire eternal life, we must labor to know God, lest he say to us in his wrath, Depart from me, I know you not. This knowledge of God necessarily required of us, consisteth in these points following. First, we must confess & acknowledge him to be the soueraign and highest good, incomparision of whom 〈◊〉 things are reputed as nothing being as dross & draury, and nothing to be desired with him as Christ saith, Why callest thou me good, there is none good but one, even God. If we equal ought with him, or prefer anything in heaven or earth before him, we are ignorant of him and know him not.

Secondly, it behooveth us to depend upon him, and to put our whole trust in him alone, not in any man or Angel: for then we make flesh our strength, and so lean upon a broken staff that cannot stay us, but will deceive us.

Thirdly, we must draw near unto him in time of need, as to the fountain of all goodness, with all reverence and humility craving all things of him by hearty and fervent prayer. If we call upon him, he hath promised to reveal himself unto us.

Fourthly, we must give him thanks for all blessings received from him, not only in prosperity, but in adversity. Now we shall show our selves thanfull unto him by doing that which he commandeth, by avoiding y^t which he forbiddeth by praising and advancing his name for all his works, whether they be works of his mercy, or whether they be works of his justice, in correcting of his Children, and in punishing his enemies.

Fifthly, we must seek the knowledge of his ways & word and increase in the knowledge thereof, which bringeth us to eternal life. As we grow forward in knowledge, so we grow forward unto life: and when our knowledge shall be perfected then our life shall be perfected in the next world. Now if eternal life consist in this knowledge, doubtless death is to be found in the ignorance of God. The Apostle joineth these two as companions together, ignorance and death, They have their understanding darkened, here is the ignorance of God: & are strangers from the life of God, here is death. For the privation or want of the life of God is eternal death. Wherefore whosoever desireth to live the life of God, must avoid ignorance, w^c is the forerunner & cause of death. And what is the darkness of ignorance as it were a mist before our eyes, but the beginning of utter darkness in the pit of destruction, where shall be weeping & gnashing of teeth? Hence it is that Christ saith, John 10, When he hath sent forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him, for they know his voice, and they will not follow a stranger, but they fly from him, for they know not the voice of strangers. If then we would approve our selves to be the sheep of Christ, we must have this ear-mark, we must know his voice, we must hear his word, we must partake his Sacraments; otherwise we shall be Goats, not Sheep. Many there are that would be accounted Sheep, but they want this badge & cognizance, they are not hearers, but contemners of his word; they follow not Christ Jesus the Shepherd, but fly from him: they know not his voice they are not acquainted with his call, but they think themselves in the best case when they are farthest off from the hearing of it. The Lord calleth us by his word, the preaching of the Gospel is his voice: if we regard it not, woe be unto us, we exclude our selves from his Sheep-fold, and renounce our being in the number of his Sheep. Lastly, we must yield all obedience unto him and his word. For as all his Sheep are hearing Sheep, and none of them deaf & dull eared, so are all obedient Sheep. They have their ears opened, which maketh them hearers: and they have them bored to their heart, which maketh them obedient, and to offer up themselves as a sacrifice well pleasing unto God. But all our hearing shall hinder us, and serve to further and increase our condemnation, unless we join unto it a careful obedience, according to the doctrine of the Apostle, Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. If these things be found in us, then we know God aright, & then we may be assured we shall be known by him, and not denied of him. This is that use which Christ himself toucheth, John

10. I am the good Shepherd, and know mine, and am known of mine. Where we see, that the consideration of God's acknowledging us to be his, should be a forcible means to make us endeavor to know him. For who are we that he should know us? Yea, what is man, that he should be mindful of him, or the son of man that he should consider him? We are dust and ashes, rottenness and corruption, yea lighter then vanity, no better then enemies to him, and the heirs of wrath as well as others. Seeing therefore the bountifulness and love of God toward us hath appeared, so that of his mercy not our merits, he hath saved us by •he washing of the new birth, and the renewing of the holy Ghost, let us pass our pilgrimage here in fear, and above all things let us labor to know him in his own ordinances and to se•k• the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, that in the end of our days we may be known of him to his glory, and our endless comfort in Christ Jesus our blessed Lord and Savior.

Verse 17. Then Moses and Aaron took these men which are expressed by their names.

18. And they called all the Congregation together in the first day of the second Month, who declared the kindreds by their families, and by the houses of their Fathers, according to the number of their names, from twenty year and above, man by man.

19. As the Lord had commanded Moses, so he numbered them in the wilderness of Sanai.

Hitherto we have heard and handled the Commandment of God, requiring Moses and Aaron to number the people: now followeth their obedience without any delaying or deferring the matter. It is meet that the servants obey the commandment of their Master: and that subjects perform the decrees of their Princes. Hence it is that Moses taking to him Aaron and the heads of the Tribes, do address themselves to take a survey of the people, discharging their duty with all diligence. He doth not here as afterward in this Book, ch. 20. where he obeyeth with doubting: but he executeth the charge laid upon him with readiness and willingness. This obedience of Moses and Aaron is set down, first generally, then particularly. Generally in these words; particularly in the verses following. Here a question may be demanded, [Objection.] whether it were lawful for them to number the people. We read in the holy History, 2 Samuel, 24, that David was sharply reprov'd, and severely punished, because he did number them: yet Moses numbereth them in this place, and is approved and justified. Some think, [Answer.] that David is reprov'd, not simply for numbering the people, but because he would have all numbered, and not only from 20 year old and above. But this was not the true cause of David's offense, and of God's judgment: in as much as it is very evident out of the words of the Text and circumstances of the place, that such only were numbered, as were strong men, and able to draw out their swords. Others make this the reason, because the Lord promised to multiply the seed of Abraham as the stars of Heaven, which are innumerable, and as the sand on the Sea Shore, which cannot be told, and therefore he was angry & sore displeas'd whē they were numbered, as if it were a calling of his promise into question. But if this reason were good and to be granted, it would follow that they could never be numbered without sin. Neither was this the cause of God's anger, as others imagine, because after his numbering of them▪ he caused not the tribute to be paid that God had appointed; for Moses did not always enjoin any such polle-money to be paid whensoever he nūbred their persons, and besides; the punishment should be inflicted upon David, not for numbering y^e people, but for want of payment. The true causes why Moses is commended, & David condemned for their numbering of Israel, are these. First Moses was enjoined unto it, & had the express commandment of God to direct and warrant him: but David was not commāded of God, he was stirred up of Satan, who tempted him to this evil in setting before his eyes, his glory and excellency, his power & victories. This is one difference. Secondly, it was lawful to number the people, when any public collection or contribution was to be made of tribute or subsidy; for unless an exact account were taken, some should be omitted, others overburdened, and injustice committed. This maketh it lawful for Princes to number their people, & muster them by hundreds or thousands, albeit they have no special warrant or particular commissiō from God. Thus did David in another place, and at another time number them without sin. 2 Sam. 18, 1. Again, when any Army is to be gathered, & forces to be levied, it is necessary the people should be assembled and mustered, that fit choice may be made of such as are to go to battle: as David did number them without sin. 2 Sam. 18, 1. when he sent an army against Absalom: but in this place he did not intend any of these ends, either that Tribute should be gathered, or that soldiers should be mustered: and therefore the warrant of his work, was not answerable to the calling of Moses. Thirdly, as they were stirred up by diverse causes, so they respected diverse ends. David propounded to himself an evil end, he did it to set forth his own glory, to rejoice in himself, to put his whole affiance and confidence in the multitude of his men: and therefore his pride and presumption, his haughtiness and ambition, his rashness and unthankfulness were punished of GOD. Thus we see, how one and the same thing is praised in one, and reprov'd in another, because howsoever the deed were one, yet the cause was not one from whence it proceeded, neither were the ends one whereunto it was referred.

[Verses 17.18.19. Moses & Aaron took these men, &c: And as the Lord commanded Moses, so he numbered them.] Here we have an example of the obedience of Moses & Aaron, who lingered not the time to discharge the duty that God had laid upon them. This example offereth unto us this instruction, that it [Doctrine 3] is required of all God's servants, to perform obedience to God's commandments. Whensoever God speaketh unto us, we must hear and obey his voice. Noah received a Commandment from God to build the Ark, Genes. 6 ver. 13. Whereby he and his household might be saved: many hindrances might have stayed him, and sundry inconveniences might have stopped him, and infinite dangers might have terrified him from that enterprize; the greatness of the Ark, the labor of the building, the continuance of the work, the tants of the wicked, and an hundred such like troubles stood in his way; all which he did ouerstride, as the Apostle witnesseth, Heb. 11, 7. By Faith Noah being warned of GOD of the things which were as yet not seen, moved with reverence, prepared the Ark to the saving of his Household, through the which Ark he condemned the world, and was made heir of the righteousness which is by faith.

In like manner, Abraham received an express commandment to go out of his Country, and from his Kindred and Fathers house; and he also by Faith (when he was called) obeyed, to go into a place, which he should afterward receive for inheritance; and he went out, not knowing whither he went. So when God charged him to circumcise himself, his son, and all his household, he did not delay the time, but did it the same day: and when he commanded him to take his son, his only son, even Isaac whom he loved, the son of promise, through whom all Nations should be blessed; By Faith he offered up Isaac, when he was tried; for he considered, that God was able to raise him up even from the dead, from whence he received him also after a sort.

When God called Samuel, and determined to reveal unto him the destruction of Eli's house, and the calamity that hanged over all Israel, he said unto him, to testify the willingness of his heart to obey, Speak Lord, for thy Servant heareth. This the Prophet David witnesseth, Psal. 27, 8. When thou sayedst; Seek ye my face: mine heart answered thee: O Lord, I will seek thy face. When Christ commanded Peter to launch out into the deep, and to let out their Nets to make a draught: Simon answered and said unto him; Master, we have travailed sore all night, and have taken nothing: nevertheless at thy word, I will let down the net. The examples are infinite and endless that might be alleged to this purpose: but these are more then sufficient, to show, that whensoever God hath a mouth to open, and a tongue to speak, and a voice to utter unto us, we should prepare and make ready an ear to hear, and an heart to obey whatsoever is enjoined unto us, and required of us.

The Reasons are many, to enforce us to [Reason 1] yield hereunto. For first of all, GOD hath all authority in his own power; he is our Creator, and we are his creatures; he is our Sheepeheard, and we the Sheep of his pasture: he is our Father, we his Children: he is our Master, we his Servants: he is our King, we his Subjects: he is as the Potter, we as the clay. Is not the creature bound to obey the Creator? Is not the child to show all duty to his father? Is not y^e servant to stoop down to his Master? And doth not the subject owe honor and homage to his Prince? The Scripture showeth, and nature teacheth, that they do. This is it which the Prophet Malachi declareth, chap. 1. ver. 6. A son honoreth his Father, and a servant his Master: if then I be a Father, where is mine honor? And if I be a Master, where is my fear? saith the Lord of hosts, &c. These titles of honor given to God▪ and these titles of subjection ascribed to our selves, do serve as so many bands Obligatorie, to persuade us and draw us to obedience.

[Reason 2] Secondly, obedience is so valued and set at such an high price, that it is better worth then all sacrifices that can be offered: and on the other side the Lord abhorreth and detesteth disobedience and rebellion against him as the sin of witchcraft. True it is, God allowed and commanded sacrifices, & he greatly abhorreth sorcery: yet he preferreth obedience before the one, and hateth disobedience as the other. This Samuel teacheth Saul, when he reproveth him to his face, Hath the Lord as great pleasure in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as when the voice of the Lord is obeyed? Behold, to obey is better then sacrifice, & to hearken is better then the fat of Rams: for rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and transgression is wickedness and idolatry; because thou hast cast away the word of the Lord, therefore he hath cast away thee from being King. This reason is thus framed; If obedience be better then sacrifice, then it is due to God, and with all care to be performed to him. But it is better then sacrifice, therefore it is due to God. Again, if GOD hate nothing more then the disobedience of his commandments, then is disobedience to be avoided. But he hateth nothing more, inasmuch as he esteemeth it no better then witchcraft or idolatry; therefore it is to be avoided.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, such as are disobedient are sure to be punished. Obedience hath a promise of blessing annexed unto it, and a recompense of reward depending upon it, as appeareth Exod. 19.5, 6. If ye will hear my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be my ch efe treasure above all people, though all the earth be mine. On the other side, God abhorreth disobedience to his will and commandments, as a Prince hateth rebellion raised against him▪ which he will not leave unpunished. So doth God esteem those that stubbornly transgress his Laws as traitors unto his person, and rebels against his laws; and therefore such as are rebellious against his word shall be rejected of him, and punished by him When Sau• did cast away th word of the Lord, God proceeded also to cast away him. This the Prophet Jeremiah declareth, chap. 4•. ver. 6, 10, 17. when the Captains of the host promised whether it were good or evil▪ they would obey the voice of the Lord God he assured them of his mercy, that God would build them, and not destroy them: he would plant them, and not root them out. Contrariwise, if they would not hearken to his voice, and submit themselves unto him, he threateneth that they should die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, so that none of them should escape from the plague that he would bring upon them. Thus doth he command Moses to speak to Pharaoh, Exod. 8.2. & 10 4. Thus saith the Lord, Let my people go that they may serve me:but if thou wilt not let them go, behold, I will smi•e all thy Countrie with Frogs, &c. This reason may be framed in this sort: If the obedient shall be blessed and rewarded, and if the disobedient shall be rejected and punished, then it behooveth us to acknowledge all obedience due unto God: but the obedient and disobedient shall be both rewarded; the one according to their righteousness, the other according to their wickedness.

Let us now come to the Uses of this Doctrine. First, this serveth to reprove diverse [Use 1] and sundry abuses that creep into us, which make our service and worship of God abominable and detestable in his sight. And first of all, there are too many that refuse to hear and to lend their outward ear to listen to the word of the eternal God, to whom all attention is due. These men, as if they had no souls to save, nay, as if there were no God, no heaven, no hell, have shut their eyes lest they should see, and stopped their ears, lest they should hear.

This reproveth the desperate disease of our days: men are so far clogged and cloyed with hearing, that they loath the heavenly food, the bread of life. Who seeth not how we decline in care and zeal, and how the light of the word beginneth to be extinguished? Our change from better to worse touching seeking after knowledge is most fearful, a token that God hath given us deadness of heart, to prepare the way to some judgment. The Queen of the South shall rise up in judgment, and condemn this froward generation, who thought it worthy her labor to make a long journey to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and yet the mystery of the heavenly wisdom of God laid open in the ministry of the word, The wh•ch the very Angels desire to behold, passeth the human wisdom of Solomon, and of all other men in the world. Wherefore to turn away our backs, when we should turn our faces to the word, is a grievous sin, and we shall give an account therefore in the great day of vengeance. This is set forth plainly in the first chapter of the Proverbs, and the 24.25, 26. verses. Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out mine hand, and none would regard, I will also laugh at your destruction, and mock when your fear cometh.

Thus doth the Lord lay open the people's sins, and his judgments by the Prophet Jeremiah: I rose up early and spake unto you, but ye would not hear, nor answer: I said▪ Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people, and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you: but they would not obey, nor incline their ear, but went after the counsels and stubbornness of their wicked heart, & went backward and not forward: I have sent unto you all my servants the Prophets, rising up early every day, and sending them, yet would they not hear me, but hardened their necks, and did worse then their Fathers. Thus he layeth open their sin, therefore no marvel if that he threaten to stretch out his hand against them, so that the famine should pinch them, the sword should slay them, the pestilence should waste them, the dogs should tear them, the wild beasts destroy them, and the fowls of the heaven devour them.

Secondly, as it reproveth those that refuse to hear, so it condemneth such as only hear, and go no further; these rest in it as if they had done their duty▪ and as if no more were required at their hands. But know this and mark it, that outward service separated from inward obedience, is not respected, but rejected of God. This naked hearing is an halting with God which he cannot suffer. If we keep from him the heart, he careth not for the eye, or the tongue, or the ear. This is it which the Prophet saith, When ye fasted and mourned in the fifth and seventh Moneths, even these seventy y^ares, did ye fast unto me? Do I approve it? Should ye not hear the words which the Lord hath cried by the ministry of the former Prophets, when Jerusalem was inhabited and in prosperity, and the Cities thereof round about her, when the south and the plain was inhabited? To like purpose is Isaiah bold, and saith, What have I to do with the multitude of your Sacrifices, saith the Lord? I am full of the burnt offerings of Rammes, I desire not the blood of Bullocks: when ye come to appear before me, who required this of your hands to tread in my Courts? Bring no moe Oblations in vain: Incense is an abomination unto me: I cannot suffer your new Moons, nor Sabbaths, &c. they are a burden unto me, I am weary to bear them: and when you shall stretch out your hands, I will hide m^ene eyes from you and though you make many prayers I will not hear. Were not these his own ordinances? Did not he appoint the solemn times of his worship, and command sacrifices and oblations to be offered unto him? Yes, he set them in his Church, and was the Author of them; but they performed them in an evil manner without faith, without repentance, without love, without conscience, and therefore as they did them, God loathed them. So may it be said of our common and customary hearing, removed from faith & obedience, Who required it at our hands? The Lord cannot abide it he cannot suffer it: it is a burden unto him that he cannot bear. God joineth hearing and obeying together, and cursed is he that maketh a divorce between them. This doth the Prophet Jeremiah denounce against all hypocritical hearers chapt. 11. Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this Covenant which I commanded unto your Fathers &c. He protested unto them and their Fathers rising early, and saying, Obey my voice, yet they would not obey nor incline their ear, but everyone walked in the stubbornness of his wicked heart: thus they made a conspiracy against God▪ and he brought his curses upon them, Thus our Savior teacheth it shall be with many in the last day, that saw his person, and heard his doctrine, they conversed and continued with him, and were partakers of his miracles and ministry; who shall then begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets: but he shall say, I tell you, I know you not whence ye are: depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity. Woe shall then be to all such hearers, and cursed shall their state and condition be. These have an heavier account to make then such as never were hearers, and never had so great mercy offered unto them. Hence it is that Christ pronounced sundry woes against Bethsaida, Corazin, and Capernaum, who had the word and other means of salvation offered unto them, yet lived without repentance, and are pronounced to be worse then the Sodomites. For the greater mercies are abused, the deeper judgments are deserved. Let us set this Capernaum a Citty in Galilee before our eyes, and look upon it as in a glass, that therein we may behold our selves. The Lord Jesus was brought up there, and because he did so much frequent it, and was conversant there, many thought he had been borne there, so that it is called his own City, Mat. 9, 1. Secondly, the miracles which he wrought there were many, he healed the servant of the Centurion, and a man that had an unclean spirit, in so much that the Nazarites as it were envying and repining thereat, that that place should be preferred before them, said unto him, Whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do it here likewise in thine own Country: thereby implying that the greatest part of his miracles had not been done among them, but among the Capernaites. Thirdly▪ there he began to preach, saying, Repent, for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand: and there he preached of the eating of his flesh and drinking of his blood: likewise he taught on the Sabbath day in their Synagogue with power and authority, so that they were astonied at his doctrine. In all these respects and privileges▪ partly of the presence of his person, partly of the working of his miracles, & partly of the preaching of his Gospel, Christ pronounceth that they were lifted up to heaven, & highly advanced above many other Towns & Cities that wanted the seeing and hearing of him: but because they became unthankful, and to all these did not join true obedience, he denounceth against them that they should be brought down to hell: the reason hereof is rendered in the next words, For if the great works which have been done in thee, had been done among them of Sodom, they had remained to this day: but I say unto you, that it shall be easier for them of the Land of Sodom in the day of judgment, then for thee. An heavy doom, and a most fearful sentence, and yet most just and righteous, if it be weighed in the balance of justice. Sodom indeed was guilty of uncleanness and beastliness one with another, whereby man with man wrought filthiness, & received in themselves such recompense of their error, as was meet; their sins were fullness of bread, abundance of idleness, contempt of the poor, and pride of life: yet Capernaum treading under foot the glorious Gospel, and despising the word of salvation was the greater sinner, against which sort of sinners, the Apostles were commanded to shake off the dust of their feet, as a witness against them; the which showeth the horribleness of their sin that make no reckoning of the preaching of God's word offered unto them to reconcile them to God. Sodom had the light of nature that shined in their harts, and preached within their consciences in that they were men, that those sins were unlawful; of which the Apostle saith, That light shineth in the darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not: but Capernaum had a greater and perfecter light, even the light of grace to teach them, and the Sun of righteousness to shine upon them, which far excelled the other, and gave them a more certain direction to lead their lives. Sodom indeed had Lot, an holy and righteous man among them, whose soul they vexed from day today by their unclean conversations: but Capernaum had a greater then Lot, they had the gracious presence of Christ Jesus, whose word was with authority, and not as the Scribes; whose glory was as the glory of the only begotten Son, full of grace and truth, John 1, 14. Again, Sodom had not so much as the types and shadows of the Law, they wanted the sacrifices and ceremonies which the Jews had: but Capernaum had the body it self, they saw him, they touched him, they heard him, they handled him, yet they repented not, but remained disobedient. Sodom had only the making of the Creatures, and the workmanship of the Heavens as God's great book to behold and look upon, to be their schoolemaisters & instructors, which declare the glory of God, & show forth his Deity: but Capernaum had more, even a plain path beaten before them to walk in, and a sit light to guide them in all their ways, the eternal word of God that endureth forever. If then Sodom shall be whipped, surely Capernaum must be scourged. If Sodom rebuked, Capernaum punished. If Sodom imprisoned and damned, Capernaum shall be thrown down into the neathermost hell and gulf of perdition. If the burden laid upon Sodom be grievous, that laid upon Capernaum shall be more grievous and intolerable. For God will reward every man according to his works, so that with what measure we mete, with the same it shall be measured to us again. Sodom was the less sinner, & therefore liable to the less punishment: Capernaum was the greater sinner, a greater contemner of greater blessings, and therefore guilty of the greater damnation. To what end, may some say, doth this comparison serve? or what have we to do with Sodom which was consumed to ashes with fire and brimstone long ago? or what doth Capernaum belong to us? Yes, it concerneth us, and if we change the names, the times, and the places, this whole comparison teacheth us wisdom, and toucheth us nearly. For hath any nation under y^e heavens been lifted up higher toward the heavens then we? Hath not the word been plentifully preached among us? Have we not had the Sacraments duly administered unto us? Have we not received his mercies abundantly poured upon us? yet what people hath been more unthankful? more disobedient? more rebellious? What could the Lord have done for us, that he hath not done, and shall we so reward him with unkindness for his mercies? Let us take heed lest if we be like Capernaū in sin, y^e threatening do fall upon us, that it shall be easier for Sodom & Gomorrhah in the day of judgment, then for us. For if Sodom did not escape the hand of God, who had only the light of nature, not the lantern of the Scripture to shine among them, & to give light unto them: how shall we escape, or be without excuse, if we tread under foot the Son of God, if we cast out of our hearts the Gospel of peace, if we count the blood of the Testament as an unholy thing, and do despite the Spirit of grace? Thirdly, this doctrine reproveth those that are ready to hear, and content to obey, but it is no farther then standeth with their own lust and liking. These are like Saul in obedience, they think they have great wrong to be charged with rebellion and disobedience, they have open mouths to say, Blessed art thou of the LORD, I have fulfilled the commandment of the Lord, I have obeyed the voice of the Lord, I have gone the way which the Lord sent me, &c: yet he is there charged with treason and rebellion against God, and threatened to have the Kingdom rent frō him. Thus is it with many in our days, they profess obedience, but their life swarmeth with the fruits of disobedience: like to y^e son, who being commanded of his father to go & work in his vineyard, answered, I will Sir, but he stood still & went not. These are they that draw near to God with their mouth, but are disobedient in deed, & their real disobedience shall procure a real vengeance on them.

It is strange to see how many of this sort of men pretend a willingness to obey, & would be accounted in the number of obedient children, as if they were wholly made of obedience; and yet they will not submit themselves wholly to the will and pleasure of GOD, but mince the matter, and part stakes with God: somewhat they will do to stop men's mouths and to get the applause of the world, and to be accounted religious; but they are not minded to deal sincerely and entirely with God, like those that having a journey to go, are soon weary and stand still, when they are gone half the way.

These are they that will not be Atheists, but have the true God for their God; yet do they love their riches, their pleasures, their bellies, and their delights above him, and set their affections wholly upon them. They cannot abide Idolatry, nor to be esteemed idolaters; yet they make no conscience of the worship of the true God, of praying unto him publicly and privately, neglecting the ordinances of God, hearing of his word, reading, meditation, conference, and such like helps; being in the number of those the Apostle reproveth, Rom. 2, 22. Thou abhorrest Idols, yet cōmittest sacrilege. They will not forswear themselves, nor fall into perjury: but they will swear and lie too for an advantage. They will not seem to abuse the titles of God, and to take his name in vain; but ye shall hear them even in their communication to swear by their Faith and troth, and they engage thē so long, until they have little left, or none at all themselves. They will not work upon the Sabbath, nor go to Plough: but they will not stick to go to play, and use pastimes; to follow idleness, and to be ordinarily absent from the holy ordinances of God. They scorn to be accounted rebels, as too gross a term for them: yet they can disobey superiors, yea mock and deride those that are set over them, both Magistrates and Ministers. They abhor the name of a murderer: but they can fight and quarrel, brawl, fret and fume against others; forgetting the rule of the Apostle, Whosoever hateth his Brother, is a man-slayer: and ye know that no man-slayer hath eternal life abiding in him. They will not be Adulterers & Fornicators but they break out into wantonness, and nourish the occasions that engender them, surfeiting drunkenness, idleness, wanton looks, wanton company, wanton daliance, and such like. They hate the name of Thieves and robbers, and those that will stand by the high way and take a purse: but they will cozen and circumvent their neighbor, defraud and oppress him in buying & selling and bargaining with him, if by any means they can go beyond him; never remembering either the commandment or punishment set down by the Apostle, Let no man oppress or defraud his Brother in any matter: for the Lord is an avenger of all such things, as we also have told you before time, and testified. These are they that will not bear false witness; but they are inuenters of evil, or spreaders abroad of evil reports to the hurt of their brethren, & make no conscience at all of a lie. These are not dutiful children which obey to halves, & so fail in their obedience. For (as the Apostle teacheth) Whosoever shall keep the whole Law, & yet faileth in one point, he is guilty of all, &c. Thus then we see by this doctrine, they are reprov'd that contemn the word, and will not hear: that are content to hear, but will not obey: and such as obey, but it is not fully and faithfully; it is so far forth as pleaseth themselves, not regarding to please God, to whom they either stand or fall.

Secondly, seeing our duty to Gods Commandments [Use 2] consisteth in obedience this teacheth that it is necessary for all men to know them. We cannot call upon him of whom we have not heard: we cannot believe that which we never learned: we cannot practice those things which we do not understand. A servant can by no means do his Masters will before he knoweth what is his will. This showeth the miserable condition of ignorant people, besotted in their own simplicity, and muffled in the mists of palpable darkness: none are more grossly misled, none more disobedient to God then these ignorant persons; none greater enemies unto the serving and obeying of God, then such as are enemies or hinderers of the teaching and preaching of his word. Our Savior sending out his Apostles into all the world, charged them to teach them to observe all things whatsoever he commanded them. First then, there must be teaching before there be observing: so that ignorance is the mother of all disobedience. This appeareth in Moses, Deut. 4, 1. Hearken, O Israel, unto the ordinances, and to the Laws which I teach you to do, that ye may live and go in, and possess the Land which the Lord God of your Fathers giveth you. The Israelites were commanded to learn the commandments of God that they might do them; so that there is no doing and discharging of the works and will of God without knowing them: nor no true knowledge where there is no practice. For indeed we know no more then we make conscience to do & perform. Wherefore (my Brethren) be careful to learn the ways of God, and to know what he requireth, that you may be fitted to do them: and assure yourselves, that they are the greatest enemies of God, and of your salvation, yea the most proud and pestilent instruments of the devil, to cause him to be honored, and to erect the kingdom of darkness, that do disgrace teaching, and dissuade from hearing. And let us set this down as a rule, that such as are undutiful to God in the chiefest works and the highest duties, will never make conscience of the smaller & lesser. Such then as any way hinder the publishing of the Gospel, and seek to stop the free course of it from passing among men, do over-turn all godliness, and shake the very ground—work and foundation of true obedience. The greatest and best works commanded of Christ are the duties of the first Table; to preach and to hear his word, to be often exercised in his worship, to be religious, to visit his Courts where his name dwelleth, whereof the Prophet saith, God delighteth to dwell in it, yea, the Lord will dwell in it forever. He that maketh no conscience this way, will make no conscience of the lesser and latter duties, to wit; of the fruits of righteousness.

Hence it is, that our Savior saith to the Sadducees, Math. 22, 23, Are ye not therefore deceived, because ye know not the Scriptures, neither the power of God? The ignorance of God's word is the true cause of all error. If we did know the Scriptures, they would direct us to all duties necessary for us both to know and practice. And as knowledge is the beginning of all obedience, because we must know before we can obey; we must learn before we practice: so it is required of us all to get knowledge and understanding, howbeit it is not necessary for all to have knowledge, alike. Wherefore, that we may be instructed aright, and be guided what our knowledge ought to be, and what measure thereof should be in us, it is requisite that we mark and remember these four rules following, all of them being grounded upon the doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles. No man must be ignorant, no man shall be excused for his ignorance: every man must attain to some knowledge. First, our knowledge must be according to our age. If GOD have blessed our days with many years and long life, he looketh for greater knowledge at our hands, then he doth of babes and sucklings. This the Apostle pointeth out unto us. 1 Cor. 14, 20. Brethren, be not children in understanding, but as concerning malicioiusness be children, but in understanding be of ripe age. In these words the Apostle intimateth a double kind of knowledge; one fit for children, for God would have none brought up in his School, and to belong to him, that are non proficiencie: he would have children taught and trained up in the faith and fear of God. It is noted of T•mothy, that he had the knowledge of the holy Scriptures of a child, which are able to make him wise to salvation, through the Faith which is in Christ Jesus. This doth the Prophet David teach. Psal. 119, 9. Wherewith shall a young man redress his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy Word. Such as are young in years, must learn to serve God in the flower of their age, and to serve him with the first fruits of their life. Howbeit though their knowledge cannot be great and at the full, yet it is such as is fit for their years, and it sufficeth that they be young in knowledge as they be young in years, & that their understanding be little, as their stature is.

There is also a second kind of knowledge, and that is for men of riper age; God requireth more of them and looketh to receive increase at their hands in greater abundance. Hath he granted us our life for nothing? And hath he doubled and trebled the years of the former sort that we should stand at a stay? No, he would have us that have been planted in his Church, to be growers forward in knowledge as we are in years. But doth the case thus stand with us? Are our old men grown also old and ripe in Faith and Religion? Are we more expert in the ways of godliness now then we were twenty or forty years ago? Can our aged men that live among us stand forth and avouch this, or speak it in the truth of their harts, & to the comfort of their souls, and to the honor of God, that they are bettered in judgment, and increased in obedience? that albeit the outward man decay and perish, yet they are renewed daily in the inward man? Nay y^e greatest part are so sapped in ignorance, that they are as blind as the Mole, as deaf as the Adder, as senseless as the stones, and as rude & ignorant as the brute beasts; nay more dull of understanding then they, as the Prophet chargeth the people of Israel, Isaiah 1, 3. The Ox knoweth his owner, and the Ass his Masters crib, but Israel hath no• known, my people hath not understood. They should be examples to others in godliness, but many of them are Ring-leaders to all kind of wickedness. Many children go before them in knowledge, and may instruct them in the principiles of religion. My Brethren, these things ought not so to be.

The second rule is this▪ that our knowledge ought to be according to the means y^t God hath afforded unto us, and according unto the plenty or scarcity of those means doth he require a growing and proceeding in us. There is no Master, but exacteth at the hands of his Scholar, an increase in learning proportionable to the greatness of his labor. The Husbandman that hath fowed much, looketh for a plentiful harvest. The Gardener that hath long digged and delued about his trees, and duned them with great diligence, hopeth to have much fruit in the end. So is it with God, the best Master, the true Husbandman, when he hath taught us often, and sowed good seed in the ground of our hearts, and watered the dry furrows of our consciences with the water of life, he looketh to reap much fruit, and to find great increase.

This the Apostle teacheth, when he reproveth the Hebrews for their dullness in hearing and slowness in profiting, Heb. 5, 12, 13, 14. Whereas concerning the time ye ought to be teachers, yet have ye need again that we teach you what are the first principles of the words of God, and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat: for everyone that useth milk, is inexpert in the word of righteousness, for he is a babe: but strong meat belongeth to them that are of age, which through long custom have their wits exercised, to discern both good and evil. Where he teacheth them, that after so long teaching they might become teachers of others: and he saith it to their shame, that after the having of plentiful means to further them in their knowledge, they were very novices and young scholars, not able to bear strong meat. Hath God set up the preaching of his word among us, as a candle set on the candlestick, to give light to all that are in y^e house? Hath he caused it to be truly preached & applied unto us? Have we the means also in plentiful measure afforded us to bring us to godliness? Let us take heed to our selves, & look to our ways, God will not be mocked. Where he hath sown plentifully, he will reap plentifully; and upon whom he hath bestowed much, he looketh to receive much again.

This he setteth down to strengthen the rule that now we deliver, Luke 12.48. Unto whom much is given, of him shall be much required: and to whom men commit much, the more of him will they ask. If a man should have much teaching, and go long to school, & yet should be always in his horn-book, and stand at A, B, C. like a little child, and never go forward, we would account him a very dullard: so is it with us, if we have spent much time in his school, where we have had a liberal diet prepared for us, and been feasted at his table richly furnished, and yet stand at one stay, we do not use the means aright, but deceive the hope and expectation of God, who hath in such manner and measure blessed us from heaven.

The third rule touching our knowledge, is, that it must be answerable to the gifts that God hath given unto us. He hath not furnished all men with gifts alike, he hath not bestowed an equal measure of his graces upon all; to one he hath given more, to another he hath given less, according to his own pleasure. This is declared unto us in the Parable of the talents, Math. 25, 14, 15. A certain Nobleman going into a far country, called his servants, and delivered unto them his goods; Unto one he gave five talents, and to another two, and to another one, to every man after his own hability. If then he have given unto us five talents, he looketh that we gain five other with them. If he have bestowed two upon us, he will require of us the gain of two others; not the increase of five, as of the former. If we be not wholly barren and unfruitfull in good things, he will accept and approve of us. This is a notable comfort to all those that have a little portion and few gifts given unto them: albeit we be newet so simple, yet if we have single and simple hearts, it shall be said to us, It is well done good servant and faithful, thou hast been faithful in little, I will make thee ruler over much; enter into thy Masters joy. He that by employing and diligent use of his gifts had gained only two talents, had gotten little in comparison of the former servant that had increased five talents, yet he is commended by Christ our Savior for a good and faithful servant.

In like manner, when he commendeth the saving hearers, and compareth them to good ground, he saith; He that received the seed in the good ground, is he that heareth the word, and understandeth it; which also beareth fruit, and bringeth forth some an hundred fold, some sixty fold, and some thirty fold. The ground that yieldeth thirty fold, is little in comparison of thar which yieldeth the increase of an hundred fold, not half so much: yet it is accounted good ground. All ground is good in God's account, that is not altogether unfruitful: and everyone receiveth praise and commendation from him, who hath a good heart, albeit it be mingled with many wants, and much imperfection. This must not make those that are weak and simple to please themselves in their weakness and simplicity, nor cause them to be puffed up with envy toward such as have a greater measure and better portion of gifts then they have; but seeing God hath appointed his word to give unto the simple sharpness of wit, it must stir them up to do their best, to strive with all their strength to be led forward to perfection, and to crave a continual supply of God's grace, which in the midst of all their infirmities and imperfections shall be sufficient for them. Then it shall come to pass, that albeit they behold a double portion in others, and a poor pittance in themselves, yet they may truly say unto the Lord, Thou wilt require no more of thy servant then thou hast given him. To this end speaketh the Apostle writing to the Philippians, I am persuaded of this same thing, that he which hath begun this good work in you, will perform it until the day of Jesus Chr•st: for it is God that worketh in you, both the will and the deed, even of his good pleasure.

The fourth Rule touching our knowledge is, that we must all labor to have so much, as that we may be able to give an account of our faith, when we shall be lawfully called thereunto. It is not enough for us to say, we believe as well as the best, and then cannot declare how we believe; neither is it enough for us to have the implicit faith of the church of Rome, to believe as the Church believeth, & then cannot tell how or what the Church believeth. This is the Colliars faith, not the Christian faith: this will not shielde us from the darts and devices of the devil, but layeth our hearts open to all his fiery temptations. The ancient Christians that believed in the Son of God, were able not only to make confession of their own faith, but to defend and maintain the true faith against their enemies and persecutors, as all histories do declare. The Prophet teacheth us, That the just shall live, not by another's, but by his own Faith. We are all taught to say, I believe, not, we believe: and therefore it is requisite that we be endued with true faith, and have such a certain and particular knowledge of the chief and fundamental points of our religion, that we be both able and ready to render a reason thereof; which cannot be, unless we have learned the principles of the doctrine of Christ. Hence it is, that the Apostle Peter exhorteth to this rule, 1 Pet. 3, 15. Sanctify the Lord in your hearts, and be ready always to give an answer to every man that ask•th you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness & reverence. The practice hereof we have in Stephen, and Peter, and Paul, and others in the Acts of the Apostles, Acts 2, 15. and 3. chapt. who made confession and profession of their Faith with boldness and cheerfulness, so often as the glory of God did require it. Now albeit the Apostles teach, that we must be enabled to confess our Faith, and to show before all men how we have profited, having a good conscience, that when they speak evil of us, as of evil doers, they may be ashamed which slander our good conversation in Christ: yet he doth not require such exactness and perfection to be able to dissolve all doubts, to answer all questions, and to vnloose all knots, which is not to be looked for at the hands of the teachers themselves: but as we must know the fundamental points of true religion, whereupon our Faith is built, so we must be strengthened and grounded in them, that we may be able all of us both young and old, to show in whom we have believed; what we are by creation, what by reason of our transgression, and what by Faith in Christ and by the fruits of regeneration. No man must be ignorant of these substantial points, that we may understand what title and interest we have to the inheritance of the heavenly Kingdom.

[Use 3] Lastly, seeing obedience is so necessary a duty, without which we cannot please God, let us labor to perform our obedience unto him aright: to which end, we are to be careful to observe these rules of ordering and directing our obedience, that it may be approved in his sight. First of all, we must be assured that we do these things that are warranted in the word of God, and that they be done according to his will. He will not be served of us by good intentions, or human traditions, or blind superstitions, but he will be worshipped according to his own pleasure. This the Prophet Isaiah expresseth, chap. 29. verses 13, 14. This people come near to me with their mouth, and honor me with their lips, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me was taught by the precept of men. This our behaviour teacheth to be a vain and idle serving of him. If our obedience be framed to the doctrine of man, not of God, it is foolish and without understanding. Such is the Religion for the most part of the Church of Rome, where men's inventions are set up, and many times magnified above the ordinances of God. There are many great fears wrought in the consciences of the poor people from the impositions of men, as heavy burdens laid upon them to observe and keep, as eat not, taste not, handle not upon peril of condemnation: and there are many fair promises offered to men for their zeal in running on pilgrimage, honoring of Relics, visiting of Idols, invocation of Saints, saying of Masses, offering for the dead, Dirges, and such like dregs, which are not in the word, nor according to the word, but beside the word, nay against the word: which things indeed have a show of wisdom in voluntary religion & humbleness of mind, and in not sparing the body which are things of no value, since they pertaine to the filling of the flesh. All these therefore are false fears false devotions, false dangers, false promises, false prayers, false comforts, and briefly false worshippings, which are of no value or virtue, of no worth or reckoning. The least duty that God requireth that may be called the work of Christ is better then all the stately works of men: and so to take up a rush (if it stand with the will of God) to make clean platters, or spits, or shoes, is more acceptable to him, if it be our calling, then to build memorials or Monasteries for idle and superstitious Monks without word or warrant.

Secondly, as our obedience must have the word for a foundation, so we must perform the same heartily: not for outward show and fashion, or to be seen of men, but do all as in the sight of him that looketh upon the heart. It is said by the Prophet, Psal. 40, 7, 8. In the volume of thy Book it is written of me, I desired to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy Law is within my heart. Our obedience must not be parted and divided between God and the Devil. God will have entire obedience, or accept no obedience at our hands. Hence it is, that the Wiseman exhorteth us, To give God our heart, and let our eyes delight in his ways. This discovereth the sin of all hypocrites, who pray, but not with a pure heart; they hear, but it is not with good and honest hearts: they believe but it is not with the heart: they love, but it is not in deed and in truth: they obey, but they are not obedient from the heart unto the form of doctrine: and whatsoever they do, they do it ceremonially and externally, not heartily as to the Lord, but hypocritically as to men; like idle and slothful servants, who perform no more to their Masters but eye-service as men pleasers. If then our heart be away, all is away, the soul and life of every action is wanting: and we offer the dead carcas of a sacrifice to God, which stinketh as an unsavory thing in his nosethrils. This made the Prophet say, Psal. 25, 1, 2. Unto thee, O Lord, I lift up my soul. And Psal. 108, 1, 2. O God my heart is prepared, so is my tongue, I will sing and give praise. If once the affection of the heart be settled, the tongue tarrieth not behind, but is ready to publish the praises of God. Thirdly, our obedience must be done with all our power cheerfully and willingly: which dependeth upon the former, albeit distinguished from it. Although we fail in many circumstances, God will not lay it to our charge, nor stay the course of his blessings from coming unto us, so long as he seeth in us a willing heart. He respecteth more the affection to obey, then obedience it self: and alloweth of our good desire, more then of the performance of the duty.

We see this in the poor widows mite which she cast into the Treasury, of which our Savior saith, Mark 12, 43. Luke 21, verse 23. Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor Widow hath cast in more then all they that have cast into the treasury. She had not cast in more, if we considered the quantity and greatness of the gift (for what was two mites but a quadrin?) but it was more in regard of the quality and affection of her heart, which is much set by of Almighty God. Hereupon it is that the Prophet saith, Micah 7, 18, 19. Who is a God like unto thee, that taketh away iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? He retaineth not his wrath forever, because mercy pleaseth him: he will turn again and have compassion upon us, he will subdue our iniquities, and cast all their sins into the bottom of the Sea. Thus we see how favorable the Lord is toward his children that are desirous and willing to serve him.

To this purpose speaketh the Prophet Malachi in the third Chapter, and the seauenteenth verse, They shall be to me, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day that I shall do this, for a flock: and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. The Father, when he shall set his son to any business, if he show his good will and endeavor to do his best, will be pleased with him and accept of the work, though it be done vnperfectly, rawly, and untowardly. He takes in good part his good desire. Even so is it with Almighty God, if he see in us willingness, we shall find from him forgiveness, and our imperfections to be passed over. The Apostle S. Paul teacheth this in the second Epistle to the Corinthians, chapter eight, and the twelfth verse. If there be first a willing mind it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that a man hath not. Thus doeth God encourage us in our obedience, assuring us that the measure of grace that he bestoweth upon us, shall be sufficient for us.

Fourthly, we must perform the fruits of our obedience entirely, not to halves; sincerely, not parting stakes between God and the Devil, and our selves, as we noted before. Many will do so much readily as may stand with their own liking, and agree with their own ease and profit, but they will go no farther: they are content to do diverse good things, but they continue and persevere in some sins that mar all. They can hate pride, but they contemn the Gospel: some will show love to the Gospel, but are lascivious, hard-hearted, unjust, doers of wrong, and evil speakers. It is a foolish conceit of many, that think they may lawfully live in some known sins, and yet be God's servants still: these deceive themselves, and discover the hypocrisy of their hearts. Such as continue in drunkenness, fornication, Adultery, uncleanness, hatred, and covetousness, will presume to come to the place of God's worship, and shroud themselves into the company of the faithful, and present themselves in the presence of God, and receive the Lord's Supper once a year, and then think that God will and must have respect unto them. These are like the dissembling and deceitful Jews mentioned by Jeremiah the Prophet, Ierem. 7, 9, 10. Will you steal, murder, and commit Adultery, and swear falsely, and burn Incense unto Baal, and walk after other God's whom ye know not? And come and stand before me in this house whereupon my name is called, and say, we are delivered, though we have done all these abominations? Saul would do the works of GOD in outward pretence, and show himself obedient in part: but he kept Agag alive, and spared the fattest of the Cattle, contrary to the commandment of God. Herod heard John willingly, revered him, received the word with joy, and did many things at his preaching; but he would not leave his Incest, and depart from his brothers wife. The godly do not deal thus falsely and fraudulently with God; they give him the possession of their whole hearts, and keep not back a part thereof. Josiah is commended for walking in all the ways of God, and for taking away the abominations of the land. The Prophet David witnesseth, that he had respect to all the commandments of the law. Moses professeth boldly before Pharaoh, that they must carry their Cattle with them into the wilderness to offer sacrifice, and he would not leave an hoof of them behind him. Let us labor after this sincerity, otherwise our obedience is stained with hypocrisy: for God that made all, will have all, or none at all.

Fifthly, our obedience must be a constant obedience, it must not be by fittes and pangs (as the coming of an Ague) for a day, or a short and set time. Such as are sick of an Ague, have a cold fit at the first, & then an hot: with these time-seruers it is quite contrary, they are hot at the beginning, and afterward wax cold at the latter ending. But we must continue out to the end. There is no promise made but to such as persevere. He that endureth to the end, shall be saved: and if we be faithful to the death, We shall receive the crown of life. If we would give right judgment of a man how his case standeth with God and what his conversation is, we must judge of him by the whole course of his life, not by this or that action, no nor only by his behavior at the hour of death, for that is a deceitful rule, and may lead us into error. If a man in the course of his life yield obedience, and seek to approve himself unto God, we have good and firm hope of such a one that he is the child of God, yea albeit at the end of his days, by violence of some sickness and want of natural rest and distemperature of the brain, and impatience of the flesh, he should talk idly, rave grievously, and blaspheme horribly: we are to judge of such a one by the strictness of his life, not by the strangeness of his death. If his life have been sound and sincere, his imperfect obedience shall be accepted, and all his frailty shall be remitted: so that an evil end never followeth a good and godly life. But if the course of a man's life be wicked and his ways crooked, though he die calmly, and go away quietly like a lamb, and cry, Lord have mercy upon me: yet he may be a reprobate and go to the pit of destruction. Hence it is, that the ungodly are described, Job 21. to say unto God, Depart from us, we desire not the knowledge of thy ways: who is the Almighty, that we should serve him, and what profit should we have to pray unto him? yet for the most part they live pleasantly, and having no bands in their death, they die quietly, they spend their days in wealth, and are not tormented with long sickness. They are not afflicted and affrighted as other men. Contrariwise, the godly are daily punished, and chastened every morning, they die in the bitterness of their soul, & never eat with pleasure, Psal. 73.4.14. Eccle. 9.1.2. Who doubteth of the integrity and sincerity of Job and Jeremiah? we know they were just and eschewed evil: yet they cursed the day of their birth, and the night wherein it is said, there was a manchild conceived. And if they had died presently, they had been saved undoubtedly, albeit the corruption of the flesh for a time prevailed: even as it fell out with Jacob, who wrestled with the Angel, but his thigh was so crushed, that he halted ever after. So may it fall out with many of God's children, the force & fierceness of sharp diseases, proceeding from hot causes, may so disturb the head & distemper the powers of the mind, as that they may break out even into blasphemy, yea be so distempered and distracted by the violence thereof, as that they fare as men out of their wits and right mind: yet they may notwithstanding all this, remain still in God's favor, and die in his fear. For they may say, and say truly with the Apostle, It is not I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. He saith, his whole desire was to give himself to the serving of God, yet he was hindered and hampered by his own nature which was ouerweake: so that in striving against sin, he ceased not to receive many wounds, and to take sundry foils & blows, and therefore could not accomplish the good that he desired. Let us all be constant unto the death, & then our obedience shall have his recompense of reward. Lastly, our obedience must not be delayed from time to time, supposing we shall find a fitter time hereafter to hear the Lord speak unto us. The longer we defer the time of repentance & the practice of obedience, the more unfit, vnready, and vnresolved we shall find our hearts to be. Every sin helpeth to harden the heart, until we be turned and transformed into stones. Wherefore the holy Ghost saith, To day if ye will hear his voice, &c: The acceptable season is the present time. So soon as God commandeth & revealeth his will unto us, let us not linger or prolong the time, but immediately prepare our ears to hear, our tongues to speak, our feet to walk, our hands to work, & every part of us to perform his Commandments. He loveth such a servant, he accepteth such a service. Will we regard such a servant, as whē we speak unto him, & show him what we would have done, turneth his back from us & regardeth not our business, or saith he will do it another time, when he is at fitter leisure? If we will not take such service at his hands, or put up such contempt, shall we think the Lord will be mocked to his face, & dalied withal as with a child? When he saith, Come, shall we answer, we will not come? When he comandeth us to hear his voice today, shall we answer, we will not hear it today, but y^e next day, or peradventure the next year? When he saith, This is the acceptable time, shall we answer, I will find a fitter & more convenient time hereafter? If he shall say unto us, the time of repentance is the present time, shall we presume to cross him, and to reply, the time to come is the best time, w^c God hath reserved in his own hand, & is to us unknown? How many are there y^t have neglected the voice of God calling them & crying unto them, that were prevented by sudden & untimely death, and thereby taken away in their sins? The foolish Virgins delayed so long, that y^e Bridegroom came, & they were shut out of the Kingdom, where they knocked, but could not be received. To conclude, let our obedience be surely grounded upon the infallible rock of y^e scriptures: let it be performed heartily, not hypocritically: let it be discharged cheerfully, not grudgingly: let it be done entirely, not to halves: let it be constant, not intermitted and interrupted: lastly, let it be present, not put off from day today: then shall we be sure to be accepted, and that God will crown our obedience in this life, with a full and final recompense in the life to come.

20. So were the sons of Reuben Israel's eldest son, by their generations, by their families, & by the houses of their fathers, according to the number of their names, man by man, every male from twenty years and above, as many as went forth to war.

21. The number of them, I say, of the Tribe of Reuben, was six and forty thousand and five hundredth.

22 Of the sons of Simeon by their generations, their families, and by the houses of their fathers, according to the number of their names, man by man, every male from twenty years and above, as many as went forth to war.

23 The sum of them I say of the Tribe of Simeon, was nine and fifty thousand, and three hundredth.

24. Of the sons of Gad by their generations: and so forward unto the ende of the Chapter.

In the words before we have seen the obedience of Moses set down in general, that he did all as the Lord had commanded him. Here we are to consider the same more particularly, what was the sum of every Tribe: wherein somewhat is set down common to them all, that they are numbered, first, by their generations, secondly, by their families, thirdly, by y^e houses of their fathers, fourthly, according to the number of their names; fifthly, man by man sixthly, every male: seuenthly, frō twēty year and above: eightly, as many as went forth to war. These things are noted of every Tribe particularly: somewhat is set down that is proper to each Tribe, to wit, to what sum it accrued, to wit;

- 1. Of the Tribe of Reuben were numbered, 46500.
- 2. Of the Tribe of Simeon, were numbered, 59300.
- 3. Of the Tribe of Gad, were numbered, 45650.
- 4. Of the Tribe of Judah, were numbered, 74600.
- 5. Of the Tribe of Issachar, were numbered, 54400.
- 6. Of the Tribe of Zebulun, were numbered, 57400.
- 7. Of the Tribe of Ephraim, were numbered, 40500.
- 8. Of the Tribe of Manasseh, were numbered, 32200.

- 9. Of the Tribe of Benjamin, were numbered, 35400.
- 10. Of the Tribe of Dan, were numbered, 62700.
- 11. Of the Tribe of Asher, were numbered, 41500.
- 12. Of the Tribe of Naphtali, were numbered, 53400.
- The total sum—603550.

Here is a particular view and survey taken of this people together, with the general sum of the whole. From hence diverse Questions arise, that are to be answered before we do handle the doctrine proper to this [Question 1] place. First, it may be demanded, how this people could multiply to so great a number in so short a time. For from the birth of Isaac, to the muster here taken, are not much above 400, years, and they went into Egypt with a few souls; how then could one family, the Tribe of Levi also excluded, and the vnwarlike company of women and children, of old and sickly persons not comprehended, how I say, could one family grow to so great a multitude? The Atheists account this incredible and impossible, [Answer.] and therefore make a mock at it, as they do at many other partes of holy scriptures, which they wrest to their own destruction. Neither is this to be believed by the authority of the Church rather, then thorough the testimony of the Scripture and the holy Spirit speaking in it, as some of the Papists speak of many like places. Herein appeareth indeed the wonderful blessing of God in increasing seventy persons to such a multitude, in the space of two hundred & sixteen years; for so long was it and no longer from the coming down of Jacob into Egypt with his family, unto this numbering of them by Moses in this place: whereby God did make good his promise unto Jacob, I will make of thee a great Nation. For as his justice appeared and the severity of his hand, that of all this great multitude which came out of Egypt, only two of them, to wit, Caleb and Joshua entered into the Land of Canaan, all the residue, because of their murmuring, idolatry, and disobedience perished in the wilderness; some were slain with the sword, some were swallowed up of the earth, some were consumed with the pestilence, some were stung with the serpents, some died a natural death; so that neither their eyes saw, nor their feet trod upon the Land of promise, as the Lord threatened them: so the wonderful mercy, & exceeding blessing of God was seen & shown in this wonderful multiplication, until they came to so huge a multitude. Neither need we to hold (as many do) that this was miraculous, and contrary to the course of nature: or that everyone brought forth two or three at every birth. We see by experience in numbering, that a small number by addition and multiplication, and doubling thereof, in a small time ariseth to a great and an innumerable company. Some in our time yet living, avouch, that they have known in their own days, one woman, who saw of her posterity that came out of her own womb, an hundred and sixty persons, and yet a principal part of them had no issue at all, some of them leading a single life, others being prevented by death. The heathen report in their Histories, that the Egyptian women bring forth many at one burden: but to leave them, it is most probable, that all the Hebrew women were very fruitful, and none of them barren; and that they began betimes to bear children, and continued long, the LORD thereby making a way for the execution of his decree, and the accomplishment of his promise, notwithstanding their cruel bondage, heavy yoke, & intolerable labor wherewith they were oppressed and oppugned. Now to give a taste of this increase how it might be effected by ordinary means (albeit by an extraordinary blessing, that God might verify the word spoken unto Abraham) consider with me, that seventy persons in thirty years, supposing they begat everyone but one only in a year (as many might do moe) will bring forth two thousand & one hundred persons. If we cut off the odd hundred, and admit that the third part only of the former number was apt for generation, to wit, six hundred, which make three hundred couples, and so many marriages; these considered as the former, in thirty year more will beget and multiply nine thousand; and yet we are come but to sixty years after their coming into Egypt. The third part of this nine thousand being three thousand, maketh fisteene hundred couples or persons to marry, who having every year one child (who in less then a year may have more then one) will increase the next thirty years forty five thousand, which bringeth us to the ninetieth year after their coming into Egypt. The third part hereof being fifteen thousand, will make seven thousand four hundred couples or marriages, omitting the odd hundredth, which may beget by the twelve year 222000. persons: the third part hereof being seventy four thousand, maketh thirty seven thousand couples, and will beget at the hundred and fifty year, 1110000. souls. The third part hereof being three hundred seventy, thousand persons, maketh one hundred eighty five thousand marriages, which will multiply by generation the next thirty years, which falleth (being expired) into the 180. year, 555000. souls: the third part hereof being one hundred eighty five thousand, maketh besides the odd thousand, 920000. marriages, which will beget by the two hundred and tenth year, 27600000. that is, seven and twenty thousand and six hundred thousand. This particular supputation we have made, to show that the Israelites bringing forth abundance of increase, as the spawn of the fish in the waters, did not multiply by a miraculous generation, but by an extraordinary benediction, GOD giving a special blessing unto them, partly to vex their enemies; and partly to verify his own promises.

[Question 2] Secondly, it may seem strange in this place, that Reuben the eldest son of Jacob, and the beginning of his strength, placed also in this muster in the first rank, cometh far behind many other, in the number of posterity. For, if we compare that Tribe with those that follow, and namely, with Simeon, Issachar, Dan, and Naphtali, we shall find they are much more populous. Joseph was one of the sons of Jacob, and one of the last and youngest, yet he exceeded and surmounted him almost half in half. But in the Tribe of Judah, the blessing of God doeth most apparently show it self according to the ancient prophesy of Jacob.

I answer, though Reuben had the privilege to be the first born, [Answer.] yet he lost his birthright, and for his wickedness committed against his Father, he was thrust down from that seat of honor. This is it which Jacob foretold long before, Genesis 49, 3, 4. Reuben mine eldest son, thou art my might, and the beginning of my strength: the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power, &c. Thou shalt not be excellent, because thou wentest up to thy Fathers bed, then diddest thou defile my bed, thy dignity is gone. This threatening was denounced by the mouth of his Father, but he was therein the mouth and minister of GOD, and therefore it must be in time accomplished. God maketh way for the effecting of it; and this was a sign of the fulfilling of that curse, that his posterity is diminished, and others taste of God's blessing before him. And, as the birth-right had two privileges, the rule over his Brethren, and a double portion of the Fathers inheritance: the former fell to Judah, upon whose posterity the kingdom was cast; the latter to Joseph, whose two sons had a twofold portion; so that Reuben lost the one and the other. For it standeth with God's justice, that he who climbed up where he ought not to have touched, should be thrust from y^t which of right to him belonged; according to the saying of Christ in the Gospel, Whosoever lifteth up himself shall be cast down and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted. This is y^e cause also that Judah and Joseph so much increased & multiplied above their fellows, to the end, that God might make good the promise he made unto them: For heaven and earth shall pass away, but one jot or tittle of this word shall not pass, but be fulfilled. But of these things we shall have occasion offered to speak more in the next chapter, whereunto I refer you for farther direction.

Thirdly, the question may be asked, for [Question 3] what cause Moses numbering the Tribes severally, useth the same words, and maketh so many repetitions, whereas he might have cōprehended the same in a shorter sum? For, he saith of every Tribe, that they were numbered by their generations, by their Families, and by their Fathers houses, according to the number of their names, every male from twēty years and above, as many as went forth to war: was it not enough to have said so once for all, but he must repeat it so often? I answer, [Answer.] there are no vain and needless repetitions in the Scripture; every word, & syllable, and letter hath his use, and standeth for some purpose, albeit we do not always know so much. One cause may be in respect of God; to teach, that as with him is no respect of persons, so he hath a care as well of one as of another; he is a common Father of them all, he neglecteth none, but remembereth them with his kindness, and spreadeth the wing of his protection over them. Thus doth God deal with us at this day, he keepeth us in his book of remembrance, no less then he did y^e Jews, inasmuch as there falleth not a Sparrow to the ground without his will, and the hairs of our head are numbered.

The second cause may be, to graft in our minds, and imprint in our memories this so great a blessing in multiplying them unto the number of so many thousands in so short a space. If he had spoken it once, and in few words, it might soon be forgotten, & lightly pass from us: now he standeth upon it at large, that the often repetition and commemoration might ingraft and engrave it in our hearts, that there it might continue; for we are apt to ascribe God's works to nature, and to take them to our selves, & so to make no profit of them.

Thirdly, he maketh as honorable mention of one as he doth of another, without any difference, that one should not envy at another, neither one condemn another, but that mutual love and friendship should be maintained among them as among Brethren. A little title of honor and dignity is able to make us swell one against another. Least therefore he should seem to neglect one, and prefer another, he keepeth an even hand, and equalleth one with another, so far as lieth in him. He giveth no occasion of advantage to such as were ready to seek all occasions: but cutteth them off, by speaking that of one, which he had affirmed of the other. Thus much of the Questions that may be made and moved out of this division: let us now come to the Doctrines that are to be gathered for our instruction.

[Verse 20, 21, &c. So were the sons of Reuben, &c] Moses setteth down in this place, the particular number of every Tribe, & then the general sum of the whole gathered together into one, the which amounteth unto 603550. persons that could draw the sword. This may seem very strange unto us, that so small an handful of 70. souls should multiply so greatly in the space of 216. years. But herein we are to consider the truth of God joined with his power, who because he is true of his word, and able of his power, performed that to this people which he promised long before to their Fathers. For we must fetch the cause of this extraordinary increase a little higher, and observe that God had passed his promise long before to Abraham, that albeit he were old, and his wife both old and barren, yet he would bless him with a great seed & posterity, as the dust of the earth, as the stars of heaven, and as the sand on the sea—shore which could not be numbered, as Ge. 12, 3. I will make of thee a great Nation, I will bless thee, & make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing. And chap. 13, 14, 16. & 15, 5. & 17, 2, 4, 5, 6. Lift up thine eyes now, and look from the place where thou art, Northward and Southward, Eastward and Westward, I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth, so that if a man number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed be numbered. Likewise Chap. 15. he brought him forth, and said, Look up now unto heaven, and tell the Stars, if thou be able to number them, and be said unto him, So shall thy seed be. So Chap. 17. I will make my Covenant between me and thee, and I will multiply thee exceedingly, Neither shall thy name anymore be called Abram, but Abraham, for a Father of many Nations have I made thee; & I will make thee exceeding fruitful, & will make nations of thee, yea Kings shall proceed of thee. The same promise is likewise renewed to Jacob, Gen. 46 2, 3. I am God, the God of thy father, fear not to go down into Egypt, for I will there make of thee a great Nation. Thus did God speak from time to time to the Patriarchs, and thus did he promise to bless them, & did renew the promise for their farther assurance and consolation. Behold here, the accomplishment of the same promise, and the verifying of it to the full, for he increased his people exceedingly, & made them stronger then their oppressors: yea, he brought them forth with silver and gold, and there was none feeble among their tribes. Frō [Doctrine 4] hence we gather this doctrine, that all the promises of God made to his children, shall in due time be accomplished, so that he will not fail nor falsify the word that is gone out of his mouth. The truth hereof appeareth by sundry consents of Scripture. This is it that Joshua declareth, chap. 21, 44, 45. The Lord gave rest unto Israel round about, according to all that he had sworn unto their Fathers, there stood not a man of all their enemies before them; for the Lord delivered all their enemies into their hand, There failed nothing of all the good things which the Lord had said unto the house of Israel, but all came to pass. Where he showeth, that as God promised to defend his, & to defeat their enemies, and to give his people peace, so he failed them not, but fulfilled his promise. In the Book of the Kings mentioning the siege of Samaria, we read, that in the great famine wherein the City was pressed, the Prophet Elisha prophesieth, that tomorrow this time, a measure of fine flower shall be sold for a shekel, & two measures of Barly for a shekel in y^e gate of Samaria. And howsoever this seemed impossible to such as were blinded with unbelief, & looked upon ordinary means that shown themselves before them, who feared not to say, Though the Lord would make windows in heaven, this thing could not come to pass: yet it did come to pass, & nothing was left vnperformed, for the people went out and spoiled the campe of the Aramites, so that a measure of fine Flowre was at a Shekell, and two measures of Barly at a shekel, according to the word of y^e Lord. True it is, God sometimes promiseth that w^c he doth not by and by accomplish, because the promise is for the appointed time; but in the end it cometh and shall not stay. In the beginning of the world it was said immediately after the man's fall, Gen. 3, 15. I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed & her seed: he shall break thine head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. Many years passed over the heads of God's people before this was performed, yea many Kings and Prophets, and righteous men desired to see these days, that longed for the coming of the Messias, and the consolation of Israel: but when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman, and made under the Law, &c. God promised, and Noah prophesied, and the Scripture hath published, that God should persuade Japheth that he may dwell in the tents of Shem, so that the Gentiles should be converted unto the faith, and won by the ministry of the word, not by the force of the sword to embrace the Gospel. This promise was long deferred, yet in the end truly verified, when the Apostles were called to preach unto them, prepared for it by the gift of tongues, and enabled to go through the work, as appeareth at large in the Acts of the Apostles. The old and New Testament do give testimony one to another. The Old Testament containeth many and sundry prophesies: and what is the new, but an accomplishment of the same? All these allegations, as a cloud of witnesses, confirm this point; that God, as he maketh his promises in mercy, so in justice and righteousness he accomplisheth the same.

[Reason 1] Neither let this seem strange unto us. For first consider with me, who it is that maketh the same; not man who is deceitful, but God who never failed or falsified his word. He is true in all his sayings, and faithful in all his doings: he is as ready to perform, as he is to promise, and never repenteth or recalleth that which is gone out of his mouth. This the Apostle as a faithful witness testifieth, Rom. 3, 3, 4. What though some did not believe? shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect? God forbid: yea, let God be true, and every man a liar, as it is written, That thou mightest be justified in thy words, and overcome when thou art judged. The reason used in this place is this; God is true in his word, and constant in his promise; therefore he never deceiveth nor deludeth those that are his with vain words, whose truth reacheth unto the clouds.

[Reason 2] Secondly, as he is true in nature, so he is unchangeable in will; he is not like man that he should lie. Man is subject to vanity & inconstancy, as to speak, and not to do it: to promise and not to keep it: but it is not so with God, who hath opened his mouth, & will perform it. This doth Job plainly declare, Chap. 23, 13. He is in one mind, and who can turn him? Tea, he doth what his mind desireth: for he will perform that which is decreed of me, and many such things are with him. There is no variableness with him, neither shadow of turning, he remaineth the same evermore. To this purpose Moses declareth that Balaam could not curse the people of God, but was constrained against his will to bless them, because God is not as man that he should lie, neither as the Son of man that he should repent; Hath he said, and shall he not do it? Hath he spoken, and shall he not accomplish it?

Thirdly, he is powerful, and of himself [Reason 3] able and sufficient to work out his own will; so that nothing shall hinder him, or delay the doing thereof when the time is come. It falleth out oftentimes with man, when he hath promised to accomplish a work, that he is not able to perform it, either through weakness in himself, or through the over-ruling power y^t is in another. It is not so with God; whatsoever he decreeth, he doeth: whatsoever he willeth, he worketh and performeth. When after God's gracious promise to give flesh unto his people in abundance, Moses doubted thereof in regard of the want of those means which he saw not, and the multitude of the people which he saw; the Lord said unto him; Is the Lord's hand shortened? Thou shalt now see whether my word shall come to pass unto thee, or not. Seeing therefore, God is true of his word, unchangeable in his will, and powerful in his works, we may build our faith upon this truth, that his promises shall never fail any of his children.

Let us now apply this doctrine to our selves. [Use 1] First, is this certain that God will perform whatsoever he hath promised? Then we may conclude this, that whatsoever promises are not yet fulfilled, shall in due time be accomplished? How many promises hath he already verified? Could any power or strength of man prevail against him to frustrate them, and to make them of none effect? Many there are y^t he hath made which are yet to come, they also shall be made good; for even they are as easily brought to pass as the rest which we see already performed. We have a prophesy & promise of the calling of the Jews, that they shall be gathered into the Sheepfold of Christ and profess his name, for God is able to graft them in again. Hence it is that the Apostle saith, I would not Brethren that ye should be ignorant of this secret (lest ye should be arrogant in yourselves) that partly obstinacy is come to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. See then hereby the prophesy inverted. Once it was, as we heard before, that God should persuade Japheth to dwell in the tents of Sem: but now the promise is, that God will persuade Sem, to dwell in the Tents of Japheth. As therefore the church of y^e Jews is brought in praying for the conversion of the Gentiles, so should we by an holy emulation from them, apply unto them, and for them, their own words, Cant. 8, 8. We have a little Sister, and she hath no breasts: what shall we do for our Sister when she shall be spoken for? The calling of the Gentiles once seemed as vnprobable and impossible, yet did God take away all obstacles and stumbling-blocks, and brought them unto the faith by y^e power of his two-edged sword: so we cannot doubt (for faithful is he y^t hath promised) but in his good time he will in mercy look upon the natural branches, and according to his ancient bountifulness, graft them into their own Olive tree. They are the first borne of God, and as it were the elder Brethren of the house; albeit they seem disinherited for a season, and cast out of the house, yet God will admit them again, & receive them into the adoption of sons. And our doctrine serveth us as a prop and pillar to under-prop our faith touching this point. Again, God hath promised that he will free us from all sin and misery, that he will wipe away all tears from our eyes, and make us without spot and wrinkle, so that we shall hunger and thirst no more. We see not this with our bodily eyes, neither are we made partakers of this promise: For behold unto this hour we both hunger and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain abiding place: we are reviled, and yet we bless: we are persecuted, and suffer it: we are evil spoken of, and we pray: we are made as the filth of the world, the off-scouring of all things, unto this time. This doctrine therefore serveth to uphold our faith in this point. Thirdly, God hath promised to raise up our bodies that have lien in the dust, and are rotted in the earth, by his almighty power, who calleth things that are not as if they were. True it is, it goeth above natural reason to conceive & understand this truth; yet the Apostle saith, If the Spirit of Christ that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies. How soever then our bodies be either burned, or drowned, or devoured, God will raise them, for with him nothing is impossible. We see what men are able to do by Art and workmanship: of ashes, they are able to make costly and curious glasses; by distillation they are able to extract the spirit and quintessence of sundry things: out of one metal it is not hard with them to draw another; as Silver out of Lead by melting and refining; by sowing their corn that rotteth in the earth, we see it hath a new body given it. Therefore it is not impossible in it self. Notwithstanding we see not this as yet performed; the bodies of the Saints remain in the earth, and see corruption. This doctrine therefore serveth to uphold our faith in this point, & to make us rest in hope, that he will not always leave them in the grave, nor suffer them to perish therein for evermore.

Lastly, God hath foretold that there shall be an end of this world, that the Lord Jesus shall break the heavens and come to judge all flesh, so that the dead shall rise, and all shall stand before his judgment seat to receive according to their works, whether they be good or evil. Then shall the faithful be fully glorified, and inherit the crown of eternal life. This howsoever it be oftentimes and faithfully promised of God, yet hath been and is derided of many, who shall in the end pay the price of their folly and infidelity, & feel that God's truth is stable, and surer then y^e heavens. This is it which the Apostle Peter testifieth, This first understand, that there shall come in the last days mockers, which will walk after their lusts, and say, Where is the promise of his coming? For since the Fathers died, all things continue alike, from the beginning of the Creation. But whatsoever these Atheists dream of the glorious appearance of Christ his second coming, and howsoever they put the evil day far from them: yet the Lord of that promise is not slack (as some men count slacknesse) but is patient toward us, and would have no man to perish. Nevertheless, the day of the Lord will come as a Thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a noise, and the Elements shall melte with heat, and the earth with the works that are therein, shall be burnt up. This we see not yet performed, neither are we made partakers of eternal life, when we shall ever rest & remain with the Lord, and nothing shall separate us from his glorious and comfortable presence. This doctrine therefore serveth to uphold our faith in this point. And whensoever we read of any promise that God hath in mercy made to his Church, albeit it be for a time deferred, not presently accomplished, let us wait with patience, and build our Faith upon the experience of his former promises, which we see already fulfilled; and say with the Apostle, I know whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him against that day. We are sure we build not in the air, we beat not the air, but we build upon a sure foundation, that shall never decay or deceive us. For whoever put his trust in him, and was confounded? Or who did set up his rest on him, and went away ashamed? Hence it is that Christ saith, Math. 5, 17, 18. Think not that I am come, to destroy the Law or the Prophets, I am not come to destroy them but to fulfill them: for truly I say unto you, till heaven and earth perish, one jot or one tittle of the Law shall not scape, till all things be fulfilled. This is needful for us to consider & remember, for our faith is often shaken with doubting and infidelity: that which we see not we many times believe not; and so we are shaken through our weakness as with the wind: but we must make God our rock, and rest on his unchangeable word, who is truth it self, and cannot lie.

Secondly, seeing God's promises are so [Use 2] surely grounded upon the immutability of God's truth, that it is impossible y^t they should fail, or he deceive; this teacheth that it is as true, that his judgments shall not fail, but follow the wicked at the heels. For God is as unchangeable in the one, as in the other. It is a foolish error to imagine that God will undoubtedly perform the promises of his mercy, and not the threatenings of his justice. True it is, many presume of his goodness, but they doubt of his righteousness. This is to set up an abominable Idol in our hearts, and to deny the infiniteness of his glory and majesty, and to devise a God made altogether of mercy. If God be true in the one, he is also as true in the other: if he fail in the one, he changeth also in the other. This use is directly concluded by Joshua in the exhortation that he maketh to the people, that they should not join themselves to the idolatrous Nations, but love the Lord their God, and cleave unto him with full purpose of heart, when he saith, Chap. 23. ver. 14, 15. Behold this day do I enter into the way of all the world, and ye know in your hearts, and in all your souls, that nothing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God promised you, but all are come to pass unto you, nothing hath failed thereof: Therefore as all good things are come upon you, which the Lord your God promised you, so shall the LORD bring upon you every evil thing, until he have destroyed you out of this good Land which the Lord your God hath given you. In which words he teacheth, that his threatenings are of the same nature with his promises, and his judgments as certain as his mercies. This appeareth by a notable example which God shown at the breaking up of the long siege of Samaria: he promised to the faithful that would believe, plenty and abundance the next day; and he threatened to the Prince, on whose hand the King leaned, that he should see it with his eyes but he should not eat thereof. Here God did promise good, and threaten evil. Did he show forth the work of his mercy, and not of his judgment? of his goodness, not of his wrath? Yes, of his wrath and judgment; for the people trod upon him in the gate, and he died, as the man of God had said, so it came to pass. This serveth to show the woeful estate and condition of all ungodly men & unrepentant sinners: for howsoever they flatter themselves, & put away the evil day far from them, being deluded, and as it were charmed with a proud presumption of God's mercies, yet the threatening of God, the curse of the Law, and the terror of their conscience which standeth against them shall abide forever: and therefore so long as they go forward in sin, and proceed in y^e wickedness of their hearts, they have just cause to mourn and lament, forasmuch as the threatenings manifested in the word, are inviolable and unchangeable. Let all those that lie in any sin repent, & while it is called today hear his voice, lest the curse of the Law, which shall certainly be fulfilled, do seize upon them, and they be carried to utter destruction. The Prophet Isaiah denounceth many woes against wicked men, Woe unto them that join house to house, and lay Field to field, til there be no place for the poor. Woe unto them that rise up early to follow drunkenness, and to them that continue til night. Woe unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as with Cart-ropes. Woe unto them that speak good of evil, and evil of good; which put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, & sweet for sour. Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes, & prudent in their own sight. Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and to them that are strong to pour in strong drink. Here are many woes, and fearful threatenings of many miseries, and do the ungodly think to escape? or that these things do not deeply concern them? Our Savior denounceth a great woe, against all contemners of the Gospel, & telleth them, It shall be easier for Tyre & Sidon, nay for Sodom and Gomorra in the day of judgment, then for them. Must not these denunciations be accomplished? Or do we remain as Infidels, and think they shall never be performed? Or if they be performed, that we shall be exempted or excused? It cannot be that his word should fall to the ground, and take none effect. Let us fear these terrible threatnings, humble our selves before him, and forsake our evil ways: let us betake our selves unto him, and let us turn unto his word, for the word will never turn unto us, and bend it self to our pleasure. The Scripture is full, & replenished with such heavy threatnings, as may serve to strike a fear and terror into our hearts. The Prophet Amos denounceth a Woe to them that are at ease in Zion, that put far away the evil day, and approach to the seat of iniquity, and are not sorry for the affliction of Joseph. The Prophet Malachi foretelleth, that the day cometh which shall burn as an Oven, and all the proud, yea all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, and shall leave them neither root nor branch. These threatenings are surer then the heavens which shall pass away, but these shall never pass away: and therefore woe to them that repent not, nor return to the Lord; for they must needs be taken suddenly in them as in a snare, and no man shall be able to deliver them. They may think themselves forgiven, or at least forgotten, but poor souls they are deceived. It is not length of time that can help them, nor strength of their arm that can save them, nor the wedge of Gold that can deliver them: for Riches avail not in the day of wrath, nor serve to pacify his indignation; but righteousness delivereth from death.

Thirdly, as we learn the truth of God in [Use 3] his threatenings, so there ariseth from hence a most excellent ground of assured comfort for all God's servants, to establish their hearts in the immutability of all his promises. Manie are the particular promises set down in the word, & as many as are there mentioned, so many particular comforts are ministered unto us as from the hand of God, to the end that we believing them, and as it were, clasping our arms about them, might have strong consolation and boldness to come to the throne of grace. Wherefore, whensoever we feel the weakness of our faith, we must have recourse to his word. As they which have a dim sight and weak eye, use the help of their Spectacles, and thereby find comfort: so should we when we are at any time troubled with doubting, help our spiritual eye-sight with often looking into the glass of his word, and meditating continually upon his promises. It were endless and infinite to speak of all his gracious promises mentioned in his word: some are of temporal blessings, and other of spiritual and eternal; in both we ought to rest upon the vnchangeableness of his will, who is not as man that he should any way deceive us; as those that use to promise much, & perform little. His promise is certain, and very good payment, if we dare trust him of his word. It is he that hath said, I have been young, and am old, yet I saw never the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread. It is he that hath spoken, I will not fail thee, neither forsake thee, so that we may boldly say, The Lord is mine helper, neither will I fear what man can do unto me. It is he that hath promised, Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be ministered unto you. We see how much many men vex & torment themselves about earthly & transitory things; they fear they shall want before they die, and give themselves to unlawful shifts to maintain themselves and their estate: the reason hereof is, because they have unbelieving hearts; they cannot cast themselves and their care upon the Lord, they will not seek his love and favor, they labor not to be reconciled to him in Christ Jesus, and whatsoever he promise unto them of his word, they believe nothing at all.

Take an example of God's providence over his people, whiles they walked and wandered in the Wilderness, they had neither seed time nor harvest, and they were an huge multitude, of more then six hundred thousand, beside women and children, yet he sustained them, and provided for them till he brought them into the land of Canaan. He is not as a poor Father that hath moe children then he is able to sustain; or as a state that is constrained to disburden it self of their superfluity and overflowing multitude, and so to send out many Colonies to plant themselves in other places: he hath all the earth in his own power, & is able to provide for all his children y^t wait upon him, and put their trust and confidence in him. This must be our comfort in time of trial and temptation, that he hath promised never to fail us nor forsake us: and albeit man's promises may deceive us, and his deed come short of his word, yet no jot or portion of God's promises shall remain vnfulfilled; and therefore in all our necessities, let us possess our souls with patience, and wait constantly for the accomplishment thereof, which in due time shall take good effect. The fault is in our selves, who will not lay hold upon the same, he hath said he will be our tower of defense, and City of refuge to shield us from danger & all distress; but we will not trust him of his word, but use unlawful means for our deliverance. That which hath been said of transitory and temporal blessings, may also be spoken of eternal. God hath promised the renewing of our hearts, the forgiveness of sins, and the kingdom of heaven, as Ier. 31, 32, 33. Heb. 8, 10, 11, 12. Isaiah 40, 1, 2. I will put my Laws in their mind, and in their heart I will write them. I will be their God, and they shall be my people. I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and I will remember their sins and their iniquities no more.

These are great and precious promises: here are sweet comforts of life and salvation offered unto us on God's part: let these be to us as the Anchor of our souls both sure and steadfast. These are immutable things, Wherein it is impossible that God should lie, and therefore let us be established in them, and lay hold upon that hope which is set before us. And if we believe not, yet abideth he faithful, he cannot deny himself. No greater comfort can be given, no greater promise can be made, then to assure us of the pardon and forgiveness of our sins, which make a separation between God and us. To have a feeling of this mercy, is as sweet Incense unto the soul, and as precious balm unto the heart. Let us therefore comfort our selves with this promise, & howsoever Satan sift us, and seek by all means to take from us this peace of conscience which passeth all understanding, we must shroud our selves under the safety of his word which abideth forever; and when we are tempted to doubt of his goodness in the remission of our sins, let us lay hold on the former promises, and know that the heavens themselves shall fall and be moved out of their places, before the truth of his word (which is truth it self) shall be diminished or disannulled.

Fourthly, is God constant of his word, and [Use 4] faithful of his promise, then it is required of us to be like our heavenly Father in truth and faithfulness. When God hath promised any blessing to his people, he is true of his word, and bringeth it to pass. The Lord said to them, After seventy years be accomplished at Babel, I will visit you, and perform my good promise toward you, and cause you to return to this place; for I know the thoughts that I have thought toward you, even the thoughts of peace and not of trouble, to give you an end, and your hope. This did he accomplish by the means of Cyrus, whose spirit he stirred up to make a proclamation throughout his kingdom, that whosoever would, should go up to Jerusalem to build it and inhabit there. Now, as God is faithful in his word, so let us follow his example, and make conscience of our words & sayings, that thereby we may assure our selves to be the children of our heavenly Father. We must therefore know that all just covenants and contracts, all promises & bargains must be performed, albeit they be made to our hurt and hindrance, and bind us in conscience and duty, by the Law of God & man, so far forth as he pleaseth to require them, to whom they have been made. The Prophet asking the question, Who shall dwell in the Lord's Tabernacle, & rest in his holy Hill, maketh this answer, He which sweareth to his hurt and changeth not. This we see in Joshua toward the Gibeonites: and in the book of Judges, chapt. 1. when the Spies saw a man come out of the City, and said unto him, Shew us we pray thee the way into the City, and we will show thee mercy: when he had shown them the way into the City, they smote the City with the edge of the sword, but they let the man & all his household depart. Hence we should learn, to be wary and watchful in our promises, considering as well, whether we be able to perform them, as whether we be willing, and examining our hearts whether they be in our own power nor not, and whether (if they be) it be lawful for us to perform them. For some things are lawful in themselves to pay and perform, which are in no sort in our power: and other things may be in our power, which are not lawful to be done. This fidelity in keeping promise, is a weighty point of the Law, Math. 23, and a fruit of the Spirit: and therefore it standeth us upon to make conscience thereof. If any man were asked the question, whether he think it his duty to endeavor to be like God, and to strive to resemble him, as the child resembleth his father, he would be ready to answer. It is his duty to do it, and his comfort that it is so: If then we acknowledge the necessity of it, let us follow him in constancy and true dealing, studying to be perfect as our heavenly Father is perfect. This is that use which the Apostle urgeth, 2 Cor. 1. When I was thus minded, did I use lightness? Or mind I those things which I mind, according to the flesh, that with me should be yea, yea, and nay, nay? Yea, God is faithful, that our word toward you, was not yea and nay: for all the promises of God in Christ are yea, and are in him, Amen, unto the glory of God through us. The Apostle in these words declareth that he was wrongfully slandered, and unjustly charged with looseness and lightness of promise, and unconscionable breaking of his word; inasmuch as he had always before him the example of God, whom he acknowledgeth to be faithful in his words and promises. This serveth to reprove those that will rashly promise anything, as Saul did to David, as Laban did to Jacob, and then changed their mind as the weather-cock doeth at every blaste of wind. These are like the reed that bendeth too and fro; but it must not be so with us, we must purpose, and not alter; we must promise, and then perform carefully what we have promised.

Lastly, whensoever God hath made good [Use 5] the words of his mouth, and accomplished his promises unto us, which we have long looked for & expected, it is our duty to praise his name, and to give him the glory of the work, to whom alone it is due. Hath he fed us in time of famine, and made us to see, that Man liveth not by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of his mouth? Let us not sacrifice unto our net, nor burn incense unto our yarne, but say with the Prophet, Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy Name give the glory, for thy loving mercy and for thy truths sake. This duty we see practiced by King Solomon, 1 Kings 8. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who spake with his mouth unto David my father, and hath with his hand fulfilled it: the Lord hath made good his word that he spake, and I am risen up in the room of David my father, and sit on the Throne of Israel, as the Lord promised, and have built the house for the name of the Lord God of Israel. A worthy pattern and president for us to follow, whensoever we taste of the grace and bountifulness of God, to offer up unto him a song and sacrifice of thanksgiving. And if we must do this for temporal blessings, much more are we bound to do it for such as are spiritual. If God have for a season hid his face from us, that we have seen no light of his grace, but all these things have been covered with darkness and discomfort, as it were the Sun in a Cloud; if our sins as the waves of the sea have gone over our head, and been a burden too heavy for us to bear, and yet in the ende God hath remembered his mercy towards us, and not shut up his kindness in displeasure; why have we still unthankful hearts, & why have we shut up our mouths in silence as dumb men, and why do we not confess the Lord his loving kindness, and his wonderful works before the sons of men? Who is it that liveth upon the earth, and hath not found by daily experience the faithfulness of the Lord, in making good his promises unto him? yet where are they that return to him again with a grateful remembrance of his grace, and an holy acknowledgment of his truth toward him? We are like the Lepers in y^e Gospel, who were all cleansed, but God was not praised of them all, only one was found, who returned to give God the praise. Let us not be like these unthankful Lepers, that swallowed up the goodness of God toward them, and never confessed the receiving of it. He will not suffer such swine to devour his benefits, that can open their mouths wide to taste of his mercies, as the earth that gapeth to receive the showers of rain; but have learned to keep them shut when they should praise God's name with a loud voice. Their tongues are eloquent and learned when they are to crave, but when they have received, they are tongue-tied and cannot speak. Let us be far from such practices, and as we see them, learn to detest them, that God may have the glory, and be all in all. Let us not tread in the steppes of such persons, as albeit the Lord doth continually remember them with his kindness, yet do forget him and the works of mercy that he hath shown toward them.

The former part of the Chapter consisted in numbering of the Tribes: in the latter he declareth that the Levites were not numbered, who were not for the wars, but to serve in the Tabernacle of the Congregation. We shall see them afterward numbered by themselves, but they were not put in the common rank and reckoning, because God had chosen them to be his possession, and separated them from the rest of the people. And lest any man should think, that Moses did extraordinarily exalt, and ambitiously prefer the Tribe of Levi, whereof himself descended, he showeth he did it not of his own head, but by the special commandment of God. Their office is declared, to take the charge of the Tabernacle and worship of God, that when they were to take their journey, they should carry it; and when they were to stay and pitch their Tents, they should set it down, and look to it with all diligence. And as God would not have them entangled and encombred in affairs improper to them, and impertinent to their calling: so he would not have others that were not of their Tribe and family, to break into their function, as it were to invade another man's possession; nay he denounceth death to such as were strangers from that Tribe, that should presume to meddle with those holy things, or set their hands unto thē. An example hereof we have in Uzzah, 2. Sam. 6. who, because he touched the Ark of God contrary to the Law, was punished with sudden death, and stricken with the immediate hand of God that fell upon him, to the terror of others, and to work reverence in the harts of all men toward the sacred things of his service. God did not admit all men without difference to minister before him, but separated only the Levites, lest holy things should be polluted and profaned; and withal to teach that all men are in themselves unworthy to stand before him and come into his presence, except they have a calling from him. Thus then we see the charge laid upon the Levites, what it is; they are distinguished frō the other Tribes who were numbered for the war: but these are kept to serve in the Tabernacle, to minister in the holy place, to meddle with the holy things, and to take y^e charge of the worship of God, lest vengeance come upon the Congregation of the Children of Israel. These things they ought to do, but touching things of another nature, they had nothing to do. We learn from hence, that it is the duty of the Ministers of God's word, [Doctrine 5] to exercise themselves only in things of their calling, they must wait and attend upon the office to which they are chosen and appointed. They are not to be distracted from their calling by worldly matters that no way belong unto them: but considering to what uses and ends they are set apart from others, they should be intentiue thereunto. This is set down afterward more plainly and particularly touching the Tribe of Levi. Bring the Tribe of Levi, and set them before Aaron the Priest, that they may serve him, and take the charge with him, even the charge of the whole Congregation, to do the service of the Tabernacle. This is it which Moses setteth down touching Levi, Deut. 33, 9, 10. He said unto his father and mother, I have not seen him, neither knew he his brethren, nor knew his own children, for they observed thy word, and kept thy covenant: they shall teach Jacob thy judgments, & Israel thy Law, they shall put Incense before thy face, and the burnt Offering upon thine Altar. The Apostle Paul setting down the offices & Officers of the Church, gives everyone his charge, and bindeth them within the limits & precincts thereof, out of which they were not to walk or wander, Rom. 12. 7, 8. Seeing we have gifts that are diverse, &c: whether we have an Office, let us wait on the office: or he that teacheth, on teaching: or he that exhorteth, on exhortation: he that distributeth, let him do it with simplicity, c where he assigneth to everyone his proper duty, as it were his own ground to till and manure, that they should not enter into the possession of another. Thus doth the Apostle Peter charge the Elders whose office was to teach the people, Feede the flock of God that dependeth upon you. All these testimonies tend to this point, to show that the Ministers are not to encumber themselves rashly in matters estranged from them, but to wait and attend upon the Office unto which they are called.

And doubtless it is great reason that they should content themselves with their own [Reason 1] callings, that so they may please him that hath called them, and forgo all that may distract & disturb them in the course and calling whereunto they ought to tend. We must be like soldiers that are called to bear arms. The reason and comparison is pressed by the Apostle to this purpose, 2 Tim. 2.3, 4. Therefore suffer thou affliction, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ: no man that warreth, entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, because he would please him that hath chosen him to be a soldier. This is the order and discipline of war, so soon as the soldiers are enrolled and have given their names to their Captains, they leave their houses, they forsake their families, and forgo whatsoever is dear unto them, to the end they may do their duty to their Captain that hath chosen them, and fight the battles to which they are appointed. If this honor be done to mortal men, what ought we to do to the Son of God, when he is so good and gracious, as to receive us into his service, to give us our press-money, and to pay us our wages? He could want us well enough, he hath no need of us. Were it not then a great shame, and an horrible reproach for us, that poor soldiers who fight & know not wherefore, should notwithstanding do this honor to a mortal man, to forget all their affairs and business: and yet we should be so nice and delicate, that we can bear & forbear nothing for the service of Christ?

Secondly, the multitude is great, and the [Reason 2] difficulty much of those things which are required of the Minister, belonging rightly & duly to his calling, in regard whereof we may say with the Apostle, 2 Cor. 2, 16. Who is sufficient for these things? Were that a wise servant, who having both his hands full, and more then he can well do, should besides his masters work undertake a new and another burden of some other man's business, which of right doth not belong unto him? Or were he a wise Steward, who having enough to do, to provide meat for the family in due season, should meddle with other matters unfit for him? In like manner, it cannot be approved, that the Minister of God should intermeddle with things not incident to his office, considering on the one side, the worthiness and weightiness of his calling, which will require all the gifts he hath (if he had a far greater portion) and on the other side, his own weakness and infirmity to stand under so great a charge, which is able to weary the strongest man: inasmuch as the taking upon him two several callings, will cause him to leave undone in one, so much as he performeth in the other. We see this in the example of the Apostles, Acts 6, 2, 3, 4, who were of most eminent and extraordinary gifts, yet their ministry did so busy them and set them on work, that they would admit no other charge with it, but did disburden themselves of that which they had, and cast the care of attending upon the poor to others, It is not meet that we should leave the word of GOD to serve the Tables: wherefore brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the holy Ghost and of wisdom, which we may appoint to this business, & we will give our selves continually to prayer, and to the ministration of the word. The Apostles found themselves not able to discharge both these callings, to provide for the poor, & to preach the Gospel. Have any been endued with like gifts, or were they able to match them? If they were not, how can they take upon them that which these master-builders refused? So thē it appeareth that the Ministers must not entangle themselves with anything besides their ministry.

[Use 1] Let us come to the uses. First of all, are they to employ themselves and their time in such duties as are peculiarly belonging unto them? Then this serveth to meet with many abuses that are crept into the Ministry; as namely to begin, such as are idle and do nothing, such as are slothful and slow bellies, that live to themselves, and feed themselves, but feed not the flock that dependeth upon them. Idleness is unfit for any calling, and unlawful in any person: but much more in the Minister of the word. The Prophet Ezekiel is earnest and vehement in reproving these drones, chapt. 34, 2.3. Thus saith the Lord, woe be unto the Shepherds of Israel, that feed themselves: should not the shepherds feed the flocks? Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed, but ye feed not the sheep. Such as will do nothing in the Church, nor take any pains in their places, are worthy of nothing, who seeing they will not labor, are not worthy to eat. Such are to be sent to school to the brute beasts, who by the light of nature have learned to shun idleness. Solomon saith, Go to the Pismire, O sluggard, behold her ways and be wise: for she having no guide, governor, nor ruler, prepareth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in harvest. It is a foul spot and blemish, especially in a Minister, to be branded with the infamous note of idleness. We see in the Common-wealth, where the fault is not so grievous or so dangerous, how idle persons are evil spoken off, reproached, vnpitied, and oftentimes punished: we see how laws are daily sharpened against them to compel them to labor, and to work with their hands, or else to make them smart for it. When any grow lazy and loitering about their business, we commonly send them to the house of correction. But the idleness of the Minister is a greater offense, and bringeth with it the ruin of themselves and many others. There cannot be a greater scar or scab in the Church, then to have it pestered & plagued with such sores. In former times of superstition we were wont to be troubled with dead Idols: but blessed be God they are pulled down and destroyed, and the names of them are almost unknown unto us. Notwithstanding in these days of the light of the Gospel, we are troubled with living Idols, which do as much harm as the other, and annoy the Church with great danger, and undermine the good estate of it another way. These are Idols that are mufled and tongue-tied; they have eyes and see not, they have ears and hear not, they have mouths and speak not, neither doth any voice pass thorough their throat. Let these men know, that they omit the duties of their calling, & therefore cannot have any comfort in their places. Let them be laborers, or else be no Ministers. Secondly, this reproveth such as are content to take pains in the Church, who would be ashamed to be accounted loiterers, and yet this doctrine seizeth upon them and arresteth them as debtors to God and his people. These are Preachers of the word, but withal they give themselves so much to matters of this world, that they cannot follow their studies privately, nor teach the people publicly as they ought. These have taken upon them to be Ministers, and yet they will be farmers and grazeyers: they will be both spiritual and temporal: they will serve God and the world. But the more these men enwrap themselves in earthly things & thoghts, the more they neglect heavenly: and while their heads are busy in contriving and dispatching worldly matters, they must needs neglect better studies. For the greater their care is in the one, the more their carelessness is in the other: and the more deeply they dive into the world, the more shallow are their meditations in the word. The office of the Deacons to attend upon the poor (to receive the alms with one hand, and to distribute them with the other) was merely Ecclesiastical; and therefore being in part of the same nature, might with more ease and less trouble be annexed to the Ministry of the word; yet the Apostles (as we heard before) cast it from them as a burden unto them: how then shall we in these days, not to be compared with the Apostles, and for dispatch and expedition, but children to them, presume to mingle and shuffle matters of the world with our Ministry, that are of diverse, nay contrary nature, and think to manage and order them both very sufficiently? He would be accounted a fond and unwise man, who having an heavy burden already upon his shoulders as much as he is able to bear & endure, should notwithstanding lay hold of another as weighty as the former, and yet suppose himself to have sufficient strength to carry it with the same facility.

But some man may object, that Peter and [Objection 1] the other Apostles were fisher-men. and did also go to fishing after they were called to be Apostles: and Paul became a Tent-maker, laboring with his hands, and exercising a manual occupation.

I answer, [Answer.] this doth not allow the Ministers of the Gospel to be trades-men, or fi•hermen, where there is a Church well established and reformed; they are only tolerated in the ruins and desolations threof. In these cases it is lawful for the Minister to join to his calling another calling, in the poverty of his own person, not otherwise able to maintain his estate, and in the general want and need of the Church, not able sufficiently to provide for him. The causes and occasions of Paul's laboring with his hands, were partly that he might not in that point be inferior to the false Apostles, who took no wages or stipend, thereby seeking to win credit to themselves, and to disgrace the true servants of Christ, in regard whereof he sought to cut away occasion from them which desired occasion; and partly that he might help to ease and support the need and poverty of the Church. The Apostles did this in case of necessity: but what is this to justify and bear out the practice of worldly minded men, who do it to be great men in the world, to grow rich and wealthy, and to raise up their posterity to be mighty upon the earth? These are so much choked with the thorns of cares of this life, and deceitfulness of riches, that they can preach sildome, and that so coldly, and rawly, and vndigestedly, as that it may well appear they have earth in their minds and mouths, that their voices are stopped, and their gifts are decayed, and their zeal is quenched. What then, will [Object. 2] some say? Would you have us always poring upon a book? or would you not have us provide for our family that God hath given us? I answer, [Answer.] it is lawful to do the office of the father of a family, to order the matters of his own household aright. GOD commandeth it, man willeth it, nature requireth it, and law alloweth of it; so that Whosoever provideth not for his own, especially those of his family, hath denied the faith, and is worse then an Infidel. Neither are men always bound to be in their studies as in a Prison; that which wanteth seasonable rest, cannot long endure and continue. The mind is as a man that trauaileth a long journey, in the end he will wax weary, and must have rest: or as a bow that cannot stand always bent, lest it be overmuch weakened. If an archer should continually shoot in his bow and never vnbend it, he would in short time break it into shiuers, and make it unprofitable. So when the Minister hath wearied himself in the weighty works of his holy calling, he is not denied leave and liberty to refresh himself other ways. If it be in shooting, or grafting, or planting, or such like, he sins not: provided that there be a difference made between recreation and an occupation, and that they hinder not his general or particular calling.

Every Minister, if aright he consider of his place, shall find he hath as much as he can turn his head and hand unto, when they do their best endeavor.

We are commanded to give no offense to Jew or Gentile, or to the Church of GOD. But for us, that profess our selves spiritual men, and yet to live as temporal men, is offensive to the people, and layeth a stumbling block before them, and therefore it is to be avoided of us.

Let us set before us the example of Christ Jesus and his practice, Luke 12, verse 13. who refused to divide the inheritance among the Brethren; having respect unto the bounds and limites of his calling: declaring thereby that it belongeth in no wise to the Ministers of the word to intermeddle in y^e judgment of such causes. He failed not in any duties that fell out in the compass of his calling, but performed them willingly: this office he utterly refused, and therefore no doubt was impertinent to the Minister. Likewise when the people would have taken him and made him King, he conveyed himself out of their sight, and would not accept such honor at their hands. Thus he also refused to pronounce sentence upon the harlot that was brought unto him, saying, I do not condemn thee, go thy way and sin no more: so that he would not meddle with civil and criminal causes. And as he practiced himself, so he taught his Apostles, and others that professed to be his Disciples. When one that was called to follow Christ, said, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father, Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead, but go thou & preach the Kingdom of God. Then another said, I will follow thee Lord, but let me go first and bid them farewell which are at mine house; Jesus said unto him, No man that putteth his hand to the Plough, and looketh back, is apt to the Kingdom of GOD. To conclude therefore, no man must over-burden himself, with things that belong not to his calling. And albeit some have done such things in the poverty of the Church, yet we must make a difference between those that do it to sustain necessity, and others that thereby maintain superfluity: the one doth it thorough defect, the other in all pomp and excess. Thirdly, this reproveth those that albeit they do not entangle them-selves in worldly business, yet they entangle themselves with sundry livings, that it is not possible for them to do the duties proper to their calling. For while they labor in the one, they cannot labor in the other, and if they be present at the one, they are absent from the other. But the calling of the Minister requireth personal pains, and admitteth not an ordinary Deputy; no more then the Levites could put out their charges to others, who are reproveth by the Prophet, Because they kept not the ordinances of the Lord's holy things, and themselves had set others to take the charge of his Sanctuary. Neither can this be any discharge unto us, that we have others to labor for us, men of gifts & knowledge: seeing as the charge is ours, and belonging to our persons, so the discharge should also be ours, and touch our own persons. But of this, we have already spoken more at large elsewhere, and therefore will omit it, referring the Reader to that place for farther resolution.

Secondly, this doctrine serveth for comfort [Use 2] to all those that are true-hearted Levites, and leave all by-matters that stand not with their calling, to serve God aright in their places. If we be truly answerable to the weight and worthiness of our Ministry, and are careful to bring forth the fruits thereof, and are faithful in performing the duties that God hath bound us unto, we may say with the Apostle, 2 Tim. 4, 7, 8. I have fought a good fight, and have finished my course: I have kept the faith, henceforth is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that time: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. Paul at this time was near unto death, and the day of his departure was at hand: was he now without comfort? or did he doubt of God's favor? No, he was not afraid of death, but always acknowledgeth it should be gain and advantage unto him, so that he desired to be eased, and to be with Christ, which is best of all. What was then his comfort, and wherein did his rejoicing consist? In that he had faithfully done the duties of his calling, and kept faith and a good conscience. This point doth more lively and notably appear in Christ our Savior, in that comfortable prayer which he offered up as Incense unto his Father, making intercession for us; I have glorified thee on earth, I have finished the work thou gavest me to do: I have declared thy Name unto the men which thou gavest me out of the world; thine they were, and thou gavest them me, and they have kept thy word. This work of redemption and reconciliation of man, is proper to Christ: but every Minister in his calling doth glorify God, and shall receive glory of the Father, whose work he hath finished, whose name he hath declared, whose word he hath published. If he that giveth a cup of cold water, shall not go away unrewarded: surely he that hath distributed the bread of life with a free hand, & the water of life with a full cup, shall receive a Prophets reward, which the Prophet of all Prophets shall give unto him. To this purpose, Daniel to comfort such as should suffer death in the troublesome times & bloody persecutions under Antiochus saith, They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the Firmament: and they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever & ever. A notable encouragement this is unto us to do our duties; we rise not early & late, we watch not, we wake not in vain & for nothing, though we have a cold reward many times for our pains of our unthankful people: God that setteth us on work and seeth our harts, will in his good time remember our effectual faith, and diligent love, and the patience of our hope in Jesus Christ. To this purpose the Apostle Peter putteth us in good assurance of a sure recompense, Feede the flock of God which dependeth upon you, &c, and when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive an incorruptible crown of glory. Here is a duty, & a dignity; a work, & a reward; a direction, & a consolation. If we care for the flock more then for our selves, the great Shepherd of the sheep will make us partakers of everlasting life. But if we enter upon the flock for the fleeces sake, and do that which we do constrainedly, not willingly: we have our reward, we cannot look for any recompense at his hands, that is the great owner of the sheep. Woe unto all such idle Shepherds, their estate shall be fearful in the fearful day of account, who have gifts given them, and have not used them to the comfort of themselves, to the benefit of the people, & to the glory of the giver. These are like unto the Ostrich, which hath wings, but flieth not with them: so they have gifts, but they employ them not, and it had been better for them, that they had never received them, then to receive them, and not to bestow them to those ends for which they were first given. The stomach that receiveth meat into it, carrieth it over to other parts, and keepeth it not to it self, from whence followeth the health and strength of the whole body. Thus ought it to be with all those that have obtained knowledge and other gifts; they must turn them and transmit them to the good of every part, but if they keep them locked in their own breast, they will putrefy & corrupt, as meat retained still in the stomach never digesteth. What comfort can these men have, when they shall go the way of all flesh? Nay, what discomfort shall they not find, & what horror and fear shall they not feel, to consider how unprofitable servants they have been? But if we have received gifts, and have been conscionable in the using of them, we have comfort in God, that he will receive us and reward us. Though our gifts be small, yet if we have labored to use them well, we shall be accounted good, and profitable, and faithful servants.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it is required of every Minister to be painful in his place, and to preach in season and out of season, and to give attendance on the flock, Ouer which the holy Ghost hath made him Ouerseer. We must therefore be faithful in our callings, observing therein two rules, first, looking to our selves; secondly, to the flock or people committed to our charge. It is not sufficient for us to teach the will of God to others, but we must do it our selves. Our Savior requireth of his Disciples, not only to preach to others, but themselves to observe his Commandments, Whosoever shall break one of these least Commandments, and teach men so, he shall be called least in the Kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall observe and teach them, the same shall be called great in the Kingdom of heaven. It is not therefore enough to teach them, unless we have our selves care to observe them; it is our duty to teach others, but specially & principally our selves, for doing must go before teaching, and observing before edifying. This order doth the Apostle Paul set down to the Elders of Ephesus, Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock whereof the holy Ghost hath made you Overseers, to feed the Church of GOD, which he hath purchased with his own blood. Whereby we see, he instructeth them in the first place to have a care of their own ways, and thereby to give a good example unto them. If then we have a regard to preach to others, we ought much more to preach to our selves; and in vain he instructeth others, that suffereth his own heart to be disobedient. He that preacheth well and liveth ill, confuteth and convinceth himself. To all such the same Apostle saith, Thou therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? Thou that teachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal? Thou that sayest; a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? &c: The name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles thorough you.

There are two Pillars of a Pastors charge, piety of life, and piety of doctrine. He must not be severe toward others, and loose in respect of himself: he must not lay load upon others, and spare himself. Wherefore the Apostle saith to Timothy, chapt. 4. verse 16. Take heed unto thyself and unto learning, continue therein: for in doing this, thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee. Thus doth the Apostle always teach all men, and specially the Ministers, to begin the work of reformation with themselves, and plough up the furrows of their own hearts.

And that this is the best order, first to practice upon our selves as good Physicians, and that from sanctification wrought in us, we should endeavor to work it in our hearers, may appear unto us by these reasons. First, unless we be doers as well as speakers, we utter words with our own tongues that shall condemn our selves, as Uriah, that carried about him a letter to further and procure his own death. So shall we often pronounce the sentence of condemnation upon our selves, and it shall be said to us as to that slothful servant in the Gospel, Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, O evil servant. We shall need no other to condemn us, then our selves; we shall be produced as witnesses to convince us, and to stop our mouths, that we shall have nothing to answer for our selves. Secondly, a minister cannot with comfort and conscience preach to others, until in his own person he be a practiser of those things that he teacheth. For if he speak from the heart, the spirit of God must incline it to the obedience of it: such then as are not touched with a feeling of the Word, are but verbal teachers, and may save others, but cannot save themselves. The Apostle would have the Church of God to comfort their brethren by the comfort wherewith themselves are comforted of God: but how can they comfort others in any affliction, that have not tasted of the sweet consolation of his Spirit inspired into them? In like manner how shall the Minister either teach, that is not taught of God; or comfort, that is not comforted of God? Such as are endued with the Spirit of God to teach others, are led by the same Spirit into all obedience. Thirdly, such as are teachers and not doers, do seduce the people, and lead them into all evil ways, and do pull down with the left hand of evil life, faster then they set up by the right hand of wholesome doctrine. Such a confusion doth this work in the people. For while they hear him for his doctrine to sit in Moses chair, and behold him for his life to sit in the Devils chair, they regard not his preaching, but are ready to run with him into the same excess of riot. What do they care for his words, so long as they see his deeds? Deeds and works are wont to pierce deeper, and to carry a surer impression to the Conscience, then bare & naked words. If a man should ask the right way to any place of another; and whiles he pointeth out one way, discern him walking another way unto it, he will rather follow his footsteppes, then the sound of his words; for he will by and by conceive, Surely if that were the right way, he would walk in it himself. So then the ill life of the Minister is dangerous, not only to himself, but to others, and it shall corrupt more then his doctrine can convert. Lastly, the fruit and efficacy of the Word sealed up in our own harts, is one of the most notable helps for the opening of it unto others. Such a Teacher is worth an hundredth other. He that teacheth from experience of the power of it in himself, is the most profitable Teacher: and except we feel it working in our selves, how can we fitly work by it obedience in others? As then our Savior said to Peter, When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren: so may it be said of the Ministers, when they are moved, they shall move others: and when they are taught, they shall teach others. Again, when once we have labored and prevailed with our selves to become doers of the word as well as publishers of it, then we must not stay and stand there, but we must teach the same faithfully, & bend our selves to seek the salvation of others. By these fruits we shall be known to be faithful Stewards in his house. True it is, we should aim at the saving of the souls of the people, but this is not the essential property of a godly and faithful Minister, seeing other may do it, and these not do it; but the doing and teaching of the word and will of God. If our consciences can witness with us, that our care hath been to preach the word in sincerity, & to win them by example of life and soundness of doctrine, whatsoever the effect and success hath been, we have comfort in the discharge of our calling with diligence. The Prophet complaineth that he had labored in vain, and spent all his strength in vain. And Paul to this purpose declareth, that we are the sweet savor of Christ, as well in them that perish, as in them that are saved. To conclude, we must have these three things in some measure in us: first, a care to win them, a desire to convert them, and an earnest hunger and thirst after their salvation. Secondly, we must labor earnestly to work their conversion, and not cease or hold our peace when we see them untoward, but hold on in a constant course, Proouing if God at any time will give them repentance to come out of the snares of the Devil of whom they are holden captives. Lastly, we must testify our sorrow for our people, & mourn for the hardness of their heart, and be heartily grieved to see their untowardness, that though the Sun shine never so clearly, yet they shut their eyes and will not behold the light of the truth, whose eyes the god of this world hath blinded, and hardened their hearts, lest they should be converted and saved. This affection of unfeigned sorrow was in Christ our Savior, when he had preached with great power, but small profit in the hearers, He looked round about on them angerly, mourning also for the hardness of their heart. If these things be found in us, readiness of mind to care for the people, painfulness in our places to turn them to God, and sorrow of heart for their hardness and infidelity, we may truly comfort our selves, and be assured to be honored of Christ both in this life and in the life to come.

CHAP. II.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses and to Aaron, saying;

2. Every man of the Children of Israel shall campe by his standard, and under the Ensign of their Fathers house: far off about the Tabernacle of the Congregation shall they pitch.

IN this Chapter is set forth the disposing and ordering of their Tents. For in the former chapter, we have heard how y^e people were numbered, the Tribes distinguished, and over everyone several Princes appointed, who were choice men, even the heads of the house of their Fathers, to be Rulers & Governors over this great multitude. For what is the people without Princes, but as an host and army of men without Captains to lead them, as a ship without a Pilot, or as a body without an head, or as an house without a master? The heathen have seen thus far, that the multitude is as a monster with many heads, resembling the confusion that was at Babel. Wherefore the necessity of overseers being so great, it pleased GOD first of all to appoint them Magistrates to take the muster. Now we have here to consider another testimony of God's mercy toward them, in that he doth divide and distribute them into certain ranks and regiments, and maketh choice himself in what order they should pitch their Tents and likewise march forward toward the Land of Canaan, in what manner they should make a stay, and in what manner he would have them remove. This was both necessary and profitable, and not to be omitted, seeing nothing can be more foul and deformed, then to see a company of men gathered together without order, and mingled together in all confusion.

The causes of this dealing of God toward his people, are three: one in respect of himself, another in respect of Israel, the third in regard of the enemies of them both, of God and his people. The cause respecting God is, that they and all other might see what a wise God they serve. For he would have his name not only known in Israel, but magnified throughout all the world. If they professing the knowledge and service of the true God had wandered up and down in the wild and waste wilderness, in such troops and bands of men, in a confused and disordered manner, not knowing who should go before, nor regarding who should follow after; the name of God would have been dishonored, his wisdom impaired, and his glory diminished. It pleased him therefore, even in regard of himself, to make manifest his wisdom and excellency, in leading them forth in most excellent and exquisite order, and to assign to everyone his proper place, that they might say, What god is like unto our God? Or who is to be compared with him? Who is so glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders? Let us therefore confess that he is wise in heart, yea the wisest; and mighty in strength, yea the mightiest: so that the foolishness of God is wiser then men, and the weakness of God is stronger then men, and therefore to this God only wise, must be praise and glory through Jesus Christ forever.

Secondly, he leaveth them not to themselves, but assigneth to each Tribe his proper mansion, to take away from them all confusion, and to cut off all matter of contention. For except he had established as by a law, the order that should be observed among them, and thereby decided all questions and controversies that might arise touching priority & precedency, many hurli-burlies and heart-burnings would be entertained, and part-takings would be nourished; which being kindled at the first as a little spark of fire, would afterward break out into such a fire and flame as would spread further, and in the ende hardly be quenched. For the tribe of Reuben challenging the preeminence in regard of birthright would not easily lose his right, but would take it done in contempt and to his reproach, to be put behind & to come after any other. On the other side, their harts were not so high and haughty, to lift up themselves above their brethren, but the rest of the Tribes would have thrust them down as low, and to their perpetual disgrace and dishonor have sunk them down to the bottom, and appointed them the last and lowest place, in regard of the curse of Jacob that lay heavy upon them, who had said long before, Thou shalt not be excellent, thy dignity is gone. Again, a new trouble and tumult would arise touching the sons of the Concubines; for such as were borne of Rahel and Lea, the two wives of Jacob would never yield nor think it fit to make thē equal to themselves, much less to suffer them to go before them, and so to carpe and crow over them. For as it was in their fathers (while the corn was in the grass, & hope of posterity was in the cradle) so it would be in the children. We see the emulation that was between Isaac and Ishmael, between Jacob and Esau, & likewise between the sons of Jacob, who were the founders and fountains of y^e twelve Tribes.

Moreover, such as did exceed the other in multitude of men and strength of arms, & had tasted of God's blessings before others, would judge themselves worthy to be honored and preferred, and themselves wronged & injured, unless they had not only the right hand of fellowship given them, but the upper hand of jurisdiction & authority granted unto them and thus the sons of Simeon would never have suffered themselves to be brought into order, and have pitched under the standard of Reuben, but have judged themselves worthy of the place of superiority, and have made the other their underlings, & as a footstool to tread upon. For the Tribe of Simeon were far more in number than the Tribe of Reuben: how far they exceeded them, and the cause thereof, we declared in the former chapter. It is natural to those that are blessed in children & a fruitful increase, to glory therein, and to triumph over those that either have none, or do come behind themselves. When Rahel conceived, she said, God hath taken away my rebuke. This appeareth in the behavior of Peninna toward Hanna (who were the two wives of Elkanah) who mourned and wept sore because her adversary vexed her from day today, 1 Sam. 1, 6, forasmuch as she upbraided her, because the Lord had made her barren.

Lastly, if none of all these occasions of murmuring and muting had broken out, or if they being broken out, had been presently pacified and appeased among them, yet a new broil might arise touching the two tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh. For either the rest might grudge and repine, that Joseph being but one of the sons of Jacob, should have a double portion of inheritance, which tended to their detriment and disparagement: or else a controversy might fall out not easy to be decided, whether of these twain should obtain the supremacy and superiority either of other. Wherefore to end all strife, & to leave no starting-hole to raise any quarrel or question among them, the Lord himself determineth the controversy, and so disposeth of them, that every Tribe must needs know his own place, and acknowledge the order assigned unto him.

Thus we see the reason in respect of the Israelites themselves, that moved God to range them into order, to wit; that all contention and emulation might be cut off and taken away. This teacheth us to take notice of our selves, and to learn what we are by Nature; we are prone to ambition and vain-glory, & cannot content our selves to abide in the vocation and calling wherein God hath set us. We see this plentifully confirmed in this Book, how Aaron and Miriam, and many other rise up against Moses, and seek to overthrow the order and ordinance of God left among them for the administration of matters belonging to the Church & Commonwealth. The like we see in the Disciples of Christ, he had given them a pattern and example of all meekness and lowliness of mind, yet such was their ambition, that they strove amongst themselves who should be the chiefest. It is the counsel of our Savior, when we are bidden of any man to a wedding, not to set our selves down in the chiefest place, but to take the lowest room; & from thence he raiseth a general doctrine, Whosoever exalteth himself shall be brought low; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted. Let us conclude therefore, if any lust to be contentious, We have no such custom, neither the Churches of God. Let us have the same mind that was in Christ Jesus, who being in the form of God, made himself of no reputation, and took on him the shape of a servant: let nothing be done through contention or vainglory, but that in meekness of mind every man esteem other better than himself.

Thirdly, they are mustered and marshalled into an exact and exquisite order, to dismay and terrify their enemies, as also to confirm and encourage their own hearts. There is nothing doth more strengthen an enemy, and give him hope of victory, than to behold an army put out of array; in which case, such as have been defeated and overcome, have gathered their dispersed and despised Companies together, have renewed the fight, & put their enemies to flight. Contrarywise, to behold an host of men settled in battle array, as it were a Tower not to be shaken, or a Mountain not to be removed, doth daunt and dismay all adversary power whatsoever, and maketh them put their surest trust and best confidence in their heels. Great is the force of unity, peace, and concord. One man serveth to strengthen and stablish another, like many staves bound together in one. Many sticks or staves joined in one bundle, are not easily broken: but sever them and pull them asunder, they are soon broken with little strength. Thus the case standeth in all societies, whether it be in the Church or Commonwealth, or in the private family. If our hearts be thoroughly united and fast glued one to another, we need not fear what man can do unto us, or work against us. But if we be at iarre and war between our selves, we lie open to our enemies to work us any despite and indignity whatsoever. I would to God we had not learned this by woeful and lamentable experience, and sealed up the truth of it by homebred contentions, so that we may renew the old complaint, For the divisions of Reuben were great thoughts of heart. Everyone seeth with grief the increase of our adversaries, they begin to lift up their hearts and hands against us, they hope to have their Masses, their Maskings, their superstitions, their trumperie up again; all men confess it and complain of it. But will we not behold the cause of all this? and consider that we minister them weapons, and (as it were) put a two-edged sword into their hands to wound our selves? It is our own strife, they are our own contentions that help and hearten them, when brother is set against brother, and striketh one another with the fist of iniquity. So long as these bitter roots of envy and emulation, & the coals of contention are kindled by the mouths and pens of those that love contention, we have much deceived our selves, if we think to suppress the enemies of the grace of God, who make an advantage of our divisions. We may therefore say with our Savior; Woe be to the world, because of offenses: for it must needs be that offenses shall come; but woe be to that man by whom the offense cometh. It were better for him that a Milstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the Sea. Thus we see the danger that cometh by hatred and debate: let us therefore follow peace, and stop (so much as lieth in us) all occasions of divisions, that we may live in peace one with another, cleave unto the gospel of peace, and then the peace of God shall be with us.

Hitherto we have spoken of the reasons & causes for which God prescribeth to everyone his order, and limiteth to every Tribe his proper place. In this Chapter we are to observe two things; First, the commandment of God directed to Moses and Aaron, telling them and instructing them what his pleasure is touching the order of their marching and proceeding. Secondly, a general subjection and obedience yielded unto this commandment: for so soon as they understand what the will of God was, they murmur not against it, they enquire not the reason of it, they stand not upon their own privileges, there is no man thinketh better of himself then others, nor offereth to break the order & transgress the Law given unto them, But they did according to all that the Lord had commanded Moses. The former point that concerneth the Commandment of God, is double; First, it is set down generally in the two first Verses, what belongeth to all the Tribes indifferently, namely, that they must encamp everyone by the Ensign of his Fathers house: then particularly what concerneth the tribes in special, in the residue of the chapter.

[Verse 1, 2. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying; Every man of the children of Israel shall Campe, &c.] Here he beginneth to rehearse the order that was to be observed among them. For there are two things which are most needful in everything that is done aright, to wit; number, and order. Wherefore, after the description of their number, he beginneth to direct them in the order which was to be kept among them. We learn from [Doctrine 1] hence (to omit sundry impertinent collections and unprofitable Allegations, which many stand upon, serving rather to please the ear, then to profit the heart; and to delight y^e outward man, rather then to edify the inward man:) I say we learn, that God commandeth a comely order to be observed as well in the Church, as the Commonwealth. When Balaam the false Prophet, mentioned hereafter in this book, saw the Israelites thus ordered in their Tents, as God appointeth in this place, he was carried into an admiration of it, Numb. 24, 5, 6. How goodly are thy Tents, O Jacob, and thy habitations, O Israel? As the valleys are they stretched forth, as Gardens by the Rivers side, as the Aloe trees which the Lord hath planted, as the Cedars beside the waters. As if he should have said; The Church of God consisting of this people, is the very picture and resemblance of most goodly order. This speaketh the Prophet of the place that God had chosen to set his name in it, Psal. 122.3, 4, 5. Jerusalem is built as a City that is compact together in it self: whereunto the Tribes, even the Tribes of the Lord go up according to the testimony to Israel, to praise the Name of the Lord: for there are Thrones set for judgment, even the Thrones of the house of David. This Paul saw, and observed, and commended in the Church of the Colossians, Chapt. 2. verse 5. Though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the Spirit, rejoicing and beholding your Order, and your steadfast Faith in Christ. These things, to which we might add and annex sundry other testimonies, are sufficient to show unto us, that God will have all things in the Church and Commonwealth done in order.

The Reasons are evident. For first, God [Reason 1] is the Author of order, and not of confusion. He appointeth in this Book the order to be observed in their mansion, in their peregrination, in their possession of the Land. The Apostle giveth us this instruction touching God. 1 Cor. 14, 33, God is not the Author of confusion, but of peace, as we see in all the Churches of the Saints. Hence it is, that we see an order in God himself, even in the holy and blessed Trinity: though all the persons be coequal and coeternal, yet there is an established order of the first person, of the second person, and of the third person; not in regard of essence which is indiuisible, yet for better order of teaching and instructing of us to attain to so much knowledge of his nature as the Scripture hath delivered, and we are able to conceive. Hence it is, that the Father is first, the Son is conceived and delivered in the next place, and the holy Ghost proceeding from them both, is expressed in the last place; not thereby insinuating any inequality, because none is in nature before or after other; none is greater or less then other; but only intimating an order in existing or working, as he hath manifested himself in his word unto us. As then God hath order in himself, so he commandeth and commendeth an order to be used of us.

Secondly, all wise men will order their affairs [Reason 2] with wisdom and discretion, and will dispose of them with seemliness & comeliness. An expert Captain that goeth against his enemies, will keep his Soldiers in good array, whether he march or retire. If he fly out of the field out of order, one is ready to overthrow another; and all are left to the mercy of his adversary. Hence it is, that they have an eye to these things, to the Sun, the Wind, and the Dust; that the Sun be not in their faces; that the Wind be not against them; that the Dust be not carried upon them. For the Sun shining in their faces, taketh away sight; the Wind blowing contrary, abateth their strength and the blow, but helpeth the weapons of the enemy; the Dust cast upon them, filleth and shutteth their eyes, to their great hindrance. A provident house-keeper, knoweth the necessity, commodity, and profit thereof, in the administration of all his business and affairs, that nothing is so good as the right ordering of them. The Philosophers in all their teaching show us this, who have brought the Arts and Sciences into Method and good order. Common experience declareth, that we love order, when it is wanting we do wish and desire it; when it is present we rest in it; and at all times we praise and commend it.

Thirdly, the Church is not a confused [Reason 3] multitude, shuffled and iumbled together, where no man knoweth his place or his Office; and one encroacheth upon another; but it is the house of the living God, the pillar and ground of truth. Now in an house well ordered, is to be seen the Master as the Ruler, & the family subject to his government, everyone employing his proper gifts, and no man usurping the place and calling of another. If this be to be seen in our private houses, which have a weaker foundation to bear them, a less anker to hold them, a feebler shore to vnderprop them, and vnsurer means to contain and continue them: how much more must we conceive this of the Church of God, which is the house that he hath built, the vineyard that his right hand hath planted the spouse of Christ which he hath loved, the mountain of the Lord, which he hath prepared, and the peculiar people which he hath chosen? Thus we see the doctrine sufficiently cleared and confirmed.

Let us before we come to the uses, divert a little as it were out of the way and ordinary path, to answer an objection [Objection.] that may arise from this doctrine. For some man may object, the world is full of mixtures and confusions, so that all is vanity under the Sun. We see good men to suffer evil, and to be oppressed every day: on the other side, evil men enjoy the good of the Land, & have all things that heart can wish or desire. The godly are afflicted, the ungodly are most respected and rewarded: are not these great disorders? I answer; [Answer.] first, confusions as they are thus confused, are not of God: as they are out of order, they proceed not from the God of order, but from the Prince of darkness that ruleth in the air, and the author of confusion that governeth in the earth. The proper cause of disorder, is the Devil, who first disordered himself, and kept not his first estate, but left the heavens and habitation wherein he was formed: he by deceiving our first parents, and tempting them to sin, brought upon them and their posterity, ruin and destruction. So then such as are simply disorders, were brought in by sin, and sin by the Devil. Of this we spake before in the Preface.

Secondly, we must understand that there is order even in disordered and distempered things; the which, albeit it do not appear to us, by reason of the veil of corruption crept in, that shutteth our eyes, yet it is known to God, to whose judgment we must submit our selves, and to whose wisdom we must subscribe, of whom the wise man saith, He hath made everything beautiful in his time, howsoever it seem deformed to us.

Thus much of the objection: the uses follow. [Use 1] First, learn from hence to acknowledge an exquisite order in all God's words and works above and beneath, in heaven & earth, and in all places. If we do not always see the same, it is our weakness and want of sight: and it should move us to call upon God to open our eyes to behold the same: and if we do see it, yet to crave we may see it more and more to his glory and our comfort. Let us lift up our eyes and behold the work of creation, he hath made all his creatures in a most pure and perfect order, in number, weight, and measure. He hath appointed the Sun to rule the day, and the Moon to rule the night. The earth with all her furniture, Trees, Hearbes, Plants, Corn, and Grass for cattle and the use of man. The waters with all their store keep their comely course and order, He hath set them a bound, which they shall not pass, so that they shall not return to cover the earth. He hath divided the parts of the year, as winter and summer, heat and cold, day and night, which continue in a constant course, according as they are disposed of him. He hath assigned and appointed Kings and Princes, Rulers, and Magistrates to govern his people in all good and godly order. We shall not need to wander far off to learn this, if we can come homeward and enter into our selves, we shall find sufficient testimonies to confirm this point, in our souls and bodies. For as we cannot be ignorant, how in the frame of this Vniuerse, the matter, form, privation, simplicity, mixture, generation, corruption, action, passion, compounded of unlike Elements, of earth, of water, of the air, of fire, is notwithstanding preserved by due and distinct proportion which the parts have severally: and as in the family, the husband and wife, the father and children, the master and servants are knit together by the same reason of analogy: so is it in this little world of man; we behold therein the foot-steps of this comely order, in the soul, mind, understanding, memory, heart, reason, speech, and such like powers: the like might be said of the members of the body, placed in a profitable and pleasant order, manifestly declaring the wisdom of the Creator. And as the admirable works of God are seen in natural and civil things, so much more in spiritual and heavenly things.

