Secondly, we are taught from hence, the honor and dignity of the Ministry, how great it is, to bind and loose offenders, to open and shut heaven, to remit and retain sins: so that it belongeth not to private persons. It is accounted, and most worthily, a miracle to be wondered at, that Elias did by his prayer shut up heaven, that it rained not on the earth; and again opened it, so that the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit. But this power of the Ministry is more marvelous, inasmuch as he brought only a temporal punishment of famine upon the land, but they inflict an everlasting judgment upon the unbelievers and impenitent persons. Great is the authority of Princes and Rulers of the earth. They may banish from their kingdoms such as are offenders, but they cannot banish and exclude any from the kingdom of God. They may bind the hands and feet of the body, but they have no power to bind the soul and conscience. The Magistrate may say, Take his body; but the Minister may say, Let him be delivered to Satan.

Lastly, we see from hence, that those Churches are deceived, that cast from them this holy ordinance of Christ Jesus: they are as a body subject to many diseases, yet want a sovereign medicine to cure them. For albeit they have the Christian Magistrate to assist them, and to resist evils: yet his judgment is external, not internal: he may punish, he cannot amend and reform. Every Church therefore ought to have this remedy, to take away evil out of Israel.

The second point in the description of excommunication is, that it must be executed upon him that is a member of the Church. For as it is the sentence of the Church, so it extendeth only to such persons as are professors in the visible Church, and have given their names to Christ, and submitted themselves to the doctrine and discipline thereof. This is expressly grounded upon the words of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 5, 11, 12. If any that is called a brother, be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a drunkard, &c: with such a one eat not. For what have I to do to judge them also that are without? Do not ye judge them that are within? In like manner, Christ in the Gospel prescribing this spiritual physic to recover dangerous sinners, saith, If thy brother trespass against thee.

From hence we learn, what person is to be excommunicated, to wit, such an one as was called our brother, and registered in the number of the children of the church. For how can he be excommunicated, that is, cast out of the communion, who never was in the communion? Wherefore it belongeth nothing at all to those that are out of the church, as Turks, Persians, Jews, Pagans, and other Infidels, that were never baptized in the name of the holy Trinity, neither had entrance into the church. This censure concerneth such as are reckoned among brethren, and not accounted strangers from the faith, and aliens from the Common-wealth of Israel. Hence it is, that when Paul had written in an Epistle to the Corinthians, that they should not keep company with fornicators, lest they should think he wrote this of all the fornicators of this world, he expoundeth himself, that he understood it not of all wicked persons in general, for then they must needs go out of the world, but of such as were members of the church, and would needs be called brethren. These are they that give scandal to the enemies of God and his Gospel: through them the Name of God is blasphemed, the church is contemned & slandered, the word is reviled, the weak are offended, and the rest of the parts infected, and therefore deserve worthily to be excommunicated. The church taketh care of all her children, she is as a careful mother and tender Nurse that hath promised to bring them up, & to see them rightly ordered and governed, and therefore ought to use all good means for their recovery, that their spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord.

Again, we are put in mind hereby of the folly and corrupt dealing of the Church of Rome, who directly cross the doctrine of the Apostle, and set themselves in the place and seat of God. For as they have defiled the most holy ordinances of God, the word, prayer, sacraments, and worship of God, so they have horribly abused the institution of excommunication, as we shall see farther afterward. The truth is, they have nothing to do with excommunication, they are fallen from grace, they have denied the faith, they have defiled themselves with Idols, they will not have Christ's righteousness imputed unto thē, they set up their own works, & seek justification by thē, they will not receive Christ to be their only King and Priest, they will merit salvation for themselves, and therefore they are not a true, but a false Church. But excommunication is the Churches right, it is none of theirs, that are not the Church: so that albeit they curse us and banne us every year, yet it hurteth us not, forasmuch as the curse that is causeless, shall not come. But suppose they were the true Church, and we out of the Church, (who hold all that refuse to be subject to the Popes supremacy, to be no Church at all) how cometh it to pass that they dare excommunicate us, who never were of their communion, and do not belong to their jurisdiction? They teach, we are out of the bosom of the Church; and Paul affirmeth, that the Church is not to judge them that are without: they are therefore abusers and profaners of this ordinance, even by their own confession. Let them either admit us to be parts of the true Church, or else remit us to the judgment seat of God, who judgeth them that are without. For as a Prince draweth out the sword against none but his own subjects, so is this censure to be drawn out against none but such as are subject unto it; that is, the Church. If the Church proceed any farther, it may be said unto it, Who made thee a Judge and Ruler over them?

Lastly, let not ungodly persons & atheists that are out of the Church, be encouraged hereby to continue in sin, neither let any envy their freedom and liberty, because they are not to be touched with Church-censures: but rather let them consider that they shall not escape scotfree; they have God the Father, high possessor of heaven and earth, a sharp and severe Judge against them and all their evil deeds: for thē that are without, God judgeth, who will give to everyone according to his deserts. Thus much of the second point.

Let us go forward in the description. The third thing necessary to be observed in excommunication, is, that the person offending be convicted of some grievous & heinous crime either against the first or second Table of the law. Hence it is, that the Apostle nameth, not only whoremongers, covetous, drunkards, railers, and extortioners, but also idolaters: so that as well heretics and worshippers of Images, sorcerers and enchanterers, and such like brethren, as drunkards and adulterers, are to be excommunicated. In like manner, Christ himself expresseth not the several kinds of sins, for which the brother that offendeth, is to be excommunicated, but contenteth himself to say only in general, If thy brother trespass against thee. So the Apostle Paul teacheth, Tit. 3.10. A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition, reject. Hereby then we see, that a man is not to be excommunicated and put out of the Church for every trifle, or for every sin, but for scandals and offenses that are notorious. A master will not discharge out of his house a servant that hath served him, for every trespass: neither doth the Magistrate draw the sword for every breach of the law. So ought it to be with the officers of the Church. Again, excommunication must not be used at the first, but as the last remedy. A Chirurgeon accounteth lancing, searing, & cutting, a desperate cure. When he cometh to his patient, and findeth swelling and soars in the body, he doth not by and by proceed to cutting off an arm or leg: he useth first purging and other gentle means to try whether he can do any good that way or not. So should it be with us, according to the counsel and commandment of Christ, he requireth private admonitions & exhortations, private reproofs and rebukes: and then two or three with us, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. There is required of us, patience and much lenity, waiting whether he will by this means be amended. Lastly, we may gather from hence, that whiles sin is secret and unknown, no man can be excommunicated: but then only when it is made public and manifest unto all. Now then it is made public, when the Church is acquainted with it.

The fourth point in excommunication, is this, that it stretcheth to him only that cannot otherwise be brought to repentance. The cause then, why the church is compelled to proceed so far against some of her children, is, obstinacy & impenitēcy. For when there is in such offenders, both open wickedness, whereby the Church is offended; & notable stubbornenes, whereby the church is contemned, so that they can by no means of the word publicly, & of y^e admonitiō privately, be reformed, excommunication must follow of necessity, that hereby (if it be possible) some good may be wrought in them. Hereupon Christ himself saith, If he neglect to hear the Church, let him be unto thee as an heathen, or a Publican, Mat. 18, 17. Such therefore as have offended, and truly repent of their sins, giving evident testimonies of their unfeigned conversion, ought to be spared, & not censured: to be comforted, not terrified: to be retained in the church, not rejected & cast out of the Church. Secondly, this showeth that impenitency is a most grievous sin, and next to infidelity the greatest. For as faith is the mother of repentance, so is an unbelieving heart the cause of impenitency. Of all judgments that God bringeth upon the sons of men, none is greater then the want of repentance, to have an heart that cannot repent. To fall into whoredom & drunkenness are grievous sins, and wound the conscience, & weaken our comfort and assurance: howbeit to continue in them without feeling of them and turning from them, is worse then the committing of the sins themselves. This made the Apostle say, Despisest thou the riches of his goodness, and forbearing, and long suffering, not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance? But after thine hardness and impenitent heart, thou treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God. Among all the blessings of God given unto us, we must make great account of a soft and tender heart, which the Prophet calleth an heart of flesh, opposed and set against the stony heart. Such are soon checked and controlled. Lastly, we learn from hence to make a difference between sin and sin, and between sinner and sinner. All men fall into sin, and if we say, we have no sin, we deceive our selves, and make God a liar. Nevertheless, some are penitent sinners, they hate their sins, and do with might and main strive against them. They fight against them as against their enemies. Others, cherish sin in themselves, and are resolved to continue in them. They make no conscience of them, and cannot be brought to repent for them. Such are not fit to be held members of Christ, and Citizens of the kingdom of heaven, & therefore justly deserve to be cast out of the church.

The fifth point containeth and includeth in it the substance of excommunication, namely, that it driveth impenitent offenders from the visible and outward communion of the Saints from whence also it hath his name. Open sinners and scandalous livers are not worthy to live among the faithful, nor to come to public prayers, nor to be partakers of the Sacraments, nor to be admitted to the assemblies of the Church; forasmuch as they would profane all they touch, as Adam, the tree of life, and therefore was driven out of the garden. Hence it is, that Christ would have us account them as heathen and Publican's. The Gentiles for religions sake were enemies to the church, and therefore in religion the Jews were to abstain from their society & fellowship, whereas in common affairs of this life they were not so restrained. The Publican's were such as had received an office from the Romans (to whom the Jews were subject) to gathet tribute, being as it were Collectors of subsidies, tasks, and tallages impoled upon the Jews, who thought it unfit and unjust that they being the Lord's people, should pay tribute and custom to the Gentiles, as appeareth in the history of Hezekiah, and of Ioachim in the books of the Kings, and by the question propounded unto Christ in the Gospel, Is it lawful to give tribute unto Caesar, or not? Wherefore they were accounted the enemies of the people, and the betrayers of their own Nation, they coupled them with sinners, and hated thē unto the death, albeit they professed the same religion, and oftentimes met together in the place of God's worship. They abhorred these, and could by no means brook & abide these men, who for the most part were extreme covetous and catch-polles, exacting more then was due for them to receive, or the people to pay: howbeit they hated them not as the enemies of their religion, but as men of a wicked & offensive life. The Apostle likewise decreeing and determining what should be done with the incestuous person, willeth the church to deliver him to Satan, to purge out the old leavē, and to put away from among themselves that wicked person. Heereby then we see, that these obstinate offenders are to be separated frō those good things which the Lord commandeth & communicateth in his church, as the word, sacraments, & prayers. These are holy things for holy and sanctified persons; but they are as filthy swine, to whom holy things may not be cast, and as dogs, to whom the children's bread doth not belong. Now one of the chiefest ends of the censures of the Church, is to preserve holy things in their purity, and to deliver them, as much as may be, from contempt. [Objection.] If it be said, the word is the ordinary means of salvation; if then they be denied the word, they be barred from the means of repentance. I answer, [Answer.] these are such as the bare word can work no good upon, and therefore they are unworthy of it: except peradventure when some part of the Scripture is expounded, and such doctrine delivered, as by all probability and likelihood may serve to bring them to repentance. To admit of them at such times, may seem not altogether unprofitable, as for example, when the Minister shall have or take occasion to handle excommunication, and to show what a fearful thing it is to be cast out of the Church, and to be delivered to Satan, the enemy of mankind, and to become his bondslave. Besides, they want not altogether the means of repentance, seeing they are privately to be admonished, not to be hated and counted as enemies, but everyone is to labor their conversion. This appeareth farther in these four points. First, we must love the persons of the excommunicate in the Lord, and thirst after their souls health. Secondly, it is our duty to exhort and rebuke them, so that albeit we love them, we must take heed we do not flatter them, and so harden them in their sins. Thirdly, we are bound to pray for those that are bound by the Church censures. We are not to pray with him, but it is required of us to pray for him, that God would open his eyes & turn his heart. Lastly, we are to assure him, that upon his repentance we are ready to embrace him and to receive him as a brother: forasmuch as there is joy in heaven for one sinner that converteth. Again, it teacheth us to avoid the conversation of such as are cast out of the Church, so far as we can, & are not by some necessary duty as by a band or chain tied unto them, as we shall farther declare afterward. To be familiar with such, giveth thē encouragement to continue in that dangerous and damnable estate. Lastly, we see it is the duty of the Church, to purge it of such offenders, as a corrupt body of gross and superfluous humors. We see in the time of the Law, they had in the Tabernacle, not only the Candlesticks and the Lamps, to give light: but also pots, pannes, shouels, beesoms, snuffers, snuff-dishes, & such like vessels and instruments as served to carry and conuay away all filth and uncleanness from the place of assembly of the Congregation.

The Lord will have the dross taken from the silver, that there may come forth a vessel for the finer: neither will he have any root that bringeth forth gall and wormwood to be among his people.

Now we are come to the last, but not the least point to be observed in excommunication, which is, that the principal scope and end of it, is the salvation and recovery of the offender, and the bringing of him out of the wilderness into the sheepfold of Christ, frō which he wandered and went astray. By his repentance the knot is loosed, which before was strongly tied. It is a medicine, bitter indeed, but wholesome: unpleasant to the flesh, but profitable to the soul; as an hot iron that seareth and putteth to pain, but it tendeth to health: it worketh sorrow, but it is the godly sorrow that causeth repentance not to be repented of. The Apostle showeth this at large in his second Epistle to the Corinthians, speaking of the fruit of the excommunication of the incestuous person, it wrought many worthy effects of true repentance; he was ashamed of himself and of his sin, he had sorrowed greatly for it, and was very near to desperation, so that he willeth them to forgive him, to comfort him, to love him, and to receive him again as a Christian brother. Let no man therefore condemn this censure, or open his mouth against this ordinance of God, so souereigne, so profitable, so necessary: forasmuch as the Church casteth them out for a season, that it may receive thē again forever. Secondly, let no man condemn such persons as stand excommunicated; though we cannot admit of them as Christian brethren, yet they are natural brethren, & may belong to God's eternal election. The incestuous Corinthian was judged of many, and put out of the society of the Church; yet he was brought to repentance, & laid hold of the promises of the Gospel. We have this notable example commended unto us, that we should make good use of it. He suffered a grievous punishment for a grievous offense, but it was only to humble him, and to bring him to see his sin, which otherwise he could not, he would not. Lastly, we see that whatsoever power is given to the Pastors of the Church, is given to edification, and not to destruction, 2 Cor. 10, 8. God intendeth and the Church respecteth the destruction of the flesh, and the mortification of the deeds of the old man, but the salvation of the spirit in the day of the Lord. If then this ordinance work not this saving effect, it cometh through their fault that do abuse and contemn it.

Secondly, seeing obstinate sinners are to [Use 2] be excommunicated, it doth show unto us the fearful estate and condition of such as are justly excommunicated, & cut off from the society of the Church, and from the company & communion of believers. They are dragged as dead carcasses out of a City, that others should not be annoyed with the stench and contagion of them. This may appear unto us by many particulars.

First, they have their names blotted out of the number of the people of God, Gen. 17. Luke 6, 22. This maketh their names to rot, & as dead branches to wither away. No man looketh vpō them but with remembrance of their sin, & with terror and detestation thereof. This is the highest punishment in y^e church, it is as a piercing thunderbolt cast down from heaven upon the heads of dissolute livers and incorrigible persons. What greater honor can there be, then to be the sons and daughters of God, whereby God is made their God? as for others, they are cut off from his protection, they can look for no blessings to come from him, but all plagues and curses to overtake them. This is a misery of all miseries: for as he is the God of his people, so he is a consuming fire to burn up all his enemies. If then we be his people, he loveth us, he defendeth us, he heareth us, he receiveth us, he honoreth us: if not, he hateth us and withdraweth his grace from us, he leaveth us as a prey to our spiritual enemies, and clotheth us with shame as with a garment. For as the Psalmist pronounceth that people blessed, whose God is the Lord: so we may truly affirm on the contrary, Cursed is that soul y^t hath not the Lord for his God. So thē, the excommunicate are contemptible persons, and as it were outcasts, the shame of men and the contempt of the people. They are the sons of the earth, and may worthily blush to have any of God's servants look upon them. They may wander up and down in the night times, like Owls that hate the light, but may be ashamed to come out of their houses in the day. It were happy for thē if no man did know them, or did speak of thē; whereas now they are never remembered without a brand of reproach. All men point at them in the streets, and are ready to hiss them out of their sight. No man regardeth them that regard not the Lord and his law.

Secondly, the sentence that is pronounced on earth, is ratified in heaven. These men think and persuade themselves that they have to do only with men, and so shake it off and set lightly by it, that it might not fit in their conscience: but being justly pronounced against them in the Consistory of men, it is strongly confirmed in the highest Court of Heaven, as Christ testifieth, What soever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven. Let no man therefore diminish his sin and lessen his disobedience, as if it were done only unto men, or published only by the Minister, forasmuch as the Lord verifieth the sentence pronounced by him. For Christ Jesus is the Author of it, 1 Corinth. chap. 5, ver. 4. the Corinthians being charged to put out from among them him that had offended, must do it in the Name, that is, by the commandment of CHRIST. It is no device & invention of man, for then it might be either contemned, or less esteemed; but it is the sentence of the great Judge, more fearful than the message of death, instituted of him for the recovery of such as are fallen, and he will make all his ordinances available and sufficient to accomplish his will. The end of it is not, to make him that was our friend, to become an enemy: him that was our brother, to become an alliant: him that was in the covenant, to become a stranger to the covenant: but the use of it rather is, when a man is become an enemy, to reconcile him unto us: and when he hath made himself a stranger from the covenant and Church of God, to call him back to an holy communion with us. For the Ministry of the word, and the discipline of the Church, do tend to the salvation of men, as we noted before. If the Ministry of the Gospel fall out to be the savor of death unto death, it is not the proper effect of the Gospel: the fault is in them that perish, and are of old ordained to destruction, 2 Cor. 2, 15, 16. So then, this censure shall not be without his effect one way or other, but shall work either the destruction of the impenitent, or the salvation of the penitent. Seeing therefore God himself ratifieth this solemn sentence, we should stand in fear of it, & take heed we contemn it not. Let it move us unto repentance, being assured that it shall not be in vain. Is not the prisoner afraid of the sentence of the Judge? and when that is published, doth he not cry out for mercy? When the Lyon roareth, do not the beasts of the forest tremble? Let us not therefore be more senseless then the Ox and Ass, then the Horse and Mule that are without understanding, but tremble under the mighty hand of God's chastisement, as the child under the rod, considering, that when the Minister pronounceth the sentence on earth, God denounceth judgment from heaven, and threateneth to perform it to the utmost.

Thirdly, the excommunicate are barred from the Word and Sacraments, and from the prayers of the Church. The word can do them no good, the sacraments would do them hurt, we cannot join with them in prayer, nothing will prevail with them. We cannot bless them & salute them in the Name of the Lord. We pass by them without acknowledging any fellowship or brotherhood with them, neither do they which go by, say, The blessing of the Lord be upon you, we bless you in the Name of the Lord. They are swine that must be kept from the food that God hath prepared and provided for his children. Who doth not account the state of Nebuchadnezzar, most wretched and lamentable, when for his pride and presumption against God, he was driven from the company of men, and did eat grass as Oxen? He that before was fed with the fattest and finest of the wheat, when his heart was lifted up, and his mind hardened, had his glory taken from him, and was deposed from his kingly throne. But the condition of these beasts is worse, they want the food of eternal life, and are fed with husks; they are not suffered to sit at the Lord's Table, nor to be in company with his people. They are as runnagates and fugitiues from the face of God, as Cain. They are possessed in a fearful manner with Satan, as Judas. The Spirit of God is departed from them, and an evil spirit is upon them, and vexeth them as Saul. Their hearts are hardened, and they are turned into stones, as Pharaoh. They are stinking channels and filthy sinks, and are swept away like dung, as the house of Jeroboam. They are most profane, and have sold their birthright, as Esau. They say in their hearts, there is no God, like the foolish atheists. They pray not unto God, and if they should, their prayers are not acceptable, but abominable. All that they do, is rejected and despised, so long as they continue in this estate. If these things were duly considered, as hitherto they have been opened unto us, and that they had eyes to see them, they might be all-sufficient to break their stony and steely hearts in pieces, and to enforce them not to remain one hour in this condition. But behold, yet greater things and more fearful then these.

Fourthly, our Savior teacheth, that they are to be called and accounted as the heathens and Publican's, Mat. 18, 17. We see then, what we must account of them, no otherwise then Christ hath taught us, though they were our wives, or our husbands, or our children, or our servants, or our kinsfolkes, or our friends, they have their names given unto them, they are no better then the heathen and the Publican's. He speaketh in these words according to those times, as if it were said to us for our better understanding: Let him be to thee no longer a Christian brother; let him be no part nor member of the Church; account him no faithful person, but as a Turk or Sarazin. We glory in the name of Christians, but such are not to be held in the number of them, but are as rotten members to be cut and pulled from the body. The heathen had no communion with the Jews, nor the Jews with them in matters of religion. The Publican's were men given over to covetousness, unrighteousness, extortion, oppression, and to all kind of iniquity. If a man should meet them, and tell they are as the Pagans and Paynims, or call them Publican's & sinners, they would scarce endure it, they would be at defiance with him, they would think they had wrong offered unto them. Nevertheless, we hear and cannot be ignorant, what Christ hath pronounced with his own mouth; shall he say, that if these cannot be gained, neither by the private admonition of the brethren, nor by the public warning of the Church, Let him be unto thee as an heathen man, and a Publican: and shall we be afraid to speak as he speaketh, to call them as he calleth, and to name them as he nameth them? These are as true & as fit names for thē, as that which they received at their baptism. If they be ashamed of the names, let them also be ashamed of their sins: and if they scorn to be branded and up braided with them, let them consider the cause which maketh them to deserve them. Wherefore, all excommunicate persons are infamous, and of evil note. Every man must think of them, and speak unto them, as they deserve, that they seeing how others are ashamed of them, may learn at last to be ashamed of themselves.

Fifthly, the Apostle teacheth, that such are to be delivered over to the power of the devil, that they may be known not to be the members of Christ, but limbs of Satan: neither to be heirs of heaven, but inheritors of hell: not under the protection of GOD, but in the power of the Prince of darkness: forasmuch as such as contemn the admonition and reprehension of the Church, have lost the communion of Saints, and are become the bondslaves of the devil. This we see very plainly, 1 Cor. 5, 3, 4, 5. For I verily as absent in body, but present in spirit, have judged already, as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed, In the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, To deliver such a one unto Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, &c. So was Hymenaeus and Alexander delivered unto Satan, that is, cast out of the Church of Christ. The reason of this manner of speaking, is this, because Christ is the head of the Church, and promiseth that he will be our King, and maintain us by his power. Wherefore, whensoever we are cut from the Church, and have Christ no more to be our head, needs must we be laid open and naked as a prey, to the tyranny of Satan. For Christ reigneth among his own, he keepeth his sheep in his fold; such as wander from it, are left to be devoured of the wolves. He speaketh of two persons whom he singleth out for examples sake. We are not so moved with judgments as we ought to be, and therefore it is requisite, that we have some men set before our eyes, that we may consider better of our selves and learn to walk in fear before him, and carefully to take heed to our ways. And if by this separation from the Church, and deliverance to Satan, they be not reformed, yet it shall shut their mouths, and bridle their tongues from speaking evil against God and his truth, and preserve the Church in purity and verity. For to this end he setteth a note of infamy upon them, and brandeth them with a mark in the forehead, (as we see malefactors burned in the hand) that they might no longer be of any credite, either to hinder the salvation of the godly, or to draw the weak to destruction. If any man had the question asked of them, whether they would willingly be delivered over to Satan, to have him their Lord to rule them, their Prince to lead them, their God, to have the whole government of them, they would shake and tremble at the thought of it. For who would openly profess himself to be the servant of such a master? & the bondslave of such a tyrant? Notwithstanding, this refusal and denial in words, all excommunicate persons must know, that while they remain out of the Church as filth cleansed out of the street, or as dung swept out of the house, they are committed to the custody of Satan, as prisoners to a Jailor, who will keep them safe and sure if possibly he can. For who reigneth out of the Church but the devil? The world is his kingdom, and their hearts are his throne, where he sitteth as in a principality. These men, so long as they continue thus separated, cannot be saved; forasmuch as out of the Church there is no salvation, but a fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries.

Sixthly, this also serveth to note out the most fearful and dreadful condition of all excommunicate persons, because, being cast out of one Church, they are banished out of all churches. All are to take them as Gentiles and heathen men, wheresoever they live; all are to shun them, among whomsoever they come. This point also notably showeth the greatness of their punishment, and serveth to add somewhat to the heap of their judgments. When they are cast out of one Church, if they might be received into another, and by changing their dwelling, be admitted as members of y^t Church, it might much mitigate the sharpness of the censure; for that were but as it were to leave one house and betake them to another, as a stranger that is driven out of one chamber, and lodged in another. But it is not so with them. The Churches throughout the world, as loving sisters, do hold communion one with another, whom one receiveth, all do receive: whom one rejecteth, all do reject: and such as have dealt otherwise, have been sharply reprov'd, as were easy to be shown out of sundry Histories, Fathers, and Councils, if it were expedient or necessary. If a servant that belongeth to one certain family, did certainly know, that being cast out from thence, he could be received nowhere beside, it would make him careful to please his master, and fearful to offend him. If a man that hath his dwelling in a house where he is well entertained, did know that if he should be turned out of it, he could be suffered to dwell in no other place, but must wander up and down as a sheep from the sheepest, it would make him make much of that house, and to take heed he were not removed and displaced out of it. Thus should it be with everyone of us; the Church is God's house, and his children are of his family: if we be put out of it, as a servant turned out of service for his misbehavior and misdemeanor, whither shall we go? or who shall receive us? we must say as the disciples did to Christ, To whō shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life, John 6, 68.

The Churches of God have all cast him out, whom one hath cast out: and therefore he is become a member of Satan, and a limb of his Church. For as God hath his Church, so the devil hath his chapel. If we be not parts of the Church of God, we belong to the Synagogue of Satan. It were good therefore that all those that are Church-officers would look to this, and have a great care that no excommunicate persons, such as they hear or know to be excommunicated in other places (as well as those that dwell among themselves) do shroud in themselves as the guests that had not on his wedding garment came unto the feast, Mat. 22, 12. When they are cast out of the Church, and cannot resort to their own parish, they betake themselves to other, being ashamed to be of no Church: albeit so long as they stand in that estate, their hearing and praying are abominable. Let not us therefore harbor any such unruly and disordered persons, who shake off the cords of discipline from their shoulders, & suffer not themselves to be tied with any chains of order and obedience.

Lastly, to these things we might add sundry decrees and constitutions established by human laws and ordinances of Princes; the which albeit they be not instituted of God, and expressed in his word, yet they are not contrary to the word, but serve to add farther strength to these things, and to set forth the horrible and hideous condition of such persons as are put out of the Church: to the end that such as will not be won by a love of the word, may by increasing of the punishment, & as it were by doubling of the strokes, be made to stand in more fear. They are reputed as outcasts and outlaws: we heard before, that they were out of God's protection: now we must understand, that they are out of the Princes protection, and have no benefit by the law. Others shall have actions against thē, but they against none: others may sue them, and recover their right from them, but they can wage law against none. They are not allowed to dispose of their goods, and to make their last will and testament to set their house in order. They are not thought worthy to be witnesses to testify any truth: for whatsoever cometh out of their mouth, is holden either false or suspected. They are not to be buried in Christian burial, but as they are out of the Church in their life, so they should not come near it after their death; and as they would not live among the faithful, so their bodies should not lie among the faithful, nor come into the sepulchers of their fathers, that they might not be honored either dead or alive. Thus standeth the case with these wicked mē, this is the fearful condition of such as are justly excommunicated: they are shut out of y^e Church (where only salvation is to be sought and can be found) as heathens and Turks; they are accounted as dogs and swine, to whō holy and heavenly things do not belong: they have no title or interest to the kingdom of God: they are excluded from Christ, & remain under the subjection of Satan: they have no right in the privileges of the Church: they have not God for their Father: they have not Christ for their Redeemer and Savior: they have not the holy Ghost for their Comforter and Sanctifier: they have not the Church for their mother: they have not the faithful for their brethren: they have not the Angels for their guard: they have not the use of the word and prayer with the Saints: they have no remission of sins, and therefore can look for no resurrection to life and immortal glory: for that they are in worse case then dogs, then swine, then toads, then serpents, while they stand in that heavy state. They are bound on earth, and therefore do remain fast bound in heaven. We have profited well, if we have learned to fear the bloody stroke of this censure, which woundeth deeper then a two edged sword. If any say, how can the Church of God deal thus toward any, [Objection.] which is a loving and tender mother, not an unjust stepmother? I answer, the Church of Christ is not only a tender mother to the obedient, [Answer.] but a sharp executioner against the disobedient, having vengeance committed unto her of God, to correct and punish, nay, without repentance utterly to destroy. Hence it is, that Solomon in his most excellent song, describeth it to be comely as Jerusalem, and terrible as an army: and Psal. 149, 6, 7. Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two edged sword in their hand, to execute vengeance upon the heathen, & punishments upon the people. Hence also it is, that Jude exhorteth the church, in taking pity of some, to save others by fear, pulling them as it were out of the fire. But the Church in those days had no other means to strike any fear into the hearts of stubborn persons, & obstinate offenders, that were as it were firebrands half burnt and consumed, but by this Ecclesiastical punishment. Such are to be cured with mercy & compassion, as sin of ignorance and infirmity: but such as otherwise are incurable, must be terrified & affrighted as it were with the stroke of a thunderbolt, and the flash of a lightening, and the force of a sword, that if it be possible, they may be saved with fear and terror. True it is, the means of fear are two, the one civil, by the power & authority of the Magistrate, who beareth not the sword in vain against offenders, as the Apostle teacheth, If thou do evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain, for he is the Minister of God, a revenger, to execute wrath upon him that doth evil. This means, which is in it self an wholesome preservative, the Church wanted at that time, and therefore it cannot be understood in this place. The other means is spiritual which indeed is y^t which the Apostle: meaneth, respecting the soul, not the body. This is of three sorts, and all of them have their proper time, and place, and use, and object, according to the nature of the offense, and party offending, to wit, admonition, suspension, and excommunication. The first is admonition or exhortation to amendment, which also is joined with reprehension and denuntiation of God's judgments against the party not repenting. This is done with words alone. The practice hereof we see in God toward Adam, Gen. 3, 11, and toward Cain, Gen. 4, 6, 7. The abuse of it we see in the high Priests & Scribes Acts 4, 18. who threatened the Apostles streitly, and commanded them not to speak henceforth, nor teach anymore in the Name of Jesus. This is the beginning and first degree of the Church-censures. The second proceedeth farther, and that is suspension, which taketh place when the former taketh no place. Suspension is a punishment inflicted, whereby the offenders are for a time barred from the Lord's Supper. This is not a separation from all the holy things, but from some only: which howsoever those of the separation that are fled from us, scoff at and deride, yet it hath good warrant and sure foundation out of the word. And as it is an higher censure then admonition, so it is lower then excommunication. Of this the Apostle seemeth to speak, 2 Thess. 3, 14. If any man obey not our word, by this Epistle note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed, yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother. The person excommunicated, must be counted as an heathen and a Publican, the party suspended as a brother: these two, to be accounted as an heathen, yet respected as a brother, cannot well agree together. This was shaddowed out in the book of Leviticus, by the ceremonial law, chap. 13. where the Priest is commanded to judge of the plague of leprosy, if at the first the leprosy did not appear manifestly, by such signs as are there described, he should shut him up seven days: and at the seventh day, he should look upon him again: and if as yet it did not appear plainly and evidently what it was, he was to shut him up seven days more, and afterward should pronounce him clean or unclean, according as he should find by the tokens and arguments prescribed in the word of GOD: even so in judging of the spiritual leprosy, the like wisdom or rather greater is to be used by the Governors of the Church under the Gospel. If a brother should be vehemently and publicly suspected to have committed some notorious crime, to the dishonor of God, to the wounding of his own conscience, and to the scandal of the Church, and thereupon the Church-Governors after citation of him, should enter into the examining of the matter, and at the first, find only great presumption, or some cause of suspicion or probable conjecture, but no plain or manifest proof against him; it is meet they take farther time for more certain trial of the matter, and in the mean season suspend him from the use of the Sacrament, but not frō hearing the word, until it may farther appear and better be gathered (if it be possible)

whether he be guilty or not guilty: and charge the faithful to have no fellowship with him, that he may be ashamed. The third censure is excommunication, which is a separation from all holy things and the privileges of the Church, casting out of their public communion and private fellowship, such members as openly offend by some grievous crime, because to their sin they add the obstinate contempt of the admonitions given unto them: to the end themselves may be ashamed, and others warned & feared by their example, and kept from the like infection. We are forbidden to eat and drink with such, if they be known to be so: and to keep company with them familiarly, as their friends, fellows, and companions: for this were to be one with him that is as an heathen and Publican, and delivered up to Satan. Seeing then, this censure is so full of horror and terror being used according to the word of God, it followeth, that they which do not reverence and regard it, are desperate sinners, of whom we can have little or no hope so long as they continue without the public means of salvation. They are as it were the forlorn hope, and near unto destruction, while they lightly esteem this sword drawn out against them, or do make a sport at it, or are not humbled by it, or seek not to be absolved from it. They that are thus minded, stand not in fear of God or the devil: they regard neither heaven nor hell, neither salvation nor damnation. They are under God's wrath, and yet feel it not: they dwell in the suburbs of hell, and yet know it not: Satan hath set up his throne in their hearts, and yet they see it not: they are shut out of heaven, and yet they mourn not for it: they are captives and bondslaves under sin, and yet they have no desire to be restored into the liberties of the sons of God, nor any care to have their lives reformed. They cast up a savor in the nostrils of God & men, which annoyeth the house with the loathsome and filthy stench of it. Such as are hotly pursued by enemies, and fly to some City for succor or sanctuary, if the gates be shut against them, they are left as a prey to the mercy of others that are merciless. God hideth those that be his, in his Tabernacle, and keepeth them safe as it were under his wings: but these are delivered up to the devil, who governeth them and worketh in them, yet (alas) they are not afraid to serve such a master. God hath left them and forsaken them, who have left and forsaken him, and even shut up heaven gates against thē, as it were with strong bars, which were enough to astonish them, if they had any life of God's Spirit in them: notwithstanding, all this cannot enter into their dead hearts.

God give them grace (if they do belong unto him) to think upon these things, and seriously to consider of them in their hearts, while the acceptable time is: if not, he will glorify his great Name in their confusion, as he did in the destruction of Pharaoh, Exod. 9.16. And we that hear these things this day, must perform these four things. First, we must mourn for them as for the loss of a member, though themselves do not: and pray for them earnestly, to him that hath the hearts of all men in his own hands, that he would open their blind eyes, albeit they cannot pray for themselves. Secondly, we must beware and look to our selves that we come not into that estate. Happy is he, whom other men's harms can make watchful. Thirdly, we must take heed we be not a means to harden them in their sins, but seek to reclaim and recover them. While they stand in this desperate estate, we must have no delight in them, but shun them and avoid them. What greater means can there be, to move such to repentance, then for them to mark how everyone shunneth them, and separateth himself from them, and accounteth them as Turks and Pagans, and no better? The incestuous person that was at Corinth, being thus censured, and delivered for a time unto the power of the devil, (then which what could be more fearful?) being, I say, thus thrust out of the Church and banished from the liberties of it, and abandoned of all good men, and seeing himself in a manner forsaken, that none would keep him company, or vouchsafe once to drink with him, began to bethink with himself what he had done for which he was shunned, and shamed, and abhorred.

Then he was thoroughly touched with sorrow for his offense, then he asked forgiveness of the Church, then he desired to be restored, and the Apostle writeth to the Church in his behalf, sufficient to such a man is this punishment which was inflicted of many: so that contrariwise they ought to comfort him and forgive him. Lastly, we must be careful over our ways, that we do not commit close and secret sins, which we may keep from the sight and knowledge of the world. For albeit the Church judgeth them that are within, yet it cannot judge such sins as are hidden in darkness, for that were to judge before the time. Nevertheless, we must know, that albeit we be not bound on earth, yet we may be bound in heaven; as on the other side it may fall out, that we may be bound on earth, and yet not be bound in heaven. For such as are appointed to handle the keys, may take a wrong key, which will neither open, nor shut. But albeit all men should acquit us, and discharge us, yet if sin remain upon us unrepented of, God will not remit us, or loose us, we stand bound in heaven. God cannot err or be deceived, man may: for he often bindeth those that should be loosed, and looseth them that should be bound; as the Pharisees cast him that was borne blind, out of the Synagogue, who deserved better to be in the Church, then themselves.

Thus they are stricken with the edge of the sword, that have done nothing worthy to be touched with the back of it. Notwithstanding, whatsoever befalleth us among men, we must remember that so often as we harbor any notorious sin or sins in our hearts, and can carry them away cunningly, that none can condemn us or accuse us, yet as they are registered in the book of our conscience, so they are sealed up in heaven, and bind us to undergo everlasting punishment, except we repent. Many escape in this world, but none shall escape in the world to come: many sinners are not known of men, but none can be unknown to God, before whom all things are naked and open: here they may walk and iet up and down as free men, but when the Lord shall come to judgment, and make the counsels of the heart manifest, he will bind them hand and foot as poor prisoners, and cast them into destruction, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Thirdly, this serveth to reprove sundry abuses [Use 3] that are crept into this holy and wholesome ordinance of God. There is no ordinance so just, but it may be abused, as we see in the word and Sacraments. First, it reproveth the Church of Rome, and all other Churches that doth draw out this sword of God upon every light and slight occasion. He were not worthy to have a sword committed unto him, that would always have his hand upon it, ready to pull it out. For as Christ our Savior speaketh concerning diuorse between man and his wife, It is not lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause; so may it be said touching excommunication which is a diuorse between a Christian and the Church, that it is not lawful to cast out a member of it for every cause. It is a spiritual banishment from the city of God, and the privileges thereof. No incorporation taketh away the freedom of the city and the liberties of it for small matters, it is for some heinous crime: so should it be in the Church of God, none should be denied the benefit, and as it were the enfranchisement of the Church, except by his offense and obstinacy therein, he have made himself unworthy and incapable thereof: All laws should not be written with blood: nor all offenses take away the liberties of the Church. No Judge will draw blood, and take away life for every cause. It is the next way to bring this high ordinance of God into contempt, where this divine justice is executed for toies, and becometh as the fools dagger, that is always ready to be pulled out, to strike the standers by for trifles. Matters of smaller weight and importance, are to be censured by admonition, and reprehension, and are not to be punished with this fearful sentence, then which there cannot be a more fearful. All the abuses of this ordinance proceed from the Church of Rome, and are as it were the tail of that beast. A Surgeon that for every swelling, & all superfluous proud flesh, would cut off a member, were not worthy nor fit to be so much as an horseleech, nor to have our swine committed to him. The abuse of this that now we deal withal, was practiced in the Jewish Church, John. 9.22.23. and 12.42. and 16.2. and it creepeth also into other Churches, among whom many times not only the good are punished, but also the bad are tolerated. When this is used against any without just cause and good advise, as for default of appearance or want of payment, it is no longer a sharp two edged sword, but as a leaden dagger, or paper shot, or painted fire, if it be so good. It is but a show or shadow of excommunication, which maketh it indeed ridiculous and contemptible, and not feared of any as it ought to be, if it were rightly administered and executed. Many times also it falleth out, that such are not able to pay the fees and demands that are required of them, who deserve rather to be pitied, then to be punished so deeply.

Hence it is, that in the Church and courts of Rome they censure those that make default in appearing or in paying, when as in y^e mean season they leave adulterers, drunkards, railers, oppressors, incestuous persons, and such like altogether vnpunisht. Again, as all things are set to sale among them, and bought, and sold for money, so these covetous merchants, these spiritual, or rather carnal judges, bind for money, and loose for money, playing indeed fast and loose with the souls of men. They excommunicate out of the Church for money, and they receive into the Church again for money. They keep a market or rather a solemn Faire to set forth and sell, and send abroad their pardons and indulgences, absolving men from their sins at their own pleasure. They never regard whether they repent or not, but whether they have money, or not: they say not unto offenders, Repent of your offenses, but, Pay your fees and be gone, discharge the court and get you hence. It is noted touching Irenaeus, that he earnestly reproved Victor Bishop of Rome, because he went about to excommunicate many Churches in Asia, not for matter of heresy or apostasy, neither for any other cause then this, that they would not agree and consent with the Church of Rome, in the celebration of Easter.

Thus we see how that Church was always prone to draw out this censure for things indifferent and matters of a mean nature, like quarrellers that have their hand upon their dagger for every word speaking. Again, as it is an abuse through lightness and rashness to pronounce and denounce so sharp a judgment, to cut off offenders as a razor from the body of Christ, without just & weighty cause: so it is a great fault, when through remissnesse and negligence, this wholesome severity is not executed. Thus partly through levity, and partly through lenity due discipline is omitted, when just occasion requireth it should be practiced. For as letting of blood is not to be used for every cause, so to preserve life it is to be used. Great is the reverence that is to be used when we come to any of the exercises of our faith and religion, and therefore the mysteries of God and godliness are not through great licentiousness, and without any punishment to be profaned, and so holy things to be prostituted and set open to adulterers, fornicators, drunkards, blasphemers; contentious persons, and to all kind of vicious and sinful livers. This were as Christ our Savior teacheth, Matth. 7.6, To cast precious things before dogs and swine. For as it is an offense to denounce the sentence of excommunication when it ought not, and where it ought not: so is it also, not to denounce it both when and where it ought. As justice is one of the sinews of the Commonwealth, so is it of the Church.

Beside this, there is also another danger to the Church it self. For it is to be feared, lest the rest of the body be infected with the same contagion, forasmuch as one scabbed sheep infecteth the whole flock: yea, themselves that be such, do heap up and double their condemnation, when they presume to come without repentance to the Lord's Table. This fault was found by Christ with the Church of Pergamos and Thyatira, Revel. 2.14, 15, 20. It had those among them that maintained the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing Christ hated: and suffered the woman Jezebel to teach and to deceive his servants, to make thē commit fornication, & to eat meats sacrificed to idols: w^c things ought not to have been winked at. It is the duty of the Church to purge the body from such, and to ease it self of them. It is worthy counsel given by the Apostle, Hebr. 12.15. Look diligently, lest any man fail of the grace of God, lest any root of bitterness, springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled. Where he chargeth the Church not to suffer profane persons to remain among thē, to the infectiō of others, & that they should provide that no poisoned root continued with them.

This is to be understood rather of the persons, then of the crimes committed by the persons, as is that place also, Deut. 29.18. from whence it is taken, and to which he alludeth. This is a fault in many good and flourishing Churches, as it were a blemish in a fair face, or a spot in a comely garment: and this is a great occasiō of stumbling, to those that have separated themselves from us. They think us to be no better then a crew of conspirators against God, and as a rout of rebels, and a confused multitude of disordered persons. Wherein albeit they are deceived, yet that is not enough to clear our selves, forasmuch as we ought to consider, whether we do not lay a stumbling block before them to make them fall. True it is, it may be a Church where this key is not rightly handled, and where excommunication is not, as life in that body that is full of evil humors which are not purged out. So may it be where the Sacraments are disorderly administered and received, and where they are not. For excommunication is not of the essence of the Church, no more then the wall of a city is essential to the city, or the hedge essential to the vineyard.

The wall may be cast down, and yet the City stand: the hedge may be pulled up, and yet the vine remain. The Church of the Corinthians was touched and blamed sharply for this default, in that they retained the incestuous person among them: yet he writeth to them as to the true Church of God, sanctified by Christ, and Saints by calling. The discipline is not the heart or life of the Church: it is only as the pulses, and serveth as it were to feel the strength of it: or it is as a purgation that serveth to procure the health of the body: so the want thereof is the sickness and disease of the Church, and maketh it not so fair, so glorious, and so beautiful as it would be, neither so strong and mighty to keep out wolves and other noisome & ravenous beasts that would root up the vineyard, or at least deface it and disgrace it: because, where it is practiced & duly executed, it as a wall of brass, that the enemies cannot break into the field of God. We confess therefore, that albeit we have the Church of God among us, which is the body of Christ, yet is it not without some imperfection. We have very many trees of righteousness growing in this Orchard of God, planted by the rivers of water, & bringing forth fruit in due season; yet bushes and briars that are fit to be burned, are not cut down by this axe of God, that ought to have been laid to the roots of them long ago. It is a foul fault to the garden, to permit such bitter roots to spring up in it, and not to hook them and root them out by fit tools provided for that purpose.

These noisome plants are to be displaced and displanted, being more bitter then gall and wormwood: and they ought to be so far from remaining in the Church it self, that they should not be suffered to sit in the Church porch. They ought to be so far from coming to the Lord's Table, that we should not permit them to sit at our own table. We ought to be so far from keeping them company, that we should not bid them GOD speed. We ought to be so far from delighting in them and resorting to them, that we should not eat and drink with them. We ought to be so far from suffering of them in the house of God, that we ought not to come to their houses. For so often as the word cannot prevail with such, the sword of God must be taken in hand against them. Lastly, it reproveth the proud Bishop of Rome, that taketh upon him to excommunicate Kings and Princes to depose them from their crowns, to deprive them of their kingdoms, to free their subjects from their allegiance, and to bestow their dignities & dominions to whom he pleaseth. This is highly to abuse this high censure, as they do also other ordinances of God. What is more comfortable then the Supper of the Lord? yet they have horribly and shamefully profaned it, nay, they have altogether abolished it and brought it to nothing, by the abominable idol of the Mass, which they have set up instead thereof. Suppose this man of sin had jurisdiction and authority to excommunicate for sin, yet from whence had he right to apply it to the deposition of kings and alienation of subjects, and other temporal matters, but from him that is the author of sin, to wit, the devil? It was well said of Bernard, to the Bishop of Rome, Your power standeth in censuring crimes, not in taking away possessions: but a kingdom is a possession: and therefore his power extendeth not unto it.

Besides, the committing of any heinous crime is not a sufficient cause to deprive them of their Crowns and Scepters. When a private person is censured with excommunication according to the merit of his offense, he loseth not his substance, he forfeiteth not either house or land, he loseth no part or parcel of his possessions, neither is there any cause why he should, neither was there ever any such claimed, or challenged, or practiced, or assayed. What then? is the nature of this censure changed when the Bull roareth against Princes? & shall it take frō him his possession, w^c it doth not from any other? The law of God saith, Thou shalt judge the small as well as the great, and not respect persons in judgment, Deut. 1.17, But according to the corrupt proceedings in their courts, it were better to be a private man then a Prince. To ascend a step higher, that we may pull down the pride of Rome a step lower; is it otherwise in the degrees of honor and dignity, whereunto men are advanced, then with private persons? when a Knight is excommunicated, is he disgraded of his knight-hood? hath he his spurs smitten off with a knife hard by the heels? hath he his coat of arms torn from his body, and other ornaments and ensigns of renown and worship taken from him? •r doth the noble man forfeit his nobility, & lose his Barony: or of a Baron is he made no Baron? This was never attempted or heard off: The lightning that descended from the Vatican never touched either the private man's possession, or the noble man's honor: how then should it go worse with the king himself, then with all his subjects, that he should lose his royalty, and not the Baron his Barony? Moreover, it is the Apostles rule, That God judgeth those that are without: the Church cannot give sentence against such as are not of the Church, 1 Cor. 5.12, 13. as we noted before. Some are in the Church, and some are out of the Church.

The Church is the house and City of God, the faithful are his household servants, they live and abide under his roof, they eat of his meat, and therefore happy is their condition. Such as are not of the Church, are not of his house, and therefore must perish, as all they were drowned that entered not into the Ark, and as all perished in the sacking of Jericho, that were not in Rahabs house, and therefore their condition is woeful and miserable, as Revel. 22.15. These shall not go unpunished, God shall enter into judgment with them, the Church hath nothing to do with them: God will proceed against them, so that they shall not escape, let us therefore remit them to his seat of justice. But the Church of Rome holdeth that we are heretics, & schismatics, and I wot not what else, and so out of y^e bosom of the Church. For so many as do not submit themselves to the Popes supremacy, him they adjudge and condeme of heresy. If then we be none of the Church, they cannot smite us with their censures, nor thunder against us with their excommunications, whereby notwithstanding they have especially raised up their state to the top of greatness, and have laid such a burden upon their heads, that in time is likely to break their necks. Excommunication then, being a cutting off from the Church of such as are of the Church, it cannot touch us even in their own judgment, whom they teach in all their books of Controuersies to be out of the Church. Furthermore, this is such a censure, as never any of the Apostles, nor their successors practiced, to meddle with such as were heathen & Pagans, or to touch their persons, or to take away their possessions.

This is a bar or block that lieth in the way to hinder the conversion of kings that are Gentiles. For who among them would willingly embrace the Christian religion, who being before an absolute Prince, should by his embracing the faith, and receiving the Gospel, put his head under the Popes girdle, and offer his neck to be led up and down in a string, at the discretion of his good lord and master, and be a king no long then it pleased him? He shall make his estate much worse, then 〈◊〉 his people, as if the Church were a tender mother to private men, but a step mother unto Princes. Again, God hath provided by this ordinance, that none should be censured but he only that hath committed the fault: and that such as have not offended, should not be punished and chastened. The kingdom is an inheritance, and admitteth a successor of the same line. If the father be dethroned and deprived of his kingdom, and it be given away to another, or left to him that can seize upon it, the son cannot reign by succession from his father, albeit he be innocent; he shall not inherit the kingdom, albeit he be in no fault at all: so that the son must bear the iniquity of the father, contrary to the Law of God, Deut. 24.16. and the practice of the godly, 2 Kings 14.6. The Prophet Ezekiel handleth this at large, chap. 18. ver. 20. The righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon himself. What justice then is this, to strike the innocent with the guilty, and to bind them together as it were into one bundle? It was well said of Abraham in his prayer to God, Gen. 18.24, 25. Peradventure there be fifty righteous within the city, wilt thou also destroy, and not spare the place for the fifty righteous that are therein? That be far from thee, to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked, and that the righteous should be as the wicked, that be far from thee: shall not the Judge of all the world do right? If this be far from God, it ought also to be far from the Church of God. If the judge of all the world will do right, shall he that holdeth himself to be the head of all the Church, delight to do open wrong? But these men regard not to pluck up the wheat with the tares, which a good husbandman will not: and to pull by up the roots wholesome herbs with unwholesome weeds, which a good gardiner will not: and to cut off good citizens together with the bad, which a good Magistrate will not.

Lastly, in the censure of excommunication there is place left for repentance, nay, this is the end of every censure of the Church, not to destroy, but to amend and reform: so that when the offender returneth again into the way, he holdeth his place that he did before in the Church, neither receiveth any hurt, or loss, or reproach, by the fault which he hath confessed and forsaken. This is the institution and ordinance of God, this he hath appointed; of this had Peter experience after his threefold confession that followed his threefold denial. Of this also had the incestuous person experience, when he sorrowed for his fornication; for then he was joyfully received again, forasmuch as even the Angels in heaven rejoice at the conversion of a sinner. But he that being excommunicated is driven out of his kingdom, and seeth it translated to another, hath no place left him to recover his kingdom, his repentance cometh too late to do any good to himself. The usurper that hath once invaded his seat, and set himself down in his throne, will not easily depart from it and let it go again, until a stronger then he cometh, and overcometh him: he shall never attain to his right again, neither shall find place for repentance, though he seek it carefully with tears.

This is to arm Prince against Prince, and to set kingdom against kingdom: forasmuch as the right owner will never give over his right, so long as he is able to right his own cause. Thus we have seen, how excommunication is abused in the Church of Rome, and that which was by institution from God an wholesome medicine, to save, not to condemn; to help, not to hinder: to edification, not to destruction; is now by corruption of man turned upside down, and the nature of it quite overturned.

The injury that is offered to none of the lowest rank is offered unto Princes, who are thereby in worse condition then any of their people. A Christian Prince is made in worse condition then an heathen. The heir is punished for his fault, to whom he is heir: the son, for the father: the successor for the predecessor: the innocent, for the nocent: the infant, for the aged: the child unborn, for him that is borne: and lastly, he that repenteth, cannot be restored into his place again, so that it is all one to be penitent or impenitent. All these injuries, indignities, and miseries, to which we might add the shameful arraignment, endighting, condemning, and burning men for heretics after their death; all these exorbitant courses proceed from the abuse of this censure: and of all who is author, but the Pope of Rome, who advanceth himself above all that is called God, and is an utter enemy to Princes?

[Use 4] Fourthly, seeing such as are incorrigible, are to be thrown out of the Church, it followeth that all such are to be shunned, and their company to be avoided. We must have no fellowship with them, lest we be defiled by them. If there were that sense of sin in them that ought to be, they should not need to be separated and sequestered from the company of others, forasmuch as themselves would be as open Heralds & public cryers against themselves, saying with the lepers in the Law, I am unclean, I am unclean, Levite. 13.45, 46. But because they have no feeling of their spiritual leprosy, but thrust themselves among the faithful, like to the generation that are pure in their own eyes, although they be not washed from their sins, it is the duty of all the faithful to avoid them. If any ask the question, from what things the excommunicate persons are to be excluded; I answer, not only from the use of the Sacraments, but from the privileges of the Church: they must be strange unto us, and we strange unto them, so that we must not live and converse with them, we must have no society, conference, and communion with them, otherwise then for necessity, and rather then haunt their company, if we see them come at one side of the street, we should go to the other. The Apostle speaking of suspension, a lower and lesser degree then excommunication, maketh two parts of it: first, he must be noted, as Cain was, Gen. 4. God set a mark upon him. He meaneth, he must be branded as with a mark of shame and ignominy, we must not spare his name, but put him to all the reproach we can, we must set him out in his colors, and make it known what he is. True it is, before the sentence published, while they continue in the Church, we must as with a cloke cover the multitude of sins through love, as Shem and Japheth did the nakedness of their father, while by private admonition they may be won: but when once they be cast out of the Church, we must forbear them no longer, that others may beware and be warned of them. For there is no better means to do them good, but this: and if this way they will not be reclaimed, they can no way be brought into the way. It is better in this world to suffer a short reproach for our good, then endure everlasting contempt in the world to come, Dan. 12.2. This is one point to be observed and practiced: another point is seen in refraining his company that is so made infamous, as 1 Cor. 5.9. I wrote unto you in an Epistle, not to keep company with such fornicators. This is fitly and not without cause added to the former. For if we be familiar with such a man as with a friend, we harden him in his sin, and as much as lieth in us, we keep him from repentance, and so from salvation.

The use of shunning and eschewing of him is, that he may be ashamed: and the end of shaming of him is, that he may come to amendment of life, and consequently to be saved.

But when no man avoideth him, and abhorreth from his company, it is so far from working shame in him, that it maketh him think well of himself. Such as delight to be evermore with them, are partakers of their sins, and become as loathsome and shameful as they. Moreover, the Apostle saith, 1. Cor. 5.11. Now I have written unto you, not to keep company: if any man that is called a brother, be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with such a one eat not. We ought not to receive him into our houses, nor bid him God speed, 2 John. 10. but wholly decline from him, and shun him, as we would him that hath a plague soar. To sit at the Table is a sign of friendship and familiarity, as with a brother or neighbor: but we must hold no friendship with such as are enemies to God, and are at war and defiance with him. Jehoshaphat is reprov'd for a less matter, 2 Chro. 19.2. If any man ask, [Object.] whether the children must shun their father, the servants their master, the wife her husband, &c. I answer, [Answer.] we must have no such familiarity, as is free for us to refuse and deny, neither voluntary society which we may avoid. Unnecessary fellowship is forbidden and is offensive, such as is for pleasure and delight. As for children, servants, subjects, wives, and such as are bound by band of duty, and obliged in the family or common-wealth, they are not by this doctrine discharged from their duties, but must be subject even to such as are excommunicated, provided that they take heed so far as lieth in them, that by their conversation with them they do not consent to their sin, like of it, delight in it, defend it, commend it, but rather according to their place and calling, mourn that they are compelled to be with such, and therefore must exhort and admonish them to return to the Church, as it were to the fold of Christ. This then serveth to reprove all such as delight & make choice to be in company with excommunicate persons, such as receive them to their houses, such as ordinarily eat and drink with them, knowing them to stand in that fearful case. These partake with them in their sins, and keep them from repentance, as much as in them lieth. While we are familiarly conversant with the wicked, it will be hard not to be stained with their sins. For how can a man walk among thorns, and not wound himself?

[Use 5] Lastly, we are warned hereby, to lead our lives circumspectly and soberly, that we be not cast out. Let us hold faith and a good conscience, as the Apostle saith, 1 Tim. 1.19, 20. Which while some having put away, concerning faith have made shipwreck, of whom is Hymenaeus and Alexander, whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme. This use hath diverse particular branches.

First, we should desire evermore to live in the Church. It was the prayer of David, Psal. 27.4. One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after: that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his Temple. It is recorded to the great commendation of Anna, that she departed not from the Temple, but served God with fastings and prayer night and day. We must therefore live orderly, not as fools, but as wise: redeeming the time, because the days are evil, that we may continue as children of the light, and members of the Church. If once we become profane, and as dogs and swine, we must be kept from holy things, and barred from the word and Sacraments. It is the duty of the Church to keep the holy ordinances of God from all contempt. Some that live in the Church, are open blasphemers of the name of Christ: others are heretics and corrupt the faith: many give scandal and offense to others by their looseness of life; all these are to be barred and excluded from the word & Sacraments. For a man living in the middes of the Church, may be worse in the practices of his life, then an open enemy, of which the Apostle Paul speaketh, Tit. 1.16. They profess that they know God, but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate. This care of keeping his ordinances from open profanation, Christ himself shown in reforming the abuses of the Temple, when in great zeal of spirit that had eaten him up he whipped the buyers and sellers out of the temple, because they had made his Fathers house (which was the house of prayer) an house of merchandise, and a den of thieves.

Secondly, we must do nothing, and speak nothing, that may give occasion to the world, to revile the religion of God, or slander our holy profession. This is Paul's charge to servants, that they so carry themselves toward their masters, that the Name of God and his doctrine be not evil spoken off, 1 Tim. 6.1. The faults of men are wont to be cast upon the doctrine which they profess, and to be whipped upon the back of the author from whence it came. Such as men's life is that they lead, such is the doctrine and religion judged to be which they believe. Wherefore we must take heed, lest the Name of God be blasphemed through us, Isaiah 52. David is said by his sins to cause the enemies to blaspheme, 2 Samu. 12.14.

Thirdly it is our duty, to pray that the word of God may be glorified, 2 Thes. 3.1. It is that which we are taught to ask in y^e Lord's prayer, Matth. 6.9. that his Name may be hallowed. Now, God's word is his Name, forasmuch as thereby he is known unto us, Psal. 138.2. It was David's prayer, Psal. 119.39. Turn away my reproach which I fear, for thy judgments are good. As if he should say, keep me from doing that which may bring rebuke or reproach to thy word.

Fourthly, it is the duty of all faithful Pastors and Ministers, to keep the people from profaning the holy thing, Ier. 15 19. they are as the Angels of God set with a glistening sword, to keep the way to the tree of life. It is the duty of the shepherd to sever the infected sheep from the sound. The dispensation of the Sacraments is committed to the Ministers, to deliver them to such as are worthy, & to withhold them from such as are unworthy, lest we give them a sword into their hand to kill themselves: because obstinate sinners that come unworthily & impenitently to the Supper of the Lord, do eat and drink their own damnation. John the Baptist would not admit unto his baptism any, but such as confessed their sins, and was persuaded they had truly repēted, Mat. 3. But is it not enough for them, to say they repent? No: for every hypocrite may thus repent. A man may confess in words, that which he denieth in his deeds: and therefore he must have the undoubted testimonies of true repentance, weeping, humiliation, prayer, amendment of life, & such like. Besides, by this account, everyone that cometh to the Lord's Table, repenteth, and no man cometh unworthily, or without repentance, forasmuch as everyone will say he repenteth, no man will confess he is impenitent. Nevertheless, we cannot account him to be a true penitent, that hath given no sign of repentance.

Fifthly, this sentence is to be denounced with meekness and moderation, with all patience and long suffering, yea with much grief and sorrow. It must not be done ordinarily and commonly, The cutting off of a member is no usual thing: the Pysician trieth all ways and means before he attempt that desperate cure: and oftentimes he findeth it fitter not to cut off a part, then to bring the life of his patient into danger. So should it be in the Church: it may be willing and desirous to keep it self within the degrees of admonition, exhortation, & reprehension, rather then to proceed to the utmost, to wit, to excommunication. We must remember to take heed of extremity, and be sure always to temper severity with compassion, setting the example of God, evermore before our eyes, who in judgment remembereth mercy, Haba. 3.2. The Church hath the help of the Christian Magistrate, he will take order and make laws, that the obstinate shall be chastened, if any presume to contemn the first, second, and third admonition; so that the sword of excommunication shall seldom and sparingly be drawn out, as it hath fallen out in many Churches. But when these will not serve and suffice, the Church ought to proceed further, lest contagion as an infectious disease, enter in among the sheep of Christ, to the destruction of many souls.

Lastly, it is evident that this discipline, prescribed by Christ, delivered by the Apostles, and practiced by the Churches, ought to have place in every congregation: and where it is not, let the Pastor supply that want by his duty and diligence, in teaching and preaching of the Gospel: which is as his fan to blow the chaff away, and as the shrill trumpet waxing louder and louder to make them afraid. Especially we must beware, lest we should condemn that to be no Church, where there is want of this censure, or where it is not duly executed, as if there could be no school without a rod. This was the opinion of the Donatists in former times, and this the sect of the Anabaptists holdeth at this day: which is as absurd, as if one should say, that it could not be a sound body that never had member cut off, nor that be a good Physician, that never came to cutting and caulterizing; neither that an expert Surgeon, that useth not a saw, and other tools to pare away, and to open. If we have the right use of the word, let us submit our selves unto it, which is able to cut off the head of sin, as with a sword, and to burn up our corruptions, as with violent and devouring fire, and to break in pieces the stony hearts of such as go forward in their iniquities, as with an hammer.

[Verse 3. Both male and female shall ye put out,] After that we have set down the particular parts of God's commandment, touching putting out of the campe the lepers, and such as had issues, and them that were defiled by touching of the dead: we are now come next in order to the manner of the commandment, showing how far it is extended; it layeth hold on all sorts and degrees, both male and female.

And we shown before, diverse examples of the truth hereof, in the beginning of this Chapter: from whence we might observe, that the ordinances of God must be handled without partiality and respect of persons. The word of God serveth, not only to reprove the lowest and poorest, but as well the highest and chiefest. And the Ministers of God have their office committed unto them to reprove sin for all, and not sow pillows under the elbows. So ought it to be in the censures of the Church. But to pass over this point, let us come to the reasons serving to confirm the former doctrine, whereof the first is, that because sin defileth, therefore the obstinate sinner is not to be suffered.

The strength of this reason enforceth the putting out of the Church the leprous, that is, sinful persons, in consideration of the nature of sin, that it is filthy and infectious. So that the consideration of the contagion of sin ought to move the governors of the Church, to remove such out of it, as are of a corrupt and wicked life. But to omit this also, we see how he expresseth the nature of sin, it defileth their camps: and it defileth three ways, persons, actions, and places. From hence we are to learn, that all sin is foul and filthy, unclean and loathsome, infectious and contagious in the sight of God. Hereunto cometh that which Moses saith, Levite. 18.24. Defile not yourselves with any of these things: for in all these, the nations are defiled, which I cast out before you. The Prophet Ezekiel warneth the people of Israel to take heed, they did not defile themselves with idoles, Ezekiel, 20.18. Our Savior reproveth the hypocrisy of the Scribes and Pharisees, maketh the point plain with which we deal, Matth. 15.19, 20. Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies, These are the things that defile a man: but to eat with unwashen hands, defileth not a man.

Hereunto we may add directly to the purpose, the exhortation of the Apostle Paul 2 Corinth. 7.1. Having these promises, dearly beloved let us cleanse our selves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. And in the Epistle to Titus, chap. 1. ver. 15. he saith, Unto the pure, all things are pure, but unto them that are defiled, and unbelieving, is nothing pure: but even their mind and conscience is defiled. The Apostle James calleth sin filthiness and superfluity, chap. 1. verse 21. whereunto we might add sundry other places, Zeph. 3.1. Revel. 21.27. and all of them aiming at this, that as all sin is contagious unto men, so it is also foul and filthy in the sight of God.

Let us see this yet farther assured and confirmed [Reason 1] unto us by the word of GOD, first; by such comparisons as the Scriptures use, to express the nature of it. It is as an unclean clothe, Isaiah, chapter 64. verse 6. We are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousness are as filthy rags, and we all do fade as a leaf, and our iniquities like the wind have taken us away. It is compared to the blood of pollution, for which the menstruous woman was put apart seven days, so that whosoever touched her, was unclean until the even, Ezek. 16.6, 9, 12. Levite. 15, 19. We come into the world more defiled in soul, then polluted in body: and more unsavory in the nostrils of God, then a dead carrion lying long in a tomb, is stinking in the nostrils of men, Matth. 23.27, 28. Can you name anything more unsavory and unwholesome then these things? who doth not loath them at the naming of them? and yet sin is more odious and abominable then all these.

[Reason 2] Secondly, all sin defileth the soul, more then mire and dung can defile the body and garments of those that are soiled with it. It defileth the person that doth commit it and continue in it without repentance; it polluteth and profaneth the actions of greatest devotion in the service of God. The Prophet Haggai saith, Hag. 2.13. If one that is unclean by a dead body, touch any holy thing, he maketh it to be unclean unto him. It defileth also the land and places wherein sinners are conversant, Levite. 18.24, 25. God loatheth the houses and habitations of such soul persons, albeit they be decked with ornaments of gold and silver. Sin depriveth a man of all those graces that did adorn him in the sight of God and men, and causeth God to turn away his favor and loving countenance from us, Deu. 23 14. In his favor is life, and at his right hand are pleasures for evermore: if he turn away his face and favor from us, and deny his loving kindness unto us, nothing shall do us any good.

[Use 1] We are now to handle and hear the uses that arise from hence. First, we may conclude that such are blessed as keep diligent watch and ward over themselves, lest they fall asleep in carnal pleasures, in the cares of this world, and securely wallow in sin, and so be spoiled of the precious robe and raiment of the soul, which is given us in Christ Jesus. This admonition is often given in holy Scripture, especially in the New Testament, because as the world groweth nearer to his end, so sinful men will grow less wary and watchful in mind to good things, and therefore we must look the better to our selves. This use is concluded, Revel. 16.15, Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and men see his filthiness. If we had spiritual eyes to see and discern the ugliness of sin, and could behold it in its own nature, we would account them happy that escape it. On the other side, their condition is cursed and wretched, that give themselves over to the lusts of all kind of sin, they are polluted and abominable in the sight of God. If we should see a man wallowing in the mire, or tumbling himself in his own dung, that nothing appeared upon him but filthiness, how would we loath him and shun him? how squeamish would we be to come near him? how fast would we fly from him? Or if we should see a man turning to his own vomit, how would our stomachs abhor and rise against him? we would account such as dogs and swine, and no better.

But thus the case standeth with all unregenerate persons, whose whole life is a continual practice of sin: they wallow in the most stinking and filthy mire that may be found, and turn to their own vomit, and eat up worse than their own excrements. No spots and blemishes are like to the spots and blemishes of sin, that do leave a stain and guiltiness in the soul. This doth the Apostle Peter aim at in his second Epistle, chap. 2. ver. 22. It is happened unto them according to the true proverb: the dog is turned to his own vomit again, and the sow that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire.

True it is, sin carrieth with it a beautiful show, howbeit, it casteth a false light; it carrieth with it a false gloss, like the harlot that painteth her face that she may seem fair. It is like the forbidden fruit, whereof our first parents did taste, the tree seemed good for food, and pleasant to the eyes, and to be desired to make one wise; but when they had once eaten, they saw the filthiness of their own nakedness, and hid themselves from the presence of the Lord. It is like the harlot mentioned in the Proverbs; she caught a young man void of understanding she kissed him, and with an impudent face said unto him, Come, let us take our fill of love until the morning, let us solace our selves with loves. With much fair speech she caused him to yield, and with flattering of her lips she forced him, till a dart strike through his liver; as a bird hasteth to the snare, and knoweth not that it is for his life. And in another place the wise man saith, Pro. 5.3, 4, 5. The lips of a strange woman drop as an honey comb, and her mouth is smoother than oil: but her end is bitter as wormwood, sharp as a two edged sword, her feet go down to death, her steps take hold of hell. Here we have a most true and lively description of the nature of sin: look upon this picture of an harlot that Solomon hath drawn before our eyes, behold the shape and image of it, and we shall quickly and easily know what sin is. It fawneth upon us and flattereth us, it speaketh fair unto us, but in the end it will destroy us. It is like unto Joab, and is ready to serve us as he served Amasa: He said unto him, art thou in health, my brother? he took him with the right hand to kiss him, but withal he smote him with his sword and shed out his bowels to the ground. Or it dealeth with us as Iael dealt with Sisera, Iud. 4.18. & 5.26, 26. She cried unto him, Turn in my lord, turn in to me, fear not. He asked a little water to drink, and she gave him milk, and brought him butter in a lordly dish; but withal she put her hand to the nail, and her right hand to the workmans hammer, and with the hammer she smote him and then cut off his head, when she had pearsed and stricken through his temples. Thus doth sin come to us masked and covered, it offereth us many sweet delights, many carnal pleasures, many goodly profits and commodities, so that we will turn in unto it, and commit it without fear: but the issues thereof, are the issues of death, it taketh an hammer and knocketh us on the head. In the book of Job, Zophar, speaking of the state and portion of the wicked, compareth sin to sweet meats, which oftentimes have sour sauce. Let us hear it in his own words, Job 20.12, 13, 14, 15, 16. Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth, though he hide it under his tongue, though he spare it and forsake it not, but keep it still within his mouth: yet his meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall of Asps within him: he hath swallowed down riches, and he shall vomit them up again, God shall cast them out of his belly, he shall suck the poison of Asps, the vipers tongue shall slay him. Sin is as an hook that is cunningly baited every way to catch us and entrap us, but the wages of it in the end is death. It dealeth with us as the devil dealt with Christ, he shown him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, but then he must fall down and worship him. Woe unto them therefore that have their eyes closed and shut up, that they cannot see the deformity of sin in his natural colors, but look upon it in a deceitful glass. It fareth worse with such, then if they had many foul diseases about them that can only annoy the body, but are not able to hurt the soul: whereas sin infecteth the soul in which it dwelleth.

For as a man consisteth of two parts, the body, and the mind: so he is afflicted with two kind of maladies, and the evils of the mind are greater then the evils of the body, and more danger cometh from them then from these. We must have a true and right judgment of sin. The common sort think him to be much more miserable that hath a dropsy, who, the more he drinketh, the more he desireth, then the man that is possessed with covetousness, which is a spiritual dropsy, and is never satisfied. As on the other side, they hold him to be more happy that hath a fair and comely body, then such a one as hath a fair and beautiful mind adorned with all good qualities of piety, and the fruits thereof. These prefer the body before the soul, and earth before heaven.

The diseases of the body are many in number, but the sicknesses of the soul are in a manner infinite and cannot be told, and as they are moe in number, so they are worse in working and in their effects, they corrupt the best part of us, and make us evil and miserable. So do not the diseases of the body, they may vex us and pain us, afflict and disquiet us; but though we were sick from the crown of the head, to the sole of the foot, though no soundness were in the body, but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying soars, as it was with Job, who seemed a very picture and pattern of all misery, yet they cannot make us evil men, they cannot hurt the soul, they cannot separate us from God. Nay, the diseases of the body, are so far from destroying of us, that oftentimes they are medicines to cure the diseases of the mind, and chastisements are notable instructions; whereas the maladies of the body, do for the most part arise of the maladies of the mind. For sin is the cause of sickness. If we had not transgressed, we had not been visited with such diseases, and in the end with death.

Moreover, those bodily diseases are judged to be most dangerous and desperate, that take away from the sick party all sense and feeling of his estate, all grief and anguish of his misery▪ forasmuch as the less he feeleth, the more fearful is his estate, & the more near to his end. He that is afflicted with the gout or the stone, and crieth out of his misery, and willeth the Physician to be sent for in all haste, is in better case and hath more hope to be eased and healed, then he that hath a lethargy, or frenzy; of which, one thinketh himself sound, the other assaulteth the Physician that cometh unto him to do him good. Such for the most part are the diseases of the soul, and such for the most part, is the condition of sinful persons: they think themselves to be sound men, they think they need not the help of the Physician, they would defy him that should tell them, that they are dangerously sick even to the death. They are captives and bond-men, and know it not. They have one foot in hell, and see it not. They are in great misery, and feel it not.

Besides, the mind is able to judge of the diseases of the body: but how shall it tell and declare the diseases of the mind, seeing it is it self diseased? If that part be sick, how shall it judge of sickness? A Physician that is sick cannot judge of himself, but resorteth to some other, because his mind is troubled, which is the instrument of judging. So is it with all unregenerate persons, they want a right reformed judgment to judge of themselves, and therefore oftentimes take, or rather mistake vice for virtue, darkness for light, and error for truth. Hence it is, that they color and disguise the face of vice, that it might not appear ugly and deformed, as it is in his own proper likeness.

The unquenchable thirst of getting and having, is called providence and forecast: envy is accounted zeal: the love of himself is reputed to be wisdom: evil speaking is covered with the title and style of liberty in speaking.

Lastly, the diseases of the soul are more foul and infectious, they pierce deeper, and spread farther then those of the body. The diseases of the body though they seize upon some part, yet they leave other free that they come not near: if they be in the feet, they do leave the eyes and ears, and sundry other parts whole and sound: yea, such as have someone disease, are observed to be free from the rest.

There are some diseases that do not touch or trouble old men; some that vex not young men. But it is not so in the diseases of the mind; they corrupt the whole mind, and bring a train and tail of other with them, so that one cometh not alone. These are as the plagues and pestilences of the soul, they spare not any degree, any age, any sex, they cannot be kept within any bounds, but wander over the whole world with wonderful speed and celerity. Wherefore this reproveth all such as make a mock of sin, delighting in it, and dalying with it. Who will play with a serpent, or sport himself with the cockatrice? Sin is worse, it bringeth all diseases, plagues, pains, and miseries whatsoever. It is great folly to shun sickness and death, as most fearful things, and not to shun the causes of them.

[Use 2] Secondly, seeing sin defileth both the persons that commit it, and the places where it is committed, it is our duty to walk so circumspectly, that we beware of the contagious nature of it, and that we be not soiled with it. This one use hath diverse branches, and by them spreadeth it self hither and thither. First, it teacheth us to look to our footing, that we do not fall, but that if God have given us grace to stand, we pray him also to give us grace to continue and persevere unto the end. It is a great mercy that God vouchsafeth unto those that are his, when he keepeth them from evil, that it hurteth them not.

The sorrows of death compass us, and the pains of hell get hold upon us: we find trouble and sorrow, we want not sundry enemies that environ us round, and seek to prevent us and to circumvent us: they wait upon us, and watch over us for evil: we have the devil our enemy: the world our enemy: our corruption our enemy: what shall we then say, but pray to the Lord in the midst of all these dangers, O Lord, I beseech thee deliver my soul? And when he hath heard our prayers, and we found his help at hand, and succor in time of need, what can we but in thankful feeling of his favor, cry out with the Prophet, Return into thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee: for thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling? We must vow unto him a faithful serving of him, and perform our vow before him in the truth of our hearts, saying, I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living. We must return the praise and glory unto him, to whom alone it is due, uttering this voice of thanksgiving in a sweet meditation of his goodness, What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me? I will take up the cup of salvation, and call upon the Name of the Lord. Wherefore, albeit we have many perils without us, and within us, yet we rest in the arms of Christ, and abide under the shelter and shadow of the Almighty: so that we have this comfort, his left hand is under our head, and with his right hand he doth embrace us. If it were not for this protection and upholding of us, we could not endure here in the world.

Secondly, it warneth all those that are cleansed to keep themselves in such sort, that they be not polluted, Deut. 23.9. This shall bring great comfort to the conscience, and great peace that passeth all understanding. The burnt child dreadeth the fire: he that hath once been in danger of drowning, will hardly be brought or drawn to the banks side: an horse that hath once been plunged in some deep quag-mire, will with much ado pass that way again. He that once hath found and felt the grievousness of sin, and the terrors of conscience, and the wrath of God, and the flashings of hell fire, will fear to fall and offend again. If we did duly consider how dearly it did cost Christ our Savior, to redeem a soul from damnation, and that the weight of sin did make him sweat drops of blood, and to cry out upon the Cross, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me, when we have been once cleansed, it will make us careful to keep our selves clean: when we have washed our feet, it will work a care in us, that we do not defile them. It is such an heavy burden, that whosoever hath once felt the weight and smart of it, dareth not stand under it again.

Thirdly, this circumspect walking before him warneth us to forsake the company of the wicked, and society with them, as 2 Cor. 6.16. Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you. Our doctrine teacheth us that sin defileth and polluteth a man, so as there is no filth or dung upon the earth defileth the body, as sin defileth the whole man before God, and therefore we should loath the fellowship of evil men and wicked persons.

If a man should offer himself into our company that had wallowed and tumbled in some foul and filthy channel, we would shun him and be ashamed of him, we would not abide him, but thrust him from us. For we know we could not be near him a little while, but he would make some of his filth to cleave unto us. Thus it is with bad men. As themselves are loathsome and filthy, so they will leave part of their filthiness behind them, among whomsoever they converse, like unto some beasts that leave such a rank savor after them wheresoever they become, that it may easily be known thereby, as by an infallible token, that they have been there.

If we cannot draw these men from iniquity, let us withdraw our selves from their company. There is not a more deceitful bait to catch us, then to come within their reach. Many have been stricken down with this stroke, that have stood as valiant and invincible men against many other dangers. Let us be wary by their harms, and learn wisdom by their folly, and to bear our selves upright by their falls. But it may be demanded, whether all keeping company with them be unlawful, or not? I answer, all company with them is not absolutely forbidden, but to be familiar with them is forbidden, to delight in them, to be of one heart and of one mind with them, to be yoked unto them, & so to delight to be among them, that we like better of them then of any other, and never think our selves well until we be with them. If any farther ask the question, in what cases it is lawful to be among them? I answer briefly, first when we seek to reclaim them; when we have this end to confer with them, to instruct and admonish them, as the Apostle speaketh of an heretic, that he must be once or twice admonished, & then being obstinate, he must be avoided, Tit. 3.10. That which he speaketh particularly of an heretic, may be spoken generally of every wicked person that is incurable. Secondly, when we are bound by the band of a necessary calling to be in their presence and company. For God hath set us in our several standings, out of which we may not depart. We shown in the former doctrine, that if a man were excommunicated by the Church, yet such as belong unto him in the family or in the Common-wealth, ought to be subject and obedient unto him. The wife must yield to the husband due benevolence, the child must honor the father, and a servant his master, so far forth as they do not encourage him in his sins, nor join with him in a liking of them.

Lastly, it teacheth us to avoid all occasions and inducements to sins, yea, all appearances of evil: Hence it is, that Jude saith, ver. 23. Hate even that garment which is spotted by the flesh, not only the sins themselves, but the occasions of them. And hereby we may try our selves, whether we make conscience of sin or not. Every commandment that forbiddeth any sin, forbiddeth all the allurements that may draw us into the same. This is one of the general rules that help us to understand the law, & to come to the true meaning thereof.

Lastly, seeing sin soileth and defileth, we learn to put this duty in practice, to crave of God to wash us and cleanse us from the defilements of sin. Let us follow the example of the leper, Matth. 8.2. who fell down at the feet of our Savior, and besought him that he might be cleansed, Lord if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean: so ought we to come into the presence of Christ, and worship him, and crave of him to cleanse us from the filthiness of our sin. It so staineth and polluteth, that none can wash away the blots and spots that stick so fast unto us, but he. This we see in David, Psal. 51.2, 3. Wash me from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin: for I know mine iniquity, and my sin is ever before me. True it is, God sometimes willeth us to wash our selves, as he commanded the Israelites to wash their garments when they were to hear the law, Exod. 19. Ier. 4.14. O Jerusalem, wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved. And I am. 4. Draw near to God, and he will draw near to you: cleanse your hands ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double minded. What need God to wash us, will some say, seeing we are willed to wash our selves? God doth not by these commandments attribute a natural power and strength to man's will, as if they were able to wash themselves, but he stirreth them up to use the means, that so they may be washed by him.

Whensoever we use the instrument of the word, which is a pure word, whereby the ways of a young man are cleansed, Psal. 119.9. together with prayer and invocation of God's holy Name, and such like means to be washed; we may be said after a sort to wash our selves, because God doth wash us by us, and not without us: as also he y^t made us without us, is said to save us not without us. For a desire to be washed is our washing of our selves.

So the Minister is said to save himself, when he delivereth his soul from the curse denounced against unconscionable watchmen, and useth the means by which God will save him and them that hear him. It is the work of God alone to wash and to cleanse us, Ezek. 16.9. Where he telleth his people, that he had washed them with water: and John. 13.8. Christ declareth to his disciples, that except he wash them, they had no part in him: for that which he speaketh unto Peter, he speaketh to them all. And the Apostle John teacheth us, that he hath washed us from our sins in his blood. Wherefore we must go unto him to have this pure water and clear streams to wash our souls. We are foul and filthy creatures by nature. No leper so foul and ugly. We can no more cleanse our selves, by our own power, then the Ethiopian or black More can change his skin, or the Leopard his spots.

This use hath many branches contained under it. First, we must labor to come to the knowledge of our sins, and to be touched with a feeling of them. For we can never be earnest in prayer to God for mercy, or have assurance that our request shall be granted, until we come to have a sense of y^e grievousnes of sin: as they that know not their disease, make no haste to send or seek to the Physician. We must therefore have our eyes opened to see sin, and to understand what dependeth upon it, that we may prevent it, or recover our selves being fallen into it. Hence it is, that so many sin with greediness and eagerness, because they do not thoroughly weigh and consider themselves what they have done, as Luke 23.34. Jesus said, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. And y^e Apostle speaking of the ignorance that is among men concerning Christian religion, saith, Doubtless if they had known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. They delight in swearing and blaspheming, because they know not how fearful a thing it is, to take the Name of God in vain. They make no conscience of the Sabbath, because they know not what danger it is to profane it. Secondly, we are put in mind to confess our sins and uncleanness, that so we may be washed by him that purgeth us. So long as Adam did hide his sins, he was not cleansed of them. It is not with God, as it is with men: if we confess unto men, we are oftentimes taunted for them, and upbraided with them, and checked for them. But if we acknowledge them unto our gracious God, he will never hit us in the teeth with them, but he is merciful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. But because we shall have fitter occasion to speak farther of this point, in the next division, I pass it over. Thirdly, we must know what means God useth to sanctify us; it is by the blood of his own Son, for the blood of Christ purgeth us from all sin, 1 John. 1.7 and Heb. 9.14. The blood of Christ who through the eternal spirit offered himself without spot to God, shall purge our conscience from dead works to serve the living God. Naaman the Syrian washing in the flood of Jordan seven times, was healed of his leprosy, and had his flesh come to him again, like the flesh of a child: how much more then shall we be cleansed from the leprosy of sin, when the Lord shall wash us in the blood of his Son? Fourthly, we must seek mercy while it is offered unto us; when our hearts are terrified for sin, let us have recourse to the fountain of his love which can never be drawn dry. This did the Prophet Psal. 51.1.2. Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving kindness: according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions: wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin. And the Prophet Isaiah calleth the people to repentance, cha. 55. ver. 6, 7. Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near: let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy on him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. God hath his time of mercy, when that is gone and past, the time of justice cometh.

While we have ears to hear, let us hear; when the ears are made dull of hearing, we may hear, but we shall not understand. While we have eyes to see, let us behold his goodness and mercy toward us: when they are once shut and closed up, we may see, but we shall perceive nothing at all. While we have soft and tender hearts, let us humble our selves before him, and tremble at his word: if once our hearts be hardened as a stone, and become past feeling, there is little hope of our conversion, that we should turn and be healed.

Fifthly, we must buy of Christ white garments to clothe us, and to cover our deformity, Revel. 3.18. that the filthiness of our nakedness do not appear. True it is, there is nothing properly bought and sold between Christ and us, but this is spoken by way of resemblance. For in bargaining a man that will buy, first understandeth his want: then he cometh to the place where it is to be bought; afterward he cheapneth it: and lastly he maketh exchange with money, or some other commodity.

So he that will come to Christ, must first feel himself to have need of Christ, and see his own misery, otherwise he will never desire him. Secondly, he must hunger after Christ to be partaker of his merits. Thirdly, he must prize Christ above all other things, Phil. 3.8. Lastly, he must make exchange, he must give him his sins, and lay them upon his shoulders, that so we may receive to us his righteousness. We remain foul and filthy in God's sight, until we be clothed with the glorious robes of his righteousness. Last of all, it is our duty to forsake our sins, and to walk in the statutes of God. This is the exhortation of the Prophet, Isaiah 1.16, 17. Wash you, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil, learn to do well. To this purpose speaketh Ezekiel, chap. 20. ver. 18, 19. Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols: I am the Lord your God; walk in my statutes and keep my judgments, and do them. We are then washed from our sins, when we have learned to walk in the ways of God. If we do not bring forth the fruits of obedience, we lie wallowing in the mire of our sins, and God will find us out. There is no hiding of our filthiness from him, his eyes see the sons of men, and ponder his paths.

That they defile not their camps in the midst whereof I dwell. We have spoken already of the first reason drawn from the effect of sin; it defileth our persons, our actions, and our places. The second reason is taken from the consideration of God's presence. From which reason he reasoneth thus, I dwell among you, Therefore ye must be an holy people, and hate all uncleanness and unholiness, and do that good which I command you.

But here some will say, how is God said to dwell among his people? The heaven is his Throne, and the earth his footstool: he dwelleth not in Temples made with hands, forasmuch as the heavens of heavens cannot contain him that filleth with his presence and power both heaven and earth. Doth he not dwell also among the ungodly and infidels y^t know him not? Or can any hide himself in secret places, that he shall not see him? I answer, this phrase is a borrowed speech from the sons of men, whereby is understood, that God is conversant with us, & doth keep his mansion in our hearts, ruling in us by his Spirit and by his Word. Even as a master of a family ruleth and guideth his house wherein he dwelleth: so doth God rule us & overrule us, and taketh up his rest and residence among us, determining to continue with us. He is present among the ungodly by his power, but not by his grace: they cannot hide their faces from him, but he hideth his favor from them. So then, this manner of speech, importeth these three things. First, it showeth the effect and efficacy of his presence, whereby he possesseth & governeth the faithful which are as his Temple to dwell in, having dominion over them, enlightening them to know, and guiding thē to practice his will made known unto them. Secondly, it signifieth that his presence is perpetual and permanent, and continual, for when a man meaneth to inhabit in any place, it is a sign he doth not determine to flit away, as a bird that wandreth from her nest, but to abide there without departing away. He is not as a guest that lodgeth with his friend for a day or two; nor as a stranger that taketh up his Inn for a night or two; nor as a sojourner that meaneth to remove when his term is out: but as an owner and possessor, that meaneth to set down his rest, and not to leave that place, as John 14, 16, 17. I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever: even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. Thirdly, it noteth the manner of his presence, not by the infiniteness of power, as he is present with all his creatures, to sustain them and uphold them, but by his grace and gracious effects, uniting us to Christ, regenerating us to be lively members of his body, crying in our hearts, Abba, Father, and witnessing thereby our adoption, Rom. 8, 9. Ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Christ is also said to dwell in our hearts by faith, Eph. 3, 17. Now let us examine the reason, included in these words, in the midst whereof I dwell: and consider the strength and power of it, how he provoketh them to study to be an holy people, separate from all pollutions and provocations of sin, by the assurance of his gracious presence.

We learn from hence, that the consideration of God's presence and help that ever goeth [Doctrine 1] with his children, must provoke them to well-doing. His presence ought to move us to all good duties. This point is taught in many places of the word of God, as Numb. 35, 34. Defile not the Land which ye shall inhabit, wherein I dwell: for I the Lord dwell among the children of Israel. Where we see, he reasoneth thus; I dwell among the Israelites, therefore they must take heed they defile not the Land. Thus also he speaketh in Deuteronomy, chap. 23, 14. The Lord thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp, to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee; therefore shall thy Campe be holy, that he see no unclean thing in thee, and turn away from thee. Here he moveth them to holiness toward him, because of his continual presence with them. Thus doth the Lord speak to Solomon, concerning the house which he was building. If thou wilt walk in my statutes, and execute my judgments, and keep all my commandments, to walk in them: then will I perform my word with thee, which I spake unto David thy Father: and I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will not forsake my people Israel. So the Prophet Isaiah reasoneth, chap. 52, 11, 12. Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence: touch no unclean thing: go ye out of the midst of her: be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord: for ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight: for the Lord will go before you, and the God of Israel will be your reward. In all which places, the presence of God that is most holy, is brought in, urging us to the duties of holiness of life.

The reasons are very plain to prove the same. First, because God is the Lord: he is of [Reason 1] absolute power to command and rule over all, and therefore he being the Lord God, his presence with us must provoke us to watch over all our ways, and to walk in fear and trembling before him. This reason is expressed in the first chapter of the book of Joshua, verse 9, where the Lord saith unto him, Bee strong, and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the Lord thy God is with thee, whither soever thou goest. Where he concludeth and assureth him thereby, that God is with him, because he is the Lord.

Secondly, the consideration of his presence [Reason 2] must work in us obedience toward him, because he hath graciously promised, that he will never fail nor forsake those which are his. He will not leave us in the work which we undertake, but be with us when we begin it, and when we finish it. This reason is given by Moses, encouraging the people to fight the battles of God against the Nations, whom he had promised to deliver into their hands, Deut. 31, 6. Fear not, nor be afraid of them, for the Lord thy God, he it is that doth go with thee, he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee. Where he proveth the truth of his presence by the comfortable effect of it, that he will deliver them in time of need, and will not leave them as a prey in the hands of their enemies.

[Use 1] The uses are in the next place to be handled. First, we learn from hence for the increase of our faith, to conclude the happy and blessed estate of the faithful, that have such a faithful deliverer, and so sure a promise of deliverance. They are esteemed of the greatest part of this wretched world, to be as men unhappy and forlorn, and so to be far from true happiness. But seeing they have his help ready at hand to keep them from danger, and to preserve them in danger, being always safe and sure under his protection, who is as a shield round about us, it showeth apparently and most certainly, that they are a blessed people that are thus, and may comfort themselves heerewith, in the midst of all discomforts and discouragements that they shall meet withal. This doth the Prophet David declare, Psal. 40, 1, 2. He waited patiently upon the Lord, who brought him out of the horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set his feet upon the rock, and ordered his goings. Where we see, that God's gracious deliverance and preservation provoked him to depend upon him, and to praise his Name: whereupon he inferreth in the next words, Blessed is that man that maketh the Lord his trust, and respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies. None therefore are comparable unto them, none are happy but they.

[Use 2] Secondly, seeing we have God's presence ever with us, to be an instructor and admonisher of us, and as a guide and governor to us in well-doing, let us be of a good comfort, and cheerful in all duties that God layeth upon us, and requireth of us. It cannot be denied but we have many and sundry discouragements and pul-backs to hinder us from the execution of all good duties both general and particular in our callings: but this consideration and meditation is able to ouerweigh them all. This serveth as a wonderful comfort to all sorts, both to the Ministers and people, and should never be forgotten of us. Touching the Ministers, it is given by our Savior, Mat. 28, 20. Acts 18, 9, 10. Exod. 4, 12. If his presence must be as a spurr unto us, to quicken us being dull and heavy, and ready to draw back: let it put life into us, and cause us to teach the people cheerfully to observe whatsoever Christ hath commanded us. What though we have many crosses in our way, and many enemies that set themselves against us, yet greater is he that is with us, then they that are against us: Satan cannot be so malicious to hurt us, as God is gracious to deliver us: and his instruments shall not be so strong to cast us down, as the Lyon of the Tribe of Judah shall be victorious to hold us up: and therefore let us not fear them that can kill the body, but him that is able to cast body & soul into hell fire. Touching the people, it serveth also to comfort them, and to work in them perseverance in their callings. Let them boldly go forward in hearing and professing his word, forasmuch as his presence doth guide us thereunto. To this purpose doth Moses call Joshua, and say unto him in the sight of all Israel, Be strong, and of a good courage, for thou must go with this people unto the Land which the Lord hath sworn unto their Fathers to give them, and thou shalt cause them to inherit it: and the Lord, he it is that doth go before thee, he will be with thee, he will not fail thee, &c. Having therefore so sure a Rock to rest upon, it is a sign of great weakness and infirmity, or of want of faith, to start aside from our holy profession, and not to rest upon him that hath given us the promise of our deliverance, and the assurance of his presence.

Lastly, seeing God is in the midst of us [Use 3] to succor and save us, and thereby to stir us up unto well-doing, let us open our eyes, and behold the great works that he hath done in the earth for his own people. Let us not forget his mercies toward us, but keep a register of them, as the Prophet exhorteth, Psal. 46, which is a Psalm of thanksgiving, which the Citizens of Jerusalem sung to God, for the preservation of Jerusalem, against certain terrible and troublesome enemies y^t did assault it, ver. 8, 9. The Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge: Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations he hath done in the earth. Where we may see, that upon this consideration that God was among them, as in an high place whereunto they should resort, he provoketh them to a serious contemplation of such works of mercy and judgment, as God had shown in their defense against their enemies. This use concerneth no people under the heavens, more then us. We have found and felt the gracious and glorious presence of God to be with us and among us. We have had a wonderful experience of wonderful deliverances against close, and subtle, and malicious enemies. They have opened their mouths as the grave: they have stretched out their hands against us, and their feet have been swift to shed blood. They have prepared their fireworkes; they have diued down to the nethermost hell to take counsel against us: and they have sought to quench the light of Israel. Destruction and calamity hath been in their ways, and the way of peace they have not known: so that except God had been on our side, they had swallowed us up quick, and the waters, even the swelling waters had gone over our soul. But God hath broken their snare, and quenched their fire, he hath preserved Prince and people, and delivered his servants that trusted in him, and called upon him. As for his enemies and the enemies of his Church, they have been consumed with the flame of that fire which themselves had kindled, as they were burned that cast the three children into the Furnace, Dan. 3, 22. and as the Lions brake their bones in pieces, and tore them in sunder, that had cast Daniel into the den, Dan. 6, 24. Thus shall it be with all persecutors that plot the ruin of the Church. They may gather themselves together, but they shall be scatterd: they may pronounce a decree, but it shall not stand: they may dignity deep to hide their counsels, but they shall be discovered, & come to nothing. He hath not made his Church a prey unto their teeth, but hath utterly destroyed them, and made havoc of them, that they became dung to the earth, and a prey to the fowls of heaven. They then are greatly to be reprov'd, who behold everywhere and at all times the works of God, both of his mercy toward his people, and of his judgments against his enemies, and yet are never moved to glorify his Name, nor to walk in obedience before him.

[In the midst whereof I dwell.] We have heard the strength of the reason, and how necessarily and demonstratiuely it concludeth: The presence of GOD with us is a forcible means to prick us forward, and to provoke us to holiness of life, and to all well-doing. Now let us consider the words in themselves, without the consideration of others. Wherein we see, he giveth his promise for his presence, or setteth down plainly unto thē, that he is continually among them, to wit, the holy God among his holy people.

This teacheth us, that God is evermore present with his people, he is in the midst of them, he is never absent from them. He watcheth over thē for their good, he never slumbereth nor sleepeth, he never forsaketh them, that he should bring them into danger. This appeareth in the example of Joseph, Gen. 39, 21, 23. The Lord was with him, and shown him mercy, and gave him favor in the sight of the keeper of the prison. Where having shown that God was with Joseph, he expoundeth and expresseth what his presence was, and wherein it consisted, and how it was manifested. He was cast into prison, and lay in great misery, yet did not God forsake him, but was with him, even in prison. God abhorreth not the loathsome prisons▪ into which his servants are cast. He commandeth us to visit his Children that are put in prison, much more therefore will he do it himself. This is set down in the prayer of David for Solomon his son, Arise and be doing, and the Lord be with thee. 1 Chron. 22, 11, 16. and in the prayer of Solomon, at the dedication of the Temple, 1 Kings 8, 57. The Lord our God be with us, as he was with our Fathers, let not him leave us, nor forsake us. This also is that merciful promise which he maketh to his people, Exod. 29, 45, 46. I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God, and they shall know that I am the Lord their God, that brought them forth out of the Land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them, I am the Lord their God. Heereby doth the Prophet comfort himself, Psal. 23, 4. Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear none evil: for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff doth comfort me. This is such a principle as is so plain, that it needeth no farther confirmation, that wheresoever two or three are gathered together in his Name, he is in the midst of them, Mat. 18.

I will propound a few reasons, and that [Reason 1] briefly. First, he will save those that are his. His presence is not a vain presence, neither is he an idle beholder of things that are done, but his presence is to prosper and to save. The end of his being with us, is the salvation of us. This is the reason that God giveth to his people, and the promise of deliverance after long trouble, Ier. 30, 11. I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee: though I make a full end of all Nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee, but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished. And to the same purpose he speaketh in the 42, chapter, Bee not afraid of the King of Babylon, of whom ye are afraid: be not afraid of him, saith the Lord: for I am with you to save you and to deliver you from his hand. We must not therefore dream of a presence that effecteth nothing: he is not one that standeth still and doth nothing, as he that is in a dream, but rather willeth his people oftentimes to stand still, while he worketh all in all.

Secondly, they have good success in their [Reason 2] lawful labors and honest endeavours, so that he maketh the works of their hands prosperous. Except the Lord do build the house, & watch the City, the labors of the builder, and the cares of the watchman, profit nothing at all. This reason is rendered in the example of Joseph, Gen. 39. God was with him, and he made all that he had to prosper. So it is said in the book of the Judges, The Lord was with Judah, & he drave out the inhabitants of the Mountain. In like manner we read concerning David, 2 Sam. 5, 10. David went on, and grew great, and the Lord God of hosts was with him. Seeing then, God saveth his people in times of danger, and prospereth the works of their hands that they undertake in his fear, it followeth, that he is continually with them.

Let us now come to the uses that arise from [Use 1] hence. First, for the increase of a sound faith in God, in whom we are to trust, we may conclude, that seeing God is with his servants, therefore they shall not fall down, or take the foil, but shall prosper and prevail. He leaveth them not to themselves, he withdraweth not his strength from them, he delivereth them not to the lust and pleasure of their enemies. This is it which he telleth Joshua after the death of Moses, Judge. 1, 5. There shall not any be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life: as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee. Whensoever we prosper in our ways, & find the blessing of God to have been with us in our actions, let us not ascribe it to our industry and policy, to our own diligence and endeavours, but acknowledge from whence it springeth and proceedeth; it is because God is with us. This is a notable comfort unto us, to consider that the gates of hell shall never be able to prevail against the Church, to deface it and to root it out and to destroy it. If the Church fail, God shall fail with it. If this be impossible, so is the other. If the church should fail, Christ must also fail, and all the benefits of his death and passion: which can never come to pass, forasmuch as he died not in vain, but will make his death available in all the members of his body unto the ende of the world. Let us evermore lay hold on this, especially when we see the enemies of the Church multiply, and to affront the true servants of God: the presence of God must stay us up, and support us in the midst of all dangers.

[Use 2] Secondly, this teacheth us this good duty, that we take heed we do not defile our selves with the pollutions of sin. For how shall we dare to commit sin, that is so highly displeasing in his sight, forasmuch as he is with us to behold us and all our actions? Nothing is more loathsome to GOD, then the filthy stench that sin casteth up in his nostrils: so that we should hate it in all men, but especially in our selves with a perfect hatred, even more then the devil of hell himself. True it is, many men cannot abide to hear him named, they defy him in words, but they do not deny him in deeds. We hate him as he is deformed, not as he was formed: not as the creature of God, but as he is degenerate from his original estate. He is the creature of God, but sin is the work and child of the devil, John 8, 44. he is said to be a liar from the beginning, and the father thereof: and as he is the father of lying, so also of all other sin. He is said to be a murderer from the beginning, and the Pharisees are charged to be his children. The wicked are named his seed; and Cain is said to be of that evil one, because he slew his brother, 1 John 3, 12 We must therefore be afraid of sin, and be as unwilling to entertain it, as to entertain a child of the devil. If once we lodge it, it will not be easy for us to dislodge it: if once we suffer it to fasten upon us, it will be very hard to loose his hold again. It will stick fast upon us as pitch, and defile us also, as dirt and dung. The means to bridle and suppress it, is to set before us the presence of God. The Subject will do nothing unseemly in the presence of his Prince, nor the child in the sight of his father. We are always in God's eye, he beholdeth all things that are done of us. This is that of which Moses putteth the people in remembrance, Deut. 23, 14. The Lord thy God walketh in the midst of thy Campe, to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee, therefore shall thy Campe be holy, that he see no unclean thing in thee, and turn away from thee. No unclean thing like to the uncleanness of sin, it is worse then all excrements which we do loathe and abhor. It driveth him from us, that he will no longer walk among us to do us good. Thus speaketh Phinehas the son of Eleazar the Priest, to the Tribes that inhabited beyond the River, This day we perceive that the Lord is among us, because ye have not committed this trespass against the Lord: now ye have delivered the children of Israel out of the hand of the Lord. Where he proveth, that they had rightly learned, and also reverently regarded the presence of God, because they had learned thereby to abstain from sin, which is abominable and filthy before him. For this cause the Apostle saith, 2 Cor. 6, 17. Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you. Then he promiseth to dwell in us, and to walk among us; he offereth himself to be our God, & to account us to be his people. All men will in words confess, that they believe the presence of God in all places, and his all-seeing eye reaching and stretching over all persons: howbeit this confessing in word is not an argument of sound believing in heart: forasmuch as many acknowledge it with the tongue, that do utterly and openly deny it in their deeds. If his presence work in us a conscience of sin, and a care to please God in all things, it is an evident token that we are good Scholars, & remember this lesson well, which is here delivered unto us, touching his presence everywhere. Let us oftentimes examine our selves by this rule: and know that we have so far profited in the doctrine of it, as it brideleth our corruption in us, and no farther. If we be loose in life, and everywhere profane, never regarding what we do, or what we speak, or how we break out into all wickedness, we may well talk or tattle of God's presence, but we turn him into an Idol, and with the Epicures make him sit idle in heaven, to know all things, but to regard nothing.

Lastly, it is our duty to have a care to promote [Use 3] his worship and service, in all things to farther it, and to cut off all impediments and hindrances that stand against it. This is the use that is often made of this doctrine, as Exod. 25, 8. Let them make me a Sanctuary, that I may dwell among them. Where the Sanctuary of God is, there will he be: where it is not well looked unto, but wholly neglected, there is he gone from that people, and departed. This we see in the words of David, exhorting and commanding all the Princes to help Solomon his son in building of the Temple, 1. Chron. 22, 18, 19. where he saith, Is not the Lord your God with you? and hath he not given you rest on every side? For he hath given the inhabitants of the Land into mine hand, and the Land is subdued before the Lord, and before his people: now set your heart and your soul to seek the Lord your God: arise therefore, and build ye the Sanctuary of the Lord God, to bring the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord, and the holy vessels of God into the house that is to be built to the Name of the Lord. As they had experience that he was among them, so he would have them go lustily forward in furthering of his worship & the means of it. Could their enemies have taken the foil, and been delivered as a prey unto them, who had so long dwelt among them, and taken deep root in the earth, as a Tree that could not be shaken with the wind, except the Lord had been with them, and holpen them, and fought their battles for thē? Thus they were assured of God's presence with them, and therefore they ought to be sttong and courageous in promoting his glory and setting up his service, that he might remain among them, and never depart from them. To this purpose speaketh the Prophet Haggai, when he saw the wonderful backwardness of the people of Israel, in building the Lord's house, that they gave themselves to their own profits and pleasures, but let the Temple lie waste, chap. 2, 4. Be strong, O Zerubbabel, saith the Lord, & be strong, O Iehoshua, son of Iosedech the high Priest, and be strong all ye people of the Land, saith the Lord, and work, for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts. There he gave them visible signs of his gracious presence, and was not called upon in vain; which mercy is called dwelling among them.

This use hath many branches: First, we must give cheerfully for the building & preparing of a place decent for him to be served. So did the people in the time of Moses. God must have a fit place for his service. Our churches are as the Tabernacle and Temple to the Jews, they are as an house to him. They must not be suffered to decay.

Secondly, the profaners and spoilers of the places of his worship, are worthy of severe punishment, forasmuch as God accounteth of it as a spoiling of himself, Mal. 1. If any were asked, whether they would spoil God himself or not, they would deny it, and constantly avouch it, and be offended with them that should affirm it: nevertheless, if we be careless of the means of his worship, he accounteth it as sacrilege, and condemneth it as a robbing of himself.

Thirdly, seeing it is the house wherein he dwelleth, it teacheth with what zeal & forwardness, with what desire and delight we should resort unto it, with what reverence we should remain in it, and how unwillingly we should depart from it, before the end of those holy exercises. Touching our joy in coming to it, the Prophet David testifieth in many places: when he was hindered by his persecutors, that he could not be present in the Cōgregation of God's people, he was sore troubled, and grievously complaineth of it, Psal. 42, 1, 2. He came to the house of God, as we go to the house of our neighbor, being invited to a feast. So Psal. 26, 8. Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place where thine honor dwelleth. And Psal. 122, 1. I was glad, when they said unto me, let us go into the house of the Lord. Thus ought it to be with us, we should love it above all other places, & delight in it greatly, rather than elsewhere. We should never be weary of it. Touching our reverent behavior when we are come, we learn it by Jacob; he had no sooner perceived the presence of God, but he was touched with fear, Gen. 28, 16, 17. Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not: and he was afraid, and said, How dreadful is this place? This is none other, but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven. When we come to tread in the Lord's Courts, we must be stricken with fear, and set before us his presence, and say to our own souls in a comfortable meditation of it, Surely the Lord is in this place. We must not think only, we shall meet with men there like unto our selves, but there we shall meet with the Lord himself, and shall have his presence. And thus did Cornelius stir up himself and the rest that were to hear Peter, Acts 10. And touching our departure, it ought not to be before the end, as we have shown at large elsewhere. The latter end belongeth unto us, as well as the beginning: and then peradventure we may hear that which we shall never hear again. The Word is no more at our choice to devise, & to choose what we will hear and what not, then the Sacrament. If we should see a man at the Lord's Supper, whē he had received the bread, which is one of the outward signs, to depart out of the Church before he had received the cup containing the wine, which is the other sign, all men would be ready to condemn him of intolerable contempt, and that most justly. The whole word preached, and all the prayers that are offered up to God, belong to us as well as the whole Sacrament. God will not have us know a part only of his will, but all his will, and learn his whole counsel. If the Subject should deal so unreverently in hearing his Prince speak, as we unconscionably deal with God, when he speaketh, he might well gather he were contemned. The Minister therefore must make an end of speaking▪ before we should make an ende of hearing the word that he delivereth unto us from the mouth of God.

[Verse 4. And the children of Israel did so, and put them out, &c.] The commandment that God gave to Moses of putting out these unclean persons out of the Campe, together with the reasons whereby it is confirmed, hath hitherto been handled. Now we see in these words, the execution thereof set down generally and particularly; they did put them out, and suffered them to remain no longer among them. When God had once decreed and determined they should be removed, they durst not permit them to have any residence with them. The commandment was given unto Moses, the execution of it is done by all Israel. The Governors pronounced the sentence, the whole Congregation gave their consent. It was done in their presence, and they did approve of it.

This practice teacheth us this doctrine, that no Church should suffer among them open wicked persons to live unpunished and uncensured. No Church ought to tolerate, wink at, or bear with any filthy livers, or unclean persons, or notorious offenders among them, as Deut. 23, 17. There shall be no whore of the daughters of Israel, nor a Sodomite of the sons of Israel. The Corinthians are sharply reprov'd, because they suffered one incestuous person to live among them, 1 Corinth. 5, 1, 2. It is reported commonly, that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not so much as named among the Gentiles, that one should have his fathers wife: and ye are puffed up, & have not rather mourned, that he who hath done this deed, might be taken away from among you. So the Apostle, giving rules of direction to y^e church how to live, Eph. 5, 3, 5. saith, Fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh Saints: such have no inheritance in the kingdom of heaven and of God. Christ our Savior reproveth sundry Churches in the Revelation, that suffered wicked persons to rest in their bosom & did not cast them out, Revel. 2, 14, 20. as namely the Angel of the Church in Pergamos, and the Angel of the Church in Thyatira, & therefore he had a few things against them: so that we may conclude, that no Church can without blame and blemish tolerate among them such as are wicked livers and notorious offenders.

This truth may be farther strengthened by [Reason 1] many reasons. For first, it is a comely thing for the Saints of God to do so: that as they differ from heathen men, so they may differ from heathen meetings. Moses teacheth, that they ought to put out evil from them, because they are an holy people, Deut. 23, 14. The Apostle would not have fornication and uncleanness to be once named among them, because so it becometh those that are Saints to do, Eph. 5, 3. Now they were made light in the Lord, that were sometimes darkness, and therefore they must walk as children of the light.

Secondly, for the neglect of this duty, the [Reason 2] wrath of God falleth upon the sons of men. He is the God of order, and requireth that all things in the Church be done in order. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, Col. 3, 6. For such things sake, the wrath of God cometh upon the children of disobedience. And we have sundry examples of this, in the people of Israel, who were diversely destroyed, because of their sins, 1 Cor. 10, 5. With many of them God was not well pleased, for they were overthrown in the Wilderness. If then notorious sins bring down God's wrath, notorious sinners are not to be winked at, to the end that his wrath may be turned away.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, we shown before that they were as swine and dogs, or as unclean beasts, and should not be admitted to the fellowship of Christ's sheep which are clean, lest they defile them and corrupt them through their contagion, and tread down with their feet, the residue of their pastures. The Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 5, 6. Do ye not know, that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Sin therefore being infectious, the sinner is not to be tolerated in the assembly of the righteous.

The uses remain to be handled. First of [Use] all, it should minister great matter of much grief and sorrow to every society of Christian men and women, when any of the Congregation grow to be thus profane and defiled with the contagion of sin. Is it not a great grief to have any one member of the body cut off? Or can any endure it without pain and anguish? So should it be when any that is called a brother, is put from the rest of the body of the Church, and severed from the external communion of Saints. This the Apostle teacheth, 1 Corinth. 5, 2. Ye are puffed up, and have not sorrowed. This reproveth those that regard not this censure, whether it be executed upon themselves or others, neither are touched with the dishonor that is done to God, when heinous and horrible sins do break out of the bosom of the Church. The Prophet testifieth, Psal. 119, 136. that his eyes gushed out Rivers of tears, because they kept not his law. So the Lord speaketh to the man that was clothed in linen, whom he appointed to preserve such as were his, Ezek. 9, 4. Go through the midst of the City, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh, and that cry for all the abominations, that be done in the midst thereof. If any man be present, and behold the Chirurgical ready to cut off the arm or leg of another, he is moved with a kind of compassion and commiseration, and is touched with grief for it: how much more ought we to be grieved, when a brother is cut off from the communion of the Church, which is the mother of us all? The Prophet rejoiced, whē they said unto him, Let us go into the house of the Lord: so it ought to minister matter of mourning, when any have this grievous punishment laid upon them, as to be turned out of the Church. It ought therefore to be accounted, neither matter of joy, nor matter of gain, neither should we be glad to hear that any are so proceeded against.

Secondly, it is a cause of great mercy, and [Use 2] of a wonderful blessing from God, whē such as transgress, are resisted and punished. So long as sin is suffered, God is offended, and his wrath is extended over those places and persons. He hath a controversy against those that sin against him. The host of Israel could not prosper so long as Achan remained among them, the enemies prevailed against them, and they turned their backs unto them: but when he was taken away, and the glory of God revenged which he had defaced, Israel prospered and had the upper hand. They could not stand before their enemies, until they had put the accursed thing from among them. And how much he hateth sin, he declareth sometimes in his own servants: for Jonah must be cast into the sea, or else the Ship and the passengers in it shall ever be in jeopardy; & therefore he said unto the Mariners, Take me up, and cast me forth into the sea, so shall the sea be calm unto you: for I know, that for my sake this great tempest is upon you. If then he spare not his own people, how should he spare others that are his enemies? We have a notable example of this, afterward in this book; when y^e people of Israel began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab, & bowed down unto their God's, and so coupled themselves unto Baal-peor, God brought a fearful judgment upon them, and there died in that plague, four and twenty thousand, But Phinehas the son of Eleazar rose up from the midst of the Congregation, and with his spear he smote the adulterer and the adulteress, so the plague ceased from the children of Israel, the anger of God being turned away from them. A contrary example is to be seen in Eli, 1 Sam. 2. he winked at the wickedness of his ungodly sons, and it brought down a grievous judgment upon them, and upon himself, and upon the people. Such churches therefore as are careful to put from among them notorious offenders, are blessed of God. Sin is the cause of all judgment, and the removing thereof bringeth all blessings with it.

Thirdly, every Congregation is bound to [Use 3] purge their own body from such excrements and filthiness as annoy it. We must have herein true zeal & godly courage in the cause of God and his truth. We must not stand in fear of the faces of men, though they be never so great and mighty. The censures of the Church must not be like the spiders web, which catcheth flies and gnats, whereas the bigger creatures break from it. They must be administered indifferently, without all respect of persons: otherwise it layeth open a gap to destroy religion, faith, honesty, justice, and equity, & maketh a way to wrong and all impiety. This reproveth such as dare not deal with great mē, rich men, and mighty men: they are afraid to touch them, lest they purchase their displeasure. These are like to fowlers, that pitch not the net to catch kites or Hawkes that do hurt, but for such as do no hurt. They suffer great men to do what they list▪ and see thē not: they let them alone, & either through negligence they will not, or through fear they dare not controlle them: according to the saying of the Poet, Dat veniam coruis: vexat censura columbas.

They that are censors or chastisers of the manners of others, do pardon such as are most wicked and greatest malefactors, but do condemn them that walk in innocence, or at least sin of infirmity. But whatsoever the men are, when they wax impenitent, the Church must spew them out, as an unprofitable burden that lieth upon the stomach. It reproveth those also that would not have the poor complained off, or brought before thē, whatsoever they commit, and how much soever they offend, because they are not able to fill their purses, or to pay their fees, or to give them money. These are such Officers as regard their private gain before the churches good: and measure all things by their own profit, not by the Churches benefit: and seek to enrich themselves, not to reform the offender: and to advance their own estate, not to promote the glory of God. But the Church ought not so much to look upon the persons of men, whether they be high or low, rich or poor, as upon the cause: not so much what they are able to pay, as what their sins deserve: following the example of our heavenly Father, who rewardeth everyone according to his deserts.

Lastly, Is no Church to tolerate any open [Use 4] offenders among them? then they must use the censure of excommunication as an ordinance of God, not an invention of men: and not only know the nature and use of it, but practice it to the glory of GOD, and to the good of others. This is it which our Savior Christ hath left and commanded to be executed among us, Math. 18, verse 17. If he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the Church; but if he neglect to hear the Church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a Publican.

This use hath many particular branches, but before we come unto them, we are to make it appear, that in this place Christ our Savior speaketh of excommunication. For the words themselves going before, and following after, are plain and evident. In the circumstances before, it is manifest that he spake of private admonition, this here delivered is a public censure: that was done before two or three, this before many. And afterward our Savior saith, Verily I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven. What is it to bind, but when the Church knoweth a man to be frozen in the dregs of sin, separated from the spiritual communion of Christ and the Church, and made the bondslave of Satan, to pronounce and declare him to be an impenitent person? and to remain as a captive bound in the chains of Satan, and to keep him out of the Church, as a prisoner kept in prison, until by this sharp remedy he be healed & brought to repentance, as it falleth out to the elect, who are always bettered by it? And what else is it to loose, then when the Church seeth by the true fruits of his repentance, that he is freed, delivered, and loosed from the hands and bands of Satan, by the mighty power of Christ's Spirit, to pronounce him set at liberty to have communion & fellowship with the members of Christ.

Let us now come to the several points to be observed in this ordinance. First, observe what excommunication is, that we be not deceived in the practice of it, passing over those that ought not to be passed over, and striking those that ought not to be stricken. For sometimes they are smitten with the sword, that deserve not to be touched with the scabbert: and they feel the bluntnes of the back, that deserve the sharpness of the edge. Excommunication therefore is an action of the Church, performed in the Name of Christ, whereby a brother grievously offending, and remaining impenitent, is separated from the Communion of the faithful, in those things especially y^t pertain to the worship of God; aiming thereby at the good of the Church, the salvation of the excommunicate person, and at the glory of God. No man ought to deny, that this authority is givē to the church, or to make any doubt of it, and so call it into question.

[Objection.] But peradventure some man will say, that Christ saith not, Let him be to the whole Church an heathen, or a Publican; but to thee against whom he hath trespassed, and to whom he will not be reconciled: whereas excommunication separateth from the whole body. [Answer.] I answer, this is a frivolous objection, and a poor shift to shake this holy ordinance of God in pieces, which is not able once to stir and remove out of his place. For no man ought to be esteemed and accounted as an heathen and Publican, of any particular member, who is acknowledged by the whole Church to be a brother, and communicateth with other of the brethren in all the privileges of the Church. And as though he hath not offended the Church, who beside the offense, whereof he was reprov'd, and wherewith being now revealed and manifest, he hath hurt the Church, hath been stubborn and obstinate against the same, nay stubborn & stiffnecked, obstinate and obdurate against the word of God, by which he was convinced, and exhorted. The Church hath not one cause and another to esteem of him, and to judge of him, but we proceed by one and the same rule. Seeing therefore the whole Church hath the same cause which I have, why he ought to be reputed as an heathen and a Publican: to wit, sin committed and perpetrated, and joined with stiffnesse and stubbornness, with contumely and contempt: what reason can be rendered, the cause being common, why he should be to me alone as an heathen and Publican, and not also to the whole Church?

Moreover, the ende why he ought to be unto me as an heathen & a Publican, is the same with the Church in all respects, namely that the brother not repenting nor returning, should be ashamed, and as it were by force & compulsion, be drawn & driven unto repentance. Therefore as well to the whole Church as unto me, he ought to be as an heathen and a Publican, that is, an excommunicate person: so that under the person of one, we must understand the whole Church, as if Christ had said, Let him be unto thee, and to all the brethren, and to the whole Church, as an heathen and a Publican. They thē that restrain these words, Let him be unto thee, to one member of the Church alone, are like to the Doctors of Rome, who, because Christ said to Peter, To thee will I give the keys of the kingdom of heaven, conclude, that they were given to Peter alone, that thereupon they may build the foundation of a counterfeit and supposed supremacy: whereas he gave them to all the Apostles alike, as if Christ had said, I commit the keys to thee, and to the rest of the Apostles, and to their successors. So when he saith in this place, Let him be to thee as an heathen and a Publican, he meaneth, both to thee and to the rest of the parts of the Church, one being named instead of all the rest.

Lastly, the text it self being rightly weighed and considered, will make it plain and apparent, that this is a foolish cavil and a slender evasion, to understand the words thus, Let him be to thee, that is, Let him be to thee alone and to no others: for Christ having said, Let him be unto thee as an heathen man: to the end he might strengthen and confirm this, that he would ratify all this in heaven above, he annexeth immediately after, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven. Behold here the change of number used by Christ. Tell me then, wherefore, when he had said in the singular number, Let him be unto thee, as speaking of one, he spake afterward in the plural, whatsoever ye shall loose, whatsoever ye shall bind, as speaking of many? What was the cause of this difference, but only to signify, that under one person he understood the Church? To shut up this first point, we are not to doubt, but that Christ gave power and authority to the Church, to excommunicate wicked persons that are obstinate and impenitent, when by private admonition they cannot be won, as we shall show more at large afterward.

Secondly, we must consider, when any man is to be excommunicated; the fit season whereof is, when he hath contemned all admonitions and exhortations of private men, and is waxen proud and self-willed, & setteth himself against the Church; and not before. For then he manifesteth, as clearly as the light that shineth at noon day, not only his obstinacy & resolution to go forward in sin, but his contempt of the word, and of the Church, and of Christ himself, the author of the word, and the head of the Church: so that he is separated from the communion which all the faithful servants of GOD, have with Jesus Christ and the Church, whereof we say in the Articles of our faith, I believe the holy Catholic Church, the Communion of Saints. Whereby it appeareth, that he who is excommunicated, is not properly by the Churches censure separated from God and his people, but is declared & pronounced to be separate: forasmuch as properly it is sin which separateth, Your iniquities have separated between you and your God: and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear. Excommunication then doth not separate, but serveth to show who are separated: even as the fan doth not make the chaff, but showeth it manifestly, which before lay hid among the good Corn. Whensoever therefore sinners grow obstinate, it is high time to draw out this sword of justice, to cut off from the Citty of God, such incorrigible persons.

Thirdly, Christ our Savior showeth to whō excommunication belongeth, and who are subject unto it. He is under it that is called a brother, and being exhorted, will not hear; being admonished, will not obey: being reproved, will not repent. He must be a brother, he must be admonished, reproved, and convinced. He must be told of his fault or faults privately and publicly. He must be one that hath confessed Christ, and called upon God the Father together with us, albeit he have denied him in his deeds. It is the Lord that will judge thē that are without, the Church hath nothing to do with them. God will punish those that are in the Church, & those that are out of the Church, forasmuch as all belong to his jurisdiction: it is not so with the Church, they have nothing to do with such as are infidels, and never gave their names to Christ, as Turks, Jews, Pagans, and such like. For as they that never were in the Synagogue and of the Synagogue, could not be put out of the Synagogue: and as they that were not of the communion, cannot be thrust out of the communion: so they y^t were never of the Church, or in the number of the faithful brethren, cannot be cast out of the Church. For these only are they that are spots and blots to the church: these are they that cause the Name of God to be evil spoken off: these are they that lay stūbling blocks before the weak: these are they that regard not the first or second table of the Law: these are they that tread under foot all counsels, persuasions, and admonitions made out of the word of God: these are they that are settled and resolved to continue in evil, whatsoever the Church say unto them.

Fourthly, he is to be excommunicated only, that hath in this manner offended; neither is it to be suffered, or allowed, or practiced, that one should be excommunicated for another, except peradventure he also offend, and be entangled in the same sin, or have given consent unto it. The son is not to be excommunicated for the father, nor the father for the son. The rule of the Apostle is to be observed, Gal. 6, 5. Every man shall bear his own burden. It is a common proverb among us, Every vessel shall stand upon his own bottom, that is, everyone shall bear the punishment of his own sin. This is it which the Prophet Jeremiah teacheth, chap. 31, 30. Everyone shall die for his own iniquity: every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge. To this purpose speaketh Paul, Roman. 14, 12. Everyone of us shall give an account to God for himself.

If any object, [Object.] that we are to give an account to God, not only for our selves, but for these also that belong unto our charge, as the father for himself and his children, as we see in Eli; the Shepherd for his sheep, and the watchman for the souls of the people, as the Lord saith, His blood will I require at thy hands, Ezek 33.10. and Hebr. 13, verse 17. They watch for your souls, as they that must give an account. [Answer.] I answer, they shall indeed give an account and be punished, howbeit it is for their own sins, and no farther. Parents, Masters, Magistrates, and Ministers, shall not answer for their sins that are committed unto them, for the sins of their children, their servants, their subjects, and their hearers, but for the sins which themselves commit by their negligence, because they do not look unto them, nor admonish them, nor reprove them, nor restrain them, as it is plainly expressed in the Prophet Ezekiel, chap. 33, verse 8, 9. If thou doest not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand: Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way, to turn from it; if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity, but thou hast delivered thy soul So then, he that is impenitent, is to be excommunicated, even he only, and not others that are not partakers of his sin. S. Augustine hath a notable Epistle to this purpose written to a certain Bishop called Auxilius, who being a young man, for the offense of the master of the house, excommunicated all the rest of his family, and would not deliver the Sacraments to his children and household: whom he persuadeth to lay aside anger, and to reverse his sentence, lest the man perish that is a friend, & the devil rejoice in it that is an enemy. In this case in a manner do they offend, who refuse to baptize the children of thē that are excommunicated, & such as are borne in fornication, because their parents are impenitent, as though the son should bear the iniquity of the father, or the wife of the husband, or the servant of the master, or he that is not yet born, the iniquity of thē that are borne. What hath the infant offended that is borne in the Church, that he should not be baptized of the Church? The Prophet saith, The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, nor the father, the iniquity of the son; but the soul that sinneth, it shall die. This also is the resolution of Beza in one of his Epistles, proving that the children of the excommunicate may be baptized. We conclude therefore, that they only, which have offended, and remain obstinate in their offenses, are to be excommunicated: forasmuch as Christ never said, if he hear not the Church, let him and all that belong any way unto him, be as heathens and Publican's, but let him be unto thee, that is, him only. This serveth to condemn the horrible and abominable tyranny of the Bishops of Rome, who have not only raged upon the bodies of the Saints, but also exercised dominion over their consciences. These are they that send out their curses, and smite the chiefest Monarchs of the world, as it were with thunder & lightning. They pronounce sentence of excommunication for trifles, and they absolve from it for trifles. They excommunicate one for another, and they absolve one for another. They cast out of the Church, those that do not belong to their jurisdiction: for what have they to do with Princes? When Princes are supposed to have offended, they curse & condemn whole states and Kings, as they have served heretofore the Kings of this Land, and lately the State of Venice. They have interdicted whole Realms, they have forbidden divine service to be said, and the Sacraments to be administered.

Fifthly, we must learn from what things excommunicate persons are excluded, that we may y^e better know how to behave our selves toward them. Christ saith, let such be as heathens & Publican's; that is, abstain from such false brethren, and communicate not with thē, either in matters of religion, or in common conversation. But how far we must forbear their company and conversing with them, we shall speak afterward. The word excommunication and to excommunicate, note out a cutting off frō the communion; which Christ noteth by the branches that bring forth no fruit: If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered, and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned. The Evangelists also call it to put out of the Synagogues, that is, out of the fellowship of the faithful, met together in one place. Hence it is also, that they were said to be accursed, being out of the Church, as they are blessed that abide in the Church, having a communion together in matters of religion, and fellowship one with another. Now we must understand, that there is a twofold communion, from whence an excommunicate person may be said to be excluded: the one is inward and spiritual, the other outward and corporal. The inward communion is that, which every faithful one hath by faith and love, first with God, and then with the Saints of God, and therefore in the Creed it is called, y^e Communion of Saints. For all the Saints are joined together with Christ their head, by the band of the Spirit, & among themselves, and with the whole body of the Church, 1 Cor. 10, 16. The bread which we break (in the Supper of the Lord) is it not the communion of the body of Christ? saith Paul. And the Apostle John in his first Epistle, That which we have seen & heard, declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. From this fellowship, can none be excluded but by sin. The Prophet saith, your sins have separated between me and you. And John teacheth, that if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son, cleanseth us from all sin. And Paul in his Epistle to the Romans, showeth particularly, that there is nothing under heaven can separate us from Christ and from the love of God, neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature: among all which he doth not reckon sin, and therefore it is sin alone which can separate any man frō the grace of God, and from communion with him. The excommunication of the Church can bar and shut out no man from this communion. For if any man be truly engrafted into Christ, endued with faith in Christ, and repentance from dead works, being a member of his body in deed and in truth, excommunication shall hurt him nothing at all, in regard of that spiritual communion; forasmuch as the sentence so given, is void and frustrate, and the door is shut up & locked fast with a false key. Such an excommunication is a blessing not a cursing. Again, albeit a man justly deserveth to be excommunicated through his sin, & to be separated from God, yet excommunication is not the first or chief cause of it, but his own sin, and the continuance in it: seeing it doth not sever him from God, but declareth him to be severed through his impenitency, as y^e Priests under the law, putting out the leprous, did not defile them with the leprosy, but pronounced them to be defiled; & as the Judge giving sentence upon a malefactor, doth not thereby make him a malefactor, (for he was so before) but pronounce him to be so; and as a thief that is found guilty, is not thereby made a thief. But here a question ariseth, how can it be, [Object.] that any having a true fellowship with Christ, can be separated from it through sin? Can he that is a member of Christ, be made no member? All men are either reprobate or elect. The reprobate are not, neither were, neither ever shall be partakers of this communion: how then should they be separated frō it, that were never of it or in it? And touching the elect, they can never fall from the grace of election; the foundation of God remaineth sure, & hath this seal, the Lord knoweth who are his, so that it is unchangeable. Besides, such are also engrafted into Christ, and cannot be separated from his communion, according the saying of Christ, John 6, ver. 37. All that the Father giveth me, shall come to me: and him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out. And the Apostle John saith, They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest, that they were not all of us. If then the reprobate were never of this communion, and the elect can never fall from this communion, it may seem that none can be said to be truly excommunicated, that is, to be separated from that spiritual communion which we have with Christ and with all the Saints by faith, hope, and love. I answer, that which is affirmed of the elect and reprobate is most true, nevertheless that which is concluded from thence is most false, as the learned have well observed. For first of all, touching the reprobate, that being hypocrites were once in the Church, though they were never of the Church, neither truly partakers of this spiritual communion of the Saints, yet then they are said to be separated from it, when they are manifested & declared to have been always strangers unto it, and separated from it: as when David prayeth in the Psalms, that they might be blotted out of the book of life, Psal. 69, 28. as if he had said, declare it & show it plainly, that they were never written in the book of eternal election. Secondly, touching the elect, the question is more difficult, and yet the knot is not so intricate or entangled, but it may be loosed. For albeit they cannot be cut off from the grace of election, because his gifts and calling are without repentance, Rom. 11, 29. neither can be wholly and altogether excluded from that communion which they have by faith with Christ, and by love with the Church, both by reason of the stablesse of God's promises, and by reason of the efficacy & force of Christ's prayer heard of the Father, Luke 22, 32. Yet in some sort & in some respect they separate themselves as much as lieth in them, when they fall into grievous sins, as David, when he committed adultery, and Peter, when he denied his Master. The gifts of the holy Ghost are as a flame of fire kindled in us: such sins are as water poured upon them to quench it: and except GOD did grant his Spirit to dwell in them, and preserve it as fire hidden under the ashes, they would lose it wholly, & be quite and clean excluded from this spiritual communion. Notwithstanding, our salvation is sure for his promise sake, who hath promised to put his fear in our hearts, that we should not depart from him, and for Christ's prayer, who prayed for Peter & all the elect, that their faith should not fail. Hence it is, that he keepeth a remnant of grace in them, and cherisheth the fire of his Spirit, that it should not go out; so that the flame is slaked, and the heat is diminished. But in his good time, he kindleth the fire, and stirreth up the heat, sometimes by his word, and sometimes by his corrections; and therefore the Apostle willeth Timothy to stir up as coals, the gift of God that was in him: & David having experience hereof, prayeth unto him, to create a new heart in him, and not to take away his Spirit from him. Ps. 51, 10, 11. Thus we see how the faithful are not wholly, but yet in some part separated frō the communion of Christ, because they are deprived of the sweet comforts that they felt before, & of the large measure of grace which they find greatly diminished by the committing of sin and continuing in it. This is the spiritual communion.

The external communion standeth in a common partaking together in the word, in prayers & in the receiving of the Sacraments, and in familiarity and friendship one with another, as Luke speaketh of the Church of Christ after his ascension, Acts 2, 42. They continued steadfastly in the Apostles doctrine, and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. Excommunication separateth from all these. But some will say, [Object.] doth excommunication take away all commercing and conversing one with another? May not one in any sort live with such? Or doth it dissolve all bands of nature and policy? I answer, [Answer.] no. There are some bands so firmly and closely knit & tied together, that nothing can loose them, and abrogate them. Some duties are natural, some domestical, and some civil, which no excommunication can diminish or dissolve, or dispense withal. The Apostle giveth this as a general precept, If thine enemy hunger, give him meat, and if he thirst, give him drink. If an excommunicate person be in want and in any distress, we must help him and minister unto him such things as are necessary for his preservation: we must not cast away all care of him, and all love unto him, forasmuch as God hath made us keepers one of another. Again, it is lawful to buy of him, & to sell unto him, and to bargain with him, albeit we should not converse and commerce with him as with a friend. Moreover, if we owe personal duties to such a one as is in the family with us, we cannot shake them off under any color or pretence of excommunication. The wife must perform due benevolence to the husband, the children must obey their parents, the servants must count their masters worthy of all honor, and contrariwise: provided always that they do not cease to pray for thē, to admonish them, and to hate their sins, and that they look to themselves that they do not defend them in their wicked courses, and join with them in opinion, for then we make our selves partakers of their sins.

Lastly, let us set before us the ends of excommunication, which also have been considered in part already. One end of it is, the good of the person excommunicated, that if it be possible he may be won. Christ delivereth the doctrine of salvation, & the Gospel is the power of God to salvation, to everyone that believeth. For whereas Christ Jesus saith of himself, y^t he came to send fire and sword into the world, and that he is appointed for the fall of many in Israel, Lu. 12, 46, & 2, 34. & y^t the Gospel is the savor of death unto death, 2 Corinth. 2, 15. Yet this is not the proper end of Christ or the Gospel, but as it were beside their purpose through the malice and wickedness of men. The Apostle speaking of the Law, saith, Rom. 7. It is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good. The like we may say of the discipline of the church; it was ordained not to destruction, but to salvation: and if it attain not to this end, the fault is in the person impenitent, not in the ordinance of God: as when a good & approved medicine well applied, recovereth not the patient, the fault is not in the Physician, but in the desperateness of the disease. This ought to teach all persons excommunicate for their sins, to submit themselves to the stroke of God's own hand, that thereby they may be healed. Impenitent persons are as those that are diseased: sins are as sicknesses, or wounds, or soars; excommunication is as physic for the soul, and a souereigne medicine to recover them: and the Governors of the Church, are as good Physicians, or tender Surgeons, who, when all other remedies of admonition, and exhortation fail, are compelled to sear, and cut, and launce, and apply as it were desperate cures: not that they delight to be sawing and searing, but because the cutting off of one member, serveth to preserve the rest of the body. Let us be content to suffer for the benefit of the soul, as we are for the health of the body. Remember the counsel of the best Physician that ever was, Christ Jesus, who came to seek and to save that which was lost, If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. The end of excommunication, is the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord. It is a bitter medicine, and unpleasant to the taste, howbeit it is wholesome and healthful. It is as a saw that cutteth off a dead member, or as an hot iron that seareth an ulcer: howbeit the effect is pleasant and profitable. It maketh sad, howbeit it is godly sorrow that causeth repentance never to be repented off. It is like the seed, the which, except it be cast into the earth and die, it can bring forth no fruit. But it may be objected, [Objection.] how can excommunication make to the good and salvation of him that is excommunicated, forasmuch as it cutteth him off from the body of Christ, and from the communion of Saints, that he may be no longer a member? A member that is once cut off from the body, receiveth no more life from it, neither can be joined to it again, as a branch that is cut frō the vine, withereth, John. 15. How then can excommunication be any way profitable? I answer [Answer.] as before, that all they who are in the body of the church, & enrolled in the number of the faithful, are not after one manner members of the church, neither are all cut off alike by y^e two edged sword of excommunication. Some are in the church as evil humors in the body, but are not of the Church, as all hypocrites, who have givē their names to Christ, but are not Christ's, because they have not the Spirit of Christ. They have a show of faith & godliness, but they are as Idols, that seem to be that which they are not. They seem to have a communiō with Christ, but they have not; like to one y^t hath a wood leg so artificially joined to his body, that there is none which taketh it not to be a true leg indeed, whereas notwithstanding it is not so. When the Church proceedeth to excommunication against these, it cutteth them off and casteth them away altogether, so that such a separation cannot tend to their salvation, but is a fore-runner of their destruction. Others are true members of the church, & have a true communion with Christ & his Church. These are of two sorts, some are so kept by the power of the Spirit in obedience, that albeit they sin, (for who is it •hat sinneth not?) yet they give no offense to the Church, & are not obstinate in their sins, but being admonished, or without admonition they repent and amend. Now, where there is repentance from sin, and amendment of life, there is no need of excommunication. There are another sort that want this remedy, and cannot otherwise be cured; the fiery darts wherewith Satan hath wounded them, are so deadly. These the word cannot restore, and the admonitions of a few and of many they contemn: to these, excommunication is profitable, when all other means fail. This foundation being laid, the answer to the former objection is easy, to wit, that it cannot be profitable to be separated from the body from whence it had life, no more then for the branch to be cut away from the vine: forasmuch as we must consider, that there is a twofold separation, in whole, or else in part, and therefore the similitude is not to be presfed farther then the purpose of it. That separation which doth altogether separate any member from the body, cannot be profitable unto it. But excommunication maketh not such a separation, neither diuideth the elect (of whom we speak) wholly and finally from the body of the Church, but only in part, in respect of the flesh, not according to the Spirit, in regard of the corruption of the old mā, not in regard of the renewing of the inner man. The second end of excommunication is the salvation of the whole Church; for the Corinthians are willed to put away the evil one frō among them, and to purge out the old leaven, that they might be a new lump. Where the Apostle showeth, that the casting out of a wicked man from the company of the faithful, is to this purpose, that if he will not repent, yet at least others should be provided for, th•t they be not infected with his impiety, as it were with a leprosy. The third ende is, that the rest may fear, and be kept within the bounds of their duty. That which the Apostle speaketh of public rebuking, Them that sin, rebuke before all, that others also may fear: may also be applied to excommunication, namely, that the stiffnecked should not be spared no more then wolves be suffered among the sheep, to the end that others by their example may take heed. This is to pull out of the fire, and to save with fear. It is better for us to learn by the punishments of others, then to be censured our selves for our own sins. Daniel, setting before Belshazzar the king his manifest offenses, who was weighed in the balance, and found wanting, doth aggravate and increase his sins, that he had seen his father deposed from his kingly throne, and driven from the sons of men, and fed with grass like oxen, yet he had not humbled his heart though he knew all these things, but lifted up himself against the LORD of heaven. So when we behold any cut off from the society of the Saints, and do not fear the same sentence, it argueth that we are as members benumbed, and want that lively feeling which ought to be in the members.

The fourth end is, that those punishments, which hang over the Church for sin, may be avoided. For so long as they that deserve to be excommunicate, remain in the Church, God is provoked to plague that Church, as we saw before in the example of Achan, Josh. 7.11. When the Church hath done what lieth in them to do, God is appeased▪ and his wrath turned away, as we noted by the zeal that Phinehas shown against the adulterer, and the adulteress, Numb. 25.7. Psal. 106.30. he stood up and executed judgment, and so the plague was stayed.

Lastly, the glory of God which is the ende of all good things, is another end of excommunication. This the Church ought to aim at, and if this be before their eyes, that are the governors of the Church, it will keep them from declining either to the right hand, or to the left hand, both from sparing the guilty, and from punishing the guiltless, from winking at the sins of great ones, and censuring the faults and infirmities of those of low degree too sharply; from winking at great beams in some, and having Eagles eyes to pry into the motes of others. This will make us walk in the beaten path of God's word. If then, in the least things, as our eating and drinking, we must do all to the glory of God▪ how much more ought we to respect it, when we are to deal in so serious and weighty a cause? For his name is honored and glorified in the salvation of the Elect, and in the just condemnaon of the reprobate, both which are furthered by this ordinance of excommunication being rightly used.

5 And the Lord spake unto Moses▪ saying,

6 Speak unto the children of Israel, When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit to do a trespass against the Lord, and that person be guilty:

7 Then they shall confess their sin which they have done: and he shall reompense his trespass with the principal thereof, and add unto it the fifth part thereof, and give it unto him against whom he hath trespassed.

8 But if the man have no kinseman to recompense the trespass unto, let the trespass be recompensed unto the Lord, even to the Priest: beside the ram of the atonement, whereby an atonement shall be made for him.

9 And every offering of all the holy things of the children of Israel, which they bring unto the Priest, shall be his.

10 And every man's hallowed things shall be his: whatsoever any man giveth the Priest, it shall be his.

The first part of the Chapter hath hitherto been handled, touching the putting of lepers and other polluted persons out of the host: the second part followeth concerning falsehood committed, whereby our brother is damnified, beguiled, and deceived, to the 11 verse. Our neighbor trusteth us, and repositeth confidence in us at our word, but we often make no conscience to deceive and defraud him, so it may be to our own gain and commodity, against the common rule that nature taught the Gentiles themselves, Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the Law and the Prophets, Matth. 7.12. In this division therefore we are to consider two things: first▪ the promulgation of the law instituted of God to amend and correct this fault. Secondly, the application of this particular to the general law touching the Priests maintenance. The law is first propounded and enacted, and then amplified by a prouiso or exception set down by way of preventing of an objection. The substance of the Law is this. If any man or woman have dealt falsely with his brother in any part of his goods, by circumventing of him fraudulently, or detayning any of them wrongfully, whereby he is injured, and God is offended, so that his own conscience accuseth him & witnesseth against him: this course is to be taken, he must seek to blot out and wash away his trespass and offense which he hath done, three ways. First by confession: secondly, by restitution: thirdly, by reconciliation.

First, he must confess his sin, and crave pardon from the bottom of his heart; he must submit himself unto God, and acknowledge freely & willingly, what he hath done, knowing that he can by no means hide his sin, nor by any color keep it from the sight of God. It booteth him not to deny it, or defend it, or excuse it, or diminish it, or turn it over upon others. If he would receive pardon and forgiveness, it is necessarily required of him, that he use hearty confession, both of this, and all other trespasses and transgressions.

Secondly, we must make satisfaction to him whom we have wronged, and from whom we wrested anything. It is not enough to make open confession unto God, unless also we make actual restitution unto men. For the sin is not pardoned, except that which is taken away be restored. Wherefore, that the party offended should be recompensed, and the party offending should be punished, he must together with the principal, make good the damage, and put a fifth part more thereunto, and give it unto him against whom he hath transgressed. This is done, to discourage injurious persons, and to make them afraid to do wrong, whether by fraud or violence. For if they should only restore the principal, they knew, if their offenses were found out, they should be no losers.

Thirdly, he must seek • reconciliation and atonement with God, by offering up of a ram in sacrifice, which figured out the suffering of Christ, and offering up of himself once upon the Cross, for the discharge of our sin, and appeasing of the wrath of his Father. It is in vain to make satisfaction unto men, except we know how God will be satisfied: and it shall profit us nothing to be at peace with men, except we be at peace with our God.

This is the enacting of the Law: an exception is annexed by way of prevention. For the offender that hath trespassed against his neighbor, might object and say, How can I restore that I have taken? it may be the party is dead; it may be he hath neither son nor daughter; neither brother, nor kinsman: may I not then lawfully conceal it and justly retain it unto myself? I answer, nay; the Lord answereth, Thou shalt by no means detain the goods that are not thine own, if thou look for any good at my hand: as if he should say, when thy neighbor is any way damnified, let the loss be recompensed, and the damage restored, provided always, and be it farther enacted, y^t if the owner be dead or unknown, and he have none of his kindred and alliance living to be his heir, it shall not be thine, it is the Lord's, and he giveth it unto the Priest for a recompense of his labors in the Tabernacle, and his service of the Lord, and his teaching of the people, God is the Lord of the soil, he challengeth it at his own, and he disposeth it at his own pleasure.

Thus much touching the Law: the applying of it followeth, where God ordaineth it as a Law, that all such things as are purloyned and conueyghed away from the right owners and possessours, should (in case they or any of them fail) be bestowed upon the Priest, which is amplified by an equal comparison of the like; all other things offered should be his also, and might not be altered to any other use: as if he had said, As I have given them the offerings of the people, so I have given to them this also, that they shall have right as well to the one as to the other by my gift.

[Verse 5. When a man or woman shall commit any sin, &c.] After we have seen the order of the words, let us make a collection of doctrine. And first observe, that Moses speaketh in this place, not of any sin committed against piety and godliness, but against the equity and justice that ought to be among men: not of the immediate worship of God prescribed in the first table, but of wrongs done to our brethren, forbidden in the second table, as appeareth by sundry circumstances, both because he speaketh of making him recompense, which no man can give to God, it being impossible to make satisfaction to him for the least offense; and because the trespass shall be recompensed to the Priest: yet notwithstanding he calleth it a trespass against God. Heereby we learn, that all sin, even the breach of the second table, is committed against God. Whatsoever injuries and offenses are done against our brethren, are sins and offenses committed against God. This appeareth evidently in other places of the Law, as Levite. 6.2, 3, 4. If any man sin, and commit a trespass against the Lord, and deny to his neighbor that which is taken him to keep, &c. Where he teacheth, that to deny the thing committed to our keeping, to break the trust reposed in us, to rob our neighbor violently, to take his goods from him, to deny that which we have found and our neighbor hath lost, are all of them sins against God, though trespasses against men.

The charge also that Nathan layeth upon David, together with his answer, make this truth most plain, 2 Sam. 12.9.13. The Prophet reproving him saith, Wherefore hast thou despised the commandment of the Lord to do evil in his sight? thou hast killed Uriah the Hittite with the sword, and hast taken his wife to be thy wife, and hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon. To this heavy message from God delivered by his servant the Prophet, doth David submit himself, and in the humility of his soul consesseth, I have sinned against the Lord. This is that which Joseph witnesseth, when he was enticed to commit folly with his wanton mistress; (but yielded not unto the temptation) he saith unto her, How can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God? He doth not say, against my master, and so render evil for good unto him, as he might truly have said, but he speaketh with a feeling conscience that he should sin against God, in offending against his master.

To all these we may also add the testimony of the Lord himself uttered unto Cain that had conceived malice and murder in his heart against his brother, a sin against the second Table, the sum whereof is, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Gen. 4.6, 7. Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance cast down? if thou do well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door, &c. It is a notable exhortation that Moses giveth in the behalf of the poor that were among them, Deut. 15.6. Beware that there be not a thought in thy wicked heart, saying, The seventh year, the year of release is at hand, and thine eye be evil against thy poor brother, and thou givest him naught, and he cry unto the Lord against thee, and it be sin unto thee. Whereby we see, that not only such as take away other men's goods wrongfully, do commit sin against God, but they that detain their own goods couetously, and do not bestow them upon the relief of the poor: so that a man may sin in his own, as well as in other men's, in overmuch sparing, as well as in wronging others. To the same purpose he speaketh in another place against the oppressing of an hired servant that is poor and needy, whether he were of their brethren, or of the strangers in the land, Deut. 24.15. At his day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the Sun go down upon it, for he is poor, and setteth his heart upon it, lest he cry against thee unto the Lord, and it be sin unto thee. All these places prove unto us, that all sin is committed against God, and respecteth him, either immediately when we sin against the first Table, or mediately when we sin against the second Table.

This will better appear by such reasons as [Reason 1] are grounded out of the Scriptures, and serve to confirm this truth, and to establish our consciences in it. First, sin is nothing else, but the breach of the Law of God, 1 John. 5.17 and the party that is offended properly & directly, is God himself. For except there had been a law given of God forbidding or commanding, there could be no offense against any creature. If God had not said, Thou shalt not steal, theft had not been a sin: and lust could not be accounted as a sin, except the Law had said, Thou shalt not lust, as Paul confesseth he had not known sin, but by the law. And in another place he testifieth that where there is no law, there is no transgression, forasmuch as by the law cometh the knowledge of sin. If God had not said, Thou shalt not commit adultery, David had never offended Uriah in taking his wife. If he had never said, Thou shalt not kill: it had been no offense to take away life. Absalom had never transgressed in dishonoring his father, Cain in murdering his brother, Ziba in slandering his master if God had never published a law against these things. Hence it is that the Apostle John saith, Whosoever committeth sin, transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the Law. This is a full and perfect definition of sin, so that as the definition, and the thing defined, are both one, so are sin, and the breach of the Law. For as every sin is the transgression of the Law, so every transgression of the law is sin, and nothing else but sin; as every man is a reasonable creature, and every reasonable creature is a man. If then by sin the law of the eternal God be broken, we see how it toucheth him nearly, so that his Majesty is offended, and his justice violated.

Secondly, every sin is liable to judgment, [Reason 2] against whomsoever it be committed, it is punished of God, he taketh the matter into his own hand, as Rom. 1.18. The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, which hold the truth in unrighteousness. And chap. 2.9. Tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man, that doth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile. To this purpose speaketh the Apostle James, cha. 4.12 There is one Lawgiuer, that is able to save, and to destroy. He punisheth sin in whomsoever he findeth it, and letteth not the transgressor escape scot free; that so he may be acknowledged to be a just and upright God, that hateth wickedness, and loveth righteousness. For he will show himself just, as well in his reproofs and threatenings, as in his judgments and corrections. Now, he could not correct all sin, except all sin were committed against him. And if he should, he should be an unjust judge through too much rigor and severity, as the Apostle concludeth in the Epistle to the Romans, cha. 3.5, 6. Is God unrighteous which punisheth? (I speak as a man) God forbid: for then, how shall God judge the world? Forasmuch as he which is to judge all the world in righteousness and truth, cannot but deal justly and uprightly, Gen. 18.

Thirdly, as he punisheth all sin, so he only [Reason 3] can forgive sins. This is that which the Prophet setteth down: Thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption: for thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back, Isaiah 38.17. And to this purpose speaketh Micah, chap. 7.19. He will subdue our iniquities, and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea. If then it belong to God alone to forgive sins, it followeth that they are committed against him.

Fourthly, the love of our brethren is made [Reason 4] the fulfilling of the whole law, and the trial of our selves whether we love God, or not. This the Apostle maketh plain, Rom. 13.8,9, 10. Owe no man anything, but to love one another; for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law: for this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, &c. it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself: love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the Law. In setting down the sum of the whole Law, Christ and his Apostles oftentimes pass over the first Table, and make no mention of the duties thereof. He calleth the most weighty and principal matters of the Law, judgment, mercy, and fidelity, Matth. 23.23. and when the young man in the Gospel, asked the question, what commandments he must observe that he may enter into eternal life, he sendeth him not to the first Table, but to the second, and saith unto him, Thou shalt not kill, thou shalt commit adultery, &c. thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, Matth. 19.18. He might have taught, that he should have no other God, but the true God of Israel, and that he must love him, believe in him, and put his trust and confidence in him: but the obedience hereunto stood for the most part in the inward affection of the heart, or in outward ceremonies. The affection of the heart doth not appear outwardly, and the outward ceremonies of his worship are oftentimes counterfeited thorough hypocrisy: but the works of charity are witnesses of true righteousness. Our outward works toward men are signs of our inward piety toward God: so that he will have our faith toward him to be known by these fruits. Wherefore, forasmuch as we have plainly shown and firmly proved, that all sin is a transgression of God's Law, that he is a punisher of sin, rewarding everyone according to his works, that he only can forgive sins, and that he trieth how we perform our duty toward him, by our love and charity toward our brethren: it followeth necessarily, that howsoever men are many ways and oftentimes greatly wronged, yet therein also God is most highly offended.

Now, albeit the doctrine may seem sufficiently strengthened by these consents and reasons, yet some scruple and doubt may remain in us, except we shall remove one objection. For in that prayer which the Lord taught his disciples, we are taught to ask forgiveness our sins at the hands of God, forasmuch as we also forgive our debtors, Luk. 11.4. The creditor is God, the debtor is man, the band or bill is the Law, the debt is sin, the prison is hell. Hereupon the question may be asked, [Object.] how all sin can be made to be committed against God, seeing we are also said to sin against men, and to be indebted unto them: for debt and sin are used indifferently the one for the other? If then we be said to sin against God only, how are we said to trespass against our brother, and our brother to trespass against us? and how are we said to forgive one another? I answer, in every trespass that we do against our neighbor, we are to consider two things: first, the injury done to man: secondly, the offense done against God. The loss and damage that man receiveth, either in his body, when he is wounded, or in his substance, when it is purloyned, or in his good name when it is abused, he may forgive and remit: but the sin against God and his Law, God only can remit and release. If a man be slandered, and thereby receive much hurt, he may pardon that, as we see in David who, flying from his sons rebellion, was cursed with an horrible curse by Shimei, one of the family of the house of Saul: he accused him to be a bloody man, and reviled him as a man of Belial; yet he put it up, and would not be revenged of it, neither suffer others to take away his life. Nevertheless, as his vile slanders and false surmises were forbidden in the ninth commandment, and were breaches thereof, he did not, neither could he forgive, he hath nothing to do with that; nay, all the men in the world are not able to make it no breach of the law, and consequently no sin against God. If a man cause a blemish in his neighbor, he may forgive the blemish he hath received, as Stephen his persecutors that stoned him to death, and prayed for them; but he cannot blot out the stain that the sin maketh in his soul, nor forgive the breach of the sixth commandment. If a man have his goods stolen, he may pardon the thief, but he cannot remit the theft; for as much as the eighth commandment will take hold of him as a Sergeant, and judge him as guilty in the sight of God.

Besides, as there is a twofold trespass, so there is a threefold kind of remitting or forgiving, to wit, remission of revenge, remission of punishment, and remission of judgment.

Remission of revenge belongeth to all persons, both public and private, and restraineth the hands of Magistrates and subjects; for neither superiors nor inferiors, ought to do anything in malice and grudge, or to satisfy their own lusts. If a Judge in proceeding against malefactors, pursue his own quarrel rather than execute justice, he sinneth and offendeth, albeit the party be guilty, and deserve death: for vengeance belongeth to the Lord, and we are not to requite like for like. Remission of punishment belongeth to private persons that bear not the sword: but as all cannot inflict, so all cannot remit punishment. For the Magistrate though not sometimes, and in some cases, and in some persons he may remit, which are not needful here to remember; yet not always, nor all offenders, nor in all offenses, because God will have the sentence of the law proceed, and the execution of justice have his course. This extendeth not to Magistrates, for then evil doers should not be punished, nor evil deeds rooted out of the city of God. Remission of judgment, is when we conceive a good and charitable opinion of those that have offended us. But thus we are not bound always to forgive, neither to remit the censure which evil men justly deserve for their evil deeds. For the Prophet Isaiah pronounceth a woe against all such as call evil good, and good evil: sweet sour: and sour, sweet. It is lawful for us to retain our judgment and opinion of wicked men, so long as they be impenitent. Of this Christ speaketh, Luk. 17.3 If he repent, forgive him, that is, that hard censure of him, and count him as a brother. But of this we have spoken at large elsewhere, and therefore this shall suffice for the answer to this objection.

The uses that arise from hence are many, and [Use 1] of special note. First of all, is all sin, even the trespass against men, committed against God? doth it offend him, and violate his law? yes doubtless: not only man is injured, but God himself is offended, as hath been sufficiently proved: and therefore it should teach us what a grievous and fearful thing sin is, in what account it ought to be with us, and how everyone should learn to aggravate and augment with God his own sin for his farther humiliation. This was it that grieved and vexed David, and as it were pierced his very bowels in the matter of Uriah, namely, that his sin was against God, who knoweth sin perfectly, and beholdeth it in his natural colors, so that neither it nor we can deceive him. Wherefore, this lesson must duly be considered of us, and enter deeply into our hearts, Who it is that we offend. This was it that moved David to know sin, and to mourn for it, Psal. 51.4, Against thee, thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight: that thou mightest be justified when thou speakest, and be clear when thou judgest. Where note, that he is not content to say once, against thee, but he doubleth it against thee, against thee: and addeth with great force and vehemency, against thee only. But did he not sin against man? or is not murder a breach of the sixth commandment, and adultery of the seventh? I answer, yes, these sins are condemned in the second Table. He had slain Uriah with a sword; he had committed adultery with his wife; he had been the chief cause and principal means of the slaughter and destruction of others, and so brought blood-guiltiness upon himself; he hardened the Ammonites in their sins, who opened their mouth to slander the word, and to blaspheme the holy Name of God; he sinned against the child that was mis-begotten, which also died through that unfaithful act; he sinned against his own house, in that he kindled a fire throughout his family, & brought sticks with his own hands to raise up the flame that was not easily to be quenched: for one of his sons taketh up the sword, and killeth another, the brother committeth abominable incest with his own sister of the half blood; and another of his own sons taketh his wives and lieth with them not in the dark of the night, or in a secret corner of the house, but he spread a tent openly, and in the sight of the sun. Lastly, he sinned against the whole Church and people of God, who by means of his sin were offended, and troubled with tumults and seditions, so that the whole land was in an uproar and insurrection from one end to the other. All which points show that his sin went far against men, it touched Uriah, it touched Bathshebah, it touched the child, it touched the Ammonites, it touched his family, it touched the whole Church: yet these bloody, and crying, and heinous sins so far as they concerned men like himself, he seeth to be as nothing (albeit they were notorious) in comparison of God against whom they were especially committed: he had rather have all men set against him then to have God his enemy, and to come out in battle array against him, and therefore he crieth out in great anguish and bitterness of spirit, O against thee, against thee only have I sinned, and done evil in thy sight. As if he should say, Although the whole world should absolve me, and no man could accuse me of sin, yet this troubleth my conscience, this stingeth and striketh me to the heart, that I must have thee to be my judge. I am free from the judgment seat of men as being myself supreme, and under the jurisdiction of no other: but (•lasse) what can this comfort me, so long as I have thee to give sentence upon me! He that is thus overburdened and overwhelmed with a feeling of the greatness of God's judgment, as David was, needeth no other accuser, forasmuch as God standeth and serveth instead of a thousand.

If the whole world should accuse a man, and conspire together to charge him with any crime, yet if God acquit him, his own conscience will minister peace unto him, and comfort against all slanders and imputations laid against him. For if God be on his side, who shall be against him? but if God be against him, and lay grievous things unto him, woe, woe, unto him, who shall speak for him, though he had the praise and applause, though he had the gain and glory of all the world? If he condemn, who shall justify? if he say guilty, who dare plead, not guilty? He found out Adam, when none accused him, when there was no man upon the face of the earth to accuse him, and said Adam, Where art thou? He sound out Achan, who had stolen the Babylonish garment and wedge of gold: he had hidden it privily, and conveyed it closely into his tent, howbeit he could not hide himself, but the eye of God easily espied him: so that the host of God could not prosper, so long as he remained in it, but received an overthrow at the siege of Ai.

Wherefore, what shall it profit us to be absolved by the voices and sentences of all men, or to be winked at, as if we were clear & innocent, when our conscience accuseth us before God, or he be displeased with us, and angry against us? We must enter into our selves, and consider how the case standeth between God & us, and not think it enough to know how the case standeth between man and us. What though we can bribe them, and stop their mouths, and make them hold their peaces, and cause them to be content to take a little at our hands (when we have done them much wrong) rather then they will go to law with us, because they are weak, and we mighty, they are poor and we rich, they are empty and we full? we shall not be able to bribe the Lord, who is stronger then we are, and taketh the cause of the oppressed into his hand. When we have offered injury unto them, it is not enough to confess our fault unto them, and to humble our selves before them, and to seek to make amends unto them; all this we may do, and then go to hell; yet there are many that do not come thus far. So then, we must remember whom we offend, that is, God; and thereupon to account all sin heinous and capital, forasmuch as it is against the highest Majesty of infinite power and authority. The greater the person is that is offended, the greater the sin is. If a man speak evil of the Judge or Justice, he shall be imprisoned; howbeit it is not so heinous, as to rail at the Prince, because his person is greater and higher. But what are all Princes, but mortal men whose breath is in their nostrils, whose bodies must go into the grave, and turn into dust, out of which they were taken, in comparison of the immortal God, who is a person of infinite and incomprehensible Majesty? If he give us once the sight of our sins, and touch our hearts with a feeling of them, though they were as hard as steel, as senseless as the dead, and seared as with an hot iron, he can make them alive, quick, and tender enough, that we shall go roaring all the day long, and find comfort in nothing: if his hand be heavy upon us, he will turn our moisture into the drouth of Summer, and make all our bones that are broken to clatter: so that our life shall abhor bread, and our soul dainty meat, and our flesh shall be consumed away, that it cannot be seen. It is not therefore for us to dally with him as with a child, or to play with his justice, as the fly doth with the candle, til she be consumed: but rather let us remember the exhortation of the Apostle, Heb. 12.28. Let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence & godly fear, because our God is a consuming fire. If his wrath be kindled, yea, but a little, blessed are all they that trust in him. As then we are to mark what we do, so we are to mark against whom we do it, lest we taste of destruction at the last, and then would give all the world (if we were owners of it) to be eased and released of our horrible plagues, as it fared and fell out with the rich man in the Gospel, Luk. 16. Let us not think to escape from him, by denying our sins, as the reprobate shall do at the last day, who being accused of sin committed against God, shall answer, When saw we thee a stranger, or naked, or hungry, or thirsty, or in prison: but Christ Jesus will reply against them, and take away all excuse from them, and so stop the mouth of iniquity, Verily, verily, I say unto you, inasmuch as ye did it not to one of these little ones, ye did it not to me. And hereby we may try our selves, whether we have truly repented of sin, or not, if this note that abounded in David be found in us. For his conscience doth not so much accuse him for any fact and offense committed against Uriah, as against the Lord himself, and from hence came the lively feeling of his sin. So if our conscience accuse us much more for offending of God's infinite Majesty, then for the injury which we have done unto man; if we stay not beneath upon the earth, but lift up our hearts unto God, and consider that we have to do with him, we have attained to a good measure of true repentance. But so long as we regard nothing but men, we shall never behold the true face of sin, nor see it as it is in his own likeness. To conclude, let us learn, that of all enemies, God is the most fearful and terrible, if he set himself against us.

Secondly, seeing God is the person that is [Use 2] hurt and offended, we learn that vengeance belongeth unto him only. When injury is done unto any, we must esteem the wrong as done not only unto men, but to God, and therefore is to be left unto him, whose commandment is transgressed. For except the Law of God had been violated, the creature should have had no cause to complain of any injury. It is the law that maketh it a sin and an injury, as we shown before out of the Apostle, Rom. 7. No man therefore is to revenge his own cause, but must commit vengeance unto God, and to that person that sustaineth God's person on earth, to wit, the Magistrate, who beareth not the sword in vain, whose judgment is the judgment of God, whose revenge▪ is the revenge of God. This doth the Apostle set down as a rule to guide us, Rom. 12.19. Dearely beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath, for it is written, Vengeance is mine, I will repay saith the Lord. A lesson often urged, always confessed, and yielded unto, but smally regarded and seldom practiced. For as if there were no God in heaven, no God's on earth that bear his name and title, men run together like wild beasts, or as horses that rush into the battle, and revenge their own quarrels, as if sin were wholly committed against themselves, and not at all against God; as if they were specially interested in it, and God had little to do with the matter: as if the wrong touched them, and no way concerned him. From hence it cometh to pass, that whiles they go about greedily to revenge wrong done unto them, judgment falleth upon their own heads, and God executeth vengeance upon them for their revenge: and so while they go about to hurt others, the greatest hurt falleth upon themselves; and while they show themselves enemies to their brethren, they draw an heavier enemy upon themselves, to wit, God himself. Before we pass from this so necessary a duty, it shall not be amiss for us, both to observe such motives as may stir us up to the practice of it, and to answer such objections as may hinder us from yielding obedience unto it. First of all, let us lay before us the example of Christ the author and finisher of our salvation; who had greater wrong offered unto him then he had? who was more innocent then he, that was as a sheep dumb before his shearer, and opened not his mouth? and therefore the Apostle Peter saith, chap. 2.22. Christ suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously. This farther appeareth unto us, in that he prayed for his enemies that persecuted him. He had power in his own hand to have resisted their force, & revenged his cause. He could have prayed to his Father, & he would have given him more then twelu legions of Angels: yet notwithstanding he suffered patiently, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God. If any think or allege, y^t this example is too high for us above our reach, and too eminent in regard of his person, who is God above to be worshipped: let us set before us y^e examples of the faithful servants of God, y^t have lived in all ages, in the time of the law, and under the Gospel, that this may be another motive unto us. How often did the children of Israel murmur against Moses and Aaron, and sometimes went about to stone him? yet he never sought revenge against them, albeit he had been able to right his own cause by force. When Miriam & Aaron spake against him by reason of the woman of Ethiopia, and said, What? hath the Lord spoken only by Moses? hath he not also spoken by us? Moses held his peace, and gave not taunt for taunt, & rebuke for rebuke; he was a very meek man, above all the men that were upon the earth. Thus was it with David, a man indeed after God's own heart, though he were a king, and wanted not servants to execute his will, yet he would not himself revenge, neither suffer any other to take revenge on Shimei, albeit he cursed the king with an horrible curse. Saul sought his life, and preferred him to be his son in law, for no other cause, but to lay a snare before him, & when David had his life oftentimes in his hand, to save it or to destroy it, ye he was so far from seeking revenge, that his heart smote him for cutting off the lap of his garment. When Stephen had made a worthy defense for himself and his own innocence, that the enemies could take no just exception against him, their hearts brast asunder, and they gnashed at him with their teeth, & ran upon him violently all at once: but he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord lay not this sin to their charge. The Church of Rome are not ashamed to teach, thereby to strengthen the hands of traitors & rebels that rise up against Princes, that Christians of old deposed not Nero, and Dioclesian, and Julian the Apostate, and Valens the Arian, and such like persecutous and heretics, because they wanted temporal power, and if they had had power, they would have done it. If this be true, all their patience was perforce, and is not thank-worthy. But they testify in many places that they had power sufficient, but held it unlawful to resist and rebel. They had filled all places, Cities, Islands, castles, borowghes tents, tribes, bands, palaces, the Senate and Court not excepted, so that they wanted neither number nor strength to make their party good. They profess, that albeit they be equal in power, yet with them it is more tolerable to be killed, then to kill. They affirm freely, God forbid that his religion should be maintained with fire, and sword. They acknowledge no other weapons to be put into their hands, but prayers & tears. They never practiced any reuēge against their persecutors, and those that hated them. One night with a little fire would have served and sufficed them largely to be revenged of their enemies, but they accounted it unlawful to requite evil with evil. But to leave this consideration to another occasion, let us come to a third motive, & that is, the office which is proper unto God, to whom it belongeth peculiarly to take vengeance, and is therefore in holy Scripture called the God of vengeance, O Lord God, the avenger: O God the avenger, show thyself clearly. It is a grievous sin to sit down in God's seat, and to rob him of his right and royalty. Let the enemies of God and his people know, that he is the God of revenge, as well as y^e God of salvation, and that he will as well right their causes, as save their souls. He is a just God, & will recompense tribulation to all that trouble those that are his, and therefore hath said, Vengeance and recompense are mine: but he never said to private persons, Vengeance is thine, neither did he ever put the sword into their hands. A fourth motive, to persuade us to lay aside private revenge, is drawn from the gracious promise that God hath made unto us, namely, that he will take our causes into his hand, and pay them home that do oppress us. For God doth not restrain us, & as it were tie up our hands, to expose us to all injuries, and to leave us as a prey in the jaws of the Lions, but because he hath passed his word unto us, I will repay, saith the Lord. So then, we must know that God is called the author and executer of vengeance, not only because the power and right belongeth unto him, y^t he is able to take vengeance of all our enemies, how many and mighty soever they be, but because he hath used this power & executed this office from the beginning of the world, and as yet useth it, and will use it to the full, in the great day of the general judgment. He knoweth best of all the greatness of the injury that is done unto us, because he searcheth into the thoughts of the heart, and understandeth not only what is done, but the manner how it is done.

Seeing then, he hath promised to pay them home into their bosoms y^t wrong us, it were a fruit of infidelity in us, not to believe him at his word. A fifth motive, which ought to be very effectual, is the consideration of the forgiveness that we receive at the hands of God. We are much indebted unto him, there is no sin that we commit, but increaseth our debt, so that we are no way able to pay it. He is content for his sons sake to forgive us all, & therefore we ought to put off anger, wrath, malice, and revenge; and on the other side, to put on the bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, and long suffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any mā have a quarrel against any, even as Christ forgave us, so also we must do. Hence it is, y^t Christ teacheth us to ask forgiveness at the hands of God, as we show our selves ready and willing to forgive: for we say, Forgive us our sins; as we also forgive the trespasses that are done unto us: and he addeth immediately after, If ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses. If then we carry grudgins spirits and revenging minds boiling in us, we turn this comfortable petition into an horrible imprecation against our selves, and pray that God would not forgive us, but condemn us, forasmuch as we determine not to forgive, but to be revenged on our enemies that offend us. If we could be persuaded of this truth, then which nothing can be truer, we would not seek revenge to gain a kingdom, considering that we call down vengeance with our own mouths upon our selves, which is a most fearful case. For do we think that when sin lieth at the door, vengeance will be far from us, and not come near us, except we cry for it our selves? Let us take heed we do not dally with God, who will in justice repay us, because we take upon us to repay, and will pour upon us the vengeance which we ask against our selves. Lastly, we are moved to put up wrongs & suffer injuries, to refer all revenge unto God, and not to requite evil for evil, because it is against all good law, right reason, & common sense, that any man should be accuser, witness, judge, and executioner. But everyone that taketh upon him to right his own cause, and to revenge himself, doth all these together, he executeth the office of four several men. It is no reason that he which layeth any accusation against us, should be admitted to be witness against us, because a witness should not be partial nor any way suspected to be party. Whosoever refuseth to refer his cause to the judgment of God, and will take up the weapon and instrument of revenge into his own hand doth more then this; he cannot be content to be an accuser and witness of wrong, but will also sit as judge to condemn, and as executioner to punish, which is against all right, law, equity, and conscience. No man therefore ought to engross so many offices which of right belong unto several men. It is impossible, that there should be just proceeding, where matters are carried in this order. If then we would be Christ's disciples, let us possess our souls with patience, and commit our causes unto God, that the spirit of glory and of God may rest upon us.

Notwithstanding all these motives, which may serve as so many bands to tie us to this duty, [Objections answered.] the nature of man that is corrupt, striveth to break them all, and to be at liberty to do what it list, and therefore ministereth many objections which are but carnal reasons to warrant the practice of private revenge. Let us see what they are, and apply several remedies to everyone of them, to stay us up from offending this way. First of all, it will be said, If we [Object.] should put up wrongs, this were to make our selves as fools for everyone to laugh at, and as blocks for everyone to insult over us, and to tread upon us. I answer, [Answer.] it skilleth not what the world esteem of us, and what they speak against us. If we were of the world, the world would love his own, but because we are chosen out of the *world, therefore the world hateth us, reuileth us, taunteth us, and speaketh all manner of evil against us. If we regard the judgment of God, we must pass very little for y^e judgment of men: & if we receive praise of God, it skilleth not if we be dispraised of men. And as they speak evil of the servants of God that are themselves evil: so they will account us fools that are indeed fools themselves. For there is no fool like to the wicked man, and therefore he is in Scripture oftentimes branded with this name and note. As for those that account godliness folly, and place wisdom in committing wickedness, let us leave such wisdom to the wise of this world, and be content to be esteemed as simple fools, to y^e end we may be like to the wise God, who is a God of patience, and so be partakers of the heavenly nature. He turneth the wisdom of this world into foolishness, and the foolishness of this world he accepteth as true wisdom. Wherefore, let us hearken to the counsel of the Apostle, Let no man deceive you: if any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise. It were better for us to be accou^{nt}ed fools in this world by wicked men, then to be judged fools forever in the world to come.*

Again, some will object, If we always sufser [Object. 2] wrongs, we shall make our selves a prey, & set an edge upon others to lay on load upon us. For we shall never be quiet, but evermore be abused. I answer, [Answer.] the condemning of vengeance, is not a taking away of just defense. God tieth up our hands from unjust revenge, but he shutteth not our mouths from just complaint. For we may claim the help of the Magistrate, either for y^e preventing of wrong, or for the punishment of the doer of wrong. The Magistrate is God's deputy, and his office is to relieve the oppressed, to defend the innocent, & to execute judgment on malefactors. When certain of the Jews, more then forty men, banded together, and bound themselves under a curse, that they would neither eat nor drink, til they had killed Paul, he sent to the chief captain, to be defended from their conspiracy.

And when he saw the malice of his nation against him, y^t they ceased not to lay grievous complaints to his charge, he appealed unto Caesar y^t he might not be delivered into y^e hands of the Jews that sought his life, and thirsted for blood, I stand at Caesars judgment seat, where I ought to be judged: So then, God hath not left us as it were to the wide world, to shift for our selves, but he hath appointed y^e Magistrate to be his Lieutenant. As in the private family where many servants are, he hath not left one servant to quarrel with another, and to draw upon another; he hath set y^e master over them all, for the punishment of evil doers, & for the praise of them that do well. If any of thy fellow servants do wrong thee, give not hurt for hurt, or blow for blow, or taunt for taunt; for that will make thee guilty of sin, though otherwise thou be innocent, and thy cause be just and righteous: ye have one common master y^t is set over you, go unto him, plead your cause before him, & accuse him in wh^o any wickedness is found. Every man is presumed to be partial in his cause, let the master be judge between you, who is no way interested in the business. And as the master is judge within the walls of his own house, and appointed to decide the controversies that arise therein: so the Magistrate is his ordinance to end the matters that fall out between neighbor and neighbor, and therefore we must not think our selves wiser to determine our cause then he, or God himself. So th^e, we must practice two points, first, we must bear wrongs patiently, and put away all revenge far from us, whereby we hurt our selves much more then we do our enemies: for we may annoy them in their bodies or goods, but we make a deep and dangerous wound in our own souls. And therefore Christ saith, I say unto you, Resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also, &c. Secondly, we are to use the Magistrates help when we are wronged. For always to suffer the rod of the malefactor upon our back, & never to seek redress, were to make our selves Asses to receive every burden that will be laid upon us. Albeit therefore we are not to resist evil, but if any man will sue us at the law and take away our coat, we should give him our cloak also: and whosoever will compel us to go a mile, we must go with him twain, to wit, rather then we should revenge our selves (for this is to be understood as spoken by comparison) yet we are not forbidden hereby to have recourse to y^e Magistrate, who beareth not the sword in vain, to whom every soul ought to be subject. For as it is a fault to suffer nothing, so it may be our fault as well to suffer too much, namely, when we will bear all things whereby we shall be gulled, and forbear to crave and call for the help of the Magistrate. God is offended as well when lawful means are not used, as when unlawful means are practiced.

Thirdly, the question may be asked, what if a man be violently assaulted, either in the private house, or in the high way, whether by thieves that would rob us, or by quarrellers that would wound us, may we not resist & revenge, [Object.] to save our lives or our goods? I answer this is a case of necessity, wherein a man cannot have the benefit of Magistracy: but is himself a Magistrate unto himself. A man being thus assaulted, must use the sword as the last remedy and refuge. Wherein we must observe these cautions & conditions. First, we must not thirst after blood, nor be willing to take away either life or limme, if we can choose. Secondly, we ought to the utmost of our power, to strive to free our selves from them & their assaults and invasion, that there be no blood shed, if it be possible, using all good and lawful means we may in favor of life. Thirdly, we are so to behave our selves, that we rather defend then offend, and seek more to save our own lives then to take away another man's. Fourthly, if we can no way escape the hands of the oppresser, by flying, or calling for the help of the Magistrate, it is lawful so far to stand in our just defense, as that we should choose to kill rather then to be killed: for now God calleth us to be a Magistrate to our selves, & puts a sword into our hands, to execute revenge upon our adversary. Hence it is, that albeit God saith unto private men, resist not evil: yet might they lawfully kill a thief in the night season, without breach of law, & guilt of blood, If a thief be found breaking up, and be smitten that he die, there shall no blood be shed for him. This is to be understood of the night thief, when a man being assaulted, cannot run to the Magistrate, and therefore God alloweth him to be an officer & minister of justice, even in his own cause wherein necessity pleadeth for his defēce. Lastly, if a man in this case be compelled to take away life, & to shed blood, he must be grieved and mourn for it, that he hath defaced an image of God. These conditions being observed, a man may lawfully withstand force by force, and violence by violence, & defend the goods that God hath given him, even with the sword, if it be used as the last remedy and in the last place.

Fourthly, others will say, it is a commendable [Object. 4] thing to put up wrongs patiently, I would I could do it, I wish it with all my heart: but we are flesh and blood, we are not able to bear the injuries that are offered unto us, they are so great. I answer, [Answer.] never lay the blame upon flesh & blood, never acuse thē of this fault. For thou makest them in such sort a common pack-horse to bear the burden of all thy sins, as that thou art resolved to be flesh & blood still. Thou never desirest God to give thee grace, and to guide thee by his spirit: thou never laborest with thine own heart to pull out the root of revenge. Answer me one question which I will demand of thee, Thou sayest thou art flesh and blood, and flesh and blood cannot put up these things: but art thou flesh and blood only, or in part? art thou nothing but a lump of flesh, or else art thou partly flesh, and partly spirit? One of these two thou must needs be; both of thē thou canst not be.

Tell me thy meaning, and express more plainly what thou art. If thou be nothing else but flesh & blood, then woe be to thee. Thou confessest against thyself y^t thou art yet carnal, unregenerate, dead in sins and trespasses, the bondslave of Satan, the heir of destruction, without Christ, without hope, without God in the world, an alien from the Commonwealth of Israel, and a stranger from the covenants of promise. For flesh & blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God: and if ever we look to be saved, and to be partakers of eternal glory, we must be more then flesh & blood. Thou wilt therefore be ashamed to confess that thou vnderstandest by flesh and blood, that thou art nothing but a lump of flesh. What then? art thou flesh in part, & spirit in part? as thou must acknowledge thyself to be, if thou be the Lord's. Why then dost thou not perform the works of the spirit? They that are after the flesh do savor the things of the flesh; but they that are after the spirit, the things of the spirit. To be carnally minded, is death; but to be spiritually minded, is life and peace. The carnal mind is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be. If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through y^e spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of GOD: so then they that are in the flesh, cannot please God. Thus we see, that the flesh and the spirit are always opposed the one to the other: so that by this we may prove our selves whether we be regenerate or not. Let us not therefore boast our selves that we are flesh & blood, forasmuch as such as are only flesh, cannot yet assure their own hearts, that they are the Lord's.

[Object. 5] Fifthly, it may be objected, that to repulse wrong, is a note of courage and fortitude; and to put up wrong, a token of pusillanimity and of a faint heart. If then, I must not revenge, I shall be accounted not only a fool, but a dastard and coward. [Answer.] I answer, this is no better then the devils sophistry, and openeth a gap to the common practice that is in the world, to quarrel for every word speaking. It is no argument of courage to be ready to draw the sword and dagger, but rather of rashness, headinesse, unsteadiness, and of a ruffian like spirit. And it is no disgrace to be of a bearing and forbearing nature. Our chiefest honor consisteth in fighting against sin unto the death, and showing all might and manhood in the subduing of it. He is stronger that overcometh his own passions, then he that winneth a city. We must remember that we are made kings and Priests unto God the Father: and therefore let us not make our selves slaves and captives to Satan, to sin, and to the world. This then serveth to meet with three sorts of men, & to condemn their evil courses, whose whole life pleadeth for nothing more thē private revenge. First, they are reprov'd that for every cross word & supposed injury are ready to challenge one another into the field; & the accepting of that challenge when it is given. This fighting a single combat is unlawful That which the natural man accounteth valor, God esteemeth a vice; and therefore it is no disgrace to refuse it, but rather true grace in yielding obedience unto God. For we must set down this as a rule, that no man must sin against God for the saving of his credit & reputation among men. And if we did duly consider what sin is, against whom it is committed, and what punishment is procured thereby upon our selves, we would never question the former ground set down unto us. Secondly, out of the case of challenging the field, y^e common practice of fighting & quarrelling is condemned, which are no better then forerunners of murder, and have a bloody face in the sight of God. The Apostle John saith, Whosoever hateth his brother, is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him. Many there are that hold it utterly unlawful to give the first blow, but if another strike them, then they think that thereby they are warranted to strike again. If any give the occasion of a fray, they hold him worthy to be condemned: but if they be provoked by another, they account themselves to be bound to return him the like. This is directly contrary to the doctrine of Christ, whereunto all must submit themselves that will be the disciples of Christ. He would have us take many wrongs, and not seek to revenge our selves. And it is contrary to the practice of Christ and of his Apostles. When one of the officers of y^e high Priest smote Jesus with the palm of his hand, because he held his peace & would answer nothing, he smote not again, as these men think he was bound to do for his honor. But this was no disgrace or reproach to Christ, how then should it be any shame for a true Christian? We will needs be accounted Christians whosoever say nay, but we scorn and disdain to follow the example of Christ. Ananias the high Priest commanded them that stood by to smite Paul on the mouth: he reproveth him fought it, but he smote not again; & this was no infamy, but a glory unto him. Lastly, their opinion also is condemned, that make it a matter of praise, and an argument of valor, to turn away his face frō no man. This indeed is fool-hardinesse. It is the commendation of Magistrates to be men of courage, to fear the face of God, but not the faces of men. They must accept no man's person in judgment, neither decline to the right hand or to the left. But a private man may turn his back to his adversary without any impeachment of his credit, or diminishing of his valor, or lessening of his honor, or slander to his reputatiō. But of this we have spoken sufficiently before, & therefore we will proceed.

Lastly, it may be objected, that under the [Object] law of Moses, when any man had killed his neighbor, the avenger of blood might slay the murderer whensoever and wheresoever he met him, Numb. 35, 19. If a man had killed any person at unawares, and hated him not before, he must fly to one of the Cities of refuge, and abide in it unto the death of the high Priest, which was anointed with the holy oil: but if the slayer shall at any time come without the border of the City of refuge whither he was fled, and the revenger of blood find him without the borders of the City of his refuge, and the revenger of blood kill the slayer, he shall not be guilty of blood. If then he be not guilty of blood, how is it that God alloweth no private revenge, but commandeth to render good for evil, to pray for them that curse us, and to do good to our enemies, and such as persecute us? I answer, the political laws serve not to bring men to perfection, such as are made for civil government. When God speaketh as king of Israel, and maketh statutes tending to outward peace and tranquility, he aimed not at the spiritual perfection which is contained in the moral law, which is the rule of all holiness and righteousness. Hence it is, that God tolerated many things among his people, which he never allowed simply, as appeareth in the case of diuorcement, and many other of like nature. So he suffered the next of kin to pursue him to death that had slain his kinsman, if he were taken out of the City of his refuge; but God nevertheless did never approve of this, to set upon the person that had done him no harm, neither alloweth any to follow the rage of his choler, and to execute the malice of his heart: so that this law hath no place among us. For we must mark this as a certain rule, that civil government cannot change anything in the ten Commandments, or set down anything to the prejudice of them. Many things were permitted unto the Jews, because of the hardness of their hearts, Math. 19, 8. but from the beginning it was not so. They then that would put away their wives for every cause, might as well allege the law of giving them a bill of diuorcement, as others produce the avenger of blood to justify the prosecution of private revenge: forasmuch as the one is a breach of the seventh Commandment, the other is a breach of the sixth Commandment, And thus much in answer of the objections.

Thirdly, we are put in mind of this duty, [Use 3] that seeing all sin is committed against God, we should be afraid to sin against him, and ought above all things to take heed of his wrath and indignation. We are rather to choose any course, or take any way, then run into his displeasure. Thus it was with Joseph, of whom we spake before: he was content rather to be slandered unjustly, and accused falsely of his lewd and lascivious mistrisse, yea, to be imprisoned and punished by his over-credulous master, then he would make a breach in his own soul, & sin against God. Let a man once perish his conscience, the wrack is not easily made up again. It is like a water-course, which is not easily stopped. It is better to fall into the hands of men, then of God; for he can make our innocence known, and the uprightness of our cause to appear, that it shall break out as the light, and shine as the Sun at noon days, as we shall show more evidently in the end of this chapter. True it is, the greatest sort of men make it a common matter, & because it is common, they account it a small and light matter to sin against God. When they hear that by cōmitting evil they sin in God's sight, and provoke him to anger, they regard not much those threatenings, they make a mock of sin, and fear not the event of it; not considering they play with a serpent, that will in the end sting thē unto death, when it hath wrapped them fast, as it were in fetters that they can by no means escape. We must account no sin to be in it own nature little as a mote, but esteem of it as a great beam, albeit there be difference between them, and some be greater then other. This cogitation once taking place in us, will make us fear and tremble at the naming of it. The Apostle speaking of fornication and uncleanness, and such like evils, saith, Let it not be once named among you, as it becometh Saints. For the Scripture layeth hold on our straying thoughts and wandering motions of the mind, though we never give assent unto them, but labor to remove and repel them so soon as they arise in us, and abhor them and our selves for them. These first motions and lusts are a breach of the Law, Rom. 7. and deserve condemnation: how much more therefore the transgressions of our whole life that are much more abominable?

Besides, we are taught, not only to look into the glass of the law to see the heinousness of our transgressions, but also to consider the punishments due unto them in this life, and the life to come: for thereby we are subject to all woes and miseries and death it self, as we may see by the examples of our first parents, of the old world, of Sodom, of Pharaoh, and his host, of the Jews that were carried captive, and many of God's own people, that by infirmity have fallen and felt sore chastisements from his hands, as appeareth in Moses and Aaron, in David, in Hezekiah, in Josiah, in Solomon, and sundry others.

Lastly, we may behold the grievousness of sin in the example of Christ our Savior, who albeit he were without sin, and none iniquity was found in his mouth, yet bare he in his body our sins, and felt that burden which would have crushed us in pieces, and broken all our bones in sunder: forasmuch as he apprehended the wrath of God in his soul, which caused him to sweat water and blood, and to cry out upon the cross, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Such then as never fear to offend God, have no feeling of God's justice, no feeling of Christ's suffering, no feeling of the vileness of sin, no feeling of their own punishments that hang over their heads, & shall (without repentance) seize upon them to their final damnation.

Let us awake cut of our deep sleep, and take care of our salvation: let us take heed we grow not senseless and hard-hearted. Let us learn to know our selves better, and consider what we have done. Let us fear to offend God, and stand in awe of his judgments: so that if we sin against him, we may be well assured to be punished for it. But some will say, [Object.] God is gracious and merciful, he will not plague us and strike us though we sin, he is not hard as many would make him: doth not the Scripture tell us that he is merciful? and shall we not believe the Scripture to be true? Let them say what they will, I will believe the Scripture. [Answer.] I answer, in saying thus, thou doest nothing but deceive thyself, and dally with the word of God: and indeed doest not believe it to be true? For if thou diddest acknowledge God to be the author of it, thou wouldest submit thyself to every part of it, thou wouldest not embrace what thou likest, and refuse what liketh thee not. Thou mayest as well say in plain English, that part of the word of God is false, and there is no truth in it, and I will sin without controllement of it: nay, while thou reasonest in that profane manner, thou sayest in thine heart, Tush, God is not God, but an idol that sitteth still, that hath eyes and seeth nothing; that hath hands, and doeth nothing: that hath ears, and heareth nothing. True it is, men are ashamed to utter these reproachful words, and to belch out of their filthy mouths, such horrible blasphemies: but if we will rippe up to the quick their former presumptions, we shall find their case and condition to be little better. If they were demanded what they think of the word, and of God the author of the word, they would acknowledge the Scriptures to be most true, both the promises that are made, and the threatenings that are contained in it; they would confess that God is a most just God, even visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation: yet it skilleth not what they speak with their tongues, so long as we may even openly read the secrets of their thoughts, and the imaginations of their hearts in their outward practices. For touching the word of God, it is most true, and it cannot be denied, we read oftentimes that God is also merciful, we read of the riches of his grace and bountifulness; of his abounding in compassions, and reserving mercy for thousands. What then? or what is all this to them? shall we continue therefore in sin, that grace may abound? ought not rather the riches of his bountifulness, and patience and long suffering lead us unto repentance? Shall we after our hardness and hearts that cannot repent, heap up unto our selves as a treasure, wrath, against the day of wrath and the just declaration of the judgment of God, who shall give to every man according to his works? It is a good lesson which the Prophet teacheth us, that there is mercy with God, not that we should presume of his mercy, and run into all excess of riot, but to the end he may be feared, Psal. 130.4. Hence it is, that Moses, Deut. 29.20. strippeth all such, as flatter themselves with hope of pardon, and conceit of mercy, and opinion of escaping, from that foolish imagination; He that blesseth himself in his heart, saying, I shall have peace though I walk in the imagination of my heart, to add drunkenness to thirst, The Lord will not spare him, but then the anger of the Lord, and his jealousy shall smoke against that man, and all the curses that are written in this book shall lie upon •im, & the Lord shall blot out his name frō under heaven. These persons may call for mercy, but he will not answer them in mercy: they may seek him early, but they shall not find him: because they hated to be reformed, and did not choose the fear of the Lord, Prov. 1.28, 29. He is very gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, Psal. 103.17, 18. Howbeit, it is to the penitent only, not to the obstinate.

The Prophet saith, The mercy of the Lord, is from everlasting to everlasting, and his righteousness unto children's children, to such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them. Where we see, the Scripture maketh a difference and division between man and man, and giveth to everyone his portion, so that albeit he be merciful, yet it is to those only that keep his commandments. For although all be sinners, and thereby seek to creep away closely that way, as it were in the dark, that they might not be espied, yet we must know this, that some are repentant sinners, for whom there is mercy in store; some are obstinate sinners, the Scripture hath no mercy for them, but terrors, & threatenings, and judgments, and punishments, because upon such wicked he will rain snares, fire, and brimstone, and an horrible tempest, this shall be the portion of their cup, for the righteous Lord loveth righteousness, his countenance doth behold the upright, Psal. 11.6, 7. Now such as continue in the course of their sins, are ready to believe that God is merciful, but they believe not the Scripture, that he is merciful only unto such as repent: they persuade themselves falsely that they may run on in evil ways, and yet find mercy at the latter end, which is directly contrary to the whole doctrine of the Scriptures. And yet these men ask, shall we not believe the Scripture to be true? Whereas they believe one part of the Scripture, but they call into question another part: they lay hold on his promises, but they stop their ears against his judgments: nay, they do not so much as believe the promises aright, neither will learn to whom they are delivered, & in whom they shall be verified; which savoreth altogether of infidelity and unbelief. Besides, as they derogate from the verity of y^e Scriptures, so they deny God after a sort, and turn him into a lie, & make him an idol to stand still and do nothing. For to imagine in our heart a GOD wholly compact of mercy, that seeth sin, but will not punish it: that knoweth who sinneth, but will let him alone: is to deny the true God, who as he is merciful, so he is also just. This the Prophet Nahum testifieth in the beginning of his Prophecy, The Lord is jealous, and the Lord revengeth: the Lord revengeth, and is furious, the Lord will take vengeance on his adversaries, and reserveth wrath for his enemies. The Lord is slow to anger, & great in power, and will not at all acquit the wicked, &c. And hereunto accordeth the description of him, Exod. 34, 6, 7. The Lord God, merciful, and gracious, long suffering, & abundant in goodness and truth keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and fourth generation. Such then as think they may proceed and go forward in their transgressions, without controlement or punishment, because God is a merciful God, do utterly deceive themselves, & make a snare to entrap their own souls. The wise man saith, that to justify the wicked, and to condemn the innocent, are both of them an abomination unto the Lord, Prov. 17, 15. If then he hate it in all the sons of men, how shall we imagine, that the Lord will do, or can do either of thē? Let us therefore so conceive of God, as he hath taught us in his holy word: let us not make a counterfeit god, nor set up an Idol in our heart: for he will be served no therwise then he hath appointed. To conclude we must know that whosoever denieth 〈◇〉 of the threatenings denounced in the word, denieth a part of the Scripture, and (as much as lieth in him) maketh God a liar, who will as well execute his judgments, as perform his promises, forasmuch as he is faithful in both. And whosoever imagineth that God is only merciful, & consequently denieth his justice, hath not the true God for his God, but committeth horrible idolatry in cōceiuing wrongfully of his Majesty.