If we enter into the consideration of the goodly and golden chain of the causes of our salvation, we shall see a notable order of them so linked and joined together, that no confusion at all appeareth therein, but all tend to the setting forth of the glory of his great Name. This the Apostle teacheth, Rom. 8, 30. Moreover, whom he predestinated, those also he called, and whom he called, them also he justified, and whom he justified, them he also glorified. This course is never broken off, the links of this chain can never be put asunder, no man can make a divorce and division between them. This cōnexion of causes is to be looked into, and we must dligently mark the coherence of them. We must not aim only at the last in our desires, as Balaam did, but we must learn to join them together, and then we shall find comfort in them. And as there is a distinct order in our generation and regeneration, so

To this purpose the same Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 15, 22, 23. As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive; but every man in his own order, the first fruits is Christ, afterward, they that are of Christ at his coming shall rise again. Albeit therefore the grave seem to bury all things in confusion and the Chambers of death to be as a Land of darkness, where no order is: yet the resurrection being as the shining of the day, and the bringing of all things unto light, shall make manifest an heavenly order that God observeth therein. Likewise he speaketh in the same chapter, There is one glory of the Sun, another glory of the Moon, and another glory of the Stars, (for one Star differeth from another in glory) so also is the resurrection of the dead, &c. This order we must reverence and acknowledge, this we must believe and hope for; and this we shall have a blessed experience of, in our own persons, when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal be clothed with immortality. But among all the works of God, none doeth more abundantly show forth the glory and majesty of him that is the God of order, then the word which he hath magnified above all other names. The work of creation setteth forth the glory of the Creator, inasmuch as the invisible things of him, that is, his eternal power and God-head are seen thereby: but the power, and wisdom, and goodness, and truth of God appeareth much more brightly in those sacred oracles brought unto us from his own mouth. True it is, the manner of setting down and placing the several parts of Scripture as they stand in our printed books, is merely human and proceedeth from man, and is diversely published by diverse persons (some putting that book before, which others place after) as we see the books of history are joined together, all the greater Prophets follow them, and the lesser Prophets conclude the volume and Canon of the old Testament. The like we might say of the books of the New Testament, the placing of the four Evangelists first, the annexing of the Acts of the Apostles next, the setting down of Paul's Epistles as now they stand, to wit, the Epistle to the Romans first, to the Corinthians next, &c, is man's appointment & not God's ordinance: but if we consider these books in themselves, and the matter contained in them, the grace of speech that floweth from them, the power and effect that is wrought by them, the whole body of them (thus understood) is inspired of God, and the order of them is divine, inasmuch as the Prophets, Apostles, and Evangelists were moved by the holy Spirit, and led by him in the delivery of the matter and manner, both of the things and words. This the Apostle Peter acknowledgeth, 2 Pet. 1, 20, 21. No Prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the holy Ghost. Paul also agreeth hereunto, saying, The whole Scripture is inspired of God, and is profitable to teach, to convince, to correct, and to instruct in righteousness. We must therefore both search the Scriptures, & search into the order of the Scriptures, which is most divine and heavenly: whereof we may say, This is the singer of God. Here we shall see the whole agreeing with every part, and the several parts agreeing with the whole. When the Queen of Sheba upon the report of Solomon's wisdom was come to Jerusalem, and there saw the sumptuousness of his buildings, the greatness of his wisdom, the meat of his table, the sitting of his servants, the order of his Ministers, the vessels of his house, the multitude of his offerings, and the answering of her hard questions, she was greatly astonished, and said, I believed not this report till I came, and had seen it with mine eyes, but loe, the one half was not told me, &c: Happy are thy men, happy are these thy servants which stand ever before thee, and hear thy wisdom. But as our Savior saith, A greater then Solomon is here: so we may truly say, greater wisdom, and better order is here, in the divine wisdom of the word that shineth in God's house. And albeit we hear never so much of the excellency of this word, yet if our delight be in it, and our meditation upon it day and night, we shall in the end be constrained to cry out, Loe, the one half thereof was not told me. Let us all taste of the sweetness of it: let us continually look upon the beauty of it: let us lift up our ears to attend to the melody of it: let us prepare our hearts to lay up the treasures of it. And let us from a feeling of the worthiness and wisdom of it, and seeing the order of it, confess with the Prophet, Oh, how love I thy Law! it is my meditation continually.

Secondly, this reproveth such as know no [Use 2] order but bring in all confusion and disorder in Church or Common-wealth: these have nothing to do with God, but are the Children of the Devil, that hath transformed them into his image and likeness. For from whence are seditions and confusions, but from our own lusts, enflamed and kindled from his furnace? Many there are that can abide no order at all, others will not set themselves against all order to pervert it, but make such a mingling & mangling of it, that they utterly change the nature of it. The Church above all other societies ought to be the picture and representation of right order and comeliness, which is as bright as the Sun, as fair as the Moon, as terrible as an army with banners. We see how God hath commanded it to be ruled; everyone hath his proper calling, his proper office, his proper gifts for the discharge thereof. If then disorder creep in it, how great is that disorder? Consider the members of our natural bodies, if the head would presume to walk and usurp upon the office of the feet: or if the hand would take upon it to see and direct the body; if the ear encroach upon the function of the tongue and think it self able to speak: or if the foot would suppose it self to be of greater eminency and excellency, then the heart or the head, and strive for the highest room, or swelling with envy and pride, to behold greater gifts in another member, should refuse to do the office of the foot, what would follow, but the overthrow of the whole body? Who would not but complain of this confusion as most monstrous and unnatural? Let us now consider how the case standeth with the Church. Are there not many, being bold and blind, that teach before they have learned, and run before they are sent, that being without gifts, and almost the shadow of gifts, take upon them the places of Pastors, who were fitter to feed sheep, and to go to some trade or occupation; or to be sent to the Plough tail, to earn their living by the sweat of their brows, rather than by murdering the souls of the people, who many times perish for want of knowledge? Another notable confusion and eye-sore in this body of the Church, is when private persons enter upon the office of the Minister, and dare intermeddle with the holy Sacraments, from which they ought to be as strangers. For what have these men or women to do with setting the authentic Seals to God's promises, who hath committed to them no such office, nor given unto them any such gifts? Who required this at their hands, or if they will be intruders or usurpers, will God accept their service? nay rather will he not punish their sacrilege? Have they any greater privilege then Uzzah had, who putting his hand to the Ark of God when the oxen did shake it, was smitten with sudden death, and tasted the fruit of his high presumption? Every Sacrament is as the Ark of God, it must not be touched with unwashen, that is, with common and unsanctified hands. Good intentions shall not go for good payment, nor be able to warrant evil actions. Will-worship is odious to God and abominable in his sight, who will be worshipped according to his own will: so that it is in no wise lawful to transgress the rule and break the order that God hath set. [Object.] Neither let any in the profaneness of his heart, or the ignorance of his mind object; Cannot private persons use the words of Baptism in all points as well as the Minister? observe the words of institution, and pour on water upon the child, which are the essential parts of that Sacrament? I answer, [Answer.] they are able to do this, but forasmuch as they do it without a calling, their doing is as no doing; their pouring on of water is no better then a defiling of it. For who gave them their commission so to do? When possession of any house is given by delivering a white wand and turfe, another man may do as much in show, he may take a wand & turfe as good as the others, and make a delivery of them; and yet those actions may be idle, being done without warrant, neither can assure the bargain and sale. It is no great matter or hard to do, to take bread and wine, and deliver the same by reciting the words of institution: and yet if it be undertaken without a calling, it is a plain and manifest profanation of the Supper of the Lord. If they judge this unlawful, how can they hold the other lawful? The people of God, or any among them were as well able to handle and carry the Ark as the Levites, they were an holy people to God, they were all circumcised, they did all carry about in their flesh the mark and impression of the Covenant, yet the Lord sorted out the Tribe of Levi, to bear the Ark of his Covenant, to stand in his presence, to minister unto him and to bless in his Name. He will have us wholly to obey his word, he regardeth not our blind zeal, or purpose to serve him, except it be ordered aright. To proceed, Hath God only placed order in the Church? and not in the common-wealth? yes in the common-wealth also wherein everyone both superiors and inferiors must do their duty. He hath appointed the Magistrates their office, to minister justice without partiality and respect of persons, considering that they execute not the judgments of men, but of God, who will be with them. This is the comely order that he hath set; this is the way wherein he will have them walk; this is the ordinance that he hath established. If then laws be bought and sold, or if they be made as the spiders web to catch the silly fly, but to let the hornet escape, or if they punish the poor and let the rich escape, if the weak that cannot resist be entangled, and the mighty be delivered; this is a great disorder, and the Lord will not have these things handled so confusedly. Let such set before them the example of God, who will reward every man according to his works. He doth not spare the wicked, and revenge himself upon the Godly: but he showeth mercy to thousands of these, and will not hold the other innocent. So such as God hath called to execute judgment and sit upon the bench of justice, must know what God requireth of them; they must not pervert the right & overturn the Seat of equity; they must not turn the edge of the sword upon the poor, because they are poor, nor put it away from the rich, because they are rich, or from the mighty because of their might, or from the greater sort, because they have many friends; but they must smite them with the sword of Justice, that deserve to be smitten, and defend them from that wrong, that the malice of the oppresser would lay upon the innocent. On the other side, God requireth that such as are inferiors should obey Princes and Magistrates, submitting themselves unto them, reuerencing both their places and persons. They therefore are reprov'd as breakers of this order of God, and ouerturners of States and Common wealths, that rebel against them, and move sedition among the people. Such walk in the steps of Corah and his company, who were consumed and destroyed according to their deserts, as appeareth afterward in this Book. These proud spirits and ambitious men have never prevailed, but ever been punished. Such are they that Solomon speaketh off, Eccle. 10. Folly is set in great excellency; and the rich set in the low place; I have seen servants on horses, and Princes walking as servants on the ground. Such persons as seek to take away the crowns and kingdoms of Princes, are the very plagues of human society, and go about to take away as it were the Sun out of the firmament, and to leave us in miserable darkness; nay to take from us the breath of our nostrils, and to expose us as a prey to all violence and villainy. Let all such know that they fight against God; and therefore cannot prosper or prevail. All sedition is pernicious to the contriuer and author thereof: and no injury received can be any sufficient cause for any man to plot Treasons and rebellions. Let every soul therefore be subject to the higher powers, considering there is no power but of God: and that whosoever resisteth the power, resisteth the Ordinance of God, and therefore purchase to themselves damnation.

[Use 3] Lastly, seeing God requireth orderly observation of his ordinances, we learn this duty, that we must be careful to observe it and practice it with a due regard of his Commandment. This is the general rule that the Apostle commendeth unto us, 1 Cor. 14. Let all things be done decently, and in order. Order is nothing else but the means of peace, and the avoiding of confusion; or it is a disposing of diverse things, giving to everyone his proper place. The end of all good order tendeth to profit; as on the other side, the end of confusion, to loss and destruction. The more common & general a good thing is, so much the better it is, and the more to be esteemed above all other. The benefit of good order stretcheth far, to the land and Sea, and to the house and ship, to the Common-wealth and Church. If it be commendable to appoint a profitable order in the lesser charge of a private family: it is a great deal better and more excellent to manage a Common-wealth prudently, and to govern the Church wisely. Government that is right presupposeth order, because it is impossible that any man should rule rightly and duly without order. For government is a right disposition of those things whereof a man taketh charge, to bring them to a convenient end. This is done in the Church of God, when there be Pastors and Teachers to preach the word truly and to minister the Sacraments sincerely, & when y^e people hearken to them & are ready to seek the law at their mouths. This is seen also in the observation of these rules; First, when one alone prayeth: for many cannot pray with a loud voice together without confusion. The Minister is to be the mouth of the people to God, his voice is in public place to be heard, that the people may join with him with pure and humble hearts, and testify in the end their consent by saying, Amen. Hence it followeth that he must not whisper to himself or utter a prayer in a low voice, but he must speak with a loud voice that he may be heard, and with a distinct voice, that he may be understood. Secondly, when the action of singing is in hand, it must be performed by many, and not by one alone. For as one is to pray for the rest, so all are to join together in praising God with the Congregation, teaching & admonishing themselves in Psalms, and Hymns, and spiritual songs; singing with a grace in their hearts to the Lord, and making sweet melody unto him. Thus did the whole Church in Hezekiah's time,

2 Chron. 29.28. Thirdly, this must always be observed in teaching and exercising our selves in the Word, that only one speak at once, and that the rest be silent. This is the Apostles rule, 1 Cor. 14. If anything be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace: for ye may all prophecy one by one, that all may learn, and all may have comfort. But if many should speak together, and utter their voices at one time, no man can take profit, no man can receive comfort: so that many voices sounding together, hinder edification, & bring confusion, which ought carefully to be avoided in our assemblies. For where disorder is, there is not the God of order. Now as our Church meetings must have all things done in order, so must they be decent. Decency is that seemliness which some things of their own nature bring unto divine actions, which is not of the substance or essence of the thing, nor necessarily required to the being of it; but rather to adorn it, & to procure the greater reverence unto it: as for example, in the celebration of the Lord's Supper; to have a fair Table, a fair Cloath, a fair Cup, the finest Bread, the best Wine, which of their own nature joined to the Sacrament, do bring some great respect to the action, and serve to stir up devotion in the hearts of the Communicants. Order is opposed to confusion: decency to vanity, pomp, ostentation, and uncleanness; all which ought to be far from the Church of God. Both these are seen in a house well governed. An house is said to be decent, when all filth that may offend the sight or other senses, is purged out; and all things are found in a seemly sort and manner, without riot and excess: likewise to be in order, when it is divided and distinguished into superiors and inferiors, and everyone doeth his duty; when there are settled times and seasons of dining, of supping, of laboring, of lying down and rising up, whereby the peace and tranquility thereof is preserved. The Church is the house of God, as we shown before, and therefore therein must be decency, that the place be clean, the vessels pure, and that all the actions of Pastor and people, both public and private, may be finished gravely without all lightness, modestly without filthiness, soberly without superstition, as it were in the presence of God, and his elect Angels: also order, that all things may be done in fit time, that there be some to teach, and others to hear, that there be set times & distinct for preaching, praying, singing, baptizing, and Communicating, whereby all disorder is prevented, and the profit of the Church is procured.

To leave the Church, and to come to the Common-wealth; God looketh for this duty at the hands of all Magistrates, that as the principal end of Magistracy is to maintain order, and to banish all disorder, so they must proceed orderly in their places. They bear not the sword in vain, their office is to punish evil doers, and to weed them out of the city of God. But it is not enough for them to minister Justice, except they consider the order that God hath set down. They must have the fear of GOD always before their eyes, and have a special care for the advancement of God's glory, which will be as a guide to direct them not only to correct sin, but in what manner to do it. For grievous offenses must not be punished slightly, & slight offenses grievously, but there must be a due proportion between the offense and the punishment; that the greater faults may be punished with the more grievous punishment. They therefore that observe another order, begin at a wrong end, and consequently have not that success they desire, neither meet with that blessing that they look for. If a man would stop the course of a stream, he must not look to the channels, but begin at the fountains. If he stop the spring, the course of the river will in short time be dried up. The foundation of all true obedience is the first Table; all unrighteousness among men, proceedeth from the neglect of the duties that belong to God. The Apostle writing to the Romans declareth, that because the Gentiles dishonored his name, and profaned his worship, and stained his glory, he gave them up unto their hearts lusts to work uncleanness with all greediness, and so committed all kind of wickedness condemned in the second Table. The commandments of the first Table, are the first and great Commandments, and therefore the chiefest care of all ought to be, to see them performed. A reproach or disgrace offered to a Prince, is greater then to a subject, as his calling is higher, and his person worthier: so an offense committed against God, is more heinous then an offense against Prince and people. It is therefore a foul disorder and great confusion to punish the offenses committed against our selves, and to wink at the sins committed against God: to punish thefts, murders, rapes, and such like enormities as touch the persons of men or the state of the Commonwealth; and never to revenge the dishonor done to God and the diminishing of his glory, the advancement whereof ought to be more dear to us then our own lives. If then the swarming of sins against the second table, proceed from the swarming and departing from the first Table, we must consider that the cause of the abounding of thieves, murderers, adulterers, drunkards, and such like malefactors, proceedeth from the indulgence and slackness of punishing such as dishonor God, & live in the open contempt of his glorious name. Wherefore if we would have the number of these enormities lessened, and the Common-wealth purged of such pestilences, (as indeed these wretched persons are the plagues of all societies) the edge of the sword and force of punishment must be turned directly and principally against Atheists, Idolaters, blasphemers, perjured persons, profaners of the Sabbath, contemners of true religion and scorers of the service of God. The Lord our God, who is jealous of his honor, and will not give his glory unto any other, put it into the hearts of all Christian Princes and godly Magistrates, to be more earnest to see God obeyed, and his worship maintained; especially seeing thereby they shall procure God to be served, and their own estates to be secured. To leave the farther prosecuting of this point, Is order only to be regarded and esteemed in the Church and common-wealth? hath it place only in these ecclesiastical and civil assemblies? No, it stretcheth a great deal further, and extendeth it self through every part of human life. For there can no kingdom, no house, no City, no society stand without order. The Apostle Paul to the Thessalonians, describing wicked persons that lived within the compass of no obedience, noteth them by this mark, they were without order; nothing was first or last with them, or at the least, the last was done first, and the first practiced last, they did all things in disorder and confusion. Hence it is that he saith, chap. 3. We warn you brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh inordinately, and not after the instruction which ye received of us: for ye yourselves know, how ye ought to follow us, for we behaved not our selves inordinately among you. A good action done in a confused manner, is as good as not done: forasmuch as the Lord rejecteth things done not only disorderly, but also preposterously. If this be so in all actions, much more in the commandments of the Lord. We see this in the sons of Eli; they did not profanely omit to sacrifice, yet because preposterously they served themselves first, they are noted to be wicked men & exceeding sinners against the Lord. Whiles the meat was seething, they fetched it out of the pot or caldron with flesh hooks, for the Priests diet, and afterward they burned the fat for sacrifice, the which which should have been the first in order: thus they shifted for themselves, in the first place which should have been last, and gave the Lord his portion in the last place, who in religion and reason should be the first, and thereby even by this disorder they provoked the wrath of God against themselves. This appeareth also in the example of the two sisters mentioned in the Gospel, which declareth to us the truth of this point, and what is the order allowed and appointed for us to follow. It was not unlawful for Martha to minister to Christ, to entertain him, to provide necessaries for him, and to busy her self in serving of him: but she did it in a wrong course, she should first have chosen Mary's part to sit at his feet to hear his preaching, before she had combred and entangled herself with much serving, and therefore she is reprov'd, and her sister commended. For he regardeth more to be heard diligently, then entertained delicately, so that he saith, Martha, Martha, thou carest, and art troubled about many things: but one thing is needful: Mary hath chosen the good part which shall not be taken away from her. And if we would have a plainer direction, what ought to be first with us, and what second, yea, a perfect platform of ordering our ways, our Savior showeth us in the Gospel, Mat. 6. First seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and then all these things shall be ministered unto you. Here is a plain and perfect order, he that keepeth this order is blessed: he that breaketh it, hath no promise of blessing from him. There is a method to be used in all arts, and much controversy hath been what it is, and of how many sorts it is: but behold here the right method, the only method to learn the art of arts, and the science of all sciences; here is first, and here is second. The first thing that we must begin withal, is God's kingdom, then follow worldly things, which are the second. Thus are we taught to make an entrance to religion, and how to proceed, by him that is Wisdom it self; here is the most exquisite order laid before us, let us take knowledge of it in our minds, love it with all our hearts, and express it in our lives. We must not be like to him in the Gospel, that was called to follow Christ: he did not absolutely deny it, nor directly refuse it, but he would follow him after his own fancy; he must first take leave of his friends and bid them farewell that were in his house, and afterward he would be a follower, and a disciple. Thus it is with all men of this world, who have not learned Christ aright, they are preposterous in their ways, they invert all good order, they make the first to be the second, and promote the second into the principal place. If a man that knoweth learning, should come into a school, and see those of the lowest form set in the uppermost seats, and the best scholars thrust down into the inferior places, he would think it to be a great confusion, & by and by condemn it as a place without all order.

We should everyone erect a school of God and godliness in our own hearts, in which we must set heaven and heavenly things in the highest room, and earthly things beneath: and then we shall make it manifest that we have learned the best and the rightest method. As for those that prefer Mammon before God, and this world before the world to come (of which sort are too many, as daily experience telleth us,) they are no good Artizans, they are ignorant of the right method, and therefore they run into a thousand mazes and confusions, wherein they loose themselves, and oftentimes their own souls.

To conclude, let us all take notice of this general method, that shall much help us when we come to the particulars, and bear away these few rules of direction. First, we must forsake the evil, and then choose the good. True it is, we must do both, but both in order: first we must pluck up the weeds before we can sow good seed in the garden of our hearts: we must grub up the tares before we can gather the good corn into the barn: first we must remove the rubbage before we can build our house aright. Secondly, we must observe an order both in choosing the good, and in refusing the evil. For as the former rule guideth us to forsake the evil, and then to cleave to that which is good: so this goeth farther and pointeth out an order as it were with the finger, what order to take herein; which is, that in refusing the evil, the greatest evil is most of all to be hated and eschewed, and the lesser in the next place. Contrariwise the greatest good is with the greatest strength to be pursued after, until we overtake it, the lesser is to be chosen in the last place; seeing the very heathen in their deliberations were wont to enquire, of two honest things, which is most honest. Thirdly, we must know that the greatest good, and best work, shall have the best and greatest reward: on the other side the greatest and grossest evil shall in the first place and in the heaviest manner be punished. Every work shall be rewarded of God, whether it be good or evil, the one of mercy according to his promise, the other of justice according to desert; but their recompense shall be best that are best, and their punishment most heavy that are most hateful in his sight.

This is the right method of true Divinity, and until we know this, we have learned nothing as it ought to be learned, nor can discern between things that differ, as between good and evil, between evil and evil, and between good and good.

3 On the East side toward the rising of the Sun, shall they of the standard of the host of Judah pitch, according to their armies: and Nahshou the son of Aminadab, shall be Captain of the sons of Iudab.

4 And his host and the number of them were seventy and four thousand, and five hundredth.

5 Next unto him shall they of the tribe of Issachar pitch, and Nathanael the son of Zuar, shall be the Captain of the sons of Issachar.

6 And his host and the number thereof was four and fifty thousand, and four hundredth.

7 Then the tribe of Zebulun, and Eliab the son of Helon, Captain over the sons of Zebulun:

8 And his host and the number thereof, was seven and fifty thousand, and four hundredth.

9 The whole number of the host of Judah, are an hundredth fourscore and six thousand, and four hundredth, according to their armies: they shall first set forth.

What order and policy God would have generally observed among his people, hath been before declared in the former words, namely, that everyone should campe by his standard, and under the ensign of his fathers house: now, in these words and the other following, he diuideth the twelve tribes of Israel, into four chief standards, & assigneth to every standard three tribes, whereof one was principal, the other two were assistants and helpers. The first standard is committed to Judah, to whom he adjoineth Issachar, and Zebulun: this is contained in these words, and in this division. Behold here the wisdom of God. He honoreth Judah with the first place of the first standard, thereby to make as it were a beginning and to give a little taste of the verifying of Jacob's prophesy, who foretold of the preeminence should be given unto him above his brethren. He was the fourth son of Jacob by Leah; with whom he associateth such two tribes, as were in reason most likely to submit themselves to him, inasmuch as Zebulun and Issachar, were the sons of Zilpah, Leah's maid, whom she gave to her husband, and set in her own place. The second standard is committed to Reuben, under whose Regiment were placed Simeon and Gad. This tribe coming of the eldest brother, the first borne of Jacob, might justly be thrust down into the lowest rank, yet God leaveth them not wholly without comfort, and therefore assigneth them the second place in this army. The two tribes joined with him, were such as could not, nor would not take it grievously to fight under his banners, and to be led into the field by his authority, seeing Simeon was his own mothers son, being so near in blood, as they lay both in one womb, and Gad was borne of Zilpah his mothers maid: these therefore could not refuse to submit themselves to his ensign. The third standard is appointed to Ephraim, one of the sons of Joseph, under whom are ranked Manasseh and Benjamin, between whom was the nearest band of consanguinity, and therefore this part of the army could not be put into better order. Ephraim and Manasseh supplied the place of Joseph their father, who had a double portion given unto him, and therefore these are reputed to be as it were the sons of Rahel, of whom Joseph came, to whom Benjamin is joined, who also was the son of Rahel, whom she bare to Jacob, in the land of Canaan: these therefore are confedered and combined together as children of the same mother; a notable means to move to peace and concord, and to take away all occasion of contention.

The fourth and last standard, is assigned to Dan: he was indeed one of the sons of the handmaid, and preferred in degree of honor and dignity, before the lawful son of Leah, and the other son of Rahel, the two wives of Jacob: from hence might hurly-burlies and heart-burnings arise, which are all pacified and compounded by the express commandment of God, who joineth to Dan, Naphtali his mothers son (for both of them were the sons of Bilhah Rachel's maid) and Asher the son of Zilpah, Leah's maid.

Thus was the whole host of Israel divided as it were into four several battles, and to everyone his chief Captain assigned.

The sum of all is this,

- Of the first standard were
 - Judah
 - Issachar
 - Zebulun.
- Of the second standard were
 - Reuben
 - Simeon
 - Gad.
- Of the third standard were
 - Ephraim
 - Manasseh
 - Benjamin.
- Of the fourth standard were
 - Dan
 - Naphtali
 - Asher.

Verse 3. On the East side toward the rising of the Sun, &c. Here we have a description of the first standard. The use of a standard or ensign is manifold in War, to give direction in fighting and in sudden alarms that fall out, to encourage the hearts of the soldiers, and to strengthen them with hope of victory; and half their substance and goods were kept by them, that no thought of forsaking the standard might enter into them, but that they should fight valiantly for the same. What the ensigns of the Israelites were, the Hebrews do not accord among themselves. Some affirm that everyone had the badge or arms of his ancestors, as that in the standard of Reuben was the figure of a man, because Jacob said, Reuben my first borne: in the ensign of Judah a Lyon, because it was said of him, Judah as a Lions whelp. In the standard of Ephraim the figure of a bullock, because Moses likeneth his beauty to a bullock: in the standard of Dan, the likeness of an Eagle, which was given unto him instead of a Serpent. Thus in their ensigns they will have the four beasts noted, which Ezekiel also saw in his vision mentioned in his first Chapter. What truth there is in these allusions we know not, and therefore we leave the credit thereof to the authors and relaters of them. It is more to the purpose to consider, that albeit Jacob promised the crown and kingdom to that tribe, yet it is not by and by accomplished; so that albeit, his promises shall all be performed, yet they are not straightway verified, but are oftentimes long deferred. True it is, that the tribe of Judah surmounted all the rest of the tribes at such time as God delivered them out of Egypt, yea

Nahasson had the preeminence when the people were to be numbered, when the Captains of the tribes were to be chosen, and when the offerings were dedicated in the Sanctuary. Notwithstanding, all this was but a dark shadow of the former prophesy, for Judah still remained without kingdom and principality. Besides, the former prophetical speech might seem to many to carry little truth or likelihood with it, inasmuch as we see God appointeth Moses of the tribe of Levi, to be the governor of them. After his death and decease, Joshua was Captain and ruler over them, who was of the tribe of Ephraim: after him succeeded the Judges, who were extraordinarily stirred up to judge his people & deliver thē out of the hands of their enemies, sometime of one tribe, and sometime of another. Then came Saul, who was chosen king, of the tribe of Benjamin: all this while there is no mention of Judah, as if the prophecy were buried in deep silence, and the birthright were utterly forgotten: yet in the end the Lord declareth that his word is not a jest, and that Jacob though he were old, yet did not dote when he foretold the same. But to omit those things, let us observe that God providing here for the good of his people, and the ordering of them, appointeth officers and Magistrates over them, and leaveth them not unto themselves, which would have been the occasion of all contention. Thus we see, how he appointeth a captain and leader [Doctrine 2] over every tribe. From hence we may observe, that God giveth to his people rulers to fight their battles, and to guide them in order, and godliness. Faithful Magistrates are needful for Church and Common-weath, who are not only a portion among believers, but the chief parts and stay of them in well-doing, not only in peace but in war. This we see plentifully proved unto us in the book of Judges, where it is testified, that the Lord raised them up Judges, who delivered them out of the hands of their oppressors: and afterward, when the Lord had raised them up Judges, the Lord was with the Judge, and delivered them out of the hand of their enemies all the days of the Judge; for the Lord had compassion of their groanings, because of them that oppressed them and tormented them. This is it which Jethro the father in Law of Moses saw to be profitable and necessary for the people, when he admonished him, to provide men of courage, fearing God, men dealing truly, hating covetousness, and to appoint such over them, to be Rulers over thousands, Rulers over hundreths, Rulers over fifties, and Rulers over ten's, and to let them Judge the people at all seasons. This is it which Hiram acknowledgeth, 2 Chron. 2. Because the Lord hath loved his people, he hath made Solomon king over them. This doth the Prophet Isaiah testify, chap. 22. In that day will I call my servant Eliachim the son of Hilkiah, the Key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder, so he shall open and no man shall shut, and he shall shut, and no man shall open. To these testimonies we might add infinite others, but in fo plentiful an argument; these shall suffice to teach us, that the people of God stand in need of Rulers to go in and out before them, and to order them in the duties of piety and honesty.

The reasons are evident. First, they are as the props and pillars of the house, and [Reason 1] the cause of good order among the people of God, and the means to keep them in all obedience. On the other side through want of them, many abuses are committed, and much iniquity is practiced. While Joshua lived, and the Elders that out-lived Joshua, the people served the Lord all their days, which had seen his great works that he had done for Israel: but when they were gone and gathered unto their fathers, the children of Israel did wickedly in the sight of the Lord, and served Baalim. And again, chapter 4. The children of Israel began again to do wickedly in the sight of the Lord, after Ehud was dead. And before, Chapter 2. When the Judge was dead, they returned and did worse then their fathers, in following other gods, to serve them and worship them; they ceased not from their own inventions, nor from their rebellious way. Add unto these, the conclusion of this book; In those days there was no king in Israel, but every man did that which was good in his own eyes; Whereby we see that so long as God blesseth a land with Princes and Magistrates, it is stayed from ruin and destruction: but when they are taken away, it falleth [Reason 2] to the ground, and cannot stand upright.

Secondly, no society can continue without Magistrates, neither defend it self. If an host be without a General, or a city without a Ruler, or an house without a governor, it needeth not foreign force to pull it down and dissolve it; it sufficeth in short time to destroy it self, and from among themselves will men arise, that shall bring it to nothing. Parity is the mother of all mutiny and confusion, whiles everyone, vnderprising another's value and virtue, denieth to be commanded, and being wedded to self-love, esteemeth himself the best able and most worthy to command in all the company. So then, whiles men ouervalue their own worth, & esteem better of themselves then others, contrary to the rule of the Apostle, they are cast away by the tempest of dissention, and torn in pieces as a body without a head by mutual emulations. These diseases of a divided and distracted multitude, without unity and authority of government, caused the Lord to take order for his people that when they should come unto the land which he had promised to give them, and that they should possess it and dwell therein, they should set a king over them from among their brethren. Wherefore seeing Magistrates are a stay to the people in all well-doing, and the want of them is the occasion of all confusion, we cannot but conclude them to be so necessary, as that they cannot be wanted or spared.

[Use. 1] The uses remain to be taught and learned of us. First, it reproveth the hellish and more then heathenish Sect of the Anabaptists, that overturn this order that God hath settled to continue forever; namely, that they are a necessary good for the common-wealth: whereas these damnable heretics hold them neither necessary, nor good, but unnecessary evils, that ought not to be planted, nor grow among God's people; and where they have been planted, ought as superfluous branches to be topped and lopped, or as noisome weeds to be rooted up and removed. But the Scriptures of the old and New Testament commend unto us captains in war, and governors in peace. But those men acknowledge neither the calling of captains, nor the lawfulness of war. The Apostles of Christ, at what time Magistrates are evil, both profane idolaters, and bloody persecutors, command every soul to be subject to the higher power, inasmuch as there is no power but of God. The ancient commandment of the moral Law, establisheth this as a perpetual ordinance never to be disannulled, until the universal frame of the heavens be dissolved, that we must honor father and mother, that is, not only such as are fathers of the family, but such as are fathers of the Country. He that said, Thou shalt have no other God's but me, Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven image, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not commit adultery; said also, Honor the King, 1 Pet. 2.17. For, as the house cannot stand without governors to rule it, no more can the Common-wealth. And as themselves take upon them to order their own houses, and exercise authority and dominion over such as are under their roof, and Regiment: so is the Magistrate called to manage the affairs of state, and to do that within the walls of the city, which he doth within the walls of his house. The father hath government over his son, the master over his servants, the husband over his wife, the teacher over his scholars: and why then, not the Magistrate over his subjects? Neither doth the Gospel subvert the order appointed by God in the dispensation of the Law: for Christ Jesus, who first preached the Gospel, chargeth us to give Caesar those things that belong to Caesar, and the things that are God's, we must give to God. So his Apostles teach, that we must rather obey God then man, when their commandments cannot stand together; but when God is not disobeyed, themselves preached and practiced obedience, and reprov'd and condemn'd all disobedience. Secondly, here the Pope and all the Romish Hierarchy and Clergy are reprov'd, who exempt themselves from the authority and jurisdiction of Princes and Magistrates. These call themselves the spirituality, and claim an immunity both in regard of their persons and of their goods, wherein they are confederate and join hands with their brethren the Anabaptists, as wretched enemies to the crowns and scepters of Princes, as themselves. Only here lieth the difference, the Anabaptists confess y^t Magistrates must be obeyed, but they deny that there ought to be any in the Church. Contrariwise the Pope with all the rabble of his horned Bishops, confess that there ought to be Magistrates, but they utterly deny that themselves ought to be subject unto them. Now, it is in effect all one, whether we take away Magistracy, or whether we yield not to their authority. And if there be any inequality between these, the Anabaptists seem to be the better, who live peaceably and obediently under them whose power notwithstanding they deny. He is an evil child y^t denieth his father, but he is worse that is obstinate & stubborn, that will not obey him, but resist him. How many ways the Popish Religion is enemy to Princes, we have shown elsewhere. I speak not now of the wicked practices of their Assassins that murder Princes, but of their doctrine taught for sound and Catholic, by all their school-divines, not by some few only of them. For they teach that their persons in causes Ecclesiastical, Civil, and criminal are exempted from the Courts and Consistories of temporal Magistrates, as appeareth in their public disputations, and by the iudicial proceedings of Paulus the fifth, against he Venetians, who were excommunicated and the city interdicted, so that their religious men ceased from ministering Ecclesiastical Sacraments. And as they challenge a freedom of their persons, so they claim a freedom from paying tributes and like taxes to Princes, and will be bound to them in no respect. To the end we may see the truth in these points, & be armed against their Arguments, let us see the grounds whereupon they stand: and afterward produce sundry reasons out of y^e word of God to convince their proud and false assertions. First, they object that the superior ought not to be in subjection to the inferior; but contrariwise the inferior must [Object. 1] be subject to the superior: this is the Law of God and man. But the Ecclesiastical Regiment is distinguished from the Civil and political state, and set far above it by the Law of God, as the soul is above the body: therefore Ecclesiastical causes ought not to be judged by temporal Magistrates. I answer, [Answer.] by distinguishing the several callings: for Princes are superiors and inferiors: and Ecclesiastical persons are superiors and inferiors: both of them are above others in the proper duties of their callings. If any reply, to be superior, and yet to be inferior, to be above, and yet to be beneath, are contrary: I reioyne, they are contrary, and yet not contrary; they are contrary, if meant of one, and the same thing, and spoken in one and the same respect: but if they be diversely considered, in respect of diverse objects, there is no contrariety at all in them. To apply this to the point objected, I say that the superior cannot be subject in those things wherein he is superior, but he may be, and ought to be, in those things in which he is inferior. Now, the Ecclesiastical government, albeit, it be higher then the politic, in the essential duties belonging unto it, to wit, the preaching of the word of God, and the administration of the Sacraments, yet it is inferior in those things that belong to Civil subjection and obedience. Princes must obey so far as the word of God commandeth in matters of faith and piety, neither have they any authority to invent and frame a new Religion, or to change and alter the Religion set down in the Scripture, or to decide and determine the Controversies of Religion at their own pleasure, or to preach the word themselves, or to dispence the Sacraments of the Church. But in respect of Civil power over all persons, they must acknowledge no superior, no equal, they are above all, and under none within [Object. 2] their dominions. Secondly they object, It is absurd and unreasonable, that the sheep should judge the sheepeheard, or rule over him; but all the Laity in respect of the Clergy, are as sheep to the Shepherd. Therefore the Ministers of the Church may not be judged or censured of Lay men. I answer, [Answer.] this whole argument is figurative, and therefore cannot be demonstrative, by the rules of their own School. A figurative speech cannot conclude necessarily, but only probably. If we take the word sheep and shepherd in their proper signification, the sheep being brutish and unreasonable cannot judge the their sheepeheard. But if the words be taken metaphorically or by way of similitude, the Magistrate is not a sheep in all things, but only in Spiritual things, belonging to doctrine and faith and a good conscience, wherein the Ministers are Sheepeheard. If we speak of Civil things, and providing that all things be done decently and orderly in the Church, the Magistrates are sheepeheard of the people, and all the Clergy are his sheep, because they are citizens and subjects of his city and Soueraignty. As then the Magistrate cannot prescribe to the Minister what doctrine he shall teach: so it were pride and presumption for the Minister to set down rules to tie the Magistrate to his lure, in the duties of his calling, for then the sheep indeed should judge their Pastor. Thirdly, [Object. 3] it seemeth absurd that an earthly Judge should take and punish the servants of the chiefest and highest Judge, and those men that are consecrated unto him. I answer, [Answer.] an earthly Judge that sitteth upon an earthly bench, is also the servant of the most High GOD, the Minister of the heavenly Judge, and the Lieutenant of the Almighty, exercising the judgment not of man but of God. It belongeth to his office to judge others that are God's servants, so far as they are subject to him, as sheep to their sheepeheard, by the Law of God and man. If one of the Clergy break the Law of God, and of the kingdom wherein they live, by committing murder, theft, perjury, false witness-bearing, or such like, he is punished not as the servant of God, but as the servant of sin; and an offender against the Common-wealth. Against those supposed reasons, we oppose the authority of God's word, that subjecteth all persons to the power of the Magistrate; Let every soul be subject, put them in remembrance that they be subject to the principalities and powers, and that they be obedient and ready to every good work, therefore submit yourselves unto all manner ordinance of man for the Lord's sake, whether it be unto the king, as unto the superior, or unto governors, as unto them that are sent of him for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well. We heard before that Christ requireth obedience, and as he commanded it to others, so he practiced it himself, for he was subject to his parents, and to the Magistrates; he paid polle money for himself, and for Peter, not using the privilege he had, and the liberty he might use, for offense sake, lest another emboldened by his example should use the pretence of liberty that indeed he had not. Paul also teacheth subiectiō both by word and deed, by his doctrine & practice. For he was subject to the Magistrates and used their authority for his safety when he appealed from the malicious Pharisees unto Caesar. Thus we see what Christ did, what the Apostles did, what the Christians did, they exempted not themselves from the secular power, but whether they were Apostles or Evangelists, or Prophets, they submitted themselves, and claimed no freedom from their jurisdiction: wherefore they are led by another spirit that broach and practice a contrary doctrine. Thirdly, they are reprov'd, that are seditious persons, and move rebellion and insurrection against Princes, who always or for the most part are met with all in this life, and receive according to their deservings. Of such persons Jezebel spake truly, Had Zimri peace that slew his master? as if she should have said, Can any Rebell or Traitor, or any that riseth against his superior and Sovereign, prosper and have good success? For Zimri a Captain of the host conspired against Elah the son of Baasha king of Israel, & smote him that he died, & usurped the kingdom: But the time of his reign & the continuance of his sitting on the throne, could not be numbered nor reckoned by years, nor by months, nor by weeks: he reigned only seven days, and then being hardly besieged, he was constrained to burn himself and the kings house with fire; so that as he came to his kingdom by usurpation, and held it a while by effusion of blood, so he ended his days in desperation. Read to this purpose, 2 Kin. 15. where we have set before us the examples of Shallum, who cōspiring against Zachariah, the son of the second Jeroboam, and smiting him in the sight of the people, and reigning in his stead, did not long enjoy his kingdom, but sate in his throne the space of a month; and then himself was slain, & so he found according to his works, so that as he spared: not to shed blood, so his blood was not spared: Likewise the example of Pekah, who conspired against Pekahiah, and smote him in Samaria, in the place of the kings palace: but did he escape for this treason, and end his days in peace? No, as he did evil in the sight of the Lord, and departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebal, so Hoshea wrought treason against him, smote him, and slew him, and paid him home in his own kind. So in the former Chapter we see, that when the servants of Joash king of Judah, wrought treason against their master, & slew him, his son did not suffer their hoare heads to go down to the grave in peace, but so soon as the kingdom was confirmed in his hand he slew his servants which had killed the king his father. Thus it appeareth, that a discontented head, a muttering spirit, and a seditious mind are dangerous, and bring a just reward of rebellion upon their heads that are the contriuers of it, so that they fall into the pit of confusion that they made for others. This is the ende of rebellion, and such recompense have Rebels against Princes. Hence it is that such pernicious persons, being the common plagues of kingdoms and Common-wealths, are hated of God and man, & odious to everyone, yea even to those that used them to serve their own turns in disloyal and wicked actions; so that albeit they love treason well, yet they hate the Traitor. For he that betrayeth his Prince, his country, and kindred into their hands, to whom he is not tied with such near and necessary bands, will not keep his faith entire to them, but betray them also when occasion and opportunity shall serve. The Law of God saith, Thou shalt not rail upon the Judges, neither speak evil of the Ruler of thy people. If he be guilty of punishment that railleth, and reuileth them, what punishment and revenge is sufficient for him that seeketh after their life, and plotteth after their death? we have a notable example of a loyal heart in David toward Saul, who albeit he were elected and anointed King, and were persecuted and pursued of Saul, yet he would not lay violent hands upon his person, nor seek to deprive him of his kingdom: The Lord (said he) keep me from doing that thing to my master, the Lord's Anointed, to lay mine hand upon him: for who can lay his hand on the Lord's Anointed and be guiltless? As the Lord liveth, either the Lord shall smite him, or his day shall come to die, or he shall descend into battle and perish; the Lord keep me from laying mine hand upon the Lord's Anointed. This was the protestation of David, but it is a word of direction to all, that Princes persons should be inviolable, as sacred and sent of God, whether they be good or evil, whether they be just or unjust, whether godly or ungodly. It is not unknown what manner of king Nebuchadnezzar was, even he that took Jerusalem, namely, a great oppressor, robber, & cruel tyrant: yet the Prophet Ezekiel affirmeth, that God gave him the land of Egypt, for the reward of his work, and for the wages of his army wherewith he had served him: and Daniel declareth that God changeth the times and seasons, he taketh away kings, he setteth up kings, that living men may know, that the most High hath power over the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and appointeth over it the most abject among men. And in the second Chapter he saith, O king, thou art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory.

Who could be a greater tyrant then Pharaoh? who could enact more barbarous and bloody decrees then he did? Or what people could be in greater misery, or endure harder bondage and slavery then the children of Israel in the land of Egypt? Yet they performed obedience, they never prepared or provided to resist the king, they never took up arms, their only weapons were supplication to God & to man. Let us consider a little, what the Lord himself saith, by the mouth of the Prophet Jeremiah: I have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power, and by my out-stretched arm, and have given it unto whom it pleased it me: But now I have given all these Lands into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar my servant, and the beasts of the field have I also given him to serve him, And all Nations shall serve him, and his son, and his sons son, until the very time of his Land come also: and the Nation & Kingdom which will not serve the same Nebuchadnezzar King of Babel, and that will not put their neck under the yoke of the King of Babel, the same Nation will I visit (saith the Lord) with the sword, famine, and pestilence; wherefore serve the King of Babel, and live. Out of these words we observe these three points; who it is that diuideth & bestoweth kingdoms, to whom he giveth them, and what end remaineth for those that resist them. He that setteth the Crown upon the heads of men, is God; all power is from him, for promotion cometh not from the East, nor from the West; he setteth up, and he pulleth down at his own pleasure. He giveth the same sometimes to evil men, and these he maketh his servants to serve his providence, and to do his will which he hath to be done by them. And therefore such as oppose themselves against them, do set themselves against God, and all that resist, shall receive to themselves condemnation. He will have Tyrants to be obeyed and honored, because they are lifted up to the seat of honor and throne of majesty by his hand.

[Use 2] Secondly, we learn that it is a great blessing to have good and godly Princes set over us, to rule us in justice, peace, and righteousness. They are a covering against the heat, the breath of our nostrils, an hiding place frō the wind, and a refuge from the tempest, as rivers of waters in a dry Land, & as the shadow of a great Rock in a weary Land. Where they are wanting, the Sun is as it were pulled out of the Firmament, and all things are left in miserable darkness, the weak are a prey to the strong and mighty, as the lesser fish are devoured of the greater, and everyone doeth that which seemeth good in his own eyes, Hence it is, that the Queen of Sheba, seeing the power and magnificence of Solomon, whom GOD had set upon the Throne of his father David, said, Happy are thy men, happy are these thy servants which stand ever before thee, and hear thy w sedome. To this purpose speaketh the wise man, Eccl. 10, 16, 17. Woe to thee O Land, when thy King is a Child, and thy Princes eat in the morning: Blessed art thou, O Land, when thy King is the son of Nobles, and thy Princes eat in time, for strength and not for drunkenness. We must therefore acknowledge it as a great blessing and mercy upon a Land, when he giveth faithful Magistrates, wise Kings, wise Counsellors, wise Nobles, wise Judges, wise Justices, wise Officers, to govern the State, & to sway the Commonwealth. Blessed are such Rulers, nay blessed are the people that are under such Rulers; and blessed is that government and policy so well and wisely ordered. It is a token of God's heavy judgment vpō a kingdom, when he taketh away the Overseers of it. It is a token of the ruin of an house, when the shores and stays that vnderpropped it, are removed. When the Tree is pulled up by the roots, the branches must needs die, the leaves wither, and the fruit fall away. When the feet of a man fail that bear up the rest of the body, he cannot but fall: and when the breath of his nostrils is stopped, he is gone, & quickly returneth to the dust, out of which he was taken. Our Rulers and Magistrates are as the props & pillars that keep the house upright: they are as the root of the Tree, that giveth life, and sendeth forth sap and juice into all partes and corners of the Land, which are as the body of this tree: they are as the heads, that is, the choicest parts of the Commonwealth; and yet as the feet, in respect that they bear the whole frame that standeth upon them. Hence it is that the Prophet threatening from God a grievous judgment to fall upon the Land for the sin of the people, saith, Behold, the Lord of Hosts will take away from Jerusalem, and from Judah the stay and the strength: even all the stay of bread, and all the stay of water, the strong man and the man of war, the Judge and the Prophet, the prudent and the aged, the Captain of fifty, and the honorable, and the Counselor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent man, and I will appoint Children to be their Princes, and babes shall rule over them. If then the removing and taking away of the chief parts be a punishment, surely the giving of them, and the continuing of them must of necessity be the giving of a blessing unto us, & the continuing of a blessing among us. When they are gone, the light is taken away, and we live in darkness: our defense is gone, and we lie open to the enemy: the foundation is pulled away, & the house falleth: the breath is gone, and the whole body dieth. The benefit which we receive by our Kings and Princes, by our Rulers and Governors, will yet farther appear, if we consider the discommodities and confusions of an Anarchy, wherein is no Ruler, but everyone would sit at the stern, and command over others: the sword of justice is banished, and the sword of injustice is in a mad man's hand, nay in thousands and millions of mad men; force and violence bear sway, riotousnesse is set at liberty, good men are oppressed, innocence is trodden under foot, and all wickedness is set aloft. These effects and infinite other not to be numbered, of the same nature, must needs follow, where Magistrates bear not rule: but where they are settled, the godly are encouraged, & the ungodly fear. To conclude therefore this point, it is an happy Kingdom, wherein the Princes are obedient to the Law of God and nature, & of the Land; Magistrates to the Princes, private men to Magistrates, children to their parents, servants to their masters, and all men keep themselves within the limits of their callings, and being linked in love one with another, & all of them with their Prince, do enjoy the sweet fruits of peace, and true quietness of mind.

[Use 3] Thirdly, this must put Magistrates in mind of their duty. For wherefore are they necessary to be over the people, and to what ende hath GOD lifted up their heads above their brethren? Is it to give them bare titles of honor and dignity, and to tread upon their brethren, and to trample them under their feet? No, God advanceth no man for such purposes, but it is in respect of his people to do them good, to procure their wealth, and to provide for the welfare both of their souls and bodies. As then they are to have much honor, great reverence, and due obedience performed unto them, so they must know that sundry duties are to be practiced of them. First then, it is required of them to maintain and set up true religion: to give entertainment to it, and those that do profess it. They must procure that God may be worshipped and served, to which end they are made keepers of both the Tables, to see that God be glorified among his people, as Psal. 78, 70, 71, 72. He chose David his servant, and took him from the Sheep-folds, even from behind the Ewes with young brought he him, to feed his people in Jacob, and his inheritance in Israel: so he fed them according to the simplicity of his heart, and guided them by the discretion of his hands. It is not enough for them to have a care that peace and tranquility may be maintained among their subjects, (for so far the Gentiles proceed that know not God) but they must take order that the Law of God may be observed, and piety and godliness continued among the people committed to their charge. True it is, a peaceable and quiet life are great blessings, and most worthy effects of a wise & religious Magistracy, but these are not sufficient, nor the principal duties to be regarded, forasmuch as it is not enough to lead a civil life, but a sanctified life, that hath the glory of God evermore before it: and therefore they must consider that they shall give an account at that great day, not only how peaceably and politikely they have ruled, but how religiously and zealously they have governed their people. Secondly, it appertaineth unto them to deface Idolatry, and abolish all monuments of superstition, and to cast out all Idols, not only out of their Temples, but so much as lieth in them, out of men's hearts. This duty God commended to Moses, in sundry places, Deut. 7, 5, 6. Thus ye shall deal with them, ye shall overthrow their Altars, and break down their Pillars, and cut down their Groues, and burn their graven Images with fire: for thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God; the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a precious people unto himself above all people that are upon the earth. And what his zeal was in maintaining God's honor, and in revenging the dishonor done unto him in this kind, appeareth by his defacing and destroying the golden Calf that was erected in his absence; for when the people saw that he tarried long ere he came down from the Mountain, they said, Make us God's to go before us, &c. but as soon as he came near to the host and saw the Calf & dancing, his wrath waxed hot, he cast the Tables out of his hands and brake them in pieces, he ground the Calf to powder, he strewed it upon the water, he made the Children of Israel drink of it, and caused about three thousand of them to be slain with the sword. It is recorded to the everlasting commendation of Asa, that he took away the Sodomites out of the Land, and put away all the Idols that his Fathers had made, and he put down Maachah his mother also from her estate, because she had made an Idol in a grove, & Asa destroyed her Idols, and burnt them by the brook Kidron. The like we might say of Hezekiah and Josiah, whose names are blessed in the book of God, and renowned for the discharge of this duty. Thirdly, Idolatry being defaced, and Idols taken away, they must provide that pure and sincere doctrine may be delivered & preached by the Ministers of the word. For in vain it is to abolish superstition, except care be had of the true religion, that the name of God may be known upon earth, and his saving health may be spread abroad among all their people. When the King of Ashur heard that the Colonies that he had planted in Samaria were devoured of Lions, he commanded that one of y^e Priests which had been brought from thence, should be carried thither, to teach them the manner of the God of the Country: so that the superstitious King thought it his duty to see them instructed in the truth. A notable example of a godly and religious care this way is in Jehoshaphat, who, so soon as he had taken away the high places and the groves out of Judah, he sent out sundry of the Levites, that they should teach in the Cities: and they taught in Judah, and had the book of the Law of the LORD with them, and went about throughout all the Cities of Judah, and taught the people. This is the foundation and stay of all Kingdoms▪ to give entertainment to the word of God, this maketh a wise King and a wise people. So long as Magistrates countenance the truth, and Preachers of it, they secure their own estates, and are blessed of God; which ought to be an encouragement unto them, not to be slack or slothful in spreading abroad the Gospel of Christ. Lastly, because it were troublesome and tedious to go about to rehearse all their duties, we briefly number up the rest. It is their duty therefore to be good examples of piety and godliness of life to the people, and to provide for them all things necessary for the body, to ask counsel of the mouth of the Lord in their weighty affairs, that is, the ministry of the word, and to yield obedience unto it; to exhort their inferiors in time of public calamities to earnest repentance, and to express the same by prayer and fasting; to know y^e cause thoroughly before they proceed to give sentence; to punish evil doers, and defend the innocent, and to establish such positive laws as are necessary for the maintenance of order and decency in the Common-wealth.

[Use 4] Lastly, seeing Magistrates are necessary for the Church and Common-wealth, it putteth those that are under them in mind of their duties, partly in regard of themselves, partly in regard of the Magistrates, and partly in respect of God. Touching themselves, they must know they be no burdens to the Common-wealth, nor superfluous parts that may be spared: they are as the head or heart of the body, or as the eye in the head, all depend upon their welfare; so all depend upon the Kings and Princes welfare. If he be upholden, the Common-wealth standeth: if he be unregarded, the Common-wealth falleth. He is as necessary as the Sun in the Firmament, yea as fire and water, and breathing, without which we cannot live. If we judge otherwise of this ordinance of God, we are deceived, & wrong both them and our selves.

Again, we learn that their life and continuance is greatly to be desired of God's servants. It is the part and duty of all Subjects to crave their safety and protection, that they may safeguard and protect both Church and Common-wealth. Yea Rulers themselves in regard of this end, which ought daily to be before their eyes, may desire of God to lengthen their days, and to continue their happy reign, that together with the Saints they may do service to God in his Church: in this respect I say, they may desire life, not so much aiming at their own private good, (for in that respect it were better to be dissolved & to be with the Lord) as respecting the general utility of their people. What greater glory, what higher honor can they have then this, to be the stay and defense of the church, that otherwise were like to decay and go to ruin, and to continue the several parts of it in well-doing? That good King Hezekiah foreseeing by the word of the Lord, the miserable estate of the Church that should be after his death, and considering with great anguish of heart, the woeful effects that were like to follow, he turned himself in his bed to the wall and wept, and was grieved to depart hence, saying: The grave cannot confess thee, death cannot praise thee: they that go down into the pit, cannot hope for thy truth: but the living, the living, he shall confess thee, as I do this day: the father to the children shall declare thy truth. He desired of God to live, and prayed unto God to prolong his days, not to lift up himself above his brethren, not to glory in the smoke of lofty titles, not to tyrannize over the people, not to command the things that are unjust, or to punish such as do not deserve it: but to do good to the Church, and to set forth God's praise. Death indeed, which bringeth y^e dissolution of nature, is a welcome guest to them that are the Lord's, all the godly do make themselves ready to receive him, to meet and entertain him; and so Kings & Princes among the rest: howbeit, in this respect, that the Church may be benefited by them, it is no matter of impiety to desire a longer continuance among God's people: much more then is it the duty of such as are under them, and governed by them, to desire their continuance as the days of heaven, and as the course of the Sun, to be Nurses to the godly. This was wont to be a common salutation used of the people toward their Princes, not only of the Infidels, but by the faithful servants of God. When the King came to visit Daniel, being cast into the den of Lions, the Prophet so soon as he heard him, said, O King, live forever, that is, GOD grant unto thee a long life.

Last of all, whensoever we have a wise and worthy, a godly and religious Prince given to us, it is our duty to be thankful. If the Lord grant unto a Land, a prudent and provident Prince to reign over thē, whose heart is bent to seek the Lord, and to serve the GOD of his fathers, the people that breathe under his shadow must praise the holy name of God. It is their duty to pray that princes may be such, and to commend them to God with all faithfulness. For if they must pray for others, much more for them? When Solomon was anointed with oil taken out of the Sanctuary, they blew the Trumpet, and all the people said, God save King Solomon. So the Apostle writing to Timothy, exhorteth that first of all supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made for all men, For Kings and for all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and a peaceable life in all godliness and honesty; for this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior. Now, as we are to pray for them, so we are to praise God for them: we are not to forget the least blessings, nor to be unmindful of smaller benefits: and therefore we are much more bound to be thankful for the greater, among which this is one of the greatest. The Prophet praying for the prosperous estate of the Kingdom of Solomon, saith, Give thy judgments to the King, O God, and thy righteousness unto the Kings son: Then shall he judge thy people in righteousness, and thy poor with equity. This duty belongeth to us, and this ought to be our prayer and petition: and as God hath blessed us with a gracious Prince & his hopeful issue, contrary to y^e expectation of many male-contented and hollow-hearted enemies of us and our Religion; so we are often to call to remembrance the joyful and happy time when GOD in his great goodness brought him to this Kingdom, and to sit upon the Throne lineally descended unto him: so that we may say with the Psalmist, This was the Lord's doing, & it is marvelous in our eyes: this is the day which the Lord hath made, let us rejoice & be glad in it. Heereby did God allay the bitterness of sorrow worthily conceived, for the decease of our late Sovereign, so that the setting as it were of y^e Moon, was recompensed with the bright shining of the Sun; and the closing of the eyes, as it were shutting the windows of declining age, with a greater perfection of age, of sex, of gifts, and many other perogatives. Thus doth one and the same day minister matter and occasion both of sorrow and of gladness; of discomfort, yet of comfort: of weeping, yet of rejoicing; as a medicine composed of contrary ingredients: so that we may say & sing with the Poet;

I am{que} dies (nisi fallor) adest, quē semper acerbū,

Semper honorandum (sic dij voluistis) habebo:

Hunc ego Getulis agerem si Syrtibus exul,

Argolicoue mari deprensus, & vrbe Mycenae,

Annua vota tamen, solennes{que} ordine pompas

Exequerer: strueremq{que} suis altaria donis.

That is;

This, this day, ever-doleful shall,

and ever joyful be:

Yea merry-sad, and bitter sweet:

(thus God did it decree.)

If I were cast among the Moors, and lived a captive slave,

Yet yearly vows and duties due, the Altars high should have.

Thus may we, and a great deal more justly say of the day above named, which is heavy, and yet happy; threatening a storm, and yet shining clearly. Who did not greatly fear, and whose hearts were not full of perplexed thoughts, to consider what dangers were likely to fall upon our heads, when God should call unto himself, Queen Elizabeth, and gather her unto her Fathers? But behold God's great providence, dealing in mercy toward us, who shut up the mouth of the Lions, and put up the sword of the enemy, and quenched the violence of the fire, so that no noise, no tumult, no crying was heard in our streets, no sacking of Cities, no tumbling of garments in blood was seen, no alarm of battle was discerned of any, not a dog lifted up his tongue, but all things were submisse and quiet: Thus God brought King James unto the kingdom with a train of all estates, degrees, callings, companies, and conditions, with Olive branches of peace in their hands, sinesudore & sanguine, that is, without sweating and blood-shedding. No man lost his goods, no man lost his life, no Babylonish cōfusion followed, but everyone held his own with greater certainty and security then before: whereat the enemies of our peace and religion fret and rage, and gnash their teeth for anger, and are like to burst for envy, seeing their expectation is frusted, & all their hopes are defeated. Yea Lord, disappoint them more and more, cast them into the pit which they have digged, and roll the stone upon themselves which they have stirred: let them be consumed and confounded in their own devices, and taste of the fruit of their own malice: let their eyes look for a day of comfort and refreshing, until they fall out of their heads, according to that saying,

Rusticus expectat dum defluat amnis, at ill

Labitur, & labetur in omne volubilis aeuum.

That is;

They wait until the River waxeth dry,

But he doth run, and shall eternally.

So then, to use the words of the Prophet Isaiah, ch. 5, 24. As the flame of fire devoureth the stubble, & as the chaff is consumed of the flame: so their root shall be as rottenness, and their bud shall rise up like dust, because they have cast off the Law of the Lord of Hosts, and contemned the word of the holy one of Israel. On the other side, let us acknowledge it to be our duty, to render humble and hearty thanks to GOD for his goodness toward us, in delivering us from the dangers that did hang over us, in frustrating the policies of the ungodly, in continuing among us the Gospel of peace, in maintaining concord and unity among us, & all these, by placing our dread Sovereign over us, and thereby removing a thousand calamities that threatened shipwreck and final desolation. Let us not now grow secure, but oftentimes remember the benefits that we have received. It is noted, that when Solomon was set upon the seat of David his father, the people came up after him, yea they piped with pipes, and rejoiced with great joy, so that the earth rang with the sound of them. So when Hiram King of Tyrus heard the words of Solomon, he rejoiced greatly, and said, Blessed be the Lord this day, which hath given unto David a wise son over this mighty people. Likewise, when the Queen of Sheba saw the glory of Solomon, and knew it to be a chief sign of God's favor to have godly and wise Rulers sit in the Throne of justice and judgment, she brake forth not only into an admiration of his wisdom, and his servants happiness, but also into an open thanksgiving, Blessed be the Lord thy God which loveth thee, to set thee on the Throne of Israel, because the Lord loved Israel forever, and made thee King, to do equity and righteousness. These are good examples for us to follow, and teach us what we ought to do, when God blesseth us with an upright David, with a wise Solomon, with a zealous Hezekiah, with a religious Josiah, with a reforming Jehoshaphat: it is our duty to return praise and glory to God, and withal to pray heartily for the prosperous and happy continuance of such among us, that they may live long upon earth, to promote his glory, to advance the Gospel, & to establish peace, plenty, and prosperity among their people.

10. On the South-side shall be the standard of the host of Reuben, according to their armies, and the Captain over the sons of Reuben shall be Elizur the son of Shedeur.

11. And his host and the number thereof were six and forty thousand, and five hundredth.

12. And by him shall the Tribe of Simeon pitch, and the Captain over the sons of Simeon shall be Shelumiel the son of Zuri shaddai.

13. And his host and the number of them, were nine and fifty thousand and three hundredth.

14. And the Tribe of Gad, and the Captain over the sons of Gad, shall be Eliasaph the son of Deuel.

15. And his host and the number of them, were six and forty thousand, six hundredth and fifty.

16. All the number of the Campe of Reuben, were an hundredth and one and fifty thousand, and four hundred and fifty, according to their armies, and they shall set forth in the second place.

In these words we have a description of the second standard, as appeareth in the shutting up of this division, where it is said, They shall set forth in the second place. In this standard, the principal is Reuben, his assistants joined with him are Simeon and Gad. In which combination we see, the particular number of each of them declared, their Captains are specified, and then the total sum is reckoned up. We shown before, that Reuben was the eldest son of Jacob, to whom as to the first borne, the birth-right did of right belong: yet we see in the former words, that Judah was set before him: thus doth God show himself a just Judge in punishing sin, and declareth how odious and abhominable it is in his sight. But see how God dealeth in mercy with him, that is, with his posterity. He deserved utterly to be raced out of the number of God's people, and to be forgotten forever by reason of his horrible incest: and no doubt the rest of the Tribes were ready to hate him, to reproach him, and prefer themselves before him. But behold the goodness of God, that though he will punish sin, yet he doth it in mercy, not with severity: gently, not rigorously: for correction, not seeking the ruin and destruction of those that belong [Doctrine 3] unto him. From this example of God's dealing toward Reuben, we learn, that God's judgments are tempered and mingled with great mercy and mildness toward those that are his. Reuben committed horrible incest, and thereby deserved not only to be thrust into the lowest place, but to be cast out of the account of Jacob's posterity and to be honored neither of God nor man, neither alive nor dead: yet though Judah have the first place, Reuben hath the second; so then albeit he was punished justly, he was punished gently. Thus God dealeth evermore, he correcteth both moderately and mercifully: and as the Physician allayeth the bitterness of the potion with some sweetness, so God asswageth the greatness of his punishment with some mildness and favor that he mingleth with it. This doth the Prophet declare, Psal. 89, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34. If his children forsake my Law, and walk not in my judgments: If they break my statutes, and keep not my Commandments: then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with strokes; yet my loving kindness will I not take from him, neither will I falsify my truth, &c. God will chastise his for their sins, but in the midst of his punishments he remembereth his mercy toward his, and will not utterly forsake them, though he afflict them for a time. So the Prophet Isaiah testifieth the like, chap. 54, 7, 8. For a little while have I forsaken thee, but with great compassion will I gather thee: for a moment in mine anger I hid my face from thee for a little season, but with everlasting mercy have I had compassion on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer. He correcteth his own people, because they are sinful: he correcteth them gently, because he is merciful. This will yet better appear unto us▪ if we take a view of the examples of God's dealing toward his servants in their afflictions. When Miriam rose up against Moses, she was stricken with leprosy, and shut out of the host seven days, and afterward was received again. When David had sinned in numbering the people, the Lord threatened three days pestilence in the Land, & the Angel stretched out his hand upon Jerusalem to destroy it: notwithstanding when David repented of his sin, the Lord also repented of the evil, and said to the Angel that destroyed the people, It is sufficient, hold now thine hand. When Zachariah the Priest would not believe the message that was sent him from God, and delivered by the Angel, that he should have a son in his old age, (then which, what greater dishonor could be done to God? what greater disgrace to his messenger?) It was said unto him, Behold, thou shalt be dumb, and not be able to speak, until the day that these things be done. If Miriam had been stricken with leprosie as many years as she was days, or David with the pestilence, or Zacharias with dumbnesse, they could not have complained against God, but must have acknowledged their sins had deserved more: so that such is the dealing of our GOD toward his children, that he evermore 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 mitigateth the bitterness of the cup of his wrath with the greatness of his mercy, so that his justice and goodness go together.

This will farther appear unto us, by setting [Reason 1] before us sundry reasons, which will put this doctrine out of all doubt. For first of all, he punisheth his people as it were unwillingly, as enforced and compelled unto it by our disobedience. He had rather spare us, and not correct us, if it were for our good: but he seeth it to be for our benefit, and to further our salvation, who before we be afflicted, do go astray and wander out of the right way. This is the reason urged by the Prophet Jeremiah, Lam. 3, 32, 33: Though he send affliction, yet will he not forsake forever, but have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies: for he doth not punish willingly, nor afflict the Children of God. If then he take no delight nor pleasure in it, but doth it of necessity for our profit and amendment, it followeth that he dealeth gently, and not cruelly: mildly, and not rigorously with us.

Secondly, he is as a loving Father that spareth [Reason 2] his son that serveth him. He dealeth not as a tyrant or a tormenter that setteth upon the Racke, and showeth exquisite punishments upon such as offend: but he correcteth his Church, as a father doth his childrē which come out of his bowels, and therefore it must be done with great compassion. This reason is often rendered to enforce this point of doctrine, as Deut. 8, 5. Know therefore in thine heart, that as a man nourtereth his son, so the Lord thy God nourtereth thee: declaring thereby, that his afflictions are signs of his fatherly love toward us. Likewise 2 Sam. 7, 14. I will be his father, and he shall be my son: if he sin, I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the plague of the Children of men, but my mercy shall not depart away from him, as I took it from Saul, whom I have put away before thee. So then, he dealeth not extremely with his people, but spareth them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, as his nature is to show mercy, so knoweth he the matter whereof we are made, and he considereth that we are but dust. If he should deal with us according to our deserts and pay us home as we have provoked him by sinning against him, he should bring man to nothing, and consume him forever. Wherefore the Lord saith, I will not contend forever, neither will I be always wroth, for the spirit should fail before me, & I have made the breath. We are as a wind that soon passeth, as a breath that is easily stopped, and as the dust that is quickly blown away. The Prophet calleth this to our remembrance, which we ought to learn without the word by daily experience, Psal. 103, 13, 14, 15, and 78, 38, 39 and 30, 5. As a father hath compassion on his children, so hath the Lord compassion on them that fear him, for he knoweth whereof we be made, he remembereth that we are but dust: the days of man are as grass, as a flower of the field, so flourisheth he. And in another place, He being merciful, forgave their iniquity and destroyed them not, but oftentimes called back his anger, and did not stir up all his anger: for he remembered that they were flesh, yea, a wind that passeth and cometh not again. If then we consider that God punisheth unwillingly, that he showeth mercy, and remembereth our frailty, we must needs conclude with the same Prophet, that he endureth but a while in his anger, but in his favor is life: weeping may abide at evening, but joy cometh in the morning.

Let us now observe the uses that may be gathered from this doctrine. First, mark the [Use. 1] difference between God and man, whose ways are not as our ways, nor his works like unto our works. It is not with God as it is with man. Albeit he be daily provoked and offended, yet he is not easily moved; and upon our submission and repentance, he is quickly appeased, and his wrath by and by is turned back. The Lord is full of compassion and mercy, slow to anger, and of great kindness, he will not always chide, neither keep his anger forever: he hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities: for as high as the Heaven is above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him. But when man is once moved, he sildome keepeth any mean or moderation, & he can hardly or never will be appeased again, albeit he that hath offended and provoked him, do submit himself unto him, and crave pardon for his offense. Hence it is, that God is constrained to restrain the outrage and cruelty of man in his Law, that as a violent stream breaks out, & can be kept within no bounds of reason; where he giveth in charge, that if the wicked be worthy to be beaten, the Judge shall cause him to lie down and to be beaten before his face, according to his trespass, unto a certain number, forty stripes shall because him to have, and not past, lest if he should exceed, and beat him above that with many stripes, thy brother should appear despised in thy sight. This law declareth, that so soon as we are injured, a fire is kindled within us, we conceive rancor and choler, we fret and fume with indignation, and cannot be reconciled; we are filled with our passions, we lay on load and know no moderation. If the Lord should deal with us as we measure to our brethren, we were not able to bear it and abide it. If he should be so fierce and full of rage against us, we should utterly be destroyed and consumed: but there is always mercy with him, that he may be feared.

Secondly, this serveth greatly to comfort [Use 2] all the faithful servants of God, to consider the moderation of his chasticements, and the gentleness of his hand in all his corrections. We see by daily experience how he forbearth us, and poureth not out all his wrath upon us. If it were not so, it would oftentimes go hard with us. Albeit his hand be sharp upon us, yet we must needs confess, our sins have justly deserved greater plagues, longer plagues, sharper plagues. And when his judgments are ceased and withdrawn, our sins are found to be as great and sometimes greater then before, so that we deserve other plagues and punishments to come in place, & immediately to follow the former. Our deliverance therefore is for his mercies sake. Herevpon the Prophet saith, He endureth but a while in his anger, but in his favor is life, weeping may abide in the evening, but joy cometh in the morning. In like manner, sorrow may happen in the morning, but joy and comfort shall abide within the evening, that we may acknowledge the greatness of his mercy, and the shortness of his wrath. We heard how sorrowful a message, and what heavy tidings David had brought unto him so soon as he was up; but this sorrow was soon turned into joy, and this heaviness into gladness, when the Angel of vengeance is commanded to stay his hand, and to put up the sword of justice into his sheath. To this purpose the Apostle teacheth the Hebrews, chap. 12. We have had the fathers of our bodies which corrected us, and we gave them reverence, should we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, that we might live? For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure, but he chasteneth us for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness.

We must evermore remember, that it is his mercy that moveth him to stay his hand and to call in his judgments, and to make our plagues to cease. We cannot stand to plead with GOD, we must not justify our selves, we ought not to hold our selves innocent; but rather persuade our selves that God hath a just quarrel and controversy against us. Hath he visited our brethren that dwell near us, as good and peradventure better then our selves, and yet hath not touched us? Hath he freed us, when others have felt the stroke of his rod? Have we stood upright, when others have fallen down? When his arrows fly abroad, and stick in the flesh, and enter into the bones, hath he passed over us, and hid us under the shadow of his wing, as in a place of safety? Oh consider this, and let us not forget the favor of God toward us: O let us remember his loving kindness, and engrave it in our hearts to work in us the fruits of obedience. Let us enter into our own selves, and examine our consciences aright, and reason with our selves after this manner: How cometh it to pass, that we have sinned, and yet are spared? that we have been in danger, and yet are delivered, and are not destroyed? seeing so many of our neighbors die round about us daily, how is it that we are spared? Have not our sins deserved to be swept away? or can we say, we are not guilty? If we search our hearts and ways thoroughly, and deal truly with God and our selves, we must confess that there is nothing in our selves but matter to kindle his wrath, and to cut us off, and to punish us with greater plagues then he hath hitherto inflicted upon us. It is his mercy that we live, and have a longer time of repentance given unto us: he might have cut us off as rotten branches, fit for no other use then to be cast into the fire. We must be thankful unto him for this goodness, and not abuse his patience and long suffering, lest we kindle his wrath again, and he reserve us for a greater plague, and so we bring a more heavy condemnation upon our selves. Blessed are we if we can make this holy and sanctified use of affliction, the which, albeit for the present time it seem grievous, and not joyous: yet afterward it bringeth the quiet fruit of righteousness unto them which are thereby exercised.

Thus we see how this doctrine is the cause of much comfort and consolation, if we behave our selves as we ought to do under the Cross.

We have not to do with an hard and cruel father that will not regard us: nor with a weak and impotent father that cannot relieve us: for our God is in heaven, he is able to do whatsoever he will. Little children do oftentimes receive great hurt being far from their fathers sight, and left unto themselves: it is not so with us; we are always in the presence of GOD our Father, he is our eye, to see for us, our ear to hear for us, our hand stretched out to help us, and deliver us. For how should not he that made the eye see? and that made the ear, hear? It is said when Israel was in Egypt, and there oppressed with cruel bondage, that GOD looked upon the children of Israel, and God had respect unto them: so that he did not look upon their miseries as an idle beholder of them, or as one that took pleasure to see their calamities, but as one that was moved with compassion toward them, and pitied their poor estate and condition; for as he saw their troubles, and knew their sorrows, so he came down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians. Hec it is that giveth diligent care to all our groans and sighs, he knoweth in what case we stand, and what pains we feel, he taketh so great care and keep of us, that he suffereth not any of our tears to fall to the ground, but putteth them into his bottle, and layeth them up in his register.

Thus doeth GOD remember us in trouble, heareth and helpeth us at all times, hath a continual care of us, that we should not be discouraged, nor drink a full cup and draught of affliction, to be left without comfort under the waves thereof, that might drown our souls. This is the staff of comfort, which Christ giveth unto his Disciples, and all that believed in his Name, even to so many as should see the ruin and horrible destructiō that should come upon the City and the Temple, Math. 24, verse 22. Then shall be great tribulation, such as was not from the beginning of the world to this time, nor yet shall be hereafter: and except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elects sake, those days shall be shortened. In these words the faithful are comforted by consideration of the mercy of God in the mitigation of those judgments which he would bring upon Jerusalem. True it is, some do understand them of the second coming of Christ with power and great glory, according to a rotten Prophecy of one of the Rabbin's, setting down the standing and continuing of the world, namely, Two thousand years before the Law:two thousand under the Law: and two thousand under Christ, but for the Elects sake, those days should be shortened. The examination of this counterfeit and worm-eaten Prophecy, belongeth not to this place, nor time: the two first parts being untrue, & the third both untrue, uncertain, and unsettled, having no sure ground or foundation to stand upon. For touching the true meaning of the place, it is not to be understood of the day of judgment, but of the destruction of Jerusalem. For when Christ speaking by the Spirit of Prophecy, foretold of the taking and ruining of the Temple, so that one stone should not be left up on a stone that should not be cast down, the Disciples (upon occasion hereof) asked the question, when these things should be, and what should be the signs of his coming to judgment? To these two questions he answereth distinctly, not confusedly: and first of all to the first, wherein he giveth them sundry signs going before y^e sackking of the City of Jerusalem: as for example, when ye shall see the abomination of desolation, that is, the Roman army (as Luke expounds it) sit in the holy place, know that the end is near: then being touched with a commiseration of their sorrows, he saith, Woe to them that are with child, and give suck in these days; pray that your flight be not in the winter, &c. Such were no fit persons to fly, such is no fit time to fly from their cruel and bloody enemies, nor to escape the rage of barbarous and merciless soldiers. Then shall be such trouble and tribulation, as no tongue can express, no pen can write, no language hath words to utter. The sword devoured without, and both sword and famine raged & consumed within, so that they were constrained to eat their own children. during the straightness of the siege. These be the days of vengeance; to fulfill all things that are written. Immediately upon the mention of these woes and tribulations, follow these words, Except those days should be shortened,&c: as if he should say, If God had suffered those sharp afflictions to continue, and the enemies to rage against them as they desired, and their sins deserved, none of that Nation had escaped, all the Jews had been rooted out as one man. No flesh, that is, not a man among the Jews had been left alive. But for the elects sake, that is, because GOD had a remnant among them according to grace, even his elect and chosen people (which he would not cast away) for their sakes the days of their great distress in the Land, and of wrath over this people, should be ended and finished: which declareth how precious and dear the faithful that fear God are in his sight, that because of their company he would cease to scourge & afflict the nation any longer: even as at the intercession of Abraham, he would have spared Sodom and Gomorrhah, if ten righteous persons had been found there, Gen. 18. So God shown mercy to the host of Israel, because Jehoshaphat was present with them. And therefore when Jehoram the son of Ahab complained for want of water, the Prophet Elisha answered, What have I to do with thee? Get thee to the Prophets of thy father, and to the Prophets of thy mother: as the Lord of hosts liveth, in whose sight I stand, if it were not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the King of Judah, I would not have looked toward thee, nor seen thee.

So then we see, to return to the former point, that he speaketh of ending the troubles of the Jews, and siege of the City, not of cutting shorter the day of judgment.

Thus God knows how to mitigate the sorrows, and shorten the calamities that threaten the ruin and subversion of his servants. And who is it but desireth comfort in time of trouble? If then we would be assured that these things belong unto us, & take comfort in the meditation of them, let us observe these points as special rules for our edification.

First, it is our duty to acknowledge God's mercy to be great, who might lay a greater load and an heavier burden upon us. When the Angel stretched out his hand to destroy Jerusalem, the Lord stayed his hand, & caused the plague to cease, so that when thousands fell down on the right side, and ten thousands on the left side, they were spared and not touched.

Whence did this difference arise? And how came it to pass y^t the City was passed over, & the rest of the Land punished? Was it because these were worse livers or greater sinners? or was it because there were better people in Jerusalem then in other corners of the country? Was it because of the goodly buildings in the City, or because of the multitude of rich and wealthy Citizens, or because of the sumptuous stones of the Temple, or because of the sacrifices and service of God solemnized in the Temple, or because the seat of the King and the Thrones set for justice were there? If we think it was for all these, or for any of these, or for any such like outward respect, we are deceived. Indeed the Temple was an occasion of vain confidence to carnal men, who cried out, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, this is the Temple of the Lord; whereas they remained impenitent and unreformed: but as yet it was not built, for Solomon built him an house. As for the City and the Citizens, we must look for no great good there; there was want of true piety, store of pride, cruelty and oppression, which had enclosed, nay infected the walls with the cōtagion thereof. In what state it stood, David declareth, who calleth to God for help, and saith, There is not a godly man left, the faithful are failed from among the children of men, so y^t everyone dealt deceitfully with his neighbor, and spake flatteringly with double harts. To this purpose speaketh Jeremiah, chap. 5, 1. Run too and fro by the streets of Jerusalem, and behold now, and know, and enquire in the open places thereof, if ye can find a man, or if there be any that executeth judgment, and seeketh the truth, and I will spare it. Thus doth the Prophet Ezekiel complain, & painteth out as in a Table the wickedness of Jerusalem, chap. 22. There did abound shedding of blood, contempt of superiors, oppression of strangers, wronging of the fatherless, iniurying of the widows, profaning of the Sabbaths, carrying about of tales, cōmitting of idolatry, taking of bribes, perverting of judgment, biting by usury, defrauding of their neighbors by extortion, and forgetting of the Lord. This was the estate of Jerusalem, and therefore the cause why the pestilence did not walk through the midst of the City, and the Angel is commanded to stay his hand frō destroying that place which was such a sink of all filthy sins, was the Lord's mercy only, who was willing to spare it, & to give them longer time of repentance. This must we confess, when we are spared, or we are most unthankful unto God. For we have experience of his goodness toward us.

Secondly, we must in time of our affliction pray unto him, and call upon his name, and come with boldness to the throne of grace, that we may put him in mind of his mercies. Thus doth the Prophet behave himself whē he heareth of the havoc and waste that should be made among the people of GOD, he prayeth heartily for the faithful, saying, O Lord, I have heard thy voice, and was not afraid: O Lord revive thy work in the midst of the people, in the midst of the years make it known, in wrath remember mercy. What greater motive can there be to make us repair to God, then to consider how mildly and gently he dealeth with his people, when he doth afflict them? This was it that moved David to make choice of the pestilence having the choice of two other judgments propounded and laid before him, because he was most gracious and full of compassion: Let me now fall into the hand of the Lord, for his mercies are exceeding great, and let me not fall into the hand of man. He had experience both of God's mercy and of man's cruelty. We never profit aright by our afflictions, unless they drive us nearer to God, and cause us to call upon his name. It is the Commandment of God, that we should call upon him in the day of trouble.

Thirdly, if we would have comfort in the feeling of God's hand, we must thereby be drawn unto repentance, acknowledge our sins to deserve far greater judgments then yet we suffer, and consequently, turn unto him with all our hearts. If we remain stubborn and rebellious under the Cross, GOD will not leave us so, but double his strength and strokes upon us, until we be either reclaimed or convinced in our own consciences, and made without excuse. The Lord commanded his Prophet to go and cry these words, Thou disobedient Israel, return, saith the Lord, and I will not let my wrath fall upon you, for I am merciful, and will not always keep mine anger. The end that God aimeth at in afflicting his people, is to bring them unto him, and to make them seek him early: and until affliction work in us repentance & newness of life, we have no right use nor true fruit of it.

Fourthly, it is required of us to praise the name of God for his mercy and goodness in sparing of us, and not pouring out the full viols of his wrath and indignation upon us, and not coming out with all his fury and forces against us. The practice of this praise we see in David, after the plague was ceased; he built an Altar unto the Lord, and offered burnt offerings and peace offerings, and the Lord was appeased toward the Land, and the plague ceased from Israel. He did not only call upon God, but offered the sacrifice of thanksgiving unto him. Except we follow his example, and practice this duty, we rob God of his honor, and provoke him to take away his blessings from us. When we are in affliction, we are eloquent enough, and have tongues to utter many prayers to have the plague upon us removed from us: but when we are helped and the judgment is taken away, we forget both God's mercy and our own duty, we consider not from whence our deliverance cometh, nor what it challengeth at our hands.

Fifthly, we must remember, that we think not our selves hardly dealt withal, but take heed to our selves that we be far from murmuring and complaining against God. The Lord complaineth by his Prophet, against such hypocrites, Jeremiah 3: Diddest thou not still cry unto me, Thou art my Father, and the guide of my youth? will he keep his anger forever, will he reserve it to the end? Thus they flattered with their lips, when malice was in their hearts; they spake fair to God, and pretended a great desire they had that they would fain please him, while his hand is upon them, and while he striketh them with his rod. But what answer doth GOD give and they receive? It followeth in the next words, Thus hast thou spoken, but thou doest evil even more and more. And as it was with this people, so is our case, when God at any time taketh us in hand, we speak him fair, we humble our selves before him, and stoop down to take correction; but either we think the time too long while his rod is upon us, and so will prescribe him the time when to take it away; or else we fret & fume against him as doing us wrong, and we sustained injury at his hands. But if we were acquainted either with our iniquity, or with his mercy, we would be otherwise minded, and would confess that all kinds of punishments are due to us, and indeed too little for us: yea, we would easily perceive that GOD is more sorrowful for the correction which he is constrained to lay upon us, then we are grieved for the sins which we have committed against him. If these things be found in us, if we acknowledge God's mercy toward us in our troubles, if we call upon him earnestly, if we turn unto him unfeignedly, if we praise his name cheerfully, and do not think our selves hardly dealt withal, we shall not want comfort in our sufferings, but be able to comfort both our selves and others.

Lastly, it is our duty to be patient under [Use. 3] the cross, not to discourage our selves in our troubles, whatsoever or how great soever they be, nor to murmur and repine at them: seeing our doctrine teacheth us, that he never poureth upon us all his wrath, nor giveth us a full cup to drink up, even the dregs thereof; but tempereth & seasoneth it in such sort, that together with the affliction we may taste of his compassion. Now to the end we may not despise the chastening of the Lord, neither faint when we are rebuked of him, but may possess our souls with patience and endure constant unto the ende, we are to consider three things. First of all, we must remove all lets and impediments that may hinder us in the course of patience. Secondly, we must learn and mark the motives that may move us to the embracing of this Christian and heavenly virtue. Thirdly, we must examine & prove our selves, whether this grace of GOD be in us or not, seeing upon it as upon a pillar resteth the life of our Christian profession, as we shall show afterward. Touching the first, it standeth us upon to cut off and to cast away from us all such things as may any way hinder our patience. The Apostle writing to the Hebrews, and commending the constancy and patience of the Saints, draweth this exhortation: Wherefore, let us also, seeing that we are compassed with so great a Cloud of witnesses, cast away everything that presseth down, and the sin that hangeth so fast on, let us run with patience the race that is set before us: whereby he declareth, that the means to hold on our course with patience, is to remove the lettes and impediments that stand in our way.

The first hindrance is self-love, the very bane and poison of all good and holy duties. We love our selves and our skin so well, that we shrink back our shoulders, and pull in our heads when any peril beginneth to hang over us, as if some storm and tempest were imminent and ready to fall upon us. So long as this thorn sticketh in the flesh, we cannot love the Lord, nor yield obedience unto him in bearing the cross. Hence it is that our Savior Christ saith, Math. 16. verse 24. If any man will follow me, let him forsake himself, and take up his cross and follow me. It is to our nature and the natural man hard to suffer, who desireth to sleep in an whole skin.

The second hindrance is desire of revenge. For these two, patience and revenge, are as contrary one to the other, as peace and war, as fire and water, as light and darkness. If Joseph had looked to the injurious dealings of his brethren toward him, and to their wicked purposes intended against him, he would never have said unto them, Bee not sad, neither grieved with yourselves, that ye sold me hither: you sent me not hither, but God, who hath made me a father unto Pharaoh, and Lord of all his house, and Ruler throughout all the Land of Egypt. If Job had rested and contented himself in the attempts and robberies of the Sabaeans and Chaldeans, he would never have broken out into these words, The LORD hath given, and the LORD hath taken away. It belongeth not unto us to take or to seek revenge: but to commit our selves and our causes to the God of vengeance.

The third let is infidelity, when we have in us an unfaithful heart, and cast off all confidence in God, who maintaineth the lot of all those that trust in him, and depend upon him. What was the cause that the Jews, suffering want in the wilderness, sometimes of bread, and sometimes of water, murmured against God and his servant Moses? And albeit they had most manifest experience both of the power and mercy of GOD, in helping them in all times of need, yet they brake out into impatience, Exod. chap. 16, verse 3. Oh, that we had died by the hand of the Lord in the Land of Egypt, when we sate by the flesh-pots, when we did eat bread our bellies full.

The cause of this was an unbelieving heart to depart away from the living God. If therefore we believe not in him, to sanctify his Name, and to trust in his help, if we do not commit all our ways unto him, who hath promised that he will never forget us nor forsake us, it is impossible that ever we should possess our souls with patience.

The last impediment is want of premeditation and consideration how we may continue and go through stitch, without starting back from our profession. This is the cause that maketh men impatient and to give over when we are tried, because we never weigh the danger before we are tried. We must cast our accounts, what it hath cost others, & what it may cost our selves; It is worthy counsel given unto us by our Savior Christ, Luc. 14, 28, 29, 30. Which of you, minding to build a Tower, sitteth not down before, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to perform it? lest that after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to perform it, all that behold it begin to mock him, saying, This man began to build, and was not able to make an end. It is a dangerous case to be found unprepared and unprovided for the assault. It hath wrought a relapse and apostasy in many, so that they have denied the faith, and made shipwreck of religion. Hitherto of the hindrances of patience: now let us consider the motives that may persuade us to seek after it, and to lay hand and hold upon it.

First of all, we must know, that as all affliction is of God, so he will be with us, & have care over us under the Cross. Why then should we be dismayed, or discourage our selves in any troubles whatsoever, seeing we are still in God's sight, and have him ready to hear us? otherwise it could not but go hard with us. It had gone hard with Moses being cast into the River among the reedes, except God had looked down from heaven upon him, and directed Pharaohs daughter to take him up. The like we might say of Joseph, when he was in irons, and his feet held in the stocks: of David, when he wandered in the wilderness on the Mountains and in Caues of the earth: of Jeremiah, when he was cast in prison: of Jonah in the whales belly: of Daniel in the den of Lions; and of his fellows in the fiery furnace: all these had experience of God's assistance, who was not far from them in the day of trouble. So it shall be with everyone of us: his countenance doth evermore behold the just in all their sufferings & calamities, as the Psalmist saith, The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, & his ears are open unto their cry. And indeed we should be most wretched and miserable in all our afflictions, in war, famine, and pestilence, and whatsoever chastisements befall us, except God had an eye to see us, an ear to hear us, an heart to pity us, and an hand to save and succor us.

Secondly, we must consider what we have deserved, and how we may justly be punished, not only in that manner, but in a greater measure. This was the confession of the penitent thief hanging upon the Cross, and speaking thus unto his fellow, Luc. 23. We are indeed righteously here: for we receive things worthy of that we have done: but this man hath done nothing amiss. We show our selves to have a sensible feeling of our sorrows, but are many times without feeling of our sins. If GOD should lay more upon us, he were not unjust, inasmuch as we have justly brought it upon our selves. We see this in the Prophet David, acknowledging the same, Psal. 119, 75. I know, O Lord, that thy judgments are right, and that thou hast afflicted me justly. We must confess that nothing belongeth to us but shame and confusion of faces.

Thirdly, this meditation must enter into our souls, and never depart from us, that God will turn all our sorrows & sufferings unto the best: so that neither tribulation, nor anguish, nor persecution, nor famine, nor nakedness, nor peril, nor sword shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. This is it which the Apostle teacheth, Rom. 8, 28. We know that all things work together for the best unto them that love God, even to them that are called of his purpose. This promise is assured unto us, that he will sanctify unto our singular good, not only his blessings, but his very chastisements and afflictions, so that they shall bring us nearer to God, as the Prophet David confessed, he had received good by thē, Psal. 119. Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now I keep thy word.

Fourthly, we are made to suffer here, that we might not suffer elsewhere. For we are chastened in this life, lest we should be condemned in the life to come. If therefore we be without correction, whereof all the sons of God are partakers, then are we bastards & not sons, as the Apostle speaketh to the Hebrews. Let us call to our remembrance, what Abraham answereth to the rich man, Luke 16 25. Son, remember that thou in thy life time receivedst thy pleasures, and likewise Lazarus pains: now therefore is he comforted, & thou art tormented. The rich man enjoyed the desires and delights of his own heart in this life, therefore he was tormented in hell in the life to come. Let us patiently abide that which God layeth upon us, wishing rather to suffer here such troubles as are temporal, then the torments of hell after this life, which are eternal.

Fifthly, it is the will of God that we should suffer, to which we must readily obey, and humbly submit our selves, as the Apostle showeth, Phil. 1, 29. Unto you it is given for Christ, that not only ye should believe in him, but also suffer for his sake. The heathen were wont to use this as a reason to bear the cross, because there is no remedy or redress, & that it cannot be otherwise. Seeing then, they could not choose but suffer, they taught that it is better to make a virtue of necessity, then brutishly or childishly to despair under it; and seeing it must needs be so, they must be contented, resolving, as Christ saith, Acts 9, 5. It is hard to kick against pricks. But we have a better and stronger motive to move us to suffer, then the forcible weapon of necessity, even the unchangeable purpose of God, whose gracious will it is, that through manifold tribulations we should enter into the kingdom of heaven.

Lastly, we must have an eye cast upward to the rich recompense of reward that shall be given unto us. For the greater our trials are, the greater shall our reward be. It is said by the Apostle, that Moses chose rather to suffer adversity with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, because he had respect to the recompense of the reward. The afflictions of this present life are all temporal and transitory, they have an end in a short space: but the glory prepared and reserved for the Saints in the next life, shall know no end; for our light affliction which is but for a moment, causeth unto us a far more excellent and an eternal weight of glory: while we look not on the things which are seen, but on the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal. Our afflictions shall not continue long upon us, they shall speedily have an end; which ought to devour the bitterness thereof, and swallow up the tediousness that creepeth upon us. Thus much of the means or motives to work patience in us. Now it remaineth, that we examine our selves, whether it be in us or not. For if we be without patience, we shall never be able to hold out our profession unto the end. It is as salt that must season every duty. If then this be not found in us, we are but as time-servers, that continue for a season; or as the morning dew which vanisheth at the rising of the Sun; or as the grass upon the house-top, which flourisheth for a while, and afterward withereth away. Let us therefore consider the signs and tokens whereby we may try our selves, and prove whether it be in us or not.

One sign is an heart resolved to abide whatsoever is laid upon us, whether it be for sin or for trial. For we must understand, that some afflictions are laid upon us for our sins, and some for our trial. Examples of both we have in the Scriptures, to inform us in these points. Touching sin, the Prophet saith, Lament. 3, verse 39. Wherefore is the living man sorrowful? Man suffereth for his sin. When Christ had cured the man that had lain eight and thirty years at the pool of Bethesda, he found him afterward in the Temple, and said unto him, Behold, thou art made whole; sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee. He had suffered a great judgment, yet the Lord threateneth him with a greater: he had been diseased many years, yet he was to fear a worse evil. Touching trial, we may look upon Job, all whose sufferings were for trial of his faith, obedience, and sincerity. The like speaketh Christ to the Disciples, seeing a man which was blind from his birth, and asking him, Master, who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was borne blind? For he answered them, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents, but that the works of God should be shown on him. Now then, whether our afflictions be to chastise us, or to prove us, the faithful man is persuaded and resolved to bear them; If his sins be remitted, and the guilt of them removed, he careth not though the cross abide and continue still. He that standeth thus affected, hath laid up a good sign to be known for his patience. The pardon of our sin must more rejoice us, then the feeling of the cross can dismay us.

Secondly, when we suffer, and suffer much, yet we must not cease to love the Lord that striketh us. Though the punishment be bitter, we must not hate the hand that giveth the stroke, but embrace it heartily, and love it still. This affection was in Job, when he had sustained the loss of his cattle, of his servants, of his sons, and of all his substance, he hated not GOD, nor murmured against him, but acknowledged in the midst of all, Naked came I out of my mothers womb, and naked shall I return thither: the Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away: blessed be the Name of the LORD. Where we see he blesseth God, not only for his giving, but for his taking away, not only for his blessings, but for his chastisements. A notable example for us to follow, and a certain sign to make trial of our patience. It is the ordinary manner of wicked men, when they have received gifts, and are filled with good things, to give God thanks, and to say, God be thanked: but if their riches, honors, peace, and gifts be taken away, all is done, their thanks are ceased, their mouths are stopped, and their tongues are tied. It is a notable saying of the Prophet, Psalm 130, 3, 4. If thou O LORD, straightly markest iniquities, O LORD, who shall stand? but mercy is with thee that thou mayest be feared.

If our love of GOD be proved, when his justice is shown: and our fear, when his mercy is extended toward us, we may assure our own hearts we have the spirit of patience within us. It is truly said, he loveth the party well, that can love him when he hath done him injury. True it is, GOD can do us no wrong, nor deal unjustly with us; but if he lay heavy punishments upon us, and we do patiently abide them, and love God still heartily and unfeignedly, it is a great comfort that we are his. For who can love God, when he is wounded by his hand, but he that is undoubtedly in his favor and friendship? Wherefore, as God chastiseth those that belong to him, because he loveth them: so it is their duty to love him, because he chastiseth them.

Thirdly, another sign of patience is humility, and humbling our selves under his blows and strokes laid upon us. If once we begin to reason and dispute of the causes for which we suffer, and say, why should the Lord thus deal with us? or to vaunt of our sufferings in the spirit of vanity, and say, who is like unto me? or what man hath endured such things? it is plain and evident, we are far from true humility, and consequently from true patience. Job is made a mirror of patience to all posterities, to the end of the world, which did evidently appear to be in him by the lively fruits thereof. And albeit he suffered much more than others, yet in the middes of all his sufferings and losses, he did not sin, nor charge God foolishly: who being moved to confess his hypocrisy, and being judged an extraordinary wicked man, by his extraordinary afflictions, he answered; Thou speakest like a foolish woman: what? shall we receive good from the hand of God, and not receive evil? In all this did not Job sin with his lips. Thus let us stoop down, & bend the knees of our hearts unto God, acknowledging the chastisement to come from him, and looking for deliverance to come from him also.

The last property to discern it, is cheerfulness, and joy in suffering: when we are so far from murmuring under it, that we rejoice in it. The Apostles of Christ, being accused for preaching Christ, as for an evil work, & scourged as malefactors by the enemies of the Gospel, departed from the council, rejoicing, that they were counted worthy to suffer rebuke for his name. This was a sign and proof of their patience. For this are the Saints commended, Rom. 8. who albeit they were killed all day long for his sake▪ and counted as sheep for the slaughter, yet in all these things they were more then conquerors,through him that loved them. They are persuaded, that neither life nor death, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall separate them from the love of God. The Apostle testifieth touching the Hebrews, that they suffered with joy the spoiling of their goods, knowing in themselves, how that they have in heaven, a better, and an enduring substance. It was a lamentable case, to suffer the loss of all their substance, gathered together with great labor and sweat, or left unto them by their parents: but to suffer this spoil and pillage at the hands of their kinsfolkes, and countrey men, and Magistrates (whose help they were to call upon, and who ought to have aided and assisted them) this no doubt did double and treble their sorrow and misery: yet such was their Christian patience, that they received those injuries and indignities with joy and great comfort. Not that they rejoiced at their own miseries, as men that were without feeling, or human affections, (for if they had been without sense, they could not be renowned for their patience;) but albeit they were touched with grief and heaviness for their adversities and afflictions, yet they were mindful of their profession, and of Christ's promise, that whosoever shall forsake houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for his Names sake, he shall receive an hundredth fold more, and shall inherit everlasting life. This meditation was it that made them account light of the wrongs they had received, this hope of an eternal recompense swallowed up the sadness that arose in their heart, and wrought in them great gladness. For, what cause hath he to mourn and lament, that maketh an exchange of copper for gold? of chaff for wheat? of dross, for pure metal? So great is the price and excellency of heavenly things, above earthly, that we must be ready to bear with patience and alacrity, the lack and loss of them, especially considering we are not so much owners of them as stewards: neither shall it bring poverty upon us, because God will make us a plentiful amends and recompense: neither shall our enemies thrive with them: or enrich themselves by them: because as thieves and robbers they shall not escape the kingdom of God, but he will feed them with shame, and clothe them with dishonor, and reward them with confusion in the end.

17 Then the Tabernacle of the Congregation shall go with the host of the Levites, in the middes of the Campe as they have pitched, so shall they go forward, every man in his order according to their standards.

We have spoken already of two of the standards, and two other remain behind to be spoken off. In this verse, Moses enterlaceth the placing and situation of the Tabernacle, which was so inuironed with the Levites, and they flanked and fortified with the whole host, that it remained in the middes, to wit, in a place of the greatest safety and security, fittest for access in regard of the people, and hardest for access in regard of their enemies. For being placed in the middes of all the host, the Israelites might more easily approach, having a commodious ingresse and egress, and regresse unto it: and the enemies (if any should enterprise to trouble them) should not be able by any means to disturb and disquiet them, albeit they deferred it never [Doctrine 4] so much. So then we see, that the place of the Tabernacle was not set in a corner of the host, or at the one side, or out of the host, but is commanded to be pitched in the midst of the people. Hence it appeareth, that when the Lord was angry with his people, and would no longer reueile himself unto them by his presence among their tents, it is said, Moses took his Tabernacle and pitched it without the host, and called it Ohel-moed, that is, the Tabernacle of the Congregation; Exod. 33, ver. 7. Here the people were to meet together: here the people were to ask counsel of God: and here the Oracle of God would give answer unto them. True it is, this is not to be understood of that holy place, made to be a worldly, that is, an earthly and temporal Sanctuary, called the Tabernacle, whereby they might have a visible testimony of the presence of God, (albeit some are of that opinion) whether we consider the time, or the coming of Moses from the mount, or the order of the History. In respect of the time, because the making of that great Tabernacle followeth afterward, Exod. 35. In respect of coming from the mountain, because Moses was newly descended, the idolatry of the people newly revenged, and no sufficient leisure afforded for so great a work: lastly in respect of the order of the history, because it must be inverted and transposed. Neither was it some peculiar Tabernacle which Moses erected specially for the service of God (as others suppose and surmise) seeing we read of no such commandment given unto him, and it is not to be thought, he would invent anything in the service of God, for which he had no word or warrant. For if in the building of the great Tabernacle he did frame all things, even to the rings and pins, to the snuffers & snuff-dishes, according to the pattern shown unto him in the mountain: how shall we imagine he would set up a Tabernacle of his own head without the warrant and direction of God? Now, assuredly we cannot understand it of the great Tabernacle, much less of any peculiar tabernacle beside, whose author God is not remembered to be: but of the Tent or Tabernacle of Moses, which serving first for his private use, is here appointed y^e place where God would manifest himself unto them; so that the removing of it out of the hoaste, is made a sign of his anger and displeasure. To this purpose Moses speaketh afterward, when the work of the Tabernacle was finished, The cloud of the Lord was upon the Tabernacle by day, and fire was in it by night, in the sight of all the house of Israel, throughout all his journeys: where he showeth what was the place appointed for it, namely, to be ever in the sight of all the Israelites. Thus doth Moses speak in the second verse of this chapter, Every man of the children of Israel shall campe by his standard, and under the Ensign of his fathers house, far off about the Tabernacle of the Congregation shall they pitch. This doth the Prophet Ezekiel testify, Chap. 37. I will make a covenant of peace with them, and I will set my Sanctuary among them for evermore, my Tabernacle also shall be with them, &c.

This ordering of the place of the Tabernacle, [Reason 1] was not without reason. For first, God doth hereby admonish them, that they should always have him before their eyes, lest they should forget his worship, or offend him with their sins. Hereunto cometh that which the Lord saith, Levite. 26. I will set my Tabernacle among you, and my soul shall not loathe you: and I will walk among you, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people. If the place had been farther removed from their sight, they would have forgotten God and his worship, and more easily have broken out into sin against him.

Secondly, he had respect indifferently unto [Reason 2] all the tribes. For if any had pitched their tents farther then others from the Tabernacle, they would have quarrelled and complained, that they had been contemned and despised. Everyone would have been ready to give wrongful judgment, and to interpret it as done of set purpose to his disgrace. Now, by this situation of it, the mouths of all persons are stopped, and perpetual silence enjoined unto them, that they should quietly keep their standings, and rest contented with the ordinance of God.

Thirdly, the Levites were hereby put in mind of their duty, and therefore are lodged [Reason 3] about it, as likewise it was about the Temple, as afterward we shall see by the example of Solomon. It was their duty to look to the worship of God, and to instruct the people that should come unto them: for their lips must preserve knowledge, and the people should seek it at their mouths, seeing they are appointed to be the messengers of the Lord of hosts. Neither need they go far to learn this, inasmuch as they could not abide in their places, but they had a warning before their eyes, to perform their office.

The uses, of placing the Tabernacle after [Use. 1] this manner, are many. First, it assureth us of this excellent promise, that God will ever be in the middes of us, and settle his rest and residence among us. Hereunto cometh the saying of Moses, Levite. 26. I will set my Tabernacle among you, and my soul shall not loathe you: and I will walk among you, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people. So the Prophet having assured them, that his Sanctuary should be settled, and his Tabernacle placed among them, doth add, yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Seeing therefore the situation of the Tabernacle was such, set up in the middes of the Tribes, so that three of them pitched before, three of them behind, and three of each side, in this respect God is said to dwell in the mids of them, because his Tabernacle which he made his habitation, was in the middes of the host. Now we must know how God is said to dwell among us. For we must make a difference between his general presence, and his special presence. His general presence is in all places: his special presence is in his Church His general presence is of his power: his special presence is of his grace and favor. There is a common manner of God's being everywhere, and in all things, by his essence: there is another special way of God's being present, as that which is loved is present in him that loveth; according to that which Christ hath said, John. 14.23. If any man love me, he will keep my word, and my Father will love him, and he will come unto him, and will dwell with him. It was (we see) God's will to have the Sanctuary seated in the mids of all the people: not that he was enclosed in that Ark, or in the Tabernacle, whom the heaven of heavens cannot contain: but to give them a visible token, that they should not doubt at all of him. For such is our weakness and infirmity, that we are always ready to suppose, that he turneth his back to us, and thinketh not upon us, and is too far absent from us, to succor and sustain us with his hand. Therefore then it was the pleasure of our God, that the Tabernacle should be among the people, as a certain warrant of his power and presence, of grace and goodness, which he hath promised to all the faithful. And no man can indeed call himself a believer, unless he be thoroughly persuaded, that God is with him: yea, this is our comfort and bringeth peace unto our souls, to consider that God is in the middes of us. True it is, God doth sometimes seem to be absent from us, and to hide his countenance from us, and utterly to forget us: yet even then he is with us, and within us, albeit it pleaseth him to try our faith & patience by that means. Again, it is most true, we have not now the Tabernacle with the instruments thereof: yet notwithstanding he standeth not far from us, neither casteth us off from him, but this favor is bestowed upon us in more plentiful measure and in a more ample manner, then it was upon the ancient people under the Law. This appeareth unto us many ways. For first we know, how God is joined unto us in the person of his own only Son. For this cause also is Christ called Emmanuel, that is to say, God with us. In him dwelleth the fullness of the godhead, so that he is God manifested in the flesh, and we are made members of his body. Though he be now ascended up into heaven, yet he faileth not to fill all, and we are made bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh; so that there is no greater conjunction between the husband and the wife, then is between the Son of God and us. He said to his disciples, I am with you, even unto the end of the world, Matth. 28. Whereby he meant to strengthen them in all the dangers and conflicts which they should sustain.

Secondly, we have with him the preaching of the Gospel, whereby God is as it were brought down to reside and remain among us. So long as the word which is the scepter of his kingdom is with us, we shall not need to fear he will go from us, neither shall be constrained to make long journeys to seek him out. When once his word is departed, and the Gospel gone, his standard is removed, and he is quite turned from us. It is in vain to dream to find him, when we cannot find him in his word. Hence it is, that Abijam telleth Jeroboam that made Israel to sin, that God was gone from them, seeing he had driven away the Priests of the Lord the sons of Aaron: and on the other side he joineth together the presence of the Lord and the preaching of his word, saying, Behold this God is with us as a Captain, and his Priests with the sounding trumpets to cry an alarm against you. This then is a special token of God's special presence, when he sendeth his word as a gracious rain upon his inheritance, and thereby watereth the dry furrows of the barraine hearts of his people.

Thirdly, we have the promise of his presence and the seals thereof in his Sacraments, whereby we are at one with him, and he with us. Whensoever we meditate of our baptism, the Son of God doth witness unto our spirits, that we are clothed with his righteousness, as with a garment: for all such as are baptized into Christ have put on Christ. Whensoever we receive the Supper of the Lord, he showeth us that he is our food, and that the bread which we eat at our tables, and in our houses, doth not nourish us better, then we be nourished by his substance at his heavenly table, insomuch that we live in him, by him, and through him: according to the testimony of John, Ch. 6. Whosoever eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day: for my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. Thus we are spiritually one with him, and mystically he is one with us, so that we have a communion with him as the members have with the head: so that we must receive it as most true which the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 10. The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? the bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? for we that are many are one bread and one body, because we all are partakers of one bread.

Fourthly, when we come together in the Church to call upon his Name, he is near unto us, and most familiar with us. For our LORD Jesus Christ assureth us, that he is there among us, whensoever we are assembled in his Name; and by lifting up our eyes, and holding up our hands toward heaven, we show that our coming thither is to present our selves in the sight & presence of our God To this purpose our Savior saith, Math. 18, 20. Where two or three are gathered together in my Name, there am I in the midst of them: so that we must consider, that we are here not only before the Angels of heaven, but also that the Son of God both seeth and heareth us. True prayer doeth ascend up to Heaven as Incense, and lifteth us up to talk familiarly with God, and bringeth down his blessings upon us: except we use this heavenly exercise whereby we speak to him, he is a stranger to us, and we are strangers to him.

Lastly, he dwelleth among us whensoever he preserveth us from evil, and delivereth us from our enemies. If the favor of GOD were not a shield & buckler about us, to preserve and protect us from our enemies, we should lie open to ten thousand dangers and deaths. If our Lord had not a continual care over us, and stood not mightily for our defense, we should be a prey to the iaw of the Lyon, and should perish every minute of an hour. We are of our selves over-weak, and have no means to deliver our selves: this is our comfort, that God is on our side, & dwelleth among us. Let us also take heed we walk in fear before him, and do not provoke him to wrath and indignation against us by committing evil in his fight, who can abide nothing that is profane or polluted, as Deut. 6, 15. The Lord that is in the midst of thee, is jealous, beware therefore that his wrath kindle not, lest thou be rooted out of the Land which the Lord thy God hath given thee. To this purpose the Apostle speaketh, 2 Cor. 6. Ye are the Temple of the living God, as God hath said, I will dwell among them, and walk there: and I will be their GOD, and they shall be my people: wherefore come out from among them, and separate yourselves, saith the Lord, and touch none unclean thing, and I will receive you, and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. This showeth, that we ought to walk always as in God's presence, and to consider evermore that his eye is upon us. Our bodies are the temples of the holy Ghost for him to dwell in. If then we shall defile them, and make them as swine-styes, we grieve the holy Spirit whereby our adoption and redemption are sealed, and drive him from us, and chase him away out of our hearts.

[Use 2] Secondly, albeit the placing of the Tabernacle in the midst of the host be gone and past long ago, and were verified among the Jews under the shadows of the Law: yet it serveth to teach us to what end God hath instituted civil States and Common-wealths in this world, to wit, to be stays and props to the Church, to uphold and strengthen the same, that the people of God may assemble together in peace and quietness, and be free from all dangers of malicious enemies that labor to do evil to the Sanctuary. To this purpose the Prophet teacheth, that The Name of the Lord shall be declared in Zion, & his praise in Jerusalem, when the people shall be gathered together, and the Kingdoms to serve the Lord. And Psal. 122. Jerusalem is built as a City, that is compact together in it self, whereunto the Tribes, even the Tribes of the Lord go up according to the Testimony to Israel, to praise the name of the Lord. Heereby we are put in mind of three notable duties.

First of all, let all persons, Princes, and people, high and low, do good to the Church of God, and employ their best endeavours to promote the glory of God, and the safety of the Church. For wherefore was the Tabernacle taken and pitched in the midst of all the host, not placed in a corner, nor set in the skirts of that mighty army, but was inuironed round about with the strength of Israel: but to teach us, that this must be the end we ought all to aim at, that it is our duty to the utmost of our power to procure the peace of Zion, & the prosperity of Jerusalem, all the days of our life? For even as the hills and mountains did compass about Jerusalem, to defend it from all dangers and inuasions of enemies: so ought all the faithful that are the friends of the Church, seek to defend it from all such as seek the ruin and destruction thereof. They have a promise made unto them, that they shall prosper that prefer it, Psal. 122, 6. Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: let them prosper that love thee. Such was the zeal of David for the house of God, that it even consumed and eat him, as the people declare, Psal. 132. Lord, remember David with all his afflictions, who sware unto the Lord, and vowed unto the mighty God of Jacob, saying, I will not enter into the tabernacle of mine house, nor come upon my pallet or bed, nor suffer mine eye to sleep, nor mine eye-liddes to slumber, until I find out a place for the Lord, an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob, &c: Loe, how great his care and zeal was to build the Temple, and to further the worship of God: he spared no cost, but opened the treasures of his house to employ them this way. Thus it ought to be with us, it is the chief end why God doeth bless us with the blessings of this life, that we should pay him his tribute, and be content to depart from them when his glory & worship do require it. If we care not how bountifully we spend and lavish in unprofitable, nay in ungodly uses, and pinch for a penny and an half-penny employed to charitable and godly purposes: we make it manifest to all men that the glory of God is not before our eyes, nor his worship any whit regarded of us. And hence it is, that God oftentimes curseth our store and substance, and bloweth upon it, that it flieth away as the wind that cometh not again. Let us therefore be wise hearted, to refer our goods, our lives, and all that we have, to seek the good of the Church, that it may be safe; and then shall we be safe under the shadow of it. On the other side, the Lord denounceth a sore and severe threatening against all such as do wrong to the Church, so that he will wound the head of his enemies, and the hairy pate of him that walketh in his sins. This appeareth by the prayer of the Church, Psal. 74. Think upon thy Congregation which thou hast possessed of old, and on the rod of thine inheritance which thou hast redeemed, and on this mount Zion wherein thou hast dwelt: lift up thy strokes, that thou mayest forever destroy every enemy that doth evil to the Sanctuary. Such shall never prosper, (albeit they may flourish for a time) that hate the Church which God loveth.

Secondly, it is the duty of all persons to assemble together, to hear his word, all excuses and delays set apart. For wherefore was the Tabernacle placed in the mids, but to bind all persons alike to come to the exercises of religion, and to perform public worship to God? Jereboam's calves (who made Israel to sin) were set, one in the North part of the land, the other in the South; but the Tabernacle of God was settled in the middes among them, that all men should have access unto it, and that no man should color his absence with any pretences. Hence it is that the Prophet, declaring, that GOD had chosen Zion and loved to dwell in it, saying, This is my rest forever, here will I dwell, for I have delight therein, doth add, We will enter into his Tabernacles, and worship before his footstool. A notable encouragement to move us to resort & repair oftentimes to the place of God's worship, seeing he maketh it his habitation and resting place, and the house where he will dwell, and where we shall find him in time of need. A strong persuasion to work a desire and delight in us to go to the Lord's courts, that we may behold the majesty of the king of glory. To this purpose speaketh David in another Psalm. The mountain of God is like the mountain of Bashan, it is an high mountain as mount Bashan: Why leap ye, ye hie mountains? as for this mountain, God delighteth to dwell in it, yea the Lord will dwell in it forever. Where he teacheth, that God's Church, in regard of merciful promises, heavenly graces, and noble victories, doth excel without comparison all worldly things, and all earthly places. All assemblies though never so glorious and glittering outwardly, must give place to it, and are as nothing being matched with it: inasmuch as the excellency, beauty, and continuance of the Church goeth beyond all other congregations of men. Hereupon he inferreth, Thy Congregation dwelled therein: for thou, O God, hast of thy goodness prepared for the poor. If then we would dwell with God, let us repair to his house: if we would see him, we shall see him there: if we would hear him, we shall hear him there: if we would know him, we shall know him there: for his face is to be seen there, his voice is to be heard there, his presēce is to be found there. O let us prefer one day in his courts before a thousand elsewhere. Let us rather desire to be door-keepers in his house, then dwellers in y^e palaces of the wicked. If they were called and accounted blessed that stood in the presence of Solomon: how much more blessed and happy are they that stand in the presence of God, and worship toward his holy Temple. Let the same mind and affection therefore be in us which was in David, to say with him with a feeling heart, One thing have I desired of the Lord, that I will require, even that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to visit his Temple. Where shall we find in our days this longing, and holy desire to speak with God in his word and worship? where are the ancient wishes of the Saints, thinking it long before they came and appeared in the presence of God? where is now the panting of the soul, and fainting of the heart, and the rejoicing of the flesh in the living God, like unto the earth that gapeth for the showers of rain to refresh it? We are an unthankful people, whom plenty and abundance have glutted, and made to loathe the heavenly Manna given to us.

Thirdly, let us not stand in fear of any enemies, as if they could bear and beat down the Church before them, and raze the foundations of it to the ground; neither let us as graceless children forsake our mother, for fear of troubles that may come vpon her. True it is, the Church of God hath many enemies that threaten the ruin thereof, and employ all their wiles and fetches to work the subversion of it, as if an huge and heavy millstone were cast at it, or as if a mighty tempest were fallen upon it, or as if a sudden flood of waters did overflow and overwhelm it. Nevertheless the Church is set in a safe place, they shall not be able to hurt it: it hath a safe keeper that neither slumbereth nor sleepeth; they shall not be able to destroy it: the gates of hell, and the power of the devil are set against it, but they shall never have victory over it. They may well assault this City of our God, cast their trenches against it, build Forts and Barricadoes against it, yet they shall never win it, but their losses shall be greater then their gains. Let us comfort our selves in this, that it is impossible the Church should fall, being borne up and upholden by so strong a pillar. For as when we become the enemies of God, & despise his majesty, he is able quickly to consume & confound us: so whē we be in his safe keeping, he will maintain & defend us in such sort, as the Lions & asps, the dragons & wild beasts (whereof we are most afraid) shall not be able to destroy or annoy us. Therefore the Lord speaketh, Deut. 7. Thou shalt not fear them: for the Lord thy God is among you, a God mighty and dreadful, he will root out all these enemies before thee by little and little. First he 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 willeth them not to be afraid of their enemies, and afterward he addeth the reason, because God is among them. We are all of us as in the Tabernacle and tuition of God; let us put on the shield of faith, to repulse all fear: he will not leave us, nor forsake us, so that we may boldly say, The Lord my deliverer, I will not fear what man can do unto me. Let us hold our selves to his promises, and assure our selves of his succor.

[Use. 3] Lastly, this situation of the Tabernacle serveth to conclude the full and final happiness of the faithful, which is begun in this life, but shall be consummated in the end of the world. Then will God dwell with us, and we shall dwell with him: then we shall be admitted into his presence, and never be cast out: then no evil shall touch us, or come near us, and no good thing shall be wanting unto us, that we can desire. Hereunto the Apostle alludeth, Revel. 21. I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the Tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them▪ and they shall be his people, and God himself will be their God, &c. Consider here the blessedness of that people that shall ever enjoy the immediate presence of such a God as is the fountain of all happiness. True it is, God doth dwell among his people in this life, and he is not far from everyone of them, inasmuch as they have their spiritual life and birth from him: howbeit, it doth not appear to others, nor sometimes to our selves what we shall be.

The Tabernacle of God seemeth now to be removed out of our sight, and to be set in a dark corner, where it lieth hidden. We are here subject to many temptations of sin, to many sicknesses and sorrows, to many pains and aches, to many losses & troubles, which often cause us to sigh and lament: we have not hearts of iron and steel, nor bodies of stone or oake, that cannot be touched with any feeling. We must all pass through these afflictions and tribulations, as the children of Israel passed through the red sea. But when the Lord (who is an infinite and endless treasury of all good things) shall bring us into his heavenly Tabernacle in the new Jerusalem, we shall stand in need of no good thing, we shall stand in fear of no evil thing, in both which consisteth true felicity. The old Jerusalem, though it were called the holy City, and place of God's worship, had many unclean persons dwelling in it: the Tabernacle of the Testimony, though it figured the conjunction of God with his Saints, had many profane persons resorting to it: but in the heavenly Jerusalem, and the heavenly Tabernacle (which is the Kingdom of glory) there shall be no unclean thing, there shall rest no vile person, all shall be holy and pure indeed. In them shall be no confusion, no disorder, no broils, no tumults, no turmoiles, no tempests, no sin, no sinful thing, no effect of sin. The Apostle saith, We look for a new heaven & a new earth, according to his promise, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Then we shall weep and lament no more, there shall be no more death, nor sorrow, nor pain, nor crying: y^e tears which we shed shall be wiped away: the sins which provoke God, shall be blotted out: the kingdom of the devil shall be thrown down, and the kingdom of Christ set up: death and hell shall be cast into the lake of fire, and whosoever is not written in the Book of life: long white robes shall be put upon us, we shall hunger and thirst no more, neither shall the Sun shine upon us, neither any heat come near us, For the Lamb which is in the middes of the throne shall govern them, and shall lead them unto the lively fountains of waters, &c. This is the dignity unto which we are advanced by Christ our Savior: we shall dwell with God, the great king of glory. Now we are tossed with many storms and tempests. Sometimes we are persecuted and banished from our country: sometimes we are imprisoned, and destitute of things necessary; poor, hungry, thirsty, naked, weary, cold, faint, and feeble, yea subject to a thousand mischiefs, and dangers, miseries and encombrances. In the middes of this boisterous sea of confusions, this is our comfort, that God will rid us, and release us out of them all, and bring us into the quiet haven of rest and happiness. Why then should we be cast down in our temptations, or why should we think that God hath forsaken us? We shall shortly be with the Lord, and the Lamb which taketh away the sins of the world, he will feed us with all heavenly▪ and spiritual dainties. Here we assembled together in tabernacles and Temples, and Churches for the performance of divine duties, where God vouchsafed to be present according to his promise, Where two or three are gathered together in my Name, there I am in the middes of them. There were the Sacrifices and Sacraments, there was the Law and the Gospel taught. These were worthy and notable signs of God's presence. But the heavenly Jerusalem, the mother of us all, hath neither tabernacle, nor Temple, nor material building, nor place of instruction, nor sacrifices, nor Sacraments, nor sign of the presence of God. For John describing the state of glory after this life, saith, I saw no Temple therein, for the Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb are the Temple of it: and this City hath no need of the Sun, neither of the Moon to shine in it, for the glory of God did light it, and the Lamb is the light of it. Happy are they that enter into this city, where God is the Temple, where God is the Sun, where God is the Moon, where God is all y^e light thereof, and all the glory and defense thereof. It is a glorious thing in this life, to be Kings and Princes, and to sit upon the throne of majesty: but when they shall inherit the kingdom of heaven, they shall lay down all earthly pomp and magnificence, receiving so great glory in that glorious city, that the glory which they had as kings and Princes shall vanish away, as the light of a candle at the shining of the Sun. The glory of the least of God's Saints is so excellent, that Solomon in all his glory, was never arrayed nor advanced like one of these.

The end of all this is, to teach us that we ought to be even ravished with an earnest and longing desire to dwell in this heavenly tabernacle, and to labor to have our hearts purged from an evil conscience, knowing that no unclean thing shall enter into it, neither whatsoever worketh abominations and lies. Everyone will seem desirous to dwell in the Lord's Tabernacle, and to come to heaven: but they are loath to leave their sins.

But let us not deceive our selves, neither let us sooth and flatter our selves in our evils; if we follow our ungodly ways with greediness, and will not forsake our wickedness, we shall have the door of God's kingdom shut against us.

18 The standard of the Campe of Ephraim, shall be toward the West, according to their armies: and the Captain over the sons of Ephraim, shall be Elishama, the son of Ammihud:

19 And the host and the number of them, were forty thousand, and five hundredth.

20 And by him shall be the tribe of Manasseh, and the Captain over the sons of Manasseh, shall be Gamliel the son of Pedahzur:

21 And his host and the number of them, were two and thirty thousand and two hundredth.

22 And the tribe of Benjamin, and the Captain over the sons of Benjamin, shall be Abidan the son of Gideoni:

23 And his host and the number of them, were five and thirty thousand and four hundredth.

24 All the number of the Campe of Ephraim, were an hundred and eight thousand, and one hundredth, according to their Armies, and they shall go in the third place.

We have heard before how the Tabernacle of the Congregation was placed in the midst of the host, and compassed about, both in front and flanke, standing strong in battelled in their array, ready to receive a shock, if any enemies should offer to enter upon them. In these words is laid before us the third company of this mighty Army, the principal whereof was Ephraim, and his Partizans are Manasseh and Benjamin, appointed to march under his Ensign, and to be after a sort ranged under his colors. It is not unknown to any that are meanly conversant in the holy Scriptures, that Joseph and Benjamin were the only children of Rahel, the true and beloved wife of Jacob, and that both Manasseh and Ephraim, were the children of Joseph, and that the elder was Manasseh, the younger Ephraim, who notwithstanding hath the first place of honor and preeminence assigned unto him, and Manasseh the first borne is compelled to be his underling. What could Ephraim claim above his brother, or what had Manasseh done to be put behind? It pleaseth God oftentimes to make the first last, and the last first: to thrust down the elder into the place of the younger, and to advance the younger into the seat of the elder.

This appeareth in many places of the Book of Genesis, and is so ordinary and common, as it need not to be set down. To insist only upon the present example, we read that when Joseph brought his two children before his sick father, Jacob stretched out his right hand, and laid it on Ephraim's head, and his left hand upon Manasseh's head, directing his hands of purpose, neither could be drawn to remove them, but blessed them that day, and said, In thee Israel shall bless and say, God make thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh; and he set Ephraim before Manasseh.

Thus God's judgment is oftentimes contrary to man's, and he preferreth that which man despiseth. A notable example whereof we have in Samuel, when he was sent to annoynt David King, and had the eldest son of Ishai before him, he said, Surely the Lord's anointed is before him: but the Lord said unto Samuel, Look not on his countenance, nor on the height of his stature, because I have refused him: for God seeth not as man seeth, for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord beholdeth the heart. Samuel was an holy Prophet of God, yet he faileth in binding God's grace to the ordinary course of nature. [Doctrine 5] We learn from hence, that God bestoweth his gifts freely, both when he will, and where he will, and to whom he will. He giveth as a bountiful and gracious father, the graces of election, adoption, justification, sanctification, and all other his benefits of his free love and favor. He lifteth up whom he will, he passeth by, he forsaketh, he putteth and pulleth down whom he pleaseth. Some gifts are temporal, and some eternal: some earthly, and other heavenly: and of both sorts it may be truly said, Who separateth thee? and what hast thou that thou hast not received? if thou hast received it, why rejoicest thou, as though thou hadst not received it? This is set down in the song of Hannah, The Lord maketh poor, and maketh rich: he bringeth low and exalteth: he raiseth up the poor out of the dust, & lifteth up y^e beggar from the dunghill, to set them among Princes, and to make them inherit the seat of glory. This appeareth most plainly and evidently in the gifts of God, belonging to a better life, and accompanying salvation. The free grace of god in Christ, is y^e fountain from whence saluatiō floweth, yea it is y^e beginning continuance, & ending of our salvation. The truth hereof may be made plain by y^e particular rehearsal of the several parts thereof, if we consider our election, redemption, calling, faith, justification, regeneration, love, good works, remission of sins, and perseverance in good things unto the end. No man can be saved, and obtain eternal life, except he be predestinated and elected thereunto, before the foundation of the world: for the kingdom of heaven is not given but to those to whom it is prepared of the Father, Matth. 20.23. and 25.34. But election is not of works, but of grace, and therefore is called the election of grace. This appeareth, Ephe. 1. He hath predestinated us to be adopted through Jesus Christ in himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, &c. No man could be saved, except Christ had come, and had satisfied the justice of God for the sins of the world by his precious blood; for there is no other name under heaven, whereby we must be saved, Act. 4.12. but all his benefits proceed from grace and the everlasting love of God toward us, as John. 3. God so loved the world, that he hath given his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. No man can be saved, except he be effectually called to Christ and his Gospel, outwardly by the word, and inwardly by the Spirit: but whence proceedeth this grace, but from grace? as the Apostle testifieth, 2 Tim. 1. He hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given to us through Christ Jesus, before the world was. No man can be saved, except he hath faith in Christ; for the just shall live by faith, Hab. 2.4. and without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11. But from whence have we faith? By grace, as the Apostle witnesseth, Ephe. 2. By grace ye are saved through faith, & that not of yourselves. None can be saved, except he be justified, as Psa. 34.15, 16. The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open to their cry; but the face of the Lord, that is, his anger and indignation, is against them that do evil, to cut off their remembrance from the earth. But our justification cometh from grace, as Rom. 3. We are justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. No man can be saved, except being justified by faith, he be also sanctified and renewed by the spirit of regeneration; for except a man be borne again, of water and the holy Ghost, he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven, John. 3. But whence have we this, but from the grace of God? as the Apostle expresseth, Tit. 3. The bountifulness and love of God our Savior toward man appeared, and according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of the new birth, and the renewing of the holy Ghost, which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior. No man can be saved without good works, and a careful and constant endeavor to walk in them; for we are his workmanship created in Christ Jesus, unto good works which God hath ordained that we should walk in them, Ephe. 2.10. But how are we enabled to perform them, but by the grace and free gift of God? as Ezek. 36. A new heart will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you, and I will take away the stony heart out of your body, and I will give you an heart of flesh: and I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them.