[Use 4] Fourthly, seeing such damages and injuries as are offered to our brethren, do reach to God, & are condemned as sins against him, it should teach us to look to our own ways, to practice justice and equity toward them, & to take heed of all fraud, forgery, falsehood, & oppression whatsoever, forasmuch as he will take an account of us, and bring us unto a reckoning. He that thinketh he can make sufficient amends to men, that there shall be no farther enquiry into the matter, reckoneth without his host, and therefore must reckon once again. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, 1. Thess. 4, 6. Let no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter, because the Lord is an avenger of all such. We must know that God hath to do with it, and will punish severely for the breach of his law. There are many sorts of coniunctions whereby mankind is coupled & combined one to another, as the conjunction of consanguinity, of affinity, of amity, of city, of country of humanity: some have more of these bands linked together, & all have some of them to unite them in one, and thereby as it were to bind them to the peace, & to their good behavior, that they should abstain from all violent and fraudulent conveyances one from another. Among all knots that serve to link us and lock us together as friends which are as our own soul, none is greater or faster then that conjunction which we have with Christ our head, and which the members of his body have one with another: whereby it cometh to pass, that we are all made in himself, of twain, one new man, Eph. 2, 15. and every man of us members one of another, Rom. 12, 5. This spiritual conjunction is more effectual to procure the mutual good of the parties conjoined, then either that which is natural, or that which is civil. Nevertheless, we must do no wrong to any man, God hath made us keepers of the body, of the substance, of the dignity, of the honor, and of the good name of our brethren: if they be men, and be alied unto us no other way but by the commō band of humanity, we must do them no injury, although they be our utter enemies. If we have farther bands to chain us together, it is so much the greater sin if we break those cords, and will not suffer our selves to be tied with them. And mark the reason that the Apostle urgeth, he doth not say. If we do any way defraud them or circumvent them, the Judge shall judge it, or the Magistrate shall punish it, but God is the avenger of all such dealings, and will not suffer them to escape. The like threatening we read in Moses, Exod. 22, 22, 23, 24. If the oppressed cry, God will hear their cry, so that they shall be delivered, and their oppressors punished. If we could suffer this consideration to enter into our hearts, that though all should acquit us, or no man durst lay hold upon us, yet God himself will take their cause and quarrel into his hands, & execute sentence upon their enemies, it would be an effectual argument to move us to make conscience of all sins; even of such as immediately and directly do concern men, and not only of such as concern God and his worship. If we were assured, that the injuries which we do unto others, should be answered before the Magistrate, and we stand at the bar to plead guilty or not guilty, we would be afraid to deal hardly with them or to show any indignities toward them. How much more then ought we to tremble and to quake every joint of us, to consider that the time of vengeance shall come, when we must appear before the throne and tribunal seat of Jesus Christ our Lord, to receive according to the works that we have done in this flesh? Sundry of the ancient have observed four crying sins mentioned in the Scriptures, the which albeit they go away many times unpunished in the world, yet vengeance will not suffer such to live, but God findeth them out in their sins; as the crying of blood, the lust of the Sodomites, the noise of the oppressed, and the hire of the laborers: these are often passed over with silence, and tolerated among men, but they sound shrilly in the ears of God, & ascend up to his judgment seat. Albeit there be no man to accuse them that commit these sins, yet without farther process or enditement they suffer them not to rest, but summon them to his bar, and call without ceasing for judgment against them.

The first is willful murder, and shedding of innocent blood; for when Abel the righteous was slain, the Scripture saith, The voice of thy brothers blood crieth unto me from the ground; whereby is signified, that the godly, though secretly and seditiously slain of the ungodly, & patiently bearing the injuries offered them without murmuring and complaining, yet after death, when their mouths seem to be stopped, and their tongues tied, cease not to accuse their murderers as guilty before God, and to lift up their voices out of the earth, to call down vengeance against them. The Prophet saith, Psal. 116, 15. The death of the Saints is precious in the sight of the Lord: and Psal. 72, 12, 14. He shall deliver the needy when he crieth, the poor also and him that hath no helper: he shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence, and precious shall their blood be in his sight. So likewise the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held, cry with a loud voice, O Lord, holy and true, doest thou not judge & avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? This ought to minister contentment unto them, and to teach them patience, forasmuch as God hath a care of them, and a tender respect unto them. He numbereth the hairs of their head, Math. 10. He gathereth their tears in a bottle, Psalm. 56, 8. He heareth their sighs, Psal. 69, 33. He telleth their steps, and ordereth their goings, Psal. 56. He understandeth their complaints, Psal. 145. He hearkneth to their prayers, Psal. 34, 6. and he keepeth all their bones.

The second crying sin, is lust and uncleanness, of which the Lord speaketh, Gen. 18, 20, 21. Because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous, I will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me: and if not, I will know. True it is, those Cities were culpable of sundry sins, as Ezek. 16, 49. Pride, fullness of bread, abundance of idleness, and contempt of the poor: howbeit when the Lord saith, their sin is very grievous, he pointeth out this outrageous and accursed sin, which the pure God abhorreth as a fruit of impurity. See here the difference between the Spirit of God, and the spirit of the devil. Such as are filthy livers, and possessed with the spirit of uncleanness, do account fornication and adultery to be tricks of youth and sports of pleasure; whereas God maketh them in his word to be sins that lift up their voices, & cry unto him for vengeance. When Pharaoh King of Egypt had taken away Sarah, Abraham's wife, The Lord plagued him and his house with great plagues, until he had restored her. If a bare purpose to commit adultery, and that ignorantly, called for judgment upon an heathen king; how much more shall the living in this sin bring moe stripes upon us that live in the light of the Gospel, & have the truth plainly revealed unto us? forasmuch as he that knoweth his masters will & doth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes.

The third crying sin, is the oppression of such persons as are destitute of help, which is joined with cruelty: as for example, such as are widows, fatherless, strangers, poor, & innocents, whose cry God hath promised to hear, and to help them. This we heard before out of the book of Exodus, If you afflict them in any wise, and they cry at all unto me, I will surely hear their cry, and my wrath shall wax hot, and I will kill you with the sword, and your wives shall be widows, and your children, fatherless. The Prophet Habakkuk prophesieth against such, and painteth out their sin in lively colors, chap. 2, 9, 11, 12. Woe to him that coveteth an evil covetousness to his house, that he may set his nest on high, that he may be delivered from the power of evil, &c. The stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it. One shall say, Woe to him that buildeth a Town with blood: another shall make answer, and stablisheth a City by iniquity. These oppressors do suck out as it were the blood and life of the needy, that have none to whom to cry out for redress, but in the ears of the Lord. They dare not buckle and encounter with the mighty, for as when the pot of earth and of iron meet together, the earthen vessel is dashed in pieces; so when the mighty and the needy strive, the poor man striveth against the stream, and bringeth much misery upon himself. Their help is only in God, the Father of all consolation. If men stop their ears against them, and will not rescue them out of the snare of the fowler, and the net of the hunter, let them abide under the shadow of the Almighty, and shroud themselves under his wings, who will cover them with his feathers, and hear them in their afflictions.

The last crying sin, is the poor laborers wages that are wrongfully and unjustly detained; this also crieth aloud, and never ceaseth, until God hearken to the cry of it. Many think it goods well gained, that can be gotten from the poor, but they shall find it fret as a canker, and consume as a moth the residue of their substance. Hereunto cometh that law of the Lord, Deut. 24, 14, 15. Thou shalt not oppress an hired servant that is poor & needy, &c. thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the Sun go down upon it, for he is poor, and setteth his heart upon it; lest he cry against thee unto the Lord, and it be sin unto thee. Where we see, that this consideration of committing sin against God, ought to enter into us to restrain us from doing wrong against any, especially the poor and needy brother, or the stranger that is in the Land. And to this purpose speaketh the Apostle James, chap. 5, 4. Behold, the hire of the laborers which have reaped down your fields (which is of you kept back by fraud) crieth, & the cries of them which have reaped, are entered into the ears of the Lord of Saboth. Whereby it appeareth, that there is a double kind of crying, one of iniquity and wickedness, the other of the oppressed and afflicted. If one of these cease, yet the other shall never cease crying. It falleth out oftentimes through the power and might of the greater sort, that the poor dare not mutter or murmur, & if they begin to cry out and complain, their mouths are soon stopped, because their angry looks make them afraid of their displeasure, & their severe threatenings are too heavy a burden for them to bear: but the other shall never give over crying; the sin of the oppressors shall cry against them for vengeance, as we see whē Abel could not cry, yet his blood cried and was heard. Sin hath a voice more shrill then the sound of a Trumpet, for that, be it never so loud, vanisheth in the air, & cannot pierce the Clouds; whereas the noise that issueth and proceedeth from sin, out-reacheth the Clouds & entereth into the ears of the Lord of hosts. What then? Must we imagine that sin is a bodily thing, that hath a mouth to speak, & a voice to cry? No, this cry is nothing else but the unchangeable order of God's justice punishing sin, even as at the instance and importunity of the innocent party, a just Judge cannot but relieve the oppressed, and punish the guilty, and so do justice according to the office committed unto him. As if it were said, blood will have vengeance, uncleanness will have vengeance, oppression will have vengeance, fraud and deceit will have vengeance: God cannot but punish all these crying sins, because he is a just Judge, otherwise he were unrighteous. It is the nature of all sin to provoke God to enter into judgment with the sinner, but especially these horrible and abominable crimes mentioned before. And as it is the nature of sin to cry out to GOD for vengeance, so it is the nature of God to punish sin, and to take vengeance of it. Therefore they greatly deceive both themselves and others, that make him like to one of the gods of the Gentiles, not to be offended at all, or very little displeased with sin, and not to regard what men do. As if justice were not essential unto him, or as if he could deny himself, or as if he could cease to be God: for as soon he may do these as the other. But if it can in any sort agree to him, that he can be not willing to punish sin, then he can also not hate sin, forasmuch as to hate, is nothing else but to be willing to punish & reject. And if it be incident to him, not to hate sin, then also it will follow, that he can love and like sin. If he can love sin, he can deny himself and destroy himself, he can like of the works of the devil, which is impossible to do, and horrible blasphemy to affirm.

Lastly, seeing whatsoever is of the nature of sin, is against God, it directeth us what [Use 5] we are to do when we have any way sinned, and desire to have peace of conscience; we must not go to Saints or Angels whom we have not offended, who are not able to be revenged of us; but it is our duty to call for mercy at his hands against whom only we have sinned, and to seek to be reconciled to him whose laws we have transgressed, and who is able to cast body and soul into hell fire. For seeing we offend him, to whō should we repair and come for pardon, but unto him that is offended? It is he that can give us pardon both of sin and punishment. The practice hereof we see in the Prophet David, who because he had sinned against God, against God only, he flieth unto him for the forgiveness of his sins, Psal. 51, 4. Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving kindness, according to the multitude of thy tender mercies, blot out my transgressions; wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin, &c: against thee, thee only have I sinned, and done evil in thy sight. Let us not continue in sin, but labor earnestly and speedily to come out of it, as he that is fallen into a pit, desireth nothing more then to get out, and putteth to all his strength to be delivered. If we get not a general pardon for all our sins, woe unto us, we are in a most wretched and miserable condition. One sin left unpardoned, is able to cast us out of God's kingdom, and to give us our portion among the unbelievers. We see this in the fall of the Angels, who left the state and habitation wherein they were set, they sinned, and were cast out from the presence of God, and are reserved to destruction. It is a good sign, and a true note of repentance, to thirst after mercy. This is the penitents song; he never pleadeth merit, but evermore prayeth for mercy, and prizeth it above all other things. First, we must see our sins against God, and the sentence of death pronounced against us: and then confess the same to be just and equal against our selves. As then our sins cry to God for vengeance (as we shown before) so let them cause us to cry unto God for deliverance from them, and the forgiveness of them. Though we have sinned against him, yet let us not despair of mercy, for that were willingly and wittingly, and willfully to cast our selves into the Lions den, with whom is no pity or compassion; as if he that were like to be drowned, should refuse to be helped out of the waters. Let us not say that God hath forsaken us & cast us out of his sight: let us not think we are out of the hope of his favor. When we seek not God, he will seek us out, and he seeketh out no man, but he findeth him And herein appeareth the infiniteness of his love, the bottom whereof, no man can sound, whereof many can speak to their endless comfort, and to his endless glory and praise. Such as sought not the means to bring them home to God, God hath brought the means home to them, and directed them to use thē to their consolation and salvation. Not that we should abuse or neglect the means, but to kindle our love and zeal unto them so much the more. For if he have been found of them that sought him not, much more will he offer himself in kindness and mercy, to those that with pure hearts and upright consciences seek unto him and crave a blessing of him: as sometimes he hath rewarded temporally those that have humbled themselves hypocritically and unsoundly, to declare how greatly he regardeth true repentance indeed. From hence is reprov'd the doctrine and practice of the Church of Rome, that teach, that the Pastors of the Church have full and absolute power to forgive sins as Christ had, as though whosoever doubteth of their right and jurisdiction, might as well doubt whether Christ have authority to remit sins. This is the pride and presumption of the man of sin, to challenge this preeminence, who setteth himself down in the seat of God, and boasteth himself as God. For this is one of the regalities and perogatives of God, which he will give or impart in whole or in part, to none other. It is an honor that belongeth peculiarly unto him. This the Scribes and Pharisees confessed in the Gospel, Math. 9, 3. Mar. 2, 7. Who can forgive sins, but God only? Christ therefore is the only author of reconciliation, the Ministers are only the Lord's messengers and ambassadors to declare his will out of his word, 2 Cor. 5, 18. All things are of God, who hath reconciled us unto himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation. If the Bishop of Rome had this authority, then we ought to crave mercy at his hands, and say unto him, Have mercy upon me, O Lord God the Pope; which is intolerable blasphemy, & impiety against God. [Objection.] But it may be said, If he do not sometimes forgive sins, then it shall seem to be false which Christ saith, Whatsoever ye bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven: and whose sins ye remit, they are remitted, &c. I answer, [Answer.] this power given to the Apostles and their successors, is a commission in the Name of Christ, to declare and pronounce remission of sins to them that are truly penitent. They have no power actually to remit sins, they are only as dispensers and stewards: they are not made competent Judges, but only as the Lord's messengers to publish the will of God out of his word. They are as Ministers, not enabled to reconcile men unto God, but to pray and beseech them to be reconciled through Christ. Christ then is the reconciler, they are the Ministers of reconciliation. Their commission stretcheth no farther, but to declare the Princes pleasure. If then God only forgive sins, surely no man can do it, doubtless the man of sin cannot forgive sin, he cannot forgive himself, much less another. He is a sick man himself, and needeth the Physician, if haply any physic will do him any any good, which is much to be doubted. He cannot be an absolute Physician to others, that needeth the Physician himself; he cannot save others that cannot save himself, neither reconcile others to God, who hath himself need to be reconciled by another. Christ Jesus himself could never have reconciled us to his Father, if he had needed his Mother, or any Saint or Angel to reconcile him to God. We must all, high and low, rich and poor, go together to the Physician that he may heal all of us. It is Christ's shedding of his blood that remitteth sins, it is he that hath made satisfaction to God, so that it belongeth to God only to forgive sins properly. It is Christ that calleth all unto him that are weary and heavy laden, and promiseth to refresh them. The Lord saith in the Prophet, I am the Lord thy God, the holy one of Israel thy Savior: and afterward, I, even I, am the Lord, and besides me there is no Savior: and yet again more plainly, I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins. Neither doth Christ reprehend the Scribes because they confessed this point of God's power (for they did rightly affirm, that none could forgive sins but God only, Luke 5, 20, 21,) but this was their error, in that they did not acknowledge Christ to be God, who, in the person of the Mediator, even in the state of humility while he lived here, and was conversant upon the earth, might by his divine authority forgive sins, as likewise by the same power he did heal sicknesses and diseases among the people. God then doth properly and absolutely forgive sins committed against his law and eternal Majesty. The Minister by his appointment doth assure all penitent sinners of the forgiveness of their sins, through the mercy of God, and the merits of his Son Jesus Christ: and therefore in this sense he is said to forgive sins, as he is also said to save men's souls, to whom he preacheth salvation. An Ambassador is said to make peace or war, when he declareth according to his commission, his Princes pleasure and determination touching either of them. The Kings Deputy or Lieutenant (having warrant from him) offereth and granteth pardon to rebels or other offenders, when notwithstanding he doth only make known the Princes pleasure in remitting their offenses, and releasing their punishments, forasmuch as it is in the Princes power only to pardon traitors & transgressors. The Minister of the word, as Christ's Deputy or Lieutenant, is said to retain or remit sins, even as the Priest in the time of the Law is said to make the Leapers clean or unclean. His sentence touching that disease, was but declaratory, pronouncing who was stricken, or who was healed by the hand of God: he had not power himself to strike or to heal, to lay it upon any, or to take it away from any person. So it is the ordinance of God, that the Ministers should be declarers, interpreters, and expressers of his will and word concerning remission of sins: not properly pardoners, forgivers, and remitters of sins (for then they must also take away sins) as though the sentence in heaven did depend upon the sentence on earth, whereas the censure of men must depend upon the sentence of God. To forgive sins properly, is to take them away, and to remove the punishment. But God only can do this: to God therefore alone let us fly, of him let us look for mercy, and from him let us never go to any man. If we have recourse unto him, we shall find mercy in time of need, which is better then thousands of gold and silver. This is able to appease the inward trouble of a distressed conscience, and ministereth sound comfort to the afflicted soul that is humbled and cast down to the gates of hell. If we had all the jewels and precious stones that can be found, we were not able to buy out the punishment of one sin. The Prophet saith, Ps. 49, 6, 7, 9. They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches, none of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give a ransom to God for him, &c. The value & worth of the whole world is too vile and base to answer for one trespass: for it cost more to redeem one soul. It could not be done with silver and gold, and such like corruptible and transitory things, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb without blemish and without spot. If we would come before him with burnt offerings and calves of a year old, or would think to please the Lord with thousands of Rams, and ten thousand rivers of oil, or persuade our selves that we can make satisfaction for the sins of our souls by the fruit of our bodies, even by giving our sons and daughters, we deceive our selves, and know not the greuousnesse of sin, nor the infinite wrath of God, nor the exceeding value of the death of Christ, nor the endless torment due unto sin, nor the unspotted purity of the law of God, which is transgressed by it. If we had all things, and wanted his mercy, we have nothing: if once we have it, it is sufficient to cover all our infirmities, and to blot out all our iniquities, according to the saying of Solomon, Prov. 16, 6. By mercy and truth iniquity is purged, and by the fear of the Lord, men depart from evil. Such as never felt the burden of sin, never regard the benefit of mercy: but such as have their hearts in any sort touched with it, acknowledge them blessed that find it, and all those miserable that are destitute of it. It is not instruments of music, it is not dainty fare, it is not outward delights, it is not merry company, it is not riches, or honors, or friends, or nobility, or pleasures, or sports and pastimes, that can alay and appease a troubled mind & perplexed conscience. David wanted not any of these, he was the sweet Singer of Israel, he might have his consort, he could not want mirth and music of singing men & singing women: yet he preferred a drop of mercy before all these; he followed not the practice of Saul, who when an evil spirit sent of God, vexed him and disquieted his mind, listned unto them that told him of a cunning Musician to play before him: but he never sought to God, nor craved mercy at his hand, and therefore albeit he were eased for a time, yet his trouble returned more fiercely upon him then before, and ended in a fury and frenzy, so that nothing could pacify or appease him. This is the common course of the men of this world, if at any time their hearts accuse them, and sin begin to terrify them, & judgment press sore upon them, they seek by merriments, and drinkings, & feasts, and their companions to put that terror away. And this is the only counsel their friends can advise them to take. Like friends, like counsel: carnal friends, carnal counsel. But they and their friends are greatly out of the right way, and are wholly ignorant of the true means of comfort. All sound comfort cometh from God and from his word: and therefore he hath this title given unto him, to be called, the Father of mercies, and the God of all consolation. He sendeth his holy Spirit into our hearts, whē they are cast down, who, by way of excellency, is called, the Comforter. He will not leave us without comfort, if we crave it of him. We must go unto him, and never give him over. He is a fountain that can never be emptied and drawn dry. Besides, we have his word, which being reverently heard and read, is able to raise up and cheer up our heavy hearts. The Apostle showeth, that the Scriptures were written, that we through patience and comfort of them, might have hope. And the Prophet David in sundry places setteth down this effect, which himself from time to time had found and felt in his troubles: as Psal. 19.8. The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes: and the 119. Psalm is a plentiful storehouse to furnish us abundantly with matter of comfort, Thy testimonies are my delight, and my Counsellors: and again, My soul melteth for heaviness, strengthen thou me, according to thy word. This is the true way sanctified unto us to drive away heaviness: this means the children of God have used, & have found by experience and good proof, the force and effect of it. It hath been very available unto them, and filled their bones with marrow and fatness. To this end he saith afterward, Unless thy law had been my delight, I should then have perished in mine affliction. Thus do the faithful rejoice in his Testimonies, as much as in all riches, forasmuch as his statutes do rejoice the heart, make wise the simple, enlighten the eyes, and convert the soul; then which it is impossible to find greater matter of comfort.

To conclude, we have seen, that there are two means to obtain comfort: the one is from the work of God in our hearts by his holy Spirit, which leaveth us not desolate and destitute. The other is the use of the word, which is sweeter then the honey and the honey-comb, and more to be desired then much riches. Let us have an heap of sorrows cast upon us through enduring of the Cross, and let us sink never so deep into afflictions, the word of God is able to raise us up again, & to cheer up our hearts.

[Verse 7. Then they shall confess their sin which they have done.] We shown before, that Moses setteth down three ways, how this damage offered to men, is to be blotted out. The course which they ought to take to purge it away, is first of all to make confession of their sin to God, forasmuch as where the confession of man goeth before, there the forgiveness of God followeth after. We cannot lie hid from him, nor conceal our offenses, and therefore it is best to acknowledge them before him.

From hence we learn, that whosoever looketh for forgiveness, must confess his sins to God. This is the practice and property of a true penitent, to lay forth his sins to God, both original and actual, and to discover them in his sight. This we see in sundry examples remembered in the old & New Testament. When David was reproved of Nathan the Prophet, who set his sins in order before him, he answered, I have sinned against the Lord. The Publican, going up into the Temple to pray, and standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner. The prodigal son having wasted his substance with riotous living, when he came to himself, he went to his father, and said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son. The like confession we read in Daniel, chap. 9, 5, 6, 7. when he perceived by the word of the Lord, that the seventy years were accomplished in the desolations of Jerusalem, he prayed unto the Lord his God, and made his confession, We have sinned and committed iniquity, and have done wickedly, and have rebelled even by departing from thy precepts and from thy judgments, &c. The like we might show out of Ezra 9, 5, 6. and Nehem. 9. and many other places, which teach, that it is a duty required of us to make humble confession of our sins unto God.

[Reason 1] The reasons are weighty and effectual to enforce this duty. First, we shown in the former doctrine, that all sin is committed against God. Howsoever we may hurt men, and damnifie them in their bodies and goods, yet the chiefest dishonor is done against God, whose law is broken and transgressed; as Psal, 51, 4. Against thee, even thee only have I sinned, and done evil in thy sight. If then the injury done to man, be an iniquity committed against God, we are bound to confess our sin unto him. But all the wrongs offered to our brethren, are sins against God: and therefore confession ought to be made unto him.

Secondly, we have shown also before, that [Reason 2] it is in God's power only to forgive sins, and free us from the punishment due unto sin. He only can give pardon for sin, that carried our sins on his body. The Scribes and Pharisees had grievously corrupted the purity of doctrine by the leaven of their own traditions: yet they held soundly and sincerely this principle, that God only forgiveth sins. They falsely interpreted the law of God, and perverted the true meaning of it by their gloses, yet they retained this truth, that none can forgive sins but God only, Mark. 2.7. If then God alone can forgive sins, then we must confess them unto him. But he alone can forgive sins, and therefore we must confess them unto him.

Thirdly, without confession of our sins, [Reason 3] there is no forgiveness nor hope of pardon: for God cannot in justice forgive us, except in humility we confess unto him, seeing without it we have no promise made unto us to find favor at his hands. If we be not ashamed to uncase and uncover our sins, he will not be ashamed of us, but show mercy toward us; as Prov. 28, verse 13. He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but who so confesseth and forsaketh them, shall have mercy. And the Apostle John affirmeth the same, If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness, 1 John 1, verse 9. The like remedy Paul delivereth to the Corinthians, who, for their irreverent & unworthy partaking of the Lord's Supper, were some of them weak, some sick, and some dead: If we would judge our selves, we should not be judged of the Lord. 1 Corin. 11, 31. And the Prophet David declareth the same by his own experience, Psal. 32, verse 5. I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid: I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord, and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. If then there be no forgiveness of sins without confession, it followeth, that it is our duty to confess them before him.

Fourthly, where there is no true confession [Reason 4] of sin, there is no sound repentance for sin. For the inward sight of sin and humbling of our selves for it, will open our mouths, & cause us to lay them open. As then the confessing of them with the tongue, is a sign and testimony that the heart hath forsaken them: so on the other side, the shutting up of our mouths and hiding of our sins, is an evident token, that as yet we lie in them, and have no purpose and resolution to depart frō them. We have never truly repented, until our iniquities be confessed. When David had numbered the people, and his heart did smite him for it, he cried out, O Lord, I have sinned exceedingly, in that I have done: now, O Lord, I beseech thee, take away the trespass of thy servant, for I have done very foolishly. If then we would assure our own hearts, that we have truly repented of our sins, and do not yet lie wallowing in them as a sow in the mire, let us by this fruit of our lips, confession to God, assure it. If we do not assure it this way, we shall never be sure.

Fifthly, this confession tendeth to the glorification [Reason 5] of the Name of God. The hiding of our sins and the smothering of them, as fire under the ashes, dishonoreth him; whereas by revealing of them, his Name is honored, forasmuch as we make manifest thereby the glory of his mercy, of his patience, and of his justice. Of his mercy, in sparing of us, and showing compassion toward us. Of his patience, in long forbearing of us, and waiting for our repentance, whereas he might have suddenly destroyed us. And of his justice, by acknowledging, that if he should punish us and proceed against us, we had our desert, he should do us no wrong, that so he might be just in all his doings, Psal. 51, verse 4. This is that reason which Joshua urgeth unto Achan, Josh. 7, verse 19. My son, give I pray thee, glory to the Lord God of Israel, and make confession unto him, and tell me now what thou hast done, hide it not from me. Where we see, he joineth giving glory to God, and making confession of sin, together, so that the one cannot be separated from the other. For sin doth no more serve to the dishonoring of God, then the sincere confession of sins serveth to the glorifying of his Name: and as the committing of it causeth his Name to be blasphemed, so the confessing of it causeth his Name to be honored and magnified. Such as cannot repent of their evil ways, do by their hardness of heart and obstinacy of mind, more dishonor and reproach the Name of GOD, then by committing most grievous sins. For to settle the heart upon wickedness, with a purpose to continue therein, and so to oppose himself against grace, against the calling and threatenings of God, is no better then to accuse God of lying and injustice. Of lying, whiles he calleth us unto him, and denounceth his judgments against us. Of wrong and injustice, whiles he chastiseth us for our sins, and doth not spare us.

[Use 1] The doctrine being thus fully confirmed, the uses arising from hence are to be learned. And first it serveth to reprove sundry abuses of those that fail in the performance of this duty. Among which enormities, the corrupt practice of the Church of Rome is not the least, who abuse this doctrine of confession, and make it as an hook to catch men's goods, to know all men's secrets, and consequently a means to enrich themselves, and to empouerish others.

Hence it is, that they teach auricular confession to be necessary under the pain of damnation, for everyone that receiveth the Sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, immediately before it.

First, they will have all men confess, and then they must hear Mass: a fit door to such an house. And what are their Priests for the most part, to whom they send us to make confession, but ignorant persons, not able to minister a word of comfort in due season? Are we to acknowledge all our sins unto him, that hath an ear to hear us, and not a tongue to instruct us? But many of their Clergy are unlearned, and yet of greater learning then conscience; so that men ought no more to reckon up their sins to such confessors, then in sickness, to take counsel of one that is ignorant in physic. We have shown before, that the Priest cannot properly pardon sin, forasmuch as he cannot pronounce pardon and forgiveness to any man, except he be truly contrite and penitent before God. But God only and the party penitent, know and understand the contrition of the heart, without which, the dearest sellers and setters out of pardons, dare not say that a sinner is pardoned. For hypocrites may dissemble in their confessions, and by their dissembling, deceive such as have the quickest sight, and the greatest knowledge, and the deepest judgment, who, by all their skill, are not able to dive down into the secrets of the soul.

If then God only know the heart, and understand the imagination of all thoughts of the children of men, how can their Priests simply and absolutely take upon them to forgive sins, seeing they are not able to judge of the soundness and sincerity of the heart? Nevertheless, the consciences of these men are so seared and so senseless, that without any color of truth, or show of godliness, they are not ashamed to teach, that the want of their popish penance, will drive all men, either to desperation, or to security and presumption: whereas the clean contrary is an evident truth. For the doctrine concerning that supposed and pretended Sacrament, offereth manifest occasion both of presumption and of desperation, as might be made plain by many examples. Of presumption, in them that are carnally minded. Of desperation, in them that have broken hearts and tender consciences. Such as are secure, it maketh them more secure; and such as are too much cast down already, it driveth them directly toward the pit of hell. For the one thinketh with himself that he hath a very easy remedy for his sins, and that he need not to trouble himself much with them, nor break one hour of sleep for them, nor forbear one jot of pleasure to be eased of them; he can quickly discharge them and easily disburden them into a Priests ear, and thereby hath a passport given him to commit sin afresh? the other, considering the impossibility of confession to be performed, and the insufficiency of the satisfaction enjoined, which notwithstanding are made the parts of this counterfeit Sacrament, can find no comfort in the Priests absolution.

[Object 1] But they object, that after Christ was risen again, he sent out his Disciples, and breathed upon them, saying, Receive ye the holy Ghost; whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them, and whose euers sins ye retain, they are retained, John 20, 22, 23.

I answer, [Answer.] they can never establish their shrift out of these words, but do plainly show, that either they want their eyesight, or else they think others to be stark blind. For seeing Christ sent his Apostles into the whole world, that they should preach the Gospel upon the house tops, that is, openly and evidently, who will be so foolish as to imagine, that this can be understood of Auricular confession? This authority is joined with the Ministry of the Gospel, as the Apostle teacheth, 1 Cor. 5, verse 18, 19, 20. God hath reconciled us unto himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation, to wit, that GOD was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, &c. Thus we see, that sinners are reconciled to God, and obtain remission of sins by the Ministry of preaching the Gospel, apprehending and receiving the benefit thereof by faith, not by confession: forasmuch as we have in the word, neither precept nor example of reckoning our sins in secret unto the Priest, to the ende we may obtain forgiveness of them. All the examples and commandments mentioned in the Scriptures, call us with a loud voice, and carry us the direct way unto God, advising us to speak to him, who we are sure will answer us: to crave of him, who we are certain will hear us. The Prophet saith, I said, I will confess my sins unto the Lord, and thou forgavest me. Psalm 32, verse 5. The same we read in Hosea, chap. 14, verse 2. Take with you words, and turn to the Lord: say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously, so will we render the calves of our lips. Yea, the servants of God were so far from binding themselves to number up all their sins, that David saith in the Psalm, Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults? Psalm 19, 12. and 38, 5. True it is, many of the ancient do oftentimes speak much of confession, but it is of public confession in the face of the Church, made by him that had committed some public and notorious crime, and given scandal to the whole Church: whereas there was no law set forth of this auricular confession before Innocent. the third, who first of all made an act and decree touching the same. For they call men back from running unto men to tell them their sins, who may put them to shame and rebuke, make them blush, and hit them in the teeth with them, and also bring them to the knowledge of others: but to the Lord that careth for us, to him that is our Physician, and cureth our wounds: as the servant, when he hath offended, craveth not forgiveness of his fellow-servant, but at the hands of his master. And why should we fear to vnburden our conscience of that, which we feared not to commit in his presence? If we come unto him, we may be assured he will turn away his face from our iniquities.

Again, some object the words of the Apostle [Object 2] James, chapter 5, verse 16. Confess your sins one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. Loe, say they, here is an express commandment given unto us to confess our sins. And we see the practice of it to John, Math. 3, verse 5, 6. To whom went out Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the regions round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins. These are the Scriptures that the Rhemists use to establish their error, as the groundworke of their building.

I answer [Answer.] unto them both; and first to the commandment, then to the example or practice of it.

Touching the precept or commandment, howsoever it may carry some show, yet if we mark it, the place rather marreth their market, then helpeth the matter. For the confession of faults here spoken off, is in time of sickness at the private houses of the diseased, when the sick person acknowledgeth to the standers by that come to visit him, wherein and in what manner he had offended them; & the standers by, wherein they had offended him; and both of them desired to be reconciled one to another, and so depart hence in peace, Math. 5, verse 23. It was not made therefore alone and apart in the Church, in time of health, in the ear of the Priest, in the supposed holy time of Lent, a little before Easter, or before they prepared themselves to hear Mass.

Secondly, here he requireth that we confess our sins and offenses one to another, not all to one: so that this text belongeth to mutual confession, not to sacramental confession. Whereby we may evidently prove, that their popish Priests are as well bound to confess themselves to lay-men, as the lay-men are bound to confess themselves to popish Priests.

Otherwise, how can we be said to confess one to another? If any confess unto me, and I confess unto none, how have we kept this rule? How have we confessed our faults one to another?

Thirdly, as we are commanded to confess our faults one to another, so we are also charged to pray one for another: for the Apostle joineth these two together.

But they are ashamed to say, that this pertaineth only to the Priest to pray for others: wherefor then should confession pertain unto him more then the prayer here spoken off? forasmuch as there is a like respect of both these, Confess one to another, and pray one for another. This point therefore is so clear, that the Rhemists themselves confess, that it is not certain, but only probable, that the Apostle speaketh here of sacramental confession: and besides, Cardinal Caietane, in his Commentaries upon the same place, observeth, that it cannot be understood of the Sacrament of Confession, because the Apostle doth not say, Acknowledge your faults to the Priest, but one to another. Touching the practice of the people that came to John's baptism, they confess their sins in general, and not all of them in particular: not compelled unto it, but voluntarily moved. For if they had confessed their sins particularly, John must have stood from morning to evening many years together, because Jerusalem, and all Iewry, and all the Country about Jordan came unto him: in which number no doubt were many thousands, and an innumerable company that were never shriven before; so that their confessions must be very long, & he must of necessity have shriuing work enough all the days of his life, & therefore it was impossible there should be a particular enumeration of all their sins.

Secondly, it reproveth such as hide their sins, and cannot be brought to confess thē. Such as do deny them, fail in this duty, and are far from true repentance, and consequently from free forgiveness. They have skill and will to set out other men's sins, and to stretch them at large to the uttermost, that they may make them seem greater then they are: but touching their own offenses, either they will not understand them, or they will excuse them: and you shall be sure to get thē to confess no more then you can prove against them. Look what you can convince them off, they will confess, because they cannot deny it: where you stick at the proof, they will stick to lay open themselves, and they will go no farther then you can go, but impudently deny the rest. They will never be brought to confess they have sinned, until they be taken in their sin, so that the first time of their taking, shall be the first time of their sinning.

This is a corruption, the which we have drawn from our first parents, to hide our sins, as Adam. When he was examined by the most upright Judge, he posted the matter over, from himself to his wife, Gen. 3, 12, 13. The woman that thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat. And the woman after his example, went about to clear her self, and laid all the blame upon the Serpent; The Serpent beguiled me, and I did eat. But all this served not their turn, God found them out, and punished them for their sin. In this number we may range all such as keep silence, and hold their peace, when they have committed sin, albeit they hear it inquired into: as Achan did, when he had stolen away the wedge of gold and the Babylonish garment, Josh. 7, 16, who hid his sin until he saw it detected by others. Thus do very many account it a notable point of wisdom to keep their own counsel; and if they can cunningly carry it away, they glory in it, and rejoice in their own wicked devices. Others that are driven to speak somewhat touching their offenses, will notwithstanding answer nothing to the purpose, as Gehazi did, whose confession was no confession, Thy servant went no whither. When God called Cain to an account for the horrible parricide he had committed against his own natural brother, and began to question with him about it, Where is Abel thy brother? he answered, I cannot tell, am I my brothers keeper? He would not confess it, but stood in defense of it, or at least would shake it off from him, as a matter impertinent unto him, and no way concerning him. This was a sign of his impenitency & hardness of heart: it is a sure testimony, that as yet he had no touch of conscience, nor feeling of sin, nor regard of punishment. Thus the case standeth with many among us they care not how they run on in their sins, yet cannot be brought to confess them to GOD, that they may find mercy. Such have no comfort of heart, nor peace of conscience, but lie under the wrath of God, and come far behind Judas, the son of perdition.

Thirdly, there is another sort, that will not hide their sin altogether, but yet mince it & diminish it, as if it stuck between their teeth, and they were loath to utter it, so that they are unwilling to declare what they have done. They can amplify the sins of others, but they will extenuate their own: and confess them so slightly and coldly, that thereby they farther discover their own wickedness▪ and that they are not touched at the heart with a feeling of them. A cold confession bewrayeth and argueth a cold repentance, and shall bring as cold an effect and fruit of consolation. For like confession, like consolation. If a Subject that hath offended his Prince, should crave pardon of the Prince, in such sort as many ask forgiveness of God, he should be assured to find little favor. If he should say unto the Prince, I confess I have rebelled and offended, but many others have offended the Law, as much or more, I was not the principal agent or doer in it, I was drawn into it by others; would this submission be accepted at his hands? How then shall we think that God will approve of us, when we cut short our sins in confessing, which we have enlarged in committing? We are not ashamed to say, I am not the greatest sinner; I pray God I may never do anything worse, and then I hope I shall do well enough; I am not the first that have sinned, and I am sure I shall not be the last; I am not alone, but others are as bad as I; let everyone look to himself; I am (I thank God) neither whoremaster, nor thief, nor murderer, nor drunkard. These are they that justify themselves, like the Pharisee in the Gospel, Luke 18, verse 11, 12. who prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this Publican. These are they, that peradventure will not stick with you to acknowledge some of their sins, especially such as are in the eyes and ears of the world, seen and heard of all men: but they will not confess all, nor the greatest, nor the chiefest, nor the most secret: like unto those foolish Mariners that go about to stop the least and smallest holes in the Ship, and let the greatest and widest alone; or like unwise patients that would show to the Surgeon their lightest wounds, & hide from him the most deep and dangerous; or like a watchman that should discover a little band and troop of enemies coming to assault the City, and conceal a great army that is ready to enter, and to cast down the walls. We must keep none of our sweet sins, nor of our profitable sins, but confess them all to him that hath promised to cover them, and not to impute them unto us. Such are in the right way to true blessedness; as for others, they are out of the right way. For it condemneth such as are content to confess in general terms, that they are sinners: but you shall as soon wring water out of a flint, as any particular confession out of their mouths; they are too much in love with themselves, they are too much in love with their own sins.

If we look for pardon at the hands of God, we must not be ashamed, or afraid, or astonished to set them out at large, with their parts and circumstances, at what times, in what places, after what manner, and among what persons we have committed them. Thus have the faithful servants of God done, and found comfort by it. This is the right way to obtain forgiveness, and to procure a blessing at the hand of almighty God, & a plain proof of true humiliation: without which there is no forgiveness at all can be assured unto us.

[Use 2] Secondly, this confession of our sins unto God, ministereth wonderful comfort to all such as are truly grieved, and heartily sorrowful for them. When we can freely pour out our meditations before him, and lay open our secret sins, that neither friend nor foe knoweth, or can touch us withal, whē we can hate with an earnest hatred our best beloved sins, that have been as dear unto us, as our right hand, or our right eye; when we can complain of them, speak evil of them, deface, and every way disgrace them, as carnal men do their utter enemies, it is a true sign that our hearts are touched by the Spirit of God; as our Savior Christ teacheth, John 16, verse 8. When the Comforter is come he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment.

We have no greater enemies then our sins, which are many in number, strong in power, deceitful in snaring, and dangerous in subduing of us. They are in number as the sand on the sea shore, that cannot be reckoned, and moe then the hairs of our head, or then the hours that we have lived. They are as strong as an army of men set in battle array, who by their power and puissance, have struck down the chosen men of Israel. They deceive with their pleasures, as the bird is taken in the snare, and as the subtle harlot that flattereth with her mouth. They bring danger both to soul and body, and leave us not till we perish forever, and be cast into the pit of hell, from whence there is no redemption.

Seeing then their nature is such, that they carry us headlong with violence into perdition, we should also malign them and hate them as death, nay, as him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil. Hebr. 2, verse 14. If we find them too cunning and crafty for us, and our selves too weak to deal against them being armed with all the forces of Satan and of the world, let us go to him that being stronger then that strong man, is able to take away all his weapons, (Luke 11, verse 22.) and bind him in chains, even the Lyon of the Tribe of Judah, (Revel. 5, verse 5.) that is able to stop the mouth of that roaring Lyon, which seeketh whom he may devour, 1 Pet. 5, 8. He knoweth whereof we are made, he remembereth that we are but dust.

And as he is of power to help us, and subdue our corruptions, so he is of infinite mercy to pardon us our sins. He knoweth what is in us, better then we our selves know our selves: forasmuch as he is greater then our hearts, and knoweth all things.

If then we confess our sins truly and unfeignedly, as he is faithful and just, (1 John, chap, 1, verse 9.) so he will forgive us: he hath made the promise, and the word is gone out of his mouth, which he cannot call back again: he hath uttered his voice, and he cannot deny it, no more then he can deny himself.

If he should retain our sins, we being penitent, he should forfeit and falsify his truth, which cannot agree to the divine nature, and therefore (as one rightly speaketh) he should be a greater leaser then we. This is evidently to be seen in the Psalms of repentance penned by the Prophet David, as Psalm 32. At the first he sought by all the means that he could, to hide his sins, he sendeth for Uriah, and useth sundry shifts to convey him unto his house, and thereby to cover his sin. When that policy would not serve, he sendeth secretly to Joab, to put him in place of danger, and thē to retire from him, that he might fall by the sword of the Ammonites. But whiles he seeketh all means to cover it, God, the searcher of hearts, doth discover it, and sendeth his Prophet unto him, to reprove him. Heereby, even by the Ministry of the word, his heart is touched, and he is made to see the greuousnesse of his sin, & against whom he had sinned; then he is not ashamed to acknowledge it, and to leave a memorial of it in the Church for the good of others. Thus he found wonderful comfort by his confession, and could find none without it, I acknowledged my sin, and thou forgavest mine iniquity. Psal. 32, 5. The consideration of the multitude of our sins is able to bring us to despair: but the confession of our sins is able to raise up to hope again, and to stay us up with the mercies of GOD, which are as flagons of wine to refresh us. When David had thus confessed that he had sinned, God sent him a comfortable message that cheered his heart and quieted his conscience. The Prophet that before threatened & thundered out the Law, now applieth precious balm, and poureth wine and oil into his wounds▪ saying unto him in the Name of God, Thy sin is pardoned. They that are escaped by the mercy of God (as it were from a dangerous shipwreck) out of their sins, would not come into the same case and condition again, for to gain a kingdom, nay, all the kingdoms of the world. When the sinful woman confessed her sins by shedding abundance of tears, and wiping the feet of Christ with the hairs of her head, he answered concerning her as the Lord of life and comfort, Many sins are forgiven her, for she loved much, Luke 7, verse 47. Thus he spake graciously and comfortably to the penitent thief on the Cross, accusing himself, reprovng his fellow, justifying Christ, confessing his faith, and asking forgiveness, This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise, Luke 23, 43. The more often we go unto God, and confess our sins before him, the better it is for us, the more mercifully he will deal with us, the greater grace he will bestow upon us, the farther he will remove his judgments from us, and the nearer he will approach unto us.

[Use 3] Lastly, let us all labor after a right confession. Many have confessed their sins, and yet found little comfort, as Pharaoh, Saul, Judas, the Israelites, and many others. If we hope to speed better then these men, then we must confess better then they did. If we sin with them, and confess as they did, we shall reap no better fruit then they did. We are apt to favor and flatter our selves, we are possessed with self-love. We cannot look upon other men's virtues, nor our own vices: we are blind in seeing our own faults, whereas we are sharp sighted and quick eyed to espy a little mote in other men's faces. We should rather consider our own wants to be humbled for them, then the graces we have, to be puffed up by them. No man seeth the spots that be in his own face: so he discerneth not the sins that are in his own soul.

He that would know his deformities, taketh a glass, which showeth unto him what he is, and how he is: so if we would understand our secret & open sins, we must behold our faces in the law of God, for by the law cometh the knowledge of sin, Rom. 3, 20. We must therefore examine our selves touching this duty of confession, and observe diligently the true properties of it. Not everyone that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven. Not everyone that saith, I am a sinner, I am unclean, is a true convert, and a right penitent. Nothing is more common thē to hear men say, I confess myself a sinner, all men are sinners, there is no man that sinneth not, God be merciful unto us: this is the ordinary confession of every man. These are no better then words of course, it is rotten at the root, it is blasted in the ear; it is green in the leaves, but beareth no fruit; it is beautiful without, but soul and filthy within; it is formal in show, but fading in substance. Wherefore, that we may not deceive our selves as a great part of the world do; we are to understand the properties of true confession, that we may comfort our selves in them, if we find them in us: or else labor to attain unto them, if we feel the want of them: and seek to increase in the knowledge of them, if we have already received them.

First of all, we must confess to God our special and particular sins, as the patient that would be cured, not only telleth the Physician that he is sick, but acknowledgeth in what part and in what manner, & how long he hath been sick. When men complain to Magistrates, of the wrongs that have been done them, they will express in what particulars and in what sort they have been damnified. Shall we not much rather seek to the Physician of our souls, and acknowledge to him how sorely we are sick, especially considering he knoweth our diseases better then our selves? If there were no other motive to stir us up to this duty of confession, this were sufficient: because we cannot hide them from him. We may conceal them from the knowledge of men, but with all our craft and cunning, with all our devises and policies, with all our fetches and falsehood, we cannot conceal them from God, whose eyes pierce into the bowels of the earth, and into the depth of hell. This is that which the wise man delivereth, Hell & destruction are before the Lord, how much more the hearts of the sons of men? Pro. 15, 11. So y^t there is nothing so deep, nothing so secret, w^c can be hidden frō the sight of God. Hence it is, that David confessed oftentimes, that he had sinned: & addeth in what kinds, in blood-guiltiness, and in numbering of the people: so Paul confessed, that he was a blasphemer, a persecutor, and an oppressor, the chiefest of all sinners, 1 Tim. 1, 15. We see then to whom we must go to confess, and in what manner we are to perform it: which serveth to reprove those, that when their sins are discovered and come to sight, that they can no longer hide them, do submit themselves unto men, and stoop down to them, but never humble themselves before God, whom they have offended, nor acknowledge how shamefully they have broken his laws. We have many false tears shed to blind and blear the eyes of men, but they never seek unfeignedly to reconcile themselves unto him that is able to save and to destroy, and never stand in fear of him that can destroy body and soul in hell fire. Let us take heed of this hypocrisy, which is a most vain and fruitless kind of humiliation, of which we shall speak more afterward.

Secondly, we must set out our sins in their right colors, as beggars that uncover their sores to men, that they may behold them and show mercy. We must be so far from making our sins lighter and lesser then they are, that we should enlarge them to the full, and labor to make them appear vile & heinous as they are. A notable practice of this we have in David, Psal. 51, 5. he ascendeth up from his present sins to his original corruption, Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me. The like we see in Ezra, chap. 9, verse 6. when the people had transgressed by making affinity with strangers, taking of their daughters for themselves and for their sons, he fell upon his knees, & spread out his hands unto the Lord his God, and said, O my God, I am ashamed, and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God: for our iniquities are increased over our head, and our trespass is grown up unto the heavens. We must confess, when, and where, and how we have sinned. We must confess how much we have dishonored God, and scandalized the Church, and how long we have lived and continued in our sins. We must confess, that if he should condemn us, he should do us no wrong, but we must clear him and the course of his justice, when he proceedeth against us. We heard how Paul confessed his sin in the time of his ignorance, that he had persecuted the Church of God extremely, and made havoc of it horribly, Gal. 1, 13. and therefore was not only the least of all Saints, but the greatest of all sinners. Neither doth he, in uttering this speech, make a lie, or speak for modesty sake, but as he thought in his heart, esteeming no man's sin like his own, nor understanding another man's as he doth his own, nor feeling another man's as his own. Thus do the servants of God deal with themselves, & with their sins, and thereby show that they were out of love with themselves and their sins. This reproveth those that content themselves with a word and away, they cannot abide to stand long in their confession, as if they were afraid to humble themselves too far: whereas we cannot make our selves too vile, nor hate our sins too much. Many confess thē, as if they meant presently to return unto thē, like to the harlot that wipeth her mouth, and saith, I have not committed iniquity, Pro. 30, 20. whereas we should hate thē with a perfect hatred as our utter enemies y^t seek our destructiō

Thirdly, our confession must proceed from the heart, it must be sound at the root, otherwise the fruit will be blasted, rotten, corrupt, and unsavory, as Prov. 4, 23. Keep thine heart with all diligence, for thereout cometh life: and chap. 23, 26. My son, give me thine heart, and let thine eyes delight in my ways. Thus it was with David, Ps. 6.7, 6. whose soul was troubled very sore, I fainted in my mourning, I cause my bed every night to swim, and water my couch with my tears, and the more he was afflicted, the more unfeignedly he came to God. Such was the confession of the Publican, when he smote his breast, and said, Lord be merciful to me a sinner. When he laid his hand upon his breast, if it had been possible, he would have touched and taken his heart to have offered it up to God. If we bring unto God only an outward confession, fetched no farther then from y^e mouth, it returneth empty to us again, and never obtaineth any blessing. This lip-labor God hateth as a lame offering, and a maimed sacrifice, The heart is as salt that seasoneth every part of the worship of God, & every exercise of our religion, & every fruit of our most holy faith. This is commended to have been in Ephraim by the Prophet, After that I converted, I repented: and after that I was instructed, I smote upon my thigh, I was ashamed, yea, even confounded, because I did bear the reproach of my youth. Ier. 31, 18. Hypocritical confession is no confession.

Fourthly, we must confess our sins with an hatred of them. For where there is no feeling of sin, there can be no pardon of sin: and therefore Christ calleth such to him as were weary and heavy laden, and ready to faint & fall down under the burden of them, Mat. 11, 28. The Prophet confesseth, that his sins were as a weighty burdē too heavy for him, so that he went crooked, & bowed very sore. So long as sin appeareth unto men small as a mote, light as a feather, pleasant as a sport, y^t it groweth to be as common with them as going in the high way, drinking iniquity as water, and delighting in it as in meat & drink, it is plain they know not the nature of it. Many hypocrites like Judas have confessed their particular sins, who said, he had sinned in betraying innocent blood; but it is of custom without conscience, or of passion without remorse, or of fear without change: because they are weary of the punishments that lie upon them, but are not weary of their sins that are y^e causes of them: their plagues seem heavy, but their sins seem light, whereas the sins that are in us, should more grieve us, then the judgments that are upon us. Such men are for the present touched with the stroke of God's hand; but after they have confessed, and the punishment is removed, they are the same that they were before, and are found no changlings, they return again to their old sins, as the dog to his vomit, and practice that which before they seemed to abhor. Let us therefore hate sin much more then the punishment, lest we be as malefactors that oftentimes cry out for the punishment, but seldom or never for their offense. Sin is the breach of God's law, and the procuring cause of all punishment. If we be careful to stay the cause, we shall quickly and easily stay the effect: and if we would judge our selves, we should not be judged of the Lord. Fifthly, our confession must not be extorted or enforced, but freely and willingly performed. Many men confess their sins, but this is no free will offering, they are forced unto it by the rigor of the Law, or by the anguish of the soul, or by violence of sickness, or by fear of death, or by the crack of God's judgment, or by the censure of men. If we be as forward to confess them to the glory of God, as we were forward to commit them to his dishonor, we have comfort in the performance of this duty, and it will work in us repentance never to be repented of. But if necessity compel us to this, as it did Pharaoh and Judas, and Achan, while the rod was upon their backs, or God otherwise had found them out, it is our crosses that make us confess, and not our sins, as Psa. 78. When the wrath of God was heavy upon them, so that he slew them, and consumed their days in vanity and their years hastily, then they sought him and they returned, and sought God early, they remembered that God was their strength, and the most high God their redeemer: but they flattered hem with their mouth, and dissembled with him with their tongue. Every duty must be performed to God cheerfully, if it be done otherwise, God regardeth it not.

Sixthly, this must be observed in our confession, that we ought not so far to dwell upon the meditation of our sins, that we forget the mercies of God, and faith in his promises, and forgiveness of our sins. Judas confessed against himself his own particular sin in betraying his master, and shedding of innocent blood: howbeit this being wrested from him, through horror of his conscience, and the fearful apprehension of God's wrath, he never expected any mercy, but went his way solitary, and hanged himself desperately. He had no belief of pardon, nor hope of favor, nor desire of repentance, and therefore his confession served to no other end, but to acknowledge as on the one side the Justice of God, and the equality of his ways, so on the other side, the merit of his own punishment, and the sealing up of his own just condemnation, by his own mouth. It was far otherwise with Peter, after he had denied and abjured his master, he repented of his sin and wept bitterly for the same, he believed the promise, and laid hold on mercy, and was saved. This confession was joined with faith, which sanctified it to his comfort. Confession joined with infidelity is no confession, for unbelief is as a bitter root that poisoneth it, and maketh it unsavory and vnhealthfull.

Seventhly, it belongeth unto us and to our confession, to join prayer to God for the pardon of our sins. It is our duty together with our acknowledging of our faults, to ask forgiveness, and to pray for mercy to the God of all mercy, against whom we have trespassed without which all is in vain. Thus did not Cain that despaired and cried out, that his sin was greater then he could bear, and therefore received no comfort nor grace in time of need. How many and great soever our sins are▪ let us never give over prayer for pardon. It is one of the engines of the devil whereby he betrayeth our souls, and he catcheth many in his snare. He knoweth, that they are holden fast as slaves in chains and fetters, that are persuaded to give over prayer. He is in the way to Atheism, that prayeth not at all, Psal. 14.4. He is forsaken of God that thinketh it needless and superfluous, as appeareth in Saul when the noise that was in the host of the Philistines spread farther abroad, he said unto the Priest that brought the Ark of God, Withdraw thine hand, as if he had said, There is now no time to ask counsel of the mouth of God, Numb. 27.21. It is otherwise with the servants of God, though they have been overcome by the strength of their corruption, by want of watchfulness, by the subtlety of sin, and by the temptation of Satan, yet they would never shut up their mouths from the invocation of the Name of God, and from calling for mercy at his hands. We see this in David, both in the book of Psalms & in other places, Psal. 51.1. We see it in the penitent Publican, Luk. 18.13. and 15.1. and in the prodigal son that returned to his fathers house. We see it in the Israelites, and in many others. To this doth the Prophet exhort them, Hos. 14.3. Take unto you words and turn to the Lord; and say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously, so will we render the calves of our lips.

Thus we see, confession of sin, and asking of pardon, must join hand in hand and go together as friends that are agreed: so that we should not hope for pardon, but pray for pardon of God, whose nature is to forgive iniquity, transgression, and sin, that is, sins of all sorts, how great and heinous soever they be. If we sin against God, and never ask forgiveness of God, we shall never receive forgiveness at his hands.

Lastly, we ought so to confess our sins, as that we have also a purpose to leave and to forsake our sins. We must not think to find mercy, so long as we have a desire to continue in them.

Hence it is, that the Prophet saith, Isaiah, 55.7. Let the wicked forsake his ways, and the unrighteous his own imaginations, and return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he is very ready to forgive. This is true repentance to fly from sin, forasmuch as everyone that nameth the Name of Christ, must depart from iniquity, 2 Tim. 2.19. This is a faulty confession of sin, when there appeareth no change or alteration in them that do confess. We must confess both some of our sins and all of them, and keep none of the sweetness of them under our tongues, as Job speaketh: but refrain from them, and be afraid that they will be unto us as the gall of Asps. We must cast aside everything that presseth down, and the sin that hangeth so fast on: he will bring all sin unto judgment, and therefore we should confess all of them, if we would have pardon of all of them. We desire to have them all pardoned, so that we must hide none of them, nor conceal them, for thereby we shut up God's mercy, and are enemies to our own peace.

And shall restore the damage thereof with his principal, and put the fifth part of it more thereunto, &c. The second means of expiation of our sins, or of receiving forgiveness of them, is restitution; which is set down three ways. He that hath wronged his neighbor must restore, first the principal: secondly, the damage: and thirdly, he shall add a fifth part thereto: to the end that all persons should be terrified from committing this or the like sin, and the owner may have a full amends, and receive a perfect satisfaction. True it is, our offenses are forgiven freely without our deserts, and certain it is, we cannot make amends and satisfaction to God: but we can, and may, and ought unto our brethren which are damnified by us.

Now, if God had ordained, that such as purloyne from men their goods, either by open oppression, or by forged caullation, or by violent extortion, or by colorable circumvention, should only restore the principal portion which they have taken away, it might have encouraged many in their wicked ways, and have strengthened the hands of the fraudulent dealer. For he might reason thus with himself, I will enrich myself with my neighbors goods, and draw unto me that which is his: I will go closely and covertly to work, it is a thousand to one that ever it be known, or I espied: and if it come abroad to the open light, I know the hardest and the worst that may befall, he can have but his own again; and so, though I be no winner, I am sure I shall be no looser. To prevent this mischief, and to stop the mouths of all those that are ready to do wrong, the Lord decreeth, that such a one shall restore not only the principal, but he shall repay the damage that the owner hath sustained by the lack or loss of his goods and besides he shall add a fifth part thereunto, whether it be more or less that he hath taken away. From hence we learn, that whatsoever is unjustly taken away from the right owners, ought to be restored unto them again. It is a duty required at our hands to make restitution to our brethren, whensoever we have wronged them, and whatsoever we have taken from them. When Abimelech had taken away Abraham's wife, while he sojourned in Gerar, the Lord said unto him in a dream, Deliver the man his wife again, for he is a Prophet, and he shall pray for thee, that thou mayest live: but if thou deliver her not again, be sure that thou shalt die the death, thou, and all that thou hast. Gen. 20.7. Abimelech is commanded to restore her again to him, whose by right she was, and to whom only she pertained. Many laws to like purpose are set down in the book of Exodus, chap. 22.1, 3, 4, 5, &c. If a man steal an ox or a sheep, and kill it, and sell it, he shall restore five oxen for the ox, and four sheep for the sheep, &c. If a man do hurt field or vineyard, and put in his beast to feed in another man's field, he shall recompense of the best of his own field, and of the best of his own vineyard. So in the book of Leviticus, chap. 6.1, &c. the Lord ordaineth, If a soul sin, and commit a trespass against the Lord, it shall be, because he hath sinned, that he shall restore, &c. And to this purpose, Samuel appealeth to the consciences of the people 1 Sam. 12.3. Behold here I am: bear record of me before the Lord, and before his Anointed; whose ox have I taken? or whose asse have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? or whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I received a bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it you. Everyone that hath government over others, cannot truly say thus, but everyone ought to do thus. Whereby we see, that howsoever God commandeth us to confess our sins which we have committed unto him, yet that is not sufficient, unless we also make actual restitution to him whom we have offended.

This truth is yet better to be confirmed [Reason 1] by strength of reason. And first we must know that it is a fruit or sign of true repentance and turning unto God, and of an heart touched with a feeling of his former offenses, that he which hath stolen, will steal no more. This we see in the example of Zacchaeus, Luke 19.8. when once he believed in Christ, who had as it were lighted a candle within his heart, y^t he began to see his own unrighteousness, and so his unworthiness to receive any good thing, he stood forth and said unto the Lord, Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor▪ and if I have taken away anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold. He testifieth his repentance by his readiness to make restitution; whereas he that keepeth stolen goods, stealeth still, and is no better then a thief, and consequently far from repentance.

[Reason 2] Secondly, without restitution there can be no remission: forasmuch as repentance is falsely counterfeited, and not truly practiced. God will not forgive such as retain with them their neighbors goods. To steal from them, and to keep that which is stolen, is a plain token that we are resolved to continue in sin. He that is persuaded and determined not to depart from stolen goods which are sweet morsels unto him, is resolved to be a thief, and not to give over. Thus God is mocked and dallied withal, and his law neglected and despised. This the Prophet Ezekiel pointeth out, chap. 18.7, 9, 12, 13. and 33, 15. He that hath not oppressed any, but hath restored to the debtor his pledge, he shall surely live, saith the Lord God: but he that hath oppressed the poor and needy, and hath spoiled by violence, and hath not restored the pledge, &c. he shall surely die, his blood shall be upon him. Seeing then, such as restore and so make recompense of that they have taken away, have promise of forgiveness, & contrariwise, such as never make restitution have a terrible threatening of death denounced against them, it followeth that this is a duty required of all persons.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, the performance of it is a very special means to bring a blessing upon us: a blessing, I say, from him to whom restitution is made. For, when he shall see how God hath touched their heart with a feeling of their sin, that they can no longer keep that which is not their own, albeit power be in their hand to do it, it shall stir him up to desire and procure their good: and to crave a blessing to come down upon them. This is that which we read in Moses, Deut. 24.12, 13. If the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge, &c. that he may bless thee. This end is not to be neglected, forasmuch as the ears of God are always open to hear the cry of the poor, and he hath promised to help them, and to bring a curse upon all their oppressors, to their destruction.

[Reason 4] Fourthly, as the loins of the poor shall bless them that restore, so God will accept it, as a work of justice and righteousness, and as a fruit of his spirit, justifying us by the righteousness of Christ Jesus his Son, and sanctifying us to his glory. In the place of Scripture before remembered, Moses teacheth this, and layeth it down as a strong reason, Deut. 24.13. where speaking of such as had taken pledges of the poor, he saith, In any case thou shalt deliver him the pledge again when the Sun goeth down, that he may sleep in his own raiment, &c. and it shall be righteousness unto thee before the Lord thy God. This also is a most forcible reason to move us to restitution, forasmuch as God sets it down as an infallible testimony of a justifying faith, and therefore the contrary is a fruit of infidelity; so that we shall never repent us of that we have done, nor wish it to be in our own hands again.

[Reason 5] Fifthly, the unjust retaining of other men's goods, hindereth many good things from us, inasmuch as God will accept no service nor duty at our hands, until we have rid our hands of things evilly gotten. We may come to hear his word, and to call upon his Name, and sit among the Saints and servants of God in the Congregation: howbeit, we hear without fruit, and we pray without profit. For this poisoneth and corrupteth unto us the best things of God. This is that which Christ teacheth us in the Gospel of Matthew, chap. 5.23.24. If thou bring thy gift to the Altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee (but he hath some just action against us, so long as we keep any of his goods wrongfully from him) leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. If then we desire that God should hear our prayers, or be well pleased with the hearing of his word, we must be careful to make recompense and satisfaction for such injuries as we have offered, and our brother hath sustained.

Now let us come to the uses, which are as [Use 1] it were the life and soul of this point, that hath been proved. First of all, it serveth to reprove all such as neglect this duty, and so offend against this doctrine. And among them, it meeteth directly & chiefly with those that commit sacrilege, robbing the Church, and defrauding the Ministers of that portion which God hath granted unto them in his holy word. The wise man saith, Pro. 20.25. It is a snare to the man who devoureth that which is holy: and after vows to make inquiry. Our Savior himself saith, Matth. 10.10. The laborer is worthy of his wages. The Apostle Paul saith 1 Cor. 9.14. The Lord hath ordained, that they which preach the Gospel, should live of the Gospel. This sin came first from the man of sin, by whom tithes were first alienated, and impropriations erected, and Church-livings spoiled, for the maintenance of idle persons that sate still, and did nothing but eat and drink, and fat themselves in cloysters, as oxen in a stall: and these deal with the goods of the Church, as the soldiers did with y^e garments of Christ, they parted his garments among them, and cast lots for his vesture. The Centurion is commended in the Gospel, that built a Synagogue for the Jews: but these men do what they can to pull down Churches, and to impoverish the Ministry, and to destroy the souls and salvation of many whom Christ redeemed. These spiritual thieves and Church-robbers, must learn to pay their due, and not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn, 1 Tim. 5.18. They rob God greatly of his honor, and dishonor him more then the heathen did their idols which are no gods.

These men glory in their Christianity, and yet are enemies unto Christ. So that the Gentiles that knew not God, shall arise in judgment against them, and condemn them. Secondly, it reproveth all oppressors that fill their houses with the spoils of the poor and needy: as Isaiah 3.14.15. The Lord will enter into judgment with the ancients of the people, and the Princes thereof: for ye have eaten up the vineyard, the spoil of the poor is in your houses. What mean ye that ye beat my people to pieces, and grind the faces of the poor, saith the Lord God of hosts? And to this purpose speaketh Micah, in his propheties against this sin, chap. 3.3. They also eat the flesh of my people, and flay their skin from off them; they break their bones, and chop them in pieces, as for the pot, and as flesh within the caldron. In the day of judgment, when an end of all things shall come, such shall be cast into hell as are covetous and have not given of their own, who have seen the naked, and not clothed them; the hungry, and have not fed them; the thirsty, and have not given them drink: the sick, and have not visited them: how much more shall they be condemned, that behold their brethren clothed, and take away their garments: that see them to have meat and drink, and spoil them of it? The example of the rich man teacheth this, Luke 16.23. He took nothing from Lazarus, he robbed him not of his rags, he took not from him a crumb of bread, or a drop of water, and yet he is accounted cruel and unmerciful, and is cast into torments. This man shall rise at the day of judgment, & condemn many among us, who not only do no good, but much harm, and exercise cruelty and oppression over the poor that dare not lift up their voice against us. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, shall be hewn down and cast into the fire, Matth. 3.10: and not that tree only that bringeth forth evil fruit. Hence it is, that it is said by Elishu in the book of Job, cha. 34.28. They have caused the cry of the poor to come before the Lord, and he hath heard the cry of the afflicted.

Thirdly, it reproveth the poor that steal from the rich, and think they may do it lawfully, and are not bound to restore what they have taken. Pouerty, how great soever it be, is no privilege or protection, to take one sheep or Lamb out of the flocks of Job that was so rich, and had so many: or one lock & handful of wool from the wealthiest Cloathier: or one pound or penny, out of the house of the best moneyed Merchant: or one remnant of clothe or parcel of ware out of the shop of the stored Tradesman. In times of dearth and famine, when it goeth hard with the meaner sort, they think they have a warrant to shift for themselves howsoever they can, & to get for themselves whatsoever they are able. But the Law of God serveth as a bridle to restrain all persons, both rich and poor, both high and low, in times of plenty and scarcity, Thou shalt not steal. When the Lord forbiddeth theft generally, wilt thou mince it, and distinguish where he doth not distinguish, & say, I will steal in time of need? It is our duty to pray to God to give us our daily bread, and not to take from others their bread. What needed the wise Agar mentioned in the Proverbs, to pray unto God not to give him poverty, if he might lawfully relieve himself so easily by the store and substance of others at his own pleasure? Bur some will object the words of Solomon, [Object.] Prov. 6.30. Men do not despise a thief, if he steal to satisfy his soul, when he is hungry. To this I answer, [Answer.] that the wise man speaketh not simply, but comparatively. For he compareth two sins together, adultery and theft, the greater with the lesser. It is a great shame to take away other men's goods from them, howbeit theft is not so foul a fact and fault, as to defile another man's wife: for the thief may make restitution, and thereby after a sort put away his discredit: whereas the adulterer cannot make amends, nor blot out the reproach, neither will the husband of the whorish woman be reconciled, or forget the wrong offered unto him. True it is, he that did steal to preserve life, was to be punished by the law of God, Exod. 22.1. for he was to make restitution, or to be sold as a bondman; but the adulterer and the adulteress were to die the death. The purpose of Solomon therefore is not to defend the thief, or to excuse the theft, or to abrogate the Law, or to plead for malefactors, or to open a gap to the committing of evil: forasmuch as he saith afterward Whosoever is partner with a thief, hateth his own soul: And Paul teacheth that thieves shall not inherit the kingdom of God, 1 Cor. 6. and in another place he exhorteth, that he which hath stolen should steal no more, Ephe. 4.

Nevertheless, albeit theft be a foul sin in it self, and excludeth from everlasting life▪ yet in comparison of a greater and fouler sin, it doth not appear and show it self so filthy. So the Prophet Ezekiel, chap. 16. saith, that the Sodomites were better then the people of Jerusalem, who by their greater ungodliness justified them: not that he exempteth them from blame, but because the other were worse and worthy of greater blame. The objection being thus answered, and the place cleared, we return to the former point and conclude, that no pretence of poverty or allegation of necessity can excuse theft, forasmuch as the Law of God standeth evermore in his full force.

The Scripture chargeth us to get our living with the labor of our hands, and to eat our own bread in the sweat of our brows; to ask our food of God, and to depend upon his providence, and rather to perish for hunger then to rob our brother and offend against God. Moreover, our Savior setteth it down as a certain rule to guide us in our dealings one with another, Matth. 7.12. All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the Law and the Prophets. If then being rich, we would not have the poor steal frō us, we our selves being poor. ought not to deceive and defraud the rich.

Fourthly, it convinceth many in y^e Church of Rome, that slander us, and bring up a false report of our doctrine and profession, who teach and publish to the view of the world, that we require not of any persons to make real restitution of goods wrongfully gotten. This is a notorious and notable slander, and testifieth how much destitute they are of true accusations, when they are compelled to make such open and odious lies against us. We require restitution to be actually made, as well as they. We teach, that there is no repentance, nor forgiveness without it. Indeed we cannot make amends for our sins to God; that is done only by the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, which cleanseth us from all sin. So then, our doctrine being plain and evident, their mouths are stopped, and they are convinced to be liars, as in this, so in many other points of greater importance: and therefore they do us wrong which affirm that we hold, that doers of wrong should not restore.

Lastly, such are reprov'd also, as get and gather into their hands, other men's goods by flattery & fair promises to make restitution, and then never regard to pay what they have borrowed. They care not how deeply they run in other men's books and bands, but are slack to return that is due debt unto them, and to make payment of that which they owe. This also is a breach of the eighth commandment, and made a note of a wicked man by the Prophet, Psal. 37.21. The wicked borroweth, & payeth not again: but the righteous showeth mercy, and giveth. Here we see, who they are that never repay nor restore that which they have borrowed, they are such as are justly branded with the title of wicked men A little that a righteous man hath, is better then the riches of many wicked, forasmuch as their riches many times are not their own, if every bird had his feather, and every owner could get that which hath been taken from him. It is the property of the ungodly, to hold fast other men's goods which they can get to themselves. These are of two sorts, some are rich, and some poor.

There are some rich men, who, albeit they be proud and prodigal, yet are careless to pay their debts, which through their riotousnesse and excess they run into: or if they pay them, it is so hardly wrested from them, y^t they show how unwilling they are thereunto. If they set men at work, they are backward to pay them their wages, and to give the recompense of the labors of their hands. Others do store and enrich themselves by borrowing wares and other like commodities, and then of purpose break, rather than of necessity: if they be cast into prison, they live delicately and at ease with their stolen goods, as I have shown at large elsewhere. Thus are many poor men, their wives & children, oftentimes undone by these bankroutes, of whom we may say, it skilled not if they were also neck-rupt, rather than so many innocents should perish through their wickedness.

Some again are of the poorer sort, and earn their living by daily labor, who had rather follow idleness, and live of other men's purses, than busy themselves painfully in their callings. These are constrained through their own folly to borrow what they can, and are so importunate, sometimes by complaint, and sometimes by flattery, that they get money into their hands of other men's; and when they once can seize upon it, as a prey or booty, they no sooner obtain it, but they lavish it out in eating, in drinking, in gaming, in feasting and good fellowship (as they call it) as if they had found a treasure, or as if it had been freely given them, and as if they should never give an account for it, or restore it to the owner. These men, when they are asked again those things which they have received, do reproach their creditors, and return unto them evil words for their good wills.

They are not ashamed to tell them, that they are no Christians that ask again that which they have lent, and by such like cozening tricks they seek to delude, and do dally with their creditors. When they come to borrow, they speak with other tongues, and have learned another language: then their words are softer than butter, then they will promise anything. But when the day of restoring cometh, they have forgotten their own words, and they have lost the conscience which before they seemed to have had: so that we may say to them as it is in the Psalm, Thou lovest evil more than good, and lying▪ rather than to speak righteousness: thou lovest all devouring words, O thou deceitful tongue. Both these kinds of men are to be avoided of us, and their practices are to be abhorred, as they that savor altogether of impiety, and no whit beseem the profession of Christianity.

Secondly, it is not sufficient for men to get [Use 2] goods into their hands (a thing that most men do aim after) by raking, and scraping, and scratching, to become rich; but they must know how they are gotten, and with what conscience they are kept and detained, forasmuch as goods evilly gotten, shall never prosper, but will surely bring vengeance upon their heads which withhold them, as Prov. 22 16. He that oppresseth the poor, to increase his riches, shall surely come to poverty. We have many examples of this point left unto us in holy Scripture, both of the old and New Testament, That we should beware by their harms, and be wise by their falls, and take heed by their ruins. Achan did steal away the wedge of gold and a Babylonish garment, but it cost him his life, Josh. 7.25. Ahab took possession of Naboth's vineyard, whom he had caused to be stoned to death but it brought the destruction of him and his posterity. Gehazi coveted after an evil covetousness, and gave himself to receive bribes, but he gat with it the leprosy, so that his loss was a thousand times greater then his gains. Judas sold his master for thirty pieces of silver, but he was never quiet after he had received it, so y^t he brought back the money, and went and hanged himself, Matth. 27.5. The like we might say of Balaam, who loved the wages of unrighteousness, and was hired with love of reward, to curse y^e people of God; he went his way without his hire, and lost his life among the Midianites, Numb. 31.18. It is not enough to get goods, but we must get them justly and lawfully. It is not enough to eat bread, according to the exhortatiō of the Apostle, 2 Thes. 3.11, 12. We hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busi-bodies: them that are such, we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread. Our Savior teacheth us to ask at the hands of God the Father our daily bread, Matt. 6.11. and not other men's. For it is so called, because it is gotten by our lawful labor, and by honest means, and is provided for us of his liberality. If we do not consider this carefully, we may get goods, and withal get a curse with them, so long as we have the least jot of other men's in our own keeping.

And howsoever we judge of our selves, we are no better thē thieves, so long as we retain in our houses or our hearts, other men's goods. Let us remember the saying of the Apostle, Ephes. 4.28. Let him that stole, steal no more: but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. Many there are that make no difference between their own and other-men's, as if all things were common. They care not whose they have, so that they have what they lack. It is sweet unto them, whatsoever they can fasten and lay hold upon. But evil gotten goods go never alone, the curse of God doth ever go with thē, which will bring upon them all miseries of soul and body. If this were always set before our eyes, it would be sufficient to restrain our harts from coveting, our eyes from desiring, our hands from handling, and our houses from holding other men's substance, lest while we catch after that which belongeth to our neighbor, we lose forever that which is our own.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it serveth to admonish all that possess anything wrongfully, to restore it again accordingly. There can be no excuse to such as hold fast what they have once gotten. They are much worse then Judas, and come far behind him. He cometh nearer to repentance then they, forasmuch as they go not beyond the reprobate, nay, they come far short of them. For when he felt the wrath of God, and the horror of his conscience, he brought back again the thirty pence which he had taken of the Pharisees to betray his Master, and cast them down in the temple. This example will be a witness against these men, in the day of judgment, and be sufficient to condemn them. True it is, Satan will move us, and our own nature will persuade us, that there is profit in keeping, and no such danger in retaining other men's goods, but rather that it may bring hurt to our substance, shame to our persons, and reproach to our name, to restore the riches of iniquity, and so to make our faults publicly known. But we must not hearken to such evil persuasions of a corrupt counselor, that never giveth good and wholesome counsel, Wherefore the question may be asked, whether restitution [Objection 1] be necessary to true repentance; so as without it, we cannot repent at all. I answer, [Answer.] it is necessary, as we shown before in the example of Zacchaeus, Luke 19. and therefore it is a common, but a corrupt custom and practice of such as in death seem devoutly to bequeath their souls into the hands of God, & their evil gotten goods into the hands of their heirs, children and friends without restitution. It is usual with most men, when they are to go the way of all flesh, to make show of repentance, of forsaking their evil ways and turning unto God: but this repentance is no repentance, so long as the things of our neighbor remain in our houses. No man can give any legacies or show any liberality of that which is not his own, forasmuch as he hath no right unto it. If he should give it unto the poor, it is no sacrifice that God accepteth; it may do some good to the receiver, but it can bring none at all to the giver. Indeed, we are bidden to give alms to the poor, that they may receive us into the heavenly habitations, Luke 16.9. but we must not be liberal of other men's goods, but of our own: neither open others men's hands, and shut our own; neither bestow other men's, but restore them justly and truly. Besides, this bringeth a curse upon the residue of our goods; & causeth God to blow upon them, so that albeit we leave them to our heirs, yet they seldom enrich our posterity.

But it may farther be said, What if a man [Objection 2] be not able to restore? he may peradventure have good will, but no ability by reason of his poverty. I answer, [Answer.] where the deed cannot be, if there be a willing mind God accepteth it, according to the rule of the Apostle, 2 Cor. 8.12. In this case it is our duty to acknowledge our fault to God, & withal to submit our selves to him whom we have offended; and make a covenant with God, with our own hearts, and with our brother, to make actual restitution, whensoever God in mercy shall give us sufficient to do it. Let our promise be joined with a full purpose to do it, for God is not mocked, or deceived. We may deceive our neighbor, and our own hearts, but we can never deceive the Almighty, who searcheth the hearts & the imaginations of all thoughts. In the mean season, poverty may be some dispensation, because where there is nothing, the king loseth his right, and necessity hath no law, as commonly we say in our common prouerbs. But although there cannot be a real restoring, there ought to be an hearty desire, which, we may assure our selves, God in mercy will accept. For there is a twofold restoring, and both well pleasing to God, the one actual; the other mental. The actual required of such as are able, when we return back willingly, whatsoever we have takē away unjustly. The mental is only in purpose and desire of the mind, when we are able to do no more, and to go no further; which is accepted of them that are poor, and are sorry that they have it not in their hands to give to the owners which they have taken away. Again, it will [Objection 3] be said and pretended, If I must of necessity restore, it will undo me, it is as much as I am worth, all that I have will do no more then pay it. I answer, the contrary will rather vndo thee. To restore stolen goods, will undo no man: it rather bringeth a blessing with it. For take this for a certain truth, & set it down as an undoubted rule, that no man shall be undone by yielding obedience to the law of God. But to restore is God's ordinance & appointment, & therefore none shall vndo himself by following of it. This then properly is no loss, but gain; and albeit we depart with somewhat, yet in the end it shall bring more with it, forasmuch as God is able to bless our store, and to give us more then that. When Amaziah should send back his hired soldiers at the commandment of God, who would not give a blessing by them, because God was not with them, he would not give victory by them; and he seemed unwilling to do it in regard he had paid an hundred talents before hand to have their help: the man of God answered, The Lord is able to give thee more then this: showing thereby, that if we depend upon him, we shall not need to be troubled in worldly things. If we leave our selves never a penny, let us not despair, but trust in God's providence, who will supply our necessities, and not suffer us to want any good. Lastly, it will be objected, what [Objection 4] if the parties be dead, how can we possibly restore anything to them? may we not in this case keep it to our selves? I answer, if the owner be dead, restore it to his heirs, evē to such first as are nearest of kin, and if he have none such, to such as are farther off. If there be none, either nearer or farther off, we must restore it to God, that is, to the maintenance of the Ministry, and service of God, or to the relief of the poor; bestow it upon godly uses, but to our selves we may not keep it. God would not have the Priests, that served in the Tabernacle, & ministered at the altar, to be enriched by the hurt of others, as we see in this place: neither would he have injurious persons freed from blame, if they should offer that to the Priests, which they had taken away from others.

Wherefore, if there were none to whom they could restore, yet he would have their houses to be blameless, and no part of filthy gain to stick and cleave unto their fingers, seeing it is required of us to have pure hearts, and clean hands. Except God had thus determined, no wicked person would have spared to catch and snatch, by force or fraud, the goods of the dead, especially if he were childless.

Lastly, this duty of restitution rightly and [Use 4] religiously practiced, ministereth great comfort and contentment, to feel himself ready to do this to any that charge him justly with any wrong or injustice. Paul a Minister of the Gospel, and an Apostle of Jesus Christ, appealeth to the people whom he had taught, how he had behaved himself among them, Acts 20.18. Ye know from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons, serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears and temptations which befell me by the lying in wait of the Jews. Samuel a Magistrate of the people and judge of Israel, when he was to resign his office, and to give place to the king whom God had chosen and set over the land, maketh them witnesses of his soundness and sincerity. 1 Sam. 12.3. he asketh of them whose ox or asse he had taken? or who could accuse him of oppression, or corruption? and they said, thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken ought of any man's hand. Yea, he proceedeth farther, and calleth God to record of his integrity, The Lord is witness against you, and his Anointed is witness this day, that ye have not found ought in mine hand: And they answered, He is witness. If then we desire peace in our soul, we should thrust away from us as it were with both our hands, whatsoever we have wrested from others, and wrongfully gotten, & say to it with detestation and indignation, as the Prophet willeth men to say to their relics of idolatry, Get thee hence. Now that we may have indeed comfort herein, it shall not be amiss for us to consider more particularly the doctrine of restitution, and to learn what it is, whether the same thing which is taken away ought to be restored, whether it be sufficient to restore the principal, whether a man be bound to restore that which he never took away, whether it be always necessary to make restitution to him of whom we have received somewhat, whether he be always bound to restore that he hath received, whether they which have not taken or received anything, be bound to restore, and lastly, whether a man be bound to restore forthwith without all delay or deferring the time, or else whether he may lawfully put off the time of restoring. To restore properly, is to set a man again into the possession and dominion of his goods, which is taken, either with his good will, as in that which is borrowed or committed to our custody; or against his will, as in theft and robbery.

Restitution therefore is an act of justice, whereby we make some recompense for that which we have wrongfully withholden.

Secondly, it is demanded whether it be necessary to salvation, to restore y^e same which is taken away? And the answer is affirmative, that it is necessary, so far as it may, and it is possible. Augustine saith truly, if another man's goods may be restored & are not, repentance is not practiced, but counterfeited, because justice and equity are not observed. If the thing it self cannot, then that which is equal unto it (as near as may be) ought to be restored. He that hath maimed his neighbor in any of his members, ought to make recompense in money, or otherwise as the judge shall determine. He that hath taken away his brothers good name, & raised up a false report of him, ought to confess his fault, & restore his good name to the uttermost of his power, and acknowledge that he hath done evil: and if this be not sufficient to repair it, he ought otherwise also to make amends.

Thirdly, the question is asked, whether it suffice to restore the principal. It is sufficient, whē the party wronged is no whit damnified: but if he have received any hurt by want of his own, or by receiving wrong, he is also to have some amends made unto him, and therefore beside the principal, the doer of wrong must recompense the loss: and this hath warrant out of the place that now we deal withal. As for the fourfold restitution of Zacchaeus, it is no work of supererogation, but an act of his liberality, and a fruit of his repentance, a testimony of his love to Jesus Christ, a signification of the greatness of his sin, and a voluntary confession y^t he had gotten his goods fraudulently, unjustly, and wrongfully. Fourthly, we are to know, whether a man be bound to restore that which he never took away? Answ. A man is not bound unto it: forasmuch as the rule of justice cannot exact this at our hands, wherein there could be no equality, but one party should be wronged. A man may be damnified two ways, when somewhat is taken away which he had actually, or which he might have had being in the way, or in a good forwardness to have. When that is taken away w^c we had already in possession, the loss is to be recompensed by restitution of y^t which is equal unto it. When we hinder our brother that he cannot compass & obtain that which he was in possibility to have, we must restore somewhat; but the restitution ought not to be equal to the benefit that might in time to come redound unto him, and the loss must be esteemed as it is in the time present, not as it might be hereafter. For first of all, it is a less matter to have a thing in possibility then to have it actually: and herein the common proverb is true, that a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush. Secondly, otherwise we should not only restore y^e principal which was taken away, but multiply it beyond measure, which we are not bound to do, and so for nothing we should restore something, & give that which is, for that which is not. Thirdly, we are not charged to equal a loss that may be, and give a certain benefit for an uncertain damage, because the good that might fall unto us, may many ways be hindered, and we cannot make our selves sure of anything until we have it in present possession. We say commonly, & we say it truly, that many things fall between the cup and the lip, between the meat and the mouth: the meaning whereof is this, y^t nothing is so certain, but it may be prevented, nothing so near, but may be disappointed, and therefore we are not to make our selves too sure of anything. He that hath sowed his seed, hath not yet ripe corn, neither hath seen the time of harvest: & he that hath money, hath not yet gotten gain by it: we must therefore take the loss as it is, not as it may be. To return to the point that is in hand, we hold that no mā is bound to restore to another that which he took not away: forasmuch as that were to accuse himself falsely, and rather to give then to restore. True it is, the Prophet saith, He restored that which he took not away, but he complaineth of the wrongs & injuries which he received and suffered wrongfully; wherein he was a notable type and figure of Christ, who suffered punishment for the fault which he committed not, which after a sort, may be called a restitution; he was not guilty, but died for us that are guilty: he was innocent, and yet suffered for us sinners: he did no evil, yet was crucified for us evil doers: He stood in our place, the just for the unjust.

The fifth point to be considered, is, whether we ought always to mak restitutiō to him, of whō we have received and taken somewhat? The answer is, whatsoever belongeth to another, and is not our own, ought to be restored, because there ought to be an equality of commutative justice: and the Apostle willeth us to render unto all men their dues; tribute to whom tribute is due: custom to whom custom: fear to whom fear: honor, to whom honor. Nevertheless, if that which is to be restored be hurtful to him to whom restitution should be made, or to any other, it ought not to be restored, but rather to be kept close, and laid up safe, y^t when better occasion and fitter time serveth it may be restored. For restitution rightly made respecteth his profit and benefit to whom it is made. When a thing is given unlawfully, so that the gift it self is unlawful, as we see in Simony (when holy things are bought and sold, as sheep in the market) no restitution is to be made to the giver, that deserveth justly to lose whatsoever he hath given; neither ought the receiver to retain it, because he can lay no just claim and title unto it: so that it ought to be bestowed upon godly and holy uses. The heathen man speaking of justice, and making it a part of it, to give to every man his own, maketh this exception, that it is unlawful to deliver into a mad man's hand his own sword, which he committed unto us: and sometimes the case falleth out, that a man is by no means to keep his promise that he hath made. And to this purpose he setteth down these two general rules to be observed in the particular duties of justice, first, that we hurt no person▪ then that we serve the common profit of men, forasmuch as we are servants unto all. Moreover, if he to whom we are to restore, be unknown unto us, we must make diligent enquiry to know him: if he be dead, restore it to his heirs that he hath left behind him: if he be removed far from us, it ought, if it be possible, to be sent unto him: if it cannot be done safely and fitly, it ought to be laid up in some safe place, and then the matter must be signified to the owner, that he may take order by some means to have it, or to dispose of it at his own pleasure.

The sixth doubt is this, whether he be always bound to restore which hath taken anything? I answer, he is always bound so long as he hath anything in his keeping. Restitution belongeth to satisfaction: but he that hath offended ought to satisfy. Now albeit he that hath taken away anything, have it not in his own keeping, but another, yet because the owner is destitute of his goods, he is bound to restore them in regard of the injury that he hath done, or to procure the restoring at his hands that hath them in his possession. Besides, a man is bound to open and uncover his own fault, not only to God by confession, but to his brother by satisfaction. Many will never acknowledge the matter, until they be taken with the manner. Moreover, when many jointly together have taken away from any man, that which belongeth unto him, and someone of them hath made satisfaction unto him, fully so much as he can require, the rest are bound to content him that hath satisfied the person injured, they are not to pay it unto him that was damnified. For then he should be paid doubly, which double payment he cannot receive without injustice, seeing he that is wronged may as well offend by taking too much, as they that do wrong by restoring too little. Therefore they are repooed, that having had their share and portion in evil gotten goods, say, what need I to give anything back? the party wronged is satisfied. But if one man have returned as much in value and quantity as many took away, the rest that were partakers of the booty are bound to satisfy him that hath paid the whole, not him that was wronged, because he hath received so much already as he could challenge.

Seventhly, we are to know and inform our selves, whether they that have not themselves in their own persons taken away anything, may notwithstanding be justly bound to make restitution, and tied necessarily to this duty? I answer, that even such as have not taken anything with their own hands, are charged to restore, because they may be the cause of unlawful taking, if not directly, yet indirectly. For y^e Apostle saith, that they are worthy of death not only which commit evil things, but such as consent to them that do them, or have pleasure in them. And we may be partakers of other men's sins, and so draw upon our selves the punishments due unto them. We are ready to justify our selves and to wash our hands when we practice not evil; but it is as Pilate washed his hands, who made himself guilty of innocent blood by consenting to the Jews and by pronouncing sentence against him to please & pleasure them, as well as they y^t were the executioners, and pierced his hands and feet: so that all the water in the river Jordan, or in the wide sea, is not able to clear him and acquit him of putting the Lord of life to death. Now, if we desire to know how we may be accessories to other men's sins, and draw them as it were with cart-ropes upon our selves, it may be considered of us in those few words,

Iussio, consilium, consensus, palpo, recursus,

Participans, mutus, non obstans, non manifestans.

Whosoever is any cause of any unjust dealing is bound to restore; such are they that command, or counsel, or consent to evil; such as flatter any in their evil by commending them for it: such as are abettors to them, receiving, aiding, helping, and assisting them: such as are companions of them and take part with them: he that is dumb and holdeth his peace as if he neither saw nor heard any evil committed, albeit he see it with his eyes, and hear it with his ears: he that suffereth it to be done, and doth not hinder it and withstand it, being able to do it: Lastly, such as seek shifts and shelters by all means to cover evil, and do not disclose the same when they are privy to it. For he that hideth it, doth show thereby that he fauoreth it, and furthereth it so far as he can. By all these ways we are made partakers of other men's sins: and not only doth he trespass and offend which executeth and practiseth any sins, but he that is by any of the former means, a cause or occasion of them.

Notwithstanding, among these there is some difference. For flattery, and counsel, praising them that do evil, and counseling them to do evil, do not always oblige and bind to restitution, but then only when it appeareth evidently, that unjust dealing hath proceeded chiefly or only from these causes: where he that is principal in the action, is principally bound to restitution, to wit, he y^t requireth & cōmandeth, then he that executeth it. And concerning the rest, to wit, such as do not bewray, or not hinder, or not reprove a thief that stealeth, are not always bound to restore, but then only when an absolute necessity lieth upon them, and no great danger follows by this negligence & default.

Lastly, it remaineth to show this doubt, whether a mā be bound to restore by & by, or whether he may put off and delay the discharge of this duty? Everyone is charged necessarily to hasten restitution, so soon as he is able and conveniently may do it. God loveth a cheerful giver, and restorer: whereas delay in any good duty, argueth an unwilling mind. It showeth that we are not thoroughly resolved to do it. It maketh us every day more unfit then other. It manifesteth, that we are more then half willing to keep it by us still. He that hath hired a poor servant to do his work, must give him his hire before the Sun go down, Deut. 24, 13.

And as it is a sin against justice to take away another man's goods, so it is likewise to deteine it with us, because the owner thereby is hindered from the use thereof, and so a double injury is done unto him: but no man is allowed to stay any time (though it be short) in sin. Nevertheless, if a man be not able to make present restitution, he is to crave pardon and desire respite of him whom he hath wronged: but without his consent that is damnified, he hath no liberty to keep evil gotten goods, that is of ability to make restitution. The counsel that Solomon giveth to the man that hath this worlds goods, that he must give speedily, and not bid his neighbor come again unto him, (Prov. 3, 28.) if he have at the present for him: it must also serve as a good direction to him that hath gotten and engrossed into his own hands, other men's goods; he must not say, I will restore them tomorrow, if he be able to do it today.

If we be careful to practice these things which now have been rehearsed, we shall find much comfort in them, and assure our own hearts that we have truly repented of our sins.

[Verse 8. If the man have no kinseman to recompense the trespass unto, let the trespass be recompensed unto the Lord, even to the Priest.] In these words, we have an amplification of the former law, by way of preventing an objection, of which we have spoken before: or rather, of many objections together, couched as it were upon an heap. For it may be asked, What if the party be dead and gone from whom we have taken? The answer is, Restore to his child. What then, if he have no child? Restore to his brothers children. What if he have no brother, or sister? Restore to his next kinseman. But put case he have no kinseman at all? Restore it to the Lord, even to y^e Priest. As if he should say, Though sometimes it fall out, that thou shalt find no kinseman, yet thou shalt never have the Lord to seek, neither the Priest whom he hath set over you. The point then here to be observed, is this, that the Lord and the Priest are put as both one, for it is in the original, To the Lord, to the Priest: so that the restitution to the Priest, was a restitution to the Lord. We learn from hence, that whatsoever is done to the Ministers of the word, God accounteth it as done unto himself. If we do good unto them, we do good unto the Lord: if we do evil unto them, we do evil to the Lord himself. We see afterward in this book, chap. 16, verse 11. when Korah and his company lifted up themselves against God's ordinance, and the authority of Moses and Aaron, he saith unto them, Thou and all thy company are gathered together against the Lord: and what is Aaron, that ye murmur against him? They thought they had to do with his servant, but he showeth, they had to do with the Lord. When the people required of Samuel, that he would make them a King to judge them, like all the Nations, the Lord said unto him, Hearken unto the voice of the people, in all that they say unto thee, for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them. Their gathering together against the Prophet, was a muster, and mutiny, and murmuring against God.

This is that which Christ spake unto the seventy Disciples, and to the Apostles before them, He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that despiseth you, despiseth me: and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me. Luke 10, 16. Math. 10, 40. Whereby we see, that this is the dignity and authority of the Ministry which God hath established, that how mean soever the persons of the Ministers are, yet he so magnifieth their office, that what is done to them, is offered unto him.

The reasons hereof are most evident. First, [Reason 1] they are the Messengers of God, sent out of him to do his message, and to execute his will, and to speak in his Name, and to deliver that which he shall put into their mouths, and to discharge the commission that he hath given unto them. After that God had made a covenant with Levi, so that the law of truth was in his mouth, and he turned away many from iniquity, he setteth down this as a rule, Mal. 2, verse 7. The Priests lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the Messenger of the Lord of hosts. To this purpose Paul speaketh both touching himself and the rest of the Ministers, 2 Cor. 5, 20. Now then we are Ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead to be reconciled to God. If then the Messenger be to be respected as he that sent him, the Minister is to be acknowledged to represent the person of God, in whose Name he speaketh.

Secondly, it pleaseth God to work salvation [Reason 2] in his people by them and their Ministry. For as the Gospel is the power of God, so the Preachers of the Gospel are workers together with God.

Indeed we deny not but he is able and sufficient of himself, to save the souls of men, without the Ministry of men, as he created them without the help of men: Nevertheless, he will use their Ministry at his good will and pleasure, and he will conuay his treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us. Not that he standeth in need of any help, or could not attain to the end of his purpose without our labor (for who are we that can add anything to his perfection?) but he doth it for our own good, and to manifest his greater love and mercy toward us. Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, 2 Cor. 6.1. We then as workers together with him, beseech you also, that ye receive not the grace of God in vain. And in the former Epistle saith, We are laborers together with God, ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building. Seeing then, the Ministers are workers together, and laborers together with God, so that they are the means by whom we believe, God accounteth that as done to himself, which is done to them, as we are to account that God doth that unto us, which they do being directed by his word.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, he accounteth that which is done to any of his servants and children, as done to himself, whether it be good, or evil, whether it be right or wrong: forasmuch as Christ and the faithful make one mystical body, whereof he is the head, and they are the members. In the day of judgment, Christ will acknowledge that to be done unto himself, which is done to the least of them that believe in him, and belong unto him, Matth. 25.40. In like manner when Paul was going to Damascus, to bring them bound to Jerusalem that called upon his Name, he called unto him from heaven, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? Christ Jesus is touched in his members, when any of them are troubled, so that their persecutions are his persecutions, & their afflictions are his afflictions, according to the saying of the Apostle, Col. 1.24. I Paul am made a Minister, who now rejoyce in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh, for his bodies sake, which is the Church. The faithful are as parts & members of Christ's body, of his flesh, and of his bones, Ephes. 5.30. and he is the head over all things, Ephe. 1.22. So that as the head hath a feeling of these things that befall the body, so is it with Christ, he doth after a sort suffer with us, and rejoyce with us.

[Use 1] The uses therefore are to bestood upon, that the truth of this may be applied to our instruction, without which the doctrine is as bread cast upon the waters, or as seed that rotteth in the earth, that is, cometh to nothing. First, we are directed hereby, what ought to be our behavior toward their persons; we must take heed that we do neither wrong them, nor hurt them, neither rise up against them, considering that God will take their wrongs and injuries as done unto himself. If a Prince should give us in charge, to beware that we do not hurt some special servants of his house, and should add withal, that he would account their wrongs, if any be offered, as done in disgrace and despite to his person: there is no doubt but everyone would take diligent heed that he did not hurt them. Thus the case standeth with everyone of us. The Ministers are God's servants appointed to do his will, and separated to preach the Gospel of peace: and God hath laid a charge upon men, that they offer no injury nor indignity unto them. If they do, they touch the apple of his eye, which is most tender, Zach. 2.8. and therefore they incur his wrath and heavy displeasure.

This is it the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 105.15. He reproveth kings for their sakes, saying, Touch not mine Anointed, and do my Prophets no harm. They▪ then shall not escape the revenging hand of God, that set▪ themselves against the servants of his house, and the truth of his word that they deliver. Their word is mighty and shall prevail, it is God's word that they bring unto us, and he will take their cause into his hand. It is true indeed, they are above all other persons and callings in the world, subject to many and great abuses, they are made a reproach to men and Angels, they endure the nippes and quippes of wicked men with silence and patience, so that we may cry out with Jeremiah in the bitterness of our souls, Woe unto us, we are borne to be men of strife and men of contention to the whole earth. But seeing God hath a sight and sense of these unjust and injurious dealings toward them, and accounteth them and accepteth them, as done against himself, we see it is no small sin to wound them with the tongue of malice, to smite them with the fist of iniquity, or to spurn and kick them with the heel of contempt and reproach. It stirred up David to show exemplary punishment upon the wretched and wicked Ammonites that abused grossly and grievously his servants whom he sent among them; for he put them under harrowes and iron sawes, and so revenged thereby with rigor, the disgrace brought upon them, as if they had done it to his own person.

They could not more have offended him and provoked him to wrath, if they had cut off his garments in the middes, and shaued off the one half of his beard, 2 Sam. 10.4. and so done him all the villainy that might be. This therefore giveth us a notable warning, to beware that we offer no hard measure unto the messengers of God, lest we make our selves guilty of insurrection and rebellion against God, and of resisting his will, forasmuch as we shall answer unto him for this sin committed with an high hand.

Let us remember the saying of Christ touching the Ministers of the word, John. 13.20. Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that receiveth whomsoever I send, receiveth me: and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me. Here are three persons named and joined together that are received, the servant, the Lord Jesus, and the heavenly Father. He that receiveth and entertaineth one of the $\langle \diamond \rangle$ aketh them altogether: he that receiveth the servant, receiveth the Lord: he that admitteth the least, admitteth withal the greatest of them, as Christ himself speaketh, That which ye have done to the least of my brethren, ye have done to me. If any were asked the question, whether he would willingly open the door to Christ and sup with him, when he cometh unto us standing at the door, knocking, and desiring to be admitted of us, he would answer, We would have him to dwell with us & to reign over us, we would rejoyce to see him come under our roof. And if we should be charged to stop our ears, and to pull away our shoulders, and to refuse to hearken unto his voice, and to make him dance our attendance without the doors, as if he were a stranger to us, and we strangers unto him: we would complain of great wrong done unto us, and say, we were notably abused. But hereby we are to try our selves, as gold is by the touchstone: we must measure our affection to Christ, by our affection to his Ministers; if we receive the Lord, we must for his sake entertain his servants.

Besides, this order is to be observed in the receiving, albeit the Lord Jesus be the sender, yet first of all, we must receive the servant, that is, the Minister, and then the master himself. For mark this, that Christ doth not say, he that receiveth me, receiveth the Minister whō I send unto you; but contrariwise, He that receiveth him whom I shall send, receiveth me. On the other side, whosoever refuseth one of these refuseth them all jointly together: he that refuseth the least of them, refuseth the greatest; as at the last judgment Christ shall say, Inasmuch as ye have not done it to one of these little ones, ye have not done it to me. It is a vain pretense and frivolous excuse to surmise that we love the Lord Jesus, the shepherd of the sheep, when we reject the Ministers of the word, that seek to make us of the number of his sheep, and to bring us home into the sheepfold. If then none do receive the Lord Jesus, but such as receive his Ministers, the number is small of those that entertain Christ, whatsoever they think of themselves, or howsoever they glory in themselves.

[Use 2] Secondly, this doctrine serveth for reproof of sundry abuses and gross corruptions. The measure which we mete to the Ministers of God, is mete to God himself; which first meeteth with those that excuse their contempt of the ministry of man, and say, If we had the Lord himself present among us, we would hear him, and do all to please him. They do deceive themselves, and teach their tongue to lie. For learn this of me, and set it down as a certain rule, Whosoever receive not the servant, will not receive the master himself. He that regardeth not to hear him that is sent, will not respect him that is the sender of him. He that doth kill the servant, would also put the Lord himself to death, if he were able. The reason is, because the hatred of the Lord, is the original cause of hatred against the servant, so that they persecute the servant for the Lord's sake. We know the parable of the vineyard, let out to unthankfull husbandmen, Mark 12.1. The laborers caught the servants, and beat them, they handled them shamefully, and killed some of them: but did they entreat any better their masters only begotten Son and heir, when he came among them? No, they said among themselves, This is the heir, Come, let us kill him, and the inheritance shall be ours: so they took him, and killed him, and cast him out of the vineyard. True it is, no man is so profane to utter such reproachful and blasphemous words against Christ Jesus, nor so desperately given over to all wickedness, to say openly in the audience of all men, Let us kill him: but if they would take notice of their secret corruptions, and examine their inward thoughts, they should find as little love to the Lord, as they bear to his Ministers, and when they contemptibly use the one, they spitefully hate the other. Hence it is, that Stephen reproveth his persecutors that would seem jealous of the Law, Acts 7.52. joineth these two together, and maketh them walk hand in hand one with another, the persecution of the Prophets, and the murdering and making away of him that is the head of the Prophets: Which of the Prophets have not your fathers persecuted? and they have slain them which shown before of the coming of that Just One, of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers.

Where we see, that the betraying of the Lord, and the evil entreating of the servant, are sins near of kin, so that the one springeth from the other. If then God account that done to himself, that is done to his Ministers, he will bring them to a new account, that never set themselves in the presence of God when they are to hear his word. The Israelites could not abide to hear the voice of God that shown it self in fearful manner, but desired that Moses might speak unto them; if they should hear him speaking unto them again, they should die, Exod. 20.19. It is God's great mercy to speak unto us by men subject to the same infirmities that we are. Let not us abuse his goodness, and contemn his word, & reject his Ministers, forasmuch as the contempt of them is joined, not only with the contempt of his ordinance, but also with the contempt of his person. Secondly, it reproveth such as regard not what they say unto them, neither care for the words that come out of their mouths, whether it be word of promise, or of threatening; whether of exhortation, or of reprehension: whether of peace and reconciliation, or of war and evil tidings: whether of joy and gladness, or burdens and yokes of punishment heavy to bear.

These think and persuade themselves that they have to do only with men, and are not guilty of any contempt against God; but they are greatly deceived, and shall one day know, that they despise not the word of mortal man, but of the almighty and eternal God.

Hence it is, that we are charged on the contrary, to take heed how we hear, Luk. 8, whē we come into his house. Christ teacheth, that in hearing the Ministers, we hear him, and in refusing them we refuse him, Math. 10. The Apostle commendeth the Galatians for the performance of this duty, that they were as careful to hear him as to hear Christ himself, chap. 4, 14. My temptation that was in my flesh ye despised not, nor rejected, but received me as an Angel of God, even as Christ Jesus. What could he say more for them? Or how could he better set forth their zeal, then to give this testimony of them, that they accounted of him in regard of his pains in the Ministry, not as an ordinary man, not as a faithful Minister only, not as an elect Angel only, but as Christ himself, the head of men and Angels, whose person he did represent, and whose Church he did feed with wholesome doctrine? This example should all of us follow; this doth the Lord require of all true Christians, that they receive his Ministers as his Messengers, and reverence them as himself, in regard of their doctrine, and have thē in singular love for their works sake. This we see to be worthily practiced by Cornelius, as well became a religious Captain and a devout Christian, Acts 10. We are all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God. Loe, how great the dignity of the Ministry of the Church is: loe, how great the excellency of the Ministers of God is; we must hear them as if we heard God, forasmuch as they are sent of him, they preach his word, they deliver no more then they have received, and he hath commanded them to publish it in his Name. But alas, it is most horrible to behold the contempt that they suffer, and the baseness that is cast upon this calling, which is one of the causes of those grievous plagues and judgments that are brought upon the world. The disgrace and ignominy under which they lie, greeueth the hearts of all the godly: and not only greeueth their hearts, but pierceth the Clouds: and doth not only pierce the Clouds, but reacheth up to heaven: and doth not only reach up to heaven, but entereth into the ears of the Lord of hosts: and not only entereth into his ears, but doth stretch it self unto God himself, and return upon Christ, the Prince of all Prophets; which ought indeed to pierce and enter into the hearts of all profane persons, and serve to terrify all those that revile them, and speak all manner of evil against them for the truths sake. Let us remember the saying of the Apostle touching the Thessalonians, When ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe. This is a worthy commendation of this Church, and a notable example which we ought to set before us to follow it: so that we must hear the word as God's word, whose force it carrieth with it. Many hear it, that do not hear it as God's word. It is a rare thing to find such a hearer. Some hear, and then rage and storm when they are reprov'd, Acts 7, 57, & 17, 18, and 22, 23. Others refuse to hear at all, and think such as make conscience of hearing, to be more curious & precise then there is cause. Others embrace the word, but yet not as the word, as we see in Papists and hypocrites. The Papists affirm, that y^e Scripture or word written, hath no authority in it self, except it be allowed & approved of the Church. What other thing is this, then to embrace the word, but not as the word? The hypocrites also do not receive the word with due reverence, nor express it in true obedience, as their life doth witness against them. These have men only in their thoughts, and have not God in their sight: they may be said after a sort to receive the word, but they cannot be said to receive it altogether as the word. For if they did seriously and earnestly acknowledge it to be of God, and to have him the author of it, they would not lead their lives in that loose manner that they do.

Thirdly, it reproveth those that contemn the doctrine of the Gospel, for the poor and obscure conditiō of the Ministers that preach it. For what I pray you, was the estate of the Apostles? Were they rich and renowned in the world? Peter and John, going up together into the Temple, at the ninth hour of prayer, answered the lame man that expected to receive something of them, Silver and gold have I none. Were they much befriended & applauded of men? The Apostle declareth and complaineth, that all men had forsaken him, and no man stood with him. 2 Tim. 4, 16. And Christ himself foretelleth, that they should be hated of all men for his Names sake. Math. 10, ver. 22. Were they honored and magnified above others? Or did they live at ease and in pleasure? Paul spareth not to paint out their life, 1 Cor. 4, 9, I think that God hath set forth us the Apostles last, as it were appointed to death: for we are made a spectacle unto the world, and to Angels, and to men. Were they clad in purple, and fared they deliciously every day? Did they dwell in gorgeous houses and Princely palaces? In the words following, he telleth us how it fared with him and the rest of his brethren, they were not attired in soft raiment, they did not surfeit through excess, but even unto this present, we both hunger and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling place. And yet notwithstanding these manifold adversities and trials, the Son of God pronounceth of them, He that heareth you, heareth me, and judgeth the wrongs to be done to himself, which they suffer. Let not us therefore require honor, or riches, or glory, or pomp, or outward dignity, in the Ministers of the Gospel, but rather consider the goodness of God toward us, who, knowing that we are not able to bear and abide his infinite Majesty, hath instituted the Ministry of his word, that by men equal unto us and like to our selves, he might teach us his will, and instruct us in his word. We shown before, that when the Lord himself in his own voice preached to Israel, at Mount Sinai, they were so terrified and afraid, that they asked for Moses, that he might speak unto them. If the matter stood thus with them that had seen the wonders of God in the Land of Egypt, and not many days before had passed the red sea, as it were by dry land, what shall befall us, if he should utter to us his terrible voice, as a most mighty thunder? If then we hear patiently, and obey readily the word that is brought unto us by weak and frail man, it is a service that is well pleasing in his sight: forasmuch as we show thereby, that we do not depend on the pleasure of men, but rely our selves upon the authority of God. And as it is the praise and trial of a good subject, who is content to believe and obey the lowest messenger and least officer that cometh unto him with a message and commandment from his Prince: so hereby it appeareth, that we are true Citizens of the kingdom of God, & his adopted children, if we hear his word with fear and reverence, albeit it be preached unto us by the meanest and poorest of all God's servants. On the other side, as it is a note of contempt toward the Magistrate himself, to disobey or resist any Serieant or servant that cometh from him, how base soever he may seem to be: so we make our selves guilty of rebellion and high treason against GOD, when we despise such as speak in his Name, and contemn them that have authority committed unto them from the most high. All such as loathe the truth for the Teachers sake, when their own consciences convince them that it is the word of God which soundeth in their ears, let them assure themselves and persuade their own hearts, that the contempt of their persons redoundeth to the Son of God, yea to the Father himself. Let them mark this point & weigh it diligently, who take it heinously when they are reprovved of men equal unto them, or inferior to them, or if they be contemptible to the world, by reason of their poor estate.

Lastly, it reproveth those that go about to shake the faith of many, and to weaken the assurance and certainty of our salvation, having the promises thereof propounded unto us in the doctrine, and by the writings of the Apostles.

Hence it is, that sundry scoffers and profane spirits, ask the question, who is Paul, and who is Peter, or what is John, that we should of necessity believe them? Who gave them authority, or whence have they power in the Church, to set down and prescribe unto us a rule of faith? The doctrine that now we deal withal, serveth very fitly to stop the mouths of these Atheists, and containeth a sovereign preservative against the poison that they offer unto us, inasmuch as Christ the eternal Son of God, maketh them his messengers, his witnesses, & his heraulds, to spread abroad his saving health, and avoucheth, that he speaketh in them, & acknowledgeth himself to be author of that truth which they deliver, so that if an Angel from heaven should preach any other Gospel then that which they have preached to the Churches, he must be holden accursed. This therefore we ought to apply unto our selves, and gather as an argument of great comfort, that when remission of sins and eternal life are promised to them that are truly penitent, and lay hold upon Christ by a lively faith, according to the doctrine of the Apostles, we must assure our selves it is the voice of Christ, and he will ratify it in the highest heavens. Neither is this true only touching the Apostles themselves, that had their calling from God, and not from men, and were conversant with Christ in the days of his flesh: but likewise of all the faithful Ministers of Jesus Christ, that have the keys of the kingdom of heaven committed unto them. When we assure forgiveness of sins to those that have contrite and broken hearts, it is no doubtful or uncertain assurance, but graven with a diamond, and written as it were with a pen of steel to continue forever, forasmuch as it is the assurance of Christ, and of God himself. The voice of the Minister is not the voice of a private man, but of one that is a public person; it is as the voice of Christ himself. Art thou humbled and cast down for thy sins, and doth thy soul cleave unto the dust? He sendeth his Minister unto thee, and putteth the word of reconciliation into his mouth; so that if thou unfeignedly turn unto God, be as well assured of the mercy of God toward thee, as thou heardst Christ himself say unto thee, as he did sometimes to the sick of the palsy, Son, be of good cheare, thy sins be forgiven thee.

Again, when the Ministers of God on the other side, do threaten and thunder out the sentence of condemnation against the unbelievers and such as cannot repent, this also is no less the voice of the Son of God, which no power of the world, nor authority of man can hinder or call back: forasmuch as whose sins they retain, they are retained. This judgment, howsoever it be either denied, or derided, or doubted off among the ungodly, yet will Christ make it good, and execute the same upon them to their confusion.

This doctrine reacheth to the true Ministers of the word, who have their calling from God & his word. As for the Bishop of Rome, that challengeth sole authority to forgive sins, and will have all his decrees and decretals no less acknowledged then the word of God, it is more then childish and ridiculous. For he hath nothing common with the Apostles, and cannot prove his succession wherein he glorieth by any sound reasons, and yet arrogateth more unto himself then GOD gave, or the Apostles took, or the Church acknowledged to be due unto the Apostles: forasmuch as the Lord tied thē by an express commandment, that they should teach the people to observe those things which he had commanded them.

[Use 3] Thirdly, this serveth to inform the Ministers, that it concerneth them much to adorn their calling, and to magnify their Ministry, that it be not blemished and evil spoken off through their default. This ought above all other things to be a spur unto us in our sides, and as a fire kindled within our bowels, to inflame our hearts with a zeal of God's glory, with a love of his people, with a care to discharge our office committed unto us, & with an earnest desire to increase the kingdom of Christ Jesus. For seeing God accounteth us as his own Ambassadors, sent out to do his will, and vouchsafeth to join our labor with man's salvation, we are bound in duty and conscience to preach the Gospel truly, purely, painfully, sincerely, and soundly. It is required of us, not only to teach, but to teach the truth, and to teach the truth with a right affection. For we can never challenge the names and titles (of being the Messengers of God) unto our selves, and to be respected as the person of Christ himself, except we preach the pure word of God, and commend to the Church the pure doctrine of Christ. If we preach corruptly, and make merchandise of the word of God, and mingle wheat with chaff, and good corn with darnel, or that which is worse; we are not to be accepted & received as Christ, but to be rejected and refused as false teachers, that speak in their own names, and not in the Name of God. They cannot say, Thus saith the Lord; but, this I say unto you: not, hear ye the word of the Lord, but, hear ye my word: not that which God commandeth to observe, that do ye; but keep my word, the commandments of men, the traditions of the Elders, the superstitions of the Fathers, and such like human ordinances, whereby they make the word of God of none effect. This carrieth no authority to the consciences of the hearers, but it is as a sword that is blunt, whose edge is turned, that it cannot cut or enter into the flesh. The word thus delivered, can never open the corrupt heart of man, or do any good unto the conscience. If then we do not teach the flock of God, both by sincerity of doctrine, and by innocence of life, we show our selves to be messengers of Satan, not the Ministers of God: to be false Prophets, not true Teachers. We are joint laborers with God, and therefore he will be sanctified in all that come near unto him. He feedeth the flock by our hands, he converteth the souls by our Ministry, and he saveth the hearers by our preaching, and therefore we must not cause our office to be hated and contemned, but by all means maintain the dignity and authority of it, to the uttermost of our power. It is not only the corrupt doctrine but the evil life of the Ministers, that maketh their calling to be vile and void in the eyes of worldly men. If the persons that preach it, be profane, they reject Ministers, Doctrine, and Calling, they set all at naught, and let all alone. And this is the deep policy and subtlety of Satan, whē he dareth not openly oppose himself against the doctrine that is according to godliness, nor encounter with the word of truth, hand to hand, he goeth to work another way, that he may cunningly undermine it: to which purpose he striveth to make it hateful and contemptible, by occasion of the Ministers, and he duly observeth their errors, their faults and failings, that with some color he may cavil, and so countenance his evil proceedings. Christ our Lord and Savior did well and wisely foresee this, and carefully did prevent this. The treachery of Judas was well known to the Jews themselves, he betrayed his master, forsook the Apostles, joined with the Pharisees, and in the end hanged himself. This must needs bring a great scandal, and much hinder the proceeding of the Gospel, cause the Disciples to be evil spoken off, and the truth it self to be reviled. Besides, the Apostles might be afraid, lest all their labor should be in vain. Wherefore to the end the Lord might add strength & courage unto them, and repress the slanders & calumniations of the enemies of the Gospel, and withal leave a perpetual direction unto the whole Church, that no man should refuse the purity of doctrine, for the impurity of the lives of such as are the Teachers, he uttereth and oftentimes repeateth this sentence, Verily, I say unto you, he that heareth you, heareth me; and he that heareth me, heareth him that sent me: he that despiseth you, despiseth me; and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me. In these words he establisheth the authority of the Apostles doctrine, and reproveth all those that judge of the doctrine by the Ministers, and esteem of the truth by the teachers. For even as Kings and Princes will not lose their right, nor diminish the authority of their commandments, albeit their Officers or Ambassadors should exceed their calling, and go beyond the bounds of their commission: in like sort, whatsoever the Ministers of the Gospel shall be, yet the word always remaineth the same, the promises and threatenings that are written in it, shall be ratified, & by it we shall be judged at the last day. We must turn unto it; that shall not bow and bend to us. For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man, is as the flower of grass, The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away, but the word of the Lord endureth forever. 1 Pet. 1, 24, 25.

To conclude therefore, we must not cast our eyes so much upon the Ministers that are the disposers of the mysteries of God, as upon the author of the Ministry▪ which is the Lord himself: neither be so careful and attentive to hear their voice, as Christ himself speaking in them, in whose Name they are Ambassadors. Doubtless, they shall incur the displeasure of God, and receive grievous punishment, whosoever are evilly affected to the Ministry of the word: and their impiety shall detract and diminish nothing from the worthiness of the doctrine it self, which directeth us to one God, through our only Mediator Jesus Christ, and teacheth us to serve him with a true faith, with a pure life, & with a love unfeigned.

[Use 4] Fourthly, we ought from this ground of doctrine here delivered, to give them double honor, and not withhold from them the wages of their work, and the recompense of their labors that is due unto them, but as every laborer must have his hire, so ought the Ministers above the rest, that labor in the word and doctrine, to be maintained of the Church. As the Church dependeth vpon them for their allowance, so they depend upon her for their maintenance. Thus the Pastor and the people do feed one another, as a flock of sheep nourisheth the Shepherd, who eateth the milk of them, & clotheth himself with the wool of them; and again the Shepherd coucheth them into green pastures, and leadeth them by the still waters. The people feed him with the bread of this life; he feedeth thē with the bread of everlasting life. They minister to him in carnal things: he to them in spiritual things. They cannot lack him in regard of their souls: he cannot be without them in regard of his body. Thus then they do feed one another, or at least ought to do. If he receive food of them, and give none unto them again, he robbeth them of their goods, and murdereth their souls. If they on the other side receive food of him, so that they be taught of him, and yet make him not partaker of a part of their goods, they rob him, and cause him to depart from them, and so become murderers of their own souls, as if they did lay violent hands upon themselves, or rather as if they did famish themselves by refusing bread provided for them: inasmuch as where vision ceaseth, there people perish, Prov. 29, 18. Nay, the Lord accounteth of this sin in another kind and nature, he chargeth such Church-robbers, to be robbers and spoilers of God, no less then they that stand by the high way and take a purse. I doubt not but very many will be ready to scorn this comparison, & say, What? Do you liken us to thieves? Do you make no better of us? We are true men and honest, we pay every man his own; no man can ask us a penny. But if it be so, yet what shall this avail us, if we be found false to God, and stick not to rob him? The tithes are God's portiō; if we wrongfully deteine them from those to whom he hath assigned them, we are no better then thieves & robbers, whatsoever we account of our selves. The Prophet Malachi shall be my warrant, to charge this upon them: and if they think I slander them, let them bring their action against him. Hence it is, that he saith, chap. 3, 8, 9. Will a man spoil his gods? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings: ye are cursed with a curse, for ye have robbed me, even this whole Nation. In which we may observe these particular points.

First, that it hath been an old and ancient practice, to invert the ordinance of God, and to alienate the right of the Church, and to defraud the Ministers of their due. This ought to comfort us when we find our selves injuriously dealt withal; it fareth not worse with us, then it hath fallen out in the Church in former times. The Priests of God whose lips preserve knowledge, had this portion assigned unto them; they had no inheritance in y^e Land, as the other Tribes had, yet greedy cormorants and covetous wretches grudged this allowance also unto them, and detained it from them.

Again, observe that these caterpillars that devour the fat of the earth, albeit they sin grievously, yet never want pretences and excuses to color their sacrilege: they have somewhat to say for themselves; they will never be brought to acknowledge their offenses: they think it well gotten, which is gotten from the Church: they are of opinion that the Ministers have too much, and therefore think it good policy to shaue thē once a year, and use them as men do their flocks, who sheare the wool from their backs, lest it should grow to be a burden unto them. So is it in our days, partly by improper titles, partly by injurious customs, and partly by unconscionable conuainces, the Ministry in many places is left bare and naked, and the Ministers have not wherewithal to sustain themselves and their families.

Thirdly, notwithstanding the shifts that these men have invented and devised, GOD setteth out their sin in lively colors, & calleth it plain robbing and spoiling of God. For what is theft, but a getting of other men's goods to our selves, whether it be by violence or by other conuayance? Behold the difference between the judgment of God, and the judgment of these men concerning themselves. They account themselves honest men, and pronounce of themselves, that they are just and true: but God calleth them spoilers and robbers of him. They oppress y^e church, they deceive the Ministers, they spoil God himself, and they hinder the salvation of many poor souls.

Lastly, the Prophet setteth down their reward which followeth their sin, They have robbed him, and are cursed with a curse. God curseth them, and the souls of many that perish do curse them: and therefore albeit they bless themselves, it shall not help them. The Gentiles by the light of natural reason, saw that their Priests which waited upon the service of God, were to be maintained bountifully, and to be provided for liberally, & therefore no marvel though God account the deteining of tithes, and deceiving of the Ministers, to be no less sin then a robbing of his Majesty. This we see evidently in the time of famine that was in Egypt, when no Corn did grow for the space of seven years; for in the common dearth and want of others, they were relieved. For whereas we read the words, The Land of the Priests he bought not, for they had a portion assigned them of Pharaoh, and did eat their portion which Pharaoh gave thē; wherefore the Priests sold not their Lands: some translate the words otherwise, and understand them of the chief Officers, or Rule's, or Princes in the Common-wealth. But albeit the word do sometimes signify so, as 2 Sam. 8, 18. where David's sons are called by that name, which could not be in the number of Priests, for they pertained to another Tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the Altar: and Job 12, 19. He leadeth Princes away spoiled, and overthroweth the mighty. Where he maketh the Princes and mighty as both one, and addeth the latter to expound the former: yet nevertheless we rather follow the common translation, and the received interpretation, that Joseph bought not their glebe Land, because y^e King gave them an allowance, during all the famine, that they should not be constrained to sell their ground. For thus do the seauenty Interpreters read it: thus do Josephus & Philo understand it: thus also do the testimonies of other Historiographers warrant us to take it, which teach that the Priests of Egypt were wont to have their allowance and portion, publicly provided for them, and supplied unto them as their maintenance for their service. Neither doth it prejudice this truth, or hinder it any whit, because they were Idolaters, and so deserved to be destributed rather then relieved and sustained. For first of all Joseph sinned not, because he distributed the corn, not at his own pleasure, but at the Kings appointment: not by his own discretion, but by the Kings commissiō, who would have them provided for. And Pharaoh himself failed in his duty, but sinned not in his liberality: not in nourishing the Priests, but in cherishing Idolaters, and in not reforming the worship of God, which is an office both beseeming and belonging properly to Kings and Princes, I mean to purge and cleanse his service from all superstition, as Jacob did put away the strange gods that were in his house.

The maintenance of the Ministry is God's allowance, and therefore such as deteine it, and so take from God his part, do oftentimes lose their own portions: not that God hath need of these things, but because it is the wages & recompense, which he that is the true owner of all that belongeth unto us, hath appointed for their use that wait upon the worship of God, and serve in the Ministry of the Gospel. This sin is not a bare theft, but stealing in the highest degree, even a sacrilege against God, a wasting of his house, a spoiling of his worship, and a ruining of his kingdom: as Nehem. 13, 10. by reason of keeping back the tithes and oblations, the Levites, the Singers, and the rest that served in the work of the Lord, were through extreme poverty and pinching of them, constrained to leave the Temple, and to go home unto their own houses. It is no new thing to have the Ministers defrauded, and the work of the Lord lie waste for lack of laborers. And in the tenth chapter, verses 35, 30, 37, 38. the Israelites promise, that they would truly pay their due to the Levites, that they would bring their first fruits, the first borne of their sons, of their Cattle, of their Bullockes, & of their Sheep, and the tithes of the Land unto the Levites and Priests that minister in the house of God: but when Nehemiah was absent, they were slack in performance of their promise. We may observe besides, who they are that have the chief hand in this sin, not the men of least account or lowest degree, but the chief sort had the chiefest hand in this trespass. For who are they that most rob the Church, and pill and polle the Ministry, and make themselves fat with the spoils of the tithes, but those that should be greatest friends unto it, even great persons, who make themselves greater by making Church-livings lesser? This we see plainly in the place named before, where Nehemiah saith, chap. 13, 10, 11, 12. I perceived that the portions of the Levites had not been given them, for the Levites and the Singers that did the work, were fled everyone unto his field. Then contended I with the Rulers, and said, Why is the house of God forsaken? and I gathered them together, and set them in their place, &c. Such therefore, albeit they be great & mighty, are to be reprov'd. It is the duty of the Magistrate to see so these things, and to correct the abuses that creep into the Land, and by all good means to release the oppressions that lie heavy upon the Ministers of y^e church. If God take the matter into his hand, he will take an account of them that spoil y^e church, and make them feel the greuousnes of their sin. It is better that Nehemiah should correct the sins of the people, then Nebuchadnezzar. If God scourge us by cruel enemies, woe be to us; they are without all mercy and compassion. Thus then we learn, how and what to account of this sin, to wit, the withholding of maintenance frō the Ministers, that it is robbing and spoiling of God, a defacing and deforming of his kingdom. This maintenance is the homage and tribute that God doth require of us, for the setting up and continuance of his kingdom among us; whereby it followeth, that tithes are holy & sacred things, not to be deteined, nor employed to any other use. The Apostle therefore saith, Gal. 6, verse 7. Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

[Use 5] Lastly, from hence ariseth comfort to such as do good to the Sanctuary, and to the uttermost of their power, further the worship of God: they may assure themselves, that God will account it & reward it as done unto himself. Whatsoever is given to the maintenance of God's service, and the furtherance of true religion, and the propagation of the Gospel, is given to God himself, & serveth to advance the glory of his Name, as appeareth by sundry examples in holy Scripture, worthy both of commendation, of admiration, and of imitation.

One example we have in Obadiah, who lived in the days of grievous persecution, whē Jezebel made havoc of the Church of God; the Altars were cast down, and the Prophets slain: then did he take an hundred of the Lord's Prophets, and hid them by fifties in a Cave, and fed them with bread and water, 1 Kin. 18. It is an easy matter in the days of peace and quietness to show a love to the Ministers of the word, and to pretend our selves to be friends and favorers of the Gospel: but let us not flatter our selves, for we may herein deceive our selves. This is no evident trial or certain demonstration to prove our zeal to be right: forasmuch as we may do all this, more for the applause of the world, and to be well thought of among men, then for love we have to the truth, or to them that bring the truth & glad tidings of good things. But when all things are in an hurry and uproar, when persecution is raised for the Gospels sake, and Jezebel sendeth a messenger to Elijah, that his life shall be taken away from him, or when the Ministers are in disgrace and contempt of the world, & turned out of house and home, when they are left succorless & comfortless, then to stand to them, to relieve them, to countenance thē, and in a good cause to defend them, is a notable sign of a lively faith, and of receiving the truth in truth and sincerity. God will not forget their effectual faith, and diligent love, and the patience of their hope in Jesus Christ: he will have them in continual remembrance, & reward it as done unto himself; as God shown himself in mercy to Obadiah, and for his sake sent a gracious rain vpō his inheritance, and filled their hearts with joy and gladness. For even as Elisha said to Jehoram King of Israel, when they had no water for the host, nor for the cattle that followed them, What have I to do with thee? Get thee to the Prophets of thy father, and to the Prophets of thy mother: as the Lord of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, Surely, were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the King of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor see thee, 2 Kings 3, 13, 14. Jehoshaphat was a good and godly King, who feared the Lord, and in all distresses called upon them evermore to ask counsel of the Prophets of the Lord: and God suffereth his word to be declared to the wicked themselves many times, howbeit it is because of the godly that are among them: even so doth God deal with Ahab, he would have suffered him to follow the false Prophets that he fed, and to be seduced by them, and to perish in that famine, but that he regarded Obadiah and that small remnant for whose sake he shown mercy upon the Land. He had shown mercy to the Lord's Prophets, the Lord showeth mercy unto him again, and is mindful of his goodness, as if he had done it unto himself.

Another example we have in Jehoiada, he was honored alive and dead, so that they buried him in the City of David, among the Kings, because he had done good in Israel, both toward God and toward his house. He set his heart to honor God, and was zealous for his glory, he reformed religion, he destroyed idolatry, he freed them from tyranny, he established true piety, and did much good to the Church and Common-wealth: and as he was careful to honor God, so God honored him, and remembered him for good, according to the greatness of his own kindness, and according to his servants goodness.

The like we might say of Nehemiah, when the secret enemies of the Church had defiled the Priesthood, and the covenant of the Priesthood, and of the Levites, and that many of the chiefest among the Jews, withheld the tithes and offerings from them to whom they were due by the express gift of God, so that the house of God was forsaken: he was merciful unto him again and spared him, and made him to be magnified of all the people, according to the saying of the Lord, 1 Sam. 2, 30. Them that honor me, I will honor: and they that despise me, shall be lightly esteemed.

Consider with me farther another example, to wit, touching Ebed-melech, when as the Prophet Jeremiah by false suggestions and accusations was thrust into the dungeon, where was no water but mire, so that he sunk down and stuck fast in it, and must of necessity perish in short time, if he were not speedily delivered, this stranger spake to the King for him, and was content to take upon him the envy of many that he might expose himself unto: My Lord the King, these men have done evil in all that they have done to Jeremiah the Prophet, whom they have cast into the dungeon, and he is like to die for hunger in the place where he is, for there is no more bread in the City, Ier. 38, 9. So he drew him up with cords, and took him up out of the dungeon. What then? He that remembered Jeremiah in prison, hath his own life given him for a prey: and he that lifted up the Prophet out of the dungeon, is assured also of his own deliverance; God doth greatly accept of the compassion he shown, and rewarded it to the full, so that Jeremiah is sent unto him with this joyful message in those miserable days, when Jerusalem was taken by the enemies, the Princes were slain with y^e sword, Zedekiah the King had his eyes put out, & his sons were slain before his face, the Kings house was burned with fire, the walls of the City were broken down, and the remnant of the people were carried away into captivity: in the midst of all these tumults & public calamities, I say, the Prophet receiveth a commandment from God, to go unto this godly Ethiopian, being one of the Eunuchs that was in the Kings house, and to say unto him, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will bring my words upon this City for evil, and not for good, and they shall be accomplished in that day before thee: but I will deliver thee in that day, saith the LORD, and thou shalt not be given into the hand of the men of whom thou art afraid: for I will surely deliver thee, and thou shalt not fall by the sword, but thy life shall be for a prey unto thee, because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the Lord, Ier. 39, 16, 17, 18. He had done good to Jeremiah, God doth good unto him, and accounteth it as done unto himself.

The last example shall be out of the New Testament, mentioned by the Apostle Paul, 2 Tim. 1, 16, 17, 18. The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus, for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain: but when he was at Rome, he sought me out very diligently, & found me: the Lord grant unto him, that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day. Where he prayeth, that he might reap as he had sowed, and gather as he had scattered, and receive as he had bestowed, to wit, mercy for mercy, goodness for goodness, and kindness for kindness: and no doubt God heard his prayer, according to his promise, and recompensed him that had refreshed the Apostle. This is that which the Lord promiseth in the Prophet Malachi, chap. 3, 10. If they would rob him and spoil him no more, but bring all his tithes into his house, he passeth his word toward thē, that they should see plenty upon their labors, and a removing of those means that caused famine and misery to fall upon them, and to come among them; as before he threatened & denounced, that as they spoiled God, so God spoiled them: and as they caused famine to be in his house by keeping back his portion, so he caused scarceness of bread and cleanness of teeth in their houses, causing extreme want to be in the midst of them, in withholding and keeping back his blessings, and in sending upon them his grievous plagues.

Now he telleth them, that if they murmur not at the maintenance of his Ministers, but pay them truly, and sustain them conscionably, he will satisfy them with good things, and remove from them evil things, He would open the windows of heaven unto them, and pour out a blessing without measure.

And thus we see how we may find comfort unto our selves, and strengthen our faith by such examples as the Scripture affordeth unto us.

[Beside the Ram of atonement, whereby an atonement shall be made for him.] In these words we are to consider the last, but yet the chief and principal means of sanctification, which also is a satisfaction to God, and a putting and purging away of the sin of defrauding our neighbor. And herein indeed standeth the only way of expiation & blotting out iniquity, howbeit set down in the ceremony. For neither can confession of our sins to God, nor making restitution of our evil gotten goods to man, put away our sin: we may confess all the day long, we may bestow all our goods to feed the poor, and give our bodies to be burned, and yet our sins shall lie heavy upon us, and press us down to the gates of hell; it is only the blood of Christ, as a Lamb unspotted and undefiled, that can do it.

Neither is it enough for us to say, Christ hath washed us from our sins, he hath paid a sufficient price for them, and therefore it skilleth not, whether they be acknowledged to God, or recompensed to men. For we have seen that GOD requireth besides the Ram of atonement, that such as have wronged their brethren, must both confess and restore, or else they can have no benefit of reconciliatiō to God by the death of Christ. We are therefore in this place to mark how our sins are purged; w^c is expressed under a type & figure.

True it is, the blood of Bulls and other beasts is not able to take away sin, neither is it possible that the offering up of gifts and sacrifices could make holy concerning the conscience him that did the service, and sanctify the comers thereunto, Hebrews 10, verse 1. For sin is an offense done to God, a breach of the Law, and a wounding of the conscience. But what is the blood of Bullocks able to do, touching the curing of these mischiefs and maladies? Will I eat (saith the Lord) the flesh of Bulls, or drink the blood of Goats? Psal. 50, 13. Doubtless such things of small account and reckoning, have no force or efficacy to appease the wrath of God, which is infinite. Besides, the justice of GOD required▪ that man himself, not Calf or any Cattle should undergo the punishment for sin, because the soul that sinned, shall die the death, Ezek. 18, verse 4. and the threatening must be true, that because man sinned, he should die, Gen. 2. Thou shalt die the death. So that it was necessary, either that all man-kind by reason of sin, must perish everlastingly, or else Christ the Mediator of a better testament must become a surety for us, and satisfy the wrath of God kindled and conceived against us for sin. If any ask the question, if the blood of Bulls & Goats could not take away sin, why did God command them to be offered, and to what end were they appointed? I answer, [Answer.] this was not done in vain, but to good purpose. For albeit they could never take away sin, nor purge the conscience from dead works, yet they served fitly to shadow out the death of Christ, and to assure the heart, that it is washed by the blood of the Messiah. This was a notable comfort to the people of God from the beginning, & taught them to look for redemption through him. [Objection.] If it be farther said, that God speaketh everywhere in the Law, that the blood it self of Bulls and Beasts cleanseth and purgeth sin, as Levite. 17, 11. The life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the Altar, to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul. I answer, [Answer.] that place speaketh not properly, but sacramentally: as in the New Testament he calleth in the institution of his last Supper, the bread his body, because it is a figure of it: so in this place, to the outward sign he giveth the name of the thing signified, and to the type he ascribeth the proper effect of the blood of Christ, which only is the blood that is able to make atonement for our sins. Otherwise those offerings of beasts should be called in vain, the similitudes and shadows of good things to come. As for those heretics that dream, that those oblations did really and indeed cleanse away the sins of the fathers, not by their natural operation, but by the acceptance of God, and therefore were not types of Christ's sacrifice washing away sin, they are evidently convinced by the places before alleged, and throughout the Epistle to the Hebrews.

[Object.] If any ask, how these can be figures of Christ, seeing GOD witnesseth in his word, that he never required them, When he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and Offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me; in burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin, thou hast had no pleasure. Psal. 40, 7. Heb. 10, verses 5, 6. If then God would have none of them, how could they be the figures and images of better things?

I answer, [Answer.] God may be said to allow them, and yet to disallow them; to reject them, and to regard them in diverse senses. He willed them as he commandeth them, and commendeth them as a sweet savor unto him, performed in faith, and as types referred to the coming of the Messiah, and the time of reformation.

On the other side, he may be said to refuse and reject them, for these three causes. First, when the manner of doing is evil, doing that which God requireth, but doing it in a corrupt manner, to wit, without faith and obedience, as the Prophets in every place reprove the sacrifices of hypocrites & wicked persons: as Isaiah 1, 11, 12. I delight not in the blood of Bullocks, or of Lambs: who hath required this at your hand? Your new Moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth: and the reason of this is rendered in the words following, Your hands are full of blood. Again, God would not that they should remain & continue forever, but that, though they had place in y^e Church for a time, they should cease at the coming of the Messiah. Therefore Christ being come into y^e world, and manifested in the flesh, God willed thē no longer, but would have them abolished. And this sense doth y^e Apostle principally intend in this place, that the shadows must give place, when the body it self was come in person. Lastly, it may after a sort be said, that God never willed them, that is, approved & allowed of thē as the principal part of God's worship, and as the very price of our redemption, & the ransom for our sins, & our reconciliation unto God: albeit he would have them observed of his people, and used for a time as certain rudiments & rites to bring them to Christ, & to confirm their faith in him. Let us shut up this with the comparison that the Apostle expresseth, Heb. 9, 13, 14. If the blood of Bulls and of Goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctify to the purifying of the flesh: how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience frō dead works to serve the living God? In these words he compareth the shadow & the body, the type & the truth, the ceremony and the substance together. Frō hence we learn this doctrine, that the blood of Christ taketh away our sins, & reconcileth us to God the Father. Christ Jesus hath in the performance of his Priesthood, freed and delivered us from the guilt & punishment of our sins. This appeareth evidently unto us, by considering & laying before us, the end, the parts and fruit of his Priesthood. The end of the Levitical Priest-hood, and of this figured by it, was to offer sacrifice for the ignorances, that is, for the sins of the people. The distinct parts of it are two, satisfaction, and intercession. His satisfaction consisteth partly in suffering, and partly in obedience. The second part of his Priesthood standeth in intercession, in that he is become our perpetual and perfect Advocate, that thereby God might be appeased for them, and we reconciled unto him. The fruit thereof is this, that we are delivered, redeemed, ransomed, justified, and freed from the guilt of sin, from the burden of ceremonies, from the curse of the Law, from the wrath of God, and from fear of condemnation. This truth is taught in many places, John, 1, 29. John seeing Christ coming unto him, saith, Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. And the same Apostle in his first Epistle, chap. 2, ver. 1, 2. If any sin, we have an Advocate, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. Likewise in the Epistle to the Romans, the Apostle, magnifying the mercy of God, and setting out the merits of Christ, he saith, chap. 3, verse 24, 25. We are justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, thorough faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, thorough the forbearance of God. The Apostle to the Hebrews declareth, that Christ was to offer up himself once, and not often, as the High Priest entereth into the high place every year with blood of others: For then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the ende of the world hath be appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. By all which testimonies it appeareth, that Christ is our Advocate, and hath wrought our peace and atonement, and thereby made an end of all other sacrifices.

The reasons are plain. First, because God [Reason 1] thereby is well pleased, and his wrath appeased, so that he accounteth his death as a full price and sufficient ransom paid for them. So the Evangelist witnesseth, that a voice came from heaven saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Math. 3, 17. And in the Epistle to the Ephesians, the Apostle saith, chap. 5, verse 2. Walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God of a sweet smelling savor. It is noted in the book of Genesis, that when Noah being come out of the Ark, built an Altar, and offered burnt offerings, the Lord smelled a sweet savor; which was not the smoke of the sacrifice that ascended, (for what sweetness could there be in that?) but it was the sweet & precious sacrifice of Christ for which his wrath was appeased, being shadowed by that ceremony.

[Reason 2] Secondly, Christ took the whole burden of our sins upon his shoulders, presenting himself before God in our person, and offering us to God in his person: so that he took upon him our unrighteousness, and imputed to us his righteousness. This the Prophet Isaiah did most clearly prophesy off, chap. 53, verses 4, 12. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows, and poured out his soul unto death, &c. He bare the sins of many, and made intercession for the transgressors. And the Apostle teacheth, that in Christ we are reconciled to God, For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, 2, Cor. 5, 21. And in the Epistle to the Colossians, chap. 2, ver. 14, 15. he setteth out the fruit of Christ's death, that he hath forgiven us our trespasses, hath put out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us, he took it out of the way and fastened it to his Cross, he hath spoiled principalities and powers, hath made a show of them openly, and hath triumphed over them in the same Cross. This was notably prefigured and foreshowed in the rites of the Law. For when any propitiatory sacrifice was to be offered for the people, the Priest was to present the beast before the Lord, to lay his hands upon the head of the beast, and to confess the sins of the people upon it, and so it bare their iniquities; the truth whereof, is Christ himself.

Thirdly, there could otherwise be no remission [Reason 3] of sins: so that it is the blood of Christ in the suffering of the Cross, that purgeth away our sins, as Hebr. 9, verse 22. Almost all things in the Law are purged with blood, and without shedding of blood is no remission: and therefore it was necessary that Christ should purge and purify us by his blood. The greatness of our sins could not otherwise be pardoned, nor the person that is offended, satisfied: they are infinite, and so require a sacrifice of infinite price and value. No treasures, no riches, no creatures, no sacrifices, no ceremonies could do it, it cost more to save a soul, and to redeem the captives and prisoners that are holden by Satan in slavery to do his will: Knowing that we are not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from our vain conversation, received by the tradition of the Fathers: But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb undefiled and without spot. 1 Pet. 1, verses 18, 19.

Fourthly, nothing but the death of Christ could quench the scorching wrath of God as [Reason 4] a consuming fire kindled against us, & countervail his severe justice. Hence it is, that the Apostle, writing to the Hebrews, having shown that the blood of Bulls and Goats could not possibly take away sins, addeth immediately after, When he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou ordained me. Heb. 9, 5. Our sins have a bloody face in the sight of God, and we are enemies unto him, so that the robes of the Saints must be dipped in the blood of the Lamb, Revel. 7, ver. 14. All the nitre and sope, and Fullers earth in the world, are weak and insufficient, and have not power and strength enough in them to do it; So that we must say with the Prophet, Psal, 50, 7. Purge me with Hyssop, and I shall be clean: wash me, and I shall be whiter then snow. Thus then we see, that Moses mentioning here the Ram of atonement, whereby an atonement is to be made for sinners, teacheth under this type, this certain and undoubted truth, y^t Christ our Savior hath by his blood made an atonement between God and us, & thereby reconciled us unto his Father.

The uses of this doctrine are of great weight and importance. First, it offereth to our considerations [Use 1] this meditation, what sin is, & how it is to be esteemed. It is a most fearful and grievous thing, & the wrath of God against it is exceeding great: so that nothing in heaven or in earth could satisfy for sin, but the death of Christ Jesus: the Son must die for the servant, or rather for the enemy: for we are by nature the children of wrath as well as others. The justice of God would not spare him, though he were his only and well-beloved Son: but forasmuch as he was to bear our sins in his body, he must die for us, Rom. 8, 32. He spared not his own Son, but gave him to the death for us all. We are not therefore to be lightly carried into the practice of sin, but to be much grieved at it, to strive with all our force against it, and to endeavor to overcome it; and among other things this is not the least that should trouble us, that we have by sin brought such misery and shame upon the Son of God. We ought to lament for this, and to bewail it every day. For if we had not sinned, and by sin been deprived of the glory of God, he had not taken upon him the shape of a servant, neither been humbled to the death of the Cross. We do daily cry out upon the Jews, and think hardly of them, because they crucified the Lord of glory: but if we would enter into our selves, and consider what we are, we should find our nature as bad as theirs: our sins are they that crucified him: they are the nails that did pierce his hands and feet, and the spear that entered into his side, and shed his blood, Zach. 12, 10.

[Use 2] Secondly, this confirmeth us in a principle of our Christian religion, that remission and forgiveness of sins is by the merit of Christ, because the Lord hath laid upon him the iniquity of us all, Isaiah 53, 6. And to him give all the Prophets witness, that through his Name, all that believe in him shall have remission of their sins, Acts 10, 43. And the Apostle saith, that in him we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. Eph. 1, 7.

Now then, if we would know, what this freedom and forgiveness is, we must understand, that it is a blessing of God upon his people, procured by the death and passion of Christ, whereby God esteemeth of sin as no sin, or as not committed. This is figured out by many borrowed speeches in the Scripture, as Isaiah 44, 22. I will put away thy transgressions as a Cloud: and chap. 38, 17. He hath cast them behind his back: alluding to the common practice of men, who, when they will not remember or not regard a thing, do turn their backs upon it, and put it out of their sight. Likewise the Prophet Micah, chap. 7, ver. 19. He will cast all the sins of his people into the bottom of the sea, alluding to Pharaoh and his host that perished and were drowned in the red sea. The benefit of this is endless and vncountable; the remission of our sins, the redemption of our souls, and the reconciliation of our persons into the favor of God, being the most wonderful blessing that ever can come to mankind. For every man that hath his sins detained, is more miserable and wretched then the most vile creature that ever was. The dog, the serpent, the toad are not so base; for when they die, there is an end of all their woe and sorrow: but when man dieth and departeth out of this life without this blessing, then is the beginning of his anguish, first in soul until the day of judgment, and in soul and body for evermore, after the general resurrection. This consideration caused the Prophet to cry out, Psalm. 32, 1, 2. Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered: Blessed is the man, to whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity. This was the voice of David, this was the feeling that he had, though otherwise he had the pleasures, and royalties of a kingdom. Ask carnal and corrupt men, who are blessed and happy in this world: some will say, the rich man: some, the wise: some, the fortunate: some, the healthy: some, the honorable: and some, those that are in favor with Princes: or if they will not say so, yet they show evidently that they think so. But this point is never thought upon, it is accounted but a common matter, and therefore it never cometh into their minds, or entereth into their hearts. Alas, alas, how many are there that did never rightly know, what sin is, what it worketh, how it corrupteth, whom it defileth, and whereunto it bringeth. These are drowsy Protestants of dead hearts, and almost desperate. If we had the right knowledge of our selves, and the least feeling of sin, as it were with the tippe of our finger, we would find our hearts so foul, and our estate so fearful, and the wrath of God so bitter, that if the gain and glory of the whole world were set before us on the one side, and the pardon of our sins on the other side, we would choose the free forgiveness of our sins, before ten thousand worlds, and all the pomp of them. So then, we must hold that the redemption of our souls, is a most dear and costly thing, the dearest thing in the world, and of greatest value. It cost the precious blood of the Son of God, the least drop whereof, being the blood of God, is more worthy and of greater merit, then all the world. The servants of David said unto him, Thou art worth ten thousand of us: so we may say of the Son of God, our Lord Jesus Christ, that he is more of worth thē ten thousand of us; and yet he accounted not his own life to be dear and precious unto him, but he was content to lay it down for our salvation: and therefore Paul saith to the Elders of Ephesus, Acts 20, ver. 28. that God redeemed to himself a Church by his own blood, his sacrifice being propitiatory, and sufficient to purge our sins, and to make us clean again.

Thirdly, if we will have any comfort that [Use 3] our sins are washed away by the blood of Christ, whereby the atonement is made, and we reconciled to God the Father, we must leave them and forsake them, and lead an holy and godly life. The Apostle Peter teacheth this point, and enforceth this duty upon us from the consideration of the death and passion of Christ, 1 Pet. 4, ver. 1, 2. Forasmuch as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind, for he that hath suffered in the flesh, hath ceased from sin: that he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh, to the lusts of men, but to the will of God. And the Apostle John saith, If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, & the blood of Jesus Christ his Son, cleanseth us frō all sin. They then cannot assure themselves that Christ died for them, that make no account of committing sin, that drink in iniquity as water, and wallow in it as swine in the mire, and cast out sin from their profane hearts, as the dog doth his vomit. Let us mark this as a good note, and set it down as it a rule, that Christ is not dead for us, except we be dead to sin: and he is not risen again for us, except we be risen to newness of life. Indeed he died, it is an article of our faith, but what benefit have we by it, if we feel not the power of it working effectually in us? Besides, this is another principle which is surer then the heavens, that we are not redeemed, except we be sanctified. For are we so foolish to imagine, that he would redeem us from sin, that we should commit sin afresh, and that we should serve sin again? Will any man ransom a prisoner, and pay a great price for him, that so soon as he is freed, he should by and by serve his enemy? So do we deceive our selves, if we imagine that Christ would pull us out of the snare and power of Satan, to the end we should entangle our selves again, and give up our selves to his service, who is the sworn enemy of God; whereas we are delivered out of the hands of our enemies, that we should serve the Lord without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him, all the days of our life, Luke 1, 74, 75. Labor then to be in Christ, and examine thyself, whether he be in thee or not: study to be partaker of the benefits of his passion, and to be washed from the filthiness of our corruption. This is a privilege belonging unto the Church of God, as the Prophet Isaiah noteth, chap. 33, verse 26. The inhabitant shall not say, I am sick: and the people that dwell therein, shall be forgiven their iniquity. What then? Shall we continue in sin, because sin is pardoned? Or shall we turn the grace of God into wantonness, because grace hath abounded? God forbid: how shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? Roman. 6, 2. We are baptized into the death of Christ, and are buried with him by baptism into his death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we should also walk in newness of life. Our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that hence forth we should not serve sin. The more we profit by the death of Christ, the more we grow in sanctification, and the farther we proceed in mortification. It is one thing to talk of the death of Christ, and another thing to feel his death working in us: it is one thing to know that he died, and another, that he died for us. It is not enough to reason of his death, and to confer of it, except it be as a strong purgation to cleanse us from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. Holiness in the soul, is as health in the body, and peace in the City, and marrow in the bones. It is the righteousness of Christ that giveth life unto us: so that so far as we live, we are sanctified. The life of an unregenerate man is no life, but rather a death: they are twice dead, dead in soul, and dead in body; there is no life of God in their minds, or willes, or consciences, or affections. They may well breath in the air as the brute beasts do, but they have no heavenly breath, or celestial motion in them. They have the natural life, but they are utterly ignorant what the spiritual life meaneth. But he that is spiritual indeed, and truly sanctified, the farther he proceedeth, the weaker the motions of sin are in him, even as the nearer a man draweth to death, the less motion is in him. If we be once in Christ, and dead with him, the pleasures of the world, the delights of the flesh, the lusts of the eyes, the pride of life, and the vanities of carnal men will move us nothing at all. They that were our familiar companions in sin, will be shunned of us, bitter unto us, and banished from us. The evil works wherein before we took our whole delight, will be grievous & Irkesome unto us, so that we will by no means abide to hear and see the unrighteous deeds of the wicked, which before did minister matter of sport & contentment unto our soul.

Lastly, seeing the death and shedding of the blood of Christ, is the means of our salvation [Use 4] and free pardon of our sins, we are to rejoyce at it, and to comfort our selves in it above all things in the world, as that which hath procured the greatest blessing that can befall us: so that if we can find but one drop of his blood, to be by the power of the Spirit sprinkled upon our consciences, to purge us from dead works, it should rejoyce us more then the gaining of a kingdom, or the increasing of our corn and cattle. If a man should live in health & wealth, in honor & preferment, in favor and friendship of the mighty, in credit & estimation of men, in the praise & applause of the world, so that he had no experience of sorrow and sickness, of misery & calamity; yet if he have not this principle writ in his heart, that Christ shed his blood for him, and nailed his sins upon his Cross, and carried them with him into his grave, to bury them in perpetual forgetfulness: What comfort could all these things bring unto him? Or what sound delight could he take in them? Or what were he nearer for them unto salvation? But if we should want all these blessings, of honor, of riches, of favor, of preferment, and such like: and on the contrary side, taste of the cup of affliction in great measure, and drink up the dregs of it, if we should endure poverty, banishment, infamy, injury, disgrace, distress, discredit, slanders, perilles, persecution, need, nakedness, and all kind of adversity: yet these could not make us miserable, nor separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. It is he that died for us, yea rather which is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, and maketh intercession for us. Who then shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect, who have a discharge given them from all their sins? As for troubles and afflictions, they are sanctified unto them, and serve to bring them nearer unto God, and are approved means whereby they are brought to a conformity with Christ. True it is, our nature abhorreth nothing more then affliction, so that it is grievous for the present, and not joyous. It is well observed, that when Jesus went up to the Mountain to preach, all his Disciples went with him, none forsook him nor fled from him: but when he went to Mount Caluarie to suffer, they all left him alone. He hath at all times many that are ready to follow him by professing, but few are willing to follow him by patient suffering. We are content to go with him into the Temple, but we will not accompany him to the Cross. Peter shown this too plainly, both by his words and by his practice. When Christ once made mention of his suffering, he said unto him, Master, pity thyself. And when he was in the High-Priests hall, & was assaulted and tempted, for fear of the persecutors, and danger of death, he denied his Master. Notwithstanding, we must fear to sin against Christ, more then to suffer with Christ: forasmuch as if we suffer with him, we shall also be glorified with him. There is nothing can make us miserable, but that which bringeth us out of favor with God, and separateth us from him: now there is nothing can separate us from God, but sin; nothing can destroy the soul, but sin, and sin is able to do it. They therefore are truly happy that have the power and strength of sin abolished, and are no longer servants of corruption, but the Lord's freemen. Let them rejoice and be glad, because their names are written in heaven. Christ willeth the seventy Disciples to rejoice in this, and not so much that the devils were subdued unto them: so ought it to be with us, we should find no joy or comfort in our riches & treasures, and in our store and abundance of earthly things, in comparison of those unspeakable benefits which we receive from Christ, and enjoy by Christ. If we had all things without him, they might delight the eye and outward man, but they could not comfort the heart, nor refresh the weary soul: For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? Let us then learn hereby, what true comfort is, and wherein it consisteth; there is no comfort without Christ: he is the substance of the Gospel, and there is no glad tidings can come to the soul where he is not.

[Verses 9, 10. And every offering of all the holy things of the children of Israel, which they bring unto the Priest, shall be his: & every man's hallowed things, &c.] In these last words of this division, we have the application or conclusion of the former law, amplified by an argument of the like. God had appointed in his Law, that the Priests should receive the oblations and hallowed things to sustain them, Levite. 10, 12. Now, even as these things belong unto them, so God appointeth that such things as are stolen, and have no owner or heir alive, shall be brought to them, in case the persons be dead, or not known to whom they might of right belong. Thus doth God provide for the maintenance of them that served him.

We learn from hence, that the Ministers of the Church, that labor therein, ought to be maintained of the Church. I will not handle in this place, whether tithes be due by a divine right, or not: but rather come to the equity of it, that in the time of the Gospel, the Pastors of the Church ought to live of the Gospel. For if in time of the Law, the Priests that served at the Altar, had a plentiful allowance, as it were a liberal diet, as we have shown before; forasmuch as they had benefit by the sacrifices and oblations, by first fruits and tenths, and such like: then it followeth necessarily, that the Ministers of the New Testament should have also a good reward and recompense for their pains and labors. And it followeth not by equal comparison, but from the less to the greater, seeing their office is greater, the least in the kingdom of heaven, being greater then John the Baptist. Math. 11.11. and therefore the hire of their labor ought not to be less. To this purpose speaketh the Lord by the ministry of Moses, in many places of the Law. In the book of Genesis, whē Abraham returned from the slaughter of the Kings, he gave him tithes of all the spoils that he had taken in war. God had dispersed the Levites among all the Tribes, and assigned thē Cities to inhabit in all their quarters, to the intent that sound doctrine should be taught throughout the whole Country. They had no inheritance allotted and assigned unto them; God promiseth to become their portion, and therefore the people ought not to defraud them. The Levite was ever to be with them that was within their gates. He assigned also to Aaron and his sons, a worthy portion, so that none that served at the Altar, had any want. To this purpose the Apostle speaketh to the Galatians, chapter 6, verse 6. Let him that is taught in the word, communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things.

This precept the Apostle giveth to them that are taught toward their teachers: wherein he layeth down these particulars; first, that the Ministers are to be maintained. Secondly, they are to be provided for at the costs and charges of the Churches. Thirdly, that they are to be sustained honestly, liberally, and bountifully, to the end the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn, might appear not to be muzzled. The elders that rule well, ought to have double honor given unto them, 1. Tim. 5.18. Not that all ought to be given into the Ministers hands, that they should abound, and others want: that they should live richly or riotously, & others beggarly, as hypocrites dealt among the Pharisees, and as it is now in the Church of Rome, where they devour widows houses, and under a color of this commandment, have drawn dry the treasures of Princes, and eaten up the fat of the land, as their Abbeyes and Monasteries everywhere testify, so that they have built them palaces and castles like Princes, of the spoils of other men: but the Apostles meaning is, that they ought to have an honest pension and contribution given unto them, not abounding in superfluity, but contenting themselves with a sufficiency, according to the rule of the Apostle, Having food and raiment, let them be content.

[Reason 1] This truth is farther confirmed unto us by the force of reasons, as it were by strong cords that cannot be broken. First, the Apostle writing to the Corinthians, handleth this argument at large: where he setteth down sundry similitudes which serve fitly and notably to illustrate the same, as it were so many lights brought forth to open and discover the nature of things that are dark and doubtful. The soldier that goeth forth to battle, fighteth not at his own costs, but hath his pay and wages of his Captain that hath called him. The Planter that planteth trees, eateth of the labor of his hands, and tasteth of the fruit of the things he hath set and grafted. The Shepherd, that feedeth a flock, eateth of the milk of the flock. The sower, that goeth out to sow, reapeth that which he hath sowed, and gathereth it into the barn. The Ministers of the Gospel are the Lord's soldiers to fight his battles against sin and Satan, by the two-edged sword of the word: they are the chariots and horsemen of Israel: they plant as gardeners, they sow as husbandmen, they feed as shepherds; and therefore they all ought to have a recompense for their labors, and maintenance for their persons, answerable or agreeable to the work that is in their hands.

[Reason 2] Secondly, such as are taught and instructed by the Ministers, are debtors unto them. All honest men are bound to pay their debtes, or else they are no better then thieves. There is a mutual band and conjunction between the Minister and the people: and either of them oweth a necessary duty unto the other. It is a part of natural equity, that when we have received a benefit, we should recompense our benefactors. They that have received much are bound to return the more. This is the reason which the Apostle pointeth out, Rom. 15.27. making the Macedonians and those of Achaia to be debtors to them that are of Jerusalem; It hath pleased them verily, and their debtors they be: for if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things, their duty is also to minister unto them in carnal things. Where he calleth the faith of the Gospel and Christ with all his treasures, the goods of the brethren at Jerusalem, because Christ was promised to the Jews, and from them salvation came unto the Gentiles, according to the ancient promise and prophesy, Isaiah 2.3. Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. As then the Gospel came from them, so now they wanted the carnal goods of the Gentiles, and stood in need of their alms. Now, what are carnal goods, that is, uncertain and unsettled and unstable, in comparison of the spiritual riches and treasures of Christ, if they be weighed in a balance? Surely nothing at all, & therefore were y^e Gentiles more then debtors unto the Jews. Thus also doth the Apostle reason, 1 Cor. 9.11. If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing, if we shall reap your carnal things? Seeing then the hearers are debtors to them that have taught them, they shall never be able to discharge themselves of this debt, except they give according as they have received, and in lieu of thankfulness communicate unto them that have painfully and plentifully instructed them.

Thirdly, all laborers are worthy of their [Reason 3] wages. It is a rule of equity to pay all that have labored for us: and therefore it cannot without injustice and fraud be denied, or detained: as Luk. 10.7. Where he saith to the seventy which he sent before his face into every City whither he himself would come, Into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house: and in the same house remain eating and drinking such things as they give: for the laborer is worthy of his hire. But the Ministers of the Gospel are laborers: they labor to husband us to God, and to plant us as fruitful trees in his garden: they dignity and delue about us: they plough up the ground of our hearts, and sow good seed in the farrowes thereof. They labor in the word and doctrine, and care for the Church day and night, and therefore have right and reason to be maintained of the Church that are partakers of their labors. Every trade maintaineth the tradesman, and every art the artificer. Should it then go worse with the Minister, then with other Sciences and handy-crafts? and shall he alone complain that his profession (which is the best of all) hath that recompense which is least of all?

The uses follow to be handled and considered. [Use 1]First, this serveth to reprove such wretched and miserable men as deny them the maintenance that is fit for them, and appointed unto them. Many there are among us that think it lost and utterly perished, that is given unto them: that pay them somewhat for a time, but it is thought to be a work more then needs, and therefore afterward grow weary, as of a burden that they cannot bear. These are never weary of superfluous expēces which they might both with credit and a good conscience cut off: howbeit if they lay out anything to further piety and true religion, they repine and grudge at it, as if they were undone.

Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, We should not grow weary of well doing, Gal. 6.9. forasmuch as in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. For having in the former words exhorted the people to give their teachers temporal things, and to communicate unto them of their goods; he inferreth this conclusion, Let us not be weary of well doing. He that fainteth in a good course, and giveth over before he come to the end, is like to a slothful husbandman, who, having made an entrance to plough and sow, giveth over and goeth back, before he have fully finished his work: or like unto him in the parable mentioned in y^e Gospel, Luk. 14.28. who intending to build a tower, did not sit down first, and count the cost, whether he had sufficient to finish it, and therefore after he hath laid the foundation and is not able to go through, all that beheld him, began to mock him, saying, This man began to build, but was not able to make an end. This hath been the continual practice of this corrupt world, to think it evilly bestowed, which is bestowed this way, being like unto Judas, when a precious ointment was poured upon Christ, and his feet anointed with it, he cried out, What needeth this waste? this might have been sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor, John. 12.5. So likewise whatsoever is given to the Ministers of Christ, is accounted to be bestowed in waste, & such as might as well be spared, as so spent. The zeal of our forefathers in former times was great, they gave to the Ministers, and pulled not nor pared from them. The Idolatrous Priests that served Baal, and attended at his altars were well provided for, and wanted nothing, Gen. 47. Four hundred false Prophets were richly maintained at Izebels table, 1 kin. 18.19. where—as the poor and painefull Levites, that taught the people diligently, have been glad to catch at a crust, and to serve for a morsel of bread, and a suit of apparel. The Popish Priests that worship idols, and maintain idolatry, have had abundance, and know not what it is to want, they have no experience of necessity. Nothing was thought to be too much or enough to set up and continue a will worship after the precept and tradition of men.

Such as lived in blindness and palpable ignorance, had a zeal to religion, such as it was, and it shall be sufficient to condemn our coldness and backwardnesse. It was well said and observed, that in old time they were wont to say, What shall we give the man of God, 1 Sam. 9. but now the Church-robbers say, Come, and let us take the houses of God in our possession, Psal. 83.12. This is an evident token that there is small devotion in men for the maintenance of true religion, as we shall show afterward.

Secondly, it putteth the Ministers in mind [Use 2] of their duty, that they ought to labor among them that do maintain them, and teach them in the word. It is great reason that he which looketh for his hire, should do his work: and that he which intendeth to live of the Gospel of Christ, should preach to others the Gospel of Christ. Such as are Drones and will not labor to bring honey to the hive, are not worthy to eat of the honey. Such as are dumb-dogs and cannot bark, may not eat of the children's bread, nor expect or receive the maintenance that is due to y^e Ministers which are painful. Such will not or cannot labor, and therefore ought not to eat, 2 Thess. 3.10. We must care more for the feeding of the flock, then of our selves; and fear more the loss of the sheep, then the lack of the fleece: for which I pray you, is more to be desired and of more price, the sheep it self, or the fleece it carrieth? Is not the sheep? is it not for them that Christ died? and ought we not to leave ninety and nine in the wilderness, and seek out that which is lost, or strayed, that it starve not, and perish? Woe therefore unto the shepherds of Israel, that eat and clothe themselves with the wool: that strengthen not the diseased neither heal the sick, nor bind up the broken, nor bring again that which was strayed, neither seek out that which is lost.

Woe unto such as are entered into a painful calling, and yet will take no pains in it: that have a great work to do, and yet lead an idle & lazy life: y^t take upon them the labor of the Ministry, & yet follow their pleasures and pastimes, and do nothing less then labor. What calling requireth greater study, to furnish themselves with matter, and to bring out of their treasury, things, both old and new? And yet many there are that are entered into it, that scarce bestow one hour in a day, and sometimes in a week to preach the word, and to give everyone in the family their bread in due season.

Hence it is, that some preach not at all, neither think it to be their duty to preach to the people. Others do it so rawly and unreverently, that the stuff they bring will not abide workmanship, and the meat they set forth, is undigested. Such is their pride and ignorance that they dare utter whatsoever cometh into their idle brains and their foolish minds: and they fear not to sit down in the chair of Moses, that are not worthy to stand at the plough tail, or to sit in the Artificers shop: forasmuch as none of these ordinary trades and occupations can be discharged and performed without some preparation; and yet these dare ascend into the Pulpit, and stand above the people in the Name of God, without any meditation. Others there are that are of no ability, neither have any gifts to teach. None more forward to catch from the people, and none more backward to preach to the people; for indeed they are not able. What should the Church do with such blind guides? When Christ sent his disciples before he went to Jerusalem, to a town that was over against them, and told them they should find an asse bound, and a colt with her, cōmanding them to loose them & bring them unto him, and charging them, If any man said ought unto them, to say that the Lord had need of them: so it were fit that these two-legged and dumb-tongued asses were loosed & sent away; howbeit we cannot say, that the Lord hath need of them, or that the Church hath need of them. Neither can we say, they are the salt of the earth, forasmuch as they have lost their savor, and therefore are thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out, neither are they meet for the land, nor profitable for the dunghill, but to be trodden under foot of men.

To these we may join such as are better able to teach, but no whit more willing; that hide their gifts in the earth, and cover them under a bushel, like to that unfaithful and slothful servant that exercised not the talent he had received. The more God hath bestowed upon them, the more he requireth at their hands. Use and practice increase the gifts that are given unto us: but idleness and sluggishness do diminish them. Though they have mouths to speak, yet if they open them not, they may be called dumb dogs, as well as they that are ignorant. Though they have tongues and throats to utter a voice, yet if they hold their peace, they may be called idle shepherds, forasmuch as they are the work of men's hands, and not of God's; Though they have their eyes in their head, and can see far, yet if they shut them and close them up, they may be called blind guides, that take upon them to direct others, but cannot govern themselves. For it is all one to the people, whether their Ministers be ignorant, and cannot teach: or whether they be idle, and will not teach: seeing both these ways the Church goeth to ruin. And if there be any difference, such as are able to preach and will not, do the greater hurt. For touching these poor and silly souls that can do nothing, they are not much regarded, or followed, every man can point them out easily: but as for those that are counted great Clerks, and take themselves to be no small fools, they draw many eyes after them, the people have a great opiniō of them, they submit themselves unto them, and seek no further. They begin to think, that if hearing of the word were so necessary for them as some green heads & precise fellows would make them believe, surely then those Ministers would preach more often; for they know God's will, they are not ignorant of his word. So then, the blind and unlearned Ministers are hurtful, but the meanest sort of men in a manner can say of them, Alas, our Minister is nobody, he is not able nor meet to teach us, and therefore we must seek food abroad, or else we are like to be famished: whereas the other sort are counted grave and stayed men, deep Divines, and great scholars, and the hearers so hang upon their sleeues, that they will hear no other; they check those that go about to controlle him or his doings: they say, If we were out of the way, he would tell us, and if so much teaching were needful, he would teach us: if these things were evil, he would not use them, for he knoweth what is what as well as the proudest of them all.

Nevertheless, Christ our Savior teacheth, that one thing is necessary, and that is, the hearing of his word: but these have learned a heerer way to heaven than Christ could show them; and more wisdom than he could teach them. But let them take heed that their wisdom be not turned into folly, and while they seek a nearer way to the kingdom of heaven, let them beware lest they never come there. For if they will learn nothing but when they list, and how they list, and of whom they list, and content themselves with a cold collation once in a month, or twice in a quarter, or four times in a year, they will hardly attain to sound knowledge and understanding in the mysteries of godliness, and they shall be as far from science as their teachers are from conscience. Other Ministers there are that so ouerlade themselves with livings, that their maintenance is greater than their labor, and are willing for single work to take double wages. They labor in one place, and receive recompense for their labor in two places. If we should see a day-laborer work diligently all the yere long with one man, and at the years end ask his hire at the hands of two men, we would account it injustice, and deny to pay him. These men that now we speak off, who are like unto Issachar compared to a strong asse couching down between two burdens, can labor but among one people, and yet they will have maintenance of two Parishes. If they object, that they divide their labors, and take pains among them both: I answer, that helpeth not the matter, forasmuch as while they are absent from them and come not among them, they take as much of them as when they preach unto them. If the day-laborer (of whom we spake before) should work half the year with them, and require of them payment for the whole year, they would not be so simple to grant it, though they would be so shameless to demand it. These are they that make the calling of the Minister, gainful rather then painful, and sildome or never think of the account which they are to make for the souls committed unto them: and yet will be sure to have the greatest maintenance that the Church, or Churches can minister unto them.

[Use 3] Lastly, as this duty and doctrine serveth for the direction of the Ministers, that as they look to be maintained, so all are not fit for this office, because they must preach in season and out of season, and not entangle themselves in matters and business of the world, that they cannot intend to give themselves to reading, to exhortation, and doctrine: so it teacheth the people to have a special care of their Ministers, that they leave them not destitute and distracted for want of necessaries. They watch for our souls, and therefore we ought to provide for their bodies. We heard before, that the Apostle willeth the Galatians to communicate of their goods to their Pastors that labor among them. Whereby it appeareth, that in those days so soon as the Gospel began to be planted, the Ministers of the word began to be neglected in their daily ministrations. For as the word it self was contemned, so were they also that preached it. If the word it self be had in price and estimation, the feet of them that bring glad tidings of peace, will be beautiful unto us, Rom. chapter 10. verse 15. And by this note we may prove our selves, whether the word be precious unto us, or not. If we regard not the Ministers in what condition they live among us but leave thē in a most poor & necessitous estate, it is evident that we make little reckoning of the word it self. Where the Ministers are vilified and basely esteemed, it is manifest that the horrible contempt of the word it self reigneth there. And this is a notable policy of the devil, whereby he vndermineth us and cunningly getteth ground of us. For he defraudeth the Ministers of their maintenance, that the Church may be spoiled of her Ministers. He knoweth well, that if the Church should want the Ministers, and have them taken out of the way, he might rage and rauen at his pleasure, kill and murder freely as he listed: as if the wolves could get the dogs that kept the flock into their hands, they would destroy the sheep without mercy. The devil is a cruel and savage wolf, the Ministers are the keepers of the flock, and watch over it: if they be any way removed, the devil will suddenly prey upon them, and make havoc of them.

Hence it is, that the Lord saith in the book of Deuteronomy▪ chap. 12.19. Take heed to thyself that thou forsake not the Levite, as long as thou livest upon the earth. And in the 14. cha. 27 verse, he repeateth this exhortation again, The Levite that is within thy gate, thou shalt not forsake him: for he hath no part nor inheritance with thee. The Levites were appointed of God to serve him, and to teach his people, that his Law might be known among them: and therefore it was great reason they should have wherewith to maintain them. A part of the inheritance belonged unto them, as they descended of the lineage of Abraham: howbeit God had put them from it, to the end they should not be combred with earthly things, neither troubled with tillage, nor distracted with any other business, but wholly give themselves to the performance of their duties. And the people also must do their duties unto them. Great is the unthankfulness of this unthankfull world. The wretched Idolaters that worship they know not what, spare no cost to maintain their Priests; whereas in the mean season, such as serve God purely in their places, are in no account, and men are content not only to set light by them, but utterly to forsake them. And what is the cause of this? surely because they reprove us for our sins, and suffer not every man to do what he listeth: which made the Apostle say, Gal. 4.16. Am I become your enemy, because I tell you the truth? We all by nature desire liberty, and cannot abide to be touched by God's word, we will not be reprov'd. We had rather maintain such as would never speak word unto us, then such preachers as exhort diligently, and rebuke sin powerfully, and discharge their duties carefully. How many are there, that had rather nourish and keep with great charge a great rabble of greasie Friars, and an whole Couent of idle Monks, to chaunt and howl all the day long, then to find one painful preacher to speak unto them as he ought to do? And how many are there if they might have their own choice, that had rather pay their tithes and give their money to ignorant persons and idle bellies, that can do nothing or will do nothing, then to faithful Pastors that are according to God's own heart, and might turn us from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto eternal life? Wherefore it is not without cause, that the Lord would not have the Ministers forsaken which publish true doctrine in his Name. Neither doth this tend to the benefit of the Ministers, either only, or principally: but to the good of the people themselves. For such as refuse to maintain those that bring home unto them the doctrine of salvation, do bereave themselves of the food of their souls, and the bread of life: which is all one as if they should go about to starve themselves for hunger. When the Ministers teach this truth of God, that maintenance is due unto them, they are censured to preach for themselves and to seek their own profit, and to plead their own causes: howbeit this serveth for the common benefit of the whole people, and the general welfare of the whole Church of God, that true religion might be maintained, obedience toward God continued, and the unity of faith established.

So then, the people, in doing some good to the Ministers, do more good to themselves: they minister to them in temporal things, but they receive at their hands spiritual and eternal things: and therefore they are not to leave them and forsake them, but to maintain them, profit them, & to comfort them of whō they receive comfort.

11 And the Lord spake unto Moses saying,

12 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him,

13 And a man lie with her carnally, and it be hid from the eyes of her husband, and be kept close, and she be defiled, and there be no witness against her, neither she be taken with the manner, 14 And the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be defiled: or if the spirit of jealousy come upon him, & he be jealous of his wife, and she be not defiled:

It is well observed by some writers, that Moses entreateth in this Chapter of removing of three impediments and hindrances that were among the people of God, one of uncleanness, another of unrighteousness, the third of suspicion. We have spoken already in the former part going before, how impurity is to be banished, and how wrong and injustice is to be purged. Now we come to consider, how evil surmises and suspicions are also to be taken away; which is done, by setting down the try all of the suspected wife, whereby the innocence of the woman is revealed, and the jealousy of the husband is removed, and the truth of the matter before hidden, is tried. Before we spake of such crimes as are open & manifest: now of that which is not certain, but only suspected: not clear in it self, but doubtful.

But first let us speak of Jealousy in general, which is the bane and poison of marriage, and maketh that sociable life, to be uncomfortable, and mingleth it with worse then gall and wormwood. Jealousy therefore is a grief of mind, arising from hence, that another is judged to enjoy that which we desire to have wholly and properly as our own, and none beside us to possess any part with us. Here then we cannot abide any community, but hate it as our enemy and the right cause of this jealousy. Or we may describe it otherwise on this manner, It is an affection proceeding from fear to have that communicated to another, which we challenge and covet to retain as peculiar and proper to our selves alone.

From hence it appeareth farther what the nature of jealousy is, to wit, that it is mixed and compounded, partly of love, partly of fear, and partly of anger. Of love, which admitteth no fellow partner in the thing he loveth. For as the king will suffer no companion to be equal unto him, or partaker with him in his kingdom: so will the husband suffer no corriuall to mate him in his love. Of fear, lest another enjoy the use of that which we cannot abide or suffer he should enjoy. Of anger, whereby it cometh to pass, that he is ready to break out to seek revenge and punishment upon him y^t hath offended him that way: as Pro 6.34. he beareth no ransom, For Jealousy is the rage of man, therefore he will not spare in the day of vengeance: he will not regard any ransom, neither will he rest content, though thou givest many gifts. For in this doth the husband suppose, the estimation of his own person, the dignity of his children, and the honor of his whole family to consist, whiles the wife keepeth the marriage-bed chaste and undefiled, and giveth no just occasion to be suspected of dishonesty and uncleanness. And on the other side, he accounteth all things in the house turned upside down, his person disgraced, his children embased, and his family turned into a stews by the false dealing, and the lewd practice of his unchaste wife. Hence it is, that Solomon saith, A virtuous woman is the crown of her husband: and contrariwise she that maketh him ashamed, is as rottenness in his bones. Wherefore God established this special Law in this place, both that false suspicion might be resisted, and that no crime (though never so closely and cunningly committed) should be vndetected. For albeit it be practiced secretly, it shall be discovered openly, according to the saying of our Savior oftentimes repeated in the Gospel, There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed: neither hid that shall not be known. Now let us come to the order of the words.

In this trial of the woman suspected of adultery, we are to consider two points: first, the setting down of the Law. Secondly, the conclusion of the whole matter. In setting down the law, we are to observe three points; first, the propounding of the cause is noted. Secondly, the determination of the cause is handled. Thirdly, the issue or event of the whole process is declared. Touching the matter or cause it is propounded in these four verses, to wit, from the 11 to the end of the 14 verse: which is twofold in one and the same point of jealousy; one, if the woman have committed adultery, from whence ariseth a just and lawful jealousy: the other, if she have not committed adultery, whence proceedeth a foolish and an evil grounded jealousy. The first point is propounded on this manner, Put the case a man have a wife that hath gone aside and deceived him, and committed fornication, and he doth not certainly know it, neither can evidently prove it, because he can produce no witness that saw her, and she will not make a voluntary confession of her fact committed. This is handled in the 11, 12, 13, and part of the 14. verse. The second is set down in this sort, Put case she have not gone astray, neither hath been defiled, which is briefly signified in the latter end of the 14. verse. In both these, whether she be guilty, or not guilty, the case is doubtful, & the husband in perplexity of the matter: and therefore in the next words that come hereafter to be considered, the Lord himself delivereth the way and means how the doubt may be dissolved, and that which is secret may be cleared and decided. Thus much touching the order.

Before we come to the doctrine that ariseth from hence, it shall not be unprofitable or any whit from our purpose to answer such [Object. 1] questions as arise out of this division. And first of all, forasmuch as nothing doth more cross the law of love and rule of charity, then to suspect evil of our neighbor, it may be demanded, to what end and purpose God giveth liberty to the husband to pursue his wife, following his corrupt humor, and suffereth him to call his wifes name and credit into question, defaming and shaming her with suspicion of adultery, when as oftentimes she is innocent? I answer, [Answer.] that God dealt with his people two ways: sometimes he commandeth that which is simply and in it self good and honest, and forbiddeth that which in it self and own nature is evil, as when he commandeth to restore, and forbiddeth a witch to live, and infinite such like precepts.

Again, sometimes he winketh at some evils that could not be avoided, as it were bearing with an inconvenience, to remedy and to prevent a mischief. To the end they might sly from the greater, he tolerateth and permitteth the lesser evil. This we see evidently in the cause of divorce, Deut. 24.1. He suffereth them to put away their wives upon private grudge and dislike, as he doth allow it simply in the case of adultery, Matth. 5.32. and 19.8.9. Not that he ever approved of it, but Christ saith it was for the hardness of their hearts, howbeit from the beginning it was not so. The like we might say of marrying many wives, a common custom among the Patriarchs and godly kings, which was as a mighty stream bearing all things before it, it was permitted but never allowed: it was practiced, but never pronounced to be lawful. Sometimes therefore God giveth laws, as Lord and God to their consciences, which did bind them forever: and sometimes as a Lawgiuer, he tolerateth that which he could not take away, as Princes do such abuses as have taken root among their subjects, and are grown to an head, so that custom is turned into another nature. For to bear with corruptions is one thing, and to remove them is another. So in this place, howsoever the jealous head of the surmising husband offendeth against God, when upon every light occasion and suspicion he accuseth his wife that is innocent of adultery; yet lest he being wayward and head-strong, should rage and rise against his wife in fury, and lay violent hands on her, and so be his own judge and executioner, it pleased God to remedy that mischief, allowing them an ordinary means, to make trial of their wives, whether they were guilty, or not guilty of unfaithfulness and falsehood toward them. In the mean season God always condemneth jealousy & suspicion arising without just causes, & forbids to receive a false accusatiō, not only against their wives, but against any their friends, neighbors, or enemies, as we shall show more afterward. And the Priest in this case, if he saw no cause of suspicion that he could approve off, no doubt, both might and did put back the husband and reject his needless trial; and therefore he is commanded, when he intendeth such a matter, to go first of all to the Priest, even as the lepers were sent to the Priest, who did pronounce them either clean or unclean, and was made a competent judge in y^e matter. So that all husbands were not altogether left to their liberty, to accuse without cause, & to try without proof, and to suspect without occasion. And albeit the same allowance be not given to the wife, to make trial of the suspected husband, yea though the spirit of jealousy come upon her: yet the husband was warned hereby that he is no less guilty in the sight of God, who would also find him out in his sin: and that he ought to deal with all meekness and moderation with his wife, as it is noted touching the Pharisees, when Christ said to them that would have the woman taken in adultery to be stoned, Let him that is without sin among you, cast the first stone at her, they which heard it, being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last: Thus much touching the first Question.

Again, others may object and say, What [Object. 2] needed this solemn means of purgation, which was to be put in practice by so many several ceremonies, some to be done by the husband, some by the wife, & some by the Priest: forasmuch as there was a nearer course, and a more ready way to bring the matter to light? For the high Priest having on his breast-plate, might in all doubtful and difficult cases whatsoever, have asked counsel of God, and given answer unto men, as Numb. 27.21. Exod. 28.30. and in the books of Samuel. This was practiced oftentimes, when the people of God were in distress, and uncertain what to do: Whereas this law of trial of the suspected wife, was not often, if at any time it was practiced. As for that which is read and found in the forged and counterfeit Gospel of James, that the blessed Virgin espoused to Joseph, had these bitter waters given unto her, and that she drank of them, and thereby cleared her self, is no better then a gross fable of some idle head, hammered in the times of darkness, and vented abroad to deceive the simple. I anwere to the objection, that the having of one means is not the taking away of another. True it is, that it is needless to be done by more w^c may be done by fewer: but repetition and iteration of moe means in God's matters is not needless. In earthly things we say commonly, that store is no sore: and that if a man have two strings to his bow, it is the better, so that in all things two are better then one. A more plentiful provision doth not hurt, but help. Howbeit, it pleased God to add this means also to diverse others, to declare how greatly he hateth and detesteth adultery, and that thereby he might terrify all women, and make them afraid to commit secret sin, through the reproach and infamy they were compelled to undergo, if they should give any suspicion of adultery unto their husbands.

[Object. 3] Lastly, the question must be asked, what is meant in this place by the spirit of jealousy, when it is said, If the spirit of jealousy come upon him, verse 14. I answer, it is an Hebrew phrase and manner of speaking, noting thereby an eager and earnest desire, a fervent and forward inclination unto anything; which are deeply rooted in their hearts. So that the Hebrews call all earnest inclinations, and passionate affections by the name of the spirit, as the spirit of lying, 1 King. 22.13. the spirit of giddiness, Isaiah 19.14. the spirit of drowsiness, Isaiah 29.10. the spirit of uncleanness, Zach. 13.2. the spirit of fornications, Hos. 14.12. the spirit of error, 1 John. 4.6. In all which places it signifieth the exceeding forwardness and wonderful proneness of man's corrupt nature unto those evils, as though the soul were wholly set upon them, and minded nothing else.

Again, by a figurative speech, it pointeth out unto us the chief author and principal cause from whence it is derived, even Satan the unclean spirit, the evil spirit, the worker of all wickedness, the first father and founder and fountain of all sin whatsoever. For even as when we read of the spirit of wisdom and meekness, the spirit of knowledge and understanding, the spirit of grace and prayer, the spirit of prophesy, of faith, of a sound mind, and such like, it signifieth not only the several effects and gifts, but the author and giver of them from whence they proceed, to wit, the holy Ghost: so likewise, to apply these things to the point and purpose we have in hand, the spirit of jealousy mentioned in this place, giveth us to understand two things: first, the swing and sway that this corrupt affection did bear in this people; as they transgressed sundry ways against their wives, both by taking many wives together, and by putting them away so soon as they displeased them, so they gave themselves exceedingly to nourish evil thoughts, suspicions, and surmises against them, as if they might use them at their own pleasures, and were not given them to be their companions, and so made two persons in one flesh.

Secondly, we learn thereby from whence jealousy cometh, to wit, from the evil spirit; the devil is the author of it, who soweth the seeds of malice, and setteth debate between a man and his wife, and disturbeth their peace and tranquility, and kindleth dissension as it were a fire burning among them, that they might pull down their house with their own hands: forasmuch as an house divided against it self cannot stand, and every kingdom divided against it self, is brought to naught. Matth. 12.25.

Wherefore, hereby they are put in mind to beware and take heed, lest by these blind and uncertain suspicions, they offend the Majesty of God, that hateth and abhorreth all false suspicions, trouble the quietness of their own family, corrupt the ordinance of marriage, and bring a perpetual slander and reproach upon themselves.

Thus much of the questions: now we come unto the doctrine.

And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man's wife go aside, &c. In these words we see God maketh a Law touching the jealousy of the husband toward the wife whom he suspecteth of adultery. And albeit this ceremony here touched be a part of the legal worship which hath no place of practice in the Church of Christ, where no such thing is permitted; and though we never read of any that used this remedy to rid himself of jealousy, & to detect his wives adultery: yet there is a moral equity in it, w^c concerneth us & all others to the end of the world: & indeed it belongeth to the observation of the seventh commandment, and of the ninth commandment, which require the chastity of the person, and the innocence of our good name. The end of the seventh commandment, is to teach, both that as God is the author of marriage, so he is the revenger of the breach of it, being the most holy covenant of all other: and that women should not pollute and prostitute themselves to be common through hope of impunity and of escaping without punishment. The scope and drift of the ninth commandment, which forbiddeth false witness-bearing, is to take order for the honor and estimation and good name of our brethren, that they be not slandered and defamed: and if of all our brethren and neighbors, much more of the wife which is the nearest neighbor. So then, God restraining such breaches and abuses, declareth evidently, that he doth not allow the jealousies that every fond or hare-braind husband conceived in those days; neither doth enact or establish this Law in favor of them, but rather in favor of the innocent wives, that they be not headily and hastily cast off without cause, and thereby a way made for more usual and more often diuorsements, which were too common already among that people.

Wherefore, he reproveth and checketh this evil spirit of tormenting jealousy, as having no good ground or warrant from God and his word. From hence we learn, that it is the part of a good and godly man, to interpret all doubtful things to the best, as much as may be. This we see practiced by Jacob, when he saw the party-coloured coat of his son Joseph stained with blood, and knew not what was become of him, he said, It is my sons coat an evil beast hath devoured him, Joseph is without doubt rent in pieces. The matter was doubtful, how he should come to his end, and very suspicious, the circumstances were to be examined: his brethren were thoroughly to be examined of the time and place, when and where they found the garment, the place was to be viewed where he is supposed and suspected to be devoured, forasmuch as some part and parcel of him would have remained. When Jezebel was eaten with dogs the skull and the feet, and the palms of her hands remained: so might somewhat of him be found out, or at least the men of that place were to be asked whether any ravenous beast haunted those quarters. But Jacob was so overcome with sorrow, that he hath the evil beasts in his own house, and yet cannot discern them, and is so carried away with credulity to believe the forged tale of his treacherous sons, that he least suspecteth where the greatest cause of suspicion was, forasmuch as he could not be ignorant that they hated him in former time. But not knowing where the fault lay, nor able to try out the fact, he enterpreteth and expoundeth all in the better part, he concludeth that surely some ravenous beast had torn him in pieces. The like we might say of Izhak the father of Jacob, when he came to him in the name and garments of his eldest brother, being doubtfull who it should be, because the voice was Jacob's voice, but the hands were the hands of Esau, in the end he concluded that it was Jacob, and so blessed him. We have many examples serving for confirmation of this truth in the New Testament. In the first Chapter of Matthew, when the virgins Mary was found to be with child by the holy Ghost, and Joseph was ignorant what to think of it being espoused unto him, he reasoned with himself that either she had committed adultery after their contract, or else fornication before the contract: in the end of after he had considered this seriously in his mind he resolveth upon the lesser, that she had committed fornication, and so belonged to another rather than to him: as Matthew 1.19. Joseph her husband being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily, to wit, that she might be given to wife to him that had accompanied with her.

In like manner after that Peter had reproved the Jews, because they had denied Christ in the presence of Pilate, preferred a vile cut-throat and murderer before him, & killed the Prince of life, whom God had raised from the dead and glorified in heaven, and set their sins in order before them: he exhorteth them to repentance, saying unto them, Now brethren, I wote, that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers.

All sin is committed either of infirmity or of obstinacy; either of settled purpose, or of frailty: either of knowledge, or of ignorance: and howsoever it be committed, it cannot be excused, because the servant that knew his Lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes, but he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes shall be beaten with few stripes, &c. Now the Apostle judgeth and persuadeth himself the best things of them, that they sinned of ignorance rather than of malice.

And in the 26 Chapter of the same book, Paul, that he might win Agrippa the king to the kingdom of God, and persuade him to become a Christian, saith unto him, O king Agrippa, believest thou the Prophets? I know that thou believest. It was uncertain, whether he would believe or not, and therefore by this rhetorical communication he judgeth the best, that he believed. All these testimonies serve to move us to the practice of this duty, that when things are doubtful and may be diversely taken, we ought to expound them with the most favorable construction, and friendly interpretation, and gentle mitigation.

This point is farther to be strengthened [Reason 1] unto us by the force of reason. First of all, it is a sign of charity not to stretch things to the uttermost: as contrariwise it betokeneth little love and much malice, when we open our mouths to speak all manner of evil of our brethren. Hence it is that the wise man saith, Prov. 10.12. Hatred stirreth up strife, but love covereth all sins.

And the Apostle teacheth as much of charity, 1 Corinth. 13, 5, 6. It doth not behave it self unseemly, it seeketh not her own, it is not easily provoked, it thinketh no evil, it rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth. If then there be any true charity in us, to seek the good, or desire the good of our brethren, we ought to testify it by this, even by judging of their minds and meanings, of their words and actions according to this rule.

Secondly, it is the rule of common equity, [Reason 2] which nature it self teacheth, that as we wish to be dealt withal, and to be done unto, so ought we to do & deal toward others. Now there is none of us all, that would willingly be expounded wrongfully, and censured uncharitably, but crave to have all things taken in the better part. We would not have our words altered, wrested, corrupted, stretched, and strained beyond our meaning, as clothe upon the tainters above measure: and therefore we ought so to behave our selves toward others. This doth Christ our Savior deliver to his disciples, Matth. 7.12. All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the Law and the Prophets. We are in this case so to deal with others, as we desire that others should deal with us: so that as the former reason was grounded upon charity, this is grounded upon equity.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, it is a sign or fruit of heavenly wisdom given unto us of God, which teacheth us how to carry our selves in our callings one toward another. This doth the Apostle James lay before us in his Epistle, chap. 3.17. The wisdom that is from above, is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy, and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy. If then, we be ready always to judge the best, to speak the best, and to think the best of things that are doubtful, we shall show our selves to have the grace of heavenly wisdom, which is a perfect guide to direct us in the parts of our life. On the other side, to carry our selves strangely and uncharitably toward our brethren, is the note of a man carried away with that wisdom, which is earthly, sensual, and devilish: which is bred beneath in the earth, savoreth of our corrupt nature, and is taught unto us by no other master then the devil.

[Use 1] Let us make use of this point to our selves. First, it teacheth, y^t to be whisperers and takers of all in the evil part, is a testimony of an evil conscience, and a token of an evil man. He that is a good man himself, doth hardly think others to be evil: he that hath a sound heart, and is a true Israelite in whom is no guile, doth not easily suspect others to be hypocrites and dissemblers. Such as come into the Lord's courts and present themselves before him, in conscience of their duty, in reverence of his Majesty, and for their increase in true piety, are with much ado drawn to believe, that others draw nigh unto God with their mouth, and honor him with their lips, and that their hearts are far from him. Such as labor above all things, to approve themselves before God, the searcher of all hearts, and to do that which they do in godly sincerity, cannot lightly be persuaded that others are so carnal, as to do all to be seen of men, and to please themselves with the foolish praise of mortal men. Contrariwise, such as are profane in heart, loose in life, filthy in talk, and every way carnal in conversation, do judge the same of others, and measure them by the deceitful rule of their own actions. This is noted as a capital evil by the Apostle, Rom. 1.29. where he joineth together maliciousness, envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity, whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, such as are without natural affection, vnplacable, and unmerciful, and showeth that such are full of all unrighteousness. Whisperers are they, that by close and secret accusations raise suspicions and surmises, and sow the seeds of strife and contention, whence is reaped too plentiful a crop of malice and mischief. They set friends together by the ears, and oftentimes as with a violent wind overthrow whole houses and cities, and turn them into dust and ashes: assuring our selves that where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work. Whatsoever they hear of others, they are ready to carry to others with a swift foot, and a corrupt tongue, and a malicious heart, to kindle the coals of hatred among men. They live by the fallings out of others, and thrive by jars, as the carrion crows do upon the carcass. If they know any occasion of anger to arise, they are at hand to turn it into wrath and malice, and to make the parties thereby to be farther from reconciliation; like to Achitophel when David and Absalom were up in arms, who by his devilish policy devised a means to cut off all hope of reconcilment and of uniting them together again. Or they are like to male-contents, that had rather live upon the spoils of others, then take pains themselves, wishing that all things were in a tumult, confusion, and combustion, that they might catch the goods belonging unto others, & holding this principle, that it is good fishing in troubled waters.

Wherefore it is a notable exhortation of the wise man, Prov. 6.16, 17, 18. 19. These six things doth the Lord hate yea seven are an abomination unto him: a proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, an heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness that speaketh lies, and him that soweth discord among brethren. Of this kind there are many several sorts: first, a relation of the bare words against the meaning, as Matth. 26.69. At the last came false witnesses, and said, This fellow said, I am able to destroy the Temple of God, and to build it in three days. Christ spake some such words, John. 2.19. but neither altogether the same, neither to the same end and purpose, because he spake of the Temple of his body.

This is a breach of the ninth commandment, the which albeit it be more cunning in the rest, yet it argueth greater malice, when for want of other matter, and better proof, we set their own words upon the rack, and stretch every joint of them out of their place.

Secondly, to open the secret sins of our neighbor to any man, especially if he commit them of infirmity; contrary to the general rule of Christ, Matthew 18. verse 15. If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother.

This is the right and ready way to gain our brother, to make his sin secret and as it were to cover it with a garment, so long as there is any hope by private exhortation and admonition to win him. To blaze abroad and to publish to the knowledge of others their frailty, is not the way to gain them, but to stir them up against us, and to harden their hearts, and to stop their ears when we speak unto them. For except it appear unto those whom we exhort or reprove, that we love them, and that our admonitions proceed from that fountain, we shall never do them any good, neither will they ever regard our words, but they will seem harsh and unpleasant unto them.

Thirdly, evil suspicions, when nothing can be done of our brother, be it never so honest or religious, but we suspect the worst of it, and speak the worst of it; whereas love is not suspicious, but hopeth all things, endureth all things, beareth all things, believeth all things, 1 Cor. 13.7. Hence it is, that the Apostle teacheth, that the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned, 1 Tim. 1.5. and in the last Chapter of that Epistle, he yoketh envy, strife, railings, and evil surmisings together, the which whosoever follow after, do know nothing concerning godliness.

Lastly, to accuse our neighbor for that which is true and certain through hatred and malice, and with a purpose to hurt and destroy (if we can) him that we accuse, and against whom we complain: as appeareth, 1 Sam. 22.9. in the example of that dogged and devilish enemy Doeg, who was appointed over the servants of Saul: he said, I saw the son of Ishai when he came to Nob, to Ahimelech the son of Ahitub, who asked counsel of the Lord for him, and gave him victuals, and the sword of Goliath: of whom David saith in one of his Psalms, Thy tongue deviseth mischiefs, like a sharp razor, working deceitfully: thou lovest evil more then good, and lying rather then to speak righteousness: thou lovest all devouring words, O thou deceitful tongue. All these particular points teach us, to beware of whispering, and construing of all things in the evil part.

[Use 2] Secondly, it condemneth all rash judgment, when we judge amiss of others, both of an evil mind, and for some evil end. Christ giveth us warning to beware of this wickedness, Matth. 7.1, 2. Judge not, that ye be not judged: for with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. And the Apostle James maketh the like exhortation, chap. 3.1.2. My brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation, for in many things we offend all. These rash and rigorous judges never regard nor consider their own offenses: they can search and sift into other men's actions, as men winnow wheat, and yet are careless of themselves. The heathen accounted it intolerable, to reprove other men when themselves are as faulty. This is no better then Pharisaiical hypocrisy. This is done diverse ways. The first is, when a man hath done good things holily, purely, and sincerely, we judge them done hypocritically, dissemblingly, and wickedly.

This judgment is a wrong judgment, and forbidden in the word of God. This was the practice of the devil toward Job, chap. 1.9. and 2.4. He was a just man, one that feared God, and eschewed evil. Satan charged him to do all hypocritically, only because God had blessed him, and made an hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he had on every side, so that his substance was increased in the land: and therefore he suggesteth, that if God would put forth his hand now, and touch all that he had, he would curse him to his face. As the devil himself dealeth, so deal the children of the devil with the faithful. He is the old serpent which deceiveth the world, and accuseth our brethren before our God day and night, Revel. 12.9.10. so also do his children that bear his image, and are transformed into his likeness. These are unjust and wrongful censurers of the deeds and actions of other men, whereof there are many in the world.

If the godly give themselves to prayer, a duty that God so often commandeth, and his children have so often practiced with great fruit and success, and would not omit or give over, though it should cost them their lives, Dan. 6.11. it is censured to be counterfeit holiness. If they be troubled more then other men, and are chastened every day, their enemies hit it in their teeth, that they are plagued for their sins. If they be afflicted in conscience, that they feel the burden of their sins pressing sore upon thē, they are judged to be mad and out of their wits. If they delight to hear the word publicly, and to be conversant in reading and searching of the Scriptures privately, they are accused to be precise: and whatsoever they do, they shall be charged to do it, not sincerely, but corruptly: not in truth, but in outward show: not from the heart, but from the mouth and lips only. This was the offense of Eli toward Hannah, he being a weak man full of infirmities, though otherwise godly and diligent in his office. For when he saw, how only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard, because she spake in her heart to God by prayer, he thought she had been drunken, and he said unto her, How long wilt thou be drunken? put away thy wine from thee. See, how ready he was to judge amiss of her action, and to call good evil. This was also the sin of Job's wife, and of his friends, they thought him to be an hollow hypocrite, and a deep dissembler, because they saw him strangely visited by so strange a visitation, Job 4.7. Thus did the wicked Jews usurp authority over the Gentiles, and censured them at their own pleasures, they said unto them, Isaiah 65.5. Stand apart, come not near me, for I am holier than thou; and yet they were grievous sinners themselves, as a smoke in God's eyes, and as fire that burneth continually.

So when the Apostles, were filled with the holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the spirit gave them utterance; others mocked them, and said, They are full of new wine, Acts 2.13. This judgment is justly condemned, being quite contrary to the rule of love, which doth interpret all things in the best part, and is in nothing suspicious: and therefore we ought not to judge wrongfully, corruptly, and maliciously of those godly actions, which we see the children of God to do. And if it shall fall out at any time (as it may fall out many times) that we be laden with the burden of such surmises and sinister suspicions of hypocrisy and a double heart; yet we are not to be daunted and dismayed by them, or to give over our hold in the faith, but know assuredly that this is no new thing, and therefore no strange matter is befallen unto us. The dearest Saints and servants of God have felt this evil, and have had experience of this mischief of the tongue. We must not look for an higher estate, or better condition, than Christ and his Apostles had. When he sought to destroy the kingdom of Satan, and cast out devils by the finger of God, they charged him to do it by the power of Satan, Matth. 12.24. It were intolerable pride and presumption, for the servant to climb higher than his Lord, or the disciple to strive to be above his Master.

The second kind of judging, is when men have committed evil things, which of themselves are worthy to be condemned, and we judge them that have so offended to be without all hope of repentance or recovery, and to be cast off forever, to be out of God's favor, and to be reprobates. This is not only to arrogate a mastership over them, but to step up into the seat and secrets of God. For who hath revealed that unto us? or who hath been of his counsel? The things revealed in the word belong unto us and to our children, but secret things to the Lord, Deut. 29.29. That this judgment is altogether forbidden, may appear both by precepts that restrain it, & by examples that condemn it. Evil men must be instructed with meekness, not condemned with rigor and rashness, proving if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him to do his will, 2 Tim. 2.25 26. Likewise the Apostle setteth down the like commandment, 1 Cor. 4.5. Judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and then shall every man have praise of God. Let us to these precepts add such examples as we find in Scripture, and out of many, select and sort out some few. Manasseh king of Israel is one of the most memorable objects of God's mercy; he was a sorcerer and coniuurer, an idolater and murderer, he made his sons pass through the fire, he dealt with a familiar spirit, and used witchcraft, he made Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to err, and to do worse then the heathen whom the Lord had destroyed before the children of Israel, 2 Chro. 33.6.9. yet when he humbled himself, and prayed unto God, he was pardoned. Mary Magdalene was a woman defamed and defiled with much sin, out of whom were cast seven devils, yet she was converted and accepted. Paul acknowledgeth himself not worthy to be called an Apostle or disciple of Christ, he had been an oppressor, a blasphemer, and a persecutor of the Church of God; yet he was received to mercy, because he did it ignorantly through unbelief, 1 Tim. 1.13. The Iailer mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles dealt very roughly with Paul and Silas, and cast them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks: but when God once touched his heart, suddenly he called for a light, and came leaping in, and trembled, saying, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? I will conclude this point with the example of the thief that was condemned for theft, and crucified with Christ, he had spent all his days in his wicked and ungodly courses, he was no better then his fellow, they had one purse and determined to fill their houses with spoil, and privily laid wait for the innocent without cause, and continued thus until the end of their lives: yet God in mercy looked upon one of them, and called him to the state of grace, as it were at the last gasp, and pulled him as a brand out of the fire, saying unto him, This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise, Luke 23.43. A man would have thought that these, at least some of them, had been desperate persons, forlorn men, without hope of repentance or likelihood of salvation: and yet behold how God that hath the hearts of all men in his own hand, turneth whom he pleaseth into the right way and when it pleaseth him, like the householder in the Gospel, in who called laborers into his vineyard at all hours of the day, Mat. 20. The meditation of these things ought to stay us from corrupt judgment, which argueth that we are destitute of true love toward our brethrē, to guide us in all our dealings with them.

The third kind of judgment is occupied about things indifferent. The first was touching good things: the second touching evil things. The first is when good men are made hypocrites, the second is when evil men are made reprobates. The first is, when good actions are made bad: the second, when bad actions are made worse then they are, as if they separated and secluded from heaven. The third is concerning indifferent things, that in themselves and their own nature are neither good nor evil. In this we offend, when men do things indifferent, which being things Lawfull may be done either in faith or without faith, either with a clean heart or an unclean: and we judge such an action to be wicked; which notwithstanding cannot be so censured, but is to be accounted good or evil according to the intention or affection of the doer.

Our Savior Christ did converse much with Publicans and sinners, to the end he might do them good by drawing them to God from the kingdom of Satan, and making them inheritors of the kingdom of his Father. A work which in all respects was most righteous and holy, yet they judged him to be a friend and faouurer of wicked men, as Luke 7.33, 34. John the Baptist came, neither eating bread, nor drinking wine, and ye say, He hath the devil: the Son of man is come, and eateth and drinketh, and ye say, Behold, a man which is a glutton, and a wine-bibber, a friend of Publican's and sinners. So when we speak lovingly and kindly, we are censured to be flatterers. Thus was David's kindness ill accepted, and worse rewarded of Hanun king of the Ammonites:

for when he sent his servants to comfort him after the death of his father, his Nobles persuaded him that he sent not his servants to show him any kindness, but to be as spies to search the city, and to seek means to overthrow it.

This kind of judgment the Apostle forbiddeth, Rom. 14.3.4. Let not him that eateth, despise him that eateth not; and let not him that eateth not, judge him that eateth, for God hath received him: who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth: yea, he shall be holden up for God is able to make him stand. Eating or not eating, is a thing indiffrent, & therefore free to do or not to do, so that it be without offense. Wherefore it is a breach of charity (which cannot judge of the secrets of the heart) to make a rent in the Church for so small a matter, as it were of a spark to kindle a great fire. Such as were strong in faith, and did eat all things without difference, knowing that they are sanctified by the word of God and prayer, did despise the weak that did not eat, and were persuaded they ought not freely without difference to eat all things: they called them to use their liberty and eat of all that is sold in the shambles, and such as refused, they laughed them to scorn as Jews by imitation not Christians by profession. On the other side, these weak ones, not instructed in the liberty that Christ had purchased, did disdain them as profane persons, as enemies of Moses, and transgressors of the Law of God and made scruple of conscience, to eat that which they accounted unclean. Thus did both sorts sin, and offend against God and their brethren.

The like we might say, touching difference of days, which we spake before of diversity of meats; This man esteemeth one day above another day, & another man counteth every day alike: let every man be fully persuaded in his mind. Thus we see, that in things indifferent, even in the Apostles times, the Church hath been oftentimes shaken, and in a manner rent and torn in pieces, like a ship that is riuen and in danger of drowning. For it hath so bitterly contended about ceremonies, that it hath been like almost to lose the substance; as if the servants in a house should wrangle so long whether it be swept clean enough, until everyone in a manner forget to do his duty. And if such contention arose while the master builders were yet alive, and the chief pillars of the house of God remained to bear up the building, and to put them to silence that sought to undermine it: alas how may we think it went with the Church, after their departure? It is needless here to remember, what a trouble and Tragedy, Victor, sometimes Bishop of Rome, stirred up in y^e Church, about the keeping of Easter, and touching unleavened bread: as men should contend and go together by the ears about the shadow of an asse, or the hair of a goat, or strive about smoke and matter of no value.

And yet this controversy occupied the heads and pens, and tongues of the learned, almost in all places where the Gospel was preached, and Christianity professed: yea, they proceeded in bitterness of spirit so far, that some were ready to excommunicate others. But we need not fetch examples so far from home. I would we had not lamentable experience of the truth hereof among our selves, these stirs and hurly-burlies remaining in remembrance, and as it were freshly bleeding before our eyes, the which everyone should carry water to quench, rather then pour oil into the fire to make the flame greater: and bring a garment to cover the nakedness of those that have raised them, rather then lay them more bare.

The peace of the Church ought to be so dear unto us, that we should buy it though at an unreasonable rate; and albeit it fly from us, we ought to pursue after it, so that it should not be forsaken through us, neither should brethren contemn or condemn one another for trifles. Let the strong yield and condescend to the weak, and this is to their praise and glory. God receiveth both the strong and weak as his children, so that they are partakers of the adoption of sons: and therefore it is a great shame and reproach to despise or despite one another, forasmuch as that dishonor returneth upon God their Master.

Let us account those as the sons of God, as the members of Christ, and as parts of the Church, which profess the faith, and join with us in the word and Sacraments, and profess the same communion of Saints. Let us not condemn another man's servant, as if we had jurisdiction and authority over him: but the strong have no power over y^e weak, nor these have no power over them; for neither of them are masters over other, both of them being servants of one common Lord and Master, who accepteth and receiveth thē for his own servants. Both of them then are another man's servants: both of them are fellow-servants, & subject alike to their Master, before whose judgment seat we must appear, Rom. 14, 10, 12. and everyone of us give an account of himself to God. Wherefore, it is an unjust thing for one servant to judge another servant, much more to condemn him. Let every man be persuaded of his work in his own heart, and do nothing with a doubtful conscience, whether it please God or not. Let the word of God be the rule of our faith, whereby his will is fully known, and sufficiently proved. Let us in all things give thanks unto God, whether we be strong or weak, young or old in the faith: and let this be the end of all our actions, and of our whole life, to wit, the glory of God. For as he is the beginning, of whom are all things: so he is the end to which all things tend and are to be referred, inasmuch as he hath made all things for himself, so that we must conclude with the Apostle; Of him, and through him, and for him are all things, to him be glory forever, Amen, Rom. 11, 36. Let us know, that as we are not to live unto our selves, so we shall not die unto our selves. We are not our own, to do what we list, for that were to live to the flesh: if we live, we must live to the Lord, that when we die, we may die to the Lord. Let us consider that it belongeth to Christ to judge of the works & consciences of others, we shall stand to be judged at the tribunal seat of this common Judge, & therefore ought not to judge one another. Let us not lay snares to entrap, and stumbling blocks to offend our brethren, and baits to entangle them, and hooks to catch them, that we may prey upon them: For woe to that man by whom the offense cometh; which is as much as to lay a stone in the way, wherewith the vnwary passengers may stumble. Let us walk by the rule of love, and take heed we hurt not our brethren, for whom Christ died: and as in the members of the body, we favor and tenderly touch that part which is weak, and if need require, bind it up and heal it: so it ought to be in the mystical body of Christ Jesus, that is, the Church; we must love, cherish, and strengthen one another, and do service one to another. Such then as grieve, vex, hurt, and damnifie one another, are destitute of charity, which is a band to knit us together. Let us not strive about things indifferent, that are neither good nor evil: the kingdom of heaven doth not stand in them, neither doth the doing or not doing of them simply please God, neither doth the salvation of the Church consist in them, according to the saying of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 8, 8, 9. Meat maketh us not acceptable to God, for neither if we eat, have we the more; neither if we eat not, have we the less: but take heed lest by any means this power of yours be an occasion of falling to them that are weak. And in the Epistle to the Romans, he saith, chap. 14, 17. The kingdom of God is not meat, nor drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the holy Ghost: and 1 Tim. 4, 8. Bodily exercise profiteth little, but godliness is profitable to all things, &c. To conclude, let us do those things that belong to peace, and beware of strife & contention; if any man list to contend about these things, we have no such custom, neither the Churches of God: let us join heart & hand together to edify the Church, as they that build an house do communicate their labors, until they have finished and made an end of their work.

But some man may say, [Objection.] Is all manner of judgment unlawful? Or is a man in all cases forbidden to judge? I answer, [Answer.] No: there are some judgments lawful, and these both are public and private.

The first is the judgment of the Magistrate, whose office is to try the lives and actions of men, that they may punish offenders, and reward them that do well. It is their duty to sing both mercy and judgment. They bear not the sword in vain, but are appointed as well for terror of evil doers, as for the praise of them that do well.

The second is the judgment of the Minister, who, in the dispensation of the word, and preaching of the Gospel, judgeth the actions of his hearers, reprovng and condemning them for their sins. Thus the unbeliever is said to be judged, 1 Cor. 14, 24. If all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all. Hence it is, that Noah a Preacher of righteousness, is said to have condemned the old world, Hebr. 11, 7. When the unbelieving Jews heard Peter preach unto them touching salvation through Christ whom they had crucified, they were pricked in their hearts, and said to him & to the rest of the Apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Felix the Governor, hearing Paul prophesy, that is, to reason of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, trembled, and was afraid to hear him any longer, being convinced by the word and his own conscience. The word of God is lively and mighty, it pierceth deep, and entereth into the thoughts, discovering y^e things that are most secret.

The third is the judgment of a Christian and faithful brother, exhorting and admonishing us for our good. This is commanded in many places of the Scripture. Moses warneth us, that we should not hate our brother in our hearts but plainly reprove him, and not suffer sin to dwell in him, or to rest upon him, or to prevail against him, Levite. 19, 17. It is our duty to stir up one another to good things. Whē an house is to be reared & set up, all the neighbors gather together, and set to their hands to help it forward; no man is idle, but everyone is busy, some by lifting, some by carrying others by ordering the whole business to finish the frame: so ought it to be among us that have a better building in hand, we are God's building, 1 Cor. 3, 9. and God's house, Heb. 3, 6. If we hold fast that confidence and rejoicing of hope unto the end: and therefore as we have a greater work in hand, so we ought to be more faithful in it, and more busy about it, exhorting one another while it is called today, lest any of us be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin, Heb. 3, 13. and considering one another, to provoke unto love & to good works, not forsaking the fellowship that we have among our selves, as the manner of some is: and so much the more careful ought we to be hereof, because we know the day of the Lord and of our account draweth near. And as we sit in judgment upon others by exhorting of thē, so we do by threatening and reprovng much more, as occasion serveth, and need requireth. Thus did John the Baptist call the Pharisees & Sadducees that came to his baptism, a generation of vipers: so Christ calleth the Scribes and Pharisees oftentimes hypocrites, desiring to do all things to be seen of men, Math. 6, devouring widows houses under a color of long prayer, tithing mint & cummin, making clean the utter side of the cup and platter, but within were full of bribery and excess, Mat. 23, 14, 23, 25. Thus he painteth them out in their colors, that others might beware of them, and none be deceived by them. So he called Herod a fox, discovering his subtlety and deep devises, that other men might be admonished to take heed of him. So then to conclude, we must understand, that the things commonly reprehended, are either doubtful, or manifest. The doubtful are not to be reprehended, whether in themselves they be true or false, worthy or not worthy of reproof, because as it was said before, love is not suspicious, but covereth the multitude of sins, and interpreteth all things to the best, and expecteth with patience until the light manifest, and time discover the things that are as yet hidden in darkness. This is to be observed in doubtful things, wherein lieth such a difficulty, that we cannot judge them without deserving to be judged our selves; and yet the ungodly and profane persons fear not to proceed against the godly in this kind. Those things which are manifestly known, are either good, or evil. A thing which is good, is to be commended of us, and nothing to be detracted from the worthiness and excellency thereof, whether it be in our friends or enemies: nay, we are to praise and laud y^e Name of God for his graces bestowed upon them, and to take them as a pattern to follow. If it be evil, we are commanded to admonish and exhort, and reprove our brother: and if he be our friend, which is as our own soul, we ought so much the rather to do it, howbeit always in love, mildness, patience, and compassion. The evil deeds which are manifest, as they must be reprehended, so they may be judged, considering that Solomon saith, Prov. 24, 24, 25. He that saith unto the wicked, Thou art righteous, him shall the people curse; Nations shall abhor him: but to them that rebuke him shall be delight, and a good blessing shall come upon them. Of such deeds as are manifestly good or evil, the Prophet Isaiah speaketh, chap. 5, 20. Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil: that put darkness for light, and light for darkness: that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter.

Whereby we do learn, how to answer the ignorant objection of foolish men, [Object.] who whē they offend by continual and common swearing, by lying, by blasphemy, by profaning of the Sabbath, by the contempt of the word, by whoredom, by drunkenness, & such like works of darkness, being reprov'd for the same by the word, & God's judgments threatened against them, are ready to say, You are not to judge of me, no more then I am to judge of you: there be many nowadays will take upon them to judge men, I am sure they do not learn that in God's book, which saith, Judge not, and ye shall not be judged: They go beyond their commission, they take upon them God's office, for he is our Judge. See here the peeuishnesse and partiality of these men, to whom it may said, that out of their own mouths they may be judged. For who are they that trespass against their brethren, & transgress against the Law of God more then they, or who sit in the seat of God proudly, & usurp a mastership and authority to judge even the thoughts of men's hearts beside themselves? Who are they that bolster out evil in themselves, in their companions, and consorts, and cannot abide that any good should be done by others, like those that would neither enter into the kingdom of heaven themselves, neither suffer them that would enter, but forbid them? Lu. 11, 52. Every tree is known by his fruit. If I see a tree bring forth good fruit, am I become a Judge, if I say, this is a good tree? And if I see evil fruit, or no fruit, do I step up into the place of God, if I say, this is an evil tree? In like manner, if a man see a common drunkard, or hear a wretched swearer, or mark a continual contemner of the Lord's day, and such as make a practice of all sin boldly, and are not ashamed; if he say, assuredly this is a naughty fellow, doth he judge, because he speaketh the truth, and telleth what he is, and warneth others to beware of him What? Shall he account him a good man, whē he seeth he is stark naught? but thē he should be under the Prophets curse, and bring a woe upon his head, because he calleth evil good, and bitter sweet; and darkness light; as we heard before. And indeed if we will speak the truth, such need not to be judged of us, inasmuch as they have given judgment of themselves, and have shown evidently what they are.

Touching the words of Christ alleged and pretended by them, Judge not, and ye shall not be judged, Math. 7, 1. they do not forbid all kind of judgment, but condemn that which is corrupt, rash, and unlawful, which one man giveth unjustly, unadvisedly, and indiscreetly of another; as when we can espy quickly, small faults in others, & are blind to discern grosser and greater in our selves. This practice of rash judgment breaketh out of themselves, as evil savors out of a rotten & corrupt body: for let a man be more careful then themselves to serve God, and to walk in his ways, they will by and by enter into the secrets of his heart (which God only knoweth) & not stick proudly & peremptorily to pronounce that they are hypocrites: whereas let a man show them out of the plain word of God, the profaneness of their hearts manifested by the grievous corruptions of their lives, & the open abominations committed by them in all their ways, they will answer readily, you ought not to judge: so that it falleth full upon them, which the Apostle alledgeth against such men, Rom. 2, 1, 2. Thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself, for thou that judgest, doest the same things: but we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth against them that commit such things.

[Use 3] Lastly, be careful of this duty to maintain the good name of our brother, which is more worth then all riches, and of greater value thē precious stones. We ought to think of everyone as well as may be, and extend our charity as far as possibly we can, albeit they be our utter enemies; forasmuch as love thinketh not evil, as the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 13, 5 and in the practice of love we are to be followers of the example of God himself, that we may thereby show our selves to be his children, who maketh his Sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. So ought we to love our enemies, to bless them that curse us, to do good to them that hate us, and to pray for them which despitefully use us and persecute us. John in his first Epistle chargeth us to love one another in deed and in truth, not in word or in tongue, or from the lips only. And Paul chargeth us to esteem of others, better then of our selves, through lowliness of mind, Phil. 2, 3.

This use is as a stock that hath many branches, and disperseth it self diverse and sundry ways. First of all, we are willed to rejoice and be glad, when the pleasant savor of our brothers good name (as a precious & sweet ointment to the nostrils) cometh abroad to his praise and commendation. To hear evil of him should no more affect us and delight us, then an evil smell which we abhor and cannot abide, but shun it as far as we can, and testify our dislike of it. We are to be glad for the credit and good estimation of our neighbor. This is a most worthy and principal fruit of the Spirit, set down by the Apostle, Gal. 5. ver. 22. The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law. And in the Epistle to the Romans, he thanketh God for them all, because their faith was spread abroad throughout the whole world, Rom. 1, 8. In like manner Jethro the father in law of Moses came unto him in the wilderness, and rejoiced for all the goodness which the Lord had done to Israel, when he had delivered them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and brought them over the red sea, Exod. 18, 9. So it ought to be with us, whensoever any good befalleth others, we ought to account it as our own; as we have our part in the profit of it, so ought we to rejoice for it. It is so in the members of our natural body, and it should likewise be so in the members of the mystical body of Christ Jesus.

Secondly, we are bound to acknowledge the good things we see in our neighbors, and to speak of the same. The Apostle warneth us, that we should speak evil of no man, Tit. 3, 2. For this is unseemly and unlawful for them that profess the faith of Christ, and the fear of God. Which reproveth those that in company of others, at common feasts & meetings make many of their brethren their tabletalk, and defame them with their evil reports. The Apostle speaking of Timothy, noteth that the brethren reported well of him. Acts 16, 2. provided always, that we allow not of the faults & offenses that are in them, as 2 Chron. 25, 2, & 27, 2. Contrary to this duty are many abuses which we are to consider; First, to hide the good things that are in them, and to smother and conceal them, as fire is raked up in the ashes, or a treasure buried in the earth, or a pearl cast into the Sea. Secondly, to forge tales to their hurt and discredit, whom the Apostle calleth inuenters of evil things, Rom. 1, verse 29. This is to have Satan in our heads. Thus do many invent wickedness in their beds, and put it in practice when they arise. These have not God in their thoughts. Thirdly, to receive and believe them (being invented by others) without ground and warrant: whereas we should not credit flying tales, & uncertain rumors and reports, without just and sufficient cause, though it be bruted and blazed never so commonly, confidently, and constantly. When a fame ariseth upon one man's report and relation, or peradventure more, it may proceed from an evil mind, or some private grudge, or hatred of his person, or dislike of his profession, or other secret cause; and therefore it ought to move us to see farther, & to search deeper into the cause, before we believe the matter, as Exod. 23.1. Thou shalt not raise a false report: put not thy hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness. To this purpose David said to Saul, Wherefore givest thou an ear to men's words, that say, behold, David seeketh evil against thee? Such men have the devil in their hearts that believe, and in their ears that hear with delight such slanderous words.

Thirdly, to spread abroad lying and flying tales, invented, heard, and believed. Thus one evil draweth forward another, and maketh no end until all be evil: and one mischief followeth in the neck of another, & is fruitful in begetting children like unto it self. This sin is made the more grievous & heinous, when we hear tales and taunts begun and furthered by others, and our selves add somewhat of our own, as same for the most part increaseth by going, & every foot getteth new strength; as we see, 2 Sam. 13, ver. 32. When Absalom had encouraged his servants to kill Amnon his brother, because he had defiled and deflowered his sister Tamar; tidings by and by came to David, saying, Absalom hath slain all the Kings sons, and there is not one of them left. See herein our great corruption, and take notice of it, and seek to redress and repress it every day more and more. We are ready to detract from our brethren in good things, and contrariwise to add unto them, and to ouerlade them with evil things. Thus we will seem to know more of them, and to see farther into them, thē they do themselves. Wherefore Moses delivereth this as a warning unto us, Levite. 19, 16. Thou shalt not go up and down as a tale-bearer among thy people: neither shalt thou stand against the blood of thy neighbor: I am the Lord. The devil is in the tongues of those that tell these tales, and in their feet that walk up and down with thē from place to place, from person to person, & from house to house. For this cause Solomon saith, Pro. 26, 20. Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out: so where there is no talebearer, the strife ceaseth.

The third branch of the use is this, that we are bound to keep secret the offense of our neighbor, and not to blaze it abroad, if by private admonition he may be won. So dealt Joseph with Mary, when he perceived that she was with child, Math. 1, 19. He would not make her a public example. But it may be objected, [Objection.] that by this means we shall make our selves partakers of other men's sins. I answer, [Answer.] no man must flatter another in evil, for thereby he hurteth his soul, and hardeneth his heart. Solomon saith, Prov. 27, 6. Faithful are the wounds of a friend, but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful. This is a grievous sin in any, but more grievous in the Minister, and doth the greatest harm. Hereupon the Apostle speaketh of himself and the rest of the Ministers, 1 Thess. 2. We used not at any time flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloak of covetousness, God is witness. And in another Epistle, writing of such as caused division and offenses, contrary to the doctrine of Christ, he saith, They that are such, serve not the Lord, but their own belly, and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple, Rom. 16, 18. Of such also the Lord complaineth by his Prophet, Ier. 6, 14. They have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, peace, peace, when there is no peace. So then, we must know that we make our selves accessories to other men's sins, except we admonish them; for albeit we are to conceal their imperfections, yet we are not to abstain from admonitions. If any be fallen through infirmity, they that are spiritual must restore such a one by the spirit of meekness, considering themselves, lest they also be tempted. If any man do err from the faith, we must labor his conversion, assuring our selves, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins, I am. 5, 19, 20. It is our duty therefore to cover their frailties, while there is hope of amendment: but if by this means the sin concealed be not reformed and repented of, we are bound to proceed farther, even in love and charity to declare it and make it known to those that may correct the persons, and amend the sins. So did Joseph deal toward his brethren, Gen. 37, 2. He brought unto his father their evil report. And Christ saith, If he hear not thee, take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word may be established. Mat. 18, 16.

15. Then shall the man bring his wife unto the Priest, and he shall bring her offering for her, the tenth part of an Ephah of barley meal: he shall pour no oil upon it, nor put frankincense thereon, for it is an offering of jealousy, an offering of memorial, bringing iniquity to remembrance.

16. And the Priest shall bring her near, and set her before the Lord.

17. And the Priest shall take holy water in an earthen vessel, and of the dust that is in the floor of the Tabernacle, the Priest shall take it, and put it into the water.

18. And the Priest shall set the woman before the Lord, and uncover the woman's head, and put the offering of memorial in her hands, which is the jealousy offering: and the Priest shall have in his hand the bitter water that causeth the curse.

Hitherto we have spoken of the allegation or propounding of the cause which is put in the former words. Now we must go forward to see the proceeding in it, how it is decided and determined, whereby it cometh to pass, that the same which before was doubtful, unknown, and uncertain, to wit, whether the woman were defiled or not, now becometh plain and manifest. That which from the beginning, was known only unto God, and the persons themselves that sinned or else are suspected to have sinned, is made known to others, both to the Priest, and to the whole Congregation. This is done two ways; first, by setting down such things as go before the trial: secondly, by adding such things as are joined more nearly with it. The things going before are of two sorts, to wit, the works or actions that are used, and then the words that are spoken. The actions used, are in this diuisio•; the words of execration that are uttered, are to be considered afterward. These works that are commanded and are here in order rehearsed in the text, do concern either the duties of the husband, or of the Priest to, whom she was brought. First, the husband must bring his suspected wife to the Priest with an offering, to wit, the tenth part of an Ephah of barley meal, that is, an Omer, as appeareth, Exod. 16, 36. but he is charged to pour no oil upon it, nor to put any frankincense to it, forasmuch as it is an offering of jealousy, and bringeth iniquity to remembrance, either committed, or supposed and suspected to be committed.

Before we proceed any farther, we are from hence to answer sundry questions that may be [Question 1] asked and demanded in these words. For wherefore is the husband charged both to accompany and bring his wife, and to set her before the Priest, that trial might be made of her: and not rather some other man? I answer, first because he supposeth himself to be injured, and no man else; and therefore seeing it most concerneth him, it is fittest to be done by him. Or if he be not wronged, he wrongeth his wife by needless suspicions. Besides, he was to be an eye-witness, either of her innocence, or of her guiltiness, that he might esteem of her accordingly, and know where the fault resteth, in himself, or in his wife. Lastly, it behooveth that the people of God be free, not only from crime, but from suspicion of crime, and to abstain not only from evil, but from all appearance of evil, 1 Thess. 5.22. as we shall show more at large afterward.

[Question 2] Again, it may be asked, why he bringeth barley meal rather than other, and why without oil and incense? I answer▪ is was an offering of the lowest and meanest grain, used of the poorest of the people, forasmuch as this was a sign that should put the woman in mind to humble her self, being now brought by her husband, not only into the presence of the Priest, but into the presence of y^e Lord himself. It must be offered without oil and frankincense, because they have no affinity or concord with this matter, neither was this offering of the nature of others. Oil did signify the graces of God's Spirit, and therefore it is said that Christ was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows, Psal. 45, 7. Heb. 1, 9. Psal. 133, 2. Incense was a sign of sweet savor, and delight that we should take in the service of God, and of God's acceptance of his gifts, and our duty performed unto him in his Son Christ. Psal. 141, 2. where the Prophet saith, Let my prayer be directed in thy sight, as incense, and the lifting up of my hands, as the evening sacrifice: so that neither of them did accord or agree with this oblation, wherein there was no gladness nor joyfulness of heart, forasmuch as the cause or original of it was sadness, pensiveness, and discontentment. And this is the reason rendered by Moses himself, verse 15. For it is an offering of jealousy, not an offering that they could go unto with alacrity and cheerfulness. For wheresoever there is either a party suspecting, or a party suspected, there can be nothing but fear, sorrow, care, and a train of such like tormenting affections.

Thirdly, here is mention made of the tenth [Question 3] part of an Ephah. The question hereupon may be asked, what the Epha was, a measure much used, and oftentimes mentioned in the Old Testament, both in the Law and the Prophets? I answer, [Answer.] the first place that mention is made of it (to my remembrance) is at the gathering of Manna, when the people were in the wilderness, where it is said, that every man was stinted, and had an Omer for his allowance, and Moses addeth in the end. that an Omer is the tenth part of an Ephah. If then we learn what an Omer was, we may quickly, easily, and readily know what the Ephah was, to wit, ten times so much: If we follow the account and estimate that some of the Rabbin's make, which seemeth to be the most sound and most certain, we may hold, that the Omer maketh just three pintes of our alemeasure: so that the Ephah by this reckoning containeth near half of our bushel, not full out four gallons. For thus doth Rabbi Shelomo take the computation, as we may read in the learned and laborious commentary set out upon that book;

The Ephah containeth three of the measures called Seah.

Every Seah held six of the measures called Cabi.

Every Cabi held so much as 24. Egges.

So then the Omer being the tenth part of the Ephah, containeth 24. Egges, which maketh just three pintes of ale-measure: and as the Omer is three pintes of our ale-measure, so the Epha being ten times so much, containeth almost half of our bushel. Neither may this seem strange, or against that which we read in the book of Ruth, that she gleaned, & gathered every day an Ephah of barley, and carried it home to her mother; but rather strengtheneth and confirmeth that which hath been said: for as it was not a burden too great for a woman to bear, so it was not a measure too great for a woman to gather; many in our days sometimes using to do as much, who have not that extraordinary favor shown unto them, which she had, albeit she were a stranger. By all this that hath been spoken, we may easily see and perceive, that this tenth part of the Ephah here mentioned, (which was also offered) amounted to three pintes of barley flour of our ale-measure. I am not ignorant that many enlarge these measures much more, and in a manner double the account that I have followed, but this seemeth to be the truer computation: neither will we contend with any in a matter of no higher nature; let the Reader follow that which carrieth greatest show of reason. And thus much of the questions arising out of the first point.

Secondly, having now declared what the husband did, we come to show in the next place, what the Priest did: he must bring her near which is suspected of adultery, and set her before the Lord, that is, before the Altar of burnt offerings, standing within the Tabernacle, to the end she should consider, that she stood as it were ready to hold up her hand at the bar of God's judgment seat, where and when she should not escape, if so be she were faulty and guilty of that crime. He taketh holy water in an earthen vessel, and dust from the floor of the Tabernacle, and putteth it into the water, so that they were mingled together: Then he vncouereth her head, putteth the offering into her hand, and holdeth the bitter water in his hand, that causeth the curse.

In this part of the division containing the [Question 1] actions of the Priest, sundry questions are to be considered and dissolved. As first, whence the Priest had this water here mentioned? From what place did he take it? I answer, [Answer.] either it was the water of separation, sprinkled with the ashes of the red heifer, so called, because it was applied unto thē, which for their uncleanness were separated from the Congregation, to the end that being washed and cleansed with it, they might be received again into the host: for which cause it is also named the water of sin, of which we read at large afterward, Numb. 19. or else it must be water taken out of the brazen laver, wherewith the Priests used to wash themselves before they ministered in the Tabernacle. And indeed many understand it of the former. But that was the water used to purge and cleanse, as we noted before, which hath no use in this place, forasmuch as the woman should after a sort be reputed as guilty, and be condemned of the crime, whereof she was suspected & accused, as if it were to be purged by it; which were to condemn the person, before the fact be proved, a thing that cannot be practiced without injustice. This then is the difference between those waters, that was to purge, this is to discover. Forasmuch therefore as it could not be that water, it followeth, that it was the water which was set in the Tabernacle, and taken out of the brazen laver appointed for the Priests to wash withal.

[Question 2] Secondly, it would be known, why this water was called holy? Was there any purity or holiness in it? Or was it better then any other? Or had it any secret force in it to make any man holy? I answer, [Answer.] it was so called, not in regard of the substance of it, or of any natural strength it had in it, but in regard of the use, because it was appointed and set apart to an holy use, as the water and washing in Jordan, cleansed Naaman, and the pool of Siloam healed the diseased. Thus the instruments of the Tabernacle, the Ark, the Shew-bread, the Candlestick, the Lamps, and the rest of the vessels used in the service of God, were all of them consecrated and hallowed, not in regard of the matter whereof they consisted, neither in regard of the form after which they were fashioned, because they had the one from nature, the other frō art: but in respect of God's ordinance that had separated them to an holy purpose. So we see in the New Testament, whē Christ instituted his last Supper, and thereby commanded his Church to keep a perpetual memory of his death and passion until his coming again, the bread and wine that he set apart to that purpose, are said to be blessed; & Paul calleth it, the cup of blessing; not that they have any holiness inherent and included in them, or any power to sanctify all the comers and communicants that do receive them, for then no man should eat of that bread, or drink of that cup unworthily, nor make himself guilty of the body and blood of Christ: whereas the Apostle teacheth, 1 Cor. 11, 29. that whosoever eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own damnation, not discerning the Lord's body. And the Church of the Corinthians was generally chastened of the Lord for this abuse & contempt, as he showeth in the same place, For this cause many are weak and sickely among you, and many sleep. It remaineth therefore, that these outward elements are holy, only in regard of God's ordinance and our use, and sanctified to them that come aright prepared unto them. So is it touching the water mentioned in this place, it is called indeed holy water, howbeit not in regard of any holiness that was in it, but partly in regard of the use to which it was applied; partly in regard of the person by which it was used, partly in regard of the vessel into which it was poured, and partly in regard of the Tabernacle, in which it was placed. Touching this holy water, we shall have occasion to speak more in the 18. chap. of this book, and to declare how it was and is abused in the Church of Rome, partly to drive away devils, and partly to wash away sins: and therefore we will defer the farther handling of it until we come to that place.

Thirdly, the question may be asked, why [Question 3] these waters ate called bitter waters? Was it because of the taste of them, that they were like the waters of Marah, so that the people could not drink of them? Exod. 15, 23. or those naughty waters and unwholesome, which Elisha healed? 2 Kings 2, 22. I answer, [Answer.] they are not so called in regard of any property y^t was in them, for they were as other waters: but in regard of the effect, because that when once they were drunk, they brought to the womā that was polluted and defiled, a curse, and a cruel death, and an extraordinary judgment, as it followeth hereafter. For if she did undergo all these works, and proceeded in them unto the end, and then was found guilty, it argued great impenitency and hardness of heart, and in a manner open apostasy and impiety, not much inferior to Atheism, as if there were no God at all, or at least no God that was able to find her out in her sin; and therefore her punishment was more strange, and not according to the ordinary visitation of others, so that the unchaste, woman was made a woeful and miserable spectacle of God's heavy wrath.

As the tree forbidden to Adam in the garden was called the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, not as though it were endued with reason to know good and evil, nor as though by eating of it, it could give to our first parents the use of reason and freewill, neither yet had it this name of the lying promise of getting knowledge, whereby the old serpent deceived the woman, Gen, 3.5. forasmuch as God called it so, before the communication that passed between them: but of the event, which God (by giving this name) signified should follow, if man did not abstain from it: for thereby he should know by woeful experience, what great difference is, between the good of obedience, and the evil of disobedience: and should prove to his great hurt and loss, how great good he had forfeited, and contrariwise how great evil he had purchased, and drawn not only upon himself, but upon his posterity, insomuch that he as it were from an high top or tower of happiness, had plunged himself into a deep pit of all misery and wretchedness.

[Question 4] Fourthly, wherefore is the Priest to take the holy water, and put it into an earthen vessel, and not of any other matter or metal? The answer it, because it did belong and was employed in bringing uncleanness to light, if any were committed: not in any holy thing, and therefore God would have no monument to remain of it, but the remembrance to be forgotten and put out of mind, so that after the trial made, and the use of it ended, it was broken as we read in cases much lesser; as Levite. 6.28. and 11.33. and 15.12. The vessel wherein the sin offering is sodden, shall be broken: but if it were sodden in a brazen pot, it was only scoured and rinsed in water. If the earthen vessel touched any unclean beast, it was to be broken: and if he touch it that hath any issue, it must be broken.

[Question 5] Fifthly, why was the Priest to take of the dust that is in the floor of the Tabernacle, and then put it into the water, as if they made Lye? Here we are to consider two things, the dust that was taken, and the holy place from whence it was taken. As it is dust of the feet, it is base and vile; as it was taken from the Tabernacle, it was holy and pure: both these were needful in this business. For the dust shown the matter to be foul, filthy, and unclean which was in question and controversy: and the place appointed had relation to the sacred action, to wit, an heavenly adjuration, whereby the woman suspected was caused to swear, that so the issue and event of the whole matter might be acknowledged and received as coming from God's determination.

Sixthly, why did the Priest uncover the woman's [Question 6] head, which seemeth to be unseemly, and against the law of nature, 1 Corinth. 11. doing that unto her which she might not do unto herself? seeing the woman ought to have a covering on her head, in sign she is under the power and protection of her husband, and that it is a shame for her to be without this covering? [Answer.] The cause is not as many suppose, to shame her and bring her to public infamy and open reproach, as if the band of marriage were broken; but because she standeth now upon her purgation, and cometh to be tried whether she be faulty or not: whereas if that were true, she should be condemned before she were convicted and found guilty.

But the reasons were two especially; first, by this gesture the woman, being to swear and purge her self by oath, was as it were for the time present freed from the subjection of her husband, and the matter was as it were for a time held in suspense, whether she were his wife or not; and she had the reins of authority put into her own hands that she might swear, to the ende that being cleared and acquitted, she might cover her head again, and so be restored unto her husband, that ever after he might be the veil of her eyes, and the defense of her person from infamy and injury: or if it fell out otherwise she might undergo the punishment and reward of her offense, and the judgment of God. For while she was suspected, it was very doubtful whether she were her husbands, or not.

Secondly, by this and other ceremonies so solemnly acted, it might be perceived with what mind, with what boldness, and with what constancy she entered into this action. Hence came the proverb 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , to do anything with bare heads, that is, openly without all shame. Such as attempted any shameful act, were wont to cover their heads, as we see in Tamar, Genesis, chapter 38. verse 14. She covered her self with a veil, and wrapped her self, and sate down in Pethaenaim, which is by the way to Timnah, &c. when she went about an ungodly and unclean action: those therefore that did not so, were accounted impudent, and past all shame.

Lastly, wherefore was the woman to hold [Question 7] the offering in her own hands, whilst the Priest did hold the water of bitterness? The reason is, because both the woman and the Priest stood before the LORD; [Answer.] she as the party accused, he as the Minister of GOD to attend the issue. She stood to be judged, he to be the instrument of the judgment. She was to come unto judgment, he to bring her unto judgment. Thus we have run over the principal questions that were to be touched, in handling whereof, I have followed the judgment of the learned, who have discussed and resolved these doubts and difficulties before me. Now we are to proceed in order to the doctrine arising from hence.

[Verse 15.16. Then shall the man bring his wife unto the Priest, &c.] We see in these words, that the man is to bring his suspected wife to the place and means of her trial. If everyone that was suspected might be put away, many husbands not loving, but growing weary of their wives, would readily entertain any the least flying report, and thereupon take occasion to be diuorsed from them. Wherefore, to the end that everyone suspected, should not by and by be condemned, the Lord ordaineth, that he should bring his wife to the Priest, and before him undergo such trial as is appointed for her. We learn from hence, that it is God's ordinance, that no innocent person should be oppressed in judgment, and none at the private pleasure of any ought to be condemned before their trial. Every person must hold up his hand at the bar before he be pronounced guilty. This appeareth plainly in the Law of Moses, decreeing against idolatrous cities; if the children of Belial have withdrawn the inhabitants of their city, saying, Let us go and serve other gods which ye have not known, Then shalt thou enquire and make search, and ask diligently: and behold▪ if it be truth, and the thing certain, that such abomination is wrought among you, thou shalt surely smite the inhabitants of that city, with the edge of the sword, destroying it utterly and all that is therein, &c. Where we see, that in the matter of idolatry, which God above many other sins abhorreth as that which goeth nearest to his heart, and as it were pierceth into the very marrow of his worship and service, he would not have every suspicion to be taken, or every report to be received, but he will have the matter examined, and the truth tried out and searched to the full, before any process be made out against them. Hence it is, that Solomon complaineth of the contrary course oftentimes observed, Eccles. 7.15. All things have I seen in the days of my vanity: there is a just man that perisheth in his righteousness, and there is a wicked man that prolongeth his life in his wickedness.

To this purpose speaketh the Apostle James, chap. 5.5.6. against the abuse of their power in rich men: Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton: ye have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter: ye have condemned and killed the just, and he doth not resist you. Thus we set it is no new thing to see innocence it self trodden under foot, and innocent persons condemned. The Apostle Peter setting down the duties of Magistrates, willeth those to whom he wrote, to submit themselves to every ordinance of man, for the Lord's sake, whether it be to the king as supreme, or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him, for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well. So that it is the ordinance of God, that evil doers should be punished, and that such as do well, should be commended and rewarded: and therefore no innocent person ought to be discountenanced or put to death.

This truth is strengthened unto us many [Reason 1] ways. First, by example, which is beyond all comparison and exception: for no man may compare with him: no man dare except against him: I mean the example of God himself, who goeth before us in the practice hereof, that we should follow him in this duty. Before he brought upon the world confusion of tongues, he is said to go down among them to see their fact, Gen. 11.6. Thus he dealt with Adam before he pronounced him guilty, and denounced judgment upon him, he called unto him, Adam, Where art thou? he examined him, and asked him farther, Whether he had eaten of the fruit of the tree in the mids of the garden, of which he had said, Thou shalt not eat thereof, lest thou die. In like manner he dealt with Cain, chap. 4.9.10. before he pronounced him cursed from the earth, which opened her mouth to receive his brothers blood from his hand, and that he should be a vagabond and runagate, first he examineth him, Where is Abel thy brother? then he endighteth and convinceth him, What hast thou done? the voice of thy brothers blood crieth unto me for vengeance. So in the eighteen chapter of the same book, before he destroyed Sodom and Gomorrhah with fire and brimstone from heaven, he said to Abraham, Gen. 18.20, 21. Behold, the cry of Sodom and Gomorrhah is great, and because their sin is very grievous, I will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it which is come unto me: and if not, I will know. Whereby he would instruct us, that before we enter into judgment with any person, or pronounce sentence upon any people, he first taketh good consideration of the fact which causeth his punishment. So ought it to be with everyone of us, we must lay before us this example, if we would be the children of our heavenly Father.

Secondly, it is the ende of all Magistracy, [Reason 2] to protect and countenance the Godly, but to root out and destroy the ungodly: to be a praise and protection to the one, but a terror and fear to the other, as Romans chapter 13. verse 3. Magistrates are not to be feared for good works, but for evil: wilt thou then be without fear of the power? Do well: so shalt thou have praise of the same, &c.

After that Jehoshaphat had been reproved by the Prophet, he called the people again to the honoring of the Lord; he set Judges in the Land throughout the cities of Judah, and said unto them: Take heed what ye do, for ye execute not the judgment of man, but of the Lord: and he will be with you in the judgment: wherefore now, let the fear of the Lord be upon you, take heed and do it, for there is no iniquity with the Lord our God, neither respect of persons, nor receiving of reward. 2 Chron. 19, 6, 7. He would not have the stronger to oppress the weaker, and the high to overbear the low, and the rich to eat up the poor, like the greater fish that devour the less, but that everyone should receive according unto his works, whether good or evil.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, it is an abomination to God, for any to oppress the innocent, and as great a sin as to justify the wicked. We ought none of us to do that which is abominable in the sight of God, the which he greatly abhorreth. A Judge may offend two ways, both by oppressing the innocent, and by delivering the guilty person: by pronouncing the transgressor righteous, and the righteous man a transgressor. This is set down, Prov. 17, verse 15. He that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the just, even they both are abomination unto the Lord. Such a one spareth the wolf, and hurteth the lambes: turneth the edge of the sword upon the godly, and the back of it toward the wicked and ungodly.

[Reason 4] Fourthly, God would have no man put to death without witnesses. For wherefore doth he often establish this in the Law, that the witnesses shall come face to face, & be heard, but that no man should perish being innocent? Wherefore doth he ordain that one only witness shall not be taken as sufficient, but that he would have the cause cleared by more witnesses? This is the decree of God, Deut. 17, verse 6. At the mouth of two or three witnesses, shall he that is worthy of death, die: but at the mouth of one witness shall he not die. He will not by any means have innocent blood shed.

[Reason 5] Fifthly, innocent blood crieth to heaven for vengeance, and shall not suffer him that sheddeth it to escape. It is one of the crying sins, as we shown before in this chapter, which ascend up and enter into the ears of the Lord of hosts. There is indeed no sin so little, but cometh up in remembrance before him against whom it is committed: his eyes see, and his ears hear all the works of men, which are all naked and open before his eyes, and nothing kept from his knowledge: nevertheless, to note out the horror and heinousness of some sins in comparison of others, the Scripture teacheth, that they cry unto the Lord. Moses, to show the greatness of Caines sin, committed against his natural brother, bringeth in God speaking unto him, Behold, the voice of thy brothers blood crieth unto me: and to show the barbarous cruelty and inhumanity of the vexing and exacting Egyptians, whereby they overcharged and overburdened the people of God, he saith to Moses, I have seen, I have seen the oppression of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry, because of their Task-masters. Exod. chap. 2, verse 9. Thus also he speaketh to Samuel at another time of their oppression by the Philistines, I have looked upon my people, and their cry is come unto me, 1 Sam. chap. 9, verse 16. Thus God heareth the cry of the afflicted, Job, chap. 34, verse 28. They have caused the voice of the poor to come unto him, and he hath heard the cry of the afflicted. This is the reason urged by the Lord himself, Exod. chap. 23, verse 7. And Jeremiah protesteth and profeseth as much to the face of his enemies and persecutors that sought his destruction, chapter 26, verse 14, 15. As for me, behold I am in your hands, do with me as ye think good and right: but know ye for certain, that if ye put me to death, ye shall surely bring innocent blood upon yourselves, and upon this City, and upon the inhabitants thereof; for of a truth the Lord hath sent me unto you, to speak all these words in your ears.

Thus we see, how God showeth himself an enemy against all wrong judgments, and he will not suffer them to escape unpunished, but will enter into judgment with such partial and corrupt Judges.

The uses hereof are to be marked diligently [Use 1] of us. First, this serveth to reprove all rashness, headinesse, and heedlessness of such as make haste to inflict punishment before an exact knowledge of the fact and fault. Such are no better then cruel wolves, that seek and suck the blood of the innocent lambes. This was the sin of wicked Jezebel, that caused Naboth to be stoned to death, 1, Kings 21.

We read in the Acts of the Apostles, how the chief Chaptaine commanded that Paul should be scourged, that he might know wherefore they cried so against him. Acts 22, verse 24. Here is a preposterous course, to punish first, and to enquire of the fault afterward: so that the punishment shall be certain, whiles the offense is uncertain. But this is the lot, and ever hath been of God's children; they are punished here oftentimes as malefactors and evil doers, and their enemies both rage and rush most furiously upon them that do possess their souls with patience, and do not by violence resist against them. They are more hungry then Bears, more merciless then Tigers, more ravenous then Wolves, more greedy then Lions, more fierce then dogs against them; they show no mercy, and they extend no compassion at all toward them.

They hate them in their hearts, they slander them with their tongues, they smite thē with their fists, they grin and grind their teeth at them, they nod at them with their heads, they circumvent them by fraud, they oppress thē with sorrow, they take oftentimes their lives from them. Thus did the persecutors deal with Joseph, with Jeremiah, with David, with Daniel, with Paul, with Silas, with John the Baptist, with Stephen, with James, with Peter, and many others. But God will in the end make their innocence known, and the justice of their cause manifest to all men. It is noted by the Evangelist touching Pilate, that albeit he confessed he found no fault at all in Christ, yet he would scourge him & let him go. He was the Judge, yet by his own mouth he may be judged himself, that adjudged him worthy to be scourged that was unworthy to receive a stripe, in whom he could find nothing blame worthy. He called together the high Priests, and the Rulers, and people, and said unto them, Ye have brought this man unto me, as one that perverted the people; and behold, I have examined him before you, and have found no fault in this man, of those things whereof ye accuse him: no, nor yet Herod, for I sent you to him, and loe, nothing worthy of death is done of him; I will therefore chastise him, and let him loose. Luke 23, 14, 15, 16.

And as it befell the Master, so the lotte fell unto the servants, that they might drink of the cup that he drank off, and be baptized with the baptism wherewith he was baptized. For the Apostles were diligent in preaching Christ, and teaching in his Name, so that their enemies were not able to withstand the Spirit of God that spake in them; and albeit they oftentimes examined them, yet their best arguments, and chiefest reasons, and strongest motives to put them unto silence, were beatings, scourgings, threatenings, and imprisonments, for otherwise they were not able to deal against them.

Hence it is, that when Gamaliel exhorted them to take heed to themselves, what they intended to do touching those men, to refrain from them, and to let them alone; If this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught: but if it be of God, ye cannot destroy it, lest ye be found even fighters against God. They agreed unto him, and left off their consultation of killing them and putting them to death: and albeit they could not convince them of error, neither were able to lay false doctrine to their charges, yet they suffered rebuke, and were beaten for the Name of Christ.

Thus do the enemies of God deal in all ages with the godly; they hate them for no other cause, but because they follow goodness, Psal. 38. and will not follow them into all excess of riot, 1 Pet. 4. They can lay nothing to their charge, and yet they think them worthy of punishment. They can accuse them of no crime, and yet they cease not to accuse them. They are not ashamed to cry out upon them, and to speak all manner of evil against them; and yet when they have devised what mischief they can against thē, broached what slanders they can, and uttered all their malice, the greatest fault that they can find in them, is this, that they serve God in the sincerity of their hearts, and labor to please him with uprightness of life. When the enemies of Daniel sought occasion against him to bring him out of favor with the King, and into danger of his life, they could find no matter against him in the affairs of the kingdom, albeit they desired nothing more: so that when after all searching and watching of him, they were at their wits end, in the end they concluded thus, We shall not find any occasion against this Daniel, except we find it against him, concerning the Law of his God. Dan. 6, verse 5. This was the heinous crime that they laid to his charge, as if he had committed felony or treason, that he prayed to God, and made his petition unto him. verse 13.

Thus fareth it with all those that are the worshippers of the true God, and make conscience of their ways, the wicked wretches of this world revile them and make hue and cry against them, as if they were some great malefactors, and had committed somewhat worthy of death: and yet when all cometh to the upshot, what hath the righteous done? or what matter is it that they have against them? Surely no more then the Presidents and Princes had against Daniel, the cause they have against them, is concerning the Law of their God: they cannot abide them, because they are too precise in keeping the Sabbath: they will not swear and blaspheme the Name of God: they will not drink and be drunk with them: they will not run riot, and play the good fellows with them: they are never well but when they are reading, or praying, or reasoning and conferring of the ways of God: they are always reproving us, and finding fault with us for one thing or other, I think we shall do nothing for them shortly.

To be short, they deal with the faithful, as Ahab spake concerning Michaiah, 1 Kin. 22, verse 8. There is one man by whom we may enquire of the Lord, but I hate him, for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil. But did he not speak the truth? the King did not, nor could not charge him with uttering lies. He prophesied evil unto thee, O Ahab, because thou wast evil: if thou hadst been good, he would have spoken good unto thee. And this is the cause why the ungodly hate the godly.

If then we be thus dealt withal at any time, let it not discourage us, but therein let us rejoice, because we are made like unto the Prophets that were before us, we are made like unto the Apostles, nay we are made conformable unto our Savior Christ himself. We must not look it should go better with us, then it did with them: forasmuch as the world will always be like it self, and unlike to them.

Secondly, no man is to be condemned upon [Use 2] suspicion only, or upon presumption, or bare surmise, or another man's accusation: for if it were enough to be accused, innocence it self cannot escape, and the most innocent shall be soonest made away. True it is, the godly must give no just cause to be evil spoken off▪ but abstain from all appearance of evil, and cut off occasions from thē that seek occasions: howbeit, whether occasion be given or not, every man may suspect what they list, and how far they list, and of whom they list, and who can say against them? So that it is not enough to condemn a man or to account him guilty, to be suspected. Some have such jealous heads and unsettled brains, that they will make occasions of suspicion, which are no occasions. Suspicion is in another man's heart or head, & therefore we cannot always avoid suspicion, except we had the government of their hearts and heads, the which themselves evermore have not. We must be careful to avoid the fault, though we cannot the fame: we must take heed of the sin, though we can prevent the suspicion. The fault and offense is in our selves, suspicion is in another. Even as honor is in him that honoreth, not in him that is honored; and as contempt is in him that contemneth, not in him that is contemned, (forasmuch as it lieth not in our power, to be honored, or to be despised) so it is with suspicion, it hath place in the mind of another, and it lieth not in our choice, whether we will be suspected, or not, no more thē it doth in him that is despised, who would willingly be honored. The brethren of Joseph were suspected to be spies, and to come to see the weakness of the Land, Gen. 42, 9. True it is, he dissembled with them, & concealed himself from them: but if indeed he had so conceived or rather misconceiued and misjudged of thē, who could hinder or help it? or how could they prevent or redress it; as it fell out with the messengers of David, that he sent to Hanun the son of Nahash King of Ammon: for his Princes said unto him, Thinkest thou that David doth honor thy father, that he hath sent comforters unto thee? Hath he not rather sent his servants unto thee, to search the City, and to spy it out, and to overthrow it? This they suspected, & returned evil for good. These messengers behaved themselves uprightly in their Embassy, they gave no more occasion of these surmises to Hanun, then Joseph's brethren did unto him: yet who could stop them in so doing? Who was more innocent then Joseph, that hearkened not to the temptations and allurements of his mistress, nor desired or delighted to be in her company: yet his over-credulous master, hearing the words and accusation of his wife, not only held him in suspicion, but took him as guilty, and put him into prison: and Joseph could by no means satisfy his master, nor blot out the wrong opinion he had conceived of him. The like we might show touching Saul toward Jonathan his son, and David his servant, that were notwithstanding loyal & faithful unto him. He conceived in mind that all had conspired against him, yet there was none would show him that his son had made a league with the son of less, there was none sorry for him, or showeth unto him, that his son had stirred up his servant against him to lie in wait to take away his life from him. These two innocent men had made indeed a league together, but not against the King their father; a league of amity, not of conspiracy, neither had they given the least cause of suspicion to be so hardly censored, and sinisterly judged off, yet who could remove out of his mind that jealousy, or persuade him that they intended no hurt or mischief against him? In like manner dealt the proud men with Jeremiah, they charged him to have spoken falsely, and that the Lord had not sent him, to charge them not to go down into Egypt: they suspected that Baruch had set him on against them, to deliver them into y^e hand of the Chaldeans, that they might put them to death, and carry them captives into Babylon. This was the devise of their own brains, & the imagination of their own harts, yet what could Jeremiah do against it, or which way could he stay them from suspecting thus. Whē as Paul having appealed to Caesar, had escaped shipwreck and was come safe to Melita, the Barbarians, seeing a viper fastened on his hand, said among themselves, This man surely is a murderer, whom, though he have escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live. Thus we see, that albeit we do not commit any crime worthy to be accused or censured, yet we cannot hinder those that are credulous, from misdeeming and mistrusting of us. It lieth in us wholly to give no just cause of suspicion, but lieth not in us wholly to prevent suspicion. For evil persons may suspect what they please without ground and foundation, without reason and occasion. The Magistrates censured Paul to be a troubler of the City, Acts 16, 20. the Jews traduced him to be a polluter of the Temple, Acts 21, 28. and a Preacher against the Law. Tertullus accused him to be a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ring-leader of the sect of the Nazarens, Acts chap. 24, verse 5. Thus he is suspected, and how could he avoid it? Wherefore good men depend not upon the opinion of other men, but stand upon their own innocence: they do not rise or go down, stand or fall, as it shall please other men to conceive of them; for that were to walk upon other men's feet, or to lean upon the staff that resteth in another man's hand that may deceive thē, but they build their house upon the foundation of their own virtues, and have, or at least ought to have matter enough within them to commend themselves. It must not seem strange to the godly, when they feel the bitter fruits of these suspicions. It hath evermore fared thus with them. This then ought not to make us waver, or to weaken us in our profession, but rather encourage us to walk through good report and evil report, and to furnish us to pass through fire and water, life and death, knowing that God is able and will in the end bring our cause into the light, and make the innocence of our persons, and the justice of our cause manifest, to the glory of his Name, to the comfort of our hearts, & to the confusion of his and our enemies, as we shall show afterward. Thus he dealt with Joseph after he had tried his patience by suffering for well doing: for though he were laid in irons, and his feet hurt with fetters, yet the Lord was with him, and shown him mercy, & gave him favor in the sight of the keeper of the prison, to whom no doubt he shown his uprightness, and cleared himself of that wickedness which was laid to his charge. So also he dealt with David, with Jeremiah, and the rest of the righteous. This doth David entreat oftentimes, when he was laden with the reproaches of his enemies, when he was bitten with the teeth, and smitten with the tongues of the malignant, Psal. 7, 3, 4, 5, 6 Thus we see, if suspicion were cause sufficient to condemn and censure any, no man could stand in judgment, but equity should be turned into iniquity, truth into falsehood, & innocence it self should receive a check and counterbuffe. Let not then the wicked triumph, as if they had gotten the victory, and given the godly a foil, when they can allege against them, how many ways, & of how many persons they are suspected, for that as much may be suspected of them, when as nothing at all can be proved by thē. It is not the suspicion, or the accusation, or the condemnation, or the execution that maketh a man guilty of evil, or to deserve death: but the offense that is committed worthy of punishment. If then they be free from crime, they are happy when they are judged unhappy, and may rejoice and be glad when their enemies have cause to weep and wail.

[Use 3] Lastly, let Magistrates and all that are in authority, whether in the common-wealth, or in the family, put this in practice. For seeing everyone should be tried before he be censured, and that examination must go before condemnation, let them not receive every cōplaint and accusation, but let them do justice and judgment, defend the poor and fatherless, relieve the weak and oppressed, & rid them out of the hand of the wicked. Let this be the end of their government to sing mercy and judgment, and diligently to consider the causes that come before them. To this purpose there is required of them two things, wisdom, and patience, without which they shall never proceed aright in taking away evil; but sometimes pluck up good corn instead of weeds, or suffer thistles to grow instead of wholesome herbs. Wisdom is required to find out particular offenses, to know the number, the nature, the measure, the proceeding in them, the increase of them, and all circumstances, as we see, Eccl. 7, 20, 21. This will teach us when to correct, and when we may defer correction in hope of amendment, it being the discretion of a man to defer his anger. And albeit the blueness of the wound cleanseth away evil, yet a man ought not to give scope to his anger, neither yet exceed measure.

Secondly, there is required patience, that we be not too hot and hasty upon those that have offended, but to quiet our minds, and hear their answers, what they can allege for themselves, as Job 31, 13, 14. He did not despise the cause of his man-servant, nor of his maid-servant▪ when they contended with him; & he grounded himself upon two most notable & worthy considerations, one from the person of God, another from the law of creation. From the person of God, he used mildness toward them, because with him is no respect of persons: What then shall I do when God riseth up? and when he visiteth, what shall I answer him? If he should not deal mercifully and moderately with them, how should he be able to answer it to God, who is the Lord both of master and servant? forasmuch as we all serve one common master, to whō we must give an account: and as our servants come to answer before us, so we must come to answer before God, Col. 4. It shall one day be said unto us, Come, give an account of thy Stewardship, for we may be no longer Stewards, Luke 16. This consideration, if it were duly marked of us, were sufficient to stir up all masters & Magistrates to just and equal dealing.

Again, from the common condition of our creation, there is one author of life, in him both master and servant live, and move, and have their being, and both of them must of necessity die and depart out of this life. How mean or how high soever our place of government be, to moderate our affections is a notable virtue in all Governors; albeit by our authority we may command them silence, and stop their mouths, and lade thē with stripes, yet we should give them leave to answer for themselves, and to plead their own causes, and to debate the matter freely with us.

True it is, Paul requireth of servants, that they should be obedient unto their masters, and please them well in all things, not answering again: howbeit the Apostle meaneth giving of cross answers, replying again with unseemly and firelike words, such as stand not with the bounds of their calling: but they mutter and murmur with their tongues, so that though they be reasonable in their service, yet they are unreasonable in their cutted and crabbed answers. This is the answering that here is reprov'd in servants, who oftentimes abuse the lenity and mildness of their superiors. Job by his own practice showeth that there was no pride, hautinesse, or cruelty in him, he abused not his superiority and authority over them, he exercised not tyranny upon them, he did not trample upon them and cast them under his feet, as if they had been dogs or brute beasts: but he mastered his affections, and bridled his anger, & did bear with them with all gentleness and lowliness of mind. And there are many motives to persuade to this meekness and mildness toward such as are under us.

First, we are all of one molde and matter: all are of the earth, we are no better in reg^d of our original then those that are under us, albeit here we be above them. We are all dust, and to dust we must return. The master is dust as well as the servant. When the poor Jews complained against their oppressors, to whom they had morgaged their houses and lands, and given their sons and daughters into bondage, they use this reason, Nehe. 5.5. Yet now our flesh is as the flesh of our brethren, our children as their children. To this purpose the Prophet warneth, that we hide not our selves from our own flesh, Isaiah. 58.7.

Secondly, we have all one common creator, he that made the master, made also the servant, and he that created the rich, created the poor; God is the maker of them both, as Solomon teacheth in the book of the Proverbs: and this we noted before out of Job, who confesseth, that he which made him made them, and that they had one which fashioned them in the womb.

Thirdly albeit we ha^e superiority and sovereignty over them yet we must consider we have one master in heaven, to whom we must give an account: so that as we are masters over them, so we have a master over us: and as we have servants under us, so we are servants under God. Such then as are superiors cease not to be subjects, forasmuch as God is above all, that will judge everyone according to their works, even toward those that belong unto us. The masters among the Gentiles never considered, that they were as stewards, and must give an account of their calling and government, and therefore they abused it at their pleasure, having power of life and death over their servants: but the Apostle putteth them in mind that the high possessor of heaven and earth ruleth all, and will bring all unto judgment. Seeing then, God hath knit such a fast knot between mankind, that cannot be loosed, to wit, that we have all one matter one common maker, one common master: surely such as shall cut this knot in sunder, deserveth to have his name razed out of y^e number of men, because he acknowledgeth not the nature which God hath put into us, but thinketh he hath the bridle put into his own hands to vex and oppress such as are under him.

True it is, he hath a preeminence over others, and it is meet he should rule as a master and Magistrate in his own house: howbeit such as serve him and are of low degree, ought not to be contemned as abjects, or accounted as our footstooles.

Fourthly, as there is one master both of masters and servants, so there is no respect of persons with him. This is the nature of our heavenly master, he will not sit in judgment upon men according to their nobility, power, greatness, or riches, but deal with them according to their works, as 1 Pet. 1 17. If ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's works, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear. When men of might and power vex and tread upon the poor, weak and simple, that dare not resist or withstand them, they go away with it for the most part, everyone is afraid to oppose against them, or to defend the cause of the innocent, because men are blinded, or daunted by the outward glory of their persons, and so they dream, that God is like unto themselves. But the Apostle layeth before their eyes, or rather unto their hearts, that they should put away threatening, and deal mildly and gently toward them, forasmuch as God accepteth of no man's person.

Fifthly, they shall receive themselves great benefit and profit by their service. This the Gentiles, though God suffered them to wander in ignorance, knew well enough; and the Philosophers used to move all masters to equity and gentle dealing toward their servants. True it is, menservants and maidservants in those days were not as they are in our times: they had them not by covenant for years, they served them not for wages, but they were bondslaves to live and die with their masters, and they possessed them forever as their oxen or horses, and had power to save them or to kill them at their own pleasure, no man could speak against it, or call them to answer and account for it. Nevertheless, the wise men among them saw by the light of nature, that there was a common equity to be used toward all reasonable creatures, and therefore exhorted them to use their servants well, and to refrain their anger toward them, in consideration of their own gain and profit that should come unto them thereby. They saw not into the force of the former reason, y^t they must give an account to God, but they moved them in regard of their own good & benefit; as also Paul doth Philemon, who should find his servant profitable unto him, and therefore he sent him again, and would have him receive him again. The heathen could say, Whatsoever thou wouldest not have done to thyself, do not thou to another; which is according to the rule of Christ, Matth. 7.12. All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them: for this is the Law and the Prophets. If then we respect not equity, let us be moved by our own commodity.

Sixthly, we are all as brethren in Christ Jesus▪ howsoever many be of low degree, and despised in the world, yet Christ himself accounteth all that believe in him to be his brethren. If we have God to be our Father, we must confess his children to be our brethren. If we be ashamed to account thus of others, let us take heed lest Christ be ashamed of us, when he cometh in his glory. The Apostle speaking of him saith, Heb. 2.17. In all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high Priest in things pertaining unto God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. And in the same chapter he bringeth in Christ speaking, I will declare thy Name unto my brethren, in the midst of the Church will I sing praise unto thee. True it is, there is a difference between man and man in outward things, but in the chiefest things they are equal: the lowest have as good a title to salvation and the kingdom of heaven as the highest: there is neither Jew nor Grecian, there is neither male nor female, there is neither bond nor free, but we are all one in Christ Jesus.

Seventhly, this mild dealing toward them serveth to give them encouragement in well-doing. For when they shall see such kindness in their masters, that they are content to hear them patiently, to bear with them meekly, and to entreat them gently, so that they use no unmerciful, or immeasurable, or unreasonable rigor toward them: how is, or at least how ought the heart of the servants to be cheered and comforted in their obedience to them, and in yielding all possible good service to them in the singleness of their hearts? By too much lenity they grow saucie, and oftentimes outrageous. The wise man saith, Pamper up a servant, and he will be as thine own son. Give servants the reins of liberty, they wax proud, and know neither their masters, nor themselves, nor their duties: so soon as they are set on horseback, they gallop beyond all measure. There is a moderation to be kept between two extremes, too much and too little, and we may offend by the one as well as by the other. Hence it is, that Paul setting down the duties of fathers toward their children, Col. 3.21. saith, Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged, or out of heart. Gentle natures are soon dismayed, they are rebuked by a word, and by a look: we must take heed we be not bitter to them.

Lastly, look how we would be dealt withal by others, in like manner ought we to deal with others, and behave our selves toward others. There is none of us all but we desire to have the servants that are under us deal well with us, to serve us willingly, to obey us cheerfully, to honor us readily, and from the heart: we therefore, in our commandments toward them ought to use all humanity and equity, and this the Apostle calleth to do the same things toward them, Ephes. 6.9. Again, as we desire that God should forbear threatenings toward us, and forgive us upon our unfeigned repentance; so ought we to do, we ought to forbear threatening, and to forgive them that have offended us, when we see the fruits of a true conversion and turning unto God in them. And this doth the Apostle require at the hands of Philemon, howsoever in former times the servant had purloyned from his master, as we have noted at large upon that Epistle.

To conclude therefore, seeing God will have the innocent protected, and not oppressed in judgment, it behooveth everyone to look to the duties of his calling: as the servant should not rise against the master, so the master ought not to oppress the servant. Let all men learn mildness toward their inferiors, that God may be served above all.

19 And the Priest shall charge her by an oath, and say unto the woman, if no man hath lain with thee, and if thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness with another instead of thy husband, be thou free from this bitter water that causeth the curse.

20 But if thou hast gone aside to another instead of thy husband, and if thou be defiled, and some man hath lain with thee beside thine husband:

21 Then the Priest shall charge the woman with an oath of cursing, and the Priest shall say unto the woman, The Lord make thee a curse, and an oath among thy people, when the Lord doth make thy thigh to rot, and thy belly to swell.

22 And this water that causeth the curse, shall go into thy bowels, to make thy belly to swell, and thy thigh to rot: and the woman shall say, Amen, Amen.

Hitherto we have shown such actions as were used to try the faith and fidelity of the suspected woman: now we come to the words that are spoken, declaring the manner how it was performed, from the 19 verse, to the end of the 22. verse. Herein we have laid before us two things: first the oath it self. Secondly the assent of the woman unto the oath. Touching the oath, we have here a prescript form of it, and the words prescribed unto her are ministered to her by the Priest, who uttereth it by his voice, conditionally on both parts; If thou hast not gone astray, and broken the band and covenant of marriage, so that no man hath known thee carnally, be free from this curse: But if thou hast offended this way, and that thou be defiled, the curse come upon thee.

The assent of the woman followeth, being expressed by a common note used in the conclusion of all prayers, Amen, Amen. Wherein we are to observe two things, both the signification, and the repetition of the word. Touching the signification, it signifieth as much as, so be it, as the Septuagint expound it. There is a double use of this word, first, to express our desire, secondly, to testify our faith in the assurance of receiving those things that we crave: both which are to be practiced in prayer, and are expressed by Christ, Mar. 11.24. Whatsoever you desire when ye pray, believe that ye shall have it, and it shall be done unto you. Where he teacheth, that there ought to be in us both a desire of grace, and an assurance of faith. In this place it is taken in the first sense, to wit, for a bare assent, subscribing to the truth of that which is spoken, and wishing that it may be so, as Deut. 27.15. where speaking of the curses pronounced on mount Ebal, he saith, All the people shall say, Amen.

So doth the woman in this place crave and desire against her self, if she be culpable of the crime whereof she is suspected, and have defiled the marriage bed that ought to be honorable, that the curse here threatened, may turn upon her and enter into her. For as the curse that is causeless shall not come, so that which is duly and truly deserved, shall undoubtedly come, and shall not tarry.

The repetition of this word is here set down to note the fervency of her zeal, the innocence of her cause, the uprightness of her conscience, and the purity of her heart: that she cometh not hanging down her head to this trial, as a malefactor that is guilty cometh to the bar, but lifting up her head as going to the place of her delivery where she is sure to be acquitted: not fearfully & doubtfully, but boldly and confidently, as one that is assured what will be the issue of the matter.

In this division some questions arise, which are to be handled. First the question may be asked, what need there was of these words of adjuration to cause her to take the oath, that the Priest should minister it unto her, and pronounce the form of it unto her, and she answer him again, and then drink up the water, as it followeth afterward? The causes hereof are these, first to teach that every sign or Sacrament should have the word joined to it, that it be not a bare & naked sign, as it were an empty box without his ointment. Secondly, it respecteth the public edification of the whole people, when they should see that she pronounced sentence upon her self, and that the judgment of God took event according to the truth that before lay hid, all might justly fear and tremble under his mighty hand.

Secondly, the question may be asked, what is meant by these words of adjuration, The Lord make thee a curse and an oath among thy people? I answer, the meaning is as much as if the Priest had said, God make thee wretched and miserable, yea so unhappy and infamous that it may turn into a proverb, Let that happen to thee, which hath happened to this woman: so that the curse coming upon her shall be alleged as an example of the like to come upon others: both because she had committed so heinous a fault, and because she added unto it these two crimes, impudency, an especial stain and blot in that sex: and perjury, a capital crime in all persons. For it argued great arrogancy and audaciousnesse to undergo all these means of trial one after another, and yet evermore to conceal her offense, and not confess it, like to Achan, who having committed a trespass in the accursed thing, did what he could to hide it: the tribe of Judah was taken, but he was not moved: the families of Judah being brought, the family of the Zarhites was taken, and yet he was not touched: the families of the Zarhites being brought man by man, Zabdiwas taken, and yet he hath no feeling of it, until himself was taken, and that he was pointed out, Thou art the man: or like unto Judas that betrayed the Son of God, he knew Christ was apprehended, and yet he repented not: mocked, buffeted, spit upon, and yet he repented not; he saw him condemned to the Cross before he thought, What have I done? So in this suspected wife to go forward from the first action to be performed, and from the first word to be pronounced even until the last without any stay or remorse, was a testimony of shamelesnesse and of hardness of heart.

Besides, if none of all these could have entered into her, and pierced her heart harder then stone, yet a man would have thought when she came to be charged with an oath of cursing, she would have stuck at it, and not have swallowed this being greater then a Camel: so that to add to adultery the sin of perjury, as it were drunkenness unto thirst, argued a person given over and forsaken of God, and such a one as had filled up the measure of sin: being like unto profane Esau that sold his birthright for one morsel of meat, and sware to his brother, and despised the birth-right, Gen. 25.33. As he regarded not to commit sin, so he regarded not an oath, that he might finish it, and give himself wholly over unto it.

[Verse 19. And the Priest shall charge her by an oath, &c.] In these words we have a solemn manner set down of the woman's either absolution or condemnation. After that the Priest hath put the holy water in an earthen vessel, and taken dust from the pavement to be cast into it, he conceiveth words of cursing, to which she is to answer: he goeth before to rehearse them, she is not left to utter what she please lest she should seek evasion by any mental reservation. Thus then she is constrained to appeal to God, and to use his Name, & to purge her self by an oath: which is done to humble her, & to give her warning to take heed that she double not her fault, and join to one great sin another greater, a breach of the first Table, to a breach of the second, that is, perjury to her adultery, an offense against God to the offense against her husband. We learn hereby, that the Name of God is never to be used, but only in cases of necessity: when all other means fail, then it is lawful to take up an oath, whether it be publicly or privately, whether it be before the Magistrate or before any other. This we see in Abraham, who said to the king of Sodom Gen. 14.22▪ I have lifted up mine hand unto the Lord, the most high God, the possessor of heaven and earth, that I will not take anything that is thine: By this gesture he did appeal unto God, as a witness of his swearing, and a revenger of all forswearing, to bind himself from covetousness; that as before he had overcome his enemies, now he might overcome himself and his own affections, which was a greater and nobler victory then the former.

Thus he showeth himself religious toward God, as well as righteous toward men. The like we see in the Law set down by an express commandment, Exod. 22.10, 11. If a man deliver unto his neighbor an asse, or an ox, or a sheep, or any beast to keep, and it die, or be hurt, or driven away, no man seeing it: then shall an oath of the Lord be between them both, that he hath not put his hand unto his neighbors goods, and the owner of it shall accept thereof, and he shall not make it good. This precept directeth when and in what cases to take an oath, to wit, when the matter is doubtful, and cannot otherwise be decided: forasmuch as the owner of the goods is charged to rest therein, and to acknowledge himself well satisfied. This we see farther in the Apostle Paul, 2 Cor. 1.21 I call God for a record upon my soul, that to spare you I came not as yet to Corinth. He did not break out into this swearing of an ordinary custom, but the glory of God and the salvation of that Church required it; in which cases we are allowed and warranted to use it, and not otherwise.

[Reason 1] The reasons will better confirm this unto us then bare testimonies taken out of the Scriptures, which nevertheless out to be sufficient where no farther proof is used. First, God will not hold him guiltless that abuseth his Name negligently or unnecessarily. He will surely punish them that swear vainly. This penalty or punishment is annexed to the commandment, Exod. 20. The Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his Name in vain. It is an heinous sin, albeit it be thought light before men; and then the judgment also shall be heavy that hangeth over their heads that transgress this Law. The free forgiveness of sins is the fountain of all happiness, both present and to come; for the man is blessed whose sins are forgiven, and whose iniquity is covered, blessed is that man to whom God will impute no wickedness: and therefore we must needs be in continual misery, so long as our sins are retained. This is a fearful thunderbolt to fright us from the profaning of his Name: he will honor those that honor him, but such as despise him shall come to destruction.

Secondly, the end of practicing an oath is [Reason 2] to decide strifes, and to determine controversies, which disturb peace, and hinder Christian charity. It cannot be but offenses will come, and many occasions of quarrels and contentions about matters of this life arise daily between man and man, which could not conveniently be taken up, except we had the lawful use of an oath to confirm some necessary truth; as when it serveth to manifest the glory of God, or to clear the good name of our brother, or to obey the commandment of the Magistrate, or to maintain our own credit. This is set down, Heb. 6.16. Men verily swear by the greater, and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife. I call that a necessary truth, when a doubtful cause called into question, cannot be decided without an oath, as we see the practice, Rom. 1.9. God is my witness, whom I serve with my spirit, in the Gospel of his Son, that without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers. It was necessary for the furtherance of the salvation of the Romans, that they should be persuaded of the Apostles affection toward them, but the testimony of men failed to prove this truth, and therefore he was driven to take up an oath, and to appeal unto God. This is also at large delivered by Solomon in that prayer which he made at the dedication of the Temple, 1 King. 8.31. If any man trespass against his neighbor, and an oath be laid upon him to cause him to swear, and the oath come before thine altar in this house, then hear thou in heaven, and do and judge thy servants, condemning the wicked to bring his way upon his head, and justifying the righteous to give him according to his righteousness. Thus we see the constant and continual use of an oath among God's people in matters of weight and importance, in their most serious and substantial affairs.

Thirdly, the Name of God is most fearful [Reason 3] in praises, glorious in holiness, great in might and doing wonders: and therefore it ought not commonly to run in our mouths without necessary cause. This is urged by the wise man, Eccles. 5.2. Be not rash with thy mouth and let not thy heart be hasty to utter anything before God: for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth: therefore let thy words be few. And the Lord saith, Deut. 28.58. If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this Law that are written in this book, that thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful Name, The Lord thy God, he will make thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy seed, &c. If then the Name of God be great and glorious, it is not commonly to be used of us, to be turned in our tongues, and to be trodden upon with our feet.

[Use 1] Now let us consider what uses may be made of this unto us. It reproveth sundry abuses & corruptions, both in opinion and practice, in judgment and in life. As first of all the Anabaptists, a proud and fantastical crew of cursed and damnable heretics, that trouble heaven and earth, overthrow Church and Common-wealth, destroy Magistracy and Ministry, disannul the word and Sacraments, and make religion to be no better then a doctrine of liberty. These teach that it is unlawful to swear at all, either in private use, or in place of judgment. This is to run into another extremity, and to fail as much in the defect, as other do in the excess. For albeit all swearing be not lawful, yet it followeth not that all swearing is unlawful. But to abolish all manner of swearing, and all use of an oath, because some abuse it, and use it vainly, is like unto him, who to take away drunkenness, abolished the vines, and would not suffer any to grow in his common-wealth: or as if a man would suffer no corn to grow, because some will surfeit with it. There is no good thing, but hath been or may be abused. The doctrine that is according to godliness is many ways abused. When Paul magnified the mercies of God in his son Christ, so that where sin abounded, grace abounded much more, men of evil spirits arose that abused this to carnal liberty, and turned the grace of God into wantonness, and wrested the Scriptures to their own perdition.

[sect 1] The objections of these heretics are not many, but somewhat they allege for themselves. First, they object the commandment of the Lord in the exposition of the Law, Mat. 5.34. I say unto you, swear not at all, neither by heaven, &c. If it be forbidden to swear at all, then it is made utterly unlawful.

I answer, the purpose of Christ is to reprove the false interpretations of the Scribes and Pharisees, who wrested the Law, and restrained it contrary to the meaning of the Lawgiuer. They taught the people to beware of perjury, and swearing falsely, and that if so be men swear truly, it was lawful to swear commonly, as if God took no regard of our ordinary communication, and of our common talk, contrary to the doctrine of Christ else-where, that of every idle word, much more then of idle oaths, men shall give an account at the day of judgment, Matth. 12.36. His purpose is not to condemn the right use of an oth, which is expressly commanded of God in many places, and practiced by the Patriarchs, Gen. 14. by the Prophets, 1 king 17.1. by the Apostles, 1 Cor. 15. by the Angels, Revel. 10.6. by the Judges, Judge. 15.12. by the kings, 1. Sam. 24. and by the Lord himself, Psal. 110.4. Heb. 6.17. And therefore simply it is not a sin to swear. If any reply in their name and behalf, that once it was lawful, but now it is not: in the time of the old testament, but not in the new; we must know, that the Prophets, prophesying of these times of grace under the Gospel, declare that the Church or Christ should swear by the Lord, Isaiah. 1•1•. Jer. 4.2. and therefore he never wholly for bad it, who came not to destroy the Law and abolish the Prophets, but to fulfill and perform the Law, Matth. 5.17. Moreover the Pharisees, that were the teachers of Israel, taught that it skilled not, though men sware vainly, by heaven, by earth, by the creatures, so long as they suppressed the Name of God. Wherefore Christ the true interpreter of the Law. teacheth the contrary, to wit, that it is a sin against the third commandment, not only to forswear, but to swear vainly, and commonly, by what name, and in what manner soever it be yea albeit the Name of God be not mentioned, considering that he which sweareth by the altar, sweareth by it, and by all things thereon: he that sweareth by the Temple, sweareth by it, and by him that dwelleth therein: and he that sweareth by heaven, sweareth by the throne of God, and by him that sitteth thereon. This error of these Pharisees is maintained, or at the least practiced commonly by the common sort, they think they may swear as they list, so that they swear truly: and if they have truth on their side, they take liberty to swear and swear again without controlement.

Secondly, they allege also the saying of the Apostle James, chap. 5.12. [Object. 2] Above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath: but let your yea, be yea; and your nay nay: lest ye fall into condemnation.

I answer, [Answer.] we must not always take the words of Scripture generally as they seem to be carried, but limit them according to the circumstances of the Text, and the scope of y^e words. The Apostle saith, All things are lawful for him, 1 Cor. 6.12. but it must be restrained to things indifferent not forbidden in the Law: for such things as are forbidden, are not lawful. If then we would understand Scripture aright, and not wander from the sound interpretation of it, we must seek and search out the sense according to the intent and meaning of the Spirit of God; otherwise, not only infinite inconveniences, but diverse absurdities, impossibilities, heresies, contradictions, and impieties will follow: as when Christ saith, John. 10.8. All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers, &c. Shall we conclude from hence, that Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah, John the Baptist, and all the Prophets were no better then thieves and robbers, because they went before Christ in time? No, he pointeth out such as profess themselves to be the door of the sheep, and received or shown any other then himself. So Paul saith, he took all things to be lawful for him: what then? might he do what he list? might he be an idolater, an adulterer, a blasphemer, and such like? no, but herein he preventeth an objection, and answereth by supposition, that albeit all things were lawful, yet he would not be brought under the power of anything. So in another place he saith, I am made all things to all men, 1 Cor. 9.22. Doth he hereby make himself a Libertine, or establish Libertinism, or purchase a protection for every man to do what seemeth good in his own eyes? Not so, but in matters that are indifferent which may be done or not done with a good conscience, he changed himself into all fashions, and applied himself to the conditions of all, that by all means he might save some. So in this place, when the Apostle saith, swear not at all, we must not cleave seruilely to the letter, nor sti•ke to the bare words, but know that the Scripture standeth in the right meaning: so that the doctrine of the servant is not different from the Lord's and Masters that sent him, to wit, to condemn lightnes in swearing, whereby the Name of God is defiled, directly, or indirectly; which ought to be accounted of all men most holy, and used with the greatest respect and reverence that can be. But in cases of importance and necessity, we have examples beyond all exception, of God himself▪ of the Prophets and Apostles that have used an oath, as we noted before, which could not have been, if the use of an oath had generally and utterly been unlawful.

Secondly, to omit this sect, and to proceed, it reproveth such as take the oaths of persons that are unfit and unmeet to take any oaths. For seeing an oath must be taken up soberly, discreetly and advisedly, and only in cases of necessity, when the truth cannot otherwise be decided, it convinceth such of temerity and want of discretion, that make no difference of whom they take an oath. The end of an oath ought to be to confirm the truth; but the testimony of some is suspected, and of others presumed to be false. Many are not to be admitted as witnesses, as children, furious persons, drunkards, common liars, such whose bodies are withered, and consequently their memories decayed, such as are idiots and lunatikes, common swearers, ruffians, and such as are of evil report, rogues and straglers that have nothing to lose, nor nowhere to dwell, infidels, heretics, and unbelievers, all these are as it were bored in the ear, or burned in the hand, or branded in the forehead for insufficient persons: because either they do not know the virtue and validity of an oath, nor the difference and distinction of matters whereupon they are produced, and which are to be decided: or being accustomed to evil, may easily be drawn to add one sin of perjury to the heaps of their other wickedness: or may easily be brought to lift at an oath for a little lucre and base gain; or make little account to renounce and sell Christ himself for thirty pence, as Judas d•d, that is, for a small advantage. Such then must be sought out to testify the truth, as are worthy of credit, as fear not the faces of men, as evermore have God before their eyes. As then such are to be chosen, so these that can do nothing with judgment and discretion, with advise and deliberation, ought to be refused, of which the Prophet saith: Hear ye this, O house of Jacob, which are called by the name of Israel, and are come out of the waters of Judah: which swear by the Name of the Lord and make mention of the God of Israel, but not in truth nor in righteousness. Hence it is that the Prophet requireth, that our oaths be performed in truth, in righteousness, and in judgment, Ier. 5. which cannot be expected of us, or performed of them.

Secondly, this doctrine directly meeteth [Use 2] with the common, but yet corrupt practice of our times, in which swearing is turned into a custom, so that everyone garnisheth his ordinary talk with graceless and needless oaths, if this may be called a garnishing, and not rather a disgracing. That communication is gracious which ministereth grace to the hearers, other talk is rotten, and reckless, when men make no conscience of taking the Name of God in vain. This is a grievous sin in young and old, in men and women, in rich and poor. It is accounted a special ornament to our speech, and we think it carrieth no credit nor countenance, except it be now and then spiced with an oath. It beginneth everywhere to be esteemed the part of a gentleman, and a note and cognizance to know him and discern him from others. He is judged a puritane and a precise fool that reproveth it, and useth it not. Alas, to what height of sin are we come? the measure is filled up, the judgment is at hand. Herein, O Lord, be merciful unto us: and indeed thou art merciful, a God of pity and patience, or else the land were not able to bear us. The practice of it is of the devil, & yet we are not afraid of it, few men make conscience of it. The children that play in the streets have learned to swear, so soon as they can speak, and are weaned from their mothers breasts. The Rogues and Vagabonds that settle themselves in no family or society, take the sacred Name of God in their mouth, & make it their occupation to beg with it. The chapmen that sell their wares to others, are as ready to sell their souls to the devil to get sometimes one penny. He is not accounted a good shopman that is likely to thrive, that doth not burnish and varnish his bad wares with the glorious Name of God, he is not reckoned worth a chip that will not swear at every word to deceive those that deal with him: and yet God threateneth that he will cut off as well on this side as on that, everyone that sweareth so that the curse shall remain in the middes of his house, and shall consume it, with the timber thereof, and the stones thereof. But some will say, we do not [Object 1] swear by the Name of God, we swear not but by our faith, or troth, or by our Lady, or the Mass, or by Saint Mary. Bee it so: [Answer.] yet even these also are breaches of y^e law of God. Faith and truth are precious jewels that adorn y^e heart of a Christian, they must be kept there as safely as a treasure. Will a man lay a pearl to gage for every trifle? or will a man defile his best raiment with the worst mire? It is to be feared, that these have little faith in the heart, that have it so commonly in the mouth. As for the cross, or the mass, or the rood, and such like relics, they are abominable idols, of w^c the Prophet complaineth, They have sworn by them that are no gods. This is called a forsaking of God. The Prophet saith, They shall fall, and never rise again. And the Prophet Zephany declareth, that y^e Lord will destroy man & beast, because they did swear by the Lord and by Malcham. We see hereby what religion and fear of God is in the greatest multitude, for not one of an hundredth feareth an oth, or refraineth frō swearing. Not a day passeth over their heads, but they break out this way. No occasion is offered unto them to speak, but an oath shall be at one end of their talk. They are so far frō striving against it, that they delight in it, and make no more conscience of an oath, then of a word, and use swearing more then eating and drinking. Where the laws of the land do bridle men, there is some abstaining from sin, and few in comparison of the rest offend. It is true indeed that no punishment, will restrain all persons: yet notwithstanding the most are terrified by severity and sharpness, as in cases of treasons, of murders, of thefts, &c. There are few in comparison of others that are guilty of these: and why? because they are looked unto, that offend this way. If men were let alone in these also to themselves, we should have rebellions, and robberies, and shedding of blood as common as oaths. For where conscience of sin is wanting, fear of punishment and terror of death must keep in awe. But where the laws of Princes are most remiss, there a flood-gate is set open to all impiety y^t ouerfloweth the banks and ouerwhelmeth all before it without measure; as swearing, and blaspheming, contempt of the word, profaning the Sabbath, whoredom, &c. These are common, this is the broad way, and wide gate that many enter into without controlment. The causes of this general abuse and common sin of swearing are these four. First, custom, and common use, whereby many think themselves excused. Tell them of their sin, and advise them to leave it, They will answer, I confess it is naught, and I am to blame for it, it is a custom I have gotten. Thus they defend themselves by custom, & plead prescription: but in the mean season they hold their wicked and unreasonable custom still, and will by no means be brought from it. And yet if we will speak the truth, what is it to pretend custom to countenance sin, but to confess we do and speak all things without the fear of God? For frō whence proceedeth this custom of sinning, but from this root? to wit, that we commit sin upon sin, one day after another, without any reverence of the Majesty of God. Wherefore, it standeth us upon to break this corrupt custom by a contrary custom, & to leave this use by disuse thereof. Although it may seem hard unto us at the first, yet if we labor to discontinue it, we shall find it easy at the last. The second cause is evil examples, when we keep evil company, we hear them, & we learn of them. We cannot frequent the company of swearers, but we shall have oaths rife in our ears. The passage is easy from the care to the tongue. That which we commonly hear, we commonly talk off. If then oaths be rife in our ears, they will quickly be ready in our mouths. And the reason is, because the often practice of any sin, maketh us to have the less sense and sorrow for sin, less hatred and detestation of sin. As it is in them that commit sin, so it is in them that are present at it. Touching these that are the practicers of it, the Prophet saith, Can the Ethiopian change his skin, &c. So is it also with these that frequent the society of common swearers, it is hard to be with them, & to come from them, but we shall one way or other be partakers of their sins. This sin of swearing is not made the less by multitude of evil examples set before us, forasmuch as the multitude of them that sin doth rather make the sin more to be abhorred, then excused, and provoketh God's wrath more fiercely. We are not to follow a multitude to do evil. If we sin together, we shall also suffer together: and if we offend with others, we shall be punished with others. The third cause is want of admonition. For many sin this way, that do not know they sin, many have a custom in swearing, that are ignorant they do swear, or at least that they swear so often, or that the sin & offense is so great; who are of that flexible nature, & good disposition, that if they knew the greuousnesse of the sin, or the greatness of the danger, would abstain from doing evil. It is an offense indeed in those that swear, albeit they do it of ignorance: so is it also in those, that pretending love and friendship to those that use it, do not by admonition seek to reclaim them. The wise man saith, Reproue not a scorner, lest he hate thee, &c. It is a fault generally among us, that we do not exhort one another. A word spoken in due season is comely and profitable, like apples of gold in pictures of silver, pleasant words are as an honey comb, sweet to the soul, and health to the bones. No words are so sweet to the taste, as those that aim at the souls good. We may by this means be an occasion of saving a soul: & by want of the performance of this duty, and by keeping silence when we ought not, we may be partakers of their sins, and we may be a means of damning their souls. For what knowest thou, O man, whether thou mayest win thy brother? The last cause, that shall now be touched, furthering the sin of swearing, is want of punishment. It were to be wished that y^e Magistrate would sharpen the Law against this sin, and other of the first Table that are of like nature, & concerned directly the glory of God. The punishment is little or none at all against it, which maketh it so common. And I would to God, that they who should be most forward to redress it, had not the chief hand in this trespass. We are as men afraid to touch this sore, and they that ought to reprove it, have taught their tongues to use it, I mean the Ministers of the word. How then should they teach others that cannot teach themselves? or how should they exhort others not to swear, that have learned commonly to swear themselves? Let all those therefore that are in authority, whether their place be higher or lower, look to those that are under them. There is no smothering of sin, or dealing gently and tenderly with it, if we will repress and redress it. Sin is like unto a nettle, the more lightly you handle it, the more it stingeth: the way is to crush it harder. If we deal mildely with sin, we make it thereby to gather strength. It is the blueness of a wound, saith Solomon, that purgeth evil. Sin is like a serpent in the egg, or like a wolf and lyon that is young; if they be suffered, they sting unto death, and make us their prey. Slight and sheet punishment of any sin, is after a sort an inviting & encouragement unto it. But some man will farther object, without swearing men [Object. 2] will not believe me: they doubt of my word, an oath putteth the matter out of question. I answer, [Answer.] he that will not believe thee without an oth in thy communication, neither will he with an oth. For he that is a common swearer, may well be presumed or suspected to be a common liar: & whosoever maketh no conscience of the greater, will make no conscience of the lesser sin. The prophet Hoseah, complaining of the corruptions that reigned in his time, joineth these together, & as it were coupleth thē in one yoke, by swearing and lying they break out, It is not thy facing & out-facing, thy swearing & staring that can procure thee credit among those that are sober minded: forasmuch as they that will commonly swear, will also forswear. Solomon teacheth y^t in many words there wanteth not folly: so in many oaths there wanteth not perjury. Wouldest thou be believed? and have mē rest in thy sayings without doubting or gainsaying? accustom thy tongue to speak the truth: be ashamed to be taken with a lie: gain a good report to thyself by government of thy tongue, and setting a watch before the door of thy mouth, pondering thy words before thou utter them, and examine thy speech [Object. 3] before thou speak it. But some will pretend a necessity whereby they are urged, and say, they cannot live without swearing; they object that men will not buy of them, and that they shall never be able to utter their wares without it. Nay, [Answer.] the wiser sort believe thee the less, and buy of thee the less. It maketh them look the better about them, and watch thy fingers that hast set no watch before thy mouth. They see thou makest no more conscience of an oath, then a dog doth to wag his tail: but thou must remember that goods gotten by forgery, lying, deceit, and swearing, shall not prosper long, nor continue ever. They put their gains in a bottomless bag. Solomon is plentiful in handling this point in diverse places. Wealth gotten by vanity, &c. The treasures of wickedness, &c. Albeit evil men may prosper for a time, yet they shall not long enjoy their stollē goods. For goods wrongfully gotten, are stolen: and thou hast no better title unto them, then the thief hath to the true man's purse. Thou professest to show friendship unto him, but art ready to cut his throat. Thou speakest fairly, but thou meanest foully. We must not suffer our tongues and hearts to wander so far asunder, but remember y^t he which keepeth his mouth, keepeth his life, &c. A little gotten with a good conscience shall bring a blessing with it upon us and our children, The just man walketh in his integrity, his children are blessed after him. And howsoever many will account this light gains which is so gotten, yet in the end it shall make an heavy purse, according to y^e true proverb. As for all wicked and unconscionable gains, they are accursed in us, and our posterities to whom we leave them, and by which we think to enrich them, shall feel the smart of our sins. This is the portion of a wicked man with God, &c. To draw to an end, let us set this down as a rule, that no man ought to swear or lie for an advantage: neither shall our swearing and lying in the end turn to our advantage, but to our loss: forasmuch as sin shall bring profit to no man. It cannot profit a man to win the whole world, and then to lose his own soul. Such get a penny and forgo a pound: they gain hell and lose heaven: they make the devil their friend, and God their enemy. If we would thus reason with our selves, and cast up our accounts, we should soon see little gotten by these sins, & that when we have attained to the greatest wealth, only godliness is the greatest gains, which shall never be taken from us.

Lastly, it is our duty to be careful to use an [Use 3] oath aright. It is the great goodness of God toward us, that doth so far honor us, and abase himself, to give us leave to take up his Name, and to be present at our controversies, being ready to determine of them. We are unworthy of this preeminence, and therefore we ought to rectify our judgment, and swear aright, to y^e end we take not his Name in vain. And that we may do this, we are to consider these few particulars: 1 what an oth is, 2. who is y^e author of it, 3. what are y^e parts of an oth, and whereof it consisteth, 4. what is the form thereof. 5. what is y^e end: lastly, what be y^e properties of it. Of these in order as we set thē down.

Touching the first, an oath may thus be described. It is a solemn appealing to God, whereby we testify that we speak the truth. It is a kind of invocation of God's Name, though it be used unto men, or before men: it is a referring of our selves to God, and therefore Paul calleth God to record. We should consider therefore that we have to do with him, & set him before our eyes for the farther provoking of our selves to fear and reverence, & the farther removing from us all falsehood & untruth. Again, it is said, that we by our oath do testify that we speak and utter the truth with our tongues, but it must be from the heart root. This is the reason that oaths are in use, that the truth, which otherwise lieth hid, may come to light. This truth must be spoken, not to halves, or to hurt by it: but we must speak the truth plainly and sincerely in the simplicity of our hearts, without all glozing or dissembling through fear, or flattery, or favor, or profit, or pleasing of men: we must speak the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

The second point to be considered in an oath, is, who is the author of it. It is commanded of God, by whom we are to swear, inasmuch as he alone is to be called upon, & worshipped, to whom we ascribe a knowledge of all things, a searching of our hearts, a presence in all places, and infinite wisdom in ordering all things. For an oath consisteth not of manifest matters, whereof there is good evidence, but of hidden and uncertain things, in which God only can judge, whether men deceive us or not. True it is, if there were that perfection in us every way, y^t ought to be, there should be no necessary use of any oath with God or mā. If there were no wavering in us, God needeth not to swear: if there were no forging in us, man needed not to swear: so that unbelief and untruth were the principal causes that brought it into practice. The cause why God sweareth, is for our profit. He is truth it self, and cannot lie, he cannot deceive, or repent, or deny himself; howbeit we are frail & weak creatures; though God promise never so faithfully, and give us his word never so certainly: yet we are full of infidelity and doubting, like to Thomas one of the twelve Apostles: he had the word of God, the promise of Christ, & the testimony of the disciples, yet he would not believe, except he might see in his hands the print of the nails, and put his finger into the print of the nails, and put his hand into his side. It was not enough for him, y^t he might be no longer faithless, but faithful, to see his wounds with his eyes, but he must touch them, and felt thē with his fingers; and then he would believe. Hence it is, that God sweareth unto us for our better assurance, that we should not doubt, but have sure consolation in his promise, and confirmation in his truth. Again, there should be little or no use of an oath between party and party, if there were y^t honesty & fidelity among men that ought to have been: for if we were accustomed only to speak the truth, and that we hated lying, as we do the father of it, what need we any oath? or what should we do with swearing? All men will seem to hate the devil, y^e father of lies: but all hate not his works. They love lies more then to speak the truth, and therefore an oath came in, when the truth could not be found out with much difficulty and long examinations.

The third point is the parts of an oath whereof it consisteth. In every oath pass these four things, confirmation, invocation, confession, & obligation. First, there must be the confirmation of a truth y^t cannot else be known but by our oath, An oath for confirmation is among men an end of all strife. An oath is not a customary thing, or a matter wherein we may dally: there must be somewhat that needeth to be confirmed. Where all things are apparent, there is no place for this ordinance. Secondly, there is an invocation of God's Name, who is witness of the truth, and a judge to be avenged of us, if we lie. It is not enough for us to use an asseveration, or to make a solemn protestation: there must be a lifting up of the heart to God, and an appealing to his divine Majesty, as the men of God were always wont to do, as we noted before. Thirdly, there should be confession that God punisheth perjury, either expressed or implied, either openly or secretly. For there is a secret kind of acknowledgment in every oath, of God's purpose & power ready to chastise and correct all such as dishonor God and profane the seat of judgment. Fourthly, an obligation, professing and protesting that we are willing to undergo the punishment at God's hand, if we perform not the condition. It is very fit and expedient, that all such as are to take an oath, diligently consider and remember these particular parts, that they have them not only before their eyes, but engraven in their hearts, to keep them from all falsehood.

The fourth thing is the form of an oath, which is described by the Prophet Jeremiah, Thou shalt swear the Lord liveth, in truth, &c. Behold here, the manner that is to be observed in our swearing, it must be performed truly, discreetly, & righteously. Truly, lest we make God a liar: justly, lest we commit impiety: in judgment, lest we be rash and heady w^t ought not to be in so weighty a matter. Truth ought to be the ground of all our speeches. The Apostle saith, Cast off lying, and speak every man truth unto his neighbor, for we are members one of another: howbeit then especially, when we take the God of all truth to witness, we should be careful to speak nothing but y^e simple words of truth without all mixture or error or falsehood. As God is the God of truth, so ought we to be like unto him, if we would have him to be our Father, or assure our selves to be his children. We cannot swear lawfully except we swear truly, & therefore we must be sure before we swear, that we swear nothing but the truth. For we come not into the presence of God, and before the deputy of God which is the Magistrate, to deliver our own foolish opinions, drowsy dreams, private thoughts, or uncertain matters such as we conceive; but what we know and are thoroughly persuaded off. Truth and knowledge are inseparable companions. Again, he that sweareth lawfully should swear in judgment. When we are called before a judge to testify the truth, or are to witness in any other lawful cause w^c can by no other means be found out but by an oth, we must deal in such matters soberly, we are to swear with good discretion and aduisement, not lightly, not rashly, not hastily, not headily, but with diligent trial and due consideration of every particular which we are to testify. Lastly, our oath must be taken in righteousness, and be agreeable to right and equity and equity & justice, which serve to give to every man his own, and to God also his due. Thus we see wherein the life and as it were the soul of an oath consisteth: which reproveth the common abuses of those that are sworn men. Our oath must not be an hired oath, nor we hired men to swear whatsoever others will have us: for that were as much as to sell our souls t^o Satan for money. If we would have peace and comfort to our selves, we must not take an oath for fear, or favor, or friendship, or flattery, to do our friends a pleasure, and our enemies a displeasure: but in a godly zeal of the uprightness of the cause, and an earnest desire that God's Name may be glorified in the manifestation of the Truth. Let us also learn to detest the corrupt practice of all double-hearted Papists, who have learned the doctrine of Equiuocations, that swear one thing and think another. These men are content to say anything, because they have their mental reseruations that they keep to themselves, like unto Hushai, who pretended friendship unto Absalom, and to join with him against David: Whō the Lord and this people, and all the men of Israel shall choose, his will I be, and with him will I dwell, pretending this to Absalom, but intending it to David: he maketh show to speak it of one, but understandeth it of another. This legierdemaine he hath bequeathed to his disciples the Jesuits, who are grown much more cunning & crafty then their master. These are they that dissemble with God and man, and have one heart for the Prince, another for the Pope, who is the greatest enemy y^e Princes have. Against these and others that take y^e Name of God in vain, we are taught here how to swear, which everyone doth not know, & few practice aright these rules. We must not be ignorant, that it ought to be done in truth: such love to God & our neighbor should b^e in us, that we are to deal without colouring of matters, without hypocrisy, without forging, so y^t truth should prevail, and have the upper hand. Secondly, in judgment, for fear of rashness. We must not deal rashly but discreetly: not foolishly, but wisely, and when necessity requireth and urgeth an oath of us. An oath is as a medicine. No man taketh physic for wantonness, being not well advised, but upon necessity, either to prevent, or to preserve, or to restore. So no man useth an oath for delight or pleasure, but sometimes to prevent a mischief, sometimes to preserve from wrong, & sometimes to restore a mā to his right. And this is to swear in judgment. Lastly, it must be done in righteousness, to wit, for the good & profit of our neighbor. For when we are called to an oath, that which we promise or undertake must be honest and righteous, that we do not sin in swearing, which were to heap one sin upon another; as we see in Herod the king, who, because he had promised with an oath, sent and beheaded John in prison: and in the enemies of Paul, who bound themselves with a vow, y^t they would eat nothing, until they had killed Paul.

The fifth point in an oath, is the end wherefore it was ordained: one end was in respect of God, the other in respect of men. In respect of God, the end is his own glory, who made all things for the magnifying of his Name, and the manifestation of his glory. This we ought to aim at in all things, Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. Secondly, in respect of our selves to confirm some truth, and decide some controversy, as when our name, or goods, or life are in question. To come to particulars, the ends of a lawful oath are these four: first, allegiance and obedience to Princes, as we see in the elders of Gilead, who, entreating Iphtah to be their captain, & to fight their battles against the Ammonites, sware unto him that he should be their head and governor, and that they would be subject unto him, The Lord be witness between us, if we do not according to thy words. In like manner Jehoiada the Priest, making Joash king, whō he had preserved from the massacre executed against the blood royal, and hidden six years in the house of the Lord, took an oath of the captains & guard, that they should obey the king whom he shown unto them. Whereby we may conclude that Christian Princes may bind their subjects by an oath, and that subjects may & ought to swear to do all homage unto their Princes: so that it argueth a treacherous intent & meaning in the Popish sort that refuse to take the oth of allegiance, as if they meant to perform no duty to their lawful Princes. For all such as are the Popes subjects cannot be true subjects: & if he that challengeth a supremacy be their Prince, y^e Prince cannot be supreme. Again, an oath may lawfully be taken to confirm a league and establish a covenant between man and man, to assure those we deal with, that we for our parts mean faithfully, & purpose to keep it inviolable. And we have sundry examples hereof in holy Scripture Abraham entered into a league with Abimelech, and confirmed the same by oath. For when Abimelech said, Swear unto me here by God, that thou wilt not deal falsely with me, nor with my son, &c. he answered, I will swear. The like is shown afterward, how Abimelech maketh a covenant with Isaac at Beer-sheba; he said, Let there be now an oath betwixt us, even betwixt us and thee, and let us make a covenant with thee, that thou wilt do us no hurt, as we have not touched thee, &c. and they arose up betimes in the morning, and sware one to another. The like agreement by oath passed between Jacob and Laban, Gen. 31.53. So did David and Jonathan make a faithful league between them, and confirmed it with a solemn oath, 1 Sam. 18.3. and 20.8. and 23.18. As then we may swear to witness our allegiance to Princes, so also we may, for the confirmation of covenants betwixt others and our selves. Thirdly, it is lawful to take an oath for the deciding of controversies that arise between party and party, which otherwise cannot be ended. Some things are committed and conveyed away in such secret manner, that they cannot possibly come to light, but only by an oath, so that Magistrates are forced to put men to an oath, to witness the truth in the Name of God. When one is found slain in the field, and it is not known who hath slain him, the Lord commandeth that the elders of that city which are next unto the slain man, shall come into his presence, and to say, Be merciful, O Lord, unto thy people Israel whom thou hast redeemed, and lay not innocent blood unto their charge, Deut. 21.8. So we shown before out of the Epistle to the Hebrews, that the end of an oath is the confirmation of a truth. Woe therefore unto them that use it, and fear not to take it, for y^e confirmation of an untruth. Lastly, we may lawfully swear to justify our religion, and to bind our selves thereby unto his worship. When men grow cold and careless, or stand wavering and halting between two opinions, as if they knew not whether they should worship God, or Baal: we may strengthen our selves, and confirm our hearts in the purity of religion; as in the days of Asa, they entered into a covenant to seek the Lord God of their fathers, with all their heart, and with all their soul: that whosoever would not seek the Lord God of Israel, should be put to death, whether small or great, whether man or woman: and they sware unto the Lord with a loud voice, and with shouting, and with trumpets, and with cornets. These are the chief ends of an oath: and therefore in every Christian Commonwealth it ought to have place: without which many evils would lie hidden and unknown, many men would be hindered in their right, and many good duties would be vnperformed. It is a good duty to testify our subjection to our Princes and Magistrates. It is a good duty to give assurance to men of our faithfulness in keeping covenants. It is a good duty to end controversies, and thereby to become peacemakers. It is a good duty to bind our selves not to start back from our holy religion & profession, but to continue constant unto the end: all which are the benefits that proceed from an oath.

Lastly, the adjoined properties of an oath, are to be considered. For as every oath is not unlawful, so every oath is not lawful: & therefore we are to mark, what are lawful, & what unlawful. Those are lawful that disagree not with God's word: those are unlawful that are contrary to it. The lawful oaths are undertakē of such things as are true, certainly known, possible, godly, necessary, profitable, weighty and worthy so great a confirmation. If these or any one of them be wanting, the oath becometh wicked: if they concur and meet together, so that we be duly prepared thereunto, it ought to be performed. On y^e other side, if the matters undertaken be false, or uncertain, or unknown, or impossible, or unprofitable, or unnecessary, or wicked, or frivolous and light, the oath is unlawful, and to perform it, is to add sin to sin, as we noted before. For he that sweareth to perform that which is false, maketh God that is truth witness of an untruth: he that taketh an oath o^r uncertain things, sweareth with an evil conscience, and considereth not what he doth, neither regardeth the presence, the power, and punishment of God, when he presumeth to make God a witness of the things which he knoweth not whether they be truth or untruth: he that taketh an oath of any wicked thing, maketh God to favor and approve that which he hath forbidden in his Law, and is flatly contrary to himself: whosoever taketh an oath of impossible things, mocketh God and man to their faces, forasmuch as he cannot have a purpose and resolution to perform that which he speaketh and sweareth. He that taketh an oath lightly, declareth that he hath no reverence or fear of God before his eyes. And this is a most certain rule, that whosoever commonly sweareth, commonly forsweareth, or at least will make no bones of it, if he see any advantage to come by it: because he that maketh no conscience of the one, will not make any of the other. Thus we have handled y^e doctrine of oaths: let us now make conscience of them, & take heed we take not the Name of God in vain. He is jealous of his honor and glory, let us not abuse his patience. Though he be slow to anger, yet he is great in power: and albeit he bear long, & forbear much, yet he will not clear the wicked. Although Princes do not make statutes against it, yet the statute law of God hath decreed against it, and condemned it, & set a great penalty upon the breach of it. We have sundry laws y^t none abuse our names: but we have none for y^e preservation of God's Name, and therefore God will look to it, and take order for it. No commandment hath had more visible judgments executed vpon the breakers of it then this. The plague of God shall not depart from his house that is a swearer, one judgment or other shall overtake him: and if he do escape, the greater torment is reserved for him in the life to come The Prophet Zacharias telleth us, y^t God will consume the timber and stones of his house.

The son of the Israelitish woman that blasphemed the Name of the Lord and cursed, is brought forth without the campe, and stoned to death, Levite. 24.14, 15. and thereupon a Law established, Whosoever curseth his God shall bear his sin, It is lamentable to consider the wretchedness of profane men, notwithstanding the greuousnesse of this sin. Many are of such a ruffian-like spirit, that they fear not to tear in pieces the Lord of life, and to crucify again the Son of God, as much as in them lieth. We our selves are jealous of our own names, and the names of our parents and posterity: no marvel then if God be exceeding jealous over himself. If we will not glorify him, he will glorify himself, and his Name in our destruction. He may wink at us for a time, as also at our manifold and monstrous oaths, but he hath not forgotten them; he keepeth a book of accounts as a register against us, and when the great day of the Lord shall come, he will bring forth the records, and set our sins in order before us. Let us not think to escape, because sentence is not speedily executed: the more he delayeth, the more he hoardeth up punishment for us. The longer the arrow is in drawing, the deeper it will pierce when it is shot out against us. He suffereth them to live in security for a time, but they shall taste of severity in the end, Job 24.23. and 21.30. The wicked is reserved to the day of destruction, & they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath.

23 And the Priest shall write these curses in a book, and he shall blot them out with the bitter water.

24 And he shall cause the woman to drink the bitter water that causeth the curse: and the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her, and become bitter.

25 Then the Priest shall take the jealousy offering out of the woman's hand, and shall wave the offering before the Lord, and offer it upon the Altar.

26 And the Priest shall take an handful of the offering, even the memorial thereof, and burn it upon the Altar, and afterward shall cause the woman to drink the water.

Hitherto we have seen the things that go before the trial: now we come to such as are more nearly joined with it, which are these. He must write the curses in a book, and then blot them out with the waters of bitterness before remembered. But before the woman drink of the waters, he must take the offering out of her hand, and wave it before the Lord, and then offer it unto the Lord. Lastly, he is to burn a part of it upon the altar, and afterward cause the woman to drink the water.

[Object.] Here the question may be asked, wherefore the curse must be written, and afterward blotted out? If it must be blotted out, what need it to be written? If it must be written, why should it be blotted out? I answer, [Answer.] it was written to note out the stableness of God's judgments, and the certainty of his truth. And therefore also it was uttered in words, expressed in actions, and established by writing. In word, of the adjuration: in work, of the drinking up of the water: in writing, of the whole fact, as it was done before the Lord. Nevertheless, this writing was so extant, that it continued not long, but was so clean defaced that none could read it; because God would not have the remembrance of such filthy causes and ielouses, and suspicions to remain to posterity, lest any be inflamed with the like passion, and so bring into imitation such like practices.

[Verse 23.24, &c. And the Priest shall write these curses, &c. We see in this place the former ceremonies, and circumstances farther urged and pressed near to the conscience of her that was suspected and stood before the Lord to be tried. She is caused and commanded to drink of these waters prepared for this purpose. These waters that cause the curse shall enter into her, and become bitter.

This is the means that God will use to manifest things that yet are hidden in secret, and such as should bring an heavy judgment upon her that was guilty. We learn from hence, that whoredom is always punished of God, and never escapeth unpunished. Howsoever adultery be not regarded among men, and thought either no sin, or a little and venial sin, yet God findeth it out, and ceaseth not to plague and punish it both temporally and eternally, both in this life, and in the life to come.

This we see set forth before us at large throughout the whole book of God. What was the cause that brought the flood upon the old world, and swept away the inhabitants thereof? was it not for their uncleanness, and the lusts of their eyes, and the looseness of their life?

The like we might say of Sodom and Gomorrhah, and the cities about them, who giving themselves once to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. When Balaam was not suffered to curse the people of God, he gave the Moabites and Midianites this damnable counsel, to allure them to commit fornication; by which means many perished, as we shall show afterward in the 25 chapter of this book: whereunto also the Apostle alludeth, 1 Cor. 10.8. when he saith, Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand. It must needs be a grievous sin that brought down so grievous a judgment. A like fearful example we have in the book of Judges, when the Levites wife was abused unto death, there followed the destruction of the beniamites, so that there fell of them five and twenty thousand, & almost one whole tribe of Israel was wanting. This is it which the Lord threatened to his people, Levite. 18.24.25 20. Ye shall not defile yourselves in any of these things: (among which this was one, to defile themselves with their neighbors wife by carnal copulation) for in all these, the nations are defiled, which I will cast out before you, and the land is defiled, therefore I will visit the wickedness thereof upon it, and the land shall vomit out her inhabitants. The Prophets are full in all places of the like threatenings. There is a notable testimony to this purpose, Ier. 5.7, 8, 9. where the Lord complaineth of this iniquity, and of the abuse of his manifold benefits, Though I fed them to the full, yet they committed adultery, and assembled themselves by companies in the harlots houses: they rose up in the morning like fed horses, every man neyed after their neighbors wife: shall I not visit for these things, saith the Lord? shall not my soul be avenged on such a natiō as this? We read in the book of Genesis, that when Pharaoh at the commendation of his Courtiers had taken Abraham's wife into his house, the Lord plagued him and his house with great plagues, and they ceased not until he had restored her again, and given his servants commandment to do him no hurt.

The like we might also speak of Abimelech the king of Gerar, when he also sent and took her, though he had not yet come near her, but only purposed evil, yet the Lord came to him in a dream by night, and said unto him, Behold, thou art but dead, because of the woman which thou hast taken, for she is a man's wife. So then there is ordained for all adulterers and fornicators both temporal and eternal punishments. These sins shall bring a man to beggary, even to a morsel of bread, Prov. 6.26 they shall root out his house, destroy his posterity, consume his flesh, waste kingdoms, yea shut out of God's kingdom, and bring to the condemnation of the devil; forasmuch as no unclean thing shall enter into the heavens, but all murderers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and whoremongers shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death.

[Reason 1] The reasons hereof are these. First, the wrath of God is kindled against such. In his favor is happiness, but if his wrath be kindled but a little, blessed are all that trust in him. For this cause the Apostle saith, Ephe. 5.6. Let no man deceive you with vain words, for, because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. In the words going before he had shown, that no whoremonger, or unclean person hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God; the reason is, because such lie under the heavy wrath of God. He is angry with them, and therefore woe unto them. If the child see the father angry with him, how is he grieved? what saith the Lord unto Moses, concerning the sin of Myriam his sister? If her father had but spit in her face, should she not be ashamed seven days? And the Apostle to the Hebrews, chap. 12.9. We have had the fathers of our bodies which corrected us, and we gave them reverence, shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? What subject can bear the displeasure of a Prince? The fear of a king, saith Solomon, is like the roaring of a Lyon, Prov. 19.12. and 20.2. and 16.14. who so provoketh him to anger, sinneth against his own soul. If the lyon hath roared, who would not fear? as testifieth y^e Prophet. Seeing then the wrath of a king is as messengers of death, what shall we think the wrath of the King of kings to be? who is even a consuming fire, Hebr. 12.29. and devoureth all as straw and stubble before him.

Secondly, it appeareth to be a grievous sin, because it is worse then theft, as Solomon [Reason 2] maketh the comparison, Prov. 6.30.32. Men do not despise a thief, if he steal to satisfy his soul, when he is hungry, &c. but whoso committeth adultery with a woman, lacketh understanding: he that doth it destroyeth his own soul. It is an odious name to be called a thief: but it is more odious to be called an whoremaster. A thief when he hath stolen is carried to the gallows: but the adulterer deserveth it much more. What an horrible offense is it to destroy a man's own soul? we pity him that layeth violent hands upon his own body, and killeth himself. Who doth not account Saul, and Achitophel, and Judas most infamous, who perished with their own hands? but the adulterer doth a thousand times worse, he destroyeth his own soul, which is a greater price then the body.

Thirdly, adultery and uncleanness defile [Reason 3] the land: not only the persons and the houses, but whole cities and countries, until all become abominable, and the land become full of sin: and therefore no marvel though it be punished of God. To this purpose the Lord speaketh in the Law of Moses, Levite. 19.29. Do not prostitute thy daughter to cause her to be a whore, lest the land fall to whoredom, and the land become full of wickedness. This sin is of an infectious nature above other: suffer it but a little▪ and it will quickly increase, like fire that is kindled in dry wood, which suddenly taketh hold, and easily passeth from one to another until the whole be enflamed.

Fourthly, we must know what our calling [Reason 4] is. The Gentiles that knew not God, and were ignorant of his law, defiled themselves with these abominations, and were cast out before his face: for the land did spew them out as loathsome. But we have learned better things, and God hath vouchsafed us greater mercy; he hath called us to be an holy people to himself, and redeemed us that we should serve him in holiness and righteousness all the days of our lives. This the Apostle noteth, 1 Thess. 4.3, 4, 5, 7. This is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication, that everyone of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honor, not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles which know not God, &c. for God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. To this we shall add sundry other reasons afterward, when we make use of this doctrine.

[Use 1] This serveth to teach us sundry instructions both touching our knowledge, and concerning our obedience. First, let no man flatter himself in this sin. It is accounted of the greatest sort, a small and sleight matter, a venial sin, a trick of youth. Such scoffers as these, it seemeth, were in y^e Apostles times, but now they are more common, as the sin is more commonly practiced, and aboundeth everywhere. This doth the Apostle declare, 1 Cor. 6.9. Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor adulterers, nor the effeminate shall inherit the kingdom of God. It is a fire that shall devour to destruction, and bring strange punishments upon the workers of such iniquities, Job 31.3.12. This serveth to reprove diverse sorts of men: first, such as think fornication to be a thing indifferent, and no great matter to be stood upon. But is it a thing indifferent unto us, whether we ever come into God's kingdom or not? or is it a trick of youth to loose heaven, and to be banished from the comfortable presence of God? We shown before that whoredom is worse then theft, and to rob any of their chastity, is a thousand times more heinous then to take from them their money. It bringeth with it the heinous sin of idolatry. It spoileth a man's neighbor of an irrecoverable benefit that can never be repaired or restored, being once lost. It dishonoreth & embaseth the children y^t are so begotten, depriving them of the common right of inheritance that belongeth unto others, Deu. 23.2. It bringeth dullness and deadness of heart upon men and women, making them senseless in sin, and to rush without conscience into many, or rather into any other, as the Prophet Hosea teacheth, chap. 4.11. Whoredom, and wine, and new wine, take away the heart. He joineth together two sins that are near neighbors and very familiar one to another, to wit, uncleanness and drunkenness, which above all other brutish pleasures besot us, and bereave us of understanding, and reason, will and affections, so that we delight and take pleasure in nothing but in sensuality. The better the Lord doth feed us, and the more liberally he multiplieth his blessings upon us, the more we abuse them to wantonness, and spend them in voluptuousness. Such is our unthankfulness to God, that the more he enlargeth our prosperity, the more we kick against him, and lift up our heels to spurn at him that giveth us our meat in due season, and satisfieth our souls with marrow and fatness. Such is the great corruption of our natures, and the contagion of sin that dwelleth in us, that it infecteth God's good creatures, and turneth his benefits into curses. The more our gracious God doth remember us, the more ought we to remember him again: and the more he serveth us, the better ought we to serve him, the more zealous we should be of his glory, the more dutiful and diligent to please him in all things. We are like to the Sodomites; they inhabited a place very fruitful, it was like the garden of God, wherein Adam dwelt: howbeit they turned Paradise into hell, and abused all his good gifts, to pride, gluttony, drunkenness, wantonness, filthiness, and to all manner of unlawful and unnatural lusts. The more the Lord in mercy bestoweth upon us, the greater obedience we ought to yield unto him: and where he giveth greatest wages, he worthily and justly requireth the greatest work. Woe then unto such as give themselves over to the beastly pleasures of the flesh, that make wise men fools, and turn men into beasts, insomuch as men endued with common sense and natural reason may wonder at them. Their carnal lusts so blind their eyes that they run headlong into all mischiefs. They regard not their good names, neither care what other men think of them. They spend their strength and life upon harlots, they waste their bodies and consume them with foul and filthy diseases. They esteem them of greater excellency then any other; they cast off all care of their wives, of their children, and of their families, as if they were strangers or enemies unto them. They cut short their own days, and waste their substance, & sometimes bring themselves to extreme beggary; and that which is more fearful then all these joined together and bound in a bundle, they damme and destroy their own souls.

Hence it is that the holy Scripture best able to define wisdom and folly, and to set down who are the greatest fools, doth by way of eminency and excellency, brand the sin of uncleanness with the title of folly, and calleth all adulterers fools. When Jacob's sons understood that Shechem had deflowered their sister, they were grieved and exceedingly offended at it, because he had wrought folly in Israel, Gen. 34.7. Tamar dissuading her brother from forcing and ravishing of her, useth this reason, No such thing ought to be done in Israel, do not thou this folly, 2 Sam. 13.12. Solomon is preferred before all the Princes that were before him, or should come after him for his singular wisdom, and he gave himself above others to know wisdom and folly: and therefore let us hear what he saith of it. In the sixth chapter of the Proverbs, he teacheth, that whosoever committeth adultery with a woman, lacketh understanding. And in the chapter following, describing the leudnes of wanton persons, he saith, At the window of my house I looked through the casement, and beheld among the simple ones, I discerned among the youthes, a young man void of understanding, &c. yea, such is his resoluteness to go forward, and madness that infatuateth him, that he compareth him to an ox led to the slaughter, and as a fool to the correction of the stocks: and such is their rage and violence in their distempered and disordered lusts, that Jeremiah compareth them to fed horses, because they neighed after their neighbors wives. Many there are that follow these follies, that think scorn to be ranged and marshalled among thieves, horses, dogs, and to have their impieties expressed with such comparisons: but we need crave no pardon of them, if we cal them as the Scripture calleth them, which knoweth who they are, and what they deserve, and by what names they are to be named. Let us now rip up these things afresh, and examine the difference between the judgment of the most pure and holy God, and the judgment of the impure & unclean men. They account whoredom and adultery to be kindly sins, tricks and toys of youth: but the glass that God setteth before our eyes maketh them look as ugly creatures and most deformed monsters, such as none should be enamored off. These fleshly lusts fight against our souls, and make continual war upon us, seeking to destroy us utterly. Is it a trick of youth to waste our bodies, and to bring upon our names a perpetual blot? Is it a thing indifferent unto us, whether we save our souls or destroy them? Is it indifferent unto us, whether we be reputed wise, or fools: men, or beasts: such as are made after the image of God, or pampered horses, unclean swine, and filthy dogs? Is it a venial sin to defile the land, and replenish it from one corner to another, with all wickedness? Let such take heed, lest in the end they find no pardon at the hands of God for these venial sins: and beware betimes lest these light offenses be so heavy a burden upon their hearts, that they weigh them down to hell. Then they shall find to their cost and sorrow, that it was the greatest folly in the world to run headlong into these evils, and to defer their repentance till it be too late.

Secondly, it reproveth such as live cunningly and secretly in these sins of uncleanness, and think if they can hide them from the eyes of men, and from the sight of the world, all is well, no hurt or harm shall befall unto them, and come upon them. If they profess Christian religion, and resort to the Church, and hear the word of God, and present themselves to the Lord's Table, they suppose they live in no danger, they account themselves as good Christians as the best. This is a course taken to deceive our selves, and such do no better then make a covenant with death, and a league with hell, Isaiah 28. He hath delivered many threatenings in his word against this sin, which must needs be accomplished: because he is not as man that he should lie. It is in vain therefore to flatter our selves with the foolishness of security, or hope of secrecy, or the ignorance of men, or the darkness of the night, or the solitariness of the place, or the cunning of hypocrisy, or any other means of concealment, forasmuch as we have to do with God, before whose eyes all things are naked and open. This committing of sin in secret, and presuming to carry it away close, because no man seeth us, is on the one side to turn God into an idol, making him to sit idle in heaven, and on the other side to transform our selves into Atheists, as if God could be blinded and deceived of us. This made the Prophet to say, Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I fly from thy presence? if I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there, &c. If I say, surely the darkness shall cover me, even the night shall be light about me: yea, the darkness hideth not from thee, but the night shineth as the day; the darkness and the light are both alike to thee: for thou hast possessed my reins, thou hast covered me in my mothers womb.

So then, where the knowledge of man faileth, and the hand of man ceaseth to execute punishment against this sin, God's eye taketh notice of it, and his justice will cause him to proceed against it, so that there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known. Many indeed are cunning hypocrites, and can deceive the faces of men: but they cannot so color their sins as to cozen God thereby, who will pluck off their vizards, and wash away their paintings, and open their disguisings, that the hollowness of their hearts shall be made manifest to all men.

The last reproof is of the Church of Rome, that erect a stews in all places where Popery is professed, and so warrant the toleration of fornication. The Law of God is manifest, Deut. 23.17. There shall be no whore of the daughters of Israel, neither shall there be an whorekeeper of the sons of Israel. God condemneth the thought, and therefore cannot allow the fact of simple fornication, for that were to make the spirit of God contrary to it self. All enticements and provocations unto sin are reprov'd, of which this is a principal. How then can he that boasteth of his Holiness warrant by the word of God the erection and continuance of his stews, albeit he gain thereby a yearly rent into his coffers? Or how could that monster and devil incarnate, Sixtus the fourth, set up a stews of both kinds, that is, of men and women, whereby he obtained some years 20000, and some years forty thousand duckats as a yearly pension, which those filthy persons paid for the free liberty of that sin? This was most base and beastly gain, though the man of sin think it sweet gain that is gotten by worse then the excrements of Rome. A man would think it most strange that they should open their mouths in defense of open sin and impiety: and yet many among them are not ashamed to become proctours for the stews. It is well known how commonly the Priests themselves resort unto such infamous places, & therefore no marvel if some of them shame not to open their mouths in defense of their own practice, among which are two of no small note among them, to wit, Harding and Parsons. Harding in his pretended confutation of the apology of the Church of England, calleth the stews a necessary evil for the avoiding of a greater mischief: and though (being charged) he dare not deny there be twenty thousand of that generation in Rome that prostitute their bodies for gain, yet he excuseth them all, and telleth us that we are too young to controlle the city of Rome in her doings.

The like we might say of Parsons, for he in his confutation of John Nichols recantation, hath thought it a matter well beseeming his labors to handle this point at large (who is often said to have been under the Chirurgians hand for this sin) and so to justify the doings of himself and of his fellows. I will set down their reasons, that we may see, know them, and examine them, and disprove them. Nothing is so impious & wretched that some men will not go about to justify. It is well known that a Divine, a great Divine among them wrote a treatise in defense of Sodomy, as these do in defense of whoredom. And this is the deep judgment of God upon those that not only restrain but utterly forbid marriage to their Clergy, (which the Apostle calleth the doctrine of devils) to give them over both to defend and practice all kind of uncleanness. But let us see their reasons, whereby they would prove this evil to be necessary. [Object 1] First, they allege the heat of the country, and therefore not fit that Harlots should be banished from among them. I answer, [Answer.] this is no sufficient warrant to set up stews, no more then it is to marry many wives. It becometh not a Christian man, much less a professor of Divinity to hold, that where there is greatest heat, there may be greatest whoredom.

This is the rule of God's word, that wheresoever the greatest allurements and provocations are to any sin, there ought to be more watchfulness to cut off all occasions. And why I pray you might not they among the Indians justify the marrying and keeping of a multitude of wives, where the heat far surpasseth the heat of Rome, and of all Italy? or wherefore doth God restrain the Jews his own people from whoring and committing fornication, where the climate is as hot and much hotter then in Popish places where stews are erected? Doth whoredom defile the land, and is it a necessary evil? But enough of this reasonless reason, whereof I think the Popish sort are ashamed, if they have any shame or any reason left in them. A second argument is this, y^t a civil Magistrate, & consequently [Object 2] the Pope, may, for the avoiding of a greater inconvenience, tolerate and permit this sin, without fault and without being charged with any allowance of the sin it self. It is one thing to approve, and another to allow a thing; as God permitteth many wicked acts in the world, which notwithstanding he detesteth. I answer, [Answer.] the comparison is unequal, that I say not, it is blasphemous. It is the fearful judgment of God upon his enemies, to make such monstrous and misshapen conclusions. God hath a royal prerogative above his law, and is not subject unto it, but to the righteousness of his own will. He permitteth the abominations that are committed, that by his infinite power and wisdom he may turn all things to the glory of his mercy or justice. It is not so with the Magistrate, he must be obedient to the law of God, and all his authority is to be subject unto it: it is his office to punish known evil, and not to permit it: neither is he able to turn evil into good by his suffering of it. Besides, it will not follow from hence, to speak nothing of the Popes temporal jurisdiction, and of the right he claimeth to be a temporal Prince; neither can it any way justify his practice, who raiseth rents and taketh fines for bawdry, and therefore maketh himself no better then a bawde to whores and knaves, forasmuch as he maintaineth them, and they maintain him. They have streets and houses assigned unto them where they shall dwell, and he taketh their money which they pay with ease, and live in bravery and excess with the rest.

Lastly▪ we may conclude from this reason, that Magistrates if they list, may permit all manner of wickedness, and suffer it to escape unpunished, and not be charged with the allowance of it. For if this reason do hold in one particular (God may permit, therefore the Magistrate may) it is good in all; which were to open a gap wide to all profaneness, Libertinism, Atheism, and Epicureanism. A third argument [Object] is this, a naughty thing may sometimes be necessary, and being necessary, and consequently impossible to be removed, it must needs be tolerated without fault, as they go about to prove by testimony of Christ, there must be offenses, Matth. 18.11. and of Paul, there must be heresies, 1 Corinth. 11.19. Here is a necessity of offenses and heresies, yet Christ and Paul were not in fault, neither did they allow heresies. I answer, [Answer] first I would know, whether they mean, every wicked thing, or only some wicked thing. I suppose they mean not in general, that every naughty thing is so necessary that it should be tolerated; for then they must speak plainly with the devils tongue, and openly utter his language. Do they then understand it of some naughty and wicked thing, that is necessary, and so to be tolerated? Then the reason must be framed in this manner, Some evil is necessary, and therefore to be suffered: but the stews is some evil that is necessary, and therefore the stews ought to be tolerated. Everyone meanly seen in the art of reasoning knoweth that: the form of this reason is stark naught, and neither necessary nor to be suffered: for of particulars nothing can follow. Again, they pervert and corrupt the meaning of Christ and his Apostle. Such things as cannot be avoided, may be accounted necessary according to the decree of God. When he purposeth to try his children, & to have them discerned from hypocrites, oftentimes evils, yea, even heresies break forth from the corruption of men. This is true, we confess: and so much the places prove and infer. So then we must distinguish of toleration, which is of two sorts, there is a toleration of necessity, and a toleration of negligence. The one is good, as when a Magistrate having a subject that committeth treason, or such heinous crime that he cannot punish by reason of his own weakness and his subjects power, this he must bear of necessity, because he hath no remedy; so David dealt toward Joab, when he had slain Abner with the sword, 2. Sam. 3.39 I am this day weak, though anointed king: and these men the sons of Zeruiah be too hard for me: the Lord shall reward the doer of evil, according to his wickedness. Where we see he tollerateth the evil which he could not remedy, and referreth the execution of justice unto God that was of ability and power to punish it. So may the Magistrate bear with patience for a certain season, not failing in his duty: howbeit this must not be always, for when there is no such cause to suffer a known sin to escape unpunished, he may not wink at it and bear with it. There is also a toleration that is evil, which is done of negligence, carelessness, and overmuch lenity and indulgence; this is no necessary toleration, as when Eli bare with his sons in his old age, & did not chastise them for their offenses; this way do they offend, that punish not at all those that are to be punished, or punish lightly such as are to be punished severely. This toleration of negligence cannot be implied from the former places of Scripture, seeing that to justify the wicked and to condemn the innocent are both of them equally an abomination unto the Lord. Proverbs 17.15.

Lastly, I would gladly understand, whether our adversaries would reason thus, Heresies must be, therefore tolerate heresies, and suffer heretics to remain: therefore burn not heretics, confute not heresies, but let them alone? If they dare not reason thus, why do they press us with the like consequent? if they will needs conclude after this manner, what wrong have they done to our brethren, and how much innocent blood have they shed in the late days of persecution? O that this argument had been coined and urged in Queen Mary's days among us, or might now prevail with the Spanish Inquisition: then should not the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held, cry out with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood, on them that dwell on the earth? The last argument is this, that the Protestants permit usury by their laws, and do not punish [Object 4] men for taking ten in the hundred: which is done to meet with a greater inconvenience or mischief: and so doth the Pope with his stews.

Hereunto we may add, that which Parsons patcheth together after his trifling manner, namely, that we allow not the Catholics absenting themselves from the Church, and yet we make them pay for their recusancy? I answer, [Answer.] to the first instance, that if we punish not all biting gain, or suffer the poor to be oppressed, we cannot be excused, but are to be blamed: forasmuch as the word of God forbiddeth to oppress the poor by usury, Exo. 22.25. Levite. 25.35, 36. Deu. 23.19. Touching the second instance or example that he giveth of taking a fine of Catholics by way of punishment for not coming to Church, as the Pope doth a yearly pension to punish the harlots: it is a very unequal comparison, and he dealeth with us as in the former reason. It is of necessity, saith Christ, that scandals must come, therefore the stews must be permitted. That is one false conclusion. Another is like unto it, It must be permitted, therefore it must be let alone without punishment: so that they understand a thing that must needs come, to be all one with this, a thing of necessity must be winked at, and left without punishment. So touching their Recusants, the comparison is many ways faulty. First, if the penalty were duly inflicted upon these his friends, it would pinch them & sting them much more, then the payment which the Pope receiveth from the stews: forasmuch as the Curtezans make such a gain of that filthy market and sale of their bodies, as that they pay that money with ease, such is the custom they have coming in. Secondly, the Papists are not suffered openly to have their Masses, nor to exercise idolatry, nor to have places allowed them in one certain place in all cities and countries, as harlots are permitted to commit whoredom freely, and to recover their hire by action at the Law, in case any deny to pay the price agreed upon between them. If they had free liberty given them to practice their superstitions, it were somewhat that is said of them: but forasmuch as they are restrained, the comparison holdeth not. Thirdly, the Papists cannot make an apparent gain above that which they pay for their not coming to Church, and therefore it differeth much from the Popes punishment, who allow them the means to enrich themselves by the overplus that they retain to themselves. Before we shut up this point, let us use some reasons against this sufferance of open whoredom, not to be suffered in any Christian Commonwealth and therefore wheresoever the Gospel of Christ is openly professed, and freely received, the stews and brothel houses are pulled down, and are dispersed and scattered away as clouds before the Sun.

First, no Magistrate may suffer any sin ordinarily unpunished frō generation to generation, and take a yearly rent for it, which impeacheth the glory of God, hurteth y^e Church, and annoyeth the Common-wealth: but to suffer unchaste women in a certain place, and to permit the people without danger of law, or fear of punishment to resort unto them, is ordinarily to suffer sin unpunished; therefore the Magistrate, who is the Minister of God, bearing his person, and ministering his justice, and executing his sentence, may not, and cannot without contempt of God suffer unchaste women in his kingdoms & dominions: forasmuch as he carrieth not his sword in vain, but is an avenger in wrath to him that doeth evil.

Again as no man in general, so no Magistrate in particular may do evil, that good may come thereof, whose damnation is just, saith the Apostle, Rom. 3.8. But to permit a stews and to take a rent (not one half of their foul and filthy gains) to the end that adultery may be forborne, is to do evil that good may come of it; forasmuch as to commit any sin is to do evil, and to fail in anything is to transgress the Law, and not to punish when we ought to punish, as we see in Saul that spared the Amalekites, 1 Sam. 15. and in Ahab that suffered Benhadad to escape out of his hand whom the Lord had appointed to utter destruction, 1 King. 20.42. Therefore no Magistrate may suffer whoredom to go unpunished, under what color and pretence, to what end and purpose so ever he do it, though it should be to remedy a greater evil

Moreover it is utterly unlawful to lie, albeit it might redowne to the glory of God, Rom. 3.7. and therefore I may not suffer my brother to lie, if by lawful means I may keep him from it. We may not in God's cause speak iniquity or use deceit, Job 13.7.8. Will you speak wickedly for God? and talk deceitfully for him? will ye accept his persō? will ye cōtend for God? Much less therefore accept the person for avoiding adultery, and take yearly rent of the stews.

Lastly, no Magistrate may openly suffer that to be, which God hath expressly said in his word shall not be: but it is expressly and directly forbidden to suffer a whore in Israel, and to take the wages of an whore for his house, and therefore for the Church. This sin is abominable to the Lord, and draweth down his wrath wheresoever it is committed, and therefore albeit they say that in judgment they do not allow it, yet in the judgment of God and his word they maintain it; and so much the rather, because the prohibition of marriage in sundry Orders beareth sway among them. What thing will not these men presume and be bold to defend that spare not to open their mouths and sharpen their pens to maintain incontinent living and confessed filthiness? Or when may we think they will begin to reform the Church of God, that in so long a time cannot redress their open stews? It was truly said by Bernard, Take once from the Church honorable marriage and the bed undefiled, and thou fillest the same full with Brothel-houses, with keeping Concubines, with incests, with pollutions, with wantons, and with all sorts of filthy persons: how then is not he guilty of these horrible abominations that forbiddeth marriage, yet calleth himself the Vicar of Christ, the head of the Church, and the holy One of Israel? We must abandon vain and vicious remedies which are more grievous then the manifest diseases. Tertullian testifieth truly, that stews are execrable and accursed before God. And the Emperor Justinian notwithstanding all forged necessity & falsely named policy, straitly commandeth that harlots be banished out of all towns.

Secondly, seeing God is the punisher of all [Use 2] whoredom and uncleanness, it is our duty to eschew harlots, as the most dangerous creatures in the world. It is well said of Solomon, Prov. 2.18. Their house tendeth to death, and their paths unto the dead, And afterward chap. 23.27. he saith, An whore is a deep ditch, and a strange woman is as a narrow pit: and therefore it is good to keep our selves from falling or entering into the same. So in another place he describeth the practices, the allurements, and the deceits of such, Prov. 9.15.16.17.18. She sitteth at the door of her house on a seat, in the high places of the city, to call passengers who go right in their ways; who so is simple, let him turn in hither and as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him, Stollen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret, is pleasant; but he knoweth not that the dead are there, and that her guests are in the depth of hell. Such naughty women are called everywhere in this book strangers, though they be too familiar and well known, and thrust themselves into the company of others; because they should be strangers unto us, and not of our acquaintance. There is nothing more common in them, then to entice young men by wanton gestures, lasciuious words, and plausible persuasions, to dalliance and delight: It is a great favor of God to be preserved from their baits, and kept from their snares, yea, it is a far greater mercy to be secured from harlots, then to be kept from the pestilence: & they show greater wisdom that shun and pass by their houses and company, then they that forsake places & persons that are infected with some dangerous and deadly disease. Everyone is forward to beware he come not near any pest-house for fear of his life: but if we assemble into harlots houses, we run in danger of soul & body. It is an easy matter to fall into a pit where a man may be drowned, but it is not so easy to get out of it. The wanton woman is as a deep ditch, and a narrow pit, and a dangerous hole, whereinto a man may slip hastily & at unawares; but he shall hardly come out from thence, or deliver himself, without the special goodness of God, pulling him as it were out of the fire, and setting his feet in safety. For as a thief lurketh in a den or wood to get a prey, so doth she lie in wait, and useth baits to steal away the hearts of men, and thereby prevaieth mightily with many in the world. Among all dangers, this is not the least that Solomon speaketh of, None that go unto her, return again, neither take they hold of the paths of life. These words do not absolutely deny repentance to them that are fall, or shut the gate of mercy against them that have sinned, but the meaning is, that few, yea very few escape destruction, & return to salvation, because they sildome repent. It is a very rare thing to see a penitent adulterer: they leave the sin when it leaveth them, because they can follow it no longer, but they do not repent of it, they do not sorrow for it, they do not fly from it. Hence it is, that you shall hear many old men, whose strength is decayed, whose bodies are withered, whose feet are already entered in a manner into their graves, laugh heartily at the remembrance of their tricks of youth, and talk wantonly & filthily of the pranks which they have played; so that from the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh, and their corrupt communication testifieth, that they never soundly repented of their uncleanness. No marvel therefore if the wise man peremptorily declare, that few or none of those that are given over to this lewdness of life, do come to repentance: for albeit some few find grace, yet in comparison of such as run on headlong, & live securely to the end in their wickedness, they may worthily be said to be none at all. They are so blinded & besotted, that they cannot see their own filthiness; they are so dull and deaf, that they cannot hear those that admonish them, nay they hate those that reprove them. The Apostle Paul exhorting the Corinthians to fly fornication, which was most common in those days, and esteemed a slight or no sin at all, useth many notable reasons of great weight & importance, & worthy to be considered of us. One reason or motive is this, that our bodies are the Lord's, and must be serviceable unto him, The body is not for fornication, but for the Lord. Wherefore hath he given to us our body, but y^t we should serve him in our body? We are not to yield our members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin, but we ought to yield our selves unto God, as those y^t are alive from the dead, and so make our members as instruments of righteousness unto him. First therefore the Apostle reasoneth frō the end of our creation. Secondly, the Lord Jesus is ordained & appointed to be the Redeemer & Savior, not only of the soul, but also of the body, & therefore he saith, the Lord for the body. Fornication and sanctification cannot stand together, but are contrary one to the other, so that they cannot abide in one subject. Christ came into the world to this end that he might redeem our bodies by his death out of y^e power of the devil, and sanctify them by his Spirit. If then we give our selves as servants to obey the lusts of the flesh, we make void the glorious work of our redemption, wherein mercy, justice, and truth kissed one another. For herein we see the truth of God's promise accomplished, that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpents head: and the truth of his threatening fulfilled, that man offending, should die the death. Herein we may behold y^e wonderful justice of God, that because man had sinned, man must be punished; for otherwise he had not been a just God. Lastly, hereby appeareth the unspeakable mercy of God toward mankind; who, albeit his justice were such, that rather than sin should go unpunished, he would punish it in his Son, who bare our sins in his body, and made intercession for our transgressions, yet found out a way how to redeem us, when we cast our selves headlong into all misery, and made our selves subject to the greatest thralldom that ever was. We are delivered from the hands of our enemies, sin, the world, and the devil, y^t we should be holy unto him that hath called us. The third motive is drawn from the glorious resurrection of our bodies, as the former was frō the gracious redemption of our bodies. If we would have them live with him forever y^t shall raise thē up, we must abstain from filthy lusts w^c defile the body; & therefore the Apostle saith, God hath both raised up the Lord, & will also raise us up by his own power. The author of this great benefit and wonderful work, is God, w^c passeth and exceedeth man's reason. Hence it is, that he putteth us in mind of his power, because he is almighty. If it were not impossible unto him to create our bodies out of the dust of the earth, why shall it not be possible to raise them out of the dust again? Nay, if he were able to make thē of that w^c was nothing, inasmuch as the Apostle teacheth, y^t the things which are seen, were not made of things which do appear; how much more shall he be able to give to everyone his body w^c he had before? Again, he teacheth, y^t God hath raised already the Lord Christ frō death to life, & therefore will raise us also. We are the members, he is y^e head. Therefore if the head be alive, he will no• leave the members dead, so y^t if he be risen frō y^e dead, we shall rise again. How thē shall we that are appointed to glory, defile our bodies beastly lusts, the end and wages whereof is shame and ignominy? Seeing then Christ Jesus hath determined to make our bodies glorious, let us not make them foul and infamous, for as much as the reward of fornication is shame, not glory. If then we look that these frail and mortal bodies should be partakers of immortality at the last day, let us keep them as fit vessels to receive honor and glory, and everlasting life. It is no small offense to pollute the body of Christ with filthiness and uncleanness, which God raiseth frō the dead, and maketh it sit most glorious in the heavens. The fourth motive to work in us the detestation, and to lay before us the danger of whoredom, is this; the members of Christ are not to be made the members of an harlot: but our bodies are the members of Christ, therefore we ought not to make them the members of an harlot. Now the bodies of the faithful are called the members of Christ, because Christ is the head of the church, and performeth the office of an head unto it, into which all the elect are grafted by faith. If any man were asked, whether he would willingly rent or pull away a member from Christ's own body, to make it the member of an harlot, he would utterly deny it, he would be ashamed of it, he would be ready to defy him that should charge him with it. Howbeit, the Apostle feareth not to lay that imputation upon such as commit fornication; they separate themselves quite away from Christ, so that it must needs be a deadly sin which parteth and pulleth us from him. Wherefore he saith, Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ? Shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid. Hereby then we must learn, how heinous whoredom is, because we are the members of Christ; but by it we make our bodies the members of an harlot: which is as much in effect, as to turn Christ himself into an harlot, and to make him a whoremaster, then which nothing is more reproachful and dishonorable unto the glory and majesty of Christ. For the Church is the mystical body of Christ, w^c he hath redeemed with his blood, whereof he is the head; and by his Spirit so joineth it to him, that it is made one spiritual body with him. So then, every faithful person is one member for his part of the body of the Church, and of Christ the head, joined with him by faith, & quickened by his Spirit. He y^t joineth himself therefore to an harlot is made one body with an harlot, so that of the members of Christ, he shall make them the members of an harlot, and thereby cease to be any longer the members of Christ; then which, what can be more dangerous to us, or more reprochful to Christ, or more dishonorable to God? The fifth motive to dissuade from fornication, is because this sin is committed against the body, whereas all other sins are without the body. He that committeth whoredom defileth and abuseth his own body, and leaveth a proper stain and blot upon it, making it both the subject and the object of his sin. It is not so with the thief, or the murderer or the slanderer: they deal with the life, with the goods, and with the good name of another. But the whore-master useth his body as the instrument, and sinneth against his own body more then any other. Hence it is that the Apostle saith, Fly fornication every sin that a man doth, is without the body: but he that committeth fornication, sinneth against his own body. If a man kill himself, he hurteth indeed, his own body, howbeit he useth sword or knife, or fire, or water, or some such like instrument which is out of the body: but the fornicator both useth and abuseth his own body, he maketh it either instrument or object, or subject, or all of them.

The sixth motive that is used, is this; That our body is the Temple of the holy Ghost: whereupon the Apostle would have it inferred, that a fornicator is a sacrilegious person, because he hurteth and wrongeth the temple of God. But Whosoever defileth the Temple of God, him shall God destroy, for the temple of God is holy, which temple we are, 1 Cor. 3. ver. 17. Temples are ordained and appointed for holiness and pure actions, and are not therefore to be profaned with filthiness, forasmuch as they be consecrated and dedicated to God which is most pure and holy. To this purpose he speaketh and argueth, What? Know ye not that your body is the temple of the holy ghost, which is in you, which ye have of God? If our bodies be Temples, they ought to be kept clean and decent of us. The Apostle nameth the body in this place, as he did also before, in regard of the matter he hath in hand, to the end he might withdraw us from the defiling and poluting of our bodies. We heard already, that our bodies are the members of Christ, & here he saith, Our bodies are the Temples of the holy Ghost; not that our souls are excepted and exempted, for they are made partakers of Christ, and we are the Temples of God in soul and body, as he speaketh in the second Epistle, Ye are the Temples of the living GOD. 2 Cor. 6, 16. If he dwell in us, let us beware of fornication, because he will not inhabit and abide in defiled bodies. He is the spirit of purity, therefore we must be pure: he is the spirit of holiness, therefore we ought to be holy, otherwise we are not his. He will dwell in a clean house, therefore not in a sty of unclean and filthy swine. Let us take heed, we grieve not the spirit of God, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption. Eph. 4. The Gentiles knew by the light of nature, that they ought to keep their temples swept and garnished. Christ whipped out of y^e temple such as bought & sold in it: yet what are these, but lime & stone, and such corruptible stuff: how much more then ought we to look to our selves, our souls & bodies, y^t we do not defile them, and God destroy them. The Temple of Jerusalem was burned, and the Ark carried away for the sins of the people: there is no holiness of place can privilege us, if sound Religion be wanting in them that inhabit it. Thus was it also at the destruction of Jerusalem foretold in Scripture, after the Gospel of Christ was preached, the abomination of desolation was set in the holy place, so that one stone was not left upon another that was not thrown down. If then, God spare not most holy places consecrated to his service, thorough their sin that abuse them, let us not doubt, but our own bodies shall be smitten by the hands of God, except we keep them pure and undefiled.

The last motive to keep us from this sin, is to know that we are wholly God's, and not our own, to do what we list, or to dispose of our selves. We are Christ's, therefore it is our duty to glorify him by living chastely and continently. He hath redeemed us from the power of the devil, by paying the price of his precious blood, as of a Lamb unspotted. God hath good right to challenge us as his own, forasmuch as he bought us at a dear rate, and we cost him more then a world, nay a thousand worlds of riches and treasures. Christ gave his life for us, a price far greater then all men caⁿ conceive. For what can be imagined so precious, as the dignity, the majesty, & the glory of God, which were all after a sort, changed and diminished, when he took our nature upon him, and suffered in it the cursed and shameful death of the cross. Therefore it is that the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 6, 19, 20. Ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price, therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, for they are God's. It is the property of Justice to give to everyone his own, and not to use that which is another man's as his own. Our bodies are another man's right, therefore we may not abuse them to filthiness at our own carnal pleasures. We have not authority over our selves, to dispose of our selves; therefore we are as another man's servants. We belong to Christ and to GOD, therefore we must live according to his will. Christ hath bought us with a great price and hath redeemed us from hell, from Satan, from death, and from sin, therefore we be Christ's; we pertain as a proper possession to him, and no man can lay claim unto us. Let us live as cometh his servants, our profession, our calling, and our redemption: but they that follow after fornication serve his enemy, forasmuch as our sins were the enemies that put him to death.

[Use 3] Lastly, let all married persons live chastely, and keep the vessels of their bodies in holiness and in honor. There is indeed a twofold chastity, one of the single life, the other of the married. Chastity of single life, is with all carefulness, with fasting and prayer, to keep their minds, affections, and bodies in holiness. Chastity in marriage is, when the pure and holy use of wedlock is observed. Hence it is that the Apostle saith, Heb. 13, 4. Marriage is honorable in all, and the bed undefiled: but Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. Matrimony is an holy league or covenant, as it is called in the Scripture. If a man forge or falsify a covenant that is made in bargain and sale, either by conueying some secret title or interest to himself, or by suborning false Witnesses, it is, and ought, to be sharply and severely punished. But behold by an unclean life, the chief and most holy Covenant that can be in the world, is broken and violated. A solemn declaration is made of the faith that the husband oweth to the wife, and the wife to her husband: they come into y^e church (as it were) into the presence, and before the face of God, they call upon him to be a witness and Judge, if either of them keep not promise: yet oftentimes all this vanisheth away and cometh to nothing. Hence it is that the Lord complaining against the people of Israel, and convincing them of whoring, and such like wickedness, threateneth them, that Therefore the Land shall mourn, and everyone that dwelleth therein, shall be cut off, with the Beasts of the field, and with the fowls of the heaven, and also the Fishes of the sea, shall be taken away. Hosea chap. 4. and the 2. & 3. verses.

This sin spreadeth far, like a foul and unclean Leprosy, and catcheth hold of one part after another, till the whole body be defiled; like to fire, that being once kindled, runneth from one place to another, until all be consumed. There is an adultery of the heart, Math. 5, 28. condemned by our Savior Christ, which being once entertained, is compared to a burning or boiling, 1 Cor. 7.9. that so disturbeth and disquieteth the soul, and the exercises of the soul, that it cannot suffer a man to serve the Lord in a quiet mind and a pure conscience. There is an adultery of the eyes, which are as the windows of the heart, 2 Peter chap. 2. verse 14. as Saint Peter speaketh of fleshly minded men, Whose eyes were full of Aduiterie. This made Job to make a Covenant with his eyes, that they went not astray, and caused him to go astray. The looking after a woman to lust after her, is called by Christ, the committing of Adultery. And the Prophet reproveth the daughters of Zion, because they walked without-stretched necks, and wanton eyes, Esa. chap 3, verse 13. There is an adultery of the ears, the which we fall into, when we listen unto unchaste and unclean talk uttered by others, when we have itching ears after it, and are content to hear it, and yet show no dislike unto it, no hatred of it. There is another adultery, and that is of the tongue; when we take delight in unchaste speeches, and filthy Ribaldry, by which, the hearts of others are corrupted, and our own are <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> manifested to be corrupt already, forasmuch as from the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, Mat. 12. What religion soever we profess, it is in vain, we deceive our own hearts, except we learn to bridle our own tongues, I am. 1, 26. And the Apostle giveth this exhortation, Ephes. 4, 29. that no corrupt communication should proceed out of our mouths, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace to the hearers. And in another place he teacheth, that evil communications corrupt good manners. Lastly, there is an adultery which is outward in fact, and is called sin finished: all the former are as steps & degrees leading to this, and in the end bring it forth as a birth which they have conceived. For wherefore do unclean persons nourish in themselves the adultery of the heart, of the eyes, of the ears, and of the tongue, but because they purpose to commit the outward act when time, and place, and person, and other occasions shall be offered unto thē? But we must be careful to avoid all these kinds, which should not be named among Christians, as becometh the Saints of GOD. No marvel therefore, if this wickedness be punished of God with heavy judgments, as that which in an high degree sinneth against God, against our neighbor, and against our selves, as we have noted in sundry particulars before. We sin against God, because we resist and withstand his will, whose pleasure it is that we bring forth the fruits of sanctification; we pollute and profane the holy ordinance of Matrimony; we make the members of Christ the members of an harlot, and so seek to draw (as much as in us lieth) our blessed Savior into a filthy fellowship of our sin; we defile the Temples of the holy Ghost, and turn them into stews. Against our neighbor, because this sin is not committed alone, but we draw some other to be partakers with us in the same wickedness & punishment; we sin against the wife or husband of the married-party, whom we wrong in the chiefest treasure & possession that she or he hath: we sin against the fruit of our own body, whom we disgrace & brand with a note of perpetual infamy, which for the most part prove a degenerate brood through want of good-education, and especially thorough the secret judgment of God: we sin against our own families, which we oftentimes over-turn by defiling of them, & turn our houses into stews: we sin against the Cities, societies, & kingdoms where we abide, because we defile the land, and cause it to vomit out the inhabitants: we sin against the church of God, both by hindering the propagation thereof, which increaseth by an holy seed, and by causing it to be evil spoken of by others, as if it wer a company of unclean persons. Against our selves, because we make our bodies the instruments of sin and Satan: we weaken them, and make them subject to diverse diseases, and we plunge souls & bodies into the pit of hell, which burneth with fire and brimstone. Such then as are adulterers, do not go into hell alone, they carry other company with them. If then the judgments of poverty, beggary, infamy, infirmity, folly, and impenitency will not move us to make conscience of this sin, yet let this prevail with us, that thereby we destroy our own souls, and exclude our selves from his presence. Let us therefore be watchful over our own ways, let us pull up the root of this sin, and all other of the same sort, and mortify the deeds of the flesh, Col. 3, 5. Let us cut off all occasions that may draw us to them, as surfeiting, drunkenness, idleness, wantonness, profane company, and such like. And above all these things, let us observe these three things: First, let us remember that as God is holy, so he requireth an holy people to serve him. It is his will that we live in sanctification, so that without holiness no man can see God, or have fellowship with him, Heb. 12. Secondly, we must learn to fear God in his word, and mark the commandment that forbiddeth adultery. Nothing maketh us to fall into sin, but the forgetting of the Law, which saith, thou shalt not sin. This stayed up Joseph in a strong temptation, which being yielded unto, did set before him a fair show and goodly train of all pleasures, profits, & honors; but being withstood, did threaten him with a multitude of miseries, hatred, poverty, sorrow, shame, imprisonment, destruction, and death it self: yet he eschewed the sin by this means, Shall I do this, and sin against God? The word of God must be made our wisdom and direction, our guide, and our counselor; it is able to deliver us frō the stranger that flatteteth with her words. This is it that Solomon setteth before us, My son, keep thy fathers commandments, and forsake not the law of thy mother: bind them continually upon thine heart, and tie them about thy neck, &c. For the Commandment is a lamp, and the Law is light, &c. to keep thee from the evil woman, from the flattery of the tongue of a strange woman. He teacheth, that the lips of a strange woman drop as an honey comb, and that her mouth is smoother then oil, but her end is bitter as worm-wood, and sharp as a two-edged sword: how then shall we be delivered from her, if the word of truth be not in our mouths, and that which is more, in our hearts, to rule and reform us, and to order our paths aright? Such as are ignorant of the word, are soonest over-taken, and they that have not the love and power of it dwelling in them. The foolish woman, that sitteth at the door of her house, and calleth the passengers that go right in their ways, maketh choice of such as are simple and want understanding, to turn in unto her.

Lastly, let us keep inviolable the Covenant of marriage, made in the presence of God, of Angels, and of men: let the married persons make one another y^e delight of their eyes, and the joy of their hearts, and be careful to perform the duties they owe one to another. And, as the unlawful & impure conjunction of man and woman is detested of God: so is holy matrimony ever accepted of him, and adorned with many blessings, and crowned with a continual supply of the fruits of his love and favor. The Prophet saith, Blessed is everyone that feareth the Lord, & walketh in his ways; for thou shalt eat the labor of thine hands, happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee: thy wife shall be as a fruitful Vine by the sides of thine house, thy children like Olive plants round about thy table: behold that thus shall the man be blessed that feareth the Lord. Riches are the inheritance of parents, but a prudent wife is a special gift of God, and we receive her as at his hands. The Apostle doth beautify it with an honorable title, when he calleth it honorable in all. It is the spirit of error w^c calleth that unclean which God hath sanctified. Adultery is foul and unclean, but the marriage bed is undefiled. Damnable then is the decree of Pope Syricius, that marriage it self is the pollution of the flesh, & that the married cannot please God. Devilish also is the law of forced chastity, restraining some orders and degrees from it: whereas to avoid fornication, every man is commāded to have his own wife, and every woman her own husband.

22 And when he hath made her to drink the water, then it shall come to pass, that if she be defiled, and have done a trespass against her husband, that the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her, and become bitter, and her belly shall swell, and her thigh shall rot; and the woman shall be a curse among her people.

28 And if the womā be not defiled but be clean, then she shall be free, and shall conceive seed.

We have shown already, that in setting down this law of trial, Moses observeth 3. things. First, the cause is propounded. Secondly, the question and controversy is determined. And lastly, the event of the whole is delivered. The two former have been handled before. Now we come to consider the issue and effect of the whole matter according to the determination of God. For, as he foretold what should come to pass, so he faileth not in it, but accordingly verieth the same. Whatsoever he hath spoken shall fall out, whether he promise anything unto us, or threaten anything against us. He is not as man that he should lie, neither as the son of man that he should repent, as Balaam by the Spirit of God prophesieth hereafter in this book, Chapt. 23. verse 19. And Christ our Savior teacheth. Math. 5, 18. that Heaven and earth must pass away, but one word of his mouth shall not pass away, but all shall be accomplished and fulfilled.

This event here mentioned is twofold: First, respecting the guilty in the 27. Verse, where it is shown, that she shall perish according as she sinned, and her name shall turn into a Proverb of cursing. Secondly, in respect of the innocent; because by drinking of the water, she shall receive and feel no hurt, but God will turn that wrongful suspicion, and causeless calumination into a great blessing, and so reward her innocence, that he will turn the heart of her husband toward her (who hath the hearts of all men in his power, and turneth them about as pleaseth him) so that they shall mutually love one another, and be blessed in their children that shall be given unto them.

Now the question may be asked, [Object.] whether this force, to discern between the guilty and the innocent, and to bring to light the things that were hidden in darkness, were in the water it self, and a quality inherent in it, and infused into it? I answer, [Answer.] we must ascribe no power to the water it self, which in regard of the substance, was no other then common Water, forasmuch as both the guilty and the vnguilty did drink of it, or at least might drink of it. The whole force proceeded from the operation of God, and his holy institution. The brazen Serpent, set upon a pole, and looked upon by them that were bitten by the fiery Serpents, did heal them; so that albeit they were stung, yet they died not. How came this to pass? Was it in regard of the matter? or of the form? Surely, of neither; but all the virtue proceeded from GOD, the author of it.

When Christ healed the blind man, John 9. verse 6. He spate upon the ground, and made clay of the spettle, he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay, and bad him wash in the pool of Siloam, who went his way, and washed, and returned seeing. All men know, and can easily judge, that this could not by any natural operation, restore sight to the blind; so that it was Christ that healed him, not the spettle, not the clay, not the annointing, not the washing. This may be expressed and conceived by the miracle y^t Christ shown upon the woman that had an issue of blood, Mat. 9, 20. She came behind him and touched the hem of his garment, for she said, If I may touch but his clothes only, I shall be whole: what then? Did his garments heal her? or were they the cause that her fountain of blood stanchd and dried up? No, it was the power of Christ that gave a blessing to y^e weak means; and therefore he saith to his disciples, Some body hath touched me, for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me. He saith not, out of the border of my garment which she hath touched. She touched indeed the garment of Christ, but it was her faith in Christ that made her whole.

So in this place, both sorts that came to be tried, drunk of the water, and according as they were either innocent or not innocent, so it fell out unto them: howbeit it was God that understandeth all secrets that brought the truth to light, not any inherent strength that was in the waters.

[Verse 27. And when he hath made her to drink the water, &c.] Here we have observed, that the success of the whole business is contained: wherein Moses declareth, what doth follow, and most certainly come to pass, if the woman have been abused. Here is set down the temporal punishment that shall come upon her. The more she hath stood upon her purgation, and the greater her impudency and shamelesnesse hath been, the more notorious is her sin, and the more notable is her punishment. God having all means in his own hand, could have punished her (if it had pleased him) otherwise: but to make it the better appear, that he is the maintainer and preserver of marriage which is his own institution, and that all might acknowledge the judgment to be from his hand, he punisheth her in those parts wherewith she had offended. He hath all diseases in his own power to bring upon the breakers of his ordinance, and the transgressors of his Law: he might therefore have stricken her with the leprosy, or with plague and pestilence, with the consumption, with incurable agues, or with such an issue of blood, as we heard off before in the woman that was cured by touching of Christ's garment; but to brand her with a perpetual mark of infamy, and to show how he hateth adultery, he meeteth with her in her own kind, and punished those parts of her body which she had abused. She had opened her feet, as the Prophet speaketh, to everyone that passed by, so that she became as a wife that committeth adultery, which taketh strangers instead of her husband. Her filthiness was poured out, and her nakedness discovered, her belly and thighs communicated to another: howbeit her pleasure should be turned into pain, and she should be judged as women that break wedlock: she should feel the curse of God, & end her days in reproach: for as she had sinned with her belly, so her belly should swell through greatness and anguish: and as she had opened her thighs, so they should rot away, so y^t she should be punished where she most deserved, and become a fearful spectacle of a forlorn creature and a living carcass, consuming in her flesh, and dying being yet alive. We do all learn from hence, that God doth not only punish sin, but he punisheth sin in his own kind. He dealeth with men and women in his punishments, as they deal with him in their transgressions: so that according as we sin, so we are punished.

We see this by infinite examples laid before us in the word of God. Consider with me, the enemies & persecutors of Daniel y^t sought his life, and caused him to be cast into the Lions den; but how doth God meet with them? he might have revenged himself upon them by his own immediate hand; but he would not, for they perish and are punished the same way: for the king commanded to bring those men that accused Daniel, and to cast them into the den of Lions, who had the mastery over them, and brake all their bones in pieces, or ever they came at the bottom of the den. David sinned in committing of adultery with the wife of Uriah his faithful servant, and destroyed him with the sword of the Ammonites: he is paid home and punished in his own kind: for God, by way of rewarding and serving him as he had served others, as a just judge doth raise up evil against him out of his own house. His own sons break out into the same sins, and he kindleth such a fire in his own family, that they rise up against him, and one against another. Absalom spreadeth a tent, and lieth with his fathers concubines in the sight of all Israel: Amnon deflowreth his sister Tamar; to revenge this, Absalom killeth his own brother. Experience teacheth us, that blood requireth blood, so that the murderer requireth vengeance of God, albeit peradventure he escape the hand of the Magistrate. We see this in Joab, he shed innocent blood, and escaped a long time as if it had been forgotten, but at length his blood was shed, and his hoare head went not down to the grave in peace. This is it which Christ telleth us, Matth. 7.1, 2. Judge not, that ye be not judged: for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. He that rashly and unjustly censureth others, feeleth at one time or other the smart of it in the like kind: for God raiseth up others justly, albeit they defame him unjustly, that thereby he may be recompensed. This is that which Samuel bringeth into the remembrance of Agag the king of Amalek, 1 Sam. 15.33. As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women: so he hewed him in pieces before the Lord. Neither need we go far to fetch examples of this truth, or turn over histories of ages past, for we have it sealed up to us in our days and times wherein we live, I mean in those of the pretended holy league in our neighbor kingdom: they confederated themselves to root out true religion and the professors thereof, out of the face of the earth; they bend all their forces to effect it: but the Lord that sitteth in heaven laugheth them to scorn, and hath thē in derision: he hath rewarded thē to the full, and that in their own kind, he turned their weapons upon themselves, and sheathed their swords in their own bowels, as he dealt with the Midianites that slew one another. The example of Haman is famous and well known, he set up a gibbet to hang Mordecai, because he bowed not unto him: howbeit himself was hanged upon it, and fell into the pit he had prepared for another; but Mordecai escaped, and was delivered, and advanced, who spake good for the King, as appeareth in the book of Ester.

[Reason 1] The reasons are evident to be seen, and easy to be found out. First, the justice of God is thereby cleared, and the mouth of iniquity stopped. For what have we to allege or answer for our selves, when God retaileth us according to the sin that we have committed? Doubtless, we have no excuse, or pretence, or allegation for our selves; but we must confess with our own mouths, even against our selves, that God is righteous, and we are unrighteous. This appeareth in the book of Judges, in the example of Adonibezek being taken by Joshua and the people, he had his thumbs and great toes cut off: for he confessed, that the justice of God had found him out, and requited him in his kind, according to his own cruelty, Judge. 1, ver. 7. Threescore and ten Kings, having their thumbs and their great toes cut off, gathered their meat under my Table: as I have done, so God hath requited me; and they brought him to Jerusalem, & there he died. If then God be just, he cannot but measure all his actions by justice, for no unrighteousness is found in him, as he will make men themselves confess.

[Reason 2] Secondly, the Lord cannot abide a measure and a measure, they are an abomination unto God, as Prov. 20, 23. Divers weights are an abomination to the Lord, and a false balance is not good. The Judge of all the world, cannot but deal justly and truly. This reason is expressed by the Angel of the waters, Revel. 16, 5, 6. Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shall be, because thou hast judged thus: for they have shed the blood of Saints and Prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink. Where he concludeth, that their blood must be shed, that delighted to shed y^e blood of others, because God is a righteous Lord. His justice shineth among men, in all places, in that he recompenceth the wickedness of men by a like punishment sent from him, so that their punishment is answerable to their sin.

[Reason 3] Thirdly, the ungodly are fully worthy of such punishment. It is meet that malefactors have their deserts: how then can they complain of iniquity or injustice, so long as they receive their own, and he payeth them the debt he oweth them with their own money? GOD will give to every man according to his works, Rom. 2. and give their wages according to their merits. This reason is also added in the former place of the Revelation, where the Angel chargeth them that they had shed the blood of the Saints, and putteth them in mind, that God had done them no wrong, when he gave them blood to drink: then he annexeth the reason, for they are worthy. If then we consider the deserts of men, how great they are, we cannot marvel, whē at any time we behold the hand of God stretched out against them in this manner, and recompensing them with such measure.

Fourthly, let us mark what God requireth [Reason 4] at the hands of Magistrates in his Law, to wit, that they recompense like for like. Moses saith in the Law, Thou shalt pay life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe, Exod. 21, 24. Such a blemish as he hath made in any, such shall be repaied to him, Levite. 24, 20. Neither was this law repealed or disliked by Christ our Savior, Math. 5, 38. Forasmuch as in that place he only condemneth the abuse of it by private persons, according to their private affections and lusts of revenge, who are not Magistrates. If then the Lord will have the higher powers recompense the sinner according to the manner of his sin: we may not doubt, but he that is above all, will measure his works according to the rule of justice, which is most equal. Therefore, whatsoever measure we mete, it is just we should receive the like again: that he which taketh the sword, should perish with the sword: that he which spoileth, should be spoiled: that he which leadeth into captivity, should be led into captivity, Revel. 13, 10. That what a man doth, the same he should suffer: that by what a man sinneth, by that he should be punished: that evil should hit the worker, and the offender be pressed with his own example. This is the law of equity and equality, that men suffer the same things of others, which they have offered unto others. Thus then we may conclude this truth very strongly, upon the ground of these reasons, that God punisheth men and women in the same things wherein they offended & dishonored him.

Let us make use of this doctrine, which I [Use 1] purpose at this present, briefly to point out, because we shall have fit occasion to handle it afterward in this book. First, this ought to teach us to set a watch over our selves, to keep out the practice of sin, that carrieth such a tail and train after it. The sinner shall never escape, but find a punishment answerable to his sin. This is a notable bridle to induce us to abstain from all manner of sin. We see this in whoredom, which is the point that is aimed at in this chapter. Forasmuch as men are slack and careless in punishing of it, God bringeth upon them that continue in this sin, and follow it with greediness, such loathsome and noisome diseases, as our forefathers never knew, neither heard off. If we be wise to commit new sins, shall not the wise God catch us in our wisdom, and be wise enough to find out punishments that be proportioned according to our transgressions? Let us therefore watch over our hands and hearts, over our tongues and mouths, over our eyes and ears, and over all the members of our body, lest to our great grief and sorrow, we find and feel the fruit of our iniquities. This is that which Christ in one particular pointeth out, Math. 7. Judge not, that ye be not judged, &c: teaching us that all such as censure others, procure and provoke judgment upon themselves; so that we ought to keep the door of our lips, and govern our tongues aright. This is one main cause of slanders and defamations that are so common in the world, the beginning of them for the most part, is in the person himself that is defamed. It is the ordinance and appointment of God in his wisdom & providence, that such as give rash judgment, should have rash judgment given of them. Here is then a lesson to be learned, to make us beware of all sin, considering it hath such a penalty going with it, or following it hard at the heels, and lying at the doors ready to enter upon us. If we did only hear and understand that God will certainly punish sin, & that none shall be able to escape at what time he shall search Jerusalem with lights, and visit the men that are frozen in the dregs of their evil ways: were not this sufficient to withhold us from it, and cause us to abstain from all wickedness? For how can we hide our selves from him, or how can we deliver our selves from his presence? He that made the eye, shall he not see? and he that made the ear, shall he not hear? But the doctrine that now we deal withal, doth not only teach us that God will assuredly punish, but that he will punish us according to our sins. It is one part of justice to punish, and another to punish as we have sinned. Both of them do serve to clear God of injustice, and to stir us up to consider, that so often as we provoke him to anger by our sins, he sleepeth not, neither hath his sword rusting in his sheath, but draweth it out after he hath whet it, and striketh the sons of men with a terrible stroke. Nay, that which is more, when we transgress his commandments, & walk stubbornly against him, he holdeth the balance in his own hand, that he may weigh us out our punishment with an equal weight: and when we have filled up the measure of our sins, he will also give us a full measure pressed down, and running over.

Hence it is, that the Lord threateneth, Levite. 26, verse 24. that if we walk stubbornly against him, he will also walk stubbornly against us, and smite us yet seven times for our sins. If we set our faces against him, and will not obey him, he will set his face against us, & will chastise us seven times for our sins in his sore anger and heavy displeasure, and bring seven times more plagues upon us, according to our deservings. When we have sinned against him, and will not be reformed, it might bring comfort, or at least some ease, if we might be assured that our punishment should be mitigated. For the consideration of a slight and slender punishment, might slake our care and endeavor of striving against sin. But we are taught, that our transgressions against God, and his afflictions upon us for them, shall be squared one to the other. A lesser sin shall not have a greater punishment; neither shall a greater sin have a lesser punishment: but with what measure we mete to him, with the same it shall be measured unto us again. This doth our Savior Christ press against the Jews, Math. chap. 23, verses 32, 35. Fulfill ye the measure of your fathers, that upon you may come all the righteous blood that was shed upon the earth, from the blood of Abel the righteous, unto the blood of Zacharias the son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the Temple and the Altar. So then, it standeth us upon to examine our selves, and to consider how greatly we sin, and how grievously we offend the Majesty of God. If we add sin unto sin, we may be sure he will add judgment unto judgment. A necessary point carefully to be marked of us, who have received the mercies of GOD in greater measure then many others. If they escape not that have received little, doubtless they shall not escape that have received much. If they shall be beaten with few stripes that know not the will of their master, they shall be beaten with many, that know it and do it not. Luke 12, ver. 47, 48. If Sodom and Gomorrhah were destroyed with fire and brimstone, which knew not the Law nor the Lord, then Capernanm which was lifted up unto heaven, must be brought down to hell: For if the great works done in it, had been done among them of Sodom, they had remained unto this day. Mat 11, 23. Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required, and to whom men much commit, the more of him will they ask. If we be not careful to walk in his ways, we are of all people the most unthankful: so that as our blessings have been great, our plagues and punishments shall be grievous, except we repent.

Secondly, as God threateneth to punish according [Use 2] to the manner of our sinning, so he will bless those that please him and serve him in fear and trembling, according to the manner and measure of our walking before him. Here then on the other side we have a gracious promise, not only of a blessing, but of a blessing answerable unto our obedience. This is a notable encouragement unto us in well-doing, and as it were a spurr to prick us forward to perform such duties as he requireth at our hands. This is it which he promiseth to Abraham, Gen. 12, verses 2, 3. I will make thee a great Nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing; and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curse thee &c. If any did good to Abraham, he should receive good again: if any were a friend to him, he should have God to be a friend unto him. This is that which God performed to Ebed-melech, he saved the life of Jeremiah, and therefore he had his own life given unto him as a prey. Ier. 39, 18. For when the Prophet was cast into a deep dungeon, where he stuck fast in the mire, the Ethiopian went unto the King, and spake for him, so that by his means his life was saved, and he was taken out of the pit, where he must have perished. What then? Doth he lose his reward? or is GOD unmindful of him? No, he receiveth blessing for blessing, mercy for mercy, and life for life: and therefore when the King of Babylon took the City, and put the people to the sword, he was delivered, and was not given into the hand of the men of whom he was afraid. Do we then any good to God's Church and Children? it shall not go unregarded and unrewarded to a cup of cold water: we shall receive measure for measure, good for good, blessing for blessing. Can we desire or look for a better recompense? Or would we have a farther means to incite us to follow our calling. We have a double encouragement to serve such a master, who will reward us according to our service. For while we do good to others, we do as much good to our selves. Will any man be an enemy or hindrance to himself? Do we not by the light of nature love our selves, make much of our selves, help our selves, & wish all good to our selves? This is the way to attain unto our desires, and to receive a blessing from the hands of God, to do good to others: for then God hath bound himself by promise, to be merciful to us. There is that scattereth, saith Solomon, & there is more increased. The way and means to receive & increase our substance, is to give and to distribute, like the husbandman that must sow his seed before he can reap his fields, and gather in his harvest. The covetous man thinketh otherwise, because like an Idolater he trusteth in his money; but in the end it bringeth him nothing home. The Prophet Elijah was sent of God to Sarepta, to a widow in the days of famine, she had no more left but an handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse, so that she was gathering sticks to dress it for her self and her son, that they might eat it, and die. Nevertheless, of her penury she sustained the Prophet, she made him a little cake first, and brought it unto him. She did good to the holy Prophet of the Lord, howbeit she did more good thereby to her self and her son: she relieved him, and thereby relieved her self, For the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail, according to the word of the Lord, which he spake by Elijah, 1 Kings 17, 16. Luke 4. The like we might say of Obadiah; he hid the Prophets of God by fifty and fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water, whē many other perished: howbeit he did hereby no small good to himself, forasmuch as thereby he obtained rain, and plenty of all things. This is it which our Savior promiseth in the Gospel, to his Disciples that followed him; There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake and the Gospels, but he shall receive an hundred fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come, eternal life. Mark. 10, 29, 30. Job is commended in Scripture, to be a just man, fearing God, and eschewing evil, and by occasion of his friends taxing of him with hypocrisy, and accusing him of iniquity, is compelled to stand upon his own innocence, and to make a solemn protestation of his integrity, Job 31, 19 that he had not seen any to perish for lack of clothing, or any poor without covering, he was an eye to the blind, a father to the fatherless, and as an husband to the widow. He had his children, and his substance taken from him, and he bare his cross with patience. What then was the end that the Lord made? or how was he blessed of God? The end of the history declareth this at large, the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before; and as he had comforted others, and visited them in their necessities, so his brethren and sisters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, resorted & repaired unto him, and comforted him over all the evil that the Lord had brought upon him: and as he had been bountiful to others, so every man gave him a piece of money, and everyone an ear-ring of gold: yea, the Lord blessed the latter end of Job more then the beginning, so that he obtained many sons and daughters, and a great increase of cattle. Onesiphorus oft refreshed Paul, and was not ashamed of his chains: the Apostle prayeth, that the Lord would grant unto him, that he might find mercy of the Lord in the great day, 2 Tim. 1, 18. This poin• being thoroughly learned, will minister great comfort to everyone of us, being assured that as God punisheth in manner as we sin, so he will bless us and reward us after the manner of our obedience. Have we comforted others? God will comfort us, & turn the hearts of others to comfort us also? Have we done good to others? he will stir up others to do good to us. Have we relieved others? we have laid up a good foundation for the time to come, we shall be relieved by others in our necessities. Do we give unto the poor? We do not only lend unto the Lord, but we provide well for our selves, forasmuch as that we give shall be paid unto us again.

We read in the book of Nehemiah, not only how zealous he was for the glory of God, but also how careful to show compassion to the people of God, and to provide for them in their necessities, and to deliver them from the oppressions of the mighty: in consideration whereof, he is bold to entreat the Lord to think upon him for good, according to all that he had done for his people, Neh. 5, 19. So is it lawful for us to crave of God to be mindful of us in goodness, according as we have done to others, and dealt toward them. If we remember God, we may be assured that he will remember us. If we be careful to hear his word, he is careful to hear our prayers according to his promise. He will return like for like, care for care, hearing for hearing, and blessing for blessing. If we be careful to hear his voice, his ears are open to hear us: and if we bless him, he will bless us. And as he hath promised to hear them that hear him, so he hath threatened not to hear them that will not hear him. Prov. 1, 28, 29. They shall call upon me, but I will not answer: they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me: for that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord. And to this purpose speaketh the Lord in the Prophets; They shall cry unto the Lord, but he will not hear them: he will even hide his face from them at that time, as they have behaved themselves ill in their doings. This is a grievous threatening, and full of all discomfort. It is as it were the top of all misery, to have God stop his ears against us. To live in this sort, is worse then a thousand deaths. If a Subject had a petition to put up to the Prince, and knew he would turn away his face from him, how near would it go unto him? and how would he be discouraged? Or if a child knew, that whatsoever he asked of his father should be denied unto him, except he obeyed his father in that whereunto he exhorted him; I suppose it would stir up the son to do the will of his father. In like manner it ought to be with everyone of us. Seeing God hath bounded and limited his hearkening unto our voice, when we speak unto him, with this condition, that we hearken unto his voice when he speaketh unto us; it ought to move us to hear his word with fear & reverence, and to express the power of it in obedience, that so we may comfort our selves with assurance of God's mercy toward us, in regard of our zeal and affection toward him.

Thirdly, from hence we may learn to be [Use 3] patient under the punishments that do befall us. For seeing God will punish us in the same manner that we offend, when we feel & perceive that he meeteth with us, and hath found us out, and that we can no longer be hidden nor our actions from his eyes, let us stoop down under his hand, and hold our peace, because he hath done it. Let us not fixe and fasten our eyes upon the earth beneath, nor dwell upon the meditations of men's dealings toward us: but lift our hearts unto God, who always punisheth us justly, he being the righteous Judge of all the world, to whom is incident no unrighteousness. If we be slandered and defamed by others, let us consider whether we have not done the like to others, and therefore the Lord recompenceth us in the same kind, and as it were taketh our feet in the snare that we have laid for others, and casteth us into the same pit which we digged for them, as it fell out to Haman, who was hanged upon his own gallows: so that as we have wronged others, it falleth out that we must receive wrong from others. This is the use that Solomon pointeth out in y^e book of Ecclesiastes; Take no heed unto all words that are spoken, lest thou hear thy servant curse thee: for oftentimes also thine own heart knoweth, that thou thyself likewise hast cursed others. Let us therefore be patient in injuries; let us not slander them that slander us, nor revile them that revile us, nor speak evil of them that speak evil of us. Moses is commended, that when Miriam and Aaron rose up against him, and moved sedition by reason of the Ethiopian woman whom he had married, he possessed his soul with patience and bare all their reproaches with meekness of spirit, for he was very meek, above all the men that were upon the face of the earth, Numb. 12, 3. It is said of Saul, being made King of Israel, that when the children of Belial said. How shall this man save us? and they despised him in their hearts, he gave them not taunt for taunt, nor rebuke for rebuke, he commanded not the standers by to take away their lives, albeit they deserved it, and he had power in his hand to do it, but he held his peace, and passed by their reproaches, as a blind man that saw them not, as a deaf man that heard them not, and as a man without sense, that felt them not. When Shimei reproached David, and cursed him with an horrible curse, David with patience abstaineth and with persuasion refraineth others from revenge, that offered themselves to take off the head of that dead dog: so that he said, Let him alone; it may be that the Lord will lock upon mine affliction, and requite good for his cursing this day. He could have returned upon him curse for curse, nay wounds for words: but he knew well enough, and teacheth it to others in another place, that he which loveth cursing, the same shall come upon him; and he that delighteth not in blessing, it shall be far from him, because as he clothed himself with cursing like as with his garment, so it shall come into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones. It is well said of an heathen man, Fear none more then thine own conscience. This is the right and ready way to get a good name, and to keep it being gotten, to judge of others with right judgment and Christian equity, carrying a charitable opinion of everyone, thinking well of them, speaking the best of them, and covering the multitude of infirmities, as Shem and Japheth did the nakedness of their father. This is true charity indeed, and hereby we may assure our own hearts, that we love not in word and tongue only, but in deed and truth. The counsel of the Prophet is good & wholesome to this purpose, Psal. 34.12, 13, 14, 15. What man is he that desireth life? and loveth many days that he may see good? Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile: depart from evil, and do good: seek peace and pursue it. The reason is, because the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry; whereas the face of the Lord is against them that do evil, to cut out the remembrance of them frō the earth.