The like may be said of remission of sins. No man can be saved without continual forgiveness of sins, for into many sins and offenses we fall daily, I am, 3.2. But this is given us through his grace only, as the Prophet teacheth, Isaiah 43.1, even I am he that putteth away thine iniquities for mine own sake, that is, for no deserts of thine, but thorough grace and favor, and will not remember thy sins. and Ephe. 1.7. We have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins, according to his rich grace. Lastly, no man is saved, except he persevere and continue in faith, in love, in Christ, in repentance; in Christ, and in all good works, as Matth. 24. he that endureth unto the end, he shall be saved, and Revel. 2.10. Be thou faithful unto the death, and I will give thee the crown of life: but from what root and fountain proceedeth this gift? and from whence hath it his beginning? The Apostles and Prophets tell us most plainly and directly, as Jer. 32.39.40. I will give them one heart and one way, that they may fear me forever, I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. God that hath begun his good work in his Saints, will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. Now as we have said of all the rest, so we may say of eternal life, that it is the free gift of God, and therefore all his gifts, and our salvation, come not from our our merits, but from his mercies; not from our deservings, in whole, or in part, but from his free favor in Christ Jesus.

Let us come to the reasons, and consider [Reason 1] aright the causes hereof. First of all, God will have the praise and glory of his own works, and will not give and grant over the same to another. But if the graces of his Spirit were well deserved of us, and not freely bestowed upon us, we had matter of rejoicing in our own selves, and of boasting against God. The Apostle having shown that the righteousness of God is made manifest without the Law, saith, Where is then the rejoicing? It is excluded. And touching Abraham the father of the faithful he saith, If Abraham were justified by works, he hath wherein to rejoice, but not with God.

Likewise writing to the Ephesians, chap. 2. By grace ye are saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of GOD, not of works, lest any man should boast himself. So then he giveth all his gifts freely, that he may have the whole praise of his mercy. But so much as we take to our selves, so much he loseth of his glory.

[Reason 2] Secondly, he knoweth we have nothing of our own, we crave our daily bread and drink at his hands. We are beggars and destitute of all good things, and never are able to supply our own wants. Our own penury is such, that we have nothing to boast off, but our misery, poverty, blindness, nakedness, and wretchedness. We were (saith the Apostle) dead in trespasses and sins, wherein in times past we walked, according to the course of this world, and after the Prince that ruleth in the air, even the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. We are unable to think or to do anything: it is God must work in us the will and the deed: it is he must draw us before we can run after him, or come unto him: and without him we can do nothing, no not so much as think one good thought, or speak one good word, or practice one good work.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, he is a debtor to no man, neither can any of right challenge anything at his hands. He loved us first, and not we him: he made us, and not we our selves: he gave to us, and not we to him: we receive of him, not he of us. The Apostle saith, Who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who was his counselor? or who hath given unto him first, and he shall be recompensed? for of him, and through him, and for him are all things: to him be glory forever, Amen. Whereby we see he freely bestoweth all things, he oweth nothing of duty he offereth injury to no man, whether he grant, or withhold; whether he give little or much, liberally, or sparingly: to many, or to few. Seeing then, we are to acknowledge his glory▪ and our own poverty, and seeing he oweth nothing to any man, neither is run behind hand in arrearages, as being thereby bound to help him: it followeth that God offereth his gifts and graces freely and frankly unto us.

[Use. 1] What is now to be learned from hence? and what may be gathered for our instruction? First, it serveth to reprove the Church of Rome, that maintain the rags and relics of the old Pelagians, and refuse to have the grace of God freely bestowed upon them, lest they should be too much beholden unto him, and therefore they build the castle of man's salvation upon themselves, and lay the ground-work of it upon their own strength, and refuse to set it upon the pillar of God's grace. This appeareth in three respects, in their doctrine of foreseen works, in their doctrine of merits, and in their doctrine of man's free will to good. Thus they build the tower of Babel, that is, of confusion, and establish false causes, touching the order of man's salvation, and err grievously in the beginning, continuance, and perfection thereof. Now, that we do them no wrong at all, in charging them thus far, let us make it manifest in ever particular. The first stone of this tower they lay in such works, as (they say) serve to prepare men to justification, & so they make the foreseen faith of the elect, to be the cause of the election to grace and glory, & that God hath chosen those to eternal life, whom he foresaw would believe and persevere therein unto the end. This hangeth the whole frame of salvation upon the pin of man's faith, as the moving or procuring cause, and not upon the purpose and pleasure of him that calleth us: whereas man's salvation abideth sure and firm, stable, and certain, through him only that hath loved us, and called us to his excellent knowledge; and therefore faith foreseen, is not the cause of it. The Apostle reasoning of the cause of our election, never affirmeth it to be of him that believeth, but of him that calleth: for then it might be said to be of our selves, Ephe. 2. which cannot be. Again, if we observe the golden chain, wherein the causes of our salvation are linked together, we may strongly conclude this point. For our faith is in time after the grace of God, and therefore cannot be the cause of grace, and consequently of election. It is against all rules of right reason, that that which cometh after, should be any cause of that which goeth before. But faith is one of the effects of election, in as much as God hath chosen us, not because he knew we would believe hereafter, but to the end we should believe, that is, that he might bestow upon us faith, and so save us in his own Son, Ephe. 1.4. Tit. 1.1. Act. 13.48. We are elected, that we should be holy; and faith is said to be proper to the elect, and so many believed, as were ordained to everlasting life.

Thirdly, we are elect, as taken out of the common mass of corruption, as the sons of wrath, borne dead in sins, while we were yet enemies unto him. Now, such as God justifieth, such he also chooseth, and decreeth to justify, as Rom. 4.5. and 5.8. Unto him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness: and God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. But in the sons of wrath, and in such as are borne dead in sins, no faith at all could be foreseen: so that the foreseeing of faith could not be the cause of election. For if that which doeth come after, cannot be the cause of that which goeth before, as we have shown already: much less can that which is not at all, be the cause of that which is.

Fourthly, faith is the gift of GOD. It is given of God to us, and the work of GOD in us, John. 6.29. This is the work of GOD, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent. So the Apostle saith, Unto you it is given on the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also for to suffer for his sake, Phil. 1.29. It is he that bestoweth it, and increaseth it. Before this gift, there is nothing in us but infidelity and unbelief. As it is not in man's power to repent when he will, but when God will, Lament. 5.21. Ierem. 31. Psal. 51. Act. 11.18. 2 Tim. 2.25, 26. so it is not in man's power to believe when he will, John. 12.39, 40. albeit he have the means, though he hear the word, and partake the Sacraments; wherefore this cannot be the cause of God's election, as if he were moved to elect us by that as by a cause, which he bestoweth upon us, after we are elected: for then the same thing should be the cause of it self, and before it self, which is against natural sense, right reason, and true religion.

Lastly, if faith foreseen were the cause of election, then infidelity foreseen should also be the cause of reprobation: but this is false because then all mankind should be reprobated and rejected, forasmuch as the whole mass of mankind is corrupt, and God could foresee nothing in it, but incredulity and unbelief. Thus we see, that our election dependeth not upon our own works, or our own faith, or anything in our selves, but on the mercy & love of God; there was no cause in us to move him. For if anything had been in us, we might be said to have the first stroke in our salvation, & to lay the first stone in that building, and God should come after us, or behind us. True it is, he hath determined to elect us, and to save us of his good pleasure, but he will bring it to pass by means, to wit, by the merits of Christ, by calling of us, by giving of us faith, by justifying of us, by sanctifying of us, and by working in us such like effect.

Secondly, this doctrine overthroweth all merits and deserts of man, which abolish the free grace of God. God's mercy is our merit; our works are not, neither can be our merit. If our election be by grace, then it is no more of works, otherwise grace is no more grace: But if it be of works, then is it no more grace, otherwise work were no more work, as the Apostle concludeth, Rom. 11.6. We are justified through faith in Christ: in him standeth our salvation, and by his merits we are made righteous. Christ Jesus is the corner stone of the building, Ephes. 2. he is the foundation of the building forasmuch as other foundation none can lay, 1 Cor. 3. he is also the highest stone of the building, notwithstanding the mountains, that is; the strongest opposition of enemies. But let us see what merit is, that our understanding may be the better, and our judgment the sounder touching this matter. Merit is a work undue, to which we are not bound, making the reward and recompense that was not due to be due. When a debtor satisfieth his creditour, he payeth that which he oweth him, he giveth no more then is due unto him by Law and equity, by reason and conscience: neither doth he deserve any thanks, but through the fault of men, as the heathen knew well enough, who confess that such was the corruption of the times, that when a man brought to another, even his own, he was to be thanked. Christ our Savior, a better master, teacheth us this more fully, Luk. 17.8. When a man hath a servant, who girdeth himself, and serveth him till he have eaten and drunken, Doth he then thank him because he hath done the things that were commanded him? I trow, nay; so likewise ye when ye have done all those things that are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants, we have done that which was our duty to do. Wherefore, we make a weak plea to plead our own merits, who have nothing but by the merits of Christ. But it will be objected, [Objection.] that we find in Scripture no mention at all of the merits of Christ. I answer, [Answer.] It is true concerning the word it self. Nevertheless, if they will conclude anything against the merits of Christ, because the bare name in so many letters and syllables, is not extant in the word of God, they may as well gainsay the Trinity, refuse the Sacraments, deny the Catholic Church, and hold the Son not to be consubstantiall with the Father; Forasmuch as none of these are expressed there. But if they mean, and understand the thing it self, then we have the merits of Christ plentifully preached unto us in the holy Scripture, to whom the whole work of our salvation is ascribed. The Apostle teacheth, that our redemption is a possession purchased by him, that is, purchased by the merit of his death. And in the former Epistle to the Thessalonians, he saith, God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, that is, procured unto us by his merits. So in the twentieth chapter of the Acts, Paul, in his exhortation to the Elders of Ephesus, willeth them carefully to feed the flock of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood: where he maketh the blood of Christ meritorious. And elsewhere he saith, we are justified by his blood, and reconciled to God by his Son, and so shall be saved by his life, Rom. 5.9, 10. If then we challenge anything to our selves, we take so much from Christ's worthiness. He was not bound in any bond unto us, who, being in the form of God, thought it no robbery to be equal to God. Wherefore, our works can challenge nothing at God's hands, for as much as whatsoever we can do, is as due debt unto him. Thus the Apostle speaketh, Rom.

8. Brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh; whereby he understandeth the contrary, as a member opposed; but we are debtors to the Spirit, to live after the Spirit.

So then our spiritual life, is called a debt, which is true in many respects. First, in regard of our creation: Secondly, in regard of our redemption: Thirdly, in regard of our glorification. Our spiritual life is due to God in regard of our creation, because it is God that hath made us, and not we our selves: we are the work of his hands, who hath created us according to his image, and thereby bound us; as by a strong band to know him, and worship him. Hence it appeareth, that Adam himself in his estate of innocence, could have claimed nothing of God by merit, because whatsoever he was, he was it by him; & whatsoever he had, he had received it through his gift, so that he should have paid him with his own, which deserveth no thanks, as we heard before. True it is, man fell away, defaced and deformed this image, and made himself liable to eternal destruction: howbeit, he could not thus shake off the yoke of his neck, nor the fetters from his feet, nor acquit himself of the debt and obligation, when of a debtor to God, he made himself a bondslave to the devil. A debtor riotously wasting his goods, and carelessly consuming the stock and substance that he hath, and thereby making himself a bankrupt, is not discharged of his debt, but standeth bound to pay it as before. God will not loose his right, nor let go his hold, and therefore, albeit we are started back from him, he remaineth the same; & as he made us, so we remain obliged unto him. Hence we see, what is the reason, why God commandeth duties of us in his Law, that neither we, nor our fathers are able to perform.

If a father should require that of his son, or a master exact of his servant that which were impossible to do, as to travel an hundred thousand mile in one day, or to fly up to heaven, might he not be thought to be a tyrant? But the case standeth not between God and us, as between a father and his children, or between a master and his servants. For he chargeth no more upon us, then he had enabled us to do, and had given us strength to perform, so that if there be any impossibility to do it, the fault resteth in our selves, and not in God. It is no cruelty in him to require so much of us as he doth, but iniquity in us that doth disable us. He abideth the same that he was, but we abide not the same that we were: so that there is no change in him, but the change is in us: so that where he had graciously bestowed much, he may justly require the more. Again, our spiritual life is a debt, and our works due to him in regard of our redemption, justification, and sanctification; in consideration of all, the which we owe our selves wholly unto God, and he in justice may require all the service that we can possibly perform unto him. A servant bought with money and redeemed out of bondage, is a debtor to his master, and is wholly at his commandment, because he oweth to him his life, his liberty, and all that he hath. How much more then must we consider our selves to be wholly the Lord's, to serve him in holiness and righteousness all the days of our lives, being redeemed from the bondage of sin and slavery of Satan, not with silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ, as a Lamb unspotted and undefiled, 1 Pet. 1. Neither were we once only made free men, but moreover are laden with many benefits by this our Savior and redeemer, being regenerated with his Spirit, to walk before him in newness of life. So that our unthankfulness is exceeding great, if forgetting the greatness of our deliverance; we return to our vomit again, as dogs, and lie wallowing in the mire as filthy swine.

Lastly, in regard of the benefits to come, which by the Spirit of Christ, we do certainly expect and look for, to wit, our resurrection of the body, and glorification in the heavens.

These being exceeding blessings, do make us infinite debtors unto God. Hence we learn to detest the heresy of Popish hypocrites, that dare boast of the merits of the Saints, and of works of supererogation, an evident argument of intolerable proud spirits. For debt and merit are quite contrary; they are so opposite the one to the other, that the first being established, it overthroweth the second, as Rom. 4.4, 5. To him that worketh, is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt: but to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness.

If then our whole life be a debt of the Spirit, it must of necessity be false, that there is any meriting of life and salvation by any works, either of congruity, or condignity, or supererogation. For whatsoever it pleaseth them to prate of merits, either publicly, or privately to their disciples, dare any of them when they are ready to go the way of all flesh, and must be presented before the eternal judge, dare any of them, I say, desire of God to give them according to their merits? dare any in the pride of his heart so exalt and lift up himself, as to pray, Lord, I am worthy of thy mercy, I have deserved thy kingdom, pay me that thou owest unto me, I desire nothing at thy hands gratis, or freely, my works are truly and properly meritorious, I have a right to heaven, and deserve it worthily? I expect not eternal life as an alms, but as a price due unto my labors, I am content thou enter into judgment with me, for I have righteousness in mine own person, and therefore I crave not be accepted in thy beloved, but in myself. Lord, thou hast made me able to merit heaven for myself, and therefore repay me according to my worth.

I think none of them are come to this presumption, to plead for themselves with God, & therefore whatsoever they write, whatsoever they speak, whatsoever they resolve and determine in their schools and pulpits, they deny it, & renounce it wholly at the point of death, & with their own mouths condemn their own folly. In their life they talk of merits, but at their death they are glad to call for mercy: & so by their own practice prove and confirm the truth of the doctrine of the Protestants, howsoever against the light of their own consciences they oppose themselves flatly as enemies unto it. The debt of the creature, even of the man regenerate, is greater then he is able to pay the thousandth part; nay the more he payeth, the more he oweth; and is bound to pay, forasmuch as the benefits of God do daily grow and increase toward him, and abound in a wonderful measure, that they augment the debt, & strengthen y^e obligation. Neither can they escape and avoid the force of this, [Objection.] by a frivolous and false distinction, that our works are not indeed meritorious in the rigor of Justice, or absolutely considered in themselves, but that they are so by the ordinance and acceptation of God. [Answer.] For albeit God accept of our works, and reward them even to a cup of cold water, Mat. 10. yet he accepteth them not as merits, but as the due obedience of his sons, which he recompenseth freely and fully, because he that cannot lie or deceive, hath promised the reward. Neither is it the ordinance of God, that we should merit by our obedience, but that we should perform the worship and honor that is due unto him, Tit. 3.4. Act. 15. Let them therefore show us, where God hath made any such promise unto us to accept our works as merits, and we will believe them. The Lord gave the Israelites the land of Canaan, not for their works, but for his own love, and mercy. If they could not merit the earthly Canaan, how should any deserve the heavenly? We are taught to pray to GOD to give us our daily bread. If we cannot merit the food of this life, no not one morsel of bread, but must crave it of him as poor beggars do an alms, at the doors of men: much less can we merit everlasting life, which is the gift of God, Rom. 6.23. For what is a bit of bread in comparison of the kingdom of heaven? or what is the food of the body, in respect of the food of the soul? Lastly, this doctrine destroyeth another bulwark of the Church of Rome, whereby they set up man's nature, and that is free will, teaching that there is a cooperation of man's free will, with God's free grace in the first act of our conversion. A doctrine full of pride and folly, as well as the former, for as much as this is to part stakes between God and our selves, and to divide our conversion between him and us, and consequently to ascribe as much to man as to God. Christ saith, that without him we can do nothing, we cannot come unto him, except the Father draw us, John. 6. It is God that doth work in us the will and the deed, saith the Apostle. We are all by nature corrupt, there is no part sound in us, or without us. We are not only as crazy or sick, but as dead men. God doth all, and we nothing in good things. He preventeth us with his grace, he prepareth us by his word, he enclineth us by his Spirit, and worketh both the beginning and the ending of our Salvation. Wherefore the Church of Rome is deceived, that make us to be as the man that fell among thieves who left him wounded and half dead. We are fallen into the hands of a more cruel and bloody tyrant, who left us not half dead, but hath taken away life from us, and brought us under the dominion of death. We teach that we are able to do no good; we have stony hearts, and are strangers from the promises of God. They divide our goodness between God and man, as when an horse is hardly able to draw a Coach, another cometh, who being coupled with him, do work and walk together: so as that which one could not do alone, he is able being helped by another, who by their joint labours stir it forward. True it is, to use means to obtain faith and repentance, is in our own power after a sort. A man may go from place to place, enter into the house of God, or not enter, hear the word or not hear, meditate upon it, or not meditate; as it is said of Herod an unregenerate man, Mar. 6. that he heard John gladly when he preached the word. This therefore is left unto us, and put as it were into our hands to make us without excuse, and to teach us to condemn our selves and not God. How many are there that are ready to lay the fault of their infidelity upon God, because (they say) he giveth them not faith, so that it is not in their power to believe? But why do they not that which is in their own power? True it is, God is not bound to give faith to any, or to turn his heart. The cause of infidelity is in himself. Nevertheless, God hath not left himself without witness, nor man without excuse. He carrieth a judge in his own bosom, that shall be able to convince him.

For why do not men that which they are enabled to do? why do they not attend to his word, as to his ordinance? why do they not make conscience of absenting themselves from the preaching of it? They may come if they will, but they will not. They excuse themselves as the guests in the Gospel: they have ears to hear, but they regard not: they have feet to carry them into the Church, but they are slow to this duty, and swift rather to any other: they have eyes to read the Scripture, yet they seldom or never read it: they have hearts to meditate on the word, but they think upon nothing less. Therefore all these outward helps shall be sufficient witnesses against them

Now then, albeit we may perform such duties before remembered touching the means of our salvation, yet to assent to the word by faith, that thereby we may be converted, enlightened, called, and regenerated to eternal life, is in the hand of God only, and cannot be performed of us.

[Use. 2] Secondly, seeing God's gifts are freely given by him, it is our duty to depend upon him, and to ask them at his hands when we want them. We learn to whom to go, and what way to enter that we may obtain thē. We all stand in need of his help for our souls and bodies. In the soul is ignorance, presumption, blindness, and hardness of heart: pray to him to remove these evils, and as it were to pluck these noisome & loathsome weeds out of our gardens by the roots. If we think our selves able to do it, we deceive our selves. If we feel the burden of our sins to press us, and to lie heavy and hard upon our souls, we must go to him that hath borne them in his body, and is able to take them away. He calleth such unto him as are weary and heavy laden, with promise and purpose to ease them. If we want anything for our body, he that is the Creator of the body will not suffer us to pine away, he will not leave us and forsake us. Let us not trust to our own labors, nor riches, nor abundance, as the rich man did in the Gospel, Luk, 12: considering that no man's life consisteth in the multitude of his riches. Hence it is, that our Savior willeth us to ask, and we shall receive: to seek, and we shall find, Math. 7. If we suppose we may attain unto his blessings any other way then by prayer, we are altogether ignorant of the way that leadeth to his Treasury. For, Except the Lord keep the City, the watchman waketh but in vain: & except he build the house, they labor in vain that are the builders of it, Psal. 127, 1. It is in vain for us to rise up early, and to sit up late, and to eat the bread of sorrows, which worldly men take to be the only means to thrive: it is the blessing of GOD upon the hand of the diligent that maketh rich. Let us therefore season and sanctify the works of our hands & the labors of our callings, that so we may have comfort and find rest in this troublesome sea. This will make our labors sweet and pleasant, when we get our living in the sweat of our brows. Besides, when we find any defect of grace in us, or any weakness in spiritual things, as all the faithful do more or less, let us come to him that giveth freely and liberally, and reproacheth no man. He it is that will supply our wants, and increase his gifts in us. This coming unto him for all needful graces, hath many branches that belong unto it, which Christ pointeth unto, Math: 13: when he saith, The kingdom of heaven is like unto a treasure hid in the field, which when a man hath found, he hideth it, and for joy thereof departeth, and selleth all that he hath, and buieth that field. If we will attain unto grace, we must depart with somewhat, we must sell all that we have. That which is our own is sin; but we are loath to leave it and depart from it. It cleaveth fast to the ribs, & sticketh fast in the bones, that it will hardly out of the flesh. We delight in it, we make much of it, we are wholly addicted to it. It may seem a strange speech, that we are said to sell all that we have, and buy that we have not. For what have we to sell unto God? or what can we give unto him? or what are we able to buy at his hands? Our selling of all, is our parting or departing from our sins; our leaving of them, our renouncing of them, so that we are determined to keep them no longer. As it is in bargains and purchases between party and party, whosoever buyeth anything, giveth and taketh; he parteth with somewhat, and receiveth somewhat by exchange: so must it be between Christ and us in this spiritual bargain and sale. We leave that which is evil, we receive that which is good. There is no man that selleth one sin for naught, he hath his reward a thousand fold, because he selleth it to Christ, the best rewarder. All men are content here to sell to him that will give most. Christ is the best chapman, the best buyer, he giveth eternal salvation to us. To draw us from our sins, that do us the greatest hurt, and bring infinite danger upon soul and body, he offereth to recompense us an hundred fold more for withdrawing our hearts from our sins, then the world can reward us for the using of them. Art thou not steadfast in religion, but as a reed shaken with the wind, sometimes carried one way, and sometimes inclined another way? Sell this thy doubting and wavering unto Christ, be no longer unstable & unsettled, and he will give thee constancy to continue unto the end, and will strengthen that which he hath wrought in thee. Art thou puffed up with pride in apparel? Sell this corruption, and he will garnish thee with better garments; he will clothe thee with his innocence and righteousness, that the filthiness of thy nakedness shall not appear. Art thou poor and needy? Christ saith unto thee, The Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head; Wilt thou provide for thy children & thy household? David saith, I was young and now am old, yet I have not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread, Psal. 37, 25. Now in this selling of our sins, and parting from them, we must observe these particulars.

First, that it must not be for a short time or for a season, but forever. We must not sell our sins for a season only, but renounce all right, title, interest, and propriety in them; we must depart from them with a full purpose and resolution never to take them up again, never to practice them anymore. To sell anything, is to alienate the property of it from our selves. Blessed are all such sellers. In this point therefore we must not be lenders, as they that challenge the right of being owners, but quite and clean put from our selves all title to our former sins. Many indeed lay them down for a time, as hypocrites do, wiping their mouths with the harlot, and returning to their vomit with the dog, or to their wallowing in the mire, with the swine. Thus it fareth with such as come to the word and Sacraments of God, with profane and unreformed hearts. They seem godly while they are in the Church; but their righteousness is but as the morning dew, they hang down their heads as a bulrush for a time, & afterward they are as bad or worse then they were before. This is nothing in the sight of GOD, except we utterly forsake our sins. True it is, the faithful and godly man may fall into some sins which they have forsaken, as Abraham did in denying his wife, but they must do it, as strangers to it, not as owners of it, for it is none of theirs, they have given over the use of it, and the right unto it. It is the man that is unregenerate, he may lay lawful claim unto it: as for us, it is no more ours, then the house that we have sold, and so alienated it from us.

Secondly, there is another kind of sale that is faulty and deceitful, which is, when we are content to sell some of our sins, but we will not sell all of them. Some there are so covetous, that they will part from nothing, they will sell nothing: Though they be never so well offered, they are so in love with their own faults and folly, that they will keep them still, albeit to their infinite hindrance & loss, even the loss of their souls. Others are content to lend their sins, but they will not leave them: they are willing to abstain from them for a time, but they will not renounce them forever. These are like the Israelites, who albeit they were brought with a strong hand out of Egypt, yet they had a mind to return thither again, they thought upon the fish which they did eat there, and remembered the Cucumbers and the Melons, the Leekes, the Onions, and the Garlicke; these they lusted after with all their soul. Or as Lots wife being delivered out of Sodom, as a firebrand out of the burning, or as two legs, or a piece of an ear out of the mouth of the Lyon, Amos 3, 12, and 4, 11: even a little remnant out of the common destruction of the City: she looked back again toward Sodom, and had her mind there upon such things as she had left behind: which showeth she had not sold all, but as he that lendeth his goods looketh for them again, so would she fain return to those things that yet she retained in her heart. If the case be better with us, and that our righteousness exceed these, yet let us not flatter our selves, and deceive our own souls, forasmuch as we must go farther, and step many degrees beyond them. For albeit we can be content to sell, and to sell forever, yet there is more required of us, so that we may say with Christ, One thing is wanting, we must sell all, and must keep back nothing. We must not sell as Ananias & Sapphira did, they kept back part of the price: so many make sale, but they are deceitful Merchants, they will not pass all, but leave out somewhat in the bargain. So do many deal doubly with God, they desire to forgo their sins, but they will keep somewhat. But he cannot be mocked or cousened of us. We must renounce our sweet sins & our profitable sins, with all the appurtenances and dependencies unto them. We must abstain from all appearance of evil. We must pull up these weeds by the roots, that they grow not in the gardens of our heart again. God will have all that is ours left, or else he accounteth nothing truly left. Herod was content to hear John, to fear him, to reverence him, to do many things that he required, and to reform many evils that he reprov'd, and himself had practiced, but when he told him, he must not marry his brothers wife, he stopped his ears and would not hear, he was determined to keep that one sin. The hypocrites in Micah are ready to come before the Lord, and to bow themselves before the most high, to offer Rivers of oil and the fruit of their body for the sin of their soul: nevertheless the Prophet telleth them that God liketh not of this bargain, inasmuch as he requireth of them to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with their God. We are like unto the young man mentioned in the Gospel, whom Christ is said to have loved, When he was bidden to sell all that he had, he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved. When Moses was come to age, he refused to be called the son of Pharaohs daughter, and chose rather to suffer adversity with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season: but we would be content to serve Pharaoh and God also: to join our selves to the Church, and yet to be friends with the world: to live in the Spirit, and yet to follow the delights of the flesh together. The Apostle accounted all things as loss, and esteemed them as dung, that he might win Christ, Phil. 3, 8. Wherefore let us follow his steps, and be able to say with the Apostles, Loe, we have left all, and have followed thee, Mar. 10, 28. If then we make show of selling all our sins, and retain any part or parcel of them unto our selves, it shall do us no more good, then it did Ananias & Sapphira to sell their possession, and to keep back part of the price, which kindled such a fire, as that it consumed them both.

Thirdly, there is another error in the sale of our sins, when we exchange sin for sin. These men sell one sin to buy another, which is a base and beastly kind of merchandize, & a carnal and corrupt trading, which God never accepteth or commendeth. It is no true repentance to turn from one sin unto another, as unruly beasts that break out of one ground into another. True repentance is a turning of the heart from all sin. The repentance of one sin truly, bringeth with it the repentance of all known sins.

Whosoever forsaketh riotousnesse of life, & betaketh himself to covetousness, changeth his sin, but not his heart: as he that is vexed with one kind of fever, by disordering of himself turneth that into another, into a worse feauer. Such a man getteth not health, but altereth the disease. So is it in the diseases of the soul, we chop and change with God, we run out of one evil into another. When we are escaped out of one snare of Satan, he is ready to catch us with another. When we are plunged out of the gulf of despair, wherein we stick fast as in a deep pit of mire and clay, he faileth not to tempt us unto presumption, and to carry us aloft in his arms, that he may give us the greater downfall. Hence it is, that Christ our Savior willeth us daily to pray unto the Father, that we may not be led into temptation, but be delivered from evil. For he is an enemy that never resteth, but seeketh as a roaring Lyon whom he may devour. If he cannot keep us in superstition he will draw us to profaneness. If he cannot hold us in the ways of the Gentiles, he will make us lead our lives as loose and licentious Christians. If he cannot deceive us to believe there are many God's, he will tempt us to think that there is no God, no hell, no heaven: This is to pass from one extreme to another, as it were from drunkenness to thirst: whereas true repentance is a changing of the mind, going out of one extreme into the mean, in which we ought continually to continue. And thus we do sell all that we have, all that is ours: howbeit this is not enough: for we must also buy this pearl and treasure, that it may be made ours, which otherwise is not ours. To this are required these three things: First, we must hunger and thirst after it. Secondly, we must receive and retain it. Thirdly, we must grow strong by it, and steadfast in it. Touching the first, we must know that there must be in us a spiritual appetite, that our hungry and thirsty souls may be refreshed by the holy ordinances of God. We must come unto Christ the fountain of all grace; if we be athirst, he will not send us away empty. Indeed we ought to have a feeling of our own misery, but this must always be joined with a desire to drink of his mercy. The knowledge of our own wants must go before, but the feeling of his goodness must follow after. Hence it is, that the Apostle Peter saith, Desire the sincere milk of the word, but he addeth this condition, If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious. Secondly, it is our duty to receive & retain that which we have bought, and not suffer it through carelessness and negligence to slip from us. The wise-man exhorteth us to buy the truth, but not to sell it. We have liberty given us at our own discretion to chaffer and change for temporal commodities, we may buy and sell, we may sell and buy, we may let go from us or purchase unto us: but we must take heed we do not so with heavenly things, they are of another nature. When we have sold for gain an earthly thing, we may buy it again at our pleasure or leisure: but if we forgo heavenly wisdom and riches, it may be we shall never get it again, we are in danger to leave it and lose it forever. Wherefore Christ our Savior speaketh to y^e church in Thyatira, w^{ch}▪ we ought all to hear and receive as a commandment given unto us; Hold fast till I come. We see how hand-fast worldly men are in the things of this life, they will by no means let them go, nor suffer them to be wrung and wrested from them. O that we would do the like in better things; when we have gotten true religion in our hearts, and planted the fear of God in them, as it were in the doors of our houses: O that we would deny and defy whatsoever goeth about to pluck it & convey it from us. If the world, or the flesh, or the Devil, our three mortal enemies shall assault us, to hold us in their snares, let us break their bands, & cast them to the ground, and tread them as dung under our feet. Lastly, it is our special duty to increase daily in grace, and to grow strong in it, as men that go from strength to strength. It is the exhortation of Paul to Timothy his son, that he should be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus, 2 Tim. 2, 1. writing to the Philippians, he stirreth them up to stand fast in the Lord, Phil. 4, 1. He warneth the Ephesians to be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, Eph. 6, 10. He admonisheth the Corinthians, to stand fast in the faith, to quite them like men, and to be strong, 1 Corin 16, 13. The Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, prayeth for them, that the GOD of peace would make them perfect in every good work to do his will, working in them that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, Hebr. 13, 21. It is a good thing that the heart be stablished with grace, Heb. 13, 9: and that we be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we are all well assured that our labor is not in vain in the Lord, 1 Cor. 15, 58. We must have our hearts settled and constant in good things, that we be not as children, carried about with every vanity. We must be resolute in the truth, and stand, having our loins girt about with the truth, and having on the breast-plate of righteousness, &c. As we grow in age, so let us grow in grace: and as every year addeth to our life, so let it add to our faith. If we stand at a stay, we shall never come to the ende of our race: but if we grow in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, we shall receive the ende of our faith, which is the salvation of our souls.

Thirdly, we learn to confess from whence [Use. 3] we have received life temporal, spiritual, and eternal, one following another, and all begun in this life and to acknowledge our thankfulness to God for these his blessings. The temporal is common to us with the wicked, but the other two, to wit, the spiritual and eternal life are proper to the elect, and make them Citizens of the kingdom of heaven. Hence it is, that the Prophet saith, Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities, who healeth all thy diseases: who redeemeth thy life from destruction, who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercies. He respecteth not what we are, or what we are worthy of, but as he loved us before we were, which argueth the bottomless sea of his grace toward us, so he never ceaseth to follow us with his mercy, & to add love to his love, always preventing us with his liberal blessings. True it is, the gifts of God are great toward us in regard of temporal things, which are of the least and lowest nature, forasmuch as in him we live, & move, and have our being: he blesseth us, he keepeth us, he preserveth us, he defendeth us, and suffereth nothing to do us hurt: but besides these, he giveth us to believe, he calleth us to the knowledge of his truth, he justifieth us, he sanctifieth us, he redeemeth us, he establisheth us that we shall never be removed; and all these are freely and frankly bestowed upon us, not purchased by us. Howbeit, we shall never understand the foundation of God's mercy, nor learn the height, the breadth, and bottom of his love, until we come to behold and consider our free election and salvation to be merely by his grace. And if once we come to the understanding hereof, it will be most forcible above all the former reasons to move us to magnify his goodness, and to give up our selves wholly to him, and consecrate all that is in us to his glory. Indeed this consideration y^t we have received life & health, and peace, and liberty, & all things belonging unto them (if we had no farther cause) ought to move us to thankfulness & obedience: but this layeth the groundworke, and reacheth to the top of all, that he loved us before the world was, and therefore we must love him again, extol his praise, confess his Name, and fear to offend him, and serve him in righteousness and true holiness all the days of our life. This is the beginning and as it wer the first step to true humility; it is a forcible weapon to strike down all pride and presumption, and to give them their deaths wound: it stoppeth the mouths of arrogant men, who would gladly sacrifice to their own nets, and build their salvation upon themselves. Therefore the Prophet saith in the Name of the Lord, I will establish my Covenant with thee, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord: that thou mayest remember and be confounded, and never open thy mouth anymore, because of thy shame, when I am pacified toward thee, for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord God. He will have no flesh to rejoice in it self: he will have the whole glory of our salvation: he saw us polluted in our own blood: he found us cast out into the open field, to the contempt and loathing of our person: he set his love toward us, and spread his skirt over us, and covered our nakedness, and said unto us when we were in our blood, Live, to the end we should challenge no part of his work to our selves. Vnderdesued love is a great binder. There is no love comparable to this love, which began before we began, and shall live when we are dead and buried. Our salvation having so sure a foundation, is more firm then the frame of heaven and earth: whereas if it were built upon our selves, and committed unto our selves to be kept, alas, it would quickly fall down as a ruinous Palace, or a tottring wall, and we could have no certainty or assurance of it, yea, albeit we were renewed to our first innocence, as appeareth in Adam, who fell in the garden, as the Angels themselves had done before that were in heaven. But seeing it is hid with God and put into his hands as a faithful Creator, no creature shall be able to take it from us, as no creature could give salvation unto us. So then, it behooveth us to give him praise for beginning his work in us, for the continuance of it in us, and to crave of him the full & perfect finishing of it unto the day of JESUS CHRIST.

Fourthly, this putteth us in mind to use [Use. 4] all meekness and moderation toward others that are not yet called to the knowledge of the truth, but wander as blind men that cannot find the way. For seeing our calling and conversion, and every good gift is of God's grace, it showeth that there is no difference between them and us by nature, but by grace; we have nothing of our selves, being as far from heaven as the most profane, but all is of God's good pleasure. We are all equal and no way better: we are all the children of wrath, as well as others. It is a true saying, that there are many sheep without, and many wolves within. We see this in the examples of the Gentiles, of Manasseh, of Mary Magdalene, of Paul, & many others, of whom we shall speak afterward. The Church of the Jews confess, that they had a little Sister which had no breasts: and Christ himself teacheth, he hath other sheep which are not of this fold, whom also he must bring home, & they should hear his voice, so that there should be one fold, and one Shepherd, John 10, 16. Thus it should come to pass, when the time appointed was come, that GOD would enlarge Japheth, that he should dwell in the tents of Shem, Gen. 9, 17. This use hath many branches, as a fruitful Tree that spreadeth it self many ways.

First, it belongeth unto us to pity them that go astray, & to bewail their ignorance. What grief doth it move, and how great cōpassion doth it work in us by the instinct of nature, to see a man blind, or dumb, or deaf, or in any misery and necessity? But this is the condition of all unregenerate persons, they are blind and see nothing, 2 Pet. 1. They are dumb, and deaf, and dead men, Eph. 2, 1. They have not the life of God in them, they can stir neither hand nor foot toward the kingdom of heaven.

Secondly, if any of our brethren be fallen, let us put under our hand to stay them or raise them up, knowing that it is our duty to exhort one another, lest we be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin; and so much the rather let us be careful herein, because the day of the Lord draweth near. If the Ox or Ass of our enemy be ready to lie down under his burden, we are commanded to help him up: and therefore much more we ought to do it unto our brother.

Thirdly, we must condemn no man rashly, nor sit down in the seat of God to judge another man's servant, which standeth or falleth to his own master. Let us set before us the example of God, who is very pitiful and merciful. He calleth at all hours, who hath the times and seasons in his own power, Math. 20, 6. Acts 1, 7. as the householder that hired laborers into his Vineyard all the day long, even unto the last hour. Besides, we are warned not to judge, lest we be judged, Math. 7, 1. So that with what measure we mete to others, with the same it shall be measured to us again. Let us beware of rash judgment, & headstrong and headlong affections. Let us judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts, 1 Cor. 4, 5. Many things are hidden for a while, which time shall discover: for though the darkness of the night may cover them, or the ignorance and willfulness of man hide them, yet they shall be revealed, and shall not be unpunished.

Lastly, it is our duty to pray for their conversion that are not converted, and to offer them the means that they may be converted. We must be gentle unto all men, and patient toward them, instructing them with meekness that are contrary minded, proving whether God will give them repentance, that they may be recovered out of the snare of the Devil, 2 Tim. 2, 25. We see how Christ prayed for his enemies, that they might have their ignorance pardoned, Luc. 23, 34. Stephen desired that the sins of his persecutors might not be charged upon them, Acts 7, 60. Paul earnestly wished & craved that Agrippa might be converted, and altogether be made a Christian, Act. 26, 29. Hence it is, that many which persecuted Christ, and crucified the Lord of glory, though they were most horrible transgressors, yet heard the word, were pricked in their hearts, and did lay hold on eternal life, Acts 2, 41, 37. Let us commit the success evermore unto God, that hath the hearts of all men in his own hand. If notwithstanding the word of salvation offered unto them, they shut their eyes, and stop their ears, & harden their hearts, & will not turn, lest they should be saved; let us not be curious to search the causes why they do not believe, or expostulate the matter with them through impatience, but rather leave them to the mercy or justice of GOD, whose judgments are unsearchable, and as a pit whose bottom cannot be sounded: and give unto him humble thanks that hath opened our ears, that we may hear, & our eyes, that we may see clearly into the secrets of his Law. Let us praise him for revealing his truth to us, rather than enquire why he dealeth not so with all others.

Lastly, seeing the gifts of God are freely [Use. 5] bestowed, let us follow the example of our heavenly Father, that is, let us give freely and liberally, and be content to lend to the poor, looking for nothing again, according to the counsel of Christ our Savior. God looketh for no good turn at our hands, our well-doing cannot extend unto him, Psal. 16. He standeth not in need of our help, he wanteth nothing. This use is concluded in the latter end of the fifth chapter of S. Matthews Gospel, where Christ exhorteth to love our enemies, & to do good to them that hate us, &c: That we may be the children of our Father which is in Heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust, &c. We are commanded to abound in this grace of liberality toward the poor members of Christ, as GOD hath abounded in the fruits of love toward us. We are not ignorant of Christ's dealing toward us, that though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich, 2 Cor. 8, 9. Our abundance must supply the want of others, that there may be an holy kind of equality, as it was among them that gathered Manna, He that had gathered much, had nothing over: and he that had gathered little, had no lack. Hence it is, that the Apostle James saith, He shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shown no mercy, and mercy rejoiceth against judgment. Whosoever therefore hath this worlds good, and seeth his brother in need, how dwelleth the love of God in that man, if he shut up his bowels of compassion from him? 1 John 3, 17. We see this in the example of the rich man in the Gospel; he had occasion of showing mercy offered unto him, poor Lazarus lay at his gate; but he closed his eyes and would not see him; he shut up his heart and would not relieve him: and therefore it came to pass that as he denied the crumbs that fell from his table, a small alms: so he could not obtain a drop of water, a small refreshing. As he stopped his ears, and would not hear, so he asked only to have the tippe of the finger dipped in water to cool his tongue, and yet could not be heard. When the Sodomites had once filled up the measure of their sins by pride in themselves, & contempt of the poor, God rained down storms and tempests of fire and brimstone, so that they were utterly consumed, Ezek. 16, 49. Gen. 19, 24. Hence it is that Christ our Savior saith, Make to yourselves friends of unrighteous, mammon, that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations, Lu. 16, 9. He meaneth not by the Mammon of unrighteousness, such riches as are wrongfully and unjustly gotten; for GOD accepteth not such alms or gifts at our hands, neither is he well pleased with such sacrifices, though we give them to the poor, and should relieve thereby the necessities of the Saints: but he calleth them so and giveth them that title, because they may fraudulently, wickedly, and wrongfully be taken from us: so that it containeth the force of a reason, why we ought not niggardly and sparingly to hoard them and heap them up to our selves, forasmuch as we may be robbed of them by the unfaithfulness of servants, by the violence of thieves, by the cunning of forgers, by the force of oppressers, by the deceitfulness of borrowers, by the vnconsciableness of sellers, by the covetousness of Land-Lord's,, by the biting of userers, by the falsifying of measures and weights, by the couzening of bankrouths, and by such like instruments of injustice. The things of this life are all uncertain, we may return to the earth and leave them, or they take their wings and fly up to heaven, and leave us. True it is, we are not to give hand over head without discretion and difference, neither to maintain strong and sturdy beggars, neither idle and loitering persons, that are able▪ to labor and will not: but wear to consider the wants of such poor as are diligent in their places, especially the poor Saints, and those that are of the household of faith. The alms of Cornelius did ascend up in remembrance before God, Acts 10, 4. Tabitha is commended to be full of good works, and alms deeds which she did, so that the widows shown unto Peter the coats and garments which she made while she was with them, Acts 9, 36. And howsoever this be a sacrifice well pleasing unto God, sweet in his nostrils as incense, yet it is unpleasant and unsavory to many men, so that they shun it, and take no delight in it. Hence it is, that they have many shifts to put it off, and are wise to invent and allege many reasons to spare their purses. Some say for themselves, Alas, I am [Object. 1] poor and have but a little, and therefore how should I give relief unto others? I answer, we must remember the poor widows mite, [Answer.] she had but little, and yet is commended, that she cast it into the Treasury, Luc. 21, 4. If we have but an handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse, Elijah must have part of it, and be relieved with it, 1 Kings 17, 12. All that do not receive, should give. The man that getteth his living by his labor, and the servant that earneth wages, should lay up somewhat for the poor. Such as are married and keep houses, and have a family of their own, for which they are to provide, have many ways of employment for their money, and many charges lie heavy upon them both of Church and Common-wealth, besides the care of house-keeping and bringing up their children: the servant hath none of these burdens lying upon him, he hath none to maintain but himself, and therefore he may better spare somewhat for the poor than many others. And who seeth not, that for the most part they spend their wages a thousand times worse, in revelling, in rioting, in drinking, in dalliance, in feasting, in apparel, and in such like excess? One penny bestowed upon the poor, shall be more acceptable to God, and more comfortable to themselves, then many pounds spent in vanity. And howsoever it be a more blessed thing to give then to receive, Acts 20, 35. yet if God have denied us the ability, and means to do good, he accepteth the desire instead of the deed: If there be in us a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not, 2, Corin. 8, 12. Again, others say, they must [Object. 2] spare for their children; God hath given them many, and if they should not provide for thē, they were worse then Infidels, and have denied the faith. They can allege, that the fathers must provide for the children, not the childrē for the fathers. But they must know, [Answer.] that such as spare more then is meet without conscience of this duty, without care of the poor, without employing their substance to y^e ends for which it is given, do gather without mercy, and bring a curse upon their riches, that shall make havoc of them in a moment, and as a swift wind blow them away. We read of many in holy Scripture, that have been cheerful givers, and distributed in the simplicity of their hearts: shall we think that these had no families to maintain, no childrē to bring up, no daughters to bestow, no kindred to relieve? Yes, no doubt many of them had particular charges of their own, wives, children, fathers, mothers, kinsfolkes, and yet they forgot not this distribution. The first Christians sold their substance and laid it down at the Apostles feet, to be divided as everyone had need. And the Churches which were in Macedonia, sent relief to others even above their ability, 2 Cor. 8, 3. They were poor themselves, and yet of their poverty they were content to depart with somewhat. Albeit they had little, yet of that little they were willing to give somewhat. Oh, but if [Object. 3] we should follow such examples, we may want our selves; and bring our wives & children unto beggary. I answer, [Answer.] if we extend our liberality, and the bowels of pity unto other, GOD that hath the hearts of all men in his own hand, will move them to pity us, that we shall taste the fruit that we have sown, and find others as merciful to us as we have been merciful unto others. Liberality is as seed that is sown in the earth. It shall yield a plentiful harvest, and it shall bring to some an hundred fold, to some sixty, and to some thirty fold. As we sow, so we shall reap: if we sow plentifully, we shall reap plentifully: if we sow sparingly, we shall reap sparingly. It is a fruit of infidelity and unbelief, to call the promises of God into question, and when he promiseth to bless us, to fear that he will forsake us. He hath given us his word, that he which lendeth unto the poor, shall not lack, and assureth that he will pay us again. Would we desire a better paymaister? Can we desire or wish for any that is better able, or more willing? The Prophet speaking of his own experience telleth us, that he was young and now is old, yet he never saw the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging [Object. 4] bread, Psal. 37, 25. Lastly, others pleading for their Corban, and loath to part with anything, allege, that the poor for the most part are lewd and lazy, ungodly and unthankful, wicked & unworthy to have any relief, they cannot afford a good word to their benefactors. I answer, that albeit idle persons are rather to be punished then maintained in their idleness, yet the Apostle after reproof of such persons, addeth this exhortation, But ye my brethren, be not weary in well doing, 2^a Thess. 3, 13. Be it that it fall out so (as sometimes it doth fall out) that the tongues of these evil men curse us, yet their loins shall bless us, as Job testifieth, chapt. 31. Declaring that albeit many things fell out to restrain the course of liberality, as their multitude, importunity and ingratitude that are in need, yet he could not be hindered by any of them, from showing mercy unto them, considering, that if we feed them, their bellies shall bless us: if we clothe them, their loins shall bless us: if we visit them in sickness, their bodies shall bless us; nay their souls shall bless us, albeit their tongues revile us, and their mouths be full of cursing and bitterness. Let us therefore turn our selves from them unto God, who will reward every good work, even to a cup of cold water. Heereby we shall testify our religion to be sincere: hereby we shall be like our heavenly Father, & assure our hearts that we are his children: hereby we shall be made conformable unto Jesus Christ our head, who being equal in glory with his Father, and being in the form of God, made himself poor that he might enrich us: hereby we shall provide well for our selves, by making us friends with the riches of unrighteousness: yea hereby we shall heap coals of fire upon y^e heads of all unthankful persons, doing good for evil, and showing mercy to them that do not deserve any mercy at our hands.

25. The standard of the Campe of Dan shall be on the North side by their armies: & the Captain of the children of Dan, shall be Ahiezer the son of Amm[•]shaddai.

26. And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were threescore and two thousand and seven hundred.

27. And those that encamp by him, shall be the Tribe of Asher: and the Captain of the children of Asher shall be Pagiel the son of Ocran.

28. And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were forty and one thousand, and five hundred.

29. Then the Tribe of Naphtali: and the Captain of the Children of Naphtali, shall be Ahira the son of Enan.

30. And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were fifty and three thousand, and four hundred.

31. All they that were numbered in the camp of Dan, were an hundred thousand, and fifty and seven thousand, and six hundred: they shall go hindermost with their standards.

We are now come to the last standard, expressed in these words. These three, Dan, Asher, and Naphtali, that is, the Tribes that descended of them, being three of the sons of Jacob, doth the Lord in this place cast into the last squadron to make up the fourth battailion. And albeit they were set in the last and lowest company of the army, yet we do not read that during the long time of their tarrance in the wilderness, (which was the space of 40, years,) they opened their mouths against the ordinance of God, or murmured through impatience and discontentment at the order established among them; neither did other murmur at them, albeit some of the children of the handmaids were preferred before the natural sons of Leah and Rahel. An host of men consisting of great multitudes, is like a full or corpulent body that needeth not any external means to throw it down, it being ready to ouerweigh and ouersway it self through it own heaviness. Many estates and kingdoms arising from small beginnings, as it were large stoods from little fountains, have proceeded & swelled so great, that the bigness thereof is comberous to themselves, and the puissance of so mighty people hath wrought their own destructiō. Thus it fell out in y^e commonwealth of Rome, whose proper power & strength (wanting a foreign enemy to encounter with all) wrought it own ruin; so that it had no greater opposite then it own too great felicity. But not to trouble our selves with foreign examples, let us briefly touch the example of the Disciples of Christ: they were few in number, they were a little company, like a small boat that might be easily ruled and governed, inasmuch as they had the best Master that ever was to stand at the stern: yet they no sooner heard of Christ's departure out of the world, but they condemned parity, and contended for superiority, Math. 20, 20. Thus we see what our nature is: one man cannot abide any to be his equal, another cannot suffer any to be before him. Wherefore to cut off all occasion of emulation, and to teach them the benefit of contentation, the Lord assigneth to every Tribe his standing place: and they in humility and obedience rested in the room & rank that God in mercy appointed for the general benefit of the whole, and the particular good of everyone among them.

Verse 25, 26. [The standard of the Campe of Dan, shall be on the, &c.] The three combined together in this army (whereof Dan was principal, the other two, Asher & Naphtals, were assistants) are indeed the children of the handmaids, inasmuch as Rabel in grief of her barrenness, giveth her maid unto her husband, who beareth him Dan and Naphtali: Leah also following her sisters example, giveth him her maid, who beareth & bringeth forth Asher. There can no reason be assigned by man, why they should go march in this order then in any other, but only the good pleasure of God: yet they are quiet, and strive not one against another, being brethren one to another. From hence we learn, that everyone [Doctrine 6] ought to be contēted with his present estate: I say, how mean soever our condition be, yet God requires it as a special duty at our hands, that therewith we be content. Hereunto cometh the commandment given by the Apostle, 1 Corinth. 7, 20, 24. Let every man abide in the same calling, wherein he was called. To the same purpose he teacheth elsewhere, that Godliness with contentment is great gain: and afterward, Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content. And as he delivereth this doctrine by precept, so he sealeth it up by practice and experience, Phil. 4, 11, 12. I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content: I know both how to be abased, & I know how to abound: everywhere, and in all things I am enstructed, both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. It is a great and wonderful knowledge, and very hard to be practiced, to know to be rich, that is, to use riches soberly: it passeth our reach, unless we have a special and extraordinary grace given unto us. We must learn also, what it is to be poor, which is as hard a lesson as the former; forasmuch as we are ready to murmur under the Cross: whereas though we should walk naked, be hungry and thirsty, be afflicted and pass by the sword, yet we ought to be patient, & our trust must not fail which we have in God, who will feed us in the time of famine.

[Reason 1] The reasons hereof are of great force, and carry authority unto our consciences. First, God knoweth what is best for us, far better then we our selves do. We seek oftentimes to be aloft, but God seeth it better for us to be below: we desire to be rich, God seeth it better for us to be poor. Had it not been much better for Hamman that was advanced to honor, to have sate in the dirt, or on the dunghill all the days of his life, thē in all the height of his honor, to be hanged on the Gallows which himself had set up for another, and so to taste first of the punishment he had devised? Had it not been better for the rich man to be clothed with rags instead of purple robes, & to eat a dinner of green herbs instead of his delicious fare, then after all his pomp and pride to be tormented in hell fire? We are oftentimes ignorant of that should do us good: God is ignorant of nothing. We are ready to embrace that which will do us hurt, it is God that in mercy withholdeth it from us, and us from it. A sick person longeth greatly for those things which increase his disease, and bring him in danger of death; but the learned and expert Physician will not suffer him to taste of them. A child thinketh he is hardly dealt withal, that he is restrained of his desire, but his wise and discreet parents are constrained to bridle him of his lust, and that for his own good. So dealeth God with us, we are as sick persons that must be dieted, we are as little children that must be overruled: the Lord our God is a loving Father, he is a tender Physician over us, who albeit he deny us that we desire, yet he will withhold nothing frō us y^t he knoweth to be good for us.

Secondly, we have this comfortable promise from him, that he will never fail us, nor [Reason 2] forsake us, whether we have little or much, whether we be in prosperity or adversity. It is he that feedeth the fowls of the air, it is he that clotheth the Lilies of the field: much more then are we assured that he will feed us and clothe us, who are more of value then all the rest of his Creatures. This is the reason urged by the Apostle, Heb. 13, Be content with those things that ye have: for he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee, so that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, I will not fear what man can do unto me. Where he putteth us in mind of the continual care of God for us, and that his providence watcheth over us, which he opposeth as a buckler against the common temptation that assaulteth us, to wit, the fear of being quite forsaken of him, and left unto our selves, from whence ariseth distrust in our hearts.

Thirdly, nature it self is content with a little, [Reason 3] inasmuch as this is the common condition of all mankind, Princes and people, high and low, noble and vnnoble: it brought us naked into the world, and naked it will carry us out of the world, according to the saying of Job concerning himself, Naked came I out of my mothers womb, and naked shall I return thither: the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, &c. There are two points of man's life, his entrance into the world, and his departure out of the world: there is but little distance, as it were a step and a stride between them. For what is our life but a vapor? The space that is in the midst, which is the time of our life between our birth & our death, hath many differences and diversities that make us unlike one to another: some are poor, and some rich, some have great abundance, some have nothing at all. But in the point from whence we come, and in the point to which we tend, we all meet: the beginning of our life, and the ending of our days are both alike, there is no difference between them. Dust returneth unto dust, and earth into the earth again. If a man have a little journey to make, and a small way to travail, it is folly and vanity to make great provision for it; as he that hath need but of one pitcher of water, shall not deal wisely to go about to draw out a great River. So then, to desire superfluties, is to make open war against the order of nature. This reason is set down by the Apostle, in the place before alleged, where the doctrine had his confirmation; for having shown that when God granteth us raiment to clothe our bodies, and giveth us food to fill our bellies, we ought to be content, he annexeth this consideration to strengthen it, For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. We see men die daily, and led to it as flocks of sheep: and when we have taken care day and night what to eat, what to drink, and what to put on, we bear nothing to the earth, but a winding sheet to cover our shame, and to hide our nakedness.

Fourthly, let us consider the contrary fruits. [Reason 4] Such as have a resolute purpose to grow rich, do refer hereunto all their thoughts, words, and deeds, they so thirst after the treasures of this world; that nothing is so sacred and religious, which they will make any conscience to violate, but they overthrow all law of God and man, and nourish in them the root of all evil, and fall into a bottomless pit of all mischiefs. This the Apostle meaneth, when he saith, They that will be rich, fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in perdition and destruction. Such are as poor beasts y^t are fallen into the snare of the hunter. The devil is a mighty hunter, he hath many grins to catch us and entrap us, walking about like a roaring Lion, seeking whom he may devour. We are compassed about with the devil and his angels, as with an army of wolves and wild beasts; oppressed with injuries, and overborne with violence: yet being under the protection of our God, we cannot fail, but be well counterguarded. He hath promised he will have a care of us, so that the Lions shall want and suffer hunger, and not always be able to find their prey, though they be cruel and ravenous: but the faithful man though he have neither teeth nor paws, nor take any man's goods away by fraud or force from him, yet God feedeth him and supplieth all his wants; so that everyone should be pleased with his present estate and means of his maintenance, how mean soever.

The uses follow, which naturally arise frō [Use 1] hence; and those of reproof shall have the first place, which are of diverse sorts. They break out and transgress against this principle, that are discontented with their present estate, and do murmur & grudge at the hand of God upon them, and withal repine at the good estate of others. Thus it fared with the people of Israel sundry times, sometimes▪ through want of bread, Exod. 16, 2. Sometimes through want of water, Exod. 17, 2. Sometimes through want of flesh, Numb. 11, 4. Sometimes through fear of their enemies, Numb. 14, 2. Sometimes through danger of the way, by which they were to pass, Numb. 21, 5. They were never long contented with one estate, but brake out through impatience against God, and brought upon themselves diverse plagues and judgments whereby they were consumed. Thus is it with many in our days, if we be pressed with any want of good things; or if we be chastened with the feeling of any evil things, we break out into rage and choller, and will not submit our selves to him that striketh us. If we be bitten a little with famine, and have not our necessities by & by supplied, we cry out against God and man, we are ready to say, What shall we eat, or what shall we drink, or what shall we put on? If we fall into any sickness, that continueth with us, we think God hath forgotten us or forsaken us, if he do not presently remove his hand from us, and that no man hath felt that which we feel. If we be in any trouble by losses of temporal things, though they be but trifles, by and by we imagine we are undone, it is too late with us to think how to live, and we are more out of patience, then if we had lost the love and favor of GOD. Thus doth the bitter root of infidelity stick in our hearts, & it brancheth forth into open rebellion against God, like the child that murmureth under the rod; for as that is the cause that the father taketh up the whip to whip him again, so our resisting the hand of God when it is heavy upon us, doth not call in the judgment, but rather constraineth the Lord to scourge us again, & to lay upon our backs more strokes and stripes then he did before. The way to call in his corrections is, to submit our selves unto him▪ to confess our offenses, to acknowledge his just judgments, according to the saying of the Prophet, I was dumb, and opened not my mouth, because thou diddest it, Psal. 39, 9.

Secondly, it reproveth such as use unlawful means, ungodly shifts, & wicked policies to enrich themselves. These men care not what ways they use, or what courses they take to get goods, & to heap up riches for themselves & their posterities, whō they desire to raise up on high, and to make great in this world. This insatiable humor is as the dropsy, or rather as the grave that never saith it is enough. It is ever craving more, as a gulf or whirl-pool ready to receive, but not apt to show what it hath received: and therefore doth God oftentimes cross, and not give any blessings to their labors. These make themselves unfit for holy desires, for heavenly meditations, and for the kingdom of God. If any should ask them, whether their meaning be to make themselves drudges to the world, bond-slaves to the Devil, and so to cast themselves headlong to destruction both of body and soul, they would quickly answer, No; and defy those that should charge them with it. Notwithstanding, this inordinate affection bewrayeth what lieth in the heart, and discovereth that they go about to cast themselves away wittingly and willingly, and to undo themselves utterly. Wherefore, to the end we may use our riches aright, we are to practice two points: First, we must be poor in spirit, not glutted in them, nor glued to them, for then we shall be deceived by them; according to the counsel of the Psalmist, Trust not in oppression, become not vain in robbery: if riches increase, set not your heart upon them. We must not be tied to our riches that we can never get from thē, but so to account of them, that whensoever it shall please God to make us poor, and to take our riches from us, to render up y^e whole into his hands, to forgo them willingly, and to resign them up to him that gave them, & is able to restore them. When Job had lost all his cattle and children, and was fallen from the top of felicity to the lowest vale of misery, he could say with a quiet spirit, Blessed be the Name of the Lord, it is he that hath given, it is he that hath taken them away. This willingness to depart from them at the Lord's call, doeth make it manifest that he never made the wedge of gold his hope, nor said to the fine gold, Thou art my confidence: he rejoiced not because his wealth was great, nor because his hand had gotten much, as he declareth in the protestation that he maketh of his integrity. Whereby he showeth, that there passeth a secret communication & conference between the rich man and his riches, applauding himself for his money that he hath. True it is, a man will not speak unto his riches, nor cannot hear his riches answer him: there passeth not an express dialogue between the monied man and his money, when he openeth his chest, or vnlocketh his coffer: but he useth this manner of speech by way of faigning the persons, to set forth the folly & vanity of such as have store and abundance; they make a secret kind of compact and conspiracy with their gold and silver, they set down their rest in it, they repose their trust upon it, and will rather leave all then depart from it. Nevertheless, he doth not reprove all joy and gladness when their goods increase. It is lawful to rejoice in all the blessings of God that he giveth, and we receive. He requireth this at our hands, as it is expressed, Deut. 12, 7. Ye shall eat before the Lord your God, and ye shall• rejoice in all that ye put your hand unto, ye and your households, wherein the Lord thy God hath blessed thee. This mirth and gladness is so far frō displeasing God, that it is rather a fruit of the faith and fear which is in us toward him, forasmuch as we learn thereby to praise his name, to confess his goodness, & to yield him thanks for the benefits which he bestoweth upon us. He speaketh therefore of a blind rejoicing, of carnal mirth and profane iollity, such as is among worldlings, who are carried away with a love of their riches, so that they forget God & remember no more their own frailty and mortality. This is a frantic joy that turneth us away from God, and maketh us drunken in the pleasures of this life. Secondly, while we enjoy & possess the things of this world, we must not keep them to our selves, but know how to use them moderately, as God hath commanded. They are given unto us to be used, they are as a talent committed unto us, for which we must give an account. And when the day of audit cometh, & we can say no more then that we have glutted our selves with them, and starved our neighbors, woe will be unto us, the rusting of them shall be a witness against us, and shall eat our flesh as it were fire. It was not so with Job, whose example we alleged before: he did not withhold the poor from their desire, nor cause the eyes of the widow to fail: he did not eat his morsels himself alone, but the fatherless did eat thereof: he never saw any perish for lack of clothing, nor any poor without a covering. This was the use he made of his goods, to show pity and mercy when he saw any in adversity. If we say only, My friend, God help thee; & never succor him, it is no better then a mere mockery, & hypocrisy, to make show of love, and yet to do them no good. God hath made us stewards of his goods which he hath committed unto us; if we shall devour all our selves, and not communicate anything to such as have need, we shall one day pay sweetly for this rigor and cruelty, when we shall receive according to our deserts: for we also our selves must appear before God, who will deal with us as we have dealt with others. He hath shown all goodness & kindness unto us, and this ought to have been a rule & example unto us to show mercy to our brethren: but because we have shut up our compassion from them, we shall receive judgment without mercy: and as we would not hear thē in their necessity, so God will stop his ears against us in our misery. If we be careful of these two points in the use of this worlds good, that we do not put our trust in them, but employ them to the good of others, we shall never be drawn away by the nets of Satan, to take away other men's goods wrongfully, to snatch and catch what we can from them, and to circumvent them in our dealing with them. Thus then are they met withal, that use deceit and fraud to beguile & deceive whom they can. This is the tradesmans sin, that careth not how he selleth. He spreadeth his net to catch his brother; and all is fish with him that cometh into the net: he preieth upon him that cometh unto him, as if every buyer or brother were an enemy. He will not stick to swear & to forswear himself, he maketh no conscience to lie at all assaies. He forbearth not to use naughty devises and wicked practices to enrich himself and impoverish another. The root of all these is discontentment with our estate, that we have not learned to rest our selves well pleased with that condition wherein GOD hath set us, and therefore we covet to rise higher then God affordeth means, and to catch frō others that which belongeth not unto us.

Secondly, hereby direction is given unto [Use 2] us touching the things of this present life, what we may crave and desire of God in our prayers. This is called in the Lord's prayer, Our daily bread for the day, Luc. 11, 3. We have liberty only to pray for competent and convenient food, and that only for the day. This we see in the practice of Jacob, Gen. 28, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my fathers house in peace, then shall the Lord be my God. He desireth not great riches, or honors, or might, or majesty, or earthly excellency & renown, but food and raiment. These two necessary things he contenteth himself withal, and suffereth not his affections to wander farther. Hitherto cometh the prayer of Agur, Prov. 30, 7, 8, 9. Two things have I required of the Lord, deny me them not before I die: remove far from me vanity and lies; give me neither poverty, nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me, lest I be full and deny thee, & say, who is the Lord? or lest I be poor and steal, and take the Name of my God in vain. This ought to be the substance and subject of our prayer: a competent measure of earthly things ought to content us: we must ask bread, not fullness of bread: raiment, not costly raiment: necessaries, [Objection.] not superfluities. But may not a man provide for the time to come, and lay up in store for the times of need? I answer, [Answer.] yes, he may, he ought, as God shall afford the means. This is a point of wisdom that God alloweth. It is a token not of niggardliness and miserableness, but of frugality and foresight, when goods gotten are for good uses reserved, and afterward profitably employed, and therefore is not forbidden. But we must remember these cautions and conditions: First, they must be justly gotten. Things evilly gotten, are as evilly kept, & oftentimes as evilly consumed. A little well gotten, is better then the treasures of iniquity. One morsel of bread obtained by the sweat of our brows, is better then an house filled with robbery. That which is not well gotten, is not ours, but another man's. Secondly, as that which is laid up must have a sure foundation, it must be justly and rightly gotten, so we must not put our trust and confidence in it. If God do but blow upon it, he can drive it away, as chaff before the wind: and if he do not take it from us, yet he can make it to be unprofitable unto us. Though he take not away our garments, he can make them that they shall not warm us: and our food that it shall not nourish us; so that albeit we have bread, we shall not have the staff of bread; to teach us, that Man liveth not by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Thirdly, it must not be laid up to be meat for the worm and the canker, but to be spent in lawful uses. Our families challenge one part, the Church of God another, the poor Saints another, yea we are debtors to them that dwell afar off, even to the Turks and Infidels, so it be done in Christ, not against Christ: for we must do all for the truth, nothing against the truth. These rules of restraint being observed, it is required of all, especially of those of mean condition, to have an eye to the time to come. We must consider, not only how we may live presently, but how we may maintain our selves hereafter. Now we live in health, in wealth, or at least in a competent measure: we live in days of plenty, of peace, of liberty, and freedom to follow our business. We have our limbs and strength of body able to labor and take pains. We know not what times and tempests hang over our heads. We may be visited with sickness, or pinched with poverty, or have our limbs taken from us; we may be stricken with blindness, or lameness: and if none of all these afflictions come upon us, yet the infirmities of old age will overtake us, which is as the night wherein we cannot work. Then the keepers of the house shall tremble, and the strong men shall bow themselves, and the grinders shall cease because they are few, & those that look out of the windows shall be darkened: so that we should labor in the days of our youth, & in the flour of our age, while the evil days come not nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them. Age is an hasty thing, it tarrieth for no man, it will creep upon us sooner then we are aware. Wherefore doth GOD give unto us all these means and this blessed opportunity▪ (which being once gone cannot be called back) but that we should make use of it? There is no day, but it hath his night: there is no calm, but it hath his storm: there is no peace, but it hath his war: there is no health, but it hath his sickness. Though we have now sufficient, we know not (alas) what experience we may have of want, and how soon also. We should therefore provide in time of our health, to keep us in our sickness: we should labor in youth to keep us in age: and lay up in time of plenty, to furnish our selves against dearth and scarcity. We see the providence that was in Joseph, he laid up corn in the plentiful years, to serve them & save them in time of famine, and therefore he preserved the lives of many thousands, Gen. 41, 48. The Apostles provided afore hand to send succor and relief to the Church of Judea, being fellow-members of the same body, and professing all one communion of Saints. So the Apostle teacheth, 1 Tim. 5, 8. If any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse then an Infidel. But Christ our Savior saith, Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth, [Objection.] where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal, Math. 6, 19. If then he forbid all men to lay up, who shall dare to hoard up anything? I answer, [Answer.] he forbiddeth in some sort, not simply: to wit, to lay up with respect to our own private profit only, without respect of the good of the Church or Common-wealth; as if he had said, Take heed that ye gather not riches for your own use and benefit alone, as if none should live in the world besides yourselves, and so make your treasures your trust, & place your happiness and felicity in them. But our happiness must be in heaven, and in the life to come, where it cannot be taken from us. Again, [Objection.] it will be said that Christ forbiddeth the care of the things of this life, and to take thought what to eat or what to drink, or what to put on, Math. 6, 25. I answer, there is a double care, [Answer.] a lawful and an unlawful, a godly and an ungodly care. The lawful and honest care is that, whereby a man provideth for things needful in time to come. For if then we should begin to provide: necessaries when we are presently to use them, we should be like to soldiers, that are to seek for armor when they should put it on; or like the foolish Virgins mentioned in the Gospel, that went to buy oil for their Lamps when it was too late. There is an unlawful care, which is joined with distrust. Such men do neither deal uprightly and justly in their callings to labor the thing that is good, and to get the thing that is honest in the sight of all men; neither yet commit the success of their labors to the blessing of God, but use shifts that stand not with equity and a good conscience. This maketh the heart heavy, & withdraweth us from prayer, from hearing the word, and from the worship of God. This is that which Christ forbiddeth in this place. If it be farther objected, [Objection.] that Christ saith, Take no thought for the morrow, for the morrow will take thought for it self: sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof; Math. 6, 34. I answer as before, [Answer.] that the purpose of Christ is not to persuade any to sloth and idleness, or to slake in us diligence in our callings, but to draw us from all inordinate and distrustful care for the morrow, whereby we vex our minds with trouble and turmoile for things unnecessary. Every day by reason of man's sin, hath grief enough, and therefore should every day content it self with his own care, and not cast his projects for days and years.

But while we condemn the unlawful carking, let us take heed we do not cast away that honest and holy care of providing things needful in time to come. Christ our Savior had a bag to keep provision for himself and his Disciples, which Judas bare, John 13, 29. Hence it is also, that he gave commandment, that they should gather up the broken meat, and addeth this reason, that nothing be lost. This serveth as a notable instruction for men of mean ability and small means, to teach them to provide in time for the maintenance of themselves and their families. This concerneth artificers & tradesmen, husbandmen and day-laborers, to seek as thrifty men to save somewhat (as they say) against a wet day. They must labor and take pains while their strength is great, and their sight is good: that when they shall be old, or weak, or blind, and every way unable to follow their calling, they may find means to maintain them of their own, and not seek relief abroad, and so be a burden unto others: yea when GOD shall call them out of this world, (as we hold our life and all things else with the greatest uncertainty) we may leave our wives and children wherewith they may live with comfort, and not depend upon the kindness and courtesy of other men. This is a point little regarded of drunkards and vnthrifths, who, if they may have for the present to satisfy their lusts, care not though they bring their seed to beggary. Woe be to such merciless Creatures, more cruel then the Tiger or the Bear, exposing their posterity to a sea of miseries. These are worse then the sauages & infidels, and have denied the faith.

Let all poor men beware of idleness; let them not spend in a moment that which hath been long in getting: let them not consume that little which they have in belly cheer, & delicious fare, and in costly apparel, but use the creatures of God soberly, moderately, & sparingly; considering both the shortness of their own lives, and the hardness of other men's hearts. Let them not give sleep unto their eyes, nor slumber to their eye-liddes. Let the sluggards go to the Ant, and learn wisdom by her ways, which having no guide, ouerseer, nor ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest, Prov., 6, 7, 8.

Thirdly, seeing it is required of us to have [Use 3] contented minds, it putteth us in mind of this duty, that we avoid covetousness which is directly contrary to contentation. It is a common corruption y^t taketh hold of our corrupt nature, & a fruit of the old man which must be mortified of all the children of God, and so much the rather because it stealeth vp̄ us at a sudden, and draweth away our hearts from God and godliness. This is the use directly touched and taught by the Apostle, Heb. 13. Let your conversation be without covetousness, and be content with such things as ye have. The greatness of this sin is such that it causeth a man to be an idolater, as Ephe. 5.5. Col. 3.5. This ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of God, and of Christ. The covetous are idolaters or worshippers of idols two ways. First, because they prefer their riches in their affections before God, the gift before the giver of them; depending upon them as upon God, trusting in them, as in God, saying unto them, Thou art my confidence, as we heard before out of the book of Job.

Secondly, because they account their life to consist in their riches, and to rest upon their wealth, rather then to stand on the providence of God, failing of all comfort, and hope, and joy, when their wealth faileth them. Satan used this bait to bring Christ himself to idolatry, when he offered unto him the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them. How easily we slip into this sin, appeareth by the example of the rich man that came unto our Savior; when he was bid sell all that he had, he went away pensine and sorrowful, Matth. 19. Hence it is that he saith in another place, Take heed and beware of Covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. We are ready to flatter our selves, and to say to our soul, Thou hast much goods laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry: until it be said unto us, Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee, then whose shall those things be, that thou hast provided? This is a sin, not only in the rich, but also in the poor. True it is, such as are in want and necessity, do wash their hands as innocent in this matter, but they do it as Pilate did touching blood, which notwithstanding did cleave so fast unto his loins, that all the Fullers earth, and all the waters in the Sea, could not wash away the guilt, and stain thereof from him. So the poor for the most part, put this sin far from them, and think it doth not belong unto them: they cry out against the rich, because they are covetous, as blind men deceiving themselves, and beholding their own faces in a false glass. For first of all, they use ungodly shifts, and unlawful means to store themselves, which is right covetousness. They care not how they come by meat, money, corn, or anything so they may have it.

Again, they bear not the burden of poverty patiently, but murmur and grudge at it, nay, at him that sendeth it: but whosoever disdaineth his present state, because it is not higher, richer, and better, is covetous: therefore the poor may be covetous.

Furthermore, they are oftentimes idle, and live by the sweat of other men's brows, and break out into pilfering and stealing, and so not only covet, but catch and convey unto themselves other men's goods. This also is covetousness, and this is a common sickness and disease of the poor. For as pride may walk and iet up and down in a russet coat, so may covetousness lodge in a simple and smokie cottage. But in whomsoever it be, whether in the rich or poor, it is a dangerous evil, it bringeth the covetous man to destruction of body and soul. It brought the leprosy upon Gehazi, that coveted the silver, and garments that Naaman offered, Elisha refused, but he accepted. It brought a more heavy plague upon the soul and conscience of Judas, for when he had betrayed his master for thirty shekels, in horror of himself, and of his fact, he went and hanged himself. He was brought up with Christ and lived with him, who had instructed him not to covet after silver, nor gold; he heard his doctrine, and beheld his miracles, yet he was infected with this disease, worse then the dropsy or the hungry evil. It seeth nothing in another without griefe and sorrow, and is never well contented until he have it himself, and then he cannot be satisfied, but still he would have more.

The more he hath, the more he thinketh he hath not. The more full his coffers are, the more he judgeth them to be empty: for as much as he wanteth as well those things that he hath, as those things that he hath not. It is a great blessing of God, that the earth yieldeth the fat of wheat: but the covetous man is not a little grieved, that instead of ears of corn, it doth not shoot and send forth leaves of gold, that every river doth not run with streams of gold, and that the barraine mountains have not gold to be digged out of them, instead of stones. He is oftentimes grieved at the seasonableness of the weather, at the fruitfulness of the seasons, at the plenty of all things, at the increase of the earth, and at the sweet influence of the heavens; he taketh it heavily, when there is store and abundance, that there is no want, nor crying in our streets; because he cannot fell his corn, his cattle, and commodities at the dearest rate. He hateth all men, both rich and poor: the rich, because he doth not possess that which they have: and seeth them to abound as well as himself, whereas he cannot abide that any should enjoy anything, and thinketh it lost that passeth by his door: the poor, because they crave somewhat of him, which he is as unwilling to leave as his life: and therefore as if he were hurt, and wronged with all, he is angry and offended with all.

The more he hath, the more he craveth and coveteth. Even as the drunken man is more vexed with thirst, then he that useth to drink with sobriety and moderation, and is therewith contented: so the covetous person, that hath the greatest plenty, is much more tormented with desire of more, then he that is satisfied with a small portion, or pittance of the things of this life.

It falleth out oftentimes that such as have least charge lying upon them, are most overcharged with this, as with a most heavy burden. This is that vanity that Solomon pointeth out, Ecclesiastes chapter 4. There is one alone, and there is not a second, yea, he hath neither child, nor brother; yet is there no end of all his labor, neither is his eye satisfied with riches, neither saith he, For whom do I labor, and bereave my soul of good? It is not abundance, or masses and mountains of gold and silver that can quench this insatiable thirst, but thereby it is rather increased. For as more wood put to the fire, augmenteth the flame and the heat: so the desire of many by addition of wealth, is multiplied. He is fitly compared to the man possessed with an unclean spirit, who wore no clothes, but had his dwelling among the tombs and mountains: no man could bind him nor tame him, but he brake the fetters and pulled the chains asunder, and cut himself with stones, Mar. 5.3. Luke 8.27. He was exceeding fierce, but covetous men are far worse. He that was possessed, was delivered by the word of Christ, and the devil was driven away, and left his hold: but they that are servants, or slaves to their money, will not hearken unto Christ; they have so much of this earth in their ears, or rather in their hearts, that albeit they hear him daily preached unto them and sounding as a shrill or loud trumpet, yet they believe not, they yield not, they obey not. The man possessed spared not such as came near him: but they spoil and rauin as well afar off frō them as hard by them; they spare none whom they catch in their snares, not friends, not kinsmen, not brethren: they tear them, and rent them in pieces, whomsoever they can compass. He went naked: but these clothe themselves sumptuously (except such as grudge themselves apparel) with the spoils of others, as if they had taken them prisoners in the day of battle, and make them go naked, or in thread-bare coats that come in their way. He smote himself, not knowing what he did: but these smite and kill others secretly, they grind the faces of the poor, and pull off the skin from their backs. He abode among the graves and tombs of the dead; but these are very sepulchers themselves. For what is a tomb, but a stone covering the body of the dead? What then? are not their bodies much more wretched and miserable then those stones, which cover their dead souls, dead in sin, and as stinking carcasses casting out a loathsome savor? And to this purpose Christ speaketh to the Pharisees, Matth. 23.27. Ye are like to whited sepulchers, full of extortion & excess, full of hypocrisy and iniquity.

This sin hath diverse branches under it, according to the diverse practices of it, first, when men seek only or principally for worldly goods, neglecting or not regarding spiritual graces in comparison of them. We are charged to lay up our treasure in heaven, where the moth cannot corrupt it, nor thieves steal it. We are commanded to seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness. But whatsoever God require of us, the greatest sort do what they list: for as Esau sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, Heb. 12.16. So do profane men sell their souls for old shoes, and salvation purchased by Christ at a most dear rate, for a song. This may seem strange unto some, but there is nothing will appear more true, if we consider the course of the world, and observe the lives of men. This is the sin of our age, wherein the least profit and pleasure is cared for above true religion. Every drunken feast is cause sufficient with us to intermit y^e worship of god. Every profane meeting of profane men, is valued and prized above the word of the eternal God. Every feast that after a heathenish manner is yearly solemnized, giveth occasion to multitudes to profane and pollute the Sabbath that ought to be sanctified with public and private duties agreeable unto it; and to set that banquet at naught to which God inviteth us by his Ministers. Our thoughts, our meditations, our desires, our delights, are so taken up with earthly things, that though there be much preaching, there is little profiting; though there be much teaching, yet there is little hearing, little obedience.

The second branch of covetousness, is to put our trust and confidence in the things of this life, which is the idolatry of the heart, as we noted before. If we set our hearts upon our goods, we make them our God, and the earth our happiness. Hence it is, that Christ maketh it so hard a matter for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven, as for a Camel to go through the eye of a needle, Matth. 19. because they trust in their riches, Mar. 10.24. Likewise the Apostle chargeth Timothy to charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high minded, neither trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy, 1 Tim. 6.17. The third branch is, when we regard and respect only our selves. It is not enough, that we do no harm with them, God requireth that we do good. Christ shall say at the last day, I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick and in prison, and ye visited me not: go into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his Angels. That evil servant that did not divide his substance among his fellow servants, perished through his covetousness: and he that received one talent, and digged in the earth to hide it, had it taken from him, and heareth this sentence denounced against him: Thou wicked and slothful servant and unprofitable. God bestoweth not his blessings upon us to fat our selves with thē, as Oxen in a stall, or as swine in a stye, without all consideration of the Church, or Commonwealth, or of the poor: but he hath made us stewards and disposers of them to the glory of God, and the good of others.

[Verse 31. All they that were numbered in the campe of Dan, &c:] We see in this place that this last standard beareth the name of Dan; whereby we see that God raiseth up as a chief instrument in this mighty host, one of the lowest sort, one that was obscure in the family of Jacob; which serveth to magnify the mercy of God, & to depress the pride of man. Jacob in his last will and testament, foretelleth the estate of this Tribe, Gen. 49, 17. Dan shall be a serpent by the way, an adder in the path, that biteth the horse-heels, so that his rider shall fall backward: which declareth, that the power & might of this Tribe should not be great, but prevail rather by fraud and deceit. Thus Sampson prevailed against the Philistines, and afterward they overcame the City Laish, and burnt it with fire. We learn from hence, that it pleaseth God oftentimes to choose and use the weakest & meanest men, to be instruments for the accomplishing of his greatest works. He maketh choice of inferior things to perform his decrees, and to do good to his Church, and to serve him wheresoever he purposeth to employ them. This appeareth clearer then the Sun throughout the Scriptures, in preferring the younger before the elder, in the calling of many Judges, in the election of many Kings, in the separating of many Prophets, and in the ordaining of many Apostles, who were of little reckoning and estimation before their honor and advancement, to verify that which the Psalmist saith, Psal. 75, 6, 7. Promotion cometh neither from the East, nor from the West, nor from the South, but God is the Judge: he putteth down one, and setteth up another. Saul was a seeker of his fathers asses, and though he found not them, he found the kingdom, Samuel being sent to anoint him, 1 Sam. 10. David was the youngest of his fathers house, and the lowest among one of the lowest families, left with the sheep in the wilderness, according to that in the Psalm, He chose David his servant, and took him from the sheepfolds, from following the Ewes great with young, he brought him to feed Jacob his people, and Israel his inheritance. And as God chose him from feeding a flock of sheep, to feed a better flock, so he chose some of his Apostles from catching fish, to catch fowls. Peter was a fisherman, as before him Amos was an heard-man. Thus did God throw down the strong walls of Jericho, not by might of men, nor by munition of war, but by Rams horns, which were blowed by the Priests, Josh. 6, 20 In the creation, he brought light out of darkness, the fowls out of the waters, and all things out of nothing, Gen. 1, 3, 20. Heb. 11, 3. Christ wrought many of his cures in like manner, in healing the blind man; for he spate on the ground, & made clay of the spettle, and then anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay: then he had him wash in the pool of Siloam, who by and by went his way, & washed, and came seeing, John 9, 6, 7. Likewise in the work of our redemption, the truth of this is more apparent, for he wrought by contraries, bringing life out of death. He came down to the earth, to lift us up into heaven, Eph. 2, 6. He suffered the punishments of our sins, that he might make us free from them, Math. 11, 28. 1 Pet. 2, 24. He perfectly fulfilled all righteousness, that he might cover our unrighteousness, Rom. 5, 19. And to the end he might fully satisfy for our sins, he was made sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, 2 Corin. 5, 21. He was bound, that we might be loosed: he was condemned, that we might be acquitted: he was crucified in his body, that he might nail our sins to his Cross, and fasten them there forever, Col. 2, 14. He took upon him the curse due to us, that he might appease the wrath of his Father against us, Heb. 10, 10. He died for us, that we might live: he was buried and laid in the grave, that he might overcome death in his own cabin and den, Acts 2, 24. Lastly, he rose again as a Captain and Conqueror from the dead, and could not be holden of the sorrows of death, that we should walk in newness of life, Rom 6, 4. All these examples, of Saul, of David, of Amos, of Peter, of Christ, of the Patriarchs, of the Prophets, of the Judges, and of the Apostles, serve to teach us this truth, that it is the manner of God's dealing, to make choice of small means to effect great matters, and to single out weak instruments to work out worthy enterprises.

Neither ought this to be maruelled at, as [Reason 1] strange in our eyes. For if there were no other reason to induce us to believe it, the only will and good pleasure of God ought to be sufficient, as being the highest moving cause, and indeed the cause of all causes. His will is a law, and who shall herein control him of error, or convince him of folly, or condemn him of insufficiency? If he will let the full & rich go away empty, who shall say unto him, Why dost thou so? Or who can accuse him of rashness? This is that which Christ our Savior setteth down, Luc. 10, 21. In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight. Where we see, he maketh the pleasure of God to be the stay of himself: so it ought to be with us, if we once come to know what seemeth good in the eyes of God, though we know no more, though we can see no farther, and though ten thousand reasons as a mighty army may seem to encounter against it, yet we must rest our selves upon it as upon a rock, and build our house upon it as a foundation.

[Reason 2] Secondly, this serveth best to make manifest the glory of God, when as great things are done by a weak hand. Now, the weaker the instruments are, which he setteth on work, the more evidently is his power seen, and the better doth his praise appear. This gave David comfort and assurance being a stripling, unarmed and vntrained to the field, to encounter hand to hand in a single combat with a mighty giant: he doubted not to overcome him, but was persuaded in his heart of his help that never forsaketh his that trust in him and call upon him, that he should smite him with his sling, & take his head from him with his sword, and give the carcasses of the host of the Philistines, unto the fowls of the air, and to the wild beasts of the earth: and he maketh this the reason of all, That all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel, 1 Sam. 17.46. This also doth the Apostle infer and enforce in another kind, speaking of our salvation and redemption, and of those that are counted worthy to be partakers of them, 1 Cor. 1.26. You know your calling, how that not many wise men after the flesh, nor many mighty, nor many noble are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise: the weak to confound the mighty: the base and despised to bring to naught things that are magnified in the eyes of men, That no flesh should glory in his presence, &c. according as it is written, he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. His glory is less advanced and set forth by great persons; they are as a cloud before our eyes, or as amidst^a and veil to ouershadow us, and to keep from us the glorious light of the bright shining Sun, I mean the glory of the mighty God: as the Lord himself teacheth Gideon, The people that are with thee are too many for me to give the Midianites into their hands, lest Israel vaunt themselves against me, saying, Mine own hand hath saved me, Judge. 7.2. So then, whether we do consider the first moving cause which is the will of God, or the last final cause which is the glory of God, it appeareth he will oftentimes accomplish great things by means and instruments of low degree.

[Use 1] Let us proceed to the uses, and handle them briefly. First, forasmuch as God advanceth weak things to work out the decree of his providence, we may truly conclude from hence the powerful hand of God, that is able to bring to pass whatsoever he pleaseth. He worketh after the pleasure of his own will, sometimes by weak means, sometimes by no means, sometimes above means, and sometimes contrary to means. When the chiefest among the sons of men will bring anything to pass, they make choice of the fittest and forwardest means, even such as are most likely in the eyes of men, and in the judgment of the world. When Solomon purposed to build the Temple for the worship of God, he made choice of the fittest wood, and of the fittest workmen: it was in him to choose them, but it was not in him to qualify them whom he findeth in themselves to be unfit. But it is not so with God, he oftentimes employeth the most backward, untoward, unlikely, impossible; because he is able to fit them and furnish them with power, strength, and ability to go through with the work that he setteth them about: so that we may cry out with admiration, How great and wonderful is his Name in all his actions! This is concluded directly, Psal. 8. O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy Name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens: out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength, because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger. Where we see, that upon God's choice of weak and infirm instruments, he gathereth the excellency of his Name, and the greatness of his power, which he repeateth again in the last verse, O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy Name in all the earth. There is none is above him, none is equal unto him, none can be matched or compared with him: all things are put under his feet.

Secondly, we learn another truth to be [Use 2] acknowledged of us, that all things are not to be respected according to the outward appearance. We are oftentimes deceived, and cannot see into the works of God. Our Savior speaketh notably to this purpose against the Pharisees, Luke 16. Ye are they which justify yourselves before men, but God knoweth your hearts for that which is highly esteemed amongst men, is abomination in the sight of God. This may not any way seem strange unto us, forasmuch as God respecteth no man's person, as Gal. 2. where the Apostle proving himself to be an Apostle, not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, who called him from heaven to preach the Gospel, saith, Of these, who seemed to be somewhat (whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me; God accepteth no man's person) for they who seemed to be somewhat, in conference added nothing to me. In these words he speaketh of the Apostles, Peter, James, and John, that had been poor fisher-men, and men of small reckoning and respect, yet they were honored of God to be Apostles and planters of Churches, so that he saith, It skilleth not what they have been in times past. Every man therefore is to be esteemed according to his calling, and to be accounted off according to the grace of God given unto him. Many that are first, shall be last, and the last shall be first. We must esteem of men, not as they have been, but as they are. When men have repented, we may not upbraid them with their lives past, nor cast in their teeth, their former offenses. We must not take occasion by the infirmities of men's actions to contemn their persons. Such is the merciful dealing of God toward us, that he accepteth not of us as we have been, but as we are when we repent and return unto him.

It is the policy of Satan, and the impiety of his instruments to object the weakness and slips of our life past: but we say unto him, and unto them all, Tell us not what we have been: but tell me what by the mercy of God I am, and what by the strengthening Spirit of God I will be. I am a sinner, I confess it: howbeit, I am a penitent sinner. We are not therefore to be carried away with the consideration of men's persons and outward quality or condition of life, as country, or kindred, or sex, or age, or birth, or riches, or poverty, or learning, & such like; for as much as God giveth not his gifts according to the outward appearance of the person, but according to his wisdom and pleasure, which are always just, and respecteth not the rich more than the poor, for they are all the work of his hands, Job 34.19. This doth the blessed Virgin acknowledge, Luk. 1. that the Lord regarded the low estate of his handmaid, so that thenceforth all generations should call her blessed. Hence it is that he reproveth the human judgment of Samuel, beholding the person of Eliab the eldest son of Jesse, and saying, Surely the Lord's anointed is before him: Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature, because I have refused him: for the Lord seeth not as a man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart, 1 Sam. 16.7. Those whom God honoreth we must honor, and despise no man for the meanenesse of his place, and baseness of his person, and lowness of his condition. They are therefore justly to be reproveth that reject the Ministry of the word, in regard of the simplicity of their persons that are the Ministers: as they dealt with Christ our Savior, Is not this Joseph's son? from whence hath this man these things? and what wisdom is this which is given unto him? Is not this the Carpenter? the son of Mary? the brother of James and Ioses, and of Judah and Simon? and are not his sisters with us? Thus they were offended at him. Hence it is, that Christ saith unto them, A Prophet is not without honor, but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own house, Mar. 6.4. It skilleth not whether the Ministers be rich or poor, wise or simple, noble, or vnnoble; if they say unto us, Silver and gold have we none but such as we have we give unto you, Act. 3. we must accept of them and of the word of reconciliation, and account their feet beautiful that bring glad tidings of good things. Though they bring heavenly treasures in earthly vessels, yet the excellency of the power is of God: so that the meaner the person of the Minister is, the more we ought to magnify the Author of their ministry, remembering always that we ought not to have the faith of our glorious Lord Jesus Christ in respect of persons.

Thirdly, for as much as God vouchsafeth [Use 3] to choose weak agents to promote his causes and to further his works, we conclude from hence that fearful is the estate of the wicked; if their eyes were opened to behold it, and their hearts enlightened to take notice of it. Howsoever they set their horns & heads on high, and exalt themselves in their own pride, yet the poorest and simplest means strengthened of God, and armed by his power, shall be able to bring them down to the ground, and to lay their honor in the dust. They shall know one day that they fight against God, and rebel against the most High, who wanteth no weapons to destroy them; he can arm the least things against them, as we see in the destruction of the Egyptians, to wit lice, flies, frogs, grasshoppers, and such like, all brought upon them by the rod of Moses. This use is concluded by the Prophet Isaiah, Chap. 27.11. When the boughs thereof are withered, they shall be broken off: the women come, and set them on fire: for it is a people of no understanding, therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will show them no favor. He showeth in these words, and in this place, the certainty of the destruction of the enemies of the Church, their defended cities shall be desolate and left like a wilderness. But how shall this be? God needeth not the power of mighty enemies, he needeth not armies of men, or legions of Angels, or such like strong means to effect it, the women shall come and set them on fire, that is, weak means and silly creatures, even such as are by nature fearful, an army of Hartes shall have strength and courage enough when God setteth them on work. Great is the force of weak Soldiers under such a Captain. If they that have the least power and policy be made the Lord's workmen, and employed in his service; who shall be able to daunt them and to drive them from their work? who shall fray them and affright them, and make the rest of them turn their backs? They have their calling and commission, and they canneuer cease, until they have ended the business, and finished the work to which they were sent; according to that which Gamaliel saith of the preaching of the Apostles, being in themselves, & of themselves simple and unlearned men, Refraine from these men, and let them alone, &c. for if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it, lest haply ye be found even to fight against God, Act. 5. This is little regarded or considered of the enemies of God, and the persecutors of the Church, they run on in their wild courses, & think they can do what they list: whereas they lie open to every judgment, and every creature shall be able to work out their destruction.

[Use 4] Fourthly, seeing it seemeth good to God to accept of their service that seem farthest off and most unlikely to do him service: let no man presume upon the greatness of his gifts, and the excellency of his calling: let him not lift up himself above others, to think himself better & prefer himself before his brethren, neither contemn them of lower degree, of meaner place, of lesser gifts. The heart is of the Lord, the blessing is of the Lord, the success is of the Lord. Hence it is that the Apostle saith, Who maketh thee to differ from another? and what hast thou, that thou diddest not receive? Now if thou diddest receive it, why doest thou glory as if thou hadst not received it? 1 Cor. 4.7. Our Savior rebuketh a young man that would not give over the world, and telleth him, the first shall be last; and the last, first, Such as in the visible Church have the chief place, and in the opinion of men are in greatest account, because they carry the greatest name of piety and holiness, are nothing less inwardly then that which they appear outwardly, and therefore notwithstanding the room and reputation that they hold in earth, they shall be quite shut out of the kingdom of heaven, as was verified in the Scribes and Pharisees, and all hypocrites, who for a pretence made long prayers, but shall receive the greater damnation. This he showeth farther by the similitude of an householder, who hired laborers at all hours into his vineyard, and thereupon concludeth the point again, that the first shall be last, and the last first. Presume not therefore of thyself, neither glory in thine own works, nor boast of thine own gifts: it may please God to sanctify others to go before us, and to make them out run us that set out after us. He accepteth them that are of smaller gifts and lower place, and therefore we ought not to reject them or contemn them. When he chose special witnesses of those things that he spake and did, and sent them out to heal the sick, and raise the dead, and cleanse the lepers, to give sight to the blind, and to preach the Gospel, he did not call the learned & wise men of the world, but simple fishermen and such as the world accounteth idiots, and men of no fashion, or estimation. Such then as seem to be behind, are taken forward, and made more profitable then those that were before them. We see this in Amos, He was no Prophet, nor a Prophets son, but an heardman and a gatherer of Sycamore fruit: the Lord took him as he followed the flock, and said unto him, Go, Prophecy unto my people Israel. The like we might say of Paul, he was most unlike to be called and to be employed in the affairs of the Church, as himself confesseth, and the history of the Acts importeth, 1 Tim. 1.13. 1. Cor. 15.8, 9. Act. 8.1. and 9.1. Ephe. 3.8. He confesseth that before his conversion to the faith, he had been a persecutor, a blasphemmer, and injurious: consenting to the death of Stephen, and breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord: one borne out of due time, the least of the Apostles, the least of all Saints, not meet to be called an Apostle, but rather a destroyer of the faith of the brethren. But when he came to preach the faith which before he destroyed, he was nothing inferior to the chief Apostles; more then a Minister of Christ, in labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft; loving him very much, of whom he had received much, so that he gave no place to the residue of the Apostles.

Even as in the manner of the natural generation, we see that oftentimes, such as are of weakest nature and constitution of body, are blessed with increase of children, and a plentiful posterity, more then those that are of stronger complexion: so such as have mean gifts, and lesser knowledge, and perhaps never trained up in the schools of the Prophets, may save more souls, and bring more to God then such as have taken many degrees, and have attained to a great depth, and profoundnesse of learning, as we shall have occasion farther to show in this book. What then? are Universities to be despised? are schools of learning to no purpose? No: [Answer.] they are nourceries of knowledge, human and divine. They are as those rivers that water the garden of God. The Lord bless them that bless those places, and curse them that are enemies to the peace and prosperity of them, and thrust thorough their loins that wish their hurt, neither let them which go by, say, The blessing of the Lord be upon such, we bless you in the Name of the Lord. Nevertheless, the Lord is not bound to such as are brought up in those places: but maketh the labors of those that want the Arts and Tongues, being conscionable in their callings, very available, to the glory of his Name, and to the saving of many souls.

Lastly, we are put in mind of this duty, that [Use 5] we ought not to rest upon flesh and blood, as upon a reed that will deceive us, but upon God the Rock of our salvation. Some put their trust in horses, and some in chariots, Psal. 20. and some in Princes, Psal. 146. We can make no resistance against the weakest things, which are as warlike weapons, that never return empty, but even they shall be able to push us down and to prevail against us, and to destroy us utterly. Let us not therefore lift up our minds against God, but humble our selves before him. Our strength is nothing, our multitudes are nothing, our Armor and munition is nothing, if God fight against us. Let us not think to escape his hands, who is able to arm few against many, and the weak against the strong, as 1 Sam. 14.6. where Jonathan saith to the young man y^t bare his armor, Come and let us go over unto the Garison of these uncircumcised, it may be that the Lord will make for us: for there is no restraint of the Lord, to save by many or by few. The same in effect David speaketh to the Philistime, The Lord saveth not with sword and spear, (for the battle is the Lord's) and he will give you into our hands. Thus also Asa cried unto the Lord his God, when a great host of a thousand thousand, came out against him: Lord, it is nothing with thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power: Help us, O Lord, our God, for we rest on thee, and in thy Name we go against this multitude; O Lord; thou art our God, let not man prevail against thee. We must therefore renounce all pride in our selves, and that vain confidence which will deceive us. We have to do with God. If he will destroy us, and deliver us as a prey into the jaws of death, though there be no enemy to resist us, nor power of man to overcome us, yet we may not secure our selves, nor suffer our hearts to be compassed about with presumption, as with a chain, he is able with the breath of his nostrils to blow us away, that we shall be no more.

This use is concluded by the Prophet Jeremiah, chapter, 37.9.10. Thus saith the Lord, Deceiue not yourselves, saying, The Chaldeans shall surely depart from us: for they shall not depart. For though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained but wounded men among them, yet should they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire. Whereby we see that destruction of a kingdom, or of a city dependeth not upon a multitude of men, or upon the valiantness and violence of soldiers, but upon the pleasure of God, who executeth his judgments by what hands soever he will. For when a few and poor remnant remain, and those of wounded men half dead, and wholly unable to resist, even such as are thrust thorough with the sword, gasping for life, and ready to give up the Ghost: yet shall they recover the battle that was lost, and obtain the victory, and conquer the conquerer, and strike down as bulrushes the strongest and choicest men that before prevailed and had the upper-hand.

A notable example and memorable exploit whereof we have recorded in the Turkish history, concerning a Christian soldier, who sore wounded and all bloody, seeing Amurath the third king of the Turks, coming after the victory that he had obtained, to take a view of the dead bodies, which without number lay on heaps in the field like mountains, seeing him I say, rose up as well as he was able in staggering manner (as if it had been from death) out of an heap of slain men, and making toward him, for want of strength, fell down diverse times by the way as he came; at length drawing nigh unto him, as though he would have craved his life of the tyrant, and in honor of him have kissed his feet, suddenly stabbed him in the bottom of his belly with a short dagger, so that the conqueror was conquered, and presently died.

Thus it is with poor weak men when God strengtheneth them, for the feeble become strong, and the strong feeble.

32 These are those which were numbered of the children of Israel, by the house of their fathers, all those that were numbered of the Campes throughout their hosts, were fixe hundred thousand, and three thousand, and five hundred, and fifty.

33 But the Levites were not numbered among the children of Israel, as the Lord commanded Moses.

34 And the children of Israel did according to all that the Lord commanded Moses: so they pitched by their standards, and so they set forward everyone after their families, according to the house of their fathers.

Hitherto, we have spoken of the order prescribed unto Moses, and the people, to be observed: now followeth briefly the execution of the commandment, as the conclusion and shutting up of the Chapter, in these 3 verses. Howbeit before y^e performance thereof, Moses addeth two cautions necessary to be observed and considered. First, the total sum of them that were numbered before, which amounted to the number of six hundred thousand, and three thousand, five hundred and fifty. Loe, how great the blessing of God was in multiplying his people, and what the truth of his promise is, that he made to Abraham.

Secondly, the exemption of the Levites, who were acquitted and discharged out of the former muster, being appointed to another office of another nature, verse 33. Then is annexed the obedience it self, to the commandment of God: set down both generally, The children of Israel did according to all that the Lord commanded Moses: and then particularly in two points, They pitched by their standards, and they set forward everyone according to their families, according to the house of their fathers. No man murmured at the order of God, no man enuyed his superior, no man contemned his inferior, but all of them rested in his ordinance, & marched according to his direction and appointment. We learn from hence, that it is the duty of God's children [Doctrine 8] to yield obedience, not only to some, but to all the commandments of GOD. God requireth at our hands, a full and entire obedience.

Do we require commandments to confirm this unto us, or would we have examples? Let us consider both. And first for precept. The Apostle is plain, 2. Corin. chap. 7.1. Having these promises, let us cleanse our selves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. Where we see he persuadeth to make a through work, to cleanse our selves, not only from some filthiness, and to retain some, but from all: not only of the body, but of the soul, even of the whole man. Likewise, in the former Epistle, chap. 5.7. purge out the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. He confesseth that they were renewed and regenerated in part, and therefore concludeth, must proceed and go forward until the work be wholly finished. For the word is compounded, signifying not only to purge, but as much as may be possible to purge out quite and clean, as the Israelites were commended, when they celebrated the Passover to put away all leaven from them, so that whosoever had any in his house, should be cut off from his people.

To this purpose cometh the exhortation of the Apostle, Heb. 12.1. Seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience unto the race which is set before us. As if he had said, forasmuch as we have so great a multitude of believers (which he compareth to a cloud that is thickened, compacted, or gathered together in the middle region of the air, of vapors) we must do as they that run in a race; they do not only cast away clogges and impediments, but whatsoever may hinder them in their course, as the cares of this life, the delights of the world, the lusts of the flesh, and generally everything that may cloy us, and clog us in our spiritual journey.

Thus we see, how we are commanded to cleanse away all filthiness, to purge out all leaven, to cast aside every weight. Behold, how the Apostle addeth universal notes in every of these places. But are these precepts without examples? are they mere speculative considerations without their use? No: we have in the Scriptures of the New Testament, many among the faithful that receive this commendation from the mouth of God. It is noted concerning Noah,

Gen. 6.22. that he did according, to all that God commanded him, even so did he. It is recorded of Moses, that when Pharaoh did give them and their children liberty to go into the wilderness, to serve the Lord, only their flocks and their herds should be stayed: he answered boldly, Our cattle also shall go with us, there shall not an hoof be left behind, Exodus chapter 10.26. It is testified by the Evangelist Luke, touching Zechariah and Elizabeth, that they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord, blameless, Luke 1.6. All these particular testimonies do teach us, that it is our duty to labor earnestly and carefully to perform a pure and perfect obedience unto all the commandments of the Lord, that we may be entire, wanting nothing.

Now we come to the reasons, that we may [Reason] be farther confirmed in this truth. First, consider the nature of God, he is perfect in himself, and perfect in all goodness toward us. He faileth in nothing, so that he may truly say, what could I have done more then I have done? we must therefore answer in duty and obedience unto him. Hence it is, that Christ saith, Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven, is perfect, Matth. 5. If then we must be like him, and resemble him, we ought to strive to be like him in perfection.

Secondly, Christ Jesus is a perfect Savior, [Reason] a perfect redeemer, a perfect mediator. He hath fully finished our salvation, and he died to satisfy for all our sins. If he were but half a Savior, a party obedience might be sufficient on our part. But he never left the work of our redemption, until he had appeased the wrath of his Father, and nailed all our sins unto his Cross. This caused the Apostle to say, He gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works, Tit. 2.14. Seeing then that Christ Jesus hath redeemed us from all sin, it followeth necessarily that we should follow after all righteousness, and make conscience of all sin.

Thirdly, in respect of the commandments [Reason 3] themselves; for as an heathen man said of moral virtues, that they were linked together as in a chain, so that he which had one truly, had all of them: so we may much better say of the Laws of God, that as there is one lawgiver which is the Author of them all, so they are all knit in a knot together, that the knot cannot be loosed, but all are dissolved. Or they being ten words are as a band, having ten conditions; if one of them be broken, the whole band is forfeited. The testimony of the Apostle James fully accordeth and agreeth hereunto, chap. 2. Whosoever shall keep the whole Law, and yet faileth in one point, he is guilty of all: for he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the Law. Whosoever breaketh one commandment, and maketh no conscience thereof, but saith he doubteth not to be dispensed withal for it, and that he shall find God merciful unto him therein, hath made himself guilty of the whole Law and of the punishment due to the transgressors of it.

Fourthly, there is nothing done of us in [Reason 4] this flesh, but GOD will bring it into judgment. We run into many evils, because they seem little, and the hedge of God's word is easily leaped over. The wise man teacheth us, Eccl. 12. that God will bring every work unto judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil. If he said, God will bring many things to judgment, we might have hoped some things should be exempted. But forasmuch as we must account with him for all things, even for every idle word, (as our Savior teacheth) it followeth that we ought to make conscience of all our ways and works whatsoever.

Fifthly, all things commanded of God from [Reason 5] the greatest unto the least, are most just and equal, and therefore to be observed diligently without all parting or partiality. The Prophet reproveth the house of Israel, that said, The way of the Lord is not equal. But the Lord saith, O house of Israel, are not my ways equal? are not your ways unequal? This reason is urged by the Prophet David, Psal. 119. I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right: and I hate every false way. His testimonies are righteous and very faithful, which he hath commanded, and therefore he hateth from the bottom of his heart all wicked ungodly ways. So then, whether we consider the nature of God, that he is perfect; or the redemption of Christ, that it is perfect; or the dignity of the law that it is perfect: in all these respects, we conclude this truth as honey gathered from many flowers, That it concerneth everyone of us to yield obedience to all the Laws and commandments of God.

[Use 1] Now let us come to the uses which giveth an edge to the doctrine it self. And as it serveth to reprove, so the reproof is of diverse sorts.

First of all, it condemneth those that waste themselves, and spend their strength chiefly about the things of this world, and never labor after regeneration and the things of the Lord. These men never think of any obedience: How far then are they from perfect obedience? when will these come to the journeys end, that are not yet set forward in the ways? When will they finish their salvation, that have not yet made a beginning? How do they look to receive the price, that sit still, and do not yet run in the race? or how shall they obtain an incorruptible crown, that do not strive for the mastery? These think they have no souls to save, or that there is no God to serve, or that there is no life to come, or else they would not live as beasts, or as the horse and mule that are without understanding. If they live as men that regard not the kingdom of heaven, they shall one day know that there is an hell: and if they regard not to obey God, they shall hereafter reap the fruit of their disobedience. Samuel teacheth, that rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity, and therefore all such as reject the word of the Lord, he will also reject them from his kingdom, and from the glory of his presence.

Secondly, such are reprov'd as content themselves with a small measure of knowledge and obedience, of faith and repentance. For many there are in the Church that think they know enough, or at least y^t much knowledge is not necessary; like to the Deputy mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles, that the doctrine of Christ, was a matter needless, frivolous, impertinent, and unnecessary, and a curious question about words and names, whereof a man might be ignorant without danger.

Thus do these judge of religion and of the Law of God, they account basely of it, as a thing that may best be spared. If they had truly tasted of the sweetness of God's word, it would bring them altogether into love of it. Let us therefore labor to grow in grace until we come to perfection, 2 Pet. 3. For whosoever thinketh he hath already attained unto it, greatly deceiveth himself: we have as yet scarce laid the foundation, and do we as men besotted with folly and spiritual pride, imagine we are come to the top? We are like unto them that are in a dream, that think they are eating to the full, and behold when they awake they are hungry and empty: or they that deeply conceit they are drinking, and when they arise, they see they are thirsty: so is it with these men, they are fast asleep; and do but dream, when they suppose all the world is made of knowledge: whereas if they had shaken off this spirit of slumber, and were thoroughly come to themselves, they would bewail their own ignorance, and as poor blind souls condemn their own foolishness.

Let us therefore store our selves with it: we shall herein (if in anything beside) find the prouder be most true, that store is no sore. It is the ground of our obedience: forasmuch as we can obey no farther then we know. The servant can obey his masters will, no farther then he knoweth it. An ignorant servant must of necessity be a disobedient servant. So is it with every Christian man, his obedience cannot go beyond his knowledge.

Thirdly, it serveth fitly and fully to reprove those that do halt with God, and yield a maimed obedience unto him. The sacrifices of God under the Law, must be whole & sound, not halt, not maimed, not lame: so should our obedience be under the Gospel. Men will not allow of a servant that performeth such service as he requireth at his hands, when it is done to halves: and do we think to be accepted of God, when we cut off his worship in the middes? We deal with God as the king of Ammon dealt with David's messengers; he shaued off the one half of their beards, and cut off their garments in the middle, 2 Samuel chapter 10. verse 4. So do we shaue off half of his service, and think to make him be content with that or with nothing. If Christ Jesus had so rewarded us in performing the work of our redemption, and had left off before he had brought it to perfection, woeful had our condition been, it had been good we had never been borne. For if he had not thoroughly finished it, we could not have been saved. Hence it is, that in his prayer to his Father, he saith, I have glorified thee on the earth, I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. John 17. Why do we then reward him so unkindly? or what evil hath he done unto us, that we should deal so with him? As he teacheth, that we cannot serve God & Mammon: so we cannot serve God and our selves. There is no parting of stakes with him. He hateth party-coloured Christians, he will have the whole man, the whole obedience, or else he rejecteth all.

Saul performed part of his will, but because he did not all that he required, he was cast off, 1 Sam. 15. Would we have him partly to love us, and partly to hate us? partly to be pleased with us, and partly to be offended? God doth not thus divide his love and hatred. Whom he loveth, he loveth freely, wholly, effectually. He so loved us, that he spared not his own Son, but gave him for us. The like love ought we to return unto him again. Herod hearing John Baptist preach the word, reformed himself in many things, Mar. 6. Simon Magus was baptized, and professed the faith, and continued among the people of God, and wondered at the signs and miracles that were done. But except our righteousness do exceed the righteousness of these men, we cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven. All these are half Christians that serve God to halves, like the Jews that spake half Hebrew, and half Ashdod: and worship God in one part, and the devil in another, like the Colony of the strange nations transplanted in Samaria, that feared the Lord, and served their graven images also; who while they would needs do both, are expressly charged not to fear the Lord, neither to do after the statutes, and ordinances, and commandments, which the Lord commanded the children of Jacob, whom he named Israel. So is it with all such as yield an imperfect and unsound obedience; they think they serve God and obey his commandments, but they are greatly deceived, and they may justly be charged not to serve him at all.

For who required this half or halting obedience at their hands? Against all this maimed and mangled duty, we will oppose the practice of David, a man after God's heart, in the 119. Psalm, where he many times discovereth his zealous affection, as verses 5.6. O that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes then shall I not be ashamed when I have respect unto all thy commandments. And verse 13. with my lips have I declared all the judgments of thy mouth. And verse 101. I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I may keep thy word. Where we see his manner of serving the Lord, how far different it is from ours: he had respect unto all his commandments, & not to some only: he refrained his feet from every evil way, & not frō some only. Let us follow his worthy & holy example, and do that which is right in the sight of the Lord, and not turn aside from anything that he commandeth us all the days of our life; so shall God's name be glorified, so shall he be well pleased with us, and so shall we have comfort, and others instruction through our obedience.

Lastly, they are also reprov'd, that think it enough to serve God outwardly to be seen of men, and worship him through hypocrisy, like unto them that look to the garment, but neglect the body; so do these look to the body, but neglect the soul. For as we shown before, that he who maketh no conscience of one commandment, but of purpose and custom breaketh the same, is guilty of all, because if like occasion were offered▪ he would break all the rest, James chapter 2. verse 10. So such as look only to the outside, and to turn their face toward religion, do make it manifest that there is no religion in them at all.

It is strange to see how smoothly and devoutly some will carry themselves, who notwithstanding bewray the hollowness of their hearts. These are they that make clean the outside of the cup, and of the platter: that are like unto whited sepulchers, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness, Matthew chapter 23.25, 27. Thus it fared with Judas, he served God outwardly, and the devil possessed him inwardly. If a man could deceive the eternal God, as well as blind the eyes of a mortal man, there might be some color for this colorable worship. But God is not mocked. He that framed the heart, looketh into the heart, and searcheth into the corners and secret chambers of the heart. And albeit it be deceitful above all things, yet it cannot deceive him. There was never in any age, place for hypocrisy: but in regard of the loose and corrupt times into which we are cast, if we were but politic and worldly-wise, we would be anything, rather than hypocrites, which is to expose our selves to all infamy, contempt, and reproach. Religion among the greatest sort is made a by-word, and the religious make themselves a prey. What wisdom then is in us to lay open our selves to such indignities, obloquies, slanders, and false accusations, and in the mean season to want the inward peace of a good conscience, and true comfort of a pure heart, and that which is more then all, to want the favor of God, and his loving countenance toward us, who hateth us as his secret enemies for our hypocrisy? Hypocrites therefore are justly abhorred of God & man. They draw near to God with their mouths, but their minds are far from him, Matt. 15. Their worship is like to counterfect money, which is gilded outwardly: but within is nothing but brass, or such like base stuff, so that all is not gold that glistereth: Or like the apples which grow at the dead Sea (where sometimes Sodom and Gomorrhah stood) which are fair in color, beautiful in show, and marvelous in greatness; but when you come to touch them, or to handle them, they turn to dust, and cast out a filthy savor, more unpleasant to the nostrils, then they were pleasant before to the eyes. Thus it is with hypocrites, they appear beautiful before men, they love to be well thought off by them, and have many times more glorious shows then other that are more sound within, because they study nothing else but how to get the applause and praise of the world. Such a one was Judas among the Apostles: Such were Ananias and Sapphira among the disciples. Let us take heed we be not like them, or if we will be like them, let us know, that as we join with them in their sin, we must also partake with them in their punishments; who died not the common death of men, but the one hanged himself, the others were smitten with sudden death at the voice of Peter, as with a thunderbolt, so that they fell down, and never rose up again. A just reward of all such as have a conscience guilt, or rather guilty of the horrible sin of hypocrisy. If a man go about to deceive his neighbor, how is he spoken against? but if he go about like a wretch to cosin his master, or his father, how do all men point at him as a varlet, and abhor him as a beast? God is our Master, our Father, our Husband, our King, all Titles of honor are due unto him, and too little for him, forasmuch as no dignity, or excellency, or superiority, can be given unto him, but his Majesty and honor surmounteth them all: shall we then go about to deceive and circumvent him, though we could carry it away cunningly, and not be espied? Know therefore, that he detesteth all such wickedness, more then man doth the deceitfulness that is practiced against himself.

The first example of hypocrisy, that we have in the Scripture, is Cain; he came to the worship of God with his brother, but because his heart was not upright, God had no respect unto him, nor to his offering, no more then if he had cut off a dogs neck, or had offered swine's flesh, but rejected both his person and his oblation. The like he speaketh to the Israelites, that pleased themselves in outward ceremonies, and turned the worship of God into a lie, Behold, ye trust in lying words that cannot profit: will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other God's whom ye know not, and come and stand before me in this house, which is called by my Name, and say, We are delivered, to do all those abominations? Is this house which is called by my Name, become a den of robbers in your eyes? Behold, even I have seen it, saith the Lord, &c. Where we see, we cannot deceive the eye of the Lord with a lie, he knoweth our wicked hearts, and will find us out to bring us to shame in this life, and to destruction in the life to come. We may not dally with him, we cannot deceive him: notwithstanding all our windings and turnings, and altering our selves into all shapes, he will find us out to the contempt of our persons, to the shame of our faces, and to the astonishment of all that behold us.

Secondly, seeing it is a special duty belonging [Use 2] unto us, to yield obedience to the whole will of God and to all his commandments, we have from hence a preservative from the poison that is cast out against us, as it were dung in our faces, to make us deny the faith, renounce our Religion, and start back from our most holy profession. For seeing we must perform perfect obedience, and not limited as we think good, we have direction how to serve him, that he may accept of us, and be well pleased with us. If then Satan the master of all mischief, and the author of all confusion, raise up cursed instruments, brought up as cunning scholars in his own school, to scoff at us, and to scorn at our obedience, we must comfort our selves in the Lord, and commit our selves to the word of his grace, knowing that it is God who requireth this entire obedience at our hands, and delighteth in such sacrifice as is without blemish.

Let it not trouble us that we hear such slanderous words, such false reports, and devilish lies, cast out against us: let us commit our causes to him that judgeth uprightly, who will justify us in the ende, and condemn our enemies. Let us be able to say with the Prophet▪ All this is come upon us, yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant. These are the days of sin, wherein iniquity hath already gotten the upper hand, and such as are truly religious are made a proverb. God requireth of us that we be pure: but who are in greater disgrace, then such as study after purity and true holiness?

If we labor to lead our lives according to the Laws of God, we shall be upbraided with Puritanism: and as the enemies of Daniel could find no accusation against him, except they find it against him, concerning the Law of God: so do our enemies deal with us; when they can catch no advantage against us, they pick a quarrel with us about the Scriptures and our profession, as if it were a shame to read the Scriptures, or a disgrace to follow after holiness of life.

The Apostle teacheth, that we must be blameless, and pure, as the sons of God in the middes of a naughty and crooked nation, among whom we are to shine as lights in the world, Philippians chapter 2.15. And again, Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are of good report, think on these things. Our Savior, the author of our salvation, and the finisher of our faith, pronounceth that the pure in heart are blessed. Paul willeth his scholar Timothy to keep himself pure, and to take heed lest he make himself partaker of other men's sins. 1 Tim. 5.22. He commandeth all men to pray, everywhere lifting up pure hands without wrath or doubting: and to have the mystery of faith in a pure conscience. And in the second Epistle, he chargeth him to fly the lusts of youth, and to follow after righteousness, faith, love, and peace, with them that call on the Lord with pure heart. Here we see what God requireth of us and what he speaketh unto us; this is his voice that ought to sound evermore in our ears, Be blameless, be pure, be the sons of God, in the middes of a naughty nation; blessed are the pure: have pure consciences, pure hands, pure hearts; whatsoever things are pure, and of good report think on them. True it is, there have always been hypocrites in the Church, and there is a generation that are pure in their own eyes, and yet is not washed from their filthiness, Pro. 30.12. What then? shall we whip their faults upon the backs of those that are of no kin unto them? For the faithful, though they have in them many frailties, and infirmities, yet are washed by the blood of Christ, and by the Spirit of God from their sins, that they have no dominion over them, and exercise no kingdom in them. Was it ever allowed in any court of Justice and judgment, to take one for another, to accuse one for another, & to condemn one for another? It is the Law of God, that every soul should bear his own sin: that neither the father should bear the iniquity of the son, nor the son of the father: that the righteousness of the righteous should be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked should be upon himself, There was one hypocrite in the family of Christ: should this tend to the reproach of Christ himself, or of the rest of the disciples? ought they to bear the blame of his iniquity? or ought all to be censured alike? or ought we to make no difference? Thus it was in the family of Adam from the beginning, he had not only faithful Abel, but faithless Cain. Thus it was in the family of Noah, before the Flood, he had as well cursed Ham, as blessed Shem. Thus it was in the family of Abraham, and of Isaac, after the Flood; and where not almost? So that we are not to condemn all for some, one for another, the godly for the hypocrites.

But if we cannot call them back from this false judgment, and rash censuring of the innocent, let us comfort our selves in the uprightness of our own hearts; and when we cannot secure our selves from their unjust accusations, let us be careful and watchful over our ways, that we give them no just occasions. This shall be Armor of proof, and as a brazen wall, to give no offense, and to keep a clear conscience before GOD and men. If then they reproach us, and speak all manner of evil against us, let us possess our souls with patience, and let us rejoice and be glad, in as much as we are partakers of Christ's sufferings. The Spirit of glory, and of God resteth upon us. Let us not be ashamed, but glorify God in this behalf. Thus we shall make them ashamed, that falsely accuse our good conversation. It falleth out no otherwise with us, then it hath done with y^e Saints, and dearest servants of God.

The Apostle putteth us in mind of this truth, by occasion of that fell out in Abraham's house, which then was y^e visible Church of God, Gal. 4. As then he that was borne after the flesh, persecuted him that was borne after the spirit: even so it is now. It seemeth strange unto them, that you run not with them unto the same excess of riot, and therefore they speak evil of you, who shall give account to him that is ready to Judge the quick and the dead, 1 Pet. 4.5. But let not us think it strange to suffer for Christ's sake, who suffered much more for us, the just for the unjust, and bare our sins in his own body on the tree, leaving us an example, that we should follow his steppes. If any man therefore suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed, but let him glorify God in this behalf, knowing that hereunto he is called. Affliction for the Gospel is the badge of Christ, and an exceeding honor before men and Angels: so that when we are reviled, and reproached, let us not render like for like, nor be dismayed or pulled back from our profession, but go lustily forward, as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. according to the exhortation of the Apostle, Be not ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, but be partaker of the affliction of the Gospel, according to the power of God. 2. Tim. 1.8. that we may be able truly to say, I know whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day. It is better to obey God then man: and to incur the displeasure of man, then to procure and purchase the indignation of God.

We have not yet resisted unto blood, neither have we endured the fiery trial, as many of our dear brethren and sisters have done before us.

Let us not be daunted with a word, or with big looks, and stern countenances, but rather prepare our selves for a fresh assault and new encounter, and say with the Apostle, With me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgment, yea, I judge not mine own self, 1 Cor. 4.3.

Lastly, considering the manner of that obedience [Use 3] which we owe, and ought to perform to God, it is our duty to endeavor to please him in all things, and to labor to obey him carefully & circumspectly in all his commandments. The nearer we come to the mark set before us, the more we please him; & the more we please him, the better we are accepted of him. The Apostle Paul had run long in this race, he had made many straight steps toward the kingdom of heaven, yet he saith, I have not already attained unto perfection, but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus: this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, & reaching forth unto those things which are before. Such as come nearest to obey all the laws of their Prince, are most of all commended, and are accounted the best Subjects: such as perform all the commandments of their masters, are accounted to be the best servants: and such as execute the will of their fathers, and please them in all things, are reputed to be the best children. How then cometh it to pass, that whereas zeal is commended in everyone, in the subject toward his Prince, in the soldier toward his Captain, in the servant toward his Master, &c. such should be least commended, nay altogether discommended and disgraced, that perform most duty to GOD, and labor to bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ? 2 Cor. 10, 5. It is strange to see how precise the most men are in all other things, and how loose and licentious in the matters of God, wherein notwithstanding we ought to be most conscionable. It is to be wondered at, to behold the preciseness that is in the world, in all matters, except in religion. We are very curious to have our apparel sit neatly and smoothly, that it be without spot or wrinkle: much more then ought we to be curious and careful in the discharge of our duties unto God, according to the rule of his word. In all things that concern the body, whether meat, or drink, or apparel, or our own delights, no man is ignorant how straight and strict men are. Their eyes are so quick, their ears so dainty, their taste so delicate, that if the least thing be amiss, or out of square, they are displeased and discontented: and yet these men, in things of an higher nature, and concerning a better life, run so wide, and take such liberty, that they think to please God with anything, and to make him take half stakes with them. If we have any garments made for us, and brought unto us, which have anything amiss in them, that we find them not exactly fit for us, but either too big or too little, too long or too short, too wide or too straight, we fret and fume, we chide and chafe, as men beside our selves. Oh, that there were such harts in us to please God Oh, that we would look so narrowly to our own souls. In our apparel, nothing must be out of order in matter or form, to the very skirts and borders of them: but in our lives we can be content to be out of frame, to have poor, rent, and ragged souls, and never to put upon us the righteousness of Jesus Christ, as the richest robes, and most precious garment. The like we require in dressing our meats, which we do in attiring of our bodies; which are ordained for the belly, and the belly for them, albeit God will destroy both it and them, 1 Cor. 6, 13. The least fault is soon espied, the offenders like to be turned out of service, and we soon driven out of our little patience. Nay, in our ordinary delights and recreations, which serve only to please the ear, we see how he that is skillful in music, cannot abide the least jarre and discord, if he espy one finger set out of order, or hear the missing of one minim rest, how impatient is he? how much discontented? how doth he testify his dislike with hand and foot? But touching the leading of our lives and the ordering of our actions, whereupon dependeth the everlasting salvation or damnation of our souls, though there be a thousand jars, and ten thousand discords in them, we think the harmony good enough, and all things to be in tune. This use that now we urge, hath many branches, as furtherances of purity and perfection in us.