Lastly, we may conclude from hence the [Use 4] woeful estate and condition of all cruel and merciless oppressors, that grind the faces of the poor, and pluck off their skins from the flesh, and the flesh from the bones, by their covetous and corrupt dealing; who measure hard measure unto others, and pull from them that which is their own, without conscience of sin, or feeling of judgment to come. These are they that regard not how they rack the poor, how they engross and withhold the fruits of the earth; they make the Epha small, and the Shekell great, that is, they sell little for much, lessening the measure, and enhauncing the price, they sell a little come for a great deal of money; they make a dearth without scarcity, and bring a famine upon others, when God hath given plenty to themselves. For it falleth out oftentimes, when GOD is liberal to us, we deal niggardly one toward another: and when the Lord heareth the heavens, and they hear the earth, and the earth heareth y^e come, and the wine, and the oil, and all they hear Israel, what a shame, nay what a sin is this, that we will not hear one another, so that the cry of the poor people is not heard of us, nor the misery of them that are in need, is not felt of us? When GOD sendeth fruitful times and seasons, that neither the heaven over the head is as brass, nor the earth underneath our feet, is as iron, but that they yield their rain and fruit in due season; how cometh it to pass, that our hearts are as hard as iron, as tough as steel, and as inflexible as brass one to another? And seeing the eye of God is good to us, how cruel are we that make our eyes to be evil toward our brother? These are they that wish with all their souls for dearth and famine, nay they not only desire it, but cause it, when God hath not caused it; and send it upon others, when God hath not sent it upon them. This is to them a day of joy and delight, of feasting and banqueting, of merriment and pastime, when as their poor brethren weep and lament with their wives and children. This is the day that they long looked for, and they stir up themselves to rejoice and be glad in it, that they may enrich themselves with the spoils of them that are in necessity. But let them know, that this sweet meat hath sour sauce belonging unto it, and that a fearful woe belongeth unto thē, w^e shall come upon them, and seize upon their bodies and souls, and sons & daughters, and goods, and all that belongeth unto them, when they shall be dealt withal by others, as they have dealt and distributed the measure unto others. They shall find as little favor in the day of trouble, as they have shown unto others in their trouble. Consider the example of the rich man in the Gospel, when poor Lazarus lay at his gate, he called for mercy in his misery, and craved the crumbs only that fell from his table, but they were denied unto him. And what was the issue? or how sped he in the end? We read in the Parable, that himself in the end called for mercy at the hands of Abraham, but could not have one drop of water to cool his tongue and quench his heat, being tormented in the flames of hell that never go out. He would not grant to Lazarus a small request, y^e crumbs of his table, nay the crumbs that fell from his table: and he cannot obtain himself a little water, not so much that Lazarus might dippe the tippe of his finger in water, to give him thereby any ease & refreshing. To conclude, he that would show no mercy, findeth judgment without mercy, torment without ease, heat without cooling, and misery without end. The time was, when he was prayed and sued unto, but would not hear: now he prayeth and entreateth, but cannot be heard. All human things are frail and uncertain. He that is today aloft, may be cast down low enough the next day. Boast not thyself of tomorrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth. Pride goeth before destruction, and an high mind before the fall: for everyone that exalteth himself, shall be brought low, and he that humbleth himself, shall be exalted. The Lord in the Law forbiddeth to trouble the widow, to vex the fatherless, and to oppress the stranger, lest he punish those that oppress them. But how will that be? and in what kind doth he threaten to punish? he saith, My wrath shall be kinled and I will kill you with the sword, so that your wives shall be widows, and your children fatherless. See how the Lord threarneth to bring woe upon them that work woe to such as are in misery, and add affliction to them that are in affliction, and multiply sorrow upon them that are in sorrow. This is the use urged by the Prophet I say, chap. 33, 1. Woe to thee that spoilest, and thou wast not spoiled, & dealest treacherously, and they dealt not treacherously with thee: when thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled: and when thou shalt make an ende to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee. God suffereth them to have their times, when he holdeth his peace, and letteth them alone to fill up the measure of their sins: howbeit God hath his seasons also, and hath concluded and determined what to do unto them, and how to deal with them; the spoiler shall be spoiled, the robber shall be robbed, the oppressor shall be oppressed, & they that do wickedly to others shall have others to deal wickedly against them. This is that which Christ our Savior speaketh unto Peter, that went beyond the bounds of his calling, and forgatte that the weapons of their warfare were not carnal, but spiritual; and that the sword which he was to draw out and to fight withal, was the two edged sword of the Spirit, coming out of the mouth of God, Math. 26.52. Put up thy sword into his place, for all they that take the sword, shall perish with the sword. God will set sword against sword, and wound against wound, yea, and life against life. In the book of the Revelation, the Spirit prophesying of the destruction of the Roman Monarchy, which oppressed the church, and persecuted the Saints of God with cruel slaughter, showeth that it should be cast down, and pass the same judgment they gave against others, chap. 13, 10. He that leadeth into captivity, shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword, must be killed with the sword. It is a just thing in all ages and times with God, to recompense tribulation to thē that trouble his Church. Indeed we do not see such judgments executed, and such threatenings performed by and by: we are not to prescribe to God his seasons; he knoweth when to strike, and how to punish. It is well said by the Prophet, Hab. 2, 3. The vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come, it will not tarry. For albeit God may seem to us to defer the time, or to forget his servants, yet he will try our patience and obedience, as we see in the place named before, Here is the patience and faith of the Saints, Revel. 13, 10. We must not make too much haste, but wait for the accomplishment of those things, having withal a lively faith and full assurance to believe, that in God's appointed time they shall come to pass. He is faithful that hath promised, and cannot lie: he is true of his word that hath spoken, and cannot deceive. Woe therefore unto all those that deal unjustly and violently with God's inheritance: they touch his anointed, and they that do them harm, do touch the apple of his eye, so that they cannot escape vengeance.

[Ver. 28. And if the woman be not defiled, but be clean, then she shall be free.] In the former verse Moses hath shown the punishment that shall come upon the guilty person; which punishment is suitable to the sin committed, thereby to clear his own justice, and to terrify all persons from committing sin. In these words we have matter of wonderful great comfort for the innocent person. For howsoever GOD setteth down diverse hard and heavy threatenings, as grievous burdens to be borne, against all wicked and ungodly persons; yet he is evermore careful of his children▪ that they be not oppressed with sorrow and overmuch heaviness of mind, forasmuch as he hath a remnant that call upon him, & wisdom is always justified of her children. Behold here a contrary effect and operation in drinking of these bitter waters, according to the contrary condition of those that drank of them. Such as were guilty of the sin of adultery, they turned to their horrible destruction, and became as it were rank poison; their bellies swelled, their thighs rotted, and the parts which they had shamefully abused, miserably perished. But such as were indeed innocent, suspected without just cause, and accused without due proof, and examined without sufficient trial of the fact committed, through the jealousy of their uncharitable husbands, and had kept the marriage bed undefiled; those bitter waters should not be bitter unto them, they should not hurt or hinder them at all, neither work any dangerous effect in them, but rather be wholesome and healthful unto them. God himself the just GOD and the maintainer of justice, will bring the truth to light that was hid in darkness, and turn the hearts of their husbands toward them, so that they should live in godly love and charity together, and see to their endless joy and comfort, the fruit of their bodies, the hope of their houses, the staff and stay of their age, I mean their children, the heritage of the Lord.

We learn from this first promise, [Doctrine.] that God maketh known the innocence of his servants. For howsoever the faithful may be falsely accused, and have many slanderous imputations laid unto their charge, yet God will make their cause to be rightly known, and discover the truth in despite of their enemies. This is confirmed unto us by many examples in the old and New Testament. Joseph being sold into Egypt, was grievously accused by his mistress, and cruelly imprisoned by his master: impudency and incontynency in the one, cruelty and credulity in the other, were the causes that he was put into prison in the place where the Kings prisoners lay bound: his case might seem now to be desperate, and he to be forever in displeasure and out of favor, and no hope left unto him to be delivered from thence where his feet were held in the stocks, and he laid in irons: yet when the appointed time came, and the counsel of the Lord had tried him, he made his cause known, Gen. 39. The Lord was with Joseph, & shown him mercy, and got him favor in the sight of the master of the prison, &c. Whereby we see, that at the first he was used hardly, and had fetters of iron cast upon him as an evil doer; but afterward he was more mildely and mercifully handled, when as his innocence was made known. The like we might say of David, who in all his dealings toward Saul, carried himself wisely, obediently, and uprightly, as became the Kings son, subject, and servant: yet he was persecuted from place to place, and hated even unto the death, and hunted as a Partridge upon the Mountains, yea he found no rest for the soles of his feet, like the Dove sent out of the Ark in the time of the flood, and overflowing of the waters, Gen. 8 9. But when Saul saw that the lap was cut off from his garment, and the spear and pot of water that was at his head, taken away, he said to David, Thou art more righteous then I: for thou hast rendered me good, and I have rendered thee evil: and thou hast shown this day that thou hast dealt well with me, forasmuch as when the lord had closed me in thine hands, thou killedst me not, &c. but my soul was precious in thine eyes. 1 Sam. 24, 18. and 26, 20, 21. So did God deal with Jeremiah, when he was slandered and falsely accused to be a conspiratour, and to weaken the hands of the people; and when he was cast into prison, the Lord raised up some to favor him, who made his case known, and he was delivered. Christ Jesus was charged to be a blasphemmer of God, an enemy of Caesar, an author of sedition, and a disturber of the peace: howbeit his greatest enemies that sate in judgment of him, pronounced him innocent, and confessed that the Pharisees and Priests for envy had delivered him.

I will add one example more, and that shall be the blessed Virgin, who being betrothed to Joseph, before they came together as man and wife, she was found to be with child by the holy Ghost. Math. 1, 18, 19, 20. Then she began to be suspected of incontynency, and Joseph being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away secretly. What then? doth God leave her destitute, and him perplexed? her in suspicion, and him in his resolution to depart from her? No: for as she was innocent and not faulty of that crime, so did he make her innocence and integrity known; for whiles he thought these things, behold, an Angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph the son of David, fear not to take Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her, is of the holy Ghost. All which testimonies make this apparent, that God will one way or other make the innocence of his people to be known.

[Reason 1] The reasons of this doctrine will farther confirm us in the truth of it: whereof the first may be from the office of God, who is the Judge of all the world. Surely the Lord will not pervert judgment to do unrighteously, neither will he take rewards, nor subvert a man in his cause.

Hence it is, that Abraham, making intercession for the Sodomites, that those Cities might be spared, saith, Gen. 18, 25. Bee it far from thee from doing this thing, to slay the righteous with the wicked: and that the righteous should be even as the wicked, be it far from thee: Shall not the Judge of all the world do right? And to that purpose reasoneth the Apostle, Rom. 3.5. What shall we say? Is God unrighteous, which punisheth? God forbid: else how shall God judge the world? If then this title belong unto him of right above all others, then he will at last come forth, though he tarry long, to plead the cause of his servants, & will bring their righteousness into the open light.

Secondly, God is evermore an helper in [Reason 2] time of need, who, albeit he suffer his servants to be exercised and tried by slanders & grievous afflictions, as we heard before concerning Joseph, yet he appeareth for their deliverance, and cleareth their names from reproach. When they are in greatest danger, then is he nearest at hand, and so giveth the issue with the temptation. This doth the Prophet David acknowledge, Psalm. 118.6, 7. and 56, 4, 11. The Lord is on my side, I will not fear what man can do unto me: the Lord taketh my part with them that help me, therefore shall I see my desire upon them that hate me. And this doth the Apostle teach us to apply to our selves, because everyone may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man can do unto me.

If then he have promised to take our part, and to help us in time of need, when we are oppressed with the evil speeches of our enemies, he will not be far from us, but succor us and sustain us that we shall not fall.

Thirdly, we know well, that howsoever [Reason 3] many things are covered here in darkness, partly through hypocrisy in some, and partly through ignorance and weakness that is in all, we are not able to enter into the actions of men, and dive down so low as to see with what purpose they do them, yet the time shall come when they shall be discovered and manifested. This is the general rule delivered by Christ our Savior, Luk. 12, verse 2. There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed: neither hid that shall not be known. This is true, not only touching the hypocrisy of the wicked, but also touching the innocence of the righteous: for all shall be known in the end, when the secrets of all hearts shall be discovered.

From hence we have offered to our wise [Use 1] considerations, very many profitable uses, whereof I will point out the principal. First, we are put in mind from hence to commit all our ways and works to God, and to depend upon him to bring to light the truth of our hearts. Let us put our trust in him, and delight our selves in the Lord. Let us possess our souls with patience, when we are slandered and traduced, and resign up our selves to him that ruleth all things. Let us cast our eyes upon his providence, who careth for us, and watcheth over us.

The children of God, when they see the prosperity of the wicked, and how all things in this world for the most part go well with them, are sore troubled, they begin to waver, and sometimes to fret & murmur, as if there were no God to govern all things. This made the Prophet David to say, Psal. 73, 12, 13, 14. Behold, these are the ungodly, who prosper in the world, and increase in riches; verily, I have cleansed mine heari in vain, & washed mine hands in innocence; for all the day long have I been plagued and chastened every morning. But God will not forget us or forsake us, if we trust in him, we shall not be deceived. So often as we have evil rewarded unto us for good, and are ouerladen with the slanders of the ungodly, we are ready to fret and fume, and to seek revenge against them: we have many doubts arise in us, as if it were lost labor to worship God sincerely, and to deal with our brethren justly.

It is not the pleasure of almighty God, that our righteousness should always lie hid in the dark, and as it were creep into corners, forasmuch as he will make it shine as the Sun, and bring it into the open light. This is the use that the Prophet teacheth us to make, Psal. 37, 5, 6. Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in him, & he shall bring it to pass: and he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noon day. Wherein he alludeth fitly unto the night, the darkness whereof, the morning arising, scattereth away.

Are we then hardly used? are we shamefully entreated? are we oppressed with slanderous things laid to our charge? and doth God for a time hold his peace, as if he heard them not? or doth he shut his eyes, as if he saw them not? Let us not take it to heart, or be discouraged, this ought to trouble us no more, then when the darkness of the night covereth the earth, because we look for the morning to appear, and the Sun to shine. When all things are dark, that nothing can be discerned, when we know not white from black, nor chalk from cheese, nor fair from foul, we are not to be grieved or disquieted by it, because we live in expectation of the light which we know cannot be far. Then we shall know one thing from another, when all will show themselves in their likeness. From this consideration we are admonished to commit our ways unto the Lord, who will make a notable issue of them, by giving judgment on our side, and delivering of us from the venom of the evil tongue. He forbiddeth in the law, any to bear false witness in judgment. Now he is a false witness that holdeth his peace, when he may by his testimony relieve his brother, justify his person, clear his good name, or defend his goods, or right his cause in any matter called into question, as well as he that speaketh in a cause, to decline after many, to wrest judgment. He hath made us keepers of the credit one of another: so that we may offend God and our neighbor, as well by not speaking the truth, as by speaking of an untruth.

The law it self requireth such love to be among us, that although we be not requested, yet we should never be wanting to another, but always be willing and desirous to maintain his good name and estimation, according to the commandment of our Lord and Master, Matthew 7, verse 12. Whatsoever ye would that other men should do unto you, even so do ye unto them, for this is the Law and the Prophets. Doth God require this at our hands, and will not he perform it toward us? Must we clear our brothers good name, and will God himself fail to do it? or do we think we can have a better or greater care of the name of our brother, or of our own name, then God the righteous Judge of the world, hath of us all? That cannot be, he is jealous of our good names, and will not have the truth smothered with a lie, nor innocence buried in the earth. Shall we make our selves more righteous then GOD, and justify our selves above our Maker? There is not a spark of that truth which is in GOD given to us: true it is, he honoreth us by vouchsafing this mercy unto us, to open our mouths to speak his truth, which he is able to avouch and justify against all gainsayers a thousand ways. If we then that are evil, know how to acquit our brethren, we may be well assured, he will be more just and righteous in all his dealings toward us, then we have been or can be one to another. And if we have means at any time to free our brethren from infamy, we may fully and certainly be assured that he will be ready to bring to light our innocence.

Secondly, seeing God hath promised to make our innocence that is derided or denied, [Us; 2] to be known, let us know that it is our duty to go boldly to the Throne of his grace, and to pray unto God to perform his promise toward us.

It falleth out oftentimes that we see no way to bring the truth to light, and we think it impossible that ever we should be cleared: howbeit we have to do with God, to whom nothing is secret, before whom all things are manifest, he is able to bring us into credit again. We take therefore a wrong course, and provide evilly for our selves, to rage and storm against those that revile us and speak all manner of evil of us falsely for Christ his sake: whereas we ought to repair into the presence of GOD, and to crave of him that he would make the justice of our causes to appear.

If any object, [Object.] Is not God without prayer able to make the truth of our causes known? Or hath he need to be put in mind of his office, which is to justify the godly, and to condemn the wicked?

I answer, [Answer.] as GOD is able of himself to do it, so he also hath appointed the means how he will do it. And among them all, none is more excellent then prayer: so that his almighty power doth not exclude prayer, but rather imply it; neither should it keep us from prayer, but rather encourage us to prayer; forasmuch as almighty God useth it as an instrument for y^e performance of those things which he hath promised, and appointed. He that goeth to warfare, prepareth horse & armor, and leuieth soldiers, and getteth what provision and furniture he can; he will by no means be brought to leave thē behind him, or to send them back again, and to rush into the battle without them, because they are instruments by which God is wont to give the victory to such as it seemeth good to him, so that he cannot without rashness lay them aside: so is prayer necessary, by the which the LORD is accustomed to give unto us those things that we want, and therefore it were horrible presumption to neglect it under pretence of his knowledge understanding our cases, or of his power enabling him to do all things, or of his providence determining all things. As God hath appointed armor to them that desire victory, so hath he ordained prayer for them that would be relieved in necessity.

True it is, GOD knoweth what we need, better then our selves that are in need: & yet is not prayer to be holden superfluous, because God hath commanded us that in the day of trouble we should call upon him, Mat. 7. he hath promised to hear us, and deliver us, Psal. 50. He hath made no promise to us of any blessing, except we ask the same of him: he keepeth us in fear and reverence, and maketh us to acknowledge him to be the giver and author of all good things: he declareth his love unto us that humbleth and abaseth himself to hear our requests & complaints particularly, and thereby enflameth us to love him again, and to put our trust in him: by this familiar communication with him, we grow after a sort familiar with him, and we are bold to shroud our selves under his wing, as the child flieth to his father: and lastly, as we confess that whatsoever good things we enjoy do come from him alone, so it is our duty to return to him the thanks, and to use them to his glory. Wherefore, whensoever we find our selves wronged of our neighbors, we are not to turn upon thē in a rage, like unto the dog that runneth after the stone that is cast at him, and not at him that did cast it: but let us run with boldness unto God, and pour out our supplications before him, desiring him to help us and right our cause. This doth the Prophet David in many places, Psal. 4, 1, and 69, 13. Hear me when I •ill, O God of my righteousness, thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress, have mercy upon me, and hear my prayer. He acknowledgeth in his prayer to God, that he was the witness, Judge, and defender of his innocence and uprightness toward Saul or any other: declaring by his own example, that when men unjustly condemn us, we must fly unto God by humble and earnest prayer, who is the patron and pleader of the causes of his people. And in the seventh Psalm, verse 6. Arise, O Lord, in thine anger, lift up thyself, because of the rage of mine enemies: and awake for me to the judgment that thou hast commanded: and afterward, verse 8. The Lord shall judge the people: judge me, O Lord, according to my righteousness, and according to mine integrity that is in me. If God did not lay to his hand and help him, he confesseth that he were utterly destroyed: and therefore he prayeth to be delivered from his persecutors. Whensoever therefore men will not judge uprightly, and have their eyes blinded through malice or favor, we ought by prayer to refer our causes to him that hath no respect of persons and so commit our causes to him that judgeth righteously.

Howsoever the innocent cause of the godly may be hidden for a time, and overwhelmed by the slanders of the ungodly, yet if we be not wanting unto our selves, continuance of time the daughter of truth will bring it to light. We cry out against the wicked, but let us go the right way and cry to God: we lift up our voice against them, whereas we ought to lift up our voice unto him who hath his ears open to hear our prayers, and will blow away the storm and tempest by the blast of his mouth.

Thirdly, doth God promise to right our cause, and take upon him our defense? Then [Use 3] let us do good for good, and return unto him like for like; let us yield defense for defense, and plead his cause that hath pleaded ours. For it is our duty to undertake his defense, whensoever his truth is gainsayed, or his name evil-spoken of.

There is no man but is very careful and circumspect to maintain his own name and credit in the world, whensoever it is any way questioned: ought we not then much more to regard the upholding and bearing up the Name of God, which is great and holy through all generations? Hereunto doth Joshua seem to allude, chap. 7, verse 9. complaining unto God of the overthrow that the Israelites had received at the siege of At, The Canaanites, and all the inhabitants of the Land shall hear of it, and shall compass us, and destroy our name out of the earth: and what wilt thou do unto thy mighty Name? He had greater care of God's glory then he had of his own: and it went nearer unto him to hear God's Name dishonored, then to have his own destroyed out of the earth.

So it ought to be with us; let it not trouble us to be hated and maligned of the unthankful world, and our honor with all contempt and disgrace laid in the dust; but be evermore ready to say, Not unto us, Lord, not unto us; but unto thy Name give the glory. Psal. 115.1.

If we be to open our mouths for our brethrē, (as we shall see more at large afterward) when they are laden with scandals and reproaches, much more then ought we to do this in God's cause, and for God's glory. Let us not be ashamed of his truth, lest he be ashamed of us. Let us confess his Name before the sons of men, and we shall be sure to be confessed before the sons of God. If we acknowledge his truth, he will acknowledge us before the Angels and before his Father. This Christ teacheth his Disciples, Whosoever confesseth me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven; but whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven. What a shame and reproach will this be unto us, that God should defend our cause, and we shrink back through fear to defend his? Christ our Savior doth oftentimes take upon him to defend his Disciples, when they were assaulted and set upon by the Pharisees, and therefore no marvel though he charge this upon them so earnestly, that they should not be ashamed of him and of his words in that adulterous and sinful generation. We must be all ready to say with the Apostle, Rom. 1, 16. I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation, to everyone that believeth. He defendeth his Disciples being reproved because they did not fast often, which was the bodily exercise which the Pharisees so much practiced, Luke 18. and wherein they so much gloried, Math. 9, 14. He defendeth them being accused of the breach of the Sabbath, when they were seen to pluck the ears of corn and eat them, Math. 12, 2, 3. He defendeth them being charged to transgress the tradition of the Elders, in that they did not wash before they had eat bread, Mat. 15, 2, 3. Yea, such was his great & wonderful love to those that followed him, y^t when his own credit was touched as well as theirs, he seemeth to neglect his own, and maintain theirs, as we see, Luke 7. When Christ was entertained in the house of one of the Pharisees, a woman in the City which was a sinner, knowing that he sate at meat, brought an Alabaster box of ointment, and stood at his feet, washing them with her tears, wiping them with her hairs, kissing them with her lips, and anointing them with the ointment: but when the Pharisee, which had bidden him, saw it, he spake within himself, saying, This man, if he were a Prophet, would have known, who, and what manner of woman this is that toucheth him, for she is a sinner. He conceived hardly of Christ, as well as of the woman: and judged wrongfully of him that he was no Prophet, as well as of her that she was a sinner; yea more corruptly of him then of her, forasmuch as she had been so; whereas he was not only a Prophet, but the Prince of Prophets, yea, the King of his Church, yea, the Son of God: yet he forbearth to make any apology for himself, & wholly defendeth her, telling him that her sins, which are many, are forgiven her, for she loved much. Hath the Lord Jesus this singular care of us, and shall not we be zealous of his glory? Shall we suffer his name to be trodden under foot, and never offer to uphold it? Shall evil men speak evil of his truth, and we say nothing against them? The Apostle Peter giveth this commandment, Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear, 1 Pet. chap. 3, verse 15. When the Apostles were charged to preach no more in the Name of Jesus Christ, Peter and John answered and said unto them; Whether it be right in the sight of God, to hearken unto you more then unto God, judge ye: for we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard. Acts 4, 19. Woe then unto those that see and hear God notoriously dishonored, and yet will neither hear it nor see it: they make a law against themselves, and shall taste of the same measure measured unto them again, they shall be censured of others, when they shall have none to defend their causes. This they will judge to be an injury to themselves, and yet cannot perceive the iniquity which they commit against God. If then they will have GOD show this mercy to them in making their innocence known, let them perform this duty to him in pleading his cause, when his truth is evilly spoken off, or any way ouerborne. [Use 4]

Fourthly, forasmuch as this is the merciful dealing of GOD toward us and our good name when it is impeached, that he will make the truth to be known, let us acknowledge this blessing, and give him the praise of it. This also is another duty that we are put in mind off to be performed unto him. For as we are bound in regard of our own good to pray unto him to make manifest the secrets of our hearts, and to bring to the light the truth that is hidden: so whensoever we have found the hand of GOD to be with us, and to have scattered the clouds and mists of falsehood, slanders, and evil surmises, and so made the goodness of our cause, and the cleerenesse of our conscience to appear, as the Sun that shineth in his strength; it belongeth unto us to confess his loving kindness, and by all means to be thankful to him for it, and to express our thankfulness by obedience. Let us not be like unto the Lepers in the Gospel, who were very desirous to be cleansed of their leprosy, they lifted up their voices and said, Jesus Master, have mercy on us, Luke 17, verse 13. Howbeit when once they were healed, they went their ways, and never remembered him that recovered them; like to Pharaohs chief Butler, that gave the cup into his hand, who forgot Joseph so soon as his head was lifted up, and he restored unto his place, albeit Joseph had entreated him to think upon him, when it should be well with him, and so to show kindness unto him, for that kindness which he had received. Only one of these ten lepers that were cleansed, returned back to Jesus to give him thanks, and ascribe praise and glory to be due unto him for that work. Thus it is with many of us, we are ready to call and cry out for the wrongs that we sustain, & we are as desirous to have our names cleared, as the Lepers were to have their bodies cleansed: but when God hath helped to clear us who were not able to clear our selves, and so hath wrought means for our good, we rejoyce in our selves and not in the Lord; we praise our selves, and not the Lord: we do so magnify our selves, that we never glorify him: we are so jealous of our own name, that we are never a whit zealous of God's Name. Is it so small a benefit to have our good meaning manifest, and our righteousness known, that it is not worth thanks? If a man should come as a witness on our side, when our case seemed desperate and out of hope, would we not think our selves beholding unto him? It is the Lord that is the God of our righteousness, it is he that will give judgment on our side, and therefore to him we owe praise, glory, thanks, and all honor. This we see performed in David, Psalm. 18, 20, 24, 47, 49. being a Psalm of thanksgiving in the day that the Lord delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, & from the hand of Saul, of whom he was accused to affect the kingdom, and to seek his life. He confesseth how good God had been unto him, that he rewarded him according to his righteousness, and according to the cleanness of his hands he recompensed him; that it was God that avenged him, and subdued the people under him, and delivered him from the violent man: whereupon he concludeth; Therefore will I give thanks unto thee, O Lord, among the heathen, and sing praises unto thy Name. Thus must we do, and this ought to be our song when we have received the same favor. We are acquainted with his goodness in this kind, but he cannot be acquainted with our thankfulness. We can be content to swallow with a wide and open throat his benefits, but whē we should confess his mercy to his glory, our mouths are stopped, and our tongues are tied, and our throats are dried, and our harts are straightened, that we cannot utter a voice nor deliver him a word for the deliverance that we have had experience of.

[Use 5] Fifthly, as our doctrine putteth us in mind of duties belonging unto God, so it offereth us instruction how to behave our selves toward our brethren. Is God careful of our good name? and will he make known our innocence? Then let the same mind be in us one toward another, which is in the Almighty toward us all, let us follow the example of our heavenly Father, and be careful to maintain the good name of our brethren, & show that mercy unto them which we have received of God. We cannot have a better example set before our eyes, then the example of God, who chargeth us to be merciful as he is merciful, Luk. 6, 30. As he is ready to forgive us, so ought we to forgive from our hearts, the trespasses that are done unto us, Ephe. 4. As he made all things in six days, and rested the seventh, so ought we to rest from the labors of our callings, and sanctify the Sabbath day, Gen. 2. Exod. 20. As Christ washed the feet of his Disciples, so he gave them an example that they should do as he had done to them; for he is meek and lowly in heart, & they shall find rest to their souls, John. 13. As he being in the form of God, & thinking it no robbery to be equal to God, made himself of no reputation, & took upon him the form of a servant; so the same mind ought to be in us that was in him, that so in lowliness of mind we should esteem each other better then our selves, & have a kind of emulation among us, who should cast down himself lowest, Phil. 2, 5. As he suffered for us, so he hath left us an example that we should follow his steps, 1 Pet. 2.21. As he was reviled, and reviled not again: as he suffered, & threatened not, but committed himself to him y^t judgeth righteously, so should not we give taunt for taunt, and reproach for reproach. And as Christ defended his Disciples when as they were falsely charged, & wrongfully accused, as we shown before, so ought we to deal toward our brethrē. When we hear false reports, which have no ground or good beginning, such as in our own knowledge & conscience we know to be invented in hell, and broached in earth, such I say, as are spread abroad through malice of our brother, and hatred of his profession: what must we do? shall we believe them, & give credit unto them? Shall we increase them, & add somewhat of our own? or shall we laugh at them, & make our selves merry with them? No, we must not only stop the stream, and stay the reports, & keep our selves and others from receiving of them; but we must open our mouths in the cause of the dumb, and oppose our selves against those that are their enemies. A good name is a precious jewel, it is better then silver and gold. It commendeth us to God & his Angels. It is a precious ointment and a sweet perfume that maketh us acceptable to y^e sons of men, and winneth their hearts: yea, sometimes it maketh our enemies to be at peace with us, and to favor us. It seasoneth y^e gifts that we have received, and maketh them profitable unto others. If our gifts be never so great and excellent yet if we have not a good name to grace them and counrenance them, we can do very little or no good with them. If we see a man stealing away the goods of our neighbor, and secretly purloining them away, and we hold our peace, are we not accessory to his theft, and partakers of his sin? So if we hear any raising evil reports of him, and robbing him of his good name, which is more in value then all things in the world, are we not slanderers as well as he, while we join with him, & so become guilty of the same transgression? A good name is many a man's living; take that away, and impair his credit, he is utterly undone, & not able to maintain himself: you hurt him as much as if you took away house and land, corn & cattle from him, or any other thing of worth that is dear unto him. If then it be so rich and precious a treasure, we must be careful to maintain our brothers credit & estimation, being made keepers of his life, of his goods, and of his good name, doing y^e same unto him, which we desire he should do unto us. This is a sign of true love, that we love him indeed, when we will not spare to take upon us his just defense: and on the other side, it is an evident token of cold love, or no love at all, when we see them abused, and do not regard it: the Lord will raise up others in his righteous judgment, who shall do as little for us, as we do for those that stand in need of us.

[Use 6] Lastly, as this doctrine hath offered unto us sundry good meditations of duties, concerning God and our brother, so it sendeth us not away without comfort concerning our selves. Are we slandered and reviled? Are we falsely charged with things which we never spake or did? Let this be our comfort, the time shall certainly come, when the slanderers shall be detected, and put to silence. It ought not to seem strange to us, when such flying tales are noised abroad, rather it might seem most strange as a great wonder if it were not so. The devil will be the devil still, who is the head and prince of all slanderers, and all his instruments will be like him. God's people above all others are falsely accused; they are not of the world, but chosen out of the world, and therefore the world hateth them. Joseph was accused to be incontinent: Job was condemned to be an hypocrite: Daniel was charged with disobedience; Amos of conspiracy, Elijah of troubling Israel, David of seeking Saul's life; Paul was suspected to be a murderer, Christ our Savior was reputed an enemy to Caesar, and his Disciples were accused, and judged worthy of stripes, and censured to be mouers of sedition among the people: howbeit all this is but as a cloud, which will quickly be dispersed, & as a dark mist that shall suddenly be scattered away. It is a notable comfort to hear these things, that GOD will not suffer us to sink down under taunts and rebukes of men, but lift up our heads and pronounce sentence of absolution on our side. Let it not trouble us to be condemned of men, so that we be assured to be justified of God. If a man were wrongfully condemned in an action of slander, or felony in an inferior Court of justice, and there judged to be guilty of some heinous crime; yet if he were sure to be acquitted and discharged by appeal to an higher Court, where he is persuaded he cannot but have justice, because there is no corruption of Judge, or witness: how would he be comforted? and how little should the overthrow he had taken, be regarded? forasmuch as he knoweth the next trial will set all to right again. So is the case with us. It is our lot and condition here to be persecuted and reviled for righteousness sake, and we shall be condemned of wicked men unjustly: howbeit this ought not to trouble us, how greatly soever they resist us and rage against us: this is but a condemnation of men upon the earth: we may lawfully appeal from them to an higher Court, and to a greater Judge. When Paul was falsely accused by the Jews, and could have no justice at y^e hands of the high Priests, he appealed to Caesar, that is, from inferior Governors, to the Emperor that was supreme. So must we do, when we are burdened and oppressed by the poison of evil tongues, and condemned as evil doers of all men, we know there is a Judge that sitteth in heaven, who will acquit us when we come before him, and take the cause into his own hand. And if we see not this always accomplished in this life, it shall most certainly be performed in the life to come, when all the secrets of every man's heart shall be opened. Sometimes he maketh their light so to shine in this world, that they reap great fruit of their godliness, and the Sun beams as it were to refresh them and make them alive again. But if it happen not in this life, yet it shall not fail in the next life, when Christ shall appear in glory, and say, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit ye the kingdom prepared for you from the beginning of the world, Math. chap. 25, verse 34. When he shall break the heavens, and come to judge the quick and the dead, let us lift up our heads and rejoice, for our redemption draweth near. This is the time of our refreshing, here we are ouerweariet with bearing the burden of other men's malice. Then shall all tears be wiped from our eyes, and we shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known, as we read, Math. chap. 13, verse 43. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the Sun, in the kingdom of their Father: he that hath ears to hear, let him hear. To this purpose speaketh Paul, Colos. chap. 3, verses 3, 4. Your life is hid with Christ in God: when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.

If then our righteousness be covered here as with a garment, and be hidden as a treasure that is buried in the earth, yet our life shall not always lie in obscurity; for when the night is past, the day will appear, and when falsehood hideth her face, the truth will be made manifest.

Let us acknowledge the power of God that is able to do this: and let us rest patiently in him that is our stay. Let us not fret our selves, because of him that prospereth in his way, and bringeth wicked devises to pass. Contrary-wise, the ungodly have from this doctrine matter of sorrow and heaviness, because howsoever they rule here for a time, and will not be controlled; they say their tongues are their own, who is Lord over them; they think themselves privileged to devise and disperse what lies they list, and none may call them to an account: yet God will one day call them to an account, when they shall receive according to their works: For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be, the Lord shall laugh at him, for he seeeth his day coming. Then it shall be said to all the wicked, Go ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his Angels. The truth may be over-borne and smothered for a time, yet it cannot be disgraced and concealed forever. It were well for them, if they might lie forever in the grave, and never come into the light: it were well for them if their works might never come to be examined & might die as the untimely fruit of a woman, that never saw the Sun: but it shall not go so well with them, they must not then look for aie comfort, like the rich Glutton who was denied a drop of water to cool his tongue. If then they would give a thousand worlds for one day of repentance, or for one drop of Faith, or for oil in their lamps, they cannot obtain it. Here life is either won or lost: here salvation is begun, or else we never have it. Then all things shall appear as they are, though many things are that do not now appear. Then the vizard of the hypocrite must be pulled off, and he shall deceive no more by shows of honest dealing.

[And she shall conceive seed.] In these words we have a second promise made to the Woman suspected of adultery, against whom nothing could be proved. For God maketh a twofold promise to the innocent party. The first was set down before, that she should be free from the imputation of the sin, and from the castigation of punishment. Now cometh the second promise to be considered, which reacheth further then the former, wherein God doth wonderfully recompense the slander charged upon her, and declare himself to be a maintainer of chastity and innocence. For what could a woman in this case have desired, but to have her innocence made known to her husband, and to the whole Church? It was an hard case to undergo this trial, and to have her name in this manner called into question: but after she is tried, God doth abundantly recompense her sorrow and affliction, and doth not only clear her good name, but giveth her issue, making the barren woman to keep house, and to be a joyful mother of children. He doth not only set her free, the thing which she desired: but withal, maketh her fruitful, which is more then she could have expected. We learn hereby, that howsoever the faithful are many ways tried and troubled, yet all their sorrows are turned to their good. When the innocence and righteousness of the godly is once made known, God is more gracious unto them then they could desire or crave at his hands. We see this in the examples alleged in the former Doctrine, as in a glass most clearly. Remember what we said of Joseph; albeit he lived for a time as a prisoner and was clapt in the stocks, yet he was delivered, and his innocence revealed. But was this all? Or did God content himself to bring his sincerity to light? No, he was advanced to honor, and made ruler over all the land of Egypt, which he never dreamed of, nor looked for, nor gaped after. And as it was with the son, so was it also with the father. For Jacob vowed a vow to God, that if he would be with him and keep him in his journey that he was to go, And would give him bread to eat, and raiment to put on, then the Lord should be his God. His desires are not extended far, but he is contented with a little, he craveth of God his daily bread, the which Christ also willet and warranteth us to ask, Mat. 6 nevertheless, God was more gracious to him then so, and gave him great riches, as himself cōfesseth to God his loving kindness: I am not worthy of y^e least of all the mercies, and of all the truth, which thou hast shown unto thy servant, for with my staff I passed over this Jordan, and now I am become two bands. The like we might speak of Job the faithful servant of the Lord; who may be compared to him in the suffering of adversity? Or who can match him in patience? He sustained the loss of his Children, and of his goods, and yet these were but the beginnings of sorrows, forasmuch as he was deeply afflicted in body and mind. What then? did he desire of God in his misery, to have his Asses and Camels, and cattle doubled upon him, and all the substance of his house to be increased? He had no such thought in his heart, and yet it came to pass according to the saying of the Apostle, James 5, 11. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord, for the Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy. Let us also call to mind the example of David, the least in his Fathers house, he was called of God from feeding his sheep, and following the Ewes great with young, and was anointed to be King, and appointed to feed his people in Jacob, and his inheritance in Israel. whereof he never dreamed, Psal. 78, 71, 72. The like we might say of Daniel, of Mordecai, of Ester, and many other children of the captivity, who saw great dangers ready to fall upon the church, as it were a gaping gulf ready to swallow them up quick, or as a huge rock threatening ship-wrack; if they had only tasted of the mercy of God and his power in working their deliverance, they would have magnified his great goodness, and sung his praise with the Psalmist, Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all: he keepeth all his bones, not one of them is broken, Psal. 34, 19, 20. But besides this, he gave them favor in the sight of Princes, and raised them from the dung-hill, to make them inherit the Throne of glory, as Hannah singeth, who had good experience of it, who was contemned, but now regarded: who asked of God one son, and obtained not him alone, but three other sons, and two daughters. From all which conceits of holy Scripture▪ we conclude, that the faithful and righteous servants of God are oftentimes blessed, not only above their deserts, (which are none at all) but above their desires and demands.

[Reason 1] The Reasons that serve to confirm this truth to our consciences, are to be considered of us. First, God is infinite in his love toward his people: he is no niggard of his goods, he keepeth not all to himself, as the covetous man. He is as the liberal man, that freely bestoweth where he seeth need: we are as poor beggars that have nothing our own but rags and rents; or as poor cripples that can boast of nothing but wounds and sores full of corruption. His grace is the true riches, and by it he hath abounded toward his church. Hence it is that the Apostle writing to the Ephesians, commendeth in many places of the Epistle, the over-flowing grace of God, and showeth that he is rich in mercy, and aboundeth in kindness, chap. 1, 7. & chap. 2, 4, 7. he setteth out his great love wherewith he loveth us, & the exceeding riches of his grace, and his kindness toward us through Jesus Christ. And chap. 3, 8. he calleth his grace toward us unsearchable riches. He doth not keep us to a diet, as though he meant to pine us or famish us: he doth not allow us only so much as serveth to keep us in state, and hold body and soul together, but he dealeth bountifully towards us, & maketh our cup to over flow. If then he be rich in mercy and goodness, and abundant in kindness, if there be in him exceeding riches, unsearchable riches, riches of his grace and glory, it is not to be marueiled at, that his childrē find him gracious toward them, above all that the tongue can desire, or the heart can think: forasmuch as his mercy is over all his works.

[Reason 2] Secondly, God is evermore better then his word, and performeth more then he promiseth. He is not as man that he should lie, nor as the son of man that he should deceive, all his promises are yea and Amen to the praise of his mercy. He promiseth little, and performeth much. He is a Prince indeed that never falsified his word, neither could the unbelief of some that did not believe, make the saith of God without effect, Rom. 3, 3. he remaineth always true and faithful, constant and sure. If we obtain not the promises, the fault is not in the promise of God, but in the infidelity of mā; forasmuch as he never deludeth any, nor dallieth with them; whatsoever is gone out of his mouth, he meaneth it in good earnest. The word of the Lord is right, and all his works are done in truth, he will not suffer his faithfulness to fail. Psal. 33.4. and 89. He promiseth in the fifth commandment to give to inferiors that are obedient a long life, yet sometimes they die betimes: and on the other side, the stubborn and disobedient have prospered in this world, and lived long. How then (will some say) is God as good as his word? and how is he certain of his promise? Because, albeit he take us away, yet he performeth it by giving much more then he promised. When Herod promised to his wanton Minion that danced before him, The one half of his kingdom, it is certain it had been no breach of his promise, if he had resigned up the whole kingdom into her hands. So, if God promise a prolonged life, and give instead of it a perpetual life, here is more then half in half gains and advantage; as he that promiseth ten pieces of silver, and performeth twenty pieces of Gold; or he that promiseth a yard of clothe, and giveth an ell of Veluet, doeth not break his promise, or falsify his word.

Thirdly, as God is rich in grace, so he is [Reason 3] infinite in power: he is able to do what he will, and more then he will. Nothing is impossible unto him: he hath all creatures in his own hand, to employ thē as it pleaseth him. This is the reason used by the apostle, Eph. 3 20. Unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, be praise in the Church by Jesus Christ, &c. If then he be able to give us more then we crave or desire, we are not to doubt of his doing of it, and we have all of us many notable experiences of it.

Let us come to the Uses, and mark them [Use 1] diligently. First, let us not be dismayed under the Cross, but assure our selves of a good end, and of an happy issue. It is the cup which we must all drink of, in one kind or in another. Let us not sink down under it, but lay hold on this principle, and fasten our hearts upon the doctrine with which we deal, as on an Anchor cast out of the ship to stay us, assuring our selves that God will be gracious unto us, his mercy shall superaboūd, so that we shall be more then Conquerors. One affliction followeth another, as one wave of the Sea rouleth after another, as Psal. 42. verse 7. One deep calleth another deep by the noise of thy water spouts; all thy waves and thy floods are gone over me. And in the 66. psalm, the 10, 11, 12. verse. Thou, O God hast proved us, thou hast tried us, as silver is tried: thou hast brought us into the net, thou layedst affliction upon our loins; thou hast caused men to ride over our heads; we went through fire and through water, but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place. Nothing therefore shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath promised us that he will not leave us, nor forsake us. This promise we are to lay hold upon by faith, that he is able and willing to perform it, and that he will be better unto us then his word. We cannot believe too much concerning God: we need not fear to hope too far of his mercy. True it is, we oftentimes presume too far of the kindness of men, and so are deceived of our expectation: we promise to our selves much, when we go away empty. It is not so with God. There is no sin greater then infidelity, when he speaketh, not to hear: when he promiseth, not to believe: which he suffereth not to go unpunished. If you call his word into question which is passed out of his mouth, you call his nature and being in question; you $\langle \diamond \rangle$ in effect doubt whether he be God or not; yea, whether there be a God or not. The Prince that heard the word of the Lord sent in mercy, during the famine in Israel, and the siege of Samaria, 2 King. 7, 1. To morrow this time a Measure of fine flour shall be sold for a shekel, and two measures of Barley for a shekel, in the gate of Samaria, did not believe it, because such was their misery, that it seemed not only strange, but impossible unto them that there should be such plenty and abundance at a sudden, and no means appear how or which way it should be done, and therefore said, verse 2. Though the Lord would make windows in the heaven, could this thing come to pass? But what followed? The Prophet denounced against him, that he should see the truth of it with his eyes, but he should not eat thereof; and the Lord executed this sentence, and let nothing of that which he had said fall to the ground, for the people trod upon him in the gate (he having the over-sight of the business committed unto him) and he died, as the man of God had said.

Zachariah the Priest, had an Angel sent unto him from God, standing at the right side of the Altar of Incense, telling him that His prayer was heard, and that his wife should bear him a son, and that many should rejoice at his birth; howbeit he would not believe the message, he measured all things by the course of nature: the word of the Angel would not suffice him, that stood in the presence of God, and was sent to speak unto him, and to show him these good tidings; he must farther hear, verse 18. Whereby he should know this? But he that would not rest in these good tidings, is constrained to hear heavy tidings, that he should be dumb, and not be able to speak until the day that these things be done, because he believed not his words which should be fulfilled in their season. The like we might also say of the Israelites in the wilderness, as we shall see afterwards in the eleventh chapter of this book of Numbers, Moses shown the weakness of his faith, and the people the want of their faith, so that the Lord complaineth against them; against Moses, that he was of little Faith; against the rest, that they were for the most part a faithless generation, albeit they had known his goodness, tried his power, felt his justice, and seen his mercies and miracles plentifully amongst them; he might justly take up the same complaint against his people, which Christ did against his Disciples, Mat. 17. verse 17. O generation, faithless, and crooked, how long now shall I be with you? How long now shall I suffer you? Hence it is, that when Moses considering the want they had of flesh, Numb. 11, 21, 22. said, Six hundred thousand foot-men are there of the people, among whom I am: and thou sayest, I will give them flesh, that they may eat a month long: Shall the sheep and the Beeves be slain for them to find them? either shall all the fish of the sea be gathered together for them to suffice them? The Lord said unto Moses, Is the Lord's hand shortened? Thou shalt see now, whether my word shall come to pass unto thee, or no. He sent them that which they desired, but he sent it not as a blessing: they lusted with Concupiscence in the Wilderness, and tempted GOD in the Desert; so that it turned to be a curse unto them, for While the flesh was yet between their teeth, before it was chewed, even the wrath of the Lord was kindled against the people, and he smote the people with an exceeding great plague. Yea, such was the judgment that came upon them, that the place was called Kibroth hattaauah, the graves of Lust; for there they buried the people that fell a lusting, to keep thereby the greatness of their sin fresh in remembrance▪ verifying that also which the Prophet saith, Psal. 106, 16. He gave them their request, but he sent leanness into their soul. They had flesh enough, but it did them no good, they abounded, but their abundance turned to their destruction. So whē they wanted water, and Moses & Aaron did not teach them to be patient under the cross, and contented with God's hand, the Lord spake unto them; Because ye believed me not, to sanctify me in the presence of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this Congregation into the land which I have given them. There is no greater wrong can be done to God, then to doubt of his truth: of all sins, this is one of the most highest and most heinous, to have in us an evil heart and unfaithful, to depart away from the living God. Wherefore, when we or any part of the Church are in extremity, and lie under affliction, let us not cast off our confidence that hath great recompense of reward. Here is a stay to rest upon; here is a pillar that cannot be shaken; here is a most sure and firm foundation, upon which we should build our house. Is he more merciful to his Saints, then they can wish or desire? Let us then know for a certainty, that there is great hope of deliverance in the greatest extremitities, though we know no way to escape, but that we rest as a prey in the teeth of the Lyon: yet the love of God toward us is infinite and unspeakable: he can restore us and redeem us by sundry ways that we could not think of, nor dream of, nor desire. This is that which Mordecai is bold to put Esther in mind of, Ester 4, 14. If thou holdest thy peace at this time, comfort and deliverance shall appear to the Jews out of another place, but thou and thy Fathers house shall perish, Faith is the ground of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen, Heb, 11, 1. If there be faith in us, as the grain of Mustard seed which is very little, we shall find the benefit and fruit of it. If any grace be wanting in us, the fault is in our selves, and not in God: we have the truth of his word delivered unto us, but we believe not the doctrine which we hear. This we see in the Prophet Isaiah, chap. 50, 2. Wherefore came I, and there was no man? I called, and none answered: is mine hand so shortened, that it cannot help? Or have I no power to deliver? Behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea: I make the floodes desert; Their Fish rotteth for want of water, and dieth for thirst.

And afterwards the same Prophet urgeth this point, Isaiah 59.1, 2. Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save: neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear: but your iniquities have separated between you and your GOD, and your sins have hidden his face from you, that he will not hear. Nay, his ear is so far from being heavy that he cannot hear, that on the other side, he is quick of hearing, and so quick, that he is sought of them that asked not for him, and found of them that sought him not, Isaiah 65, 1. Seeing then he is so bountiful above all our desires, woe unto us, if we believe not his word, nor rest upon his power, nor content our selves with his promise. When the Israelites were oppressed with the hard and cruel task-masters of the Egyptians, what could they desire, or what did they desire at the hands of Pharaoh, but to go into the wilderness to serve him, and to carry with them their own Cattle, their children, and their substance? But God did not only grant that unto them, but brought them out with great substance; He gave them silver and gold, & there was not one feeble person among their tribes. They never durst ask of God to give them the treasures and the spoils of their enemies, yet he gave them that which they neither dared to ask, nor desired to obtain; for they had many Jewels, and much raiment, so that they were enriched, and the Egyptians spoiled. This was a reward and recompense of their service. They found favor in the sight of God, although they were evilly entreated at the hands of men.

[Use 2] Secondly, seeing God is merciful above our hope, we have hereby great comfort in prayer, to call upon him in the day of trouble, being assured that he will hear us, and that we shall obtain more than we desired, and find more than we asked. Are we slandered and reviled, as the case was of the suspected wife in this place? Do we hear evil reports cast out against us? let us not be grieved at it, nor return like for like; but rather call upon him that knoweth the secrets of all hearts: let us crave of him to make our innocence known, as the servants of God from time to time have done, who have received more than ever they asked of him. David prayed thus unto God, Psal. 7, 3. O Lord my God, if I have done this, if there be iniquity in my hands, if I have rewarded evil unto him that was at peace with me, &c. Let the enemy persecute my soul and take it, &c. Judge me, O Lord, according to my righteousness, and according to my integrity that is in me. He desired no more, than to be esteemed as he was, and to have the truth of his heart manifested; but GOD granted more than that. He heard his prayer, and he obtained that which he prayed not for. Did he ever ask of God a Kingdom? Did he crave that God would make him King of Israel? and yet GOD gave the Kingdom unto him. Are we in want, and would have his blessings? We shall find no want in him, who is more ready to hear us, than we are to speak. His ears are often open, while our mouths are shut. If we desire one mercy at his hands, he is ready to grant two unto us. How oftentimes did Abraham pray for the Sodomites that the City might have been spared? Yet he gave over and ceased begging, before God gave over granting his requests, Gen. 18. Even as he that seeketh one pearl, findeth sometimes more than he sought: so is it with all the faithful. The graces of God are all of them Jewelles of wonderful price. If a man sell all that he hath to get one of them, it is no dear purchase: and if a man depart from any of his saving graces, albeit he should procure to himself by it the possession of a kingdom, his loss were a thousand times greater than his gains: For what should it profit a man to gain the whole world, and then lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give for the recompense of his soul? On the other side our Savior teacheth, Mat. 13, 44, 45. That the kingdom of heaven is like unto a treasure hid in the field, which when a man hath found, he hideth it, and for joy thereof departeth, and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field. Again, The kingdom of heaven is like to a Merchant man, which seeketh good Pearls, who having found a pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had & bought it. Let us all from hence be encouraged to the exercise of prayer, and be bold to be ever begging of him. If a subject had this encouragement at the hand of his Prince, that if he were obedient unto him he would give him whatsoever he should ask, and a great deal more, he should be sure to want no suiters, but must be fain to assign many to receive their petitions. Or if there were any Prince known to be so gracious, that when any of his Liege-people should ask anything of him, he would of his princely bounty and magnificence lade him with benefits more than he desired, it were incredible to think in what flocks and multitudes they would resort unto him. There is no Prince to be compared with GOD, he hath all treasures in his own hand, and his treasury can never be drawn dry: his coffers can never be made empty, and his hand is never weary of bestowing. He giveth liberally to all that ask of him, And he reproacheth no man, I am. 1, 5. We ask little, & receive much: we ask spiritual blessings, and receive both spiritual and temporal: we ask of him Our daily bread, and we obtain of him more then bread: we crave of him things for our necessity, and we have given unto us for our Christian delight and pleasure.

There is none of us all that do truly believe, but we have a gracious and blessed experience of this truth. If we be not altogether brutish and blockish, or without feeling and marking of God's dealing toward us we must needs confess, that the benefits of God and his goodness towards us, hath surmounted our hope, and gone beyond our expectation: which ought to give us much encouragement to come unto him, and to approach to the throne of his grace. This we noted before in the prayer of Hannah, she prayed to God, and asked a son of him, but God gave her many sons. This is that which David spareth not to confess at large, Psal. 21, 2, 3, 4. Thou hast given him his hearts desire, and hast not denied him the request of his lips: for thou diddest prevent him with liberal blessings, and diddest set a crown of pure Gold upon his head: he asked of thee life, and thou gavest him a long life forever and ever. The savor of God was bestowed upon him before he prayed, and far beyond that which he prayed for. The like mercy we see extended toward Solomon after the death of his Father, when the government of a great people lay upon his shoulders, he prayed unto God, and asked of him nothing but a wise and understanding heart, to be able to rule that people, and to go in and out before them, and to discern between good and bad: but the Lord was so exceeding well pleased with it, that he said unto him; Because thou hast asked this thing, and hast not asked for thyself long life, neither hast asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies, but hast asked for thyself understanding to hear Judgment: Behold, I have done according to thy words; Loe, I have given thee a wise and an understanding heart: so that there hath been none like thee before thee, neither after thee shall arise the like unto thee: And I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both riches and honor, so that among the Kings there shall be none like unto thee all thy days. Great therefore is our sin, if having so wide a gate set open before us, and such a cloud of witnesses compassing us about, we do yet hang back, and do not pour out our meditations before him. This experience of God's favor, was the chief cause that the faithful have been so devout in prayer, that every day they were mindful of their own duty toward him, and of his mercy toward them, so that sometimes at midnight they rose up, and sometimes both evening and morning, and at noon they prayed unto him, and he did hear their voice, as in the 55. Psalm, and the 17. verse. and Psalm 119. Dan. 6.

Lastly, seeing God aboundeth in grace [Use 3] and goodness above our desires, it is our duty to render unto him again the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving. For, how shall we receive such unspeakable kindness, and not give him the glory? Or how shall he open his hands in so liberal and large a manner, and we shut our mouths against him? If he be so gracious to remember us, how shall we be so vnmindefull and unthankfull unto him? This use is concluded by the Apostle, Ephes. chap. 3. ver. 20, 21. having shown that God is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we either ask or think, he addeth in the next words, To him be praise in the Church by Christ Jesus throughout all generations for-ever, Amen. If we would diligently consider what God hath done for us, we shall be compelled to confess, that GOD hath many times prevented us with his liberal blessings, and that he hath been mercicifull towards us above all that we are able to crave or conceive. What then? Shall we do nothing to him again? True it is, we live not in a giving age; we are hand fast, and love not to part with anything. Do we so reward the Lord? Shall we receive all good things at his hands, and return nothing to him again? Shall we find him better to us than we desire, and shall he find us worse than he deserveth at our hands? Let us therefore give him praise for his unspeakable and unsearchable mercies, let his name be glorified in the Church by us. He showeth his power especially in the Church by work and word, and therefore it is great reason he should receive praise in his church. Hence it is that the Prophet saith, In Judah is God known, his name is great in Israel: in Salem also is his Tabernacle, and his dwelling place in Zion: there brake he the arrows of the bow, the sword, and the shield, and the battle. Here then he teacheth us, that God maketh his name glorious and famous. But where? In Judah. His name is great. But where? In Israel: and that because he wrought a marvelous work in overthrowing the army of Sennacherib, which threatened destruction to the Church, but it was destroyed itself. To this purpose we read in another psalm, Sing forth the glory of his name, make his praise glorious: say unto God, how terrible art thou in thy works! through the greatness of thy power shall thine enemies be in subjection unto thee. The like we might say of the word of God, as it is Psal. 147, 19, 20. He showeth his word unto Jacob, his statutes and judgments unto Israel; he hath not dealt so with every Nation, neither have they known his judgments: and in another place he teacheth, that he had magnified his name above all things by his word. Let this then stand as a firm principle, that God, because he showeth himself diverse ways in his Church, to wit, by his word and works, is therefore to be glorified and honored especially in it. He is gracious indeed to all mankind, howbeit he blesseth no persons in comparison of the members of his Church, so that he is to be praised in no places, & among no persons so much as in his Church, according to that saying of the Psalmist, Psal. 65, 1, 2. Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion; & unto thee shall all flesh come. Now God may be said to be glorified in the church two ways; first, privately; secondly, publicly. Priuately, when every man severally and apart by himself doth serve him and worship him, and set forth his praise. For we do receive every private man of us several blessings and benefits not common to others; these we are to acknowledge particularly and privately, and GOD accepteth this service at our hands. Publicly, when we meet in the assembly and congregation of the faithful, that are fellow members of the same body, that so he may receive praise by the mouths of many witnesses. Doubtless, God alloweth the former, and he is delighted with the private sacrifice of everyone, and accepteth the calves of our lips: but especially he is well pleased with the public prayers and praises that are performed by many. This did David promise to give unto GOD, because he had not a greater to promise, or to perform, Psalm 22, 23. In the midst of the congregation I will praise thee. True it is, God standeth not in need of our praises, neither gaineth anything to himself thereby which he had not before. For, as every beast of the Forest is his, and the cattle on a thousand mountains, Psal. 50, 10. so we can yield him nothing, but it must first proceed from him, and be given unto us. He is perfect of himself, and needeth no supply from us: for what can the beggar that hath nothing, give to the King that hath all in his power? Nevertheless, he is delighted in our obedience to his will, and well pleased with our performance of that which he requireth. We must therefore acknowledge our selves unworthy of the least of his mercies, we deserve not one bit of bread, or one drop of wate. In him we live, and move, and have our being.

The Land of Canaan was given to the Israelites, of mercy, not of merit: because he loved them, not because they loved him: not thorough their godliness and goodness, but through the wickedness of the nations. The Lord is our righteousness, and he hath made us accepted unto his Father. We are of our selves, wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked: we are not able so much as to think one good thought. There is nothing due to us but shame and confusion: yet such is God's grace & goodness toward us, that where sin hath abounded, his mercy hath abounded much more. If we ask of him garments to cover our nakedness, he will beside them decke us with Ornaments, and clothe us with broidred work, and attire us in silver and gold; he will put bracelets on our hands, a chain about our neck, a Jewel on our forehead, earrings in our ears, & a beautiful crown upon our heads. If we ask of him bread to eat, he will together with it give us wine to comfort the heart, and oil to make us have a cheerful countenance: so that we shall eat fine flour and honey, Ezekiel 16, 13. He is like unto Iael that entertained Sisera, he asked water, and she gave him milk, she brought forth Butter in a Lorldly dish, Judge. 4, 19. and 5, 25. We ask sparingly, and he bestoweth liberally: yea, he giveth freely that which we durst not hope for. This we see in Jacob. Genes. 48, 11. When Joseph came with his two sons to visit his sick Father, he said unto him, I had not thought to see thy face; and loe, God hath shown me thy seed. O the greatness of God's goodness unto us! How unspeakable are his mercies! How infinite is his loving kindness! O well shall it be with us, if we be ever mindful of it, and never forget any of his benefits. For, seeing he is rich in his mercies towards, let us not us be poor in our praises towards him. Christ hath spent himself upon us, let us not be sparing to give our selves unto him again. Let us follow the example of Jacob, who was in the earnestness of his affection carried into an admiration of God's favor towards him, and breaketh out into a thanksgiving for his benefits, as if he had said, That which I never thought would have come to pass, nay that which seemed to me desperate and impossible, God hath offered to me in wonderful manner beyond my expectation: I judged my son lost, but I have found him: dead, but I have received him alive. So, let us take pleasure and delight in his mercies: let us confess them in words, and let us praise his power & set forth his goodness toward us. Let us thē be ashamed of our own sluggishnes, seeing God is more willing to bestow, thē we to receive: he is more ready to show compassion upon us then we to be freed frō our misery. His grace is more plentiful then our prayer; for he giveth us more then we ask. The thief on the cross no sooner desired of the Lord to remember him when he came into his kingdom, but immediately he received this answer, Verily, I say unto thee, today shalt thou be with me in Paradise, which containeth more then he was bold to ask. We need not then fear any excess in faith, or that we should believe more then he will bestow, forasmuch as his favor goeth beyond our faith, who hath his hand open to give, before our mouth is open to speak unto him.

29 This is the Law of jealousies, when a wife goeth aside to another instead of her husband, and is defiled:

30 Or when the spirit of jealousy cometh upon him, and he be jealous over his wife, and shall set the woman before the Lord, and the Priest shall execute upon her all this law.

31 Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and the woman shall bear her iniquity.

Hitherto hath been handled the setting down of the Law. We have heard the cause propounded and resolved, examined and determined. Now we come to the conclusion of the whole matter, and the winding up of the sentence touching the woman suspected of adultery: which is twofold, one belonging to the man, the other to the woman. The man shall be free from sin; the woman shall bear her iniquity. Here the question may be asked, whether it be lawful in our days for the husband to make trial of his wife whō he suspecteth of adultery? may he attempt to discover openly what she hath done secretly? I answer, there is no such law now in force, neither may we give way to any such practice, & therefore it cannot be allowed as lawful. This action commenced against the wife, cannot want sin, and hath an evil foundation.

We that live in the light of the New Testament, who have more revealed unto us then was made known in the time of the Law, must know that no such thing is permitted unto us. What then? will some say, shall the husband suffer his wife to do what she list, and must he be a baud unto her? or be constrained to take all patiently? or shall he be driven to see all, and to say nothing? I answer, if the crime be known, God hath provided in his law to deal severely with such, Levite. 18. and Christian Magistrates must take away evil out of Israel. But if it be secret, they are to wait with patience, until God reveal it, and bring it to the open light. No man may rashly suspect his wife of adultery, or call her name into question, or raise an evil report of her; but labor to keep her within the bounds of her calling, that on the other side she may learn to love him and to reverence him.

[Verse 29. This is the Law of jealousies,] We are come to the conclusion of this matter, to wit, of the law of jealousies. We have heard every part of it; we have expounded every circumstance; we have considered every branch of it. True it is, we have no use of the practice of it: The bitter waters are not now to be drunken: the earthen vessel hath no more place, the jealousy offering of memorial is abolished: the uncovering of the woman's head is ceased, and the whole manner of trial is abrogated. Nevertheless, albeit the whole law be ended, yet the same God remaineth (the searcher of all hearts) bearing the same hatred to all sin which he did before, and hath the like love to innocence which he had before. What is it that moveth to the committing of the sin of adultery, but the hope to hide it? This bewitcheth the ungodly, and leadeth them to destruction, when they dream that God is like unto them. This is a vain conceit, and foolish opinion, because we see how the Lord himself taketh upon him to discover it, and to be revenged of those that shall presume to break the band of wedlock which he hath made. This was the purpose of this law, to show that the Lord taketh upon him, not only the knowledge, revealing, and punishing of this sin, even when it is most secretly committed without witness of any other man, yea or certain knowledge from the husband himself, or any confession of the party that had done it: but also the defense and clearing of the innocent woman, being oppressed, vexed, and over-burdened with the unjust jealousy of her suspicious husband. He might present his wife (whether she were guilty, or not guilty) before the Priest unto that trial, which God had appointed and established to that end among them, to avoid thereby a greater mischief. After which matter solemnized with all the ceremonies and circumstances thereof, if the woman were defiled indeed, then should her belly swell, and her thighs rot: if she were not defiled, then should she not only be free from this punishment, but also be blessed with fruitfulness, as a reward of her innocence, and a recompense of the injury done unto her, and a clearing of her good name which had evilly been called into question. We learn from hence, that all secret sins, hidden from men, are known unto God, and nothing is hidden from him.

Howsoever many sins be committed very secretly, and carried closely, that no man can accuse them or witness against them, or any way suspect them: yet notwithstanding God will find them out, and arraign them at the bar of his judgment seat. This we shall see proved unto us from the beginning. When Adam had sinned, he called him, convinced him, pronounced sentence against him, and caused it to be executed, Genesis, chap. 3.9. We see this in the murder of Abel, committed by his natural, or rather unnatural brother, the which albeit it were done out of the sight of man, so that he presumed to deny it and conceal it; yet he calleth him to a reckoning for it, What hast thou done? the voice of thy brothers blood crieth unto me, from the ground, Gen. 4.10. David's secret whoredom and shedding of innocent blood, were committed closely, yet they were discried and discovered by God, 2 Sam. 12.12. Thou hast done it secretly, but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the Sun. So the secret idolatry of the Jews is shown to the Prophet Ezekiel, chap. 8.6. Son of man, seest thou what they do? even the great abominations that the house of Israel committeth here that I should go far from my Sanctuary? but turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations. When the wise men that were come out of the East began to enquire after the king of the Jews that was new born; Herod, being troubled at this news, and fearing the loss of his kingdom, sent them to Jerusalem to seek him, and willed them when once they had found him, to come and bring him word, that he might go, and worship him: but God warneth the wise men that he sought to kill him: he hid the secrets of his heart, but God can reveal them: no man could discern what he meant, howbeit God law into him and his counsels well enough. Whereby we see, that sins hidden from the face of men, and neglected by them, are found out, and to be accounted for before God; forasmuch as all secret things shall be brought to judgment whether they be good or evil.

[Reason 1] And as by the mouth of two or three witnesses every word must be established, 2. Cor. 13.1. so by the force of two or three reasons shall this doctrine be confirmed. First, it is impossible that anything in heaven or earth should hide us or our works from the knowledge of the Lord our God. There is neither darkness of the night, nor secrecy of place, nor cunning devises and fetches of political men, can help us or conceal us. This the Prophet teacheth, Psal. 139.9, 10, 11. Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I fly from thy presence? if I ascend up into heaven, thou art there, if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me: If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be a light about me, &c. There is nothing can hinder his sight.

[Reason 2] Secondly, it is the office of God and an essential property attributed unto him to be the searcher of hearts. When men before the flood had corrupted themselves their works, and the earth it self upon which they went and walked, it is said, God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually, Gen. 6.5. This is it which Dau•d layeth before his son Solomon, 1 Chron. 28.9. The Lord searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of thoughts. This also the Prophet Jeremiah setteth down, chap. 17.10. I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doing. The Scripture is full of such testimonies, 2 Sam. 16.7. Psal. 7.10. and 26.2. and 139.13. Ierem. 11.20. and 20.12. This is an attribute proper unto God.

Thirdly, the most deep and hidden things [Reason 3] that man's eye cannot search into, are notwithstanding known unto God. When no man with all his cunning can dive or delue so deep as into the dark corners of the earth, yet the eye of God pierceth into them, as Pro. 15.11. Hell and destruction are before the Lord; how much more then the hearts of the children of men? Who can pierce so far as to look into the heavens? or who can behold the things laid up in the center of the earth? who can descend into the bottom of the sea, to descouer the treasures that are hidden in the waters? or what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man that is within him? so the things of God knoweth no man but the spirit of God. He is able to make all darkness to be light, and all secret things to be open and manifest to the world.

Fourthly, can anything be hidden from [Reason 4] him of whom they had their being, of whom they were created, of whom they have whatsoever is in them is not the work known to the workman, the art to the artificer, and the pot to the potter? He seeth not only near, but a far off: he knoweth our down sitting, and our uprising: he understandeth our thoughts that we conceal from others: he is acquainted with all our ways: our substance is not hid from him, he covered us in our mothers womb. Hereupon the Prophet saith, Psal. 94.9. He that planted the ear shall he not hear? he that formed the eye, shall he not see? he that teacheth man knowledge, shall he not know? the Lord knoweth the thoughts of man that they are vanity. Seeing then God giveth life and being to every creature, and that they have received breath and motion from him, we may conclude that the most secret things committed in the most secret corners of the world are well known to God, and cannot be hidden from him.

This principle being strongly confirmed [Use 1] and so carrying authority to our consciences, let us see what uses may be made of it. First, seeing our secrets are not secrets with God and our counsels are not counsels to him, let us be persuaded of this most certain truth, and have it written in our hearts, that all men in this world, their hearts, their thoughts, their dealings, their desires, their delights, their words, their actions, and all things belonging unto them, are perfectly known unto the Lord, according to the saying of the Apostle, Hebrews, chapter 4. verse 14. There is not any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do. It is true indeed, if men were asked, whether they believe that GOD is present everywhere to behold all things that we do, they would freely & frankly confess it with their mouths, & be ready to seal unto it with their tongues. It would be thought no strange thing to any, but a ground whereunto all persons yield, against which none dareth oppose himself: howbeit, if we come to their works, and examine their ways into which they are entered, we shall see it is far removed from their hearts and innermost parts. We are not therefore to flatter our selves in our sins, as though no eye saw us, or no ear heard us, as the manner of the profane and ungodly is, who say, who seeth me? I am compassed about with darkness of the night, the walls of the house hide me, nobody can behold me, what need I then to fear? There is not one of an hundredth that maketh any bones at sin, so he may carry it away clearly and closely, smoothly and secretly from the sight and knowledge of the world. They stand more upon their credit, then upon their conscience: and regard more the shame of men, then the fear of God. But what shall it profit a man to hide his sins from men, when they lie open to the eyes of God? Nay, albeit we think our selves never so sure and secret, yet we do but deceive our selves, forasmuch as our own conscience, as a thousand witnesses, will not be bribed to hold his peace, but will reply against us within our own bosom, and say unto us, I see thee, I will not keep thy counsel, I will accuse thee, I will bring in evidence against thee, I will indite thee, and condemn thee. So long then as we have a conscience, what are we the better, though we have nobody privy to our sins? for if our own heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things, John. 3.20. The conscience is as a watchman set over us to mark all our thoughts, that pryeth narrowly into us that nothing at all can escape him. It is as a Scrivener that always holdeth a pen of iron in his hand to write up all that passeth from us, who doth so firmly ingraue it, that nothing shall be able to blot it out. It is a faithful remembrancer to register and record all our actions; nothing can escape him that was done, or thought, or spoken a thousand years ago.

This serveth to reprove all such as think to delude God and to hide their dealings from him: as the adulterer supposeth to go in the dark, the thief and murderer in solitary places: but the Lord in his word preventeth such peevish and foolish conceits, Psal 10.11.13.14. He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten: he hideth his face, he will never see it: wherefore doth the wicked contemn God? he hath said in his heart, thou wilt not require it. But thou hast seen it: for thou beholdest mischief and spite, to require it with thine hand: the poor committeth himself unto thee, thou art the helper of the fatherless. Thus we see, God is not in all his thoughts. So in the 94 Psalm, which we cited before, bringing in the ungodly to speak thus, The Lord shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it, he reproveth them in this manner, Understand, ye brutish among the people: and ye fools, when will ye be wise? They then are deceived, that think to escape God's sight and knowledge. Solomon complaining of such as speak evil of Princes and those that are in authority, Eccle. 10.20. declareth that rather then it shall be kept secret, the fowls of the air shall discover it, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter: that is, it shall certainly come to light, and be set in the sight of the Sun, that all men may see it. Much more then will God himself find infinite means to lay open the thoughts of our hearts, so that nothing shall escape him. If Elisha by the Spirit of God was able to disclose the secret counsels of the king of Syria that he plotted and contrived in his secret chamber, 2 King. 6.12. Shall not God then lay open our secret sins that we commit? or can we hide them from his sight? His eyes are in every corner of the earth. He seeth not as man seeth, nor looketh upon the countenance, but God beholdeth the heart, even he that formeth the spirit within him.

Secondly, let no man sin with hope of concealment, [Use 2] neither think to escape when he hath sinned. He saw the sacrilege of Achan, though he committed it secretly; none of the people could accuse him or detect him. God commanded every family to appear before him apart, and if he had not taken him and singled him out, neither Joshua nor the Elders of the people could have known him by all their wisdom and gifts of discerning, Josh. 7 1. It was God that found him out that took the accursed thing, it was not in the power and policy of man to bewray the theft. He discovered the hypocrisy of Ananias and Sapphira, & their counterfeit liberality toward the distressed members of the Church. They were taken to be most earnest believers, most forward professors, and most zealous Christians, such as gave example of a good life unto others, & seemed to shine as goodly lights in the firmament; nevertheless, the Spirit of God that searcheth all things did make manifest the hollowness of their hearts, and therefore Peter inspired with knowledge from above saith unto them, How is it, that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? or why hath Satan filled your hearts to lie to the holy Ghost? He saw into the treachery of Judas, when none of the disciples could espy it. For when they sate at the Passover, and Jesus revealed unto them that he should be betrayed by one of them that dipped his hand in the platter with him, they were very sorrowful and knew not whom to suspect, but one said, Master is it I? and another said, Is it I? Mat. 26 22. Mar. 14.19. All these were detected of hypocrisy, and all these were punished by the hand of God most severely; Achan was stoned with stones, and burned with fire, Josh. 7.25.

Ananias and Sapphira were both of them stricken with sudden death, and had no time of repentance given unto them: for they fell down straightway at Peters feet, & yielded up the ghost, and great fear came upon all the Church, and upon as many as heard these things. Judas, when he perceived, that Jesus, whom he had betrayed, was condemned, brought back again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief Priests and Elziers, and cast them down in the Temple, and departed, and hanged himself Matth. 27.5. We see an this present place which now we have in hand, how the Lord used the bitter waters of jealousy, to find but the adulteress. We do not find throughout the whole Testament the like solemnity in the searching out of any sin, no, not idolatry, or witch craft, or sorcery, or blasphemy, or murder; neither was y^e person suspected compelled to subscribe to certain words of execration or imprecation against himself if he had offended, save only in this trial of adultery. So that we must above all things beware we flatter not our selves in these great sins, in hope of secrecy or impunity. This is y^e counsel that Solomon giveth upon this consideration, Prov. 5.20; 21. Why wilt thou, my son, be ravished with a strange woman, and embrace the bosom of a stranger? for the ways of man are before the eyes of the Lord, and he pondereth all his goings. Where he warneth us to beware of secret sins, because the eye of God is evermore upon us, and our most secret actions. We may not bear our selves bold upon his ignorance, or oversight, or slip of memory, as many presume upon these & such like, when they have to do with the sons of men.

For if we have any hope, either that they know not our offenses, or have forgotten them, we lift up our heads on high, and fear not to dare the Magistrate to his face. And indeed it is true, the wisest men are not always able in so smooth a carriage and so close a conveyance to enter into the secret purposes of deceitful men. The heart of man is deceitful above all things, and the corners of it past finding out. Hence it is that Christ saith unto his disciples, when there were gathered together such an innumerable multitude of people that they trode one upon another, Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy: for there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known, Luk. 12.1.2.

Adultery and hypocrisy are known for the most part only unto our selves, and therefore we wax the bolder, and proceed the farther in them, according to the Lord's words, Psal. 50.21. Th•se things hast thou done, and I kept silence: thou thoughtist that I was altogether such a one as thyself, but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes. The truth of all this we have verified in the late treacheries and treasons conspired against our King, our Queen, our Prince, our People, and our Religion, against the Church and Commonwealth. Our manifold and marvelous, yea, miraculous deliverances do publish and proclaim claim very notably, that there is a God that judgeth the earth, who seeth all things, heareth all things, understandeth all things, and revealeth all things. Happy were it for us if we knew the things aright that belong to our peace.

Have we not good experience that nothing is hidden from God? do we not find to our great comfort, that the plots and projects of our enemies, howsoever sought to be concealed, by taking of oaths and receiving of the Sacrament, are yet known unto God? We serve such a gracious God as watcheth for us, so that he which keepeth Israel, neither slumbereth nor sleepeth. O that we would take notice of these things! O that men would consider when they sin, that the all-seeing eye of God is upon them to reveal them according to his knowledge, and to reward them according to their sin! O that wicked men therefore did know what they do! The men of the old world sinned in all riot and excess, but had they known they had been so near to be drowned by a general flood, they would not have run into those sins, so that our Savior saith, As in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the Ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away: so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.

If Judas had known what he did, when he betrayed his Master, he would never have received the thirty pence, the price of innocent blood. Our Savior, praying for his persecutors, saith, Father forgive thē, for they know not what they do. If the rich man that is now tormented in hell, where is no promise of pardon, nor release of punishment, nor place of repentance, nor hope of escaping, had known or considered, that by his sins he should have heaped up so great wrath against the day of wrath, he would not have needed Lazarus to be sent unto him to bring him one drop of water to cool his tongue and to quench his heat.

In him these two sins met together, prodigality and covetousness, the two extremes of too much and too little: he spent too much, and yet he held too fast: he wasted all, but yet he would give nothing. He fared deliciously, and clothed himself sumptuously every day, but he afforded nothing to poor Lazarus; he consumed all upon himself, but refused to bestow anything upon him that lay at his gate. So then he was both riotous and covetous: exceeding

To this purpose the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 2.8. The Princes of this world knew not the hidden wisdom which God ordained before the world: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. So then, the want of the knowledge of God, of sin, and of duty, is the original cause of all misery. And John in his first Epistle, chap. 3.6. hath a worthy saying, Whosoever abideth in him, sinneth not: whosoever sinneth, hath not seen him, neither known him. Such as commit sin with all greediness, and have it reigning in them, do not know God as they ought to do, howsoever they may boast of their own knowledge. Let us learn therefore betimes to bridle our affections and practices of sin, following the example of Joseph, who being provoked to adultery, answered, that he should sin against God. Gen. 39.9: and remembering the confession of the Church, Psal. 44.20, 21. If we have forgotten the Name of our God, and stretched out our hands to a strange god, Shall not God search this out? for he knoweth the secrets of the heart. They are senseless men that care not what they commit against God, if it may be hidden from the face of men. There is but one step between this and Atheism, to run out into all excess of riot, and yet to think to hide it from God.

[Use 3] Lastly, from hence ariseth great comfort to the faithful. For seeing God seeth y^e thoughts and intents of wicked men, howsoever men cover them with dissimulation and deceit as with a cloak, we may cheer up our hearts in time of trouble, assuring our selves that nothing can come to pass, or fall out unto us which he doth not know and behold. This is that which the Lord telleth Moses, Exod. 3.7, 8. when the people of Israel sighed by reason of their bondage, and cried in the bitterness of their spirit, their cry came up unto God, so that he heard their groaning, and remembered his covenant, and had respect unto them, The Lord said, I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry, by reason of their Taske-masters: for I know their sorrows, and I am come down to deliver them out of the hands of the Egyptians, &c. He is not ignorant what tears we shed, but keepeth them in a bottle of remembrance: he knoweth what prayers we pour out, for they ascend up into his presence as incense: he heareth the sighs and groans that come from us, for he understandeth that language, The spirit helpeth our infirmities, for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the spirit it self maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And albeit he hold his peace for a time, and seem to wink at their cruel practices, as if he saw them not, or heard them not, or knew them not, yet when the appointed time cometh, he will no longer keep silence, but show himself to be the deliverer of his people; and the revenger of his and their enemies. We saw before out of the book of Exodus, what mercy he promiseth to his people being in misery. He had a feeling of their afflictions, and after a sort felt what they felt. Behold, what words of comfort, sweeter then the honey & the holy comb, he vttrith: I have seen, I have heard, I know, I am come down. He saw their afflictions: he heard their cries: he hath known their sorrows: he came down to deliver them from their persecutors. If the Lord had used only one of these words, I have surely seen the affliction of my people, it had been as balm to refresh us, it had been as marrow unto our bones, and as wine and oil poured into our wounds: but when he useth four words, it is more then a doubling and a trebling of our comfort, to assuage the bitterness of the cross, so y^t albeit it be more sharp then vinegar, & more bitter then gal & wormwood, yet they are sufficient to allay the one & y^e other. God doth sometimes after a sort hide himself, and hold his peace, & turn his back from us whē we are in trouble, to manifest the more the greatness of his power and mercy in our deliverance, to stir us up to prayer and calling upon him for help, to teach us to remove all confidence and trust in our selves, or in the sons of men, to wean us from the love of the world, to increase our zeal, to try our faith and patience, and to harden the hearts of our enemies, that he may gain glory to his great name in their destruction. He doth not delay to help us, and put off the time to deliver us, because he hath forsaken us or forgotten us: it is not, because he is not able to restore us: it is not, because he cannot repress and quail the fury of our enemies: it is not, because he hath cast off the care of us; forasmuch as he knoweth what they practice, and what we suffer, according to the heavenly saying of the Psalmist, The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry: but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth. Let us therefore comfort our selves in God, while we find no comfort at all in men. Let us put on the armor of prayer and tears: these are our spiritual weapons, strong to throw down mountains, and mighty to prevail against the greatest tyrants that seek to deface the truth, and destroy the Church. The weapons of the Church are not swords and staves, or spears and shields, or munition and multitudes of men: but as the warfare of it is spiritual and that it wrestleth not against flesh and blood, but against principalities & powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, and against spiritual wickedness in high places; so the weapons thereof must be spiritual, answerable unto the battle which we are to make, and fit to encounter such adversaries as oppose against us. To this purpose doth the Prophet bring in the Church putting their confidence in him, Lord in trouble have they visited thee: they poured out a prayer when thy chastening was upon them: like as a woman with child that draweth near the time of her delivery, is in pain, and crieth out in her pangs, so have we been in thy sight, O Lord. The like we see in Jehoshaphat, when many enemies came against him and his people to cast them out of the possession which God had given them to inherit, he rested not in his own power, neither trusted he in his own policy, but dependeth upon God, and flieth unto him, saying, O our God, wilt thou not judge them? for we have no might against this great company that cometh against us, neither know we what to do, but our eyes are upon it he: and all Judah stood before the Lord, with their little ones, their wives and their children, 2. Chron. 20.12.13. On the other side, as this consideration of God's infinite knowledge, and discovery of all secrets, ministereth exceeding comfort to the godly that lie under the cross, and putteth them in assured hope of future deliverance: so it serveth as a terror to all their enemies that oppress them and trouble them; they shall not escape him that seeth their counsels, though they dignity never so deep to hide them, he heareth their slanders and reprochful taunts, though they seek to cover them never so cunningly and secretly. God that is omnipotent cannot be unjust, he will reward everyone according to his works: and therefore Elihu saith in the book of Job, His eyes are upon the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings; there is no darkness nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves, Job 34.21, 22. They think they go closely to work, but alas, poor blind men, they see not that God seeth them. They think they have a vizard over their faces, and cannot be known, whereas their foul offenses are written in their forehead. They think they are in the dark and covered with the night, whereas the light shineth round about them more clearly then the Sun at noon day. This ought to strike a fear of God's power and presence into the hearts of all wicked men. No man is so impudent and past shame to commit evil in the Magistrates sight, and before his eyes, whom he knoweth to be endued with authority, armed with power, and to bear the sword of justice in his hand to cut off all evil doers. Shall we then dare do that before God, which we dare not do before men? or shall we presume to do that in his sight, which we are ashamed or afraid to do in the presence of mortal man? He is all an eye to see all: he is all an ear to hear all: he is all an heart to understand all. Or shall we be so void of piety, and common reason, to think he is ignorant of that we do, or careless of that we do. Shall we make him deaf, and not to hear us? or blind and not to see us? shall we dream he is far off from us, and knoweth us not? or otherwise busy and regardeth us not? shall we suppose that he which keepeth Israel, doth either slumber or sleep? To say he is ignorant of our doings, is to blaspheme his holy Name and to make him a silly and simple God. To say he seeth them, and would, but cannot punish, is to make him a weak and impotent God. To say, he can, but will not punish, is to make him an unjust God, and one that favoereth sin. To say, he beholdeth all the ways of the sons of men, but that he careth not which end go forward, nor abaseth himself to consider the particular things that fall out in the world, is, with the Epicures & Libertines to make him sit idle in heaven, to suffer men on earth to do all things, and himself to do nothing: which cannot agree to God, but are far from his most wise, most perfect, most pure, most powerful, most just, and righteous nature. Let us evermore walk as in his presence, and set him before our eyes. Let us not make our selves Atheists, either in deed, or in word, or in heart. Some in their works, say there is no God: some in words say, there is no God: and some say in their hearts, there is no God. Few dare affirm it, or avouch it, or maintain it with their tongues; but there are many which are not far from it in their hearts, and they shall see it to be so, if they would examine them aright. Sometimes they are not ashamed to say, there is no God: sometimes they fear not to say, God seeth us not: sometimes they stick not to say, he heareth us not, he forgetteth us, he regard sit not, he turneth away his face, he careth not what we do, he will not punish us. Howsoever these speeches, tending directly to the dishonor of God, and reproach of his holy Name, are not always nor oftentimes uttered with the mouth, yet they stick in the minds, and dwell in the thoughts of profane men, whereby they strengthen themselves in evil, and harden their hearts in wickedness. Such are they that say, it is a vain thing to serve God, and it is no profit to keep his ordinances. Such are they, that when they think or speak of the last judgment, say, Where is the promise of his coming? Such are they, that say with the evil servant, in his heart, My master delayeth his coming. A master is often absent from his servant, and seeth not what he doth. It is not so with God, he beholdeth what we do on earth, and his eyes are evermore upon us. He is included in no place, he filleth heaven and earth. He is not like the idols that neither see nor hear. The author of light cannot be dark: the fountain and spring head cannot want water; nor the fire be destitute of heat which maketh hot other things. God is the author of life, he is the fountain of water, springing up in us to everlasting life. Let this meditation be in us, and this cogitation be continually before us, that he is continually behind us and before us, without us and within us, on the right hand and on the left hand of us. He is always near to us, and never far from us: he is evermore in heaven, and yet never absent from the earth. Let us then learn, so often as we use the benefit of our eyes and ear, and both see and hear with them, to consider concerning God the Creator and maker of them, how sharply and clearly he seeth and heareth, who hath given unto us the force and faculty of seeing and hearing. Do we think any evil in our minds, and have we deep devises in our hearts? Why do we not consider that we cannot hide our counsel from the Lord, and that it is he which hath given us understanding? Do we speak with our lips, foolish, contentious, filthy and unclean words, and suffer corrupt communication to proceed out of our mouths, which men do hear, and witness well that they do hear them, sometimes by blushing, sometimes by laughing sometimes by reproving, & sometimes by having indignation at them? Why do we not remember, that if man hear us and understand us, how should not God much more hear us? for from whence hath he borrowed his ear to hear but from him? Are we slandered and reviled of any? have we reprochful words, and false reports cast out against us? and do we hear them, repine at them, and seek to be revenged of them? Why do we not think thus with our selves, if we can hear and listen with our ears unto them, how are we so senseless and slow to conceive, that God must needs hear much better, much rather, much farther then we are able? Lastly, Do we commit any evil? Do we run into sin with violence, and will not be stayed or stopped from it? do we shun the sight of men, because we know they have eyes to see us and to perceive our doings? Why then do we not call to mind, that if mortal man, whose breath is in his nostrils, and whose eyes are in his head, can discern sufficiently the works of our hands, how should we be so blockish or brain-sick to imagine, that God seeth not at all, who hath given eyes to man, and power to see? Every man that is well in his wits, and hath his five senses about him, must needs yield to this truth, which God hath sealed up in nature; and yet there are too many in all places that make no use of it. To conclude this doctrine, and with the doctrine this chapter, and with the chapter this book, let us set down this as a sure rule, that then we do know God aright, when we have learned to walk evermore as in his presence, and in all our actions to have him before our eyes, who hath us before his eyes, and to look up unto him, who always looketh down upon us; to whom therefore be praise in the Church throughout all generations, Amen.

CHAP. VI.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying.

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When either man or woman shall separate themselves to vow a vow of a Nazarite, to separate themselves unto the Lord:

3 He shall separate himself from wine, and strong drink, &c.

OF sanctification necessarily required in the Law, we have spoken in the former Chapter. In this Chapter Moses goeth forward to handle this point farther, which is so necessary as that without it none can be the people of God. Herein for order we are to observe two things: first, the voluntary sanctification undertaken by private men that entered into the precise vow of the Nazarites, who, that they might more fully and freely attend and intend the learning of the Law, and give themselves to the contemplation and consideration of the works and ways of God and of godliness, separated and sequestered themselves for a time, wholly from the company and conversation of men, resigning up themselves into the hands of God, and seeking to cut off all occasions whatsoever, that might quench their zeal and hinder their devotion. Secondly, the public sanctification of the whole Church, whereof God is the author, Moses the teacher and the interpreter. This is the sum of this Chapter.

Touching the former point handled in the 21. first verses, which is, concerning y^e vow of the Nazarites, before we come to the matter it self, it shall not be amiss for the farther declaration and demonstration thereof, to remove two doubts that stand in the way, arising, the one from the diverse acceptation of the word, the other from the distinction of the several kinds of this vow. Touching the several significations of the word, lest we be deceived by the ignorance thereof, we must understand that there are four acceptations of it distinct the one from the other. Some are called Nazarites some Nazarens, others Nasarites; which words because they are oftentimes by diverse confounded as if they were all one and the same, it is needful to have them distinguished aright the one from the other. The Nazarites, of whom we have mention in this place, have their name of separation, and are written by the letter Zain: these by observation of certain ceremonies (of which we shall speak more particularly afterward) dedicated themselves unto God in a more holy manner then the common sort. The second sort called Nazarens, or Nazarites, are distinguished from the former, and written with the letter Tsadi, and so to be called Natsarites or Natsarens, so named of the word Netzer, which is oftentimes used by the Prophets, and signifieth properly a branch, growing out of the roots of trees, frō whence the Syriac word Notzera, or Notzerath, or Natzerath is derived; and thereof cometh the name of the City or Village of Nazareth in Galilee, because it was situate in a place planted with store of trees and flowers, as Danaus testifieth out of Bernard. Now Christ our Savior, being conceived and brought up in this place, is in the New Testament called a Nazarene, Matthew, chap. 2. verse 23. and Jesus of Nazareth, John. 19.19. Act. 2.22. and 3. 6. Matth. 26.76.71. Mar. 1.24. and 10.47. and 14.67. and 16.6. Luk. 4.34. & 18.37. & 24.19. Act. 4.10. and 16.14. and 10-38. and 22.8. and 26.9. From hence also the disciples of Christ were first called Nazarites, but afterward they were called Christians, Acts 11.26. at Antioch which professed the faith of Christ, and the doctrine of the Gospel. The third kind of Nazarites differeth from both the former, both in the original of the word, and in wanting warrant from the authority of the Scriptures. For they are otherwise written thē the other were, to wit, with the letter S, and are derived from the Syriac word Nesar, which signifieth to cut off or to abolish, because they held that the books of Moses and the Prophets (howsoever they carried their names) were feigned and counterfeit things, and withal maintained it to be unlawful to kill any living thing, or to eat of the flesh of any creature wherein the spirit of life had been, and consequently condemned the bloody sacrifices prescribed in the Law. The fourth and last sort of those whom Eusebius remembereth among the Ebionites, howbeit others reckon and range them among other heretics, did after a sort believe in Christ, and acknowledged him to be the promised Messiah; for as the former sort were Jews, so these would be accounted Christians; howbeit they taught that the ceremonies of the law of Moses were necessary to salvation, and thereby did covertly and cunningly overthrow the liberty of the Gospel: again, they boasted of their false miracles and private revelations, as the Anabaptists do in these last days. Now as Christ our Savior was commonly called Jesus of Nazareth, so to be called Nazarites after his name, as Christians of Christ, was at the first received as a name of praise and commendation, howsoever the unbelieving Jews and Gentiles used or rather abused it, as appeareth Acts 24.5. Where Tertullus the declaying Orator accuseth Paul to be a ring leader of the sect of the Nazarens: and therefore these heretics gloried and boasted in that name, as in a name and note of honor, as the fittest which they found as with a veil to hide and with a cloud to cover the poison and pestilence of their damnable sect, who under the color of the Christian religion did indeed decline and depart from the true doctrine of Christ. Thus much of the names of the Nazarites, the first whereof, is of such as are mentioned in the Old Testament: the second, of such as are expressed in the new, so named of Nazareth a City of Galilee: the third, of those that altogether abrogated and abolished the Old Testament: the fourth, of such as taught that Christians were bound to observe the ceremonies of Moses. These two last have no footsteps in the Scriptures, but they are found in Ecclesiastical histories.

Having thus opened the name, let us consider the several kinds of these Nazarites, mentioned in the first place. They are of two sorts: first, such as were Nazarites by commandment: secondly, such as were Nazarites by vow. Now both these kinds were such among the Jews as were separated from the rest of the people, to a more strict and pure course of serving God than others were, of which the Prophet speaketh in the Lamentations, chap. 4.7. Her Nazarites were more pure than snow, they were whiter than milk, they were more ruddy in body than rubies, their polishing was of Sapphire. By commandment were such, as God from the beginning did extraordinarily call to that solemn profession of a special holiness. These were perpetual Nazarites, whose separation from the common sort by a stricter kind of life continued all the days of their life. Of this sort we have sundry examples, some in the Old Testament, and some in the New. In the Old, we have first the example of Sampson, then of Samuel, and afterward the Rechabites. Concerning Sampson, we read that the Angel of God appeared to the wife of Manoah his mother, and said to her, Behold, now thou art barren, but thou shalt conceive and bear a son: and now drink no wine, nor strong drink, neither eat any unclean thing: for the child shall be a Nazarite to God, from the womb, unto the day of his death: and afterward Sampson himself told his minion all his heart, being besotted and almost bewitched with her love, and said unto her, There hath not come a razor upon my head: for I have been a Nazarite unto God from my mothers womb. And touching Samuel, his mother set him apart to this vow, and said before he was borne, I will give him unto the Lord all the days of his life, and there shall no razor come upon his head. In this number we may after a sort range the Rechabites mentioned in Jeremiah, chap. 35.6. who, though they had wine set before them and were bidden to drink, yet they answered, We will drink no wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab our father, commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye, nor your sons forever. Now this was one part of the vow of the Nazarites, and therefore we may account them a kind of Nazarites. In the New Testament, we see the like in John the Baptist, Luk. 1.15, where the Angel foretelleth that he shall be great, and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink, and he shall be filled with the holy Ghost from his mothers womb.

But these are not altogether the Nazarites here spoken off: let us therefore come to the vow here mentioned, and consider from hence, that among the Jews the vow of the Nazarite was allowed and approved of God, used and practiced of that people. This doth Amos confirm unto us, Chap. 2.11.12. I raised up of your sons for Prophets, and of your young men for Nazarites, is it not even thus, O ye children of Israel, saith the Lord? but ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink. Of these also we heard before out of the Lamentations, where they are set forth. Of this sort are they, whom James and the Elders speak off, Act. 21.23. saying to Paul, We have four men which have made a vow; them take and purify thyself with them, and contribute with them, that they may shaue their heads: and all shall know that those things, whereof they have been informed concerning thee, are nothing: but that thou thyself walkest and keepest the Law: And before, Chap. 18.18, 20. it is said, that Paul took his leave of the brethren and sailed thence into Syria, and took with him Priscilla and Aquila, having shorn his head in Cenchrea, for he had a vow. And as James persuaded him, so he took the men, and the next day purifying himself with them, entered into the Temple to signify the accomplishment of the days of purification, until that an offering should be offered for everyone of them.

True it is, this voluntary vow was rare and unwonted under the Gospel, and so much the more, because the Synagogue began now after a sort to be buried, and restrained, Act. 15.29. howbeit the Apostle is content to retain some of the ceremonies, not that he placed any religion in them, or thought them necessary of themselves to be observed, which had now received their deaths wound in the death of Christ; but he had respect to the infirmities of the weak brethren among the Jews, that were not yet thoroughly instructed in the liberty of the Gospel, and the freedom which Christ had brought them, in regard whereof to the weak he became as weak, that he might win the weak; to the Jews he became as a Jew, that he might win the Jews; to them that are under the Law, as under the Law, that he might gain them that are under the Law; yea he made himself a servant unto all, that he might gain the more, and became all things to all men, that he might by all means save some. Thus then we see that among the Jews that were the people of God, in the time of the Law were such as vowed a special separation to God, consecrating, and sanctifying, and dedicating themselves to his service, who lived as strangers upon earth, as if they were in another world, being as men that had made a diuorse and division between themselves and the profane men and manners of the world, and were eminent among others and above others, as the Cedar among the shrubs, as the stars among the orbs, and as the Sun among the stars.

The reasons why God alloweth and approveth [Reason 1] of this vow are; first of all because mē are by nature so prove & ready to take up & choose to themselves certain sorts and sects of life that there is but a step between them and falling into superstition. Now by binding of them in this sort, he doth cast a cord about their loins, & put a bridle in their mouths; so that this is as much as if he had said unto them, Forasmuch as I see into your harts how willing you are to devise new forms and fashions of serving and worshipping me, ye shall not do what pleaseth you, but what I appoint Thus he keepeth them within the compass of their duty by this vow, and permitting them somewhat, he restraineth them from more.

Secondly, he doth hereby curb the people y^t they should not follow the trades & desires of the heathen, by finding them work as it were at home, wherewithal to busy themselves: and hence it is, that he willeth the people, Deut. 12.30. to take heed to themselves that they were not snared by following the Canaanites after that they were destroyed before them, & that they enquire not after their God's, saying, How did these nations serve their gods? even so will we do likewise. So then, God ordained this and such like kind of vows, to the end his own people should not follow the fond fashions of the idolatrous heathen that dwelt round about them.

Thirdly, that from hence might spring some maintenance for the Ministry, whereof in all ages and times God hath shown himself to have a special care. This appeareth evidently in the twentieth verse of this Chapter, when the Nazarite offereth a Ram for a sacrifice of a peace offering unto the Lord, a part thereof is holy for the Priests use: and therefore in this vow, the Lord had a respect to the upholding and continuing of his service by providing for those that attended thereunto.

Now the parts of the vow are to be considered, before the uses be pointed out. We have heard already, that the Nazarites were such persons as vowed a special kind of holiness. The parts of their special holiness are two: first, while they were in this vow; secondly, when the days of it were accomplished. Touching the first, while they continued in their vow, they were bound, not only to keep a temperate diet, but they were utterly to abstain from wine and strong drink, from vinegar of wine, & vinegar of strong drink, and from any liquor of grapes, as also from eating moist or dried grapes. Again, they must suffer no razor to come upon their heads, but must let the locks of their hair to grow, until the days be fulfilled in the which he separateth himself unto the Lord: besides, they must not defile themselves by any dead body, nor lament for any of the dead; but if any did come near them or touch them, all was frustrate and made void; the days of their separation and abstinence were to begin again, and they stood in the state wherein they were before they entered into this holy vow. The second degree of their sanctification was at the end of y^e days of their vow, then they must be brought to the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and offer their offering unto the Lord, &c.

[Use 1] This is the vow, and these are the Rites belonging unto it: now let us observe the uses remaining for us. For albeit these ceremonies be all abrogated, and seem nothing at all to touch us, and nothing at all to teach us, as things that when they were in their prime and greatest force belonged to the Jews; yet we shall find great benefit to arise from hence to the whole Church. And first concerning the sanctification of these Nazarites professing holiness above others, and in this course of a vowed kind of retyrednesse going before others, it was a lively figure of Christ, signifying to them and to us, & to the whole Church the wonderful purity of Christ, who was fully and perfectly separate from sinners. For he was the Lamb without blemish, or else he could not be a sacrifice for sin, [Object.] Levite. 1.3, 10 But was Christ such a Nazarite as these were here spoken off? and did he literally observe these parts and ceremonies expressed in this vow? I answer, [Answer.] no: he observed no part of this vow. The Nazarites abstained from wine, the fruit of the vine, the blood of the grape: but Christ himself in his own person did not so, he drank of the fruit of the vine, and lived after the ordinary manner of other men, and therefore after he had delivered his last Supper, he saith, I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Fathers kingdom. And albeit he were falsely called a wine-bibber, as he was also slandered to be a Samaritan and to have a devil, yet it showeth thus much, y^t he abstained not altogether from wine, yea he appointed others to drink of it, even his disciples & all other Christians at his holy Supper, so often as they drink of the cup of the Lord. The Nazarites had no razor come upon their heads during the days of their solemn vow, but whether Christ nourished his hair, we have nothing either one way or other, that we can gather and conclude for certainty; yet if we consider the words of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 11.14. and mark the common custom of the rest of the Jews which may be understood out of this place, it is not probable or likely, that Christ did ever nourish, and never cut his hair. And lastly the Nazarites were not to come near the dead, nor to mourn for them: but the Evangelists yield us plentiful testimonies, both that he came near unto them. [Object.] But some will say, that he is called in Scripture a Nazarene, or, as some translate it, a Nazarite: It was fulfilled which was spoken by the Prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene. I answer, [Answer.] we must distinguish between a Nazarite, and a Nazarene. For Christ is so called because he was a branch springing and flourishing from Nazareth, as the place of his conception and education, of which the Prophets speak in many of their writings, and namely Zachariah. Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, Behold the man, whose name is Branch, and he shall grow out of his place, and he shall build the Temple of the Lord. So then the Evangelist hath not respect or reference to these voluntary and vowed Nazarites of the Old Testament, neither doth he point out any certain place out of someone of the Prophets, but alludeth to such places, where Christ is called that holy Branch, which God promised he would raise up to David. Howbeit he is indeed a true Nazarite, or rather the truth of the Nazarites, separate from all the corruptions that attend upon the rest of y^e sons of men, free from the common defilements of the world; and that holy One which is called the Son of God. To this purpose the holy Apostle speaketh: Such an hie Priest became us, who was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher then the heavens: who needed not daily as those high Priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's. For this cause he was conceived by the holy Ghost in the womb of the Virgin, that he might be a merciful and faithful high Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people, Heb. 2, 17. If any sin had been found in him, his death could not be meritorious for us, he should have wanted a Savior himself for himself. So then he became a pure offering, and an holy sacrifice, that our sins might be washed away, and God's wrath appeased toward us. This is a great comfort for us to consider the excellency of his sacrifice, being without all blame or blemish, without all fault or imperfection: for he was miraculously conceived, partly to fulfill the propheties of the Prophets, Isaiah 7.14. and partly because the generation of mankind is wholly corrupted, therefore in the birth of Christ it was most requisite that the unspeakable work of the Spirit should come in, that so he might not be tainted with the common and general infection of original sin, but might be endued with most perfect purity and innocence, and so be fully able to cover our impurity and impiety, Ephe. 5.26.27, and withal as by a certain pledge assure us, that in the end all our sins and imperfections shall be done away. In him is that fulfilled therefore which is spoken in the Lamentations, that he was whiter then the milk, and purer then the snow, and it agreeth more fitly and truly unto him then unto these Nazarites.

Secondly, this teacheth that such as were [Use 2] special ornaments of the Church, and have received a more eminent office and calling then others, should also labor to shine before others in holiness of life, according to the measure of grace which they have received, as Rom. 16.7. Salute Andronicus and Iunia my kinsemen, and fellow prisoners, who are of note among the Apostles. These thus advanced of God, are in the eyes of the world, as a City set upon an hill; a little blemish is soon seen in their face, a small stain appeareth in their coat: and therefore Satan laboreth especially to tempt and seduce them. These are great moles in Satan's eyes, as marks set up for him to shoot at: because these do most of all seek the subversion of his kingdom, and the withdrawing of others out of his snares wherein he holdeth them captive, and therefore he hateth them to the death. We see he began with Christ, and he evermore desireth to hit the fairest mark, and to strike down the highest tree. It was a cunning policy of a crafty captain, to command his soldiers to strike at no part of the enemy but at the face: and the king of Syria commanded his chief commanders, to fight neither with small nor great, save only against the king of Israel. Such is the policy of Satan, he desireth to winnow and wound the chiefest and choicest of all, and he hath oftentimes prevailed, as we see in the examples of Noah, Lot, David, Moses, Aaron, Solomon, and many others: yea, he bendeth his forces and fury so much the more to overthrow and overturn these, because he knoweth that in over-mastering them, he commonly in their fall giveth the foil to diverse others. It is noted that Satan stood at the right hand of Joshua to resist him, Zac. 3.1. So Paul was assaulted above his fellows because of his rare and excellent gifts; this was the cause why he was so much maligned. And Christ telleth his disciples that Satan desired to winnow them, them I say above others, as their calling was above others: for they were the master-builders, and laid the foundation of the Church, upon which others built. Let all those therefore whose place and calling, and gifts make thē evident & eminent above others, take heed to themselves, to their carriage and conversation: let them labor to cleave more closely to God, and so to let their light shine before men, that they seeing their good works, may glorify their Father which is in heaven. These are as chief Captains of the host, and the ensign-bearers of the Church, to show the way to others, and to go in and out before them in an vnreprouable and unblameable course; and though they draw not all unto them by their example, yet their forwardness and fervency, their zeal & earnestness shall serve to instruct many others.

[Use 3] Thirdly, seeing these Nazarites must keep themselves from wine and strong drink, as also from eating fresh or dried grapes, so long as y^e days of their separation endured, or learn hereby that it is our duty to fly from all evil, even all the occasions and allurements of sin whatsoever, though they be never so pleasant to the eye, or sweet to the taste; inasmuch as we shall find them in the end to be more sharp then vinegar, more bitter then wormwood, more deadly then poison. Abner, the Captain of Saul and of his son accounted war as a sport which young fellows did make, howbeit he confessed the end would prove bloody, when he cried out, Knowest thou not that it will be bitterness in the latter end? so, howsoever the fool make a mock of sin, and it seem pleasant and profitable at the first, yet the end will be mourning and lamentation. This did Zophar teach in the book of Job: Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth though he hide it under his tongue, yet his meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall of asps within him, &c. Hence it is, that the Apostle James saith, Pure religion and undefiled before God even the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world. If we do this, then we shall be true Nazarites separated from the world, and brought near unto God: then we shall bestow our minds and meditations upon him, and withdraw our cares and cogitations from the desire of earthly things. When God called Abraham out of Vr of the Caldees, he required of him to walk before him, and to be upright. Such a spiritual Nazarite was Noah, God saw him just in that profane age, when all the earth had corrupted their ways, Gen. 6. Such a Nazarite was Lot in sinful Sodom, 2 Pet. 2.7. when he vexed his righteous soul from day today, beholding the unclean conversation of those cursed Sodomites. Thus was Noah out of the world, while he was in the world: thus was Lot out of Sodom, even while he was in Sodom: and thus should our conversation be in heaven, while we have our being and dwelling upon the earth, Phil. 3. Such a Nazarite was Nathaniel, in whose spirit there was no guile, John. 1. for as he is said to be an Israelite indeed, so it may be said, he was a Nazarite indeed. And as these were holy unto God, so must we labor after purity, and offer up our bodies an holy and living sacrifice to God, Rom. 12.1. Everyone that calleth upon the Name of the Lord must depart from iniquity 2 Tim. 2.19. We must labor to be clear from the works of darkness, and from the sins of worldlings and wicked persons, marking what the Apostle saith, 2 Cor. 7, 1. Cleanse you selves from all filthiness of the flesh and of the spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. For as these Nazarites were not to taste of the juice of liquor of the grape, so we should not intermeddle with any sin, but shun and shake off the same much more then we would to be defiled with mire and dirt: remember the counsel of the same Apostle, What agreement, what fellowship is there between light & darkne? therefore come out from among them and separate yourselves, & touch no unclean thing, then shall we be the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty.

[Use 4] Fourthly, consider from hence the false ground that the Papists build upon to establish the Monkish and Fryarly Orders, whereby they build an house upon the sand, which cannot continue. For, from this ceremony and vow of the Nazarites, being a more strict kind of life in the abstinence from sundry pleasures that others lawfully took in the moderate use of the good creatures of God, and consequently a profession of greater holiness by sequestering themselves from the company of men to give themselves wholly to prayer and meditation, the Popish doctors go about to defend the Monks and Friars, and that swarm and rabble of Locusts that came out of the bottomeless pit, and to set up their vnorderly Orders, to be a profession of life of greater holiness and perfection above others, which the common sort cannot attain unto. Howbeit, if we consider the matter aright, & compare them together, we shall see there is no agreement nor likeness between them. This vow was grounded upon the word of God, and warranted from thence: the Monkish life is deducted from the puddles of man's invention. These bound themselves with a vow for a certain time, for days, or months, or years: they to y^e end of their life, & account it worse then sacrilege to forsake their dens and cloisters.

These here mentioned did consecrate and separate themselves to the Lord only, they to Saint Benedict, to Saint Francis, to Saint Dominic, and such like counterfeit Saints. These entered not into this vow, as if it were meritorious, and available to obtain remission of sins, and everlasting salvation, as appeareth by the sacrifices which they were commanded to offer for their sin when the time of their vow was expired: they affirm that they merit heaven thereby for themselves, and can spare an overplus for others through their works of supererogation. These abstained from wine, nay from all that cometh of the grape: but they, albeit boasting of Angelical perfection, will not be brought under this yoke, but caratâ been cute, are indeed wine bibbers, great drinkers of wine. These did nourish their hair, and suffered it to grow until the end of their vow: but they shaue their crowns, leaving a little circle in which they greatly rejoyce, as if it did merit no less then the crown of heaven. These came not near to the dead, nor approached any carcass of their dearest friends, to be defiled thereby: but they are ordinarily and commonly at burials as willingly as at bankets: for while other men mourn, they are merry: while others weep, they sing: and as vultures they look for the death of rich and noble men, not so much to pray for them, as to make a prey of them. Lastly, these Nazarites might freely marry wives, as appeareth in Samson and Samuel: they vowed not virginity, to live in adultery, but it was lawful for them to marry wives notwithstanding their vows. Besides, they never vowed counterfeit poverty, or sottish obedience to any superiors: but the Monks and Friars abjure Matrimony and detest it, not fornication and unclean lusts; contrary to the precept of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 7.2. To avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and every woman have her own husband. They vow poverty, but the most of them live pompously and proudly, and prodigally. And what manner of vow is this, to vow to live by the sweat of other men's labors? whereas Paul warneth, Ephe. 4.28. Let him that stole, steal no more, but let him labor, working with his hands the thing that is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. And in another place, He that will not labor let him not eat, 2 Thess. 3.10. Moreover, they vow obedience: But to whom? to the General of their Orders, indeed too general an obedience: to their Superior, without respect to him that is Superior: contrary to the precept of the Apostle, 1 Corin. 7.23. Ye are bought with a price, be not ye the servants of men. What is more common among them then to say, I hold of Saint Francis, I am of Dominic, I am of Saint Benedict? whereas Paul reproveth such among the Corinthians as would be accounted Christians, yet said, I am of Paul, and I of Apollo, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ: for is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?

Thus we see, the Popish doctors do but dally and delude the world, while they would persuade us y^t their Monkish votaries are like the Jewish Nazarites, whereas the contrary appeareth by this comparison, that there is no coherence or communion between them, anymore in nature then in name: and as well they may persuade us, that there is a corespondence and agreement between the Prophet Elijah and the Priests of Baal, nay even between Christ himself and the sons of Belial.

Fifthly, if these Nazarites had touched the [Use 5] dead, or the dead touched them, howsoever they had passed many weeks or months of their vow, and were come even to the ende thereof, yet their vow was made void, they were to begin the weeks or months of their vow again, ver. 12. The days of his separation before shall be utterly lost, because he is defiled: which teacheth us a necessary point to be considered in our obedience, and how careful we ought to be to keep our selves from the corruptions and contagions of the world, that we fall not from GOD: because when once we depart from the ways of righteousness, all that which we have done before is out of date, it shall not be reckoned in our accounts, but be forgotten of God, according to the saying of the Prophet Ezekiel, chapter 18.20.24, 27, 28. as these words following testify. The soul that sinneth shall die. When the righteous turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and doth according to all that abomination that the wicked man doth, shall he live? All the righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned; in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in the sin that he hath sinned, in them he shall die. As on the other side, When the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness, he shall save his soul alive, he shall surely live, and shall not die. It is not therefore enough for us to begin well, if we do not continue constant, all our labor is lost: nay, it had been better for us, if we had never begun. We see this in Lots wife, what auailed it that she went out of Sodom, and travailed with her husband toward Zoar given unto them as a City of refuge, when as she looked back, and was therefore turned into a pillar of salt? The like we might say of Judas, what did it advantage him to preach the Gospel, to work miracles, to be an Apostle, to be conversant with Christ, and to sit at his Table, when after all these privileges, he betrayed his master, joined with the Pharisees, entertained covetousness, shown himself to be indeed a devil, & the son of perdition, and in the end hanged himself. What should I speak of Phygellus, Hermogenes, Hymenaeus, Philetus, Alexander, and such like mentioned 2 Tim. 1.15 & 2, 17. & 4, 14. If then we look to have any reward and recompense of our labor, & hope to attain to the end of our faith, which is the salvation of our souls, let us so run that we may obtain, let us so sails in the Sea of this world, that we never give over until we arrive in the haven: let us be faithful unto the death, that we may receive the crown of eternal life.

Lastly, these Nazarites were notable Ornaments in the Church, and far separate from the common sort, they labored after perfection of sanctification, and striued much to excel others; yet when they had ended the days of their vow, they must be brought to the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, & offer their offering unto the Lord: which teacheth, that our best works, such as proceed from the best men, and done with the best endeavor of purity and holiness, even when we strive to exceed and excel our selves, and have bent all our strength to serve the Lord in special manner, yet we have need to ask pardon, and confess that we are unprofitable servants. We are never so perfect, but we are stained with some imperfections; we cannot be so pure, but we are defiled with some impurity and contagion of sin; so that howsoever, we desire cheerfully and constantly to please God in all things, yet evil is present with us, Rom. chapt. 7. verse 21. and sin doth easily beset us, Hebrews chap. 12. verse 1. so that we all stand in need of the pure and perfect sacrifice of Christ, the author and finisher of our Faith, without which we cannot be accepted of God the Father. We must therefore from hence learn to acknowledge, that albeit we desire to offer up our selves wholly unto him, yet we can merit nothing at his hands, nor attain unto perfection, but are guilty of his judgments, if he enter into judgment with us, Psalm 143, 2. For in his sight shall no man living be justified. It is the sacrifice of Christ, for which he is well pleased, from the merit thereof cometh our merit, our merit is his merit, and the Fathers mercy. He knew no sin, neither was any guile found in his mouth, Isaiah 53. And hence it is, that we shall be acquitted and discharged of sin, so that none shall be able to lay anything to our charge: and though we be in our selves debtors, yet he hath paid our debt, and set us free, to whom be all glory and praise for evermore, Amen.

22 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying:

23 Speak unto Aaron and unto his sons, saying, On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel, saying unto them:

24 The Lord bless thee, and keep thee.

25 The Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee.

26 The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee and give thee peace.

27 And they shall put my name upon the Children of Israel, and I will bless them.

Touching the vow of the Nazarites, the first part of the Chapter, we have spoken hitherto; howbeit of vows in general, we shall have fitter occasion to entreat, in the twenty one, and the thirtieth chapters following. Now we come to the second part of the Chapter, containing the form of blessing the people, prescribed unto the Priests from the mouth of God. But first, let us see the meaning and the method of the Words. Touching the Blessing, observe that sometimes God is said to bless man; sometimes, man to bless God; and sometimes one man to bless another. God blesseth man, when he bestoweth good things upon us which we want, and remooueth evil things from us which we feel. The good things which he giveth us, are partly earthly, and partly heavenly, and in both he blesseth us. Touching earthly, we read in the word, Genesis chap. 24. verse 35. where Abraham's servant saith, that GOD had blessed his Master greatly, and he was become great; then he telleth wherein, He hath given him Flocks, and Herds, and Silver, and Gold, and men Servants, and maid Servants, and Camels, and Asses. The like we see, Deut. 28, 3, 4, 5. Blessed in the City, blessed in the field, blessed in the fruit of thy body, &c. Touching heavenly, it is said, He blesseth with all spiritual blessings in heavenly things thorough Christ, Ephes. 1, 3.

Again, sometimes man blesseth God, when he praiseth God in word and deed, with mouth & heart, and returneth thanksgiving to him, both for bestowing upon us his blessings and removing from us his blessings When thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless the Lord thy God for the good land which he hath given thee. So Psal. 103, 1. Luke. 1, 68. Now this our blessing of God, is nothing but an effect of y^e former. For as we love God, because he loved us first; so we bless God because he blessed us first. We can never return him the glory, but from a feeling of his own mercy. We cannot open our mouth to praise him, except he opened his hands to bless us. Lastly, man is said to bless man; we bless one another, when we pray one for another, Rom. 12, 14. Bless them which persecute you, which is expounded by the words of Christ, Mat, 5, 44. Pray for them which despitefully use you. To apply these things to our present purpose, we must mark that in this place the word is thrice used, and to be understood diversely: for when the Lord commanded Aaron and his sons to bless the people, the meaning is, they must pray for them, and heartily desire good things unto them. Again, when it is said, The Lord bless thee; and when the promise is made, I will bless thee, the meaning is, the Lord will bestow all good things on thee, and take away all evil things from thee: so that they blessed the children of Israel by desiring and praying, God blessed them by giving and bestowing.

Moreover, the priests of God are taught to crave that God would make his face shine, [Objection] & lift up his countenance upon the people. It may be asked, hath God any face, visage, or countenance? I answer these things are ascribed to God, [Answ.] not properly, but for our better capacity & understanding. It was the error of the Anthropomorphites, who because the Scriptures speak of the eyes, ears, mouth, hands, heart, head and arms of God, did therefore imagine that God is like unto us, and had a bodily shape, whereas he is a Spirit: as also he will be worshipped in spirit and truth. This the Apostle teacheth, The Lord is that spirit and where the spirit of the lord is, there [Object. 2] is liberty. But these heretics object, that God made man in his own image and likeness. Gen. 1. This is true, [Answer.] but their consequent is false. For we are said to be created according to the Image of God, not because he hath any bodily shape, for that is against his nature who is infinite, and against his word w^{ch} teacheth the contrary. The essence of God is spiritual, invisible, and most simple; he is a just and merciful God, love it self holiness it self, & goodness itself. In these we were made like unto God, in these we resemble him & bear his image, being created in righteousness and true holiness. True it is some place this image of God in dominion over the creatures, others in his immortal soul only, others in reason by which we are distinguished from beasts, but these let pass the principal point, which the heathen man saw, when he said, The virtue which is in a man came nearer to the similitude of God, thē the figure or outward shape. What then can be the shadow of such a substance, and the image of such a nature, and the resemblance of such a power and perfectness, but that which the Apostle teacheth, Put on the new man which is renewed in knowledge, after the image of him that created him? Would we then know, what the true image of God is? It is the reasonable soul in man, endued with divine knowledge, holiness, righteousness, & such like. This image is much deformed: for we have utterly lost all supernatural gifts, and corrupted those that are natural: & therefore our whole life is, or at least, should be, nothing else but a making up of this breach, a stopping of this gap, and a repairing of these ruins.

But to leave these, we must understand that the face of God noteth out diverse things: sometimes it signifieth the invisible nature and essence of God, as Exod. 33, 23. Thou shalt see my back parts, but my face shall not be seen, that is, thou shalt see so much of my glory and majesty, as man in this life can comprehend. But no man can see God in his full perfection & live, if we cannot look upon the Sun without dazzling and dimming of our eyes, how should we be able to behold the glory of y^e eternal God? let it content us to look upon him in his word in his works, in his creatures, and in the face of Jesus Christ our Mediator: these are as perspective glasses, wherein we may after a sort, see the face of God, though it be darkly, yet so far as we can conceive. Secondly, it signifieth the favor of God, as also all his benefits, deliverances, and graces which proceed from his good will as from a fountain, and serve to witness his favor to us, Cause thy face to shine, and we shall be saved. Thirdly, it signifieth reuēge and punishment, and the signs of his anger; all which do oftentimes appear by the face of man, I will set my face against that man, and I will cut him off from among his people. Lastly, it noteth out the place of God's worship, where his face and favor is perceived through delivery of the doctrine of godliness. Cain was banished from the face of God, of the which David cōplaineth, 2 Sam. 26, 49. So highly did the servants of God prize the holy meetings and assemblies of the Saints, considering that where two or three are gathred together in his name there is he in the midst of them. In this place, the shining of God's face upon his church & people, is the refreshing of them with his love, grace, and favor, and a train of other blessings flowing from them, as it is expounded in the words following, added by way of exposition, Be gracious unto them.

The last part of the blessing, is the giving of peace. This word signifieth sometimes our atonement with God through Christ, by whom he is reconciled to his chosen; who therefore is called the Prince of peace, Esa. 9, 6. and our peace-maker, Eph. 2, 15. Sometimes it signifieth peace of conscience, which is a most sweet quietness and tranquility of mind, arising of a most comfortable feeling and apprehension of our reconciliation with God, as Rom. 5, 1. Being justified by Faith, we are at peace with God. Sometimes a prosperous and happy success, when that speedeth well, and is turned to the best, whatsoever a righteous man taketh in hand, as Eph. 6, 23. Peace be to the Brethren, and love with faith from God the father, &c. And sometimes the mutual concord & agreement among Christian brethren. Gal. 6, 22. Ps. 34.14. In this place I refer it to the second and third significations; for it is taken for the peace of a good conscience, and an happy and prosperous success in our godly endeavors & enterprises. This is a fruit of our atonement with God, & comprehendeth under it sundry other benefits. For being once at peace with God through the precious blood of Christ, we are at peace with all other creatures in heaven and earth, with the Angels, with the godly, with our enemies, and with the beasts of the field. To conclude, when it is said, They shall put my name upon the children of Israel, he meaneth that Aaron and his sons should after their solemn blessing lay their hands on the people, and by this sign assure them, y^t all these blessings w^c they had prayed for, should fall on them, because God would bless them.

Touching the order of the words, observe herein two principal points: first, the form of blessing, secondly God's blessing on their blessing, testified by the outward sign of laying on of their hands. The form of blessing is a public prayer to God, that he would bless his church, which stands of 3. points. First, y^t God would save his church, and vouchsafe to hold it up in all dangers. Secondly, that he would as the sun in perfect glory shine upon it with his grace and favor. Thirdly, that he would pour out upon the same the effects of his grace and favor, to wit, joy, peace & prosperity, which are lively fruits thereof. The second part, w^c is a blessing upon the blessing, is noted by a Ceremonial or sacramental sign, which is the laying on of their hands. For when the priests had held up their hands in prayer (as their manner was while they stood in prayer) and prayed for the blessing of God upon the people, afterward they put their hands vpō them, as if they had already obtained a blessing from heaven by their prayers, and bestowed it with their hands upon the people. For God promiseth, that their imposition of hands shall not be in vain, inasmuch as he will ratify & make good their word, as he doth all his Sacraments and ordinances, saying, I will bless them.

But before we come to the particular handling of diverse doctrines offered to our considerations in this prayer, I will point out a few general observations to be marked of us. As first, this form of blessing is the same in effect which the Apostles use in their salvations to the Churches, when they wish unto them grace and peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. This Apostolical benediction was drawn from this Blessing, which showeth how well acquainted they were with the doctrine of the Scriptures, with the prayers of Moses and of the Prophets, whereunto also we should attend as unto a light that shineth in dark places. Secondly, we have here a fundamental point of our religion offered to our considerations, to wit, the mystery of the Trinity of persons, and the unity of the Godhead. This is gathered by diverse out of these words in that the name of the Lord is 3. times repeated, The Lord bless thee, the Lord make his face shine upon thee, the Lord lift up his countenance upon thee; and yet there are not three Lord's, but one Lord: and therefore he saith, I will bless thee, and not, we will bless thee. This mystery of the Trinity & Unity was taught from the beginning of the world: howbeit the fuller revelation of it was reserved to the times of the Gospel, when the light of the truth did shine as the sun at noon days. Hence it is, y^t at the baptism of Christ, John saw the spirit of God descending like a Dove, and lighting upon him, and heard a voice from heaven, saying; This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; and when he sent out his disciples into all the world, he willed them to Baptize in the name of the father, and of the son, and of the holy Ghost. So doth the Apostle speak, 1 John 5, 7. There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the holy Ghost: & these three are one. So in this place, when he mentioneth the Lord three times, it may note out the Trinity of persons: and when he saith, I will bless thē, it pointeth out the Unity of the Godhead: and so we learn to confess and believe that there is one God, & three persons. Thirdly, we are taught from hence that all good things must be asked of God, and of no creatures in heaven or in earth, forasmuch as it is he only from whom all blessings come. If then we feel any wants in our selves (as who is it that findeth not many?) we know to whom to go, we are sent to the fountain or head-spring, even to the Father of lights. He is able to furnish us, and fill us with that which we have not; he is able to increase the measure of that which we have; he will not see any want to them that are not wanting unto themselves. Fourthly, seeing we must ask a blessing from God, we are thereby put in mind, that by nature we lie under the curse of God threatened by the Law, by which cometh the knowledge of sin, Romans 3, 20. And the same Apostle, Galat. 3, verse 10. showeth, that everyone is cursed that continueth not in all things which are written in the Book of the Law to do them. We are stained and defiled with sin from our birth, Psalm 51.5. Job 14. verse 4. We see then, what is our natural estate and condition; we are not heirs of blessing, we cannot claim & challenge any portion to our selves in any of the mercies of God, there is nothing our own but the curse of God, the wrath of God, the judgment of God; these we may truly call our own, these are our lot, this is our cup to drink, this is due unto us in regard of sin, which we drink in daily as water, which we continually swallow as bread. Let us not therefore bless our selves, as if we had some title to the blessings of God, but consider that we lie under all the curses of the law, Deut. 28 so long as we are unregenerate or impenitent: but when once we are in Christ, & have received truly to believe, then we are delivered frō the curse, and have right to his blessings. Fifthly, this solemn blessing commanded in this place to the Priests, doeth shadow out Christ Jesus which was sent of God, y^t according to the promise made to Abraham, all the nations of the earth should be blessed in him. For, as they blessed the people when they departed out of the congregation, so did Christ whē he was to depart out of the world, as the Evangelist testifieth, Luke 24, 50, 51. he led them out as far as to Bethany, and he lift up his hands and blessed them: and it came to pass while he blessed them, he was parted from them and carried up into heaven. All blessings indeed do come from him, and by him, and thorough him they are conveyed unto us. So then, the Office of blessing, which under the law was committed to the Priests, doeth truly and properly belong to Christ Jesus the high priest of our profession, through whō we receive spiritual blessings in heavenly things, Eph. 1. He is the only author of all blessing, yet that his grace might be more effectual to us, it was his will & pleasure, that the priests in the beginning should as mediators bless in his name. To this purpose appertaineth that w^c is read in Psal. 118, 26. Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord, we do bless you out of the house of the Lord. The Apostle teacheth, Heb. 7, 7. that it is a sign of excellency to bless others, because without all question and contradiction the less is blessed of the greater: therefore when Christ the true Melchizedek, and the eternal priest came into the world to offer up himself, it was meet that in him should be fulfilled whatsoever was shadowed out by the Legal figures; so that he blessed the Apostles openly & with a solemn rite of lifting up his hands, to the end the faithful should fly unto him, so many as desire to be partakers of the grace of God, & to become rich in all heavenly things. Lastly, the priests are to bless y^e people. What then? are they able to bless? have they y^e blessings of God in their own breast? and can they give them to whom they list? no, it is God only that can bless & curse. True it is, this is given afterward to Balaam the false Prophet to be able to bless and curse whom he will, chap. 22, 6. As also it is in our days to the bishop of Rome, the true successor of Balaam rather than of Peter, with whom he hath nothing like. But the priests do bless by praying for a blessing, & pronouncing the people of God to be blessed. So then we see hereby, how the Ministers are said to bind and to loose, to forgive sins & to retain sins: not that they have an absolute power to do these things, for it is God only that properly can forgive sins: it is he that can take away the guilt and punishment of them: the Ministers only do it ministerially, publishing forgiveness and assuring remission of sins to all that are penitent, and contrariwise preaching that there is no forgiveness to the impenitent. As then the priests did bless only as the Ministers of God, so did the Disciples of Christ, and so do the Teachers of the Church remit & retain sins, only as the Ministers of Jesus Christ, who speak in his name.

[Ver 23. On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel.] Now let us come to the particular doctrine. And first there is laid before our eyes a set and solemn form of prayer enjoined to the priests to be used commonly and continually in the assemblies. From hence we learn that a set form of prayer is lawful to be used, whether publicly in the Church, or privately in the family. This point is the more strongly inferred from hence, if we consider the persons to whom this commādemēt was given. For this solemn form is set, not for the simple sort or the most ignorant amongst the people, neither appointed to be used within the walls of a private house, or within the doors of a secret chamber, as if it might be ashamed or blush to come abroad: but it was appointed to be pronounced by the priests, & to be uttered not in a corner, but in the Congregation of the people, and in the Tabernacle of the Lord before many witnesses. Now, if there were any able of themselves to conceive a prayer as the Spirit of GOD should give utterance and ability, undoubtedly they were the Priests of the Lord, whose lips must preserve knowledge, and the people must seek the law at their mouths: yet are they both allowed and prescribed to follow a set form in blessing the people. Moses a great prophet, like to whom did not any arise after him, to whom the Lord spake face to face, Deutro. 34, 10. was well enabled to pray without a prescript form, whose prayers were so powerful and effectual, that they prevailed more then all attempt and resistance made by the bodies of men against their enemies, Exod. 17, 11. & 32, 10. nay, they after a sort bound the hands of God as with chains, that he might not destroy them after their Idolatry, Exod. 32, 10. yet did this great prophet use set forms of prayer at their marching forward, and at their standing still: for when the Tabernacle removed, and the Ark set forward, he said, Numb. 10, 35, 36. Rise up, Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered, & let them that hate thee, fly before thee. And when it rested, he said, Return O Lord, unto the thousand thousands of Israel. Let not us seek nor seem to be better thē he was, whose gifts were greater then ours are, yet he did not refuse to use, or think it unlawful to practice this uniform order in prayer. Paul was wrapped into the third heaven, he saw Christ in his glory, 1 Cor. 9, 1. and heard unspeakable words which it is not lawful for a man to utter, 2 Cor. 12, 4. and who was able to pray better then he? yet he used always one manner of salutation in the beginning of all his Epistles, craving grace and peace from GOD the Father; and he ended with a like conclusion, The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you, Rom. 1, 7. & 16, 20. 1 Cor. 1, 3. and 16, 23 2 Cor. 1, 2. & 13, 14. Gal. 1, 3. & 6, 18. Eph. 1, 2. & 6, 24. Christ our Savior was filled with the riches of all grace, in whom all treasures of knowledge and wisdom were hidden, Col. 2, 3. who spent whole nights in prayer to God, Luke 6, 12. yet it is most probable y^t he used one of David's Psalms with his Disciples after the institution & celebration of his last Supper, when it is said, he sung a Psalm, or an Hymn, which we doubt not was one of the Psalms of thanksgiving set down in holy Scripture. But howsoever this were, or whatsoever that Song were, this is certain, that y^e hour of his passion approaching, when his soul was exceeding sorrowful, even unto death, he prayed oftentimes again & again, that if it were possible, that cup might pass from him. And ver. 44 he left his disciples and went away, and prayed the third time, saying the same words. Was it not enough for the Evangelists to note his often praying, but they must add, he said the same words? The 92 Psal. was sung usually in the church of the Jews upon the Sabbath day, & was penned for that purpose, as appeareth in the title of it, & the 102 Psalm is a prayer of the afflicted when he is overwhelmed with sorrows, and poureth out his complaint before the Lord, as we may read in that title. This is also the practice of all churches at this day, concurring and communicating with ours in this point. Seeing therefore, it hath been the practice of the first and most ancient church of the Jews, & seeing it is observed of all the reformed churches in Christendom, giving the right hand of fellowship with us, to have an unity and uniformity in public prayers, it serveth fitly & forcibly to confirm us in the present truth that we deal withal, that it is lawful to use either the prayers set down in holy Scripture, or any other godly prayers made by y^e learned to our hands consonant and agreeable to y^e scripture.

For first of all, it were a childish and foolish thing to imagine that God is delighted with choice of prayers, as a dainty stomach is with change of meats, or that he taketh pleasure in novelty of matters and variety of words, or that he hunteth after new forms & alterations of our requests. But to condemn all prescribed forms is nothing else but to be strongly persuaded that God accepteth and receiveth no prayers but such as are new, and cannot abide to hear the same things twice: which is to nourish a wrong conceit & imagination of the most wise & merciful God.

Secondly, all things must be done to edification. [Reason 2] It is the rule of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 14, 12. but set forms in the public worship & service of God tend much to edifying, and help greatly the understanding of the simple. The greatest number of the people are simple in knowledge, and weak in judgment, and therefore to have their ears acquainted with the same form and frame of words serveth most of all for their understanding.

Thirdly, every true child and faithful servant [Reason 3] of God, although he have an honest heart yet he hath not always a flowing tongue and copiousnesse of words, but wanteth the gifts of utterance, of boldness, of knowledge, of remembrance, of invention, of order, and such like. There are many y^t have stuttering tongs, fearful hearts, simple capacities, frail memories, that are weak in devising and framing, in contriving and disposing the things which they desire, whose names notwithstanding we dare not blot out of the roll and register of the chosen ones of God. But to conceive a prayer, all these gifts and many other are required, he must be able to utter, to invent, to discern, & to order he must have gifts of audacity and memory: but this all the godly are not able to do, they are not all thus qualified. He that is lame in his lims, and not able to go upon his legs, yet if he get a crutch to lean upon, he can walk apace: so many are not able to conceive a prayer, or to deliver that which they have conceived of themselves, but if they meet with any one framed unto their hands, they can pray unto God fervently, earnestly, heartily.

This doctrine made thus plain first serveth [Use 1] to convince the error of those of the separation, who condemn our churches, our ministers, our sacraments to be no true

Churches of Christ, no true Ministers of Christ, no true Sacraments of Christ. And concerning our Liturgy or form of public prayer read and prescribed to be read, they account it Antichristian, they utterly detest it, and account it abominable & no more acceptable to God then the offering of Swines flesh was under the Law, which the Lord abhorred as if they had instead of his appointed sacrifices cut off a dogs neck. And albeit we have the examples of all other Churches under heaven, as presidents, that go before us in this practice, and albeit we follow them as they followed Christ; yet they will not allow us to be like to them, nor will permit y^t to the people of God, which he here prescribed to the Priests; yea, albeit they have no examples whom they can pretend to follow, yet they will be singular in their own conceits, & condemn all others that will not join with them. The 136. Psalm was sung in the congregations long after David's days as appeareth 2 Chro. 20, 21. what? Did they therein offer up swine's flesh? Hezekiah that godly king, that set his whole heart to seek the Lord, whom the Lord healed of an incurable disease, and wrought a miracle in the heavens, to assure him of deliverance from his enemies: this good King so much regarded of God, together with his Princes, commanded the Levites to praise the Lord with the words of David and of Asaph the Seer; & so they did, according to the kings commandment, sing praises with gladness, & they bowed their heads & worshipped, 2 Chro. 29, 30. Did the King and the Princes command the Levites to offer up swine's flesh? or was their service no better accepted, then the cutting off of a dogs neck? or did it any whit quench their zeal, or slake their devotion, that the words were not their own, but penned long before by David the Prophet, and Asaph the Seer? No, they praised the Lord with gladness of heart, and humbleness of mind, which they testified by this sign, that they bowed their heads and worshipped. [Object.] But it will be said, This was a thansgiuing. I confess it was: but if it be lawful to use a set form of praising and thansgiuing, [Answer.] then also of praying and making petition, because there is a like reason of both. And that we may the better see their error, and themselves confess they are deceived, let us examine some of their objections in this place; the rest we will reserve unto the 10. chapter, where we shall have farther occasion to search more into this point. One objection which [Objection 2] they allege is this, that this set service is to quench the spirit, 1 Thes. 5, 19. and to limit him that teacheth us to pray, to tell him how far he shall go, and to appoint him his banks and bounds, beyond w^c he may not pass, whereas we should pray as the Spirit moveth & giveth us utterance. To use a set form, or (if you list to call it so) a stinted form of prayer, [Answer.] is not to stint the Spirit, but to help the Spirit. But doth the Spirit of God need the help of man? [Objection 3] Is not he all-sufficient by himself & of himself? [Answer.] He standeth not in need of us, but is most sufficient; howbeit the Spirit in us is weak, the work of the Spirit is imperfect, and is perfected not all at once, but by degree. If all the true servants of God had received a perfect measure of grace, and if all that have the Spirit of God, had the same Spirit fully without any defect or infirmity, they should not need any human helps, but have sufficient store of their own. So then to the former objection, I answer 3. things. First, if he that taketh a book, and readeth a set prayer, did stint the Spirit, then he that taketh the Scripture into his hands, and readeth a chap. out of the old or New Testament, and then stayeth & goeth no farther, might as well be said to stint the Spirit. Or, he that heareth another pray, should stint the Spirit also, because all such as hear the prayers of others, are stinted what to hear.

All cannot, neither ought to be speakers either in the private house, or in the house of God; this were to break the order of decency required in prayer: now such as are hearers of others, have words after a sort prescribed unto them, and limited how far to go, and yet cannot such hearers be justly taxed to limit or to quench the Spirit. Again, observe that the Spirit of God is never stinted or curbed, neither can rightly be said to be quenched, so long as it is kept within his own bounds, that is, the limits of the holy Scripture as it ought to be. He then that prayeth the prayer of Christ, or the salutation of Paul, or a Psalm of David, which he hath premeditated before, or committed to memory, cannot be said to quench the Spirit, except we will imagine that the Spirit can be against himself.

Lastly, to quench the Spirit, is to oppose against the voice of the Spirit, to cross and contradict the Spirit, and to withhold the truth in unrighteousness. Therefore, although a man doeth not speak everything that the Spirit putteth into his head, and into his heart, yet he cannot be charged to quench the Spirit, except he set himself against it, & that with a set purpose to gainsay and resist it. As for example, when we crave of GOD to feed us with food convenient for us Pro. 30.8 & to make us content to eat our own bread, 2 Thes. 3, 12. though we do not expressly pray to God to keep us from using unlawful shifts & ungodly means, whereby we seek to get into our hands the goods of other men, yet we cannot be said to quench the spirit, except we refuse so to pray, because we purpose to live and thrive by injuries and oppressions, by fraud and deceit: then indeed we quench the Spirit, because we control the voice of y^e Spirit speaking to us in his word. Again they object [Objection 4] y^t the scripture teacheth that we know not what or how to pray, Rom. 8, 26. The spirit helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought, &c. but when we have a set form of prayer framed to our hands, and the book lieth before us, we know then what to pray, and need not the help of the Spirit, and therefore such cannot say with the Apostle, they know not what to pray for as they ought. This is a silly collection, and indeed a mere caullation. I answer therefore 2 things. [Answ.] First, by setting down the meaning of the words; We know not what we should pray for as we ought, to wit, of our selves: as 1 Cor. 2, 14, 15. The natural man knoweth not the things of y^e spirit of God, because they are spiritually discerned. So we may say, the natural man cannot tell how or what to pray, but y^e spiritual man that judgeth all things, knoweth both how & what to pray. Flesh & blood revealed not the knowledge of Christ to Peter, but the Father which is in heaven; so flesh and blood cannot reveal to us what we should ask in prayer, but the Spirit helpeth our infirmities. Where we see, he opposeth the Spirit unto our selves: in that which we cannot do, we shall have the Spirit to be our teacher, and to instruct us how to perform it. Secondly, it is falsely supposed, that when we have a prayer composed to our hands, and we read that prayer, that then we need not the help of the Spirit. For need we not the help of the Spirit to make us lift up our hearts to God, to give us a feeling of our wants, to keep us frō earthly cogitations & wandering thoughts, to stir up faith in us with assurance to receive whatsoever we desire, and many things of like sort? the which, if they be wanting, whether our prayer be conceived or prescribed, read in the book, or made without the book, it is of no virtue or value, neither doth God accept thereof.

Secondly, this is a great comfort to such as [Use 2] as are weak, and yet withal willing to come to the throne of grace, to such I say, as have not the gift to conceive and invent prayer themselves. Let them from this ground hear a word of consolation. Let no man discourage such from prayer, neither let such discourage themselves. For shall they never pray? or should they never fall down before the Almighty? O yes, let them come, they ought to come: if the mercy of God cannot allure thē, let their own infirmity contstrain them. If they cannot conceive a prayer themselves. shall this excuse them for the intermitting of this duty? Let them come to God and use the prayers of other men. As he that could not come unto Christ by reason of his impotency, did not reason thus within himself, Alas, I am not able to go to him of myself, I will therefore never seek help, or labor to be cured. Nay, he rather reasoned thus, as it appeareth by the means he used, I am not able to go to Christ of myself, I will therefore be borne of others rather than not seek help at all: so should we reason, I cannot pray of myself, I will therefore help mine infirmity by using the benefit of other men's prayers, which is no more then to use the feet of others, when we have not the use of our own. And as it was all one to him that was taken with a palsy, and broug^t in a bed to Christ by the hands and help of others, to be borne to Christ, and to be able of himself to come to Christ, because he was cured and made able to walk, Luke 5, 24.25. So should it be to us; if we come unto Christ, whether we come and beg the graces which we want, in our own words, or whether we beg them in the words of others, it skilleth not greatly, neither is it much material, so that we do obtain. It is not the excellency or eloquence of words, or variety of matter that God respecteth, we must come evermore in the Name of Christ, and for his sake we shall be heard. If the man sick of the palsy had been able to walk to Christ, and not stood in need to be brought unto him, what other gracious answer could he have looked for, then y^t which he received, Arise and walk? So if all persons that live in the bosom of the Church, were well able to put up their own supplications in their own words, and had the greatest graces of knowledge and invention, what fruit could we reap and receive of such our prayers, but to be regarded? and to have that comfortable answer which Cornelius had and heard, Acts 10, 4, 31. Thy prayers are heard and had in remembrance in the sight of God? As then David did admit Mephibosheth to his table though he were lame of his feet: so doth God receive us though our service we perform unto him be weak and many ways defective, as he did those that came to the Passover, 2 Chron. 30.

Lastly, we must learn, that albeit God allow [Use 3] us to pray unto him by the help of others, yet we must strive to go further, and labor in all things to grow to perfection. There is no man that hath any infirmity, but doth gladly seek the means to remedy & redress the same, the lepers to be cleansed, the blind to recover their sight, the lame to walk, the deaf to hear; not to be able to pray to God and to lay open our wants to him, is a great want, and a greater blemish and defect in the soul, then to be blind, or deaf, or lame is to the body. O that all had eyes to see this, & hearts to bewail it. It is allowed to weak Christians to use set forms, as to him that hath weak eyes to use spectacles. But we must not evermore stand at one stay, nor be always as children that must be taught to go, and be stayed up with the hand of another. It is a great weakness to be always weak, and to continue in our weakness all the days of our life. It is our duty to grow in knowledge, in judgment, in understanding, in faith, and such like gifts.

If any ask, [Object.] how shall we be able to attain to this gift? and how shall we be furnished to pray according to the present occasion, & our own present necessities? I answer, [Answer.] we must observe these few particulars: First, we must take notice of our particular sins, that they may be acknowledged. Secondly, we must labor to feel our particular wants, that we may have them supplied. Thirdly, we must call to remembrance the special benefits that GOD bestoweth upon us, that his Name may be praised.

Again, that we should not please our selves too much in our own ignorance sundry cautions & conditions are to be marked in using set forms of prayer: as first of all, we must labor for the graces and affections shown in the said prayers, by the makers, composers and pen-men of them, that we may pray with the same spirit, by which they did endite them. For to pray aright, and to make it available, it is not enough to be present at prayer, or to hear a prayer read, but we must join attention with our presence and with our attention, humility; and with humility, faith; and with faith, lifting up of our hearts to him that sitteth in heaven, to whom we pray. For many a one that cometh to the place of prayer, and into the company of them that pray, doth yet nothing less then pray. Many a Minister that getteth up into the Pulpit, doth nothing less then preach. Many people that come with ears to hear, do nothing less then hear; and to eat the Supper of the Lord, that do nothing less then partake of his holy table. Wherefore, we must be present in mind at holy things as well as in body, or else our presence is no better then an absence.

Secondly, we must yield to this principle, that it is both safer and better to conceive a prayer then to read a prayer, because it keepeth our minds constant, and freeth us from wandering thoughts that carry us oftentimes from the matter which we should altogether mind. For we are ready to go astray, and to set our hearts upon other things, whereas by this means they are kept close and steadfast to the requests which we make.

Again, a man may read a prayer, that never understandeth it, or conceiveth the meaning of it: and therefore it is more profitable to pour out our petitions our selves, then to have our petitions drawn by the hand of another. No man can have such a feeling of our own wants, as our own necessities will make us able to express: neither can conceive such joy and gladness for blessings received, as the experience in our selves of God's benefits will afford unto us.

Thirdly, no man must condemn such as do conceive themselves forms of prayers, & call them conceited prayers, or fantastical prayers. These are envious persons, who envy in others the graces of God, & cannot abide that any should go before themselves, or beyond themselves. These are wise in their own eyes, and indeed themselves wholly conceited and fantastical, which they falsely charge upon others, being utterly ignorant both of God's works, and their own wants. For had they known or regarded the gifts and power of the Spirit which helpeth and assisteth his servants, that their tongue is as the pen of a ready writer, and findeth sufficient matter to utter to their Maker: or had they known themselves thoroughly, what new wants they have, what new sins they commit, what new assaults they undergo, what new blessings they enjoy, which are as so many occasions or rather provocations to open their mouths anew to God, & to sing a new song unto him, they would not blot this ordinance of God with such an odious cavil. So then, whereas all such should be grieved that cannot frame their petitions according to their present wants, nor pour out their supplications according to their particular assaults, neither make confession to God according to their particular offenses, they are rather grieved that any others can perform these duties better than themselves. And whereas they should strive with might and main to be like unto them, and to follow their example, they would have all other men ignorant like themselves, and please themselves in that ignorance.

On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel.] Note in these words the persons that must perform this duty, and they are the Priests: note also what they are to do, to bless the people, & that is, to pray to almighty God for them, that his blessings may come down upon them. From hence we see, that it is the duty of the Ministers to pray for the people. So did Melchizedek for Abraham, and he was the Priest of the most high God, Gen. 14.18, 19. So did Moses often for the people, when God's heavy judgments were upon them, or hanging over their heads, Exod. 32, & 33: he stood oftentimes in the gappe when the hand of God had made the breach, to turn away his wrath lest he should destroy them. So did Aaron, as appeareth afterward in this book, when the plague was begun among the people, he put on incense, & made an atonement for them: he stood between the dead & the living, and the plague was stayed, Numb. 16, 47, 48. Paul in every Epistle practiseth this duty: and the Apostles committed y^e charge of providing for the poor, and distributing to the poor, to the Deacons, that they might give themselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word. The Prophets also never failed in this duty, as we read almost in every place of their Propheties, they stood upon their watch-tower, having the people continually in remembrance in their holy prayers. Christ Jesus himself, the great Shepherd of the sheep, is a perfect pattern of performing this, he prayed for Jerusalem oftentimes, Luke 19. and for the whole flock of God committed unto him, whō he would not suffer to perish, but bring them to everlasting life, John 17, 20.

Thus then we see, we have the examples of Melchizedek, of Moses, of Aaron, of the Priests, of the Prophets, of the Apostles, and of Christ Jesus the Lord of life, as lively examples to go before us, and as a cloud of witnesses to conduct us in this duty, to prove unto us the truth of this point.

This must the rather be practiced; first, because it is an infallible token of our love toward [Reason 1] them, and of an earnest desire that we have of their good, Psal. 118, 26. And how can we better express even the bowels of our affection, and our longing after their prosperous estate from the heart root, then by our daily praying for them? Rom. 1, 10.

Secondly, the faithful Ministers of God have been much grieved when they were forbidden and not permitted to perform this duty. We see this evidently in Jeremiah, when the Lord had said unto him, Pray not for this people for their good: he said, Ah, Lord God, the Prophets say unto thom, ye shall not see the sword, neither shall ye have famine, but I will give you assured peace in this place: where we see, he layeth the fault upon the false Prophets, and goeth about to excuse, or at least to lessen the sin of the people, who were blindly led by those blind guides, that thereby he might make a way to move the Lord to hear him for that poor seduced people.

Thirdly, the flock of God is committed unto them; it is no small charge that lieth on their hands, the price of Christ's precious blood is committed unto them, and therefore by all means they are charged to procure their good, especially considering that the blood of such as perish through their negligence, shall be required at their hands, 1 Pet. 5, 2. Ezek. 3.18.

Fourthly, it is a sin against God as well as against his people, to omit or refuse this duty. And therefore when all the people said to Samuel, Pray for thy servants unto the Lord thy God, that we die not: he answered; As for me, God forbid that I should sin against the lord in ceasing to pray for you. 1 Sam. 12, 23. If then it be a sin to omit it, it must needs be a duty to perform it.

Fifthly, it should be done to the ende the people might be encouraged, and not faint in their sufferings. For they are oftentimes set upon, and their faith shaken, and they ready to give over, if they be not confirmed by the word and by prayer: and therefore we read, Eph. 3, 13, 14. I desire that yet faint not at my tribulations for you, which is your glory: for this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c. that he would grant you according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with the might of his Spirit in the inner man. Our prayers shall be an effectual means to hold them up.

[Use 1] Consider from this ground, why the word oftentimes prospereth not under our hands, and we labor in vain, and strive against a stubborn and disobedient people; even because we forget our own duty, to commend our people to God, and to the word of his grace, that so their eyes may be opened, and they turned from darkness to light, & from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, & an inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith in Jesus Christ. Let us all therefore say with Samuel the Lord's Prophet, GOD forbid that I should sin in ceasing to pray for them, that the word may take good effect in their harts, considering it is in his hands only to give the blessing upon our labors. For Paul may plant and Apollos water, but it is God that giveth the increase, 1 Cor. 3, 6. And doubtless God doth often withhold the dew of his grace frō our labors, because we do not desire & crave his blessing. It may be said, what should the Minister ask for them, or for what should he pray on their behalf? I answer, for their conversion, confirmation, consolation, preservation, multiplication, and removing of tribulation.. Many in all Congregations remain yet in ignorance, & are not turned unto God; we must pray that they may be gained and converted, Acts 3, 19. Many are weak and feeble minded, as the bruised reed and as the smoking flax; we must pray that they may be supported and strengthened, Eph. 3, 16. Many are as it were quite out of heart, being tired with the temptations of Satan and tribulations of the world, these must be cheered up and comforted, Math. 26, 41. Acts 14 22. Many have indeed received to believe, but they are ready to stand at a stay, and some at the point to go backward; we must pray that these may be kept and preserved. John 17, 11. Holy Father, (saith Christ) keep through thine own Name, those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are. Many Congregations have the fewest number that have given their names in sincerity and uprightness of heart to God, and resolved to offer up their bodies an holy and living sacrifice unto him, so that the true Church is a little flock: we must pray therefore that the number may be augmented and increased, and that he would every day add unto the Church, such as should be saved, Acts 2, 47, and 13, 48. and 16.5. So were the Churches established in the faith, & increased in number daily.

Lastly, the Churches of God do often lie under many judgments, and are pressed even above measure with sundry calamities: it is our duty therefore to pray to GOD to have them removed, that they may have a breathing time, & quietly serve the Lord in peace and tranquility, as Paul wisheth Agrippa were altogether like him, except his bands, Acts 26, 29.

Secondly, this serveth to reprove such as [Use 2] never practice this, neither think it to be any ministerial duty, to pray for the people, and for the blessing of God upon their own speaking, & the people's hearing. And thus is the whole office of the Ministry disannulled. Some that love their own ease more then the people's good, maintain that reading is preaching, because they are loath to take pains themselves, or to maintain any that should take pains. Others that pray sildome, think it needless either to begin their Sermons, or to end them with invocation of the Name of God: and by this means they neither give themselves continually to prayer, neither to the Ministry of the word. And if we mark the people that live under their Ministry, & depend upon them, we shall see them for the most part most ignorant, and such as have no desire of knowledge, except peradventure some few, who have been fed with the crumbs that fall from other men's tables, I mean, that have gotten their knowledge in other places.

Thirdly, it is the Ministers duty to labor after the grace of prayer. For how shall they [Use 3] be able to commend the people to GOD in prayer, if they be not able at all occasions and times to pray for them, being destitute of this holy and heavenly gift, which is a most necessary, a most worthy, a most effectual gift? It is a principal part of God's worship, & oftentimes beareth the name of the whole worship of God, Gen. 4, 26. Acts 9, 14. 2, Tim. 2, 19. It is the means which God hath sanctified to unlock the closet of his graces. They are hid in God, and as it were kept in his secret chamber under lock and key; prayer is the means to open the door that leadeth us the way unto them. God is indeed the fountain of all blessings, but the spring is far; the waters of life are with him, but if we use not prayer, it may be truly said to us as the woman of Samaria spake, John 4, 11. Thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence therefore canst thou have that living water? If then we account the saving graces of God necessary, we must also account that means necessary, by which we do obtain them. As for those that despise the means, they do also despise the precious graces of God which are obtained by means. The like we might speak of the excellency and efficacy of prayer. But what shall all this avail us, if we be as dumb men, and not able to open our mouths to make petition to God for them? The Apostle willeth Timothy, that prayers, supplications, intercessions, and thanksgivings should be made to God by him and other Ministers, 1 Tim. 2, 1. We must all labor to know the state of our flocks. If we see any wants among them, we must pray to have them supplied: if any judgments break in upon them, we must pray to have them removed: and if God at any time have graciously heard us, we must be able to give him the glory.

Lastly, let the people answer duty for duty, [Use 4] and prayer with prayer, that so there may be a mutual performance of the same by the Pastor for the people, and by the people for the Pastor. For seeing the Ministers are commanded to pray for them, why should they be backward to remember their Ministers in their best thoughts? We are debtors one to another, and do owe a mutual duty, Rom. 1, 12, 14. Our duties are not arbitrary and indiffrent, but necessary, to which we are bound in an obligation, tying us to the performance thereof forever. For is it left to our choice and discretion, whether we will pay the debts which we owe, nor not? Hence it is, that Paul a worthy and excellent Apostle requested the prayers of the Churches & persons to whom he wrote: and the people were wont to be mindful of their Ministers. When Peter was in prison, earnest prayer was made by y^e church for his deliverance, Acts 12, 5. & 15, 40. They stand as it were in the forefront of the battle, and Satan with all his instruments do most of all fight against them, Zach. 3, ver. 1. As then Christ giveth in charge, that we should pray to the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest, Math. 9, 38. so we ought to pray for a blessing upon their labors which are sent forth by the gracious hand of God. The want of this maketh their pains to be unprofitable unto us.

Ver. 24. The Lord bless you and keep you.] Now we come to the particular parts of this blessing. First, the protection of the Church is to be prayed for, that it would please God to keep it, guard it, and defend it. The doctrine arising hence is this, God is to be prayed unto, to be the protector & preserver of his church. This must we continually desire of him, our mouth must be opened, and our heart enlarged. This we see to be figured out and represented in the covering of the tabernacle while it wandered in the wilderness, the which was as it were a portable or movable Temple: it had a large and sure covering made of Badgers skins sewed together, to hide and preserve the same & the appurtenances belonging unto it: this did signify the safety and sure estate of the Church, and of every true member thereof, sitting under the shadow & shelter of the most High, whereunto David alludeth, Psal. 27, 5. In time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion, in the secret of his Tabernacle shall he hide me, he shall set me upon a rock. To this also hath the Prophet reference, Isaiah 4, 5, 6. There shall be a Tabernacle for a shadow in the day time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and from rain. This also was shadowed out in the order of the Tabernacle, set in the midst of four most mighty battailions or squadrons, surrounded by the Levites: so that none of the heathen or stangers could approach by reason of these puissant and powerful armies which guarded the same, and were as a wall and bulwark unto it on every side. This protection was also promised unto the Israelites in times of greatest danger, when they might seem to lie open to evident perils both of domestical insurrections, & of foreign inuasions, while they were celebrating their solemn feasts, & every male was commanded to appear before the Lord, Exod. 34, 24. I will cast out the Nations before thee, and enlarge thy borders: neither shall any man desire thy Land, when thou shalt go up to appear before the Lord thy God thrice in the year. We are commanded to pray for the peace of Jerusalem and for the building up of the walls thereof, Psalm 51, 18, and 122, 6, 7. Our daily prayer therefore must be, that he would do good to Zion in his good pleasure; for our brethren and companions sake, we must say, Peace be within thy walls, & prosperity within thy Palaces.

The reasons warranting and moving us to pray that the Church may be secured, are, first, [Reason 2] because as the state of the Church standeth, so it goeth commonly with the commonwealth. The Church is the life of the commonwealth, by which it liveth, and as the soul by which it breatheth. For as the soul quickeneth the natural body; so doth the Church give motion and strength to the politic body. If the Church be well seen unto, it cannot go amiss with the civil State. Hence it is, that the Lord willed the Jews, to seek the peace of the City, whither he had caused thē to be carried away captives, and to pray to the Lord for it, for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace, Ier. 29, 7.

Secondly, howsoever the state of the church standeth, so our own particular estate remaineth, whether it have cause to rejoyce or to be sorry, even the same cause have we both of the one and of the other. For how can the child choose but prosper, while the mother is in health and prosperity? Or how can it but be weak and sickly by the weakness & sickness of the mother? The Church is the mother of us all, we suck both her breasts as it were the sincere milk of the old and New Testament. We know, that the man which goeth in a ship upon the sea, his desire and prayer is for the safety of the whole Ship no less thē for his own particular, because he knoweth his own estate dependeth upon the estate of the whole Ship, and therefore he hath good reason to pray for it. And what is the Church of God, but as it were a Ship floating up and down in the sea of this world, tossed too and fro with the rough and raging winds of the wicked? and therefore we ought to pray earnestly for it, lest as Jacob said of Esau, the mother and the child be destroyed together.

Thirdly, it is required of us to have a fellow feeling of the wants and necessities of our brethren, as well as of our own, as Rom. 12, 10, 15. Be kindly affectionated one to another, with brotherly love: rejoyce with them that rejoyce, and weep with them that weep: because we are all members one of another. If one member of the natural body suffer, all the rest suffer with it: so the troubles of the Church should go as near unto us as our own private griefs and troubles.

Lastly, the Church hath sundry enemies which plot the death and destruction thereof, and seek to ruin and subvert them that belong unto it, in body and soul. The chiefest and greatest that setteth the rest on work, is Satan, a man-slayer from the beginning, & a roaring lyon, seeking whom he may devour. The instruments that he employeth, like the wheel of a clock that giveth motion to the rest, are the flesh, the world, & false teachers. The flesh is full of darkness & doubting, y^e seed of all evil. The world is an hook ready to catch us, baited partly with pleasures and profits, with honors and promotions and partly with threatenings, terrors, and persecutions of enemies. False teachers come disguised in sheep's clothing, and armed with errors & heresies, which may be called the fiery darts of the devil, and the very poison of the soul, whereby we make shipwreck of faith and of a good conscience. If we do not pray that God may be our Savior and protector from these, we cannot be kept safe, but lie open as a prey to all these enemies. [Use 1]

We may conclude from hence, somewhat for the strengthening of our faith and for the increase of our obedience. As first of all, we must confess that our help cometh only from the Lord, seeing we are directed to go only to him to seek protection, who neither slumbereth nor sleepeth, Psal. 121, 2, 3, 4 & 91, 1, and 3, 8. He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High, shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty: he is our shield and buckler, he is our rock and refuge, he is our fortress & strong tower, the righteous fly unto it, and are saved. Be it that they be many times and many ways afflicted, yet they shall not be able to hurt them, no evil shall come near unto them, Psal. 91, 10. So then we are taught to assure our selves of the Churches safety, and to confess, that salvation belongeth to the Lord, and that his blessing is upon his people, Psal. 3, 8. and therefore we pray unto him. But prayer must be grounded upon faith, faith upon the promise, the promise upon the word, and the word upon God. True it is, the gates of hell are set against the Church, but the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. [Use 2]

Secondly, this doctrine of the divine protection, is a mere privilege of the Church, and appropriated to God's servants only. The ungodly have no promise of his protection, neither can they expect preservation from his hand. The Lord is no preserver of thē, he hath made no promise of defense unto them, but leaveth and forsaketh them in evil, without comfort, without succor, without deliverance. The Prophet upon this sure ground concludeth, that evil shall slay the wicked, and that they which hate the righteous, shall be desolate, Ps. 34, 20, 21. For having shown that God delivereth his out of all their troubles, & keepeth all their bones, so that none of them is broken, he addeth, that doubtless the ungodly shall utterly perish, they lie open to the wrath of God, and have none that can deliver them Vain is the help of man, and weak is the strength of an horse, and foolish is the confidence in defended places, they are not able to save a man. [Use 3]

Thirdly, fear not the rage of mighty enemies, albeit they rage never so much, and dig never so deep with their devises to destroy the Church, though they bend all their force and fury to undermine it and turn it up by the roots that it grow no more in the earth: though they take crafty counsel together against the chosen people of God, and consult against his hidden ones, yet they are hid under the shadow of his wings, and kept as the apple of his eye, Psalm. 17, ver. 8. and they are therefore called his hidden ones, because he hideth them with himself, as his precious and peculiar treasure, Exod. 19, 5. and keepeth thē safe and sound from all injuries and inuasions that would do them hurt. True it is, the enemies encourage one another, & say among themselves, Psalm. 83, 4. Come, and let us cut them off from being a Nation, that the name of Israel may be no more in remembrance: howbeit, the Lord shall do unto them as unto Sisera, and as to Iabin at the brook of Kison, which perished at Endor, and became as dung for the earth, verse 9, 10. How then should we stand in fear of them, that do not stand in fear of God nor of his threatenings, and yet have their persons open to all his judgments, to be made like unto a wheel, & as the stubble before the wind? As the fire burneth a wood, and the flame setteth the mountains on fire, so shall they be persecuted by thy tempests, and made afraid with thy storms, so that their faces shall be filled with shame, ver. 13, 14, 15. This use is concluded and collected out of the Psalm 27, 1, 3. The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid? Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear, though war should arise against me, in this will I be confident. Seeing then we have such precious promises, and such worthy examples, to stir us up to be bold in the Lord, building our house upon the sure rock of his defense, it argueth great infidelity, weakness, wavering, feebleness, & faintness to stand in fear of every scar-crow, or of every storm of rain, or blast of wind, or force of tempest, or wave of the sea, that shall threaten to fall upon us.

[Use 4] Lastly, we are from this consideration bound to love the assemblies of the Saints, and labor to be in the number of the members of the true Church. To be a member of the visible Church, is not enough to make us to be a member of the Catholic Church, which we profess to believe in the Articles of our faith. The Catholic Church is the number of the elect and chosen servants of God. In the visible Church are many hypocrites, as chaff among good wheat, which when the fan of God cometh, shall be blown away. The parts of the true Church are as a small remnant gathered out of the multitude, Isaiah 1, 9. as a little flock of sheep gathered into the sheepfold out of an heard of wolves and goats; and as a chosen generation called out of the rest of the world. For these two are as two Cities, one contrary to the other, the one evermore at war with the other, the Church and the world. They that are of the true Church, have made a divorce from it, and are enemies to the world, and they that are of the world, have no interest or privilege in the Church; and therefore Christ saith to his Disciples, Because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. Now, as he showeth that he had chosen them out of the rest of the world, so he hath done all the faithful that belong unto him. If then we would assure our selves to be in this number, we must make much of the assemblies of the Saints, otherwise we can never earnestly commend unto God the protection of his Church, if we love not the beauty of Zion, and long not to dwell where the Lord dwelleth. We see that so soon as any certain knowledge of Christ was entered into the hearts of the two Disciples that came unto him, by and by they followed him and said unto him, Master, where dwellest thou? So must it be with us; we must dwell with him in his house, and abide with him in his chamber of presence. Howbeit, many come to the house of GOD, as if they were none of his household-servants, but strangers in his house, nay, as if they were strangers to God, & God unto them, as if they had no knowledge of him, or he of them. They come so sildome, that they may appear to belong to some other family or fraternity. But what shall it avail us to pray for the protection of the Church, unless we hide our selves in his paviour, and live under his protection? This use we find, Ps. 27, 4, 5. where upon his assurance y^t God will hide him in his Tabernacle, and set him upon a rock, he setteth down this; One thing have I desired of the Lord, that I will seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the lord, & to enquire in his Temple. They are pronounced blessed that dwell with him who is to be blessed, and is the author of all blessings, Psal. 84. This doth the church testify in Solomon's song, Tell me, O thou whom my soul loveth, where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon: for why should I be as one that turneth aside by the flocks of thy companions. As Christ proveth the love of Peter by this sign of feeding his sheep, John 21, ver. 16. so we may prove our love to him by loving his Church and Church-assemblies. Doubtless, whatsoever we may persuade our selves to the contrary, yet we do not love Christ, if we do not love the assemblies of the Christians: for where two or three are gathered together in his Name, there is he in the midst of them.

[Ver. 25, 26. The Lord make his face to shine, &c.] We have shown before in the interpretation of the words, that by grace we must understand the favor and good will of God: and by peace, the effects of his grace, happiness and prosperity inward & outward, consisting in the peace of a good conscience, and such like benefits. First, we are taught to desire grace, understood by the lifting up of his countenance and making his face to shine upon us: and then the peace of a good conscience. From hence we learn this point, (to include thē both together) that we must chiefly and principally pray for God's favor, and then in the next place, for peace of conscience. Thus doth the Prophet direct us, Psalm. 4, 6. Lift up the light of thy countenance upon us: and 67, 1. God be merciful unto us and bless us, and cause his face to shine upon us: and Psal. 83, 3. Cause thy face to shine, and we shall be saved: and to show the necessity of this prayer & the earnestness of his affection, he doubleth & trebleth the same prayer, as if he desired nothing at all in comparison of the shining of his face, and the lifting up of his countenance. Thus doth the Prophet declare, that the Israelites got not the land in possession by their own sword▪ neither did their own arm save them but the right hand of God and his arm, and the light of his countenance, because he had a favor unto them, Ps. 44, 3. and Ps. 85, 7. Shew us thy mercy, O Lord, & grant us thy salvation. This order we see evermore observed by the Apostle, praying for grace and peace, Rom. 1.1, Cor. 1. This was the course which he took.

[Reason 1] And no marvel. For first, grace is the fountain and beginning of all good things. From whence have we election, but by grace? Rom. 11, 5. Whence cometh our calling to salvation but by grace? 2 Tim. 1, 9. Whence have we faith but by grace? Phil. 1, 29. Whence have we our justification but by grace? Rom. 3, 24. Whence shall we have glorification and eternal life, but by grace? Rom. 6, 23. Secondly, we must lay the foundation of all our requests upon the favor of God, because that being once obtained, bringeth with it all other benefits and blessings whatsoever: and without it, all things are unsavory and unprofitable: if first we seek the favor of God, all other things shall be ministered unto us. If we want this, we want all things; if we have this, we have all things. The Apostle Peter said to the impotent man, Silver and gold have we none: yet in his second Epistle he showeth, that the divine power had given them all things, 2 Pet. 1, 3.

[Use 1] From hence we must learn to hate the odious scoffs of the Papists and such like Ishmaelites that mock at our doctrine touching the assurance of God's mercy and love in the pardon of our sins: for we should not be allowed to pray for them, except we had assurance, grounding our selves upon his promise, to obtain them. Neuertheles, such is the sottishness of some of them, that from hence they would conclude, that according to our own principles, our people (forsooth) are in a miserable case, because they are bound never to ask God forgiveness of their sins: and why? Because they are already assured of grace, of the love of God, and of forgiveness of their sins. I answer, that this is a silly shift: for we must pray even for those things whereof we are assured before we pray. And that appeareth by these three particulars. First, though we have some assurance, yet our assurance is not perfect, we must therefore pray for the increase of it; and forasmuch as we are many ways shaken and assaulted, we have need of more and more assurance. Secondly, we must pray for the continuance of this grace. Our assurance may be much weakened, we have therefore need of God's strengthening Spirit to stay us up in this faith. Lastly, we are to pray for a new act of pardon to be daily sealed up in our hearts and consciences, as we daily provoke him by our new sins.

Secondly, above all things desire the grace [Use 2] of God, to be reconciled to God to have our sins forgiven, to taste abundantly of his mercy. One drop of this is more worth then all the gold of Ophir, or all the pearls and precious stones, that the mē of this world take so much pains to enjoy. We see how far men will go, what labor and what loss they will endure, what hunger they will sustain, & what cares they will spend to get the goods of this life. O that we had this care & this love of heavenly things! but alas, the least difficulty that we meet in the way, doth quickly discourage us and put us out of heart. Thus it falleth out that many have the riches of this world, who are poor in the true treasure, and have store of gold that have little store of grace. Let us say with the Prophet, Lord, if thou lift up thy countenance upon us, thou wilt put gladness in my heart, &c. And in another place, Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee: God is the strength of my heart, & my portion forever. Let us say with the Apostle, I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, &c. Behold the holy affectiō of this servant of God: he suffered the loss of all things, y^t he might win Christ. We are content to suffer the loss of Christ, that we may win the world, like to the Gadarenes. Paul accounted the loss of these earthly things to be a gain unto him, we account the gain of Christ to be a loss. He esteemed all earthly things in comparison of heavenly, to be no better then dung: we do so mind earth and earthly things, that we esteem and prize spiritual things as dung in comparison of them. This is the common corruption of our times, we spend our days and strength in seeking, getting, & holding riches, honors, pleasures, and such like, so that we have little leisure to think upon the grace of God and the peace of a good conscience. And yet notwithstanding set down this as a sure rule, that we have no promise to attain any earthly blessings without these. Again, God is most ready and willing to give these, if we were as willing to receive them: and certainly we should never want them, if we were not wanting unto our selves.

Lastly, observe that the true happiness of a Christian man consisteth in the favor & love [Use 3] of God, and the peace of a good conscience. Here is matter of great comfort and consolation to all God's Children in the midst of all the miseries of this mortal life, because whatsoever befalleth us here, though we lie under the cross, or rather a multitude of crosses, yet neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor power, nor things present, nor things to come, shall be able to make us miserable, or to separate us frō the love of God, being once in his favor.

Hence it is, that Solomon calleth a good conscience, a continual feast, Prov. 15, 15. This is the only thing that maketh a man truly happy, the feeling of God's love, and the peace of a good conscience purified by the blood of Christ: without this love there can be no peace, without this peace, there can be no happiness. Woe therefore be to all the ungodly, there is no grace in them, and there can be no peace for them, Isaiah 57, 20, 21. who are like the troubled sea whē it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. For seeing they are not at peace with God, they cannot be at peace with any of the creatures. They cannot assure themselves to find rest and quietness anywhere. The Angels fight against them, and are ready to destroy them. The beasts of the field are their enemies. The stones in y^e street are ready to rise up against them, and every creature is armed for their destruction, & conspire with their Creator for their overthrow. For no creature can be a friend unto them that are not at peace & unity with God. Nay, they have war within their own bosoms and bowels, and themselves are set against themselves. The estate of a wicked man is an unhappy life, though they be commonly accounted the most happy men in the world: for the meanest and poorest servant of God that liveth in his fear, and dieth in his favor, is a thousand times more happy than he. It is the grace of God that maketh blessed: it is the want of grace that maketh wretched and miserable. Abraham being justified by faith, which was imputed unto him for righteousness, was called the friend of God: but the ungodly wanting faith and the righteousness of Christ, are no otherwise accounted off, then as the enemies of God.

[Ver. 25. And they shall put my Name upon, &c.] This is the second part of the blessing, which, as we have said, may be called the blessing of the blessing. For by putting on of hands they must assure the people of God's blessing, ratifying indeed the words of their mouths. Now laying on of hands was used four ways, first, in healing of the sick, Luke 4, 40. Mark. 16, 18. Secondly, in the ordaining of Ministers Acts 13, 3. and 6, 6. 1 Tim. 4, 14. & 5, 22. This rite used in the New Testament, was practiced in the old, and indeed was borrowed from thence. Thirdly, in bestowing the gifts of the holy Ghost, Acts 8.17, and 19, 5. Fourthly, in blessing of children, and of the people, Gen. 48, 14. Math. 19, 13. Mark. 10, 13, Luk. 18, 15. Here it was used in blessing the people▪ as an undoubted sign of God's favor: so that as the Priests pronounced the blessing, so God would assuredly bring those blessings upon them.

Hence we do learn, that the work of the Ministry shall not be vnfruitefull, [Doctrine.] but shall serve for the benefit of the people of God, being accompanied with the blessing of God. When Paul planteth and Apollos watereth, God giveth the increase, 1 Cor. 3, 6. The Gospel is the power of God to salvation, to everyone that believeth, Rom. 1, 16. He did long to see them, that he might impart unto them some spiritual gift, that they might be established, verse 11. and thereupon acknowledged himself to be a debtor both to y^e Greeks and to the Barbarians, verse 14. When Christ sent out his Apostles to preach the Gospel to all Nations, after his resurrection, he annexed this promise to their preaching, Loe, I am with you always even unto the end of the world, Math. 28, 20. and hereby was their doctrine made powerful and effectual. The history of the Acts is a most plentiful storehouse of this truth, where we see how the Apostles converted Jews and Gentiles, men and women, rich and poor, noble & vnnoble, Captains, Soldiers, Iaylours, Deputies, Proselytes. Persecutors, Pharisees; it being a most powerful instrument and mighty through God to pull down strong holds, to cast down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth it self against the knowledge of God, and to bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Jesus Christ. As then it is said of the Sun, that his going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it, & there is nothing hid from the heat thereof: so is the sound of the Word and the Ministry of it gone into all the world, and their words unto the ends of the earth; so that the saving knowledge of the Gospel did lay hold upon the Parthians and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judea, & Cappadocia, in Pontus and Asia, &c. Cretes & Arabians, they spake in their own tongues the wonderful works of God, Acts 2, 11, 41. and 4, 4. and 8, 37. and 9, 36. and 10, 44. and 13, 12, 43, 48. and 16, 14, 34. and 17, 4, 11, 12, 34. and 18, 8. and 19, 18.

And how can the word but be effectual, if [Reason 1] we consider the titles given unto it? It is the strong arm of God to pull us unto himself, Isaiah 53, 1. It is as an hammer to strike our stony hearts in pieces, and as a devouring fire to burn up and consume to ashes our corruptions as straw and stubble, Ier. 23, 29. It is as the rain and snow that come down frō heaven and return not thither, but water the earth and make it bud and bring forth, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater, Isaiah 55, 10, 11. It is the key of the Kingdom of heaven, Math. 16, 19. It is a fan in the hand of God, Mat. 3, 12. It is as a dragnet cast into the sea, and gathereth of every kind, Math. 13, 47. Lastly, it is called the Gospel of the Kingdom, Math. 9, 35, because it teacheth the way that leadeth to everlasting life.

Secondly, the Ministers are laborers together with God; when they preach, he preacheth: when they instruct, he instructeth: whē they comfort, it is he that comforteth: when they threaten, it is he that threateneth; they are no other but the mouth of God, and the messengers of GOD sent out to speak his word, 1 Cor. 3, 9. They then as workers together with him, beseech us that we receive not the grace of God in vain, 2 Cor. 6, 1. For how can we doubt, but that God will bless his own ordinance?

Thirdly, when Christ Jesus ascended and led captivity captive, he gave gifts to the Ministry, Eph. 4, 8. It is he that putteth heavenly treasures in earthly vessels, that the excellency of the power might be of God, and not of any man, 2 Cor. 4, 7.

[Use 1] This efficacy of the Ministry, and of every part of it, serveth to many uses. First, it reproveth such as long to be gone out of the house of God, such as think the time lost and ill spent, that is spent in hearing the word, such as so set their minds and affections upon worldly things, that they cannot tarry & abide in the church until the blessing be pronounced, & the assembly be dismissed; whereby they deprive themselves indeed of the blessing of God, of whom we may speak with the Prophet, Psal. 109, 17. As he delighted not in blessing, so it shall be far from him. It is the order and ordinance that God hath appointed in the Church, that we should begin and ende the exercises of our religion together. For as God is the God of good order, so the Church which is the house of GOD, is the place of good order, and therefore all the children of the Church must submit themselves to the rules of order and decency.

[Use 2] Secondly, it should be a forcible means to stir us up to diverse and sundry duties. First, it directeth us to go to God, and to crave of him to work by his own ordinance the salvation of his people. We must pray unto him that is the Lord of the harvest, to bless his word, and to open the harts of those that hear it to attend unto it and to embrace it. Secondly, it serveth to work in us diligence and fidelity, knowing that we must give an account to the great shepherd of the sheep. We are hereby encouraged to preach the word in season & out of season, considering that God hath promised to be with us, to stand by us, to assist us, and defend us. Thirdly, we must labor to preach with zeal, with boldness, and with power, and with authority, not carelessly, or coldly, or faintly, remembering that we speak in his Name that sent us and put us in his service, always studying to show our selves workmen that need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth, 2 Tim. 2, 15. Forasmuch as his blessing doth accompany the faithful deliverance thereof. The word is evermore effectual in it self, and mighty in operation, sharper thē any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart: let us not therefore by our negligence dull the edge of it, or blunt the point of it, nor be afraid to cut the sinews of sin with it, but speak it as it ought to be spoken.

Thirdly, from hence the people receive diverse [Use 3] instructions. First▪ it worthily challengeth from them reverence to esteem them that preach the word, as the Ministers of Christ, to account their steps beautiful for their message and Ministry sake. The feet of the Prophets of God that brought the people glad tidings of a temporal deliverance from bodily captivity, were very beautiful, Isaiah 52, 7. How much more respected ought the Ministers of the Gospel to be, that bring glad tidings of a better deliverance, even from spiritual captivity and slavery under spiritual enemies to our souls and to our salvation? Rō. 10, 15. This bondage is greater & more grievous, then to lie under the bondage of all tyrants & persecutors. Secondly, we must yield attention to the word of exhortation, and not despise Prophecy, 1 Thess. 5, 20. This is the principal means ordained for our conversion, and for our confirmation, and continuance in the truth. For the preaching of the word is necessary, not only to bring us to the knowledge of the Gospel when we were ignorant, and to work in us the grace of faith when we did not believe; but when we are once borne anew, to make us grow thereby to a full strength and stature, and to establish us in the known truth, Rom. 1, 11. Eph. 4, 12, 13. 1 Pet. 2, 2, and 2 Pet. 1, 12, 13. And we are taught that Prophecy serveth for them that believe, and not only for them that do not believe, 1 Cor. 14, 22. Lastly, we must be content to submit our selves to the word, and to be willing to have it applied unto our consciences, whether it be by exhortations, or by reproofs, or by threatenings, or by comforts. For what shall a salve do, be it never so precious, if it be not laid to the sore? or what can the medicine avail, if it be not applied to the disease? Let us never look to find the efficacy of the word in our souls, except we desire to feel the working and power of it being spread upon our hearts. Lastly, we must yield obedience to that which we have heard. It is said of the Apostles when they were sent forth into all Nations, Mar. 16, 20. that they went forth and preached everywhere, & the Lord wrought with them: if then we be doers of the word, & not hearers only, then the Lord worketh with his Ministers, nay he worketh in the people. This is a blessed work, happy are they that are so wrought upon. The obedient hearer is the only hearer that heareth to salvation, that receiveth with meekness the engrafted word y^t is able to save his soul.

CHAP. VII.

1. AND it came to pass on the day that Moses had fully set up the Tabernacle, and had anointed it, and sanctified it, and all the instruments thereof, both the Altar and all the vessels thereof, and had anointed them and sanctified them,

2. That the Princes of Israel, heads of the house of their fathers (who were the Princes of the Tribes, and were over them that were numbered) offered:

3. And they brought their offering before the Lord, six covered wagons, and twelve Oxen: a wagon for two of the Princes, and for each one an Ox, and they brought them before the Tabernacle.

4. And the Lord spake, &c.

Hitherto of the sanctification which is general and common: now Moses descendeth to particular laws. This chapter containeth two things; first, the offering of the Princes: secondly, the speech of God to Moses. The offering of the Princes is set out by certain circumstances, of the time when they offered, when Moses had fully set up the Tabernacle, and had anointed and sanctified it, &c. of the persons which offered, the Princes of the Tribes, the heads of the house of their fathers: and of the place where they are offered, it was before the Lord. Then their offering is described by the particulars that were offered, which is performed jointly, or severally. Ioyntly, they brought six covered wagons and twelve Oxen, &c. I will not stand particularly to speak of the sanctifying and anointing of the Tabernacle, handled at large, Exod. 40, 9, 10. Remember in general, that the Tabernacle was a type and figure of the Church, which is a company of men acknowledging and worshipping the true God, whō Christ doth regenerate and sanctify with his Spirit, and purposeth afterward to glorify thē in his kingdom, 1 John 2, 27. Moreover consider, that these Princes here described are called the heads of the house of their Fathers. This word is diversely taken in the Scriptures. God is the head of Christ, Christ is the head of man, and man is the head of the woman, 1, Cor. 11, 3. The head of Syria is Damascus, the head of Damascus, is Retzin, Isaiah 7, 8. The heads of the Levites are put for the chiefest; and the Priest the head, that is, the chief Priest, Neh. 1, 16. 2 Chron. 31, 10. The King, the head of the Tribes of Israel, 1 Sam. 15, 17. The heads of householders, the Elders, Exod. 16, 13. The head of the people, the foremost, 1 King. 21, 9. The head of the Mountains, the highest, Isaiah 2, 2. The head of the spices, the chiefest, Exod. 20, 23. Among David's Captains, the heads are the most excellent, 2 Sā. 23, 8, 13, 18. The Princes mentioned in this place, may after a sort be called heads in all these respects, because they are the chiefest, the foremost, the highest, and the most excellent. And albeit Kings and Princes abstain from this title to be called heads of y^e Church, as pointing out the sovereignty of Christ, and content themselves to be styled supreme Governors, as appeareth by the oath of supremacy used among us, yet we doubt not but they may be called by that name in a kind & degree of resemblance, because they have preeminence of place and government over all people within their dominions. For if Samuel tell Saul, that when he was little in his own sight, he was ordained to be made the head of the Tribes of Israel, being anointed King: it may be thought not unlawful, being rightly understood, to give Princes y^e name of heads of their people. As for the Bishop of Rome, that challengeth this title, to be called head of the whole Church, we cannot acknowledge him for any such head, but rather the tail, being indeed no sound member of the Church, but the head of the apostasy and falling away from the faith, prophesied of by the Apostle.

Touching the annointing oil, wherewith the Tabernacle and the vessels thereof were anointed; signifying, that all the true members of the Church are endued with the graces of the Spirit: from hence the superstitious Romanists would gather their consecrating and hallowing of Churches with oil and other ceremonies, and hold it unlawful to say their Mass in a Church not hallowed: yea, they will tell us of much profit and many uses thereof, as the increase of devotion, and the expelling of devils. But hereby they run into sundry errors & abuses. They devise and set up a sanctificatiō without warrant of God's word: they prefer their own tradition before the institution of God: they commit idolatry in dedicating Churches to Saints: they make these ceremonies a part of God's worship: they would bring in again the types and shadows of Moses law, which do not bind us, but are abolished: they make human traditions and observations not grounded upon y^e Scripture, to be the means to stir up deuotiō. Lastly, they teach, that by this unholy hallowing devils are drivē out of churches, w^c are not cast out but by fasting & prayer, Matth. 17, 21. As for that dedication of Churches which standeth partly in prayer grounded upon the word, and partly in setting of them apart to holy uses, to the preaching of the word, to the administration of the Sacraments, & such like exercises of religion; we do no more condemn then David's dedication of his house which he had newly built, Psal. 30. who notwithstanding used neither crossings, nor tapers, nor such toys as are taken up and tolerated in the Church of Rome.

[Ver. 1. And it came to pass] Moses having provided all things necessary for the service of God, mustered his army, divided them into troops and squadrons before remembered, and appointed them Leaders of all sorts: here he showeth that the twelve Princes, the Captains & Commanders of the Tribes, brought their offerings before the Lord, to wit, six covered wagons, and twelve Oxen to draw them, to transport in them (as they marched) the parts of the Tabernacle with all the vessels belonging thereunto. But were not these things to be carried upon the Priests shoulders? What use then was there, or what need of these wagons or chariots? The Sanctuary indeed or the most holy place, for greater respect and reverence, was to be carried upon the shoulders of the sons of Kohath, to whō the charge was committed; howbeit these wagons were appointed to carry and conuay in them the other parts of the Tabernacle, and the vessels thereunto belonging, and were delivered to the Levites for that service, namely to the sons of Gershon and Merari. Now, we must not forget that the people gave before this gifts of great price, Exod. 35, 27. yet here again (seeing a want) they bring more, and that freely without coaction or compulsion, to finish and perfect fully the work that was so happily begun. The doctrine from hence is this, that a good work begun, especially furthering God's worship, is not to be neglected or intermitted until it be brought to an end and to perfection. We see this in the book of Ezra, chap. 5, 1, 2. the building of God's house after the return of the Israelites from captivity had been a long time hindered through the malice of their enemies, yet now they begin with good courage to set upon the work again, being stirred up by the Prophets, and never give over until it was finished: and chap. 6, 14. they built and finished the house of God and prospered. The like zeal & forwardness we see in Nehemiah, ch. 4, 3, 4, &c. he built the wall, which indeed was the first that was thrown down, but the last that was set up: by whose means all the wall was joined together, for the people had a mind to work. When the Jews had begun to destroy their enemies, they did not leave the work imperfect, and therefore Ester required that it might be granted to them, to do tomorrow as they had done that day, and that Haman's ten sons might be hanged upon the gallows. Hence it is, that Elisha reproveth the King of Israel, who smote upon the ground three times and then stayed, saying unto him, Thou shouldst have smitten five or six times, then hadst thou smitten Syria till thou hadst consumed it, whereas now thou shalt smite it but thrice. He began the work of the Lord well, but he did not make a good end. The Apostle persuading the Corinthians to liberality toward the Saints, willeth the readily to perform that which they had willingly begun. The reasons are plain.

The God of heaven will prosper weak beginnings, [Reason 1] if there be a readiness and cheerfulness in us. This should be a great encouragement unto us, as it was to Nehemiah, to arise and build the wall, seeing they had the promise of God's prospering of the work that was under their hands, Neh. 2, 20.

Secondly, if we look back we are not apt to God's kingdom, Lu 9, 62. It is spoken indeed of the Ministry, which may fitly be called God's Plough, as the Ministers are the husbandmen, the word is the seed▪ the heart of man is the field that is to be ploughed up, tilled, and sowed: but it is true also in all good things and every work of religion, if we give over, we lose our labor, we miss our reward

Thirdly, it is better not to begin, then having begun, not to proceed: better never to lay the first stone in the building, then having laid a good foundation, not to make an end, because it will be said to our reproach, This man began to build, but was not able to finish, Luk. 14, 30. It is happened unto such, according to the true Proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again, and the Sow that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire. 2 Pet 2, 22.

This serveth to reprove such as give over [Use 1] their profession, which rest in a good work begun, and in weak and small beginnings. They are like Balaam that wished he might die the death of the righteous, but he would go no farther. Or they are like the morning dew, which by and by the Sun dryeth up: or like Herod, that revered John, & did many things when he heard him preach, but he would not depart from all sin, and obey whatsoever John taught, Mark. 6, 20. and therefore it had been as good he had done nothing Agrippa was persuaded somewhat to become a Christian, when he had heard Paul preach, but he would not become altogether such as he was, as Paul desired, Acts 20, 28. The stony ground, being by nature hot, made the corn spring up hastily and promise plentiful fruit to the husbandman; but when the Sun arose in his strength, it was quickly scorched & began by little and little to wither away: so is it with many hearers, they receive the word with joy, and believe for a season, but they want root, and in time oftentation they fall away, Luke 8, verse 13. A falling back into sin is more dangerous then the relapse into an old sickness: this may endanger the body, but that endangereth y^e soul; this may bring a temporal death, but that will bring a spiritual, nay an eternal death. Let us therefore take the counsel of Christ given to y^e Church of Ephesus, Revel. 2, 5. Remember from whence thou art fallen, and do thy first works, or else I will come unto thee quickly and will remove thy Candlestick out of his place except thou repent. Augustine saith well to this purpose; Redeat homo per quotidiana lamenta, vnde corrui per vana delectamenta; As man hath fallen by vain delighting, so let him return again by daily lamenting. Let us make such a firm league and such a sure promise with religion, as Elisha did with Elijah, 2 King. 2, 6. As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee: so let us say, with full purpose of heart & with a settled resolution, I will never depart from the faith, I will never leave my obedience, I will never give over true religion. Thus it was with David, he stood not wavering in the matters of God, or hovering up & down in the wind, looking for a change, but he had determined what he would do, Psalm. 119, 93, 106. I will never forget thy precepts, for with them thou hast quickened me. And afterward, I have sworn and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments. This was an holy oath, whereby he bound himself as it were in a statute from starting back, that he might never entertain any thought of giving over his profession. Let us set before us evermore this example, let us be constant and unmovable, abounding always in the work of the Lord, knowing that our labors shall not be in vain in the Lord.

[Use 2] Secondly, it reproveth such as stand at a stay, like the earth that never moveth: such as neither go forward nor backward, but are always the same men, and look where you left them, there you shall be sure to find them. These are earthly minded and savor only of the earth: yet they think themselves to be somewhat, and such as deserve highly to be commended, because they do not go back, nor wax worse and worse as others do. Thus while they compare themselves with those that are worse, they are grown into an high conceit that they are most excellent. But let them not deceive themselves; they use false weights and false measures to make trial of themselves, of whom I may say as the Lord doth of Belshazzar, Dan. 5, 27. Thou art weighed in the balances, & art found wanting: for while they measure themselves with the mete-yard of others, they keep a false measure in their own house, which is an abomination unto the Lord, Prov. 11, 1, & 16, 11. Everyone must weigh himself, if he would not be found too light, with the weights of the Sanctuary, and measure himself with the standard of the Scripture, comparing his works with the word of God, and not with the life of other men, then he shall be sure not to be reprovèd.

Every Christian is like the Sun that never standeth still, but is ever in motion. If our conversation be in heaven, we must be goers, walkers, runners: goers in the right way, walking toward our journeys end, and running in a race that we may obtain. We must be as plants growing in the house of the Lord, Psal. 92, 13. Such as are planted in the house of the Lord, shall flourish in the house of our God. There must be none of God's servants that must be idle and stand still, doing nothing; they must be laborers that look to receive their penny when the evening cometh, Math. 20, verse 8. He that had received a talent, and digged and hid it in the earth, was accounted an evil and unfaithful servant, Math. 25, 26. Who will entertain a servant, to give him meat & drink and wages, that will do nothing but look about him, and never set his hands to work? and shall we think that God will receive such servants into his house as sit still and will do him no service at all? Shall we put our hands into our bosom, and never pull them out again to employ them as we ought to do? Let us evermore be doing somewhat that may please God: blessed is that servant, whom his master when he cometh, shall find so doing.

Thirdly, such deserve to be reprov'd and [Use 3] to be ranged in the number of the former who hate and scorn those that go before them and beyond them in the duties of piety, in gifts of knowledge and understanding. But we must take heed we do not oppose our selves against any work of grace that is evident and eminent to be seen in any of God's servants. For this is as much as to hate and scorn the word of God, nay, the Lord himself; the Gospel of peace, nay Christ Jesus the author and first Preacher of it. It argueth a malicious heart against our brethren, and that in the highest degree, like Cain who hated his brother, because God accepted his offering. Malice against any man is an evil root that bringeth forth bitter fruits: to malign any for his riches, for his peace, for his prosperity, is very dangerous: but to envy him & repine at him for heavenly riches, for his souls health, for the peace of a good conscience, and for matters that concern his everlasting salvation in God's Kingdom, is a thousand times worse then the malice of Saul against David, or of Pharaoh against Moses and the Israelites. True it is, these sought their lives; but such desperate malicious persons that envy glory and immortality, and heaven it self to others, do seek the life of their lives: the other were guilty of the blood of their bodies whō they hated and persecuted; but these are guilty of the blood of men's souls, and their thirst cannot be quenched but by rasing them out of the book of life. These are stamped with the image of Satan the old deceiver, and the first envious person that ever was, who being fallen into condemnation himself, envied the standing of mankind in the state of grace, and therefore could not rest nor be quiet, until he had plunged man into the same gulf of condemnation. So is it with these men, they are backward in the fear of God themselves, and they desire to have all like them, to be backward as themselves. Let us take heed of such envy, let us bar no man of God's Kingdom.

[Use 4] Fourthly, it is our duty to proceed in sanctification, and labor to bring forth fruit evermore in old age, Psal. 92, 15. Let us leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ, & go on unto perfection, not laying again the foundation, Heb. 6.1. Let us not think we have attained unto perfectiō, but forget that which is behind, and endeavor to that which is set before us: let us press toward the mark for the price of the high calling of GOD, that so we may apprehend that for which we are apprehended of Christ Jesus, Phil. 3.13.14. Let us cleanse our selves from all filthynesse of the flesh and Spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God, 2 Cor. 7, 1. True it is, that albeit the good work begun in us be but as a spark of fire kindled in wood, or a young plant newly grafted in the stock, or as a drop of rain fallen into the earth, yet Christ Jesus doth accept of the truth & sincerity of the new work wrought in us, be it never so small: howbeit we must not evermore be as smoking flax, & as bruised reeds, and as new-set plants: we must not still be weaklings, but as the grain of Mustard seed, which is one of the least of the sorts of seeds, but it groweth great, and becometh as a tree, and the birds of the air build their nests in it, Math. 13, 32. Or like unto leaven, which though it be small, yet being hidden in three measures of Meale, the whole is leavened, verse 33. Therefore it behooveth us, as we have received how we ought to walk and to please God, so to abound more and more, 1 Thess. 4, 1. Notwithstanding, we must take heed that we do not glory in our own strength, as if we were able to do the will of God touching our sanctification of our selves without the help and assistance of the Spirit of God, without which we can do nothing at all. True it is, the Apostle willeth us to work out our salvation with fear and trembling: howbeit, lest any should trust in himself as if he were something, or build upon the freedom of his own will, he addeth in the next words, It is God that worketh in us the will and the deed, of his good pleasure, Philip. 2, 12, 13. It is a notable token of our continuance in good things, and a comfort to our consciences that we shall persevere unto the end, if we have a care to go forward, and to make our good works moe at the last then they were at the first.

[Verse 2.] The Princes of Israel, Heads of the house of their Fathers offered.] Here we have another circumstance to be considered, to wit, a description of the persons that offered: they were the Princes and Rulers, the heads of the people. And albeit they only are expressed, yet they brought their offering in the name of the whole Tribe, as appeareth by the largeness of the offering, and by the first Prince that offered. Thus we see that they being set up in high place above others, do also go before them and give them good example in the best things, & seek to further them in God's worship. We learn hereby, [Doctrine.] that albeit God be to be served of all, and that all persons should show themselves forward and ready to further the work of the Lord, yet above all other, the chief and heads of the people, are to be guides of the way, and leaders unto the rest. The Prophet teacheth, that under the Gospel Kings shall be nursing Fathers, and Queens shall be Nursing mothers to the Church, Isaiah 49, 23. David exhorteth Kings to be wise, and the Judges of the earth to be instructed, to serve the Lord with fear, and to rejoice with trembling, Psa. 2, 10, 11. When the people saw the zeal and fervency of Hezekiah, that he spared no cost to further the worship of God, it kindled in them a love to do his service, and they rejoiced exceedingly, 2 Chron. 30, 24, 25. Such therefore as are advanced above the people as the head is above the body, ought to be more zealous & forward in the ways of God, then others that are of the lowest sort.

Thus it ought to be, because they must [Reason 1] know they lie open to judgment as well as others, if not before others. Topheth is prepared of old for the King as well as for the subject: It is made deep and large as well for the one, as for the other, Isaiah 30.33. God accepteth no man's person. Nay, they are for the most part chiefly pursued and over-taken with judgments, as Ezra 7.23. Artaxerxes decreed, that all should return and build the house of the God of heaven: For why should there be wrath against the Realm of the King and his sons? And to this purpose it is said in the Psalm 82, 6, 7. I have said ye are God's, and all of you are children of the most high: but ye shall die like men, and fall like one of the Princes.

Secondly, they sin by their example, and give offense unto others. When they fall, they make others fall with them, as a mighty Oak casteth down the low and little shrubs that grow nere it. So then, they offend not only by their own transgression, as a private man, but all their actions are exemplary, and they bring a great scandal unto others. They are as a city set upon an hil, or as a light upon a Beacon that is seen far and near: when they sin they make others sin with them. For this cause Solomon saith, Prov. 29.12. If a Ruler hearken to lies, all his servants are wicked.

Thirdly, wherefore are they separated in calling and condition? and why are they advanced to honor? Is it to magnify themselves? is it to sit at ease? or to live in pleasure? or to delight them in their high titles? or to please themselves to see others creep and crouch unto them? No, but to be pillars in the house of God, and to serve the Church. Hence it is, that Nehemiah said, Should such a man as I fly? Or who is there that being as I am, would go into the Temple to save his life? As if he had said, Should I fly that am a Ruler of the people? I will not do it. And Mordecai persuadeth Ester to go in to the King, and to adventure her life for the deliverance of the Church by this reason, chap. 4.14. Who knoweth, whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this? He putteth her boldly in mind, that God had advanced her to honor, and made her inherit the throne of glory, to the end she should honor him again, and refer all the glory she had attained, to the setting forth of his glory.

[Use 1] This teacheth us, that it is a dangerous state where are no Leaders or Rulers to go before the people, and to hold them in God's service: there of necessity godliness must decay, Justice fall to the ground, and all duties of Religion sink down, as in an army where are no Commanders, in a family where are no Governors, in a ship where are no Pilots, what is there but all disorder and confusion? The last part of the book of Judges, setteth forth the truth hereof at large: the Israelites corrupted themselves with Idolatry, they defiled the worship of God, and God gave them over to a reprobate mind to do those things which are not convenient, being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, and such like wickedness: and what was the occasion of all? Judge. 17 & 18. & 19. In those days there was no King in Israel, but every man did that which was right in his own eyes. And it is observed by the Author of that Book, that the people feared the Lord all the days of Joshua, a godly Governor, and all the days of the Elders that out-lived Joshua, who had seen all the great works of the Lord: but when they were dead and buried, The children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord, and served Baalim. We must therefore needs acknowledge the happiness and blessedness of that people, that have godly Governors, such as Moses, and Joshua, and David, and Jehoshaphat, and Hezekiah, and Josiah, and such like, to teach them, and guide them in the ways of godliness. This is a great mercy and favor of God.

[Use 2] Secondly we may conclude, that wretched and miserable is their condition, where Governors are cold and careless in God's service, and enemies to the advancement of his glory. The Prophet showeth, that the Chief had no knowledge, and the great men had broken the yoke, and burst the bonds. Woe therefore unto the Land, the Lord would visit for these things, and his soul be avenged on such a nation as this, Ier. 5, 5, 9. If it be within the walls of a private family that zeal be found in the Governors, it will appear oftentimes in the lowest servant which goeth to the door, as in Rhode, Acts 12, 14. She dwelled in a godly family, where many were gathered together in prayer, entreating the Lord to work Peters deliverance: & when she heard his voice standing without, and knocking at the door, she could not open the gate for gladness▪ but ran in to acquaint them with that glad tidings. If Cornelius be a devout man, and one that feareth God, he shall have servants and soldiers to attend upon him to be devout also, Acts 10, 2, 7. If the Courtier or Nobleman whose son was cured, do believe, his whole house will believe also, and follow his example, John. 4, 53. If the Jailor desire to know how to be saved, and if once himself become a believer, he shall not believe alone, his household will bear him company, and enter into the way of salvation, Acts 16, 34. Abraham is noted to be the Father of the faithful, and we see he was not without a faithful servant, not only faithful to his master, but faithful to God, and therefore also to his master. This is noted as the chief cause that religion so much prospered at Thessalonica, when the Gospel was preached and published there, the Noblemen did embrace it, Acts 17. If the rain once fall upon the mountains, it will quickly water the valleys that are beneath, like the precious ointment poured upon the head of Aaron, y^t ran down to the skirts of his garments, Ps. 133, 2. When the Gospel was preached at Berea, and such as were of noble birth took hold of it, and they that were honorable by calling, embraced & believed it; then, not a few, but many in number followed after them, with all readiness, Acts. 17, 11, 12. I am not ignorant, that diverse of our latest and lernedest Expositors understand the words otherwise, and think they are called Noble, not in regard of their birth or blood, but of their belief; as indeed true Piety is true Nobility, and true Religion is the truest Honor. Howbeit, I rather understand the word in his proper and natural signification, for these causes. First, it is not needful to fly to a figure, when the proper signification of a word standeth, and containeth nothing under it either against the doctrine of faith, or the instruction of life, or the truth of the history. Secondly, Luke useth this word in this signification, as also others: for such as are noble by birth, and not otherwise, as Luk. 19, 12. 1 Cor. 1, 26. Thirdly, the Evangelist hath relation to that which he noted before in this chapter, where he saith, That not a few of the chief women believed (verse 4.) that were at Thessalonica, howbeit they were more noble than were at Berea, who searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so. Lastly, in these words a reason is rendered, how it came to pass, that the Gospel took such good effect and gained so many souls to God, even because the Nobility and honorable personages gave their names to Christ, & were not ashamed to profess it. The multitude followed their example, as commonly they do imitate the actions of their Leaders. The Poet could say,

—Totus Componitur orbis

Regis ad exemplum: nec sic inflectere sensus

Humanos edicta valent, quàm vita regentis.

The people cast their eyes upon their Rulers, neither are they ordered so much by their laws, as they are by their lives. O that they which are in authority would consider this, that the eyes of all men are upon them: O that they would seriously bethink with themselves, what good they might do, by embracing religion, and by countenancing them that are truly religious: or if this will not enter into them, and that their honors do so dazzle their eyes that they cannot see the truth hereof, O that they would at the least learn what hurt they do, what backwardness they cause, what coldness in Religion they procure, and what floods of wickedness they bring in! Doubtless, if they did at any time meditate on these things, and weigh in indifferent balances either the one or the other, it were enough to turn, nay to break their hearts, and to put greater love and zeal into them of God's glory. For if the Governors of a Family be luke-warm, it may be easily observed, that their children which follow them, their servants which attend upon them, and all the rest of the house which are guided by them, are neither hot nor cold. And if it fall out that the Heads of the house be profane and irreligious, there is nothing to be perceived in that whole family but notable fruits of infidelity, swearing, blaspheming, breach of the Sabbath, contempt of the word, brawling, contention, and all kind of wretchedness and wickedness. If Saul begin to persecute David, he shall get many devilish Doegs to snarl at him, and find many hollow-hearted Keilahites to betray him, & have many pestilent Ziphites offer themselves to discover where he hideth himself in strong holds; all as his servants to help him forward in his wickedness. If Caiaphas sit in judgment to arraign & condemn Christ, all his servants and his maids will be ready in the hall and at the door to set upon his disciples, and to follow the humor of their master, so that even the damosel that kept the door could not let Peter alone, but must assault him. How then can we but acknowledge that it is a very happy thing to enjoy godly Magistrates and Christian Governors? how much encouragement Inferiors have by thē, and how sweet a liberty they find, cannot be expressed. O that we could learn to prize & value this blessing as we ought! It is not a general benefit to be found in all places: y^e godly have oftentimes much disturbance, and suffer many taunts and checks even for their profession sake in profane places. & living under profane persons. For albeit all Magistrates and men in authority (though their office be not great) are set up for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well, 1 Pet. 2, 14. yet oftentimes they turn the edge of the sword the wrong way, and are a terror to good works, but not to evil.

Lastly, having received so great mer·y frō [Use 3] God, and continued among us, to have such as are chief over the people to be chief also in piety, and to go before them in all good •onuersation, whether they be such as be in the house, or out of the house: it is our duty to fall down before the Lord, and to acknowledge this blessing. Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men, Psal. 107, 8. So did Hiram the King of Tyre, rejoice greatly when he heard that Solomon was anointed King in the room of his Father, and said, Blessed be the Lord this day, which hath given unto David a wise son over this great people, 1 Kin. 5, 17 The like we see in the Queen of Sheba, when she had seen his works, and heard his wisdom, she said, Blessed be the Lord thy God which delighted in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel, because the Lord loved Israel forever, therefore made he thee King, to do judgment and justice. And doubtless, if we knew the want of such Princes, as our brethren and sisters in former times did, when they were shut up in prisons, and burned to ashes, we would acknowledge the necessity of performing this duty. It is recorded in 2 Chro. 17, 7. that Jehoshaphat, who is renowned for his piety and advancement of true religion, sent out his Princes to teach in the Cities of Judah: not that they did take upon them the duty of the Priests, or usurp the office of the Prophets; but because they did back, countenance, & authorize the Levites, they did embolden & encorage the Prophets. This made an easy way and passage for the receiving and entertaining of true religion among the people with much more readiness and cheerfulness then otherwise would have been. For when they saw and considered, that such noble and worthy persons were the aduancers and upholders of the common Faith, they were the more stirred up to a zealous professing and a careful embracing, and a sincere obeying of the truth that was taught. Seeing therefore such good Princes are such great pillars of the Commonwealth, of the Church, and of Religion; the loss of them when they are taken away, is one of the greatest losses, & threateneth the ruin and havoc of all that is good. When the good King Josiah was taken away, Lam. 4, 20. being taken in the snare under whose shadow they lived in peace, all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for him, and spake of him in their lamentations to this day, and made them an ordinance in Israel, 2 Chr. 35, 24 Zach. 12, 11. For as the enjoying of them bringeth many blessings, that we may quietly resort together to the hearing of the word, and peaceably sit under our Vines and Fig-trees, and reason of the ways of the Lord, as it was in the days of Solomon, when no man may do what seemeth good in his own eyes (as in the want of them:) so the taking of them away is the cause of many evils & of much wickedness, whereof we may say as Christ doth in another case, All these are the beginnings of sorrows. True it is, that the religion of God and the doctrine of the Gospel do not so stand in need of the help of man, as though they must fall whē they fall, because they are set upon such a sure foundation that no force or power of mā can shake them or destroy them, and they took firm root and spread far and near unto all quarters, before any Christian Magistrates embraced them, nay while they remained utter enemies unto them, and open persecutors of them; nevertheless it pleaseth God to use them as his chosen instruments, and by them to bring many thousands to the knowledge of the truth, and consequently to the kingdom of heaven, who otherwise through their ignorance would not see it, or through their carelessness would not regard it, or through their untowardness would not accept of it.

10 And the Princes offered for dedicating of the Altar, in the day that it was anointed, even the Princes offered their offering before the Altar.

11 And the Lord said unto Moses, &c.

We heard before of the offering performed jointly by the Princes: now let us see the Offerings which they brought severally. For besides the Chariots and the Oxen, each of these great Commanders of the people and Heads of the Tribes offered unto God for his service in the Tabernacle, a Charger of fine silver, waighing 130. shekels, a silver Boll of 70. shekles, and one Spooone of ten shekels of Golde, full of Incense: all which they performed at the same time when the Altar was dedicated to God by Aaron, and before they marched from Sinai (where the Law was given) toward their conquest of the promised land. The weight of all the 12. silver Chargers, and 12 silver Bolles amounted unto 2400 shekels of silver, & the weight of Gold in the Incense spoones, did amount to 120. shekels of Gold which maketh of shekels of silver 1200. every shekel of Gold valewing ten of silver: so that the whole sum which they offered at this time, was about 420 pounds sterling. These Princes offered before with men and women, yet now they come again, & think they can never do enough toward the furtherance of the Tabernacle & the worship of God. The doctrine [Doctrine.] from hence is this, that they which have most outward blessings & greatest ability must be most forward in God's worship and service. In Ezra it appeareth, they all gave according to their ability, chap. 2, 9. The chief of the Fathers, when they came to the house of the Lord, offered freely for the house of God, to set it up in his place. So in Nehemiah it appeareth how bountiful he and the Princes, and the people were: They gave much silver and gold to finish the work of the Lord. The examples of David and Solomon in this kind are very evident and apparent, for y^t which one of them prepared to the work, and the other employed and bestowed upon the work, is exceeding great, as appeareth in the holy history, 1 Chron. 18, 11. &c.

And so much the rather we should employ our blessings and gifts to the service of God, and so give them after a sort to him that gave them first unto us, because it is a sign that our affection is set upon the worship of God, and an assurance to our own hearts, that we love him and his house, 1 Chro. 29, 3, 4. where David showeth, he gave 3000. talents of gold, of the gold of Ophir, and 7000. talents of refined silver, because he had set his affection to the house of his God. On the other side, where is no liberality, we may conclude there is no worship of God. Secondly everyone is bound to glorify God with his riches, knowing that they are but stewards and dispensers of them, of which they must give an account unto God, Luk. 16, 2. To this end hath God bestowed them, and to this end we have received them, and therefore to this end they should be employed. Thirdly, this is a certain rule, that To whom soever much is given, of him shall much be required, Luke 12, 48. He that hath little committed unto him, hath the less account and shorter reckoning to make, but to whom men have committed much, of him they will require more: so is it with God: if he have left us five talents he will ask five of us again; and according as God hath put us in trust with little or much, we must know that he looketh for this at our hands, that we be ready to employ little or much upon his service, everyone according to his ability.

This serveth to reprove the forgetfulness and unthankfulness of such, as never consider [Use 1] the end wherefore God hath blessed them, giving themselves wholly to carnal liberty and security, and so are more backward in good things, then if they had never received so many and so great blessings from God. He hath a plentiful storehouse, and a treasury of all treasures: out of this he dealeth with us, and distributeth unto us plentifully. The Apostle giveth the Church a watchword, and it is very needful he should do so, that in all things they should be thankful, 1 Thess. 5, 19. This is the cause why the Israelites were forwarned to take heed to themselves, even before they entered into the land of promise, Deut. 6, 10, 11, 12. and should possess great & goodly Cities which they never built, houses full of all manner of furniture and garnishings and ornaments which they never stored, vineyards & Olive trees which they never planted, Welles of water which they never digged, and fields of Corn which they never sowed; then they ought nearly and narrowly to look unto themselves. And why then, rather then at another time? Because riches and pleasures, abundance and ease, would be such baits, that they should then be in greatest dangers (more then when they lived in the wilderness) to be drawn by them to forget God's mercies, by which they were delivered out of many miseries. They thought they should then be safe enough, if once they were come to set foot in the land; howbeit Moses telleth them, that then remained the greatest danger of all. They must stand in fear lest they be choked with these thorns, lest they be entangled in these snares, lest they suffer ship-wrack at these rocks, lest they be overcome with these temptations, & lest they be drowned in these deep waters, Luk. 8.14. 1 Tim. 6, 9. This is the corruption of our nature, and the poison of sin, it turneth good into evil, as an evil stomach doth the daintiest and best meats. We do commonly abhor him, and speak all manner of evil of him, who having received many benefits and good turns, forgetteth his Patron and benefactor, when once he is advanced and promoted to honor; like Pharaohs Butler, who having received good from Joseph, forgot him when he was restored unto his office, and delivered the cup into the kings hand again; albeit Joseph had said unto him, Gen. 40, 14. Think on me when it shall be well with thee, and show kindness I pray thee unto me, and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house. An unthankful person even unto men, is justly abhorred: how much more then unto God the most bountiful Patron! Common experience teacheth, that commonly men are much worse for God's benefits, and grow more profane and presumptuous in sinning against him through the plenty and abundance of earthly blessings. David we know was none of the worst men, but one of the best according to God's own heart, yet he saith of himself while he enjoyed the world at will, I said in my prosperity I shall never be moved. Psa. 30, 6, And in another place, It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes: Before I was afflicted, I went astray, but now have I kept thy word, Psal. 119, 67, 71. And therefore his benefits did him not so much good as his chastisements, they did not further his salvation so much as his corrections. Jeremiah speaketh of the church under the name of Ephraim, that it was as an untamed Calf, till God chastened it. Manasseh learned more at Babylon, then at Jerusalem; as he lay in prison, then as he sate upon his throne: for in peace & prosperity he fell to Idolatry, to sorcery, to cruelty, and to all kind of impiety; but when he was carried away captive, he besought the Lord his God, who never thought he stood in need of him before; He humbled himself greatly before the Lord God of his father, who despised him before in the pride of his heart; and he prayed unto God earnestly, who never prayed unto him before. The blessings of God indeed ought to unite us more closely and conscionably unto him: howbeit it is a rare thing to find, that benefits knit our hearts more nearly unto GOD. Shew me that man among a thousand that can truly say, the benefits of God have made him sounder in the faith, and better in his obedience, until he have been taught and trained up in the school of affliction, and tried in the furnace of adversity. God hath two school-houses in which he doth instruct his scholars: the first is the school of prosperity: there he speaketh to us, but we are deaf and cannot hear; there he teacheth, but we are dull and cannot learn. We are non-proficiency though we tarry long in this school; not through any default either in the master, or in the lesson, or in the school, but through defect in the scholar only. He is constrained therefore to put us into his other school, this is the school of affliction, many profit here that could not profit before. For the heart of man is naturally puffed up with prosperity, so y^t it cannot work in him the performance of greater duty and sounder obedience, as it ought to do. Ther are ten lepers in the Gospel, cleansed of a foul and filthy disease; but when once they saw they were cured & recovered, they forgot who had cleansed them, how they were cleansed, of what they were cleansed, and wherefore they were cleansed; only one of them was found to return and give God thanks. When Christ had found the impotent man y^t had lien 38. years at the pool of Bethesda, he saw it was needful to put him in mind, to take heed he sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon him: for he knew he was ready to forget what he had been, & how great things he had done for him, and to please himself in the present condition wherein he was made whole, & therefore would have him consider what he might be in time to come, and fear a future relaps into y^e same, nay into greater evils. He to whom 10000. talents were remitted, shown not mercy again for y^e mercy that he had received: this was all the fruit of his thankfulness that he yielded, He caught his fellow-servant by the throat, who owed him only an hundred pence, bidding him presently to tender payment. Iehoash the King of Judah was preserved by Jehoiada, and set in the kingdom y^t had been usurped by the tyranny of Athalia, and through the massacre of the blood-royal; yet this was all the thankfulness that he shown for the Fathers kindness, he slew his son because he reproveth their Idolatry and Apostasy, and so he remembered not the benefit of life & kingdom, and education that he had received, without which, he had not lived, nor reigned, nor received the knowledge of the truth. Seeing then, we are so prone of our selves to forget what y^e Lord hath done for us, and to return him the praise, we must be watchful over our corruptions, remembering what God hath done for us.

Secondly, it reproveth all idle and negligent teachers, who have received many good gifts [Use 2] & graces profitable for the Church of God, & yet never use them, like the covetous person y^t hoordeth up great treasures, but suffereth no man to be the better for them: like the sluggish servant in the Parable, who hid his masters money in the earth, but would not employ it: or like unto those that cover the Candle under a bushel, that it can give no light unto ••em that are in the house, whereas it should be set upon the table, that all might have the use of it, and benefit by it. Wherefore hath God given greater gifts, but that such should take greater pains? How many are there that desire great livings, but they do not desire to bestow great labor among them? Our reward shall not be according to our gifts, but according to our labors. For as many may have great gifts, and yet bestow little labor, so they may have great gifts, and yet have little or rather no reward, except it be for their negligence. Certainly there are many that are rich in gifts, who notwithstanding have but a poor people; for they keep all knowledge to themselves, and impart nothing to others. Such carry the bag with Judas, but betray good Christians for thirty shekels of silver. They regard not what become of God's people, so that they may enrich themselves, who cause the people of God to perish, and themselves perish through Balaam's wages that sticketh unto them. They are dumb dogs that never have enough: they cannot bark, they run after their own gain. They neither enter into the kingdom of Heaven themselves, neither suffer them that would enter. It is a great sin for any to hide their gifts. We must be as John the Baptist, he was a burning and a shining lamp, and the people were willing for a season to rejoice in his light. So the Apostles were made the lights of the world; and they made their lights shine before men: For God that caused the light to shine out of darkness, shined into their hearts, to enable them to give the light of knowledge unto others, 2 Cor. 4, 6. The Ministers are the salt of y^e earth, to season the hearts of men.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it reproveth idle professors that will do nothing, like Demas and the rich glutton, that feed themselves, & enrich their own coffers, but will do no good, either in the maintaining of God's service, or toward the relieving of the wants & distresses of others. Such are as c••tous Nabal, that would let David being in necessity to have nothing: or like to Laban, that grudged y^t Jacob should have anything. These do no good but to themselves, if to themselves. What account will these give of their stewardship, who forget that they are stewards? It had been better they had never received any blessings, then to make none y^e better for them, no not themselves. The earth that is full of Mines of gold, is barren to bring forth anything else, as grass, and corn, and trees, and herbs for the use of man: so the wretched soul that thirsteth after silver and gold, & busieth it self day and night to heap up riches, cannot bring forth any other fruit, neither do any service to God, or to the commonwealth, or to the church, or to himself. Covetousness is the root of all evil, and therefore it is extreme folly to delight so much in it. He that is to ascend to the top of an exceeding high Mountain, should do marvelous foolishly, if he should bind heavy burdens on his shoulders, and tie bolts and fetters to his feet, because whatsoever he shall pretend, he maketh it manifest, that he never meaneth to mount up to y^e top thereof: so likewise we being called to dwell in the holy hill of the Lord, and to seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of his father, if we clog and cloy our selves with so many impediments, & lade our selves with so many burdens of earthly cogitations and practices, we show plainly that our conversation is not in heaven, and that we regard not to ascend up to that place. Rich men therefore that have received this worlds goods, and yet will do no good with their goods, are worthily to be reprov'd, because they have received much, and are thereby enabled to do much good, & yet will perform nothing at all. Rich men without religion & knowledge of God, without love of his service, and conscience of holy •••s, have much to answer for themselves. They have a thousād times more means to do good then the poor have, yet they do less: their hands are tied, their ears are stopped, their eyes are closed, their hearts are hardened. They might make to themselves Friends of the Mammon of unrighteousness, that whē they fail, they may receive them into everlasting habitations: but they regard no such friends, they make more account of their fading Mammon, then they do of those everlasting habitations. They have more time and leisure to spend in reading the Scriptures, and in getting of knowledge, then the meaner sort who are much distracted to provide for their families; & yet commonly they bestow least time that way, and for the most part have less understanding in the best things. The Apostle denounceth a woe against such unconscionable and irreligious men, that heap up treasure together for the last days, that live in pleasure upon the earth, that grow wanton, & nourish their hearts as in a day of slaughter. Let all such at the length remember what they have received, let them learn to be rich in good works, to do good, to be ready to distribute and to be willing to communicate, laying up in store a good foundation for themselves against the time to come, y^t they may lay hold on eternal life. And touching the use of their outward blessings, and the employing of thē to the right end, let them remember the words of Christ, Luke 11, 41. Give alms of such things as you have, and behold all things are clean unto you.

Lastly, seeing such as have received outward blessings, ought to be most forward to [Use 4] do good with them, we must know y^t thus also it ought to be in spiritual blessings. If we must be faithful in that which is the least, we must much more be faithful in the greatest: and if we be unjust in little, we will be unjust also in much. God hath in great mercy given us many means to abound in heavenly graces, so that concerning the time we might have been such as might be sufficient to be teachers of others; yet we have need that one should teach us the first principles of the Oracles of God, and have need of milk rather than of strong meat, Heb. 5.12. being altogether babes and unskillful in the word of righteousness, not having our senses exercised to be able to discern between good and evil. They therefore are in a woeful and wretched estate, that have long lived under the preaching of the word, the means of regeneration in this life, and of salvation in the life to come, and yet are more ignorant, faithless, fruitless, disobedient and profane, then such as have had no such means, nor lived where the sound of the Gospel hath been so plentifully heard. Hence it is, that Christ denounceth fearful woes against Bethsaida, Corazin, and Capernaum, where he had preached many Sermons, and wrought many miracles, he threateneth to cast them down to destruction, and telleth them that it should be easier for Sodom and Gomorrhah in the day of judgment, then for them, Matth. 11.24. The Sodomites had an heavy punishment in this life to be destroyed with fire and brimstone from heaven, and to taste of a more heavy judgment of fire and brimstone that burneth in hell; and yet those unthankfull cities that brought not forth the fruits of the Gospel shall have sorer judgment for their disobedience at the day of judgment, when the Judge of all the world shall appear to judge the quick and the dead. If a man after he have received some benefit from another, shall presently fly in his face and offer him open wrong and injury, it is certain that y^e injury & indignity is much more grievous then if he had received no benefit of him at all: so when a sinner hath received great and singular benefits from God, his sin is made the greater by offending him. What blessing is greater then the word, when the kingdom of heaven is offered and opened unto us? and what sin can be so great as to reject it, and to account our selves unworthy of eternal life? Let us therefore take heed how we use his gifts, and endeavor to profit by the means that he affordeth us for our salvation, lest it go worse with us, then with the Turks and Infidels. For except our righteousness exceed others, certainly our punishment shall be greater then theirs: and then it had been better for us that we had never heard the preaching of the Gospel, then having heard it, proudly and presumptuously to reject it.

18 On the second day Nethaniel the son of Zuar Prince of Issachar, did offer•.

19 He offered for his offering one silver, &c.

In these words, as also before, and in the words following, we see what is offered, to wit, silver and gold, they spare nothing, they are no niggards, they bring the best things that they have. Neither do they bring the best in a sparing manner, but they deal bountifully and liberally. The doctrine [Doctrine.] offered & the duty required from hence, is this, We must serve God with the chiefest and choicest things we have, and employ the best things that are fit for his service, and that in a large and liberal manner, according to our several places, persons, callings, conditions, and abilities. We read that to further the building and furnishing of the Tabernacle, men and women as many as were willing-hearted, brought bracelets, earrings, rings, and tablets, precious stones and jewels of gold; every man that offered, did offer an offering of gold unto the Lord, no man came empty. So did the Rulers & Princes: yea they were so forward, that the workmen complained that the people brought too much for the service of the work which the Lord commanded them to make. How far are we from this in our days? may we say of our times, The people bring much more then enough for the work of the Lord? Oh that we might come but one degree behind them; that it might be said, our people bring enough? But we cannot truly testify so much. The Israelites thought they never brought enough, we think we never bring too little. They offered more than they were commanded, we bring no more than we are compelled & constrained to bring. They brought willingly, we give grudgingly. They offered with a glad and cheerful heart, we will do no more than Law urgeth, or not so much. They brought of the best, we think the worst good enough for God and his worship and his Ministers. The Prophet Malachi, crieth out against this sin, chap. 1.14. Cursed be the deceiver which hath in his flock a male, and voweth and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing: for I am a great king, saith the Lord of hosts, and my Name is dreadful among the heathen. The Spirit of God commendeth Araunah for his forwardness & bountifulness in God's service, Let the king take and offer what seemeth him good to the Lord; behold here are oxen for burnt sacrifice and threshing instruments of the oxen for wood: all these as a king he gave unto the king. This also appeareth notably in Solomon, touching the building of the Temple, The king & all Israel offered sacrifice with him, 22000. oxen, & 122000. sheep at the dedication of the house of the Lord. The like we see in Hezekiah: and if we go no farther than to Abel in the beginning of y^e world, he shown forth the practice of this duty, for he brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof unto the Lord, and if he had had a better thing to bring, no doubt he would have brought it. So that this hath been the practice always of the best sort, to offer in the best manner the best they have, unto the best, that is, to the Lord himself.

[Reason 1] This they did that God might evermore dwell among them according to his promise, Exod. 25.3, 4, 6, 8. A great judgment it is to have him leave us and depart from us. Nothing driveth him away sooner and causeth him to deny his presence, then our dealing deceitfully with him. Secondly, if we give not to God of the best, the worst sort shall rise up in judgment and condemn us, the very idolaters that worship the works of their own hands, and turn the truth of God into a lie, shall go before us into the kingdom of heaven: they think nothing too much, they are content to spoil themselves that they may adorn their idols, Exod. 32.2, 3. The Israelites desiring to have an image of God to go before them, were content to break off the golden ear-rings which were in the ears of their wives, and of their sons, and of their daughters. So is it with the Papists, they account nothing too dear and precious which they are not ready to bestow upon their images and such like will-worship. Thirdly, no man should repine to give unto God his own; the best things we have, whose are they by right but his? to whom therefore ought they of right to be returned, and in whose service should they be employed but in his who is Lord of all things? So then we must know that we have God's gifts which must be disposed by us, as David saith, Both riches and honor come of thee, in thine hand it is to make rich and great: and afterward he confesseth, that albeit they had offered much, yet all things came of him, and that they had given unto him nothing but of his own. We must all then consider that whatsoever we give to the maintenance of his worship, we do not give so much that which is our own, as that which is his. Cyrus an heathen king acknowledged that it was the Lord God of heaven had given him all the kingdoms of the earth, and that he had charged [Use 1] him to build him an house at Jerusalem.

This reproveth such as bring the worst to God, & yet think the same too good for him. Hence it is that Malachi saith, If ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and sick, is it not evil? offer it now unto thy governor, will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person, saith the Lord of hosts? Many there are of this sort, I will only touch two. First, such as dedicate to the best service the worst servants: such as choose those to be Seers and overseers of the house of God, which are stark blind, or at least lack their right eye. Such as have not knowledge and yet have a calling to teach knowledge, God rejecteth that they shall be no Priests unto him. God would be served, as we have heard before in this book, with the choicest flower of all the people, with the first borne the best is bad enough for him, for who is sufficient for these things? Give not to him therefore the worst. These are blind guides, and unsavory salt, fitter for the dunghill, then to be dedicated to the service of the most High.

Again, it taxeth those that would be thought to serve God aright, and not to offer him the lame and sickely, and yet they halt before him, they will not serve him with the chiefest thing, nor glorify him with the best member that they have. If we draw near to him with our mouths, and honor him with our lips only, but keep our hearts from him, what do we but worship him in vain, and withhold our best treasure from him? Hypocriticall service is a blind and lame service, it halteth with one foot: we keep from God the chiefest, and divide our selves between him and the world. It is impossible y^t with one of the eyes we should look down to the earth, and at the same time look up to heaven with the other: so it is impossible that we should love God, and withal love those things that are quite contrary unto God. The Samaritans were rejected and separated from the people of God, because they worshipped God and did cleave also to the gods of the Assyrians, 2 King. 17.41. No man, saith Christ, can serve two masters. The hypocrite is like to a Tavern with a bush without at the door, when there is no wine within in the Cellar: or like the gold of y^e Alchemists, w^c appears beautiful outwardly, but will not bear the touch. He is like to rotten wood that shineth bright in a dark night, but hath no true light in it; or to a Painter that beginneth to paint the face & outward feature, but never regardeth what the inward parts be. There is no painting will serve our turn when we come to appear before the Lord, we must bring him the best and offer him the chiefest gift, that we may say with the Prophet, Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me bless his holy Name. The wise man exhorteth us to look to the heart, and to keep it with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life. If the fountain of water be muddy & miry, it is quickly troubled and made unserviceable: If the root of the tree be rotten, it is sooner turned with wind and weather: so the heart of man if it be corrupt, it soon defileth and polluteth all other things that proceed from it. Halt not therefore with him that can abide no halting, but walk with an upright foot, and offer up all to him of whom we have received all.

Secondly, from offering to God the best [Use 2] things we have to further his worship, we may conclude, that the maintenance of y^e Min•stery should be very sufficient, that so they which preach y^e Gospel might live of the Gospel. And as they do not sow sparingly, so doubtless they ought not to reap sparingly. I plead not the cause of those that are negligent & slothful, that feed themselves but not the flock: but such as open their mouths & spend their strength to feed the souls of others, deserve to have liberal maintenance for their own bodies: and as th^{••} dispence spiritual things, it is no great thing if they receive carnal things.

The heathen men, the idolatrous Egyptians provided liberally for their Priests in the seven years of famine, and would not suffer them to alienate their lands from the use to which they were consecrated, no not in the general alienation of other men. God loveth a cheerful giver, when the gift is given unto men, much more in duties performed unto God would he have us cheerful, forward, and bountiful. There is no calling more honorable in many respects under the heaven then y^e Ministry. I am not ignorant that it is much disgraced, nevertheless it is a great grace to be set in it. The Apostle showeth, y^t by Christ Jesus declared mightily to be the Son of God through the resurrection from the dead, he had received grace and Apostleship. And although some by grace understand the grace of reconciliation and atonement with God, & others refer it to such gifts as did fit him for the function of his Apostleship: yet I rather take it by a Grammatical figure called Hendiadis, to signify the grace of Apostleship, or the favor and free gift of God to be an Apostle. So then, it noteth out the nature and fountain of his Apostleship, and showeth that to be in the Ministry is not any disgrace, but a special grace of God, if we believe the Spirit of God speaking in the Scriptures. Hence it is, that he giveth thanks to Christ Jesus our Lord, for that he counted him faithful, putting him into the Ministry, & enabling him to discharge the same. And this honor farther appeareth, as well by the special gifts given to thē above the rest of the people, as also by the reward & recompense, even a greater measure of glory after a faithful discharge of the duty, when the great Shepherd of the sheep shall appear in glory. It is not therefore to be maruelled at, that Paul everywhere magnifieth the grace of God, who had chosen him to be a master-builder in his house, to lay y^e foundation thereof, more precious then the gold of Opⁱir, or then silver tried in a furnace of earth purified seven times. Now if the calling be in it self honorable, ought it not then to be honored? and how shall it be honored, if they that be in the calling be not maintained? and what should their maintenance be, but as it may be agreeable to their place they hold? And if the maintenance must hold correspondence with the honor of the Ministry, we doubt not to affirm and avouch, that the recompense of the labors of such as are painful and faithful in this calling, ought to be very bountiful and liberal. Our Savior saith of this calling, He that heareth you, heareth me, and he that despiseth you, despiseth me: and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me. He hath committed unto them the keys of the kingdom of heaven. Tel me, if thou were desirous to see one of the kings houses glistening with much gold, and shining with pearls and precious stones, and at length shouldest find one that carried the keys, who being entreated should forthwith unlock the doors, and bring thee even into the kings privy chamber, wouldest thou not make much of him, and honor him above others? The Ministers of God are they y^t keep the keys of the gates of heaven, they have power from Christ and under Christ to open the doors, ought we not therefore to love thē, to reverence them, to honor them? This made the Thessalonians receive y^e Apostles doctrine, not as the word of man, but as the word of God; and he beareth the Galatians witness, that if it had been possible, they would have plucked out their own eyes, and have given them to him. Our Savior telleth his Apostles, that whatsoever they shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever they shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven. Did not Pilate think himself advanced to great honor, y^t he could say, Knowest thou not, that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee? If a Prince should impart to any of his subjects this authority, that as high

Marshall he should have power to put in prison whomsoever he would, and again to release them and let them go, he would be thought happy and worthy of honor in all men's judgments. It hath pleased the God of heaven & earth, to bestow a Ministerial power, & to give authority subordinate under his to the preachers of the Gospel, to forgive sins and to retain sins, saying, Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them: and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained. As Elijah by his earnest prayer, did shut the heavens that it could not rain upon the earth, and again, by his prayers opened the windows of heaven, that the earth did drink in the rain and brought forth herbs meet for the use of man: So the Ministers by their earnest preaching, do open the kingdom of heaven to all believers, and do shut the door against all impenitent sinners, and by the power of the Lord Jesus Christ, do commit such to perpetual imprisonment, and do deliver them to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, if haply by this means the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord. This power do the Ministers execute upon earth, which the Angels themselves do not, nor cannot exercise in heaven. To what end have we spoken all this, touching the power and authority of the Ministers? Surely from thence to infer that their maintenance ought to be answerable to their Ministry, and to show that if we withhold from them their due, we withhold from God whose deputies they are, & deny him his right for all the tithe of the land, whether of y^e seed of y^e land, or of the fruit of the tree, is y^e Lord's, it is holy unto the Lord: and consequently we hinder the worship of God, and thereby as much as lieth in us destroy the souls of many thousands, which otherwise might come to repentance, & acknowledging of y^e truth. Remember therefore these two Principles, w^c both join in one, that the tythe of the land is the Lord's, verse 30. and that the tenth shall be wholly unto the Lord, verse 32. As then we do tender the continuance of the worship of God, so we should render to the Minister his due maintenance, that he may receive comfort and encouragement in the work of the Lord, and thereby make it manifest that we are ready to bring to God the best sacrifice we have and so to serve him in the best manner.

Thirdly, acknowledge from hence, that it [Use 3] is our duty to honor God with all our substance and that we can no way so well employ our goods, as when God is honored and glorified by them. The wise man saith, Pro. 3, 9. Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of thine increase. And we heard before, that Abel brought to God of the fattest sheep he had, he offered unto him the best. Gen. 4. he offered a better sacrifice, and also a greater sacrifice than Cain, Heb. 11, 4. He spared for no cost, he brought not the worst he had, or what came first to hand, thinking that whatsoever he brought was good enough for the Lord's service, and to be consumed with fire: but he gave the best he had, and would have given better if he could. Whosoever doth to the uttermost the best he can, doth make it plain he would do better if he could. From this practice of Abel had the Law his foundation, that was afterwards written, y^t nothing which was lean or lame, or maimed, or misshapen, or blind, or any way blemished, should be offered to the Lord. If any ask how this belongeth unto us. I answer, the Ceremony is ended in Christ, howbeit the equity remaineth and bindeth us forever. Now then, if the question be further demanded how this Law reacheth to us, and how we may honor him with our first fruits and riches? I answer, by giving to him the best in every kind that we have. This consisteth in many particular branches, and teacheth us diverse particular duties. First of all, here is offered that to us, which we noted before: to be careful liberally to maintain the Ministry, that they may teach us in the word, otherwise we commit sacrilege against God, and indeed rob our own souls, because if we sow sparingly, we shall reap sparingly. The Prophet Malachi bringeth in the Lord, speaking and charging the people with no less crime then robbery, and against no less person then himself, Will a man rob God? yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, wherein have we robbed thee? In tyths and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse, for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Secondly, it teacheth Parents that are willing to offer to the calling of the Ministry any of their sons, & to serve the Lord in that calling, to offer to him the fittest, not the foulest; the best, not the worst. The best is fittest for the Lord, and doubtless he is most worthy of him. But of this we have spoken at large in the 3. chap. Thirdly, we give to God the best and fattest, when we serve him in our youth, and with all our strength. The young man offereth to God the best thing he hath, when he remembereth his Creator in the days of his youth, while his senses are sharp, his memory quick, his wit ripe, his capacity ready, his understanding deep. But if he say to himself, now I will take my pleasure a while, I will rejoice in my youth, I will walk in the ways of mine own heart, and in the sight of mine eyes, I will repent at the end of my days, & serve the Lord when I can serve the lusts of the flesh, & the pleasures of sin no longer; if (I say) we reason thus, and offer to God our worn and withered old age, when we can serve Satan no more, what do we but offer to God the lame and the blind, which he abhorreth? How far are we from following Abel, who offered the best, forasmuch as we offer the worst of all to God? Fourthly, we must not serve the Lord by halves: we have no other sacrifice to offer but our selves, let us therefore offer up soul & body, and not serve him for company, or for fashions sake, or coldly and negligently, or thorough compulsion and fear of the Law. If we offer no otherwise, our sacrifice and service is no better then the offering of Cain, who was rejected both his person and his oblation. Woe unto such that walk in the way of Cain, that do not season their first fruits that they bring with faith. God will have all that is in us, or nothing. If we do not consecrate our selves wholly to his service, we cannot be his servants. It is given as a special commendation of good King Josiah, that he turned to the Lord with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might, according to the law of Moses; not that he was able to fulfill the whole law without failing in one point, but he did strive with might and main to serve the Lord to the utmost of his ability, and endeavor with heart & life to please him. Lastly, we honor God with our substance when we are merciful in helping the needy with that which is ours. We must not give alms at another man's cost, nor relieve our neighbor by our neighbors goods, but we must honor him with our own substance, not with the substance of others, as covetous persons, users, thieves, & servants do, who give away that is none of their own. Therefore, when God giveth us all things abundantly to use, let it not grieve us to honor the lord with them, and distribute them to the necessities of the Saints cheerfully. The Lord Jesus accounteth it as done to himself which is done unto one of the least of his brethren. Neither let us fear any want our selves, or falling into decay through our bountifulness and liberality, inasmuch as God will make us the more to abound in all things, for he is of power to make us abound in all gifts. The widow that had been the wife to one of the sons of the Prophets, so long as she poured Oil out of the vessel or pot that was her own into the empty vessels, she perceived the oil still to increase; but when she poured out no longer, the oil ceased and stayed. Even so, so long as we shall help the poor with our goods as it were fill the vessels with oil, our riches shall increase & multiply; but if we stay our hand frō giving our store will quickly fail and our fountain dry up. The more commonly you draw water out of a well, the more plenty you shall have; so likewise the more liberal we are toward those that want, the more we shall increase our own weath. Neither let any man delay the time, & promise to give away much when he dieth; for that is to give them away when we can keep them no longer. He that will not give alms till after his death, is like to a man that carrieth a light behind his back. The hour of death is not the fittest time to do good, then we should look to reap the fruit of a well led life: these are like to a simple soldier that prepareth his armor when he should fight, or like the foolish virgins that went to seek oil when they should use it. A ship that leaketh, must be mended in the haven, not in the sea: a wall that is broken must be made up in peace, not in war. If we forget God in our life, how can we look that he should remember us in our death, and when we lie at the last cast? To conclude, seeing we must serve the Lord with the best things that we have, let the people be ready to maintain the Ministry in the best manner, let godly parents give to God their best children, let the young man dedicate to God his best years, let every Christian offer to God his best member, to wit, the heart: let all rich men do the best good they can with their goods, and lay up for themselves a good foundation for the time to come: thus shall the people, and parents, and young men, and rich men, and generally all Christians follow the example of righteous Abel, who offered to God the best sacrifice he had. On the other side, if we maintain the Ministers in the worst manner, if we spend the flower of our age, and the prime of our life in the worst vanities, if we give our best part, I mean the heart, to the worst deserver, that is, the devil, if we employ our riches to the worst uses, we follow the example and offer the sacrifice of Cain, and therefore may justly fear to be rejected with him, and after this life to be rewarded with him.

25 His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bolle of seventy shekels, &c.

Behold here how the other Princes are not inferior to the first that offered, nor the other Tribes to the Tribe of Judah. Observe here, that the spirit of God accounteth it not sufficient to set down what was offered in general, neither in particular what Nahshon the son of Aminadab of the Tribe of Judah offered the first day, or what Nathaniel, the son of Zuar Prince of Issachar offered the second day: but he goeth forward to set down the special offerings according to every man's name, and according to the day assigned unto him. [Object.] It may be demanded what was the cause, why these offerings are thus particularly pointed out? why are the same chargers, the same bolles, the same spoones so often repeated? might not all these things here mentioned have been more summarily concluded? what need more words have been used, when fewer would have served? I answer, [Answer.] we must not account anything idle, frivolous, fruitless, or superfluous in holy Scripture. The Lord knoweth best, what is fittest to be dilated largely, and what to be comprehended shortly. If there were no other reason then this, so it pleased the Lord, it ought to content us and to make us rest in it.

The like example we find, Psal. 136.1, 2, &c. Where, in every verse, and at the recital of every blessing, this reason is repeated, for his mercy endureth forever. Add hereunto, Revel. 7.5, 6, &c. where this is repeated according to the number of the Tribes, that twelve thousand were sealed of them. He might have said briefly, of every tribe were sealed twelve thousand: but he repeateth the words twelve times: so in this place, the offerings are repeated twelve times particularly according to the number of the twelve Princes. The reasons may be, first to teach us to be content to hear the same things, though they be oftentimes repeated, as Phil. 3.1. The Apostle saith, It is not grievous to me to write the same things often, and for you it is safe. We are ready to forget the best things, and therefore must have them continually sounding in our ears, as many strokes given with a hammer, to make us hear. Secondly, that we should apply these examples unto our selves, and if we pass over one of them without regard, yet we should take hold of the next. Thirdly, to teach us that no man shall have that forgotten to the utmost of his praise, who is any way forward in doing good, because he will honor those y^t honor him, but they y^t despise him, shall be lightly esteemed, 1 Sam. 2.30. The doctrine [Doctrine,] from this particular rehearsal and enumeration of the gifts of those Princes, is this, that all the good works of God's children done to the setting forth of his glory to the advancement of his worship, to the maintenance of true Religion, or the good of his children, shall be reckoned up, rewarded and come up in account before him: he taketh notice of them all, and will never forget any one of them. As their deeds are here registered in the book of God, so the doers of them are registered in the book of life. Our Savior teacheth, that a cup of cold water shall not go unrewarded, that is given to drink in y^e name of a disciple to one of these little ones. And afterward it is said. A certain woman came unto him having an alabaster box of ointmēt very precious, and poured it on his head as he sate at table: and because she had wrought a good work upon him, verse 10. he saith, Verily, I sayunto you, wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her, verse 13. To this purpose speaketh the Angel that appeared to Cornelius, Act. 10.4. Thy prayers and thy alms are come up for a memorial before God. So then everything shall be remembered, no one work shall be forgotten.

[Reason 1] For God is a righteous God giving to everyone according to his works. He is the Judge of the world, Gen. 18. and cannot but judge uprightly. Hereupon the Apostle saith, Heb. 6.10. God is not unrighteous to forget your works, and labor of love, which ye have shown toward his Name, in that ye have ministered to the Saints, and do minister. He that receiveth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, shall receive a Prophets reward, for he will reward very bountifully every good work. If we be not barren in good works, he will not be behind with us to recompense us. Secondly, how can they but come into an account, seeing he accounteth them as done to himself? Matth. 25.40. When anything is given to the Saints, it is esteemed as done to the Son himself: and when it is bestowed upon one of the least, it is regarded as bestowed upon the greatest and highest. The servant receiveth it, but the Master will reward it.

[Use 1] Touching the Uses: we may first conclude the happy estate and condition of them that leave this world, and depart this life in the true fear of God, because we hear their works shall be remembered, and therefore the doings of his servants be rewarded with eternal glory, being done in the love of God and of his truth, none of them are forgotten, but they shall follow them, nay go with them, and bear them company. This we read in the Revelations of John, chap. 14.13. I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the spirit, that they rest from their labors, and their works follow them, to wit, at their heels as y^e word importeth. Death cannot cut them off, though it be a cruel and merciless tyrant, and hath as it were a sithe or sickle in his hand to cut down such as come in his way: yea, though it cut off riches, revenues, honors, pleasures, dignities, delights, wife, children, houses, lands, and life it self, according to the saying of the Apostle, We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out with us; yet it cannot cut off good works, neither bereave us of the fruits of a lively faith, which are of such great force and efficacy, that they are able to break in sunder the chains of death and the strength of the grave, and cannot be holden in darkness and oblivion. It were therefore a point of great wisdom and good policy, so many as would willingly die the death of the righteous (as Balaamites and all wicked men will seem desirous to do) to provide a goodly train of good works which death cannot keep back; they will press so fast, and knock so hard at heaven gates, that the gates thereof shall open wide, and our works shall enter with us, because they cannot be forgotten, but shall come up into the presence of God. We see how it fareth with Kings and Princes and great men of this world, they have great trains and troupes of servants, and a goodly retinue that follow their heels in the streets: O how happy are they, if at the hour of death, and the great day of account, when their honors and their pleasures, their riches and their friends, their servants and retainers shall forsake them, and all earthly profits shall fail them, they have as goodly a train of good works to attend and wait upon them. They shall find much more comfort and peace in these, then in all their life they felt in all the other; as the wise virgins found much contentment, in that they had store of oil for their lamps.

Secondly, shall good works come into account [Use 2] with God, and be remembered of him? then on the other side we may conclude, that evil works shall also be remembered. True it is, we are ready to forget the evils y^t we commit, but God will never forget them, no time shall wear them out, they are ever fresh in his sight. Hence it is, that Nehemiah saith, Remember them, O my God, because they have defiled the Priesthood, and the covenant of the Priesthood, &c. And Revel. 16.19. Great Babylon is come in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. He will remember the sins of the wicked and his own judgments. These though they be great in this world, shall not have their honors and dignities to follow them, but their sins shall all follow them. The swearer shall be sure to have his oaths and his blasphemies laid before him, the adulterer his uncleanness, the drunkard his intemperancy, the contemner of God and of his word his profaneness, the covetous person his oppression; they shall accompany them unto judgment, even unto hell, that there they may receive the reward and wages that their works have deserved. It were a great benefit to the ungodly, if they might appear before the judgment seat of God without their evil deeds, and that they could wind themselves out of the company of their sins, which will be their strong accusers, and give in evidence against them: but they cannot by any means, for they follow them and pursue after them with a loud cry for vengeance and punishment, and therefore woe and misery shall befall them that commit them. [Use 3]

Thirdly, we must mark this point, albeit good works be so much regarded, yet we must take heed we give not too much unto them, nor ascribe any merit to attain eternal life by faith, that it might be of grace, Rom. 4.16. it is the gift of God through Jesus Christ, Rom. 6.23. If any of our works should merit, then the works y^t are most glorious and eminent above others, which the holy witnesses of the truth of God wrought, who did suffer for the Name of Christ, and resisted the enemies even unto the blood, should be meritorious. But the Apostle denieth this virtue to them, Rom. 8.18. I reckon that the sufferings of this present time, are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. If any works might deserve salvation, doubtless the works of righteousness: but it is the kindness and love of God toward man that the Apostle magnifieth, who saveth us, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his own mercy, Tit. 3.5. Eph. 2.8, 9. So Paul preacheth, Act. 13.48, 39. that through Christ we have remission of sins, and that by him all that believe, are justified from all things from which they could not be justified by the Law of Moses.

Again, the Lord Jesus himself teacheth us, that when we have done all that possibly we can, we must say we are unprofitable servants, Luk. 17.10. but he that is an unprofitable servant, and doth only what he ought to do, is not in any case of meriting. He that will merit anything at God's hands, must first give him somewhat and so bind him as a debtor unto him: if no man can hinder him anything of his own, who oweth all, even himself to God of whom he hath received all, it is certain that no man can merit anything before him, Rom. 11.35. Who hath first given unto him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? but no man can do so, verse 36. For of him, and through him, and to him are all things, to whom be glory forever, Amen. Now, where is no benefit, there can be no merit, because merit presupposeth a benefit received; howbeit our well-doing extendeth not to God, he can receive no good turn at our hands, 1 Cor. 4.7. Phil. 2.13. Eph. 2.10. When the husbandman bringeth to his Lord, the fruit of his own ground, he meriteth nothing, because he giveth him of his own. Moreover the Scripture teacheth us that temporal benefits and deliverances are not granted and bestowed upon the faithful, for any desert of any their good deeds, Dan. 9.18. much less therefore eternal life. The Israelites had not the nations cast out before them, nor themselves brought in to possess the land for their own righteousness, or for the uprightness of their hearts, but because he had chosen them & set his love toward them. Let us not therefore trust in our own works, which when they are at the best, are imperfect and defiled, but rather (as the very enemies of the grace of God do admonish) in regard of the uncertainty of our own righteousness, and the danger of vain-glory, let us rest wholly (as the safest way) in the only mercy of God. If then this be the surest and safest way, let us all go the safest way, and leave by-paths and dangerous passages unto others. He that walketh safely, walketh surely. There is but only one life, and there is but one right way unto life, namely, Christ, John. 14.6. The way by works is a wrong way, a false way, he shall never come to his journey's end by the way of his works, that is, for y^e merit of his works: because eternal life is never given for them There is no other name under heaven whereby we may be saved, then by the Name of Christ; but if our works deserved life eternal. there should be another name to save us: because the merit of our work is not the Name of Christ, but setteth up our selves in his place, or at the least to join a fellow and companion with him in the work of our redemption. This would minister occasion to us to glory in our own selves before the Lord, as if we were somewhat and could save our selves, but no man hath anything wherein or whereof to boast himself, Ro. 3.27. and 4.2. 1 Cor. 1.31.

Lastly▪ to bring the adversaries of this doctrine once more to plead for us against themselves: They teach that no man can certainly know that he hath true merits without a special revelation; or that he shall persist and persevere in them unto the end: whereupon we infer and conclude, that therefore we may not believe that we shall obtain eternal life for our works sake, for that were to torture and torment men's consciences, & to set them upon the rack; that were, never to give peace to the distressed soul, but to leave it in doubt and perplexity, whereas the Apostle gathereth the quite contrary from the doctrine of justification, Roman. chap. 5.1. Being therefore justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. But from the popish doctrine of justification, we see there followeth no effect of peace, no tranquility or quietness of conscience, because they are taught to stand in doubt of their reconciliation and atonement with God.

Fourthly, this serveth as a great consolation [Use 4] to such as are careful to do good, and to show forth good works, that they shall in time reap if they faint not. This was good Nehemiah assured of, and therefore accordingly he desireth God to remember him, chap. 13 31.14. Remember me, O my God for good: and a little before, Remember me, O my God, concerning this, and wipe not out my good deeds that I have done for the house of my God, and for the offices thereof. And chap. 5.19. having declared his care to relieve the poor and distressed among the Jews, and his own conscience bearing him witness of his sincerity in this behalf, he prayed to God, Think upon me, my God, for good: according to all that I have done for this people. Obadiah had comfort by the works of mercy, shown to the persecuted servants of God, who in the reign of Ahab hid an hundredth of the Lord's Prophets in a cave, and fed them with bread and water: and he had the fruit of it, he was the first to whom glad tidings was offered in the days of famine when heaven was shut up that it yielded no rain, and was made an instrument to publish it to others. No work shall fall to the ground, but come up in remembrance to our comfort. This is as true and certain touching the works of every servant of God, as if the Angel that spake to Cornelius were sent unto him to say unto him, Thy works are come up in remembrance before God. An• as God saith, y^t he keepeth the tears of his children in his bottle: so he keepeth the works of his •ildren in his book. This is, and so it ought to be, a great encouragement to us in well-doing, to consider that the number, the greatness, and the measure of all our good works shall be registered and recorded by him. It is spoken in deed for our capacity, for God needeth no writings of record or books of account: the meaning is, he will never forget our good works, but as certainly remember them, as if he had put them all particularly in writing. Hence it is, that the Lord saith so often to the seven Churches of Asia, to whom he commanded John to write, he knew all their works, nothing was hidden from him, nothing unknown unto him.

[Use 5] Lastly, seeing good works are in so great account with God, it is necessary that we learn what good works are that are pleasing in God's sight, and how they are to be done of us. For there is more required to a good work then the bare deed done. A good work is a duty commanded of God, performed by a regenerate person, and done in faith, aiming at the glory of God and the good of man. Whereby we see, that sundry points are required to make a work accepted of God. First of all, the work must have the will of God which is the rule of all goodness and righteousness, to warrant the same, that so we may do them in an holy obedience unto him. For except he appoint them, he doth not approve them: and unless he command them, he doth never commend them. Will-worship is abominable to God and everywhere rejected, when men thrust upon God their own inventions instead of his service, Col. 2.22.23. Deut. 12.32 Every good work is commanded in the word either expressly, or generally. God is in vain worshipped, when for doctrines, the commandments of men are taught and observed. This reproveth the Romish Religion, maintaining •^t a man may do good works which are never required or appointed of God; and likewise the blind devotion and superstition of the people, that if they in their worship have a good intent and think no man no harm, they do a good work.

Secondly, good works must be done by a regenerate person, that is in the state of grace, that is a member of Christ, and borne again by the holy Ghost. If we be not reconciled to God in Christ, & made acceptable through him, we are as evil trees that cannot bring forth good fruit: whereas no man can gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles, Matth. 7.16. The person must please God, before anything that cometh from him can please him: for he had respect to Abel, and then to his offering: but not to Cain, and therefore not unto his offering. Hence, fall to the ground the works of Turks and Infidels, and mere civil men, who often abstain from outward sins, live orderly among men, and do works of mercy, justice, & liberality; yet in them they are not good, because they proceed from a corrupt heart. The like we may say of the works of all unregenerate persons, be they never so beautiful in the eyes of the world, they are but beautiful sins in the sight of God, whether they eat, or drink, or walk, sleep, or buy or sell, or come to Church, or hear the word, or pray, or receive the Sacraments, the rule of the Apostle standeth forever, Unto them that are defiled and unbelieving, is nothing pure, but even their mind and conscience is defiled, Tit. 1.15.

Thirdly, good works must be done in faith: because whatsoever is not of faith, is sin, Rom. 14.23. and without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11.6. Now there is required in a man, a twofold persuasion, first, an assurance that God hath willed and commanded it to be done; for he that giveth alms, and yet doubteth whether God would have him to give alms, sinneth: Secondly, a persuasion in his own conscience of his reconciliation to God in Christ. This is justifying faith, which purifieth the heart, and doth fit and enable it to bring forth a good work. There is a double use of this gift: it maketh us to begin the work well, and when it is once done, it serveth as a cloak or garment to cover the defects and imperfections of it, applying the merits of Christ. The last point required to make a good work, is, that it be done to God's glory. 1. Cor. 10.31. If we have any other by-respects, aiming at our own glory, or the applause of the world, or the satisfying of God's justice, or the merit of eternal life, or any such corrupt and crooked ends, we lose all our labor, our works cannot come up in account before him. It is the common and corrupt judgment of the common sort that Papists abound in good works, but let us try them by these rules, we shall quickly and easily find them what they are, failing in the matter, and manner, and in the main and principal end of well-doing. Now to conclude, everyone must do these good works, everyone must be as a tree planted in the garden of God, and bring forth the fruits of righteousness, that he may be glorified, Isaiah 61.3. It is a received opinion among many, that none can do good works but rich men, as if there were no good works but alms; for they have no taste in anything else but that which is given them. Thus do the poor cast off all doing of good works from themselves upon the richer sort, that so they may receive somewhat. True it is, alms are one good work, but yet not the only good work, nor yet the chief and principal. For the poor may do good works, nay must do them as well as the rich. The works of the first Table, are the best works, the greatest works: these they may do, as well as others. To have a care to know God, to believe in him, to love him above all, to fear him, to hope in him, to stay our selves upon him, to approve our selves in his sight, to worship him with the heart, to confess him with the mouth, to pray unto him earnestly, to hear his word attentively, to receive the Sacraments reverently, and such like divine and devout exercises, are all of them good works, great works, gracious works, approved of God: and these may the poor perform. And that the Scripture avoucheth, and God alloweth these for good works, appeareth in the example of Abraham, mentioned by the Apostle James. chap, 2.21. Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he offered Isaac his son upon the altar? He shown himself to be a justified man by his good works, and was called the friend of God. Thus did his faith work together with his works. But what were his good works? were they his alms-deeds, and showing mercy to the poor? no, he performed a good duty to God, and preferred his love to him before his love to his son, his only son, even Isaac whom he loved, the son of promise, the son in whom the nations of the world should be blessed. Thus must all men do good works, thus the poorest sort are not exempted or privileged from showing forth these good works, and testifying their faith by these fruits. So then when we hear of the necessity, of the dignity and value of good works, let no man think it belongeth nothing to him, but every man be encouraged to set upon the doing of them, y^t our light may so shine before men, that they seeing our good works may glorify our Father which is in heaven.

84 This was the dedication of the altar (in the day when it was anointed) by the Princes of Israel: twelve chargers of silver, twelve silver bolles, twelve spoones of gold:

85 Each charger of silver, &c.

We shall not need to stand to speak particularly of every Princes offering: because, as we noted before, the same things are repeated, the offerings are the same, the matter is the same, the form and ende the same, the price and value the same: the difference standeth only in a description of the time, when they were offered: and of the person who offered, described by his name, by his father, and by his tribe. Now, in casting up the value of all these offerings, and setting down the total sum, appeareth the greatness of their riches. For had they not been much blessed that way, they could not have continued to bestow so bountifully upon the Tabernacle. These they attained unto, partly by their own labor, and partly by entering into the labors of others. For at their departure out of the land of Egypt, they borrowed jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment, at what time no doubt they carried with them the chief wealth and treasure of Egypt, & spoiled the Egyptians, which God gave to his people as a recompense of all their troubles. The doctrine [Doctrine.] from hence ariseth to be this, that the blessings of this life are oftentimes bestowed upon God's children. He giveth them riches, honors, dignities, preferments, house, land, peace, and prosperity, at his own pleasure. We have the examples of Abraham & Lot, their substance was so greatly increased, that they could not dwell together, the herdmen of their cattle strove and contended one against another, Gen. 13.7. and Abraham's servant sent to take a wife for Isaac, telleth that the Lord had blessed his master greatly, and had given him flocks and herds, and silver and gold, & men servants and maid-servants, and Camels and Asses, Gen. 24, 35. Job was a just and an upright man, one that feared God, and eschewed evil, and this man was the greatest of all the men of the East, cha. 1.1, 2.3. and 31 24, 25. his wealth was great, and his hand had gotten much. The like we might say of many godly kings, as of David, Solomon, Hezekiah, Jehoshaphat, Josiah, of Mordecai, and Ester, of Joseph, and of Jacob. And in the New Testament, mention is made of Ioanna, the wife of Chuza, Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others, who ministered unto Christ of their substance, Luk. 8.3. Of Lazarus the friend of Christ, and Mary, who entertained him often in her house, Luk. 10.38. Of Joseph of Arimathea, a rich man, Matth. 27.57. an honorable counselor, Mar. 15.43. he was a good man and aiust, Luk. 23.50. which also waited for the kingdom of God; Of Onesiphorus, who often refreshed Paul, & was not ashamed of his chain, 2 Tim. 1.16. and many other of all estates, some rich, some noble, some wise, some mighty and of great account, 1 Cor. 1.26.

For hereby the Lord showeth what he can [Reason 1] do so often as it pleaseth him to bestow them True it is, sometimes he denieth even to those that are most highly in his favor, these outward and earthly blessings: howbeit it is not because he is not able to enrich them. For as Moses prayeth the Lord to spare his people, lest the enemies should say, he destroyed them in the wilderness, because he was not able to bring them into the land of promise: so he bestoweth many times wealth and substance upon his children lest the enemies should say, it was because he is not able to increase and enrich them. Thus then by giving unto a few, he showeth that he can store and replenish all the rest if it pleased him.

Secondly, to relieve his own servants in time of need, to deliver their soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine, Psal. 33.19. He knoweth well enough that the very mercies of the wicked are cruelty, Prov. 12.10. they are handfasted and hard-hearted, and they are least of all moved to pity God's people: he therefore provideth for the welfare of his servants, by making one Christian brother able to relieve another, as we have plentiful examples in the acts of the Apostles, chap. 4.34, 35, 36.

Thirdly, he maketh them many times to inherit the labors of wicked men, and of such as are their enemies, as we see his people had the treasures of Egypt, Exod. 12. Psal. 44.3. The Egyptians would not recompense them, therefore the Lord doth recompense them.

Fourthly, they are in Christ heirs of the world: for all that are sons are also heirs, Rom. 8.17. the heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ. Hence it is, that some recover their possession though all cannot according to their right and title. God made all things for his friends, not for his enemies, who are no better then usurpers.

[Use 1] The Uses follow. First, it reproveth the beggarly vow of voluntary poverty undertaken by the Popish Order. No such vow is found in the Old Testament, whiles vows were most in use and in force. This is accounted a vow of perfection, but it hindereth the doing of much good: because it is better to give then to receive, Act. 20.35. Wherefore, the begging Friars are boasting fools, proudly glorying in perfection, when they may worthily be ashamed of their imperfections. They think they deserve heaven by it, when indeed they are in danger of hell. For it is one thing to have riches, and another, to trust in riches: whereas they will seem to cast them away, under a color of fear, lest they should cast them away. But may any among them compare with sundry of God's servants, who kept their goods, and did much good with them, to God's glory and the good of others? may they, even the best of them parallel themselves with Abraham in faith, with Job in patience, with Joseph in chastity, with Lot in piety, with Lazarus in hospitality, with Zacchaeus in liberality, with the godly women in charity, whatsoever they pretend to the contrary? And as riches given by the blessing of God, condemn no man: so it is certain, poverty can save no man, neither can it merit life and salvation, as the cloystermen dream.

[Use 2] Secondly, observe that riches are not evil of themselves or in their own nature: neither are they any way hinderers of God's kingdom, the fault is in the person and in the abuse of them. And the best things are abused as well as riches, yet we may not thereupon conclude that the best things are bad. But it will be objected, [Object.] that Christ saith, It is hard for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God, even easier for a Camel to go through the, &c. I answer, [Answer.] we must compare Scripture by Scripture, as it is said, the Levites did expound the meaning and gave the understanding by the Scripture it self. The Evangelist Mark repeating this history, expoundeth it plainly. For Christ having said, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of GOD, and the disciples being astonied at his words, he addeth by way of explication, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches, to enter into the kingdom of God! then this followeth, It is easier for a Camel, &c. where we see he distinguisheth of rich, some are such as trust in God, not in their riches; some trust in their riches, not in GOD. Of these that make their riches their God, and their Mammon to be their hope and heaven, it is true that a Camel shall sooner go through the eye of a needle, then such rich men get into the kingdom of God, Mar. 10.23, 24. But they are thorns and snares: thorns to choke, [Objection] and snares to catch and entangle the soul: so they are called in the parable of the sower, Luke 8. and by the Apostle, 1 Tim. 6. I answer, [Answ.] It is true, but the fault is not in the nature of the riches, but in the corruption of the rich man: not by the use, but through the abuse of them. For if they were evil of themselves, then should all rich men be choked and snared by them, & drawn into evil; which by the former examples, and by present experience we know not be so. [Object.] But Christ willeth the rich man to sell the things he did possess, and give them to the poor: by this it should appear to be unlawful to keep them. I answer, [Answer.] this is a particular commandment given to him to try him and prove what was in him, to discover his pride and hypocrisy, pleasing himself in a false opinion of his strength, sufficiency, and ability to keep the Law, that so, if it were possible, his eyes might be opened to see his own weakness, and himself to be wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. For in that he went away sorrowful, and submitted not himself to the voice of Christ, he declared plainly that he made more reckoning of his wealth than he did of Christ; and that he had more mind to follow the world, than to obey the word delivered unto him.

Thirdly, we must learn, when we have [Use 3] these blessings, to be thankful to God that gave them, and to lift up our eyes to him of whom we received them. For albeit these earthly blessings be common to the godly and the ungodly, yet are they not common to all the godly, inasmuch as they are given unto some, but denied unto other: bestowed upon a few, but withholden from many. This duty hath many branches.

First we must acknowledge from whence they come, and that we have received them of his mere grace. Woe then to those that sacrifice to their own net, and ascribe the blessings of God only to their own labor and industry. For except the Lord build the house, the labor of the builder is in vain, and except the Lord keep the City, the watchman waketh in vain: it is in vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, and to eat the bread of sorrows, it is God that giveth his beloved sleep, Psal. 127.1.2. True it is, God hath laid upon us this duty to labor, and requireth that every man eat his bread with the sweat of his brows; for no promise is made to the idle: yet we must depend upon him for a blessing upon our labors, or else we are not thankful unto him. Again, we must be careful to use them to his glory and to the good of others. We must refer them to him, as we have received them of him. As all rivers run into the sea, so all our riches should return to God. Thirdly, we must be ready and willing to leave them, whensoever God shall call for them. For he that bestowed them, may he not require them again when he pleaseth? we must leave them rather than leave him. If we have this godly resolution, then may we persuade our own hearts that we are thankful for them. Thus it was with Job, when he could say, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the Name of the Lord. Fourthly, we must not put our trust and confidence in them, and if riches increase, we must not set our hearts upon them: because then we commit gross idolatry with them. This is a fearful sin. Many such idolaters (it is to be feared) remain still in great store among us: and albeit idols be banished out of our Churches, yet many do yet set them up in their hearts. This idolatry is so much the more dangerous, because it is more close and secret, coloured under the name of virtue, practiced by such as detest popery and idolatry, and therefore is less perceived and discerned. Lastly, we must not account these the chiefest riches or the best treasures, inasmuch as the ungodly have commonly the greatest share of them, Luke 12. and 16. and therefore we must labor to be rich in faith, in love, in righteousness, in godliness, in patience, in meekness, and in all good works. Here is true riches: if we adorn our selves with these, we shall be truly rich although we be poor, Revel. 2.9. and though we have neither silver nor gold, Acts 3.6. yet he hath given us all things, 2 Pet. 1.3. And though we have nothing at all, yet we possess all things, 2 Cor. 6.10.

89 And when Moses was gone into the Tabernacle of the Congregation to speak with him, then he heard the voice of one speaking unto him, from off the mercy seat, &c.

Hitherto of the offerings of the Princes, received of Moses, and given to the Levites. Two tribes offered one wagon, and every wagon had two oxen, therefore they offered six wagons, and to draw them twelve oxen These were thus distributed: the Gershonites had two wagons, and consequently four oxen committed to them: the Meratites had four wagons, and consequently eight oxen so that they carried the greatest burdens. Touching the Kohathites, the third family of the Levites, nothing was bestowed among them, because to them were committed the vessels of the Sanctuary which were carried upon their shoulders, so that they had no need either of wagons to bear them, or of oxen to draw them, themselves serving instead of them both. In this verse we see the oracle of God speaking to Moses We might note here that God spake diverse ways to his Church in the Old Testament: as also that all blessings come from God to us through Christ the true propitiatory, covering our sins out of God's sight and revealing God's will to us, that we should know it, and have benefit by his Priesthood. But to pass over these, we may note that Moses went into y^e Tabernacle. The Tabernacle signifieth his Church. There is God to be spoken unto. The doctrine [Doctrine,] is this; God is present in a special manner in places set apart for his worship. True it is, he is everywhere, the heaven is his throne, and the earth is his footstool; howbeit wheresoever his Church and people are assembled, he is present with his Spirit, with his grace, and with his blessing and assistance. Hence it is, that the place appointed for his service is called his face, Gen. 4.14. This is afterward called, the presence of the Lord, verse. 16. So Psal. 46.5. God is said to be in the middes of the City of God; And Christ teacheth, that wheresoever two or three are gathred together in his name, he is in the middes of them, Matth. 18.20. So then wheresoever the place of God's worship is, there is God ever present.

For first, he hath promised to dwell there: [Reason 1] Where dwelleth the master of the house, and where is he readiest to be found, but where he dwelleth? as Psal. 132.13.14. The Lord hath chosen Zion, he hath desired it for his habitation: this is my rest forever, here will I dwell, for I have desired it. Secondly, he is known by a special work of his presence sanctifying [Reason 2] those that are his by his word: hereupon the Prophet saith, Psal. 87.2, 3. The Lord loveth the gates of Zion, more then all the dwellings of Jacob; glorious things are spoken of thee, O City of God. Thirdly, he delighteth in his own ordinances. [Reason 3] In Judah is God known, his Name is great in Israel: in Salem also is his Tabernacle, and his dwelling place in Zion, Psal. 76.1.2. It is God's ordinance that we should meet together in one place; for this cause he commanded the Tabernacle to be built, and afterward the Temple: these he sanctified for the word, for sacrifices, and for prayer: these doth the Lord love, and in those doth he take pleasure, and with them will he vouchsafe his presence.

This being an evident truth, from hence we must learn so to carry our selves in such places as are sanctified and set apart for his service, as that we may call him to be a witness of our sincerity. Will a subject dare to behave himself rudely and unreverantly in the presence of his Prince? or the child in the presence of his father? How then ought we to stand in awe of the Majesty of Almighty God, whose glory is incomprehensible, who dwelleth in light that none can attain unto? Heerepon the wise man saith, Eccle. 5.1. Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear, then to give the sacrifice of fools: for they consider not that they do evil. No man ought to come before the Lord unprepared: or to set his feet in the Lord's house rashly and unreverently. Were it not unseemly and uncivil to enter into a kings palace with foul and filthy feet defiled with dung and mire, or to sit down at a Princes table with unwashen hands? And is it not more indecent and undutiful to come into the house of the great King, the King of Kings, and to be partakers of his Table before we have cleansed and sanctified our hearts? This was shadowed out at the giving of the law, by commanding them to wash their garments, and to abstain from their wives, Exod. 19.14, 15. Thus they were to be prepared before they received the Law. Likewise before they could behold the wonderful works of God, they were spoken to, to pull off their shoes, because the place whereon they stood was holy ground. This we should all consider whē we meet together in one place, and carefully remember that the place in which we assemble is holy ground, and therefore we should take heed we do not abuse it. [Object.] But is that ground whereupon Temples or Churches stand more holy then other? I answer, [Answ.] no, it is not in itself, there is no more holiness in it, then in other: but in respect of the assembly therein gathered together, and of the exercises of religion therein performed, it is for that present more holy, and better to be accounted and esteemed then all other places and pieces of ground whatsoever. This made the Prophet say, Psal. 84.10. A day in thy Courts is better then a thousand: I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, then to dwell in the tents of wickedness. We see how careful all men are, whensoever they go abroad, and come into any public place and presence of men, to adorn the outward man decently, lest being seen in an unseemly manner they be condemned and despised, especially if they be to appear before some great person, as we see in Joseph, Gen. 41.14. When they brought him before the presence of Pharaoh, he shaued himself, and he changed his raiment, and so came unto him. How much more then should we look to our selves, to the inward man, to the heart, that we come not carelessly & contemptuously before him that searcheth the hearts and reins? If any ask how we may prepare our selves and behave our selves, [Object.] that we may be accounted fit to come before God's presence? I answer, [Answer.] we must practice three duties: first, we must embrace true godliness and righteousness, and cast out of our hearts, as filthiness out of our houses, all impiety and unrighteousness. The gates of God's house into which he will enter, are the gates of righteousness, and none shall enter into them but the righteous, Psal. 118.16. Open to me the gates of righteousness, I will go into them, and I will praise the Lord: this gate is the Lord's, into which the righteous shall enter. When Jacob went to Bethel to build for God an altar, and to worship him, first he cleansed his house of idols, and commanded his household to be clean, thereby shadowing out the purity of their harts. To this purpose doth David testify, Psal. 26.6. that he would wash his hands in innocence, and then afterward he would compass his altar. So then, so often as we intend to come to the house of God, we must rid our hearts of wickedness, as it were our ground of weeds, and so sanctify them that they may be fit vessels to receive heavenly graces. They that do otherwise shall never reap any benefit by the holy assemblies of the Saints, let them resort thither never so often. Secondly, we must not only shun and shake off things ungodly and unlawful in themselves, but even such things that in time and place may be followed and are commanded to be done of us, to wit, the care of earthly things and thoughts upon the matters of this world. These have their time, but their time is out of time, when the time serveth to serve the Lord, and we are to sanctify a Sabbath unto him. These indeed have their place but they have no place in the place of God's worship, and therefore must be displaced out of our hearts before we come to the house of God. A vessel full of mire and puddle cannot receive any sweet and wholesome liquor, though ye pour it upon it all the day long; and if our minds and hearts be forestalled with the cares of this life, and the cogitations of earthly things; they are no way capable of heavenly things, they are full fraught and stuffed already and so leave, no room or receipt for better things. These are rank thorns that choke the word. Lastly, we must consider that we have to deal with God, and not with man, and be ready to receive without contradiction or resisting, without mincing and mangling, whatsoever is delivered unto us by the Ministers of God, and from the warrant of Scriptures. This must be the end that we aim at when we come into the Church, to hear the word of life, to learn the way of salvation, and to embrace the doctrine of truth and salvation. It was the manner of the Priests and Levites to interpret the Law, and the Prophets were wont to preach their Sermons to the people gathered together in great multitudes in the Temple, Ierem. chap. 7. verse 2. where Jeremiah is commanded to stand in the gate of the Lord's house, and proclaim there this word. Let us therefore prepare our hearts to obedience, by setting before us the presence of God, present by his word, present by his grace, present by his Sacraments, present by all his ordinances, and by his blessing upon his ordinances. Thus doth the Prophet prophesy, that the people call one to another, and say, Come ye and let us go up to the Mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us (he doth not say, the Ministers, but the Lord himself will teach us) his ways, and we will walk in his paths. A notable means to work much good in us, and the chiefest way to touch our hearts with fear and reverence, knowing that we have to do with God's word nay with God himself. Thus did Cornelius consider, Acts 10, 33. when he said to Peter, We are all here present before GOD, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God. Let us examine our selves by these few rules, and by them we shall know whether we come aright or not to the house of God, with due reverence and preparation. Let not the Minister sow among thorns, but grub them out of the ground of your hearts, that so ye may bring forth fruits with patience.

Secondly, observe from the law of contraries, [Use 2] that Satan is present in all places of Idolatry, wickedness, impiety, and profaneness. For as God is present where he is worshipped, so is the Prince of this world that •ueth in all the children of disobedience, present also where he is served. Thus speaketh Christ our Savior to the Church of Pergamos Revel. 2, 13. I know thy works, & where thou dwellest, even where Satan's throne is. So then where ungodliness is set up and maintained, there is Satan present, nay there he is president; there is Satan's seat, and there he keepeth •esidence. O that all wicked and ungodly persons were throughly persuaded of the truth of this point, and that they would diligently weigh with themselves, that Satan is oftentimes near thē, even at their elbows when they think him to be far from them, and th•mselues out of gunshot as we use to speak, and free from all danger. For if he will intrude himself and wind in himself among the Saints, to hinder the best works, Zach. 3, 1. Luke 8, 12. like a subtle serpent that he may seduce & deceive us, as he did our first parents: we may be assured he cometh freely and frequently into the company of his professed servants which are his children, John. 8, 44. For as Christ speaketh, that where two or three are gathered together in his Name, he is in the midst of them; so wheresoever two or three are met together at his pleasure & to his liking, and for the doing of his will, he will be in the midst of them (though not in a visible manner) to tempt thē to evil, and to make them glory and continue in their evil. If then we fear such a companion, let us forsake such company. If we will needs frequent the company of wicked livers, we cannot avoid the society of Satan. Do we then see any place where drunkenness, where whoredom, where vanity, where blasphemy and all impiety is maintained & upholden? we may conclude and as it were write upon the backside of it and upon every door and poste within it, This is the devils house, here are the works of the devil to be seen, here is the devil in a special manner present with his tētations, with his allurements, with his instruments to ruin the souls of men, and to bring them to confusion and destruction.

Thirdly, it is our duty to frequent those [Use 3] places that make known his Name unto us, and spread abroad his saving health among all people. Here we may have familiar access to him, & be admitted into his presence. In prayer we talk familiarly with him, Gen. 18, 27. where Abraham saith, he had taken upon him to speak to the Lord: and in his word he talketh familiarly with us, and therefore do the Prophets continually cry out, to hear y^e word of the Lord, and tell us that the Lord speaketh to his people. What an high honor is it to a subject to have free access to his Prince, and to come into his chamber of presence? we are so honored of God to come to him without check or controlement; the more boldly we preasse into his presence, the more welcome we are. No man is reprov'd for coming too often. The faithful have accounted it a great part of their happiness to have liberty to meet together with one mind & with one mouth to glorify God & to set forth his praises. This made the Prophet say, Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place where thine honor dwelleth. On the other side, they have lamented their condition with a lamentable & bitter cry, when they have been banished from the place of God's worship, & driven to seek harbor and habitation among the unbelievers. Then their souls longed and fainted for the Courts of the Lord, their hearts and their flesh cried out for the living God; yea, they wept and lamented when in captivity they remembered Zion. They longed for the Courts of the Lord: but many among us long greatly to be out of them. They accounted it a great grief to be out of the house of God; but we account it a great grief to abide in the house of God. They were never well nor quiet so long as they were from the worship of God; we are even sick and discontent so long a[•] we are at it. Finally, they were banished from the Lord's house, we banish our selves: they were compelled to be absent, we cannot be compelled to be present. We would be thoght to be willing to have God in our company, & to desire to have access unto his presence, but if this were truly in us, we would love the place of his dwelling. We shall be sure to find him in his word, to meet with him at the Sacraments, and to speak with him by our prayers.

This then reproveth the carelessness of all such as make no reckoning of Church-assemblies, that account one day or hour of y^e day spent in their own pleasures & vanities better thē a thousand in the Courts of the Lord. These are weary of the heavenly Manna, it is a light and a loathsome food. This is a fearful sin, to pollute the holy things that he hath sanctified and set apart to holy uses. These are scornful beasts, and profane persons, there is but a step between them and atheism. They are men without religion, and tread under feet the Son of God, and account the blood of the New Testament as a profane thing. Hereby we see the height of that sin which is too rife and common, to wit, the careless, willful, and negligent forsaking of the holy things of God. These are come to the highest step of sin, and are set down in the seat of scorners, Psal. 1, 1. These have faith justly denied unto them, and have not the grace given them to believe, because they contemn the means by which they might believe & be saved, Act. 13, 48. And doubtless he that maketh no conscience of God's worship, will also, if occasion show it self, make as little conscience of anything else that belongeth unto his brother. To conclude, let us have no part or fellowship with these men, but carry earnest affection to the exercises of religion, hungering and thirsting after them with longing desires. When one Sabbath is ended, we should wish for the next: when one Sermon is finished, we should desire another: when one Communion hath been celebrated, we should enquire when the next shall follow; even as the Gentiles besought Paul and Barnabas to preach to them y^e next Sabbath day, the same things they had offered to the Jews. O that this zeal were found in us! then would God be found of us, O that we would enquire after him! he would offer to us his gracious presence in this life, & we should be sure to enjoy his glorious presence in the life to come.

CHAP. VIII.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2. Speak unto Aaron, and say unto him, When thou lightest the Lamps, the seven Lamps shall give light over against the Candlestick.

3. And Aaron did so, &c.

IN the latter end of the former chapter we have seen how God gave answer unto Moses from above the Mercy-seat, between the two Cherubims, according to his promise before, Exod 25, 22. In this chapter is recorded what he spake. We have also learned what was the sanctification of the other Tribes testified by the solemn offering y^t they brought at the dedication of the Altar: here Moses entreateth of the sanctification of the Church-officers, wherein observe two things; the first, touching the Priests: the second, touching the rest of the Levites. For such as served at the Altar, either were taken into the order of the Priests, or else were of the rest of the Tribe of the Levites that served in inferior places about y^e Tabernacle to assist the Priests in their offices. Touching the Priests, we are to consider two things: first, the commandment of God, without whose authority nothing is to be imposed as necessary in the Church; which is, that the Priests should light the lamps, not one or two, but all of them to give light in the Tabernacle, to signify y^e light of God's word shining in y^e Church, which ought sincerely to be preached and published by the teachers, to give light of knowledge to all in the house of God: as the Apostle declareth of himself, that he had kept back nothing, but revealed the whole counsel of God; as the Priests kept not any of the lamps vnlighted, but did light thē all. Secondly, the obedience of Aaron to the commandment, he lighted the lamps, that they might give light round about the candlestick, on every side wheresoever the candlestick could be seen. Upon occasion of mentioning the candlestick, we have a description of it, verse 4, by the matter of it, it was made of gold: and by the form, of beaten gold, according to the pattern shown to Moses in the Mount: for he was a faithful servant in the house of God, Heb. 3, 2. But of this we may read farther, Exo. 25, 37, & 40, 25, 26. There was but one candlestick in the Tabernacle made by Moses, because this was sufficient: howbeit Solomon that built the Temple afterward, made ten candlestickes, whereof five stood at the one side, & five on the other side, 2 Chron. 4, ver, 7, 20. because the Temple was larger and wider then the Tabernacle, and therefore moe were requisite in the one then in the other. The place where the Candlestick stood, was in the Sanctuary next to the most holy place, or in the first Tabernacle, Hebrews, chapter 9, verses 2, 9. Not in the most holy place, forasmuch as the High Priest went into it once only in the whole year, Heb. 9, 7. whereas the lamps of the Candlestick were renewed daily. But let us come to the words as they lie in order; and first touching the lamps appointed to be lighted, we must consider that the Tabernacle with all things thereunto belonging, was a figure of the time present, until the time of reformation, Heb. 9, 9. and when the Priesthood was changed, there must be also a change of the law, Heb. 7, 12. All things had their signification, and the truth which is as the pith and substance of the ceremonies, belongeth to us as well as to the Jews. Hence it is, that the lamps belonging to the candlestick, signify unto us, y^t the word is the light of the church, giving light to the people, as the Sun doth to the world▪ whereby the true light of the knowledge of God, of Christ our Redeemer, of true righteousness, and of salvation, is kindled in the hearts of all true believers. David is a certain witness of this truth, who teacheth, that the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes, Psal. 19, 8. Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path, Psal. 119, 105. So Solomon saith, Prov. 6, 23. The Commandment is a lamp, and the Law is a light. It is plain therefore that the lamp lighted in the Tabernacle, did figure out the word of God. Hence it is, that the Prophet Isaiah saith, O house of Jacob, come, & let us walk in the light of the Lord: and afterward he showeth, that if any speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.

[Reason 1] And it cannot be otherwise, because the Lord which is the author of the Scriptures, is light it self; he is called the Father of lights, I am. 1: and the Church acknowledgeth, when it sate in darkness, that the Lord was the light of it, Mich. 7, 8. The Apostle saith, he only hath immortality, and dwelleth in the light which no mā can approach unto, 1 Tim. 6, 16. And in the beginning of John's Gospel, Christ is called the light of men, John 1, 4. God then be y^e true light, how can his word but partake of his nature, and be lightsome in it self, and bring light to us? Again, the word hath in it the effects of light, it expelleth darkness, and is very comfortable, and therefore comfort is often called by the name of light, Ps. 97, 11. Ester 8, 16. Ps. 118, 27, and 43, 3. Job 30, 26. Lam. 3, 2. So is it with the word, it driveth away spiritual darkness, and it comforteth and rejoiceth the heart, Psal. 19, 8.

[Use 1] This doctrine serveth to reprove the church of Rome, which bring in their Torches and Tapers, and Candles into the Church, as the setting of them up at burials and funerals, to signify that the souls of the dead are alive; a superstitious custom, condemned by sundry Councils as superstitious and heathenish. Moreover, they observe continually another foolish custom to set up wax candles & Taper lights before their Images, and upon the Altar in their Churches; and this they do not only in the night, but in the day, & at noon, when the Sun shineth in his strength. And lest they might seem to wander without Scripture, and to be mad without reason, they pretend for themselves and their superstition, the continual burning of the lamps in the Tabernacle before the Ark of the testimony, Exod. 25. Bellarmino disputing of the relics of the Saints, noteth three ends of this practice because fire is a sign of gladness, a sign of glory, and a sign of life. But all this is no better then will-worship, which is condemned, Mat. 15, 9. Col. 2, 23. of which it may be said, Who required these things at your hands, Es. 1, 12, And this observation in the law touching the lamps, is merely ceremonial, which had an end with the Priesthood, and was honourably buried with the Synagogue, and is not to be raked out of the dust and raised out of the grave again. Also, it is utterly untrue, that these lamps were lighted in the day time; for they were lighted in the evening & burned until the morning, and then were put out. Thus doth Ahijah tell Jeroboam and all Israel, that they had the Candlestick of gold with the lamps thereof to burn every evening. Therefore it is said in the law, The high Priest shall light the lamps at even, the word is, between the twilights, meaning thereby both the evening and the morning, Exod. 30, 8: and Aaron must cause the lamps to burn continually, from the evening unto the morning, Levite. 24, 3. In the book of Samuel & in other places, it appeareth that they burned all night for those that kept the watch of the Lord in y^e Tabernacle, and in the Temple, but were always extinguished in the morning when it was day, 1 Sam. 3, 3. Thus then we reason against them from their own foundation: The lamps under the law burned only in y^e night, therefore the Papists have no warrant to set them up in the day time. True it is, Doway-Translators slubber over the matter in their annotations upon Exodus and Samuel, and tell us that God would not have darkness in his Tabernacle by day nor night: but this is a weak and ungrounded assertion contrary to y^e Scripture, as hath been shown, and may also farther be shown out of Exod. 27, 21. The truth is that these noon-day Taper lights in honor of the living or of the dead, are a mere heathenish superstition, as it appeareth out of the history of Herodian, lib. 1. And from hence (as also many other toys did) crept into the Church; and therefore Jerome saith, aduers. vigilant. Cereos clara luce non accendimus. we do not light candles in the day time. But we have some reason to bear with them. For to what end do they use it in the day time, but to make manifest their blindness & ignorance. Their religion is a dark and obscure religion, compacted altogether of many blind doctrines, and therefore they would have some light of their candles, though they have none of their doctrine. The use of a lantern and light is in a dark night. There is no man in his right wits will carry a candle when the Sun shineth clearly and brightly. Durand a great patron of these superstitions, can find out nothing in the word written to justify & defend these wax-candles, & therefore is constrained to establish them upon the rotten decrees of Zosimus and Theodorus. If any object, that the Christians used lights & lamps in their meetings: I answer, their meetings were in the night time for fear of their enemies. For while the Church was in persecution, they could not safely assemble in the day time, and therefore they used those lights of necessity to remedy the darkness of the night, Acts 20, 8. but when we have free liberty & choice of time & place for y^e exercises of our religion, y^t practice is not to be brought into imitation.

[Use 2] Again, it reproveth them that hold the Scriptures to be so dark and difficult, that it is dangerous for the people to meddle with them, lest they fall by them into errors & heresies. But we hear that the Scriptures are a lamp, as a candle set upon the table, and as a Beacon kindled to show light far and near. What then? Can the light be darkness? surely no more then the darkness can be light. And if they be dark, it followeth, that either the holy Ghost could not express his mind and meaning more clearly and evidently, or else he would not. To say he could not, is blasphemy, and maketh him a weak and impotent God: to say he would not, were to make him an envious God, as if he did envy the good of his Church. But whatsoever was written afore time, was written for our instruction, Rom. 15, 4. 2 Tim. 3, 16. therefore God everywhere commandeth, that they should be read and heard of all, high and low, rich & poor, men and women, old and young, Deut. 6, 9. & 17, 18. & 31, 11. Josh. 1, 8. He will have all sorts of persons come to the knowledge of the truth, that they may be saved, 2 Pet. 3, 9. 2 Tim. 2, 25. But how shall they come to repentance and to the knowledge of the truth, without the Scriptures? Every member of the Church must have them dwell richly in them, Col. 3, 16. All are commanded to search them, John. 5, 39. The men of Berea are commended for it, Acts 17, 11. so is the Eunuch, who while he sate in his Chariot, read them, Acts 8, 30. They also are reproveth that were unskillful in them and slow of heart to believe them. They are able to make us wise unto salvation. Out of them as from an armory, we must draw weapons against Satan and his instruments, both defensive and offensive. Christ and his Apostles used these weapons, to beat down all impiety and heresy: whereas the ignorance of them is the cause of error. This armor & artillery must all men procure: and no man be denied to draw this sword that is a soldier of Jesus Christ. From hence therefore is reproveth the error in opinion and weakness of judgment resting in the common sort, they persuade themselves that the knowledge of thē belongeth not to them, but to the Ministers and to the learned, because they take them to be so dark, and themselves so simple, y^t they are as a deep well, and they have nothing to draw; nay, that it is dangerous for them to meddle with them, as if they were a rock at which they might suffer shipwreck. But this is nothing so. Let all such mark that they are as a light shining in the night of this present world, to show us the right way, and to lead us a sure way forward to the end of our faith. True it is, we shall have no need of it, when once we come to our journeys end. For as men whē they are come to their lodging & resting place, require no more the help of the lantern; so shall it be with us, when the days of our passage and pilgrimage are ended, and we be come to the heavenly Jerusalem, we shall no more want this ministerial light: the Lord shall be the light of that City, there shall be no need of the Sun or Moon there to shine in it: then

Prophecy shall fail, & tongues shall cease, and knowledge shall vanish away. Furthermore, we must know that the Scriptures are not hard and hidden in the fundamental points, but all things necessary to saluatiō are easy to them that will understand. They are like to the holy waters that issued out frō under y^e threshold of the house, Eze. 47, 1: which were first up to the ankles, v. 3. then up to the loins, v. 4. which afterward became as a river that could not be passed over, v. 5. In them is strong meat for men, and milk for babes and children. In them the Elephant may swim, and the Lamb may wade. No man must therefore be discouraged from searching the Scriptures, which do give understanding even to the simple, and knowledge and discretion to y^e young man: he may learn by them to reform his ways, and to know how to fear the Lord. But are not many things hard in them? Doth not Peter say of Paul's Epistles, that they are hard? I answer, he speaketh not of the hardness of the Epistles, as appeareth by the change of y^e gender, but that in the Epistles are many mystical points, and matters of faith rather than of reason, as the doctrine of the Trinity, the union of the two natures in Christ to make one person, and such like, which, albeit they be in themselves dark & hard to be conceived, yet they are plainly set down. Again, he doth not say, all things are hard, or the most things, or many things, but some things are hard to be understood. And to whom are they hard? to those that wrest them to their own destruction, to the unstable and unlearned. Now, those things that are dark to the unbeliever, are lightsom to the faithful, as Christ saith to his Disciples, To you it is given to know the mystery of the Kingdom of God, but unto them that are without, all things are done in Parables. To them that are humble and desire to learn, are plain instructions: but to others that are proud & high-minded, the plainest points are dark riddles. If any ask, whether there be not diverse things hard in Scripture? I answer, there are: and it is the great wisdom of GOD it should be so: tempering the one with the other, to make us devout in praying, diligent in searching, wise in prizing & valuing y^e truth of God, humble in knowing our own wants, and to teach us that God would have some teachers in his Church and some to learn at their mouths, some to instruct and some to be instructed.

Thirdly, we may conclude, that seeing the [Use 3] word of God is the light of the Church, they that now perish, do perish justly and worthily. They have a light set up to direct them, and the Sun shineth most brightly in their faces; if then they shut their eyes; and so stumble and fall down, who will take any pity upon them? who can say, but they are worthy to perish? Hence it is, that the Apostle saith, If our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost, in whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. 2 Cor. 4, 3, 4. If we had not a light before us, we might pretend ignorance, and allege the darkness of the way, as a defense of our wandering, but now the vizard is pulled from our faces, we have nothing to answer for our selves. Wherefore Christ saith, If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no cloke for their sins, John 15, 22. No man can allege any just color or excuse, or find what plea to put in for himself. The light is among us, what shall we say that we walk not in the light? He that walketh in darkness, knoweth not what he doth, or whither he goeth, or how near he is to danger. O that it might be said of us, as the Apostle doth of the Thessalonians, Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: ye are not of the night, nor of darkness. It may rather be said of us, you are children of the night and of darkness, ye are not of the light nor of the day. Christ Jesus is come as a light into the world, that whosoever believeth in him should not abide in darkness, John 12, 46, 48, Whosoever rejecteth him, and receiveth not his words, hath one that judgeth him, the word which he hath spoken shall judge him in the last day, verse 48. Such then shall be taken speechless, and stand dumb having nothing to say, being convicted and condemned in their own consciences, and therefore he that is ignorant, let him be ignorant, 1 Cor. 14, 38. The light was powerfully and plentifully offered unto him, but he closed his eyes that he might not see, and stopped his ears that he might not hear, and hardened his heart that he might not understand. It shall be easier for the Turks and Infidels at the day of judgment, then for many of us. For if the light of the truth had shined so fully upon them as it hath done upon us, they had long ago repented in sackcloth and ashes. Let us consider this betimes, and open our eyes while the light is among us, before it be taken from us, and darkness come upon us. Now is the acceptable time, let it not slip from us.

[Use 4] Fourthly, they should be welcome unto us, that bring this light, that we may say with the Apostle, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things? Rom. 10, ver. 15. In winter nights that are dark, and consequently dangerous for passengers, men think they do others a great pleasure, if they hold them out a light to show them the way, and to free them from fear of danger, and it is so. What an happy thing then is it to have a light holden forth to guide us to heaven, and to bring us to everlasting life! We see therefore the necessity of the word of God and of the Ministers thereof. To take away these, is to take away the light in a dark night, nay to pull the Sun out of the Firmament, & to leave men to go and to grope in darkness: forasmuch as it is impossible for us to direct our ways aright without the one and the other. It is the great mercy of God that hath given unto us the Sun to rule the day, the Moon and the Stars to rule the night, Psal. 136, 8, 9. which are so necessary as that without them the life of man cannot be continued and preserved: and as in a dark house nothing can be seen without a Lamp or a candle, so the right way cannot be discerned from the wrong, truth from error, and virtue from vice in the darkness of our life, without the light and luster of the word. There are dangerous pits in this misty world, and many threatening rocks in this troublesome sea which are not seen; we shall fall into the one, and rush upon the other, and ruin our selves by them both, except we carry before us this light and lantern. Let us believe no man that will offer to teach us the way, except he show us this light. The Israelites in the wilderness were governed by a Cloud in the day, and by a pillar of fire in the night, till they came into the Land of Canaan, afterward they had no need of the one or of the other: so should we order our resting and removing, our going out, and our coming in, by this light of the word, which will bring us to the heavenly Canaan. Our duty therefore must be to take heed to the word, seeing it is a light givē unto us of God. It is our duty to hear it, to believe it, to obey it. We must hear it attentively: we must believe it steadfastly: we must obey it readily. We must hear it without loathing: we must believe it without wavering: we must obey it without resisting.

Hence it is, that the Apostle Peter adorning the word with this worthy title, that it is as a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in our hearts, draweth from thence this exhortation, that we must therefore take heed unto it. 2, Pet. 1, 19. Who is it that is so simple or senseless, that he will take no heed to the light that shineth round about him? Every man looketh carefully to the light, and taketh comfort at the sight of it. The whole world lieth in darkness, guilty of ignorance, & subject to damnation. The Ministry of the word is ordained to bring men out of darkness into a marvelous light, Acts 26, 18. to reveal to them the knowledge of their sins, and to lead them (as it were by the hand) the way to eternal life.

[Use 5] Fifthly, let all unlearned and unconscionable Ministers know, y^t they ought to be as lights in the world, to teach the people in season and out of season. If they be without knowledge or without conscience, they be lanthornes without light. The dispensation is committed unto them, woe unto thē therefore that preach not the Gospel, whether they cannot or will not, whether they cannot through blindness, or whether they will not through willfulness. Again, they offend, who, as if the word were delivered in riddles, and dark parables rather to work in them admiration, then to bring unto them instruction, do fly aloft, far above the reach of the people: and do not consider that the word is a light, and therefore ought to be spoken plainly and evidently, that all may see it, and discern it. Happy are those lights, I mean those Ministers, that can humble and abase themselves, descending to the capacity of the simple: such shall find greatest comfort of their labors, and shall reap the greatest reward for their labors. As for others, they may please themselves, but they please not God. They may delight the ear, they cannot descend into the conscience. They build Castles in the air, but never lay a sound foundation of the faith, neither shall they ever be able to say with the Apostle, Ye are our Epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men. Unto these we may add such as spend their days and grow old and idle in the Universities: who never desire to come abroad to take pains, neither consider that the Church hath need of them. These stand all day doing nothing, and will not be hired to labor in the Lord's Vineyard. They have lived long in the schools of the Prophets, it is high time they come abroad, and leave their places to others. He that engrosseth corn into his own hands, and will not communicate it to others, but keepeth it close to himself, is cursed of the people; but he is pronounced blessed that selleth corn to others in the days of famine. Behold, we live in the days of famine, not of bread, but of preaching and hearing the word, Amos 8, 11. In many places the word of the Lord is precious in these days, 1 Sam. 3, 1. Let them therefore look to it, that tender either the glory of the Lord, or the salvation of the flock of Christ, yea or their own good, that they do not bring upon themselves the curse of God and man, which have stored themselves with much knowledge and learning, and as it were filled their garners with abundance of corn; yet will depart with nothing, but keep all to themselves, and suffer the people of God to starve. On the other side, thrice happy and blessed are they, that considering the necessity of the Church, the ignorance of the people, the overflowing of sin, and the commandment of God, do bring forth the corn which they have gathered, and employ the gifts that they have received, that so none of these for whom Christ died, should perish for want of food. Let such therefore in no wise hang back; when they are thrust forward, et them not say touching building of the spiritual house of God, as the people said in building of the material Temple, The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built. Hag. 1, 2. but so soon as they are called, let thē not stop their ears, but answer with Samuel. Speak Lord, for thy servant heareth, 1 Sam. 3, 9. and with the Prophet, Here am I, send me, Isaiah 6, 8. Let not these I say, object, that the time is not yet come to build the Lord's house, lest they hear as that people did, Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your fair houses, and siced chambers, and this house lie waste? Now therefore saith the Lord of hosts, consider your ways, Hag. 1, 4, 5. And generally, let all such as are entered into this calling, beware they do not hide their gifts; let them not thrust the candle under the bed or under a bushel, but set it upon the Table, seeing they are made lights for others, and not only for themselves. Such have an hard and heavy account to make hereafter; much is given unto them, and therefore much shall be required of them.

Lastly, here is instruction for all; for every [Use] one should be as a burning candle, & a bright shining light, and is bound to let his light so shine before men, y^t they may see their good works, and glorify their Father which is in heaven. Every man ought to be enlightened with the knowledge of God's word, & be willing to hold out the light to others. But we cannot give light to another, except we have the light of knowledge our selves. Ignorant persons are darkness and not light, children of the night & not of the day. The Scripture is able to make a man wise, to enlighten his eyes, to direct his steps, and to save his soul. Bellarmino confesseth, y^t the Scripture is a light but he telleth us, y^t the reason is, not because they have light in themselves, but because they bring light when they are understood. This is a right fallacy of the consequent: for hereby he maketh the effect to be the cause of y^e cause, and so inuerteth all good order, turning the cause into the effect, & the effect into y^e cause. For he would have the Scripture therefore to be light or lightsome, because being once understood, it doth enlighten the mind. But this needeth no light to discover the fraud & falsehood thereof. For it is not therefore called light, because when it is understood it doth enlighten & give light. And whether we understand it, or no, it skilleth not; for the Scripture is in it self a bright shining light. For as the Sun is lightsome, though all men were blind, and no man did see it: so the Scripture is a light, albeit men turn away their eyes frō it that they will not see it. In the mean season we do not deny, y^t the Scripture being understood doth enlighten our minds, but it is not therefore lightsome because it is understood of us: for then the light thereof should wholly depend upon our understanding. Thus if we understand it, it shall be lightsome; but if we understand it not, it shall not be lightsome. Nay, w^c is much more absurd, if one man understand it, it shall be light: if another man understand it not it shall not be light: thus at one and the same time, it should be both light, & not light. The truth therefore is, that the Scriptures are lightsome two ways: First, in respect of them selves; secondly, in respect of us. In respect of themselves, they are always lightsome of themselves, and have light in themselves. In respect of us, they are lightsome when we understand them, and receive them and light by them. But to return to the former matter, the Minister should be the principal light to hold out the Lantern to bring men to heaven, and to work in them repentance, as John the Baptist is said to be a burning and a shining light, John. 5, 35. But everyone also in his place must be a light, to shine in knowledge and obedience, in doctrine and in life. On the contrary, when men are as candles put out, there falleth great hurt to the church. The danger hereof may be discerned by common experience in an haven town, if the Lantern be taken down, or the candle put out, which should direct the ships in the night season into the haven, all the ships and the souls that sails in them, are left to the mercy of the winds which are without mercy, and so all perish by miserable shippewracke. In like manner, if men have no light in their hearts to guide them into the haven and harbor of the church, and consequently of the kingdom of heaven, they do as much as in them lieth, betray their own souls; and drown themselves in eternal perdition.

[Verse 3. And Aaron did so, &c.] The obedience of Aaron is here described, and the Candlestick set in the Tabernacle described. It is said to be of gold, as Revel. 1. the most precious of all Minerals, for two causes. First, because as Gold exceedeth all other metals, so the Church exceedeth all other societies of men, because in it salvation is only to be found Isaiah 46, 13. all other being ordained to preserve this safe and sound, Esa. 45, 14. & 49, 23. Revel, 21, 24, 26. Ye^e, it is the glory and honor, the beauty and ornament of all other societies, kingdoms, cities, towns, houses, and persons, to be parts of the church; inasmuch as otherwise they are parts of the world, of the kingdom of darkness, yea, a^e dogs & swine, and unclean beasts, Ephes. 22, 11, 12, 13, &c. Secondly, because it is most precious & dear to God, and to Jesus Christ, as gold is to man, because it is an holy company, sanctified by the blood of Christ, whom it cost dear to redeem it, Acts 20. The Candlestick in the Tabernacle was to hold the light for the direction of all that were therein, from Eueing to morning continually, Exod. 27, 22. It is the use of every Candlestick, to hold, to keep, to preserve, to continue, and to yield forth the light to the benefit of others. This doth mystically represent the church, [Doctrine.] & teacheth that the church is as the Lord's golden candlestick, appointed to hold and keep the light & treasury of the Word forever, that it should never be lost or embeselled from us to the end of the world. And as the Candlestick was to hold the light to the first coming of Christ, so is the church to preserve the truth until the second coming of Christ. It is therefore the office of the church, and of every true member thereof, to keep in it, and to publish abroad, and to hold out to those that are in it the truth of God's word, to direct their paths aright: as Deut. 31, 20. The book of the Law, after that it was written, was by the Lord himself committed to the Israelites to be kept in the side of the Ark of the covenant. The Prophet Isaiah showeth, That the Word should go forth out of Zion (where it was kept) into the midst of the earth, Chap. 2.3. And the Apostle declareth, that the Jews had the Oracles of God committed unto them of trust, Rom. 3, 2. and that to them appertained (who were y^e only church) the adoption, and the glory, and the Couenants, and the giving of the Law, and the service of God, and the promises, Rom. 9, 4. And Paul is said to have written unto Timothy, that he should know how he ought to behave himself in the house of GOD which is the Church of the living God, the pillar & ground of the truth, 1 Tim. 3.15. By all which testimonies we are taught, that the Church holdeth and bringeth the truth, and conueieth it unto us, and that we can no otherwise receive it, or be partakers of it.

For further proof hereof, observe with [Reason 1] me the titles that are given unto it. It is a safe keeper or treasurer, to keep as it were under lock and key the holy Jewels of the old and New Testament, that they be neither corrupted by Heretics, nor destroyed by other enemies.

It is as a cunning Goldsmith to try everything: for as he discerneth pure gold from counterfeit mettalles, so the church discerneth true Scripture from false or forged books and writings. It is as a crier to publish and make known the decrees of almighty God. It is an Interpreter to expound the sense, and to open the meaning of the Scriptures according to y^e proportion of faith set forth in other parts. Secondly, it is a great honor and wonderful preferment that God giveth unto the Church above all other societies and places of the world besides. And indeed there can be no greater honor, then to be put in trust with such a treasure. If a man should upon trust, commit unto another a great treasure, and make choice of him to leave it with him, it is a sign he honoreth and respecteth him before and above others: so is it between God and his Church; he hath laid up his truth in his Church, as in his storehouse. He hath given his word to Jacob, his statutes and ordinances unto Israel, 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 he hath not dealt so with other Nations, & as for his judgments they have not known them. This made the Apostle say, What is then the preferment (or advantage) of the Jew? Or what profit is thereof circumcision? much every day: showing thereby, that God committing his Oracles unto them, did advance and prefer them far above all other Nations. Thirdly, the church is the house & habitation of God, who is light itself, in whom only is light properly to be found, who dwelleth in light that none can attain unto, 1 Tim. 6, 16. He hath called his Church his rest, and the place where his honor dwelleth, Psal. 132, 13, 14. The Lord hath chosen Zion, he hath desired it for his habitation; this is my rest forever, here will I dwell, for I have desired it.

[Use 1] This condemneth the Papists who stand from the verdict of this doctrine, as men endited of two crimes and errors: first, they accuse the Scriptures left unto us in the Originals, to be corrupted, the Old Testament by the Jews, the new by Marcion and other heretics. But it is a vain surmise without proof or probability touching the corruption of the original fountains, which notwithstanding the Romanists pretend, thereby to make a way to bring in the Latin translation to be the pure & authentic Scripture, and consequently to be preferred before them: which is as foolish and unreasonable, as to make the mistress to walk on foot like a servant, and to set her handmaid on horseback; & therefore some of their own friends are ashamed of this vanity. It is a shame (they say) to bely the devil. It is a crime to tax the Jews of a crime whereof they are not guilty It is well known, that howsoever they stand affected unto Christ, yet they always were, and now are very religious & respective in keeping the text sound and sincere, and cannot by any means be induced to choppe and change, to add or to diminish anything. And doubtless had they not been trusty and faithful, would God have trusted them with this true treasure? yea, though that Church were oftentimes corrupt, yea sometimes an Harlot, or an Apostat, yet the over-ruling providence of God hath always wrought in them a care and conscience this way, both for their own future happy estate, and the benefit of posterity to come, to keep the ancient records & evidences of the Scripture, sound, sure, and sincere. This appeareth further by the Sermon of Christ in the Mount, reproving the false interpretations of the Scribes and Pharisees, who had very grossly corrupted the meaning of the Law, Mat, 5, 21.27, 31, 33, 38, 43. & 16, 6. The church of the Jews was never more corrupt then in the days of Christ; yet could they never be touched, nor be justly charged with this horrible crime of offering violence to the holy books of Scripture. And if they might have been endited of this detestable forgery, Christ would not have omitted this greater fault, who often reproveth them of lesser offenses. Besides, our Savior willeth the Jews to search the Scripture, which the Prophets had left unto them by divine inspiration; he sendeth them unto these as then they had thē, to try the doctrine of the Pharisees by them, John. 5, 39. which he would never have done, had they been corrupted, and themselves the corrupters of them.

Moreover touching the Jews, seeing they were mortal enemies to Christ, if they were minded to corrupt the Scripture, they would have corrupted for their own advantage such places out of Moses and the Prophets, as concerned Christ whom they hated; but these remain entire, by which they are fully convinced and confuted. And therefore one saith well, that such as holily and religiouslie handle the Hebrew Text, do find therein more notable testimonies of Christ, then in the Latin and Greek Copies. Now, if the true Church had lost the pure and perfect fountains of the Hebrew and Greek Text, how could it be a faithful keeper of his Will and Testament? Howbeit, GOD hath ever had a care of his word and truth, even then when he committed the same to the custody of the Church. Another error of the Roman church is, that they make the churches authority to be our supreme ground and stay of our faith, and set it far above the Scriptures themselves. These assertions are found in their writings touching the Scripture. It is not authentical without the authority of the church: that the authority of the Scripture dependeth on the authority of the Church necessarily, Pighi. lib. 1. de Hierar eccl cap. 2. that we are not bound to take them for Scripture, without the authority of the Church: that in respect of us y^e church hath absolute authority to determine which is Scripture, and which is not: that the Church hath power to make a book not Canonical, to be Canonical: and one of them vttred this impudent and shameless blasphemy, that the Scripture should be of no more credit then Aesop's Fables, without the approbation & allowance of the church. Howbeit, as we must not take from the church hir right, so we must take heed that we give not to it more then is due, and so rob God of his honor and glory, and derogate from the excellency and authority of the Scriptures. They make the Church the light it self, and not the Candlestick to hold the light, & say, that it also is called light. I answer, it is a borrowed light, receiving all the light it hath from the word, as the Moon doth from the Sun. They make it to be the authorizer of the word, and hold that it is of no force or credit, but is as a dead letter and inken divinity without it. This is no better then to hang the word, and consequently, the promises of God, the kingdom of heaven, & salvation itself upon the pleasures of men; whereas the church is founded and grounded upon the word, not the word upon the Church, as Peter is built upon Christ, not Christ upon Peter. All the authority that the Church hath, be it never so great, it hath it from the Scripture: for how do we know whether y^e Church erreth, or not, but by the Scripture? The Church cannot give us faith whereby we believe in Christ, and lay hold of eternal life, it is the Scripture that worketh it by the inspiration of the holy Spirit. The Scripture is the chiefest and the highest court, from whence is no appeal: but we may appeal from the judgment of the Church to the Scriptures, not from the Scripture to the Church. The Church, that is, the company of the faithful, are not lords over our faith, they are ruled by faith, not over-rulers of our faith. True it is, the Church is a means to bring us more speedily to know the Scriptures, as the woman of Samaria was a means to bring the Samaritans to believe in Christ: but as they, when they had heard Christ, believed not so much for her report, as for that themselves had heard him speak; so after the Scriptures are discerned and pointed out unto us as by the finger of the Church, we believe them to be the word of God, not so much because the Church affirmeth it, but because we find them to be so, as the sheep of Christ acknowledged the voice of their Shepherd Christ Jesus speaking in them.

[Use 2] Secondly this assureth us, that the truth of God shall remain and continue forever to the end of the world. It may be sometimes brought into a narrow compass, and be much eclipsed, that the light shall appear to be but little, but it shall never perish utterly or be rooted out of the earth. For seeing y^e Church is appointed the keeper and continuer of the truth, as the candlestick of the candle, and that the Church shall abide forever, because the gates of hell shall not prevail against it, Matt. 16.18. it cannot be that the truth should fail and decay; as we see, notwithstanding the enemies of Judah and Benjamin, the word is kept uncorrupt and inviolable to this day. God will never suffer his people to be robbed thereof, but his special providence watcheth over it for our good.

This doth the Scripture it self witness touching the durableness thereof, that the things revealed belong to us and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this Law. Deut. 29.29. The Lord hath founded his testimonies forever, Psal 119.152. Our Savior speaketh more fully, evidently and vehemently, Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass, Mar. 13.31. & again, Verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one iotte, or one tittle, shall in no wise pass from the Law, till all be fulfilled, Matth 5.18. We know by experience, that all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass, the grass withereth, and the flower thereof fadeth and falleth away, but the word of the Lord endureth forever. This we may see in the books of Solomon, 1 Kin. 4.32, 33. He spake three thousand Proverbs, and his songs were a thousand and five: and he spake of trees, from the Cedar tree that is in Lebanon, even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall; he spake also of beasts, and of fowls, and of creeping things, and of fishes. These books of natural Philosophy were no doubt the most profitable books that ever were written in that kind, he being endued with the greatest wisdom that ever man since the fall had, Christ Jesus only excepted: yet none of these are to be found, only those that pertain to religion and godliness remain safely reserved for all posterities. This is the more to be considered & wondered at, inasmuch as there be infinite moe in the world that affect the knowledge of natural things, rather than they do spiritual; and of earthly, rather than they do heavenly: yet they could not deliver them from the ruins of time, but they are buried in the grave of perpetual forgetfulness, never to be raised or recovered. These are dead and gone, as if they had never been written, whereas on y^e other side, his holy writings, hated of the most part of the world, and carelessly regarded of the multitude, even of those that lived in the bosom of the Church, have notwithstanding as full a remembrance, as they had the first day the Lord gave them to his people. This serveth to convince those that think many of the books inspired by God to be lost, thereby accusing the providence of God, or at least the church, of great carelessness and negligence, of which crime notwithstanding it is not guilty.

Thirdly, there is no light of truth to be [Use 3] found anywhere else able to guide unto faith and salvation, then in the true Church of God. For all other places are places of darkness, and nothing to be found in them but lies, errors, deceivings, superstition, and the spirit of slumber. As no light was to be found in all Egypt, but in the land of Goshen and among the Israelites only: so no saving doctrine that giveth light to the eyes of y^e mind is to be found out of the Church; they that are in this state, live in palpable darkness, and can see neither themselves nor others, but lie in ignorance and wickedness, as John teacheth, We know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness. Such sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, till this light set on the Candlestick be brought unto them. Matth. 4 16. The people which sate in darkness, saw great light, and to them which sate in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up. Therefore to be out of the Church, is to be in the state of damnation, yea to be in the very dungeon of hell, and the kingdom of darkness, & to be under the power of Satan, the prince of darkness; as there was no salvation out of the Church. Let every man therefore seek and endeavor with all care to join himself to the true Church of God, & to be a member of the body of Christ, that so we may attain to the light of knowledge, and the light of the eternal life.

[Use 4] Lastly, it is a duty belonging to everyone, to be an helper to the spreading abroad of the doctrine of godliness, and to do all for the truth, but nothing against the truth, 2 Cor. 13 8. Every man desireth to be the messenger of good news: so should we desire to publish to others, and to continue to posterity the saving knowledge of the Gospel. For this is the foundation and ground-work of all true obedience. The truth of God is as a precious treasure beset with many enemies that would take it from us, against whom we must always cōtend, that we may keep faith and a good conscience. This truth is the instrument of the holy Ghost, to work all necessary graces in our hearts, as being the power of GOD to salvation. and it revealeth unto us all things needful unto salvation, concerning things to be believed, or things to be practiced. Hence it is that the Apostle Jude saith; Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once given unto the Saints. The true treasure of the Church is committed to the Saints, they are the keepers of the doctrine of salvation. This is no small trust, it is no small charge that is given unto them; we must therefore fight to maintain it. This must not be a bodily fight, but a spiritual combat, and it consisteth of diverse duties. Every man in his place ought to be as a Prophet or a Preacher, for we are made spiritual Priests, both to pray and to preach. We are bound to teach all that are under our roof and jurisdiction, that we may be as God's blessed instruments to convey his truth to others. It is the duty of all parents to teach their children, Eph. 6, 4. of Masters, to bring up their servants in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, as Abraham and Cornelius did, This is a notable means to keep, to maintain, and to defend the truth. As for those that will not teach the truth to thē that are in their houses, they are the devils Prophets, who is the father of error & ignorance. Such fathers and such masters, are the chief means of the decay and decreasing of religion, piety, faith, and righteousness. Secondly, we maintain the truth, and make it known by open confession and profession thereof. Every man must opē his mouth in God's cause, when the gates of hell are opened against it: and we must earnestly stand for it, and constantly bear witness unto it, whensoever it is oppugned and resisted. The Apostle chargeth to Sanctify the Lord God in our hearts, & be ready always to give an account and answer to every man that asketh us a reason of the hope that is in us, with meekness and fear. Thus did the holy Martyrs at their death, witness a good confession, and thereby draw many to a love and embracing of that truth for which they suffered. If we be bold to confess the Lord Jesus, and his Gospel, He will not be ashamed of us in his kingdom, but confess us before his father, Mat. 10, 32, 33. Thirdly, we must lead an holy and sanctified life, and give a good example unto those among whom we live. An unblameable and vnreproueable conversation, is a great means to cause others to embrace godliness, when we are careful to adorn the Gospel of Christ with a good life: whereas otherwise, we cause the enemies of God to blaspheme the name of God, and to speak evil of the truth. Therefore the Apostle willeth us to be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom we must shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life.

Lastly, we must maintain his truth by the armor of prayer, desiring God to make an open way and free passage for his own ordinance, and also to send forth painful & plentiful Laborers into his harvest, to gather his corn together, and to withstand all false doctrines and heresies. This doeth Christ command, Math. 9.38. This do the Apostles practice, Acts 4, 30. God hath in great mercy vouchsafed his word unto us, it is our duty to seek to uphold and maintain it, that so it may be continued unto us and our posterity forever. Let us therefore practice these few points, and be careful to practice instruction, confession, and invocation. Thus we shall show our love to the truth, a mind ready to receive it, a memory ready to retain it, and an heart ready to practice it.

5 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying;

6 Take the Levites from among the Children of Israel, and cleanse them.

7 And thus shalt thou do unto them, &c.

The second part of the Chapter followeth, concerning the Levites: wherein observe two things. First, the separation of them from the rest of the people: secondly, a limitation of time, by the special commandment of God for the entering into their office. Their separation or setting apart for the ministration in the Tabernacle, offereth unto us the commādemēt of God, and the obedience of Moses and Aaron, and the whole congregation, performed to the commandment of God. Their separation is noted by many particular circumstances, they must be cleansed with water of purifying, their garments must be washed, their flesh must be shaued. Verse 7. they must take one young Bullock for a meat offering, and another for a sin offering, verse 8. And Aaron must offer them, verse 12. the hands of the Elders must be imposed on them, v. 9, 10. and they must be offered before the Lord ver. 11, 13. Where we see, that such as are appointed to handle the holy things of God, must be washed and cleansed with holy water. It is very meet and convenient, that they should approach thereunto with pure hands, even in respect of outward cleanness, Exod. 25, 31. But hereby is another thing meant, Namely, that the Ministers and generally all others that draw near to God in performance of any duty, must be cleansed and washed: they must have clean hearts, clean affections, & clean works whensoever they come into his presence. This was figured out to Moses, Exod. 3. when he was about to draw near to see the burning bush, the Lord said, Put off thy shoes, for the ground whereon thou standest is holy ground. Solomon willeth us to take heed to our foot, when we enter into the house of God, Eccl. 5, 1. When we go about to pray, we must lift up pure and holy hands, 1 Tim. 2, 8. When we come to the Sacraments, we are willed to examine our selves, and so eat of that bread, & drink of that cup, 1 Cor. 11, 28. Whensoever we present our selves in the Congregation to hear the word, we must lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save our souls, James 1, 21. We must cast off all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, & envies, and evil speakings, that so we may grow by the milk of the word, 1 Pet. 2.1.2.

This we ought to do the rather; First, because [Reason 1] God is present everywhere, Mat. 18. His eye is upon all his suppliants that pray unto him, upon all his guests that come to the table, upon all men that hear his voice, Mat. 22.11. He taketh a view and surueigh of such as preasse into his presence, Zeph. 1, 12. That he may give to every man according to his works. If we search not our hearts, he will search them: if we judge not our selves, he will judge us, 1 Cor. 11. His eye is upon us to approve of us, if we do well: to reject us if we do evil, as the examples of Cain and Abel show. Secondly, without this inward sanctification, all our exercises of Religion are rejected: and therefore we are willed, when we come before the Lord, To wash us, and make us clean, to put away the evil of our doings, Isaiah 1, 16.

[Use 1] This reproveth all such as offer to perform divine duties to almighty God without meditation or preparation: such as rush violently into God's presence, without due reverence and regard, Math. 22. as he did that came to the feast without his wedding garment. There was but one such guest, yet the Lord soon espied him, and called him out. If there be but one such in an assembly, he cannot escape the all-seeing eye of God, who hath also a revenging eye, that cannot see his honor and glory defaced. Who would presume or dare to come into the presence of an earthly Prince, in an unseemly manner? or sit down at the table with a Ruler with foul, and filthy, and unwashed hands? Every man of any note would be much ashamed hereof: and yet it is to be feared, that many repair and resort unto the house of God with foul, and filthy, and unsanctified hearts. Howbeit all formal service is utterly rejected. They are pronounced to be blessed, that are pure in heart, Math. 5, 8. but the impure are accursed. The sacrifices performed by the wicked are abominable, he heareth not the prayers of the profane and impenitent, but casteth off as an unclean thing both them and their oblation. God requireth no such sacrifices, nor no such sacrificers. The Prophet speaking of observing the Sabbath, of offering up prayer, of bringing oblations, and of assembling themselves together, saith, To what purpose is all this? And when you appear before the Lord, who required this at your hands to tread in his Courts? His soul hated their appointed feasts, and he was weary to bear thē. And wherefore was all this? Did not God command all these things? Were they not his own ordinances? Yes, they failed not therefore in the matter performed, but in the manner of their performing: the things were good, but they did them in an evil manner: and this did corrupt the whole work, and made it unprofitable, nay hurtful to the doers. What then? should they do none of the former things? Should they neither keep the Sabbaths? nor make prayers? nor bring oblations? nor offer Incense? Must they leave all undone, because God was not pleased with that which they had done? Observe what the Prophet saith afterward, Wash you, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before his eyes, cease to do evil, learn to do well: and then, though their sins were as Scarlet, they should be made as white as snow. Isaiah 1, 18. So then, we must not leave or intermit the doing of good works, but put away the evil of our good works, and then God will accept both of us and of our good works.

Secondly, it teacheth, that as the Levites [Use 2] in this place when they drew near to God in the execution of their office must be washed, so the Ministers of the word much more, must be Lanthornes of light to others, shining before the people in holiness of life, as the stars do in the Firmament, to which they are oftentimes compared; that by walking in an vnreprouable and unblameable course, they may adorn the gospel of Christ w^c they preach and profess. It is not enough for them to be sound in the faith, but they must be also sincere in life, lest it be said unto them, What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldst take my covenant in thy mouth, seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my word behind thee? Psal. 50, 16, 17. If then they that preach the word to others do not preach unto themselves, and bring light to others, do live in darkness themselves, how shall they draw near to God, and execute his commandment in holy manner? May not the Proverb be turned upon them, Physician heal thyself? Luke 4, 23. and the reproof be justly verified in them, Thou that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? Thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal? And thou that makest thy boast of the Law, thorough breaking the Law 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 dishonorest thou God? For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you, Rom. 2, 21, 22, 23, &c. Woe then to such as are of offensive life, and lay stumbling blocks thereby before the people to discourage them from the faith, to draw them from the truth, to opē the mouths of wicked men to speak evil of the name of God, of the word of God, and of all the true servants of God. We have a more glorious calling then the Levites had: For, if the ministration of death written and engraven in stones was glorious, how shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious? For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory: and if that which is done away was glorious, much more shall that which remaineth be glorious, 2 Cor. 3.7, 8, •, 11. If then the Levites of the old Testaments, minister after a sort of the letter but not of the Sp•rit, that saw only the shadow but not y^e body, must notwithstanding never presume to handle the holy things of God with unwashen hands; how much more is it required of the Ministers of the New Testament to be of holy conversation, and to labor to be sprinkled with the blood of Christ (as the ceremony importeth) least while they preach salvation to others, themselves be reprov'd and condemned? For as a Cook dresseth and prepareth meat for others, and oftentimes tasteth least thereof himself, being cloyed with the savor of it: so is it with many in the Ministry, they prepare the food of the word, and break the bread of life for others, but digest nothing of it themselves, nor receive strength and nourishment from it, as appeareth in Judas, who was one of the twelve sent out with the rest to preach the Gospel, but yet he was the son of perdition, and perished forever. It is required of the Ministers to be examples to the flock, 1 Pet. 5, 3. that so they may convince the gainesayers both by their doctrine and by their life. If there be not an harmony between these two, but y^t we preach one thing and practice another, we disturb and distract the faith of the people, and work such a confusion among them when they see our speaking and living do not accord, that little or no profit ariseth to the Church by all our labors. When our words do cal for righteousness, and our works do proclaim unrighteousness, what do we but build the tower of Babel? Gen. 11, 4. and bind heavy burdens grievous to be borne, and lay them upon men's shoulders, but will not move them with one of our fingers? Math. 23, 4. How shall the people follow our example and the lives of their Pastors, 1 Cor. 11, 1. Phil. 3, 17, 18, 21. 1 Thess. 1, 6. if we make no conscience to go before them in the ways of godliness?

[Use 3] Thirdly, it is our duty to prepare our selves to the duties which we perform to God; we must cleanse and purge our hearts, and follow sanctification, without which no man shall see the Lord, Heb. 12.14. The Prophet willeth us to plough up our fallow ground, that we sow not among thorns, Ierem. 4, 3. We must circumcise our selves to the Lord, and take away the foreskinnes of our hearts. Every man knoweth, even he that is most simple, that if a mā should cast his seed upon the earth before it be manured and broken up, it is the loss both of his grain, and of his gain. Is there any person so weak in judgment, that he understandeth not these things? doth not common sense and reason teach us? how is it then that we will not understand so much in spiritual things, that if we receive the word with hard hearts that are not broken up, we lose all the profit of the work? May I not say with Christ, If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not: how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things? John. 3, 12. And in another place, O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times? Do ye not know that he which doeth not prepare and plough up his ground before the seed be committed to the earth, doth lose all his labor? And do ye not know, that whosoever receiveth the word into an unprepared heart, cannot look for any fruit or expect any increase? And yet not one among many is careful to deal with his own heart before he come to the house of God, or ever considereth what the work is about which he goeth, or once remembereth with what graces he ought to be qualified. If we have a show and shadow of godliness, although we deny the power thereof, we content our selves with it, and think all is well, we never regard any farther search into our souls. The inward purity, which is the life of our works, is altogether neglected; what said I, neglected? nay hated, scorned, taunted, reproached, and reviled by the most odious names y^t malice it self can find it. Christ calleth the pure in heart blessed: but we are so far degenerate from all appearance of grace, that we curse such, and brand them with all terms and titles of infamy & contempt. Thus we make our selves like to the Fig-tree, which because nothing but leaves were found upon it, was accursed, Math 21, 19. Now, to the end we may search our hearts to the bottom, observe these three rules. First, we must consider we have in this business to do with God, and not with men; and with Cornelius, let us set our selves in his presence, and make account we hear the word not of man, not of an Angel, but of the Lord himself. Acts 10. Secondly, let us search out our special sins, whensoever we come to his service: let us be grieved at them, and repent for them. If we would draw near to God in such manner as he might draw near unto us, we are taught by the Apostle, To purge our hearts, and cleanse our hands, James 4, 8. But it may be said, Can we have pure hearts? and shall we not be accepted without them? Who then can please God in any duty? I answer, we cannot attain to an absolute pureness, this is reserved to the next life, when we shall inherit the kingdom of God prepared for us. There indeed shall be nothing but purity, piety, innocence, & glory. No unclean thing shall enter into that place, the presence of GOD shall fill it with perfect sanctification; howbeit here we have but our measure of purification, we have but a small portion, we cannot attain to any perfection. The Apostle telleth us, We have received the first fruits of the Spirit, Rom. 8, 23. The first fruits were but as an handful of corn in respect of all the rest of the heap: so it is with the faithful, they have here a small portion or pittance of grace in comparison of that which we wait for hereafter. But is not God able to store us here with a full measure? He is able, but it pleaseth him to deal thus with us, because thereby his name is most glorified, 2 Cor. 12, 9, 10. thereby we are most humbled in a feeling of our infirmities, and in a sight of our own imperfections; thereby we are stirred up to seek God, and to pray to him for a supply of grace which we want, I am. 1, 5. and thereby mutual love and charity is maintained and increased, when we see that we stand in need one of another. Thirdly, it is required of us to use the means of sanctification. It is noted of the Israelites, 2 Chr. 30, 1•. that they prepared their hearts, & did seek the Lord God of their fathers. Where we see these two points are joined together, preparing of hearts, and seeking of God. And how did they seek him? In his ordinances, or else they had never found him. And his ordinances are the word, the Sacraments, and the calling upon his name. Thus must it be with us, and then shall we receive the benefit that they received. This shall be a comfort to all that come with sanctified hearts and cleansed affections from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. Though there be many wants and imperfections found in them, yet if they examine themselves, 1 Cor. 11, 28. prove and try themselves whether they be in the Faith or not, 2. Cor. 13, 5, if they bewail their sins, and reconcile themselves to God, they shall be accepted, their works shall be crowned, and their imperfections shall be covered and pardoned in and for the perfection which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

[Verse 10. Thou shalt bring the Levites before the Lord, and the children of Israel shall put their hands upon the Levites.] This is another circumstance belonging to the ordination of the Levites, which was done by imposition of hands. This ceremony was ancient and often used in the old and New Testament. Jacob used this gesture in blessing the sons of Joseph, Manasseh, and Ephraim, Genesis 48. It is used at the election of Io•hua, who was appointed to be the successor of Moses, Numb. chap. 27, verse 23. It was used by the Priests and Levites in the sacrifices, to signify thereby, that they were consecrated unto GOD. •his gesture was retained in the New Testament in sundry actions, as we have shown before in the 6. chapter. From this example of the Elders of the congregation (for it is not to be thought that all the people without difference did it) we learn that the Ministers of the Church were ordained by imposition or laying on of hands. [Doctrine.] It is noted of the Deacons appointed to look to the poor, that the Apostles prayed for them, and then laid their hands upon them, Acts 6, 6. Paul willeth Timothy not to neglect the gift that was given unto him by the prophesy, with the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery, 1 Tim. chap. 4. verse 14. And in the next Epistle, he putteth him in remembrance to stir up the gift of God which is in him by the putting on of his hands, 2 Tim. 1, 6. This was for the most part joined with prayer and fasting, Acts 14, 23. and 13, 3. The work was great, the calling was weighty, the gifts were many required to this calling, therefore they use Fasting to make them fitter to the present action, and more fervent to pour out their prayers unto the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth Laborers into his harvest.

The ends of this ceremony were many, [Reason 1] which serve as so many Reasons to confirm the point of doctrine in hand. First, that such as prayed might be stirred up with greater zeal and earnestness to call upon God, forasmuch as the laying on of the hand did move them and raise them to the lifting up of the heart. For this cause (as we shown before) the manner of ordaining Ministers and sending them into the Church, was ordinarily joined with fasting: not that they placed any merit therein, but to stir them to be more devout in prayer. And hence it is, that prayer and fasting are so often joined together as Luke 2, verse 37. Matthew 17. verse 21. Dan. 9. verse 3. Joel 1, 14. and 2, 15, 17. 1 Cor. 7, 4, &c.

Secondly, to signify that he was as an offering [Reason 2] separated to God and his service, upon whom the hands were laid. For this ceremony was taken from the manner used and observed in the sacrifices, upon which the Priests laid their hands, to show that they were consecrated to holy uses. Thirdly, to declare that [Reason 3] the hand of the Lord would be with them. For as they felt the hand of men upon their heads, so certainly they should find by a continual and comfortable experience, the hand of God to be with them in the execution of the function committed unto them, if they wer faithful in the execution thereof.

Lastly, to procure reverence unto the person [Reason 4] so set apart amongst the people, and especially to the calling it self. It is said in the election of Joshua, Numbers chapt. 27, verse 18, 20. that Moses must lay his hands upon him, that all the Congregation of the children of Israel, may be obedient: and this is one end wherefore this sign was used in the ordination of the Ministers of y^e Church.

[Use 1] Seeing therefore they were appointed to their office in this solemn manner, not in hugger mugger, but openly and publicly before all Israel, we learn that it is decent and convenient, that the Ministers should be made in the face of the church, not in private places, without any assembly fit for so solemn and sacred an action. This is a work of the day, not of the night; of the light, not of darkness: and therefore we see in this place, that at the ordaining of these Levites, the whole Congregation of Israel was gathered together: so that we may say, as Paul doth in another case, and upon another occasion, These things were not done in a corner, Acts 26, 26. Eleazar was appointed to succeed Aaron his Father in the sight of Israel, as Numb. chap. 20. verse 27. Matthias was elected in place of Judas, who was fallen from his Apostleship, when the whole multitude of the believers were gathered together, Acts 1. verse 13. yea the Deacons, an inferior office of the Chutch, who labored not in the word and doctrine, were chosen by the whole multitude, as Acts chapter 6. verse 5.

True it is, mere popular elections are not to be admitted, being the cause of all confusion and disorder; howbeit for the people to give their voices in elections moderated and governed by grave Elders and wise Pastors, hath been used in the Church in times past, & may be again, and is at this day in many places where the state of the Church, and the condition of the people will bear it. And albeit they have no voice or suffrage, it is fit they should give their consent and approbation, because the Ministers should have good report of all, 1 Timoth. 3, 7. And so much the rather ought this to be, because the congregation have a kind of interest in this business, according to the rule in Law, Quod omnium interest, ab omnibus fieri debet, that is, That which belongeth to all, should be done by all; and this maketh much for the comfort of the Minister, and for the profit of the people. This reproveth the practice oftentimes used in time of Popery, where Ministers are ordained by them secretly and closely. It is reported of Pope John the thirteenth, that he ordained Deacons in a stable: whereas their own Canons and constitutions decree, that the consent of the people should be known: and Cyprian is plain, that as God commandeth that the Priest should be placed before the face of the whole congregation of the Jews, so the Ministers ought not to be ordained but with the knowledge of the people standing by: whereby, they being present, either their faults should be discovered, or their virtues commended.

It may be asked, whether this sign, which in a general signification may also be called a Sacrament of imposition of hands, be so necessary as that it may upon no occasion be omitted? The Papists hold an absolute necessity of it, and teach that the graces of the Spirit are also inseparably annexed to it. But we cannot yield to any necessity of it: we confess it is comely and convenient, howbeit it is not of the substance or essence of ordination, no more then fasting, which also was no less joined with it then laying on of hands. Prayer we acknowledge to be needful, and so needful, that it may by no means be omitted, but neither fasting, nor laying on of hands, though both be profitable. When Christ our Savior instituted his Apostles, He breathed upon them, John 20, 22. but he did not lay hands upon them.

The like we might say of the election of Matthias, Acts 1. neither is grace necessarily tied to this ceremony and outward sign of imposition of hands. For grace is not necessarily coupled with any of the signs in the Sacraments, much less in this counterfeit Sacrament of Orders, devised and received by the Church of Rome. They observe indeed this laying on of hands, but it is like Elisha's staff laid upon the dead child by his Servant, that is, it was void and unprofitable, so is this gesture with them. For indeed the popish Priests have not any vocation and calling to the true service of God, to be Pastors and Teachers in the Church, but they are appointed to make the body of Christ, which is as much to say, as to be the murderers and killers of Christ. For so often as any Mass is celebrated among them, Christ Jesus the Lord of life is crucified, and as it were betrayed and butchered among them, forasmuch as themselves confess that they sacrifice him to God the Father: but there is no sacrifice without shedding of blood, and therefore the popish Priest-hood is no better then a detestable and a very devilish sacrilege.

Secondly, it is the duty of every Minister to [Use 2] consider diligently and seriously with himself, being warned by this ceremony, that he is separated and sanctified to one of the greatest works that are under the Sun, being taken as it were by the hand of God out of the residue of his brethren. So then, we must be stirred up hereby to our duties, and have this meditation with our selves, Doubtless I am no longer mine own man, nor at mine own disposition, I am wholly dedicated & consecrated unto God. True it is, all the faithful are so also after a sort, 1 Cor. 6.19, 20. Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price. and Ro. 12, 1. We are exhorted by the mercies of God, that we should offer up our selves a living sacrifice unto him. Nevertheless, he that is called to preach the gospel, to break and to bring unto us the bread of life and the food of salvation, is knit unto God by a straighter band, he is wholly appointed for the use of the Church of God. The charge and function is of great weight & importance, 2 Cor 2, 16. and who can be sufficient for these things? They are Messengers sent from the King of kings unto us, they reconcile God and man, and make peace after a sort between them, they assure the penitent of the pardon and forgiveness of sins, by the power of the keys committed unto them. This laying on of hands, serveth and helpeth to assure his heart that is called, that God will abundantly furnish him with necessary graces fit for his calling: he will endue them with the spirit of wisdom, of knowledge, of zeal, of constancy, of charity, of meekness, of patience, and such like. As then God maketh all the signs that he hath at any time set in his church, to be available, so that not one of them is vain or unprofitable: so may all the Ministers ordained with this sign assure themselves, that God will pour out his blessings upon them, to the end they may faithfully execute their office. It is not in vain that water in baptism is poured upon our heads, it is a good witness unto us, that we shall be washed and cleansed from our sins by the blood of Christ: forasmuch as God hath instituted it, and his promise is annexed unto it. It is not in vain that we eat a little morsel of bread, and drink a little quantity of wine, it assureth us that we are partakers of the life of our Lord Jesus Christ, and that he is our meat indeed, and our drink indeed, whensoever we come to his holy Table.

The like we may say of imposition of hands, God will not suffer it to be superfluous, but we shall perceive the fruit thereof by his pouring of his gifts into the heart: as it is said of Joshua, that he was filled with the spirit of wisdom, for Moses had laid his hands upon him: and of Timothy, that the gift of God was given unto him by the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery. But hath the laying on of hands so great power and virtue? No, but seeing this sign was no invention of man, but an institution of God, he will make it available by adding his grace and goodness thereunto. The putting on of hands was a gage thereof, representing God's pouring out of his Spirit. This then serveth to reprove such as have undertaken this calling, and forsaken the Ministry upon carnal respects, not considering that the soldier that warreth, doth not entangle himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier: and our Savior showeth, that no man having put his hands to the plough & looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God, Luke 9, 62. In this number we may also range those that embrace this present world, & live as mere worldly men, choking themselves with the fat morsels that they find abroad, the bones whereof so stick in their throat, that their voice is stopped, and their tongue is tied that they can utter no other words, but, bring, bring. But we must consider, that we are takē as it were by the hand of God from amongst the rest of the Congregation, to teach y^e people, to give an attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine, 1 Tim. 4, 13. and to take heed to our selves, that in doing these things, we may both save our selves, and them that hear us, verse 16. We are called of God to his heavenly work, who will plentifully reward us, if we be diligent in our duty and his business, Dan. 12, 13. 1 Pet. 5, 4. 1 Cor. 3, 8. He will stand with us, and his hand shall be effectual upon us, if we make conscience of our calling. But if we be careless and unconscionable, negligent and idle, as slothful servants that set not their minds upon their masters business, his hand will be sore & severe against us, to revenge the dishonor done to his name, and the hurt done to his people. The Papists boast of giving the graces of the Spirit by this gesture, they greaze their fingers, and disguise themselves with apish toys, but all to no purpose, as we have proved already, forasmuch as it cannot by the bare outward action confer grace, and therefore it is remēbred touching the Apostle Paul, that he received grace from God, before Ananias came unto him, and laid his hands upon him, Acts 9, 17.

Thirdly, hereby ariseth great comfort unto [Use 3] him that is lawfully and rightly ordained. For it serveth much to confirm and strengthen him, being thereby admonished that God accepteth him as an holy offering. Let us remember y^t it is he which hath set us on work, and he will be present with us, to remove our shoulders from the burden, or rather to make the heavy yoke which he hath put upon us easier, and the burden which we bear to be lighter, that we do not shrink and sink down under the weight thereof. True it is, men only did lay their hands upon us, howbeit God is president of the whole action, and he worketh with his own ordinance and institution.

We have from hence an assurance of our calling, that it is not only or principally from men, but from God; which must move us to execute the same with all courage and constancy, being terrified with no fear or danger of enemies or opposition against us, and to ouerstride them all with great cheerfulness. Are we therefore crossed at any time in the discharge of our duty? and do men rise up against us, when we stand up in the name of God? Let us not be afraid and hold our peace, lest he confound us before them, Ier. 1, 17. Let us not stand in fear of their faces, for he is with us to deliver us. Verse 8. and no man shall set upon us to hurt us, as Acts 18, 10.

Let us call to our remembrance our entering into our Calling, that we were ordained by laying on of hands, wherein men were the instruments of Almighty GOD, to assure us of his presence with us, and approbation of us. This consideration stayed David, being ready to shrink down under the burden, having the charge of a great people, y^t could not be numbered nor counted <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> for multitude, and it raised him up as it were beaten down to the ground, to wit, that he came not to the kingdom by his own ambition or usurpation, as his enemies falsely charged and accused him, but by the authority of God who called him, and the warrant of Samuel the Prophet who anointed him: so that whensoever we find cold comfort in the world, let us comfort our selves in the lawfulness of our calling, and when we are evilly entertained of men, let us remember that God hath entertained us into his service, and therefore let us be found faithful therein.

[Use 4] Lastly, from hence sundry instructions arise to the people. For when they see y^e hands of men solemnly laid upon the heads of those that are to be ordained, and the action always accompanied with prayer, and oftentimes with fasting, it stirreth them up to be more fervent, zealous, earnest, and vehement, when they brought him that was chosen, as it were before God himself, and presented him before him. So then we must learn, that when we would have Ministers to preach y^e word of God, everyone must have care to pray in this holy action, because it is not a pastime or may-game for little children; it is, that the Church of God may be governed as he hath appointed it, which is a matter of no small importance. The Ministers are called to govern in the house of God (which is the pillar that upholdeth the truth:) seeing therefore so great a Treasure is committed unto them, which also must be brought unto us by their mouths and means, we must for our own parts, be careful to commend them unto his grace, that it would please him to thrust forth such Laborers into his Harvest, such as may be faithful and effectual instruments, to bring us to knowledge and faith, to repentance and salvation: and that he would distribute unto them that are chosen, such gifts as are requisite for them to do their duties, and discharge the administration committed unto them. For if we have not such as make conscience of their duties, woe unto the Church, there cannot a greater plague and judgment befall unto it.

Again, it is their duty to have a special care, as much as lieth in them, to choose faithful Ministers, and such as are apt to teach, & every way meet to execute that office. In the function of the Deacons, the Apostles charged the brethren to look out men of honest report, full of the holy Ghost, & of wisdom, whom they might appoint over that business, Acts 6, 3. much more ought this to be in them that have charge over men's souls. But (alas) how many are there, that would with all their hearts, that there were no Ministers at all, that the word of God were utterly buried and banished out of the world, that so they might spend their days in pleasure, and at last go to hell with ease? We cannot say that these do speak lies through hypocrisy, 1 Timoth. 4, 2. forasmuch as they do not hide their iniquity, their impiety, their blasphemy, but like mad dogs, or shameless beasts, do bark and bray against the truth, as if the very sound of the word did vex and torment them. O how, or when will these profane persons be brought to pray that the Flock may be attended with faithful Shepherds, the host of God furnished with trusty Captains, and the Corn of the field reaped by painful Laborers! Seeing then there are such filthy swine among us, that tread the precious Pearls of God under feet, such as care not how y^e church be served, or what Ministers they have, it is just with God to send them such as famish the flock, but do not feed it: such as betray the host, but do not defend it: such as ruin the house, but do not rear it up. Lastly, the Church, seeing this public and peculiar commending of them that are ordained of God, should learn to acknowledge them to be set over them of God, and by it be stirred up to receive them and reverence them, and so have them in singular love for their works sake, submitting themselves unto thē in such things as pertain to their office and function. Let every man therefore be careful, as if it were for his own business, seeing it is for his own benefit and profit. Every man hath his part in this work: and everyone is endangered by it, if it be not sincerely executed.

[Verse 14.15. Thus shalt thou separate the Levites from among the children of Israel: and the Levites shall be mine. And after that shall the Levites go in to do the service of the Tabernacle, &c.] Here is a reason rendered, why the Levites must be cleansed and washed when they are brought before the Tabernacle of the Congregation, because they are his. True it is, all creatures are his, Psal. 50. but the Levites are his by a special right, they are his servants to serve in the Tabernacle. For the better understanding of this point, observe that there is a threefold kind of service and servants, by creation, by sanctification, and by function. By creation, all must do service unto God, and are under his power and providence. All men, though they strive never so much, yet shall be compelled to stoop and yield unto him; For who hath resisted his will? Rom. 9.19. Thus all the Reprobate, yea the devils themselves bow to him and do him service against their wills. And in this sense the Prophet saith, All are his servants, Psalm 119.91. Such are they whom God useth as instruments to serve his providence, and so was Cyrus (the raiser up of the Persian Monarchy) his servant to do his will, who is therefore called his shepherd, and his anointed, Isaiah 44.28. and 45.1. By sanctification they are the servants of God, who are redeemed from the bondage of sin and Satan to serve the Lord in holiness and true righteousness all the days of their life, Luke 1, 74, 75. Rom. chap. 8.22. There is no comfort or consolation in being the servant of God in the first sense, because the devils and dumb creatures, and all damned spirits have as great a portion in it as we: but this is our comfort, if we be his servants by piety and faith. Lastly, such also are said to be his servants as serve him, not only in the common profession of godliness, but in regard of some special function and office wherein they are employed. Thus are Magistrates called his servants, Rom. 13, 6. and Christ himself, Isaiah. 53, 11. My righteous servant shall justify many. So Moses, Josh. 1, 2. and David, Psal. 18. Thus are the Levites in this place called the Lord's, and said to serve him in a special work, and Psal. 134, 1. Bless ye the Lord, all ye servants of the Lord, which by night stand in the house of the Lord. So then, the point to be considered from hence is this, that all the Ministers are the Lord's servants appointed to serve him in the work of the Ministry, whether they be called extraordinarily or ordinarily, they must consider they are the Lord's. Thus he speaketh by the Prophet, Jeremiah 35.15. and 25.4. I have sent unto you all my servants the Prophets, rising up early, that ye may turn every man from his evil ways. Thus the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 4.1. Let a man so think of us, as of the Ministers of Christ. And in 1. Tim. 1.12. Christ Jesus accounted me faithful, and put me in his service. No man therefore must think it any way to be any disgrace or disparagement unto him, but rather a credit and honor to be the Lord's servant employed in a special place of service, as it were near to his person. If it be esteemed as an high degree of honor to belong to some Nobleman, or to some Prince: it is a greater preferment to belong to the King of Kings.

[Reason 1] For the Ministers are called and separated to that end and purpose. Paul speaking of him self saith, He was a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an Apostle, Rom. 1, 1. Separated unto the Gospel of God, not of men, neither by man, Gal. 1, 1. but by the will of God, 1 Cor. 1, 1. Every man must be mindful of his calling, and consider by whom he was called, & take heed he pass [Reason 2] not the bounds wherein he is set. Secondly, they have sundry titles given to them, which are not idle, but serve to put them in mind of their service; they are called Messengers, Mal. 3, 1. Mark 1, 2. Luk. 7.27. they are called Ambassadors, 2 Cor. 5, 20. they are called Stewards of the house, 1 Cor. 4, 1, 2. they are called Soldiers that must seek to please their Captain, 2 Tim. 2, 1. and such like.

[Use 1] This serveth to reprove such as neither can nor will do their masters business. There are many think it a great disgrace, & a base thing for them to do that service which they ought, who notwithstanding are not ashamed to take wages of their master. Many give themselves to serve the world, and have so filled their mouths with gravel, that they have emptied their minds of grace. These do so savor of the earth, and of earthly things, and busy themselves to enrich their coffers, that they have little care of the flock of Christ. But we cannot serve two masters, we cannot serve God and Mammon, Math 6, 24. We must not entangle our selves in the affairs of this life, 2 Tim. 2, 4 Woe also unto all ignorant Ministers that can do nothing, which are blind guides, and cannot see to do their masters business: if thē these do lead the blind, being blind themselves, both must fall into the ditch, Mat. 15, 14. We may join unto these such as are idle and unconscionable, and cannot be brought to take any pains, who never consider y^t they are charged to preach in season, and out of season, 2 Tim. 4, 2. Lastly, it meeteth with such as are scandalous in life, and as unsavory salt, who serve not the Lord, but their own belly, Rom, 16, 18. A servant honoreth his master, saith the Prophet, Mal. 1, 6. but such dishonor the Lord by their evil life, and make themselves unworthy either to do the work, or to receive the wages.

Secondly, the Ministers being God's Servants [Use 2] are put in mind of three things, fidelity, sincerity, & conformity. The first is a notable property in a good servant to be faithful unto his master, he must not purloine from him, but show all good fidelity, Tit. 2, 10. that so they may adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things. Thus ought it to be in the Ministers, when they see the sword coming, they must blow the Trumpet, lest if any do perish through their silence, their blood be required at the watchman's hand, Ezek. 3.18. they must keep back nothing that is unprofitable unto them, Acts 20, chapt. 20. but declare unto them the whole counsel of God, Verse 27. It is required in Stewards that a man be found faithful, 1 Cor. 4. verse 2. for they must give an account to their Lord and master, Heb. 13, 17. an account not of silver and gold, but of that which over-valueth all the treasures of the world, to wit, the souls of mē, which cost a great price to redeem, 1 Pet. 1.19. Secondly, there must be sincerity in them and integrity, doing his business with a true heart and a right affection, not for sinister & by-respects, but to obey his will. Blessed are those servants that seek his glory, and not their own; that seek to approve themselves to Christ, not to the world, as men-pleafers; neither hunt after the praise and applause of foolish men: and therefore the Apostle saith, Galat. 1.10. Do I seek to please men? If I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ. Nay, Christ himself witnesseth that he came not to seek his own glory, but his fathers, John. 8, 50. I seek not mine own glory, there is one that seeketh and judgeth. Let us altogether in this work forget our selves, that we may remember our master, & tread our own honor in the dust, y^t we may exalt his. Lastly, we must be conformable to Christ Jesus, & be ready as his servants to take up our cross & follow him. We shall be sure to meet with many crosses, and to suffer diverse afflictions in the discharge & for the discharge of our Ministry, all which we must be content to endure, and be ready to possess our souls with patience; remembering that the Apostles departed from the presence of the Council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for y^e name of Christ, Acts 5, 41. It is enough for the servant to be as his Lord is, Math. 10, 24. Will any earthly servant desire a better condition, then his master hath? Let it therefore content us, that we bear no more, nay not so much as he did bear. If we will live with him, we must be ready to die with him; and if we will reign with him in the life to come, we must suffer with him in this present life, 2 Tim. 2, 11, 12, if we deny him, he will deny us before his Father and his holy Angels.

[Use 3] Lastly, the people are from this Title remembered of their duties, which may be reduced to these three heads, a reverend estimation, an humble submission, and withal a necessary limitation. For first, seeing the Ministers of God are his servants, the servants of the most high God, and put in their Office by his authority, That led captivity captive, & gave gifts unto men, Ephes. 4.8: we ought so to esteem of them, as of the Ministers of Christ, 1 Cor. 4, 1. which we shall do, if we acknowledge that we have to do with God and his ordinance, whensoever the word is brought unto us. If an earthly Prince should send a messenger unto any of us, he is regarded for the Princes sake that sent him. We are Ambassadors for Christ, saith the Apostle, as though God did beseech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled unto God, 2 Cor. 5, ver. 20. and therefore we should be heard, received, and respected for our Masters sake.

Again, they must submit themselves to our doctrine, not only when we hear pleasing things, precious promises, and gracious comforts, but when we hear the word sounding an alarm in our ears, uttering reproofs, delivering threatenings, and denouncing judgments. We see in human things, we are content to accept of the excuse of men, that say they are but servants and messengers: they crave pardon because they are servants, and they obtain it. So standeth the case with us, we are sent of God who hath put his word into our mouths, The Lord God hath spoken, who can but prophesy? Let us not therefore be blamed, we are Messengers, we cannot but do our message, for the love of almighty God & of his people constraineth us. How then should we hold our peace, when we are commanded to speak?

Lastly, this Title importeth a limitation, for no more is to be ascribed unto us then unto servants. We are indeed as the Stewards of the house, not in the number of the lowest and meanest servants, howbeit yet we are servants, as 1 Cor. 3, 5. What is Paul, or Cephas, or Apollos, but the Ministers by whom ye believe? And therefore when Cornelius ascribed more to Peter then should be yielded to a servant, he forbad him, saying, Stand up, for I myself also am a man. But not many in our days offend this way, we have turned honoring of them into contempt, and are so far from falling at their feet, that we are ready to trample them under our feet, and make them our foot-stool: who are for no other cause accounted our enemies, but because they tell us the truth.

[Verse 23, 24. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, This is it that belongeth unto the Levites: from twenty and five year old, &c.] In these words we have a limitation annexed by the express commandment of God, touching the time of entering into the office of the Levites, to wit, at the age of 25. years. This may seem to be contrary to that which we noted before, chap. 4, 23, 31, 33. where the age of thirty years is appointed. If then it be asked how it cometh to pass, that in these several places several times are assigned for their election into the office? and how it falleth out that five years are cut off which before were granted? I answer, [Answer.] here is no contrariety, these Scriptures are thus to be reconciled. The five years restrained in this place, which were enlarged before, served for trial and probation of such as entered into the office and service of the Sanctuary. For, when they were five and twenty years old, they began to join themselves with the rest, and to minister before the Lord; but being thirty, and found fit, they entered fully and wholly upon their calling: and therefore Chapt. 4. verse 3. Moses saith, Fit to do the work: but in this place they are said, to go in to execute. Even as such as must go to war are first trained and mustered, and taught how to fight and skirmish, that afterward they may know how to buckle on their armor in earnest, and to look the enemy in the face: so was it in this spiritual warfare, they were for a certain time trained, which years once expired, they were admitted. The Doctrine from hence is this, that the Ministers must be proved, tried, & examined before they be admitted to teach the people. The Apostles did not by their sole authority, appoint one to succeed in place of Judas, who was fallen from y^e Apostleship, but they brought two forth, and presented them or set them up before the people, that they might judge whither they were fit or not, Acts 1, 23. The Church ought not to appoint any to the holy Ministry without good trial of their ability and sufficiency; forasmuch as two were set up, and caused to stand before the congregation, that it might be known whether they were such persons as ought to be chosen, and that any man might object against them, if he had ought to object. [Object.] But it may be said, Is this apposing or examining necessary at all times, and to be used toward all persons? I answer, if they be fully and famously known to them that have the right of choosing and trying, it is not needful: howbeit it is necessary that they should offer themselves to this examination. We see this in schools of learning; such as are to be preferred to any dignity that is void, there is an examination required, albeit the parties to be chosen be never so sufficient, and their sufficiency fully known to such as have the voices of election in their hands: how much more then ought this to be, in this most weighty business of the Church? This is farther apparent out of the Apostle, 1 Tim. 3, 10. Let these also first be proved, then let them use the office of a Deacon, being found blameless; so that they ought not, before they be proved: and when he saith, Let these also, he signifieth, that the Ministers of the Church ought to undergo this trial. Besides, they must be without reproof, and have good report of all, Tit. 1, 6. But it cannot be known whether they be blameless without examination and trial going before. And this standeth upon good reason.

[Reason 1] For first, he is to take upon him a greater charge, then they that have most costly jewels and precious pearls of wonderful price committed unto them: forasmuch as he is to govern the sons and daughters of the King of heaven and earth, and hath the price of the blood of Christ committed unto him, Acts 20, 28.

Secondly, there be many subtle workers and deceitful dealers, transforming themselves into Angels of light, 2 Cor. 11, 13, 14, and into the Apostles of Christ: they have indeed sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves, Math. 7, 15. They seek craftily and cunningly to creep in, that they may hurry and weary the flock, and then destroy and devour it, Acts 20, 29, 30. They speak perverse things, to draw away disciples after them, ver. 30. If then there be not a narrow search and trial made of their doctrine and conversation, before they be admitted into the Ministry, they have a gate and gap opened unto them to enter to the ruin of the Church.

Thirdly, the office of Deacons was a function of less duty and danger in the Church; they were only to attend upon the poor, and yet they must not have admission without due trial and examination, as Acts 6, 3. They must look out men of honest report from among them, to appoint over this business: and the Apostle expressly chargeth, that they should be tried, 1 Tim. 3, 10. If then it be necessary for a Deacon, much more for a Minister: if for him that hath regard but to one part of the Church, much more for him that hath charge over the whole: and if for him that is occupied in the distribution of money, much more for him that is occupied in the dispensation of the word and Sacraments.

Fourthly, because the counsel and advice of more for trial is thought needful to be used in matters of less importance, in all which, two eyes see more then one: as when a man taketh upon him the profession of physic, whose care is only to see to the health and good estate of the body, albeit he hath spent many years in the study of the liberal arts, yet is he by the law to pass the hands of four approved Doctors, whether he be meet for that practice or not: how much more ought this to be regarded in the spiritual Physician that is to cure the diseases of the soul, which are more manifold to be numbered, more secret to be discerned, more difficult to be healed, and more dangerous if they be not remedied?

Fifthly, this will make them to be more regarded, and better accepted, even as the Ministers of Jesus Christ, and it will procure more authority to their persons.

Sixthly, it will stop the door against all insufficient and unlearned Ministers, they will not dare or presume to offer themselves to have entrance into the Church of God; yea, it will cut off all hope from them, when they shall understand, that there are many vigilant eyes of vigilant watchmen set upon them to keep them out, and to lock the door fast against them.

This serveth notably to meet with the [Use 1] horrible abuse hereof, practiced in popery. True it is, they dare not deny the truth & use of this, or utterly reject this doctrine: yet they do no better then make a mock of it, as they do also of many other things. For do they examine them that come to enter into the Order of Priesthood, according to the rule of the Apostle, 1 Tim. 3, 2. Whether they be vnreproueable, sober, watchful, modest, harberous, wise, gentle, apt to teach, able to convince, and such as govern well their own families? Do they go about to try & prove, or do they demand and enquire, whether they be no drunkards, no quarrellers, no covetous persons, which be the qualities that God requireth them to be adorned withal? No, there is no question made of these, or of any of them, all these lie deeply buried, and little regarded. And instead of these they call the parties before them, then the Bishop or else the Arch-Deacon his Deputy examineth them, I warrant you, of some deep points of profound divinity, able to astonish a young nouice; as first, whether they be 25. years old? Secondly, whether they understand any Latin, which a Grammar-scholar, & a young child may quickly do? Thirdly, whether they be legitimate and not bastards or base borne, that is, whether their father were an honest man, and their mother an honest woman? Fourthly, they must mark and handle every member of their body, whether they be sound, and number their eyes, their ears, their hands, their fingers, their feet; and if they mi: strust, they must put off their shoes, to see whether they be of wood or of flesh: they must have no defect or deformity of body; but of the blindness and blemishes, of the lameness and maimednes of the mind, there is no enquiry. Fifthly, whether they ha• chaste flesh. What is that? whether they keep a Concubine, and be unclean in life, and given to whoredom? No, but it is, whether they have married two wives, or else a widow: as for other incontinency, the rule is, if they cannot live chastely, they must deal charily, or warily and closely. Sixthly, how long they have been in Orders, and what, when, & of whom they have received their Orders? Lastly, what living they have to maintain them, either by inheritance or by benefice? These are great points of learning, which the popish Priests must be able to answer: these are deep mysteries, but as the Apostle saith, They are the depths of Satan. For can day and night, can light and darkness, can heat and cold be more contrary, then these things are to the institution and ordinance of God? To name these fooleries and babbles, is sufficient confutation of them, and therefore we will pass by them, and come to our selves.

Secondly, we have a direction from hence, [Use 2] given to the Overseers of the Church, to take great heed they give not an easy entrance and access into the Church, to such as are for knowledge, defective, and for life, offensive. The Apostle hath a worthy exhortation to Timothy, I charge the before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect Angels, that thou observe these things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality: lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins, &c. 1 Tim. 5, 21, 22, 24, 25. If some be rash, we must not join with them, & think our selves discharged, if we can say, I was not alone, or I was not the chief and principal, or others were as forward as I; I could not gain-say it, I was loath to be singular & to devide myself from the rest. For we must show our dislike of bad courses, and if we cannot stop the course of evil, we must not be silent and hold our peace, but open our mouths, & speak against it, or else we make our selves partakers of other men's sins. So it was with Joseph of Arimathea, he would not consent to other men's sins. He was a Disciple of Jesus, John 19, 38: an honorable Counselor that waited for the kingdom of God, Mark. 15, 42: a good and just man; he consented not to the counsel and deed of them that judged the Lord of life to be worthy of death, Luke 23, 50, 51. For whosoever doth not resist evil, he consenteth and agreeth unto it, and he that doth not avert from wrong and keep away injury from another when he is able, is as much in fault as if he lifted up his hand to do wrong himself. It is not enough for us to look to our own ways, but we must overlook the ways of others: for if we join with them, we are accessory to their evils. In sin, some are principal, and some are accessories, by the laws of GOD and men: and both ways we shall bring upon our selves the judgments of God.

Lastly, let all Pastors, of what gifts soever [Use 3] they be, and how richly soever they are furnished with excellent graces, and in what manner soever they are qualified, though they be abundantly stored and furnished with all learning divine and human, yet they must willingly submit themselves to this trial, and undergo this examination. It ought to be in well ordered Churches, as it is in well ordered Cities. No man is admitted to set up in any mystery, but such as offer some piece of work to the Masters of the Company, to declare their skill in that faculty, for which they are purposed to open their shop: So should such as intend the ministry of the word, as it were to give a taste of their skil & knowledge by subjecting themselves to this examining. It doth not argue any want of gift, to be ready to have our gifts proved, but the contrary giveth just cause of suspicion of some want. There is no man that hath good & pure gold, is unwilling to bring it to the touchstone, but he that hath the counterfeit. It is not the just dealing tradesman that is afraid to have his weights or the mete-yard brought in place, but the deceiver. The Gentiles which sometimes speak of our religion, do serve as witnesses, to teach us the state of former times. We read in Lampridius writing the life of Alexander Seuerus, that the Emperor in choice of his Magistrates made them stand openly to be examined of any man, and allowed any to make exceptions against them, Because (saith he) the Jews and Christians used this order in choosing their Ministers. If both the Jews and the Christians observed this order, what warrant have we to break it, or to take up another order? And if that Emperor would have this observed in the Commonwealth, why not much rather in the Church? It shall be an honor unto us to be content to be tried. It will manifest our humility, that we are not high conceited of our selves and of our own gifts: yea, it shall serve the more to our comfort throughout the whole course of our lives, & the administration of our office. Thus did Samuel offer himself to the trial, & was content to hear what any man could object against him, 1 Sam. 12, 3. Behold, here I am, witness against me before the Lord, and before his anointed, whose Ox have I taken? or whose asse, &c. Happy are those Ministers that follow this example: and happy are those Churches that follow that order which GOD hath appointed.

CHAP. IX.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, &c.

2. Let the Children of Israel also keep the Passover at his appointed season, &c.

IN this Chapter Moses proceedeth to show the manner of their sanctification, wherein observe two things: the first concerning the Passover; the second concerning the cloud covering the Tabernacle, and governing the remouings & encampings of the Israelites. The Passover is double, the one for such as were clean, the other for such as were unclean. The former Passover containeth the commandment of God, and the obedience of Moses. Touching the commandment, we have here a repetition of the feast of the Passover instituted before, as we see, Exod. 12. But wherefore doth God again mention it in this place? It was for two causes: first, because such is our slackness and security in holy things, that except God's commandment be daily urged, repeated, and beaten into our hearts, we quickly forget the same, Phil. 3.1. 1 Thess. 4, 2. Secondly, the Israelites did not certainly know, whether they should celebrate it in their journeys in the wilderness, or not, Exod. 12, 25.

All feasts were instituted to teach men to know God and his Son Jesus Christ, and to praise him for his benefits. So the Passover was ordained to keep in remembrance the wonderful and miraculous deliverance of the people out of Egypt, and that they might be taught to look for deliverance by Jesus Christ the Lamb of God, slain touching the virtue & efficacy of it, even from the beginning of the world. This Passover was the second ordinary sacrifice of the Jews, touching the eating of the Paschal Lamb, whereby the remembrance of their departure out of Egypt was celebrated, and the death of Christ the true Passover was represented. So then, it had respect and relation, partly to the time past, and partly to the time to come.

In handling hereof, we must consider, first, the circumstances, both of place where it was observed, to wit, at Sinai, where the law had been delivered, for as yet they were not gone from that place: and of the time prescribed before, on the 14. day of the first month. Secondly, the Passover it self, both the substance of it, and the rites; both the matter and the manner of the celebrating of it, Deut. 16, 1, 2. Exod. 12. The Sum whereof is this: Every householder was commanded to take a Lamb without blemish, verse 5. a male of the first year for his house, and kill it at evening, verse 6. then they must take the blood, & strike it on the two side-posts, and on the upper door post of the houses wherein they did eat it, verse 7. and they must eat the flesh of it not raw or sodden with water, verse 9. but roste with fire, verse 8. with unleavened bread and with bitter herbs; nothing must remain of it until the morning: if there did, it must be burnt with fire, verse 10. And all this must be done with girding up of their garments, with putting on of their shoes, & the taking of their walking staves in their hands, as men that were in haste, that must fly for their lives, verse 11. All this being literally considered, belongeth nothing unto us: for the Passover is passed over together with the law of ceremonies, and all these rites have an end: howbeit the Lord meant that these should be figures of things to come, whereof we have now the truth and substance, since the time that our Lord Jesus Christ hath been manifested to the world. This is the cause why S. Paul telleth the Colossians, that these things were but shadows, the body whereof is in Christ. Let us therefore come in particular to the uses which we are to make of this Passover; the ground and foundation whereof is to be taken out of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 5, 7, 8. Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us: therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. As then the Jews had their Passover, so the Christians have their Passover: as they had their Lamb, so we have our Lamb: as they kept their Feast, so we must keep our Feast. For God never meant and intended to ordain any ceremony among his people, which contained not some inward signification and profitable instruction to the end of the world. If we have ceremonies that serve not to some good end, we may boldly pronounce, that mā and not God is the author of them.

Observe therefore from this type, that Christ Jesus is our Passover that was sacrificed [Use 1] for us. John the Baptist pointeth him out with the finger, and expresseth the meaning of this figure, saying, Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world, John 1, 29, 36. And afterward in the history of the passion it is shown, that the soldiers which brake the legs of the thieves which were crucified with him, brake not his legs, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken, John 19, 36. These words are spoken in the law of the Paschal Lamb: thus doth John apply the type to the truth it self, and thereby maketh the Paschal Lamb a figure of Christ, the only person put apart by God the Father to be the ransom of the world, who hath by his obedience & the merit of his passion taken away from all that believe in his Name, both among the Jews and Gentiles their sins of all sorts, satisfying the severe justice of God to their endless comfort and salvation. Hence it is, that the Prophets and Apostles say, He was brought as a Lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth, Isaiah 53, 5. Gal. 2, 20. 1 Pet. 1, 19. Revel. 5, 9. Acts 8, 32. There is no other way that could relieve us and redeem us, all the most precious things in the world were too base, and all creatures in heaven and earth too weak to work this wonderful work, Isaiah 59, 16. Heb. 2, 14. and 10, 14. Now, we must understand, that he remoueth our sins four ways; by ablation, by imputation, by expiation, and by mortification. First, he taketh thē away from us, by removing the guilt and the punishment from us; again, as our surety he put them upon himself. And thus by imputation our sins became his, and his righteousness is made ours, because he that knew no sin, was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, 2. Cor. 5, 21. He bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we should live unto righteousness, 1 Pet. 2, 24. Furthermore, he hath taken away sins when he removed them out of the sight of God by expiation and propitiation, 1 John 2, 2, 3. Isaiah 38, 17. Mich. 7, 19. Lastly, he remoueth them away in this life by mortification, and in death by perfect sanctification. These things being duly considered, nothing should rejoice a man more then the remembrance of Christ's death, whereby the bondage of all misery and the misery of all bondage is taken from us, Acts 2, 26. This made the Apostle say, God forbid that I should glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, Gal. 6, ver. 14. He felt in his soul the wrath of God, the terrors of death, and the torments of hell for us, Isaiah 53, 10, 11, 12. John 12, 27. Math. 26, 38. which made him cry out, that he was forsaken, Math 27, 46. This was figured out by the roasting of the Lamb with fire: for the wrath of God due to us and our sins was kindled as a furnace made seven times hotter then it was wont to be made, and he was cast into the burning fiery furnace. He trode the winepress alone, and of the people there was none with him, Isaiah 63, verse 3. In him we have the remedy for all evils, and can have salvation from none other, Acts 4, 12. and therefore we must all come unto him. Whosoever is sick, I speak of spiritual sickness, let him make haste to Christ, for he is the Physician of our souls, Math. 9, verse 12. He that is hungry, let him go to him, for he is the bread that came down from heaven, John. 6, verse 33. He that is dry through heat, and thirsty, let him make haste and run with speed unto him, for he is a well of water springing up to eternal life, John 4, verse 14. He that is covered with the dark mists of ignorance, let him seek to him, for he is the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world, John 1, verse 9. If we be pressed down with our unrighteousness and our sins, he is our righteousness and sanctification, 1 Corin. 1, verse 30. If we be in bondage, he is our redemption: if we find our own folly and simplicity toward all good things, he is our wisdom. If we fear death, he is our life: if we desire to ascend up to heaven, he is the way: if we would be delivered from error, he is the truth, John 14, ver. 6. If we would come unto the Father, he is the door, no man can come unto him but by him. This should move all impenitent persons to turn from sin unto righteousness, and from the kingdom of Satan, unto God; and this will move us, if anything in the world will. Every man is by nature the servant of sin & bondslave of Satan. Christ Jesus, to heal us of this plague-sore, when no other physic could cure us, made a plaster of his own blood: the pain which he took in the making of it, caused him to sweat drops of water and blood, and cost him his life: then woe be to us, if we lay not this precious plaster to our harts which will draw away the corruption of thē, and work a speedy and certain cure: forasmuch as by continuing in sin, we frustrate the death of Christ, and as much as lieth in us, crucify the Son of God afresh unto our selves, and put him to an open shame, Hebr. 6, 6. For our sins are the nails that nailed to the Cross his hands and his feet, and as the spear that thrust him to the heart. When the Israelites did eat the Passover in Egypt, and sprinkled the blood of the Lamb upon the posts of their doors, the Angel, sent to destroy, passed over their houses, and destroyed them not: but the Egyptians, whose dooreposts were not sprinkled, were destroyed by the destroyer. So if we feed on Christ by a lively faith, and sprinkle the doors of our harts with his blood, the judgments of God in this life, and the terrible curse of death with the fearful sentence of condemnation, and all punishments rightly due to our sins shall pass over us, and shall not come near to us, so much as to touch us. But contrariwise, if we lay not hold on Christ, all these curses shall come vpō us & overtake us. For as it was not enough for the Israelites to kill the Lamb, but they must sprinkle the blood thereof upon the posts of their own doors, not of other men; so must we by a lively faith apply his merits. And as the blood of the Lamb did figure out the blood of Christ, so the sprinkling of it upon the door posts representeth the sprinkling of it upon our hearts, to deliver us from eternal death, without which it can profit us nothing at all.

Secondly observe, that as the Passover [Use] was an ordinary Sacrament of the Old Testament, so it is a type answering fitly and fully to the Lord's Supper, a Sacrament of the New Testament. For that which the Passover was to the Jews, the same is the last Supper of Christ to Christians, and came in place of it. This is the cause why the Lord Jesus delivered his last Supper at the evening, immediately after the eating of the Paschal Lamb, to show that it came in place thereof: to which circumstance of time the church is not bound, and therefore instead of the evening, we use the morning, and for the day we make choice of the Sabbath before other days, and touching the time of y^e day, we do it before meat, not after supper.

Now consider the resemblances between these Sacraments. As one is called the Lord's Passover, Exod. 12.12. so this is called the Lord's Supper, 1 Cor. 11 20. God calleth the Lamb the Paschal Lamb, because the Angel in the common destruction passed over the houses of the Israelites: so Christ calleth the bread by the Name of his body that was broken for us, Luke 22.19. The Lord speaking of the ends of the rites used in the Passover, saith, This shall be for a memorial, Exod. 12.14. and a sign unto them, Exodus. 13.9. so Christ saith, Do this in remembrance of me, Luke. 22.19. God saith of the Lamb, Take ye, Exod. 12.5. Christ saith of the bread, Take ye, Matth. 26.26. God saith of the Paschal Lamb, Eate ye, verse 11. Christ saith of the bread in the Supper, Eate ye; and of the Cup, Drink ye. Thus we see there is a notable coherence between both these. Wherein we must mark, that the Scripture speaking of the Sacraments, giveth to y^e outward Sign the name of the thing signified, so that they have the names of those things given to them which they seal and represent, Gen. 17.10. 1. Cor. 10, 4, 16. and 11.24. Luke 22.22. Both because to all the faithful and true believers, the things themselves are given with the signs, and because our affections should be lifted up from earth to heaven, from the elements to Christ and his blessings, represented, offered, and exhibited by them; and because we are full of doubting and unbelief like to Thomas one of the twelve, we will not believe the promises until in some measure we feel them in our hearts.

Whereby we see clearly and evidently, that the ground of transubstantiation, & of the real presence, is weak and tottering, built upon the sand of man's invention, not upon the infallible rock of the word of God. The Church of Rome will have the words taken literally, and not figuratively: but this overthroweth the certainty of our faith, fighteth against the grounds of right reason, and implieth sundry gross contradictions. For at the first institution and celebration of the Supper, it maketh two Christ's, one that giveth, another that is given: one at the Table, another in the mouths and stomachs of the disciples. In which of these shall we believe? in both we must not, forasmuch as we are commanded to believe in Christ, as in one, not in Christ's, as speaking of many; as it was said to Abraham, in his seed, not in his seeds, Gal. 3.16.

Secondly, it overthroweth the Sacrament, consisting of two parts, a visible sign and an invisible grace signified: but if the bread were really the body of Christ, then there could be no outward sign to represent the inward grace.

Thirdly, it maketh the body of Christ to be in more places than one at one time, which destroyeth the nature of a true body.

Fourthly, the Apostle calleth it bread oftentimes, even after consecration, 1 Cor. 10.16. and 11.26, 27, 28.

Lastly, the wicked as well as the godly should receive Christ, nay mice and rattes as well as they; which is horrible blasphemy to imagine and determine. But of this I have spoken more at large elsewhere. But they object, that men in their last Wills speak plainly that they may be understood. It is true indeed, and so did Christ speak plainly; but they make him speak absurdly. To speak plainly, and yet withal, figuratively, are not contrary one to another. For it is plain, that at the same time Christ himself used as figurative a speech as this, John. 14.6. and 15.1. I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life: I am the true Vine, ye are the branches: yea, in the institution of the Supper, we must of necessity acknowledge a figure, Luke 22.10. The Cup is the New Testament. And there is oftentimes more plainness and evidence in a figure, then in a proper speech uttered without a figure: as also these words, This is my Body, are much more comfortable to us, then if it had been barely said, This is a figure of my body, because they manifest the near conjunction of the sign with the thing signified in so much that they which partake the one, shall be assured to receive the other

To proceed a little further in this point of y^e Passover and the Supper, we have somewhat to observe, touching our obedience. The Jews were to go to the celebration hereof far and near, to the place that the Lord should choose; and therefore nothing should be so carefully esteemed as these exercises of our religion, which by the ordinance of God, represent, seal, and apply unto us the benefits of Christ's death and Passion. The Passover under the Law, was frequented of all Israel, albeit it were done with long journeys and tedious travels and troubles: So ought this Sacrament of Christ's Supper, it should be oftentimes received, 1 Cor. 11.26. Things that are sweet and comfortable, dear and pleasant to a man, are oftentimes remembered and used. If our bodies be hungry, we shall delight to refresh and repast our selves; and if we have hungry souls, that long after Christ the Bread of Life and the food of them, (for he is meat indeed and drink indeed) we will often desire to feed upon him, which bringeth with it eternal life. If a man have no desire to his food, it is a sign of an evil stomach, and a forerunner of death, when the appetite is gone and cannot be recovered: so when we have no desire at all to the bread of life, neither feel how greatly we stand in need thereof, we have little strength of the Spirit and of the life of God in us, we draw near by little and little unto death, I mean the death of our souls, which is nothing else but a separation of us from GOD and from his kingdom.

Thirdly, they which celebrate the memorial [Use 3] of their redemption and deliverance from hell & damnation by the sufferings of Christ, must purge themselves of their old leaven, that is, ought by unfeigned and renewed repentance to be purged and washed from their wickedness and uncleanness, & bring with them a clear and good conscience, an holy & resolute purpose to serve the Lord in truth and sincerity, in holiness and righteousness.

The Israelites must have no leaven in any of their houses and habitations while the Passover lasteth; whosoever kept any, was to be cut off from his people, Exodus 12, verses 8, 15. and 13, 3, 7. Leviticus 23, verse 6. Numbers 28, verse 17. Deuteronomy 16, verse 4. Joshua 5, verse 11. 2 Chronicles 30, 13, 21. and 35, 17. Ezra 6, verse 22. Ezek. 45, verse 21. Math. 26, verse 17. &c. The Apostle expresseth the meaning hereof, 1 Corin. 5. ver. 7, 8. Let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malicioiusness and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth: purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, for even Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us. We therefore that profess our selves to be true Christians, should at all times, but then especially, when we celebrate the remembrance of Christ's death in the use of the Sacraments, prepare our selves in a most religious and holy manner, that so we may come aright, to his glory, and our comfort. When Jacob was appointed by God to offer sacrifice at Bethel, he sanctified and prepared all his people, Gen. 35, verses 2, 3. All that came to the Passover were commanded to sanctify themselves, 2 Chron. 35, 4. The Priests were commanded to sanctify themselves, and to prepare their brethren, verse 6. This consisteth in two things, in purging out of the old leaven of sin, and in being a new lump endued with the gifts of sanctification, that is, to leave off to do evil, and to learn to do good. And we must in doing good things prove our selves in these few particulars, what our knowledge, faith, repentance, and charity is.

Knowledge is the ground and foundation of all the rest, and therefore it is required of all, to understand the grounds and principles of our Christian Religion, especially we must be acquainted with the doctrine of this Sacrament, both with the signification of the signs and the graces sealed up by them. Faith also we must have in us, which is in truth the first saving grace, it is the hand which we stretch out to touch Christ, in whom all fullness dwelleth; of whose fullness we all receive, and grace for grace, John 1, 16. without whom we can do nothing that is good, John 15, 5. and without faith it is impossible to please God, Hebrews 11, 6. This is the root, the fountain, the mother of all graces; they are as the branches, the streams, the daughters of faith. Hereby we apprehend God's infinite love and mercy in Christ Jesus, and are persuaded that all our sins are pardoned, and that Christ, together with all his benefits is received. Repentance, which is a consequent of faith, is a changing of the mind, an earnest loathing of that which is evil, and an earnest loving of that which is good. We must learn to hate our particular sins, we must mourn and lament in our inward bowels for them, and we must judge our selves, lest the Lord enter into judgment with us, and so we provoke his wrath against us and those that belong unto us, and stir him up to bring grievous plagues and fearful judgments against us, 1 Cor. 11, 28, 31. Wherefore, nothing ought to bring greater grief to us then this, to consider that we have so heinously offended the Majesty of God: and as our sins pierced him, so let us pierce our own hearts with this spear of repentance, that we have so wickedly misspent our time, abused his benefits, contemned his patience, abused our creation, calling, redemption, baptism, soul, body, word, Sabbaths, yea, all the gifts and graces of God: that we have in deed and in truth joined and even conspired with Herod, Pilate, Annas, Caiaphas, Pharisees, Soldiers, passengers, Judas, & the rest of the Jews, in crucifying the Lord of life.

If any ask, how can these things be? The Prophet telleth us, He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, Isaiah 53, verse 5. The chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed: so that we must acknowledge that our iniquities were the nails that pierced him, and our transgressions the spear that wounded him. We must labor to feel the greatness and horror of our sins, & withal strive to fashion our selves after the image and likeness of God, in holiness and righteousness all the days of our lives. Let us prepare our hearts and bodies to be his Temple to dwell in, and not make them as sinks for Satan and all foul spirits. Thankfulness is the next duty that is required, that we may be able to say unfeignedly with the Prophet David, considering how great things the Lord hath done for us, Psalm 116, verses 12, 13. What shall I render unto the LORD, for all his benefits towards me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the Name of the Lord. And undoubtedly, if they be no better then thieves & robbers which receive their corporal food and never lift up their eyes to heaven, which cannot be sanctified unto them but by y^e word and prayer: if such, I say, be usurpers that take the creatures of God without thanksgiving, how much rather ought we to give thanks to God for this heavenly food, the nourishment of our souls? The Israelites in remembrance of their Egyptian deliverance were commanded to continue the Passover forever; should not we then much rather keep our Christian Passover for our spiritual deliverance from our spiritual bondage of spiritual enemies? and say with the Prophet in a sweet feeling & mediation of these mercies, Bless the Lord, O my soul? &c. The last duty is charity toward our brethren: the former cannot be truly in us without this. By this shall all men know that we are his disciples, if we love one another. The effects and fruits of it are described, It suffereth long, it enuyeth not, it is bountiful, &c. It is required in so strict a manner, that if our gift be ready in our hands to offer unto God, yet if we be at ods with our brother, we must set it by, until we be reconciled. God is love, 1 John. 4.16. Satan is nothing but malice and envy. If we come in love, we come to God's Table; if we come in hatred, we come to the devils; we cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils: we cannot be partakers of the Lord's Table, and of the Table of devils. Let us not therefore deceive our selves in thinking & persuading our selves we come to the Lord's Table, when we are far from it. For as God hath his Church, so the devil hath his Chapel: and as there is the Table of the Lord, so there is the table of devils. We must therefore take heed that we do not sacrifice to devils, while we purpose to sacrifice to God, and I would not y^t ye should have fellowship with devils. To conclude, let this preparation always go before this holy action, let there be a ransacking of all the corners of our hearts and spirits, and a cleansing and clearing of them by true repentance. Let all governors of families prepare these that belong unto them, & fit themselves and them of their house to this work. Let us consider the mystery of the death of Christ to make it the means of our life: the cause of it, our sins: the merit of it, our redemption: the ende of it, the apprehending of Christ with all his benefits: the fruit of it, reconciliation to God, increase of faith, and newness of life.

[Use 4] Fourthly, as no unclean persons that were defiled, Num. 9.6. and no uncircumcised persons whose foreskinne was not cut away, Exod. 12.48. might eat of the Passover: so no profane person uncircumcised in heart, and unclean in his soul and conscience, hath any interest in the Lord's Supper. If he come unto it, and present himself at the Lord's Table, he is like to that guest that came to the feast, but had not on him his wedding garment, Matth. 22.11. as he followeth him in the sin, so he shall follow him in the punishment also. I deny not but such may partake of the bread, but they cannot receive the body and blood of Christ: and they shall not only bear the loss of the benefit, but also incur the danger of damnation. For as no unclean person might come to the Passover of the Lord, so no unclean person may come to the Supper of the Lord. Holy things may not be cast to dogs, neither pearls before swine, Matt. 7.6. These have no right to this Communion. Children are barred, because they cannot examine themselves: profane persons because they do not, because they will not. And how many are there that come in worse manner then children would do? For if infants and children were admitted, it is presumed they would come with greater reverence, their greatest sin would be their ignorance. Ignorance therefore is a bar against them: but are there not many in very many places that presume and present themselves at this Table, who besides their ignorance as great and as gross as that in children, do add profaneness of heart, make little conscience of the Sabbath and show small love to the word of God, and therefore do shut out themselves from this feast by a twofold bar?

Lastly, we saw before that bitter herbs were [Use 5] added to the Passover, it must not be eaten without them: which signifieth, that as the Passover was eaten with sour herbs, so Christ and the Cross are never severed one from the other: because all that will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution, 2. Tim 3.12. if we will be the disciples of Christ, we must deny our selves and take up our Cross and follow him, Matth. 16.24. Everyone would be partaker of the Passover, but they desire not the sour herbs: we would willingly taste of the sweet, but we care not for the bitter. We seem all ready to embrace Christ, but we shun the Cross, it is as bitter unto us as gall and wormwood. We must all therefore frame our selves to suffer afflictions as the good servants and soldiers of Christ for the faiths sake, and be content to drink of this cup which he hath begun unto us. Paul lived in great credit among the Pharisees before his conversion, but so soon as he was called to preach y^e Gospel, by and by they fought to kill him. It is a great comfort to suffer for righteousness sake. A good cause doth sweeten the bitterness of the Cross. Such are pronounced blessed by Christ. The Apostles went from the council rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer for the Name of Christ. It is no less honor to suffer for Christ's cause, then to believe in his Name.

Our Master Christ Jesus found no better entertainment: the world hated him before it hated us, they called him a Samaritan, and said he had a devil; they reproached him to be a glutton, a wine-bibber, and a friend of Publicans and sinners, he was despised of men, and esteemed as smitten of God; he came to his own, but his own received him not. If they have done this in the green tree, what shall be done in the dry? The servant must not look to have a better estate and condition than his Lord, nor the disciple than his master: if they have persecuted him, they will also persecute us, he that is sent must not look to be greater than he that sent him. It is enough for the disciple to be as his master, and the servant as his Lord: if they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household? God's children shall be molested and afflicted, even in times of public peace. When the enemies of Daniel could find no matter against his person, they began to quarrel about his religion. To serve God in truth and sincerity is an heinous crime in the eyes of the world, who shall in the end give an account to him that will judge uprightly.

[Verse 6. And there were certain men who were defiled by the dead, &c.] Here is a description of the second Passover for such as were unclean; unclean, not by any sinful pollution, but by a legal or ceremonial uncleanness: not by any willing choice of their own, but by an inevitable necessity: and not by coming near those that were dead in spirit, but by touching the dead body of a man. In this, observe three things, a question, a consultation, and a resolution. The question is of the people: the consultation of Moses, the resolution of God. The people enquire at the mouth of Moses: Moses inquireth at y^e mouth of God: and God determineth the doubt and resolveth both the people & Moses. The question is, wherefor may we not receive y^e Passover with the rest of our brethren? wherefor are we kept back? this is amplified by the occasion, they were defiled by a dead corpse. The consultation is with God, which is the second point, Moses willeth them to be quiet & stand still, until he knew the mind of the Lord, ver. 8. he would determine nothing rashly, but he doubted and held them in doubt, until he knew of God what was to be done. A religious example of modesty, humility, and wisdom in the matters of God. He did not glory to have in his own breast an oracle to answer all doubts, nor challenge any power of freedom from error, as the man of sin in the pride of his own heart boasteth of himself. The third part is the resolution and determination of God, deciding the question, and making some laws extending to them and their posterity; first, if any were unclean, they had respite given them unto the second month: they have not liberty until the next year, but to the next month they are dispensed withal. Secondly, the man that is clean and refuseth to come, he shall be cut off, that is, excommunicated from the people. Thirdly, if a stranger desire to be partaker of the Passover, he must embrace the true religion, & be circumcised, Exod. 12.49. and then he may come.

Touching the question and the occasion thereof, it appeareth that those good men, which were shut out from this part of God's service by reason they were defiled by touching a dead body, were much grieved at heart, and troubled in mind, that they were barred and as it were banished from the Passover, having as great a desire as others to come unto it. Hence it is, that they make earnest moan and complaint to Moses for their separation: and therefore desire to be eased and relieved by him. The doctrine from hence is, that it is a great cause of sorrow and grief to God's dear children, when they are by any just occasion, or by the hand of God upon them, withheld and kept back from the parts and exercises of his worship. We see this in Hezekiah, in his sickness, his chief lamentation and complaint was, that he should not see the face of the Lord in his Temple. David often complaineth and lamenteth that he was driven by his enemies from his worship. He maketh the condition of the sparrow & swallow better than his, which might come nearer to the altar than he, his soul panted and thirsted after God. The Church wept by the rivers of Babylon, when they remembered Zion and the songs they had sung in the Temple; and in another place, the Church, being by captivity deprived of the Temple, of their Synagogues, of their sacrifices, of their Sacraments, and of the exercises of their religion, maketh bitter complaint to God, O Lord, they have cast thy Sanctuary into the fire, they have defiled thy dwelling place. The incestuous Corinthian, being by excommunication put from the fellowship of the Saints, and the use of the Ministry, became comfortless, and was almost swallowed up with sorrow. 2 Cor. 2.7.