First, we must labor to have pure and upright hearts, which giveth life to all our actions, and is much accepted of God. It is the counsel of the wise man, Prov. 4. Keep thy heart with all diligence: for out of it are the issues of life: and chap. 23. My son, give me thy heart, and let thine eyes observe my ways. It is as the wheel of the clock, that moveth all the rest: it is the root that giveth life to the boughs and branches, and maketh the Tree yield his fruit. It is the fountain that sendeth forth sweet or bitter waters. Heerevpon the Apostle exhorteth, Heb. 3. Take heed brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. A pure heart is the scourge of hypocrisy, and as a strong hammer that serveth to break it in pieces. This is first to be looked unto; reform it, and thou art all clean. It is the direction that Christ giveth unto us, Math. 23. Cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also. It is a vain thing to be clean without, & unclean within: to have the outward man appear fair and smooth; and the heart to be foul and filthy. Such then as begin not at the heart, begin at the wrong end. They take long and needless pains, that think to stop the streams, while they let the spring alone. The heart in the body is the member that first hath life in it: so is it in the spiritual life. Hence it is, that the Scripture commendeth unto us the simplicity of the heart, Eph. 6, 5. Col. 3, 21 the circumcision of the heart, Rom. 2, 29: the meditation of the heart, Psal. 19, 15: the uprightness of the heart, 1 Kings 3, 6: a wise & an understanding heart, 1 Kings 3, 9: a perfect heart, 2 Kings 20, 3. 1 Chron. 28, 9: a faithful heart, Nehem. 9, 8: an upright heart, Psal. 11, 2: a pure heart, Psal. 24, 4. Math. 5: a prepared and fixed heart, Psal. 57, 7, and 108, 1, and 112, 7: an honest and good heart, Luc. 8, 15: joyfulness and gladness of heart, Deut. 28, 47; a broken and a contrite heart, Psal. 51, 17: a tender heart, 2 Chron. 34, 24: an heart of flesh, Ezek. 11, 19: a new heart and new spirit, Ezek. 18, 31, and 33, 26: a purified heart, Acts 15, 9: an enlarged heart, 2 Cor. 6, 11: the good treasure of the heart, Luc. 6, 45: and a true heart, Heb. 10, 22. These and many such like testimonies, teach us to begin our repentance from dead works and reformation of life at the heart, & that until we set our hearts and our souls to seek the Lord, we dally with God, and never seriously set upon that work.

Secondly, we must be free from any purpose to live in any known sin, and must be inclined to everything that is good, so that we should be able to say with Paul, 1 Cor. 4, 4. I know nothing by myself, yet I am not hereby justified, but he that judgeth me is the Lord. The Apostle knew nothing for which he should condemn himself. Hence it is, that the Prophet saith, Psal. 119. I have inclined mine heart to perform thy statutes always, even unto the end. And a little before he saith in the same Psalm, I have sworn and will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments. So ought all the faithful to bind themselves by a solemn vow and promise to stir up their zeal, and kindle their affections to all good duties. It is recorded to the perpetual praise & commendation of Asa, that he moved the people of Judah and Benjamin to enter into a covenant to seek the Lord God of their Fathers with all their heart, and with all their soul, That whosoever would not seek the Lord God of Israel, should be put to death, whether small or great, man or woman: And they sware unto the Lord with a loud voice, and with shouting, and with Trumpets, and with Cornets: And all Judah rejoiced at the oath, for they had sworn with all their heart, and sought him with their whole desire, and he was found of them, and the Lord gave them rest round about, 2 Chron. 15. Happy are they that set before them this example, as a pattern and president unto them, to resolve fully with themselves to cast from them all sin as a filthy clothe, and to settle their hearts to seek the Lord, and to hate with an unfeigned hatred, whatsoever may be any hindrance or impediment unto them.

Thirdly, we must all take notice of our own wants and imperfections, and earnestly bewail them and mourn for them. It is a degree toward perfection, to acknowledge & confess our imperfections, and to be grieved for them. For no man can have a feeling of infirmities, but by the work of God's sanctifying Spirit. It is a grace of God to know the want of grace. The ungodly are not acquainted with it, they think themselves full, they hunger and thirst after carnal things, but never after spiritual and heavenly things. The blessed Virgin in her song showeth, that He hath filled the hungry with good things, and the rich he hath sent empty away, Luc, 1, 53. There is a perfection in God's children accompanied with much imperfection, and strength mingled with much weakness, Phil. 3, 15. So that albeit the faithful find their own infirmities, yet they do not please themselves in thē, but continually strive against them, and more and more get the upper hand of them.

Fourthly, we must make conscience of the least sin, that we may be afraid of the greatest. When David had cut off the lap of Saul's garment, his heart smote him, 1 Sam. 24, 5. How could he be induced to shed one drop of his blood, that confessed he ought not to have touched the lap of his garment? The Apostle requireth of us to abstain from all appearance of evil, 1 Thess. 5, 22. If we cast out the mote that is in our eyes, we cannot suffer a beam to stick in them. If we would learn indeed and in truth to strain at a gnat, we should not so easily swallow a Camel. The wages of all sin is death, and therefore we should fear to run into any sin. Pull out the sting of this serpent in the beginning. Cure this sickness at the first, lest it grow incurable. Cut down the tree while it is young and green; one stroke now will do more good, then an hundred when it is grown old, and tough, and hard. The labor is little at the beginning, but custom in sinning, groweth into another nature.

Fifthly, we must grow from good to better. We must not always be babes and sucklings, children and weaklings, but evermore grow in grace. There is a perfection of Christians to which we must be led, as Heb. 6, 1: where he moveth them, that leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, they should go on to perfection, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God. Not that any perfection can be attained in this life, as the Anabaptists and other fantastical persons dream off most falsely, not knowing themselves nor the law of God: but we must aim at it as at a mark, and make it the end of all our works, forasmuch as in the School of Christ we must wax old, evermore learning somewhat. God accounteth us as pure, & accepteth us as pure (albeit we attain not unto the parts of perfect purity,) for these causes and considerations of apprehension, regeneration, imputation, and glorification. For though we be sanctified in part, yet Christ calleth the Church his Love, all fair, pure as the Sun, clear as the Moon, bright as the Morning; because we lay hold on the righteousness of Christ by faith, the work of regeneration is begun in everyone of us, and goeth forward by degrees; the perfect purity and perfection of Christ is ours for the present, in whom we are accounted pure: and for the time to come, we have the promise of glorification, when we shall be without spot or wrinkle, and made so absolutely pure, as if we had never been defiled with sin.

Lastly, it is our duty to pray unto God to give us upright hearts, which in themselves are crooked and corrupt. The Apostle in the shutting up of the Epistle to the Hebrews, prayeth for them, that God would make them perfect in every good work to do his will, working in them that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ. That which we desire for another, we ought much more to crave and ask for our selves. Hence it is, that the Apostle assureth his own heart, that the LORD would deliver him from every evil work, and preserve him unto his heavenly Kingdom, 2. Tim. 4, 18. If this means be diligently practiced of us, we shall grow more and more in good things, we shall abolish the kingdom of sin and Satan in us, so that the Lord which hath begun his good work in us, will perfect the same unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

CHAP. III.

1. These also are the generations of Aaron and Moses, in the day that the Lord spake with Moses in Mount Sinai.
2. And these are the names of the sons of Aaron: Nadah the first borne, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.
3. These are the names of the sons of Aaron the Priest, which were anointed, whom he consecrated to minister in the Priests Office.
4. And Nadab and Abihu died before the Lord, when they offered strange fire before the Lord, in the wilderness of Sinai, and they had no children: and Eleazar and Ithamar ministered in the Priests Office in the sight of Aaron their father.

WE have already shown, that the numbering of y^e Israelites (which of a small stock grew to so many millions) is of two sorts, one of the people fitted for the wars, the other, of the Priests and Levites that were to minister to God. This whole multitude consisting partly of the people, & partly of the Ministers, are all of them warriors and soldiers, howbeit there is a twofold war, civil, and sacred. Now, of such as were to wage the civil war, we have spoken before in the former chapters. It remaineth to entreat in this and the Chapter following, of such as follow another war, and belong to another warfare, and are another kind of warriors. The former is opposed against temporal and bodily enemies, but this against spiritual: and both of them have their several Captains, their swords, their armor, their furniture, their victories. The former war is carnal & profane; this is sacred and holy. The General is Christ Jesus, The Captain of the Lord's host, Josh. 5, 14. The enemies are Satan, the world, and the flesh: the armor, is as the war, wholly spiritual; for our warfare is not carnal, yet mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth it self against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ, 2 Cor. 10, 4, 5. We fight not against flesh & blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places, Eph. 6, 12. And therefore our whole armor must be of the same nature, that it may be of proof, able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked: our breast-plate must be made of righteousness: our shield must be of faith, which is our victory: our helmet must be of salvation: our sword wherewith we are to be girded, is the word of God. Hence it is that the Apostle exhorteth Timothy a Minister of the Gospel, to be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus, and to endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, 2 Tim. 2, 1, 3. Now then, as we observed in the two former chapters, concerning the mustering of the people, both their number, and their order: the like we are to consider in handling the rest that remain, who were exempted out of the former training, to wit, the Priests and the Levites. For first of all, Moses numbereth them according to their persons, then according to their order and ministry. Touching their persons, in this chapter: touching their ministry, in the fourth chapter. So then in this place the Tribe of the Levites is numbered, who were selected and separated to the work of the ministry, that they might therein serve God and his people.

In this Chapter we are to observe two things: first, a transition or passage by way of preface to this holy numeration, distinct from the former in the 13. first verses: secondly, the numbering it self, in the rest of the chapter. Touching the first point, which is the entrance, we must consider in it two other points, first, a description of the Tribe of Levi and of the family of Aaron; forasmuch as Moses and Aaron the two heads of the people, descended out of that Tribe, as is more at large declared in the book of Exodus: and this is amplified by the circumstance of time, in the beginning of the first verse, In the day that the Lord spake with Moses in Mount Sinai: as if he had said, Now it is time to proceed to speak of the Tribe of Levi, and to set down how great the number of thē was, when God commanded them to be numbered at Mount Sinai, (for as yet the people was not departed from thence where the law was given) but first I will rehearse the names of the sons of Aaron, who, above or before others were appointed to the Priest-hood. Secondly, the presentation of the Levites before Aaron to be numbered, which we will reserve to be handled afterward in his proper place.

Touching the description of Aaron's house and family (whereon the numbering of the Priests depended) First, his sons are reckoned, and their ministry declared, verse 2, and 3. of which we have heard more particularly in the book of Leviticus, chap. 8, and 9. Then the destruction of two of them (which were the eldest) is set down: for when they transgressed the Commandment of God, & offered strange fire before him, they were consumed and confounded; which is briefly repeated in the 4. verse, but at large expressed in the 10. chapt. of Leviticus: whereby it came necessarily to pass, that two being cut off, and leaving no issue behind them, that there remained only two heads or families of the Priests, to wit, of Eleazar and Ithamar.

[Verse 1. These are the generations of Aaron, &c:] We see in this place, how Moses immediately after the numbering up of the people, that meddled not with the ministry of the word, or killing of the sacrifices, or administering of the Sacraments, or serving in the Tabernacle, or carrying of the Ark, or teaching of the people, handleth in the next place the form and fashion of the ministry, that labored and spent themselves in the former things. For let there be never so great order, or good policy in the Common-wealth, yet if the care of the ministry be neglected, all is to little purpose. We see from hence, the goodly order that GOD observeth in this great army, he establisheth among them most carefully the holy Ministry, to the ende they might be taught and instructed in the word. [Doctrine 1] Heereby we learn, that among all nations & people under the heavens, the ministry of the word ought to be planted and established. I say, there is a great and absolute necessity of a standing and settled ministry among all sorts and conditions of men, to guide them in the ways of godliness. This appeareth evidently from the beginning: for rather then there should be no teaching, God himself was the Pastor and Teacher, the Priest and Prophet of his Church, and instructed them immediately by his own voice, without the ministry of man: he was then the Shepherd, and they the sheep: he the master, and they the Scholars. So he appeared to Adam and taught him, and likewise his posterity after him. Then there was no need of any other Doctor or instructor, he was all in all. For as a man need not light a Candle at noon day thereby to see, when as the Sun shineth clearly in his strength: no more needed man in his innocence to be taught by man, seeing he enjoyed the bright Sun-shining of God's glorious presence. But when once mankind began to multiply and increase out of one house into diverse families, as a tree displaying it self into many branches, God raised up ordinary and extraordinary Teachers. For the father of the family, was the King and Priest of it: a King, to rule: a Priest, to teach the will of God to his children. Hence we read, that Enoch the seventh from Adam prophesied of the second coming of Christ to judgment, with ten thousands of his Saints, to execute judgment upon all ungodly sinners. So then he was a Prophet raised up of God in those corrupt times, to reprove sin, and to convince all that were ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds, which they ungodly committed. After him he stirred up Noah, a Preacher of righteousness, while the Ark was in preparing, when the long suffering of God waited an hundred & twenty years for their conversion. Besides, that the people of God might be sufficiently provided for, the first borne were also sanctified to this Office, as we shall see afterward in this chap, and the chap. following: and lastly, in their stead the Tribe of Levi were set apart, in whom alone it continued (excepting the Prophets that had a special calling) while the Synagogue stood, even unto Christ: who, when he ascended and led captivity captive, gave gifts unto men at his pleasure, and appointed some Apostles, some Evangelists, some Pastors and Teachers, for the perfecting of the Saints, and for the edifying of the body of Christ. We see in this place, that so soon as the law was given in Mount Sinai, God appointed those that should publish and preach the same: and so soon as the Tabernacle was erected, he ordained Aaron and his sons to attend upon it, and to perform their several duties according to his direction and appointment. Thus also did the Apostles deal, so soon as they had preached the Gospel, according to the commission and commandment they had received, & thereby gained a people unto God, they settled a ministry to continue, and appointed Elders and Pastors over that people, for the propagation of true religion, and the strengthening of God's servants in all good duties. This appeareth in the Acts of the Apostles; Paul and Barnabas confirmed the souls of the Disciples, and exhorted them to continue in the faith, and when they had ordained them Elders in every Church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whō they believed, Acts 14, 23. Likewise the Apostle left Titus in Crete, that he should set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain Elders in every City, as he had appointed him, Titus, 1, 5. Thus we see what the practice of the holy Apostles was toward the Churches which they had planted, so that in all kingdoms, and Countries, and Congregations converted to the true faith, the ministry of the word must be firmly established, well seen unto, and regarded, both to bring them to God, and to settle them in God, and to continue them with God, that they may abide his for evermore.

[Reason 1] Let us search into the reasons hereof, for the confirming of us farther in this truth. First, a certain and settled ministry, is an evident sign and token that God hath a Church and people to be won and begotten by the precious and immortal seed of the word, which is the seed of regeneration, and by their ministry, whom he sendeth and sanctifieth to teach them in the truth. Where he will have much labor to be bestowed, and more planting & watering to be used then in other places, he hath much people to be gained and gathered unto him: where he will have little pains bestowed, there he hath a small people and a little company to be saved. Where he will have no teaching, he hath no Church to be collected and converted unto the faith. When Paul had preached the Gospel, & planted a church at Corinth, and was ready to have departed, The Lord spake unto him in the night by a visian, Be not afraid, but speak and hold not thy peace, for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee; for I have much people in this City. He must labor more plentifully and abundantly among them, because God had a greater people in that place. On the other side, where he would not have them exercise their ministry, it is a sign and token he hath no people there. No laborers, no corn: no harvest men, no harvest: no shepherds, no flock. Hence it is, that when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the Region of Galatia, they were forbidden of the holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia: and after they were come to Mysia, they assaied to go into Bithynia, but the Spirit suffered them not, Acts 16, 6, 7. Thus we see that a standing ministry is a sign of a Church, and where the word is not, there is no Church.

[Reason 2] Secondly, without the light of the word, the people remain in darkness and cannot see, they grope at noon days, and know not what they do, as it was in Egypt, when the plague of palpable darkness was sent among them, they saw not one another, neither arose any from his place, Exod. 10, 23. Thus it fareth with those that want the light of the candle, or the shining of the Sun of God's word among them; they lie under one of the most heavy plagues that can be: but whē the word is sent unto them, they have a great light to direct them in their ways, according to the saying of the Prophet, Isaiah 60, 2, 3. The darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee: and the Gentiles shall come to thy light, & Kings to the brightness of thy rising. Such then as have not the ministry of the word, are as a crew or company of infidels, & as an heard of brute beasts and cattle that are running on heaps to their destruction; or like to those swine of the Gadarenes, into which the devils entered at the permission of Christ, so that they ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters, Math. 8, 32.

Thirdly, the necessity of a ministry is so [Reason 3] clear and evident, that all the Gentiles had their Priests and Prophets that attended on their profane and superstitious Altars: and it was their first care to establish a religion, such as it was, among them. This were easy to be shown by the testimonies of antiquity out of all histories and records, to have been observed in all places, at all times, among all people. After that Rome was built, and a sufficient people assembled in it, immediately they established the worship of their gods, indeed a false worship of false gods, but thereby they testified their great devotion, and their service and sacrifice done unto them, so that they erected a College pontifical, & ordained Bishops, and instituted an High Priest to have authority over their Ceremonies and Laws. From hence cometh the saying in the Poet, A Jove principium: that is, Let us make beginning with GOD. But to omit these, we see how Jeroboam that made Israel to sin, setting up his two Calves, appointed his Priests to attend at them. Ahab and Jezebel had their idolatrous Chaplains & many Prophets of the groves, 1 Kings 18, 19. The colony brought from Babylon, and placed in Samaria, are said to make a mixture of religion, and to make unto themselves of the lowest of them, Priests of the high places, which sacrificed for them in the houses of the high places, 2. Kings 17. Thus we see, that among the very infidels, No Priest, no religion. If it were thus among them who saw darkly, and were without the true light of the Scripture: much more ought we to learn it, that have been taught better things, and have the sure word of the Prophets to guide us.

Fourthly, such is our frailty and weakness, [Reason 4] that notwithstanding we live under a settled ministry, and have given our names to the faith, and have yielded some obedience to the truth, yet we are ready to start back again. For as the body is prone to pine away without supply of daily food, so are our souls ready to perish, being destitute of the heavenly Manna of the word of God. The wise man saith, Where is no vision, the people perish: but he that keepeth the Law, happy is he, Prov. 29, 18. The preaching of the word, is the ordinary means of salvation, and therefore without it the people perish. The people of Zebulon and Naphtali, were in the shadow of death, until Christ came among them, and was revealed unto them, Math. 4, 15, 16. The Prophet teacheth, that the people are destroyed for lack of knowledge, Hos. 4,

6. When Moses was absent from the host of the Israelites only forty days, they fell into idolatry, & worshipped the Calf, Exod. 32. So where the Minister and ministry of the word is wanting, there for the most part no evil is wanting, but swarms of drunkards, adulterers, swearers, thieves, liars, and all kind of impieties do abound and overflow. These are (alas) too rife where the word is taught diligently, and published in season and out of season: nevertheless, where it is duly and conscionably preached, without respect of persons, it toucheth the harts of some, represseth the corruptions of others, & is as a warning piece and watchword unto all: so that all persons and people whatsoever, & wheresoever, must live under the ordinary hearing and frequenting of the word of God.

[Use 1] The uses remain to be handled, which ought especially to be marked of us. First, there is offered unto us this truth arising from the doctrine it self, that the preaching of the word by the Minister, and the hearing of it by the people, is no ceremony nor a matter of indifferency, such as may either be done or left undone at our own discretion or disposition; but it is such a part of the public service of God, as ought not to be omitted or neglected without great sin, and breach of the fourth Commandment, which serveth to establish the ministry of the word. It is above the works of mercy and compassion, & therefore the most profitable work that can be done to the sons of men. It is a more excellent and much greater gift to do good to the soul, then to do good to the body, inasmuch as the soul is more precious then the body.

Hence it is, that the Apostles gave over ministering to the poor & attending to their necessities, because they would give themselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word, Acts 6, 4. And before this in the second chapter, describing the Church after the ascension of Christ, he saith, the Disciples continued steadfastly in the Apostles doctrine, and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. Where he placeth continuance in the Apostles doctrine and breaking of bread, before fellowship and communion in temporal things. It is one special mark of a man and woman truly fearing God, to be a diligent hearer of the word of God, and a continual resorter to the preaching of it, and a careful frequenter of the house of God. We see this in Simeon; he came often into the Temple, and thereby he found Christ, when his parents brought him in their arms, to do for him after the custom of the Law, Luc. 2, 27, 37, 41. The like we might say of Anna a Prophetess, which departed not from the Temple, but served God with fastings & prayers night and day, verse 37. So Joseph and Mary went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the Passover, by custom and commandment. This was the cause of the great godliness and wonderful zeal that was in David, that he desired nothing more, then to appear before the face of God among his Saints. This his affection he testifieth in many places, Psal. 27, 4. One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after: that I may dwell in the house of the Lord, all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his Temple. There is always good hope of such persons, so long as they use the means to be recovered. A sick person may not be despaired off, so long as he is content to use the help and counsel of the Physician, albeit he be very dangerously sick: but when once he refuseth his direction, then we may look for nothing but death. Thus the case standeth with all men; so long as we forsake not the word, there is hope of salvation: when once we refuse it, there is fear of destruction both of soul and body. Wherefore, we are to judge well and charitably of such as are religious frequenters of the holy exercises of faith: such are never past hope, there is some sign of life in them: and we have more comfort and greater assurance of such, albeit unjust & unclean, then of any civil man that refuseth the means.

Many in the world stumble at the offensive lives of evil professors; but certainly whatsoever men judge, there is more hope of the worst professor that heareth the word and attendeth unto it, then of the best civil men that in profaneness of heart refuse it, and that for two reasons. First, these men though they be evil, yet use good means, which have from time to time done good upon others as bad as they, & therefore may in time to come by the mercy of God, and blessing upon the means, do good also unto them, & be effectual in them. If it do not prevail at one time, yet it may at another. The reformation of a sinner is not wrought at a sudden, but by little & little, like the water that pierceth the hard stone by customable and continual dropping upon it. If thou seest two men most dangerously sick of diverse diseases, and all mortal except they be cured, and one of them putting himself under the Physicians hand, the other rejecting altogether both physic and the Physician; whether of these is more likely to be restored and to live? Is not he that taketh the receipt and medicine that is ministered? So is it in the sicknesses of the soul. If we hearken to the word, which is a spiritual medicine to heal every malady, we may be reclaimed. The word is as a dragnet cast into the Sea, which gathereth of every kind, Mat. 13. Yea, it is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, Heb. 4, 12. Secondly, it is a sign that those which use the means are not yet sold and settled to continue in sin: for there is no man whose heart is fully set in him to do evil and follow wickedness, that can patiently endure & be content to be an ordinary frequenter of religion, whensoever it is publicly taught and preached. True it is, they may sometimes come to the word for custom, or company, or fear, or praise, or because they have nothing else to do, and cannot tell how else to spend away the time: but if they come ordinarily & continually, they are not become desperate. The hammer of God's word may break their harts, and enter into their souls. As for those that regard not to serve GOD, and use not the assemblies of his worship, they are of all other most wicked and profane, and may justly be said to be of the forlorn hope. They are at the point of death, they lie gasping for breath, nay they are come to the brink of hell. Thus then we see that the preaching of God is of absolute necessity, whether we be converted or not converted, whether we do believe or not yet believe, nay, it is in a manner the only necessary thing. It is the opiniō of many wretched men that are not worthy to breathe in the common air, that it bringeth a great charge and heavy burden upon the people without any necessity, and that it is a needless work; but they are far deceived, as we shall see afterward. Wherefore Christ our Savior commending the practice of Mary, that sate at his feet and heard his word, saith unto her sister, Thou art careful, and troubled about many things, but one thing is needful, and Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her. See how contrary these men are unto Christ, and their words to the words of Christ. Can they then be good Christians that are led by a spirit contrary unto Christ? He telleth us that the hearing of the word is necessary: they say it, & by their practice seal to it, that it is not necessary. Can light and darkness be more contrary then these two? He teacheth that this is one necessary thing; they are not ashamed to affirm with tongues set on fire of hell, that among all unnecessary things this is most idle and unprofitable. This is a deep judgment of God upon them for their contempt of his ordinance. This bewrayeth the corruption of their hearts, that indeed they are of no religion. For he that learneth not religion by the word, never yet knew what true religion meaneth. Such then as have not a settled ministry and Minister to resort unto, are for the most part unsettled in their opinions, unconstant in religion, and unstable in all their ways. Sometimes they hold one thing, sometimes another, and sometimes nothing at all; as a reed that is carried to and fro with the winds, as a weathercocke that turneth often in a day, and stagger hither & thither like a drunken man. And such as live under a ministry planted according to the institution of Christ, but have not their ears settled to hear the fame, forasmuch as they come once, and miss twice, slip in & out of the Church at their pleasure, hear one Sermon, and absent themselves from another; their conscience is seared with an hot iron, & their sin is come up to heaven. Ignorant they are, & will learn nothing: they are fickle in matters of faith and godliness, knowing no point of religion as they ought to know, neither being able to give an account of the hope that is in them. These starters that come and go when they please, have not so much as the outward show of a true Christian, much less the truth of the heart that is within: neither can they look for any blessing from him from whom all blessings do proceed, as from the Father of lights. To conclude then, the power of Satan is great to hold man in sin, but the word is as the Scepter of God to break it, that we may escape, and to overthrow his kingdom. The seventy Disciples, sent out by Christ into every City and place whither he himself should come, returned again with joy, saying; Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy Name. And the Lord said unto them, I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven, Luke 10. Behold, how necessary the preaching of it is to all people, to which we ought all to subscribe.

Secondly, it serveth to reprove diverse abuses, [Use 2] I will name three in particular. First, such as think & spare not to say, that the ministry is a vain and superfluous thing, and that the Ministers are men that may very well be spared, as if they were a sixth finger upon the hand, or a sixth toe upon the foot, that is, bringing a burden rather than a benefit; and that their labors may be spared also, inasmuch as they bring with them, in their opinion, needless charges and unnecessary expenses. For as they account the Sabbath the loss of one day in a week, the loss of one week in a month, & the loss of one year in seven: so they account the maintenance of the ministry the loss of their goods and substance, and a departing with the tenth part of their labors to no purpose. These have learned another language then the tongue of Canaan: they do not the works that beseem Christians, and they cannot speak as beseemeth those that profess the fear of God, if so be they do profess so much. Is it a needless thing to have the light of the Sun in the Firmament, without which all things are covered with darkness, and nothing can have life and quickening? But the Sun is not more necessary to be in the world, thē the light of the word in the church to give life and light unto them that sit in darkness, Math. 4.16. Is a candle needless to be in the house in the night season, to give light to them that are in it? The Church is the golden candlestick, & the word is the candle that shineth in our hearts to guide us in all our ways, Mat. 5, 15. Luk. 8,

16. Is it needless to have laborers to reap down our corn in time of harvest? To have meat brought unto us and provided for us, when we are hungry? or drink, when we are thirsty? The preaching of the Gospel is as light in the Firmament, as a candle in the house, as the eye in the body, as the meat in the stomach, and as the laborer in time of harvest, Matth. 9. The want of this blessing is to cover the earth with darkness, to put out the light of the eye, & to suffer good corn to perish for want of reaping and gathering into the barn; as the state of Egypt was when it wanted corn, and cried out to Joseph for bread; or as Judea, whē it wanted the light of the Sun. Miserable therefore, and thrice miserable are those people that want this, albeit they were stored with abundance of all earthly commodities under heaven. If they had all the riches of the world, that every nation borrowed of them and they of none, what should they help them wanting this only? Could the other save them, or make them a blessed people? No, no, in the midst of these blessings, they must needs be accursed. Is not that Land miserable that is compassed about with enemies, & yet is without armor? Are they not as a naked people that lie open to become a prey to them that gape after their destruction? Thus notwithstanding it is without the Ministers, who are the Chariots and horsemen of Israel, 2 Kin. 2, 12. Is it not a miserable thing to go into wars, and to have no Captains to lead the battle? What hope can there be of victory? Nay, what can be looked for but present destruction? The Ministers are the Leaders and Overseers of the Lord's host to rule them and keep them in order, Heb. 13, 7. Is it not miserable to see a flock of sheep without a Shepherd, wandering up and down from the fold, and ready to be devoured of the wolves? But such as are without a teaching Minister, are scattered abroad as silly sheep are without a Shepherd to lead them in green pastures, Mat. 9, 36. Is it not a woeful & miserable thing to see Satan's kingdom flourish, and to see him ruling in the hearts of men, and as it were dancing in their souls? No grief or sorrow should be like unto this, to see so many thousands perish everlastingly. But there is no other way to destroy his kingdom, & to make him fall down like lightning, then to have the glad tidings of the Gospel spread abroad in the earth, Luke 10, 42. Is it not a miserable thing to see a City besieged round about, and to have no watchman to watch it, and give warning of the approach of the enemy? Who can doubt but such a City is near to be taken and surprised? God hath made the Ministers his watchmen, they must blow the Trumpet, and warn the wicked, that they turn from their wickedness and evil ways, and so die not in their iniquity. Is it not a grievous thing to have meat ready to putrefy and corrupt, and yet want salt to season it? The Ministers of the word are not only the light of the world, but also the salt of the earth, without which, the people are as unsavory flesh and stinking carrion in the nostrils of God, or else what needed this salt? Lastly, is it not a miserable thing to be pitied of all men, to stand upon the shore and to see many ready to be drowned and cast away? To behold them tossed up and down with the waves, and at every blast of the wind, like to be swallowed up in the seas? But thus it is with us by nature; we cannot choose but perish, except this means be provided for us as an Ark to save us. Alas, how many dead carcasses may we see swimming and floating in the glassie sea of this world, that have no life in them? This point is pointed out unto us in the vision that appeared to Paul in the night, There stood a man of Macedonia and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us; whereby he gathered assuredly, that the Lord had called him to preach the Gospel unto thē. There are many things may bring us into misery, & are able to make us miserable; but the want of God's word and the saving hearing of it, bringeth a misery of all miseries, even an heap of all miseries, which are as it were included in one by the Spirit of God, speaking of the estate of the ten Tribes that had driven away the Priests of the Lord: Now for a long season Israel hath been without the true God, & without a teaching Priest, and without law. Where mark that the holy Ghost joineth these three together, God, the Priest, and the Law: they that were without a teaching Priest, were also without God: and he that is without God, is without all those things that should do him good. The like we see in the 13. chapter of the same book, where Abijah concludeth against Israel that they could not prosper, because they had banished the Priests of the Lord, the sons of Aaron from them: and on the contrary he saith, concerning himself and Judah; As for us, the Lord is our God, and we have not forsaken him, and the Priests which minister unto the Lord, are the sons of Aaron, and the Levites wait upon their business: and afterward, Behold, God himself is with us for our Captain, and his Priests with sounding Trumpets to cry alarm against you: O children of Israel, fight ye not against the Lord God of your Fathers, for you shall not prosper. If then we would have God to be with us, we must be content to accept and make account of his Ministers: if we cast them out with contempt from us, we say to the Lord also, Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways: who is the Almighty that we should serve him? and what profit should we have, if we pray unto him? Job 21, 14, 15. Likewise the Prophet complaining of the desolation of the Sanctuary, Psal▪ 74, 9. saith, We see not our signs, there is no more any Prophet, neither is there among us any, that knoweth how long! It was a great punishment inflicted upon Cain to be driven from the face of God, Gen. 4, 14 also upon Agar & Ishmael, the bondwoman and her son, to be cast out of the house of Abraham, which was the Church of God, Gen. 21, 14, 21. For that is as much as to be separated from God, to be banished from the word, to be separated from his kingdom. The Ministers are the guides to lead us the way, without them we cannot but wander out of the way; we are blind & understand nothing, they open our eyes that we may see the truth, Acts 8, 31, and 26, 18.

Secondly, this reproveth the vain conceit and proud imagination of their hearts, who having learned the principles of religiō, and some grounds of knowledge, proceed no further, as if they had no more use of y^e word: whereas there is matter of instruction always to be learned out of the word for all persons. When we have eaten one kind of meat one day, we eat the next day as hungerly of it as we did before. So ought we to come to the great Supper that God hath made us, again and again, always hungering and thirsting after the same. This is most certain, and set it down as a most true rule, the more knowledge we have, the more still we desire knowledge; the greater our faith is, the more we desire to have it strengthened. It is our daily prayer, that God would give us our daily bread: how much more then ought we to crave at God's hand the gift of spiritual food belonging to our souls, that we may be nourished to eternal life? He is a foolish builder that when he hath begun to build, and laid the foundation, giveth over, and never proceedeth to finish the work, but suffereth all men that pass by to laugh at him. There is no people ought to be without the ministry, it must always remain among them, that it may build them up forward, and finish that which is begun, Till we all come in the unity of faith, and the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. Would we have it said of us, and objected against us, This man began to build, but was not able to make an end? This man laid his hand to the plough, but now he standeth still and looketh back. There is as great use to be made of the word, after we are converted to the faith, & regenerated by the Spirit of God, as when we first believed. They thē are greatly deceived, that being puffed up with an opinion of their exceeding great knowledge and wonderful gifts, (which no man seeth or can see in them, but themselves that are deceived by self-love) suppose they need not frequent the hearing of the word, as if it were for nouices or ignorant persons only that know nothing. Hence it is, that they flattering themselves in an overweening persuasion of that which it is to be feared is not in them, say, What can they teach us, that we knew not before? Can they make us go from the many wiser then we came unto them? Or can they devise any new points of religion, or set up new Articles to be believed that we never heard off before? I answer, we go not about to broach any new doctrine, neither do we coin any new counterfeit faith. If we or an Angel from heaven teach any otherwise then the Fathers believed from the beginning, we are accursed. We teach Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever, Hebr. 13, 8. The ende of the preaching of the word is not chiefly or principally to plant knowledge: whereas these make it the only end. If a man had all knowledge, and could speak with the tongues of men and Angels, yet ought he to come diligently into the house of God, and to attend carefully to his word. For albeit we have knowledge for the time present, yet we may forget our knowledge, so as that which we hold this day, we may let slip from us tomorrow. And there is nothing which we know, but we may know it better, and more fully and distinctly. Besides, the word serveth to kindle our zeal, and to stir up our affections, as it were to blow the coals by kindling the sparks, that the fire go not out.

Lastly, they are reprov'd that extol to the skies, the Kingdoms and Commonwealths of the heathen, as the only prosperous, flourishing, and happy Nations: which indeed excelled in outward glory, and thereby dazzled the eyes of many; yet indeed were no better then assemblies and companies of men destitute of religion, and consequently of salvation. Their peace and prosperity, their wealth and dignity, were all carnal and momentary, rising out of the earth, and sinking down into the earth again; their praise also is of men. It is the maintenance of true religion that maketh a people truly happy: and the means of spreading abroad true religion, is the ministry of the word; there is no way to know it & to practice it but by this. Such as embrace it are truly wise; such as forsake it and reject it, have no wisdom in them, Ier. 8, 9. No kingdom or State can flourish, no Commonwealth can prosper, no Prince, no Potentate, no people can be wise or blessed in their government, but by honoring, and obeying of Almighty God as he hath commanded. Hence it is, that Moses saith, I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the Lord my God hath commanded me, &c. Keep them therefore and do them, for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the Nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great natiō is a wise & understanding people. Likewise the Lord promiseth, that this obedience to the precepts of God, without adding or diminishing, should make them blessed every way, in the fruit of their bodies, of their fields, of their cattle, and in everything that they put their hands unto: wheras if they did not keep the Law of the Lord their God, his judgments and statutes which he had commanded them, he threateneth to bring all curses upon them, as famine and hunger, nakedness and poverty, dissolution and captivity, until he had cast them out of the Land which he had given unto their fathers, Deut. 28. All Cities & Commonwealths are to be the hosts of y^e Church, and dwelling places for the faithful: without giving entertainment to the truth & Gospel, they are as Lanthornes without a light, or as the Firmament without the Sun. There is no kingdom, no town, no family, no person that can attain unto happinse and true blessedness, except they worship the Lord aright according to his word. If we be with him, he will be with us: he will honor those that honor him, and despise those that despise him, 1 Sam. 2:30. It is true religion that establisheth our seats, and maketh them prosperous: contrariwise, impiety, and superstition, and false worship, are the certain ruin and destruction of the Nation that embrace them. But it will be objected, [Objection.] What say you of the kingdoms of the heathen? Had they not large Dominions? Were they not the Monarchies of the world? & did they not greatly prosper in this world? I answer, [Answer.] it is true, they wanted not outward peace, honor, dignity, wealth, pleasures, dominions, and largeness of Empires: howbeit the cause of their prosperity was not their idolatry, and false worship: this is to allege a false cause instead of a true; forasmuch as their detestable abominations and horrible profanations of the service of God, were the causes of their final overthrow, which never ceased to call and cry for vengeance to God, until he with his thunderbolts from heaven had stricken them down to the ground. The true causes of the prosperity of Pagans and heathen are these: the first, is the great mercy and goodness of God, who doth good to the unthankful and ungodly: he letteth his rain to fall upon the fields of the just and unjust, and causeth his Sun to shine upon the godly and ungodly, the Christian and the heathen. And albeit he be provoked every day, and therefore may justly pour down the full viols of his wrath & indignation upon the earth, yet he is a God of patience and long suffering, waiting for the conversion of men; so that if they repent not, both they are made without excuse, and the justice of God is cleared when he judgeth. This is one cause why he suffereth them to flourish. Another is, that he may give thē the greater overthrow. For the higher their heads and horns are lifted up, the more is their fall when they go to ruin. The greater their sin is, the greater must their punishment be. God hath made himself known among them, and not left himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave them rain from heaven, & fruitful seasons, filling their hearts with food and gladness. He gave much unto them, and therefore required much of them again. Thirdly, it was his pleasure to provide for his Church, that lived and sojourned among them, that they might be as Inns to lodge them, and as Cities of refuge to entertain them, whē they fled unto them from the avenger of blood. He gave them peace, y^t the Church also might enjoy peace among them: he made them to flourish, that his people that lived with them might flourish also. If they had been grievously afflicted, the Church must also have tasted of the same cup in some measure. Thus were the people of God commanded to pray for the peace of Babylon, the place whither they were carried captive, which was given them as a Sanctuary and place of retire, Ier. 29. Seek the peace of the City whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it: for in the peace thereof, shall ye have peace. God giveth the Infidels prosperity, and blesseth them with an extraordinary peace, howbeit he respecteth the good of his Church therein. Lastly, herein we are to consider also the justice of God. For the Lord purposing to execute his just judgments upon the Kings of the earth for their idolatries, oppressions, violences, tyrannies, murders, adulteries, and such like impieties, hath raised up from time to time, some to serve him in the execution of his high justice against them, punishing those that are evil, by others as evil as themselves. For this cause, to make way for the accomplishment of his decrees, he maketh some Nation to grow strong and mighty as y^e oakes of the forest, and to flourish for a while as the Cedars in Libanus, that he may use & employ them as a staff in his hand, to chastise the rebellions of the ungodly: and when he hath poured out his wrath upon them, and executed his indignation to the full, he casteth the rod into the fire, & raiseth up another for the consuming of them. The Assyrians, the first Monarchy of the world, ruled in a manner all Nations for many years. After them arose the Persians, who subduing the Assyrians, obtained the Monarchy, and reigned likewise a long space, many Kings succeeding one another in that royal seat, Then came the Grecians, who prevailed against the Persians, as they before had done against the Assyrians, made themselves Monarchs and masters of them, and almost of the whole world. Last of all, all these being cut down, and so grubbed by the roots, that the place of many of them is no more to be known; the Roman Empire abolishing the former, succeeded in the souereignty, & possessed the dignity first in Rome, and after in Constantinople. Thus the sword of one hath been drawn out against another, & all hath been ruled by the just judgment of God, to punish those that neither loved nor embraced the truth. The like we might say of Tamerlanethe Tartarian, the scourge or God & terror of the world; he was raised up of God and had his time, who whipped the Turks by him, as they had served others. All these horrible tyrants prospered in the world, but it had a sudden end, because it was never well grounded. But to leave them, and to come home to our selves, let us learn what maketh us to prosper, what shall make our names great, and our families to flourish, when all other shall wither as the grass that today is green, and tomorrow is cast into the Oven: it is the embracing of true religion. Bethlehem was in it self little among the thousands of Judah, yet it was notwithstanding exalted and advanced, because out of it came Christ to rule his people Israel. The Temple of Solomon was of wonderful glory and renown, yet the Lord telleth the people after their return out of captivity, that the glory of the second Temple, even of that latter house, should be greater then of that former, and in this place he would give peace by him that is the Prince of peace. In like manner he telleth Joshua, that if the book of the Law depart not out of his mouth but that he meditate therein day and night, & observe to do according to all that is written therein, then he shall make his way prosperous, and shall have good success in all his enterprises. Do we then desire to be happy? Do we wish blessedness? Labor to be truly religious, and to have the power of godliness dwelling in thy heart: Aduance it, And it shall advance thee; it shall bring thee to honor when thou dost embrace it. This is the way to find favor and good understanding in the sight of God and man. As for others, that make a mock of religion, and do not choose the fear of the Lord, that never regard to set it as a precious plant in their souls and in their houses, they may peradventure build their nests on high for a time, and make their children great upon earth for a season, but in the end their names shall consume as dung, their root shall be rottenness, and their bud as dust that is suddenly blown and borne away with a violent wind.

[Use 3] Thirdly, must the ministry be established among all people under heaven? Then let everyone of us be careful for our parts to plant it among us, and to bring it home to the places of our abode. In the most corrupt and ruinous times of the Church, the people were careful of this duty. Micah in the book of Judges is said to have entertained and maintained a Levite to instruct him and his family, and said, Now I know that the Lord will do me good, seeing I have a Levite to my Priest. Judge. 17, 13. It is noted in the Acts of the Apostles, that when Paul and Barnabas were come to Salamis, they preached the word of God in the Synagogues of the Jews, & they had John also for their Minister. Every place therefore ought to have their proper Pastor, as every flock their Shepherd, and every City their watchman. David was careful above all Princes to settle good order among the Levites, y^t God might be served, and the people edified. He divided them into certain orders, that so their labors might be equally & indifferently divided for the benefit of all persons. He was zealous in bringing home the Ark of God. Jehoshaphat sent out Levites to instruct the people. This is a duty that doth nearly concern us & our families, not only to be content to hear it abroad, and to resort to it in other places, but to join together to bring it home to our own doors or parishes, that we may have provision of food our selves, and not be driven to seek for it elsewhere. A point wherein (alas) we are too careless, and thereby make little conscience to seek after knowledge. For how many think themselves discharged frō hearing the word, and attending to the ministry of it, because they have not the word ordinarily taught among them? If it were settled among them, they could be content to give the Ministers the hearing; but if they have it not, they never think it any part of their duty to resort to the places where they may be instructed, as the people on the Sabbath days and other solemn meetings, repaired to the Prophets, when the Priests either were ignorant & could not teach, or else were idle & would not teach. But herein they greatly deceive themselves. Others, when they may hear it & do hear it in other places, think themselves in good case and feel no want; and so neglect the ordinary means of edifying their consciences, and of advancing the Gospel and kingdom of God, everyone in the place whereunto by more special duty he is bound, and where he may have a more special promise of blessing. They then that are careless to provide an ordinary sufficient Pastor in their several parishes, whereby the people are for the most part untaught, as a field that bringeth forth weeds & briars for want of tillage, do greatly fail in this duty that now we urge & deal withal, to wit, that every flock should have his own Shepherd. This containeth many branches under it. First, we must use the ordinary means that God hath sanctified to this purpose, we must pray to the Lord of the harvest to send laborers into his harvest. We are ready to pray for an healthy body whē we are sick, but we forget to beg an healthy soul when we are ignorant. We that are the Lord's remembrancers, let us give him no rest until he repair, and until he set up Jerusalem, the praise of the world. Isaiah 62, 7. We want these laborers, because we are wanting unto ourselves: whereas if we did constantly crave this blessing, we should find grace in time of need, Mat. 9. The Ministers are our spiritual Physicians under Christ. This we pray, when we crave that God's Kingdom may come everywhere, and that every Lantern may carry a bright shining light in it. Secondly, we must be content rather to bestow somewhat to attain to this blessing, then want it, it being a precious pearl, which when a man hath found, he selleth all that he hath, and purchaseth it, Matth. 13. Solomon that was not ignorant of true wisdom, Prov. 23, 23.

counseleth all men to buy the truth, but not to sell it. This will try us, what account we make of this blessing, and in what price we have it. Thirdly, it is our duty to rejoice in spirit when it is liberally bestowed upon us, and graciously supplied unto us; which serveth to put us in mind of these profitable meditations. We must testify our thankfulness to God for his holy ordinance set up among us, lest he be constrained to take it away from us: for if once he pull up his standard, he will remove also and be gone. We must submit and subject our selves under it, that our judgments may be rectified, and our wills and affections settled in the truth. We must confess it to be no small part of our happiness, that with us are the Ministers of the Church, and the seals of the Covenant, 2 Chron. 13. Let us prefer his Courts before all other places of resort, Psal. 27, 4. and 84, 10. Let us lament the estate of Jews and Gentiles, and all particular places among our selves, that want these signs of God's favor, and tokens of the Covenant, to wit, the Word and Sacraments, and the Ministers of them both. Who can but lament to see so many silly sheep ready to be devoured of the wolf, and as a prey in the jaws of the Lyon? We ought to have compassion upon such, if there be any bowels, and pity and mercy in us, and if we have not stony hearts, we ought to melt and mourn for these things. Lastly, let us earnestly long for their joining to the Church, that such as wander from the sheepfold, may be joyfully brought home upon the shoulders of the Ministers who ought to seek them out. Then we shall have one Shepherd, and one sheepfold: then we shall with one mind and mouth glorify God. Thus is the Church of the Jews brought in by Solomon in his Song, chapt. 8. desiring most heartily the conversion of the Gentiles, We have a little Sister, and she hath no breasts; what shall we do for our sister, in the day when she shall be spoken for? Thus ought we to be affected toward the Jews, We have also a sister that hath no breasts to nourish up children: let us have a desire to procure and further her salvation, forasmuch as we have a promise that the Jews shall be called and converted unto the faith of Christ, Rom. 11.

[Use 4] Fourthly, let the Ministers be careful to discharge their calling, and to teach the people in season and out of season. They must be lights of the world, and as savory salt to season them with wholesome doctrine. It is a straight account that they are to make, not for silver, or gold, or such like corruptible things committed unto us, but for men's souls the price of Christ's blood, Acts 20. Never was there such a reckoning, never was there such an account either given or taken, as shall be at the great audit, when it shall be said unto us, Come, give an account of thy stewardship, for thou mayest be no longer steward, Luke 16, 2. This consideration is profitable both for the people and the Pastor himself. Let the people think with themselves, that we do not trouble them more then is needful, & busy our selves more then we have thanks for our labor. True it is, we serve many thanklesse masters, that could be content we should spare our pains; but we cannot so discharge our consciences, & deliver our souls. Let the Minister think, that a necessity is laid upon him, and woe unto him if he preach not the Gospel. Oh, that this day of account were ever set before our eyes, how would it set us on fire, and kindle our zeal and diligence? This doubtless were enough, and more then enough, to open the mouths of them that now are dumb and cannot speak, and make them lift up their voices as a Trumpet, to tell the people of their sins, and the house of Jacob their iniquities. But the watchmen are blind, they are all ignorant, they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark: they can look to their own gain, but they endeavor not to gain souls to God. There is not a soul that perisheth by our negligence, but we must answer for it, when the blood that we have shed shall be required at our hands. This will be an heavy day, when the blood of many souls shall cry out for vengeance, and shall accurse us that ever we came among them to be the occasions of their destruction and damnation. Now we must know, that in the Scriptures we have many motives to spurr us, and to stir us up to diligence, and to increase all care in us to do our duties. First, the excellency of our Office. It is a worthy Calling, 1 Tim. 3, 1. If we were employed in some base office, not beseeming our persons, we might have some color and pretence to shun and avoid it. But having an excellent function, wherein the Son of God, Jesus Christ served before us, it were intolerable pride to scorn it, as too simple for us. We may be a means to bring men to salvation, which we must account our crown and glory. Secondly, the glory of God ought to move us, which is to be preferred before all things in the world. Thirdly, the love of Christ, the Prince of all Pastors ought to contstrain us, who gave him-self for his sheep.

We must therefore understand, that they are not so much our sheep as his: he hath a special care of them, or else he would never have paid so dearly for them. His wonderful care of their good, appeareth in this, that demanding of Peter, whether he loved him, and asking the question of him again and again, he said, Feed my Sheep, feed my Lambs: thereby giving all the Ministers a rule of trial, to prove themselves whether they love the Lord Jesus or not.

If all were examined by this rule, and their love to Christ proved by this note, it is to be feared, that little or no love at all would appear in them, toward their Savior and Redeemer. As all men have tasted abundantly of the love of Christ, so all men profess to love him again, as well as Peter, and would be as ready to answer, Lord thou knowest that I love thee. It is easy to profess it, but it is not so easy to approve it, and manifest it▪ If we would assure our own souls, that the love of Christ is in us, let us feed the flock, let us speak boldly in the Name of the Lord, without respect of persons; let us teach, improve, correct, instruct, admonish, exhort, comfort, and strengthen, as we see the state of the flock to require.

Let us duly administer the Sacraments, according to Christ's institution: let us rule and govern the Church committed unto us: let us pray for them, and be examples unto them in life, that when the great Shepherd of the sheep shall appear, we may receive an incorruptible crown of glory.

[Use 5] Lastly, let the people carefully attend to the Ministry of the word, where it is settled and planted, with a good conscience, as to God's holy ordinance, vouchsafed unto them. Let them bring attention in hearing, diligence in marking, and obedience in practicing. Let them put away all pretences and excuses, let them not invent carnal reasons against themselves, and their own souls. Let them not use any delays to shift off the performance of this duty. But there are many men in the world, that are wise to their own destruction, and seek sundry colorable devises to hurt themselves, and hinder their own good. For this ordinance, albeit comfortable and necessary, aiming at nothing else but our salvation, findeth through the malice of Satan and opposition of his instruments, strong enemies that assault it and undermine it, to make it fall down. He knoweth well enough that if this were thoroughly received, and generally established in all places, his kingdom could not stand, but would fall down as lightning, as we heard before, Luke 10. When the trumpets sounded that God appointed, though they were of Rammes horns, the walls of Jericho fell down, Josh. 6.20. The preaching of the Gospel seemeth a weak and contemptible thing, and is accounted of them that perish to be foolishness, 1 Cor. 1.18. But if it were as unlikely to do any great work, as the rams horns, yet being employed of God, it shall be able to cast down all imaginations, and high things, that exalt themselves against the knowledge of God, 2 Cor. 11.5. Forasmuch as to them that are called, it is the wisdom of God and the power of God, 1 Cor. 1.24. Hence it is, that the great enemy of our salvation hath stirred up his disciples the Anabaptists, and other detestable and damnable heretics, to subvert the faith of many, lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ should shine unto them. These seduced persons, seeking also to seduce [Objection 1] others, reason thus; No creature can work faith and regeneration in us, it is God that doth it alone. But the word preached is but a creature, nay, it is the voice only of a creature, and a bare sound consisting of letters and syllables, so that the virtue of it can be no more, but to signify unto us the will of God. I answer, the word preached, [Answer.] and the use of it are to be distinguished. The right use thereof, is to understand it, to meditate upon it, to endeavor to believe it, and to obey it. The word preached is of force and of power, not simply, because it is uttered and published, and the bare sound thereof cometh to the ears of the hearers; for then all men should know and understand it, receive it by faith, and practice it by obedience: but because when it is preached, through the blessing of God, and his secret work in us, we hear it with an attentive ear and a tractable heart: so that his spirit and his word, go together, Isaiah 59.21. our hearing with the ear, and his opening of the heart, accompany one another, Act. 16.14. Hereupon it is called the power of God to salvation, that is, an effectual instrument of his power to everyone that believeth. The Ministers are said to be laborers together with God, 1 Corin. 3.9. to be workers together with him, beseeching us not to receive the word of God in vain. 2. Cor. 6.1. and as the Ambassadors of God, to pray us in Christ's stead, that we be reconciled to God, 2 Cor. 5.20.

Secondly, others object, None can be saved, [Objection 2,] but such as are elected: but all ordained to eternal life shall be saved, whether they hear the word preached or not; forasmuch as all the elect shall of necessity be saved: and therefore there is no need of hearing, to bring us to salvation: election is sufficient. [Answer.] I answer, this is a dividing of those things that cannot be divided; and a separation of those things that cannot be separated. If any should reason touching the temporal life, as these ignorant persons do, touching the eternal, every man would soon espy the fraud, and be able to answer the objection, and put to silence the folly of the objecters. For we might as well reason thus, All that are appointed of God to live, shall live: and therefore it skilleth that what they do, whether they eat or drink, or sleep, or clothe themselves, or whether they do none of all these things. This conclusion is of the same nature & force with the former, and both of them stark naught, and deceitful. Everyone hath knowledge and understanding enough to answer the latter, and to say that as God hath appointed us to live, so he hath appointed us the means to maintain life, and therefore if we would live, we must feed our selves, clothe our selves, refresh our selves. In like manner, they that are ordained to eternal life, cannot but hear the word, I say they must and shall of necessity hear it, they can do, they will do no otherwise; as Act. 13.48. When the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life, believed. All then that are ordained to the end, are also ordained to the means: forasmuch as whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified, Rom. 8.30.

[Objection 3] Thirdly, to these that would seem learned, and to know somewhat more then their fellows, are joined as brethren in evil, sundry of the common sort and profane persons. The Preachers (say they) are weak and frail, simple and sinful men. If we might hear Christ himself or an Angel from heaven to teach us, we would believe The voice of our sweet Savior would move any man that: hath any goodness in him. [Answer.] I answer, the people of Israel could not hear and bear the voice of God, but desired of him that Moses might speak unto them, Exod. 20.19. and now, that we have our own request, and he hath sent us in a Moses, I mean a Minister, will we call for God again? will we have sometimes God, & sometimes Moses, at our own pleasure, like wayward and wanton children that will be pleased with nothing? When God speaketh, then in all haste we must have Moses; and when Moses speaketh, we cry out for God, whose voice notwithstanding shaketh the heavens, and cleaveth the rocks in pieces; and moveth the foundation of the earth out of his place: so that this was a common saying among the people of God, We shall surely die, because we have seen God, Judge. 6.22, 23. & 13, 22. It is therefore God's great goodness (which we must not abuse) to put his heavenly treasures in earthly vessels, that man might be instructed by the Ministry of man, to the end that the glory might be his, and the benefit ours Such as hear them, do hear Christ: such as despise them, despise Christ himself. Doest thou then desire to hear Christ? hear his Ministers, who hath put the word of reconciliation into their mouths, and in his stead beseech us to be reconciled unto him.

[Objection.] Fourthly, others of the same spirit, object in this manner, We have the Scriptures in our houses, we can read them, •or we hear them read unto us at home: there are set down the most perfect Sermons of Christ, of the Prophets, and of the Apostles: can our preachers amend them? [Answer.] I answer, the Sermons of Christ and his servants are most absolute and perfect, and profitable in themselves, as also all-sufficient: but not so to us, until they be explained and applied to the consciences of the hearers, in the ministry of the word. A loaf made of the finest & fattest of y^e wheat is nourishable in it self, but it is unfit for our nourishment, until it be cut and divided into pieces, that everyone may have his portion, and therefore whosoever is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, must rightly divide the word of truth, 2. Tim. 2.15. The Eunuch sitting in his chariot, had the Scriptures with him, and read in them in his chariot, as well as we do in our houses; yet when Philip said unto him, Vnderstandest thou what thou readest? he answered, How can I except some man should guide me? Thus we see, y^t albeit we have the Scriptures lying by us, in which we are to read, that they may dwell in us plentifully: yet we shall always want the gifts of the Minister for the interpretation of them, as children do the help of one to cut their meat when it is prepared and provided for them, or else they shall remain an hungered.

Lastly, there are others, whose consciences [Objection 5] condemn them of wickedness and profaneness, that object, There are none worse then those that are common and continual hearers of Sermons: if then it be so good, why doth not the word make them better? [Answer.] I answer, this is a common and a cursed slander. This is the old language of the devil, and of his instruments. If Job be accounted a just man, fearing God, and eschuing evil the devil will not stick to face it out, that he is an hypocrite. The Pharisees, which were his hired servants, could say, None regarded Christ, but the people that are accursed. John. 7.48, 49. Wherefore, it is false that all are so: they only utter the gall and malice of their devilish hearts, who envy the grace of God in others, and cannot abide that any should be more forward and fervent then themselves.

Secondly, if this be granted and yielded unto them, the which notwithstanding, is most uncharitably surmised, and unconscionably alleged of them, yet they show themselves wrangling Sophisters, arguing from a false cause: forasmuch as this badness and beastliness that appeareth in the lives of many hearers, is not an effect of preaching or hearing, but a sin resting in the persons and proceeding from the profane and unregenerate hearts of those that hear, as when good corn is sown in barren and unfruitful ground, or as if an husbandman should plough up the fruitless sand, or sow among thorns. These instruments of Satan, that seek to disgrace the saving hearing of the Gospel, and whip the faithful for the faults of hypocrites, never cry out against open and notorious offenders, against blasphemers, against whoremasters, against drunkards, and such like Profane beasts; but if any be an hearer of the word, and study to reform his life according to the straight line thereof, he is a great eyesore unto them, because the light that shineth in them, serveth the better to discover the darkness of their lives. Thus many filthy swine and foul-mourhed dogs, have liberty to profane the holy things of God. The hearers of Christ's Sermons, were of four sorts, three were evil, and received the word no otherwise, then if seed should be cast in the high way, or in stony ground, or else among thorns, where it bringeth forth no ripe fruit: only the last sort heard the word with good and honest hearts, & brought forth fruit with patience; Whereas these that are carried away with rash judgment make all alike, put no difference between one and another, and will have all hearers to be bad men.

Thirdly, God hath appointed the preaching of the word, not only to convert the elect, but to harden the wicked: as the Sun serveth not only to soften the wax, but to harden the clay. Hence it is, that many are made worse by the word; but that falleth out through their own corruption, not through the nature of the word. Hence it is that the Lord saith, Make the heart of this people fat, and make their hearts heavy, and shut their eyes: lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and convert and be healed, Isaiah, 6.10. Be it therefore that none are commonly worse then common hearers, who hear indeed, but do not understand, and see indeed, but do not perceive: yet is the word to be preached and published, though it be the savor of death unto death, in those that hear it. It is as the rain or snow that falleth from heaven, which returneth not thither again, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bud and bring forth, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: so is it with the word that goeth forth out of the mouth of God, it doth not return unto him void, but it accomplisheth that which he pleaseth, and prospereth in the thing whereunto he sendeth it, Isaiah 55.

Lastly, the wickedness of evil hearers ought to be no bar against the preaching of the word, forasmuch as evil persons are oftentimes won by the Gospel. Publicans and harlots are brought by it to the kingdom of God, Matth. 21.31. Many of these that crucified the Lord of life, and put our Savior to death, were pricked in their hearts, and said to Peter and the rest of the Apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Act. 2.37. They gladly received the word, and were baptized, so that in one day there were added to the Church about three thousand souls. The like we might say of the jailour, notwithstanding his cruelty and persecution of the Apostles, he came to them and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? Act. 16, 30. Who preached unto him faith in Christ, by whose Ministry he was converted. Shall we then reason as these men do, Hearers are wicked, and as bad as others that hear not: therefore away with the word out of the Church, pull down the chair of Moses, and down with all preaching? let us have no more hearing, and let the sound of the word be buried forever? O foolish reason! O damnable conclusion! Nay, we may infer contrariwise, Such as heard long, are sinful still, therefore let them hear more cheerfully, and let the Minister deal more roundly with them. Let them be told and taught that God will take an account of their hearing, according to the means he hath afforded unto them: that by the word they shall be judged at the last day: and that as much hath been committed unto them, so much shall be required at their hands again: that they are to hear the voice of God, while it is called today, and are to take heed they neglect not the accepted time: and that as Christ hath knocked long at the doors of their hearts, so they know not how suddenly he will depart from them.

Verse. 4. [And Nadab and Abihu died before the Lord, &c.] We have already declared, how God immediately after the ordering of the Armies of the Israelites, describeth the tribe of Levi that was exempted and privileged out of that muster and multitude, and of what family Aaron came. Now we are to show what became of his sons, who, albeit they were the sons of one man, yet they neither lived nor died after one manner. For the two eldest Nadab and Abihu, presuming to offer incense to God, and to burn it with strange fire, were themselves consumed with fire: there went a fire from the Lord, and devoured them, and they died before the Lord with sudden death. Thus by the same thing wherein they offered, they perished: strange fire brought down a strange judgment, to declare the justice of God against sinners: but of this point we shall have better occasion to speak farther in the fifth Chapter. Thus it fell out in the family of Aaron, his two sons died by fire, even they died before their father, and had no children to whom the Priesthood might descend; therefore Eleazar and Ithamar executed the Priests office. When the Levites did offer sacrifice in the Tabernacle, God sent fire from heaven, to consume the sacrifice: whereupon he commanded the Priests that the fire should be kept evermore burning upon the Altar, and never be suffered to go out, Levite. 6.13. Which the Gentiles also observed by a foolish imitation.

So then, their transgression against God, consisted in these two things: First, they used strange fire, contrary to the commandment of God, whereas they should have taken it from the Altar, Levite. 1.8. Secondly, they entered into the holy place, which was not lawful for the high Priest himself to do, but under certain conditions, and at a certain time, Levi. 16.1, 2. Exod. 30.10. Heb. 9.7. Thus then, as they sinned openly, so God punished them openly, and made them public examples unto others that should succeed them, and come after them in that office, as he speaketh, Then Moses said unto Aaron, This is it that the Lord spake, I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people, I will be glorified. It was but yesterday as it were that Aaron and his sons had a famous and a glorious consecration into the greatest and highest dignity upon earth, but these sons so lately exalted and honored, now lie destroyed before their fathers face, to his overmuch grief and anguish, not by any ordinary and accustomed death, but by fire from heaven, for their sins, and breach of the Law, and commandment of God. We learn from hence, that Godly parents have [Doctrine 2] oftentimes ungodly and disobedient children. Such as are reformed themselves have children unreformed. We see this in Adam the first father, he had not only Abel the righteous who obtained good report that he pleased God, but also Cain who was of that evil one and slew his brother, 1. John. 3. Because his own works were evil, and his brothers good. Noah a just man and perfect in his generations, Gen. 6.9. had cursed Ham, as well as blessed, Shim, Gen. 9.26. We see this in Abraham's house the Father of the faithful, who receiveth this commendation from the mouth of God himself, Gen. 18. I know him that he will command his children and his household after him that they keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment, that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him: yet he had in his family (which was the Church of God) not only Isaac the son of promise in whose seed the nations of the earth should be blessed, but Ishmael that was borne after the flesh, that mocked his brother, & persecuted him that was borne after the spirit, and in the end was cast out of the Church, Gen. 21.9, 10. Gal. 4.30. And as it was with the father, so was it with the son: for we see this in the children of Isaac, who strove and struggled within the womb of their mother, Gen. 25.22. and when the time of her deliverance came, she brought forth, not only Jacob, who afterward was surnamed Israel, obtaining a far more honorable name than all the Affricani, or Germanici, or Asiatici among the Romans, whose praise was wholly from the earth, and a blast of the mouths of mortal man; whereas he wrestled with God in Peniel and prevailed: but also profane Esau, so branded as it were in the forehead by a mark of iron, by the Spirit of God, who sold his birth-right for a mess of pottage. For the children being not yet borne neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to the election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth, It was said unto her, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated, Rom. 9.11.13. Samuel was a man that feared God exceedingly, and governed the people uprightly, so that he appealed to the people, and to the consciences of all men, to witness his innocence and integrity, what wrong he had done them, whose ox he had taken, and whose ass he had taken, or at whose hand he had received any bribe to blind his eyes, 1 Sam. 12.3. Yet when he was old and made his sons judges over Israel, they walked not in his ways, but turned aside after lucre, they took bribes and perverted judgment, 1 Sam. 8.3. David was a man after God's own heart, yet he had not only Solomon that was beloved of God, but also incestuous Amnon, ambitious Absalom, and treacherous Adonijah: the first defiled his own sister, and wrought folly in Israel; the other two rebelled against their father, and sought to take away the kingdom from him. The like we might say of Eli, who sate upon a seat by a post of the Temple, and by his residence on his charge and daily attendance, to give answers to the people that came unto him, gave testimony of his godliness: yet his sons were the sons of Belial, and knew not the Lord, 1 Sam. 2.12.

To conclude (for the examples that might be brought to this purpose, are infinite) who was more Godly then Josiah, who remembered his creator in the days of his youth, and reformed religion betimes in his kingdom? yet his children followed not the ways of their father, but did evil in the sight of the Lord, according to all that their wicked forefathers had done, 2 King. 23.32, 37. Jer. 22.18. To all these testimonies of Scripture, if we add also the testimony of common experience, of all ages and times, and places and persons, we may gather, that all the children of the faithful, have not been always continued under the covenant of God, nor followed the steppes of their faithful parents to be like unto them.

Now, because this is a point diligently to [Reason 1] be marked of us, let us consider the reasons whereby it may be better confirmed unto us. First, to show the election of God, which is the highest step of our salvation to stand upon the free will and purpose of God, and not upon ordinary succession, or natural generation, or any causes in our own selves: to the end that all, both parents and children should confess, that such as have received this power and prerogative to believe in the Name of Christ Jesus, are borne, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God, John. 1.13. This reason is noted concerning Jacob, that the purpose of God might stand according to election, not of any works, but by him that calleth: this was it that made difference between him and his brother.

Secondly, that the best servants of God [Reason 2] may acknowledge, that they can by no means convey to their posterity the graces of God, the gifts of sanctification, & repentance from dead works, which themselves have received from God by supernatural means, and not by natural: they begetting naturally children of wrath, as well as other men, even sinful children tainted and defiled with original corruption. Adam begat Seth in his own image, that is, in his natural inclination to evil. Gen. 5.3. Hence it is that David acknowledgeth, he was shapen in iniquity, and that in sin his mother did conceive him, Psal. 51. So then as the corn that is purged from the chaff and made clean, bringeth up corn again, together with the chaff: and as the father that is circumcised begetteth children that are uncircumcised: so such parents as are sanctified themselves, cannot leave to their issue any sanctifying graces, which must come only from above, from the Father of lights.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, God hath a purpose to show his justice in the destruction of the stubborn and disobedient, as he doth his mercy in the salvation of those that are godly and obedient. This is the reason rendered by the Spirit of God, that albeit the sons of Eli were reprov'd by their father, yet they hearkened not unto his voice, because the Lord would slay them, 1 Sam. 2.25. God is determin'd to glorify himself, and his great Name in their destruction, as they resolved and settled themselves & their whole lives to dishonor him, to their confusion.

[Reason 4] Lastly, the children even of faithful and godly parents do oftentimes want the good means of a godly education, and therefore no marvel if their hearts, not being ploughed up, do bring forth cockle and darnel, instead of good corn. For the children of God, do themselves through human frailty and infirmity sometimes fail in the performance of this duty. They cocker them and are too choice and nice over them, they dare not offend them, or speak a word against them; which overweening and suffering of them to have their will too much, God punisheth in their children: whereof we have a worthy example in David toward Adonijah, who exalted himself against his father, saying, I will be king, and he prepared him chariots and horsemen, and fifty men to run before him. The occasion of this presumption, and rebellion is noted to be thus, His father had not displeased him at any time, in saying, Why hast thou done so? He failed toward him, more then Eli did toward his sons; for he said, It is no good report that I hear, ye make the Lord's people to transgress.

But David was loath to displease his son, but sought to please him in all things, and (behold) what came of it; it turned to his hurt, and in the end, to his utter overthrow. If then we lay these several points together, that God will show our election, and the election of our seed, to stand firmly and only upon the purpose of his will, and cut off all occasion of boasting from us that we are able to derive grace unto them, lest thereby we should ascribe their regeneration & conuersiō to our selves, & so take the glory frō God to whom only it is due, unto our selves to whom in no sort it is due: that God in his counsel purposeth to destroy some of them, and that they often want education, a good means to bring them to God: we may truly conclude this point with which we deal, namely, that godly parents which do believe, have many times ungracious and unrighteous children that do not believe.

This often falling out to the most faithful [Use 1] that desire to leave an holy seed behind them, let us consider what we are to learn from it. And first, this sealet up this truth: as a principle that never faileth, namely, that the father is not saved by the child, nor the child by the father. The Prophet saith truly, The just shall live by his faith; not by the faith of the father, nor by the faith of the son, but by his own faith. The faith of the godly father shall not save the ungodly child: neither shall the faith of the godly child, save the ungodly father. Thus are God's ways cleared, to be equal, which are oftentimes challenged and slandered to be unequal. This doth the Prophet Ezekiel handle at large, Chap. 18. and 33. Behold, all souls are mine▪ as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth shall die. If a man be just and do that which is lawful, and right, if he beget a son that is a robber, or an oppresser, he shall surely die, his blood shall be upon him. But if he beget a son that seeth all his fathers sins which he hath done, and considereth and doth not such like, he shall not die for the iniquity of his father, he shall surely live: The soul that sinneth it shall die; the son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son: the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be vpō him Where he showeth, that if the father that is righteous beget a son unlike unto himself, the righteousness of the father shall nothing profit or avail him, he shall receive such a recompense of reward as is due to his impiety. He mentioneth in this place three several persons, the grandfather, the nephew, and in the middle between them both, he setteth the son of the former, and the father of the latter.

Of them all he setteth down this rule, that everyone shall be rewarded as he hath lived, and receive according unto his works. The blessing of GOD shall rest upon all those that are just, whatsoever their posterity shall be, as Isaiah Chapter 3.10. Say ye to the righteous, that it shall be well with him, for they shall eat the fruit of their doings: and to that purpose we read in the Psalm, Men shall say, verily, there is reward for the righteous, verily he is a God that judgeth in the earth. God is a just Judge, and therefore rewardeth every man as his own life is. They therefore do greatly deceive themselves, that run into all excess of riot, and think to have mercy shown unto them, because of the godliness of their parents: whereas rather this shall serve to heap up farther judgment upon their heads. On the other side, it serveth to comfort those that forsake the wickedness of their parents & progenitors, forasmuch as god will accept of them and embrace them in the arms of his tender love, and never charge upon them those sins, nor upbraid them with the same. Blessed therefore are all that walk in his ways, but unto them that turn away from righteousness, and commit iniquity, and do according to all the abominations that the wicked man doth, all his righteousness that he hath done, shall not be mentioned, in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he die. Wherefore to conclude, it is required of us not to stand upon the goodness of our ancestors, but upon that which we find in our selves: inasmuch as many of the godly and righteous servants of God have had children appointed to wrath and destruction. The people of the Jews gloried and boasted that they had Abraham to their father, albeit they did not the works of Abraham, but of their father the devil, John. 8.44. Hence it is, that John the Baptist exhorteth them to bring forth fruits meet for repentance, and not to think to say within themselves, We have Abraham to our father, forasmuch as God is able of the stones to raise up children unto Abraham. It is a vain thing in earthly things, for a man to boast of his predecessors. The heathen man could say, that stock and ancestors, and such things as our selves have not done, we may scarcely call our own. Much more doeth this hold in heavenly things, and in true religion, which go not by kind or kin, they descend not from father unto son, as temporal inheritances do: no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, but the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him, Matth. 11. Let every man labor to know God, and to plant the fear of him in his own heart, that so we may live by our own faith, as his life is maintained and continued by his own soul.

[Use 2] Secondly, let no man be discouraged, though they see their seed untoward, and ungracious. Religion cannot be conveyed to children by parents, as house and land, neither can they leave it unto them, as they leave them a possession, to descend by a continued succession from the father to the son, and to the sons son in one race and generation. Godliness cometh not to us by natural generation, but by spiritual regeneration: neither hath the first-borne greater title to it, then the second. That which the Apostle speaketh of the Ministry, that Paul may plant, and Apollo water, but it is God that giveth the increase, may be truly spoken of the bringing up of children in the nurture and information of the Lord. We may and ought to take pains to teach them in their youth what trade they shall take, but we cannot give a blessing unto our own labors. The husbandman may plant and sow, yet he cannot bring down the early and the latter rain: and if he could do this, he could not make the corn grow for the use of man. So is it with us, we may teach and reprove, exhort, and admonish, but except GOD open the heart, the heart remaineth unreformed. It is not to be doubted, but Samuel bestowed great labor and diligence in discharging this duty, both because he was a faithful and godly man, Heb. 11.32. And because he had seen with his eyes, an example of overmuch lenity in Eli, and had heard with his ears, a fearful threatening of judgment against him, revealed by the Lord: yet his children followed not his steppes, but declined from the ways wherein he walked. Let all godly parents therefore comfort themselves in the consideration and contemplation of such like examples, knowing that they can only use the means, and that it lieth not in their power to make them truly religious. In deed if we have been negligent in bringing them unto God, and let them run into all riot, and not restrained them, we have cause to lay it to our consciences, and to think with our selves, that we that gave them life, have also been instruments of their death. But if we have done what lieth in us to do, if we have warned them, and they would not be warned: if we have taught and trained them up in the fear of God, which is the beginning of wisdom, and they have broken the bands asunder, and cast the cords of duty and discipline from them; we may comfort our selves as the Minister doth, when he seeth his labor is spent in vain.

If he have been faithful and conscionable in his place, whether men regard the word, or not regard it: whether they believe, or do not believe: whether they obey, or do not obey, he is the sweet savor of Christ, even in them that perish, because even then it worketh the will of God, and accomplisheth that for which it is sent. The Prophet prophesying of Christ's coming among the Jews, bringeth him in with this complaint, I have labored in vain, I have spent my strength for naught, and in vain, yet surely my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God. God respecteth us according to our work, & not according to the event, or success of our labor: he will reward us according to our conscience in teaching, not according to the people's diligence in hearing of us. Thus it shall be with all Christian parents, to their endless comfort: God will not be unmindful of their pains that they have taken, albeit they see not that fruit of their labors that they desire. [Object.] Here some man peradventure may object that the Apostle saith, The woman shall be saved in child-bearing, if they continue in faith, and charity, and holiness with sobriety, 1 Timothy chapter 2. verse 15. Where he seemeth to hang the salvation of the mother, upon the faith of the children, as if she could not be saved, except they continued in the truth. I answer, [Answer.] this place is in deed so understood, and wrested by many interpreters: but that cannot be the true meaning. Jerome an over-great prayser of virginity, and none of the greatest friends of matrimony, draweth the words to that sense, that he may by this means commend the single life; and withal withhold women from marriage, while they hear that they can no otherwise be saved, then if their children continue faithful unto the death.

The purpose of the Apostle in this place, as appeareth by the the circumstances going before, is to comfort the woman, that she should not cast away all confidence as one without hope, as being the cause of one of the greatest sins which brought the ruin of all mankind.

The feeling of this heavy burden, lying upon her conscience, might terrify her and work much fear and amazement in her soul and apprehension of the wrath of God, and therefore he comforteth her, and giveth her hope of salvation. But if the former exposition be received, that her salvation be suspended upon many others, he should cast down Thunder and Lightning upon her head, able to apall and dismay her; he should not comfort her, but terrify her: he should not lift her up with hope of life, but cast her down into despair, through fear of death, when she should understand that she could not possibly be saved, except her children did persevere in the faith.

Again, it lieth not in the power of women, to give them faith and love, much less the grace of perseverance, to continue constant unto the death: so that the Apostle should lay a burden upon their shoulders and put a yoke about their necks, which neither they, nor their fathers were able to bear. This is not the easy Yoke, nor the light burden of Christ. For albeit they strive with all their strength, and labor with all their power, to bring up their children in godliness, yet oftentimes they are obstinate, stubborn, headstrong, froward, perverse, and rebellious; so that they can do no good with them, because they will not obey them, nor hearken to their commandments.

Furthermore, this care of the instruction and institution of children, is a duty required rather of the father who is better able, then of the mother who is every way the weaker vessel, as appeareth by the Apostle, Ephes. 6.4. Fathers provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Lastly, the virtues here commended bebelong rather to the mothers, then to the children, as when he requireth of them holiness with sobriety, as Tit. 2.3, 4. it appeareth: The aged women that they be in behavior as becometh holiness, &c. that they may teach the young women to be sober, &c. If any farther object, that if the Apostle had meant to refer these last words to the woman, he would have said, if she continue in faith and charity, not, if they continue: I answer, [Answer.] nothing is more common and usual then the change of number, especially one of the words being a nowne of multitude. For it is plain and manifest, that the Apostle doth not point out someone certain woman, but speaketh in general of woman-kind, or of all women.

Thus doth the Apostle vary and alter the number in this present Chapter, sometimes speaking in the plural number, as of many, In like manner, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel: sometimes speaking in the singular number, as of one, Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. This is also easy to be shown in other places, as Galat. 6.1. Ye which are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Where we see, he beginneth the sentence with the plural number, and endeth it with the singular.

Wherefore, to return unto our purpose, from which we have digressed to answer an objection, and to open the interpretation of this Scripture; faithful parents, who have endeavored to sow the seed of eternal life in the minds of their children, are not to be censured and condemned, because they have lewd and ungodly children, that give evident tokens rather of reprobation then of salvation, as if it were their fault and offense: for as much as they may be careful to use all means of faith, and furtherance to eternal life, and yet notwithstanding fail of their end. If they do not discharge their duties, they shall be guilty of their blood: but if they do teach them, they are free, they have delivered their souls. If we have used diligence, and be evil spoken off, let us comfort our selves in the Lord, and rest our selves in the cleerenesse of our own consciences, and comfort our hearts in the testimony thereof, being well assured that in the great day of account, the LORD shall acquit us, when the mouth of iniquity shall be stopped. [Use 3]

Thirdly, from this ground ariseth great consolation to all faithful parents, who are to comfort themselves in this, if among many children and a plentiful issue, they have some few of them, yea, but one only that appeareth to be the faithful child of GOD, albeit it be otherwise with the rest. GOD indeed will receive glory in all, though some of them be reprobates: this must prevail with our natural affections, and teach us to suppress our grief and sorrow. No doubt it is cause of y^e greatest grief, and maketh their head as waters, and their eyes a fountain of tears, that they make their bed to swim and water their couch with weeping; which striketh nearer unto them, to behold their ungodly ways, then to see them suffer a thousand deaths. Abraham was exceedingly moved, when he was commanded to cast out of his family, his son Ishmael, for the thing was grievous in Abraham's sight, because of his son; and before this, he had said, O that Ishmael might live in thy sight: yet nevertheless he yielded to the will of God, who would therein be honored.

So when GOD respecteth us, and confirmeth his covenant toward us, and taketh unto himself any of our seed, we ought rather to praise God for this mercy and goodness toward us, in saving one, then murmur against him, or ask the question of him, why he calleth not all. If it please God so to deal in mercy toward us, that he vouchsafeth to be both our God, and the God of all, I say, of all our seed, we are bound unto him in so much greater duty, and he requireth of us the greater obedience, and looketh for a sacrifice of greater thankfulness. He dealeth not so with all good men, even such as have faithful souls, and desire to approve their service unto him: who when they have given them what education they can, and heartily craved of GOD his blessing upon their holy endeavors, yet have found many crosses, and such inward griefs, as have been ready to break even their heartstrings, and to bring their gray hairs with sorrow to the grave.

Nevertheless, we must not suffer our over-strong affections to prevail too far within us, and to swallow us up with overmuch heaviness, when we behold with our own eyes the wickedness of our children that are come out of our own loins and are of our own blood, when we see them without hope of being reclaimed and reformed, as those that run into all excess of riot: no, though we should see them taken away in the profaneness of their hearts. For why should we repine at it, to consider how God glorifieth himself, albeit it be in the destruction of some of ours? Of this we have two most notable examples in Aaron, and in Eli, never to be forgotten of us, recorded in the Books of Leviticus, and of Samuel. Touching Aaron, his two eldest sons, Nadab and Abihu, (of whom we now speak) sinned against the Lord in offering strange fire, and serving of God otherwise then he appointed; which is a thing detestable in his eyes, and there came out a fire from the Lord, and devoured them, and they died before the Lord.

Here was a grievous sin committed, here was a grievous punishment executed upon them; and their father did behold it with his eyes, and how they were carried out of the campe in their coats. Moses told him, that the LORD would be sanctified in them that come nigh him, and before all the people, he will be glorified, so that Aaron held his peace, Leviticus chapter 10. verse 3. So touching Eli, when he heard a fearful judgment denounced against his posterity, he said, It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good, 1 Samuel 3.18.

Thus ought we to do, and not vex and turmoyle our selves without reason, for that which we cannot remedy and redress. All the children of the faithful, are not the children of the promise: they that are the children of the flesh, are not the children of God, Galatians chapter 4. verse 23. All that are the seed of Adraham, are not the children of Abraham, Romans chapter 9. verse 6, 7. neither are all the Israel of God, which are of Israel.

Here it may be objected, which the Apostle [Objection 1] Peter speaketh to the Jews, The promise is made to you, and to your children, Acts 2.39. God is the God of the faithful, and of their seed.

I answer, The Apostle answereth this in the next words, [Answer.] even as many as the Lord our God shall call. So many as have God to be their God, shall in his good time be called to the knowledge of the truth. Hence it is, that in the promise annexed to the second commandment, it is said, he showeth mercy to thousands that love him, and keep his commandments. Thus he limiteth the promise of mercy, he restraineth it to those that love him. This promise is performed, when it holdeth in any, albeit a far off.

Another objection ariseth out of Paul's words to the Corinthians, where the seed of [Objection] the faithful are said to be holy, that is, sanctified and cleansed, The unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean, but now are they holy. If then they be all clean and holy, it followeth they are also under the election of grace.

I answer, they are holy touching the outward covenant, and general election, [Answer.] as to be of the visible Church, to have right in the Sacraments, and to have interest in the outward privileges thereof, as in the word, prayer, and such like. Thus the whole nation of the Jews are said to be chosen, and thus they may be said, and are said to be sanctified.

They are therefore deceived that think the Apostle meaneth that they are legitimate borne in lawful wedlock, for as much as the children of infidels are borne Legitimate, and not base borne: so that if he were so to be understood, he should ascribe no more to the children of believers, then of infidels, because before the conversion of either of them, their children were lawfully begotten: and therefore no doubt but they remained so afterward.

The question in this place is, whether a faithful person that is married, might lawfully dwell with the unfaithful? He proveth it ought to be so, because the unfaithful person, is sanctified by the faithful, so that their marriage is holy and pleasing unto God: which he confirmeth by an effect of their marriage, because the children begotten in it, are not unclean, that is, are not Gentiles, but Christians; they differ from the seed of Pagans and infidels, that are aliens from the Church.

[Object.] If any ask what we are to think of the infants of such as are Christians. I answer, we must judge of them according to charity, who have interest in the outward covenant, until by infidelity when they come to years of discretion, they shall cut off themselves; grounding our selves upon the promise of God made to Abraham, I will be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, Gen. 17.7. Nevertheless, albeit some cut off themselves, yet if the covenant be confirmed unto some of them, we have cause to comfort our selves herein. The Apostle John writing to the elect Lady, rejoiceth greatly that he found of her children walking in the truth: he saith not indefinitely, her children, nor generally all her children, but among her children, that is, some of thy children which inferreth that they did not all become faithful, although her self a most worthy and faithful woman, and had used (no doubt) the means of their conversion and continuance under the grace of GOD. We must content our selves with that favor which GOD showeth unto us, whether he call many of our children or very few of them.

[Use 4] Lastly, let all parents, be careful of their children's benefit, and seek to do them good, and not evil all the days of their life. We do all by a natural instinct love them, and are inclined to show compassion unto them, and to seek their promotion and preferment in temporal things. Our Savior saith, If a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent? or if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion? We will not give them what we know will hurt them, albeit they should earnestly desire it, and request it of us. We all desire to leave an happy issue behind us: and some are more careful for them, both living and dying, then for themselves. This duty hath many branches: for though all seek to leave them great, and taking deep root in the world, yet all do not take the right course. Some give themselves that liberty, that they are like to leave them little in the world.

Wherefore the first branch is to begin with our selves, to seek unfeignedly to fear God, and to lead our lives according to his commandments. This doth the Lord himself deliver, Deuter. 5.29. O that there were such an heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep my commandments always, that it might be well with them, and with their children forever.

If parents themselves will fear the Lord, and obey his will, they have a promise made to them, and to their children: but if they will not be the Lord's faithful servants, woe to them, and their posterities also. All parents that fear God aright, do not only lay up a good foundation for themselves, but provide well for their children after them, and are profitable instruments to derive God's blessings unto them abundantly after their departure. God hath promised and cannot deceive, to show mercy to thousands, of them that love him and keep his commandments, Exod. 20.6. If then we truly love our children, not only their bodies, but their souls, and chiefly their souls (which is the truest and soundest love,) we must endeavor above all things, to lead a godly life, and to go in and out before them, by a good example: We must behave our selves wisely in a perfect way: we must walk within the doors of our house, with an upright heart: we must set no wicked thing before our eyes.

Contrariwise, such parents as fear not God, themselves bring a down-fall and ruin to their families and posterities, and are the greatest enemies unto their children. How unnatural, or rather how monstrous a thing is it for parents to be instruments to bring children into the world, and then when they have brought them forth, to be the chief means to send them to hell? How woeful and lamentable a thing is it to cast their progeny and posterity into the curse of God, more bitter a thousand times then death, and more cruel, then to thrust them upon the swords point? It is noted in the Scriptures, and all men are ready with one voice, and one consent to acknowledge it, as an horrible impiety in those parents (forsaken of God, and given over to fill up the measure of their sins,) that spared not to make their children pass through the fire, and to offer their sons and daughters to devils. We condemn this all of us to the pit of hell, as a foul and fearful practice: and yet how many, (alas) how many in the world do practice this, nay, that which is ten thousand times worse then this? For all such wicked and profane parents as are careless and negligent of the fowls health of their children, committed as a precious treasure unto them, and do give them evil examples of all abominations, do give them an easy passage into hell fire, and do make them no better then a sacrifice to the devil.

Hence it is, that the LORD saith, Deut. 28.46. Because thou didst not serve the Lord thy God with joyfulness and a good heart, for the abundance of all things, therefore these curses shall be upon thee for signs and wonders, and upon thy seed forever.

The second branch of seeking their good, is to give them good education, and to plant in them the principles of religion, that they may know GOD betimes. So did David to his son Solomon, 1 Chron. 28.9. to know the GOD of his Father, and to serve him with a perfect heart, and with a willing mind. So doth Solomon instruct parents to train up a child in the way that he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it. So doth Paul exhort fathers to bring up their children in the nurture of the Lord, [Object.] Ephes. 6. If any object against these commandments, They will be unruly and disordered, albeit, they be never so well brought up: and though their parents be very careful, they will be very careless; and therefore they were as good hold their peace, as to speak to them, and not to be regarded.

[Answer.] I answer, so it is sometimes, but always it is not so. Many that have feared GOD with all their housholdes, have received much comfort by their children and servants, that have had good instruction put into them, as pure and wholesome liquor, into a vessel, and have seen the fruit thereof, to the unspeakable joy of their hearts. This we might show at large, in the reformed families of Abraham and Cornelius, and sundry others. As they planted and sowed good seed in the parts of their families, as it were in a fruitful field, so they reaped a plentiful harvest. Abraham had servants that were also God's servants, and prayed earnestly unto him. Cornelius had a soldier that waited upon him, that feared God, yea all his band of Italian soldiers, were Christian soldiers. Again, we must trust GOD with the effect and success of the education that we give them. He will work thereby by his Spirit in all that belong unto him, as seemeth good to his heavenly wisdom. If he do not give a blessing for causes unknown to us, but known to him, let us leave God's secret, yet just judgments to himself.

The third particular branch, is to pray to God for them to guide them in his ways, and to bless them in his fear, and to bless our labors bestowed among them. This we see in Job, Chapter 1. toward his children, When the days of their feasting were gone about, he sent and sanctified them, and rose up early in the morning, and offered burnt offerings according to the number of them all: for he said, It may be that my sons have sinned, and cursed God in their hearts. He was careful for those which were committed unto his charge, and feared they might offend God in their meetings, albeit he knew no such evil by them. The wise man saith, Happy is the man that feareth always: but he that hardeneth his heart, shall fall into mischief, Prov.

28. A like example we have in David, Psalm 72. where he prayeth for Solomon, Give the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness to the kings son, he shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment. So then, the faithful are to entreat and crave from God, the continuance of his covenant to their children, and to beg from his hands, an holy and sanctified seed: We must not presume, because we are faithful, and have received to believe, that therefore our seed must of necessity be so likewise: for then we shall but deceive our selves. Let not us therefore fail in craving a blessing from God upon our children, if we desire to make them heirs of blessing.

Fourthly, it is required of us, to rejoice in the blessing of God upon them, and to give him praise and glory, when he vouchsafeth to show mercy upon them, and upon us. If he did leave them in their sins, and in that corruption which they received from us, as it were by inheritance, we could not find just cause of complaint against him, who is bound neither to us, nor to our children: but forasmuch as he showeth much mercy to our posterity, as he hath done unto us, we have matter of praise and thanksgiving given unto us, whereby also we shall procure their farther good. It is noted of the Iailour, Acts 16. that he rejoiced that they of his household also believed in the Lord. He accounted it not sufficient for himself to believe, nor rejoiced only in his own salvation: but forasmuch as God had vouchsafed greater mercy unto him, to call his family also to the faith, this cheered his heart much more. If we have tasted of the like mercy, let us not be forgetful of the like duty.

Lastly, it belongeth unto us for the furtherance of their good, to give those all good encouragement in well doing, that are conscionable in their duties to God and to us▪ we are bound to praise and commend them, to comfort them, to cheer them up, and to defend them against all malicious enemies, that seek to disgrace them. The Apostle Paul willeth parents not to provoke their children, lest they be discouraged, Coloss. 3.21. It is a means to cool and quench zeal, to find discouragements in godly proceedings. On the other side, we ought to show all dislike and hatred against evil, and an angry countenance toward such as are unreformed. The Prophet, touching the right ordering and good government of his house, declareth that he would not know a wicken person, and him that hath an high look, he will not suffer: His eyes should be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with him, he that walketh in the perfect way, he shall serve him.

This is a good means to make both houses to prosper, and kingdoms to flourish, when the godly are advanced, and the evil doers are beaten down: but when evil is set aloft, and goeth vnchecked and vncontrolled, and godliness is driven to the wall, it prognosticateth, and foretellethe the ruin and utter desolation of those societies, albeit for a time they may continue.

When they offered strange fire before the Lord in the wilderness. We have hitherto spoken of the destruction of Aaron's sons before the face of their father: now let us see for what cause it was done. The sin of his sons is remembered to be this, they offered strange fire, that is, such as was not appointed and commanded of the Lord; they took not the fire from the altar to burn incense with— all; which came down from heaven, and was preserved by the diligence of the Priests, until the captivity of Babylon. Now, whereas the author of the second book of Maccabees telleth us, that whē their fathers were led into Persia, the Priests that were then devout, took the fire of the altar privily, and hid it in an hollow place of a pit without water, where they kept it sure, so that the place was unknown to all men, hath no testimony of truth out of the sacred Scriptures, as we shall show more in the 26. Chapter of this Book of Numbers. Moses maketh mention of this example of the sin and punishment of Aaron's sons, to the end the Levites should be more wise and wary in the execution of their office, because God hereby showeth, that they shall never escape his hand, y^t do not rightly discharge the duties committed unto them. For the examples of God's judgments upon the corrupters and contemners of his worship must make us more careful and fearful to offend. Now, whereas they are punished according to their sin, that is, their offering strange fire with strange fire, we shall speak afterward in the fifth Chapter.

Here we will observe, that this fact of these, may seem in the eyes of many to be a small offense, and not to deserve so heavy a censure, and so grievous a punishment. For it may be said in defense of them, either that they had a good intent and meaning, though they missed in the manner; or that this fire which they offered, would serve to burn the incense as well as any other, and what skilleth it by what fire it be done? But all these are [Doctrine 3] vain pretences, forasmuch as God had commanded the contrary. We learn from hence, that nothing in matter or form, concerning the worship of God, or the administration of the Sacraments, ought to be added or altered, or detracted, but all must be done as God hath determined and directed. Our own dreams and devises must not sway us in the matters of God, but it is his will and word, that must will and govern us. The Lord himself challengeth and defendeth his authority, in laying down the manner and way of his own service, not leaving it to the liberty of any creature, men or Angels to intermeddle with it, forasmuch as he will have all things done, as himself hath prescribed. He is well pleased and contented, that men shall make Laws and statutes for human matters, concerning their temporal estates in this world, as shall be fittest for the places where they rule and for the persons whom they rule, as touching treasons, murders, thefts, oppressions, slanders, routs, riots, and such disorders: but for the divine worship how God shall be served, we must leave it unto him, he only can prescribe what must be done, he only will appoint what must be left undone.

It is true, the strange fire that Nadab and Abihu took, was as well able to burn the incense, as that which burned evermore upon the altar: and yet because God had not sanctified it for that purpose, they were fearfully and dreadfully devoured with fire from God. When God instituted the Passover in remembrance of his merciful deliverance in passing over the houses of the Israelites, when the first borne of the Egyptians were destroyed, the whole order is set down both for the matter and manner of celebrating and solemnizing that ordinance: he instructeth what they shall take, what ceremonies they shall use, what gesture they shall observe, and what he will have them not to do. Moses doth many times in the book of the Law, give this direction, Deuter. 4.2. Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall you diminish ought from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God, which I command you: and in the 12. Chapter, ye shall not do after after all the things that we do here this day, every man whatsoever is right in his own eyes: and afterward, What thing soever I command you, observe and do it: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it. On the contrary, we see how Saul was punished with the loss of his kingdom, because he would offer sacrifice contrary to the express will of God made known unto him, 1 Sam. 15.23. The like might be said of Jereboam's two golden calves erected at Dan and Bethel, without warrant, and worshipped without warrant, it was the overthrow of himself and his posterity, 1 Kings 14.7. &c. For this cause the Apostle speaking of the institution of the Lord's Supper, saith, 1 Corin. 11. I received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, that the Lord the same night, in which he was betrayed, took bread, &c. whereby it appeareth that it is no small matter, it is no toy or trifle to worship GOD otherwise then he in his word appointeth unto us, considering the saying of the wise man, Add not thou unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar.

This crosseth man's devises which are [Reason 1] bold to step up in God's place, and therefore let us see the reasons. First, God will be acknowledged to be the only Law-giver, the king of his Church, and the only Prophet to instruct it in y^e will of God. This is that which the Apostle James witnesseth, chap. 4. There is one Law-giver, who is able to save and to destroy, that can cast body and soul into hell fire, Matth. 10. He is the master of the house, that must set down orders for the government of his house. None can make a Law in the kingdom, but by authority of the king: none can alter it being made, but the king, So is it in the Church, none can appoint any word, any Sacrament, any worship but God himself, none can reuerse any institution without him. So that additions, or detractions, or alterations, or any mixtures whatsoever, are so many abuses of the Sacraments, of the word, and of the worship of God.

[Reason 2] Secondly, there is promise of blessing to them that serve him with a perfect heart: and there is threatening of most heavy curses, and judgments to come upon their souls that worship him after the commandments and precepts of men. Our Savior chargeth his disciples to observe all things, whatsoever he commandeth them, and then he addeth, Loe, I am with you to the ende of the world, Matth. 28.20. It appeareth in many places of the book of Judges, the Israelites are delivered over to their adversaries for transgressing in this kind, even for worshipping him after other ways then he had appointed. There is a fearful denuntiation in the shutting up of the Revelation, against all that shall dare either to add or detract anything in the holy things of God: I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the Prophecy of this Book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written, in this Book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the Book of this Prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the Book of life, and out of the holy City, and from the things which are written in this Book. Wherefore it is no small matter, to follow the private willes of men in the worship of God, and not to suffer our selves to be guided and directed by his word and commandment.

[Objection.] This may seem to tie up the desires of man too strictly, and therefore his wisdom that he hath by nature Ministreth many objections against this truth, to which we are to give answer as briefly as we can. First the question may be asked, whether Princes have not power to make laws in the Church? have they nothing to do with the Church? may they intermeddle only with the Common-wealth? hath not God made them overseers of both states, as also committed the charge unto them of both Tables? [Answer.] I answer, the care of Religion belongeth to all Princes, and therefore the godly kings of Judah made it their first labor to establish God's worship.

But touching the worship of God, we must observe that Church laws and constitutions, are of three sorts, Material, Ministerial, or circumstantial. Laws that concern the matter, substance, and parts of God's worship, are already established by God in the word; nothing is left to Princes or Pastors of the Church, nothing ought to be invented of man, nothing may be hammered in the forge of our brains, which are too shallow to meddle in such deep and profound matters; as Christ teacheth, Matthew chapter 15. verse 9. In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines, the commandments of men.

These Laws we are to leave to God only, which touch the substance of his worship. Ministerial Laws, are such Canons as command the practice and execution of the former Laws, wherein the Prince is as it were the Minister, commanding under God. It belongeth to him to see both Ministers and people to do their duty, 2 Chronicles, chapter 30. verses 12.16. and to provide that all his subjects reform themselves in those things that pertain to the worship of God: and to punish idolaters, Exodus chapter 22. verse 20, blasphemers, Leviticus chapter 24. verse 16. false Prophets, Deuteronomy 13.5. and profaners of holy things, Numbers chapter 15. verse 35. These belong unto him, these he is to look unto.

Lastly, other Laws are circumstantial, such as are constitutions made in things merely indifferent, which vary according to times, occasions, places, and Churches. These Laws also he hath authority to make and meddle withal, provided that the rules of the word, be not transgressed, but carefully observed. So then, albeit the Prince ought not himself to execute the things of God, as to preach the word, or to administer Sacraments, or to practice the discipline of the Church, yet he is bound to see them done, and that all things be done in order & comeliness in the Church.

Again, it may be objected, [Object.] that the Scripture doth often mention, that sacrifices were offered otherwise then God appointed, & yet accepted. They ought to be brought to the door of the Tabernacle, and not offered elsewhere. I answer, [Answer.] the question is not so much of the fact, as of the right: not what was done, but what ought to be done.

This is the cause that the Lord complaineth both against their persons and their doings, and brandeth them both with a mark of dishonor, in this manner; Jehoshaphat did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, but the high places were not taken away: he walked in all the ways of Asa his father, he turned not aside from it; nevertheless the people offered, and burnt incense yet in the high places.

The like is remembered of Iehoash, he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord all his days, wherein Jehoiada the Priest instructed him; But the high places were not taken away, the people still sacrificed and burnt Incense in the high places, 2 Kings 12.2, 3. When Manasseh was brought again to Jerusalem into his kingdom, he sought the Lord his God, & took away the strange gods, and repaired the Altar of the Lord: nevertheless, the people did sacrifice still in the high places, yet unto the Lord their God only. God required to be worshipped not only as he appointed, but where he appointed, and therefore the contrary practice is noted to be a transgression & a breach of the Law of God.

Thirdly, it may be said, that the Prophets [Objection 4] of God, who could not be ignorant of their duties, did not sacrifice as God commanded, and yet are blameless. They did not bring their sacrifice to the Tabernacle, nor unto the place that God had chosen, but offered in other places, as Samuel in Mispah, 1 Sam. 7, 9. and elsewhere, chap. 16, 2.

I answer, he did it as one of the Prophets, who were extraordinary persons, and not tied to the ordinary rules in all their actions. So we see Elijah offered in Mount Carmel, 1 Kin. 18. But we are not to follow extraordinary matters without a special calling, forasmuch as we live by laws, not by examples. So then it was lawful in the Prophets, in regard of their personal vocation, which without it had been utterly unlawful.

Lastly, it may be objected that David is [Objection 4] commended, because he intended to build an house to the Name of God. He had received no commandment from God to build the Temple, it was his good meaning and good intent, yet he is expressly commended of God, 2 Chron. 6, 7.8. where Solomon in praising God, saith, It was in the heart of David my father, to build an house for the Name of the Lord God of Israel: but the Lord said to David my father, forasmuch as it was in thy heart to build an house for my Name, thou diddest well in that it was in thy heart. If then David having no word or direction from God did well, how is all will-worship evil?

I answer, in this God respecteth not the deed it self, but the intent of the doer: so that when it is said, Thou hast done well, it is as much as if the Lord had said, I know thou hadst a good meaning in it; as it appeareth by the reasons used in the second book of Samuel, where David saith to Nathan the Prophet, See now I dwell in an house of Cedar, but the Ark of GOD dwelleth within Curtaines: where he compareth himself with God, and his own house of Cedar, with God's Ark within Curtaines. This reason carrieth with it a great show of comliness & seemelinese. For some might think with themselves, was it meet that himself should dwell in his seeled house, & the Lord's house lie waste? Notwithstanding in matters of God we are not to reason according to our own opinion and outward appearing, but according unto the word of God. And herein was David deceived, that he went beyond the Commandment of God. To build a Temple to God, is not in it self evil, GOD had promised that the Tabernacle and the Ark should have a resting place, Deut. 12, 5, 6. 1 Kings 8 but to seek to prevent God, was to be reprov'd. As to set a King over them was not in it self unlawful, Deuter. 17, 15. but when they attempted it before the time, and waited not God's Commandment to go before them, they are reprov'd and punished for it, 1 Sam. 12, 16. David in this place had received no direction touching this matter, either of the time, or of the place; there was no Commandment either who should build it, or when it should be built, or where it should be built. Hence it is, that the Lord sent Nathan unto him, who said unto him, Shalt thou build me an house to dwell in? Whereas I have not dwelt in any house since the time that I brought up the Children of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day, but have walked in a Tent and in a Tabernacle. In all the places wherein I have walked with all the Children of Israel, spake I a word with any of the Tribes of Israel whom I commanded to feed my people Israel, saying, Why build ye not me an house of Cedar?

So then seeing it might be said to him, Who required these things at thy hands? Who commanded of thee any such work? Who ever spake unto thee to do it? Howsoever his purpose might be commended, yet the fact is reprov'd. And God useth two reasons to call him back from his desire and enterprise, one taken from his own person, the other from the person of David. From the person of God, because hitherto he had lived in a Tabernacle, so that there was no cause in respect of him to trouble himself with the building of a Temple. From the person of David, because he was to consider that there were many in Israel besides him, many Judges and Princes beside him and before him, yet none of them had any such charge laid upon them, or committed unto them, or required of them: so that he ought not to have enterprised that which was commanded to none of them, nor to himself. True it is, GOD saith in the book of Deuteronomy, that there should be one place where he would be worshipped, but what, or where that place was, he did not foreshow; & therefore his farther pleasure to be revealed, was to be expected, and an express commandment to be waited for. For we see in the Scriptures, that oftentimes somewhat is commanded, which cometh not by and by to be practiced and executed: as we declared before, touching the choosing of a King from among their brethren, when they came into the Land which the Lord their God had given them. So Christ sent out his Apostles into all the world, and commanded them to teach all nations; but at what time they should go forth, they were to expect a new commandment and commission: so that albeit they were bidden to go, yet if they had gone before they had known when to go, they had offended. The sum and effect of this answer cometh hereunto, that David's thought and purpose was good and godly, if we consider the root of it, inasmuch as it proceeded from a desire of promoting true religion: nevertheless although God approved his intent, yet he suffered him not to go forward, because he wanted his word to warrant his intent, and therefore did not obey God, but follow his own mind and device.

Thus we see the cause why God forbad David to build him a Temple, and yet afterward the people in the days of Haggai are reprov'd, being returned from captivity, because they built not. Here he forbiddeth, that which there he cōmandeth. These things seem not to agree together, but to be contrary one to the other, and yet, though different in show, they agree very well in deed & in truth. For in this place David is pulled back from his purpose, as running too fast, traveling as it were without his guide, and sailing without his compass, because he had not the word of God: whereas they were reprov'd, because, albeit they were stirred up by the Prophets, and called continually to that duty by the word of God, yet they could find no leisure to fall to work, but followed wholly their own profits and pleasures. Thus we have answered the objections: let us now come to the uses, & see what we are to learn from hence.

[Use 1] First of all we are taught, that touching things that are to be done or not to be done, we are not to judge by the false rule of our own carnal and corrupt reason, but according to the sure word of the Prophets and Apostles. It seemeth a small thing in our own judgment to burn Incense with strange fire: but it is a most grievous sin, and deserved a most grievous punishment, if we consider the word of God thereby transgressed, or respect his commandment thereby violated. For these two sons of Aaron died not the common death of all men, nor were visited after the ordinary visitation of the rest of the sons of men, but God wrought a strange work, he brought fire from heaven, and consumed them. The like we might say of Korah and his company, they contented not themselves with the ordinary calling of the Levites, to do the service of the Tabernacle of the Lord, and to stand before the Congregation to minister unto them, but they would also take every man his censure, and put incense in them, but they sought the Priesthood also, and usurped the office peculiarly appointed to Aaron and to his sons. It might seem a small thing, to set up others to burn incense, and a man might say, Why might not Korah do it as well as Aaron? What skilleth it by whom it be done? But hereby the will of God is broken and little regarded, yea, God himself is contemned and little esteemed in our eyes. This then bindeth every soul to humility, not to think anything better, wiser, or more expedient and profitable to the Church, then that which is prescribed unto it; neither yet to account anything idle or superfluous, or unnecessary, or that might be amended. There be many profane men that think most basely and contemptibly of the most excellent things of God, as of the Word, of the Ministry, of the Sacraments, and of the prayers of the Church. It seemeth to many a slight thing, not to be washed with the water of Baptism: but it is not so with God, who hath instituted that Sacrament, and therefore woe unto them that neglect it, or despise it. The like we might say of the Lord's Supper, it is accounted among many a small matter, whether they come to the Table of the Lord, or not. But we must measure the necessity of it, not by the outward show of the outward actions, but by the Commandment of God: because whatsoever Christ hath instituted for the perpetual use and benefit of the Church, we are commanded to yield obedience unto it. Whosoever neglecteth to do what he appointeth, sinneth most grievously against him. Wherefore the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 11. As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come. Such then as come sildome to this Sacrament, declare plainly that they regard not the death of Christ. They look to receive life and salvation from him, but they do not esteem the means whereby they may be made partakers of them. The Apostle speaking of the word of God in his Epistle to the Galatians, declareth that by the preaching thereof, Christ Jesus was so clearly set forth, that he was as it were crucified among them: much more may this be said of the Supper of the Lord, which is a most lively remembrance of his death, and of the shedding of his most pure and precious blood? This use hath many branches. First, we must think our selves fools in the matters of God, that we may be made wise: such as think themselves wise, do thereby profess themselves to be no better then fools, 1 Cor. 3, 18. Secondly, to account God only wise, yea, wisdom it self, as the wise man saith, Prov. 9, 1. Wisdom hath built her an house. Thirdly, add nothing to the word of the Lord, which were to make our selves wiser then God, and to show our selves to be worse then mad men. We must not turn aside to the right hand or to the left, Deut. 5, 32. nor decline from any of the words which he hath commanded us, Deut. 28, 14. for that were to wrestle against the Lord, who is too strong for us: his will must stand upright, when our will shall be overthrown and cast down to the ground. Lastly, we must think nothing small or little in God's service. He took order for the least things in the Tabernacle, and left them not arbitrary. A little thing done amiss, bringeth all out of square in the worldly affairs of men: and so it is with God's matters. In the business that concerneth our selves, wherein we take our selves to be any way interested, we account nothing little; if we be injured or wronged therein, we take it to heart, we cannot abide it, we storm against thē that cross us. And shall we think God is careless what becometh of his service, and consequently of his glory? Woe unto us, if we judge so of honoring him.

[Use 2] Secondly, this serveth (seeing all worship of God ought to be guided by his word, and directed by his commandment, not by the private wills of men) to reprove the wonderful pride of men in all ages, who have always presumed to add somewhat of their own to the ordinance of God in his worship, and accounted it too gross simplicity to cleave to y^e bare and naked word, & so have made a mixture of his religion with our own invention, as it were to sow our field with diverse seeds. The Scribes and Pharisees, added the traditions of their fathers, as washings of cups, of beds, and of tables: yea, they so abounded in them, that they made the Commandments of God of none effect, thinking it great reason they should give place to their devices. The Papists have added to the word of God, apochryphall books; many unwritten verities; the decrees and decretals, the inventions of their Popes; which they hold in as great reverence as the holy Scriptures. They have added unto the two Sacraments instituted by Christ, five other; to make the number amount to seven. To baptism, they have added exorcismes, spittle, salt, cream, and other such like trash and trumpery. To the Supper, they have added Transubstantiation, the real presence, the merit of the work, the Mass propitiatory for the quick and dead, crossings & creepings, elevation, reservation, preservation by sea and land, in wars and in journeys. To the Ministry of Pastors & Teachers, they have added an idle rabble of Pope, Cardinals, Abbots, Monks, Friars, Jesuits, Votaries, Nuns, Acolytes, Exorcistes, & a multitude of drones, as croking frogs arising out of the bottomless pit. To prayer and pure invocation of the Name of GOD, they have added prayers to Saints, prayers in a strange tongue, prayers before Images, and in their Idol Temples, prayers said by tale, and numbered, or rather mumbled upon their beads, their canonical hours, and such like superstitions, partly idolatrous, and partly heathenish, and partly blasphemous. Thus they have corrupted God's worship, and defiled whatsoever they touch, and turned his truth into a lie. It is reported of Gregory Bishop of Rome, the best of all those that followed, but the worst of thē that went before him, that in a most grievous and contagious plague, he invented and appointed sundry superstitions and supplications directed to Saints, set down in the Litany; having neither commandment, nor example, nor any warrant in the word: but God so revenged this boldness and presumption, that in one hour, fourscore of those that so prayed and rehearsed those suffrages, suddenly fell to the earth, and breathed out their last breath. Thus God disliketh and disclaimeth the devices of men in his service. Of all which practices, which are no better then mere dotages, the Apostle saith, They have a show of wisdom in will-worship, but they bring a bondage to the rudiments of the world, frō which Christ hath freed us, and therefore ought not to be entangled by them, being after the commandments and doctrines of men. The heathen knew by the light of nature, that every God must needs be served according to his own will, and not according to the will of them that are their worshippers. All voluntary worship is utterly condemned, and GOD tieth us strictly to his word, without adding or diminishing. Our good intents cannot prevail with him, when the thing we do, is not warranted unto us. Hence it is, that the Lord saith not, You shall not do evil in your own eyes, but, Thou shalt not do that which seemeth good in your own eyes: they must keep them precisely to his commandments.

There is a way (saith Solomon) which seemeth right unto a man, but the issues thereof are the ways of death. Wherefore, let our conceit be never so good, yet it profiteth nothing, being not grounded upon the word, but upon man's wit. Our Savior foretelling the troubles that shall come upon the people of God that profess his Name, saith, They shall excommunicate you, yea, the time cometh, That whosoever killeth you, will think that he doth God service. They imagine they do good in such persecutions, as no doubt it fell out in Paul before his conversion. What then? Shall their good intent excuse their evil actions? and go for current payment with God? No, in no wise; because he measureth not our doings by our purposes, but by his own precepts. When Peter bad Christ his Master to pity and spare himself, Mat. 16, 22. and the Disciples forbad little children to come unto Christ; and at another time would have commanded fire to come down from heaven to consume the Samaritans; did they not offend, or can any defend them, because they had no evil intent? Why then is Peter called Satan, and bidden to come behind? And why are the Disciples reprov'd for discouraging the people that brought little children unto him, who ought rather to have encouraged them? Or why doth Christ tell them, they knew not of what spirit they were? Joshua had no evil meaning, when he advised Moses to forbid those that prophesied in the host, Numb. 11, 28. Peters meaning had no hurt in it, when he would not permit Christ to wash his feet, John 13. Yet doth Moses reprove Joshua as one carried away with the spirit of envy: and Christ telleth Peter, that if he washed him not, he had no part in him. So then, we are to understand, that as there is a God, and that God will be worshipped, so he will be worshipped according to his own word and will. If we decline from his will expressed in his word, we may well please our selves, but we cannot please him: we may think our selves wise, but he holdeth us for no better then fools: we may for a time go on in our ignorant courses, but he will in the end call us to a reckoning for them, and set all in order before us, to the confusion of our faces.

[Use 3] Lastly, it is our duty to study to acquaint our selves with the Scriptures, and let us read them with all diligence. The word is a Christian man's true and perfect guide, and in all doubts it is his Counselor. Let it not grieve us to be ruled by it, nor account it an heavy burden, or an uneasy yoke to be held hard unto it, seeing it is so sure a way for us to walk in. Let us take this to be our guide, and we shall never step one foot awry. As the Teachers of y^e word are not to deliver that which they never received of the Lord to his people: so we must follow no more then is warranted unto us from thence: it must be shown unto us there, before obedience be yielded unto it. He hath prescribed in it a form of serving of him, that only he accepteth, other he abhorreth and punisheth. The examples of Nadab and Abihu, mentioned in this place, & afterward again in this book, do preach this doctrine unto us, and cry out aloud as with a lively voice, that we should take heed by their harms. In other things God is full of patience, but in this he is full of wrath, and his jealousy burneth as fire. He hath authority over his house, to appoint his own worship, and he cannot endure to have it taken away from him by any man. Wherefore it behooveth us to search the Scriptures, that we may learn his will; and we must suffer them to dwell plentifully in us, that we may obey his will. First, we must know it before we can obey it: if we decline and depart never so little from it, our work is out of square. The Prophet reproveth Saul, because he performed his will to halves, and saith unto him, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in *obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice: and to hearken, then the fat of Rams, 1 Sam. 15. He commanded Joshua to have the book of the law continually before him, and he pronounceth those blessed that delight in it, and do meditate upon it day and night. Woe then unto those that hide the book of God from the people, and take away the key of knowledge, that they should have no entrance into the kingdom of heaven. These are they that are the murderers of many thousand souls, that might come to the knowledge of the truth, if these false Prophets did not lock up and keep close the Scriptures from them: and therefore they are guilty of shedding blood, and bring a famine, not of bread; a thirst, but not of water: the people cannot hear the words of the Lord. They feed them with lying legends, with deceitful fables, and with human traditions, which do no better than starve them, and are not able to keep life in them: whiles in the mean season they hide the Scriptures in an unknown tongue, so that albeit they hear them, yet they cannot profit by them. Thus the blind lead the blind, until both the leader, and he that is led, fall into the ditch. And woe unto those also that live in the Sun-shine of the Gospel, & yet shut their eyes that they should not see. They have the light brought unto them, they need not say, Who shall ascend into heaven, or who shall descend into the deep to bring it unto us, that we may hear it and do it? Neither need any say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it and do it? But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it. It is brought unto our doors, & preached upon the house tops, that is, it is set forth openly, it is published by authority, it may be professed with liberty of conscience, and no man is endangered to lose life or limb, or to have one hair of his head touched for it. Such are the days wherein we live, that we may truly say with the Apostle, If our Gospel be hid, it is hid in them that are lost, in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ (who is the Image of God) should shine unto them. As these men are ignorant, so they are willingly ignorant; they know nothing, because they will not understand. They profess themselves to be Christians, and yet they have many of thē no more knowledge of Christ than Turks and Infidels. What a lamentable thing is it that such as bear the Name of Christ, should know nothing touching Christ? It will be thought strange, that any such should be found in such a flourishing Church as ours is, where the Gospel is sincerely taught, & hath had a free passage so many years. It is true indeed, it may seem very strange, and yet (alas) it is too common. Let the Ministers of the word take an account of those that come to receive the Supper of the Lord, what they have learned, let them make a through search and suruay how they have profited, and they shall find that to be true, which I affirm. Many know nothing at all what Christ did for them, neither ever heard what he should do for them: his Name they confess hath often come to their ears, and they have heard very many speak of him, but they know not how or which way they should be beholden to him, or indebted unto him for anything or what he hath done for them. Is it not possible that many of the Saracens or sauages should hear & know more of Christ Jesus, than these falsely called Christians? As this is enough to break the hearts of the Ministers, and to make them labor more conscionably than they have done, so it should stir up the people to seek after knowledge, which is as the light of the eye, or as a candle in the house, whereby we may see what we do, and how we serve God, whether truly or falsely, and whether we go right or wrong. It is enough with the greatest sort, to do as* most do: and to practice that manner of the worship of God, which is countenanced and continued by authority, albeit they can give no reason of it, neither know how to warrant it. It belongeth unto us not only to profess the truth, but to be able to maintain the truth which we profess, against all gainsayers, and such enemies as seek to rob us of it. It is a duty required of us, not to content our selves to do as the rest of our neighbors do, but to be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh us a reason of the hope that is in us, with meekness of spirit, 1 Pet. 3, 15. Every man presumeth he hath the truth, and therefore they never enquire farther into the matter, nor labor to satisfy their own hearts upon what grounds they stand. They do as their honest neighbors: they think it no good manners to differ from them: they account it folly to seek to be wiser then their forefathers: & so they iumpe with the Church of Rome, that teacheth her Disciples to believe as the Church believeth, albeit they can yield no reason how the Church believeth. Whereby it appeareth, that albeit all men are worshippers of God, yet the greatest sort know not how they worship God; so that we may say unto them, as Christ spake to the woman of Samaria, Ye worship ye know not what, John 4, 22. Let all such know, that they want true comfort in their worshipping, forasmuch as they know not whether they please God or not. They are like men that shoot at a mark, which know not whether they shoot short, or shoot beyond the mark; or whether they shoot wide or how much they are wide, or whether they hit the mark. Thus it fareth with ignorant worshippers, they are wholly ignorant whether they go astray in the matter or in y^e manner of his worship, whether they do that which God requireth, or that which he condemneth. For this is no otherwise, nor nowhere learned but by the word: so that all such as are ignorant thereof, are in a wretched case and woeful condition, and not far from destruction, whatsoever they do esteem of themselves, or others judge of them.

5. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

6. Bring the Tribe of Levi near, and present them before Aaron the Priest, that they may minister unto him.

7. And they shall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole Congregation before the Tabernacle of the Congregation, to do the service of the Tabernacle.

8. And they shall keep all the instruments of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and the charge of the children of Israel, to do the service of the Tabernacle.

9. And thou shalt give the Levites unto Aaron and to his sons: they are wholly given unto him out of the children of Israel.

10. And thou shalt appoint Aaron and his sons, and they shall wait on their Priests Office: and the stranger that cometh nigh, shall be put to death.

11. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

12. And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Israel, instead of all the first borne that openeth the matrice among the children of Israel; therefore the Levites shall be mine.

13. Because all the first borne are mine: for on the day that I smote all the first borne in the Land of Egypt, I hallowed unto me all the first borne in Israel, both man and beast, mine they shall be: I am the Lord.

Hitherto of the first part of the Preface, consisting in a description of Aaron's sons, and in a relation what became of them: part of them dying in their sins, and part succeeding in the Priests Office. Now followeth the second part in these words, which is a presentation of the Levites before him. Touching this whole Tribe, we must observe that it was divided and sorted into two ranks, whereof the first is the Priests; and the second, the rest commonly called by the common name of Levites, who were not admitted into the former order, as appeareth more evidently in the 16, chapter following, as also in the 18, chapter.

Touching the Priests, they are of two sorts, the one was as y^e head, the other as his hands: one was the chief above all the rest, the other were inferior, as assistants unto him. The chief was the high Priest, of whom the Scripture setteth down four things.

First, his consecration; he was brought before the Altar, he was washed with water, he was clothed with those holy garments that God had appointed, he had the sacred oil poured upon his head; lastly, sacrifice was offered on the Altar for his sanctification, and his garments were sprinkled with the blood of it.

Secondly, the things that were required in him being consecrated in the former manner, which are cheefely these; he might not be defective or deformed in body, his wife must be a virgin of his own people, he might not uncover his head, rent his garments, nor go in to mourn for any that was dead, though it were his father or mother.

Thirdly, the Scripture setteth down his employment, which was to go daily into the Sanctuary, to light the Lamps, to burn Incense, and every week to provide the show-bread, 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 on the feast days to offer the people's sacrifices with the other Priests, and once in the year, on the day of expiation to enter into the Holiest of all, to make prayer for himself and the people.

Fourthly, his attire or holy vestiments in which he was to perform this service of God, which were these six in number, a breast-plate, an Ephod, a Robe, a broidred coat, a miter, & a girdle.

Touching the Priests of inferior condition, they had the same kind of consecration which the high Priest had, in sacrificing they were like unto him, and in the service of the Sanctuary, in burning incense, in providing the bread of proposition, and in preparing & looking to the lamps and lights. This was the difference in these between him & them, that he was the chief, and they were helpers: he was the director, they were directed and guided by him. Besides, this was peculiar to the high Priest, that he consulted with God by Vrim and Thummim, and entered into the holiest place to make atonement, to cleanse and hallow it from the sins of the people. Their vestiments were the same, saving that the high Priest only had the breast-plate and an Ephod of gold; which is to be noted, because the rest of the Priests did sometimes wear a linned Ephod. They might have no blemish or deformity, Levite. 21, 18. They might drink no wine nor strong drink when they were to enter into the Sanctuary, Levite. 10, 9. They might not defile themselves by the dead, nor come nigh any that was dead, except it were their father or mother, son or daughter, or sister unmarried, Levite. 21, 1. They might not shave their heads nor beards, nor cut their flesh; they might marry no harlot, nor woman divorced, Levite. 21, 5, 7. The first that were consecrated to this office, were Aaron's sons Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar. From Eleazar in David's time (who established an exact order among them) were issued 16, families, and from Ithamar, eight; that is from them both, 24, families. These he sorted and separated into four and twenty classes or courses, & named each of them after the name of him who was the chief of each family; and concerning the ordering of them, and setting one before another, (to avoid contention) they cast lots. All of them could not attend every day without confusion and disorder, & they must have intermission and times of vacation, so that one course performed the service one week, and another course another week. Hence it is, that it is said in the book of Chronicles, that Jehoiada the Priest dismissed not the courses; that is, he sent not away the troops and companies of the Priests that attended the service of the Temple, when their time of waiting was expired; so that according to the order appointed, they should have departed, and the next course have succeeded: because he meant to make good use of them in the deposing of wicked & usurping Athalia, and in the establishing of the royal throne of Joash the lawful King of Judah. This also appeareth in part in the New Testament, Luk. 1, 8, 9. It came to pass, that Zachariah of the course of Abia, executed the Priests Office according to the custom of the Priests, &c. Thus much touching the Priests Office, who were Aaron and his sons, whom God chose out of all the families of the Tribe of Levi to minister before him.

It remaineth to consider, how the rest or residue of that Tribe were employed. They were not to be idle, but to serve also first in the Tabernacle which Moses erected, and afterward in the Temple which Solomon built. When these grew up and increased in great number, they were sorted by David for orders sake into four ranks. Some were appointed to be Ministers of the Priests and Temple: some to be singers: some to be porters: and others Scribes and Judges.

Touching the first, specially called Levites y^t attended the service of the Sanctuary, their Offices were to carry the Tabernacle, and the Ark of the Covenant in the removes of the people, until God according to his promise fixed and settled them in one certain place, whither the Tribes should resort; and then they were to take care of them, and the vessels appointed to be used in the service of GOD. Unto these offices in latter times were added the flaying of the beasts that were to be offered, as 2 Chron. 35, 10, 11.

Touching the second rank, to wit, the sweet singers of the songs of Zion, we read in the first book of the Chronicles, chap. 25. they were to sing prophesies with harps, with viols, and with cymbals.

Touching the Porters, which were the third rank, they were appointed to see, that no uncircumcised, no polluted or profane person should enter into the house of the Lord, 1 Chron. 26: and to guard the same in such sort, that all things therein might be in safety, as the sacred vessels, the treasure of the house, and the treasure of the dedicated things.

Touching the Scribes, which are the last rank, they were such as read the Scriptures, and expounded the Law of God in the Temple at Jerusalem, and in the Synagogues that were in all parts of the Land; who were also called Doctors, that is, Interpreters of the Law of God. All which we may read at large in a learned Treatise of the Church, Lib. 5. Cap. 5, & 6.

Having thus briefly considered the distinct offices of such as were set apart to the Ministry among the people of GOD, who made his Covenant with Levi, of life and peace: let us now return to the words of Moses, and proceed to the second part of the Preface, which is the presentation of the Levites before Aaron, to be as his hands and helpers, that they might minister unto him. Wherein we are to observe two points; first, the commandment of God to Moses; and secondly, the reason of the commandment. For touching the execution of it by Moses according to the commandment of God, which is in other places most usually added, is in this place omitted, but must be supplied and understood from that which followeth: for when once the Levites were offered and presented, then presently he proceeded to the numbering of them, so that his obedience in this respect is sufficiently justified.

Touching the commandment of God directed unto him, we are to mark these several points, and of them the Author is GOD; for in divine matters nothing must be attempted without commandment from him, he must warrant thē, or else they are not to be allowed.

First, the substance of the commandment, verse 6, 7, 8. The Levites are given to Aaron the Priest, that they may minister unto him, and that they may do the service of the Tabernacle, and that they may keep the instruments or vessels thereof.

Secondly, the order, that Aaron and the Priests should be superior unto them, and be as Overseers of them, providing that no stranger should thrust himself into this calling, contrary to the ordinance and appointment of God, Heb. 5, verse 4. No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron: so that he excluded from the ministry of the tabernacle, all other that were not Levites; of the other Tribes no man gave attendance at the Altar, they were strangers from the Priesthood, and the Priesthood from them. Not as though in the New Testament, there should be one only family separated, to which the administration of holy things should belong. For after Christ was ascended, and had led captivity captive, the distinction of Tribes and families was taken away in regard of the functions of the Church: so that the Ministers may be ordained and called out of any estate & degree whatsoever, being furnished with sufficient gifts for that purpose.

Thus much of the commandment: the reason followeth, verse 11, 12, & 13: in which God himself assigneth the cause why he did take unto himself the Levites to succeed in place of the first borne. For unto this time, the first borne both in the private families & in the public assemblies of the Israelites did execute the Priests office, as persons consecrated unto God, as we have shown and expounded, Exod. 13, and 19, chapters, and as we shall show farther in this chapter. Hence it is, that he saith, Every first borne is mine: which is to be understood, not in regard of the common right of creation, as sometimes the earth and all that filleth it, is said to be the Lord's, and all the beasts of the Forest, but they are so called in another respect.

For the better understanding whereof, we must consider that things are said to be the Lord's in three respects.

First, in regard of duty and service. Thus all creatures are the Lord's, because he is their Creator and maker, in regard whereof everything created oweth a duty to him, as to the great Lord, to whom all things visible and invisible owe their homage, as Psal. 24. the Prophet saith, The earth is the Lord's, and all that therein is: and he rendereth this reason; For he hath founded the world, &c.

Secondly, all creatures are said to be the Lord's also, in regard of that power and authority whereby he ruleth all, to which jurisdiction of his, all men, how wicked & perverse soever they be, are subject. Thus Cyrus King of Persia, though he knew not the Lord, yet is said to be the Lord's Shepherd, and his anointed, and to perform all his pleasure, Isaiah 44, 28, and 45, 1. He did the work of the Lord ignorantly and blindly, yet God was his Lord, and he his servant in proclaiming that Jerusalem should be built, and the foundation of the Temple erected. So the Prophet speaking of the world, and of all things therein contained, saith, They continue this day according to thine ordinances, for all are thy servants: as if he should say; All creatures in heaven and earth continue safe and sound, even from the beginning to the present times wherein we live, and so they shall do unto the worlds end, through thy word and appointment: so that as they were created by thy word, and are preserved in their estate, so they are at thy commandment to do thy will, even as servants obey their masters. Thus the diuelles, though they resist him and rebel against him, may be said to be his servants, because they are constrained to serve his providence. They be far from yielding faithful service and dutiful obedience unto him, yet they must stoop down unto him; he hath in such sort put his hook in their nose, and his bridle in their lips, and his chain on their hands, and his fetters on their feet, that they cannot start from him, but they shall do him service for the execution of his secret will. Therefore the Prophet saith, Psalm 135, verse 6. Whatsoever the Lord pleased, that did he in heaven and in earth, in the sea, and in all deep places. To the same purpose the Apostle writing to the Philippians, and speaking of the power of Christ Jesus, who being in the form of God, thought it no robbery to be equal unto God, saith, chap. 2, verse 9, 10, God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus, every knee should bow, of things in heaven, & things in earth, and things under the earth: and that every tongue should confess, that Jesus Christ is the Lord, unto the glory of GOD his Father. Thus also the beasts of the Forest are the LORD'S, and the cattle on a thousand Mountains, Psal. 50. Not only because all creatures owe a duty unto him, but because they are governed by his rule, ordered by his power, and ruled by his providence.

Thirdly, some things are said to be the Lord's, in respect of a propriety and immediate right that he hath in thē, being separate from the use of man. For then they become the Lord's, when they are alienated from men. Thus tithes in the word are said to be the Lord's Levite. 27, 30. All the tithes of the Land, both of the seed of the ground, and of the fruit of the trees is the Lord's, it is holy unto the Lord. Where the last words expound the former, according to the usual manner of the Scripture, and show in what sense tithes are the Lord's, because the propriety is not in man, but in God only: forasmuch as that which is holy to the Lord, is separate from man and from his use, and cannot be alienated by him without sacrilege and usurpation. So in this place, the Levites are said to be the Lord's, and the first borne are said to be the Lord's, not only in respect of their duty to him, and of his power over them; for thus all creatures are his, all people and nations of the earth are his: and in these respects, not only the tithes are the Lord's, but the other nine parts as well as they. But they are sanctified to him, and are to be employed in his service, being separated from the use of man, as the rest are appointed and left to the use of man.

Thus then the Lord challengeth authority to bestow the tenths of their increase, so that man could not employ them to himself without sacrilege. If any of the Levites should be taken from the Altar & sent into the wars; they had profaned God's service, and abused their persons to another end than GOD had ordained. The like might be spoken also of the Sabbath, that is the Lord's day; he claimeth it to his own use, he separateth and sanctifieth it to his own service. The six other days are ours, and God giveth us liberty to call them ours, and to bestow them as ours, in our own business, Exod. 20, 9. Revel. 1, 10.

Such therefore as make no conscience to take the LORD'S day from him, and use it as their own, are spiritual thieves, and meddle with that which is not their own. If their servants should deal in such sort with them, and employ any of the six days in their own work, and leave their business undone, they would quickly complain of the injury. Or if any of their neighbors should come into their house, and take away any part of their goods, we would bid them learn to know their own, and be ready to call them thieves. But we deal with GOD a thousand times worse than we would suffer other men to deal with us. We can take the Lord's day, nay the Lord's days, one after another, and spend them about our own profits and pleasures, and vanities, and yet never consider the wrong & injustice we offer unto the Almighty. Oh that men would lay this unto their hearts, so often as they profane the Lord's Sabbaths; that so they might call it a delight to consecrate it as glorious to the Lord, and learn not to follow their own pleasures and pastimes, nor to speak their own words therein.

[Verses 7, 8. They shall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole Congregation, &c.] Hitherto of the meaning of the words: let us now come to the doctrines arising from hence.

We see in this division, that Aaron and his sons being consecrated to the office of the Priesthood, have also the Levites given unto them, to help them in that holy calling. Moses is commanded to present them before Aaron the Priest, that they may minister unto him: and all this is done by the authority and appointment of God. Moses was a great Prophet, to whom God spake face to face, like unto whom arose none before him, nor yet after him: nevertheless he durst not presume to do this, until he had received commission from God.

From hence we learn, that God hath sole [Doctrine] authority to ordain the Officers and the Offices of his Church. No ministry is allowed and approved, but that which hath warrant and direction from God. We see this in the setting apart of the Tribe of Levi among all the rest to this office, Levite. 8. verse 2. The Lord said unto Moses, Take Aaron and his sons with him, and the garments, and the anointing oil, &c: and Deuter. 18, verse 5. The Lord thy God hath chosen him out of all thy Tribes, to minister in the Name of the Lord, him and his sons forever. This truth is noted oftentimes in the New Testament. In the conference between John the Baptist and the Pharisees, when he said plainly, he was not that Christ, nor Elias, nor a Prophet, they replied, If thou be neither Christ, nor Elias, nor of the Prophets, why baptizest thou? This had been a weak argument, and an unlearned question, if John might have executed some other function thē that which was ordinary in the Church, and instituted of God.

Hence it is, that the Baptist, to establish his special calling and extraordinary function, alledgeth the word of God, Mark 1, verse 1, 2.3. I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the Prophet Isaiah. So that both ordinary and extraordinary offices, have their allowance out of the high Court of heaven. When Christ asked the question concerning the baptism of John, whence it was? Whether from heaven, or of men? he meant thereby to confirm his ministry. In like manner, when he was teaching in the Temple, the chief Priests and Elders of the people came unto him, and said, Math. 21, verse 23. By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority? declaring that no man ought without authority and commission from God to execute any function in the Church, so that no man should take this honor unto him, but he that is called of God, as Aaron was. We see then by the whole practice under the law, that the Ministers thereof both ordinary and extraordinary, had their calling from heaven, not from the earth; from God, not from man. And in the New Testament, the Apostles had their calling from Christ, He chose them, he sent them out, to him they gave an account. He appointed the seventy Disciples, and sent them two and two before his face into every City, Luke 10, verse 1. And when he led captivity captive, he gave Pastors and Teachers, for the work of the Ministry, Eph. 4, verse 11. When a new Apostle was to be chosen in the room of Judas, who purchased a field with the reward of iniquity, and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out; Peter alledgeth unto the Church the word of God: It is written in the book of Psalms, Let another take his charge or office. Albeit then the callings of the Ministry be executed by men, and the Ministers that were to continue in the Church, were chosen by men like to themselves, yet the Office is of God: so that as it was not lawful to bring in any strange doctrine, so it was not lawful to teach the true doctrine under the names and titles of any other function then was instituted by God. He that hath set down the doctrine hath also set down the Teachers of the doctrine: he that hath appointed what shall be taught, hath also appointed who shall teach it and deliver it to his people.

This is taught unto us by sundry reasons. [Reason 1] First, observe with me the types that the scripture useth to express this point: I will name these three for example; the Ark, the Tabernacle, and the Temple. The Ark was a lively figure of the Church, all that were out of it were drowned in the waters. God leaveth nothing to man's wisdom or policy, though never so wise or righteous, but he appointeth to Noah, the matter and form, the length, and breadth, and height of the Ark, the wood and several sorts of it, Gen. 6, 14: and as GOD would have it built, so he appointeth the builder.

In the work of the Tabernacle, the Church is more expressly shown; God stirred up the spirits of those that should be the workmen, and left nothing to the will of Moses, but set down the pins, the snuffers, the boards, the bars, the hangings, and the vessels; all was finished according to the pattern that he had seen in the mount where he talked with God, Exod. 39, 42. Heb. 8, 5.

Likewise, touching the Temple, which came nearer to the times of Christ, Solomon was appointed to build an house to God, who did nothing in it, either touching the building of it, or the vessels in it, or the beauty of it, but according to the form and fashion that was enjoined him.

Again, the titles whereby the Ministers [Reason 2] are called, and the names whereby they are named, do enforce the acknowledgement of this truth; they are called sometimes the servants of God; sometimes the builders of his house; sometimes the sowers of his ground; sometimes the watchmen of his City; sometimes the Captains of his host; sometimes the Shepherds of his flock; and sometimes the Stewards of his family. Shall the servant attempt anything of his own head, and exercise dominion without the appointment, or contrary to the appointment of his master? It is noted to the commendation of Moses, that he was faithful in all his house, as a servant to him that appointed him, Heb. 3, 5. The Ministers are builders, and the people are God's building, 1 Corinth. 3, 9. It is in God therefore to make choice of the builders, and to lay the whole plot before them. They are the seedmen, Mat. 13, verse 3: the watchmen, Ezek. 3, verse 17: the Leaders, Heb. 13, verse 17: the Shepherds, Eph. 4, verse 11: the Stewards, Luke 12, verse 42. Shall the Ministers then, being Officers only under another to serve him, presume to do anything in their own name, and not acknowledge their subjection unto another?

Thirdly, the Ministries that are expressed [Reason 3] in the word, are all sufficient to bring y^e church to perfection, and to make it a complete body; as appeareth by the Apostle, where he serteth down the Officers that have received gifts for the instruction of the Church of Christ, Eph. 4, 11, 12, 13. Christ gave some, Apostles; and some, Prophets; and some, Evangelists; and some, Pastors and Teachers; for the perfecting of the Saints, and for the work of the Ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. If then these suffice for the bringing of the work to perfection, all other invented by men, are needless and superfluous, and may be cut off as superfluous branches.

Lastly, none can appoint new Officers or [Reason 4] strange Ministers in the Church, but he that can give them gifts to discharge the Callings that they undertake. For what is an office without strength and ability to execute it, but an idle name without the thing, as it were an empty box without the ointment? But no mā hath it in his power to bestow any gifts to set up a new office, neither ought he to set on work the gifts that God hath given, otherwise then he appointeth, as it were to till the earth with another man's heifer: & therefore it belongeth not to any man to institute any new Ministries, or to employ them that are warranted, contrary to the will of him y^t hath called thē: and consequently it is God only to whō it belongeth to choose such as shall minister before him, as the master appointeth his own servants that shall serve him in his house, and do his business.

[Use 1] Let us in the first place see what profitable uses arise from this doctrine. First of all, we learn that no man hath any authority or jurisdiction to pervert or euert that order that God hath set in his Church, whether it be by devising new Ministries, or by destroying & diminishing of the old. For as well do they err in building, that add such as are not warranted, as they that take away such as are established in the word. It is a true saying, worthy to be observed, delivered by Christ our Savior, Every plant which mine heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up, Matth. 15, 13.

It is the word of GOD that endureth forever; all man's devices are as the flower of the field that fadeth in a moment. There is nothing shall continue constant which standeth not by the strength of God. The traditions of men, howsoever they may seem to be firmly rooted, and strongly backed by the best devices and policies that flesh and blood can devise, yet they are as chaff which the wind driveth away, and they shall not be able to endure. It is truly spoken of Gamaliel, though it be evilly applied, Acts 5, 38. Refraine from these men, and let them alone, for if this counsel, or this work be of men, it will come to naught. The Church is the body of Christ, wherein nothing is too much, nothing too little, 1 Corinth. 12, 12. For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so is it in the mystical body of Christ whereof he is the head. In the natural body of man, if it should have three legs, or three hands, or diverse heads, it would be a monstrous body; it would not rejoice or take pleasure in that excrescence or abounding of proud flesh: Or if it had only one leg, or one eye, it could not delight in it, but would be grieved at the defect. So is it in the body of Christ, which is the Church. God hath made it a perfect body, he hath given it hands & eyes to guide it self into the way of peace, and to bring it unto the kingdom of glory. If we will add other eyes, or other hands, then God hath fitted: or tie them that it hath from employment to the good of the body, we do injury to the body of CHRIST, and make the Church disfigured and deformed. If we should see a man in our days, like to the giant mentioned in the second book of Samuel, whose stature was exceeding great, that should have on every hand six fingers, and on every foot six toes, four and twenty in number, we would think it uncomely and ill-favored, and no ornament unto the body. So is it with the Church, which ought to have her form and feature in every part. It is for beauty and comliness compared to a company of horses in Pharaohs Chariots, Cant. 1, verse 9, and to a row of Jewels. It is said to be beautiful as Tirzah, Cant. 6, verse 4. and comely as Jerusalem, that is compact together, Psalm 122, 3. It is said to look forth as the morning, to be fair as the Moon, clear as the Sun, and terrible as an army with banners, Cant. 6, verse 10. If then we shall strippe the Church of any of her ornaments, if we shall wound it, and take away her veil from her, Cant. 5, verse 7. If we shall give her any new parts, or rob her of any of her true parts, we make her no longer beautiful and beloved, to say of it as Christ doth, Thou art all fair my Love, there is no spot in thee, Cant. 4, verse 7. We make it deformed as a body that is either maimed or monstrous.

This is the commendation of the Church, that her glory is absolute & perfect throughout all the parts of her, and that it hath no spot, no blemish, no imperfection. Such a glorious body is meet to be joined with so glorious an head as Christ is. When we suffer the Church to be all black and foul, full of wrinkles and withered deformities, how should it be united unto him?

Happy is that Church that hath all her parts, and none but her parts, like a body that retaineth the natural luster. But if it want any members that it ought to have, or have gotten an overplus that it ought not to have, they serve to no other use but to disfigure the body, and to disgrace the head. The true natural parts are much ashamed both of those wants, and of those superfluities: the which, the more they are, the farther is that Church from perfection.

Some Churches have somewhat too much that ought to be pared away: some Churches have too little, that ought to be restored: and some Churches are deformed both ways, they have too little one way, and too much another way: and yet (alas) they see it not, they know it not, they feel it not. Or if they do know it, they will not acknowledge it: or if they feel it, they will not reform it, and if they see it, they glory at it and rejoice in it. It were a strange thing to see anybody to be merry and make a triumph of it, because it wanteth an eye, or an hand, or a foot? But thus the case standeth with many Churches, they consist of confused bodies, one member encroching upon the office of another, they want their eyes to see withal, and yet they dream of perfection, and despise other that are more fair and forward in good things than themselves.

Nothing continueth long at one stay in this life: nothing is so well ordered, but Satan and his instruments seek to put it out of joint. We must pray to God to open our eyes to see our wants and wrinkles, and to labor earnestly, as well to restore that which is wanting, as to cut off that which is abounding.

Christ is the King of this Church: shall any presume in his kingdom to set up or pull down, to place or to displace, to plant or to destroy? This is God's office, it belongeth unto him only to do them: such therefore are no better than usurpers.

[Use 2] Secondly, this serveth to reprove the state of the Jews, as it stood in the days of Christ. It was time for him to come to reform and restore all things, they had many strange plants growing in the garden of God, which his right hand had never planted, that were as naughty and noisome roots to be pulled up; and as byles and blisters in the body. We heard before, that in the Church under the Law there was found no other Ecclesiastical ministries which were ordinary, then those orders of the high Priest, the inferior Priests, and the rest of the Levites, all which were appointed by the law of God. And if any were raised up extraordinarily, the same had their calling confirmed from heaven, either by inward motion of the Spirit, or by working of miracles, or by evident testimonies of the mouth of God. But this government of the Church stood not long without change and alteration: for though the field were sown with good seed, yet the envious man sowed tares in it, so that in latter times there arose many sects and sorts of teachers among thē, who by schisms were ready to rent that body in sunder, departing from the simplicity & sincerity that was established by God's institution.

Some of the ancient, that have taken pains to discover to the world, the heresies that sprung up and grew apace where once they took rooting and footing, and so to give notice of them that they might be avoided, do testify, that seven several and principal sects arose among the Jews, whereof some are mentioned in the Scriptures, and other are not.

The first, was that of the Scribes, who were Interpreters of the Law, but withal (as if the law were too base a thing to stick only unto it) they delivered many traditions as from their Elders, not contained in the Law, and sought (taking counsel of human wisdom) to bring in a more exact kind of the worship of GOD, then Moses and the Prophets ever taught, consisting in many voluntary observations and customs devised by men, which they are wont to magnify & prefer before the Commandments of God, Mat. 15. Colossians 2. Thus would man become wiser thē GOD, who forbad all adding or taking from his word.

The second sect were the Sadducees, which were of the race of the Samaritans, and had their name of one Sadoc a Priest: these denied the resurrection of the body, and believed not that there is any Angel or spirit, Acts 23, and consequently overthrew all religion, as 1. Corinth. 15. For if there be no resurrection of the body, or immortality of the soul, then are we of all men the most miserable that profess Christ. In vain we believe in his Name, and in vain we fight with beasts at Ephesus, in vain we suffer crosses and afflictions for the Gospels sake; it were better for us to do as the most do, and to be wicked and ungodly, if there were no other life or reward in another world. If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if CHRIST be not raised, our faith is vain, we are yet in our sins.

The third sect were Pharisees; these were the strictest of all others, and most revered and best esteemed: these believed the rising again of the dead at the last day, and that there were both Angels and spirits (as the Scribes also did) and that all shall come unto judgment, to receive according to the things they do in this flesh, whether they be good or evil, Acts 23. When Paul, being accused by his enemies, perceiving that they were partly Pharisees, and partly Sadducees, he cried out in the Council, Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee; of the hope and resurrection of the dead, I am called in question. They much honored virginity and single life, they paid tithes of the smallest things they possessed, Luke 18, verse 12. They washed cups, platters, beds, and all kind of vessels that they used, they fasted twice every week, and differed in their habit from other men. Against these are many woes denounced by our Savior Christ in the Gospel, Math. 23, verse 23, for their hypocrisy, that delighted more in outward shows, then in the truth of the heart.

The fourth sect were the Hemerobaptists, or Quotidian washers, who thought, that no man could be saved, if he were not washed every day, that so he might be cleansed from the impurity and filthiness of sin. It is not the water in the whole sea, nor any fountain can wash away the sins and corruptions of our life, or of our heart. It hath no force in it, either by any natural power, or by any voluntary use. Christ is our Purgatory and purification: it is he that must wash us, or else we remain impure and unclean. He is the water of life, whereby our consciences must be sprinkled: he is the laver of regeneration, by whom we are borne again, and washed as with pure water. If he make us clean, then we are clean indeed. His passion and the shedding of his blood, must be communicated to us, and the sanctifying grace of the Spirit of God. And this is necessary unto salvation, not any outward washing of the body, which may cleanse the flesh, but cannot touch the soul. This is made available three ways. First, by faith, which serveth to apply Christ unto us and all his benefits. Secondly, by repentance from dead works, whereby we die unto sin, & rise again unto newness of life. Thirdly, by the use of the Sacraments, which require both the former points, to wit, faith and repentance.

The fifth sect were the Essees, who are not spoken off in the Gospel, because they retired and withdrew themselves from the society of men. They despised marriage, and lived without the company of women. They had no children of their own, but they adopted as their own, such as voluntarily came unto them, and betook themselves to their sect: in regard whereof they continued for many generations, and never failed. These were like the Anchorites that lived in the wilderness, and choosing a solitary life, sequestered themselves from the company of others. These Essees were as it were Popish Monks: and the Monks were a kind of Jewish Essees, and both of them chose a manner of living not allowed of God. For he never appointed that any of the godly should renounce & abjure marriage, which the Scripture pronounceth to be honorable in all, and the bed undefiled, Hebr. 13, 4. He never allowed them to hide themselves in caves or cloysters voluntarily, or to institute new rules and laws that he never commanded. Nay, Christ commandeth his Disciples to observe whatsoever he commanded them, Mat. 28, 20. The Scripture commendeth to us the works of charity, James 1, 27, and requireth of us to do good to all men, and forbiddeth to separate our selves from the communion of Saints, Heb. 10, 25. The more good we do to our brethren, the more we please God: but these choose a kind of life, wherein they can do little or no good to others. To whom it may be said, Who required this at your hands?

The sixth sect among the Jews, were the Herodians which are mentioned in the Scriptures, Math. 22, 16. Mar. 3, 6, and 12, 13. who were indeed of the Jewish religiō, but thought Herod to be Christ, because the Scepter was departed from Judah, and the Lawgiuer from between his feet, when Herod obtained the title and power of a King, and ruled over the people of God. But the propheties that went before of the Messiah, can in no sort agree to Herod, nor to any but to Christ Jesus. For the Messiah promised by the Prophets, must not be a forraigner, but one of the Jews; for salvation is of the Jews, John 4. He must be of the Tribe of Judah, and of the stock of David, Psal. 110, 1. He must be borne at Bethlehem, & borne of a virgin, &c: none of which can agree to this alien or counterfeit Christ. These then were such as depending upon Herod had made a mixture of religion, partly from the Pagans, and partly from the Jews, as also the Samaritans had done long before.

Lastly, another sect among them were the Nazarens, who in all other things were Jews, but held it unlawful to kill any living thing, or to eat the flesh of anything wherein the spirit of life had been; they condemned the bloody sacrifices appointed in Moses Law, and therefore could not be induced to think that so good a man as Moses was the Author of those books, that bear that title, & pass as current under his name. These Jewish Nazarens are a kind of paganish Pithagoreans: and the paganish Pithagoreans are a kind of Jewish Nazarens. True it is, many are of opinion, that flesh was not eaten until the flood: but they were held as Sectaries, that held it afterward to be unlawful. Yea, whether it were ever forbidden from the fall to the flood, is altogether uncertain: & rather it may be thought, that GOD permitted the free use of clean beasts for meat, as well as for sacrifice, then that mankind was restrained from them the space of more then sixteen hundred years: for so long it was unto the flood. It is confessed, that it was lawful to offer them in Sacrifice, and then why not to eat them? Especially considering there were other kind of sacrifices wherein the sacrificer and the bringer of the sacrifice had his part, as well as the whole burnt offering which was all consumed? Abel is renowned in scripture, that he offered the first fruit of his Sheep, and the fattest of the fold: but it had been a small praise for him to offer the firstlings & the fatlings, if they were such as himself had no use off, if he were not accustomed to eat of them. It had been all one to him, to offer the fat or the lean, the first or the last, the weak or the strong, the male or the female. But herein no doubt he is commended, that he preferred the service of God before his own private use and benefit: which verifieth the saying of the Apostle, Who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? And who can deny, but he had as fair a warrant to feed himself with the flesh, as to clothe himself with the wool of his sheep. And if it be lawful to kill them for apparel sake, how can we think it standeth with the will and counsel of God to have the flesh cast away, inasmuch as Christ in the Gospel commanded his Disciples to gather up the broken meat, that nothing at all be lost?

Again, if the eating of flesh had been forbidden so long, the earth would in that space have yielded such abundance of increase, that the cattle would have annoyed mankind, and consumed the fruits that should have nourished themselves. The Lord promiseth it as a mercy toward y^e Israelites, that he would not destroy the Canaanites before them, Deut. 7, 22. Lest the beasts of the field should increase upon them. For these helped to destroy them, and did eat the unclean, as swine and such like, both which by their multitudes might have been an annoyance unto the people of God. But there was greater fear of ouerspreading the earth with herds of cattle as with swarms of bees before the flood, if man had not been permitted to feed of them, and so to diminish the number of them.

Thirdly, we read in the Scripture some footsteps, albeit dark and obscure, whereby to trace out this truth, serving as marks to give us light in this matter: for the beasts were killed, and man was clothed with their skins, Gen. 3.21. Why then might he not as well eat them as kill them, and clothe himself with them? Besides, there was even from the beginning a difference between clean and unclean beasts, long before the flood, not only in regard of sacrifice, but also in respect of common eating, as appeareth in the reviving of this law afterward, Levite. 11.47. That there may be difference between the clean and unclean, and between the beast that may be eaten, and the beast that may not be eaten. Whereby we see, why some of the beasts were said to be clean and some of them unclean, namely, because some might be eaten, and some might not be eaten.

Lastly, in the Book of Genesis, Chapter 9. Where the eating of flesh is most of all expressed and mentioned, there seemeth to be made no new grant in those particulars, which in that place are remembered, but only the old privileges renewed, as the fruit of multiplication, the dominion over the creatures, and the replenishing of the earth. Wherefore seeing all these were in use before, it is very probable, that as the green herbs were eaten before, so was the flesh of fish, and of the beasts, albeit there be not express mention of them made before: Every moving thing that liveth, shall be meat for you, even as the green herb, have I given you all things. These things being true, the former sect of the peevish and perverse Nazarees, are more strongly convinced and ouerthrown, forasmuch as they make that unlawful, which from the beginning was used and practiced as lawful. These were the sects among the Jews, which they invented unto themselves, when they departed from the purity and simplicity of the word of God. This we may read largely and learnedly handled else-where.

[Use 3] Thirdly, this reproveth the hierarchy of the Church of Rome, from the highest to the lowest, their Popes, their Cardinals, their Abbots, Monks, Friars, Priors, Nuns, Jesuits, and the rest of that race and rabble, which are as croaking frogs, or devouring locusts, that covered the face of the earth, and ascended out of the bottomeless pit: of which the word hath not spoken anything, but quite overturneth that whole generation. For to set the government of the whole Church upon one man's shoulder and to put all other under his feet, is a burden able to break his neck, and to crack his shoulders, which no man is able to bear. This man of sin they make the head of the Church, and the vicar of Christ. This is to thrust down Christ from his dignity, and to depose him from the headship of the Church, or else they make it a monster of two heads, or rather of many heads. For this is an high honor peculiar to Christ, to be the head of the body, which is his Church, Ephes. 1.22, 23. and 4.12.15. and 5.23. Coloss. 1.24. and 2.19. And that for these causes: First, by way of excellency. Secondly, by reason of fullness of grace. Thirdly, because from him floweth all graces of faith and other blessings, into his members. He it is, that gave some to be Apostles, some Prophets, some Evangelists, and some Pastors and teachers, to build up the Church to the end of the world. These he thought to be sufficient without Popes, and Cardinals, that is, without such heads and shoulders. He called his Apostles, and made them all equal, none superior, none inferior to other: but commanded them indifferently, to preach the Gospel to every creature. The Commission which he gave unto them, was equal, in feeding, in binding, in loosing, in remitting, and retaining, none was before or after other: as Luke 9. He calling the twelve Apostles, gave them power over all devils, and to heal diseases, and sent them to preach the kingdom of God. They had all of them the keys of it, equally committed unto them. But they will object [Object.] the words of Christ to Peter, Matth. 16. I say unto thee, that thou art Peter: and upon this Rock, I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it: And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven: whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven. [Answer.] These words we acknowledge to be the words of Christ, howbeit they are too weak a pillar to bear up the Papacy. First, let us speak of Peter, and then of the Pope, that claymeth to be his successor. For if Peter himself in those words, had no superiority or Monarchy bequeathed unto him, or sole regiment of the Church, then he could not leave it as a legacy to the Bishop of Rome, nor make him his heir of so fair a patrimony, that he might claim authority and supremacy from him. This is without all question, and both sides yield unto it, that Peter could give no more then he had himself, and the successor can have no more jurisdiction then he had, into whose room he succedeth.

Now, touching Peter, observe this as another rule, which also is received without controversy; that nothing in this place is given to Peter, but promised only, as appeareth by the form and phrase of speech that is used, and by the words uttered in the time to come. For Christ saith unto him, I will build my Church upon this Rock, I will give unto thee the keys of heaven; the gates of hell shall not prevail: whatsoever thou shalt bind, whatsoever thou shalt loose: so that the manner of speaking in the time to come, argueth that nothing is here really granted, but only graciously promised to be granted. He doth not say unto him, I do build my Church, I do give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, but I will build, I will give. This is so plain, that our adversaries are necessarily constrained to yield unto it. So then I ask the question, and demand of them, where this is given, and how this promise is performed? Whatsoever Christ promiseth, his word is not yea and nay, he cannot lie, he will not fail his people. [Objection.] If any reply, it is no great matter where we read the promise to have been performed, seeing no doubt Christ meant to be as good as his word? I answer, It mattereth much to understand where it is, forasmuch as there can be no better way to make trial of the promise, then to know the gift.

To which purpose they are wont to allege two places, and we are content to stand to both of them. The one is in the Evangelist, Matthew, chap. 18.18. Verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven. Where we see Christ speaketh to all the Apostles, and not to Peter alone, or to him more then to any other, but applieth the same power of binding and loosing, to everyone without exception or limitation. The other place is in the Gospel according to John, chap. 20. where Christ standing in the middes of them, saith unto them, Receive ye the holy Ghost, whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them, & whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained. In which words Christ also doth equally speak unto them all, whose sins ye remit, whose sins ye retain: not, whose sins, thou Peter, remittest or retainest: so likewise he saith, whatsoever ye (all) bind on earth, whatsoever ye (all) loose on earth; not whatsoever thou Peter alone bindest or loosest on earth. And this is acknowledged to be the power of the keys by the Romanists themselves. The use of keys is to open and shut: so then they that have their sins forgiven, and as it were the bands loosed, have the gates of heaven opened wide unto them: and contrariwise, the doors of heaven are barred fast as with lock and key, against them whose sins are retained: So that we may rightly conclude that seeing the power of binding and loosing, is the power of the keys, and given to all the Apostles, that it is not peculiarly and properly bestowed upon Peter alone, excluding and shutting out all the rest. If then here were an headship promised and bestowed, we must have a body with twelve heads, according to the number of the twelve Apostles: for every Apostle must be an head, as every of them had authority to bind and loose, to remit and retain, that is, had the keys of the kingdom of heaven delivered unto them.

[Object.] But it will be further said, Christ speaketh by name to Peter, I say unto thee, Thou art Peter, To thee I will give the keys, &c. I answer, he saith indeed, he will give them unto him, but he saith not, I will give them to thee alone: he will bestow them upon him, but not upon him alone: for here is nothing either expressed or understood, to exclude the other Apostles. The Lord saith to Joshua, I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee: shall we conclude from hence, that he will leave other of the faithful, because he speaketh particularly unto him? will God renounce or disclaim others that fear his Name? No, in no wise: for albeit he uttered it unto him, yet it is to be stretched to all believers, and as true toward them all, as toward him, as appeareth evidently in the Epistle to the Hebrews. It is one thing therefore to speak unto Peter, and another thing to speak unto him only.

But will some say, [Objection.] why doth not Christ name others, as well as him, if he understood others as well as him? for that might have put the matter out of all doubt, and stayed much contention that hath been about these words in the world. I answer, [Answer.] the words are not doubtful, but to those that purpose to make them gainful. They are plain to such as will understand. Peter spake in the name of the rest, as the mouth of the Apostles: Christ answereth to him also in the rest.

He had asked the question of them all, Whom say ye, that I am? All of them could not answer without confusion, and disorder; it was necessary that one should be the speaker, as it were the foreman of the Jury: and Peter in the behoove of others, as well as of himself, confessed that he was the son of the Living God. Shall we say, the rest did not believe as much? A like example we read in the second Chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, where, they being filled with the holy Ghost, and speaking with diverse languages, are derided of many, and accused to be drunken: Peter standing up with the eleven, did lift up his voice, and say unto the Jews, Be it known unto you, and hearken unto my words: for these are not drunken, as ye suppose, &c. Doth he plead only for himself? and not rather undertake the common cause of them all? yes: he is only the mouth of the rest, and speaketh for the rest. So in this place he made a free confession of his faith, and the faith of the Apostles, who believed no less than himself: and Christ, suiting and shaping his answer according to Peters confession, speaketh unto him, but in him understandeth all the rest.

Neither let us go about to gather more from them, then Christ scattered, or the Apostles collected. For they did not conceive, that Christ by those words before remembered gave any supremacy or superiority, any primacy, or principality of power to Peter; for then they would never afterward have contended which of them should be the greatest and the chiefest, forasmuch as this whole controversy had been decided and determined by the mouth of Christ. But long after this, there arose a great strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest. Therefore they acknowledge no more authority given to Peter by those keys of the kingdom of heaven, then to themselves. Neither doth Christ build his Church upon Peter, nor call him the Rock: for it is built upon the Rock which Peter confessed, that is, upon the Son of the living God, so that the Rock (as the Apostle saith) is Christ. Hence it is, that Matthew distinguisheth between Peter and the Rock, Peter is one, and the Rock is another; otherwise Christ would have said, Thou art Peter, & upon this Peter I will build my Church, or upon thee will I build it: he speaketh not after this manner, but, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock; which must necessarily be referred to his former confession, the name and person being changed.

Again, there is an express place in the Apostle, which teacheth that no man can lay any other foundation then hath been laid, which is Jesus Christ. 1 Cor. 3.11. Paul inspired by the Spirit of Christ can find no other foundation of the Church, then Jesus Christ: they then y^t acknowledge, and receive, and teach any other, are moved by the spirit of Satan, and speak in the spirit of Antichrist. Furthermore, Peter was one of the master workmen, or master builders of the Church, as he is bidden to feed the flock of Christ, 1 Cor. 3. so that he cannot be called properly the foundation of the Church, and a builder of y^e Church; the foundation being one, and the builder (that layeth the foundation) another: for that were to confound the workman, and the work; the founder, and the foundation: the builder, and the building. The builder buildeth upon the foundation, and therefore it is against natural reason, that the Carpenter which layeth the foundation, should himself be the foundation, unless peradventure by a new kind of transubstantiation, never heard of before this time, as senseless as the old (if that may be called old which had no footing in the Church, for a thousand years after Christ) whereby they turn the laborer into his labor, and the builder of the house into the ground-work of the house.

But suppose all this had been spoken to Peter alone, that to him alone had been given the keys, that he alone should open and shut, bind and loose, remit, and retain at his own pleasure, and that the Church had been built upon him, as upon a sole foundation; which notwithstanding is all false, the rest being made equal with him: what is all this to the Bishop of Rome? who is neither Peter, nor any builder of the Church, but rather a destroyer and puller of it down. Peter is not now upon the earth, neither doth Christ speak any one word of his successors, for then he would have said, Upon thee and thy successors, I will build my Church; whereas Christ saith not, either upon him or upon his successors, but upon the Rock, which neither he nor they were. And if Christ had said, upon thee and thy successors I will build my Church, what had this been yet to the Bishoppe of Rome, more then to the Bishop of Constantinople, or of Alexandria, or of Antioch, where also Peter sate? what is there uttered, or what can there be gathered out of Christ's words, sounding for him more then for them? So then as the Romanists crave of us to produce one place of Scripture to prove the continued succession of our Churches: so we ask of them one place of Scripture to prove this succession of Peter, or this deputation which they challenge to themselves. For as they claim to be his lawful heirs alone, and to receive from him a twofold sword which Peter himself did never handle, and a triple crown, such as Peter himself did never wear, who preached but Lorded it not; whereas they Lord it, & preach not: let them bring forth the Tables, and produce the Testament, let us see the writings, that we may examine the truth, and discuss his title; then which nothing can be demanded more just and equal. But mark a little, even ye that have but half an ear, how partial Judges, and corrupt esteemers they are of things, that any way go against them! In the point of justification, when we teach agreeable to the Scriptures and to all antiquity, That we are justified by faith alone, they cry out that we abuse the people and falsify the word, forasmuch as the Scripture never saith by faith alone ye are justified. Whereas in the controversy of Peters Primacy, they deal deceitfully, and teach that the Church is built upon Peter alone, that the keys of the kingdom of heaven are given to Peter alone, that he is ordained to bind alone, and to loose alone; as if he might play fast and loose, at his pleasure, and send thousands of souls into hell, and yet no man to say unto him, sir why do you so? as the Canonists teach. They can never prove that either Christ spake or meant all these, or any of these to Peter alone: but in the question of justification by faith alone, though it be not found in so many words & syllables in the Scripture, yet the sense and substance of them is found, nothing being more usual in the Scripture than this, that we are justified not by works, but without works; not of the law, but without the law, Rom. 3.20. and 9.11. and 11.6. Gal. 2.16. Ephes. 2.8. 2 Tim. 1.9. Tit. 3.5. If then we be not justified but by faith, what is this, but by faith alone? So that we add no more to the meaning of Paul, then Christ added to the meaning of Moses, which was nothing at all; and yet where Moses saith, Thou shalt serve the Lord, Christ saith it is written, Thou shalt serve him only, Matth. 4.10. This then is one note of their partiality, that they may add and alter, correct, and corrupt at their pleasure: we may not explain and expound the true meaning of the Scripture, by the addition of one word. Another is this, when we say that these words of Christ in the Evangelist, To thee I will give the keys: and whatsoever thou bindest or loosest, are not to be restrained to Peter alone, but ought to be communicated to the rest of the Apostles, in whose name he answered: they cry out with a loud voice, and storm mightily at it, that we do extreme wrong and injury to Peter the Prince of the Apostles, whiles we stick not to extend and apply the same words to others, which are peculiarly spoken unto him; and thereupon they urge against us in the very words, I say unto thee, and Thou art Peter, and will not suffer us by any interpretatiō (though never so evident) to depart one jot from the syllables, but tie us fast, and keep us close to these particulars, and as it were pin us to Peters sleeve. Whereas by this limitation, they cease not to wound themselves more then us, even unto the heart, and yet do not feel the force of the stroke, that tendeth unto death. For they are not afraid to stretch these words in length, until they crack again: and albeit they be uttered in the singular number, yet they extend them to all the Bishops of Rome, from Peter who (they say) was the first, unto Paulus Quintus, that now sitteth in that Sea; as if Christ had said, I will build my Church upon thee Peter, and upon all the Popes of Rome after thee: and thus (as I have heard) they bear the simple people in hand that take up all things at the second hand, that Christ said, I will build my Church upon the Bishop of Rome.

What is now become of the words themselves which they pressed against us? did they not tell us that Christ said, Thou art Peter? have they forgotten what was spoken, I say unto thee? It is the fairest flower of the Popes garland, and as it were the soul and life of the Papacy, to enlarge the words as far as may be, and to understand them of the whole rabble of usurpers, and devils incarnate, that have ruled in these last days: and yet they cannot abide, or endure that we should extend them to all the Apostles. And if I should ask them, how the Bishops of Rome can challenge a right to be Peters successors, forasmuch as they can never evidently prove by any testimony of holy Scripture, that Peter ever was at Rome, it would trouble their patience, and put them into a sweat, and yet do no good: forasmuch as the contrary rather appeareth, as I have shown else-where. Thus much of the partiality of these men, who like envious persons are content to pull out both their own eyes, that they may put out one of their fellows.

Hitherto we have spoken of the counterfeit head of the Church of Rome: the like might be said of the rest of that proud generation, who by sacrilege, and usurpation, are grown to be great princes and lords of the earth; and namely of the Cardinals, the Popes late creatures, who glory to be called the princes Electors, and think themselves to be equal to the greatest kings of the world, who not long since were content to be Parish Priests. He hath advanced them, and they advance him, and one claweth another. There is no testimony of antiquity, nor footstep found in the word of God, to justify or warrant that calling; and the greatest Rabbin's that are clothed in Scarlet, and have written in defense of it, do show themselves more then ridiculous, in their Apologies, wherein they do nothing but vent their own vanity, and publish their own shame, to the view of all men.

The like might be said of the swarms of Monks and Friars, and those pestilent Orders that trouble heaven and earth, Church and Common-wealth, true religion, and external peace and policy in bodies politic. Are these officers or offices ordained of God? are they any plants of his setting in y^e Church? have they received any authority from his mouth? Or is there any syllable in the Scripture to avouch these Orders? or are they not rather the Popes dear sons, and of his creation? Jesus Christ never knew them, they grew up while his servants slept that should have looked better to their false fingers. He never instituted this kind of life, he never commanded or counseled men to go into the wilderness, or to coope up themselves in a Monastery, or to vow single life, or to renounce their temporal possessions, or to betake themselves to voluntary poverty, thereby to follow a new rule of life, and to prefer the commandments of men before his Gospel, and to place the state of perfection, in the observation of certain vain traditions which they have undertaken.

The vows that they have taken upon them to observe, are these three, the vow of poverty, the vow of obedience, and the vow of chastity. First, touching poverty, or rather beggary, as it pleaseth them to boast off, which indeed they profess, more then practice, like to such as Solomon painteth out, Prov. 13.7. There is that maketh himself poor, having great riches: Christ never ordained such a kind of life, neither taught any to enter into it; for himself had bags and money to buy things necessary, as appeareth, John. 12.6. and 13.29. Nay he saith, It is a more blessed thing to give, then to receive, Acts 20.35. The like we might say of the Apostles, they never vowed such a life themselves, nor approved of it in others. For albeit they forsook all, that they might follow Christ, and preach the Gospel, yet they reserved and retained the propriety of them, it is the use of them, and the pursuing after them; that they gave over. When Christ on the Cross, said unto John. Behold thy mother, from that hour he took her home to his house, John. 19. but how could he take her to his own, if he had nothing his own? And when Peter after the Passion of Christ said, I go to fishing, John. 21. it is not likely he hired a ship, and used another man's nets, but rather had them of his own, which he had left and forsaken for a season. Again, neither did Christ ever say to his Apostles, or the Apostles to any others, Vow ye poverty: but rather, Give ye alms, Luke. 11.41. remember the poor, Gal. 2.10. distribute to the necessities of the Saints, Rom. 12.13. He that soweth sparingly, shall reap sparingly, for God loveth a cheerful giver. 2 Cor. 9.6, 7. To do good, and to communicate, forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased, Heb. 13.16. These things they could not perform; but of their own substance, except they should give the Mammon of iniquity, taken away wrongfully from others. Hence it is, that the Scripture so often exhorteth to works of mercy, to fruits of love, and liberality toward the poor, that we should lend unto them, looking for nothing again, Luke 6. Ephes. 4. 2 Cor. 8. promising that if we give, it shall be given unto us. They therefore that vow poverty, cast away the blessing of God and such helps as might serve them to show their love and liberality unto their brethren.

Lastly, beggary is threatened as a punishment, and therefore not to be undertaken as a state of perfection. David complaining of his slanderous and malicious enemies, doth under the person of Judas, devote them, or proscribe them: Let his children be fatherless, and his wife a widow: let his children be continually vagabonds, and beg, let them seek their bread also out of their desolate places, Psal. 109.9.10. If then it be a state of perfection to be a beggar, it is also a state of perfection to have his posterity cut off, to have the extortioner catch all that he hath, to have none to extend mercy unto him, to have his name blotted out in the generation following, and his memory razed out of the earth: all which, and many other like, the Prophet joineth with begging of bread in that Psalm; which being heaped upon one man, would keep him from perfection. And if with begging of bread were always annexed this, that none should show favor unto them, nor extend any mercy to their fatherless children, it is like it would bring out of use, this beggarly occupation in a short time. The same Prophet noteth it as a special blessing of God upon his government, I never saw the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread, Psal. 37.25. It is the ordinance of God, that there should be no beggar in Israel, Deut. 15. The wise man prayeth against that estate, Prov. 30.8. that he might have neither superfluous riches, nor extreme poverty. Now then, either the state of perfection is not so glorious a thing as they boast off, or else the wise man prayeth against this perfection, which these hypocrites do embrace and voluntarily choose unto themselves.

Secondly, touching obedience to be performed to the superiors of their orders, they profess to follow his rules and iniunctions, as the Franciscans must follow the rule of Saint Francis, and so the rest bind themselves to observe the precepts of their governors; which sometimes are sottish & senseless, and sometimes impious and blasphemous, whereby they leave the commandments of God to execute traditions. The Apostle saith, Ye are bought with a price, be not servants of men, 1 Cor. 7.23. But such as vow Monkish obedience in things not prescribed in the word, make themselves servants and slaves of men.

Again, he reproveth them that said, I am Paul's, I am Apollos, I am Cephas, because they addicted themselves as bond servants to men: they then are much more to be condemned than are the slaves of Dominic, of Francis of Ignatius, and the rest? The Apostles themselves never made any such vow, nor taught it to others: they could not abide to have any disciples consecrated unto them to bear their names. Christ our Savior showeth, that no man can serve two masters, because one only is our master. For when they command contrary things, we cannot cleave unto them both: but such things may superstitious superiors and governors command, nay have commanded. Besides, it is folly to lay a burden of human precepts upon other men's shoulders, when as we cannot perfectly observe and fulfill the commandments of God.

Thirdly, touching continency and single life, which they call chastity, they all praise it, but not many practice it. They think this vow to be very rightly and religiously observed, and that they have fulfilled it to the full, if they lead their life out of marriage, and renounce chaste wedlock: for when they speak of the vow of continency, they understand nothing else but single life. They suppose it and both openly and odiously defend it, to be a more heinous sin, for any of the Clergy to marry a wife, then to have the company of an harlot, and to embrace the bosom of a stranger. Costerus the Jesuit maintaineth (to whom others assent) that a Priest that is married, sinneth more grievously, then he that keepeth a concubine, or committeth fornication. The time was, when it was made a capital crime worthy of no less punishment then death, for a Clergy man to marry; but when the same Law was urged to be established against such also as entered into stews and brothel-houses, and kept harlots, it could not pass, but was nipped in the head, as the green herbs with a frost. Thus while they forswear and forbear to have wives of their own, to avoid fornication, they do not abstain from whoredom and uncleanness. Thus they prefer abominable whoredom, before honorable wedlock, strange flesh before the bed undefiled, and the laws of men, before the commandment of God. For no man can vow continency, but he to whom it is given from above, to be able to contain and continue a single life, as our Savior hath taught, Matth. 19.11, 12. He that can take it, let him take it. And he showeth, that all men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given. So the Apostle to the same purpose saith, I wish all men were as myself, But every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that, 1 Cor. 7.7 We have not in our own power the things that are God's: the gift of God is one thing, the power of man is another: again, to be willing is one thing, and to be able is another. The gifts of others are not in our power: but the gift of continency is the gift of another, to wit, of God. Therefore it is not in our power.

Again, the Scripture commandeth them to marry, that cannot abstain without burning, as 1 Cor. 7.2, 9. They that cannot contain, let them marry. Also he saith, To avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife; It is better to marry, then to burn. And he writeth to Timothy, I will that the younger women marry, &c. giving none occasion to the adversary, to speak reproachfully. Nothing must be vowed against the commandment of the holy Ghost: but they which cannot contain, and yet vow continency, sin against the commandment of the holy Ghost. Therefore such persons ought not to vow continency.

Lastly, this sort of votaries is a new doctrine, or rather dotage. For neither under the Law of nature, nor under the Law of Moses, did ever any utter or minister such a vow of virginity, albeit we read many laws concerning vowing, Levite. 27. Numb. 6. and 30. Deut. 12. and 23. Yet nothing concerning any such matter. In the Law of nature, it was said, Encrease, and multiply, Ge. 1.28. In the garden of Eden, even in the time of man's innocence, God the author of marriage, said, that cannot lie, It is not good for man to be alone, Ge. 2 18. Christ himself, though he lived most purely and perfectly, yet made no vow of continency, The like might be said of the Apostles. To conclude, it is the property of heretics, and the very doctrine of devils to forbid marriage, and for religions sake to dissolve it. Thus did Marcion, and the Manichees, and therefore are condemned.

[Use 4] Fourthly, we learn from hence a notable comfort, having assurance that our calling is of God. Let everyone look to the Lawfulness of his calling, and to the warrant of his work, and be able to approve it to his own conscience. The word of God is able to give us peace and comfort. We are sure, if we do our duties, to meet with many enemies and oppositions. How often did the people murmur against Moses? was not Elijah esteemed the troubler of Israel? was not Jeremiah borne as a man of strife, and a man of contention to the whole earth? was it any better with Christ himself and his Apostles? The LORD of life was hated and persecuted and crucified, being delivered into the hands of sinners. The Apostles were made a spectacle unto the world, and to Angels, and to men, being sent forth as men appointed to death. It fareth not much better with the Ministers of the Gospel, who succeed them in the government of the Church; they are slandered and reviled, they are mocked and misused, and accounted as the off-scouring of all things. We shall never go through with the work of the Lord, that is in our hands, except we rest in God who hath called us to the Ministry. Thus did David comfort himself in the Lord, when they would have stoned him, 1 Sam. 30.4. The like we see in the Apostles, when they were threatened, and commanded to speak no more in the Name of Christ, they answered that they could not but speak the things which they had seen and heard, Acts 4.19.20. and professed that they ought to obey God, rather than man, Acts 5.29. The consideration of their calling, warranted unto them from God, put comfort into them, and gave them all boldness to set themselves against their enemies, and made them pray earnestly to Christ Jesus, the Lord of the harvest, and the great Shepherd of the sheep, to stand by them, and to be present with them in the business he had committed unto their charge. Wherefore, whensoever we see the truth of God oppugned, and our Ministry any way resisted, let us comfort our selves from hence, that we are not usurpers, or intruders into this office, but having our calling sealed up unto us, let us boldly proceed, and go forward to make known the truth of God to the consciences of all men. That which the Lord saith of the first borne in this place, that they are his, may be said of all the Ministers of the Gospel that succeed them, and therefore he will succor and sustain them.

If then we find this in our own souls, that we entered into this calling, not as thieves that come in at the window to steal, and to kill, and to destroy, John. 10.10. not as soldiers, that seek their prey and booty to enrich themselves; not as idle drones that seek to live at ease, and in pleasure: but to work in the Lord's vineyard, and to labor in his harvest, we shall be sure to have God on our side. He will not send us out, and then see us to take the foil: he will not put us into his service, and then lay us open, and leave us naked to the contempt of every base companion. Let us not shrink back as faint-hearted soldiers, when a cross word is cast out against us, which is but as a brutish thunderbolt, that can do no harm: but let us remember our calling, and who it is that hath set us in that function. When Amos was slandered and reviled by the Priest of Beth-el, and had no less crime laid to his charge, then high treason, and conspiracy against the king, he did not sink under the burden, or cease to Prophecy anymore, but he confirmeth himself, and hardeneth his face, and remembereth who put him in that place: The Lord took me as I followed the flock, and the Lord said unto me, Go, Prophecy unto my people, Amos 7. What greater comfort could Paul have against the oppositions and blasphemies of obstinate enemies that he found at Corinth, then the gracious words of the Lord? Be not afraid, but speak and hold not thy peace: for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee, to hurt thee: for I have much people in this City, Acts, Chapter 18. verses 9.10.

So is it with us, and in this manner doth the Lord speak to every of us; if we be assured in our own conscience, that God hath ordained us and set us apart to our office, he chargeth us not to be afraid of the faces of men, he giveth us certain hope of his presence, and will suffer no man to do us hurt. On the other side, if our office be of men, and we entered into it also to enrich our selves, not to feed the people of God, we can have no comfort in the evil day, nor promise to our selves any hope or expectation of a blessed issue of our labors. We entered not in at the door, and the shepherd of the sheep will not acknowledge us to be his servants, but account us as hirelings that serve our selves and our own bellies, and care not for the sheep whether they sink or swim, whether they prosper or pine, whether they live or die.

[Use 5] Lastly, when God setteth up the Ministry of his word among us, as a light that shineth in dark places, and as a beacon upon an hill, it is the duty of the people to hearken reverently and attend diligently unto it, as unto the voice of Jesus Christ, and not as to the word of a mortal man. We must not consider the Ministers that speak unto us in the Name of the Lord as bare or mortal men, albeit they be so indeed, and subject to the same infirmities that we our selves are: but we must observe of them that they sustain another person then their own; they are God's messengers unto us, the Lord hath sent them as his embassadours, they come from the high court of heaven, to tell us the will of him that hath called them.

The want of this due consideration, that the Ministers sustain two persons, one private, to wit, their own: the other public, to wit, of God: is the main cause why the Ministry is so slenderly regarded, and so few are edified by it. When a Prince employeth a mean person in his service, and sendeth him to make known his will unto us, if we only respect his person as he is of himself, and consider not the person whose mouth he is, and in whose name he speaketh, we will never regard the message he bringeth as we ought. So it is in the matter of the Ministry

The king of heaven and earth determineth to call a Church, and gather a people unto himself; he sendeth out the Ministers as his messengers to make known his will unto us, and so putteth heavenly treasures of great price and value in earthen vessels: if we respect the men no otherwise then according to their names and persons, and not according as God hath vouchsafed to employ them, we can never receive the word with meekness and reverence, that is able to save our souls. Know it therefore, and learn it diligently, that a Minister is not only a man as all other are that bear the image of God, but more then a common man, even a Minister of the Gospel, and a messenger of Jesus Christ: so that whosoever receiveth them and heareth their words, entertaineth Christ himself; and whosoever dispiseth them and their sayings, rejecteth Christ himself, and shall be arraigned as guilty of the contempt of his person. The Apostle writing to the Hebrews, showeth, that God hath spoken by his own Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, Chapter 1.2. and thereupon concludeth, that we ought to give the more earnest heed to the the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip.

First, we are to consider that in hearing the word, we have to do with God. If we exempt our selves from his presence, who hath promised that whensoever two or three are gathered together in his Name, he will be in the middes of them, we shall never profit as we ought, nor consider the work we go about. It is noted of Cornelius, Acts 10.23. That when Peter was come to tell him and to teach him what he ought to do, he said, We are all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God. Thus ought it to be with us, when we are entered into the house of prayer, we must remember that we sit down in the presence of God; not of men only like unto our selves, but of him that is the searcher of the heart. Let this be our first rule: and except we do this, we do nothing in our hearing as we ought to do.

Secondly, we must empty our selves of all clogges and emcombrances that may hinder the saving hearing of the word. Let us cast off every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us. Let us disburden our selves of the cares of this life, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things, which if we bring with us ouerlaying our hearts, they will stop our ears, that the things cannot enter into us. Therefore the wise man giveth this counsel, Ecclesiastes, Chapter 5. verse 1. Keep thy foot when thou enterest into the house of God, and be more ready to hear, then to give the sacrifice of fools: for they consider not that they do evil.

Thirdly, set a price upon the word above all things of this life that may be most dear unto thee. Desire it more then gold, yea, then much fine gold: labor to find it sweeter to thy taste then honey & the honey comb, Psal. 19.10. Love it above all riches, and rejoyce in it more then they that find great spoils. Account the merchandise of it better then the Merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof more precious then Rubies, so that nothing that we highly esteem can be compared unto it. Prov. 3.13, 14. Magnifie it as a treasure of that value, that rather then thou wilt leave it, thou wilt be ready to forsake all that thou hast, Matth. 13. There is nothing that more slaketh and shaketh off our devout attention, then to account the precious word of God vile and base in our eyes, according to the corrupt custom of many in our days, that prefer husks fit to feed swine, before the fat of wheat that is sent to nourish the sons of God.

Fourthly, we must know that there is great hope of those that refuse not the means, but submit themselves unto it: but none at all of those that utterly refuse it. What God may work extraordinarily, who sometimes feedeth by miracle from heaven, as he did the Israelites, and Elijah in the wilderness, we cannot affirm, and they that wait upon such vanities, forsake their own mercy. But of this point, we have spoken already.

Lastly, it is our duty, to lay up the Word in our hearts, that it may not be taken from us: but that we may practice it, and profit by it. For all our hearing must aim at profiting. We must desire the sincere milk of the Word, that we may grow thereby. Now, it can never take root, except we hear it with an honest and good heart. If we have it only running in our mouths, or swimming in our brains, it is as the grass upon the house top, which withereth afore it groweth up, wherewith the mower filleth not his hand, nor he that bindeth sheaves his bosom. Let us therefore first of all, give our hearts unto God, pray him to reform them, and to open them, that so we may attend to those things that are delivered unto us. As for those that have their mouths open, but their hearts empty of the word, they are as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal; they may please themselves, and deceive others for a time, but their hypocrisy shall be uncased, their deceitful dealing manifested, and themselves proved to be no better then vessels that make a noise, but are without all substance in them.

[Verse 11, 12. And I, behold, I have taken the Levites, &c.] Hitherto we have spoken of the commandment of God, directed unto Moses, that he should present the Levites before Aaron the Priest, that they may minister unto him: now we are to proceed to the reason of the commandment, where we see the cause rendered why they should be given unto him, because even unto this time the first borne had executed the Priests office, being consecrated unto God, and preserved out of the common destruction, when the first borne in Egypt were destroyed. He putteth them in mind of God's mercy toward them, who might justly have destroyed them as well as the Egyptians, if it had pleased him. When we see a common desolation or destruction, and our selves as a remnant taken out of the common calamity, it ought to make us thankful unto God, and to acknowledge that we hold our life of him in chief.

Thus did Noah stand affected, when he offered sacrifice to God, after he was come out of the Ark, and was preserved with his family from the flood of waters. Thus doth Daniel teach Belshazzar the king to humble his heart, knowing the heavy judgment that God brought upon his father, and took his glory from him. We must profit by the examples of God's works, both of his mercy and judgment upon others, We learn from hence, [Doctrine] that the first borne were from the beginning the Lord's, and consecrated to serve him, and to instruct others. This dignity and preeminence of the first borne began among the sons of Adam, and continued in his posterity, as well before, as after the general destruction of the old world: the eldest ever succeeding in the kingly and Priestly office, unless for some open impiety, or other secret cause best known unto God, and unknown unto the Church, he were rejected; so that there was evermore some excellency, until that Israel came out of Egypt, and the Church became national.

Hence it is, that God saith to Cain, the elder son of Adam, If thou do well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door: and unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him, Gen. 4.7. To this purpose Jacob speaketh to Reuben, Thou art my first borne, my might, and the beginning of my strength, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power. Thus he was by privilege of birthright, and thus was every son by creation that first opened the matrice. Whereby we see, that in the family of the faithful, from the first man that God created, until Aaron was sanctified to be a Priest unto God instead of the first borne, the eldest of the family ordinarily had both the kingly and Priestly direction of the rest of his brethren. As we saw this before in the house of Adam, so it appeareth also afterward. For when Cain the eldest son of Adam, to whom the dignity of the first borne did pertain, was for his iniquity rejected from y^t honor, and excommunicated from the Church, which was a spiritual kind of banishment; God raised up Seth, who being taught by his father, touching the fall of man, touching the punishments of sin, and the promised Savior, assisted him while he lived in guiding his family, and succeeded him after his death in the government of the Church of God, which was as a little flock in comparison of the race of Caines posterity, that married many wives, and increased in great multitudes. In like sort Enoch succeeded Seth, and dying, left that honor to Kenan: Kenan to Mahalaleel, &c. These were preachers of righteousness and repentance, & some of them endued with the spirit of Prophecy, to convince that wicked generation.

These Preachers of God being contemned and despised in the world, (such entertainment have his servants ever found) the flood came and swept them away. Noah governed as a father the Church of God before and after the Flood, and left the same dignity and office to Shem his second son (Japheth his eldest son being put behind for secret causes known unto God) even as his father had committed it unto him. Thus we might proceed and go forward to show in succeeding ages of the Church, how God continued this favor to the first borne, and thereby set as it were a crown of honor upon their head. Hence it is, that at the giving of the Law they are called Priests, Exod. 19.24. Thou shalt come up, thou and Aaron with thee: but let not the Priests and the people break through, to come up unto the Lord, lest he break forth upon them. At this time Aaron and his sons were not consecrated to the office of the Priesthood, neither was the tribe of Levi chosen to come near to the Lord: and therefore these Priests could be no other but the first borne that were sanctified unto the Lord, which is the point that now we deal withal.

[Reason 1] This will farther appear unto us, if we consider what their dignity was, and wherein it consisted, who excelled from the beginning in three things.

First, he was Lord over his brethren, according to that of Isaac when he blessed Jacob the younger instead of the elder, and thereby preferred him to the dignity of the first borne, Gen. 27.29. Be Lord over thy brethren, and let thy mothers children bow down unto thee. The like we see in the book of the Chronicles, Chap. 21.3. touching the sons of Jehoshaphat, Their father gave them great gifts of silver, and of gold, and of precious things, with fenced cities in Judah: but the kingdom gave he to Jehoram, because he was the first borne.

Secondly, he had a double portion, Deut. 21.17. that is, two parts of all that the father had, whereas the rest were contented with a single portion. And this was so firmly established and decreed, that no man upon private affection, ought to be disinherited: and the reason is rendered, for he is the beginning of his strength, and therefore the right of the first borne is his.

Thirdly, he was holy unto God, and was the Priest of the family under his father, whom for the most part he used as an assistant unto him, in the managing of all the affairs thereof. All this appeareth plainly in the dissoluteness that fell out among the sons of Jacob, which was sufficient to have wrought the dissolution and desolation of that family: when Reuben sinned against his father, and defiled his bed by horrible incest, he was disinherited, and his excellency was divided among his brethren, Judah gate the scepter, Levi had the Priesthood, and Joseph obtained the double portion, 2 Chronicles, Chapter 5. verses 1, 2.

Again, as nothing is more natural, then [Reason 2] that the father instruct and direct his children, and set them forward in the ways of godliness and well doing: so nothing is more seemly among brethren, then that the elder should help the younger, the stronger assist the weaker, and the richer help the poorer. Now, none could be fitter to assist the father in the Kingly and Priestly office while he lived, and to second him in them both when he died, then the first borne, who is said to be the beginning of his strength, the excellency of dignity and of power, Genesis Chapter 49. verse 3. Seeing then, it is just, and right, and profitable, it ought to be confessed and acknowledged of us.

Lastly, hereunto in process of time was [Reason 3] added another reason, and a new necessity of lifting up their heads, when GOD destroyed all the first borne in the land of Egypt, so that there was no house wherein there was not one dead. Now, inasmuch as the first borne of Israel escaped out of this common calamity, as it were a brand taken out of the fire, God saith unto Moses, Sanctify unto me all the first borne, whatsoever openeth the womb, among the children of Israel, &c. it is mine, Exodus, Chapter 13. verse 1. From hence we may conclude that all the first borne were consecrated unto GOD, and were to be employed in his service.

This is indeed a type and figure, and hath [Use 1] not place among us: howbeit, it is written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world are come, and offereth many good and profitable instructions for our edification. This teacheth who are chiefly bound to serve the Lord. The greater our gifts are, the fitter we are for God, and none is to disdain to employ themselves, and all that is in them, to his service.

To this purpose cometh the saying of the wise man, Proverbs, Chapter 3. verse 9. Honor the LORD with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase. Such as have received the greatest measure of grace, are bound to yield unto him the greatest honor, and to bring forth the greatest obedience, as the field that hath most cost bestowed upon it, giveth the greatest increase. Such as have received five talents, should gain with them other five.

If he have made us as the first borne, & preferred us before many other, and doubled his Spirit upon us, as it were a double portion, let not us content our selves in any wise, to give him a simple and single gift or recompense of all his labors bestowed upon us.

This reproveth those that scorn the Ministry as base, and reject the calling it self as needless, and superfluous in their eyes; that account it too contemptible to employ the best and chiefest of their children in it. In former times the first borne were teachers of the families, and Ministers of the Church, until God set apart the tribe of Levi, to serve at the altar & in the temple. The best things that we have are not too good for God, even to give them unto him all the days of their life. For whom are the best fittest, but for him that is best? He challenged the eldest to serve him, the rest he permitted to the father, to be employed as he saw good.

First, God will be served, as it is great reason he should be, and afterward he giveth us leave to serve our selves. Jesse served the king with his eldest son in the wars, and kept his youngest at home, and bestowed him about his own business. If any think his first borne to be too good to minister before the Lord, he honoreth them above the Lord. Doth any think himself too good or too great a man to be sent as an embassadour from the Prince to foreign estates? or rather do not men sue for such high places, and think themselves happy when they attain unto them? How cometh it then to pass, that men of countenance are ashamed to see their children to be the embassadours of the king of kings, and to be employed in the greatest service, to make peace between God and man, and to save souls from death and destruction? If a man be blessed with many children, if any be more toward in wisdom, in learning in judgment, in stayednesse, and in gifts, he were fittest for the Lord. But the Ministry of the word in our days, through the abundance of sin and of iniquity getting the upper hand, is grown into disgrace and contempt, because men cannot abide to be reproved: whereas to them that are sanctified and shall be saved, it is the power of God, and the wisdom of God. Such are ready to say with the Apostle, Rom. 10.15 How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things? Nebuchadnezzar chose men to wait on him among the Jews, such as were of the kings stock, comely, witty, and every way well qualified both for lineaments of body, and ornaments of mind; he required that the chiefest should attend upon him, he would not have the refuse to stand in the kings court. Shall they then that are to stand up in the Name of the LORD, be of the basest and of the off-scouring of the people? If a man have many sons (such is the contempt of the Ministry) the eldest he must be the heir: if any be more beautiful or personable then the rest, he must be a Courtier: if any be disfigured or uncomely, he is set apart (if he list) to the Ministry.

This is not to honor God with our first fruits, this is to serve him with the blind and the lame, and to give unto him such as are not fit for anything else. But of this we shall have better occasion to speak farther afterward.

Secondly, this sanctifying unto God the best thing that we have, serveth to reprove such as never offer unto God the first and flourishing part of their age, neither sanctify unto him their young years: but as if they were too good for him, they will serve sin and Satan first, and afterward when they can follow them no longer, then they will think of sadder matters. Hence it is that young men for the most part do think themselves exempted and privileged by their age, to commit sin with greediness, and without controlment, and that they are free to do what they list, to fetch their vagaries, and to run into all excess at their own pleasure. But the holy Ghost is so far from giving liberty unto them, that he provoketh them in good time to dispose of their life, and even then especially when their affections begin to boil in them, and endeavoreth to pull them in as it were with the cords of discipline, and the Law of God.

Solomon is so far from allowing this reason, to warrant the looseness of young men, that is, to say, We are yet as youths, and therefore we may be let alone a while, we will be wiser hereafter; that rather with a sharp, but yet just taunting & laughing it to scorn, he speaketh to this age, Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart, and in the light of thine eyes; but know thou, that for all these things, God will bring thee into judgment. As if he had said, If thou wilt needs go forward, and wilt not be reclaimed, be it so, take thy pleasure, pass on thy days in thy delights, follow the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eyes, and the pride of life, glut thyself with chambring and wantonness, and take thy fill of dalliance: yet know that at the last thou shalt be called unto judgment, & give account for those things which thou hast committed. The children that mocked the Prophet, and reproached him for his infirmity, were torn in pieces with Bears that came out of the wood, 2 King. 2.24.

Therefore doth Solomon exhort them in another place, to remember their Creator in the days of their youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them. God hath honored them as his first borne, and given many gifts unto them, as learning, wit, knowledge, beauty, strength, health, quicknesse, and readiness, to do all things, which are not so common to every age; let them not abuse them, but honor him with them, that gave them. If you spend your first days loosely, and licentiously, and offer your old age to the LORD, when you can follow the pleasures of sin no longer, that endure for a season, he will not accept such a service and sacrifice at your hands. If you would have God to be your God in your old age, serve him in your youth, lest as you regarded not to know him in your youth, so he give you over, and know you not in your elder years. For if an earthly man have the wisdom and discretion, not to admit, and receive into his service, a doting and decrepid man, such a one as can stand him in no stead, but will readily answer him, Go thy ways, thou art no servant for me, let him that had the use of thy younger days, take that fruit of thy old age, that thou canst yield unto him: Shall not the Lord, the most wise God reject and cast us off in age, if we pass the flower of our youth, in serving sin, Satan, and the world? What assurance can we have, to be accepted when and at what time we list? may he not justly say unto us, Thou hast all thy life time served mine enemies, of whom I said unto thee, Serve them not; and now at last, when thou canst serve them no longer, comest thou unto me? How often have I called thee and offered to be a master unto thee, but thou refusedst to become my servant? now it is just with me to stoppe mine ears at thy cry, Go thy ways: Let him that had thy youth, take thine age also: let him that had the beginning take also the ending. If we spend our strength in vanity, and our days in folly, thus will the Lord answer us: God is the creator of the young man, it is he that hath made him, and not he himself: he is subject to death in his youth, as well as the old man in his age: the glass that is newly made, is as brittle as the old: the Lamb goeth to the shambles, as soon as the sheep. And the young man shall be brought to judgment for his tricks of youth: for God shall bring every work to judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil, Eccle. 12.14.

Wherefore to conclude, let young and old honor the Lord with the first fruits of their increase, & give the best things that they possess: yea, the more we have, the more he requireth of us. Such as are rich, and have this worlds good, must not be as barren trees, and unfruitful in good works. Whatsoever we enjoy, we have received it of his goodness, it is as a stream issuing from his fountain, and therefore we must return the glory to him and communicate the benefit thereof unto our brethren.

[Use 2] Secondly, another spiritual application of this type and figure of the first borne is, that it calleth to our remembrance what we are both by nature and by grace. By nature, that we are all the children of wrath and destruction, without the mercy of God freeing & delivering us from the sentence of death gone out against us; Even as the children of Israel had been all the children of death, as well as the first borne of Egypt, had not God in great mercy and compassion spared them. For albeit he delivered Goshen where the Israelites were, from the plagues that wasted and wearied the Egyptians: was this, think we, because Israel deserved to be spared? or because God could not in justice comence any action against them? No, they had learned too much the manners of Egypt▪ they believed not the word of the Lord for their deliverance, but murmured against the Ministers of God, sent unto them, albeit they had seen his wonders and signs that were wrought among them. Their first borne therefore had been in no better case then the first borne of Egypt, had not God been merciful unto them and shown pity upon them. So then we are all put in mind of our natural corruption by sin derived from Adam, in regard of which corruption which is spread as a foul and filthy leprosy over all the powers of the soul and parts of the body, we are guilty both of temporal, and eternal death, unless we have redemption by Christ the promised Savior of the world. We are by nature wretched and miserable sinners, borne as it were out of due time, and deserve the wages of sin, that is, death, Rom 6.20. We our selves were in times past, unwise, disobedient, deceived, serving diverse lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another. There are many branches of this corruption and sundry points necessary to be known of us concerning the same. First, we must acknowledge no difference between our selves and others. Are we better, or more excellent then they? No, in no wise. We all lie under sin, and have the seeds thereof within us. Rom. 3.9. and are ready to fall into all the most horrible sins can be named, if we be not stayed by the hand of God. Secondly, we must look into the Law of God, as in a glass, that we may see our defects and deformities. We are blind, and cannot see: the Law is a true glass, and will show us our face truly: it telleth what is amiss, and flattereth no man, for by the Law cometh the knowledge of sin, Rom. 3.20. There cannot be the least spot, but it will be made to appear: so that he which is ignorant of y^e Law, knoweth not himself. Thirdly, we must confess the love of God to be great toward us, in freeing of us from the bondage of sin, and setting us at liberty to be the servants of righteousness.

Thus doth the Apostle, Rom. 7.24, 25. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord, &c. Fourthly¹ we must learn the vileness and greatness of our fall, which Paul calleth the disobedience of one man, containing all sins of what kind and nature soever, which may be considered in those few particulars.

First, he regarded not the promise of God, whereby he was willed to hope for everlasting life, so long as he continued to eat y^e tree of life.

Secondly, he despiseth the commandment of God, restraining him from the forbidden fruit, and maketh no account of it.

Thirdly, he breaketh out into horrible pride, and ambition, whereby he would be equal unto God, and seek an estate higher then that wherein he had set him. He was not content with his present condition, albeit it were most excellent.

Fourthly, he showeth an unfaithful heart to depart away from the living God his creator, so that he did not believe or not regard the threatening of God, which was, that when he sinned, he should die: he becometh the most unkind and unthankfull wretch that could be, not considering what infinite benefits he had received for himself and his posterity, and that he was to loose them, and leave them in such sort, that they departed both from himself, and from his posterity.

Lastly, he brake out into foul and fearful Apostasy, from God to the devil, from his maker to the tempter, giving more credit to him that charged God with lying, with envy, and with malice, then to the Almighty, of whose goodness he had so great experience. Thus he preferred the father of lies, before the God of all truth. So that in the first sin of man, we may discern many sins, if it be divided into his particular parts, and considered severally as it ought to be of us.

The fifth branch is, that we must all of us take notice of the fruits and effects of the former disobedience, whereby the image of GOD, after which we were created at the first, is blotted out, only some few remnants remaining of it; so that instead of wisdom, power, truth, goodness, holiness, and righteousness, wherewith our first parents were clothed, as with garments more precious then the carpets of Egypt, and all the ornaments of gold and silver, wherein the Nobles of the earth are attyred, he punished them with the contrary evils, and pulling these from them and stripping them stark naked, they appeared most deformed, through blindness, weakness, falsehood, foolishness, profaneness, and unrighteousness, which swarmed in them, and all their children. A cursed root, cursed fruit: a wretched cause, a woeful effect. Hence it is, that we are prone to fall into all evil, and not able to think one good thought, 1 Cor. 2.14. 2 Cor. 3.5. we are borne dead in sins and trespasses, Ephe. 2.1. Ier. 17.19. Job 15.15. And yet this is not all our misery; but it brought in as by a violent wind, or a raging flood, an heap of sicknesses, diseases, aches, and a train of ten thousand calamities that attend upon our whole life, until they bring us into the chambers of death.

Lastly, when we have taken good notice of the former miseries and bondage, under which we lie, and thought well upon them with due meditation, they will drive us out of the love of our selves, and make us labor to be regenerated and borne again by the spirit of God: we must seek to repair the decayed image of God, & to be renewed in our minds, that we may be no longer the servants of sin, but of righteousness. Our old man must be crucified, that the body of sin may be destroyed. Let it not therefore reign in our mortal body, that we should obey it in the lusts thereof: neither let us yield our members as instruments of unrighteousness, but yield our selves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and our members as instruments of righteousness unto God.

Again, as the figure of the first borne expresseth the natural condition of all mankind, deserving to be destroyed, so it setteth forth the prerogative of the faithful, and showeth what we are by grace. For as Christ being the first borne among many brethren, Rom. 8.29. is the Priest of his Church, because he offered up himself to his Father, as a perfect sacrifice to satisfy his wrath for our sins, and maketh intercession for us: and the king of his Church, because he hath authority in heaven & in earth: so he maketh us kings and Priests unto God his Father, Revel. 1.6. and 5.10. Priests, that we should make known his will, call upon his Name in spirit and truth, and offer up our selves to him a spiritual sacrifice: and kings that we should conquer sin, Satan, and the world, through faith in Christ; for this is our victory, even our faith, that overcometh all these enemies. We have also the adoption of sons, and we are a chosen generation, a royal Priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that we should show forth the praises of him, who hath called us out of darkness, into his marvelous light, 1 Pet. 2.9.

Thirdly, this layeth before us the dignity [Use 3] of Christ Jesus our Savior, touching whom we learn, that he is in deed and in truth, the first borne of God, by whom we are delivered from the wrath of God, and redeemed from hell and destruction, forasmuch as he was consecrate unto God, and made a sacrifice of atonement for us, who by sin were become his enemies, as we noted before. Now he is the first borne in these four respects: first, according to his divine nature, being begotten of the Father before all creatures, after an unspeakable manner, being of the same substance with him, and is therefore called the first borne of every creature, Coloss. 1. verse 15. Rom. 8. verse 29. He is the eternal son of God, being borne of him before any creature was created. Whereby we learn against the blasphemous opinion of the Arians, that he is true GOD, not a made or a created God, but being God from all eternity.

Secondly, according to his human nature, even as he took upon him our flesh, and was borne of the virgins Mary, so he was also her first borne, Matthew 1. verse 25. Luke 2. verse 15. Not that the blessed Virgin had other after him, but because she had none before him. For he is in Scripture called the first borne, that first openeth the matrice, whether other be borne after or not.

Thirdly, he is called by this title, because he was the first y^t arose out of the grave, & made a way for us unto everlasting life, because it was impossible that he should be holden of the sorrows of death. And therefore he is said by the Apostle to be before all things, the beginning, and the first borne from the dead, Col. 1, 18. This is a notable comfort unto us, that forasmuch as our elder Brother Christ Jesus arose from the dead to the everlasting possession of eternal glory in heaven: it followeth, that we also shall rise again, and not forever lie in the grave; and then be partakers with him, of that blessed inheritance prepared for us from the beginning of the world. He is gone before to prepare us a place, and when he cometh again, we shall enter into that blessed estate and condition, everyone according to the measure of the grace and gift of Christ. For as Christ was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows, so he was rewarded with the possession of glory above his brethren, and highly exalted far above all principalities and powers, who ascended above all heavens, that he might fill all things, Eph. 4, 10. Neither let any object, that some did rise again before him, for they arose again to this present life, and died again: but he arose again to die no more, death had no more dominion over him: but to take possession of the kingdom of heaven; and therefore it followeth in the next words, that in all things he might have the preeminence.

Lastly, as the first borne was set apart, and then sacrificed unto GOD, I mean the first borne among the beasts that were killed: so Christ was separated from sinners, Heb. 7, 26. as the unspotted Lamb of God, holy, and acceptable; and then made a perfect oblation of himself, not for himself, but for the sins of his people, Heb. 7, 27. He must be holy both in his conception and life, that he might be a merciful and faithful high-Priest, and make reconciliation for us. For he that must be a Mediator between God and us, and restore us into his favor, must of necessity be himself in the favor of God, and never have offended him. Neither could he have access to the Throne of God, who is most holy, to make intercession for us, unless he had been holy, harmless, undefiled, and made higher then the heavens.

Hence also we have unspeakable comfort, we are assured that the wrath of God is pacified, the curse of the Law is cancelled, and all our sins are purged and done away: Who is it now that shall be able to lay anything to our charge, or to the charge of any of the elect? It is God that justifieth; who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, and maketh intercession for us. There is nothing then that shall be able to separate us from this love of Christ, neither tribulation, nor distress, neither persecution, nor famine, nor nakedness, nor peril, nor sword, neither life, nor death; forasmuch as in all these we are more then Conquerors, through him that loved us.

Lastly, seeing God separated the first borne [Use 4] or eldest of the family from the rest of his brethren, as also he did the Levites from the other Tribes to serve him, it teacheth, that all the faithful ought to be separated from the company of wicked men, and to abhor them as a sink of all filthiness and annoyance, that we may more freely and faithfully serve the Lord: as the Prophet saith, Psal. 119. Away from me ye wicked, and I will keep the Commandments of my God. Thus we see the Church of God to be described to be an holy people elected out of the rest of the world, Numb. 23.9. They shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the Nations. God revealeth his will to them, he governeth them, he protecteth them, he careth and provideth for them, no less then parents for their first borne. Hence it is, that he willeth Moses to go to Pharaoh, and to say unto him, Israel is my son, even my first borne: let him go that he may serve me: and if thou refuse to let him go, Behold, I will slay thy son, even thy first borne, Exod. 4. The like we read in the Prophecy of Jeremiah, chap. 31, 9. I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first borne. He hath a greater care of them then of all other nations and people. The elect are the first borne of God, because they are most dear unto him, and chosen before the foundation of the world. For even as men among all their sons, do most of all delight in their first begotten, as in the beginning of their strength, rejoicing most of all in the good that befalleth them, and greeuing most in the evil that cometh unto them, Psal. 89, 27. Zach. 12, 11. So doth God express his special love toward us, not only by calling us his sons, but by calling us his first borne sons. Among the sons of men it was always an honor and privilege to be the first borne, it is but one among many can attain unto it; it is not common to everyone. But the sons of God are all of them as his first borne, they are dear unto him, as they that are dearest. Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the first borne sons of God! therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. So sometimes the faithful are called the first fruits of his creatures, because as the first fruits in the time of the Law were a small portion gathered out of the rest, and offered to God: in like manner are the people of God as an holy kind of offering, taken out of the residue of men, few in number but precious in account with God, I am. 1, 18. Thus then we must know that we are consecrated unto God to belong unto him, and to serve him: as for 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 the company of the wicked, they are forbidden to us as the touching or tasting of the forbidden fruit was to our first parents, as bringing great danger and destruction unto our souls. The wise man saith, Be not among wine-bibbers, among riotous eaters of flesh: for the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty, and drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags. Hereunto cometh the direction of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 5, 11. I have written unto you, not to keep company: if any that is called a brother, be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolatour, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with such a one, no, not to eat. And in the next Epistle he exhorteth to come out from among them, and to touch no unclean thing, and then GOD will receive them, be a Father unto them, and they shall be his sons and daughters, 2 Cor. 6, 17. Likewise he chargeth the Thessalonians, and commandeth them in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that they withdraw themselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which they received of them, 2 Thess. 3, 6. All flesh resort to their like: and every man will keep company with such as he is himself. For how can the lamb agree with the wolf? Or how can two walk together, except they be agreed? The heathen Philosopher, sequestering himself to a strict kind of life, confesseth, that he could never bring home again those manners that he carried abroad with him: but what he had well ordered in his life, was easily disturbed and disordered; and those vices that he had put to flight, quickly returned upon him. Even as it befallerth a sick person, that hath kept long within doors, being recovered of some weakness or sickness, cannot without danger walk abroad in the open air, but straightway he is cast down again: so it happeneth unto us, whose hearts have begun to shake off the sicknesses of sins and vices, the conversation of the wicked multitude is a great enemy like the infectious air unto us: every mate being ready to commend unto us, and to thrust upon us, both by word and practice, some noisome vice or other, some to bring us to drunkenness: some to uncleanness: some to riotousnesse: some to gamings: and so to infect us therewith at unawares. Whereby it cometh to pass, that we sildome go unto them, or keep company with them, or continue long with them, but we learn some evil, or vnlearne some good, and so return from them more profane and polluted then before. This duty hath under it many branches.

First, it standeth us upon, to make choice of our company that we frequent, as a man that chooseth out his ground before he build: and not to be more careful what we eat or drink, then among whom we eat or drink. Vnwholesome meats may pester or poison the body, but ungodly company many times destroyeth the soul. We see how careful men are about their meats and drinks, what they eat, and what they drink, every little thing doth trouble and disquiet them: but in matters of far greater danger, as blind men we swallow many a fly, and converse with such as we may justly fear they may bring us to perdition, as men that strain at a gnat, and swallow a camell.

Secondly, we ought to pray to God daily, that we may not be led into temptations. It is the direction that Christ our savior giveth, that so we may be delivered from evil, Math. 6, 13. Daily prayer for wisdom is a preservative against the wicked. Such as walk in the morning in noisome airs, carry somewhat in their mouths to keep them from infection. If we pray faithfully, we are fenced and fortified against the assaults of evil persons. This was the practice of David, wherein he hath given us an example, Psal. 141.3, 4. Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, keep the door of my lips: incline not mine heart to any evil thing, to practice wicked works with men that work iniquity. If then we are to pray to be preserved from such tempters and temptations as would draw us into evil, and withdraw us from good: surely we are not wittingly and willingly to run into them; for then we mock and dally with God, & become tempters unto our selves. And how shall we dare to kneel down in the presence of the eternal God, and to desire of him not to lead us into temptation, and so soon as we are gone frō prayer, and the house of prayer, by and by to haunt evil houses, and seek out allurements, and wait for occasions, & wish for our companions, until we return home worse then we were before?

Thirdly, it is our duty, and a special point of wisdom, not to presume upon our abilities, nor to glory in our own strength. There cannot be a more deceitful bait then this is, when men foolishly persuade themselves, that albeit they run into evil company, and hold familiarity with drunkards, and continually haunt alehouses and places of disorder; though they be hail-fellow well met with them, and join hand in hand with them, yet they can keep themselves from infection; so that they will never be overtaken with their sin. And as well may a man rush headlong among such as have plague sores above them, and live with them, and yet never be infected: whereas few dare adventure their bodies in such cases. But put the case it were lawful; yet all things that are lawful are not expedient: all things that are lawful, edify not. We must take heed we do not give offense to others, neither destroy him for whom Christ died. So then, the best way for us to avoid evil, is to take knowledge of our own weakness, and to strive against our own infirmities, and to fly as far as we can from danger.

Fourthly, let us not flatter our selves with an idle conceit and foolish opinion, that we by keeping them company shall be able to draw them and persuade them to goodness. For we see this by the ordinary course of human affairs, that when the good and evil meet together, and are joined in friendship, the godly are rather corrupted by the ungodly, then the ungodly corrected by the godly. This may appear unto us in Solomon, a man greatly beloved of God, and greatly blessed with wisdom: nevertheless, even him did outlandish women cause to sin. This was signified also in the Law, holy flesh carried in the skirt of a garment did not make it holy: but the polluted person, touching anything, did pollute it, and make it unclean with his filthiness. It is an harder thing to cleanse and purify, then to defile and make unclean: and therefore they will sooner tempt us, then we shall teach them. What then? Is vice of more force then virtue? and shall evil prevail more then good? I answer, we consider not good and evil as they are in themselves, but as they are in us: not as they are being separated from us, but joined to us. The evil men are wholly evil, whereas we are but in part good: and therefore they are strong, we are weak: they are wholly flesh, we are not altogether spirit, but only in part regenerate: so that they hale us and hold us with all their power, with all their might, and with all their strength, that we must use violence to get from them, or else we are undone. They are as men that set all their strength to the work, and labor night and day with both their hands; we have our strength divided, and work as it were with one hand, and set too but one shoulder. They run in the ways of evil, we do as it were halt with one foot, like Jacob when he wrestled with GOD, whereby he had the hollow of his thigh put out of joint. They fare as men that descend down a Mountain with great violence, and have no stay of themselves until they come to the bottom: we creep up toward the top with all four, like Jonathan, that went over to the garrison of the uncircumcised; we are fain to climb up rocks and cliffs, and craggy places, upon our hands and upon our feet, with much labor and great sweating, and oftentimes faint by the way. That which they do, they do with ease & pleasure: but we find many enemies to buckle withal, and are constrained not only to fight with beasts at Ephesus, but to wrestle hand to hand, against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, and against spiritual wickedness in high places: so that it is more than need to take to us the whole armor of God, that we may be able both to stand, and to withstand in the evil day.

Fifthly, thou must esteem of evil company, as of him that hath a running sore of an infectious disease, and hate all vice in thy dearest companions, more than the plague. They that have sound eyes are fearful of themselves, & careful to refrain from looking upon their eyes that are sore and bleared, lest they should be hurt. Can a man have his conversation among thieves, and not at one time or other be robbed of his treasure? Such as have nothing are sure to lose nothing: but they that have treasure about them, by conversing with deceitful couzeners and cheating companions, are in danger to be deprived of it. So if we live among these spiritual thieves, that are more common and subtle, and therefore more dangerous than the other, we cannot but be spoiled and stripped naked of the precious pearls of God's graces which enrich our souls, and are more of value than all the gold and silver that is digged out of the earth.

The sixth and last branch is, to teach us to be in love with good company, whereby we may be bettered and edified. Evil persons that infect, as a filthy dunghill that casteth up an unsavory sent, are compared to pitch that defileth, to leaven that soureth, to the canker that consumeth, and to the scabbed sheep that infecteth an whole flock. But good and godly company is as the sweet ointments or perfumes of the Apothecaries, a man cannot come among them, but all his garments smell of myrrh, aloes, and cassia. They are anointed with the oil of gladness in their measure, and delight greatly the nostrils of such as live with them. If we converse among them we shall somewhat savor of them. So then by the works that we practice, it may be known what company we frequent. The wise man saith, Prov. 13, 20. He that walketh with wise men, shall be wise: but a companion of fools shall be destroyed. Great is the force of company, whether it be to good or to evil. With the good, we shall learn goodness, & reap the fruit of it to our souls. Among the ungodly, we shall learn nothing but wickedness, and in the end receive nothing but a crop of care, and shame, and dishonor, and rebuke, and that which is more than all the rest, death and destruction forever.

14. And the Lord spake unto Moses, in the wilderness of Sinai, saying, 15. Number the children of Levi, after the house of their fathers, by their families: every male from a month old and upward, shalt thou number them.

16. And Moses numbered them according to the word of the Lord, as he was commanded.

We have spoken hitherto of both the parts of the preface, that go before the enumeration of the Levites, consisting partly in the description of Aaron's sons, and partly in the presentation of that Tribe before Aaron and his sons to serve in the Tabernacle. Now we come to speak of the numbering of them, which is done apart in a peculiar manner from the rest of the people. For God would not have the Levites numbered with the rest of the Tribes, to the end he might free them from the wars, and except them as a chosen portion to himself from civil affairs; and that they might more diligently, more seriously, & more carefully, without all disturbance and distraction apply and employ themselves in that holy function whereunto they were appointed. So then, after that the people are numbered and ordered exactly and exquisitely, Moses proceedeth to the numbering of the Levitical Tribe, which only remaineth unnumbered.

This is done two ways: first simply, being considered in themselves without reference and relation to others: secondly, comparatively, being compared with the first borne, in whose place and room they succeeded. The simple enumeration is twofold, first general, in these words; and then particular in those that follow. The general numbering hath two parts, the commandment, and the execution of it. The commandment is amplified by the author of it, The Lord spake unto Moses; then by the place, in the wilderness of Sinai, there it was given: for as yet they were not gone from the Mount where the Law was given. Thirdly, by the manner, number them by their families, after the house of their fathers. Lastly, the persons to be numbered, every male from a month old, and upward. The obedience of Moses is in the 16, verse, where he is commended by the manner of it, he did it according to the word of the Lord, in all points as he was commanded. The particular numbering, being set down in the verses that follow, we are to reserve to his proper place.

In this division two questions arise, upon the different order observed in the numbering of this Tribe, compared with the numbering of the former Tribes, which are to be decided. For here Moses is commanded to number all the males from a month old and above, but he did before number the other Tribes from twenty years old and above, chap. 1, 3. Wherefore, first of all the question may be asked, why the Levites are not numbered as the rest are, from twenty year old, but from a month old? Secondly, why they were not numbered as well so soon as they were borne and brought forth into the world, as when they were a month old? Wherefore we are to enquire, why they were numbered so soon, and then why no sooner?

Touching the first, to wit, why they were [Question 1] numbered from one month and upward, and not at twenty years old and upward, as the rest were, it was done for three causes.

First of all, the Levites were numbered at a month old, because at that age they were fit to be presented before the Lord, and offered unto him, Luke 2.

Secondly, another cause of taking their number according to these young years, was, to bring the number of this Tribe unto an equal proportion with the other Tribes; for at this God aimed, as we shall see afterward: whereas if the number had been taken only from twenty year & upward, it should never have been known what number there was of the first borne, and so the recompense and satisfaction would have been altogether uncertain and unjust.

This showeth, both that the Tribe of Levi was in comparison few in number, even the least of all the rest, and that by this gracious dealing and merciful favor of God, the people ought to be inclined, more quietly, patiently, willingly, and cheerfully to pay the tax and tribute that was laid upon them for the overplus among themselves.

Thirdly, they are numbered at that age, because it was not necessary they should be fit for the wars, whom GOD had exempted from such service, which was one difference between the Levites and the other Tribes. They were numbered at twenty years old, because then they were holden and judged fit to go out to war, as among us and in our Common-wealth, the State thinks it fit to have all warned from sixteen to threescore years, as able men to bear arms, and to serve their Prince, and to fight for their country. Whereas the Levites had nothing to do with handling the sword, and putting on armor, and following the wars: they were to attend on holy things, and to minister in the Tabernacle: they are made word-men, not sword men: they are fishers of men, not fighters with men: and albeit they walk in the flesh, yet they do not war after the flesh, 2, Cor. 10, 3.

Touching the second question, to wit, [Question 2] wherefore they were not numbered before the month was expired? This was done, because all the male children by the ceremonial law, were impure and unclean for the space of one month, Leviticus 12, verse 4. as also all the maid-children were unclean threescore and six days, Leviticus 12, verse 5. At what time the mother brought unto the Priest, a lamb of a year old, for a sin-offering, who offered it before the LORD, and made an Atonement for her, Leviticus 12, verse 6, 7.

So then, as the male children were unclean an whole month, so after that space of time limited and determined, they ought to be purified.

True it is, they did belong unto GOD at all times, for unto such pertained the Kingdom of Heaven from the beginning: he had evermore a right unto them, who had said unto Abraham, I will be thy GOD, and the GOD of thy seed, Gen. 17. Notwithstanding they could not be presented unto him, because they were holden as unclean, according to that law that continued for a season, & for y^t cause God would have those only reckoned in this account which were a month old. This did put them in mind, as also it teacheth us, that we are all by nature sinners and unclean. We are conceived and borne in sin, and from that which is unclean, who can bring that is clean? Our natural estate is notably described by the Prophet Ezekiel, chap. 16. under the similitude of a wretched infant polluted in his blood. There is not one that doth good, no not one: so that every mouth is stopped, and all the world become guilty before God.

[Verse 15. Number the children of Levi, after the house of their, &c.] Here is set down a commandment directed to Moses, and a commendation of Moses, who was faithful in the house of God as a servant. A servant will do nothing before he know the mind of his master; and when he knoweth his will, he is ready to accomplish it. The house is the Church: the master of it is God: the Stewards of it are the Teachers, who rule in this house at the appointment of God: and none of them durst presume to do anything therein without his direction: so it is said in this place of Moses, that he followed not his own device, but did all things as the mouth of God directed him.

We learn from hence, that the word of [Doctrine 1] God is able to inform the Church generally, and every man particularly, in all things pertaining to this life, and to direct them, both what they are to do, and what they are not to do. Whatsoever falleth out into the parts of man's life, must receive warrant from the will and word of God. This doth the Prophet David teach in many places of the Psalms, By them thy servant is warned: by them the youngman may by taking heed, cleanse his ways: by them all men shall be made more wise than their enemies, more learned than their teachers, more prudent than the ancient: by them they shall make their way prosperous; and by doing according to that which is written in them, they shall have good success. Of this is Solomon also another witness, Prov. 2, 9. My son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments within thee, &c: then shalt thou understand righteousness, and judgment, and equity, & every good path. This is directed not only to Princes and Magistrates, (as appeareth in the Epistle to the Hebrews) but to all the children of God, of what calling soever they be. So the Apostle speaking of our ordinary meats and drinks, declareth that they are sanctified by the word of God, and by prayer, 1. Tim. 4, 5. That which he speaketh of our use of the creatures, must be understood of all things else, and stretched to all our actions, forasmuch as the word must be our warrant, whē to do everything, how to do it in a good manner, how to fly evil, and how to use Christian liberty in things that are in themselves indifferent.

[Reason 1] This is so evident, that we want not many reasons to confirm it unto us. First, the titles given to the word, do teach it. For it is called the statute law of God. Are not the statute laws of the kingdom, sufficient to direct us what to do, and what we ought to do? They are able to secure us from danger, without any foreign helps. Hence it is, that the Prophets cry out in every place, for obedience to the statutes of God, they will tell us what we ought to do. Likewise the word is said to be our Counselor, as it were a man of Law, to which we ought evermore to resort, as we see men in matters of doubt, repair to their learned counsel, that they may do nothing without advice.

Secondly, the Apostle setteth down this [Reason 2] rule, that whatsoever we do, whether we eat, or drink, or enter into any action, we must set before us, as the chief and high end of all, the glory of God. There may be indeed, and are other ends of the things we do, but this ought to be the principal. If this be wanting, what other ends soever we have, the work is defective and unholy unto us. But no man can glorify God in anything without obedience; and there is no obedience, but in respect of the commandment and word of God. The Prophet saith well, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice; and to hearken, than the fat of Rams. Hereupon therefore it followeth, that the word of God directeth a man in all his actions: whereas all things done without the testimony of the word of God, are without obedience. The rule is general, Whether ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God: and therefore nothing which is done without the warrant of the word can be done to the glory of God.

Thirdly, the Apostle speaking of things [Reason 3] that are in their own nature indifferent, concludeth that whatsoever is not of faith, is sin, Rom. 14, 23. If any say, the Apostle meaneth a full persuasion of that which he doth to be well done: It is true; but from whence can that assurance grow unto the conscience, but from faith? and how can we persuade our selves that we do well, but when we have the word of God for our warrant? The argument then is thus framed, wheresoever faith is wanting, there is sin: but in every action not commanded and allowed, faith is wanting: therefore in every action not commanded and allowed, there is sin: and consequently to approve our actions, we must have the precept and commandment of God, and the allowance of his word.

Let us after these things thus confirmed [Use 1] to our consciences, proceed to the uses. First, forasmuch as we must fetch the warrant of our actions from the pure fountain of the word, it teacheth us the perfection and all-sufficiency of the word of God. It needeth no human verities or popish traditions to be patched or put unto it, which were as much as to add a rag to a new garment that needeth it not. The Law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul, saith the Prophet. The whole Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, saith the Apostle. It is able to make us wise unto salvation, and to furnish the man of God to every good work. Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think to have eternal life, saith Christ. But are all things that we are to do, expressed in the word? I answer, all things are not expressed word for word in so many syllables, but all things are contained in the Scriptures. For we must know the rule of Nazianzen, and it is a sure one, that such things as are gathered out of the Scriptures, are even as if they were written, they are of like nature, of like force, of like authority.

First, some things are not in deed and in truth, and yet are said to be in Scripture, as that God sitteth, that he hath eyes, ears, hands, mouth, and such like.

Secondly, some things are in deed, and yet are not said to be, to wit, expressly and in so many words; so that though the words be not there, yet the doctrine is, as that the holy Ghost is God, that he proceedeth equally frō the Father and from the Son; that there are two Sacraments, that Christ is God of himself, and consubstantiall with his Father, and an hundred such points, which are necessarily collected and concluded from them, as he that saith twice two, saith four: and he that saith twice twenty, affirmeth forty, though not in so many words.

Again, some things neither are, neither are said to be, as that an image and an idol are different in themselves. And lastly, some things are, and are said to be in the Scriptures, as that there is one God and one Mediator between God and man. Now we say, that all things necessary are contained in them, but not expressed, as the baptism of infants, and original sin, yet are distinctly and demonstratiuely inferred out of them: and so are all things that belong to faith or obedience, whatsoever we are either to believe or to practice. Abraham saith to the rich man, They have Moses and the Prophets, let them hear them: if they hear not them, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead. He understandeth hereby the writings of the old Testament: these he opposeth against all visions and revelations, as we also do against all traditions: these, these I say are sufficient to bring us to Christ, to salvation, to heaven. These are sufficient to keep us from hell and destruction, and every evil way. Wherefore, whatsoever belongeth to doctrine or to good life, is found in them, we have direction by them to all things whatsoever belong unto us to do. It is the commendation of a good Law to leave as little vndecided and vndetermined, and out of the compass of the Law as is possible. Such as write of the government of Common-wealths do give this rule, that it behooveth these rules that are well made, as near as may be to determine of all things, and to leave as few as they can to the arbitrement and discretion of the Judges. Men are oftentimes passionate, & passions hinder judgment and the finding out of truth. The Jews, to whom were committed the Oracles of God, were directed by them in the least things they had to do. Our estate is not left worse then theirs, who, beside the same direction that they had, have also the noble addition of the New Testament, which were written that we might believe, and in believing have everlasting life, John 20, 31.

Secondly, this doctrine serveth to direct & inform the Ministers what to teach & preach [Use 2] unto the people, and the people what to believe, wherein to rest, whereupon to build their faith, and to settle their conscience. The matter given them in charge to deliver and commend to the care and consideration of the hearers, is the word of God. They are to teach nothing else, but what Christ their Lord and Master hath commanded to be observed, Mat. 28, 20. We must follow the example of Paul, 1, Cor. 11, 23, who delivered nothing to the Corinthians, but what he had received of the Lord. If they strike at sin any otherwise, their weapon is not sharp enough to cut it down; for whereas they should draw out the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, they give it a blow with a leaden dagger: and whereas they should overthrow it with the push of a pike, they run at it with a bulrush. It is the word that is mighty in operation, and entereth into the soul, & is able to cast down everything that exalteth it self against the kingdom & knowledge of Jesus Christ. It is the word only that is the food of the soul, and is able to afford wholesome nourishment. Let us not teach the people our own devises, which is, to feed thenwith chaff that hath no strength in it. Let us deal as workmen that need not be ashamed, dividing the word of truth aright. And concerning the people, they must not affect such teaching as is most plausible, but such as is most profitable: not that which may please the ear, but that which may move the heart. The end of our coming to the house of God, must not be to delight our selves, but to reform our lives. Neither ought we so much to attend what learning they show, as what sin they reprove, that so we may come to repentance. The more they open our understandings by the key of the Scriptures, the better we are to account of them.

Thirdly, it serveth to reprove those that [Use 3] do rush headlong & headstrong in their actions and course of life, not caring what they do, as desperate men that fear not their flesh, or as foolish Mariners, that run their Ship upon the Rocks, and never ask counsel at the mouth of the Lord. If any ask how this may be done? and say, we desire nothing more then to know the mind of the Lord: but how can this be, seeing he is in heaven, and we are upon the earth? I answer, it is not hard or impossible for us to consult with God, and to resolve as from God, and to know his will. We must search into his word; for he yet speaketh unto us in the Scriptures. When the word speaketh, know that God speaketh unto thee: and set it down with thyself as a certain truth that is surer then the heavens, that when thou hearest the word, thou hearest him: and whensoever thou despisest the word, thou despisest him. The Scripture is as the voice of God, and therefore the Prophets so often repeat this to the people in all their sermons, Hear ye the word of the Lord, thus saith the Lord. A man will not adventure upon a temporal possession, without the advice of his learned counsel: nor a sick person upon strange meats, without the advice of his Physician. How then shall we dare, in matters that concern our souls, and may put us in hazard of our salvation, to undertake sundry actions without knowledge of the word, and so without warrant & assurance whether they please God?

Hence it is, that God oftentimes reproveth his people, because they did that which he had not commanded: & the Prophets charge them with this as a sin against him, because they entered upon those things whereof he had not spoken, and which never entered into his heart, as Jer. 7, 31, 32. They have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire, which I commanded them not, neither came it into my heart. And to that purpose saith the Prophet Isaiah, chap. 30, verse 2. They walk to go down into Egypt, and have not asked at my mouth, &c.

Neither let any object, that this is spoken in matters of great weight and importance, as in points of faith, or of the worship of God, without which a man cannot be saved, and which the word in other places hath determined: for this were great injury to the word of God, to pin it and pound it up in so narrow a corner, & so short a compass, that it should be able to direct us only in the cheef & principal points of our religion, and not in matters of lesser moment of our profession. This doth mightily shrink up the sinews of the Scripture, and bind up the arms of it, which otherwise extend far and near. Remember that in the book of Joshua, the children of Israel are charged by the Prophet, that they asked not counsel at the mouth of the Lord, when they entered into covenant with the Gibeonites: and yet that covenant was not made contrary to any commandment of the Lord. For howsoever it seemeth to many, that they ought to have been put to the sword, and to have died the death, because they were in the number of those Nations that dwelled in the inheritance of the people of God, promised to Abraham and his posterity long before: yet if the matter be well considered, it will not be hard to understand, that with condition of yielding themselves to the subjection of the Jews, and of conformity to the true religion of God, they might be received.

For what was the cause that they were forbidden to enter into league with them, but this, that they dwelling among them, might draw them to a false worship of God? Lest they teach you to do after all their abominations which they have done unto their gods, so should ye sin against the Lord your God. But when they offered to yield themselves to the Jewish, both religion and subjection, there was no fear of defiling thē, or of withholding and withdrawing them from the service of God.

True it is, if they did resist or withstand them, as the greatest part of the Canaanites did, who came out to meet them, and provoked them to battle, and were so far from submitting themselves to God & his people, that they stirred up one another, and joined their forces together to stand out unto death; it was not lawful to spare either sex or age, either women or children, either young or old. If it had been utterly unlawful, and against the express word of God to make any league with any of the Canaanites, Joshua and his Princes had done wickedly to have kept their oath with them, after they had understood their fraud and falsehood; considering that all oaths made directly against the word of God and his express commandment, are utterly unlawful, and consequently to be broken, lest we add sin unto sin.

The Spies also sent out by Joshua had done evil, which entered into a league with Rahab the harlot, and bound themselves with an oath: which oath notwithstanding was solemnly observed. Yea, Solomon had done evil, who in his best and flourishing state of his kingdom, received the Amorites, which voluntarily yielded themselves unto his obedience, and (that which is more) to the obedience of the Lord; who notwithstanding grew into one body of the Church of GOD with the people of Israel, and joined themselves with them freely & forwardly in the restoring of y^e Temple. The like we might say of David, (whose example we touched before) albeit the LORD had expressly revealed in his word, that there should be a standing place, where the Ark of the Covenant should rest, and the Tabernacle with the service belonging unto it, should have a certain abiding; and albeit there was no express word of God that forbad him to build the Temple, yet the LORD reproveth his resolution, albeit he commendeth his zeal and good affection, because he had given no commandment concerning the person that should build it, 2, Samuel, chapter 7, verse 7; or the time when it should be built.

So then, we learn by all these examples, as well by such as did against the commandment, as by those that did attempt and adventure upon things without a commandment, that they are justly reproveth, that never regard the word of God in any of their ways, neither ask counsel at his mouth, that never consider what GOD alloweth and approoueth, but rashly break into the practice of things incident to their life, and yet have no other guide to lead them, nor counselor to advise them, nor teacher to instruct them, nor warrant to bear them out, otherwise then their own mind and meaning, which in matters of God, and parts of his worship are blind and perverse. Ask these men what approbation they have from God; or what assurance to their own consciences y^t they please him, they are able to say nothing at all. Let me tell these men, that which I would have them mark, and oftentimes to think on it upon their beds, even between the Lord and their own souls, as they will answer it before the great Judge of all the world, when they shall appear before him; that whatsoever you do, though they be good things, yet to you that are ignorant, and know not what you do, to you it is a sin, and in you it is no virtue. It is a notable duty to hear the word of God, it is one mark of Christ's sheep, and one step into his kingdom: but if ye come to this ordinance of God, as the people commonly use to come, only to do as your honest neighbors do, and because the law requireth it, & have no other knowledge of it, your hearing is abominable in you, and no more pleasing in the sight of almighty God, then if you should cut off a dogs neck to offer unto him, Isaiah 66, 3.

We are commanded to come often to the holy Supper of the Lord, and to prepare our selves reverently and religiously to that action. It is a worthy instrument of God which he hath ordained for the confirmation of our faith, & many of us come often unto it, all of us at Easter; but if we come unto it only because it is a common custom so to do, and we are loath to be singular, and know not that both God commandeth the practice of it, and our own infirmity crieth out for the necessity of it, his table is made a snare unto us, and we sin against Christ: so that we receive no more benefit by eating the bread and drinking of the cup of the Lord, then the Gentiles that were partakers of the table of devils, and did drink the cup of devils, and did offer sacrifice unto Devils.

Woe then to all ignorant persons, that take upon them to perform duty and service unto God, and yet know not what duty & service he requireth at their hands. Oh that they would or could understand, that the best works which they do perform, even such as God commandeth, are no better then sins and abominations in them, that do they know not what, as blind men that shoot at a mark. Oh, that they would or could pray unto God to open their eyes, to see their own wretchedness, and to consider that the most holy parts of God's worship which they perform, are a sacrifice of fools that know not that they do evil. Then would they learn the difference between things done in knowledge, and such as are done in ignorance: then would they praise GOD for the light of his truth revealed unto them: and then would they confess with all their hearts, that they would not stand in the former state wherein they lived, if an whole kingdom, or all the pomp and glory of the world were given unto them.

To conclude, let them bear this away with them also, that God will not be served with good meanings or good intents, which is all that the greatest part can say for themselves, we are simple people, we are not book-learned, we mean well, we hope we have as good souls unto God, as the proudest of them all, we do what we can, we hope God will bear with the rest.

This is the religion of such as think themselves devout, but is indeed the language of the devils. God respecteth not such foolish devotions, he requireth of all persons the knowledge of his word, as we shall show afterward, and he will be worshipped according to the knowledge thereof.

The Apostle reproveth the Jews for their zeal, a virtue that ought to be in all the faithful, forasmuch as God will spew all that are lukewarm out of his mouth: nevertheless he accepteth it not in them, because it was not according to knowledge. We must know what God alloweth, if we would have him allow & approve of us. If we regard not to know him, we may well assure our selves that in the day of account he will not know us, but turn away his face from us.

The second reproof meeteth with all such as do things doubtfully and waueringly, not knowing whether they do well or ill: these do attempt things, either against their conscience, or without the comfort of a good conscience: and therefore, albeit it be good in it own nature which they do, and good in regard of the will of God, yet to them it is not so, because they are not assured by the word, whether it be lawful or unlawful, and therefore it is turned into sin. This is that which we heard before out of the Apostle, Whatsoever is not of faith, is sin, Rom. 14, 23. All such need not another to condemn them, they condemn themselves in that which they do.

The unfaithful and unregenerate man sinneth in everything he doth, even in his best actions. We must please god before any of our works can please him. The Apostle saith, Unto the pure, all things are pure, but unto thē that are defiled and unbelieving, is nothing pure, but even their mind and conscience is defiled, Tit. 1, 15. And S. James in his Epistle, chap. 1, 7, 8. He that wauereth, is like a wave of the sea driven with wind and tossed: for let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord; a double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. Wherefore it standeth us upon, to consider the three general rules set down by S. Paul, in the Epistle to the Romans, chap. 14, to direct us in all our actions.

First, he is happy that condemneth not himself in the use of those things which he knoweth to be lawful. This concerneth those that are strong. This is a golden rule, and a great honor & happiness of Christian men, that their own consciences do not accuse them to allow and admit of that which they judge not to be good and lawful. They know by due trial and examination, that the same which they do, agreeth with the word of God so that they are assured to build vpon the rock. Though all men should accuse them and condemn them, yet their conscience grounded upon the word of God, would acquit & discharge thē, which cannot but give an inward peace and sweet contentment to their souls. This the Apostle saith, 2 Cor. 1, 12. Our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, &c. To the same purpose Job speaketh, chap. 27, 6. My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go: my heart shall not reproach me so long as I live. Likewise John in his first Epistle, saith, I four heart condemn us, God is greater then our heart, and knoweth all things: beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God. This comfort of a good conscience they cannot but want, which doubt whether that which they do, please God or not; they are far from this happiness which the Apostle pronounceth upon such as know well, and are thoroughly assured what they do: the rest are like drunken men that stagger & reel too and fro, & cannot keep themselves upright upon their feet.

Secondly, no man must do anything with a doubtful conscience, for such a one woundeth his own conscience, & offendeth God. The Apostle saith, He that doubteth, is condemned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith. He that is not persuaded that it pleaseth GOD which he doth, cannot direct it to his glory. Every work that cometh short of his end, is sin: and therefore Abraham is commended, that he staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God, Rom. 4, 20. This rule belongeth to those that are weak, who waver up and down in their opinions, like a ship that tottereth hither and thither in a tempest. Woe unto such, they need no other witness or judge against themselves, but themselves. They do many good things that do displease GOD, which would please him, if they were well and rightly done. If then thou wouldst have any fruit and comfort in those things which thou doest, inform thy conscience aright, be persuaded thoroughly of that which thou doest, and build thy faith upon the sure and infallible rock of God.

Thirdly, whatsoever proceedeth not from faith, is a sin committed against God, and condemneth him that doth it, forasmuch as without faith, it is impossible to please God. Outward shows and appearances, though they be never so pompous and glorious, are not respected of him: he inquireth whether those things we do, proceed from true obedience, & whether we believe by the word that they are required of God, and so please him. This last rule engendereth two other: first, whatsoever proceedeth from pure naturals is impure, and whatsoever cometh from the force of our free will, is sin in the sight of God. Such as the fountain is, such are the streams: as the root is, so are y^e branches: like mother, like daughters: like cause, like effects. Doth a spring send forth out of the same place sweet water and bitter? Can the figgetree bear Olive berries, either a vine, figs? A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Secondly, all the virtues and actions of the infidels and unbelievers, albeit in regard of themselves and the substance of the works, and as they are the gifts of God, they be not evil, but good: yet in the judgment of God they are sins. The whole life of unbelievers and unregenerate men is nothing else but a whole practice of sin in a continued course without stay or interruption from the beginning to the ending, but they are like those that run a great pace out of the way. They may do many things beautiful in show, but they are more in show, then in substance: in appearance, then in deed and truth. All their virtues are shadows, and therefore called by one of the fathers, splendida peccata, beautiful sins. They lay an evil foundation, & have a wrong beginning, they do them without faith: and they also propound to themselves an evil end, as either vain glory to be esteemed of others, or the merit of the work, that they may be rewarded of God, and do not refer them to his glory. But not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth, 2 Cor. 10, 18. Who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts, & then shall every man have praise of God, 1 Cor. 4, 5. Wherefore all their works are as the apples of Sodom, which are fair in outward appearance, and yet are rotten and corrupt. So may unbelievers do sundry works that are beautiful in outward show, but they are like unto painted Sepulchers, which appear glorious to the sight, but they are within full of dead men's bones, and all uncleanness. For their heart, which God especially beholdeth and searcheth, is foul & filthy, and can no otherwise be made clean, then as it is purified by faith.

Let all men therefore take knowledge of their natural condition, that they are of themselves abominable, and to every good work, reprobate, until they be borne again, and regenerate by the Spirit of God.

The third reproof is of such, as notwithstanding the necessity of the word to direct our actions, which without the light of it to shine in our hearts cannot please God, yet regard not the knowledge of it, but contemn both it, and the means that lead us the way unto it. This is an horrible sin to forsake our own salvation, and as it were to cut our own throats, or to cast our selves willfully into the midst of the seas. It is a grievous sin to be ignorant of the Law of God, not to know what he commandeth, or what he forbiddeth: but it is more fearful to despise knowledge offered, and so as it were to despise the Spirit of grace: what remaineth for such, but a fearful looking for of judgment and indignation, which shall devour the adversaries? Heb. 10, 27. Such can have no comfort or consolation in any of their actions. For as the eye is the light of the body, and directeth the rest of the members in all things they go about, or else the feet might carry them into some pit of destruction: so is the word of GOD our Lamp or Candle, whereby we see how to walk and direct our selves into the way of peace; we know what we ought to do, and from what to refrain. And as the body runneth violently into an heap of dangers where the eye is blind, and can perceive nothing, until it fall headlong into them: so is it with such as regard not the knowledge of the scriptures, but say unto GOD, as may appear by their practice, Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways, Job 21, 14. This world is as a wilderness full of Lions, Bears, Tigers, and other ravenous and venomous beasts; or as a sea standing out with rocks & replenished with quicksands. We can no sooner step out of doors, but we shall be assaulted one way or other, nay we our selves are temptations unto our selves. For rather then we should lack tempters, we tempt our selves, like unto a State, that wanting foreign enemies, falleth out within themselves, and by civil wars destroy one another. So is it with us, when we are free from open enemies, we become enemies to our selves. If then we want the guidance and governance of the word, we are in danger to be overcome, and to take the foil. Our Savior willeth us as we heard before, to search the Scriptures, because in them we think to have eternal life: and therefore without the knowledge of thē, we deceive our selves if we dream of eternal life. So in another place he maketh the ignorance of them, to be the cause of all evil and error in judgment, as Mark 12, verse 24. Are ye not therefore deceived, because ye know not the Scriptures?

[Object.] But some peradventure will say, it belongeth to the Ministers only to search them: it is their office to look into them.

I answer, [Answer.] it is a duty belonging unto all persons to know them. Christ exhorted the people to search them. It is required of all to have them dwell in them plentifully, Colossians 3.

If we would be preserved from error, we must know them: if we desire salvation, we must search them: if we would be able to resist the temptations of Satan, we must be armed with them. They are as the will and Testament of Christ, whereby he hath bequeathed unto us an heavenly inheritance, and a most rich possession, and therefore it behooveth us to read the will, to know how we hold it. Thou wilt object, [Object.] they are hard, and I am simple: they may lead me into errors, as many have fallen into strange opinions by reading of them. Art thou simple, thē thou art the rather bound to read them, for they were written, [Answer.] to give unto the simple sharpness of wit; and to the child knowledge and discretion. The whole Church is commanded this duty, both Jews & Gentiles; were there no simple men and women among them? Neither oughtest thou to be afraid to be led by them into error; for they were written to preserve thee from error, and to lead thee into all truth. It is the unstable that wrest them to their own destruction. Read them with humility, with reverence, and prayer. Be thou lowly in thine own eyes, and take heed of a proud spirit: be conversant in them with reverence, & learn to tremble at his word: crave the assistance of God's Spirit to guide thee, and to open thine eyes that thou mayest understand his secrets; and thou shalt not need to stand in fear of being carried into error. And touching the hardness of them, be not discouraged from the reading of them. Some things indeed are hard to be understood, but there is nothing hard in one place, but it is made easy in another, and it shall be made easy to us by diligent meditation in them.

Besides, all things that are necessary to salvation are plainly set down, that the people may understand them. It is the lying spirit of the devil in the false Prophets of Antichrist that crieth out, The Scriptures are hard and full of knots; the people may not read them. Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God or not, for many false Prophets are gone into the world, 1 John 4, verse 1. They are blind leaders of the blind: they play fast and loose with the people, as Juglers do with the simple, and cast a mist before their eyes, that they should not espy them. They lead them into error, and then take the light from them, whereby they might be convinced.

It is the great policy of that great Antichrist, and man of sin, not only to forbid the reading of our books, but the free use of God's book. Let that once have a free passage, and none is so simple, but he may soon discover a pack of devises, who are wise in their generation: and therefore they suffer none to read it but such as it pleaseth them. Separate some time to this purpose, and thou shalt quickly see that to be most true which I say unto thee.

If thou wilt say unto me, I cannot read the Scriptures, I was never brought up unto it.

Be it so; yet do not allege this to excuse thy ignorance, or to shift off from thee the knowledge of them; forasmuch as everyone must know the Scriptures. Recompence that want by much study and often meditation. Let not the love of the world thrust out of thy head & heart, the cogitation of better things. Many that cannot read, are more prompt and ready in the Scriptures, then such as have that gift. God will bless them that endeavor to know him and his word, and will one way or other supply their wants. Such as hunger & thirst after knowledge, shall be satisfied and replenished. Acknowledge this want mourn for it, and if it be possible (though thou be old) learn to read. It is never too late to begin to do well: the benefit will easily make amends for the time bestowed upon it. Few there are, but every year spend more time in vain, either in gross idleness, or in much sleep, or in vain company, or in unnecessary cares for the world, which might this way be better employed and redeemed. The mind is all in all, it is not any hardness in the matter it self that should discourage us. He that hath once determined to do it, hath overcome the difficulty of it which standeth in resolving and hath more then half attained unto it. But if we cannot or will not strive to come to this gift, we must know that ignorance shall excuse no person: and he that knoweth not his masters will cannot escape, he shall be beaten. If there be no knowledge of God in the Land, he hath a controversy against it, and will cause it to mourn: if it will not lament for their own ignorance, he will make them lament for the judgments that shall fall upon them, Hos. 4, 1, 2.

But we cannot plead ignorance through want of means, we have the means and are weary of them, as Israel was of Manna; we make account of it as a light meat, and are willfully blinded: we have the light among us, & yet shut our eyes, that we should not see.

[Use 4] Lastly, it is needful for us to be careful to take profit by reading the Scriptures, that so we may have direction in all our ways, and learn how to please GOD, and to abstain from all things that do displease him. It is not the bare having of the Scriptures with us in our houses, or a naked reading in them by our selves, without farther consideration, that will serve to direct us in all the actions of our life, but there is farther required of us an applying of them, & an edifying of our selves by them, that it may be seen how we profit in them. This duty hath many particular parts or branches belonging unto it.

First of all, we must have recourse unto God the Author of the Scriptures, he only is able to unlock them, and so to bring us into the secret chamber of his presence. We ought to pray unto him earnestly, that he would vouchsafe to teach us the way of his statutes, to give us sound understanding of his will, & to direct us in the paths of his commandments. We see this by the practice of the Prophet David, Psal. 119, who craveth oftentimes to have his eyes opened to behold the mysteries of his words, and the wondrous things of his law. Our eyes naturally are shut, and we cannot conceive them, which are spiritually discerned.

Secondly, we must keep such order in the reading of them, as may stand with our calling and state of life, and take all opportunity to do it. It were to be wished, that we would set apart some part of every day to be employed in this exercise, that so we might read over the whole Scriptures oftentimes: and if at any time we be hindered by necessary occasions, which happen to us without our searching of them, to redeem the time afterward, and so to recompense that which we have left undone. This is an holy restitution much pleasing unto God.

Thirdly, we must understand to what ends and uses the Scriptures were written. They were penned to teach, that we may learn the truth: to improve, that we may be kept from error: to correct, that we may be driven from vice: to instruct, that we may be settled in the way of well-doing: and to comfort, that in trouble we may be confirmed in patience & hope of an happy issue.

Fourthly, we are to remember, that the Scriptures contain matter, concerning all sorts of persons and things, which may be reduced to five heads.

First, touching religion and the right worshipping of God: they teach how to serve him, and what to believe touching God, and touching mankind: That he is one in essence, and three in persons. Touching our selves, that by creation we were made good, holy, and righteous. By our fall, we are become wretched by reason of sin, and not able to think one good thought, or to stir one foot forward to the kingdom of Heaven. By regeneration we are borne again, and made the sons of God by adoption, and by faith we lay hold on Christ, our wisdom, our sanctification, our righteousness, our redemption. Touching the Church, we are instructed by them, that it is the company of the faithful that have been from the beginning: we are led also by them to know the two Sacraments, and what to believe of the general judgment that shall be of the godly and ungodly.

Secondly, they inform us touching kingdoms and common-wealths, and touching the duties of Magistrates and Subjects, how the one ought to rule, and the other to obey: and neither the one nor the other do their duties for conscience, till the word inform them.

Thirdly, they handle matters touching families and household affairs, in which are the husband: and wife, parents and children, masters and servants: no duty required of them is omitted, but contained in them.

Fourthly, touching the private life of every particular person, how to behave our selves in wisdom and folly, in love and hatred, in sobriety and incontinency, touching mirth & sorrow, speech and silence, humility & pride, to embrace the one, and fly from the other.

Fifthly, touching the common life of all men, we learn in them how to lead our lives in every estate, whether we be rich or poor, whether we be high or low; we can be in no estate, but we shall find sufficient store of heavenly precepts and examples to teach us the way wherein we are to walk.

Lastly, we must have the doctrine of the Scriptures plentifully dwelling in us, not in the mouth, but seated in the heart: that we may be able to stand in the truth, to continue unto the end, to rise up being fallen. We are every hour subject to be tempted of the devil: his temptations are many and strong: he is an expert and experienced captain: he looketh where we are weakest: he is a spy that cometh to search and see the nakedness of our souls. And therefore we must be able to draw out the spiritual sword put into our hands upon every occasion, that we may put him to flight. This is the way to resist him: this is the way to overcome him, I am. 4. We have the example of our Lord Jesus Christ, the head of his Church, he said, It is written: he handled this sword at every temptation, to teach us to furnish our selves plentifully with the doctrine thereof, that so we may remember to apply the same to every present purpose.

17. And these were the sons of Levi, by their names: Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari.

18. And these are the names of the sons of Gershon, by their families: Libni, and Shimei.

19. And the sons of Kohath by their families: Amram, and Izehar, Hebron, and Vzziel.

20. And the sons of Merari by their families: Mahli, and Mushi: these are the families of the Levites, according to the house of their fathers.

Hitherto we have spoken of that numbering of the Levites which is general; the particular followeth, which is both propounded and concluded: the former beginning here, continueth to the end of the 37, verse: the latter is comprised in the 38, and 39, verses. This particular reckoning up of the Levites is performed, by setting down such sons or issue, as were begotten immediately of Levi himself: then such as descended of his sons: and lastly, such as proceeded of his sons sons. The sons of Levi were three in number, Gershon, Kohath, & Merari, Gen. 46, 11. These are described according to the number of their families: so that of Gershon, came two families, the Libnites, and the Shimeits. Of Kohath came four families, the Amramites, the Izeharites, the Hebronites, and the Uzzielites. Of Merari were spread two families, the Mahlites, and the Mushites.

In this division is laid down before us a description of the genealogy or generation of the Tribe of Levi, by their names and by their families: wherein is set down, both what children Levi had, and what were his children's children: insomuch that many did spring and spread themselves as branches out of that root. This we also find set down afterward, chap. 26, and in other places of the word of God: and yet it may seem unto some very unprofitable, and to minister little or no instruction at all to the Church of God. Besides, the Scripture speaking of Genealogies, doth oftentimes call them endless, and fruitless, and brand them with this note, to minister occasion of strife and contention, rather then of godly edifying, which is in love, 1 Tim. 1, 4, and Tit. 1, 4, and 3, 9. But we must know that the Apostle condemneth not all Genealogies, forasmuch as the Scriptures are full of them, and the Jews kept public and private records of their tribes and families, Numb. 1, 18. Nehem. 7, 62. This was observed until the desolation of the City and the Temple. Paul was able to prove himself of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew, of the Hebrews, by lineal descent, if any had doubted of it. The first book of the Chronicles is full of such genealogies; so is Ezra and Nehemiah, and few historical books of the Old Testament without them. Hence it is, that the Apostle joineth foolish Questions and Genealogies together: where he condemneth not the moving of every question, in handling the word, or conferring of it; for both Christ asked his Disciples many things, Mat. 16. and there are many questions godly and profitable, whereof we may enquire and reason, which breed sound knowledge, wholesome instruction, and fruitful edification to the hearers. He is marked out as with a note of folly, that rashly and headily believeth everything, Prov. 14, 15. And therefore the questions that are to be suppressed, he calleth foolish questions, that is, idle, superfluous, vain, and unnecessary, serving to no use or profit.

The same title, as a brand set upon the head of them, is to be stretched also to Genealogies, foolish genealogies must be stayed, such as are of no moment, such as serve to nourish vain glory, and serve not to the benefit of the faith of the Church. But such as the Scripture setteth down, are very profitable, sometimes to teach us the accomplishment of God's promises, sometimes to give light to other Scriptures, sometimes to show the continuance of the Church, from age to age, sometimes to discover the enemies of true religion which often drive it into a corner of the world, and sometimes to manifest the true Messiah, that the scepter departed not from Judah till his appearing. But to omit this, here we are to consider and to compare the curse of Jacob, with the blessings that we see descend upon this tribe. Simeon and Levi, instruments of cruelty in the destruction of the Sichemites, have an heavy curse laid upon them by their father, Gen. 49. Yet God raised out of the same these honorable families, and turned the curse into a blessing, as he promised to that tribe, for their zeal in destroying the idolaters. We learn from hence, that God many times chooseth his servants, as his instruments to bring worthy things to pass, even out of low and mean degrees. He chooseth weak means and unlikely in the eyes of the world, and maketh them his instruments to work his will.