And can it be otherwise? The godly find [Reason 1] such sweetness, such comfort, such spiritual joy in the presence of God, where the exercises of his worship and religion are performed, as nothing in this life is more pleasant and delightful unto them. The Prophet crieth out, as if he were ravished with an holy contemplation of the excellency of this, How amiable are thy Tabernacles, O Lord of hosts! my soul longeth, yea even fainteth for the Courts of the Lord, &c. The word is sweeter to them than the honey and the honey comb, and more to be desired than much fine gold. They feed upon the bread in the Sacraments, as upon the fatness of his house, & drink of the cup as of the rivers of his pleasures, they offer up prayers as sweet incense and lift up their hands as the evening sacrifice. How then can it be, but y^t the loss & want of all these brought upon thē, should strike them to the heart, and minister matter of much grief and mourning unto them? Secondly, the great love and mercy of God toward his people doth appear in the exercises of religion and the place of his worship to them that are not altogether blind and deaf, and past all sense and feeling of good things, then in all other things throughout the whole world besides, Prov. 9.1.2. And indeed a man or woman that hath once tasted y^e comfort of his adoption and salvation in Christ, taught in the word, and confirmed in the Sacraments, will think it one of his greatest losses, to lose and leave these exercises, and the greatest plague to be deprived of them, and by them of the pledges of his goodness and favor. Thirdly, when these are gone, they know and consider the greatest stays and helps of their standing in the grace of God are utterly taken away from them, & therefore they have cause to lament, as Psal. 74.9. We see not our signs, there is no more any Prophet, neither is there among us any that knoweth how long. When he taketh away his word, he lifteth up his standard and goeth away. And can there be greater cause to mourn than when God departeth from his people?

[Use 1] This reproveth such as can lament bitterly and mourn heavily for the least earthly losses and troubles, but never trouble themselves for loss of spiritual things. It was not so with the wife of Phinehas, she had many causes of mourning met together by heavy tidings that were told unto her, her father in law had broken his neck, her husband was killed, the host of God discomfited, and the Ark of God was taken; howbeit among all these none went nearer, none so near unto her as the taking of the Ark: and therefore she doubleth this which she could not put out of her mind, and did after a sort put out all the rest, The glory is departed from Israel, for the Ark of God is taken. But there are many in our days, that account it no loss at all, to lose Sermon after Sermon, Sacrament after Sacrament, and one meeting in the house of God after another: they can do this easily, and never mourn for it. Nay, they are vexed and tormented as if they were upon the rack, that they are constrained to come so often to the word, to the Sacraments, and to the house of prayer. See herein the great difference between the godly and ungodly. It is the voice of the faithful, When will the Sabbath come: but the unfaithful say, When will the Sabbath day be done, Amos 8.5. It is the voice of the faithful, Blessed are they that dwell in thy house Psal 84.4. but the unfaithful hold it a misery and bondage to be tied so strictly and straitly to the public exercises of religion. It is the voice of the faithful, When shall I come and appear before God? but the unfaithful say, When shall we depart out of Zion, it is time we be gone. It is the faithful man's voice complaining, Woe is me that I sojourne in Mesech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar, but y^e unfaithful think themselves unhappy, that they must sojourne in the Tabernacle of God, and dwell in his house. If then they be the children of God, y^t mourn because they cannot meet with the rest of their brethren in the Temple, and at the Table of the Lord, certainly they must be the children of the devil, that mourn and lament because they are at them, and such as do willingly and willfully, contemptuously and presumptuously absent themselves from them. It is noted of Christ our Savior, that he earnestly desired, or as it is in the Original by doubling the word, with a desire, I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer: whereby he showeth his fervent affection to join with them in this duty. So should it be with us: when one Sabbath is ended, we should long for the next: when one Communion is done, we should be ready to enquire after another: when one Sermon is ended, we should prepare for another; and account no day in the week so gracious, so welcome, so comfortable unto us as the Lord's day; then let us cheer up our spirits and refresh our souls with such provision as God hath appointed for us.

Secondly, it is a great judgment of God [Use 2] upon men, howsoever they account of it, and whatsoever they esteem of it, when they are given over to their own ways, and regard not at all the ways of God. Nay, it is an evident token of God's heavy judgment to be deprived of the Word and Sacraments, of the exercises of religion and of the meetings of the godly, as Psal. 74, 1. the church crieth out, O God, why hast thou cast us off forever? Why doth thine anger smoke against the sheep of thy pasture? We all confess, that dearth and famine is a grievous plague, howbeit commonly we know no other then the famine of the body, when the tongue cleaveth to the roof of the mouth for thirst, and when the children say to their mothers, Where is corn & wine? but God threateneth a greater judgment then the famishment of the body, to wit, y^e pining and consuming away of the soul, through the famine of the word. It is accounted a great reproach for a subject to be denied the presence and protection of his Prince, and the freedom of his country; but these banish themselves from the presence of God. We should be all voluntary Communicants, but many are voluntary excommunicants: they exclude themselves from the Church, and execute the censures of the Church upon themselves. The Church complaineth (as we heard before) that y^e Lord cast them off: but these cast off themselves frō the Church, from God, from his ordinances. It is an evident sign of most strange profaneness and deadness of heart, when men have no delight, no feeling, no comfort, no sweetness in the exercises of religion, when they cannot feed heartily of the fatlings, and drink greedily of the wines that are prepared by God for his family, the most delicate & delightful souls food that can be in the world, to wit, the hearing of the word, and the receiving of the Sacraments, of which more afterward. Esau is a pattern of this profaneness, who esteemed of these precious things more vilely than of a mess of meat, of the good of his soul then of the filling of his belly, of future happiness then of a present and momentary pleasure. Many such Esau's we have in our days, as wretched and profane as he.

Lastly, it ought to be the first and chiefest [Use 3] thing in all our wishes and desires, & we should carefully express it in our love and zeal, to have the pleasure and profit of God's house in greatest account for our good forever. This made the Prophet say, O Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place where thine honor dwelleth. I have desired this one thing above all other, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, one day in thy courts is better than a thousand elsewhere. O what will be their portion in this life, and what will be their punishment in the life to come, who have banished these desires out of their hearts, and renounced them in their practice, accounting the time tedious, and the day lost that is spent this way. O that such could consider betimes the fearful end and fall that waiteth for them, so long as they grow more and more weary of the heavenly Manna that would fall upon their souls as a gracious rain upon the tender herb. And as for us which thorough the goodness of God live under the Ministry of the word and have which Sacraments rightly ministered unto us, let us know & confess which it is our duty to render all praise & thanksgiving unto God, to labor to walk worthy of our calling, to express the power of them in our conversations, & to pray unto him earnestly for the continuance of them among us and our posterities, lest thorough our great unthankfulness and the abuse of them, they be taken from us, & given unto another people that will bring forth the fruits thereof.

[Verse 8. And Moses said unto them, Stand still, &c. In these words we have Moses his consultation with God: for here seemed to be a kind of contrary or Antinomy, that is, one law against another. The unclean might not come to the sacrifice; and besides, it was an heinous offense to omit this exercise of their faith, and profession of their religion, no less than excommunication. As for the touching of a dead body, or burying of the dead, it is a duty of charity, of humanity, and of necessity; should a work of such due respect and importance that might not be avoided, debar them from the Passover? These therefore seemed to be in a distress on both sides, and knew not which way to turn themselves in this maze; they might not come, and yet they might not well abstain: they must bury the dead, and yet the burial of the dead did exclude them. What shall they do between these two rocks that threaten shipwreck? if they do not bury the dead, they show want of charity: if they do, they bar themselves from a duty of piety, and could not partake of the Passover until the next year. Moses confesseth himself in this case after a sort entangled, & knew not what to resolve, therefore for his and their satisfaction he resolveth to refer the matter wholly to God; forasmuch as he had no authority to institute for them a new Passover. [Doctrine.] This teacheth us, in all matters of doubt, to ask counsel at the mouth of God. But how may this be? for we cannot ascend up to heaven to speak unto him. I answer, he speaketh unto us at this day, and that two ways, both in his word and by his Ministers; The Spirit speaketh evidently in the Scriptures, by it he resolveth the Church, no less then by an oracle from heaven: besides, for our farther direction, he giveth the knowledge of his word to the Ministers, who draw all their light from the word, and do thereby ask counsel as at the mouth of God.

The reasons are very evident. First the Scriptures [Reason 1] are all sufficient to improve and correct, to teach and to instruct, to give patience and comfort, that we may believe & have eternal life, and to make us wise unto salvation. Secondly, such as will not believe them and reply upon them, will believe nothing else, no although one come from the dead. It is therefore the foundation of faith to resort to these means to be resolved, as to the oracle and ordinance of God, Psal. 85.8.

Observe from hence that all questions in [Use 1] Religion must be decided and determined by the Scriptures. All doctrines are to be proved by them, and all errors to be convinced by them. The Scripture is the supreme judge of all councils and controversies: it sendeth not the Church to the general consent of the Pastors of the Church, nor turneth them over to expect a general council, nor posteth them over to Rome, as the Gentiles resorted to Delphos to consult with the Oracle of Apollo. It is in vain to neglect the straight & direct way, to seek out by-paths and uncertain passages. It never taught the Pope and his Cardinals to be the highest court and supreme Judges of Scripture, who oftentimes are ignorant of Scripture. It cannot be interpreted but by the same Spirit by which it was written. It is required of the supreme Judge and interpreter of Scripture, that he cannot err, that no appeal be made from him, that he be no way partial, and that he have power to compel y^e parties dissenting to yield obedience. These properties agree not to the Bishop of Rome, he is not free from error, for many of thē have fallen into heresy, have taught contrary things one to the other, have made many foolish interpretations: he is a mere man and can compel no man's will to yield unto him; he is partial in his own cause, and therefore to appeal to him, is to ask ones fellow if he be a thief.

Secondly, the Scripture containeth all [Use] things necessary to salvation; to withstand temptations, Matth. 4. and to build us up in all truth. So that it is simply and absolutely necessary. The doctrine of salvation cannot be learned but from it. The knowledge of the law is necessary, Rom. 7.7. the knowledge of the Gospel is necessary, Tit. 2.11.12. Neither let any object, that the Church wanted Scripture along time, even from the creation to the days of Moses; for the Question is not, what was necessary in the beginning, but what is now necessary. The mothers milk is sufficient for the infant, while it is a child, but it is not sufficient afterward, when once it is grown up. Neither is it true which the Jesuit objecteth, that Christ commanded not anything to be written, but is overthrown by many testimonies of Scripture, 2. Pet. 1.21.2 Tim. 3.16. Revel. 1.11. and 14.13.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it teacheth that the Ministers ought to be ready to answer the questions and doubts that trouble the people any way. Therefore they must be faithful in their places, and skillful in the Scriptures, Hag. 2.12.13 they must not be blind guides & dumb dogs, Ezek. 34.4. their lips must preserve knowledge, and the people seek the Law at their mouths. Again, it is required of them to be resident upon their flocks, attending on them as watchmen watch the city always in danger of enemies, to discover the approach of them; and as shepherds attending their flock for fear of devouring wolves. The people are as a prey in the jaws of all heretics where teachers are not attending and residing. The Israelites fell into horrible idolatry, when Moses was absent from them, Exod. 32.1. But how shall the Ministers be consulted withal, being absent from the people?

[Use 4] Lastly, it serveth for instruction for the people. They are not to consult with witches and wizards, but to resort to the Ministers of God Deut. 18.15. and to the word, to the law and to the testimony, Isaiah, 8.19.20. Princes therefore must not contemn them, nor respect thē as the lowest and basest of the people. And all people, high and low, rich and poor, must search the Scriptures, who think to have eternal life in them, John. 5.39. They are greatly commended that were diligent in the reading of them, Acts 8.30. and 18.11. David did exercise himself in them day and night, Psal. 1.2. None are to be forbidden the reading of them, forasmuch as the Gospel is the power of God to salvation to all that believe, Rom. 1.16. They are greatly reprov'd and rebuked •hat were ignorant in them, Mar. 12.24. that were slow of heart to believe them, Luk. 24.25. Every man therefore must seek to be assured & persuaded in his heart of that which he doth, and seek to warrant his own work. All things must be done in faith, Hebr. 4.2. Mar. 11.24. I am. 1.5. without which no man can please God. This reproveth the ignorance that is in the greatest sort, who think it enough to do as others do, to hear the word, because others do so: to receive the Lord's Supper, because they see their neighbors do so: and to come to Church, because the most do so. These think it enough to be present at divine duties, albeit they be indeed far from doing their duties. There are many that come and hear prayers, who do never offer up any prayers: as if there were some hidden virtue in the place or in the prayer, albeit they never lift up their hearts to God. These have not, neither can have any comfort in that which they do. They are without faith, because they are without knowledge. They have no assurance whether they please God or not, but do all things with doubtful hearts and wavering minds, and therein condemn themselves, and sin against God, being like a wave of the Sea tossed with the wind.

[Verse 9.10. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children, &c. The determination of the question is here set down, and upon occasion thereof perpetual laws established for the direction of the Church. The unclean are put off to the 14. day of the second month: the clean must keep the Lord's Passover at the season appointed. There are two causes alleged, wherefor a man may for a time be excused for not coming to the Passover, and is allowed as unblameable to defer the celebrating of it together with others; one is uncleanness, the other is a journey, both of them must be understood as grounded upon necessity. For to thrust himself into the uncleanness here meant without a calling, or to absent himself by a journey upon every trifling occasion, thereby omitting the business of God, because he would further his own business, is rather to be cēsured very sharply, thē to suffer an excuse vpō necessity; of whom we may say with Solomon, As a bird that wandreth from her nest, so is a man that wandreth from his place. For there are very many in all places, that had rather leave the Lord's work undone, then spare one day of their own. It is a great matter with them to lose a days work, but they regard it as a matter of nothing to rob God of his day that he hath kept for himself. They had rather go to a drunken feast abroad, thē to feast with God in his house. They had rather go speak to others in their own affairs, then either to God by prayer, or hear him speak to thē in his word, on the Sabbath day. But to leave this, and to return to the matter in hand, by uncleanness in touching the dead, is meant by proportion all other kinds of legal uncleanness whatsoever, which signify the defilements of sin continued without repentance, the Lord leading his Church in the minority of it by outward things to inward, by earthly to spiritual, by the shadow to the body. The dead body is accounted unclean, because death which hath seized upon it is the fruit of sin. whereby men are truly made unclean. The Passover was to the Israelites, the same that the Supper is to us, the equity therefore and truth of that which is here described, and directed to the people, remaineth to us forever and teacheth, That necessity brought upon any by the hand of God, [Doctrine.] or by an inevitable duty of a man's calling, do for that time free him from the public exercises of religion and of God's worship. If it be to save a man's life, or to preserve his house and goods from destruction, it giveth liberty, a toleration, and dispensation for the present, to leave the immediate worship of God. Such is the immediate hand of God in sickness, as we see in Hezekiah, Isaiah 38. Such was the case of David in persecution, Psal. 84. Such is the case of those that are in a long journey, as in this place. Likewise whensoever the public means are for a time taken away through persecution, Psa. 74 In time of sickness God requireth another duty of us, to wit, to look to our health: in danger of life to look to our safety: in danger of our goods, to look to our wealth.

[Reason 1] For whensoever God denieth the means, his will is that the things themselves should cease. For other means, may not be invented, or any other form then that which he hath ordained; as Joel 1.19. he threateneth that the meat offering and drink offering should cease. Whensoever the will of God is, that these things shall be done, he will offer unto us, and put into our hands the means, he will give us the time and opportunity to do them.

Secondly, it is God's pleasure to accept of mercy rather than sacrifice. Mat. 12.7. Hence it is, that to save from fire and water, to preserve life, to visit the sick, and to look to them, is to be preferred and more to be respected then going to the Church, or hearing of the word. What man shall there be among you (saith Christ, Mat. 12.11.) that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the Sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it and lift it out? how much then is a man better then a sheep? for the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath; God ordaining it for our good, not for our hurt.

[Use 1] Hence it followeth that it is not simply the omitting of the Sacraments, but the neglect and contempt of them is dangerous to neglecters and contemners. They shall bear their sin, as they justly deserve, whose default it is. The Israelites in the wilderness were forty years together uncircumcised, yet were they to be holden the people of God, because they cannot be charged with negligence, nor reprov'd for any contempt, in as much as they wanted leisure being in their journey, or daily expecting the sign of removing. All the people that came out of Egypt were circumcised, but all the people that were borne in the wilderness by the way, them they circumcised not, and it is excused or defended by necessity. For the Sacraments do not confer grace, neither are they absolutely necessary to salvation, as if without them a man could not possibly be saved. Hence therefore are the Romanists reproved, that do teach, that children are damned that die without Baptism; as though all the Israelites that died in the wilderness, which were borne there and were not circumcised, were condemned; no, doubtless: no more then that all which were circumcised, were saved. True it is, Moses was reproved and was near to death, because he circumcised not his son, who had time and leisure to do it, Exod. 4.24. and we must take heed of contempt, which deserveth a cutting off from the people of God, Gen. 17.14. because he hath broken the Covenant. Howbeit, as it is said in the proverb, Necessity hath no law. The grace of Christ taketh away all the sins of all believers, and therefore the general guilt brought in by original sin, Rom. 5. This grace is not tied to outward signs, but dependeth upon the free pleasure of God. This is received by faith only, as appeareth in the example of Abraham, and farther confirmed by the Sacraments. Nevertheless, we acknowledge a necessity in respect of the commandment of God, and of the proper end, and therefore is with all reverence and conscience, and obedience to be yielded unto.

Secondly, where the ordinary and precious [Use 2] means of salvation, the preaching of the word and administration of the Sacraments, are taken away and removed, as the standard out of the campe, or the light out of the candlestick, there the extraordinary and more weak means are to be used of us, and God's blessing in such cases is to be hoped for and looked after. In the days of persecution, private reading, meditation, and conference are blessed of God, and his Church maintained, continued, and increased thereby: yea, the beholding of the constant suffering of the holy martyrs was a forcible means to work the conversion of many, and made them in love with that doctrine for which they suffered and gave their lives In times of famine when there is no bread left in a city, and the inhabitants are constrained to fare hard and short, yet it pleaseth God to preserve life by very weak means, to show that man liveth not by bread only: so is it in the famine of spiritual things. In the days of Ahab, when the Temple was forsaken by the ten tribes, and idolatry was erected in Israel, the altars digged down, and the Prophets slain, yet God reserved seven thousand that never bowed the knee to Baal, 1 King. 19.18. Rom. 11.4. There were very few laborers in the days of Christ among y^e Jews, ignorance had covered y^e land that they were as sheep without a shepherd; and yet in those barren times, when the seed of the word was thinly sown, there was a plentiful harvest ready to be gathered, for loe the fields were white unto the harvest, John. 4.35. Thus doth God bless what means soever it shall please him to use; let them be never so weak in themselves and little in our eyes, yet they shall have force and strength enough, when he will employ them: which serveth as a great comfort to those that have not the best means to bring them to faith and repentance.

[Use 3] Lastly, we must take heed we put not slight and unnecessary excuses for urgent and necessary causes. They that were bidden to the wedding pleaded by way of excuse for themselves, I have hired a farm, I have bought five yoke of oxen, I have married a wife, I cannot come, Luke 14.18. Matth. 22.5. Many in our days would account these good excuses, honest pretences, & lawful defences: & indeed it cannot be denied, but they justify them by their own practices, as Jerusalem did Samaria. For they go further in their wicked ways, and account it a sufficient color to warrant their absence from God's ordinance, saying, I have a bargain to make, I have work to take, I am bidden to a feast, I must go speak with such a man, it is rainy weather, there is an yeueall at the next Parish, I must walk about my ground to see my corn and cattle, I am otherwise busy, and therefore I cannot come. Others, that think themselves more wise, yet show themselves more wicked, because they pretend greater love to the truth and liking to Religion then the other, they can read good Sermons, and use good prayers at home, and therefore what need they come? Let all these take heed (to bind them together in one bundle) lest it be said unto them hereafter, as it was said to such as made such like slight and sleeuesse excuses, that none of those that were bidden should taste of that Supper. Necessary causes of absence are such, as require present doing, that could not be dispatched before, neither can be put off until afterward. Heat and cold, rain and shine, hunger and thirst, poverty of estate, or tediousnes of journey could not keep the people of God from the Passover, Psal. 84.6. They go from strength to strength, everyone of them in Zion appeareth before God. These can excuse no man to his Prince, no not to the ordinary judge and justice. When a man is cited and summoned by word or writ, to appear at the bar of an earthly judge, will it be taken for currant answer to say, O sir, I was willing and desirous to appear, but it was hot weather, or cold weather, or rainy weather: will such frivolous and fruitless excuses be admitted? and shall we think that the king of kings, and the judge of judges will receive them at such times as he summoneth us to appear before his presence? Let us not therefore offer and perform less duty and service unto God, then we do unto men: nor suppose that God will content himself with less attendance then man doth.

[Ver 10. If any of you or of your posterity shall be unclean by reason of a dead body.] Here is another cause of being kept from the Passover, to wit, uncleanness. The doctrine is, that open offenders and impenitent persons ought not to have any access to the Lord's Table, but are to be kept from it as unclean birds from the Sacrifice. A stranger uncircumcised had nothing to do with the Passover, Exod. 12.48. The incestuous person was excommunicated from the Church, and the privileges of it, 1 Cor. 5. as Cain was from the face of God, Gen. 4. When Adam had sinned against God, and eaten of the forbidden fruit, he was put out of the garden, that he might not eat of the fruit of the tree of life, Gen. 3.22, 23, 24. this was as a Sacrament unto him of life, so long as he continued in obedience. The Sacraments are holy things, but holy things must not be given to dogs: the Sacraments are precious pearls, but pearls must not be cast before swine. Now obstinate offenders and notorious sinners are dogs and swine.

The reasons are, as Christ saith, they will [Reason 1] trample them under their feet; Matt. 7.6. they place no holiness in them, they do not esteem them as any pearls, or value them at any rate. Hence it is, that the Prophet saith, If any that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, it shall be unclean, Hag. 2.13 if then the person be defiled. he defileth whatsoever he toucheth, the holiness of the sacrifice cannot make him holy, but the wickedness of the person shall make the sacrifice unholy.

Again, such as come to the Lord's Supper, must show y^e Lord's death till he come 1 Cor. 11.26. That is, he must publish with praise and thanksgiving unto God, the memorial of the greatest wonder and mystery that ever fell out in the world, to wit, the propitiatory sacrifice and precious death of the eternal Son of God. But this can never be done by a wicked man.

Praise in the mouth of a fool is not comely nor commendable, neither God will accept of them any such sacrifice.

Thirdly, they are guilty of the body and blood of Christ, and therefore it must needs be a fearful wickedness to come in such a wretched and profane manner, 1 Corinth. 11.27. They are despisers of the most precious thing in the world, Heb. 10.29. They tread under foot the Son of God, and account the blood of y^e New Testament a profane thing, which caused the Angels of God & the whole frame of nature in heaven and earth to wonder at it, and to be dismayed at the death of the Son of God contemned by these wicked wretches No sin, murder, incest, treason, comparable to this sin.

Fourthly, they have no fellowship with the Church in these holy things; there is no communion between light and darkness, between righteousness and unrighteousness, and therefore Simon Peter said to Simon Magus, Thou hast neither part nor fellowship in this business, Acts 8.21. Such therefore as are scandalous & profane are to be separated by the Church from others, as ••ule and filthy beasts are to be kept from fair springs, lest with their feet they defile the water.

Lastly, the seal belongeth to such only as have the covenant or testament belonging unto them, but open offenders have nothing to do with them. It will be said, Judas was admitted by Christ, [Object.] and therefore wicked persons may be so. I answer, [Answ.] Judas was not known to be a wicked person, no more then he was known to be a reprobate. He was a thief, but not known to be a thief: but they must be known wicked persons that are to be exempted and excluded. Again, it may appear that Judas was not at the Supper, John 13, 30. So soon as he had received the soppe, he went out immediately; but the soppe was in the Passover, so that he was at the Passover, not at the Supper.

[Use 1] The uses follow. First, there ought not to be a general admission of all that offer to come to the Sacraments without difference and distinction. A Turk or Jew if they would desire baptism, may not be received before they make open confession of the faith. When the Eunuch desired baptism, and said, See, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized? Philip answered, If thou believest, thou mayest, Acts 8, 36, 37. Such only are allowed to have the benefit of the Sacraments, and to be admitted unto them, that are of the number of believers. None were to be baptized but such as were within the Covenant, 1 Cor. 7, 14. and in that respect are called holy. None are meet guests to be at the Lord's Table, but such as know & believe, and practice the doctrine which is according to godliness, as no uncircumcised person and unbeliever was received to the Passover. Thus then we see who have right to the Sacraments, and who have not.

[Use 2] Secondly, this giveth direction and instruction to the Ministers, not to keep back whō they please, or to bar from the communion any vpō spleen or private grudge or revenge, but must take heed they do not mingle their private affections with the public exercises of religion. It reproveth therefore all such justly as turn away those that desire to communicate, through hatred, envy, and malice to their persons, because they have some way offended them, whether it be in deed or in conceit. They have power and authority only to exclude public offenders, and scandalous livers; as for others, they have no jurisdiction to deny them or bar them the Communion. The Disciples reprov'd those that brought little children to Christ, but they are reprov'd themselves, for Christ was much displeas'd with them, and would not have them forbidden, Mark. 10, 14. So ought we to suffer the people to come unto Christ, yea, to exhort them and stir them up and encourage them, not discourage them, nor forbid them, nor hinder them that would come. If there were a public well for all to draw water out of it, what inhumanity and cruelty were it to keep back any from drawing out of it? These are like to the Philistines that stopped the wells and filled them with earth, which Abraham's servants had digg'd, that none could have benefit of them, Gen. 26, 15. When Moses was fled out of Egypt, and came into the Land of Madian, and that he saw the forward Shepherds drive away the daughters of Revel frō the well, that they could not water their fathers sheep, he stood up and helped them and watered their flock, Exod. 2, 17. If we be the Shepherds of the Lord's flock, we must not be like to these Shepherds that would not suffer the sheep to be watered, we must be rather like to Moses to help them. It is a sign of much envy, and little piety, to hinder those that are willing to come. These are worse thē the woman of Samaria, and have less mercy, pity, & compassion then she had; for though she refused to give drink to Christ, because he was a Jew, and the Jews had no dealing with the Samaritans, yet she never assay'd to keep him from the well, as these do many of their brethren, more indeed to their own reproach, then to the shame of those whom they turn away; this ought not so to be.

Thirdly, to exercise any part of God's worship [Use 3] profanely, to hear the word unreverently, and to come to the Table of the Lord unworthily, deserveth a great and grievous plague, 1 Cor. 11, 30. For this cause many were weak, and sick, and stricken with death among the Corinthians. Woe therefore to those that are profane, and profane the holy things of God. This is a most fearful sin, they conspire against God, and commit high treason against his Majesty, and therefore God will arm himself against them, and pursue them as his enemies with fire and sword, that is, with his wrath & vengeance at their heels. The wrath of a King is as the roaring of a Lyon, who so provoketh him to anger, sinneth against his own soul, Prov. 19, 12, and 20, 2. His anger conceived is present death, 1 Sam. 22, 18. Ester 7, 9. Mat. 2, 16, and 14, 10. What shall we say then of God, who is a consuming fire? Heb. 12, 29. If his wrath be kindled but a little, blessed are all they that trust in him, Psal. 2, 12. We have no defense for our selves, but to say, Enter not into judgment with thy servants, for in thy sight shall no man living be justified, Ps. 143, 2. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God: whither shall we fly, to be able to escape his hand, but that he will find us out? His displeasure is like himself, that is, infinite, and cannot be expressed.

Lastly, we learn that such as come to the [Use 4] Table of the Lord, should seriously prove and thoroughly prepare themselves to this so weighty and religious work. It standeth us therefore upon to know wherein this trial and examination standeth, especially considering that many do much deceive themselves therein. Some place it in outward things, as if they fast before they come, if they hang down their heads like bulrushes, if they prepare the body and outward man touching their apparel, and for the present time show humility and abstinence, although presently after they return again to their former conditions and vices, as to their vomit, making only an intermission of them for a short space, but assuming them again with no small advantage. But this is a vain thing. For our sins must be left quite and clean, so as we never return to them again. It is an easy matter to conceive in our selves that we have faith. But if it be a true & holy faith, it purifieth the heart, Act. 15.9. & worketh by love, Gal. 5.6. First, therefore everyone must labor to be a repentant sinner, which consisteth in unfeigned sorrow for sin, purposing never to fall into it again, & an ardent love toward that which is good. We must confess our sins of omission and commission, of ignorance and knowledge, of weakness and presumption, how we have provoked our good God to anger, in soul and body, abusing our wit, our memory, our authority, our health, our liberty, our riches, our heart, our tongue, our feet, our hands, and all other members, to infidelity, blasphemy, swearing, lying, whoredom, cruelty, injury, theft, gluttony, drunkenness, pride, wantonness, slanders, and such like: making them filthy dungeons and stinking sinks for the devil, which should be the Temples of God. Wherefore we must have earnest grief and sorrow and trembling, that we have hereby not only broken in pieces, and torn in sunder by our sins all the laws of God, but we have also by them crucified upon the Cross, and put to a shameful death the Lord of Life. We commonly lay the whole and only fault upon Herod and Pilate, upon the high Priests, upon Judas, and the Jews, & who is not displeased with these for their cruelty herein? howbeit we should be more displeased with our selves who are as deep by our sins in this sin as ever they, as we have shown before out of the Prophet. And here I summon all profane persons before God, that have no delight in good things, and all such as with greediness and without shame wallow in all sin and wickedness, giving by their leudnesse continual and grievous offense to the children of God. If they dare presume to present themselves at the Lord's Table having their hearts & hands gored with the blood of the Son of God. I would have them answer what they promised to God and his Church in their Baptism, and what they now profess. They promised to forsake the devil and all his works: but sin is one of the chief and principal works of the devil. What, I pray you, could the Lord Jesus have done for us, that he hath not done? and shall we so reward him and requite him for all his pains, his agony and bloody sweat? If a kings son finding us in a filthy sink or miry puddle should help us out with his hands, and wash us in water, and put his precious robes upon us, and after all this, we thrice miserable wretches should presently cast our selves into the same again, what unthankfulness were this? what indignity? Christ Jesus hath redeemed us from the bondage of sin, and washed us in his blood, Revel. 1.5. shall we defile our selves again with worse then mire and dung, and serve Satan and sin, his and our enemies? Again, we must seek to approve our hearts and consciences with love and charity to our neighbors. For we can never come with a good conscience toward God, except also we show the fruits of love to our brethren. We must have peace with all men, without which no man shall see God to his comfort, Heb. 12.14. We are but one bread & but one body, 1 Cor. 12.12. There should be a communion among all the Saints of God, which also we profess to believe. We meet all in one place as it were in one house, we have one head, we hear one word, we eat the same spiritual meat, we drink the same spiritual drink: we are utterly unworthy of all these, if we be infected and poisoned with the bitter roots of hatred, strife, rancor, debate, contention, quarrelling, and such like vnfaury & unsanctified fruits, which show that we are carnal and faithless men, not fit to be called the servants of Christ, whose love was great even toward his enemies.

[Verse 13. But the man that is clean, &c. and forbeareth to keep the Passover, even the same soul shall be cut off, &c.] The meaning is, he shall be shut out from the fellowship of the Saints.

Whosoever through mere negligence and carelessness did put off this duty, and would not with the rest of the people of God keep the Passover, is judged for it, and beareth his sin, that is, is guilty of a great wickedness before God. [Doctrine.] We learn hereby that they which negligently and carelessly omit the parts of God's worship, and the exercises of religion, whensoever they are celebrated in the meetings of God's people, committeth a great iniquity, and lieth under the wrath and judgments God. The uncircumcised male that purposely breaketh the Covenant of God shall be cut off from the people, Gen. 17.14. Moses carelessly omitting the circumcision of his son, was near to be slain of God, Exod. 4.24. He that did not conscionably and religiously keep the Passover, was also to be cut off, as we see in this place: and afterward, he that gathered sticks upon the Sabbath day, was stoned with stones that he died, chap. 15.32, 36. Such then as bring not the offerings of God in their season, and are careless in his worship, lie under his wrath, and deserve the sentence of excommunication.

For they neglect the homage and service [Reason 1] due to God, and observe not the seasons appointed of God, as we see in this 13. verse. There is an appointed season for every work under the Sun. God also hath his times and seasons, who hath all times in his own hands, which being neglected, cannot be recalled.

Secondly, all such as contemn the means, are profane contemners of those excellent things that are offered by the means; and the contempt of the word, is the contempt of God. The contempt of this Baptism is the contempt of the remission of sins; the Pharisees, that were not baptized of John, rejected the counsel of God against themselves, he that contemneth the Supper, refuseth the merits of Christ's death and passion, and is guilty of the body & blood of Christ, 1 Cor. 11. and maketh a mock of the Son of God. Thirdly, such despise the wisdom of God, accounting that simple, weak, and foolish, which he in his infinite wisdom hath appointed to be the ordinary means of his strong arm and mighty power. His ways are not as our ways, his ways are foolishness to foolish men, 1. Cor. 1.23. and our ways are foolishness to the most wise God, 1 Cor. 3.19. and that which is highly esteemed among men, is abomination in the sight of God, Luke 16.15. as that which is oftentimes least regarded of us, is in greatest price and account with him.

[Use 1] Conclude from hence, that the state and condition of all reckless hearers of the word, and of negligent receivers of the Sacraments, is most wretched & accurst. Shall we be so sottish and simple to imagine that God hath ordained these things for nothing? or that he will see his writings and seals trodden under foot, and not punish these rebels and enemies? Is not he that maliciously and contemptibly defaceth the Princes broad seal, a traitor against his Prince? Are these then any better that reject both word and Sacrament? we see this in Ahaz, when he had a sign offered unto him from the Lord in the depth beneath, or in the height above, to assure him of deliverance, he contemned and rejected the same, Isaiah 7.12.

howbeit, he never prospered after, but grew worse and worse, 2 Chron 28. True it is, he pretendeth he would not tempt God by asking a sign, but the refusing of a sign when God offereth it, is no better thē a tempting of God. All that refuse the Sacraments tempt God, for they will make trial whether God can or will save them without them. But take this as a certain rule, and build ye upon it, whensoever God granteth his Sacraments, he will never save without them. [Objection] If any ask, cannot God save without these, such as believe? I answer, [Answer.] the question is not what God can do, but what he will do: he hath made no such promise to any man to save without them, [Object.] while we have them. If any farther reply, Is is not enough to believe? is not faith sufficient to save and to join us to God? I answer, [Answer.] such deceive themselves to think they do believe, and yet neglect the use of the Sacraments. And therefore Christ saith, He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, he saith not, he that believeth only. Take this therefore as another rule, whosoever truly believeth, is careful to frequent the Sacraments, because when he hath faith, he desireth earnestly the confirmation of it. And whosoever rejecteth the Sacraments as needless and superflous, or despiseth the counsel and commandment of God, that requireth the coming unto them, doth evidently declare that he never had true faith. Thus then we see the woeful condition of all such as refuse the comfortable use of God's Sacraments. The Prophet pronounceth everyone of them accursed that do the work of the Lord negligently. Alas, alas, how many among us lie under this curse! how many are like to perish thorough the heavy, yet just wrath of God! O that these wicked and slothful servants could consider these things! The Lord is near in mercy to those that hear his word diligently, that pray to him earnestly, and frequent the exercises of religion carefully. Cornelius was often in prayer, for he prayed God continually, and therefore an Angel is sent to tell him that his prayers were come up in remembrance before God. So it is said of Hannah, for which she is highly commended. Let this be our praise and commendation.

Secondly, everyone is bound to prepare [Use 2] himself for such times, to lay all lets and businesses aside, to cut off from us all hindrances and encombrances, except we will our selves be cut off, that so we may join in the solemn exercises of God's people. And as we ought to perform this in all our meetings, so then most especially, when all the helps of faith and furtherances of our instruction meet together, when we have both the Scriptures read, and prayers offered, and the word preached, and the Sacraments administered, together with giving of thanks, and singing of Psalms, and such like. Al Israel far and near came to the Passover, and all nations under heaven professing y^e same faith joined with them. Should not therefore everyone within a small precinct of ground and in a parish give this honor to God? But we have such dissolute and disordered persons in most of our congregations, that think they have done a notable work, and begin to commend their own wisdom, if they can handsomely and cleanly shift off the time of the celebration and participation of the Lord's Supper: Nay, as cunning beggars delight to keep their wounds always bleeding, and their sores ever fresh and running, so commonly these corrupt fellows will have of set purpose some brabbling and brawling with their neighbors, just at the time of Easter when it is required they should communicate, and when they know the eyes of all are upon them more then at other times, then I say they will have some quarrel and contention, that so they may escape and go away. And if they can defer and delay the matter for that time, they think themselves safe by this ungodly shift, as the Fox in his burrow, until Easter shall come again. But these are not so to be suffered to escape scotfree. Let them be called upon to come the next time. They that were unclean by the dead, or in a journey, that they could not keep the Passover, were they exempted and freed unto the next year? No, they were commanded to come to it the next month, and that under the pain and censure of excommunication, as we see verse 12, 13. of this chapter. And so was the Church in former time wont to excommunicate all such willful and wicked offenders: and never was there more need to take up this course again, against such as seek to slide away slyly as it were in the dark that they might not be espied.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it reproveth such as pretend their defects and imperfections as reasons and warrants to bar them from the Communion, of whom we hope better things then of the former. They espy many corruptions in themselves, that they dare not presume to come, and therefore think it best utterly to abstain. They pretend the danger to come unworthily, and seem afraid to offend by their coming. But let not such deceive themselves. For first, no man for his weakness must forbear the Lord's Table. It was instituted for such as feel their wants. If you feel no weakness of faith, I charge you come not thither, for you cannot be fit receivers. Come to me (saith Christ,) all that are weary, and are heavy laden, and I will refresh you, Matth. 11.28. Secondly, the absenting of our selves from the Sacrament can be no good means to better our estate. For no man can reap any good by abstaining. Do we find much evil in our selves that we cannot come? let us persuade our selves of this, as of a certain truth, that forbearing the Lord's Supper will make us much worse. Suppose we find much hypocrisy, much self-love, much corruption, and much hardness of heart in us: yet to keep our selves from this Sacrament, is the ready way to increase and nourish these in us, and so to make us much worse then we were before, but better it cannot make us by any means. Thirdly, this corrupt practice doth closely and secretly accuse God of cruelty and severity, as if he were a rigorous judge that would accept of none but of such as had attained to absolute perfection; or else with that evil servant in the Gospel, they say, We knew thee to be an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, & gathering where thou hast not strewed, Matth. 25.24. yea, in effect they tax him with hatred and envy, whereas he is well pleased with sincerity of heart, though it be accompanied with imperfection of the work, and accepteth the will for the deed, 2 Cor. 8.12. When Hezekiah prayed for the people, that the Lord would pardon everyone that prepared his heart to seek the Lord God of his fathers, though he were not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary, the Lord heard him, and hearkened unto him, and healed the people, 2 Chron. 30.18, 19, 20. If there be in us a willing mind, God accepteth us according to that measure of grace which we have, not according to that we want. A good heart shall never be rejected▪ though some evil cleave unto it, and hang about it. Sincerity and truth in the inward parts shall never go away unrewarded. Job fought a sore combat as it were hand to hand with Satan, and received many blows and wounds, in the encounter whereby he was sore weakened, and brake out into many unadvised words which he would not and should not utter; yet God laid them not to his charge, but spared him as a man spareth his only son that serveth him, and setteth him forth as a worthy pattern of patience and of obedience. If then we labor to be upright in heart, the Lord will pass over our infirmities; he will look upon the good we do, and pardon the evil. Lastly, our abstinence giveth evil example unto others, for which also we must give an account. Woe unto them that give offense, and therefore let no person withdraw himself when the Lord doth solemnly invite him to such a solemn banquet. This we shall do, if we labor to find sweetness and comfort in these holy things of God, & avoid all loathsomeness and tediousness, whereby we incur the wrath of God, which fell upon the Israelites that loathed the Manna, Chap. 11.6. We must come to this heavenly feast, as a man would do to a bodily feast, and feast our souls as we do our bodies, that is, we must bring with us a good appetite, We must hunger and thirst after righteousness, Matth. 5.6. We see how men that would buy and sell do long after Fairs and Markets. These holy assemblies are the Fairs and markets of God, they are the great feast-days of God; let us therefore desire them with an earnest desire, that we may be stored at them, and all our wants be abundantly supplied.

[Verse 14. And if a stranger shall sojourne, &c.] The third law is set down, binding the stranger among them that embraced the Jewish religion, to partake the Passover. We learn hereby, [Doctrine.] that it is necessary for all Christians that are of age and discretion, to partake the Sacraments of the Lord; so he saith, Take ye, eat ye, drink ye, for the remission of the sins of many, Matth. 26.26. Again he saith, Drink ye all of this: and all of them drank of it, Mar. 14.23. and the Apostle, 1. Cor. 10. showeth that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea, and all were baptized under Moses, and did all eat the same spiritual meat, and did all drink the same spiritual drink; do we not hear how many times the Apostle repeateth, all passed, all were baptized, all did eat, all did drink, and that none were freed and exempted from this general and common duty? Christ sending out his disciples, willeth them to go teach all nations and baptize them, Matth. 28.19. So then, there is a necessity laid upon everyone to come to the Lord's Table, without exception of any estate, degree, or person that is of age and discretion.

[Reason 1] For to abstain purposely is a contempt of the seal of our redemption, and consequently both of redemption it self, and of the redeemer himself. For as he that despiseth baptism, despiseth that which is represented by it, namely, the washing away of his sins: so is it in the Supper, they that despise it, do despise the work and price of their redemption, Luke 22, 19. This is my body, do this, &c.

Secondly, they despise the commandment of Christ, nay an heap of commandments multiplied together to enforce this duty; wherefore doth the Lord Jesus say, Take ye, eat ye, do ye this, drink ye, do ye this? is it not to teach us that it belongeth unto us to obey?

Thirdly, we have the examples of the faithful as a cloud of witnesses to enforce us to yield obedience. All have submitted themselves to this duty, and all have accounted themselves bound to this practice, as we shown before out of the Apostle. And the people complained that they were kept back from the Passover, testifying that it was their desire to be admitted unto it.

Fourthly, such as do not come, do set light by the happy and holy remembrance of the death and passion of the Son of God, (wherein standeth the comfort of all his children) who teacheth that the faithful celebrate the Supper in memorial of him, as Luke 22, 16. If then we willingly and willfully abstain, we declare plainly, that we receive no benefit by the death of Christ, and care not if the memorial thereof were forgotten. An horrible sin.

Fifthly, the Supper is a notable means to strengthen faith: if then all have need of such helps as God hath left for us and appointed unto us, it followeth necessarily, that they must carefully resort to the sacraments, which serve for that end and purpose.

Lastly, they despise the Church and the union thereof, and do of their own accord after a sort excommunicate themselves from the fellowship of their brethren, and of Christ Jesus the author and appointer of this Supper: and in this respect the Apostle willet them to come together, and reproveth them that were herein slack or singular, saying, Despise ye the Church of God? in this I praise you not.

[Use 1] The uses follow. First, we must confess from hence, that it lieth upon all men to be frequent and forward in performing of this duty, & to come often to this exercise of our faith. It should never be celebrated in the Church, but all should come together. He that maketh a feast looketh that all which are bidden should come it. All the Disciples of Christ met together: and therefore Paul, who delivered that to the Church which he had received of the Lord, v. 23. chargeth them, y^t when they come together to eat, they should tarry one for another, v. 23. This is a general fault in our assemblies, and a disorder that we must never cease to reprove, which if it were found in our daily dinners that we make for others that are invited, and serve but to feed the belly, of which Paul saith, Meats for the belly, and the belly for the meats, but God shall destroy both it and them: Who would not think himself wronged to furnish his table, and to provide for his guests, & then none vouchsafe to come but cause him to lose all his cost, and labor, and expectation? We come not to the Lord's house and to the Lord's Table with that zeal and diligence which becometh us. It is said of the Church after Christ's ascension, that they continued daily with one accord in the Temple, and breaking bread, &c: and a little before it is said, All that believed, were together. But we, as if our brethren that stay to communicate, were not of the Church, or we did not belong to that fellowship, do shuffle away and scatter our selves abroad, as if this business did not belong unto us. If it be said, [Object.] It is a dangerous thing to receive unworthily: we may make our selves guilty of the body of Christ, and bring judgment upon our selves: I answer, [Answer.] it is not enough for careless men and women to hold out this buckler as if it could defend thē against the stroke of God's word, which cannot serve our turn. These are like to the sluggard in the Proverbs, that saith, There is a Lyon in the way, I shall be slain in the streets: or as it is before: A slothful man hideth his hand in his bosom, and will not so much as bring it to his mouth again. The sluggard never wanteth some defense for himself, he thinketh himself wiser then seven men that can render a reason. This is in his conceit a sure defense for his offense in abstaining, Seeing it is so dāgerous to receive unworthily, I will not receive at all, and so I shall escape the danger. But there is a necessity laid upon all that may and do come, and if they will be saved, they must come. For the danger is no less to abstain willfully, then it is to receive unworthily.

These are like to those unskillful Mariners, who while they are busy & careful to shun one rock, do run themselves upon another, & there suffer shipwreck. [Object.] But they will farther say for themselves, they hear the word, and tarry so long as the Sermon lasteth, and the word is y^e chiefest means. I answer, [Answer.] it skilleth not which is more principal and which is less, but it importeth us to know what is God's commandment. As he hath said, Hear ye the word of the Lord, so he hath said of this Sacrament, Take ye, and eat ye, &c. Will we give ear to one commandment, and not to another? Would any man, if he had some covenant to seal, content himself with the writing, and depart before he hath the seal to it? Or when one is bidden to a dinner or a supper, and hath tasted of one dish of meat, will he rise up and be gone? No, he will be sure to sit down with y^e first, & rise with the last. Or if he should start up and go his ways, will not the master of y^e feast think himself wronged and injured? And we must make no other account in this holy work, but that if we behave our selves in this rude and disordered manner, we shall highly offend the master of the house, and the author of the feast. Wherefore as the Apostle denounceth a woe against himself, if he preach not the Gospel, because a necessity is laid upon him, so he might denounce a like woe if he did not administer the Lord's Supper: so we must know that the same woe hangeth over our heads, if we do not carefully and oftentimes receive the Supper of the Lord, because a necessity is laid upon us, and therefore we must deal faithfully with God and our own souls in the discharge of this duty.

Secondly, this serveth as a comfort to all [Use 2] those that come as they ought, to wit, reverently and advisedly, and therefore it meeteth with sundry abuses w^c quench this comfort. Such are justly to be reprov'd, who depart the congregation in time of the administration of it, as though it were no part of God's worship, or did nothing at all concern themselves. Again, there are many that take a lawless liberty to themselves, to receive y^e Lord's Supper as often & sildom as they list, as though it were a thing indifferent, that might be done or not be done, at their own discretion. The common excuse that hindereth men is, y^t they say they are not in charity. But why do they not make hast to reconcile themselves to their brethren? why do they sit still, and never desire to be at unity? The Prophet telleth us it is our duty not only to be at peace with others, that if it be possible as much as lieth in us, we should live peaceably with all men; but also, that we should seek peace and ensue after it. If it fly from us, we must pursue it, and never give over until we have overtaken it, and laid hands upon it. But we are like to a man fallen into a deep pit, that hath no desire or purpose to come out of it. We should not suffer the Sun to go down upon our wrath, lest thereby we give entrance unto the devil. If we entertain the one, we can by no means exclude and shut out the other, as the example of Cain may teach us, who was of that evil one, and therefore first he hated, and then slew his Brother, 1. John 3, 12.

[Use 3] Lastly, seeing we are bound to come to the Sacraments, let us labor to feel the power, virtue, & grace offered unto us by them. Nothing in the world should be so often remembered of us as the death of Christ. This should be a Christian man's treasury, nothing should more rejoice our hearts, Gal. 6, 14. and therefore if we desire to feel the benefit of it, and to be transformed into a likeness of it, it should effectually move us to be often present, and often to use these pledges & remembrances of his death. In this Sacrament, we do after a sort see him crucified upon the cross. And to show that we do truly remember his death, let us labor to express the power of it, and answerably bear the like mind toward him. A conformity unto his death, is to die to sin, Rom. 6, 1. They that return to their own vomit, never came with a good conscience. What bitterness of the cross did he patiently endure for us? and shall we with our sins, as with nails and spears, pierce his hands, nay his heart again? These make a mock of the Lord's Supper, which representeth his death, nay they set at naught his death and passion. Others that day, so soon as they have been partakers of this seal, run up and down in rioting and sporting, and Ale-house hanting, and thereby make it evident, what reckoning they make of his death. Do these labor to die to sin, and to be like him? If we do no better die with him then in this profane manner, let us take heed of the second death, for it is to be feared such shall never live with him. If we be not like to him in this life, let us not look to be like unto him in the life to come.

[Verse 15. And on the day that the Tabernacle was reared up, &c.] The second part of y^e chap. followeth, to wit, the removing from Sinai, when once the Tabernacle was erected. I will from hence observe before we pass farther, [Doctrine.] one point from the building and erecting of the Tabernacle, a place for the congregation to meet together for the worship of God, that Christians also in the time of the gospel should have churches and Temples built, and fit places appointed to meet together for God's service. True it is, in time of persecution, when free liberty of public meetings is restrained, it sufficeth to meet in private houses (if those houses may be called private which are separated for such a purpose;) yet even they ought to be decent and fitted to so holy a work, and sanctified to so holy an end. God commanded Moses to set up a Tabernacle for the assembling together of the congregation, Exod. 25 David prepared to build an house to God, & would give no sleep to his eyes, nor slumber to his eyelids, until he had found out a place for the Lord, an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob, Ps. 132 4, 5. Solomon afterward built him an house, w^c was called the house of prayer, because chiefly it served for that purpose, Acts 7, 47. Immediately after the captivity, when Solomon's Temple was ruined, it was the principal care of the Jews to build it again; and though they were hindered a long time in the work, John. 2. yet being reproved for their negligence, and stirred up to diligence by the Prophets, they finished the work. The Apostle speaking of the abuses among the Corinthians touching the Lord's Supper, showeth, that they came together into one place, 2 Cor. 11, 20. and therefore it is needful to have fit places, by what name soever they be called, wherein the church is to assemble, Psal. 74, 8. Luk. 4, 16.

And so much the rather, because y^e Lord hath [Reason 1] promised his presence in them, and to dwell in them by his grace & Spirit. Exod. 25.8. Let them make me a Sanctuary, that I may dwell among them; for wheresoever two or three are gathered together in his name, there will he be in the midst of them, Math. 18. Secondly, prayers that are made jointly together by the whole congregation, are always more effectual: they send up a stronger cry, and therefore they are sooner heard. The best melody is of more voices then one: and moe sticks laid upon the fire make the heat the greater. We ought therefore to have fit places for this purpose, that we may as it were with one mind, & with one mouth glorify God.

[Use 1] Is this the end for which Churches are instituted and appointed? Then it reproveth such as invert the right uses of them, to wit, that in them we should come together to hear the word read and preached unto us, to make prayers and supplications, to receive the Sacraments, to sing Psalms, & to offer up praise and thanksgiving to almighty God: of which the Romanists have set up false ends, and established their own devices. They will have them erected for the external sacrifice of the Mass, for their Altars and Images, & such like trumpery; for which they allege the saying of the Apostle, Heb. 13, 10. but the Altar there spoken of is Christ himself, on which every faithful man must offer. The true ends of them we noted before, for the reading of the Scriptures, Acts 15, 21. for the preaching of the word, Luk. 4. for prayer, and for the receiving of the Sacraments, Acts 20, 7. Again, they teach that churches are of themselves more holy ground then other places, and in regard of the holy nature thereof, more available to pray there thē anywhere else. The place is to be accounted holy for the present, while the exercises of religion continue, but the congregation once dissolved, there is no inherent holiness remaining in it more then in any other place. Churches therefore we acknowledge to be holy places, nor in regard of the building and the beauty of them, not in regard of the ground or seat of them, but of the end & holy use for which they serve, and for the holy assemblies that there are made. Here then is the difference between them & us, they make churches to be holy in respect of the place, we in respect of the people. The people make the place holy, not the place the people. We are not therefore to pray to God with any opinion of holiness in one place, rather then in another, John 4, 21. Every place hath God's presence, and everywhere we may lift up pure hands, and therefore is alike sanctified for prayer in it self considered. Furthermore, whereas su•• places should be dedicated and consecrated to the honor of God, they will have thē also built to the name and honor of the Saints, and make them to be Patrons and protectors of them: there they pray unto them as to their mediators and intercessors. But no divine worship is to be given unto them. This is no better then flat idolatry, to pray to those that cannot help us. But to let these go, let us see how these religious places are otherwise profaned. Do we come to them as to God's house? Do we use there that reverence which is fit in his presence and dwelling place? So did the people, while Zachariah was burning incense, the multitude were without in prayer. But we commonly come thither rather to talk & trifle, then to pray and hear. In former times men's houses were their churches, but now the churches are turned into their houses, being ordinarily profaned with babbling, & laughing, and sleeping, and what not? Many come hither for no other cause but to buy and bargain, and to meet with others for their earthly profits and worldly business. Where have we commonly more brauling and brabbling then at the church? will not the least penny or occasion make us iar and almost set us together by the ears? We should come hither to please God, but when we are come we displease him, and forget God, and our selves, and the word, and the place and all. There is an Article, and it is a good one, to enquire of Church-abuses, whether there be any plays and interludes, any feasts and bankets kept in our churches, any suppers or churchales, drinkings and tiplings, musters & profane usages in churches, chappels, or churchyards? and whether the parishioners behave themselves rudely and disorderly in time of divine Service or Sermon, as by walking, talking, ringing, or any noise whereby the Minister or preacher is hindered and disturbed? These abuses are committed, and yet continue in many places. Christ would not suffer a vessel to be carried through the temple; He went into the Temple, and cast out all thē that bought and sold in the Temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold Doves. He purged the Temple of these Merchants, and when he had made a scourge of small cords, he scourged them out, he poured out the changers money, and overthrew the tables, as it is written, The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up. And he said unto them, Take these things hence, make not my Fathers house an house of merchandise, ver. 16. This house was the house of prayer by divine institution, but they had made it a den of thieves by profane custom and corruption. Let us therefore all of us remember to what end and purpose Temples were built, that God may be honored, not dishonored of us, and consider y^e presence of God and his angels in such places, to procure the greater reverence unto them.

Secondly, it is required that these places be [Use] kept in good order, that they may be accounted of as the houses of God. Is it meet that a Prince should rest in a simple cottage, or dwell in a stie or in a stable? and shall we entertain the King of kings in a soul and unfit place? There is no man that goeth about to entertain a friend, but he will make clean his house, and purge it of all uncleanness. Shall we have less care to receive the Lord then man? and of the house of God then of our own houses? It is the will of God that all congregations should have a convenient place to resort & come together to perform divine duties. Their zeal & diligence is greatly commended, that have restored and repaired the decays of such places, as we see in the examples of Iehoash & Josiah. As then it is required that the people have a convenient place to meet together for public prayer, for it is a good work to set up such places. The Jews commended the Centurion that had built them a synagogue, and made it an argument of his love to their nation: so like wise, such places should be decently kept for public preaching and prayers, that the holy things of God may be revered, & not contemned. Hence it is that the Lord doth sharply reprove, and grievously plague the Jews after their return from captivity, that they could find time to dwell in their settled houses, & yet suffer the Lord's house to lie wast: whereby it came to pass, that they had sown much, but had gathered little; they did eat, but were not satisfied; they did drink, but were not filled; they did clothe themselves, but were not warmed; they did earn wages, but were not enriched, ver. 6. If a man have his private house (wherein he dwelleth) any way decaying and standing in need of repairing, he is ready to redress and re-edify it: yea, he will do it to his barn for his corn, to his stable for his horse, and to his stie for his Swine. Nevertheless, how many think you are there that take themselves to be the people of God, & would be accounted notable good Christians, and think themselves greatly wronged if any should make any question of it, who suffer the houses of God to run to ruin, and to lie pitifully complaining, so wast and desolate, as if some foreign enemy had made hauock of them by a sodain invasion. Thus do many places lie open to wind and weather, and more deformed, defiled, and disfigured, then any poor Cabin or simple cottage whatsoever. Christ our Savior would not celebrate the Passover, but in a chamber trimmed and prepared for y^t purpose, Mar. 14, 15. True it is, the Lord standeth not in need of any man's riches, the whole earth is his with all the frame and furniture thereof, yea, the whole world with all that dwell therein. The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts, Hag. 2.8. our goods cannot extend unto him, Psal. 16, 2. yet it is his pleasure to use men as his instruments, to erect & edify to his honor, places fit for his service, and to bestow part of that which he hath bestowed upon them, toward the maintenance of his house, where the word may be preached, and the Sacraments administered unto the praise of his name, and the salvation of our own souls, & the souls of our families, and of our brethren. Again, observe that the Oratories and places of prayer do not necessarily require or admit exceeding beauty and sumptuous costs to delight the eye, whatsoever the Papists teach, neither doeth superfluity of garnishing stand with the simplicity of the Gospel, to have Churches glisten with gold and silver, and precious stones in gay and gorgeous manner, as the Jewish Temple did. Indeed the Prophets do foretell in many places of the glory and beauty of the church, that the glory of Lebanon should beautify the place of his Sanctuary, he will make the place, of his feet glorious, Isaiah 60, 13. He will lay the stones of it with Carbuncle, & the foundation with the Sapphires, the windows with Emeralds, and the gates with shining stones, Chap. 54, 11.12. But we must understand this of the spiritual beauty, not of any earthly bravery; of the inward glory, not the outward garnishing of the walls and windows. And therefore it is said, Psa, 45, 13. The kings daughter is all glorious within. The faithful that believe in Christ are this Temple of the living God, 1 Cor. 3, 16, 17. & 6, 19. 2 Cor. 6, 16. and the house of God, Heb. 3, 6. So then, we must consider, that there is an outward and an inward beauty of the church: & we must esteem of the glory of the church by the better part. We have an article to inquire, whether the church, chapel, chancell, and steeple be sufficiently repaired, in covering, walls, glasing, paving, seats, & bells. And the enquiry is needful, and not without just and good cause. Neuertheles, this is not the principal defect and decay to be repaired and amended. This must be done, but better things must not be left undone. There are in all places almost fair pulpets, but very many places want good pulpetmen. There be bells more or less, but many of them want their clappers, they cannot be heard. The Priests under the Law were to come into the Tabernacle with their bells, that the sound might come to the ears of the people: but the sound of the Ministers in many places is not to be heard, they are tongue-tied and cannot teach the people, like Idols that have mouths but cannot speak. Bernard in his time complaineth of superfluous cost bestowed upon churches, & showeth that holiness becometh God's house, which is rather delighted with unpolluted manners then with polished marble. It is a better work to relieve the needy, to feed the hungry, and to clothe the naked, then to garnish churches with gold and silver. It is said, y^t in former times when the church had wooden cups, it had golden Ministers: but now when as they had golden cups they had wood Ministers. What shall it avail to hang the walls of the church with costly and curious ornaments to have pillars shining with Marble, and the covering glistening with gold, whilst in the mean season there is no good choice of the Ministers that may attend on holy things▪ and preach the Gospel in truth and sincerity? Whatsoever the natural man esteemeth of glory and garnishing, whose vain imagination like the child that is delighted with toys and babies, is carried away with goodly shows to the eye, with pleasant smells to the nostrils, and with pleasing sounds to the ear, yet when we have learned to judge aright, & to esteem of things by the virtue and value of them, not by the sight and appearance, we will confess that among all others that is the goodliest Temple, and hath the most glorious ornaments and monuments in it, where the word is most soundly preached, and the Sacraments in the best manner delivered. This we ought to account the beauty and ornamēt of a Temple; and doubtless without these, it wanteth much of his luster, it is as a ruinous and ragged building, let it be otherwise never so richly garnished. This appeareth evidently at the building and erecting of the second Temple after the captivity, when the people that had seen the surpassing glory of the first house, to wit, the Temple of Solomon, the mirror of the world, saw also the simple beginnings and weak foundation of this, they wept with a loud voice, Ezra 3, 12. yet the Prophet telleth them, that the glory of the second house should far exceed & surmount the Temple of Solomon: as Hag. 2, 3. Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory, and how do ye see it now? Is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing? Yet he biddeth them be of good comfort, and telleth them that the glory of the latter should be greater then of the former house. But wherein stood this glory? or in what did it consist? not in the building, not in the stones, not in the vessels; it wanted the Mercy-seat, the Ark, the Tables, the Vrim and Thummim, and such like: herein therefore consisted the greatness of the glory of it, that while this stood, Christ Jesus should come to be the light of the Gentiles, and the glory of the people of Israel, Lu. 2, 32. And this doth Haggai teach, Chap. 2, 27. that the Desire of all nations should come, and so the Lord would fill that house with glory. A notable argument to convince the Jews, who have seen with their eyes this Temple long since destroyed, and not one stone left upon another that was not thrown down, Math. 24, 42. and yet they do foolishly to this day, look for another Messiah. So likewise the Evangelist Matthew speaketh of Bethlehem, that it was not the least among the Princes of Judah, because out of it should come a Governor which should rule his people Israel, Math. 2, 6. Yet the Prophet Micah (out of whom the sentence is taken) showeth, That it is little among the many thousands of Judah, chap. 5, 2. This may seem to imply a contradiction, to be little, and yet not little: howbeit we must understand, that this place which is in it self or compared with others small and little, yet through the birth of Christ it should be made famous and preferred before many other in Judah. Behold therefore wherein the glory of any place or people consisteth, to wit, in giving entertainment unto Christ, and in embracing the Gospel, which bringeth salvation to all men. And this is the glory of particular persons (not to surmount in strength, nor to abound in riches, nor to excel in wisdom, but to know the Lord, and whom he hath sent Jesus Christ, and him crucified, John. 17, 3. It is our glory to seek the glory of God, & if we have learned Christ, we have learned the way unto true glory. So then to conclude, we receive & practice whatsoever is fit and decent in setting up and adorning of churches, but we refuse and reject all excess, curiosity, and superfluity, as nothing at all furthering the worship of God, nothing fitting the Gospel of Christ, nothing auailing the salvation of mā, nothing helping to the kingdom of heaven; the folly whereof is so palpable and apparent, that the wiser sort among the Gentiles reproveth it, and inueyed against it, and saw that gold in God's worship auailed nothing at all.

Lastly, this putteth us in mind of a necessary [Use 3] duty belonging to all, to assemble men, women, and children, all that are of understanding for the hearing of the word, and other duties of faith & religion. For wherefore is it y^e will and pleasure of God, that houses and places of purpose should be built? Is it for show or for the name? It were vain and foolish so to surmise, as if he delighted to put his people to idle expenses. No, it is for preaching, for prayer, and for the Sacraments. Therefore was the Tabernacle erected, until which time was no certain place assigned: afterward, they had the Temple at Jerusalem, and Synagogues in all parts of the land, that God in thē might be publicly served and worshipped. Great was the zeal of David to these gracious assemblies. His soul longed for the Courts of God, as the Hart desireth the water brooks. His soul was athirst for God, for the living God, to appear before his presence. His tears were his meat and drink, while he was kept from these places, and while they daily said unto him, Where is now thy God? He poured out his very heart, when he remembered how he had gone with the multitude, and brought them forth into the house of God in the voice of praise and Thanksgiving. He was glad when they said unto him, We will go into the house of the Lord. And as it was with him, so was it with other the faithful. They were earnest to come unto these assemblies, they were loath to depart from them, they were grieved at their own absence that they could not be at them, being driven away by the enemies. The commandment of the Lord is general, that their Captains, their Elders, their Officers, and all the people should gather together. Who is it then shall plead an immunity or dispensation from this duty? May Women or Children? No, they are expressly charged to assemble themselves, Deut. 31, 12, 13. and ch. 29, verses 10, 11. Men, Women, and Children, from the hewer of thy Woode, unto the drawer of thy Water, even all of them must come together, that they may hear, and learn, and fear the Lord their GOD, and observe to do all the words of the Law. But is then the stranger exempted? No, he is willed to meet together with the rest. Are the old freed from this duty through their age? It is noted of Hannah, that she was an old woman that had been a widow fourscore and four yeas, yet she went not out of the Temple, that is, all her delight was to be there; she was never well and at hearts ease, till she was in God's house; she made the Temple as her own house to dwell in; she made the word & worship of God her meat and drink to feed on, serving him with fasting and prayers day and night, Luke 2, 37. So Simeon came into the Temple by the motion of the Spirit, when the Parents brought the babe Jesus to do for him after the custom of the Law, verse 27. Peter and John might have prayed at home in their houses, as many pretend they can and yet do it not; but they went up together into the temple at the ninth hour of prayer. The Lord giveth commandment, Ye shall keep my Sabbaths, and reverence my Sanctuary, I am the Lord. Such then as show no love to the Sanctuary of God, have no care of sanctifying the Sabbath, but do defile it and profane it; yea they never consider that they contemn the Lord himself, neither with whom they have to do in this business. Christ our Savior when he could be found nowhere else, by his parents seeking for him, he was found in the temple. Thus we see the practice of David, of Hannah, of Simeon, of the Apostles, and of Christ himself touching the public service of God. But behold the difference between those times and ours, or rather between them and us. David longed to be in the house of God, our souls long and faint to be out of it. Hannah dwelt in the temple, and could hardly be gotten out of it: we had rather dwell in the tents of wickedness, & with much ado are brought to come unto the Temple. Simeon was old as well as Hannah; we think our selves too old, and plead weakness and faintness that we cannot go so far, and yet we can stretch out our limbs to go farther at other times, and for other occasions. Simeon came into the Temple by the motion of the Spirit; by whose motion do others keep themselves from the Temple? and what shall we say ruleth in them? surely not the Spirit of God: what other spirit then it can be, I had rather leave it to themselves to consider, then declare it to them. Christ Jesus could be found nowhere but in the Temple; if one would enquire for these, yea upon the Sabbath day, yea in time of divine Service, you shall have them rather in the Tavern than in the Temple, or sitting upon an ale-bench rather than in place where it were more meet they did show their presence, even where God hath promised to show his presence. True it is, he hath said, that heaven is his throne, and the earth his footstool, & that he dwelleth not in Temples made with hands, Isaiah 66, 1. But the meaning is, that he is not included or as it were imprisoned in them, his power is not tied to any place; nevertheless, he hath made a special promise that where two or three are gathered together in his name, there is he in the midst of them. Wherefore, great should be our zeal toward the house of prayer, we should much desire to be at it, we should more and more be in love with it, and with great reverence remain in it. He that findeth not the Lord here where his honor dwelleth, let him never look to find him elsewhere. For whosoever despiseth in the pride of his heart the place of God's worship, & refuseth to yield his presence there, deceiveth himself if ever he think that God will make himself known unto him any other way.

[Verse 21, 22. And so it was when the Cloud abode, &c.] Here we have the cause of their marching and resting declared, to wit, the cloud, which was upon them by day when they went out of the campe, Numb. 10.34. When that stayed over them, whether it were two days, or a month, or a year, they abode in their tents, and iournied not; but when it was taken up, they journeyed. This cloud had the nature of a Sacrament, and signified the presence of Christ conducting them. The doctrine [Doctrine.] from hence is this, that Christ Jesus is the substance of the Sacraments both of the old and New Testament. Whatsoever the signs were, and howsoever they varied, yet he was signified by them all. This appeareth in this book plentifully by the cloud in this place: by Manna, chap. 11. and the rock ch. 20. all which were Sacraments unto them, all were the same with our baptism and the Lord's Supper, and all of them were figures of Christ, as appeareth not by some probability, but by the express testimony of the Apostle, I would not have you ignorant how that all our Fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea, & were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea: and did all eat the same spiritual meat, & did all drink the same spiritual drink, for they drank of that spiritual rock that followed them, and that rock was Christ. First, touching the cloud & passing over the sea, if we consider the letter of the history, there was a great miracle in them both. The cloud in the day time defended them from y^e heat of the Sun, their passage through the Sea gave them safety and security frō the tyranny of Pharaoh, and frō the danger of present death. Nevertheless, this is not all which we are to mark, nor the chief thing which we are to consider, because there lay hid as it were under a veil a greater mystery, inasmuch as both the cloud and the sea served them instead of a certain kind of baptism, representing and performing that unto them w^c our baptism doth unto us. For as baptism is a sign and signification of the grace of God, a Sacrament of regeneration, and a certain passage from death to life, so the Cloude was in effect to them as much, to wit, a tokē and testimony of the presence of God; & their passing through the sea was as a passing frō death to a new life. For while they were in the depth and bottom of the sea, where were they but in the midst of death? and when they had escaped to the farther shore, did they not after a sort rise from death to life? So then the Apostle teacheth, that both the Cloud and the Sea were as a certain Sacrament unto the Jews, & that common to them all, because all were covered with the cloud, & all of them passed through the sea, even as we that profess Christ are all washed with water, which signifieth our washing with his blood, and our partaking of his righteousness, Rom. 6, 3. Galath. 3, 27. Hence it is that many are said to be baptized in y^e name of Christ, Act. 2, 38. & 19, 5. which noteth not the form, but rather the end or effect of their baptism. It may be said, we read no such signification of the cloud or of the sea in the old Testament: how then did the Fathers understand them to be Sacraments? True it is, this is not expressed, but the Apostle the best interpreter of the Scripture giveth us a good warrant so to understand them, and to conceive of them. And there is no doubt but Moses and Aaron, and others instructed by them and by the Spirit of God, thus understood these mysteries. For how can we think that they which dealt faithfully in the house of God, would be silent in these things, & not teach the people? Neither may we admit of the gross conceit of Illyricus, who noteth that the Apostle inflectit paulo violentius ipsum simile, that is, doth somewhat violently, wrest this similitude. God forbid that we should think that Paul would lay violent hands upon the Scriptures, or wrest any part of the word of God from the natural meaning. The unlearned and unstable wrested the writings of Paul as they did also the other Scriptures: would Peter have complained of such, if his beloved brother Paul had done the like? Now it cannot be denied, that they were true Sacraments, because they signified Christ Jesus. True it is, they were not ordinary, nor perpetual, but extraordinary, and temporal, and transitory, howbeit they had a spiritual signification. The cloud was instead of the outward element and visible sign, neither was the word of grace wanting, and therefore it is called the Lord, and the Cloud of the Lord, Exod. 14. Numb. 14. & 19. If then the word joined to the element do make a Sacrament, this also must be acknowledged to be a Sacrament, forasmuch as it was a sign to them of the protection and preservation of God. The like we might say of their passing through the sea; they had this word of promise, Fear not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord which he shall show you today,&c. These indeed were outward blessings, but they pointed out spiritual blessings to the faithful, to wit, the favor and grace of God, and led them as it were by the hand to Christ, in whom is the accomplishment of all promises. True it is, all were partakers of the temporal benefits, but all did not partake of the eternal, howbeit this came to pass thorough their own fault & infidelity, inasmuch as they wer offered by God, albeit not received by them. For all have not faith, 2 Thes. 3, 2. and therefore all have not Christ, the pith and marrow of the Sacraments. If any ask why the Apostle maketh choice of these two, [Objection] the cloud and the sea, and calleth them by the name of a Baptism, and doth not rather remember circumcision, which was to the Jews instead of our baptism, forasmuch as their circumcision is our baptism, and our baptism is their circumcision, Phil. 3, 3. Coloss. 2, 11. and both of them are a Sacrament of our regeneration and adoption: The answer [Answer.] is, that in the cloud and the sea is a more plain and evident resemblance and proportion with the water in baptism, and the passage from death to life, was more lively and clearly shown and shadowed in them then in the circumcision. For they that stood under the cloud (as of all them did) what did they in a manner, but stand under death, because the cloud hanging over their heads, seemed ready in a minute and moment to fall upon them, and overwhelm them? So to go down into the bottom of the Sea, what was it to them but a kind of death? and to pass to the other shore, what was it but a rising again from death to life? And this doth the Apostle speak of baptism, as we have heard. So then the cloud and the sea were as a baptism to the Jews, and our baptism is as the cloud and the sea to us Christians; all looked at Christ, all signified grace, life, salvation, remission of sins, and regeneration thorough him. To these we must join Manna, and the rock; the one was spiritual meat unto them, the other was spiritual drink, and both of them the same with the Lord's Supper, and therefore they were not inferior unto us. Our Supper is spiritual meat, and spiritual drink, they also had their spiritual meat and Manna, and their spiritual drink out of the rock, and all these had reference to one and the same Christ; and therefore Paul saith, verse 4. The Rock was Christ. So the Manna was Christ, for he is the hidden Manna, Revel. 2, 17. These are called spiritual, because they had a spiritual signification. Thus are y^e Jews made equal to us in the other Sacrament also, which is a sign and seal of the nourishment which we have by Christ. The Sacraments were diverse in the outward signs, but in the thing signified, they are one and the same. This Manna & the rock were as the Supper of the Jews: so the Supper of the Lord is as the Manna and rock of us that are Christians. Thus then we see, that the cloud was Christ, the red sea was Christ, the Manna was Christ, as the Apostle expresseth that the rock was Christ, & as Christ showeth that the bread was his body, & the cup is the New Testament in his blood, the breaking of bread is the communion of the body of Christ, and the cup of blessing is called the communion of the blood of Christ, 1 Corin. 10, 16. So that we see all Sacraments whatsoever did figure out Christ, and point him out as with the finger.

[Use 1] This showeth the agreement between the Sacraments of the old & New Testament, they are the same in regard of the grace represented and signified by them. The same Christ is in both: the one figuring him out to come, the other pointing him out as already come in the flesh. Hence it is, that their Sacraments were dark and obscure, ours do serve more plainly and clearly to confirm our faith and to seal up our salvation. For as the Apostle teacheth that the Israelites were baptized as well as we, and did all eat spiritual meat, and drink spiritual drink as well as we: so he showeth that we are circumcised, and have a Passover sacrificed for us, and therefore it followeth that they had the same spiritual communion with Christ that we have. Out of this we have three things to be considered of us. First, that the Covenant of God with man hath evermore been in substance the same: forasmuch as it is a free contract between the Lord and a sinner, concerning the pardon of sin, and life everlasting through faith in Christ Jesus. This covenant he made with Jews and Gentiles. This was made with sinful man immediately after the fall, Gen. 3, 15. This succeedeth the former, which is of works, so soon as it was broken: for the latter which is the covenant of grace, had not been made, if the former had not been broken, and so made insufficient and impossible, Heb. 8, 7. Rom. 3, 23. Gal. 3, 21. True it is, the new Covenant which offereth salvation unto a sinner, is but one in substance, but in regard of circumstances it differeth. For in the Old Testament it was shadowed out by types, by figures, and by shadows before Christ's coming in the flesh. This yoke was taken away when Christ was exhibited, and all these ceremonies abolished, to the great manifestation of God's love toward us, and the special comfort of all the faithful. Secondly, that dishonor is done to God, violence to the Sacraments, and injury to the Fathers, by such as hold, that the Sacraments of the Old Testament were only significatue and mere shadows. For the Apostle speaking of the Fathers, saith, Acts 15, 11. We believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, we shall be saved even as they: but they were not saved by shadows of grace: for how can the rock be accounted a mere shadow and nothing else, seeing the Apostle calleth it Christ? If it be Christ, then doubtless they drank Christ himself which drank of that rock; even as if the bread be the body of Christ, and the cup the blood of Christ sacramentally, it cannot be denied, but that all they which eat the bread and drink of the cup of the Lord worthily, must necessarily eat the body & drink the blood of Christ spiritually. If any object, that Christ had not yet taken flesh of the virgin Mary, neither was exhibited to y^e world. I answer, [Answer.] it is true; but nothing to the purpose, because faith is the substance of things hoped for, & the evidence of things not seen, Heb. 11, 1. This made the flesh of Christ present, though he had not yet taken our nature upon him, neither were partaker of flesh and blood, Heb. 2, 14, And thus they did find salvation in the flesh of Christ, who was the Lamb slain from the beginning of y^e world, Revel. 13, 18. because God had promised even in the garden, that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpents head; so that we may say with the Apostle, Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and today, and forever, Hebr. 13, 8. And how could the Fathers under the Law have eternal life otherwise, forasmuch as this was evermore a true saying, Except ye▪ eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you? &c. John 6, 53, 54. So then the Israelites did seek & obtain salvation in the flesh of Christ which he was to give, whē the fullness of time came, for the redemption and salvation of the world. And through faith they received Christ, not only in the word, but also in the Sacraments. Thirdly, from hence it appeareth, that the eating and drinking of the body and blood of Christ, is merely and wholly spiritual, for by faith it is that we are united unto Christ, as branches to the vine, and draw from him everlasting life, and by faith he dwelleth in our hearts, Eph. 3, 17. This communion is common to the Fathers and us: but the Fathers could not communicate with Christ any otherwise then by faith in the Word and Sacraments, seeing he had not taken our flesh upon him: and therefore so it is with us, our communion is not carnal but spiritual. And such a communion did Christ himself teach, John 6, where he overthroweth and destroyeth the carnal eating of his body, both by telling them of his ascending into heaven, verse 62. What if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before? as if he should say, I will carry up my flesh with me into heaven, whither your mouth cannot reach nor enter: and by showing that such kind of carnal eating can profit nothing, v. 63. It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing, the words that I speak are spirit, and they are life. This only is necessary & sufficient unto saluatiō, the corporal & carnal eating, which is now maintained and defended by the Church of Rome and others, i▪ neither necessary, nor profitable, nor sufficient, nor any way available unto salvation. Nay, to many it is hurtful, dangerous, deadly, and damnable. These are like to the Capernaïtes, that did adhere seruirely to the letter, & will seem to stick closely to the words of Christ; howbeit he saith not, in the bread or under the species of the bread is the body, but This, that is, this bread which I have blessed, broken, and delivered into your hands to be eaten with the mouth of the body, is my body to be broken for you upon the Cross. But if the bread it self be the body of Christ, thē cannot the body of Christ be said to be in the bread. Wherefore the words of institution do not teach, or require, or confirm the carnal presence of the body of Christ in the bread.

Secondly, if the body and blood of Christ had been really in the bread and wine, Christ should have eaten himself even his own body, and drunk his own blood which was not yet really and actually shed, but rested & remained within the veins. For it is holden that he did eat of the bread and drink of the wine with his Disciples, and therefore he saith, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the Vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Fathers kingdom, Math. 26, 29. And as he was circumcised for us, not for himself, and was baptized for us, not for himself, and did eat the Passover also with his Disciples, so it may well be thought that he did partake of the Supper, as well as of the other Sacraments.

Moreover, Christ is ascended really into heaven with his body, which must contain him until his coming again, Acts 3, 21, and 1, 11. When he ascended, he left this world with his body, John 16.28. We have the poor ever with us, but him we shall not have ever, Math. 26, 11. It will be said, that Christ saith, Loe, I am with you to the ende of the world, Math. 28. It is true in respect of his Deity: for the promise is made to the Church of his perpetual presence, providence, and protection by his Spirit. Again, if he were always upon the earth, he could not be our Priest to make intercession for us, as Hebr. 8, 4. If he were on earth, he could not be a Priest, &c. but he is our Priest and sitteth at the right hand of his Father. Besides, if Christ were present bodily in the bread, he were to be worshipped in the bread, and in the mouths and stomachs of these that receive and eat the bread; but that cannot be without committing idolatry. He will come from the heavens to judge the quick and the dead, not from the bread or from the Altars. His body is visible and may be felt, and hath flesh and bones, as our natural bodies have, Luke 24.30. We are forewarned by our Savior, not to believe or give any credit to such as will show him on the earth, and say, Loe here is Christ, or loe he is there, before his coming again, Math. 24, 26. If they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the Desert, go not forth: Behold, he is in the secret Chambers, believe it not: and shall we believe them that tell us he is in the bread, or in the pixe or on the Altar? but of this I have spoken elsewhere.

Secondly, it is not enough to come to the [Use 2] Sacraments and to be partakers of the outward signs, the chief part that we must look after is Christ Jesus. It serveth therefore to beat down all confidence that we may have in the outward sign. Simon Magus was baptized as well as the rest in Samaria, Acts 8, 13. but what did that avail him, forasmuch as he remained in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity? verse 23. therefore he had no profit by it, for though his body were washed with water, yet his soul was not cleansed by the blood of Christ. It is noted of the Israelites by the Apostle, that they were all under the cloud, and all passed through the sea, all did eat the same spiritual meat, and drank the same spiritual drink; yet with many of them was not God pleased, for they were overthrown in the wilderness. What did it advantage thē to be partakers of these benefits? They might bring some good to their bodies, but they brought no comfort to their souls. Al were partakers of the outward signs, but all received not the grace signified, for many of them were destroyed. It hath always been even from the beginning a vain opinion and presumption to ascribe too much to the outward work of every ordinance of God. We know how much the Jews gloried in their circumcision, and preferred themselves before the Gentiles whom they contemned, as if, to have the foreskin of the flesh cut off, were enough to make a man to be undoubtedly the true child of Abraham, nay the child of God, although he did never labor to express the true circumcision, which is the power of it in their hearts. Hence it is, that the Prophets call them back continually from this foolish confidence, and will them to circumcise the foreskinne of their hearts, and be no more stiff-necked. Stephen putteth them in mind, notwithstanding the outward circumcision, that they were uncircumcised in heart and ears, Acts 7, 52. As then there is a double circumcision, one outward or of the letter, the other inward or of the Spirt: so may we say of baptism. And as the outward circumcision, notwithstanding all their vain boasting, could not profit, so must we conceive no less of our outward baptism, if we do not labor, when we are come to age and years of discretion, to be washed and cleansed from sin in our souls, as we were washed with water in our infancy. Again, they gloried not a little in the Temple and in the sacrifices offered in the Temple, Ier. 7, 4. they cried out, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, this is the Temple of the Lord; yet the Prophet faileth not to tell them, that they trusted in lying words, which should not profit, so long as they did not amend their ways and their works. Thus they rested in the deed done, as if they had done a meritorious act, that must needs deserve the love and favor of God. So is it with the ignorant multitude among us, if they come to Church, they think they have done a great work, as much as God can justly or possibly require at their hands. But our coming to our Temples or Churches, shall little help us, except we hear & obey, and become new creatures. This corruption (whereof we speak) we have even drawn from the loins of Adam, and sucked it from the breasts of our first mother. When Adam and his wife had fallen from God, the Lord cast them out of the garden, lest they should put forth their hand, and take hold of the tree of life, and eat and live forever, Gen. 3, 22. Had the tree any such virtue in it, that if they had eaten of it again, it could restore them to life, and make them live forever? No, but God discovereth the corrupt judgment of degenerate man; they had an opinion that they should recover their former estate again, if once they could lay hold of the tree of life, they thought all would be well, if they might taste of that fruit. Thus it is with many in our days, if they receive the Supper of the Lord, they think it hath an hidden virtue inherent in it, as a medicine that serveth for the body, and that they are as sound Christians as the best. The like we see in the Israelites at another time, when they had received an overthrow by the Philistines, & their forces defeated that they brought into the field against them, they trusted in the Ark rather than in the living God, saying, Let us fetch the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord out of Shiloh unto us, that when it cometh among us, it may save us out of the hand of our enemies. They deemed & dreamed that the bare bringing of the Ark into the host, should defend them and discomfit their enemies. They had a vain confidence in that outward sign of God's presence, but they had polluted the worship of God, and no Ark can save a profane people. So if we be ungodly, profane, & rebellious, though we receive the Supper every day, it should do us no more good then to trust to a broken reed, forasmuch as it will rather serve to further our condemnation by abusing of it.

[Use 3] Lastly, we must take heed how we come to the Sacramens, and bring with us the hand of faith, that we may lay hold upon Christ as well as upon the bread and the cup. With the hand of the body we receive these, but with the hand of the soul we receive Christ. Here is great comfort ministered to all those that come to the Lord's Table aright. For as they that rest in the outward signs, wherein pride and ignorance meet together, depart without any benefit to themselves: so all such as communicate aright, do receive Christ and all his benefits, then which there cannot be a greater benefit. God the Father offereth and assureth his own Son, whom he hath sealed to be the Mediator of our redemption, & he deludeth and deceiveth no man that cometh to the Supper as a guest prepared for the marriage feast. For as the word turneth to be the savor of death unto death to the irreverent and vnregarding hearer; so in truth is the Sacrament the savor of death unto death to the unworthy and unwise receiver. Let us therefore thoroughly examine and prove our selves, whether we be in the faith or not, and consider diligently what is set before us, and hunger and thirst after Christ, that we may obtain this hidden Manna. This we shall never do, except we observe these few rules. First, we must try our selves by y^e law of God, whereby cometh the knowledge of sin, Rom. 3, 20, & 7, 7. It is a clear glass to show us our faces or rather our hearts, I am. 1, 23. From hence we must frame an editement against our selves.

Secondly, we must labor to understand and believe the common corruption of all mankind, standing partly in original sin, and partly in the fruits thereof, wherewith all are tainted as with an unclean leprosy from the crown of the head to the soale of the foot, Rom. 3, 9.

Thirdly, we must feel the curse of everlasting death due to us, Gal. 3, 10.

Fourthly, we must learn what covenant God hath made with us touching grace and mercy, that we may be raised up to comfort in the Son of God our Redeemer.

Fifthly, we must desire to be made partakers of the Lord's Supper, and feel how much we stand in need of it; which will follow necessarily upon the former.

Lastly, we should fit our selves the better unto the work, by considering the proportion between the signs and the things signified. The beholding of the breaking of the bread, & the pouring out of the wine, should enforce us to remember the body of Christ broken and his blood shed for us.

When we look upon the Minister coming to us and reaching forth these elements, We should consider that the Lord Jesus himself cometh to us, and offereth himself with all his mercies and merits unto us, if we have faith to receive him. And as we lay hold upon the bread and wine, and take them in our hands, so we must stretch forth the hand of a lively faith to lay hold of Christ; for with him we shall entertain all his saving benefits to our endless and everlasting comfort.

CHAP. X.

Ver. 1, 2. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Make thee two Trumpets of silver, &c.

HEere we have the conclusion of the first part of this book. [Doctrine.] In this chapter we are to consider two things. First, the commandment of God directed to Moses to make two silver Trumpets. Secondly, the removing of the Israelites from Sinai to Paran. Touching the Trumpets, they are described by the matter, they must be made of silver: by the form, of an whole piece. Thirdly, by the ends, for the calling of the assembly, and for the iourning of the Campe. Fourthly, by the manner prescribed how to use them, to what purpose one alone is to be sounded, to what purpose both: when an alarm is to be blown, and when the alarm is to be blown the second time; when they must blow, but not sound the alarm. Fifthly, by telling who shall be the trumpeters, or sound the Trumpets, the sons of Aaron the Priest. Lastly, by y^e time, how long this use shall continue, to wit, as an ordinance forever, even so long as the Commonwealth of the Israelites shall endure. This is the present use of them: there is a double use of them commanded for the time to come; one in time of war, to assure them that God will then remember them for good, and save them from their enemies, ver. 9: the other in time of peace at their solemn feasts, at their burnt offerings and peace offerings.

[Use 1] The uses of them follow, which are partly civil, and partly ecclesiastical. And first, seeing these silver Trumpets served for y^e Camp and the Congregation, to assemble and to remove, and that the power of making them is committed to Moses, who hath the sole prerogative to call and to dissolve assemblies about public affairs, we learn that it belongeth to Kings and Princes as their proper right to gather together, and to dismiss them that are gathered together. Everyone hath not authority and jurisdiction to draw multitudes together, we shall have no small ado, if that may be suffered. Acts 1^o, 23. We must have lawful and orderly assemblies, verse. 29. and such as do not savor of confusion. So it was in Egypt, without Phar•oh, no man might lift up his hand or foot in all the Land of Egypt, Gen. 41, 44. This right is annexed to the highest power by an estate indefeizable, and by a perpetual law y^t cannot be dissolved throughout all generations. As this power together with the Trumpets was given to Moses, so did he and his successors practice the same, who commanded in chief, as Deut. 33, ver. 5. Numb. 31, 6. Joshua called and dismissed the people, and they obeyed him in the execution of that power, no less then they had done Moses before, Josh. 1, 17, and 24, 28. So did David use these Trumpets, 1 Chron, 15, 4, & 23, 2, 3, 6. When the Ark was to be removed, and when the offices of the Tabernacle were to be ordered, which are things merely belonging to true religion. The like we might say of Solomon, 2 Chron. 5, 2. of Asa, Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, and Josiah. Thus were all general Councils congregated and called together, and there were none otherwise called for a thousand years after Christ, but by the Trumpet of Moses, that is, by the authority of Caesar. Thus did Moses also in gathering assemblies about public affairs both for consultation and action. For consultation, because many eyes may discern that which few cannot. For action, because many hands may discharge that which is troublesome & cumbersome for one to do, Exod. 18.18. This serveth to reprove three sorts; first, the Bishop of Rome, who as a thief and usurper hath encroched upon the Princes right, and stolen away one of these silver Trumpets and carried to it Rome. He would leave Moses but one Trumpet, and would limit his office to civil and temporal things, challenging power in all spiritual causes and over all spiritual persons. Howbeit, Aaron the High Priest never offered to wring and wrest out of the hand of Moses this power: he was content to blow them at the commandment of Moses, or rather at the commandment of God. Nay, such is the tyranny of this proud Bishop, that he contenteth not himself with one Trumpet, though he have indeed right to none, but he beginneth to engross into his own hands the other Trumpet also, claiming power to depose and dethrone Princes, and to dispose of their crowns and scepters at his pleasure, as if all kingdoms were given unto him, and it belonged to his right to dispose of them. Had Peter any such power? or did he ever claim any such dominion? No, the Apostle well understood, that Christ forbid them to exercise any such Lordship, Math. 20, verses 25, 26.

Secondly, it reproveth those that being summoned by the sound of these Trumpets, that is, called together by the Magistrate, refuse to come. Moses by virtue of these Trumpets put into his hands, called Corah and his company, but that crew answered, We will not come up: but if we would know what became of these rebels, some were consumed with fire, and others we must seek for under the earth, for the earth opened her mouth, as they had opened their mouths against Moses the supreme Magistrate, and swallowed them up, their goods, their houses, and persons: yea, the Apostle denounceth a fearful woe against them that perish in the same contradiction & gainsaying of Core, Jude, verse 11. So then if the Magistrate call, no man must refuse or deny to come. In the natural body, the beginning of all motion is from the head; and so it ought to be in the body politic.

Thirdly, it reproveth those that assemble before they were called; the former would not assemble when they were called, these assemble before they be called. The other were too slow and dull, these are too quick and nimble headed. So then all must keep their places and standings, they must come when they are called, but they must be called before they come. The mutinous company mentioned, Numb. 20, 23. when they wanted water, stayed not for the sound of the Trumpet, but came together in a tumultuous manner; but God sware they should not enter into his rest. This evil is much worse then the former. It is evil not to come when we are called, but to gather together without a calling, is worse & more dangerous, and produceth more dangerous effects. For they that presume to meet without Moses his precept, will not stick afterward to meet against Moses his person, & in conclusion also to wrest the Trumpet out of the hand of Moses. Therefore the Town-Clearke said, We are in danger to be called in question for this days uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of this concourse. As if he had said, we have done more then we can well answer, seeing we may be endighted of treason or at least of a riot for this days work. We must therefore know, that every such Congregation assembled without a lawful call, is no better then a conuenticle, whatsoever account we make of it.

[Use 2] Secondly, from hence ariseth an instruction to the Ministers of God. For as Aaron and his sons, the Priests of God, are commanded to blow the Trumpets, so this is an image and representation of the faithful Preachers and Ministers, who by the clear and shrill sound of the word of God, must bring men to the true knowledge of God: as 2 Chron. 13, 12. where the King of Judah telleth Jeroboam, The Lord is with us for our Captain, and his Priests with sounding Trumpets to cry alarm against you. It is their office to sound the alarm against God's enemies, and to bid defiance against all sin. So the Prophet Isaiah saith, ch. 58, 1. Cry aloud, spare not, lift up your voice like a Trumpet, and show my people their transgressions and the house of Jacob their sins. Likewise Ezekiel, chap. 33, ver. 2, 3, &c. the Ministers are made watchmen over the house of Israel; if they see the sword coming, and blow not the Trumpet, the blood of such as perish, shall be required at their hands. So then, they must have zeal, courage, and boldness, to reprove sin without fear of men's faces, and without respect of persons, and must strike at it where they find it. Such a one was Elijah, that feared not the Kings face, but told him, it was he and his fathers house that troubled Israel, 1 King. 18, 18. Such a Trumpet was John the Baptist, who is said to be the voice of a crier in the wilderness, and told Herod it was not lawful for him to have his brothers wife, Math. 14, 4. This reproveth such as are dumb dogs and hold their peace, such as cannot open their mouths or say anything, whose breath serveth them not to blow this Trumpet: such also as wink at sin, and will not see it: such also as rebuke coldly and are afraid to speak, whereas they should blow the Trumpet, and even thunder out against obstinate sinners, and make them afraid to sin, seeking to save them with fear, pulling them out of the fire. Hence it is, that Amos saith, Shall a Trumpet be blown in the City, and the people not be afraid? Or will a Lyon roar in the Forest, when he hath no prey? When a Trumpet giveth a sudden sign by the sound of it out of a watch-tower, all the people hearken and are troubled, and prepare themselves this way or that way, according as the Trumpet giveth the token. So at the voice of God sounding by his Minister, we ought to be attentive and give ear, and to be moved at the noise of it, and as he giveth warning, prepare our selves and look about us while it is time, lest afterward it be too late. For God doth not threaten for form or fashion sake, as if he did not purpose to punish; neither are his threatenings ordinary words of course, forasmuch as the very Lions themselves do not roar, except they see some prey or booty. The word is never without his effect, neither returneth unto God empty, but it accomplisheth that which he pleaseth, and shall prosper in the work to which he sendeth it. As then the roaring and yelling of the Lyon is an assured token of the prey, so the threatenings of God are prognostications and fore-shewings of the wrath of God, ready prepared. Woe therefore unto those, that albeit they hear the sound of the Trumpet, yet sit as stones or steel, and are never a whit moved, but pass over God's judgments and threatenings, as if they concerned them nothing at all.

Thirdly, these Trumpets teach us with joy [Use 3] and gladness to praise God for his benefits bestowed upon us. For the Priests were commanded to blow with the Trumpets at their peace offerings and burnt offerings, ver. 10. and Ezra 3, 10. to be a testimony of their spiritual joyfulness, and to be a memorial before the Lord, as Levite. 23, 24. In the seventh month, and the first day of the month, shall ye have a Sabbath, a memorial of blowing of Trumpets, an holy convocation. And Psalm. 81, 3, 4. Blow up the Trumpet in the new Moon, in the time appointed on our solemn feast day, for this was a statute for Israel, and a law of the God of Jacob. As then the Jews on the feasts appointed of God, did set forth his praises with singing and instruments of music of all sorts, the Trumpet, the Psaltery, the Harp, the Organs, the Timbrell, & the Cymbals: so ought the faithful upon the Lord's day, and at all other times set forth the spiritual praises of God with heart and voice. And this was the month, wherein many feasts met together, & after the time they had gathered in y^e fruits of the earth, and received many blessings at the hand of God, that so they might in their public meetings praise God for them, and pray unto him to give them grace to use them soberly and moderately, to the glory of his Name, to the comfort of themselves, and to the refreshing of their poor and needy brethren. Thus we see there is a twofold Trumpet, or rather a twofold sound of the trumpet; one is a terrifying sound, which may be called the Trumpet of the Law proclaiming the wrath of God both against sins & sinners, of which we read, Zeph. 1, verses 14, 15, 16. The great day of the Lord is near, it is near and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the lord: that day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble & distress, a day of wastnes & desolation, a day of darkness & gloomines, a day of the Trumpet and alarm gainst the fenced Cities. &c. The other is a comforting sound, which is the Trumpet of the Gospel, whereby troubled and distressed consciences are lifted up and called to rejoicing, of which the Prophet Isaiah speaketh, chapter 27, 13. It shall come to pass in that day, that the great Trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish in the Land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the Land of Egypt, and shall worship the LORD in the holy Mount at Jerusalem. So then it is our duty to blow this Trumpet of peace, to testify our joy and gladness, when God bestoweth any benefits upon us, Psalm. 33, and 118, 1, 2, and 47, 5, 6, and 48, 1. 1 Chron. 15, 28. 2 Chron. 5, 12, 13. and 15, 14.

[Use 4] Fourthly, these Trumpets (as we have already noted) served for diverse uses, according to the diverse and different sounds, that at the hearing of the noise of them, the people might by and by understand what it meant, and themselves must do. This teacheth us and we are put in mind of it by the Apostle, that as in the host every blast was understood, so in the Church every voice should be understood, and all things should be done to edifying, that they might understand the words of the Preacher what he speaketh unto them: as 1 Corinth. 14, 7, 8. Even the things without life giving sound, whether Pipe or Harp, except they give a distinction of the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped? For if the Trumpet give an uncertain sign or sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle? So likewise you, except ye utter by the tongue, words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? for ye shall speak into the air, that is, vainly or idly, to no end and purpose. There is no edification in an unknown tongue: he that understandeth it, giveth thanks well, but the other is not edified. Paul himself saith of himself, he had rather speak five words to be understood, then ten thousands in an unknown tongue, that by his voice he might teach others, verse 19. Yet he giveth thanks to God that he spake with tongues more thē they all, to whom he wrote, verse 18. Besides, how shall the people answer Amen, at the giving of thanks, seeing they understand not what is spoken? verse 16. Again, he showeth that there are many kind of voices in y^e world, and none of them are without signification: therefore if we know not the meaning of the voice, we shall be unto him that speaketh, Barbarians; and he that speaketh shall be a Barbarian unto us, verse 10, 11. Everyone must seek to excel, as he may most edify the Church, verse. 12. Rom. 14, 19. Moreover he saith, If I conceive public prayers in the congregation in a tongue not understood, the Spirit moveth and inspireth me well, nevertheless, the meaning & substance of my prayer bringeth no fruit or profit to the Church or to them that hear me: because they may well gaze and gape upon such a one, or haply admire him & be astonished at him; but they may depart as wise as they were before, inasmuch as they receive no benefit by such prayers, v. 14. Hence it is, that he saith, he would pray with the Spirit, and would pray with the understanding also: he would sing with the Spirit, he would sing with the understanding also, v. 15. Strange tongues are not a benefit to the people that hear them without understanding, but a judgment and punishment, v. 21: and therefore such should keep silence if there be no Interpreter, v. 28.

To conclude, all public exercises of our religion, praying, reading, preaching, singing, and receiving of the Sacraments must be used in a known tongue.

This serveth to lay open the grossness of the Roman religion, which have the Scriptures in an unknown tongue, which sometimes the speaker himself doeth not understand, but never the people to whom he speaketh. A most uncomfortable religion, that leadeth men in the dark, and standeth in this & other chief parts of it, merely upon policy. If you blindfold a man, you may do with him what you list: so the Romanists deal, that their juggling may not be espied, and their spiritual or rather carnal couzenage not discerned. The Lord more and more open the eyes of the people, that they may see this which is so palpable, that many of their own side have wished the disorder to be amended. Lyra saith, If the people understand y^e prayer or the blessing, they are better brought to God, and do more devoutly answer, Amen. To him consenteth Cajetan, who gathereth out of this doctrine of the Apostle, that it is better for the edifying of the Church, that public prayers in the hearing of the people, should be said in a tongue common to thē all. And for our selves, let us acknowledge God's mercy, that hath delivered us from that misery and bondage, & restored unto us his truth, which lay and yet lieth buried in the papacy. Let us walk worthy of the light of the Gospel that is brought home unto us, and bring forth the fruits of it to his glory. But if we refuse to hear the Lord speaking unto us by his servants, and to obey them speaking unto us (in a tongue well known unto us) the wonderful things of God, let us take heed he do not send barbarous enemies using a barbarous tongue, which shall bring us into slavery and subjection. For it is just with God, if we refuse to hear him speaking to us in a known tongue, to compel us even against our willes to hear another speak to us in an unknown tongue to the increase of our misery, and to the danger of our souls: as he dealt with his own people for their unthankfulness, whom he upbraideth that they understood not his speech, and therefore armed the merciless Romans against them y^t spake to thē in a tongue which they understood not, and scourged them by y^t abomination of desolation, the which chastisement continueth upon them to this day.

[Use 5] Lastly, these silver trumpets, serving to sound the alarm in the ears of the people, put us in mind of the last day, when all people shall be gathered together, and arise out of the earth at the sound of the last Trumpet of God. For God will also have his Trumpet. These were blown by Aaron and his sons, the last Trumpet shall be blown by the Archangel. Of this we read in many places of the New Testament, of which Christ himself speaketh, and the Apostle in his Epistles. The Evangelist showeth, that the Son of man shall send his Angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, even from one end of heaven to another. And Paul speaking of the general resur•ection at the last day, saith, Behold, I show you a mystery, we shall not at all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a momēt, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last Trumpet: for the Trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised up incorruptible, and we shall be changed, 1 Corinth. 15, 51, 52. Likewise the same Apostle teacheth, that the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trumpet of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. 1 Thess. 4, verse 16. In the giving of the law, many fearful signs and tokens of God's glorious presence appeared, that made the people fly away & cry out, among the rest, they heard the noise of the trumpet, Exod. 20, 18. which sounded long, and waxed louder & louder, chap. 19, 1•. This was so terrible, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake: but at the day of judgment, when God will requi•e an account of the law, and how we have walked in the obedience of it, when everyone shall be judged according to his works, the Trumpet shall be much louder, and the sound of it far shriller, for the dead sh•ll hear it, & arise out of their graves. This shall cause a greater fear in all, then was at the giving of the law, because his coming to judge the quick and the dead shall be sudden, unlooked for, powerful, and glorious. When men shall promise to themselves peace, and safety, then sudden destruction shall come upon them, as travail upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape, 1 Thess. 5, 3. And as it was in the days of Noah and Lot, when they gave themselves to a general security, and never knew anything till they were destroyed, one sort with water, and another with fire: so shall the coming of the Son of man be, Mat. 24, 37. It shall be also powerful; his first coming was in much weakness, but this with great might, able to sweep away all his enemies to hell. Lastly, it shall be glorious, for he shall be accompanied with thousands of his Angels, that shall attend upon him, as servants upon their master, ready to execute his will, Jude 14. And this his coming shall have a three-fold effect, for there will follow immediately a gathering together, a separation, and then a judging. First, all must be gathered together at the sound of the trumpet, both the dead and the living, they shall rise out of their graves, some to everlasting life, & some to shame & everlasting contempt, Dan. 12, 2. After this gathering, there shall be a separatiō, Christ sitting in his throne of glory, the elect shall be set at his right hand, the reprobate at his left. Thē shall follow the judgment it self, the Judge of all Judges giving a most just sentence, calling y^e elect to inherit •he kingdom prepared for them from the foundations of the world; & casting y^e reprobate into everlasting torments, prepared for the devil & his angels.

[Ver. 11, 12. And it came to pass on the twentieth day of the second month, in the second year, that the cloud was taken up, &c. Here we have the removing of the Israelites from the desert of Arabia the stony, which bordereth upon Mount Sinai, where they abode for the space almost of an whole year, during which time, the law was given, the Tabernacle was built, the Priests were consecrated, & the whole worship of God established. In this removing we must observe three things, the form and manner of it, the care of Moses in preparing & providing a guide to lead them, and the prayers that he usually and ordinarily made at the beginning of their march, and likewise when the Ark rested. Touching the first, all the people of Israel removed from their encamping at the foot of the Moun•aine Sinai, toward Paran; the army or great squadron of Judah, led by Naashon, taking the Vauntgard, followed by Nethaneel and Eliab, Leadcrs of the Tribes of Issachar and Zebulun; after whom all the rest marched, as we have seen in the beginning of the book,

From hence we learn, that GOD would have order observed among his people, [Doctrine.] in all his ordinances. The Apostle setteth it down as a precept, 1 Cor. 14, 40. Let all things be done decently and in order. He was glad of the comely order observed among the Colossians, ch. 2 5. We saw before how the Lord appointed the Tabernacle to be placed in the midst of all the Campe, and the Levites to attend round about, and all these to be compassed on every side with the rest of the Tribes, And if we will cast back our eyes to the first times, & mark the creation of the world from the foundation of it, together with all the parts of it, the earth, the water, the air, the firmament, and the heaven of the blessed; who can express the goodly order which they possess & keep? For as they are placed one above the other, so they are pure, subtle, simple, and notable. And as this exquisite order showeth and shineth forth in the Elements and the Heavens, so doth it in the Angels; for as one star differeth from another in glory, so doth one Angel from another. There is one Archangel, others are called thrones, dominions, powers, and principalities; Eph. 1, 21. Col. 1, 16. The day and night have their courses: summer and winter have their seasons: one man hath gifts above another: Michael is called a Prince or one of the chiefest of the Angels, Dan. 10, 13. When Christ our Savior intended to feed the multitude that had continued with him to hear his word, he commanded his Disciples to make all sit down in ranks by hundreds and fifties, that is, the five thousand which did eat of the five loaves and two fishes, sate orderly in companies, an hundred in length, and fifty in breadth, Mark. 6, 40. so that he would have all things, even the most common & ordinary, done in order.

[Reason 1] For all disorder and confusion came into the world by Satan, and his chiefest travail and employment is to make a breach into that order which God hath settled and established. He shuffleth and mingleth all together, and seeketh to disturb and destroy what he can, & [Reason 2] how he can. Again, order is a means to preserve every society: the want of it threateneth ruin to every society. When the people were to encounter with the Canaanites, they asked of the Lord, who should go up against them first, to fight against them. Judge. 1, 1. When a Prophet told Ahab that the great multitude of the Syrians should be overcome in battle, and delivered into his hands, he asked, Who shall order the battle? and the Prophet answered, Thou. The word properly signifieth to bind or to tie, because good order bindeth and tieth as with a chain, the whole host together, and one of thē to another as sticks •^t are bound together in one bundle. Whilst they stand firm and continue close together in good array, they are out of danger: if once they disband, and fall to rout, then followeth a miserable carnage and destruction. Besides, [Reason 3] it giveth beauty & comeliness to every action.

This serveth to reprove such as keep not [Use 1] their places, but break out of order, and will not be held within the compass that God hath set them. Every man hath his bounds set him, & is enclosed in them as in a circle, which he may not pass. In the giving of the Law, when the Lord promised to come down in the sight of all the people upon Mount Sinai, Moses is commanded to set them bounds, that they may take heed to themselves, and go not up into the Mount, or touch the border of it, ver. 12. if any touched the Mount, he was to be put to death, v. 13. Every creature hath his proper place, and goeth no farther then the chain of God suffereth. The sea though it rageth, yet is held in by this chain, God hath said, Thus far it shall go and no farther. In the gathering of Manna, which was the bread that the Lord gave Israel to eat, Moses doth set down y^e order which they must observe; they must leave none of it until the morning, v. 19. On the seventh day every man must abide in his place, no man must go out of his place on that day. No man hath any promise of blessing when he keepeth not the order y^t God hath set him. We know how it was with Corah, Dathan, & Abiram, when they would encroach upon Moses and Aaron, and the calling wherein God had set them, it was their own destruction.

Secondly, acknowledge from hence, that [Use 2] the Church is a blessed company, it is the very school of good order, wherein all things are done in number, weight, and measure. When Balaam had seen the goodly order of this host of God, as the Valleys that were spread forth, as gardens by the rivers side, as the trees of Lign-Aloes, which the Lord had planted, & as Cedar trees beside the waters, he cried out in an admiratiō of this comely, decent, & seemly order, How goodly are thy Tents, O Jacob! and thy Tabernacles, O Israel! This heathen man, this sorcerer, this idolater, as blind as he was in the matters of God, saw and could not but open his mouth to confess the glorious condition and estate of the Church. For who is it that ruleth in the Church? and who is it by whom it is guided? Is it not God, who is the God of order? No confusion cleaveth or can cleave to him, he is not the God of confusion: he is light, & him is no darkness at all, 1 John 1, 5. He hath set an order among all his works. He hath appointed in the Church, Pastors and Teachers for the gathering together of the Saints, Ephesians, chap. 4. Some to teach, and others to learn: some to speak, and others to hear: some to minister the Sacraments, and some not to minister them.

This made the Prophet David say, Jerusalem is built as a City that is compact together, whither the Tribes go up, &c. There is nothing but confusion out of the Church. The world is full of disorders.

[Use 3] Thirdly, when we see this order interrupted and broken off in the works of God, know that it cometh not of God. Acknowledge therein the corruption of man and the work of Satan. What is it that hath brought in trouble and confusion, but the sin of man? That therefore cannot be of God. Frō hence it cometh, that the creature is subject unto vanity, Rom. 8, 20. not by God's creation, but through man's transgression. This have I found, saith Solomon, that God hath made man upright, but they have sought out many inventions, Eccl. 7, 29. Nevertheless we are assured, that as the whole creation groaneth and trauaileth in pain together until now, so it shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of GOD, verse 21. And we for our parts, considering the desolations that sin hath brought in, must seek by all means to repair the image of God so much decayed.

[Use 4] Fourthly, whensoever we cannot sound the depth of God's works nor judge of them as we ought, when we see to our appearance much out of square, as soldiers out of their squadrons: we must not condemn y^e works of God, but accuse our own blindness & ignorance: forasmuch as God hath made all beautiful in his season, Eccl. 3, 11. When we behold how the wicked prosper for the most part, and are of great power, spreading themselves like a green bay tree, Ps. 37, 35: and on the other side, the godly all the day long plagued and chastened every morning, Ps. 73, 14. we are ready to misjudge & misdeeme of these works of God. David confesseth, that his feet were almost gone, his steps had well nigh slipped, v. 2. He began to think he had cleansed his heart in vain, and washed his hands in innocence, v. 13. Howbeit, the ways of God are not as our ways: this is therefore our weakness in judgment. Thus also was Jeremiah troubled, ch. 12, 1, 2. and no less the Prophet Habbakkuk, ch. 1, 13. Wherefore lookest thou upon thē that deal treacherously, & holdest thy tongue when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous then he? This which we esteem to be a confusion, is indeed no confusion: and that is in order which we suppose to be out of order. For God is a God of patience and long suffering, who will take vengeance on his adversaries, and he reserveth wrath for his enemies, Naum 1, 2. and therefore is the Prophet (much perplexed in spirit) willed to wait by faith the issue that God will make, for the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come, it will not tarry, Hab. 2, 3. Then the Chaldeans, though used of God as his rod to afflict his people, shall be destroyed. Thus God hath set them in slippery places, Ps. 73, 18. so as they pass away & are not, they are sought, but cannot be found, Ps. 37, 3. The transgressors shall be destroyed together, the end of the wicked is, to be cut off, ver. 38.

Lastly, from hence every man must learn [Use 5] to do the duties of his own calling. God hath set every man in a certain calling, as it were in a certain field to till, wherein he is to labor. We are apt indeed to break out into the callings of other men, as if we were pinned up in too narrow a room. This made Solomon to say, I have seen servants on horses, and Princes walking as servants upon the earth. And as God hath set every man in a calling, so must every man wait and attend upon that calling, whether it be in the Church, or in the family, or in the Commonwealth. In the Church, there is order to be observed in reading, in preaching, in prayer, in the Sacraments, that such as be at them may say in their hearts, Surely God is in this place, and report that God is in them of a truth. To this purpose doth Paul deliver sundry instructions; if any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two or at the most by three, and that by course, and let one interpret, 1, Cor. 14, 27. Let the Prophets speak two or three, & let the others judge, v. 29, If anything be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace, v. 30. All Churches of the Saints have this order. v. 33. Let your women keep silence in the Churches, for it is not permitted unto them to speak, but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the Law: & if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home, for it is a shame for women to speak in the Church. And if it be not permitted unto them to preach, neither is it permitted them to baptize, which is an appendance unto the Ministry. Their duty is to be in subjection: but to baptize, is a part of power & jurisdiction. So also ought everyone to learn and practice the duties of his calling in the private family. An house divided against it self cannot stand, Math. 12, verse 25. but quickly falleth, Luke 11, ver. 17. Happy is that house, when such as are Governors know how to rule, and such as are inferiors, know how to obey. But if one encroach upon the place of another, there followeth much confusion. And in the Commonwealth, every soul must learn to be subject to the higher powers, for there is no power but of God, the powers that be, are ordained of God; whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist, shall receive unto themselves damnation, Rom. 13, 1, 2. Without this, the whole order of nature will be perverted. A kingdom divided against it self, is brought to desolation. When he sendeth Magistrates and Princes, he meaneth to preserve mankind by them, & he striketh a fear of them, not only into men, but also into beasts, Dan. 2, 38. Such then as rise against them, and labor to set all in a broile, and to bring all things to confusion, are worse then the brute beasts that are without understanding. And it is very apparent, that they are possessed with the giddy and frantike spirit of uproar and sedition, which will not be under the rule of such as God hath ordained. We cannot honor God, except we honor such as he hath set in his place. He hath printed his own image in them, and in their persons we obey him. And when superiors are no longer revered, all will be set in a tumult and turmoile, and must needs go to spoil and havoc. Now, if we would speak of the practice of the Church of Rome, there is no good order observed among them, but the whole ordinance of God is utterly overturned: the preaching of the word is little esteemed, the word and prayers are in a strange tongue, prayers also are made to Saints, & the use of the Sacraments is horribly profaned: they permit baptism unto women, and the Supper they have quite abolished. Christ and Antichrist are not more contrary, then the Romish church to the true Churches of Jesus Christ. They have pulled up the foundation of Christian religion, and utterly denied the faith. The Scriptures they make insufficient, and to contain a maimed and imperfect doctrine. They subject them to the judgment of the Bishop of Rome and to the authority of the Church. They banish the people from them, as if they were very dangerous unto them. They contemn Magistrates, & claim power to dispose of their kingdoms, if they be supposed to be heretics.

[Ver. 29, 30, &c. And Moses said unto Hobab the son of Roguel the Midianite, Moses father in law, We are iournying, &c.] The next point is the conference between Moses and this Hobab. For inasmuch as the passage thorough so many Mountains and Deserts was exceeding both difficult and dangerous, Moses leaveth nothing vnforethought which might serve for the advantage of his enterprize, and therefore instantly entreated his father in law to accompany them in their way toward Canaan, promising to him such part and profit of the promised Land as GOD should bestow upon them. True it is, Moses had lived long in those parts of Arabia, thorough which he was now to travail, yet the better to assure his passage, and to save so many thousand souls as he had brought out of Egypt, which could not be so few as a million, it was needful for him to use many guides and conducters, and therefore he is so earnest and importunate with Jethro: who as he was a man of great years and much experience, and of no less judgment & understanding, which appeareth by his counsel that he gave to Moses for the appointing of Judges over the people; so he was a fit and perfect guide in all those quarters, himself inhabiting on the frontiers thereof at Midian.

What was the answer and issue of this request of Moses, Intepreters are divided, & do much vary about it, as also who this Hobab was, and whether he yielded to this motion, or not; I assent to those that take it to be Jethro; and albeit it may seem at the first sight, by that which we read, Exod. 18, and in this chap. that he yielded not, but returned back into his own country, yet because it appeareth by diverse other places of Scripture, that the posterity of this Hobab wer mingled with the Israelites, and had that reward which Moses here promiseth, it is most probable and likly, that this his return back mentioned in Exodus, was rather to fetch away his family, and to take his leave of his own country by setting things in order, thē with a purpose to abide there, like to the departure of Elisha from Elijah. But whether this Hobab were Jethro himself, or his son, or whether in his own person he returned, we leave in doubt: howbeit these two things are built upon certainty, that Jethro did go back again, & that his posterity came afterward to the Israelites.

But why doth he so vehemently desire to have this Hobab the guide of their way? [Object.] was not the all-seeing eye of God sufficient unto them? had not he promised to conduct them? and had they not the pillar of the Cloud to go before them? It is true, [Answer.] yet human helps whē they may be had, and God offereth them unto our hands, are not to be neglected. The using of lawful means doth not oppose or confront the providence of God. For faith standeth well with lawful means. Nay, it is rather a sign of infidelity & tempting of God, to cast away such helps and furtherances as we may obtain, and to boast of only faith in God in the pride of our hearts. True it is, we must not put our trust in men, whose breath is in their nostrils, nor depend upon the means as our chiefest confidence, but in the living God, lest we set up men and means as Idols, and offer sacrifice unto them. Therefore, it is the duty of the faithful to use such means as God giveth them for their good. Indeed he can work without means, but we must attend unto his will, & not stand upon his naked power without his will. But of this afterward. The point which here I will observe, is from the offer y^t Moses maketh to Hobab, who might be instead of eyes unto them because he was skillful in all the parts & places through which they should pass, he was well acquainted with those deserts, and knew what commodities and discommodities they should meet with in y^e wilderness: if he would be partakers with them in the sour, he should aso enjoy the sweet, and he should have his part in the blessings that God should bestow, if he would impart unto them the benefit of his knowledge: and therefore there ought to be a communion of earthly things among all those that profess the same faith and religion. In the primitive Church, no man accounted anything his own, no man kept the temporal blessings of this life to his own use only, but they had all things common, Act. 4.32. neither was there any among them that lacked, verse 34. Thus doth John Baptist teach the people that came to his baptism, He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise, Luke 4.11. So dealt the widow of Sarepta toward Elijah, she had only an handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse, 1 King. 17.12. yet even of that little pittance she made a cake for the Prophet, verse 15. So it was with Job, as he showeth in the defense of his own innocence and integrity, chap. 31. he withheld not the poor from their desire, ver. 16. he did not cate his morsels himself alone, but the fatherless and widow did eat thereof, ver. 17. he saw none to perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering, ver. 19. therefore he did distribute to the necessity of the Saints, Rom. 12.13. and was given to hospitality.

[Reason 1] For the whole multitude of them that believe are of one heart and of one soul, Act. 4.32. As they have but one faith, so they have one desire to glorify God, and to honor him, as if they were but one man. Secondly, we are one flesh, Isaiah. 58.7. therefore to deal our bread to the hungry, is to feed our selves; to bring the poor home that are cast out of their houses, is to harbor our selves; & to cover the naked, is to clothe our selves. We are members one of another, as parts of the same body whereof Christ is the head, and therefore it cannot be but we must have a compassion and fellow feeling of the wants and necessities one of another, 1 Cor. 12.26. Rom. 12.5. We must be like affectioned one to another.

[Use 1] This serveth for reproof. For we have many that appropriate unto themselves y^t which God hath given or lent unto them for y^e good of others. It is noted as the speech of covetous Nabal, to say, Shall I take my bread, and my water, and my flesh that I have killed for my shearers, and give it unto men, whom I know not whence they be? 1 Sam. 25.11. The like is the speech of Laban, as covetous as he, Gen. 31.43. These daughters are my daughters, and these children are my children, and these cattle are my cattle, and all that thou seest is mine. We are taught in the Lord's prayer, to call it our bread, and not my bread. It is remembered of the leapers, that they entered into some of the tents of the Syrians (who had forsaken them) and did eat and drink, and carried thence silver and gold, and raiment, hiding the same to their own uses only, 2 Kin. 7.8 howbeit they by and by recall themselves and say one to another, We do not well, this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace, &c. Now therefore come that we may tell the kings household. So should it be with such as have gotten this worlds good, not provide for themselves only, but have respect unto others. Secondly, such are justly to be accused, as contemn those that are in poverty, who cannot abide them, or are ashamed of them, and think themselves disgraced by thē. Let such take heed, lest God also be ashamed of them. The rich and poor meet together (saith Solomon) the Lord is the maker of them all. And again, Who so mocketh the poor, reproacheth his maker: and he that is glad at calamity, shall not be unpunished. It is a fearful sin for any to presume to mock his Creator, and everyone would be ashamed to be so accounted: howbeit they cannot avoid it, but are justly taxed with this crime. Little do these consider the uncertainty of all human things, how one is exalted, another cast down suddenly, that God often chooseth such as the world rejecteth; and on the other side, they are an abomination unto him, who are highly esteemed in the eyes of men, I am. 2.5. 1 Cor. 1.26. Mat. 11.5. Thirdly, they are reproveth, that repine at the good estate of others, whereas we should be ready to communicate unto them, and not think they have too much already. Such were the laborers that wrought in the Vineyard, who had no less then was their bargain, yet they thought others had too much, Matth. 20.12, 13, 14, 15. Lastly, it reproveth such as do wrong and injury to those that have little and small means to withstand violence, so that they lie open to injuries and oppressions: and therefore Solomon saith, Rob not the poor, because he is poor; neither oppress the afflicted in judgment, for the Lord will defend their cause, and spoil the soul of those that spoil them. True charity seeketh not her own, but the good of others.

Secondly, it is our duty to relieve and refresh [Use 2] with our goods the poor estate of our needy brethren. The example of the pitiful Samaritan leadeth to the practice of this point. For when he saw the poor traveler lie robbed and wounded in the way by merciless and bloody thieves, he bound up his wound, he poured wine and oil into them, and gave direction to have him looked unto and well provided for, though they were strangers the one to the other. The Priest and Levite pass by him, and regarded him not in his misery and necessity, as if they had not seen him. The Lord hath made us stewards of the things of this life, & we must give an account of the use and employment of them. Whatsoever goods we have, are the Lord's, to whom the earth and the whole furniture of it belongeth, and he hath bestowed them upon us on this condition, that we should despense them to those that have need, and distribute them to such as are in want. To this as we have many hindrances, so we have also sundry encouragements which ought to weigh down the former. One cause pulling us back from the practice of liberality, is a false opinion that we conceive, and weak ground that we build upon, namely, that the goods which we have, whether left by inheritance or otherwise purchased, are wholly and solely our own & left to our own will. For we must all confess, y^t we have our masters goods in our hands. We are Stewards and must give up our accounts. The first Christians, professing the same communion of Saints, thought nothing they had to be their own; but these will not let go their hold, persuading themselves that all is their own. Oth^{ers} are hindered by a vain & needless fear that themselves shall want, or at leastwise may want before they die. This conceit proceedeth from distrust, and savoreth ranckly of infidelity. For if they did believe the Scriptures, or durst rely themselves upon the sure word and gracious promise of God, they would find that liberality is the way to abound, not a means to bring any to want, as Prov. 19, 17. and 28, 27. Psal. 37, 25. No man feareth to lend a rich man, that standeth upon his word: but he which hath pity upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord, and that which he hath given, shall he pay to him again; God becometh surety for the poor, who never falsified his word to any: that which they cannot, he both can and will pay: let us not fear to lose by our liberality, so long as he is become our paymaster. A third sort are hindered by an idle and frivolous pretence, that they have families and charges of their own, they have wife and children to provide for. Had not think you, the first Christians so likewise? Might not they have as fair excuses to hinder them as these? Yet they shrunk not under the burden though it lay heavy upon their shoulders, but they sold that which they had, and made it common, so far as the necessity of the Church required it. Others will reply & say, Alas, I am poor myself, and have but a little, and therefore can give no relief or refreshing to others. Let such consider the poor widows mite: Was not she poor? had she not a mean estate? God accepteth a willing mind, where there is not a wealthy man, 2 Cor. 8. All that do not receive should give, even all that are not in need, Eph. 4, 28. as the laboring man that getteth his living with his labor, & the servant that taketh wages, who hath none to provide for, but for himself and the poor. These are oftentimes very liberal & nothing sparing of their masters goods, but will give nothing of their own. This is rather stealing then giving, and deserveth the title of robbery, then of charity or liberality. Lastly, others allege, that the poor are oftentimes lewd, wicked, idle, and unthankful. True it is, none are to be maintained in an idle course of life: punish them for their idleness, but relieve them in their needinesse. If they be loose and lewd, this may be a means to make them much better and more thankful: for thereby we shall heap coals of fire upon their head. The Apostle, after a sharp reproof of idle persons, 2 Th. 3, 13, saith, Bee not weary of well-doing. And though it fall out that the tongues of the poor curse us, yet their loins shall bless us, Job 31, 20. and their own hearts & consciences shall convince them. And hence it is, that the wise man commandeth us, to cast our bread upon the waters, because though it seem utterly lost, as if we should plow the barren sands, yet after many days we shall find it. These are the chief discouragements, which as stones of offense lie in our way to stop the course of liberality. On the other side, we have many good encouragements to help us forward to this duty. First, it hath a promise of great blessing annexed unto it, made by him from whom all blessing cometh, as we noted before. He will not suffer so much as a cup of cold water to go unrewarded, Math. 10, 42. Again, how highly Christ accepteth of it, appeareth hereby, that he accounteth of it as done unto himself, Mat. 25, 40. and the neglect of it, as a neglect of himself, v. 45. Thirdly, it is a forcible means to manifest the truth and sincerity of our religion, I am. 1, 17. Hereby our faith is tried and known to be a sound and saving faith, ch. 2.

Our hearing of the word, and partaking of the Sacraments are not accepted, except they be seasoned with mercy & compassion as it were with salt, Esa. 1.14, 15.

Lastly, seeing we must communicate one with another in earthly things, how much [Use 3] more ought we to do it in heavenly? And if we must procure good to the bodies of our brethren, we are much more to seek to save their souls. This is the greatest love that can be, to be a means to win any to salvation. The soul of a man is of great price, it is more worth than an whole world of wealth. For what should it profit a man to win a kingdom, and then lose his own soul? or what shall a man give for the recompense of his soul? This is a divine labor, and shall have a divine reward. This is an heavenly purchase, to purchase souls. In our days they are accounted the only wise men of the world, that can compass great matters, and purchase house and lands, and leave a rich posterity behind them. Many men make it their glory to vaunt of their purchases, and how they have increased their revenues, and enriched their heirs. But what have they gottē to God? or whom have they won to him? Doubtless to gain one soul to God is better, and shall yield more comfort at the last day, then to get great substance, and to leave a rich inheritance behind us. Hence it is, that Solomon saith, The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life, and he that winneth souls is wise, Prov. 11, 30, Dan. 12, 3. The Apostle Jude teaching the Saints what love they should show toward their brethren, and what care should possess their harts for their conversion, willeth to have compassion vpō some, putting difference, and y^t they should save others with fear plucking them out of y^e fire. This work of winning of souls standeth in bringing of thē to the knowledge of God, & converting of a sinner frō going astray out of y^e right-way. Some err in opiniō, other are corrupt in life & conuersatiō. He y^t seeth his neighbors Ox or Ass ready to fall into a ditch wherein he might perish, is bound by the law to pluck him out of danger, Exod. 23, 4, 5: or his beast going astray, must bring it home to the owner, Deut. 22, 1. All souls are mine, saith the Lord, Eze. 18, 4. he is the owner of them, he is the Lord over them: when they wander out of the way of truth, they must be brought unto him again. Shall we draw an Ox out of the pit, and not our brethren made after the similitude of God out of the puddles of sin wherein they are plunged? Hath he care over brute beasts, and not much rather over men's souls? It is a point of humanity, to bring the wandering stranger into his way: but it is a part of true piety, to turn them into the pathe that leadeth unto life, who thorough error wander from God and his word. To effect this, we must use these means, and practice these duties. First, to instruct them which are ignorant and walk in darkness, & in the shadow of death, that thereby they may come to the knowledge of the truth, Prov. 13, 14. Secondly, to reprove them of the evil which they have committed, that so they may repent and come out of the snares of Satan, 2. Tim. 2, 25. And thus many have been reclaimed, Prov. 6, 23, Thirdly, to exhort and admonish one another, persuading them unto that which is good, & dissuading them from that which is evil, Heb. 3, 7, 8, 13. and 10, 24. John 4, 28, 29. Thus we shall draw on some, and prevent the fall of others. This we must do in love and in the Spirit of meekness, considering both them and our selves, Gal. 6, 1, 2. Fourthly, to use threatening to them that are obstinate and hardened in sin, denouncing unto them the judgments of God, that their hearts may be mollified and softened, as Physicians deal in desperate diseases. Lastly, to seek to convert them by a godly example of an holy life, 1 Pet.

3, 1. 1 Cor. 7, 16. This is as strong and forcible a means as any of the former, if not more forcible: the other are by word, this is by deed. For when they behold an example of godliness, faith, patience, humility, and obedience before their eyes, it causeth them to fall down on their faces, and give glory unto God whē they see their good works. But woe to all carnal Gospellers, who by profane examples of all looseness, do strengthen the hands of the wicked, & thereby keep them from repentance. Woe unto them by whom any soul is hindered from conversion, 1 Pet. 1, 7.

[Verse 35, 36. And it came to pass, when the Ark set forward that Moses said, rise up Lord and let thine enemies be scattered, &c.] This is the last point, setting down the ordinary prayers that Moses used, both when they marched and when they rested. These prayers were not used at this time only, but upon all such like occasions. They never removed, but it was joined with prayer; they never pitched down their Tents, but it was done with prayer. This sanctifieth all, our goings out, and our comings in: & teacheth us to begin our works, and end our labors with it. And to whom doth he pray? He goeth not to Saint or angel, he saith not, Rise up Abraham, o Isaac, or Jacob; but Rise up, O Lord, teaching us that it is a duty due only unto God. But to omit these points that everywhere come to hand, observe this from the practice of Moses, [Doctrine.] that the servants of God may lawfully use a prescript form of prayer, whether it be the Minister in the Congregation, or the Master in his private family, or a particular Christian between the Lord and himself, when he is entered into his Chamber, and hath shut the door unto him. This we have shown already in the sixth chapter, by the blessing commanded to the Priests, to be used in the public assemblies. Now that which was allowed unto the Priests, may not be thought unlawful to the people. Such as brought the first fruits to God to testify their thankfulness unto him for his blessings, and that they held all of him in chief, have a set form appointed unto them, Deut. 26, 5, 6, 7, &c. The Psalms of David were penned, not only to be used at that time wherein they were made, but ever afterward, as occasion served. The 92 Psalm was penned for the Sabbath day: so the 102 Psalm to be a prayer for the distressed, when he should pour out his Meditation before the Lord, as appeareth in their several titles: yea Christ our Savior, that had the greatest grace of prayer, who continued the whole night in prayer to God, Luke 6, 12. yet did not forbear and abstain in prayer, from using the same words oftentimes, Math. 26. verse 44.

This truth will the better appear, if we [Reason 1] consider that the Lord Jesus himself hath left a pre-script form of prayer, not as a pattern or platform only, but likewise to be used as a prayer. So that his doctrine is according to his practice: he prayed in the garden three times, using the same words, and he alloweth his Disciples to do the like: yet who may be compared unto him? He did it not thorough want of words or matter, who had the treasures of wisdom in him. Therefore he said to his Disciples, After this manner pray you. If we may pray after that manner, then we may pray after a set form, whether it be read in book, or rehearsed without book. Secondly, [Reason 2] it is the common rule of Christ and his Apostles, that whosoever asketh in faith, shall be heard, whether it be in a prescript form, or otherwise. It is faithful prayer which pleaseth God, and availeth much: and without faith, nothing is accepted. Thirdly, it is requisite [Reason 3] for order sake. For uniformity is a notable means to avoid confusion: and therefore the church heretofore hath used y^e same, & the most reformed churches at this day use it, from which we are not slightly to dissent and disagree, and so to reject read prayers, and set forms.

Lastly, the Apostle avoucheth, That he would pray with the Spirit, and he would pray with the understanding also; but a new prayer, never heard of, is not so well understood & conceived of the simple, neither can they so rightly & readily answer Amen unto it. But the same form used, the oftener it is heard, the better it is understood. In men there are for the most part sundry wants, as ignorance in the mind, forgetfulness in the memory, defect of utterance fit to be in him that should speak unto God, fear and bashfulness in the affections, that they cannot deliver the desires of their heart in the presence of others, much dullness and deadness in the soul; yet we are not to debar such from prayer: all which wants a set form helpeth.

[Use 1] The use hereof is, to convince those that are of the separation, which have rent themselves from us, and made a rent in the Church as Schismatics, who hold it unlawful to use any set forms of prayer, yea even that form of prayer w^c our Savior hath taught and commanded. These do not only hold it to be unlawful, but account it an abominable idol, and as loathsome to God, as the offering up of swine's flesh in the time of y^e law. These be their own words, to be read in the books of Greenwood and Barow, two principal Sectaries and ring-leaders in this division. They account it no better then lip-labor, nay not so good: they hold it to be a stinting of the Spirit. But to leave words and to pass by their bold assertions, let us hear what they answer to our reasons, & then reason against their answers. We allege, that Christ expressly willeth us to pray thus; and the Priests in the law were expressly charged to bless the people thus. This is our warrant to justify our practice; now mark I pray you their answer, and compare the one with the other. They tell us boldly, that Christ willeth not his disciples to pray this, but thus: and that the Priests were not required to use these very words of blessing, because the Hebrew word [Coh] used in that place, is an aduerbe of similitude, as if it had been said unto them, Ye shall bless them after this manner, or after a like sort. This cannot be to tie them to the same words, but to do it according to the same instructions. For nothing like to another is the same. But this (by their patience) is no better then a shift and cavil. For be it that they were not required to use the same form and frame of words, yet were they forbidden to use thē? or if they had used them, had they offered up swine's flesh? had they committed Idolatry? had it been an idolatrous kind of service? for they forbid the people to use the Lord's prayer as a prayer. Neither do we say, that the Priests were precisely tied to use the same and no other words, but we would know of them whether they wer forbidden to use the same? To which question, I think they will not answer in hast. The Hebrew word upon which they lay the weight & foundation of all their building is used throughout the old Testament, and the use of it by Moses and the Prophets serveth fully and notably to pul up their conceit by the roots: and that the weakness of their answer and exception may appear the better, let us see the use of it in some particular places. When Moses was sent to the children of Israel to say, That the God of their Fathers had sent him unto them, and pleaded for himself that they would say unto him, What is his name? God said unto him, I am that I am: Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I am hath sent me unto you. Here we have the same word used. Now according to their exposition, Moses is not commanded to speak the same words at any time, because [Thus] as they say, is not the same, but the like, and to that effect, and nothing like is the same. So then, if he were demanded, what was his name that sent him? he might in no case say (if we will believe these novelties) I am that I am hath sent me, forasmuch as he useth the aduerbe of likeness, for he saith [Thus;] which is not the same, but some such like thing. Noy, their opinion is yet more gross and absurd, for they turn God's precept into a prohibition: and whereas God commandeth Moses what he shall say, they say he is forbidden to use those very words, and allowed only to speak to that purpose. And afterward when God said unto him, verse 15. Thus shalt thou say to the children of Israel, The Lord God of your Fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath sent me unto you, this is my name forever; and this is my memorial unto all generations. If their gloss were granted, he might not say, The God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and of Jacob hath sent me unto you, this had been utterly unlawful for him, he must take heed he say not so in any case; no, though the Lord tell him, This is his name and his memorial forever to all generations, but he must speak some such like words: as if God were delighted with copy and variety of words, or did hunt after letters and syllables: or as if it were a fault to speak as God speaketh; or as if Moses could better deliver his message in his own words, then in the words of God.

Again, when the Prophets came from God to the people, and brought their warrant and commission with them from him, and cried out, Thus saith the Lord; the meaning must be according to the conceit of these men, God hath not commāded to speak the same words, nay he hath forbidden and restrained them, that they may not use them. This is most ridiculous, both in respect of God, and of the people. For when God saith to the Prophets, Thus ye shall speak to the people, they make him say, Take heed ye utter not these words, but speak freely to the same effect, & spare not; and vary them at your pleasure. And when the holy Prophets came to the people, and as they were directed and appointed said, Thus saith the Lord, it shall be as much as if they should say unto them, If ye do think that God hath spoken to me these words, which I am to deliver, you do much deceive yourselves, he hath spoken the like, but not the same: I may not speak to you from his mouth, I must speak from mine own mouth. What can be more childish and foolish, then thus to interpret? yet all this is necessarily inferred upon the answer of such as profess themselves to be our adversaries. Therefore, when Christ saith, pray thus, it is as much by their interpretation as if he had said, take heed ye pray not in the same words, but use the like of your own; abstain from mine, I give you liberty to use what other ye list yourselves: all which we see to bear no color or show of reason. I would gladly know of such as are contrary to us in judgment & practice, whether it be not lawful to say this part of the prayer, Hallowed be thy name? If this be lawful, is it not as lawful to add the next words in the next place, Let thy kingdom come? and to this (I have heard) they yield, and confess it lawful. If this be good, why not afterward to add the rest of the petitions? is one more lawful then another? Or can one part be allowed and not the other? Thus do they confound themselves, and give us an answer out of their own mouths.

Again, they tell us that reading is one thing, and praying is another, and thereupon conclude, that a man cannot pray reading. I answer, they differ indeed, being diverse and sundry things, so that neither is reading praying, nor praying reading; howbeit, they are not contrary one to the other. A man may read and not pray, he may pray & not read, and yet he may pray reading, and read praying. The like we might say of speaking and kneeling. Speaking is one thing, and praying is another: a man may speak and not pray, he may pray and not speak, and yet he may pray speaking, and speak praying. So kneeling is one thing, and praying is another: a man may kneel down and not pray, he may pray and not kneel, and yet he may pray kneeling, and kneel praying. Wherefore, every reading of a prayer is not praying, except withal there be a lifting up of our hearts to God. I will show this by a familiar example touching the Lord's prayer: when we conclude our imperfect prayers with it, we make request to God, and consequently pray unto God. But when we publicly or privately read the sixth chapter of Matthew, in which the Lord's prayer is contained, we read the words and hear them read, yet we confess we pray not. We have then no intent to pray, but to inform our selves in the will of God set down in the Scripture. So then, praying and reading differ thus: the one is a pouring forth of the supplications and requests of the heart, the other is a receiving into the soul, such things as are read. These two we may do easily at one and the same instant, if y fault be not in our own nature more then in the nature of the things themselves. Thirdly, [Objection] they pretend that stinted prayers cannot be made as necessity requireth, but they tie us to our books, and cannot be enlarged according to our wants. I answer, [Answer.] there be things necessary to be prayed for at all times, and of all men, which indeed are the most things that we are to beg of the Lord; of these there may be prescript forms for all times and persons: as for other things, the prayer is to be applied to the time and necessity. For this, we have the Elders of the Church to help us, to whom we are directed to send.

Lastly, they object, [Object.] we must pray as the Spirit moveth us, for the Spirit helpeth our infirmities. Rom. 8. I answer, everyone receiveth not such a measure of the Spirit, as enableth him to this duty. We have but the first fruits of it, and must use all good helps to make supply of our wants; as the sick of the palsy, when he could not go to Christ of him self, was borne by his neighbors, Mar. 2, 3, 4. We are like to a sick man newly recovered, who cannot walk without his staff, or leaning upon the shoulders of another, or except he be stayed by the hand. Many men have grace in the heart, who want words of utterance to express it. All weak ones need help to minister matter of prayer. Wherefore, the help of the Spirit standeth well enough with outward helps. Neither let them reply, that the Spirit is sufficient, and that no other are mentioned: for when the Scripture will set forth the work to be his alone, and the force and efficacy from him, all other means are suppressed and depressed, all helps whatsoever are concealed and cast down, and may not come in account or comparison with him. Nevertheless, fasting, lifting up of the eyes, and of the hands, kneeling and prostrating of the body, are outward means to make the prayer more fervent, and do not take away o• derogate anything from the Spirit.

Secondly, we are directed from hence, to [Use 2] use public and private prayers more reverently and religiously, then commonly we do; both prayers in the Church, and prayers in families, being warranted by the word, though they be read out of the book by the Minister of the Church, or the master of the family. For though the prayers be common, yet ought they not to be the less regarded. There be two sorts of people which be both in extremities and justly to be reprov'd. The one sort do so highly magnify the common prayers allowed & appointed by authority, that they regard no other, but brand them with the title of conceited prayers, and so do account the preaching of the word as nothing. Another sort seeing the Ministry so vilified, and seeking to shun that rock, do rush and dash themselves violently against another: for they give almost no reverence at all to the Liturgy, neither care to afford us their presence at the same. But we must walk in the golden mean between both these, giving to each that which is meet, without comparing the one to the other, and so yield obedience to both. In the one God speaketh to us, in the other we speak to God. The Wiseman handling them both, beginneth with the preaching and hearing of the word as the most principal part of God's worship, and afterwards he proceedeth to prescribe rules of prayer, Eccl. 4 & 5. So the church is said to have continued in the Apostles doctrine, & in prayers. They then deceive themselves, that under a pretence of receiving the prayers of y^e church, do contemn the Ministry of the word, and think they have done enough, if they have been present at them, saying, We have godly prayers published and set forth by commādemēt of the Prince, why cannot men be contented with them? These speak through hypocrisy, and would seem zealous of public prayers, howbeit they are like to Judas, he cried out against the waste of the ointment, as if it might have been better bestowed upon the poor. He seemed very careful of the good of the poor, but he spake this not that he cared for the poor, but because he was a thief, and bare the bag, John. 12, 6 So do these men talk much of prayers, as if they were so zealous, that they were altogether given to prayer: howbeit, they do not this for any zeal to prayer, or for any great care they have to frequent thē, but thereby to seek a cover for their own negligence in hearing the word. Such as live under an unpreaching Ministry, think themselves well enough, when as notwithstanding they want a chief and principal part of God's service, the ordinary means of salvation, Ro. 10. I am. 1. On the other side, such as ascribe all to preaching, and regard not the prayers of the Church, are blame-worthy: this must be done, but the other must not be left undone. It is the office of the Ministry to perform both, Act. 6. and the duty of the people to be present at both: yet great is their negligence this way▪ if not contempt.

[Use 3] Lastly, from hence ariseth great comfort to such as are weak in faith, and in the gifts of faith. For God will not reject us or our prayers, though we be not able to perform them as we ought to do. Albeit we come unto him halting, and borne by others, yet he will embrace us and receive us. This may be a notable motive to encourage us to this duty. Christ hath promised, that he will not quench the smoking flax, nor break the bruised reed, Math, 12, 20. Blessed are they that come to him, & creep on hand and foot, if they cannot wall•e upright, but woe unto them that come not at all. If we have but a grain of Mustard seed of faith, he cherisheth it, and accepteth of us. Let us therefore come unto him by prayer, howsoever we come, by our selves, or by others; forasmuch as our coming to him shall have a reward. See more of this before, chap. 6.

[Rise up, O Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered, and let them that hate thee fly before thee.] This is the prayer made when they began to march. This prayer is short, but it is very effectual. The sum and substance is, to commend unto God the good and preservation of the church from the many enemies of it. As if he had said, O merciful God, which hast promised thy presence among us, go thou before us, and scatter thine and our enemies, put thē to flight which seek to stop our way, and to hinder us from entering into the land of Canaan, which thou hast promised unto us. The prayer consisteth of two parts, a cause, and the effect. The cause is God's arising to y^e defense of his servants, wherein he speaketh after the manner of men, because properly God neither riseth up, nor sitteth down, as also he neither slumbereth nor sleepeth. But it is spoken in regard of a new work, whereby he manifesteth his help to be ready at hand, and showeth that he shrinketh not back in time of need from those that are his. Sometimes he is said to lie still, and to be as it were asleep, when he doth bear with patience, and suffer the wicked to rage and run on against the righteous, and against religion: so when he beginneth to take the cause into his own hand, both by defending his children, and maintaining his own glory against the wicked, he is said to arise and stand up, as 2 Chro. 6, 41. Psa. 44, 23. & 82, 8. & 132, 8. The reason of the speech is borrowed from men, who can do no work of any moment or account while they lie still, but if they will go in hand with anything, they must rise up. The effect of his arising is the scattering of his enemies. If he once arise to the help of his people, then followeth quickly the fall of his enemies. If he fight for them, They shall fly before him as chaff before the wind and as wax melteth before the fire, so the wicked perish at the presence of God, Psa. 68.2. We might note from hence, that when once God showeth himself for his people, the enemies are quickly put to flight, Exod. 14. When Pharaoh pursued the Israelites, and ouertoole them at the red sea, and that their hearts began to fail and fall away, to be troubled, and as it were to melte away, Moses said unto them, Fear not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord, which he shall show you this day, 13. The Lord shall fight for you, and you shall hold your peace, 14. Deut. 28, 7. and Ro. 8, 31. If the Lord be on our sides, who shall be against us? This is a great comfort to the Church, 2. Chro. 15, 2. The Lord is with us, if we be with him. Again, let every faithful soul apply this to himself, and gather assurance by it, to stand unmovable under the shadow of the almighty. Lastly, it noteth out the wretched & miserable condition of the enemies of God, and of his children; for when they think to arise, God will give them a sodain and shameful fall. But I only point out this point: and proceed to the consideration of the titles which Moses giveth to the ungodly; he calleth them the enemies of God, & such as hate him. So then observe, that all wicked men are utter enemies to God, they hate him, they abhor him, they cannot abide him. They say in their hearts, There is no God, Psal, 14, 1. God hath forgotten, he hideth his face, he will not require it, Ps. 10, 11, 13. The Lord shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it, Psal. 94, 7. Depart frō us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways, what is the almighty that we should serve him, and what profit should we have, if we pray unto him? Job 21, 14, 15. Exod. 5, 2. Mal. 3, 14. In the second commandment the Lord saith, that he would visit the sins of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation of thē that hate him, Exo. 20, 5. Howsoever therefore they pretend friendship and love to him, as Judas did to Christ, yet their hearts are far from him, they hate him, and cannot abide him.

[Reason 1] And no marvel. For first, they fight against his Laws, and resist his ordinances. They wish there were no God, no hell, no heaven. For as they are the friends of God that do his commandments, so doubtless they are his enemies, that will not submit themselves to his kingdom, nor do his will. Hence it is, that Christ saith, Luk. 19, 27. Those mine enemies which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me. They that will not have him to reign over them, and in them, are his enemies: but such are all the unregenerate, therefore they are God's enemies. Secondly, they are under the dominion of the Prince of darkness, who is God's professed enemy, he ruleth in them, to him they give homage and obedience. From him they will not depart, and of him they shall receive their wages. So Christ telleth the Pharisees, they were of their father the devil, John. 8, 44. they did the lusts of the devil, and therefore they were the children of the devil. The God of this world ruleth in them, and therefore they can be no better then the enemies of God: for of whō a man is overcome, of the same he is brought in bondage. Lastly, the godly that seek to fear the Lord, are both called and accounted the friends of God, as Abraham was, I am. 2, 23. To this purpose speaketh Jehoshaphat in his prayer, Art not thou our God, who didst drive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people Israel, and gavest it to the seed of Abraham thy friend forever? If then the faithful be the friends of God, doubtless the unfaithful, what are they but his enemies?

[Use 1] The Uses. First, conclude from hence, that most certainly God will be their enemies. Will he hold friendship with those that care not for his love and favor? that profess and proclaim, though not in words, yet in their works, that they are and will be his enemies? No doubtless, he will cast them off, he will renounce them for being any of his people. Thus the Prophet speaketh, Psal. 78, •6. He smote his enemies in the hinder parts, he put them to a perpetual shame And Esa. 63, 10. they rebelled and vexed his holy spirit, therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against thē. Would any man have the displeasure of great men? Do not all men fear to have such as are in high place to become their enemies? But behold, he that is higher then the highest, and greater then the greatest, is an enemy to all wicked persons, as they are enemies to him? Who would not therefore make all possible haste to come out of such a wretched condition, as pulleth the enmity of God upon his head, and setteth God against him?

Secondly, let no man glory in their favor & [Use 2] friendship, or that they are any way nere unto them or great with them. He that toucheth pitch cannot but be defiled with it. He that is inward with God's enemies, will learn in time to be enemy also. We must therefore avoid their company, and entertain no familiarity and acquaintance with them. They are God's enemies, and they are enemies unto us, why then should not we be enemies to them? The Prophet setting down the note of the Citizens of heaven, maketh the contempt of the wicked to be one, Psal. 15, 4. He in whose eyes a vile person is contemned. The Prophet Elisha witnesseth and avoucheth even to the face of Jehoram, the King of Israel, that had it not been that he regarded the person & presence of Jehoshaphat, he would not once have vouchsafed to look upon him, 2 King. 3, 14. Whatsoever titles they claim and challenge unto themselves, this is their true title, they are the enemies of God, and we must have no society with God's enemies.

Thirdly, it showeth the certain destruction [Use 3] of all the ungodly, for they are his enemies, and can they then prosper? They fight against him, and he will fight against them, & are they stronger then he? or able to prevail against him? No, in no wise; for though hand join in hand, and all of them should combine themselves in one against him, yet the breath of his mouth shall blow them away, and they shall not stand in judgment before him. To this end they are compared to chaff, which the wind scattereth away, Psalm. 1. The godly are like a Tree planted by the Rivers side, that bringeth forth his fruit in due season; his leaf also shall not wither: but the ungodly are not so, they are like the chaff, they are of no more reckoning or account with GOD, then the chaff is with men, in comparison of the good corn. Hence it is also, that they are compared to dung, they cast up as soul and filthy a savor in the nostrils of almighty God, as dung doth in the nostrils of men. Therefore the Church, in their prayer against them, desireth God to do unto them as unto the Midianites, as to Sisera and Iabin at the brook of Kison, which perished at Endor, and became as dung for the earth. So doth Ahijah tell the wife of Jeroboam, that the Lord would bring evil upon the bouse of Jeroboam, and take away the remnant of his house, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone, 1 King. 14, 10. Let them therefore magnify themselves never so much, & lift up their horns on high, they are of no price, they are in no account, they are of no estimation with God, they are loathsome and abominable to him. Their sins cry aloud in his ears; they have a stinking savor in his nostrils, they are odious in his eyes, they grieve his heart; and can they escape? May we not make an undoubted conclusion from all these things, that they shall certainly perish?

[Use 4] Lastly, to shut up this point, it is a duty required of all of us, to seek to be at peace with God, and to give unto him our hands, or rather our hearts. For so long as we stand out against him, and bid him open defiance, there can be no peace between him and us, neither any hope at all of reconciliation. For as Deut. 32, 41. If he whet his glittering sword, and his hand take hold on judgment, he will execute vengeance on his enemies, and will reward them that hate him. If a king hear of another coming against him with an huge and mighty host, and consider that he is not able to encounter with him hand to hand, while he is yet afar off, he sendeth embassage desiring conditions of peace, Luke 14, 32. This wisdom ought to be in us. Let no man think to prevail & get the upper hand by standing out against him. He that continueth an enemy unto him, is an enemy to himself, nay to his own soul. It is sin that maketh this separation between God and us, Isaiah 59, 2. We rise up against him, we rebel against the Lord, 2 Chron. 13, 6 and then the Lord riseth up against us. We cannot prosper so long as we provoke him with an high hand. Let us therefore repent us of our evil ways, and turn unto him, assuring our selves that then he will turn unto us. Let us humble our selves under his mighty hand, and he will lift us up. Let us confess our sins unto him, and we shall find mercy, for he is just and merciful to forgive us our sins. There is no peace to be obtained, but under these three conditions, repentance, humility, and confession: these as a trumpet sound the retreat of his judgments: they are as peacemakers between God and us, and are as a strong threefold cord which is not easily broken whereby his hands are after a sort bound from pouring wrath and vengeance upon us.

[Let thine enemies be scattered, and them that hate thee fly before thee.] Mark in these words the title that he giveth to those that were ready to hinder their approach unto Canaan: he saith not, Let our enemies and them that hate us be scattered, but let thine enemies and them that hate thee, &c. Nevertheless, if he had so prayed, the prayer had been lawful: but his words are more powerful and effectual: whereby we see, that the Churches enemies, he calleth God's enemies, and showeth that they hated not only the godly, but God himself.

So then, the doctrine is this, that the enemies of the Church in general, or of any his faithful servants in particular, are indeed and in truth the enemies of God himself. Howsoever they may in the blindness of their harts persuade themselves, that notwithstanding their hatred to God's dear children, they may be the good friends of God: yet they do but deceive themselves, for they are accounted his utter enemies and such as inwardly hate him, as Exod. 15, verses 6, 7. speaking of the drowning of Pharaoh and his host in the red sea, Moses singeth, that the Lord overthrew them that rose up against him, he saith not, they rose up against Israel. And Deborah speaking of the destruction of Sisera, Judge. 5, verse 31, saith, So let all thine enemies, O Lord, perish. Thus the Prophet alluding to the common prayer of Moses in this place, beginneth the 68. Psalm in this manner, Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered; let them also that hate him, fly before him. The like we see, Psalm. 83, 2, 3. It is plain therefore that the enemies of the godly are God's enemies, though if they were asked the question, they would utterly deny it, & think themselves unjustly charged with it.

For first, God is entered into a league and covenant with them to have the same friends and the same enemies; as if he should say, as Jehoshaphat said to the Kings of Israel, I am as thou art, my people as thy people, and my horses as thy horses. This appeareth in the Covenant which God made with Abraham, Gen. 12, 3. I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curse thee: and his he verifieth in all that embrace the faith of Abraham.

Secondly, wherefore are the ungodly persecutors, enemies to God's children? or what hath the righteous done? and why do they set themselves against them? is it not for the Lord's sake? is it not for his truth and religion? True it is, they may have, and indeed have other colors and pretences, but religion is the cause of all & the true fear of God, as Psal. 44, 22, & 38, 20. Rom. 8, 36. as it is noted of Cain, that he was of that evil one, and slew his brother, because his own works were evil, & his brothers good, 1 John 3, 12.

Woe therefore unto them that set themselves against God's people, for they fight against [Use 1] God, and he will fight against them for those that are his. If they cannot prevail against him, (for what is an arm of flesh to y^e Almighty)? then certainly not against the Church. So long as God standeth, the Church shall stand upright, the gates of hell cannot prevail against it, Mat. 16. Hence it is that the Prophet saith, He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye. We may therefore conclude as a principle not to be gainsaid, the sure and certain destruction of all the enemies of the Church, in as much as he will thrust through the loins of them that set themselves against his sanctuary. They may for a time prosper & prevail, but in the end they shall be confounded and come to ruin. Let them in time consider in what case they stand. They think they have to deal only with men, over whom they may insult at their pleasure, through their might and greatness, but they shall find they have to do with God, who is able to uphold his servants, O that they could consider this!

[Use 2] Secondly, we may truly infer the woeful estate of those y^t defend not the cause of God and his children, that do not stand with them, but stand still as neuters, and look on as idle beholders, and suffer them to be borne down and trampled under the feet of proud men as mire in the street, such as shrink back from them for fear of danger that may befall themselves. For such as forsake the faithful in their just defense, do in the height of their sin, and in the pride of their hearts forsake the Lord himself, and renounce him. This made David say, Remēber Lord the reproach of thy servants, how I do bear in my bosom the reproach of all the mighty people, wherewith thine enemies have reproached, O Lord, wherewith they have reproached the footsteps of thine Anointed. As he bare the reproaches of his enemies, w^c were God's enemies, in his bosom, so he prayeth that God would recompense their sin into their bo•ome. Therefore it is, that Deborah saith, Curse ye Meroz, curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not out to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty. They did not join with the enemies of God, yet they are cursed because they sate still and did nothing and did not join with his friends. We see, we cannot but see and behold with our eyes, the children of God oftentimes hated, maligned, wronged, threatened, oppressed, slandered, reviled, & persecuted; if we opē not our mouths in good causes, in God's causes, we forsake the Lord himself whose cause it is, and bring upon our selves his fearful, yet most just curse.

[Use 3] Thirdly, as the enemies of the Church are the enemies of God, so we may conclude from hence, that doubtless the friends of the church are the friends of God. No man shall do any good to his distressed servants, w^c shall lose his reward. The Evangelist showeth, that Christ our Savior accounteth it as done to himself, whatsoever we have done to one of the least of his brethren. He is fed and harboured in his members, he is clothed and covered in his members, he is received and visited in his members. And if we refuse to do good to the least of these, he esteemeth it as an injury and indignity done unto himself. This is a notable encouragement to move us to open our mouths in the cause of the dumb, to open our hands in the cause of the needy, and to open our hearts in the cause of the afflicted, and to vnloose our tongues to plead the cause of the innocent. Such are the true friends of God. Every man seeketh the favor of great men, and desireth their friendship how ought we then to labor to be the friends of God? Abraham believed the promise made unto him, and he is said to be the friend of God; & Christ saith, ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. This is the cause that made Deborah pronounce Iael y^e wife of Heber blessed above women dwelling in tents, because she helped the Lord against the mighty with her mouth, with her hand, with her heart; she smote off the head of Sisera when she had pierced and stricken through his temples. Thus it was with Obadiah; thus it went with Ebedmelech: they shown mercy to the Prophets, & God showeth mercy unto them: they did good to others but they received more good to themselves: And this was the prayer of Paul for Onesiphorus, who no doubt received much mercy from God in the day of account, as he refreshed the Apostle in the day of his want, 2 Timothy, 1.16.18.

Fourthly, seeing God accounteth y^e churches [Use 4] enemies his enemies, then must our account be answerable to the account of God, we must account his enemies to be our enemies. God's enemies by good right ought to be the Churches enemies. Such then as we see to be open enemies to god, to fight as it were hand in hand against him, to hate true religion, to scorn the profession of it, to deride the professors of it, we must account thē as our enemies, we must hold no league, no friendship, no familiarity with them, so far as they declare themselves to be such by their obstinacy. This made y^e Prophet say to Jehoshaphat after he had made affinity with wicked Ahab, who had sold himself as a slave to sin, Shouldst thou help the ungodly? and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath come upon thee from before the Lord. So David saith, testifying his affection, Do not I hate them, O Lord, that hate thee, &c. teaching thereby, that seeing he accounteth our enemies to be his, we ought to account his enemies to be ours. This made the wise Solomon to say, An unjust man is an abomination to the just, &c. But it may be objected, [Object.] that Christ Jesus willeth us to love our enemies, and to bless them y^t hate us. It is true, [Answ.] we must love our enemies, but we are never commanded to love the enemies of God. Shall we love them that do not love the Lord? did we not see before, how that good king is reproved, not only because he did help the ungodly, but because he did love them that did hate the Lord? So then we must distinguish and make a difference between such as are our enemies, and such as are God's: between such as hate our persons, and such as hate true religion and the holy profession of it.

But how shall we know who are God's enemies, and who are ours? and to bestow our hatred upon a right subject? I answer, as a good tree is known by his good fruit, so an evil tree is known by his evil fruit. It is the evil fruit which they bring forth, which must because of this hatred. Take that away, and let the tree be graffed and bring forth better fruit, we will love both the tree and the fruit. Sin therefore must be the ground and foundation of all true hatred. Secondly, our hatred if it be aright, must proceed from the love of God, and the zeal of his glory, because we cannot love him, but we must hate whatsoever is against him. Thirdly, our hatred must not proceed from any private revenge: for that were to do evil for evil. The cause must no way concern our selves, but only the LORD. A man may be enemy to our person, and yet a friend to God, such we are commanded to love, and we are forbidden to hate. Lastly, we must see them to be obstinate and settled in sin, as dogs and swine that trample holy things under their feet, and are ready to rent them in pieces y^t bring them unto them.

[Use 5] Fifthly, from hence ariseth comfort to God's people, to consider that such as hurt or persecute the members of Christ, do hurt and persecute Christ himself, & wound him through their sides, though now he be glorified in the highest heavens. When Paul said, who art thou Lord? y^e Lord answered, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest, Act. 9.5. And the Apostle saith I rejoyce in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh, for his bodies sake which is the Church, Col. 1.24. So God the Father is said to be touched with a feeling of the miseries of his people, Isaiah 63.9. In all their afflictions he was afflicted, & the Angel of his presence saved them: & likewise the holy Ghost, 1 Pet. 4.14. When you are reviled, the Spirit is evil spoken off on their part, &c. So then the holy and blessed Trinity have as it were a fellow-feeling of our miseries and afflictions, which serveth greatly for the comfort of all that are in trouble for the truths sake. We suffer not alone, for that were without comfort, we have God the Father to suffer with us, Christ Jesus our Savior to suffer with us, & the holy Spirit blessed forever to suffer with us. Thus doth God comfort Abraham, who hath the hearts of all in his own hand, that he will get him favor in the eyes of many which shall do him good, and for his sake he will also do them good that do good to him. If any shall rise up against him as an enemy, God will shut the mouth of the lyon, he will declare himself to be his enemy, and arise betimes for the defense of his servant. And this appeareth evidently in the hystory that is set down of him. This is therefore the comfort of the Church, that albeit it have many enemies that hate it, oppress it, & persecute it, yet it shall have many patrons, nurses, friends, and favorers, nay God himself will protect it, defend it, and deliver it: nay he promiseth to bless them that bless it, and threateneth to curse them, that curse it: This made David say, Pray for the peace of Jerusalem; let them prosper that love thee, Ps. 122.6.

Lastly, it is our duty to labor to be in the number of his children, otherwise these promises belong nothing at all to us. Glorious things are spoken of thee, O City of God, but what is that to us, if we be not citizens of that city? It is a notable privilege, to have y^e same common friends and enemies with God; this is made ours, if we be his: if not, we have no benefit by it at all. What will move us to holiness and righteousness of life, if this will not, that he which toucheth any of those that belong to him, toucheth the apple of his eye? Zach. 2. Could the Prophets have used a fitter phrase to show the care of God toward us, and the desire he hath to further our salvation? If he were a mortal man like unto us, and had flesh and blood together with those parts that we have, he could not more tenderly keep the apple of his eye, then he hath kept his people from time to time. We know it is the most tender part of the body of man, upon which dependeth the comfort of all the rest. If a man were stricken on the head, or hand, or arm, it might be borne: but if he receive a blow in the eye, all the body starteth at it, and we are much grieved by it. Howbeit we are expressly taught, that God keepeth us, not as his arm or as his leg only, but as the most tender part, to wit, his ey, & as the most tender part, of that tender part, namely the apple of the eye. Thus it pleaseth God to speak to us, to make us understand that which otherwise would be high and hard for us, if he should speak according to his own majesty. He hath neither arms nor legs, neither hands nor eyes, but he borroweth this comparison as well known to us, and stoopeth down to our rudeness and infirmity, that we might conceive his works the better. For the meaning is, that he will defend and preserve us, not as a mortal man doth his hands or feet, but as he would do the apple of his eye. This is his goodness toward us, when any of his are hurt, he receiveth a blow on his eye, and therefore cannot hold his peace: and ought not we on the other side for our parts make all hast to register and enrol our selves in the number of his children? All this his favor is lost, if we be not his. Let us join our selves therefore to God's people, let us be one with them, that we may be as one heart, and one soul. And as we noted before, that seeing God reputeth our enemies to be his, we ought to esteem his enemies to be ours; so likewise we ought to account his friends to be our friends. Such shall enter into the Tabernacle of God, and rest in his holy hill, in whose eyes a vile person is contemned, but he honoreth them that fear the Lord. And if God will honor them that honor him, ought not we also to honor them, and show our selves like to our heavenly Father? The Prophet telleth us, that all his delight was toward the Saints that were on earth, Psal. 16.3. God delighteth in such, let us follow his example doth the contrary of the ungodly, Psal. 139. Do not I love them, O Lord, that love thee? and do not I rejoice with those that are obedient unto thee? yea, I love them with an unfeigned and perfect love, I account them as my best and chiefest friends, in comparison of whom I do make account of none other. In doing this, we shall have God to be our friend Wherefore, let us remember our duty, to be careful to become sound and sincere members of the Church, by true faith and a right ordered obedience, that so God may accept us to be his children.

[Verse 36. And when it rested, he said, Return, O Lord, unto the many thousands of Israel. This is the second prayer, which Moses ordinarily made at the resting of the Ark, and the pitching down of the tents. Here are two things set forth, first, the act of God, Return O Lord: this is also spoken after the manner of men, for properly God neither goeth nor returneth, he neither proceedeth forward, nor returneth backward: but it is spoken in regard of a new work of God to be shown toward his people. The meaning is as if Moses had said, As thou (Lord) wentest before us to drive away our enemies, so having put them to flight, that none can stand before thee, vouchsafe to come again to our tents, take up thy rest & residence among us thy people, as Psal. 7.6.7. Arise, O Lord, in thine anger, lift up thyself because of the rage of mine enemies, and awake for me, &c. So shall the Congregation of the people compass thee about, for their sakes therefore return thou on high Secondly, the persons to whom he should return and among whom he should rest, to wit, the thousand thousands of Israel. From hence we may observe briefly, where it is that God resteth, and among whom he dwelleth, that is, among his own people, he abideth in his Church forever, there he hath pitched down his standard and purposeth to continue; he hath chosen Zion, he hath desired it for his habitation, This is my rest forever, here will I dwell: And in the next words he giveth the reason, for I have desired it, Psal. 132.13, 14. All creatures are his, so are all places his: he hath his choice to abide wheresoever it pleaseth him; for all the world is his, for who created it and gave it a being but he? Now of all places, he chooseth his Church to be with it, and to rest in it. Thus speaketh the king of Judah, 2 Chron. 13.12. God is with us for our Captain, and Matth. 28.20. Christ saith, even he that walketh among the seven golden candlestickes, Revel. 1.13. Loe, I am with you to the end of the world. [Reason 1] For first, who is it that gathereth the Church, but he? can any do this but God by his infinite power? Christ Jesus witnesseth that he would have gathered the people of Jerusalem by his Ministry, but they would not, Mat. 23. So God promised to gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth, Isaiah 11.12. Secondly, he is evermore a present help in time of trouble, willing to hear them with speed, and ready to speak to them with comfort. Whatsoever they ask of him, they shall receive: but if he were not present with us, he could not hear us in our need nor succor us in our wants Psal. 46.5 Thirdly, Satan dwelleth and ruleth in the world. He is called the prince of the world, Eph. 2. who ruleth in the children of disobedience: and blindeth their eyes that they cannot obey the truth, 2 Cor. 4.4. Lastly, his love, his special love is set upon them; and the love, the special love of his people is set upon him: and where should he rest and remain but among them? or how should one be without another?

The uses. This reproveth all such as have [Use 1] no care to dwell with God in his Church, of which the number is not small in all places. These are like unfaithful servants that care not for coming in their masters presence: or like malefactors, that hate nothing more then the face of the judge. So is it with evil men: they like no place worse then the Church. They take as much pleasure in it, as the thief doth to be in the Iaile, who careth not how soon he were out, and rid of his fetters. The word of God is to the ungodly as bolts and gyues, it fethereth and hampereth and holdeth him, that he knoweth not which way to turn himself. The Church is to him as it were a prison, it restraineth his liberty, & he loveth no place worse then it. It is otherwise with the godly man: he liketh it and preferreth it in his thoughts, in his affections, and in his practices above all other places, because the Lord dwelleth and resideth therein. It is the house of prayer where the people of God meet. God is never absent from hence: and they are happy that may dwell there with him, Psalm 27.4. And we may pronounce this is a certain truth, that such have no company or communion with God that delight not to visit his Temple. Let such look for no blessing at God's hand to come upon them.

Secondly, this proclaimeth woe and misery [Use 2] to come upon all wicked persons, because God is not among them. His presence is the fullness of joy, at his right hand are pleasures for evermore, Psalm. 16, 11. where he is not, there can be nothing but horror and confusion. But he is not in the Congregation & assembly of evil persons. It will be said, Is not God everywhere? He is, with his essence, but not with his grace. And they shall know he is present with them, and they with him, albeit they seek nothing more then to banish him out of their presence and company. They have forsaken the ways of God, and he hath forsaken them for their wickedness. Howbeit in the last day, when they shall stand before the tribunal seat of the Judge of all the world, they will acknowledge their own folly, and desire to behold one comfortable day of the Son of man with the loss of all their pleasures in the days of their vanity, but shall not be able.

[Use 3] Thirdly, hence ariseth comfort to God's children to know this, and to be thoroughly persuaded of it in their hearts. Thus doth Abijah the king of Judah comfort himself against his enemies, 2 Chron. 13.12, Behold, God himself is with us: and likewise Christ his disciples, Loe I am with you unto the end of the world, Matth. 28.20. He need not fear anything that hath God to be with him. He need not fear the subject, that hath the Prince to stand for him. He hath no cause to be afraid of the servant, that hath the master on his side. Let everyone therefore comfort himself in the execution of his calling. God hath set us in the same, and he will bear us out.

[Use 4] Lastly, it is a duty belonging unto all men to seek the Lord, as well where he may be found as when he may be found. For as there is a time when he will not be found, Pro. 1.28. Mic. 3.4. Luk. 13.24. so there is a place where he will not be found. He resteth not in the tents of wickedness. If God be sought in the society and fellowship of sinful men, he cannot be found. He is found in his house and Temple: if we delight in his word and worship, we cannot be far from him, nor he from us. If we show our selves willing to hear his voice, and to go no farther from him, then that we may evermore be within the sound of his mouth, we shall be sure of his presence. There he will be found as in a garden of spices. The Lord is said to dwell in the highest heavens, and indeed this is the city of the great king. Now, the Church is as the suburbes, and leadeth us the right and ready way to this city. We can never come to it, if we do not enter by the gates of the Church. Here God keepeth his court: here we shall be sure to find him. All men will seem in love with the heavenly Jerusalem, but they care not at all for Zion. They would rest in the hill of God, but they desire not to sojourne in his Tabernacle. They would have heaven, but they will have none of the Church. They love to hear, enter into the kingdom prepared for you, but they care not for the feasts of the word and Sacraments prepared for them. These do altogether deceive themselves, and separate those things w^c God hath joined together: for as much as we must long after the place of his habitation upon earth, if we look to be received into the place of his habitation in heaven. For God hath two houses as his dwelling places, one beneath, the other above: the one I may call the lower house, the other the upper house. He that would dwell in the one, must also dwell in the other. One is the Church, the other is the kingdom of glory. If we delight in the first house more then in all other places, let us not doubt, but be well assured, that in his good time we shall have entrance into the second house. But if we will not dwell with him in his Church upon earth, we shall never dwell with him in glory in y^e highest, of which Christ our Savior saith, In my Fathers house there be many mansions, John. 14.2. Whereby he meaneth heaven it self, in which all the Saints and blessed spirits of just men perfected shall dwell with God forever in glory and immortality. If we be any way in love with this celestial house, let our care and endeavor be to dwell with him first in his other house which is the lower house, of which sort is every particular assembly, where God doth also dwell, to which he giveth laws and ordinances as an householder unto his house, of this Paul speaketh, 1 Tim. 3.15. Thou must know how to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the Church of the living God. Let us examine our love to the one, by our love to the other: our love to the kingdom of heaven, by our love to the kingdom of grace. If we care not for the former, we shall never have entrance into the latter. God must know us to be guests in his first house, otherwise he will never acknowledge us as his friends in the second.

To the many thousands in Israel. The words in the original are, to the ten thousand thousands: a certain number for an uncertain. A notable description of the church of God. Whence observe, that the people which belong to God, are many thousand thousands. They are a great flock of sheep, they are a plentiful harvest of corn, they are a wonderful host and army of men. This God promised to Abraham, Gen. 15.5. he brought him forth and said, Look now toward heaven and tell the stars if thou be able to number them: for so shall thy seed be, Rom. 4.18. So Psal. 2.8. Ask of me the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thus Isaiah prophesieth of the amplitude of y^e church, Chap. 54.2.3. Enlarge the place of thy tent, &c. In the New Testament Christ telleth us, that many shall come from the East and West, and sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven, Matth. 8.11. so that his elect children are many in number.

For first of all, the mercy of God is the [Reason 1] more manifested thereby. He might justly have rejected all, because all had sinned in Adam: but the more to manifest the greatness of his goodness, and the largeness of his compassions, it pleased him to call and gather together a great people, that they might take hold of his mercy, and sing of his loving kindness to his glory. God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all.

By nature all are alike, all unbelievers, all disobedient, all miserable: the elect are no better than others by birth. He speaketh here of believers among Jews and Gentiles. Secondly, Christ Jesus will not lose y^e price of his death, neither suffer it to be void and of none effect. He died for many, and therefore many belong unto him, as sheep of his pasture, and as members of his body. The Apostle teacheth, that by the obedience of one (not a few, but) many shall be made righteous, even as by one man's disobedience, many were made sinners, Rom. chap, 5.19. And the Evangelist Saint Matthew declareth Christ in the delivering of the Cup at his last Supper, said, This is my blood of the New Testament which is shed for many for the remission of sins:whereby he brought many sons to glory. Thirdly, none is able to count the number of them, which are as the stars that are innumerable, and as the sand on the sea shore. This made Balaam pronounce afterward in this book, chap. 23.10. Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel? And John speaking of the number of them that were sealed, saith, he saw a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, clothed in white robes and palms in their hands. Revel. 7.9. They must needs be many thousand thousands, seeing the number of them is without number.

[Use 1] The uses follow. See here the key to open and unlock sundry places of holy Scripture, speaking of an universality appointed unto life and eternal glory: as where it is said, God would have all men saved, 1 Tim. 2.4. all men to come to repentance, 2 Pet. 3.9. that Christ died for all, 2 Cor. 5.14. 2 Pet. 2.1: These speeches must be understood of an universality and generality of the elect only: for they alone are elected, they alone are justified, they alone are redeemed, they alone shall be glorified. They must not be understood (though they speak of all) and extended to every particular of Adams seed, nor be taken of every particular person, but must be limited and restrained to believers of all sorts and conditions; as Rom. 10.12. God is rich to all that call upon him: and Gal. 3.22. the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise of faith in Jesus Christ might be given (what to all? no, but) to all y^t believe, John. 11.52. There is therefore an universality and a world of believers, as well as of unbelievers; and they are expressed under the word All, because they are many in number, and consist of thousand thousands which cannot be accounted: and therefore John saith, Christ is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world, 1. John. 2.2. that is, for the sins of all the elect, and believers dispersed throughout the world. To conclude, Christ may be said to save all as he is said to heal all sicknesses and diseases among the people, Matth. 4.23. and 9.35. that is, some of all sortes and kinds: and as the Pharisees are said to tithe all herbs, Luk. 11.42. that is, all sorts.

[Use 2] Secondly, we may gather from hence, that most glorious shall the name of Christ be when all me• together in one to magnify his grace and mercy toward them, as appeareth Reu. 7.10, 11, 12. The Angels and the Elders, ascribe blessing and glory, and power, and thanksgiving unto God. When we shall all sing Hallelu-iah in the heavens, what a sweet and pleasant melody will this make? O how should we labor to be of this company, that we may bear our part everyone in this triumphant song? Hence it is that the John saith, Reue 19.1.3. I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia, salvation, and honor, and power unto the Lord our God: and again they said, Alleluia! Blessed are they that accompany the Saints to sing with them, with heart and voice Alleluia! If we be not of this communion of Saints, we cannot tune the right accent, we cannot be in the number of these sweet singers, our music iarreth and hath a discord in the eyes of God: he will soon find it out. Here the godly seem to be thinly sown, as wheat covered with chaff, and so the song to consist of a few voices only. The corn which seemeth little while it lieth in the heap and maketh no show, when once the fan hath scattered away the chaff, it appeareth to be much in quantity: so when the Lord Jesus at his second coming shall have fanned away all the reprobate, and blown them by the breath of his mouth, and the power of his sentence into hell, as the doom of their deserts, then shall innumerable multitudes of the elect stand up and lift up their heads, because their redemption is accomplished, and cry with a loud voice Hallelu-iah.

Thirdly, let no man be dismayed at y^e great [Use 3] number of the wicked, and of profane persons that cover the earth as grassehoppers, and swarm in every place as hornets, Idolaters, heathen, barbarians and others out of the Church, together with unbelievers and scorners in the Church. The Apostle saith, the whole world lieth in wickedness, 1 John. 5.19 nevertheless God hath a very great people, even a world of people that belong unto him. Elijah could see few, when indeed there were many; when he thought he had been left alone, what saith the answer of God unto him, I have reserved to myself seven thousand which have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal, Rom. 11.4. And God telleth Paul, he had much people in one only city, Act. 18.10. yea, by the preaching of Peter, three thousand souls were gained unto God in one day, Act. 2.41. Let us not therefore be offended at the paucity or scarcity of the godly which embrace the Gospel, as if the harvest were little: neither let us doubt of the truth thereof, nor start back from the profession of it because few embrace it, believe it, and confess it. It hath always been the manner of men for the most part to have respect to the greatest multitudes, and to have the faith in respect of persons, I am. 2.1. because they think it best to do as the most do, and to believe as y^e greatest number do, without any farther search or trial of the truth. These time-seruers and men-pleasers persuade themselves, that it is incredible and unreasonable, that God should suffer the greatest number to run into the way of error, & to fall into the pit of destruction. This made y^e Pharisees say, Have any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed on him? But though these believe not, shall y^e promise be to none effect▪ No doubtless, the Church shall abound with many children as a fruitful mother, and shall stretch forth the curtains of her habitations. But how then is it said to be a little flock? and they to be few that enter into the straight gate and the narrow way? This is spoken by comparison of the ungodly & reprobate, who as they abound in evil, so they do in multitude: and therefore Christ saith, Many are called: but few chosen, Mat. 20.16. There are many reprobates, but few elected. The Apostle saith, Though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, yet but a remnant shall be saved, Rom. 9.27. Nevertheless, the people of God considered in themselves are many: we shall not be alone, we shall have much company to go with us to the kingdom of heaven.

[Use 4] Fourthly, judge not rashly of particular persons, whether they be in the number of the reprobate or of the elect, whether they be vessels of mercy or vessels of wrath. This is one of the secrets of God, which is hidden from us. No man ought to search into the secrets of a Prince: but who shall presume to pry into the highest mysteries of God? It is enough for us that he hath admitted us to be of his court, howbeit he hath not made us of his privy counsel. To presume above that which we ought, is a labor like unto his, who not contented with a known and safe foord, will undertake to pass over the greatest river, where he is ignorant of the depths; for so doth the one lose his life, the other his judgment and understanding. We behold the Sun and enjoy the light thereof, as long as we look toward it but tenderly and circumspectly: we warm our selves safely while we stand near the fire, but if we seek to outface the one, or enter the other, we are immediately either blinded or burned. The Apostle saith, Hath God cast away his people? no, in no wise, not any one of these which he foreknew, Rom 11.1, 2. And elsewhere he saith, Judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of the heart. He hath many sheep that are without and therefore we must hope the best of all, and not despair of the conversion of any, though they be unbelievers, and unregenerate. For the power of God is greater then our weakness, and his mercy is greater then our sins. It is in his hand to deliver the offender out of prison, and to loose the fetters of unbelief. It is our duty to pray for them unto God, that he would give them faith to believe in his only begotten Son our redeemer. If the Son make them free, then they shall be free indeed.

[Use 5] Fifthly, let us use all good and lawful means to draw on others, seeking to win those that are contrary minded to us, and to vnty the cords of sin, whereby Satan keepeth them as bondmen in chains of iron. We must labor to draw them to a love of the truth, and cast out the net of the Gospel, it may be at length we may catch some. The disciples had labored and toiled all night, and caught nothing; yet nevertheless at the commandment of Christ, they were content to let down the net, and when they had done so, they enclosed a great multitude of fishes, Luke 5.5, 6. We should be all fishers of men, especially the Ministers, but generally all, to exhort, to admonish, to teach, to stir up, and to instruct one another. Such a fisher was the woman of Samaria, who left her water pot at the well, and ran into the city, and provoked them to come forth and hear the Lord Jesus, John. 4.28.29. Such a fisher was Andrew, who findeth his brother Simon first, and saith unto him, We have found the Messias, which is, being interpreted, the Christ, John. 1.41. and he brought him to Jesus. And as Philip like a fish was taken with the net of Christ, verse 43. so by and by he playeth the fisher, for he findeth Nathaniel, and saith unto him, we have found him of whom Moses in the Law, and the Prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, verse 45. Happy are they that be found such fishers, and happy are they that gain one soul to God, yea happy and thrice happy are they that as good fish are taken with the hook and bait of the Gospel.

Lastly, we are bound to praise God for the [Use 6] increase of his people, & when he addeth unto the Church such as shall be saved. When a member of the body that was without feeling, and taken as it were with a dead palsy, is quickened, and the vital spirits begin to work, all the rest of the members rejoice. So it should be with us, when it may be said, This my brother was dead, and is alive again, he was lost and is found, it is meet we should make merry and be glad, Luke 15.32. When the sheep that went astray, is brought home into the sheeppfold, why should we not rejoice? there is joy in the presence of the Angels of God in heaven, over one sinner that repenteth, verse 7.10. When the hand of the Lord was with the Apostles, so that a great number believed and turned unto him, they were glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they should cleave unto the Lord, Act. 11.23. and 13.48. When therefore we see the Church grow in grace, and increase in number, and flourish in peace, we cannot but rejoice and be glad. This is a notable sign and infallible token that we are fellow members of that body, and that the word of God hath gotten root in our hearts. This use is taught by the Prophet, Psal. 47.6, 7, 8, 9. Sing praises to God, sing praises, sing praises unto our king, sing praises; for God is the king of all the earth, and reigneth over the heathen, &c. The faithful were wont to give him thanks for the increase of their private houses, much more then ought we to do it, when the house of GOD increaseth, and his saving health is made known more and more. But of this doctrine see more, chap. 23.10.

CHAP. XI.

Ver. 1. AND when the people complained, it displeased the Lord, and the Lord heard it, and his anger was kindled, &c.

HEere beginneth the second part of the book, according to y^e division observed before: wherein we are to consider the journeys of the children of Israel, according unto their particular murmurings against God. Of this chapter there are two parts, which are two of their murmurings, & both of them fell out in their twelfth removing, as appeareth in the 33, chapter afterward, where their several stations are particularly distinguished. The first is in the three first verses, opening unto us their sin, their chastisement, and the event thereof. The cause of their murmuring and the words of these murmurers are not expressed, but may in part be gathered from the end of the former chapter, where it appeareth they departed from Mount Sinai three days journey without resting or intermission, with all their luggage and portage, as it were with bag and baggage; they had rested long at the foot of the Mountain, now therefore it is tedious and toilsome unto them to go so long together, so that they begin to fret and rage, to murmur and complain against Moses, or rather against God himself. The judgment followeth the sin, and overtaketh the sinner, for God is offended at it, and sent a fire from heaven which consumed the uttermost part of the Campe, and no doubt burnt up many of them in the same. God hath all creatures in his own hand, sometimes he drowneth with water, sometimes he consumeth with fire, sometimes he infecteth with the air, and sometimes swalloweth up in the eatth, & never leaveth sin and rebellion unpunished, so long as there is any creature in the world to arm against the sinner. Lastly, we have the event and issue of all, the people cried to Moses whom they contemned before; and he unto God, who was entreated to spare them: and a monument both of their sin and of God's judgment is described by the place which is named Taberah, that is, a burning, upon this occasion.

First of all, let us consider their murmuring. This is a grievous sin, or rather an heap of many sins compacted together, as pride, disdain, unthankfulness, infidelity, impatience forgetfulness, tempting of God, and a violent insurrection joined with fretting and chasing against him, and many such like corruptions. The doctrine [Doctrine.] from this example is this, that it is the property of carnal men, whensoever anything falleth not out according to their corrupt desire, to murmur against God, as Prov. 19, 3. This was the common behavior of the discontented Israelites while they wandered in the wilderness, and sometimes they wished they had died in Egypt, rather thē they would any way be crossed in their humors, Exod. 16, and 17, 3.

This male-contentedness died not with [Reason 1] them, for first, everyone would have what him listeth, and regardeth not what God appointeth and approveth, Ier. 44, 16, 17, and 18 verse 12.

Secondly, every man would have present help in trouble, he cannot abide quietly to be one moment under the Cross; and if it be not by and by removed, he showeth the corruption that is in him. We are like to him that having received a wound, will be healed presently, or else he will not be healed at all.

Thirdly, they want faith and hope to believe in God and to wait upon him. Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, Heb. 11, 1. And if we hope for that which we see not, we do with patience wait for it, Rom. 8, 25.

Fourthly, they devise and invent to themselves false causes of their crosses, and never enter into their own hearts to consider the true cause, as Deut. 1, 27. Ye murmured in your tents, and said, Because the Lord hated us, he hath brought us forth out of the Land of Egypt, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites to destroy us. They should have accused themselves and not God, they should have confessed their own sins, not have alleged the hatred of God, which was to make that the cause which was not the cause, and not to make that to be the cause which indeed was the true cause.

The uses. This serveth justly to reprove all [Use 1] such as mutter and murmur when they have not their own will, like wayward children that will never be quiet but whē their mouths are full. How many are there that mislike their places and callings, and fret against God if he do not please them in all things? If they be touched with poverty, famine, sickness, losses, or any kind of adversity, they are offended and discontented with the Almighty. If God send out any contagious sickness, or blasting, or mildew, or foul weather, &c. how do we take on and vex our selves? We are like the Israelites, we break out into impatency, we never think upon our own deservings, nor consider we have deserved far greater plagues We may say as Moses doth, The Lord heareth the murmurings of the people, Exod. 16.12. Or rather, these are like that profane beast in the book of the kings, when in extremity of famine, he said, Behold, this evil cometh of the Lord, shall I attend on the Lord any longer? Some there are that smell rankly of the smoke of the Romish religion, who will seem to cast off the Pope, but they have tasted the leaven of superstition, and savor strongly of Popish relics and remnants that remain in them; these will tell us of the former times of old how good they were, and what plenty they had then of all things, when they had the old religion, but since this new learning came up we have had dearths and famines, and penury of all things. These are like the Jews, Ier. 44 18. since we left off to burnt incense to the host of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto the same, we have wanted all things, and have been consumed by the sword and by the famine: but when we burn incense to the host of heaven, we had plenty of vitailles, and were well, and saw no evil. Besides, I could answer them, that their prattling of plenty is a tale of idle brains, for never were their harder times then in the times of superstition, and never were God's blessings more plentiful thē in the days o• y^e Gospel. But be it all were true which they tell us, it is a falls rule to measure true religion by the belly. Thus do carnal men savor nothing but carnal things, and prefer their flesh pots before Manna. Let us therefore hearken to the counsel of the Apostle. 1 Cor. 10.10. Phil. 2.14. Against such Solomon speaketh, Say not thou, What is the cause that the former days were better then these? for thou dost not enquire wisely concerning this.

[Use 2] Secondly, it is our duty to beware of unthankfulness, which is the mother of all murmuring. For as the Apostle biddeth us to take heed there be not in any of us an unbelieving heart to depart away from the living God, so we must beware of an unthankfull heart to depart from him, which is a capital offense and a mother sin, Job 34.18, 19. And that we may see what an ugly and misshapen monster of many heads it is, let us consider what deformed daughters it bringeth forth into the world, verifying the common proverb, Like mother, like daughter, Ezek. 16.44. First, it maketh us to prefer base, I may say, beastly things before better, and to lift up the earth above the heaven. Secondly, it bringeth hardness of heart, and maketh us without feeling of good things. Thirdly, it stoppeth the course of God's blessings, & after a sort dryeth up his hand, that he cannot stretch it out to do us good. For who will bestow anything upon an unthankfull person? Fourthly, it maketh us like untamed heifers, the more we have, the more we spurn and kick against God, like the pampered horse, that lifteth up his heel against him that feedeth him to the full. Fifthly, it is a thief, which taketh away all that we have, and even robbeth and bereaveth as of such blessings as once we enjoyed: or as a violent fire that wasteth and consumeth whatsoever we had gathered together. For as thankfulness to God vnlocketh God's treasury, and maketh way and passage for us to obtain more: so unthankfulness shutteth the door that leadeth to the storehouse of his blessings, nay it fretteth away, like a canker, whatsoever we have received already. Sixthly, it bringeth down God's judgments, as it did upon the Israelites, sometimes fire, sometimes plagues, sometimes serpents, and sometimes one judgment and sometimes another, until they were all consumed: none of them escaped unpunished. For as Solomon speaketh, Prov. 17.13. who so rewardeth evil for good, evil shall not depart from his house. Shall we sinful wretches so reward the Lord that hath done us good, to do him evil? Seventhly, it blindeth our sight, and pulleth out our eyes, that we cannot discern our own estate, nor consider aright what we have, it maketh us turn the blessings of God behind us, and to set the least crosses before us: it maketh us envy at the condition of others, that they have greater honors, riches, and livings then we have. Lastly, it exasperateth men very much to see themselves to be evilly rewarded and smally regarded at their hands to whom they have done good, as we see, 1 Sam. 25.10. and 2 Sam. 10.6.7. how much more then doth it provoke the most High? and how careful ought we to be to beware of so foul an evil?

Lastly, if we would avoid and prevent this [Use 3] sin of murmuring to which we are so prone, we must learn to be thankful to God for all good things, and continually call to mind y^t they come from no other but from him, Ier. 5.24. I am. 1.17. For as unthankfulness is a kind of idolatry, refusing to give honor to whom it is due; so thankfulness testifieth our love, fear, faith, & hope in God, of whom we receive all things. This duty hath many branches. For such as are thankful must acknowledge in their hearts, and confess with their mouths the goodness of God toward them: so did the good Samaritan healed of the leprosy, Luke, chapter 17. verse 18. so doth David, Psal. 66.16. Secondly, they must be patient, and well pleased with the will of God, though thereby our own willes be crossed and curbed. We must in silence and subjection to his holy and heavenly pleasure yield up our selves and our whole life to be ordered by him, Psal. 4.4. and 29.9. and 37.7. Isaiah 30.15. and give the praise to him for them, Job 1.21. because even in judgment he remembereth mercy. Hab. 3.2. in all our crosses he showeth his love unto us, and dealeth better with us then we deserve, who might justly cast us into hell fire, and yet do us no wrong, nor give us just occasion to complain against him. Thirdly, we must be content with our places, callings and estates, avoiding covetousness and ambition, Phil. 4.11. Heb. 13.5. Fourthly, we must set our hearts constantly to obey God in poverty & penury, in afflictions and in all adversities, Phil. 4.12. Heb. 10.34. Fifthly, we must be ready to distribute & communicate the good blessings which we have received unto others, knowing of whom and to what end we have received them. When the fountains of God's mercies flow to us, let our fountain be dispersed abroad, and rivers of waters in the streets, Prov. 5.16. When the clouds have dropped down rain and watered our land, let us break our bread to the hungry, and cover them that are naked. We can never be truly thankful unto God, if we be not careful to do good to his servants for his sake. Lastly, we must show our selves thankful by yielding obedience to God, & by laboring to please him in all things. This is a real thankfulness, and this the Lord looketh for at our hands: this is the consummation and perfection of the former, and without it, all the rest are of none effect.

[Verse 2, 3. And the people cried unto Moses, &c. the fire of the Lord burnt among them, &c. and he called the name of the place Taberah. Here we see the punishment of their sin. Observe from hence, that among other judgments of God, fire is to be esteemed as one. Thus he destroyed Sodom and Gomorrhah, Gen. 19.24. and burnt up both cities and people. So a fire went out from the Lord and consumed Nadab and Abihu the sons of Aaron, because they offered strange fire, Levite. 10.2. Elijah the Prophet did call fire from heaven, and consumed the captains with their fifty. 1 Kin. 1.10. The like we see afterward, chap. 16.35. according to that in the Psalm, The flame burnt up the wicked, Psal. 106.18.

[Reason 1] This must be acknowledged to be a grievous and fearful judgment, because we say commonly and truly, fire and water have no mercy. And we see by never failing experience that it is so. Secondly, it is one of the titles of God expressing his nature, y^t he is called a consuming fire, Heb. 12.29. Deut. 4.24. and 9.3.

[Use 1] This teacheth us, that if it please God to lay this judgment upon us at any time, whatsoever the means or instruments be whereby it cometh, whether by negligence or willfulness, or by the immediate hand of God, we must always lift up our eyes to heaven, and submit our selves with patience to him: we must not rest in second causes, but acknowledge his providence, and consider what is said in this place, that the fire of the Lord consumed the campe. We must therefore no otherwise account of it.