This doth Hannah confess; she was contemned and reproached by her adversary, which caused her in the anguish and bitterness of her soul, to pray to the Lord: but having experience of his mercy toward her, she saith, The Lord maketh rich, and maketh poor: he bringeth low, and lifteth up: he raiseth up the poor out of the dust, & lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among Princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory. So he dealt with Joseph, he brought him out of prison, and lifted up his head above the Princes of Egypt, Gen. 41.40. Thus he speaketh to the Israelites, Deut. 7.7, 8. and putteth them in mind of their natural condition: The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people, (for ye were the fewest of all people) but because the Lord loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers, hath the Lord brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen, from the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt. The like doth the blessed Virgin confess, Luke 1.48. He hath regarded the low estate of his handmaiden: for behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed: for he that is mighty hath done to me great things, and holy is his Name. She was a poor despised handmaid in Israel, yet chosen to be the mother of Christ. The Apostles were many of them taken from base trades, & other from ignominious offices: some were fishermen, called as they were mending their nets: Matthew was one of the Publican's, which were contemned of the people of Israel; yet God made them master builders of his Church, and appointed them to lay the foundation, and so had the highest and chiefest place of honor and preferment, to be made planters of Churches throughout the whole world. God therefore useth when it pleaseth him, persons of inferior place and condition to effect great and mighty things.

And, why should it not be so? forasmuch as [Reason 1] all things are ruled and ordered by his providence, he disposeth of them in his wisdom, as seemeth good unto himself, for the pillars of the earth are the Lord's, and he hath set the world upon them, 1 Sam. 2.8. All the frame of heaven is whirled about the poles: this is the order that God hath set, and who is able to alter it? whatsoever things come to pass in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, are all the works of his hands, he setteth up, and pulleth down at his own appointment, and who shall be able to control them?

Secondly, in the choice of simple and untoward [Reason 2] means, such as have little or no force in them, his glory is most of all seen. Now, he will maintain his own glory, and will have it acknowledged and magnified of his creatures, and requireth that he which glorieth, should glory in him, as 1 Cor. 1.29. he will have no flesh glory in his presence, neither the rich man in his riches, nor the strong man in his strength, nor the wise man in his wisdom, but let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord. So then, he chooseth foolish things before the wise, & weak things to confound the mighty, and base things of the world, to bring to naught things that are, because he hath respect to the manifestation and setting forth of his own glory.

Thirdly, we are not to marvel that God [Reason 3] maketh such a choice of his instruments, which carnal men might account an evil and ungrounded choice; because he respecteth the heart, and not the outward appearance. When David the least, and so the most unlikely both in his fathers family, and in the eyes of the judgment of men, was anointed to be king, & chosen as he followed the Ewes great with young, to feed his people in Jacob, and his inheritance in Israel, the Lord said unto Samuel, Look not on the countenance of the eldest, nor on the height of his stature, because I have refused him: for the Lord seeth not as man seeth: for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart. Thus then we may conclude, that God raiseth up weak instruments to honor him, and employeth them to serve him in the works to which it pleaseth him to fit them.

Let us therefore make some uses of this [Use 1] Doctrine, which serve unto us for great profit. First of all, it ministereth great comfort to such as are poor, and of low degree: for albeit men contemn them, and disgrace them; albeit they are ready to tread them under their feet, and thrust them to the wall; albeit they be hissed at in the streets, and oppressed by the mighty, yet God vouchsafeth to respect them, and in great mercy to look upon them. This we see in our spiritual estate and condition. What are we but a mass of sin, the children of wrath and condemnation? yet God vouchsafeth to elect us, and call us by his grace to the knowledge of his truth from our natural life, led in the time of our ignorance. It was the mercy of God to call David from the sheepfolds, and from following the Ewes great with young, Psal. 78. But it was a greater mercy to call us from the greatest bondage and slavery that ever was, bound faster then with chains of iron, which giveth us no time to rest or breathe, or feed, or sleep, but setteth upon us continually day and night. This thralldom is worse then that of Egypt, it is endless, intolerable, deadly, and without intermission. What an honor and dignity then doth God do unto us, who were strangers from the life of God through the ignorance that is in us, to deliver us from this captivity, and to bring us into the glorious liberty of the sons of God? Our perdition is of our selves, Hos. 13.9. but our salvation is of the Lord, Revel. 7.10. He will not give his glory to any other: and therefore let not us ascribe it unto our selves, or to any creature, but magnify the goodness of the Creator, who is blessed for evermore. We are raised up from the greatest misery to the greatest glory, as the lowest ebb hath the highest tide; and therefore let us show all thankfulness and obedience unto him. Before the children of Israel entered into the land of promise, he gave them warning and a watchword, that they should not say in their hearts, nor speak it with their mouths, that it was for their own righteousness they were brought into Canaan: and shall we think, that we are delivered from the slavery of sin and Satan, and made the freemen of Jesus Christ, by our own deserts, and so give the glory of our salvation to our selves? Let this be far from us, even as far as he hath removed our transgressions from us. So then, here is matter of great comfort, that our sins are forgiven us, and though the remnants of them remain in us, yet they have received their deaths wound, and shall in the end utterly die in us. And in the mean season, while we bear about with us the body of this sin, the Lord calleth us spiritual, and esteemeth us according to his grace, not according to our corruption. If there be one spark of grace, and one drop of faith, as a grain of mustard seed, God acknowledgeth us to be his; he seeth none iniquity in Jacob, he beholdeth no transgression in Israel. He that is evil can see nothing in God's servants but evil; if sin be in them, Satan will charge them, that sin reigneth in them. It is otherwise with God, he judgeth not of us by the relics of sin, but by the beginning of grace. If we have the first fruits of the new man in us, the remnants of the old man shall not hurt us. Satan would persuade us we are wholly carnal, because we are in part unregenerate: but God receiveth us as his children, and accounteth us his Saints, because we are in part sanctified; so that we have hence exceeding comfort, that of such base slaves of all sin, he vouchsafeth to accept of us, passing by what we are by nature, and acknowledging us as we stand by faith.

Secondly, considering what instruments [Use 2] God maketh choice off, in his service, they y^t are rich in this world, ought not to despise the poor, neither yet the high those that are set in low places, who indeed are most subject to contempt. This the Apostle James inferreth, Chap. 2. Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world to be rich in faith, and heirs of his kingdom? but ye have despised the poor, &c. This is to cross the proceedings of God, and to set our selves against him, casting down those whom he lifteth up, and lifting up those whom he casteth down. This falleth out many ways: First, when they are afflicted & persecuted by the mighty men of the world. Our poor brethren before us had woeful and lamentable experience of this point, who suffered for the religion of Christ, for the defense of the Gospel, for the profession of their faith, and the testimony of a good conscience. This Christ foretold, Matth. 10.22. Thus the Apostles found it, and such as followed them, and believed their doctrine, had no better entertainment: for the world is always like it self, we shall never prove it to be any changeling. An enemy it was to the saving knowledge of the word, an enemy it is at this present, and an enemy it will be in the ages to come,

Secondly when the rich men of this world deal hardly and harshly with them, in the affairs of this life, wringing and wresting from them unconscionably, and deceitfully what they can. This is forbidden in the Law, Levite. 25.14. If thou sell ought unto thy neighbor, or buyest ought of thy neighbors hand, ye shall not oppress one another. And the Apostle in the Epistle to the Thessalonians, Let no man ouerreach or defraud his brother in any matter, because that the Lord is the avenger of all such.

Thirdly, when they waste and were out their bodies with toilsome labors unrewarded, as the Egyptians did deal with the Israelites: and as the Apostle James complaineth at large, Chap. 5. that the rich lived in pleasures on the earth, and fatted themselves as in a day of slaughter, and kept back the hire of the laborers by fraud that reaped their fields.

Fourthly, we must consider that the elect are not always eased of the burden of poverty, but it lieth heavy sometimes upon them, that God may try their patience, and others benevolence. God maketh them objects of our pity, and therefore he will not have all to be aloft. Our Savior teacheth, that the poor we must always have with us. The love and favor of God must not be measured by the deceitful rule of outward things. He maketh the poor oftentimes to be rich in faith, and heirs to a kingdom, while he sendeth the rich empty away.

Are we then in want? and do we stand in need of the things of this life? we must take up our cross willingly, and follow our master cheerfully; he saith, The Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath nowhere to lay his head. We are by Christ made heirs of glory, let us by faith wait for that inheritance, which shall abundantly supply all our wants.

Fifthly, let those that have this worlds good, look to themselves, that they be not high-minded, neither trust in uncertain riches, 1 Tim. 6. God can make them low when it pleaseth him, and therefore they are not to advance themselves above their brethren. He can lay their honor in the dust, and make all their glory vanish away, as the flower of the grass: and therefore let him that is rich, rejoice in that he is made low, 1 am. 1.10.

Lastly, let us not have the faith of Christ in respect of persons, neither esteem of the religion of Christ by outward things, as the greatest sort do. Who are judged (by such indeed as want judgment) to be in the best case, but such as flow in wealth and abound in riches? who are most admired, and accounted the only men of the world, and set before us as examples and presidents in all things to be followed, but such as have their portion in this life, whose bellies the Lord filleth with his hid treasures, and they leave the rest of their substance to their babes? To do as they do, to live as they live, to love as they love, is made as the star, by which all should sails and guide the ship. If they be irreligious, and no fear of God before their eyes, others take this as a good warrant to themselves to be contemnors of holy things also. If they think scorn to attend upon the ordinance of God, and to be conscionable hearers of his word, it were no good manners for the meaner sort to go before their betters, and to be more forward then they.

Thus are men become partial judges, when they account such as carry the greatest pomp and show, to be the only religious men, and patterns for other to follow: by which means such as are religious indeed, grow vile and contemptible. Hence it is, that the Apostle James saith, Chap. 2. My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons. The meaning is not, as if the higher places did, not pertain to the higher persons, and the chief rooms to the chiefest degrees among men; but that in matters of religion, we must not be carried away with a prejudicate opinion to cleave to those, and to their judgment that are mighty in the world, only because they are mighty; and to reject those and the truth which they profess, because they are poor and lowly in the eyes of the world.

The persons of men, that is, the outward qualities of their birth or honor, or riches, must not set a bias upon our judgment to sway us that way, to conclude that they are of a false religion that are poor in this world; and contrariwise, that their religion must of necessity be sound, because they are great, or honorable, or wealthy, or noble, or prosper in the earth. This is a deceitful rule, and yet it is the square whereby the greatest sort measure all things. If they see a multitude follow one course in matters of faith, and run by heaps and throngs all one way, they also for company thrust in themselves among them, and conclude, that this must needs be the best way, because the most walk in that broad and beaten path: forgetting the commandment of God in the Law, Thou shall not follow a multitude to do evil: and the counsel of Christ in the Gospel, The gate is wide, and the way broad that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat, Matth. 7.13. Wherefore we must learn, that multitude is no note of true religion, nor riches, nor prosperity, nor glory, nor outward blessings: forasmuch as these are common to the godly and ungodly, to the believers, and to the infidels; The word of God must be our rule in this life, which shall be our Judge in the life to come. This is no way partial, neither can it deceive any.

Lastly, seeing persons weak and contemptible [Use 3] in the world, are oftentimes highly regarded of God: it teacheth us to praise the Name of God for it, and to acknowledge it to be his gift, and to return him the glory, who out of the mouth of babes and sucklings ordaineth praise unto himself, Psal. 8.2. We see this in the song of Hannah, 1 Sam. 2.1. she prayed and praised the Lord, her heart was enlarged over her enemies, she rejoiced in his salvation. So in the song of the blessed Virgin, Luke 1. My soul magnifieth the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior, for he hath regarded the low estate of his handmaide, &c. In like manner Christ gave thanks to his Father, that had hid the mysteries of his kingdom from the wise and prudent of the world, and revealed them to babes, Matth. 11.25. Thus doth it belong as a special duty unto us, whensoever we see these works of God (as if we open our eyes, and will not be blinded, we may daily see them) to adore them, and to magnify his power, and to praise his Name.

This hath many particular branches. First, we must confess our selves miserable by nature, and no good thing in us to raise up our selves above others, being no way better then others. We cannot too far cast down our selves, nor pull down the pride of this flesh that is ready to lift up it self against his Maker. We are a lump of earth, and worse then the brute beasts▪ and the dust out of which we were taken. We are fallen from God, our excellency is gone.

Secondly, whatsoever we have, it is his gift, we have received it at his hands, it cometh down from above: and therefore let us not glory, as if we had not received it, 1 Cor. 4.7.

Thirdly, let us walk worthy of our calling, even of those mercies, which we have tasted, and acknowledge our selves to be unworthy, of them. Then we are indeed thankful unto him, when we are dutiful unto him.

Fourthly, let us be humble in our own eyes, and not boast of anything in our selves, or in our own merits, neither let us think our selves worthy to be regarded of him. This is the way to stop the course of his mercies, to boast of our own merits. Jacob did not so, he accounted himself less then all the mercies of God, and the truth which he had skewed unto his servant, Gen. 32.10. The Saints do all, and always, cast down themselves before him in true humility; whereas hypocrites are puffed up with the wind of their own conceits, and swell aloft like the Surges of the sea, as we see by the example of the Pharisee, Luk. 18.11. he gave thanks to God for fashion sake, but pride possessed his heart, and wrought in him the contempt of his brother, that was more righteous then he.

Fifthly, from hence we may assure our selves of greater mercies, and farther blessings. One mercy draweth on another, until they flock together on a heap. If we be thankful for lesser, we are assured of greater. They are as the first fruits that sanctify the whole. Paul having found by experience that God had oftentimes delivered him from present death, hath his confidence in him that he also will deliver him, 2 Cor. 1.10. This is as a sure staff to lean upon in all distress, to be assured that he is unchangeable, with whom is no shadow of turning; he is said to repent of the evil that he hath spoken that he would do, and not to do it, but he repenteth not of the good that he showeth to his servants, forasmuch as whom he loveth, he loveth them to the end.

Sixthly, let us keep a register of his blessings, and so settle them in our hearts, that we never forget them, but may thereby be provoked to set forth his praise. We cannot open our eyes in the day, nor think upon him in the night season, but we have innumerable testimonies of his love toward us. Let us not therefore be silent and hold our peace, but say to our own souls, with the Prophet, Psa. 103 1.2. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy Name; bless the Lord, O my soul, & forget not all his benefits. Give him therefore the glory in all things, and let us provoke others to praise him, and tell of his wondrous acts. It is a sweet smelling sacrifice that God delighteth in, he smelleth the savor of it a far off, and is well pleased with it. This duty ought to be the continual practice of our life, it should arise with us in the morning, and lie down with us in the evening. We have received much from God's good hand, shall we return nothing to him again like the barren earth that yieldeth no increase? The waters that by secret conduits, or conveyances do come to the sea, return openly into it again, so that all men see it and behold it, how the rivers run into the sea, Eccle. 1.7. So the graces of God's Spirit as the waters of life, which God doth secretly convey into the hearts of the godly, ought publicly to have their recourse unto him again, by praise and thanksgiving. There is no great Lord that bestoweth any possession or tenement upon his tenant, but he reserveth some rent, to acknowledge the service and homage he oweth. God hath bestowed much upon us, we are all his Copy-holders, we hold at the pleasure of our grand Lord: The rent that he hath reserved, is praise and thanksgiving: if we withhold this from him, and will not pay him, we have forfeited our estates, we have deserved to have all taken from us and seized into the Lord's hands again, from whom they came.

21 Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites, and the family of the Shimites: these are the families of the Gershonites.

22 Those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, even those that were numbered of them, were seven thousand and five hundred.

23 The families of the Gershonites shall pitch behind the Tabernacle Westward.

24 And the chief of the house of the father of the Gershonites shall be Eliasaph the son of Lael.

25 And the charge of the sons of Gershon, in the Tabernacle, of the Congregation, shall be the Tabernacle, and the tent, the covering thereof, and the hanging for the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

26 And the hangings of the Court, and the Curtain for the door of the Court, which is by the Tabernacle, and by the altar round about, and the cords of it, for all the service thereof.

We have seen already the numbering up of the sons of Levi in general: and then in particular such as come immediately of his sons, whose posterity are farther set forth unto us in this division, and afterward, according to the three chief and principal families. Of all observe in general thus much, touching the order, that there are five points set down by Moses; First, the families are numbered that came of them. Secondly, the particular number of the persons is described. Thirdly, their place of abode is limited and appointed. Fourthly, the chief ouerseer, or superintendent of the house is named. Fifthly, their office and charge is assigned to everyone, as it were a field in which they ought to labor, and as a garden in which they ought to plant.

The truth of these things shall farther be opened unto us in each of them, in the families of the Gershonites, and in the families of the Kohathites, and in the families of the Merarites. Touching the Gershonites, they are described unto us in these words, from the 21. verse, to the 27. The families descended of Gershon are two, the Libnites, and the Shimeites in the 21. The persons amount in the whole to seven thousand and five hundred, in the 22. their mansion was behind the Tabernacle Westward, in the 23. the chief captain of them was Eliasaph, the son of Lael, in the 24. Lastly, their order and office was to carry the covering and the hangings of the Tabernacle, in the 25. verse. Thus we see, that things were not shuffled and confounded together, but everyone of them knew their station. All things were not confusedly committed to all, but everyone had his peculiar office and charge, which was as it were the vineyard that they were to dress. We learn from hence, that everyone in the Church, both Minister and People, have their proper and peculiar charge different frō other. The Lord did by precept distinguish not only between the calling of the Levites and the people, but between Levite & Levite. For y^e Levites were either called Priests, or by the common name of Levites which were not Priests. The Priests were either the high Priest, as Aaron the father, and Eleazar his son after him, &c. or such as were under him over the rest, as Eliasaph, the ouerseer of the Gershonites, or Elizaphan the ouerseer of the Kohathites, or Zuriel of the Merarites. Their office was publicly to teach, to pray, to offer sacrifice, and to keep the vessels of the Sanctuary. The office of the other Levites was to minister and serve the Priests in all things belonging to the discharge of their necessary duties. Thus God allotted to everyone his several office to be as his standing place in the army, out of which he should not step forth one foot either to the right hand, or to the left. This appeareth most notably in the first book of the Chronicles, where David setteth a particular order among the families of this tribe, and sorteth out to everyone his special charge, both for the Priests & Levites, who should be singers, who should be porters, who should have the charge of the treasures, and who should be appointed officers and Judges. This appeareth more plainly in the New Testament, as, 1 Cor. 12.28.29. God hath set some in the Church, first Apostles secondly, Prophets; thirdly, teachers: after that miracles: then gifts of healings, helps in government, diversities of tongues. Are all Apostles? are all Prophets? are all teachers? &c. All have not one office; all have not one gift; but as he noteth in the beginning of that chapter, there are diversities of gifts, diversities of administrations, diversities of operations: and afterward, To one is given by the spirit, the word of wisdom, to another the word of knowledge by the same spirit, and to another the working of miracles, to another Prophecy, to another discerning of spirits, &c. This he showeth also expressly in the Epistle to the Romans, chap. 12.6. Seeing we have gifts that are diverse, according to the grace that is given unto us, whether we have Prophecy, let us Prophecy, &c. or Ministry, let us wait on our Ministering. &c. The Apostle Peter hath a general sentence tending to this purpose, As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God. Lastly, we read in the Epistle to the Ephesians, chap. 4.7.11. Unto everyone of us is given grace, according to the measure of the gift of Christ, who gave some to be Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Evangelists, some Pastors and Teachers. Thus God hath appointed, that everyone should have his proper function and office.

For as it is in the natural body, so is it in [Reason 1] the mystical body of Christ, which is the Church. But in our natural body every part hath his office, and knoweth his place, and dischargeth his duty without intermeddling, and encroaching upon the right of another. So should it be among the faithful, we have diverse and distinct gifts, for the good of the Church. This is the reason of comparison, used by the Apostle in sundry places, as Rom. 12.4, 5. As we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: so we being many, are one body in Christ, and everyone members one of another. Where he teacheth, y^t as we have in our natural body many members, so we have in one Church many members: as all members in the natural body have not one office, so all the members of the Church have not one office: as the many members in the natural body, have one head wherein they are, so many members in the mystical body, have one wherein they are: and last of all, as in the natural body, every member is another's, so in the Church every member is not his own only, but another's, and is set in the body for the benefit of the whole. The same similitude, to y^e same purpose, is used in the former Epistle to the Corinthians, chap. 12.12.14. As the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ, &c. for the body is not one member, but many. For if they were all one member, where were the body? but now there are many members, yet but one body: therefore also there must be many members in the body of the Church.

Again, such as transgress this rule, and [Reason 2] break those bounds that God hath limited unto them, cannot prosper. For as Christ our Savior maketh this a general rule as the ordinance of the eternal God, which none must dare to violate, Those things which God hath joined together, let none put asunder, Matth. 19.6. So is this also a certain rule to be observed, to the end of the world, That whatsoever things God hath separated, no man must presume to join and iumble together. For as the Lord knew this order of distinguishing offices to be very expedient and good for the Church: so he hath not ceased to punish the breakers, and to revenge the contemners of it most severely, of what calling and condition soever they were. This we see verified in Corah, Dathan, & Abiram; they presumed above their vocation, & would needs take upon thē the Priesthood, to burn incense before the Lord, contrary to the ordinance of God, & therefore went down into the pit, and died not the common death of other men: for the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up with all that they had, and fire came down from heaven, and consumed the residue. When Uzzah supported the Ark being ready to fall (for the oxen stumbled) the anger of the Lord was kindled against him, & he smote him, because he put his hand to the Ark, so that there he died before God. The like we might say, touching Azaria the king of Judah, who was stricken with an incurable and irrecoverable leprosy, because in the pride of his heart, he forgot the office of a Prince, and usurped the office of the Priest, and went into the Temple, to burn incense upon the Altar. All which direful and dreadful examples ought to teach us how acceptable this comely order of several callings is to God, both to breed in our hearts a care and endeavor to keep it, and a fear and terror to break it.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, Christ is as a wise master of the house, that fitteth to every man his standing: he is the Lord of the Church, he appointeth callings, and hath in himself fullness of grace, from which everyone receiveth his measure, John. 1.16. Col. 1.19. Hence it is that he is compared to a great Prince, who, going into a strange country, called his servants, and delivered them his goods, to one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one, to every man after his own ability, and straightway went from home. As we have wisdom, skil, knowledge, and experience given unto us to deal, so God dealeth with every man. A Captain in war, is careful to set everyone in his proper place, that he may know his Captain, his colors, his standard, his march: out of his standing he dareth not to remove, that he may please him that hath chosen him to be a soldier. Christ is the General of his Church; the faithful are his soldiers: all their life is a continual warfare, which costeth them great pains and much sweating, & sometimes they must resist unto blood, striving against sin. As then soldiers in war have and hold everyone his standing place in the sight of their captain: so every Christian should keep his several calling in the presence of the Lord of life, who hath in great mercy and wonderful wisdom appointed them thereunto.

[Use 1] Now the uses remain to be opened & expressed for our edification. And first of all, it teacheth that distinct callings in the Church and commonwealth are the ordinance of God and his appointment, not the inventions and devises of men. The Apostle saith, He gave some to be Apostles, and some Prophets, and some Evangelists, and some Pastors and Teachers: and elsewhere he addeth, Are all Apostles? are all Prophets? are all Teachers? are all workers of miracles? have all the gift of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret? The like he speaketh of the private families, and of the duties that belong to everyone therein, both to husbands and wives▪ to masters and servants: to parents and children. As then God hath distributed to every man, as the Lord hath called everyone, so let him walk. This is ordained to be observed in all Churches. We shall never learn to perform our duties to God, and to each other, except we be persuaded and resolved in this point. The husband will be ready to forgo his authority, and the wife will presume to step up into the place of her husband. The child will behave himself proudly against the ancient, and the base against the honorable. We shall see folly set in great dignity, and the rich sit in low place: it will not be strange to behold servants aloft upon horses, and Princes walking as servants upon the earth. Hath God placed us in the calling of a servant, and set masters over us? We ought to learn & know whence this is, and to consider from whom it came. It is the Lord's doing, who can abide no disorder and confusion, but will have some inferiors, and some superiors, according to his own law, Honor thy father and thy mother. This doctrine serveth to establish that commandment, and to make it a perpetual ordinance to remain forever. God hath not made all men excellent alike, he hath not qualified them alike, but hath given more to one, then to another, and would have one to receive profit from another. And herein doth his infinite wisdom wonderfully appear, and diversely show it self. God is in himself most excellent, worthy of all honor and reverence, and having all things under his feet, he would have a pattern of that excellency and subjection imprinted in his creatures. In the Angels he hath set a difference, and made degrees and orders among them, one, an Archangel; other, principalities; other, thrones: other, dominions: some are called, Seraphims; other, Cherubims: and therefore there is a distinction between them, as he hath made every star to differ from another in glory, 1. Cor. 15.41. He created man to rule over the fowls of the air, over the beasts of the earth, and over the fishes in the sea. The Apostle teacheth that in a great house are diversity of vessels, some to honor, and some to dishonor. There is no man great, but he hath his greatness from him that is the greatest. There is no man made low, but he must acknowledge that the Lord hath set him there. The servant must know that God hath put him in that service, and not seek to break the bonds wherewith he is tied: but thereby receive encouragement in the performance of such duties as lie upon him.

[Use 2] Secondly, this serveth to reprove sundry errors and abuses of such as transgress against the truth of this doctrine. And first hereby falleth to the ground, the heresy and impiety of the Anabaptists, who utterly evert all orders and ordinances that God hath established both in the Church and commonwealth, and instead thereof bring in all confusions and tumults into the world. For, the end of Magistracy is not wrongful usurpation over others, tyranny and oppression of mankind, as Nimrod the mighty hunter before the Lord, grew thus to be great; but that we should lead a peaceable and quiet life in all godliness and honesty, 1 Tim. 2.2. They then that abolish Magistracy, overturn peace, concord, honesty, and piety: inasmuch as the Magistrate is the preserver and maintainer of all these, and when there is no king in Israel, every man will presume to do what he list, and who shall control him? Hence it is, that all Christians are oftentimes called upon to perform obedience to the civil Magistrate & the higher power, both to the king, as to him that is supreme; and unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him, for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well. We must therefore detest those Libertines, who hold that Christians need no Magistrates, but that every man should be a law unto himself, and not be controlled by any other, how wretchedly soever he live, how unjustly soever he deal, how profanely soever he walk. Nevertheless, though these be most mad and monstrous opinions, yet these monsters will not seem to be mad without reason, as we have declared elsewhere in sundry places. First, they say all Christians are the Lord's freemen, and therefore must not be brought under the subjection of any, 1 Cor. 7.22, 23. I answer, liberty is twofold, outward and inward, or bodily and spiritual. For servants may be freemen, and freemen may be servants. Civil freedom is a right or power resting in the person to do according to his own purpose and pleasure, without being forbidden or hindered and interrupted by any other. Contrariwise, servitude or bondage is a depriving of one from this right, whereby he is bound to live according to the discretion of another, and to do as he is enjoined and appointed by another, so that he cannot live as he list. There is besides this, another kind of freedom & bondage, which is wholly spiritual. This is a freedom of the faithful, from the wrath of God, from the power of Satan, from the dominion of sin, from the curse of the Law, from the kingdom of darkness, from the terrors of eternal death, as also from the burden of ceremonies, and the bondage of human traditions; obtained to us & purchased for us through Christ Jesus. This is called Christian liberty, the freedom of the spirit, the freedom of the Lord, and of Christ, and such like. Now, there is also a Christian servitude, not contrary to this freedom; or opposed against it, but set under it and well agreeing unto it; which is an obligation whereby we are tied to serve God in holiness and righteousness. On the other side, the bondage that is contrary to this freedom, & bondage of the spirit, is, the slavery and captivity under sin and Satan, and therefore called the bondage of the flesh, of sin, and of unrighteousness. This servitude is damnable, and more to be shunned and eschewed, then to be taken captive of tyrants, and to be holden of them in a deep dungeon, or in a close prison, or in chains of iron. From this it is, that the Scripture dissuadeth and discourageth us, because the end of it is death. Some of the Philosophers of the strictest sect, maintained this assertion and opinion, that Only the wise are free, and that all fools are slaves. This hath been accounted an hard saying, and a strange position: but it is most true in the Church of God. For such as know God, and believe in Jesus Christ his son, are truly wise, and truly free; free I mean from sin and death, even the freemen of God and of Christ, according to that saying in the Evangelist John, If the Son shall make you free, then ye shall be free indeed; whereas all infidels and wicked ones, are fools, and servants of the flesh, yea bond servants of sin and death. This distinction between freedom of the body, & of the conscience being retained, will shut the mouths of all those enemies that reason against Magistracy under this color, because we are y^e Lord's freemen: Forasmuch as we have shown, how far we are free, & how far we are not free; what freedom God hath given, and what he hath not given.

Secondly, [Object.] they pretend that the just need no laws to guide them, or restrain them, but are a law unto themselves. The Apostle teacheth, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawles & disobedient, for the ungodly, and for sinners, for the unholy and profane, &c. I answer, [Answer.] this sauoreth rankly of the Nouatian heresy: for no man is wholly or perfectly just as these suppose, but they leave many good things undone, and they do many evil things: so that in many things we sin all, & therefore we stand in need of the law to admonish us, to teach us, to reprove us, to threaten us, yea, to curse us and condemn us, and so to urge us to that which is good. For who is so righteous & reformed, that he needeth not the law to be a spurr unto him, to be clapped in his sides to help him? or who runneth so swiftly that he needeth not some encouragement to amend his pace? And if the law of God were not made against thē, yet it is for them & their benefit. And if they should commit no evil in all their life; yet they might suffer much wrong & injury from y^e hands of others, wanting the defense of the Law to protect them.

So then, the Law in some respect was given to the just man, and in some respect it was not. So far as he is regenerate by the Spirit of God, he obeyeth the will of God cheerfully, and willingly, and so needeth not the Law: but so far as he is in part unregenerate and sinneth daily, he standeth in great need of it. The Apostle hath to do with false prophets, which maintained and taught that the Law was necessary, and sought justification by it. This he reproveth and rejecteth in two respects, First touching justification, which we cannot attain by the law, but must seek it in Christ. Secondly, touching the rigor of the law, and the commination annexed unto it, which serveth to terrify the ungodly.

[Objection 3] Thirdly, they say they need no protector, but the Lord: he it is that keepeth Israel, that neither slumbereth nor sleepeth. He is our buckler and shield, that we want not the help of the Magistrate to bear us out. I answer, The protection of the Law, is the protection of the Lord, forasmuch as it is his ordinance: as when the Laws of men protect us, so that we have benefit by them, it is the Magistrates protection. True it is, God hath promised that he will not leave us, nor forsake us, nor suffer an hair to fall from our heads without his providence; yet we must not separate his providence and the means whereby it is executed, one from another, whereof this is one means. The Magistrate is nothing else but the Minister of God for our good, who sitteth in his seat, and executeth his judgment; so that they are not contrary one to another, the one being set under the other.

[Objection 4] Lastly, the badge of Christians is love, which covereth a multitude of sins, and never seeketh to revenge or resist evil by carrying of tales, and complaining of others before Magistrates. I answer, [Answer.] It is true, love bringeth a cloak to cover all things that ought to be concealed, it hopeth all things, it believeth all things, 1 Cor. 13.7. It is not ready to believe an evil report flying abroad from one talebearer and whisperer to another: it is ready to interpret doubtful matters in the better part: it is ready to keep secret the offense of our neighbor, if by private admonition he may be won: it will not relate bare words against the sense and meaning of his brother. True it is also, that Christians must suffer, not offer, and rather bear two blows, then give one; which is the meaning of Christ's words, Mat 5.39. commanding not to resist evil: and charging that whosoever shall smite us on the right cheek, we turn to him the other also. But notwithstanding all these things, we may lawfully defend our selves by the law, though we do not offend others against the Law. The word therefore forbiddeth not the use of the Law, but teacheth us how to use it aright. And when we use the help of the Magistrate, & call upon him to do justice upon our adversaries, it is no unlawful, or private revenge, which only is forbidden: but to go to the ordinance that God hath appointed, that is, to the Magistrate, who is the Vicegerent of God or his Lieutenant, to take vengeance on evil doers, Rom. 13.4. 1 Pet. 2.14.

Secondly, it reproveth all such as think all callings to have their ground out of the ground, and to fetch their foundation from earthly men out of the earth, by chance or fortune, and never have so much as any thought arising in their hearts, whence their calling should come: whereas we must set this down as a rule, That the Lord himself is the author of every lawful calling; the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 7. As God hath called every man, so let him walk. We are therefore in our calling by the appointment of God, as the soldier is in the Camp, by the assignment of his Captain, and not by the bare will & pleasure of men themselves.

Thirdly, it convinceth them of sin, that live in no warrantable calling. Every man must live in some lawful calling, wherein he is to exercise and occupy himself. Adam was employed in a calling in the Garden of Eden. Cain was a tiller of the ground: Abel was a shepherd: Noah an husbandman. All the Patriarchs, brought up their sons and daughters frugally to labor, none was allowed and permitted to be idle. The Law is general, Gen. 3.19. In the sweat of thy brows, shalt thou eat bread, till thou return to the ground. Such then are condemned as live in idleness, all Rogues & Vagabonds, that run up and down among us, cozeners, shifters, cheaters, carders, dicers, such as live by maintaining houses of gaming, such as live by playing, and by delighting to follow those corrupt courses, which are against the word, and have no print or footstep out of it. But is it not lawful to use recreation? I answer, it is in it self a thing indifferent. Indifferent things must be used without offense. They should have this end to fit us to better things. No recreation must be made a vocation, or an occupation, for then it ceaseth to be recreation, and changeth his nature. It must not be used to hinder us in our estates, much less to our undoing or decaying: for that argueth great unsteadiness of affections, and want of discretion, that cannot bridle themselves in such trifles. If such as pretend the use of recreation for the abuse of these things, were entreated to give away their gains and winnings to the poor, and to bestow them upon good and charitable uses, as relieving of the needy, redeeming of Captives, raising up such as are in debt and decay, maintaining of learning, establishing of the Ministry, and doing good to widows, strangers, and fatherless children, it could not be obtained at their hands by any means: which argueth that it is another thing that possesseth the heart, which they respect and aim at, and more then a naked recreation. If there were a law made to bind all such as play at any games, to give but half of their winnings to the poor, I think few or none would approve of it, or use any pastimes at all. As then all lawful and honest callings are of God, so are all unlawful of the devil, he is the master teacher of them.

Fourthly, it convinceth all such as are not content with that place wherein God hath set them, but are disturbed and disquieted in mind, through the troubles that arise from thence; as there is no calling but hath some crosses accompanying it, and attending upon it.

The common calling of a Christian, is not without his crosses; whosoever will be the Disciple of Christ, must take up his cross and follow him. The Prophets and holy men of God, have suffered many injuries and reproaches.

As then the former sort that live out of a lawful calling, are as members in the body that are out of joint, & gone out of the place wherein they ought to be: so these that are carried away with discontentment of their own, and so break into other men's callings, are like beasts that leap over other men's hedges, and eat up their pasture, and are not content to go into such places as are appointed for them. We are ready to cry out against brute beasts and unreasonable creatures, that will not tarry in the pastures fitted unto them; whereas oftentimes the owners of them are more unruly and vnpatient, that bear the image of God, and profess the Name of Jesus Christ, and therefore ought to learn contentation in all estates. Such hath been the weakness of many, that they have not been able to bear and brook the injuries and indignities that have been offered unto them, & thereupon have been ready to forsake their places, and to leave their callings.

Hence it is, that Christ willeth his Disciples to possess their souls with patience, Lu. 21: and Paul chargeth the Philippians, to let their patient and equal minds be known to all men. But of this virtue of contentation, we have spoken at large before.

Fifthly, it reproveth such as contemning their own callings as vile and base, become male-content, and think better of themselves and their own gifts then there is just cause, and better then they would indeed, if they rightly and truly knew themselves. Such are all ambitious and aspiring spirits, that love to be aloft, and scorn to be below: that seek for themselves an higher place, and a better estate then God hath allotted unto them, as if the bramble should seek to be promoted over the rest of the trees.

If our first parents, through the temptation and instigation of Satan, grew discontent with that estate wherein they were created, & sought to be as God's, knowing good & evil, Gen. 3, verse 5: no marvel if their posterity draw this corruption from them, as the child that sucketh the breast of his mother.

Absalom through his high mind, was moved to fawn upon the people, and to seek his fathers kingdom and life also, judging basely of his present estate, and climbing up to an higher. What caused the Scribes and Pharisees to contemn and disdain Christ and his Disciples, but this, they loved the chief places at feasts, and desired the highest seats in the assemblies, and looked to be greeted and saluted by men, Rabbi, Rabbi?

What was the cause that Diotrephes would not receive John, and the other faithful Ministers of the word, but did prattle with malicious words against them, neither would he himself receive them, nor suffer others to entertain the brethren? He loved to have the preeminence in the Church. Loe here the horrible plague, and as it were the rank poison of pride, vainglory, and ambition! These are the causes of all confusion and disorder. These weeds must be pulled out of our hearts by the contrary graces, if we would have any wholesome herbs grow therein. We have many sharp tools lent us, & put into our hands, if we list to set them on work to grub them up by the roots.

First, we must consider the state of our bodies what it is. We are but dust and ashes, and to dust we must return, Gen. 3. What a vain and foolish thing is it to think so highly of our selves, that were raised out of the earth, & do carry about us the matter of our mortality? If we had come down from heaven, and had our beginning above the Clouds, we should have had wherein to glory: but being all of us frail and mortal creatures, that are here today, and lie in the dust tomorrow, like the grass of the field, which flourisheth for a time, and by and by withereth away: what vanity hath possessed our hearts, that earth & ashes should wax proud? Our life standeth wholly in uncertainty; it is appointed to all men, once to die, and after death cometh judgment, Heb. 9, 27. Neither do we know at what hour the Lord will come, Math. 24, 42. Why then should we soar so high, seeing we must lie so low? Why should we say in our hearts, I will ascend into heaven, seeing our pomp shall be brought down to the grave, and the worms must cover us?

Secondly, we are altogether set upon sin, and bring forth the bitter fruits of our corruption, in regard whereof we are more wretched then other creatures. They sin not against God, they provoke him not to anger, but keep their original condition wherein they were created: but we miserable sinners are turned out of the right way, and become abominable; so that there is none that doth good, no not one, Rom. chapt. 3, verse 12. If then we will glory of our selves, or anything in our selves, we must glory in our shame, having nothing of our own, but sin and iniquity.

Thirdly, we are not able of our selves so much as to think one good thought, neither are we sufficiently furnished to do the least and smallest duty that God requireth of us: we have the spawn and seed of all sin in our nature. We are ready to fall into the most horrible sins, except God sustain us, and hold up our heads, and strengthen our weak knees. We cannot set forward one foot toward the kingdom of heaven. It is as impossible for us to do any good, as for a dead carcass to fly. We are as poor miserable wretches, that are dumb, and cannot speak: blind, and cannot see: deaf, and cannot hear. The Prophet acknowledgeth that he is a man of unclean lips, and another confesseth, he could not speak: our ears also are stopped, so that we cannot hear the voice of God, that we might live: our eyes are closed up so that seeing, we see not, but grope as blind men in the darkness. The light shined in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it no, John. 1.5. Men naturally take themselves to be sharp eyed, and quick sighted, but because they say, We see, therefore their sin remaineth: because the carnal mind is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be, Rom. 8.7.

Fourthly, whatsoever gifts are bestowed upon us, we must think meanly and humbly of our selves and of them. The Apostle willeth us to decke our selves with lowliness of mind, and that each esteem other better then themselves. We know that our best gifts are stained with many blemishes: we feel our own corruptions, more then the corruptions of other men, so that God's grace, and our nature are joined together in one subject. We are not therefore to despise other men, or dwell in the contemplation of their imperfections: but be always working upon our selves, and considering our own unworthiness, that so we may more and more mortify the deeds of the flesh, and grow in the graces of God's Spirit.

Fifthly, let us set before us, the example of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ: we must be ready to learn of him the lesson that he offereth to teach us, by word & example. Hence it is, that he calleth all to him, that are weak and weary, and saith, Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls, Matth. 11.29. He disdained not to wash the feet of his disciples, to teach them humility, not only by doctrine, but by practice. He is a perfect pattern, as of all other virtues, so also of this: and therefore the Apostle setteth him before us, for our imitation, Phil. 2.5, 6. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus, who being in the form of God, thought it no robbery to be equal with God, &c. He made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of man. When the disciples began to contend for place of superiority, so that a strife arose among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest, he propoundeth unto them his manner of living, and conversation, and thereby dissuadeth them from ambition, Luke 22.27. Whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? but I am among you as he that serveth. The whole life of Christ, even from the first moment of his conception, unto the last period of his assumption and ascension from the earth, do preach unto us, as with a lively voice, his wonderful humiliation, that he made himself as a worm of the earth, who was equal in glory with his Father. If this example of him that is the author and finisher of our faith, will not move us to true humility, nothing in the world will move us.

Lastly, pride is the preparation of us unto a fall, and the ready way that leadeth to destruction. The proud man that climbeth aloft, worketh his own overthrow and confusion: and the higher we ascend, the greater is our down-fall. Solomon in the book of his Proverbs, beateth much upon this point, as Chap. 11.2. When pride cometh, then cometh shame: but with the lowly is wisdom: and Chap. 16.18. Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall: & chap. 18.12. Before destruction the heart of man is haughty, and before honor is humility. This may be farther confirmed unto us by three famous and memorable examples recorded in the Scriptures, to wit, Nebuchadnezzar, Haman, and Herod. The first, while he was boasting of great Babylon, which he had built for the chamber of the Empire, by the might of his power, and for the honor of his majesty, was driven from the company of men, and had his habitation with the beasts of the field, and did eat grass as oxen.

The second, to wit, proud Haman, swollen with the conceit of his own greatness, while he thought to be clad in royal apparel which the king used to wear, to be mounted on horseback that the king rideth upon, and to have the crown royal that he weareth to be set upon his head, was driven to play the lacky on foot, and to dance attendance as a Page, and not long after fell from the highest top and tower of honor, to the lowest degree of shame and reproach.

The third and last example is of Herod, who being puffed up with the Syren songs of Sycophants and Flatterers, thought himself worthy to take upon him the honor of God: but immediately the Angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory, and he was eaten up of worms. Behold here, how the greatest sort of men are wonderfully deceived in their own imaginations, deeming pride as a stirrup to mount up into the saddle of honor, whereas it is a step to bring them-down, and a means to make them fall into shame and confusion.

Lastly, it reproveth such as envy at the better and higher callings of others. These are even ready to die & consume away, when they see others placed in greater places, and adorned with greater gifts than themselves. This is a common sickness and sin, and the cause of many evils that swarm in Church & common-wealth. When Joshua heard the Elders in the host to prophesy, he envied them for Moses sake. The like we see in John's disciples when they heard of Christ's glory and fame increasing more & more, they feared it would turn to the diminishing of the credit and estimation of their master. The remedies, to prevent this mischief before it come, or to pull it up when it hath taken hold of us, are many. First, let us acquaint our hearts, to rejoice at the good that doth befall them, and to be glad when anything befalleth them for the comfort of their souls or bodies, as when one member is had in honor, all the rest are cheered and refreshed by it. Secondly, we are to consider that all places of preferment come from God, as the Prophet teacheth: Promotion cometh neither from the East, nor from the West, nor from the South: but God is the Judge, he putteth down one, and setteth up another. Thirdly, we must all of us make this account of our gifts, y^t they are bestowed for the common good, and not only for the private benefit of such as possess them: so that the eye cannot say to the hand, nor the head that is highest to the foot that is lowest, I have no need of thee, without the destruction of the whole body. Fourthly, the fewer our gifts, and the lower our places, and the smaller our callings are, the lesser & lighter account we are to make; whereas such as have the greatest charges have the greatest account to make, according to the rule of Christ: Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required: and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more.

The higher therefore a man is exalted, the more is he bound to God, and to them over whom he is set, and to those among whom he liveth; so that there is no gift, no honor, no calling without his burden and account. For as the stars have light▪ but for man's use: so we have gifts, but for others benefit. Lastly this consideration (if there were no other) is sufficient to correct all pride and ambition in us, to wit, to examine our own ability, and we shall find, that there cannot be so small a charge committed unto us, but the same is able to make our shoulders shrink and crack, yea to bow and break, if we do our duties as we ought to do. For our infirmities are so great, and our strength so little, that whosoever sifteth himself thoroughly, and trieth his own gifts without hypocrisy and flattery, shall find that he is able to do as good almost as nothing at all. If we think upon these things, it will be as a bridle to restrain us from soaring and climbing so high, and a forcible means to breed in us contentation in our places whatsoever they be, whether high or low, whether great or little.

Thirdly, it is a comfortable thing to a man's [Use 3] conscience, in life and death, in prosperity and adversity, to remember that we have thus served God, & fulfilled the callings with a good conscience that he hath laid upon us. The faithful servant, that hath given to his fellow servants their portion of meat in due season, shall be most happy, and be made ruler over all his goods. He that occupied his masters talents, and gained by them, heard this comfortable voice, Well done good and faithful servants, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord. Every calling fitted unto us, is as a field given us to till. We may praise and commend the greater farms, but it is better to husband the lesser, forasmuch as our eye may more easily oversee it, and our loss shall be the less if we neglect it. We shall find enough to do in the manuring of a little ground, if we will keep all things in a right order. So it is, much more, in those places wherein God hath set us: the highest calling, deserveth greatest commendation, howbeit, it draweth with it the greatest duties, it requireth the greatest gifts, and bringeth the greatest account. Wherefore the lesser our calling is, the better it may be employed, and the more easily it may be dispatched. If we look into the duties of the lowest callings, we shall see they require great labor, diligence, care, and faithfulness. The greater our employment of those gifts hath been which we have received, the more shall our comfort be, when we must go the way of all flesh. We see this in the Apostle Paul, 2 Tim. 4.7.8. who being in a manner at the point of death, found great joy of heart in the remembrance of this, that he had endeavored with a good conscience toward God and man, to walk in his calling: I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand; I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that that day, &c. Thus it shall be with us, if we walk in his steppes: if we be faithful in our places, we shall find the same comfort in our death and departure out of this world, and say with joy of heart, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, Luke 2. The contrary practice will be most fearful and terrible unto us. He that is a wicked man and an unprofitable servant and slothful, that hideth his talent in the earth, or smiteth his fellow servants, and beginneth to eat and drink, and to be drunken, persuading himself that his master delayeth his coming, shall have his talent taken from him, and be cast into utter darkness, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

If then we would have this comfort to belong unto us, and this threatening to be put far from us, we must be careful to perform the duties both of our general and special callings. If we perform the general & common duties of Christianity, and yet fail in the particular parts of our callings, we shall want this joy of heart, which we desire to feel in our selves. Everyone of us hath a double calling: and we must show our selves to be the servants of God, not only in doing general duties, as in coming to Church, in hearing the word, in receiving the Sacraments, in following peace, and walking in righteousness; but also by employing our selves, in our particular vocations, as in being a Magistrate, or Minister, or householder, or subject, or servant, or child, or Artificer, or husband, or husbandman, and such like: that so we may please God by bearing our selves in them with good conscience, and thereby receive occasion to rejoice before him. There can be no comfort unto them, that they belong to God in Jesus Christ, that do follow the general, and fail in their particular calling. The Minister that liveth in all common duties, unblameable in life, devout in prayer, fervent in love, careful in the fruits of righteousness, cannot comfort himself, if he be a dumb dog, and an idle shepherd, not able to guide the people of God, and to feed them with the wholesome word of life: Forasmuch as he is an evil Minister, and a fearful woe pertaineth unto him, 1 Cor. 9.17. The governor of a family, that regardeth not the education of his children in the fear and information of the Lord, and to provide necessary things for them, (so far as God shall enable him) with a good conscience, is a wicked parent, howsoever he seem otherwise never so devout and religious. What we are in truth, is better discerned by our carriage at home, then abroad: in our private families, then in the company of others. Many are religious, because the company is so, and because they are present with those that do affect it. But we must not be esteemed & judged off, by one brunt or pang, which may deceive; our heart shall better be made known by our ordinary demeaning of our selves, among those with whom we have our callings. It was a notable testimony of true piety▪ & a religious heart in David, when he professed that he would walk within his house with a perfect heart, Psal. 101.2. Every hypocrite will talk of religion, when others do so, but we must make it our talk and communication within our houses, reforming them according to the ordinance of God, and instructing them that live under our roof in the word of God.

Lastly, it is our duty, as we have received [Use 4] a proper and peculiar calling, so to walk in the particular duties of our several callings, whereunto we are called, that so we may serve him that hath set us in them, and receive occasion to rejoice before him. As he hath called us, so let us walk, whether we be Ministers or people, husbands or wives, in Church or Common-wealth. This is the general rule often remembered by the Apostle, 1 Cor. 7.20, 24. Let every man abide in the same vocation, wherein he was called, and a little after, Let every man wherein he was called, therein abide with God. Let us not stretch our selves beyond the bounds of our calling. If the hand through envy of the greater gifts of the eyes, would needs take upon it to see, and by seeing to direct the body: or if the eye, not contenting it self to see for the whole, would seek to speak and utter a voice, as the tongue: if the head would attempt to walk and take up the office of the feet: or if the left hand having the same gift with the right, would malign it, because it is more apt, strong, ready, quick, and able to execute the function belonging unto it; who would not complain of this confusion, as most unnatural and monstrous, threatening the ruin of the whole body? This duty hath many branches. First, it teacheth, that everyone ought to have a proper and personal calling, wherein he is to walk diligently, carefully, and painfully, whether he be high or low, rich or poor, bond or free, all without exception, must have a particular vocation of his own. Christ is called in the Gospel the Carpenter, Mar. 6.3. Moses kept his fathers sheep, Exo. 3.1. David followed the Ewes great with young. Everyone must labor, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth.

Secondly, it is very comfortable to us to be busied in them: we must look for a blessing upon us and them, while we continue in them. God appeared to Moses in a slame of fire out of the middes of a bush, while he kept the flock of Jethro his father in Law. David was chosen and taken from the sheepfolds to feed the people of God. The Lord took Amos as he followed the flock, and said unto him, Go, Prophecy unto my people Israel. While the shepherds were attending their flocks by night, and abiding in the fields, an Angel of the Lord brought them tidings of great joy which should be to all people, that to them was borne that day in the City of David, a Savior which is Christ the Lord, Luke 2.10, 11. The like we might say of Jacob, while he was faithful in his calling, the Lord appeared unto him. He chose his Apostles as they were busy in their callings and painful in them: Peter and Andrew, as they were casting a net into the sea: James & John his brother, as they were mending their nets, for they were fishers: Matthew the Publican, as he sate at the receipt of custom: he saith unto him, follow me; who arose immediately & followed him, Mat. 9. While we walk in our callings, we may look for a blessing, but when once we go from them, and either forsake our calling, or busy our selves in other men's callings, we can expect no blessing at his hands; for when we leave them, he leaveth us: when we return to them, he returneth to us.

Thirdly, everyone must judge and esteem his particular calling to be the best and fittest for him. The Apostle confirmeth this by his own practice and example, Phil. 4, 12. I have learned in whatsoever estate I am, therewith to be content. This will arm us against all discontentment and murmuring against God, and make us quietly to keep our own standing. When Absalom was not content with the place of a Subject, and to be accounted the Kings son, but said, O that I were Judge among you, 2 Sam. 15, 4. then he sought his fathers kingdom. When the sons of Zebede contented not themselves with the calling of Disciples, but were enflamed with the thirst of honor, and desire of dignity, to be the greatest in the kingdom of Christ, then arose envy and heart-burning among them. It is altogether impossible, that we should rest well pleased with our callings and conditions, and not climb aloft above the places wherein we are set, except we set down this as our rest, that our calling, such as God hath appointed, is the fittest and meetest for us.

Lastly, everyone is bound to glorify God in his calling, though it be never so mean or base. Wives are charged to be obedient to their own husband, that the word of God be not blasphemed, Tit. 2, 5, 10. Servants are commanded to please their masters in all things, that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things, Tit. 2, 10. That the Name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed, 1 Tim. 6, 1. This ought to be propounded unto us, and set before our eyes, to make it the end of all our actions, that whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, we may do all to the glory of God, 1 Cor. 10. It is not the highness or lowness, the greatness or meanness of our calling, that God so much respecteth, as the sincerity of the heart of him that walketh in his calling. If it be not sound, all our actions are corrupt. We must not think, that only men of high callings are to give glory unto God, it is a common duty required of all: and woe unto us, if we do it not. The heavens declare the glory of GOD, much more ought man, endued with reason and understanding.

27. And of Kohath was the family of the Amramites, and the family of the Izeharites, and the family of the Hebronites, and the family of the Uzzielites: these are the families of the Kohathites.

28. In the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, were eight thousand and six hundred, keeping the charge of the Sanctuary.

29. The families of the sons of Kohath shall pitch on the side of the Tabernacle, Southward.

30. And the chief of the house of the families of the Kohathites, shall be Elizaphan the son of Vzziel.

31. And their charge shall be the Ark, and the Table, and the Candlestick, and the Altars, and the vessels of the Sanctuary; wherewith they minister, and the hanging, and all the service thereof.

32. And Eleazar the son of Aaron the Priest, shall be chief over the chief of the Levites, & have the oversight of them that keep the charge of the Sanctuary.

Now we come to Leuies second son. We have spoken before of Gershon, of whom came the Gershonites. It followeth to speak of Kohath, for to him & his posterity were committed the most honorable offices, as we shall see afterward in the next chapter. Touching whom, we may observe (as we did in the former) these particular points: First, the families that descended of him, which are four in number; the Amramites, the Izeharites, the Hebronites, and the Vzzielites, verse 27. Secondly, the number of the males that came of them, to wit, eight thousand and six hundred, verse 28. Thirdly, the place where they pitched, to wit, the South-side of the Tabernacle, verse 29. Fourthly, the ouerseer, or superintendent of them, namely, Elizaphan the son of Vzziel, verse 30. Fifthly, the charge and function committed unto them, were the chief things within the Sanctuary, verse 31. Sixthly, the overseer of all these overseers, and the chief of them that were the chief, was Eleazar the son of Aaron, who had authority over all the Priests and Levites, verse 32. He was under Aaron appointed to have the oversight of them that had the charge of the Sanctuary. For Aaron himself was the high Priest, and his eldest son Eleazar was under him, as it were the second Priest: even as in the reign of Zedekiah, the high Priest was Seraiah; the second Priest was Zephaniah, as we read in the second book of the Kings, chap. 25, 18. The Captain of the guard took Seraiah the chief Priest, & Zephaniah the second Priest, and the three keepers of the door. The second Priest is thought to be one appointed to succeed in the high Priests room, and to supply his place, if he were sick, or otherwise hindered and letted by necessary occasions.

Of this family of the Kohathites came Moses and Aaron. And albeit the Lord appeared in special manner to Moses, called him to be a most excellent Prophet, to whom he revealed himself as it were face to face, and chose him to be the Governor of a mighty people, yet he would have his children to content themselves to be ranged among the ordinary Levites, though they were not advanced to be in the number of the Priests, much less to be the high Priests. And note the sincerity of Moses himself, that he is not ashamed to set down this in writing, and to commit it to posterity; so that he cannot be suspected of any show of ambition, or to give any the least occasion to the ungodly of slandering him. Thus do the writers of holy Scriptures deal, without all partiality, even in matters that do concern themselves. This we see in David, Psal. 51, in the title of it, who mentioneth his committing of adultery with the wife of Uriah, and his repentance for the same. The Prophet Jonah reporteth his flying from the presence of God, and the judgment that fell upon him for it, in that Prophecy. The Apostle Paul spareth not to tell the Church, and to leave it to all posterity, that he was a blasphemer, a persecutor, and an oppressor, 1 Tim. 1, 13. One borne out of due time, the least of the Apostles, not worthy to be called an Apostle, because he persecuted the Church of God, 1 Cor. 15, 8, 9. Behold therefore the purity of the word of God, & learn to confess it, and endeavor to find this effect of it in our hearts.

Besides, we are to observe and mark from hence, that the Tribe of Levi of small and little beginnings did make wonderful proceedings: for whereas he begat three sons: Gershon had only two: Merari two, and Kohath four; who could have expected so fruitful a posterity, that twelve men in so short a time should swarm into so many thousands? Thus doth GOD work mightily by weak means, both in the natural generation, and in the spiritual regeneration, that his glory might more brightly and beautifully appear. We have seen and shown already, how God, even when his people were most vexed & oppressed, did then most of all increase and multiply them, and so manifested his power in their preservation.

Likewise also we see in the New Testament, he chose out twelve Apostles, and sent them into the world, not furnished with carnal weapons, nor armed with the force, or favor, or friendship of mortal men. By such as were unskillful, he overcame the wisdom of the wise: by few in number, he subdued very many Nations: by the weak, he vanquished the strong: by an vnwarlike company, he conquered every high hold that lifted up it self against God, & laid it equal with the ground: by such as were vnnoble and unknown, he dimmed & darkened all the glory of the world: by silly and simple sheep, he tamed the fierceness of roaring Lions, that is, the cruelty of bloody tyrants: and by innocent Doves, he drave away wily and subtle serpents.

Last of all, albeit Kohath were not the elder brother, and consequently the Ruler of Leuies house, yet in the common ministry he was preferred before the rest, and had the chiefest preeminence and place of honor above thē; to teach us that God showeth mercy from the fountain of his own holy will and pleasure, even as he advanced Moses, and called him from feeding his fathers sheep, without any dignity or desert that was found in him. Let us all confess this, when we receive any kindness and mercy from him: otherwise we rob him of the glory due to his name. But of these points we have spoken elsewhere: and therefore we will come to the doctrines.

[Verse 27. And of Kohath was the family of the Amramites, &c.] We are to note that which was expressed before, and is repeated again hereafter, but especially is pointed out in this division; that the office committed to this family, is called a charge and ministrations, they had the charge of the Sanctuary, verse 28. Again, their charge shall be the Ark, and the Table, and the Candlestick, verse 31. And afterward, Eleazar shall have the oversight of thē that keep the charge of the Sanctuary, verse 32.

From hence we learn what the office of the [Doctrine] Ministry is, namely, that it is an office of charge. It is required of all the Ministers, carefully to look to the Churches and charges committed unto them, and to attend to the flock that dependeth upon them. The Ministry is a great burden, and a work full of employment. This doth Peter by way of exhortation teach the Elders, Feede the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly, &c: 1 Pet. 5, 2. Thus doth Paul instruct the Elders of Ephesus, Acts 20, 28. Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over which the holy Ghost hath made you Overseers, to feed the Church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood. And when he writeth to Timothy, he saith, This is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a Bishop, he desireth a good work. So likewise in the same Chapter, If a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the Church of God? And in the second Epistle, chap. 4, verse 1, 2. I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing and his kingdom: preach the word, be instant in season, out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all suffering and doctrine. Whereby we see, that the Ministry is an oversight, and the Ministers, Overseers, and the end of their office, a caring for the Church of God diligently and incessantly.

This may farther be shown unto us by the [Reason 1] force of reason. First, all the titles that are given unto them, are as so many goads to prick them forward, or as spurs clapt to their sides: I will only speak of two, that they are Shepherds and Watchmen. The Ministers are Pastors or Shepherds, & the church of God is as a flock of sheep subject to many enemies, as the devil, seducers, deceivers, heretics, evil doers; even as an heard is to many wolves, and therefore they must be carefully looked unto. Besides, they are called watchmen, the Church is as a City besieged day and night by strong and mighty enemies, Ezek. 3, 17. Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, & give them warning from me. It behooveth therefore the spiritual watchman, to keep diligent watch.

Secondly, the Ministers are fitly called the [Reason 2] Lord's committees, and therefore they must give an account for the souls committed unto their charge. Our life must go for their lives, & our soul must answer for their souls, if they perish through our default. This the Apostle declareth, Heb. 13, 17. Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give an account, that they may do it with joy, & not with grief, for that is unprofitable for you. Some offices have no accounts, or easy and very small belonging unto it: but this hath an heavy and straight accounts: because the blood of such as perish, shall be required at the watchman's hands that hath neglected his duty.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, we have a gracious promise of a great reward. Our pains shall be so rewarded, that greater reward shall be for greater pains, as the Apostle teacheth, 1 Cor. 3, 8. He that planteth, and he that watereth are one: and every man shall receive his own reward, according to his own labor. The Apostle Peter concludeth this, chap. 5, 4. When the chief Shepherd shall appear, we shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. This ought to encourage us to our duty, to consider that our labor shall not be in vain in the Lord.

[Use 1] The uses remain. First, seeing the Ministers must keep watch & ward over the souls of the people, it serveth to reprove such as make it a matter of ease, and therefore when they are once entered into that calling, do give themselves to idleness and security, not considering that it is a work, full of labor and employment, full of difficulty and business. True it is, the Ministry is an honor, but withal it is a burden: so that whosoever will have the honor, must bear the burden upon his shoulders, for these cannot be separated. These two are as companions that cannot be divided. Everyone is willing to hear of the dignity, but everyone is not willing to discharge the duty: everyone is ready to be preferred, but everyone is not so ready to profit others. God requireth of all Pastors, that they should instruct the ignorant, bring home them that wander, heal the diseased, comfort the distressed, support the weak, admonish the disorderly, convince the erroneous, reprove the vicious: but these sluggards that sleep and delight in sleeping, will do nothing at all, regarding the fleece rather than the sheep, and the benefit to themselves, more then profit to their hearers. Woe unto such idle bellies; woe unto such hard masters, who reap where they have not sown, and gather where they have not strewed, who hiding their talents, are convinced of grievous iniquity in the sight of God and man. For besides those euilles which they have of their own, they are guilty of the death of other men, not only as accessories, but as principal procurers of their destruction.

This is a certain truth, never to be forgotten, but to be engraven in the hearts of every Minister, as it were with a pen of iron, or the point of a Diamond, that so many we do kill, and even murder their souls, as we suffer thorough our negligence and silence to perish, & so to fall into the claws and jaws of the devil, who goeth about like a roaring Lyon, seeking whom he may devour. The Devil standeth at receipt as a cunning huntzman to cath his prey. Now he hunteth for souls, a more cruel hunter then ever Nimrod was, and these are as the devils dogs to drive them into his nets.

If we will approve our selves to be true Ministers indeed, we must confess that we are bound with a treble band of necessity, to discharge our duty, as it were with 3, strong chains that are not easily broken; one, in regard of our selves; another, in regard of the people; and the third, in regard of God and his glory, that ought evermore to be before our eyes. The Apostle saith of himself, 1. Cor. 9, 16. A necessity is laid upon me, yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel. They are subject to the curse of men, that in time of famine & dearth, do withhold the corn, Prov. 11, 26. Such the people shall curse, but blessing shall be upon the head of him that selleth it. In like manner, such as withdraw the food of men's souls, and gather it as ingrossers into their own hands, are accursed, not of men only, but also of God, and his curse shall enter into their souls, and not leave them until he have rooted them out: because they feed not the flock, but feed upon it: prey upon it, but do not pray for it. In regard of the people, our Savior saith, Luke 10, 42. One thing is necessary, and woe to them that hear not the Gospel: for as great a necessity is laid upon the hearer, as vpō the Minister, so that where there is no vision, the people perish. If then we take heed to our selves, and unto the doctrine, and continue in them, in doing this, we shall both save our selves, and those that hear us, 1 Tim. 4, 16.

Lastly, the consideration of God's glory ought to be as a spurr to prick us forward to do our duties. The Apostle speaking of the Thessalonians, a most worthy Church abounding in all heavenly graces, calleth them his glory, his joy, his hope, his crown in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming. Howbeit his glory was joined with the glory of God, otherwise his glory would have turned to his shame. Hereby is the Father glorified, when we bring forth much fruit to the obedience of the Gospel: and therefore the love of God should compel and contstrain us to publish the glad tidings of salvation Hence it is, that Christ exhorteth Peter again and again, as he loved him, to feed his sheep and his lambes, John 21, 16, 17. So then, such as are negligent in their duties, declare plainly, that they neither love God, nor care for the people, nor regard their own souls.

Secondly, they are reprov'd that are ignorant and cannot, as they that are idle and will not teach: they that are unskillful, as well as they that are willful in detaining the word of life, the food of the soul from the people. These have no knowledge themselves, and therefore cannot build up others in knowledge. They starve themselves, and therefore have no bread to bring forth to save the lives of others. They have nothing in them, and therefore cannot show any old or new store. They are poor, and therefore have no treasure to bestow upon others.

No man ought to adventure his own soul, though he might advantage himself thereby, to win the whole world, as Christ teacheth, Math. 16, verse 26. For what should this profit him in the end, when he hath cast up his accounts, and compared his gains and losses together? But these foolish men, to get not the gain of all the kingdoms of the earth, but the tithes and revenues of someone little parish, do hazard their own souls nay more then that, the souls of many people, whom they rob sacrilegiously of the means of their salvation. These also are cruel mothers, or land-monsters, that instead of feeding their children, do starve them, being worse then the sea monsters, who draw out the breasts, and give suck to their young ones; whereas these are become cruel, like the Ostriches in the wilderness, so that the tongue of the sucking child cleaveth to the roof of his mouth for thirst, the young children ask bread, and no man breaketh it unto them. They are silly watchmen, that instead of warning the people, do deliver them & betray them into the hands of the enemy. They are miserable shepherds, who instead of pasturing their sheep, do pester them and poison them rather, and suffer the wolf to rent them in pieces. Christ sent out his Disciples, as sheep among wolves, Math. 10: but these are wolves among sheep, sent out by Satan to annoy the Church. They take upon them to be Captains to conduct the host of God, but they have no skill to do it, and therefore woe to the people that are under them. It were better for them to take the place of a common soldier, and comfortably to serve in it, then by taking upon them an higher charge of command then they can manage, to destroy themselves, and overthrow many others that depend upon them. It were better for them to learn, then to teach: and to be hearers of others, then speakers to others. Let them not despise this counsel given unto them, who are fitter to be governed and commanded by others, then to rule and command over others, lest they repent when it is too late.

Thirdly, seeing the office of the Ministry is an office of trust, it reproveth all such as take the charge of souls themselves, and commit them to a curate or substitute, contenting themselves to reap the profit, but contemning to discharge the duty which they ought to do. They go away with the fattest of the fruits of the earth, and have oftentimes poor hunger-staruen deputies to supply their places, whose mouths they stop with a little morsel, by which means also, the people go away with hunger-staruen souls. Christ preached not to the people by substitutes, to ease himself, or enrich himself, or magnify himself, sitting Doctor-like at home; but took pains in his own person, he went about from City to City, teaching and preaching in their Synagogues, taking all occasion to do good to their souls and bodies; to their souls, by instructing of them: to their bodies, by healing of them. He was anointed as the Prophet of the Church, to preach good tidings unto the meek; and was sent to bind up the broken hearted, and to proclaim liberty to the captives: he doth not account his duty discharged, by sending out his Apostles, like to those that lay heavy burdens vpon other men's shoulders, and will not touch them with their little finger; but he joined his labors with theirs, jointly to build up the house of God. The Prophet saith, Woe to the idol Shepherd that leaveth the flock: the sword shall be upon his arm, and upon his right eye: his arm shall be clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened, Zac. 11, 17. These are no better then hirelings, who care for the hire, but not for the heard: they are willing to catch from them what they can, but deliver unto them little or nothing. It is a ruled case by the Apostle, Rom. 12. He that hath an office, let him attend on his office: if then themselves must wait, they cannot be discharged of their waiting by any deputies, where their presence in their proper persons is required.

Hence it is, that the Apostle joineth their own labor, and their own reward together, 1 Corinth. 3, verse 8. If then labor be not proper, the recompense should not be proper: if it be another man's pains, it ought to be another man's reward. If then they labor by another, they shall be rewarded by another; and therefore let them take heed, lest as they deprive the Church of their labors, themselves also be deprived of their reward, when the great Shepherd of the sheep shall appear in glory.

Let them therefore always have in remembrance the good affection of the Apostle toward the people, 2 Corinth. 12, verse 14. Behold, the third time I am ready to come to you, and I will not be burdensome unto you, for I seek not yours, but you: for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children. Here is the duty of a right Pastor, not to seek gain by the sheep, but to save the sheep. His desire was not to enrich himself but the people. The mark that he aimed at, was not covetousness; but to plant godliness in the people, and so win them to God.

Woe unto them that are otherwise minded, for God will reveal it in due time. What then? should not the Minister live of his labors in the Church? Or is it unlawful to take any recompense of his hearers? Was not Paul the father of the Philippians, because they maintained him, and ministered unto him being absent? Or was none of the rest of the Apostles a father, because the Churches supplied their wants? I answer, the Apostle hath no such meaning: forasmuch as natural parents themselves are to be nourished by their children in their old age, or when they fall into decay, as we see in the example of Joseph, who preserved alive both his father and brethren in the years of famine: but he declareth, that whatsoever he did unto them, proceeded from a fatherly affection toward them, and that as a father he desired to enrich them with heavenly blessings in Christ, being careful by all means to gain their souls to God, not their wealth unto himself. O that all such as are entered into this office, & have taken this charge upon them, were thus minded! O that the zeal of God's house had even eaten them up, that they would prefer the salvation of his people, before their own greedy and covetous affections! O that they could in these days set before their eyes, the account that they are to give for the sheep committed unto them!

Give me leave in this place, though it be not according to mine ordinary manner, to lay before you a parable, which also is a true history, and therefore may not unfitly be called an historical parable, or a parabolical history, it being indeed both of them: and for our better knowledge, I will set down certain marks instead of the men, defining the persons by certain letters, but concealing their names.

G. A certain man traveling by the way, & meeting with a Minister that was also holden skillful in the laws, said unto him, Sir, I am glad I have met with you so fitly at this time, for I am like shortly to come into some trouble, if I do not look to myself to prevent the danger: now I have always taken you for my friend, and therefore let me be so bold as to ask a question of you, wherein I understand and know very well, that you are able to resolve me in this and a far greater matter.

C. The Minister answered, I am no lawyer; yet (my friend) I will do what I can for you, and give you the best counsel that lieth in me.

G. Sir, the case is this; There was a Gentleman not far from us, committed to my custody certain sheep to keep, and indeed I cannot deny, he gave me a great charge of them, and promised me a good reward for my labor, so that I undertook the looking to them, and the feeding of them. But because I had other sheep of mine own also, so that I could by no possible means look to both flocks; I put them out to another, who agreed for a certain stipend covenanted between us▪ to look unto them: yet he was careless altogether in the business, so that some of them stragled from the flock and were lost; others starved for want of feeding; others were too high of the gall; others the worms did gnaw and eat unto the bones; and others died of the rot; woeful is the state of that flock. To be short, and not to trouble your patience any farther, the owner of them refuseth to deal with him that suffered the flock to go to havoc, but cometh upon me, and requireth them at my hands, and threateneth to trouble me for them.

C. No marvel, said the Minister: you are bound to answer for them: you undertook the keeping of them, and therefore you are to be charged with them. If I commit a treasure unto you to keep, I must ask it again of you, and not of another. If you put out your child to nurse, you will require it again of the Nurse that undertook the keeping of it.

G. I confess (answered the other,) this to be true: but by your leave Sir, the case is altered in my matter. For there seemeth unto me small reason in it, and little conscience, to require that parcel of sheep at my hands, forasmuch as I designed them over to another, and he promised before many witnesses to discharge me.

C. The Minister replied, That is no matter, it is a plain case; you took upon you to see unto them, and therefore it is great equity and conscience, that you make them good. This standeth with good reason, & is grounded upon the law of God and man. I dare assure you, the law will pass against you by any verdict of twelve men in England, and you will be constrained to pay for them. The Gentleman trusted you with them, and not your deputy, and therefore I know no remedy for you, nor any way to help you.

G. I am now satisfied, I think you have given a right judgment. But good Sir, if the case be thus, how cometh it to pass that you do the like, and yet do not see it, or if you do, yet think yourself blameless? The great Shepherd of the sheep, Christ Jesus, hath committed his sheep to you; and you having also other sheep, have committed one parcel to your Curate and Substitute, who is careless and unconscionable, and suffereth them to perish: how is it then that you, who went about to persuade me, do not persuade your own heart, that his negligence shall not excuse you, but that the master of the sheep will require them at your hands? Is it law against me, and not against yourself? Is it equity, reason, and conscience, that I should answer for them that are lost: and doth it not stand with as great equity, reason and conscience, that you should answer for such as you suffer to perish? I may say therefore to you as Nathan did to David, You are the man. The case is yours, and the danger is turned upon your own head. Repent and amend, lest Christ say unto you, Thou evil and slothful servant, out of thine own mouth will I judge thee. To leave this parable, let us learn to look to our several functions with all diligence, remembering the great charge we have taken upon us, the maintenance that we do reap from it, and lastly, the accounts we shall give of it.

[Use 2] Secondly, it teacheth the Ministers, as they desire the salvation of their people, whom Christ hath redeemed with his most precious blood, so they ought to be diligent in preaching the word in season and out of season; that their consciences may bear them witness, that above all things they seek to glorify God in the instruction, conversion, and salvation of the people. Great was the care of the Prophets to warn the people of God of their sins. They stood upon their watch towers to descry the enemies. They attended the flock committed unto them. We have a multitude of examples as it were a cloud of witnesses that have gone before us in this office: but especially let us look unto Jesus Christ, the author and finisher of our faith, O what diligence unspeakable appeared in him? The Evangelist noteth this out by many circumstances, Math. 9, 35, & 4, 23. Jesus went about all the Cities and Uillages, teaching in their Synagogues, and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness, & every disease among the people. The very word of going about from place to place, doth carry with it a manifest signification of painfulness. He refused to tarry long in one place, as appeareth in his answer to the Samaritans, John 4. It was his meat and drink to do the will of his heavenly Father, for therefore he was sent. He preached and wrought miracles, not only to those that came unto him, or were brought before him, but of his own accord he went about vnrequested.

Secondly, it is a sign of no small diligence, in that he offered his travel, not only to one place, but to many: not only to great Cities, but also to small towns and to little villages; as appeareth in the perambulation or visitation that he made for the instructiō of the souls of the poor people that wandered as sheep without a Shepherd, preaching diligently in every place as he went.

Thirdly, he leaveth not unvisited and vnfrequented every Synagogue or place of public assembly for the preaching of the word, he took all occasions, and watched all opportunities to do good; he taught in the City, in the wilderness, in the high ways, on the sea-shore, in the Ship, on the plain, on the Mountain, in the public Temple, in private houses, in the corn fields, and where not?

Fourthly, the matter which in his doctrine he handled, namely, the Gospel of the kingdom, serveth to commend his painfulness unto us: forasmuch as truly and sincerely to preach the Gospel, is a work of much labor, wonderful care, and great diligence.

Fifthly, his desire was to do all good that might be, not only to their bodies, but to their souls: seeing he did not only teach them, but healed, not some sorts, but all kinds of sicknesses and diseases. None of them, though never so dangerous and desperate, were to him incurable.

Lastly, he could not be stayed from preaching sound doctrine, and healing unsound bodies, by the uncharitable slanders and wicked reports of the Scribes and Pharisees, who, ascribing the working of his miracles, to the power of Beelzebub the Prince of diuelles, spake all manner of evil against him. This worthy example and perfect pattern of all righteousness, the chief Pastor of the sheep, ought we all to imitate that are entered into this calling: let it be as a glass to behold our faces, and as a rule or squire to examine all our actions by it, that thereby we may stir up our selves to be diligent in our Ministry. This hath sundry branches pertaining to it, & issuing out of the same root.

First of all, all Pastors must be diligent to know the state of their flocks, and to take heed to their herds, as Prov. 27, 23, 24. Forasmuch as riches are not forever, and the crown endureth not to every generatiō. Such as are absent from them ordinarily, cannot possibly know in what state they stand, they must of necessity be ignorant of their condition. When the master of the family is away, the fellow servants begin to smite one another, & to eat and drink with the drunken, Mat. 24, 49. When Moses was in the Mount, & absent from the people, they fell into idolatry, and worshipped a golden calf, Exod. 32. The presence of the Minister ought to be an example of virtue, and a stay to them in all well-doing.

Secondly, we must not be discouraged by the ungodly speeches & venomous tongues of wicked men, thereby growing negligent in our functions. Christ himself was evilly entreated, counted a devil, called a Samaritan, esteemed a wine-bibber, and branded to be a glutton, a friend of Publicans and sinners; yet he ceased not to teach and preach in every city and village. Elijah is charged to be a troubler of the state, yet he shrinketh not back, nor spareth to rebuke the idolatries of the Priests of Baal, 1 Kings 18, 17. Paul and Silas are reported to trouble the City (as Elijah before was to trouble Israel) yet they continue and are not afraid to preach the Gospel of salvation. Amos was accused to the King by Amaziah, to have conspired against him, yet he would not give over, nor hold his peace. This is a common practice of lewd and profane persons, to persuade mē of great countenance and high places, that we preach against them, and that it is not the word of GOD that reproveth them, but that we single them out, and so entitle them to our reprehensions; verifying the saying of the Prophet, They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly, Amos 5, 10. But sin must not be left vnreproved, and we must with deaf ears, and dumb tongues, and blind eyes pass over such slanders, as unworthy to be answered or regarded; and let us, endeavoring to carry a clear conscience, go forward diligently and earnestly in the course of our Ministry, remembering the example of Christ our Savior, whom no cavils nor quarrels of his enemies, could restrain from preaching the word to instruct the soul, neither from working miracles to do good to the body; and considering that he pronounceth all those blessed that are reviled, persecuted, and slandered for the truths sake, Because after the same manner they dealt with the Prophets that were before us, Mat. 5, 11, 12.

Thirdly, we must not be afraid of the faces and frowns of men. It is the weakness and frailty of many men, that they are ready to stand still and start back at every high and big look of the wicked, and thereby wax feeble and faint-hearted at the great threatenings of the mighty.

Hence it is, that the Lord saith, Ezek. 3, 8, 9. I have made thy face strong against their faces, and thy forehead strong against their foreheads: as an adamant harder then flint have I made thy forehead; fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house. So he willeth Jeremiah to speak unto the people all that he commanded him, and that he be not dismayed at their faces, lest he be confounded before them.

Lastly, we must wisely apply the word to the capacity and understanding of all. To speak generally to all, is as it were to hover in the air, and in effect to speak to none. The hearts of men are stony, and are not easily broken. They are as tough wood, that must have many strong blows to cleave it. This is to divide the word of truth aright, to give everyone his portion of meat in due season. Then doth the word become effectual and is made profitable unto us, and preached with power and authority, when it is brought home to the doors of our hearts, and applied unto our consciences.

True it is, we cannot abide to have our sores touched, and our wounds searched: but this is the only true and right means to be cured. We must therefore make much of such teaching and of such Teachers, and as we tender the salvation of our souls, so we must desire to have the word thus opened, & when it is so delivered and handled, let us submit our selves unto it with all reverence and carefulness. It is a spiritual knife to launce us, and to let out our corruptions, which are ready to fester within us, and to hinder the work of it.

Lastly, this serveth for instruction in a necessary [Use 3] duty required of the people toward their Pastors, that seeing they have a great charge over them to teach them, they ought willingly to give unto them recompense of their labor, and a liberal maintenance for the work of the Ministry. It is the ordinance not of man, but of GOD, that they which spend their time, their study, their gifts, their strength, their substance, and even themselves in the most profitable and necessary service of the Church, should be bountifully provided for, and have no just cause to complain of want. This will appear very plainly unto us, if we consider what allowance was given to the Levites under the Law, and how the maintenance of the Ministry standeth under the Gospel.

First of all, the Scripture teacheth, that they had 48, Cities, and two thousand cubits of ground from their walls, which I may call as it were their glebe lands, Numb. 35. This was to them a liberal portion, and in so small a country, a great proportion.

Secondly, they had the tithes of corn, of wine, of oil, and of all fruits & herbs, together with the tithes of the herds and flocks.

Thirdly, they had the first borne of all sorts of cattle, as of Beeves, of Sheep, & of Goats, as also the prices of the rest according to the Priests estimation, Ezek. 44, 30. Neh. 10, 36. Likewise they had the first borne of men redeemed at a certain price, to wit, at five shekels a man.

Fourthly, there was appropriated unto thē the first fruits of wine, of oil, of wool, of corn, and of their dough, Numb. 18, 13.

Fifthly, he had all the oblations and vows, and whatsoever was dedicated unto God and separated from the common use, Numb. 18, 8. Ezek. 44, 29, 30.

Sixthly, the meat offerings, the sin offerings, & the trespass offerings, the heave offerings, and the shake offerings, and the show-bread, Numb. 18, 9, 11. Levite. 24, verse 9. Mat. 12, 5.

Seventhly, the abundance and multitude of the sacrifices yielded unto them a great allowance: of the peace offerings they had the breast and the shoulder; of others, they had more, of every sacrifice they had somewhat. Numb. 18, 18. Levite. 7, 31, 32, 34. Deut. 18, 3. Levite. 7, 8.

Eighthly, all the males were to appear thrice a year before the Lord, Exod. 23, 15, and 34, 20: but none were to appear empty before him.

Ninthly, if any man had defrauded his neighbor, and purloined his goods from him, and he have no kinsman to recompense the trespass unto, the trespass is to be recompensed to the Lord, even to the Priest, Numb. 5, 8. The doer of wrong is not to retain it, but it shall remain to the Priests use, in case the owner be dead and have left no kinsman behind him.

Lastly, all these former duties were to be paid in kind; if any desired to redeem them, he must pay, not after his own pleasure or price, but according to the Priests valuation, and must add a fifth part thereunto: if any part or parcel were detained, he was to bring a Ram for an offering, & to make good that which he withheld, & as an overplus to add a fifth part thereunto. Wherefore, all things being duly considered, the maintenance of the Priests and Levites was both liberal and honorable. Liberall, in regard of quantity and quality.

Honorable, in respect of the manner, inasmuch as they were commanded to bring their offerings or gifts into y^e Temple, that from thence they might receive thē as from the hands of God himself, lest the people when they brought any of their duties should upbraid the Priest, as if he were beholden unto them. This is the fashion and corrupt course of many unthankful wretches in these our days, that plead for nothing but for their backs, and bellies, and coffers, that care not whether religion go forward or backward, that hit the Ministers in the teeth with their paiments and liberality toward them, & think they live an easy and pleasant life by the sweat of other men's brows.

So then, seeing the Ministers under the law that served at the Altar had such means of maintenance, that they might give themselves wholly to holy things: much more ought the Ministers of God in the time of the Gospel to be well provided for. For as their office is greater, so the reward of their labors should be better. Our Savior teacheth, Math. 11, verse 11. that he which is least in the kingdom of heaven, is greater then John and the Prophets; that is, the Ministers of the Gospel have received an higher calling then all that went before them, and therefore there ought not to be a lower respect had unto them. God therefore would have them well maintained, as not pompously, so not poorly: as not wallowing in superfluity, so not wanting through necessity. They must be relieved bountifully, not live beggarly: liberally, not sparingly or pinchingly, to the end they attend and employ themselves in the duties of their callings, and not to be driven or distracted from them through penury. The Apostle pointeth unto this in the Epistle to the Galatians, ch. 6, v. 6. Let him that is taught in the word, communicate unto him that teacheth, in all good things. And in the 9. chapter, verse 7, of the former Epistle to the Corinthians, he confirmeth this truth at large, Who goeth a warfare at his own cost? Who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not the fruit of it? &c. The Ministers are the Captains or Colonels of the Lord's host; they are the planters of his vineyard; they are the shepherds of his flock: and therefore ought to have maintenance from the Church.

Secondly, it were a kind of wrong and injustice to muzzle the mouth of the Ox that treadeth out the Corn: the calling of the Minister is laborious, they are the Lord's ploughmen, seedmen, and harvest-men. His ploughmen, to plough up the ground of men's hearts, Ier. 4, 3, 4: to harrow them, and as it were to fashion them anew, that so they may be fitted to bring forth fruit, when all thorns and thistles are grubbed up and removed. His seed-men, to sow the precious and immortal seed of the word in their hearts, whereby they are regenerated and borne anew, Luke 8, verse 11. 1 Pet. 1, verse 23. His harvest-men, to gather his corn into his barn, that the sons and daughters of almighty God may have the food of life broken unto them, and not perish through famine.

Thirdly, the Minister communicateth spiritual things unto the people, which are of much more value then all temporal and earthly things. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, Is it then a great matter, if we reap your carnal things? As if he should say, If we bestow upon you the greater, we may well receive the lesser things, not as a benevolence, but as a recompense, albeit no sufficient compensation of our labors can be bestowed upon us, forasmuch as they owe unto us, even themselves, as Paul speaketh to Philemon.

Fourthly, as the Levitical Priests for their service in the Sanctuary had a large and liberal maintenance, so ought the Ministers of the Gospel: They which minister about the holy things, live of the things of the Temple, and they which wait at the Altar, are partakers with the Altar: even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the Gospel, should live of the Gospel, 1 Corinth. 9, verse 13, 14. This condemneth the covetous practices and niggardly dealings of worldly minded men toward the Ministers, who account them that attend upon this calling unworthy any allowance, as being in their foolish opinion and devilish conceit, an idle, and needless, and fruitless function. These men are of so wretched and corrupt consciences, and so void of the fear of God and man, that whatsoever they can cunningly purloine, and fraudulently convey away from them, they think it well gotten and gained. But let these men know, and lay it up in their hearts, and apply it to their consciences, that as the Ministry of the word is the ordinance of God, and the maintenance of the Ministry is the ordinance of God: so such as set themselves with might and main against it, either to disannul the preaching of it, or to hinder the free passage of it, whether it be openly or covertly, whether it be directly or indirectly, do fight against God, provoke his wrath against them, sin against their own souls, and overthrow the salvation of many thousands that might be called and converted by it.

Many damnable hypocrites there are in the world, that dare not openly speak against the Ministry of the word, and the preaching of the Gospel; for then all men would condemn them, and be ready to cry shame upon them, all men would paint and point them out with the finger, and hiss at them as they go in the streets: everyone would shun them as diuelles incarnate. Whosoever should forbid the Trumpet to be blown in time of war, would be taken for a traitor, and as one that goeth about to betray the army into the hand of the enemy. Or he that should forbid the soldiers to gird their swords by their sides, would he not be esteemed to be an hollow hearted friend, and secretly to favor the contrary side? So is the case of such, as would not have the Minister cry aloud, to lift up his voice as a Trumpet, and show the people their transgressions; nor to strike at the sins of men with the sword of the Spirit, they do undermine the City of God, and utterly betray the cause of religion. If we look to have religion prosper, we must look to the Ministry that it be upholden: if we let it alone, & have no regard unto it, whether it flourish or decay, and suffer every base and beastly companion to flout at it, and insult over it, we strike at the heart of religion, and give a deadly blow unto the cause of God. Wherefore, they are constrained to put on a vizard, and as it were to mask themselves, that they may play their parts, & not appear in their proper likeness: so that all their quarrel is against the Ministers in outward show, they are made the causes of all divisions and contentions in the places where they live & preach the word. These Sycophants would make the world believe, that Preachers make debate among men, and they know whole towns divided one against another, since they had a teaching Minister; so that whereas before they lived & loved together as honest neighbors & good friends, now there is dissention sown among them, and they hate one another as enemies. These are they that hold, that the dogs are the cause why the sheep and wolves do not agree, whereas if they were tied up, the whole flock would quickly be a prey to the wolves. Thus did Ahab charge Elijah to trouble Israel, 1 Kings 18, 17. So the Apostles are accused to trouble the City, while they taught the people.

If Paul cry out against Diana and the gods that are made with hands, and the idolatrous worship done unto them, there will arise no small stir among those that seemed quiet before: forasmuch as Demetrius and the rest of the workmen of like occupation (that thrive by such means, and get their gain by unlawful ways) will be full of wrath, and fill a whole City with confusion.

There is a carnal peace which is in the flesh, which Christ professeth he came to dissolve & disannul, Math. 10, 34. Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword, &c. God and the devil cannot agree together, light and darkness will not be companions: the godly and the wicked cannot be at one. So thē, the fault of contention is to be laid upon the wicked and ungodly, who fret and rage against the word, because it layeth open their filthiness, and bewrayeth their corruptions. While darkness covereth the earth, much foul matter is hidden and is not seen: but when the day appeareth, and the Sun shineth, it can no longer be kept secret, for the light, as the Apostle saith, doth manifest all things, even the counsels of the heart.

But to return to the point before handled, from whence we have a little digressed, to answer the objections of these cauillers, whose mouths must be stopped, who, while they take from the Ministers their maintenance, do through their sides give a sore wound to the word it self, and take away the key of knowledge from the people. The wise man faith, Prov. 20, 25. It is a snare to the man, who devoureth that which is holy. Tithes are consecrated unto God and to his service, and therefore are not to be applied to common uses, or detained from the right owners of them. Properly God challengeth them as his own, and he hath assigned them to his Ministers. When Belteshazzar abused to common & profane uses the golden vessels of the Temple, which Nebuchadnezzar carried away, he enjoyed not his pleasures long; for in the midst of all his iolity, came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote his destruction upon the plaster of the wall of his own Palace. It was sacrilege in Achan, to take away any part or parcel of that which was consecrated to God, and in the end the Lord found him out, and he was stoned. It was sacrilege in Ananias and Sapphira his wife, to detain any whit of that which themselves had consecrated unto God, and might before been lawfully enjoyed: yet was that possession a snare unto them, and brought sudden death by the heavy hand of God upon them. O that all Church-robbers, and Minister-robbers, and Religion-robbers would have these examples as fearful spectacles continually before their eyes, and be moved thereby liberally to give that which they cannot conscionably detain: forasmuch as it is an audacious and sacrilegious robbing, not of man, but of God himself. It is an infamous crime to be a thief and a robber, but it is much more reproachful to be a spiritual stealer.

Hence it is, that the LORD saith by his Prophet, Will a man spoil his gods? yet ye have spoiled me. But ye say, wherein have we spoiled thee? In tithes and offerings. Where we see, the Lord accounteth it a spoiling of himself, even because the right of the tithes and offerings was alienated & averted from the right use, and thereby his service was greatly profaned, and the edification of the people shamefully hindered.

If these rhinges will not enter into our stony hearts harder then the adamant, if the glory of God, which should be more dear then our lives, be not precious unto us; if the destruction of thousands souls, for whom Christ died, be not regarded of us; if the decay of religion and the ruin of the Gospel, be as a toy or trifle unto us: yet at least let us always have before us the judgment of God upon our selves, and be well assured, that the wrongful and unjust detaining of the Lord's portion from the Lord's Pastors, shall bring such a curse upon the rest of our substance, that it shall be as the ears of corn that are blasted: yea, it shall kindle such a fire in the midst of our houses, that it shall consume them with the timber thereof, and the stones thereof. The Lord having by the Prophet Malachi, charged his people with spoiling him in tithes and offerings, he addeth this in the next words, Ye are cursed with a curse, for ye have spoiled me, even this whole Nation. The zeal that David had for the house of GOD was very great, so that he professeth, it had even eaten him up, Psal. 69: and indeed he showeth no less by his own practice. For when Araunah the Jebusite, as a King in the willingness of spirit, offered to give to David Oxen for burnt sacrifice, and the threshing instruments for wood, that he might build an altar and offer thereon: he would not accept of it at his hands, neither offer to the Lord his God that which cost him nothing, as one esteeming (in so doing) the precious things of GOD, light and of small account. O how far are these men from this heavenly affection of this holy servant of God? He accounted nothing too good to give to God: but they account it an happy turn, if they might go away scotfree, and pay nothing at all toward the maintenance of the Ministry of the word. It is strange to see how bountiful many are, and even prodigal, that they care not what they waste and consume in following their own pleasures, pastimes, and vanities of their corrupt hearts; and yet how backward and pinching they are oftentimes for one halfepeny that is going from them, and coming either toward the poor, or toward the Minister. But mark the secret and just judgment of God upon them, and tremble at it, or rather fear him that inflicteth it, and payeth them home in their own kind, & punisheth them proportionably according to their sin: for he detaineth his graces from them, and sendeth them poor and lean souls that are ready to famish and perish, through want of heavenly and spiritual food. True it is, there have been two extremes in the world, both touching the estimation of their persons, & touching the compensation of their labors. In former times, the people did so highly account of them, that they did stick and cleave too much to their persons, and therefore Paul saith, 1 Cor. 3, 5, 7. Who is Paul? and who is Apollo? but the Ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man: so then, neither is he that planteth, anything, neither he that watereth, but God that gave the increase: but in our times, there appeareth not such forwardness, wherein they are contemned & despised. This is one extreme. Likewise, in former times, they were ready to give all, and yet they thought all to be too little: now they would willingly (if they might) take away all: so that if some positive laws did not stay them and restrain them, their consciences are so large, that they would suffer them well enough to take the corn, and feed the Minister with the straw: they could be content to fill themselves with the Calves out of the stall, and to eat the fattest of them, and then to reserve the refuse for the Minister, and to give them the bones to gnaw upon, which they offer to their dogs, and yet think that too good for them. A goodly recompense for their great pains! They are not ashamed to share the wool of the flock among themselves, and to clothe themselves therewith: and then to cast the tails to their Teachers, and to stop their mouths with the dung and drauery that is good for nothing. Thus are they affected toward religion, and the promoting of the word and worship of God: they care not though all rudeness and barbarisme were among us, and the world were become a receptacle of all atheism, like a wilderness overgrown with nettles, briars, and all noisome weeds, if so be they might get any advantage by the ruin and overthrow of the Gospel. In the late days of superstition (which many now living can yet remember) the people generally were most bountiful to their sacrificing Mass-Priests, who fed them with corn that is musty and mouldred, or rather with husks, fitter for swine then for the servants of God: and yet they thought nothing too good for them, nothing too much to bestow upon them, as the idolatrous Egyptians nourished their idolatrous Priests in the years of famine, Gen. 47: so that their Land was not set to sale, having a portion assigned unto them of Pharaoh, and eating the portion which he gave them. Now our people are better taught, yet they pay all duties and demands for the most part grudgingly, and murmur at all things that go from themselves, as if a man did cut a piece of flesh out of their sides, or let them blood at the heart vein. Then they had a zeal, though not according to knowledge; and a conscience, though it were blind: now indeed, by reason of the labors of the Ministers which stretch out their hands all the day long, & spend their strength among them, they have science, but little or no conscience; the Gospel would be welcome unto them, at least in word, provided that it do not any way displease them or disease them, neither be costly or burdensome unto thē: otherwise, if they must depart with any of their morsels, they care not for it, nor esteem anything of it, nor will be ruled by it, nor order their lives after it.

33. Of Merari was the family of the Mahlites, and the family of the Mushites: these are the families of Merari.

34. And those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males from a month old and upward, were six thousand and two hundred.

35 And the chief of the house of the families of Merari, was Zuriel the son of Abigail: these shall pitch on the side of the Tabernacle Northwards.

36. And under the custody and charge of the sons of Merari, shall be the boards of the Tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and the sockets thereof, and all the vessels thereof, and all that serveth thereto.

37. And the pillars of the Court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords.

38. But those that encamp before the Tabernacle toward the East, even before the Tabernacle of the Congregation Eastward, shall be Moses and Aaron, and his sons, keeping the charge of the Sanctuary, for the charge of the children of Israel: and the stranger that cometh nigh, shall be put to death.

39. All that were numbered of the Levites, which Moses & Aaron numbered at the commandment of the Lord, throughout all their families, all the males from a month old and upward, were twenty and two thousand.

We have already handled the numbering of two of the families, that have their foundation in the sons of Levi, to wit, the Gershonites and the Kohathites. Now followeth the third and last, that is, the Merarites; touching whom, we are to consider sundry particular points, as we have done in the two former divisions. For first, the families descended of Merari are named, which are two, the Mahlites, and the Mushites, verse 33. Secondly, the number of persons: the sum of them according to the number of all the males from a month old and above, was six thousand & two hundred, verse 34. Thirdly, the Overseer, or Superintendent of them all, was Zuriel the son of Abigail. Fourthly, the place of their abode in the host, was on the North-side of the Tabernacle, verse 35. Lastly, the office and function committed unto them, was y^e woodworke, and the rest of the instruments. These things were committed to their charge and custody.

Hitherto we have handled the numbering of this Tribe, simply considered in it self, according to the particular families of it: now let us observe how it is concluded. In this conclusion set down in the two last verses of this division, we are to mark two points; first, the persons that went before the Ark of the Covenant on the East-side: secondly, the total sum of the whole Tribe is reckoned up. The persons that were to pitch on the fore-front of the Tabernacle toward the East, are these: both Moses himself as the chief Captain & Commander over the whole, and also Aaron with his sons the Priests, ministering unto God and his Church: whereunto is annexed a certain prouiso, that none should dare to thrust himself into their office, verse 38.

Secondly, the total sum of all the former particulars is brought together, and the accounts cast up, which are said to amount to two and twenty thousand, v. 39. Out of which general number, must be deducted the Priests and the first borne of the Levites themselves; for otherwise the whole Tribe of Levi, consisting of the Priests and such as are called by the common name of Levites, amounted to the number of twenty and two thousand, and three hundred souls.

[Verse 33. Of Merari was the family, &c.] In this division, we see more plainly and particularly that which was in part noted before, namely, the several mansions and situations that these Levites had about the Tabernacle, which being the place of God's public service, they compassed it round about, that they might not be far from any of the people of God, but always resident among them. The Gershonites pitched behind the Tabernacle westward, verse 23. The Kohathites pitched on the south-side of the Tabernacle, verse 29. The Merarites pitched on the north side of the Tabernacle, verse 35. Now, lest any part should be left unfurnished and unprovided, Moses and Aaron and his sons are commanded to take up the fore-front of the Tabernacle, and to pitch on the East-side. GOD might have put and placed all the Levites in one corner of the host, if it had pleased him: but in great mercy both toward the Levites and people, they are seated in the midst of the army, and charged to compass the Tabernacle round about, to the end they might serve the better for giving direction and instruction indifferently to all the rest of the Tribes that were to use their Ministry. Thus we see, that neither the Teachers were constrained to go far to their hearers; nor the hearers to take any tedious journey to their Teachers.

This teacheth us, that God will have every part of his people taught. Such is the goodness [Doctrine 1] of almighty God, that he will have none of his servants untaught, how small soever the places be, how mean soever the persons be. None are too high in regard of their great places; none are too low in regard of their obscure callings; none are too good to be taught, whatsoever their degrees be.

We see this most evidently in the Tribe of Levi it self: To what end and purpose were they divided in Jacob, and scattered in Israel, Gen. 49, but that all the Lord's people might be instructed from the highest to the lowest, and have their portion in due season allotted unto them of God? This is givē as a commendation of the Levites, and of Jehoshaphat that sent them, 2 Chron, 17, 9. They taught in Judah, and had the book of the Law of the Lord with them, and went about throughout all the Cities of Judah, and taught the people. This we see in the Apostle Paul, writing to the Ephesians, and setting down the notable fruits and ends of the Ministry of the word, Eph. 4, 13. He gave some to be Apostles, some Prophets, some Evangelists, some Pastors and Teachers, Till we all meet together in the unity of faith, unto a perfect man, and the measure of the age of the fullness of Christ. Touching the practice of this duty, we have a notable example in Christ our Savior, in many places of the Evangelists, Luke 8, 1. It came to pass afterward, that he went throughout every City and Village, preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God: and chap. 13, 22. He went through the Cities & Villages, teaching and iournying toward Jerusalem. The like we read of the twelve Apostles, who walked in the steps of their master, going through the Towns, preaching the Gospel, and healing everywhere, Luke 9, 6. So also it was with the seventy Disciples, the Lord sent thē two and two before his face, into every city and place, whither he himself would come, Luk. 10, 1. Seeing then the Priests and Levites, Christ & his Disciples, went about through all the Cities of Judah, published the Gospel in every city and village, preached everywhere, and went into all places, we conclude, that it is the ordinance of God, that all places, great and small; all persons, high and low: all congregations, big and little, should have the word of God established and settled among them.

[Reason 1] This will be made plain and clear unto us by diverse reasons. First, consider with me the titles that are given unto God in y^e Scriptures. He is worthily called the King of his Church, and the Lord & Master of his house-Is not he the Shepherd of Israel that leadeth Joseph like sheep? Psal. 80, 1. Will a Shepherd that hath any care of his Sheep, or any love unto them, look unto some of them and not to all? Or will he not rather, if any be gone astray, leave ninety and nine in the wilderness, and seek that lost one until he find it? So is it the will of our Father that is in heaven, that not one of these little ones should perish, Mat. 18, 14. He commandeth, that not one of these little ones should perish, Mat. 18, 10. He maketh us to lie down in green pastures, he leadeth us beside the still water, he restoreth our souls and leadeth us in the paths of righteousness for his names sake, Psal. 23, 2, 3. Jacob, that fed the sheep of his father in law, testifieth touching his care, that the drought consumed him in the day, and the frost pinched him in the night, and sleep departed from his eyes: so that whatsoever was torn of beasts, or stolen of thieves, was required at his hands, he bare the loss of it. Much more then will the Lord care for the sheep of his pasture; his rod and his staff shall comfort them, and although they walk through the valley of the shadow of death, they shall fear no evil. Will a king regard only the chief Cities and most populous places of his kingdom, and suffer the rest to live as they list, without laws & good orders? Or will the master of an house look to some in his family, and not to all? If then, God be our King, if he be our Master, he will look to all his subjects and servants whatsoever they be, that they shall have their meat in due season.

Secondly, such is the grace and goodness of God, that he would have all his people [Reason 2] come to knowledge. Such as know not his will, are none of his servants. If then he require the understanding & knowledge of his ways, not only of rich men, of great men, of learned men, and of the Ministers, but of all the people, of what calling and condition soever they be, how mean and simple soever they be: we must hereof conclude, that he hath ordained, that all of them should have the means of knowledge and salvation offered unto them, and published among them. To this purpose the Apostle saith, He will that all men shall be saved, and come unto the acknowledgement of the truth, 1 Tim. 2, 4. And Peter in his second Epistle, chap. 3. teacheth, that The Lord is not slack concerning his promise (as some men count slackness) but is long suffering to us ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. This is that which the Prophet Ezekiel setteth down, chap. 18, 11, 23, 32, and 33. Have I any pleasure at all, that the wicked should die, saith the Lord? and not that he should return from his ways, and live?

Thirdly, the word of God was penned for all estates, degrees, and conditions of men. It [Reason 3] serveth as eye-salve to clear the eyes of all persons, and to make the simple wise, Psal. 19, 7. and 119, 99, 100. It cleanseth the way of the young man, if he take heed thereunto with all diligence, Psal. 119, 9. The book of the Proverbs of Solomon the son of David, King of Israel, was written to give subtlety to the simple, and to the young man knowledge and discretion, Prov. 1, 4. The Apostle John wrote to the Fathers, because they had known him that is from the beginning: he wrote unto young men, because they have overcome the wicked one: he wrote to little children, because they have known the Father. If then the word do serve for all sorts, and sexes, and ages whatsoever, it followeth, that all must be taught from the greatest to the least, from the highest to the lowest.

Fourthly, all persons, whatsoever they be, have souls to save; simple persons, small congregations, [Reason 4] little assemblies, as well as others that are many in number. We consist not only of bodies, we must not only provide for this present life, but we have also souls to save and must prepare for the life to come. We shall all give an account of the things that we have done in this life, whether they be good or evil: forasmuch as the Lord will reward every man according to his works, Rom. 2.6. The day of our particular death, and the day of the general judgment, are both of them days of reckoning and account: and as the soul is most precious, so the account to be given for it is very great: and therefore from these premises we may necessarily deduct this conclusion, that it is the will and pleasure of God, that every place and person should be carefully instructed.

[Use 1] It remaineth therefore that we come to the uses, and as from a good tree, gather such fruit as groweth from thence. First we learn, that it is God's ordinance and appointment, that every congregation should have a learned Minister, to teach them the true religion and fear of God. It is not enough, that there be a settled & standing Ministry in one place or corner of the land, or in every great city; but he will have his people in all places, whether great or small, to be cared and provided for, & every Church have a sufficient Minister to instruct every member of it. Hence it is, that the Evangelist declareth, Acts 14.23. that the Apostles Paul and Barnabas, ordained Elders by election in every Church, and then they commended them to the Lord, in whom they believed. And in the Epistle to Titus, Paul saith unto him, Chap. 1. verse 5. For this cause left I thee in Creta, that thou shouldest continue to redress things that remain, and shouldest ordain Elders in every City, as I appointed thee. By every Church and every city in those places, we must understand, that wheresoever there is a body of people gathered together fit for a Congregation, there ought a Minister to be chosen, appointed, and set over the same. For wheresoever a Church is planted, and a distinct congregation established, there is an absolute necessity of a settled Ministry, (as we have shown before in the beginning of this Chapter) so that it is altogether impossible that without it religion should prosper or continue. The Lord had no sooner given his law concerning the erecting of the Tabernacle, but Aaron & his sons were anointed, and the whole tribe sanctified to the office of the Ministry, to attend on holy things, to teach the people, to offer sacrifices, & to perform such duties as were required of them. He knoweth that every man standeth in as great need of food for the soul, as he doth of nourishment for the body: and that as the body decayeth without sustenance, so the soul famisheth and pineth away without the bread of life. Wheresoever the Ministry of the word is wanting, there wanteth one of God's ordinances, one of his special blessings. We see by common and continual experience, when the corn is blasted, and the harvest of the field is perished, and the labor of the husbandman is destroyed, what crying & lamentation is made: how much more ought we to be grieved, to see the famine of the word brought upon us, and thousands perish thorough want of this ordinance of God? yet nevertheless many never lay it unto their hearts.

Secondly, it is required of the Ministers of [Use 2] the Gospel, whom the holy Ghost hath made overseers of their several flocks, to look to their whole charge from one quarter or corner of it to another. Neither may they think they have discharged their duties by casting an eye over some part of their congregation, but they must overlook and overview it all throughout, considering they are to give an account for every soul that dieth through their ignorance, or through their negligence. There is none of them, but they are content to take benefit and to receive maintenance from the poorest and lowest that depend upon them: and therefore as they are not ashamed to receive temporal things of them, so they ought not to disdain or refuse to minister unto them in spiritual things. For if we take from them their goods, and seek to do no good to their souls, we rob them and steal from them: nay so much as lieth in us, we are no better then murderers and manslaughterers. Wherefore we must endeavor to set up the candle upon the Table in the Lord's house, that it may shine and give light to all that are in it. Let us as the Lord's trumpeters sound the silver Trumpet of the word aloud, that all the host of God may hear the sound thereof, or at least may be without excuse, if they do not prepare themselves to battle. A good Prince taketh care for all his poor subjects, and receiveth them into his protection, and beareth the sword for their preservation. The soul of man quickeneth the whole body and every part of it, it giveth life to the hand as well as to the head, and to the foot as well as to the eye, as well to the parts that are lowest as to such members as are highest: so that no limb is destitute of the functions and operations of it. The head serveth to the benefit of every member which by certain joints and bonds are knit unto it, that they receive plentiful increase, and want no succor or strength necessary for any part, how little and mean soever it be. So ought it to be with the Ministers of the Gospel, who are made as it were stewards of the Lord's family, which is the Church, they must give them their portion of meat in due season: Blessed is that servant whom his master when he cometh, shall find so doing, Mat. 24.46. This serveth to reprove such as absent themselves from their charges, because they are small; and all proud and lofty spirits that think it a disgrace and dishonor unto them, to submit themselves to the lower sort, and to take pains to bring them to the knowledge of true religion. Hereby indeed they starve the fewest souls, but the loss of one soul is more heinous then the killing of many bodies. For the body may die, yet the soul may be saved in the day of the Lord. And this is one cause of Non-residency, in that such as are of proud spirits, do scorn the simplicity and poverty of their hearers. Wheresoever there is an haughty man and high-minded, there can by no means be an heart to serve the Lord in his Ministry. Where ambition and vain-glory bear sway, they are always joined with the contempt of others; which ought not to be among y^e Ministers: for how then shall the poor, the weak, the simple, be instructed by them? The Minister of the word must be affable, easy to be spoken withal, and familiar with the meanest and lowest: he must abase himself to reason and confer, and converse with the poor Artificer and tradesman, as well as with y^e Yeoman, or Gentleman, or rich man. The Apostle hath laid before us his own example, how he behaved himself when he was at Ephesus, Acts 20.18, 19, 20. Ye know from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations which befell me by the laying in wait of the Jews: and how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have shown you, and have taught you publicly, and from house to house, &c. He was not inferior in gifts to any, even the deepest doctors in our days, but went far beyond them all; he was caught up to the third heaven, even into Paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter: yet he made himself equal to the lowest, and stooped down to every degree, that by all means he might save some: Humility is a notable virtue, that decketh & adorneth all Christians, and is necessary to be in all that profess the fear of God, Col. 3.12. and is oftentimes commended unto us among the fruits of a regenerate person, which the Spirit of God would have us beautified withal. The Apostle Peter, chap. 5.5, 6. giveth this exhortation, Be all of you subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and gives grace to the humble: humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time. This heavenly gift is opposed to that vain-glory, pride, and ambition which naturally groweth in us, as Phil. 2.3. Let nothing be done through strife, and vain-glory, but in lowliness of mind, let each esteem other better than themselves. Howbeit this virtue is most notable and necessary above all other, to be in the Ministers of God's word, as Christ himself both by word and by example in his continual practice taught his disciples, Matt. 11.29. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. And when he had washed his disciples feet, he said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you? If I your Lord and master have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet: for I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you, John. 13.14, 15. The place of the Apostle is worthy of our remembrance to this purpose, 1 Thess. 2.7. We were gentle among you, even as a nurse that cherisheth her children, &c. Where Saint Paul, noting out his meekness and diligence in preaching unto them, showeth it by a familiar comparison, taken from a natural nurse-mother, who thinketh no service too base or mean in the washing, and wringing, in wiping and cleansing, in feeding and bringing up her tender infant. What is it that she will refuse to do? what pains will she not take for her child? what savors is she content to endure? how ready is she to break her sleep and rest in the night season, and never repineth at it? and albeit it be teasty and wayward, yet she maketh much of it, and loveth it never a whit the less. Thus it ought to be with the Ministers, whensoever any, even of the lowest that pertain unto their flock, when the tradesman, the Shoemaker, the Weauer, the Husbandman, when the servant, & the poor soul that hath scarce what to eat, or what to drink, or what to put on, shall resort unto them for comfort or counsel; then is there place especially for this grace of humbleness and lowliness of mind, they must make much of such as come unto them, and bear themselves familiarly and plainly toward them, entertaining them with all gentleness, and giving them encouragement with all patience▪ in hearing of them, and in bearing with their wants and imperfections. But many there are that take themselves to be such profound doctors, such learned Clearkes, such deep Divines, and iolly fellows, that they think it were a great disparagement unto them, to bestow their labor and learning among such sottes. They say, I could be content to take greater pains to teach Gentlemen, and those that are more civil; but these rudesbies, and Russet coats, who can abide to live withal? who can endure to spend his days among Clownes and clouted shoes? Thus they deal with Gops people, thus they speak of God's people, for whom Christ died: Thus they account of those that hunger and thirst after knowledge: thus they bewray the pride of their own hearts, and testify against themselves, the little love they bear to the sheep, to the sheepfold, and to the sheepeheard of the sheep. Let them step but one step forward, and then they will plainly discover their own hypocrisy, and evidently show that they differ little or nothing from the Papists themselves. For they, to discourage simple people from reading the Scriptures, call them dogs and swine, to whom holy things are not to be delivered; and to that purpose allege the words of Christ, Give not that which is holy, unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine: lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rent you: so these men account them as clownes and Coridons, and cast out what words of contempt they can against them: they bid them follow the plough tail, get them into their shops, and busy themselves in their trades; as though conference and communication with them were in no sort to be admitted, or as; though they had no souls to save: so that in short time peradventure these high minded men will esteem them as dogs and swine also, which ought not to tread in the LORD'S courts. These are far from the mind and example of Christ, who being equal with God, made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant; he vouchsafed to confer with rude and simple men, he taught men and women, high and low, rich and poor, he refused none. He taught indeed in the Temple, and in great cities, and in populous assemblies, but he disdained not to teach also in their villages and towns, and to instruct plain countrey men, and had oftentimes more comfort of his labors among such, then among men of greater callings. In like manner we that are called to this office, and have our special and particular place of teaching assigned unto us, ought to know that we must be no choosers, When the Lord of the harvest hath sent us into his field, the chief Shepherd of the sheep hath set us over his flock, and the householder hath hired us to labor in his vineyard, it is our duty to follow the example of our Lord and Master, and to apply our selves in our charges, that we may discharge them faithfully, zealously, carefully, and diligently. Let us not dislike our places in the country which we have taken, because the people are few, or rude, or simple, or poor, or of mean conceit and understanding in them. These men will do nothing in secret, but seek to be famous and to be known openly: they affect honors and promotions; they resort to great places, and solemn assemblies, and desire to preach in the Universities, at the Court, at Paul's, at the Spittle, or to be heard of great men, and noble personages: and in the mean season, absent themselves from their own cure of souls which are like to perish, for whom they must give account and come to their reckoning; and so disdain to have any dealing with such as are simple, as if they were too good, and the people too base. Let us seek to shake off this high conceit of our selves, and take heed of a scornful and disdainfull heart, which naturally accompanieth all, and especially those of great gifts, & of high places. We see this in Christ's own disciples, notwithstanding his own example of humility daily before their eyes, even when he was preaching most seriously and earnestly unto them of his death and departure, of his Cross and Passion, of love and humility, Luke 22.22, 23. they began to strive for superiority, & contend which of them should be accounted the greatest.

Thirdly, we have warrant and direction [Use 3] from hence, to desire most earnestly that the kingdom of God may flourish everywhere: Christ our Savior teacheth us to pray that his kingdom may come, Matth. 6.10. and so to be erected in the hearts of men. It was an holy affection in Moses, to desire that all the Lord's people were Prophets, Num. 11.29. so ought we to crave that God's word might be established among all men, and made manifest to all people of the world. This use consisteth of many branches: First, it is our duty, to bewail such places and persons as lie in darkness and ignorance, and consequently in the shadow of death. Christ had compassion of such, and his bowels yearned within him. Such as have not the light of the Gospel shining among them, are said to sit in darkness, and to live in the region of death, Matth. 4.16. There are many places of the land, & many thousand poor desolate souls that lie in great ignorance, and have no knowledge of the ways of God dwelling in them. The fields are ouergrown with briars and nettles, which should be white unto the harvest, John. 4.35. The devil smileth at it, and rejoiceth to behold the desolations of the Church, because it is the exalting of his throne, and the setting up of his kingdom. He is the king of the world, as Christ is of the Church: and his scepter is ignorance, as the scepter of Christ's kingdom is his word. And therefore when the seat of wickedness is overthrown by preaching of the Gospel, we may see Satan as lightning fall down from heaven, Luke 10.18. If then we can behold the ruins of the Church, and the destruction of many of our brethren through want of knowledge, and yet are not grieved at it, nor lament for it, we have not the affection in us of Christ the head, neither the grace of compassion that ought to be in us toward our fellow members.

Secondly, we are bound to desire, that wheresoever there is a candlestick, there may be a candle; and where there is a lamp, there may be oil in it; and where there is a Church set up, it may bear in it a burning and shining light: forasmuch as the doctrine that we deal withal doth teach us that it is the ordinance of God, that all places and persons wheresoever and whatsoever should be instructed. We see this in the counsel that Christ giveth to his disciples, Matth. 9.37, 38. When he saw the people scattered abroad as sheep without a shepherd, he said to his disciples, The harvest truly is plenteous but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest. It is our duty to pray for the preaching of the Gospel, as it were the standard of God, with all other ordinances of God, whereby his kingdom may be erected and established in perfect beauty, that it may be bright as the Sun, fair as the Moon, and terrible as an army with banners.

Thirdly, our desire must be, that the publishing of the Gospel may be blessed, where God hath vouchsafed it; for as the wanting of this comfortable means of salvation offereth much matter of mourning: so the planting of it in any place, ought to draw from us many prayers, for the more free passage, and good success of the word, that God may more and more be glorified by it. This we see in the blessing of Moses, the man of God, wherewith he blessed the tribe of Levi before his death, Deut. 33.11. Bless, O Lord, his substance, and accept the work of his hands, smite through the loins of them that rise against him, and of them that hate him, that they rise not again. Hath God then bestowed this blessing upon any people? Craue the continuance of it where it is once settled, to the glory of God, and the good of his people: for this is the way that leadeth to the kingdom of immortality. Heaven is as a City: the Church is as the Suburbs that giveth passage or entrance into it: and the word is the statute-law by which it is ruled and ordered. The Prophet craveth oftentimes the blessing of God upon his Church, and his ordinances that are therein, Psal. 51.18. and 122.6.

Fourthly, we learn that it is required of us to be thankful to God, and to praise his name, when he hath been favorable to Zion, and built the walls of Jerusalem, and sent faithful Pastors according to his heart, that may feed his people with knowledge and understanding, Jer. 3.15. When he hath enlarged his Sanctuary, and spread abroad his saving health, we ought to conceive great joy of heart, and express our thankfulness by duties of obedience under the Ministry of the word. For as the want thereof is a token of God's great judgment and displeasure, so the enjoying of the means, is a testimony of his great goodness toward the people of those places; and therefore it ought to draw from us a subjection to his ordinance, and an acknowledgement of his free favor toward us, and a furtherance of us in his fear and our faith.

Fifthly, we must all labor in our several places, and according to our several callings, to embrace the love of God's service and Sanctuary, hungering after the salvation of our brethren. One neighbor is to call another, and one friend is to speak to another, as if he invited them as guests, to a royal and sumptuous feast. This we see in the Prophet, Many Nations shall come and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths, &c. Mich. 4.2. A farther practice of this we see in Christ's disciples, so soon as they had found Christ, they guided others in the way, and pointed him out with the finger, that he might be known of their brethren. If we lay all these things together, and deeply consider with our selves in the meditation of our hearts, of the estate of our present times, in which we live, and compare them with the days of Christ our Savior, it will cause us to wish with the Prophet, that our head were waters, and our eyes a fountain of tears, that we might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of our people. If Christ were now again upon the earth, and should make a visitatiō of this kingdom, as once he did of Galilee, he would (alas) have just cause to complain of the estate of the Church among us, and to account of a great many Congregations, as he did of them, namely, to be poor silly sheep scattered and wandering abroad without shepherds, and therefore might as truly say of us now, as he did of them then, The harvest is great, but the laborers to gather the harvest are few, &c. There wanted not in those times store of Priests, Scribes, Pharisees, but these were loiterers, not laborers: idle bellies, not painful teachers: so there is plenty of Ministers in our times, no place is empty no Church is void, no assembly is destitute, nay the number of them is in so great abundance, that many wander up and down the country, as servants without a master, or travelers without a dwelling, ready to be hired for a little, if any Micah will give them their diet, and ten shekels by the year, and a suite of apparel, Judge. 17.10. being glad to serve for a piece of silver, and a morsel of bread, as the Lord threatened the posterity of Eli, 1 Sam. 2.36. But concerning faithful sheepeards, and painful Pastors that make conscience of their places, and keep their watch day and night in their watch tower, to descry and discover the approach of the enemy, and to lead their sheep in the green Pastures of holiness & righteousness, the number is small, so that in many shires and countries, scarce the twentieth parish is provided of one that is able and willing to teach them. In some places we have Non-residents, that post over their charges to others: in other, we have men of great gifts, but of little grace to make conscience of their duty: in many there is no ability or sufficiency to stand up before the people, and to divide the word of truth aright unto them. All these are as Caterpillars that devour the fat of the land; or as locusts and cankerwormes, that take the spoil of whatsoever they can lay hands upon. No marvel therefore, if there dwell in the people such horrible and palpable darkness, like that of Egypt, so that the greater part of them may well be likened and resembled to the horse and mule, in whom there is no understanding. For where there are idle shepherds, there are also idle hearers: and where the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch, Matth. 15.14.

Lastly, this doctrine serveth as an instruction to all Magistrates (as their places serve [Use 4] them) to further the preaching of the word, and to furnish such places as belong unto them with able teachers. This is required of all godly Magistrates, whether they be supreme or subordinate, that they endeavor to be nursing fathers to the Church, Isaiah 49. that they by their authority may encourage and countenance, all such as are Pastors and teachers, to the end they may go boldly forward with that worthy work which is in their hands. A notable example hereof we have in those Princes that were sent out by Jehoshaphat: for albeit they did not preach to the people, in the cites to which they came, nor minister the Sacraments, nor offer the sacrifices, nor burn incense, inasmuch as they had the Levites with them to do that service: yet it is not to be omitted or concealed, that they did countenance them, and accompany them; and this their authorizing or backing of them is called a preaching, because it made a plain way, and set open a wide door for the people's better receiving of the word with readiness, cheerfulness, and obedience.

The example of great personages is of great force, and is a strong cord to draw inferiors after them. Whensoever such men of high place make account of the Ministers, & highly esteem of their message and Ministry, it moveth others most mightily to show reverence to this holy ordinance of God. Especially it belongeth to them that are Patrones, & have the presentation and collation of spiritual promotions, to have an especial care and regard that the Churches committed to their tuition may be sufficiently furnished, and that as well the small flocks, as the greater herds be provided of godly and learned teachers: for as much as Christ himself, preaching the Gospel of the kingdom from place to place, as occasion served, and the necessity of the people required, delivered the joyful news and glad tidings of salvation, as well to the people of little villages, as to the inhabitants of famous towns and populous Cities: not only to thousands that flocked to hear him, but to hundreds and ten's that came unto him. He shunned popularity, and the applause of men, and shown not himself always openly, nor any otherwise then as he might do most good to the people, and gain greatest glory to his Father. He was not ambitious, or vain-glorious, nor sought the praise of men, John. 7.10. and 5.41. and 8.50. When God determined to destroy the Cities of the plain, at the request of Lot in mercy he saved Zoar, a little town, Gen. 19. God hath his people whom he created, and Jesus Christ redeemed, even in little places as well as in great parishes: in small villages, as well as in large Cities. These have souls to save as well as others. Little flocks would have their shepherds, as well as great herds: such as are poor servants of the family, would be glad to have food to eat, as well as the chiefest persons. To instruct a country-village, is a work of mercy, as well as to teach the mother-Cities of a kingdom: and to be careful of the high or head places, but careless of little hamlets, is as unmerciful a part, as to pamper up a great family, and to let a little one starve for hunger: or as if a Prince should provide for the safety of great multitudes of his subjects, and neglect the lesser companies that abide in poorer villages: or as if a man should tender the welfare of his head, and never regard his foot, or his finger. Wherefore all Magistrates must set before their eyes the example of God, as a clear glass to look upon, appointing the ordering of the Levites in such sort, that all the Tribes might be instructed, being so divided & scattered among the rest, that their labors might be communicated to all: as also the example of Jesus Christ, who in the days of his flesh, taught and preached everywhere, not only at Jerusalem, but in Galilee, and other desert and desolate places; so that they ought to have an especial care and regard, that every Congregation have his sufficient Minister. And that they may be constrained to yield to this truth, or at least persuaded to the practice and performance of this duty, or if not persuaded, yet convinced in conscience that it should be done, and that it is their sin if it be left undone: let us a little consider somewhat farther the fact of God, how careful he was thereof, in the land of Israel, that as well the little towns, as the greater Cities might have able teachers.

Hence it is, that he commandeth the children of Israel, that they give unto the Levites, the ordinary teachers of the people, of the inheritance in their possession, Cities to dwell in: all the Cities which they were to give to these Levites, were eight and forty, Num. 35.2, 7. The accomplishment whereof, we may read at large in the book of Joshua, chap. 21.4, 5, 6, 7. In every Tribe they had four Cities, and so were by the ordinance of God divided in Jacob, and scattered in Israel, according to the ancient Prophecy of Jacob, Gene. 49. For out of the Tribes of Judah, Simeon, and Benjamin, they had 13. Cities, verse 4. Out of the families of the Tribe of Ephraim, and out of the Tribe of Dan, and out of the half Tribe of Manasseh, they had 10. Cities, verse 5. Out of the families of the tribe of Issachar, and out of the Tribe of Asher, and out of the Tribe of Naphtali, and out of the half tribe of Manasseh in Bashan, they had 13. Cities, verse. 6. Lastly, out of the Tribe of Reuben, Gad, and Zebulun, they had given and granted unto them 12. Cities, verse 7. By this means was the instruction of God's people provided for plentifully, through a multitude of Cities appointed unto them, not altogether, or in one place of the land, but dispersed here and there according to the infinite wisdom of God, and the absolute necessity of the people. We heard before, what wonderful care godly Jehoshaphat the king of Judah had, who sent the Levites throughout all the Cities of his kingdom, which carried with them the Book of the Lord, and taught all the land, and his zeal was rewarded with riches, honor, and great prosperity in abundance, 2. Chron. 17.5.9. The like commendation is given of Josiah, who appointed the Priests to their several charges, and encouraged them to the service of the Lord, and said unto the Levites that taught all Israel, which were holy unto the Lord, Put the holy Ark in the house which Solomon the son of David king of Israel did build, &c.

So then, for as much as Christ preached to small villages, as well as to bigger towns: forasmuch as it was the wise policy of God, to place the Levites round about his Tabernacle, and to grant unto them cities throughout every Tribe; forasmuch as it was the carefulness of Jehoshaphat and Josiah to have all places of their kingdom replenished with good and able teachers; and forasmuch as the Apostle would have Elders chosen by election in every City: let all those that are Patrones of benefices, and bestowers of Ecclesiastical livings, look out godly and learned preachers where there is want, that even small preferments in little Parishes and villages, may have Ministers of more ability then commonly they have, lest even the blood of them that perish through the ignorance of the one, and default of the other, be required at their hands. If the cure or Congregation be small, it is by many thought to be a sufficient cause to bestow it upon an insufficient person, and sometimes upon their porters or other servants, if so be they can in any reasonable or tolerable sort read English, and satisfy the Law, they think no more is required at their hands: and all this is practiced, because (forsooth) it is a little Parish. But Christ hath shown by his own example, that little Parishes are to be instructed as well as great and wide Cities. And if this example cannot teach us, it shall be able to condemn us of unfaithfulness, and of want of mercy and compassion toward the souls of men.

The Lord put it into the hearts of such as are to dispose the livings of lesser Congregations, to set over them such Pastors, as may feed them with the bread of life, that is, with the preaching of the Gospel of the kingdom.

40 And the Lord said unto Moses, Number all the first borne of the males of the children of Israel, from a month old and upward, and take the number of their names.

41 And thou shalt take the Levites for me (I am the Lord) instead of all the first borne among the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites, instead of all the firstlings among the cattle of the children of Israel.

42 And Moses numbered as the Lord commanded him, all the first borne among the children of Israel.

43 And all the first borne males, by the number of names, from a month old and upward, of those that were numdred of them, were twenty and two thousand, two hundred, and threescore, and thirteen.

44 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

45 Take the Levites instead of all the first borne among the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle, and the Levites shall be mine: I am the Lord.

46 And for those that are to be redeemed of the two hundred threescore and thirteen, of the first borne of the children of Israel, which are more then the Levites, 47 Thou shalt even take five shekels apeece, by the polle, after the shekel of the Sanctuary shalt thou take them: the shekel is twenty gerahs.

48 And thou shalt give the money, wherewith the odd number of them is to be redeemed, unto Aaron and to his sons.

49 And Moses took the redemption money, of them that were over and above them that were redeemed by the Levites.

51 And Moses gave the money of them that were redeemed, unto Aaron and to his sons, according to the word of the Lord, as the Lord commanded Moses.

Hitherto we have spoken of the numbering of the Tribe of Levi, simply without any relation to others. Now we are to speak of it comparatively. For in this place the Levites are compared with the first borne among the people, whom God commanded to be redeedeemed by substitution of the Levites, and appointing of them in their room. This hath two parts: First, the enumeration it self, comparing the persons to be redeemed with those that are to succeed them, and come in their places, to the 44. verse.

Secondly, the manner of matching or equalling of them both, whose number was different, to wit, the Levites, and the first borne, by a Pecuniary redemption of those that did amount to more then the Levites, to the end of the Chapter. Touching the first, we are to consider these particulars: first, the commandment of God, charging Moses to number the first borne that are males among the children of Israel (the Levites being already numbered, as we have heard in the former part of this Chapter,) from a month old and above, and to take the number of their names; and then commanding him to substitute the persons of the Levites for his service, and their cattle for the cattle of the first borne. Secondly, the obedience of Moses to this commandment; all the first borne of the males being numbered, amounted to the number of two and twenty thousand, two hundred, seventy and three.

The second point is the paralleling or equalling of them both, by redeeming the overplus of the first borne, wherein also we may behold the commandment of God, and execution of it by Moses. The Lord commandeth the Levites to succeed the first borne, and whereas there were 273. moe of the first borne, then of the Levites, he ordaineth that five shekels of the Sanctuary should be paid of the people, for every person that was above that tribe, which money was to be given to the Priests. The execution of the commmandement followeth in the three last verses, wherein we may see how Moses obeyeth in them both; for he took the redemption money of the people, and gave the money of them that were redeemed to Aaron, and to his sons according to the word of the Lord.

Out of this division six questions may be demanded, all which we will run over, and briefly dispatch, that we may proceed to the doctrine.

[Object. 1] The first question may be asked, how the number of y^e first borne which came to 22273 surmounted the number of the Levites which amounted to the number of 22300. For if we consider what Moses hath expressed before in the particular sums of the several families mentioned in this Chapter, it may seem at the first sight, that the Levites were moe in number then the first borne, & exceeded them by 27. persons. For the sum of the family of the Gershonites, was accounted to be 7500 persons, verse 22. The sum of the family of the Kohathites, was accounted 8600. verse 28. Lastly, the sum of the family of the Merarites, was said to be 6200. The total sum of these three particulars amounteth to 22300. whereas the first borne amounted only to 22273. I answer, this difference is only in show, and not in substance; for in the family of the Kohathites, the Priests also were comprehended, and the first borne of the Levites: so that, whereas the number of these amounted to three hundred, the Levites are rightly said to be two and twenty thousand, verse 39. and the first borne among the Israelites to be two and twenty thousand, two hundred seventy and three.

[Object. 2] Secondly, the question may be asked, how the money commanded to be given for the redeeming of the 273. persons that were above the number of the Levites, was paid: whether by the first borne that were last numbered, or by the people? [Answer.] I answer, by the people, to Moses, for the Priests: for so doth common equity require, that one might not be eased, and another burdened. But if these first borne had borne the burden, and others been freed from the payment of this sum appointed and enjoined, there had been no equity nor equality observed, which the dignity of holy things seemeth to require.

[Object. 3] Thirdly, it may be asked, wherefore God challengeth the first borne to be his? I answer, we see the cause, [Answer.] Exod. 13. because he preserved them, when he had made a general destruction of the first borne among the Egyptians.

Fourthly, wherefore would God have the Levites taken instead of these first borne? and [Object. 4] to seru him in their room? I answer, [Answer.] first he did it in mercy toward their parents, who might through this liberality use them as their own, and employ them in their service: so that whereas before they were the Lord's, now they are returned to their parents. Secondly, to show the accomplishment of Jacob's prophesy, that they must be scattered among the other Tribes, Gen. 49. Thirdly, to commend the dignity and worthiness of the Ministry, in that they succeeded such worthy and honorable persons, who were the flower of all the family.

Fifthly, whereas the price of redemption [Object. 5] and satisfaction for the 273. is commanded and appointed to be five shekls for every person, after the weight of the Sanctuary: the question may be asked, what a shekel is, and what is the shekel of the Sanctuary, and how it differeth from the common shekel. [Answer.] I answer, first touching the shekel, then touching the kinds of it.

The shekel was partly a piece of money, and partly a weight. The value of it according to our coin and common money, seemeth to be two shillings sixpence, and weighing half an ounce in weight, as the best Hebrew writers testify: of which you may read at large in the learned Commentaries of our own men, set forth in our English tongue, the sum whereof is this: That two several pieces have been seen and weighed, one weighed just half an ounce, which had upon one side the pot of Manna, with this inscription, Shekel Israel, and on the other side was stāped Aaron's rod, with this title; Jerusalem Kedeshah, holy Jerusalem, in the ancient Samaritan characters. Likewise, there is another piece with the same pictures which was but half so much in weight, being but half the shekel.

Beza setteth down the very same description of the shekel, Matthew, chapter 17. verse 24. which was given unto him by Ambrose Blancerus. Arias Montanus affirmeth also, that while he was at the Council of Trent, there was brought unto him by a friend, an ancient piece of silver, with the very same figures, and Characters, which he likewise found to weigh half an ounce.

Touching the diverse kinds of the shekel, there are diverse opinions why it is called the shekel of the Sanctuary. Arias Montanus affirmeth that it is called the sacred shekel, because it was the shekel that the Israelites used, who were an holy people unto God. But forasmuch as God speaking to his own people, & Moses writing to this people make this difference, it seemeth rather that there was a difference of shekels, not only between the Israelites and the Gentiles, but among the Israelites themselves; otherwise that distinction had been needless and superfluous. Others hold, that it is called the shekel of the Sanctuary, because the standard measure was kept in the Sanctuary, that there might remain a just and full weight without imminution or corruption: forasmuch as the weights and measures that were commonly used, were oftentimes altered and changed according to the covetous affections of corrupt men, as the Prophet Amos noteth, chap. 8.5. When will the new Moon be gone, that we may sell corn? and the abbath that we may set forth Wheat, making the Ephah small, and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit? That is, in selling, they used small measures, and in buying great weights, so y^t they did buy with one weight, and sell with another. But howsoever many of the learned lean to this opinion, yet in my judgment it seemeth unprofitable, forasmuch as we never read (to my remembrance) that any weights or measures were kept in the Sanctuary, which was a place for holy things, and a figure of things to come, so that both the whole and every several part had their several significations, and looked unto Christ to come. Besides, the Apostle writing to the Hebrews, chap. 9.4. setteth down the particular things that were contained in it, as the golden Censer, the Ark of the Covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had Manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the Tables of the Covenant, and over it the Cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy seat, &c. Where we see, he mentioneth what was in the Sanctuary, what was near unto it, what over it, &c. yet we have no naming of keeping any shekel in it. Furthermore, if this weight were there, to avoid the practices of injustice, why had they not also the like provision in other weights and measures also, as well as in this? was there no fear of fraud, but in this? or must the arms of injustice and wrong be tied up in one kind, and left at random in all the rest? Why had they not also the Gerah of the Sanctuary, the Omer of the Sanctuary, the Ephah of the Sanctuary, and so of the rest? Lastly, to omit other circumstances and considerations, this most holy place seemeth of all other, to be most unfit for the keeping of such human and worldly things, whereunto also the people could not have free ingresse, and egress, and regress, at their pleasure, when they should try the truth of their weights and measures. Seeing they had not access to this place when they would, it was not fitted to such a purpose. The third opinion whereunto the greatest number of writers do accord, which seemeth most likely, to which also I incline, is, that there are two kind of shekels, the one common or profane, the other sacred or holy called the shekel of the Sanctuary, double so much as the former; the common shekel amounting to two shillings sixpence, the valuation of y^e other coming to five shillings, according to our money, that is in use among us.

Sixthly, where it is said that the shekel is [Object. 6] twenty Gerahs, verse 47. the question may be asked, what a Gerah is? I answer, [Answer.] the shekel being justly valued, it will easily appear what a Gerah is; but because we shall have fit occasion to discuss this point afterward, in the fifth chapter, we will refer the reader to that place.

[Verse 41. Take the Levites instead of all the first borne, &c.] We see here, that the Levites were substituted in the place of the first borne, who did first of all execute the Ministers office. The Lord, if it had pleased him, could have served the Church with them forever: but for the causes before rehearsed, he exempted them from this service, after that for a small time and a few years, he had tried their obedience to his holy will and commandment. Now, in their stead he taketh the Tribe of Levi to minister unto him, and for his [Doctrine 1] people. We learn hereby, that the office of the Ministry, is a most worthy and excellent calling. This is that which the Apostle saith writing to the Hebrews, chap. 5.4. No man taketh this honor to himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron; If then it be an honor to be called to this office, it followeth to be an high and honorable calling. Likewise, writing to the Romans, and declaring that none can preach except they be sent, he addeth out of the Prophet, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things? Rom. 10.15. And instructing Timothy touching this office, he saith, This is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a Bishop, he desireth a worthy work; and afterward in the same Epistle, cha. 5.17. Let the Elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, specially they who labor in the word and doctrine.

Seeing then, the Ministry is an honor as the Priesthood of Aaron was, seeing the office is a worthy work, and seeing the feet of the Ministers that bring the word unto us, are beautiful, so that they are worthy, not only of single, but of double honor; it followeth that the calling is exalted above many others, and ought to have a reverent and special account among us.

The truth hereof will farther appear [Reason 1] unto us by the force of reasons, as so many props to stay it up. First, we must consider the title given unto them of an Ambassador: what greater honor, then to be the Ambassador of a Prince? The Minister is more, he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts, and cometh from the King of kings, and Lord of lords. He is instead of Christ, appointed and sent of him to reconcile men to himself, and to save them.

So then, the Ministers supply the office, and sustain the person of the Son of God, who is the word and wisdom of his Father. Not that he would have the Ministry of his word less esteemed, then if he should speak from heaven with terrible signs of Thunder and lightning; but that he might by this means teach in a more familiar manner, and so make the better trial of our obedience. Therefore the Apostle saith, He that knoweth God, heareth us; he that is not of God, heareth us not, hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error. We must hear the word preached by man, not as the word of man, but as it is indeed the word of God, and so set our selves in his presence. Hence it is, that he saith to the disciples whom he had sent out, He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that despiseth you, despiseth me: and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me. If then the Ministry be an embassage sent unto us from God, whereby God after a sort sueth to us for reconciliation, it serveth to set forth unto us the honor of this calling.

Secondly, the honor of the Ministry is to [Reason 2] save men's souls, which of all works, is the highest, the holiest, the heauenlyest, the greatest. What other calling can compare with it in this respect? Other professions and ordinances, respect the good of this life, as peace, or health, or wealth, and such like: but the end of the Ministry alone is the salvation of souls. Paul willeth Timothy to take heed to himself, and unto doctrine, adding this reason, for in doing this, thou shalt save both thyself, and them that hear thee. It will be objected, we are saved by Christ only, as I have been oftentimes answered: we have salvation by no other then by him. It is true indeed, Christ hath performed so much as is sufficient for the salvation of all, yet none are actually saved, but they only to whom the benefits and merits of the Messiah are communicated. Now his merits are applied two ways, by the Ministry of the word, and by receiving of the Sacraments, for which cause the power of salvation is ascribed unto them. We do not teach that men are saved by the preaching of the word, to drive men from Christ thereby, or to build our salvation upon any other; for we preach nothing, we regard to know nothing, but Christ and him crucified. We go not about to lay any other foundation, but the question is of the means how we shall come to the saving knowledge of Christ, which is ordinarily done by the sound and sincere preaching of the Gospel: so that this calling is a most excellent calling.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, this truth is farther confirmed and strengthened by the contrary, in that without it ordinarily no man can attain to salvation, as may appear by the means whereby it is effected, and by the degrees whereby it is finished. None shall be saved but such as are effectually called: but what is the Church other, then a company of men called? and they are called by the Ministry of y^e Gospel, made powerful and effectual by the Spirit of God: Ye are called by our Gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ. By it, our minds are enlightened to see our own miseries, and God's infinite mercies, and then by it, as by the strong arm of God we are drawn unto him. Again, none are saved, but such as are justified, being acquitted from their sins, and accepted in Christ as righteous, and as heirs of eternal life. But we are justified by faith, and faith cometh by hearing the word of God, so that the Preachers are the Ministers by whom we believe. Lastly, none are saved, but such as are sanctified by the Spirit of regeneration, and whosoever is in Christ, is become a new creature: but we are borne again by the immortal seed which is the word of the eternal God, so that we are begotten into him by y^e preaching of the word. In this respect the Ministers are called spiritual fathers, because they beget us as children by the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Thus then we see the worthiness and excellency of this calling, and what we are to esteem thereof.

As then we heard the reasons, so let us hearken [Use 1] to the uses. First of all, this ought to be a strong motive unto us to move us to desire this calling. It is an encouragement unto us to enter into it, & a good warrant that it is lawful to desire it. Who doth not desire honor & excellency in this world? Saul, being threatened to have the kingdom rent from him, desired that Samuel would honor him among the people. God lifteth up the heads of those that are fitted to this calling, who are as one of a thousand. But is it indeed lawful, will some say, to affect this calling, & to desire the office of a Bishop? may a man seek and sue for it? I answer, [Answer.] neither every man nor all desire is warranted. There are two sorts of men, & two sorts of desires. Some men are fitted, and some are unfit. There is a desire that is good, and there is a desire that is evil, according as the fountain is out of which they issue & proceed. The corrupt desire ariseth sometimes from ambition, and sometimes frō covetousness, delighting to set out themselves, or coveting to enrich themselves. For some are possessed and puffed up with the spirit of pride and vain glory, setting out themselves with shows of worldly wisdom, and magnifying themselves and their gifts, to tickle wanton and delicate ears: others make the Ministry as their last shift and refuge, when they have made shipwreck of a good conscience, and know not otherwise how to live. This is a wicked & preposterous desire. For as such as have neither learning nor honesty, neither are willing to labor for their living, when they can no longer maintain themselves, their last remedy is to turn Ale-house-keepers, and to set up tippling houses: so such as have gottē a little smattering knowledge, as shreds or scraps gathered from other men's tables, & have peradventure baited their horses in the University, though they be as far from sound or settled skill in Divinity, as their horses, when they know not which way to turn themselves to live, neither can shift anymore, their scandalous and lascivious courses, being descried and perceived of all men, begin to think of the Ministry, and make that a means to maintain them idly, loosely, and wickedly. This desire is sinful and carnal, woe unto such as thus desire the calling: woe unto such as help them to it, and as it were hold the stirrup unto them, while they mount up into Moses chair: woe unto them that suffer them to have entrance and give them easy passage to make houocke of the sheep of Christ: and woe unto that people that have such a plague sent in among them, to destroy their souls. But besides this, there is an holy and godly desire coming from the true fear of God, and the zeal of his glory, when he giveth unto a man this purpose and resolution, to consecrate himself to the Ministry of the Church, and to put in practice such gifts as are bestowed upon him. The former sort desire the honor, not the work: the maintenance, but not the pains. Such as desire it to be revered, are ambitious: such as affect it, to be maintained, are covetous. They that are set in this calling ought to be revered, but they ought not to respect that as the end of their entrance into it: they ought to be maintained, but that should not be their principal mark, but God's glory and the people's good.

Blessed are they that have this godly desire; blessed be God, that hath put it into their hearts: and blessed are that people that have such a conscionable Pastor set over them to reveal unto them the counsels of God and the mysteries of salvation. These men feeling the blessing of God upon their studies, and themselves in some good measure fitted and furnished for this function, are willing to exercise their gifts, and employ their talent, which is indeed one part of their calling. Hence it is that Paul saith, Ro. 1.15.16. So much as in me is, I am ready to preach the Gospel to you that are at Rome also; for I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation, to everyone that believeth, &c. He acknowledgeth himself a debtor unto all men: God is the creditor, who hath given out his money to everyone of his servants, that they should gain everyone to their master, not to themselves: the money committed is his gifts and graces that he hath distributed unto them according to his own pleasure: so that we having received, not only to believe our selves, but to teach faith unto others, ought to be ready, willing, prompt, and prepared to employ such gifts as are bestowed upon us. Thus also doth the Apostle Peter teach the Elders, to feed the flock of God which is among them, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly: not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind, &c. And in the Old Testament, the Prophet Isaiah, (when his tongue had been touched with a coal from the Altar, and that he had heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send?) doth of his own accord offer himself and his service, Behold, here I am, send me. Wherefore, whomsoever the Lord God shall call immediately by his Spirit, and furnish with gifts requisite for a Minister, he will also touch his heart with willingness and readiness to employ those graces, and to set them on work; he will give him a desire to glorify him in the service of the Church, and to gain souls to his Master Christ.

Secondly, it reproveth sundry abuses of [Use 2] such as transgress against this truth, and dash their foot against this doctrine, as against a stone; as if they meant violently to oppose themselves against it, or knew not that therein they fight against God; which may be reduced to three heads. First, such as abuse their persons, and tread upon them as their footstool: Secondly, such as contemn the Ministry it self as base and vile: Thirdly, such as deny them any maintenance fit for their calling. One sort are wretched and profane, another proud & high-minded, the third worldly and covetous.

Touching the first sort, it is too common a practice in the world to scorn and scoff at the Ministers of the Gospel, which is as much as to make open profession to be void of all soundness and sincerity of religion. For such as hate them and despise them, because they are Ministers, do despise, nay despite God himself, and Christ our Savior, as Luke 10.16. He that despiseth you despiseth me: and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me. Where Christ setteth down this as a rule, whereby every man may examine his own heart, and make trial of his religion and piety toward God, even by his affection and behavior toward the Ministers of God. It was never known since the world stood, that he did ever so much as savor of any goodness, that could not abide a faithful Minister. I deny not, but he may deceive himself, but God is not mocked: he may pretend piety, but it is nothing but cursed and cankered hypocrisy. The word is the seed of regeneration: it cannot therefore be that such as have been brought to the state of grace and salvation by this precious seed of the word, should abase & abuse those by whom they have been begotten. Will a son, except he do degenerate and become a monster, revile him that brought him into this world, and gave him life and breath? So is it as unnatural, and much more, to contemn the spiritual fathers of our souls: forasmuch as of the fathers of our bodies, we receive only temporal life, but of these, eternal. It is well said by one of the ancients, that whosoever despiseth the Preachers of the Gospel, is an Atheist and profane person, and a despiser of Christ himself.

These do not only sin against God, and against the Gospel, but against their own souls; they hinder their own salvation and the salvation of many others, and so make their means vnavailable, and commit a sin more heinous and horrible then that of Onan, who spilled his seed on the ground, least he should give seed unto his brother, Gen. 38.9. The seed of the word is immortal and remaineth forever, and therefore is of greater price; so that they are spiritual murderers of thousand souls that seek to spill it and spoil it, as water on the earth, least it should fructify in the hearts of men. If we should see a man pull out his own eyes that he might not see, or cut off his ears that he might not hear, we would all pity his case, and say he were running mad. But thus it fareth with these irreligious persons; they make themselves blind, that they might be without seeing, they make themselves deaf that they might be without hearing, and they harden their hearts that they might be without feeling. This is spiritual and desperate madness to despise so great a blessing without which we cannot be saved, nor obtain any good things promised unto us. And howsoever these men, to excuse their own impiety and to blind the eyes of the simple, will pretend love and liking to the word it self, yet they utterly deceive themselves: for this is one rule to be observed and learned of us, that whosoever abuseth the Ministers despiseth also the Ministry, as he that liketh the Physic by which he is to be recovered, will also make much of the Physician, whose counsel he hath used. Whosoever accounteth not the feet of those beautiful that bring glad tidings of peace, will not much esteem the Gospel it self: and whosoever despiseth the Messenger, will not regard the message that is delivered unto him.

For the Ministry is the ordinary means, whereby it pleaseth God to save those that believe, Rom. 1.16. 1 Cor. 1.21. Let this be also another rule, y^t whosoever account the Ministry of the Gospel as vile in their eyes, it shall be easier for them of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, then for them, Mat. 10.15. and 11.24. yea, Christ our Savior willeth his Apostles to shake off the dust of their feet, as witness against them that hear not their words, neither receive their persons. Wherefore this also shall be another rule, that to abuse the Ministers of the word, and esteem them as the of-scourings of the world, whose feet (as we heard) are beautiful to all the elect, because they bring glad tidings of peace and of all good things) is an horrible sin highly displeasing to God, grievously provoking him to anger, and swiftly calling down judgment upon their heads. Wherefore he saith in the Prophet, Touch not mine Anointed, and do my Prophets no harm. And Moses prayeth to God on the behalf of Levi, to smite thorough the loins of them that rise against him, and of them that hate him, that they rise not again. The persons of Ambassadors are by law of all Nations, sacred and inviolable; the heathen saw it and set it down, and never ceased to revenge the wrongs done unto them, both upon particular persons, and upon whole Cities. The Law of God and man, sacred and profane, account the injuries done unto a messenger, as done against him who sent him: and therefore they were wont to be safely garded and protected, not only in times of peace, but amidst the weapons and naked swords of the enemies. David revenged most sharply the injuries and indignities offered to his Ambassadors with the overthrow of the Ammonites, 2 Sam. 10. and never did he show the like exemplary punishment in that extrem manner. Do earthly Princes and States revenge the wrongs offered to their servants sent out by commandment and commission from them: and shall we think that the Lord of hosts, the king of kings, who is the God of vengeance, will suffer the opprobries, contumelies, and contempts offered to his messengers, to go unpunished? The Ministers are the high Ambassadors of God, so that they send not themselves, but are sent out of him, and they execute not their own willes, but his will: and therefore the infinite Majesty of almighty God is violated and abused in the indignities that are offered unto them, and doubtless he will avenge his servants which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with his enemies. I tell you, he will avenge them speedily. No man offending in this kind of unkind abuses toward them, ever escaped the punishments of God. How often did God plague his people in the wilderness, when they rose up against Moses and Aaron, the Ministers of God for their good, who taught Jacob his judgments, and Israel his laws? When Jeroboam stretched out his hand against the Prophet to lay hold on him, his hand wasted and withered, so that albeit he put it out, yet he was not able to pull it in again. The two Captains with their fifties, sent out by Ahaziah to apprehend the Prophet, were destroyed with fire from heaven, and never returned to bring their master word how they spedde. The lewd and ungracious children that mocked Elisha, and upbraided him with his baldnesse, were torn in pieces by two Bears that came out of the wood upon them. The people of Israel that misused the messengers of God, and contemned the Prophets, that spake unto them early and late, were rejected and carried into captivity, into the land of their enemies. Neither is it to be maruelled at, that God hath sent such strange examples of his wrath and indignation upon the contemners of his Ministers, forasmuch as they are as Cyants that fight against God, and therefore he appointed death to him that rebelled against y^e Priest, as those rebels were swallowed up of the earth that made insurrection against Aaron, and usurped the Priesthood contrary to the institution of God: in which place, Moses saith, It is not Aaron that you strive against, but even against God himself, Numb. 16.11. If we follow these men in their practices, let us also fear to fall into their punishments. For God will not be mocked, though the Ministers be misused: and his hand is not shortened, though they be taunted and reviled of us. He will account these reproaches to reach unto heaven, and they shall be of sufficient force to cast us down into hell, except we repent of these evils.

But let us pass from their persons, and come to the function it self. Many there are that are grown a degree farther in impiety, who making no conscience to go out of the way, do wander farther from home then many other. There are indeed some who stick not to account of the Ministers as the filth of the earth; they will give no reverence unto them, they acknowledge them not to be sent to reconcile men unto God, but disgrace them and dishonor them what they can: howbeit they will not break out in open contempt of the Ministry it self, but seem to esteem highly and reverently, and religiously of it. There is some hope of these, that by the mercy of God, they may be reclaimed and reformed. Others spare not to speak against the calling it self, and utter slanderous words against God's ordinance, as men that are come to the height of sin, and have filled up the measure thereof to the brim. These are like Ahab; when Elijah came into his presence, he charged him to be the troubler of Israel, Art thou he that troubleth Israel? They are the Captains and Caualleers that were in the company of Jehu, that accounted him who came to anoint Jehu, a mad fellow, What said this mad fellow unto thee? Paul and Silas are accused to trouble the City, and to turn the world upside down, and to teach customs which were not lawful to receive and observe, Act. 16.20 Tertullus an eloquent Orator, abusing a good gift to an evil purpose, chargeth him deeply to be a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ring-leader of the sect of the Nazarens, Chapter 24.5. To contemn this calling, is to contemn God: and to dishonor it, is to dishonor God: and yet the Ministers for the most part are esteemed according to their low and mean estate in this world. If they be poor, they are indeed poorly accounted off. If they be not great in the world, they are not regarded and respected of worldly minded men; but these account themselves better then the Minister, because they are richer. But such as are rightly religious, are otherwise minded. Obadiah, the governor of Ahab's house, refused not to do reverence to the Prophet, to the contemned Prophet Elijah, 1 King. 18.7.9. Joash the king disdained not to visit Elisha when he was sick and lay on his deathbed, and to weep upon his face, and said unto him, O my father, my father, the Chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof, 2 King. 13.14. Thus it was in former times, when Kings and Princes were not ashamed to acknowledge them: but as sin aboundeth, so the Ministry is contemned.

The third reproof, is against those that are so taken up with the thoughts of this world, that they refuse to allow them any means of maintenance, and grudge them meat and drink to relieve themselves and their families. This is a fruit of the former sins, and proceedeth from a contempt, either of their persons, or of their calling, or of them both. For when they are grown to contemn them, no marvel if they grudge to maintain them. Some think the calling needless, and superfluous, and well gotten that is detained from them. Others account it voluntary, and arbitrary, which they may give, or not give, yield or not yield, at their own pleasure: others will needs pay it, howbeit not as a duty, but as a gratuity: not as a recompense of their pains, but as a benevolence at pleasure: they will have nothing bestowed as due, but as an alms to the beggar that cometh to their doors. The first sort are plain Epicures, earthwormes, knowing no God but Mammon, and serving no God but their belly. The other two carry more show of profession, and yet they make little conscience of God's religion, or of their own salvation. For if they did hope to inherit heaven, they would be forward to magnify and further the means that lead us unto heaven, and account it an honor in equity and justice due unto them, to yield unto them a sufficient maintenance, which cannot without sacrilege be detained from them. Who is it that provideth not for his oxen and cattle, that labor for him? who feedeth not his sheep in sweet pastures, that feed him and clothe him? What hearts then have we harder then stone, that do not any whit regard to see them comfortably and competently maintained, that labor for us, search the Scriptures for us, are careful to provide for us, and to feed us with much better food? If a man should see any of us lying in a pit like to be drowned, and reaching out his hand unto us should draw us out, how would we esteem of them? The Ministers draw body and soul out of the deep dungeon of eternal death, and from the pit of destruction, and guide them into the way of peace: and therefore it is great reason, that having received comfort from them, we should comfort them again, and thereby show how we respect them.

If we were borne blind, and wanted the light of the eyes, as the poor man mentioned in the Gospel, and one should restore our sight, we would account nothing too dear for him, nothing too good for him, if we gave him all the wealth and treasure of our house.

But this is our condition spiritually, we sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, we know no more of God naturally, then serveth to make us without excuse. The Ministers are the light of the world to enlighten them, to open their eyes, and to bring them out of darkness into a marvelous light: and yet the idolatrous Priests among the heathen were more esteemed, and better rewarded, then the true Ministers of Christ among us; which redoundeth to the shame and reproach of such as profess themselves to be sound Christians. But Christ saith, [Object.] to his Apostles, Freely ye have received, freely give, Mat. 10, 8. How then may the Ministers receive any reward for their labors? I answer, Christ speaketh in this place especially of working miracles, as appeareth in the words immediately going before, where he willeth them to heal the sick, to cleanse the lepers, to raise up the dead, and to cast out devils. If they be extended farther, because he willed them to go and preach, saying, The Kingdom of God is at hand: he forbiddeth them to set the Gospel to sale, as that which standeth at offer and proffer: so that the Minister must not be given to filthy lucre, 1 Tim. 3, 3. Tit. 1, 7. So then, they do give freely, who do not intend gain as the reward of their labors, nor set it before their eyes as the mark they aim at, but desire nothing more then the glory of God, and the salvation of the Church, and refer thereunto all their studies and endeourss. They that only or cheefely seek their own wealth, are truly called hirelings; whereas the servants of God have him before their eyes of whom they are sent, that so they may feed the flock with knowledge and doctrine. Again, it may be said, that Paul witnesseth he took nothing of the Corinthians, and that he labored with his own hands, Acts 20, 34. 1 Cor. 4, 12. I answer, the Apostle in taking nothing of that Church, considered what did belong to the edification of that Church: nevertheless, the brethren that came from Macedonia, supplied his wants, and helped him in his necessities. But of this we spake more at large in the former doctrine.

[Use 3] Thirdly, let no man presume to refuse and reject the Ministry, as thinking themselves or their children too high, or this calling too low for them; thinking themselves too honorable, and this office too contemptible for their persons. No man is too good to serve God at the Altar, and to minister in his Sanctuary. If any refuse the Ministry in regard of his birth, and his wealth, or worth, or gifts, he deceiveth himself, and ouervalueth his own condition: for who is sufficient for these things? We are a thousand fold more unworthy to be Ministers, then the Ministry can be thought unworthy of us. Noah was the Prince of the world, yet a Preacher of righteousness, 2 Pet. 2, 5. Melchizedek was both King of Salem, and a Priest of the most high God, Heb. 7, 1. Gen. 14, 18. Samuel was both a Judge of the people, and a Prophet of God, 1 Sam 3, 20. and 7, 15. David was both a King & a Prophet. And albeit certain Kings have been Prophets, yet it was no greater credit to the Ministry, that Kings were Prophets, then commendation to Kings themselves that they were Prophets: as it was a greater glory to Kings that they have been Philosophers, then credit to Philosophy, that Kings have studied, professed, and embraced it. The Son of God, our Lord Jesus Christ, before his incarnation was the Teacher of his people; for by his Spirit he spake in the Patriarchs & Prophets, and was the Messenger of God, and therefore called the Angel of the Covenant: and after that he took our flesh and nature upon him, being the seed of Abraham, he professed that he was sent to preach deliverance to the captives, & the acceptable year of the Lord, Luke 4, 18, 19, 43. He was equal in glory with the Father, yet this was his calling and work while he lived upon the earth. God the Father thought it a meet office to be committed to his only begotten Son, and should it seem a reproachful office to his servants? If he were anointed to be both our King, Prophet, and Priest, let not us despise prophesy. Nay, not only the Son of God, as he was man, disdained not this function, but God himself in Paradise was a Preacher of the Gospel, Gen. 3, 15. The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpents head: and the Spirit of God is as it were a fellow-worker with the labors of the Ministers. Besides, the Angels themselves, most glorious creatures, that always behold the face of the Father that is in heaven, have not refused to be the publishers of this message, Luke 2, 9, 10. Wherefore, all such as GOD hath blessed with forward and toward children, as a special mercy toward them, and withal bestowed the goods of this world upon them, enabling them to maintain them in schools of learning, ought to further the building of God's Church, and to think it no disgrace or disparagement unto them, to apply their sons to be workmen in this spiritual building, and so to dedicate them unto God, as godly Hannah gave Samuel unto the Lord, that so long as he lived, he might be given unto the Lord, 1 Sam. 1, 28. It is a thing greatly to be lamented, that this high office of preaching the word is so contemned by all of high calling, that the Nobility utterly shun it, & the greatest part of the Gentry of the Land generally refuse it, either as base in it self, or at least as base to them, or in them. Great men's children are set to study man's law, but it beseemeth not their greatness to study God's law. To be sent on Embassy in the affairs of a Prince, is a great honor; but to be sent with God's message in his mouth, is esteemed a disgrace. Ye fools and blind, whether is greater, God or man? Whose message is most honorable, God's, or else man's? We see in the Popedom, how men of countenance and estimation are not ashamed to give their children to the Popes service, and bear the mark of the beast, and refuse not to have thē nearly and ill-fauouredly shaven, until they have scarce one hair of an honest man left unto them: nay, some of the blood royal have taken upon them the orders or rather the disorders of that Hierarchy, as we have examples in our own Chronicles. Princes themselves have renounced their crowns and kingdoms, and entered into Monasteries, & have put their sons and daughters into Cloisters. It is very apparent, that Princes among the Heathen, were also Priests. Shall not these being poor blind Idolaters, that knew not GOD aright, stand up at the day of judgment against us to condemn us, that have so little care or love to the Lord's Temple, that the serving of him there, is become so vile a thing, as it is not beseeming a man's son of any countenance and reputation in the world? So that they will not set their hand to the Lord's Plough, but scorn it almost as much as to go to plough and cart. The Prophet Isaiah (as it is probably collected) was of a very noble lineage, son to Amos, who was brother unto Amaziah King of Judah, and therefore thought to be of the blood royal, as the Hebrew writers agree, who had the books of Genealogies extant among them. The Prophet Daniel, with Hananiah, Mishael, & Azariah, were of the Kings seed, Dan. 1, 3. We heard before that Christ himself the Lord of life, and the most honorable person of highest descent that ever lived upon the earth, who was not only of the lineage and stock of David, and heir unto the Crown & Kingdom, but the son of the eternal God, yet he disdained not to serve, but vouchsafed to minister in this office, and hath given example to all posterity, that none should account themselves unworthy of it, or it unworthy of thē: forasmuch as the Gospel began to be preached of him, Heb. 2, 3: who is the brightness of glory, and the express image of his person, and upholdeth all things by the word of his power, Heb. 1, 3.

Seeing then Princes and Peers, and noble men, yea such as have been of the Kings blood have employed themselves to the Lord's service: seeing sundry of these among both Pagans and Papists have exercised this function: seeing some of the elect Angels were Preachers of the Gospel: what a slander and reproach is it for us that are dust and ashes, and worms of the earth, and no better; that are called Christians, and would be accounted great professors, who, in so great want of laborers and harvest men to reap down the corn, do bestow our youth, rather any way then this that is the best way? It is incredible what great good such might do in the church. O what a furtherance would it be to true religion, and a notable means to gain many souls to God! For how many be there, that contemn the Ministry of the word, and consequently the word it self, because (for the most part) they are mean and poor men that are the Ministers and Preachers of it? Even as when the professors of the truth consist of the lowest sort, it hindereth the faith of diverse, to consider that none of the rich or of the Rulers believe in him, but the people that are accursed: so is it in the Ministry also. When such as are ignorant of true religion, cast their eyes upon the poor condition of the teachers of it, and behold the worshipful and noble shun it, and shake it from their shoulders, they are offended, and grow into hatred and contempt of the Calling, and regard not such as have taken it upon them. Whereas, if the men of great places would stoop down unto it, (if this may be accounted a stooping down) and as well preach Christ as believe in him, it might be a forcible and effectual means to further and foster true religion. Is it not a comfort to all godly parents, to see their children well bestowed? Can we have them better bestowed, then to serve the Lord, and to labor in his harvest, and to be made Rulers or Stewards in his house? Is there anything we should rejoice more to see, then our sons put in trust with the price of the blood of Christ, and by preaching to win many souls, and send them to heaven? How do men seek to shroud themselves under the cloth of noble men, and are glad of places and offices under them; like to Zebedees childrē that would sit at the right hand and at the left hand of Christ in his Kingdom? But the Ministers are the servants of the most High, they serve the King of Kings, and the Lord of Lord's, then which, what service can be more holy or honorable? The Prophet Haggai complaineth, chap. 1, 4, that the whole people from the highest to the lowest, neglected the building of the Temple, and followed their own profits & pleasures, Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your sieled houses, and his house lie waste? And therefore he threateneth in the words following, to punish those grievously, that were so reckless and careless for the helping forward of this building. Let Zerobabel and Iehoshua with the remnant of the people diligently consider this point, and meditate seriously upon these things. And let all have a tender regard to employ and set apart some of theirs to work in the Lord's vineyard as painful laborers.

True it is, some go about by pilling and polling to bring the Church to beggary and slavery: but this ought not to discourage any from serving in this calling, nor to withdraw any of his children frō preaching of the word. The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof, Psal. 24, 1. All the silver and gold in the world is at his commandment, Hag. 2, 8. He will never leave nor forsake those that be his. He will pay good wages to all that are his servants.

They shall be sure of their pay that reap his corn, and bear the burden of the work, and the heat of the day. He hath the hearts of all Princes and Potentates in his own hand. He moved the minds of pagan and heathen Kings, to contribute things necessary for the repairing of the material Temple, as appeareth in the books of Ezra and Nehemiah: and therefore he will not suffer such to lack, which labor in his spiritual Temple, under godly and Christian Princes. Seeing then, we ought to make a great account, and have a reverent estimation of the Preachers of the word, and esteem the Calling given them an honorable office, inasmuch as Christ the everlasting Son of the Father, the wisest, the worthiest, the noblest, the notablest person beyond all comparison, of all that ever were, or shall be, or are, in heaven or earth, hath taken up the office of a Preacher, Priest, and Prophet, to teach the people and to pray for them; let us also further this work by all the means we can: and let the Ministers comfort themselves in this their holy vocation, having a multitude of such excellent predecessors, as it were a cloud of witnesses going before them, to be examples to encourage them; and let us not be discouraged by the taunts & opprobrious terms of the ungodly, to dislike and forsake our function, or to be ashamed of it, or to think scorn to labor in it, howsoever many scorn at it, as too mean and base a thing for themselves. For albeit the Ministry above all other callings, is most subject to the contempt and disgrace of profane and godless men: yet let us be assured, that as it is in it self, & in regard of the ordinance of God, as also of the benefit of it unto mankind, a worthy and excellent calling, so they that enter into it, shall be honored of all those which are the children of God. Let us tread those disgraces & contumelies under our feet, and be so far from being dismayed at them, that rather we ought to account our selves happy for them, Mat. 5, 11, 12. Seeing we are thereby made conformable, not only to the Prophets and Apostles of Christ, but to our Savior himself, and shall in the end be like unto him in glory and eternal life. Yea, we are assured that in the midst of all disgracings and defacings of us, we are the sweet savor of God, not only in them that are saved, but in them also that perish. And albeit we spend our strength in vain, and for nothing, yet our judgment is with the Lord, and our work with our God, Isaiah 49, 4, 5. In the mean season, let our labor be answerable to the greatness of our calling, that so we may be worthy of that honor.

[Use 4] Lastly, seeing the function of the Ministry is of great excellency and dignity, we must understand, that great gifts are required in the Ministers, and they must in a good measure be qualified thereunto. This use doth the Apostle make, 1 Tim. 3. The office of a Minister is a worthy work, therefore he ought to be of blameless conversation, and apt to give instruction to the people. He must show both integrity of life, and light of doctrine, which is as the Urim and Thummim that the Priest did bear on his breast-plate of judgment. It is the best harmony that can be made, when life and doctrine agree together; otherwise, we are as iarring cymbals.

Hence it is, that the Prophet speaking of the Covenant of life and peace made with Levi, Malac. 2, 6, saith, The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips, &c. and he did turn many away from iniquity. The Ministers are called by Christ, both the light of the world, and the salt of the earth. In like manner Paul exhorteth the Elders of Ephesus, Acts 20, 28. Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which, the holy Ghost hath made you Overseers, to feed the Church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood. They must take heed to themselves, by living well: and to the flock, by feeding well with wholesome food. They must show themselves patterns of good works, Titus 2, 7, 8. If the calling were mean, mean gifts would serve to furnish them that are chosen and exalted to that calling: but seeing it is great, we ought to labor after great gifts, and to be adorned with worthy graces.

They that watch over souls, ought to have a quick and sharp sight, that they may descry the crafty wiles and guiles of Satan. They ought to have a wonderful care of their duty, that are to attend the flock of God day and night, and be able to teach all, and to deal with all sorts of men, as Math. 13, 52. He must be a Scribe taught of God. No young scholar, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed who see and try his work, dividing the word of truth aright. They must be able to seek out that which is lost, able to strengthen the weak, able to heal the sick, able to bind up the broken. No skill is sufficient for these works, to be the Lord's husbandmen, to dress and husband the Church, that it become not an unfruitful and barren wilderness. No skill in us is sufficient to make us the light of the world, Math. 5, the salt of the earth, the builders of Christ's body, the coworkers of God, 1 Corinth. 3, 19: the Ambassadors of Christ, 2 Corinth. 5, 20: the Stewards of the house, Titus 1, 7: the fathers of the Church, 1 Corinth. 4, 15: the fishers of men, Math. 4, 19: the Ministers of the Spirit, 2 Corinth. 3, 6: the builders of the Temple; the Shepherds of the sheep, Eph. 4, 11: the planters and waterers of the garden, 1 Corinth. 3, 6, 7: the watchmen of the City, Ezek. 33, 7. Heb. 13, 17: the Trumpeters of the host, and the stars of the firmament, Revel. 1, 20. Dan. 12, 3. The City of God which is the Church, is a more glorious and beautiful work, then is the fabric or frame of the whole world besides. On the other side, see the misery of blind guides, and the mischief that cometh by dumb dogs, yea, the desolation that cometh upon the people that have such Pastors or Shepherds: they are altogether unworthy of that calling. No man will make him his horsekeeper, that hath no knowledge nor skil in horsemanshippe, nor any experience that way; nor his Cook that cannot tell how to dress his meat: nay, not his swineheard that is no better then an Image or Idol, and cannot tell how to guide or govern them. And yet behold the simplicity and sottishness of the world, and wonder at it! They regard not to commit the souls of men, that are most precious, to such as we will not willingly commit an heard of brute beasts to be kept. Ezek. 33, 6. The watchman that is blind and dumb, and the City that setteth up such an one, shall perish together: and our Savior testifieth, that if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch, Mat. 15, 14. Woe unto such leaders; woe unto such as are thus led.

These make this a base calling, as if Jereboam's Priests were fit enough, that were taken from the lowest of the people.

CHAP. IIII.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, and Aaron, saying,
2. Take the sum of the sons of Kohath, from among the sons of Levi, after their families, by the house of their fathers.
3. From thirty years and upward, even until fifty years old, all that enter into the host, to do the work in the Tabernacle of the Congregation.
4. This shall be the service of the sons of Kohath, in the Tabernacle of the Congregation, about the most holy things.

IN this Chapter we have another numbering of the Levites: howbeit, it is in another kind then the former in the former chapter. For in the third chapter, the Tribe of Levi is numbered according to the persons: but in this chapter it is numbered according to their office and Ministry, so that there is a great difference between this and the other. True it is, in them both, this Tribe is numbered, but not this Tribe only, nor all the same persons, nor yet to the same end. We saw before, a general enumeration of the families of the Levites, as they succeeded in the room of the first borne, who had been separated & sanctified to the worship of God, to the Ministry of the word, to the service of the Church, and to the spiritual government of the people: so that as well the first borne as they are numbered: But in this chapter, only the Levites are numbered, not all, nor any of the first borne, who were now freed and exempted, and fully discharged from that ministration. Again, in the former chapter, all the Levites are numbered from a month old & upward: but in this, only such as were fitted by their years to undertake and execute the office of the Ministry, which lawful age is here defined and determined to begin at thirty, and to end at fifty years. Lastly, that numbering in the former chapter, was to another end and purpose then this. There they were all numbered frō one month, that it might be known what overplus there was of the first borne: but here they are accounted from 30. years old to 50. that according to the number of the persons, there might be an equal division and distribution of their functions.

Now for the better understanding of this numbering, here commanded and executed, we must know that the reckoning up of the Levites, is not done after one manner, but is much differing, not only from the other tribes but also from it self: so that this Tribe is numbered diverse ways. The first is from a month old and upward, as we have learned out of the third chapter, because then they were fit to be offered to the Lord. The second is at five and twenty year old, at what time they began to be tried and proved, whether they were fit or not; this is set down, chap. 8, 24. The third is at 30. years of age until 50, when they executed their office fully without any denying or gainsaying. Thus we see the different account that is taken of this Tribe, and the reasons thereof: now let us proceed to the order observed in this chapter.

Herein we are to observe two parts. The first containeth a commandment touching the numbering of the Levites from 30. years old unto 50. together with a description of the proper and distinct office of every family. Secondly, the obedience of Moses, in the execution of the commandment of the Lord. Touching the commandment of God, we are to consider, that the whole service of the Tabernacle is parted according to the will and pleasure of almighty God the author of the Ministry, among the three families, springing out of Levi, and spoken of in the former chapter, namely, the Kohathites, the Gershonites, and the Merarites. Here Moses doth a little invert the former order, and beginneth with the Kohathites, because the Priests were chosen among them, and he insisteth longer upon them, then upon other, both because many things are spoken of them, which notwithstanding are not properly to be restrained to them alone, but generally to be applied to the rest; and likewise because they had a more worthy & honorable office, so that the chiefest charge was committed unto them. The commandment is general in this division, & then particular in the verses following. The general showeth who among them were to be numbered, to wit, all persons from thirty years old to fifty, to do the service of the Tabernacle. Thus much touching the order.

Before we come to the doctrines, we are to answer two questions, thereby as it were to vnloose the knots that might trouble those that are weak in knowledge, and slender in judgment. As first of all it may be demanded, why the Lord commanded the Levites in this place to be numbered that were full 30. years old, and not before? I answer, it was, because he would have those that served him in the Sanctuary, and did as it were represent his person to the people, and were to teach them, to be ripe in knowledge, in judgment, in experience, in moderation, in learning, and such like gifts of his holy Spirit. Young men for the most part have green heads, light brains, rash wits, shallow judgments, head-strong passions, being altogether unsettled and ungrounded. Thus it was in Rehoboams Counsellors, 1 Kings 12, 8. where we see young Counsellors, young counsel; grave Counsellors, grave counsel; as the men are, so is their counsel. Such as were to follow the wars, were numbered from 20. years old and upward. Moses the muster-maker took their names, and enrolled them at the age of twenty: but such as were the Lord's warriors to fight his battles, and as it were the Chariots & horsemen of Israel, must not be fresh-water, or white-liued soldiers; they must not turn their backs to their enemies, nor be afraid to look them in the face, nor shrink back at the push of the pike, nor have their sword rusty in their sheath, but always be prepared, & stand ready for the encounter. But if such had been admitted to this office as were young in years, their lightness in gesture and behavior, might have cast a contempt upon the holy things of God, and caused the people to abhor the word which they deliver, and the Sacraments which they administer: whereof we have an example, 1 Sam. 2, in Eli's sons, The sin of the young men was great, and they caused the people to contemn the offerings of God. To this end the Apostle adviseth and admonisheth Timothy, chap. 4, 12. Let no man despise thy youth: but be thou an ensample to the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. But of this, we shall have occasion to speak more afterward.

Secondly, a man may ask the question, whether the Priests and Levites ceased the execution of their office at the age of fifty? For seeing God commandeth in this place, all to be numbered that were employed in the work of God, and none were numbered that were under thirty, and above fifty; it may seem to some, that they did nothing afterward. What then? Were they as soldiers dismissed of their service, and put to their yearly pension? Or were they released from all labors, as those sword-players, that had a rod delivered unto them in token of discharge? I answer, this was done for diverse causes. [Answer.]

First, such as execute this holy calling ought to be qualified with judgment, gravity, sobriety, integrity, diligence, yea with power, courage, strength, and to have agility and ability in mind and body, that they may do all things wisely, exactly, studiously, & constantly. But all these agree to a man most fitly and fully between the age of 30. and 50. limited in this place. Youthfull age may be adorned with strength, courage, and earnestness: but it is not so well furnished with judgment, gravity, skilfulnesse, and staidness. On the other side, old men in their declining age, albeit they be filled with knowledge and understanding, and seasoned with moderation of affections, yet through weakness of nature, debility, and other infirmities that follow them, grow dull and heavy, slow and cold, and have not that quickness and readiness of dispatch, which they had, and others have: so that their body is not answerable to their mind, nor the outward man to the inward.

Again, this was the ordinance of God, that they should give place to younger men, that under them they might be trained up to the service of the Sanctuary, that he might never want any to attend in that calling. Whereas in the multitude and increase of that Tribe to so many thousands, if they had all served during the term of their lives, many of them could never have been employed, whose labor might be profitable in y^e church. So then, they were at that age to cease, to make way and passage for the employment of younger men.

Thirdly, as religion is more precious then all earthly things, so God hereby took order, and provided, that the weakness and infirmities of the Ministers, should not bring the holy ordinances of God into contempt.

Lastly, this law seemeth to be restrained to such Levites as bare the burden of the Tabernacle, the Sanctuary, & all the instruments of it. For God will have no man to live without a calling, he alloweth idleness in no estate and condition. What then did the Levites? They trained up younger men, they instructed them, and were no doubt as the Overseers of the schools of the Prophets: in them were the younger sort brought up, and called the children of the Prophets. Besides, they preached to the people, and taught the Law of the Lord, which is no idle work, but a matter of great labor & exceeding pains, so that albeit they bare not material burdens, which required strength of body; yet they bare weightier burdens than those, they had the charge of men's souls lying heavy upon them, which is able to press down the feet, and to weary the shoulders of the strongest man.

Last of all, no doubt they were present & president at the oblations that were brought, they offered sacrifices, and burned incense unto God in the Tabernacle, so many of them as were of the number of the Priests; as appeareth by the age of Aaron, who ministered in the place of God's service after the age of fifty. It is noted of Zacharias the Priest, that he was an old man, he was well stricken in years, which cannot be supposed or imagined but he was above 50. years of age; yet he ceased not to execute the Priests office before God, in the order of his course, and burned incense in the Temple. Nay, the circumstances of the text in that place do rather guide us, and as it were lead us by the hand to think, that he was more than threescore, peradventure fourscore, and it may be above, otherwise there had been no great bar and impediment on his behalf, but he might have a child; whereas he objecteth against the Angel, not only the age of his wife, but also his own age, Whereby shall I know this? for I am an old man, and my wife well stricken in years? So then, all the Levites being come to the age of fifty, trained up young men under them, they were as tutors unto them, & taught the people knowledge, sitting in the chair of Moses, and the Priests offered sacrifice to God, first in the Tabernacle, and after in the Temple: their time of vacation therefore was granted from such labors and service as required the strength of the body, which Moses himself seemeth to point unto afterward in this book: From the age of fifty years they shall cease waiting upon the service thereof, and shall serve no more, but shall minister with their brethren in the Tabernacle of the Congregation, to keep the charge, and shall do no service, &c.

Verses 2, 3. Take the sum of the sons of Kohath, &c: from thirty years old and above, &c.] See here a different manner observed in numbering of this Tribe from the former. Before they were numbered at a month old, because then they were fit to be presented to God, but yet not fit to execute the office of the Ministry, or manage any business of charge and importance. Now none are numbered under thirty, because before they were not capable of this office. Such as were to serve in the wars among the other Tribes, were numbered at 20. years old: but such as were to appear before the Lord to do the warfare of his service, as the Scripture speaketh, must be 30. years of age; so that he requireth greater maturity in the gifts of the body and mind, greater wisdom & understanding in such as minister in the Tabernacle, then in such as pitch up their Tents, and go out with an army. There is wonderful skil required in leading an host of men against the enemy: but to be a Captain over the Lord's people, and to conduct them into the field against the spiritual enemies of our souls, where the danger is greater, is a matter of deeper knowledge, policy, experience, and judgment. We learn from hence, how the [Doctrine 1] Ministers of the word ought to be qualified; they must be men of gravity, wisdom, sobriety, and moderation of all their affections. For if this were required of those that served in the Tabernacle and the Temple in the time of the Old Testament, that only they of 30. years old and above, even until fifty, should enter into that calling, who then were in the prime and flower of their age, and had the greatest gifts: much more is it necessarily required of the Ministers of the Gospel, that they be men of sobriety, constancy, staidness, wisdom, judgment, and diligence. Such as were to build the Tabernacle, and to frame all the instruments of it, and appurtenances unto it, were filled with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship. All such as had any hand in the erecting thereof, were fitted to it, for God did put wisdom in the hearts of all that were wise-hearted, that so they might make all that he had commanded them. The building up of God's Church is a greater work, and therefore the workmen appointed to the edification of it, must not have lesser gifts, or baser qualities. Hence it is, that the sons of Eli are noted to be wicked men & grievous sinners that knew not the Lord, because they bare themselves without sobriety, temperance, and discretion: they were full of lightness, wantonness, excess, and covetousness. The sins of Jeroboam are set out, that he made not choice of the Tribe of Levi, but took the scum of the people and the basest of them, men of evil note. Christ willeth his Disciples, to be wise as serpents. The Apostle Paul describing what the Ministers ought to be, teacheth, that they must be vnreproueable and blameless, they must be wise, just, patient, temperate, discreet, not self willed, not soon angry, not given to fighting and brawling. So that the Ministers set apart for the work of the Ministry, must not only be apt to teach, and able to divide the word of truth aright, but there is farther required of them, that they be qualified with wisdom, with knowledge, with gifts of government & discretion in their calling and conversation.

As this is plainly proved unto us by these consents, so it may be strengthened by these [Reason 1] few, yet forcible reasons. First, because they have oftentimes given unto them in the scripture, the name of Elders. Many titles are given unto them, and everyone of them carrieth some instruction and admonition with it unto the conscience. They have not their names in vain, they are not idle sounds of vain words, but they offer the signification of some duty to be performed, and lead to the consideration of something to be practiced, as Shepherds call to their remembrance to be busied in feeding: watchmen, to prove to them that they ought to have a vigilant care of the City of God, and to be on their watch tower: Messengers, that they must not do their own business, but his that sent thē. So they are called Elders, 1 Tim. 5, verse 17, 19. 1 Pet. 5, verse 1. Acts 14, verse 23. and 15, 2. and 16, 4. and 20, 17. to imprint and engrave in their hearts, the cogitation and consideration of the care, wisdom, sobriety, and stayednesse that ought to be in men of that calling: all which gifts are for the most part proper to that age: for days shall speak, and the multitude of years teach wisdom, Job 32, verse 7. And therefore they are resembled unto them, not because they are so always in age, but because they should be like unto them, and have the properties and qualities of them.

[Reason 2] Secondly, the Ministry is an high calling, of great weight and worthiness, of great excellency and importance, standing up not only in the place of the people to offer up their prayers, but in the room of God, to declare his will to the people. If then the work be so worthy, if the office be so weighty, if the calling be so honorable, then it followeth by a good and necessary consequence, that such ought to be well fitted and filled with wisdom, gravity, and sobriety, that undertake it. This is the reason urged by the Apostle, 1 Tim. 3, 1, 2. He that desireth the office of a Bishop, desireth a worthy work: a Bishop therefore must be unblameable & vnreproueable. Who is it that mindeth to build an house, but he will look out a fit workman for his purpose? Or who will commit the government of his family to an unwise Steward, that knoweth not how to manage the affairs thereof, to give everyone his portion in due season? Thē much less ought the Church of Christ to be committed to unwise, unlearned, indiscreet men, that are ignorant both how to rule it, & which way to reform it.

Thirdly, such as are called to this office, [Reason 3] must be careful to look unto their ways, that their calling be not blemished, and their Ministry reprehended, so that they ought to bear themselves worthily and wisely. Everyone in the profession must labor to adorn the Gospel, and walk vnblameably in the midst of a naughty and crooked generation, Philip. 2, 15. It is required of wives to be chaste, and keepers at home, that the word of God be not blasphemed, Titus 2, 5. and of servants, to count their masters worthy of all honor, that the Name of God and his doctrine be not evil spoken off, 1 Tim. 6, ver. 1. Much more then ought the Ministers to magnify their office, to beautify their calling, to watch in all things, and to make full proof of their Ministry, 2 Tim. 4, verse 5. They ought to shine as bright and burning candles, and as Christ saith, they must be lights of the world, being set as a City upon an high hill, which cannot be hidden.

Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, Give no offense in anything, that the Ministry be not blamed, but let us in all things approve our selves as the Ministers of God, in much patience, in necessities, in distresses, &c. If only our persons should be blamed, and receive a check, the matter were the less: but the Ministry it self shall be reproached, and the ordinance of God reviled, and therefore we ought to look more carefully & circumspectly to our ways, that have the eyes, ears, & tongues of all men turned toward us. Their eyes are fixed upon us to behold our actions: their ears are prepared to hear whatsoever they can of us: their mouths are opened, and their tongues vnloosed, to speak everywhere of us, so that we are set as upon a stage, & can by no means cover our persons or our practices from the sight and knowledge of all men.

Lastly, the Ministers is to utter the word [Reason 4] of wisdom, whereby both himself and his hearers shall be made wise unto salvation. The Apostle putteth Timothy in mind, that he had been brought up in the Scriptures of a child, which are able to make him wise unto salvation, 2 Tim. 3, verse 15. and Psal. 119. the Prophet thereby was made wiser then his teachers, then his enemies, then the ancient. Hereupon the Apostle Paul saith, 1 Corinth. 12, verse 8. To one is given by the Spirit, the word of wisdom, to another, the word of knowledge by the same Spirit. And in the first chapter of the same Epistle, verse 23, 24. We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews, a stumbling block, and to the Grecians, foolishness: but unto them which are called, Christ, the power of God, and the wisdom of God.

Seeing then, we are to utter the words of wisdom, so called, both because they are the words of the most wise GOD, and because they are able to teach us the truest wisdom, we are to speak them, as it becometh them to be spoken, to the end, that in nothing we may be blamed or ashamed.

To conclude these reasons, and to bind them all in a bundle together, forasmuch as the Ministers of the Church are Elders, both in name and nature, and we are to utter the words of wisdom; forasmuch as the Ministry that we have obtained, is a weighty and worthy calling, and that it ought no way to be blotted and blemished of us by any indiscreet and indecent carriage; it followeth, that such as are set apart to this work, must be men of wisdom & moderatiō, of experience and excellent government of themselves, of their words, of their gestures, and of their ways, whether they be public or private, whether they be open or secret, whether they be at home or abroad.

[Use 1] We will now proceed to set down the uses of this doctrine, that we may be benefited and instructed by it. First, it serveth to reprove diverse sorts of persons that go against this rule, who, albeit they be ready to receive this truth, and to approve of it in judgment, yet they transgress it, and cross it notoriously in their practice.

And here we are to meet with the shameful abuse, and detestable corruption, that is too common in the Church of Rome, where children and boies have been admitted and ordained to Ecclesiastical dignities, before they had any understanding what the office requireth, or how it can be discharged. Thus hath the Bishop of Rome, that challengeth to be the high Priest of the world, the Vicar of Christ, and the successor of Peter, profaned this calling, and promoted, sometimes through covetousness, sometimes through favor, and sometimes through a respect they had to advance their kindred, such as are altogether unfit for such high places.

Hence it is, that Sixtus the fourth, is justly charged and challenged, to have instituted the son of Ferdinand King of Naples, being a child, to Ecclesiastical orders, which the heathen, for a reverent respect they had to sacerdotall dignities, would never have done; and gave him the oversight and circumspection of the Church of Tarentum. Leo, the tenth of the house of Medices, being a child of thirteen years of age, was made Cardinal by Innocentius the eight. Thus hath the chair of Moses been defiled, if Moses chair haply were then among them, whereof we may dispute and demure, not without just cause. The wise man saith in his Ecclesiastes, chap. 10, 16. Woe to thee, O Land, when thy King is a child: so we may say truly, Woe unto thee, O Church, where thy Minister is a child, that knoweth not how to go in and out before the people. This is a foul abuse, and cannot stand with the institution of God: well may such unseasoned timber serve to build up Babel, but in the house of God it can have no place. It is as untempered mortar, fit enough to set together a false church. Where the people are children, carried about with every wave, and are without knowledge, nay, refuse the means of knowledge, it is God's judgment to send thē children to be set over them, that so one child may lead another by the hand, children in age. such as are children in gifts. We conclude then, that the popish Church is a childish Church, and the Roman Byshoppe, is a childish Bishop, or else he would never have ordained children to that calling, and laid his hands upon them, and appointed them to such functions.

Secondly, it reproveth such, as having the oversight of the Church to make Ministers, do indeed commit a foul oversight through carelessness and neglect of their duty, and so thrust upon the church such as are unwise and indiscreet, who are as unconscionable in executing, as they were careless in choosing of them. For albeit these that are thus ordained be not young in years, yet they are young in manners. There are two sorts of young men, and there are two sorts of old men. Some are young in age, others are young in conditions: so that albeit they do not make choice of little children, yet they make choice of such as are little better; whereas men of gravity and entire conversation ought to be elected, and not rash headed persons obtruded upon the Church. This was the cause why Paul left Titus in Crete, that he should ordain Elders in every City: and for this cause he chargeth Timothy, that he should do nothing through partiality, neither lay his hand rashly upon any man, lest he were partaker of their sin. For when as a man is ordained through favor and friendship, or other sinister and sinful respect, who, having the door of entrance opened unto him, maketh hauock of the Lord's flock, partly by teaching corruptly, and partly by living scandalously, he that doth ordain him is guilty of those crimes, and himself may be charged to be a false teacher, and an evil liver. For whosoever doth not hinder the sins of others, but give way unto them that they pass forward, is partaker of them: he that beareth with them, and winketh at them, is as well guilty, as he that walketh in them. Hence it is, that he exhorteth Timothy to keep himself pure, and unspotted.

But peradventure they will object, [Objection] they knew not what he was, they were ignorant of his wickedness and looseness. [Answer.] But this doth not excuse them, because they ought not rashly to have given him admission, until they had made diligent search and inquisitiō. Such as were to buy a bondslave, were wont to demand the Physician touching him, to ask of the neighbors, and to require a time to make trial of him: and therefore much more ought there (if in anything else) to be advise, and deliberation taken, when any is to be admitted to the calling of a Minister, and no place left, either for fear or favor, either for hatred or covetousness. For judgment is corrupted four ways.

Sometimes through fear, when we shake and shrink back from speaking the truth, for fear of offending great persons. So did Pilate wrest the Law, and sin against his own conscience, for fear of Caesar: because they cried out, We have no King, but Caesar: if thou let this fellow go, thou art not Caesar's friend. Somtimes through covetousness, when we are corrupted through bribes, and hired for money, which blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous. So did Felix gape after gain, and looked for rewards, Acts 24, 26. He hoped also that money should have been given him of Peul, that he might loose him.

Sometimes, through hatred and malice; for as Naboth's vineyard was Ahab's sickness (a strange disease) so he dealt corruptly with Michaiah, because he hated him, and could not abide him, 1 Kin. 22, 8, 27. He put him in prison, and fed him with bread of affliction, and with water of afflictiō, yet he had done nothing worthy of imprisonment or of death.

Lastly, through favor and friendship whē we seek to gratify and pleasure our kinsmen or acquaintance, as Pilate did to please Herod, and for that care not what wrong we do to others. Wherefore the Lord would not have the poor man countenanced in his cause, Exod. 23, 3. And Festus the Deputy saith, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused, have the accusers face to face, and have license to answer for himself. All which corruptions of justice, if they ought to be far from the tribunals of earthly Judges, much more ought they to be removed from the Courts and Consistories of the Church-officers, whensoever the question is in hand of admitting any to the holy Ministry, or of removing any from the Ministry.

This is a capital sin, and yet (alas) there is not that conscience made of it that ought to be. It is a sin that draweth on many others, as it were with cart-ropes. It giveth encouragement to him that is ordained, to go forward in his sins, when he considereth by whose means he was admitted. For thus he strengtheneth and emboldeneth himself to go forward, If I were not in good case, such persons as sway the matters of the church, would never have given me entrance. It heartneth and helpeth forward others of like quality, to resort unto them for spiritual preferment and promotion, who say to themselves, Why may not I get into the Ministry as well as such a one, I am not worse and more unworthy then he; I cannot be a more beast then he is; and indeed as well the one as the other are unfit & unmeet to have the charge of sheep, or of old shoes. It discourageth those that labor painfully in this calling, and weakeneth the hands and hearts of those that are diligent in their office. It bringeth a slander upon the Church of God, and emboldeneth many to go forward in sin, while there is for the most part, like Priest, like people: like master, like man: like mother, like daughter. And last of all, it bringeth inevitable perils and dangers upon the people, whose souls perish through their ignorance and wickedness that are entered into this calling.

The third reproof is the haste, which for the most part, young men (that run before they are sent) make to the Ministry: wherein the common proverb is true, That haste maketh waste. The zeal of these persons is very preposterous, forasmuch as they have not that judgment & knowledge, that wisdom and experience, that grace and gravity, that stayednesse and moderation in ordering and bridling their affections, that is needful in those that are to teach others the way how to do it: lest it be said unto them, Physician, heal thyself, Luke 4, 23. and as the Apostle showeth, Thou that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? Rom. 2, 21. In former times of the Church the Prophets well qualified hung back, and shunned the burden: but we are fallen into another extreme, whereby it cometh to pass, that we desire to be soon employed, albeit rawly furnished, as if a Captain should lead his soldiers unto the battle, before they be half harnessed and prepared.

But some may say, [Objection.] Are none to be chosen to the Ministry that are young men? Or is this Law given to the Levites, remembered here, a moral precept to which the Church is necessarily tied? None were to serve in the Tabernacle or Temple, until thirty years, is this precisely to be kept in the New Testament? I answer, [Answer.] not all that are of that age are to be admitted, nor all under that age are to be refused. For as there are two sorts of young men, set down before, so there are two sorts of Elders, some are old men in years, and some are old men in gifts: and thus may the Ministers be said sometimes to be both old and young: young in age, old in the graces given unto them necessary for this calling: as on the other side, a man may be old in years, and have many gray hairs on his head, and yet in regard of necessary gifts that ought to have been in him, be a young man, a child, an infant.

If it be farther said, [Object.] John the Baptist began to preach at that age; and so did Christ himself: yet had these great gifts, and who is like to them? or who may compare with them? [Answer.] I answer, these examples are not to be drawn into imitation, to make of them perpetual Canons and constitutions of the Church. And this was indeed a long time after observed in the Church, & all such kept out as by a strong bar, that had not attained to that age. We have laid before us the doctrine and life of Christ to be followed, not the years: ability, not age. The Apostle warneth Timothy, so to behave himself, that none should despise his youth, 1 Tim. 4, verse 12. He would have him learn, before he go about to teach others. It is said in the book of Job, chapt. 12, 12. With the ancient is wisdom, and in length of days, understanding.

Nevertheless, albeit this be ordinarily seen, yet God is not tied to any age, but bestoweth his gifts, where and unto whom he pleaseth, as appeareth in Joseph, Jeremiah, Samuel, Solomon, Daniel, David, Timothy, Titus, and sundry others. Howbeit such examples are not common, but rare and unwonted, like a shining star in a cloudy Firmament. No man chooseth young men to be Generals of an army, saith the heathen Philosopher. That Physician is thought to be the better, who hath most conversed and lived longest among the sick. In the host of Alexander the Great, none was suffered to lead the bands into the field, that was not elder then three-score. In the state and common-wealth of Rome, none under full age were chosen to bear any office. None was chosen to be a Senator, before 25. years; nor Pretor, before 30: nor Consul, before 43. How much more is this to be regarded in the regiment of the Church, where, as the calling is weightier, so the danger is greater, when these pastoral charges are bestowed upon unfit persons. For a special care must be had, that such as are advanced and promoted, whether young or old, do not cause their ministry to be contemned, especially considering that it falleth out (as we see) by continual experience, that even his doctrine is little regarded, whose person is despised. Some are old in years, but young in wisdom, and at an hundred years old, are as children, touching use and experience; who stain and disgrace their hoare heads & white hairs with foolishness, sottishness, and more then childishness. In the art of nauigation, this law was wont to be precisely observed, that none should be chosen Master of the Ship, or Masters mate, that hath not first been a skuller and rowed with oars, and frō thence been promoted to sit at the stern. In military discipline, a man was first chosen a soldier, then he rose higher to be a Centurion, before he could be General of the host. God would have the Levites to be at the first as it were probationers, before they were allowed to be practitioners. They were taken in for trial at 25. years of age, as it followeth in the 8. chapter, and so continued unto 30. at what time they were suffered to minister if they were found faithful and painful. But it may be said of many in our church, that they run before they be sent, and thrust themselves into the Vineyard before they be hired. These are young in years, and as young in qualities and conditions required of a Minister, that have not yet shed their colts teeth, nor scarce sowed their wild oates, as we say in our common Proverbs: so that we may say with the Prophet Hosea, chap. 9, 7. The Prophet is a fool, the spiritual man is mad. And another Prophet, Her Prophets are light, and treacherous persons, her Priests have polluted the Sanctuary they have done violence to the Law. Zeph. 3, verse 4.

[Use 2] Secondly, it teacheth a good duty and profitable to the Ministers, that remembering this lesson, and considering how they must be adorned, and with what gifts endued, they look to themselves that they give no occasion of scandal and offense, of evil speeches and contempt of their calling, but keep themselves unspotted and vncorrupted. This the Apostle teacheth his Timothy, 1. ch. 4, 12. Let no man despise thy youth, but be thou an example to the believers, &c: and 2 Tim. 2, 15. Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. And afterward, verse 22. Fly youthful lusts, but follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart. When Eli's sons, light headed persons, meddled with the sacrifices, the people began to abhor the offerings of GOD, 1 Sam. 2. There are many several branches of this use, sorted out into many particular points.

First, every Minister must consider how precious his calling is, and what person he sustaineth, that he is as the mouth and messenger of God to the people, and the Interpreter of his will: he is as it were the Lord's hand in separating between the precious and profane, the holy and the unholy: he is to keep the people out of the snares of the devil, and therefore not to deliver them as a prey unto him through his evil life.

Secondly, they must often enter into this meditation with themselves, that they are as actors upon a stage, or as beacons set upon an hill to give light to others. They are seen afar off, and a little blemish is soon espied in their coats. Every thing that they speak or do, is observed and marked, so that some follow them, and others carpe at them; some are grieved and offended, others revile the whole Ministry, for the sin and scandal of a few.

Thirdly, let us labor to stop the mouths of the enemies, that are ready to open them against their actions and persons, and thereby take occasion to blaspheme the Name of God and the glorious Gospel of Christ, and thorough their evil life, wound the truth it self. Heereby they shall be means to gain them to the faith, that such as receive not the truth, nor the love of the word, may without the word, beholding the pure and holy conversation of the Ministers thereof, embrace the word. On the other side, the profane lives and lewd examples that many in that calling give, do make the true religion stink in their nostrils, and become loathsome and noisome unto many, and so lay a dangerous stumbling block before such, as being blind, are made more blind, and being haters of good things are more hardened in heart. Woe be to such as give offense: it must be that offenses come, but woe to them by whom they come, Math. 18, 7. These are glad to lay hold upon every small occasion, to speak evil of the word & ways of God, as also of the Ministers, Ministry, and the profession of the Gospel. The Apostle admonisheth the Minister, 1 Tim. 3, 7, that he must have good report of them that are without, lest he fail into reproach, and into the snare of the devil. We ought so to behave our selves, that the enemies of God and his word, may have no just cause to speak against us, or to complain of us through our desert. But if we be without fault, and have the testimony of a good conscience to witness with us, it ought not greatly to trouble us, though we be burdened and borne down with false reproaches & calumniations: nay rather we have matter of rejoicing offered unto us, if we suffer for righteousness sake, Math. 5, 10: and we must boldly go forward, through good report and evil report, always bearing about in our body, the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Christ Jesus might be made manifest in our body.

Lastly, it is the duty of the people to yield them reverence, and to make a good account [Use 3] of them, in regard of that weighty and blessed work that is in their hands. This is a notable sign and fruit of our love toward them. For if it be required of the Ministers to be thus qualified, it followeth, that they ought to have the honor and estimation that is fit for them, as Levite. 21, 8. Thou shalt sanctify him therefore, for he offereth the bread of thy God: he shall be holy unto thee: for I the Lord which sanctify you, am holy. And the Apostle, 1. Thess. 5, 12, 13. saith, We beseech you, brethren, to know them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you, and to esteem them very highly in love, for their works sake, &c. We shown before, how basely and brutishly every base & brutish companiō accounteth both of the Minister and of his calling; as we saw in Ahab, in the Captains, and sundry others: and all this falleth out, because they rebuke and convince the world of sin, as Jeremiah found by experience, and acknowledgeth, chap. 15, 10. Woe is me, my mother, that thou hast borne me a man of strife, and a man of contention to the whole earth: I have neither lent on usury, nor men have lent to me on usury, yet everyone of them doth curse me. This duty hath many branches under it, as it were diverse sciences that come out of one root.

First, we must pray for the Minister, that the Lord would give him wisdom & knowledge in all things, 2 Tim. 2, 7. Consider what I say, and the Lord give thee understanding in all things. There is a carnal and fleshly wisdom, which is corrupt and devilish: and there is a wisdom which is true and heavenly. We must desire such only as is grounded on the word of God.

Secondly, the Church must take notice what her power and authority is in choosing of Ministers. It hath no absolute authority to ordain whom it listeth, and then to obtrude them unto the people; but it is hemmed about and compassed within certain lists and limits, out of which it ought not to wander any way.

Thirdly, it is the duty of the people, so to use themselves toward their painful & careful, and faithful Ministers, that they may take occasion to rejoice in their calling and charge over them, that they may see they have not labored in vain, as Hebr. 13, ver. 17. Obey them that have the rule over you; and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give an account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief: for that is unprofitable for you. Nothing doth effect this more, then when we profit by their labors, and fructify by their husbanding of us, and when we gain knowledge, faith, repentance, and salvation by their Ministry. This doth refresh the weary spirits, and cheer up the heavy hearts of the Ministers, who are oftentimes made sad and exceedingly humbled by the ignorance and profaneness of a perverse people. But when they see the word of God cast behind men's backs, and though the seed be plentifully sown, yet nothing cometh up but weeds and thistles, so that the field yieldeth nothing but a crop of cares, then they hang down their heads, their joy is gone, their crown is taken from them, and they go mourning all the day long. This we see oftentimes in the Apostle Paul, 2 Corinth. 2, verse 3. where he testifieth this affection; I wrote this same unto you, lest when I come, I should have sorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice, having confidence in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all.

It is a common case with the Ministers that labor abundantly, they receive sorrow at their hands that ought to have rejoiced them: and have much affliction from those that should minister comfort unto them. And afterward in the same Epistle he saith, chap. 12, verse 20, 11. I fear, lest when I come, I shall not find you such as I would, and that I shall be found unto you, such as ye would not; lest there be debates, enuyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults; and lest when I come again, my God will humble me among you, and that I shall bewail many which have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness, and fornication, and lasciuiousnesse which they have committed.

The Minister hath no other true and hearty rejoicing, but the growing of his people forward in good things. The Apostle saith, What is our rejoicing? even you in the day of the Lord, 1 Thess. 2, verse 19, 20. and chap. 3, verse 7, 8, 9. If they stand fast, the Ministers are alive, Col. 2, 5.

We cannot render sufficient thanks for the faith, love, patience, and increase that we see in the Church, when the kingdom of Satan is cast down, and the kingdom of Jesus Christ is set up. The contrary, is the greatest grief and sorrow, anguish and vexation of spirit that can be. This also he doth often complain of, as Galath. 4, verse 19. My little children, of whom I travel in birth again, until Christ be formed in you. And in the Epistle to the Philippians, chap. 3, 18. Many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are enemies unto the Cross of Christ.

Fourthly, the hearers ought to joy in the joy of their Ministers, 1 Cor. 2, 13. But many please themselves in nothing more, & rejoice in nothing more, then in the heaviness and sorrow of their Minister: nay, they delight to disturb and disquiet, to vex & trouble him, and offer him daily occasions of affliction. Thus did the Jews deal with the Apostles, they killed the Lord Jesus, & their own Prophets, and have persecuted them that preached the Gospel, 1 Thess. 2, 15. They can never profit by him, whom thus they spurn at and despise. The Nazarites that heard Christ, could not believe his word, because they cōtemned and hated his person, Luke 4.

Fifthly, we ought to be ready to hear and obey in all things delivered and made known unto us out of the word. We must not single out what we list in part to follow, and cast from us another part of the word: but whatsoever we hear, whether judgments or promises, let us say with Hezekiah, The word of the Lord is good, that thou hast spoken.

Lastly, let us love them sincerely and heartily, this will cause reverence and regard of them: let us account them as our spiritual fathers, 1 Cor. 4, 15. Though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the Gospel. Moses speaking of old age, giveth this precept to young men, that they rise up before the hoare head, and honor the person of the old man, Levite. 19. The Ministers are Elders of the Church, and the Fathers of our souls, to whom we owe reverence, as a due debt unto thē, forasmuch as they watch over us for our good. But we can never reverence those whom we do not love. Let us not say as Ahab did touching Michaiah, I hate them. It is the common practice of the world, to hate those that reprove them, and to account them our enemies that tell us the truth. We love to be flattered, and desire to have pillows sowed under our elbows, according to the saying of the Prophet Amos, chap. 5, 10. They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly. We would sleep securely in our sins, and go to hell with ease. We cannot abide to be roused up, nor be disturbed in our evil ways. This is the cause that the Ministers are hated, & accounted men of strife and contention. But if we did indeed love our selves, we would also love them: & if we had any care of our souls, they would be most dear unto us, that watch over our souls, and desire nothing more then to bring us to salvation. Every man by the light of nature will love those that love him, and it is no singular thing: but let us assure our selves, there is no love comparable to the love of our souls: and they love our souls, that seek to gain them to God, and to put them in possession of heaven. If we knew these things aright, and had a true feeling of them, we would esteem of the Ministers of God as our fathers, and the word which they teach, as the seed of regeneration.

5. And when the Campe setteth forward, Aaron shall come and his sons, and they shall take down the covering veil, and cover the Ark of the Testimony with it.

6. And shall put thereon the covering of Badgers skins, and shall spread over it a cloth wholly of blew, and shall put in the staves thereof.

7. And upon the Table of Shewbread, they shall spread a cloth of blew, and put thereon the dishes, and the spoones, and the bolles, and covers to cover withal; and the continual bread shall be thereon.

8. And they shall spread upon them a cloth of scarlet, and cover the same with a covering of Badgers skins, and shall put in the staves thereof.

9. And they shall take a cloth of blew, and cover the Candlestick of the light, and his Lamps, and his tongs, and his snuff dishes, and all the oil vessels thereof, wherewith they minister unto it.

10. And they shall put it, and all the vesselles thereof, within a covering of Badgers skins, and shall put it upon a bar.

11. And upon the golden Altar they shall spread a cloth of blew, and cover it with a covering of Badgers skins, and shall put to the staves thereof.

12. And they shall take all the instruments of Ministry, wherewith they minister in the Sanctuary, and put them in a cloth of blew, and cover them with a covering of Badgers skins, and shall put them on a bar.

13. And they shall take away the ashes from the Altar, and spread a purple cloth thereon.

14. And they shall put upon it all the vesselles thereof, wherewith they minister about it, even the censers, the flesh-hooks, and the shouels, and the basons, all the vessels of the Altar: and they shall spread upon it a covering of Badgers skins, and put to the staves of it.

15. And when Aaron and his sons have made an end of covering the Sanctuary, and all the vessels of the Sanctuary, as the Campe is to set forward; after that, the sons of Kohath shall come to bear it: but they shall not touch any holy thing, lest they die. These things are the burden of the sons of Kohath in the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

16. And to the office of Eleazar the son of Aaron the Priest, pertaineth the oil for the light, and the sweet incense, and the daily meat offering, and the anointing oil, and the oversight of all the Tabernacle, and of all that therein is, in the Sanctuary, and in the vessels thereof.

In this division, the particular charge beolnging to the sons of Kohath, is both propounded and confirmed. Touching the special parts here remembered; First Aaron and his sons (as overseers of the rest) are charged when the host of God remoueth, to cover the Ark of the Testimony, the Table of show bread, the Candlestick of light, the vessels of oil, and such like. Secondly, the duty of the Kohathites, is set down, that so soon as Aaron and his sons have made an end of covering the Sanctuary, and all the instruments of the Sanctuary, they must come to bear both it and them, as it was delivered unto them: provided that they did not touch any of them, or meddle with them until they be covered, lest they be destroyed. Thirdly, the office of Eleazar the Priest, the son of Aaron is specified; to him belonged the oil for the light, the sweet incense, the daily meat offering, and the anointing oil, with all the oversight of the Tabernacle. These several points thus largely laid open, may seem needless and unprofitable to be thus particularly rehearsed: but as all things were done in types and figures unto them, so they had their uses to them, and serve also for our instruction to the end of the world.

Touching the instruments belonging to the Tabernacle, and the vessels that were used, as the oil, the lamps, the candlestickes, the show bread, the incense, and what were the significations of them, we have already declared in the books of Exodus, and Leviticus. Now we will only call to remembrance these three points, and briefly note what we are to learn from thence: First, the Tabernacle was removed from place to place, and the parts of it taken asunder, and joined together. This was a figure of the Church, and showeth that the faithful, so long as they live in this Tabernacle of the body, are absent from the Lord, and so shall continue, until they obtain a stable inheritance in the heavens. We are not as yet come to the rest, and to the inheritance which the Lord our God shall give us. We have here no continuing city to dwell in, we are as Pilgrimes and strangers in this world. We seek a country else-where. Let us therefore use this world, as though we used it not, 1. Cor. 7.31. Be not deceived with the glorious and glittering shows of earthly things. If we did consider the frailty and uncertainty of all human things here beneath, that they are the suttle and sugared baits of Satan, which catch and condemn many thousands in the world, and bring men to many foolish and noisome lusts that drown them in perdition, and destruction, we would not so easily wound our consciences, and sell our souls for gain, as the manner of many is, who in all things wherein they have dealings and doings with others, regard nothing but their own wealth, albeit it be joined with decay and undoing of our brethren. Secondly, observe in this place that the Sanctuary together with all the frame and furniture thereof was covered with badgers skins, a very sure covering: to teach us that the whole Church, & every particular member thereof, are under the protection of God, as it were under a covering. Hereunto the Prophet alludeth, Psal. 27.5. In the time of trouble he shall hide me, he shall set me up upon a Rock. And the Prophet Isaiah, chap. 4. 5, 6. The Lord will create upon every dwelling place of mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night, for upon all the glory shall be a defense: and there shall be a Tabernacle for a shadow in the day time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and from rain. This ministereth great comfort to all the faithful servants of God, to consider that howsoever the Tabernacle was subject to the violence of wind and weather, yet it could sustain no harm, because it was most surely and safely covered against all injuries, tempests, and storms whatsoever. None lie open to such troubles and turmoiles as the Church: none are so garded & regarded as they are. It were impossible that we should hold out and continue in our profession against such dangers, except we had a covering upon us as the helmet of salvation. He is our defense, and a buckler round about us. He will never leave us, nor forsake us, so that we may boldly say, The Lord is my deliverer, I will not fear what man can do unto me.

Lastly, we see the Tabernacle had diverse and sundry instruments in it, belonging to the worship of God, and sanctified and set apart to holy uses: so is it in the Church of God; the word, the Sacraments, the preaching, the praiing, the praising of God, the gifts of sundry sorts bestowed upon the Church, are all of them sacred and holy, by the special institution of God. Hereunto doth the Prophet Zacharias allude, chap. 14. 20, 21. In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, holiness unto the Lord, and the pots in the Lord's house, shall be like the bolles before the altar: yea, every pot in Jerusalem, and in Judah, shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts, and all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them, and seeth therein: for in that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts. The things that God hath appointed to the glory of his Name, and the furthering of his worship, are all of them holy: and there is as it were graven upon them, as once on the forehead of the high Priest, Holiness to the Lord. Hence it is, that the word is called the holy Scripture, and all other things belonging to the service of God, are holy also. This teacheth how we should be affected when we present our selves in the presence of God, and come to be partakers of the ordinances of God. Here are holy things, for such as are holy: if we come unto them with sanctified hearts, and touch them with sanctified hands.

Such as come profanely unto them, receive no benefit by them. He that turneth away his ear from hearing the Law, even his prayer is abominable. If we come wickedly and unworthily to the Lord's Supper, we eat and drink our own damnation. Let us therefore examine our selves, and prepare our hearts before we come, that so we may be meet partakers of those holy mysteries.

[Object.] Before we come to the doctrine offered unto us in this division, we are to answer one objection that ariseth from hence. For the question may be asked, whether this charge here spoken of, were perpetually enjoined to the Levites, that they should carry the instruments of the Sanctuary, and the Ark, whether I say, they were always to bear the Ark, [Answer.] or not? I answer, this commandment was temporary. It was their duty for a time, until the Priests were increased and multiplied in number, that they were sufficient and enabled to carry it, Deut. 31, 9. But afterward all the examples of the histories mentioned in the books of Joshua and the Judges, of Samuel and of the Kings, do manifestly declare, that it was the office of the Priests themselves, Josh. 3, 6. 1 Sam. 14, 18. 2 Sam. 15, 29. 1, Kings 2, 26, and 8, 3, 4. For the most worthy things were to be handled by the more worthy persons, thereby to testify the worthiness and dignity of the things themselves, and to procure the greater reverence and respect unto them. Wherefore, the commandment enjoined in this place, was for a season only, until there were a sufficient number of the Priests to do it. The setting of the Ark upon a Cart, was David's infirmity, though otherwise a man after God's own heart; for Princes may err, the best of them may be deceived. They followed not the ordinance of God, and caused it not to be carried on the shoulders, either of the Priests, or Levites, but followed the example of the Philistines, who made a new Cart, and laid the Ark of the Lord upon the Cart: so did David and all the people, they set the Ark of God upon a new Cart, and brought it out of the house of Abinadab. Again, we read sometimes in the Scriptures, that the Levites did it, 1 Chr. 15, 2. Then David said, None ought to carry the Ark of God, but the Levites: for them hath the Lord chosen to carry the Ark of God, and to minister unto him forever. Thus was David made wiser by the former breach of God's wrath among them, whereby Uzzah was destroyed. Howbeit we must understand hereby, the Priests that were of the Tribe of Levi, as appeareth by the 26, verse of that chapter, It came to pass, when God helped the Levites to bear the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord, that they offered seven Bullocks, & seven Rams. Where we see, that such as did bear the Ark, did also offer sacrifices; but the Priests office only was to offer sacrifice; therefore they only did carry the Ark. For all the Priests were Levites, but all Levites were not Priests. The name of Levites, was a common name to all that belonged to that Tribe, whereof some were called Priests, & other by the common name of Levites. But concerning those that executed the Priests office, and were not of that Tribe, they were no better then intruders and usurpers.

[Verse 5, 6, &c. And when the Campe setteth forward, Aaron shall come and his sons, and they shall take down, &c.] Moses mentioneth and setteth down in this place, the particular calling of all the Levites, what they ought to do, and what they ought not to do: wherein they are to busy themselves & exercise their gifts, and how they may approve themselves in their places: as if he should bring everyone of them into their proper field that they were to till. For even as a master of a family, appointeth everyone of his servants their task and work that he will have them do: so doth the Lord our God deal with his Ministers and all his people; he giveth them their peculiar office, and showeth how and wherein they must employ themselves. We learn [Doctrine 1] from hence, that every man, whether out of the Ministry, or in the Ministry, must learn and know the duties of his own calling: what charge God hath laid upon him, and what service he requireth at his hands. At the giving of the law in Mount Zion, everyone had his standing place assigned unto him, which he might not pass: for as God hath set bounds unto the sea, that though it rage, yet it can go no farther then he hath appointed; he hath said, hitherto it shall go, and it can go no farther: so Moses is charged to deal with the people, that they do not break thorough unto the Lord, Exod. 19, 12. Thou shalt set bounds unto the people, saying, Take heed to yourselves, that ye go not up into the Mount, or touch the border of it, &c. Thus also the Lord speaketh to Jeremiah, chapt. 1, 5, 10. Before I formed thee in the belly, I knew thee: and before thou camest forth out of the womb, I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a Prophet unto the Nations. The Prophet Jonah is reprov'd, that being to go to Nineveh, rose up to fly unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord. Thus doth Paul speak to Timothy; for having set down before him the duty of his calling, he saith, Meditate upon these things, give thyself wholly to them, that thy profiting may appear to all. Everyone is taught to labor with his hands the thing that is good, Eph. 4, 28. and to withdraw himself from every brother that walketh inordinately, and not according to the doctrine received. The reasons to confirm us [Reason 1] in this truth, are many. First, we can never practice y^e duties of our callings, except we know them. This is the eye that leadeth us to the doing of thē, from the beginning to the ending of them. The blind man cannot see his way, John. 13, 17. If ye know these things, blessed are ye if ye do them. When once we know what duties are laid upon us, we are already entered into the way to do them and perform them.

[Reason 2] Secondly, such as transgress the bounds set before them, shall surely perish and be punished. When the people before the Law was given, were limited how far to pass, Moses addeth, whosoever toucheth the mount, shall be surely put to death: and the Apostle prosecuteth the threatening further, If so much as a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned, or thrust through with a dart. So then the consideratiō of y^e punishment threatened, & denounced against all that break the listes set unto them, (which is farther confirmed by sundry examples of Uzzah, and of Corah and his company,) ought so far to prevail with us, as to teach us to continue in the works of our own callings.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, it bringeth great confusion in family, in Church, & in common-wealth, when one executeth the calling of another. If the private person should step into the place of the Magistrate and handle the sword of justice, it would overturn the whole State. When Peter drew out his sword, and cut off the ear of the high Priests servant, Christ said unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword, shall perish with the sword. Everyone would be a Magistrate, and presume to sit in the seat of justice, and no man would be content to lead a private life, if he might do what he list. The like we might say of a family. All men should know their standing: the wife must not leap into the place of the husband, nor the servant into the place of the son: but everyone do his own duties, and we shall find enough to do our callings, if we be faithful and diligent in them.

[Use 1] The uses are next to be considered. First, it reproveth such as are altogether ignorant, and neither know, nor desire to know their duties. A fault in all, but especially in the Ministers of the word, that should give light to others. God requireth of them to teach the people, Mal. 2.7. The Priests lips should preserve knowledge, that so they may show themselves to be the messengers of the Lord of hosts. They must out of their treasury bring forth things both old and new. They can never teach, until they be taught: but these occupy the place of teachers before they have learned. It is a most ridiculous thing for a man to take upon him to run a race, that wanteth his legs: or to be an Orator and eloquent pleader that wanteth his tongue. Christ Jesus taught his Apostles, before he sent them to teach into all the world. This was shadowed out under the Law, Aaron must put on his belles, that his sound might be heard, when he went in unto the holy place before the Lord: but now we have Idol-ministers that have mouths, but cannot speak: the belles lack the clappers: they may be moved, but they cannot be heard. It were fit, that he which is to build up the house of God, should be ignorant of nothing, if it were possible: for he may at one time or other, make use of his knowledge. John instructed the soldiers, the Publicans, and the multitude that repaired and resorted unto him, Luke 3. he shall be better able to apply his doctrine, when he hath skill in every man's trade and occupation: Especially he ought not to be ignorant of the Scriptures, but to know them plentifully, and labor they may dwell in him abundantly, that from them as from a storehouse, he may furnish himself with plenty of all good things. Ignorance is a fault in any that would be accounted a Christian: it is a double fault in him that is a Minister. Secondly, it reproves such as omit their own duties, but rush upon the callings of other men. These are as a servant that is too diligent. These are not idle, but are busi-bodies in others men's matters, as 2 Thess. chapt. 3.11.12. We hear that there are some that walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busy-bodies: them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread.

So then, whether we be idle, and do nothing, or else busy in the duties belonging to other men, in effect it is all one, both are evil, and vices to be reformed in us. And the same Apostle, 1 Tim. 5.13. setteth down an heap and multitude of many sins, They learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house, & not only idle, but tattlers also, and busy-bodies, speaking things which they ought not. Here is knit together as in a chain, a company of vices: the idle, wanderers, pratlers, curious, and vncomly speakers. The fountain of all is idleness, which is ranged in the forefront, and draweth after it a tail and train of diverse evils, like a fruitful mother that hath many children. He speaketh by name against women, who ought to be painful, not idle: keepers of the house, not walkers and wanderers out of the house. The virtue that adorneth that sex is silence, and therefore they should not be tattlers and pratlers, or their tongue like the Aspen leaf, that never standeth still. They should meddle with their own business, and not be busy in other men's.

Secondly, seeing God hath set everyone in [Use 2] his calling, it is our duty to walk as we are limited by the word. The word of God is the warrantise of all callings. We must do our duties with faithfulness, diligence, patience, and wisdom. These are required to be performed in duties between man and man. This is to walk worthy of God, who hath called us unto his kingdom of glory, 1 Thess. 2.12. Many there are that profess the fear of God, and bear themselves as the disciples of Christ, who neglect the duties of their particular callings. True it is, the blessing of God is all in all. For except God build the house, the labor of the builder is in vain, and except God watch the City, the labor of the watchman is in vain. We confess also, that God requireth of us to search the Scriptures, to pray unto his Name, and seek after knowledge: nevertheless, these do not discharge us from following the duties of our private callings. It is not enough for us to say, that God will provide for us, that he hath promised to bless us and to supply our wants, and that he hath said, he will never leave us nor forsake us. For God hath promised no blessing to them that be idle; he sendeth them to school to learn of the Ant, which provideth her meat in Summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest. Prov. 6, 8. Solomon calleth aloud to such, How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard, when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep? Yet a little sleep: a little slumber: a little folding of the hands to sleep: so shall thy poverty come as one that trauelleth, and thy want as an armed man. As for those that pretend God's providence, & hold out the doctrine of it as a buckler to defend them in their evil and idle courses, they do most shamefully abuse it, which is to be furthered by the means that GOD hath appointed, and in his wisdom annexed thereunto. Neither let any think to obtain anything at his hands, that sit still & do nothing, that say, they will trust God with their life, & are sure that he will provide for them. The heathen men by the light of natural reason, saw well enough the foolishness and absurdity of these men's doings. They commend the prayers of that Captain, that prayed for victory with his sword in his hand, and fighting, did call for aide: and on the other side, dispraise the practice of him that withdrew himself out of the battle, so soon as it was begun, under color & pretence of praying for good success, affirming, that God doth not accept the sacrifice of Cowards, neither receiveth their prayers, because they are unreasonable. For they held it no reason, that he which shooteth not, should hit the white: nor that he should win the victory, that abideth not the battle: neither that he should have any good, that doth nothing toward it. As then victory is won by labor, not by sloth; so shall we attain the blessings of God by our endeavor, not by our idleness. It is required therefore of everyone of us, to consider our callings wherein we are placed. We have not all of us one calling, but diverse. Some are set in the private family, and some in the common-wealth, and some in the Church of God: all have not one office, but diverse. We are traualers in this world, as passengers in a Ship, who being there, some for one business, and other for another purpose, do never meddle one with another, but everyone careth for the discharging and dispatching of his proper office. So ought it to be with us, we have our proper calling, and proper duties to be performed therein. Be diligent in the duties of it, and thou mayest look for a blessing upon thy labors. Sanctify thy daily labors with daily prayer; but presume not that prayer shall help thee without thine own labor. If thou shouldst pray to God all the day long, to feed thee, to clothe thee, to sustain thee and thy family, the idle man's prayer availeth nothing. We must pray unto him when we begin our labors; and bless his name when we have ended our labors: but to call upon him, determining with our selves, not to take pains, or not determining with our selves to take pains, is no better then to dally with GOD, and deceive our selves.

Lastly, it is our duty to seek to be acquainted [Use 3] with the word, where we shall find that plainly and particularly set down, which we would know. In what state soever we are set, we shall have a sure guide to begin the works of our calling, to go forward in them, and to persevere unto the end. Heereby we shall be able to warrant our works, and know what duties God accepteth, and what he accepteth not. It is a light unto our eyes, and a lantern unto our steppes, Psal. 119, 105. It is the commendation of God's children, to be conversant in it. In darkness we cannot go safely without the help of a lantern: so are we borne and brought up in ignorance, and continue therein, unless we be guided by the word of God and his Spirit. Many that want the knowledge & direction of the Scriptures, think they live in the light, walk in the light, and behave themselves as children of the day, and are in as good a case, and have as good souls toward God, as they that study the Scriptures, and meditate in them day & night. They think it is not for simple men to meddle with the Scriptures, but for Preachers and Divines. They think that knowledge maketh men worse, and that none are worse men, that none will deceive a man sooner then they; and therefore such as seek to know God, and to serve him according to his word, they call in contempt and derision, Scripture men. But these ignorant beasts, speak by the spirit of the devil, and oppose themselves against the express commandments of God, and the approved examples of his setuants. The Lord himself speaketh, Hos. 4, 6. My people perish for want of knowledge. The Apostle saith, 1. Cor. 14, 20. Be not children in understanding, but in maliciousness, be as children. The men of Berea are commended, because they searched the Scriptures privately, to prove the truth of the doctrine which they had heard delivered publicly. But if knowledge, as is pretended, do make men worse, then is it evil in it self, and not good: forasmuch as that which is good, cannot make a man evil. What then? Dare any two-legged beast presume in the profaneness of his wicked heart, to say, that to know God and his will which is most pure and holy, can make a man any worse? Or, that the more a man knoweth of Jesus Christ and Christian religion, the worse he should be? A vile blasphemy: O detestable impiety. Will it make a servant worse, to know the will of his Master? Or a subject, to know the Princes laws and statutes? It will be farther objected, [Object.] There was never more knowledge, and less practice: a man may hear many speak much out of the Bible, who notwithstanding are naughty men. I answer, be it so: yet the cause is not their knowledge, but want of grace: it is not in the word, but their own corruption. They are fools (saith Solomon) that hate knowledge, and are enemies unto it. For all well doing in our callings, proceedeth from faith, and faith is grounded upon knowledge, and doth increase through knowledge. Where there is no knowledge of God's sacred and heavenly will, men break out without all conscience into swearing, lying, stealing, whoring and killing. Moreover, all they that can talk of the Scriptures, & make show of them to others, have not by and by the knowledge of them: for as much as they may allege more a great deal then they understand. Shall none then be saved, will some say, but such as know the Scriptures; can we not be led by God's Spirit, and serve him, except we be conversant in them? I answer, no. The Spirit guideth no man without the word. We are begotten anew, by the immortal seed of the word, saith Peter. Of his own accord, he hath begotten us by the word of truth, saith James. If then we be begotten by the word, to a new life, we are dead without it, or rather have no being of a true Christian. No man can truly serve God, until he know how to serve him. It is God that teacheth how he will be served, and he teacheth only by his word. He hath no other school-house, but the Scriptures: such as think to learn his will elsewhere are much deceived, and will in the end prove themselves the disciples of the devil, not the scholars of Christ: forasmuch as he that is of God, heareth God's word: ye hear it not, because ye are not of God. No man can be saved without faith, for without faith it is impossible to please God: but faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, Rom. 10.17. No man can be saved, except he be regenerated, for except we be borne again, we cannot enter into the kingdom of God, John. 3. but wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his ways, but by taking heed thereto according to his word? Psal. 116.9. No man can be saved, except he fear God▪ forasmuch as the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, Prov. 1.7. whereas fools despise wisdom and instruction: But none can possibly come to y^e fear of God, but such as earnestly endeavor to know God, as we see, Pro. 2.1.5. My son, if thou receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee, &c. then thou shalt understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God. None can be saved that are foul and filthy in their lives, and impure in all their ways, for no unclean thing shall enter into his kingdom: but where there is no knowledge of GOD, there the mouth is full of cursing and bitterness, the throat is an open sepulcher, the feet are swift to shed blood, destruction and misery are in their ways and therefore the Prophet saith, I have hidden thy word in my heart, that I might not sin against thee, Psal. 119.11. If his word dwell in us, we have a bridle to restrain us from evil doing, and when we are ready to break out into sin, it pulleth us back, and saith unto us, Do it not. It layeth before us the will and wrath of God, it teacheth us what we ought to do, and telleth us the danger if we do it not. It is our duty therefore to pray to God to give us the understanding of his word, and to resolve with our selves to perform whatsoever we read in it. If then we have a warrant for that which we do out of the word, we have comfort in our callings: but if we follow the motion of our own brains, and have no other light but of our own nature to direct us, we live in darkness. Such as have the light of the Sun, do travel safely in respect of their bodies: so if we have the sure word of the Prophets and Apostles, as a light that shineth in dark places, we are in the safe way to salvation, and are certain we cannot miss of a perfect direction touching all the duties of our callings.

17 And the Lord spake unto Moses, and unto Aaron, saying, 18 Cut ye not off the Tribe of the families of the Kohathites from among the Levites.

19 But thus do unto them, that they may live, and not die: when they approach unto the most Holy things, Aaron, and his sons shall go in, and appoint them everyone to his service, and to his burden.

The particular duties of the Kohathites, being declared, the reason is added and rendered in this division, and then he passeth to the duties of the next family. Here then Moses showeth the cause why the Priests ought to cover all the Sanctuary, and the appurtenances, so that they ought not to be handled of the Kohathites, until they were covered, lest such as presumed to pry into them, or to meddle with them, otherwise then became the dignity, honor, and estimation of them, were stricken with sudden death, and so perish in their sins. Thus God restraineth the curiosity of man's nature, and teacheth it to be wise according to sobriety. We are wont to contemn the duties of our own calling, as vulgar and common: and to search into the things that belong not unto us: yea, the more we are forbidden to meddle, the more we are desirous to be meddling. The reason in this place, is framed thus,

If the irreverent handling of holy things procure the wrath of God, and our destruction, then we must take heed to the charge belonging unto us.

But the irreverent handling of holy things doth so: Therefore we must take heed to the charge belonging unto us, and not curiously meddle with other things.

Thus doth God hate, and his soul abhor the contempt of holy things, when men give way to their own affections, and through curiosity search farther, then God alloweth.

[Object.] Before we proceed to the doctrine, a question may be asked out of these words, why God permitteth the Priests only to handle the instruments of the Sanctuary, but forbiddeth the rest of the Kohathites, upon whose shoulders he layeth the burden to bear them: so that he bindeth their hands from touching of them, and restraineth their eyes from beholding of them, under a great penalty, lest they die. I answer, [Answer.] this was done for diverse causes; in respect of the ordinances themselves, in respect of the other Tribes, in respect of the Levites, and in respect of the Priests themselves.

First of all it was prescribed to procure greater reverence unto these holy ordinances of God, among the people. For when they should see how carefully they were to be handled, how circumspectly to be covered, and how orderly they were delivered from one to another; it served to touch the hearts of all men, with a reverent regard and opinion of them, and to deliver them from the contempt of men.

Secondly, when the rest of the Tribes of Israel should behold, that many even among the Levites themselves, albeit they were to minister to the Priests, to do the service of the Tabernacle, and to draw near unto God, above the rest of their brethren, yet even they were kept from the touching of the Sanctuary; I say the rest of the tribes were more humbled by it, were touched with a feeling of their own unworthiness, and were moved to give honor to the Priests of God, and those that were appointed to be their teachers.

Thirdly, all occasion and matter of envy was quite banished and taken away, when the rest of the Levites heard with their ears, and saw with their eyes, that their brethren the Kohathites had a charge so full of danger put upon them, and committed unto them. For God threateneth to destroy all such as presumed to touch anything that was forbidden them. An example whereof we have in the men of Bethshemesh, whō the Lord smote with a great slaughter, because they looked into the Ark, 1 Sam. 6.19. which showeth the greatness of their sin.

Lastly, the Priests themselves, the sons of Aaron, were admonished to take heed, lest through their negligence and carelessness, they destroyed their brethren: forasmuch as if anything remained uncovered, it would turn to their destruction. Hereupon two other questions may arise; first, how it standeth with God's justice to punish the Kohathites for the fault of the Priests? and whether the sons of Aaron should escape, whose fault it was, if ought remained uncovered? I answer [Answer.] the fault is not the Priests alone, nor the Kohathites alone, but they partake together in the sin, and should suffer together in the punishment, as they are threatened, Exod. 28.43. We see it also in the example of Nadab, and Abihu, who were consumed with fire, because they offered strange fire before the Lord, Levite. 10, 1, 2. But most plainly, Num. 18.3. The Lord said unto Aaron, Thy brethren of the Tribe of Levi shall keep thy charge, and the charge of all the Tabernacle: only they shall not come nigh the vessels of the Sanctuary, and the altar, that neither they, nor you also die. Where we see, God doth threaten Aaron and his sons, as well as the rest of the Levites.

Verse 18.19. Cut ye not off the Tribe of the families, &c. We have in these words the reason of the former institution: it is drawn from the danger that will ensue the careless and irreverent handling of the instruments of the Tabernacle. Aaron and his sons must appoint to the Kohathites their several offices, and show them what part every particular person must bear, to the end the wrath of God do not break in among them, and cut off every soul that sinneth. The consideration therefore of the wrath and indignation of God, ready to come upon the offenders, ought to increase their care to do the duty that God requireth. We learn from hence, [Doctrine 1] that all holy things must be handled rightly, reverently, and religiously. Whatsoever matters of God we meddle withal, whether it be hearing of his word, or receiving of the Sacraments, or calling upon his Name, or reading the Scriptures, or conferring with others for the increase of our knowledge & obedience, we are to be careful to do them with all possible fear and reverence. This duty the Lord urgeth by his Prophet, Isaiah 66.2. To him will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite Spirit, and trembleth at my word. The Apostle writing to the Hebrews, persuadeth to labor to have grace, whereby they may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear, Hebr. 12.28. They that will please God in the duties of his worship, must be humbly affected, and base in their own eyes. Hence it is, y^t Christ willeth us to be careful, not only what we hear, Mar. 4.24. but also how we hear, Luke 8.18. We must regard not only the matter that is delivered, but the manner how it is received: forasmuch as we may hear the word, and yet sin in our hearing Thus were the servants of God affected, when they came before him, to pray unto him, O my God, I am ashamed and blush to lif. up my face to thee, my God, for our iniquities are increased over our head, and our trespass is grown up unto the heavens, Ezra 9.6. Wherefore whensoever we have to do with God in any part of his word, or worship, let us come in humility and lowliness, let us approach near unto him with a broken heart, with a contrite spirit, & with an humble soul falling down flat before his footstool, and worshipping toward his holy Temple.

[Reason 1] The reasons hereof are evident. For first, we have to do with God in matters of religion. When the word is preached or read, the Lord speaketh to us: when we pray to God, we speak to him that is glorious in power and praises. Abraham praying unto God, confesseth his own baseness and unworthiness, I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord, which am but dust and ashes, Gen. 18.27. And Daniel in his prayer saith, O Lord, righteousness belongeth unto thee, but unto us confusion of faces, as at this day. Dan. 9.7. Children dealing before their parents will be wary how they behave themselves: subjects in the presence of the Prince will be most dutiful: so ought it to be, and much rather, when we appear before the King of kings, considering with whom we have to deal. So likewise touching the word, it is not man that doth deliver it, God is the Author of it, and therefore we are oftentimes commanded to hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches, Revel. 2. and 3.

[Reason 2] Secondly, such as come without reverence, and due regard into his presence, do lose the fruit and benefit of their coming. We are willed to give earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip, Heb. 2.1. This is it that Christ our Savior teacheth. Lu. 8. For having given warning that we take heed how we hear, he giveth this reason, Mar. 4.24. With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you: and unto you that hear, shall more be given. Where we see, God will deal with us, as we deal with him, and serve us as we serve him. Such measure of attention as we bring with us, such measure of grace shall we receive from him. If then we come careless, it is no marvel if we depart fruitless. Lay then these two things together, that we have to deal with a most terrible and fearful God, who is even a consuming fire; and that with what measure of reverence and attention we mete, it shall be measured unto us again: it followeth from them both, that God must be served with fear and trembling.

[Use 1] Let us now come to the uses of this doctrine, which remain to be considered of us. First, this reproveth all such as come without reverence, to the exercises of religion, never considering whereabouts they go, but rashly and unreverently, disorderously, & vndecently behave themselves in the house of God. If a man should come to hear a speech uttered by his Prince, so contemptibly, all men would cry shame of him, and account him worthy severe punishment, and censure him as guilty of the contempt of his person. I should think I had done a great work, and laid a worthy foundation, if I could thoroughly teach you this one lesson, and ground you in this one point, to behave yourselves with reverence in the place of God's worship. He that hath learned to come reverently, and behave himself in the service of God, as in his presence, hath made a notable beginning & a good entrance to work in him right hearing and careful practicing. Scarce one among an hundred maketh conscience of this duty, and our ordinary assemblies have scarce the outward face of a Church, in regard of the want of this duty, in the greatest part of hearers. If the lest occasion be offered, our eyes and feet, and tongues and hands, are set on work another way, that we have quite forgotten God, his word, the work in hand, the matter, the time, the place, and our selves also, as if we were an assembly of fools. What is now become of our hearing? or where is the attention that ought to be in us? If any man come into the Church, our eyes are fixed upon him, our feet are ready to carry us unto him, our mouths are opened to speak unto him, our hands are stretched out to draw him as it were with violence unto us: and sometimes whiles one haleth him one way, another pulleth him another way, that we seem to strive who shall most forget himself, and be author of the greatest disorder and confusion in the house of God, wherein all things ought to be done decently and in order.

When Christ came to Nazareth, and as his custom was, went into the Synagogue on the Sabbath day to preach the Gospel, the eyes of all them that were in the Synagogue, were fastened on him. Our eyes, either are not fastened on the speaker, or if they be, they are soon removed. Every fancy carryeth us away, that we seem to mind nothing less, then y^e business in hand; or as if it were of so small importance, that it skilled not what we did: or as if our friends that come into the Church, were to be respected above God. In the time & place of God's worship, our minds ought to be settled and attentive to the work we have in hand, y^t we should know no friends, nor gaze after the comers in, but cut off all lets and impediments, that may hinder the saving hearing of the word. When we have done all that we can, & labored earnestly to gather home our wits from wandering, & straying from the matter we are about, we shall find all to be little enough: but if we nourish occasions to withdraw our minds and are glad to catch hold of them, when they are offered, we shall never want occasions, but an army of them will present themselves before us, and so entangle us in their snares, that we shall never profit our selves by the word, nor suffer others that would to profit, but hinder them greatly that desire to be better employed. Our feet, which have brought us into the house of God, and set us in our places, ought there to rest, until the time of our departure. The Psalmist saith, Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem.

We must not therefore stir up and down, and remove out of our seats to the loss of God's word, whereunto we should attend. It is noted to the commendation of king Josiah, when the Law was read in the ears of the people, that he stood in his place, and made a covenant before the Lord to walk after the Lord, and to keep his commandments. This also shall be our praise and profit, if in time of hearing the word of God, we keep in our places, and abide in them without removing to other men. We use our hands to pull in others, when we should use our own ears to hearken after the sound of the word: we use our tongues to talk unto them, whereas the fittest ornament that becometh the Church, is the silence of the hearer, to give audience to the speaker Neither let any object, they can do both, attend the word, and intend others, hear and speak at one time, and use their ears and mouths together. For the one is an occasion to distract and disturb the other. Our minds are not infinite, but finite: we cannot occupy them about matters of a diverse nature, but one object is ready to thrust the other out of place.

Besides, the word is so precious, that it worthily craveth all the powers and faculties of the soul! Whosoever busieth himself in other things, as removing, talking, beckning, nodding, and such like gestures, while he is hearing, heareth but with half an ear, if with half an ear, whereas both are too little for so high a work. For as the Apostle speaketh of preaching the Gospel, so we may say of the hearing of it, Who is sufficient for these things? The occasions that hinder the saving hearing of the word, are many in number, I will reckon up a few of them, which all are to be cast away as clogges and impediments from us, and enemies to our attention.

The first is, straying & wandering thoughts; whereas the powers of the soul should wait upon the voice of the Preacher, and follow him whithersoever he goeth, our minds are musings upon other things, sometimes upon our coffers, sometimes upon our pastures, sometimes upon our pastimes, sometimes upon our companions, sometimes upon our worldly business, whereby it cometh to pass, that being present, we are absent: being in the Church, we are out of the Church; being hearers, we are no hearers. For albeit we be present in body, we are absent in mind, and make our selves idol-hearers. The Scripture noteth a kind of idle and Idol Pastors, that have mouths and speak not: so the number is not small of idle and idol hearers, which have ears and hear not: who sit in their seats as images in glass windows, or like to the pictures of dead men upon their tombs, bending their knees, lifting up their eyes, holding up their hands, keeping silence, and yet are never the wiser, nor the better, nor the holier. So do these living images, they make show of one thing with the outward man, & perform another with the inward. We must desire of God to give unto us, constant, steady, and stayed hearts, that having ears to hear, we may hear indeed.

The second unseemly, and unsavory gesture, which is another great impediment, is a wandering eye, gazing and gaping after every occurrent and occasion that is offered. It is wisely spoken of the wise Solomon, The eyes of a fool are in the ends of the earth; and on the other side, he saith, The wise man's eyes are in his head. Take heed to this abuse, which quickly draweth the heart after it.

The third hindrance is, removing of the body, not only shifting and stirring of it up and down, but arising out of our places, and removing to place other, or beckning with our hands, or nodding with our heads; which bewray manifestly that the mind is otherwise occupied and exercised then about the present work which we would seem to regard, and ought indeed to attend. One thing, saith Christ, is necessary: busying of our selves in other matters is not necessary, but bringeth with it apparent hurt, and detriment to the soul.

The fourth impediment is irreverent talking and vncivill laughing, as if the Temple of God (which is the house of prayer) were a Theater for sights, or a place of mart and exchange for commodities, where every man might single out companions. When any man heareth the voice of a crier ready to utter a Proclamation in the name of the Prince, he is ready to hold his peace and keep silence. The Ministers are as God's Heralds, or as the voice of a crier, they come as sent on a message unto us from God, and therefore all must hearken what they bring unto us, and none withdraw his ear from hearing of the Law.

The fifth is a secure and senseless sleeping, when we have drowsy ears, and cannot hold up our heads an hour: for some are no sooner in their seats, but their hearts and bodies are asleep. Some men regard not the word at all, they care not for it, they will not come unto it, albeit it come unto them, and be brought home unto their doors. The world accounteth this no sin at all, or at least a venial sin, because the laws of men lay not hold on them; but Christ accounteth it a great and capital sin. He willeth his disciples to shake off the dust of their feet, as a witness against those that willfully contemn this ordinance of God, as if the earth itself were infected, and the places of their abode corrupted by the contagion of their sins: and in the next Chapter, he maketh such to be worse then the Sodomites. For the contempt of the word is an abridgement of all sin gathered together in one. Woe unto us for this neglect and contempt of the word, we are so far from trembling at it, that some will not step out of their doors: others, are content to come, but they are so far from showing reverence, that they fall fast asleep and will not be awaked. These irreverent actions and gestures show they regard it not, neither are touched with a feeling of it. Do these men tremble when the Minister reproveth sin? Do they examine their hearts whether they be guilty or not? Do they say unto their own souls, What have I done? Alas, how can they, when they have heard nothing? Neither let them go away in the dark, and seek to cover their drowsiness of spirit, under the name of an infirmity, or weakness that is in them: for they are not sometimes overtaken with it, but make a daily practice of it: they never strive against it, but nourish it in themselves, as those that are delighted in it, They cannot say, they do that evil which they would not, but that which they would do. They frame their bodies, and settle them of purpose to sleep, and so they may do it closely that they be not espied, they regard no more. They never call themselves to an account what they have heard: nor whether they have been overtaken this day; neither if they have, do they resolve with themselves, they will sin no more. If ever they had truly repented of this sin, they would endeavor not to be overcome again by it. If ever they had been truly sorrowful, it would bring forth in them a watchfulness over themselves, and a care to prevent it in time to come.

The last abuse is in careless coming, and shameless departing out of the Church, and separating our selves from the Congregation, before it be dismissed and dissolved. We use to reprove those and complain greatly of thē, when they are invited as guests to a feast, that come too late, and make the rest of the company to stay for them; or make haste to be gone away before the feast be finished. We desire that all our neighbors that are invited, should sit down together, and arise up from the table together. The word of God is a continual feast, the exercises of our religion are as a dainty banquet, we should come unto them, as men do to good cheer, & feed hungerly and heartily upon them. The Prophet witnesseth concerning his own practice, that he had gone with the multitude into the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, as they that keep a feast, Psalm. 42, 4. Is it so with us? Do we flock together to the hearing and handling of holy things, as we do unto a feast? If we did hunger and thirst after the word of God, as we do after bodily food, we would be as greedy to be partakers of the one, as we are forward to taste of the other. But the case is with us, as it fareth with those that have full stomachs: we desire not spiritual food, and therefore make no haste unto it. Now one cometh, and then another: now one droppeth away, and then another, and they think they have tarried too long. This is an open protestation or proclamation, that we are weary of holy things, and loathe them more then Israel did Manna. These men are Church-sick, or Sermon-sick, a common disease among common hearers. The Church is with them as a prison: they are as weary of staying in the Church, as the malefactor is of lying in prison: for as the prison holdeth them where they would not be, and from the place where they would be: so do profane persons account the Church as a place that restraineth their liberty, that they cannot do what they would do, nor be where they desire to be, nor resort to that company that they better affect, nor follow those sports and delights wherein they take the greatest pleasure.

The faithful in former times have accounted it a punishment to be driven from the house of GOD: but these men account it a sore punishment to be there. They desired to dwell in it all the days of their lives, but we care not if we never come thither. They judged it the greatest famine to want y^e word, but if we be held never so little a time from our dinner, we complain as if we were like to starve. They longed to have the Sabbath day come, but these men would fain have it ended, and think it to be the longest day that is in the year, and the most tedious.

Secondly, it is the duty of the Minister to preach the word & administer the sacraments [Use 2] with all due regard and respect to the person they sustain, and the things that they meddle withal. We must do nothing that may make our Ministry fruitless, and bring it into contempt, but seek to adorn it and beautify it by all reverent carriage of our selves in it, and in the discharge of the duties of it.

This hath many branches: First, it behooveth us to set our selves in God's presence, and consider that we are his messengers, & speak in his name, and are as it were his mouth. How shall the hearer learn, that in his hearing he hath to do with God, and cometh to hear what he shall say unto him by our mouths, Acts, chapter 10, verse 33. if we do not remember that we stand in the place of God, and do after a sort represent his person? This is the counsel that the Apostle Paul giveth to Timothy, 1 Tim. chap. 2, 15. Study to show thyself approved unto GOD, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. Whensoever we get up into the Pulpit, before all things we must know, being placed in that office, whose message we deliver, and that if we speak not uprightly as becometh his Majesty, we must give a reckoning unto him. Wherefore, we must so teach, as if God were present with us, as if a Secretary should speak before a Prince: for he is his instrument, who is Lord over all. We must be able to make this protestation before men and Angels; I stand here as it were a chosen vessel before the Lord, to bear his Name unto his people: I am not to be the messenger of mine own words, but to be his mouth: I must lay aside whatsoever passions are in me, & utterly disclaim mine own affections, that I may protest indeed, that whatsoever I speak, is from God, and have drawn and derived it from him.

Secondly, it is our duty to aim at his glory that hath called us. We must not sit down in Moses chair to preach our selves, and to get credit to our own names: if we make this the end of our preaching, it cannot be, but we shall profane the holy word of God, and disguise it one way or other. The Apostle regarded little to be judged of men, and esteemed nothing the vain applause of the world, but preached Christ among them, and him crucified. Hence it is, that our Savior saith, How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only? It is a note of a true teacher, to seek his glory that sent him, as contrariwise it is the note of a false teacher, if any in delivering his doctrine, seek himself rather than God. This is the difference between a true and false teacher, as Christ showeth at large, John. 7.17, 18. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself: he that speaketh of himself, seeketh his own glory: but he that seeketh his glory that sent him, the same is true, and no unrighteousness is in him. That is true doctrine that giveth glory to God, and they are true teachers that seek to set it forth only. Let us consider of this a little farther.

If any be desirous to know, whether any doctrine be true, and have God the Author of it, let him labor to find it by this note. The doctrine of predestination hath been taught diversely, one way that it is of foreseen works, another, of the purpose of God according to election, Ro. 9.11. If any desire to know whether of these two opinions is the truer, let him examine them both by this rule, and try them by this touch-stone; which of them doth best serve to set forth the glory of God? Not that which imputeth our predestination, to our selves, and our own works, but the other which ascribeth all to his good pleasure, who hath elected us to the praise of the glory of his grace, Ephe. 1.6. The like we might say of justification and salvation of the elect, touching which are different doctrines delivered: Some teach that we are justified by faith alone, that is, by Christ's satisfaction apprehended and applied by faith: others, that we are justified by men's merits, and not by Christ's obedience alone. These two opinions are clean contrary, and cannot agree together, if one of them be true, the other is false. Now by this we shall be made able to judge, mark whether of them giveth God the glory alone: They that set up man's merits and deserts, and make him to have power to work out his own salvation, do give the glory to man, and so rob God of his honor and glory, and therefore they cannot teach the truth. But they that impute justification to Christ's righteousness, who is our merit, do commend his grace and mercy alone; and therefore they teach that doctrine which is of God. If this course were well noted and observed, it would shake in pieces many articles in controversy between the Church of Rome and us. We should not have occasion to dispute so often, and to reason with them touching man's freewill, indulgences, pardons, intercession of Saints, and such like points, which lead away our minds from God and his glory, from the Creator, to the Creature. Let all the Ministers of God therefore prove themselves and their teaching by his note; let them set his glory before their eyes, according to the example of Christ their Master, John. 8.50. I seek not mine own glory, there is one that seeketh and judgeth.

Thirdly, it belongeth to the Ministers duty, to come well prepared and provided as a wise Scribe taught to the kingdom of heaven, bringing forth out of his treasure, things both old and new, Matth. 13.52. The Ministers must come with good advisement and premeditation, and so handle the word with fear and reverence. There is no man that is sent on an embassy, but will think before hand what to say: much more is required, and ought to be practiced of the messengers of God. They must eat the roll of God's book, and have their tongue touched with a coal from the Altar. They must not utter whatsoever cometh into their mind, but that they have before well chewed and digested. He that speaketh suddenly, shall never speak profitably: but presumeth too far upon his own gifts, regardeth not as he ought the good or the people, and cannot have that comfort to himself which were expedient.

Fourthly, they must regard not only the matter which they handle, but the manner of handling. Some are so negligent and careless in delivering the word, that they regard not what words they use, and so let slip from them such homely phrases, as it were kitchen-stuff, that it bringeth the Minister, and his ministry, and the word it self into contempt. It is noted of Christ, that there proceeded gracious words out of his mouth, Luke 4.22. according to the saying of the Prophet, Grace is poured into thy lips, Psal. 45.2. Let us so speak the word of God both for matter and manner, as it ought to be spoken, and as we are persuaded, Christ and his Apostles would have spoken it, if they had delivered it to the people. Our ordinary talk and communication should be as it were seasoned with salt, and minister grace to the hearers: how much more therefore when the word of God is in our mouths, and uttered by us? If we set this as a rule and caution before our eyes, it will serve as all-sufficient to inform us, and make the word reverent in our mouths. Some take upon them to reprove sin, but it is in such a foolish manner, in such a jesting vein, and after such a scoffing fashion, that they rather persuade to sin, then dissuade from sin, and bring the people in love with it rather then out of the love of it.

Therefore let this be another rule added to the former, that no man must gird and glance at sin, to show forth his own wit, and to magnify himself, to be accounted and esteemed that way. Rather let us pierce the very heart of it, with the two edged sword of God's word, and strike downright blows at it with the hammer of God's word, that so it may be broken in pieces. Sin is grown to a great head: it is not to be dallied withal. He that playeth with a serpent, may happily be stung of it, before he be aware.

Fifthly, it is required of the Minister to speak to the people with understanding. We must not fly aloft above the reach and capacity of those to whom we speak; and consider not so much what is lawful for us to deliver, but what is fit for the people to hear. It is better to speak five words with understanding, then ten thousand in a tongue that is not understood, 1 Cor. 14.19. as the Teacher of the Gentiles testifieth, who spake languages and tongues more then all we. We are commanded to lift up our voice as a trumpet, to tell Israel their sins; but if the trumpet make an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to battle? The Apostle allegeth it as a judgment upon the hearer, not as a praise and commendation of the speaker, With men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people.

Our Auditors are all, or at lest for the most part, rude and ignorant, and it is our duty to bow and stoop down to their capacity: and when we think we speak plainly, we shall find oftentimes that we speak darkly and obscurely, not plainly and familiarly enough.

Lastly, let us content our selves with the purity and simplicity of the word, which is sufficient in it self to expound it self, and able, yea, only able to give direction and satisfaction to the conscience. It may be truly said, that the Minster sitting in Moses chair, is, as it were set upon a stage, whose smallest actions and gestures all the people behold; and therefore albeit he be never so precise in the discharge of his calling, the hearers that can see but the outward actions, and not inward affections, will judge of the heart by the appearance, and of the substance by the circumstances: so that if any lightness or dissoluteness appear, they by and by conceive that all is amiss, and little regard anything that he doth deliver and speak unto them. True it is, this is their fault and infirmity, howbeit we must provide that we give no occasion, and cut off occasions from all such as are glad to lay hold on occasions.

[Use 3] Lastly, it is our duty, when we come to the house of God, to take heed to our feet, lest we depart from the Church, as the foolish virgins from the gates of heaven. We must learn how to prepare our selves, that we may profit thereby, as the Lord would have the people sanctified before the Law was to be delivered, Exod. 19.