[Use 2] Secondly, it is our duty in this regard to serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear. We must take heed to our selves, lest we forget the covenant of the Lord our God; we must make no graven image, or the likeness of anything which he hath forbidden. It is reason we stand in fear of him that is able to destroy us suddenly, and to arm his creatures as his soldiers to consume us in a moment.

Thirdly, it warneth us, that at the last day, [Use 3] the whole world shall be consumed with fire, and the elements shall melt with heat, and the heavens shall pass away as a scrolle. Seeing then all these things shall be dissolved, What manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for, and hasting unto the coming of the day of God! We never read nor heard of moe burning of towns & houses thē within these few years, testified by the continual collections for the relief of such persons as have received loss that way. It is a lamentable sight and moveth much commiseratiō to see a few houses consumed to ashes: these particular burnings put us in mind of y^t general burning, when all things that worldly men so much esteem, and for which they labor & gape so greedily, shall be on fire. What should we so much delight our selves, in costly apparel bespangled with gold and silver, or why do we dote and set our affections so far upon the treasures of this life, which we know must all be burnt up like stubble?

Lastly, we are hereby admon[•]shed of a more [Use 4] terrible fire and ••ore fearful spectacle then all the former: for they are but as painted fires in comparison of the last fire, which the breath of the Lord, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle. It was a fearful fire fell upon Sodom which burned their cities to ashes, but their souls suffering the vengeance of God in eternal fire, was more fearful. This is called everlasting fire, which never shall be quenched. Into this shall the reprobate be cast, & be tormented in those flames. These plagues are infinite, unspeakable, & incomprehensible: without end, without ease, without intermission, without remedy, without profit. Other iudgmēt^s have some good use, & many times bring profit to the sufferers after they have been exercised by them, but these shall bring none at all: there shall be weeping & gnashing of teeth.

Again, when the people first murmured, God did not punish them, as appeareth in the book of Exodus, they had not yet received y^e law: but after the law was given, & knowledge shined as a candle in their hearts to direct thē, God spared them not, but entered into judgment with them so soon as they sinned against him. We learn hereby, [Doctrine.] that knowledge & the light of God's word received into our hearts, increaseth sin and judgment. The servant that knew his masters will, and did not prepare himself to do according to his will shall be beaten with many stripes: so saith Christ of the Jews, If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no cloak for their sin. For ignorance doth in some sort excuse, that is, make the sin not to be so great. Again, [Reason 1] all color and excuse is taken from such as have the means of knowledge, they cannot say they knew not: the word shall judge them at the last day which they have heard. This then teacheth, that none sin more grievously then such as live in the bosom of the Church, hear his word, and receive his Sacraments. It had been better for them that they had never known the way of righteousness, then after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them, and the last state of that man is worse then the first. Again, mark from hence the cause, why judgment beginneth at the house of God, because here is y^e greatest light, here God hath vouchsafed the greatest mercy, here he hath rained upon his own city, while other places remained dry and withered. As then they have tasted the greatest mercies, so they must be touched with the sorest judgments. Lastly, it standeth the Church in hand and every true believer, to walk as wisely in the day, redeeming the time, because the days are evil. If y^e word do not work our conversion, it shall further our condemnation, and we make our selves twofold more the children of hell then others that have not been partakers of such graces.

[He called the name of the place Taberah.] God doth not content himself to punish their murmuring, but setteth up a memorial or monument of their sin, tha^t others might be taught and instructed by it to fear, by giving a new name to the place where the sin was committed, calling it Taberah, that is, a consumption or a burning. The like we see afterward in this chap. ver. 34. [Doctrine.] Learn from these examples, that the judgments of God which befall to men, are not only punishments to the sufferers and offenders, but also documents and instructions to all others that behold thē, know them, and hear of them. The punishments of God inflicted upon one do serve to admonish and instruct another. Abraham is commended that he would teach his servants and household to keep the way of the Lord, and to do justice & judgment, when he heard of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrhah. The Lord chargeth, that the idolater should not be spared, but stoned with stones, that seeketh to entice others secretly to serve other gods, that all Israel may hear and fear, and do no more any such wickedness. So the judgments that fell upon the Galileans, and those that perished by the fall of the tower, served as examples and Sermons of repentance. The like we see in Deuteronomy, & they were written for our admonition, &c. Iud. ver. 7.

[Reason 1] This is the end of his judgments, he worketh them to this end and purpose, and therefore they must be instructions to us. A few were smitten (saith Cyprian) that others might be warned by their example. As in a family the master will not pass by that which the servant committeth, because it may be a warning to the rest, that they might hear and see and commit no such thing, as we shown before out of Deuteronomy. Some are punished, that others might not be punished. Secondly, whatsoever was written before hand, was written for our instruction, that we might receive benefit thereby upon whom the ends of the world are come; as it oftentimes happeneth in states that are well governed, where we see not only malefactors executed, but gibbets erected, and other monuments set up in the high ways, to the benefit of those that pass by and come after, that they beholding what befell to such wicked offenders, might not transgress in the same manner.

This serveth to check and control the sacrilege [Use 3] of the Church of Rome, who keep back these examples from the knowledge of the people of God. They cannot abide y^e Scriptures should be common, and therefore do hinder what they can, & forbid them to know these judgments. The Apostle would not have any in the Church ignorant of them, but these keep away the key of divine knowledge which openeth the gate of God's kingdom, neither entering themselves, nor suffering those that would enter. The Priests in the Law were commanded to read the Scriptures to all the people in their own language: but these keep them & read them in a strange tongue, because none should understand them: or if they be in their own tongue, they have so mingled them with strange words and phrases that the people are never the wiser nor y^e better. And if any in reverence and humility seek to understand them, and show and desire them to be acquainted with them, they shall be so terrified and discouraged, that they are not able to make any profit by them to themselves, or receive any comfort from them. These are like to those covetous wretches y^t withhold corn from y^e people in time of famine, whom God and the people may justly curse.

Secondly, this reproveth those that are ignorant, [Use 2] willfully ignorant, and will not know nor learn the examples y^t God hath set down in his word. For if they be justly condemned that will not have them known, then cannot they be excused that care as little to have thē learned. Woe then to the times & ages wherein we live. For though we may see and read, and hear and know sundry examples of God's fearful judgments, both in the word & out of the word, yet for the most part we want care and conscience to make profit and benefit by them. The judgments of God are before our eyes, yet they are for the most part but nine days wonder, nay rather nine hours wonder, for they are soon forgotten and out of mind. We turn them to another end then that for which God sent them among us. We are ready to bless our selves in our sins, because the like falleth not upon us, and to censure others to be grievous sinners. Whosoever therefore do not make use and benefit by the judgments of God, shall they escape? No verily, they shall bear their condemnation: for it cannot stand with the honor of God to suffer them to abuse his mercy, & to contemn his justice. For as it standeth not with the honor of a state to suffer any person to race and deface the monuments of their justice that they have set up, and therefore he w^c doth it shall be severely punished; so certainly God will maintain his own honor, and get him glory in the confusion and destruction of all those y^t make no use of his judgments, his hand shall find them out, and come suddenly as a whirlwind upon their heads.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it is our duty to learn by his several judgments what he would have us to do, forasmuch as he sendeth them home to our doors, nay to our hearts and consciences for instruction sake. Every judgment is a real sermon of repentance. As it is a sin for a man to go to a sermon & profit nothing, neither in knowledge, nor in faith, nor in obedience, to be neither confirmed in the truth, nor preserved from error, nor raised up with comfort: so is it a grievous sin for any in his corruption to behold the hand of God striking & punishing, and securely to pass by it, & not learn some good instruction from it. Every judgment of God must be to us as a schoolmaster to teach us somewhat, and we should be as scholars ready to learn by that lesson. But what should a man learn by judgments will some say? I answer, that by every judgment we must learn this point, that they are as a sermon preaching to us against that sin for which that man was punished & smitten which lieth under the judgment. All parents must learn what befell to old Eli for winking at the faults of his children and sparing of thē, or else certainly they shall answer for it, he brake his neck and died, for he fell from off the seat backward on which he sate, 1 Sa. 4, 18. See the judgment which befell to him y^t gathered sticks on the Sabbath day, ch. 15, 35 to teach us to beware of the contempt of it. Mark what be fell to Jeroboam, he lost the use of his hand for a time which he stretched out to offer violence to the prophet of the Lord: we must therefore take heed of this, that we lift not up our hands against his servants. To be short, let us set before us the examples of Cain that hated his brother, of Cham that mocked his father, of Ananias & Sapphira that dissembled with God, of Judas that betrayed his master, of Eutychus that slept at the Sermon of Paul: by these and such like we must be admonished to avoid maliciousness, mocking, hypocrisy, covetousness, and drowsy affections when we come to hear. We must learn good out of the evils which befell all these: Cain and Cham were both accursed: Ananias and Sapphira were stricken with sodain death, Judas hanged himself, and Eutychus was taken up for dead. If from these examples we do not learn some instruction, doubtless it shall turn to our greater condemnation. Thus much of their first murmuring.

[Ver. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. The second murmuring followeth, which is the second part of y^e chap. handled to the end thereof: wherein observe 3 things. First the people's blasphemy against God, lusting after flesh and loathing Manna. Secondly, the communication between Moses & God touching their murmuring. Thirdly, the issue and event of all, containing the execution of God's will after the communication was ended. The murmuring is amplified by y^t occasion, by the manner by the substance and effect thereof, and lastly by the greatness of their sin and offense: all which are set down at large, both that the justice of God in punishing of them might be cleared, and his gracious goodness in sparing and pardoning of them might be manifested.

The occasion of this sin which is the first circumstance, arose from the multitude of the Egyptians that came out of Egypt, and joined themselves to the people of God. Now albeit they had left Egypt when they saw y^e plagues that fell upon it, yet they savored still of the Egyptian manners, and longed after their Egyptian diet, they lust after flesh, and gave great offense to the people of God, they laid a stumbling block before them & caused many of them to fall, y^t they never rose up again.

Their sin is expressed in these words, Who shall give us flesh to eat? Then they remembered their former life in Egypt, when they did fill their bellies with store of fish, and did eat Cucumbers and Melons, Leeks, Onions and garlic, which they preferred before the most heavenly meat and Manna bestowed upon them in great plenty. Nay, they show themselves to be so bewitched with these Egyptian tricks, and besotted with the desire of their former food, that their souls even pined away and consumed every day, as if they had been utterly famished: so that they cried out, We can see nothing but Manna. In this their sin, that we may see it in his true colors, & judge of it accordingly, observe these particulars. First, a manifest contempt of God's ordinance, for they do point it out as it were with the finger, and say there is nothing at all besides this Manna before our eyes. Secondly, they must have their eyes satisfied as well as their bellies filled. It could not content them to have their necessity supplied, they must also have their sight pleased: such was their wantonness, intemperance, unthankfulness, and loathing of that meat wherewith God did diet them. Thirdly, here is a notable tempting of God, as Psal. 78.18. they tempted God in their harts, in requiring meat for their lusts: they would try his power what he could do; he must wait upon them, and do whatsoever it pleased them to enjoin and appoint unto him. Fourthly, blasphemy against God and open contempt of him, setting him at naught, They spake against God, they said, Can God furnish a table in the Wildernes? For could they more blaspheme God, or fly in his face with opprobrious speeches, then to charge and accuse him of pining away his people and starving of them? Fifthly, a vilifying & contemning of their deliverance out of Egypt: they had forgotten the bondage of their persons, the cruelty of Pharaoh, the beating of their officers, & the destruction of their children: they renew their old complaint w^c they uttered more evidently, Exod. 16, 3. O that we had died by the hand of the Lord in th^e Land of Egypt, when we sate by the fleshpots, when we did eat bread our bellies full. As if they should say, we care not for our departure and deliverance out of Egypt, we think not our selves any way beholding to God for it: for then it was better with us then at this present. Sixthly, they loath their present estate of present blessings, though they had store of Manna, and had not experience of any want, yet they must have their dainty and delicate food, like tumultuous and rebellious subjects that always are weary of the present state. Seventhly, they show their intemperance and concupiscence, lusting after the worse, whē they had the better, of which the Apostle saith, We should not lust after evil things, as they lusted. For this cause even to lay open the greatness of their sin, doth Moses sundry ways describe this Manna, by the similitude of it, it was like Coriander seed; by the color of it, as Belium, that is, like the gum of that tree. For it is a tree of the bigness of an Olive, whereof Arabia hath great plenty, which yieldeth a certain gum sweet to smell, but bitter in taste. It is farther also described by the sundry uses of it, by the taste of it, and that it came to them without any labor or pain-taking, except in the gathering only, for God did send it down with y^e dew every night, as we read at large. Exod. 16.

Out of this division thus sorted into his parts, arise sundry instructions, part whereof I will only point out. And first behold & wonder, and be astonished, how quickly they sin again. They had been chastened immediately before, the fire entering upon the hindermost of their tents, was scarce quenched, the footsteps of that fearful burning might yet be traced out, and the smoke thereof was fresh in their eyes, yet they fall to lusting and murmuring again. Observe therefore and mark it well, that the entertainment of sin is dangerous. It is not satisfied with the first committing, it goeth and groweth on apace, the practice of one maketh way for another, and openeth the gates wide to all wickedness, Whē sin is suffered to take root, it buddeth by and by, and beareth fruit which is more bitter then gall. And no marvel: for God leaveth such [Reason 1] to themselves, y^t they commit sin with greediness. Such is his justice, that he will withdraw from them, when once they forsake him, all means that should do thē good, y^t they abuse them no longer, and he will punish sin with sin, the first with a second and the second with falling into a third. Sin is like the infant that is in the mothers womb, where it groweth by little and little unto the birth, and never stayeth till it come to perfection. This must [Use 1] teach us, that there is no dalying with sin, it is not barren, but very fruitful. Many think they may stretch their conscience a little, and make bold with God and his law for once, but they deceive themselves, for they sow that seed w^c in short time will spring up and grow a monster. For as the sluggard saith, yet a little more sleep: so the sinner saith, yet a little more sin. He is like the covetous man y^t saith evermore Bring, bring: and as he thinketh he never increaseth his substance enough, so the sinner supposeth he never increaseth his sin enough. This will bite as a serpent in the end, though it delighteth in the beginning. Again, it teacheth us to acknowledge God's great mercy toward his children, in staying them back that they go not forward being once entered into the practice of it. When Paul would have entered in among the furious people, it might have cost his life, if the disciples had let him alone, howbeit they suffered him not, Act. 19.30. So if God should suffer us to run on, it might cost us our lives, and cause us to be condemned with the world. When we open a port and passage for sin, we are as a man that is falling or rolling down a very high mountain, how can he escape death, except he be stayed by a very strong hand? So is it with us, if once we make a breach into our conscience, it is impossible to stop it, if God himself do not set to his hand. If he take the matter in hand, and determine to show mercy upon the poor perishing soul that beginneth to suffer shipwreck, though we had one foot in hell, he can bring us back again. And how should not that soul so delivered, and seeing the snare of death and hell broken, and having experience of the power and mercy of God in raising him to life, but in a sweet feeling of them cry out, Blessed be the Lord, who hath not given me as a prey unto their teeth, Psal. 124.6. and again, My help is in the Name of the Lord, who made heaven and earth, ver. 8. This mercy is the greater, both because it is rare: for not one among an hundred maketh up the breach, that sin hath made: and because it is wholly gracious and freely bestowed, the sinner deserving to be forsaken utterly who hath fearfully forsaken God. God hath fast hold upon all that are his from their election, and therefore he will never withdraw his hand from them, nor suffer them to be drowned. Lastly, it must be our care to stop the beginnings of sin, Josh. 24.14.15. and then we shall be sure it will never come to perfection.

Again, these murmuring Egyptians, seeing the mighty works and miracles of God in Egypt, would needs become proselites, they join themselves to the people of God, and seem so forward that they forsake their idolatry, their country, and kindred, their own people, and their fathers house: nevertheless they starte back as a deceitfull bow, and they revolt back to their old manners, as dogs to their vomit, and as swine to their former mire & filthiness. Whereby we learn, that many are in the profession of the faith, which are not indeed faithful, neither true members of the Church, as we see in Ishmael. Gen. 21, 9. and Cain, chap. 4, 3. there are many temporizers that believe for a season, Luk. 8, 13. Others are offended, and fall away, John 6, 66. Such profess that they know GOD, but they deny him in their works, and become abominable and disobedient, Tit. 1, ver. 16. 1 John 2, verse. 19. And no marvel: for many love the praise of the world more then the praise of God, and never had found rooting▪ and therefore though they go far in y^e right way▪ yet they return back, and are never the nearer, nay, they are set farther off then ever they were. The Church had always such, all are not the true seed of Abraham, that are of Abraham: neither the Israel of God that came of Israel. Good fish and bad fish are taken in the net, Math. 13, and good wheat and [Use 1] chaff are mingled together. This teacheth us good uses. First, that it is not enough to salvation, or sufficient to entitle us to God's kingdom, to make an outward profession. The devil himself may this way go as far as the best, for Satan can transform himself into an Angel of light, 2 Cor. 11, 14. & a wolf may put on a sheep's skin, Math. 7, 15. Yea, a Parot and an Ape can imitate: and therefore trust not too much to the outward appearance and profession, if thou go no farther, neither account it sufficient that thou art baptized, and made partaker of the Word and Sacraments, and of the prayers of the church:

this is no better then to trust in lying words which shall not profit nor prosper, Ier. 7, 4. Secondly, we must join to our profession, sanctification and holiness of life, Ier. 7, 5. Such as content themselves with outward shows, are like the tree that hath leaves without fruit, & are rank hypocrites, like weeds that grow among good herbs. God hath chosen and redeemed us that we should be holy, Eph. 1, 4. Luke 68, 75. The condition of such is no better then of the heathen and infidels, Math. 5, 20. Nay it is not so good. Lastly, let us hereby try and prove whether we be in the faith or not, 2 Cor. 13, 5. Many live in the Church that never examine themselves whether they be of the Church, nor consider that they may deceive themselves & many others, forasmuch as an hypocrite and a reprobate may go far in Christian religion. Many have in them the first beginnings of Christian religion, as it were the foundation of a building, and there they stand at a stay: but we must build forward, until the spiritual building be perfected. It is not enough to run, except we obtain the prize. He that doth persevere to the end, shall be saved: and he that is faithful to the death, shall receive the crown of life. Moreover see here, how the Israelites are led by the example of the Egyptians, to murmur with them, and therefore one evil person entiseth, corrupteth, and infecteth another, as Eve did Adam, and the serpent did Eve: Prov. 13, 20. Psal. 106, 35, 36, 39. For sin is as leaven; 1 Cor. 5, 6. and as a contagious disease.

Woe therefore to the world because of offenses; [Use 1] Mat. 18, 6.8. and they are pronounced to be accursed that lay a stumbling block before the blind, to make them to fall, Deut. 27. Again, we must have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness; neither be companions with them, Eph. 5, 7, 11. 1 Cor. 5, 11. We must come out from among them, and separate our selves from them, & touch no unclean thing, 2 Cor. 6, 17. and then will God receive us as his children, & be a Father to us. Moreover, all obstinate persons that give offense, should be banished out of the Church, lest as scabbed sheep they infect the rest of the flock. The lepers were not suffered to dwell among men, but turned out of the City, and dwelt apart by themselves. And wherefore was this? to avoid the infection of the body. How much more then ought such as have a spiritual leprosy upon them, be kept from the company of others, lest they bring first infection, and after destruction upon soul & body? Furthermore, it excuseth not to say, I have learned it of others, they were the authors and beginners of the sin. What did it avail the Israelites to fall by the example and allurement of the Egyptians, or by their counsel and persuasion? For it was their own lust that carried them away headlong. God punisheth all such as commit evil, or any way consent unto it, Rom. 1, 32. So God in the beginning punished the devil, the man, & the woman, because all sinned, albeit one by the persuasion of another. Lastly, it condemneth those that glory in their strength, that nothing can make them worse, no time, no place, no persons, no persuasions, no company. They say, no man shall be able to pervert them, or seduce them, or infect them. Are these men better then Adam when he was in the garden? if his place could not protect him, nor his innocence keep him, they may justly fear that other places may infect them much rather. Solomon was no fool, nay he was endued with great wisdom, and beloved of his God, yet being too familiar with Idolaters, he was overtaken with Idolatry, and became a great Idolater, and his outlandish women caused him to sin. Or are they better then Peter, who made a most worthy confession of Christ? yet being among a crew of profane persons, he was brought to deny his Master, nay in a manner his own saluatiō. Be not therefore deceived, rather fear thine own weakness then boast of thy strength.

[Ver. 5, 6. We remember the fish that we did eat in Egypt freely, the cucumbers, &c. But now our soul is dried away, &c. In these words we see how carnal men conceive carnal things. They prefer their trash before Manna, as if corn being found out, men should love acorns better then corn. The doctrine from hence is this, that the transitory things of this world, are preferred by carnal minded men before heavenly things. The Jews preferred their private commodities before the building of the Temple, Hag. 1, 2. So did Esau, Hebr. 12, 16, 17. who is therefore branded of the holy ghost to be a profane person. So did the Gadarenes Matth. 8, 34. We have many examples of this nature, Judas, Demas, the yongman in the gofpell that came to Christ, howbeit he went away sorrowful from him, for if he might not keep his possession, he would none of Religion. And the Reasons are plain.

[Reason 1] For they that are carnal are carnally minded, they are nothing else but a lump of flesh, from whence nothing can proceed, but that which is corrupt, Io. 3, 6. Secondly, they have no taste at all of spiritual things, as of grace, of heaven, of salvation, of eternal life. No marvel therefore if these be vile and naught worth in their eyes, and the other preferred before them, because where the treasure is▪ there will the heart be also, Mat. 6, 21. Col. 3, 2.

The uses follow. First, see the dangerous estate [Use 1] of carnal men, and how hard it is for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God, Mat. 19, 23. It is easier for a Camel to go through the eye of a Needle, then for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. verse 24. Rich men are thought of the world to be the happiest men in the world: howbeit they stand in a slippery place, and their estate dangerous, if they watch not narrowly over themselves. This appeareth in the example of the rich glutton, Luke 16, 19. he could find no time to search the Law and the Prophets, he was altogether drowned and drunken in his delights, he was corrupted and carried away with pomp and vanity; finally, he forgot and contemned the poor. So was it with him that would pull down his barns and build new, and thought of nothing but of the earth: he said to himself, applauding his own happiness, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry, Luke 12, 19. This was the cause that moved Agur to desire of God not to give him riches, least he be full & deny the Lord, and say, Who is the Lord? Pro. 30, 8.9. Such as set their hearts upon the vanities of the world, do commonly neglect heavenly things, and by little and little wax cold in them. Riches are compared to thorns; if then our hearts be not well fenced & counterguarded, we shall be hurt by them. Therefore doeth Christ denounce a woe against all carnal richmen, because they have received their consolation already, Luke 6, 24. They must look for no further reward.

Secondly, we must not be immoderate in [Use 2] seeking after them, neither be idolaters in trusting in them. What was it that destroyed the Sodomites? was it not abundance of all things? was it not excess and superfluity? Eze. 16.49. Let us be contented with our estate whatsoever it be: for a little with a quiet conscience and a true heart to God, is better then a fat stalled Ox. Let us pray for convenient food, and use this world as though we used it not, for the fashion thereof fadeth away, 1 John. 2, 17. Let our conversation be in heaven, Phil. 3, 19. Let not our hearts be bewitched and besotted with these things, that we may depart hence in peace when God shall call us, and so be the Lord's in life and death. It is no profit to win the whole world with the loss of our own souls, Mat. 16.26.

Lastly, let it be our study to prefer as best [Use 3] of all, the best things. They are no better than fools that would prefer rotten wood that shineth in the night, before the finest and purest gold of Ophyr. And who doth not willingly yield and confess the folly of these Egyptians, that made more reckoning of their gross feeding and fogging in of garlic, and Onions, and Cucumbers, and such like grazing^a than of that excellent & precious Manna which came from heaven? We are ready to sit in judgment upon these, and to condemn them: but how many are there of us that are like unto them? I dare boldly affirm and avouch, that the greatest sort of men are such Egyptians, and do daily practice such Egyptian tricks: making more account of this life thē of the life to come; of man more than of God, of y^e earth more than of heaven. Let not therefore temporal things dazzle our eyes, to make us senseless as blocks. If rotten things shine, it is but in the dark, and in the night; and if these transitory riches do besot any, it is such as are blind and cannot see the glory and beauty of the world to come: w^c if we could behold with the inward eyes of a sanctified mind, it would wholly possess and carry us into a love & admiration of it. But such as are nothing but a lump of flesh, can savor nothing but of the flesh. All their cares and cogitations are spent about the world: their hands and harts are full of it, y^t they leave no room for better things. Tel these men never so much of religion, of the word of God, & the fear of his name, you sing a song to a deaf man: by and by they reply, Who will show us any good? that is, any profit: they care for nothing else but for the flesh-pots. It is most strange to consider that the life of man, w^c should be spent chiefly to provide for the soul which is immortal, yet this for the most part is the least of our thoughts. We are altogether plodding about getting of riches, and providing for the body and the belly, which are framed of the earth and dust. We dwell in houses of clay, & our eyes do everywhere behold the uncertainty and vnstability of them, yet we cheefely prize and pamper this vassal and slave of death, and forget utterly, or remember at leisure the soul, and cast all our hopes on the peace which we trust to make at the parting, which is an high presumption, & no better than a laughing of God to scorn. And when we have done all, and gotten store of goods, what comfort shall they minister at the last day? for all this is but with the Egyptians to strive for onyons and garlike, it is no better. And when the body must turn to the earth, & we must lay down this Tabernacle, whose foundation is in the dust, what good will our onyons and garlike do us? Will not a little Manna at that day, stored up, stand us in more stead, and bring greater comfort to the soul, than to sit by these flesh pots of Egypt? Alas my brethren, all y^e wealth of this world, if we could heap it up together, is no better than onyons and garlike in comparison of spiritual things. Why then should we exalt the body so high, which must lie so low, and return to dust and ashes, and in the mean season neglect the soul, which shall live (when the body is dead and rotten) either in everlasting life, or in everlasting fire? Such notwithstanding is our madness, that all the stir which here we make, is for onyons and garlike. We labor for nothing but for the belly & meats, and yet God shall destroy both it and them. The rich man is said to fare deliciously every day, howbeit he made ill provision for his soul, for it was carried to hell and torments.

Ver. 7, 7, 9. To enlarge and set forth the sin of these profane persons, Moses describeth what this Manna was. It was not a natural Meteore usual & common in those quarters, as many have imagined. For this fell among them every part of the year, winter & summer and that alike. It served to satisfy many thousands. It fell not at all upon y^e Sabbath day: howbeit on the sixth day fell twice so much as there did ordinarily other days. If it were kept until the next morning, it putrefied, but reserved on the sixth day, it rotted not, but served them for their use upon the seventh day. Nothing could hinder the coming or falling of it, nor frost nor rain, nor heat, nor cold, but this blessing of God always accompanied them whither soever they went. When they were entered into the possession of the Land of promise, then it ceased, but not before. Lastly, Aaron was commanded to keep a pot full of it for a memorial of this miraculous work of God, and it rotted not nor stanke. It is called the bread of Angels, Psal. 78, 25. not that the Angels do eat any corporal or material food, being themselves spirits, but because of the excellency of it, or because the Angels were God's instruments in preparing of it. It was food not only for the body, but for the soul: it was both a visible Manna and an invisible, both open and hidden, both earthly and heavenly. This was a type and figure of Christ the true bread that came down from heaven. 1 Cor. 10, 3. John 6, ver. 33, 35. It was a type of the word which is the food of our souls. Hebrews 5, verses 13, 14. as also of the sacraments by which we are nourished 1 Corinth. chapter 10, v. 3. These three are right Angels food, dainty and delicious fare, sweeter then wafers made of honey, or of the best confection that the Apothecary can afford. This teacheth us, that God hath provided a very large and liberal diet, yea most excellent & dainty fare to nourish his children. The heavenly blessings of God contained in his word, the exercises of our religion, the holy sacraments, especially the Lord Jesus himself y^e bread of life, whom whosoever eateth hath eternal life abiding in him, are costly, plentiful, and heavenly feasts, the means of spiritual nourishment and increase to his servants, which God hath ordained for his sons and daughters. The Prophet speaking of the souls provision, which God our good Shepherd maketh for the sheep of his pasture, saith, Thou preparest a Table before me, &c: my cup runneth over. Thus is wisdom the Son of God brought in by Solomon, to have killed her beasts, to have mingled her wine, and to have furnished her Table, Prov. 9, verse 2. Come eat of my bread and drink of the wine which I have mingled, verse 5. And Math. 22, verse 4. the Kings servants call the guests, and tell them, he hath prepared his dinner, his oxen and his fatlings are killed, and all things are ready. So the Prophet speaketh, Isaiah 25, 6. and Christ himself, Luke 14, verse 16. and Psalm. 36, 19. So then, the souls food & fare is notable good cheer the best that ever was tasted.

For these heavenly blessings and this sustenance [Reason 1] for the soul, doth as fully sustain and satisfy, nourish and maintain the state and strength of the soul, as any outward provision doth or can do the body, John 6, 54, 55, 56. My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed, that is, they have thē same nature to our souls, which meat and drink have to our bodies.

Secondly, in these and by these is provision [Reason 2] to satisfy all sorts: in the word is sincere milk for children and strong meat for men of riper age, Hebrews, chapter 5. Christ is hidden Manna which all did gather, and were fed and nourished by it: it feedeth small and great.

Thirdly, the provision of God is far better then all earthly provision. This food is [Reason 3] perpetual, the word of the Lord endureth forever, 1 Pet. 1.23. In eating of this food there is no danger of surfeit and excess. This is durable meat, it liveth forever, and maketh us live forever: who so eateth of it and digesteth it, shall never perish for hunger, and who so drinketh of this, shall never thirst again. It is therefore God's ordinance, that his children and household servants should be largely and liberally provided for, to have everyone of them a full meal.

The uses. From hence it followeth, that the soul hath always very great need of [Use 1] food and sustenance as well as the body, and will perish for hunger and die for thirst, even eternally, through want of spiritual food, as <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> well as the body for want of temporal food. The soul hath her diet, as well as the body, & the strength of it is maintained by the bread of life, as well as the state of the body by the bread of wheat. How many are there among us that consider not these things, or at least care not for them! Many there are that have fat and lusty bodies, that have plenty of outward things, who notwithstanding have poor, lean, and pining souls, even ready to starve, and to be famished, and to give up the ghost. For as the wise Solomon teacheth, Prov. 29, 18. Where there is no vision, the people perish. And the Prophet threateneth a greater famine of the word, and more dangerous, then the famine of bread, or the thirst for water, Amos 8, 11. If then we be content to take pains and to travail far for this earthly food, as we see in Jacob, when he and his family wanted corn: how much more ought we to labor for the bread that endureth to everlasting life?

[Use 2] Secondly, we should come to the house of God with hungry and thirsty souls. We must resort to the Word and Sacraments, and to all the holy ordinances of God, as an hungry person doth to a good feast, Isaiah 55, 1. John. 7, 37. Revel. 22, 17. 1 Pet. 2, 2. Let it be with us as with David, he longed greatly, and said, Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate! Where there is no desire of grace, there is no grace. The faithful have always testified their desire, Ps. 42, 1. The Prophet felt the sweetness of the word and sacraments, & testifieth often what a goodly taste he found in him, as Psal. 119, 103, & 19, 10. How sweet are thy words unto my taste, yea sweeter then honey unto my mouth! He that is sick, findeth no taste in anything, the purest honey is bitter unto him: but he that hath a good taste and is in health of body, judgeth and findeth it otherwise. So if our soul be in health, it findeth the word to be sweeter then the honey and the honey comb, and more to be desired then gold, yea then much fine gold. Have we then no taste in the word? doth it not relish with us? then most certain it is we are soul-sick, we are sick at the heart: it is high time to run & poste with all speed to the Physician Christ Jesus, to restore this taste to us which we have lost, or to bestow it vpon us if we never enjoyed it. How irksome is it for a man to have no taste in his meat and drink! Elihu saith, The ear trieth words, as the mouth tasteth meat. But we should think it a thousand times more troublesome, to have no taste of the good word of God, as if it were no meat for us. The Manna described in this place, which figured out the word, is compared for the taste & sweetness, to wafers made with honey, Exod. 16, 31. How then shall we think our selves well, and whole, & in good health, when we have no more taste in it then is in the white of an egg?

[Use 3] Thirdly, here is comfort to all those that are poor Christians, which have little store at home, hard fare, bare bread, small drink, and a thin diet all y^e year. Let us cheer up our harts and refresh our spirits with this consideratiō, that albeit we have a scanty meal at home, yet there is plentiful provision in God's house. We have much matter of great rejoicing, that although there be great difference in fare and furniture between the rich man's table & the poor man's, yet the privileges of God's house are common to them both, the poor hath as good interest in them as the rich, yea sometimes a better portion, if he make greater use of them, and take more benefit by them. The poor are admitted to God's table, albeit they be not to the table of the rich, & have access unto his house and to his presence, where is fullness of joy and pleasure for evermore, and this their joy shall no man take from thē. Nay such as have riches and plenty at all times of all things, which have their tables furnished at home with variety of dainty dishes, & are served in with sundry courses of most choice meats, even they must make account y^t their best fare is in the Church of God, & prefer it far before the other: otherwise they judge not aright between soul & body, between meat and meat, between house and house.

Fourthly, this serveth to reprove papists, Ministers, & people. For first it meeteth with [Use 4] the popish diet, that bar the people from the cup of the Lord, thereby keeping back a part of the spiritual banquet that Christ hath prepared for them, when he spake to the communicants, Drink ye all of this. But these Church-robbers allow not to the people any consecrated wine, withdrawing from them a part of their allowance. This sin is no less then sacrilege. Christ saith, This is my blood which is shed for you and for many, for the remission of sins. And who are those many that are there spokē off? Doubtless all that should afterward believe in his Name. From hence then we reason thus, If the blood of Christ be shed for the people, then the cup of the Lord must be communicated unto them: but the former is true; therefore the latter. For as we reason touching baptism of infants, that if the kingdom of God belong unto them, much more the outward sign may be administered unto them: so we say touching the other, that if the blood of Christ and remission of sins belong to the people of God, much more doth the cup which is a seal thereof. Again, they deal no better with thē for the word it self. They have corrupted and poisoned their food with apochryphall additions, with human traditions, with keeping it in a strange toong, as it were under lock and key, and so starve them whom they should nourish and strengthen. And how can they deal better with the people in the word and sacraments, who have set up another Christ, a false and counterfeit Christ? they destroy his natures, & his offices, they deny him to be the only King, the only Teacher, the only Priest of his Church; they make other Mediators and Redeemers, they scoff at our righteousness standing in y^e imputation of his righteousness. So then the diet that the Romanists allow unto men is a poor thin diet, it is not able to maintain life in the body: for whereas the food wherewith the Lord would have us fed, standeth in three things, in believing in Christ, in receiving the word, and in partaking of the Sacraments, they feed the Church with chaff and husks, & no better then saw-dust; for the word they have corrupted, the sacraments they have mangled, and Christ Jesus himself they have utterly denied. Secondly, it reproveth such Ministers as feed their sheep in short pastures, and allow unto them a more sparing diet, thē the great Shepherd of the sheep hath appointed unto them. They give them no more food (if so much) then serveth to keep the soul in life, and therefore the sheep that depend upon their feeding and allowance are lean and starveling sheep, such as every bush and brier is able to entangle, and every ditch is able to drown. Some feed them with bread that is dry and mouldy, unfit for nourishment. Some think it enough to preach once a month, or once a quarter. It were rather to be wished that they would allow thē two meals a day, that the sheep of Christ may be fat and strong, according to the bodily diet which our selves do take. Let us not therefore feed our selves to the full, and starve the sheep for which Christ Jesus died: and when God hath dealt liberally with them, let us not pinch thē and pine them away, but as good Stewards of the house, bring forth store, both old & new. We ought to preach the word in season & out of season, and not deal as greedy and covetous masters do with their servants, that pinch thē of their meat: and seeing we reap plentifully of the people, let us not deal sparingly with them. Lastly, it reproveth the people themselves, that when God would have them well fed in their souls, care not how little food they receive themselves. The Sabbath is the Lord's feast day. Why should we refuse to take two meals on this day, when it is provided for us? If we took our food but once in the day, we should starve our bodies, oh, take heed we do not so to our souls! And let us beware we do not make more reckoning of feasting and filling of the body, then of feeding the soul. Alas, how many are there, that are content to buy their pleasures and pastimes with the loss of the word of God! and yet are never a whit touched with it. Are not these like Esau? are not these I say, as profane as Esau?

[Use 5] Lastly, it behooveth us to redeem the time that is to come, and to be more careful of the souls health, diet, strength, and nourishment, then of the bodies; according to the counsel of Christ, Labor not for the meat that perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto ever lasting life,&c. Seeing then we have such choice and variety of dainty food, sweet meats, banqueting dishes, and all other good things offered unto us, and set before us in God's house and at his table let no other feasting, pleasure, banquet, meeting, or voluptuous living▪ keep us from his house, or make us to come unreverantly or unworthily unto the same. Many do so fill, nay glut and gorge themselves with eating and drinking, that they are more fit to sleep, then either to hear or to pray. Let us be more careful to fill our souls with marrow & fatness, then to fulfill the desires of the flesh and to surfeit on our carnal pelights.

[Ver. 11, 14, 15. Then Moses heard the people weep, &c.] Thus much of the murmuring: now we come to the communication, which is double. First, the complaint of Moses, & the answer of God: secondly, the exception of Moses replying against God's answer, as if his word had not been sufficient, and then another answer of God satisfying him. In the first part of the first answer set down in these verses, we have Moses complaining of two things both because God had not dealt well & graciously with him, to lay so great a burden upon him, to take the charge of so great a people, without helpers and assisters, which made him even wish for death; and because he was not able to feed them and to satisfy their requests touching the flesh that they lusted after, saying, Give us flesh that we may eat.

It is remembered in Exodus, ch. 16, 12, 13. that they murmured against Moses, and lusted after flesh, and had quail sent them: whereupon the question may be asked, whether that history be the same that is mentioned in this place, and whether both were sent at one and the same time? I answer, the histories are diverse, both in regard of the circumstances of time and place. These were given to satisfy them a whole month, the other but one time. These fell a days journey without the host on each side, the other only covered the campe: they lusting after these are sharply punished, the other are not. We may observe out of the words of Moses, that many are the failings of the best servants of God, for in many things we sin all.

Again, Moses doth rashly expostulate with God, and unadvisedly wish for death. So did Job, chap. 3, 3. and Elijah, 1 Kings 19, 4. and Jeremiah, chap. 15, 10. and 20, 14, and Jonah, ch. 4, 30, So it is with many, though they have not yet learned what it is to live, neither are any way prepared for death, yet through impatience under the cross, wish for death. But this is our weakness, rather to wish not to be, then to be in any misery and adversity. Rather it behooveth us to tarry the Lord's leisure & to hope in him, for he shall bring it to pass, Psal. 37.

But to let this pass, observe the title that Moses giveth to Magistracy, he calleth it The carrying of the people in his bosom as a nursing father beareth the sucking child.

This was the charge that lay heavy upon his shoulders. From hence we learn, that Magistracy is a great charge and burden, and Magistrates themselves are ordained for y^e peace, prosperity, preservation, and good of the people. This is taught in many places, Prov. 11, 14, and 29, 2. The Prophet Isaiah, ch. 3, 4, 5, 6. and the Apostle Paul willeth us to pray for Princes and all that are in authority, that under them we may live a peaceable and quiet life, with all godliness & honesty, 1 Tim. 2, 1, 2.

This truth is evident, because Princes were [Reason 1] appointed for the people, and not the people for Princes. As Christ saith, The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath: so they were instituted for the people's good, and not the people for their good, or themselves to serve for their own good. This is the end of their calling, and at this they ought to aim as at a mark. Secondly, they are as breath is to the body. While the breath continueth in the body, so long the life continueth, but if the breath be stopped or to depart, the body necessarily must perish. Now as breath is to the natural body, so are the Magistrates to the politic body: while he remaineth, the Commonwealth is in peace and prosperity, in quiet and safety; if he be removed and taken away, the Commonwealth is in danger to go to ruin and destruction, The people shall be oppressed everyone by another, and everyone by his neighbor, the child shall behave himself proudly against the ancient, and the base against the honorable. And the Prophet calleth Josiah y^e breath of their nostrils. Thirdly, the titles given unto them do fully teach thus much. They are as fathers, that must lay up for their children, not the children for their fathers. They are the fathers of the Country, of the Commonwealth, of their Subjects. Hence it is, that the Lord comprehendeth all superiors under the name of fathers in the law, Exo. 20, 12. 2 Kin. 5, 12. The Prophet prophesieth, that Kings should be nursing fathers, & Queens be nursing mothers to the Church in times of the Gospel, Isaiah 49, 23. The Nurse is appointed for the good of the sucking child, to keep it in health and strength, as Moses speaketh in this place. Is not this a great charge to look to the being and well being of a child? Again, they are called Shepherds. This also is a great charge to watch day and night for the good of the flock, that the sheep do not wander and go astray, and that the wolf come not among them to make havoc of them. So also are Princes shepherds, Es. 44, 28. Numb. 27, 17. Lastly, they are as Shields to protect and defend them from many blows y^t otherwise are like to light upon thē, as Hos. 4, 18. They may be called the covering of our eyes, as the husband is said to be to the wife, Gen. 20, 16, to keep us from many dangers that threaten us. Fourthly, they are God's Lieutenants and Deputies, and therefore they have his own name commmunicated unto them, Psal. 82.6. They sit in his place to do justice and judgment, and to him they must give an account. Without them the subjects are subject to all manner of miseries, as we see in the end of the Judges, Every man did that which seemed good in his own eyes, when there was no King in Israel.

This teacheth us what we are to judge and [Use 1] esteem of the popish religiō, grounded merely upon policy to maintain themselves, howbeit it cannot stand with the policy of any oter state to come under that yoke, neither with the safety of Princes to stoop down their necks to that antichristian government For they are the greatest enemies that a State or Commonwealth can have, worse then the Anabaptists themselves, and holding more dangerous opinions: what said I, hold opinions? nay execute pestilent practices against Princes, & seek the utter subversion of states and kingdoms, if they will not worship the beast, and bear his mark in their forehead. They do not only like Corah resist y^e government of Magistrates, but by their treasonable practices and devilish devises labor to suppress and supplant them, to take away their lives and crowns from them, and to discharge their subjects of allegiance unto them. Are not they enemies that pull away the foundation of an house? Yes doubtless, for then the whole building must of necessity fall down. For Magistrates are as the head and the heart are to the natural body; if they be whole and sound, all the other members are in better safety; and consequently if they perish, the whole body must perish also, Isaiah 9, 14, 15.

Secondly, we must be truly thankful to God, seeing they are such a blessing, and undergo [Use 2] so great a charge for us. For notwithstanding the rage & fury, the fetches & subtleties of all our enemies, enemies as well to our temporal state, as to our spiritual standing, the King of Kings hath preserved our King and kingdom in peace & safety, he hath kept head and heart, the breath & being in the body, we have a Father to provide for us, we have a Nurse to bear us, we have a Shepherd to feed us, we have a Shield to protect us, whiles our adversaries gnash their teeth and gnaw their tongues for anger, & are ready to burst for envy and despite at our happiness. We are happy and blessed above many other Nations. We hear the sound of the trumpet in peace and safety, we use it as an instrument of joy & gladness, it soundeth not the alarm to the battle, we have no buckling on of armor, no crying, nor complaining, nor invasion. We sit under our vines & arbours, we walk in our fields & gardens, and a dog lifteth not up his tongue against us. We have beat our arming swords into plowshares, & our spears, which we did shake against our enemies, into pruning hooks, we have forgotten the use, & almost the knowledge of war. This is the benefit of a good & godly Magistracy: this should provoke us to take the cup of salvation, and to praise the Lord for his goodness to us.

We enjoy our King, our Judges, our Magistrates, our peace, our religion, our meetings and assemblies. O how gracious is God unto us, that hath not delivered us as a prey into the hands of malicious enemies, who grin and grind their teeth, thus to see us flourish in peace, against all their devices and endeavors?

Thirdly, seeing Magistrates have so great [Use 3] a charge, and bring so necessary a blessing, it is our duty to perform our duties unto them. We must yield them subjection, fear, honor, prayer, tribute, and obedience, as the Apostle urgeth these particulars, Ro. 13, 1, 2. 6, 7. and it condemneth to the pit of hell, all such as resist them, and rise up against them. Should the son rebel against the Father, as Absalom did? Let him then fear the end of Absalom, to be hanged in the tree. Should the child strive against his Nurse that beareth him? or the sheep set themselves against the shepherd that feedeth them? Woe then to such as will discharge themselves of the duty they owe to such as have the charge over thē, and will plot against their life of whom they receive life, and goods, and peace, and safety, and all.

[Use 4] Fourthly, it is the duty of all Magistrates, and those that are in authority, to consider what they have to do; their names and titles must teach them what their office is, not to magnify themselves, not to think themselves absolute, not to set themselves against God, not to tyrannize over his people, not to maintain themselves in ease and idleness, in vanity and superfluity, not to follow after their own pleasures, but to do justice to all, without respect of person, to protect everyone from wrong, to maintain public peace and tranquility, but especially to further God's true religion. They must have public minds, and not seek their own good only or principally. It is the ruin of an estate, when public persons have private minds, regarding only to serve themselves, and to procure their own good. These are no common-wealths men, but private wealths men. The Apostles were called to be fishers of men, and Princes are called to be shepherds of men, to feed reasonable sheep; and this is their honor, if they be found faithful, that it may be said of them as it is of David, He fed them according to the integrity of his heart-and guided them by the skilfulnesse of his hands, Psal. 78.72.

[Verses 16, 18, 20. And the Lord said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the Elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the Elders of the people, &c.] In these words we have the answer to Moses complaint. And as the complaint stood of two distinct parts, so doth the answer of the same points. Touching the greatness of the charge and burden whereof Moses complaineth, God commandeth him to gather together unto him seauenty men of the Elders of Israel, to whom he would communicate of the same spirit that Moses had, howbeit without any diminution of his gifts, although many suppose that the Lord did punish him for his murmuring with the lessning of his gifts: as it is true, he doth sometimes punish in that manner, sometimes by lessening, and sometimes by taking away what he had formerly bestowed, Zach. 11, 17. Mat. 25, 27. But we do not read or find that he dealt so with Moses, or that he was less fit for government then he was before: rather his gifts were derived to others, as one candle lighteth another, and yet the light is not diminished. And what benefit or profit had it been to Moses to have these joined, if his gifts had been impaired?

In this place we have the institution and erecting of a new Court among the Jews called the Sanhedrim. This honorable Senate at the first founding of it, consisted indifferently of men taken out of all the Tribes, which had some of the Levites to assist them. This court was seated and kept at Jerusalem, and might handle weightier causes, & inflict more grievous then the set Courts and Tribunals of justice appointed, and assembled, and observed in the gates of every City; and to this they might appeal from those inferior Consistories. For such as were instituted thorough the advice and counsel of Jethro, Exod 18, 21. were not necessary to be of this number of seventy; they had the hearing and determining of the least causes, and besides they received not an extraordinary spirit, neither was it needful for that calling. This Council of the Sanhedrim remained after the captivity, and continued unto the days of Herod, who made havoc of many of them, and put most of them to death. Howbeit, some of them remained even to the desolation of the Temple and of the City by the Romans: and of this Christ speaketh, Matth. 5, 20. and 18.17. which the best interpreters understand of the 70. Elders of the great Consistory or judgment place in Jerusalem. But when King Agrippa was once driven out of Jerusalem by a rakelly rout of seditious cutters and cut-throats, then were the Sanhedrim deposed at their will, when there was none to control them; and other base pesants were set up in their room, who had no laws to restrain them, no Magistrates to punish them, no authority to bridle them. Then was the Priest-hoode made a mockerie: then was Jerusalem without a guide, as an house without a Ruler, or a ship without a Pylot. There was none to manage the state aright, but all government was turned into confusion and disorder.

The second complaint of Moses was touching the feeding of so great a multitude, w^c God answereth verse 18, 19. by a promise and by a threatening. He promiseth unto them store of flesh, and to fit them and fill them, not for a day, or two days, &c. but even a whole month. And he that showeth he could do this, showeth also y^t he could do more, if that had been too little: howbeit they should in the end take little delight & pleasure in their delicates after which their souls so earnestly lusted, because he threateneth that in the midst of their abundance it should come out of their nostrils, and be utterly loathed of them.

This answer of God ministereth many instructions. First, that God layeth no more upon any, then he will enable them to bear; & if they think it be too heavy, he will ease them of it. He is not like to Pharaoh, that willed more to be laid upon the people then they could compass, complaining that they were too idle, Exod. 5, 17, 18. Neither is he like to Rehoboam, that refused to make the grievous service of his father and his heavy yoke lighter, but answered the men of Israel roughly, that he would add to their yoke; and if his father chastened them with whips, he would chastise them with Scorpions, 1 King. 12, 11. but God is ready to take away part of the burden, and divide it among others that it might be borne equally upon all their shoulders. Secondly, he furnisheth with gifts all such as he sendeth and calleth, he employeth none in any function, but such as he furnisheth for that purpose. Thirdly, we see that God is able to feed all his creatures, though they be never so many, yea though we see no means which way he can do it, for he is not tied unto them, but worketh freely sometimes with them, and sometimes without them. Fourthly▪ we learn that all gifts proceed from one and the same Spirit, 1 Cor. 12, 4. John 14, 16. Fifthly, we see in the lusting of these men, that God heareth the prayers of wicked men, and oftentimes granteth them, howbeit not in mercy, but in wrath and judgment, 1 Sam. 8, 5. & maketh their own prayers and desires to be their punishment, and to turn to their destruction: thereby to teach us to be careful what to ask, even such things as are agreeable to his will, not such things as we may spend upon our own lusts. But the point which I do purpose most to insist upon, is the threatening of God, y^t the flesh should do them no good, but come out at their nostrils, which judgment he also accomplished, verse 33. For while the flesh was yet in their teeth, before it was chewed, the wrath of the Lord was kindled against them, and he smote them with a very great plague. The doctrine from hence is this, that the Lord doth punish the sons of men, when as in abundance of meat and drink they have no benefit or comfort by them. He punisheth as well in the midst of store and plenty, as he doth with want and scarcity. This he doth many ways, sometimes he withdraweth strength from the creatures, that they cannot nourish, Hag. 1, 9, 6. Sometimes he taketh away men's appetites, and giveth no strength to digest them, or to swallow them: as in this place, though they had meat in their mouths, yet he sent leanness into their souls, and brought his wrath upon the unworthy receivers thereof, Psa. 78, 30, 31. So Esa. 3, 1. & 9, 20. Deut. 28, •7. Mic. 6, 14. Isaiah 28, 7, 8.

It is as great a judgment and punishment [Reason 1] of God, to take away the blessing from his creatures, as to deprive us of the Creatures themselves. To be without meat, without drink, without raiment, without necessaries for this life, is a sore plague, and one of the greatest judgments that God inflicteth in this life. Now certainly it must needs be as great a judgment not to have benefit and comfort by them when we have them. It is all one not to have them, and not to be norished by them. Had not these Israelites been as good be without these Quails, as to have them & not be able to swallow them? Night is as comfortable to a blind man as the day, it is all one to him, and why? because the sight of the eyes is taken from him. Silence is as profitable to the deaf man as the uttering of a voice, let the speech be never so excellent, because he cannot hear. So we may say that the stones are as good for the nourishment of men as bread or flesh, when God with-draweth his blessing from them. It is as great a judgment to want the stand of bread, as bread it self.

Secondly, it is a great punishment, because [Reason 2] to eat and not to be nourished, doth not only decay life and bring an end of our days, but we sustain a more miserable death, then if we died by fire, or water, or sword, or pestilence. This is a languishing and consuming of us by little and little, and a pining of the flesh away as it were by piece-meal.

Acknowledge that it is a great punishment [Use 1] and judgment upon unlawful desires, lusts, and pleasures: they have for the most part loathing following and accompanying the same: yea, many times the after-loathing is far greater then the delight taken before. Vnlawfull pleasure lasteth not long, and the companion following it at the heels is pain, Prov. 14, 12, 13. and 20, 17. and 5, 3, 4. and 23, 31, 32. 2. Sam 13, 14, 15. The forbidden fruit was delightful to the eye, and pleasant to the taste, but it did sting in the end as a Serpent, and did bite as a Cockatrice. The rejoicing of the wicked is short, Job 20, 4, 5. Like the noise of thorns under a pot, Eccl, 7, 8. The pleasures of sin are but for a short season, Heb. 11.25. Ier. 2, 19. Prov. 7.23. The guilt of sin remaineth behind after the committing of it, and bindeth him to judgment that doth commit it.

Secondly, whensoever this state befalleth [Use 2] us, know we that it is God's hand. We do not for the most part lift up our eyes to God when it cometh, but rather impute it to our own weakness and infirmity, without ascending any higher. Many have great abundance of blessings from God, yet they are not satisfied, they never think they have enough. This is a great judgment of God, this is the curse of God upon the covetous man.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it teacheth that howsoever we have plenty and abundance, yet take heed we do not flatter our selves, for we may meet with a curse not inferior to the curse of those that are in poverty and extreme necessity, which falleth out when the Lord denieth strength to the creature, or to us to receive the same. We have a common proverb among us, that misseth not much of the truth; Men say, the poor may eat when he hath meat, and the rich when he hath a stomach. Whereby we mean, that an appetite is as necessary as our meat. Hence it is that the rich which have plenty, and know not what poverty meaneth, are as much indebted unto God, & bound to be thankful unto him for their daily bread, when he giveth them strength to receive it, and addeth a further blessing unto it when it is received, as the poor man, as the poorest man of all is. For though they have abundance, yet God can curse it: if he blow on it, he can turn away the blessing, and quickly bring it to pass that they shall have no comfort by it, and therefore Christ saith, Lu. 12, 15. A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of y^e things which he possesseth. This serveth to admonish rich men to consider what need they have of the blessing of God upon the store & provision which they have. For as it is the curse of God upon covetous rich men, that they cannot be satisfied with riches, so is it upon those which have meat and drink, and cannot be satisfied nor have enough, nor be fed and nourished by them.

[Use 4] Lastly, it is a duty required of us, if we desire to enjoy the blessings of God as blessings, to labor to use the creatures of God in a godly and religious manner. We must partake of them not only soberly and moderately, to strengthen nature, and not to oppress it, but there is more required in the use of God's blessings. We must carry our selves religiously even in eating and drinking. Many of us confine Religion to the church, and think we have nothing to do with it but while we are there, and that it is unseasonable to meddle with it at home. But we must show our selves religious in all our works, even in taking our ordinary meats, 1 Cor. 10, 31. otherwise what do we more then brute beasts? They feed themselves full as well as we. It is our duty to give the Lord thanks for them, and so they are sanctified unto us. For this cause GOD commanded the Israelites in this place to sanctify themselves against tomorrow, and then they should eat. There are many that would be accounted faithful men, and to have more religion in them then many of their fellows, yet have they not learned so much as to give God thanks for their meats, nor to praise his name at their tables. There is no Religion, no knowledge, no faith in these persons: neither do they consider that God may deal with them in his justice, as he did with these evil men in this place: while the meat was yet in their mouths, and holden between their teeth, the wrath of God fell upon them, & a grievous plague brake in among them. And this point we may raise a little higher, and reason from the less unto the greater▪ arising as it were from step to step. For, if the ordinary receiving of our corporal food ought to be done religiously, how much more is it required of us when we come to the eating of the spiritual meat, and to the drinking of the spiritual drink of our souls, I mean to the Table of the Lord, to come worthily and reverently: which is the food of our souls? And if the wrath of GOD came upon these wicked persons, while the bodily food was yet in their mouths, we have just cause to fear lest his judgments come upon us much rather while we have the bread of the Lord in our mouths, or hold the cup of the Lord in our hands: as also it fell out among the Corinthians▪ who for their unworthy and irreverent coming to this heavenly Supper were taken away, as 1 Cor. 11, 30. And for this cause are many weak and sickly amongst you, and many sleep. And Judas that came with a wicked and profane heart to the Passover, did eat judgment unto himself, for immediately Satan entered into him, John 13, 27. and brought him to destruction of soul and body, Math. 27, 5. Acts 1, 18.

But to return to the point we have in hand concerning our bodily food, we must be careful to eat and drink evermore as it were before the Lord, and consider that he sitteth as a guest with us, and therefore may justly make every bit to be our bane, if thus we presume to abuse his creatures to our lusts. Oh, that such as are beastly drunkards, worse thē brute beasts, would consider this, & learn this lesson, and be ashamed of the thing itself as well as of the title, that is, of the sin of drunkenness, as well as to be accounted a drunkard. But howsoever they are through custom and continuance in this sin grown impudent and shameless, and every sober-minded man may point at them as they go, or rather as they stumble in the streets, yet you shall sildom or never have any of them confess that they are drunken; and when they cannot utter a word of soberness, yet they will defend and maintain that they are sober. But some will say, How shall we know a drunkard? it is a very hard matter to say who is drunk. I answer, no harder then to a know a mad man, or to know and prove thyself to be sober. The sober man that can manifest himself to be sober by the inseparable properties and true effects of soberness, when he seeth the quite contrary in another, may safely conclude that he is drunken. The Scripture doth not only describe the sin, but showeth us the way to know it. How doth the Physician know a man's disease but by the signs? and by the effects of the diseased? The signs and effects of drunkenness are when the head is inflamed & intoxicated, Isaiah 5, 11. the rolling of y^e tongue, the faltring and doubling of the speech, the redness of the eyes, the want of government of the hands, Prov. 23, 29, 30. Such as are ready to fight and quarrel, such as are mighty to fight combats of drinking; that show their strength & valor that way, which glory that they can lay their fellows under the Table, Isaiah 5, 22. such as reel and stagger as they go, though they be able (after a sort) to stand that they do not fall, yet they go reeling and staggering in the streets, Psal. 107, 27. Esa. 29, 9. They spew and vomit through excess, Ier. 25, 27. Esa. 19, 14. & 28, 8. and they stink of drink that their very breath and belching is noisome to those that are near them, Hos. 4, 18. as many do understand the words of the Prophet. But to leave these, I would also admonish others, that too often frequent places of drinking, to say no worse of them, & wish them to consider, that albeit they be not grossly drunk, yet God restraineth all superfluity and excess, which the Apostle calleth drinkings or reuellings. Every man should walk without offense, and take heed he minister not occasion of stumbling to any through his example.

[Verse 21, 22, 23. And Moses said, The people among whom I am are six hundred thousand footmen, &c.] Here beginneth the second part of the communication: wherein, first Moses replieth against God, and will not rest in his answer, which was sufficient to have put him to silence, and made him say with Job, Chap. 40, 4, 5. Behold I am vile, what shall I answer thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth. Once have I spoken, but I will not answer: yea twice, but I will proceed no further; and chap, 42, 6. I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes. But Moses goeth forward, & objecteth the hardness and impossibility to effect this promise of finding such store of flesh, in regard of the multitude of the infantry of the host, in regard of the long continuance of time that they should feed thereon, and in regard of the barrenness of the place, forasmuch as they were in the Wilderness and the Desert of Arabia, which was only stored with wants, and fruitful in nothing but in unfruitfulness. This distrust doth God bear withal, and as it were wink at in this place: but when he was not instructed and bettered by God's patience and longsuffering, it is afterwards punished, chapt. 20. Thus much of the complaint of Moses, both touching his disability to govern, & his insufficiency to feed them.

Secondly, God answereth to this objection, verse 23▪ that he would make good his own promise, and all the words of his mouth should be found true, notwithstanding y^e want of means, and the abundance of mouths that were to be filled with flesh.

The people are six hundred thousand footmen, &c. Shall the flocks and the herds, &c? Or shall all the fish of the sea be gathered together, &c? Here is the distrust of Moses, though some labor to discharge him of it, and to free him from it, as if he had desired only to know the means that God would use, according as the Virgin Mary desireth to be farther informed of the Angel, Luke 1, 34 But this is disproved by the answer of God, who setteth down his own power, not the means how he would effect it. Wherefore I think the learned Junius in this place is deceived: and we need not to labor too curiously to clear the faithful of the remnants of sin & other infirmities, forasmuch as he and other the best of God's servants have their failings in faith and obedience, as we see in the examples of Abraham, Lot, Noah, Isaac, Jacob, David, Peter, Thomas, Zechariah, and which of them not? 2 Chron. 15, 17, & 16, 12 Rom. 7 17, 18, 19. because we know in part, and we prophesy in part; we are yet in our journey, and walk in our way, and run in a race, we are not yet attained to our iourneies end, we have not yet obtained the crown. Again, we proceed all from an unclean fountain, Job 14, 4. There is a combat remaining in us between the flesh and the Spirit, Rom. 7, 23. Gal. 5.17. and these are contrary the one to the other, and can never be reconciled.

The Uses hereof are, first to show that we cannot keep the Law, but in many things we [Use 1] sin all. Rom. 3, 22, 23. and therefore are subject to condemnation. The Church of Rome teacheth that a man may keep the Law: but they are ignorant of the law, and of the justice of God, of sin, and of themselves. For may they compare with the faithful before named?

2 Secondly, we do all need the benefit of Christ's blood, 1 John. 1, 7, 8. and are justified by him, Rom. 3, 24. but if we could keep the law, or could be without sin, then Christ had died in vain, Gal. 2, 21.

3 Thirdly, they are deceived which hold the Virgin Mary to have been conceived without original sin, contrary to the tenor of the Scriptures, which layeth open sundry her infirmities; contrary to her own confession, who acknowledgeth her self to have needed a Savior, Luke 1, 47. For seeing she was borne after the common course of the nature of man, who shall exempt her from the corruption and stain of nature? And what need was there that Christ Jesus should be conceived by the holy ghost, if he might have a pure conception free from original sin without it? Wherefore they may as well say, that the blessed Virgin was conceived also by the holy Ghost, as affirm that she was conceived without sin, and so communicate the property and prerogative of Christ's birth to her. For if she were conceived without Original sin, her conception was miraculous, whereas the conception of Christ could be no more.

4 Lastly, let us not rashly censure others for sin, I am. 3, 24. but admonish with meekness, considering our selves, Gal. 6, 1, 2. They are most sharp and severe judges of others, that forget their own infirmities.

Moreover, mark here the ground of Moses his unbelief, it is drawn from the course of natural reason, and from the consideration of the want of ordinary means. Observe from hence, that natural reason and carnal Wisdom are oftentimes enemies unto faith. The yielding too much to our own thoughts, & the beholding of things with an eye of flesh, do often make even the faithful doubt of God's promises. We see this in Sarah, Gen. 18 12. in Nicodemus John 3, 4. in Zachariah, Lu. 1, 20. Math. 16, 23. 1 Cor. 1, 23. Thus we are prone evermore to trust unto human wisdom.

For the things of God are oftentimes foolishness unto those that think themselves wiser then God, 1 Cor. 2, 14. Secondly, the carnal reason that remaineth in the regenerate, is not subject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be, Rom. 8, 7. for no man is wholly regenerate, the best consist of two men, for they are partly the old man, and partly the new man, they are partly regenerate, and in part they remain unregenerate.

The Uses. Therefore we must not counsel with flesh and blood in the matters of God & [Use 1] in the mysteries of faith, Rom. 4, 19, 20. Gal. 1, 16. Prov. 3, 5. Let us consult with the Scriptures, and make the word of God our Counsellors, and learn to submit all that is in us to the wisdom of God. The eye is not able to look upon the brightness of the Sun, so the eye of our reason is dazzled at the glorious things of the gospel of Christ, which things the Angels desire to look into. This is the cause that maketh many shrink back, when they see the greatest number to walk in the broad way that leadeth to destruction, when they see the Church for the most part to consist of the poorer sort, and religion to be chiefly embraced of them, they are offended. Whē they see wicked men to prosper for the most part, they walk by reason, and not by Faith; by the light of the eye, not by the light of the Scripture. But we are, even the best of us, fools and blind in the matters of God, and we must know our selves to be fools before we can learn the wisdom of God and submit our selves unto it. Maruell not therefore if few believe and obey.

[Use 2] Secondly, the natural man cannot please God, Rom. 8, 5, 6, 7, 8. all his knowledge, reason, wisdom, and understanding, cannot make him accepted, Tit. 1, 15. He is without faith which purifieth the heart, and therefore all his works are unsavory before him. Woeful therefore is the condition of an unbeliever, whatsoever he doth is sin: in every thought, word, and deed he sinneth, waking and sleeping: he sinneth even in the actions of religion, and every work increaseth his reckoning, and addeth to the account that he is to make. And as the faithful man the longer he liveth, the more gracious and acceptable he is to God, so the unbeliever the longer he liveth, the more he addeth to the heap of his sins, and the day of his reckoning will be so much the more fearful and dreadful. Gen. 15, 16. For as the Ammorites were daily filling up the measure of their sins, and so hastening unto judgment, so is it with the unregenerate person. The sooner he dieth and is cut off, the better it is with him, for thereby his sins are fewer, and his judgment shall be easier. It is not so with the godly man. Again, the unbeliever and polluted person poisoneth and infecteth all things that he meddleth withal, he defileth the earth, the air, the heavens, the beasts, the fruits, and all creatures and persons that live with them, Leuitic. 18, 2. The land of Canaan was defiled by the inhabitants and it is said, that in the end it should spew them out, Deut. 28, 15, 16, &c. Hag. 2, 14.

Thirdly, men are unable of themselves to [Use 3] hear the word of salvation, John. 8, 43. so that to believe and practice religion is not easy; our natural disposition is as contrary to it as fire and water, Matth. 16, 17. The carnal man seeth no more in the word of God, then in the word of man, nay his natural reason will minister reason unto him to think it is foolishness, 1 Cor. 1, 21. and to persuade him that he need not to be so precise in the hearing of it, nor be so curious in keeping of the Sabbath day. Let us therefore forsake this counselor, it never speaketh good unto us, but evil; and crosseth the motions of the Spirit.

Fourthly, the preaching of the word is a [Use 4] necessary means to bring us to God, and to work in us saving faith, and sanctified obedience. Many men are by nature very wise & deep-sighted into matters of the world, and can dive to the bottom of all human knowledge: nevertheless all this is weak and insufficient to bring us to salvation, as appeareth in the example of Achitophel. He was a great politician: his answers were as the Oracles of God, 2 Sam. 16, 23. yet was not all his wisdom able to guide and conduct him unto heaven or heavenly things, but he ended his days in horror and despair, 2 Sa. 17, 23. Therefore another means was needful to bring us to the knowledge of God and of our selves, God hath left unto us his word, and would have it preached and expounded in the Church, that thereby we might be saved: as 1 Cor. 1, 20, 21. Where is the Scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not GOD made foolish the wisdom of this world? For after that in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

Lastly, we must learn to submit our wisdom [Use 5] and our willes, our understanding and counsel to the will and counsel of God, after the example of Christ, Math. 26, 42. Not my will, but thy will be done. We must crave of GOD to direct us in his will, and to teach us his ways.

[Verse 23. The Lord said unto Moses, Is the Lord's hand waxed short?] Herein we have the answer of God, setting his Almighty power against the want of all means, and as a sufficient remedy of all evils. This teacheth that all things, even above nature and reason, and how unlikely and impossible soever in the eyes of man, are possible with God, and he can easily bring them to pass, Esa. 50.1. Gen. 18.14. Zach. 8.6. Ier. 32.27. Luke 1.37. Matt. 19.29.

[Reason 1] For why? He is in heaven, and there decreeth and accomplisheth whatsoever he will, Psa. 115.3. nothing can give any impediment to his purposes.

Secondly, he made all things of nothing in the beginning, for the things which are seen were not made of things which do appear, Heb. 11.3. he also governeth them all, as a Captain doth his host or army, Exod. 15.3. He dryeth up the sea, he maketh the floods a desert, and clotheth the heavens with darkness, Isaiah 50.2.

Thirdly, this is the nature and essence of God to be almighty; take this from him, and we deny him to be God, and make him to be weak and impotent, which can no way agree to him.

[Use 1] The uses. Learn from hence not to tie God to the course of second causes: he made the Sun to stand still, Josh. 10.13. he made the fire cease to burn, that it could not hurt them that were cast into it, Dan. 3.25. Hebr, 11.33. he stopped the mouths of the Lions, Dan. 6.22. Heb. 11.33. he made the iron to swim which naturally sinketh to the bottom, 2 King. 6.6. he made the waters stand still on an heap that they flowed not, and his people passed through as on dry land, Exod. 14.22. Josh. 3.17. Psal. 114.5. It is he that worketh miracles and changeth the course of nature. This showeth the difference between God and all other creatures. True it is, they have power, but they are not able to work miracles, but by the power of him that ruleth the creatures.

[Use 2] Secondly, doubt not of any of God's promises, Rom. 4.20, 21, though they seem never so unlikely or uncertain. Let us not doubt of salvation, nor despair of the conversion of any, Rom. 11. but be assured that he is able to do it. This is a point which we ought to be well grounded in, we have use of it in all estates, and conditions of life, especially in times of affliction and adversity. Doubt not of his favor in providing for us temporal things, he hath promised that he will never leave us nor forsake us, neither in youth nor age, neither in peace nor war, neither in plenty nor poverty: he is able to make good the words of his own mouth, he is our helper and deliverer, Heb. 13.5, 6. Doubt not of his goodness toward us in spiritual things, he is entered into covenant with us, that he will write his laws in our hearts, and remember our sins and iniquities no more, Ier. 31.33, 34. This is our comfort that he whom we serve is a God Almighty.

Thirdly, we see that God can revenge himself [Use 3] of all his enemies, as also of the enemies of the Church, Deut. 32.39, 42. Let them therefore fear him, Exod. 15.16. Heb. 10.31. even him that is able to cast body and soul into hell fire, I say unto you, fear him, Matth. 10.28. they lie under his hand that can execute vengeance; there is no power in any creature to rid himself from his power.

Fourthly, be liberal to the poor, 2 Cor. 9.7.8. [Use 4] God is able to make all grace abound toward us. He is able to make us abound and to preserve us from want, and therefore relying and grounding our selves upon his power, we should make others to abound, & give cheerfully to our brethren that want, and distribute to their necessities according as we have received.

Lastly, we ought to study and endeavor to [Use] be upright in our lives and conversations, Gen. 17.1, 2. Let us humble our selves under the most mighty hand of God, 1 Pet. 5.6. and quake at his judgments, as the child under the rod, Levite. 10.3. Let us repent us of our evil ways, and serve him in newness of life.

[Verse 24, 25, 26. And Moses went out and told the people the words of the Lord, and gathered, &c. We have in these words to the end of the Chapter, the third point, to wit, the execution both of that which God had promised in mercy, and of that which he had threatened in judgment. Here then is a double affect, one touching the fellow-helpers joined in commission with Moses as his assistants. They were as it were of his privy counsel; he prepareth them, and God furnisheth them, and communicateth his Spirit unto them: which is amplified by a double event, the first is common to all the seventy elders, they prophesied; whereby God sealed up unto them the assurance of their calling, and procured them reverence among the people, as we see in Saul 1 Sam. 10.10. and in Solomon, 1 King. 3.16, 28 The second is special, two of these Elders abode behind in the tents, and came not to the Tabernacle, showing themselves (by this drawing back) unwilling, and accounted themselves unable and unworthy to undergo the charge, as Saul when he was anointed to be king, hid himself among the stuff, 1 Sam. 10.22. as also Moses and Jeremiah did, when they were called, knowing that none is sufficient for these things. Hereupon a young man (who he was, or to what end he did it, it is uncertain, because it is not expressed) made report of their prophesying to Moses, at the hearing whereof Joshua desireth him to forbid them by his authority: he was too much addicted to the person of his master, as many hearers are to their teachers, as Paul complaineth that some did hold of Apollo and some of Cephas, 1 Cor. 1.12. as in our days, many conceive too highly of Luther, otherwise a very worthy man: howbeit Moses tendering the good of all the people more then his own glory, reproveth his corrupt affection, Enuiest thou for my sake? and showeth a contrary disposition in himself, desiring that all the Lord's people could prophesy, &c.

The other effect is touching the flesh provided and supplied, which is enlarged by the instrumental cause, a wind went forth from the Lord: by the place from whence they came, from the red sea out of Africke in great plenty and abundance: by the miserable issue and event of all, While the flesh stuck between their teeth, they were stricken with a great plague, and perished in great numbers: and lastly, by a memorial of the sin and of the punishment, the name of the place was called, Kibroth Hattaauah, that is, the graves of lust, for there they buried the people that lusted.

In this division it is to be noted, that Moses going from the presence of God, relateth nothing but that which God had spoken unto him, and commanded him to speak unto thē; and therefore the Ministers are warned thereby to teach nothing but what they have received from the word, as it were from the mouth of God, Num. 6, 22, 18. 1 Corin. 11, 23. Mat. 28, 20. They are his messengers and ambassadors employed by him, Mal. 2, 7. This condemneth unwritten verities and traditions maintained in the Church of Rome, under which they would convey unto us a fardell fraught with their own inventions. But let the Ministers give attendance to the reading of the Scriptures, and consult with God by them, 1 Tim. 4, 13, 15, 16, and let all God's people shut their ears against human devises, & open their ears and hearts to receive whatsoever God shall teach them in his word, 1 Kin. 13, 15, 16, 17. &c.

[There ran a young man, and told Moses, and said, Eldad and Medad do prophesy in the campe: Joshua said, My Lord Moses, forbid them. Joshua feared lest the credit and reputation of Moses should be lessened among the people by this communication of his spirit. He had a good intent, howbeit he was jealous of his master amiss, which proceeded from the corrupt fountain of envy, for which he is reproveth. Out of which I might generally observe, that it is the duty of masters to reprove their servants, as Christ doth oftentimes his Disciples. Private men, that have only a general charge, are bound to reprove, Exod. 22. Levite. 19, 17. much more such as have the oversight of the ways of others. Again, connivance & concealing of sin is a kind of consenting unto sin: he that hideth and reproveth not his friends faults, maketh them his own; As it is in provision for the family, so it is in instruction: he that provideth not for the good of their bodies, is guilty of their death▪ if they perish through want of temporal things: so he that regardeth not the good of their souls, their blood shall be required at his hands if he suffer them to perish through want of instruction. This reproveth all such masters as encourage [Use 1] or flatter their servants in evil, or suffer them to do what they list. These cast away all care of their servants, as Cain did of his brother, saying, Am I my brothers keeper? so do these say, Am I my servants keeper? are they not old enough to look to themselves & to take charge of themselves? shall we make them always as babes & children? He is justly accounted a cruel master, that would suffer his servant to drown himself when he may hinder him and save him alive. Eli is punished for suffering his sons to run on in evil. Secondly, inferiors must suffer reproof of their governors willingly and patiently, and not break out into choler against them, like brute beasts that are unteachable and intractable, which kick & spurn at the handling of their wounds and sores, because they want reason to conceive what is good for themselves: so are these utterly ignorant what is good for their souls. The patient loveth the Physician, though his potions be bitter, and the Surgeon mortifieth corrupt members: fools do hate correction, saith the wise man, and it is oftentimes the cause of ruin of vnbrideled youth, these do in truth hate their own souls: which is a fearful kind of hatred. Lastly, let all governors & superiors have an eye ever watchful over the ways of such as are under them, that so they may encourage them in well doing, and reprove them for evil doing▪ This was in Elisha toward Gehazi running after Naaman and hunting after bribes, 2 Kin. 5, 25. Thus also did Solomon, he had an eye over Shimei, and quickly found out his departure out of Jerusalem, and wandering beyond the bounds set unto him, 1 Kings 2, 43, 44. Let everyone therefore take heed to their charges.

[My Lord Moses] Note here the title which Joshua giveth to Moses: he contenteth not himself to call him by his bare name, but before it he prefixeth a title of honor. This teacheth that inferiors must use speeches of reverence & subjection toward their superiors, as Mal. 1, 6. 1

Pet 2, 14, and 3, 6. 2 King. 13, 14. Neh. 2, 5, Ester 5, 4, 8. 2 Sa. 24, 3. 1 Sam. 25, 24, &c. Thus have God's children by the light of the word, and the ungodly by the light of nature performed this duty. And no marvel: because superiors bear God's image to inferiors, & are to them not by man's invention or usurpation, but by the ordinance of God in God's stead, as Moses made Ruler and Governor was to Aaron, Exod. 4, 16. He shall be to thee instead of a mouth, and thou shalt be to him instead of God. Again, we have the express law & commandment of God binding the consciences of all, Exod. 20, 12. Psalm. 82, 6. Lastly, they are s^t over inferiors, not for their own glory, but for their good, 1 Tim. 2, 2. Rom. 13, 4. He is the Minister of God to thee for good.

[Use 1] This principle offereth these uses; first, a reproof of those that are so far from yielding them reverence, that they reject their authority, and cast off their yoke frō their necks, they mutter at thē & their commandments, they revile them and use irreverent speeches to them and of them, both before their faces and behind their backs, which ought not to be. Hence it is, that Moses saith, Exod. 22, 28. Thou shalt not revile the God's, nor curse the Ruler of thy people. And Eccl. 10, 20. Curse not the king, no not in thy thought, and curse not the rich in thy bed-chamber, &c. And the Apostle willeth Titus to exhort servants to be obedient to their own masters, and to please them well in all things, not answering again, Tit. 2, 9. It falleth out for the most part, that they have least honor at their hands of whom they ought to have greatest. Fathers and masters have many times more honor out of their own doors, then they have within them: & of other men's servants and children, then they have of their own. For as Christ saith, A Prophet is not without honor, but in his own country, & among his own kin, and in his own house; so is it for the most part with all parents and masters, Mark, 6, 4.

Secondly, if this duty be to be performed unto men, much more must we hold it to be due unto God. If reverence and obedience be due to mortal men, who have the image of God upon them, and that darkly & obscurely, how much more may God justly challenge these duties, who hath given power and authority unto men? John 19, 11. Hence it is, that God saith by the Prophet, If I be a father, where is mine honor? and if I be a master, where is my fear? Mal. 1, 6, 8. If ye offer the lame and the sick, is it not evil? Offer it now unto thy Governor, will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person? Numb. 12, verse 14 Heb. 12, verses 9, 10.

Lastly, it belongeth to all superiors so to carry themselves, that they may procure and deserve reverence, & do not justly bring contempt upon themselves. For this cause doth Paul teach Timothy to fly youthful lusts, 2, Tim. 2, 22, and to beware that he give not occasiō to make others despise his youth: which he shall do, if he be an example to the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, and in purity.

[Forbid them.] Here we see what Joshua would have Moses do: he counselleth him to restrain them. A young man, young counsel. The Doctrine from hence is, that young men are commonly and ordinarily rash in judging others, yea more rash then elder men, & consequently more apt to judge amiss, and to give evil counsel & sentence of such things as are well done. Such were Rehoboams green heads, they gave green counsel, and such as cost him the loss of the greatest part of his kingdom, 1 Kings 12, verses 8, 13, 14. Grauity and sobriety are commended in elder men, Titus 2, 1, 2. but young men follow the vanity of their young years, Eccl. 11, 9, 10.

The reasons are plain. First, age & years [Reason 1] bring experience and ripeness of judgment, and so wisdom. Youth is as green timber, age as that which is seasoned, Job 32, 7. I said, Daies should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom.

Again, their affections being hotter and stronger, are more unconstant and vnbrideled, ready to run into extremities, as untamed heiffers not used to the yoke.

Lastly, they put far from them the evil day; they think themselves privileged by their age, and make account they have time enough hereafter to enter into better courses. They live for y^e most part, as if they had made a covenant with death and with hell, and are less careful to be kept and guided within the compass of God's laws. Forasmuch as sentence is not executed speedily against an evil work, their hearts are fully set in them to do evil.

The uses. First, this teacheth us not to rest [Use 1] in the judgment, nor to follow the counsel of young men, except they have old men's gifts and graces in them. For touching gifts, it is true which Elihu testifieth, Job 32, 9. Great men are not always wise, neither do the aged understand judgment. Old men may be young in gifts, and young men may be old in gifts. Secondly, let young men suffer their elders to speak before them, especially in censuring things that are strange. It is a point of wisdom for all, especially for young men to suspect their own judgment and sentence concerning others, their persons, their gifts, and their actions. Thirdly, it reproveth those that set up in the Church, & promote to the office of teaching, such as are young in years and gifts, and not yet seasoned to build up others, but are light, wanton, rash, not grave, discreet, and sober. Add unto these, such as advance those that are planted newly, converted to the truth of the Gospel, before there be sufficient trial made of the soundness of their religion, and the sincerity of their conversation. Paul teacheth Timothy, that the Minister must not be a nouice, or one newly come to the faith, 1 Tim. 3, 6. lest being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil. It is a fault among us, that we many times give too easy access to the Pulpit, to such as bear themselves as converts among us, I mean such as have been fugitiues and forsaken our Church, and return home again oftentimes worse then they went out, and live scandalously to the dishonor of God, and the offense of many. Such ought to be thoroughly tried and proved, let them live in the place of common Christians, before they be trusted with the place of Captains: and let them thereby purchase to themselves a good degree to farther promotion.

Lastly, seeing rashness and vnadusednesse are specially incident to youth, let them learn to season their years with the word of God, let them make it their meditation, whereby they may repress such hot and hasty & headstrong passions. The Prophet saith, Psal. 119, 9. Wherewithall shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto, according to thy word.

And Moses said unto him, Enuiest thou for my sake? In these words Moses openeth and discovereth the particular sin wherewith Joshua was infected. We learn hereby in this reproof, that all God's people must beware of envy, I am. 4, 5. It is an affection compounded of sorrow and malice. For such persons are malicious, always repining and grudging at the gifts of God bestowed upon others, and as it were look asquint at them, as Gen. 26, 12, 13, 14, 27, and 30, 1, and 31, 1. Mark. 9, 38. John 3, 26, 27.

First, because it is a fruit of the flesh, Gal. [Reason 1] 5, 21. as carnal grief and carnal hatred are, of which it is compounded: for it maketh mē repine and grieve at the blessings and prosperity of others, and that which is worst of all, to hate the persons that have those gifts, and in the end the good things themselves that are in the persons for the persons sake. This appeareth in the Pharisees, Math. 27, 18. when they saw that Christ was in more account among the people, and did exceed them in all his doctrine and miracles, they repined and grudged at him. It grieved them that any should be equal unto them, much more go beyond them.

Secondly, God bestoweth his gifts where he will, and to whom he will, & in what measure he will, Math. 20, 15.

Thirdly, it procureth the wrath of God, and is never left without punishment, as appeareth in the next chapter, where Miriam the sister of Moses is stricken with the leprosy, because she envied the gifts of Moses, God showing thereby how greatly he detesteth this sin.

Fourthly, whatsoever is bestowed upon any member, is bestowed upon the whole body, 1 Cor. 12. Whatsoever is given to any part is given for the benefit of the whole Church, why then should we envy any, seeing we have our part and portion in it?

Fifthly, it is a devilish vice, it is worse then fleshly, and yet if it were no more, it were sufficient to make us to detest it: howbeit it savoreth not only of the flesh, but of the devil: and it transformeth us into the image of Satan, who envied the happiness of our first parents in the garden, Gen. 3, 5. So Cain was of that evil one, 1 John. 3, 12. and envied his brother, because God accepted him and his sacrifice, Gen. 4.5.

Sixthly, it crosseth and controlleth the wisdom of God in the distribution of his gifts & graces, as if God had done thē wrong, and been too good to others: we can challenge nothing as due to our selves, but whatsoever we have, we have it freely: howbeit the envious like not his administration, but dislike that others should enjoy that which they want.

Lastly, it is against the rule of charity, which rejoiceth at the good of others, 1 Cor. •3, and is ready to bestow and communicate good things where is want of them. So then where envy is, there charity is not: and where charity is, there envy is not.

This teacheth us, that all are subject to this [Use 1] evil, even they that are godly, and in a great measure sanctified, are apt to envy at others excelling in the graces of God. And doubtless this is one cause oftentimes of contentions among the faithful, 1 Corin. 1, 12. much more therefore the unreformed and unsanctified are ready to envy them that go before them. Let us not have the faith of GOD in respect of persons, I am. 2, 1. & let us beware of having men in admiration for sinister respects. The best things are subject to be abused through our corruption.

Secondly, it serveth to reprove many [Use 2] malicious persons: some envy others temporal blessings; others (that are worse) envy them the grace of God. If they have more knowledge than themselves, they cannot abide them, but speak all manner of evil against them. These men are possessed, nay poisoned with malice, ambition, pride, arrogancy, and dissimulation: they are utterly destitute of charity, or desire of reconciliation to their brethren. Hence it is, that Solomon opposeth envy and the fear of God, as things that cannot possibly stand together, Prov. 23, 17. and in another place, a sound heart and envy, Pro. 14, 30. If such see another have more wealth and riches than themselves, they so vex & torment themselves, that the things w^c they have, do them no good. Envy is a very torment to the envious, who envying at others, do plague and punish themselves. For as envy hurteth not him at all that is envied, so the envious man carrieth about within his own bosom, an inward and home-bred tormenter that never suffereth him to be quiet. Such a monster is spite & envy, that if he see, or hear, or think another to have more or as much, to go beyond him or be equal unto him; it is a quotidian, nay, a continual fever without any intermission, it paineth him day and night. Psalm. 112, 9, 10.

Thirdly, let us use all holy and sanctified means to prevent it, or to purge it away, if it [Use 3] have seized upon us. Let us labor for Christian charity, that so we may rid our hearts of the corrupt weeds of fretting and malice against our brethren, and decke our selves with lowliness of mind, that we may banish pride and self love, Phil. 2, 3. Store of charity and humility tempered together, will make a notable defense & preservative against this malady.

Secondly, be well contented with God's holy administration of temporal blessings, spiritual, & eternal, y^t we do not any way charge him with folly, who is wisdom it self; or with partiality, who respecteth no man's person.

Thirdly, to cast our eyes upon the troubles, sorrows, miseries, and calamities of our brethren which they sustain and suffer, as well as upon the gifts, blessings, comforts, & prosperity which they enjoy, that so the consideration of the one, may stay & uphold us from grudging at the sight of the other. But this is our fault, we look upon their good, but will not behold their evil: which if we did, we should find cause many times rather to pity them than to envy them.

Fourthly, to mark that the gifts of others are for our benefit, as the good of one member of the body serveth for the use of another; and therefore we are enemies to our own good and welfare, when we repine at that which others have.

Fifthly, to pray to God for the obtaining of his gifts where we see them wanting; and for increase of them where they are obtained, and for the continuance of them where they are increased.

Lastly, it is our duty to love the graces of God wheresoever we see them, yea even in our enemies. These are approved remedies to keep us from envy.

[Would God that all the Lord's people were Prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them.] See here the godliness and humility of Moses; he is so far from envying this gift of these two servants of God, that he reproveth Joshua, and wisheth from his heart, that all the Church of God had y^e same gift which he had, from the least to the greatest. As if he should say, I am so far from envying them in having these graces, though they came not with the others, (seeing God confirmeth even their calling also as well as the rest,) y^t I could rather wish if it pleased God, that all in the host could prophesy, and were endued with mine and their graces.

If any object, that this may seem to give way for unwarrantable wishes, frivolous desires, and vain prayers not grounded upon any promise: I answer, it doth not, for he only testifieth his holy desire of the Churches good; as when we pray that God would keep us this day from all sin. It is against the word of God to hold that we can be without sin, but it is not against it, to testify our desire to be free from it; for it is that which we ought all to aim at, and to endeavor that we may attain unto. Neither doeth this prayer give scope to the wishes of the sottish multitude, that pray for their friends when they are dead, who never prayed for them when they were alive, saying, God have mercy on their souls, or God rest their souls; whereby the Name of God is taken in vain. For they have received their judgment according to their works, and are already either in rest or in torment, frō which they cannot return. We learn from hence that the godly do heartily desire the good and growth, the profit and increase of the whole Church. It is the duty of all faithful persons, to desire that all true Christians may excel in graces, even to be equal or above themselves, how eminent and excellent soever their gifts & places be. This appeareth in John the Baptist, John 3, 29, 30. Now is my joy full; he must increase, but I must decrease. The Apostle desireth, that the Thessalonians, who were grown greatly in grace, might yet grow more and more, 1 Thess. 4, 1. Rom. 1, 11. This desire of the prosperity and flourishing estate of the Church, made Paul to move Barnabas to go again and visit the brethren in every City, where they had preached and planted the Gospel of Christ, Acts 15, 36. Rom. 9, 3. Gal. 6, 16. Math. 11, 25. John 17, 24. 2 Cor. 13, 9. As thē Joab sent out to number all the tribes of Israel, said unto the King, The Lord thy God add unto the people (how many soever they be) an hundred fold, and that the eyes of my Lord the King may see it: so ought we in seeking the increase of the true Israel of God much rather say, The Lord add unto the church such as shall be saved, how many soever they seem already to be, thousand thousands, and that our eyes may see the spiritual growth of them.

For as the glory of God ought to be most [Reason 1] precious unto us, so hereby he is most glorified, whē many lights shine before men, Mat. 5, 16, John 15, 8.

Secondly, superiors in gifts are fathers, and have that title given unto them, as well as superiors by office and calling, and therefore as fathers rejoyce to see their children excelling themselves or others in gifts, as Solomon did exceed David, so ought it to be in the spiritual growth of the Church; such as are fathers in respect of gifts, should rejoyce and be glad when they behold their inferiors to come forward to a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ, Eph. 4, 13.

Thirdly, they heartily love one another, therefore they cannot but desire their greatest welfare and excelling in all graces to the greatest edification of other; not envying, but rejoicing in their increasing more and more: & contrariwise sorrowing at their dwarfish estate, ever learning, yet still needing to be taught the first principles of religion, as not able to bear strong meat, Heb. 5, 12, 13.14.

From hence we have a way left us to examine [Use] our selves and to judge our selves, whether we belong unto God and be truly sanctified, or not: whether we be true parts of the true church or not, even by this desire of the good of the churches of God. Hereby we may discern and try what is in us: by this note we may prove our selves, truly to seek God's glory with sincere harts, to wit, when we can rejoice in the excelling of other men's gifts above our own, whether they be in the same or other callings with us, wishing our selves inferior to all others, and everyone to excel us in gifts to the edification of the Church & God's glory, in the setting up and establishing of the kingdom of Christ. Let us not account it a shame to see a sheep go before his Shepherd, or the son to go beyond the father, or the wife her husband, or the servant his master: if the inferiors have greater & better gifts then their superiors, bless God for it, and pray God yet more to multiply their graces. There are many Pastors that are afraid, lest their people by too often teaching, and by going and growing forward by reading and conference, should be able to teach them their duty, or else control their teaching of others. This is as unnatural, as if a father should be grieved to see his child prosper & to grow in stature. We must desire the conversion of those that be out of the Church, therefore much more the blessing of God to be upon the Church in a more plentiful measure, Acts 26, 29, and 7, 60. He that is desirous of the good of such as are not of the family, will be more careful of those that are of the family. Every part and member of the body, desireth and procureth the good of the other parts: so ought it to be in the mystical body, whereof Christ Jesus is the head, who laid down his life for the Church, and shed his precious blood for the ransom of it, Acts 20, 28. It will be a great comfort to us to find this affection and desire in our hearts, to long after the common good of the Church.

[Use 2] Secondly, it condemneth the Church of Rome, that hinder the growth and increase of, it, deteining the Scriptures from the people, & keeping them in blindness and ignorance, whereas the Lord would have his word communicated unto all. When a Prince hath published statutes for the government of the Commonwealth, they are open for all to read them: so is it with God, after he caused the word to be written, he set them forth for all, commanding all to know them from the least to the greatest, from the lowest to the highest. On the other side, the Papists extol their ignorance, and bar the people from the means of growing.

Again, it reproveth those that seek their own good and glory, and care not how it goeth with others, whereas all the study & desire of Moses was, evermore to procure the good of Israel: he seemed utterly to forget himself, and regarded not what became of him, so the Church might prosper and flourish, Exod. 32, •2. So was it with Christ, he sought not his own glory, but his that sent him; and asketh, how they can believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only? Such were Joseph's brethren, hearing his dream of their sheaves bowing down and making obeisance to his sheaf, Gen. 37, verse 7. and of the Sun and the Moon, and the eleven stars which made obeisance to him, ver. 9. Such also were David's brethren, who hearing him to enquire what should be done to the man that killeth the Philistim, and taketh away the reproach from Israel, said, Why camest thou down hither? and with whom hast thou left those few sheep in the wilderness? I know thy pride and the haughtiness of thy hear^e, for thou art come down to see the battle, 1 Sam. 17, 28. These were afraid, he would rise too fast and outstrippe them, and therefore envied him. So is it with false Teachers, who in the pride of their hearts, did seek themselves above God's glory, and the setting up of Christ's kingdom. The false teachers disgraced the Apostles, and preached eniously to add to their sorrows, Phil. 1, 15, 16. Wherefore, let no man envy the good gifts of others.

Thirdly, let the Pastors of the Church be [Use 3] careful of teaching the people committed to their charge, and to polish them as hewn stones for the spiritual building of the spiritual Temple, and diligently to square them out, that so the body of Christ which is the Church, may grow up to a perfect man. We cannot in truth desire the growth of y^e church, if we be not ready to feed it with the word of God? Can the mother be said to be willing to see the growth of her child, when she never feedeth it? No, it is plain, she seeketh rather to starve it? Even so is it with the Ministers, such as withhold the food of life from them do starve them, and are guilty of their blood.

Lastly, all are bound to procure the good [Use 4] of the Church, and to pray to God for the flourishing and happiness of it, Psal. 122, 6, and 51, 18. We see how far men are carried in natural affection toward their children whom they have bestowed in marriage, to desire that they might increase to many generations. This is the marriage blessing, Gen. 24, verse 60. They blessed Rebecca and said unto her, Thou art our Sister, be thou the mother of thousands of millions, and let thy seed possess the gate of those that hate him. How much more ought our earnest prayer and desire be, that the Israel of God may flourish and multiply, and have the dominion and upper hand over those that hate them? We must desire that the Church may be a fruitful mother of many children, like Rahel and Leah, which two did build the house of Israel, Ruth chapt. 4. verse 11. We must be all helpers to help to build the Church by our prayers, by our exhortations, by our life and example. Let us rejoyce when we see it increase, and mourn when we see it decrease.

[Ver. 31, 32. And there went forth a wind from the Lord, and brought quail from the sea, and let thē fall by the campe, as it were a days journey, &c. God promised to his people quail, & that in abundance: here we see by what means they are brought among them, there went forth a wind from the Lord, to whom the winds and seas do obey. He could have done this by his own immediate hand, if it had pleased him; but hereby he would teach, that in giving his creatures, and in bestowing his blessings, he doth not bestow them immediately by his own hand, but he giveth them by means of the creatures that he hath created, as we see in this place. This we may read at large in Hosea, chap. 2, 21, 22. When he giveth light, he giveth it by the heavens, where he hath set the sun to rule by day, the Moon and the Stars to rule by night, Psal. 136, 8, 9. He hath appointed the beasts of the field to yield us clothing, and the earth to minister bread to the sower, Psalm. 104, ver. 4. Exod. 8, verse 16. Gen. 7, verses 11, 12. The reasons hereof are evident.

[Reason 1] Heereby he doth abate the pride and vain glory of the sons of men, that though they be Rulers of the earth, and Lord's of sea and land, and of all creatures in them, yet must they after a sort be beholding to the meanest of them, and borrow succor and sustenance from them.

Secondly, hereby he blindeth the eyes of those that will not see him, though he daily shine in their faces much more bright thē the Sun in the Firmament that casteth his beams upon the earth, I mean of wicked men that can look no higher then to the creatures themselves, and therefore commit gross idolatry with them, forasmuch as they look not up to God the author and giver of them.

Thirdly, God did appoint Adam in the time of his innocence, that he should receive all by means of his labor, for he was set in the garden to dress the garden & keep it. Gen. 2, 15.

[Use 1] Conclude from hence an holy principle of our faith, to wit, the infinite power and glory of God, who hath the souereigne command of all creatures, for great is his Name. He employeth them in blessing and in punishing at his own pleasure, and sendeth them forth for the honor of his Name, Psal. 8, 1. and 78, 16. He could with a word have created these quail as at the beginning, when he spake the word and they were, & used not the wind to bring them forth; but he would manifest his souereignty and dominion over all, that so all might stand in fear of him, to whom nothing is hard, Ier. 32, 27 Doubtless, we must confess that he is worthy of all honor, Reu. 4, 11. Psal. 89, 8, 12. and let men submit themselves to him, Job 36, 36, 37, and 42, 5, 6.

[Use 2] Secondly, from hence ariseth comfort to God's children that live under his protection; he hath all creatures at his commandment for their good. And it serveth as a terror to the wicked that set themselves against him, who doth whatsoever pleaseth him in heaven and in earth, Psl, 115, 3. The Lord of hosts is his Name, who can arm, send forth, and strengthen the least of them to their utter ruin. Wherefore so long as God hath any creature about him, they shall not want means of their overthrow and destruction. And on the other side, the faithful shall not want means for their preservation.

Thirdly, whensoever we want any blessing, [Use 3] we must seek to the Lord; for he can restrain the sweet influence of the heavens when it pleaseth him, so that neither the heavens shall hear the earth, nor the earth the corn, nor the corn the people; he can make the heavens to be as brass, and the earth as iron, that they shall yield us no benefit at all. For albeit he blesseth us by the creatures, yet he doth limit and uphold them from yielding unto us any good whensoever he pleaseth. Therefore is he to be sought unto for a blessing, lest he command them to do us no good.

Lastly, seeing we must seek God in the [Use 4] means, it teacheth us from the example of God, that we also must use means for the obtaining of earthly blessings. We must labor in our places and take pains in our callings wherein God hath set us. We must be diligent and industrious, Prov. 10, 4. The hand of the diligent maketh rich. True it is, the Scripture teacheth that it is the Lord that giveth power to get riches; nevertheless, the hand of the painful laborer is said to give riches also. We must pray unto God for a blessing, and depend wholly upon him, Psal. 127, 1, 2. Yet we our selves must not be idle and do nothing. For as many use the means and never seek to God, so there are others that rely upon God only, and never seek the means at all. These are like unto those that would fain be saved, and yet never seek after the right means to attain to salvation. Balaam wished that he might die the death of the righteous, yet he would not join with God's people to have remission of sins, and to hear the voice of God: so do these offend in temporal things, they sit still and will not use the means whereby they may enjoy the creatures of God to their good, although they would fain have them. If we seek them as GOD hath appointed, we shall find comfort.

[Ver. 33, 34. And while the flesh was yet between their teeth, yer it was chewed, the wrath of the Lord was kindled against the people, and the Lord smote the people with a very great plague.] In the midst of their lusts and pleasures, behold how God's judgments come upon them. They had feasted a long time, and had glutted themselves with their flesh; now their sweet meat had sour sauce, for the hand of GOD cometh upon them for their sin, and suddenly the plague sweepeth them away.

The Doctrine arising from hence is this, that the judgments of GOD do oftentimes fall upon men and women very suddenly before they be aware, when they least of all think or imagine of the day of wrath, Job 20.5, 6, 7. & 21.17. Psal. 73, 19. Isaiah 30, 1. Exod. 12, 29. Dan. 5, 30. Luke 12, 20. The destruction of the wicked, shall come as a whirlwind, Amos 1, 14 Christ putteth us in mind of the days of Noah and Lot, and telleth us that the coming of the son of man shall be when men think not of it; and therefore it is compared to the sudden coming of a thief in the night, and the sudden travel of a woman, Mat. 24, 43. 44. 1 Thess. 5, 2, 3. Acts 12, 23. and like the fall of a ruinous wall at an instant, though it stand long, Isaiah 30, 13.

This is plain, first because they have thorough [Reason 1] God's patience and longsuffering increased the number, weight, and measure of their sins, and thereby compel the Lord to bring his judgments suddenly upon them. They draw out his sword, and will not suffer it to rest in the sheath: they offer a kind of violence to God, and contstrain him to bring his judgments upon them in a moment, they will not suffer him to stay any longer▪ It is just to punish such as abuse his patience: he hath waited a long time, and called them to repentance, they have had time & warning enough, and made him dance attendance, as Prov. 1, 24, 27. Because I called and ye refused, your desolation cometh as a whirlwind.

[Reason 2] Secondly, God respecteth herein the benefit of others toward whō he hath not used as yet so long patience, to the end that they seeing others fall into sodain destruction, may learn thereby not to abuse his patience, lest they also be suddenly destroyed, Dan. 5, 22. when Daniel had told Belshazzar of his father, how suddenly the judgment of God came upon him for his security▪ he addeth, And thou his son knowing all these things, hast not humbled thyself, but hast committed the same things thyself; and therefore now also shalt thou suddenly be destroyed: thou shouldst have considered these things before, and have taken warning by thy fathers punishment; but seeing thou hast not looked upon him, as in a glass set before thy eyes, to consider the slippery estate wherein thou and all Princes and people stand, therefore now shall the same heavy hand of GOD find thee out, and his judgments shall presently overtake thee.

[Use 1] The uses follow. First see from hence the happy estate of all such as think of the day of their reckoning betimes, and prepare their garments that they be not taken naked. Men in sudden danger, as in a fire or sodain tumult coming in the night season, are glad to catch anything to cover them, Mark 14, 51. so should we be clothed with Christ's righteousness, Revel 16, 15, Such are out of danger, & have no cause to fear wrath and judgment. It is the wisest & safest way so to do, then we shall be sure to escape and be saved.

[Use 2] Secondly, it serveth to teach us, that we should not envy at the peace and prosperity of the wicked, neither fret at the flourishing estate of the ungodly that live in their sins: for howsoever they be for a time forborne, & all goeth currant with them, yet thereby they are the more hardened in their sins, till a far greater judgment come upon them. Therefore envy not at thē though they grow great, for suddenly shall the judgments of GOD take hold upon them, and arrest them as guilty of death, and then they shall perish speedily; so that there is no reason to grieve or grudge at their prosperity. They shall soon be cut down as grass, and shall wither as the green herb; they shall be consumed as the fat of Lambes, even with the smoke shall they consume away. Psal 37, 1, 2, 20. The estate of all the wicked is very ticklish and uncertain: they are set in slippery places, and God casteth them down into desolation. Their end is sudden and fearful▪ Prover. 6, 15. like a violent storm and tempest, while they are secure and think nothing of their end, while they eat & drink, and are drunken, and given to unlawful pleasures, the judgment of God shall be as a swift messenger, or a sudden wind that shall blow them away as chaff. For though God in patience bear with them, and put off his judgments for a season, yet when they do come, they shall come swiftly and suddenly. Indeed it often maketh the best of God's children to stumble, to see the prosperity of the wicked, and grieve much to see men lying in their sins as swine in the mire, or dogs in their vomit, to grow great and continue long without any cross or affliction, but let them wait but awhile, and suddenly they shall see the judgments of God to overtake them in their greatest ruffe and riot into which they break▪ Let no man therefore envy them, their honor and glory, their riches and prosperity, for they all shall be turned into curses and judgments. Who would repine at it, to see a thief carried along thorough fair fields and green meadows, in a rich coach to the gallows or place of execution? There is cause rather to be grieved at it, and to pity him then to envy him: so likewise why should we envy at the prosperity of the wicked, considering it is the highway that leadeth to death and the very occasion of their ruin, they stand in danger every hour to be overtaken with the judgments of God which come suddenly, that they shall have no time to make their peace, or to reconcilde themselves by true Repentance. Psal. 37.35, 36. We have cause therefore to mourn for them, and not to murmur at them.

Thirdly, from hence ariseth comfort to the faithful. What though on the one side the [Use 3] wicked prosper & increase in riches, though their eyes stand out for fatness, and cruelty compasseth them as a garment? and they have more then heart can wish? And what though on the other side, the godly are afflicted and in trouble, though they be in want and oppressed, though they be in misery and suffer many wrongs? yet we must not be discouraged, nor say, We have cleansed our hearts in vain, and in vain we have washed our hands in innocence; forasmuch as they are brought into desolation as in a moment, they are utterly consumed with terrors, as a dream when one awaketh. Let us therefore be of good comfort, and not shrink away: they are like the grass or flower of the field, which groweth and flourisheth today, and tomorrow withereth and is cast into the Oven, or rathey they are much more brittle, and subject to a speedier change. Let us commit our ways unto the Lord and trust in him: let us give all diligence to walk in his ways, which are sanctified and holy ways, that we may not be reputed among the wicked; and so partake with them in the sodainnesse of their downfall. Let us wait patiently upon him; for yet a very little while, and the wicked shall not appear; thou shalt look after his place, and yet shalt not find him; sudden destruction shall seize upon him as a sergeant, and he shall be carried away as with a strong whirlwind in a tempestuous and stormy day.

[Use 4] Fourthly, it is our duty to watch and attend with all care for the time of judgment. The day of the Lord, or the time of judgment is twofold, general and particular. General, when Christ shall break the heavens, and come to judge the quick and the dead in the end of the world, when the pillars of the earth and the whole frame of heaven shall be dissolved. Particular, at the day of our death, when every particular soul must appear before the bar, and give an account what i• hath done. Great will be our misery, if God come & find us careless and secure. If a man knew at what hour the thief would come, doubtless he would watch, and not suffer his house to be broken through, Mark 13, 35, 36. And this is the cause wherefore it pleased God to conceal from us as well the day of judgment, as the day of our death; he would not have us know either the one or the other, to wit, whē he will come, or when we shall die, to the end we should always watch and pray, and be in readiness, having our loins girt, and oil in our lamps. Nothing is more certain then that he will come. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of it before the flood, that the Lord cometh with thousands of his Saints, Jude verse 14. howbeit nothing is more uncertain then when he will come, for the Angels in heaven, and the Son himself as he is man, know it not, but the Father only, Mat. 24, 36. Mar. 13, 32. So nothing is more certain then our death and dissolution, and nothing more uncertain then the time thereof, that we should learn to look for him every day, nay every hour, nay every minute. It is well observed by Augustine, that the Lord would have us to know the time of his first coming, because the knowledge thereof is profitable and necessary: and therefore doth the Lord reprove the Jews, that they could judge the face of the sky, but they knew not the day of their visitation: because he that is ignorant of the first coming, can never prepare himself for his second coming. But the day and time of his second coming is hidden from us, because it is not expedient for us to know the same, lest we should say with the evil servant, My master doth defer his coming, and so fall to beat our fellow-servants, Luke 12, 45. We must be wise-hearted, and look for him every day, and not foolishly promise to our selves a long time of his tarrying, lest we deceive our selves, and begin to eat and drink, and to be drunken: whereas the Lord of that servant shall come in a day that he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. And if we may not say, our master doth delay his coming, as evil servants; then we may not say, where is the promise of his coming? as profane scoffers and mockers do, that walk after their own lusts. But be it that the general coming of Christ were far off, yet his particular coming to everyone of us cannot be far off, but is nere at hand, we know not whose turn shall be the next; woe unto us if we be taken unprovided. So then we see, that God hath concealed his coming both general and particular, not to our hurt, but for our good.

Lastly, this serveth to admonish all men, [Use 5] that seeing the judgments of God shall come suddenly, and that sudden death and sudden destruction are fearful to all men, to take heed that we abuse not the patience of God by living in known sin, and flattering our selves in it, lest we be swept away suddenly. Manie men are oftentimes praying and desiring God to keep them from sodain death, they would by no means die suddenly; yet these men by abusing the patience of God, and continuing in sin, do take the direct way and course to bring sudden death and destruction upon themselves. It is a manifest token of a plain and rank hypocrite, to crave to be kept from sudden death, and in the mean season to do nothing but practice and commit sin with greediness. Certainly he that thus prayeth, doth it for no other end, but because he is desirous to live longer to commit evil. He is afraid to come to an account, and yet he would live longer to make his account greater and more fearful. Would we not therefore be suddenly destroyed:? We must labor to see the plague, and fly. But whither? not from God, for he is far swifter then possibly we can be, who rideth upon the wings of the wind, and can quickly overtake us: we must fly to God, and seek to him for pardon betimes, and labor earnestly for a reconciliation with him. The birds of the air escape the snares of the fowler by flying: but whither? and how is it, and what do they? not by flying down on the earth, for so they are taken: but by flying upward; the higher so much the safer. So should we fly, not down from God, but fly on high, fly up to God and seek unto him, for him we have offended, and of him we must crave and shall obtain forgiveness. Let us prevent his judgments by our repentance, otherwise we shall perish suddenly. And when once we have obtained his favor, and made peace with him, though sudden death come upon us, as it did upon righteous Abel, well-meaning Uzzah, religious and godly Josiah, yet happy and blessed shall we be. It is wisdom not to put off the day of judgment, neither our particular day of judgment, Amos 6, 3. It is the occasion of many evils, when a man never thinketh upon the day of his dissolution, and dreameth that the day of coming to his answer is not near. Many impenitent persons put off the day of their repentance in hope to have time enough hereafter; whereas repentance is not in our own power, and that which is late is sildome true: and his judgments are sodain, yea so sodain, that sundry which promised unto their souls many years leisure and liberty to repent, have not had so much warning as to say, Lord have mercy upon me. We have had many examples of this daily, and therefore let us be evermore ready and prepared before hand.

CHAP. XII.

MOses in this chapter goeth forward to set down another murmuring, which did nerer touch him then the former. Such as are mentioned in the Chapters before, infected in a manner, the whole people: this is more particular, and is directed directly against himself, raised by his own sister and brother, both elder than himself. Wherein consider two things, First their sin: secondly, the process of God against them for their sin. Touching the first, observe that though both of them sinned, yet Miriam his sister hath the chief hand in the sin, who drew Aaron by persuasion into a practice and participation of it, as the people had done before, when they moved him to make the golden Calf, Exod. 32, 1, 2. they were the authors of that idolatry, Aaron was drawn to consent unto it. That she was the first in this trespass may appear, first because the verb in the original, is of the Feminine gender, and joined in construction with Miriam, which serveth also to strengthen the reason. Secondly, she is named in the first place, not preferred for honors sake (for there is no honor in committing of evil,) but because she had the principal hand in it. Thirdly, because the punishment fell only upon her, and not upon Aaron, who was even constrained by her importunity, as it were against his will to join with her.

The occasions which both of them take to exalt and magnify themselves, and to call the authority of Moses in question, are double: his marriage, and his calling. The marriage of Moses was with the woman that was a Cushite, which seemeth to be no other than Zipporah the Midianite. For first, we read not of her death, who was brought to him by her Father immediately before the giving of the Law, Exod. 18, 5. Again, it is not to be thought that he would marry two wives, especially being now 80. years old, unfit for any new marriage, and it being contrary to the first institution. Thirdly, we read of no other sons that he had but Gershom and Eliezer, Exod. 2, 2, 22, and 4, 20. & 18, 3. 1 Chron. 23, 14, 15. both which he had by Zipporah the daughter of Jethro: so that woman is like to be no other than this Zipporah, whom he married when he fled out of Egypt and sojourned in Midian. For the Midianites are called Cushites, not that they came of Cush the eldest son of Ham, Gen. 10, 6. but because they possessed part of the land of Cush. And it may well be that some strife and contention arose first of all between Zipporah and Miriam, a common thing unto that sex, as fell out between Sarah & Agar, between Rahel and Leah, and between Hannah and Peninnah, and haply it might be for place and precedency; Miriam bearing her self bold, that she was a Prophetess, and of the seed of Abraham, but Zipporah a foreigner and a stranger from Israel. And on the other, Zipporah alleging and pretending for her self, that she was the wife of Moses, the chief Governor of the people, and therefore as the chief room was due to him before other men, so to her before other women. The other occasion, was the office and calling of Moses, they envied his dignity and authority. For, as in of Abraham's house the strife arose among the herdmen of his cattle, and of Lots, the flame whereof burned so fast y^t it caught hold upon the masters themselves, and had quite consumed them, had it not been wisely & timely prevented: so this quarrel as a spark of fire arising among the women for the uppermost room and chiefest seat, covered for a season under the ashes, at length brake out into a flame, and caught hold of Moses, against whom Miriam and Aaron strove. As if they should say, Thou art not so great a Prophet as thou wouldest be accounted; have not the seventy Elders the Spirit of God, and the gift of prophesy as well as thou? and have not we that gift also? This is amplified by a double effect, one in God, he heard it; the other in Moses, he held his peace and said nothing, giving no occasion of this contention.

But before we come to the doctrines to be gathered from hence, we must speak somewhat of the translation of the words and of the interpretation. The words in the Original lie thus, And Miriam spake and Aaron against Moses, because of the woman the Cushite, whom he had married: for he had taken to wife a Cushite. The Septuagint being deceived in turning these words, gave occasion of error and stumbling unto others, making the Cushites to be Ethiopians, and saying that he married an Ethiopian woman, thereby mistaking this place and sundry others: The vulgar Latin followed them step by step, and the Geneva likewise, all of them calling her an Ethiopian. To this purpose I cannot pass over the senseless tale of Josephus in his Antiquities, which he relateth of Moses, when he is said to have served Pharaoh in the wars against the Ethiopians at such time as he was brought up in his courts as the son of his daughter: for he transporteth Midian over the red sea, and beyond all Egypt, and setteth it in Ethiopia, quite mistaking the seat of Cush. The Ethiopians are directly under the Equinoctiall line, or not far from it, but far from the land inhabited by the Cushites, who are neither black of color, nor in any sort neighbouring the Torrída Zona: whereas Moses married the daughter of Jethro Priest or Prince of Madian, which is part of Arabia Petraea bordering the red sea, for he fled from Pharaoh into the land of Madian. Now it is manifest that Cush could not be Ethiopia, but Arabia, both that Arabia called the Stony, of which we spake before, and a part of Arabia the Happy & the Desert, which regions Cush and the Cushites presently planted and peopled, after that they left Babylon to Nimrod, wherein they first sate down altogether. But Josephus presuming that Cush was no other then Ethiopia, must needs maintain that the wife of Moses being a Cushite, was a woman of the Land of Ethiopia, and thereupon frameeth a formal tale that one Tharbis the daughter of the king of Ethiopia fell deeply in love with the person and fame of Moses while he besieged Saba her fathers chief city, and to the end to obtain Moses for her husband, she practiced to betray her parents, country, friends, and the city it self, and to deliver them and her self into Moses hands.

The substance of this tale is told in this sort, While Moses was grieved that his army lay idle, because the enemy besieged durst not sally out and come to handy blows, there happened this accident in the mean while: The Ethiopian king had a daughter called Tharbis, who at some assaults beheld the person of Moses, and withal admired his valor. And knowing that Moses had not only upheld and restored the falling estate of the Egyptians, but had also brought the conquering Ethiopians to the very brink of subversion: these things working in her thoughts, together with her own affection (which daily increased) she made means to send unto him by one of her trustiest servants to offer her self unto him, and become his wife: which offer Moses on this condition accepted, that she should first deliver the City into his possession; whereunto she condescending, and Moses having taken an oath to perform this contract, both the one and the other were instantly performed.

Here is a pleasant tale (for it is no better) whereof Moses hath not one word, wherein are many plain mistakings. For as he is deceived in taking Ethiopia to be the country of Moses his wife, when indeed it was Arabia, so he erreth no less in naming a city of Arabia for a city of Ethiopia. For Saba is not in Ethiopia, but in Arabia, as both Strabo and all Geographers ancient and moderne teach us, except haply Josephus can work miracles, or rather impossibilities, and persuade us that the Queen of Saba, which came from the South to hear the wisdom of Solomon, were a Negro or Black-Moore.

Again, while Moses kept the sheep of his father in law, the Priest of Madian, he is said to drive the flock to the desert, and so came to the mountain of God in Horeb, Exod. 3.1.2. Now that mount Horeb is not in Ethiopia, every child knoweth; and Sinai where the law was given is expressly said to be in Arabia, Gal. 4.25. But Horeb and Sinai were together, and differ as the whole and the part, Horeb being the name of that hilly coast wherein mount Sinai is situated.

Furthermore, we find that Jethro came to Moses at Rephidim not far frō Idumea, where perceiving the insupportable government of so great a multitude to lie upon his shoulders only, as a burden too heavy for him to bear, he advised him to distribute that weighty charge among others, and to make Judges and governors of every Tribe to help bear the burden with him, Exod. 18. But if Jethro had been an Ethiopian, it had been a very far progress and wearisome perambulation for him to have passed through all Egypt with the wife and children of Moses, and to have found Moses in the borders of Idumea, the Egyptians hating Moses to the death, and all that favored him.

Lastly, if we will believe Moses himself, who spake being inspired by the Spirit of God, then doubtless his wife was not purchased after the manner that Josephus reporteth, that is, for betraying her country and kindred, her parents and friends; neither had she the name of Tharbis, but of Zipporah; neither was she a Negro, but a Midianitish woman. For Moses flying out of Egypt for fear of Pharaoh, and for safety of his life, came to Midian, and sate down by a Well as a man distressed, and disconsolate, and a stranger, where he is said to have defended the daughters of Reguel from the other shepherds, and drew them water to water their sheep, upon which occasion he was entertained by Jethro, whose daughter he married, and not for any supposed betraying of towns and countries. Neither is it anything against this opinion of Moses his wife to have been an Arabian, that the Scriptures teach us that he married a Midianitish woman: forasmuch as Madian or Midian, standing on the North coast of the red sea over against the body of Egypt, and nere Ezion Gaber where Solomon provided his fleete for India, in the region of Edom, may well be reckoned as a part of Arabia, as the red sea is called Sinus Arabicus.

Moreover, these four nations are everywhere mixed in holy Scriptures, because they dwelt confusedly together, to wit, the Madianites, the Ishmaelites, the Amalekites, & the Cushites, which were all in one general word Arabians, and in the word called sometimes by one of those names, and sometimes by another, as Gen. 37, 25, 27. & 28. it is said that Joseph was sold to the Ishmaelites, & in the same chap. ver. 36. that the Midianites sold Joseph to Putaphar Pharaohs steward, and chap, 39, 1. that Putaphar bought Joseph of the Ishmaelites, which the Chaldean Paraphrast in the same place, calleth Arabians. To make this yet more plain, it appeareth Judge. 6, 3. y^t when Israel had sown, then came up the Madianites, Amalekites, and they of the East to set upon them: they of the East were Arabians of the Desert, so as where before in the buying of Joseph the Madianites and the Ishmaelites were confounded, here the Madianites & the Amalekites are made one nation, and chap. 8, 24. these nations are all called Ishmaelites, and neither Madianites nor Amalekites, of which in process of time came the Mahometan Arabians. Neither is the marginal note upon chap. 37, 28 of Gen. in the Geneva

Bibles, anything to the purpose, who to avoid the confounding of these Nations and taking one for another, tell us that Moses wrote according to their opinion who took the Madianites & Ishmaelites to be all one. For Moses wrote the truth as it was in it self, who was no stranger, but well acquainted in Arabia, in y^e border whereof and in Arabia it self he had formerly lived forty years, and therefore no man was better able to describe these places, so that it is a vain thing to make him utter an untruth contrary to his own knowledge, and to follow the opinion of others that were deceived.

The like mistaking of Ethiopia for Chush is found in many other places. The first is Gen. 2, 13. The name of the second river is Gihon, the same is that which compasseth the whole land of Ethiopia, in Hebrew it is, the land of Chush. But the Ethiopians are as much as black or burnt faces, whose proper country is called Thebaides, lying to the Southward of all Egypt, far distant from that land which was peopled and inhabited by the Cushites. And Gihon is a river that watereth Chush, and not Ethyopia. But it will be objected, [Objection] that Homer maketh a twofold Ethyopia, the East and the West, which also is found in Strabo. For he saith, Odysseus lib. 1.

〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 .

(〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ,

〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉)

Where he showeth expressly, that the Ethiopians are divided into two sorts, some lie under the East Sun, and some under the west. But this serveth nothing to bring these Chusites to be either the one or the other, [Answer.] both of them being found elsewhere. For the East Ethiopia is that which compasseth Nile to the South of Egypt, and is the south border thereof, now a part of the Empire of the Abyssines under Prester John: and the west Ethiopia is y^t which joineth it self with the river Niger, which we call Senega and Gambria, for there-about are these Ethiopians called Perorsi, Daratites, with diverse other names which Pliny numbereth in his fifth book and eight chapter: and these two do lie indeed directly east and west, I mean that of Niger, and the other of Prester John. But touching Chush and the region of the Ishmaelites with the rest, they are extended directly North from that of Ethiopia, which is beyond Egypt. The farther mistaking of Chush for Ethiopia may be shown out of two places in the second book of the chronicles. First, where Zearah the Chushite, brought an army of ten hundred thousand against Asa King of Judah: which army whence it came the question ariseth, whether out of Ethiopia, or out of Arabia where the Chusites inhabited? Doubtless not from Ethiopia, for that had been a strange march and progress for such a multitude or world of people, having so mighty a King as the King of Egypt, between Palestine and Ethiopia. But these were the Cushites, Amalekites, Midianites, Ishmaelites, and Arabians (God having long before promised to make a great people of Ishmael, and that twelve Princes should issue from him.) For after that Asa strengthened by God had defeated this huge army swarming with such a multitude, he followed his victory, and took some of the Cities of king Zearah round about, and among the rest Gerar. Now, that Gerar should be any City of the Ethiopians no man can suspect or defend as appeareth in these places, Gen. 12, 11. and Exod. 17.8. compared together: Abraham departed to y^e south country, and dwelt between Cadesh and Sur, and sojourned in Gerar. Now Sur is that part upon which Moses and the Israelites first set their feet after they had passed the red sea, where the Amalekites set upon them in Rephidim, supposing they had been weary and unable to resist. And in the history of Isaac it is written, that he went to Abimelech King of the Philistines unto Gerar: but no man is so simple as to say, that Abimelech and the Philistines were Ethiopians. The same might be shown out of many circumstances in that chapter. Lastly, Moses himself describing the bounds of Canaan, to confirm the faith, and to quicken the hope of Israel, hath these words, Gen. 10, 19. The border of the Canaanites was from Sidon, as thou comest to Gerar unto Gaza, as thou goest unto Sodom and Gomorrah, and Admah, and Zeboim, even unto Lusha: now Sidon was the Frontier of Canaan toward the North, and Gerar by Gaza toward the South. Another place of translating Ethiopia for Chush, is in 2 Chro. 21, 16. which the Geneva Translators have thus: The Lord stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistines and Arabians which were beside the Ethiopians. But the Philistines and the Negroes are far asunder, as everyone that looketh upon a Map may easily judge: whereas the Philistines and Arabians do mixe and join with the land of the Cushites, and are distant from Ethiopia about 32. or 33. degrees, and therefore cannot be their next neighbors, inasmuch as all Egypt, and the deserts of Sur and Pharan are between them; so that it ought rather to be thus translated, The Lord stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistines and of the Arabians which confine (or border) upon the Cushites: for these indeed are their next neighbors. But the Israelites had never any communion or affairs with the Ethiopians, nor any intelligence or trade beyond Egypt to the South: but the enemies w^c they had on the south and east parts were these nations of the Chushites, Philistines, Ishmaelites, Amalekites, and Midianites, who in one general name were all Arabians.

Another mistaking of Ethiopia for Chush is in the history of Sennacherib, 2 Kings 19, 9. where the Geneva saith, he heard that Tirhakah king of Ethiopia was come out to fight against him. This army that marched against the king of Arabia, not from Ethiopia, as Josephus himself maketh it manifest, for he confesseth, that this army came to relieve the Jews and the Egyptians, whom the proud Sennacherib sought to oppress together, and marched directly toward him by the way of the Desert. So then, it ought to have been translated Tirhakah king of the Chushites: for he had great reason to muster his men together, and to put them all in armor, forasmuch as the houses and the cities of the Chushites were next to the fire, and upon whom the smoke of Judah flaming was blown, being their nearest neighbors, and if the Jews had miscarried, their own turn must have been the next.

Having waded thus far in the books of the histories, let us proceed to consider some places as il expounded in the prophets, where also Chush is mistaken for Ethiopia, and first I propound a place in Ezekiel, Chap. 29, 10. where the Lord threateneth the utter subversion of Egypt by the Babylonians, which is thus described in the translators from the tower of Seueneh even unto the borders of the Black-Moors: which last words should rather have been converted, from the Tower of Seueneh to the borders of the Chushites or Arabians: between which two limites is situated all Egypt. For to say, from the borders of Seueneh to the Ethiopians is nothing at all, and can carry no sense or meaning, Seueneh it self being the border of Egypt, confronting and joining to Ethiopia, or the Land of the Black-Moors. So then, if Nebuchadnezzar's conquest had been only between Seueneh and the border of Ethiopia, it had been a poor conquest, without victory, without enemies, without any land: because as Junius well observeth, Seueneh was the south bound of Egypt seated in Thebaida which toucheth Ethiopia, and Cush noteth the North bound, as if the Prophet had said, that Egypt should be ouerrun and overcome from one end of it to other; whereas Nebuchadnezzar never entered into any part of Ethiopia, as appeareth by the Prophet.

Another place in Ezekiel is chap. 30, 9. & is thus turned by the Geneuian Translators, In that day shall there Messengers go forth from me in ships, to make the careless Moors afraid: which should be amended and reformed by putting the word Chush or Arabia for Ethiopia or the Black-moors, as everyone may see which meanly understandeth the Geography of the world, knowing that to pass out of Egypt into Ethiopia there need no Gallies or ships no more then to pass forth of one piece of dry land into another, Ethyopia and Egypt being in one continent & conterminate the one to the other, which are not divided so much as by a river. Therefore in this place of Ezekiel it was meant, that from Egypt Nebuchadnezzar should send Gallies along the coast of the red sea, by which an army might be transported into Arabia the Happy and the Stony (sparing the long, wearisome march over all Egypt and the deserts of Pharan) which army might thereby surprise them unawares in their security & confidence. For when he was at Seueneh within a mile of Ethiopia, he needed neither gally, nor ship, nor boat to pass unto it, being all one firm land with Egypt, without any water to divide them; and it is well observed, that if he had minded to row up the river for pleasure sake, he could not have done it, because the fall of Nile tumbling over high and steepy mountains, called Catadupae Nili, was at hand, and would have hindered him.

And as in the prophesy of Ezekiel before remembered, the word Ethiopia is inserted in the translations for Cush or Arabia, which putteth many histories much out of square, one kingdom being taken or rather mistaken for another: so is it also in Isaiah, chap. 18, 1. Oh the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, &c. whereas it should be, beyond the rivers of Cush or Arabia. For the Land here spoken of by the Prophet Isaiah, is confessed by all interpreters to be no other then Egypt. They were the Egyptians that sent this message to the Israelites, which Isaiah repeateth: so that by the former translation every man may see the transposition of kingdoms: for hereby Egypt is transported to the other side of Ethiopia, and likewise Ethiopia set next to Judea, whereas it is the land of Cush and Arabia indeed, that lieth between Judea and Egypt, and not Ethiopia which is seated under the Aequator. Now if Ethiopia it self lie under the Equinoctiall line, with whom y^e Jews had never any acquaintāce, why should any man dream that they could have any knowledge of the Nations far beyond it, & beyond the rivers of Ethiopia? except we shall impiously and blasphemously think that the prophet spake he knew not what, or used an impertinent and unprofitable discourse of those nations, which were not discovered in 2000. years after, inhabiting as far South as the Cape of good hope, commonly known by the name of Bona speranza. Thus I have run over sundry places in the law and in the prophets, which have been mistaken and ill translated, in which Cush (which is Arabia) is expounded to be Ethiopia. Touching all which I do freely and ingenuously confess, I have lighted my candle at his candle, y^t hath with great labor and industry published the history of the world, having here & there inserted some confirmation of that which he hath learnedly written.

Thus upon the occasion of Moses his marriage with the Midianitish woman called the Chushite, we have shown how sundry translators have mistaken the word Chush for Ethiopia, Madian being a part of Arabia Petraea or the Stony, as Junius hath well translated it, and Vatablus before him. It is not worth the standing upon or the gathering up which the same Vatablus observeth out of the Jewish Rabbin's, that Zipporah the Midianitess, is therefore said to be an Ethiopian, because she resembled the Black-Moors in color, and was tawny or black as the Negroes are which live under the line: which hath indeed no color of truth, and therefore we will omit the same, and come unto the words themselves.

1 And Miriam spake against Moses and Aaron, by occasion of the woman the Cushite, whō he had married: for he had taken to wife a woman a Cushite.

2 And they said, Hath the Lord indeed spoken only by Moses? Hath he not spoken also by us? And the Lord heard it.

3 But Moses was a very mecke man, &c.

The sum of these words we have shown before: wherein observe in the things y^t Moses suffered, that God's children oftentimes find great discomfort at their hands, of whom in all reason they should expect the greatest comfort. When the people did rise against him mutinously and tumultuously, where should he find rest? or in whose bosom should he pour out his complaint? or to whom should he resort for comfort but to Aaron and Miriam? to his brother and sister? But here we see they are his chief troublers and tormenters. The former was a great temptation, when the people did set themselves against him: howbeit this is greater, wherein not his enemies reproached him, and those that hated him did not magnify themselves against him, but his dearest friends and acquaintance, as befell also to David, Psal. 55, 12. The church maketh this complaint, Cant. 5, 7. That the watchmen that should have been both her guide and her gard, smote her and wounded her, the keepers of the walls took away her veil from her. And Christ fore-telleth, that a man's enemies shall be they of his own house, Mark 6, 4. This befell unto Job a man full of sorrows, his own wife that lay in his bosom, and his friends that were as his own soul, were the chief causes of his greatest anguish. Abel found no worse friend then his own brother, that came with him to the place of God's service, Gen. 4, 8. So Ishmael persecuted Isaac, Ishmael borne after the flesh, him that was borne after the Spirit, Ge. 21, 9. Gal. 4, 29. Joseph received hard measure of his brethren, who was by them sold for a bondslave, Ps. 105, 17. Moses was fain to fly out of Egypt, because a Jew one of his own brethren diuulged his killing of the Egyptian. The same befell Zachariah the son of Jehoiada the priest, who had saved the kings life, and set the crown upon his head, yet he remembered not the kindness of the father, but slew his son: the father had in a manner given him life, but he took away life from his son, 2 Chro. 24, 21. Who vexed the church and troubled the Apostles more then false brethren? 2 Cor. 11, 26. The cause of this is the enmity between Christ and the serpent, and the seed of them both, w^c shown it self immediately after the fall in Cain, who was of that evil one & slew his brother, 1 John. 3, 12.

The uses which we must make hereof are, [Use 1] First, to mark the truth of that which Christ teacheth, Math. 10, 34, 35, 36. that he came not to send peace on earth, but rather a sword: and to set variance between man and man. And in another place, I am come to send fire on the earth, and what will I, if it be already kindled? Luke 12, 49. He speaketh not of the effect, but of the event: not what the Gospel bringeth forth properly, but what it worketh accidentally: not what it procureth in the faithful, but what it produceth in the unfaithful.

Secondly, God will have all his to be well tried [Use 2] which are in the faith, even for their own good, that we may know what we can suffer for the truths sake, when we have sealed it up by our patience in all tribulations. Thirdly, hence ariseth comfort in our sufferings. For, do we suffer affliction at their hands of whom we hoped for better dealing? marvel not at it, neither think it strange: but let us comfort our selves with the examples of God's children, who have had the same measure measured out unto them before us: nay let us lay before us the example of Christ himself, who had experience of it not only in his own countrymen the Jews, but in Judas one of his own disciples, of whom the Prophets prophesied, He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me, Psal. 41, 9. Matth. 26, 23. Lastly, from hence we learn, in all discomforts [Use 4] to fly unto God, after the example of David, who gave himself continually to prayer, when he was vexed by such unexpected enemies, Psal. 55, 16. when he had complained that his friend and companion rose up against him, he addeth, As for me, I will call upon God, and the Lord shall save me. So it ought to be with us, that we may find comfort in God when we can find none among men.

Again, Miriam and Aaron were of great reputation among the people, and sanctified in a great measure. Aaron was the Lord's high Priest, consecrated and anointed with holy oil; Miriam was a prophetesse, and one that sung the praises of God after their deliverance from Pharaoh, Exod. 15. yet loe how both of them fail in duty, and sin against God, & oppose themselves against his servant Moses: whereby we learn, that none are so sanctified, but they fail many ways. Let no man therefore dream of perfection in this life, Rom. 7, 14, 18, 19, 20, 23.

Moreover, from this example observe, that contentions are oftentimes in the church, even between the members of the same body. True it is, it were to be desired that there were perfect love and unity, peace and concord in the church, but this is rather to be looked for then to be found. There arose strife between Abraham and Lot, Gen. 13, 8. between Paul and Barnabas, Acts. 11, 2. & 15, 39. between Peter and Paul, Gal. 2, 11. So in the Church of the Corinthians, though they were sanctified in Christ Jesus, and called to be Saints, yet there were contentions among them. 1 Cor. [Reason 1] 1, 11. And no marvel: for first of all we know in part, and we prophesy in part: we know somewhat, but we are ignorant of much more [Reason 2] then we know, 1 Cor. 13, 9. Secondly, there must be even heresies, that they which are approved [Reason 3] may be known, 1 Cor. 11, 19. Thirdly, Satan's malice is exceeding great, he soweth the seeds of discord among the godly; for his hatred is exceeding great against y^e church and he desireth nothing more then the ruin thereof, Revel. 1.2, 4. Lastly, self-love remaineth in the best men, which is a remnant of the flesh: this spurreth us forward to spurn against one another, and while we challenge too much to our selves, we ascribe too little unto others, 1 Cor. 13, 5.

This offereth to us this truth, that unity is [Use 1] no note of the true church, forasmuch as it is sometimes out of the church, when as contention is in it. The false Prophets were many that conspired against Micaiah, Elijah, and Jeremiah. Christ was condemned by a common voice of the people, and consent of the Pharisees, which cried out, Away with him, Crucify him, crucify him, Luk. 23.18.21. Thus then the mouths of the papists are stopped, which do please themselves in an idle conceit of a general agreement of many people and Nations, which is oftentimes a maintenance of error & vnwholesom doctrine, when it is joined with it. The unity of one faith, and of the same doctrine believed and confessed, we acknowledge to be a true mark of the true Church. Where there is the preaching of this faith, & the doctrine of Christ, and the sealing up of the same with the true administration of the Sacraments, there is a true church of God. The unity which is without that doctrine which is according to godliness, is as the cry of the whole city in maintenance of their idolatry, Great is Diana of the Ephesians, Act. 19, 28. Or like to the house which the strong man possesseth, where all things are said to be in peace, Luk. 11, 21. Secondly, let us never look [Use 2] for a perfect agreement or perfect unity in this life. Such are fallen into a deep sleep, and dream to find heaven upon earth. We must embrace the truth before all be agreed, or else we shall never embrace it: forasmuch as there is much ignorance (the matter or mother of error) even in the most godly. Happy will it be for us, whē there shall be an end of these days of sin, for then shall be an end also of all contention. Thirdly, let us follow men's examples [Use 3] no further then they follow Christ. 1 Cor. 11, 1. There are defects and infirmities in the best. We aim at perfection, but we cannot hit it. Though we have multitudes to go before us, we must know whom they follow, before we follow and join our selves unto them. Many men may fitly be compared to a flock of sheep, who at the first make many offers before any will adventure: but if one begin to leap over, the rest follow amain: so is it with diverse men that pinch curtesy at the first, and keep themselves entire in the most holy faith; but if they see others give their assent, they follow after & stick at nothing, neither try the spirits whether they be of God or not. Lastly, it is our duty [Use 4] to cut off all occasions of debate, and as it were to take away the fuel that kindleth and continueth the fire. 1 Cor. 1.10. Paul beseecheth the Corinthians as brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that they all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among them, but y^t they be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment.

[Verse 2. And they said, Hath the Lord indeed spoken only by Moses?] The true cause of this their murmuring and contention, was pride and ambition, self-love, ostentation, & vainglory. Hereby we learn, that there cometh no greater plague to the Church of God then by ambition & desire of preeminence, when men desire to over-rule others, to have the sole command of all things in the church, and never to be commanded. This was the sin that caused our first parents to fall from God, and by their fall to ruin all mankind, they would needs be as God's knowing good and evil, Gen. 3, 5. The ambition and pride of Amaziah the priest of Beth-el, would not suffer the Prophet Amos in the land of Israel, but he commanded him to fly away into the land of Judah, and prophesy there, Amos 7, 10, 12. We see this apparently afterward, chap. 16. of this book in Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. This moved the high Priests, the Scribes and Pharisees, to persecute Christ and his Apostles to wit, the love which they had to their own kingdom and hierarchy more then unto the kingdom of God: they feared that if all men were brought to believe in Christ, they should lose their place and authority, John 11, 47. Math. 23, 6, 7. So was it among the Apostles, they also strove who should be the greatest among them. So the Apostle John speaking of Diotrephes, showeth that he loveth the preeminence, 3 John 9, 10. He was a proud and ambitious man, affecting rule and authority over others, and thereby brought much mischief and trouble upon the church of God, prating against the Pastors with malicious words; and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, & forbiddeth them that would, and casteth thē out of the church. Neither is this evil dead with these; for this is a great plague of the church to this day and very pernicious. Nothing hath more ruined the church of God, ouerthrown piety, corrupted religion, hindered the Gospel, discouraged the Pastors and professors of it, nothing hath more erected the kingdom of Anti-christ, then these petty popes, the true successors of Diotrephes, such as desire to be universal bishops, and to reign alone, to have all the dealings in their own hands, and the whole flock to stand at their beck, and conclude what they list.

[Reason 1] The mischief hereof appeareth by sundry reasons. First, it causeth a great rent and division in the church, and disturbeth the peace of it, Nu. 16, 1. Korah and his company went apart as scismaticks, & caused a great contention to arise where was peace & unity before. [Reason 2] Secondly, it setteth up men, & putteth down the Lord and his ordinances, urging, compelling, and commanding against the truth, Act. 4, 18, 19. Annas the high priest, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, a proud generation of ambitious prelates, commanded the Apostles not to preach and teach, nor to speak at all in the name of Iesus, whō Christ had charged and commanded to preach. And whereas he would have them teach whatsoever he had commanded them, Math. 28, 20. they will limit them and stint the Spirit of God how far he shall go, and what he shall not do. Thirdly, [Reason 3] it proceedeth from very evil roots, and bringeth forth very evil effects, as an evil tree bringeth forth evil fruits. The causes from whence it floweth, are Satan, pride, contempt disdain of others, self-love in our selves, no love of the truth, no zeal of God's glory, no desire of the good of the church: like mother, like daughter, as the root is, so is the branch. The effects thereof are trouble, disquietness, fear, flattery, envy, and subtlety.

Let us come to the Uses. It reproveth the [Use 1] Bishops of Rome, and the Roman Clergy, which bear themselves as Lord's over the flock of Christ, having all things to stand at their beck: therefore the Apostle Peter saith, the Elders that feed the flock must not be as Lord's over God's heritage, but examples to the flock, 1 Pet. 5, 3. and Christ our Savior when the two sons of Zebedeus ambitiously desired to be above their fellows, and strove among themselves which should be greatest, Christ Iesus thereupon showeth how and which way everyone should be great, & who ought to be had in highest regard and reputation, even such and only such as do the best and greatest service to the church, Mark. 10, 42. Lu. 23, 24. Whosoever will be great among you, shall be your Minister: and whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all. So then, the honor and the labor should not be divided, but go together: howbeit in the church of Rome they have most honor that do the least labor, and contrariwise, they are least respected, who have most labored and taken greatest pains among the people. But howsoever this be a common & received custom, it shall be altogether otherwise in the next life, when the great shepherd of the sheep shall appear, then shall they be most honored of him that have labored most, & everyone shall receive not only for his labor, but according to his labor, 1 Cor. 3, 8. The greatest reward shall be for the greatest labor, and the least for the least labor. O then we shall wish with all the desire of our souls, y^t we had labored more abundantly: and therefore let us be instant in season and out of season, while we have time. The night cometh when none can labor. Hence it is, that Christ promiseth to his Apostles w^c had planted the churches, and bestowed the greatest pains, a chief place of honor nere to himself. Woe then to the bishop of Rome, y^t doth now domineer in the church, and over the faith and consciences of men, who sitteth in y^e temple of God, showing him self that he is God: he challengeth all power due to himself▪ but laboreth not in the word & doctrine: he neither preacheth the Gospel, nor taketh it to be any part of his Function, but rather a great disgrace to his usurped office. This is not to be the vicar of Christ, for he went about all cities and villages teaching in their synagogues, & preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people. This is not to be the successor of Peter, for he is commanded to feed the Lambes, to feed y^e sheep of Christ, John. 21, 15, 16, 17. and he fed them not only by his deputies or assigns, but in his own person, Act. 1, 15. & 2, 14. & 3, 12. & 4, 8. & 5, 29. and 10, 34. and he requireth all Pastors to do the like, 1 Pet. 5.2. Feed the flock that dependeth upon you. Wherefore the man of sin, though he here usurp the highest honor, and challenge a triple crown, and beareth both swords civil and ecclesiastical, to whom indeed neither is due, shall have in the end the greatest shame and contempt poured on him.

[Use 2] Secondly, acknowledge this ambition to be a general corruption, the relics and remainders whereof, are in all the servants of God, yea in all the children of Adam; we have drawn it from him, and thereby it hath leavened and corrupted all mankind. It drew, nay it threw Adam out of the garden of God: it quickly crept into the family of Christ, and infected his disciples, and therefore being a subtle and secret evil it is to be looked unto, that it steal not suddenly upon us. If any man ask what it is? I answer, it is an immoderate desire after dignity, and of dignity upon dignity, it is a thirst that never can be quenched: for as the covetous person hath never enough money, so the ambitious hath never enough honor: it is a secret poison, an hidden plague, the mistress of craft, the mother of hypocrisy, the father of envy, the fountain of vices, the moth of piety, a blind guide and leader of the hearts of men; finally, we may say of the love of it as Paul doth of the love of money, It is the root of all evil, 1 Tim. 6, 10. The farther we think our selves from it, the nearer commonly it cometh unto us: and therefore let nothing be done through strife and vainglory, but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better then themselves, Phil. 2, 3.

[Use 3] Lastly, let all learn to beware of this evil. To this purpose we should entertain these meditations as so many sovereign preservatives, to teach us, first that the ambitious person, neither knoweth God, nor himself, nor his neighbor, nor his beginning, nor his end; nor the Scriptures: not God his Creator, not himself his creature, not his neighbor, his equal, and perhaps his superior; not his beginning, of the dust of the earth; not his end, the grave, the worms, the dust out of which he was taken; not the Scriptures, w^c teach, That God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble, I am. 4, 6. We dream that other men will esteem of us as highly, as we use to do of our selves: but therein we deceive our selves. Humility is the ready way unto true glory, Ambition is the path that leadeth to shame and contempt. Therefore Christ saith oftentimes, Whosoever exalts himself shall be abased, and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted, Mat. 23, 32. Luke 14, 11. & 18, 24. Secondly, ambition was the downfall of man from the beginning, yea of the Angels, not contenting themselves with their estates. The higher men climb, the more fearful is their fall: whereas he that creepeth low upon all four, never feareth a fall. Pride is the fore-runner of destruction, Prov. 11, 2. and 16, 18. & 18, 12. Thirdly, such as have had the greatest gifts, and were best qualified with excellent graces, have been most backward in seeking honors, and been hardly brought to accept of them being offered, even when they followed close at their heels, as the shadow doth the body; as we see in Moses, in Jeremiah, and others. Such therefore as hunt after preferment, and are most hasty of it to catch it before it fall, as the dog doth a bone, or as the hauke houereth aloft for her prey, it is to be feared they will be least conscionable in it, as giving by their untimely and immeasurable desires, just occasion to suspect that they respect and aim at their own good more then the good of others, or the glory of God; and therefore honor of right ought least of all to be conferred & bestowed upon such. Fourthly, all place of superiority is full of much trouble, and accompanied with many cares and vexations: why then should we desire so eagerly and earnestly that which bringeth so great annoyance & encombrance? what wisdom were it for a man to lay such heavy burdens upon his shoulders, as thereby he is ready to break his back? Yet so is it with haughty and ambitious spirits, they so cloy & clog themselves with promotions & preferments, that they are not able to bear the weight of them, neither any way fit to discharge them, but in sustaining them are like to break their backs, nay their necks. Fifthly, the greater honor we get, the greater account we have to make. The more is committed unto us, the more shall be required of us. We are sharp sighted to espy the least occasion of raising us up: but we cannot see what account will be asked of us. Lastly, such as desire promotion on earth, do oftentimes find confusion in heaven: as we see in Absalom and Achitophel, one the son, the other the Counselor of David, both rebels & traitors to their Prince. Such as will be greatest on earth, shall be least in heaven. The honor which here we have, should put us in mind to seek the true honor of God's kingdom. The earthly honor is but as a shadow, rhe heavenly is the substance. They that honor God shall be honored of him, but they that despise him shall be despised.

[Hath the Lord spoken only by Moses? Hath he not spoken also by us?] Behold here, how in the humor of their pride & ambition, they set themselves against no other then Moses himself, a chief & a most excellent servant of God; they strike at the head and not at the feet, & touch him whom God had lifted up above the rest to govern his people. The Doctrine arising from hence is this, that proud and ambitious men do show themselves continually most envious and outrageous, against the most excellent and most painful servants of God. So did Haman against Mordecai, the true servant of God, and faithful subject of the King, of whom it is said, He had spoken good for the king, Esth. 7, •. So did the high Priests show their malice against Christ, and afterward against his Apostles: Diotrephes against John, and the most painful Pastors. That Antichrist of Rome hath always been most bitter against the chief teachers of the gospel, and the best preachers of the reformed churches.

For first, they stand most of all in their way, [Reason 1] and are a great eye-sore unto them, resisting their tyranny and pride, and discovering to y^e world their Antichristian usurpation. This is the true cause that they have raged against them both alive and dead, Revel. 11, 10. The two witnesses are slain, and they rejoiced in their fall, because they were vexed by them. This maketh the proud bishop of Rome (even under his own nose) better to endure the blasphemous Jews or any other professed enemies of Christ, and of the Christian religion, then such as believe in Christ, because the other never trouble his kingdom; but these are ready to cal him to an account, and to answer for the destruction of the souls of men. Secondly, they are afraid lest if these continue and prosper, their kingdom fall. This fear of the high priests was it that moved them against Christ and his Apostles, John, 11, 48, Thirdly, cankered and corrupt envy cannot abide them that do any good in y^e church or commonwealth, much less them that do most good, and labor more then others, but it seeketh the ruin of such. For their diligēce maketh the negligence of those to appear the more. Saul envied David to the death, especially for the gifts, graces, and blessings of God bestowed upon him.

[Use 1] See from hence this truth, that the best servants of God oftentimes find the worst entertainment in the world, and that at the hands of the highest and chiefest. Thus it fell out with Moses, who was driven by Pharaoh to forsake Egypt. Heb. 11, 37.38. So Herod, Pilate, the high priests & rulers of the people set themselves against Christ and his Apostles. Wherefore when we see this, marvel not at it, neither be discouraged by it: when we find and feel the like measure, let us comfort our selves in the examples of the faithful that have gone before us. We must not look to be better then they, nor dream of a condition higher then theirs: it is enough for us to be made like unto them. The more our graces increase, the more will the envy of the malicious increase.

[Use 2] Secondly, this showeth the unthankfulness of the world, who hate them most, and love them least that do them most good. The ungodly reap many benefits by the godly, yet do they recompense them evil for good. The creatures groan under the burden which they sustain, yielding help and succor to the ungodly. By means of Paul, all that were in the ship had their lives granted unto them, & yet afterward they would have killed him, Acts 27, 42. Whatsoever the wicked enjoy, it is for the godly's sake. They bring a blessing upon the house, yea upon the land where they live. The faith of Noah preserved his whole family though all were not faithful that were in it, Gen. 7, 1. The faith of Rahab believing in God and showing the soundness of it by a lively fruit in receiving the spies, saved alive her father and mother, her brethren and sisters & all that they had. But doth the world respect them any whit the more, or love them one jot the better? No doubtless, they will not acknowledge themselves any way beholden unto them, or that they fare the better for them. Whereas indeed, the godly are their good benefactors and patrons, whatsoever they esteem of them. The poorest man y^t feareth God doth after a sort give life & living to the ungodly. They have cause to thank them for that which they have, and for that consideration to make much of thē. The heavens could not continue as they do, but would fall upon the heads of these profane wretches, if once the number of the elect were accomplished, yet we see how badly and basely they are accounted of, they hate them to the death, and procure what hurt they can unto them.

Lastly, acknowledge herein the providence of God, that the gifts of his children [Use 3] should not exalt them: for all are prone unto vainglory, even they that are sanctified in the greatest measure are spotted with pride and ambition, emulation, and desire of superiority, 2 Cor. 12, 7. Paul saith of himself, Least I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger Satan to buffet me, least I should be exalted above measure. We see, he repeateth this twice, and beginneth & endeth the sentence with the same thing, that he had this temptation, least he should be exalted above measure. To teach us that this fell out by God's special providence and dispensation. Hereby doth God work out their great good & turneth the envy of enemies to the furtherance of his own and his children's glory, whereby much evil is suppressed, which otherwise is ready to break out.

[And the Lord heard it.] This followed their sin immediately as a sergeant y^t doggeth the poor debtor at the heels to attach him & arrest him: God heard the sin that they committed, their words came up to his ears, and he is determined not to keep silence. We learn hereby, that God knoweth, heareth, and understandeth all the ways of men, nothing can be hid from his sight, nothing can escape his hearing: he discerneth and descrieth all the doings of men whatsoever they be. God knew what Adam had done so soon as he had fallen, and eaten of the forbidden fruit, and called unto him, Adam, Where art thou? Gen. 3.9. He saw all the wickedness of man upon the earth, and knew that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, was only evil continually, Gen. 6, 5. He was not ignorant that the Sodomites were exceeding sinners against the Lord, Gen. 18, 20. he heard the cry of their sins, which sounded shrilly in his ears, and pierced the clouds, and mounted up to heaven: so Prov. 15, 3, 11.

[Reason 1] He made the eyes, the heart, & the ears, Psal. 94, 9, 10, 11. yea he hath fiery eyes, Dan. 10, 6. Many things hinder our eyesight; the darkness of the night, the distance of the place, the weakness of the sight, the excellency of the object, and the infirmity of old age; but nothing can hinder the light of his eye, no darkness, no distance, no age.

[Reason 2] Secondly, he is infinite in nature, he cannot be excluded out of any place: we may shut out the company of men, and haply the light of the Sun, but it is impossible to shut out him that is evermore present in every place, even as the light is present to those that walk abroad at noon day, whether they open their eyes or shut them, whether they see it or not; so the Lord is present to all men, though he be not seen of all, yet they cannot go from his presence. If then he cannot be far from everyone of us, it will follow from hence that he must needs know all our works and words. [Reason 3] Thirdly, he is omniscient, he knoweth all things, nothing can be hid from him, Prov. [Reason 4] 15, 11. Fourthly, he judgeth all things, and all men according to their works. It is his office to be the judge of all the world, Gen. 18.25. therefore he heareth, knoweth, and understandeth all things, 2 Cor. 5, 10. otherwise he cannot do righteous judgment. He will not proceed upon the bare and naked information of others, or by uncertain guess and conjecture, but he judgeth according to his own knowledge, which is ever certain, and never doubtful. Every just judge proceedeth upon a known and manifest cause.

[Use 1] We infer from hence, that it is in vain for any man to be high conceited of himself, like the proud Pharisee, seeing God knoweth his estate and condition more truly and thoroughly than himself. Miriam and Aaron in this place, hold themselves as great Prophets as Moses, but GOD knew the pride of their hearts, and the vanity of their words. He knoweth what each man thinketh in his heart, & speaketh with his tongue. In vain do any highly esteem of themselves, and over-value their own worthiness, seeing they are so well known within and without to God: & as he valueth of them, so they are indeed, and not otherwise. If a man know one good thing in himself, the Lord knoweth ten evil things in him, that are sufficient to make him vile & abominable in his sight. The hypocritical Pharisee in the Gospel, knew a few things in himself which he thought and prized to be exceeding good; but (alas) the Lord, that seeth not as man seeth, knew for these seeming good things many inherent evils, that made him hateful to God. The church of Laodicea was very greatly conceited of it self, saying; I am rich and increased in goods, and have need of nothing; but the Lord heard this; and knew y^t it was wretched and miserable, and poor, & blind, and naked, Reu. 3.17. It is not so with men as they value themselves, but as God valueth thē, for he knoweth all things, yea those things in them & by them, which they know not or see not in themselves. There are three errors which did deceive y^e Pharisee in esteeming of himself at too high a price, which deceive also many thousāds in the world as well as him. The first is, his error of comparison, in comparing himself with another person, w^c was to behold his face in a false glass. For he thought he had found out a man worse than himself, and this made him come boldly and confidently to God with these words; Lord, I thank thee that I am not as other men, nor as this Publican, Lu. 18.11. This comparison was that wherein he was greatly deceived: he thought himself just, and that he must needs be singular good, because one stood by him, and many others lived with him, whom he thought to be worse than himself. A second cause of his error was his freedom from some gross sins of the second Table, which he judged others to be guilty of: I am not an extortioner, unjust, or an adulterer; therefore he thought he must needs be a right honest and just man. His third error sprang from his performance of some duties of religion to God, I fast twice in the week, I pay tythe of all I possess; thereupon he persuaded himself, that he was truly religious and holy in God's sight. These were his fond conceits, and all of them erroneous, because he went away condemned by Christ notwithstanding all these gay and glorious works, verse 14. These things touch us also nearly, who are carried away with the same deceitful pretences. For first, we also lay the foundation of godliness upon a comparison, if we can find out any worse than our selves, we take our selves to be simply good men; as a wise historian said of the Popes, that the bounty or goodness of the Pope is praised, when he exceedeth not the malignity of other men. This course will utterly deceive us, for when the Lord shall come to judgment, he will not judge by cōparisons what we are to such a one: but according to his law: & though he find us better then some other men, yet will he enter into judgment with us, because he findeth us to be worse then we ought to be by his word, whereby we must be judged at the last day, Io, 12, 48.

The second error deceiving the Pharisee and others in our age, is, because they are free from some gross sins, and therefore take themselves to be just and upright men: if they can make it good, that they be no userers, no unclean persons, no drunkards, no murderers, oh then they are as honest & perfect men as the best of them all; but God will not save us for some evils which we want, but condemn us for those which we have. For though thou want these, thou mayest abound in other.

Lastly, they think if they perform some duties of the first Table, which savor of religion, they are in very good case: if they can say, I hear often, I pray often, I receive the Lord's Supper, they go away with this strong fond conceit, that they are to be holden religious persons. This therefore cannot serve our turns: for this we may do, and yet be proud hypocrites. We may pray, yet without any feeling, zeal, or good affection. We may hear, and yet practice nothing, but live in disobedience. We may reverence the Minister, and entertain him in our houses, and yet reform no sin that he reproveth. We may come to the Lord's Table, and yet come as Judas did, and go away as he did, that is, without a sound heart and a right faith. So that we may say of such, as Christ himself doth, Luke 16, verse 15. Ye are they that justify yourselves before men, but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed amongst men is abomination in the sight of God. The Lord knoweth how we pray, how we hear, and how we receive the Sacrament: how highly soever we esteem of our selves by reason of some few good things which we seem to have, yet God cannot be deceived, and it is certain he will not be mocked.

Secondly, there is no dallying with God, [Use 2] or shifting from him, or hiding our ways and works out of his sight, neither can we reap any comfort in the flattering persuasions of others. It is a vain thing for any man to esteem highly of himself, because other men as vain as himself sooth him up, and tell him he is in an happy estate and condition, that he is a faithful and religious person and professor, and shall without all doubt inherit the kingdom of heaven: when in the mean season, his own heart shall condemn him, and convince him that it is nothing so. It is I say, a vain thing to think one whit better of our selves for this, for GOD knoweth thy heart better then thyself, 1 John 3, 20. who knoweth all things. If thine own heart condemn thee, God is greater then thy heart. There is no true comfort that resteth upon the breath of another man's mouth. Tell me, when a man lieth on his death bed, what comfort can the approbation of another man give thee, that thou art a good man, when thy own soul proclaimeth the contrary, and God knoweth thee to be evil? Doubtless no more, then if he tell thee thou art sound and in good health, when thou feelest thyself to be heart-sick, and at deaths door. So if all the world should acquit thee, and thine own conscience condemn thee, what good can y^e vain applause of sinful men do thee? It is true indeed in an earthly estate, it is a great matter to be well thought off by others, because then he shall be sure to be clear from the censure of earthly Judges: but it is otherwise between God and our selves, for he is both witness & Judge of all our actions, and can make our own hearts to speak for him against our selves. What should it profit a man, if all his neighbors round about him, should conceive an opinion of him that he is rich and wealthy, worth many thousands, and in the mean season he know himself to be poor and beggarly, & many thousands worse then naught, what benefit could any man take by such a persuasion? So likewise what comfort can a man take to hear others tell him of his good estate before God, that he is just and upright before him, a man fearing God and eschewing evil, when his own conscience knoweth by him that which all the world did never know, and God knoweth a thousand times more then them both.

Thirdly, from hence comfort ariseth to all [Use 3] God's true children and faithful servants, because he knoweth what they are & what their condition is: he cannot misconceiue through suspicion or surmise, nor be deceived by misinformation of others, because he knoweth them well, and therefore their estate is happy and blessed before him. True it is, it hath been the lot and portion of the godly to be falsely accused and traduced in the courts and accounts of men; yet in respect of GOD they may take comfort from this doctrine, for they shall appear just before him, & therefore they may defy the malice of Satan and of all their adversaries. If they labor to keep themselves pure and holy before him, howsoever they be esteemed of before men, let them rest and be content until they appear before the throne and tribunal seat of God, who will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the heart, and then shall every man have praise of God, 1, Cor. 4, 5. Psal. 7, 8, 9. & the malice of the wicked shall come to an end. This is the consolation that every soul may have, if he lead an upright life; for when men charge him, God will discharge him, and when they condemn him, he will justify him: and it should move us to bring all our thoughts, words, & deeds as into God's presence, being well assured that he knoweth all of them. This will work in us a care to walk warily, as Enoch did before the flood, Gen. 5, 22, & Abraham after the flood, Gen. 17, 1. The want of this meditation causeth all sin to break out of us.

Lastly, it will teach men to be patient under the hand of God. Are we in any trouble, [Use 4]and do we not know any particular cause why it should be so? Yet let us not murmur, but bear it with patience, because though we know nothing, yet God knoweth there is cause enough. As affliction cometh from him, so he knoweth wherefore he sendeth it, and we should stoop down under his hand. Whē Eli heard all that the Lord had threatened against him and his house, this was his resolution, It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good. We also ought to be patient and to hold our peace, and say with the Prophet, Psal. 119, 137. Righteous art thou, O Lord, and upright are thy judgments.

[Ver. 3. Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men that were upon the face of the earth.] The reason is rendered why he put up this wrong, he was a man lowly in his own eyes, of great patience, and singular humility; he did not storm and rage against them, he did not rail at them and revile them, he drew not out the sword of justice against them, or execute his authority, nor complain to God against them, though he himself were wronged, the people offended, and God dishonored greatly thereby. He sought not revenge in his own cause, neither desired God to be revenged of them. They could not be ignorant of his meekness, for this is such a virtue as cannot be hid [Object.] Now a question may here be moved, how the pen of Moses could thus praise himself in the highest degree, and call himself not only meek, but very meek: and not so only, but meek above all the men upon the earth; considering the counsel of Solomon, Prov. 27, 2. For answer hereunto, it may seem, that some things in the books of Moses are here and there inserted and dispersed, [Answer.] which could not be written by his hand, and therefore may seem to be added by Joshua, or some other of the Prophets after him: as Exod. 16, 35. it is said, that the children of Israel did eat Manna forty years, until they came to a Land inhabited, which is not set down prophetically, but added historically, not by way of foretelling what was to come, but of telling what was already come to pass: but in the days of Moses they were not come to a land inhabited, it was Joshua that conducted them into y^e land of promise. Likewise the history of the death and burial of Moses, recorded in the book of Deuteronomy, chap. 34, could not be penned by himself, but must of necessity be annexed by some of the Prophets. Neither doth this any way derogate from the authority of the writings of Moses, which were given by the inspiration of the Spirit, seeing we confess the Prophets which came after, spake by the same Spirit. But howsoever it be, this is certain that Moses and the Prophets, whether they praise or dispraise themselves, wrote no otherwise then as they were commanded and appointed. Besides, these words may be restrained to the cause and matter in hand, namely, y^t as by nature he was very mild and gentle, so he departed not from his humility, though he were exceedingly provoked by those whom he least suspected, and at whose hands he least deserved it. He became as a deaf man that heard not, and as a dumb man which openeth not his mouth, but used this as a reason to cast down himself farther before God, and as David said, I will be yet more vile in mine own eyes: so Moses saith, I will be yet more mild in mine own eyes. And herein was his meekness seen, hereby it was tried. Every man will seem to be mild when he is not provoked; but when we are teased and troubled, if then we keep our meekness, we show that we have this gift. It is no commendation to keep silence and hold our peace, when no mā wrongeth us, but if we can bear with patience the wrongs that are offered unto us, thē we may assure our selves that this virtue is in us. We learn from hence, That everyone in his own cause should be meek and lowly, ready to put up wrongs offered unto them, Prov. 24, 29. Ro 12, 17. Meekness is a virtue which adorneth all persons, estates & degrees; as the Magistrate, Josh. 7, 19, the Minister, 2, Tim. 2, 25: the master, Eph. 6, 9. Math. 26, 50: the wife, 1 Pet. 3, 4: a meek and quiet spirit is of great price, and much accepted in y^e sight of God: the hearer of the word of God, I am. 1, 21: the servant, 1 Pet. 2, 20. To be short, it adorneth every Christian in his general calling, Eph. 4, 1, 2. The examples of the Saints are many that have gone before us. David toward Saul. Stephen prayed for his enemies. Christ setteth forth himself as a pattern of this virtue, Math. 11, 29. and he hath left himself an example of it, by washing the feet of his Disciples, John 13, 5, 15. and by bearing the reproaches of the ungodly, 1 Pet. 2, 23.

The reasons to confirm the point, follow. [Reason 1] First, God the Father dealeth thus with us, he beareth with patience and long suffering, and forgiveth such as repent. Secondly, vengeance is the Lord's, it belongeth to him only & to his assigns, to wit, the Magistrates, & not to private persons. Such as take the sword into their own hand, doubt of God's justice, and in effect deny him to be just. Thirdly, meekness is a gift of the Spirit, and the contrary is a fruit of the flesh and of our corrupt nature.

If this be necessary for all, then we must [Use 1] learn the nature of it, and for this purpose consider what it is, the matter whereof it standeth, and the fruits thereof. Meekness is a gift of the Spirit, which moderateth anger & desire of revenge, forgiving offenses and pardoning injuries for peace and quietness sake: so that albeit a man be provoked by injuries received, yet he doth not intend nor enterprize to requite it, but brideleth all hatred & impatience. The matter wherein it must be shown, is private unto our selves. In the wrongs and injuries that touch our persons, we must be as Moses was in this place; we must set his example before our eyes: but in matters of God, when his glory is impeached, or his truth diminished, we must be earnest & zealous; not patient, not forbearing, not longsuffering, but as this Moses was in the case of God, Exod. 32 19, 27. when he saw the Calf, he waxed hot, not meek; whereas in this place in a matter concerning himself, he waxed meek, not hot. So it was with David, who held his tongue at his own wrongs, and was as a man that could not hear; yet he consumed away with zeal against the enemies that forgot God's word. The like we see in Christ our Savior, he was as a Lamb, meek before the shearer, & opened not his mouth: yet whē the Temple was abused, and the worship of God profaned, he made a whip of cords, and drave the buyers & sellers out of the Temple. Lastly, touching the fruits of it, we must understand, first, that it maketh a man with a patient and quiet heart to submit himself to y^e judgments of God; and not to murmur at thē, or to faint under them, as David, being in great distress through God's heavy hand upon him doth show forth this grace. Secondly, it maketh a man to bear the injuries of men with a quiet mind, yea to forgive and forget them. Thirdly, it maketh a man not only to bear the injuries of others, but to forbear to offer wrongs and injuries unto others. For whosoever is patient and meek in spirit, will rather suffer then offer wrong.

Secondly, we ought to labor for the moderation [Use 2] of all our affections, especially anger, hatred, malice, rancor, and revenge. The motives to stir and induce us hereunto are many, and of much force. First, it is y^e right way to blessedness, Mat. 5, 5. If we would be happy, or any whit regard this promise, we must get the spirit of meekness into our hearts, & express the power of it in our lives. Secondly, we must deal with our brethren, as God hath dealt with us; we daily wrong him by our offenses, and provoke him by our sins, yet he beareth with us: shall we then be so unlike to our heavenly Father, as by and by to revenge the wrongs done to us, and challenge him the combat that any way toucheth our credit and estimation? Col. 3, 13. Thirdly, without it we cannot hear the word of GOD to our comfort and salvation, but it is made utterly unprofitable unto us, I am. 1, 21. Fourthly, a soft and mild spirit pacifieth wrath, and heapeth coals of fire upon the enemies head. It must be our wisdom to give place to wrath, Rom. 12, 19. It is our duty to be pitiful and courteous, and to love the brethren, 1 Pet. 3, 8, 9. Lastly, it moveth us to cast up our eye to God's providence, and to assubject our selves unto it, as we see in the examples of Job and Joseph, who never sought revenge on them that did them wrong: but rest in the will and pleasure of him that ruleth all things.

[Use 3] Lastly, it reproveth such as are contrary minded, who never came near where this grace groweth. These offend diverse ways first, by anger, hatred, cruelty, and revenge, directly against the precept of the Apostle, Ro. 12, 19. Secondly, by rejoicing at the calamity of good men, as Shimei insulted over David when he fled from his son Absalom, and was constrained to pass over Jordan for safety of his life. So was it with the Babylonians & Edomites over the Israelites, Psal. 137, 7. Obad 12, 13. Thirdly, by envying and grudging to see others prosper, and to grieve at the sight of it. But it will be said, If we put up injuries, [Object.] we shall be accounted no better then fools and cowards, and be laughed at for our labor. Answ. [Answer.] We must not regard the corrupt judgment of man, 1 Cor. 4, 3. These that are wise in their own eyes, love the praise of mē more then the praise of God, John. 12, 48. Let us seek the praise of God, which is indeed the true praise: as for other estimation without this, it is but a shadow of true glory, if it be so much. And this is a certain rule, that it is no cowardice at all to obey God, and to follow his commandments, neither is it any point of wisdom to be ready to revenge, Ier. 8, 9. And tell me, to what end serve Magistrates in the commonwealth? to what ende serve masters in the family? are they not set up of God to end controversies between man and man, and quarrels between servant and servant? It is no want of manhood for a subject to complain to the Magistrate, and to say as the poor widow did in the Gospel, Auenge me of mine adversary, Lu. 18, 3. It is no part of a coward for the servant to acquaint his master with the wrongs that are offered unto him by his fellow servant. [Objection] But it is hard for flesh and blood to put up wrongs, and to digest the injuries which are measured unto us. Answ. I will say more then that, it is impossible for flesh and blood to do it, [Answer.] if we be no more then a lump of flesh: but withal I add, that flesh and blood in the matters of God are evil counselors; and if we have no more in us then these, and no farther work begun in us, it is certain we are not God's children, neither shall inherit God's kingdom. If we be not spirit as well as flesh, we are none of his.

4. And the Lord spake suddenly unto Moses, & unto Aaron, and unto Miriam, Come out ye three unto the Tabernacle of the Congregation; & they three came out.

5. And the Lord came down in the pillar of the cloud, and stood in the door of the Tabernacle, and called Aaron and Miriam, and they both came forth.

Hitherto of their sin: now we come to God's proceeding against them, consisting partly in a citation, partly in a conviction, and partly in the execution of punishment upon the principal offender. First, we see how the offenders are cited and summoned to appear before the Judge; for GOD doth as it were send a process for Miriam and Aaron to appear and hold up their hands at his bar to plead guilty or not guilty. He calleth the parties offending, and the party offended and wronged before him. Albeit the Lord know all things, yet he will proceed judicially against them. The doctrine from hence is plain, that God never bringeth judgments upon any people or person, but he doth first search and find sufficient cause▪ why he doth so. Whensoever he cometh to judgment, he will proceed upon a manifest ground, and upon a just and known cause; he never doth it rashly, but upon deliberation, Gen, 3, 13, 14, and 11, 6, 7. and 18, 31. Zeph. 1, 12.

The reasons are evident. For first, hereby [Reason 1] the justice of God is cleared: for hereby it appeareth, that whatsoever he doth inflict, he doth it not through any malice to their persons, but because they have justly provoked him by their sins: he doth it in love to justice, and in hatred to sin. He that hateth a man will smite him before he make any enquiry of the matter, as they dealt with Paul, they scourged him to know what he had done, and what was the matter of which he was accused, Acts 22, ver. 24. It is not so with God. Secondly, the Lord requireth that all Magistrates should observe this course, Deut. 13, 14. If then he charge them to enquire before they proceed to judgment, much more will the Lord himself observe the same order.

This teacheth us that the judgments of [Use 1] God must needs be acknowledged to be always just: though they be sharp and grievous, yet they are ever righteous. For we see he proceedeth upon known causes, he goeth not upon uncertainties, but seeth & knoweth all things which appear naked and open before him. The heart of man is shut up from the sight of men, and they cannot possibly discern what lieth and lurketh therein: only it is the Lord that discerneth the heart, Psal. 33, 15, 1 John 3, 20. The workman must needs know the work and whatsoever is in y^e work much better then the work it self. God is the maker of the heart of man, & therefore cannot but proceed upon just & known causes.

Secondly, this stoppeth the mouths of wicked [Use 2] men, which are ready to accuse God of injustice, as those in Isaiah 58, 3. where they complain as if GOD did not see or regard them: and Ezek. 18, 2, 3. they took up a proverb, saying, The fathers have eaten sour grapes, & the children's teeth are set on edge. These thought that God punished without measure or rather without cause. But as he knoweth all things, so he never doth anything, but he goeth upon a sure ground, he maketh enquiry first of all, and afterward proceedeth to judgment. Many do so harden their hearts, & forget their own ways, that they cannot perceive the just proceedings and punishments of God. If God once open their hearts to see the order which he observeth, they will confess his justice, & condemn their own folly.

Thirdly, it teacheth and instructeth every [Use 3] man, that he should search his own ways diligently, when the hand of God is any way upon him, and consider that God proceedeth in all his judgments justly, and upon a sure and tried ground. And if a man by searching and sifting his own ways, find somewhat in himself worthy of such judgment, he must know that God knoweth much more by him then himself doth, 1 John. 3, ver. 20. If the patient knoweth somewhat of his own disease, the Physician knoweth much more then he doth: so is it in this case, he that is a patient under God's hand, if he know anything by himself, he may well know that God knoweth much more: & if men by examining their consciences can find out somewhat, we may justly fear and suspect there is more behind that is vnespied of us, and therefore we have just cause to humble our selves under his most mighty hand. We should judge our selves, that we may not be judged of the Lord. There is no way to escape his judgment, that knoweth all and is ignorant of nothing.

Fourthly, it is a matter of great comfort to [Use 4] those that are the Lord's, because, though they be oppressed with false judgments & uncharitable calumniations of men, yet when he judgeth, he will judge righteously; when he cometh to try all the children of men, he will first make enquiry, before ever he proceed against them. Therefore this is the comfort of every man, he shall never be wronged before God, howsoever he may be before men; so that he may stand at defiance with all his adversaries whatsoever they be, forasmuch as GOD will proceed so justly and righteously with him. Though they have heavy and horrible things laid to their charge by malicious men, yet God himself will do them right: and albeit they be denied justice upon earth, yet with God they shall be sure to have righteous judgment.

Fifthly, this serveth to inform those that sit [Use] in any place of justice to do right to others, either public or private, in the commonwealth or in the family, namely, y^t they ought not to proceed, but upon a sure and known cause. It is the practice of God, so to do, and it ought also to be theirs, and as it is the practice of God, so also it is the precept and commandment of God, to which they ought to be obedient. Whosoever will judge truly, he must labor so to do it, that he pervert not justice. It is the course that God hath usually taken, and therefore they y^t would be like unto God, must proceed after the same manner, so as they have him for an example. First, we must make enquiry, and after the cause is tried & known, to sit in judgment, otherwise we can never deal justly. Pro. 18, 13. Acts 21, 33, & 22, 24. Some do altogether trust reports and accusations of servants, and have but one ear to hear: but as we have one ear that we lend to the accuser, so we should keep another always for the accused.

Lastly, this putteth us in mind of the general [Use 6] judgment at the last day, that all must appear before God's judgment seat, and be judged of him, Dan. 12, 2. True it is, there shall mockers arise, and there are such atheists already risen in the world, that shall say, where is the promise of his coming? howbeit the justice of God requireth it, though the patience of God do defer it. We see not this always done in this world. At that day shall every man receive according to the things he hath done in his body, whether good or evil. Let us therefore endeavor evermore to keep a good conscience toward God and men.

6. And he said, hear now my words, If there be a Prophet among you, I the Lord will make myself known unto him in a vision, and will speak unto him in a dream.

7. My servant Moses is not so, who is faithful in all mine house.

8. With him will I speak mouth to mouth, &c.

After the citation, followeth the convincing of those guilty persons to their faces. For in judgment, the parties accused must be present. This conviction hath a preface, commāding them to hear: for it is the duty of all to hear, when God speaketh: and the substance it self, containing God's arguing, pleading▪ & witnessing against them, and a reproof of them. In the pleading God declareth, that he communicateth himself in special manner to Moses above the rest of the Prophets: he spake to them by visions and dreams, but to him mouth to mouth; apparently, not darkly. But did Moses see God's essence, & behold him as he is? who is said to behold the similitude of the Lord. Answ. No man hath seen God at any time, Deut. 34, 10. Exod. 33, and 34. He saw the likeness of God, not the essence of God. He saw him in a certain resemblance so far as he was able to bear and comprehend, and farther then any other, and in a greater measure and degree then the rest For as God called him to a greater office and function, so he endued him with greater gifts, Heb. 3, 4▪ 5. Observe frō hence, that in former times God used many ways to discover and manifest his truth and will unto his people, Heb. 1, 1. See hereby the greatness and excellency of his hand, he hath diverse ways to manifest his truth, he useth what seemeth best to himself, Job 33. Again, we have occasion hereby to consider, that God's mercy is greater to us, thē to our forefathers: Christ hath left unto us from the bosom of his Father the doctrine of the Gospel shining bright in our eyes.

Moreover in comparing Moses with y^e Prophets, and preferring him: We see that God revealeth himself to one more then to another, and giveth greater gifts to some, then he doth to other: to Moses more plenti ully then to the Prophets: To the end we should stand in need one of another, and thereby bind us more closely together, and to try us how we will employ them to the good of others, as he doth in earthly blessings. This point is of good use unto us being rightly applied. Let [Use 1] not such as have received a greater portion and measure of grace, contemn such as have less: for should y^e servant disgrace or reproach such as the master of the house doth accept and approve, nay doth grace and honor? Mat 25.23. And as for such as have received less, let not them envy those that God hath made above them: for though one member in the body have more honor then another, yet is there no division in the body: so the stronger should bear with the weaker. Again, let every [Use 2] one be thankful for gifts received, that they may be sanctified to our selves and to others, 1 Cor. 14.18. Lastly, it behooveth us to [Use 3] stir up the gifts that are given unto us, and to desire the best gifts that thereby we may do the most good. It is dangerous to hide the gifts we have received, as the evil servant did his talent: And if to cover them under a bushel, much more to turn them and apply them to the destruction of the Church, & the subverting of the faith, as many do that are not sanctified. Let us labor to use them, and to use them well, that we may grow in knowledge, zeal and sanctification, lest they decay in us, & so be taken away from us, Mat. 25.28

My servant Moses is not so, who is faithful in all my house. In these words we have a notable description of Moses to his perpetual commendation and praise with God and men. It is a notable dignity and prerogative to be the servant of the high God. How do men delight to shroud themselves under the liueries of great men, and how much do they take themselves to be honored by it? how much more ought we to labor to approve our selves in the presence of the mighty God, and to show our selves to be his faithful servants? Observe farther the title given to the church, it is called the house of God, whereby he doth not mean the Tabernacle, but the people of God, over whom he was made ouerseer; so that he putteth the place for those in y^e place, the house for the family of God in the house: as Cornelius the captain is said to believe and to be baptized with all his house, that is, his household: so here we understand the family and church of God committed to his charge, which he led, ruled, and governed aright as a faithful servant to his master. The doctrine is this, that the Church or faithful are the house of God, Hebr. 3.6. 1 Tim. 3.15. 2. Cor. 6.16.

The reasons are plain. God dwelleth in it [Reason 1] as a master in an house, & there doth manifest and communicate himself familiarly to his people, as 2 Cor. 6, 16. Secondly, it is called his portion and his inheritance, Deut. 32, 9. It is his treasure and his flock, Acts 20, 28. 1. Pet. 5▪ 2, 3. Thirdly, it resembleth an house, which hath some builder, owner, and laws by which it is ruled. God is the owner of the Church, he hath built it by his Son, Pro. 9, 1. Hebr. 3, 4. who hath purchased it to be peculiar to himself through his own blood, and therefore the Church may fitly and justly be called his: he bought it with a great price, it cost him dear before he could redeem it. It was before the devils house, Math. 12, 44. He layeth claim to us, and challengeth man to be his own: the Lord Jesus took them out of his hand, & purchased them by giving his life, whereby we are become his possession.

This serveth to prove Christ to be true [Use 1] God equal to the Father, against such heretics as deny his deity. This house wherein Moses is commended to be faithful, is his house, he is the heir of it, the owner of it, & the great Sheeheard of the sheep; it is he that dwelleth in our hearts by faith, Eph. 3, 17. This house belongeth to none properly but to God; it is not the house of Moses, or of any man or Angel, but the house of God. Now this is truly called the house of Christ, Heb. 3. and therefore Christ is God. It is he that did build it, and set it up. No house can build it self, for nothing can be the cause of it self, but must be caused by some other: so must the house be built and made by another.

Secondly, conclude from hence, that there [Use 2] is one only true Church of the old and New Testament. The house of God and of Christ is one, wherein Moses long ago was faithful, and it is that which we our selves are. Therefore his dwelling house is the same. This house hath continued from the beginning, & shall continue unto the end. It needeth indeed often repairing, but it shall never be abolished, and taken out of the world. True it is, the Jewish Church had many types and ceremonies, howbeit in substance it is the same with the Christian Church.

Thirdly, we may gather the safe condition [Use 3,] of the Church. For who shall fight against the inheritance which he hath purchased, or ruin the house which he hath built, or enter upon the possession which he hath obtained and bought lawfully at a dear price, and be able to prevail? We see by experience, that a man will spend limb and life for his house & land where he dwelleth, and which he bought and paid for dearly. And will not God defend his inheritance which he knew before? whom he chose to be his before the world? whom in time he called, justified, sanctified, & will glorify? for whom he sent his only begotten Son from his own bosom, to lay down his life? This made the Prophet say, Israel is an hallowed thing, whosoever eateth it shall be consumed, and come to naught, Ier. 2, v. 3. John 10, 28, 29, We are his, given unto him by the Father, and he will never lose us: no man can take them out of his hand. This is a singular prerogative of y^e faithful, that Christ dwelleth with them, and abideth in them, John. 14, 23. Eph. 2, 19, 20. He will never suffer his house to perish, but giveth them his assurance and assistance to continue with them, which cannot agree with popish doubting and wavering, 2 Tim. 2, 19. 1 Pet. 1, 5. True it is, such is our weakness, that we are ready to give over our hold of God, but he will never give over the hold that he hath of us. His ancre is so firmly settled and fixed upon the ground of our heart, that no storms or tempests can shake or loose it. We are prone to leave him, but he is resolved not to leave us or to lose us. The Lord hath bought us too dearly to part so lightly from us. Our state therefore is sure and certain, we shall not fall away forever, whatsoever the Church of Rome holdeth, teacheth, and defendeth.

Lastly, let us labor to be of the household of faith. Let us not be profane in life and [Use] loose in conversation, but separate from the wicked of the world which are no part of God's house. We cannot be of the household of faith, and of the household of infidelity and impiety: forasmuch as there is no concord or agreement, no fellowship or communion between light & darkness, 2 Cor. 6, 19, 20. Let us prepare for Christ a good lodging and entertainment in our hearts, that he may dwell in us. Let us not offend him, or grieve him, or drive him away by our sins and disobedience, as Heb. 3, 6. His house we are, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope, firm unto the end.

[Who is faithful in all my house.] Moses receiveth this commendation from the mouth of God, that he was found faithful; a faithful teacher, a faithful Prophet, publishing the will of God to the Church. The doctrine is, It is required of all the Ministers of God, that they be found faithful and conscionable in their places, 1 Sam. 2, 35. Math. 24, 45. Luke 12, 42. 1 Cor. 4, 2, 17. The Prophets of God did stand upon their watchtower, they hearkened and heard what the people did. So did the Apostles, and so they taught others to do the like, Eph. 6, 21. Col. 1, 7, and 4, 7. 1 Tim. 1, 12, & 2 Tim. 2, 2. A virtue necessary for all.

This appeareth by the titles given unto thē [Reason] in the Scriptures: they are called Ambassadors of God, 2 Cor. 5, 20: the witnesses of the truth, Acts 10, 39. 1 Pet. 5▪ 1. The stewards of the family and servants of the house to give everyone their portion in due season; It is required of an Ambassador, to do the message of him that sent him: of a witness to utter the truth, and all the truth, and nothing but the truth: of a servant, to do his masters business committed to his trust.

Secondly, the good of the Church requireth it: for if it have unfaithful and unconscionable teachers set over it, that seek not the safety of the flock, it cannot be but many of the sheep will perish, Ezek. 3.18. Lastly, such teachers as are unfaithful, bring destruction upon themselves as well as upon the flock. God hath committed the sheep of his pasture to their safe and faithful keeping, such then as deal unfaithfully, shall bear their condemnation, and the blood of others shall be required at their hands, Eze. 33.8. Ier. 1.17. & 14.15.

[Use 1] This grace of faithfulness containeth the sum of all that is required of Pastors and teachers in the execution of their Ministry, and serveth to reprove sundry abuses. First, of such as are ignorant and unlearned, which have taken upon them to be teachers of others, but have not yet learned themselves. These are unfaithful in the house of God, and are not able to break the bread of life, they are entered into the sheepfold but cannot feed the sheep, they would be accounted dressers of the vineyard, but are not able to labor in it. These do greatly hinder God's kingdom, and destroy the souls of men, and further the kingdom of Satan, and are the main cause of much palpable darkness and ignorance. Such are much like to Jereboam's Priests taken out of the basest of the people, these are fit instruments to further idolatry, and all manner of impiety. Secondly, of false teachers, these also are unfaithful in the house of God, & destroy the souls of the people by false doctrine. The former did starve them, these do poison them, and both ways the people perish. It is all one whether we withhold bread from them, or infect it with poison. Such teachers the Apostle willeth to avoid, their false doctrine fretteth, eateth and consumeth as the Gangrene. Thirdly, of idle and unprofitable teachers, which eat the milk, & clothe themselves with the fleece of the flock, but feed not the sheep of Christ. These are lazy and loitering servants, that leave their masters work undone, & care not which end go forward; these may be fitly coupled together with the first, for it is all one with the people, whether their teachers be ignorant or idle. But touching themselves, their sin is so much the greater, because they can, but will not teach the people. Idle persons in any society are by the Apostle branded by the name of thieves, where he showeth that not to labor is to steal: not because they violently and forcibly take from others, and intrude themselves into their possessions, but because they are caterpillars and drones, eating that for which they never labored: so these men that live idly in the Church and of the Church, do incur the just rebuke of spiritual theft and felony, in y^t they live by the Church, but do not labor for the Church. The Church setteth them or rather hireth thē to work, but these tie up their own hands because they would not work: they reap temporal things of the people, but do not minister spiritual things to the people. Fourthly, of unskillful Ministers who also are unfaithful: these will needs be doing, but in deed can do nothing: they will needs be working, but they know neither how to begin aright, nor where to make an end. They can get up into the pulpit as well as the best, but when they are there, they do nothing less then preach, but abuse the place, the people, themselves, the word, nay God himself. A faithful teacher must be a workman that need not be ashamed, dividing aright the word of truth. A skillful Carpenter or master-builder knoweth by line & level how to square his timber, but a raw fellow never brought up to the trade, will hack and so mar and mangle the timber. The Apostle compareth the Ministers to skilful builders, not to them that can only hew and chop wood, for so every bungler can do that renteth it and cutteth it in pieces, he careth not how, so it be done. A Minister must be a master in his profession. Fifthly, it reproveth the abuses of scandalous teachers, who build with one hand, and pull down as fast with the other. The Apostle requireth that the Ministers should be vnreprouable, the lights of the world, the salt of the earth, and examples to the flock. These are like images placed and set up in cross ways, that point the way to the passenger, but cannot set a foot forward themselves; like the builders of the Ark that did good to others, but none to themselves; they saved Noah and his family, but were drowned and destroyed themselves. So these may peradventure be instruments of conversion to others, and in the end be condemned themselves. Nevertheless their evil life doth scandalize many that are without, and many that are within the Church. And albeit it be a fault to stumble at these, namely, to hear and not to regard what they teach, yet woe be to them that lay such stumbling blocks in the way. Lastly, of flattering teachers, another sort of unfaithful teachers in the house of God, that seek to please men, who sew pillows under every elbow, that say peace, peace, when there is no peace, that daub with untempered mortar. These are political wise men of this world (but nothing wise for the world to come) who, to secure themselves from danger, refrain themselves from delivering wholesome doctrine and powerful to the conscience of the hearer. If the Physician should deal so with his patient, he should kill him, & not cure him: or y^e Chirurgian so handle a wound taken in the body, he should not seek the healing of the wound, but the hurt of the person. They dare not say as Nathan did to David the king, Thou art the man; they dare not say as Elijah did to Ahab, It is thou and thy fathers house that have troubled Israel, 1 King. 18.18. They dare not say as John Baptist did to Herod, It is not lawful for thee to have thy brothers wife, Matthew 14. verse 4. They dare not say to the Scribes and Pharisees as Christ did, Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, but they are afraid of offending. All these six sorts are unfaithful teachers & we have shown the causes of their unfaithfulness, they are unfaithful through their ignorance, unfaithful through their errors, unfaithful through their idleness, unfaithful through their unskillfulness, unfaithful through their scandals, unfaithful through their flattery.

[Use 2] Secondly, this reproveth the people that upbraid y^e Ministers with too much teaching: for it is required of them that they be found faithful. They must teach & instruct in season and out of season: but many careless hearers advise them to spare their labors. Paul saith, Woe unto me, if I preach not the Gospel: he labored greatly, that by all means he might save some. Many tell us, we a^r too busy, and do meddle with reprovng sin more then we need: but how then should we be found faithful in the Lord's business? or how shall we escape the punishment of unfaithfulness in the great day of account? None shall receive the incorruptible crown of glory, but such as have been faithful: and none shall be exempted from eternal judgment that have been unfaithful. Such men care not how little they hear, that think the Ministers preach too much: nay they could be content to hear nothing at all, whose reward shall be according to their negligence.

[Use 3] Thirdly, it is the duty of the Ministers to labor for this virtue, and to approve themselves to God in a faithful and careful discharge of their callings. This is a duty which God so often and so strictly commandeth: and by the execution of that commandment we are said to save men by preaching, and to deliver from the pit of hell. This shall also bring unspeakable joy and comfort, peace and quietness to our consciences, when we are desirous to discharge our duties in truth and sincerity. Happy are they that have this testimony of their consciences, that they have this way promoted the glory of God, advanced the kingdom of Christ, and furthered the salvation of men. Oh how happy were it for us, that it might be said of us, as it is of Moses in this place, that we have been faithful in his house! and thrice happy shall we be, if at the last day, our Lord and master coming from heaven, as a man that beginneth to take an account of his servants, shall say unto us, Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord. If I should stand to set down particularly the parts of this faithfulness, whereby we may procure y^e commendation to ourselves which is given to Moses, I should stand too long. The Ministers must be men of knowledge, otherwise how should they teach knowledge? they must be men of zeal, of painfulness, and diligence, of an holy and unblameable life, of sincerity and uprightness. They must reprove sin, as God punisheth sin, that is, without respect of persons in whomsoever they find it: they must keep back nothing, but reveal the whole counsel of God. Finally they must take heed to themselves and to the flock, over which the holy Ghost hath made thē overseers. verse 28.

Lastly, that which is here particularly applied [Use] to the Ministers, ought to be extended & enlarged to all others which have received any calling from God, in what place soever God hath set us, we must be faithful in it. The Magistrate must be faithful in the government of his people, he must sing of mercy and of judgment. The Judge must be faithful in the ministering and executing of justice, having courage and hating covetousness, knowing that they judge not for man but for the Lord. The householder must be faithful in ordering and reforming, of his family, and walk in his house with a perfect heart, Psa. 101.2. To conclude, all inferiors must also be faithful in their place, to yield honor and reverence, to show trust and diligence toward their superiors, considering that God hath set them in their places, remembering that every man may gain glory to his Name, if he be found diligent, how mean soever his calling is, and knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free.

9 And the anger of the Lord was kindled against them, and he departed.

10 And the cloud departed from off the Tabernacle, and behold, Miriam became leprous, white as snow: and Aaron looked upon Miriam, and behold, she was leprous.

Now we come to the execution of the sentence. For when evil doers stand dumb before the iugde, and can answer nothing for themselves, but confess themselves guilty, what remaineth but to proceed to the punishment? as we see in the example of Achan who confessed he had sinned against the Lord God of Israel and was stoned with stones, and of him that came to the feast without his wedding garment, so soon as he was taken speechless, having nothing to answer for himself, the king said unto the servants, Bind him hand and foot and take him away, and cast him into utter darkness. The punishment is partly signified, in that, the wrath of God (by a metaphor drawn from men) is said to be kindled, so that he would hear the offenders speak no more unto him, declared by the departure of the cloud: and partly inflicted, she became leprous white as snow, that is, she was stricken with y^e most grievous kind of leprosy, because she was the author & procurer of this murmuring. Howbeit afterward it is in part repealed & reuersed, wherein we may see both y^e occasion & the mitigatiō of the punishment. The occasions are two: first the request of Aaron made to Moses, not to God, who refused to hear him lying in his sin, or rather not sufficiently humbled for his sin; as also he did Job's three friends, he would not receive a sacrifice at their hands, but Job must pray for them, lest he deal with them according to their folly. This request of his is both general for himself and his sister, that their sins may be pardoned and not imputed unto them; and likewise special for Miriam, that she might not be a spectacle and gazing stock to the whole host, and a monument of God's justice forever, but might be healed of that foul and unclean disease. The other occasion is the prayer of Moses directed to God; his hand had stricken and made the wound, and it is he that must and can heal & restore again. The mitigation of the punishment followeth, which is restrained to seven days, amplified by an unequal comparison drawn from the less to the greater, from an earthly father to his children, who if he should show any the least token of his anger and displeasure to his children, they would be afraid and ashamed for a season to come into his presence: how much more then ought she to be ashamed to lift up her head and to come unto the host, among whom the Lord dwelleth and walketh, being stricken with his judgment? For by spitting in the face is meant any token of reproach or disgrace. Therefore she was shut out and separate from the host seven days, during which time the people journeyed not, till that one member, as it were cut off, were again recovered & restored to the rest of the body. Thus much touching the order of the words to the end of the chapter.

First, let us come to the signification of the punishment, the wrath of God was kindled. We learn hereby, that the wrath of God is kindled against offenders, Deut. 32.22, 41, 42.

The reasons hereof are evident. First, the nature of God is most pure and holy, and he hateth evil wheresoever he findeth it. Secondly, sin maketh a separation between God and his people, it hideth his face from us that he will not hear. Thirdly, he punisheth sin and executeth judgment upon the sinner, yea he spareth none, no not his own children that provoke him by their sins, much less others; as we see in Adam, in Cain, in the old world, in Sodom and Gomorrhah, in Pharaoh and the Egyptians, and sundry others.