This preparation to be duly performed hath many particular parts, as several branches issuing out of one root.

First, it is our duty to come together into one place to hear the word, and to call upon his Name. For albeit we must read the Scriptures privately in our houses, yet we must have them publicly expounded and interpreted: and albeit private prayer be not unprofitable, and private exhortations be oftentimes available: yet our public assemblies have a more special blessing promised unto them, Matthew, Chapter 18. verse 20. Where two or three are gathered together in my Name, there am I in the middes of them. Before we can hear the word, it is required of us to come to the place of hearing, Psal. 34.11. and 122.1. The Centurion telleth our Savior that he had such servants under his authority, y^t if he said to one Come, he cometh, Matthew, 8.9. God our greatest Master, under whose authority we are, and he under the authority of none, sendeth out his messengers, and calleth his guests, Come and eat of my meat, and drink of the Wine that I have drawn: yet we seem deaf, and cannot hear: senseless, and cannot move.

The unreasonable creatures, even the worms that creep in the earth, put us to shame and serve to condemn us: when God in the beginning said, Let there be light, It was so: Gen. 1.24. Let the earth bring forth her living creatures after their kinds; the earth did so. When God intended to bring a plague upon the Egyptians, and called for the Grassehoppers and Caterpillars, Psalm 105. verse 34. He spake, and the Locusts came, and Caterpillars, and that without number. When he asked for them, they delayed not, but went out to do his will. But GOD hath spoken many times to us, and we regard not his call: and if we come sometimes at his bidding, we think we have done our duty, and him a pleasure.

We must come constantly and continually, Blessed are they that dwell in his house, Psalm 84. verse 4. The Church is not as an Inn to sojourne in, but an house to abide and dwell in, that Christ may find us there: but many prefer the Inn and Ale-house before it. It is better for us to be found in the Temple, then in the Tavern, and in the house of prayer, then in a den of Thieves. Let the zeal of his house eat us up. Let us consecrate the Sabbath as holy to the Lord, and make it a day of holy rest, not of unholy and ungodly riot.

Secondly, as we must come diligently, fo we must attend carefully, when we are come, otherwise what benefit can we have, or look for by our coming? The Prophet joineth these together, and coupleth them as two friends in one chain, Psal. 34.11. Come, and hearken. If it were enough to come and hear a voice, the ox and asse might do that, as well as we: for they can apprehend an outward sound. Therefore we must do more then that, we must set our minds upon that which we heave, or else we hear no otherwise then the beasts that are without understanding. This attention is a notable virtue, it is a Jewel for the ear. We see how many in our days delight to have Rings and Jewels hanging at their ears, and they account it a great ornament unto them. I will not say unto them, as the heathen Poet in scoffing manner answereth, that it is because they have no fingers on their hands, as if the fingers, not the ears, were made for rings: but this I will say, that if we had the richest Jewels that the East or West could afford unto us, if we have not an ear bored through to the heart, to hear y^e word of God, they are no better then as Jewels put into a swine's snout. Happy is he that weareth this Jewel of attention, a Jewel of infinite price and value: this is to have an hearing ear, whereas all others have ears and hear not.

Thirdly, we must remember what we have heard, and not suffer it to slip from us. For what availeth it to be attentive for the time, and so soon as we are departed to forget all, thereby suffering the birds to pick up that which is sown? that is, Satan to steal out of their hearts that which hath been taught them. The Apostle James compareth such a man to one that beholdeth his natural face in a glass, who goeth his way, and forgetteth immediately what manner of one he was. The word of God that saith, O my people hear my Law, Psal. 78.1. saith also else-where, My son forget not my Law, Pro. 3.1. The Lord commanded the Israelites to bind his words upon their hands for a sign, that they should be as frontlets between their eyes, and write them upon the posts of their houses, and gates of their Cities: all these were as helps for memory against forgetfulness, as if he had said unto them, Have them always in remembrance. Of all persons old men seem to have the weakest memories, which decay with their age; and these do most of all complain of them: howbeit the heathen man telleth us that there is no man so old, that hath forgotten where he laid up his treasure. All men remember the things they most regard, & such as they love, they will not forget, forasmuch as Where the treasure is, there will the heart be also, Mat. 6.21. If then we remember not the things of God, the chief cause is because we do not much esteem of them. Set an high price upon them, value them above thy silver and thy gold, esteem them beyond all pearls and precious stones, and thou shalt find thy memory much bettered and increased.

The fourth is, to plant in us true godliness, and reform our lives, as it were to rid our ground of all briars & bushes before we sow anything in it. The gate of God's house is the gate of righteousness, because none but the just and righteous ought to enter into it, Psal. 118.19, 20. This is the cause that Jacob, when he went to Bethel to worship God, first cleansed his house of the filthiness of idolatry, and commanded his household to be clean, and change their garments; thereby understanding the purity of the heart, and the changing of their minds, by the renewing of them according to true godliness. Thus doth the Lord command the Israelites to wash their clothes, and sanctify themselves, before they came to hear the law at his mouth, Exo. 19.14. To this purpose David saith, Psal. 26.6. I will wash mine hands in innocence; so will I compass thine Altar, O Lord. If we come into God's presence, without sanctification, we offer a sacrifice full of blemishes which his soul abhorreth. He rejecteth our prayers as abominable, and our hearing of his word is turned into sin.

Lastly, we are bound to lay up in the heart that which we hear, for God especially requireth the heart. If that be wanting, he misseth it by and by, he espyeth it so soon as we come; as he did him that came to the marriage feast without his wedding garment, Mat. 22.11. There is no man hath any treasure that leaveth or layeth it commonly and carelessly, but he locketh it up, that no man should take it from him: the word is a pearl, and a pearl of such price, that when he hath found it that knoweth the worth of it, he selleth all that he hath to buy it: the heart is as it were the coffer where we ought to keep it. If we hold it in our hands, or have it in our heads, or suffer it to dwell in our mouths only, and cannot afford to give it room and lodging in our hearts, it is in danger every foot to be taken from us, and we surprised of it. Such persons honor him with their lips, but their hearts are far from him, Matt. 15. The blessed Virgin is commended that she kept those sayings in her heart; So did Isaac go out into the fields to meditate, at eventide: he chose a solitary place and fit season, to call to mind such things as he had heard. Wherefore, let us also lay up in our souls and ponder in our hearts, such good things as we have learned, and let us hide them as in the casket of a good conscience, that in all times of need, we may bring forth these precious treasures to help us. We know not into what troubles and perplexities we may come, how we may be tempted & assaulted, & into what dangers of spiritual enemies we may fall: how bitter will those days be unto us, if we have no word of God dwelling in us, to comfort us, & raise us up again? It will then be too late to go and buy oil in our lamps, when we should use it. Let us store our selves with plenty of heavenly meditations, that we may never be too seek; and arm our selves with such sufficient furniture, that wheresoever the enemy seek to foil us, and to make a breach into our souls, we may be able to resist him, and to stand fast in the power of God against all the wyles of the devil.

21. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

22. Take also the sum of the sons of Gershon, throughout the houses of their fathers, by their families.

23. From thirty years old and upward, until fifty year old shalt thou number them: all that enter in to perform the service, to do the work in the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

24. This is the service of the families of the Gershonites, to serve, and for burdens.

25. And they shall bear the Curtaines of the Tabernacle, and the Tabernacle of the Congregation, his covering, and the covering of the badgers skins that is above upon it, and the hanging for the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

26. And the hangings of the Court, and the hanging for the door of the gate of the Court which is by the Tabernacle, & by the Altar round about, and their cords, and all the instruments of their service, & all that is made for them: so shall they serve.

27. At the appointment of Aaron and his sons, shall be all the service of the sons of the Gersbonites, in all their burdens, and in all their service: and ye shall appoint unto them in charge, all their burdens.

28. This is the service of the families of the sons of Gershon, in the Tabernacle of the Congregation: and their charge shall be under the hand of Ithamar, the son of Aaron the Priest.

Hitherto, Moses hath spoken of the Kohathites, and he hath done it more largely then he doth handle the other families, for the causes noted before. In the next place he proceedeth to the Gershonites.

Touching these; first, God commandeth them also to be numbered, and their age is appointed and limited, as in the former, from thirty years old and upward, until fifty.

Secondly, their proper and peculiar charge is expressed, what burdens they are to bear, to wit, the Curtaines and the coverings, the cords, the veils, and all the instruments appertaining to their service.

Thirdly, all these things before mentioned, must be done at the commandment of Aaron and his sons.

[Ver. 22, 23. Take also the sum of the sons of Gershon, &c.] Observe with me in this division, that Moses repeateth sundry points that are set down in the former chapter, as will evidently appear unto us, if we make trial and comparison, in everyone of the three families; as for example, touching the Kohathites, that which he speaketh of them in this chapter, verse 5, 7, 9. compare it with the 31. verse of the third chapter. Secondly, touching the Merarites, which are another of the families, what he saith of them, verse 31, of this present chapter, compare it with the 36, and 37, verses of the former chapter. Lastly, touching the Gershonites, the 25, ver. of this fourth chapter, with the 25, verse of the third chapter: and we shall see, he telleth them again and again, what burdens they are to bear, and what service they are to perform. He might have referred us to that which he had before set down, but he doth again particularly rehearse and repeat it. God forbiddeth needless repetitions in prayer, and condemneth much babbling that bringeth no benefit with it: & therefore he useth it not himself, neither do any of the Penmen of the holy Scriptures, who wrote as they were inspired by the Spirit of God, the Author of them. They were chosen vessels of God, and as it were his Secretaries, so guided by him that they could not err in writing, no more then in speaking of it.

We learn from this practice of Moses in this place, that it is lawful for the Ministers and Teachers of the Church to make repetitions of things formerly taught, and to deliver the same points and parts of religion again and again, both for matter and form, not thereby to ease themselves, or to maintain sloth in thē, but for the benefit of the Church. Moses in the book of Deuteronomy, repeateth to the people, many things done before, and expressed in the former books, and therefore it is fitly called a repetition of the Law; and there he rehearseth the ten Commandments again, Deut. 5. So do the Evangelists declare, how Christ our Savior often repeateth the same things, and preacheth again the same points he had delivered before: and therefore his practice may well be our warrant, and his example our direction. Thus doth the Apostle Peter show what he did, and what he will do, 2 Pet. 1, 12. Wherefore, I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth. And afterward in the same Epistle, he professeth, that he had written to them of those things, whereof his beloved brother Paul had written in all his Epistles. The Epistle of Jude is a repetition of those things handled by Peter in his second Epistle, and is as it were an abridgement of it. So the books of Chronicles do repeat many things before set down in the books of the Kings: albeit it be done with much access of matter & profit to the reader, as we shall see by diligent observation in the reading of them. In like manner the Apostle John, wrote unto them those things which they had been taught before, I have not written unto you, because ye know not the truth but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth, 1 John 2, 21. This may plentifully appear unto us, in the comparing of the old Testament with the new; one strengtheneth and confirmeth another, and sundry things are repeated in the new, which are delivered in the old. We see the Gentiles in the Acts of the Apostles, besought Paul and Barnabas, that the same words might be preached unto them the next Sabbath day, which they had first offered unto the Jews. All which examples, as it were a cloud of witnesses, do confirm the lawfulness of their practice, that teach again what they have taught, and deliver the same points which before they have delivered, and so bring forth out of their storehouse, things both old and new: for this custom could not be used without some access and addition of new matter, according to the manner of God, used in the holy Scriptures.

[Reason 1] This is not done without cause and good reason. For first, men are commonly dull in hearing, slack in coming, weak in remembering, and slow in practicing. They are as a tough oake, that is not felled at one stroke, & as an hard stone, that is not broken in pieces with one blow: they are as marble, that is not pierced with once dropping of water upon it, but requireth a constant and continual falling upon it, according to the Commandment of God, directed to his Prophet, Ezek, 21, 2. Son of man, set thy face toward Jerusalem, and drop thy word toward the holy places, and Prophecy against the Land of Israel. For albeit we be often taught and plainly instructed, here a little, & there a little, yet we cannot conceive and carry away the things we hear. The Apostle saith, We have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing: where he giveth this reason, why he had need begin again the first rudiments of Christian religion, as it were to lay the foundation of the house again, before he went forward with high mysteries, even in regard of their dullness and slackness in learning.

[Reason 2] Secondly, it is safe and sure for all hearers to have often repetitions. It hath his good use, and special benefit. Many witnesses do make sure work, and confirm strongly and steadfastly the things taught. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, writing to the Philippians, chap. 3, 1. To write the same things to you, to me indeed is not grievous: and for you it is safe. That which is once spoken, is through our infirmity and corruption, as good as never spoken; as one witness is no witness. GOD would have every truth confirmed by two or three witnesses: and forasmuch as the history of the life and death, of the doctrine and miracles, of the resurrection and ascension of Christ, is so main a pillar of our religion, in the knowledge whereof, our salvation consisteth, he would have it confirmed by four authentic witnesses, and Christ carried by them as on a fourfold Chariot in triumph like a mighty Conqueror, that hath subdued all his and our enemies. Thus doth God provide most plentiful means to remove our infidelity, to take away our doubting, and to remedy our infirmity.

Thirdly, repetition worketh a deeper impression [Reason 3] in us, and serveth to beat it into the conscience, as well as into the understanding. It is necessary that we be stirred up & quickened to the practice of good things by the goad of repetitions. This consideration made the Apostle say, I think it meet, as long as I am in this Tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance. Practice is an hard thing and rare. We are not easily brought to perform such things as we know. If then, once speaking take not hold on us, it may the second time, being commended unto us again.

Fourthly, we ought not to forbear from [Reason 4] this course, because our life is short, we know not how soon we may be called out of this world, and give an account of our Ministry, how careful we have been to gain souls unto God. The Apostle having declared, that he would not be negligent to put them in remembrance of the same things, and that he thinketh it very meet to do so, addeth this as a reason & motive to move him, which also ought to encourage us, Knowing that shortly I must put off this my Tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shown me: Moreover, I will endeavor that you may be able after my decease, to have these things always in remembrance. And then indeed we have done our duty, when we have taught the truth in this manner to our people, not only once and away, as it were glancing at it, but continually dwelling upon it, teaching them line upon line, and precept upon precept; like masters that teach young scholars to read, that must not content themselves once to tell them, but must oftentimes put the same things into their mouths and minds, or else they forget them straight-ways.

Let us now make application of the Doctrine, which is the life of instruction: forasmuch [Use 1] as teaching without applying, is as the body without the soul. First of all, we learn hereby, that the perpetuity & standing course of teaching, is most needful and necessary in every Congregation. It is the Ministers duty to sow, and to continue sowing: to weed, and to continue weeding: to teach, and to continue teaching: to convert, and to continue converting: to convince, and to continue convincing: to instruct, and to continue instructing. For as we have always need of meat, and that as we eat, so we must continue eating, or else we famish and perish: so the Minister must feed, and weed, and watch over his people, and abide continually in it without ceasing and intermission. This is it the Apostle teacheth Timothy, 1 Tim. chap. 4, verse 16. Take heed to thyself, and unto the doctrine, continue therein: for in doing this, thou shalt save both thyself and them that hear thee. So then, it is not enough to take heed unto himself and his doctrine, to live well, and to teach well, but he must continue in them both, and not give over. It was well said of the heathen man, It is no less virtue to keep, then to get; to preserve, then to obtain. Many know how to get, but they know not the art how to save that which they have gotten, and therefore it passeth away suddenly, as grease that melteth before the Sun. If the husbandman should only plant and never water, he might look for no fruit to come of his labor. It is not enough for the watchman to have discovered the enemy once or twice, unless he descry him so often as he maketh an approach: so it can be no discharge to the spiritual watchman of souls, to have given warning by blowing the Trumpet, unless he do it during the whole time of the war, which is perpetual and continual. We can take no truce, nor make no league with our spiritual enemies; Our adversary the devil goeth about continually, seeking whom he may devour.

Hence it is, that Christ requireth of Peter, not only to feed, but to feed again and again; Feede, feed, feed, according to the charge committed unto him: and Paul would have Timothy be instant in season and out of season: so that there is required diligence, faithfulness, painfulness, and continuance in teaching. It is worthy to be well considered which the Lord saith in the Prophet Isaiah, ch. 62, 6. I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace, day nor night. We know not at what time the Lord will call effectually, and touch the hearts of those that we teach. He must first feed with milk, before he give them strong meat: for everyone that useth milk, is unskillful in the word of righteousness, inasmuch as he is a babe: but strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use, have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil, Hebr. 5, 13, 14. It is the Ministers duty to ring the alarm bell continually; he hath some work always to do, to strengthen & fortify, to comfort and raise up, to exhort and admonish, to heal the sick, to bring home them that wander, to encourage the weak, to establish them that are strong, and to answer doubts that arise among his people. If it were possible, to teach all truth particularly that is required of a Christian man, yet we have not then time to be idle, and sit down at our ease, but even then we must go over the points again, that our people that have learned them, may learn them again: and if they know them, they may yet know them better: if they remember them, that they may remember them better: if they practice them, that they may practice them better and better. Yea, if we be grown old in learning, we must learn still: for we must live and die, learning something. Everyone both Minister & people, must be a scholar in the School of Christ. Timothy himself must give attendance to reading, to exhortation, and to doctrine: all men must stir up the gifts that are given unto them, which will soon decay without use and diligence, as the fire will go out, except the coals be kindled, and more wood added. When Christ had distributed his talents among his servants, he said, Occupy till I come. Albeit then by the Ministry of the word, we have received to believe, yet this must not abate our diligence in hearing, but we ought as carefully to seek the food of our souls afterward as before: forasmuch as without continuance of attendance to this ordinance, it is impossible that any should be saved, God not suffering the means of salvation appointed by him to be neglected or contemned.

Secondly, this reproveth sundry abuses, [Use 2] both in the Ministers and in the people, as first of all the niceness of many Teachers, who because they would be singular and popular, gaining to themselves many followers, and seeking the praise of men, more then the glory of God, labor to bring new doctrines into the Church, never heard off before, not proportionable to the ancient faith of the Prophets and Apostles, but of a new coin and stamp. These cannot abide to be beating upon old points, they think it a discredit and disgrace unto them, to tread in the beaten path trodden by others that went before them; they must ever be seeking of unknown and uncouth ways; this is their delight, and in this they glory. This hath been the poisoned and pestilent humor of heretics and of false teachers, to draw away the minds of the simple and unlearned from the ancient truth received from the Scriptures, and to turn them out of the right course followed by all the faithful. Such were those false Apostles that troubled the faith of the Galatians, and brought into that Church, another Gospel, even a new Gospel. Such are they in these days, that hammer cockle and darnel upon the anuill of their own brains, broaching strange positions long since buried, & raking them out of the graves or ashes of Pelagians, and other forlorn heretics. These glory in their own wits, and account themselves happy, that they can maintain new assertions, & trouble the peace of the Church with them. Secondly, they are reproved, that scorn to take this course which Christ and his Apostles took, to deliver precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little. They think it no way agreeable to their learning and high places, to insist upon one thing, and to beat upon the same matter: who are like unto a master that is greedy to teach his scholar faster then he can learn. But having taken upon us the charge of souls, we must submit our selves to the slow and slender capacities of the people, and make it our chief end to profit thē. And touching the people themselves, it brandeth those with a note of fickle and itching eared hearers, that loathing the old wholesome doctrine of salvation, turn their ears from the ancient truth, and being like the Athenians mentioned in the Acts, do hunt after novelties, and only do like new doctrines, new teachers, new matters, that they never heard off before; lusting after change of diet, like to their wicked forefathers, that loathed the heavenly Manna (whereof they had often tasted) as a light meat: they must have variety, and be fed with quail to fill their delicate and dainty stomachs. There is little hope to do any great good vpō these nice and new fangled hearers, that are ouergone and overgrown with a dangerous disease. Of such the Apostle hath foretold, 2, Tim. 4, 3, 4. The time will come, when they will not endure sound doctrine but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves Teachers, having itching ears: and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, & shall be turned unto fables. Such were some of the Galatians, who were bewitched by false teachers, that they should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ had been evidently set forth and crucified among them. Gal. 3, 1. Many such are in our days in town and city, that surfeit through plenty, and wax wanton through abundance of God's blessings. Were not he an unwise man, that would leave his old Physician, to whom he hath been long accustomed, and who knoweth by long experience the state of his body, and foolishly long after others, that neither he knoweth them, nor they know him. So is it exceeding folly to loathe the known Physician of thy soul, that knoweth the state and condition of thy soul, and consequently is most likely to do thee most good; and to haunt after new teachers, that may feed thee with wind instead of sound and wholesome nourishment: or at least, though he teach soundly, yet cannot speak so powerfully, and apply his word so profitably, and know thy necessity so fitly, as thine ordinary teacher that hath the oversight and charge of thy soul.

[Use 3] Lastly, this admonisheth all hearers to be content to be ordered in this manner, and not to think amiss of their Ministers for delivering unto them known truths which they have read, and heard, learned and known long before. For it is the old commandment, the common and ancient faith which they must teach, and teach again, which are the true Pastors. He that bringeth in another Gospel then that which hath been already received, if it were an Angel from heaven, let him be accursed. Wherefore, whosoever findeth fault with them for these repetitions, reproveth Christ himself, and checketh the holy ordinance of God. These are they, that while they would be thought wise, become fools: they will take a course by themselves, & set Christ and his Apostles to school to learn, as if the blind should teach them that can see, to hit the mark. For if we will consider the matter, and judge it aright, the truth is more fit to be remembered and recommended to thē that do already know it, then to those that are ignorant of it. This is the duty whereunto John doth prepare his hearers in his first Epistle, chapt. 2. Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment, which ye have heard from the beginning: I write unto you, babes, because ye have known the Father: I write unto you fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have not written unto you, because ye know not the truth, &c. We that are in the number of God's people, must learn to know our own good, and hear greedily & diligently, the same things which we have heard and learned, as they that have eaten hungerly of one dish of meat today, come to it without any loathing the next day again.

But some will say, what need have we to hear the same things, as coleworts twice sodden? especially considering there is such variety and diversity of matter for the Minister to insist upon. I answer, [Answer.] there are many causes to bear out this practice, as we noted before. For, who knoweth anything as he ought to know? And who practiseth any duty, as he ought to practice? Who hateth any vice so fully and perfectly as he ought to hate it; or is so armed and strengthened against the assaults and temptations thereof, as is required? Who is so fenced against errors and heresies, but he may daily fortify himself better, and scour up his rusty armor? Or who remembereth anything so well as he should, and is not prone to forget what he hath once known and learned? It may be we have received to believe, and obtain Christ to repent and fight against sin: howbeit our knowledge, our faith, our obedience are imperfect: our combats with Satan are mingled with much weakness, and oftentimes we are constrained to take the foil: so that it is necessary, that we should be continually put in remembrance of these things. The Apostle writeth to the Philippians, that it grieved him not to write the same things: there is more cause to speak the same things, then to write them, because the things spoken, pass away and are soon forgotten, whereas the things written, remain and continue. Where are they then, and how great is their ignorance, shall I say, or folly, that when they hear one doctrine twice, or peradventure thrice, do repine and disdain at it, and think it not worthy to be spoken and commended unto them again, or themselves too worthy to hear of it again? but if it fall out to be delivered the second time by a meaner Minister then it was before, inferior in degrees, or weaker in gifts, then they abhor it so much the more, and cry out aloud, that they are shamefully abused. They reply, Can he say anymore in it, then hath been said? I heard this point learnedly discussed at such a time, and such a place, by such a profound scholar and a great Clearke, and I need hear it no more, I will be gone. O beware and take heed of this spiritual pride & queasic stomach, that refuseth wholesome meat, because he liketh not the messenger, or the dish wherein it is brought, or because he hath tasted such food better dressed. The herb is not rejected that is wholesome for the use of man, because the Gardener that planted it, was inferior to many other Gardiners, that were more excellent and cunning handed. Will any, coming into a garden, refuse the sweet and pleasant flowers, because he hath seen and smelled such before? In like manner ought it to be with us, when the savor of the word of God, more precious then all the spices and sweet perfumes that are of the earth, shall come unto us, albeit we have been delighted with the fragrant smelles thereof a thousand times, yet ought we no less to be desirous of it then we have been before. As the Minister must one day give an account how he hath taught; so must the people how they have heard. He oftentimes blesseth the faithful labors of poor and mean workmen, & furthereth their holy endeavours, according to his gracious will and pleasure. Let us not therefore discourage the hearts, and weaken the hands of the dispensers of God's word, nor refuse to hear it at their mouths, albeit other have greater gifts. For God hath not variably disposed of them, and given unto one a greater portion, and to another a less, that one should be honored, and the other contemned; one heard, and the other not heard: but to set forth his own mercy, and to further the good of the Church. In the building of the material Tabernacle, not only they are accepted, that brought gold or silver, or blew silk, or purple, but also such as were poor, and brought Goats hair, Badgers skins, a little Sittim wood, & such like stuff of inferior nature and less value. There is great variety and diversity of God's gifts, given for the building of his spiritual Temple, and all of them profitable. Such as he hath bestowed mercifully, such should we bring cheerfully, and such shall be accepted: to teach us at this day, to despise in no man what the Giver himself approveth. Away then with all disdain and pride of heart, to reject those whom he accepteth. The small gift of the poor widow that cast her mite into the treasury, was better accepted & commended, then the rich offerings of those that cast in of their superfluity. Let us therefore despise no man that aimeth at a good and right end, and bendeth all his gifts to profit the Church. For if we, upon whom God hath bestowed much, shall proudly scorn, & contumeliously disdain and deride him that hath little, and yet is faithful in dispensing of that little, to the greatest gain of his Lord and Master, God doth behold it and abhor it, and he will surely and severely punish it. What is it that we have not received? And how do we deceive our selves, to think that we are full, who (alas) are either dry brooks and empty vessels, or at least hold very little water?

Let us then humble our selves before him that only giveth the increase, and cast up our eyes and hearts unto him that is able to make us more lowly in our own eyes, remembering that as some men want of that measure of learning, wisdom, knowledge, eloquence, and such like gifts to build withal which we have: so in like manner do we want as great a portion of others, who as far excel and exceed us, as we in our own conceits go beyond other men. And let us all that be hearers, set before us the example of the blessed Virgin, who kept all those sayings, and pondered them in her heart, which she heard of the Shepherds. These were poor simple men, to whom the birth of Christ was first revealed by an Angel, as they abode in the field, and watched their flock by night; whereas it was hidden from Herod, from Pilate, from the Scribes and Pharisees, and from the noble and rich men that lived in Judea: but as Christ took upon him the state of humility, so he manifested himself to these poor instruments, and commanded them to publish abroad what they had seen and heard. The Virgin Mary had been informed and instructed touching the incarnation and birth of the Messiah, by a more worthy instrument: the Angel Gabriel was sent unto her, who told her the matter before hand: and what learned she by the words of these shepherds, which she knew not before? yet she scorneth not to hear the same again by the mouth of these shepherds, and layeth it up also in her heart. She did not say to the shepherds, wherefore do you come and tell me this? Or what need so much ado? It is no news to me, I know it far better then yourselves, I have been told it before by an Angel from heaven. Wherefore should I give ear unto it again, as if I had nothing else to do? She doth not reason in this sort, but is humble and lowly in her own eyes, Luke 1, 48. as often as God hath a mouth to speak, she hath also an ear to hear. She knew well enough, she had not so learned it, but she had need to be confirmed in it by the mouths of other witnesses. The more the witnesses were in number, the greater strength of faith she gained. She considered that it was God that had revealed this matter and mystery unto them, who guideth the tongues and hearts of all men, and therefore it was meet, that she should mark attentively, and hearken diligently to every word that should proceed from them,

It standeth everyone of us in hand that are present, to reason thus with our selves, What is that which I hear? I have heard this oftentimes before: I thought with myself, I had learned this point sufficiently, but I see I am far deceived: God will have me learn it yet better: it may be, he seeth, I shall have farther <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> use of it in the practice of my life, he knoweth the weakness of my judgment, of my faith, and of my obedience, he would have me thoroughly confirmed in this truth. It is his love and mercy unto me, I see it, I confess it, I praise his Name humbly and earnestly for it, and therefore I will hear it as diligently, and carefully, as though I had never known of it before at any time. If I hear the doctrine of the Trinity preached, I must consider, I am not sufficiently armed against heretics that may shake my faith in this Article: if I hear the deity of Christ proved, I must not suffer it to pass slightly from me, as a plain point that needs no confirmation or demonstration out of the Scriptures; but lay hold of it, and know that the Arians and other enemies of God are many and strong, that may seek to undermine my faith, and take my shield from me.

When I hear the truenesse of Christian religion so much stood upon, remember that many false Prophets are gone into the world, who devise subtle arguments, as it were weaving the spiders web, that they may not be espied: there are sundry Atheists and Libertines that fear not to shake the foundation of all the building, and we shall lie open unto them as a prey, except we be daily fenced against them. When we hear any gifts and heavenly graces of God commended unto us, •s patience and such like, think not there is <◇> •re ado a great deal made about them, <◇> is need; we know not what storms and <◇> •ts hang over our heads, and what af• <...> may befall us, and therefore we have <...> •uch patience, that after we have done <...> God, we may receive the promise. When <...> •re any doctrine in controversy, between the Church, of Rome and us, mark the points wherein we agree, mark wherein we do dissent: learn how to answer their objections: and though we hear these things often, yet we must not hear them negligently; we know not what use we may have of these weapons, and how soon we may be called to give a reckoning of the hope that is in us, 1, Pet. 3, 15. Our adversaries grow every day more subtle then other, and therefore we must not be simple, lest we fall into their snares. This is the use of repetitions toward the godly. Moreover, when such as have refused to hear the word of the Lord, and pulled away their shoulders as disobedient children, do again hear the same doctrine sounding in their ears, the same vices reprov'd, & the same threatenings doubled and trebled upon us, as it were a stroke drivē to our heads with the two edged sword of the Spirit; should they contemn it again? and suffer it to pass from them without taking heed? Nay, they also ought to make good use and instruction of these repetitions; and say with themselves in a feeling of their former negligence, Why doth God offer me this again? Doth not he know my sinfull heart, that I have heretofore despised it, as a vain word concerning me? and that I would not suffer it to enter, but put it from me far o•? It is he that searcheth the hearts and reins, he understandeth the imaginations of my thoughts: it is his kindness and favor toward me, to offer it unto me yet once again. Now is the acceptable time; now it is called today; now God knocketh at the door of my conscience: if I do not at this present entertain him, I know not whether ever he will offer it unto me again. Lord, I am unworthy of the least of all thy mercies, I have grievously offended against thee, and I have rewarded thee with unkindness, contemning so often thy word, and casting it behind my back. Lay not this sin to my charge, but for thy goodness & truths sake be favorable unto me. Now give me grace to lay hold on thy word, and not suffer it to pass from me, as I have done heretofore. Blessed is that man that can make this use of the word of God, & stretch forth his hand, or rather openeth his heart to receive & embrace it, before it go from his doors, never to return anymore. As for all those that are often invited, and yet will not come to this feast; that are called, and will not answer, fearful shall their condemnation be.

29. As for the sons of Merari, thou shalt number them after their families, by the house of their fathers.

30. From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old shalt thou number them, everyone that entereth into the service, to do the work of the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

31. And this is the charge of their burden, according to their service, in the Tabernacle of the Congregation, the boards of the Tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and the sockets thereof.

32. And the pillars of the Court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords, with all their instruments, and with all their service: and by name ye shall reckon the instruments of the charge of their burden.

33. This is the service of the families of the sons of Merari, according to all their service in the Tabernacle of the Congregation, under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the Priest.

The last of the families remaineth, to wit, the Merarites: touching whom, first, the numbering of them is commanded, from thirty years old and upward, even until fifty. Secondly, their office and charge is rehearsed; they are to carry the boards and bars of the Tabernacle, the pillars, the pins, the sockets, the cords, and all the instruments. Thirdly, the Superintendent or Ouerseer of them, is appointed to be Ithamar, the son of Aaron the Priest.

Thus we have seen how the several offices are distributed among these families, to stop contention, to repress ambition, and to avoid confusion. The wise man saith, Only by pride cometh contention: but with the well advised is wisdom, Prov. 13, 10. We see by experience, how ready we are to wander out of the way, except we have our bounds set unto us. Wherefore, to make an end of all controversies, the Lord himself interposeth his authority, bridling the out-courses of the unruly, and keeping everyone within his compass. True it is, the sons of Kohath have a more honorable function committed unto them then the rest, which proceedeth from the mere mercy of God, not from any merit in themselves, who had not so much as the privilege of the birth-right by nature, so that they had no cause to lift up their heads above the rest: for neither might they contemn their brethren, neither their brethren envy them, forasmuch as they usurped not this prerogative of themselves. They had the keeping of the Sanctuary; not that it was lawful for them to handle any part thereof with their hands, or to see when they were covered, lest they died: but their office was to carry on their shoulders the instruments and the vessels wrapped together, folded up, and covered by the Priests. For when they were to take their journey, God commandeth the sons of Aaron to gather together the parts of the Sanctuary, and with all care and diligence to cover the veil, the Altar, and other instruments, before the sons of Kohath come to carry them, to the end the people of GOD might have the worship, service, and Sanctuary of God in greater reverence.

[Verse 31, 32. And this is the charge of their burden, &c.] The sons of Kohath had the most honorable charge. The charge committed to the sons of Gershon and Merari, were in comparison of the other, of little value and estimation: besides, they were very combersome & troublesome, and consequently, the work hard and servile: and among these two, the sons of Merari had the least and lowest charge: yet notwithstanding, they pulled not away their shoulders, they shrunk not under the burden, they disdained not their brethren, they were not ashamed of their office, they were not hindered from the execution of their function through pride, or weariness, or envy, or contempt. All of them had not one office, but everyone bare his part, The body is not one member, but many: if they were all one member, where were the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If all had one office, it would minister much occasion of contention. And as in the body every part is not alike excellent and honorable, yet everyone contenteth himself with his proper place; so was it among the Levites: some of the charges were worthier then other, yet they that had the charge of least importance did patiently and quietly undergo it. We learn from hence, that how mean [Doctrine 1] and low soever our places are, we must not murmur at them, but be contented with thē. No man ought to disdain at the dealing of God toward him, in that he hath placed him no higher. Those laborers in the Gospel that wrought in the vineyard, are reprov'd, because they were discontented that others were made equal unto them, and had their penny as well as they, Mat. 20, 11. they grudged that themselves had no more, they repined that others had so much; & so murmured at the good man of the house. The wiseman saith, Pro. 10, 22 The blessing of the Lord maketh rich; and he addeth no sorrow with it. And chap.

13, 25. The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul: but the belly of the wicked shall want. The Apostle giveth us this direction, that having food and raiment, we should therewith be content, 1 Tim. 6. This rule that he giveth & teacheth to other, he had learned himself, in whatsoever estate he was, he murmured not at it, but was contented with it, Phi. 4.11. Al which testimonies serve to prove, that no man ought to show any dislike or discontentment, as if his place and estate were too base and low for him.

This is not so easily persuaded as it is spoken, [Reason 1] and therefore we are to use a few reasons for farther confirmation and strengthening of it to the consciences of all of us. First, contentation is a ready and approved medicine for all miseries and maladies whatsoever. No man is troubled with any grief or disease, but he is most willing to hear of a salve for it. This is souereigne for this purpose. It easeth the burden of all afflictions, it taketh away the smart of all sores: it poureth wine and oil into our wounds, and of half dead, maketh us alive again: it maketh a rough way plain, & crooked things straight. It casteth down high hills, and maketh the path easy before us. It turneth outward wants into inward comforts. It maketh the bond to be free, the poor to be rich, the sick to be whole, the miserable to be happy, & such as are owners of nothing, to be Lord's of all things. Give an hearty draught of this strong drink, to him that is ready to perish, and a cup of this wine, to him that hath an heavy heart; it will make him forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more. This we see in the Apostle Paul, he had drunk of the wine of contentation, 2 Cor. 6, 9, 10. and therefore saith, As unknown, and yet well known: as dying and behold, we live: as chastened, and not killed: as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing: as poor, yet making many rich: as having nothing, and yet possessing all things. These things seem to some to contain flat contradictions, & to be directly opposite the one to the other; but this is the benefit of contentation, that it reconcileth things contrary, & maketh thē good friends to live together in one subject: so that when he did undergo many kinds of affliction, he was refreshed in spirit, & cheered up in all his sufferings.

[Reason 2] Secondly, we have a gracious promise from the mouth of God, that cannot lie, or deceive or defraud us, that he will not suffer us to lack, nor leave us destitute of help, but will supply our wants, and minister unto our necessities. Many troubles may set upon us on all sides, as an host of armed men, but they shall not prevail against us, we shall overcome thē all at the last. They may threaten, but they shall not hurt us, for God hath pulled out the stings of these serpents. The Prophet David had good experience thereof in his own feeling, Psalm. 34, 9, 10. O fear the Lord, ye his Saints: for there is no want to them that fear him: the young Lions do lack, and suffer hunger, but they that seek the LORD, shall not want any good thing. And Psal. 37, 4, 5. Delight thyself in the Lord, & he shall give thee the desires of thine heart: commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass. If a man of great account and estimation in this world, should behold a poor man, and give him this comfort in his necessity, Be of good cheer, I will never see thee want, as long as I live; how would this revive the spirits of a man, now almost at the point of death? It is GOD that saith unto us, I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee: shall we not then boldly say, and in the assurance of faith conclude, The Lord is my deliverer, I will not fear what man can do unto me? So that there is no just cause of discontentment, whensoever we are brought into trouble, albeit we see no way to get out, forasmuch as he is able to break the bars of brass, and break a bow of steel, and make an happy issue, as he caused the chains of Peter when he was in prison, to fall from his hands, and the iron gate to open of his own accord. Act. 12, 9, 10.

Thirdly, the providence of God ruleth all [Reason 3] things, so that nothing cometh upon us, or befalleth unto us, by his will and pleasure, & therefore we ought to rely our selves wholly upon him, and submit our willes unto his will; our corrupt willes, unto his most holy will. Our Savior teacheth his Disciples, Math. 10, 29, 30. to rest upon his providence, Are not two Sparrowes sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father: but the very hairs of your head are all numbered. This is an effectual argument to move us, and thoroughly to persuade us to contentation of mind, & to bear whatsoever befalleth with patience and comfort, forasmuch as he, that is infinite in wisdom and knowledge, and infinite in grace and mercy, doth so order, dispose, & govern all things by his over-ruling and over-reaching hand, that neither a Sparrow lighteth upon the ground, nor an hair falleth from our head without his appointment. This reason is used by Christ our Savior, Mat. 6, 26. where, persuading us to lay aside all carking & caring for worldly things, and to rest wholly upon God, he doth chiefly beat upon this point, & groundeth his reason upon God's providence, who clotheth the Lilies, feedeth the Ravens, and ministereth food to all living creatures.

Lastly, no man hath so mean an estate and condition, but he may gain some glory to [Reason 4] God in it: yea, all that befalleth unto us is for the best: & the calling wherein we live, howsoever it may seem to us evil and full of misery, is unto us most good and profitable, seeing as it is allotted & allowed unto us of God, so if we be found faithful in it, we may glorify his great Name in it; so that we may conclude with the Prophet, The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places, yea, I have a goodly heritage. Though our estate be not best considered in it self, yet it is best to us: and we ought to praise the Name of God for that which we have, and not murmur for that which we have not: to content our selves with things present, and not desire the things that are absent, considering the dealing of God in mercy and compassion toward us, withholding nothing he knoweth to be good for us.

The uses of this doctrine are to be known of us, that we may reap benefit by this benefit [Use 1] of contentation. First, it reproveth those that are never satisfied with the mammon of this world, but so set their hearts upon the earth, that the more they devour, the more they desire, like men insatiable, as the grave or the barren womb, that never saith, It is enough. They are like the lean kine of Pharaoh, when they had eaⁿ up the fat ones, themselves were in never the better liking: or like the dropsieman, who, the more he drinketh, the more he calleth for drink: or like the horse-leech, that ever crieth out, Bring, bring. The wise man telleth us, there is no end of covetousness: he that is infected with it, coveteth greedily all the day long, but the righteous giveth, & spareth not, Pro. 21, 26. And in the book of Ecclesiastes, He that loveth silver, shall not be satisfied with silver, Eccl. 5, 10. nor he that loveth abundance with increase: this is also vanity. An example hereof we have in Ahab King of Israel, he had the wealth and riches of a Kingdom, and yet he greedily and insatiably coveteth after Naboth's vineyard, vexing his heart more for that little which he had not, then taking joy in all the abundance & superfluity which he had, which cost poor Naboth both his life and his living. So the rich man in the Gospel had filled his house, but not his heart: and therefore resolveth to enlarge his barns, and to make them answerable (if it were possible) to his mind: which was a foolish conceit, it being altogether impossible to find a proportion between that which is finite, & that which is infinite. For when he had built more, & added more to that, and multiplied more to that he had added, and filled them also full to y^e top: yet that would not have satisfied him, because the capacity of his heart was far greater; and as the fruits of the earth had increased, the heart would still have swelled like the surges of the sea more and more, and never made any end.

These are they which place their felicity in the abundance of riches, and put their trust in their wealth. Such are called and accounted by the Apostle, worshippers of images, Col. 3, 5. The covetous man can never be satisfied, albeit his coffers be filled: the more he heapeth together, the more he hopeth after. Those treasures, which while they were only desired, seemed great to them that desired them, when once they are purchased and possessed, are lightly esteemed, and other which yet they want, are coveted. Solomon saith, Hell and destruction are never full, so the eyes of man are never satisfied, Prov. 27, 20. And as all Rivers run unto the sea, yet the sea is not full: so riches haste unto the covetous, yet the covetous man is never full. How wretched is their estate, that are evermore pressed & pinched with hunger and thirst, and cannot be satisfied? So is it with those that are sick of this sickness of covetousness: for all discontented persons want that they have, as well as that they have not: as fast as money increaseth, the love of it increaseth, so that the richer they are, the poorer indeed they are. Sufficiency standeth not in abundance of the things possessed, but when the concupiscence of the heart is limited. If our insatiable desires be confined within the compass of contentment, we shall find sufficiency in the meanest estate. Thus we may be rich in the midst of poverty, and it shall be truly said of us, which the Spirit speaketh to the Angel of the Church of Smyrna, I know thy poverty, but thou art rich, Revel. 2, verse 9. He only is rich, who groweth rich toward heaven, and setteth his mind on Eternity, considering, that godliness is great gain with contentation, 1 Tim. 6, 6.

[Use 2] If we live according to nature, we shall never be poor: if according to opinion, we shall never be rich: if according to godliness, we shall ever be content. Nature desireth but a little; opinion is evermore insatiable, godliness directeth us to set our affections above, where is all happiness and contentation.

Secondly, we learn from this truth to derive and diduct another, as it were a stream from the fountain, to wit, to acknowledge it to be the will and heavenly pleasure of God, to make some low and poor in this world, and to set them in places inferior to others. It is not his ordinance that all should be alike, or that all should be aloft, or that all should be rich.

True it is, it lieth in his power to make them so, who is the sovereign Lord of heaven and earth, & hath all treasures at his commandment to bestow them as pleaseth him: but he hath variably disposed his blessings in great wisdom, to one he giveth much, to another he giveth little: to one, great riches; to another he sendeth poverty and want. In a great house and noble family, all servants are not equal, neither have they all one office, neither have they all one wages; but one receiveth more, another less, according to the different place wherein they are set. The Church of God is a great house, there are many servants and many offices in it; some are placed over others, and some appointed under others, and everyone should continue in his state and standing, without breaking the bounds limited unto him. If he be cursed of God and man, that remoueth his neighbors Land-mark; much more are they to be reprov'd, that exalt themselves beyond their callings, like the servants that break from their masters. The Elements keep their places, and the whole frame of heaven & earth stand by the appointment of him that set them, and set forth the glory of God therein: so ought it to be with us, we have our places assigned unto us. In every estate, whether we want or abound, whether we be full or empty, we should be content, Philip. 4. and not wittingly murmur against God, or enviously grudge against our brother, or fraudulently purloine away his goods.

For first of all, may not the Lord of all, do with his own what he will? Math. 20, verse 15. Or, is our eye evil, and our hand false, because his eye is good, and his hand liberal and bountiful? Or who are we that thus dispute with him? Is it not enough to be of the Kings household, but we must also climb higher, and seek to be of his privy counsel? Or is it not sufficient to be servants in the family, but we must also be Stewards over others? Is it not foolishness, and extreme madness, to refuse to enter into the kingdom of Heaven, because we may not be choosers of our own way? as if a servant should scorn to do his masters service, except he may wait vpon him in a better coat then his fellows. We were wont to say in a common Proverb, that beggars must be no choosers: we are all of us poor beggars, and live by alms: for albeit others beg of us, yet we all stand at the gate of God's mercy, and beg our bread of him, saying, Give us this day, and this day our daily bread. We cannot live one hour without him: nay, in him we live, and move, and have our being, Acts 17 28. If he stop our breath, we are gone, and therefore we must depend on him.

Again, it is the preserving of human societies & common-wealths, that some should be superiors, and some inferiors: some should honor, and some be honored: some rich, and some poor: some weak, and some be strong: some learned, and some unlearned: some noble, and some vnnoble: without this no policy can stand. No man must think the condition wherein he is placed, more unfit for him then for another: nor imagine that he hath deserved better then another at GOD'S hand, to be preferred before him, nor surmise that he hath anything which he hath not received, nor judge by ouervaluing: himself and his own worth, that he hath merited much more then he enjoyeth.

We see how it is with us in our natural bodies, every part is not an head, or an heart, or an eye; we have also hands and feet, and these are necessary in their places. Some members are more excellent, and some less excellent, but none can be spared. Such then as lift themselves up above their brethren, and disdain the places appointed for them, because they are not high enough, do carry about them even in their own bodies, a sufficient witness against themselves.

Thirdly, the Lord thus dealeth to manifest the glory of his wisdom and power; he will cast down those whom he purposeth to advance, and many times afflict them with poverty, whom he meaneth to enrich with endless glory. The Apostle James calleth us to the consideration of this point, ch. 2, 5. Hearken my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom, which he hath promised to them that love him? It is a general rule set down by Christ our Savior in the Gospel, whosoever lifteth up himself, shall be cast down, and he that humbleth himself, shall be exalted. Thus he dealt with Joseph, with David, with Moses, with Hannah, and diverse others, yea, with his own Son, Luke 24, to whose image we must be like, who must suffer many things at the hands of sinners, before he entered into his glory: and the liker we are made to him, the more happy are we.

Fourthly, let us consider that we are here as it were in a prison or pilgrimage, in a place of bondage or banishment. This world was not made to be our heaven or Paradise, where we should have joy without sorrow, pleasure without pain; abundance without want, health without sickness, riches without poverty, and happiness without misery. We are here as pilgrims and strangers: when we come into our Country, and enter into that City, the builder and maker whereof is God, we shall rest from our labors, and receive an incorruptible crown of glory. It were too great covetousness, to desire two heavens, one in earth, another above the earth, one in this life, another after this life. Our Savior speaketh unto us as unto his children, Fear not, little flock: for it is your Fathers good pleasure, to give you the Kingdom, Luke 12, 32. We are not now at home, but from home, neither can we obtain anything here that can make us happy: we are like to vanity, and our days are as a shadow that vanisheth away. We sigh and are burdened, because we would be in our own habitation. This world and all things in it, shall have an end, and there is no trust in it.

Fifthly, it is God's will to prove our patience how we will bear affliction, and take up our cross, following him as becometh the good Disciples of Christ. Not thereby to gain any knowledge unto himself, but to bring us to the knowledge of our selves. Hence it is, that the Apostle James saith, The trying of your faith worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed. We think our selves strong, before we come to the battle, but what our courage is, cannot be known until the field be fought. If we have resisted the enemy in the face, and not given back when we have been assaulted, we have sealed up to our own souls, what we can suffer for Christ's sake, knowing that which the same Apostle saith afterward, Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

Lastly, let us set before us the example of Christ, who being the natural Son of God, Lord of heaven and earth, the heir apparent of God's glorious kingdom, took upon him the form of a servant, humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross. As his birth was, so was his life: and as his life was, so was his death. He was conceived of a poor Virgin; he was borne in a stable; he was wrapped in swaddling clothes, and laid in a manger: he was persecuted of Herod: he was tempted of the devil: slandered of the Pharisees; condemned of Pilate; and crucified by the Jews. He that is the first begotten of the dead, the Prince of the Kings of the earth; he that is Alpha and Omega, the first and the last; he that hath the seven stars in his hand, and the keys of hell and death, was despised and rejected of men, and brought as a Lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth. We cannot compare in highness and greatness with him whose eyes are like fire, and his feet like brass, who is the beginning of the creatures of God, yet none hath sunk down so low into sorrow as he hath done, neither been baptized with the baptism that he was baptized withal, Math. 20.

Let us not therefore think it strange that we are made low, but rejoice that we are made like unto Christ himself, while the wicked are so pampered with delights, and fatted as Oxen unto the slaughter, that pride compasseth them about as a chain, and violence covereth them as a garment, Psal. 73.6. Luke, chapter 16, 25.

Lastly, let us use all good means that God [Use 3] hath appointed to begin in us this sweet grace of contentation. There is no heavenly gift, but God hath appointed some ways to breed it and beget it in us.

The first means is to resign up our selves wholly to the will and pleasure of God, and to submit our willes to his will, that as we pray, God's will may be done, we may be careful indeed to do it, and that for diverse causes. First, as he is infinite in wisdom, so he knoweth much better then we our selves, what is best for our selves, especially for the salvation of our souls.

We see how children take no care nor thought for things of this world, how they shall live, what they shall eat, and what they shall put on. We are content when we are sick, to accept upon the Physicians word, of any receipt: yea oftentimes bitter pilles and potions which our stomach loatheth; because we know he loveth us, and that his skill exceedeth ours. We are desirous of riches, or of honors, to be great in the world; he in his great wisdom denieth them, because he knoweth they are hurtful to us, not healthful for us, but as it were windy meat, which would not nourish our souls, but puff them up with pride, and make them poor in grace: so that we should be as unfit to enter into the straight gate and narrow way, as the Camel to go through the eye of a needle. This reason is used by our Savior, Math. 6, verse 32. After all these things do the Gentiles seek, for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. Where he laboreth to work contentation in us by this consideration, because God our heavenly Father knoweth better then our selves whereof we stand in need. Again, he is Almighty, and therefore fully able to supply our wants: as he can give riches without contentment, so he can give contentment without riches: for it is he, that can satiate the weary soul, and replenish every sorrowful soul: so that we have no cause to doubt of his sufficiency, who hath said, he is God all-sufficient. He filleth the hungry with good things, and sendeth the rich empty away. Moreover, he is as merciful as he is powerful, and infinite in love toward us, who hath so dearly loved us, that he hath not spared his own Son, but given him to suffer death for us, that so he might bring us to life and salvation: and if he have given us his Son, how should he not with him give us all things else? There is no son but resteth in the care and provision his father maketh for him: and by this we may prove whether we be sons or not.

Another means, is to live an holy & godly life, serving him in sincerity of heart and uprightness of life. Godliness is a jewel of such value, that it will enrich us, and fill our houses with treasures, because it is profitable unto all things, and hath the promises of this life and of the life to come. The Prophet saith, He will withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly, Psalm 84, 11. It is a good conscience, that maketh a continual feast, Prov. 15, verse 15. God is rich in promising, and gracious in performing: he oftentimes performeth more then he promised, neuerlesse. He saith, If we seek first of all the kingdom of God and his righteousness, all outward and earthly things shall be ministered unto us, Math. 6, 33. He maketh a merciful promise, howbeit he addeth a condition, which on our part must be performed. If we be not behind in this duty, we may safely, yea securely cast our selves upon his promise and providence, having sure interest in them, and a good title unto them. But such as live in their sins, and mind not the matters of his kingdom, can never have this contentation, because they can never with comfort and assurance of his help fly unto him, as a child to his father: but rather run away from him, as the malefactor from the Judge, or the traitor from his Prince, who beareth the sword to take vengeance on him for his evil deeds and deserts.

Thirdly, it is our duty to be thankful for things present: let us cast our eyes unto them and look steadfastly upon them, and never turn our selves from him that is the giver of them, and consider that we have not deserved the thousand part of that which is bestowed upon us. Be it that we want many things, yet hath God dealt graciously with us, and sent a gracious rain into our harts: the good things that he withholdeth, he doth not of malice and envy, as the devil persuaded our first parents, but in love and mercy toward us, as we noted before. If he should take from us all his blessings, which are innumerable, & bring upon us all his judgments for our sins, we could not complain against him, forasmuch as they have justly deserved it. Besides, how many blessings do we enjoy, that others have not, who are no worse then we are, and peradventure better? And from how many calamities are we freed, which have fallen upon others, who were not greater sinners then we are, and peradventure lesser? It is a sign of unthankfulness, to lessen the gifts we have received, and to value them as matters of no worth, in comparison of such blessings as our selves do want, or as others have obtained.

If this point be well observed, it will condemn many of us, who are guilty of grievous sin against God this way.

34. And Moses and Aaron, and chechiefe of the Congregation, numbered the sons of the Kohathites after their families, and after the house of their fathers.

35 From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, everyone that entereth into the service, for the work in the Tabernacle of the congregation.

36. And those that were numbered of them by their families, were two thousand, seven hundred, and fifty.

37. These were they that were numbered of the families of the Kohathites, all that might do service in the Tabernacle of the Congregation, which Moses and Aaron did number, according to the commandment of the Lord, by the hand of Moses.

38. And those that were numbered of the sons of Gershon, throughout their families, and by the houses of their fathers.

39 From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, everyone that entereth into the service, for the work in the Tabernacle of the congregation:

40 Even those that were numbered of them throughout their families, by the houses of their fathers, were two thousand, and six hundred, and thirty.

41 These are they that were numbered of the families of the sons of Gershon, of all that might do service in the Tabernacle of the Congregation, whom Moses and Aaron did number, according to the commandment of the Lord.

42 And those that were numbered of the families of the sons of Merari, throughout their families by the house of their fathers,

43 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, everyone that entereth into the service, for the work in the Tabernacle of the congregation:

44 Even those that were numbered of them after their families, were three thousand and two hundred.

45 These he chose that were numbered of the families of the sons of Merari, whom Moses and Aaron numbered according to the word of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

46 All those that were numbered of the Levites, whom Moses and Aaron, and the chief of Israel numbered after their families, and after the house of their fathers:

47 From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, everyone that came to do the service of the Ministry, and the service of the burden in the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

48 Even those that were numbered of them, were eight thousand, and five hundred, and fourscore.

49 According to the commandment of the Lord, they were numbered by the hand of Moses, everyone according to his service, and according to his burden: thus were they numbered of him, as the Lord commanded Moses.

In the former part of the Chapter, we have spoken of the commandment of God, wherewith Moses and Aaron were instructed to take the number of the Levites: now of the obedience yielded unto it, which is answerable to y^e commandments. A threefold commandment bringeth forth a threefold obedience. So then, we are to observe, that as they received the commandments, they executed them in order as they were directed unto them. When God required three things at their hands, they accounted not themselves discharged by performing one of them, and leaving the other two: nor by performing two of them, and leaving the third undone, as if the doing of part should bear out the neglect of the other part: but three they received and three they executed. Their obedience therefore was perfect and entire. A point worthy of our imitation, an example that should be put in practice of us. We must show our selves to be his children, by our obedience: forasmuch as his servants we are to whom we obey.

Besides, in the numbering of these families, they did not follow their own humors, to do that last which they were commanded to do first, or first which they were appointed to do last; but without all show of innovation, or desire of Soueraignty, or note of partiality, or suspicion of vain-glory, or contempt of any family, they observed the course and order precisely, w^{ch} God charged them to observe. He willed them to number the family of the Kohathites first, then the Gershonites, and last of all the Merarites.

Thus then do they testify their obedience, for they number them all, and they number first the Kohathites, secondly y^e Gershonites, and thirdly the Merarites. This is done two ways, first particularly, then generally. Particularly, touching the Kohathites, he setteth down the lawful age of all that were to be numbered from 30, years old and upward, unto 50. years old. Secondly, the sum of the family, which amounted to 2750. persons, ver. 36. Thirdly, the end of this numbering, that they might do service in the Tabernacle of y^e Congregation, ver. 37. The second family is of the Gershonites, of whom we are to observe, 1. the lawful age of them. 2. the just number of them. 3. the end of numbering of them, as we did in the former. The last family is of the Merarites: first, he showeth at what age they were numbered. 2. to what sum they amounted: and 3. the end of their numbering. And this is the particular sum of them: the total sum of all the families put together, is handled in the last part of the Chapter. Where also mark the age of all that were brought within the compass of this numbering, to wit, all from thirty year old to fifty, fit to do service in the Tabernacle. Secondly, the manner of the performance of their obedience, ver. 49. according to the commandment of the Lord.

Before the doctrine of this place cometh to be handled, certain questions arising out of the words, are first to be answered. First, it may be asked, how so many could be employed in the Ministry? I answer, [Answer.] not all ministered at one time, but in their courses and turns, as we may see, how David afterward did distribute them, and so divide their labors according to their families, 1 Chron. 24, 1. and in the New Testament we read that Zacharias the Priest was of the course Abia, Luke 1.5.

Again, it may be demanded, whether all these that are here numbered, served in the Tabernacle, or not? Are we to think that all could be fit for the Lord's service? or that who so would, might be consecrated? and that none of all these or of their children, were kept from the altar? I answer, [Answer.] as before, they had their courses, and several offices, some for burden, some for sacrifices, and such as were sufficient for teaching, taught the people: and when unlearned Levites, occupied the chair of Moses, God stirred up Prophets extraordinarily, to whom the people resorted, 2 King. 4.23. But touching God's ordinance, we see he would have his Church richly furnished, and plentifully provided of able teachers, that all might be instructed, and that none should be ignorant of his ways.

Thirdly, how doth this stand with the commandment of God, in the first Chapter? There he chargeth Moses, that he should not number the Tribe of Levi, chap. 1.49. Here he is appointed to number them. Hath God now changed his mind, and altered his purpose, to command that which before he forbad? I answer, the meaning is to be taken out of the words themselves. For he saith in the place before named and mentioned, Thou shalt not take the sum of them among the children of Israel, that is, while thou art reckoning the number, and taking the muster of the other Tribes, thou shalt not meddle with this Tribe, who were exempted from the wars. And the reason thereof is rendered, Num. 1.50. Thou shalt appoint the Levites over the Tabernacle of the Testimony, and over all the vessels thereof, and over all things that belong unto it. He calleth it sometimes the Tabernacle of the Congregation, because the people assembled at it for the worship of God: and sometimes the Tabernacle of the Testimony, because in the Tabernacle was placed the Ark, and in the Ark, the two Tables of the Testimony, in which the ten commandments were written, whereby God testified his will to the Israelites, both what he would have them do, and what he would not have them to do.

[Verse 34. 35. And Moses and Aaron, and the chief of the Congregation.] In these words beginneth the execution of the Commandment of God, Moses numbering the Levites according to their families, and assigning to everyone of them their several offices and charges. This obedience of his is worthy of great praise, inasmuch as in this description of the numbering of these families, he remoueth far from himself, all suspicion of giving scope to his own affections: and therefore he signifieth that he did nothing of pride, or partiality, advancing the Levites before the other Tribes, or preferring the family of the Kohathites before the rest of the Levites; but hath dealt in all things, as became the true minister of God, even according to the commandment and commission that he had received, of whom it is said afterward, chap. 12. My servant Moses is faithful in all mine house; even as in the building of the Tabernacle, he added nothing of his own, but did all things according to the pattern that was shown him in the mount. We learn from hence, that whensoever we have heard the word, and had the will of God revealed unto us, we must yield [Doctrine 1] obedience to the same. It is a duty required of us to practice so much of God's truth, as is in mercy made known unto us. So did Noah Gen. 6.22. when he was commanded to make an Ark, he did it as God commanded. So did Abraham when he was commanded to circumcise himself and the males in his family, Gen.

17. This is it that Moses teacheth the people after all his teaching and exhorting of them, Deut. 10.12.13. Now Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul? that thou keep the commandments of the Lord, & his ordinances, which I command thee this day, for thy wealth? And in the beginning of the next chapter. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, and keep his charge, and his statutes, and his judgments, and his commandments always. The Apostle James urgeth this duty upon those that are swift to hear, and have received the word with meekness, which is able to save their souls, chap. 1.22. Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own souls. Christ our Savior, describing the good hearers, by the good ground, saith, They bring forthwith patience some sixty fold, some thirty fold, and some an hundred fold, everyone some fruit, no man is barren altogether.

To conclude this point, it was the exhortation of Moses, and of the Priests and Levites, which they spake unto all Israel, Take heed and hearken, O Israel, this day thou art become the people of the Lord thy God: thou shalt therefore obey the voice of the Lord thy God, and do his commandments, and his statutes which I command thee this day. So thē, we must all know what is required of us, to wit, to be doers, and not bare hearers: to be practicers, and not talkers: to be obeyers and followers, not idle professors.

Maruell not at all at this. For first, to incline [Reason 1] our hearts to walk in his ways that we have learned, is an infallible sign that we truly fear God. This we see in the example of Abraham, God tempted him, and said unto him, Take thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and offer him for a burnt offering: he preferred the commandment of God before the love to his own son: God accepted his willing mind, and therefore he heareth this comfort, Lay not thine hand upon the lad neither do thou anything unto him: for now I know thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me. Not that he was ignorant before, but because he made that known to himself and to others, which before was known to him alone, and not thoroughly to Abraham himself. For what is in us we know not certainly our selves, until we be proved. Thus then we see that Abraham's notable obedience in so great a trial, was an evident testimony that he truly loved God.

[Reason 2] Secondly, obeience is always joined with recompense, God-rewarding it to the full, who is a most rich pay-master. No man shall serve him for naught. If Laban could say thus to Jacob, Because thou art my brother, shouldst thou therefore serve me for naught? will not the Lord much rather say to us, because ye are my children, should ye therefore serve me for nothing? The Prophet David, setting down the singular fruits and effects of the word of God, saith, By it is thy servant made circumspect, & in keeping of it, there is great reward. Consider brefly how it was with Abraham, of whom we spake before, he received an hard commandment, himself to offer up in sacrifice his only son; yet because he delayed not to put it in present execution, he received a threefold reward, first God delivered his son from death: secondly, he commendeth the faith of the father: and thirdly, he repeateth the promise to him, and confirmeth his faith in it Gen. 22.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, if we hearken unto him, he will hearken unto us: if we serve him, he will not be backward or behind hand with us to serve us. This doth the Prophet Isaiah point out unto us, chap. 58.9. Thou shalt call, and the Lord shall answer: thou shalt cry, and he shall say, Here I am: On the other side, if we will not hearken to obey him, he will never hearken unto us, neither regard when we call upon him. The wise man bringeth in wisdom crying without, and uttering her voice in the streets, Because I have called, and ye refused: I have stretched out mine hand, and no man regarded: but ye have set at naught all my counsel and would none of my reproof, I also will laugh at your calamity, and mock when your fear cometh.

Such measure as we mete, it shall be measured unto us again, and God will deal with us as we deal with him. If we set our faces against him, he will set his face against us. If we will not be reformed, but will walk contrary unto him, then he also will walk contrary unto us, and with the froward he will show himself froward.

Fourthly, they are to be obeyed that have [Reason 4] no absolute authority, but are themselves under the authority of others. God commandeth to honor father and mother, Exod. 20. albeit themselves are to honor God. Thus doth the Centurion reason from the less to the greater, Matth. 8.8, 9. from himself to Christ: Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof, but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed: for even I am a mā under authority, having soldiers under me: and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth: to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doth it. If then such as are mean men and have inferior places of command, are notwithstanding obeyed by those that are under them, much more ought the Lord himself to be obeyed, who is above all, and all under him.

[Reason 5] Fifthly, the Rechabites obeyed Jonadab their father, and received a blessing for their obedience. He restrained them from many profits and pleasures of this life, and his charge unto them might seem very hard and harsh, being restrained of wine, and forbidden to build houses, to sow seed, and to plant vineyards: and when they had these set before them, they answered, We have obeyed the voice of Jonadab, the son of Rechab our father, in all that he hath charged us, to drink no wine all our days, we, our wives, our sons, and daughters.

This example is the Prophet Jeremiah commanded to set before the people of God, to show them their sin, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Go and tell the men of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem, will ye not receive instruction to hearken to my words, saith the Lord? The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons, not to drink wine, are performed, for unto this day they drink none, but obey their fathers commandment: notwithstanding I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking, but ye hearkened not unto me. Shall we make less account of God, then the Rechabites did of their father? and value his commandments less worth then they did their fathers commandments? If we have had the fathers of our flesh, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection to the father of spirits, and live? Hebr. 12.9.

Lastly, there is a special relation between [Reason 6] God and his people. The subject oweth obedience to his prince: the servant to his master: the child to his father. God is all in all; he is our king, and we his subjects; he our master, and we his servants: he our father, and we his children, according to the saying of the Prophet Malachi, A son honoreth his father, and a servant his master: if then I be a father, where is mine honor? and if I be a master, where is my fear, saith the Lord of hosts? So that disobedience is as the sin of rebellion, and God detesteth those that commit it, as rebels against him. All these reasons serve to preach obedience unto us whensoever the word and will of God is made known unto us.

The uses of this doctrine are very profitable [Use 1] unto us. First, learn from hence, and let it work an impression in our hearts, that nothing can be more agreeable, or a more effectual mark of our Christian profession, then to obey and hearken unto the voice and word of God.

This made Samuel say to Saul, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? behold, to obey, is better then sacrifice; and to hearken, then the fat of rams. When the Lord was to deliver his Law in mount Sinai, he said, If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my Covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine, Exodus, Chap. 19.5.

By the voice of God we are to understand not the letters or so many syllables of the Scriptures, but the preaching and publishing of the same according to the doctrine, interpretation, exhortation, reproof, comfort, and such like. For the word taught and applied, according to the true sense and natural meaning of the Scriptures, is as well the word, as that which is written; forasmuch as by the gift of interpretation bestowed upon his servants, the mind and meaning of them is opened. That then is not Scripture only which is expressed in so many syllables; and therefore the Apostle saith, when they deliver pure doctrine with integrity and gravity, they deliver y^e wholesome word which cannot be reprov'd. They are the seedmen, the word is the seed; and therefore they deliver the word. The voice of God's messengers in the ministry of the word, is to be heard and esteemed as the voice of the everliving God, and not as the voice of a mortal man. The Prophets call upon the people, to hear the word of the Lord, when themselves spake unto them, and not the Lord immediately. The Apostle declareth that God in old time spake by his Prophets, Heb. 1.1. according to the saying of Christ, that whosoever hear his disciples and Ministers, hear him: and they, who contemn them, contemn him, Luke 10.16.

Thus in all ages have the faithful esteemed the Ministers as the messengers of God; and the Ministry of the word, as the voice of God himself. This is witnessed by sundry testimonies of holy Scripture, speaking of the Church generally, and of the servants of God particularly; The Church saith, Isaiah 2.3. Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. Cornelius having sent for Peter, saith, he was present before God to hear what he would speak unto him by Peters mouth. Acts 10.33. The Thessalonians received the word, not as the word of man, but as it is indeed the word of God, 1 Thess. 2.13. Thus must we esteem of it in judgment: thus must we obey it in practice. When sin is reprov'd, it is God that reproveth it. When the sinner that is penitent is comforted, God is the comforter. If the word find out our secret sins, we must be no less terrified and humbled, then if God should proclaim open war against us, and utter his Thundering voice against us. If the sweet consolations of Christ are offered to them that mourn in Zion, and hang down their heads through feeling of the wrath of God, for their manifold sins, they are to be comforted as well thereby, as if the Lord himself from the highest heavens, should comfort them, and speak peace unto their consciences. There cannot be a greater enemy to the saving hearing of the word, then to imagine this, that we have nothing to do with God, but all with man, when we hear the word. This shaketh attention, cooleth zeal, breedeth negligence, and hindereth obedience.

Secondly, this serveth to reprove all such [Use 2] as yield no obedience unto God and his will, but rebel against him openly and stubbornly, and will do nothing at all that he commandeth. These are not unfitly called traitors and rebels against God. The name of a traitor is most odious among all men, no man can abide to be so accounted. But what shall it avail us to be faithful unto men, and unfaithful to God? to obey them, and to disobey him? Moses telleth the people of Israel, that they have been rebellious against the Lord, from the day that he knew them. Such as rose up against Aaron, and would not submit themselves to God's ordinance in his Ministry, are called the children of rebellion, Numb. 17.10. and they are exhorted not to rebel against the Lord, Numb. 14.9. It is a vain thing to say, we are no traitors, we hate the name of treason: if we nourish open rebellion against God, who is the King of kings. Such as set themselves against God's word, and yield no obedience unto it, are rank traitors, and we need crave no pardon, if we call them the children of rebellion.

Secondly, it reproveth such as prolong the time with God, & have no leisure to hearken yet unto him, and so make him attend upon them. No man must stand to debate or consult with flesh and blood, whether he should obey God, or not: the wisdom and policy of man must not be our counselors, they will deceive us, and withhold us from yielding obedience unto God's commandments. In his matters we must not plead policy, but when he commandeth, we must with all speed yield obedience. The Prophet that contrary to God's commandment did eat bread and drink water in the house of the old Prophet, was devoured of a Lyon: this was the judgment denounced against him, Foras much as thou hast disobeyed the mouth of the Lord, and hast not kept the commandment which the Lord thy God commanded thee, &c. thy carcase shall not come into the sepulchers of thy fathers. The fruit of all disobedience is our own destruction, notwithstanding our own good intents, which may please our selves, but cannot please God. When we have his word, we must not suffer our selves to be deluded by traditions, by visions, or by pretended revelations. The only word revealed unto us must put all other means to silence, and make them give place. He that was commanded by the word of God, to strike the Prophet, and refused it, was slain by a Lyon. Let these examples make us wise: and their falls teach us to stand upright. It is extreme folly to yield to the false and feigned persuasions of ignorant men, who go about to tell us, that it is not so necessary a duty to obey the word of God delivered unto us, as many would make us to believe: that we shall be hated and derided of all men, and therefore it is better for us to seek the favor and good will of men and the applause of the world, then to be singular, and so contemned. Let not us be lulled asleep with these sweet songs, which are no better then cunning enchantments; neither be led a side by such deceitful counselors as go about to bring us into eternal perdition.

Thirdly, it reproveth such as part stakes between God and themselves, and regard not to yield entire obedience unto him, but obey to halves; For as Agrippa was persuaded somewhat to become a Christian, so are these resolved a little to obey. Saul was commanded to root out the Amalekites, with all that was theirs from man to beast: but he set his own wisdom before the wisdom of the Lord, sparing Agag and the better part of the sheep to offer sacrifice unto him. But God spared not him, for his kingdom was rent from him, and given to his neighbor that was better then he. The children of Israel were straitly charged of God to destroy the nations, into whose land he would bring them, lest by suffering them among them, and by joining themselves with them, they should learn their manners, and serve their Idols, which would turn to their ruin and destruction. They executed part of his commandment, they destroyed many of them, & took their cities: yet because they saved a part, and spared a remnant of them, they found them by woeful experience to be thorns and pricks in their flesh, and afterward they lived many years in their slavery and subjection, as the book of Judges doth witness. God looketh for full and perfect obedience, so that there is no halting or faltering before him. We see how Ananias and Sapphira were smitten with sudden death, because they kept back part of the price of that which they had vowed and dedicated unto God, Act. 5. This turned to their utter destruction, albeit they were taken to be zealous and forward disciples. So shall it be with us, if we be like unto them. Let us take heed of hypocrisy: let us labor to be entire, and give him the whole heart.

[Use 3] Thirdly, let us seek after knowledge and understanding of the will of God. For how can that servant practice and perform his masters will, that never knoweth nor regardeth to know what he requireth? or can that subject obey the law of the Magistrate, that is wholly ignorant of the Law? The Apostle requireth, that the word of Christ dwell richly in us in all wisdom, Col. 3.16. The true knowledge of God is the fountain and foundation of all true obedience. From hence as from a root spring forth and spread abroad faith in Christ, hope in the promises, love to the brethren, the true worship of God and fear of his holy Name. As on the other side, from ignorance proceed, infidelity, distrust, despair, presumption, hatred of God, malice, superstition, idolatry, disobedience, and all impiety. Hence it is, that the Prophet Hosea complaineth, that God had a controversy with the inhabitants of the land, and that there was much riot and excess of unrighteousness among them, by stealing, lying, whoring, swearing, and killing, because there was no knowledge found in that people: thereby implying, that they were utterly destitute of all grace and goodness, of all piety and true religion. Such as know not God, nor his will, are ignorant what pleaseth, or what displeaseth him, and therefore cannot but offend him in both. He that doth the will of God ignorantly, like the blind man that hitteth the white, cannot be accepted of him, or look for any reward at his hands. God will accept of none to be his servants, that know him not.

Will any man receive into his service one that cannot see to dispatch his business? and shall we think that God will admit blind men, that regard not to understand his ways, and want their spiritual eyes to discern between good and evil? This we see by sundry examples, as Psal. 95.10. where the Lord rendereth this reason, why the people erred in their hearts, and grieved him forty years in the wilderness, because they had not known his ways. It was the cause why the Sadducees denied the resurrection, Matt. 22.29. Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God. This caused the Jews to crucify the Lord of life, Act. 3.17. Now brethren, I wote that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers: for if they had known him, they would not have crucified the Lord of life. This is it that maketh the proud iusticiaries of the world to rest in their own righteousness, because they know not the righteousness of God. This was the cause of the idolatry of the Gentiles, Gal. 4.8. When ye knew not God, ye did service unto them which by nature are no God's. So what was the cause, but ignorance, that moved Paul to persecute the Saints? he rendereth this as the reason, I was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief. And as it is the root that brancheth out into many sins: so it is as pitch that defileth whatsoever it toucheth, & turneth good affections into evil, and maketh them to decline and degenerate into sin. Religion, devotion, hope, fear, being joined and guided with the eye and light of knowledge please God; whereas without this sight they highly displease him.

For religion joined with ignorance, begetteth and bringeth forth idolatry: devotion accompanied with ignorance, is no better then superstition: hope joined with ignorance, worketh presumption: fear joined with ignorance, engendreth desperation. If we have not knowledge to support and season us, we err out of the right way, and are deceived beyond all measure. Love blinded with ignorance, becometh sottish. Zeal, patience, and such like corrupted with ignorance, are turned into brutish and savage passions.

This reproveth three sorts of men. First, the practice of the Church of Rome, that taketh away the key of knowledge from the people, and seeketh to bring in palpable darkness. These false teachers cannot endure that the people should enjoy the light of the Scriptures. They read them in an unknown tongue, persuading them they may be most devout, when they are most ignorant; that it shall go well with them though they have no faith of their own, but an implicit faith to believe as the Church believeth, albeit they know not what it believeth. These are they that notably abuse the people to their perdition, and bewitch them with spiritual socery, as they that bring God's judgments upon their heads: for when a land is destitute of y^e knowledge of God, all things are covered with darkness, and the persons are liable to his fearful judgments, as is evident by sundry places of Scripture. David saith, the blind and lame that mocked at him were hated of his soul: so that such should not enter into his house, 2. Sam. 5.8. Such as are spiritually blind, shall never enter into God's kingdom, they are all seers that shall come thither.

The want of natural sight is nothing in comparison of the want of the eyes of the mind. Our Savior pronounceth them blessed that are pure in heart, because they shall see God. This sight of the mind is twofold, partly in this life, & partly in the life to come, one of them imperfect, the other perfect, when we shall see him as he is This is eternal life to know God: it is eternal death not to know him, and to be ignorant that God is our father, that Christ is our redeemer, and that the holy Ghost is our sanctifier.

The second reproof is of those that are children in knowledge, that live in the light, and yet can see nothing. The Sun shineth brightly in their faces, yet they shut their eyes. Many think they have religion enough, if they have a good mind and meaning, and lead a civil life among their neighbors, who like not such busy fellows that will be meddling evermore with the Scriptures. They are accounted honest men, and are well liked of all, they pay that they owe, they are just of their word, they deceive no man. But this civil conversation and honest behavior shall profit them nothing, nor be able to bring them into the favor of God, nor give them any title to the kingdom of heaven, so long as they are destitute of knowledge: forasmuch as they have God their adversary, who will contend with them, and plead against them: neither will he know them, that regard not to know him. Others despise it and contemn it, like the fool or idiot, that casteth away a pearl or precious stone not knowing y^e value or worth of it. These come to the Church sometimes, and hear the word of God both read & preached, and yet are not so much as acquainted with the histories of the Scripture, & the principles of religion, which are as milk for young children. They know not what faith is: they are not acquainted with the means of our justification: they know not the difference between the Law and the Gospel, neither the use of the one or y^e other: they cannot discern anything between the religion of Christ and of Antichrist.

Lastly, it serveth to stop the mouths of all proud and malicious slanderers of the Gospel, that accuse the preaching and publishing thereof, as the cause of the sins and enormities that abound among us, as also of the plagues and punishments that God hath inflicted upon the land. These men, uttering the froth and scum of their soul mouths, and belching up the venom of their poisoned hearts, cry out. It was never well since this new religion sprung up, & since there was so much teaching and preaching: that we have so much knowledge and learning, that we are well the worse for it. The cause of God's judgments is not the preaching of the Gospel, but the contempt of the Gospel: and because we have the light, but love darkness more then the light. God justly giveth over such profane beasts into a reprobate sense. Our great ignorance is the cause of our sins, and that we are children of darkness, rather then of the day: of the night, not of the light. Are not these ashamed to say, that the light of the Sun causeth men to stumble and go out of the way? that the Chirurgicalian and his salve make the soar? that the judge maketh the thief; and the law the malefactor? For they may as well affirm all this, as that the word is the cause either of our sins, or of our punishments: which serveth to keep us both from [Use 4] the one and the other.

Fourthly, hereby we must try who be good hearers of the word, and who be not. All of us should come constantly, diligently, and continually: but many among us come seldom. We would be loath to be accounted recusants: but if we should come a little less, we might worthily be so accounted. We would be loath to be accounted Papists, and indeed I think we should have injury done us to be so called: forasmuch as we live more like unto Atheists. We would think our selves greatly slandered to be reputed worshippers of a false God: and indeed we might so, forasmuch as we are found to worship no God at all. They will plead no doubt for themselves, that they are saved and sanctified hearers, as well as the best: and they would be ready to complain of great wrong, if they should be charged to be in the number of evil hearers. But as Christ saith in the Gospel, Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doth the will of my Father which is in heaven: so, not everyone that challengeth the title of a right hearer, is a good hearer indeed; but the obedient hearer that bringeth forth fruit. The end of the Law, is obedience, as Deut. 6.1, 2, 3. These are the commandments, the statutes, and the judgments, which the Lord your God commanded to teach you, that ye might do them in the land which ye go to possess: that thou mightest fear the Lord thy God, to keep all his statutes and his commandments which I command thee, thou, and thy son, and thy sons son, all the days of thy life, &c. hear therefore, O Israel, and observe to do it, that it may be well with thee, &c. Wherefore, the doctrine that now we deal withal, is as a touchstone to try what we are, whether we be fruitful or fruitless hearers. It will be no hard matter (if we set our minds unto it) to make proof and trial, whether we be altogether barren in bringing forth fruits or not. The fig tree that had nothing but leaves upon it, and no fruit at all is cursed, and hath this denounced against it, No man eat fruit of thee hereafter forever, Mar. 11.14. The dresser of his vineyard said of another fig tree, whereon he sought fruit and found none (for there is store of such) Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree, and find none, cut it down, why combreth it the ground? John the Baptist preaching repentance to such as came out of Jerusalem to his baptism, saith, Every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down, and cast into the fire, Matth. 3.10. The Apostle writeth to the Hebrews, to stir them up to be more zealous, and telleth them that the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God: but that which beareth thorns ana briars is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing, whose end is to be burned. If any be an hearer of the word, and not a doer, the Apostle James maketh him like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and streightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. No man thinketh it hard to be able to discern of land whether it be fruitful or barren, forasmuch as the crop that the field yieldeth will easily discover and discry the nature of the soil. If the seed of the word that is sown in our hearts do spring up, and bring forth new obedience, it is a good heart, fear it not, doubt not of it: but if there follow no growth or increase at all, it is a barren heart, look to it, plough it up, dignity about it, and dung it, that it may bear fruit, otherwise it shall be cut down and cast into the fire. If we must all undergo this trial what hearers we are, woe unto very many that are among us, fearful will their estate be, and lamentable will their bareness and barrenness appear to be in good things. There is no tree more destitute of fruit, then their hearts are of faith and good works. There is no ground so full of thorns & bushes, as their hearts are of sin and corruption. How many are there that live in y^e Church, that hear many instructions, exhortations, admonitions, & threatenings from the word, that might make the stones relent? yet nevertheless, the more they hear, the more deaf they are: the more they are charged to do, the less they regard to practice; the more the word would soften them, the more their hearts are hardened and set against the truth; they are like the deaf adder that stoppeth her ear, which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, charming never so wisely. These are they that come together, not for the better, but for the worse, 1 Cor. 11. and make the word to be the savor, not of life to life, but of death unto death, 2 Cor. 2. How many are there that have had and heard many persuasions to piety and godliness of life, and yet show themselves more wretched and profane then before? like unto Pharaoh, who when he had heard the word of y^e Lord, hardened his heart, and would not let the people go: or like the Israelites, who being moved to repentance, that they should make their ways and their works good, answered desperately, We will walk after our own devises, and we will everyone do the imagination of his evil heart. How many are there, that have been often stirred up to sobriety and temperance, in the use of God's good creatures, that are so far from bridling their unruly & riotous lusts, y^t they are grown more excessive & intemperate in drinking and quaffing, and spare not to rise early to follow drunkenness, until the wine inflame them, and take away their wits from them? Woe saith the Prophet, to all such. When the commandment came unto them, sin revived, so that the commādemēt which was ordained unto life, is found to be unto death. The like we might say of diverse and sundry sins, reprovēd by the word. God hath said, Swear not at all, neither by heaven, nor by earth, neither by any other oath, but let your yea, be yea: and your nay, be nay: lest ye fall into condemnation: Let us see, what this hath wrought, & still worketh in us: have not many the more inured themselves to that horrible and detestable sin, committed against the high Majesty of God? Is not every other word almost an oath? can they speak without it? Is it not become in the opinion and practice of the most sort, a grace and ornament to their speech, and a gentlemanlike exercise? Are they not accounted fools and Puritans, that use it not themselves, or seek to reprove it, & repress it in others? Some will say, It is a foolish custom that I have gotten, and I cannot leave it, but I mean no harm or hurt by it to any man. Thus do men go about to excuse sin which they have no purpose to forsake, but rather a desire to continue in it. Do you call it a foolish custom? nay, it is a vile & wicked custom. Give it his true name, and disguise it not; name the child aright, call it with Christ, a devilish custom, it cometh of that evil one. This is so common a sin among men and women, among old and young, & hath taken such deep roots, that the axe of God's word and of his judgments, cannot cut it down. The fathers infect their children, and one learneth of another, until the greatest part are become licentious and abominable. Let us come to the sanctification of the Sabbath; the more many hear of it, the oftener the commandment is urged unto them and pressed upon them, the more dissolute and disordered they grow in the profanation of it. They cannot be ignorant, that they ought not to follow their pleasures on that day, but to call the Sabbath a delight, and honor him on it, not doing their own ways, nor finding their own pleasure, nor speaking their own words: but when this holy day of the Lord cometh, they forget all, their pleasures so round them in the ear, that they run madding everyone after his own vanities, and the least occasion draweth them from the exercises of religion, as if they meant to bid defiance to God, and to provoke him to battle, which they do against their own souls. For are we stronger then he? or able to make our party good against him? No, no, we deceive our selves; we are no fit matches to deal with him, who is able to arm the smallest & weakest creatures to our confusion.

[Use 5] Fifthly, we have all need of patience, without which we shall never be able to go through with our obedience. It is no easy thing to yield obedience. We have many enemies and oppositions that stand in our way to hinder us. We have many corruptions within us: we have the world & a thousand allurements without us, all of them set in battle array to encounter with us. We are like ground that yieldeth nothing of it self but thorns and thistles, without much labor and pains, without often ploughing and tilling, and turning up. Hence it is, that the Apostle entreateth the Hebrews, and beseecheth them to suffer the words of exhortation. We do not easily brook and digest the word, but with great difficulty. It is hard meat lying heavy upon the stomach, and will not soon concoct. To mortify sin is to deny our selves, and as it were to cut off the right hand, and to pluck out the right eye, Mat. 5. It is not done without great grief and anguish. It is almost death to the Swearer to obey this exhortation, My brethren swear not at all, I am. 5. It is as painful to him, as if you cut off a piece of his tongue, or sewed up his lips, or dashed out his teeth. It is in effect to strike off a limb, to tell the drunkard, he must live sober, and not run into excess, and that drunkards shall not inherit the kingdom of God: he judgeth it so hard a doctrine, as if he were in danger to die for thirst. Seeing therefore obedience to the word is painful, we have need of patience to stay us up, that we shrink not away, and go clean backward. Besides, we do not by & by enjoy the promises y^t God maketh unto us, they are for an appointed time, he will try us in waiting for thē. So he dealt with Abraham, he had promise of a son, but it was not immediately accomplished, he was fain to expect long time for it. So the Psalmist speaking of Joseph, confirmeth notably this point: He had sundry dreams, which were predictions, and presages of his future advancement: yet after this he was sold for a servant, his feet were hurt with fetters, and he was laid in iron, until the time that his word came, the word of the Lord tried him. We must be faithful unto the death, and then we shall receive the crown of life. God trieth us all at one time or other, and one way or other: we see not his promises by and by performed unto us: let us wait for them with patience, and put on the hope of salvation as a shield: for surely they will come, and he y^t hath spoken the word cannot lie. Lastly, we must here endure sundry afflictions, and shall meet with many scorns and scoffs of wicked men, seeking to turn us from our due obedience to God and his word; and therefore we have need of patience to hold us constantly in the faith without wavering, Heb. 10.36. Christ Jesus forewarning his disciples what troubles hanged over their heads, that they shall be persecuted, and delivered up to the Synagogues and into prisons, and be brought before kings & rulers for his Names sake, giveth them this exhortation, In your patience possess ye your souls. As Ishmael persecuted him that was borne after the Spirit, even so it is now, and ever will be, Gal. 4.29. Many have turned back from the truth through these temptations. They cannot abide to be reviled, though it be for righteousness sake. Let us not think the Christian man's life to be an easy and lazy life, nor the way to it pleasant, nor the gate that leadeth and openeth to it, broad and wide: it is a continual warfare, 2. Tim. 2, 3. suffer affliction as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. Heerupon we are charged to strive to enter in at the straight gate, Mat. 7. There is no salvation without striving: we must suffer many a blow, and endure many a wound. We must be content to bear many showers and sharp storms. The husbandman suffereth much labor before he reapeth. We must not dream of the victory before the battle. Our Savior speaking of the good and saving hearer of the word, such as all of us ought to be, describeth him by these notes, that with an honest and good heart he heareth the word, keepeth it, and bringeth forth fruit with patience. This is so excellent a virtue, that God vouchsafeth to be called the God of patience, Rom. 15. When once we begin to yield obedience to the word, and to frame our lives according thereunto, and to bring forth the fruits worthy amendment of life; when we are freed from the tyranny of Satan, and made citizens of the kingdom of heaven, we must look for the cross and persecution to follow us: forasmuch as all that will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution, 2 Tim. 3.12. This virtue do those hearers want, which in time of peace and prosperity will profess the same, but when trouble ariseth, forsake the faith and give over their profession, and embrace this present world. But we must learn better things, we must build upon the rock, that we be not shaken.

This maketh us stand assured of God's promises, and breaketh the stroke of all afflictions, that they cannot hurt us, nor be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord, but maketh us in y^e end to be more then conquerors through him that loved us, Rom. 8. so that we may glory in tribulations, knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience: and experience hope: and hope maketh not ashamed.

[Use 6] Lastly, it is our duty to labor to grow in obedience. It is not enough for us to bring forth some fruits, but we must strive to perfection, and to the greatest measure of fruitfulness. This is laid before us in the parable of the sower, Mat. 13. some bring forth fruit an hundred fold, some sixty, and some thirty fold. Let it be with us, as it is with worldly minded men, that seek to increase their stock and store, and to make it greater. This duty hath many branches, as it were appurtenances depending upon it; First, we are not to be discouraged, though we attain not to the highest degree & greatest measure of obedience. For such as are evermore growing, have not yet attained to the end of their growth. There are diverse degrees of good ground, and there are diverse steps before we can come to the top of any high thing. The husbandman, though he receive not a crop of an hundred fold, yet will think it well and count the ground good, and his labor well bestowed, if he might receive sixty or thirty fold. Wherefore, albeit we be not the best ground, yet we may be good ground, as he may be a good servant, that is not best of all. No good ground shall be rejected, it is the barren ground that he accepteth not. If we bear any fruit, he will make much of us, and work in us more obedience, as John. 15.2. Every branch that beareth not fruit, he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit. So then, there is fruit, and there is more fruit: First we must labor to bring forth fruit: then we must strive to bring forth more fruit. Secondly, we must beware that we do not decay in grace, and so grow every day less fruitful then other. This is contrary to that growth that ought to be in us. This is the estate of many professors and sluggish hearers, that were more forward and fervent many years past then now they are at this present, to whom belongeth the exhortation given to the Church of Ephesus, I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love: remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works, or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent. The Apostle, writing to the Galatians, was afraid of them, lest he had bestowed all his labor among them in vain, Gal. 4. For as the Minister, through want of teaching and using of his gifts, becometh unprofitable to himself and the Church, and suffereth his gifts to decay: so is it with many hearers, if we stir not up the gifts given unto us, we shall grow cold and fruitless in good things. Thirdly, we must take heed to our selves while we are growing, lest Satan cast his darnel among us, and make us grow proud of our proceedings, and measure the forwardness of our obedience, by the backwardnesse of others disobedience. This we are ready enough to do, and to esteem highly of our selves. The Apostle declareth that lest he should be exalted above measure, through the abundance of the revelations, there was given unto him a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet him, lest he should be exalted above measure. We cannot so much as think one good thought. We have nothing whereof to be proud and highminded. When any good work is done in us, it is not we that do it, but the grace of God in us. Fourthly, it is required of us, not to disdain or contemn others that come farther behind us, both because GOD accepteth of their mediocrity, though they have not attained to the greatest measure, neither are gotten up to the top; yet so long as they are climbing up the ladder that reacheth to heaven, they are in the right way, and therefore we must take heed lest by our unseasonable disgracing of them, and carping at them, we drive them out of the path wherein they walk. Whatsoever we our selves enjoy, We have received from the gift of God, and we are indebted unto him for it, so y^t we are not to boast our selves as if we had not received it, neither ought we to lift up our selves above or against our brethren, lest God's hand in justice pull us down, which in mercy did set us up. Fifthly, it behooveth us to use all good means both to come to obedience, and to continue us in the fruits of obedience, all the days of our lives. God hath commanded no good thing, but he hath appointed unto us the means whereby we shall attain unto it. And he hath appointed no means in vain, but they are sanctified and blessed to those that carefully use them, to the bettering of their souls, and the increasing of his graces. The first means commended unto us for this purpose is the sound preaching, and the saving hearing of the word, which is of great force and effect to change our hearts and to work obedience in them, as Rom. 1.17. the Apostle Paul desireth to preach to them at Rome, because by the preaching of the Gospel, the righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith. Another means is prayer. God hath bound himself by promise, he cannot go back from his word, nor deny himself, forasmuch as he is unchangeable in goodness. He hath spoken it, and he will perform it, that if we ask, we shall receive: if we seek, we shall find: and if we knock, it shall be opened unto us. A third means to work obedience may be meditation of the things that we have heard; an infallible testimony of our love to the truth, and of our delight in it.

That which we often think upon we love much, O how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day. Such are pronounced blessed by the Prophet, that meditate in the Law of God continually, for they shall be as trees planted by the rivers of waters, which shall bring forth their fruits in due season. The last is conference with others, thereby stirring up one another, and receiving benefit by the company of others.

This was the practice of the Prophet David, he was a companion of all them that feared God, and kept his commandments. He joineth these two together, the company of the faithful, and the keeping of his laws, because the one is a principal help unto the other. Thus I have run over the chief means that serve to further us in obedience, by these we must seek it, or else we shall never obtain it. The more we use them and frequent them, the greater shall our growth be in obedience. The less we use them, the less obedient we shall be. They that use them not at all, can have no measure at all of obedience. Shall we think to walk in the ways of godliness, and never exercise our selves in the means appointed for us? Or is it possible for such to please God in obedience, as neglect such ways as he hath left unto us? Do we then see men contemn the word of God, and make no conscience to attend unto it? neither regarding diligently to resort to the hearing of it, nor hearkening carefully to it, when they are come to it? Are there not many that never call upon God, nor beg of him the graces of his Spirit, and that have not the spirit of prayer, to ask of him such things as they stand in need off? Is not meditation with our selves, and conference with others grown out of use, and rarely to be found among men? An evident token that there is little obedience to be found in the world, but a sea of disobedience that ouerfloweth all places. For where there is little conscience in hearing, little care in praying, little use of meditating and conferring, we may boldly pronounce without fear, that there is little obedience yielded to the laws and commandments of God.

CHAP. V.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying.

2 Command the children of Israel, that they put out of the campe, every leper, and everyone that hath an issue, and whosoever is defiled by the dead:

3 Both male and female shall ye put out, without the campe shall ye put them, that they defile not their camps, in the midst whereof I dwell,

4 And the children of Israel did so, and put them out, without the campe: as the Lord spake unto Moses, so did the children of Israel.

Hitherto we have spoken of one part of the preface, wherein we have seen a rehearsal of the order commanded of God to be observed in the mansions and remoouings of the children of Israel. Nevertheless, one thing is wanting, to wit, that order be taken, that this multitude be free from all pollution and impurity or uncleanness, and follow after sanctification. For what is an unregenerate and unsanctified company, but a rout of rebels, and an heap of confederates, conspiring together against God? Wherefore, we are now to proceed to the second part of the Preface, which concerneth the purity of this people. The former Chapters serve to manifest them to be a great people: the chapters following, to make them an holy people. The former show what they are; the chapters following what they ought to be. The former chapters declare what they are by the course of nature: the next will declare what they are by the means of grace.

Heerin we are to observe two things: first, the laws that are given them to this end. Secondly, the laws concerning the manner of their removing and marching in the wilderness. The laws that concern their sanctification are either general and common, or else particular and special. The general are in the 5 and 6 chapters, and come first to be handled: the particular are in the 3 chapters following. The general laws are of two sorts, some are necessary and commanded in the law; other are voluntary or vowed, being undertaken by a free profession of their religion. Moses handleth in the first place such laws as are commanded, and necessarily to be practiced, and setteth them down in this chapter. The vowed or voluntary service is noted in the chapter following.

In this fifth Chapter he entreateth of the means of sanctification, & it containeth two parts. First of sanctification in matters fully and certainly known: Secondly, of sanctification in matters that are doubtful and unknown, depending upon the opinion or suspicion of others. The first kind consisting in matters certain, is double; first, he entreateth of casting out of the impure and unclean out of the host, in the four first verses. Secondly, of cleansing and purging the trepasse and damage done to our neighbor, to the 11. verse. The second part, standing in that which is doubtful, is the trial of the honesty and innocence of the suspected wife, to the end of the chapter. Thus we see, that as soldiers are wont to be cassired and turned out of the campe, and put from their wages: so when God numbered the people that were fit for profane and sacred war, he doth after a sort depose and dismiss all those that were defiled through any impurity of body or mind, thereby declaring both what manner of persons he would have all those be y^t profess to worship him, and how he abhorreth and detesteth whatsoever is foul and filthy, polluted and profane: and therefore he willet all lepers, all that have an issue, or have touched any dead corps should be cast out of their tents. Moreover, all deceitful and fraudulent persons, that have beguiled their neighbors through falsehood and forgery, shall no otherwise be accepted, then by confession unto God and restitution unto men. Lastly, the jealousy of the suspicious husband, is so corrected & reformed by a ceremonial observation, as by a special remedy, that either he is compelled to acknowledge his suspicion to be false, or else if the affection be just, he understandeth it to be approved by the testimony of God himself; and so evil is taken away out of Israel by the sentence of God the avenger.

Touching the first point, which is concerning the putting out of their tents y^e unclean, we are to observe 2 things. First, the commandment of God: secondly, the execution thereof. The commandment is propounded, and then confirmed by strength of reason. It is propounded both by his parts, and by the manner of it. The parts of the commandment are three, distinctly set down; first, touching the lepers, they must be put out from among thē, and have a place assigned unto them to dwell apart by themselves, out of the tents of the rest of the Israelites, lest by daily conversing with them, they should infect and corrupt others. Secondly, touching such as have running issues about them, of which we have spoken before, in the book of Leviticus, these also must depart out of the host. For albeit there were no fear of infection in these, as also in those that follow, yet there was a legal impurity, and a ceremonial uncleanness in them, putting them in mind of the foulness of sin. Thirdly, such as have touched a dead carcass, must also go out of the host; these were also unclean for a certain season. The first sort, to wit, of the lepers, was infectious: the two latter were accounted unclean and abominable, in respect of the law and ordinance of God that forbade those ceremonies, until the time of the restoring of all things: and yet some of them could not be avoided, as the touching of the dead.

These are the parts: the manner followeth, showing that this commandment is general, and toucheth all ages and sexes, young and old, male and female, Prince and subject, rich and poor, there must no partiality be used, God will have none of these unclean persons to be spared or suffered among his people, from the king that setteth on his throne, to the beggar that lieth on the dunghill. Hereupon Moses saith, both male and female ye shall put out, without the campe shall ye put them. And in the book of Deuteronomy, it is said, Take heed in the plague of leprosy, that thou observe diligently, and do according to all that the Priests & Levites shall teach you: as I commanded them, so ye shall observe to do: Remember what the Lord thy God did unto Miriam by the way, after that ye were come forth out of Egypt. She was the sister of Moses and Aaron, & had gone before the women in singing the praises of God, for their deliverance at the red sea; yet when she spake against Moses, she was shut out from the campe seven days, according to the law, All the days wherein the plague shall be in him, he shall be defiled, he is unclean, he shall dwell alone, without the camp shall his habitation be. The practice hereof we see in Gehazi, the servant of Elisha, because he had taken two talents of silver contrary to the will of the Prophet, he said unto him, The leprosy of Naaman shall cleave unto thee, and unto thy seed forever; and he went out from his presence a leper as white as snow. In the seige of Samaria by the Syrians, it appeareth that four leprous men dwelt out of the city, who for fear of that great and mighty host abode at the entering in of the gate, and were the first messengers of glad tidings, that the enemies had broken up their campe in haste and were fled away. When Ahasiah presumed in the pride of his heart to execute the priests office, the Lord smote the king, so that he was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt in a several house. Thus we see how this law was executed without all respect of persons or degrees and estates of men, high and low, bond and free, master and servant.

The reasons of the former commandment follow, which are two in number: the one drawn from the nature and condition of these unclean persons: the other, from the person and presence of God, The former reason concerning the foulness of the leprosy, in these words, lest they defile their camp, may be thus concluded,

If the lepers defile the places of their abode, then they are to be removed.

But the lepers defile y^e places of their abode, Therefore they are to be removed.

The conclusion of this argument, is y^e commandment it self mentioned in the 2 verse: so also is the second part in the end of y^e same verse. The first proposition is to be supplied. The next reason, drawn from the Lord himself, in these words, I dwell in the mids of them, is thus concluded,

If God dwell among his people, then no unclean thing is to be tolerated among them. But God dwelleth among his people, Therefore no unclean thing is to be tolerated among them.

The parts of this argument are partly expressed, and partly understood, as we shown in the former that went before, and therefore need not be repeated.

Thus much of the commandment: the execution hereof followeth in the 4. verse, set down, first generally, and particularly. Generally, the children of Israel did so, Particularly, they put them out of the campe, as the Lord spake unto Moses. Now whereas the tents among the Israelites were threefold: one, of the Tabernacle: another of the Levites: the third of the Tribes: sundry of the Hebrews hold that such as were leprous were banished from them all three: that such as had running issues, were suffered in the campe, but neither in the court of the Tabernacle, nor among the tents of the Levites: and that such as were defiled by touching the dead, were only banished and excluded out of the court of the Tabernacle and the Tabernacle it self. But these are more curious speculations, then well grounded observations, whereof the Hebrew Rabbins are full, and seem to be overthrown in this place, where they are thought to be established, forasmuch as Moses joineth all these 3. together, and turneth them out of the host.

Before we proceed to handle the doctrines of this division, it shall not be amiss for us to answer one objection, which we will do briefly, and that is, whether God, in requiring the lepers to be put out of the campe, do respect the bodies of his people, or not? forasmuch as the leprosy was a contagious and infectious disease. I answer, I am not ignorant how diversely diverse men do carry this, and understand hereby, that God as a prudent and provident Lawgiuer, giveth wholesome counsel and direction, lest contagious diseases should creep among the people, and so infect one another. But this is too weak a conjecture and collection, & reacheth not to the purpose, nor attaineth to the intent of God, who respecteth the soul rather then the body. For he doth not in this place give counsel as a Physician that provideth for the health of his patient: but he dealeth as a Physician of y^e soul, and therefore under these outward rites and ceremonies, he would train them up, & teach them to give themselves to holiness of life, to study to attain unto, and acquaint themselves with purity, and to beware of all filthiness and uncleanness. This appeareth in the example before set down of such as were driven from the company and society of men, being stricken with the leprosy by the hand of God. Besides, this reason is rendered of their casting out of the host, lest they should defile the campe in which the Lord dwelled. Lastly, we see that such as have issues in the flesh, & such as touch the dead, which are no infectious diseases, and the one no disease at all, are joined with the leprosy in this chapter, so that the drift & intent of God in this place, is, not to provide for the body, or to keep the people in health and strength, but for the soul, that they may be preserved from sin, & from the infection of sin.

Now, if any ask whether the disease of the leprosy be not contagious, and therefore whether it be not expedient, that all such as are taken and touched with it, should be barred and banished from the society of men: I confess this is true and convenient, & ought to be so: but this was not the chief and principal end that God respected, and therefore this is left to the Physicians and Masters of that profession to judge according to the rules of art and experience. God committed the matter to the Priests, that they should order all things according to the directions given unto them: it had been much safer to have committed and commended the matter to such as had judgment in that faculty.

Moreover, we must consider, that as this disease was foul and filthy, ugly and fearful, so there are three sorts of it named in the law, to wit, the leprosy of the body, the leprosy of the garments, and the leprosy of the house: so that it is most probable according to y^e opinion of the learned, that the Jews in a proper and peculiar manner (unknown to us at this day, and unknown to the Jews themselves at this day) were troubled and tormented with this disease. Even as we, that are cast into the last age of the world, have diseases that follow some sins, which in former times, were not known to the Physicians themselves. And hereupon no doubt profane writers took occasion to devise sundry lies and slanders against, the whole nation of the Jews, as if it were hereditary unto them, and that all the posterity of Abraham were full of botches and blisters and itches, and therefore were driven out of Egypt by force, lest they should corrupt the rest with their infection. This forged surmise had ancient Authors to rest upon, and is as likely to proceed from the Egyptians themselves, a proud and haughty people, as from any other; who being ashamed of the plagues that were sent among them, and inflicted among them, and desirous to blot out the memory of the reproach of their nation, and of the vengeance of eternal God, turned the judgment of scabs & blisters that fell upon thē, from themselves, to the people of Israel, as if they had infected them, & were for that cause compelled to banish them out of Egypt, lest they should corrupt the whole country with their maladies. But if this had been the true reason of their departure, why did they retain them so long among them, and in the end, bestow upon thē silver and gold, jewels and precious stones, thereby spoiling themselves to enrich their enemies? or why did they persecute them with such hatred at the red sea, that themselves were drowned? Furthermore, among y^e curses that God denounceth to bring vpō his people for the contempt of his word, & disobedience to his laws, he threateneth to smite them with the botch of Egypt, and with the hemroids, and with the scabbes, and with the itch, whereof they should not be healed.

Lastly, if the people of God had been haunted and vexed with any such filthy diseases, the Lord would never have established such sharp and severe laws among them, the like whereof were not to be found among foreign nations, whereby such were separated from the company of men, as had any loathsome and noisome ulcers and sicknesses following them: yea, if any suspicion did arise, they were severed and sundered from the rest for a time, until the truth were thoroughly known, and found out, as appeareth at large in the book of Leviticus.

[Verse 2. Command the children of Israel that they put out, &c.] Here we have a plain and express commandment of God, charging Moses to put out lepers & unclean persons from the Congregation. The Apostle Paul speaking of fornicators and incestuous persons that were unclean livers, unclean in body and in soul, useth the same word, Put out such from among you, 1 Cor. 5.13. thereby [Doctrine 1] showing what God intended by this Ceremony: the substance whereof teacheth this truth, namely, that obstinate sinners are to be cast out of the Church. All open offenders and unreformed persons by the dreadful and direful sentence of excommunication, as it were by the two edged sword of God, are to be cut off from the fellowship of the Church, and from all the privileges that belong unto the faithful. This ordinance of God hath good ground upon the separation mentioned in this place, which was not commanded as a civil policy to keep the whole from the sick, but as a part of Ecclesiastical discipline, inasmuch as the Priests the sons of Aaron had the whole knowledge of the cause, as well the shutting of them out, as the receiving of them into the host, as we shown by sundry examples before. There are that draw the original of this Church-censure even from Adam, whom the Lord cast out of Eden, and set an Angel at the entry of the garden, who by shaking the blade of a glistering sword, feared him from re-entering, and suffered him not to touch or taste of that tree which was a Sacrament of life unto him. The like do the Hebrew interpreters observe touching Cain, whom the Lord cast out and banished from the face of God, as the lepers were cast out of the fellowship of men. For what else is the face of God, but the place appointed for his worship, where he was wont to appear to the Fathers, and where Adam and his family met together to serve him and to sacrifice unto him? And all this was before the law, when the sons of God were manifestly distinguished from the sons of men, Gen: 6.1. In the time of the Law, we have many ceremonies to this purpose. We see that the unclean were kept from coming to the Tabernacle, from entering into the Temple, from the partaking of the sacrifices, and from eating the Passover. So in another place, the Lord threateneth, that he shall be cut off from his people, that being unclean eateth of his sacrifice, and that the sacrifice shall profit him nothing, nor be accounted to him to take away his sin, but that it shall remain upon his own head. These are no obscure types & dark shadows, but lively pictures and patterns that represent unto us y^e nature of excommunication. Let us come to the New Testament. The use of the keys to open and shut, and the words of binding and loosing, come directly to this purpose. And as this truth is taught by precept, so it is farther enlarged and warranted by sundry examples. Abraham is commanded to cast out the bond woman & her son, out of his family which was the Church. Hymenaeus and Alexander, concerning the faith made shipwreck, & are delivered up unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme. The Apostle commandeth the Church of the Corinthians to purge out the old leaven, that is, as it is expounded afterward in plain words, put away from yourselves that wicked person. Wherein he alludeth to the law of Moses: such as were to eat of the Passover, were bidden to put leaven out of their houses, and to provide that no leavened bread were found among them. The Israelites were not to kill the Passover, before they had rid their houses of it. It was not enough for them, not to use, or not to touch leavened bread, but they were charged to remove it from them, and then they should be sure not to be partakers of it, nor to be tempted by it, to eat thereof. To these evident proofs, it were easy to add sundry other, but these are sufficient to show unto us, that open and obstinate sinners are not to be fostered in the Church, but to be put out of it.

The reasons hereof are diverse, and that in [Reason 1] diverse respects, both in respect of God, and in respect of the Church, and in respect of the offenders themselves. First, it would be reproachful to God and his son Jesus Christ, if they that lead a wicked and wretched life should be admitted freely to his Table, as if his people were a company or conspiracy of profane persons: whereas the Church is the body of Christ. If then his body should consist of such filthy loathsome & stinking members, the reproach of it, would redownd unto the head. The Apostle telleth the Jews that the Name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through them. If then wicked men should be suffered and cherished in the Church, the enemies of the Gospel, would take occasion thereby to blaspheme the Name of God, as if the Christian faith did either make men wicked, or did wink at wickedness, or did encourage them to live wickedly.

Secondly, by continual company with the [Reason 2] wicked, the godly are corrupted. We are all prone to evil, as Adam to lay hand on the forbidden fruit, we are ready to go out of the way: and when we have evil examples before our eyes, we soon take the occasion that is offered, as when fire and to we come together.

This reason is urged by the Apostle, 1 Cor. 5, 6, 7, 11. Your rejoicing is not good: know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? There is danger to the rest of the Church to retain among them evil men. It is a means to spread sin abroad into every part, until the whole body become abominable, and therefore it is better that one member be cut off, then that the whole body of the Church should perish. The offender then is to bear the punishment of his sin, that the rest may be kept from sinning.

Thirdly, they are to be cut off, to the ende [Reason 3] that such as are wicked livers, may begin to be ashamed of themselves and their wickedness. It is profitable to themselves, that their ungodliness should be punished, that they by the feeling of God's chastisement may awake out of their sleep, who, by sufferance & winking at their sin, would grow more obstinate. This is the reason set down by the Apostle in many places. The incestuous person, that had committed such fornication as is not so much as named among the Gentiles, must be barred and banished from the city of God, and delivered unto Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the Spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus, 1, Cor. 5, 5. We must have no company with scandalous livers, that they may be ashamed. In like manner also heretics must be proceeded against, and cast out by the highest censure, that they may learn not to blaspheme.

Before we come to the uses, let us answer [Objection 1] a few objections, thereby to clear this point which hath been gainsaid and contradicted by many. First, there is objected against it, the Parable of Christ, Math. 13, 30. touching the tares, where the householder commandeth his servants to suffer the tares and wheat to grow together until the harvest, that is, the end of the world, verse 39. then shall the tares be gathered and bound in bundles to be burned, but the wheat shall be gathered into the barn. This they expound, as if Christ should command the Ministers not to excommunicate any of the wicked, but to tolerate them together with the godly. But this were to make Christ to speak with two tongues, and to utter things contrary one to another: for in the 18. chapter of that Gospel, he doth expressly command it to be practiced. Besides, we are not to sift every part of a Parable, but to mark the scope. Now, his purpose is not to set down the duty of the Ministers, but to comfort all the servants of God, when they behold public scandals and open offenses everywhere to arise, even in the midst of the Church, so that it cannot be clean purged; forasmuch as in the end it shall come to pass, that albeit notorious sins break out as ulcers in a body, yet all stumbling blocks shall be removed and taken out of the way, and all that work iniquity shall be cast into hell. This is it that he teacheth, chap. 18, 7. Woe to the world, because of offenses: for it must needs be that offenses come, but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh. And the Apostle saith, There must be heresies, that they which are approved, may be made manifest, 1 Cor. 11, 19. Here the faithful and hypocrites are mingled together in the Church, as wheat and chaff in the floor, and as good fish and bad in the net. When we see this, we ought not to be discouraged, but rather labor that we may be good Corn, fit to be gathered into the Lord's Garner, when he shall send his Angels to gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; then he shall cast them into a furnace of fire, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, Math. 13, 41, 42. That this is the drift of Christ, and the meaning of the Parable, appeareth by the interpretation that is given of it in that place, wherein he maketh no mention at all of those servants which are supposed to represent the Ministers: which, if it had been as these would infer, he would not have left out. But he insisteth chiefly and principally upon this, that when all things shall be dissolved, all offenses and offenders shall be gathered together, and cast as it were one bundle into hell. They then are deceived, that think it is not necessary to purge out the great and gross offenders. The Church is the City of God, excommunication is the sword: it is the School of Christ, this is the rod, as the Apostle calleth it: it is the Temple of God, this is as it were the whip, to scourge out such as abuse it & themselves: it is the body of Christ, this is as a medicine to cure the diseases of it: it is the vine and sheepfold, this serveth to keep the foxes and wolves from it.

Secondly, some object that it is not needful [Objection 2] under a Christian Magistrate, who is charged to punish such as live dissolutely and disorderously, inasmuch as he beareth not the sword in vain, Rom. 13. It belongeth unto him to take away life or limb, according to the nature and quality of the offense. What place then is there for excommunication and Ecclesiastical judgments? I answer, [Answer.] Christ hath settled this as a perpetual order in the Church, Math. 18, 17. If he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the Church: but if he neglect to hear the Church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man, and a Publican. Where, alluding to the custom of the Jewish Church, he showeth also, that the Christian Church cannot want this spiritual jurisdiction. These thē are not contrary, they stand well together, neither doth the one hinder or overthrow the other. Neither are we to think, that Christ pointeth out the civil Magistrate, when he saith, Tell the Church: as some suppose, but an Ecclesiastical Senate. Neither doth he mean when he saith, Except he hear the Church, let him be to thee as an heathen or a Publican, except he hear the Magistrate that is of the same faith and religion with thee, thou mayest go to law with him, as if he were an heathē or Publican, and have him before the Roman Magistrate that is profane. For Christ speaketh not only to the Jews that then lived, but giveth a remedy to be used at all times. The promise that followeth, whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, &c. belongeth not to one time, or to one place, or to one people, nor to the civil Magistrate, nor to civil wrongs; but pertaineth to the conscience, and had been impertinently & improperly added, if Christ had spoken of seeking civil remedy, against civil harms and injuries: which will farther appear by the reasons following.

First, if by the word Church, the civil Magistrate were to be understood, then y^e words concurring in the text touching binding and loosing, and used elsewhere to the same effect touching opening and shutting, remitting & retaining of sins, showing the Churches power, do not signify spiritual power, but civil: but they do not so signify, neither were ever so understood of any until our times.

Secondly, the authority here spoken of was such, as the Disciples present should sometimes in person exercise and execute, for so Christ saith unto them, verse 18. Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven, & whatsoever ye loose in earth, shall be loosed in heaven. But these exercised not civil power, but spiritual jurisdiction: therefore this authority here spoken of, was spiritual, not civil.

Thirdly, Christ's words are in this place imperatiue, Tell the Church. Whosoever saith that these words are but permissiue, only suffering men so to do, and not imperatiue, enioyning the same, he goeth against the letter of the text and propriety of the words. But Christ commandeth no man to prosecute his brother civilly offending him, before the civil Magistrate. He commandeth to forgive him and to be ready to take another injury, rather then in law to pursue him, Math. 5, 40. Therefore, this action here in this sort enjoined and required at the offended brothers hands, in that Christ saith unto him, Tell the Church, is not a civil action, but must needs be a spiritual duty, whereby the offenders soul (abiding in sin, and so in danger to be lost) is to be recovered, if it may be by this means.

Fourthly, the ground and matter of this action (whereupon the whole is inferred) is not civil, for then it should more fitly have been named, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, an injury: but here it is not so called, but it hath the express name of 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, sin. Therefore the remedy also is spiritual, and the means to bring it to pass.

Likewise, he teacheth a little before of offenses spiritual, and of the cure of them: then he showeth our duty of seeking and recovering even one brother going astray, comparing this to the seeking and recovering of a lost Sheep straying from the flock in the wilderness, which also is a spiritual affaire and business. These things being thus laid together, with the words immediately following, and both compared together; there is no show of reason, why it should not concern the same matter with the former, there being still one coherence and knitting up of the argument, and that most fitly in this discourse.

Lastly, Christ was no civil Lawyer, neither set any civil Courts and courses of law, neither was this his calling. But this was his office, to give order for his Church, and to establish the government thereof. Neither was there any special occasion to speak of civil going to law: here was no question put to him concerning any such matter, so that he should thus have answered nothing to the purpose. Wherefore, by these particular considerations we may conclude, that to take the word Church for a company of civil Magistrates, using civil, not spiritual authority, for a bench of Iusticers, or a Senate of Magistrates, hath no approbation of any author. In profane writers, it signifieth a whole ordinary assembly of people met together for ordering civil affairs, guided therein by some Magistrate. They then are very much deceived, that take the word in a civil sense, & understand it of civil proceedings.

Again, when the Apostle, speaking of the incestuous person, willeth him to be delivered to Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, they expound it of an extraordinary punishment inflicted upon him by the devil, whereby he tormented his body. Such a miraculous punishment was laid upon Ananias and Sapphira by Peter, and upon Elymas by Paul. But this is not the right interpretation & true exposition of this place. For albeit God oftentimes use the devil as his instrument, both to chastise his children, as we see in Job, and to punish the ungodly, as we see in Saul, so that the power of Satan is the power of God; yet this is not intended by the Apostle, as appeareth by the circumstances which may be observed in this chapter.

For first, he reproveth the Corinthians, that they had cherished a most wicked man among them, and had not long before put him out, as verse 2. Ye are puffed up: but he did not, neither could he reprove them, because they had not wrought a miracle, because the gift which Peter and Paul had as the Apostles of Christ, was not common to every Christian, nor to all Churches: therefore he reproveth them because they neglected an ordinary duty.

Secondly, he commandeth them that themselves should take him away, saying, Put him out from among you: but it had been unreasonable to require a miracle at their hands, which he knew they were not able to work.

Thirdly, if he had intended such a miraculous action as they performed against hypocrites and enemies of the truth, what need had there been of a solemn assembly and consent of the Church? But in putting of him out, the Congregation had an interest, ver. 4. When ye are gathered together; &c: my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Fourthly, this appeareth also by the end for which he was to be delivered to Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus; that is, that he may repent of his wickedness in this life, and so be saved in the life to come. This also is noted to be the end wherefore he delivered Hymenaeus and Alexander to Satan, that they might learn not to blaspheme, that is, y^t they might renounce their heresies, and embrace the true faith, and so repent of their former impiety and iniquity. Therefore he would not have him smitten with sudden death, and taken out of this life, and so the time and gift of repentance to be cut off from him.

Fifthly, what it is to deliver to Satan, and to take away, the Apostle expresseth in other places; keep not company with them, with such eat not, purge out the old leaven, that they may blush and be ashamed, & so amend their evil ways.

Sixthly, if this had been meant of such extraordinary punishments, the Apostle might have done this by his Apostolical authority, and needed not to have troubled the whole Church with it.

Seventhly, that which the Apostle here commanded, the Church no doubt practiced: but they did not take him away out of this world by any miracle, neither delivered him to be possessed and punished bodily by the devil, but rather proceeded against him with the censures of the Church, as appeareth in the second Epistle, where he willeth them to comfort him being afflicted, to receive him being penitent, and to cure him being wounded.

Lastly, if he had willed them to kill him, he had willed them to rush into the Magistrates seat, which he would never do: for this is proper to the Magistrate alone that beareth the sword. Seeing therefore we have the commandment of Christ, and the practice of the Apostle, to warrant the sentence of excommunication, there shall always be place for it in the Church, even where the Christian Magistrate is settled & established. Paul would have them assemble together in the Name of Christ, that is, by his will & commandment: and afterward he showeth that the Churches office is to judge them that are within, albeit the Magistrate have a sword put into his hand by the ordinance of GOD. What then? There is a twofold sword, material, and spiritual; he taketh up the material sword, and striketh with it. The Church handleth the spiritual sword, which is the word of God: so that the Magistrate taketh away the wicked one way, the Church another way. The Magistrate killeth and taketh away life, if the cause require: the Church meddleth not with corporal punishment and shedding of blood. The Magistrate proceedeth directly according to the Laws against offenders, albeit they repent; because he respecteth the execution of justice, and the revenge of the dishonor done to God: The Church proceedeth not in that order, but observeth the degrees appointed by Christ, If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between him and thee alone, &c: and if the offenders repent, they are ready to forgive thē. For this is the mark wherewith excommunication aimeth, and the end whereto it tendeth, y^t the sinners being ashamed, may be brought to repentance, & that such as live in the church might not be corrupted, forasmuch as a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump.

Lastly, it may be said that we should rather [Objection 3] labor how and which way to bring more into the Church, then to exclude any out of the Church. Men are ready to go fa^{••} enough out of it, but they return slow enough to it. We are to endeavor to call men to the Sacraments, w^c are encouragements to godliness, rather than to keep them frō them for their wickedness. It is a sign we lack charity toward them, when we hide from them that which should do them good. I answer, [Answer.] it is our duty to do both of them, to wit, both to encourage them to godliness, and yet to keep them from them so long as they lie in open wickedness not repented of: not the first without the latter, nor the latter without the first, lest we be compelled to give that which is holy to dogs. Did the Lord himself want charity toward Adam, whē he sent him forth from the Garden of Eden, lest he put forth his hand and take also of the Tree of life, and eat, & live forever? The Sacraments of God cannot profit or help wicked men. The Supper of the Lord is only available and comfortable unto them which come worthily, to wit, with true repentance, with sound faith, and with unfeigned charity: touching others, it turneth to greater judgment and condemnation. This doth the Apostle teach, 1 Corin. 11, 27. Whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. Is it not a work of charity to stay his course that is running into danger, and like to hurt himself? to hinder our brother from such an action as that he eateth judgment to himself, and maketh himself guilty of horrible sin? This were a strange kind of charity, to suffer a man to thrust himself through with his sword, or to cast himself down headlong from a steep Rock, when we may hinder him from so doing. The Apostle Jude giveth us other direction in his Epistle, that we should have compassion of some making a difference, and others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire. Wherefore, there is no wrong done to impenitent persons, if they be excommunicated, and consequently barred from the Supper: but rather a great benefit is bestowed upon them, and their salvation furthered by this means. Neither let any say, [Object.] that the Church usurpeth upon the Magistrate, and taketh from him his office. For if this were a good reason, [Answer.] it was never lawful, neither ever shall be, for the Church to excommunicate any offenders: because it belongeth to the Magistrate as his duty to punish offenses, whether he be a Christian, or no Christian. How then is it, that we take away this authority from the Church, in the time of a Christian Magistrate, and yield it to the Church when a wicked Magistrate is set over it, forasmuch as there is like reason and office of them both? If it be farther objected, [Objection.] that there are some sins which an evil Magistrate will not meddle withal, as blasphemy against Christ, heresy, and such like, as Gallio the Deputy of Achaia, accounteth the mystery of religion concerning Christ, a question of words and names, and professeth, he will be no Judge of such matters; whereas, if it were a matter of wrong, he would hear thē, Acts 18, 15. Wherefore, under a wicked and idolatrous Magistrate, excommunication may be used, not otherwise. I answer, [Answer.] from the lawfulness of it under a Magistrate that is no Christian, we cannot conclude the unlawfulness of it under a Christian Magistrate: for this is no good consequent, neither is it a sufficient cause against the express commandment and institution of Christ. The cause of the institution of excommunication is not the punishment of sin, but the salvation of a sinner, the edifying of the Church, and the glory of God. But the scope of the civil Magistrate and his office, is to punish sin, and respecteth not either the salvation or damnation of the sinner, so that albeit he repent, yet he spareth him not, but suffereth the law to proceed against him. The Church according to the doctrine of Christ, smiteth none with the spiritual sword, but such as are impenitent; and doth not this unto death, but unto life, and therefore receiveth them that repent. Again, the manner that they both use in correction is diverse: the Church correcteth by the word, the Magistrate by the sword, or such like outward punishment. To conclude this point, the use of excommunication ought to be perpetual in the Church, whether it have a Christian Magistrate or not, whether he do his duty, or do it not. For first, the doctrine of reprovng our brother between us and him alone, as also of taking two or three witnesses, ought to remain in the church and have continual use, whether the Magistrate be a Christian or Pagan. Therefore that also which followeth, If he hear not the Church, let him be to thee as an heathen or a Publican, whereby the doctrine of excommunication is established, ought to be perpetual. If one part of this discipline stand in force at all times, then doth the other also, forasmuch as Christ maketh no exception between the one and the other. Again, it is lawful for the Church, whether the Magistrate be a Christian or no Christian, to loose them that are bound, and to receive into the Church such as are cast out for their contumacy and continuance in sin, when once they repent. Therefore also it is lawful to cast out, and to bind those that are impenitent: and as the first is always ratified in heaven, so also is the latter. For Christ without any difference or distinction gave both these iurisdictions & authorities to y^e church, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven, Mat. 18, 18.

Lastly, where the causes of the Law are perpetual & universal, there the law must also be acknowledged to be perpetual and universal. But the causes of this power of the church, are perpetual & universal, as first the commandment of Christ, Mat. 18, 18. 1 Cor. 5, 5. Secondly, that obstinate sinners being made ashamed, may be brought to repentance. Thirdly, that no others should be infected by their evil life and corrupt example. Fourthly, because it is the ordinary office of the Church to judge them that are within. Therefore, the Church hath this authority, when it hath Christian Magistrates, as well as when it is without them.

Thus far touching the removing of objections. [Use 1] The doctrine being cleared from all doubts that might distract us, let us now come to the uses. And seeing there ought to be excommunication of scandalous and impenitent offenders, it should move us to enquire and learn what excommunication is, not as it is commonly used, but as it ought rightly to be practiced, to the end we may esteem of this censure and sentence, and stand in fear of it: Excommunication therefore is a sentence of the Church, whereby a member thereof, convicted of some grievous crime, and by no means brought to repentance, is driven out of the Church, and cut off from the communion and fellowship of the faithful, that thereby he may be driven to repentance. This description consisteth of diverse parts: first, it is a sentence of the Church: secondly, it must be executed upon him that is a member of the Church. Thirdly, the party delinquent must be convicted of some grievous crime or crimes. Fourthly, it stretcheth to him that cannot be otherwise brought to repentance. Fifthly, he is driven from the visible and outward communion of the Saints. Lastly, the end or use of it, is to make him ashamed that hath offended. These six several points touched before in the former description, have evident confirmation out of the word of God, which I will briefly prove, and then make use of every particular.

First, I say, that excommunication is a sentence of the Church. Our Savior commandeth to tell the Church, Math. 18, 17. Loe here, to whom he sendeth us. Again, he saith, If he hear not the Church, &c. So the Apostle speaketh, 1 Cor. 5, 4. When ye are gathered together in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ; From hence we learn sundry points: first, such as are themselves out of the Church, and no true parts of it, have nothing to do with it. They have no authority committed unto them, and therefore whatsoever they shall do in this behalf, is of no force, and no better then a sword in a mad man's hand. The keys of the Kingdom of heaven are committed to the Apostles, and to their successors by Christ himself, that they should open the gates of heaven to the penitent and believers, & shut the gates of hell: on the other side, open hell to receive the impenitent, and shut up heaven against them.