[Use 1] The uses remain. First we see, that anger is not simply to be condemned in man, but the excess or defect thereof, when it is too much or too little. It is a natural affection graffed in man, when it is moved as there is just cause; it is an holy affection, noted to be in Christ, he looked angerly upon them, mourning for the hardness of their hearts. And whē he saw the buyers and sellers in the Temple, the zeal of God's house did even eat him up, Now zeal is partly compounded of anger, and partly of sorrow, and partly of love. So must we be angry and grieved, if there be any love of God in us, at sin wheresoever we find it. Anger indeed for every trifle, or more then there is cause, is sinful, as also not to be angry when there is cause. But of this see farther, chap. 16.

Secondly, fear to offend him that is a consuming [Use 2] fire, and is able to destroy body & soul into hell fire. Everyone must learn to know what it is that doth offend him. It is y^e breach of his law: he is offended by blasphemy, by contempt of his word, by swearing, by idolatry, by breach of the Sabbath, and such like impieties forbidden in the first Table. These sins for the most part men do little think upon, and because the laws of men do not take hold of them, they regard them not one whit: whereas God hath most severely punished thē, and revenged the dishonor done to his name. The like we might say of adultery, drunkenness, malice, covetousness, and such like; they are for the most part thought to be no sins at all, and slightly considered off; whereas he is always the same, & his law is always y^e same, & his justice is always the same, and his wrath is kindled against the children of disobedience. Let no man make his mercy an occasion of sin, neither turn his grace into wantonness.

Lastly, let us give our selves no rest, till we [Use 3] be reconciled to God. It is a fearful thing to lie under his wrath. Be not quiet, until he be appeased toward us, & the sword put up into his quiver. The wrath of a Prince is compared to the roaring of a lyon, he sinneth against his own soul that provoketh him, much more may this be said of God. Use therefore y^e means and remedies to call in his anger, send an ambassage of peace unto him, the procuring of our peace standeth first in seeking above all things the favor and friendship of God. When Herod was displeased with the Tyrians and Sidonians, they persuaded Blast us the kings chamberlen to stand their friend, they desired peace, because their country was nourished by the kings country. We are nourished by God in whom we live, and move and have our being, and therefore we have more cause to come to him with one accord, and seek his favor. Secondly, in repentance and turning from our evil ways, whereby we prepare our selves to meet him. Thirdly, in prayer and humbling ourselves before him. Thus doth Aaron seek peace by stirring up the spirit of Moses to pray for them: and hereby did Moses procure their peace. Thus did they stand in the gappe afterward, when the hand of God had made a fearful breach among the people, and the pestilence had slain many thousands, whereby they made a blessed atonement, Num. 16.47, 48. Lastly the procuring of our peace consisteth in believing in Christ, and laying hold upon his merits and righteousness, which was signified by the incense that Aaron offered, when he stood between the living & the dead. Christ Jesus is our peace-maker, who hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us, he hath reconciled us unto God, so that by him we have an access unto y^e Father; by faith we are joined to him and lay hold upon him to eternal life. If we be earnest in seeking these means of peace, we shall be safe, for the danger of his wrath is gone and past, Psal. 2.12.

11 And Aaron said unto Moses, Alas, my Lord, I beseech thee, lay not the sin upon us, wherein we have done foolishly, & wherein we have sinned.

12 Let her not be as one dead, of whom the flesh is half consumed, when he cometh out of his mothers womb.

Here we see (as we noted before) that God would not hear the offenders unreformed speak unto him, neither abide any talking with them: but Aaron is fain to go to Moses, to entreat him that by his entreaty and intercession unto God, the punishment of leprosy may be removed; which is amplified by a comparison of likeness, that she may not be as one dead whose flesh is half consumed. We learn hereby, that God heareth not their prayers that lie in their sins, and are not reconciled unto him, Job 42.7, 8. Isaiah 1.15. Gen. 20.7.

The reasons why God heareth them not, [Reason 1] are first because they refuse to hear God speaking unto them; it standeth with the rule of equity that God should deal with them as they deal with him, and stop his ears against those that will not hear him. Secondly, his [Reason 2] wrath lieth upon them.

[Use 1] Conclude from hence that the prayers of the wicked are abominable, Pro. 28. Not only their sins provoke God, but their prayers and their best works, so that though they multiply them, yet he will not regard them. This showeth their wretched estate and condition, they have no access to God, they may come to his gate, but they can have no entrāce, it is shut up against them. They may knock & say, Lord, Lord, open unto us, but he will answer, Depart from me all ye workers of iniquity, I know you not.

Secondly, let none continue in any known [Use 2] sin, but wash their hearts and be reconciled unto God. For sin stoppeth the ears of God that he cannot hear, and casteth such heavy clogs upon our prayers, that they cannot possibly pierce the clouds, ascend into heaven, and come into the presence of God. Our iniquities wherein we delight, are as fetters and bolts that are fastened to our prayers, or as lead that presseth them down to the earth. The life of a sinner that lieth in his sins is of all other lives the most uncomfortable. For if we cannot pray to God in hope of mercy & forgiveness, when our sins disquiet us: or in hope of deliverance when our troubles oppress us: what comfort have we or can we have in anything under the Sun? On the other side, when the faithful lie under infinite calamities, sickness, poverty, shame, contempt, reproach, slander, infamy, sickness, being forsaken of all, and hated of all, even laden with an heap of misery and adversity; yet this is their comfort, they can freely go unto God, & have access to the throne of grace; they may pray unto him, & as it were pour out their cōplaints in his bosom.

Lastly, it is our duty, being reconciled unto [Use] God, to be reconciled to our brethrē also. For no man is truly at one with God, that is not made one with his brother▪ and except we forgive men their trespasses, our heavenly Father will never forgive us: therefore whensoever we bring our gift to the altar, and there remember that our brother hath ought against us, we must leave our gift before the altar, and go our way to be reconciled first of all to our brother. As then we desire forgiveness of God, so ought we to forgive. God forgiveth upon condition that we shall forgive. Those that are unmerciful shall never find mercy. We cannot have a more perfect president to move us to mercy, then to consider how God dealeth with us; he considereth whereof we are made, he remembereth that we are but dust. We think it much and oftentimes complain, that God will not hear our prayers; but we seeldome or never consider that the fault is in our selves, because we will not hear our brethren. And what exception can we take against our brethren, which God may not ten thousand times better except against us? Have we deserved better at their hands then to be so abused as we pretend our selves to be? so hath God of us, and we cannot deny it. Are we his betters and superiors? So is God ours. We use to say, we are not for him, we live not by him, we can live well enough without him? Neither doth God live by us, but we by him: and he can live without us (who lived before us) but not we without him. Have we often warned him to look to his ways and not to abuse us any longer? So hath God often warned us. Have we received wrong after wrong, and forgiven seven times, or seventy times seven times? So hath God forgiven us ten thousand talents for an hundred pence. If then we retain any malice in our harts, our prayers are not regarded, nay they are rejected as vile and abominable.

Alas, my Lord, I beseech thee lay not the sin vpō us, wherein we have done foolishly, &c. observe here a notable point in Aaron: he is not stricken with y^e leprosy, but is free from it altogether; Miriam is stricken with the leprosy, but it is Aaron that calleth for mercy, when he looked upon her and saw it: for the Priests were appointed to look upon it, and to pronounce the person to be either clean or unclean; so that punishments upon others should cause us to amend, and to look to our selves. Again, we ought to desire the good one of another, & to have a fellow-feeling of the miseries one of another. See also that he is as much humbled and cast down, nay more then she is for this sin, and confesseth he had done amiss. We learn hereby, that sin committed against God, must touch us and go near unto us though we feel no punishment. It is no great matter to be humbled when the punishment is heavy upon us; but to be brought low, even upon our knees, and to say with Aron, Alas, lay not the sin upon us, is a notable and necessary duty required of us. The most wicked men in the world that sin with an high hand will confess their sin under the cross, while the hand of God lieth upon them, as we see in Cain, in Pharaoh, in Saul, in Judas, and others, but this ariseth more in consideration of the punishment then of the sin: howbeit Aaron in this place felt no punishment, though he were a companion in the offense, which fell out in regard of the Priesthood. For if any ask, why he was not stricken with the leprosy, forasmuch as he was guilty of the same iniquity? I answer, it was not that his offense was slight, but because his office was great; he was a lively image of Christ Jesus our true Mediator, the only begotten Son of God. God would not therefore bring his person into contempt and reproach, lest the Priesthood also should be reproached. Besides, he did not contrive it, but consent to it, and was drawn no doubt after a sort, even against his will by his sister into a fellowship of this murmuring, as he had been before by the people to make y^e golden calf: she had the principal han^a in the sin, and consequently in the judgment. We must therefore be touched with sin principally because it is sin, not because the punishment lieth upon us: but though we should never be punished and plagued, though there were no day of judgment, no fear of hell, no sentence of death, no feeling of torment, yet sin should be bitter and grievous unto us, even because it is sin^a nothing in the world should trouble us more then that the law is transgressed, & God is offended. David was not in person stricken with y^e pestilence, though it did destroy at noon day, and thousands fell at his right hand, & ten thousāds at his left, neither came it near him, yet he was no less humbled & grieved in his soul, then if his body had been stricken with many running sores. Hezekiah had an express promise from God of adding fifteen years unto his days: and when his heart was lifted up, glorying in his riches and treasures, in his silver and gold, in his armor and ointments, in his spices and jewels, which he had shown to the messengers of the king of Babylon, the Lord threatened that in his sons days all those precious things should be carried to Babylon; so that he had peace and truth in his days: yet he humbled himself for the pride of his heart, both he and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

The reasons are plain, for first, this is a [Reason 1] sign of true humiliation & repentance, when we can mourn for sin, being free from the least touch of punishment, it is a plain token that we are touched with a conscience for sin it self. If only we be cast down for sin when God's wrath lieth upon us, we rather complain of the punishment, then cry out for the sin. Secondly, [Reason 2] sin is able to separate between God and us, whereby he is dishonored: and what ought to enter deeper unto us, then to consider how God is dishonored?

We may from hence lawfully and truly [Use 1] pronounce a fearful woe unto them, that are no way humbled when the hand of God lieth upon them and writeth bitter things against them; doubtless, we need crave no pardon if we affirm constantly & confidently, that they are desperate sinners. They fear neither God nor man, nor hell, nor death, nor damnation it self. They have been stricken from the soale of the foot even unto the head, there is no soundness in them, but wounds and bruises & putrifying sores, yet they will not know nor understand the hand that hath stricken them. Thus doth the Lord complain by the Prophet that he hath given them cleanness of teeth in all their cities, and want of bread in all their places, yet they had not returned unto him: he had withholden the rain from them, and yet they returned not unto him: he had smitten them with blasting and mildew, yet they returned not unto him: he had sent among them the pestilence after the manner of Egypt, and overthrew some of them as God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrhah, and yet they returned not unto him. Thus did they run on from evil to worse, & filled up the measure of their sins, that they could not be reclaimed by any punishments though never so grievous. I will propound one famous or rather infamous example to this purpose very remarkable in the Scriptures, and y^t is of Ahaz: the Lord brought great affliction upon him, but he sought to the king of Assyria, who helped him not, but not to the Lord who could have helped; & in the time of his distress, he did trespass yet more against the Lord. This was king Ahaz. Woe unto us, if it be so with us: woe be unto us if his judgments do not soften us, but harden us; not better us, but make us worse. The fire purifieth the gold & maketh it more perfect, but the dross and refuse it maketh worse then it was before. So is it with impenitent persons and all the reprobate, whom the Lord will in the end sweep away as dung from the earth.

Secondly, it is our duty to walk in obedience [Use 2] to God, principally because he commandeth it, not for reward sake chiefly, for so do hirelings, who if once the hire cease, will work no longer, We must be obedient for love to God & his law. But is it not lawful to do good in hope of reward, [Object.] & to propound to our selves that end? It is lawful, but that must not be the chief and principal end. Moses had respect to the recompense of the reward whereby he did shake off all drowsiness, encourage himself in well doing, and quicken his zeal in the service of God and his people: nevertheless he had other main ends y^t he aimed at. The love of God must constrain us, & his commandment bear sway in our hearts far above all rewards.

So doth Paul encourage himself to preach the Gospel, because he should have a reward if he did it willingly, and a fearful woe hung over his head if he did it not, 1 Cor. 9.16, 17. howbeit in another place he telleth us that the love of God constrained him, 2 Cor. 5.14. And the Apostle Peter stirreth up the Elders of the Church to feed the flock, because when the chief Shepherd shall appear, they shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away, 1 Pet. 5.4. yet himself was stirred up by Christ our Savior to feed his sheep and lambes, if he loved him, John. 21.15, 16. So then, we must labor to do good, though we see no reward, even in conscience of our duty to God. And it is lawful to abstain from sin for fear of punishment, but chiefly because the righteous God hateth it, and the just Judge condemneth it.

[Use 3] Lastly, let us hereby examine our selves, what account we make of sin, whether it be grievous unto us as it is sin, or not. If it be, we may comfort our selves, that we have received grace to humble our selves before the cross cometh: for then it is a free and voluntary humiliation. If we leave sin, because sin leaveth us, because we cannot follow after it, because we must leave the world, because we grow weary of it, because it bringeth shame and reproach, because we wax old and our youthful years are spent, this repentance is not thank-worthy, but falleth out sildome to be true repentance. This is a forced and constrained repentance, and consequently oftentimes, unsound, seeldome sincere. If we yield obedience for conscience sake, it is a token of sincerity. We see the example of Peter after he had fearfully denied his master, and sworn that he never knew the man, it pleased the Lord of life graciously to look upon him with an eye of mercy, and to restore him by the spirit of meekness; he had no punishment upon him, yet he went out of that place and separated himself from that ungodly crew, and wept bitterly, Matt. 26▪ 75. Happy are we if we can do the like. This humiliation shall bring peace and comfort at the last. It is a true note that we have learned to know sin. •f our souls can mourn in secret, whē we are in health, peace, at liberty, and in prosperity, it is a great mercy of God vouchsafed unto us: and his Name is highly to be praised, and his goodness to be acknowledged toward us, whiles others are hardened in their sin, and freedom from punishment emboldneth them to their destruction.

13 And Moses cried unto the Lord, saying, Heale her now, O Lord, I beseech thee!

14 And the Lord said unto Moses, If her father had but spit in her face should she not be ashamed seven days? let her be shut out of the campe seven days, and after that let her be received in again.

In these words we have the prayer of Moses, and the answer of God; when we cry, God heareth. Where we see, it is our duty to pray one for another, & to commend the causes of others unto God. When we see them in misery and affliction, we must be intercessors for them. We must do it for our enemies and them that hate us and have done us wrong. So it was with Moses in this place. Again, it appeareth hereby that the rebukes of parents are not lightly and slightly to be regarded of children, when they threaten or show an angry look or a frowning countenance, it should work shame and sorrow in them, 2 Sam. 14.24. Great is the authority of parents over their children, and great should be the reverence of children toward their parents, of which we shall speak more, chap. 30. They are over their children in the Lord, and must govern them in his fear. Nevertheless, the authority of God is much more over us, then ours is over our children, therefore his chastisements ought to go nearer to us, and more to humble us then the threatenings and chastisements of earthly parents, Heb. 12.9, 10. We have had y^e fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not be much rather in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? for they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness. The power of parents is a limited power for they must rule in the Lord: and the obedience of children is a limited obedience, for they must obey in the Lord, Eph. 6.1. but the power, of God is absolute over his children, and our obedience to him must be in all things. Besides, we may gather, that God heareth the prayers of his servants diverse ways: sometimes he granteth whatsoever we ask; sometimes he giveth more then we ask: sometimes he heareth in part that which we desire, and in part heareth not; part he granteth and part he denieth: and sometimes he giveth not the same which we ask, but some other blessing like it or greater then it: and sometimes he granteth our petitions, when he assisteth us, comforteth us, and giveth us patience to bear that he layeth upon us, of all which we have sundry examples in the word of God. And howsoever it pleaseth him to deal with us, and whether soever of these ways he heareth our prayers, we must submit our willes to his will, and rest our selves contented with that he sendeth. Moreover grievous sinners and open and gross offenders should be shut out of the Church, whereof we have at large spoken before, chapter 5. where we have handled the whole doctrine in a manner of excommunication: but when they be penitent & are thoroughly humbled for their sins, they must be admitted into the Congregation again and received into the bosom of the Church, to be partakers of the privileges thereof. Howbeit through the corruption of Church officers and the abuse of the censurers of the Church, some are cast out that ought to be kept in and nourished as obedient children of the Church; Thus it befell to the blind man, he gave glory to God being made to see, but he was cast out of the Synagogue by the Pharisees, John 9, 34, 35. He was a worthy member of the church, he believed in Christ and worshipped him. It is a comfort to all such as are thus entreated. Again, others are kept in y^e church and fostered in it, who justly deserve to be thrown out by the power of the keys, and to have the spiritual sword drawn out against them: so it was with the incestuous Corinthian that married his fathers wife, 1 Cor. 5, 1. he deserved justly to be put away from among them, yet they suffered this sword to rest in the sheath, and purged not out that old leaven, but suffered him to remain among them. 1 Cor. 5, 1, 7, 13. Such remissness and negligence was found in the churches of Pergamos and Thyatira, Reu. 2.14, 15.20. Others, that are justly banished out of the Church for some notorious crime committed against God, and offense given to the Church, are notwithstanding unjustly kept out after their repentance and humiliation: so it was with the penitent Corinthian, he was much humbled for his sin and offense, yet the Church was not so careful to receive him in as a member again, as they ought to have been, but as before they kept him in when he should have been rejected, so now they kept him out when he should have been received, 2 Cor. 2.7.8. 9.10.11. And if any be thus dealt withal, as many have been in former times, let us consider that our cause is not strange and singular, it is no other then hath befallen sundry the deer children of God before us.

[Let her be shut out of the Campe seven days, &c.] Notwithstanding the former prayer of Moses, Miriam must be put out from among them. Moses though he were much wronged, yet never complained to God against his brother & sister, nor against their wrongs, yet God will not pardon, but punisheth for those wrongs. For albeit he did pass over those injuries, yet God will not pass them over: and though he did not cry to God, yet their sin did cry, and God heard that cry. The Doctrine is this, that though God's children pray not against their enemies y^t wrong them and oppress them, yet their wrongs cry out aloud, and God heareth and punisheth the doers of wrong. The faithful are of a patient nature, and hold their peace when they are laden with cart-loades of injuries and reproaches, nevertheless God will not hold his peace; they are meek as Moses was, and put them up, but God will not put them up, nor suffer them to go unpunished. When Abel was slain by the treachery of his brother, he could not cry out: but after his death, his blood cried out for vengeance, Gen. 4, 10. Heb. 11 4. and 12.24. Hab. 2, 10.11. James 4.5. So did Naboth's blood cry for vengeance when he was dead, and that cry was heard.

And no marvel. For it is the office of God to execute vengeance, he is the Lord the avenger, [Reason 1] that will not hold the wicked innocent, nor clear the guilty, Exod. 34, 7. He hath said, Vengeance is mine. Rom. 12.19. Deu. 32, 35. Hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good? Secondly, he requireth it at the hands of all Judges and Magistrates to judge justly, & not [Reason 2] to accept the persons of the wicked: he giveth commandment unto them whom he hath honored with his own name, to defend the poor and fatherless, and to do justice to the afflicted and needy, Psal. 92, 2, 3. If then Princes which are God's upon earth must do right judgment, then certainly the God of God's, and Judge of Judges, will judge the people righteously, and govern the Nations upon earth, Psal. 67, 4.

This teacheth us, that God heareth, and seeth, and knoweth all things. Though our [Use 1] sins be never so secret, and men convey them never so closely, and labor to hide them by all the fetches and devices they can, yet they are open to him before whom all things are open and naked, Heb. 4, 13. Cain the first oppressor took his brother aside, and carried him into the field; none was partaker of the murder, or privy to it: yet the blood of the dead did proclaim and publish as it were with a loud and lamentable voice, both the sin and the sinner in the ears of the Lord of hosts, as fully and shrilly as the voices of living men can discover anything. Treasons and conspiracies against Princes, are plotted for the most part closely; for although they prepare many, yet they acquaint few with their most secret designs: nevertheless, God hath many ways to find out those persons and practices, Eccl. 10.20. Curse not the King, no not in thy thought, and curse not the rich in thy bed-chamber, for a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter.

Secondly, we may conclude the woeful estate of all wicked men that are oppressors, [Use 2] which think to over-beat the poor & needy, and sell them for a pair of shoes, Amos 2.6. For this should terrify such ungodly persons from sinning in this kind: they may indeed persuade themselves that they shall escape, or rely upon the favor and countenance of men, or that the poor pitifully wronged dare not mutter against them; which are encouragements to the mighty to commit sin and to live in it: howbeit this is a vain hope, and will in the end make ashamed: forasmuch as albeit they may conceal their purposes from men and avoid the place of judgment, yet they cannot escape the hand of God. Many receive great wrongs, that dare not open their mouths against their oppressors: the poor are trodden under foot of the rich, the weak of them that are strong, those of low degree by them that are mighty; nevertheless God will open his mouth in the cause of the afflicted, and stretch out his hand to recompense tribulation to all those that trouble them. This use is handled by the Apostle James, chap. 5.1, 2. Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you, &c. where he threatened these hard-hearted men with sundry judgments for y^e wrongs they did to just men: let not such therefore flatter themselves, but rather labor to break off their sins by righteousness, and their iniquities by showing mercy to the poor, if it may be a lengthning of their tranquility.

[Use 3] Thirdly, seeing God is the great avenger of the wrongs of his children that never call unto him for vengeance, then much more will he pity them and take their cause into his own hand when they call and cry unto him day and night to save them. The Lord gracious and merciful hath promised, that when the stranger, the widow, and the fatherless child are vexed and oppressed, and cry unto him, he will certainly hear them, Exod. 22.21, 22.23, 24. For if God stay not til they cry, because sometimes they cannot, and sometimes they dare not, & tarrieth not til they opē their mouths to complain: then we may be assured, that when the oppressed in their misery and anguish of their soul sigh and groan unto him, his wrath shall wax hot and he will kill their oppressors with the sword of his judgments.

[Use 4] Lastly, we have a singular encouragement from hence unto patience in suffering, even unto the coming of the Lord. He will take their cause into his own hand at the length, though they suffer long. Nay, it is the manner of God for the most part to leave his children in many troubles, until things seem to be desperate and past all hope of help; partly to stir up his people to seek to him with greater earnestness of spirit, partly to show the greatness of his own power what he is able to do, partly to catch the wicked in their own crafty counsels and devises, and partly to make it manifest that all our help cometh only from the Lord, which hath made heaven and earth, to the end that the work being his, the glory also may be his. We are ready to ascribe our deliverances to our own power or policy, and to say in vaunting wise, Mine hand hath saved me, Judge. 7.2. God is patient, and suffereth long, but in the end he payeth home, so that the godly shall lose nothing by their patience, and the ungodly shall gain nothing but God's vengeance. This might be enlarged by the example of the Israelites when they were in Egypt, the Lord could have delivered them before any of their miseries were brought upon them, but the time appointed was not yet come, and when all things seemed past recovery, suddenly God appeared for their delivery. Let us therefore be patient and stablish our hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, I am. 5.8.

15 And Miriam was shut up from the campe seven days, and the people iournyed not, till Miriam was brought in again.

16 And afterward the people removed from Hazeroth, and pitched in the wilderness of Paran.

In these words we see the punishment inflicted upon Miriam, God never threateneth in vain, but bringeth to pass whatsoever judgment he hath denounced. He threatened Miriam for her murmuring with the leprosy, behold here how he letteth nothing fall to the ground of that which he had spoken. Observe from hence, that such as are the principal doers in sin, are principally subject unto punishment. Aaron was accessory to this mutiny against Moses, but Miriam was chief in the sin, and therefore is also chief in the punishment. Simeon and Levi were not the only murderers of the Sichemites and inuaders of the city, but they were the chief ringleaders and therefore are only named, Gen. 34.25. and punished, Gen. 49.5. Jacob had a great family, as Abraham had three hundred and eighteen persons of his house which he armed and conducted for the recovery of his nephew Lot out of the hands of tyrants: so no doubt they gathered together many servants of their own and out of their fathers house, by whose help they slew the men of that place and spoiled the city. See also to this purpose, 1 Sam. 15.9, 21, 24, and 2.27, 28, &c. Num. 25.4. Joab offended as the kings instrument in numbering of the people, yet David had the chief hand, and therefore he is punished with the diminution of his people, the punishment is proportioned according to the sin, he sinned in numbering of them, the number of them therefore is exceedingly lessened, for there died of the people from Dan even to Beersheba seventy-thousand men, 2 Sam. 24.15. So in the killing of Uriah, David contrived the plot, Joab offered the means, the Ammonites put it in execution, 2 Sam. 11.15. 16, 17. Howbeit David is charged directly and expressly to have slain him by the sword of the enemies, and is most severely punished, 2 Sam. 12.9, 10, 11, 12. What then, may some say? [Object.] Are the instruments of other men's evils without sin? are they without fault, and to be holden excused, because they are not the first and principal doers? No: they are not without blame. For whosoever practiseth any evil, whether he be principal or accessory, is guilty in the sight of God; and therefore such as are ministers of other men's evils, are oftentimes punished, whether they be reasonable or unreasonable creatures, Gen. 3.14. Levite. 20.15. Exod. 21.28, 29, 32. Josh. 6.17. Isaiah 30 22. As God is just, so he punisheth the instruments of injustice. And as he pronounceth a woe against those that pronounce wicked decrees, so he hath destroyed those that have executed them, as 2 King. 1.9. the captains and their fifty were destroyed with fire from heaven, and yet these were but messengers and ministers of the King. Notwithstanding, though the instruments do offend and not escape, the chief punishment is ever reserved for the chief offender.

[Reason 1] For first of all such as are chief in government ought to stay their inferiors from evil, as the head governeth the members. Eli is charged with the wickedness of his sons, in that they made themselves vile, but he restrained them not, 1 Sam. 3.13. Such governors, make themselves the tail and not the head: whereas they should order those of their house, as the soul ruleth the body.

Secondly, God will require the blood of [Reason 2] those that perish, at the hands of the governors; for that which Ezekiel speaketh of the watchman chap. 3.17.18. holdeth proportion in every ruler: the Magistrate is the watchman of the common-wealth: the Minister is the watchman of the Church: the householder is the watchman of the family; all set as it were in their watch-tower, and all must give an account for such as are under them.

Thirdly, the sin of those that have the [Reason 3] chiefest hand in it is greater then of others; as then it is greater, so it deserveth the greater punishment: forasmuch as the sin and punishment shall be suitable and proportionable one to the other.

It belongeth to all, especially to such as are [Use 1] superiors, to consider this; they think themselves absolute, and that they ought of right to command what they list to their inferiors. But as they are superior in place, so they shall also be superior in punishment, if they command anything against God and his word. Everyone therefore must look to his charge committed unto him as a field to till, and be good examples to those that are under them, Pro. 27.23. Psal. 78.71.72. Superiority is both an honor and a burden: as it advanceth to dignity, so it inferreth and requireth a duty. The honor is great, but the burden & charge is far greater.

[Use 2] Secondly, it is the duty of all householders to be careful to order their families aright, and to compel them to serve the Lord; The authority that Princes have in the commonwealth, 2 Chro. 14.4. the same have householders touching y^e ordering of their households, Gen. 25.2. they must reform abuses, & purge their houses of them that be intractable and incorrigible, Psal 101.2. In the fourth commandment, the master of the house is charged to look to his family, to his servants and children. See, see, I say, hereby the misery of our times and people; they suffer those that are under them to go whither they will, and to do what they list▪ they never do so much as call them to an account where they have been, or what they have done; whether they have served GOD or the Devil. So they have their own work done upon the other days, they give thē liberty to all other works upon the Lord's day.

Lastly, there cometh a great blessing upon [Use 3] their heads that are the chief and principal in any good work, that draw on and encourage others in the ways of godliness, for they shall have a chief and principal reward. Happy and blessed therefore are they that govern their charges as becometh them, Gen. 18, 18. Abraham shall be a great and mighty Nation, and all the Nations of the earth shall be blessed in him: and the reason is added, because the Lord knew him that he would command his children and his household after him, that they might keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment. This is a notable commendation of him, he was chief, and one that went before the rest in good things, & therefore he should chiefly be rewarded. O that the like might be said of us! This should stir us up, not only to do good, but to be chief in doing good, to go before others, to lead them the way, that so we may have the greater and better reward in that great day.

[Miriam was shut up from the Campe seven days.] Here we may behold the mitigation of the punishment inflicted upon Miriam. If we weigh and consider her deserts, so heinous was her sin in equalling herself unto Moses, and despising his calling, that she deserved to be shut out seventy times seven days: but God dealeth not with her according to her deservings: but changeth the perpetual punishment into a temporal chastisement, which should continue not seven years, or seven months, but seven days only. When Uzziah usurped the Priests office and would needs burn incense upon the Altar of incense, he was stricken with leprosy, and he remained a leper unto the day of his death, 2 Chron. 26, 21. The sin of Miriam was not much less, yet God dealt mercifully with her at the entreaty of Moses, so that she was cut off from the host only seven days, that deserved to be stricken all the days of her life. Observe from hence, that GOD doth mingle his chastisements with much mercy, and doth not deal with us according to our sins, Lament. 3, 32. Luke 1, v. 20. 2 Sam. 24, verse 13. Psalm. 125, 3.

Mark the reasons hereof. First, he is slow [Reason 1] to anger, and of great kindness, more ready to show mercy then to send judgment, Psal. 103, 8, 9. Secondly, he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men, Lam. 3, 33. Thirdly, he dealeth with us as a father dealeth with his children, & spareth them as a father doth his son that serveth him, Mal. 3, v. 17. Psal. 103.13. Isaiah. 49.15. Fourthly, he spareth oftentimes the wicked and ungodly, and poureth not all his wrath upon them; and so prone is he to show mercy, that an outward humiliation hath obtained a mitigation and prorogation of the punishment. For when Ahab, hearing the threatening of God denounced to come upon him as a fearful thunderbolt, and against all his house, so that such as died in the city should be eaten of dogs, and such as died in the field should be eaten of the fowls of the air, he rent his clothes and put on sackcloth upon his flesh, he fasted and lay in sackcloth: the word of the Lord came unto the Prophet, saying, Seest thou how Ahab humbleth himself before me? because he humbleth himself before me, I will not bring the evil in his days, but in his sons days will I bring this evil upon his house, 1 King. 21.27, 29. This was but a temporary repentance, as appeareth in the chapter following, verse 8. yet it was not altogether fruitless, but obtained a blessing answerable to the repentance: the repentance was for a time, the deferring of punishment was for a time also. If God grant thus much to the penitency of an hypocrite, we may be well assured that he will be gracious to such as bring forth true repentance and the fruits thereof. Fifthly, we are the workmanship of God created by him: who willingly destroyeth not the work of his own hand? therefore he is not pleased with the striking of them, Job. 10.8. &c. Isaiah 38. Lastly, he seeth what is in our hearts, he knoweth that we are but dust, even as a wind that passeth away, Psal. 78.39. Therefore he is full of compassion, he turneth his anger away, and doth not stir up all his wrath.

[Use 1] Learn from hence that God is compassionate, he is soon entreated upon our serious repentance. He taketh no pleasure in our destruction, he desireth not to crush us under his feet, he is full of mercy and goodness. This is the nature of God, these are his titles. And howsoever he may seem to our corrupt affections to be severe, and rigorous, as the evil and unfaithful servant speaketh in the Gospel, Matth. 25.24. I knew thee to be an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strewed: yet even in his corrections and our afflictions, his great mercy and moderation appeareth, 1 Cor. 10.13. This is a singular comfort to all that are in distress, whether it be of body or mind, to consider how God is affected toward us.

[Use 2] Secondly, we see that happy is the state of the Church, no evil shall overtake those that are truly the Lord's, farther then tendeth to their good, Gen. 19.16. their afflictions shall fall out to the best. We deserve to be made like to Sodom and Gomorrhah. We know the affliction of Job, and the ende that GOD made, for he is very pitiful and of tender mercy, I am. 5.11. Now he is evermore the same, with him is no change or shadow of turning; as he was good to him, so also he is and will be good to us.

Thirdly, is God thus favorable? then be assured that the soul which returneth shall [Use] live, Ezek. 18.25. and 33.11. As I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways, for why will ye die, O house of Israel? It is with God as it was with the woman that had found her groat, as with the shepherd that had found his strayed sheep, as with the father that embraced his lewd and licentious son.

Such as begin to see their sin, must not think it to be too late to return. When God calleth and crieth out so often, so earnestly, so lovingly, turn ye, turn ye frō your evil ways: shall we answer as infidels, or as men in despair, the time is past, it is too late? when God saith, Why will ye die? shall we reply against God, nay indeed against our own selves, It is too late to live? Let us bewail the abuse of God's mercy, patience, and long suffering, but withal we must know that the Lord delighteth not in the death of a sinner, but would that the should live.

The people journeyed not till Miriam was brought in again. See here the greuousnesse of sin: it was committed by one or two, but the contagion of it passeth farther: it was the worse for them that were near unto it, for the people were stayed and could not go forward. Sin therefore hurteth not only those that commit it, but such also as come near it, and troubleth those that are within the reach or sent of it. Again, as God is just in causing her to be shut out of the host, so he is merciful in suffering her to be brought in. And here is an instruction to the Church of God, that they be not too rigorous in execution of the discipline and dispensation of the keys. We must be as ready to receive the penitent, as zealous in casting out the impenitent. We have spoken already of putting out of the Church open offenders, and of the mitigation of the censure at the commandment of God; now before we end the chapter, observe the quality and condition of the person against whom God proceedeth. Miriam was a great Prophetess, the sister of Moses, and Aaron; and great suit and supplication was made to God for her, that she might be healed of her leprosy, and received again into the assembly, yet she continueth a leper, and as an excommunicate person. We learn hereby this truth, That no man, though never so excellent, of what place soever he be, can be free from God's judgments, when he hath sinned against him. What was it that drove Adam out of the garden, and as it were banished him into the rest of the earth? Gen. 3.24. was it anything but disobedience? 2 Sam. 6.7. Who hath sinned against the most High, and hath not reaped the fruit of his own ways? Let the Angels speak that first sinned, and were first punished: who because they kept not their first estate but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, unto judgment of the great day, Jude verse. 6. Was it any better with the old world, among whom were men of all sorts high and low, rich and poor, old and young; they sinned together, and as it were made a conspiracy with one accord against God, in the end they are swept away together with one universal Flood, Gen. 7. The like we might say of Sodom and Gomorrhah, and the cities about them, which giving themselves to fornication, and going after strange flesh, suffered the vengeance of eternal fire, Jude ver. 7. The like we may say of kings and Princes, nobles, judges, Magistrates, old and young, bond, and free, 2 Sam. 12.10, 11. 2. King. 7.19, 20. and 1.9, 10. Luke. 12.20, and 16.22, 23. Psalm. 82.6.7. and 49.2.10. 1. Sam. 2.29.30. Luke 1.20. Eccle. 11.9. 2 King. 2.24.

[Reason 1] God chastiseth his children, that they should not be condemned hereafter, 1 Cor. 11.30, 32 when they run astray, he putteth as it were a bridle in their mouths whereby they are curbed and kept in obedience.

Secondly, he is constrained to take this course, least they should trust in themselves, whereas they should trust in the living God, 2 Cor. 1.8.9. We are hardly driven out of our selves, and to renounce all confidence in the flesh. We are quickly induced to sacrifice unto our net, and to burn incense unto our drag, Hab. 1.16.

Thirdly, he doth it to humble us and to prove us, Deut. 8.2. Revel. 2.10. and that he may do us good in the latter end, Deut. 8.16. 2 Sam. 16.12. so that he aimeth evermore at our good.

[Use 1] Uses follow. See from hence the cause why they keep God's word, whiles other run on in evil: Psal. 119.6.7.70.71. It is good for them that they are afflicted, for before they went astray and wandered from his commandments. Doubtless, if they had all things that the corrupt flesh desireth and lusteth after, they would run into all excess of riot with other men: for as they are no better then other by nature, so their works would be no better then the works of others. God seeing much dross in them, is driven to cast them into the fining pot to purify them, that they may be as pure and precious gold in his sight.

[Use 2] Secondly, we must learn hereby to justify God and to condemn our selves. For if sin draw down his judgments upon the most excellent that offend, then doubtless we are bound to confess, that in his corrections he is just and merciful, Lam. 3.22. When he afflicteth a nation or particular soul with famine, sword, or pestilence, as his quiver is full of arrows, he correcteth indeed, but the cause is in our selves, for his iugements are wrought out by man himself, and we must learn to search out the cause in our selves. It is sin only that deserveth and draweth down his judgments. We must therefore learn to justify God in all his ways and works, yea, if he should overthrow our nation, and strike down our brethren and sisters, and bring us utterly to confusion because we provoke him daily by our iniquities: his compassions never fail, and for that cause alone we are not confounded.

Thirdly, we learn that there is no respect [Use 3] of persons with God in punishing, for none shall escape his hand. He punisheth not the simple, and letteth others escape, no man can plead any immunity or impunity by his high place, by his honor, riches, possessions, or any other prerogative whatsoever, Rom. 2.6. for he will render to every man according to his deeds. He looketh not upon the outward appearance, but so many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law; and as many as have sinned in the Law, shall be judged by the Law. As God in the decree of his election respecteth no man's person, nor in bestowing his graces of salvation, which are the fruits of election, as vocation, faith, justification, sanctification, and such like: so in his corrections and chastisements, he doth not strike the poor and spare the rich, wink at the noble and honorable, and strike down the vnnoble and baser sort; but he respecteth everyone as he findeth him, and punisheth sin wheresoever sin reigneth, that all should fear.

Fourthly, conclude necessarily, that the [Use 4] wicked cannot escape. If he strike his friends, he will not pass over his enemies If the gold must pass the furnace, the dross shall be rejected. If the good corn must be ground in the mill before it can be bread for the use of man, the chaff shall be burned up with fire unquenchable, Prov. 11.31. 1 Pet. 4.17, 18. Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth: much more the wicked and the sinner? and if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly appear? It is well said of one, that the tribulations and afflictions of good men, do not bring them behind the wicked, but rather show that the plagues and punishments of the wicked are yet behind, for God reserveth wrath for them, Nahum. 1.2. and will take vengeance of his adversaries, Ierem 25.29. Luke 23.28.31. The death and passion of Christ hath taken away y^e vengeance & curse of the afflictions of the godly, as he hath taken away the sting of death and strength of the law, though both death and the Law remain; so that whatsoever remaineth in the cup for us to drink, is wholesome and medicinal.

The ungodly do now laugh at us and deride us when they see us beaten at our Fathers hand in the house, or at our masters hand in his school: so it was with David, they clapped their hands and made a great shout when he was under the rod, saying, Aha, where is now his God? Psal. 41.5. now he lieth, he shall rise up no no more, verse 8. Psal. 69.12. but let us wait a while, before the time be long, we shall see them scourged with whippes, and cast in prison where they shall never get out. They shall be put in the stocks as evil doers; they shall be arraigned as guilty persons, and receive the sentence of condemnation, as traitors against God: woe unto them, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

[Use 5] Lastly, let us learn to reform our rash judgment touching the suffering of the servants of God. We are ready to judge them as plagued of God, Psal. 73.14. howbeit we are not to judge men to be wicked and ungodly, to be strangers from God and from his kingdom, because we see sometimes the hand of God to be strangely upon them; for as much as they may belong unto God, albeit they suffer in that manner and measure. Rather we ought to admire and wonder at God's judgments, which are so just, that he will not spare his own people when they sin against him: and it is rather an argument that they are the Lord's, because judgment beginneth at his house, and he will begin to plague the city where his Name is called upon. When we see stones cut, and hewed, and squared, should we therefore think and thereby conclude that those stones were not regarded, or that they were good for nothing? We should rather judge that they are fitted to some special part of the building. So if a man come into an orchard, and find many trees cut and pruned, he knoweth it is the better for them, because they are thereby made to bear the more fruit: whereas such as are wild and crabbish are let alone. So in the Church of God we see some men lie under afflictions, and the hand of God sore upon them, these we may judge to be as lively stones cut and hewed for God's building, or as good trees pruned to bring forth more fruit: as for others, they are as stones refused, being suffered to run on in their sins, and not regarded of God. For if God did take any pleasure in them, he would afflict them, and make them fitter for himself. He winketh at many sins in the wicked, which he will not do in his own children, because they are so near to him, they are so dear unto him, therefore he looketh for more at their hands, then he doth of others, as he revealeth more unto them then he doth unto others. He giveth them more knowledge, and he requireth of them greater obedience, or else they taste of his deeper chastisement. A fire although it burn at the last that which is farther off from it, yet at first it taketh hold of that which is nearest to it and burneth it, 2 Sam. 14.30. Exod. 22.6, So God who is a consuming fire, albeit he will punish the wicked that they shall not escape, which are strangers unto him, and far off from him, yet he will begin with his own first, because they are nearest unto him. To conclude, as we are not to think the estate of the wicked the better, because they live in pleasure and prosperity, so we are not to esteem the condition of the godly to be the worse, because they lie under adversity, and the ungodly deride them and mock and scoff at them in their misery and calamity.

CHAP. XIII.

1 AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

2 Send thou men that they may search the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel: Of every tribe of their fathers shall ye send a man, everyone a Ruler among them.

HEere is the fourth example of their murmuring. For the Israelites, thorough the occasion of such as searched the land and brought up a false report thereof, murmured against God, as if he had never purposed to give them possession of the land of promise. This point is handled to the end of the next chapter, showing their sin, their punishment, and their reconciliation unto God. Consider in this Chapter two things, the search of the Land, and the report given after the search. In the history of the searching, are set down, the things going before, to wit, God's commandment to Moses, but at the people's request, Deuterom. 1.21 For they come to Moses, willing him to send men to search the land, being now not far from the borders of it: Moses declareth their petition to God, who approoueth of it and showeth that he is well pleased with it, as appeareth in this place.

Secondly, Moses sendeth men, not light headed persons or base companions, of no worth or reputation, but the choice of every tribe, that their testimony might be more certain and carry greater credit among the people. These are set down by name, of every tribe one; verse 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, so many, that the matter might be carried without partiality; and no more, lest the discoverers should be discovered, & the messengers intercepted. Again, if all had been of one Tribe, or if these that were selected had been of no note, their testimony might be thought partial and uncertain. But being indifferently chosen from among all the people without inclining or declining to any side, they have their commission given unto them, to view the land, the people, and the cities. The Land, whether it were barren, or fruitful; wooddy, or champion; good, or bad. The people, whether strong, or weak; few, or many. The Cities, whether walled or not walled.

The search it self containeth the fact of these twelve men sent out solemnly by the authority of God, by the commandment of Moses, and by the consent, yea the desire of the people themselves. What they did, is set down, first generally, they went up, they searched the Land from the wilderness of Zin unto Rehob, &c. then specially they came to Hebron, where gyants dwelt and inhabited, then to the river of Es•col, that is, of grapes, where they cut down a mighty branch with one cluster of grapes, which for the weight & greatness thereof, they carried on a bar between two of them, with other fruit of the country for a trial, verse 23. Neither may this any way seem unto us either impossible or vnprobable, forasmuch as Strabo witnesseth, that in the region of Margiana, and under the Mountains of Taurus or Caucasus (where it is likely the Ark rested after the flood) are the most excellent vines in the world, and clusters of grapes found containing two cubits in length: and it is the more probable, because that place agreeth in climate with this part of Palestine, where the searchers of the Land found these branches of equal bigness. God had promised unto their fathers, to Abraham and his posterity, to give them the Land, and he that cannot lie would perform it: nevertheless for the furtherance of his promise, he would have them use the means to work out his providence.

The doctrine. Howsoever God be able without any means and instruments to bring his purposes and promises to effect, yet it is the duty of the godly to further the same by all such means as God putteth into their hands. We see this in Hezekiah, he was certified in his mortal and desperate sickness (for there was no hope in any art of man) frō the mouth of God, that he should live fifteen years longer, yet he must apply the dry figs to his boil; and no doubt he used food and raiment for the sustenance of his body, and the curing of his disease, which hereby seemeth to be the pestilence. So Acts 27, 31. This also we see in Rahab, albeit she had a promise of the spies for the preserving of her life, the saving of her household, and the sparing of her kindred; yet to be more sure and secure, she useth means, she bindeth them with an oath, keepeth within the doors of her house, and tieth the line of scarletthread in the window, Josh. 2, 18. Likewise touching Noah's preservation, he must build the Ark, and thereby be saved, Gen. 6, 14.

For we must consider, that no blessing is to [Reason 1] be looked for at the hands of God when he sendeth means, if we do not use them. Indeed God is not tied to them, but can work without them, yet he will not help us without thē when he affordeth and offereth them unto us. When the Aramites came against Joab, he encouraged his soldiers, willing them to be strong and valiant, and to play the men for their people and for the Cities of their God, and then let the Lord do that which seemeth good in his eyes, 2 Sam. 10, 12. So the people of God had promise of the destruction of Jericho, nevertheless they must compass the walls seven days together, and blow with Rammes horns, or else they could never have entered the City, Josh. 6, 4, 5.

Secondly, to neglect the means, is no better [Reason 2] then a flat tempting of God. For when Christ our Savior was tempted to cast himself down from the pinnacle of the Temple, he showeth, that the doing thereof were a tempting of God, Math. 4, verse. 7. It is written, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. He repelleth the temptation by this Scripture. Whereas therefore there was an ordinary and common way to descend by stairs, he could not cast himself down without manifest tempting of God.

It is the duty of everyone in his calling to [Use 1] use the means carefully & conscionably that God hath appointed, if ever we look for any blessing from him. Hence it is, that Paul instructeth the Church of the Thessalonians to labor and work with their own hands, and to do their own business, 1 Thess. 4, verse. 11. It was not enough for them to say, they depended upon GOD for their food and daily bread, but they must work out his providence by their diligence in their calling. We have no promise of blessing without this. God was able to have given the Israelites the Land of promise without this search, yet he would have this means used, for the manifestation of his own glory, and for their further assurance of it. For means are granted to help us, not to help GOD; us, that need them; not GOD, that needeth them not.

Secondly, we must take heed we do not trust in the means, although we be commanded [Use 2] to use them, yet should we not rest in them, but look higher and lift up our eye farther; otherwise they are merely vain, either to help or deliver us, to save or defend. The Prophets teach, that an horse is a vain thing, and Princes vain to trust in. This appeareth in that proud Goliath, the chāpion of the Philistines, he came in the confidence of his own strength, with a sword, & with a spear, and with a shield: but did they profit him? nothing at all, his helmet of brass upon his head, his coat of mail upon his body, his greaves of brass upon his legs, his target of brass between his shoulders, the staff of his spear like a weavers beam, could do him no good, they were the god upon whom he depended. Contrariwise, David showeth where his hope and trust was, when he said unto him, I come unto thee in the Name of the Lord of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whō thou hast defied. The inhabitants of Jericho trusted in their high, thick, and strong walls: but this proved vain, for they found little defense and relief in them, when notwithstanding all their courage and confidence, GOD laid them flat to the ground, by weak and simple means, Josh. chap. 6, verse 20. It is in vain to trust in riches, Luke chap. 12, verse 20: or in strength, Judge. chap. 16, verse 17: or in wisdom, 2 Sam. chap. 17, verse 23: or in all these, Ier. chap. 9, verse 23, because GOD can overturn them with the least breath of his nostrils.

[Use 3] Thirdly, learn that God is not tied to use means, he can, when he pleaseth, work without them, as he did in the creatiō, giving light to the world without the Sun, and taking away the light thereof in the time of Christ's passion, Math. 27, 45. Darkness was over all the Land. So he nourished Moses and Elijah forty days without food. He hath bound us to them when he hath given them: howbeit, he hath not bound himself evermore to use them.

[Use 4] Fourthly, seeing this is required of us in temporal and earthly things, much more is it necessary in heavenly things. Such persons as will use no means, whereby they may come to faith and repentance, do indeed no more repent and believe, then a man can be able to live and prosper, to grow and wax strong without meat and drink. And herein we are to beware of a twofold deceit, whereby many sorts are blinded and bewitched. The end of our faith is the salvation of our souls, 1 Pet. 1, 9. To attain to this, we must use the helps and means that God hath left & sanctified. Nevertheless Satan persuadeth many thousands in the world, that they shall attain well enough to this end, and ariue safely in this harbor, although they never use the means, and that they shall in good time reap eternal life, though they never sow the seeds of a sanctified life. Now is the seed time: now is the time of laboring and of working: we shall never reap a good harvest and a plentiful reward, if we use not the means to come thither. He that sitteth still and runneth not at all, can never win the prize, or wear the garland. But as it is with us in temporal things, for the saving of the body, so it is in spiritual things for the salvation of our souls. Notwithstanding, men are for the most part great enemies in this respect to their own souls. They say, God is a merciful God, and Christ Jesus is a most blessed Savior, we hope he will save us and bring us to heaven: and yet they omit, and neglect, and contemn the means of salvation, to wit, the hearing of the word, the calling upon God's Name, and the receiving of the Sacraments. They that use these carefully and conscionably, declare plainly, they look for salvation: as for others, we regard not their words, when we see they look one way, and their works another. It is in vain to dream of salvation, without using these. We imagine an heaven to our selves without these, and a salvation of our own devising; but in the mean season, let us take heed lest we be shut out of God's heaven, and deprived of that salvation which he hath appointed for his children.

This serveth to meet with a perverse and profane opinion of such as reject second causes as needless and unprofitable, which reason that if God have elected any to salvation, what need they care what they do? they are sure (howsoever they live) to be saved: and if God have rejected any, they shall be damned, how well soever they live.

To answer these vain and ignorant persons, observe with me two found rules to be known and acknowledged in Christian religion; first, the chief and principal cause being put and granted, it is not necessary that the second and instrumental cause should be removed and taken away: both of them may well stand and agree together. For though one be subordinate to the other, yet both of them as good friends join hand in hand, and neither of them overthroweth the other. The Sun doth not in vain rise and set every day, though God as the first cause created the light. The fields are not in vain ploughed and sowed by men, and watered with the early and latter rain from heaven, although GOD bringeth forth corn out of the earth, and giveth bread to strengthen man's heart, Psalm. 104, verses 14, 15. Our bodies are not in vain refreshed with food, albeit God be the life and the length of our days, Acts 17, 28. And thouching our souls, it is not in vain to believe in Christ, to repent from dead works, to hear the preaching of the Gospel, and to yield obedience thereunto, although our salvation and eternal life be the free gift of God, Rom. 6, 23.

Secondly, whosoever is predestinated to the ende, they are also predestinated to the means, without which the end cannot possibly be attained. Such as are appointed to eternal life, are also appointed to the means by which life everlasting may be got and obtained. For almighty GOD hath from everlasting decreed both the ends and the means, not the end without the means, nor the means without the end, but both of them: and none must make any divorce between these. God himself hath prescribed unto us the means to bring us to the ends: & all that shall be saved, will carefully use them. No man well advised will reason thus, If it be determined, by God's providence, that I shall recover my health, there is no need that I use either food or physic; and if it be otherwise determined, I shall use in vain the help either of the one, or of the other: forasmuch as Hezekiah received such promise of delivery and recovery, yet he must take a lump of figs and lay it for a plaster upon the boil, that he may recover, Isaiah 38, 21. No man in his right mind will argue thus, If God have ordained that I shall come to my journeys end, I need not go over the bridge, I may leap into the water, I am sure I shall be safe and not be drowned: Or if it be determined, that thieves shall not rob me nor have any power over me, I may thrust myself into all companies, I may travail into dangerous places at all hours of the night, and though I stand there of purpose, they shall not be able to lay hands upon me, nor to spoil me of my goods. If this kind of reasoning be extreme folly, how is it that we see not the vanity of the other?

Lastly, as God appointeth good means to [Use 5] bring us to the end of our faith, so it is required of us to beware of evil means and evil ways which lead to hell and tend to destruction. There are many in the world that persuade themselves, they may follow their evil ways with greediness and delight, and yet that they shall escape death and damnation well enough, that albeit they sow to y^e flesh, yet they shall not reap corruption. Thus he tempted and seduced Eve in the garden, that she might eat freely of the forbidden fruit, and yet she should never die the death, but be as God knowing good and evil, Gen. 3, 4, 5, But we must know, that God hath linked together as with a brazen chain that cannot be broken, the pleasures of sin and the punishments of sin, Rom. 6, 23, and 8, 2. The Apostle joineth sin and death together, & coupleth them together as the cause & the effect: for the wages of sin is death. Thus we see the devils cunning to beguile, teaching that we need not to do good things, and yet we shall come well enough, soon enough, easy enough to heaven; and that we may follow evil things, and yet we shall escape hell and destruction. See more of this afterward, chapter 20.

17. And Moses sent them to spy out the Land of Canaan, and said unto them, Go you up this way Southward, and go up into the Mountain.

18. And see the Land what it is, and the people that dwelleth therein, whether they be strong or weak, few, or many.

19. And what the Land is that they dwell in, &c.

Albeit the Lord had promised to Abraham and his posterity to give them the land of Canaan for a possession, yet he will have them bear themselves wisely and warily, prudently and circumspectly in the search and viewing of it, to enquire into the people, their Cities, their Land, their multitude, their strength, and so to get a perfect knowledge of them; and for this cause doeth Moses so carefully instruct them.

The doctrine. Wisdom is a gift required of the faithful in all their enterprises, to do nothing headily, rashly, rawly, and ignorantly. We must deal not only lawfully, justly, honestly, and godlily, but wisely, prudently, politikely. Rebecca hearing of the purpose and intent of Esau, waiting opportunity to kill his brother, and being desirous to preserve them both, but especially Jacob, conveyed him away, Gen. 27, verse 43. The like appeareth in Abigail, 1 Sam. 25, 18. she prevented David and the mischief hanging over her own head, and is therefore commended by David himself. So 2 Sam. 20, 16, 17, 18. And 2 King. 4, verse 23. we have a notable example in the Shunamite; she wisely dissembleth the cause of her journey, lest she should grieve the heart of her husband, only she desireth leave and liberty of him to go •o the Prophet. So Acts 23, verses 6, 7. Paul knowing the great iarre and division in judgment among those of the assembly, which consisted of two sorts or sects partly Sadducees which denied the resurrection, and partly Pharisees which acknowledged it, he taketh advantage of the present opportunity to sever them, and to deliver himself, Proverbs, chap. 13, verse 16. Rom. chapter 16, verse 19.

For first, wisdom is more worth & much [Reason 1] better then all weapons of war, Prov. 21, verse 22. A prudent man is to be preferred before the valiant, and indeed he can do more. He can by counsel take a City wherein the valiant are, and by his stratagems throw down the bulwarks and Castles thereof, Eccl. chapter 7, verse 12, and cha. ver. 9, 13, 14, 15, 16.

Secondly, if God's servants should not [Reason 2] deal wisely, they should lie open to every enemy to be hurt and destroyed, to be overtaken and circumvented in an excessive hand. The times wherein we live are dangerous, the persons with whom we deal, are pernicious, the sleights of Satan that dealeth against us are mischievous, his instruments are grown cunning and crafty; Prov. 1, verses 11, 12. If then we should not deal, as well wisely as lawfully, we should not be able to withstand them.

If we should not order our affairs discreetly and with good advise, forecasting the issues and preventing their attempts, we should fall into the nets, & be caught in the snares which they lay for us.

Seeing then this is so necessary, we learn [Use 1] that a wise and understanding heart is a great blessing of God. Indeed a simple mind and a single heart is good in godliness, that so we may be innocent as Doves, Mat. 10, 16. Nevertheless, we must be wise also as Serpents. So force and strength are great gifts: howbeit the greatest ornament that GOD giveth, which as salt seasoneth every action, is, when he giveth a wise and understanding heart, so as he enableth us to prevent evils, and to disappoint our enemies, as Christ promiseth, Luke 21, 14. and therefore God's children have asked this above other, 1 Kin. 3, 9.

[Use 2] Secondly, be wise in our generation, that they go not beyond us. It is most true, that he which maketh himself a body of Crystal, that all men may look through him, and discern all the parts of his disposition, doeth withal make himself a tame asse, and thereby teacheth others, either how to ride him, or how to drive him. But wise men, though they have single hearts in all that which is just and honest, yet they are like coffers with double bottoms, which when others look into being opened, they see not all that they hold, on the sudden and at once. For we have enemies, though they often make fair weather toward us, yet are full of subtlety and policy, they are we see in their generation wiser then the children of light, Luk. 16, 8▪ They are ever watchful, dealing by means, whether just or unjust, lawful or unlawful; and malice against God's servants carrieth them so far, that they make conscience of nothing, so they may betray thē. We may say of such as Paul doeth of Elimas the sorcerer, Acts 13, 10. O full of all subtlety & all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord? Especially let us labor in things of the best nature, to provide things needful to salvation. The unjust steward is commended by his Lord for proceeding & preparing wisely for himself. If then there be any true wisdom in us, let us provide things honest & heavenly in the sight of God: for in vain is he wise, that is not wise toward God and for himself.

Lastly, seek to fear God, for that is the [Use 3] beginning of wisdom, Psal. 111, 10. Prov 1, 7, and 9, 10. and let us have his word dwelling in us plentifully & powerfully. The word is the wisdom of God, and it should be our wisdom, because it is able to teach us wisdom, Psal. 119, 98, 99. It is able to make us wiser then our teachers then our enemies, thē the ancient. If this be not in us to guide us, we shall use ungodly and unlawful shifts, wicked devises. and lewd inventions. These cannot prosper long with us, for God will catch the crafty in their own craft, 1 Cor. 3, 18, 19, 20.

26. And they went, and came to Moses and to Aaron, and to all the Congregation of the children of Israel unto the wilderness of Paran, to Kadesh, and brought back word unto them & unto all the Congregation, and shown them the fruit of the Land.

27. And they told him and said, We came unto the Land whither thou sentest us, and surely it floweth with milk and honey; and this is the fruit of it.

28. Nevertheless, the people be strong that dwell in the Land, and the Cities are walled and very great; and moreover we saw the children of Anak there, &c.

The second part of the chapter is the return and report of the spies. Albeit they went to search out the weakness of the land, yet having warrant from Moses, nay from God, they prosper, and his hand was with them in their going and in their returning. Touching the report they make, and the account they give of their travail and perambulation, it is double; first, to Moses, and then to the people. To Moses, they dare not plainly deliver the poison of their hearts. For howsoever this report may seem at the first, to be the general speech of all the twelve, yet by the words following both in this and the next chapt. it will plainly appear to be the report only of ten of them, Caleb and Joshua being excepted, who spake better things and convinced them. For the other ten, they, under glorious and goodly words, coloured and covered the wicked purpose and pretence of their profane hearts, thinking to corrupt the people with the leaven of their own rebellion, & to turn them away from attempting to conquer the Land, and to bring them to despair of possessing the same. Wherefore, though they do not openly & professedly dissuade them, yet they speak lies through hypocrisy: they do not deal faithfully and sincerely, but having two tongues in their heads, intended to stir up the people to mutiny and murmuring against Moses, by laying before them the difficulty, nay the impossibility of the enterprise. Thus then we see, they perform their Embassy subtly, not sincerely: fraudulently, not faithfully: for they praise the Land with a loud voice, but their hearts are hollow, and they speak the truth to deceive. Their praise is short, but the doubts that they cast into the minds of the people are many. The doctrine. Wicked men do oftentimes then speak fairest, when they intend the greatest mischiefe, and cloke their evil hearts with soft words, Ezr. 4, 2. Ps. 12, 2: they speak with a double heart. So did Cain, Gen. 4, 8: so did Joab, 2 Sam. 3, 17.

For first, they have been brought up in the school of a very cunning master: Satan [Reason] can transform himself into an Angel of light, as when he came to our first parents, he wholly pretended their good, and made himself careful to advance them to a better estate, Gen. 3, 4. 2 Cor, 11, 3. Secondly, thereby they know they shall insinuate themselves more closely, and deceive more easily. Open enemies are better prevented, Ps. 55, 12. false brethren hardly discerned: this is the way to catch the simple and vnwary in their snares, Math. 22, 16.

[Use 1] Learn from hence a property of man's heart, that it is very deceitful, Ier. 17, 9, 10. It is the nature of wicked men to suppress the evil which they purpose, until they can see their fit times; according to the saying of the Prophet, They will deceive everyone his neighbor, and will not speak the truth, they have taught their tongue to speak lies, and weary themselves to commit iniquity, Ier. 9, 5. Herod pretended love outwardly to the new borne King of the Jews, that he also would come & worship him, Mat. 2, 8. but indeed he purposed in his heart to kill him, albeit the wise men perceived it not. Thus do men dig deep to hide their counsels, and weave the spiders web so fine that it cannot be espied: they speak peaceably to their neighbor with their mouths, but in heart they lie in wait.

Secondly, beware of such enemies and believe [Use 2] them not: take heed of them and fly from them, Mar. 13, ver. 21, 22, 23. They have smooth words, but malice lodgeth and lurketh in their hearts. Where the water runneth stillest, there it is most deep and dangerous, Prov. 26, 24, 25. The examples are infinite of such as have been overtaken by them. They that have good hearts are not easily brought to suspect another to be evil: and while they judge others to be like to themselves, they are often taken in their nets.

Thirdly, we must not be simple and sottish, [Use 3,] which have to do with such deceitful workmen that watch and ward for advantage. It is our duty to entreat God to preserve us from them, that we may not be drawn away by thē to do as they do, Psal. 28, 3. Abel was too simple for so cunning an enemy as Cain; so was Abner and Amasa for Joab; & they paid dearly for it.

Lastly, woe unto all such, they shall in the [Use 4] end be overtaken in their own ways, & shall fall into the pit which they have digged for others. They may hide their counsels from men, but cannot from the all-seeing eyes of God. We see this in Cain▪ Joab, Absalom, Judas, and others. The Lord shall cut off all flattering lips, and the tongue that speaketh proud things, Psalm. 12, •, and 7, 15, 16. Prov. 26.2•. Let such therefore consider betimes the fruit of their leasing, and know that it will be bitterness in the latter ende. They flatter others and themselves: but the Lord will not flatter them, but shall find them out in their sins.

[They told them and said, We came unto the Land, &c.] We saw before that there were twelve chosen that went to search the Land: yet among them all, only two deal faithfully and truly, the rest were treacherous & hollow-hear•ed hypocrites. The doctrine arising from this comparison of them is this, that the greatest part are for the most part the worst; the fewest, the best▪ Luke 17, 11. Gen. •, 5, 6, 8. God looked upon the earth, and beheld it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth, verse 12. Caines stock multiplied, whiles Adam remained childless, Gen. 4, 25. Many enter into the broad way, few into the straight gate, Mat. 7, 1•, 14. Whē the sin of the Sodomites cried to heaven for vengeance, and all the people both young and old from every quarter wrought villainy, only Lot and his daughters were found in the City, that joined not with them, Gen. 19, 4, 16. In the days of Michaiah, Jeremiah, Elijah, & Elisha, were hundreds of false Prophets: though the children of Israel were as the sand of the sea, yet but a remnant should be saved: & though many be called, yet few are chosen, Math. 20▪ 16. The seed of the word falleth into sundry sorts of ground, yet one only is the good ground. Ten lepers were cleansed as they were going to show themselves to the Priest, but one only returned back to give God thanks. Luke 17, 17, 18, and 13, 23, •4.

For first, God will have his servants proved [Reason 1] and tried in the falling away of multitudes on the right hand & on the left, whether they will cleave unto him and his truth, or not. It is small commendation to continue in the faith, when others stand, for so do many hypocrites: but to hold out when others give over their hold, is the try•ll of a true Disciple, John. 6, 66, 67, 1 Cor. 11, 19. Secondly, men are for the most part addicted to follow the multitude, & to run in great heaps one after another, one giveth evil example unto another, as we see in the men of the old world. Thirdly, sin is very pleasant and delightful to the flesh, it is most consonant and agreeable to our corrupt nature: but grace and piety are repugnant to the flesh, and we strive against it what we can, Gal. 5, 17. Lastly, we heard before, the ordinance and decree of God which must in time take place, that he which calleth many, hath elected out of that number but a few, Mat. 19, 30. The net of the Gospel being cast into the sea, gathereth together good and bad, but the bad are afterward cast away, as unprofitable, as reffuse and reprobate stuff.

This serveth to convince the Church of [Use 1] Rome, and the defenders of the Romish religion, that make universality & the multitude, a mark and note of God's church, whereas the lesser number is rather the truer note. For otherwise we might justify y^e old world against Noah & his family, the Sodomites against Lot and his house. Paul complained that at his first answering, no man assisted him, but left him alone, yet he had the truth on his side, 2 Tim. 4, 16. and the Apostle John saith, We know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness, 1 John 5, 19. And if this were a sure note, we might justify the religion of the Turks & Sarazens, which spreadeth the wings of their superstition, much farther thē all popery doth, and occupieth a greater part of the world. But such as profess the truth of God truly, are the true Church, whether they be many or few, whether they be in one part of y^e world, or in many: and such as do not profess y^e true faith, are no true Church, whether they be near or farther off, whether in one place, or dispersed farther abroad. A multitude cannot make any religion to be true, nor fewness to be false.

The reasons which they bring to make the multitude to be a mark of the Church, make nothing to the purpose, but to mark out their own weakness, serving rather for pomp and show then for any weight and substance, as Psal. 2, 8. I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the utmost parts of the earth for thy possession: and Psal. 72, 8. He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the River unto the ends of the earth: so Luke 24, 47, Christ foretelleth, that the Gospel should be preached among all Nations, beginning at Jerusalem. In answer, it were no hard matter to produce an hundred such testimonies, and all nothing to the purpose or point in hand. For the drift and scope of them is no other, then to make a difference of the Church under the law, and in the time of the Gospel; at the first it was shut up within a narrow compass & corner of the earth, but afterward it was enlarged. For whereas before the coming of the Messiah, the banks of the Church were the bounds of Judea; under the Gospel they should be no longer pent up in so narrow a room, but the curtains thereof should be spread abroad to the utmost parts of the earth. But all this is nothing to prove the multitude to be a note of the Church, forasmuch as many believers may be in one Nation, and few believers in many Nations, and therefore Christ said, When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith upon the earth? Luke 18, 8.

[Use 2] Secondly, this serveth to reprove the common corruption that reigneth in the world among the ignorant sort and blind multitude, who build their faith and religion, not upon the golden foundation of Christ Jesus, 1 Cor. 3, 11. being the head corner-stone, neither upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Eph 2, v. 20. but upon the common customs and blind fashions of sinful men. For if they can say, Oh our forefathers were of this faith, our ancestors and predecessors believed thus, they were wise, they did think, and speak, and practice this: If I say, they can allege this for themselves, they think themselves safe, they seek no farther, they dream all is well, and take themselves to be sufficiently discharged, if they follow and practice the same that they do; they pray God they may do no worse then they did. Thus while the blind leadeth the blind, both fall into the ditch, Mat. 15, 14. These are they that have no sure ground to build upon, and can give no reason of their faith, neither make answer to those that ask a reason, 1 Pet. 4. They go blindfold to work, and grope in darkness, as the Syrians being smitten with blindness walked to and fro they knew not whither, & so at length were led into Samaria, into the midst of the strength of their enemies, 2 Kings 6, 19. Like beasts that follow the heard, who supposing that they are going to some fresh pasture to be filled, are many times driven to the shambles and slaughterhouse to be killed. This is all the religion that they know, to do as the most do, and to go the way that most go. It is a common, but a very devilish proverb, Do as the most do, and then the fewest will speak of it. But if we do as the most do, the best will speak evil of it & condemn it, nay the word condemneth it, nay God himself condemneth it. And if we do that the most do, we must do evil as they do; and if we walk with them for company, we shall also perish with them for company, as it was in the days of Noah. This is a sure rule, It is better to go the right way alone, then to wander out of the way for company. It was better for Noah to be brought into the Ark with his family only, then to perish in the waters with the profane multitude. It was better for Lot with his daughters to leave Sodom, then to tarry in it with the greatest company that were destroyed with fire and brimstone from heaven. Take heed thou do not damn thy soul to the pit of hell for company, because such as sin together, shall be punished together, Ps. 37, 38. If thou shouldst see a multitude of men leap into the fire, or cast themselves into the sea, or adventure to go into a den of Lions, thou wouldst not follow them, because thou lovest thy life & tendrest the good of thy body. The soul is much more precious then the body, & the loss greater then the loss of gold and silver, of pearls & precious stones; for one soul cost more to redeem, then all these are worth, if they were heaped and hoarded together: if then thou see many thousands before thee leap into the pit of hell where the fire is unquenchable, & cast themselves into the gulf of perdition where their estate is irrecoverable, wilt thou run after them and follow thē for company to thine own destruction? Thou wouldst not do the one, because thou lovest thy body; be sure thou do not y^e other, if thou lovest thy soul.

Thirdly, it is a vain and foolish, nay a wicked [Use 3] and damnable opinion, which many hold with tooth and nail and obstinately defend, that any man may be saved in his religiō whatsoever he profess, and how soever he believe, if he be earnest and fervent in it. If the Pagan might be saved in his paganism, or the Turk in his Turkism, or the Idolater in his idolatry, what needed Elijah to have said, If the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him? 1, Kings 18, 21. he might have said as well, it is all one whom ye follow, the Lord, or Baal, if you be faithful and fervent in your religion; and the estate of these worshippers of Baal had been very good. For they were very earnest and zealous in their religion, as appeareth by long prayer and loud crying to Baal from morning even until noon, O Baal hear us; and by the cutting and lancing of themselves with kniues and lancers till the blood gushed out upon them: nevertheless Elijah being zealous for the honor of God, commanded thē to be slain with the sword, as false Prophets and seducers of the people. It had been a foolish thing for Ruth to leave her country and kindred, and her fathers house, to go among strangers, and to change her religion, if she might have returned with her sister unto her own people and to her false gods and vain idols, if she might have been as well with them; neither needed she to have said, Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God, whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest, I will lodge, &c. The Apostles and holy Martyrs had been unwise to thrust themselves into dangers, and to lay down their lives for the testimony of the word, and witness-bearing unto the truth, if they might be saved without this, living in a false religion, being fervent in it. Nay, if this monstrous and mad opinion were true, Christ Jesus should have come in the flesh and died in vain, (which were blasphemous to think:) for what needed he to have suffered, if every man might be saved in his own religion without him? Christ himself saith, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me: therefore he that seeketh any other way, findeth not life and salvation, John. 14, 6. And the Apostle saith, There is no other way under heaven whereby we can be saved, Acts 4, 12. And Paul saith, There is one faith, not many faiths, as there is one God, not many gods, Eph 4, 5. The Idolatrous Ephesians were very zealous in worshipping of Diana, when they cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians: yet did the Apostle cry out against their idolatry. What needed they to teach the Gentiles to turn from these vanities, unto the living God which made heaven and earth? it had been enough to persuade them to zeal and sincerity. But this most devilish doctrine was not hatched and broached in those days, these neuters & cunning polititians of the world, were not then heard of: they are of a later brood sprung up in these last and worst times. It is the commandment of God, that we should not follow the multitude, Exod. 23, 2. But if it were enough to be fervent in that which we follow, we might follow the multitude as well as others, and the greatest par• which commonly is y^e worst part.

Lastly, it is our duty to strive to enter at the [Use 4] narrow gate. The multitude cannot make that which is evil to be good, neither that which is good to be evil: and therefore we may not forsake the truth because the multitude forsaketh it. A great number cannot make unrighteousness righteous, and therefore they cannot make a false doctrine and false faith to be good. Hence it is, that Joshua after a general receiving of the covenant of God, and embracing the true religion of the Prophets and Elders which did profess the same, doth solemnly protest to follow this rule, that although all they (which were a great multitude) should go after another religion, and serve other god, yet saith he, As for me and mine house, we will serve the Lord, Josh. 24.15. [Object.] But it may be objected, Is that always false which the multitude holdeth? or that ever true which the fewest believe? I answer, No: [Answer.] For when the truth is generally embraced, if any private conuenticle start up afterward with different doctrine from that true Catholic doctrine commonly receive, it is a mark of a false Church, not of the true. It is not a multitude simply that can mark out the Church, but a multitude teaching, professing, and holding the truth. But this is a false conclusion: A few must not forsake the multitude which profess the truth, Therefore a multitude is a mark of the truth. Or thus, It is good in good things to follow a multitude, Therefore it is simply good to follow the multitude. This is no better then a plain fallacy, to draw that to be simply true and in every respect which is true only in some respect.

Besides, by the strength of this reason, why may we not conclude, a few also to be a mark of the Church? For in the time of Christ and his Apostles, when the whole land of Israel boasted of the Law and of the Temple, of the Priesthood, and of the sacrifices, the fewest number were the best, the greatest number the worst. Jer. 18.18. Isaiah 8.12, 16, &c. Revel. 13.6, 7, 8. The true Prophets were in a manner generally resisted, they were reputed as monsters among the people which had made a conspiracy against God. When Antichrist should reign and make war with the Saints, and should overcome, and power should be given him over every tribe, tongue and nation, then a few were the true Church of Christ which keep the testimony of Jesus, that are written in the book of the Lamb slain from the beginning of the world; and all other multitudes were schismatical & heretical, which rose up with different doctrine from the Apostles. Thus we see, that neither few or many are simply the Church; not few because they are few, neither many because they are many; but if a few hold the faith of Christ, those few are the true Church, and not the many that are against them; on the other side, if many dispersed throughout the world believe aright, those many are the true Church, & must be followed, the rest which are few, declining from them, and departing from the truth, are a false Church, and we must decline & depart from them, and join our selves to the former multitude. And as it is in matters of faith, so is it in matter of life and practice. When we see many walk in evil ways that lead to destruction, follow them not, join not with them, neither let us addict our selves to them, but by all means keep our selves from them. Let us not do as the most do, when they do evil: but as the fewest do, when they do good. Let no man be emboldened or encouraged unto evil when he seeth the multitude that run that way: neither let any be terrified or hindered from godliness and embracing true religion by the fewness of the professors thereof. If we walk in the right way, it shall lead us to life, albeit we have none to go with us. Some account it a sufficient excuse to say, I do but as others do, I shall do no worse then others, I shall escape as well as others. An evil, the more generally it is embraced, the worse it is to be accounted, and the more it ought to be resisted and prevented. The more that go to condemnation, the greater is the horror of the condemned; the more, the more miserable shall their condition be. It shall exempt no man from punishment, though he pretend he was moved and enticed by others. The multitude stirring up Saul to spare Agag and the fatter Cattle, could not preserve him or privilege him from the wrath of God, albeit he alleged it as a buckler for his defense, 1 Sam. 15, 21. If all the world, taking example one from another, should follow an evil and wicked way, the faithful are bound to maintain the right and truth, both in life and in Doctrine. Noah was a preacher of righteousness, when all flesh was corrupted: and Lot kept him upright in Sodom, and reprov'd their uncleanness. So did Paul in Athens, Acts 17, 16. his spirit was stirred in him when he saw the City fully given to idolatry.

30 And Caleb stilled the people before Moses, and said: Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it.

The former evil report brought up of the Land, is illustrated by the contrary testimony of Caleb: he resisteth both them and their report, and his faithfulness is set against the unfaithfulness of the other ten. He showeth, that the land might be possessed, and stirreth up the people to the atchieuement of it; he assureth them of victory and good success, if they built upon the unmovable rock of God's power. Now, albeit Caleb alone be named, Yet Joshua also is understood, as chap. 14, 6. who joined not with them: but because he was the servant of Moses, he would not stir up the rage of the people against Moses and himself: but he held his peace, until a fitter season were offered, in respect of God, of Moses, of himself, of the people, & of the cause. A word spoken in season, is as apples of Gold with pictures of Silver, saith Solomon, Pro. 25.11. In this example, Caleb speaketh to y^e praise of God in the midst of the congregation, & honoreth God before the multitude, when he was dishonored by others. We learn hereby, that God hath always had some witnesses of his truth in all ages, even whē it hath been most of all oppugned and resisted, as Revel. 11, 4. Ier. 38, 8, 9. Luke 7, 35. Wisdom is justified of her children when others regard it not. Nicodemus stood up and defended the cause of Christ, when the Pharisees sought to condemn him, John 7, 35. When the whole multitude had condemned Christ, the penitent thief upon the cross confessed him to be the Lord of life, Luke 23, 42. and when they sate in council upon him to put him to death, and gave full consent to make him away, Joseph a good man and a just, consented not to the counsel and deed of them, Luke 23, 50, 51.

And how can it be otherwise? For the truth [Reason 1] shall never decay from the earth, but be spread abroad from place to place, and from generation to generation forever, Psal. 119, 89. We perish and decay, for all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man is as the flower of y^e field, but the word of the Lord abideth forever, 1. Pet. 1, 24. God will have this never to die or decay, never to wither or to be worn away. Secondly, he hath the hearts of all men in his own hand, to turn them and change them at [Reason 2] his pleasure, as we see in Paul, who persecuted the church, and bound them in chains which called upon the name of Christ: but the Lord suddenly appeared unto him, when the poor sheep were near to the shambles, converted him and appointed him a witness of his truth To bear his name unto the Gentiles, and Kings, and the children of Israel, Acts 9, 15. So saith Christ, Luke 19, 40. I tell you if these should hold their peace, the stones would cry; and therefore he can never be without some witness to maintain and defend his truth.

This teacheth us, that God is most glorious [Use 1] and powerful, he is a most mighty God, and will be known in the earth, Psal. 8, 1, 2. with Math. 21, 15. Acts 14, 17. He chooseth many times instruments in the eyes of the world unfit and unable for to accomplish any great work, that the power and praise may be given to him. We see how he worketh for the most part contrary to the manner of men, that the opinion of our own excellency should not overshadow his power. In war he saveth with few: in the salvation of the soul, which is one of the greatest works, he worketh by weak instruments, and putteth his grace in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power might be of God, and not of us; even as he commanded the light to shine out of darkness, 2 Cor. 4, 6, 7. So that we may conclude with the Psalmist, O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! Who hast set thy glory above the heavens, &c. Psal. 8, 1, 2. Mat. 21, 15.

[Use 2] Secondly, great and mighty is his truth & prevaieth: he hath always had a church upon the face of the earth, and he never forsaketh it though multitudes conspire against it, and swarms of enemies set up lies, yet it shall have the upper hand at last. This is easy to be shown in the midst of darkness, when the foggy mists of popery had corrupted y^e air, and over-shadowed the truth, yet God evermore raised up someone or other that crossed & opposed the strong faction that was maintained in the church of Rome. Thisf were not hard to show in many particulars, touching the Canon of the Scriptures, touching the sufficiency of the Scriptures, touching the real presence and transubstantiation, touching the supremacy of the bishop of Rome, and the infallibility of his judgment, touching Pardons and Indulgences, and many other points, w^c were never generally received, no not in the Church of Rome. The doctrine of Antichrist hath been reprov'd in all times by sundry persons, even in the greatest darkness of the night of superstition: for as it grew up by little and little, so was it resisted openly & evidently: to which purpose I could produce infinite testimonies, which a man may read at large in Catalogo testium veritatis, set forth by Illyricus.

[Use 3] Thirdly, be not discouraged when the truth is oppressed, because God is able to maintain it, and raiseth up his enemies oftentimes to defend it and to speak for it, and the professors and preachers of it, Acts 5, 34. He maketh the weak strong: and the fearful to be bold in his cause: so at the passion of Christ, when all forsook him, even his own disciples, he opened the mouth of the thief (as we noted before) upon the cross, to confess him as his Savior and Redeemer, that was able to bestow upon him the kingdom of heaven, Luke 23. He will never want hearts to believe in him, who can change the heart: neither mouths to confess him, who out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hath perfected his own praise.

Again, observe that he saw what the greatest number of the spies and searchers out of the Land hath reported; yet he is so far from joining with them, that he maketh it plain and apparent, that they should be well able to overcome all their enemies. The Doctrine from hence is this, The evil of others, yea although they be many, should not be imitated and followed of us. We may not follow the example of evil men that go before us in evil. We see this in Micaiah an holy prophet, when the Messenger sent unto him, bad him to say as the rest had said, and to flatter the King; Let thy word, I pray thee, be like the word of one of them which declare good to the King, 1 King. 22, 12, 13, He refused to assent unto it, but said, As the Lord liveth, what the Lord saith unto me that will I speak▪ verse 14 So Ezek. 20. ver. 18. Walk ye not in the statutes of your Fathers, and keep my judgments, Math. 23, 6, 7. Noah & his family were just in that unjust generation, when the whole world had corrupted their ways, and the whole earth was filled with cruelty, Gen. 6. Elijah was alone, when idolatry had gotten the upper hand in Israel, 1. Kings 19, verse 10. 1 Cor. 10, 6. The Reasons.

Whatsoever is in it self evil and unlawful [Reason 1] cannot be made good and lawful by any example, nor by many examples. It cannot be warranted by the law of man, much less by the law, the pure law of God himself.

Secondly, no greatness, no company, no [Reason 2] multitude can save a man from judgments due to the least sin: for though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not go unpunished, Pro. 5. and 11, 21. If we could cover our selves under the might of others from wrath, we might have some cover for our sins: but all this can do us no good, we lie open to God's punishments.

This serveth to reprove many carnal and [Use 1] formal Christians that oftentimes encourage themselves in evil, and strengthen themselves by the example of others, and especially by the fall of such as they find recorded in holy Scriptures. They allege for themselves, that Noah fell into drunkenness, David into adultery, Lot into incest, Peter denied his master, Thomas one of the twelve doubted thorough infidelity, and such like. These examples are written not to the end we should follow them and do the like, but that others should be warned by their falls not to do the like, and be stirred up by repentance after their example. Nay, these are the rather to be reprov'd, who seem to build upon such examples, because they find that these men were plagued & punished for the euilles which they committed. The Scripture doth not set down their offense and then hide their punishment, but joineth the one with the other, as if this were written before our eyes, Do not the like. Seeing therefore others before us have been visited with great judgments for the same sins, fear least the same befall to us also that befell to them. If we will follow multitudes to evil, because such sins are in fashion and in common practice: if we will do as the most do, let us take heed, there is no comfort in such company; neither shall it ease any one to go to hell in a throng. Let us not regard the number, or authority, or learning of evil men; but rather follow the truth in matter of faith and profession, for otherwise we shall quickly be removed from it, Acts. 28, 22. The truth was everywhere spoken against. It hath been the portion of the truth in all ages, Isaiah 55, 1. Who hath believed our report? None of the Princes or Governors believed in Christ, John 7, 48, 49. but a few of the people, whom they pronounced and accounted to be cursed.

[Use 2] Secondly, from hence we ground a reproof for children and servants following their Parents and masters, and thinking it a sufficient discharge to themselves, because they do as they see them do before them. Woe unto those that give them evil example, and lay a stumbling block before them. Such parents are greatest enemies to their own servants. We must follow our heavenly Father before earthly fathers, & our Master in heaven before our masters on the earth. We must follow them when they command under God, not when they command above him or against him. We must follow our teachers so long as they sit in the chair of Moses, and teach us out of the Law and the Prophets, Matth. 23, 2, 3. When the mother of Christ said unto him by way of taxing him for not following them, he answered, Wist ye not, that I must be about my Fathers business? The Disciples of Christ replied unto the Council, charging them to preach no more in the name of Christ, Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more then unto God, judge you, Act. 4, 19. And Paul willeth the Corinthians to be followers of him as far forth as he was of Christ, 1 Cor. 11, 1. We must give an account to God whose steps we follow, and therefore we ought to say, We ought to obey God rather then men, Acts chap. 5, ver. 29.

[Use 3] Thirdly, we may gather from hence a reproof of sottish and ignorant Recusants standing and grounding only upon their Forefathers: such as can give no other reason of their religion, but that they were borne and bred in it. Psal. 78, 8. They should not be like their Fathers, a stubborn and rebellious generation, a generation that set not their heart aright, and whose spirit was not steadfast with God. And indeed what do these poor seduced souls say for themselves which the Turks and Infidels may not object and allege as well as they? For have not they sucked in their superstition and impiety together with their mothers milk, and continued from father to son for many hundred years? It is an horrible abomination wherein they have been nuzled, can it be a good argument therefore from their birth and nurture to conclude their continuance in that damnable religion? If they think this to be a gross comparison wrongly applied unto them▪ because they hate that superstition, and profess the Christian religion, I would know of them whether they think us to be right or not? The most learned and best approved amongst them deny us to be any church at all, because we live not under the government of the bishop of Rome; yet this is the Religion that we were borne and bred in, we have had it from our Fathers, we have seen the practice of no other. If then they will not allow us to reason in that manner, and to make the example of our Fathers a president to our selves, how is it that they take liberty to build their faith upon others, and to follow the footsteps of their forefathers? But as our religion though we be ready to defend it to be good, because it is built upon the foundation of the Prophets & Apostles, yet it is not therefore good because we have received it by tradition from men, but because we have learned it from the word of God: so if they have no more to say for the truth of their religion, and the justification of their faith, then that they were born and brought up in it, they build their faith and religion upon the sand which cannot continue, when the rain falleth and the wind bloweth upon it.

Fourthly, this should persuade everyone of us, how to carry our selves, namely, that we [Use 4] should not take any approbation or liking of the evil of other, neither ought we to imitate any in sin, how holy soever they seem to be, neither give consent to them by our practice, forasmuch as God's hand hath overtaken them at one time or other. If a man surfeit on that meat which he hath seen another before him to surfeit, no man will pity him: or if he see another drink a cup of poison, and thereupon to fall down dead before him, if he notwithstanding will adventure to drink of the same cup, he must needs be without all excuse, and perish justly: so is all evil as a cup of poison, he that taketh and toucheth it, shall speed no better then we know thousands have done before us, who have bought their pleasures of sin at too dear a rate. If men cry out unto us as the children of the Prophets did, There is death in the pot, 2 Kings 4, 40. what do we but bring death and damnation upon our own souls, and as it were willingly lay hands upon our selves, if we follow the evil examples y^t are practiced before us? In the things that concern the body, every man will be ready to fly such occasions, and avoid such dangers, because they tender their lives and love their bodies: how strange then and monstrous is it, that mē dare imitate others in their sins and evil practices, which they cannot be ignorant have been the causes and procurers of sundry plagues & judgments upon them. Let every man therefore labor and endeavor against these things, and look narrowly to his own ways, not suffering himself to be corrupted and drawn to sin by the evil examples of others.

[Let us go up at once and possess it.] He stirreth up the people to go forward, as the other persuaded them to go backward. They moved them to rebel, he exhorteth them to obedience.

By this we learn, that it is the duty of God's children to exhort and stir up one another to good things, Isaiah 2, 2. 1 Thess. 5, 11. Heb. 3, 13. We must not only embrace and receive the truth our selves, but there is a farther duty required of us, to admonish & encourage one another to all duties of holiness and righteousness.

And that for diverse reasons. First, we are quickly hardened in sin. We are quickly dull and dead to all good; exhortation made by others setteth an edge upon us, and putteth life into us, Prov. 27, 17.

Secondly, such as continue to the end are made partakers of Christ, and with him of all other graces: this ought to provoke us to practice this duty, the rather seeing so great fruit cometh by it; the benefit of all benefits, and the blessing of all blessings, Christ Jesus is made ours, Hebr. 3, 13.14.

Thirdly, we have other reasons used by the same Apostle, chap. 10, 25, 26. Fearfull judgments remain for all backsliders. Seeing therefore so great danger hangeth over their heads that revolt and turn back, let us with all courage and care set upon the practice of this duty.

Fourthly, the day of the Lord draweth nere, and we must take heed that it take us not vnready and unprepared; we must therefore stir up our selves and others to look for it, and to long after it.

Lastly, we see evil men do it in evil and to evil. They labor by all means to make others as bad as themselves, and oftentimes so corrupt them that they become twofold more the children of hell, Prov. 1, 10. & 7, 21. Gen. 11, 3. This also we see in this place: much more therefore ought we to teach and instruct one another, and be helpers to the most holy faith one of another.

Seeing then we must perform this duty to [Use 1] others, much more ought we to do it to our selves. It is in vain to go about to move others, and sit still our selves; like to Herod, who moved the wisemen that came unto him to go and search diligently for the young child, but neither he nor his courtiers would bear them company, Mat. 2.8. If then we would have others go forward in good things, we must begin and lead the way our selves. The Prophet exhorting the people to praise the Lord, beginneth himself, I will praise the Lord with mine whole heart, Psal. 111, 1. If we would move others, and then stand still our selves, we do more discourage them by our deeds, then encourage them by our words. The Prophet Zechariah prophesying of the kingdom of Christ, & of the zeal of men embracing the Gospel, saith, that the inhabitants of one City shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to praise the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts, and they shall add, I will go also, Zac. 8, 21. And thus it ought to be among everyone of us, if we belong to the kingdom of Christ, and have in truth embraced the Gospel, we should call on another with us to go the hearing of the word & calling upon God, to the sanctifying of the Sabbath, and to attend on the Ministry; and add withal, I will go with you. The like we see in the prophet Isaiah, chap. 12.1, 2, 3, 4. the faithful people of God exhorting others to praise the name of God, do begin the song of praise and thanksgiving themselves, I will praise thee, for God is my strength and my salvation. So it is our duty to go about to persuade not only by our words, but by our example: and we must first do those things our selves, which we require of other men. It is a note of hypocrisy to bind heavy burdens and grievous to be born, and lay them on men's shoulders, but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers, Math 23, 4. Luk. 11, 46. It is not enough for the husband to say to the wife, Go to the Sermon: it is not enough for the parents to say to their children, or masters to say to their servants, It is time for you to go to the Church; but it is needful for them to add this withal, And I will go with you. So ought one brother, one neighbor, one friend to say to another, I pray let us go together to such a Sermon, let us hear what God shall say unto us by his Minister: we cannot testify our love toward them better then this way, and show that we desire their good: howbeit we must add, I will go with you, I will bear you company. This is the way for us to prevail with them, and to do good unto them.

Secondly, we must consider the state one of [Use 2] another, how it is with them, whether they increase or decrease, whether they go forward or backward. This is a common default among us all, we are not watchful over y^e ways one of another, we never consider one another whether they stand still or fall: we are in this like to Cain, and ready to say, Am I my Brothers keeper? Gen. 4, 9. We care not for the most part how it goeth with them. [Object.] But peradventure some man will say, Who art thou which judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth, Rom. 14, 4. whereby it seemeth that everyone should be left unto himself. Answer, [Answer.] this place is nothing to the present purpose. For the Apostle speaketh of things indifferent, and showeth that no man should condemn as wicked and profane any of the believing Gentiles belonging unto God, and therefore it belongeth to him only either to approve or disallow the things that are done. Wherefore, we are charged to take the charge one of another, & to procure their good by all means we can, Heb, 10.24. Let us consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works. And how can we bear the burden one of another, except we know the estate one of another?

Lastly, it is our duty to rejoice at such practice, [Use 3] when we see men ready to practice this duty. As it ministereth matter of such mourning and sorrow to see men drawn away from the faith and obedience of the Gospel, Gal. 4.19 and 5.12. so it giveth great joy and much comfort, to see this zeal and care one of another. The Prophet testifieth this, Psal. 122, 12. I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord, &c. It would greatly rejoice us to see a man pull the friend whom we love out of a pit into which he was fallen: but it ought more to cheer up our hearts to behold a brother drawn out of the pit of hell & destruction, and made a Citizen of the kingdom of heaven.

31 But the men that went up with him said, We be not able to go up against the people, for they are stronger then we.

32 And they brought up an evil report of the land which they had searched, unto the children of Israel, saying, The land thorough which we have gone, &c.

33 And there we saw the Giants, the sons of Anak, &c.

Here we have the second report, which they make to the people, now they pull off their vizard, and show themselves in their colors. For after that these turbulent spirits prevail nothing before the Council, they fly to the people, stirring up the multitude to a tumult and commotion; to which purpose they bring up an evil report of the land, as if it yielded nothing without great labor and extreme pains▪ so that when the inhabitants had spent themselves and wasted their strength, yet it was scarce able to maintain them: wherein as Serpents they hiss with two tongues, for they falsify their own words, they confound their own practice, and slander the truth of God with a lie. They bely themselves, because they had confessed openly, that it was a fruitful land: now their tongues are divided, they avouch that it cannot sufficiently nourish the inhabitants.

Again, they confound their own practice, for they did cut down a vine branch with a cluster of Grapes, and bare it upon a staff between two upon their shoulders. Lastly, they slander the truth of God, who promised unto their Fathers to give them a Land flowing with Milk and Honey, Exod. 3, 8. If then it were barren and unfruitful, and not able sufficiently, yea abundantly to nourish the inhabitants, God had failed of his promise, and deceived the hope and expectation of his people. True it is, these words are not literally to be taken, for there is in them another trope or figure: for first, a part is taken for the whole, so that the meaning is, that the land abounded with the best fruits: nevertheless, such are named and expressed, as needed least labor and travel of their own. Again, there is an hyperbolical or excessive speech borrowed from the waters of the sea, which often flow out of their banks, the meaning whereof is, that there should be great-store and plenty of these and such other necessary and profitable things, so that they should have abundance. The commendation whereof is further set down, Deut. 8.8.9. and 11.11.12.14.15. Therefore Jerome is much deceived, that understandeth this flowing with milk and honey spiritually: and it is true that the word of God is said to be milk for such as are babes in Christ, 1 Cor. 3, 2. and learn the first principles of the oracles of God, Heb. 5, 12. Likewise to be sweeter then the honey and the honey comb, Psal. 19, 10. nevertheless in this place we must understand it of the land it self and the fruitfulness of it, and so it is said to be, even while the Canaanites did inhabit it, and when the Spies brought with them the commodities of it, long before the word of God was published in it.

Moreover, they make report of great and mighty gyants, in comparison of whom they thought themselves as grass-hoppers. Some think they are so called, because they were tyrants & oppressors, not in regard of strength of body and eminency of stature. But such there were both before and after the floode, Gen. 6.4. and 14, 5. Numb. 15, 34. Deut. 2, 20.21. Amos 1. Deut. 3, 11. Judge. 14.6.19. & 16, 3. 1 Sam. 17, 4 2 Sam. 21, 19. 1 Chron. 20.4, 5, 6, 7, 8. These exceeded the bulks and bodies of men that are now borne in this withered quarter and winter of the world, nature itself and the force of it, as it were waxing old: We see then how these hollow-hearted spies discourage the people, and discover their hypocrisy, for they blow hot and cold almost with one breath, and yet they would have more understood then themselves dare utter. For they say, The people are strong, but they mean, too strong for them: they say, Their Cities are walled even up to heaven, Deut. 1, 28. but they mean they shall never be able to win them by scalado: they say, There were Giants in the land, but they mean they would be able to eat them up as Grashoppers: they say, The Land did devour the inhabitants, but they mean that albeit they should have no enemies, yet the Land would in short time consume them. They never once mention or remember the promise of God, but as Infidels distrust and despair, and cause others to distrust and despair, and as Apostataes they slide back from the covenant of God. The doctrine; Euil men, though they long dissemble and hide the evil and corruption of their hearts, yet at last they lay themselves open, and are often contrary to themselves, Luke 9, 59. and 19, 22. and 4, 22.29 Mat. 2, 8, 16. Herod sent and killed the infants of Bethlehem, intending thereby to kill Christ, whom he pretended to worship: and 28, 12. False witnesses came and said, The Disciples stole him away while we slept. But this tale did discredit it self. The Disciples of Christ were few and unarmed, the watch were many, and with weapons. And if they were asleep, how knew they the disciples did it? Wherefore we should rather think, that they do dream when they are awake, then suffer our selves to be persuaded that they were awake, when indeed they did dream. So Prov. 26, 26. Whose hatred is covered by deceit, his wickedness shall be shown before the whole congregation.

[Reason 1] For first, hypocrisy is like a wound healed outwardly, but festering inwardly; and therefore at last the corruption cannot but break out. It is a true saying, Nemo potest diu personam ferre fictam, cito in naturam suam recidunt quibus veritas non subest, that is, No man can long continue masked in a counterfeit behavior; the things that are forced for pretences having no ground of truth to stand vpō, cannot long dissemble their own natures. This is the judgment of God upon hypocrisy: at the last it will uncase and uncover it self. Force the water against the current, at last it will break out to his proper course, like to the bow, that being bent, quickly returneth to his place. Hypocrites have no sound hearts, there is no truth in their inward parts, and therefore they must [Reason 2] needs at length be made manifest. Secondly, a liar at one time or other will show what is in him, and miserably forget himself, and therefore it is not unfitly said, he standeth greatly in need of a good memory: but every hypocrite is a liar, because he speaketh one thing with his mouth, & entertaineth another thing in his heart: he pretendeth one thing outwardly, but lodgeth another inwardly, Psal. 55, verse 21. Therefore doth the Apostle join them together, They speak lies in hypocrisy, 1. Tim. 4, 2.

[Use 1] Heereby we learn, that wicked men need no other judges then themselves to condemn themselves. When no man can accuse them of guile and deceit, they shall accuse themselves. Their own consciences and practices shall pronounce sentence against them, and therefore they cannot escape. This we see in the convincing of the unfaithful servant. Do his fellows accuse him? or indite him? Do they lay anything to his charge, whereby he is brought into suspicion? No, his own words are sufficient to lay him open; and therefore his Lord said unto him, Luk. 19, 22. Thou wicked servant, out of thine own mouth will I judge thee. It can therefore go worse with none then with the hypocrite, he shall be his own judge. He shall make known his own wickedness, and so bring to light his own shame. Albeit he seek to cover his own profane heart, yet himself shall light a candle to behold it.

[Use 2] Secondly, beware of hypocrisy, which is a capital sin, and hath under it many other evils: it is a sin compounded of many other sins: for they are notable couzeners and deceivers: they are poisoned with this corruption, and use dissimulation toward God, toward man, and toward themselves. They deceive all saving Satan whom they serve. First, such go about foolishly to deceive God himself, that cannot be deceived, and to mock him that cannot nor will not be mocked (for he is the searcher of the heart:) and while they do please themselves, they think by vain shows to please him, Isaiah chap. 58, verse 2. whiles they abound with secret and hidden sins. Such pray with feigned lips, Math. 15. verse 8. They commit close sin that God may not see them, or having sinned seek to hide their sins from God. Secondly, they go about to deceive men, desiring to gain an estimation of true godliness, by contenting themselves with the shining lamp of an outward profession. They desire no more but to seem religious: if men will have them in that account, they regard no more, and indeed that is more then they deserve. Thirdly, such do deceive themselves in the end most of all, James 1, 12. These men therefore must needs be most odious to God, who seeking to deceive God and man, do not deceive them, but beguile themselves. He is a notable couzener that couzeneth himself, and that of set purpose.

Lastly, we must all labor to be sound and [Use 3] sincere, and strive to attain unto integrity, and uprightness of heart. This must show it self in every of our works that we perform: for none of them may be without it, neither prayer, nor hearing the word, nor partaking the Sacraments. In prayer, it is not enough to move the lips, or bow the knees, or lift up the hands, or utter a voice, it must be a prayer of the heart and Spirit, Ephes. 6, verse 18. a lifting up of the heart, Psal. 145. verse 18. God regardeth not the tongue or the number of words, so much as he doth the heart. The Prophet saith, If I regard wickedness in my heart, the Lord will not hear me: So Proverbs chapter 28. verse 9. Isaiah 1. verse 15.

In hearing the word uprightness is required: and therefore Christ saith, Take heed how ye hear, Luke 8, 18. and he describeth the saving hearers, that they have good and honest hearts. Eccles. 4, 17. But such as come for fashion sake, because the world hath got such a custom; or for satisfying the laws of men for fear lest they should be presented: or seem to men to be religious, lest they should be accounted Atheists: or to the end they might see and be seen, because they have a lascivious and wanton eye; or that they might sleep and take a nap there, because they cannot sleep at home; or that they might carpe and cavil, because they love not the minister; or to pass away the time because they have nothing else to do that day: all these are far from truth and sincerity, they are no better then hollow-hearted hypocrites. And that we may show our selves upright this way, we must consider that we are in God's presence, Acts 10, 23. and as the Minister must speak as the oracles of God, 1 Pet. 4, 11. 1 Thess. 2, 13. so he that heareth must hear as the word of God, not of man. Secondly, we must have a desire to profit by it, & a purpose to practice it In the receiving of the Sacraments, we must also have sincerity and integrity. What did it profit Simon Magus to be baptized, and yet to lie in the gall of bitterness? Acts 8, 21, 23. Judas was admitted to the Lord's Passover, but his heart was corrupt with covetousness. If any ask, how we may know, whether this heavenly grace be in us? I answer, by the infallible signs and tokens thereof accompanying it and going with it. First, if we approve our selves to God in all things, not to man; if we look up and lift up our eyes to God whatsoever we do, if we walk before him, 1 Thess. 2, 4. and seek to have the testimony of a good conscience. The hypocrite seeketh no more then to approve himself to men, he careth not for the testimony of his own conscience, for that is ready to witness against him. Secondly, such are ready to yield simple and absolute obedience to the word of God (though their own reason be ready to cross the same) even to all God's commandments, Psal. 119, 6. Thirdly, to repent of all sin, and not to retain any one, but to hate the same vnfeignedly in himself and in others. The manner of hypocrites is to hate sin in others, not in themselves, Gen. 38, 24. John 8, 9. and to retain someone sin or other, wherein he taketh special delight: as we see in Herod, Mark 6, 20. Fourthly, to humble our selves in the sight of God, and to cast down our selves in his presence, and to confess our own vileness and unworthiness to appear before him, after the example of the servants of God, Isaiah 6, 5. Job 42, 5, 6. This note is taught by the prophets in sundry places, Mich. 6, 8. Hab. 2, 4. Contrarywise, the hypocrite is proud, and pride is evermore the companion of hypocrisy. Fifthly, to be confident in good causes, and courageous especially in time of peril, Prov. 10, 9. & 28, 1. Whereas the hypocrite having a corrupt conscience is overtaken with fear and trembling, Isaiah 33, 14. Prov. 28, 1. Lastly to be constant, and to persevere to the end in good things, to be resolute never to give over a continued course of piety. until we give over this course of life: such bring forth fruit with patience, Luke 8, 15. and shall never be removed, Psal. 15, 5. Whereas the double-minded man is unstable in all his ways, James 1, 8. his godliness and religion is as the morning dew. Hosea 6, 4. By these signs we may sift and examine our selves whether this grace of sincerity be in us, or not.

And as the gift is excellent, so there are sundry motives to stir us up unto it. For God is good and gracious unto such as are pure in heart, Psal. 73, 1. and 125, 4, 5. he is the Sun and shield to them, Psal. 84, 11. This is the life and substance of all other graces, without it the best things are but counterfeit, and no better then sins against God. Our faith must be unfeigned, and love without dissimulation and our conversion must be a renting of the heart. Consider also, that God is present everywhere and knoweth all things, Psal. 139, 7. Prov. 15, verse 3.

Moreover, we must meditate oftentimes upon the judgments of God which he bringeth upon the world, but especially of the last judgment in the end of the world, and of our particular judgment at the hour of death, Ro. 2, 16. Eccl. 12, 14. The heart is the storehouse & keeper of the graces of God, Pro. 4, 23. Mat. 13, 18, 19. Lu. 6, 45. Math. 23, 26. & therefore we ought carefully to look unto it.

CHAP. XIII.

1 And all the Congregation lifted up their voice, and cried: and the people wept that night.

2 And all the Congregation of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron: and the whole Congregation said unto them, Would God that we had died in the Land of Egypt: or would God we had died in this wilderness.

3 And wherefore hath the Lord brought us into this land to fall by the sword, that our wives and our children should be a prey? Were it not better for us to return into Egypt?

WE have seen in the former chapter the occasiō of this fourth murmuring, arising from the report of the spies whereby the seed was sown, which in this Chapter groweth up to an open & obstinate mutiny. The fruit was answerable to the seed, the success to the report. And who can stay the stream driven by so violent a wind and tempest? When the arrow is once shot out of the bow, it is too late to wish it may do no hurt where it falleth, because where it hitteth it hurteth. But to come to the present matter in hand; the people giving ear to these false reports, dream of danger where no danger is, like the sluggard that saith, There is a Lyon without, I shall be slain in the streets, Prov. 22, 13. To minds that are fearful and perplexed, all fancies and conjectures seem things of truth.

Consider in this chapt. two points: first, the general murmuring of all, that is, of the greatest part of the people: secondly, the proceeing of God against thē for their murmuring. Their murmuring is accompanied with impatience, disobedience, unthankfulness, blasphemy, infidelity▪ and tempting of God, Psal. 106, 24, 25, &c. and it is set down generally and particularly. Generally, they murmured against Moses and Aaron, amplified by the effect, they wept all the night. The cause why they wept is the fear of death, and the sense of their sin: they supposed that they were led as sheep to the slaughter, and brought into the wilderness as to a place of destruction, & had forgotten the promise made 400. years before to their fathers. We see here how quickly and easily they obey evil persons that seduced them: they listen with both their ears unto them, and forget what they had often heard and seen. Caleb and Joshua warned them, but all was in vain. The doctrine, This is the corruption of our nature, we are prone to be perverted, and ready to hearken to seducers, to follow evil livers and evil teachers, while in the mean season we are hardly drawn to hearken and attend unto those that tell us the truth without flattery or forgery, Exod. 4, 1. The prophet of God sent to prophesy against the Altar at Bethel, is easily seduced, and forsaketh the word of God, 1 Kings 13, 21. Our Savior complaineth of the peeuishnesse of the Jews: We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced: we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented, &c. And John 5, 43. I am come in my Fathers name, and ye received me not: if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive, 2 Tim. 4, 34. Gal. 3, 1, 2. and 5, 7. Titus 1, 11. Mat. 24, 5.

First, because in the mind and understanding, [Reason 1] howsoever there remain certain general notions concerning good and evil, as that there is a God, that he is just and a rewarder of them that do well, that we must honor our parents, and not hurt our neighbors, yet even these are corrupt and serve only to take away excuse, Ro. 1, 19, 20. and besides, we have all received from Adam, ignorance or want of knowledge of the things of God, 1 Cor. 2, 14. Ro. 8, 7. Likewise disability to understand spiritual things, though they be plainly taught unto us, Lu. 24, 41. 2 Cor. 3, 5. & vanity of the mind, thinking truth to be falsehood, and falsehood to be truth, Eph. 4, 17. 1 Cor. 1, 21. Prov. 14, 12. So then the original or seed of all errors and heresies is in our nature.

Secondly, Satan is mighty and subtle, he can [Reason 2] transform himself into an Angel of light, & he employeth many instruments in his work to seduce us as he did Eve, which also work mightily with strong delusions, 2 Cor. 11, 3. False Apostles are deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the Apostles of Christ, 2 Cor. 11, 23, 24, 25. they come in sheep's clothing, though inwardly they be ravening [Reason 3] wolves, Mat. 7, 15. 2 Pet. 2, 1, 2. Thirdly, it is God's deep, yet most just judgment upon all that obey not the gospel, to send them strong delusions, that they should believe lies. This is a punishment sent upon the unthankfulness of men, when they have the light, and yet shut their eyes: hear the sound of the Gospel, and yet stop their ears; and understand the truth, yet harden their hearts against the truth: Mat. 13, 14, 15. 2 Thess. 2, 11, 12.

This serveth to reprove and convince the [Use 1] rash boldness and heady presumption of many men, who nothing considering the corruption of their own nature, the vnstaiednes of their judgment, the leaven of error, the subtlety of Satan, the craftiness of false teachers, the perswasible words of man's wisdom, and the judgment of God upon all disobedient persons; make no conscience whom they hear: & living in superstitious and idolatrous places, do adventure too far to thrust themselves with great danger into their assemblies, & stick not boldly to hear the Sermons of Friars and Jesuits; whereas they should rather stop their ears against such blasphemies and impieties as they are constrained to hear. These presume too far upon their own knowledge, and are oftentimes caught before they be aware, and entangled in the snare before they see it & can discern it. Let us have ears of horn against their songs and enchantments. And it serveth to meet with others, that fail as much in their obedience, who nothing regarding their own frailty and weakness, neither the deceitfulness together with the contagion & infection of sin, dare thrust themselves into all companies, and can glory that none shall be able to pervert them or to make them worse. But it is easier to avoid their society, then to stand in it without yielding to their evil. We must fear our own infirmities, lest we lose the graces of God. A vagrant person that hath nothing to lose careth not whither he goeth, or into what company he cometh, because he knoweth he can lose nothing; but the true man and honest traveler that carrieth a charge about him, and hath somewhat to lose, maketh choice of times, places, and persons. So such as are not settled in religion, and are destitute of the grace of God, care not where they become, or into what temptations they cast themselves, all is one to them in what company so ere they be: but he that knoweth himself aright, considereth his own frailty; and he that hath any precious graces in his soul, will beware to what place or company he resort, lest he be robbed and deprived of them. The least of God's graces is much more precious then all the treasures of the whole earth.

Secondly, the Ministers must watch and [Use 2] attend the flock, over which the holy Ghost hath made them overseers, to feed the church of GOD which he hath redeemed with his own blood, Acts chap. 20. verses 28, 29, 30. Earnest teaching and preaching in season and out of season is most necessary, 2 Tim. chap. 4, verses 2, 3. If the preaching of the Gospel be not heard, all errors, heresies, schisms, vices, and impieties, will flow and abound in the Church. When the light is taken out of the Candlestick, all is left in darkness, and men groape in blindness, not knowing whither they go, or in what danger they remain. The true shepherds serve to drive away the Wolves from the flock, lest they break into it to kill and destroy. When the food of the soul is gone, it cannot but famish and perish, Amos 8, 11. Prov. 29, 18.

[Use 3] Lastly, it is the duty of all, considering how prone we are to yield unto evil, to take heed to our selves, to beware of false teachers, and of wicked persons, lest we lose all that we have learned; to the end we may receive a full reward, • John 8. We must be constant and hold out to the end, keeping faith and a good conscience. Let us exhort one another to this grace of perseverance. It is better never to begin, then not to hold out unto the end.

[Verse 2, 3. And all the Congregation of Israel murmured, &c. and said, Would God we had died in the land of Egypt, &c.] In these words, we see their murmuring in particular. They wish that they had died in Egypt, or in the wilderness, not that they might so cease to sin, and enter into the kingdom of glory, for which the faithful desire it, Philip. 1, 23. but through impatience and contempt of the mercies and blessings of God: for they accuse him of cruelty, or couzenage, or both; as if he went about to betray them, and deliver them into the hands of the Canaanites, and to destroy them, their wives and children. Thus these traitors do accuse God of treason; and all this, because they should have to do with powerful enemies: as if they had not found greater experience of the almighty power of God. Besides, they accuse him of weakness, as well as of rigor and cruelty, as if he were inferior to those accursed nations. Lastly, to fill up the heap & measure of their sins, they would needs go back again into Egypt. This mutiny passeth all the rest that went before or follow after, & God did punish the same more grievously than any other. For after so many benefits bestowed, so many remissions obtained, so many judgments inflicted, so many miracles shown, they esteemed this wonderful deliverance from the Egyptian slavery, his feeding and conducting them through that great and terrible wilderness, Deut. 1.19: no otherwise then as notable effects of his hatred, not of his love; imagining and charging Moses that they were led as a prey to be slaughtered. All this mischief hatched and harbored among them came to pass through the deceitful report of the searchers, telling them that the Cities of their enemies were strongly walled, and flanked with many Towers and Castles, & diverse of the people were giant-like men, of fearful stature, which so far outtopped the Israelites, as that they appeared to them, and likewise to themselves, but as Grasshoppers, that is, of small stature in comparison of them. Hereupon they refuse to go any further, and proceeding in their insurrection, they determine to cast off Moses, and to leave him to shift for himself, & so consulted to choose them a Captain, or as they call it nowadays, an Electo to carry them back again into Egypt, and to yield themselves again into the hands of Pharaoh. They began with weeping and tears, but they end in rage and madness, proceeding from one degree to another; in the end seeking to murder such as exhorted and persuaded them to obedience. The doctrine. It is the nature of wicked men, they do not only sin, but they increase their sins, and add sin unto sin, they proceed from evil to worse, and cease not till they have filled up the measure thereof. Gen. 15.16. 2 Tim. 3.16.17. Mat. 23.32. Rom. 6.19. Eph. 4.19. Being past feeling they wrought all uncleanness.

For first, they are compared to fools & men [Reason 1] besides themselves. Solomon affordeth y^e wicked no better title, because though he knew judgment prepared and provided for him due to his sin, yet he runneth on like a fool in his wicked course▪ Prov. 7.22. Lu. 15.17. adding sin to sin, and never applying the threatening to himself. Secondly, they through custom and continuance in evil doing, have quite lost the feeling of sin in their conscience. Even as a man that is possessed with a frenzy, receiving blow after blow, hurt after hurt, and wound after wound, yet still goeth away laughing, because he hath no feeling of himself, Mark 5. verse 5. Even so is it with wicked men, they have no feeling of their sins, their consciences are dead and benumbed, 1 Timothy 4.2. Thirdly, God giveth not repentance unto them, and they can have no heart to it at all, to bewail and grieve for their sins. Until Christ did look back upon Peter with his Spirit as well as with his eye, he had no heart at all to mourn and weep bitterly for his sins, Math. 26, 75. Thus doth God punish their want of conscience, and the fear of his name.

Behold from hence the difference between [Use 1] the godly and the ungodly. As there is in the manner of their sinning, so likewise there is a difference in the measure of their sins. The godly do not continually lie in them, and add unto them from day today, as the Sow that walloweth in the mire. It is a most miserable and fearful condition, when men are so far left of GOD, and forsaken in his justice to multiply and increase their sins, till they have filled up the heap and measure of them, so that one sin toucheth another, Hosea chapter 4. verse 2. We have need continually to seek unto GOD, and to desire him to stop the passage, that we do not proceed in them, and augment them after the manner of wicked men, and multiply one sin upon another. This therefore is a very dangerous estate, even near unto destruction.

Secondly, this giveth good and sufficient [Use] warrant when to judge a man to be a wicked person. If he add sin unto sin, and we do find that he hath given himself over to remain and continue in sin, to be even a slave to sin and Satan, we may pronounce sentence and give our verdict upon him, that such a one is a profane person. This we may boldly avouch and aver without craving any pardon; as one Swallow maketh not a summer, so one sin maketh not a sinner. But as we may judge a man to be of such a trade, if we see him follow it earnestly, continually, constantly, and in a manner to busy himself in nothing else; if he rise up early, and continue at it until night: so we way judge a man to be profane and wicked, if we see him make a trade and occupation of sin, if we see him follow his sin with greediness, rising betimes and pursuing the same till night, if we see him to be a breaker of the Sabbath, a beastly drūkard, an unclean fornicator, or an open contemner of the word, if he delight in swearing, lying, and such like sins, we may judge him to be a wicked and wretched man, such an one as hath given over himself to add and multiply one sin in the neck of another. It may be such profane persons may refrain their sins for a time, while the hand of God is upon them, yet they are still to be holden as evil men: for let God once remove his hand, by and by they fall to sin afresh, declaring plainly thereby, that the heart was wicked & unreformed, and wholly bent to commit sin, albeit they abstained for a short season. We see this in the Sodomites which came to Lots house with an intent and full purpose to commit filthiness, God smote them with blindness that they could not do it, Genes. 19, 11. because they could not find the house, yet they were never awhit the less guilty of that uncleanness. The like we might say of Pharaoh, who did take away Abraham's wife into his house, the Lord plagued him and his house for it, that he could not execute any wickedness, Gen. 12.17. yet he was no less a sinner. So is it with all wicked persons, though they be restrained by the hand of GOD, yet are they not reformed, but remain as evil as they were before.

Thirdly, we ought carefully to resist the [Use 3] beginnings of sin, and to take heed of entertaining a custom in it. Custom becometh as the Black-Moors skin, and the Leopards spots, Ierem. 13, 23. and turneth into a second nature. True it is, a man may be drawn by infirmity to fall; but this must admonish us to beware of continuance in sin: for thereby in short time we shall become senseless. Sin cleaveth fast on, no man liveth and sinneth not, but let us not harbor it, let it not run too far or too fast. Resist therefore the first motions. A little spark nourished maketh a great flame: a little Leaven leaveneth the whole lump. To give way to it, is as the opening of the flood-gates, or as the rolling down a mighty hill: there is no stay of the passage of it. Learn to repress evil thoughts, before consent: if we have consented, yet let us not put it in practice; and if we have practiced, yet repent betimes and lie not in it, James 1, 14. The Apostle James maketh many degrees of sin; a drawing away, a con•eption, then the birth, lastly death. One sin draweth on another, until man become abominable. Hence it is, that many make no bones of sin, but swallow as many as are offered unto them. The common swearer cannot tell whether he doth swear or not, he useth it so familiarly and ordinarily, that he maketh no scruple of it.

Lastly, let the faithful grow better & better, [Use 4] and learn to proceed from grace to grace, and from faith to faith, Rom. 1, 17. and add virtue to virtue, 2 Pet. 1, 5, 6. and as he that is unjust becometh more unjust, and he that is filthy becometh more filthy, so let him that is righteous be more righteous, and he that is holy, let him become more holy, Revelation 22, 11. This is a certain note of continuance and persuerance; also of truth and sincerity, Philip. 3. verse 12. John 15, 2. Let us therefore make a beginning, and enter into the practice of godliness: one good work shall draw on another, and the longer that we continue in the exercise of piety, the more easy shall it be unto us, 1 John chap. 5. verse 3.

6 And Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Iephunneh, which were of them that searched the land, rent their clothes.

7 And they spake unto all the company of the children of Israel, saying, The land which we passed through to search it, is a good land.

The sin of these persons is further declared in these words, and the rest that follow. They are admonished, but they will not be admonished; rather they grow more obstinate and hard-hearted, verifying the saying of Solomon, Though thou shouldst bray a Fool in a Mortar amongst wheat with a Pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him. Prouerb. 27, 22. Here we have an excellent speech of Caleb and Joshua, verses 7, 8, 9. They put the people in mind of the goodness of the land, and of the love of God toward them, and that the enemies should be bread for them, that is, they should be as easily consumed as a piece of bread is swallowed: as if they should say, We seemed Grashoppers unto them, but we say unto you that they shall be bread for us, we shall utterly destroy them.

To conclude, they will them not to fear the people of the Land, because God was departed from them, but he was amongst his own people. Nevertheless, they would not hear them, they did sing a song to an heavy heart, Prov. 25, verse 20. nay to an hard heart; they had brazen foreheads, and were ashamed of nothing, and therefore for all the care of them, and the love shown unto them, they went about to stone them to death, had not God protected them that stood in his cause. Observe first of all, in that Caleb and Joshua rent their clothes, and fell down before the Lord (a gesture usual in these times) when they heard the blasphemous words of these hypocrites, that the faithful are much grieved even for the sins and rebellions of others. This hath always been the holy affection of God's servants, they have not only mourned and lamented for their own sins, but they have proceeded farther, to take to heart the sins of other men, as Lot, 2 Pet. 2, 7. and David, Psal. 119, 136. They that escaped out of the common destruction are described by this note, they mourned and cried out for the abominations that were committed in the land Ezek. 9, 4. Christ our Savior wept for Jerusalem, Luk. 19, 41, 42.

[Reason 1] The reasons. First, they know that God's anger is provoked for sin, and his curse falleth upon the head of the sinner. Joshua had cause to mourn when he saw that Israel could not stand before their enemies, Joshua 7, 8. For Achan had sinned against the Lord, and the host could not prosper so long as he remained among them. No marvel therefore, if they be grieved whensoever they behold the wrath and judgments of God procured.

Secondly, if we know their iniquities, and [Reason 2] do not mourn for them, they become ours, and we do thereby make them our own. Thus we are made partakers of other men's sins. If we mourn for them, they are theirs, not ours: if we do not mourn, they are both theirs and ours. Hence it is that the Corinthians are reprov'd, that they sorrow'd not for the incestuous person that was among them: yea themselves were defiled by his sin, and became as one polluted lump with him, as the leaven leaveneth three pecks of meal into which it is put. And we see in the prophet Ezekiel 9, 5. they are smitten that mourn'd not for the abominations committed, as well as they that did commit them.

Thirdly, hereby much good and many benefits [Reason 3] come unto our selves. Such are pronounced blessed by the mouth of Christ, Mat. 5, 4. that mourn, whether it be for themselves or for others, or both, for they shall be comforted. When the heavens water the earth, there followeth a fruitful increase: but when the earth watereth the heavens, there shall follow a more plentiful harvest of all heavenly spiritual comfort. If any ask when the heavens are watered by the earth, [Objection] forasmuch as this may seem to be out of course, and contrary to the nature of them: I answer, whensoever a sinner poureth out the tears of his penitent soul and broken heart into the bosom of God, [Answer.] then the earth may be said to water the heavens. For the tears of the godly fall not to the ground, they ascend upward, they do not descend downward: I understand it of the fruit and benefit of them; the Lord gathereth them when we shed them, as precious pearls, and putteth them in his bottle of remembrance. Every drop that falleth from a penitent soul, is as a precious pearl: nay more worth than many Jewels of the world. It shall little avail us to have many pearls and Jewels hanging about us, and to want those that now we speak of. These do not die and perish, but are sown as good seed in the earth, the fruit whereof is very comfortable, because they that sow in tears shall reap in joy, Psal. 126, 5.

Learn from hence the difference between [Use 1] the godly and ungodly. The godly mourn for the sins of others, as if they were their own, whereas the ungodly make a mock of sin, and can laugh heartily at it, as if it were a matter of merriment and of pastime, Prov. 14, 9. Here then is a note to know, who are God's Children, and who are not. When we cannot reform and amend evil, yet if God have given us hearts to mourn for it, it is an happy thing for us, a great blessing, and a good sign that we belong unto him. Lot dwelt among the Sodomites, they were grievous sinners against the Lord, & the cry of them was come up to heaven, he could do no good among them; yet he was so far from joining with them, that he vexed his soul for them. If we do not follow his example, in vain we boast our selves to be the servants of God. This made David say, the zeal of thine house hath consumed me, & the reproaches of them that reproach'd thee are fallen upon me, Ps. 69, 9, 10. And the Israelites carried into captivity wept when they heard the insultings and blasphemies of the wicked, Psal. 137, 6. The godly must not say, I will walk in the way of the multitude, I will join with them, and that it is in vain to strive against them.

Secondly, see the state of the faithful in this [Use 2] life, somewhat there is always to humble and afflict them, in themselves, or in others. The Prophet David testifieth oftentimes his joy of heart which God gave him, nevertheless this is not found without grief and sorrow. We have no joy without grief in this world, but they are tempered and mingled together, bitter and sweet one with another, lest in joy we should be too joyful, & in sorrow we should be too sorrowful, the one serving to allay the other, and the one making the other profitable. Howbeit after this life, when God shall separate the sheep from the goats, these affections also shall be separated, the godly shall have joy without grief, y^e ungodly shall have grief without joy. To have joy without any trouble is not to be looked for upon the earth, it is the condition of them that are glorified and perfected in heaven. On the other side, to have grief and anguish without joy and comfort, is the miserable condition of them that lie damned and tormented in hell, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth, Math. 25, 30. horror without release; weeping, but the tears shall never be wiped away; fire, but it shall never be quenched: this is their cup to drink, this is their portion to inherit. But the godly upon earth, have the gifts of GOD mingled with wants, faith with infidelity, assurance with doubting, hope with despair, love with hatred, perfection with imperfection, sanctification with the relics of sin, as likewise they have grief tempered with joy, and joy with grief. Indeed sometimes they want the sense and feeling of joy and comfort, but never all hope and expectation of them.

[Use 3] Thirdly, we ought much more to mourn for our own sins, otherwise it were gross hypocrisy to mourn for others more then for our selves, or so much for others as for our selves. It is sufficient that we mourn for other men, whose sins we cannot amend: but more is required to be performed toward our selves; we must both mourn for them, and amend them. If we can weep for them, and do not amend them, our tears are counterfeit tears. Let us therefore oftentimes examine our selves, how we are affected toward our selves and toward others, and touching our grief conceived for our sins, and for the sins of other men. Let us mark where we bestow our greatest sorrow, and thereby take notice how it standeth with us, and so learned to reform our practice, if we find it any way to be amiss. The women that followed Christ our Savior to the Cross, wept for him and thought they had just cause so to do; but never imagined that they had more cause to weep for themselves, and therefore he correcteth that practice, Luke 23, 28. Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but for yourselves and for your children, &c. We shall all of us find cause in our own selves to mourn and humble our selves for our selves.

Lastly, we ought to have a care of the salvation [Use 4] of others, and to desire their repentance, otherwise our mourning is idle and nothing worth. He that is entered into the way of salvation himself, will both hunger and thirst after the salvation of other. And hereby we may try, whether our mourning for others be sanctified or not. For as there is a carnal joy, so there is a carnal sorrow: and as there is a natural joy, such as natural men have, so there is a natural sorrow, arising from natural causes. If we have the spiritual & godly sorrow, it will work in us a great care and desire of the salvation of our brethren. As godly sorrow causeth in us repentance never to be repented off, 2 Cor. 7, 10. so godly sorrow conceived for the sins of others, will bring forth an earnest longing in us to bring them to repentance.

8. If the Lord delight in us, then he will bring us into this Land, and give it us, a Land which floweth with milk and honey.

9. Only rebel not ye against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the Land, for they are bread for us; their defense is departed from them, and the Lord is with us, fear them not.

Of the interpretation of these words, we have spoken in the former verses. They contain an effectual exhortation able to stop the mouths of the seditious spies, and to persuade the people to proceed, building themselves upon the blessed experience of the love of God toward them, and of his power sufficient to save them, and ready to stand for thē: and touching their enemies, they should be assured, they could not prevail, because God is not among them, he had laid them open to judgment. The Doctrine. God is a shield and defense for all that are his, but as for his enemies, he taketh no care nor charge of them▪ he leaveth them to themselves, Prov. 30, 5. Exod. 15, 2, and 29, 45, 46. Judge. 2, 14. Psal. 3, 3, and 18, 2.

The reasons. God is the Captain of his [Reason 1] host, to fight his own battles against all the enemies of the Church, 2 Chro. 13, 12. Josh. 5, 14.

Secondly, sin maketh naked and bare of [Reason 2] God's protection and defense, Exod. 32, 25. when the people had committed idolatry, Moses saw that they were naked, for Aaron had made thē naked unto their shame among their enemies.

Thirdly, the enemies of God have forsaken [Reason 3] him, and therefore he will not be with them, because they will not be with him: it is a just thing that he should forsake them that have forsaken him, and that he should not be on their side, who are not on his. They that will not be his people, he will not be their God, Hos. 3, 3, & 1, 9.

From hence it may be objected, [Object.] Is not God said to be everywhere? Isaiah 66, 1. Answer. [Answer.] He is touching his essence, but not in his effectual working by his Spirit to save and deliver. Thus he is only with the godly. Hence it is, that in the end of this chap. verse 42. the Lord said to the rebellious, Go not up, for the Lord is not among you, that ye be not smitten before your enemies. He was not among these, to fight for them, and to save them, to defend and deliver them by his power & great might; otherwise by his essence and according to his nature he was even among them, as he is also everywhere. Thus we see, how God is said to be near, and how to be far off. For while he offereth grace by the ministry of his word, and causeth it to be preached unto us, he is near unto us, Isaiah 55, 6. Call upon him while he is near to wit, while his arm is stretched out to receive us; and his mercy is offered to save us. Thus God may be said to be in one place and in one person more then in another, yea in one place and person & not in another: and he is said, sometimes to come, and sometimes to go away, notwithstanding he be everywhere essentially, and there be no mutation of place, or shadow of change with him. When he beginneth to work by his holy Spirit, faith, repentance, and sanctification, in the hearts of his children, he may be said to come unto them, as John 15, 22. Revel. 3, 20. And when he preached by Noah to the old world, Christ is said by his divine Spirit to come among that people, 1 Pet. 3, 19. He went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which sometimes were disobedient, &c. So likewise his absence or departure, is the removing of the effects of his presence, to wit his grace and favor.

[Use 1] From hence arise comfort to all the godly, they are safe and <◇> under the wings of God, he is a buckler round about, he is their castle and their fortress, whereupon they may be bold and confident in dangers, Psal, 23, 4. No enemy shall hurt them, no danger shall overthrow them. The enemies may oppress them for a time, but God is not far off: if he be on our side, who shall be against us?

[Use 2] Secondly, woe be unto all the enemies of God, they cannot stand nor prosper: which serveth to terrify all evil doers. They are as out-laws or rebels, that live no longer under the protection of law or Magistrate: so are the ungodly proscribed of God, and lie open to judgment. They are as soldiers without weapons, they have neither shield, nor buckler, nor breast-plate, nor helmet, nor sword; their loins are vngirt, their feet are unshod, their heads are uncovered in the day of battle; they lie open as naked men to be wounded and destroyed. They have nothing to defend them or to do them good, all creatures are against them, nay the Creator himself.

[Use 3] Lastly, it is the duty of the faithful to look to their ways, seeing the Lord is with them, and dwelleth among them. He is a God of pure eyes, he seeth us and all our ways; let us therefore carry our selves unspotted of the world, and labor to be holy, as he is holy, Levite. 11, 44. and 19.1, and 20, 7. lest we give him just cause to leave us. If we have any friend come unto us, we are willing to give him the best entertainment we can, we are loath to depart from him, we are willing to content him: how much more ought we to receive the Lord? for we may expect more of him, and be assured of defense & protection from him; grieve him not therefore nor his Spirit by our sins. So long as they are fostered in us, he cannot be welcome unto us, neither shall we be welcome unto him. They will drive him away & make him depart from us. Our bodies should be the Temples of the holy Ghost, and therefore we must remember, that as we are not our own, but bought with a price, so we ought to glorify God in our body and in our spirit, which are God's.

10. But all the Congregation bade, stone them with stones: and the glory of the Lord appeared in the Tabernacle of the Congregation, before all the children of Israel.

These rebels had raged against God, no marvel therefore if they raged against his servants, who notwithstanding had not used any rigor or force against them, only they persuaded the to trust in the promise of God, and boldly to proceed on their journey toward the Land. But this is accounted as an heinous crime, and they deal with them as men worthy of death, according to the saying of Solomon, Prov. 9, 7. He that reproveth a scorner, getteth to himself shame: and he that rebuketh a wicked man, getteth himself a blot. Thus we see how wicked men can abide no reproof, nay, they cannot suffer a word of exhortation, they cannot abide that others should do better then themselves. Again, such as are carnal and corrupt, are prone to hatred, malice, and revenge, yea when no cause of offense is offered unto them. See also how God protecteth his servants in times of danger.

But to pass over these points, from hence observe, that such as are God's servants, and stand for good causes, shall be persecuted, maligned, and evilly entreated, as if they were murderers and malefactors. Though they deserve to be favored and loved, yet they shall be hated, cursed, and contemned. So it was with Moses, when he came to Pharaoh, & moved him to let the people go, Exod. 5, 1, 2, 5, 6. Dan. 3, 19, and 6, 16. Acts 4, 20, 21. and 5, 18. John 16, 2. 1 Kings 13, 4. Thus was it with Elijah and Elisha; thus was it with Michaiah & Jeremiah: and thus it was with all the Prophets, Math. 23, 34.

The reasons; because the world hateth the [Reason 1] truth, and the professors of it: The Preachers and professors of it, because they manifest & publish the truth, Gal. 4, 16: The truth it self, because men love darkness more then the light, inasmuch as their own deeds are evil, John 3, 19. They are chosen out of the world, therefore the world hateth them; whereas if they were of the world, the world would love his own, John 15, 19.

Secondly, Satan is their enemy, and seeth [Reason 2] that by them his kingdom is in danger to be overthrown; hence it is, that he rageth and raiseth persecution, that thereby he may stop their mouths, & stop the course of the truth, Revel. 2, 10, and 12, 13.

Thirdly, God will have his servants tried [Reason 3] in their faith, patience, constancy, and obedience, Revel. 2, 10. We must learn to walk through good report and evil report, and be ready to renounce all rather then the truth, which we must buy at any rate, but never sel it though we might gain all the world, because all such gain is the greatest loss, Math. 16, verse 26.

The uses follow. First, marvel not at it whē [Use 1] we see this come to pass: neither condemn the truth, or the professors of it, 1 John 3, 13. Maruaile not if the world hate you. Let us comfort our selves with this consolation, that it is no rare thing, neither is our case singular, neither do we suffer alone, it hath been the lot of all Christians, nay of Christ himself; let us not seek to be better then he was, the servant may not be above his Lord, if they have persecuted him, they will persecute us, John. 15, 2. Christ himself pronounceth such as suffer for righteousness sake to be blessed, for so did they persecute the Prophets that were before us, Math. 5, 12. Many men in the world are discouraged from godliness of life and walking in a sincere profession, because they see the godly persecuted, and the ungodly to prosper and flourish: therefore John doth forewarn, not to marvel heereat, because this ought not to seem strange unto us, it hath been so from the beginning, and so it hath continued. The world, though it be full of changes, yet changeth not his nature, neither taketh upon it any other shape. Wherefore, we must not cease from godliness for hatred of the world, but rather go more zealously forward, remembering the words of Christ, Math. 11, 12. The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.

Secondly, we must rejoice under the cross, [Use] and be glad when we suffer for the truth, not as evil doers, 1 Pet. 3, 17, and 4, 15. but for well doing. So did the Apostles, Acts 5, 41: so did the Hebrews, chap. 10, 34. They considered with themselves, that they had in heaven a better & an enduring substance, they accounted it a great honor, that they were accounted worthy to suffer for his Name; they knew that they were made partakers of the sufferings of Christ, and that the trying of their faith would work patience, I am. 1, 3, and patience, experience: and experience, hope; and hope would not make ashamed, Rom. 5, 4, 5. The cause therefore for which we suffer, must more comfort us, then the trouble which we endure, dismay us. God will never be wanting unto us, by his grace and Spirit, to hold us up and to stand by us, that either we shall escape the hands of the persecutors, or else he will assist us and strengthen us in the persecution. The affliction is but for a moment, but y^e fruit of it shall remain forever.

Thirdly, we must sit down, and cast our accounts [Use 3] before hand, what our profession will cost, and not think with the sons of Zebede, to sit down at the right hand, and at the left hand of Christ in his kingdom. Mat. 20, 21, but rather learn of Christ. Lu. 14, 26. to hate father, mother, wife, children, brethren, & sisters, yea his own life, that he may continue to be his Disciple. When the brethren exhorted Paul not to go up to Jerusalem, because a Prophet foretold, that he should be bound & delivered into the hands of the Gentiles, he answered, What mean ye to weep and to break my heart? for I am ready, not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem, for the Name of the Lord Jesus. Here was a Christian resolution to undergo all tribulations, and resist even unto blood, if he were thereunto called. The cause of shrinking back, is this want of fore-thinking.

Lastly, we ought to labor to possess our [Use 4] souls with patience, and to show our obedience in suffering, as well as in doing the will of God. There is a twofold obedience required of us, the one active, the other passive▪ Many think themselves discharged of this duty, if they be careful to do as God commandeth: but they never consider that they are bound to glorify the Name of God by suffering, as well as by doing. Christ our Savior the most perfect pattern of obedience, hath performed the will of God both ways: and this is the substance of the Gospel to teach what he did and what he suffered, Acts 10, 39. Wherefore, let our patient mind also be known unto all mē. Phil. 4, 5. Luke 21, 19.

11. And the Lord said unto Moses, How long will this people provoke me? and how long will it be, yer ye believe me, for all the signs which I have shown among you?

12. I will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit, &c.

Now we come to consider how God proceedeth against these sinners; & first touching his threatening, then of his execution of judgment. He threateneth to sweep thē away with the pestilence, and so to root them out utterly. The doctrine is this: Among other diseases and judgments sent for sin, the plague and pestilence is one. It cometh not by chance or fortune, but is sent of God into towns and cities, as 2 Sam. 24, 15. The Lord sent a pestilence in Israel, from the morning to the time appointed. Deut. 28, 21, 22. Levite. 26, 25. Ezek. •4, 19. Numb. 16, 46, 47.

The reasons; first, because all diseases & afflictions come frō God, Amos 3, 6, they come [Reason 1] not out of the dust, neither arise from beneath the earth, but they proceed frō God. Secondly, the titles given unto them, prove as much; they are called the sword of the Lord, 2 Sam. 24, 16, and the arrow of the Lord, Psal. •, •1.

This teacheth, that the pestilence is not caused only or chiefly by natural means. but [Use 2] the chief and main cause is the wrath of God against sin, Deut. 28, 15. And hence it is, that it bringeth with it horror and fear, weeping and lamentation, terror and astonishment, because God striketh the conscience inwardly as well as the body outwardly. Hence it is, that there is removing hither and thither, flying too and fro, and much amazement in all persons. It is sin that bringeth all, both public and private calamities: and God is able to find out our sins, and us in our sins. And as we sin many ways, so he hath many ways to plague us, and it lieth in him to punish us with one or with many of his plagues together. The Lord, if it had pleased him, could have punished David with these three i•gements, famine, the sword, and the pestilence, all together, and his pride and vain confidence in his own strength deserved no less: but he brought only one of them, and put him to his choice, whether of them he would have. We can reason oftentimes among our selves of the causes of the plague, and can tell that it came into such and such places first of all by such a carrier, or traveler, or infected person: nevertheless, though it be not to be denied but there may be such causes, we may not omit or forget the chief and principal. And tell me, how came it at the first? and what shall we make the first cause within us, but sin, and without us, but God? No plague beginneth but by his just and righteous hand, so no plague can cease before God will that sent the same. And how is it, that one city is infected more then another, and one house more then another, and in the same house some are smitten, others are not touched? Is not this the will and pleasure of God also? This then noteth the great folly of such as say, Oh, this is a contagious time of the year, when this season is a little overpast, that we may have some frost, or cold, or wind to purge the air, you shall see all well again, time will wear out all. But if God call not back his hand, and stay his judgment, no wind, no winter, no weather, no cold shall be able to do us any good. And therefore we see oftentimes, that though we have had many nipping frosts, and strong winds, yet this sickness hath increased and not been diminished.

Secondly, the readiest way to avoid the [Use 2] plague, is to abstain from all those things that bring it, continue it, and increase it. Men ordinarily do use sweeping of houses, washing of chambers, cleansing of streets, perfuming of stuff, killing of dogs, taking of physic, and such like: neither doth God condemn or restrain these or any good means to relieve our selves, provided that we trust in God, and not in them: notwithstanding it is certain, that all man's policy without God is able to do nothing. The plague cannot be removed by any man's industry. We must wash & cleanse and purge our hearts by true and unfeigned repentance, I am. 4, 8. Isaiah 1, 16. Ier. 4, 14. Ps. 51, 2, 7. All these places show, how foul and filthy we are by nature. For that which is clean of it self, needeth no washing: but we need washing and purging, and therefore we must confess we are unclean. Nay, no mire is so foul, or dung so filthy as we are through corruption, Job 14, verse 4, and 25, verse 4. Isaiah 64, 6. Titus 1, 15. There is no sent or savor, no carcass so corrupt and ready to infect, as that which proceedeth from our selves, whereby we defile our selves and one another. This Christ teacheth, Math. 15, verse 18. Those things which proceed out of the mouth, come forth from the heart, and they defile the man. Keep out sin from the heart, and the plague shall never defile the man: everyone therefore must labor to cleanse the heart.

Thirdly, seeing it is caused by sin, we must learn to search and find out the true [Use 3] cause of the plague. The enemies of God's word will make the Gospel the cause of the pestilence and of all other calamities. So did Ahab & Jehoram make the Prophets the principal procurers of the famine which fell out in their days, 1 Kings 18, 17. 2 Kings 6, 31. Thus dealt the heathen with the Christians that lived under the heathen and persecuting Emperors; when any famine, or pestilence, or overthrow befell among them, they imputed all to Christians, and cried out to have them persecuted and punished, as appeareth at large in the Apology of Tertullian. These are blasphemous mockers and deriders of the holy faith of Christ, which open their mouths against heaven. The chief cause of the plague is the contempt of the word, Ier. chapter 29, 17, 19.

Lastly, everyone of us must learn how to behave our selves in the troublesome times of [Use 4] this heavy judgment. We must have a tender feeling of their distressed condition that lie under this grievous hand of GOD. The Church is compared to a body, whereof Christ is the head, Eph. 4, ver. 16, and the faithful are members, Romans 12, 4. 1 Corinthians 12, 12. They make but one body, though they be many different members, and are all under one head, and therefore are to help one another, to bear one another's burden, and so fulfill the law of Christ, Galatians 6, 2, 1 Corinthians 12, verse 24. Let us consider the several duties belonging to several persons in the day of visitation.

The duty of Magistrates, is then especially to see religion established, evil doers cut off from the City of God, and all disorders removed, Psal. 101, 8. They must humble themselves, and cause the people to humble themselves. They must appoint fasting and prayer, that thereby they may move the Lord to call back his judgment. We have a notable example of this in the King of Nineue, when he feared a general judgment to come upon himself and his people, he rose up from his throne, and laid away his robe from him, he covered himself with sackcloth, and sate in ashes, yea he proclaimed that neither man nor beast, herde nor flock, should taste anything, and that they should cry mightily to GOD, saying, Who can tell, if God will return and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not? Ion. 3, 6, 7, 8, 9. Here is a good president for Kings & Princes, what by their own example & public decrees they ought to do, that there may be a common humiliation of all estates.

It is the duty of the Ministers to preach the word most earnestly, both the Law and the Gospel, in season and out of season; to persuade to repentance, to comfort the feebleminded out of God's word, to stir up the poor to patience, the rich to liberality, and all men to compassion and commiseration. It belongeth unto them as it were to stand in the gappe; they must above others pray earnestly to God, Amos 7. verse 25. knowing that the prayer of a just man availeth much if it be fervent, James 5, 16, 17. So was it with Moses and Aaron, when the plague was begun, he willed Aaron to take a Censer, who ran into the midst of the Congregation, and stood between the living and the dead, offering Incense, and making atonement for the sins of the people, Numbers 16. verse 48.

It is the duty of all parents, to teach and instruct their children from whence, & for what causes God sendeth the pestilence, and other calamities, Deut. 6.7. They must go before them in a good example of life, Genesis chap. 18, 19. and if they should see all other careless and negligent in this duty, yet must they say with Joshua, chap. 24. verse 15. As for me and mine house, we will serve the Lord. It belongeth unto them to call their families unto private humiliation, as Ester did, chap. 14. verse 16. and every day they should offer up sacrifice for their servants and children, after the example of holy Job, chap. 1. verse 5. and pray for their safety and welfare, and every day give thanks for their most merciful deliverance, while in the mean season so many fall on their right hand and on their left.

It is the duty of rich men in time of contagion, to have as at all other times, so then especially a diligent care of the poor, because then the greatest occasion is offered to do good. We must not shut them up in their houses, and then shut up our compassion from them, as it were in a close prison without relief. It is the commendation of the Christian Church after the ascension of Christ, that they had all things common, and no man said that ought of the things which he possessed was his own, neither was there any among them that lacked▪ Acts 4, 32, 34. If they did this in the need of the Church, how much more ought we to provide for those that cannot provide for themselves? He is not worthy to bear the name of a Christian, that at such times would withhold things necessary from those that are withholden from the company of others. Woe unto those that would add so great affliction to those that are deeply afflicted already. The four Lepers that were put out of the city according to the law, & dwelt apart by themselves at the entering in of the gate for fear of infection, were notwithstanding provided for in the straight siege of Samaria: so long as there was anything in the city, they wanted not, but were provided for, 2 Kings 7▪ 4. So it ought to be among us.

It is the duty of the poor & needy to arm themselves with patience, as a shield & buckler in time of trouble; knowing that nothing falleth out without the providence & appointment of God. He will not lay more upon us then he will enable us to bear, but with the temptation will make an happy issue, 1 Cor. 10, 13. he will comfort us in our tribulation, 2. Cor. 1, 4, and pity us as a father pities his children, Ps. 103, 13, 14. He will stir up the hearts of others to whom he hath given this worlds good, to do us good, who hath the hearts of all in his own hand. Such therefore ought then especially to give themselves to prayer unto God; they must also bear themselves thankfully to men that have been raised up to show compassion toward them, but above all to God himself, from whom every good gift cometh, I am. 1, 17. The duties of such as are taken with the pestilence are also to be considered. They must consider that their sins have deserved that judgment, that God thereby calleth them to repentance, stir•eth them to prayer, exerciseth their faith, driveth thē from security, weaneth them from the love of the world, and bringeth them to a love and desire of heaven. Such must renounce all confidence in the flesh, and commit themselves wholly to God, not doubting of his mercy: they must set their houses in order to avoid contention, they must give testimony of their faith in their sickness, and stir up those that are about them and come to visit them, to the fear of God. Especially let them take heed they do not accuse God of dealing hardly and rigorously with them, because he striketh thē while he letteth others to escape: but let them stoop down to his correction, & submit themselves to his heavenly pleasure with all reverence. Lastly, it is the duty of all men to make solemn profession of their humiliation & repentance, humbling themselves before God by fasting and prayer, against whom they have sinned, 1 Kin. 8, 38. Al bravery and excess ought then to be laid aside, all riotousnesse and luxuriousness should be banished far from us, Esa 22, 12, 13, 14. The Prophet Amos reproveth the rich, & crieth out earnestly against their senselessness, living in all kind of pleasures and delights, & nothing at all regarding the affliction of Joseph chap. 6. So was it with the rich Glutton in the gospel, though he saw Lazarus lie at his gate in great misery, yet he was clad in purple, & fared deliciously every day, Lu. 16, 19. such is the pride and delicacy of our times, y' albeit God sweep away many with his fearful visitation, and the cry of the poor at such times be very great, that it might even move the stones to relent, and that it soundeth with a shrill voice in the ears of men and ascendeth up to God, yet the greatest sort are nothing moved: the Lord of hosts calleth to weeping and to mourning, & to girding with sackcloth, and behold joy and gladness slaying Oxen and killing sheep, eating flesh and drinking wine; let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we shall die. No man almost will diminish anything of his bravery in apparel, of his daintiness in fare, of his costlinesse in furniture, and of his excess in all things. Let all such as fear God, think upon the evil day, & prepare themselves against the time of affliction, & stoop under the mighty hand of God.

[I will disinherit them, and will make of thee a greater Nation and mightier then they.] A most fearful threatening. It is a sore punishment when the father is constrained to disinherit his son, Gen. 49, 3, 4, but much sorer when he must disinherit all of them. God threateneth in this place to disinherit thousands of Israel, and to make of Moses a mighty Nation. And as John the Baptist said to the Pharisees and Sadducees that came to his baptism, that God was able of those stones to raise up children unto Abraham, so doth the Lord say to Moses, that he would destroy that whole people, for whom he had prayed before, chap. 10, 36. Return, O Lord, to the many thousands of Israel: but of him he would raise up a great and a mighty Nation. This threatening we must understand conditionally, except his anger be appeased at the prayer and intercession of Moses. The threatenings of God are twofold, some are peremptory and absolute, never to be revoked, as it is said of y^e laws of the Medes & Persians, that they could not be changed: as Gen. 2, 17. If Adā had prayed all the days of his life, that he might not die, but return to his former condition, the sentence of God had not been reuersed. The like we see concerning Moses, God threateneth that he should never enter into the Land of promise: Moses understanding the threatening conditionally, besought the Lord, that he might go over Jordan into that Land, but the Lord was wroth with him and would not hear him, but said unto him, Let it suffice thee, speak no more unto me of this matter. The same we might say of David, he received a threatening against his sin, that the child conceived in adultery should die, 2 Sam. 12, 14, nevertheless he besought God for the child, with fasting, weeping, and prayer, v. 16. he said, Who can tell, whether God will be gracious to me, that the child may live? Notwithstanding, according as the Prophet had denounced, the child died. So then, we see that some of God's judgments denounced against the sons of men are absolute and irrevocable, and must take effect: other of them are limited with a condition, and upon humiliation and repentance are changed & altered; and so it is with the promises of God, some of them are absolute, and some are with condition. Such as concern salvation and are necessary to eternal life, are promised absolutely in respect of God; such as are temporal and belong to this present life, are promised conditionally. We learn from hence, that the threatenings and denunciations of God's judgments are for the most part conditional, not absolute, toward his people, and to be understood with this exception, except they repent and amend. This condition is sometimes expressed, and sometimes understood. It is set down expressly, Ier. 18, 7, 8. Sometimes it is suppressed and understood inclusively, Gen. 6, 3.

The reasons: First, because after threatening, [Reason 1] if repentance follow, it causeth forgiveness of sin, and taketh away the cause of punishment. Sin is the cause of God's judgments: if the cause be removed, the effect will cease, Ezek. 33, 14, 15. Whē I say to the wicked, thou shalt surely die; if he turn from his sin, and do that which is lawful, &c. he shall surely live, he shall not die.

Secondly, God is a gracious God, of great [Reason 2] longsuffering, and of much patience, and unspeakable kindness, ready (though much moved) to receive to mercy as soon as we return to him, Ier. 3, 12. He promiseth mercy to them that repent; his anger shall not fall upon them that return, because he is merciful and will not keep his wrath forever.

Thirdly, this is the end that God aimeth at [Reason 3] in all his threatenings, not the destruction of them that are threatened, but their amendment, Ezek. 18, 23. Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die, saith the Lord God? and not that he should return from his ways, and live? and ch. 33, 11. Why will ye die, O house of Israel?

The uses. First, consider that in the greatest [Use 1] and most fearefull threatenings of God's heavy judgments, there is comfort remaining, and hope of grace and mercy to be found, there is life in death, and health in sickness, if we can change and amend. Thus do the Princes of Judah profit by the threatenings of the Prophet, when he had threatened desolation of y^e Lord's house, and the destruction of the whole Land, for which the Priests and people would have put him to death; they pleaded the practice & example of good Hezekiah, for the comfort of themselves and the people of his time, and thereby stirred up themselves to fear y^e Lord, and to turn from their evil ways, Ier. 26.18. The place is worthy to be considered, where the Princes show that Jeremiah did no more thē Micah had done before him, yet Hezekiah and all Judah did not put him to death, but feared the Lord and besought him of mercy, and the Lord repented him of the evil which he had pronounced against them. But it may be objected, If God threaten one thing and doth another, it may seem his will is changeable, and that he hath two wills. I answer, [Answer.] the will of God is one and the same, as God is one: but it is distinguished into that which is secret & revealed, as the Church is sometimes visible, and sometimes invisible, yet but one Church. The secret will is of things hidden with himself, and not manifested in the word. The revealed is of things made known in the Scripture▪ Deut. 29, 29. and by daily experience. The secret is without condition, the revealed with condition, and therefore for the most part it is joined with exhortation, admonition, instruction, and reprehension. But no man is exhorted and admonished to do his secret will, because no man can resist it, the reprobate and devils themselves are subject unto it, and must perform it, Rom. 9.19.

[Use 2] Secondly, it is the duty of the Ministers to propound the threatenings of GOD with such conditions, provoking and persuading all men to repentance and amendment of life, offering grace and mercy to the humble and broken hearted. They are to preach not only the law, but likewise with the law y^e Gospel. And thus they are said both to bind and loose, both to retain sins and to forgive. For as Elijah by his earnest and zealous prayer did both shut up the heavens, and open the windows of heaven, so that it gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit: so the Ministers of God by their earnest & zealous preaching, do shut up the kingdom of heaven against all obstinate persons, and also open the heavens to such as are penitent. To propound the threatenings of God without condition, is to bring men to despair, and to take from them all hope of mercy and forgiveness.

Thirdly, it is the duty of the people, whensoever [Use 3] they hear the theaternings of God, to stir up themselves to repentance, thereby to prevent his wrath, and to stay his judgments. Let us take heed, we do not rush on, as the horse in the day of battle, to our destruction. And thus have y^e servants of God understood his threatenings, and accounted them as a Sermon of repentance, as we heard before of Hezekiah king of Judah, and all Judah with him, when Micah the Morashite prophesied, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Zion shall be plowed like a field, & Jerusalem shall become heaps: they fell not into desperation, neither concluded an impossibility of obtaining pardon and the continuance of the Temple, of the city, and of the whole kingdom, but besought the Lord, and feared his Name, & the Lord repented him of the plague which he had denounced against them. And no marvel that this godly king conceived the meaning of the threatening in that manner, for so did the King of Nineveh, an heathen and idolatrous king understand the threatening of Jonah no otherwise. Who can tell if God will turn and repent, & turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not? Thus also did Hezekiah before named understand the message sent to him from God by Esayah, when he was sick unto death: Set thine house in order, for thou shalt die, and not live; and therefore he turned his face to the wall, and prayed to the Lord of life. Let us make this use of the Ministry of the word, and of all the threatenings contained therein, to be stirred up to repentance and obedience, lest we be destroyed. If there be no change in us, let us look for a change from God: and he will never change his threatenings, except we change our lives and conversations.

[Use 4] Fourthly, seeing the threatenings of God, suppose a condition, we must also know how we ought to understand his promises, to wit, with a condition. The threatenings of GOD have a condition of repentance: the promises have a condition of faith and obedience. God hath made many merciful promises unto us in his holy word howbeit he hath no otherwise bound himself unto us, then we will acknowledge our selves bound in duty to serve him.

We must not only consider what God promised to us, but withal remember what he requireth of us. Hence it is, that y^e Prophet saith, I will speak suddenly concerning a nation and concerning a kingdom to built it and to plant it:but if it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then will I repent of the good, wherewith I said I will benefit them. He hath promised to love us, but he requireth at our hands, to love him again. He hath promised to forgive us our trespasses, but he chargeth us to forgive them that trespass against us. He hath promised to be a Father unto us, but he looketh for at our hands that we walk before him as obedient children.

Lastly, if God threaten and no repentance [Use 5] followeth, then certainly the threatenings pronounced will come to p^osse. God threateneth not in vain, he terrifieth not without cause. If we do not prevent them, they will prevent us and take us away suddenly. See the fearful examples of the flood, of Sodom, of the destruction of the ten tribes, of Jerusalem and of the Jews, of the seven Churches of Asia, and other Churches planted by the Apostles, supplanted in the wrath of God; all assure us of the truth of this point. Consider our own ways in our hearts. We live where we hear the fearful judgments of God daily and deservedly threatened against us for our sins, and namely for the contempt of the Gospel in all places and among all persons, there followeth little repentance and amendment of life; nay, it seemeth that God hath blinded our eyes and hardened our hearts, lest we should return and be saved. What will follow, nay what must necessarily follow, whosoever hath half an eye may easily perceive. Yet see how we deceive our selves with flattering words, as Ier. 7.4 they said, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord: so we can say, Tush, The Gospel, the Gospel, it can never be rooted out from among us, Popery shall never be established anymore. But what do we glory so much of the Gospel? or why do we put confidence in this tule? For this Gospel shall be a witness and give in verdict against us, and as an upright judge condemn us. And what is impossible unto God? what cannot his power, what may not his justice do? such as believe not the truth but have pleasure in unrighteousness, shall be damned Can we challenge to our selves anymore then God's own people, that had the law and the Prophets, the Temple and the sacrifices, the Ark and the Covenant? or more then the Churches of Asia, and other founded by the Apostles? who seeth not a general coldness, a palpable deadness, a fearful declining and falling backward generally in all places? All which make a preparatiō to apostasy. Papists everywhere increase, and are winked at: th^y have been threatened with enditements, forfeitures, and imprisonments, but they live at ease, grow rich, have great friends, and laugh all their enemies or opposites to scorn. Such as have been zealous, decay: godly parents fail, and a crooked generation ariseth after them: ignorance aboundeth: wickedness hath the upper hand; and he that setteth himself against evil, maketh himself a prey, Isaiah 59.15. Atheists swarm everywhere, and lift up their horns on high: the people for the most part are fit for any change, to profess Christ, or antichrist, to worship God in truth or in an Idol.

13 Then Moses said unto the Lord, Then the Egyptians shall hear it (for thou broughtest up this people in thy might from among them:)

14 And they will tell it to the inhabitants of this land: for they have heard that thou Lord art among this people, that thou Lord art seen face to face, &c.

To the former threatening is annexed an excellent prayer of Moses made in behalf of the people. We have not many of his prayers recorded in Scripture: but such as are left unto us, are most worthy and heavenly, testifying that he had the spirit of supplication in a plentiful measure, and therefore no marvel, being so excellent, if they were also very effectual. Whereby we see, it is not for naught, that he is said after a sort to have bound or chained the hands of God, Exod. 32.10. and to have prevailed more by his word than Joshua by his sword, by his prayers, then the host of Israel by their weapons of war, Exod. 17.11. And in this place, after that God had threatened to make a general havoc and destruction of this stubborn people, as a man wipeth a dish and turneth it upside down, he standeth in the gap to turn away the wrath of God, Psa. 106 23. which otherwise as a mighty flood would break in upon them, and bear down all before it. Whereby it appeareth, that the words in the former threatening were not uttered definitively, but conditionally, to wit, if Moses did not make intercession for them, and stand between God and his people. For if they had been spoken simply, or been understood to be spoken in that sort, Moses ought not to have prayed for them, but to have given place to the threatening, and rested in the decree and determination of God, submitting himself to his holy will and pleasure. But he was stirred up thereby to seek and to sue for pardon for them, and therefore he understood the same conditionally.

The sum and effect of the prayer is, that GOD would not destroy his people utterly according as he had threatened; and he moveth him to show mercy toward thē by three reasons. The first is drawn from the consideration of the enemies of the Church, that they might have no occasion to reproach the holy Name of God, and to tread his glory (which is higher thē the heavens) under their feet, taking occasion thereby to blaspheme him, if he should destroy his people, which he with a strong hand had brought out of Egypt Exod. 32.12. Deut. 9.28. and 32.27. The second reason is drawn from the nature and essential properties of God, he is of longsuffering and great mercy, &c. The third is taken from the former works and examples of his great goodness, wherein he moveth God to pity them, seeing he had oftentimes before shown favor toward them: all which had been utterly lost, if he should utterly destroy them. Out of these words, as also out of all the reasons urged by Moses, in general we learn, that the ordinary means and ready way to revoke and call in God's judgments, is true, hearty, and unfeigned prayer, whensoever his hand in any sort lieth heavy upon us, Ps. 107.6, 13, 19, 28. and 106.23. I am. 5.17, 18. Numb. 12.13. 1 King. 8.33, 35, 37, 44.

The reasons. First it is profitable to all [Reason 1] things, and is of force to obtain every good thing: and if every good thing, then also to remove every evil thing from us; It obtaineth blessings of all sorts, public and private, spiritual and temporal, for our selves and for others, touching this life and a better, John. 16.23. In that day, ye shall ask me nothing: Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you. Where we see the generality of the promise, confirmed by a vehement asseveration. Secondly, prayer [Reason 2] obtaineth the pardon & forgiveness of sins, Act. 8.22. I am. 5.15. 1 John. 5.16. and sin is the true and proper cause of all judgments whatsoever: if then it obtain the removing of the cause, it shall also obtain the taking away of the effect. For the cause being removed, the effect will cease. Thirdly, it is so mighty [Reason 3] that it is able to throw down y^e fastest hold and surest possession that Satan hath gotten: Paul having shown that we wrestle not with flesh and blood, that is, not only, or chiefly with them, but with principalities & powers, and spiritual wickedness in high places, prescribeth this as a means to subdue and overcome them. And Christ our Savior telleth his disciples, that this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting. If then it be able to cast him out with all his forces, it is more able to prevent judgments threatened, or to remove them when they are inflicted.

But against this point, many things are objected; [Object. 1] first it is said in general, that the prayers of many are fruitless: that they call upon God, but can receive no answer; To this I answer, Many make their prayers unprofitable, because they pray amiss, I am. 4.3. the fault is in themselves, not in God. Again, albeit he do not hear and help his servants presently, yet he doth it, when the doing of it is better, both in respect of his own glory and our own good. He best knoweth the times and seasons which he keepeth in his own power, Act. 1.7. Heb. 4.16. For this cause, he would not by and by work a miracle at the request of his mother, John. 2.4.7. nor hear the Canaanitish woman at the first Mat. 15. but delayed her sundry times. Lastly, it falleth out oftentimes, that when the faithful ask one thing, he granteth them another, fully equivalent to that and sometimes far better; and thus he heareth them, 2 Cor. 12.8, 9. Mat. 26.39. Paul prayed against a temptation, he hath grace to withstand and resist it: Christ Jesus prayed to hand the cup of the Cross removed: he must drink of it, but he hath strength sufficient given him to overcome it. God therefore heareth our prayers, when he giveth us as good a blessing or a better, though we obtain not the particular which we desire.

[Object. 2] Again, it may be said, Moses prayed that he might enter into the land of promise, and yet was not heard, Deut. 3.25. of which we spake before. I answer, he prayed after a sort against the express will of God, only he was ignorant whether the threatening were conditional. Besides, we cannot say that this was altogether frivolous and fruitless, because he obtained to see the Land, so that albeit he did not set foot in it, yet the Lord shown him all the land to his great comfort, & strengthening of faith: so that in effect he said or else might say with Simeon, Luk. 2.29, 30. Lord now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation.

[Object. 3] Thirdly, we heard before, that David prayed for the restoring of his child to health whē it was sick, yet the child died, and he was not heard, 2 Sam. 12.16. Answer. He was not heard in that one particular: howbeit afterward God gave him another son, another son by the same mother, another son that sate upon his throne after him. Again, God had mercy on the soul of the child, of which he was persuaded, because he saith, I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me, 2 Sam. 12.23. so y^t his prayer was an acceptable sacrifice to God, & a profitable sacrifice to himself [Object. 4] Lastly, it may be objected, that God (who hath no greater to swear by) sweareth by himself, that though Moses and Samuel stood before him, yet his mind would not be toward this people, Ier. 15.1. and though these three, Noah, Daniel and Job were in the land, they should deliver but their own souls, &c. Eze. 14.14. they should deliver neither sons nor daughters, verse 16. I answer, this is nothing to the purpose, for herein nothing is expressly affirmed, but the matter is only supposed, as 1 Cor. 13.1, 2. Again, it is said expressly, that they should deliver their own souls, and therefore we cannot say, that their prayer is without profit. Now let us proceed to y^e uses.

First, we may hence conclude, that great is the use, utility and necessity of prayer in the church, greater thē of the Sun in y^e firmament. [Use 1] For what have we left when God is offended and provoked, but this? when this is rightly performed, it calleth in his wrath gone out against us. Nevertheless, the Apostle requireth two things to make our prayers effectual and of great profit toward us: the one in respect of the person that prayeth, the other in respect of the prayer of the person. Touching the person of him that prayeth, if he desire to have his prayer heard, he must be just & righteous; it is not the prayer of every man whatsoever he be that availeth much, but the prayer of a righteous man, that feareth God, that believeth in Christ, that serveth him in spirit and truth, and walks before him in holiness and righteousness of life; these are they whose prayers pierce the heavens, and prevail much with the Almighty. This is taught in many places of the word, Psal. 34, 15, and 145, 19. 1 Pet. 3, 10. 1 Tim. 2, 8. Prov. 15, 29. The prayers of such, are like to Jacob's ladder which was set upon the earth, and the top of it reached up to heaven, Gen. 28, 12. so do the prayers of the faithful, they are made on earth, but they reach up to the clouds, nay to heaven, and come into the presence of God himself: our prayers ascend to him, and his graces descend to us. On the other side, as the prayers of the righteous are most acceptable to God & profitable to us, so the prayers of the wicked and unrighteous are most abominable. As the one sort are sweet in the nostrils of God, and ascend as incense, so the other are unsavory, and stink worse then dung and mire in his sight. Wherefore let not the ungodly men persuade themselves of God's favor, or think he any whit regardeth the words of their mouths: for such as incline their hearts to wickedness, the Lord will never hear them. Again, our prayers must be fervent & earnest, they must be kindled with a burning zeal against all coldness, they must flow from unfeigned faith against all doubting and wavering, they must be continued with great constancy and perseverance against all weariness and giving over before we have obtained. As then he that prayeth must be righteous, so must his prayer be fervent, if he will obtain anything at the hand of God.

Secondly, hence ariseth great comfort to [Use 2] the people of God that groan under affliction and are ready to sink down under an heavy burden. Let none of God's servants despair of help, but hope in God, who hath left us this as a plaster to heal all our wounds, or as a medicine to cure all our diseases. Hence it is, that the very infidels by light of nature and other superstitious persons have confessed this truth, that have not yielded to the truth of God. The Mariners, that were ignorant of the true God, cried unto their gods, when the sea wrought and was tempestuous against them, Ion. 1.5. and the shipmaster stirred up Jonah to pray to his God, if so be that God would think upon them that they perish not, ver. 6. Pharaoh the king of Egypt, knew that the prayers of Moses and Aaron, the holy servants of God, were very profitable and acceptable; therefore he sent for them and desired them to pray for him, when the plagues of God lay upon him and his people. This also did Jeroboam, that wicked king that made Israel to sin, know and understand; for when his hand was dried up, which he thrust out to lay hold on the Prophet of God, he desired him to pray that it might be restored. If these have confessed y^e benefit of prayer, how much more ought we? though there be an infinite distance between heaven and earth, between God and man, yet heareth he from his holy hill the supplications of his righteous servants poured out before him. Affliction taketh away all comfort and joy from the sons of men, that are unregenerate: when they are pinched with poverty, with famine, with misery and calamity, they are quite out of heart, they distrust, they despair, they fret & fume, they mutter and murmur against God. They have no hearts to lift up unto him, neither can they run to the throne of grace to find mercy in time of need, but do oftentimes blaspheme the God of heaven, and repent not of the works which they have wickedly committed. They would fain have some comfort in their sorrows, but they know not of whom to seek it, or where they shall find it. Hence it is, that they run to music and instruments of delight, to wine-taverns, to strong drink, to evil company, and some to witches and enchanters, which they call cunning men, and cunning women. But the servants of God which have learned better things, know that God is the Father of all comfort and consolation, and therefore they fly unto him by prayer, who is able to deliver their souls from death, their eyes from tears, and their feet from falling, Psa. 56.12, 13. and 116.8. In troubles therefore, if we call upon him, we have his promise (surer then the heaven) that he will help us and send us a joyful deliverance.

[Use 3] Lastly, let us from hence be moved to be diligent in this duty, and not to give over till the God of blessing pour down a blessing upon us. How heavy soever his hand be, and how long soever, in continuance yet if we can call unto him, we are safe.

Woeful were our condition, if we should cry and there were none to hear: but it is otherwise with us, we do not so soon call, as he is ready to answer. A poor silly lamb entangled in the bushes and brambles, if it can but bleat, the shepherd will quickly help it: so if we be the sheep of Christ, and can call unto him, the good shepherd of the sheep will by and by hear us: if we can lift up our voice to him that sitteth in the heavens, he will soon free us and deliver us out of our affliction. So long as we have a mouth to speak, he hath ears to hear: and when the tongue cannot, if with the heart we can sigh to him, he understandeth that language, and we shall be sure of help, as Abraham gave over asking, before God gave over answering, Gen. 18.32, 33.

15 Now if thou wilt kill all this people as one man, then the nations which have heard the fame of thee will speak, saying, 16 Because the Lord was not able to bring this people into the land which he sware unto them, therefore he hath slain them, &c.

Now let us come to consider the parts of the prayer as they lie in order. And first we may not think that we have the whole prayer which Moses uttered, and that he delivered it in no more words: for it appeareth by the abrupt beginning, ver. 13. that he had spoken somewhat before: but this is only the substance of the prayer, and hath the chief reasons which he used. The first argument is very forcible and effectual, and largely pressed upon God, which showeth that y^e nations round about had heard of their deliverance out of Egypt, the Canaanites had heard that God was among his people with his word, with his presence, with his authority, with his signs and miracles: if then God should deliver them to death, these cursed nations would revile the Name of God, and accuse him either of impotency or of tyranny: that by reason of his hatred toward thē, he would not, or of his weakness he could not bring them into the land of promise; whereupon he concludeth that it were far better for God, to free his name from such blasphemous reproaches by sparing his people. Moses never once offereth to plead for pardon through anything y^t was to be found in the people themselves, he confesseth that there was matter enough in them to have removed them long ago out of the world: but he lifteth up his eyes unto heaven, and desireth God to look upon himself and to have respect to his own name, lest the infidels and idolaters should take occasion by the destruction of the Israelites to blaspheme him. How forcible this reason is, and how powerfully it pierced as I may say the ears, nay the heart of God, appeareth notably by the mouth and confession of God himself: I would make the remembrance of them to cease from among men, were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy, lest their adversaries should behave themselves strangely, and should say, Our hand is high, & the Lord hath not done all this. What was it then that hindered him from putting out their name from under heaven? Not that they were not worthy to perish, but it would have opened the mouths of the infidels to scoff at God whom they served, and at his religion which they professed. They would have said, Where is the God that hath maintained them so long? is he fallen asleep? or is he in a far journey? or what ayleth he, that he succoreth them no more? We learn from hence that it is a good plea to move the Lord to show mercy, even for his glory and his own names sake, Josh. 7.8, 9. Psal. 79.8, 9, 10. and 115.1. Dan. 9.19.

The reasons follow. God doth not bestow anything to any other end then this, be aimeth at this mark and hath respect to his own glory, both in giving and forgiving, Isaiah 48.9. Prov. 16.4. and therefore ought we also to set the same end before us in prayer. The Lord in all his actions of mercy and judgment hath evermore a special respect to the promoting of his honor, and the maintaining of his own glory, Exod. 9.6. Rom. 9.17. Exod. 32.11, 12. Secondly, the servants of God have been so far carried with a desire of promoting and preferring of it, as that they have preferred it before their own life, nay before their own soul and salvation when they have come in comparison together, as appeareth in Moses, and in Paul. Thirdly, God's glory is most dear to himself: if then we will be his children, tender & dear unto him, we must follow his example, we must prize that at the highest rate which he prizeth above all, we must love that which he loveth, and that ought to be most dear unto us which is most dear to him.

[Use 1] The uses. This reproveth the most part of the world, who never set this mark before them to aim at, nor intend the glory of God in their prayers, but the fulfilling of their own wills and desires, and the satisfying of their own gain and profit. It is nothing precious unto them, but less regarded then their own names. Every man naturally regardeth himself and magnifieth his own name, but the name of God never goeth near them. Joshua hath relation to such a point as this, when he saith, speaking of the Canaanites and all that inhabited the land, They shall cut out our name from the earth, and what wilt thou do unto thy great name?

Solomon teacheth in the Proverbs, that a good name is rather to be chosen, then great riches, and loving favor rather then silver and gold, & it is better then a precious ointment; but if we speak of the Name of God, which is glorious and fearful, Deu. 28.38. it ought to be more dear unto us then all the silver & gold, then all the Jewels & precious stones w^c worldlings make their heaven and happiness.

[Use 2] Secondly, let us in all distresses and troubles be comforted with this consideration, that he will respect his own glory, and therefore the good of his Church. For the preservation of the Church, and the advancement of God's glory are joined together. He will never forsake those y^t are his, in prosperity or in adversity: because if he should any way fail of his promises, he should lose much of his own glory, which is impossible. The Church shall never sink under the burden that lieth sore upon it It is like the bush that burned, which Moses saw in the wilderness while he fed the sheep of Jethro his father in law, it flamed but it consumed not: whereby God declared the low ebb of the church into w^c it was brought, distressed in Egypt, but it should not be destroyed; he that dwelled in the bush preserved the same, Deu. 33.16. If then the glory of God shall never fail, the gates of hell cannot prevail against the Church.

Lastly, we must give no occasion of causing [Use 3] the name of God which is holy in it self, to be blasphemed. Let us be no means to make it evil spoken off, but labor by all means to be instruments of setting it forth. Blessed are such as any way advance it. Everyone should aim at it, high and low, rich and poor, master and servant, husband and wife. Everyone may gain some glory to God, how mean soever his place, how simple soever his calling be. The Apostle chargeth the Jews, that through thē the Name of God was blasphemed, because they had the law and made boast of God, they knew his will and were instructed in the word. For as wicked children do dishonor and discredit their parents, 1 Sam. 8.3. so it turneth after a sort to God's discredit in the world, when they which are called the children of God, and named by the name of Christ, do live unworthily so high and holy a calling. There is none that liveth in the Church, albeit in the poorest and lowest calling, but if he profess Christ, and walk not according to his profession, he causeth the Name of God to be evil spoken off: the servant that hath the meanest office, if he will be thought religious and have the Gospel in his mouth, and do not perform the duties of his calling with great care and a good conscience, he causeth the Name of God and his doctrine to be blasphemed, 1 Tim. 6.1. The higher & more eminent any man's place is, the more scandal he giveth and the greater occasion of grief to the godly, of hardening to the wicked, and of dishonor to God. Let a man be as profane as may be, that neither feareth God, nor reuerenceth man, let him live in the grossest sins that can be committed or named; let him be an open blasphemer, a contemner of the word, a profaner of the Sabbath an abuser of the Sacraments and of all good things, there is commonly no great matter made of it, he is neither reproached, no reprov'd. But let one that professteth religion be suddenly overtaken thorough infirmity in any sin or purpose of sin, not only he is taunted and traduced by the profane multitude, but the truth of God and the profession of the truth, nay the God of truth is evil spoken off, dishonored and blasphemed. These things ought to go near us, even to the heart, and to make us watchful over our ways: seeing we have those that watch over us, to see if they can have ought whereof to accuse us.

17 And now, I beseech thee, let the power of my Lord be great, according as thou hast spoken, saying, 18 The Lord is long suffering and of great mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression, and by no means clearing the guilty, &c.

In these words we have the second reason drawn from the consideration of the nature or being of God, which is seen by showing mercy and judgment, both which are in his hand, mercy to his own people, judgment to his enemies. This description is taken out of the book of Exodus, chap. 34.6. very comfortable to afflicted and distressed consciences. So Jonah 4.2. first he is said to be long suffering; then, of great mercy, and thirdly forgiving iniquity and transgression. If any ask. Is he only merciful? is he not also just? The answer is, he will by no means clear the guilty, but will visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children. But of this latter clause we shall speak afterward, verse 33.34. Out of the former, note, that it is the property of God to be always of great patience, much gentleness, and long-sufferance. He is of a forbearing nature, and slow to anger, expecting many days the conversion, repentance, and recovery of sinners, Isaiah 65.2. Ier. 35.15. and 25.5. Matth. 23.37. We have many examples hereof in the word of God, Gen. 6.3. 1 Pet. 3.20. The long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah while the Ark was a preparing. So Luke 13.6. 7, 8, 9. 2 Chro. 36.15. We have all experience of this point.

[Reason 1] The reasons: first he knoweth our weakness, our corruption and inclination to evil, he knoweth whereof we are made, he remembereth that we are but dust, Isaiah 57.16, Psal. 103.14. yea, as a wind that passeth away, and cometh not again, Psal. 78.38.39. no better then vanity, yea, lighter altogether then vanity, Psal. 62.9.

Secondly, his nature is to be merciful & full of compassion, 2 Chron. 36.15.

Thirdly, the sins of the wicked are not yet full, they have not yet filled up the measure of them, Gen. 15.16.

Lastly, he is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance, and therefore he is not slack concerning his promise, but is long suffering to us ward, 2. Pet. 3.9.

[Objection] Before we come to the uses of this doctrine, we must remove a few objections that seem to make against this point. And first, how can God be said to be very patient and to suffer long, seeing his judgments are often said to come suddenly & speedily as a whirlwind and a tempest? and when they shall say, peace and safety, his coming shall be as the coming of a thief in the night, or as travel upon a woman with child, 1 Thess. 5.2.3. [Answer.] I answer, to be long before he come, and to be swift when once he cometh, are not opposite or contrary the one to the other. He waiteth a long time, but when the days of his patience are expired, then suddenly destruction cometh. He giveth warning after warning, and will do nothing but he revealeth the same to his servants the Prophets, Amos 3.7. Dan. 9.5.6. but when his patience is abused and contemned, then he cometh swiftly and stayeth not. The Apostle Peter speaking of the second coming of Christ to judgment joineth both these together, and showeth how and wherefore he is both long in coming, and yet swift in coming; he forbeareth because he is patient, and he cometh suddenly in his glory because he is just, 2 Pet. 3.9, 10. first he saith, that God is long suffering, not willing that any should perish: then he addeth, the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night. Thus we see how he suffereth patiently, and yet withal how he cometh suddenly.

Secondly, [Object.] the question may be asked whether the Ministers should forbear or abstain from threatening and denouncing of God's judgments against the ungodly, seeing God is gentle and merciful, slow to anger and of great kindness? whereby they shall terrify men without cause, and make themselves liars. I answer, [Answer.] it is true that Jonah the Prophet was discouraged upon this ground and consideration, from threatening destruction against Nineveh. Though he were sent against the city with heavy tidings, yet he consulted with flesh and blood, & fled to Tarshish from the presence of the Lord, Ion. 1.3. because he knew that God was a gracious God and merciful, repenting him of the evil, chap. 4.2. But this was his infirmity, and therefore he is reprov'd, ver. 10.11. Wherefore it belongeth to all faithful Ministers of God as a part of their function, howsoever the judgments of God be differ'd and their Sermons derided, to open their mouths boldly, and to reprove sin earnestly, that they may thereby deliver their own souls and save the people that hear them, 2 Tim. 4.2.

Thirdly, it may be asked, [Object.] whether it be lawful for the godly to crave of God to be patient and longsuffering, to bear with the ungodly and vessels of wrath? especially considering the prayer of Jeremiah, chap. 15.15. Lord, remember me and visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors, &c. The prayer of Moses and of Jeremiah seem to be contrary. Answer. [Answer.] The prayer of Jeremiah is special and extraordinary, and containeth no general rule and direction for the Church. He spake this as a Prophet, not as a private man, for he foretold to his persecutors the vengeance and wrath of God certainly to fall upon them; the general rule belonging unto all, is set down by Christ, Matth. 5 44. To pray for our enemies and them that hate us.

Lastly, it may be demanded, [Object] whether the publishing and preaching of the doctrine of God's patience and forbearing be not dangerous and hurtful, as seeming to tend to lead men into sin, and minister occasion of hardening the heart, and delaying of repentance. I answer, from God's delaying of his judgments we may not conclude the delaying of our repentance. True it is, the ungodly abuse this doctrine to licentiousness, Rom. 2.4.5. as they do also other doctrines and the Scriptures themselves, to their own perdition: the providence of God to idleness, the predestination of God to wickedness, the mercy of God to profaneness, the grace of God to wantonness, justification by faith to carelessness of good works, yea Christ himself to be a stumbling block and a stone of offense. Notwithstanding we must use the doctrine of God's patience to our comfort and to bring us thereby to repentance.

[Use 1] Now we come to the uses of this doctrine which are many, serving for instruction, reprehension, consolation, and exhortation. First of all, it serveth for our knowledge and instruction, and teacheth us what a good God we serve and worship, such a one as willeth not and wisheth not the death of a sinner: such a one as is gentle and gracious, merciful, and pitiful, Psal. 145.8, 9. Ezek. 18.23. and 33.11. Again, this teacheth us what is the cause that God spareth so long both his and the Churches enemies, to wit, because he is patient. Thus doth the Prophet tell the Israelites the cause why y^e Lord had spared y^e Assyrians so long, Nah. 1.3. We see how profane many are, blasphemers of God's Name, profaners of his Sabbath, despisers of the word, haters of good men; iniquity aboundeth everywhere. We might wonder that such live upon the face of the earth, and wherefore they are spared, but that he is a God of patience and long suffering, or they could not continue. Is not the earth filled with cruelty & oppression, as it was with the old world, that was destroyed with an universal Flood? Doth not pride, fullness of bread, abundance of idleness, and contempt of the poor abound, as in Sodom and Gomorrhah which was destroyed with fire and brimstone from heaven? Ezek. 16.49. So Gen. 19.24. How then could our cities and houses stand and continue, if GOD were not very patient?

[Use 2] Secondly, it serveth for reprehension. For it convinceth those that scoff at his threatenings, because God a long time descrieth his judgments against the ungodly. Hence it is, that they judge them, & persuade themselves of them, to be no better then Scar-crows, and therefore to be vain and not to be feared. Such persons doth the Apostle Peter describe, that mock at the second coming of Christ, which shall come as a snare upon all them that dwell upon the face of the whole earth, Luke 21.35. 2 Pet 3.1, 2. Ezek. 12.27, 28. Again, it meeteth with such as abuse God's patience to harden their hearts in sin. The more God spareth us, and the longer he waiteth, the more insolent and untoward the greatest sort do grow, abusing the lenity and long suffering of God presuming and waxing bold to offend, because he doth not speedily punish, Eccle. 8.11 Nehe. 9.17. sin is increased by this means: for the more he suffereth the greater is our sin.

Thirdly, this serveth for comfort and consolation. [Use 3] It lifteth up perplexed and disquieted consciences for their sins, trembling under God's hand as the child under the rod, and fearing to be consumed in his wrath. Let no man despair or be out of hope, for this is his nature, he is long suffering, Exod. 34. This is uttered to Moses to comfort him, who feared the utter subversion and destruction of Israel for their idolatry in worshipping the golden calf, Exod. 32.2. Psal. 103.8, 9. Again, it serveth to work confidence and assurance of faith and mercy in the hearts of the godly, that if they pray unto him, and desire to have his anger removed, he will be appeased toward them and spare them as we see in this place how Moses useth these words to the same purpose. Lastly, it comforteth the Church against the wickedness and cruelty of her persecutors: they stick not oftentimes to shed innocent blood, and God seemeth for a time to hold his peace, and nothing at all to regard either what the enemies do, or what his children suffer, for he sendeth down no punishment upon them. Notwithstanding, we must not imagine that God hath forgotten us in our miseries, as if he had shut up his kindness in displeasure, but he is patient even toward them, he best knoweth his times and seasons for justice and judgment, as he doth for mercy and compassion. When the time of his patience is run out, then will his time of justice clearly appear. Thus doth David comfort himself, a man that had experience of many sorrows, Ps. 86.14, 15. O God, the proud are risen against me, and the assemblies of violent men have sought after my soul, and have not set thee before them: but thou, O God, art a God full of compassion and gracious, long suffering and plenteous in mercy and truth.

Lastly, sundry exhortations arise from [Use 4] hence to sundry good duties, which I will only point out; first, it serveth to move us to break out into the praise of God. Our sins deserve suddenly to be swept away, the measure of them is exceeding great. It is his great mercy that we are not utterly confounded & consumed, Psal. 130.3 4. Secondly, we must be patient toward our brethren, Col. 3.12, 13. Ephe 4.32. Let us dea•e with our brethren, as we see God hath dealt with us. If we be hasty to revenge, let us take heed, lest we kindle the wrath of God against our selves, Matthew 6. verse 15.

Lastly, it is our duty to repent of our sins while we have time, and to seek the Lord while he is near, Rom. 2.4. Joel 2.3.

Verse 19. Pardon, I beseech thee, the iniquity of this people, according to the greatness of thy mercy, and as thou hast forgiven this people, from Egypt, even until now.

Here we have the third and last argument of the prayer to move the Lord to pardon them, wherein he putteth the Lord in mind of his works of mercy, and thereupon is bold to pray for the continual course of more mercy, Pardon this people, as thou hast forgiven them from Egypt until now. [Doctrine.] The doctrine. All the benefits and blessings that we receive in this life, are such as give us hope and assurance, that we shall receive more blessings and mercies from God; So then the point to be considered is this, that mercies present assure more mercies to come upon the faithful, as Psal. 77.5. Josh. 10.25. 1 Sam. 17.34, 35, 36, 37.

The reasons. A promise in part performed is a good assurance that the rest also shall be performed. So then if God have given to a man any blessing in part, it shall be an assurance unto him, that he shall also receive more from God. Every gift of God is as a pawn or gage laid up and left with us; for when he bestoweth any blessing, he giveth us earnest to assure us of moe that shall follow, and of a greater measure of the same gift, 2 Cor. 1.22. and 5.5. Ephes. 1.14. Secondly, deeds are much more effectual and powerful then words. Albeit the word of God be sure whatsoever he hath spoken, yet we lay better hold upon his works. Men are not so much afraid of God's threatenings to come, as when they see and feel his judgments present upon themselves and others: so is it in this case; for though the promises of God be good payment, because he hath promised y^t cannot lie, Tit. 1.2. yet we are not so easily drawn to believe them, made by words only, as when we find them in part performed unto us; then we conceive undoubted and assured hope to receive the rest also, because he doth thereby as it were enter payment of a debt, I mean a debt by promise on his part, not by any desert on our part.

[Use 1] The uses follow. First, this teacheth every man, that he ought to observe and keep in mind the benefits and mercies of God both upon himself and other: how God from time to time hath blessed him, that so he may have comfort in time of need. For this is the cause why so many despair and have no comfort at all when the judgments of God are upon them, they forget God's goodness, and never cast their eyes back to the times past, nor remember the former benefits and comforts which they have received from God, and so are wholly destitute of comfort, and remain without hope to receive any more mercies from him. When Moses prayed unto God to show him this mercy, that he might enter into the land of promise, he beseecheth the Lord after this manner, O Lord God, thou hast begun to show unto thy servant thy greatness and thy mighty hand, I pray thee therefore let me go over and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, Deuter. 3.24. Whereby we see, he considereth how God had dealt with him in former times, and maketh that a motive to stir up his faith for the time to come, to hope for, and to desire the continuance thereof.

Secondly, this teacheth all of us, whereupon [Use 2] we ought in our wants and necessities to stay our selves and look for comfort: surely in the remembrance of God's former promises. There we shall be sure to find comfort, if we think upon them. For they are as sure pledges to us, that we shall afterward receive more also. And let us labor to rest upon God because he hath given us many blessings and mercies in former times, so that we need not fear for the time to come, but that we shall also receive more at his hands, who giveth liberally one blessing after another, I am. 1.5. Forasmuch as he is God for the time to come, as well as for the time past, and all his gifts and calling are without repentance, Rom. 11, 29.

Thirdly, this should move us earnestly to [Use 3] labor for the first grace, and never to give rest to our selves until we feel an addition and increase of the second and third grace in our hearts, and to multiply them one after another, that they may dwell in us plentifully, and make us fruitful in all holy conversation. If we have the first grace in our hearts, and be careful to use the same well, it is as seed sown in good ground, it will bring forth a wonderful increase, and a notable harvest in the end. Paul would have Timothy to stir up the gift that was in him, 1 Tim. 1.6. If we be once in Christ, he will purge us more and more, that we shall bring forth more fruit, John. 15.8.

Lastly, observe that this is a privilege belonging [Use 4] only to the faithful, that they shall have the mercy and favor of God continued unto them. The blessings that God bestoweth upon the wicked do serve to make them without excuse, and are as seals of condemnation: they are not assurances unto them that they shall have more bestowed upon them, he hath made no such promise unto them, neither can they gather any hope to have any farther increase of the same, or any addition of new blessings. Albeit it be so with the godly, yet former blessings of God are pledges of more, yet it is not so with the ungodly, 2 Sam. 7, 17. Judge. 10 12, 13. Eccle. 8.12, 13. Isaiah 65.20. He took away his mercy from Saul, but he would never do it from David: he delivered the unthankfull and rebellious Israelites out of the hands of their enemies, but he threateneth that he will deliver them no more. The evil servant hath his talent taken from him, and never restored unto him again: and thereupon Christ delivereth the manner of God's dealing as well toward the faithful, as the unfaithful, Matth. 25.29. Unto everyone that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not, shall be taken away even that which he hath. For they do abuse his mercies, and never make any good use of them: how then should they be continued unto them? nay, how should they not be deprived of them? They become much more sinful and grow worse and worse by his blessings: God requireth the more of them, but they perform the less duty unto him. It is therefore a vain hope and a mere presumption for such to think to have his goodness continued; rather they may conclude, that God will take them away suddenly, and bestow them no longer upon them, except they turn from their evil ways.

20 And the Lord said, I have pardoned, according to thy word.

21 But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord.

23 Because all these men which have seen my glory, and my miracles which I did in Egypt & in the wilderness, and have tempted me now these ten times, and have not hearkened unto my voice:

24 But my servant Caleb, &c.

We have in these words the effect of the prayer of Moses, and the answer that God giveth unto him. The sum whereof is this, that the fathers should die in the wilderness, because, though they had seen his glory and miracles in Egypt and in the wilderness, yet they tempted him ten times, that is, not once nor twice, but oftentimes, a certain number put for an uncertain, as Gen. 31.41. Job. 19.3. Dan. 7.10. and therefore they should be all destroyed, excepting Caleb the servant of God. If any ask the question why Joshua is not expressed, and wherefore his name is concealed? I answer, because the Lord pronounced the former sentence concerning the people that were in their tents; but Joshua (that attended upon Moses) was present with Moses and Aaron before the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, therefore the judgment denounced against the people that abode in their tents no way touched him. Caleb was with the people, so that it behooved him (who had spoken the truth of the land) to be excepted; Joshua was not, and therefore there was no need to have him exempted from them, who was not among them. For being with Moses and Aaron, he is accounted in their number. Secondly, they are commanded to return back again into the wilderness by the way of the red sea, verse 25 when they were now come to the borders of Canaan; which they could not hear without great grief and anguish of mind. Before they wept without cause, verse 1. Now they have cause to weep for this heavy judgment. Thirdly, their children should bear the burdē of their fathers sin & wander in the wilderness forty years, howbeit in the end they should enter into the land. Fourthly, the Spies themselves that had searched the land, which were the authors of all this mutiny, and had brought up an evil report of the land, were smitten with a fearful plague, & died suddenly by the hand of God. Here we may observe in these words, that God heareth the prayer of Moses and pardoneth the people according to his prayer, so that the Lord heareth the prayers of the faithful according to his promise. Secondly, God's judgments are tempered with mercy. Thirdly, such as have received the greatest mercies and become unthankful and disobedient, are the greatest sinners, and shall receive the greatest judgment. Fourthly, in excepting Caleb and Joshua from the common destruction, it appeareth that God is a just & righteous God, who as he doth not account the wicked innocent, so he will not account the innocent to be wicked.

The Popish teachers allege this example to prove that God pardoneth sin, and yet punisheth the sinner, & that the same punishment so inflicted is a satisfaction to God for their sin, and that the eternal punishment due to this people was pardoned at y' request of Moses. If this were true, then all this people were believers and had true faith in the Messiah, which is a bold assertion without all show of reason, and likelihood of truth; It may probably and charitably be thought, that some of them were believers and repented, to them these were chastisements. The like may be said of Moses and Aaron and of David, of which, they were shut out of the land of promise, and he was punished by the death of his child, and in other his children and house; not thereby to satisfy God by bearing part of the temporal punishment belonging to their sin, but that Moses and Aaron might learn together with all the people, to put their trust in God's promises made unto them, and to wait on him with patience. The end therefore was not God's satisfaction but their own reformation and the people's instruction. And David had many punishments, that the mouths of the heathen might thereby be stopped, who were likely to blaspheme God because of his sin. The truth is, before forgiveness, such judgments are punishments of sin, but after forgiveness obtained, they are the fights and exercises of the just. This is the difference between the afflictions of the faithful, and of the unfaithful; that which is to the just, the exercise of virtue, is to the unjust the punishment of sin. That which is laid upon us after forgiveness in Christ, is only in respect of the time to come, to weaken and wear away the power of sin, and in death utterly to destroy it. If any object, that death is the wages of sin, and that yet it continueth after forgiveness: I answer, it is so indeed, original•y and naturally: but to the faithful it hath lost his sting; the poison of it is taken away and turned into a medicine, and is made the way to life and salvation. That which was the gate of hell is made an entry to the kingdom of heaven. Thus we see, that the Popish satisfaction is weakly grounded, and the gainful fire of purgatory standing upon the rotten and ruinous pillar of satisfaction is utterly quenched, that though the Jesuits and their instruments labor to blow the bellows to kindle it again, yet they are not able to put any spark of heat into it. For this is a certain doctrine, that when God pardoneth sin, he also remitteth the punishment. For first, the fault & the punishment are relatiues which stand together and fall together: admit of the one, you yield the other: take away the one, you overthrow the other. Again, when God doth not remit the fault, he
